I hope my two brothers will come in before long, and think they will, as both seem to hold to the Saints, and seem to think they are the only ones that teach the word as it should be. I had been a Latter Day Saint a long time before I came into the church, and believe there are many the same way, if they only knew it. I shall try to do all I can to awaken them to the fact.

I wish all the Saints in every community a glorious victory, and that they may, with God's help, save many before it is too late. Remember me in your prayers, brethren, that I may ever walk in the light of Christ.

ALPHONSO VOSBURG.

LOVELAND, Colorado, October 2, 1908.

Editors Herald: Now that I have the use of a typewriter for a short time I will try and see if I can make it spell near "enuf" right so you can understand what I wish to say. And if some of the words "pi" of course you will translate.

Our work in Colorado thus far this year has not been marked with any great success, so far as we are able to see. In company with Bro. E. F. Shupe we tried the street and tent both, in Rocky Ford, with a fair hearing on the street but no success in the tent. Shipping the tent from there to Monte Vista we conducted a four-week campaign in that place. Here we had a fine place for the tent, but with all the advertising we were able to do, were successful in obtaining only a moderate hearing. At this place three were baptized. Some good faithful Saints live there and were anxious and willing to do all in their power to help. Their ability to make the elder feel at home is exceeded only by those who in reality are at home, when the elder is there. Their kindness will not soon be forgotten. In fact, that none may feel aggrieved, let it be said that so far in this mission I have always found the Saints extending a welcome to us. But if any of ye elders ever go near Monte and do not stop and give them a call, they will be sorry and you will be, too, for Sr. Kennedy can make about the finest potato chips that ever happened.

Well, from there we went to the little town of Elizabeth. Had the use of the city hall, but could get only a few to hear. Here live Bro. and Sr. Larson and two daughters, also Sr. Hansen and family. We were kindly cared for by these while there and thus have pleasant recollections of our visit to that place. No preaching by our people there before, to my knowledge.

Our next place was Wray, where our district conference was held September 5 and 6. While the attendance was quite small, yet a good time was had by all. Our next conference will be held in Colorado Springs and we trust the Saints throughout the district will begin now to plan to come.

Following the conference at Wray, I assisted Bro. C. Scott in a series of meetings at the same place. Our hearing was fair to good. While there a bunch of Utah elders visited the town and of course we visited them. We tried to get them to occupy the chapel one night and tell the difference between them and us, but they declined. We had a good visit with them and trust that their eyes may yet be opened to the truth. The Saints at Wray were not forgetful that the elder needed money as well as a "God bless you." God will take care of the latter whether the Saints speak about it or not, but he rather expects them to see that the necessary temporal assistance be provided.

In answer to an urgent call from Loveland, Bro. Scott and I came to this place September 22. Have been holding meetings in cottage, hall, and, just now, thanks to Sr. Amy Smith of St. Louis, we are occupying in a little German chapel. A nice room, but few people come. We called upon the trustees of an empty school building here in town and sought the use of the same, but were plainly told that we were not needed here; that there are plenty of churches here already. Well, I confess it does look very much that way, with fourteen churches and nineteen lodges. Where is any opportunity to wedge the gospel in in such a place. The Lord has spoken his sentiments regarding the "creeds" and some have done likewise regarding the lodges. But all we wish to say here is that both appear to us to be mighty hindrances to the progress of the gospel work.

In Loveland we find a few who are apparently interested in knowing the truth and rather expect that some will ask for baptism. There are some members of the Utah church fully convinced that they were deceived and are anxious to unite with the true church. They will have the opportunity, of course. There are also some who, having been deprived of any church association for so long, have become more or less "sleepy." We feel our work will not be altogether in vain. Saints are making it pleasant for us and we are trying to keep in such close touch with God as to be able to have his assistance. Two dailies published regular notices of the meetings and there seems to be no real excuse why the people should not come out.

Through the HERALD, Bro. Editor, permit me to extend greetings to the Saints and friends in my old field—Kewanee District. Though far away, I share with you in your joys and your sorrows, so far as they are known to me. Your various and many acts of kindness to me while laboring among you will not be forgotten.

That faith may abide, I shall hope, labor, and pray.

F. A. RUSSELL.

HAILEYVILLE, Oklahoma, October 2, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have just returned from Fanshaw, Oklahoma, the scene of battle between the Freewill Baptists and Elder Hubert Case, of our faith. There were eight two-hour sessions; four sessions to each proposition, each affirming that his church was in harmony with the New Testament in organization, doctrine, and practice; King James' translation of the Bible to be the standard of evidence.

On account of this clause, Elder Yandell, who represented the Baptists and whose proposition came first, claimed that the Bible was to be the only evidence admitted, and the chairman so ruled. When Bro. Case begun his affirmative Yandell tried very hard to get the chairman to admit the Book of Mormon and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith; but the chairman stood by his former ruling. So Bro. Case had nothing to do but to present the doctrines of Christ, the apostasy, and the restoration, from a Bible standpoint.

Bro. Case was blessed with wonderful liberty in defense of the truth, while Yandell's efforts were labored, as he tried to cover up and explain away the plain teachings of Christ. The Saints are all feeling well, and friends were made for the cause of truth.

Bro. Case baptized one after the debate, and we left Bro. T. W. Chatburn, the "jots man," in possession of the field, preaching to large and interested crowds. Bro. Case went to Wilburton. I will meet him at Adamson, where there is an urgent call for preaching. From there we will go to what is known as the Manning mining camp, where I baptized four recently, and others we think will follow.

So the work is onward in this part of the field; more calls tnan we can fill. I am feeling well in the work, but my health is very poor. I desire an interest in the prayers of all of God's people, that I may regain my health.

ROSEDALE, Kansas, October 5, 1908.

Editors Herald: For the past month I have confined my labors to this fast-growing town of Rosedale, just across the state line from Kansas City, Missouri. And through the untiring efforts of Brn. Theodore D. Grabske, John J. Shimmel, Albert T. Davis, together with their families, they have established a successful mission, held at the Malvern Hill Schoolhouse, with regular church services, a thriving Sunday-school, and Religio. They are destined to make their mark among the neighbors and acquaintances, and already they are contemplating erecting a church in the near future.

The many sacrifices which these few Saints are making are commendable, and if faithful they will inherit the victor's crown in the sweet by and by.

A number of outsiders are interested, as shown by the attendance and the financial help given. Elder John Kaler, of Independence, has done considerable preaching here, and his visits are always welcomed.

I may say that withal I have enjoyed myself this conference year; not that I have not met with disappointments, however, from time to time, and no doubt will have to put up with like experiences until this mortality shall have ceased. I bless God for the sure knowledge I have of the same gospel as was preached by Jesus Christ himself. I hope ever to abide in the truth, and do all the good I can.

It seems to me that since our General Conference I have been exceptionally blessed, at times, with the Spirit, in teaching and preaching to the people. The heavenly Father strews my path with many pleasant experiences in the work, notwithstanding my own unworthiness before him. Oh, that we could always remember well the great preparation needed upon our part to meet the Savior when he does come, or to be permitted to come with him from the realms above, with the hosts of angels and the pure ones gone on before! I find no salvation outside, no redemption elsewhere for me. Many indeed are the dangers, allurements, and pitfalls which Satan offers in order to draw away the children of the kingdom from the paths of chastity, virtue, and honor. May we have the wisdom of God to be with us continually. I have felt comforted by the rays of hope which our beloved brethren in Wales throw out in their messages from across the sea, and trust they may indeed realize its fruition to the fullest extent.

Your colaborer,
FRANK J. PIERCE.

LOS ANGELES, California, September 24, 1908.

Editors Herald: We understand the school lands of Texas are now put on the market. I would like to have the opinion of those Saints in position to know, if these lands are desirable for homes, and what part of Texas is most desirable, and about the climate, etc. There are a number of families here that would like to get homes on cheap land. Please answer through the HERALD, so all may know about them, and greatly oblige.

SHENANDOAH, Iowa, October 4, 1908.

Dear Herald: At the close of a well-spent day, I feel that I have something to be thankful for. I have spent all day with the Saints here in Shenandoah. Sunday-school, morning preaching-meeting, and three o'clock prayer-service, which was a most excellent service.

The spirit of the Lord was present unto the speaking of tongues through Bro. Vinnard, and the interpretation was given by him also. The Lord's sweet commendation was to Bro. Hall and Sr. Herald, also to the ministry in this part, and the voice of warning was to all, that we must stand upon higher ground, seek more diligently to put on the full armor of righteousness, that we may be able to abide the day of peril that will soon come, and if we do not arm ourselves as becometh Saints, we will not be able to call down the protection of our heavenly Guardian and Guide.

I would that I could write my feelings at this time, that they might find sincere lodgment in the hearts of the Saints, for so sure as it has been spoken it will be so, and we are not able to know how soon these conditions will be among us; so we must be up and doing the Master's will, else we will be found among the wanting. Let us all more earnestly pray for one another, for the "day is fading fast, and the night is growing darker, while the scourge goes flaming past."

My prayer is that we may all seek to glorify the heavenly Father through our everyday life, that we may be found among his chosen flock.

ALEXANDER, Kansas, September 16, 1908.

Editors Herald: The date set for the convening of the Northwestern Kansas District reunion was August 22. I arrived a few days previous with my daughter Maud, who is teaching school near here. We assisted in making the necessary preparations by putting up the tent, hauling lumber for seats, etc., so everything was in readiness for meetings by the proper time. On Saturday, the 22d, our congenial and worthy colaborer, E. Robertson, stepped from the train, prepared for the work that lay before him. He was the only missionary we had engaged to assist. The finances of this field are rather weak, on account of poor crops and few Saints. We see the necessity of economizing as much as possible, and as far as the real need is concerned, two missionaries, with the local help that can always be obtained, can attend to the normal demands of most any reunion. It is true, we love to meet a large number of missionaries and church dignitaries for the purpose of forming their acquaintance and satisfying our curiosity by comparing them with others as to appearance, ability, and qualifications. Sometimes it is true, "comparisons are odious." But it is quite questionable whether the attendants of a reunion are better instructed by hearing a large number of speakers once or twice, than by hearing two or three preach several times. While this question may be debated, there can be no dispute as to which is the most economical. Then consider the time the missionary is from his field of labor at the very time when the season is best for new openings and missionary work in general. It seems to me that we can not help but conclude that it is a mistake to congregate such large bodies of ministers at the reunions, as is frequently done.

While we should not be penurious, yet we should avoid unnecessary expense. This also brings the General Conference into view. We are informed that our last conference cost the church treasury over twelve thousand dollars. The missionary force was also cut down for lack of funds to support their families. We realize that much good is accomplished by the conferences, but like some of our reunions, it may be possible to accomplish as much or more good with less expense. We have one delegate for every twenty-five members, which causes the districts to send such a large number of delegates that they can not think of defraying their expenses, and if a missionary comes as a delegate he must receive his expense from the church treasury.

If I properly remember the "rules of representation," as given by inspiration, the districts were to have only from one to five delegates. Had this policy been adopted and carried out, there would be no trouble in having the districts defray the expenses of delegates they send. But it must also be remembered that these "rules" made the missionaries ex officio from the priest up. They would have voice and vote if they were not delegates, and they are the ones who drain the treasury. But is it necessary for us all to attend? If not all, who shall be eliminated, is a very perplexing question. Yet when we consider the growing expense, which has already reached an enormous sum, it seems that it is a question worthy of consideration.

The vision shown to our President on April 16, 1902, showed the condition of the church as the Lord desired to have it. He saw the men in the offices that the Lord desired should fill them. We immediately proceeded to make such changes as were necessary—as far as possible—to have men placed in the positions seen in the vision, so the church would be in the condition as shown to him. But he also saw the following: "The assembly seemed to be large and orderly, with the different officers of the church in their quorums assembled in much the same order as observed at our annual conferences, but did not seem to be so large as at other times I had seen them."—Section 126: 9.

It is evidently the will of the Lord that the members and those who defray their own expenses should attend the conferences and gain information by attending the meetings and associating together, which would make the "assembly" as seen by the president "large and orderly," but the "quorums assembled" "did not seem to be so large as at other times I had seen them."

There should be some process of elimination adopted, to cause the size of the "quorums assembled" to harmonize with the vision, as well as the personnel of them. This could easily be done by the church adopting the policy of defraying only the expenses of the quorums whose duties make it absolutely necessary for them to be there. I think we can agree as to these quorums. The Presidency, the High Council, the Bishopric, the Twelve, and the Seven Presidents of Seventy. The specific duties of these quorums and councils demand their presence. The Seven Presidents of Seventy are to choose other seventy and this can only be done at the general conferences, for their choice must be confirmed by vote.

It has been argued that the seventy should attend the general conferences, for we do not know when they will be called on to make "a quorum decision," according to section 104: 11. It is true we "do not know" when such a demand will be made, and it is also true that we "do not know" how to proceed to make a quorum decision, nor do we "know" what effect it would have on the church when it was made. The Twelve have made a few, what were supposed to be, quorum decisions, but they had no more effect in the church than a resolution passed by a mere majority. I understand that the famous "Epistle of the Twelve" issued from Kirtland in 1887, was a quorum decision, that is, it was adopted "by the unanimous voice" of the quorum. The Lord told us in 1890 that "the epistle is to be left without approval, or disapproval by the conference," at the present and proceed just as we had done before the epistle was issued, giving us to understand that it was not binding on the church unless it was adopted by the church in general conference.

Well, we got to business at the reunion with less delay and speculation than I have succeeded in doing in making this report of it. A fair-sized audience assembled. Bro.

Robertson delivered a straightforward, logical, gospel sermon, and the reunion was on in earnest. We held three preaching-services and one prayer-meeting each day. The congregations increased, with a growing interest, till the second Sunday, when the congregations were far too large to be seated in the tent, but stood near or sat on the grass and gave splendid attention. During the reunion we were assisted by Elders John A. Teeters, who lives here and whose influence has removed much prejudice, and Bro. Earhart, who was then located at Ness City.

We concluded to hold meetings for another week and have continued every evening since, with increasing congregations, last week averaging more than either previous week. We will continue over next Sunday, when I expect to pack the tent and with Bro. John A. Teeters, go to Codell and make a new opening. Bro. Robertson left me to-day for Beeler, where he will begin meetings to-night in a Methodist church. We have preached forty-five sermons, baptizing two fine young ladies, and removed much prejudice and made many friends. I never enjoyed better liberty in preaching, and my voice is not effected, although I have preached twenty-five sermons. I have been bothered with hoarseness at times for years.

W. E. PEAK.

TOLEDO, Ohio, September 18, 1908.

Editors Herald: Since last writing to the paper, in which the Saints love to read of the events that transpire far and near, of the progress of this latter-day work, Bro. G. A. Smith, of Ray, Indiana, on his way to the reunion and conference to be held at New Hamburg, Pennsylvania, stopped here for about a week, doing good service. I accompanied him, going by boat to Cleveland, stopping three hours at Put-in-bay, an island in Lake Erie, a place of about seventeen hundred acres, with about twelve hundred inhabitants on it, principally Catholics and Episcopalians with two churches. There is a short street-car line of about three miles, to a summer resort. A great many grapes are grown on the island, and some grain. Some parts are rocky and rough. It is a great place for summer resorting, and there are also several places of amusement, and a great number of booths selling souvenirs of various kinds, also places for bathing and boating. There are three caves on the island. The largest one is named after Captain Perry, who concealed eight hundred men in it at the time of the revolution of 1812. It is forty-five feet below the surface, with a stairway leading into it. It is lighted with lamps and lanterns so that the spectator can see his way. It is about two hundred and fifty feet long by one hundred and sixty feet wide. It ranges from four to twelve feet in height. At the farthest end from the entrance there was a narrow lake passing through it, from about three or four to about twenty feet wide, varying in depth from three to sixty feet. The water is as clear as crystal, very pleasant to the taste, for I drank of it. It forms into a stream of some five feet wide and passes away in the crevices of the rock. Our guide told us that he had gone in a small boat for a great many rods in search of the end of it, but in vain. It is generally conceded that it is fed from the lake and empties into it again. There is a constant dropping from the upper rock or roof in several places. It appears that this has only been in the last year.

The other two caves we did not visit for lack of time. One of them was discovered in the digging of a well. The third is called Crystal Cave, because of the hanging of the rock like icicles. It appears that the rock had separated at some time; for the surface of the rock both above and below shows it.

Along the water's front in the park, there is a row of old cannon of about eight-inch bore, set in stone and cement, to the number of eight (I presume some that were captured in the time of war), and at one end of the park is a stone-work erected with a number of cannon balls piled up, marking the spot where lie the remains of many a valiant man who fought for his country and liberty. No speech is heard—but silence. But the moss on the stone indicates years have passed since these remains spake as we do.

But time passed swiftly by, our boat giving signs that the time was about up for her to leave for Cleveland. There being a strong northeast wind, as we glided past other rock-bound coasts of other islands, for there are many, we merged out into the lake on rolling seas, and the nearer we got to Cleveland, the rougher we found it. The sea being very heavy, and the boat having to ride in the trough of the sea, about all on board were seasick. It was Bro. Smith's first voyage by water, but he and the writer stood it well. Neither of us were sick, but felt just a little bad over it. I presume our feelings were affected at the sight of others. However, the City of the Straits bore us safely into the harbor of Cleveland, being about an hour late. The boat was about two hundred and eighty feet long, by about sixty feet wide.

We stopped at the home of Bro. and Sr. Schmidt, 1276 West Seventy-eighth Street, who kindly cared for us while we remained in the city. During our stay we met Bro. Eben Miller, former Bishop's agent of the district. On Sunday morning Bro. Smith concluded we had better start for Akron. Bro. Schmidt was taken with chills and fever during the night. We administered to him, he receiving a blessing. At about nine o'clock in the morning, we boarded an interurban car for Akron, arriving at the Saints' hall in the midst of their sacrament-service, about eleven o'clock, after a two hours' ride on the car. The Spirit's presence was felt as soon as we entered the door, manifesting to us that they were worshipers of the meek and lowly Jesus, with whom we took part and felt blessed in so doing. We remained with the Saints of that place, holding meetings every evening until Thursday, making our stay at the home of Bro. and Sr. Kelsey, and visiting as many of the Saints as we could during our stay in the city.

Thursday we left for Sharon, calling on Bro. Thomas, tarrying with them over night, he being quite ill. We were asked to administer to him, which we did cheerfully, invoking the Father's blessing in the healing of his body.

On Friday, we went on our journey to Transfer, being met at the depot by Bro. McDole, who conveyed us to his home, where we made our abode most of the time during the reunion, and conference which was held at the close of the reunion, which lasted over two Sundays. During these meetings a pleasant time was had, forming acquaintances with Saints and friends, who met from various parts of the mission and district. The attendance at the various meetings was good. Each one of the speakers did his best when called on to defend the gospel message. Bro. Griffiths, missionary in charge, and the district presidency were in charge. Most of the Saints occupied tents, and the three large tents with the smaller ones made it look like a village of tents, situated in a grove by the river. It was a very pleasant place for such a meeting. Bro. Becker, bishop of the three districts (Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio), had charge of the temporal part of affairs. He did his part so well that they came out clear, with a balance on hand. All seemed pleased that they had met, and left for their homes encouraged and strengthened for the conflict. The work has been started in that part about two years or more. Since that time to the present, quite a gain in membership by baptism, and a neat little edifice erected this season, not quite completed nor paid for, but will have it completed by fall and paid for, so that it can be dedicated to the Lord for the promulgation of his work.

After the reunion, we returned to Toledo by way of Cleveland, stopping over one day and taking a run out to Kirtland to make a visit at the "House of the Lord," as is seen on the front of the temple in gold letters. When viewing the words, it seemed to bring a feeling of solemnity over one, and a feeling to say, "Truly, it is the House of the Lord." And when one is permitted to enter its portals, Patriarch Lake being the conductor or guide, being informed that angels were seen and heard to sing the songs of redemption, also to enter the seat in which a little babe sang by the power of the Spirit, which had never spoken before, and to be permitted to bow the knee and offer prayer in the pulpit upon which Jesus stood and conversed with the Seer of Palmyra, it is marvelous! We felt glad, and rejoiced in spirit that we were permitted to behold such a place. And the manifestation of the Spirit was that Kirtland and the surrounding country would yet become a stake of which an organization would be effected in the near future, for Kirtland is one of the waste places of Zion, to which the Saints are to return and build, as made mention in section 98, paragraph 4, of Doctrine and Covenants—the remnants. This, to me, is strong proof in favor of God's acceptance of the Reorganization; for in every place from whence they were driven, they have returned. I hope we, as Saints, will keep humble and faithful to every known duty, that the work may be speedily done. Seek to obey as we are commanded, and not stumble as our forefathers did. I often think of the sanitarium and children's home, which we as a church were commanded to build; but not in a set time as the former Saints were commanded in the case of the temple at Nauvoo. I am glad to see the progress this church is making; and the time is soon coming when the command will be given for the great temple of the Lord to be built in this dispensation; and there seems to be a great need for laborers among the Saints, to build up the work in their hearts.

Bro. Smith returned to his home, having business requiring his immediate attention. I remained in Toledo, holding meetings in the home of Bro. and Sr. Cairns, the only available place opened.

Having occasion to go home, I found Sr. Brown troubled with a swelling on her jaw. Concluding it to be an ulcer from a tooth a dentist was consulted with the object of having the tooth extracted. He informed us that it was an abscess on the jaw, and advised poultices until it broke, declining to pull the tooth for the time being. Not being satisfied with his decision, we called on a doctor. He told us the same, and prescribed linseed poultices for thirty-six hours, and then have it lanced. We returned home, started poulticing as instructed, and kept at it the balance of the day, all night, the next day, and the second night until half past eleven, when the pain grew so intense that it seemed almost unbearable, and the scalding hot poultices gave no relief. Then May said to her mother, "Why not call upon the means God has provided; for we can do no more." She requested administration. Rob, May, and myself were waiting upon her, so we knelt by her side, the three of us offered up an earnest prayer to God for her recovery, after which I administered to her. She was relieved of the distressing pain instantly, and in about one hour it broke, she not suffering any pain from the time of administration. At that time I had removed the poultice, anointed her face with oil, and placed a handkerchief over it. We left it at that. She slept well the remainder of the night, and arose next morning greatly refreshed. Surely man's extremity is God's opportunity.

I expect to leave here Wednesday for Goose Creek, West Virginia, to labor in the Virginias for the balance of the conference year.

The work at Toledo is at a low ebb; but with care and efficient labor, good will be accomplished, and confidence restored. We can not afford to spend our time grieving over past trials. Let them go, feeling thankful to God that we have been counted worthy to suffer persecution for his cause, and pressing our way onward and upward to obtain the prize held out for the faithful.

I had the pleasure of inducting one into the kingdom by baptism, Saturday, a promising youth of thirteen years, who will eventually prove of benefit to the work, if faithful. I have been kindly cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. Robertson during my stay here, while others of the Saints have shown kindness. May the kind Father bless and protect his people from the evils that are in the world, and enable them to endure in faith to the end.

Yours in gospel bonds,
SAMUEL BROWN.

The Lamanites.

Dear Brethren: The Lamanite question is one that I as an individual am interested in, and I believe I see some of its direct needs. In fact, I know some of its needs that are pressing right now. The work of taking the Book of Mormon to the Lamanites takes direct means and thousands of miles of travel—quite an expenditure of money in the way of travel, railroad fare, etc., and hundreds of Books of Mormon. The first thing that must be done is to present the Book of Mormon to the learned ones. They are not going to buy the book now. Later on they will buy by the thousands.

Many of the learned ones that I have presented the book to, are favorable to it and believe it is their bible. At many such places in the country or in towns where there are large gatherings of Lamanites, there are no Saints. What is wanted, then? You may understand the Lamanites are Methodists, Mennonites, Catholics. If brethren had the means to rent a hall and pay their board, they could convince many Lamanites of the truth of their bible. It is a wonder how they will listen to the story of their fathers, etc. It is a drawing card against other denominations, and they see the point. My supply of Books of Mormon donated by Bro. Olsen has very nearly run out. Individually the two cents I mail this letter with I borrowed of my wife out of the last fifty cents she had.

If I go among the Lamanites any more I must have means to go and live. If we think a Lamanite soul is worth from twenty-five cents to one dollar per head, will we awake to the occasion and send the Bishop money at once, that we may accomplish that which the Lord tells us about in second section of the Book of Covenants; that he preserved the plates that they might go to the Lamanites. We know that the Book of Mormon has cost the best blood of the nineteenth century. Now, do not let us get too wise and say, I will give enough to pay for a hundred Books of Mormon, but I will not give any money. Just send your money to the Bishop, Lamanite Fund, and I will get all the books I want or any one else. You see if you send all book fund it would be just like dropping them in the Atlantic Ocean, if you did not have the means to carry them to the Lamanites.

Your brother in the work of Lamanite redemption,

OKLA.

Robert Fulton possessed to a remarkable degree the power of concentrated thought. He studied French, Italian, and German, and acquired a proficiency in the three languages. Higher mathematics, physics, chemistry, and perspective also demanded his attention as he progressed in scientific research.—From Alice Crary Sutcliff's "Robert Fulton in France," in the October Century.

Conference Minutes.

BIRMINGHAM.—Annual conference convened with Priestly Road Branch, Birmingham, April 18, 19, and 20. Conference opened Saturday evening at 7.25 p. m., William Ecclestone, president of district, in the chair. Deacons, organist, and chorister were appointed. J. E. Meredith and E. A. Webb were chosen committee on credentials. Statistical reports were received from Birmingham, Priestly Road, Summerfield, Stafford, and Leicester Branches. A discrepancy arising on Summerfield report, after explanation by president of that branch, it was received by vote. The other reports stood approved as per rule 3 of district. Treasurer reported: Receipts 5 pounds, 18 shillings, 6½ pence; expenditures, 2 pounds, 2 shillings, 7½ pence. Elders reporting: C. H. Caton, William Ecclestone, George S. Greenwood, Charles Walton, J. T. Norton, Joseph Ecclestone; priests: John Meredith (of Derby); teacher: J. H. Simpson; deacon: Edmund Norton. President announced that in addition to the usual Sunday services there would be fasting and prayer at midday on behalf of Srs. J. W. Rushton and Joseph Dewnsup, Sr., who were seriously ill. Monday, at 10.30 a. m., conference resumed. Committee on credentials reported. Report received and committee discharged. Auditing committee reported small error in treasurer's accounts, but altered it accordingly, otherwise everything was in order. Report accepted. Verbal reports were received from J. E. Meredith and E. A. Webb. The following licenses were sent in for indorsement: High Priest: C. H. Caton; elders: George S. Greenwood, William Ecclestone, Charles Walton, E. A. Webb, J. T. Norton, Joseph Ecclestone; priest: John Meredith (of Derby). They were indorsed according to rule. Bro. W. Munslow not having sent in his license for indorsement, through some misunderstanding, motion to refer the matter to his branch prevailed. Bro. A. J. Norton, of Leicester, sent a letter stating his position. It being thought advisable, the matter was referred to a committee composed of John Meredith, F. Edwards, and F. Smith, to report to this conference. Business again resumed at 2 p. m. The following were recommended for ordination, by their respective branches: William Kemp (Leicester) from teacher to elder; Thomas W. Newport (Leicester) deacon to priest; Arthur Norton (Leicester) to deacon. The name of Bro. Robert Tabbiner, of Stoke, was also suggested for ordination to office of priest, by president of district. Brn. Kemp, Newport, and E. Norton, were approved by vote, and ordered ordained as soon as possible. The ordination of Bro. Robert Tabbiner was sanctioned, subject to the approval of the Stafford Branch, of which he is a member. At this juncture the report of committee appointed to consider letter of A. J. Norton was received, who recommended that the letter be read to the conference. Upon motion, the letter was read before the conference. Motion to refer the matter of A. J. Norton to Leicester Branch, of which he is a member, was carried. Re petition of Leicester Branch to conference of 1906, seeking to withdraw from Birmingham District, when new district is formed comprising Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, the following motion was moved by Brn. Charles Walton and T. Anderton: "That the petition take effect from this conference." This was denied, and amended, "That as soon as new district is formed we grant the request of Leicester Branch." Carried. Election of officers: William Ecclestone, president; Charles Walton, vice-president; George S. Greenwood, treasurer; Joseph Ecclestone, secretary. The authorities of the church in America, as also in this country were sustained by unanimous vote. Adjourned until Eastertide, 1909. Joseph Ecclestone, secretary.

SOME RECENT UTTERANCES ON THE QUESTION OF DIVINE HEALING.

Only yesterday, as it were, "orthodox" churches were a unit in their condemnation of the idea of divine healing. Men claimed a form of godliness but were bitter, almost frantic in denying the power thereof. For seventy years or more Latter Day Saints met the argument that the day of miracles had ended. From many pulpits they were challenged to heal the sick or perform other miracles as an evidence that the promises found in the Bible were still in force. It is a familiar picture. A joint debate is on between a Latter Day Saint elder and a clergyman. A small but attentive audience listens with bated breath. The elder defends the idea that God can heal and that he is willing to heal in response to faith and right-living. He produces quotations from the Bible to support his contention. The clergyman repudiates his own Bible and at what he considers a psychological moment introduces a vial of poison or a cripple and demands a miracle to gratify the "disbeliever."

There was an inconsistency in the challenge,—in fact many inconsistencies. One was seen in the fact that men who professed to believe in the Bible and who accused us of not believing in it were challenging us to demonstrate its truths for their conversion. The sick were healed and miracles were performed (under proper conditions), but never to gratify the curious or to convert skeptics, who would not believe if one were to rise from the dead.

The conditions above outlined have changed to an extent within the past few years. Strictly "orthodox" ministers in many parts of the world are professing to make healing a part of their ministerial work. They are volunteering to produce the evidence that we were right.

The Emmanuel movement, which takes its name from the Episcopal Emmanuel Church of Boston, has attracted national, even world-wide notice. Members of other prominent churches are indorsing the work, and almost daily advertise or defend it in the public prints. Some of these utterances we take pleasure in quoting for the benefit of our readers.

In the Circle, September number, Robert Stuart MacArthur, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, says, "No churchman ought to be obliged to go outside of his church for intellectual aliment, physical healing, or spiritual inspiration."

Bishop E. L. Kelley arrived in Lamoni Saturday with the expectation of remaining one week. He was the speaker at the Brick Church Sunday at eleven o'clock.

The American Examiner recently published a symposium of views expressed by ministers who have taken a prominent part in the new movement. Reverend Samuel McComb, rector of the Emmanuel Church said:

As is generally known, a clinic has been in operation in Emmanuel Church, Boston, for the past twelve months, the fundamental principle of which is an alliance between medical science and the forces of religion with a view to the alleviation and cure of moral and physical suffering.

The Boston clinic is now taxed to its utmost resources, and we are compelled to turn a deaf ear to many appeals for help, heart-rending as many of them are, which reach us from all parts of the United States and even from other countries.

Why should there not be a church clinic of the type here advocated—based on the two great pillars of New Testament Christianity and modern science—in every great center of population in the land? Why should we not turn to the plan of Christ and unite in our ministry healing with preaching? The question may be put, What qualifications are necessary for the clergyman who would undertake this work?

To begin with: He should be imbued with the modern scientific spirit, which knows that the outer and inner worlds are governed by law. He will not expect miracles in the sense of contravention of the divine will as expressed in law. In the second place, he should be a man of religious convictions, very sure of God and the soul.

The reality and worth of prayer should be a fundamental postulate of his thinking.

Thirdly, he should be a man of heart, touched with the spectacle of human suffering and filled with an earnest desire to relieve it. Finally, he should know something of modern psychology, especially in its therapeutic aspects. Armed with these qualifications and guided by a medical expert trained in the best medical schools, such a man can, with God's blessing, make his ministry doubly fruitful in good to the world, and introduce into his own life a new joy and inspiration.

Bishop Samuel Fallows, Saint Paul's Reformed Episcopal Church, Chicago, is quoted as follows:

In the Bible is laid down every principle of healing. If you follow those principles and have faith you will improve your health of mind and body. No man must ever abdicate his reason. He must be king of himself, with faith in the power of God to aid him. That is Christian therapeutics, Christian psychology, applied Christianity.

Christian psychology uses every curative agency in the world of nature as an aid to the power and influence of suggestion and auto-suggestion for mental and physical health. It unites the physician and clergyman in the great work of healing. It aims to give the physician trained men and women to assist him in his ministry to the sick and suffering. Its hope is to link all churches, irrespective of creed, in this imperative demand of the age.

I have been a student of mental philosophy for twelve years, and I feel that it is time to put my ideas to practical test. They differ in three ways from those of Christian Science. First, I recognize the fact that there are diseases of the body which absolutely require the surgeon and physician and can not be reached directly by psychic influences. At the same time I recognize the influence of mind over body in functional troubles.

Second, there is no commercialism to this movement, so far as the churches are concerned, and the person who is trained, like the clergymen and others, in the mental and spiritual feeding can work in perfect harmony with members of the medical profession.

Third, Christian psychology applies to all persons, whether they are Christians or not. It makes no difference as to creed or want of creed.

Reverend Alexander Irvine, assistant rector of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth Avenue, New York, declared:

Why should not the minister heal? Jesus did—so did his disciples. Jesus predicted that his future followers would do greater things in this line than he himself had done, and modern science is now telling us how to do it.

"In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay their hands on the sick and they shall recover."

This is no mere idle rhetoric—these things have been done and are being done to-day. What does it matter whether the condition precedent be a denial of matter, an affirmation of being or a state of faith?

It matters little to me whether a cure is effected by "absent treatment" or the laying on of hands—I only ask, Does it cure?

When the minister becomes a healer of the body I believe he will also cast out devils and heal social conditions. He will be a teacher also—he will teach justice, mercy and humility. He will cleanse the abyss of its foulness; he will put into the hands of the people the knowledge of how to cleanse and heal themselves; he will be a real follower of Jesus, and not a mere metaphysical faker.

Reverend Henry R. Rose, pastor Universalist Church, Newark, New Jersey, is quoted as follows:

I count it a privilege to be at the head of the Emmanuel Movement in New Jersey. At present I hold my health classes in the parsonage, receiving patients by special appointment. Any clergyman worthy of his cloth can do this, and he will soon find himself benefiting so many people that he will have no further doubt of the need of this move on the part of the clergy or of his own wisdom in making it. When I find clergymen objecting to the healing of the sick by the church, I feel like saying: "If they only knew!" It is pathetic as well as serious for the cause of religion that the ministers are so slow in taking up a work commanded by Jesus and now made scientifically practicable. The psychological hour has arrived.

These are remarkable utterances. They may afford our readers a clew to the spirit and sentiment of the new movement. Quite as remarkable are some statements found in a sermon by Reverend A. B. Simpson, entitled "Gifts and grace," published in the Christian Herald, September 23, from which we quote:

Following this come the gifts of healing. This does not mean some magic or magnetic power possessed by some individuals, enabling them to remove disease by a touch, but at the same time a very real power to help God's sick and suffering children to know and receive him as their healer and life. Just as God gives to some the special ministry of leading souls to Christ, so he gives to others as distinct a ministry in leading sufferers to receive the healing power of the Great Physician. And in these days of divine manifestation, when God has been for some years calling marked attention to the physical aspects of redemption, it is surely a time when we should call upon God for a mighty revival of the ministry of healing, and a distinct endowment of the workers who are called to it with the faith and power of God, even as in the days of old.

The Kansas City Journal, September 24, contained a reference to the work of Doctor Osbron of that place, as follows:

In his practice of healing the halt, the sick and the lame by means of psycho-therapeutics, and his educational propaganda to spread his "applied Christianity," as he calls it, the pastoral policy of the Reverend Doctor Andrew T. Osbron of Bennington Heights Methodist Episcopal Church was indorsed by his congregation last night.

Some time ago Doctor Osbron received the indorsement of the church board, but the congregation as a whole had never given a public expression of its sentiment. Not a word against the work of their pastor was spoken at last night's meeting by the various members of the church body, and toward the conclusion a committee was appointed to draw up resolutions expressing the congregational approval.

Before receiving the approval or disapproval of his people, Doctor Osbron made a final earnest appeal that his work might go on with their consent and support. When he was through he sat down inside the altar rail and asked point blank: "Now, what will you do?"

In his work, Doctor Osbron seems to try to get as far away as possible from charlatanism, and in outward show never takes himself too seriously.

He told of one boy who came to him with a case of neuralgia to be cured. "When I passed my hands over his face," said he, "he began smiling a little, and I thought he was about to give me the laugh, but instead he gave signs of relief, and finally exclaimed, 'That's fine doin's.'"

In his appeal to the congregation, Mr. Andrews [Osbron] said: "This movement has no reference to Christian Science, and I began in the work before I had ever heard of such a thing. We should take up our duty as we find it, and by means of the God-given power which we possess, we can bring back to Methodism its old-time strength."

The secular press seems to look with a degree of approbation on the adventures of the clergy into the field of the religio-scientific medication. The Kansas City Journal (July 31) contained the following editorial:

The significance of the fervor with which the church is taking up the work of healing is too profound to be ignored, and certainly it is too sincere to be either ridiculed or condemned. . . .

But the most interesting feature of this new departure of the church is that it is both a return to primitive Christianity and a binding link between religion and health. It is the true "Romance of two worlds." It is in a sense picking up the threads lost in the mazes of primitive bickering of the Dark Ages of intellectual night, of the horrible renaissance of persecution and the latter-day sensuousness of luxury and lethargy.

The great Teacher whose name is given to the church went about healing the sick and teaching both sick and well. He did not neglect the affairs of either world, though he did lay supreme stress upon the things of eternal life. But the maimed and halt and blind of body appealed to him with hardly less force than the maimed and halt and blind of soul. He raised men from the grave of this world as well as from the grave of spiritual death. The church has departed from this dual salvation. It has been getting back to the days when Christ fed the people and then preached to them, and now it is getting back to the days when he healed them and often did not throw in discourse. . . .

Medical missionaries are those who are doing the most practical, if not the most effective, work in the foreign field. If the pastor in the home field is able to perform minor cures, let him be welcomed to the ranks of the benefactors, for the man who is not hungry and altogether homeless and friendless is half prepared to receive the message of spiritual salvation, and the man who is cured through the agency of a minister is at least two thirds on the way toward receptiveness.

It will be noticed that these men do not assume the Christian Science attitude toward disease. They recognize the actual existence of disease. Thus far their attitude is rational, biblical, and easily understood. They lay considerable stress on the personal power of the minister, his ability to dominate the mind of the patient and suggest new lines of thought and action. The direct intervention of God in answer to prayer is not dwelt upon very emphatically.

Probably with some the new movement is merely a fad. Others may have taken it up with the hope of regaining the "lost hold of the church on the people." Some hope to enrich themselves. But we can not doubt that others are sincere and are moved by a profound pity for the ailing and a commendable desire to restore the power and blessings of the primitive church.

The healing of the sick in the days of the apostles was a gospel sign, a sign to believers. Without the gospel it had no special significance or value. At most it would but indicate some peculiar psychical power of the individual. To-day the error is sometimes made of making the healing of the sick a gospel unto itself. It is not subsidiary and a sign of something greater; it is the thing itself, the chief thing that is preached, the one thing on which rests the claim of its advocates.

Along with serious presentations on this subject comes much that seems absurd and ridiculous. We have before us The Signs that Follow, organ of the Society of Silent Unity, Kansas City, for May-June, 1908. Reduced to simple English the basic idea of the Society of Silent Unity seems to be that one can argue himself into a healed condition by simply saying to himself repeatedly that nothing is the matter, and with the further assistance of a devotee of the cult who emphatically assures him that he is healed.

On the first page of this periodical we find the following tooth treatment:

There are no unsettled problems in my mind. All questions are harmonized in my consciousness, and peace of Spirit is established in the very substance of my thought, and I am satisfied. The nerves of my teeth are in divine order, through the indwelling Christ-mind, and all is well.

To ask a man who has a carious tooth, the nerve of which is beating the Devil's tattoo, to affirm to his own mind that the nerves of his teeth are "in divine order" and that he has no unsettled problems, evinces a confidence that passes the sublime and becomes ridiculous. Even Mrs. Eddy is reported to have been troubled by the delusion that her tooth ached until she gave way to that error of the mortal mind and had it expelled with the aid of laughing gas and an expert dentist. We can not vouch for the truth of the report, but from what we know of human nature and toothache it does not seem incredible.

The same number of The Signs that Follow contains three pages of testimonies among which we notice this, "The cousin you are treating for baldness was here this morning, and I am glad to say that his hair has begun to grow again."

The St. Louis Post, October 5, has a report of a recent meeting of the "new thought" cult in New York City. At this session the leader, Mrs. Marsh, gave this advice.

If anything ails you, physically or mentally, do something to get your nerves and [on] a new rate of vibration, usually a little higher key is the best; sometimes, in cases of emergency, a little lower key.

Such a procedure might work well in case of toothache. Most sufferers therefrom would welcome a change of vibration.

Passing from the ridiculous to the serious we will close with a quotation from the Christian Endeavor World, September 24.

Men of all faiths are realizing to-day that God is no respecter of persons, but that divine power is "in God's world," is "in the soul," waiting to be called into activity. Jesus said, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Faith works toward wholeness. Fear dissolves our strength and lays us low; faith, grasping God, who is within us as well as without, seizes upon infinite, exhaustless power, and builds up both soul and body.

Just what effect this change of attitude may have upon our work is hard to say. But we may be prepared for an entire change of front. We may expect to hear our religious contemporaries affirm that they advocate and always have advocated the idea of divine healing. ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE "STAR" AND "EVIDENCE".

Our neighbor at Independence, the Evening and Morning Star, has in its number for September, 1908, rather an amusing and yet vicious slap at the Reorganized Church because of the reprinting in the HERALD of some extracts from the Salt Lake Tribune dealing with the question of the complicity of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, with the introduction of polygamy.

Quoting from this article in the Evening and Morning Star published under the head of "Those 'Spirit' letters as follows:

We are against it as strongly as the HERALD or Ensign, but fair play demands that no more blame should be attached to Brigham Young than is his just due. We stand prepared to present evidence showing that Joseph Smith was publicly charged, in his lifetime, in the press of his own city, as having been the author of a revelation teaching a plurality of wives. This is no new evidence, but has been in existence for many years, and no doubt both the editors of the HERALD and the Ensign are aware of its existence. Why then should these journals which profess to be Christian publications, give the prestige of their position to the circulation of matter which they quite easily know tends to deceive the uninformed? Will they explain?

The Star is correct with regard to the editors of the HERALD and Ensign knowing of the existence of what the Star is pleased to call evidence. The Star should also know that there are a great many things called evidence which when properly tested can not be dignified by being called nor be received as proof. Evidence is one thing, proof quite another.

It would seem that the Star is quite late in this attempt to introduce evidence. For if the Star is correct when it states that this evidence has been in existence for many years, and the Star can produce it, it is quite striking that it was not produced at the time of the litigation, in the United States Courts, over the Temple Lot in Independence; for the church for which the Evening and Morning Star ostensibly stands, put forth their efforts to prove Joseph Smith to have had complicity with polygamy, and their then acting president of the church, Charles A. Hall, invoked the assistance of the Utah polygamy branch to furnish evidence by which they could maintain their allegations in their defense in that suit. They failed at that time to prove their contention against Joseph Smith, and while we agree to the statement that Brigham Young should not receive more than his share of the blame, we have an undoubted right to hold that he shall receive his share, and we think decidedly that what the Star calls "those 'Spirit' letters" presented strong evidence amounting to proof that Joseph Smith was not the author of plural marriage in America. No explanation, therefore, is due in the matter.

Several articles have appeared in the Star of late which indicate that those who are supporting it and whose organ it is, are exercising extreme solicitude with reference to the Reorganized Church. We are just now so much of an object of solicitude to them and others of our religious contemporaries, that we may almost reiterate what one of the apostles of old said: "We are beset on every side." The persistent effort which the Star is making to befoul the character of Joseph Smith is very striking when it is considered that the very existence of what is called the Church of Christ, who are the supporters of the Star, have their spiritual existence and standing through the very man whose character they are so solicitously engaged in defaming. They seem not to have thought that honest thinking men, to whom they make appeals, will not fail to see that they are vitiating the fountain from which they have been receiving their church existence.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

An international congress on tuberculosis met in Washington, District of Columbia, during the last week in September and the first week in October. Many distinguished scientists were present from various parts of the world. Perhaps the most distinguished member of the congress was Doctor Koch, of Germany, who discovered the bacillus of tuberculosis in 1882. The congress spent considerable time on the question of the possibility of transmitting bovine tuberculosis to human beings. Doctor Koch was strenuous in the defense of his position that human beings can not contract tuberculosis from animals. His associates were almost a unit on the other side of the question. The matter was finally decided by vote once for all that man is subject to contagion from bovine tuberculosis. Farmers and dairymen will do well to look to the health of their herds. The matter of a few dollars should not weigh in the balance with human health and happiness.

To-day's steamers will carry the first letters from the United States to England under the new postal treaty for a two-cent stamp. Owing to the difference in time, the first penny-stamped letters will have left England earlier.

Neither the distance nor the cost of the service is great; we were already sending letters to the Philippines for two cents. It is not the first foreign two-cent postage arrangement; we had already sent letters for two cents to Canada, Cuba, Mexico, and Shanghai. But it is the first arrangement which puts two of the five great "world powers" in closer communication by mail.—New York World.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Lamoni has had its share in the political agitation incident to a presidential campaign. Most of the parties having candidates in the field have made themselves heard. The Socialists have had several out-of-town speakers, including their candidate for governor of Iowa. The Democrats have an active and enthusiastic Bryan club that meets every Tuesday evening. On Thursday last the Republicans held a rally in the town park which attracted a good attendance, including several visitors from neighboring towns. The speakers were Governor Cummins, Congressman Hepburn, and Mr. Clarke, Republican candidate for the office of lieutenant governor of Iowa.

The Graceland College lecture course opened Tuesday evening with the advent of the Parland-Newhall Company. The entertainment was held in the upper auditorium of the church; the attendance was very large. The program was varied, entertaining, and well rendered. Yet despite the high order of the entertainment it is still a matter of regret that Lamoni has no suitable assembly hall aside from the church where such gatherings can be held.

Elder W. H. Kephart desires his correspondents to note that his address is changed from Lamoni, Iowa, to Seymour, Missouri.

THE IMPORTANCE OF BAPTISM.

If a foreigner desires to become an American citizen, and enjoy the rights and privileges of this great Republic, he must be naturalized. If a man desires to become a member of the kingdom of God, and enjoy the gifts and blessings of that kingdom, he must be baptized. Our Government will receive no man into citizenship on his own terms. He must comply with the laws which the Government itself imposes. The kingdom of God will receive no man on his own terms. He must obey the law which God has instituted. Our Government demands that the foreigner shall declare his intention, and swear allegiance to this nation before he becomes a citizen. God demands that a man shall repent of his sins and be baptized before he becomes a member of his kingdom.

A man can live in this country, do business, have a home, and enjoy life and liberty without being a citizen, but he can not vote or hold office, and in case of war with his native land he may be obliged to "pack up and leave," or take up arms and be naturalized. A man can enjoy all the pleasures of this world, mingle in all the society of men, enjoy happiness and peace without being baptized; but when death approaches him he will suffer loss, for he must be baptized or he never can enter the celestial kingdom. Our heavenly Father has decreed that every person born on this earth, who is willing to become a member of his church and kingdom, must do so by adoption, and he has prescribed the only means of adoption and that is baptism.

Through the fall of Adam Satan got possession of this world, and it became his kingdom. There is only one way by which man can get out of that kingdom. That is by entering the kingdom of God. He can do that only through baptism, as Jesus says, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God." Those of olden times who sought God aright were called "sons of God," and he desires that all men should become his sons. The natural man is not a son of God. How can he become one? Jesus says to man, "Ye must be born again." He must be born of water (baptized) and of the Spirit. There is no other way. "As many as have been baptized unto Christ have put on Christ." "If any man be in Christ he is a new creature." He is a son of God. Through baptism he becomes a joint heir with Jesus Christ. He is adopted into the seed of Abraham, and becomes an heir to all the promises made to Abraham. Without baptism this can not be accomplished. Our Savior made great promises for those who followed him in the regeneration, new birth, baptism. All anxious to serve him should be willing to follow him.

That a man might become a son of God, it was necessary that he should be freed from the sins attached to him. Therefore, baptism is also "for the remission of sins." There is no other way by which man can get free from them. He must "repent and wash away" his sins through baptism. In times past God made special promises of blessings to the Jews. Paul, in one of his figures, likens them to a tame olive-tree, and the Gentiles to a wild olive-tree, and says that when the branches of the tame olive-tree (Jews) became rebellious, they were broken off, and the wild olive-branches (Gentiles) were grafted in. In order for a man to share in the precious promises, he must be grafted into the tame olive-tree, the seed of Abraham. He can be grafted in only through baptism—there is no other way.

The desire of the Christian is to be like Jesus, and one of the objects of God is to have all men who are saved typify in themselves his crowning act in redeeming the world, so all must be "buried with him in baptism," and be raised up unto "newness of life," as he was in the resurrection, so through baptism we typify his death, burial, and resurrection. And Paul carries the argument still further and says, we are "crucified with him." None of this can be accomplished without baptism.

In order that man may successfully combat the evil in this world, it is necessary that he have the "gift of the Holy Ghost." Peter tells us how this gift may be obtained. He says, "Repent and be baptized, . . . in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." All must first be baptized in order to receive it. There is no other way.

We believe John was alluding to the great importance of baptism when he stated that "there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, the water, and the blood."—John 5: 8. Remember these three bear witness. All men are born of the blood, and the blood will bear witness of that fact. Jesus says that for man to enter the kingdom he must be born again. He must be born of water and of the Spirit. When man is baptized he is born of water, and the water will bear witness of that event. When he has hands laid upon him for the reception of the Holy Ghost, he is born of the Spirit, and the Spirit will bear witness of that, so the "three agree in one." If a man is not baptized these three can not witness for him.

Some time this earth, which has been baptized in water for the remission of sin at the time of the flood, will be baptized with fire and the Holy Ghost. Then all the evil and dross will be consumed. It will then become celestialized, and made the fit abode of celestial beings. Then the saints will dwell on the earth. Then, as to who will be entitled to dwell here, there are three that will bear witness. More important than the birth of the blood is the birth of the water, and more important still is the birth of the Spirit, but all three are necessary to make a perfect man. Reader, have you been thus born? Or do you not care for these great privileges?

THE MIND OF MAN.

The mind is the source of man's achievement.

The most primitive use it, but the world has not yet produced a man who can tell us what it is.

The mind is the divine part of man. We approach the study of the mind with the same reverence with which we would investigate the nature of Deity, for if the Creator is conscious and can institute causes that produce certain effects he must have a mind, and whatever we can learn of the nature of the mind we learn that much of the nature of God. We study the mind for the same reason we study any of the phenomena of nature, that we may learn its functions and the laws under which it exists and operates. When we know these laws we can then become masters of our own minds and use them to produce desired effects in our lives.

What a wonderful range of mind power is displayed in the animal kingdom! From the protoplasm, the physical basis of life, up through the many grades of lower life to our most intelligent domestic animals that all but talk, then from the lowest mind of man, little superior to the animal, if, indeed, the equal, up the greatest intellect of time. Although man is superior to the brute, he is not the only possessor of a mind. The lowest form of animal life, the protoplasm, has a mind by which it is able to select its food and properly respond to its environment. In what respect then is man superior to the brute?

A stranger approaching a country house asked the little boy, who was playing in the yard, where his father was. The youngster replied, "He's down there in the barnyard with the hogs. You can tell dad 'cause he's the one with the hat on." That is one respect in which man differs from the brute. He wears a hat. Judging from the actions of some men, this seems to be the principle distinction in a great many cases, but that's not the only difference between man and the hog. Man is able to reason.

The highest attribute of the mind is reason. Reason enables man to progress and distinguishes him from the brute: Destroy man's reason and you have a brute left. Throw an ear of corn to the hogs, they will fight for it. They have no reason to convince them that fighting is detrimental to their welfare. Throw a ten dollar bill in a crowd of men—what's the result? The chances are a fight. Hogs fight because they can not reason—men fight because they will not reason. There is little difference between the hogs who can not reason and the men who will not—their actions are the same? Man is superior to the brute only when he uses his reason.

There is a greater difference between the lowest mind of man and the highest than there is between the highest brute intelligence and the lowest human intelligence. Whether this is true or not and whatever the difference, it consists in the use the mind makes of its reasoning power. Reason not only distinguishes man from the brute, but it distinguishes the great mind from the inferior. Whatever progress has been made in science, morals, or religion has been made through the power of the mind to reason. Progress is possible only when reason rules. The wonderful achievements of the nineteenth century have been produced by men who have carefully studied the laws of nature, who have observed the effect produced by certain conditions, who have purposely and intelligently created the conditions that produced desired effects and destroyed the conditions that produced undesirable effects.

There is a period of history when reason was at a discount. It was at the risk of life that man dared to dispute existing traditions and theories. His right to reason was not recognized. This reign of superstition when reason was dethroned produced conditions from which the world has not yet fully recovered. So obscured was the light of reason during this time that we refer to it as the "Dark Ages." Only recently, during the present year, the newspapers of Mexico, in speaking of the earthquake which had just occurred, said, "Some think it was caused by the sickness of the Archbishop." As long as men thought the plague, which annually produced such havoc and loss of life in London, was caused by an act of providence, they were unable to prevent its recurrence. When they discovered that cleanliness was a condition essential to health, when they maintained a pure water supply and made proper disposition of filth and decaying matter, the plague disappeared. The superstitious, of course, concluded that providence had relented.

All the material world is linked together by cause and effect. Every effect in the moral world is produced by a cause, just as surely as effects are produced by causes in the material world.

We readily accept this to be true in the material world, but it is so difficult to perceive in the moral world because effects do not follow their causes so quickly.

Ecclesiastes 8:11: "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil."

Experience teaches us that we can only change effects by altering their causes. A man puts his hand in the fire and is burned. The effect follows the cause immediately and every man knows that the way to stop the burning is to take his hand out of the fire. A man harbors thoughts of hatred and revenge against his brother. After a time his character becomes seared and shriveled just as literally as his hand would in the fire. The effect does not follow the cause as quickly, however, and a man who has thus lost his nobility of character may not be able to trace the cause of his loss. Indeed, he may not think there is a cause at all. He may conclude that providence is to blame and justify himself in hating his brother because his brother has ill-treated him. In doing this he makes a mistake. His misery will never cease until he discovers the true cause of it and applies the remedy there. A moral action may not produce an immediate effect, but every man will have to meet the effects of his acts sooner or later. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

To produce desired results in any realm, physical, moral, or spiritual, man must comply with the laws of that realm. The farmer who sows wheat according to the laws of nature becomes a successful farmer—the man of commerce who conducts his business according to good business principles becomes wealthy. The man who wishes to develop a good moral character must comply with the laws governing the growth of character. Reason enables man to do this intelligently.

The causes of all motion in matter are the silent, unseen forces, light, heat, electricity, gravity. The cause of all action is the silent force of thought. Thought is the cause, action is the result. If we clearly appreciate this fact we can change our actions by intelligently dealing with their causes. Every kind, charitable thought has been repeated in the mind before it culminates in an act. The liar repeats the lie in his mind before he gives it expression. The jealous man pictures to himself the way he will get even, imagines the personal encounter with his enemy and sees himself the victor. As a consequence he becomes a murderer. Action is the necessary consequence of thought and indicates what the man has been. A man is as he thinks—no more, no less. As a man thinketh, so is he. The only difference between you and me is the character of our thoughts.

The followers of Zoroaster understand that thoughts develop into action and arrange their funerals to symbolically represent this idea. They do not bury their dead as we, but provide a tall, circular building, the top of which consists of a sort of grating, upon which the dead are placed and left as food for vultures. It is in the arrangement of the bodies, however, that they illustrate the development of thought into action. The grates are arranged in three circles. The bodies of children are placed on the inner circle, the bodies of women on the next, and the bodies of men on the outer circle. The inner circle of children is emblematic of good thoughts, the circle of women good words, and the circle of men of good deeds. They thus illustrate thoughts divided into two classes: those which develop to good words, and those which develop to good deeds.

Our present character is the result of past thinking. We can change it, but we can only change it slowly. If we look back life's pathway we can realize how slow has been its growth. The experience of each day has brought a change, perhaps the change is so slight that we may not be able to perceive it. Perhaps we can see the growth only when we compare our present character with what it was a year or more ago—so will be the change in the future. The growth in the future will be no more rapid than it has been in the past. As we look back and see the mistakes we have made, the foolish things we have done, we often exclaim, "Oh! if I could only live my life over again and know what I know now, how differently I should live." This should inspire us with fortitude. We can meet the consequences of our present mistakes with courage, for we know in the future when our minds are still more developed we shall then say again, "I know more now." We learn by the things which we suffer. When we look at the men who are below us in the moral scale, we are apt to forget that they are learning their lessons the same as we are learning ours. We know that we have to "grow in grace," "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little." We can not help being what we are. We are like Topsy, we "just growed." We should remember that those around us who are making mistakes and doing what we know to be wrong are just growing too. They are doing that which is a natural consequence of their past thinking. They can not help being what they are any more than we can help being what we are. I do not mean to say that we can not change; indeed, we can not help changing. Change is inevitable, but we can only modify our future character by present thought. Our destiny changes with our thought. Henry Wood uses this illustration to present this idea. He compares our train of thought to a stream of water flowing into a cistern. If the stream is dirty, in process of time the contents of the whole cistern becomes foul. If the stream is purified it does not change the character of the contents at once, but only as the foul accumulations of the past are allowed to pass out and are replaced by the clear water does the whole contents become pure. If you would become great, give attention to the stream of thought which you are pouring into your consciousness. Your destiny is in your own hands. Form your ideals, apply your reason to the solution of the problems of daily life. Carefully determine the conditions which are necessary to produce the result you desire in your life and then proceed intelligently to produce those conditions.

Those who neglect to use the higher powers of the mind are slaves to their environment. They fail in life because their surroundings are unfavorable, they are wicked if their surroundings are evil. If they are good, it is because they have had no opportunity to be bad. If they succeed in life it is because their surroundings produce their success; while those who use the higher powers of the mind succeed in life regardless of environment. They are able to live virtuous lives in evil surroundings. Their lives are successful because they are masters of their environment and make it what they will.

OPPORTUNITY.

This I beheld, or dreamed it in a dream:—
 There spread a cloud of dust along a plain:
 And beneath the cloud, or in it raged
 A furious battle, and men yelled, and swords
 Shocked upon swords and shields.
 A prince's banner
 Wavered, then staggered backward, hemmed by foes.
 A craven hung along the battle's edge,
 And thought, 'Had I a sword of keener steel—
 That blue blade that the king's son bears—but this Blunt thing—!' he snapped and flung it from his hand
 And lowering crept away and left the field.
 Then came the king's son, wounded, sore bestead,
 And weaponless, and saw the broken sword,
 Hilt-buried in the dry and trodden sand,
 And ran and snatched it, and with battle-shout
 Lifted afresh he hewed his enemy down,
 And saved a great cause that heroic day.

—W. E. Sills.

This battle we see repeated over and over again. Weak-minded, cowardly men lament present conditions and plead as an excuse for their failure the lack of opportunity. Strong-minded, courageous men utilize present conditions and create opportunities. Present condition becomes opportunity when intelligently modified and made to produce desired effects. That great American sonnet, "Opportunity," from the pen of J. J. Ingalls, leaves nothing for the mind to do but idly wait the coming of opportunity, and leaves us powerless to determine our destiny.

"Master of human destiny am I,
 Fame, love, and fortune on my footsteps wait,
 Cities and fields I walk,
 I penetrate deserts and seas remote
 Passing by hovel, mart, and palace soon or late,
 I knock unbidden once at every gate.

If sleeping, wake, if feasting rise before I turn away.

It is the hour of fate.

Those who follow me reach every estate mortals desire, and conquer every foe, save death.

Those who hesitate condemned to failure, penury, and woe, seek me in vain and uselessly implore.

I answer not and I return no more."

Ah! if this be true, great men deserve no credit for their achievements—those who fail are justified in their bitter complaint—the wicked should not be punished and the good should not be respected. Environment has made them what they are. Their fate is determined by opportunity. But it is not true. Environment is only a factor in our lives. The mind is the other factor and reason is its highest attribute. Only those who can not or will not use their reason are slaves to their environment. Those who can and do use their reason adjust themselves to present conditions. In the process of time they modify and change their condition. Eventually they create environment. They become masters and order their lives as they will. Opportunity has been made a scapegoat by men who lack moral courage to admit their own weaknesses. Walter Malone has made a noble answer to Senator Ingalls. He makes opportunity say,

"They do me wrong who say I come no more and fail to find you in,

Each day I stand outside your door and bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Wail not for precious chances passed away,

Weep not for golden ages on the wane,

Each night I burn the records of the day,

At sunrise each soul is born again.

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,

To vanquished joys be blind and deaf and dumb.

My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,

But never bind a moment yet to come.

Though deep in mire wring not your hands and weep:

I lend my arm to all who say I can,

No shame-faced outcast ever sank so deep,

But yet might rise and be again a man.

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?

Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow,

Then turn from blotted archives of the past,

And find the future's pages white as snow.

Art thou a mourner, rouse thee from thy spell,

Art thou a sinner, sins may be forgiven,

Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,

Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven."

THE PARENTS' OPPORTUNITY.

I have only recently seen, in part, the depth of thought contained in Doctrine and Covenants 28:13:

Wherefore they [children] can not sin, for power is not given unto Satan to tempt little children, until they begin to become accountable before me; for it is given unto them even as I will, according to mine own pleasure, that great things may be required at the hand of their fathers.

While preparing for the funeral of an infant this passage afforded me great satisfaction—teaching as it does that satanic agents are not allowed access to the child's mind; consequently their plastic natures are left to be molded at the will of their parents. What a field for opportunity!

The time (the favorable time) is limited. Seven or eight years only. It is a clear field till the limit of time is reached. After that comes in the enemy's work of sowing tares. Because of this gracious opportunity "great things may [will] be required at the hand of their fathers"—parents.

Notice the terms will and pleasure. Oh, the goodness of God thus manifested in giving parents a chance to train, indoctrinate, and thus fortify the child for the fierce contests of coming life! Thus to forestall the child's mind will be (to use a western expression) like "filing a preëmption claim" on him before the Devil can "homestead" him.

"LET US THEN BE UP AND DOING."

"As old age creeps upon me, this work grows dearer with each passing year. I have been a member of this church almost sixty-three years. A great part of that time has been spent in active missionary work; some of it in foreign lands. Yet to-day, when I look back over that time and consider my life, what I have done seems very little in comparison with what I might have done!"

These words were part of the concluding remarks of the aged minister who preached for us last Sunday morning.

"What I might have done!" I have been thinking of it ever since. From my point of view, his has been a useful life. Nearing eighty-three years of age, having spent years in God's service, being blessed in his ministrations in the gospel, he has certainly accomplished much. Yet now, as the other shore appears only a little way ahead, he sets a different estimate upon life's duties, and sees what he might have done with a clearer comprehension.

Will it be the same with us? Are we to-day leaving undone the things we might do for the upbuilding of God's kingdom? For pleasure, for worldly gain, for ambition, are we putting aside and leaving undone the work we know that we could do? I fear many of us have, many of us do.

"Zion might even now have been redeemed," you know, had not our fathers neglected to do their duty. Will the same be true of us?

I took the lesson home to myself and would like to help you apply it also. I compared my own work with what I might have done, with what I have felt a desire, an inspiration, to do. I thought of the many times that to my mind have come thoughts not meant for me alone. I intended to write them when I had time. I thought of the visits to weak Saints that I meant to make but never did. I was too busy. I thought of time that might have been spent in study of the Doctrine and Covenants, with which I wish I were more familiar. And so on and on.

Is it true of us all? Do we allow the things of this world that are pressing upon us each day to crowd out the things of the higher, spiritual life that we have agreed to live in Christ Jesus? If so, will we not regret with unutterable sorrow the "might have been's" by and by when the summing up time comes?

Will the daintily made clothing of our children ever repay for a lack of "gospel training"?

It matters very little to-day whether my house-keeping was modeled after all the "spic and span" method of my neighbors or not, but it does matter, it will eternally matter, whether my children were taught the gospel of Jesus Christ. It will always be my regret if I might have planted precious seeds of truth and was too busy "keeping house" to do it. Alas, there are so many, many housekeepers, and so very few good "home makers."

Do the things that are of vital importance occupy our thoughts most? Are we earnestly engaged in seeking to build up the kingdom of God? If so the "might have's" will be fewer and we will be glad that, like Mary of old, we chose the better part. For while we must have food, shelter, clothing, the main purpose of life is not to obtain and use these, but to learn how to live with God. To make ourselves like him by cultivating the attributes of God that are born within every man. Life, more abundantly, is growth in the direction of God. So, dear Saints, let us, you and I, commence now, to-day, if we have not done so, and make the very most that is possible out of life. Every night we will find that something has been left undone. We never can do all that comes before us each day, but let us choose to do the things that will be for our own advancement in the knowledge of the law of God. Let us choose to do what will benefit those around us, and what will leave a lasting impress for good; and the things we can not do, let them be the ones we will not need when we go into the presence of God.

"THE GATES OF HELL."

In connection with the article on this subject by Bro. W. E. LaRue in the HERALD for August 19, 1908, I wish to present a few thoughts for the consideration of Roman Catholics.

Christians generally are acquainted with the conversation recorded in Matthew 16: 15-19:

He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven.

And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven.

The word it in this scripture refers to the doctrine of the revelation that Jesus is the Christ. And the gates of hell did not prevail against Jesus revealing himself as the Christ, the rock of our salvation.

The apostles' creed teaches us that "he descended into hell, the third day; he arose again from the dead; he ascended into heaven." That is true, and is sustained by the following scripture: "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men."—Ephesians 4: 8-10. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.)

He seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. (See Acts 2: 31.)

For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water.—1 Peter 3: 18-20.

For for this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

Among the other important things taught in the above scripture, it is manifest that "the gates of hell" did not prevent Jesus revealing himself as the Christ. He went into hell and preached to the spirits there, and he came out.

When Jesus asked the question concerning his identity, his followers did not have a knowledge of his divine parentage. They believed just the same as some do to-day. But as a necessity for the foundation of the church of Christ, or kingdom of God, there must exist the ability of Jesus to reveal himself as the Christ the son of the living God. This theory carries with it the idea of present direct revelation as taught by the Apostle Paul.

Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Corinthians 12: 3.

Christ, as such, was a revelation, a rock to the Israelites in the wilderness. "For they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ."—1 Corinthians 10: 4.

The Roman Catholic Church impresses on her members that she is the divinely inspired, authoritative teaching body, that she is infallible in teaching doctrine; that those who reject her reject God. To sustain her position in those things, she uses the following scripture, with other passages also:

Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come.—John 16: 13.

Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.—Matthew 28: 20.

In presenting the claim of the mother church in regard to apostolic succession of the priesthood from Peter to Pius the Thirteenth, her officers use the scripture in the following manner:

And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I say unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

Jesus also said, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Now, if it be proven that the church was overcome or apostatized, or that the gates of hell prevailed against her to her overthrow; then Jesus is proved a false prophet and a liar. Because he said he would "be with the church alway, even unto the end of the world."

Also, he said he would send the Holy Spirit to guide the church into all truth, hence if error be found in the teachings of the church, again is Jesus proclaimed an impostor and all our hope is vain. The errors of individuals in the church do not commit the church.

Reader, notice that the promise of our Lord to "be with his church alway," depends on the teaching and observance of all things whatsoever he commanded, as stated in Matthew 28: 20. When men or organizations say there are no more divine revelations received, that the canon of scripture is full, that God has not spoken since the days of John the Revelator on the Isle of Patmos, then they place themselves behind a barrier that will prevent the Holy Spirit from guiding them into all truth. But the Roman Catholic Church and many of her children and grandchildren say that the canon of scripture is full and that divine plenary inspiration and revelation have ceased. Therefore the Holy Spirit can not guide them into all truth.

Now, when Jesus told Peter that the gates of hell should not prevail against "it," he included the doctrine of revelation. It was revealed to Peter that God was the Father of Jesus. And it was revealed to Jesus that Jona was the father of Peter. (Simon Bar-jona means Simon, the son of Jona.) Further, the word it is of the neuter gender, and refers to a thing or principle or doctrine. The church of Christ throughout the Scriptures is mentioned in the feminine gender; hence Jesus did not indicate his church when he said, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

Note the following references relative to the Church of Christ: The bride, the Lamb's wife (Revelation 21: 9, and 19: 7).

The bride is the bridegroom (John 3: 29).

A bride adorned for her husband (Revelation 21: 2.)

Clothed as a bride [with jewels] (Isaiah 61: 10).

Perfect [through the comeliness put on her] (Ezekiel 16: 8-14).

A chaste virgin (2 Corinthians 11: 2; Jeremiah 31: 4; Revelation 14: 4).

A woman clothed with the sun (Revelation 12: 1-17).

The twelfth chapter of Revelation indicates the church established by Christ in her apostasy or change into the present degenerate Roman Catholic Church and her illegitimate children.

The gates of hell did prevail against her.

"OWE NO MAN ANYTHING."

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: I send you herewith a piece for publication which I translated from a German newspaper, Bote der Urschweiz, printed at Schnozz, Switzerland. I wish you would print it in the HERALD. I think it would teach a good lesson to many of our church members. If you decide not to publish it, please send it back, and I will pay the postage. I do not want it to be put in the waste-basket. With kind regards,

Your brother in Christ,

MAKING DEBTS.

A celebrated Englishman writes about making debts: "When I was yet a little boy, wearing an apron and going to school to a lady teacher, it happened that I needed a slate, and had no money with which to buy one. I was afraid I would be scolded for losing my slate so often, because I was a very careless little fellow, and consequently did not dare to ask at home for money to buy another one. What should I do now? There was a store in the place owned by an old woman, who sold tops, shells, cakes, and balls, and I had seen that she sometimes sold to boys and girls on credit. So I thought that as Christmas was near, surely somebody would make me a present of a half penny or a silver grosh, and I could get the slate on credit and pay for it on Christmas. I did not feel very good about it, but I gathered all my courage and went into the store. The price was a penny, and as I never borrowed anything before, and my credit was good, the friendly old woman handed me the slate, and I was in debt. I did not feel comfortable, and it looked to me as if I had done wrong. But I did not know how soon I was to atone for it. How my father heard of it I never learned, but one little bird or another must have whispered it to him, for he let me feel his displeasure, and may God reward him for it. He was a man of understanding, and did not spoil his children. He did not want them to get acquainted with speculation and finance operation, and so he came against my debt-making at once and with energy. He gave me a good lecture about debt-making, that it looked like stealing, and how people are led to destruction; and how a boy, who owes a penny to-day, may after a while owe a thousand dollars and be cast into prison, and bring shame upon his whole family. It was a powerful sermon, and I seem to hear it yet; and my ears tingle whenever I think of it. Then like a deserter, who is brought back into the barracks, I was escorted back into the store, crying very bitterly the while, being dreadfully ashamed, because I thought, Everybody knows that I make debts. Under many ardent admonitions the penny was paid, and then the poor debtor was let free, like a bird from his cage. How good I felt then that I had no more debts! How earnestly I covenanted and promised my little heart, that nothing could induce me again to make debts. It was a good lecture, and I have not forgotten it. God bless my father for it, I say."

And may there be many such fathers in our country, that it may not perish by rascality; otherwise our people, with all their societies and establishments, and all their paper money, will soon be as worm-eaten as touchwood.

From that day where debt caused me such a bad feeling, I have hated it like Luther the pope; and from the very moment I started housekeeping for myself, it was my greatest care to keep away from my habitation, debt, filth, and the Devil. And if the last named sometimes slipped through my door, or the window, as the old serpent winds itself through the smallest hole, so anyhow have the other two with the help of a good wife, hard work, honesty, and a few scrub-brushes, not stepped over my door-sill.

Debts are something so humiliating, that if I owed one grosh to anybody, I would rather go on foot four miles in the winter to pay him the same, than to have the feeling that I stand under an obligation to him. If my name was on the merchant's book, the baker's, or the tailor's, that I was indebted to them, I would feel like I had beans in my shoes, or a hedgehog in the bed, or a snake crawling up my back.

Poverty is heavy, but debts are horrible. A man could just as well have a smoky house or a quarrelsome woman, which it is said are the worst evils in the life of man. It looks very much as if some people like to owe something. But I would just as soon be a cat in the chimney when the fire burns, or a fox when the dogs are on his heels, or a hedgehog who is pierced on a pitchfork, or a mouse when in the claws of an owl.

For an honest man to hold a purse full of other people's money, is worse than an empty one; it is unbearable to him to eat other people's cheese, to wear other people's shirts, and walk around in another man's shoes. He can not be at rest, as long as his wife shows off in a hat owned by the milliner, and wears the stuff owned by the merchant.

Many neighbors of mine have to trace their downfall to their bad habits in making greater expenses than their means would allow them. I am afraid this love of luxury is a universal sickness in our time, and many who call themselves Christians are suffering with the same disease, to their own shame and loss. Good woolen and cotton clothes are no longer good enough in our days. The girls must go around in satin and silk, and then comes the bill from the dressmaker's, as long and as gloomy as a winter's night. By such pomp and style the money goes quick, the family keeps poor, and the father is in toil and trouble for ever on this earth. When frogs blow themselves up like oxen then they burst. Five dollars a week aping three thousand dollars per year, comes in contact with the state attorney. Such people light their candles at both ends, and then say they were unfortunate. Why do they not call the child by the right name and say that they are spendthrifts.

To be economical is the battle of life half won. It is not so hard to earn money as it is to use it wisely. Hundreds would never have known what distress is, if they had not understood so well how to run through with money. If all the poor women only knew how to cook, how far would the little income their husbands are able to bring in reach?

Those who make debts can hardly escape being liars, because they promise to pay on a certain time, when they know beforehand that they can not do it. And then after they have brought forth a long row of excuses, they promise anew, and so they lie soon and easy.

Borrowing, getting things on credit, leads to lying. Who can then dispute that it is a bad thing? Naturally there are exceptions; and I do not want to speak hard words against honest people, who either by sickness or misfortune become broken down. But we will find, according to common rule, that debts are a great morass and a deep ditch. Happy is the man who again gets out of it, after once falling in. But three times happier is he who, through the goodness of God, has been preserved entirely from it. When we once invite the Devil for dinner, we will surely have a good deal of trouble to get him out of the house again. It is better, if we never let him in; have nothing to do with him. Where a hen lays an egg once, there she will most likely lay another. If a person has once made debts, very likely he will do it the second time? It is far better to keep away from it from the beginning. Who owes a grosh, will soon owe a dollar, and who first gets into the mud to his ankle, will soon be in over his knees. Never owe a penny, and you will never owe a dollar.

I believe a truly honest person will prefer to be as lean as a hound, rather than to make himself fat with borrowed money; and rather let his throat dry out from the dust of the road, than to go in debt for a drink at the saloon. Unpaid merchants' notes will sting like pins and needles into the soul. Free from debt, free from care. Out of debt, out of danger. To lend and to borrow are hedges full of sharp thorns. The Bible says, "Owe no man anything." It does not say, Pay your debts, but, Have no debts to pay. My mind is this; that those who break this on purpose ought to be thrown neck over head out of a religious community.

Our laws render debt-making most dangerous assistance. Nobody need be a thief in our day, he only needs to start a business, and then become bankrupt, so that he may reap a much better profit. Already the proverb has it, Who never is bankrupt, will never be rich. I know merchants who have been bankrupt five and six times, yet in regard to their salvation are perfectly at ease.

My decision is: Pay as you go, and beware of small debts. It is not hard to settle small accounts. Free yourself from the burden of your debts, then you will always know how much you have. Sins and debts we always have, more than we think. Here a little and there a little and soon a person is in over his ears. It is the small expenses which make the pocketbook empty. Money is round and rolls easy away. Many go to market in the time of need with empty pockets, and buy at a price they ask; they have to pay, therefore, too much and get always deeper in the swamp. Then they commence to speculate and use little tricks, and low crafty skill; then an empty pocket can not stand up straight very easy. Nothing good comes thereby. Such sly plans are like spider-webs, which catch nothing better than flies and are soon swept away. As shoes can not be repaired with tissue paper, nor a broken window with ice, so can a business concern on the point of collapse not be kept up straight by impure maneuvers.

It is said that poverty adds to man's five senses a sixth one. It would indeed be very necessary, because many debt-makers seem to have lost the other five. They seem to imagine that by borrowing, debts are not only made, but also paid. Such people pay Peter with that which they borrowed of Paul, and in this wise they get out of their difficulties. In so doing they only stick one foot into the mud to get the other out. To shear eggs and to pull hair from a bald head are difficult, but, alas, in comparison with the lesson to pay debts with empty pockets.

Whosoever thinks that he can pay his debts by trickery is a fool. A person must curtail his expenses, and save his income, if he wants to be free from debt. You can not give your money out and pay your debts at the same time. Detract your living expenses, when your purse is exhausted. Promises make debt, and debt makes promises; but promises can not pay any debt. To promise is one thing, and to do is another.

The word of a man ought to be as sure as an oath. He ought never to promise to pay unless his prospects are sure, so he can pay at the promised time.

THE CRISIS INVOLVED IN COLLEGE LIFE.

The reference of the subject of this brief article is to the individual crisis. There can scarcely be any time more critical than that which brings a young life to the new freedom of the college. Think for a moment of the extent of the change.

Hitherto the high school student has been under close tutelage. He has gone to the school building at a certain hour and has remained until the clock struck the moment of adjournment. Even when he had no recitations he has been held in the assembly room under the eye of the appointed teacher. Here order is compulsory. He can not play. He must either dream or study. At the end of the session he marches out in regular order. All this approaches the military regime. Recitations are scheduled: and so is the student.

What a change comes at college! The student goes to his appointed recitation, but between the hours he disposes of his overtime. He studies; it may be that he does not. Even if he be in the college dormitory, supervision is purposely loose. The taskmaster is always at a distance. For the first time in his life this student has the freedom of his time. Ordinarily he can go the end of his first term without meeting a definite day of judgment. If he is lured and deceived by the distance of that day, college freedom plays a severe trick upon him, and he is either cast out or given a new probation. Men talk about "academic freedom"! The most dangerous, and yet most glorious "academic freedom" is just this: the freedom of the student who, with only such supervision as can be given to hundreds of young people, relates a free mind to free time! This always makes a crisis in intellectual life. Here is a good question for the new student this fall: "O, young man, what are you going to do with your freedom of time when you get to college? Here is your crisis!"

And the same thing is quite as true morally and religiously. Freedom comes in. The parents are not at hand to inquire where you are going "this evening"; to see what time you retire to rest; to ask whether you have studied that Latin or geometry. And the president and professor can not follow you with such care and queries. You can waste your evenings, spend vacant day-hours "down streets," and yet leave the home folks in ignorance for a time.

Nor does the pastor at the college town know you well. Formerly you were quite intimate with the preacher, and all the church people considered your going to college as an event. But here you are one of hundreds, and it will be long ere the new pastor, however faithful he may be, will know you well. So your relation to your home and to the church is free. The meaning of this fact can not be overestimated.

To the student himself this liberty offers the best chance he has ever had for manhood. If he uses the crisis of freedom aright, it will make a man of him. If he abuses the crisis, it will abuse him terribly! So I repeat the question: "O, young man entering college, what are you going to do with that new liberty?"

To the parent this crisis has meaning also. The student should be sent where liberty will have proper incitements and inspirations, where the boy can avoid certain habits without being called a "cad," where the general fashion is to do the right thing, and where somehow Christ is given a fair chance to work into the young heart that "law of liberty" which is the final thing in character.—Bishop Edwin H. Hughes, De Pauw University, Greencastle, Indiana, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

JEW'S BUY IN PALESTINE.

JERUSALEM, October 10.—The Turkish constitution has proved an immense boon to Zionism. Jews were formerly forbidden to buy land in Palestine. They did so by stealth, but are now making purchases openly.

A report is current that the crown domains, extending over a large portion of the whole length of the Jordan Valley from Tiberias to the Dead Sea, and forming the sultan's private estates, are in the market, and that a Jewish syndicate is negotiating their purchase. There is little doubt that the Jews will soon once more be in possession of the site of ancient Jericho, the land which was the first fruits of their conquest in Canaan. The larger part of the Holy City outside the walls already belongs to Jewish capitalists and Zionist pioneers.

A remarkable event occurred at Nazareth recently. The moslem judge invited all the sheiks, as well as Greeks, Romans, and English churchmen, to the mosque. A large mixed crowd gathered. The judge went up to the pulpit and preached a long sermon. An English clergyman followed and spoke from the same platform.—Kansas City Journal, October 11, 1908.

The Royal Way.

Dear laughing eyes, I will not pray
That God shall never send you tears;
That cloudless sunshine day by day
Shall brighten all your coming years.
I pray that still through cloud and rain
Your inner depths may hold their light,
And under happiness or pain
You find the Father's meaning bright,
Reading in all life's mingled good
Your title of high womanhood.

Dear girlish hands, I will not choose
The softest, daintiest tasks for you;
God send you strength to give and use!
God send his work for you to do!
The sacred ministry to need,
The round of household toil and care,
The binding up of hearts that bleed,
The girding up of hearts that dare,—
The labor of love's law, made good
In royal years of womanhood.

Dear dancing feet, I would not make
Your path all smooth from thorn and brier;
The climbing road be yours to take,
The thorn-set splendid struggle higher.
God give you still life's springing zest,
Never content with what is past;
God grant you through earth's weariest
To walk undaunted to the last,
Climbing the steeps of hard-won good
To heaven's height of womanhood.

The Band Concert.

We were spending the night in the town and at the invitation of our host and hostess we went to listen to the band concert which was given each Saturday evening in the open air on the public square. The harvest moon shone so brightly and the soft balmy air seemed so inviting that we felt that indeed it was a pleasure to accept the invitation. As it was five blocks to the square we rode with the son of our old friend behind a pair of pretty little grays, one of which was very frisky and acted as if he hardly knew which he preferred doing, to walk on four feet or to raise himself and walk on his hind ones.

When we arrived we found many had come before us, and we were told that a magic lantern show was to begin in the hall just a short distance down the street, and at once the host and husband proposed we go. But my friend and the writer laughingly informed him we had seen magic lantern shows before and did not care to see one to-night. However, we proposed they go alone and laugh as much as they care to, and not waiting for us to insist they sped down the street in the direction of the moving picture scenes. A flight of broad steps just on the corner looked so tempting that we sat down on one of the lower ones to watch and drink in the scenes about us. People were coming from all directions, up the street, down the street, across from east to west, and from west to east. Everybody appeared to be happy, all talking, laughing, and greeting those about them. There were laddies and lassies young and pretty to look upon. There were little children, babies in go-carts, babies in arms, and babies toddling along on the pavement, holding to their mamma's hands. There were gray-haired fathers and mothers, middle-aged ones also, some wheeling their baby-carriages along who looked as if it had been but a short time since they themselves had been the occupants of the vehicle. All had come to hear the band play, and they were not to be disappointed, for presently from out the shadows came a group of prettily uniformed young men and took their places beneath the great lamp which hung high overhead and shed about such a beautiful, pinkish, purple light upon the scene beneath. The electric lights were not turned on as the full moon sent a broad, mellow light over all, which lent a beauty to the scene very much appreciated by one who was given to dreaming during hours of wakefulness.

The music was enchanting, for in this hour of so many good musicians who would venture to play for the public but those who understood what they were attempting to do. There were the groups of school children, also the merry college students, but one thing that struck me as being amusing was that so many were hungry. "Hungry!" you will exclaim in astonishment. Why, yes, so many were eating. Eating candy, peanuts, watermelons, bananas, oranges, and other things which I need not mention, that one would naturally draw the conclusion they were hungry. As for myself I must confess, although somewhat intoxicated with the music and the scene about me, I did not feel hungry; for the memory of a good supper partaken of just prior to our coming still lingered with us.

Once a group of six or seven young ladies were standing near and they were remarking how thirsty they were when a sensible young fellow whom I fancied I had seen before—times connected with the district Sunday-school work said, "Ladies, come with me and I will treat you all to a drink of nice, cool (?) water." Whereupon they laughed pleasantly and away across the street went the merry group to claim the proffered treat.

One very conceited young man—yes, he was certainly young—came close by an approaching couple of schoolgirls perhaps thirteen or fourteen years of age, and asked one of them to accompany him to the show, as at nine o'clock the scenes were changed, making a second show for the night, and the dainty little miss looked shyly about her and said no. When he began to press his suit farther, she turned and quickly passed up the stone steps and perched herself back on one of the highest, back of a row of married ladies, and when your writer smiled up at her she blushed and said, "I told him no, and when I said it I meant it."

I felt like patting her shoulder and saying, "Bravo! little girl, when you say no, mean no."

But what of the other. He also asked her to go with him, and she said, "Oh, no. I think I better not go." But he began to insist and they argued the case in question, she constantly affirming that she did not care to go, also that she thought she better not go, and more than once said, "No, I won't go to-night," and at last they turned and walked down the street together.

As I could not avoid hearing their conversation without leaving my seat, which I did not care to do, my curiosity was aroused, and my eyes followed the retreating forms. By the assistance of a light down the street I saw them enter the hall together, and I knew they had gone to the show. As all were strangers to me, please pardon if I digress a moment. Dear girls, what has brought much shame and sorrow to the church as well as the world at large, is lack of firmness. No gentleman will respect a girl or woman either who can not assert herself for what she knows or even thinks to be right, and when once she has said no to the one who would seek to persuade her against the dictates of her own conscience, she should say once no, and stand by what she has said, no matter what the cost.

But to return to my story. The concert had closed, the crowd going much as they had come, and as those truant husbands had not returned I sat watching the scene until at last my companion aroused me from my reverie by saying, "Would it not be better for us to start home now? They may not come till all is over there." We started at once, remarking that time brought wonderful changes to the minds of men, for twenty-six years ago those same husbands could not have been induced to visit the show while their best girls sat on the street-corner and listened to the band play. But such is life, and as we were nearing home, a clattering of footsteps on the walk behind us assured us that they had discovered that the concert had been adjourned and they had come to escort us home. But the evening was a pleasant one as all agreed.

Dear Herald: The work of the Lord is progressing, as it does when we all put our shoulders to the wheel. Bro. Pickering is president of Kingston Branch, where we formerly belonged. Brn. W. P. Pickering and W. P. Bootman are workers in this vineyard. There have been a few baptized. The Saints south of Hamilton petitioned Far West District conference for a branch and it was so arranged by sending our presiding officers, Apostle W. H. Kelley and David Powell, to attend to the matter. We are now known as Oakdale Branch, and the Sunday-school took the same name. There are a few talking of joining in with us. Some have come from other States looking for homes in the land of Zion. They may locate here. Land is held at reasonable prices considering the improvements and quality of the land and other conditions that surround us. There is plenty of work to be had and good wages are paid. We are hopeful of the work prospering and of the redemption of Zion, and do greatly rejoice in the gospel.

Yours for truth,

BRO. AND SR. J. H. SNIDER.

DES MOINES, Iowa, October 10, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am sorry you copied into our church paper the sensational and incorrect statements found in the daily Capital. As a result of what the reporter wrote and had published the Ministerial Association adopted a resolution excluding him from the meetings of the association, and invited the Capital to send another reporter.

The committee to which was referred the rule on membership did not report, so that their consideration of who are members is not known, and to what extent they may consider the term evangelical is not yet known. I was informed that the reporter's ideas were not even hinted at, and so I had told the reporter the week previous when he inquired of me; but he would not take my word and had to suffer the reproof of the association.

Last Monday Doctor Thomas Nicholson treated upon the subject of the "Attitude of denominational schools toward the Carnegie pension fund," arguing that all denominations should unite in a plea that would move Mr. Carnegie favorable to such schools, but did not favor the changing of the charters so as to exclude the denominational idea. In fact he showed many advantages secured by the denominational schools. I could not but consider the opportunities and advantages of our denominational school, Graceland College. In the course of his remarks he expressed strong belief in the fulfillment of the prayer of Jesus for oneness as expressed in John 17, but said he could hardly hope for this within one hundred years.

He argued that religion is but the product of human nature, but Christianity is neither creed nor dogma, and that this unity would be secured by making less and less of creed, and placing more importance upon the higher ideals of Christianity, the social and moral side of life. He plead for the uniting of Protestantism to meet the rapid increase of Catholicism, which he claimed was making rapid strides upon our social and governmental institutions.

Many of his arguments were strictly unitarian, and had I not known who he was, I would have concluded from the general arguments of the paper that it was written by a Unitarian.

Business-meeting of the branch was held last Monday night, and a very profitable and advanced step was taken by the spirit of humility, confession, and reconciliation manifest. While the ingathering is slow, yet the development being made along several lines is worthy of notice and a subject for gratification.

Cottage meetings are not largely attended yet, but we are hoping, laboring, and praying that the honest in heart may be reached.

Bro. W. Christy will be with us Sunday to further instruct the Saints in their temporal salvation.

Respectfully and hopefully,
J. F. MINTUN.

Saints' Herald: This leaves me laboring in mission work at this place, with some interest. I am domiciled with Bro. J. C. Sanders, five miles west of Hot Springs, where elders get welcomed, and feel at rest from the opposition that usually comes from the world. I have labored hard to interest the people in the gospel, but the pleasure of the world and the precepts of men are more attractive to the great mass than the plain doctrine of Christ. The spirit of speculation, campaign, and pride, is the onward and downward go of the human family of to-day. How long, oh, how long will it take the people to see their folly in supporting the speculative and false political and religious world? The angel told Joseph Smith that their creeds were an abomination in his sight. The book of Revelation, in its description of Babylon, the Roman Catholic Church, and her daughters, says her sins have reached to heaven, and to come out of her. What else could the angel have said to Mr. Smith? He certainly told the truth. The creeds of men, we know to be false, and their line runs back to that corrupt tree, Rome, the mother of harlots. The Lord says, Come out of her, my people. Will his people obey, and come out? They are very slow about the matter. Be ye a separate people, is a wise injunction. But the Saints do not always heed it, and suffer loss thereby. And the end is not yet. They will continue to disobey, a goodly number are still robbing the Lord, will not pay tithing, will not make the preparation to gather to Zion.

Some say, by actions, that the revelation given on Fishing River can go, we will stay in Babylon yet awhile—the time for gathering is not yet—the Lord said not to be in haste. So you see there are more looking back than Lot's wife. What will be the end of these wonders?

I go from here to Bald Knob, and then to Camden, if my plan is not changed,

In bonds,

J. W. JACKSON.

VALES MILLS, Ohio, September 23, 1908.

Saints' Herald: As I have not written to you for a long time, I will venture. I am now holding forth at this place, with pretty good attendance. I came here from Wellston, where I preached to large, attentive crowds, on the street; and I was called on by the temperance people, who had a large platform on the street, to speak for them. I did the best I could, and they showed their appreciation to me. I think my work in Wellston did good, and removed prejudice. We ought to have a branch at Wellston, and gather up the scattered members around there.

We had a district conference at Wellston on the 12th and 13th, with a small attendance. The weather is very dry and hot up here in Ohio.

There was a very sad affair at Albany, a short distance from here, last Sunday night. A young man by the name of Webb shot himself with a shotgun, and died in a few minutes afterward. He did it because his father chastised him for his recklessness in spending money.

I am feeling well in the work, and hope to do good in the work of the Lord.

Yours for the truth,

J. W. METCALF.

Home address: 1719 Seventh Street, LOUISVILLE, Ky.

ESCATAWPA, Mississippi, September 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I have written to the dear columns of the HERALD, I feel that I ought to write a few lines that may be of some interest to some one. The few Saints here are still trying to hold out faithful to the grand and glorious law of Christ; but we do have an awful, trying time of it.

We have a real nice Sunday-school and Religio; getting along very well; but the old gentleman that always tries to work against God's work is still busy here.

Our district conference convened September 12. All enjoyed themselves. On the 15th a debate was held at the same place, Bluff Creek, Mississippi, near Vanleave. The debate was between the Missionary Baptists and the Reorganized Church. The Baptist preacher's name was B. M. Bogard, Bro. F. M. Slover being our preacher. Bro. Slover was the man for him. He was endowed with the Holy Spirit from first to last. All the people were made to rejoice, and by the same Spirit. It was remarked by both members and outsiders, old and young, that they had never heard a man that knew so much about the Bible and the history of the Baptist Church as he did. It was astonishing to know the feeling that prevailed with the Saints at the last speech of Bro. Slover. The Spirit was upon him in such force, and he was speaking so fast that his voice would tremble. I could not look up at him for tears in my eyes. I felt like if I could sing No. 258 in the Hymnal, Hosanna, Hosanna! or if I could only shout as loud as I could, it would do me thousands of dollars' worth of good, and every Saint that has ever witnessed the Holy Spirit was of the same feeling.

I have been a Saint for only a short time. I can truly say that I have never found anything on earth that is as dear to me as this great church work. I have been a worker in the Sunday-school and Religio, and I find it a great pleasure to me. And I want to live and die a true Saint.

I want to say for the encouragement of the youth of the church, Please take hold of the work. Practice singing. Exercise brotherly and sisterly love for each other. Take part in the prayer-meetings. Attend all the meetings and take part in them all. The dear Lord will bless you, and you will never regret the steps you take; for there is no enjoyment like this.

I am a single man, and naturally like worldly pleasures; but I rejoice in the church work more. There is a grand promise in it; and in the worldly pleasure there is nothing at all, neither here nor hereafter. I pray that my advice to you may be of some benefit.

Pray for me that I may hold out faithful to the end, in this glorious work.

If Bro. J. S. Andes, of the Far West District, sees my letter, I would be glad to hear from him, as I have lost his address. Would also ask if any one knows the whereabouts of Bro. W. G. Hamann of the same district.

In gospel bonds,
A. G. MILLER.

DIAMONDALE, Michigan, September 27, 1908.

Editors Herald: As I send in that cancer receipt, (it may be quite a few will be sent in) so concluded to send my testimony with the receipt, and no extra charge. I will say I have been blessed and favored of the Lord, for which I thank and praise the Lord.

Last October it was given that there would be no corn raised in 1908, not all over, but in certain parts, west and northwest of me. So it has come to pass in upper Michigan. A man rode with me from that country who said Northern Indiana and Illinois had been visited with a killing frost. He had a letter right from there. Everything as black as my hat. I was afraid it would be here, but thank the Lord who suffered it not to be here. At the same time it was given to me that there would be a hard frost. So it was. All things are green and nice, but very dry here at present. Also last spring it was given to me, and I saw it in a plain view in a dream, that there would be a terrible, raging, and destructive fire in the land. I could not understand what that meant. It is all plain now. I feel sorry for the people in those parts, who suffered such great losses. If the sons and daughters of Adam's race continue to honor and serve the Devil, they must expect to suffer the consequences. As the Lord gets no money, nor thanks; no praise, no honor at all, his wrath is kindled, so that they shall have nothing. If all turn to him and honor and praise and respect his holy name, he has power to return it all to them as he did to Job of old.

No rain here in these parts until the Lord first makes known to me. It has once been given to me in this month that high water would rise off at a distance, but a little where I was. So it came to pass this last week there was a heavy rain west of us, but sprinkled a little here. So I will not complain, but ever praise his holy name that I am had in remembrance of him. I do ask his help both night and day, to discharge his holy duties to the honor of his holy name.

SAMUEL WHITE.

CURE FOR CANCER:

I noticed an item about a receipt for cancer. I copied it from the HERALD at the time it was published. It is as follows:

For cancer mix one fourth ounce of sulphite of zinc to four ounces of water. If the cancer is in a pimple form, put the solution on it; if an open sore, put it out around the outside of the sore. Make a poultice of figs. It is stated it will kill cancer. (The fig poultice.) The first one will be pretty severe, the rest not.

Editors Herald: Permit me to try once more to get a few words before the HERALD readers. I know I was born many years too soon to get even a good common education, such as is now available to every boy or girl in the common walk of life, such as would have fitted me to wield the pen, or use the tongue to the best advantage, so as to interest, instruct, and benefit my fellows, as is my earnest desire. Hence I shall try to avoid apostatizing if this, like some other of my productions, should be cast into the waste-basket, or put in the background, doomed to wait until there is a dearth of better matter, such as you may think better fitted to grace the HERALD'S pages, and then to be rescued from the cavernous depths of some forgotten pigeon-hole, just to furnish copy.

I want to tell you that I am trying to keep in "the faith once delivered to the Saints," and, as I believe, restored to earth in these last days; and I also want to encourage my brethren and sisters to hold fast to the "rod of iron," for it verily leads to the tree of life. The rod of iron is the word of God. It is that which leads to eternal life, and by which Christ shall rule all nations. In it the righteousness of God is revealed.

I say I am trying to keep in the faith; for long experience has taught me that the Christian warfare demands that every power of spirit and body must be alert, every moment, hour, day, and year of our lives! For the enemy knows all our weak points. He never rests. He is always on the watch. He knows when and where to attack; hence, it is not safe for the child of God to lay down his armor for a single moment! no matter how long he has been in the service of God. Heed not the flattering unctious, "You have done enough," for while powers of mind and body remain, the covenant we have made with God calls for the full exercise of the same, and not until the Master says, It is enough! Come home! shall we be released from the sacred service here.

We are informed that the rod of iron is the word of God. In order that we may continually cling to it and secure a right to the tree of life, we must understand it, hence we must obey the divine injunction, "Search the scriptures," and again, "Be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." We are also told that the word of God is the "sword of the Spirit." To wield that sword effectually, we must familiarize ourselves with its use. Hence the most important of all studies is the study of God's word. In it we find the divine character revealed, to know which is the great bulwark against the encroachments of the enemy; for knowing that character we are prepared to detect Satan's cunning wiles, for when anything that is contrary to the divine character is presented to us, we may know it is false, no matter how cunningly it may be woven in with a few threads of truth! But if we lack the knowledge of God, we are open to every assault of the enemy. We can not know God and be ignorant of his truth. We can not know his truth except by a study of it; and then we need the Holy Spirit to open the eyes of our understanding; for "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." From this we see there is no excuse for our ignorance of God; for if we study the divine word by the light of the Holy Spirit, he will take the things of God and show them unto us. But we must seek, or we shall not find. We must knock, or there is no promise that he will open unto us. But it is written, "He that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

If there ever was a time when men needed to be able to detect the wiles of Satan, we certainly need that power now. It seems as though all the cunning of that arch enemy of God and man is being brought into exercise now. Surely the day of Christ is at hand, and Satan knows it. The signs which Jesus and his apostles foretold are being manifest. The fig-tree is putting forth its leaves, and under the garb of modern civilization Satan is working to deceive the world, filling the hearts of men with pride and lust, blinding their eyes to the truth, creating a thirst for something new, teaching them to despise the path marked out by God, and yet aping as near as he durst, some of the divine marks in order the more effectually to deceive.

Of this condition of things, Jesus has warned us, in the ancient scriptures; and again in these last days we have ample warning; but we are slow to hearken. May God help us who have accepted the everlasting covenant, and put our hands thereto, to be watchful, prayerful, diligent, and faithful to that covenant in all things, seeing to it that we put on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil.

CHARLES DERRY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, September 29, 1908.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I penned a few lines to you precious columns. My labors have been confined chiefly to this stake, consequently have reported to the Ensign. I have been able to do but little missionary work of late on account of my age. Am now in my seventy-ninth year, and find that I can not do as I would twenty years ago. But I am thankful indeed that I am able to do a little. I can preach the gospel and speak encouragingly to the Saints, and tell the people generally, to those who have not obeyed, God has wonderfully blessed me in the evangelical work. So I felt the Lord had owned and acknowledged me in this department of the work.

I wish to state to my many friends and acquaintances, as well as to my brothers and sisters and colaborers in this grand and glorious work, that I am still in the faith, and sincerely hope to continue to the end, and gain the prize that Paul speaks of in his letter to the Philippians, second chapter, which he calls the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

I rejoice in the interesting articles published in the HERALD weekly, and shall pray the blessing of the Master upon the writers and publishers. May God speed the work, and continue his Holy Spirit with his faithful laborers.

I wish to say to the dear Saints of the districts, with whom I labored so many years, namely, the Fremont, Pottawattamie, and Nodaway, that I have never forgotten them nor their kindness to me in their ministrations to me while amongst them; also the Saints of the Southern Nebraska District. My testimony is still the same. This work is true. Jesus is the Christ. The Saints in Missouri have the same testimony. To God be all the praise, henceforth and for ever, is my humble prayer. Peace be to all the Israel of God.

Yours in the faith,

705 South Willis.

HENRY KEMP.

From the Islands.

Editors Herald: Wife and I have just returned from the Tuamotu Islands, reaching Tahiti on the 2d inst., feeling well in spirit and in body.

It seems rather lonely without Bro. and Sr. Burton about, and the natives come in, and say, "Ua taoto anei Iosepha?" (Is Joseph lying down?) which is their way of saying that they miss him.

Mr. Cardella, the mayor of the city, told some of the native brethren, "You will never have another orometua [teacher] like Mr. Burton; he is a good man," and other foreigners speak in the same way. His teachings will be remembered with profit in this mission for years to come. He may well feel that he has done his duty by the church in this part of the world. His has been a long and eventful service among this people, as to whether it is appreciated, as it should be, or not, is a question. The sick will certainly miss Sr. Burton, who, with her tactful and motherly ways won their love. She has indeed been a "mother in Israel" to the natives.

We returned only to find that our mail of both July and August had been sent to the Tuamotus, so that friends who may have written to us need not be surprised if their letters are not answered at once. It may be some time before it reaches us, if it ever does. I wrote to the postmaster here in Papeete to hold our mail, and put the letter, with others, in the hands of the governor at Takume on the twentieth day of July; but he thought best, I guess, to hold it for the same vessel that we came on, and that is what he did. Bro. Burton and other friends in America will know why they have not heard from us for so long a time.

We left Tahiti on the ninth day of May, on a fairly comfortable vessel, with gasoline power. (Not much money wasted in gasoline, however.) We stopped two days at Niau, where we went ashore and visited with the native Saints, and two busy days they were. With hearing complaints, settling (?) difficulties, teaching, selling Sunday-school books, etc., the time was all occupied. From Niau to Anaa, but as I knew of no Saints living there, and as the boat only made one trip ashore, I did not land. Before the storm of 1906 we had a large branch there, but now they are all scattered among the other branches. This island suffered severely in the storm; more than any of the others, and here was the greatest loss of life. It is certainly a desolate looking place.

From Anaa to Hereheretue, a very small island one hundred and fifty miles from the nearest inhabited land. There are twenty-six inhabitants on the island, twenty-four of whom are members of the church, the other two being Catholics.

I am the first white missionary to land, with the exception of a Catholic priest that visited there many years ago. I went ashore in the first boat, because I did not wish to miss a chance to visit the Saints. When I made myself known, one young man took me by the hand and held on as though I was too precious to lose, once they had me. We had a long ways to wade in the shallow water from the reef to the shore, and with my wet overalls and rope-soled shoes, I felt like anything but a missionary; but as they had not seen many with whom to compare me, I passed muster, and received a royal welcome. It is a beautiful little island, and I would enjoy a month's visit there, but dare not take chances of being tied up six months or a year waiting for a vessel. I sold six Sunday-school books, one for each inhabitant that could read, explained a few passages of scripture and church law, received their offering of fish, cocoanuts, and money, with formal speech, and was off again within half an hour.

From Hereheretue to Hikueru, our destination. Sailors went ashore at a small uninhabited island to get firewood, fresh fish, and bird eggs. The eggs were quite large and snow white, and have pink yolks. Not as good eating as hen's eggs, but they make a nice omelet.

Eleven days from Tahiti, we landed at Hikueru, which was even a more desolate looking place than was Anaa. No shrubbery or grass of any kind, only cocoanut-trees, and many of them with the tops broken off. No one at the village to meet us, as all were living at a temporary village across the lagoon, where they were permitted to dive for shell. No trouble to find an empty house which was open, so we had the sailors carry our things to one of them, where we spent the night. Next morning Temarei came for us in his boat, and we were once more among friends. Not much to encourage us in our hopes to have large classes, as there was no chapel, and the Saints were scattered along the rocky shore for three or more miles. Had not been there long, when word came that shell was very plentiful in Takume, another island about one hundred miles to the north. Of course most of the divers began making arrangements to go at once, not considering that they would probably lose more time and money in moving than they would make up in the short time remaining of the diving season. Within two weeks they were all off, and as soon as a vessel came along that would take us we followed them, only to find conditions still more unfavorable for work along spiritual lines. No chapel, and the houses so small and ramshackle that there was no chance for classes at all.

At Takume are many evidences of the thrift of the early inhabitants, such as deep trenches, where they had cultivated taro, which grows best in marshy ground, hence the trenches. Some places it would be twenty feet from the top of the ridge to the bottom of the trench. These were made before advent of the white man with his steel spades, therefore large flat pearl shells were used in lieu thereof. I saw these improvised spades used at this same island, when the natives were working out their poll tax on the roads. To see a six-foot native working with one of those pearl shells fastened to the end of a long stick, is indeed ludicrous.

We had to take a deck passage from Takume to Tahiti, as the cabin of the vessel was filled with goods, but were glad to get away under any conditions. More anon.

Yours in the gospel work,
C. H. LAKE.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, September 18, 1908.

Over the Mountains.

Editors Herald: After about four months and a half at Bisbee—the longest continuous stay I ever made at any one place, the city of the canyons, the home of the miners, I left on September 21, and came over one hundred miles westward to the city of Tucson. Tucson is a city of about twenty thousand population, a fair percentage of whom are the dusky-skinned Mexicans. Here for the first time I ate of figs and pomegranates from off the tree, and here for the first time beheld I the most beautiful and attractive palms not in hot houses, adorning the streets and adding stateliness and beauty to the residential portion of the town.

We have no members in Arizona that we know of except in Bisbee and in Phoenix, and having spent so much time in the former place, taking advantage of the presence there of another seventy and a local priest, notwithstanding the brightness of the prospects for an ingathering, the writer felt like resigning the furtherance of the work there and the reaping that was to be done into other hands, for the time being at least, and pull out in pursuit of an opening and a breach in some other town or city with the message of the latter days. It was for this purpose that I saw fit to spend some eight days in the city named; but I (and I don't know that "we" would add anything to the humility of the case when it is so manifest that I was alone) found myself at a disadvantage in the absence of any members in the city and no musical attendance to attract attention against hypnotists and other fakes. However, I had the satisfaction of forming a number of acquaintances, selling literature of the church, and putting in two or three sermons anyway.

I visited the ancient ruins southeast of the town. They are ancient, but not prehistoric, being the work of the Spaniards, or under Spanish supervision some three hundred years ago. The crumbling ruins are adobe and present to me the appearance of an edifice having been used for worship with its accessories, where native ignorance crouched before their tyrannical and idolatrous oppressors. Here is where the seeds of error were sown in the hearts of the simple native, who was soon taught to believe that whisky would make him happy here, and to count beads would make him happy hereafter. Here is where the native was preyed upon, where his mind was poisoned by the dregs of that great and abominable church who is abominable above all other churches. Here is where the remnant who were left of the land were stultified against the truth and the true gospel which was designed to bless them in time to come. But all will come yet; for, as Moses, when he advanced into years, discovered that he was not an Egyptian and thereupon disdained Egyptianism; as a prairie-chicken when hatched flees from domestication for its native element, so will the red man under the course of secular education he is receiving and the quiet influence of the Great Spirit, turn to the religion which that Spirit implanted in the hearts of his fathers.

A couple days ago the writer visited the Indian school here at Phoenix where there are about eight hundred children of the Lamanites, representing many tribes, and sold one of the officers of the institution a Book of Mormon, receiving promise that I would receive the same consideration as all other ministers if I wished to preach to the students. But the trouble is we are limited to a declaration of the general principles on which all churches unite, and are not permitted the illumination of any of our distinctive characteristics. Not much time for such sermons. Prefer to wait.

But in Tucson when I visited the University of the Territory of Arizona I found a wider scope open before me had I remained to utilize it. Going there to visit the museum at the instance of the deposit therein of some American antiquities, as an incident I inquired of one of the faculty if they would appreciate an address to the students on the subject of the Book of Mormon from an archaeological standpoint. Introducing me to the president, Doctor Babcock, whom I found very liberal in his views, so far as I was able to ascertain them, welcomed me to the occasion and said that if I remained over the following Thursday (about which I was then uncertain) and would phone him to said effect and as to my willingness, he would arrange for such a proceeding.

But I did not wait; and if any one wonders why, my only answer is that it was best to move on, and I was in the best position of any man in the world to judge on the subject. It is not a question of where we can do good—it is a question of where we can do the most good. There is where the true gospel soldier wants to be, even if it is at the cost of a little sacrifice of the committing of himself for a few weeks to a room which he may obtain for six dollars per month and a subsistence on eatables in small variety which he takes to his room of about the same or of less cost. Why should not our sacrificing tendencies be allowed their expression along this line once in a while as well as along any other? If the manna and wilderness of a narrow diet for a few weeks now and then after many months of a sumptuous fare will enable us to do what is to be done and to come in contact with those who are to be come in contact with, why not? Can go frugally, economically, without going hungry.

On September 30, the writer came here from Tucson. Two members are in this city, Mrs. C. M. Sturgis and Mrs. Springer. Their companions are not members. The latter is from Lamoni, and is a granddaughter of Father Whitehead, who testified to personal witness of the blessing of Young Joseph, and who was for a time private secretary to the Martyr. The former, Sr. Sturgis, came in contact with the work in answer to prayer. In a manner that would make a very interesting story the gospel came to her when living in a city without any of its resident representatives, as a response to her earnest importunities to the Lord for guidance along the lines of saving truth. She told the Lord to show her the gospel and she would embrace it; to show her his church and she would join it, even if it was the Salvation Army from which she naturally shrank. The answer came, true to the promise, and also the compliance.

As a special feature in the denominational aspect this city is to be found the Apostolic Christians. That is the name as near as I can recollect. Wednesday evening I attended their meeting for the first time. They are great on loud responses and excitement. I noticed much similarity between this and a Free Methodist meeting I attended in Canada one time. But there was one noteworthy departure here. It was the speaking in tongues. No less than two women exercised the gift, one very distinctly, the other with less distinctness. If you ask if they were real tongues, my answer is that I do not know, but that so far as appearance is concerned, I have no more reason to doubt their reality than those I have been accustomed to listening to the last half of my life. If you ask by what power, my answer is that the power deserves a separate consideration from the reality of its phenomenon. Evidently there was an extraneous force present acting upon them, producing the astonishing contortions and more particularly the tongues. Something that would induce me to suspect its cause or source is the marked inharmony, confusion, and disorder which characterized the service, of which Paul says God is not the author. Secondly, the interpretation of the tongues was not given,—though their leader stated to me that they are sometimes. They were somewhat aroused by my remark that Paul says, "If you do not get the interpretation keep your mouth shut." Thirdly, (a thing which will go without saying with our people) they are doctrinally out of harmony with the Scriptures. As an instance of the latter, their leader offered sinners the opportunity to come to the front and have their sins forgiven by being prayed for, etc., and have the whole business done right there; save that he informed me afterward when subjected to a process of catechism that they baptize them afterward—after they are saved, of course.

Phoenix is of about one thousand feet elevation, or about four thousand feet or more lower than Bisbee. It approximates one hundred and twenty degrees above in the summer, and seldom, if ever, freezes in the winter. Oranges, lemons, pomegranates, figs, dates, olives, and other fruits grow here. Ostrich farming is done in the country surrounding, one farm a few miles out supporting about one thousand birds, I am told. A little later, when the oranges are ripe, the missionary must visit the groves. Maybe I can do some good there. Palm-trees abound, and indeed this is the city of Arizona. Being an agricultural city, the morality is undoubtedly higher than Bisbee, where there were several murders during my presence, and yet it is nothing to what it was when gambling was at its zenith and when it was said you might find as many as two or three dead men on the street of a morning.

We left Bro. Pender and wife there. They are expecting to leave this month for either Mexico or this city to spend the winter.

The Bisbee floods were an interesting feature during the late summer, when the rapidly collecting water coming down the mountain steppes, following a heavy rain, if not a cloudburst, would rush down into the heart of the city and by bursting aqueducts, carrying a deposit of silt and stones, would result in damage to the amount of thousands of dollars. We saw the post-office flooded and stones piled up its side to the second story to the weight of tons and tons, plunged not only through the lower windows, but also the upper ones. The mail-clerks took refuge for life. Mail was washed away.

So if any one wrote me a letter about that time and received no reply, just charge it up to the flood and run the risk again.

My permanent address is 1037 West Maple Avenue, Independence, Missouri.

BEVIER, Missouri, October 11, 1908.

Editors Herald: My father, Elder John T. Williams, died very suddenly on the third day of May, 1908. Elder F. T. Mussel sent an account of his death to the HERALD, which, up to the present time, has not appeared in print. [This letter must have miscarried. Death notices are never omitted intentionally.—EDITOR.] My father was a subscriber to the HERALD for over thirty-five years continuously. We would like it to be published for the reason that he was widely known to many in the church who do not yet know of his death. We frequently get mail addressed to him as Bishop's agent, which office he held for about fifteen years. He was also well known by his musical compositions, some of which are to be found in all of the church books. The account of his death appeared in many of the papers in Wales, and the Drych, the greatest Welsh paper of the world, published his photo, and a column write-up. We trust that you will publish a notice of his death in the paper he liked best of all. He was probably one of the HERALD's longest subscribers.

Your brother in the gospel,

J. L. WILLIAMS.

News From Branches

NAYLOR, MISSOURI.

We had our sacrament-meeting to-day, and had a very good meeting. I took up a collection in the interest of Grace-land College, and received five dollars for the college fund. One of those who contributed is a new member in the church, having been baptized in August, while Brn. A. M. Baker and A. J. Fletcher were here. He was baptized by Bro. Fletcher and confirmed by A. M. Baker. He says he has thrown away his tobacco, and does not think it right to use it, and he appears to be strong in the faith. There were more who would like to give something to that fund, but they were short of means at present.

The spiritual condition of Naylor Branch seems to be good at present. We are making friends for the church, and things seem to be in fair shape for the future.

H. V. BRANN.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

An old time interest revives in the hearts of the Saints, as the fields become brown and the nights chill, for of late all services have been well attended by a goodly representation of the members, as well as by many visiting Saints and stranger-friends whom the Saints have invited to the services.

I do not know whether it is more pleasant, more profitable, or otherwise, but taking a retrospect of the work and membership here, and looking back but four or five years, there are but a few of the original to be found in our midst. Unlike most branches, and especially the smaller town and country branches, Chicago's membership is ever an evanescent one, as Bro. McDowell remarked in a letter published a year or two ago. Many come to the city, run well for a season, and finally become lost in the great, surging tide of worldly allurements, which beats with added energy against the spiritual forces abroad in the world, and sometimes resident within the heart of man. Chicago is no place for the spiritually infirm,—mark that.

Our meetings of late have been marked by an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Why? Because a few of us have learned to hate the things which the Lord hates, and to love the things which he loves, like John of old, who redeemed himself from the displeasure of the Lord because he also hated the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which the Lord hated. If there is one thing in this life above another that will disqualify one for the service,—free, open, and acceptable service of the Lord, it is an affiliation with the pleasures and interests of the world. A man may fall foul of some temptation, and come up before the Lord guilty of a grave offense, but be it remembered that the crowning virtue of David of old was his complete repentance. Complete repentance and humility are the coin of the spiritual realm, and when accompanied with love, qualify one for the nurturing care of the Holy Spirit which is to lead and guide into all righteousness. What need of this leading and guiding if one were already righteous, and how can we be guided, except we are willing? Is the worldly heart willing to be led into righteousness? Not often. He has become self-righteous already no doubt, and lets frivolous things enter, destroying the good work of the Holy Spirit.

The Lord is good to us as a people, and we should strive to make ourselves worthy of his continued goodness unto us.

SPokane District News.

[These items were unavoidably crowded out last week.—EDITOR.]

Bro. William Atkinson has arranged for a new opening in Westgrove suburb of Spokane. By request, "The Sabbath" will be the opening theme; Elder I. M. Smith speaker.

Spokane District Saints have given over two hundred dollars to the Sanitarium fund. How is that for Spokane District?

Quite a number of Saints are gathering to Spokane. All seem to be doing well. A number have erected substantial and beautiful homes.

Bro. W. W. Fordham went to Sagle Branch, Idaho, last week, in the interests of the finances of the church. While there he purchased a house and an acre of land adjoining the Sagle church lot. The house will be occupied by the family of Elder S. S. Smith.

The Sagle Saints are preparing to build a brick church. Brn. Wilbur Yates, Crum, and Faulkner are just completing a kiln of one hundred thousand brick made of blue clay. Oklahoma "Jots" will know that this is not the first project of the kind that Bro. Wilbur has engaged in, as he was interested in building the church at Seiling, Oklahoma. This branch is beautifully located in the mountains. Here reside about forty members presided over by Bro. Wilbur Yates.

The meetings conducted at Westmond, Idaho, by Brn. F. J. Chatburn and S. S. Smith are reported closed. There was some interest; attendance only fair. W. W. F.

Notice of Silence.

Inasmuch as there have been charges preferred against Elder Charles E. Irwin that seriously affect his standing as a minister for Christ, and as he has put himself out of the way of labor—evading the officers so that proper labor can not be performed; therefore, I take this method to notify him and all concerned, that he is silenced and is not authorized, after the publishing of this notice, to represent the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, until such charges are properly met and lawfully settled. I therefore request that he send to me his elder's license and all other papers of authority he may hold from the church.

Minister in General Charge of Mission No. 2.

What the Harvest Has Done for the West.

The harvest of the great wheat-raising States has been well up to the average, and, with the high prices, is to return more money to the farmer than in many years. While the country's total wheat crop is estimated at 40,000,000 bushels more than last year, it is yet 60,000,000 bushels below that of the previous season, and the farmer has little reason to fear material lessening of values. The corn is promising well in the interior States, and lessened yield in some of the older-settled ones may make this likewise a remarkably profitable year for producers of that cereal. Contracts are being made at this writing at prices giving abundant return for the farmer's toil. Minor crops have been generous in the prairie States, with good prices. Altogether, it has been a goodly year and one that has given the farmer a feeling of independence. His stable position is certain to have effect on every sort of industry and every enterprise.—From "The West's return to confidence," by Charles Moreau Harger, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

Eggs is Eggs.

Let us sing the praise of the Great American Hen, who, during the past year, may well have cackled with pride over the production of nearly one billion three hundred million dozens of eggs! Do you realize what that means? Well, listen:

If, instead of remaining quietly at home in Iowa, she had chosen to demonstrate her powers to the universe at large, the hen might have laid those eggs, each two inches long, end to end, in a continuous chain reaching two hundred and thirty-eight thousand eight hundred and eighteen miles up to the moon, back again, and then more than half way around the world for good measure—a total of four hundred ninety-two thousand four hundred and twenty-four miles of eggs! Furthermore, if those eggs had been made into one omelet half an inch thick, that omelet would easily have covered Manhattan Island, an area of twenty-two square miles!

An old Mohammedan legend tells that King Solomon used to travel through the air with all his armies on a wonderful flying carpet, protected from the rays of the sun by the wings of a host of birds. Now, according to the poultry census, there are in the United States about two hundred and eighty millions of chickens, guinea fowls, turkeys, geese, and ducks of the poultry voting age, which is three months or over. If required to furnish a moving canopy like that of King Solomon, the barn-yard fowls of this country, allowing only a foot of spread to each, could easily shadow a space of ten square miles.—Arthur Guiterman, in October Woman's Home Companion.

Editorial

THE THREE BOOKS; AND THE ONE MIGHTY AND STRONG.

At the close of an editorial in the Evening and Morning Star for September, 1908, published at Independence, Missouri, by the Church of Christ, occurs the following:

The writer is willing to take the position, and defend it, that the whole church put under condemnation in 1832, has not repented and remembered the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments, not only to say, but to do. Who says nay?

Reference is herein made to a revelation given in September, 1832, on priesthood, and a very vital and important part of the quotation is left out; for following the words, "not only to say, but to do," and in the same sentence with the latter words, the words, "according to that which I have written," should have followed at least.

The effort of the writer seems to have been to confine the meaning of the article which he had written to the things contained in the Book of Mormon alone; but the language of the revelation can not be so restricted; for the reason that the former commandments which had been given those to whom the revelation came, were included in that which they were required to do.

In February, 1831, the law was given to the church according to the promise, and contains the following:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if you receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

There is nothing in the revelation from which the writer quoted that makes it the duty of the church to teach the Book of Mormon exclusively, or to make it a sole arbiter of the teaching of the elders of the church; that which is commanded in the law in 1831 in reference to this must govern, and the Bible, Book of Mormon, and church articles are to be taken together and are to be taught in agreement with their correlation one to another.

The writer is quite safe in saying that the whole church did not repent; for by that he would mean that each and every portion into which the church was broken at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith and the exodus from Illinois, must be considered as portions making up the whole of the church then existent at the time the revelation was given.

"He who learns the rules of wisdom, without conforming to them in his life, is like a man who labored in his fields but did not sow."

We have been under the impression that at the time of the suit for the possession of the Temple Lot the Church of Christ, of which the Evening and Morning Star is the church organ, claimed to be only a branch of the church organized April 6, 1830, and that they held the Temple Lot in trust for that church organization. We are not a little surprised to find that in its treatment of others, who have become members of bodies of believers in the angel's message and the restoration of the gospel, this branch of the church assumes to be the whole church, and to speak and write of itself in that light.

The position assumed by this Church of Christ, commonly called Hedrickites, located at Independence, Missouri, and holding possession of the Temple Lot, that it is only a branch of the church according to their contention in that suit referred to, is a concession that there are other branches of the church; and the inquiry may be made, Where are these other branches? There were at the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith a number of organizations known as congregations or branches of the church having corporate existence under the general title of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Any one of these churches having such corporate existence had within its own right the right of church existence and extension under the rule which we have quoted above, authorizing the elders, priests, and teachers to teach the principles of the gospel as they were contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and the former commandments. (See section 42, paragraph 5.) No one of these branches could consistently say that it alone could assume the title and dignity of being the whole church to the exclusion of the rights of others. By what then does this church of Christ, organized into separate existence and under a different name and at a period of time quite subsequent to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, assume the roll of the "whole church" as a representative body representing the church organized April 6, 1830?

We have no objection to any class of men confessing their own sins and shortcomings, and concede the right of this Church of Christ to confess that it is willing to be put in order when the "One mighty and strong" (for the sending of whom and the exercise of his prerogatives in setting the house of God in order the Evening and Morning Star appears to be so decidedly anxious) shall make his appearance.

If the contention of this Church of Christ that it is but a branch of the church organized in 1830 is correct, and there are other branches coexistent with it, there is unquestionably a necessity for the setting in order, if each of these branches is equally out of order and equally willing to be set in order as this church asserts itself to be.

In a late article appearing in the Evening and Morning Star much stress is laid upon the letter written by Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, November, 1833, and published in the Times and Seasons, volume 5, pages 673 and 674. In this letter occurs the following language:

And it shall come to pass that I the Lord God will send one mighty and strong, holding the scepter of power in his hand, clothed with light as a covering, whose mouth shall utter words, eternal words, while his bowels shall be a fountain of truth, to set in order the house of God.

The argument of the article referred to, appeared to be that in 1834 Joseph Smith signally failed to carry into effect the setting in order of the house of God, and that for this reason there was a necessity for the sending of "one mighty and strong," whose duty it would be to complete the work which Joseph Smith failed to do. From the language used, "I the Lord God will send one mighty and strong," it may be safely concluded that the work which Joseph Smith was to do was not the work the one mighty and strong was to accomplish. If it might be at any time assumed that Jesus Christ is "the one mighty and strong" to whom the reference in the letter to W. W. Phelps is made, is there now any reason to believe that there is some one else to come, some one other than Jesus Christ? What corroborative evidence in other revelations, in the teachings of the Bible, or in the Book of Mormon is there to support this possible deduction?

We of the Recognized Church have taken no ground as to whom this letter may have reference as a personage. We are not inclined to take the letter to W. W. Phelps as setting aside the teaching of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church given during its formative period, and to build up a tome of teachings and doctrine upon it alone. There must be correlation between it and those other portions of the faith and doctrine long held as revelations of God to the church if it is to be used as of special import in the latter-day work. By this we do not mean to be understood as either affirming or denying its validity as coming from divine source by the voice of inspiration; but when others assume to build an argument on it by presumption there remains to us the right to consider its application and the relation it must bear to other portions of the word of God to the church.

Why any portion of the so-called church could assume to build upon this letter to the shutting out of work subsequently done to the date of its reception, we fail to understand. Joseph Smith continued to work with his compeers; and some of the most brilliant successes in church building were done after the writing of this letter; nor do we find in the subsequent history of Joseph Smith any laches in church work that shows any absence of the spirit of the work, or lack of indorsement by Him who instituted it at the start, or anything warranting the conclusion that he had fallen from the favor of God or that the work done by him and his associates from any period between the writing of this letter to W. W. Phelps and his death at Carthage, Illinois, was void and of no effect.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

"This do in remembrance of me."

Let us call to mind a familiar occurrence: We have friends in some distant land. We meet some one from that land and are greatly moved when they assure us that we are remembered. How pleasant the words, "Oh, yes, I saw Bro. A— just before I left home. He remembers you. He sent his love to you." The personality of our friend comes vividly before us. Our hearts are warmed. We hasten to send back some message of remembrance, some token or avowal of affection. We think of the time when we saw him last and look forward to the time when we shall meet again.

Constantly we are receiving tokens of the loving remembrance of our Lord and Savior. Daily and hourly they come to us, now in the form of material blessings, now through the Spirit's presence, now by way of the written word. On our part there are many ways by which we can show forth our love for him and witness that we still remember him. One ordinance of his own choosing is the sacrament of the Lord's Supper which we observe from time to time "in remembrance" of him.

This ordinance serves many purposes, one of which is to cause us to think of Christ as a friend,—one of us. It can not be doubted that to some of his professed followers he is little more than a myth, more admirable but no more real than Jove or Neptune. The Christ does not wish to pose as a myth; and he seldom laid any stress on his exalted divinity. He was and is personal and intimate and desires to be remembered as a loving savior, protector, and friend.

When we partake of the Lord's Supper we are enabled through the representative elements to discern his body and blood. We realize that the one was scourged and vexed, that it suffered and was pierced for us,—for us, not for some one who died two thousand years ago. We realize that the other freely poured forth from a heart that was as tender as a mother's heart with a love as broad as the world. "I want a God who is less than a God,—or more. I want a friend. I want help. I want sympathy." That is the cry in the heart of every human being at some time. The answer is, "There is no love like the love of Jesus."

There can be no doubt of the love, power, and goodness of Christ. He remembers us and has promised to do so until the end of time. But how about us? Are we worthy of such a friend? Do we remember him? Those questions come home to us when the priest passes down the dim aisles of the church bearing the emblems for our partaking. Christ intended that they should come home in that way. We must answer individually. The church must answer collectively. We can not lie to God. The answer will spell glory and eternal joy or shame and eternal loss.

Paul speaks of the individual responsibility:

Wherefore whosoever shall eat this bread, and drink this cup of the Lord, unworthily, shall be guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. But let a man examine himself, and so let him eat of that bread, and drink of that cup. For he that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to himself, not discerning the Lord's body.—1 Corinthians 11: 27-29.

He goes on to say that because of neglect in this matter many are weak and sickly and many sleep; and he assures the Saints that though they will not judge themselves they can not escape being judged.

While it is the duty of all to examine themselves as to their worthiness the matter does not always end there. It is not wholly a matter of individual conscience. There is a duty resting upon the officers of the church in various localities: First to do what they can to promote a healthy spiritual life among those who are under their watchcare; second, to see that those who are known to be in transgression do not desecrate the memory of their Lord and bring condemnation upon themselves by partaking of the sacrament.

In the Book of Mormon we read:

And now behold, this is the commandment which I give unto you, that ye shall not suffer any one knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister it, for whoso eateth and drinketh my flesh and blood unworthily, eateth and drinketh damnation to his soul.—Book of Nephi 8: 9.

A further reading of the paragraph from which we have just quoted may encourage the thought that the language there used was meant to apply only to those outside of the church, who of course are not entitled to partake; yet it is evident that it was not used exclusively in that sense because it goes on to say that with proper treatment the unworthy ones may be induced to repent and "return." Evidently it refers in part at least to those who have lost spiritual standing, and the inference is strong that they have done so because of "disputations" (that are, alas, still a fruitful cause of spiritual decline), because Jesus, who was the one who gave the commandment, said, "I give you these commandments, because of the disputations which have been among you."

Be that as it may, the commandment is specific, "Ye shall not suffer any one knowingly, to partake of my flesh and blood unworthily, when ye shall minister it." This language comes directly home to branch officers who have oversight of the sacrament and of the spiritual condition of the members.

A neglect to observe the commandment to which we have called your attention has injured the work in the far past; and perhaps it has done so in more recent time, if we but knew the inner history of events. In the Book of Nephi the Son of Nephi we read of the condition of certain churches about two hundred years after Christ gave his commandment, and one cause of their condemnation was that they "did administer that which was sacred unto him to whom it had been forbidden, because of unworthiness."

On the other hand Moroni tells of conditions as they prevailed during the high tide of spirituality in the church on this continent:

And the church did meet together oft, to fast and to pray, and to speak one with another concerning the welfare of their souls: and they did meet together oft to partake of bread and wine, in remembrance of the Lord Jesus; and they were strict to observe that there should be no iniquity among them; and whoso was found to commit iniquity, and three witnesses of the church did condemn them before the elders; and if they repented not, and confessed not, their names were blotted out, and they were not numbered among the people of Christ; but as oft as they repented, and sought forgiveness, with real intent, they were forgiven.—Moroni 6: 2.

Loving advice or admonition from those who are to watch over the church and see that there is no iniquity nor hardness of heart therein often will lead to individual reformation. Where there is a persistent violation of the law of God those in authority should proceed against the individual along the lines marked out in the law.

In various places the written word makes it quite plain that Christ considers that the man who nurtures ill-feeling toward a brother is barred from the communion. He must first make his difficulty right and get rid of his enmity. No worse travesty on sacred things could be imagined than to go with a heart full of malice and envy and partake of the sacrament in commemoration of the Christ who was tender, compassionate, and forgiving. We can not hold fellowship with Christ and at the same time hate the man that he died for.

James says that the man who hates a brother is a murderer. The statement is true as far as the heart is concerned. If we hate a man we can not keep the wish out of our heart that he were removed, blotted out. We do not willingly grant him room in our scheme of existence. We understand why Paul said that the man who partakes of the sacrament under such conditions is guilty of the body and blood of the Lord. He is twin brother after the spirit to those who slew Christ. It was hatred that impelled them; now he is hating one of Christ's fellow servants, and inasmuch as he has done it unto one of them he has done it unto Christ.

While there are those who partake unworthily there are others who refrain for no sufficient reason. A feeling of exaggerated humility, in the absence of any known transgression, ought not to keep any church member from the communion service. Christ himself said, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you."—John 6: 53.

"What shall I do then with Jesus which is called Christ?" is still an insistent question. Whether we eat or whether we refrain we face a serious problem. It can not be evaded. Life itself is a serious problem. Here we take up the great march that shall carry us into eternity. No one can mark time; forward is the order. Shall we listen to the divine music and learn to keep step with the legions that follow our great Commander.

One concluding thought: Those who refrain from eating the bread and drinking the wine are told that they can not hope to have life in them. Those who partake unworthily eat and drink condemnation to their own souls. Both are in danger; there is still another course, the true one. Saints should try earnestly and persistently to live the gospel life; and they should observe from time to time, as they have opportunity, the ordinance that Christ commanded them to observe in remembrance of him.

WARN YOUR NEIGHBOR.

Zion's Ensign, a weekly paper published by the church at Independence, Missouri, has been rightly named the missionary paper of the church. It is made up of eight pages of letters and articles on gospel themes well calculated to increase the faith of its readers in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Nearly every issue contains a sermon from some one of our leading ministers. Its value can not be estimated, but the subscription price is only one dollar per year. It should be in the home of every Latter Day Saint, as it will bring every week a message of cheer from almost every land, and when it is read it can be handed to some one who has not yet accepted the gospel, and thus continue to scatter the good seed.

The management of the Ensign desires to see the paper in the homes of hundreds who are not members of the church, and for that purpose they make the following liberal offer.

DURING NOVEMBER AND DECEMBER they will send the ENSIGN to non-members of the church in the United States FOR ONE WHOLE YEAR FOR FIFTY CENTS.

Now, Saints, here is an excellent chance to bring the gospel before your friends whose salvation you earnestly desire. Please consider the proposition well. For a penny a week you can bring the gospel before those you desire to warn. Can you afford to let the opportunity pass? Send your remittance to Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri, and say the subscriber is not a member of the church, and fifty cents will pay the subscription for one year.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"The Agapemone," or "Abode of Love" which was founded a few years ago at Saxton, in Somersetshire, England, by a clerk in holy orders, the Rev. J. H. Smyth-Pigott, who posed as the Messiah, has been attracting considerable attention again, and the authorities are being urged to discover some means of putting an end to a state of things assuming the proportions of a public scandal.

Smyth-Pigott is not a married man. Nevertheless, there was recorded at the local registrar's office last week the birth of a child born to Smyth-Pigott and his "spiritual wife," "Sister" Ruth, another inmate of the "Abode of Love." To this baby, a boy, was given the name of "Power," and, as the reverend gentleman already possessed a daughter to whom he had given the name of "Glory," he evidently regards them as either tributes to or examples of his self-assumed divine power and glory.

"Sister" Ruth is one of twenty-five young women who reside in the Agapemone. To outsiders who betray undesirable curiosity in regard to the conditions that obtain within the strictly-guarded abode, efforts have been made to pass them off as domestic servants under the rule of Mrs. Read, the wife of Smyth-Pigott's chief supporter and main financial backer.—Register and Leader.

That religious prejudice has nothing to do with the paucity of members of the Roman Catholic Church faith holding public office in the United States was emphatically declared by Archbishop John Ireland of St. Paul in his address at the banquet, which launched the ceremonies in connection with the laying of the corner-stone of the new Cathedral of St. Louis, held at the Jefferson hotel, last night.

"The Catholics are not represented in the government of the United States as seventeen million of her citizens should be," declared the archbishop, "and the blame is largely with yourselves. It is only a foolish fancy that the country holds you down. There is no country in the world to-day where rights of conscience are recognized as they are here. There is every chance for Catholics if they are fitted for the offices. I believe if the right Catholic was presented to the United States as a candidate for president, a man with all the qualifications needed for the office, there would be no discrimination against him because of his religion, and I know that any party of to-day discriminating against Catholics would be defeated. In public office you must consider the man's fitness, regardless of his religious faith, and America is electing men now because of their fitness."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat, October 18, 1908.

LAMONI ITEMS.

On Tuesday evening of last week Elder Heman C. Smith addressed the Bryan Club in reply to the speeches of Governor Cummins and Congressman Hepburn delivered here during the Republican rally. Elder R. S. Salyards is billed to address the club on Tuesday evening of this week.

Our long drought was broken during the past week, and it still remains broken at this writing. Whatever the weather does in Iowa it does thoroughly and for a long time. Sunday was wet and cold, and the attendance at church was a little below normal. Elders Heman C. Smith and E. A. Stedman were the speakers at the church, morning and evening.

Lamoni is becoming more attractive and desirable as a residence town. We have an improved train service,—four passenger trains daily. The Herald Office electric plant furnishes light for the city and for a considerable number of private residences. They are taking on new customers almost daily. The town is to put in a water system in the near future. The town council has entered into a contract with Bishop Kelley for the use of the Home Pond for a period of thirty years for the sum of six thousand dollars. Both of the Saints' Homes will be supplied with water free. The pond will be cleaned, enlarged, and kept free from contamination, and an adequate filtering system will be installed. We also notice that the citizens take more pride in keeping up the appearances of lawns and premises in general. A great amount of cement walk has been put down during the past two years, thus removing one argument of past years against Lamoni as a place for holding the General Conferences.

A business-meeting of officers and teachers of the Sunday-school was held Sunday afternoon. Plans were discussed for improving the school and present methods were freely criticized.

Ernest Thompson Seton's new story of animal life is to be a study of a fox, and is to have the charming and characteristic illustrations which have marked this author-artist's earlier books. This story is soon to appear in the Century.

Elders' Note-Book

THE MISSIONARY.

The missionary when he goeth forth on his first mission, doth imagine many vain things. He thinketh that ten dollars a month will keep a twenty-dollar table. He taketh consolation in the thought that the Lord will provide. His mother-in-law standeth in the breach. He getteth a trunk and many books so that he may occupy his time reading. He taketh a few suits of underwear, two suits of clothes, an overcoat, and many little knickknacks that the family doth suggest as being nice. He seeth visions by day and by night. He goeth forth as a strong man who runneth a race. He sacrificeth the association of his friends, and the comforts of his home. He is very zealous, and prayeth much, and fasteth from time to time. Full of simplicity, he doth expect much of his brethren, in that he doth expect them to come to hear himself preach, and to show interest in all the meetings. In this he findeth much disappointment.

He moaneth much because he doth sacrifice the companionship of loved ones; therefore doth he refer to them quite often, and doth extol them. This is a grievous sin. At first his ideal congregation is a small one. His experience and observation changeth his mind, therefore he becometh ambitious that he should have many listeners. He wondereth that missionaries have not accomplished much more than they have. At first he doth fully believe that the ministry should go out two and two. However, if his colaborer do all the baptizing, and exercise too much authority, he doth wish that either the law or his associate should be changed; therefore doth he languish.

He doth soon discover that his trunk is a bill of expense, and so many books an unnecessary ballast. Unread, they accuse him of miscalculating as to time for reading. therefore doth he unload, and doth complain because of scarcity of time. He speaketh many hard things against the Utah Mormons. In this doth he find acceptance. Therefore doth he indulge the more. He also denounceth those who use tobacco. In this doth he give offense to some. Therefore doth he apologize, stating that he wished not to give offence to any. If he apologize not, he is high-minded, an upstart, and needeth to be taught something. His first effort in a new opening is to explain that we believe not in polygamy, even though he hath not been accused of believing it. This he findeth to be a folly.

He getteth a Christian church to preach in. In his first sermon he doth denounce Alexander Campbell. Immediately he findeth the doors of that church closed against him. Therefore doth he rage and imagine a vain thing. Forthwith he issueth a challenge to the minister of that church, and sendeth a copy of it to the readers of the church publications. In this he vaunteth himself, and sometimes striveth with a man stronger than himself. Therefore is he not so wise.

He stayeth at one place until he hath preached all his congregation away from him; or lost his congregation. This doth cause him to consider his ways.

If he quotes much scripture every time he preacheth, he will be regarded as a reciter, will need repeat himself many times or get a new Bible. Therefore needeth he to quote less scripture, and to use more reason.

If he preach much on the prophecies which he himself understandeth not, neither doth his congregation understand them, he is regarded as a profound thinker, and very spiritual. Therefore, this is a delusion.

If he use words in his preaching that are unfathomable to his congregation, he will be considered wise and learned. It is vanity, and should be avoided. His experience is a daily school, and he that profiteth not by it is not wise. Therefore he buyeth a memorandum and keepeth a diary. At first he writeth therein daily, almost hourly. After writing a volume or two he groweth faint, and languisheth, and writeth occasionally only. Therefore he thinketh it a vanity.

He getteth short of money for personal expenses, and doth advance many dollars, for he worketh outside of the reservation, therefore is his prey more scarce. He also getteth a letter from home, which saith that the bishop is back three months in his payments of the family's allowance, and the good wife murmureth. Therefore is he disquieted. He doth write to the bishop, asking for money; and the bishop doth inform him that he can not supply his wants. He doth now feel disconsolate; but rejoiceth that he is a socialist, and talketh and longeth for the days of Enoch and the early Nephites, when they had all things common. Even this seemeth vanity, and vexation of spirit.

He now writeth his second epistle to the bishop much more mandatory than the first. He doth also resolve to have the bishop brought before his quorum at the next General Conference, to account for his own dereliction. He also recounteth his many losses on account of his having gone into the ministry; and behold, how greatly are they magnified. Therefore doth he despair.

In course of time the good bishop sendeth him two months' family allowance, and ten dollars for personal expenses. Now doth his heart fail him. He doth feel that he hath brought folly in Israel. Therefore doth he repent in sackcloth and ashes. He doth write words of gracious appreciation of the bishop's never-to-be-forgotten kindness, doth refer to his onerous duties, and doth also express grave apprehension as to the possibilities of the bishop bringing on a mental collapse. In all this doth he find relief and spiritual restoration, and now doth his preaching have a new tone, even a tone of cheerfulness. In his testimony he doth feel more confident of the ultimate triumph of the work; therefore doth he feel that he is a new creature.

He preacheth several months and doeth no baptizing, therefore doth he question the wisdom of the Quorum of Twelve. He hath seen great possibilities in other fields, where he himself hath never been, and he wondereth why he was not sent there. Therefore doth he marvel.

Year after year doth he continue to have experience, hence added knowledge. He looketh back upon his pathway, and seeth a great multitude of mistakes he hath made, and opportunities that he did overlook. His physical strength doth abate, and he is admonished of the approach of old age, which cometh with the rapidity of lightning. He doth become superannuated, because he hath fallen below his former standard, and hath failed to maintain the high tension of a more vigorous manhood. Being desirous for relief from too weighty a responsibility, he doth become resigned to his condition, desiring home comforts and to avoid too much exposure. Therefore in this is he blessed.

If he be a married man, he may possibly be supported in his family. If single he may be offered admission to the Saints' Home, or Liberty Home, which can not be compatible with his nature; and especially so if he be of a refined nature, with fine sensibilities. The afflictions and infirmities of so many will add greatly to his discomfort, and be to many a veritable torture. Whereas, with a more cheering environment, rather than bear the sufferings of others, his own would be greatly lessened. Therefore should he fear.

The coming to the forefront of so many younger and stronger than he, will cause his relegation to the back ranks, or obscurity. Even will his own quorum withdraw from him the right to assemble with them (unless he be an high priest), although he have had much experience and close association for many years with them as a quorum. Therefore this causeth him to lament his lot, and he asketh the question, For what am I living?

The toil, the exposure of many years, with the infirmity of old age, will make him to many an undesirable associate, and his peculiarities will possibly be a subject for much conversation; yet will he bear in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus Christ. While others have been enjoying the comforts of their homes, the companionship of their wives and children, accumulating wealth, the missionary hath had a mere and scanty livelihood. He hath withstood the abuse and often cruel criticisms of his brethren, been left without financial and spiritual support he should have had, and rightly deserved as a representative of the Church of Jesus Christ, saying nothing of the many persecutions he hath received from a cold and gainsaying world. Now dependent, he doth feel his indigence, and is sensitive to every reflection; therefore would he appreciate such comity as would make him feel that he is one with the great brotherhood of Christ. Therefore doth he find consolation and assurance in this, like the faithful Apostle Paul: "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Timothy 4:6-8. Therefore will he be glorified.

This is not the thousandth part of the many experiences he hath had on his varied and checkered pathway. Therefore are they not written in the books of the chronicles of the memoirs of those with whom and under whom he hath labored? Therefore will he have to meet a more fully written record.

TITHING AND CONSECRATION AS WE VIEW IT.

As far back as the days of Abraham tithing was observed among the people of God. The word in its primary meaning signifies tenth, a tenth of anything; especially in the Lord's work, a tenth was required. This seemed to be observed to raise means to carry on the gospel work in the days of Melchisedec and Abraham. We find this in Genesis 14:20, and Paul in Hebrews 7, referring to this, says he gave a tenth part of all to Melchisedec. This may refer only to the spoils Abraham had taken in his war with the kings in this case; but that being a gospel dispensation it must have been a principle of the gospel as taught by the high priest, Melchisedec, or he would not have so practiced. We are not left in doubt, however, on this point: Alma 10:1, Book of Mormon, says:

And it was this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes: yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed.

This makes it plain that Abraham fully complied with this law as taught by Melchisedec. This was more than four hundred years before the law of Moses was given; hence part of the gospel. The Book of Mormon, in this same connection, makes it a part of the means by which they entered into the rest of the Lord:

Now these ordinances were given after this manner, that thereby the people might look forward on the Son of God, it being a type of his order, or it being his order; and this, that they might look forward to him for a remission of their sins, that they might enter into the rest of the Lord.

By this means, and complying with the other principles of the gospel, they retained a remission of their sins, as clearly indicated in the Book of Mormon, Mosiah 2: 5:

And now, for the sake of these things which I have spoken unto you; that is, for the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God, I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, . . . and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order: for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength. And again: It is expedient that he should be diligent, that thereby he might win the prize: therefore, all things must be done in order.

All things could not be done in wisdom and in order, each giving according to what he had, unless they had system, a rule, or law governing in their work. It seems this law of tithing obtained everywhere the gospel was had. Jacob understood this to be the Lord's plan when he said: "And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."

This part of the gospel economy was continued under the administration of the law of Moses, for the support of the ministry. Hence they were to give one tenth.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

If this was the Lord's, and holy unto him, then when renewed to Moses for the support of the ministry, and then the ministry required to tithe the tenth they received (Nehemiah 10: 38), it must have been necessary for all to observe it. Tithing, then, in its primary sense, to supply the needy, being part of God's great plan in the days of Melchisedec and Abraham and retained in Israel under Moses, it being one of the gospel principles, must of necessity continue after the law of Moses was fulfilled in Christ. Jesus included tithing in his teaching. (See Matthew 23: 20; Luke 11: 43.) Paul also in 2 Corinthians eighth and ninth chapters, taught giving systematically: "Every one according to that which he hath." So we read in Proverbs 3: 9: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase." If this was a gospel principle, it would necessarily be restored when the gospel was restored again in this dispensation.

When the Lord gave the law to the church in section 42: 5, the Lord says:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.

Now, if giving one tenth was taught and practiced as a part of the gospel by Melchisedec and Abraham, as recorded in the Bible and Book of Mormon, and as we are told in the Doctrine and Covenants, as above cited, that we shall teach the principles of the gospel as contained in those books, can we omit tithing and yet be obedient to God's command?

But, say some, It does not say in section 42, You shall pay one tenth, but says, You shall consecrate. Yes, but it does say, before it names consecration, You shall teach what the other books contain, and both of the other books show one tenth was first taught and practiced as the law to begin with, in the gospel dispensation of Melchisedec. Then consecration came in afterwards.

First we read Abraham paid one tenth, then afterwards, "tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." Now because Abraham may have tithed himself of all his surplus property or consecrated all above what he had need, it did not nullify the giving of one tenth, as exemplified in the case of Jacob the grandson of Abraham, and his posterity after him. And because they were told on this continent that Abraham paid one tenth of all that he possessed, without making that part of the law void, they could do like Abraham, turn over all above what they had need, and thus go on to perfection.

The people never can comprehend all at once, hence we advance step by step. When the Lord gave the law in section 42, we already had the law of tithing in the other books which he cited and commanded us to teach. Joseph had men with various opinions then to deal with, as we now have, and those different opinions were no doubt the cause of the question being asked in 1838, when they were gathering at Far West, contemplating the building of a house and a city to the Lord. It was not unreasonable, in my judgment, for them to ask, "O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing." They already understood the law of tithing.

Now he requires all their surplus property, and tells what it is for. The conditions and the work now required it. All they could do was demanded; and after they should turn over as a tithe all their surplus property, or consecrate all above what they had need as stated in section 42: 10, which is the same thing in effect and for the same purpose; then the primary law of tithing for the priesthood would still be in force, as it was before the special work of building a house unto the Lord or laying the foundation of Zion had begun.

While we build the house and city the priesthood who give all their time must live, and there is no special amount or allowance provided for in the law for them,—only their just wants and needs. And they are to receive the tithes of the people, pay their tithing out of that (Nehemiah 10), and then consecrate the balance above their needs when the law is fully kept. Or as in section 70, they may live from the proceeds of their work in the literary department, and then if there be more than they need, it shall be consecrated, as all others should do, for the poor and needy. And, "None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God."

Sections 106 and 42 are in perfect harmony, as we view it. Section 42 says we shall teach the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon. They both teach tithing and consecration to be carried out, as we reach the conditions requiring it. Section 106 teaches both tithing and consecration in itself, and the fact that it is more full in its statements does not make it contradict the other revelations.

The Lord says:

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church [and it was accepted by resolution in 1878] was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.

There was a controversy about section 106 at the time the above revelation was given. Some thought it was not in harmony with other revelations; but it, with all the other revelations in the book, also the Bible and Book of Mormon, had been accepted by the church, and the bishopric were willing to be governed by the books, believing then, as we do now, that they were in perfect harmony.

This was the Lord's opportunity to speak and settle this controversy. He did speak, and he said the Book of Doctrine of Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and counsel of the bishopric, taken as a whole. This should be sufficient for every man that is in the faith, when this section 106 was the one questioned at the time, and the Lord said to take all of them as accepted by the church. Let us stand by what the Lord has said, pay our tithing, one tenth of our increase, or what we have when we come into the church, file our inventory with the bishop, turn over our surplus property, as the time has come to do that, then go on making what we can in righteousness, and pay our tithing as required.

When we have thus rendered an account of our stewardship in time, as provided for in section 72:1, and it has been decided by those appointed by the Lord in council with ourselves, what our just needs are, we can then move forward in our stewardship, with a realization that what we keep is consecrated to the Lord as fully as the surplus we turn over for the benefit of some one else; so we are accountable to God as stewards over our own property as agreed upon, or what we may receive from the bishop, if we had not enough for our just needs and wants.

Thus our individual responsibility continues, and all work together with God with the one object in view, that is, the building up of Zion and establishing God's kingdom on earth. Then every man will labor for Zion that labors in Zion, and he will consecrate all he can spare, as well as pay his tithing at the beginning, and cheerfully keep his tithing paid on his increase, and just as cheerfully consecrate and turn over into the Lord's common treasury all he can spare from time to time, so that the poor may be provided for, and equality be brought in and preserved, and the law of God be honored.

Those needing much in their stewardship should not waste any means or lavish it on themselves for their own aggrandizement, no more than those who need but little. Neither one should waste anything, but their ambitions should be to see how much they could put into the Lord's treasury, reserving for themselves only enough to make them comfortable and carry on their work successfully. Then no man would exhibit a desire for personal gain, but all be one in desire and object, seeking to build up Zion, and make every one comfortable and happy; thus exemplifying our love for God and each other by what we do.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

So let it be. To this end let us work and pray.

G. H. HILLIARD, of the Bishopric.

MIRACLES.

In Coppens' Logic and Mental Philosophy, under the heading of "Cosmology," is found the following analysis and explanation of God's interference in the progress of physical or natural laws:

We observe that all material things have well-defined and constant modes of action, which we call the physical or natural laws. The word law is here used analogically; it strictly means a rule of action for moral beings.

Now, some important questions on this subject present themselves to the philosopher:

1. What is the nature of those laws? or whence are those constant and uniform modes of action? There is no effect without a cause; what, then, are the causes of the physical laws? Since all things act according to their natures, the obvious answer is that the natures of things are the causes of their modes of action; and the Author of all nature is the Author of those laws. The physical laws themselves are the uniform modes of action of created natures or essences.

2. Are the modes of action so necessarily constant that departures from them are impossible? It is evident that nothing can act except in conformity with its nature, and therefore departures from the physical laws are physically impossible, i. e., no created power can produce them; but they are not absolutely impossible, for nothing created exists except as dependent on the power and will of the Creator, and therefore the Author of nature can affect the action of created things, suspending and otherwise controlling it for wise purposes of his own. He may either suspend the action of a physical law, or make a creature for the time being follow other modes of action; for he can change the very natures of created things and therefore all their powers. Or he may let every law continue in action, but neutralize or counteract a force by a stronger force in a different direction. An evident interference of God with the workings of physical agents is called a miracle.

Thesis.—The laws of nature are not absolutely immutable, and therefore miracles are possible.

Proof.—That is not absolutely immutable to which God can make exceptions; but God can make exceptions to the laws of nature, for he can do all that involves no contradiction; but that God should make exceptions to the laws of nature involves no contradiction. If it did, the reason of it would be either, (a) That the natures of material things are absolutely necessary beings, existing and acting independently of God's will; or, (b) That making exceptions to general laws would suppose a change of mind in God with regard to the permanence of his own laws; or (c) That such exceptions would be unworthy of God's wisdom. But these reasons are invalid; because (a) The natures of material things exist and act only in as far as God gives them existence and action; he may, therefore, suspend their action or produce effects that shall neutralize their action, and that shall cause even opposite results. (b) When God wills an exception, he wills it from eternity. (c) It is wise, on the part of God, to reserve to himself means of evidently controlling his creation, and thus manifesting his will to man. Now, miracles are such means of divine manifestations, and are therefore possible to God.

Objections: 1. Hume and others have learnedly proved a priori that miracles are impossible. Answer: All their arguments are easily refuted; even Huxley acknowledges the possibility of miracles, saying: "No one is entitled to say a priori that any given so-called miraculous event is impossible, and no one is entitled to say a priori that prayer for some change in the ordinary course of nature can not possibly avail."—"Science and the bishops," Nineteenth Century, November, 1887.

2. An all-wise Creator should have made the world so that it needed not his interference. Answer: The material world does not need God's miraculous interference; but God can not deprive himself of the power to interfere with it when he sees fit to do so; for instance when he manifests his will supernaturally to his intelligent creatures.

3. God could manifest his will by affecting directly the intellects of men. Answer: He could do so, and does so frequently; but it is natural to man to obtain his knowledge by sense and reasoning.

4. The physical laws flow from the very natures of things. Therefore they can not be suspended while their causes exist. Answer: The physical laws need not cease to exist during the miracle, but a stronger power may prevent their effects; thus, our hands do not cease to be heavy bodies while our will raises them up.

5. Miracles only complicate the economy of nature, and thus destroy the beauty of order. Answer: They introduce into the world a higher beauty than that of mere physical regularity.

6. It is an analytical principle that the order of nature is constant. Answer: We deny this; unvarying constancy is not contained in the idea of order. It is an analytical judgment that there must be order in the works of a wise Creator; but order does not, as we have seen, exclude all exceptions. It is the adaptation of means to ends; now, miracles are well suited to the ends for which they are wrought.

7. If there could be miracles, the physical sciences would cease to give certainty. Answer: If miracles were of such frequent occurrence that we could not distinguish their effects from natural effects, we grant; else we deny.

8. Miracles are, at least, opposed to physical certainty. Answer: Not at all: we have physical certainty regarding what must happen when no miracle interferes, but we have no physical certainty that no miracle ever happens; on the contrary, we have physical certainty of the miraculous facts when we witness them.

9. We have physical certainty that a given miracle did not happen, and only moral certainty that it did happen; now, physical certainty is stronger than moral. Answer: We have no physical certainty that a miracle did not happen, but only that a certain effect could not proceed from natural causes; we have moral certainty that the miracle did happen, e. g., that Christ raised Lazarus from the dead: both physical and moral certainty are true in their own lines.

10. Miracles could answer no wise purpose unless they could be known to be miracles; but they can not be known; for any strange fact may come from some unknown law of nature. Answer: An objection that proves too much must be unsound; now this objection proves too much; for, if it were valid, we could form no scientific induction whatever until we knew all the natural laws, else what we attribute to one law might be due to another, hidden law. We could then never predict any fact with physical certainty. With regard to miracles, we need not know all the laws of nature to form, e. g., the certain judgment that a dead man can not return to life by the power of nature.

11. We do not know the full power of the Devil; therefore we never know whether God works the wonder. Answer: Some facts are evidently the work of the Creator, e. g., the restoration of life to the dead; for this implies supreme dominion over the noblest beings of this world. Besides, the circumstances of the miracle are often such that, if it could be from evil spirits, mankind would be invincibly led into error, and all means would be taken away by which the action of God could be outwardly manifested to the world: thus God would unwisely deprive himself of what is evidently his sole right. For instance, if the miracles of Christ and his followers as a body could be diabolical deceits, then God himself would be accountable for the deception of the best portion of mankind.

12. The moral laws are immutable; therefore [physical] laws too must be so. Answer: There is no parity; it is unholy to violate the moral law, but to oppose the action of physical law implies nothing that is unworthy of God.

13. The mesmeric fluid is capable of wonderful effects; it may produce many so-called miracles. Answer: Effects which may be produced by a mesmeric fluid must not be called miracles; but many things are falsely claimed for a mesmeric fluid—e. g., it is not possible that any material fluid should produce acts of intelligence, as when the medium is made to speak a language never learned by the person, and to know secrets unknown to all other men; often an invisible intellectual agent is present, distinct from all men concerned.

Besides, both with regard to the power of the Devil and the strange effects claimed for mesmerism, hypnotism, etc., in many cases it can be clearly found out from the circumstances of the concrete fact in question whether it is the work of God or of the Devil, or may be within the power of material nature, and in all cases where this can not be discovered we must suspend our judgment and not pronounce the fact to be miraculous.

To discern whether a certain effect may proceed from mere physical or material causes, we must observe whether the effect is always the same while the circumstances remain identical. If not, then the causes are not material, since the same physical causes must ever produce the same physical effects in the same physical circumstances.

Since a miracle is a manifest interference of God with the working of physical agents, it is evident that we should not call an astonishing event a miracle, unless we know for certain that it is due to God's interference. Now, God may interfere in two ways: either directly, by himself, or indirectly, through the ministry of his good angels. When the wonderful event produced implies the action of creative power, it comes from God directly; for no finite being can create, or be the total cause of a new substance. Such acts are said to be miracles of the first class; while miracles of the second class are those that can be produced by the instrumentality of the good angels acting as ministers of God. This supposes that the angels have certain powers over matter. Now, the devils are of the same nature as the good angels, and they likewise have certain powers over bodily substances, which, however, they can not exercise independently of God's permission.

How shall we know whether, in a given case, the effects produced are not owing to the action of the demon? Evidently, we must have some test or criterion to distinguish true miracles of the second class from mere prodigies of Satan. If we had no test, a miracle of this class could not be known to be from God, and, therefore, could not be an undoubted sign of his will. And, since men can not readily discern in most cases what wonders require creative power and what others do not, God would deprive himself of the power of exhibiting his interference to men, if we had no means whatever, no reliable test, whereby true miracles can be discerned from diabolical deceptions.

The criterion is this: That everything concerned in the wonderful event be worthy of the holiness and the wisdom of the Creator and his blessed angels. Hence, we know that an evil spirit is at work if:

1. The preternatural effect is produced in favor of a doctrine or principle which is certainly known to be false, as being either self-contradictory, or against morality, or against a well-established point of revelation.
2. If the prodigy can answer no purpose worthy of God; for instance, if it were chiefly intended for the gratification of idle curiosity, or for money-making, etc.
3. If the human agent who claims to be the wonder-worker were actuated in such performances by unworthy motives; for instance, by the love of human glory or any inordinate passion.

When the application of this criterion leaves a reasonable doubt as to the genuineness of the miracle, we should not pronounce the effect to be miraculous. For while, before a court of justice, a man is accounted innocent until his guilt be proved, the presumption being in his favor, we claim no such presumption in favor of miracles; on the contrary, we accept none as certain unless it be demonstrated beyond a doubt that the wonderful event can not be due to any natural agent, nor to the preternatural agencies of the evil spirits.

INSPIRED TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE.

Since the many attempts to translate the Bible by scholarly men have failed to produce a book without errors and contradictions in it, we can plainly see the need of divine assistance in so grave a matter as the translation of Holy Writ. And when we consider the number of times the Bible has been translated, and retranslated, and the means used for that purpose, it is even a marvel that the Bible of to-day is in as good condition as we find it. But the fact is self-evident that there are imperfect translations in all the standard versions of the Bible, and so many obscure and perplexing passages that many people are caused to err and become skeptical because of them. But if we turn to the Book of Mormon, we will find a reason assigned for this perplexing condition:

And the angel of the Lord said unto me, Thou hast beheld that the book proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew; and when it proceeded forth from the mouth of a Jew, it contained the plainness of the gospel of the Lord, of whom the twelve apostles bear record; . . . wherefore, these things go forth from the Jews in purity, unto the Gentiles, according to the truth which is in God.—Pages 24, 25.

The argument here is that at the time the Bible was written by the Jew it was plain and simple, i. e., it contained the plainness of the gospel. But what does the angel declare followed? Let us again read, beginning where we left off, and see what has been predicted:

And after they go forth by the hand of the twelve apostles of the Lamb, from the Jews unto the Gentiles, thou seest the foundation of a great and abominable church, which is most abominable above all other churches; for behold, they have taken away from the gospel of the Lamb, many parts which are plain and most precious; and also many covenants of the Lord have they taken away; . . . wherefore, thou seest that after the book hath gone forth through the hands of the great and abominable church, that there are many plain and precious things taken away from the book, which is the book of the Lamb of God; and after these plain and precious things were taken away, it goeth forth unto all the nations of the Gentiles.—Ibid., p. 25.

This states the condition in which the Bible would come unto all nations. And what would be the result? Let us see:

Thou seest because of the many plain and precious things which have been taken out of the book, which were plain unto the understanding of the children of men, according to the plainness which is in the Lamb of God; because of these things which are taken away out of the gospel of the Lamb, an exceeding great many do stumble, yea, insomuch that Satan hath great power over them; . . . because of the plain and most precious parts of the gospel of the Lamb which have been kept back by that abominable church.—Ibid., p. 25.

It was because of a lack of those things that were plain that men were to stumble, and so we find that people drift into skepticism because they find obscure and perplexing texts in the common Bible. Now for the restoration of those plain and precious things; and if we are to have a restoration of all things, we must have them restored also. In December, 1830, the Lord said to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon:

And a commandment I give unto thee [Sidney], that thou shalt write for him [Joseph], and the scriptures shall be given even as they are in mine own bosom, to the salvation of mine own elect.—Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5.

Here the Lord makes the promise to give the scripture as it is in his own bosom; and if it was to be given in that manner, we would at least suppose that those plain and precious things would be restored. Joseph began to translate at once, and Sidney acted as scribe for him, and a couple months later the Lord spoke to the whole church as follows:

Thou shalt ask, and my scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety; and it is expedient that thou shouldst hold thy peace concerning them, and not teach them until ye have received them in full. And I give unto you a commandment, that then ye shall teach them unto all men; for they shall be taught unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 15.

Now there are a few points to notice. First, the scriptures were to be given as they were in the bosom of Deity. Second, they were to be preserved in safety. Third, they were not to be taught until received in full (book form). And fourth, when they were so received they were to be taught unto all people and nations. The indications are that some time would elapse between the translation and the publishing; hence the promise that "they shall be preserved in safety."

The translation began in December, 1830; and was completed June 2, 1833. (See Times and Seasons, vol. 6, p. 801.) Joseph Smith retained them in his possession until his death, June 27, 1844, and now they must find that place of safety promised by the Lord; and he, true to his promise, raised up an elect person, who could not be deceived (see Matthew 24:24), the wife of the martyr, the only person spoken of within the lids of the entire book of Doctrine of Covenants as an elect person, and she is called "an elect lady." (Doctrine and Covenants 24: 1.) So the manuscript of the Inspired Translation of the Bible was preserved in her hand, and in the year 1866 was placed in the hands of a publishing committee, one of which was her eldest son, the successor to his father. A transcript was made by them, one copy being placed in the hands of the printer, while the original was reserved for comparison when the proof-sheets appeared; and in the year 1867 the first edition of the Holy Scriptures was ready for mailing. And since then has the commandment been in force, "Ye shall teach them unto all men," and any one that will carefully compare them with any other edition or translation of the Bible will find them superior in every respect. The contradictions found in other translations have been eliminated, and the plain and precious things have been restored, and the ministry are under a command to teach them. May truth triumph.

THIS ROCK.

As a representative of Jesus Christ, to preach his gospel, it is my desire to know his doctrine, that I may be able to present it as it is; and we agree with the Apostle Paul that it is necessary that we "study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." (2 Timothy 2: 15.)

I want to call your attention to a portion of scripture found in Matthew 16: 14-19. We observe that Jesus is to build his church upon "this rock." The question naturally arises, What is "this rock" that Jesus will build his church upon? I have heard different ideas in regard to what this meant. Some declare that this "rock" was Peter; and Jesus was to build his church upon him. Others say this was Christ. Still others claim that it was knowledge, or revelation. If the church is built on Peter, then it can not be built on Christ. If one is right the other is wrong; and if on Christ, then it is not built on knowledge or revelation.

It may be proper for us to investigate the words of the Master and see what he really meant, in speaking to Peter. He said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Question: What was it that revealed unto Peter that Jesus was the Christ, seeing that flesh and blood or no man had not borne this fact unto him? We believe it was the Holy Ghost that revealed this unto Peter. This was the rock referred to by Jesus, and upon this rock or Holy Ghost Jesus will build his church; for by the power of the Holy Ghost all things are accomplished in Christ, and the foundation upon which the Saints will be able to stand; and by its marvelous power they will be able to dwell in the celestial kingdom of God, and this Spirit will reveal unto every one, who desires to know, that Jesus is the Christ, as it did unto Peter. For by it we live and move and have our being. And we are told in Doctrine and Covenants 85:3, that this Spirit fills the immensity of space, and it proceedeth forth from God, and is light and life in everything. We do not believe that it is a person; but an element that we may be immersed in, as water is an element in which man may be immersed; and it can be given unto every man by measure, according to his faith.

REAPING THE WILD OATS.

Can you imagine what would happen to a man if he were pointed out on a crowded street and a voice cried loudly:

"That man has just taken a white-hot wire and put out both the eyes of his day-old baby boy"?

Suppose a man did such a vile thing—with a white-hot wire. There would be no voice raised to ask mercy. If he escaped a rope at the hands of a mob, you may be sure the judge and jury would see to it that he got the limit of punishment allowed by the law.

"Sowing wild oats" was accepted and acceptable in the state of society in which it was coined, but it's as much out of date now as is chain armor or curing disease by witchcraft. The thing we want to know about now is Reaping Wild Oats.

Whose is the harvest? And by what right is such a harvest sown for the innocent reaper? And what is that harvest? Listen:

One out of three of the babies who are blind at birth or whose little eyes flicker and go out in the first few days of life are reaping their father's wild oats.

Two out of three of the women who lie under the surgeon's knife for operations peculiar to women are reaping their husbands' wild oats.

One half the homes in which no baby's voice will ever be heard are sterile because of the husband's wild oats.

Countless thousands of babes are born dead and the little life is the toll of father's wild oats.

Millions of babies, of boys and girls, youths and maidens, men and women, go through life sickly, miserable, unsound in body and mind—and they are reaping their father's wild oats.

Oho! We mustn't talk about such things in public? Well, then, let it be known that the phrase "Hush; such things must not be talked about," is of the same cowardly stamp as the apologetic "sowing wild oats." These things must be talked about until we realize that:

A pure girl by right deserves a pure man.

No young man "must have his fling" if that "fling" takes toll of his future wife's health or of his baby's eyes.

Not talk of it! Think of a baby groping its way in the eternal darkness of the blind; think of the young wife poisoned at the very altar of marriage; think of the cost of that crop of wild oats, and then say whether the subject is a proper one to discuss?

Does not the father ask if his daughter's suitor is able to support her? Does he not ask if his mind is clean and fit for fatherhood? Then why not ask—and insist on knowing—if his body is clean or if he reeks the deadly disease of the Wild Oats?—Des Moines News, October 18, 1908.

In Our Father's Care.

The ships glide in the harbor's mouth,
And the ships sail out to sea,
And the wind that sweeps from the sunny South
Is as sweet as sweet can be.
There's a world of toil and a world of pains,
There's a world of trouble and care;
But, O, in a world where our Father reigns
There is gladness everywhere.

The earth is fair in the breezy morn,
And the toilers sow and reap,
And the fullness comes to the tasseled corn
Whether we wake or sleep;
And far on the hills by feet untrod
There are blossoms that scent the air;
For, O, in this world of our Father, God,
There is beauty everywhere.

The babe lies soft on the mother's breast,
And the tide of joy flows in;
He giveth, he taketh, he knoweth best—
The Lord to whose home we wend.
And, O, when the soul is with trials tossed,

There is help in the lifted prayer;
For never a soul that loves is lost,
And our Father is everywhere.

The ships sail over the harbor bar,
Away and away to sea;
The ships sail in with the evening star
To the port where no tempests be:
The harvest waves on the summer hills,
And the bands go forth to reap;
And all is well if we're in his will,
Whether we wake or sleep.—Selected.

Love's Miracle.

Did it ever happen to you to fall in love historically? In reading some ancient story, did you ever suddenly discover your ideal man, your true knight, real-hearted, strong-minded, tender and brave, passionate and pure? And did you say, "There, that is my man? He appeals to my heart. I can feel it warm to him across the years and the centuries."

I have been before to-day in an English crowd, and I have heard those who composed it roll out cheer on cheer, like the thunder, at the mention of the name of Oliver Cromwell. The man had been dead two hundred and fifty years. But the heart of that great assembly leaped and thrilled at the mention of his name. It swept them like a wind from heaven, and they yielded to the dead hero, a passionate homage such as they gave to no living man. Why? How do you account for that? Because, when you bury a man's body, you do not usually bury the man. There is something which you can not bury, something that escapes, that the earth can never hold or catch. They dragged Oliver Cromwell's body from its sumptuous grave in Westminster Abbey, and hung it up in chains on Tyburn Hill. The sacrilegious ghoul! But his spirit defied them, marched like a hero down the centuries, and two hundred and fifty years after his death stirred the hearts of Englishmen like a storm. There are some things about a man, about a woman, that death can not touch. They are indestructible. They may be obscured and neglected and forgotten for a time, but resurrection awaits them; eternity is theirs; they can never die, but live throughout the ages to bless humanity.

Jonathan was dead. The Philistines had pierced his fair body through with many arrows. They had even, in their cruel, bloody, heathen way, severed the princely head from the shoulders. There, ghastly and ghostly, under the white moonbeams, on the distant battle-field and the dewless mountain, lay the dismembered corpse. Yet Jonathan is not really dead. He lives yet in David's heart. He has left something behind—an aroma of the spirit, a fragrance of the heart—and the Philistines could not kill it, could not even touch it. There was not a Goliath in all Gath whom it could not safely defy. You can not run a tilt against the morning wind. Even the giant, the staff of whose spear is like a weaver's beam, can not kill a sunbeam. Love laughs at locksmiths, and is stronger than death. He is as immune from the Philistine's spear as is the gleam of the morning star. You can kill Jonathan, but you can not kill Jonathan's love. It beats like a wind from God on the doors of David's heart years and decades of years after Jonathan is dead. David could not forget it. The memory of it comes back on him like a tide from the eternal deep, and every time it comes it sweeps him away. "Jonathan, my dead brother," he says, "thy love to me was wonderful. It was surpassing. It was magnificent. It went even beyond that marvel of all the ages and all the lands, the love of woman—of the bride for her husband, and the mother for her child. The touch and the finger of God were in it. It was a miracle."

That was nearly three thousand years ago, but Jonathan's love is not dead yet. It speaks to us, it appears to us even now. It makes Jonathan's name fragrant as a rose in history's page. It commands our homage across the centuries.

"A star in the noonday of May-time,
A star in the cloudland of change;
Too splendid and sad for the daytime
To cheer or eclipse or estrange;
Too sweet for tradition or vision
To see but through shadows of tears
Rise deathless across the division
Of measureless years."

There is really nothing great or wonderful in all history, but love had a hand in it. To love my country, that is patriotism. To love my home, that is virtue. To love my fellow man, that is civilization. To love my God, that is religion. To the patriot, to the lover, to the mother, to the martyr, things are possible that are possible to no one else. Jonathan loved the man who supplanted him, rejoiced and was exceedingly glad when he saw his rival take the seat which was his own; stooped and stepped aside, and said to David, "You sit in my place. I give you the throne to which I was born."

Ambition burns like a fire; jealousy is cruel as the grave; envy strikes and knows no mercy; but love speaks one soft whisper and they all crouch down in their dens like whipped and cowering beasts. Love is not softness. It is not sickly sentiment that begs off from hard service by show of tears and wordy protestations. Love is courage; love is self-subdual; love is sacrifice; love is iron and adamant and fire. Do not sneer at love; when you sneer at love you sneer at God; you affront the very cross of Jesus; you trample under foot the best and highest instincts of the human soul; you make impossible your own salvation; the very mother that bore you cries shame upon you.

I confess I have small patience with the men and the women who habitually speak lightly of love, who make the relations between the sexes (for example) a matter of perpetual joke and banter. Marriage is as sacred as religion. I value the love of my wife as I value the love of my God, for she is one of the windows through which I see God. I tell you this, and I believe it to be the universal experience—the more I love my country, my home, my wife, my friends, my child, the nearer I get to my God, and the easier I find it to do his will. Love is just the coming of God into the life. "He that loveth is born of God, for God is love." Love is religion under another name—"the greatest thing in the world." There is no end to the daring of love, as there is no end to its hope and its sacrifice. Love—never forget it!—Love was crucified for us; took our sin and shame and bore it as his own, died that we might live. All love gathers to focus at Calvary and burns like a fire. I look on the thorn crown, and the nail-mark and the spear-wound. I see him yield up his very life-blood in one red stream for me, and as I look I bow my heart and say, "Prince of Calvary, thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of woman."—Selected.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Will A. Stoddard, Tryon, Nebraska, requests that the Saints will all join in prayer that, if it be the kind Master's will, she may be healed of all her afflictions, as she is suffering with grievous ailments. She has a family, three of whom belong to the church, the other two not being old enough; and she desires strength to bring them up to be an honor to the church.

By sparing ourselves the daily task, we dig the grave of our higher possibilities.

Letter Department

FULTON, Iowa, October 11, 1908.

Editors Herald: We had no Sunday-school nor meeting of any kind to-day, as diphtheria broke out last Tuesday. One boy died and there is a terrible stir, and parents are keeping their children out of school. My son had one child very bad with it, but he is getting better fast. It is hard to see a son have sickness and dare not go in the house. Wife is there helping. They are quarantined, and of course we should abide by the law.

I got a letter on the 5th stating that the reunion committee of Eastern Iowa District met with the Kewanee District reunion committee, as these two districts intend to hold a joint reunion, and decided to hold their reunion in Prospect Park, Moline, Illinois, in 1909. The street-car company of Muscatine offered our people their park, buildings, and lights free, to hold the reunion there. That is surely good of them?

We had a good reunion at Oelwein, Iowa; not so many of our people in attendance, yet the Lord was pleased with the efforts that the Saints made to have the reunion there. I saw by the HERALD that not all the elders who were there were mentioned, and one of these was Elder Roth, our old veteran of the war and of the cross of Christ. We were glad to meet him, as he is well liked in this district and has done a noble work in Eastern Iowa. He is a father to many of the Saints, and can preach good and logical sermons yet, and his counsel can be relied on. He promised to visit us this fall sometime. Come on, Bro. Roth.

I am still short of means to supply the elders' families. Winter is coming on, fuel and heavier clothes are needed. When you are comfortably seated in your fine houses, do you think of how the elders' families are getting along? I do not wish to beg, but wish all the Saints would think this over and say, What can I do to help along this grand work of Christ?

We have had a fine Sunday-school and a good attendance at church. I know this: We all could do better if we tried. Be more humble, more earnest, more zealous, more self-sacrificing, laying our all on the altar and saying, Here am I; send me. May God give strength to all his Saints to endure to the end.

I do not see how any family of Saints can get along without the church papers. I took the HERALD as soon as I came into the church. I got the first number of AUTUMN LEAVES, and how many times I felt thankful that we had such good literature for our children! I feel to say that parents are often to blame for their children's waywardness by not giving them proper food for thought. As our children are all in the church, eight of them, and all seem earnest, I feel thankful to my heavenly Father.

JOHN HEIDE.

SURPRISE, Oklahoma.

Editors Herald: I am now living in the northwestern part of Oklahoma, Beaver County. This country is settled up with well-to-do farmers. Some one lives on nearly every one hundred and sixty acres. We have a fine climate, soft water, good roads, schools, and good society. This year the corn crop was hurt by dry weather, followed by hail in August, but the wheat, Kaffir-corn, milomaize, and broom-corn did fairly well.

The price of good farm land here is increasing very fast. One of my neighbors paid twenty-three hundred dollars for one hundred and sixty acres deeded this summer and was offered twenty-eight hundred dollars cash in five months after he bought the land, and still he refused to sell it. Homesteads, not proved up on yet, sell at from fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars per quarter section. The State school land is leased at a very low rental.

We have a very nice branch of our church located at Elmwood, just south of the center of this county. Most of its members were baptized by Bro. James Baker, one of our pioneer elders of Oklahoma.

Our county now occupies the eastern third of what a few years ago was known as "no man's land," which was a strip of country thirty-five miles wide by one hundred and sixty-eight miles long, lying north of Mexico (later the state of Texas) and south of Kansas. It had no organized government for a number of years and outlaws and thieves of most all kinds made it their home. Later the Government had it surveyed and joined it to the Indian Territory. Then squatters came in to live on the land and some say the cowboys drove them off and pulled up the survey stakes so they could not find the corners. Later the territory of Oklahoma was formed in the western portion of the Indian Territory, and there was a great and grand revival. Everybody was after land. The Government had this country resurveyed and joined to old Oklahoma for judicial purposes. Then the squatters and farmers came back to Beaver County and settled on the land. The cattle men and cowboys made it pretty hot for them for a few years, letting their cattle eat up their crops, and the farmers, to get even, would drive their cattle down into Texas. Finally the "beef trust" in Kansas City was formed and the price of cattle went down, so there was but little money in the cattle business, and this country was opened to homesteading. The laws were strictly enforced and everybody became farmers on homesteads.

The history of "no man's land" reads almost like the journeying to the promised land of Canaan. When Moses sent spies to examine the land some came back bringing large bunches of grapes, etc., showing it to be a good country and flowing with milk and honey. Others of the spies reported that there were difficulties, "giants in the land" by the side of whom "we were in our own sight as grasshoppers." This is also like the answer a great many sinners will give you when asked if they don't want to go to heaven? They say there are too many difficulties in the way, thieves, bank robbers, hypocrites, prairie fires, cowboys, and Indians. There are giants there and we are but grasshoppers. They will tell you they once heard a minister actually preach that all who will not believe the gospel as he preached that it meant, will go to the hot place and there he will "burn for ever and ever." Then Sinner Jim hears another minister preach to him that according to the way he understands the gospel, "God is love," and sent his Son into the world to show us how to live. The sinner says, "What shall I do to be saved?" The minister tells him "Just trust in the Lord Jesus Christ." The sinner joins the man-made church and becomes "a squatter," never having first gone before a proper officer of the Government and becoming a lawful citizen.

Then he hears another minister explain what he thinks to be "the gospel." He tells him that it is all right to have faith and to put your trust in God and his Son, but that you must also repent of what is sinful and be baptized. Then Sinner Jim says, "I see there are giants in the way." My sinner friends will laugh and make sport of me when I quit my sinful habits and ask to be baptized, but I feel it my duty if I ever expect to reach the promised land. Now he moves from his former location and takes another squatter's right with the new faith.

In a few days Squatter Jim gets to talking with a homesteader and the homesteader asks to see his homestead papers, and the squatter tells him he never so much as heard that they should have papers of authority from the Government. Then the homesteader tells him that squatters have no rights at all to the homes until they go before the proper officer of the United States land office and take the oath of allegiance, renouncing all other governments and making oath to obey the laws of this Government. After doing this he must show his good faith by paying to the United States fourteen dollars as earnest money as evidence that he will live on the land continuously and improve it. Then the officer signs his homestead papers and delivers them to him. This tells him what he must do to be saved. Our friend now becomes a citizen, takes a homestead in the promised land, and begins his "continuous residence," making "improvements" and cultivating the "grapes," etc. He is now "working in the Lord's vineyard," and feels sure of his reward. Honest Jim in a few days gets to thinking over his Government papers and their requirements and wonders if he was "properly baptized" by a servant of God's kingdom or whether he was only a "squatter" doing as others told him.

About this time he went to hear a man who preached about the "everlasting gospel" being restored to earth "to every nation, kindred, and tongue." "That sounds like authority to me," says Jim, and he followed his quotations and found that he proved all he said by the Bible. Not long after this he joined the true church and is known as Sunny Jim."

CHERRYVALE, Kansas, October 17, 1908.

Editors Herald: As I have never seen any letters in the HERALD from this part of Kansas I will try to write one. I do not take the HERALD myself, but my mother, Mrs. Annie Asmussen does, and I get them from her; also the Ensign.

I joined the church when I was just a little girl, at Oak Ridge, Missouri; but as we moved away and I have not had any Saints of my age to associate with, I have done a great many things that I know were not right. But I am trying to live right now and I want all the Saints to pray for me; also for my dear husband, that he may become a Latter Day Saint. I do not think he is far off. I would like for an elder to visit this part of the country. I have not heard a Latter Day Saint elder preach for five years or more; but I know this is the true church of God and I would like to be baptized again and live a true Christian life. I ask an interest in all your prayers.

GOOSE CREEK, West Virginia, October 1, 1908.

Editors Herald: On September 4 I left Toledo, Ohio, by way of Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad for the above-named place, crossing the state of Ohio. It has the appearance of a good farming district. The buildings, the appearance of the farms in general were good. There looked to be considerable wealth among the farmers, until we reached the southwestern part of the State, which was very rough, quite mountainous and broken, not much farming being done. Coal in paying quantities had been found, for there were several mines along the railroad. The road, which was quite crooked, kept along the valleys. After an all day ride, came to the Ohio River, crossing it at dusk into Wheeling, West Virginia. My first trip into that State. Bro. Tary, president of the Wheeling Branch, met me at the depot. We had never met before; but we were not long in getting acquainted. We took the street-car and soon were at his home, being made welcome by Sr. Tary and daughter. We had supper and were soon on our way to the prayer-meeting, reaching the church a few minutes before the time of service, where we met with the Saints, who, though few in number, seemed to be strong in the gospel.

The church is built of wood, and is of modern pattern, and the Saints deserve credit for the work accomplished by them. They are not what you would call wealthy, but most of them are comfortably situated. To the right of the main auditorium is a pair of rolling doors that separate the Sunday-school and prayer-service from the main, which can be opened in the time of a crowded house, and other apartments which add greatly to the convenience of the building. The building is on a street-corner in a very pleasant part of the city.

It being the regular prayer-service, the writer was invited to address the Saints. I felt it a pleasure and a privilege to stand in a house built for the people of the Lord to worship in; and the Saints felt comforted in the words spoken.

On Thursday morning we started for a house to house visit, with the branch president, and made about seven calls. It was a day profitably spent. In the evening we spent a few hours with a family who had not obeyed the gospel as yet; but were favorable. Before leaving we were asked to bless their babe, which we did, the Spirit of the Master being present. So we returned home feeling somewhat wearied in body; but satisfied with our day's work.

Friday, took train at seven o'clock for Parkersburg. After a ride of three hours along the Ohio River, we waited at Parkersburg until twenty minutes of four in the afternoon. The river was very shallow. At many places a person could wade across and not get over their shoe tops. It is claimed by some that it is lower now than for the past forty years. Boats and barges were strewn all along its bed, with no water near them. At Wheeling, or near it, water was selling at eight cents a gallon. The pastures along the way were dried up and parched.

While waiting, incoming trains brought some bound for the conference. The minister in charge, G. T. Griffiths, was among the number. At the set time the train pulled out for Cornwallis, a distance of thirty-three miles. The road was very crooked, following along a stream in order to save expense of construction; for, as it was, we passed through nine tunnels, from one eighth to seven eighths of a mile in length, as I was informed.

When we arrived at Cornwallis, a number of the brethren met us with hacks, as they are called in this part, to convey us a distance of four miles to Goose Creek. Bro. Griffiths and the writer were domiciled at Bro. B. Beall's.

At half past seven in the evening Bro. Griffiths was the speaker, the writer assisting. Saturday morning, the 26th, conference convened at ten o'clock, the thirty minutes before ten being spent in earnest prayer and song to Him who rules divine.

Bro. Griffiths was appointed to preside, with Bro. Biggs to assist, and F. L. Shinn, secretary. The bulk of the business was done at the afternoon session, which passed off quietly, several questions of interest being considered and acted upon. Bro. Craig was the speaker in the evening. Sunday morning, Saints met at half past nine for prayer and testimony, and a profitable time was had. It seemed that the time was too short, and at a quarter of eleven the Saints seemed loath to give way for preaching.

Bro. Griffiths was the speaker. He dealt with the life, trials, and experiences of the Saints. It was a comfort to all, and had the effect of relieving long-standing difficulties and anxieties that were in the hearts and minds of many a Saint. It was a spiritual feast to the weary traveler in life's warfare.

At two o'clock Bro. Shinn was the speaker, handling the subject of the apostasy in a workmanlike manner.

The writer was the speaker at the evening service, calling attention to the commission of the Master, and doing what he could in the interest of the salvation of men. A conference will be held a year hence at Cabin Run.

On Monday, the Saints returned home, feeling satisfied that the time had been well spent, and they had been amply paid for the effort. Bro. Griffiths stayed till Tuesday, preaching Monday evening, and going to Wheeling the next morning. The writer remained all the week, holding services each night, with attentive congregations, and enjoying good liberty in presenting the gospel.

The church belongs to the Saints. It is a wooden structure, built of hewn chestnut logs, twenty-four by thirty feet, thirteen feet high, plastered between the logs, windows of four lights on each side, ceiled inside, walls tastily papered with a pale green, and ceiling and window-casings painted to match. The seats were made of poplar lumber, with backs reclining sufficiently to make them real comfortable. The building is clear of debt, and is a desirable place in which to worship.

My next move is to Harrisville, West Virginia, Route 1, care of Calvin Wilson.

In gospel bonds,
SAMUEL BROWN.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, October 8, 1908.

Dear Herald: We welcome you in our house, your pages bring great comfort to us, as does also the Zion's Ensign. It is true we live where we have got a large branch of Saints; but we enjoy hearing from others. I have just read Sr. Elva Fitzwater's letter. She said she did not get to hear much preaching on account of being isolated. She is a stranger to me in one way; but I feel in my heart she is a sister. I am sorry for her, and will remember her and all who are in her condition, and hold them up before our Father in heaven, that he may be merciful to them and open up the way for them to come to Zion; for this is the place for the pure in heart to enjoy themselves. If we do have all church privileges, we are not selfish. We want all the Saints to gather in and help us redeem Zion, and prepare for the coming of our Lord and Savior; for he will have a tried people to stand his coming. We have been members of the church nearly seventeen years; and we have been here three years, November 8, and we have had more pleasure and contentment of mind here than we had in the other fourteen years. We are well satisfied here. Of course we have had a little drought; but that is all right. We must have something to get the outsiders out of here and give room for the Saints to move in. It has not been all sunshine for us since we have been here either. Old Satan is not bound yet. But we need these clouds that we may enjoy the sunshine. We give God the praise for our being here.

We have seven children. Four died while infants. Two girls in the church, one twelve and the other nine; a boy three years old. I am thankful to God that we are where we can bring our children up in the gospel by keeping them in Sunday-school and Religio.

We left behind us a small branch of Saints, and some good friends who do not belong at all. We came from Southeastern Illinois, Hamilton County. Let us pray for our friends, that they may see the light.

Your brother and sister,
MATTHEW DAVIS AND WIFE.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, October 8, 1908.

Editors Herald: The season for our open-air preaching in the public park, in this city, is now passed. We have had a most excellent opportunity to preach to a great number of people during the past summer. I think I have preached to more people outside of our faith this year than any previous year of my ministry. As a union service of ten churches followed the services which I held, I had opportunity to reach many people that otherwise would be impossible—many of them would come about half an hour before time for my meeting to close. I always had the most respectful attention; not the least disorder was ever noticed.

Brn. Haynes, Schmidt, Topping, and Webbe rendered valuable assistance in the meetings. Bro. McNeil assisted along musical lines with credit to himself. Bro. Fred Oven-den and Sr. LaRue presided at the organ. Bro. Robert Miller and Brn. J. J. Phare and H. H. Kozman helped the people to find seats, passed them the hymn sheets, and lent their influence for good.

We had one thousand pamphlets printed, giving a brief explanation of the faith, also explaining our identity as a church, and giving some practical points concerning the local branch. These were given out freely at the close of the services. Bro. Webbe made a large sign and tacked it up on the front of the church, announcing the park service every Sunday at half past two in the afternoon. A number of handbills were printed and distributed through the streets. We supplied Bro. Sheldon at the Temple in Kirtland with a number of our local tracts to give to people who visited there from this city. Mr. John D. Nutting, secretary of the Utah Gospel Mission of this city, has engaged with him a number of prominent citizens and professional men in his work of opposition to all classes of Latter Day Saints. I obtained their addresses, and have mailed them copies of our local tract, and written personal letters to them concerning our faith as a church.

Through the alertness of Bro. J. J. Phare I learned that one, Professor Elroy Avery, of this city, is engaged in writing a history of the United States, to be complete in sixteen volumes. Four volumes are already printed and surpass in every way anything of the kind that I have investigated. We called upon this gentleman and gave him some brief information concerning the church, called his attention to misrepresentations so frequently made by historians in what they have said of it, and put him in touch with our general Church Historian.

We have visited among the Saints and friends here and have enjoyed their hospitality and association. Our audiences at regular services at the church have been small, in some instances, owing to disadvantages. We have enjoyed preaching to them, however, and have been given earnest attention. What will be the result of the work done? What shall the harvest reward? Sowing gospel seed is like sowing any kind of seed, we know not what it may bring forth. On Sunday, September 20, with a party we went to Kirtland, where I baptized Bro. C. B. Keck, who for a long time has been actively connected with Religio work, also Bro. and Sr. W. E. McKindsey, who are recent converts to the faith. These are progressive young people, and we are glad they have taken up their cross, and hope they will prove valiant soldiers.

On October 4, we spent the day with the Saints at Akron, preaching twice, and counseling with the officers in priesthood meeting. I enjoyed the occasion very much. I was surprised and pleased while there to meet Elder and Sr. Alma Whitehouse, formerly of Kewanee, Illinois. It is always a pleasure to meet old friends.

Bishop J. A. Becker and District President J. F. Ebeling paid us a visit on last Sunday. Bro. Becker, by his earnestness, is fast qualifying himself for his important duties. His teaching is impressive, and the Saints and friends should rally to his support, and strengthen his efforts, by cheerfully complying with the law of tithes and offerings. Bro. Ebeling is recuperating from his physical disability, and soon will be ready again for the missionary fray. He is acting in a local capacity at present, and at the meeting of the priesthood and the preaching-service he rendered service which was duly appreciated.

I note that I have just completed eight years in exclusive ministerial labor. My thoughts often revert to the past, and I think of the dear Saints and friends with whom I have labored in Eastern Iowa, Illinois, Philadelphia, Maine, and the Eastern States. My appreciation for the unspeakable and sublime truths of the everlasting gospel increases with the passing years, and I still retain my hold upon eternal life, and am trying to fight the good fight of faith.

LYDNEY, England, September 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am glad that I am connected with this latter-day work, because it is true in every sense. When we compare it with the new and old theologies, it survives and surpasses all man-made theories and institutions.

While old theologians believe in a God without body or parts, the newest theology claims to set up a theory called "Divine Immanence (good) or God in man." As to any declaration of what God is, they seem to get lost in setting one up. In fact they see grandeur in not defining anything. Their creed is an adjustable one, and must come in harmony with their human reasoning to be true. Their idea of God is no wiser than the declarations contained in a number of creeds, already found wanting.

They are slow to declare a set of principles, because probably the same material reason that they level at the Bible may in turn be raised against their philosophy. The Christian commonwealth has stated that the many statements declared to be of God to men are simply man's best, the divine in the human. That divinity of the human forgets itself. Then in Bible times that divinity declared that God leveled himself by various means to mankind and that he was a God of miracles. The divinity that now speaks through these new theologians says, "That was very well for them back there as an allegory. But for us; oh, not now in the light of modern science and research. Why, before our human reason such claims for God revealing himself to man is preposterous." Before this ever-shifting commodity "God in man" the miracles of Christ and the prophets hide themselves for shame as a tale that has been told. Thus we discover that this new theology says it is absurd to think of God communing with man; as for the story of angels, it is a fancy. Dreams or visions might only be the result of an overfed stomach, a disordered brain or mind.

Newest theology, child of the school called "the higher critics," who, by the way are talking of writing their views on religion and morals, the achievements of their materialistic brains.

We shall not wonder; no, nor stagger with this strong drink, because it may be done that future generations shall read with reverence the result of their genius and bless their names as hard-headed, scientific, secularistic, materialistic prophets, who have died without honor.

I was going to write a letter. The British Isles Mission conference is passed. It is to be hoped that it will live as an impetus in our minds, so that we shall have courage to meet Anti-mormon leagues at Llansamlet and Sawnsea; and men of the Christian Brethren at Cardiff, who have waxed bold and loud with the burning warning that our doctrine of works was from the lowest hell. On we must go, taking courage in our hands, declaring anew that God lives, and that he is not yet so decrepit that he can not commune with his creatures; even by his own voice, if he desires, or by angels, dreams, and visions. The idea that he will not or can not is too puny to compare with his ability and greatness. His kind, fatherly purpose is to cause man, by obedience, to feel the touches of his divine love by his revelation. If it were otherwise, he could not be that heavenly Father, who has created man in his image. It bespeaks his purpose, when he made and organized our spirit bodies in his likeness, that we should know and feel that there is one above all others who is mindful of us. We are glad to have Bro. William Lewis with us, with his wise counsel, and Rees Jenkins' earnestness and zeal to assist us in the work in Wales. Let all the Saints in union join to cooperate that the world shall hear and know the glad message. We read and hear of past heroes and feel inspired to do some noble deed of daring. Let us, brethren and sisters, try to discover where and how—right now—we can show our heroism in the right.

It may not be at the gibbet, or the stake. The heroism just now is to hold on to the rod of iron, when the love of many may wax cold; to be kind and live each for all, or all for each, being faithful in season, when all goes well, as well as out of season; that is, when things are trying.

Let us not miss the opportunity of being heroes in whatsoever God requires of us. The work has been low at Lydney, where we have a nice church, but the burden has been great, and is upon the few.

Sr. Jones of Aylburton Common, near here, is a faithful sister in what she can do, and at present desires the prayers of the Saints, that our heavenly Father may restore her to the use of her limbs, which has been lost a couple of months through spinal trouble. I read in Bro. David Lewis' letter of Llansamlet, of recent date, words to the effect that God had blessed the Welsh people with the gifts of the gospel more than any other nation. I am not going to quarrel with Bro. Lewis about it. May be that it is true in a measure; and, although a Welshman without the vernacular, I would suggest that we may have tongues, another may have prophecy, another wisdom, another knowledge, another miracles. Yet we should not make any discrimination, because it leads to boasting, which we are warned against. Jew or Gentile, bond or free, Scotch or Irish, German or Dutch, English or Welsh, we should all feel that love which knows no dissimulation. We are all one in Christ Jesus.

Your brother in the truth,

THOMAS JONES.

WILLAPA, Washington, October 10, 1908.

Editors Herald: Bro. Thorburn and I were requested to come to this place to unite a couple in the bonds of matrimony. We complied, and upon our arrival, I interviewed the trustees of the Methodist church, for the privilege of holding services. It was granted after some preliminary remarks. It is the first time any preaching has been done at this point, except two sermons I preached a year ago. From the beginning we had excellent attention and attendance, which rather surprised the preachers, owing to reports, and also was a surprise to the trustees of the church. Several expressed themselves as very much interested, and would investigate further. One man, who never heard the gospel before, ordered a Book of Mormon, which I feel will, in due time, be productive of good.

It is a delight to present the truth when it finds willing minds to accept it. My ambition is to promote this latter-day glory, and I hope that by a strict compliance with every injunction of the Master to be able to sow the seed judiciously.

Bro. Thorburn and I have labored together all summer, and I have surely enjoyed his association, and have profited by it. He is a man of God, and I am fully persuaded if he is returned to this field another year it will meet with much approval. May the Lord bless his people everywhere, is the prayer of Editors Herald: I feel that many that know me would be glad to know that my health is better than for twenty years. I am able to do a good day's work now, for my age. The pain in my limbs is nearly all gone, and the roaring in my head is gone, except at times. My recollection is coming back; and, in fine, I feel like a new man and in a different country. And all I can say is, since I came here I have put away all medical treatment, and have trusted in God. My patriarchal blessing tells me that God is well pleased with me, and that is what I want most of all. My hearing is some better.

"REVIEW OF SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS IN 1899.

"Geology and Exploration.

"An extensive investigation of the Atlantic coast and lake regions of Canada and the United States has been carried on for many years, and conduces to the most astounding, if not alarming, results.

"The question of any progressive change in the level of our Atlantic coast and of the Great Lakes on our northern frontier, is not only of great scientific interest, but also of great practical and national importance, for any change in the rise and fall of the water in these regions may have a profound effect on the value of property in their vicinity and on national boundaries.

"It is now pretty clearly shown that the earth movements which characterized the closing epochs of the pleistocene period extend to the Great Lakes and are still going on. This slow but continuous movement of the lake basin is destined eventually to turn the waters of the Great Lakes through the Illinois River into the Mississippi, resulting in the entire or partial flooding of the lower portion of the valley of that great river.

"Another great movement is going on on the Atlantic coast and the shores of Hudson Bay. South of Connecticut the land is subsiding at the rate of about two feet in one hundred years, while the land around Hudson and James' Bays has actually risen seven feet during the present century. Bays and inlets in which the Hudson Bay Company's ships formerly wintered, over a century ago, will now scarcely float a rowboat, and rivers whose mouths were formerly navigable for ships for several miles are now no longer so, but enter the bay by rapid or fall. Ancient beaches are easily seen on the eastern shore of Hudson Bay from fifty to seventy feet above the present high-water mark.

"All of these facts, pointing in a common direction, warrant the hypothesis that the tilting of the lake region, which was going on at the close of the glacial period, as shown by the slopes of all shore lines, is still in progress. Observations show that in the case of Lake Superior there is a gradual rise of water at the west end and a falling at the east end, or, in other words, the west end is sinking and the east rising. The mean rate of change derived from a long series of observations is forty-two hundredths feet in a hundred miles per century. It would appear then that the whole lake region is being lifted at one side and depressed on the opposite, so that its plane is bodily canted towards the southwest. Certain general consequences must necessarily flow from this movement, independently of any irregularities that may be due to excessive rainfalls, or evaporation. Thus, it is found that on Lake Ontario the water is advancing on all shores; the same is true of Lake Erie, the most rapid change being at Sandusky and Toledo, Ohio. Around Lake Huron, the water is falling more rapidly in the north and northeast than in the south and southwest. At Lake Superior the water is advancing on the United States shore and receding on the Canadian, and a similar movement exists in Lake Michigan, the water of which is falling in the north and rising in the south at Chicago at the rate of nine or ten inches in one hundred years. At the present rate, the discharge of the water of the lakes through the Illinois River into the Mississippi may begin and flow on uninterrupted in about eight hundred years, and in about eighteen hundred or two thousand years the Illinois and Niagara Rivers will carry about equal volumes of water. Chicago is, therefore, a doomed city; it stands on a sinking plain, which is now only a few feet above the level of Lake Michigan. A similar fate awaits Manhattan and Long Islands, the greater part of New Jersey, Delaware, and portions of Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas. This populous region, at present the center of life, energy, and activity, is destined to be ultimately submerged beneath the Atlantic. This gradual subsidence of the Atlantic coast is probably due to a fault which is known to extend from New England to the Carolinas, and it was along this fault that the Charleston earthquake of 1886 was chiefly felt."—The World Almanac and Encyclopedia, 1900.

Extracts from Letters.

Fred Cousins, Centerville, Iowa: "There seems to be a black cloud over the branch here just now; but my desire and prayer is that God will cause that the cloud may be removed, and that the work may grow, and that the Saints may strive to so let their light shine that we may be accepted before our heavenly Father, that the work may grow. The writer and Bro. Bowden have a chance to preach at a small church on the outskirts of town, which we gladly accepted, and are striving to the best of our ability to tell the people the gospel of Christ. I ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be able to do the duty that devolves upon us in presenting the gospel. I am pleased to say that our able Bro. Stebbins is with us this week, and I expect that he is going to stay a week or two. My desire is as great as ever for the cause."

News From Branches

FREMONT DISTRICT, IOWA.

As so little is heard from this famous corn belt section, Southwestern Iowa, we thought a few items would prove interesting. This district numbers somewhere between seven and eight hundred members, being divided into eight branches; also have eight Sunday-schools and three local Religios. It is the old stamping-ground of so many well known to the church. Among those who have labored here, and whose work is still in kind remembrance, are Brn. Henry Kemp, M. H. Forscutt, I. M. Smith, J. F. Mintun, Charles Fry, A. Madison, M. M. Turpen, J. M. Stubbart, D. R. Chambers, J. B. Lentz, and others.

Our fall conference held at Thurman, October 10 and 11, is now a matter of history; but it will linger long in the memory of those that were permitted to be in attendance, as we had one of the best all round conferences it has been my privilege to attend. The meetings were all characterized by that peaceable spirit that brings comfort and joy to the soul. We had the pleasure of having with us one of the ministers in charge, Apostle W. H. Kelley, also Bishop G. H. Hilliard. Of the seventy, Eli Hayer, W. E. Haden, and the writer. The preaching was enjoyed by all. The Sunday-school and Religio conventions were also well attended, Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hougas giving their usual cheerful help.

Especially ought we to mention the local talent of Thurman Branch, who were of such material assistance in making our convention program a success. Amongst them were Sr. Lorena and Sadie Leeka, Srs. L. Gaylord, E. Duncan, N. Leeka, Mabel and Eva Redfield, also Bro. C. N. Forney and Jay Leeka, and last, but not least, our energetic Sunday-school and Religio worker, Sr. Mamie Pace. Unity and good will were felt by all, with a corresponding desire in the work intrusted to us all.

Brn. Hayer and Haden left on Monday for Malvern to open up the work there, while the writer came to Dawsonburg Schoolhouse, where he is holding forth.

I believe a much better feeling is prevailing among our members in general in both the branches and schools.

The district sustained a great loss in the removal by death of our esteemed and worthy bishop, Bro. William Leeka; but his place has been filled by a recommendation of his daughter Lorena to be Bishop's agent, which I feel sure will prove a move in the right direction. We all, I feel sure, are hopeful that that work will prosper and grow. May we all be helpers in the great work of the Lord.

Trusting that our heavenly Father will give us all sufficient grace to complete the work assigned, in love to God, and for the betterment of mankind,

Yours in bonds,

THURMAN, Iowa, October 15.

JOSEPH ARBER.

FIRST KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

The effort of many of our members continues to push the beautiful restored gospel into the dark places in our vicinity, with marked success, and meetings are held at a number of private houses, the homes of those who are not members of the church, and many seem to receive it gladly.

Our presiding elder preaches every Sunday, except when he invites such as in his wisdom can fill the position well. On last Sunday Elder Fred M. Smith made an effort that was very much appreciated, and aroused an excellent interest. His subject was: If we apply the gospel to our lives, we will be free; but if we commit sin, then are we in bondage, worse than the slavery of servitude.

Our gospel clears up our mind; it gives us a keener foresight and better judgment, and brings to us, as Peter said, "joy unspeakable and full of glory," which is the divine love that takes possession of us. Then we will realize what the poet said:

"If I knew you and you knew me—
If both of us could clearly see,
And with an inner sight divine
The meaning of your heart and mine,
I'm sure that we would differ less,
And clasp our hands in friendliness;
Our thoughts would pleasantly agree,
If I knew you and you knew me."—Anon.

We have made some very much needed improvements in our new church, a baptismal font, and the Spirit's manifestation is that we will have extensive use of it.

We just closed a week's meeting at the house of Bro. John Creveston, a most excellent spirit prevailed.

Our Sunday-school is prosperous in more ways than one. The Christmas Offering has already reached one hundred and twenty dollars. How is that for an attendance of seventy members? Our Religio also is very prosperous.

Christian people should cultivate the habit of giving a candid and sympathetic hearing to what is said in the pulpit. Such a course would make the preaching better and greatly encourage and strengthen the preacher. He will take greater care in the preparation and delivery of his sermons and make them more worthy of attention if he knows in advance that he is to have an attentive audience that will give careful attention to what he says.—Our Young Folks.

Provision was made for the printing of credential report blanks to be used hereafter in the stake by the Sunday-schools and Religio

Pastoral.

APROPOS THE BRITISH ISLES MISSION.

The following is submitted with a view of giving an authoritative description of the present status of the work in the British Isles Mission, and also to officially describe the organization and method of working which obtains regarding the labor and opportunities which are in evidence over in this land. We trust that in so doing the members and ministry will please take notice so that there may not be any misunderstanding or complications which will cause confusion and disappointment in the work in this mission.

The mission is composed of what is geographically known as Great Britain and Ireland, comprising the countries of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales.

At the present we are operating regarding church work in all of these countries except Ireland. The church work is at present represented as follows:

There are six properly organized districts as follows:

Manchester District, comprising the following branches: six in Manchester and Salford; one each in the towns of Warrington, Wigan, Farnworth, and Stockport. The president is Henry Greenwood, high priest; secretaries, W. Worth and H. Preston; Bishop's agent, J. W. Rushton (acting).

Birmingham District: two branches in Birmingham; one each in Leicester and Stafford. William Ecclestone is president; J. E. Meredith is the Bishop's agent.

London District: one branch each in London and Enfield. President, J. W. Worth; secretary, D. Judd; and Bishop's agent, R. Clift.

Sheffield District: one branch each in Sheffield, Clay Cross, and Sutton. President, John Austin; secretary, G. Gaydon; and Bishop's agent, John Austin.

Eastern Wales: one branch each in Cardiff, Lydney, and Nantyglo. President, Thomas Gould; secretary, B. Green; Bishop's agent, Thomas Gould.

Western Wales: one branch each in Llanelly, Llansamlet, Pontyeates, Penygraig, and Aberaman. President, D. Lewis (Dewi Chwefror); secretary, T. Picton; Bishop's agent, H. Ellis.

We have isolated branches not included in any district as follows: Two in Leeds, one each in Plymouth, Exeter, and Hamilton, Scotland.

Many years ago it was found to be desirable that the mission be organized with a view of consolidating the work and bringing the various congregations into communion with each other, and also for the purpose of more effectually applying and distributing the labor, as well as being thereby able also to officially give the mission a standing. The organization thus effected included the various districts and branches of the mission; and, beyond all question, has in its results justified the effort.

In order that such organization could be effective, it was therefore necessary to have periodical conferences, in order to gather together the various officers and ministry, in order to legislate for the needs of the mission, and also to provide the means and outline methods which were in demand and which experience would prove adequate to the application of the forces at our disposal to the tasks of proselyting and shepherding. It has been also found that the annual gathering together of the ministry and Saints resulted in unanimity of effort and increasing of the interest of the ones concerned; and we may say that it is largely owing to the high tone of these various gatherings and the work done therein that the discipline and ability of the mission is due.

The by-laws provided that the president should be the general church appointee as minister in charge; the secretaries are W. R. Armstrong and J. W. Taylor. The finances of the mission, out of which the expenses for this local mission work are to be provided, are in the hands of Joseph Dewsnup, who in this particular line of work has proven both energetic and efficient.

It is noteworthy, with but so few exceptions they are not noticed, that the missionaries and local ministry have always shown the respect and conformity to these conferences and the expressed opinions of the mission as crystallized into the resolutions in a very gratifying manner. As a result of the success attending this attempt to organize the mission work, harmony has characterized the work done in the mission and the interests of the work have been conserved in a way that could not possibly have resulted without this local organization.

Any matter, personal, or affecting the mission as a whole or in part, may be referred to the various conferences and discussed with a view of having the conjoint opinion, and then the support of any scheme commending itself to the majority and so providing for concerted action. Such a method protects the mission from the arbitrary rule of individualism or autocratic officialism, besides creating an interest on the part of those who thereby are made to feel individual responsibility.

Owing very largely to the energetic and effective labors of our financial secretary, Joseph Dewsnup, the funds have been accumulated in the mission by which all expenses have not only been met, but a very large amount has been devoted to the publishing of tracts and literature which have been supplied to the missionaries gratis, and to many of the poorer branches, and also to assist in making conferences a success by judicious advertising.

By having these matters under the care and control of one man, who is held responsible to the mission conference for the receipt of funds and the disbursement of same, we thereby save overlapping and wastage which has occurred in the past. This also provides for any who have a desire to write a tract, to prepare the same and submit it either directly to the Presidency or through the mission president for the approval provided for in general church law; after which it will be printed in due course as occasion and means may demand and permit. Also the providing of halls and assisting in other ways we have, and hope to even more successfully provide for the advancement of the work.

It is therefore urged very strongly that all who are laboring in the mission either as general church appointees or locally will cooperate in this endeavor to perform the work before us according to the methods and through the properly appointed officers, and not either seek to defeat the object of the body as a whole by either working individually against the expressed will of the majority or by ignoring those who have been appointed to do official work on behalf of the mission.

We desire therefore that it be understood that individual appeals for money on behalf of the mission or any part of it, except approved of by the mission authorities and made through its appointed financial secretary, are disapproved of, and the mission will not be held responsible for money thus donated. We hope that if occasion arises for appeals for money to help in any special work in any part of the mission, those who think such case needs a public appeal for financial help will present the matter to the president of the mission, and then if thought advisable the appeal will be presented through the mission financial officer, and such sums contributed will be duly credited and accounted for by the secretary at the annual conference, together with the items of expenditure. Of course this is not to be taken as applying to any appeals for money for individual purposes, but it does apply to all appeals for financial help on behalf of the mission as a whole or in part.

We request also that those who think tracts are needed in their work will secure what they want through the mission financial secretary, and if there is not in his possession what is required, then we will try and secure the same as speedily as practical. We also do not approve of individuals spending money in printing tracts unless such tracts have been submitted to the before-named officers for approval, and by this means overlapping in subject and wastage will be saved. It has occurred that tracts have been applied for and thousands have been printed and then they have been wasted and lost to the mission. Now if the brethren will please conform to these instructions, and will cooperate with the responsible officers, this wastage can be prevented.

We shall also by this means be able to keep all the printed matter belonging to the mission in one place and then we shall have an annual account as to the amount produced and

Died.

ELLSWORTH.—Mary Ellen Ellsworth was born at Brockway, Michigan, May 9, 1861; died October 12, 1908. Funeral conducted by Elder W. M. Grice in the Saints' church at Crosswell, Michigan. Sr. Ellsworth accepted the gospel August 19, 1893, and lived and died a faithful Saint. While we deeply mourn our loss we feel she has entered the glory prepared for the pure and the good. She left a husband and four children to mourn, and as peace crowned her efforts, so may the loved ones live to enjoy it with her in the sweet by and by.

SMITH.—Gladys Juniata Smith was born in Keya Paha County, Nebraska, September 13, 1906, and died October 15, 1908. Funeral-services at home near Stewart, Holt County, Nebraska, by Levi Gamet.

JUDSON.—Lellia M. Allen was born November 1, 1856, in McHenry County, Illinois; was baptized September 1, 1872, at Lawrence, Michigan, by Henry C. Smith. Was united in marriage with Arthur Judson, June 1, 1876. Died October 6, 1908, at Lamon, Iowa. Funeral-services from home; discourse by Elder A. S. Cochran, assisted by Bro. Elijah Sparks. She leaves husband, four sons, two brothers, one sister, and many friends to continue here without her.

CARLISLE.—Elder James Cooper Carlisle, of New Philadelphia, Ohio, departed this life September 23, 1908. He was born in Farmrickshire, Scotland, October 18, 1849; was married to Miss Elizabeth Donaldson, December 24, 1872. Nine children were born to them, seven of whom are living. In 1889 he was baptized into the church, and on January 22, 1899, was ordained to the office of elder, and served as pastor of the branch a number of years. Beloved and respected by all, "honest Jamsie" has entered into rest. Funeral from Saints' church, conducted by Elder U. W. Greene.

Striking a Balance in Blessings.

In the good old days when religion was not so largely a matter of conduct as it is thought now, but was more in the nature of a contract with the Creator, it was the custom to reckon up one's blessings from time to time, and see how the balance stood. If you had, for instance, had your health for a long period, or had been very successful in business, or had harvested uncommonly heavy crops, or had an extraordinarily good apple year, or had escaped the malice of a freshet or a fire, or had worsted an enemy in a lawsuit, or had in any other wise come out on top in your affairs or experiences, it was proof not only that you had fulfilled the conditions of the agreement, but that the divine party of the second part had not forgotten them. Of course, you did not put it so crudely in acknowledging the facts, and if you had more truly imagined God than most men had then, or have yet imagined him, you did not enumerate the misfortunes of your neighbors as your blessings in disguise. You did not thank your Maker that while A had been laid up all winter with rheumatism you had escaped without a twinge; that while B had gone to pieces in the dry-goods line you had done so well in your grocery; that while C had cut no hay worth mentioning your mow was filled to bursting; that while D's want of foresight in dealing with caterpillars' nests the year before had left him without a pint of cider, your barrels overflowed. You did not intimate in your prayer or praise that the burning of E's house without a cent of insurance, while a high wind blew the flames away from yours, looked almost providential; or that the jury which found for you against F had seemed to follow a direct leading from on high. Yet, probably at the bottom of your heart some such shabby convictions were lurking, and if your thanksgiving refused them utterance, it was because you did not feel it quite seemly to mention them, and not because you did not harbor them. Or did very good people sometimes allow something like them to get into words? Was not it thought well to fortify one's faith by contrasting one's own good luck with the bad luck of others? Or at the least, was not it, or is not it still considered right to look about one in moments of rebellion or affliction, and see if one is not as well off as other people? —W. D. Howells, in Harper's Magazine for November.

Wonderful American Hen.

The cackles of the American hens are swelling into a mighty chorus. Sixteen billion times a year these small citizens announce the arrival of a "fresh laid," and the sound of their bragging is waxing loud in the land.

According to the last census, there are 233,598,005 chickens of laying age in the United States. These are valued at $70,000,000, and the eggs they lay would, if divided, allow two hundred and three eggs annually to every person,—man, woman, and child—in the United States. The value of all the fowls, $85,800,000, would entitle every person in the country to $1.12, if they were sold and the proceeds divided. All the weight of the animal products exported, the pork, beef, tallow, ham, bacon, and sausage, weigh 846,860 tons, while the weight of the eggs laid yearly tips the scales at 970,363 tons.—From "The American hen—her right to crow," November Technical World Magazine.

A series of articles on Lincoln's life and character—to include hitherto unpublished documents from his own pen and that of one of his secretaries, will be one of the strong features of the Century in 1909. Frederick Trevor Hill has written of "The Lincoln-Douglas debates," the fiftieth anniversary of which occurs this year; and there will be later papers on "Lincoln as a boy knew him," "Lincoln as a peace negotiator," "Lincoln and the theater," etc.

W. W. Denslow, illustrator of the famous "Wizard of Oz," "Father Goose," etc., has written and illustrated, largely in color, a series of merry verses to be called "When I grow up." This series will begin in the November St. Nicholas.

The Century, in the November issue, begins a group of articles appropriate to the Lincoln centenary year with Frederick Trevor Hill's "The Lincoln-Douglas debate fifty years after," a new account of this famous forensic "seven days' battle." Mr. Hill has preserved the local color of this unique episode in American history, weaving his story from material, much of it unfamiliar, based on the testimony of eye-witnesses and documentary evidence.

ZION; THE FOUNDATION OF HER STRENGTH.

In the opening verses of Isaiah 26 we read, "We have a strong city; salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks. Open ye the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in."

We are all interested in building up Zion and establishing a strong city—the city of God. To our mind the verse quoted reveals the things that will give any city its real strength, whether in Judah or in America.

In the olden times, when these words were written, the people trusted to the great stone walls of a city to give it strength. Yet in truth no city was strong then in which righteousness did not dwell and around which God did not erect walls of salvation.

If iniquity had its home in the city, the walls might be ninety feet thick and two hundred feet high, and the gates of brass, yet when God thundered against it it fell as surely as Babylon or Sodom or Gomorrah fell.

Stone walls were a defense; but only to a righteous city. And only a righteous city was a strong city.

To-day we do not trust in massive walls for the protection of our great cities. Their strength is supposed to lie in their power as commercial or manufacturing centers, their banks, stores, and trade on land and sea. Those things are supposed to defend Chicago, New York, London, Edinburgh, and Berlin, against other peoples. The city that can not so defend itself in the commercial world loses its sustenance, its treasure, and its inhabitants as surely as in the olden times those things were lost to the city whose walls were broken down.

In the days when Isaiah wrote, the city of God, like other cities, was defended with stone walls. It is probable that when the city of God is builded to-day it must defend itself in more modern ways, for a time at least, against other peoples in other cities. Its inhabitants must foster manufactures, and enter into commerce. Whether among themselves a form of competition shall persist, as some argue, or whether they learn to cooperate in all departments of all enterprises, they must be prepared to defend themselves against the world, to maintain their hold on the earth, and to be self-supporting. In this they should be eminently successful so that the city shall be filled with a well-fed, comfortably-housed, decently-clad people; a city where prosperity is diffused,—no cancer spots of luxury, no wasting plague areas of poverty. Otherwise her fate is foreshadowed in the fifth and sixth verses of the chapter referred to:

For he bringeth down them that dwell on high; the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust. The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

It must not be forgotten that just as righteousness was the true defense of the walled city of old, righteousness must be the true defense of the commercial city of to-day when it is subjected to the testing processes that God may send against it.

London, New York, San Francisco may be strong commercially and financially, but, if they are corrupt, when God moves against them they will fall like Pompeii. A little quiver of the ground, and the skyscrapers come toppling down to furnish a funeral pyre for the flames to feed upon.

In our efforts to build up Zion we may lay stress on the need of material development, as we are doing, but we must not forget that if we have a "strong city" it shall be because God has appointed salvation for its walls and bulwarks, and because a "righteous" people who "keep the truth" have entered in.

That idea must enter into the very commonest detail of our work. The man who makes a yard of cloth can not hold his place in Zion by virtue of his cunning processes of weaving in shoddy, but by his ability to make the best yard of cloth that is made anywhere. Some may hold their place in the world on their ability to lie; we must hold ours on our strict adherence to the truth.

Zion is the pure in heart. The first great step in the gathering is not the buying of a corner lot in Independence or some region round about, the selling of the old homestead, or the buying of a first-class through ticket to Zion. The first great step is to become one of the pure in heart. The matter of moving to the "center stake" or elsewhere will work out satisfactorily.

Those who gather to Zion must not think that their own individual prosperity is all that is at stake. They go as representatives of the whole church. What can they add to the strength of Zion is a pertinent question in each case. Though each had the wealth of Rockefeller, their combined wealth alone could not redeem Zion. The spirit that might prompt them to consecrate their all, be it much or little, will redeem Zion. The state of the heart is a primary question; the size of their fortune is secondary.

The hopes of thousands who can not yet gather rest on the conduct of those who do gather. How about our well-to-do brethren and sisters? Are they willing to come down to the level of living that can be maintained among all the population of Zion who are industrious and prudent? Have we the courage to insist that they shall do so, that both the spirit and the letter of the law shall be enforced without fear or favor? How about our poor men? Are they free from the spirit of greed, from the idea of spoiling some other man's estate?

One Jewish historian in giving an account of the gathering of his people at Jerusalem following the Babylonian captivity says that many of them who were well-to-do gathered there and built themselves fine homes, dressed extravagantly, fared sumptuously, and forgot all about their less fortunate brethren who could not come and build homes. They left their brethren in Babylon. They forgot their own high calling. They represented a race and they were not true to their mission. They did not build a strong city. It was not Zion to them and they could not make it Zion for others.

Our modern large cities are not fit places for human habitation. This is proved by the fact that they destroy their own inhabitants. They can not maintain their own vitality and reproduce their population from generation to generation. They must constantly drain the surrounding country. They are centers of art and culture, it is true, and one might expect that from them would go out a constant stream of strong, intelligent men to leaven the world. Yet the reverse is true. In every line of work they draw upon the country for genius and for strong men. They are the furnaces of the world in which men are burned up.

There are good men in every city who strive for civic and personal righteousness. Yet poverty and crime demoralize the poorer classes; luxury and dissipation emasculate the wealthy classes; while in the rush of business and pleasure the middle classes become indifferent and godless. Drinking, drug taking, gambling, and immorality undermine society. No wonder Cowley said that "God made the first garden and Cain the first city."

Yet many advantages result from the gathering together of men in cities,—such as social intercourse, schools, churches, lecture halls,—and it is the dream of man and the will of God that some day these advantages shall be enjoyed and those other awful defects be removed.

Such an ideal can never be realized independent of God. He must appoint salvation for the walls of that city. The effort that we make to help him in that work will determine our place in the final beautiful city of the new earth.

Men will not be worthy of the beautiful city who have not tried to build its counterpart here. They will not inhabit where there is no sorrow unless they have tried to comfort the sorrowing here. They will not live where there are no poor and no sick unless they have shared with the poor and cared for the sick here.

We can not at present hope to build as large a city or as wealthy a city as London or Paris. We can hope to excel them in only one particular, and that is in our knowledge of and obedience to the laws of God. If the people of the world ever come to Zion to learn of her it will be because Zion has something that the world has not. We will have solved the problem and our city will be a purveyor of life instead of a purveyor of death.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

JUST A FEW REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD TAKE THE "HERALD."

You should take the HERALD because it is the church paper. It belongs to you. The Herald Office, because of its recent loss by fire and for other reasons, is struggling under a burden. If you were one of ten men whose duty it was to carry a certain timber and fit it into a structure, would you stand back with four others and watch five men do all the lifting? No, you would jump in and help carry the heavy end. Very well, jump in and help the church paper.

You should take the HERALD because you need it and it needs you. It needs both your moral and your financial support. We want to feel that you are back of us.

You need the HERALD in order to keep posted regarding the progress of the work in all parts of the Lord's vineyard. You need to hear from the various branches, districts, mission fields, and from the various missionaries.

You need the HERALD because it will help you to keep your spirituality alive, and that of your family. It will help you to reach your neighbor.

You need the HERALD in order to keep in touch with the rest of the church. If you were a member of a regiment you would want to keep step and hold your place in the ranks. You would not wish to be a straggler. The enemy gets the straggler. Don't be a straggler in the army of the Lord. The Devil gets the straggler. Get in touch. Keep step.

ONE THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS WANTED.

The management of the HERALD are not satisfied with the number of names on the HERALD list as subscribers. We have barely six thousand subscribers from a church membership of nearly sixty thousand. We are confident that there are numbers of members of the church who would become subscribers for the HERALD if we had some way of reaching them, and we propose to make an earnest effort during the next two months to get many of the names on our list.

We have over six hundred branches, and where is the branch so small that it can not furnish one or two new names for the HERALD, while some of the large branches ought to furnish a dozen. Now our success depends on your desire and willingness to help do the work. If we are united success is certain. The Lord has said that if we are united no good thing would be denied us. Estimate if you can the good that will be accomplished if we can send the HERALD each week for the next year to one thousand additional homes. In order to make this undertaking doubly sure we will send from now until January 1, 1909, to all who send us one year's subscription during the month of November. Now, Saints, let us all become laborers together with God and help push the great work along. The yearly subscription price is one dollar and fifty cents. Make all remittances payable to the undersigned.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

Elder C. G. Lewis writes: "Please renew my subscription for the Journal of History. I would not be without it for five times its present cost."

We have about two hundred complete volumes of the Journal for the first year that can be had by those who desire them at one dollar and fifty cents for the volume. The second volume will begin with the number to be sent next month. Much valuable matter will appear in this magazine that will not be published elsewhere, and all who can should not fail to subscribe for it. The regular subscription is one dollar and fifty cents per year and should be sent to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Religio Paragraph is published in the interest of the Independence local Religio society. It is to appear semiannually; editors W. A. Bushnell and Edna L. Donaldson. We notice in the first number a plea for a men's league in each branch. We understand that Independence has an active men's league that is doing good work.

The Scientific American for October 24 states that the chemists of the United States Department of Agriculture have at last solved the problem of making paper from cornstalks. When the manufacture of paper from an annual crop becomes practicable a great drain will be taken from the forests of our country and a new source of revenue will be opened to the farmers.

The results of the presidential election, at this writing a matter of conjecture, will soon be known. Whoever is selected as president by a majority of the people should then be recognized and honored as our chief official by all the people. He should no longer be subjected to bitter partisan criticism and disrespect. Before election he may stand for a party; after his inauguration he is the president of all the people.

Notice the offer to new subscribers in this number of the HERALD. Are you a subscriber? If not, will you subscribe now? You should take the HERALD as a matter of business; you get more than your money's worth.

A speaker can talk about as long as he pleases, if he keeps on saying things; but there is a great difference between saying things and repeating those already said.—The Lookout.

An engine that expends all its steam in whistling has nothing left with which to turn the wheels. What we save in noise we gain in power.—Charles Wagner.

An inquiring friend sent an inquiry to Bob Burdette, erstwhile an editor of a daily paper and a humorist of national reputation, but now a popular and successful minister in Los Angeles, asking the question: "Can Christians dance?" The following was the unique and most sensible answer: "Of course a Christian can dance. He might swear and lie, too, but it would not make him a better Christian. Surely, Christian, you may dance, but dancing will never identify you as a Christian. What puzzles us is that you ask the question so often. Christians who don't dance never ask it. Yes, Christian, dance, if you can't live without it. Join hands with Salome, Herodias, and Herod, and circle to the left. But don't be surprised if you are mistaken for a goat. That is the side they are on. And you are liable to be overlooked by any one hunting the Lord's sheep."—Our Young Folks.

Bro. W. C. Carl, contractor and builder, sends us an account of a novel and successful experiment in building carried out under his supervision at East Lansdown, Illinois. With a force of seventy-five laborers at his command he constructed a complete, up to date, two-thousand-dollar residence in one day. Work began at seven o'clock in the morning and at seven o'clock at night the house was finished outside and inside, and water and gas were installed.

Bro. Carl was assisted by Brn. G. F. Barraclough, W. F. Carl, and James Poort. The last named brother, with his young bride, ate supper in their new home and entertained a few friends.

The St. Louis Post Dispatch devotes a page to an account of the affair, illustrated with sixteen pictures.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The attendance at Sunday-school Sunday was four hundred and thirty-one. The average attendance for the month has been four hundred and nineteen.

At the Wednesday night prayer-services the young people seem to have the lead, at least in point of numbers. The close conjunction of these services sometimes stirs the mind to a peculiar train of thought. In the upper auditorium is youth and animation, hope, bouyancy, inexperience. How many defeats and heartbreaks, how many victories and rejoicings await the individual members of that assembly. Down-stairs are those, numbers of whom are in the declining years of life. They are bowed with cares and the weight of years. They do not challenge the future as eagerly as do those in the upper room. Their hope is to finish the conflict without faltering, to obtain their honorable release, and go home to a well earned rest. Yet young and old, those in the lower room and those in the upper room are one in faith and they serve one God who understands the needs of every station and every period in life.

For several weeks now the adherents of the various political parties have been assuring the people that the prosperity of the country depends upon the election of their particular candidates. At times they have forgotten true courtesy and have indulged in mutual recrimination. The society of Patronesses believes in making every political party advance the prosperity of Graceland. So they have arranged to serve a splendid election day dinner that ought to make the most radical partisan change the tenor of his conversation. This event, at this writing in the future, will be in the past when these items appear. Success to their enterprise.

There was a very large attendance at the sacrament service Sunday and every moment was occupied apparently profitably. The Saints were warned that the forces of evil were alert in Lamoni and that they would make a special effort to subvert men of influence in the church.

I am sure that in all our worldly troubles the only secret of endurance is to keep our minds set on the things beyond this world. It is like walking on a narrow beam high up in the air. If we look down we are lost; but we can walk steadily as long as we look upward.

The Straight Road

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

ELDER V. M. GOODRICH.

"Who will not exchange his shallow cup for Christ's well of living water?"

THE LAYING ON OF HANDS, AS A GOSPEL PRINCIPLE, ITS SIGNIFICANCE, AND WHAT IT IS FOR.

Therefore [not] leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.—Hebrews 6: 1, 2.

In the two verses just quoted, we notice that faith, repentance, baptisms, resurrection from the dead, and eternal judgment; each one of these is called and spoken of as a principle of the doctrine of Christ.

Let us learn the definition of the word principle, in its primary sense: Webster gives it, as "a fundamental truth." So we see the light in which the inspired writer of the Hebrew letter held the before-named ordinances, of faith, repentance, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment, as being the fundamental truths of the doctrine of Christ.

Having discovered that the laying on of hands is among and one of the chief ordinances of the doctrine which Christ taught, we may well inquire the purpose for which this principle was used, and the benefits to the disciple of Christ.

In the various books of the Bible, we find this ordinance and principle used and practiced for four different and specific purposes: Blessing children, in Genesis 49: 20; Matthew 19: 15; Mark 10: 16. For the gift of the Holy Ghost, in Acts 8: 17; 19: 6; 1 Timothy 4: 14; and Deuteronomy 34: 9. For ordaining the ministry, in John 15: 16; Acts 6: 6; 1 Timothy 4: 14; 2 Timothy 1: 6. For healing the sick, in Mark 16: 18; James 5: 15-18.

Is it any wonder that the apostle should give this ordinance, as one of the principles in the doctrine of Christ, since we see the great benefit accruing to the believer and disciple of Christ? Well may the apostle call it a principle of the doctrine of Christ; because children are blessed by it, those who are believers and have been baptized receive the gift of the Holy Spirit through it, the ministry are ordained by the laying on of hands, the sick are healed under this ordinance.

The query often arises in the mind of the writer, Why do all (so far as I know) churches and sects of to-day discard and fail to use and practice as a church tenet and doctrine the principle and ordinance of the laying on of hands, save for one purpose only, that of ordination of the ministry? Why use it for this one purpose and neglect the other three for which it was given? Why not use it in all purposes like Christ and his holy apostles used it? Is not a minister for Christ a representative of Christ? You answer, "Yes, he should be." Then why should he fail to bless children as did Christ (Mark 10: 16), and that the baptized believers might receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, as did the apostles (Acts 8: 17, and 19: 6), why not lay on hands to cast out devils and that the sick should recover, as Christ said they should (Mark 16: 18; James 5: 14)?

One thing is evident: at least Christ and the holy apostles taught and practiced the laying on of hands for all the purposes before named. When hands were laid on believers great blessings came to them. They received the gift of the Holy Ghost, and through this gift they are enabled to "speak in tongues" and prophesy. (Acts 19: 6.)

In the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians, we learn that there are many different gifts of the Spirit. To one is given wisdom, to another knowledge, to another faith, to another the gift of healing, to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another discerning of spirits, to another divers kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues.

In verse 7 it will be noticed that the "manifestation of the Spirit will be given to every man to the profit of all." Not one is without the positive promise to receive the gift of the Spirit in some degree, and in some of the forms just named. The only law by and through which men received the gift of the Spirit was through the laying on of hands.

Now this ordinance, being a principle of law, the divine law, is it, dear reader, any wonder to you that the churches of to-day who discard, refuse, or neglect to comply with this part of the divine law and doctrine of Jesus Christ, are without "spiritual gifts" such as were once enjoyed by those who obeyed this part of the divine law? That they are without these miraculous gifts and manifestation of God's power and acceptance of them, they themselves testify, and then argue that they are no longer needed. They choose rather to depend upon human wisdom and learning.

Think of it. How absurd, how blinded men must be, when they think that they need not God and his Holy Spirit to guide, teach, and lead; but rather exchange his way and law for man's way and wisdom!

Who will seek to become self-illuminating, when he knows God is a sun? Who will not exchange his shallow cup for Christ's well of living water? Think of it, my friends, the Comforter (which is the Holy Ghost) which Christ promised to send in his name, was to "abide with you for ever" (John 14: 16), to "guide into all truth," and to "show you things to come." John 16: 13. In a word, to reveal the mind and will of God and cause them to know the truth, and their acceptance with God.

In Matthew 11: 27 we are told: "No man knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whomsoever he will reveal him." If he who "spoke as never man spake" told the truth in this statement, (and I believe he did, if it was truth then, it is still true and ever shall be, because truth is eternal and never changes) no man ever did or ever will know God, save only through the revelations of Jesus Christ, as God and his Christ are unchangeable. So in his gospel, which is his word, he has revealed his law through and by which the revelations have come, which were through the gift of the Holy Ghost, by which they must and ever will come.

MINISTERIAL DEPARTMENT.

EXTRACTS FROM AN ADDRESS TO THE PRIESTHOOD BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH AT THE GENERAL CONFERENCE OF 1893.

JOSEPH SMITH.

The first qualification that a man must have to fulfill his ministerial labor is to be diligent; there is no place for idleness, no place for vicious laziness; he must be energetic. My first admonition now, my first instruction to the minister is, to be instant in season and out of season. If you make appointments to preach, let nothing except absolute intervention of accident which disqualifies you from fulfilling the appointment keep you from it. Do not let darkness, nor storm, nor heat, nor cold, nor threatening storm prevent you; go about your Master's business, and if he chooses to call you while you are in the harness, it is an honorable death, and your name will be enrolled among those who have suffered for glory, and your crown will await you.

Brethren of the ministry, be on time, and when your hour is set, especially if you are conducting a series of meetings, do not wait; do not give latitude from five to fifteen minutes for the dilatory congregation that you must preach to Sunday after Sunday; give them to understand that you begin on time; those who are not there will be the losers.

When your hour of preaching is filled, stop and let the folks go home. I mean by hour, the time that you shall occupy.

When you undertake to preach remember that it is the lightning that kills, not the thunder; and that for an individual to speak loud, very loud, and to gesticulate fiercely is not necessarily preaching. Measure the capacity of the room in which you are to speak and fill it if you can, but do not try to do more than that. Pronounce your words distinctly, separate them, because rapid speakers sometimes are considered hard to hear, and the reason why is because they so articulate their words and syllables that they run together, and the ear, fine as it is, can not separate them. The people hear the noise but they do not understand what is said.

When you go into a place to preach, make every effort to get a good hearing if you can. When you go to the schoolhouse or the meeting-house be as courteous as it is practicable for you to be; learn that kindness and courtesy pave the way many and many a time for a good hearing, and that a man's presentation to his congregation and to the neighborhood in which he is expected to speak goes very far toward making the impression that he would desire the truth itself to make.

When you have reached your schoolhouse open your meeting with singing if you have a chance or an opportunity; invite the people to sing for and with you, unless the circumstances are peculiar. I will relate a little circumstance to illustrate it. A brother and myself were at a place near Willard, in Utah, if I remember the place aright, and I was expected to speak to the people upon the peculiar institutions of that country; and what does the brother do but invite the congregation to sing. Well, I was peculiarly impressed by it, and I said to him I thought he had considerable hardihood to ask that people to sing, but he asked, Why? I replied that it was hard to ask people to sing at their own funeral, to be joyous and glad, to sing a song of rejoicing when somebody is expecting to attack something that they revered, and they knew that he was proposing to attack it in such a way that would be hard for them to stand; and I thought it was asking the people to sing at their own funeral. Brethren, do not do that.

Now there is a thought in connection with that. Do not go into a neighborhood and attack existing faiths in the meat-ax and bloody saw fashion. Do not make an effort to antagonize them, do not hold them up to ridicule, and do not make yourself a kind of—I don't know hardly how to express it unless I call it—a theological John L. Sullivan, to pound everybody's faith to pieces.

There is a way of presenting the gospel that in its results it will reach people, and they themselves will be able to see the difference between that which they have been holding to and that which you present to them, without you making the truth so fearfully obnoxious that you antagonize them, arouse the resentment within them, and harden their hearts and their faces against your approach.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER GEORGE J. BROOKOVER.

I was born September 10, 1879, in Licking County, Ohio. My father died when I was only two years of age. This left my mother with six children to care for, therefore we were in very poor circumstances. Thinking perhaps we could better our conditions, we prepared at once to leave, and locate in Wisconsin, near Lancaster, in Grant County, which plan we afterwards carried out.

We had not been located here long until the older children began looking for places to work. Fortunately they were very successful. I remained at home until I was ten years old. But one day there came to our house an old gentleman wanting a boy to take to live with him and his sister (his sister was keeping house for him at this time). And as I seemed to satisfy his desire, mother thought I had better go. Consequently I went, he living at the time near Excelsior, in Richland County. This old gentleman, whose name was Richard Atkinson, and his sister, were members of the Advent Church, and went to their meetings quite often, which necessitated my going also. During some of these meetings, I would get quite tired, and almost fall asleep, but he would nudge me, and whisper, "Look the minister in the face." This was hard to do, especially when I did not want to hear.

After a year and a half I became dissatisfied with my place, and he with me. And in order to get rid of me in a legitimate way, it was finally decided to send me to the State Industrial School for boys, at Waukesha. Here I remained for three and a half years, during which time I was sent to school, beginning in the primary grade and ending in the ninth grade. To-day I feel to thank that old gentleman for that act. It was at the close of this schooling that I realized the turning-point of my life. The impression upon my mind then was, It is better to be a gentleman in every respect, and try to do good to our fellow men.

At the expiration of the time stated, I was placed upon a farm to work for a man whose name was John D. Mitchell, whose residence was located near the city of Milwaukee. Here I remained for three years, during which time I united with the Methodist Church. I then took my departure for the western part of the State. Here I hired out and worked upon a farm.

Becoming dissatisfied with the Methodists, I took up my membership with the United Brethren organization. Finally they got into quite a confusion among themselves. So, having remained with them for something over a year, I finally concluded to unite with the Disciple Church, and remained with them for a season.

Several years had now elapsed, during which time I lost trace of my people. And many times I would think, Where can my poor old mother be? and where are my brothers and sisters? How many times I would seek some secluded place, with a broken heart, with tears of sorrow flowing down my cheeks, and there ask my heavenly Father to care for me, and keep me from the evil of the world. Indeed I often thought of the statement made by Christ, when father and mother forsake me, then the Lord will take me up. During this time, the desire to do good, and lead a Christian life, was forcing itself upon me day by day. And a sensation seizing upon me, caused me to think I would like to preach the gospel of Christ to my fellow men.

It was also during these days of my experiences, that before I retired to my bed for rest, during the shadow of the night, I would first kneel in secret prayer and ask God to help me to do good, and to reveal unto me where my dear old mother was. Let me tell you, dear reader, those were sad and dark days of my young life, and only He who sees all our acts knows of the sorrow that filled my young and tender heart.

I thought many times, through blinding tears, that I was left all alone in this wide, wide world. But in later years, when receiving my patriarchal blessing, given by Bro. Lake, as he laid his hands upon my head the Holy Spirit filled our souls, and while under this influence, I heard him say, "Bro. George, your experiences have been peculiar, best known to yourself and God. You have passed through trials that have brought sadness to your mind, and anxiety to your heart." Oh, how true, I thought, at that moment! "And God has watched over you, and preserved your life when you were in danger."

It was during the experiences of which I have written that I became acquainted with a young lady, whose name was Phebe Anderson. Upon one occasion she remarked, "George, I feel so sorry for you, knowing you feel all alone in the world——" And let me say, it was here I found a true friend, who afterwards became my wife. And it is she whom I hold dear to my heart. And to show how much of the overruling power of God was in this event, I shall relate the circumstances and leave the reader to judge. It was on the tenth day of October, 1899, that I was baptized into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. I realized that I had heard the message of God, as spoken by his servants. And as expressed by the patriarch, "You were known to the Father before you came to this earth, and you loved him there; and when you heard the truth, it sounded like a message you had heard before." On the fifteenth day of October, a few days after I was baptized, I was married to the girl whom I have mentioned. She was for several years before this a member of the church.

It was in the year 1901 that I was called and ordained to the office of priest. In the year 1902, I applied for a missionary appointment, and received it.

It was in the year 1904 that I was ordained at Madison, Wisconsin, while in district conference, under the hands of J. W. Wight, W. A. McDowell, and J. H. Lake. It was also during the General Conference held at Independence, Missouri, 1906, that I was ordained to the office of seventy, by Joseph Luff and G. T. Griffiths.

During these years, while I have devoted my entire time to the cause of Christ, the dear wife has taken care of the children at home, there sacrificing these earthly ties for the work which she loves.

I must here relate a vision which was once presented to me. I saw the new earth; the lamb and lion were lying down together. And, oh, the peace that seemed to prevail! As I looked again, I saw many beautiful mansions. I said to my guide, "How beautiful those are!" We then came up to one that seemed to attract my attention. I said, "I would like a mansion like that to live in." This personage said, "This is your future home; for you and your loved ones." At this the vision disappeared. Oh, may the dear Lord lead us on in the light of his Holy Spirit, until we shall be permitted to dwell there.

As I see so much wickedness in the world, I long for the time to come when peace and knowledge shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

I have been greatly blessed in preaching the gospel to others. And my soul rejoices in this great latter-day work. And I have become deeply interested in the welfare of the children of God's kingdom; and, especially, the young of the church. So many are inexperienced with the conditions of the world, and its many evil influences. My daily prayer to our heavenly Father is, "Keep them from the evil," thereby trying to throw around them my influence, which I hope will be for lasting good.

May the Lord hasten the day when all of God's dear children shall be gathered to Zion and there be under her influence and environment.

GEORGE J. BROOKOVER.

WHO SHOULD BE CHOSEN TO PRESIDE OVER THE CHURCH.

"Who should preside over the church, if the president should die?" has been asked many times, and a variety of answers have been given. "Our Utah cousins" have strenuously claimed that this right belonged to the president of the Twelve. In a sermon delivered by Joseph F. Smith, Jr., which is published in tract form and circulated quite extensively, under the title of Succession in the Presidency of the Church, an effort is made to show that their position is according to the law. Yet, it is just a little amusing to read Heber C. Kimball's testimony, that he introduces on page 58 of that sermon, which reads in part as follows:

Bro. Joseph has passed behind the veil, and he pulled off his shoes, and some one else puts them on, until he passes the veil to Bro. Joseph. President Young is our president, and our head, and he puts the shoes on first. If Bro. Hyrum had remained here, he would have put them on.

This testimony was given "in the fall of 1844." If it is the law for the "president of the Twelve" to become the president of the church, how could Hyrum, who never belonged to the Quorum of Twelve, become the president of the church, if he "had remained"?

Heber C. Kimball was a member of the Quorum of Twelve before Joseph's death, and he was in harmony with his quorum on this point as far as we have seen. It is certain, we have seen no account of him being contradicted, nor being brought to account for teaching heresy, by claiming that the right to the presidency belonged to Hyrum, instead of the "president of the Twelve." If the law teaches that the "president of the Twelve" becomes the president of the church at the death of the latter, how did it happen that Bro. Kimball opposed that position by claiming that the patriarch was the man? If Kimball was wrong then, why was he not corrected at the time? If he was out of harmony with his brethren of the Twelve, why is it that he was not brought to account? The fact that his position on the "succession in the presidency of the church," was not then opposed, causes one to conclude that he viewed the subject just as the rest of the Twelve did, and that the present position held by the Utah church was adopted later "from necessity."

He also introduced Orson Hyde's testimony, a part of which is as follows: "Before I went east on the 4th of April, we were in council with Bro. Joseph almost every day for weeks," etc. Think of it! "In council with Bro. Joseph almost every day for weeks," and Joseph making a special effort to teach them who will take the presidency of the church, if he should die, and how they should proceed to carry on the work of the church; trying to explain to the "Twelve" what the law teaches about his successor, and the duty of the Twelve. Yet, after all this effort, Heber C. Kimball believed that his (Joseph's) successor should be a man (Hyrum) that never had been a member of the Quorum of Twelve. Joseph had utterly failed to get it through his head that the law taught that it belonged to the "president of the Twelve."

If Joseph taught as our Utah friends claim, Kimball was either a very dull pupil, or else he never heard it. In fact none of the Twelve testified, at the time Kimball gave his testimony, that Joseph ever taught as they now hold.

Brigham Young testifies in part as follows (same page): "I tell you in the name of the Lord, that no man can put another between the Twelve and Joseph the Prophet." It seems that this hardly reaches the point. The question is, Who should succeed to the presidency of the church? If Joseph had taught that the "president of the Twelve" was the man, why is it that Brigham did not say so? Why is it that he did not teach, then, the same as they teach now?

There is no question about great responsibilities resting on the Quorum of Twelve, and that they stand high in the organic structure of the church; and all the testimony introduced, telling what Joseph said of these responsibilities, does not say one word about the "president of the Twelve" becoming the president of the church. Not one word introduced that intimates, that as soon as the president of the "quorum of the Presidency" (Doctrine and Covenants 104:11) dies, that the "president of the Twelve" should or could creep out of his quorum into the vacancy in this higher "quorum." In certain respects the three quorums are equal; but in others they are not. "The president of the church, who is also the president of the council, is appointed by revelation," etc. (Doctrine and Covenants 99:6), and is "ordained by the direction of the high council, or general conference" (Doctrine and Covenants 17:17).

The general officers of the church might be killed, so the president of the Twelve would be the highest officer left, and would preside over the church as the president of the Twelve; but this would not place him in the "quorum of the Presidency." When the presiding elder of a branch dies, the presiding priest presides over the branch as a priest, not as an elder; nor does he become an elder by virtue of his presiding; but he must wait till the call to the eldership comes, and be ordained. So it would be with the president of the Twelve.

The church faced this question in 1844, and it may not be many years before we shall be called to meet it again. Are we prepared for it? In the absence of definite instructions, we are left more or less in the dark. We can stand in the borderland of the known and the unknown. We can peer into the semi-darkness before us; and as a flash of light from realms of glory comes, lighting up the scene, we get a glimpse of what is before us, if not a clear view.

The Lord has thrown some light on this subject at different times of late, bringing some new feature into view each time. Can we place all that he has revealed together, and thus produce or describe the whole?

A few years ago, (1902,) at Lamoni, the president presented to us a verbal revelation, by the Spirit, answering the question as to who should be his successor. This was printed in the minutes of the conference, and is as follows:

I have been importuned to settle the question as to who should be my successor. We have advanced upon the hypothesis of lineal priesthood in this regard, and while I believe in it, I believe it is connected with fitness and propriety, and no son of mine will be entitled to follow me as my successor, unless at the time that he is chosen he is found to be worthy in character. I should not expect it. I now state to you, brethren, under the influence of, to me, the Spirit of God, that should I be overtaken by death before some of the things which are anticipated shall be wrought, you have my successor in your midst. I do not say that he should be chosen; if at the time that this emergency should occur he is found to be worthy let him be chosen, if unworthy let him be rejected and another chosen from the body as the revelation provides. And should he be found unworthy and another of my sons found worthy, let the line descend, as I believe that it ought to; for a man should be called to the office to serve in the church who had proved himself to be worthy of confidence and trust.

We are given to understand that if his son, F. M. Smith, was faithful, he would be his successor; but if he was not faithful, and another of his sons was, the faithful one was to be chosen, and thus "let the line descend."

There was some discussion of this revelation, and some misunderstanding as to its real meaning. Then on April 14, 1906, the following was given on the subject:

Inasmuch as misunderstanding has occurred in regard to the meaning of a revelation hitherto given through my servant Joseph Smith in regard to who should be called to preside in case my servant should be taken away or fall by transgression, it is now declared that in case of the removal of my servant now presiding over the church by death or transgression, my servant Frederick M. Smith, if he remain faithful and steadfast, should be chosen, in accordance with the revelations which have been hitherto given to the church concerning the priesthood. Should my servant Frederick M. Smith prove unstable and unfaithful, another may be chosen, according to the law already given.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 8.

This is the same in substance, although plainer than the verbal one referred to. There is one point settled; and that is, Frederick M. Smith is to be his father's successor, "if he remain faithful and steadfast"; but if he is "unfaithful" "another may be chosen."

This does not appoint him to this office. It does not even say that he will be the president; but it gives us to understand that he has this right; and if "faithful" till the time comes for the successor to be chosen, he "should be called to preside" over the church.

The call for Joseph's successor to preside "over the church" has not come yet, and there is no evidence that it will come, till after "the presidency should be invaded by death." (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 6.)

I then asked what was meant by the choosing of members for the presidency so young in years. I was informed that it was for the purpose that before the presidency should be invaded by death these younger men should be prepared by association to be of assistance to whomsoever should be chosen as the president upon the emergency which should occur.

There is nothing in this that indicates who the successor will be; but we are assured that the "Presidency" will not be "invaded by death" till the "younger" men there chosen, have had time to "be prepared" "to be of assistance" to the one "chosen as the president upon the emergency which should occur."

This seems to indicate that a "president" will be "chosen" during this "emergency," and the two counselors now chosen will "be of assistance" to him. That is, they will continue as counselors to this president during this "emergency," till a permanent president or successor is ordained.

This president, that is to be assisted by the present counselors, is to "be chosen as the president," while the successor is to "be called."

If the president is "ordained by the direction of" a General Conference, there would be the necessity of some one presiding; and if nothing else is given than we now have, it will be an important question for the church to decide, whether the one spoken of has remained "faithful" or not. We may guess on the subject and guess correctly; or we may make a mistake. It is of too much importance for man to settle in his own wisdom. "The president of the church . . . is appointed by revelation," and we can expect the "call" to come at the time the man is to be ordained; and it will come through the temporary president; or the one "chosen as the president," that those who will "be of assistance" to.

But who should we chose? In Doctrine and Covenants 107: 29, we have an account of Hyrum Smith being called to the office of patriarch, and the duties of that office defined as follows:

That whoever he blesses shall be blessed, and whoever he curseth shall be cursed; that whatsoever he shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever he shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven; and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph, that he may act in concert also with my servant Joseph, and that he shall receive counsel from my servant

Joseph, who shall show unto him the keys whereby he may ask and receive, and be crowned with the same blessing, and glory, and honor, and priesthood, and gifts of the priesthood, that once were put upon him that was my servant Oliver Cowdery.

After the work of a patriarch is defined, the words, "and from this time forth, I appoint unto him that he may be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator unto my church, as well as my servant Joseph," give us two men through whom revelations may come to the church. Then we are informed that this right or position to "be a prophet, and a seer, and a revelator to the church" had at one time been held by Oliver Cowdery. This position made him the "second elder of the church" (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 1); "and the first preacher of this church, unto the church, and before the world" (Doctrine and Covenants 19: 3), "and none have I appointed to be this counselor, over him, in the church, concerning church matters, except it is his brother Joseph Smith, Jr." (Doctrine and Covenants 29: 2). He was instructed that he should "not write by way of commandment," but "if thou art led at any time by the Comforter to speak or teach, or at all times by the way of commandment unto the church, thou mayest do it." (Doctrine and Covenants 27: 2.)

From these statements it is clear that in the complete development of the church, there are two men who are prophets, seers, and revelators to the church. While the second is prohibited from writing "by way of commandment" to the church, the other is not. The second is to "act in concert" with the first. Then if the first is taken away by death, we have another "prophet, seer, and revelator" who would not become his successor; but would stand in his own position as "the second elder of the church"; "and none have I appointed to be his counselor, over him, in the church, concerning church matters, except it is his brother, Joseph Smith, Jr." With this man among us, whom should we choose "as the president" till his successor is ordained?

It is not surprising that the apostles expected Hyrum Smith to preside over the church, had he lived after Joseph was killed; and through him would have come the revelation appointing the successor.

If the president of the church transgresses, so that he loses his position, "he shall not have power, except to appoint another in his stead." (Doctrine and Covenants 43: 2.) This appointment by revelation (see Doctrine and Covenants 99: 6) is to be made, when the ordination is to take place. The one appointed by the revelation is "called to preside" (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8) at the time the appointment is made. We do not expect the president of the church "to appoint" his successor unless he loses his office "by transgression."

We do not understand that our President claims to have been "appointed" by his father, in any other sense than he has "appointed" his son, Frederick M. Smith; and his son, Frederick M. Smith, is to "be called" and "chosen" if he is faithful; and if not, another is to "be chosen."

Hyrum Smith was a patriarch, and he was "a prophet and a seer, and a revelator . . . as well as my servant Joseph." Oliver Cowdery was not a patriarch, yet he held these "gifts of the priesthood" that Hyrum held, that made him prophet, seer, and revelator "to the church."

Do these "gifts of the priesthood" belong to the office of patriarch, so that every presiding patriarch of the church has them, or do they belong to a special office, once held by Oliver Cowdery, known as "the second elder of this church," and also held by Hyrum Smith in connection with the office of patriarch? Or did Oliver Cowdery simply hold a part of the "gifts of the priesthood" that belong to the office of a patriarch of the church? Who can answer?

May light be given according to our needs, is my desire; and I believe it will be, if we prepare to receive it.

OUR PRESENT DUTY.

What is man that thou art mindful of him? Man is a servant of the most high God, an object of his pity, love, and charity. Man was created by God, blessed with life, health, and all that he is the possessor of. Are we, many of us, who have pride of the hope that is within us, truly grateful for the many blessings we so often acknowledge? Do we ever stop to think of the many points wherein we disobey his will?

Do we ever think of the many times we show our ingratitude by not obeying, at least some of his many just commandments? Do these facts ever come with force upon our conscience? Or are we even too ungrateful to hearken to the whispering of that guiding Spirit which so often says, "Saint do your whole duty?" Or are we past realizing the fact that we all have a duty to perform? With much force the following comes to my mind:

"With my substance I will honor
My Redeemer and my Lord;
Were ten thousand worlds my manor,
All were nothing to his word.

"While the heralds of salvation
His abounding grace proclaim,
Let his friends, of ev'ry station,
Gladly join to spread his fame.

"Be his kingdom now promoted,
Let the earth her Monarch know;
Be my all to him devoted;
To my Lord my all I owe."

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 12: 13.

His commandments to bring unto him the first-fruits of our labors are just as strong, and ought to be just as impressive, as when he said through the Prophet Malachi, "Will a man rob God?" and as when Ananias fell dead. Before or after, now and always, we find him unchangeable. The first-fruits of our lives is what he requires of us, or what he has commanded us to bring unto his storehouse. If we fail to do this, we will certainly not be doing our whole duty to God. Tithing and offering, the system that we as a people stand ever ready to defend as the only God-ordained method of church support. But are we ever ready to do our whole duty to God, keep his commandments in regard to the law of tithing? Christ said to take no thought of the morrow, but to seek the kingdom of heaven, and then promised that these things of "your need shall be added unto you." Will we doubt God's ability to keep his promises, or will we in view of the fact commanded us, do otherwise? What will we answer, those of us who have entered into our everlasting covenant with him, we who have told the world we knew him to be an unchangeable God?

Brethren, let us press onward. Let us see that the work we love so well is no longer hindered, or its progress detained for want of our doing our whole duty. Let us lift ourselves from the sin that so easily besets us. Let us look upon the mistakes of the past with care that we do not repeat them. Let us rouse ourselves from our present selfish condition to a mighty united effort to support the cause we love so well. Let us show ourselves worthy of the confidence that has been placed in us, never ceasing in the conflict for his work and it alone.

When we look about and see a few heads white with the frost of time, brothers and sisters growing old and feeble in battling for this cause, some in the field, and think of others gone on before, shall we disgrace the cause they have so far advanced? Shall we leave the burden on a few; a burden that the few are not able to bear with its increasing weight?

Brethren, let us from this day forward put forth an effort that becomes a people of God's choice. Let us be indeed a people striving diligently to do our whole duty. Let us step forward with united and determined effort. Let us every one take it upon himself to see that the cause does not suffer delay for want of financial support, and ever lean on the One who has so charitably promised us our reward.

GIFTS AND GRACE.

A SERMON BY REVEREND A. B. SIMPSON.

[The following sermon is so remarkable, coming as it does from what our people would term a "sectarian" minister, that we quote it entire. It shows the trend of modern thought in some quarters. In many of its leading points it is in accord with things that we have preached since 1830, and for which we have been called heretics.—EDITOR.]

TEXT.

But covet earnestly the best gifts. And yet show I unto you a more excellent way.—1 Corinthians 12: 31. Follow after love.—1 Corinthians 14: 1. (R. V.)

The attention of the Christian church is being strongly directed at this time to the special gifts of the Spirit, and it is well that we should consider carefully and soberly the teachings of the Holy Scriptures on this important subject. It occupies a prominent and large place in this manual of the church, the first epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, almost three whole chapters being devoted to its discussion.

First of all let us carefully remember that the gifts of the Spirit here defined are quite distinct from the grace of the Spirit, and that our possession of these gifts does not effect our personal salvation and sanctification and our standing with God as subjects of his grace. This is quite apart from the Holy Spirit's ministry in leading us to Christ for salvation and in bringing us into union with him through consecration and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The most pernicious error abroad to-day in connection with these gifts is to make them a necessary test of our having received the Holy Ghost, and come into the fullness of Christ.

GIFTS OF THE HOLY SPIRIT.

The following points are clear and important in connection with the teaching of the apostle regarding the charismata or gifts of the Spirit:

1. The apostle distinguishes gifts, ministries, and operations of the Spirit (verses 4 to 6). By the gifts he means the special power communicated to the believer through the Holy Ghost for some special ministry. By the word administration he means the use of that gift in some actual ministry or form of service. And by the word operations he means the inward workings of the Holy Ghost in our individual experience as we receive this gift and exercise this ministry. It brings a corresponding experience to the heart as well as a more effective ministry to the life. We are not cold and passive instruments in the hands of the Master, but warm, living, responsive co-workers with him, receiving in our own hearts the blessing which we are used in imparting to others. Now there are diversities of these gifts, ministries, and experiences, but it is the one Spirit that works in every case. We are taught, therefore, at the beginning not to attempt to copy any one, but remember that God has a different method with every individual.

2. Every disciple of Christ ought to have some special manifestation of the Holy Ghost and some gift for Christian service. "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." (Verse 7.) There is no place for idlers and drones, and there is no excuse for the fruitless Christian. God has power and work for all who will yield themselves to him for his service and glory.

GIFTS ARE OF MANY VARIETIES.

3. These gifts are conferred by the Holy Ghost himself in his sovereign will according to individual fitness and for the completeness and profit of the whole body of Christ. He knows the gift that will best enable us to glorify him and help others. No disciple can expect to receive all these gifts. It is preposterous to say that the gift of tongues, for example, is the criterion of having received the Holy Ghost. The apostle distinctly asks, "Have all the gift of tongues?" God adjusts our equipment to our natural temperament and ability, to our providential circumstances and to the special work which he has called us to do. We are represented here as various members of the body of Christ, and as in the body the different members have different offices, so is it in the body of Christ. The apostle asks with graphic force, "If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing where were the smelling?" It is easy to make the figure still more vivid. Suppose a human face was all nose, or all ears, it would be a monstrosity. And suppose it were all tongue, and especially a foreign tongue, it would neither be attractive nor useful. Our business is to yield ourselves to the Holy Spirit for such gifts and ministries as he has for us, and trust him for the endowment and the enabling.

4. The particular gifts of the Spirit are next specified. There are nine of them altogether. The first is the gift of wisdom. Wisdom is that quality which enables us to do the right thing and to avoid the wrong thing. It is the helm of life. Like salt in the natural world, often imperceptible and seemingly of little consequence, but absolutely necessary to life and health, so wisdom pervades every other quality and ministry, and rightly holds the first place as the preëminent gift of the Holy Ghost. We are very apt to overlook this quality in our search for the more brilliant and extraordinary manifestations of the Spirit, and the lack of wisdom often leads to the abuse of the very things we desire.

The second gift is knowledge. This is the knowledge of the truth, and especially the word of God. Here it is spoken of as the word of wisdom. It is not a general stock of crystallized knowledge laid up by mere human study, but it is a particular revelation as we need to use the word for each occasion and service. "I have put my words into thy mouth," he says, "and covered thee with the shadow of my hand." "The Lord hath given me the tongue of one that hath learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary. He wakeneth morning by morning. He wakeneth mine ear to hear as one that has learned."

The next gift is the gift of faith. It is not saving faith, faith that justifies, sanctifies and brings to us every supply of divine grace, but it is the special faith which fits us for effectual service; the faith that removes mountains of difficulty, the faith that uproots sycamore trees of evil, the faith that knocks until doors are opened, the faith which equips the evangelist for the winning of souls and the worker for the accomplishing of great and mighty things in the pulling down of strongholds and the building up of the kingdom of God. No gift of the Holy Spirit is of more unspeakable value than the gift of faith. It was of this the Master said to his disciples, when they asked him the secret of his own power, "Have the faith of God."

GIFTS OF HEALING.

Following this come the gifts of healing. This does not mean some magic or magnetic power possessed by some individuals, enabling them to remove disease by a touch, but at the same time a very real power to help God's sick and suffering children to know and receive him as their healer and life. Just as God gives to some the special ministry of leading souls to Christ, so he gives to others as distinct a ministry in leading sufferers to receive the healing power of the great Physician. And in these days of divine manifestation, when God has been for some years calling marked attention to the physical aspects of redemption, it is surely a time when we should call upon God for a mighty revival of the ministry of healing, and a distinct endowment of the workers who are called to it with the faith and power of God, even as in the days of old.

Next follows the working of miracles. These are distinguished from the gifts of healing, inasmuch as healing is not always or even usually miraculous, but rather on lines which, while distinctly supernatural, are more quiet, normal, and even gradual. There are cases of miraculous healing, but there are many more in which the subject is led to receive the life of the Lord Jesus in a simpler way as the very element of his being and the habit of his whole life. The miracle is rather intended by its sudden and startling character to attract public attention, and to bear witness in some extraordinary way to the power and majesty of God. There is no doubt that the miraculous is an element of the Spirit's enduement, and there is no reason why it should ever have ceased in the history of the church. But here again we are not to be watching for the wonderful, but rather seeking the useful and helpful, and leaving it to God himself in his sovereign will to work miraculously when it pleases and glorifies him.

The sixth of these gifts is prophecy. Ordinarily we associate this gift with the foretelling of future events. The scriptural idea of it is different. It is rather a divine inspiration enabling the possessor to speak direct messages of the Holy Spirit for the spiritual profit of the hearer. "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification and exhortation and comfort." All preaching ought to be to a certain extent prophetic in the sense of being God's immediate message to the hearer. This differs from the upholding of the Scriptures and the teaching of doctrine. The prophetic message has more immediate reference to the particular condition of the hearer and the need of immediate spiritual help. This gift the apostle emphasizes above all the others as the one most useful and helpful. "Follow after love and desire spiritual gifts, but rather that ye may prophesy."

The next gift is the discerning of spirits. It is quite remarkable that this gift immediately precedes the last two; namely, tongues and interpretation of tongues. It would seem as if at this point there were peculiar need for the power to distinguish the false and the true. The gift of tongues above all others opened the way for scenes of much excitement and the possibility of satanic counterfeits. There are languages spoken in hell as well as in heaven, and God himself has forewarned us to "try the spirits whether they be of God, for many false prophets have gone forth into the world."

If God is really speaking he will not be impatient with us in our earnest desire to make sure it is his voice. There are several tests to which we shall allude later by which we may discriminate between the false and the true and regulate the public worship of God's assemblies.

SPECIAL MANIFESTATIONS.

Next comes the gift of tongues. There is no doubt that this was one of the special manifestations of the Holy Ghost in the apostolic church. It appears to have been specially prominent in the church at Corinth, and perhaps to have been cultivated and sought to an extreme degree by that people who were not noted for the very deepest spiritual life. There is always danger in seeking the occult, mysterious, and demonstrative. It is in this line that the adversary manifests his power through clairvoyance and spiritualism. But there was no doubt of the divine reality of many of these extraordinary manifestations, nor is there any reason why this gift should not appear at any time in the history of the church, and especially in these last days when we may expect the most remarkable outpourings of the Holy Ghost. It appears to have been a divine ecstasy, which lifted the soul above the ordinary modes and expressions of reason and utterance. As a profound German scholar expresses it, "Man contains three elements in his higher constitution; namely, the pneuma, the nous, and the logos." That is, the spirit, the mind, and the language. The spirit is the higher element and in the gifts of tongues appeared to overlap the mind altogether and find its expression in speech, quite unintelligible to the person himself and yet truly expressing the higher thought and feeling of the exalted spiritual state of the subject. It may be a human tongue, or it may be a heavenly tongue. For the apostle distinctly speaks of both the tongues of men and of angels. It was not always employed in the apostolic church as the vehicle of preaching to people of other languages, but rather was a channel of direct worship and adoration. "He that prophesieth speaketh unto men, but he that speaketh in an unknown tongue speaketh not unto men but unto God."

Finally, the gift of interpretation was the power to understand and translate the language spoken in the Spirit. It might more correctly be called the gift of translation. Sometimes it was possessed by the speaker himself, sometimes by another who gave the translation. Therefore the apostle says, "Let him that speaketh in an unknown tongue pray that he may interpret."

THE APOSTOLIC COMMAND.

5. The relative importance and value of these various gifts is next brought out with great clearness. They are named in a certain order in the various places where we find them specified; and this order is practically uniform. In every instance the gift of tongues comes at the end of the list, and the gifts of wisdom, knowledge, faith, and prophecy take precedence. In the most practical way the apostle commends the things that edify and help as compared with those that directly bless and honor the individual worshiper. He does not ignore the gift of tongues by any means, but recognizes it as the distinct mark of the divine power and presence, and a very glorious and blessed channel of direct fellowship with the heavenly world, and in some sense real opening of the doors between the earthly and the heavenly. But he adds with very evident point, "Wherefore covet to prophesy and forbid not to speak with tongues." "Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edification of the church."

6. The spirit of decorum, propriety, and order are next emphasized with great fullness. "Let all things be done decently and in order," he admonishes.

"If any may speak in an unknown tongue, let it be by two or at the most by three, and that by course, and let one translate; but if there be no translator, let him keep silence in the church and let him speak to himself and to God." "If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace, for ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn and all be comforted. For God is not the author of confusion, but of peace, as in all the churches of the saints."

Then he unfolds the principle of the profoundest importance, "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets." The Holy Spirit does not carry us away in wild, irrational extravagance, but holds his communications subject to our sanctified judgment, and the order and edification of the whole assembly. It is the spirit of evil that rushes us and drives us to the excesses that bring dishonor and contempt upon the work and worship of God. How much cause we have to thank God for these wise and holy cautions and counsels! Let us be willing to heed and follow.

7. The preëminence of love. Above all gifts, above all ministries is the grace of love, that love that uses every gift and ministry, not to exploit its own greatness, but to glorify God and bless men. Not only is love here described as an end, but as a means. He says, "I show unto you a more excellent way," which is the way to reach the higher gifts of the Spirit. God will intrust to us his most sacred ministries and most glorious manifestations in proportion as he sees that we will use them in the spirit of love and for the help of the souls that are so dear to the Shepherd's heart.

In conclusion.

1. Let us not fear or ignore any of the gifts and manifestations of the Holy Ghost, no matter how extraordinary; but be prepared to expect God to reveal himself to his people, especially in these last days, in many signal and glorious ways.

2. At the same time let us not fail to exercise the spirit of discernment and to take ample time and measures to be sure that any alleged work bears the signs of God's approval and control. Let us especially watch lest even good movements become mixed with evil through the lack of discernment or carefulness. Let us not be afraid to exercise proper supervision and control in the Spirit over religious assemblies. And especially let us endeavor to keep these remarkable and supernatural manifestations of the Spirit from being handed over to unwise and reckless leaders and persons of doubtful character or spiritual qualification.

3. Again, let us not confuse the gifts and the graces of the Spirit. The work of the Holy Ghost in saving and sanctifying is entirely distinct from these special gifts. To say that the gift of tongues is the only proper evidence of having been baptized with the Holy Ghost is rash and wholly unscriptural, and places a mere manifestation of the Holy Ghost above his higher ministry of grace. Love, which is simply a grace of the Spirit, is placed above any of the gifts, and his love will surely keep us from judging one another.

4. Again, let us covet earnestly the best gifts, but chiefly the gifts of useful and effectual ministry.

5. Let us set ourselves against disorder, excess and extravagance, even though we may be criticized and denounced for hindering and quenching the Spirit. The Spirit himself has given to us these divine tests and directions by which we may discriminate and direct. We are therefore obeying him when we firmly yet kindly insist that the assembly of Christ's people shall be characterized by order, propriety, decorum, consideration for one another, and especially the spirit of edification, usefulness, and helpfulness.

6. Finally, let us pray for love, let us cultivate love, let us take the Lord Jesus himself to be our love, and let our deepest cry be, "Give me a heart like thine."

In the beautiful poem of Sir Launfal, a Christian knight had gone forth with holy zeal in quest of that which represented in that age the most glorious gift of God. It was the Holy Grail, the identical cup from which the Lord Jesus and his disciples had drunk the sacred draught "on that night on which he was betrayed." As he passed out from the palace gate a loathsome leper stretched out his festering hands for help, and begged him to take the filthy cup that was lying beside him, and bring him a drink of water from the flowing brook. But the knight waved him aside and swept on, for he was after higher things.

Years passed by, as he pursued in vain his weary quest over many lands and under scorching suns. His body was worn, his hair was gray, his heart was broken, his hopes had almost died. A worn-out wreck, he was slowly returning to his home with a crushed and disappointed heart, when once again a leper met him on the way and stretched out the same festering hands for the same loving ministry. Swiftly the knight leaped from his horse, picked up the repulsive vessel, and hastening to the stream, with profoundest courtesy and tenderest sympathy he handed to the sufferer the drink he had requested. In a moment the scene was changed and the transfigured leper had become none other than the Son of Man himself. The light of heaven shone around him and the filthy cup became transformed into a shining vessel of silver; and as the Master handed it back to him it was indeed the "Holy Grail"! Yes, he had learned the "more excellent way," and the ministry of love had the gifts of power and glory which otherwise he had sought in vain. So still we shall find that "he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" and he that would stand nearest to the Son of Man must, like him, also come "not to be ministered unto, but to minister," and to give up his very life as a living sacrifice of love.

Though I speak with tongues of mortals, or of seraphim above,

I am but a tinkling cymbal if I have not Love!

Though I reach the heights of knowledge; every mystery though I prove;

I am nothing, less than nothing, if I have not Love!

Though I give with princely bounty; yield my life my zeal to prove;

Vain are all my gifts and sufferings if I have not Love.

Blessed, gentle, holy Jesus, blessed, holy, heavenly Dove,

Give to me the Master's Spirit, fill my heart with Love.

At Jacob's Well.

Weary and worn with the toilsome way,
 'Neath the heat of the burning sun,
 A traveler sat by the patriarch's well,
 To rest for awhile, alone.
 Oh, rough were the stones on the rugged road,
 As the sun so fiercely beat,
 And parched with thirst were those blessed lips,
 And weary those sacred feet.
 A woman came out from the city gate;
 No simple maiden was she,
 But one who had trodden the paths of sin
 And sullied her purity.
 She brought her jar to the ancient well,—
 For water she came that day.
 But she took a treasure of priceless worth
 To the world and herself away.
 Oh, strangely sweet were the Stranger's words,
 Yet they pierced to the inmost heart,
 As they drew the flimsy veil of excuse
 From the trembling soul apart.
 And the tender words that fell that day,
 Like drops from a living well,
 Have followed the course of the centuries down
 To the age in which now we dwell.
 For the gift of God is eternal life,
 Which the Father doth freely give
 To those who are worn and weary in sin.
 Oh, come, and drink and live!
 And myriad hearts since that bygone day
 Have echoed that faith-filled word,
 "Now we believe in thy name indeed, Messiah, the Christ of God."—Sel.

The Good Ship, Three Bells.

While reading the beautiful poem, "The three bells," thinking of the untiring vigilance of the brave Captain Leighton, how he and his good ship, the Three Bells, kept near the sinking ship all night, and often through the long dark hours of dread and despair calling through his trumpet, "Never fear, I'll stand by you," my heart was touched and I was moved to tears. At once came the thought to my mind, Are not all Latter Day Saints captains on the seas of life? they who have been baptized in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost? Can not these bring joy to the hearts of those sinking beneath "winds of temptation and billows of woe," upon the seas of adversity, intemperance, of impure thoughts and lives, of the discouraged, the broken-hearted; those who feel they are flinging their soul's wealth away all unappreciated, going down upon the great ocean of life amidst the breakers and darkness of night? Truly no ship of Glasgow, laden with the weight of human lives, carries a greater responsibility than the one to whom the Spirit of the Lord is given in this day of perilous times, when the hearts of many, yea, very many, are failing them for fear of the troubles coming upon them.

Dear ones, when you find such a one invite him into your ship of Three Bells. Bells of hope and good cheer, and along through the dark night of despair on the great stormy sea of life, send out the word through the trumpet, "I am standing by you," and see that you do stand by with your prayers, your words of cheer and encouragement, with a helping hand in time of need. Let the bells of hope which ring in your own life to-day, echo and resound in the hearts of the dear ones about you. Let them feel that your efforts are real, not affected, that they come from the depths of the heart. No one hates sham more than the erring. They have had enough of that. What they want is something real, something that is what it appears to be, something that will bring hope and peace of mind to the fainting ones. Where, then, can we find such a balm for the wounded breast? such a haven of safety as to help them enter the gospel ship and stand by them until the morning light breaks forth and reveals the fact to our wondering vision that although the great sea of adversity stood yawning to engulf their frail bark, yet are they safe in the ship which has as pilot and captain the loving Father, and Jesus Christ his Son, and the Holy Spirit which is the gentle breeze which brings glad tidings from our Father's throne to cheer and gladden the hearts of all his Saints. Those three names which will ring down on all the ages of time and save from shipwreck the souls of innumerable multitudes. Then let each and all, boy or girl, youth or maiden, help to Throw out the life-line across the dark wave,

 For there is a brother whom some one can save;
 Somebody's sister is drifting away,
 Help with your prayers ere they sink 'neath the wave.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Louise Scott, New Albany, Indiana, has been a sufferer for quite a long time and requests prayers of the Saints for her recovery, and spare her to her old mother.

Among other notable art features of the Century during 1909 will be a number of reproductions in color of some of the most exquisite paintings of living American artists. While Maurice Boutet de Monvel, author of the beautiful Jeanne d'Arc series and illustrator of French songs, whose charming work is seldom seen nowadays, has prepared for the magazine a new group of drawings to accompany an article by his son Roger on the Veterans of the Invalides, an institution about to be discontinued.

Editors Herald: I could not get along without the HERALD and Autumn Leaves, as they are all the preacher we have here. If any of the elders come this way, we would be glad to have them come and see us, and if there are any Latter Day Saints near here, we would be glad to meet them. Ever wishing for the welfare of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MT. VERNON, Washington, October 20, 1908.

Editors Herald: I get so hungry and thirsty for the bread of life and communion with God's people! Although I have the church papers and some of the books, yet that is not all. I should be so pleased could I take of the Lord's supper once again with the dear Saints. God has blessed me many times and in many ways in answer to prayer. Pray for me, Saints, that I may have that faith once delivered to the Saints of olden time. In writing to your pages is the only way I have of bearing my testimony to my brothers and sisters of this work, and of God's goodness to me, one of his erring children.

It seems that the elders have forgotten us entirely, as they do not come our way at all any more.

When I read of the faith and godly lives of the saints of old it makes me long for such times. Oh, if the Saints would only root pride out of their hearts, cast aside worldly things, and all unite as one sister and brotherhood, what peaceful times we might have and how soon the millennium might be ours to enjoy! What a grand thought, that we might be permitted to live and dwell with Christ here on earth a thousand years, where all will be peace and harmony, and each shall love his neighbor as himself, and all be of one heart and mind.

I fear this will find the waste-basket, for I feel my weakness and inability to say anything that will be interesting or edifying to my brothers and sisters.

Pray for me and mine, that we may endure to the end, and meet the Redeemer when Christ comes.

SR. ALICE SAVAGE.

SPRINGERTON, Illinois, October 20, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have not seen a letter from this part of the country for some time, and thought perhaps some would like to know how the work is prospering in Southern Illinois.

The writer has been in company with Elder H. Sparling since our late reunion at Brush Creek, which was a profitable one. We visited the Saints at Bellair and held meetings nearly two weeks. The Saints showed their appreciation by kindly and liberally providing for "ye missionaries," thus fulfilling the statement of Jesus: "They will feed you and clothe you and give you money," and, "By this ye shall know my disciples." We find there a noble band of Saints, among whom are a few young men just starting out in the ministry, and we are pleased to see them keeping up their appointments for preaching.

Among others whom we visited was a little band of Saints about fourteen miles northeast of Olney. We preached a week for them and found their hearts to be warm in the Master's cause. We could get no church to occupy, as the two dominant churches of that locality had built themselves a "little house," and then, for fear the other "lost sheep" should get a chance to preach, they voted the schoolhouse shut. But, thanks to Bro. and Sr. Hart, who had a large house, we preached there to interested crowds. The Saints here seem to know that the elders have to pay two cents a mile to ride on the train, and "showed their faith by their works."

We would like to mention all the good people and places, but space forbids. We also visited the Brush Creek Branch (the oldest one in the history of the church, I believe,) and were kindly cared for. From there we came to Springerton, where we unfurled the gospel banner with good attendance. The Saints here, too, have heeded the counsel of our leaders who advised that the Saints see that the elders are not compelled to call on the Bishop or his agents for expenses. In this they have kindly presented the writer with a much needed suit of clothes, for which we feel more thankful than words can express. May the Father bless all his children in their good works.

To the Saints in this district I wish to say, as president of the district Religio, that we expect to have a convention and entertainment in February, 1909. We want everybody to come and be prepared to contribute to the program. Due notice will be given as soon as arrangements have been made.

From here we will go home and cast a vote for "Billy" for the betterment of "our country."

I hope the Saints everywhere will respond freely to the present needs of the glorious gospel work, which has been intrusted to all.

I find Bro. Sparling to be a desirable companion in gospel work. He is loved and respected everywhere among God's people, and is able to give much needed counsel and instruction.

Ever praying for Zion's weal,

P. T. PLUMB.

DEER ISLE, Maine, October 19, 1908.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have contributed anything to your pages, because of the rush and hurry of everyday life, which seems needful to be kept up, if one would live and progress in this ever changing, busy world of ours. However, I have not lost interest in the Lord's work or feel cold in the blessed gospel which is able to save our souls if we will. On the contrary, I never, in all my Christian life, felt better spiritually, or had more zeal for the progress of my own life and the church than I feel to-day. For some reason there seems to be a sort of revival started in my heart, and I truly believe this is true of nearly if not all of the members of the Mountainville Branch, for there seems to be new life and energy manifested here.

The first Sunday of the present month we partook of the sacrament in our branch for the first time, I think, in two years. We are holding regular Wednesday evening prayer- and testimony-meetings; our Sunday-school has taken on new life and a better attendance, and our Sunday evening services have again been continued. So we feel to thank God first of all for these blessings, and hope and pray that they and others may continue, thus helping us as a body of Saints to prepare ourselves for the events yet to come.

Brn. Isaiah and George Ames, of Massachusetts, with their wives, arrived here some time ago, and have been truly a help and encouragement to us, Elder Isaiah, by his preaching while here, and Bro. George by his testimonies and valiant help in the Sunday-school, in which he was chosen as superintendent, as he will probably be with us this winter. Bro. Bullard has also dropped in on us and treated us to his ever helpful and encouraging words. So you see we have much to be thankful for even if everything does not go as we would have it.

We are looking forward to our district conference, which will meet here November 7 and 8, and are hopeful of good conditions, that many may be present, and by the presence of the Holy Spirit in our work, good may be accomplished and souls drawn nearer the kingdom of God.

In conclusion I will say that I am watching and praying daily, and trying by God's help to so run the race that as a result I may gain a crown of life promised to the faithful.

And I find that watching myself and praying to God takes up about all the time, so I have no time to watch others and find fault with my brother or sister.

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints everywhere, that I may continue faithful, that I may meet you in Zion and see you face to face, and I will continue to pray for you. May the dear Father bless his children everywhere, and help them speed the right.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

MILWAUKEE, Wisconsin, October 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: At the close of the Southern Wisconsin reunion, according to previous arrangement and request of some in and about Lancaster, Grant County, our district tent was shipped to that place, and on September 9, I joined Elder G. J. Brookover and we began meetings there on the night of the 10th. Our audiences varied from thirty to one hundred and fifty and some few came every night, unless hindered in some way. The tent was set upon a vacant lot, quite near to Bro. Brookover's house. The second week one aged woman by the name of Edwards was baptized. She is the mother of our genial Bro. John Edwards. I remained there nineteen days, and one more, a man by the name of Drue, gave his name, but was not baptized as it stormed on the day set. The writer was called home on account of sickness, and by letter from Bro. Brookover I learn he has baptized eight or nine in all, so the effort was not in vain. Lancaster has been preached to many times in the years gone, by Brn. W. S. Pender, J. W. Peterson, M. T. Short, and others, and now we see the time of harvest has come. We believe, however, that the prayers of the Saints at Oak Ridge, Flora Fountain, and in Lancaster, had much to do with the result that has followed. To God be all the glory.

While at home, Bro. H. A. Stebbins arrived at Evansville, and we held forth in the Saints' hall nearly a week. Bro. Stebbins had been to see his aged aunt, Sr. Hannah Loveland, at Belleville, who for years has been confined to her bed, but who still has faith in the restored gospel. Bro. Stebbins also preached at other points and was welcomed back to the State of his boyhood. The Saints of Evansville are waiting and praying for the time of harvest there. In the past quite a goodly amount of sowing has been done. I came here a week ago to-day, and Sunday had the pleasure of baptizing in Lake Michigan, with the waves three feet high, one Elmer Hoover, son-in-law of Bro. C. F. Gillett, formerly of Chicago. Just before he was baptized we had to wait for a large wave to come in and when it struck us it sent a spray clear over us, so Elmer was sprinkled and then baptized.

The Saints are widely scattered here, there are only about fifteen active Saints, and some others we hope will soon see the need of doing more for the cause. A private house is all that can be had at present. This city is so dense with smoke from the forest fires in Wisconsin and Michigan that the sun refuses to shine. Great destruction of property is taking place, also many lives have been lost, and the end is not yet. No rain and everything dry as can be.

Your brother and servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

MONDAMIN, Iowa, October 5, 1908.

Editors Herald: I attended the reunion at Little Sioux and was surely shown my duty to a certain extent. I am young in this life, but by the aid of your and my prayers, I mean to press forward and do what the Lord desires of me. I am fifteen years old and I live in a neighborhood known as Sandy Point. We have a church and a few members here. There is also a United Presbyterian church here in which the Free Methodists are holding forth. I have attended three times and will say it is queer indeed. Of course I am known as a Latter Day Saint and I am not ashamed of the name.

He, the preacher, said there were people "who worship old Joe Smith," drawling out the same in a sneering tone, and then said, "But he died and I have never heard of him since." This man is about twenty-two years old, so he could not have been born, even, when Joseph Smith was killed.

I believe there are many sincere people among them who do not enter our church and who seldom open their Bibles. They go just out of curiosity. These preachers tell them stories and pretend to quote the Bible, which they pick to pieces, taking what they want and leaving the rest.

They invited me to come back again. I said, "All right, I will; but when I do, I am going to ask you about those mistakes." I am weak and am not as well posted as I should be, and I ask your prayers that we may be able to open the eyes of the ignorant that they may go up and not down.

I am sending for the "Glimpse of the Government of God," by Paul Hanson. If he reads this I would like to have him write to me. He has promised to come and preach for us.

Saints, remember me in your prayers, that God may be with me when I go to stand in defense of this church.

Your sister,

LAURA E. MANN.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, June 29, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have not lost faith in the grand work of God. My hope and trust are greater than ever, for which I am thankful to God. I have been sick for some time; but in the kindness of God I have been preserved. The Lord said, "I will have a tried people," and so it was very hard on me. I am still quite weak.

During my sickness I had a vision which I will not relate, as it would make this letter too lengthy, but it did me a great deal of good. I have told nobody but my wife and nearest friends.

The elders and others of the priesthood called on me during my affliction, and they were a great comfort to me, for which I feel grateful to them. In studying over my situation during my convalescence, the ordinance of the sacrament was presented to me. I have always thought a great deal of this ordinance, and so I decided to get to sacrament-meeting on the next Sunday. I told my wife, who was my steady nurse and companion, telling her I must get to that meeting, if at all possible. She was willing to do what she could to help. A conveyance was procured to take me and I enjoyed the whole of the meeting. My hope and faith were strengthened; I felt better at once after partaking of the bread and wine.

I desired to bear my testimony, and while standing was hard on me, I arose to my feet. Just then a brilliant light appeared before me which quickly disappeared; but as I remained on my feet the following words were given to me: "It is wise to sit down, if you are not able," and so I sat down. I will never forget this meeting. I was taken home happily rejoicing, having no pain. I felt as well as ever.

While at a sacrament-meeting early in June to my surprise there were very few there. I said in my heart, "My God, are we the only few that need the sacrament of the Lord?" I could not get rid of the thought. Let us study well in our heart and mind the beauty of this ordinance. Never let it pass by. Missing it may cause us to slumber. I know in my heart that Jesus is coming, and that shortly, and more blessed are those that have prepared and dress themselves in unspotted garments. If we slumber we will know nothing of his coming till it is too late, and our knocking at the door will be of no avail. "Go, get oil in your lamps." But there will be none to get, as there will be none who will have more than their need. The time is lost.

Now, my brethren and sisters, let us heed the words of God, where he says for us to meet together often to eat bread and drink wine in remembrance of his suffering for our sins.

I pray God to bless every one that has stood upon the banks of the water, making a solemn covenant with God to honor and obey him and thereby witness that we love him. Where we have come short, may he in mercy forgive us. I need your prayers and ask you to remember me.

JAMES THOMSON.

CHITWOOD, Oregon, October 19, 1908.

Editors Herald: I came into this place the 24th of September, at the request of Bro. Oliver Johnson. He has a place here and a couple of little boys in the home of estimable citizens here, while he is section foreman, thirty miles or so away. While the people are all strangers to our work, they receive me kindly, and gave me a fair hearing, though I was opposed by the local Christian evangelical ministers. I went as far as Portland, en route to district conference; but anxiety about the work here, where but four sermons had aroused so unusual an interest that friends of but four days' acquaintance besought my early return if I must go, coupled with a call to Lebanon to administer to Sr. A. P. Morris, brought me back; and after a few more efforts here with increasing interest, Elder S. O. Pool came in, ostensibly to engage in debate with the Advents. But as they had not definitely arranged the time, he, with others of their preachers, called on me to arrange for discussion until their preacher arrived. I refused to arrange at once for discussion; but offered to divide the time or nights with him as a matter of courtesy until his opponent arrived, or other arrangements could be made. He chose the latter, and occupied the evening of the 14th inst., in making one of the most damaging attacks upon our work that it was ever my lot to listen to. He carried his audience with him as he read and quoted from Church History, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, the "dark side of the question, which Mr. Condit had not given them." Peep-stone, bank failure, Rigdon's defiant speech, false prophecies, such as Far West Temple and Independence Temple revelations, and many other things that an hour and a half of rapid talk would admit of, shunning some things of course, that were "unfit to read in public." I did not sleep much that night, but was greeted by a full house the following night, and succeeded in turning the tide in our favor by showing up his deceptive course; and the following night as Elder Ward of the Advent Church had arrived, we (Pool and I) divided the night between us to give him a chance to try to even up, and Saturday and last night the war waged between these men; Ward affirming that the ten commandments are binding upon us as stated in the twentieth chapter of Exodus. They have arranged for eight nights, and perhaps more. We have partially arranged for a discussion on church propositions, but the people will likely be ready for a rest by the time this is over.

I visited Srs. Adams and Crawford at Eugene and Springfield, holding some meetings at the home of the former. Both sisters are doing what they can to get the truth before their neighbors. I was disappointed in my plans to meet with the Condon Saints in conference; but trust they, with all the scattered Saints and branches throughout Oregon, will unite in every good work to carry on the cause of truth. We are so short of help it makes me nearly despair to see the many places where no effort can be made for lack of workers. May the Lord send more into the harvest, is our prayer.

S. D. CONDIT.

P. S.—Though we do not measure up to this champion debater in talent and ability, if no one is sent to our rescue, we will try to make it interesting to him, if the Lord permit. Some here are apparently near the water's edge, though we have given them no real excuse to express themselves as yet. My mission address is Portland, as yet. But will be at Chitwood for a while, if all is well.

MINT, Missouri, October 13, 1908.

Dear Herald: I write you a few lines, and I truly hope that I will receive the desired blessings from them. We are in need of some money, and hope as many of the dear Saints as can will send us their mites, let it be little or much. It will be appreciated very highly, as we are out of a home, but will take us a claim near the Grove Springs Branch of the Latter Day Saint church if the good and kind Saints will help us to raise the money to build us a house. We just aim to build a kind of temporary house until we can do better. My husband is a blacksmith; but he is getting old, and not able to do hard work. But we have two little boys, one twelve and the other ten, and that is why we want a home of our own, so we can teach our little boys to work on a farm, so they can help us to make a living. We also have one daughter fifteen years old. She is a member of the church, and our little boys say they want to be baptized this fall when Bro. A. M. Baker comes to preach for us at our little Grove Springs Branch. They think Bro. A. M. Baker is all the preacher there ever was.

My husband is a priest, and is trying to do what he can to build up the cause of Christ. Bro. G. W. Anderson is our elder. Any who wish to know about our standing in this church may refer to Bro. Anderson, Grove Springs, Missouri.

Dear Saints, pray for me that I may endure to the end.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. J. C. ATKINSON.

ROSE CITY, Michigan, October 27, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have a small branch of Saints here and are trying to place the gospel before the people of this place. The conference of the Central Michigan District convened here on the 17th and 18th inst. We had a very profitable time. Our little church is so we can use it. We had the district tent here and served meals in it. It will be remembered this is the battle-ground of the celebrated Clark Braden. He said he intended to kill Mormonism here; but the so-called Mormonism still lives and is prospering.

Dear Saints, we are all poor here, and we are in need of help to finish our church. I take this means of soliciting help. So, brethren and sisters, do not pass this by without studying carefully to see if you can not sell something which you could get along without, and by so doing sacrifice a little toward helping the Lord's work way up here in this part of the vineyard. Remember, dear brother and sister, it is the Lord's work. We need the building completed. We were told by the spirit of prophecy that there were many more here to be added. The few Saints have struggled hard to erect the building, so if you want to encourage them, send us something and ask the Lord to bless us in our undertaking. Address our branch clerk, Cora E. Janson, Rose City, Michigan. No matter how small the amount it will be gratefully received. So do not think it's just another call for money, but send us your mite.

Your brother,

ROSS INGLERIGHT.

COLDWATER, Michigan, October 29, 1908.

Editors Herald: I wrote of two-day meetings in various parts of this district a short time ago. Please indulge me to further note progress. After the meeting at Grant, Michigan, attended by Bro. Moler, D. W. and Alvin Ellis, Bro. Moler and myself met at Galien, where a two-day effort was hugely enjoyed with an annex of four evenings. On Sunday, the writer baptized two persons, while Bro. Moler ministered the word at the chapel. The Saints at Galien are the same good, faithful Saints as of yore, and are anxious for the progress of the work.

We moved on to the next appointment, October 3 and 4, at Knox, Indiana, where we held forth about eleven times. Audiences sometimes small, and sometimes larger. The latter part of the week, the services closed, as the district conference and Sunday-school convention met at Clear Lake, Indiana, the 9th, 10th, and 11th. The conference was largely attended, especially Sunday. The business was routine, and a splendid spirit prevailed. The Sunday-school convention was interesting, and the superintendent, Sr. Ella Davis, provided a fine program. Bro. J. W. Wight was expected to be present; but we learned with regret that sickness prevented. We stayed over and held a few services during the week which followed, but left on Friday to conduct a two-day meeting at Hartford, Michigan. At this point the writer was the only speaker. He spoke eight times, beginning Friday evening and concluding Monday evening. At the conclusion of the Sunday evening services, we officiated in the ceremony which united as husband and wife, Bro. Edwin Myers and Sr. Annabel Robertson. May peace attend the happy pair. They both are exemplary and worthy. The bride was blessed, baptized, and married by the writer.

Returning to Clear Lake to meet appointments, we continued over the following Sunday, and in the evening repaired to the lake and buried two persons in baptism—one was our boy, Harold, and the other a Sr. Bowman who entertained the ministry during the Scott-Braden debate at South Scott, Indiana.

On Monday evening, after a short sermon, the Clear Lake Saints and friends exemplified the principle of "Christianity applied," by presenting Sr. Scott and family with the substantial of life. I know the gift was from a pure motive, and God will bless them for it. They are like our heavenly Father—always on the giving hand where necessity exists, and they hunt for the necessity. How happy they made us feel, they do not know, as the year has been a hard one for ministers' families.

I am now at home until after the election, when I go to Kansas City to engage in twelve sessions of debate, to be repeated in Independence soon after. Mr. G. W. Roberts, my opponent, writes: "Will announce debate beginning November 10, at seven o'clock." I ask to be remembered before the throne of grace in these conflicts, that truth may prevail, that physical power of endurance may be given.

The presidential campaign is quiet in these parts—not much enthusiasm on either side. Speeches are very few. Perhaps people have made up their minds.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

RAVENWOOD, Missouri, October 24, 1908.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of October 14, is an article over the signature of Fred B. Farr, entitled "Nephite apostles." I am willing to confess that I am one who has been educated to believe that there were apostles in the church on this continent, and will still continue to believe it unless greater evidence is produced than I have yet seen. We, as a people, preach, "To the law and to the testimony." We, as a people, should stand behind that which is written. More than that, a man should be very positive he is right before he takes a position of any kind.

In Ephesians 4:12, the Scriptures give us to understand that God gave apostles and the rest of the officers for the perfecting of saints. If the church on the eastern continent could not be perfected without apostles, pray tell us how could the church on this continent? It would take the same cause to produce the same effect.

Again the brother says there is a difference between an apostle and a disciple. He says an apostle is "one sent." We agree on that. It is plain also, and no one will deny the position, that Jesus chose twelve. Then if I can prove that Jesus "sent" the twelve that he chose, I have proved my position. Nephi, fifth chapter, ninth verse, Jesus told the twelve that he had chosen to "go forth . . . and declare the words that I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth." Was the commission to his apostles at Jerusalem any greater? I think not.

Again the brother says he defies any one to show in the Book of Mormon where they were called apostles. Well, if I can, I suppose the brother will be converted, so will turn to Book of Mormon, chapter 4, paragraph 7. Moroni here says, "There were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles." Moroni calls them apostles, and I take his testimony in preference to that of any other man.

Again, let us turn to the first chapter of Mormon, ninth paragraph, where it says that the people of this land shall be judged by the twelve that Jesus had chosen on this land. What does it mean by the term twelve? Why, he meant the twelve apostles of course; and Jesus, speaking of the twelve at Jerusalem, calls them disciples, the same as he called them that he chose on this continent.

Again I invite your readers to the second chapter of Moroni. He instructs the twelve that on whomsoever they lay their hands, they shall receive the Holy Ghost; "for thus do my apostles," showing that their office and calling was at par with the twelve that he chose at Jerusalem.

Editors Herald: About a year ago you printed a formula for a sponge for the body which I tried and found it to be excellent. I regret to say I have mislaid or destroyed the HERALD containing it. If you have a record of it, will you kindly send it to me and greatly oblige. It may help you to remember to know it contained alcohol, sea salt, spirits of ammonia, etc. Thanking you in advance for your trouble.

HEMET, California, October 26, 1908.

Editors Herald: Who and when? Who will reply to R. B. Neal in the Christian Standard for October 16, and when will they do so? He is making loud and bold challenges, and this number has been handed me as a "squelcher." I have promised that we should hear the other side, but am getting anxious for the reply lest my friends think we can not successfully make reply.

T. S. BROWN.

PEORIA, Illinois, October 19, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have now been taking the HERALD and Autumn Leaves for a year, and feel that I could not get along without them. There are so many good instructions in them. I feel to rejoice when I read how this great latter-day work is progressing. My only desire is to live a pure life; yet I do many wrongs and I feel my weakness is great. I desire the prayers of all the Saints in my behalf and also in behalf of my sisters and brothers, that we may ever be found ready and willing to do anything that our dear Savior would have us do.

I and two sisters work in an institution and we realize there are many temptations to overcome. Yet we desire to live aright. How glad we would be could we only get positions at the Sanitarium, where we could be among the Saints and worship with them. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and asking an interest in the prayers of the Saints that we may ever be found faithful, I am your sister,

ELLA NORMAN.

An Open Letter.

[The following letter was published in the Northwest Tribune, of Stevensville, Montana, and later was sent to Elder Iverson by registered letter; but up to date of sending this to the HERALD for publication, no reply had been received. The open letter and propositions for debate were also published in the Western News, Hamilton, Montana. The propositions and rules for the debate, which followed this letter, are not given below.]

DEER LODGE, Montana, September 4, 1908.

Elder Paul Iverson,

Kalispell, Montana.

Sir: During a recent camp-meeting held by your people, called the Seventh Day Adventists, at Victor, Montana, you lectured on Joseph Smith and the church he organized, commonly called Mormon, but properly known as the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. You remember conversing with me on the subject while we were on the train going to Missoula a few days before the beginning of your camp-meeting. You informed me that you were going to lecture on the subject of Mormonism; that you knew all about it, or words to that effect. You remember also I said I would be there to hear you if I could.

As it was impossible for me to attend, and to show you I am fair, I issue this challenge to you to meet a representative of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in public debate to be held at Victor not earlier than October 1, and not later than January 1. Elder S. S. Smith, of Sagle, Idaho, missionary in charge of Montana, will select the representative of our church and you may represent your side of the question, or if you are afraid to meet us you may select any one you wish in your denomination. I do this to let people know we are not afraid of a public exposure. We are not Mormons any more than you are Millerites or White-mans.

I give the propositions for debate and request a favorable reply to this letter, either public or private, but prefer a public reply through a local paper.

HALE W. SMITH.

News From Branches

BISBEE AND PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

Having changed our place of residence from Bisbee to 918 East Monroe Street, Phoenix, Arizona, I write that all concerned may know my present address, and also to invite all Saints who attend the territorial fair, November 9 to 16, to call upon us at the above address. I should be glad to receive a call or letter from any Saints living in or near Phoenix.

While writing, I will also give a few other news items. We found a missionary home in Bisbee two years and four months. Until a few weeks ago, we had no disposition to leave there. Wife and I decided, about the same time, that we ought to leave Bisbee. At first we preferred to go into Mexico; but investigation made us think this impracticable at present. After consultation with Bro. F. M. Sheehy, our minister in charge, Phoenix was decided upon. I feel satisfied our work in Bisbee was profitable, and our departure opportune. We baptized but seven during our stay in Bisbee, but we made many friends, and the people of Bisbee who care to know have some idea of the Reorganized Church, and what it stands for.

Four of the baptisms referred to occurred the last Sunday we spent in Bisbee. Two of them, Donna Austin and James Farley, were products of the Sunday-school. Home influence, and likely influence at Lamoni, where she attended school, contributed to the baptism of Sr. L. L. Fike's youngest daughter, Frances. The other, Bro. Henry Goldie, is a long-time friend of the Farley brothers, and has investigated our views for a long time.

The Saints at Bisbee are heroes, every one. A little over six months ago, we bought a house and lot, and converted the house into a church at a cost of six hundred and fifty dollars. In six months the few Saints there, aided by outside help, paid off two hundred and fifty dollars of debt, twenty dollars interest, thirty dollars for seats and other expenses, making in all over three hundred dollars. There are still four hundred dollars due.

One week before we left, in order to arrange for the payment of this balance, I presented a subscription paper, and thirteen dollars a month was subscribed. The next Sunday, this sum was increased to nineteen dollars a month, without counting the help the sisters' aid society will contribute. So we feel satisfied that the debt is well cared for.

Bro. John Lamb, an elder and jeweler, came to Bisbee a day or two before we left, to take a position as watch-repairer, with Mr. Gillman. Bro. T. W. Davis, a priest, also resides in Bisbee; and our energetic missionary, Bro. Alvin Knisley, intends to return to Bisbee soon. So we felt at liberty to leave there.

In the two years we spent in Bisbee, we also acquired some knowledge of Spanish, and have been able to make some use of it. We translated the Epitome into Spanish, and also wrote a little tract, entitled, La Restauracion, the first literature published in Spanish by the Reorganized Church, so far as the writer knows. I have also preached about eighteen discourses in Spanish, using Spanish hymns, thus conducting the entire service in Spanish, including the prayer and benediction. In the service of music and song my wife renders valuable aid, using the Billhorn organ. The most of these meetings were held on the street, though a few were held at the residence of Senora McNally. She is a Mexican, though her name is not Spanish, she having married a Scotchman. She does not speak English; but her daughter does. She made me a present of fifty cents, our first and only donation from a Mexican.

In Phoenix we hope "to carry water on both shoulders"; that is, speak to Americans in English, and to Mexicans in Spanish.

We "chased" over Phoenix a day and a half, and when we found rooms that suited us, we discovered that the house belonged to a Mexican lady, who will occupy the other two rooms in the same building. We also have Mexican neighbors on one side of us, and so we are happy. No American could be neater than the lady with whom we live.

I must not omit to mention the "surprise" party a few evenings before we left Bisbee. Wife and I were decoyed to Bro. James Farley's, and all the Saints who could attend, and a few "outsiders," met there and spent the evening. We were presented with a purse, and a number of valuable and valued presents. We hope to meet the Saints of Bisbee again, under conditions as harmonious and pleasant as when we left them.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The blessed Spirit was present at our monthly sacrament service and fed our hungry souls with manna from on high. We were also encouraged and instructed through the preached word during the month, delivered by Brn. Tanner, Archibald, and S. A. Burgess.

Our Sunday-school celebrated the twentieth anniversary of its organization October 18, in a pleasing and appropriate manner.

The regular priesthood meeting of the branch was held October 13, when section 104 of the Doctrine and Covenants was under consideration.

Two Great Dangers to Eyesight.

In the November issue of the Woman's Home Companion, Doctor Woods Hutchinson raises his lance against the bogie of civilization making the race blind.

"The dangers to which the modern eye is exposed fall into two great classes—disease, and overuse from near work. Here another great consoling fact faces us, and that is that while overwork and consequent eye strain are by far the commonest troubles that befall the modern eye, discomfort and inefficiency are as far as they go in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred. Never yet was an eye lost solely from eye strain. It is a fact that ninety-nine and nine tenths per cent of all blindness is due to disease, and not to overwork.

"More significant yet, seven tenths of the diseases which produce blindness are the acute infections, against which civilization wages an unceasing and victorious conflict. Small-pox it has practically overcome, thanks to vaccination. The others hold their own as 'blindness,' on account of our highly intelligent amblyopia in declining to recognize them officially or mention them in public. Just so long as we continue to consider it immodest and improper to discuss these blights, so long they will continue to put out the eyes of little children by the thousands."

Doctor William Bayard Hale, best known, perhaps, for his full and vivid narrative of the daily life of President Roosevelt, was a guest of the German Emperor on board his yacht this summer, obtaining from him a frank and free expression of his views on many topics of current public interest. This record is to be published in an early issue of the Century.

People out of the church who say they "are just as good as church-members" make me think of the article the grocer hands down as "just as good" when he has not got the real thing! You might say to the critic, "Then you admit that you are not the real thing, but something 'just as good'! Ever since the world was, that has been one of the chief deceits of Satan. Besides, you only say you are just as good. Anyway, church-members are not going to heaven on their own goodness. If you are going to heaven on your own goodness, and are not any better than they are, you are a goner!"—Selected.

MORE ABOUT THE EMMANUEL MOVEMENT.

In the HERALD for October 21 we gave some notice to recent utterance on the question of divine healing, including statements made by men who are prominent in the Emmanuel movement. Since writing that editorial two important articles have appeared outlining more definitely the scope and aim of the Emmanuel Movement. Both of these articles appear in the Ladies' Home Journal, November. The first is by Reverend Elwood Worcester D. D., Ph. D., rector of Emmanuel Church, Boston, and originator of what is known as the Emmanuel Movement. The second article is by Reverend Lyman P. Powell, rector of Saint John's Church, Northampton, Massachusetts, and head of the Emmanuel clinic in his own church. The direct quotations that appear in this article from these two writers will be found in the periodical above cited.

Reverend Worcester began a series of experiments in 1905 but it was not until 1906 that what is known as the Emmanuel Movement was actually organized. He was assisted in his work by the assistant rector of his church, Reverend Samuel McComb, A. M., D. D., from whom we quoted in the HERALD of October 21.

We are convinced that in certain quarters their work has been overrated and almost wholly misunderstood. It has been hailed as a return to the power and blessings enjoyed by Christ and his apostles; in reality it bears little resemblance to their work. It has been classed as divine healing; whereas it is, on its own confession, human healing,—nothing more.

Their claim is the well known claim made by eminent psychologists, that in certain diseases, more especially nervous diseases wherein the victim is self-deluded, the student of psychology can work a cure by mental suggestion. They admit the human nature of their work and the absence of the divine by refusing to treat diseases of a more serious nature.

Reverend Worcester says:

We have associated ourselves with able and conservative medical men from the beginning, and we treat no case until it has been passed upon and diagnosed by good medical authority. The character of the treatment is always indicated by the examining physician, and the patient is re-examined by him at frequent intervals. We have confined our practice to the functional disorders because we believe that is the legitimate sphere of our work, which is, of course, really psychotherapy.

Again he says of the class of disease subject to cure by the Emmanuel Movement:

As these conditions frequently arise through the mind, and as they are accompanied by no gross organic lesions, they can be removed through the mind and through a well-regulated manner of living. It is different, however, with diseases which involve a serious injury to the elements of the nervous system or to the organs of the body. There is no power in psychotherapy in any of its forms which can cure true epilepsy or paralysis or Bright's disease or tuberculosis, or, in short, any disease which involves serious lesions of the brain or other organs.

Reverend Powell says:

Every applicant must first submit to diagnosis. If organic trouble is disclosed he is not accepted as a patient. If the disease appears to be simply functional the applicant is registered for treatment and passed on into the rector's study.

He also states that their work has proceeded along lines suggested by Doctor S. Weir Mitchell, who declares, "There is no scientific record of any case of organic disease having been cured by any form of influence exerted through the mind." Mr. Powell continues, "The Emmanuel Movement rests its front, and refuses to take any forward step into the field of the organic until the medical profession itself shall order an advance.

Reverend Worcester studied psychology for seven years and taught it the same length of time. One of his parishioners was Doctor S. Weir Mitchell, the eminent neurologist, who in fact suggested to him a union of clerical and medical treatment. Reverend McComb was a student of abnormal psychology for three years under Doctor William Graham, another noted neurologist. These men assert that no one should take up the Emmanuel Movement who has not made a thorough study of psychology.

We do not wish to be unfair to these gentlemen. We find no fault with them for using their mental powers to alleviate suffering, and it has been admitted by one of the leading physicians of Boston, Doctor Richard Cabot, writing in the Outlook, that they have done considerable good and no harm. But we may as well understand the limitations of their work.

We gather from the above quotations that they accept no cases that do not come well within their own powers as men who have a knowledge of the laws of mind. Cases of organic disease are remanded to the physician as being beyond their reach. In this the admission is at least tacitly made that the physicians are wiser and more able than they; this of course indicates the absence of God in the movement. If God were doing the healing the questions in each case would be the faith of the individual and the necessity and wisdom of a cure. Granted the right conditions, organic diseases would be cured as surely as functional diseases. A case of true paralysis could be cured as surely as a case of false paralysis. Bright's disease is no more difficult for God to heal than nervous dyspepsia. These men admit no divine guidance; and refuse to move forward in individual cases or in their attitude towards disease in general without medical advice and permission.

Their cures are such as Professor Thomas Jay Hudson, in his book, The Law of Psychic Phenomena, claims can be performed by any student of psychology upon himself or another. See his chapter on "A new system of mental therapeutics." They have no essential connection with the gospel or with the church of Christ. The cures performed by Christ and the apostles were gospel signs, signs to the believers (see Mark 16). The processes employed by the Emmanuel Movement may be employed by one who is not a Christian and may effect cures upon one who is not a Christian. They are not a sign of anything except that the practitioner has made a study of the power of mind over matter and knows what diseases come within his reach and how to reach them.

It is not divine healing and not even essentially Christian healing. The reader will note again that we do not condemn the movement so far as it goes; we simply assert that it is not the Christ movement and must not be confounded therewith. It is not a restoration of the power that was bestowed upon the ministry of old.

By way of contrast, imagine Christ confronting the blind man. Before he will proceed he says, "Call in a physician. If his disease is organic I can do nothing for him. If it is functional I will undertake his cure."

Imagine Peter and John before the gate of the temple face to face with the man who had been lame from birth. A physician is called and declares the case genuine. The defects are constitutional and congenital. Peter and John refuse to attempt his cure and refer him to a specialist. Or, discovering him to be a victim of autosuggestion, one whose lameness is the result of a settled conviction that he can not walk, they proceed to exert their mental powers. They seek to dominate his mind and fill it with confidence and teach him to say, "I am about to be healed. My lameness is departing. I am healed."

We do not condemn those who study the laws of psychology with a view to using them in the treatment of disease. Christ understood the laws by which he healed. We may as well understand the laws by which we heal in his name, so far as humanity coöperates with God in that healing. The point is that if God is with us we have divine power back of us and while studying we need turn no case away as beyond the power of God to heal. In our opinion the latter-day work includes the true Emmanuel movement. Emmanuel, being interpreted, means "God with us." The so-called Emmanuel Movement being examined seems to carry on its face the evidence that God is not with it. It goes as far as man can go and asks for nothing beyond the reach of man.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DEFINITION OF GOD AND THEIR POSITION REGARDING HEALING.

Judge Septimus J. Hanna, of California, one of the ablest exponents of Christian Science, recently addressed an audience of about two thousand people in the city of Des Moines. As a matter of interest to our readers we here reproduce some extracts from his speech as it was reported in the Register and Leader, November 2:

Christian Science teaches that God is in truth almighty. If he is almighty then surely he is correctly defined by the other terms, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, supreme, and infinite. He who is all powerful is always all powerful. He who is omnipresent is never absent. He who is all wise is never less than that, could not be by the very necessity of his all wisdom.

Objection is sometimes made that Christian Science is heterodox because, as the objectors claim, it declares against God's personality.

The Christian Science definition of God does not describe a more impersonal God, as that term is commonly used and understood, than does the orthodox definition as contained in the Westminster Confession of Faith. This definition is substantially accepted by all churches calling themselves evangelical. I quote it almost in full:

"There is one living and true God, who is infinite in being and perfection, a most pure spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions, immutable, immense, eternal, incomprehensible, almighty, most wise, most holy, most free, most absolute, most loving, gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin. . . . God hath all life, glory, goodness, blessedness in and of himself, and is alone in and unto himself all-sufficient. . . . He is the alone fountain of all being, of whom, through whom, and to whom are all things. . . . His knowledge is infinite, infallible, and independent upon the creature, so as nothing is to him contingent or uncertain."

Words could not define a more impersonal God, if we accept words at their ordinary meaning. If we give to the words quoted from the Confession of Faith their ordinary and rational meaning, we could not imagine a better definition of an impersonal God. May I not fairly and honestly ask: How can we think of a God who is "infinite" as being composed of flesh, blood, and bones, with all the infirmities and limitations pertaining thereto? How can we thus think of a God who is "spirit"? How can we thus think of a God who is "eternal"? How can we thus think of a God who is without "body, parts, or passions"? I submit these questions in no spirit of captious criticisms, but by way of sincere and earnest inquiry.

The Methodist Episcopal Church adopts substantially the Westminster definition, but leaves out the word passions; thus describing God as being without "body or parts." And yet our orthodox ministerial friends—including those of the Methodist Church—oppose Christian Science largely upon the ground that, as they claim, it teaches that God is not a person. It remains for our orthodox friends, not for Christian Scientists, to explain how a God who is "infinite," who is "spirit," who is "eternal," who is "without body, parts, or passions," can be a person in the ordinary sense of the term, or a merely "big man," as he is so commonly understood to be.

The definition above quoted is found in the Westminster Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian Church of the United States; and, as I have said, has been substantially adopted by all the orthodox Christian churches. It does not appear in what is called the Shorter Catechism. The book from which I quote bears date of 1906, so that it stands as authority now.

I do not hesitate to say that the Christian Science definition of God is even more personal, in the correct sense of the term, than is that of the orthodox churches as set forth in their creeds or articles of faith. In evidence of this I quote briefly from the Christian Science text-book. (The lecturer here read from pages 116 and 330 of Science and Health.)

The assertion of God's presence and power runs through the Old Testament. How could words express a more impersonal being, viewed from the standpoint of mere anthropomorphism than the following from the one hundred and nineteenth Psalm: "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me and thy right hand shall hold me."

Jesus' plain words are of themselves sufficient to settle any question as to God's anthropomorphism. He distinctly declares God to be spirit. (It is wrongly translated in the old version as "a spirit") and adds that those who worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. While John, the beloved disciple, as distinctly says, "God is love."

In further corroboration of the true conception of God and his power and presence in his universe and in his world, I desire to call attention to another definition of God given by the Psalmist, in the one hundred and third Psalm: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits: who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth thy mouth with good things, so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's." This is either mere abstract poetical sentiment or else it is a declaration of eternal truth, a definition of the eternal God. We accept it as the latter.

We believe in just such a God as the Psalmist here sings of. A God who possesses the power to forgive and who does forgive all the iniquities of his children, a God who possesses the power to heal and who does heal all diseases of his children, who redeemeth their life from destruction, who crowneth them eternally with loving-kindness and tender mercies. I cite this definition of God, not because it stands alone; we find just such conceptions running all through the Scriptures if we look for them. Have we sufficiently looked for them? Have we been generally taught of such a God? On the contrary, have we not been too generally taught of a God who so far from forgiving all the iniquities of his children, has provided a means and place of eternal punishment for such of them as fail to live up to a prescribed course of conduct? A God who so far from healing all the diseases of his children, sends disease upon them in order to chasten and make them better? This manifestly was not David's conception of God. If it was, his own plain words falsify that conception.

In immediate connection with the one hundred and third Psalm I now call your attention to a part of the New Testament record which we consider as fundamental Christian doctrine or teaching. I refer to the great commandment given by Jesus to his disciples, called by some Bible commentators his "Great commission of twelve." If it is true that this part of the Bible is fundamental Christian doctrine or teaching, then surely those who desire to live Christian lives can not too much study nor too well understand it. For present purposes, I quote the account contained in Matthew 10:

"Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

"And as ye go preach, saying the kingdom of heaven is at hand.

"Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give.

"Provide neither gold nor silver, nor brass in your purses. Nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for thy workman is worthy of his meat." Or of his hire, or wages, as it is elsewhere rendered.

This commandment is a unit. It is not two commandments. There is in this language no authority to separate or subdivide it. No more authority to do this than there is to reject it as a whole. The words relating to healing sickness and doing other works there mentioned are not only part of the general commandment, but of part the very sentence in which occur the words relating to preaching. Yet we have been taught to believe that while a part of this commandment was intended for all times and all peoples, another part was intended only for a particular time and a particular people. In other words, that the part relating to preaching the gospel was to be handed down to all the nations of the world, until the heathen nations should be converted to the Christian religion, but that the part relating to healing the sick and doing the other works mentioned was intended only for the time of Jesus and his disciples. Or, in yet other words, the theoretical part was to be perpetuated, but the practical part, the doing of the work, was to be relegated to the dead ages of the past, left away back beside the Sea of Galilee. Christian Scientists can not agree to this attempt to cut out or make obsolete this part of the great commandment. Had they no other authority than this which I have quoted, they would feel compelled to maintain that this commandment has not been fully complied with, and shall not be fully complied with, until the sick are healed and the other works mentioned therein accomplished, in accordance with the teachings and methods of the founder of the Christian religion. But they are not compelled to rest upon this alone. This commandment is substantially reiterated in the other gospels. . . .

Again, in Mark 16 we read: "And these signs shall follow them that believe; in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Jesus read from the Prophet Esaias the following concerning his mission:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."

This is a clear and comprehensive declaration of the mission of the Christ. We see from what has been quoted that this mission, in its mighty entirety, was passed on to Jesus' disciples, by them to be handed down to all nations. There is no escape from this conclusion when we group together the sayings of the Master, and give them their plain and unmistakable meaning.

It is a matter of history that for three hundred years after the inauguration of the Christian era the sick were healed by the early Christians without resort to material means or remedies. Gibbon, in his history of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, treats elaborately of this subject under the head of the early Christians. He cites instances of persons, some of them well known Romans high in official authority, who were healed of diseases pronounced incurable by the then physicians, through the ministration of the early Christians. In this he does not stand alone; he is corroborated by other authentic historians. Then there are the writings of the early Christian Fathers, the Ante-Nicene Fathers, as they are called; they wrote exhaustively upon this subject, going into minute details as to the healing of the sick and the raising of the dead by the early Christians. Their writings constitute a library of themselves. They are yet extant. I am the possessor of a set of them and have read them with much interest and profit in the connection here mentioned. It is a matter of church history also that a number of the Christians sects, in their earlier church life, were believers in the efficacy of prayer alone to heal the sick, and practiced such prayer. This is true of the Waldenses, of the Moravians, of the Huguenots, of the Friends or Quakers, of the Baptists, and of the Methodists. According to the life of Martin Luther, he was a believer in the power of prayer to heal sickness and more or less practiced it. According to the life of John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, he for many years was a firm believer in the direct power of God to heal the sick, through the efficacy of prayer, and practiced it not only for himself, but for others.

An instance is related where he restored himself to health almost immediately from a severe fever which had hung upon him for several days by asking God's direct help, and by revolving in his mind and contemplating some of the very Scriptural passages to which I have called your attention. It is also a matter of record in connection with the Methodist Episcopal Church that when the bishops of that denomination are ordained they are instructed, among other things, to heal the sick, not as educated physicians, nor with drugs and medicines, but by virtue of their office.

Does this plain biblical authority, with its corroborative history, both sacred and secular, count for nothing now? Has it no meaning for us to-day? Had it no meaning for those preceding us? Have we a right to wipe it all out, or to declare it obsolete? Let us think for a moment. If the contention to which I have referred was true, namely, that a part of Jesus' great commandment has become obsolete, then it is mere dead letter and each of us would have a right at pleasure to take pen and ink and blot it out. We surely have the same right to blot it out physically that we have to blot it out mentally. Christian Scientists do not admit this right nor seek to exercise it. . . . In this endeavoring to obey the teachings of Christ Jesus in all their fullness and to establish upon earth his complete gospel, are Mrs. Eddy and her adherents doing rightly or wrongly? Are they or are they not entitled to the good will and the good fellowship of all who desire a full reign of Christ's gospel in the earth,—a complete redemption of humanity from all its sins, its sorrows, its griefs, its woes, its sicknesses and its deaths?

In attacking the generally accepted theological definition of God Christian Scientists enjoy a distinct advantage. In attacking the old time position of the Protestant churches on divine healing they enjoy an advantage. When put upon the defensive as regards their own definition of God and their own methods of healing they are at a disadvantage; and when their efforts to obey the teachings of Christ Jesus in all their fullness and to establish upon earth his complete gospel are fully examined in the light of ancient and modern revelation, the disadvantage is greatly multiplied.

AN EXPLANATION.

The article referred to by Bro. Lambert in the following communication came to the office without heading. The heading was supplied by Bro. Leon Gould. It was suggested by Bro. Lambert's official position in the church and was not used with any improper motive. The whole matter goes to show how easy it is to misjudge and condemn unjustly when we do not know the facts in the case:

In the HERALD for June 20, 1906, is contained an article over my signature under the caption of "A father's epistle."

Only a few days ago it incidentally came to my ears that some of the Saints said, at the time of the publication of said article, they thought my caption in bad taste; that I was a little too anxious to secure all the glory and prestige that might result from the use of the word father, which word is found in the revelation of April, 1901.

This is to say that the caption referred to above, is not mine. It was supplied at the Herald Office, by whom or for what purpose I do not know; but, in the absence of proof, it is safe to accept it as mistaken kindness of a friendly editor. I felt humiliated when I first saw it, and I have regretted it ever since.

I must say, however, that I am sorry that my life-work has not been sufficient to prevent the HERALD readers, referred to above, from forming a conclusion which is so reflective on the writer. I want no glory nor prestige which does not properly belong to me, and only that degree to which I may be entitled for the glory of God and the upbuilding of his work.

"Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me?"

I am willing, nay anxious, that God shall have the honor and glory which belong to his work.

Your brother in hope,
J. R. LAMBERT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A press dispatch from Atlanta, Georgia, reports that a Mormon church at Montecela was dynamited November 2. Four elders who had been holding meetings were driven from town.

The Ave Marie states that there are eight million non-Catholic negroes in America and suggests that they present a fine field for Catholic missionary work. In fact Catholics are already in that field trying to reach the negro first by administering to his physical needs.

The congregation of the Westminster Chapel, London, recently gave their pastor, Reverend Campbell Morgan, a fifteen thousand dollar automobile. The press has indulged in some discussion relative to the propriety of ministers owning automobiles. Though one might be donated to a minister the chances are that he could not afford to hire a professional chauffeur. He would be obliged to doff clerical garb. The sight of him in goggles, combined with the odor characteristic of the auto, might remind his parishioners of regions not commonly represented by the clergy, thus creating a prejudice against him. However, it is not likely that Latter Day Saint ministers will many of them face this vexing problem for some time to come.

To-day the [Boston] Herald abandons the comic supplement. That accompaniment of Sunday newspaperdom has had its day. We discard it as we would throw aside any mechanism that had reached the end of its usefulness, or any "feature" that had ceased to fulfill the purpose of attraction. Comic supplements have ceased to be comic. They have become as vulgar in design as they are tawdry in color. There is no longer any semblance of art in them, and if there are any ideals they are low and descending lower.—Boston Herald.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Bishop William Anderson accompanied by Elder Joseph Snively is making a tour of the Stake in the interest of the financial work.

Among the brethren of the ministry who have visited Lamoni during the past week we note Elders F. A. Smith, J. W. Wight, J. W. Peterson, Eli Hayer, Charles Harpe, C. E. Willey, S. K. Sorensen, J. T. Hackett, Columbus Scott, and others not now called to mind. Some of these brethren were called in on account of severe sickness, others were here on business, all availed themselves of their right of franchise, their highest right as citizens. The diversity of their political views indicates freedom of thought and individuality.

Moving picture shows are a feature of modern times. These shows may be made instructive and entertaining or dangerously the reverse. At one exhibition to which our notice was recently called four scenes were enacted, and in each of them a little child committed a murder. What will be the effect upon children who watch these very realistic scenes? Will some of them be tempted to see if they can do the like themselves?

The Patronesses cleared about three hundred and fifty dollars on their election-day dinner and bazaar. Proceeds go to Graceland.

I believe there is no worthier aim for young men to have than to do some useful, industrial work well and become master of it. Other successes will follow.

The Straight Road

THE CHURCH OF CHRIST. ITS PURPOSE. HOW ORGANIZED.

We understand that the church of Christ is a body of true believers in Christ, organized by him, after the pattern given him by his Father, who sent him. Whenever there was a people on the earth who served God, they constituted his church. Stephen speaks of the church in the wilderness (see Acts 7:38), and Christ said, "I will build my church."—Matthew 16:18. This language implies that his church was not to consist of a promiscuous mass of people thrown together without any approved order, but rather a building put together according to a special rule or pattern of divine architecture.

When Moses was told to build the tabernacle, he was directed of God, who said, "See . . . that thou make all things according to the pattern." Jesus says, "I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me."—John 6:38. Hence, Christ will build according to the pattern given him. But as no man can build without the material, so Christ must gather material for the building of his church. This material is to consist of intelligent beings who can become as "lively stones," and fill the purpose intended; in other words, men and women, who are willing and desirous of becoming part and parcel of the church and kingdom of God, and thus fulfill the purpose of their creation. For this purpose, Christ says, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel," etc.—Luke 4:18. The preaching of the gospel is the means by which the world may learn the nature and character of the church and kingdom of God. Hence we find him preaching the gospel of the kingdom. (See Mark 1.) Thus he gathers together such as believe his message, and in due time he commences to organize his church. But we find that he seeks divine guidance: "And it came to pass in those days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God. And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."—Luke 6:12, 13.

Thus he commenced the building of his church. He afterwards called seventy (see Luke 10), and put them in their place in the building. A more complete organization of his church will be found as we proceed. But the church is sometimes called "the household of faith," "the temple of God," "the house of God," "the body of Christ," "the church of the First-born," "the sheepfold," and sometimes "the kingdom of God." Whichever of these names it is called by, Christ is the builder. It is written, "I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him."—Ecclesiastes 3:14.

The church which Christ proposed to build is more fully described in 1 Corinthians 12 and in Ephesians 4. In the first named scripture Paul compares it with the human body, and shows that every member of the mystical body is equally essential to it, as the members of the human body are to that; and are equally dependent on each other, in order that the body may be perfect. After telling that "God hath set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him," he says, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues." Please notice, the apostle says "God hath set" these in the church. Webster defines the little word set thus, "To fix firmly; to make fast, permanent or stable," etc. God set the members in the human body, and all generations of men have had the same members that were set in the first man's body; and as Paul compares the church of Christ with the human body, it follows that so long as the church of Christ endures on the earth, the members of that body must remain. As every generation of humanity has the same members, so must every generation of the church of Christ have the same members, or they are not the church of Christ. The church must remain on the earth until God's purpose in its organization is accomplished, just as humanity must remain until the purpose of God in its creation is completed. The human body has not changed; if it had it would no longer be human. Neither can the church of Christ change and still be the body of Christ.

We will now try to learn from God's word the purpose for which these different members were set in the church. In Ephesians 4 we are told that when Christ ascended into heaven, he "gave gifts" (see 1 Corinthians 12), and that "he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Here then is the divine purpose in placing these members in the church; and as God's character does not change, his plans do not change, and his word endures for ever. The work to be performed through these instrumentalities is indeed a stupendous work. Human power and wisdom can not accomplish it. Only a ministry chosen and qualified of God can hope to bring about such a glorious result; and then only as mere instruments in the hand of the divine Builder, they being as "clay in the hands of the potter." But we are told, "They are not needed now." Is that true? Does not the human body need every member that God set in that body to render it a perfect human body? Can the church of Christ be a perfect body and any of its members be lacking? If not, then wherever the church of Christ is found the above mentioned means that God set in his church will be found. For "whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him." Are the people of God perfect yet? Can they dwell in his presence in their imperfect state? Perfection is not a momentary work. We are told to "grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 3:18.) Growth is a gradual increase. The plant does not become perfect all at once; nor does the child become a full grown man in a moment of time; nor does the saint attain to perfection as soon as he becomes a child of God. Our corrupted natures must be subdued, evil propensities overcome, our entire minds and bodies be brought into subjection to the will of God. In fact, we must become new creatures, clothed with the divine nature, before we can dwell in his presence; for it is written that without holiness no man shall see the Lord. Again, can the minister work effectively outside of God's order? If these were essential for the work of God's ministry in those days, are they not essential to-day? Can the body or church be edified without the means appointed of God? Are we all "in the unity of the faith" yet? Are all the multiplied schisms and conflicting creeds the one faith of the Lord Jesus Christ? Have we come to the knowledge of the Son of God, whom to know "is life eternal"? (John 17), and who, if we do not know, shall be revealed "in flaming fire taking vengeance on" us (2 Thessalonians 1)? Have we attained to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ? If not, how can we expect to attain thereunto without the means ordained of God to bring us to that glorious condition? The church must be made a glorious church, without "spot, or wrinkle, . . . holy and without blemish." (Ephesians 5:27.)

For evidence that that stupendous work is not yet accomplished, read from the twelfth to the sixteenth verses of the fourth chapter of Ephesians. The many conflicting creeds and divisions of faith can not be the result of pure gospel teaching and practice, but are evidence that mankind "have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant" (see Isaiah 24:5), just as Christ predicted (see Matthew 24:10, 12), and as foretold by Paul (see 1 Timothy 4; 2 Timothy 3 and 4; 2 Thessalonians 2).

And as shown to John on the Isle of Patmos, this departure was manifest among the churches of Asia. Peter also foretold of the "damnable heresies" (see 2 Peter 2). As evil, when encouraged, takes no backward step, but, having gained a foothold, it moves steadily on in its serpentine trail until it has permeated the whole body with its poisonous venom, so the departure from the faith of Christ, which began in an early day (see Acts 20; Galatians 1), stealthily crept into all the ranks of Christendom, until John Wesley honestly declares in his sermon on "The more excellent way," that the love of many had waxed cold, and the Christians had no more of the Spirit of Christ than the other heathens. Luther, Calvin, Wesley, and others, seeing the deplorable state of the religious world, tried to stem the tide of iniquity, but working by their own wisdom, and in their views conflicting with each other, and being devoid of divine inspiration, the result of their efforts to reform the church resulted in the increase of conflicting sects and creeds, inspired with bitter hatred against each other, even to imprisonment and death. But God, who had seen the hardness of the hearts of men, and who, because of their stubborn rebellion, had given them up to the hardness of their hearts, looking down with compassion, accepting the prayers and efforts to serve him of such as were truly seeking to find the way of holiness, remembered his purpose as declared by Paul in Ephesians 1:9, 10: "Having made known unto us the mystery of his will, according to his good pleasure which he hath purposed in himself: that in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven, and which are on the earth; even in him." And for this purpose he showed to John on the Isle of Patmos "things which must be hereafter" (Revelation 4:1); and, among the wonderful things shown, John says: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters."—Revelation 14:6.

From the foregoing we learn that the gospel was to be restored to earth at some period of time after John's day, because this is one of the "things" which the voice said "must be hereafter."—Revelation 4:1.

The history of our world bears no record of an angel bringing the gospel again to earth since John's day, until the nineteenth century. None of the reformers made any claim that angels visited them. In fact, it was universally concluded that angelic visits to earth had for ever ceased, notwithstanding it is written, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?"—Hebrews 1:14.

It is now well known that in the year 1820 a youth named Joseph Smith claimed to have a vision of the Almighty in answer to prayer; and again, that in 1823 an angel of God visited him, and that in a subsequent visit the angel delivered unto him the "everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth." Men of the world declare the claim preposterous, and assume a holy horror at the thought that God or angels should visit an unlearned youth. But they forget that God revealed himself to the little child, Samuel (see 1 Samuel 3); that he called the shepherd lad, David, to deliver Israel; that he called Jeremiah to be the prophet unto the nations when he was a child (see Jeremiah 1). They forget the testimony of Paul in 1 Corinthians 1:16. Read also Isaiah 55:8, 9. Cowper acknowledged that "God works in a mysterious way,

His wonders to perform."

God works like himself, hence there is perfect harmony in his work of the restoration "of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:20, 21.) And the work now commenced. The greatest event that has ever transpired on earth since the creation is that of the restoration "of all things," or to speak by the record, the "restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." The holy prophets have sung of Christ's coming into the world to pay the price of man's redemption by the sacrifice of himself; but they have also sung of the perfection of that redemption, and of his coming again to earth, to restore all things to their pristine state, as when they came from the plastic hand of the Creator,—earth redeemed and all creation brought back to that Edenic blessedness, when "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea," when the enmity between man and beast shall for ever cease, when nothing shall "hurt or destroy in all my [God's] holy mountain." (Isaiah 11.) They sang of the kingdom of God becoming supreme over all the earth (see Daniel's prophecy), and Christ our Redeemer King reigning with his redeemed saints on earth a thousand years. (See Revelation 5 and 20.) They sang of earth celestialized, lifted or exalted to be the throne of its Redeemer. But time and space would fail me to recount all the glory and blessedness of which the holy prophets sang, as the veil was drawn aside, and they gazed in awe upon the wondrous work of redemption to be wrought out through Jesus the Christ, the immaculate Son of God. Well might all creation join the celestial choir, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing . . . blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."—Revelation 5.

This is the purpose for which the gospel of Christ is restored in all the plenitude of its light and power. With all of its wondrous blessings for both spirit and body. For this purpose Christ has reorganized his church on earth, that men and women may be brought into it through the preaching of the gospel, and by walking in its precepts, be prepared for the revelation of the Son of God, "When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe."—2 Thessalonians 1:10.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized on the sixth day of April, 1830; and, through the preaching of the gospel, God wrought upon the honest in heart to hear and accept the divine message, and in due time he called special messengers to fill the sacred offices and callings, as in the ancient church, as described by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12; and Ephesians 4; and the ancient order was restored. The message is the same to-day as in apostolic times. Faith in Christ, repentance from all sin, baptism in water for the remission of sins (see John 3; Acts 2), and the baptism of the Holy Ghost, through the laying on of holy hands and prayer (see Acts 8 and 19; Hebrews 6:2), also the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment. May God lead you to obey the four former principles, and prepare for the latter, is my prayer.

CHARLES DERRY.

Christ expects his followers to copy his life. Have you ever stopped to think seriously of the meaning of the word "Christian"? He who takes that name upon him proclaims that the life which he is living is modeled after the life of Christ. If a painter tells you that he belongs to the school of Rembrandt, or of Michelangelo, or of Turner, you will naturally understand that he would have you believe that his pictures show forth the characteristics of these great painters. So, the world has a right, in looking upon the life of a Christian, to conclude that the things which he sees in a Christian's life are copied from the life of Christ. While it is not expected that we shall come up to the excellency of our great Model while we are here in the world, it is expected of us that we shall have no other ideal than this. The exhortation was, "Be ye perfect or complete—not as your neighbor is complete, not in the sense in which the preacher is perfect—but after the standard in Him who is all perfection."—The Look-out, October 18, 1908.

A GLANCE IN REVIEW OF C. T. RUSSELL'S WORKS.

UNDER THE CAPTION OF "A HELPING HAND."

Series 1. The Divine Plan of the Ages.

Series 2. The Time is at Hand.

Series 3. Thy Kingdom Come.

Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, Alleghany, Pennsylvania, 1907.

Mr. Russell's name, while not occurring on the title-pages, does occur in volume 3, pages 312 and 376, in two letters he uses, and which are addressed to him.

The elaborateness of Mr. Russell's attempt, sweeping, as he does, the ages, to develop his "Divine plan of the Ages," (?) would seem, in a sense, to make it needful to make an extended and elaborate review; but his main assumptions are so glaringly false, his assertions so bold, and conclusions so inaccurate, as to make an extended examination entirely unnecessary.

Chronology being indispensable to his purpose, he examines existing systems, finds the errors readily, and corrects them to a "mathematical precision," and later finds a difference of two years as to results. This he bridges over with supposition, inference, etc., and assures himself he is on solid ground.

The prophecies of Scripture he handles as aptly (?). Egypt's Great Pyramid is made also to do duty, and his measurements are only faulty to the extent of one inch; that he corrects. (See volume 3, page 312.) "Only one of the criticisms was upon measurements, and it showed a variance of only one inch, which we gladly corrected." It was Professor C. Piazzi Smyth, F. R. S. E. F. R. A. S., Ex-astronomer Royal of Scotland, called his attention to it.

His whole cunningly devised fable is without foundation in fact, and will fall as such. His date, 1914, to mark the end of all human rulers, and the rule of Christ to be inaugurated, will prove as untrue as his assumption that his inharmonious dates of 1872 and 1874 inaugurated the millennium. The millennium is in Scripture characterized by peace, righteousness, and glory indescribable. Mr. Russell finds it in operation since 1872, amid murder, suicide, and sinful debauchery of ever increasing magnitude. In the millennium the spear and sword are to be supplanted by the "plowshare" and the "pruning-hook." But in Mr. Russell's millennium, since 1874, very notably, the world's armies and navies are being constantly more fully equipped with death-dealing means and instruments.

Mr. Russell disrobes Christ of his resurrected, glorified body, and makes him to be as invisible and as substanceless as the wind, as he also does all resurrected beings. Fact is, by him, reduced to fable, and reality to myth. After mystical meanderings through ninety-four pages, and paving the way for his unique theory, he boldly asserts on page 95 of volume 1: "God has not yet by any means exhausted his power for the world's conversion. Nay, more; he has not yet even attempted the world's conversion."

The mission of Christ could not be more heartlessly assailed, or denied, "For the Son of Man is come to save that which was lost."—Matthew 18: 11. "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14: 6.

Any one so willfully blind as not to see the falsity of Mr. Russell's assumption and assertion that "God . . . has not yet even attempted the world's conversion," is indeed in a pitiable plight, if not a helpless one. Perhaps, at this juncture, a glance at some things in volume 3, first, will aid to a more direct view. Mr. Russell having there reached beyond question, as he thinks, that the millennium began in fact in 1872, that Christ returned in 1874, and that those dates, conflicting as they are (since Christ's advent and the millennium should be at once), he finds the remedy for, in counting off the first two years of Adam's time, as then sin had not yet entered, and these years belong to the "reign of righteousness."

It will be seen that Mr. Russell could as well have guessed that period to have been twenty years; but he only needed two!

Mr. Russell's position appears quite clearly in the following extracts: (Series 3. Thy Kingdom Come. The parable of the ten virgins):

This parable begins with "then," thus indicating that it was not applicable at once, in the Lord's day, but some time in the future. . . . The movement noted by our Lord in this parable corresponds exactly to one which began with the Miller movement, and which is still in progress. . . . The disappointment of 1844 is briefly recorded in the parable, by the statement that "The bridegroom tarried."—i. e., he seemed to the expectant ones to tarry.—Pages 90-92.

The second advent of our Lord in the end or harvest of the gospel age, occurring in the fall of 1874, proves to be at a point of time exactly parallel to the time of his first advent, in the end of the Jewish age.—Page 125.

Thus we found the time of our Lord's second advent clearly proven to be 1874—October of that year, as shown volume 2, chapter 6. But this is not all. Certain reasonable obstacles to faith in Christ's presence might yet appear to the minds of even careful students, and we wish to see these all removed. For instance, it might reasonably be inquired, How is it that the exact Bible chronology points to October, 1872, as the beginning of the seventh thousand years, or millennium, while the Jubilee Cycles show October, 1874, to be the date of our Lord's return and the beginning of restitution of times? This apparent inharmony of the date of the second advent with the beginning of the seventh thousand years seemed at first sight to indicate "a screw loose" somewhere in the chronological reckoning, and led to careful reëxamination of the subject, but always with the same result. Closer thought, however, proves that God is an exact time-keeper, and that this point is no exception to his mathematical precision. It will be remembered that the reckoning of chronology began with the creation of Adam, and that some time was spent by Adam and Eve before sin entered. Just how long we are not informed, but two years would not be an improbable estimate. Before the creation of Eve, Adam was permitted to live long enough to realize his lack of companionship (Genesis 2: 20); he had become acquainted with and had named all the animals; he had become acquainted with the various trees and plants of Eden. Then followed the creation of Eve; and some time must have elapsed in the enjoyment of their delightful surroundings, before the blight of sin entered. Recalling all these circumstances, we can scarcely imagine that a shorter time than two years elapsed in that sinless condition; and the interval between the close of the six thousand years and the beginning of the times of restitution leads to the inference that the interval between the creation of Adam and the entrance of sin, during which God's kingdom was in the world, represented in Adam, is not counted as part of the six days of evil. The six thousand years in which God has permitted evil to dominate the world, prior to the beginning of the great seventh or Sabbath thousand, or Times of Restitution, dates from the entrance of sin into the world. And since the Times of Restitution began with October, 1874, that must be the end of the six thousand years' reign of sin: and the difference between that and the date shown in the chronology from Adam's creation represents the period of sinlessness in Eden, which really belongs to the reign of righteousness.—Pages 127, 128.

While the time prophecies thus point out to and harmonize with 1874, as the date of our Lord's second presence, assuring us of the fact with mathematical precision, we find ourselves overwhelmed with evidence of another character; for certain peculiar signs, foretold by the Lord and the apostles and prophets, which were to precede his coming, are now clearly recognized as actually fulfilled.—Page 129.

And now he has come! The Lord is indeed present! And the time is at hand for the setting up of his kingdom, and the exaltation and glorification of his faithful bride. The days of waiting for his presence are now in the past, and the blessedness of the waiting ones, long foretold, is ours.—Page 133.

Though Revelation 1: 7 says, "Every eye shall see him," Mr. Russell in his reasoning has before this disrobed him of his resurrected body and assumes him to be here, and as invisible as the wind. Since Mr. Russell could characterize the entire mission of Christ as not even an attempt to convert the world, to reduce his body to wind was a small item. This will come in for further attention as we examine a few things in volumes 1 and 2. Now, however, he claims Christ here since October, 1874.

Of the first "age" or till the flood, Mr. Russell writes:

The first of these periods, or "worlds" under the ministration of angels, was a failure; the second under the rule of Satan, the usurper, has been indeed an "evil world"; but the third will be an era of righteousness and of blessing to all the families of the earth.—Vol. 1, p. 67.

Do you see? The angels' work was a "failure." The second "evil world," also; but in 1872, the third began, says Mr. Russell. What about the righteousness of it? Mr. Russell has sown theories to the wind. They lack truth, as the wind does material substance and visibility. Again he says:

The present heavens (powers of spiritual control) must give place to the new heavens—Christ's spiritual control. The present earth (human society as now organized under Satan's control) must (symbolically) melt and be dissolved, in the beginning of the "day of the Lord," which "shall burn as an oven," (Malachi 4: 1.) It will be succeeded by a "new earth," i. e., society reorganized in harmony with earth's new Prince;—Christ.—Page 69.

Thus the new heavens and the new earth are by Mr. Russell dissolved, made to be only conditions of society, whereas, in the Bible we read of the earth being cursed with thorn and thistle and otherwise, and also of its transformation, the curse removed, but Mr. Russell has a theory and it must be fitted up. Again:

The first age in the "world that now is" we call the patriarchal age, or dispensation, because during that period God's dealings and favors were with a few individuals only, the remainder of mankind being almost ignored. Such favored ones were the patriarchs Noah, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.—Page 71.

Here Mr. Russell graciously credits God with having a few pets, and charges him with ignoring the rest. His next compliment is: "God has not yet by any means exhausted his power for the world's conversion. Nay, more; he has not yet even attempted the world's conversion."—Page 95.

Such the status of the case in 1907, says Mr. Russell.

All this stupendous "failure" of the angels and God not having "even attempted" the world's conversion is to be made up in Mr. Russell's millennium, and so we read:

It would be useless to grant another trial for life under exactly the same circumstances; but though the circumstances of the tried ones will be different; more favorable, the terms or conditions of their individual trial for life will be the same as in the Adamic trial. The law of God will remain the same, it changes not. It will still say, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," and the condition of man will be more favorable, so far as the surroundings are concerned, than the conditions and surroundings in Eden; but the great difference will be in the increase of knowledge.—Page 151.

To make this the more apparent, Mr. Russell gives the Narrow Way a touch with his magic pen: "With the end of the gospel age, the narrow way to immortality will close, because the select 'little flock' that it was designed to test and prove will have been completed."—Page 213.

The Master said, "Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." It was for all to "find," if they would. Mr. Russell, however, says it is to "close," because the select 'little flock' that it was designed to test and prove will have been completed." He makes the limit to be the "little flock," for so he affirms it was designed (?); but on the contrary it was designed "that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." It was designed for whosoever, not a "select little flock."

But why should Mr. Russell have it close since it "leadeth unto life"? Why not still let it remain open to operate in the rest of that wondrous millennium of his, and if good enough for the years of his millennium from 1872 to 1914, when he assumes the gospel age closes, why not for the balance of that millennium? Why not have closed the narrow way before 1872, and have the better substitute of Mr. Russell for his whole millennium? Why not, Mr. Russell? And now it is the angel's turn again for another rub!

Several scriptures throw light on God's dealings during that time, and thus give a clear insight into his plans as a whole. The thought suggested is that the first "world," or the dispensation before the flood, was under the supervision and special ministrations of angels, who were permitted to try what they could do to recover the fallen and degenerate race. Doubtless, with God's permission, they were anxious to try it; for their interest was manifested in the singing and shouting for joy over the works of creation. (Job 38: 7.)—Page 220.

The "supervision and special ministrations of angels," you see, failed, but, "doubtless, with God's permission they were anxious to try it." Sad dilemma! Mr. Russell was not there to suggest an improvement. How would it have done for Mr. Russell to have supposed the angels filled well their mission, and it was men that failed to appropriate the benefits? Ah! No!! That would not have fitted Mr. Russell's scheme.

Now see how Mr. Russell can tell things that he virtually says nobody knows:

"The ages to come," "H" [referring to his chart] following the great reconstruction period, are to be ages of perfection, blessedness, and happiness, regarding the work of which the Scriptures are silent.—Page 223.

"Regarding the work of which the scriptures are silent." How then did Mr. Russell find out that the Narrow Way was not to be the working basis for the "world's conversion," to overcome the failure of the angels and God not yet having "even attempted" the world's conversion? Scriptures silent! But Mr. Russell is not, as further appears in the following. Though Christ distinctly affirmed that a spirit could be seen, Mr. Russell denies it. Christ said: "But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed they had seen a spirit."—Luke 24: 37. A spirit could be seen then. To contradistinguish himself as a resurrected being, from a spirit, that could be seen, he said: "Behold my hands, and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have."—Luke 24: 39.

As there and then constituted, of flesh and bones, he affirmed, "It is I myself." Though Christ affirmed, as before said, a spirit could be seen. Mr. Russell, on the contrary, takes the position a spirit is as invisible as wind, and makes Christ to be that invisible. Moreover, that the flesh and bone bodily appearance was solely for temporary appearance, so much trappings, to be and was laid off as clothing. It was not laid off. "It is I myself," said Christ. "It is not," says Mr. Russell.

To make his case as to Christ being invisible, he uses and misapplies Christ's illustration of the Holy Spirit's influence in this life. Christ said: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."—John 3: 8. That is to say, As the wind is invisible to the physical eye, so to the carnal, unregenerate mind, the influence of the Spirit would not be discernible. It was an explanation of: "Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3. And again: "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God." Though unseen to physical eye or unregenerate mind, it was a fact. "So is every one that is born of the Spirit," of verse 8, shows it was an accomplished fact, then, and not awaiting the resurrection. "That which is born of flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit," of verse 6, shows it was then accomplished, at fleshly birth for the flesh, and at spirit birth for the Spirit, Mr. Russell to the contrary notwithstanding! To make his case he transfers this to the resurrection, disrobing the resurrected Christ in order to install his theory. Whereas Christ taught that to be born of the Spirit, immediately followed, "born of the water," by adding, "and of the Spirit." Mr. Russell has use for that scripture to disrobe Christ, and so transfers it to suit his purpose. Let us pay attention to Mr. Russell again:

Then, after being dead three days, he was raised to life—to the perfection of spirit being (I plane L), born of the spirit—"the first born from the dead." "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Jesus, therefore, at and after his resurrection, was a spirit—a spirit being, and no longer a human being in any sense. True, after his resurrection he had power to appear, and did appear, as a man, in order that he might teach his disciples and prove to them that he was no longer dead; but he was not a man, and was no longer controlled by human conditions, but could go and come as the wind (even when the doors were shut) and none could tell whence he came or whither he went. "So is every one that is born of the Spirit."—John 3: 8.—Page 230.

Here, you see, is his transfer, applying: "So is every one that is born of the Spirit" to the resurrection time and state. He also makes the word human to do service for him, as admittedly that does not belong to the resurrected state, and he calls Christ's resurrected body human, and then, as such, reasons it away. He says, "But he was not a man, and was no longer controlled by human conditions." In this he makes "man" to apply only to the "human," and adds, "And was no longer controlled by human conditions, but could go and come as the wind (even when the doors are shut).” “As the wind.” “Even when the doors were shut.” Well! Mr. Russell, if the wind can go through a door shut, why not the real resurrected Christ? Christ exceeded it. “As the wind”? He did what the wind could not. So, it was not the case of him “so is every one that is born of the Spirit,” after all! “No longer controlled by human conditions.” Was Christ controlled by human conditions when he made the wine at the marriage? at the feeding of the multitudes? when he descended from the mountain, “walking on the sea”? Hardly. So, Mr. Russell’s play on human, man and human conditions does not go very far after all.

The thing necessary for us, then, is to be justified, and thus to reach plane N. How is this accomplished? Is it by good works? No; sinners can do no good works.—Page 231.

Then sinners can never rise from the plane of sinners; for, to so rise, would be good works; and, Mr. Russell says, “Sinners can do no good works.” Again, Mr. Russell says:

During the millennial age, Israel will be the chief nation of earth, at the head of all on the earthly plane of being, into oneness and harmony with which all the obedient will be gradually drawn. Their restoration to perfect human nature, as well as that of the world in general, will be a gradual work, requiring all of the millennial age for its full accomplishment.—Page 241.

Now, why does Mr. Russell give us that, after he has told us in an extract from page 223 that on that very time and work “the Scriptures are silent.” But worse than that, on page 241, last cited, it is “to perfect human nature,” that it takes for “Israel” and “the world in general, . . . all of the millennial age for its full accomplishment.” So it is only “perfect human nature,” at the end. Ah, me! “Perfect human nature!” would be human bodies with the rest, or, still worse, to have human natures after a thousand years of Mr. Russell’s reconstruction work, and in those bodies like the wind so superior to the resurrected Christ, is nothing less than awful! And the whole millennial time gone! And though the Scriptures are “silent” on that period, Mr. Russell proceeds:

During that thousand years’ reign of Christ, the results of Adamic death will be gradually swallowed up or destroyed. Its various stages—sickness, pain, and weakness, as well as the tomb—will yield obedience to the Great Restorer’s power, until at the end of that age the great pyramid of our chart will be complete.

The Christ (x) will be the head of all things of the great company of angels, and of men—next to the Father; next in order or rank will be the company of spirit-beings (y), and next the angels; then Israel after the flesh (z), including only Israelites indeed, at the head of earthly nations; then the world of men (w), restored to perfection of being, like the head of the human race, Adam, before he sinned.—Page 241.

Quite a lot of information about that, “regarding which, the Scriptures are silent”; but then Mr. Russell got it from his chart. But here is a puzzle for you, reader: How are those men going to be like “spirits,” that are like the “wind,” “invisible,” and also like Adam before he sinned—“restored to perfection of being, like the head of the human race, Adam, before he sinned.”

Like Adam, then, before he sinned, is perfection. Adam before he sinned had a visible body. As the perfected state in Mr. Russell’s millennium is like Adam was before he sinned, Mr. Russell’s manufactured spirit bodies are reduced to wind, an imagination of his.

Having stated the final climax, “perfection,” in his own terms and figure, “restored to perfection of being, like the head of the human race, Adam, before he sinned,” Mr. Russell then observes how it is done, although upon this “the Scriptures are silent.” He continues:

This restoration will be accomplished gradually during the millennium age—“the times of restitution” (Acts 3:21). Some, however, will be destroyed from among the people; first, all who, under the full light and opportunity, for one hundred years, refuse to make progress toward righteousness and perfection. (Isaiah 65:20.) And second, those who, having progressed to perfection, in a final testing at the close of the millennium prove unfaithful (Revelation 20:9). Such die the second death, from which there is no resurrection or restitution promised. But one full individual trial is provided. But one ransom will ever be given. Christ dieth no more.—Pages 241, 242.

He paraphrases Christ and concludes for him thus:

Hence John’s preaching and that of my disciples is repentance—a return to God, and to a recognition of the covenant made; and the baptism of John signifies this repentance and reformation of heart and life, and not the new birth. But unless you have more than this you will never see the kingdom. Except in addition to the reformation symbolized by John’s baptism you receive a begetting and birth of the Spirit, you can not see my kingdom. Repentance will bring you back to a justified condition; in that condition you will be able readily to recognize me as Messiah, the antitype of Moses; and thus consecrating to me you will be begotten of the Father to a new life and the divine nature, which if it develop and become quickened, will insure your being born a new creature, a spirit being, in the first resurrection; and as such you shall not only see but share the kingdom. . . . Let me give you an illustration by which you will gain some idea of the beings who, when born of the Spirit will constitute this kingdom: “The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth—so is every one that is born of the Spirit.” As the wind blows here and there, you can not see it, though it exerts an influence all about you. You know not whence it comes nor where it goes. This is as good an illustration as I can give you of those who will “enter into” or constitute the kingdom which I am now preaching. They will all be as invisible as the wind and men not born of the Spirit, will neither know whence they come nor whither they go.—Pages 279, 280.

But as before seen, Mr. Russell has them all who reach the final perfection, finish “like Adam before he sinned.” Mr. Russell went back to Adam and got those two years he needed, but either he never thought of disrobing Adam as he did Christ, or forgot it. Perhaps his chart held his attention a little too closely. I think so. After all his trouble to dispute Christ, transfer being born again from the place Christ assigned it, the first steps of life in Christ to the resurrection, and disrobing the resurrected Christ, gives it all away in his illustration of "perfection," reached by and with his references to Adam. The "perfection" he has so explicitly defined (spirit being as invisible as the wind), but finally, (when he must have lost sight of what a sad dilemma it put the whole story in,) "like Adam before he had sinned," he writes again, thus:

The coming manifestations of divine power will far exceed those of that typical age; for the work of the coming age comprises the awakening of all the dead and the restoration of the obedient to perfection.—Pages 290, 291.

Spirit being invisible as wind, like Adam was—ah, me!

Those who will constitute the spiritual phase of the kingdom are the overcoming saints of the gospel age—the Christhead and body—glorified. Their resurrection and exaltation to power precedes that of all others, because through this class all others are to be blessed. (Hebrews 11: 39, 40.) Theirs is the first resurrection. (Revelation 20: 5.) The great work before this glorious anointed company—the Christ—necessitates their exaltation to the divine nature. No other power could accomplish it.—Page 288.

"The Christhead and body—glorified" and "this glorious anointed company—the Christ," puts all included very close together. But, Mr. Russell while having the Christ returned, 1874, has not even hinted, so far as we see, as to even one of the perfected, spirit, wind-like beings being among us; while the Scriptures, not being silent, say "Christ, the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." So in 1874 this should have been accomplished "at his coming." So thirty-three years ago this should have occurred, but Mr. Russell says, "Those who will constitute." Why did he not say, Those who now constitute? But, after all, Mr. Russell may think they have been here since 1874. That visible body of his, however, (more like Adam after he sinned than before, evidently,) is in the way. But, oh! he is going to die, perhaps, to get the wind-like one; if so, we are short now and have been thirty-three years. And, if death of the Adam-like man is the first resurrection, if Mr. Russell must so get the perfected state, then the first resurrection, according to Mr. Russell, has been in operation at and since Adam's death.

And thus, after so glorious bungling as Mr. Russell's work abounds in, he has the audacity to say of Revelation 20: 5, in a foot-note on page 288:

In this verse the words, "but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished," are spurious. They are not found in the oldest and most reliable Greek manuscript, the Sinaitic, Vatican, Numbers 1209 and 1160, nor the Syriac manuscript.

Since it is a known and acknowledged fact that no manuscript reaches within four hundred years of the original, how does Mr. Russell know which is the "most" reliable? Does it necessarily follow that the oldest is? How can it be told without the original? It is quite possible the writer of this oldest might have left that off, and quite as possible another copyist retained it. Mr. Russell's first resurrection is an exploded bubble. It was to install it that he tries to reason away the objectionable words, "the resurrection of life," and "the resurrection of damnation," of John 5: 29, and "of the just and unjust" (Acts 24: 18), make it clear that there are two. Mr. Russell's, an empty myth, in the setting he gives it, would be but one, continuing, however, one thousand years. The twentieth of Revelation, apart from the, to Mr. Russell, objectionable words, provides for two, one at the opening, and one at the close of the thousand years.

We have now reached Series 2: The Time is at Hand:

In this chapter we present the Bible evidence proving that the full end of the times of the Gentiles, i. e., the full end of their lease of dominion, will be reached in A. D., 1914; and that that date will be the farthest limit of the rule of imperfect men. And be it observed, that if this is shown to be a fact firmly established by the Scriptures, it will prove:—Firstly, that at that date the kingdom of God, for which our Lord taught us to pray, saying, "Thy kingdom come," will have obtained full, universal control, and that it will then be "set up," or firmly established in the earth.—Page 76.

Philosophizing yet more as to his invisible Christ, Mr. Russell says:

The lesson of his changed nature was still further emphasized by his manner of leaving their sight: "He vanished out of their sight." The human body of flesh and bones, etc., and its clothing which appeared suddenly while the doors were shut, did not go out of the door, but simply disappeared or dissolved into the same elements from which he had created them a few moments before. He vanished out of their sight, and was no longer seen of them when the flesh and bones and clothing in which he had manifested himself were dissolved, though doubtless he was still with them—invisibly present: and so also much of the time during those forty days.—Page 127.

Mr. Russell's false assertion as to the human body, does not make it so. Paul says, "Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body."—Philippians 3: 21. As Christ had asked to be glorified (see John 17: 5, so he was, in the fact of his resurrection, had his glorious body, not a "human" one. "Our vile body," "fashioned like unto his glorious body." Mr. Russell's manufactured wind-like bodies for Christ and others, are not according to the pattern, not "fashioned like unto" it.

He also makes the word vanished do uncalled-for duty. It is found in Luke 24: 31, and refers to Christ's departure, not that he was dissolved. Further, he uses this as if it were at the scene when the doors were shut. He wanted "doors were shut" to help him on "vanished." See? The story from which he gets "vanished" opens with Luke 24: 13, "And, behold two of them"; in verse 29 we find the "day is far spent," and "he went in to tarry with them," "sat at meat with them," "vanished out of their sight." Easy enough in the darkness. Verse 18 shows one of these "them" was "Cleopas," who was not one of the twelve disciples. Who the other one was is not stated, but verse 23 shows that in the "same hour," these went to Jerusalem, "found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them." That is where and "when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in their midst." This appearance, or rather the disappearance, is too wonderful for Mr. Russell, so he just has Christ (some wind) get in there and create, and then dissolve a body for that special occasion. Why does he not fix up the coin and fish story and feeding the multitudes?

We have however a case of Christ's disappearance, "vanishing," clearly stated in Acts 1: 9: "And a cloud received him out of their sight." The dissolving process is strictly Mr. Russell's. That nothing of the kind as Mr. Russell would have it, occurred, is clearly stated thus: "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." The words, this same, are made certain by the words "which is taken up," and the words, "shall so come" do not admit of any change and "as ye have seen" till the cloud "received him." All are unmistakably plain, and settle it to be the glorified, resurrected body of Christ that continued, and such will be the Christ when he comes again. True to his own words, "It is I myself." But Mr. Russell continues:

That the bodies in which our Lord appeared were real human bodies, and not mere delusion, he gave them clearly to understand when he ate before them, and invited them to handle him and see that the body was real flesh and bones, saying, "Why are ye troubled? . . . Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me and see: for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have.—Page 128.

Instead of Christ's one glorious body, Mr. Russell needs a number of human bodies to work his scheme. In Christ's words they "supposed they had seen," he makes it clearly possible to "see a spirit," but Mr. Russell's plan does not admit of that. As, "but their eyes were holden that they should not know him," (Luke 24: 16) so in the reverse case, under divine blessing they could see even a spirit. Mr. Russell's eyes are too "holden" to see little else than his scheme. Hear him again:

Our Lord's human body was, however, supernaturally removed from the tomb; because had it remained there it would have been an insurmountable obstacle to the faith of the disciples, . . . whether it was dissolved into gasses or whether it is still preserved somewhere as the grand memorial of God's love, of Christ's obedience, and of our redemption no one knows:—nor is such knowledge necessary. . . . Those who cried, "Crucify him!" may yet as witnesses identify the very body pierced by the spear, and torn by the nails and thorns . . . that he himself was no longer human flesh and bones—but a spirit being who could go and come as the wind so that none could tell whence he came or whither he went, but who, for the purpose of instructing them, appeared as a man in various bodies of flesh and bones, which he created and dissolved as occasion required.—Pages 129, 130, 131.

After all the dissolving, Mr. Russell has dealt in, it is amusing to read: "Whether it was dissolved . . . or whether it is still preserved . . . no one knows." But Mr. Russell knows (?) of "various bodies of flesh and bones which he created and dissolved as occasion required." These exist only in Mr. Russell's theory. Christ had, and still has, and will return with, the one glorious body of flesh and bone of which he said, "It is I myself."

Christ's glorious return stated thus in 1 Thesalonians 4: 16, 17: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air," Mr. Russell disposes of thus:

Where on the face of the earth is the civilized nation that has not heard the shout, and is not influenced by it. The entire civilized world has, in the past few years, been studying political economy, civil rights, and social liberties as never before in the annals of history; and men are encouraging each other, and being encouraged as never before, to probe these subjects to the very foundation. The shout of encouragement started by the increase of knowledge among men has already encircled the earth." . . .—Page 146.

The return of the Master, the worthy to be caught up to meet him, and the resurrected, of the first resurrection then to take place, is set aside for the above nonsensical speculation of Mr. Russell. His whole nonsensical program makes those not found within its confines or limits to be subjected to annihilation:

Under the chastisements and increasing light and favorable opportunities of the millennial day, all will be brought to such a clear knowledge of the truth and the way of righteousness as to be without the excuse of ignorance, or of inability to obey the truth; and those who persistently continue enemies of God and righteousness shall be punished with lasting destruction [a destruction from which there shall be no resurrection] from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.—Page 152.

It is hardly conceivable that Mr. Russell is so densely ignorant of the teachings of the Scriptures as his writings make him to appear. But the fatal finale he has for his spirit-beings "invisible as the wind" yet "like Adam before he sinned," make him to appear just so. If he is so ignorant, he can not instruct. If, on the other hand, his is a plan for other ends than the promulgation of truth, then it may well be said:

Oh! what a tangled web they weave,
Who practice solely to deceive.

Mr. Russell's whole theory is a deception, dissolved by contact with the touchstone of truth.

TWELVE NEPHITE APOSTLES.

It has been argued that there can not be two quorums of twelve apostles in the church at the same time. Why not? The Western Continent was thousands of miles away, across the trackless ocean; little or no communication between them two thousand years ago. While Jesus was preaching and teaching on the Eastern Continent, he told them he was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel (the Jews). He also told them there were other sheep "that are not of his fold," that are of the seed of Abraham, "them also I must visit, and they must hear my voice." He did not explain who they were, nor where they lived. The Jews, as a people, were the lost sheep Jesus was sent to seek, and to offer the terms of salvation to; but they rejected him as a nation, and the message he brought them. But the few that received him, to them he gave power to become the sons of God, to as many as believed on his name. He ordained twelve apostles, gave them authority to heal the sick, cast out devils, cause the blind to see, the deaf to hear, and to preach the gospel to every creature. The church of Jesus Christ was not established until after Christ had been rejected by this branch of the house of Israel, and put to death. On the third day he arose and appeared to many. During this time he gave the apostles instruction concerning the organization of the church and the work they, as his apostles, should do.

In the Book of Mormon, we have a very interesting account of the visit of Jesus Christ to these other sheep that had left Jerusalem six hundred years before, and had been lost to the knowledge of this part of the house of Israel. This people had brought with them the records of the Jewish prophets; but, like the Jews, they had dwindled in unbelief. God sent prophets to invite them back to him, but the great majority became wicked, refused all offers of mercy; and, during the crucifixion of Christ at Jerusalem, during the days of darkness and destruction all over the land, many were destroyed. Only a few, compared with the mass of the people, were saved. These were saved because they had received the warning voice of the prophets God had sent among them.

In the Book of Nephi, chapter 4, we read that a voice was heard, saying: "O all ye that are spared, because ye were more righteous than they, . . . Behold I am Jesus Christ, the Son of God, . . . by me redemption cometh, and in me is the law of Moses fulfilled. I am the light and the life of the world. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. . . . I will accept none of your sacrifices and burnt offerings; and ye shall offer for a sacrifice unto me a broken heart and a contrite spirit."

These people were called Nephites. A great number were gathered together. In chapter 5, we are told that Jesus showed himself to the people of Nephi, a people that were more righteous than the others, and he spoke to Nephi (a leader among them), and said, "I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people." He called eleven others, also, and gave them power to baptize. He then told them how to baptize, and what to say when baptizing, "Having authority given me of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." He said, "Go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken." That is very much like choosing these men to be twelve apostles at some future time. Jesus said to the multitude; for a large company of Nephites were come together: "Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you, and to be your servants; and unto them I have given power, that they may baptize you with water, and . . . I will baptize you with fire and with the Holy Ghost." Here Jesus had given all the power and authority of the Aaronic priesthood to these twelve men. They were to preach and baptize, also to declare all the words Jesus had spoken; but had no power to give the Holy Ghost. Jesus reserved that power till further instruction was given. "Blessed are they who shall believe in your words, and come down in the depths of humility, and be baptized." To the multitude he said, "Blessed are ye, if ye shall believe in me, and be baptized." He then delivered what is known as the Sermon on the Mount, as in the New Testament.

"When Jesus had spoken these words, he looked upon the twelve whom he had chosen, and said unto them, Remember the words which I have spoken. For behold, ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people."

Jesus then began to teach the people; but some of his teachings were hard for them to understand. He told them the law was fulfilled which was given to Moses (that which they had been observing). "I am he that gave the law, . . . I have come to fulfill the law; . . . the covenant which I have made with my people, is not all fulfilled; but the law which was given unto Moses, hath an end in me."

These words were spoken to the people. Then he said unto those twelve whom he had called:

"Ye are a light unto this people, who are a remnant of the house of Joseph."

In chapter 8 Jesus turned his attention to the multitude. He had told them he had other missions to fill, and would have to leave them. He said, "My time is at hand." The people had become intensely interested, as though they wanted him to remain a little longer. Jesus said, "My bowels are filled with compassion towards you, have ye any that are sick among you, bring them hither." Read the entire account of this prayer- and sacrament-meeting. We are told that Jesus knelt upon the earth, and prayed unto the Father, and the words he uttered in his prayer can not be written by man. And the multitude did see, and hear, and bear record every man for himself. There were present about two thousand five hundred souls. And Jesus told his disciples to bring some bread and wine. And he took the bread and break it, and blessed it, and also blessed the wine, and gave it to his disciples to eat and drink. And when he had eaten he told them to give to the multitude. Here we see these twelve had power to preach, baptize, and administer the sacrament. And when the people had partaken of the bread and wine, Jesus said unto the disciples, "Behold, there shall be one ordained among you, and to him will I give power that he shall break bread, and bless it, and give it unto the people of my church, unto all those who shall believe and be baptized in my name. (N. B. If these disciples had power to bless bread and wine, no need for ordination.)

Here we find a church is indicated, and if Christ intended to build a church, it would be necessary to ordain apostles, as he recognized them as the first officers in his church. He chose these twelve men because of their faith in him; and, by ordaining them, he gave them all the power and authority of apostles. It was this power he gave them as he touched them one by one, or, as Moroni's record says, "He laid his hands upon them" and ordained them. No matter what name men call them, it was the power that Jesus gave when ordaining them to heal all manner of sickness, and to do many mighty works in his name, that made these twelve men apostles.

In chapter 9 we learn that these twelve men, after their ordination, went and stood in the midst of the multitude, doing what Jesus had commanded. "And it came to pass that Nephi went down into the water and was baptized." The record does not state who baptized Nephi. It says angels came down out of heaven, and did minister (act officially) unto them. And Jesus came and stood with them and ministered unto them (thus confirming all the angels had done). After a short season of prayer, Jesus retired a little way off, and prayed again to his Father, saying, "I thank thee that thou hast given the Holy Ghost unto these whom I have chosen; and it is because of their belief in me, that I have chosen them out of the world. Father, I pray thee that thou wilt give the Holy Ghost unto all them that shall believe in their words." Again he prayed unto the Father, saying, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast purified those whom I have chosen, because of their faith."

In chapter 12 we read that the disciples whom Jesus had chosen, and said he would ordain, after their ordination they began from that time forth to baptize, and to teach as many as did come unto them. And they who were baptized in the name of Jesus were called the church of Christ. And as they journeyed they preached the things they had both heard and seen, and baptized in the name of Jesus (very much like the apostles at Jerusalem). From this record we find that these disciples, when ordained (by the ministering of angels, and confirmed by Jesus Christ), acted and officiated with all the authority of apostles sent of God; they now do all things that Jesus had commanded.

Question: Did Jesus sanction the church they were forming?

Listen: "Whatsoever ye shall do, ye shall do it in my name; therefore ye shall call the church in my name; and ye shall call upon the Father in my name, that he will bless the church for my sake; . . . if it be called in my name, then it is my church, if it so be that they are built upon my gospel." It would seem from reading the Nephite record that their church was accepted by Jesus Christ. If a church, there was a quorum of Nephite apostles. Just a little before Jesus departed, he spoke unto these apostles (as we believe they are), one by one, saying, "What is it that ye desire of me after that I am gone to the Father?" (Very much like the request of the apostles at Jerusalem.) And they all spoke but three. Nine of them said, "We desire that after we have lived unto the age of man, that our ministry, [as apostles in the church on earth] wherein thou hast called us, may have an end, that we may speedily come unto thee, in thy kingdom." Jesus said, "After that ye are seventy and two years old, ye shall come unto me in my kingdom, and with me ye shall find rest." Then he turned to the three and said, "What will ye that I should do unto you, when I am gone unto my Father?" They were afraid. Jesus said, "I know your thoughts, and ye have desired the thing which John, my beloved, who was with me in my ministry, before that I was lifted up by the Jews, desired of me; therefore more blessed are ye, for ye shall never taste of death, but ye shall live to behold all the doings of the Father, unto the children of men, even until all things shall be fulfilled, according to the will of the Father, when I shall come in my glory, with the powers of heaven; . . . ye shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, from mortality to immortality."

Methinks it would not require much argument to place these disciples as apostles on the same plane of authority that Jesus did when he called them his disciples at first, and afterward ordained them apostles, as recorded by Matthew 10: 1, 2. An apostle must be a disciple, a follower, a learner, in order to be an apostle.

In book of Nephi, chapter 13, when Jesus had spoken to these twelve apostles (or disciples), he touched every one of them with his finger (possibly laid hands on them), save it were the three who were to tarry. "And behold, the heavens were opened, and they caught up into heaven, and saw and heard" things they were not permitted to utter to man. After this "they did again minister upon the face of the earth; . . . whether they were mortal or immortal, . . . I know not; but this much I know, according to the record which hath been given, they did go forth upon the face of the land"—very much like the calling and office-work of apostles.

Of the official work of these apostles, Jesus said, "Woe be unto them" that will not hearken unto the words of Jesus, and also to them whom he has chosen and sent among them. In Nephi, chapter 6, Jesus said unto the twelve, "Remember the words which I have spoken. For behold, ye [the twelve Nephites] are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people."

We see the same authority is given to the Nephites as was given to the apostles. For whoso receiveth the words of Jesus, and the words of those whom he hath sent—(we are told that an apostle is "one sent"). Surely these twelve disciples come near filling the bill as apostles, when ordained and sent by Jesus Christ. Nephi, son of Nephi, the first one called by Jesus Christ, in his record, says thirty-five years had passed since Jesus had appeared among them, and that the disciples of Jesus Christ had formed a church in all the land.

Question: If the church is built upon the foundation of apostles, if God set in the church, first apostles, on the Eastern Continent, why not on the Western? We here find the same official acts and doings of the apostles are manifest. They heal the sick, raise the dead, cause the lame to walk, the blind to see; all done in the name of Jesus. See chapter 4, Book of Mormon: "Behold I, Moroni, do finish the record of my father Mormon." In part he says, "My father hath made this record, and he hath written the intent thereof. . . . And whoso receiveth this record, and shall not condemn it because of the imperfections [the difference in the language] which are in it, the same shall know of greater things than these." He says, "I am the son of Mormon, and my father was a descendent of Nephi, and I am the same who hideth up this record [the Book of Mormon] unto the Lord."

In relating some past experiences in the history of the Nephite church as it was organized nearly four hundred years before his time, he asks, "And who shall say that Jesus Christ did not do many mighty miracles? And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles." These were sometimes called disciples.

Nephi, the historian (see chapter 4), calls them disciples. Moroni, the historian (see Book of Mormon, chapter 4), calls these same persons apostles: "And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles."

Matthew calls them twelve disciples (see chapter 10). He calls them twelve apostles (see verse 2).

Mark, third chapter, says Jesus called "whom he would" up into a mountain, and they, the disciples, came unto him, "and he ordained twelve," and sent them forth to preach.

Luke 6: 13, 14: Jesus "called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."

John 15, speaking to his disciples, said, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, . . . and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning." Ordination made these same disciples apostles in both New Testament and Book of Mormon times.

See Book of Moroni, chapter 2: "The word of Christ, which he spake unto his disciples, the twelve whom he had chosen, as he laid his hands upon them [to ordain them apostles]. And he called them by name, saying, Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles. Now Christ spake these words unto them at the time of his first hearing; and the multitude heard it not, but the disciples heard it, and on as many as they laid their hands, fell the Holy Ghost."

THE AGE OF CONFLICT.

There is a trying time which comes into the experience of many parents in connection with their children—the time when they have to reckon with a child's will as not only a positive, but as an independent and almost uncontrollable, factor in the family life. This period brings many perplexities and anxieties. What can be done?

Prepare for this age. Expect it. Get ready for it. The experience that is looked forward to and provided for is shorn of half its terrors. It is a marvelous thing that parents so carefully arrange for summer and winter, for breakfasts and dinners, for travel and schooling, and yet so often neglect the most important aspects of all—certain psychological and spiritual conditions of those children—the definite stages of development through which their souls must pass. Much is to be learned from history and life. The traits which David and Eli had to meet in their sons and daughters the parents of to-day have also to encounter. Such experience is a moral guide.

The child who is going to turn out a really strong and efficient man or woman usually manifests two marked traits in childhood—a strong will and a hot temper. Superior physical strength and sharp punishment may keep these traits in check for a few years, but the moment a child brought up by sheer force approaches manhood or womanhood that moment insubordination begins. The first thing to realize is the place and value of these traits. They are not a sign of weakness. A strong will, rightly directed, is what gives moral backbone. A hot temper implies a deep heart. These traits are a native endowment of energy and power. Let them not be beaten and broken, but let them be disciplined, controlled, guided, and trained to moral service.

Study health conditions. Much total depravity is bad air in school, or lack of sleep. Watch the weather influences. We are creatures of a thousand moods, which depend greatly on environment. On bleak and stormy days it is much harder to be good. Teach a child this fact, and help him to take pride in self-control, in rising above petty irritations. Comfortable, fresh, becoming clothes also play a greater part in good temper than we imagine.

Bring children up on great books. Heroic ideals serve to make heroic men and women. If a boy or girl has from childhood been reading the great literature of the world, when the trying period of possible conflict comes, he will by that time have realized, however unconsciously, that the ideals of the world are on the side of order and obedience, that filial devotion is counted one of the noblest traits, and that only the foolish and weak-witted refuse to take counsel of those who are older and wiser than themselves. Such young people, as Ian Maclaren truly says, "will have youth without its crudities."

Allow for the point of view. We can not get life from another. Each of us must go through with it for himself. Parents see life through the medium of experience. Their vocabulary is that of facts. They do not realize that what they say, however true, conveys little meaning to the child. He hears words, but he has no standard by which to measure their import. Years afterward he suddenly says: "I see now what they meant!" Too many parents expect a child to appreciate their own point of view. He can not, unless he has a remarkable mind, or else has had a deep, early experience of life. A common complaint of parents in regard to their boys and girls is, They are so ungrateful! They do not appreciate all we have done for them. Well, how can they? When those boys and girls are married, and have children of their own for whom they toil and watch and sacrifice and pray—then, and not till then, will they really understand what their own parents did for them. Is it not unreasonable to require from them that which, in the nature of things, they can not possess for years to come? Honor, love, and prompt obedience are all that they are as yet able to give.

Allow for the individuality of the growing life. Parents sometimes harshly repress it. They are too apt to treat their children as if their lives ought to repeat their own. They will not. No son has ever repeated his father's life, and no daughter her mother's. Each of us is unique. The life of that son or daughter will be something absolutely new in time—a fresh experiment in the possibilities of humanity. The utmost care should be taken not to check latent powers and talents, and not to antagonize noble impulses, and not to refuse the advantages necessary for development.

Allow for the irritation of transition. We are all cross when we are thoroughly upset. A son or daughter passing into maturity is usually an irritable being. This is not inherent badness nor lack of self-control. It is the young soul trying to adjust itself to life. Life has strange fears for us all, but never do those fears rise up so strong and high as they do in the period of transition from childhood to more mature life. We are unaccustomed to life. We are not acquainted with its time-honored duties and demands. We do not know how to deal with its problems, nor what to make of the vigorous, powerful personality developing within us. We are constrained, embarrassed, shy, hampered, misunderstood, and this brings about the unbalanced temper, the petty friction, the despondency, the unhappiness, and the desperate loneliness. I think both boys and girls shed bitterer tears during this phase of their lives than they do over their deepest sorrows later on. It is a season of darkness and trial.

Allow for self-conceit. By this I do not mean to accept conceit as a virtue; it is never that. It is not even a tolerable fault. But consider that the child feels within him the stirring of a life of independent power. He knows that he has a place in this universe which no other has ever had or ever will have. His heart is enlarged. The energies which are moving his soul and his aspirations, dreams, and desires appear to him effective. He thinks he can do wonders. He sees the mistakes and failures of others, without realizing the opposing forces in nature and fate which have brought them about. Having never matched himself against the calm universe, he imagines that he is stronger than he is. Instead of being held up to ridicule, he needs forbearance, compassion, wise words, and wise books.

Allow for the desire to rove. What makes a young man restless at home is not that he wishes to forsake his father and mother, but that he is trying to find out where in God's world he truly belongs. All unconsciously he is looking for his work and his mate. The time is coming when that home will be his no more. He will have his own home, new interests, and independent responsibilities. He can not pass at a bound from one condition to another. There is a period between. Ah, how sadly this period is misunderstood! Too often the father becomes arrogant and domineering—threatens, commands, and reviles his son. The mother weeps, upbraids, pleads, but the son goes his own defiant way. Much of the sadness and sorrow might be avoided if the parents would be a little less arbitrary in their demands, a little less stringent in their requirements, a little more merciful in their judgments of their son's motives. He is not recklessly regardless of their feelings and wishes. He does not want to run away from them. He loves them from the heart. The daily conflict costs him tears and pain. . . .

Allow for moods. Girls, particularly, are subject to great extremes of conduct and feeling. One day they are happy and light-hearted; the next, they are down in the depths. These changes are trying to some parents, who look upon them as whims and freaks. But these moods are a part of a woman's natural development. Just because she is finely organized and sensitive, life takes her at every point unawares. She is not prepared for its sudden disappointments and denials. The overthrow of hopes and plans chills and depresses her. She goes through shock after shock. Again she feels ashamed and disgraced over her outbursts of temper. In her heart there is the ideal of the lovely woman she wishes to be,—the woman ten years older than herself, who has learned patience and calm,—and the daily spiritual defeat fills her with passionate sorrow, which only the noble-minded can understand. Give her tenderness. Love her, and let her grow.

Allow for violent friendships. All girls have them. These friendships often arouse fierce jealousy in the mother. She is angered to find her own love so meagerly repaid, while this sudden girl friend or teacher has lavished upon her the utmost devotion of her daughter's heart. Just as a boy goes through the age of defiance, a girl goes through that of sentiment. It is foolish, but it is real. Recognize the fact. In time these fancies fade away.

Allow for ignorance. The mother, who has had years of practical experience, sees at a glance what is to be done about a house. She thinks her daughter thoughtless and selfish because she lets many things pass by which she might do to relieve her mother of care. Interest that daughter in home duties by giving her a little definite responsibility at a time, and gradually increase it as time goes on. She will grow up, loyal to the home, devoted to her mother, well-trained, prompt, thoughtful, and efficient.

Allow for individual adjustment of time. Allow for individual ways of spending money. No two of us care for just the same things. Every child is unique. Every child is human. Each needs love, patience, and wise care. But the reward is greater the greater the discipline of these trying years. Some day there will be the time of bloom and the time of power. The boys and girls will unconsciously pass into that strong, radiant, noble manhood and womanhood of which their dear parents have dreamed, and for which they have toiled and wept and prayed.—Anna Robertson Brown Lindsay, Ph. D., in the Congregationalist.

Questions on December Reading.

What is the effect of preparation in meeting any hard experience? What period is referred to as the one causing such great perplexity to parents? How can it be prepared for? What is the value of self-control at this age, when the will is likely to become uncontrollable by others? When should this be acquired? What help can be gained from history and life? What traits in childhood give promise of strong character? How long will sheer force hold these traits in check? How may they be made of service? What conditions may be utilized in teaching a child self-control?

What is the effect on young people of familiarity with the ideal of great books? Should young people be allowed their own view-point? How may they be helped to see things in the true light? What allowance should be made for the irritation of transition? How should the self-conceit of this period be dealt with? What does the desire to rove indicate? What guidance may be given the boy either in gratifying or repressing this desire? To what extent does the advice concerning moods apply to boys as well as girls? What should be our attitude regarding them? How should parents look upon their children's friendships? In the performance of home duties, what development may come to children? In what ways should the individuality of young people be respected? To what extent should they be permitted to trespass upon the rights and convenience of others?

A Visit to the Fatherland.

"Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? thou hast the words of eternal life."

Thus it is recorded in John's gospel, chapter 6, verse 68. Latter Day Saints may grow weary and discouraged sometimes; but where shall they go for anything better in regard to the words of life? Christianity at large is in confusion in regard to the sure plan of God; and has been ever since the great apostasy in the fifth century. The only hope is in the restoration of the latter-day work, as foretold in the Revelation of John, chapter 14, verses 6 and 7: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come."

On the 31st of May, this year, wife, daughter, and myself, in company with Bro. Rushton and eight other Saints, boarded the steamer Carmania, in New York, in order to make a trip to the old German country, to visit my mother and relatives whom we had not seen for twenty-six years,—wife thirty-four years. We had quite a pleasant company on board the ship. Among others I made the acquaintance of Mr. Reisuke Sajima, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of Japan. He told me that he had made a trip through America in order to more fully study Christianity, but expressed his great disappointment in finding such confusion of teaching. He did not know what to think of it. This gave me an opportunity to explain that the law of the kingdom, which Christ brought, was eternal, and must necessarily be the same in all ages. I showed him the history, and by prophecy how the church gradually fell away, and how it was to be restored again, the teaching necessarily being the same, with all its officers and evidently the same government which would finally establish peace on earth by obedience to the commandments of Christ, the King of the universe. The people did not abide by the system Christ gave them, consequently the confusion.

He listened very attentively, and finally made the remark that this was real common sense, and asked the question whether the church of God teaches common sense; and he would like to have some papers of our church. I had a few tracts with me, which he gladly took, gave me his card, and took my address. I introduced Bro. Rushton to him as one of the twelve apostles, to whom he gave his card, and kindly asked his address, and said we might hear from him again. When we landed, he came and shook hands, expressing his gladness at having met us.

I also met a Lutheran minister, who has charge over a district (and is called superintendent) where I was born. Heard him preach on Sunday, and was introduced to him. He invited me to his house. The first thing he offered to me was a box of cigars, to enjoy a smoke. After kindly refusing, he wanted to know why I did not smoke. After explaining that the system and lungs of a human body do better with pure air, and speaking of the inconsistency of opening the windows that we may have pure fresh air, and at the same time making it impure by smoking, he excused himself, he, his wife, and another lady listening to a talk on the restoration of the old Jerusalem gospel for three hours, asking after the points of the gospel. After expressing his gladness at what he had heard, I left him a German tract and said good-bye to him.

The meeting with my mother was very emotional. Although seventy-four years of age, she often outwalked us yet. As a rule all relatives received us well. Habits and customs have not changed any. As a rule the German people are very fond of out-of-door sports. The Temple-hof Meadow, near Berlin, was just black with old and young, as far as a person could see, playing all kinds of games Sunday afternoon. They excuse themselves by saying that they are shut up all the week in factory and houses, and must get out on Sunday for fresh air, consequently no time for church. Yet wherever I told them about the restoration of the apostolic church, I found them favorably inclined, and left tracts every place I went.

Met our Bro. Kippe and wife twice. They are very zealous, and have the same Spirit manifested among the true Saints here. He writes and reads English. We found the church papers there. At present he is translating the Doctrine and Covenants into the German language. They have at present about ten members of the church. Have lately baptized five in Eastern Germany. Are very hopeful of getting more soon. And it would be the only reason the writer would like to stay out there, to help do more good among them. We had a very pleasant journey back to America, and are pleased to be among the Saints again.

Yours for the truth in Christ,
ALBERT GIESCH.

INDIANAPOLIS, Indiana, October 29, 1908.

Editors Herald: Since moving to this city a little over a year ago we have searched continually to find members of the church located here, for while we number three members in our own family, we missed the communion and fellowship of those of like precious faith. We have found the statement of the Master, "Seek, and ye shall find," to be a true one, and to date we have been enabled to locate four more members of the household and family of God, with the result that we have a nice little class in Bible study, also a class in Religion work, and hold meetings for those studies each week.

On Sunday, October 18, we held our first social service, also administered the sacrament, and the privilege was much appreciated by all. The Lord was true to his promise and met with us, the power of his Spirit being felt to our edification and enjoyment.

This is a city of about two hundred and seventy-five thousand inhabitants, and the people are generally sociable; a good field, we believe, for missionary work, and we further believe that in this great city there must be some sheep prospective. However, while we have thus far had no preaching here, we have endeavored to live our religion, and as opportunity presented have let our light shine, and stood ready to give a reason for the hope within us.

Should any of the Saints seeing this know of any Saints or friends to the cause residing in this city, if they will communicate the fact to us, we will gladly call on them.

Yours for the redemption of Zion,

TWIN CREEK, Kansas, October 27, 1908.

Editors Herald: Brn. Peak, Teeters, and Potter have just closed a short series of meetings at our Union Church. The attendance was not large, but attentive. Some little interest manifested, which I believe may be increased by further efforts from time to time. Bro. Potter has promised to remain a short time, as interest may warrant. Brn. Peak and Teeters started northward to take in Harland and other points in Smith County. The few members here have appreciated the efforts of these brethren very much, and we hope to meet them again.

In gospel bonds,

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, October 25, 1908.

Editors Herald: For the first time in the history of the St. Clair Branch the conference of the Eastern Michigan District convened here. A large number came from all parts of the district and also from Canada. It was a strange sight to the average citizen of St. Clair to see so many people of our faith represented. One lady remarked, "I did not think there were that many in your church." The world is strangely ignorant of our position and numbers, and has no desire to be enlightened along those lines.

Well, conference has come and gone and the humdrum affairs of everyday life again occupy our attention. The questions arise, Have we profited by our meeting together? Are we getting closer together or are we growing colder and more indifferent to each other?

"Just as a plank of driftwood
Tossed on a watery main,
Another plank encounters,
Meets, touches, and parts again.

"So, meeting and touching ever,
On life's tempestuous sea,
We meet and part and sever,
Drifting eternally."

Then whither are we drifting? Are we being drawn into the current of the world's pleasures and its golden allurements, and making its smart business methods the standard of our conduct, but which come far below the pure standard required by the gospel? We may delude ourselves into believing our motives and acts pure, but when the piercing searchlight of inquiry from the eternal throne is turned upon our motives, will our shrinking soul stand the terrible ordeal? "God can not be deceived. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." We are sowing for eternity. Our records are being written by an eternal pen and these records, whether for good or evil, will surely meet us at the awful bar of God. Our acts are being weighed in the eternal balance, and woe to us if they are found wanting!

What has eternity in store for a living lie? Can we enter the pure atmosphere where God dwells with our garments stained with the lust for gold, that horrible octopus that is seeking to enfold the church of God in its unholy clutches? The commercial octopus of speculation and greed to-day holds the world in an iron grasp, and is pitiless in its tyranny and extortion over trembling humanity. This loathsome pollution has cast its baleful blight over the work of God, and is surely sapping its very foundation. But, "Remember, oh man, for all thy doings thou shalt be brought into judgment. Wherefore if ye have sought to do wickedly in the days of your probation, then ye are found unclean before the judgment-seat of God; wherefore ye must be cast off for ever."—Book of Mormon, 1 Nephi 3: 8. The enemy of our souls uses his weapons with unerring skill; his lures are many. If we shall wear a spotless robe, our lives must be pure and spotless. The war is waging more fiercely as we approach the end, and as the echoes of the conflict grow louder, we feel to say, "Who shall abide the day?"

HAMILTON, N. B., October 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: I hope you will please give space for the inclosed letter, which, though intended to be personal, is of such interest that I think it will be acceptable to your readers. Bro. Taylor certainly deserves the success he here records for his strenuous and persistent endeavors, and I think the results show, to an extent, which in this instance, nowever, is abnormal, the possibilities of adopting such methods.

Throughout my experience in the missionary field these methods have invariably been successful, and though baptisms may not always result so rapidly nor so numerously, yet results do come; and besides, the work is advertised to thousands, and many friends are made to the cause.

And surely it is a rule that will commend itself at least to business people, that if we can save capital in dispensing with appurtenances and machinery and yet have the same, if not better results, such saving is good profit.

Of course the weather may and does interfere with this kind of service, but the same objection can be and is urged against tent-work and vans, for in this country tents and vans are only in use during the summer and autumn weather. But when the rain and cold come then the tents and vans are stored away, and my personal experience has been that a good sized tent would be required to accommodate most of the crowds we get to speak to.

Well, here is concrete evidence of a peculiarly impressive nature as to the benefit of this kind of evangelical work.

Sincerely,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

SHEFFIELD, England, October 20, 1908.

Dear Brother Rushton: Just a line to let you know how matters stand in Sheffield. We have arranged for a baptism on Sunday morning next. There are three men to be baptized, fine men; and they seem solid, and understand their duty. There may possibly be more by then, as there are about six more thinking it over. I have continued to hold open-air meetings in the Monolith. Last night was my forty-second meeting in succession, night after night. My voice has kept up fine. It has been miraculous in the minds of the people. They are surprised; but I believe the Lord is behind it all. I have commenced a new idea, which has taken with the people. I told them I would take up a collection each night at the close of the meetings for the distressed in Sheffield, which has met with a hearty response. I commenced last Thursday night. I realized eight shillings. Friday night, four shillings and six pence. Saturday night, ten shillings. I forgot it on Sunday till I was going away and the people had nearly all gone; but I turned back and got one shilling and six pence. Last night I got five shillings. About three weeks back there was a case where a man was out of work and whilst he was at the meeting his child died.

It was investigated. He had nothing to bury it with, so I made an appeal to the crowd and got the whole amount to bury it with, twenty-eight shillings, the largest collection ever got at the Monolith, I was told. So you can judge we are getting known. We had the room full last Sunday night. The interest was phenomenal. You will no doubt have got the paper I sent you by this. I got a good article in the Sheffield Independent through the kindness of an influential gentleman, who was a personal friend of the editor, and he took me and gave me an introduction to him, which has given us a show against the Mormons. They have never uttered a word, and their room is near the Monolith, and there are about one hundred of them.

Well, I trust that the interest may be kept up. I am thinking of going home on Monday next, as I should like a rest now. I have given you an idea how matters stand. As to what should be done in the future, I leave it with you. Perhaps it would be best for me to keep on here; but I think by next week, as you well know, the municipal elections are on, and there is much excitement prevailing, and it would perhaps be better to suspend the meetings until after the election is over.

I have remained in Sheffield all the time. I have not been to Clay Cross or Whittington Moor. I believe we shall have to make longer stays in one place to do effectual work; and keep at it. I am thoroughly converted that the only method of getting at the people and getting them interested, is in the open air. Why, just think of it! I came here on the 5th of September, and I can not pass through Sheffield without being stopped and questioned about our work, which, to my mind, is proof that open-air work is the best and cheapest method; but it is work that must be persisted in, to make any success.

Your brother in Christ,

T. TAYLOR.

BLAIR, Nebraska, November 2, 1908.

Saints' Herald: I address you a few lines in the interest of God's work. I am trying in my weak way to advance the cause, have visited several places this last month, and would like to hear from all the scattered members in this Northern Nebraska District. So, if this reaches any one that will write me, I would like to hear from him, and will try to visit all as fast as I can. I am working to keep the missionaries in the field. I want to get in all the tithes and offerings that can be found in this district. Many of you owe the Lord money as tithes, or maybe an offering, and he needs the money. Do you pay your debts to man? God wants you to pay him as well. And he will hold you for the debt just as well as man will do; and, better yet, if you do not pay here, you may be asked to pay it on the other side. I think it would be best for you to pay this debt now, and so please Him who is the giver of all good.

I am ready to receipt you for tithes and offerings. Or, if you are ready to make a statement of your property and pay your surplus, I am ready to help you. If you have an opening where we can preach the gospel to the world (or perhaps you would like to hear the old, old story), we stand ready to come to you just as soon as we can. Perhaps you may suffer death in the family and wish some one to speak a few words at the grave. I will come where you have no one who can do this duty for you. Or may be you want to get married, and want a minister of your own church. For this we will come; or to administer to you when sick. Any of these things we stand ready to do for you any time it is possible for us to come.

But above all, do not forget that I write receipts for tithes and offerings. And the church is sadly in need of the money. It is all I can do to get enough to meet the demands made upon me here in the district. But with your help, we can do all that is asked of us. This is a call to all that desire to walk godly in Christ Jesus. Do your duty willingly, and God will bless you. His promise is sure and faithful. Try him, and see if he will not do just as he has said.

Do not let what some have said about the law, as to how it shall be observed, stand in the way. God has told us who is to interpret it for us. And if the Bishop, and those with whom he has to counsel, make a mistake, it will rest upon them. We are ready to obey the law as they may direct; and if any one is to suffer, it will not be you and I. But I believe that they are directing us in the way that God desires us to do. So step forward and do your duty. Pay tithes of what God has given, and may his blessing rest upon you in my prayer. Address me at Blair, Nebraska.

Your brother in the one faith,
H. S. LYTLE.

LUTHER, Montana, October 30, 1908.

Editors Herald: It will be just one year to-morrow since I was buried in baptism by Elder Edgar H. Smith. I was brought to see the truth by my wife, whom I had married a little over a year before, and although I have not had the chance that some have had to attend reunion and regular meetings, still I feel sure this work is right, and know we have been blessed in many ways. Even if our crop was not very good, we had other things to be thankful for.

My parents are of the Episcopal faith; and, of course, I was one of those infants that was sprinkled, or water patted on my head; and I was never allowed to go to any other church, knew nothing else; and when I was old enough to think for myself, I thought it must be right because my parents believed that way. They do not want to see any different, now, and call us Mormons, like lots of others; but I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. But I, like many others, feel my weakness, and do not the things that are pleasing to the Master. The prayers of the righteous avail much; therefore, let the righteous pray for us weaker ones, that we may always strive to walk in the right way, and be pleasing to our heavenly Father.

We are always glad to get the HERALD and Ensign, for we see so many things to cheer us, being isolated as we are. We sometimes go to Red Lodge, a distance of eighteen miles, and have a good talk with Bro. and Sr. Pomeroy; that is lots of help to us younger Saints, as they have been Saints for so many years; and I am sure they are doing good among their neighbors.

Your brother in the gospel,
ARTHUR G. FULLERTON.

Dear Saints: In thinking over my experiences of the past, I thought I would write you just a few lines of thought which came to me as I reflected on our beautiful gospel. It seems we have so much to be thankful for, when we contemplate it it brings joy and cheer to our soul. I am in the gospel for life. I have not a desire in this world greater than to keep his commandments. I wonder how many of us are able to say,

"I fear no foe with Thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight and tears no bitterness."

I lost my baby recently and was able to say, "God's will, not mine, be done." I loved the dear little tot. It always seemed to me he was too sweet for this life anyway, as his face was always a complete smile. God took the dear little one with him and I know that he knows best. I am thankful for everything that has come into my life that has helped to make me purer in heart. I hope to remain steadfast and never get discouraged, though the waiting be long.

I can see the hand of an almighty God over me all the days of my life since I came to the years of understanding. I love this gospel more and more. We have very nice meetings here in Boston, and I am getting lots of spiritual strength from them. I am trying to get myself ready for whatever may come to me, be it sunshine or rain. Dear ones, those of you who have trials hard to bear, do not forget that Jesus is at the helm. He is over all and loves us all. If we never were tired, we could not appreciate rest; if we never were hungry, we could not appreciate being fed; and if we were never sick, we would not appreciate our health. So it is with the gospel of Christ: when we get in a condition of trouble, then it is we can appreciate God. If we never had seen the need of God, how could we have learned to love him or call on him? I have been in need of a heavenly Father's care very much and I can see the need of him more and more.

I want to go on and be a faithful worker for the Master and show by my walk and conversation he is first in my life. Here are a few lines of poetry which came to me the other day:

May we, dear Saints, press on our way,
With an undaunted faith,
And search the books in which we find
The gospel's blessed way.

And live and trust in God above,
Who surely sees and knows
Our every thought and care and hope,
And also each one loves.

So may we all in him rejoice,
Press on the heavenly way
That we may each his grace receive
To help us on our way.

Then let us all each hour improve,
May God's Spirit fill our hearts,
To fit us for the Church above
And reach the Zion Land.

MRS. HATTIE G. SUTHERLAND.

CENTERVILLE, Iowa, October 20, 1908.

Editors Herald: One of the oldest in years, and with one or two exceptions, the oldest in membership in the church of Christ restored in latter days, is a Saint named Hannah Loveland, living at Belleville, Wisconsin. She was born in Ohio, in March, 1814, therefore is now nearly ninety-five years old. She was baptized at Kirtland about seventy years ago, by Elder Zebedee Coltrin, of historic memory, and she has maintained her faith, even though she has had no opportunity to attend meetings for many years.

Her husband was Elder Levi Loveland; and their kindred, the Calls, Lovelands, and Sessions, were active in the Utah church, and in the material development of that land at an early day. In 1845 Levi Loveland and family removed from Nauvoo to Western Iowa, and he died there in 1846. His widow refused to go to Utah with her husband's people. Then by her wish one of her brothers came to Iowa and took her and her children back to Ohio, and in 1853 they removed to Wisconsin. Thus she has been a widow for sixty-two years; and for ten or twelve years she has been helpless, crippled, and warped by rheumatism. Her daughter of sixty-four years waits upon her. They are in poor circumstances; but under all these evils they maintain their faith in God, and their hope in Christ's redemption. At various times they have been visited by Brn. Robinson, McDowell, Wildermuth, Dutton, and other elders; and I have visited them once in two or three years, they being my aunt and cousin. This time I found the mother more frail, and nearing the end. Yet her mind and memory are remarkably good, not only concerning the past, but also about the daily events of the present.

I also met with the Saints of Madison, Evansville, and Janesville, and in the vicinities of those places, and by request preached on the Sundays and some week evenings. In all the places I was welcomed with that brotherly regard which is better than much gold without it. And I called at Rockford and Pecatonica, Illinois, and saw the few Saints at those places. I add that the trip was at my own expense, excepting for volunteer gifts of four dollars in Wisconsin, and two dollars and thirty cents in Illinois.

Last Friday I arrived at Centerville, Iowa, and have been preaching evenings as well as on Sunday. The attendance by Saints has been excellent; but it was never a good place to reach the outside world.

News From Branches

MILLERSBURG, ILLINOIS.

Perhaps a few lines from this place would not be amiss, to let the Saints know of the work that has been accomplished here. Bro. J. T. Hackett has been with us the past five or six weeks, dissecting and tearing down the evil works that have crept in among us, and seeking to build up the work as pertaining to the angel's message. His work among us has not been without its reward, for fourteen precious souls have been made to see and taste of the beauty and grandeur of this marvelous work. Buried in baptism and arose to walk in newness of life. Others are weighing the question within themselves, whether they, too, will accept or reject this restored gospel. Surely, the brother has been guided and assisted by the Holy Spirit, as were those with whom he labored, so as to overcome all things, even to setting aside the cunning devices of men (or devils).

Everything possible has been done to retard the work in the way of slander and misrepresentation. But we see that it was for our own good, as it tended to draw us nearer to each other in the work, arousing some of us to a sense of the responsibility that rested upon us. Each one seems to have renewed courage to go onward to attain to higher things, and to give heed to the things which were commanded. Seemingly all are united in expressing thanks and praise to the brother for his work among us; for any sacrifices or denials he may have made.

The way seems clearer and brighter for many; dark clouds have been lifted. Ever praying and trusting for the upbuilding of Zion, I am,

Your brother,

J. I. HYETT.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Florida District, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: Please take notice that upon recommendation of the district conference of Florida, on the twenty-fourth day of October, Bro. E. N. McCall was recommended for appointment as Bishop's agent in place of Bro. G. T. Chute, who has resigned the position by reason of changing his residence outside of the district.

This will notify all of the appointment in accordance with the recommendation of Bro. E. N. McCall, and the Saints in said district, in contributions in behalf of the Reorganized Church to whatever fund, may address agent as follows: E. N. McCall, Dixonville, Alabama, who will look after and duly report all receipts and expenditures to this office in due time.

We bespeak for Bro. McCall the coöperation and help of all the Saints in this district, as well as the blessing of our heavenly Father to direct and assist him in his work.

The Bishopric returns special thanks to Bro. G. T. Chute for his careful and devoted work in the office of Bishop's agent in the past, and trust the Lord will specially bless him in the change that he is to make, so that he may be better prospered to perform a goodly work than heretofore.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am,

Very respectfully,

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, October 31, 1908.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Eastern South Dakota; Greeting: At the beginning of the conference year, the Bishop assigned me the duty of caring for Sr. L. G. Holloway and her babe from the tithes of the Saints in this mission, and at present she is more than two months behind in her allowance. I kindly ask the Saints to think of this matter and be governed by the golden rule, and when you sit around your pleasant friends, enjoying some of the comforts of life, just remember there is a sister with her babe who has sacrificed companionship and help of her husband that he might help spread the glad message of the gospel, and let her needs urge you on to duty, not grudgingly, but cheerfully and willingly, because it is a duty that God has assigned to us all, and we should not fail to perform it.

When you do not know where I am in my mission field, address me at Omaha, Nebraska, 3318 Taylor Street.

EDWARD RANNIE,

Bishop's Agent for Eastern South Dakota.

THE ANSWER OF A GOOD CONSCIENCE.

Peter makes use of the expression, "The answer of a good conscience toward God" (1 Peter 3: 21). Paul uses a similar expression. (1 Timothy 1: 5.)

The verdict of one's conscience is the secret judgment that his soul passes on his own conduct. There is no torment more acute than the suffering caused by self-reproach. On the other hand there is no pleasure more exquisite, no joy more to be desired, than that which accompanies the commendation of a good conscience,—a just sense of duty well done.

There is a longing in every heart for pleasure. The aspiration is legitimate. The Book of Mormon asserts that man is that he might have joy. We accept that as a true statement of the divine purpose concerning man. Yet how fearfully men have misunderstood the nature of pleasure.

Day and night the misguided pursuit goes on. Millions are toiling feverishly all day that they may surround themselves with greater luxuries, with more ostentatious display, little realizing that joy is a state of mind not entirely dependent upon environment. As night falls thousands go out to spend the hours in revelry and dissipation. Reverend Sunday has said, not untruthfully, that midnight on earth is midday in hell. Men fancy that if they look at life through the inverted wine-glass everything will wear a rosy hue; that the darts of sorrow can not strike them if they but live fast enough; that the music of the dance will drown the voice of condemnation. Thus it is no unusual spectacle to see laboring men with more muscle than mind who work hard all the week and spend their wages in one riotous Saturday night, having "a good time." It is no unusual spectacle to see rich men with more money than morals who are backing the Devil's game with every dollar at their command. It is no uncommon spectacle to see women whose one settled conviction is that d-r-e-s-s spells happiness.

What does it all mean? It means remorse whenever there comes a quiet hour in which one must face his own soul. It means everlasting regret if there is not a change.

The path of duty is the path of pleasure. There is no happiness so great as that which is experienced when we know that we are doing right. When more important duties are done there are many innocent pleasures and diversions that may be enjoyed, with added zest because we know that we have neglected no duty in order that we might court pleasure. There are pleasures that may be enjoyed with the realization that no one is suffering or ever will suffer because we have indulged in them.

What is a good conscience? A good conscience is one that is alive, one that will return a verdict in harmony with the eternal laws of right and wrong. It will base its conclusions on reason, on the written word, and on the instructions of the Holy Spirit.

Doctor Hudson says of Jesus, "History records the name of but one man in whom the eternal principles of right and wrong were instinctive." Yet, though Christ knew right and wrong intuitively, he did not disdain recourse to the written word to justify his judgment. When tempted, he answered Satan, "It is written." Our conscience may be educated by a study of the word of God, in which is recorded the laws of right and wrong.

A good conscience is one that is in touch with the divine Spirit, the Spirit that guides into all truth. Paul says, "I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Ghost."—Romans 9:1.

If we examine deeply enough we will discover in every case that the written word and the genuine promptings of the Spirit have the assent of reason; so that man if he chooses may surround himself with a triple wall against the attacks of error and evil.

Man's conscience is capable of education. It may be falsely educated so that it will give its approval to an evil act. We may presume that in the justice of God the man who has been the victim of such a false education will be enlightened. One who attempts to force such an education upon his own conscience must suffer the consequence. He who has deliberately browbeaten his conscience may rest assured that some day it will be aroused and will give its true verdict unbribed and unafraid. Alma says:

Then if our hearts have been hardened, yea, if we have hardened our hearts against the word, insomuch that it has not been found in us, then will our state be awful, for then we shall be condemned; for our words will condemn us, yea, all our works will condemn us; we shall not be found spotless: and our thoughts will also condemn us; and in this awful state, we shall not dare look up to our God; and we would fain be glad if we could command the rocks and the mountains to fall upon us, to hide us from his presence. But this can not be: we must come forth and stand before him in his glory, and in his power, and in his might, majesty and dominion, and acknowledge to our everlasting shame, that all his judgments are just.—Alma 9.

MORONI A MODERN FAMILY NAME.

The following letter, accompanied by an envelope which contains letter from Italy, which letter was delivered by Bro. Garbutt to the one to whom it was addressed in Seattle, will be quite interesting to the readers of the HERALD. It might easily be commended to the attention of those who have so rabidly thought of the Book of Mormon and might interest them some.

It is said all things come to those who wait. Every turn of the wheel brings evidence to us.

SEATTLE, Washington, October 29, 1908.

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH,

Independence, Missouri.

Dear Brother: The inclosed envelope from Milan, Italy, may be a curiosity. I delivered it on the first day of this month. Number 212 Washington Street is a saloon and receives a good deal of mail.

John Moroni is a relative of the proprietor; and the little information I gathered I can vouch for as true. The family of Moroni have resided in Cuggiono, Italy, for many generations, and reach so far back, they can not remember the beginning. They have no authentic written chronology and can not explain to what particular tribe or race they belong, or of their migrations. There are several families of this name in Italy, belonging to the same group. There are also four families in Joliet, Illinois, three in Detroit, Michigan, two in Seattle, Washington, one in Butte, Montana, and one near Black Diamond, Washington. I also inclose a clipping from the P. I. of October 25, 1908, which accounts the name of Smith as "good, strong, and honest."

On the lookout,

AMONG THE LAMANITES.

The following letter from a missionary to the Lamanites will be read with interest:

Sunday, October 18, was a beautiful morning. The writer had the privilege of talking to the sons and daughters of Laman, at eleven, after which Bro. J. E. Yates buried in the watery grave a sister of the Cheyenne tribe chief. After leading her down into the water, he did not know what to call her by given name, and knowing she could not understand without some bother to himself and her, the Spirit told him her name was Mary; and so it was, the Spirit not only helping him, but giving us another testimony that the God that we look up to as our Father is their Father. The night of the 17th the writer dreamed a dream: Three Lamanites advanced toward him, all dressed in red. Just in the rear, in a long row, were, as it were, hundreds of the sons of Laman advancing towards the writer. This dear sister that was buried under the water and came up out of the water was the first of the Cheyennes to fulfill the dream; for she was dressed in pure or clear red. Two more must be baptized out of that family; for the writer's dream to be fulfilled as to the three dressed in red, then hundreds of Cheyennes must come in, in the near future, as they were seen just behind, but in the dimness. Thus it was in the confirmation the same. The Holy Spirit filled the room. This Lamanite sister is Mr. Amos Chapman's wife, the man whom General Miles says is the bravest man on earth. Many Lamanites have tried to kill him.

Sr. Chapman's father, eighty-five summers old, says, "Our fathers received words from the Great Spirit; they put the words on stone and buried them in the earth." Let us pray that those presenting the Lamanites their Bible may have the gift of tongues; for to learn the different tongues of all the tribes is next to impossible.

WHAT OF THESE CRIMES?

The Kansas City Journal, November 15, has the following editorial touching certain spectacular crimes that have attracted the attention of the country during the past few weeks:

Within the past few weeks the country has been shocked by several crimes of so terrible a nature that we would do well to pause and inquire if they are significant of a failing civilization. It may be a mere coincidence that the state of Tennessee furnished two of these tragedies, and it may be said that in both instances the crimes were the result of perverted ideas of personal rights under a "code of honor" that, happily, is no longer the standard of manly actions generally in the South. The mob that captured Captain Rankin and Colonel Taylor and took them to Reelfoot Lake, where one was lynched and the other escaped after fearful suffering, was composed of outlaws who labored under the idea that they were justified in substituting the rope for the courts. A few days after this shocking affair the news was flashed abroad that Ex-senator Carmack was shot down in cold blood upon the streets of Nashville, with the murderer giving moral justification of his tragic deed by explaining that he had been "wronged" by the dead man.

And now the people of this land of law and order are called upon to contemplate the shooting of Francis J. Heney, chief attorney for the prosecution in the San Francisco graft cases, by an ex-convict who believed his "personal honor" had been outraged through an exposure of his record—a proceeding that was merely incidental to the trial of the celebrated cases in which Heney was so active. Mr. Heney is a brave and a useful citizen of the West, where he has always been prominent in punishing evil-doers, and it is worthy of note that none of the many who have "had it in" for the prosecutor in various states and cases ever "got the drop" on him. It remained for a shameless and obscure criminal to push his way into a public court-room and shoot down a defenseless and unsuspecting man who was doing his duty by society.

ONE THOUSAND NEW SUBSCRIBERS.

It is very encouraging to the management to see the quick response by many to the call for one thousand new subscribers to the HERALD.

Every branch president, missionary, and member is requested to join in this effort to boost the HERALD during November.

There are hundreds of members who are not receiving the paper and many of them will subscribe if the matter is presented to them properly.

Remember, we send the HERALD free from now until January 1, 1909, to all new subscribers who send us one dollar and fifty cents in the month of November for next year's subscription.

There are still ten days left and why should not all help?

Branch Presidents, if you are too busy to do this work please appoint some energetic brother or sister to canvass the branch for you. Do It Now.

Elder J. S. Roth canvassed one small branch and sends in three HERALD and two Ensign subscriptions. He appreciates the effort being made to spread the printed word, and is glad to cooperate. What wonderful results await us upon every hand if we become united in our efforts.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder William Lewis, Cardiff, Wales, writes as follows to the Daily Post:

"In your columns of October 14 appears the following statement: 'There are two thousand dollars awaiting any person who can prove one polygamous marriage in Utah since 1890, when the Prophet Wilfred Woodruff had a revelation that such unions must cease. One thousand dollars to be paid by V. S. Peet, of Idaho, U. S. A., and one thousand dollars by Apostle Penrose, Liverpool.'

"It is possible that Messrs. Peet and Penrose have made the above promise, and that Mr. Hamilton and his colaborers, now doing mission work in Swansea, for the Utah Mormon church, have faith in the same, and to show their confidence in the challenge, let them place in the hands of the editor of the Daily Post, a guarantee, satisfactory to him, that the two thousand dollars is not a bluff, but that upon proof that there has been polygamous marriage in Utah since 1890 the money will be paid, and in order that the Mormons shall have justice, as well as the public, in this investigation, let them (Mormons) appoint two men, and on behalf of the public the undersigned will name two others, and let these four named persons name the fifth, and if proved satisfactory to the majority of this committee then the two thousand dollars is to be paid by Messrs. Peet and Penrose or their representatives into the hands of the above committee, they to disburse it as in their judgment will be for the best.

"If the Mormons in Utah and elsewhere have honored the so-called revelation of Woodruff, of 1890, they should have no hesitancy in placing in the hands of the editor satisfactory security that the above challenge is made in good faith. Upon the other hand, if they do not do so, it will be strong evidence that the two thousand dollar talk is a mere bluff to mislead and deceive the innocent. Let me again ask the Mormon missionaries of Swansea that if they have faith in the challenge of Messrs. Peet and Penrose, let them comply with a fair proposition, and vindicate their cause."

"A Jewish rabbi in Asia Minor has asked King Edward to use his good offices to persuade the Sultan to grant permission to Jews to rebuild the Temple on Mount Moriah at Jerusalem. The recent change of political affairs in Turkey makes possible many things which a few months ago seemed impossible," says the Congregationalist, "in the new attitude of friendship instead of hatred between peoples holding different religions. On or near the sight of Herod's Temple is a Mohammedan mosque, and what was once a Christian church, now called the Mosque El Aksa. If this should be restored to the use made of it during the Crusades, and a Jewish temple should be erected on the plateau, there would be three temples, a Mohammedan, a Hebrew, and a Christian, looking down on a city which has witnessed religious strife more prolonged, bitter, and bloody perhaps than any other spot on earth. Stranger things than this have not happened in the history of religions. Under present conditions it may seem incredible, but it would be a reversal of the course of things in the Levant for ten centuries."—Exchange.

According to the Sioux City Journal the ministers of that city have been victimized by a shrewd grafter who has been playing the old game of begging money to take him to some desired point where work awaited him, the money to be promptly returned. Elder Paul Hanson quietly turned detective and ran the fellow to earth. He now faces a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses.

"The curse of Almighty God is on your business," says a recent writer to the saloon-keeper, "and you know it.

"Your coffers drip with human blood.

"You know it.

"You are barred out from all decent society.

"You know it.

"Society has kicked you out.

"The Masonic fraternity have kicked you out. The Knights of Pythias have kicked you out. The Odd Fellows have kicked you out. Catholic Benevolent Societies have kicked you out. The great insurance companies have kicked you out.

"The business world has closed its doors against your patrons.

"The railroads of America, employing more men than the vast standing armies of England and Germany put together, won't employ your patrons.

"The churches reject men for membership who rent you property.

"Only a few places, like the penitentiary, the poor-house, and the potter's field, are open to your graduates.

"Of all men you are regarded as the scum of the earth in this world, and you face a fearful destiny in the next."

The next number of the HERALD will contain a new department to be called "The Round Table," devoted to Zionistic questions, spiritual and economic. Besides several original articles, the initial number of this department will contain a reprint of An Address to the Saints, issued by the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in 1903. The department will appear at intervals of several weeks.

Elder S. W. L. Scott is engaged in debate with Reverend Roberts, of Rippey, Green County, Iowa, representing the Christian Church. The debate is being held in the Christian Church of Kansas City, and will be repeated in the Saints' Church at Independence.

The holiday number of Autumn Leaves will be one of the best numbers ever issued. It is to be illustrated with unusual care, and will appear in a cover appropriate to the month. The contents will be up to the usual high standard of Autumn Leaves. Our readers should remember that Autumn Leaves makes a fine Christmas present. The January number will start the year 1909 in fine shape with original poems, stories, autobiographies, etc. Elder Charles Lake will continue his inimitable account of "Experiences in Southern Seas." Elder James Moler will tell the remarkable story of his conversion, the first in a series, "How I became converted," to which various writers will contribute. James L. Edwards will tell how he came to write the hymn, "Angel Message," one of the most popular hymns in Zion's Praises. These are a few of many good things to start the best year of Autumn Leaves. Subscribe now. Autumn Leaves is only one dollar per year. Address Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Elders J. W. Wight and T. A. Hougas were the speakers at the Brick Church Sunday morning and evening respectively. Both discourses were along practical lines, more especially regarding the duties of parents. Good sound advice was given that may well be heeded.

Elder T. A. Hougas addressed the Religio Friday evening. The Religio is making preparation for a Thanksgiving program one week from Friday evening. The X-Ray will appear as a special Thanksgiving number. The time will be devoted mostly to program.

The committee appointed at the late General Sunday-school Convention to outline lesson courses for the Quarterly has been in session during the week. The committee consists of T. A. Hougas, Heman C. Smith, J. A. Gunsolley, Duncan Campbell, and Sr. Anna Salyards.

Lamoni experienced a touch of genuine winter during the past week. The ground was quite well covered with the beautiful snow. We do not like the sample very well and hope that no great amount of that kind will be sent on for our supply of winter weather.

Elders' Note-Book

THE EXCELLENT VOCATION OF THE AMBASSADOR FOR CHRIST.

We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—2 Corinthians 5:20.

The respect with which we should honor the "men of God" is impressed on us in the picture shown in 1 Kings 13:1-4. King Jeroboam raises his arm to strike one of the prophets, and his hand instantly falls withered by his side.

However, the protecting power of Jehovah is not always thus manifested in shielding his servants. John the Baptist was beheaded. With few exceptions all the prophets were slain. The new covenant priesthood is more glorious than the old:

Not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything as of ourselves; but our sufficiency is of God; who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the Spirit: for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious? For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious.—2 Corinthians 3:5-11.

The holy priesthood is greater spiritually than man's earthly dominion. While the Lord has made man "a little lower than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou has put all things under his feet" (Psalms 8:5, 6), even above the high position of mankind generally, "ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light; which in time past were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy." (1 Peter 9:10.)

The priesthood are the saviors of the generation in which they live. You are the means of applying the saving grace of the atonement of Christ to sinful humanity. You are the element that preserves the earth from absolute corruption. "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid." You are a landmark on a high mountain, that travelers on the way of life, seeing, are thereby guided into the path that leads to the city of God and his Christ. You are the vicars for Jesus Christ "that was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." You are called "men of God." (1 Timothy 6:11.) You are called "servants of God." (Titus 1:1.) You are called a "doorkeeper in the house of God." (Psalm 84:10.) You are called "friends" of Christ. (John 15:15.)

As his friends and companions, our Lord manifested his attachment to his disciples by revealing to them the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, which had been locked in his own breast, or only partially disclosed to others in parables.

When our Lord was asked by one of his disciples, "How is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" Jesus answered, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him."—John 14:22, 23. And the Spirit speaking through the seer of Patmos said, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."—Revelation 3:20.

That man who is in the proper spiritual condition to receive revelations, will receive them.

You are called "fathers," of spiritual offspring, not carnal. (1 Corinthians 4:15.) You are called "priests." (Hebrews 7:1.) You are called "stewards of the mysteries of God," and "ministers of Christ." (1 Corinthians 4:1; Luke 12:42.) You are called "ministers of the reconciliation." (2 Corinthians 5:8.)

You have the prerogative of pardoning sin. (See Matthew 18:18; John 20:21-23.) The wondrous faculty of forgiving sins is the privilege of the priesthood authority—to pardon the repentant sinner.

You are "physicians of the soul." Confession or acknowledgment of our faults is one of the elements of repentance, and is essential to attract the divine healing power. Physician and patient must also pray for one another. (See James 5:13-16.) The elder administers the medicine of consolation to the sorrowing, gives salutary remedies for moral disease, brings sunshine to the house of mourning, binds up the wounds of the broken-hearted, cheers the disconsolate, heals domestic dissensions, and assuages the fever and passions of anger, cupidity, and voluptuousness.

The "priests" are the messengers of the Lord of hosts. (See Malachi 2:7.)

The angels of the seven churches of Asia were the presidents of each branch or congregation. (See Revelation 2.) The angel who was talking to John, the beloved apostle of Christ, told John not to bow down and worship his equal, his fellow servant, his brother. "Worship God, for the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Through the spirit of prophecy you receive the testimony that Jesus is the Christ. This is the rock on which the church is built. "No man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12: 3. Peter received the revelation that Jesus was "the Christ, the Son of the living God." And our Savior said that upon this "rock" or principle, he would build his church.

The priests are called the "ministers of the Lord." (Joel 2: 17.) They are mediators of intercession, between the porch and the altar, between the people and their God. They are like Moses, John the Baptist, and Paul. (See Hebrews 5: 1-3.)

The ambassador of Christ is furnished with the credentials of a divine embassy, and is empowered to prescribe the conditions on which men may enter into a treaty of reconciliation and peace with the King of kings. (See 2 Corinthians 5: 20.) He personates Christ. There exists between Christ and his priesthood an identity of ministry. His official acts are Christ's acts, done by the authority of Christ, in the name of Christ. The Son of God said to his ministry:

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28: 18-20. He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me.—Matthew 10: 40. He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.—Luke 10: 16.

Christ ratifies in heaven the official acts of his holy priesthood on earth. It is by virtue of this coöperation that the merits of the atonement are applied and the light of the gospel is diffused. Magnify your office. Honor your ministry, that you may, by your life and example, provoke some to emulation of the great teacher, your master, Jesus Christ. (See Romans 11: 13, 14.)

In February, 1829, the Holy Spirit said through Joseph Smith, the prophet, seer, and revelator:

If ye have desires to serve God, ye are called to the work, for, behold, the field is white already to harvest, and lo, he that thrusteth in his sickle with his might, the same layeth up in store that he perish not, but bringeth salvation to his soul; and faith, hope, charity, and love, with an eye single to the glory of God, qualifies him for the work. Remember, faith, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence. Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 4.

MINISTERIAL DEPARTMENT.

Work is the normal condition of man; work is that which develops, strengthens, energizes, and preserves every faculty of the human frame, every faculty of the brain, and while a man is at work he is doing that which is accomplishing good; hence, the minister must be an active worker. The church expects it; every branch and department of the church expect it. The world is hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and in many places the calls for preachers are so constant and so persistent that our hearts are pained by the hearing of them. Then, brethren of the ministry, do all you can. Remember that to the extent of your powers you are expected to do so, and it is necessary for you to work in the ministerial field.

Another thought in this regard; that is, be natural—I mean by that, every man to be himself. Do not be somebody else. We are not all alike. We are not all of the same size. We have not all the same qualities; but every man can be himself. And just as surely as a minister undertakes to pattern after somebody else, or fall into the habit of mimicking his tones or taking up his pet ideas and expressions the first thing that will happen will be that he will be a repetition of another man, and a poor one at that. Be natural, brethren, be yourselves; whatever you do and however you do it, be your natural selves. Express yourselves in your own way; learn to have that way of such a character that you can reach the people with it, and never mind if it be not quite so eloquent as that of another man. If the congregation understand you, then you may rest satisfied.

Much depends on your deportment, brethren, both in the stand and out of the stand; both on the way to meeting, in meeting, and after you have reached the houses of the Saints where you stay, or of strangers where you may lodge. If your deportment is kind, if your deportment is courteous, if you walk charitably with the Saints, if you walk worthily in your deportment, it will go very far towards commending you to your hearers, and that which you may have to give them will be better received than if you are abrupt, discourteous, unkind, and unthankful. Again, if you are discreet in your deportment towards the men, towards the grandmothers, towards the mothers, and the wives, and the daughters of the people among whom you walk, you will neither be followed by scandal in your footsteps nor will you bring reproach upon the cause. Therefore I request of you and urge upon you as you love the truth, in your deportment towards men and women alike, deport yourselves as men of God who are kindly disposed and clean in your thoughts.

Another thing, brethren, do not ride hobby horses; I mean hobbies. In your preaching, preach the gospel, and let those speculative theories be discussed at the places where forensic display is permissible. And if you have speculative theories to present to the world, reserve them for the quorums and the ministers' meetings. There you can soar as high as you please, and your brethren are not likely to misunderstand you, but if you build in the stars and all the rest of the wide world of theology you are giving the people something that distracts them and is really not appreciated by them, and while it may not be foreign to the gospel in its right correlation, if you do not happen to have time and opportunity to give them the correlation, your labor is lost upon them. Preach the gospel to them, and if perchance some other preacher may have preached something in the neighborhood that you can not agree with if he is of the same faith, just quietly allow that to die out. Do not take it and kick it into life.

One of the things that is doing some harm and preventing to some extent the preaching to the people and the making an impression upon them, is a species of boastfulness that is sometimes indulged in, by which the people gather the impression that the preacher says that the people whom he represents are the only good people upon the earth, the only people who are the recipients of God's word, the only ones who are so blessed with divine light. I have heard so much of that that I have sometimes felt fearful lest we were overstepping the bounds and forgetful of the admonition which we have upon record, that is, "Talk not judgment, neither boast of faith." The world will be judged in its time; God will in his own time pour out that which is for judgment; but pray, brethren, do not be boastful with our own shortened understanding; let us let the world see by comparison whether we are what we ought to be.

MINISTERIAL ANECDOTE.

Elder T. C. Kelley, writing in the Ensign, relates the following anecdote of an incident that occurred during a debate with a certain clergyman who advocated the election theory:

"He ridiculed the Saints' idea of the eternal judgment; told the story of the Irishman and the pig, by way of illustration.

"Pat was arraigned, so his story ran, for stealing a pig from a widow, Mrs. Flanigan. The lawyer had worked hard to get Pat to confess, and having, as he thought, gotten Pat almost ready to confess, said:

"Now Pat, when you get to heaven, and see Mrs. Flanigan there, what excuse can you make for stealing her pig?"

"Will Mrs. Flanigan be there?" Pat asked.

"Oh, yes, she'll be there."

"And will the pig be there?"

"Oh, yes, the pig will be there."

"May the blessing of heaven rest upon you for telling that. I'll just say: 'Mrs. Flanigan, here is your pig.'"

"This, to Mr. Paine's mind, was about like the idea of progression after death. People could do as they had a mind to in this life, and then make it all right in the world to come by restoring the pig, or in other words, by correcting their wrongs. His people laughed as though they thought it a good point.

"It had developed during the debate that he believed Ezekiel 18:24, viz: 'But when the righteous turneth away from his righteousness and committeth iniquity, and doeth according to all the abominations that the wicked man doeth, shall he live? All his righteousness that he hath done shall not be mentioned: in his trespass that he hath trespassed, and in his sin that he hath sinned, in them shall he die,' was applicable only to spiritual Israel, i. e., the elect, and held that while they might die literally, they would not and could not die spiritually, for eternal life had been given them previously, and unconditionally, so they would still be saved in glory, notwithstanding all these iniquities.

"I told him his pig story was a nice one, but he did not tell it all. Patrick had a brother whose name was Mike. He, too, stole a pig from the same Mrs. Flanigan. Mike was one of 'spiritual Israel,' one of the 'elect,' unconditionally so. Mrs. Flanigan was one of the 'non-elect,' unconditionally so. Neither his works nor hers had anything to do with the spiritual state of either. It was all by 'the decree of God.' The widow from whom the pig is stolen, dies and goes straightway to the lurid regions of eternal torment, while Mike, who stole the pig, dies, and wends his way to the pearly gates, guarded by the ever watchful eye of Saint Peter. The gates open wide and the pig thief is invited to enter. He timidly looks around, and among the first questions he asks is: 'Is Mrs. Flanigan here?'

"Saint Peter replies, 'No, she was not one of the 'elect', she has gone to the place of never-ending torment.'

"Mike, very much elated: 'May the blessing of heaven be on ye for tellin me thot; then I can kape the pig.'"

Deputy State Attorney Raymond Williams, of Maryland, while preparing a case against an accused bigamist, has discovered an old law dating back to the English law of 1604, and transferred therefrom to the Maryland code, which makes death the penalty, without alternative, for bigamy in that State. So far as he can learn, this old law is still in force.

LIGHT REFLECTED.

The authenticity of section 106, of Doctrine and Covenants, has been questioned, and we are asked for light. Light is found in the fact that the church indorsed the book several different times, and I understand that the Lord has done so once, at least. In 1902, section 126, paragraph 10, I read:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to.

Here is an indorsement of the book, including section 106, and the law of tithing and consecration. What more light do we need? But here is another—Section 114, 1861:

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.

Webster says a tithe means a tenth; so does section 106; and the Lord says we are to accede to the law as stated by the Bishopric. It seems to me that our duty is plain; and section 106 is all right.

J. L. GUNSOLLEY.

SECTION 106 AND TITHING AS PART OF THE GOSPEL LAW.

Since there is much discussion on the subject of tithing, and a great many views held by different individuals touching the matter, we deem it proper to write a line giving some of our reasons for believing in the law of tithing.

First, it is as old as the gospel; and, second, it is renewed in the restoration of the same. However, it has been argued by some that section 106 is not a part of the gospel or celestial law; but, being given at a later date, is not genuine. It is generally conceded, however, by all who profess to believe in any phase of the latter-day work, that sections 42, 51, 64, and 70, are authoritative; but there are some who argue that section 106 is not in line with the other sections just mentioned.

It is true that those revelations deal with consecration, too; but we find, upon examination, that they teach tithing; and we wish to show the reader that section 106 is in perfect harmony with section 64: 5, which reads: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people."

Now every believer in the latter-day work will surely agree with me, that this section is a part of the law that was given at the Ohio (see section 38: 7), which was given that they (the elders) might know how to govern the church, and have all things right before the Lord. (See section 42, paragraph 1.) And I find that it teaches tithing; but the objector might argue that it does not say a "tenth," and then reason that it would not require much of a sacrifice to pay a tenth of the interest or increase annually, and so the objector concludes that section 64 provides for something more than the law in section 106 provides for; and yet it says the tithe. And what does tithe mean? Our advice would be to consult a dictionary before attempting to show a conflict between sections 64 and 106, and it would be discovered that they were in perfect harmony in that they both teach a "tenth" or "tithe," and I find Webster's definition of tithe to be, "A tenth part."

So the law in section 64 plainly taught a tenth; but it seems as if there were some who were unable to understand the simplicity of the law, and therefore asked for a more definite statement as to what they should pay the tithe of, and requested that the Prophet inquire of the Lord; and, upon inquiry, section 106 was given not to conflict in any way, or change the face of section 64, but to establish it.

Section 64: 5 tells us that a tithe, a tenth, is required; and section 106 tells us that it is a tenth or tithe of the interest or increase annually; and so we find it in perfect accord with Jacob's vow. (See Genesis 28: 20-22.)

But the question is sometimes asked, "Where is the evidence that God gave section 106?" All that is necessary here is to read section 126: 10, and we will readily discover the answer to the question in these words:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.

Here is an indorsement of the entire book, section 106 included; hence, we have not only the revelation itself, but we have the word of the Lord through the present Joseph indorsing it, declaring the book is to be "taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing."

If section 106 was spurious, as is sometimes argued, it would have been an excellent opportunity for the Lord to have said, You shall take all that has been given in the matter, except section 106, because it is false; but instead of doing that he says, that it is necessary along with other revelations to make the law complete; for we read, "each revelation contained therein." That is absolute.

Therefore, if we question section 106, we must also question section 126, and in fact the whole Book of Doctrine and Covenants. So we advise that a careful study be made of the books; and, in so doing, it will be discovered that whenever the gospel law has been on earth the law of tithing has also been there. "And I can not go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do less or more."—Numbers 22: 18.

Therefore, when the Lord has indorsed section 106, I dare not reject it, neither dare I advance some other theory as being superior to the law he has given.

IS TITHING A TENTH?

My attention has been resting upon the following language, which I found recently:

"Then let us examine the law, taking the revelations that can be authenticated, using the Inspired Translation of the Bible, and the Book of Mormon, and see if we will not all agree on the subject of temporalities. I mean all who are really honest and want to learn their duty fully, not seeking an excuse to keep their means, neither seeking to teach in a way to gain the favor of the rich."

The terms upon which this writer invites an examination of the law, we accept; and as he further says in the same article, "Not only is section 106 in conflict with section 42, but its authenticity may well be questioned for other reasons," we will proceed to briefly examine one branch of the financial law (the one this writer rejects), leaving section 106 entirely out of the evidence.

The accepted definition of the word tithe, as used in the Bible, is tenth. These words are also there used interchangeably. My conclusion is arrived at in this manner: "And Abraham gave him tithes of all he had taken," (Genesis 14: 20,) meaning that Abraham gave to the high priest Melchisedec a certain proportion of the spoils he had taken at the slaughter of the kings. Speaking of this event the Apostle Paul says, in Hebrews 7: 2, "To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all." In this we have the great apostle's definition of tithe. Also in Genesis 28: 22 we have Jacob saying, "And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee," thus placing himself under vow to keep the then existing financial law, the law of tithing. And the law of tithing is again plainly given in Leviticus 27: 30, 32; "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord." The words tithe and tenth are therefore seen to be interchangeable in the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures, from which all our quotations are taken. It will therefore not do to say that there is only one law by which we may contribute to the treasury of the Lord, unless we admit that the tenth is a part of that law. And if it be claimed that this law applies only to those who have consecrated their all, and are consequently administering in their stewardships, then he who makes the claim is using the doctrine given us in section 106!

In Matthew 23: 20 we have the Savior recorded as saying:

"Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! For you pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin; and have omitted the weightier things of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

The Master herein commits himself to this paying of tithes, and it therefore becomes a part of the new covenant, or the law instituted under him. The word is also used in such a manner as to carry the idea of a certain proportion. If this proportion is not a tenth, the burden of proof rests with those who believe it does not so mean to enlighten us as to what proportion or part of the property the Master did designate in the language quoted. And as tithe and tithing are at least generally used in the Scriptures as meaning a definite portion, if there be any other meaning than that this portion is one tenth, then it is evident the Apostle Paul must be put in the class of unauthenticated witnesses.

But let us see if these passages from the Inspired Translation are not corroborated by the law given to the church in this dispensation. Turn with me to Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1, and read the following language:

"In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing."

Is there any manner in which we may tell with precision just what the Lord meant by the law of tithing? We think there is. The writer is one of the young men, but he can remember, and all who are as old or older than he, in the work, will also remember, that for a number of years, and up to the present time, the Bishopric, and the Twelve, taught that when one had paid a tenth of all he possessed into the church treasury, he was then in full compliance with the law of tithing. In fact, I do not know of the Bishopric and the Twelve ever teaching any other interpretation, from the fall of 1861 down to the spring of 1894, when we find, according to Doctrine and Covenants 122, that the same prophet who gave us section 114 received the following, after having been in fasting and prayer before the Lord.

After stating one reason why the instruction in paragraph 1 of section 114 had been given, this revelation continues:

"And for the reason that the law of tithing was but little understood, and would not be observed, unless it should be taught, and enforced by the precepts of the chief missionaries of the church. It was not then intended, nor is it now, to burden them with looking after the disbursements of the moneys in the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church; . . . Whatever burden the quorum may have felt rested upon them in this regard, they are now absolved from, the end designed by it having been reached, etc."—Paragraph 5.

The fair inference from this quotation is, that if the Twelve had been teaching anything with regard to the collection of tithing, that was not intended by the Giver, he would have corrected them then and there, while he was in the business of setting these quorums to rights. But nothing of the kind was done; the commission therefore still remains, and the Quorum of Twelve are still under obligations to teach the law as they have been teaching it, as a distinct branch of the financial law, applicable to all members of the church, and whenever the church of Christ exists.

One of the reasons why the Quorum of Twelve was so commissioned was that a better understanding of this law of tithing might obtain among the members of the church. Such an understanding has become more general, and the Lord's experiment of nearly thirty-three years had been so successful that instead of discontinuing their work along this line, he made it perfectly plain that they were to continue in it. If this is not the sanction of the Almighty upon their interpretation and teaching of the law of tithing as being one tenth of all the party possesses at time of compliance therewith, and thereafter one tenth of the interest, or increase, annually, then these revelations, sections 114 and 122, must be added to the list of witnesses that are not authentic. Are we ready for this step?

But this matter gets worse as we proceed. On the night of April 16, 1902, Joseph Smith says he received the following:

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.

You will notice these several points:

1. There are at least two parts of the law involved in the inquiry; tithing and consecration.

2. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric, each revelation therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.

3. That unless certain contingencies arise, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to.

If there are two separate branches of the financial law, known as tithing and consecration, then they are not both incorporated in section 42, but both must be in operation if Zion is to be redeemed, and ourselves saved from the burning. (See 102:2 and 64:5.)

Unless we include section 126 in the list of witnesses not authenticated, we must allow section 106 its place, according to the instruction that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto. Hence, any interpretation which places section 106 and section 42 in conflict must be an erroneous one.

Further than this, the interpretation of the Bishopric at the present time is such as will not permit the discarding of tithing as one tenth, even after Zion is redeemed. Does this interpretation place in jeopardy the liberties of the people of the church? If not, it should be acceded to. If it does jeopardize your liberty and mine, we are neglecting the privilege provided in the same paragraph; that of appeal to the quorums. But it is apparent that these quorums, at least two of them, and the Bishopric, are in harmony, as their joint production, An Address to the Saints, will prove. Therefore the only way in which we can dispose of the law of one tenth is to prove to be unauthentic witnesses at least four revelations incorporated in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, several passages of the Inspired Translation, our President, Quorum of Twelve, Bishopric, and to reject the teaching and practice of the Reorganized Church from the beginning. Are we ready to do this? Is it not better to put an interpretation upon the law of tithing and consecration which will not necessitate the rejection of one or the other, and its supporting scripture, especially when it is so plain?

But as a clincher this argument and challenge is often presented: "The financial law is meant to produce equality; now, how does the law of tithing, as a tenth, comply with this requirement? It will not produce equality, and it can not retain equality."

Let us turn again and read the first paragraph of section 114, and see what the Author of the law says about its purpose:

"In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing."

We see no need of defending the law of tithing against any such challenge when the Author of the law so comprehensively states its object. The same challenge can be made with reference to the law of laying on of hands for the purpose of ordination. To one is given greater responsibility and power than to another. No equality there; hence we reject ordination by the laying on of hands. We can not do this.

I am firmly of the belief that when we reject the law of tithing, as a tenth, and say it has no place in our financial system, it will lead many of us into all such errors as finding revelations to be unauthentic and finding ourselves not under any obligations to support the church in a financial way. May the Author of our salvation (spiritual and temporal, if you please,) preserve us from any such errors and inconsistencies.

A NOVICE.

WHICH ARE YOU?

The following poem, written by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, is meritorious and suggestive to the ministry and membership of the church:

"The two kinds of people on earth I mean
Are the people who lift and the people who lean.
Wherever you go you will find the world's masses
Are always divided in just these two classes.
And oddly enough, you will find, too, I ween,
There is only one lifter to twenty who lean.
In which class are you? Are you easing the load
Of overtaxed lifters who toil down the road?
Or, are you a leaner, who lets others bear
Your portion of labor and worry and care?"

It may not be with the church as with the world, that there are twenty "leaners" to one "lifter"; the parable of the ten virgins estimates five foolish to five wise. But can we truly reckon that one half of our membership entire are doing their part to lift the burdens incident to the carrying on of the church work? In so many branches it is noticeable that a large percentage of the membership are leaning on others rather than standing upon their own individuality. Every disciple of Christ is supposed to be a worker, and to have a part in the building up of the kingdom of God. Are we doing our part of the work, or depending upon others to do it for us? Do you need the exhortation and constant admonition of the church officers in order for them to get you to do some simple act of service? If so, you are a leaner. There is a variety of expenses incurred in carrying on the work in any branch, and if you do not bear your part of the burden to the extent of your ability, you are a leaner. In carrying on the church work you should remember that it is not done without a great outlay of means. Are you waiting and expecting others to pay the bills? If so, you are a leaner.

If you have been a leaner for sometime, quit the old habit and just try for awhile to be a lifter and see which will afford you the greatest satisfaction. We are admonished not to be weary in well doing and to work as we have opportunity; surely no one need lack for something to do in the church of the living God.

PUBLIC CONFESSION OF FAULTS.

It is with a feeling of ever-increasing apprehension for the young, that I note the growing tendency to parade evils of past lives, with the hope of directing the hearers to the better way. Observation proves results seemingly far different from what is intended, and makes the method seem far from safe. One comes in contact at every turn with those who seek to hide behind the record of some, at present, good brother. They tell us "Bro. A has done so and so, and I can do the same and come out all right."

In my past work in the Sunday-school, I was constantly called upon to undo work accomplished by the autobiography of one of our most honored men. To teach a class of thirteen-year-old boys to honor a man and emulate the good he teaches, and not try all his, to them, attractive vices, is a task that taxed my ingenuity then, and does still.

We are told to confess our sins "one to another." This does not seem to mean to put them before the public. When we are baptized we are told that we bury the old man and his deeds, and rise to walk in a newness of life. If we bury the old man and his deeds, why should we ever dig them up again? They can not help but be offensive to sight and nostrils, and do much toward crippling us for that walk in the newness of life. One may say they tell the evil to prove the good more excellent. If that is a necessity for emphasizing the good, Christ would have partaken of evil, also, to make his teaching more effective; for he came as our example in all things. We know of no place where Christ allowed the minds of his followers to be filled with dark and filthy thoughts, but we do know of his whole ministry being directed to the raising of the human mind to higher and more noble ideals.

All who have been young know the curiosity of the developing mind, and when you tell that youth, "It is awful—don't look that way! I'll tell you all about it, but you look the other way," which way do you think he is going to look?

Let us teach the young to abhor sin. Teach him to ignore it. Teach him the excellency of keeping life's stream pure from the source to the end. Teach him to honor the pure and regard with contempt the impure. It has been stated that God looks upon sin with no degree of allowance. Then let us teach the young that the "little spice of evil" is not,—no never,—necessary to relieve the insipidness of virtue. Teach him that he "may draw all the nails from the post; but the holes are still there to deface its surface."

The wages of sin is death, and just so far as we indulge in sin, we sicken our souls to that death, and we bear the burden of that sickness with us, and however much good our lives may accomplish in this crippled state, that good could have been greater had we brought to our task powers unimpaired and untainted by the consequences of that sickness.

It is a matter of history how the Grecians cultivated the love of the ideal by surrounding the incoming lives with objects and sounds of beauty. It takes but a thought to see what the result would be had they followed the opposite course. Is it not well to keep this in mind for our present-day teaching?

There are cases where relation of past sins and forgiveness do great good, but would it not be better to hunt out such cases in private? They are few, compared to the reading public.

When we repent of our sins we "forsake them." This would not be true if God intended them to be transformed into a weapon of warfare in defense of the truth, or perhaps a torch to guide the erring feet. We are told that we "forsake our sins" and that we "bury them." Then why not let them be forgotten, and point the learning mind to higher conceptions of life? Let our whole attention be devoted to climbing. We then raise our eyes to heaven, and the higher we go the farther we are from the echoes of evil. Let us point the human mind up, higher, ever higher, until the goal of all sublime aspirations is completely, gloriously attained.

A NOTABLE REVIVAL OF SPIRITISM.

At one time spiritualism in America claimed to number its adherents by hundreds of thousands, but it is doubtful if, even in its palmiest days, it has riveted the interest of so many serious minds as those at present engaged in its investigation. A few years ago Doctor Isaak K. Funk, the New York publisher, surprised his conservative friends by entering on a prolonged study of spiritualist phenomena, and by writing a book on the subject. Now it is Hamlin Garland, the novelist, who is preoccupied with "the occult." In a series of six vivid articles in Everybody's Magazine, Mr. Garland has lately chronicled the most important results of European research in this field, and of "actual personal experiments" of his own that are as remarkable as anything in the whole history of spiritualism. He claims to have been present not merely at "table rappings" and seances of the commoner sort, but to have seen apparitions. The most sensational part of his narrative describes a long conversation with "Edward Alexander" [Macdowell], the composer, and a musical composition that the latter was apparently endeavoring to communicate. "We seem to be on the eve of discoveries that will revolutionize our whole theory of natural forces," enthusiastically claims the editor of Everybody's. Other magazines are devoting generous space to the subject. Harper's Magazine prints Sir Oliver Lodge's paper on "Psychical research," and Harper's Weekly an article by Charles Johnston entitled "Exploring the spiritual world." The Ladies' Home Journal is publishing a series of articles by John Corbin on telepathy and kindred topics. The New York Herald devotes broadsides to "True ghost stories," of Doctor John D. Quackenbos. The onrush of the new propaganda is regarded in some quarters as so menacing that Rupert Hughes has begun in Pearson's a series of articles bitterly attacking its exponents as "grievously mistaken, pitifully deluded, or sneakingly fraudulent." A similar series, by Will Irwin, was published not long ago in Collier's.—Current Literature (October).

BIBLES IN STRANGE TONGUES.

To-day the Bible exists in five hundred languages, says a writer in the New York Sun (October 11). At the beginning of the last century it existed only in fifty different tongues at the most. "It went into more languages during the nineteenth century than in the eighteen previous centuries." In some cases the Bible is the means of creating the first written form of a language, and in others the only method of preserving them. The following presents some instances:

"A few weeks ago an item appeared in the papers to the effect that the American Bible Society had completed the publication of the Bible in Chamorro, the chief language of the island of Guam. Thus the natives got their first printed book, their first alphabet, a written language, and a literature all in one.

"All over the world men are doing the same things. Scores of the world's languages have been supplied with an alphabet and a written form by the translators of the Bible.

"Last year, for instance, the society printed a Bible for Pleasant Island. Few persons would know where to find Pleasant Island on the map. It is a mere dot in the Pacific, three hundred miles south of the Caroline Islands, with a population of fifteen hundred; the sort of island one reads about in shipwreck stories.

"For ten years one lone missionary and his wife have been living there. He learned the language by ear and then set it on paper phonetically. Then he translated the New Testament into it. Then he begged and entreated the Bible Society to publish his Bible. The society replied: 'We can't afford to publish the Bible in a language spoken by only fifteen hundred people.'

"Then the tribe pledged itself to pay for the work if it could have time. So the society sent the missionary a printing-press, and he and his native helpers set up and printed the work. Then he sent it to San Francisco, the society paid for binding it, and one more little South Sea Island has a written language and literature.

"Philologists of the future will study extinct languages by means of these Bibles. Already it is said that Mme. Matteo de Turner's version of the Gospels in Quichua is the only key to the language of the Incas."

Americans, it is said, have translated the Bible or portions of it into thirty European tongues, forty-three Asiatic, eleven African, nine Oceanic, and twelve American. We read concerning Bibles in the various Indian tongues:

"In many cases the Bible is all that will preserve native American languages from extinction. Only last year the society published the four Gospels in the Winnebago tongue. There are only two thousand Winnebagos left. Their children are all learning to read English. In another generation the tribe will be extinct or assimilated. But some one offered to pay for the work for the sake of a few old Indians who would never learn to read English.

"Two copies of the Gospels in the Seneca language were sold within the past year, one in Arapahoe, four in Dakota, fourteen in Muskogee, twenty-five in Ojibway, one hundred and forty-six in Cherokee, and two hundred and forty-two in Choctaw.

"Down in Oklahoma the rich Indians, the Cherokees and Choctaws, take a racial pride in preserving their language from oblivion through the use of it in their church life. Although most of the adults read English now, they prefer to use the Bibles in their tribal tongues, and only a few weeks ago a letter reached the Bible House asking if a new edition of the Cherokee hymn-book could not be got out uniform with the Bible.

"A notable instance of this tribal pride came within the past year in an order to print the Creek Bible, the expenses to be paid by the Creek Indians of Oklahoma and some of their white neighbors. Mrs. A. E. W. Robertson, a Congregational missionary, made a version of the Scriptures in the Creek or Muskogee language, the labor of many years. The order came to publish it after her death.

"The board wrote, 'Why do you go to such an expense as this when your children all read English? It is foolish.' The reply came back, 'We want it as a monument to Mrs. Robertson and the Creek language.' . . .

"Often the translator has had to create words as well as alphabets. How shall the dweller in some low-lying atoll know the word mountain? How write 'Lamb of God' for Eskimo, who know no lambs? 'Little seal,' the translator had to put it at last.

"'Bad to eat' was as near as the translator into Mosquito could get to sin. 'Nice smell' had to serve as native Australian for frankincense. In Uganda the translator had to wait five years before he could catch a word that meant plague. Then one day he heard a man bewailing the influx of rats, such a 'dibebu' they were. Out came the note-book, down went the long-sought word.

"How translate the gospel into a language that has no words for city, marriage, wheat, barley; in which pig, rat, and dog exhaust the zoölogical terms; in which the word for five is 'my hand,' for six 'my hand and one,' and so on?"—Literary Digest, October 24, 1908.

LLOYD GEORGE STARTLES BRITISH LANDLORDS.

[The following eloquent and vigorous speech (quoted from Toronto World) recently delivered by one of the foremost cabinet ministers of Great Britain, bespeaks the trend of the times, coming as it does from cold, conservative England. May heaven hasten the day when leaden-hearted landlordism will be expunged from the face of civilization, and their legalized steals turned over to the producer. D. MACGREGOR.]

LONDON, October 24.—(New York American Cable.)—Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, startled conservative England by a speech last night, which is the most radical delivered by any cabinet officer for many years. The speech created a political-social sensation.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer boldly tackled the problem of poverty, which is now England's most sinister issue. The chancellor's speech was full of fire and spirit, pity for the poor and compassion for the weak. He assailed boldly the millionaire nobodies in the house of lords, which chamber always attempts to block all social reforms.

There are millions of the unemployed in England nowadays, and the chancellor declared that no country is civilized that allows its workers to starve. He bluntly told the wealthy classes of England that they do not realize the privations of unemployed workmen. The chancellor passionately described the horrors of poverty and unemployment; the starving of mothers to save the lives of their children, the feelings of desperate men walking the streets all day, vainly seeking work, and returning at nightfall, hungry, to their foodless and fireless homes. The chancellor boldly predicted:

"The day will come, and it is not distant, when England will shudder at its toleration of this state of things when it was rolling in wealth. I say again that apart from its humanity and its essential injustice, it is guilty of robbery and confiscation of what is the workman's share of the riches of the land. I have heard some foolish mutterings that much recognition of this fact in legislation may drive capital away. There is nothing capital need fear so much as the despair of the multitude. I should like to know where it will flee, for, judging by the unmistakable symptoms of the times there will soon be no civilized land in the world where proper provision for the aged, the broken, and the unfortunate among those who toil will not be regarded as the first charge upon the wealthy of the land.

"There is a good deal of nonsense talked about capital," he said. "You would imagine that if capital is offended it will immediately shake the dust of this country off its feet and go to other lands where there are no agitators, no radicals, no socialists. The fact of the matter is, the greatest capitalist of this country is Nature. England's natural resources have made England rich.

"You might also imagine that all our natural resources were the result of some capitalist's ingenuity. The workman has, or should have, his share of these investments of Nature. Anyway, it is fair for him to insist that the wealth which is attributable to them shall be utilized to protect him and his children from hunger in the dark days of misfortune.

"Nobody can honestly defend the present system. All classes are not taking their fair share of the burden of industrial depression. I can name twelve men whose gross income during the worst days of depression would suffice to maintain comfortably during one month at least 50,000 workmen and their families, yet you will find these twelve men demanding a protective tariff and proclaiming that the distress incidental to unemployment is entirely attributable to the fact that the workman's bread is still untaxed.

"I assert, without fear of misrepresentation, that the first charge on the great natural resources of England ought to be the maintenance above want of all those who are giving their labor, brain, and muscle to England's cultivation and development."

Silence may be golden, but there are occasions also when silence is cowardice and injustice.

To Mothers.

Oh, mothers, say not that your lives are so narrow,
When they seem circumscribed by the four walls of home;
Their bounds ever widen, in joy or in sorrow,
As each child leaves your arms, o'er the wide world to roam.

Your own life in each of your children is broad'ning,
As each one, his commission fulfills in his life;
Your life ne'er is worthless or aimless or narrow,
While they by your teaching enter bravely the strife.

The days, all too soon, slip away with their childhood,
And none may recall their deep anguish or joy;
Too late you may know, what seems now but a burden
Is pure golden rapture without an alloy.

Then build for each child, both in body and morals,
Foundations of purity, virtue, and truth;
To the Father above daily lead them, nor falter;
They'll not fully forsake the trust learned in their youth.

Enjoy every minute all through their short childhood,
Count as priceless each soul to your love left in trust;
Reward never-ending, your children will praise you,
You will live in their lives though your body is dust.

Dear Sisters of the Church: How is it that we read so many letters from the Hopes which say, "I do not belong to the church, but hope to some time"? Can it be that it is the fault of the children? Or have the parents been remiss to impress upon their young minds? They seem to be very susceptible to good impressions, and I believe this should be a very important thought in the mind of every child or parent. The Lord, in the latter days, has said that children at eight years of age, if properly instructed, were fit subjects for baptism. Why, then, should so many delay this very important matter? You can not say, "I have not the time to instruct my child," for you have all the time that there is in each day the child is spared to you. Do not many of us find time to call upon our neighbors and receive calls from them? Then let us give as much time to our children as we could spare to the neighbors. You can give a thought here, a word there—here a little, there a little. You can not assume to say God did not know whereof he spoke, nor can you say they do not need to be baptized so young, for baptism is for the remission of sins. For if it behooved the Son of the living God, he who was without sin, to be baptized to fulfill all righteousness, how much more the children of sinful man?

We are told in 1 Samuel that to "obey is better than sacrifice." Many children, both small and large, save offerings and give donations to the Sunday-school, are good Sunday-school scholars and members of the Religio, yet they have not the promise of the Holy Spirit to guide them into all truth. Many parents have thought to leave the matter with the children until they became men and women, and when too late have found that while they slumbered and slept, the adversary of souls had been at work; and they had taken evil habits into their lives which had become greater than the desire for good. Thus, when too late, they saw their mistake, and some, although they sought with tears and prayers, never have succeeded in bringing the profligate and drunken ones to a knowledge of the truth. Then where will the blame rest when the day of reckoning comes?

There are young men and women, intelligent, of good understanding, lovely to look upon, and lovable, still they are out of the church. How is this? When Saul was instructed to destroy the Amalekites and leave not one, he came back bringing with him the king of this evil nation whom he had preserved alive; and it seems many who are almost persuaded still cling to the prince of the power of darkness. There are some of the evil habits they cling to with so much tenacity that they can not think of giving them up "just yet," and thus years come and go, and still they suffer themselves to be debarred from the kingdom of the living God. If they do not find something real, something they know to be good and true in their parents' religion, then who is to blame? If they do not hear prayers offered in their homes only at such times as the elders come, or when some good old brother or sister comes to stop awhile with them, then they can bow in family worship, methinks the young are quick to notice the inconsistency of the whole thing, and parents should give this matter more thought.

I heard, not long since, a man say, "I never heard my mother pray in my life, but one day when I was sitting very quietly in a room she came in and not observing me she knelt down and bowed her head in silent prayer." To this day he has never forgotten the impression it made upon him.

Sometimes mothers do not realize the influence they can exert over their children, if they live with them and for them, joining in their pleasures and sharing their hopes. They will very naturally turn to you in times of trouble and disappointments. Then if you are trying to live the life of a saint, how naturally they will turn to their mother's God in times of trouble. There comes into the life of all young persons a time when they are just merging into womanhood and manhood, when they are all indecision,

"Standing with reluctant feet
Where the brook and river meet."

They are ready to take offense at almost anything or nothing; ready to cry at a word or a look. Swayed by the emotions of a child, and yet drawn on by the impulses and inclinations of men and women, and this is the time of all times they need mother's sympathy and advice, a mother's hand at the helm, one prompted by the spirit of love for her child. Mothers who realize the condition of their children at this time should strive prayerfully and earnestly to bring their children to a knowledge of the gospel that it may be a present help in time of need; for "it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," "even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Is he not calling the children of the Saints to-day? Are not our boys and girls as dear to the heart of the Good Shepherd as those of other parents? We bring our tithes and offerings that the gospel may be preached, and go along all unmindful of the fact that there are dear ones in our own homes who have never obeyed the voice of the Spirit. They may be good and useful in the home and community, yet God is no respecter of persons, and he has spoken by the mouth of his holy prophet to the disobedient, and said, "To obey is better than sacrifice."

Request for Prayer.

Bro. James McKiernan writes from Farmington, Iowa: "Will you please publish in HERALD a request for prayer to be made in behalf of my brother, Eber McKiernan, who is suffering from a cancer on his neck just under the right ear, said by the doctors to be past their skill to heal. This is done at his express wish."

Letter Department

LANGWORTHY, Iowa, November 10, 1908.

"Little Herald": It is really entertaining to look over the battle-field where so many valiant sons fall, while some ride gracefully to victory so easily at the polls.

I voted on the 3d instant for the first time, in Iowa, though it is my boyhood home. I came here in 1857, at twelve years of age. I left this place in 1866 for the mountains. Now, father and mother sleep side by side in the Langworthy Cemetery. I came back in September from a visit to Idaho to attend court, in which three grandchildren tried to break father's will. On this business I went to Anamosa one day lately, and, having most of the day to spare, concluded to ramble some. I walked down to the Wapsie River to see the old grist-mill, where I used to go to mill and fish in the mill-race. No noisy, whirring burrs were there. All was silent, except a little noise of the water passing to the city electric light plant close by. The mill looked old, and well advanced in decay. Its time of usefulness had passed away. I could see that my own best days for usefulness were also gone. I think of the old mill many times, but console myself that I am not as dead to usefulness as it is.

I visited the light plant. The attendant, a young man, was sociable, and I told him I had come to that old mill when it was in its prime, working day and night to feed the hungry. He was more obliging then, and gave many hints of his work. There stood a fine new Corliss engine, as ready for duty as its manager. Water and steam furnish the power, steam doing the work when the water is too low.

The city water-works stood near by, so I visited it. Another young man was at its helm. An eighteen-hundred-foot artesian well was yielding water for the thirsty, and for other domestic purposes. This young man, in reply to queries, gave me information I wished, as to conditions about the county-seat, and the state reformatory, and volunteered his opinion that some were not reformed after the allotted time of service; so I concluded to discover, if possible, some of the "hidden causes."

As I left the water plant, I spied a city "set on a hill," of those "asleep in the dust." I was out for a tour of "sight-seeing," but my thoughts were as busy as my eyes, over this hill and inclosure of about twenty acres. What a difference here of marking the last resting-places of those having answered the "roll-call up yonder." I read the verses and inscriptions as I passed along, till I came to an old familiar name, Lawrence Schoonoun, my school-teacher of the late fifties. A family memoir for four, in marble, costing probably one thousand dollars! This man was long connected with the Schoonoun Bank in Anamosa. I remembered him as the teacher whose physical appearance, with kindness and firmness, meant order in the schoolroom.

Soon I appeared at the door of the turnkey of the reformatory. "I will see if some one can show you about," said the man on duty. He phoned for an attendant; and, leaving a quarter as contribution, we started. This man carried a billet, and I thought him a "wise servant." We visited the tub-factory (butter tubs), carpenter-shop, greenhouse, stone-cutters, and other places of interest to me; an attendant said,

"You can not see the women's department without a woman by your side." This, then, was one place where it was not "good for man to be alone." Here, too, I was seeing and thinking. Here was comfort such as millions, even in the United States, do not have. The dining-room was next visited, and I thought a good sense of honor is about all that keeps the attendance here so low, as the man at the water plant said there were only three hundred there now. If the hell our people furnish for the wayward, prepared for "all liars and whosoever loves and makes a lie," whom the "officer" casts "into prison," is as pleasant a place as this "prison house," some might prefer a good place they have, to pardon and freedom outside the walls, and say, We will let "good enough" alone. However, those who do "know the truth," know of something vastly better. These people do "grind in the prison house." I was here to learn—"to get knowledge."

Leaving the reformatory, I soon knocked at the door of the sanitarium, an institution built by the Sisters, a Catholic institution, with room for about twenty patients. Through this a very pleasant woman with a black veil showed me about, and gave me more information than I would think of asking. She said the Sisters owned the place, that it cost thirty-five to forty thousand dollars, and they still owed twenty thousand on it. I contributed a little towards this enterprise, and I felt an easier conscience. This is certainly a fine institution, and on the top of a little hill north of, and overlooking Anamosa.

My conclusions were that very much is being done in our day for the bettering of conditions in life; and I do not wish to see the wheels of progression to stop, much less a return to the "days of our sires." Furthermore, if we Latter Day Saints have eyes to see and ears to hear in these things, we can get wisdom as well as understanding. Not alone in these things for bodily comfort; but in the keeping of our bodies as a "habitation of God" through the eternal Spirit. We can not make as fast growth spiritually, if we do not learn that spiritual growth suggests to our senses proper bodily care, to keep them in sanctification and honor, as the workmanship of the master mind. If this does not incite us to put away the filth of the flesh, filthy habits, then we are not "doers of the word." Are we of the class who "can not cease from sin," "ever learning but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth"? In what are we "the light of the world," or the "salt of the earth"? Can we say to all our associates, Come, follow my example? I mean, is our daily talk and conduct such as becometh Saints, or do we walk (do) and talk as other Gentiles, addicted to foolish slang, as "you bet," "darn it," etc.? Is this the light that leads to Christ? Whatever others may say or do, I am the one to make my "calling and election sure." If the world were as wide-awake to improve themselves in honor to the Lord, as in many other ways, where would we Latter Day Saints be found? above or below? Still, there seems more affinity in many Latter Day Saints than among other people. There does seem room and need to get higher, after an average is found.

My prayers are that Israel may be saved. To watch and pray and work to-day!

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

PARIS, Tennessee, October 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: Thinking perhaps a few notes from this field would be appreciated by some, I assume to write.

The writer being placed in charge of the district tent for the season, we began after the reunion in July, at Paris, Tennessee. I was called to do some baptizing, at Sharon, Tennessee, August 9, after which I came to Paris, to begin the tent-meetings. Found Brn. Stubbart and Tucker holding forth as they had come on with the tent a few days before. So we continued the meetings each evening, with an average attendance of about fifty, who seemed to be quite interested. Friday, the 14th, Bro. Tucker, accompanied by Sr. Tucker, departed for Crockett County, Tennessee, some sixty miles southwest of Paris.

According to previous arrangement, I left Bro. Stubbart to continue the tent-meetings, while I went to Murray, Kentucky, to join C. L. Snow, on a trip to Trigg County, to do some more baptizing. Bro. Snow was just recovering from a severe spell of sickness, and was not able to do the baptizing.

There was about this time quite an excitement in Calloway and Trigg Counties about the "night riders," and the soldiers were stationed at different points and patrolling the streets of Murray, to keep down trouble that was expected might arise, from the fact that quite a number had been arrested, and court was in session. Several were bound over to circuit court; but, so far as we can learn, none have ever been convicted. The situation in the tobacco belt is getting more serious. There was a fine crop of the weed raised this year, and the old crop remained to a large extent unsold. And we are informed that over ninety per cent of the present crop is pledged to the "association." The "night riders" are by no means confined to the tobacco belt, but are at work in many other places, killing, and destroying property. Indeed, we are living in "perilous times."

Bro. Snow and I arrived at our destination after an overland journey of about fifty miles, accompanied by Doctor (Bro.) A. P. Scaggs and wife, who is a brother to the one who was to be baptized, who, by the way, is a doctor also; and a fine family of people we found them to be.

We held three meetings with a large attendance. After the Sunday evening service, we repaired to the creek, where, by the light of lanterns, I baptized the whole family, husband, wife, and daughter "the same hour of the night." We then returned, preaching once on the way, Bro. Snow to Murray, and the writer to Paris, to assist in the tent-meetings there. Met E. A. Erwin at Peryear, who was on his way to Paris. We continued the meeting at Paris over the next Sunday. In connection with the tent-meetings at Paris, Bro. Stubbart preached several times in the court-yard to large crowds. Bro. Scott Shupe and family furnished music for these meetings. They have a "family band" of eight pieces; and they make splendid music.

We had to order a new top for the tent. And while waiting for its arrival, Bro. Erwin and I went to Bethel, the new Saints' church near Elm Tree, twenty miles north of Paris, while Bro. Stubbart held another meeting four miles east of Paris, in the old tent. Bro. Erwin remained with us till Tuesday morning and baptized one; then returned to Paris, where he took the train for middle Tennessee.

I continued the meetings with fine interest throughout the week, about two hundred in attendance. Baptized one at the close, and another since.

From this place I went to Sharon, where we had ordered the tent shipped. Was assisted in this meeting by C. L. Snow, the writer doing the most of the preaching, as Bro. Snow was not very well, but rendered valuable assistance in other ways. One more was baptized at this place, and prospects are that a branch may be built up here in the near future. From here we shipped the tent to Hickman, Kentucky, where I held forth for ten days, with fine interest. Two expressed their desire to be baptized; but I was called home to see our baby, who was very sick. However, Bro. Stubbart arrived the next day, and continued the meetings throughout the week. Prospects are that there will be an ingathering there soon. We closed the tent-work for the season, October 6, after a ten-day effort at Bro. Joseph Williams' place, six miles east of Fulton. Bro. E. A. Erwin returned from Nashville in time to assist us in this effort. Bro. Stubbart called by and preached once on his way to Austin Springs.

This was a new field for our work, and lots of prejudice to contend with. Some, in connection with the Methodist preacher, tried hard to get the people to stay away from the tent; but in this way they failed, for the crowds continued to increase. Much prejudice was broken down, and friends made to the cause. After closing tent-meeting, we visited High Hill and Elm Tree or Bethel, to do some baptizing. There have been quite a number baptized in this district, the writer having baptized eighteen, and all the missionaries have baptized some.

Our district conference convened October 24, at Liberty Hill Branch, seven miles south of Lexington, Tennessee. A spiritual time was had. Every one seemed to enjoy the conference meetings. Two were recommended for ordination to the office of elder. The work seems to be on the advance in this district. We have long felt the need of more local workers to look after the branches. And the Lord is remembering us along this line. Some seven or eight have been called. Four have been ordained already, and others will be soon.

While troublous times are upon us, and the wicked seem bent on destroying one another, and property, I can see a marked advancement among the Saints along spiritual lines, which gives us courage.

May God bless all his covenant people, is the prayer of your humble servant,
J. R. McCLAIN.

WINFIELD, Iowa, November 8, 1908.

Dear Herald: As we have moved to Winfield, Iowa, I thought I would write a few lines to inform those desiring pictures of last General Conference, or Religio buttons. We do not get to hear any preaching by our elders, or see any of the Saints, and it is very lonesome in that respect.

There were four Mormon elders here preaching on the street Saturday and Sunday, a week ago to-day. I had an argument with one of them on Saturday, but had no books or papers to prove my statements, but Sunday I went loaded for them, and got them, too.

I took the Book of Mormon, The Instructor, and some tracts, such as, "The one faith," "Evils of Utah Mormonism," and "Latter-day polygamy—its origin," etc. When they were through and dismissed, I stepped forth and told the people that I thought I would take a hand, as it seemed to be free for all. I showed what Joseph Smith really taught; then I showed what Brigham Young and his followers taught. Before I was through, I had double the crowd they had. Of course they claimed to be the true followers of Joseph Smith the Prophet. That is where I took a hand in the matter. I tell you things were lively for a few minutes; but finally they walked off, one by one, and I had the field to myself.

They denied the extracts being true, and said Bro. F. M. Smith and Bro. R. C. Evans had both been defeated in Utah not long since. They also claimed that the extracts that I had read were not true. But when I read to the crowd Joseph Smith on Marriage, and then quoted Brigham Young, the crowd cheered me. Then one of the elders said, "Christ chose twelve apostles, and one of them was a devil. Why don't you talk about that?" My answer was, "True. So did Joseph Smith choose twelve apostles, and one of them was a devil, and went out to Utah, so that he could practice his devilry." Then a gentleman in the crowd shouted, "That's a good one, Lane."

Then one of the elders said to me that whoever accused Brigham Young of adultery lived as bad or worse. I told them I would be with them the next night, if they stayed, with reinforcements. I went with more evidence, but they did not stay.

I got several comments the next day or two. They challenged me for a debate. I told them I was not a debater; but I would see that they were accommodated if they would stay. They said they challenged one of our elders at Davenport, one that wears a "big mustache." I did not know him by that description, and they had forgotten his name. Some of the HERALD staff may know who is there answering that description.

We are still in the faith, and always ready, and hope to be, to battle for the glorious cause. Pray for us, dear Saints.
Yours in bonds.

I. M. LANE.

P. S.—They read an extract which they claimed was taken from the HERALD, volume 1, page 9, where Joseph repented that he had announced the revelation on polygamy.

SOUTH RAWDON, Nova Scotia, November 1, 1908.

Editors Herald: Our weekly visitor, the HERALD, comes to us more regularly since we have moved here; and as we read the instructions and encouraging letters, we feel to ask ourselves, What are we doing? Are we doing all in our power to let others know of the great and glorious latter-day work brought before the world by so great sacrifice? When I think of how much this work has done for me I am constrained to say, as did the Apostle Paul, I count everything dross for the excellent knowledge I have received since I embraced this work. And now, as I feel that life is declining with me, and there are so few in this thinly settled place that know or care anything about this work, by bearing our testimony through the HERALD we can reach many more, and I feel it is our duty to do all in our power to build up this work that we are engaged in. We know that God calls upon us to let our light shine in this dark age. If Jesus Christ is going to present to himself a church that will not have spot or wrinkle or any such thing (see Ephesians 5:27), how carefully we should examine ourselves to see if we, as individuals, are one of that church. There is everything in this age to draw us aside, so much that has a show of truth, so much that only goes half way, that if possible the very elect would be deceived. How true that it requires a constant labor, all his precepts to obey! Now, I am away on the western side of life; and this may be my last chance of bearing my testimony to this gospel of Jesus Christ, as presented to us in the latter days. As I travel down time's vista, I am more and more convinced and confirmed in the truth of this work, and that we are not wasting our time in trying to build up this work; that we should not be afraid or ashamed to stand for the books that teach and uphold this latter-day work. My desire is to grow in the knowledge of these things, and to increase my faith in Jesus Christ and God the Father. If ye continue in my words, then are ye my disciples, said Christ.
J. W. DIMOCK.

MILNERTON, Alberta, Canada.

Editors Herald: I send in a few of my thoughts. Perhaps it will be surprising to some few Saints, when my name comes before them, if it should. I have been away from home and Saints five years. My heart has longed for a face that I might know. I often think of the good pieces I read in your columns. I wish that I, too, could write something that might be edifying. What a good time Saints may enjoy when they live so they can gather together to worship the Lord in spirit and in truth. What a feast it would be to my hungering soul!

I feel very thankful that I have obeyed the truth and everlasting gospel, and often feel that Spirit which causes me to rejoice. God is merciful unto all who put their trust in him. We do not have any meetings, where we live, and I do not know of any Saints around. I am not ashamed to tell any one what I believe, neither have I made enemies by telling them the gospel of Christ. I give the HERALD to those who will read it.

This is a wild looking country, to any one who has been used to living in a city. After all that is said, a man who is willing to work, (with a few cows to help him, as there is money in milk and butter at all times of the year, even if crops fail) has a living. One is not sure of crops at all. We have frost sometimes late in spring, just when things are coming up; then again early in the fall. Then we have big hail-storms that destroy everything in their path. This is a very good climate for most people, although the air proves too light for some. Quite hard on myself. The country round about this vicinity is very rolling, while there is lots of wild prairie. Still there are plenty of willow brush, pine-trees, poplar, and tamarack. Water is good, soil is black loam. Vegetables are good, also grain (if it gets ripe) and brings good price. Provisions are very high.

My prayer is that God will bless those he has called to do his work, the Presidency in particular. If any of the elders ever come this way, would be pleased to see them. We are twenty-eight miles from the railroad, near Milnerton post-office.

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. G. A. WHITMAN.

AKRON, Ohio, November 2, 1908.

Editors Herald: As I am busily engaged in missionary work, making new openings, I realize that certain tracts are a great help in getting our work before the people.

Began meetings October 19, one and one half miles north of Cuyahoga Falls. Preached with good liberty, and with good attention. This is an opening that I made six years ago. Preached only five nights; but have been requested to return, which we will do in the near future.

From there we moved two miles further north to a place called Steels Corners. Obtained the schoolhouse to preach in. Began Tuesday night, with an audience of about ten. Wednesday it rained hard and made it very muddy, so we had only one man and his daughter out. Talked with him of the prospect of holding other meetings. He did not know what to say, as the people seemed to think we were Mormons. I then asked him if he thought they would allow me to stay in the schoolhouse all night, as it was so very muddy, and I had a mile and a half to walk to the street-car line. He thought a minute, and then invited me to go home with him, which I did, and was glad of the chance. Next morning, we went and saw a Mr. Dickenson, one of the school board, who had given us the privilege of the schoolhouse. And he insisted that I appoint a meeting for Thursday night and Sunday night, Friday night being reserved for a chicken feast for their preacher. But this preacher was not invited.

This is a strong Campbellite hold. So you know what we are up against. This Mr. Dickenson is very much in favor of what he has heard so far, and is proving himself a friend to us by requesting his preacher to announce our meeting for Sunday night, which he did; and we thank him for it.

We left Mr. Dickenson's about nine o'clock, going from house to house, distributing tracts and inviting the people out to the meetings. Met Thursday evening with twelve for an audience. Was blessed with good liberty, and those present gave good attention. And when Sunday evening came, we were permitted to preach to an audience of between thirty and forty, with splendid liberty, and the best attention by all, except a few young folks. Our subject was, The kingdom of God not in the heart. Everything being so much in our favor, we thought to try further, so made an appointment for next Tuesday evening. Have an appointment for to-night at a place called Underhill Schoolhouse. This will be our first there. So we are trying to keep busily engaged in the Master's cause, ever praying for the honest in heart, and the redemption of Zion.

We have also a very intelligent Hungarian and his wife interested in our work here in Akron. They were with us last Sunday in our sacrament and social meeting, and expressed themselves as being very well pleased with what they heard. But the lady was not so well pleased with seeing so many feathers in the sisters' hats. Sisters, take warning. God has also condemned so much outward adorning. Do we not fear that these will rise in judgment and condemn us? Let us put on that adorning that will meet with God's approval: a meek and gentle spirit, with modest apparel. We feel that these people will be with us ere long, if nothing arises among the Saints to hinder. Ever praying for Zion's redemption, we remain,

In the conflict,
J. C. MCCONNAUGHY.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, November 8, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am still firm in the faith of my Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. My patriarchal blessing tells me that I have been sorely tried in life, and that I have sought the Lord, oh, so earnestly, to grant that the dispensations of his providence might be lightened; and that I have need to depend and call upon the name of the Lord, and it goes on to say, "And yet he has been with thee, to fulfill his promises to thee, notwithstanding thy confidence in thy fellow men has been so rudely shaken. The Lord is true, though men may prove untrue and false, false to their obligations and covenants; God is never false, and the Lord is true to the covenant made with his children.

It has been prophesied to me at different times, and by different brothers, that if I live humble and faithful to the Lord, my old days shall be my best days, and that I shall stand with the Lord on Zion's hill.

Your sister,
MARY DOBIE.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, October 30, 1908.

Dear Herald: As I was looking over your pages, and found Bro. John Heide's letter, where he said the diphtheria had broken out, I will tell you what my remedy is, as we had one girl die with it, and I have since learned how to doctor the disease. Our little boy was taken with it, very bad, I am confident, but he is better now. I took peach-tree leaves, and made a poultice and saturated the poultice with olive-oil and turpentine, and kept it on his throat until I could see a change. Also blow dry sulphur in the mouth. Apply the poultice as hot as can be borne. Give some kind of medicine to keep bowels operating. As this disease works fast and hard, we will have to work too. My prayer to God is that it may be conquered before it does great damage.

It is good to be a Saint in latter days. We attended prayer-service Wednesday night. Had a good meeting. I can not express my thanks to God for his goodness to us. I have had my sick healed; and some of my sick have died. But that only increased our faith. The shade of death was removed from our oldest girl who is living now. Bro. M. H. Bond was the mouthpiece. We were at a reunion in Illinois. She was taken very sick. We called for help from God, and Bro. Bond received the evidence that she was dying; he got the promise that she should live, through our faithfulness.

She is still living, and bears her testimony to the truth of this work. I want still to be faithful, so she can be a help to the work.

My prayer is that all the Saints may live worthy of God's watchcare, as we know for ourselves that the most trying time is coming. Let us pray for each other; also let us pray that all the isolated ones may be gathered to Zion, who desire to come. I send my love to all. Would love to meet Bro. Roth again, as he gave us some good talks at Knobnoster.

Your sister in the gospel,
HETTIE E. DAVIS.

News from North Dakota.

The wind begins to feel like winter here, though we have no snow yet. We are trying to push the missionary work as far as we can into new places, before winter really sets in. The Lord often opens up the way by leading us to find kind friends among strangers.

While I was preaching at Drake, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Schnobel kindly entertained me, and attended the services. The Lord will surely reward them for their hospitality. Mr. S. Schnobel very kindly receiving me, too; and his wife, Sr. Julia Schnobel. I hope the time may come when they may be near the Saints.

Don Carlos Musser, who was, until three years ago, a Utah Mormon missionary, lectured in Fargo against the Mormons a short time ago.

Elder Houghton is in the north part of the State, and Bro. William Sparling also. Elder Alonzo Whiting is at home for a visit,

News From Branches

THURMAN, IOWA.

We have a nice Sunday-school session each Sunday at ten o'clock, the enrollment is growing larger from time to time, and now reaches fifty-seven. We have preaching-services at eleven o'clock and again at eight in the evening each Sunday, except the first Sunday of the month when we devote the morning session to sacrament-services.

Last but by no means least, we have a newly organized Zion's Religio-Literary Society, consisting of twenty-three enthusiastic members under the efficient leadership of Sr. Lorena Leeka.

The Religio meets each Sunday evening at seven o'clock, and much interest is taken by both old and young, and endeavor to perform their parts, which they succeed in doing in a very creditable manner. In addition to the regular members, there are a number of visitors present each evening who show considerable interest and will no doubt become members in time.

I must not forget to mention also that we have home class departments of several members, of both Sunday-school and Religio, which are awaking much interest and increasing in numbers.

One month ago to-day, (October 11) was brought to a close one of the best attended (if not the best throughout) conferences that it has ever been my pleasure to attend. Just preceding this session was an unusually good joint session of Sunday-school and Religio conventions.

I therefore feel justified in saying that all is well with us, for I feel that our prospects for the future were never brighter, and that we as a branch feel greatly encouraged, as we have reasons to be.

Our Sunday-school is planning an entertainment for Christmas and we hope to carry it out as successfully as on former occasions.

C. W. FORNEY.

MONTROSE, IOWA.

I am still in the faith of this glorious work. I have been in the church for more than twenty-five years, and it gets more precious to me every day as I approach the end of my earthly journey. I pray for God, who is good and kind to his children, to help me to endure to the end.

For about two years we have been looking for our old veteran, Elder J. S. Roth, to come and hold a series of meetings for us. Everybody in these parts loves to hear him preach; that is, all who have ever heard him. How our hearts were made to rejoice on last Saturday, when our dear old brother landed in Montrose. On Sunday at eleven, he gave us a grand sermon to a fair crowd, for this place, and at night the house was fairly well filled; a number of outsiders were there, and God blessed the speaker. Several were heard to say, "That was a fine sermon."

Last night we had another fine crowd and a splendid sermon. All seemed to enjoy it. Bro. Roth has a faculty of always drawing a good crowd, and he has a way of holding them after he gets them. Notwithstanding that he has passed the sixty-sixth milestone, he has lost none of the energy, zeal, and power he had when I first heard him, twenty-five years ago, when he and Bro. H. Bronson held their first meeting together here. They were well matched for preachers, and did a good work here.

I have lost track of Bro. Bronson, but Bro. Roth, "the plain preacher," as some call him, is still with us, for which we all feel to thank God. A young lady said the other night, "That is the first sermon I ever heard that I understood." If the weather keeps good for a couple of weeks, we expect to see the church crowded before the meetings close.

BRITISH ISLES MISSION CONFERENCE.

[These minutes came to hand written on mission letter heads but not signed. Doubtless they were written up by the secretary, Bro. W. R. Armstrong.—EDITOR.]

Annual conference met in the Severn Road meeting-room, Canton, Cardiff, at 6 p. m., on August 1, 1908. Apostle J. W. Rushton occupied the chair. Bro. Truman, of Brooklyn, and Bro. Daer, who were present, were allowed voice and vote. Bro. Trapp was chosen deacon of the conference, with power to call for helpers, and Bro. James Evans, of Nantyglo, to preside at the organ. The minutes of the 1907 conference were now read and accepted. It was resolved that we consider a request made by Bro. Thomas Taylor, of Leeds, relating to a report appearing in the minutes of the HERALD regarding his not being willing to report to the mission conference of 1907, after which our brother read a copy of his letter sent to the 1907 conference. He stated his reason for writing this letter, when by resolution the incident was considered closed. An application from the Seventh Quorum of Elders asking for time to meet being presented was granted. The mission president's report was now read. He therein feelingly referred to the great loss sustained by the mission in the deaths of Brn. Joseph Dewsnup and C. H. Caton. He said he had nothing sensational to report in the shape of success, yet we were holding our own. He saw around evidence of decay in spiritual things, the perilous times spoken of in the second epistle of Timothy. He noted the prevailing lethargy and spiritual enervation of many in the work, and this he contrasted with the fervid zeal which characterized many of the enthusiastic workers of the past. The first and most urgent need of the church to-day was the cultivation of the passion for God and the necessity to set out with the intention of finding the divine presence. Having found the divine it will change our lives. The second is that our religion is our whole life. That it is not divided into spiritual and secular, but undivided, so that no one can excuse himself from serving. The time to evidence our religion is now, and the place wherever we find ourselves—in the workshop, factory, or home, the outward expression of our lives in character is the birth of the inward impulse and motive; the concrete attempt to realize the ideal of our lives. He noted other organizations, favored with prestige and wealth, which have to deplore the diminution in numbers and influence. He reported the work in the Manchester District as on the whole very good. In the Birmingham District, which was passing through a trying time, there was a hopeful tendency. The condition of the London District was not so good, with the exception of Enfield, which was showing energy. The members are striving to build a chapel of their own and have secured a piece of freehold land for the purpose. London, with six and one half millions of people, and covering an area of thirty square miles, is confronted with a serious problem. It seemed to him that this, the world's metropolis, needed special attention. At least six good missionaries, going two by two, are wanted here, distributing tracts and carrying on open air work. At least two good men ought to have the oversight of the work here. Praise is due to the few faithful ones who have stood by the work in the great city.

The work in Wales has been poor, but with the increased missionary staff signs of improvement are now manifest. The deeds of the Llanely chapel have been secured to the church for £10. The place wants repairing, however. Bro. Rees Jenkins will labor here to build up the work. Bro. William Lewis, who is located in Cardiff, will have the oversight of the Welsh Mission. The Sheffield District shows some little signs of improvement. In Leeds there are some signs of the work recovering. The district organization has been dissolved. In Scotland we hope for a revival under Bro. Baillie. We have small branches with earnest workers in Exeter and Plymouth. There is still a great need for careful and systematic work in the branches, especially the shepherding of the membership. There is a lack of enthusiasm in some places, and a disposition to talk and criticize rather than work. Missionary work during the year has been performed as follows: Elder William Newton in Enfield, London, Exeter, and Plymouth, up to last March, when he returned to America. Brn. W. H. Greenwood and Thomas Taylor labored in Nottingham, Derby, and the Sheffield District until the end of November, when Bro. Greenwood returned to Manchester sick, and Bro. Taylor returned to Leeds where he labored in the vicinity until July, since which time he has been associated with the brethren in Cardiff. Bro. Greenwood is still sick and his labors are thereby hindered, but he has done the best he could, and during my absence in America took charge of affairs and performed what duties were required with ability. Bro. Leggott has spent all his time, with the exception of one month in Scotland, in Manchester, where he has acted as president of the N. E. Branch. Brn. T. Jones and Morris labored in Wales as appointed until August 25, when Bro. Morris asked to be relieved and he went to America, owing to ill health. Bro. Jones continued in the field and retired at the end of September as per appointment. My own work has been scattered throughout the entire field. Have advised, counseled, and preached as occasion and opportunity afforded. At the close of last February I received instruction to go to Independence to attend conference, and including the quorum sessions was engaged in that work for six weeks. I returned to England on July 8, since which time I have been wholly engaged in church work. I take this opportunity of publicly acknowledging my indebtedness to the help and labor of the mission secretary and financial secretary, Elders W. R. Armstrong and Joseph Dewsnup, and think the mission should know of the many hours sacrificed by these brethren out of their scant leisure and without hesitation; believe that we owe largely the success of our conference to the manner in which these duties have been performed. We have interpolated a new order of things this year in arranging a short program of papers touching matters of church work, which we hope to have read and discussed. In conclusion, financial help for an increased missionary staff was appealed for, and other matters affecting the Bishopric of the church were mentioned. Missionary reports: Elder Thomas Jones reported labor in Bargoed, Lydney, Gloucester, Nantyglo, and Cardiff, where he found the Saints willing to cooperate in the good work with the missionaries. We want concentration generally he said, and he was persuaded that the awakening time was now. God was working with us. Elder W. H. Greenwood reported inability to labor for some time owing to illness. He expected to enter the hospital to undergo an operation shortly and asked for an interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints. He had labored prior to being ill in company with Elder Thomas Taylor, from August to November 22, 1907. He had also labored in the Sheffield District, Nottingham, and Derby, preaching on the Market Places and streets. Since November 22, 1907, he had labored in the Manchester District and visited Sheffield, Nottingham, Sutton-in-Ashfield, as his health would allow. Elder William Lewis reported arriving in Wales June 9, 1908. He was encouraged with the prospect of the work, for he found several young men had taken up the work in a commendable way, and if they continue the work will make progress. He had visited Aberaman, Llanely, Nantyglo, and Penygraig, where he was pleased to find peace and unity. In Cardiff he found Bro. Gould laboring under a disadvantage, only being assisted by Bro. Ben Green. There is a large field for work here. Brn. Thomas Taylor and Jones have labored to bring our work before the people and have helped to distribute ten thousand handbills. Bro. Rushton has assisted with a commendable article in the South Wales Daily News, and we have your presence here in the conference as it has never been before. We shall wait with patience and do what we can ourselves with the help of God and the Master to keep up the interest. Elder Rees Jenkins reports arriving in Wales on June 8, 1908. He has preached in the open air at Llansamlet and Skewen. The work in Aberaman, Penygraig, and Llansamlet is alive, but generally at a low ebb. An upward tendency is shown by a few. Outside there were signs of a spirit of investigation. Change was manifest in the theological world which perplexed some. The time for us was now favorable to the advancement of the work. He hoped the ministry would magnify their calling and go forward energetically and systematically. Elder Thomas Jones reports labor in Bargoed, Lydney, Gloucester, Nantyglo, and Cardiff. He reports finding the Saints ready and willing in almost every place to cooperate with him. He saw the necessity for concentration. He also saw signs of an awakening among the people, and God was with us. Elder J. T. Norton reported labor at Trevon. He had preached several times in the English place of worship here. He had held meetings in his house and had had several English persons in to hear. He had delivered tracts which had stirred the people. The only family of Saints in this part is Bro. Robert Lloyd's, of Carnarvon, a place about fourteen miles distant. (This brother's family is one of the staunchest supporters of the Lord's work in Wales. May they be long spared to us.) If supplied with tracts he would deliver them and preach in the open air when the weather is favorable. District reports: Bro. J. W. Worth reported London in a fair condition. Enfield is doing well under the presidency of Elder J. A. Judd, a very energetic worker. The London Branch has a few faithful workers left, and of these some are nearing the end of life's journey. The few keep things moving. We hope for better times and pray that God may still remember his work here.

Manchester was reported by Elder H. Greenwood, who said some progress was being made within and without the church, but not so much as we could wish. There were flourishing branches and languishing ones. The latter were caused through lack of proper shepherding. We want men who are possessed of the spirit of presidency—spiritually—mindful men who will care for the flock under their charge. He held that the internal working of the branch was of first importance. Good, lively branches will influence the world around them. He next reported outdoor work, or street-preaching. Much of this was being done but we lack men and a proper method of working. We want men who can properly represent our work to the people. He did not say this in the spirit of fault-finding, but so that we may know where we are weak. Elders are doing their utmost to fill their office and calling. Western Wales was reported by Bro. J. G. Jenkins, who said that the Llanelly Branch lacked laborers. There were good sisters there. He knew it would be hard work for the missionary there, to whom he wished success. Llansamlet and Skewen Branch was in a good spiritual condition and special efforts were being made there to spread the work. The branch was well blessed with laborers. Aberaman Branch is in a very good condition and they have been spiritually blessed. Much work is being done and unity prevails. Outdoor labor has been prosecuted and some are about to enter the fold. Penygraig Branch is in a very good spiritual condition and unity exists. Members have recently been added. Eastern Wales was reported by Elder Thomas Gould as in fairly good condition spiritually, and the majority of the members are feeling well in the work. They desire to see it prosper. Some have become indifferent and are losing their hold on the work. Lydney is in poor condition at present. We hope with the help of Elder Thomas Jones to revive the work here. Bro. Rushton here stated that Bro. Henry Wilson, of Heavitree Exeter, reports the work in his city as in good condition. Elder G. W. Leggott reported his labors in N. E. Manchester, Denton, and other places. The report was a most encouraging one, especially the part referring to N. E. Manchester. The Bishop's agent's report was now presented by Bro. J. W. Rushton, vice Elder C. H. Caton deceased. Elder Rushton acting agent for the bishop, reported. An auditing committee was appointed by the chair, viz, Brn. Trap, J. Jenkins, and J. D. Judd. They were a committee to audit the financial secretary's and Bishop's agent's accounts. By resolution the chairman's appointment of the above committee was indorsed, after which the first session of conference closed with prayer by Elder W. R. Armstrong. On Sunday, August 2, the Saints met in the Canton Public Hall, Severn Road, at 10.30 a. m. The meeting was in charge of Brn. Thomas Gould and J. E. Meredith. The meeting was opened by singing, prayer by Elder Meredith, after which the poem: "Let us shake off the coals from our garments" was recited by the son of Elder Thomas Jones. Bro. Thomas Gould, in opening the meeting welcomed the Saints and friends present. Bro. Rees Jenkins was the morning speaker. He preached an interesting sermon dealing with revelation received from heaven at various times during the history of man. He showed how men dwindled in unbelief yet still held to a form of religion. The meeting closed with singing and prayer. At 2.30 p. m. the Saints met in a fellowship meeting, which was in charge of Elder J. Jenkins, who was assisted by Elders T. Taylor and G. W. Leggott. During the service four persons, viz, Eliz. A. Picton, Edwin R. Brook, Mary A. E. Mann, and Lizzie R. Evans, who had been baptized during the morning, were confirmed. The proceedings were in both Welsh and English. At 6.30 p. m. the Saints again met for preaching. Elder William Lewis conducted the service. He was assisted by Bro. James Baillie, of Hamilton. Sr. E. Edwards, of Birmingham, sweetly and feelingly sang a solo. Bro. Rushton was the speaker, and he ably discoursed on the way to discover God in man, the life-work of the Savior. After the close of the evening service the Saints adjourned to the Llandoff fields for an outdoor service, which was well attended by members and non-members, and a good hearing obtained. Monday, August 3, the conference resumed business at 137 Severn Road. The meeting was in charge of Elder Rushton who was assisted by Bro. William Lewis. Reference was made to a letter received from the Sixth Quorum of Priests and read on Saturday evening, but not reported in the minutes. Our representative to the General Conference of 1908, Apostle J. W. Rushton, next reported. It was then resolved that the following suggestion by the president be carried into effect: "That the accounts of the acting Bishop's agent be referred to the standing auditing committee, appointed on Saturday to audit the financial secretary's accounts. The report of the auditors on Bishop's agent's account being read it was referred back, upon the request of the auditing committee. A letter from F. B. Blair, of the Herald Publishing House, was read and it was then resolved that: "Inasmuch as the book agency of the mission is not working very satisfactorily, we request Bro. Blair to ask for the book agent's resignation, and we respectfully suggest the name of Bro. J. W. Rushton as nominee for the position. The committee on revision of conference rules now reported progress and asked for further time. It was resolved that the report of the committee on conference rules be accepted and further time be granted, and the committee be instructed to restrain any action until the General Conference of 1909 has decided the position of mission conferences. The report which was presented at the 1906 conference, of the committee on district boundaries, was read for the benefit of the conference. Two notices of motion handed in by Bro. Joseph Dewsnup were next read. First: "That a committee be appointed for the purpose of publishing a paper in the interests of the mission." Second: "That a committee be appointed for the purpose of revising tracts." The meeting now adjourned, prayer being offered by Bro. Picton. At 2 p. m. the conference again sat. Bro. Rushton occupied the chair, assisted by Bro. William Lewis. Business resumed, the auditor's report on the financial secretary's accounts was read, after which the financial secretary's report was read. It was then resolved that the reports of the financial secretary and auditing committee be accepted and our thanks be awarded the brethren for labor performed. A letter addressed to the mission secretary, Bro. W. R. Armstrong, by President Joseph Smith, was read to the conference. It had been forwarded from Toronto whilst our esteemed brother was visiting friends. The following motion was then presented: "Resolved, That we appreciate the kind words of sympathy received from our president, Joseph Smith, through Bro. W. R. Armstrong, to whom we submit our kind regards, wishing him health and God-speed in the responsible position he holds, during the remainder of his days." Matters arising out of the mission president's report were now taken up. Resolved, That we are of the opinion that a supervising Bishop's agent is the next best thing to a Bishopric, and suggest to Bishop E. L. Kelley to appoint for this mission a supervising agent for the concentration of funds and general disbursement as hitherto, until the Lord directs. The meeting now adjourned. At 7.20 p. m. the conference again sat, Bro. Rushton occupying the chair, assisted by Bro. William Lewis. By vote No. 381 of General Conference Resolutions was reaffirmed. The notice of motion handed in by Bro. Joseph Dewsnup with respect to the publication of a monthly periodical in the interests of the mission was considered and finally ordered to lie on the table. The following officers were now sustained by resolution: J. W. Rushton as president of the mission; W. R. Armstrong, secretary of the mission; J. W. Taylor, assistant secretary of the mission; Joseph Dewsnup, financial secretary of the mission; W. R. Armstrong, local historian of the mission. Resolved, That the chair appoint a committee to draw up and forward letters of condolence to Sr. Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., and Sr. C. H. Caton. The chair appointed Elders H. Greenwood, J. W. Rushton, and W. R. Armstrong. The report of the Seventh Quorum of Elders was presented. It showed a membership of 54, with hopeful prospects for work. Brn. J. E. Meredith, F. Swan, and Charles Walton were sustained as an auditing committee. Patriarchs Joseph R. Greenwood and James Baty, Sr., were sustained by vote. The secretary was instructed to write the patriarchs with respect to their failure to report to conference. The general authorities of the church were sustained by vote. A hearty vote of thanks was awarded the conference workers for the way in which they had attended to the wants of the visiting brethren and sisters. Bro. Gould replied in suitable terms on behalf of the caterers. An invitation from East Manchester Branch, per Elder W. R. Armstrong, to hold the next annual conference in their district, was presented. It was resolved that we accept the invitation with thanks. Votes of thanks were awarded the organist, choristers, and soloist. The meeting adjourned at 9 p. m. August 4. The Saints met in the meeting-room about 10.30 a. m. Elder Rushton occupied the chair. There was a good attendance of the ministry and a number of sisters; viz, Sr. William Lewis, Sr. Riddolls, of Plymouth, and Srs. Edwards and Fallows (died since conference) of Birmingham. The following papers were presented. 1. Sunday-school work, Elder S. F. Mather; 2. Co-operation, Elder Thomas Taylor; 3. Branch work, Elder William Lewis. This meeting, which was a most interesting and profitable one, closed by prayer at 1 p. m.

A number of friends were present to witness the ceremony, which was performed by Elder T. L. McGeorge. After congratulations the company partook of a sumptuous wedding supper. The bride has attended Graceland College for some time in the past. Their home will be in Arkansas City, Kansas. Good wishes of many friends go with them.

Resolution of Condolence.

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has seen fit, in his infinite wisdom, to remove by death from our midst our beloved brother, G. H. Godby, one who has spent a lifetime in the cause so dear to us all and to him;

We therefore deplore his departure, as he had served eight years as our district president, and was a high priest in the church.

Insomuch as the heavenly Father hath called him from his labors here to rest in the paradise of God until the resurrection morn, may we so live and conduct our lives that we may meet in the grand assembly of the First-born. We do now extend our heartfelt sympathy to his loving wife and family, and we pray our heavenly Father's blessing upon them, as he has promised to be a husband to the widow and a father to the fatherless.

May every poultry-keeper have the booklet, "Don't Kill the Laying Hen." Yours truly, Patrick Manley, Lexington, Ill.

Through oversight no mention was made of the death of Bro. J. C. Gardner at St. Joseph, Missouri, on November 4. Bro. Gardner had been with the HERALD in capacity of engineer, until a short time before his death. Resolutions of respect and condolence from the St. Joseph Sunday-schools have been received and will appear later.

TWO PHASES OF OUR HIGH CALLING.

THE GOSPEL AS THE POWER OF GOD UNTO SALVATION BOTH SPIRITUAL AND TEMPORAL.

Christ commissioned his followers to preach the gospel in all the world and to every creature. We usually think of this commission as applying to the ministry exclusively, and as regards the official preaching of the word and the administration of gospel ordinances it is so limited. Yet we have learned that all the members of the church are included in the work of spreading the gospel,—each in his own place and according to his gifts and calling.

We can not conceive of a higher calling,—to be a part of the church, to represent God. The work is as wide as the world and power is given to bind or loose on earth that which is to be bound or loosed in heaven. We can hardly comprehend the authority, dignity, and responsibility resting upon the church collectively and individually as representing God upon the earth.

As God sent Christ so Christ sends us. It is ours to declare the way of salvation. It is ours to lead men in a course of life that will insure eternal spiritual salvation and life. We fight the legions of sin and wrestle with the powers of wickedness.

But perhaps we have failed to fully bear in mind the fact that our work is of a dual nature. In contemplating the wonders of eternity we have forgotten some of the possibilities, some of the apparently sordid needs of time.

Inasmuch as a department has been set apart for the discussion of controverted subjects connected with the work of redeeming Zion, it is not our purpose to discuss any of those disputed points in the editorial columns, as that might seem to give us undue advantage, besides putting us in the position (in a sense at least) of presiding at a discussion in which we were partisan. But we may safely venture some statements that are clearly supported by revelation and in which all may concur after careful thought.

While at first glance time seems short and inconsiderable when compared with eternity, yet our condition and deeds in time affect our welfare in eternity. If the gospel is the power of God unto salvation it must apply to every condition of man, here or hereafter, and save him from forces in either state that may seek his destruction. Religious people have made the mistake of supposing that religion has to do almost solely with man's spiritual salvation in the great beyond. One Theodore Schroeder has said that "religion implies sacrifice of earthly for post-earthly joys." This is only partially true, at best; and at its worst, it is not true at all.

It is just as surely the work of the church to save men from poverty and suffering as it is to save them from other results of sin. In fact the two are so intimately associated that we can not dissociate them.

One writer has said, "Misery is like opulence in that it has no patriotism." That means simply that the very rich man is as a rule disposed to think of his estate first and his country afterward; while the miserably poor have had the spirit of patriotism starved out of them. This will apply as well to citizens of the Kingdom of God. The securing of temporal equality in the true scriptural sense is good policy in Zion; because only thus can her structural strength be maintained. If the miserable and the opulent endeavor to live side by side in Zion they will involve themselves in common ruin. But there is a question deeper than policy, that of love and justice. Love will not permit certain conditions to exist in Zion that exist in the world. And love is one of the perpetual characteristics of Zion, "Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

Justice is another characteristic of Zion:

Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne: mercy and truth shall go before thy face. Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound: they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance.—Psalm 89: 14, 15.

God has expressed his idea of justice touching the distribution of temporal things among his children as follows:

Let every man esteem his brother as himself: for what man among you having twelve sons, and is no respecter of them, and they serve him obediently, and he saith unto one, Be thou clothed in robes and sit thou here; and to the other, Be thou clothed in rags and sit thou there, and looketh upon his sons and saith, I am just. Behold, this I have given unto you a parable, and it is even as I am: I say unto you, Be one, and if ye are not one, ye are not mine.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 5, 6.

Inequality is abhorrent to justice. Where we see a family of sons, some in rags and others in robes, we feel that the father is unjust. It follows that men who profess to be children of God and permit like conditions to continue among them are not true to one phase of their high calling in that they are not properly representing God as a father.

The foregoing arguments can be reduced to a syl-logism: Love and justice are eternally resident in Zion; inequality is abhorrent to love and justice; therefore inequality can not continue in Zion.

But let us not be misunderstood; when we speak of inequality we mean unscriptural, unjust inequality. Love itself can not place indolence on the same plane with industry. The two are primarily different. They observe different laws and must dwell in different domains, each receiving according to the law it has elected to obey. The parable of the sons quoted above is based on the supposition that all the sons are obedient. It does not always follow when poverty is observed within the geographical boundaries of Zion that it is not Zion. The parties observed may be in Zion but not of Zion. Numerically, Zion includes only those who are worthy of Zion.

Poverty is no part of the divine plan:

God has said, The earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

Here we have the proposition that the conditions of great wealth and extreme poverty that have always existed in the world side by side are not conditions of necessity. There is enough and to spare for the support of all. Existing conditions are the result of sin. For this, as for all the results of sin, the gospel has its cure. And it is distinctly stated in the passage quoted above that it is a part of the gospel law that those who have substance to spare shall consecrate it for the benefit of those who are in need. Our position that one phase of our high calling is to preach temporal salvation under the gospel law is thus established. The severe yet necessary conclusion in the divine mind is that the man who refuses to comply with that part of the gospel law will forfeit the benefits of the other part and shall lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

It follows from the foregoing considerations that a class of men who are banded together in any age of the world to drive sin from their midst under gospel law are justified in attempting to drive privation and suffering from their midst under the same law, that the worthy poor may be elevated to the common level of living. This must not be attempted by trying to put in practice Utopian dreams originating in the minds of philosophers (and others), but must be worked out under the law as given in the standard books of the church in which the gospel is contained, for God has said, "It must needs be done in mine own way."—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

It is true that Christ told his disciples to consider the lilies that toil not, and warned them to take no thought regarding raiment or food or the affairs of to-morrow. Some have entertained a false idea regarding his meaning. They have thought that he put a ban on business and a premium on improvidence. The skeptic charges that a literal observance of those teachings would stop all industry. But Christ knew what he meant, and meant what he said. It must be remembered that he was speaking directly to his disciples of the ministry, who were to forsake all temporal enterprises and go out in all the world preaching the gospel, without thought for food and raiment, trusting God to send them in the hour of need.

Lest we fall into error and apply his instruction indiscriminately to all people his position on temporalities is fully explained elsewhere in teachings brought to light in these last days. In the Book of Mormon we read:

Think of your brethren, like unto yourselves, and be familiar with all, and free with your substance, that they may be rich like unto you. But before ye seek for riches, seek ye for the kingdom of God. And after ye have obtained a hope in Christ, ye shall obtain riches, if ye seek them; and ye will seek them, for the intent to do good; to clothe the naked, and to feed the hungry, and to liberate the captive, and administer relief to the sick, and the afflicted.—Jacob 2: 5.

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we read:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men or business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8.

From these two quotations we learn, first, that men may seek riches if they do so for the purpose of doing good; second, that while the ministers go out care-free to preach a complete gospel of spiritual and temporal salvation, all the members shall unitedly labor that the means may be at hand to carry into effect the gospel that is preached as well as to support the ministers while so preaching. Such a work has been attempted in every gospel dispensation,—under Enoch (Genesis 7: 23 I. T.), among the disciples at Jerusalem (Acts 2: 44, 45), in the church on this continent in the days of the Nephites (Fourth Nephi), and again in these last days. All these instances show that the deliverance of the poor and oppressed of earth is a part of the gospel plan, in full accord with the statement of Christ, who early in his ministry stood up in the synagogue at Nazareth to outline his mission and declared, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."—Luke 4: 18, 19.

Surely no work could come to men and women with a greater and sweeter appeal than is found in that work contemplated in our high calling: First, to preach the gospel of regeneration, snatching souls from the jaws of hell to make them pure and upright citizens of the eternal kingdom of God; second, to help the poor, the widows, orphans, and victims of misfortune and injustice, that they may become happy, self-supporting, prosperous inhabitants of Zion. If we do this we can safely stand up in our holy places when the judgments of God loom imminent over the world and ask him to spare Zion, that the desolating scourges may pass her by.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

ANOTHER CHURCH DEDICATED IN FAR WEST DISTRICT.

Any of the happenings in which the Saints are directly concerned in "the regions round about" are more or less interesting to the Saints, the interest varying as to the importance of the occurrence. Seventy years ago the Saints left the Far West region to seek for an asylum outside of the commonwealth of Missouri, and the readers of the HERALD will be pleased to know that some of the waste places of Zion are being rebuilt.

In what is known as the Far West District, some two years or more ago, two churches were dedicated and a third opened. The following account of a dedication, written for the HERALD by Bro. G. H. Hilliard, will be very interesting reading-matter. We commend it to the consideration of the Saints.

It may be needless to remind the Saints that after the expulsion from Missouri an effort was made to secure recognition for the wrongs which had been inflicted on the people, by the legislature of Missouri, and that an appeal was made to the general Government for redress; this appeal failed and the matter was relegated to the arbitrament of the great court on high; there it should have rested. And so far as the Reorganization is concerned, it has so rested. We have declined steadily to rehash the tribulations through which the Saints passed, or to hold them against the State or the Nation, trusting to the appeal, believing as we do, that the Lord of all the earth will do right: but that this right will be done within the circle of his own knowledge and wisdom. The Saints are proving the divinity and applicability of the revelation and commandment which authorized them to gather into "the regions round about" and pursuing a policy that was to give them favor in the eyes of the people; witness the building up, put in evidence by this recurring dedication.

The Saints of the Oak Grove Branch, four miles south of Hamilton, Missouri, in Caldwell County, having been denied the use of the schoolhouse in which they had been holding meetings, and being desirous to have a place in which to worship, and also a place to invite their neighbors to come and hear the words of life, thereby "warning their neighbor," that they might fulfill the command of the Master, whom they love, decided to erect a church-building, where they could have a place of their own in which to meet. Accordingly Bro. Coleman Snider gave them the land on which to build the house, they went to work unitedly, some of their neighbors helped them, and in about ninety days, as we understand it, they had a very neat house twenty-four by thirty-six feet in size, with alcove in back end for speaker's stand, with lovely seats, and chairs for speaker's stand.

Being desirous that the Lord should meet with them, and his care be over the house as well as themselves, they wrote to Bishop Kelley to come and dedicate the new church on Sunday, November 8, and if he could not come, to send some one. As he could not go, on account of business demands upon his time, he sent me as an apology. We had preaching at eleven o'clock, then dedication service at two o'clock in the afternoon, and preaching again at half past seven in the evening, the writer being the speaker at all the services; Bro. W. P. Bootman offering the dedicatory prayer. In a very fervent, earnest manner, he asked the Lord to accept the offering of the Saints and all who helped in its erection, and to meet with and bless his people in that house.

The cost of the house was about one thousand dollars, and the burden of the work was cheerfully borne by a few. The missionaries, Brn. Henson and Bootman, assisted materially in the work, I am told.

We had a good attendance at all the services, especially at the dedication service. The house was full. Dinner was provided on the grounds for all, and spread on a long table erected for the occasion; all seemed to enjoy themselves and be satisfied. The missionaries were present, Brn. Pickering, Henson, and Bootman, and in charge at all the services. Bro. Coleman Snider had charge of the singing. He is also president of the branch. We stayed and spoke again Monday night; also preached in Kingston three nights before the dedication, and in Cameron two nights after leaving Oak Grove.

Our prayer was and is that God may bless and prosper this new branch, as well as the older ones, until this chosen land may be filled with faithful Saints, who will merit the blessing of the Master by keeping the whole law perfectly.

G. H. HILLIARD.

FROM A FAITHFUL FRIEND.

With mingled feelings of pleasure and sorrow we give place in the editorial columns to the following communication from a staunch and faithful follower of the Master, one whose work seems nearly ended here below, yet one who faces a bright future:

DOW CITY, Iowa, November 14, 1908.

Dear Herald: This letter may be my last communication to you, for in all probability my earthly career will soon be at a close; but I do want to say to you that you have been a great comfort and blessing to me and my family for over thirty years, bringing glad tidings of the onward march of the restored gospel. In times of deepest sorrow I have found in you words of cheer, in times of prosperity you have admonished and directed me that I might share blessings with those less fortunate.

My father, Lyman Wight, was one of the active ministers of the church in the lifetime of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, and I have inherited some of my father's missionary zeal, spending over six years in active ministerial work. Four years ago I became afflicted with shaking palsy, and have gradually grown worse until now I am not able to read or write, but am dictating this letter to you, and to my brothers, sisters, and friends.

During these years of affliction I have not lost confidence in God, Christ, or the great latter-day work, and now give my testimony to one and all that the gospel I have obeyed and preached is truly the power of God unto salvation.

From a human standpoint it looks like I can not last very much longer, so I will bid one and all a final adieu. With love to all and malice towards none, I am,

Your afflicted brother,

ROMANAN WIGHT.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate brings a message of the sudden death of Doctor David D. Thompson, the editor of that paper, at Saint Louis, Missouri, on Tuesday, November 10. Doctor Thompson was in attendance upon the sessions of a committee on missionary work. On his way to the meeting Monday evening, he was just about to cross Lindell Boulevard to enter the church when he was struck by an automobile and thrown some distance along the ground.—Deseret Evening News.

Doctor John D. Quackenbos, former professor of psychology at Columbia University, strongly endorses the Emmanuel movement which was formally promulgated in this city [New York] Sunday by Reverend Doctor Elwood Worcester, of Boston.

Interest in the movement here is further augmented by attacks on the new cult by men prominent in other creeds. Among these is Mr. J. V. Dittmore, one of the leaders of the Christian Science church, who says that the new faith is not broad enough.

Doctor Quackenbos, who is a warm friend of Doctor Worcester, says:

"Doctor Worcester, some two years ago, conceived the idea that the most philosophical manner of crushing Christian Science was to do scientifically within the church what this tawdry theosophy is doing unscientifically and with measurable success on the outside—a conception worthy of his pure heart and intense devotion to the cause of truth.

"The Emmanuel movement exploits the best elements of the confessional. The patient unburdens his conscience to a man of God, than whom none is better qualified to deal with the moral element in nervous breakdown, to wit, disappointment, sorrow, worry, apprehension, shame.

"Give a Christian patient a sympathetic, forceful, earnest priest, blessed with common sense, and a Christian physician to take charge of the physical side of the disturbed metabolism and you have a combination impossible to surpass in the treatment of neurasthenic conditions."—New York Evening Journal.

THE FINANCIAL LAW OF THE CHURCH. IS IT CONSISTENT?

I have a few thoughts that I would like to present on the above subject, the more especially as in my travels I have heard the statement made that there are inconsistencies in it. About a year ago my attention was called to a purported revelation in the Utah Edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, and at the time I did not give it the thought it deserved. It was claimed that Brigham Young had fixed up the document to suit his own ends. Section 106 in our edition has also come in for its share of criticism as not being in harmony with the rest of the financial law to govern the church. Having pondered over these things I have decided that I would like to express myself in the HERALD on the above subject.

As I see the matter, the trouble is not with the law, but with certain forced interpretations that are placed upon it. I believe a forced interpretation is placed upon paragraph 10 of section 42. The qualifying clause, "which is a residue," is almost always overlooked, and I would suggest to the brethren that when reading this section a little more attention to this clause would save a lot of misunderstanding. However, I am not at this time going very much into the question of equality, but it is my purpose to remove some of the objections that are urged from time to time.

I believe in equality, but I believe in it in such a way that will make people equal. To-day many are teaching an equality that is so in appearance only, but it is not equality in fact. Several factors must be borne in mind, and the Lord has told us that each revelation should have "its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto," (Doctrine and Covenants 126:10,) and yet section 42 is taken as though it should be absolute instead of relative. I now direct your attention to the purported revelation referred to above. It may be wondered why I do this, seeing it is not in our book of Doctrine and Covenants. Well, for some reason the Reorganized Church did not insert it in the book of Doctrine and Covenants and for some reason the Lord has reiterated its teaching elsewhere in the book of Doctrine and Covenants through our own President.

It is as follows:

Revelation given July 18, 1838, making known the disposition of the properties tithed as named in the preceding revelation.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time has now come that it shall be disposed of by a council composed of the first presidency of my church, and of the bishop and his council; and by the high council; and by mine own voice unto thee, saith the Lord. Even so. Amen.

Now whether we approve the peculiar phraseology or not we can not afford to reject the doctrine taught in it unless we also reject several other revelations that the Lord has seen fit to give to the church. The revelation teaches that the properties tithed should be disposed of by

1st. First Presidency; 2d. The Bishop and his council; 3d. The High Council; 4th. The voice of the Lord.

Now it does not say just what each one of these officers have to do with it, but it does say that they are all concerned in its disposition.

Now let us see what we have in the revelations that bear upon this matter.

1. The First Presidency.

"Then ye shall begin to be gathered with your families, every man according to his family, according to his circumstances, and as is appointed to him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, etc."—Doctrine and Covenants 48:2.

Section 122:6 provides for all these other offices, "the Bishop and his council," "the High Council in an advisory manner," "the voice of the Lord by revelation," as well as "the Presidency of the church," shall all have voice in the disposition of the properties that come into the hands of the church, "for the purchasing of lands, building houses of worship, building up the New Jerusalem, and the gathering of the people," and section 42 teaches that the "High Council" shall have a hand in the temporal affairs of the church. "Therefore the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.

It is not surprising what influence Brigham Young had when he could dictate section 42:10 and then some years later he could dictate again through our own President, section 122:6.(?) Really we can not accept the idea that Brigham Young originated that revelation. How can a false revelation be in harmony with the law? And if it is in harmony with the law, why should we want to reject it? For some reason the Reorganized Church did not put it into the Doctrine and Covenants in the early editions, then the Lord through our own President gave the same thing in a little different language, but, the thought is the same in both instances. Then why urge that this is Brigham Young's revelation when our own books teach the same thing?

I will now examine section 106. The Lord said concerning the revelations that Joseph received that "There was no unrighteousness in them and that which is righteous cometh down from above, from the Father of lights."—Doctrine and Covenants 67:2. Now where is the unrighteousness in section 106?

Will some one please point it out. Was the law of tithing as taught to Israel unrighteous? It came from God. The tenth is certainly taught there. See the Inspired Translation, Leviticus 27: 30-32:

All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's, it is holy unto the Lord. And if a man will at all redeem aught of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.

And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance.—Numbers 18: 21.

Now was this a righteous or was it not a righteous law? Oh, it is admitted that it was a righteous law, but it was not the gospel law. Well, then, section 106 is not an unrighteous law. And if it is a righteous law it must have come down from the Father of lights. But is it not also a gospel law? We think we will be able to show that it is.

It is admitted that God gave this law to Israel; that this law requires the tenth. It is also admitted that section 106 requires the tenth. In this the two are identical. Now does God teach tithing one way to the Jews and teach it a different way to Israel in the latter days? It is admitted that tithing is demanded as a gospel requirement.

Behold now . . . it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

Oh, then, if a man is tithed he is not to be burned at the coming of the Lord. But right here comes the trouble. The way the Lord commanded Moses to teach tithing is not right and I am to comply with tithing some other way. Surely there is something wrong with the theory that represents God as teaching tithing one way to Moses and then teaching it some other way to the church in the latter days. The Lord says that the Book of Mormon was to cause those that "err in spirit to come to understanding, and they that murmur shall learn doctrine." Now hear what the Book of Mormon says:

Know ye not that the testimony of two nations is a witness unto you that I am God, that I remember one nation like unto another? Wherefore I speak the same words unto one nation like unto another.—2 Nephi 12: 7; see also Doctrine and Covenants 2: 1.

Now what did he say unto the Jewish nation when he taught tithing? He told them to pay "the tenth." Now if he speaks to our nation on tithing, what will he say? He will say, "the tenth." Now if section 106 is not a revelation from God, he has not commanded us to pay the tenth. And if he has not commanded us to pay the tenth, he has not said the same to our nation on tithing that he did to them. Do you not see that to reject section 106 is to say that God has not done what he said he would do.

Further, in section 42: 5 we have the following:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel.

Now if the fullness of the gospel is in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, the revelations to the church will not teach tithing different than the Bible and the Book of Mormon teach it. The trouble is not with the revelations, but with the forced interpretations that are placed upon them.

Now, is the tenth commanded under the gospel?

Our attention is called to the fact that Abraham paid tithes but, that the Inspired Translation spoils the theory of "the tenth." Genesis 14: 20, 39. True, Abraham paid tithes "of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." That verse only teaches that Abraham turned over his surplus. Verse 20 says that "Abraham gave him tithes of all he had taken." And see how beautifully the Inspired Translation spoils the theory of "the tenth." Turn to the New Testament and read Hebrews 7: 4. "Now consider how great this man was, unto whom even the patriarch Abraham gave 'the tenth' of the spoils." Does it not spoil the theory of the tenth beautifully? The Holy Scriptures were given to us, "Even as they are in mine own bosom" the Lord says, Doctrine and Covenants 34: 5. So it will not do to say that Paul was wrong in the statement he made in Hebrews 7: 4. Then the tenth stands as a divine law to the church. Abraham lived in a gospel dispensation and paid his "surplus," also "the tenth" to Melchisedec, whom God had appointed to have charge of the storehouse and to receive the tithes. So we see that section 106 still stands, though it has been assailed. If you will turn to the Book of Mormon you will read the following:

And it was this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes: yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed.—Alma 10: 1.

The voice of the Lord declared that the Book of Mormon was true.

In recent years the Lord has said to us "that the book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the action and advice of the Bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto." (Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.)

If the Lord knew that section 106 was wrong he had a rare good chance and missed it. He could have said, "It is my will that you examine section 106, as there are some things contained therein that are not pleasing unto me," but he did not. He indorsed the book as we have it. Surely there is no reason why we can not do the same.

Yours in the one hope,

T. J. SHELDON.

The Round Table

A Department Devoted to Zionie Questions.

EDITOR'S NOTE.

This department will appear at intervals, as the matter in hand and its relative importance may seem to direct.

Those who know anything about the subjects that are likely to be discussed in a department devoted to spiritual and economic questions will realize that care should be exercised by the writers. The questions referred to touch the self-interest of every individual at some point. An unwise discussion will engender intense bitterness and will fail to accomplish the results aimed at.

We have given long and earnest thought to the rules that should govern such a discussion, that it may be kept within bounds without unjustifiable restriction of the right of free speech. We believe in a free press and in free speech. But no press would be free if forced to publish everything that comes to hand; and it does not follow that the church press is not free because it refuses to publish something that is best unpublished. We are sure that the following suggestions will commend themselves to the conscience and common-sense of our contributors:

Articles should be to the point and reasonably brief. Under existing circumstances about three pages of the HERALD, twenty-four hundred words, ought to be a liberal maximum. Those who confine themselves to one subject at a time, and have a clear understanding of that subject, can say a great deal in half that space. Articles should be as brief as is consistent with clearness.

Personalities should be absolutely eliminated. Always concede the honesty of other writers. Do not reflect upon their intelligence or integrity.

Articles should not be written in a bitter, sarcastic, or sneering spirit. Remember the law of brotherly-kindness.

In order to prevent the discussion degenerating into a contest between two writers, it will be best not to refer directly to previous articles. It is not necessary to say, "On a certain page of the HERALD appears the following sentiment expressed by Bro. So-and-so, to which I wish to reply." Affirmative articles are best; but if it seems absolutely necessary to refute some error it will be sufficient to say, that such-and-such an idea is sometimes held. No two writers should expect to argue back and forth indefinitely to the exclusion of other writers.

We believe that these suggestions might be heeded with profit by writers to any department of the HERALD,—with the possible exception of the suggestion regarding the length of articles. There are times when certain subjects can not be treated satisfactorily in the space indicated. Yet the voluminous writer defeats his own object. His articles are not read.

By way of refreshing our minds, and for the benefit of those who do not have the document at hand, we reprint in this number the Address to the Saints, issued by the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric, May 2, 1903. In our next number of the Round Table we will reprint Duties, Responsibilities, and Faith of the Saints, published by the Bishopric, December 23, 1901.

TOILERS.

The other night, or morning, it was half past three, I was very restless and wandered about the house trying to get sleepy. I sat down in the library, and looking across the room, out of the window, I saw a lonely figure coming up the other side of the street. As he came nearer I saw that he was a policeman going his rounds.

Presently the street-car went by, down at the corner, without a single passenger, just the conductor and motorman. I remembered seeing a man with a lunch-box going to his work early that evening. And the postman had collected the mail at twelve. And then I began to think of the hundreds of people who were working the whole night through, while the rest of the world was sleeping; and sleeping more peacefully and quietly because the guardians of our peace are known to be abroad in the land through the dark hours of the night. I thought of the hundreds that are working through the night that the world may be better accommodated—on street-cars and railroad trains, and at countless railway stations. How many men, women, and children are toiling through the night, in mills, factories, mines, and elsewhere, to eke out an existence; to carry on the world's work, though perchance to help the wealthy fill coffers that are overflowing now. How many, many people are working where the heat is so intense that their eyes are affected in a short time; where lint flies till the lungs are filled; where there are all sorts of unfavorable conditions, that we may have the finished product, perfect, beautiful. The world demands so much. We may live simply, quietly, we may do all the work about the house, and yet how many are working for us. Always they are making, and we are consuming.

I read the Van Vorst's book on The Woman Who Toils, and I said over and over, "What can a woman do? I want to do something to help."

I read parts of the book to my family and one of the boys said, "Mother, you only get us all wrought up about it, and what can we do? We can't do anything."

"But, dear," I said, "I want you to think about it, and feel bad about it, and perhaps sometime you can do something. You will be a man some day. We ought at least to take off our hats to those who labor."

"I have had young men tell me that when the fact of the brotherhood of man first dawned upon them, their warm beds tortured them into sleeplessness, through the thought that some of their brothers were cold. Here the trivial and the sublime mingle together, for, though the young man's sleeplessness avails not to solve the ancient problem of the rich and the poor, yet it is precisely because there are always coming to manhood those who are capable of such feelings that we can hope for progress towards the righting of entrenched wrong." (Doctor George Coe.)

Whenever I think of pickles, now, since reading Mrs. Van Vorst's account, I see bottles and bottles and bottles and corks being hammered in, and sometimes flying glass and cut fingers, and weary workers.

I have bought a great many things ready-made; and long before I read the book, I commenced to think about the people who made the dozens and hundreds and thousands of garments with which the counters of our stores are piled. When I see things that are reasonable in price, my first thought is one of pleasure in them. And then I never fail to think of the tired fingers that made them, and the poorly paid workers.

I was buying some little wash dresses one day, and I said to the girl, "This one is so crooked. Please see if you can find one that is straight." There was a point on the collar, but it was not even with the middle of the yoke.

When we remember the speed with which some of these things are made, the speed with which they must be made, it is small wonder that they are not straight and even. How could any one get anything straight with that mad, galloping thing, the electric sewing-machine? I couldn't.

Sometimes when I am stitching on the machine I run crooked a little bit; or when I think I have taken great care things don't come out just right. Then I take time to rip the imperfect seam and rectify the mistake. I am not racing for bread and butter. Whether I finish the garment this day or the next our meals will be regular. And besides, when I sit down to my machine, I can look out upon beautiful lawns with fresh, green grass and flowers.

Oh, the hundreds of garments that are offered for sale. Oh, the weary fingers that made them, the aching eyes that looked and looked upon all those rows and rows of stitching; the aching backs; the nerves unstrung. The cotton goods that we use—that look so attractive, draped in the store-windows! Did you ever stop to think where they come from? Did you ever think of the toilers, and especially the women and children who make such goods?

I have tried over and over again to imagine my two precious little girls, half clad, bare-foot, dirty, unkempt, working in a mill, ill-ventilated, noisy, the air thick with flying particles of cotton, to cover the hair and clothing and to be inhaled; tired, sleepy, with some one always to say harshly, "Go on," instead of, "Dear, creep into my arms and rest!"

I can't do it! Here they are, sweet, fresh, healthy, and happy, though in a modest home. With wholesome food, plenty of sleep, fresh air, shady lawn, green grass, sand pile, books and playthings; here they are, glad and free! And those other children are being cheated of their birthright. Those other mothers are being cheated out of the fairness of life that is their right as well as mine.

Shall we fail to add our mite, that public sentiment shall be aroused to such an extent that conditions will be bettered?

AN ADDRESS TO THE SAINTS.

The quorums of the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric met in joint council at Lamoni, Iowa, May 1, 1903, and after careful consideration adopted the following address and provided for its publication in HERALD, Ensign, and in tract form. There were present, Joseph Smith, F. M. Smith, and R. C. Evans of the First Presidency; W. H. Kelley, Heman C. Smith, Joseph Luff, G. T. Griffiths, I. N. White, F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, and U. W. Greene of the Twelve; and E. L. Kelley and G. H. Hilliard of the Bishopric.

JOSEPH SMITH, President of Council.
FRED M. SMITH, } Secretaries.
HEMAN C. SMITH, }

The Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric in joint council send greeting to the Saints of the progress and conditions of church work, and particularly that part relating to temporalities, trusting to encourage the faithful helpers everywhere and to stimulate all to efforts of diligence in fulfilling the law of Christ.

1. NECESSITY OF FULFILLING THE LAW.

As a people we expect to find acceptance with God only so far as we are willing to do his will and keep his commandments. Jesus taught: "If ye love me, keep my commandments."—John 14: 15.

The inspired Psalmist sung of the mercies and blessings of the Lord that followed those and their families who failed not to obey him:

The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children; to such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.—Psalm 103: 17, 18.

These promised favors and benefits, as a people, we desire and seek; but it must not be forgotten that their realization depends upon our readiness to do. It is by faithful performance of duty that we are made heirs of promise and entitled to a place among those who love God.

And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments.—1 John 2:3.

For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous.—1 John 5:3.

We are not only promised acceptance with God by these citations through obedience to all of his laws, but are assured to begin with, that he does not demand more than we shall be able to perform.

"His commandments are not grievous." But God requires an effort on our part to fulfill his law. This should be made in meekness, but with courage; every one moving to his or her task with cheerfulness, and a fervent desire to accomplish through the love of God, all that he has asked.

Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.—Psalm 112:1.

Forty-two years ago the Reorganized Church was instructed to comply with the laws relating to temporalities, and potent reasons mentioned for so doing.

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the Bishop, to execute the law of tithing.—Doctrine and Covenants 114:1.

The law then is binding upon the church and should be administered; put in force, fulfilled, as any and all others relating to the body—the church. The officers mentioned are required to perform this work as a duty. And the fact must not be overlooked in this connection, that if these officers are charged with the administration of the law and are to be held responsible for making a proper effort to carry out their part of the work, that each and every member is under equal obligation to obey, or comply with the same, and that responsibility for a disregard or disobedience, can not be escaped. Entire, full, and complete obedience is demanded for this law as any other; and a failure to keep, must now as in the past bring the church under condemnation.

Behold, I say unto you, Were it not for the transgressions of my people, speaking concerning the church and not individuals, they might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer.—Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.

2. MANNER OF ADMINISTRATION.

To obtain the benefit for which any gospel law or usage has been instituted, the administration must be by a voluntary acceptance, or willingness, on the part of the one complying. People can not be assessed, or deprived of their properties by the church against their will. Christ promised an eternal reward to those who fulfilled his law here. Then the act of the observer must be a voluntary one. To lay up "treasures in heaven" requires that the act be with a free heart, willingly. There is no chance for compulsion in carrying out the law relating to temporalities any more than that touching spiritual things. To baptize a person who does not understand the object and benefits of baptism and against his will, would be an act in violation of the law of Christ. To force a person to give of his means, or deceive him as to the object and purpose, would be a violation of the law on the part of the administrator. The gospel rule is stated by the apostle:

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Corinthians 9:7.

Behold the Lord requireth the heart, and a willing mind.—Doctrine and Covenants 64:7.

On the other hand, a person who accepts the law, and desires to obey the commandments of God must not fail to perform because it will inconvenience him, or be a sacrifice for him to do so. No great reward can be expected by an individual who defers doing anything for the cause of Christ until he gets something that he can do without, just as well as not, and then turn that over to the Lord. Christ gave all for us, why should we hesitate to sacrifice for him or his work? Many in accepting the gospel are called upon to part with friends, relatives, and loved ones; indeed all must deny themselves of many things for Christ's sake; but do we waver because of this? Neither should we hesitate to sacrifice of our substance to promote the welfare of his work.

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).—Doctrine and Covenants 64:5. (See Malachi 4:1.)

In keeping this, as well as other commandments, we prove our worthiness before the Lord. Jesus referring to this law of duty in temporal matters, says:

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? —Luke 16:10, 11.

Can anything be plainer upon the question of rendering a faithful and true account than the foregoing? And stop and consider that it is the Son of God talking; a fact in itself sufficient to disclose the great importance of each and every one setting him or herself right, in complying with the law.

3. WHAT IS REQUIRED BY IT?

1. A recognition on our part of the beneficence and supremacy of God over every good thing in this world. As he declares:

The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.—Psalm 24:1. For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.—Psalm 50:10.

2. The stewardship, rather than the ownership, of man, and that it is his duty and reasonable service to render an account of this stewardship to God in time, as well as eternity.

It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72:1.

The principle of rendering tithes to the Lord has been recognized and followed in every age wherein we have an account of a people who were accepted of him.

Abraham, the father of all the faithful in Christ, kept the law. To the High Priest, Melchisedec, "Abraham gave a tenth part of all."—Hebrews 7:2. Jacob promised:

And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28:22.

The Lord charged Malachi to say to the people.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house.—Malachi 3:10.

This injunction is made applicable in the gospel economy by the instruction of Christ to the Nephites after his resurrection. (Nephi 11:1-3.) He also said to the Jews:

But woe unto you, Pharisees! for ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11:42.

The word tithe, means tenth; and the rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or "a tenth of the increase." Every one should render an account in this, for whatever we are blessed with we are indebted to God for, and it is but reasonable and just that we honor him in the tithe. The principle is: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase."—Proverbs 3:9.

It must not be forgotten that the tithe is a part of what a person has been blessed with; God first bestows upon us, and then asks a return according to our several abilities. The widow with her mite may do this and receive her reward therefor. The rich can not be rewarded if they withhold. "For there is no respect of persons with God."—Romans 2:11.

Under special conditions of the church, other portions of giving, than the tenth, are also referred to as tithes, but the word occurs as an adjective, or verb, and not as a noun, and denotes the act of giving or taking, rather than the specific amount required under the law.

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an example unto all the stakes of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 106:2.

The surplus may be a hundredth part, or a half; no definite sum is indicated here by the word, but the idea of paying or giving is expressed.

Direction is also given to the Saints to consecrate of their properties for the use and benefit of the church in providing for the poor, and carrying out the work of promulgating the gospel. To consecrate is to set apart for these special church, or sacred uses. The amount of consecration is to be determined by the person giving in agreement with the Bishop and is referred to as "that which thou hast to impart," there being provision also for a first, and subsequent consecrations.

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and deed which can not be broken. . . . And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 10.

To consecrate is to set apart for a special purpose, or use, and in the consecration referred to here, a portion is set aside for the purposes mentioned in the law to be put into the hands of the Bishop of the church. The remainder is designated or set apart to the one making the consecration as his own; for it appears that the "testimonies concerning the consecration" are taken at the time. Herein a complete consecration may be had and persons entering therein receive their certificates from the Bishop.

The consecration of the "remainder" or "residue" herein referred to, is more particularly set out under the term of surplus property, and may be better comprehended under this head.

4. SURPLUS PROPERTY.

Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business, or impairing his stewardship, is under the law properly termed surplus. In other words, it is that part of a man's properties which he has more than he has need. Individual efforts and interests are not jeopardized in the administration of this part of the law, but respected and conserved. For while a person carries on his work and properly answers to the Lord in his stewardship, he aids the church to perform its work by setting aside for its use that which he can do without, that it may perform its work, and he in turn is blessed and benefited in developing and establishing of the church work. The plan is coöperative, aiding the needy and leveling distinctions, and largely enters into the solution of the question of bringing about harmony in the social life of the people. The direct application of the order of surplus is in Zion and her stakes, (Doctrine and Covenants 106,) but the privileged administration is coextensive with the residences of the Saints and proper officers to administer, thus making the children of Zion one in their works.

He that sendeth up treasures unto the land of Zion, shall receive an inheritance in this world, and his works shall follow him.—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 13.

A few words in addition to the laws of the kingdom, respecting the members of the church; they that are appointed by the Holy Spirit to go up unto Zion. Let them carry up unto the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward. This is also an example. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 5.

5. TESTIMONIES TO BE TAKEN.

To insure justice and equity in the administration of this principle of surplus, the Bishop must be made acquainted with the holdings of each one. He can neither confirm, as just and equitable, the amounts set aside by the rich to fill the measure of the law, nor know the needs and wants of the poor who must be aided, without this. It is right and proper then, that all should file their inventories, with the Bishop; make a full and complete showing without reservation, as a solemn and sacred act in their stewardship before the Lord, so that the law may be administered in equity and righteousness. This act is referred to in the law as laying "all things before the Bishop in Zion," a term fairly disclosing the object, extent, and manner of execution of the law.

For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion. . . . A certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the bishop in Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3, 4.

The Bishop in Zion referred to herein is the general Bishop, or Presiding Bishop in contradistinction to local bishops. Zion is particularly defined in the law as, "The pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5. But there are references made in terms of "the place for the city of Zion"; "the land of Zion"; "the waste places of Zion"; and Zion, the "ensign of the people."

Offering for the purpose of helping along worthy undertakings, benevolent enterprises, special educational efforts, incidental expenses to a traveling elder, and church buildings, should be made by all who can do so. In this way we may do much to build up and establish the kingdom of God. Men can do much of their own selves; as they voluntarily do this they are made stronger instead of weaker, the Lord giving them ability to bring forth more fruit, proving the fact held out in the law that giving does not impoverish a person.

Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves. And inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart, and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

6. CONCLUDING STATEMENT.

It is the duty, and should be regarded as the privilege, of every person to consecrate everything he has and is to the service of God, to be used for the advancement of his work as he may direct. The church being an organization ordained of God for the developing and promulgating of his purposes it follows that through its authorized representatives we can more effectually accomplish these purposes than in any other way. The Bishop being under the law the authorized custodian of church funds, he should be recognized and his coöperation secured in the consecration of money or property to the uses provided for in the law.

The church has no right to take of any man's property without his consent being first obtained; nor in making the consecration referred to, has the person the exclusive right to determine how means shall be used which is thus set apart for church purposes. We therefore believe that each person should make a faithful inventory of all he possesses, and lay it before the Bishop; and by mutual agreement between himself and the Bishop determine what portion he shall retain for his own needs and what portion shall be placed in the treasury for other purposes. That portion set apart for his own needs and that for other purposes to be regarded as alike consecrated to the service of God, thus making a complete consecration. When such agreement and adjustment are made, the party consecrating receives an inheritance, or a certificate entitling him to an inheritance at such time as he may need, and the church be in condition to comply.

This consecration when complied with does not release the party complying, from the obligation of paying tithes on increase accumulated after consecration; nor from making a second consecration according to the first, should the individual find himself in a position to do so.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 2, 1903.

COMMUNITY OWNERSHIP VERSUS PRIVATE OWNERSHIP.

I pick up my pen and ask God in the name of his Son to help me harmonize the following seemingly conflicting passages of scripture along these lines. In favor of private ownership, the following passages are presented:

1. Micah 4: 4, speaking of the good time coming says, "They shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid." Individual ownership is here made clear, plain, and definite.

2. Doctrine and Covenants 82:1 shows that an inheritance can not be taken away from the one receiving it, even though the recipient leave the church. This is conclusive proof that the individual owns his inheritance.

3. Verse 2 of the above section, speaking of children, says, "They have claim . . . upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances." This settles the matter again; for no parent can give to his children that which he does not own.

4. The Lord, in section 107, paragraph 18, directed the forming of a stock company to build the Nauvoo boarding-house. Men were required to invest some of their private holdings. It was the Lord, who walks not in crooked paths, who commanded it; therefore he indorses private ownership, as also competitive stock companies.

5. Section 126, paragraph 10, says, "Unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."¹ It is a well-known fact that said "application" favors individual ownership of public commodities. So this puts a ¹The application of the law as stated by the Bishopric referred to above, however, seems to deal with an article presented in 1902, called "Duties and responsibilities of the Saints," which takes no position on nor does it refer to competition or coöperation. Therefore this argument as touching the application of the Bishopric is only for the benefit of those holding it forth as an argument in favor of competition. The writer heartily indorses the article called "Duties and responsibilities of the Saints."

Gibraltar front onto private ownership that challenges any kind of an assault.

But as we start off in this direction, we are soon confronted by perpendicular mountains of solid rock, and we can see no way around or over them. They are built of the following passages:

1. "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need."—Acts 2: 44. "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common."—Acts 4: 32. The case of Ananias and Sapphira proves that God sanctioned these methods.

2. "Thou shalt communicate to thy neighbor of all thou hast; thou shalt not call anything thine own."—Barnabas 14: 16.

3. "We must . . . look upon all the things of this world as none of ours, and not desire them. For if we desire to possess them, we fall from the way of righteousness. For thus saith the Lord, No servant can serve two masters."—2 Clement 3: 4.

4. "As many as were baptized in the name of Jesus were filled with the Holy Ghost. . . . And they taught and did minister one to another; and they had all things common among them, . . . they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them, . . . and Jesus came and stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, . . . Verily I say unto you, that ye are built upon my gospel."—3 Nephi 12: 2, 3.

5. "Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3. For if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things."—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

6. Jesus, to set us a pattern, refused all the glory and wealth of the world, and had no place of his own to lay his head; and he said, Matthew 10: 24, "It is enough [sufficient, plenty.—Webster] that the disciple be as his master."

Now, as "all scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction, . . . that the man of God may be perfect," etc., it follows that there must be some common ground, some happy medium, some grand central truth that, when understood, will naturally dovetail all these passages together as the handiwork of an all-wise Creator. So by the help of God let us go in quest of this golden mean, by taking up these passages in the foregoing order:

1. By Malachi 4: 4, we learn that whatever the "all things common" may be made to mean, the sanctity or sacredness of the home must not be invaded or desecrated, or in any way or by any means broken asunder; and that, though God is the only real owner of every atom of the universe, he does and will recognize his children as lawful stewards over their own homes. And of course these homes will differ according to the tastes, intelligence, inventive genius, and industry of the builders and occupants.

2. In Doctrine and Covenants 82:1, these homes are spoken of as "inheritances," and belong to the heirs after the death of the steward "according to the laws of the land."

3. By verse 2, we learn that these inheritances may sometimes be large enough to divide among children as they become of age. To illustrate: A man with his sons may be able to use forty acres of land according to the best methods of farming known to him, so he receives forty acres as his inheritance. When these sons reach their majority, and wish to build homes of their own, if they go out, the father's force is diminished, so he divides his forty acres among his sons, and still has left as much as he can handle. And as another generation comes of age and wants homes, the city men have built out around them, and they find it practicable to divide and subdivide this former inheritance. It is not probable that the houses and lands and inheritances that we read of being sold in the Acts included the homes of the saints; but rather their surplus holdings; for we read in the same connection of them "breaking bread from house to house"; and we read of Mary's home at Jerusalem, of Simon's house by the seaside, of the house of Jason, of Justus, of Phœbe, Priscilla, Aquilla, Chloe, Stephen, Philip, Onesiph, Nymphys, and others. So as late as 64 A. D. they had their respective homes.

4. In section 107 the Lord ordered a stock company to organize and build the Nauvoo House, to be conducted by the Prophet, where the weary traveler may find rest and be entertained, and receive "counsel from those whom I have set to be as plants of renown," and where he "may find health and safety while he shall contemplate the word of the Lord," etc.

There is no comparison to be made between this boarding-house and the competitive concerns that enable a few men to corner the entire product of wheat, or coal, or cotton, or oil, and so cruelly jeopardize the producers and consumers. But whatever relation there may seem to be in the methods employed may easily be explained by the apparent fact that many things will be permitted and even commanded by the Lord during the period of transition from man's ways to the ways of God that will be entirely barred out when his way obtains.

Upon a time when the Saints were doing all they could to build a temple with a font therein, the Lord received their baptisms for their dead, as they were performed in the river. Now, we all understand that this was not the rule. And this stock company, together with those baptisms, may have been an exception to the rule.

Indeed, if we are to adopt it as the rule, then of course we may look for a stock company of individual owners to build and operate the Lord's storehouse.

5. Now turn with me to Doctrine and Covenants 126:10, and let us see if the Lord has really set his seal on competitive ownership of public commodities or not. He begins this division of this long sentence with the immortal conjunctions, "and unless," or if not, which competent judges say are the most doubtful words in our vocabulary. "And unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to." Let me couch the same meaning in a briefer way, and in more simple words: If under the competitive system the Saints are exempt from loss and injury, the Bishop's application of the law should be agreed to. Let us reverse this statement so that we may see it from either end, and know just what it contains: If under the competitive rule, the Saints are not exempt from loss and harm, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should not be agreed to.

Now, since the common people in all the walks of life are, by force of circumstances, compelled to see that their liberties are placed in jeopardy by a system that has placed so heavy a percentage of the wealth under the control of so small a percentage of the people, it causes this statement that has been thought to be a Gibraltar in defense of competition to look to us more like a scathing rebuke administered by him who has said, You shall be equal in earthly things.

Failing to find any contradictions of terms in the revelations, we believe the way is clear, and the time opportune for the establishing of the great commonwealth of Israel in harmony with the commandments.

D. R. BALDWIN.

THE WORD OF THE LORD.

The following is not a verbatim quotation, but does no violence to the substance of thought contained in the texts. It is thus transposed and emphasized to bring out that portion of the word of the Lord which the writer earnestly believes most needs to be applied under present conditions, that we may attain unto a higher life.

Let no reader fail to carefully read the texts cited herein as they appear in their exactness in the Bible, which was translated and published to the church and to the world by direct command of God. Not that there are any material changes upon these points from the King James Version; but the fact that other important readings were changed by inspiration, proves that these readings, being unchanged, have the sanction of the Lord as they are in the book. Ezekiel 18:

The word of the Lord came unto me again, saying, The soul that sinneth it shall die. But if a man is just, and does that which is lawful and right, and does not those things which are not right, such as eating things sacrificed to idols upon the mountain, or defiling his neighbor's wife, or oppressing any one, or turning away the hungry without food, or the destitute without clothing, or loaning goods or money for usury, for interest, or for increase (see verses 5 and 8); if a man does none of this iniquity (see verse 8), but walks in my statutes and my judgments, he is just, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God.

But if he beget a son that is a robber, or a murderer, or that does any one (see verse 10) of these iniquitous things mentioned; if he gives forth upon usury, and takes increase on a loan, or does any of these abominations (see verse 13), shall he live? He shall surely die; for the soul that sinneth it shall surely die saith the Lord.

But if he beget a son who sees his father's sins, and resolves not to do any of those things, and does not do the acts of an oppressor; does not give forth upon usury nor take increase (see verse 17); but executes my judgments and walks in my statutes, he shall not die, for the iniquity of his father; he shall surely live. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father. The soul that sinneth, it shall die.

But if the wicked will turn from all his transgressions that he hath committed, he shall surely live. Have I any pleasure at all, that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God, and not that he should turn from his ways and live?

But when the righteous turn away from his righteousness and commits iniquity, and does according to all these abominations (see verses 13 and 24), shall he live? All his righteousness which he has done shall not be mentioned, because of the trespass and the sin which he has committed, in those sins he shall die. (See verse 26.)

Therefore I will judge you, O house of Israel, every one according to his ways, saith the Lord God. Repent and turn yourselves from all these transgressions; so iniquity shall not be your ruin (see verse 30). Turn from this iniquity and live.

Nehemiah 5: Some have mortgaged lands, vineyards, and houses that they might purchase necessities; and some have borrowed money to pay their taxes (see verses 3 and 4), and are brought into bondage with their sons and daughters, to be servants; neither is there power to redeem them, if this usury is kept up. Leave off, therefore, this usury, and restore it, this one per cent interest which you have exacted as usury from the people (see verses 10 and 11), lest like shaking the lap God shall shake out every one from his house and from his labor that refuses to leave it off. For thou shall not lend upon usury (see Dueteronomy 23) to thy brother, either of money or victuals or anything that is lent upon interest, or increase. If you find people who are poor, and need to borrow money, you shall not lend to them upon usury (see Exodus 22: 25), and if you take a mortgage to insure the payment of the principal, the mortgaged article or pledge shall be returned when he needs it. And if thy brother be poor (see Leviticus 25: 35, 37), thou shalt relieve him. Take no usury or increase of him; but fear thy God. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase. For he that by usury (one per cent interest or more—Nehemiah 5) and such unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. (Proverbs 28: 8.) And he who shall abide in my holy hill, and shall dwell in my tabernacle in Zion, is he that walketh uprightly and speaketh the truth in his heart; that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbor, that sweareth not falsely to hurt any man, and changeth not, and putteth not out his money to usury. (Psalm 15.)

And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners to receive as much again, in addition; but ye must do good and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be called the children of the highest; but why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say? Whosoever cometh to me and heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will show you to whom he is like. He is like a man that digged deep and laid the foundation upon a rock, and when the flood arose, the stream beat vehemently against that house, and could not shake it, for it was founded upon a rock. But he that heareth and doeth not is like the man who builded without a foundation, upon the earth, and the stream beat vehemently against that house and it fell; and the ruin of that house was great. (Luke 6: 34-49.)

A GLEANER FROM THE WORD OF THE LORD.

EQUALITY.

The principle of equality is one of the grandest principles in the gospel economy. And when we properly understand it we can not help seeing the purifying essence in it.

In the first place it teaches the fatherhood of God in that he made of one blood all men to dwell upon all the face of the earth, and has provided for them in accord to the place or climate in which they are called to dwell. When we fully understand the needs of man to make him both comfortable and happy, they are not much more than the animal creation, and the fact is apparent that after our needs are supplied and a reasonable amount of luxury indulged in, after that we begin to lay up to somebody's hurt. Again, it is apparent that if we accumulate of this world's goods more than we can legitimately use, some one is going to have less than is really necessary for his comfort in life.

I am of the opinion that the equal opportunity feature of this work is solved in the equal division of all wealth. I do not mean by this that all the wealth of the church should be collected in one great treasury and an equal division be made according to the number to be divided among, but I do mean that all the business transacted in the church should be done in a manner that all will receive the benefit of it. The spirit of coöperation is the only system to insure success to all in a community.

For example: One man may not have enough capital to succeed in business, but the combined capital of a dozen could; and the amount gathered in this way may not be equal, one man might have as much as all the rest combined, but the sums gathered in this way should be added together and the amount [profits] divided according to the number [and their needs? EDITOR] required to carry on the business. Oh! says one; that won't work. There is not a man in the church who will do that. Perhaps there is not any at the present time, but there will be plenty of them that will do it before Zion is redeemed, or it will never be redeemed. All men are born equal in this world and when they die again they are equal. There is not enough money in this world to save a man when his time comes to die. Wealth will not save him. The poor man has just the same chance as the rich. We are commanded to lay up our treasure in heaven, where moth and rust doth not corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal. In order to reach the point with as little trouble as possible, we will use what we believe will illustrate it quite well.

Suppose a brother of wealth has a desire to comply with the celestial law of equality, and in order to do so, he gathers his means and moves to Zion. He must do as the law of God requires, for God has said it must be done in mine own way.

In doing this the brother must go to the bishop, as he is the one legally appointed to represent God in this work, and say, "Brother Bishop, I have come to Zion to live, and I want to comply with the law of celestial equality; it is my desire to do all that God requires of me." The bishop, having a knowledge of the work before him, immediately proceeds to inform him as to his duty. The bishop will say, "It is your duty to consecrate all you have to God, yourself included. This is done by turning over your surplus to be used for the benefit of others." Now we do not want to scatter your means, for in so doing it would be spent and no especial good accomplished with it. So we will use the means you have brought in doing as much good as possible. We will start up some industry that will give employment to as many as possible, for that is what we want to do in Zion. Most of our people are poor and honest, but need assistance to start in business, and men who have the love of God in their hearts, are what we need. The sum you have is sufficient for yourself, including family, and perhaps five or six more.

Your duty in this matter is to take these men in with you and give them an equal interest in the business with you. You can see they are all of interest to the business, hence there is not only a living but a profit in the business for all.

In this division with your brethren you see you have made them equal with yourself, hence a chance for equality with them in spiritual things. It must not be supposed that one man is to receive more than another, but you see the law requires that every man receive according to his needs.

It may be that in the past those who have had plenty have used their means lavishly, but in Zion we can not do that, for we are informed that this is a day of sacrifice, and the tithing of my people. And it necessarily follows that those that will not be tithed are not his people, though their names may appear on the church record. Every business started in Zion must also pay tithing on its clearings. And if a surplus accumulates, more than is needed for the legitimate use of the concern, it must also be turned over to the church bishop. This fund is used for purchasing inheritances for those who are not fortunate enough to fall in with such men as you. You know in Zion there are to be no rich and no poor.

There is a decided objection to hoarding wealth. In the first place it occupies time that ought to be spent in doing good. It engenders a disposition of dishonesty, and creates fear, jealousy, strife, covetousness; and last, but not least, it is almost impossible for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven. You know Christ said it was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven. Now, brother, we can not afford to take such chances as that. You know, brother, we are taught that there are three distinct glories; they are known to us as celestial, terrestrial, and telestial, and they are compared to the sun, moon, and stars. Did you ever stop to think of this wonderful illustration? The wonderful power of the sun, how it produces all light and heat? And the moon, how all the light it has is borrowed from the sun? And the stars, how they have almost no light at all? Now consider for a moment: to miss celestial glory means eternity in either moon- or star-light. Oh, think! is there enough in this world to justify one in taking any chance at all in losing our chance of celestial glory?

God has said the hastening time has come. I understand by this statement that the time has come, for those who have it in their power, to begin to use their means for the redemption of Zion. I also understand that the redemption of Zion is the purchasing of lands, and building up branches of industry that will be of interest to the people of God. I could not for one moment think that the Saints were going to be fed on manna, like unto Israel. That was a case of emergency; there was nothing else for them to live upon. But in this day of plenty there is no necessity for any thing of the kind. The people of God, who have been fortunate enough during years of prosperity to lay up many times more than they have need of, are the ones who have the power to lay the foundation of Zion. The question most naturally arises, Will they do it? If not, who will?

We find in observing things in the past that the class of people that prospers are inclined to use their energies in accumulation of this world's goods and use it for the exclusive benefit of self. I do not understand those who have a little home and perhaps a small income, to be the ones that are going to do this work, yet it may be that if it is ever done they will have to do it.

Now I wish to drop a word along the line of wealth gathering, and the thought is this. Every dollar of money or goods in the hands of any individual more than is necessary for his legitimate use and happiness, is as lost to the world for the length of time it is so held; as if it had been consumed by fire. To hold wealth in this way, do you know what it means? It means the improper use of the things which God has intrusted to your care. And every one so holding will be called to an account for his stewardship, and will stand before God as the man in the parable of the rich fool.

"The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully. And he thought within himself, saying, What will I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater, and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul, Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for many years; take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry. But God said unto him, Thou fool, this night thy soul is required of thee. Then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?"

Poor man, with bursting granaries, worrying about the future; a bountiful crop, yet worried and perplexed, not knowing what to do with so much in store, and another splendid crop coming on. Finally a bright idea comes to him; This will I do, these old barns are too small. I will pull them down; I will build my barns larger, and I will lay up abundantly; then will I say to my soul, Soul thou hast much goods laid up in store for many years; eat, drink, and be merry. I will laugh in the face of privation, when he comes stalking through the land to pinch the poor and needy, and I will say to him, I guess you don't catch me, sir; I made hay while the sun shone; I have laid up treasure there. I can put my hand on it at any time. I can say to my soul, Soul, take thine ease, for thou hast much goods laid up in store for a long time.

He was not prepared for the startling announcement that was to awaken him from his boastful revery, and like the mysterious handwriting on the beautiful walls of the palace of Belshazzar, he starts as the voice of Omnipotence speaks, and trembling in every limb, he listens as the awful doom is sounded in his ear, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." Then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?"

It is possible that we would be wonderfully surprised if the number of men were made known who have trembled at this awful summons, and at a time when they least expected it. It is only those who heed the warning by profiting by the experience of others, that are to escape the same doom. Let us take warning by the experience of others and escape the terrible judgment of the mighty God.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. M. LILES.

Draw Near to Me.

Draw near to me, my Savior, 'twixt the midnight and the dawn,

When the darkness is the deepest and the world is hushed in sleep.

Though thine angels are about me, I can not do without thee, And it is with Jesus only that I would my vigil keep.

Draw near to me, my Savior, when the world is all astir, With the rush of busy toilers and the little children's play. At the very heart of labor I would have thee for my neighbor, And ever hand in hand with thee would walk the homeward way.

Draw near to me, my Savior, when the lights are growing dim,

Be with me in the valley when thick the shadows fall, Let me feel that thou dost love me, though the cloud-rack drifts above me,

Let me trust the Friend whose faithfulness is aye my all in all.

Draw near to me, my Savior, in the golden hour of bliss,
 When cups of thrilling sweetness to my grateful lips are pressed.
 Let still a waft of heaven make pure the earthly leaven,
 And so my earthly happiness by grace divine be blessed.
 Draw near to me, my Savior, when I to thee draw near;
 O listen to my humble prayer that shall not be denied.
 May I know in sweet communion how to dwell with thee in union,
 And so with Jesus only let me evermore abide.

Make the Home the Center for the Boy.

A police officer, more than the doctor, minister or lawyer, knows what the boy is doing who does not care to stay at home or is not permitted to stay at home.

I say "not permitted to stay at home" advisedly, because I have known, in a long police career, many boys whose mothers constantly urged them to find their amusements in the streets rather than have them "in the way" at home. The average boy who does not care to stay at home, when closely questioned by a police officer, will almost invariably explain that his surroundings are "stupid."

The boys with whom the police have the least trouble, of whom they know the least, are those whose mothers make the home a center for them; who make the boy feel that home is the most attractive spot when not at school or work.

Since I am talking to mothers, I can best illustrate what I have to say by several anecdotes. A boy stoned and severely cut a switchman in a switch-yard. The brakeman caught and spanked him. The boy ran home. Ten minutes later he was back in the switch-yard. The brakeman caught him again, and the boy said: "My mother won't let me stay at home."

The brakeman took the boy home, and, finding the mother, said:

"If you do not keep this boy at home, I will have him taken to the Juvenile Court."

She replied: "Well, if that's the case, I suppose I'll have to keep him home, but he does make such a muss!"

Now, that attitude of a mother towards a boy just starting into mischief makes him, in a very few years, a subject for police supervision, if not police trial and imprisonment. And the responsibility for his start on the wrong road is traceable to no other source than his home.

One of my officers caught a young boy maliciously breaking glass in a public building. The officer was a thoughtful man, and, instead of arresting the boy, took him to his mother, told her of the wrong, and said the glass must be paid for.

The mother paid for the glass, but filed charges against the officer. When the boy was put on the stand it developed that, out of the twenty-four hours of the day, except when he slept, he was at home only for his three meals, "and that he had orders from his mother not to spoil things about the house and to keep out of it all he could." The officer, of course, was acquitted. The boy, two years later, went to the reform school for burglary, and I have no doubt his mother is wondering to this day why he went wrong.

POLICE KNOW THE FACTS.

If these two cases were isolated ones they would not be so serious, but every police officer knows, every detective knows, and every lone marshal in a small town knows that altogether too many boys are driven out of the home by the ignorance or thoughtlessness of the parents.

Let me add this, too; that the great ranks of our young and well-dressed criminals are not recruited from the slums, but from the social scale where education, good breeding and Christianity are supposed to prevail. The petty sneak-thief may come from the slums, but our dangerous young criminals are drawn largely from the so-called "good homes."

On the other hand, I know five boys whose mother makes their home schoolroom, playroom, and workshop for them. Whatever these boys plan to do is planned to be done in the home, and the mother is a part of the doing. If they go to a baseball game, "mother" goes with them. If they think of other amusement, "mother" is figured into it. Saturday night when three of them receive pay, they come home and lay the money into her lap. If her home duties become too heavy, there is a boy at each to help her out.

A natural and loving partnership exists between this mother and her sons, and the father shares in its delightful benefits. Such boys never need police supervision.

This mother began in the babyhood of her first child to have it think that she was the center of the earth. She is a woman of firm will, and she exacted obedience from the boys, but in return she gave them a legitimate run of the home, the right use of all in it, and her companionship.

"Oh, Mr. Collins," she said to me one day, "I never have to worry about my boys. We are partners."

When I see a home filled with books, music, and pictures, no matter how little they cost, when I see the mother interested in every move the boy makes, when I find the boy is looking to his mother for advice and entertainment, I dismiss all thought of his becoming a police character.

A boy will not stay at home unless home is made as attractive from his point of view (not your point of view) as what he can find outside.

If he is good-looking, if he is well-dressed, if he has a little money, if he can tell a good story or sing a song well, he will find plenty of bright if not honest people to throng about him and urge him on. Then, for every mother influence over him in the past, ten outside influences are taking him the downward way. The mother is stunned. She realizes too late that this future man has gone from her.

Hard, strenuous police experience has driven the truth straight into my soul that if a young boy is to be kept right until he reaches the years of judgment, his happiest resort, his best loved spot, must be his home, and his mother, to him, the brightest object in it.

Reform institutions are fair in their way, churches do much good, philanthropic people help many. But the biggest work that can be done with a boy to keep him manly, to keep him out of the way of the police, is in the home and by the mother.

Mothers who doubt this need only to avail themselves of an opportunity to spend a month in the office of the chief of police and learn the misery, the tragedy, the agony of boy-lives to whom the word home never had a true meaning, to whom the word mother means only a parent!

Theories about boy-training look very acceptable on paper, they sound well in lectures, but there is nothing that will get hold of a boy's heart so quickly and influence him so strongly for his future good as a partnership with his mother and a home in which he can rationally do what he likes; in which he is part master, part servant, part guest, but always son.—John Collins, former Chief of Police of Chicago, in Mother's Magazine, Elgin, Illinois, for August.

Editors Herald: I see by the last HERALD that Mrs. G. P. Gagnon, of Savannah, Illinois, wishes the formula for medicinal baths published in HERALD about a year ago; and as I copied it, I will send you a copy, and you can send it to her, unless you think best to republish in the HERALD:

Take of sea-salt four ounces, spirits of ammonia two ounces, spirits of camphor two ounces, and pure alcohol eight ounces, and sufficient hot soft water to make a full quart of the liquid. Dissolve sea-salt in the hot water, and let it stand until cool. Pour into the alcohol the spirits of ammonia and camphor, and mix them well by a thorough shaking. Add, then, the salt water and again shake well, and bottle for use. Keep tightly corked. Keep in the sleeping-room or somewhere near at hand, a soft sponge, a bottle of the liquid, and a saucer; and when tired, nervous, and blue, do not be tempted to neglect this bath, but make the extra effort needed to wet over the whole body with the liquid, and finish with a vigorous rubbing with a soft crash or turkish towel. Rub until the skin glows with a reddish tone; slip quickly into a fresh, clean gown; and then just try to lie awake. You can not do it, I'll warrant. At least I never can.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to inform you that the work of the Lord is on the move in Pottawattamie District. Our conference convened with the Carson Branch, and went off very nicely. The business was done without a jar to mar the harmony and peace that prevailed throughout the sessions. The district reports twenty-three baptisms in the last four months, which is a fair showing.

Our reunion was a success in more ways than one. The Saints met together and renewed their friendship and good will and acquaintance; and they were greatly strengthened in faith; and the inner man was fed with manna from on high. The order was very good; and the preaching was above the average. We all rejoiced together, and it was decided to have another in the year of 1909. So we are encouraged to press our way onward and upward, fulfilling the Master's will, working together for the triumph of Zion; and we hope to be the pure in heart; for we know they shall see God; for they will have a place and an inheritance in Zion with the redeemed, and with those who have continued faithful to the end, and have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb.

Ever praying that this may be the happy lot of every Saint of God, I am your colaborer in this great plan of salvation.

VALE, Oregon, October 29, 1908.

Dear Saints: I wish to relate a little conversation that I had with a traveling agent this morning, which will perhaps encourage the Saints in distributing tracts. In speaking of his wife he made the statement that she was from Utah, which gave me courage to hand him the pamphlet, What We Believe, with the statement that if his wife was raised in Utah she knew something of Mormonism, and I wished her to know something of another side of the question. He hastened to inform me that she was not a Mormon. I said that even though she might not be a Mormon she knew something of their teachings. He then told me that her parents were Mormons but had "failed to make a Mormon of her." He had met an old gentleman (I believe he said old,) there in Salt Lake, who was representing a church that in some respects were just like the Mormons, and again in other respects were directly opposite. He did not remember just what he did call the church or what his name was, but thought from what I had said that likely it was the same church to which I belonged. He did not remember the man's name but thought he would recognize it if he heard it. I suggested Briggs, and with a pleased smile he said, "Yes, that's it. We have several of his tracts. I read them. Wife read them. Her folks read them, and then I sent them to my folks in Texas."

I know all tracts do not receive such a reception, but I do not suppose Bro. Briggs had any idea when he gave him those tracts they would go so far. We are never able to tell just how far they may go or what good they may, in time, do. They may bring forth fruit years from now. So we should not get discouraged if we see no immediate results. Remember God giveth the increase, and the work is his; he is able to care for it, but gives us the privilege and pleasure of assisting.

From this time on I shall endeavor to give something to all I meet, stranger or acquaintance. Of course we should use wisdom and seek more wisdom, and ask God to bless the effort. But I think we are always safe in giving, What We Believe. It is not giving meat instead of milk. I believe often those in branches neglect such opportunities; I know I did. I thought, If they want to hear they can find the church; but we that have been warned should warn our neighbors, and strive to interest them.

With love for all the Saints, I am,

Your sister, still striving to overcome,

PENSACOLA, Florida, November 17, 1908.

Editors Herald: All my labor in this field has been confined to Western Florida, and the southern part of Alabama and Mississippi; and I have found the same kind spirit in our brethren and sisters in the Sunny South as elsewhere. They are noted for their kind hospitality, and all my necessities have been supplied; so that I have not been compelled to walk the sandy roads, unless I so desired. But while walking in the deep, white sands, under the burning heat and glare of the midsummer sun, and reflecting its brilliancy and scorching heat from the glittering grains of sand beneath, I felt strongly impressed with the sentiments of the poet as I tried to sing:

"Through the furnace, through the heat,
There beneath the hammer's heat,
Through temptations manifold,
Comes my soul like burnished gold."

Whatever I may be required to pass through beneath the hammer's beat, I trust that I may retain the courage to serve the Lord. The poet seemed to realize that by living faithfully through all the trials and afflictions of life, his soul would be purified, and then his feet would stand safe within the goodly land. The nearer we live to him, the more faith, hope, charity, wisdom, knowledge, mercy, and patience we have in his service, until we become fully and completely resigned to his will, and feel contented to trust him amidst all the hardships of life. I have full confidence in the thought that the church will reach that degree of faith that was exercised by Enoch and the people of God in his day, which can be reached only by a complete observance of the divine rule. As it moves forward upon a higher plane of life, I pray God to assist me to move with it.

All mail will reach me in due time if addressed to 806 South Crysler Street, Independence, Missouri.

BELVIDERE, Illinois, November 13, 1908.

Editors Herald: I think the church papers are fine; and I do not see how any of the Saints can get along without them, being away from church privileges. Here are two families of Saints. One takes the Ensign and the other the HERALD, then when we go to prayer-meeting on Thursday evening we exchange papers, thereby receiving the benefit of both papers for the price of one. This will work all right for small families, where they are not overloaded with dollars.

We are isolated from church privileges, but still we are in the fight against sin, and the work is progressing in this neighborhood. Our hearts were made glad by a visit from Bro. and Sr. Henry Southwick, of Plano, Illinois, last Sunday, November 8. They attended Sunday-school at ten o'clock, then Bro. Southwick preached a very fine sermon in the afternoon, to a nice, attentive audience. The Spirit spoke through Bro. Southwick, telling us the Lord was pleased with our efforts, and inasmuch as we were faithful we should receive our desires.

Bro. Southwick had not preached a sermon for over a year, as he had quit the active field, feeling the weight of his seventy-two years, and thinking there were young men more able to carry on the work; but the Spirit is with him as of yore, and it did us younger Saints good to hear him give his testimony at Sunday night sacrament-meeting. May God grant him health and strength to make us many more such visits; and may we all have the abiding faith that will enable us to press forward in this glorious gospel work; and may God grant us a portion of the Spirit till we have conquered the last enemy, which is death, and are numbered with the redeemed in the celestial kingdom of God, is my prayer.

Your brother in the one faith,

WILLIAM DARMON.

Extracts from Letters.

J. B. Wildermuth, Osterdock, Iowa: "Have just closed a series of meetings in a prosperous farming community near Colesburg. Interest is good. Two members of our church, Bro. and Sr. Elledge, are the only Saints in the neighborhood. The Saints now have many friends. However, with two or three families, prejudice holds sway with its full strength. More than a year ago the writer preached at this place, and made many friends to the cause. Then last March, Bro. L. E. Hills followed up with a short series of meetings, and the people speak of him with friendly remembrance. We would like to say to the Saints of Eastern Iowa, We urge, so far as practicable, that they will begin early, and with that goal in view, make preparation, spiritual as well as temporal, to attend our reunion, at Moline, Illinois, held conjointly with Kewanee District. Notice of dates will be given later."

H. J. Davison: "At Birch Harbor, Maine, for a week or two. Health improving. Attended a fine district conference at Providence, Rhode Island, a few weeks ago; also a fine one at Mountainville, Maine, last Saturday and Sunday, Brn. Bullard, Farrell, and Buschlen, of the traveling ministry, present. Brighter days have come to that place, and still brighter ones hoped for. Had the pleasure of worshipping with the Stonington Saints twice en route. Will spend a few weeks in Maine, if health will permit, then return to Massachusetts District. Home address, 23 Wigglesworth Street, Winter Hill, Boston, Massachusetts. Boston Branch is in good condition, and making preparations for a good Sunday-school and Religio convention in a few days. Still in the faith."

"It is better to touch one chord than to pull many strings."

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

A NEW PASTOR; AN IMPORTANT DEBATE.

On the first Monday of this month we held our business-meeting, and elected our branch officers for the coming six months. Bro. W. E. LaRue (who it is expected will devote his whole time to the interests of the work), was elected presiding elder. An excellent spirit prevailed at the meeting. Bishop E. L. Kelley was with us, and stated the financial condition and needs of the central church building.

Bro. M. H. Bond served us quite well for the last six months; but on account of living in Independence, could only be with us at meeting. We trust that Bro. LaRue will be able to visit and mingle with the people in the vicinity of the church.

We have been treated to two excellent sermons lately from President Joseph Smith.

On the 11th of this month a discussion began at the Anti-organ Christian Church, at Twenty-sixth Street and Spruce Avenue, in the southeast part of the city. Elder S. W. L. Scott is representing our side, and W. G. Roberts for the Christian or Campbellites, or Church of God. Bro. Scott affirms that the Book of Mormon contains the revealed will of God, and is worthy of proper consideration by all people. Reverend W. G. Roberts affirms that the promise of the signs to follow the believer as recorded in Mark 16:17, 18 was limited to the apostles, and ceased at their death. Bro. Scott, the first night presented the grandest evidence from the Bible of the revealments in the Book of Mormon that I ever listened to.

Reverend Mr. Roberts failed to answer Bro. Scott's presentation; but stated that his opponent had not presented any affirmative argument, and there was nothing for him to answer; that he had not even defined his proposition. He stated that the Book of Mormon was a fraud, because it referred to Jesus Christ five hundred years before he was born, therefore was not worthy of consideration. Also that the Book of Mormon said that there were disputations among the people about baptism hundreds of years before Christian baptism was established, therefore unworthy of consideration. He then read from Doctrine and Covenants, section 113, the obituary of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, where the writer says that the Book of Mormon cost the best blood of the nineteenth century, and Joseph Smith sealed his testimony with his blood. He commented very strongly, and stated that the Mormons ignored the blood of Jesus Christ and salvation through him; but believed in "Joe Smith" and the Book of Mormon, and misquoted Bro. Scott and was called to order. The next evening Bro. Scott took the first half hour to show that Adam, Noah, and Moses all knew of Christ, and read many passages from the Bible in regard to Christ and baptism. Mr. Roberts was determined to know nothing but wicked old Joe Smith and his frauds and deception; and that he was Scott's God, and the Book of Mormon his Bible. Elder Scott had warned him of handling edged tools, they might cut the wrong way. It seemed not to have entered the mind of Mr. Roberts that the Bible worthies were upon record, that an opponent might charge that Adam turned his back upon God for his wife; that Noah was a drunkard, that Abraham mistreated his maid-servant, and then sent her away, and all he contributed to her was a loaf of bread and a bottle of water; that Moses killed an Egyptian; that David had Uriah killed to get his wife when he had a dozen or more; that Jesus was accused of being of illegitimate birth; that one of his disciples sold him for thirty dollars; and his chief man cursed, and swore that he did not know Jesus, etc., etc.

Elder W. H. Kelley, who was Bro. Scott's moderator, called him to order, and called upon Mr. Goldsby, the chairman, to decide. Judge R. W. Goldsby is one of the ablest and best lawyers in Kansas City. The writer has known him for twenty-seven years. He is mild in his deportment, strong in judgment, and unwavering in that which he believes to be just; and with the court's experience which he had, he was a model man for that position. The judge got up, stretched out his arm, pointed his finger, and said, "Mr. Roberts, I think you have transcended the bounds of propriety in this discussion. If the Bible were under discussion, and your methods were adopted, what do you think would become of the old book? Just think of the Psalms and the reputation of the author! I need not say more of the others of the Bible worthies. My decision is that the methods you have indulged in can not be indulged in any further. The question is not in regard to any man. (He then read the proposition): 'The Book of Mormon contains the revelation of God to man, and is worthy of consideration by all men.'"

That decision was a terrible blow to Mr. Roberts. I heard him once before in a discussion with Elder E. T. Atwell. Slander and abuse and villification of the dead, and misrepresentation of what his opponent says is his main effort; but the decision of the chairman was, like Samson's wife, cutting off his hair.

F. C. WARNKY.

2424 Wabash Avenue.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Last week was held the district conference of the Anti-Saloon League of the Central District, comprising eight states, Iowa being in the center of the district. There were present some of the national workers, among whom was the president, P. A. Baker. He advocates, and the conference of workers sustained him in this, that the Anti-Saloon League should form no alliance with any political party, but do their work in accord with their own principles, not placing too much stress on law enforcement, especially where it throws men in confinement, but placing more importance on legislation and working for the proper men to fill the offices, especially the officials that occupy as legislators, and judges.

This week the city has had the presence of two powerful workers in the suppression of the white-slave traffic, and the crimes that grow out of it. Doctor Sperry is lecturing on the social crimes resulting from the neglect of parents, in their not properly instructing their children while young as to their true nature, and shows the grave results that have followed ignorance in this direction. He lays equal stress upon the fact that too many ministers wink at the crimes of their members on the account of fearing to offend lest it effect contributions, and, without mincing words condemns the parlor dances and card-parties as the source of many of the crimes now being committed, especially in leading many women to the use of stimulants; and if the statistics given by the doctor are half true it should fill the heart of every minister with horror, and every father and mother with remorse. Then he gives evidence that most of the physicians are encouraging social crime, the use of tobacco and stimulants, rather than seeking through their profession to minimize these evils. Then we have had Clifford G. Roe to instruct the officials and business men and women of the city how to lessen the white-slave traffic. He says that "the solving of the social evil question and the white-slave traffic does not lie with the law-makers and the prosecuting attorneys, but is in the hands of the fathers and mothers." And further adds, "There will always be a social evil question and a white-slave traffic unless the mothers and fathers at home learn to bring up their children in the right way." May God bless the Daughters of Zion organization that they may wield a greater power in instructing the mothers and daughters in regard to the true responsibility of motherhood, and the sacredness of the marriage relationship. And while they are doing that, who will care for the boys that they may understand now to be true fathers, and how to prepare themselves to occupy the sacred position of a husband and father,—will we, fathers, and ministers of the everlasting gospel?

Then we have had the great apostle of anarchy, Miss Emma Goldman, who advocated just the opposite of what the other two had advocated. She advocating the free-love system, and condemning marriage, government, and law, representing that society would be in its highest social conditions if every one was let do as he pleases; and yet after advocating all this said that she favored the laboring men organizing—and I suppose that she certainly favors the anarchistic organization, which she represents. Thus a tangled web is seen.

This city is in the midst of one of the greatest efforts to purify its social conditions that I have ever witnessed, and even the ministers of the various churches are realizing responsibilities that almost overwhelm them. Some are reluctant to enter into the front ranks as reformers, especially when it means a cleaning out of their own organization.

The movement to take advantage of the initiative and referendum of the Des Moines Plan and petition for an ordinance making void all resolutions of consent to manufacture or sell liquors as a beverage that have been granted, is checked in its advancement for the present, but in time I believe that a decided stand will be taken. The Anti-Saloon League does not intend to lessen their efforts to close the saloons of the city and state, and we are happy to say that the Saints are ready to favor with the influence they have any legitimate move to exterminate this curse, one of the greatest, if not the greatest that now exists, in our nation.

A short Thanksgiving program will be rendered a week from Sunday, and committees are busy preparing to have an excellent Christmas program. Excellent meetings of late, especially the social meetings, but little sickness, and but few who are not seeking to honor God in the branch. The branch officials are doing some excellent work in checking the progress of worldliness and evil that has sought the overthrow of a few.

J. F. MINTUN.

November 17, 1908.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

These are the days of pumpkin pie!—the days of thanksgiving.

We who perpetuate the memory of the thankful hearts of those who gathered their crops together, and sang, and gave thanks and prayed and made merry, because a broad, free land had bounteously opened its arms and welcomed them from their former condition of religious persecution, have as much for which to be thankful as did they. What they found, is as good to us as it was to them, for they left it good, and we have maintained and improved upon it. Their joy in the freedom they had found may have exceeded ours in what we have, and their gathering together and feasting and giving of thanks may have partaken somewhat more of the solemn than do ours, but that does not argue that we are not thankful for what we have. The day of pumpkin pie! and shall we make of it a day of rejoicing? Let us sing with a heart that "feels" "My country 'tis of thee," and fully rejoice in the liberty which permeates the air, and gives us peace and comfort. Listen! "A choice land above all other lands," "the land of Joseph," "there shall be no kings," "behold I will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder," "shall be a land of liberty unto the Gentiles."

How can we give time to such reveries without in turn overflowing with thanks to Him who has provided so splendidly for us?

The church work here is not losing, (and in the battle of life, that is not a bad report) but it is ever progressing slowly. Bro. Allen, our missionary, is doing a good work among the Saints, by making friends, and instructing by example. His clear elucidation of the word is making friends for the cause, of those who are investigating, as well as instructing the mind that wants to learn.

We must mention the presence of Bro. F. M. Cooper and wife in our midst for the past few days, and we have had some good sermons from Bro. Cooper. Those who have preached the gospel for years, bring to us this testimony, that its ways grow more inviting as the years serve to clear away the obstructions that too often becloud the ways of the young. Bro. James E. McKiernan has been in the city a few days, having brought his brother, Bro. Eber, of Ft. Madison, Iowa, to a hospital here for treatment. It is a very serious case of cancer, and the prayers of the Saints were besought in his behalf.

Would like to offer some report of the building, or church committee, but there is nothing in sight at present to offer. It seems that every proposition that was on foot a few weeks ago, and which looked favorable then, has now gone through, and we are back to the rocks again. But we are not going to stay.

Bro. and Sr. R. Bird, of Pittsburg, Kansas, earnestly desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of their son, Guy, who has been operated on three times for appendicitis, and must undergo another operation.

Died.

HARPER.—Sr. Sarah E. Harper, daughter of John and Eliza Harper, of Bigler's Grove, Iowa, was born September 1, 1858. Died November 4, 1908. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, September 26, 1881, remaining faithful to her covenant so long as she retained proper use of her mental powers; but her mind becoming clouded in after-years, it became necessary to send her to an asylum, where she died. She was buried at her home.

SMOLNY.—Paul Johann, son of Johann and Rosine Smolny, was born May 5, 1906, and died October 25, 1908, at Gross-Raeschen, Niederlausitz, Germany. The disease which caused death being cholera and inflammation of the lungs. Funeral-services were conducted by Alexander Kippe, at the parents' home, instead of at the churchyard, as is usual, because, according to the ruling of the pastor of the local Lutheran church, no other service than repeating the Lord's prayer could be permitted at the churchyard, because the boy had died unbaptized, and according to prejudice was therefore "heathen." Considerable interest was taken by outsiders, who behaved respectfully. Though the service at the yard was limited, the support of the Holy Spirit was felt.

BROWN.—Sr. Susan Brown, on October 24, 1908, at the home of her son-in-law, J. P. Huddleston, Deepwater, Missouri. The record of Sr. Brown's birth having been lost she counted only by memory, but thought she was over eighty-eight years of age. She was baptized about twenty-one years ago by Elder H. H. Robinson. She leaves to mourn, two daughters, three grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. Interment in the Knights of Pythias Cemetery.

MCDONALD.—Anna E. McDonald was born in Washington, Pennsylvania, June 15, 1839. Was married to Samuel McDonald. Of this union six children were born; five boys and one girl, three of the children dying in infancy. She was left a widow in 1895. She was baptized September 23, 1897, by Elder E. J. Goodenough, of the Latter Day Saint church, of which she was a faithful member till death, which occurred September 20, 1908. She leaves to mourn, one brother and three sons. Funeral-service was held in the Mount Zion church, Elder Samuel Stroh officiating. Buried in Mount Zion Cemetery.

KINNEY.—Edith Isabelle Stone, born May 23, 1852, at Munson, Ohio; a daughter of Hiram and Emily Stone. She was united in marriage with Walter Kinney, in Wisconsin, January 1, 1869. She accepted the gospel May 14, 1882, and lived a faithful Saint. She died October 26, 1908, near Cameron, Missouri, at her home. Funeral in charge of Elder J. S. Constance, sermon by T. T. Hinderks. She leaves husband and seven children, one of whom preceded her, at the age of four months. We are left to mourn, yet not without hope.

SANDFORD.—Mary Sandford died at Elgin, Illinois, September 4, 1908. She was born in Dutchess County, New York, in 1836. She lived a faithful member of the church; had been a member many years. Was beloved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves a husband, two sons, and several grandchildren to mourn. Funeral-sermon by Elder F. M. Cooper.

GRAYLESS.—Norton J. Grayless was born February 10, 1876, at Savanna, Illinois; was baptized May 17, 1899; and was ordained a priest December 1, 1901. He met death on the railroad for which he was working as a switchman, October 25. He leaves a wife, Sr. Minnie Grayless, and two children, a loving mother, and several brothers and sisters. Funeral was held in the Baptist church in Savanna, Illinois. Many friends were in attendance to pay their last respects to a loving friend and brother. Funeral-sermon by E. W. Voelpel, assisted by the Baptist minister.

NEWTON.—Hiram B. Newton was born in Binghampton, New York, July 2, 1845, and died at West Pullman, Illinois, October 13. He was buried from the "stone church," Plano, Illinois, October 18. Funeral-services in charge of Elder C. H. Burr, address by Elder F. M. Cooper. Bro. Newton united with the church a few years ago. He married Miss Jane Cook at Christmas, 1880. To this union were born three children. He leaves a faithful wife, two daughters, a son, a sister, and two brothers. He was a good man.

BUEL.—Orson Hyde Buel, of Lookingglass, Oregon, died October 13, at Los Angeles, California, from cancer. Funeral-services were held at his home in Lookingglass, sermon by W. A. Goodwin, of Portland, Oregon.

GARDNER.—John C. Gardner departed this life at St. Joseph, Missouri, on November 4, 1908, at 2.45 a. m. The end came suddenly. He was born at Plymouth, Massachusetts, November 9, 1832. His father died when he was 9 years of age, leaving his mother and 9 children; at this age he was by force of circumstances made to support himself and mother. In his young manhood he was for many years a resident of Hingham, Massachusetts, where he was married to Iantha Eldridge on January 3, 1867. To this union were born three children, Grace Louise, John Albert, and Amy Frances; the last one named died at the age of five. His wife, Iantha, died February 9, 1902. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Boston, Massachusetts, in 1874; baptized by Elder E. A. Webster, and ordained to the office of priest March 10, 1875. In 1878 he and family moved to St. Joseph, Missouri. He organized the first Sunday-school in the St. Joseph Branch, and served as the superintendent. Remained all his life a faithful and active member of the church. On August 10, 1904, he was married to Mary E. Eldridge, at St. Joseph, Missouri. Survived by the widow, one daughter, Mrs. D. J. Krahl, and one son, John A. Gardner, both of Independence, Missouri. Funeral-sermon by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by G. W. Best, at the church, November 6, at 2.30 p. m.

Resolution of Condolence and Sympathy.

As time keeps speeding us onward, we are again brought to the stern realization that one of our number, one whose face has ever been familiar in our district conferences, one who has served the district for many years, has filled out his more than three score years and ten with a record clean and successful, has finished his work and gone to his reward.

Bro. William Leeka parted this life July 7, 1908. He was in his seventy-ninth year. He has been a member of the church over sixty-seven years, an elder thirty-three years, and an high priest the last ten years of his life. Many years ago he was chosen Bishop's agent of the district, and continued in the office until his work was done. He was ordained a bishop August 26, 1900, and filled the office with credit to himself and to the work.

Aside from the office of bishop, our brother was ever found at his post of duty, guiding the work through waters both troubled and calm. He served many years as president of the Thurman Branch, till age demanded that he be relieved of part of his work. He served several years as secretary of our district, in the early days of its existence. His whole life was a busy one in the affairs of the world, but he never failed to do his part in the work of the church. He won and held the confidence of all who knew him, both Saints and those of the community. The most that we can say for him would be that he lived his religion consistently, did his life-work faithfully, and died with strong faith in the restored gospel.

Whereas, In the death of Bro. William Leeka, the church, and particularly the Fremont District, have lost one of its strong pillars, be it, Resolved, First, that we extend to all to whom he was near and dear, our sincere and most heartfelt sympathy in an irreparable loss of husband, father, and friend; and pray God to strengthen in them the assurance that the reward is certain for a life-work well done.

Second, that though his years were ripe and his work well done, we, with them, mourn our loss, though we do not mourn as those without hope. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Third, that we join in the expressions of sympathy, coming from the Sunday-school and Religio conventions, for the loss of our beloved young sister, Elda Badham.

Fourth, that copies of these resolutions be furnished the families and church publications, HERALD and Ensign.

It consists of six famous paintings, superbly reproduced in fourteen colors, aggregating one thousand square inches. The artist catches the glint of the sunbeams through orchard trees and makes them dance and gleam on canvas. But how can we paint in mere words the beauty of these six exquisite pictures? A handsomer premium was never offered by any magazine.

Probably no comment is necessary concerning the Christian Herald, "The magazine that fully satisfies," as only the best in literature and art is presented and every one of its fifty-two issues, the whole year around, sparkles with gems from cover to cover. The Christian Herald contains twelve hundred large pages and one thousand illustrations yearly—as much as any four one dollar magazines. The subscription price is one dollar and fifty cents per year, but every new subscriber who sends one dollar and fifty cents to the Christian Herald, 444 Bible House, New York, will receive the Christian Herald every week from date of order until January 1, 1910, and in addition the incomparable "Art Gallery De Luxe" free. A Man Who Gave His Life for Principle.

In the November American Magazine Ida M. Tarbell, writing the traction story of Chicago, says:

"Now all of this gave enormous encouragement to the large group in the town which believed that all public utilities should be handled directly by the people, to the Municipal Ownership League, the Referendum League, the Teachers' Federation, the labor organizations, to the radical teachers and preachers, like Louis Post, Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Raymond Robins. Most active in this group was Henry D. Lloyd, who in the summer of 1903, at the request of some of his Chicago friends, had taken up a study of the street-railway situation. The result was a vigorous pamphlet called the 'Chicago Traction Question,' in which Mr. Lloyd argued eloquently for immediate municipal ownership. The pamphlet finished, Mr. Lloyd then threw himself into active speech-making. He was not well, and night after night his friends pleaded with him to stay at home. But it was a cause to die for in Mr. Lloyd's opinion, and die for it he did. "Those last two meetings did it," he said on his death-bed, "but I would do it again." To those who had been laboring with him it was a martyrdom, and there came to some of them the deep experience of taking up a martyr's cause. I can not but feel that Henry Lloyd's tragic death gave an entirely new trend to the fight for municipal ownership in Chicago, making it a sacred cause to many who until then had viewed it merely as an alternative, a weapon, or an alluring theory."

Up to Date Meat Inspection.

The great meat-packing establishments have been held up to the world as examples of the highest development of specialized industry. They are the result of an evolution of years of gradual improvement. The federal meat-inspection service, in spite of its organization into a great business almost immediately following the passage of the law, to-day stands side by side with, and is as modern and up to date as the finely organized business that it supervises. The bureau furnishes a sufficient number of inspectors for the work, and they will work as fast as the improved appliances of the establishment permit or its needs demand. The Government will not require the proprietor to stop his work to send for the inspector or to wait for him to retire and make an elaborate report, a procedure common in the inspection systems of foreign countries. The American meat inspection is probably the model for the world. Its employees are capable and expert veterinarians, bacteriologists and chemists, and the regulations and organization are so stringent, and the transfer of inspectors and inspection of inspectors so frequent, that collusion or dishonesty is practically impossible. The consumer of meats which bear the stamp "U. S. Inspected and Passed" may have the very comfortable assurance that he is buying and eating products from healthy animals, prepared under clean and sanitary conditions.—From "The Government's inspection of meats," by Guy Elliott Mitchell, in the American Review of Reviews for November.

Indian Summer in Iowa.

The fire of autumn flames upon the hill
A coat of many colors; in the hush
The plaintive song of ring-dove and of thrush Breaks the deep sabbath-tide of nature still.
The golden aster by the wayside rill
Swings like the censer of an evening star,
And in the bending orchards near and far
The hum of bees sets all the air athrill.
Where spreads the harvest plain beneath the sun,
The fields of corn like lions lie asleep,
With manes of tawny splendor; by the calm,
For ever with majestic billows dun,
The waters of the broad Missouri sweep,
Soothing the earth with sound like a great psalm!
—Edward Wilbur Mason in National Magazine for November.

Of country-wide interest are the article by L. H. Bailey, director of the college of agriculture, Cornell University, and chairman of the commission on Country Life appointed by President Roosevelt, and the paper by John Gilmer Speed. Mr. Speed writes about horse-breeding, denouncing as "baneful" the supposition that the thoroughbred is useful in improving the breed of horses, and urging that the greater number of American horses should be bred by the average farmer. Professor Bailey has much to say—and he writes interestingly and with authority—of "College men as farm managers."

DUTY; OR WHAT LACK I YET?

AN APPEAL FROM THE PRESIDING BISHOP.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following communication comes from Bishop Kelley, dated at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, November 20. In order that it may not escape the notice of any of our readers, and that it may be duly considered before the closing of the year, we give it place in the editorial columns.]

With the approach of the adjusting month of the year, and the closing of the accounts that bring to us in the final settlement commendation or rebuke, Saints should not in the maze and push of business forget to stop and render due account to the Lord, who has both kept and borne with us in our labors and infirmities.

Approval of our work can only be had by our fulfilling in the same the law of Christ; and whatever is more or less than this gendereth evil. Righteousness is attained through a faithful obedience to his law, the truth; and sin by walking in our own ways, which vary from the law of Christ by reason of our manifest selfishness, which has oft prevented us from drawing holy and just conclusions.

In the accounting then, let us divest ourselves of any and every such spirit as this, and approach the task with the supreme desire to help in the work for which Christ died, and tolerate no thought that brings forward one excuse for a failure of the discharge of duty. The Lord can not be pleased with excuses for a failure to perform, much less when these excuses are born through a spirit of selfishness, and the absence of that love which reflects the bond of union between the true disciples.

Christ from the beginning assured his people that his yoke was easy, and his burden light; but, he urged every one to take it up. Without doing this we stand as the alien without the gates. Do not forget; the command calls for action on the part of every one, not just a few; and it will be a supremely happy day for the church, and every member, if, before the close of the present year, every one shall have manifested by his or her works that they are moving in the Lord's way. Let no one be found idle, sitting with the "foolish virgins."

Our heavenly Father has given to us life, homes, and stewardships; we are indebted to him for all.

Let him who would move and convince others, be first moved and convinced himself. Be true if you would be believed. Let a man but speak forth with genuine earnestness the thought, the emotion, the actual condition of his own heart; and other men, so strangely are we all knit together by the tie of sympathy, must and will give heed to him.—Carlyle.

He should then be honored in the life; his name and majesty should be glorified in our homes; and the stewardships should be used for the establishment of his church, or kingdom, and not for self-aggrandizement, or unprofitable works and pleasures. "Seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness, and all these [necessary] things shall be added."

As children under obligation and duty, our first desire and act should be in the acknowledgment and discharge of these bonds. Have we been industrious, just, and economical in our lives? Every one should be. Have we been blessed and then rendered to the Lord that which is his? Every one should. Have we abided in the law that requires that in "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them"? Every one should. We should not forget that it is not the hearers of the law only who are justified, but the doers of the law. If we have been blessed in our substance, "a tenth is the Lord's." Have we rendered to him that which is his own, or have we kept it? Whether much or little it mattereth not. The commandment is to render the account and stand blameless:

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase; so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.—Proverbs 3: 9, 10.

Woe be unto you, Pharisees! For ye tithe mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment, and the love of God; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 42.

For verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

In keeping with this instruction it may be properly said that he who is not faithful and wise here, rendering faithfully his account, will not be accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared of God. How many are standing outside of the rule of law? Christ can not deny his law and come over to our side; but we may put away self and selfish ways and go over to him.

The performance of duty is not accomplished simply in giving, whether much or little, in the interest of the Lord's work; but this giving must be done with the full purpose and desire of honoring and fulfilling the law of Christ. The thoughtless or accidental dropping of means into the treasury, or casting it abroad, no more fulfills the law than the indifferent or accidental plunging into the water fulfills the law of baptism. The apostle teaches, "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

Jesus directs: "But when thou doest alms, let it be unto thee as thy left hand not knowing what thy right hand doeth; that thine alms may be in secret; and thy Father who seeth in secret, himself shall reward thee openly."

We fulfill the law when we move rightly and with full purpose of heart. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Revelation 22: 14.

It is from such uplifting view as this that we write, urging a wise and considerate fulfillment of the law by every member of the body. "Not that I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." Working unitedly, every member reflecting the light of Christ and his work in the performance of full duty, we may accomplish much; but if neglectful or indifferent we will necessarily by such course fail of the triumph that awaits the doer of the word. Are there any who are willing to lose? If not, let them personally see that his or her work is performed. God will accomplish his work, but only those who are laborers with him will have part in the triumph; and do not forget that to labor with him we work within the rule of his law, not outside. Keeping within the bounds of the law in all things we may be perfect, as our Father in heaven is perfect; but outside of the law is out of Christ, and out of perfection and salvation.

The church to-day is in great need of funds to perform its work. It would not lack if all performed their respective duties as definitely set forth in the law. With a universal compliance there would be plenty and to spare. Whoever is lacking, or is neglectful in the discharge of duty, is a hindrance to Zion's welfare and not a help, a position in which no true disciple can afford to stand. All are urged then to consider at once this primary duty under the law of Christ, and each put himself in communication with the bishop, or bishop's agent of his district, or stake, or with the Presiding Bishop, and fulfill this part of the divine order that the Lord's work may prosper, and his name be honored by our good works. Let us all be wise, diligent, and faithful to the trust and opportunity afforded, and then we shall be worthy of the gospel triumph.

Hopefully in the faith,

JEW AS FARMERS.

In discussing the Zionist movement, an occasional critic is found among the American editors, who maintains that the plan will never work out, because the Jews will not till the soil. The fact that there are a number of flourishing agricultural colonies in Palestine and elsewhere, that are composed of Jews only, and that are making very satisfactory progress, might and might not affect the judgment of these critics. Perhaps a glance at history will show that the Jews, like every other race, would make the wilderness blossom like a rose, if they ever have the opportunity. They are intensely proud and patriotic. And from these motives alone, they would make Palestine the garden of Asia. And they will get it sooner or later. In all probability much sooner. They excel in everything they undertake, being untiring, shrewd, ambitious. No doubt they will make the best farmers in the world after they begin to farm. Agriculture has been turned from mere drudgery to one of the most fascinating of sciences, and the Jew always excelled in scientific work. No doubt he will make a farmer.

And why is he no farmer to-day? Because in the Old World the laws were all against him, and he was not allowed to own land, or even to work upon the soil. For many centuries he was restricted to certain districts of the cities, called the Ghettos, and he was permitted to do certain kinds of work and to attend to certain kinds of business only. And what has been bred into a race in the course of some eighteen hundred years of persecution that would have obliterated a less virile race, can not be again removed in a very brief period. But given a home of his own, a land that he can call his own, the Jew will undoubtedly excel there in agriculture as he does in almost everything else to which he has turned his attention.—Burlington Hawk-Eye, November 22.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder J. W. Rushton notes an omission in the report of the British Isles Mission conference and desires the following inserted: Western Wales District; president, J. G. Jenkins, Spider's Castle, Trebanog, Porth.

Eating in restaurants has driven many a man into matrimony; living in boarding-houses and hotels later has driven many a man out of matrimony.

One vital note in the music of life is the sense of possession. In marriage it transforms the lonely pronoun mine into the one of larger, sweeter meaning ours. The advent of new possessions responds to something deep in the human heart—the joy of united ownership, of building together for a larger future. This is what counts in the sacredness of making a home. It is this that makes the simple geranium in our window seem more precious than some one else's conservatory across the street. Home is the gathering together, under one roof, of all that is dearest to us. It can be made a paradise if love, honor, and unity be its atmosphere.—Delineator.

The Reverend Howland Hanson, pastor of the First Baptist Church, who attended the Baptist congress at Chicago last week, where the Free Baptists and the Disciples of Christ had been invited for discussion looking toward a merger of these three denominations, gave the results of the meeting yesterday morning.

As a result of this congress the union of the Free Baptists and the Baptists will be merged January 1 and will be practically one denomination.

The Free Baptists will bring over to the merged church 1,292 churches, 87,015 members, three academies, six colleges, two theological seminaries, and $142,799 of invested missionary funds. The disunion of these two denominations in 1870 was due to extreme Calvinism upon the part of the Free Baptists, says Doctor Hanson. Both sides have tempered their doctrines and are to be consummated on equal terms.

As to the union of the Baptist churches with the Disciples of Christ, Doctor Hanson is not so hopeful for the near future because of more marked differences in doctrinal beliefs.—Des Moines Register and Leader, November 16.

"Whatever women themselves may think, the most of us men do not want women made our equals. We would rather try to be theirs."—Selected.

At a recent meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association in Des Moines, Doctor Lyman B. Sperry, of Oberlin, Ohio, said that if he could, he would wipe out three institutions—first the saloon, then the drug-store, and finally the candy-store; because through them men suffered more evil than through any other three things that might be named. He declared that the use of drugs for everything is a national curse, and that the rapidly growing habit of candy eating was a serious national evil. He declared that there was more of a stimulant in a stick of peppermint chewing-gum than in an entire cup of coffee, and that its use was detrimental to children.

We notice a fine literary effort in the SAINTS' HERALD reprinted from the Salt Lake Tribune, a "Gentile" paper published in Utah. It is in the form of a posthumous soliloquy by Joseph Smith and is entitled "Joseph Smith the Martyr in his own defense," and coming as it evidently does from the pen of a man of the world, it shows what overwhelming evidence there is that Joseph Smith was neither a polygamist nor the author of the bogus "revelation" on that subject. We deem it worthy of publication here and will immediately put the work of printing it in pamphlet form in hand.—Gospel Standard (Australia).

Elder Butterworth, looking very well indeed, arrived by the last Canadian boat. He made the most of his American visit and comes back to us with much rich information gained in his quiet, characteristic way, and his value to the mission will be enhanced by his varied experiences.—Gospel Standard (Australia), October 1.

The American Anti-Saloon League will inaugurate a pledge signing movement early next year throughout the United States. This will revive a former practice among the temperance societies a number of years ago to secure signers to a total abstinence pledge, especially among the children. Doctor Russell, at present superintendent of the league work in New York, will have charge of this pledge signing movement. To carry on the work successfully and economically the American League will have a printing establishment in connection with its national headquarters.

This announcement was made yesterday afternoon to the central district association by the national superintendent, P. A. Baker, of Columbus, and came as a surprise. The country will be flooded with pledge cards and every effort will be made to make this a simultaneous and national affair. This movement will be made a side issue of the American Anti-Saloon League work.—Register and Leader.

Have you anything new in the way of suggestion for a church society composed of young people of moderate means as to how they shall secure sufficient money to carry on their work? We don't like usual ways, fairs, teas, etc.

Nothing new. The grand old way is to tithe one's means, no matter how moderate they may be, and set apart a portion of the tithe for each object that has legitimate claims upon it. A careful adherence to this rule by all Christians would be almost certain to meet all needs.—Christian Endeavor World.

The Journal is in receipt of a letter from C. R. Riley, the well known Decatur lumber dealer, in which he states that about fifteen minutes to six on the morning of last Thursday he felt a distinct tremble of the earth that rattled the dishes in his home and was noticeable to other members of his family.

In his letter Mr. Riley also says that H. C. Watson reports that the cement floor in the cellar at his home had suddenly become cracked and can find no cause unless it be the shock of the earth trembling in that vicinity as noticed by Mr. Riley. The cellar was always very dry and the cement would not crack under ordinary circumstances is their opinion. Mr. Riley believes that it was a slight earthquake shock.—Decatur County Journal, [Iowa] November 19.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Thanksgiving services were held in the church Thursday forenoon. Elder J. W. Wight read the Thanksgiving proclamations issued by President Roosevelt and Governor Cummins, and Elder J. R. Lambert delivered the address. Reverend Pittinger, local pastor of the Methodist church, pronounced the benediction,—the opening prayer being by Elder Heman C. Smith.

The second number of the Graceland College lecture course was given Tuesday evening by the Lyceum Stars. The attendance was good and merited a better entertainment than was given.

Work on the new dormitory at Graceland College is progressing. The Boosters Club, which includes most of the young men in attendance, has been donating hard manual labor towards its construction.

The Decatur County Historical Society met in Leon Saturday. The attendance was rather small, Lamoni furnishing the majority of those present. A new constitution and by-laws were adopted and officers were elected. Mr. G. P. Arnold is president of the society; O. E. Hull, editor of the Leon Reporter, is vice-president; Emaline Malette, Stephen Varga, and Judge Harvey are members of the board of directors. Of our church members elected we note Heman C. Smith, secretary; R. S. Salyards, treasurer; Duncan Campbell, historian; and J. A. Gunsolley on the board of directors. The three brethren first named also form a part of the board of directors.

At the Sunday prayer-service recently President John Smith gave some good advice regarding deportment in the prayer-meeting. He declared that the prayer-service was not the place for criticism or faultfinding. If faults exist they should be pointed out and their adjustment sought at the proper time and place.

Since our last report Elders Columbus Scott, Joshua Hackett, David Anderson, and Bishop William Anderson have occupied the pulpit in the Saints' Church at Sunday services.

Talent develops in solitude, character in society.—Goethe.

The Straight Road

THE STRAIGHT GATE.

This gate, and this gate only, opens to eternal life and immortal bliss. That being true, and acknowledged so by all professed Christians in some form or other, why not make a careful examination of the cardinal features that designate this gate? The apostle said, "Examine" yourselves and see if you are in the faith,—or have entered the gate.

It is evident to every thinking person that no gate could exist unless there were some marks distinguishing it. The Christ came as the leader, and said, "Come, follow me," and lifted the principle of faith as one of its cardinal characteristics to attract the attention of the people, and associated repentance with it as a secondary factor. When approached by the learned student he said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3:5. Here we have two very cardinal characteristics that designate the gate presented by him who said, "I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting."

The law regarding the birth of the water is evidently God's word, and being such, "shall not return to him void," neither till it has accomplished the work whereunto it was sent. And as it is a fact known to all, that but few of the human race are nominally Christian, then this cardinal factor must be observed and retained till every soul is saved, or at least has the opportunity of salvation. And as long as some who claim to represent Christ will affirm that baptism—birth of the water—is not essential, in the face of what Jesus said, we shall find ourselves divided in thought and act. Yet his "word endureth for ever," and "man shall live by every word." Why not then linger around these points till we have thoroughly digested them, and stand united upon the plain statement of Jesus our leader?

Straight—this word would signify a specific aperture, designated by its own characteristic. Then they parley over a non-essential, when our leader says, "Follow me," and tells us what we must do to be saved?

What my parents did or believed is no excuse for me to neglect obedience to water baptism, or the laying on of hands. It is my duty to make myself approved of God, and this can only be accomplished by following the Christ. "As I have kept my Father's commandments, so ye keep mine," is just as applicable to us in the present age as to the people to whom it was said. Jesus said, "Straight is the gate and narrow is the way," the gate being the aperture of entrance, as it is said the "shepherd entereth by the door (gate) into the sheepfold" (church). The gate could not be straight unless there were, as before stated, something different designating it from other gates or conditions. This gate, God, the eternal one, set for man to enter and find life, and how many I have heard say, "Too straight for me. I can go to heaven without baptism. My good father and mother went to heaven; I know they did." Jesus said, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

Reader, can you and I afford to take our chances against such plain statements while we are here in this life? Paul said (Romans 6), "buried with Christ," which corresponds with the statement of Jesus, "born of water." Again Paul said, "Save the church by washing of water by the word." If these statements are true, then we can not be saved unless we are buried with Jesus in the waters of baptism.

Reader, I plead with you to think on this subject prayerfully. Do not take any chance, for this matter is fraught with eternal consequence. There is but one gate into God's church, and to become a member of his family we must enter by that gate. "He that climbeth up any other way" is the same as a "thief and a robber." It is well to look for those characteristics which God—not man—has set.

A. H. PARSONS.

Original Articles

ON THE SIDE OF TRUTH.

About two months ago I received a communication from a Brighamite elder, and inclosed are a few extracts taken from my reply. I have arranged them under subject-heads:

SUCCESSION TO THE PRESIDENCY.

I wish to note a peculiar statement you have made on page 2 of your communication, wherein you say, "Joseph, Brigham, and, in fact, all the leaders who have legally ascended to the First Presidency." It sounds very peculiar indeed to me to hear Brigham Young's name classed alongside of Joseph the Martyr's, as being among the leaders who had legally ascended to the Presidency. If Joseph the Martyr's ordination to be the president of the church, January 25, 1832, (see Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 624,) was a legal ascendancy to the presidency, then what should Brigham's non-ordination be considered? The president must be called of God and ordained. (See Utah edition of Doctrine and Covenants 20:67; 102:9; 43:7.) Then read in this connection Doctrine and Covenants 28:12: "Neither shall anything be appointed unto any of this church contrary to the church covenants." Brigham Young said, Millennial Star, volume 25, page 995, that the church was as sheep without a shepherd. "You must not appoint a man at your head. If you should, the Twelve must ordain him. You can not take any man and put him at your head, [How about the Council Bluffs conference in 1847?] you would scatter the saints to the four winds and sever the priesthood." This proved true. They appointed a man at their head; and in following him into corrupt paths undoubtedly caused their priesthood to be severed.

Brigham Young also said, same page: "No man can stand at your head except God reveals it from the heavens." And yet we find him laying no claims to a revelation in this matter, whatever; but we do find an emphatic denial of ordination to that office, wherein he says: "Who ordained me to be first president of this church on earth? I answer, It is the choice of this people and that is sufficient." Why was it not sufficient in Joseph the Martyr's case? Do the above facts represent a legal ascendancy to the presidency? No, not to an unbiased person. Inasmuch as the office of the First Presidency is separate and distinct from the office of the Twelve, why should not there be a separate and distinct ordination required? The law is very emphatic upon this subject. Doctrine and Covenants 107:22 and 102:10 declare positively that their counselors should be appointed and ordained after the same manner as the presidents themselves. Now why were not Brigham's counselors so appointed and ordained, and by virtue of what fact were they entitled to the holding of said office without being so appointed and ordained, as were F. G. Williams and Sidney Rigdon made counselors to Joseph the Martyr? (See Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 788.) Why has there not been an ordained president or counselor in your church since the death of Joseph the Martyr? You can not say, as for president, it has fallen upon every one as it did upon Brigham Young; for Joseph F. Smith in the Smoot case testifies that he was a counselor to the first president just before being made president. Was this a legal ascendancy to the presidency? If so, what about the established precedent that the president of the Quorum of Twelve should succeed the deceased president?

Let me give you an instance where I believe that God gave the key that should unlock for ever the question as to who was to lead the church after the death of the Martyr.

EMMA, THE ELECT LADY—WAS SHE FAITHFUL?

In Doctrine and Covenants 25:3: "Behold, thy sins are forgiven thee, and thou [Emma] art an elect lady, whom I have called." Deseret News of January 5, 1883, says, "There are to be false prophets and false Christs in the latter days—and even the very elect are almost in danger of being led astray." Christ says, "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect."—Matthew 24:24. Paul says, "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect?"—Romans 8:33.

In the above we find God calling Emma, "the elect"; in other words, one who was not to be deceived by false prophets. (See Matthew 24:24; Deseret News January 5, 1883.) We find her refusing to follow Brigham Young west, although many of her friends plead with her to do so. She rejected Brigham Young as being the prophet to succeed her husband. Keep in mind the "key," which is the fact that the elect were not to be deceived. "But," says one, "she was not faithful." I believe I can prove in two ways that she was faithful; and, if I can do so, then you must concede that she did not err in not following Brigham westward, but, on the other hand, did right in accepting as the proper one to lead the church, her son, to whom God so revealed himself.

In Doctrine and Covenants 25:2, we find these words given to Emma: "A revelation I give unto you concerning my will, and if thou art faithful and walk in the paths of virtue before me, I will preserve thy life, and thou shalt receive an inheritance in Zion." The above infers that if she was not faithful her life would not be preserved. Her life was preserved, and she not only lived to an age of over three score and fifteen years, but she received her inheritance in Zion. According to this, she must have lived faithful.

Again we read in Doctrine and Covenants 42:56: "Thou shalt ask, and my Scriptures shall be given as I have appointed, and they shall be preserved in safety." We find that the Scriptures (manuscript of Inspired Translation) herein referred to, for twenty-three years after the death of Joseph the Martyr, remained in the hands of Emma, the elect, for safe keeping. Do you believe that God would preserve it through the hands of an apostate, or was it not more likely that he would preserve it through one of his faithful elect?

This manuscript was then turned over to the Reorganized Church in 1867, seven years after Emma had become identified with it, in whose hands it has been preserved in safety to the present day. So the Lord recognizes Emma the elect and the Reorganized Church as places of safe keeping, as the promise was that they would be preserved.

Had God recognized the Utah church, and Brigham Young as the one in true line of succession, this manuscript would to-day undoubtedly be found in the archives of said church, and Brigham Young would most apt have had something else to keep under patent lock in place of a deceptive revelation.

WAS JOSEPH THE MARTYR A POLYGAMIST?

You declare my Times and Seasons citation, wherein Joseph, on February 1, 1844, declared polygamy as false and corrupt, as a partially hidden claim. Why should you so call it, when I gave you volume and page? I know all my citations to be correct, and they are taken from the first printed issues of the early church periodicals, and are not taken from any reprints, but are from the original. The fact of the matter regarding the young elders of your church, as well as yourself undoubtedly, is that you and they have been kept in ignorance regarding the early history of the church as written in early church records, and have been influenced to believe differently by reading books referring to historical matters written by polygamists, or those in sympathy with them. It can not be proved from any church history or church periodical published in 1844, or theretofore, that Joseph Smith was a polygamist; but everything goes to show he disapproved of it; and if it could be proved that he was a polygamist, it would only be proof that he was a hypocrite, a law-breaker, and a criminal. A hypocrite for living secretly in doctrines he openly condemned, a law-breaker for breaking the State laws of Illinois, which prohibited polygamy when Joseph lived in said State, and a criminal, for Doctrine and Covenants, which he held up as a law-book to the church, condemns it as a crime in original marriage covenant, as well as Book of Mormon, second chapter of Jacob.

You will say that there are so many women who testify to the fact that they were married to Joseph Smith that it must be true. The testimonies of a great many of these women state that they were married to him prior to July 12, 1843, the date the purported revelation is claimed to have been received. This revelation, verse 3, shows clearly that Joseph had not entered into polygamy, wherein it says, "Therefore, prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which I am about to give unto you; for all those who have this law revealed unto them must obey the same." Would the Lord have told Joseph to receive and obey that which he had already entered into? Now which do you prefer to believe, the stories of the women, or the reading of the polygamous document? This reminds me of two more contradictions upon this subject that should appeal to you. Brigham Young says that Adam was a polygamist (see page 50, volume 1, Journal of Discourses), while Orson Pratt in Pratt-Newman Debate, page 19, a booklet published by the church, says that Adam was a monogamist. Again we find Orson Pratt, same book, page 13, declaring that Isaac was a monogamist, while the polygamous revelation, verse 1, declares him a polygamist. Erroneous positions often required contrast argument for their support.

Joseph's last statement on his way to Carthage jail, to a friend, was, "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter but I am as calm as a summer's morning. I have a conscience void of offense toward God and toward all men. I shall die innocent."—Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 585. Polygamy is considered a crime, and so called by the Book of Mormon (see Jacob 2: 6); by the second edition of Book of Doctrine and Covenants, printed by John Taylor, 1844, section 109, in original marriage covenant; Millennial Star, editorial, volume 4, page 144, January, 1844; Times and Seasons, volume 4, page 153, February, 1844; by Illinois state laws, and laws of the land. If Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy according to Utah church, does not the above brand him a criminal? Can a man living in crimes die innocent? Do you believe his parting words were true, and was he not innocent of the charges of crime with which you and your brethren charge him?

THE BOOK OF MORMON ON POLYGAMY.

The next thing of note in your letter is the statement that if you desired to substantiate polygamy, you would do so with the Doctrine and Covenants and Bible. Why do you discard the Book of Mormon in the consideration of this subject? There is some very valuable information given in this book upon this subject. 1 Nephi 5: 3, Mosiah 1: 6 and 9: 25, and Book of Nephi 9: 1 show that families consisted of but one wife. Jacob 1: 4 and 2: 6, 9 show an emphatic disapproval of polygamy, and that David and Solomon lost favor with God through it. Mosiah 7: 1 shows that Noah was an evil man, and was so considered on account of his connection with polygamy. Ether 4: 5 shows that Riplakish fell from grace on account of his having many wives. (Citations are from Lamoni edition of Book of Mormon.) Why pass by all these noteworthy condemnations of polygamy?

DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS ON POLYGAMY?

There is nothing at all in the Doctrine and Covenants, as printed in Joseph the Martyr's time, and in the Doctrine and Covenants as the Reorganized Church of to-day has it, favoring polygamy; but everything touching upon it denounces it. Section 42, your book and ours, says plainly, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else." The Doctrine and Covenants, as printed by John Taylor in 1844, at Nauvoo, Illinois, section 109, contains the following: "Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication, and polygamy: we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife," etc. This can still be found in the Reorganized Church edition of Doctrine and Covenants, but why can it not be found in yours? and by whose authority was it taken out? Who is the one to be charged with taking this section from a church law-book without authority? Let him answer before God.

POLYGAMY DENOUNCED BY LEADING MEN OF EARLY CHURCH.

It may be new to many that Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, John Taylor, Hyrum Smith, E. M. Webb, Thomas Smith, and Wilford Woodruff emphatically denounced polygamy in the official periodicals of early church nearabout the time of Joseph's martyrdom. Five of these turned apostate, and went into polygamy after following Brigham Young west. When were they right, when they took the position of the early church and with Joseph the Martyr denounced the doctrine, or when they followed Brigham Young west, and with him, in defiance of the position of the early church and their own former declarations, declared it a grand principle of exaltation? John Taylor denounced polygamy in France in 1850, and used the Doctrine and Covenants to prove that the church did not believe in it. See Orson Pratt's works in back of book, page 8.

Why did he not take same position in 1852, when the polygamous revelation was presented, and use Doctrine and Covenants to prove the revelation false? The polygamous revelation was nothing but a burlesque as compared with other revelations given upon the subject of marriage. Polygamy turns the hearts of men away from God. All biblical histories as well as the Bible itself in referring to the days of Noah, show that polygamy was prevalent in those days; and we read that on account of the hard-heartedness of the people they hearkened not unto the voice of Noah. All the polygamists were drowned in the flood (no righteous seed to be found among them), while none save only the monogamists were protected and saved from the mighty waters. Christ warns latter-day polygamists in Matthew 24: 37, wherein he says, "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." So latter-day polygamists should beware, for they are as likely to perish in the consuming fire as the antediluvian polygamists did in the flood; for God has not changed.

NEPHITE APOSTLES(?)

The idea that there was a quorum of twelve apostles in the Nephite church that was organized on this continent by the Savior after his crucifixion at Jerusalem, seems to have gotten a rather firm hold on the minds of some. But it is evident from the very arguments in its favor, that it is based upon a pure assumption; and any proposition that has assumption as its foundation and main support is certainly illogical.

It has been argued that as Christ established his church among the Nephites, there must of necessity have been apostles, for his church was founded upon apostles. In Ephesians 4: 4, we read that "there is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling." Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28: "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers," etc. This is the organization of that "body" or church; but because a part of that church is found upon another continent without communication with any of the rest of that "body," but the head (Christ), it is poor argument to urge that another body, a duplicate of the first, must be created. "There is one body," not two. "Christ is the head of the church," as "the husband is the head of the wife." (Ephesians 5: 23.) The wife has a head of her own—"first apostles," etc. It was not another "wife" or "body of Christ" which was upon this continent; but a part of the one body. Christ is not a polygamist.

The church is "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord." Is it necessary that a dormer window in the roof shall be able to see and touch the foundation in order that the building may be complete? Nor is it necessary that the part of the building on this continent should be in communication with the apostles. The divine architect did not lay two foundations upon which to erect his building. They were in communication with the "head," "the husband," and as a part of the body were nourished by revelation. This ought to be an answer to the question, "If Christ chose twelve apostles in the Eastern Continent, why not on the Western?"

It is assumed that because Jesus called twelve disciples and gave them authority to baptize, lay on hands, and minister to the people, that they must necessarily be a quorum of twelve apostles. And one writer holds that this commission is just the same as that that Jesus gave the apostles at Jerusalem. But is it? 3 Nephi 5: 8: "I give unto you power that ye shall baptize this people." Mark 16: 15: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Does the reader see any difference? The mission of the Nephites was to "this people." Nor do we find that they were to go to any other. We do not find that they were given any higher authority or commission than any elder or presiding high priest of the Melchisedec priesthood. Jesus did not say to them, as he did to his apostles at Jerusalem, and those of the latter-day, "Unto you I give the keys of the kingdom"; "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations," etc. But, "Ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people."—3 Nephi 7: 1. The same commission that would be given unto the high council of a stake.

Nowhere are the twelve Nephite disciples called apostles. The quotation which has been given to prove that they were, only proves the reverse. Mormon 4: 7 is used, and if it is carefully read, the reader will find that Moroni was speaking of the apostles at Jerusalem, and to the people among whom the Book of Mormon was to come forth. Verse 4 shows that it was by revelation that he knew of what he wrote.

That the term disciple, as applied to the twelve Nephites, was used advisedly by the writers of the Book of Mormon, is proved by the following: "And the angel spake unto me saying, Behold the twelve disciples of the Lamb who are chosen to minister unto thy seed." "And he said unto me, Thou remembereth the twelve apostles of the Lamb? Behold they are they who shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel. Wherefore, the twelve ministers of thy seed shall be judged of them. For ye are of the house of Israel; and these twelve ministers whom thou beholdest shall judge thy seed." The twelve Nephites were called disciples, and the twelve at Jerusalem apostles. "But," some one says, "they meant apostles when they said disciples." Any proposition that is based upon the assumption that the angel and Jesus Christ did not mean what they said, is not only false, but absurd. An apostle must be a disciple or follower of Christ; but a disciple is not necessarily an apostle. "And when it was day, he called unto him his disciples: and of them he chose twelve, whom also he named apostles."—Luke 6: 13. "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15: 16.

Much more evidence that they are not a quorum of twelve apostles can be produced; but that given ought to convince any candid mind. We agree with the writer who said, "We should be careful in taking a position," for if a little more care and study had been exercised in regard to this matter, the position that the twelve Nephite disciples were a quorum of twelve apostles would not have been paraded before the eyes of our enemies to hamper the defenders of the truth.

The twelve Nephites undoubtedly had oversight of the work of God upon this continent; but it was as a stake high council and not as apostles. In Doctrine and Covenants 104:14, we read, "The standing high councils, at the stakes of Zion, form a quorum equal in authority, in the affairs of the church, in all their decisions, to the quorum of the presidency or to the traveling high council [apostles]." A stake is an independent organization in itself, capable of carrying on all the work of the church within the bounds of its territory; yet it is a part of the one body. The work of the twelve Nephite disciples was limited to their own people; and so is that of a stake high council limited to its stake.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.—PART I.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER J. F. MINTUN.

ELDER J. F. MINTUN.

I first saw the light of day July 9, 1855, near the little town of Magnolia, Harrison County, Iowa, in a pioneer home with but few comforts and no luxuries; and grew up to manhood with but few advantages.

My father at one time in my early childhood, with my mother, became a member of the Congregational Church at Magnolia, Iowa, but because of some act considered inconsistent in a member of that church, he was severed from membership, from which time I remember him as a man of the world, worldly, interested in political matters in the county, and frequenting the ball-room and saloon, although I never saw him under the influence of liquor to any great extent, except a few times; but because of frequenting such places, and forming such associations he lost all his property, and died in poverty, although he did not frequent the saloon or the ballroom for several years before he died. I am not apprised that his father, who died while he was quite young, was ever associated with any religious organization; but through my grandmother I received information that he had an unconquerable temper, which disposition was largely inherited by my father. Father's mother was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which faith she died; but like so many others of that faith to-day knew so little of the Articles of Faith of that church that when she would hear some of the sermons of Elder W. W. Blair on the doctrines of the Latter Day Saints would say, "I heard an excellent Methodist sermon to day."

My father early became associated with members of the Latter Day Saint Church while living at Kaneshville, now Council Bluffs, before moving to Harrison County, Iowa, and when he moved into this county was associated with those who had formerly been members of that church, but becoming disgusted with the actions of Brigham Young and some of the leading ministers of the church refused to follow them any farther west and settled in Western Iowa. In this county he remained during life and was associated with members of the Reorganized Church from the time it was first advocated in that part of the country. With the faith he always seemed favorable, or at least more favorable to it than to any other religious theory, yet because of the love of the world, and a proud spirit that could not humble itself to true repentance, together with seeing so much of unrighteousness practiced by some professing to be members of the church, he never united with them, although convinced that he should, and publicly asserting several times that he would before he died. Procrastination was the thief of all his time, as it is with many others at the present day who are convinced that the faith of the Saints should be obeyed by them. So far as I am informed, my father's progenitors were lovers of honesty, and despisers of hypocrites, and too easily swayed by the world.

My mother's parents were favorable to or members of the Congregational Church, and all of her sisters became, and are to-day, I believe, members of or believers in that church; but one brother became and is now a member of the Latter Day Saint Church. The entire family were honorable, upright people, and naturally religiously inclined, but somewhat of a quiet, seclusive disposition, and somewhat poetical in their nature. Her father was of a very cheerful disposition, but her mother was always looking on the dark side of life, and by this means making herself and those around her somewhat unhappy, and this disposition was but little changed by her obedience to the gospel,—in the faith of which she died.

The above will in a brief way show the history of those through whom the law of inheritance might give any coloring to my disposition, nature, and belief.

My early environments were as favorable for school and church privileges as any who lived in a pioneer country. I early became a scholar in the Congregational Sunday-school at Magnolia, to which place my parents moved when I was about two years of age. I remember my associations in that Sunday-school with pleasure, and with gratitude I remember the devotion of my first teacher, a Mrs. King, the pastor's wife, but remember that the instruction that the heathen were going to hell by great numbers because of the need of means to send preachers to them to inform them of Christ, by which means it was thought to encourage the liberal giving of pennies, was something that I could not even then believe.

My mother has told me that I began my education when but little past two years, when I had already become acquainted with all the letters of the alphabet; and I can remember that when I was but little past four years of age I began my regular school work in a log schoolhouse, having for one of my early schoolmates he who now is Elder T. W. Chatburn. Among others of my schoolmates and playmates is Doctor Newill Dwight Hillis, with many others who have become prominent in business and financial circles. I began and concluded my school life in Magnolia, although much of my time was spent in the schools of the country adjoining the town. It was while I was living near the town attending school in Raglan Township that I first heard the Latter Day Saints, and at which place my mother united with the church in the early 60's, when Bro. E. C. Briggs was preaching there.

Several grove-meetings were held in the grove near my father's house, and the elders always found a welcome there. This gave me the privilege to hear much of the faith through such representatives as Elders W. W. Blair, Hugh Lytle, S. W. Condit, J. C. Crabb, Daniel and Jehial Savage, and several others, most of whom have passed to their reward. But I took up with worldly pleasures, following the inclinations of my father, who at the early age of ten years took me to the ball-room and taught me how to dance, at which places I accompanied him for company from that time on through childhood. I always enjoyed hearing the preaching of the representatives of the Saints, but I did not allow religious influences to have too much effect, fearing that it would deprive me of some of my pleasures here. But while my father was throwing around me such worldly influences and taking me with him to ball-rooms and the saloon, my mother was using her influence in quite a different direction, by taking me to the prayer-meetings of the Saints for company, and as I remember it now, I rather delighted to go, in fact I enjoyed being with my father as well as my mother, and while my father did not enjoy going to the prayer-meetings, and my mother would not attend the dance, I was company for both. My father would not as a rule work on Sunday, but would take the family to the Saints' church where I heard many excellent sermons, but none seemed to remain with me as do the ones that I heard from Elder Charles Derry.

During my early boyhood I heard much of the preaching of the Seventh Day Adventists and became somewhat favorable for a while toward them, so much so that I kept one seventh day, as they teach it, but in spending the day in reading and further investigation I became convinced that they were wrong, and continued in pursuit of worldly pleasure. At about the age of twenty I became convinced that I was spending my time to the injury of my health, and that my influence was doing damage to the lives of some of my associates, they thinking there could not be any sin in attending the dance or else I would not attend,—and they would request me to show them what was done at the dance, and to teach them to dance, but as their parents were members of some of the churches represented there, and much opposed to the dance, and because I had seen the evils of the ball-room, and feared to bear the responsibility of influencing others into an association with these evils lest they should become affected to their downfall, I concluded that I would shun the places that I had before frequented, and spend my life in a more profitable way, hence I began to make an examination of the faiths of the churches of which I had come in contact, especially the Congregational, Methodist, Seventh Day Adventist, and Latter Day Saint, with the thought that some one of these churches was right, but I was not decided as to which one. I have previously referred to my favorable consideration of the Seventh Day Adventist faith at one time, and the favor with which I looked upon the preaching of the Latter Day Saints, but there was another church that because of early Sunday-school training, and because I had one aunt who was a member of that church who had always through correspondence shown much interest in my turning away from the world and becoming a child of God, I became interested in an investigation of this one, the Congregational, and because of the existence of a Methodist church being in the town, and many of my friends and some of my relatives being members of it, I also made an investigation of its faith. I wrote to the aunt above referred to and received a long letter and a book entitled Mormonism Unveiled, both of which I read carefully, but I found so many contradictions in it, and when compared with the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, from which the author claimed to quote, I saw so many misquotations, that I was led to conclude that it was best to make a closer investigation of the opposition, concluding that if this was the nature of the opposition to the faith of the Saints it was one evidence in their favor, and the more that I investigated the better satisfied I became that the faith of the Latter Day Saints could not be overthrown with truth and facts, or else the opposers would make use of that class of evidence in trying to overthrow it instead of falsehood and misrepresentation, and that their faith was in harmony with the teachings of the Scriptures.

During the time of this investigation I became united in marriage to my wife, Mary Elizabeth Knight, who was not affiliated with any church, but whose mother was a devoted member of the Methodist Church, and very much prejudiced against the Latter Day Saint faith, although a fast friend of my mother's, as she also was of several of the members of that church. On account of my mother being a member of the Latter Day Saint Church, my wife's mother, who was a great Bible reader, and would oftentimes engage in conversations upon Bible texts, would ask my opinion of the meaning of certain passages of scripture which she had been reading. Let me here mention the fact that she was an invalid, and went out from home but little, hence occupied much of her time reading and conversing on religious topics. When she would ask me my opinion, and I would give answer according to my understanding, she would make an attack upon my views with the idea that the views I expressed were in harmony with the teachings of Saints. She would become at times angered because she could not find scripture to support her opposition to the views that I expressed, and then she would not only attack the faith of the Saints in a general or wholesale way, but she would also attack the character of the members of the church, all of which led me to make as good a defense as I could with my limited knowledge and ability, and to study their faith more closely so that I could successfully defend myself, and my mother's faith, when she would make further attacks. This was the means of my finally and fully concluding that the faith of the Latter Day Saints was scripturally defensible, and that nothing in truth could be successfully said to overthrow this faith. With this conclusion, I would have brought to mind the thrill of joy that would at times come to me when I would be listening to the preaching of the representatives of this people, and the same experience when in attendance at the prayer-meetings years before, and especially when I would hear the members of the church speak or sing in tongues, as they called it, and give the interpretation.

On the morning of the 22d of July, 1877, after my marriage on April 1, of the same year, my wife and I were going from our home to my father's to accompany them to services at the Saints' church at Magnolia, we living out in the country about four miles, and my father about three miles, when I suggested to my wife what my convictions were, and that I believed that we should engage in religious work, and unite with the church, and inquired of her what she thought. She replied that I should feel free to do as I wished, but that she had not thought much about it, and was not prepared to decide. I then requested her to begin an investigation, and prayerfully think about the matter, and I would wait for a time, as I felt assured that she would in time conclude as I had. We attended the services that forenoon, when Elder Mark H. Forscutt preached one of his characteristic sermons, in which I was interested, but thought no more about being baptized at that time, although there had been baptismal services announced for that afternoon. At the close of the service I found my wife waiting for me at the door, and immediately suggested that we return home, get our clothes, and return in the afternoon and be baptized; and accordingly we were by Bro. Forscutt. At the confirmation it was said that I should be the means of bringing many into the church, and I felt in a visible way the Spirit of God resting upon me and the same thrill of joy that I had experienced before in a limited way when in attendance at the services, filling my soul, giving me confirmation of my acceptance with God, and I found when I opened the Bible and began to peruse its holy teachings that there was a meaning attached to it that I had not so fully realized before.

J. F. MINTUN.

(To be concluded.)

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.—PART 1.

We plead for a more holy church. We must sense a greater responsibility, a nobler reality to gain our Zion of latter days.

"Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name; worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness."—Psalm 29: 2.

This we intend to be a plea for greater perfection.

There is a recognized need for greater progress, deeper devotion, and a higher realization of the purposes of the gospel of Christ, before Zion shall put on her beautiful adornments and God receive her unto himself. If we are advancing to a better understanding of God and his law, with proportionate ratio should Christian practice embellish the lives of God's people. That it is perfectly reasonable to believe it within the realm of possibility to attain a condition wherein there will be entire freedom from sin, we wish gently to affirm. Not that our agency will be taken away, or the possibility to sin, yet one can become so enthused with the principles of righteousness that he will honor them in preference to all else. That righteousness, holiness, and perfection are closely related and are all contemplated in the gospel, no person can reasonably deny. In considering and endeavoring to attain its realization, it is folly to think of doing so outside of this perfect agency.

Perfection as God is perfect, so far as true character, honor, probity, mercy, love, wisdom, knowledge, truth, and justice are concerned, we do not think can be attained in our present condition; because that which is finite can not measure up to the standard of the infinite, for the reason of these hindering environments of the human by which he is circumscribed. While God is perfect in his condition, so can man be perfect in his. We can become proficient in these traits of character to as great a proportionate degree in our finite conception of matters as God is in his, considering his greatness and infinity; thus we can truly say, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5: 50, I. T. This, we readily see, applies not only to the future, but to the disciples then living.

It is reasoned by some: This rendition is wrong in view of what occurs in 1 John 1: 8, where it says: "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." If the context is carefully considered it is plainly seen that it is not the divine intent for man to always remain defiled, for "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." (See 7th verse.) It is always within the power of possibility for a man of God to sin, and very often we see it, yet we have the consoling advice given in the ninth and tenth verses: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us." We think some make the mistake of claiming this last verse indorses the idea of man's present and future condition being continually impregnated by sin because his past has been such. That all of an accountable age have sinned, no rational person could reasonably deny; but because of this fact does it stand to reason that the atoning blood of Christ applied by keeping the gospel law will not keep us free from sin in the future, and that it would be expected in the life of the saint? More properly should we say, "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin."—1 John 3: 6-9.

Again it is quoted, "For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not."—Ecclesiastes 7: 20. This does not reason that there never would be one, because at that sinful age there was not a just man. The same is also true of those mentioned in Psalm 14: 1-3. These texts refer to the unregenerate world. In these ages the principles of righteousness had but little effect on man. But why say they never would have? "For there is no man that sinneth not." Yes, and so it evidently was properly represented; but what injustice in the thought that it would always be so? That was a sinful age, and when Christ comes to earth again it also will be very sinful, for "wicked men and seducers shall wax worse and worse," and "nevertheless when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Yet, under such conditions we expect a Zionie purity to obtain. The little band of God's people will look small indeed at Christ's coming, in comparison to the great and sinful world of its multiplied millions.

It is evidently a fact that too many place too low a standard for attainment, and we see a correspondingly low percentage of righteousness on the whole. It is hardly probable that our average worthiness shall ascend until we elevate the standard to its proper position above the mere human instincts of carnal man. When a proper conception of the high and holy standard is had, one sees the plain road of attainment, and how possible it is to get there if we constantly advance. That it is within our jurisdiction of attainment is admitted. "Let us go on unto perfection."—Hebrews 6: 1. Why thus admonish if it could not be reached? Would Paul again have instructed, "Be perfect" (2 Corinthians 13: 11), if he thought they could not reach such a condition? Again, in writing to Timothy regarding the scriptures, he says, "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."—2 Timothy 3: 17. Are these idle words? Was perfection beyond their reach? Proper development then contemplates the coming "unto a perfect man" (Ephesians 4: 13). Why not, if a perfect law is the ruling agent of our lives? (See James 1: 25.) The law being perfect, of necessity the outcome of that, after proper application, is inevitably perfection; thus we reason, a perfect law perfectly obeyed will bring a perfect condition. In an inspirational mood the psalmist chronicled, "The law of the Lord [not the law of Moses] is perfect," and so we say to-day, that, having been derived from a divine, omnipotent being, of necessity it must partake of his attribute—perfection. These divine statutes indicate the way in which we should go. Law we only point to as the proper method ordained of God to be followed, not as an agent or doer in any sense. It is simply the way of a doer mapped out beforehand. By some the term law is made to mean an effective cause indicating it to be a party concerned that does something in the question of redemption. The law itself does nothing separately.

The great duty of man is to work in harmony with its direction and then amazing results are seen. Thus Christ's law never should be separate from the life of man, for man needs the direction of the law and the law needs man to be made effectual.

Says Paul, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (Romans 12: 2), and this is the voluntary surrender of sinful self to the transforming power of God, which requires the giving up of all sin. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new. And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation. . . . We pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God."—2 Corinthians 5: 17-20. That which is spiritual and pure can never be reconciled to the debauchery and sin of human kind. How can one be reconciled to God when His attributes are purity, holiness, and perfection, and ours are corrupted by sin and degradation? Does not common sense teach us that proper reconciliation means the blending of two natures that have become alike. For instance, a discord does not blend with the harmonies of true music. Harmony prevails only when the false chord is eliminated. A mistake in a carpenter's work can never be made to harmonize with the plans, until the mistake is rectified. Nothing would make that mistake blend. It must be entirely eliminated. So, also, a misapplied rule in mathematics will never be agreeable to the science. Reconciliation prevails only when the mistake is detected. So on the plane of religious warfare, spiritual goodness, purity, and holiness are not capable of blending with evil, depravity, and wickedness. To be at one with God requires the possession of similar characteristics of the divine nature. Love, goodness, holiness, compassion, gentleness, innocence, mercy, kindness, purity, and justice, when found manifested in the lives of men, are traits of character that are at one with God. When perfect reconciliation or atonement is made, there must be perfection on our part to be harmonious to the perfection on the other. Therefore we say, He is most saved who most closely follows the commands of Jesus Christ and manifests a goodly deportment and keeps himself "unspotted from the world."

If "a good tree can not bring forth evil fruit neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit" (Matthew 7: 18), by what reasoning and philosophy do we say it can yield both evil and good at the same time and be acceptable?

So practical and consistent should be the life of the Saint, that when one comes into a community, he will be recognized as a man of honest integrity, who is daily endeavoring to enforce the golden rule and to make conditions better. His nature will be revealed in his acts. When one has these ennobling qualities of character within and they continue there his nature in works is bound to exhibit a deportment of a worthy and high standard. The two are inseparable and can no more exist apart than motion could exist apart from a moving vehicle. A life apart from usefulness in such a condition would be an impossibility; for such actions are the natural outcroppings of a true Christian character. Character is the product grown from the soil of the soul.

True, Paul says while under the law, "When I would do good, evil is present with me."—Romans 7: 21. Every thoughtful person realizes Paul's statement to be true. There is always the chance to sin. Here are represented the two opportunities, the two roads to choose from. But the wise man is like Paul of old who will "delight in the law of God after the inward man."

One thing is clearly evident, that a higher degree of righteousness than now obtains must be realized before we can enjoy the promised blessings of the Zion redeemed. The "perfect law of liberty" must not only be believed and understood, but it must come into the heart and rule there. By thus practicing the truth we say is one way at least to induce the people to heed the call, "Repent ye for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

From God's word it is clearly apparent that "Noah was a just man, and perfect in his generation; and he walked with God. And also his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth." (Genesis 8: 16, I. T.) If such a condition once obtained, what is to hinder history repeating itself in latter days? Again it is said, "And Enoch and all his people walked with God, and he dwelt in the midst of Zion." (Genesis 7: 77, I. T.) Here is a representation of a Zion condition in which the participants were perfect and walked with God and were worthy of translation. "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness; and there was no poor among them."—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2. The pressing need with us to-day is to have a repetition of the conditions of that period. To do so means the elimination of all sin. "For this is Zion, the pure in heart."—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

Can the brotherhood be perfect and at the same time only be partially pure, and there is sin still manifested? Some have thought there is justification for their sin and continued practice, from the following: "But if any man sin and repent, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."—1 John 2: 1. This text needs no explanation; it is self-evident. If a brother transgresses the law and feels sorry and truly repents (repentance means to forsake sin) of his action, and if he has not sinned against the Holy Ghost, he can have an advocate with the Father, through Jesus Christ. But another phase of the matter we should not forget; if we endeavor to shield ourselves under the above text, and think to continue in sin, and as oft as we willfully do wrong we should get God's pardon, we are condemned; "For if we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins."—Hebrews 10: 26. It is thus very doubtful indeed if one has repented at all, if he turns right around and does the same thing again. At least such procedure creates the impression of the lack of sincerity and we are acting a contradiction. Is it not the better policy to dispose of the sin entirely? We feel confident one can not serve two masters at the same time and do acceptable homage to each. Pure religion is defined by James 1: 27 to be, "To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Does this justify being spotted and defiled to any degree by sin? The law contemplates the relegation of all sin entirely and the least spot is bound to mar the "fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."—Revelation 19: 8.

Conversion, we say, means a change from one condition to another—from a life of worldliness and wrong-doing to a life of righteousness. A consecration of self to the holy and just tenets of eternal law is positively required and to do that means to cast off the carnal and make the spiritual and divine in the ascendancy and live a life of deep and earnest devotion. There is really no middle ground advocated in the law; it always contemplates perfection. The high standard advocates the laying "aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us."—Hebrews 12: 1. Again, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12: 35, 36. What we need is a freedom from guilt. We plead for a more holy church. We must sense a greater responsibility, a nobler reality to gain our Zion of latter days. Not but what the brotherhood is acceptable to a great degree now; but we must make greater efforts in our strivings to make the church "a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish"—(Ephesians 5: 27), before the Lord will receive her unto himself. Surely the bridegroom can expect as great virtue and purity in his bride as he possesses. Would he (Christ) marry her under any other condition?

The church of to-day is likened to a school of preparation and it is not contemplated we will graduate the first day, week, month, or year. Correct, but while we are storing our minds with knowledge and wisdom even from the first week to the end of the school period, it is expected we shall make one hundred in deportment. We can do that from the time we are "babes in Christ" to the consummation of our life's work.

After all "works" is the only way of the vindication of a proper Christian character. Such works are only the revelation of the character within—a pure heart and a noble spirit. If we have not done so we should begin the work of the purification of our own mentality and see that therein is no pollution. Words many times are very easily forgotten, but a Christian character and a life's work of beneficent goodness embodied within that character are benedictions that bloom perennially to gladden earth and heaven.

The church of Jesus Christ must have the privilege of growth. While it may stand on middle ground to-day it is contemplated that on the morrow it shall stand forth having made full deliverance. The making of our manhood and our ultimate redemption costs the price of self-sacrifice and a constant advancement and devotion to the principles of right. The church has this conflict collectively to wage as well. It is the "Light of the world" against the gross darkness of the world.

Of General Interest

A CHRISTIAN'S INVESTIGATION OF THE THEATER.

Most of the expressed opposition to the theater from people of the church has failed to carry full weight because of one sentence almost always present—"Of course, I do not speak from personal experience." A writer in the Watchman (Baptist, Boston), who signs himself "An Inquirer," claims "personal experience" as an asset in his opposition, and his revelations have interest if they do not in all cases bring convictions similar to his own. He asserts that during his whole life he has, upon principle, "opposed the theater as an institution," and that his position was supported by all that he could learn of it. Yet when a few years ago he began to "recognize the decided change of sentiment among Christian people," and theater attendance became greatly on the increase, he heard it claimed that "the old arguments did not apply; that 'a new movement' had begun; that there was a distinct growing 'upward tendency' in the theater which should be fostered and not frowned upon by a hostile church." He was moved to action by his boy, who "returned from school one day with the announcement that his teacher wished him to attend one of the plays of Shakespeare which he was studying in his English course." We quote his words:

"After earnest prayer my wife and I decided to climb over the fence and have a look at this thing for ourselves. We resolved to study the actual conditions as they existed, by attending representative plays. At first we were attracted; then repelled. We saw several unobjectionable plays and then others which were more or less tainted with evil. So we dropped the whole thing in dismay for a few months. But then tried it again. There was much that was fascinating and helpful. But too often something, perhaps only a slight thing, would clash with our ideas of right, and would leave us dissatisfied. We were often unaccountably depressed after going to the theater, without apparent immediate cause. We would attribute this as a possible result of our early training. (Thank God for that training.)

"And so we continued to study the matter valiantly. We saw many of the leading plays and operas, good, bad, and indifferent. We read everything that we could find upon the subject. We talked with many who had opinions. We interviewed several prominent actors. On one or two occasions, with a clergyman friend, I went 'behind the scenes.' We learned a good deal. We had many moments when we abhorred the whole thing, and were strongly inclined to abandon our investigation.

"Somehow, we were usually more or less heavy at heart on returning from a play. The sight of the pure and good faces, for instance, of some Salvation Army lasses, would give us a sort of pang. At such times I could not seem to feel my wonted grip upon my Bible or upon prayer. The old hymns did not stir me quite as before. Then we would conclude that it was because we were trying to change a life habit and that we were a wee bit 'morbid.' So we would start again and use more caution in the selection of the thoroughly 'good' play.

"It seems strange now, very strange, that it took us so long to find out God's will. We prayed and prayed about the matter and were deeply conscientious, so we thought. I suppose one difficulty had intruded itself in our search for the wisest course. We were unquestionably charmed and held fast by certain great and many really admirable things that we had seen. We were now not impartial students, for we wanted to go, and realized that it was going to cost a struggle to give it up. It was to us a very attractive form of entertainment and instruction, if we could only avoid certain objectionable features that stained so many of the plays, and this it still seemed impossible to do.

"And so we found ourselves almost irresistibly drawn toward it again. Specious arguments filled our minds and seemed for a time plausible; and yet I would sometimes say, 'It seems as if my feet were caught in a net.' God was patient and gentle with us, however. I can never be thankful enough for his leading. We gradually felt ourselves more and more inclined to abandon the venture and to return to our old position. Too many of the best plays and operas, even Shakespeare's, were streaked here and there with something suggestive, if not openly and boldly vicious. No argument can explain this fact away. Still we needed some decisive experience that would be wholly convincing and for ever settle our questioning."

That "decisive experience" came with witnessing a performance of "The Devil," the play by the Hungarian, Ferenc Molnar, of which we have given a synopsis. The writer went to hear Mr. John Craig, an actor, address the Boston Ministers' Meeting. This address occurred in the course of several presented to this organization bearing the message from other professions of the kind of sermons that each liked to hear. Mr. Craig, of course, spoke for the actors. "He made a pleasant address," says the writer, "in which he avoided vital issues and evaded some pointed questions which were asked him." Whether the writer takes into account the different points of view in thus judging Mr. Craig, he at least shows that an open mind on his part followed this hearing, for when Mr. Craig's "work and the play in which he was then acting were extolled by one of the ministers whom we trust and honor," and the audience then "were all advised to witness the performance," the writer and his wife went to see the play. We read:

"Most providentially for us, the play was simply abominable, low, suggestive, immoral, and wholly inexcusable. There was no moral, and I can not see how any possible good can come from it. We were horrified. The tittering of the afternoon audience (a respectable-looking company), the evident blindness and perverted moral sense of both actors and spectators, distressed us beyond measure. But oh, after our long period of questioning and indecision, it was just what we needed. We saw the danger and the subtlety of the theater as we never could have seen it in a better play. It shocked us that noble Christian ministers could be so beguiled and could draw others after them.

"We left the theater in silence and walked up Tremont Street and soon found ourselves opposite a house endeared to me by most sacred recollections. Many years ago it was the home of my godly grandparents, where I lived during the first years of my life. As a child I had there received from my beloved and faithful parents, now with their Lord, my first impressions of Jesus, my Savior, and his salvation. With few words, after an earnest prayer, we took hold of hands, standing by the old home-stand, and pledged ourselves before God that we would never again attend the public theater until a revolution had changed the very heart of society.

"As a whole, the theater is bad, bad, bad, through and through, and I believe, is growing worse. The perfectly good plays are few and can not save the wreck. The influences of stage life upon those employed are very dreadful and I fear that very many, if not most of such, are sooner or later corrupted. One of the fearful dangers is to my mind the ease and complacency with which good people can learn to tolerate grievous departures from a New-Testament standard of morality. The tendency is for the moral sense to become perverted, blinded. 'For art's sake,' positively repulsive immorality is quietly ignored. It is a strange and sad sight, far too common, to see cultivated and intelligent people sit calmly through performances that ought to shock the moral sense of their inmost souls. No, the church must let the theater alone. Christians must 'come out from it and be separate and touch not the unclean thing.'

"Our investigation is over. Our study is completed. It has been a dangerous experiment. But we have information at first hand, we know whereof we speak. We shall be better able than ever to warn and advise. It will enable us to avoid with increased conviction all 'border-line' practices."

The Great Comforter

"As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."—Isaiah 66: 13.

Like a grieved child that seeks for rest
And comfort on its mother's breast,
So come I, Lord, heartsore to Thee,
Believing Thou wilt comfort me.

When nights are long, and days are drear,
Be Thou a comfort ever near;
Let not my sad heart troubled be,
Be Thou a Comforter to me.

In Thee I find a Friend indeed,
Who will supply my every need;
Choose Thou my paths in life for me,
And comfort may I find in Thee.

Oh, may Thy grace sufficient be;
Peace, perfect peace, oh, give to me!
Help me to say "Thou knowest best."
Grant me Thy comfort and Thy rest.

The World's Greatest Heroine—Mother.

How many of us have sat with straining nerves, bated breath, and glowing eyes, and read of the heroic deeds of history's greatest heroines, not knowing or realizing that within our vision, actually breathing and living, is the greatest heroine the world ever did or ever will know,—mother!

True, mother never led an army and saved a country as did Joan of Arc; she never manned a life-boat and rescued drowning souls as did Grace Darling; she never went to the front and nursed sick and wounded soldiers as did Florence Nightingale; or the many other brave and heroic deeds of glorious women, but she has toiled and suffered and endured for years and years without number, and we can find no line to her credit in history, or a monument that marks her bravery.

She is a very insignificant heroine—this mother. She wears no armor, no badge of distinction—just a plain, ordinary, every-day dress. At one time, perhaps, her style was different—there were ruffles and tucks and knots of ribbons, and a flower coquettishly nestled in her hair, but that was in her sweetheart days, when her lover admired each little change—long years ago, before she became a heroine. Then she dreamed like other girls—she was no different from the girls of to-day, they all dream of the perpetual love-making, the never-ending lover-like attention of the man—the one man.

But husbands grow indifferent, they forget to admire the pretty flower, the bow of ribbon, or the ruffles of lace, they let the anniversary slip by without even a word of remembrance—oh! the pity of it. They do not seem to realize that it is the little things in life which go so far towards making up the sum of human happiness, they do not remember that a few words of affection, a clasp of the hand, the slightest caress is to a woman the greatest thing in the world. Poverty and love to the true woman is superior to wealth and indifference, but few husbands understand the true woman. Our poor heroine! she grows accustomed to this heartache—this void of something for which she longs, her dreams fade away until—until a future is before her, something that will fill this void.

Oh! then is when our heroine shows her mettle, she accepts her Gethsemane as part of her life, she rallies her strength and begins the battle anew. She has something else to live for now—the dreams are forgotten in the martyrdom of motherhood, the thousand and one little cares and tribulations, the slaving over the sewing-machine that baby will look pretty, the toiling over the washtub and ironing-board that baby will be clean and sweet, the bending over the hot fire that baby will have proper food and nourishment, and so it continues, the same round of monotony all through school days until college time is reached, and then comes an extra task, the pinching and squeezing of every penny, the self-denial of everything but the bare necessities of life so that her boys or her girls may share equally with the others.

How many of us have stood and watched with admiration the returning victor of some petty battle, cheering until we were hoarse, exhausting ourselves with the vehemence of our enthusiasm, when right beside us, possibly touching our hand, was one greater than he? One whose battle has not been petty—whose conflict has not been of short duration, but has for us fought many a severe fight.

When we had the scarlet fever or diphtheria and not one would come near us, who held the cup of cold water to our fever-parched lips? Who bent over us day and night and fought away with almost supernatural strength the greatest of all enemies—death? The world's greatest heroine—

Mother! Who is it that at each Sunday dinner-time chose the neck of the chicken that we might have the juicy wing or breast or leg? Who is it stays home from the concert, the social, the play, that we may go with the others and not be stinted for small change? Who is it crucifies her love of pretty clothes, her desire for good things, her longing for pleasure that we may have all these? Who is it? Mother!

Boys, when you grow up, should you attain the wealth of an Andrew Carnegie, or a John Rockefeller or a Pierpont Morgan, don't give money to universities, to libraries, or make wonderful collections until you have raised a monument, a wonderful monument, to the heroine. Give your medals to the mothers—real mothers, brave, enduring, suffering mothers—those who have given to the world boys and girls who have helped make the world, those who have given their best in life that you may succeed—raise the grandest and best monument under the blue canopy of heaven in honor and commemoration of the greatest heroine of all ages, now, past, and for ever—our heroine—the world's heroine—Mother!—Mabel S. Keightley.

PLYMOUTH, England, November 13, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have been assigned to Plymouth for a couple of months. Bro. William Newton will be sorry to learn of the death of h's little pal, Willie Riddolls. There is still a warm spot in the hearts of the Plymouth Saints for him.

I believe that some of the young brethren will prove in days to come that Bro. Newton's efforts shall not be in vain to build up the work in Plymouth. I trust that the good Master will bless his people here and elsewhere, in the advocacy and practice of his blessed gospel.

I may say too, that our Bro. Frank Pierce is not forgotten in this part. His faithful efforts and record as a champion tract-distributer are still unsurpassed.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

SAGINAW, Michigan, November 18, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been taking the HERALD for some time, but have never written for its columns. So I thought I would write a few lines to let the Saints know how we are.

There is a small body of Saints here. We have a few meetings from house to house. Some of our old Saints are going to their rest. Bro. Lewis H. Smallwood, age about fifty-six years, passed away October 24. Bro. John P. Kellogg, age sixty-six, passed away November 9, and Sr. Isabelle Bennett, wife of Bro. William J. Bennett, age fifty-five, passed away November 15. She was a faithful wife, a kind and loving mother, and a true Saint, loved and respected by all who knew her. We will miss these Saints, gone to their rest, but God knew best, and if we are faithful we will meet again where parting will be no more.

Dear Saints, let us be faithful to the end. Let us put our trust in God, he will bless us and keep us, and though trials and temptation may at times seem hard to bear, God will not forsake us. He will be our friend when all others have failed. We know not when our time is to come, but let us be ready and willing to go. Leave no work undone. Let your lights shine forth while you can. Do all you can to-day, for to-morrow God may call you away. You can not stay death; when God calls you must go. I hope with God's help to be faithful throughout all and rest with God's Saints in paradise, to rise in the first resurrection. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may ever be found faithful. My prayers are for the Saints and the upbuilding of God's cause.

BOURBON, Missouri, November 19, 1908.

Herald Readers: I wish to state what one family of poor Saints may do when their whole heart is in this work. Bro. and Sr. William Whiteside, who live here, and make the greater part of their living making and hauling railway ties, take both church papers, pay their tithes, buy tracts, and also have a little to help for an elder's expenses, even if they have to take a half dozen ties to town in order to do it. They have made a sacrifice to get the work started here, loaning tracts and papers, and paying elders' fare when all alone. Now they rejoice to see twenty-five lately baptized, many of them heads of families. And, as one gentleman said, we "have taken the cream of the country." There is more cream yet to rise. I send you a subscription to the HERALD. The writer baptized four, and Jesse Paxton twenty-one. Come again Jesse.

H. SPARLING.

CANAL DOVER, Ohio, November 12, 1908.

Dear Herald: While sending in my subscription, I ask you to please give me space for a few lines. I was baptized into the fold September 16, by Elder Connaughy; and while I am yet a babe in this latter-day work, my desire is to so walk and live that I may grow and wax strong in the Spirit.

It was through the kindness of Bro. A. B. Klar giving the church papers to our family that I became interested in this work.

We can do much good in giving the church papers to our friends, and help many to see the light that would never become interested otherwise.

I ask an interest in the prayers of all the Saints, that each and every one in my home may accept the gospel.

I want to say before I close, I love all the Saints, and my prayers are that every one may hear his name, when the roll is called for the first and glorious resurrection.

Your sister in the one faith,

November 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: God is the giver of all blessings. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first, then to the Gentile. Jesus Christ, the Lord, is the source of all things pertaining to this life, and the joys of heaven and of earth. The inhabitants of the earth will appear before God to give an account of their stewardships. The nations of the globe listen to theories that are taught by men in these latter days, in this gospel dispensation. They are filled to the brim with what they call the Holy Ghost. The Spirit is a gift only to those who believe and obey the gospel. These are stewards in the vineyard.

If the tears that have been shed from the eyes of those that represent this restored gospel, and the blood that has been shed, for two thousand years, were brought together, and could be seen by those that have spiritual eyes, they would be alarmed at the sight. But, brother, remember those men and women showed which side they were on. They were heroes for the truth. The tears and blood that have been shed would form several small streams. Those are they who have washed their robes and made them clean in the blood of the Crucified One, which was shed for all men, who would believe the gospel to the saving of their souls. We understand the word of the Lord to be that the Saints must be pure in heart, so they can work for the God of heaven. They who harbor malice, pride, exaltation, self-conceit, haughtiness, high-mindedness, suspicion, lovers of the world, busybodies, or tattlers, are classed with the liars and whoremongers, drunkards, and all nations that forget God, and will be without the city. (See Revelation 22:15.) Sin is very unpleasant unto the Lord. Jesus says, "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."—Matthew 5:8. We as a people should not let sin reign in our mortal body. (See Romans 6:12.) "If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth."—1 John 1:6. "But if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you."—Matthew 6:15. God says, My grace is sufficient. Why should we fear? He says, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light."—Matthew 11:30. There is no time for Saints to loiter by the wayside. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew 5:48. Sin will separate us from the love of God, and place us in a condition that we can not partake of the sacrament pleasingly to our heavenly Father.

Editors Herald: As I am sending subscription to HERALD, I will write a few lines for its pages, which I love to peruse. It brings me much comfort to hear of the progress that the work is making, and to read the testimonies of the brethren and sisters, and to hear of their experience in this great latter-day work. It is encouraging; and it is good to be a Saint in these latter days of evil. I am one of the isolated ones; but I am trying to get the truth before the people; and some are interested. One we call Rachel has a new Bible, and she says she is going to know what is in it.

The Work in the South.

Early in the summer the Holiness, or sanctified folks, began their meeting in this country, and it was surprising how the people would flock to their meetings, not only the people of the world, but Saints also.

I went to their meeting one night and I am glad I went, but once satisfied me as to what one could get by going. I had a dream one night while they were holding meetings in the neighborhood, which settled my mind in regard to their teaching or leading the people.

I was in a city, going down a very narrow street, walled up on either side with high, brick walls, and it was judgment-day. People of all kinds were going in Indian fashion down the street, and as I neared the end of the street there were several doors in the wall on the left, and on the opposite side there was a large, open space, and these preachers were standing there judging the people as they came, and giving them all a place through one of the doors on the left. I came on with great care, noticing where the people were being sent. I came close to the judge, and as he was going to give me a place on the left I said, "Not so. I will not go. Where is the place for the righteous? You have no place for them." In this time several had walked in, and the judge became confounded and knew not what to say or do, and the first chance he got he slipped away. So the judgment-day ended.

I could readily see where they would lead the people to, if they would follow them.

Our reunion came off the first of August, and we had a good spiritual and soul-cheering reunion, and it was very well attended in the day-time, and a household at night, but this did not last long, till now we can hardly have Sunday-school on time. Then on November 7 our district conference came off at Flat Rock and it was a bright, beautiful, sunny day. This was the discouraging day. There were only nine to represent a district of about five hundred members, and Bro. K— made the tenth. How sad to think how cold and indifferent the Saints (?) will become. Laying all possibilities aside, there could have been at least one hundred present, but they were not.

Some may find fault with me, and say that I am only picturing the dark side, and this may be partly true, but it is almost the only side it has. While the Saints are making some progress in some respects they are falling off in others.

Pleasant Hill Branch is the life of the district, and for several years back has done a good work, but alas! her best days have passed, unless she turns from her pride and self-conceit.

Lone Star Branch was once a live, prosperous, and flourishing branch, has done a good work, and sent out many noble men; but how is she now? No preaching, no prayer-meeting, and only small and short Sunday-school.

Pleasant Hill has been warned and forewarned to be careful, and watch and keep out all things that would be a hindrance or drawback to her; not to let in anything that would mar or disturb in any way, and keep down all contentions and hard feelings; but has she? I will let the future answer. There is already sown the seed of contention, strife, distrust, backbiting, and the love of greed for gain, and if this is not plucked up while young, it will be hard to handle, and will take a famine or something to set things right.

May the Saints of the Alabama District wake up to a knowledge of their duty. Put your shoulder to the wheel and give a lift. The Religio is all but dead and has been for some time. I have exhausted my patience trying to get them to get their lessons and attend. We could have a large Religio and a prosperous one, if the Saints would only try. We are neglecting a grand opportunity and wasting valuable time. It is to be regretted to see how indifferent the young are; and not only the young, but the old. It can not be expected for the young to go ahead, but they need some older one to be with them and guide them in the right way.

So let us all see that we do more in the coming year for the advancement of the cause of Christ. Every day is a page, and every year is a chapter in the book of life wherein is written our deeds and actions, our thoughts and our works, whether they be good or whether they be evil, and in that day he will ask you, "Did you warn your neighbor? Did you assist your brother in his difficulties?"

Your brother,
M. S. WIGGINS.

Concerning "Zion."

Editors Herald: While reading in HERALD in a late sermon by our patriarch, A. H. Smith, at one point there came the Spirit's answering flash, illuminating the text where the preacher reverted to the sense of disappointment experienced by many at the delay in Zion's redemption. How "hope deferred maketh the heart sick" with apprehension, lest one has labored, believed, and waited in vain! The speaker voiced the heart-cry of, oh, so many of earth's toil-weary ones, struggling along the rock-strewn "via de la Cruz." So real did it seem that the cry was almost audible, "How long, O Lord, how long?" And, instantly came the loving answer as a soothing balm, "Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, . . . Zion shall not be moved out of her place, . . . they that remain and are pure in heart shall return . . . to build up the waste places of Zion."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 4.

There lay at hand a magazine, on whose page my eye caught a half-tone picture of the wharf at the city of "Good Airs," as the writer quaintly put it. Beneath the picture was this line of description, "A long line of modernly equipped electric cranes rose out of the steel and concrete levees like a dense row of tall shade-trees." The Spirit gave this, viz, "For 'Good Airs,' read 'Beautiful for situation'; for so shall be the frontage of one of the waste places of mine heritage when they shall return and build up the waste places of Zion, as declared in my word."

In illumined thought, I stood at the base of Temple Hill, in Nauvoo; under my feet, a long, wide stretch of modern levee washed by the surging flood of the "Father of Waters," chasing through a wide canal, bisecting the level tract of over two miles in expanse which separates the steamboat landing at present from the base of Temple Hill, whose broad acres under alien tillage are peopled by melon and grape, cabbage and beet, a vast truck patch, whose very density is suggestive of the infidel's usurpation and makes the visiting Saint feel himself an ousted heir, stranger in his own domain. But, ho, the joy of this new scene. Desolation was forgotten. Waste and destruction vanished as a nightmare is dispelled by the day's dawn. Motion! Life! The bliss of it! I felt under foot the communicated tremor of great enginery, its throb, jar, and heave of suppressed and restrained activity, like the restless motions of a powerful horse held in check by a master's hand. Then from the capacious yawning holds and decks of boat and barge, a mighty mass of cargo was shifted, hoisted, lowered midst creak and shriek of block and sheave, clack and whirl of straining cable, noisy rattle, chuck, and clank of ponderous hook and chain, exhaust of steam, chuckle and clatter in soft purring tones of released machine, giants turning merrily to renew an iron grip on box and bale, bundle and cask (such as a roustabout makes running in-board over the gang-plank for another staggering load) tinkle of signal bell, snort of recovering steam under strain, quick hail of foremen, mates' shrill orders, check and tally call of clerk and roustabout, the goodly hum and buzz in the teaming mart of industry's hive by the busy bees of trade, wrought a spell of fascinating, compelling, soul-swelling gladness, moving, satisfying, like a diapason of grateful praise boomed out heavenward on the great utensils of human energy, while, subconsciously through it all, pierced this fragment of divine promise, "And kings of the earth shall bring their treasure into it, and the Gentiles their riches." And once again the desolated high place was crowned by the graceful column, strengthening pilaster, radiating cherubim, massive walls of goodly form and sheltering grace, an acceptable building, the Lord's House gladdened the eyes of the returned of the Lord, the children of Zion, whose habitations graced the adjoining hills, whose hands reaped the increase of earth, and no idler was there, neither was any poor among them; for in all things they were equal, and this was Zion.

WM. T. MAITLAND.

Extracts from Letters.

Mrs. L. E. Flanders: "In each of our church papers every week is something beautiful and soul-inspiring, making the heart leap for joy because of the happiness in store for all Saints who love God, and are trying to serve the One who was all love, even to the laying down of his earthly life that we may have one that is heavenly. How beautifully this is told in 'Love's miracle,' HERALD of October 28! Why not read this over and over again, contemplating the great love portrayed; and then read in Autumn Leaves an article headed 'Life'; and with these should be read this poem by Rossiter Raymond. Please give it room in HERALD columns."

Beside the dead I knelt for prayer,
And felt a presence as I prayed;
Lo: It was Jesus standing there;
He smiled and said, "Be not afraid."
"Lord thou hast conquered death we know;
Restore again to life, I said,
"This one who died an hour ago."
He smiled and said, "She is not dead."
"Asleep then as thyself didst say,
Yet thou canst lift the lid that keep
Her prisoned eyes from our way."
He smiled and said, "She doth not sleep."
"Nay, then, tho' happy she does wake,
And look upon some fairer dawn,
Restore her to our hearts that ache."
He smiled and said, "She is not gone."
"Alas! too well we know our loss,
Nor hope again our joy to touch,
Until the stream of death we cross";
He smiled and said, "There is no such."
"Yet our beloved seem so far,
The while we yearn to feel them near;
Albeit with thee we trust they are."
He smiled and said, "And I am here."
"Dear Lord, how shall we know that they Still walk unseen with us and thee,
Nor sleep, nor wander far away?"
He smiled and said, "Abide in me."

News From Branches

CLINTON DISTRICT, MISSOURI.

It has been quite a while since I have asked for a little space in your columns. At the last General Conference I was appointed to labor in this the Clinton, Missouri, District, and at the district conference in June I was selected to preside over the district, and I have tried to do my duty to the best of my ability. I have visited the ten branches of the district, and I find a good many earnest, zealous workers, and I also find some, yea, too many, that are very indifferent, and I find that the district as a whole is not in as good condition spiritually as it was a few years ago. There are various causes that contribute in retarding the work. It appears that a disease or affliction of "don't care" has gotten hold of not a few of the Saints, not only here, but I believe it is prevailing in various parts of the world among both insiders and outsiders. I have noticed that as a rule those who are willing to make some sacrifice and get busy and attend the conferences and reunions are the ones that are advancing in the work. We have lost some of our earnest workers by death, and others of our young sisters that were noble helpers have married and left us; but others will be benefited by our loss. Other helpers have left us to seek employment, and still others have moved out to try to better their condition in church and school privileges. With all of our losses we are not dead as a district, but on account of removals and indifference upon the part of some, two of our branches are almost in a disorganized condition. We try to have hope for the best.

Besides the labor which I have done in the branches, I have done some work outside. In September, Bro. A. C. Silvers and I held a series of tent meetings at Barnett, Morgan County, Missouri, and so far as attendance, attention, and good order are concerned, the meetings were a complete success. We were blessed with liberty in speaking the word. The three Duzan brothers and their excellent wives provided all that mind and appetite could wish for. They provided us each a good cot and bedding to sleep in the tent, and gave us choice of taking our meals at the hotel, or the sisters bringing our victuals each evening when they came to meeting. We chose the latter, and to say that they supplied us bountifully with good things to eat is just telling it modestly, and they remembered, too, that the railroads would not carry us free, and they fitted us up well along that line also. May the Lord bless them abundantly for their goodness and untiring efforts to assist.

I recently held a few meetings in Saint Clair County, where Brn. Gouldsmith and Andes have been keeping up a monthly appointment for some time. We had good attendance and good attention. There are eight or ten members living in that locality. They are isolated and enjoyed the meetings and are encouraged. Local brethren, why can't others of you go and do like those two elders are doing? I am holding a few evenings at Lebeck. I may be with the Coal Hill Branch over Lord's day and then on to Veve and Rich Hill to assist in adjusting matters, and from there home for a while.

I desire to labor while the day lasts. To me the end appears near. I accepted the gospel twenty-seven years ago, and I am still in the faith. This conference year I have baptized thirteen, and altogether I have baptized about four hundred persons. Some few of that number have let their barks drift out and wreck on the rocks. A goodly number have passed over, holding on to the rod of iron, and have safely anchored their barks in the haven of rest and peace. Others, yes, a goodly number, are earnestly contending for the faith which has been twice delivered to the Saints. May the Lord bless all that have named the name of Christ, and may we all put on the whole armor and endure to the end.

Yours in the conflict, with a determination to try to endure to the end,

JAMES MOLER.

We could make it clear to the unconverted person that he is to show an interest in his own salvation. He should do something to help others save him. If we were drowning, he would not wait supinely, but would beat the water in an effort to get to shore. If he were in a burning building, he would not wait to be searched for, but would come to a window and cry out. In the matter of the soul's salvation, it is the height of folly to sit inactive and voiceless until persuaded by others to accept the mercy that is offered. The sinner should be made to feel that he must help those who are trying to help him.—Selected.

HUDSON ON THE SUBJECTIVE MIND.

A REVIEW OF HIS ATTEMPT TO ACCOUNT FOR THE PHENOMENA OF SPIRITISM, FAITH-HEALING, AND REVELATION SCIENTIFICALLY.

Allowing a wide margin for error and fraud, enough phenomena have been demonstrated by the various schools of hypnotism, mesmerism, and spiritism, and by the more orthodox schools of psychology to indicate that the human soul possesses faculties and powers not ordinarily dreamed of.

Doctor Thomas Jay Hudson, Ph. D., LL.D., undertook the work of defining the nature of man so as to account for the feats performed within the ranks of the cults referred to without recourse to the assumption that they are of extramundane origin. Probably many of our readers are familiar with his work, The Law of Psychic Phenomena, (McClurg & Co., Chicago, publishers, cloth $1.50) as it is now in its twenty-fifth edition.

Those who are familiar with this work will remember that his fundamental hypothesis is that man is of a triune nature,—body, objective mind, and subjective mind. The objective mind is simply the function of the physical brain; the subjective mind is an intelligent entity that may exist independently of the body and brain. Of the subjective mind he says:

In point of fact, that which, for convenience, I have chosen to designate as the subjective mind, appears to be a separate and distinct entity; and the real distinctive difference between the two minds seems to consist in the fact that the objective mind is merely a function of the physical brain, while the subjective mind is a distinct entity, possessing independent powers and functions, having a mental organization of its own, and being capable of sustaining an existence independently of the body, in other words, it is the soul.—Page 30.

This definition of man does not seem to antagonize our former conclusions based on a study of physiology and divine revelation. It is obvious to all (Christian Scientists excepted) that man has a body, trepanning reveals a brain, even in cases where one might doubt its existence, and Job is authority for the statement, "There is a spirit in man." (Job 32: 8.)

We should not apply the term soul to that part of man that may exist independently of the body. We should apply the term spirit. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants declares, "The spirit and the body is the soul of man." (Section 85:4.) With this reservation we may proceed with a degree of profit to review Doctor Hudson's delineation of the powers of the "subjective mind."

According to his theory the objective mind takes cognition of the things of the material world, deriving its knowledge through the medium of the five senses. It is capable of both inductive and deductive reasoning. It may take notice of effects and reasons back to causes, arriving at principles of truth by inductive reasoning. From given premises it may deduct logical conclusions, tracing thoughts and ideas in their various ramifications. While possessed of this God-given ability to reason, which constitutes its free agency, it is distinctly limited and the amount of knowledge that may be attained by such laborious processes is comparatively little, even in a long and studious life. The subjective mind has wonderful powers, but also has its limitations. It takes cognition of things of a higher nature. Under certain conditions it knows truth intuitively, without the slow process of investigation,—i. e., those truths that come within the range of fixed laws—but ordinarily it has limitations that will be mentioned later.

Granted that these premises are correct, we have a psychological basis for the statement found in Doctrine and Covenants 85:36: "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith." The objective mind by study may obtain its knowledge of truth by weighing and examining the things of the material world; while the subjective mind through the medium of faith may come in contact with God and learn things that are spiritually discerned. It will yet be demonstrated that when Joseph Smith, after a studious mental effort to solve the religious puzzle of his day, carried the matter directly to the supreme head of the spiritual world, he was acting on correct scientific as well as correct religious principles.

Doctor Hudson lays down the proposition on page 50 of his work that man, as we have him now, reaches his highest development when the subjective and the objective minds are working in complete harmony, and states that the best work of authors, artists, orators, and statesmen has been done when the reasoning faculties of the objective mind have been fully exercised in connection with the inspiration and higher light of the subjective mind. This, too, seems in full accord with the statement in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, "The elements are eternal, and spirit and element, inseparably connected, receiveth a fullness of joy."—Section 90:5.

The fact observed by Doctor Hudson, that man is at his best and grandest when the subjective and objective minds are operating conjointly, is in harmony with the quotation above made; but it is out of harmony with his own conclusion reached further on in his work that when the spirit is finally entirely freed from the trammels of flesh it will be at its highest estate. Probably his inability to accept the idea of the resurrection forces him to adopt the latter conclusion, even at the cost of a break in the logic of his theorem.

One peculiarity of the subjective mind pointed out in this work is that its memory is absolute. This is supported by the conclusions of other psychologists who concede perfect memory to what is termed the subconscious mind. Its memory is absolute. Nothing that ever came within the realm of its experience is ever forgotten. Individuals when placed in the hypnotic or mesmeric states, wherein the objective mind is in abeyance and the subjective mind has full control, are capable of recalling any event, any information of which they ever, at any time, had knowledge. This accounts for the ability of mind readers, spiritualists, and others, when once in contact with the subjective mind of another, to state any event that ever occurred in his life's history. We are all familiar with the fact that events that have apparently passed from our memory for many years may suddenly be brought to mind by some combination of circumstances. The most trifling events will be recollected at the most unexpected moment. Every experience is somewhere recorded in our subconsciousness, and it only lacks the proper condition to bring it again to memory. When the time comes that the spirit of man is in such a condition that it has all its knowledge at its immediate disposal; when our intelligence shall be quickened so that we can immediately lay hold upon our stores of information, our powers will be broadened beyond our present conception. Now "we know in part," because, first, our field of observation is limited; second, the things that we learn are soon temporarily forgotten.

Now we come to the theory that in Doctor Hudson's work is second only to his theory of the dual mentality of man. We refer to his theory of "suggestion." He holds that the subjective mind, having been placed under the dominion of the objective mind, is controlled in all things by suggestion, received from its own objective mind or from another person. It is preëminently subject to the power of suggestion. On this theory rests his explanation of all psychic phenomena that by others are referred to superhuman sources. The objective mind is capable of both inductive and deductive reasoning; but the subjective mind is capable only of deductive reasoning. When a suggestion is made it accepts that suggestion as true and acts upon it accordingly without attempting to reason out its truth or error. It may reason deductively, and if given a premise will deduce conclusions that are in accord with the premise, whether the premise be true or false. In support of this theory Hudson uses the well known fact that individuals who are hypnotized, whose objective faculties are temporarily and voluntarily at sleep, act on any suggestion given them. If such an one is told that he is an emperor he accepts the suggestion and will comport himself accordingly. If told that he is the spirit of Daniel Webster he will do his best to make a speech worthy of Webster. In a word he may be made to do the most wonderful or the most absurd things by the power of suggestion.

In the explanation of spiritualism, suggestion and the subjective mind play this role: The medium, by reason of his well-developed powers of telepathy, is in touch with the mentality of his client, and can read his thought. He is able to tell all the events of his past life because they are all resident in his subjective memory, though he may fancy that he has forgotten them. The client is duly impressed because he has been told things that he had apparently forgotten and that no one else living knew. But when a medium undertakes to give information that is not known to himself or his client or to some other living person with whom telepathic connection is possible, he has an excellent opportunity to invent excuses to account for a failure. Mediums operating under test conditions have repeatedly given the number on a hidden bank note when the number was unknown to them but known to those making the test. They have failed repeatedly when the note has been selected at random and the number was not known to any living person. They can tell you the number of coins in your pocket if the number is known to you; if it is not known to any person they can not tell. If the information comes from spirits they should not be so limited.

In cases where the medium goes into a trance and answers for spirits supposed to be present he simply goes into a total or partial condition of self-hypnotism and his subjective mind is then open to mental suggestion from any one present. Thus he can and will personate any spirit that may be called for by relatives or friends and may reveal secrets supposed to be known only to the dead person and his present friend,—the secrets being furnished by the subconscious mind of the friend. The well known fact that it is difficult to give a successful exhibition of spiritism or hypnotism when there is an avowed skeptic present is explained by suggestion. The subjective mind of the person in the state of somnambulism, whether a hypnotized individual or a self-hypnotized medium, seizes upon adverse suggestions as readily as upon others and so becomes confused, and usually the individual is restored to his normal state.

In the explanation of mental healing suggestion plays the following role: The subjective mind has control of all the functions and sensations of the body. Its control of the physical forces is marvelous. If, then, the subjective mind of an invalid receive the suggestion, either from the individual's own objective mind or from another, that his disease is to be removed, or is removed, it will accept the statement as true and will exert all its powers to establish the condition suggested; if the physical derangement is not beyond human power to repair, it will succeed. Bear in mind that the above explanations of spiritism and healing are Hudson's, not ours. Yet we believe that he has a principle of truth, though he carries it to an extreme. It is said that a well man may be made ill if all his friends will conspire to suggest to him that he is not looking well. A sick man may be helped a great deal if all his friends will suggest to him that he is looking well. Something in man responds to suggestion and tries to act accordingly.

Both Christian Scientists and the promoters of the Emmanuel Movement act on that theory and to it is due the success of a multitude of faith healers, mind healers, magnetic healers, and perhaps some orthodox physicians who give bread pills. It is the very groundwork and foundation of Christian Science and the Emmanuel Movement.

In the American Magazine, December, Ray Stannard Baker describes the Emmanuel treatment as administered by Reverend Lyman Powell of the Saint John's Episcopal Church, Northampton, Massachusetts. The patient was treated for drunkenness:

Mr. Powell stood behind the chair and told Mr. X. to compose himself, that he was going to sleep just as he had gone to sleep before when he had come to the study.

"You are going to sleep," said Mr. Powell, "you are sinking deeper into sleep. No noises will disturb you. You will drop off into sleep. You are asleep."

These words repeated numerous times, soon produced a deep sleep on the part of Mr. X. I could hear his steady slow breathing. Then Mr. Powell began giving suggestions in a low monotone.

"I told you before that you were not to drink any more. I told you that you could not yield again to the drink habit. You can not drink any more. You will go on now into the perfection of freedom. Your whole physical nature will revolt at the thought of alcohol. If you should take to drink again it would blast your life and leave your wife and children without support; it would cost you your position. You are too good a man to drink; you are too fine a character to be ruined by drink. In God's name I command you therefore not to drink any more. You can not drink any more. You will use every means to keep from drink; you will not be able to drink any more."

These suggestions were repeated in different forms many times, the treating lasting perhaps ten or fifteen minutes. The patient was then aroused.

In December number of the Ladies' Home Journal Reverend Elwood Worcester, founder of the Emmanuel Movement, describes his treatment of a sample case thus: "Then came a pianist suffering from acute neuritis in her arms, brought on by too much playing, and from a pain in the neck and back of her head, which is a frequent symptom of neurasthenia. I advise her to take a vacation and to give up practising for the present. Then I relax her and cause her pains to cease temporarily through suggestion."

Of another case, that of a little girl suffering from an extremely painful and dangerous attack of articular arthritis, he says: "Although pains like these can not be permanently removed by suggestion, yet if you or I were suffering so we should doubtless be grateful for even a temporary respite, and it is always a pleasure to me to see her expression of pain yield to one of peace, and in answer to my question, 'Do you suffer at all?' I get the reply, 'No, I am quite comfortable.'"

As indicated in the above quotations the modus operandi of the Emmanuel healers is first to relax the patient, that is, to induce total or partial quiescence of the objective mind, and then to suggest to the subjective mind that the pain has ceased. Suggestion is their weapon; the ability of the subconscious forces of the patient to respond and effect a cure is the measure of their power as "divine" healers. They recognize that fact and do not attempt to treat diseases involving structural changes in the body or any of its organs. Victims of organic diseases are sent to a physician. Christian Scientists proceed along similar lines, excepting that their suggestion to the patient involves the proposition that there is no such thing as pain or disease, a proposition taxing credulity, yet not impossible of acceptance when the faculties of inductive reasoning are voluntarily in abeyance. The difference between Christian Scientists and Emmanuel healers is that the latter recognize the limitations of suggestion and send acute cases to the physician; the former do not recognize its limitations and send such cases as are beyond its reach to the cemetery.

Doctor John D. Quackenbos, a friend of the Emmanuel Movement, and formerly professor of psychology in Columbia University, is quoted as follows: "It is immoral to suggest to a patient what the brain and nerve organs are incapable of doing. No permanent good results are achieved from the suggestion of impossibilities."—New York Evening Journal, November, 1908. That means simply that it is immoral to lie to an individual and tell him that he is about to be healed when his disease is such that it is beyond the power of his natural forces to overcome it. It certainly is immoral to tell him such a thing, unless one is in touch with God and knows that God is about to come to his aid. The Emmanuel Movement disclaims any such light by arbitrarily refusing to treat any disease that might require special interposition. All organic diseases are rejected at the threshold of the pastor's study.

In Hudson's work suggestion plays the following role in accounting for revelation: Under hypnotic influences, sleep, or religious frenzy, the subjective mind is capable of seeing visions, dreaming dreams, or hearing voices; the messages in every case being the result of previous suggestion from the objective mind and in line with the previous convictions of the individual. Thus: Swedenborg believed in the existence of hell; he received spiritual visitations and was much pleased to learn that his ideas about hell were correct. On the other hand the early schools of spiritism abandoned the idea of hell; when they had spirit visitors they learned from them that there was no such place in existence.

Doctor Hudson's theory of suggestion will account for many remarkable manifestations that have been attributed to the superhuman; but it breaks down when carried to an extreme. It fails to account for phenomena in each of the three realms referred to, —spiritism, healing, and revelation.

In the case of spiritism, his arguments do not sound convincing when he attempts to account for those apparitions known as materialized spirits and for the phenomenon of "levitation of ponderable articles," such as table-tipping, sofa-lifting, etc., and he admits that he has seen genuine performances coming under both of these headings. His explanation is interesting as showing how far one may go to avoid recognition of powers extramundane in the affairs of the world; but it is not necessary to follow him so far, providing we are willing to accept the statements of Holy Writ that many evil and unclean spirits were to go into all the world, working miracles to deceive the people.

In the case of revelation his theory may account for many so-called revelations, those that are to be classed as revelations of men. It may account for the fact that many who have claimed such revelations seemed to be honest in the claim. And it is our belief that many, perhaps even in the church, have taken convictions originating in their own beings as the voice of Spirit. But the theory will not account for all revelations. The revelation to Paul on the road to Damascus was utterly opposed to all his former convictions. Under Hudson's theory he would have received instruction to continue his persecution of the Christians. We are glad, too, to be able to state that the vision given to Joseph Smith in 1820 can not be explained under this theory. Joseph Smith, though ignorant that such a subtle explanation would ever be propounded, is on record in such a way as to destroy its application in his case. It will be remembered that he went to the woods to pray that he might learn which church was right and was told that none was right. Of this he says, "It had never entered into my heart that all were wrong."—Church History, volume 1, page 9. His vision could not have originated in his own subjective mind as a result of his former belief. We must still regard him as a genuine prophet or a willful fraud; and we are pleased to still be able to defend him as a prophet.

In the case of divine healing, the theory of suggestion will not explain all phenomena. To resort to it will compel us to believe as others have argued, that the dead whom Christ raised were simply in hypnotic trance and responded to his suggestion to arise; and that the lepers that he healed were simply victims of "nervous eczema." Christ said plainly that Lazarus was dead. And Doctor Hudson says that Christ knew spiritual laws intuitively and was the great intuitive discernor of right and wrong. It is not necessary to carry the theory of suggestion beyond its reasonable limitations if we believe the divine statement, "The prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up." Man's health may be affected by his subjective mind; but God's miracles go far beyond results having such an origin.

While the foregoing regarding the limitations of suggestion is true, granted that Hudson is even partially correct in his statement of the powerful influence of the subjective mind over the physical forces and its inclination to respond to suggestion, we have a physiological explanation of the fact that God always demands faith on the part of those who come to him asking for healing,—this in addition to the many theological reasons. He simply demands coöperation on the part of the individual in this as in all other things. If the individual believes that he is to be healed, all the forces of his nature will work toward that end. If he is convinced that he will not be healed, all the forces of his nature will oppose any healing influences that God might otherwise choose to exert; in this, as in all things, God gives man his free agency and forces no blessing upon him. When Christ healed men he said to them, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Surely there was some profound principle underlying such a statement. James says, "But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed. Let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." Surely there must be some fundamental principle back of such a broad statement.

God has told his people how to proceed in cases of sickness, and that when they conform with certain ordinances they shall be healed. Of course, we understand that there are exceptions to this rule. We know that individuals that do not have faith will not be healed (in fact they have not complied with the requirements), and that at other times individuals who have confidence in God do not receive the desired healing because there are wise and sufficient reasons for its being withheld. But we can accept the thought, perhaps, that when an individual living in complete harmony with God, in times of sickness avails himself of the ordinance, and there are reasons why he should not be healed, he is entitled to a knowledge that he will not receive the blessing for which he asks. If he does not receive that knowledge, he is justified in believing that the general law is in force, and that he will be healed. Under these conditions he is justified in exercising faith and affirming to himself that he will be healed. Even if he is naturally skeptical he is justified in making the strong mental effort towards belief.

We believe that in Doctor Hudson's theory of suggestion there is at least the basis of a scientific explanation of Alma's peculiar exhortation to have faith, and failing in that to at least desire to have faith (Alma 16: 22),—to make the mental effort to cultivate faith. Christian Scientists secure certain good results even when they demand of the patient that his expectation of healing shall include a belief in a palpable absurdity,—the non-existence of matter. The Emmanuel Movement secures some good results even when its devotees rely wholly upon human power and refuse to treat any really serious diseases wherein it would be necessary for God to exert his power.

This being true, much better results may be expected where the patient accepts the gospel law in its fullness, places himself in the hands of God (realizing that he is all powerful to heal), and at the same time makes a consistent and energetic mental and spiritual effort to exercise faith. The suggestion comes to him from the word of God and from the ordinance of administration that he will be healed, and under conditions before mentioned, he is justified in permitting his spirit to accept that suggestion with its accompanying results for good.

The good results will be more certain if he is surrounded by friends and relatives who are exercising a mental operation of affirmative faith and are not subjecting him to an adverse spiritual atmosphere of doubt and skepticism.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

OPENING OF WINTER TERM AT GRACELAND.

The winter term at Graceland College was opened Wednesday, December 2, the exercises being held in the college chapel. Several interesting musical numbers were rendered and the address was delivered by Reverend Pittenger, pastor of the Methodist Church. This address combined several good qualities in a rare manner, being scholarly, uplifting, and entertaining. We are pleased to announce that it will be reproduced in the HERALD. We had thought at one time that a smaller structure should have been erected for the college building, but we note that the present building is hardly adequate for the attendance. Recitations are held in the chapel, in the library, and in the president's office, besides in the regular recitation rooms.

EGYPTIAN CHARACTERS USED BY HEBREW WRITERS.

I make a record in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews, and the language of the Egyptians.—Nephi 1: 1.

And now behold, we have written this record according to our knowledge in the characters, which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech. And if our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew.—Book of Mormon 4: 8.

The above quotations show that the Book of Mormon writers were familiar with Egyptian learning. They show also that those writers used a system of writing called "reformed Egyptian" that was used because it occupied less space than the Hebrew system. The idea that Jewish writers of that date were in possession of a system of Egyptian shorthand has been made a matter of jest by certain opponents. However, proof of the varied claims and assertions of the Book of Mormon is constantly coming to light from the most unexpected quarters. William E. Curtis, special correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, has an article in the Sunday edition of that paper, November 20, from which we quote:

WASHINGTON, November 20, 1908.—The British Museum has recently secured a parchment book containing a method of shorthand writing in Latin invented and used by Tullius Tiro, the freedman private secretary of Cicero. It contains about two hundred pages covered with symbols inscribed in a large, bold hand in ink so permanent that the lettering is as perfect and as bright to-day as it could have been when it was first written. The symbols are in columns with the definition written in smaller characters beside them, and arranged alphabetically, three columns to the page, and an average of thirty words to the column, making altogether about eighteen thousand signs, each representing a word or a combination of words. The system is the same as that now used by stenographers of this generation, and I have no doubt that many of the signs are identical. The relic must be of absorbing interest to modern stenographers, and I took the liberty to suggest to the gentleman in charge at the British Museum that he invite some accomplished shorthand writer to prepare a comparative study of Tiro's method with that in use to-day.

The book is well known among bibliographers, and was fully described in 1817 by Professor Ulrich F. Kopp, of Mannheim, Germany, in his Paleographica Critica, volume 1, page 294, et seq., published in 1817. Kopp says the Egyptians were the inventors of stenography, and that systems of shorthand were used by the ancient Hebrews, who undoubtedly imitated the Egyptian methods. He quotes Psalm 45: 2, "My tongue is the pen of a ready writer," as a reference to stenography. He also quotes Xenophon as saying that Diogenes used what he called "tachygraphiam," a system of abbreviations to economize time and labor in writing, but his manuscript was illegible to other persons who were not familiar with the signs used. The Greeks had several systems of shorthand, but so far as known they were the invention and the property of those who used them, and were not taught in the schools. Professor Kopp tells us that Tiro's was the first complete system ever recorded in Latin, and was undoubtedly the most perfect, scientific, and comprehensive that was known up to his time.

Elders' Note-Book

A PLEA FOR THE TEACHER.

BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD.

Bro. Bullard argues that we should select branch officers who are competent to do the work in their particular departments, and then let them do that work without undue interference.

The final reward to be given by the Master to his faithful servants, enters more or less into the purpose for which we toil—and becomes an incentive to press on in the conflict before us. The manly contest, where brawn and energy are put to the test, where thousands await the outcome, to give to the victors the shout of applause, and place upon them some mark of honor, becomes an inspiration, and is very gratifying to what may be called vanity lingering in the soul of man.

There are, however, deeds to be performed, and services to be rendered, by men and women, where nothing of an outward demonstration awaits them as a mark of honor or distinction, for valuable services rendered; but which, they know, when entering into such service, and performing that which has become an important duty in their lives, will oftentimes bring displeasure, unfriendliness, and harsh treatment.

In the service of the Master, Jesus Christ, there is a work for all willing hands. There is so much to be done, and so few to do the work, that no one need be looking for work to do; for it is always at hand. In a great house there are vessels of honor and vessels of dishonor—the dishonorable vessels are to be cleansed. Some one must be appointed to help do the cleansing. Who shall it be? In the house of the Lord, or the church, there must be order. The laws relating to this have been given of God. The officers to see that these laws are kept and respected have been given and ordained of him. Every officer has been appointed his post of duty; and has been commanded to learn the duties pertaining thereto. When he has learned his duty, he knows what to do, and how to perform that duty; for the One who instructs one is always ready to instruct all. The deacon is as much entitled to divine instruction or help as the apostle. They are both men, with men's weaknesses, and equally important before the Lord. The law relating to the duties of an officer of the Aaronic order of God, as is the law relating to the duties of an officer of the Melchisedec order. Both orders are orders of distinction, because of God's appointment.

The teacher is as important an officer in branch government as is an apostle who has the directing and regulating power of the general church in all the world in his work, or our heavenly Father would not have made the selection. When a branch makes selection of a man to fill the important position of teacher, that choice should be made according to the gifts manifest in the man to fill that office, and the calling of God unto that man. If God puts his finger upon a man as his choice, he makes no mistake. If that man will then study, and learn the duties of his office, he will make a successful teacher or officer.

I believe that as that man gains experience in his work, through a faithful application thereto, he knows more about his work than any other man can know. I believe he can work as independently in his office, as the presiding officer, be he high priest, elder, or priest. If he has followed the injunction of the Master, "Let every man learn his duty," and goes about that work with humility of heart, and with faith in God, he need not wait to be commanded or directed in a special way, when duty's door is open before him; but should go forth as a servant of God to accomplish the work intrusted to his care.

I do not wish to be understood to mean that proper council in priesthood meetings should be slighted or ignored, where a branch is organized and holding its regular priesthood meetings. Great good can be accomplished by the officers working as a unit, as well as much good being gained by holding their council meetings. These are auxiliaries to the carrying out of official branch work. But when a teacher has work in hand, who knows better how to accomplish that work than himself? Why should he wait to be counseled as to how he should go about the work intrusted to his care?

The teacher's duty is to watch over the church always, and be with, and strengthen them, and see that there is no iniquity in the church, neither hardness with each other; neither lying, backbiting, nor evil speaking; and see that the church meet together often, and also see that all the members do their duty, and he is to take the lead of meetings in the absence of the elder or priest, and is to be assisted always, in all his duties in the church, by the deacons, if occasion requires; but neither teachers nor deacons have authority to baptize, administer the sacrament, or lay on hands; they are, however, to warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come unto Christ.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.

There are times when consultation and counsel are needed by every officer; and every one working in the interests of righteousness as an officer will feel the need of this at times, and will seek it. But where duty is so clearly outlined by the Master, can not the teacher learn that which relates to his work as well as any one else could learn it? and who should be the most anxious to learn, or properly perform the duties therein outlined?

He has to act as detective many times; and, in some cases, act with shrewdness, secrecy, and promptness. He is the man above all others who should have the tact and wisdom to do his work aright, and should not be interfered with while holding a license as a teacher, and chosen by the branch to act for them.

If the branch has made a mistake in its selection, then the mistake should be rectified, and the man released; for the work is of too important a character to have the wrong man at it. But give the teacher the prerogatives that are his and watch results. Do not discourage a teacher by continually warning him to be careful. A good teacher is always a careful man—and can do his work better than you who are not a teacher.

There are teachers and there are elders who have not learned their duty. A good teacher is better than a poor elder, to God and to the church; and a good officer, be he teacher or elder, is alike acceptable to God. Let all uphold the hands of their fellow officers, as the head can not say to the feet, "I have no need of you"; but God has placed them in the body "as it hath pleased him."

The lionizing of one officer, because of his office, or as a man, is not pleasing to him who is no respecter of persons. Jesus, as the Son of Man, the great high priest, became servant of all, and directed all honor to be directed to his Father that belonged to him. Let us do likewise, but give honor where honor is due among our fellow officers.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.—PART II.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER J. F. MINTUN.

ELDER J. F. MINTUN.

On the fifth day of May, 1878, I was ordained an elder under the hands of Elders Phineas Cadwell, Magnus Fyrando, and A. W. Lockling, at which time the Pleasant View Branch, Harrison County, Iowa, was organized, of which I was chosen secretary. Only a few weeks elapsed when I concluded that I would enter upon one of the duties that I felt I had been called to do when ordained, and so consented to preach. I thought and prayed much about it, and finally concluded to use as a scriptural text, Matthew 11:27, and accordingly I did, occupying about fifteen minutes with freedom, but had no more to say, and closed without apology. I continued to occupy from this time on, one or more times each Sunday, while occupying the working days teaching in the country schools, and trying to farm a small piece of ground that had been cleared on the place that I had bought as a home; and in all my efforts I was aided by the Lord, and found favor with the people, and had greater freedom in occupying in public, and in administering to the sick, many of whom were blessed in a remarkable way.

On the 30th day of September, 1879, I was ordained a seventy, at Gallands Grove, under the hands of Elders J. C. Crabb, James Caffall, W. H. Kelley, and R. J. Anthony, but on account of being incumbered with debt on a little home I had bought, and losing nearly everything I had, through putting too much confidence in a relative from whom I had bought my home, I did not enter into general missionary work as a seventy till November 11, 1881, having at a conference been appointed on a mission to Nebraska a short time previous. At this date I started on my way, being taken to a town about five miles from home by Bro. Edgar Lanpher, leaving purse and all that I had, in a financial way, with my wife, who urged me to take at least enough to pay my way across the Missouri River; but I replied that if the Lord wished me to occupy that mission he would raise up some friend who would furnish me the means, or some other way would be opened up; that I was going to prove the Lord, and myself,—and I did.

I preached at the schoolhouse at Calhoun the first night, and by request remained the second night. At the close of the services I stated briefly that I was on my way to my mission to Nebraska, and going as the ministry of New Testament times, and that I would start in the morning. No one seemed to notice my condition or to sense my needs, and I returned to my sister's, where I was lodging. Before entering the house I breathed a prayer that God would send me sufficient help financially to pay my way across the river, as I was willing and could walk the rest of the way. Again, after retiring, before closing my eyes to sleep, I began to pray in a similar strain, and while praying a rap was heard at the door, and upon inquiry I learned that I was wanted, and when I opened the door a hand was extended with a half dollar for me, the donor saying that after the service he returned home, and was preparing to retire, when a voice said to him, "Go and give that minister some money." He argued that he had so little, and he could see where he needed that so badly, that he concluded he could not comply. The instruction was repeated, and the same argument passed through his mind with the same result. The third time this was repeated, when he was about prepared to retire, and he again put on his clothes and came and gave the money to me, and when he had given me this explanation he bade me farewell.

This was and has ever been a witness to me that God had called me to do missionary work, and that it was pleasing to him that I should minister in Nebraska at that time, and a further witness that God did not forget his servants, but would care for them to-day as the Scriptures testified he did in the dispensations past.

I continued on this mission till the spring of 1885, when I was appointed to labor in Minnesota, but it was with a heavy heart that I entered upon this mission; for the church was not in a condition to care for the family during the past year, and I was indebted for a small sum for their care, with no immediate prospect for any better conditions. But I started and occupied till the latter part of the summer, when I returned home and took up secular employment to pay indebtedness, and so situate my family that I could continue faithful to the duties of my calling.

For something over four years I consecrated my services to God in temporal employment, occupying on Sundays in the ministry locally. I was greatly blessed in all that I undertook, and according to my promise to God, I sold out when I had accumulated sufficient to care for my family, and pay indebtedness, and again entered into the missionary work, in which I have continued without interruption till the present time.

On April 20, 1900, I was chosen, and ordained one of the council of Seven Presidents of Seventy, under the hands of Apostles John W. Wight and John H. Lake, since which time I have been actively engaged in the special work of this council, and have acted as its secretary. About the same time I was chosen as secretary of the First Quorum of Seventy to succeed Bro. R. S. Salyards, who had been called to another position, and I have occupied in that capacity since.

Some remarkable cases of healing have occurred during my ministrations, several times in my own family, but space will not permit me to mention them. Suffice it to say the blind have been made to see, the lame to walk, the paralytic restored to soundness, fevers rebuked, and I have been associated with several cases at which time those possessed with devils have been made free, two of which cases are known to many not of the church. I have been made the recipient of blessings through the gift to be healed several times, even when my life was despaired of in a few instances.

I have not brought so many into the church, through my ministrations, as have many others, but I am happy in the thought that many whom I have been instrumental in bringing the gospel to, have become and are now active and efficient laborers in the service of God. But no one result adds more to my pleasure than the fact that all my children are actively engaged in the service of the church in some of its departments.

Since entering the church I have been closely affiliated with and actively engaged in the Sunday-school work of the church, being one of those who began the agitation of a district Sunday-school association in the Little Sioux District some time before one existed in the church, which resulted in this district being organized before there was a general association. Of this district association I was superintendent for years, or until I was appointed to another field of labor, or it was thought I would be. I was associated with others to revise the constitution and by-laws of the General Association either two or three times, and have been associated with the work of all the conventions since the first. I have acted as one of the instructors at each of the general institutes of the Sunday-school and Religio associations, and in all my association with this department I have been as much blessed with the Spirit of God as in the general missionary work. I was chosen secretary at the organization of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, and have been closely associated with it and its workings since; assisting in formulating and revising the present constitution and by-laws of this society. At one time I acted as one of a committee of five to revive the society when its president had sung its funeral-dirge and was preparing to preach its funeral-sermon, and many of its leading and most interested members saw what appeared to be the close of its career.

The committee was not sure for some time just what would be the outcome of their work; and we are sure now, as we were at the time of our meeting, that unless the heavenly Father had come to the rescue, the committee would have failed to accomplish much more than to drape the funeral-couch. Then and several times in my association with this society, I have received witness from God that the Religio was a part of his great work. In fact, in all my labors in the church, either as an elder, a seventy, one of the presidents of seventy, as a Sunday-school or Religio officer, or committeeman for either, I have received equal evidence that the work was a part of the one great gospel plan, and approved of God. I feel an equal interest in the success of all departments of the church, and feel that I am called as one of the general officers of the church to do what I can in the interests of each, whether locally or in general.

In a previous part of this article I mentioned the opposition through prejudice of my wife's mother, Mary H. Knight, who made her home with her daughter from the time of our marriage till her death, nearly nineteen years afterwards. Her prejudices were so strong that, though a praying woman, she could not quietly submit to family prayer offered in the home by a Latter Day Saint, myself or any one else, so that for some time after I was baptized my wife and I held family prayer at our bedside, so as to retain peace at home; but finally, through the providence of God, she became reconciled to this; but yet bitterly opposed, both in word and deed, to the church and the people who composed it, so far as she had ability. We continued praying that God would sanctify her opposition for good and lead her aright, for we felt assured that she was honest, and would finally yield to the truth.

At one time, when on a visit to a neighbor, she fell and fractured one of the bones in one of her shoulders, from which she suffered severely; but because of her prejudice she would not ask for prayers to relieve her, until she had suffered for some time, when one evening, after she had suffered all day and we had had our family worship, she in a humble spirit requested that she might have rest that night, for she had not rested for several nights on account of her suffering. Immediately, when this request was made, the Spirit rested upon me and I was instructed to say, "You will rest to-night," and before we retired we bowed at the bedside and plead that God would show mercy and give the rest desired. She rested, and the next morning said at the breakfast-table, "If your elders had administered to me I would have to acknowledge they had blessed me."

I informed her of the various ways God had blessed those who sought him, and would bless them now, and requested her to acknowledge the hand of God in the blessing received. But it was only a few days until her opposition was as intensely manifested as before this event, and I was led by the Spirit to inform her that if she continued her opposition she would suffer another injury, one like unto the first, from which by the blessing of God she would be relieved; that if her opposition continued after this she would be visited by an affliction from which she would not recover unless she consented to obey the Lord so far as light had been and would be given to her. This she made light of, yet in a short time after, while I was absent from home in attendance at a conference at Magnolia, about three and one half miles from where we were then living, while she was taking a short walk near the home, she fell and injured the other shoulder, like the first injury, so far as she or we could tell, and when my wife came to her the first thing she said was, "I wonder if Frank has been praying that I should kill myself."

When I returned home I found her in intense agony as a result of the injury, and I asked her what she wished I should do, but she could not consent to having the elders. The next morning she was willing that I should bring the elders, when I brought Elders Magnus Fyrando and William Chambers, whom I informed of her prejudices, and of her past experiences. Immediately, through the administration, she was relieved of all pain, and continued relieved. It took some weeks before the shoulder was strong, but it gradually grew stronger till it was as strong as the other, and as it had ever been. While she acknowledged that she had received a great blessing, she would ascribe it to the fact that these men were good men, and not because of any special authority resident in the elders of the church, and it was but a few weeks till her opposition was manifest very bitterly again.

Only a short time elapsed till she was attacked with a rapidly growing inward tumor, and her life was despaired of. The neighbors who visited her told us that she could not live, and some thought her time of life very short. One evening some of them said that they did not expect to see her alive in the morning. This was in the afternoon. She realized that she had but a short time to live unless a change should come, and she spoke of her fears to me, and requested of me to know what I thought she ought to do.

Immediately the Spirit instructed me to say, "If you will get the consent of your mind to go to the General Conference (which would convene in about three weeks), and there listen to the preaching of the word, and make a prayerful, and, so far as possible, an unprejudiced investigation, and, if convinced, will obey, you will be healed." She turned her face from me, and I stepped out to give her time for meditation. Shortly I returned to her bedside, and she said, "I have the consent of my mind to do as you have said." Within two hours the tumor had broken, and the next day she was up, doing some sewing preparatory to attending the conference, at which place she was baptized after a severe struggle with herself.

This experience has been of value to me in my ministry. It gave me a better understanding how to meet the prejudices of others, and to what extent a prejudiced person may honestly go and yet God show them mercy.

One of the strangest experiences through which I have passed was in a case where one was possessed of an evil spirit, which I will briefly relate. This experience occurred at Valley, Nebraska, on Saturday evening, at the close of a conference session of the Northern Nebraska District, at the time when Elder A. H. Smith was in charge of that mission. Just at the close of the evening service Bro. Jack Suttles came to the schoolhouse where the conference was being held, and requested of me that some one go to a place about eighty rods away, and cast out an evil spirit. I presented this request to Bro. A. H. Smith, who said to me, "You go, and take others with you as you may select." I told him of my weariness, and requested that he release me, and send some one else; but he said, "Go." I went, and took three other brethren with me, finding the house full of people, and the greatest confusion existing, some crying: one thing and some another, and the one possessed screaming so as to be heard for quite a distance. They had strapped the one possessed both hands and feet, and six strong men to hold him on the floor to prevent him from injuring himself or others. I learned upon inquiry that there was no oil present. When it arrived I gave some to the person possessed, which he spat out with spitefulness onto the people near him, but from this act he became weaker, and more docile, and we laid hands upon his head and rebuked the evil spirit, and the person was immediately relieved, and was in his right mind. The next day he was at the services, and a week from that time he was baptized.

At one time in my missionary work I became very much discouraged because I could not see better results following my labors. During the night I had a vision, whether waking or sleeping I can not tell, but it seemed that I was awake, which gave me the encouragement that I then needed, and has been of encouragement to me since. I thought that I was commanded to go and make a proclamation to the residents of the town in which I then lived, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." I immediately started; but as I went up one side of the main street, crying this proclamation to the people, I saw many engaged at their various occupations, only one stopping from his work to listen, and my discouragement was intense when I neared the starting place, when a voice from above cried to me, "Have faith in God," this being accompanied with such power that I was thrilled through and through, and felt its application. When I have felt somewhat discouraged in my ministerial work this has by the Spirit been brought to my remembrance, and I have been sufficiently reconciled to conditions to endure them more patiently.

When quite young in the work I was given the spirit of prophecy, and the unwise use of it at that early day has been a source of considerable trial to me. I thought that everything made known to me through this gift was to be presented to the public. At the time had in mind I was in a social meeting. The Spirit rested upon me, giving me certain information that to me was of value, but I now realize it should not have been made public, but through lack of wisdom I arose and made it known. Some who had been in the church longer than I, came to the home and said that the spirit that gave me the information was of the Devil. I knew that it was the Spirit of God through which the information was given, if I had ever had the Spirit of God, and if I had never had the Spirit of God I knew that I had been deceived, and I came near denying the manifestation of the Holy Spirit. Because of what this brought to me by way of anguish of soul, when I realized how near I had come to committing so serious a sin, I besought the Lord to take this gift from me, which he did, and for years I did not have it. I thought of this experience in after years, and questioned whether I had the right to ask relief from any responsibility that God had placed upon me, and I confessed my wrong in asking that the gift be taken from me when I should have asked for wisdom to have borne the responsibility which accompanies the possession of such a precious gift, and expressed my willingness to assume this responsibility, if it was the will of the Lord to again bestow it upon me, and through its use I could glorify him. It was restored, but I did not enjoy the freedom in its use, till of late years, as I had previous to the experience just related.

I have selected these experiences from among the many I have had, each of which has associated with it a lesson to others, besides giving such features of my experiences as will aid others in seeing some of the characteristics of my nature and the weaknesses that I have had to contend with and the manner in which the Lord has helped me.

God has been exceedingly gracious to me by warning me of dangers, staying the hand of those who would have done me injury, and the tongue of the slanderer, and in supplying my needs. He has helped me to crucify my pride, that my wants might not be far in excess of my needs, so that I might not so seriously feel the sacrifice of a missionary as I otherwise would. I have been informed of sickness in the family when I was far from them, and also of their temporal needs, supplies being sent to me in providential ways at the very time needed to relieve their extreme wants. My companion has been visited with the spirit of healing, as have also my children, and angels have given instruction that has changed the conditions of the home marvelously, but to do more than to refer to these facts would occupy too much space in this brief biography.

My soul longs for wisdom and ability to do more as age advances, but the activities of both mind and body remind me that I must expect to do less, which suggests that I must do what I do with greater wisdom, and be patiently subject to the instruction of the Master, "Have faith in God." I labor in hope that the future unwritten biography of my life will not be associated with less of the grace and power of God than that which is past and recorded.

To be continued as time progresses, and future years shall unfold the wisdom of its publication.

In hopes of eternal life, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS.—PART II.

Is it not the consummate essence of folly to antagonize the fact of a possible greater progress, larger and better possibilities of the soul, because we have not as yet experienced them? This is about as reasonable as the infidel posing as a critic of the Christian religion because he has not experienced the spiritual blessings of the gospel. To believe in the possibility of a life of holiness, righteousness, and coöperation with God in a far greater sense than we now enjoy it, is undoubtedly the first step towards its attainment. A greater amount of practice of the glorious religion we have would make effectual many prayers of the ministry and others of the church; and, to say the least, would relieve the especial ministry from the burden of pastoral duties now necessary in some branches because of their low spiritual condition.

Just as truly as plants strive to cast off impediments and heal their wounds, so should we in our spiritual warfare cast from us everything that makes encroachments and eats into our spiritual life. Darkness is the absence of light, in a physical as well as in a spiritual sense. So can we truly say that evil is the absence of good, and good the absence of evil. With equal propriety can we also say, that true living manifests the absence of greed and everything evil, having a disposition to elevate self above the surroundings. It seeks no advantage over others. Christ's cause being that of humanity, ours, to be subservient to it, must harmonize in beautiful detail. Therefore our aims should not be centered in self, but with certain propriety it will show an expression of love towards the great brotherhood.

In taking upon us the name of Jesus Christ, to act as his agent, have we regrets for the world? If this be true, how can we sing sincerely, "Jesus, I my cross have taken, all to leave and follow thee"? A longing for the frivolities and carnal things of the world is not the proper life of a Saint; but is in striking contrast therewith. "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62. Too many people, in the acceptance of religion, are not impressed with the fact of the necessity of a change of life, for but little results, if any, better than the world is manifested. Whenever we hear a loud profession and see no practical results demonstrated, but rather a glaring lack of harmony between the profession and the requirements of that profession, we know there is something wrong. It is the faithful "doers of the word and not hearers only" that will be the successful ones and will carry the laurels of victory in the race of life. Thus we must come to the position that Christianity is more than a belief; it is a vindication of it by faith and works.

The Christian religion and all that pertains to it is simply a means to an end, and that end is eternal life. This means that if we permit it will lead to perfection and thus we become like God. The machinery of the church, when in operation, has for its grand purpose the character building of man and the elimination of all evil. If we willingly walk down the path of life hand in hand with this latter-day work, there will be a gradual transformation of our natures that makes for everything that pertains to nobility of Christian manhood. Our personal influence will give a soothing balm of unity for discord and disruption; solidarity for the selfish strife and struggle of human interests; service for those in need, which is indicative of light and spiritual life from Him who is the source of all light and life. We will have boldness in declaring the principles of right; yet within there will be confiding trust, with the love of God in us manifesting child-like simplicity. There will be crowded from the heart all bitterness and rancor. No place will be found for hate, clamor, discord, or any evil thing. The love of God will swell in each nature and the whole delight will be in the "law of the Lord." One will learn to love as the Master did while among men, overcoming evil with a superfluity of good. He will manifest a consciousness in every way holy that "thinketh no evil" and recognizes the virtue and goodness in others. Are we right, then, dear reader, when we insist that any type, model, thought, or spiritual ideal that does not lead to pure holiness and perfection, is unsafe and therefore unworthy to hold to when we strive to make the best of our possibilities? If our lives are fruitful, with God we will have a coöperation of unlimited resources from which to draw for every needful thing.

Says Paul, "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."—Philippians 3: 14. Indeed it is a high calling to be a Saint of God; but the mark is only attained by unwavering fidelity to the truth for its own sake, untrammelled by worldly tradition and wrong-doing. Toward one another we can sincerely hope and pray, "and this also we wish, even your perfection."—2 Corinthians 13: 9. Paul also spoke "wisdom among them that are perfect," and why not the servants of God do the same to-day? It is contemplated in the law, "that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."—Colossians 1: 28.

Life is a succession of conditions; in other words, a period of preparation. To be good and to do good is the supreme end; not to do right for fear of the judgment; but to do right because it is right. "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because then deeds are evil."—John 3: 19. "And if a man strive for masteries, he is not crowned, except he strive lawfully."—

2 Timothy 2: 5. Evil deeds lead to darkness spiritually, but generally the darkened condition precedes the action. So, no matter which way we view it, the ultimatum is darkness and sin. So also righteous deeds lead to light, and light to spiritual goodness, and from this simple analysis we reason the necessity of the life being holy and pure, that the greatest light possible be obtained. The law of the Lord and the will of man should ever be blended if the best results occur in Christian warfare to influence the world. Perfection being the ultimatum contemplated in the scheme of redemption, with assurance we say that to put on Christ at least carries with it the idea to put on the characteristics of Christ, so far as righteousness and holiness are concerned.

Life is a generous gift from God. (See Genesis 2: 7; Psalms 8: 4, 5; 36: 9; Acts 17: 28.) Eternal life also is a gift from our merciful Father. (See Romans 6: 23; Hebrews 5: 9; 1 Corinthians 6: 20.) In all reason should not the rational procedure be, taking under advisement these facts, that our life should be expended or used for him? "Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 12: 13. Again, "And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God."—Micah 6: 8. Again, "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead to sin is freed from sin."—Romans 6: 6, 7. Again, "And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness."—Ephesians 4: 24. Again, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."—Colossians 3: 3. Thus God is our greatest benefactor. He has given us life, prosperity, home, loved ones, and above all, the gospel and the hope of eternal life. Well might the question be asked, What are we doing in return to compensate him for his wonderful goodness to us? How willing, then, should we be to respond to his loving-kindness? We should carefully consider. Only the right kind of service is acceptable: "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. . . . Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Mark 12: 35, 36. "For he that will love life, and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile; let him eschew evil, and do good; let him seek peace and ensue it."—1 Peter 3: 10, 11. "The friendship of the world is enmity with God. Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God."—James 4: 4. Put on the whole armor of God that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."—Ephesians 6: 11. Thus it is seen that a life proper is one of true principles. Whatever principles we follow, accordingly our lives will be also. We must be governed by right principles. Principles are of no worth when separate from human activities; but when honored and obeyed, of inestimable value as a beaming star of hope that ever points to nobler endeavor.

Each one individually, as well as all collectively, by reason of worthiness, should regard the other. "Ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men."—2 Corinthians 3: 2. So faithful and true should we be to the covenant we have made that we will be "living epistles," for within we should contain the ennobling truth which will beam forth to be a benediction to all. That which makes for improvement of the spiritual life of man must be continually employed.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Or who shall stand in his holy place? He that has clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation."—Psalm 24: 3, 5. "These are the things that ye shall do; speak ye every man the truth to his neighbor; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: and let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbor; and love no false oath; for all these are things that I hate, saith the Lord."—Zechariah 8: 16, 17. "Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."—2 Corinthians 7: 1. It is not a spontaneous growth, as the mushroom that grows up in one night, but a constant advancement, a "perfecting of holiness" toward the divine liking. "To the end he may stablish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."—1 Thessalonians 3: 13. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Romans 6: 22, 23.

Thus the Scriptures abound in evidence voicing the fact that "the beauty of holiness" is the reasonable service the Lord requires. Thus to become a disciple means for us to be put wholly in the way of truth. Let us render to the Lord that proper tribute of praise, with a broken heart and a contrite spirit; and bear always in mind that we only gain eternal life through faithful living to the end. A fit comparison of this very matter is made by Eliphaz the Temanite when he uses the figure, "Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season."—Job 5: 26.

To produce a shock of corn fully matured it requires that the seed must first be sown, and that seed must have the germ of life, with a proper soil to grow in; proper cultivation is necessary, a supply of proper nourishment gives a gradual growth, and the adversities to contend with and overcome until maturity, are all to be considered. So also are like conditions necessary to develop spiritual life and maturity. The lapse of time is not always life proper, but how and for what we live. The supreme end is to glorify God.

If we command honor we must be honorable. We must give benefits to others as well as to receive. In this way we give the world the strength of our character and light. True kindness and charity is thus founded on kindly thought for others. Like the busy honey-bee, each one will contribute honey for the hive. Each one should be a helper.

When we send a child to school we expect him to advance and not all his school days be spent in the first reader. So also in the gospel school we are supposed to advance until graduation.

The man that does things right is the successful man. The sculptor works with dint and courage in carving the statue from the block of crude granite; so should we in rounding out a proper Christian character. "For now we live if we stand fast in the Lord."—1 Thessalonians 3: 8. Yes, true Christianity is the science of learning to do things right. This attainment is the priceless gem that should be sought by all in the church. It should be the object of all our endeavors. That we are to-day on the threshold of a marvelous development, an unfolding process, so to speak, of a higher and better spiritual life, is patent to all those alive to the potential magnitude of this great latter-day work.

The objective point of attention with some in the past seems to have been downward instead of upward to the mark of the high calling. This false objective should be deplored and a need for a better regulation be discerned. We must ensue peace and strive for greater spiritual prosperity. That we should emancipate ourselves from the thralldom of sin is the evident accomplishment contemplated by God. "But as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. Because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy."—1 Peter 1: 15, 16. This is again affirmed by Paul, "That we should be holy and without blame before him in love."—Ephesians 1: 4. Indeed it is intended "to present you holy and unblamable and unreprouvable in his sight."—Colossians 1: 22. (See also Colossians 3: 10-15.) Yes, truly we should serve him "in holiness and righteousness before him all the days of our lives."—Luke 1: 74. "For God hath not called us unto uncleanness but unto holiness."—1 Thessalonians 4: 7. Within us then will be manifested in our bodies a "living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12: 1.

To ancient Israel it was "Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy."—Leviticus 20: 7. And under the gospel covenant the command is the same, "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see God."—Hebrews 12: 14.

Not blind faith but a living, unwavering faith that will enable us to move on and on, and daily adjust ourselves more and more to the truth and plan of God, should be the only rational faith that will bring results. A faith of this character is within itself a constant prayer. This divine faith is given to us in the gospel if we live right; but we should remember that it can be cultivated and matured. It will enable us to be constant and abiding, and qualifying us to understand "the deep things of God"; and within will be the elements of purity and innocence, humility, and meekness, as we see in the little child. When we have such faith we trust God wholly and the peace that fills the soul "passeth all understanding." It will lead us to be earnest and solicitous to impart to others the great benefits we have received. It will establish us firm as a rock in confidence before God, and the waving shocks of infidelity in their efforts to reason away God and his law will seem simple and but the work of a fool. "Oh, for a faith that will not shrink" under any trial or tribulation. Let us seek more permanency in faith, purity, and integrity, that truly with us there will be beautiful harmony and rhythm in our lives to the annunciated gospel of these last days. While it has been glad tidings to us, let us make it such to others.

"Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful. But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper. The ungodly are not so; but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous. For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous; but the way of the ungodly shall perish."—Psalm 1: 1-6.

ASLEEP OR RESTING?

Silence is often one of the most forceful arguments used against this work in which we are engaged; not only by those who are without, but also by the members of the church, in part at least. When we who are in an isolated condition, and those who come in contact with us in our daily life, can see no higher mode of life than that which they see in others of the various churches, is it not because of silence? Why stand with silent spirits? Why be slow in obeying the command of the Lord? Are we not of the people of God's choice? Shall our lives not be such that those who know us will be able to recognize in us a higher and better life than in those who have not this blessed hope?

Christ said, "Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall the earth be salted." When we notice a home with those at its head who are supposed to be the salt of the earth, and by continued experience find no system of worship, hear no offer of thanks, no morning or evening prayer; or in case we hear these, and our attention is called (by observation) to literature that could not uplift the lowest, a class of reading that only kills desire for all that is better, it is then we must conclude that some one has been silent when they should have been otherwise.

Let us examine ourselves and see if we are on the silent list in any manner where it would be better for us, and those around us, if we were more diligent. According to the Apostle Paul, God is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him. Shall we, by our lack of diligence, approve of that silent method of injuring ourselves and others?

We pray for the redemption of Zion, or the building up of God's kingdom. Are not we a part of that kingdom (or Zion)? If so, then where will we commence our work? The inspired writer said, Be not hearers of the word only, but doers. Where is our starting-point? At home. He who conquers himself is greater than he who rules a nation. Our heart, our own disposition, and the affairs of right worship to God in our own home are of much importance in this warfare in which we are enlisted.

Again, Christ says, Unless ye become as a little child, ye can not enter the kingdom. We could readily take this to mean that we must lay aside all our desires, and become without purposes of our own. Let God's will be ours. If there is no work, there can be no reward. If God is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him, then it seems that without diligence we can not expect the reward. Let us consecrate ourselves to God's service with fasting and prayer. Paul says, Pray without ceasing. Let us pray that we may make the will of the Lord our first thought, that we may thoroughly crucify the lusts of the flesh, and ever be found with a good word of praise for our Lord and our God.

Can we sleep while the battle is on? Can we, the young of the church, sleep, or stand calm without emotion, watching the conflict? Or will we quench the Spirit that rises within us and causes us to desire to be in the battle's front? Shall we work or sleep? Let us not say, with doubting hearts, How?

Christ said, "Ask and ye shall receive." James said, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God." The exhortation of the Apostle Paul was to pray without ceasing, and the promise is that God will reward those that diligently seek him. Where is our excuse? Behind what shall we stand? When shall we be able to say to our conscience, We have exercised all faith and diligence toward God? Surely if we consider the many promises that our Lord has extended us, we can not be silent; but it will call forth an effort that is the best within us. Surely, the best of our lives is not over-sufficient for one who has guarded us through all trials, and blessed us with all that we have, and all that we are. Let us so conduct our every-day life that we may be worthy of the good things God has in store for the just.

To the young of the church: Let us by prayer and fasting desire to obtain that Spirit that will so prepare us that when the work demands, we shall be worthy and willing to fill any position our Lord may require of us.

OVER THIRTY RELIGIOUS BODIES IN CONFERENCE.

PHILADELPHIA, November 29.—More than thirty religious bodies, representing eighteen million souls, will send delegates to this city this week and part of next to participate in one of the most remarkable religious gatherings in the history of Protestantism in America.

So comprehensive a convention as this first meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christian America, probably could never have been held prior to the beginning of the twentieth century. The convention, which will be in session from Wednesday evening, December 2, to Tuesday afternoon, December 8, has been in preparation for six years, but is more particularly the fruit of the interchurch conference held in Carnegie Hall, New York City, in 1905.

For the first time the Protestant churches of the United States will be practically and officially, though not organically, united in one body. While this "federal council" will be without legislative or judicial authority, its recommendation will carry tremendous weight.

The objects of the federal council will be:

To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church.

To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the churches.

To secure a larger combined influence for the churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life.

To assist in the organization of local branches of the federal council to promote its aim in their communities.

Among the churches which have approved the plan of federation and appointed delegates, are:

Baptist churches, the Christian connection, the Congregational churches, Church of the Disciples, Evangelical Association, Evangelical German Synod, Society of Friends, Evangelical Lutheran Church, the Mennonites, Methodist Episcopal Church, North Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and both African Fellowships of Methodists, Methodist Protestant Church, Moravian Church, the Presbyterian churches, Protestant Episcopal, Primitive Methodist, Reformed churches, Reformed Presbyterian churches, United Brethren, United Evangelical Church, United Presbyterian Church, Welsh Presbyterian Church, and Seventh Day Baptist.

At the opening session on Wednesday evening at the Academy of Music, Reverend Doctor William H. Roberts, who was permanent chairman of the inter-church conference of 1905, will preside. Subsequently meetings will be held in Witherspoon Hall under the chairmanship of such representative men as Thomas C. McMillard, of Chicago, moderator of the national council of Congregational churches; Reverend Doctor J. S. Kieffer, president of the general synod of the Reformed Church in the United States; Reverend Doctor Baxter P. Fullerton, moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America; Right Reverend Ozi W. Whitaker, bishop of the Protestant diocese of Pennsylvania, and Bishop S. C. Breyfogel of the Evangelical Association.

Simultaneous popular evening meetings will be held in various places. On Sunday two great interdenominational meetings will convene, one in the interest of "The church and labor," the other on "Interdenominational brotherhood." On Monday evening the city churches will give a reception to the delegates in the Academy of Music.—Kansas City Journal, November 30, 1908.

RABBIS RETURN THANKS.

Four Hebrew rabbis on one platform at the new Temple Israel yesterday morning found fervent cause for Thanksgiving. At 10.30 o'clock the temple was filled with a large congregation. The service was distinctly a Jewish one, and the congregation was largely made up of followers of that faith from all parts of the city. Rabbi Mendel Silber, Rabbi Henry Messing, Rabbi Adolph Rosentreter and Rabbi Leon Harrison gave the addresses. The day was described by Rabbi Harrison as one "when the whole nation forgets its differences and becomes one in gratitude to God."

In Rabbi Harrison's address he spoke warmly of national freedom, and the freedom of the Jew in America, "where every door is open, and even the honored places of political preferment welcome the Jew." He mentioned that a Jew is in the cabinet, and spoke with enthusiasm of President Roosevelt's recent published address to the people, in which he stated that there was no reason why religious belief should bar any one from public office, and predicted the possibility that a Jew might occupy the President's chair were his qualities fitting. "In this age, in this country," said Doctor Harrison, "the Christian for the first time fully and literally justifies the preaching of the brotherhood of man."

Doctor Messing read a number of pertinent quotations on reasons for thankfulness, styling his production a "boquet from the literary garden." Rabbi Rosentreter spoke eloquently in German, expressing gratitude for a free land, with free opportunities, in which the Jew, as all others, should merit his blessings by forgetfulness of self in service for others, and by charity for the poor.

Rabbi Silber contrasted the pitiful attitude of those who go through life complaining and criticising with those others who are grateful for all blessings. "To the Jew," he said, "gratitude is more than a virtue; it is a duty. The first thing the Jewish mother teaches her little child to say, when he opens his eyes in the morning, is, 'I thank thee, I recognize thy blessings, I acknowledge thee, oh, eternal God.'"

The hymn, "My country, 'tis of Thee," was sung by the entire congregation. Doctor Harrison's address followed. His text was from the twenty-third Psalm, "My cup runneth over."

"We forget the materials out of which the cup, or the life, is made; some are of the earth, earthy; some are brazen; some are silver, precious yet modest; some are wrought into purest gold; but, forgetting the differences in cup or in beverage, we are exceedingly joyful because for each man there is a sufficiency, an ample provision for his wants," he said, in his introduction.

Doctor Harrison spoke of America as "the favored child of God, clothed with the coat of many colors, like Joseph of old—a Titanic nation." He spoke of the method of changing administrations in America, peaceably, quietly, from presidency to private citizen, and vice versa. Such changes in many countries could not be wrought without revolution and bloodshed. In contrast to the United States the limitations were mentioned which are placed upon the Jew in Germany and in France, and particularly in Russia. He was thankful in a high degree for the public schools.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat, November 27, 1908.

We are sure that very many of our readers will enjoy to the full the reminiscences contained in the following letter from our beloved missionary, Sr. Burton. In the early days of our connection with the church we remember with what eagerness we searched the HERALD for her articles, and when found, we never failed in receiving from them the inspiration we needed to quicken our own desires of pressing on and laboring more faithfully in the Master's cause, and through all the long years that have followed, to say nothing of her constant labors as a missionary, she has ever been faithful in helping to support our church publications, and by this means sharing with all the rich spiritual food bestowed upon her by the Master. May her own life and the life of her husband be long spared as a blessing to both the church and the world.

Dear Sister Walker: Ever since the Irvington reunion I have been intending to write you about it, that is, what it was to us, and how it appeared to me as an important way-mark on life's journey. Others may have written of the good spiritual season enjoyed, but to me, the event had a peculiar significance that others did not experience. And though circumstances have caused this prolonged delay, I believe it is not too late even now to write you of it. It was not only the joy of meeting with the beloved Saints of our native land, and experiencing the gladness of such a cordial and hearty welcome home, (we have returned from missions many times, and have received a cordial welcome, but it was never before like this time,) and being able to converse in our own language—all of which filled us with a joy that my words can but poorly express—but it was what was brought to my mind that made the event a fulfillment of what was portrayed years ago, and opened to my mental view the whole circle of our missionary life which began and closed on those grounds. It was on those same grounds, then known as Washington Corners, that my husband and I first met with a gathering of the Saints, a semiannual conference. That was in the month of September, 1874. And the conference was presided over by Bro. A. H. Smith, then an apostle, and president of the Pacific Slope Mission. And it was on those grounds, also, one year later, while A. H. Smith still presided, that my husband received his first commission outside of branch work. It was from there that he (and I might say we,) started forth with the glad message of the restored gospel. And now after thirty-seven years of missionary work, we had returned from our last foreign mission, and the first gathering of the Saints we met with was on those grounds; and the presiding officer, a son of A. H. Smith, who was holding the same offices as did his father at the time of our starting forth, both as apostle and president of the Pacific Slope Mission, though the home of each was, and is, far from California. It seemed to me to be a peculiar coincidence; that it did not "just happen so," but had been brought about by the unerring hand that had guided us through life. And as I thought over our lives, and our work, it was pleasing to me that the daughter of one of the first-fruits of our mission to Nova Scotia, the first outside of California, should have taken my place as wife and helper of the missionary in charge of the South Sea Islands at the close of our last mission. And during those peaceful days of the reunion, I was mentally living over my life, and consequently my testimonies were of the far past. And when hands were laid on my husband's head, and he was being ordained a patriarch, and thereby absolved from further missionary work, I was almost startled by the vividness of the scene it brought to mind, even that of the end of Joseph's vision in Brighton, in 1878, in which he saw a servant sent forth bearing a palm with many leaves upon it, and when all the leaves had been given away he returned to the same place from which he started, and rendered back the leafless stalk; and was crowned.

Some of my readers will call to mind the vision, but many never have heard it, therefore I will here rehearse it. He was walking in a solitary place, when suddenly a change came over him, and he fell to the ground. He wrote me briefly of it two days after as follows: "I saw and heard, that as iniquity was abounding in the land, the days were near when empires and kingdoms should fall and governments be dissolved. And the artillery of warriors, pistols of communists, and daggers of assassins, would deluge the earth with blood. The angel of the Lord would be sent forth with instructions to smite the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans and they should break their bars.

"Fire from heaven should be sent upon the earth, sweeping with a terrific roaring, rushing, crackling noise through the cities, towns, and over the earth.

"I saw one sent forth from a beautiful city, a servant. The Master gave him a palm in one hand, on the other arm was written in bright golden letters, 'Bind up the law, and seal up the testimony'; and as he went, I heard a shout that resounded through, and filled the vault of heaven, 'Come home! Come home! Come out of her my children: for her destruction is come!' It was from one mighty and strong, and as the servant went forth he gave a small leaf from the palm to such as heard the message; for none of all the inhabitants of the earth heard it, except 'the children.'

"I saw him compassed by a crowd apparently of hundreds of men, angry, savage, and determined not to let him pass; but as he neared them, they opened a way through the midst of them, and it was as though a great chain extended through the gap, each side, which restrained the angry men; and the servant went through as calm as a child, only shouting his message of 'binding up the law, and sealing up the testimony.' No power on earth could harm, or hinder him. Fast followed in his footsteps the fearful destructions of the first part of the vision; and the earth was covered with plague, pestilence, war, flood, fire, and all evil ever spoken of; and still the servant on his errand traveled until I saw that in his circuit he neared the Beautiful City again. He was met by the Master. Oh, what a welcome; and by the side of the servant was a little form looking constantly in the face of the servant, and exceedingly happy.

"I saw then that there were a great many other servants come in, having finished their missions. They were to stay out until by giving each child outside of the city a leaf from their palm they had given all away, then they were to return. And as the servant (before spoken of) and this little form by his side returned, the Master looked so sweetly on them; and then, placing a crown upon his brow, said, 'My Father told you he would give you a crown if you would be faithful; he now fulfills his promise. Enter? I heard dimly as afar off music, oh, so sweet; it drew nearer and nearer; we looked to see it, You and I; and the atmosphere opened, thousands upon thousands of angels then accompanying the King, the Lord of Glory. A voice by my side said, "Those who remain shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye."

My husband did not recognize the servant during his vision, until the crown was placed upon his head, then he remembered when the promise was made to him personally.

Yes, there sat the servant; he had fulfilled his mission, had given away all the leaves from the palm given him, and had, according to the vision, returned to the very place from which he was sent forth. It will be seen by the vision that it was during the early part of his long mission that he encountered the crowd of angry men. We recognized while in Nova Scotia that we were passing through that part of the vision, but calmly trusted in the great chain, as it were, of God's protecting arm, that restrained the angry men, though violence was threatened more than once.

I will here digress, to add a testimony I received at the time, when the spirit of persecution was in the lead, and a company of angry men, upheld by the leading members of the Baptist Church, were trying to organize themselves into a mob, more politely called a vigilance committee, with the intent to drive us out of the place. We were in Delhaven, were soon to go to South Rawdon to attend the conference of the second year of our stay in Nova Scotia. Before we left I had a dream. It was, that the day was far spent; it being dusky twilight. I was outside the house gathering a few ripe grapes from a grape-vine I had brought from California, and planted under the window of the old homestead (where my brother, Holmes J. Davison, then lived). There was only a small handful of ripe grapes on the vine; but they were large and juicy. As I secured the last one, I looked up and saw the Savior, just as I had seen him in pictures, standing by me. I was not startled or surprised; but spoke of those treasured grapes. He said, "You must go in now. As I took the first step out from the vine, a fierce wolf-dog came tearing around the corner of the house, with mouth and teeth ready to devour. The Lord was standing between me and the dog. With his left hand he took my right, and as the dog made towards me, he put forth his right hand and, covering the dog's mouth with it, gently pushed the creature back, and I saw him no more. He held my hand while we walked to the door, nor did he release it until I had ascended the three steps, and stood inside the door, and he just outside on the upper step. As I turned and stood looking at him, thinking of how gently he dealt with that fierce creature, and how if it had been one of us, i. e., people of the earth, we would have hurt it if we could, and thought it our duty to do so, he said, in a voice so gentle, "Do not go out any more to-night," and closed the door.

In the morning I related the dream; we both saw the significance, and went at once to South Rawdon, and did not return to Delhaven any more. Before the convening of conference, my sister Sophia's husband died, and we would like to have gone to her in her bereavement; but we had received our warning not to do so; and she so understood it. Yes, all the fruits from the vine we took from California, and planted in that place, the gospel, were then gathered; and it is no wonder that all the work done in Delhaven by the elders since we left, has not availed, when we remember that the Lord shut the door.

But I must return to my subject; or rather to the reunion. I thought of the tidal waves, the many destructive fires, some actually having been sent from heaven, such as that which destroyed Chicago, of how the assassins had more than once spilled the best blood of our own nation, saying nothing of others, since the sending forth of that servant; and of the great war in the East that well nigh caused, or brought to pass the fall of the great Russian Empire, and the end is not yet.* And of the call for the Saints to gather: "Come home, my children." All in fulfillment of the vision. And as the hands of the two presiding officers were on his head, it seemed like an earnest of the crowning promised by the Father. I also thought of other servants who had filled their missions before him, and in like manner been crowned with the patriarchate. And the vision had become a reality.

Such to me was the Irvington reunion, a way-mark of peculiar significance. And as I review the whole, my heart cries out, O the mercy and goodness of our God, who showeth his servants things that shall come to pass.

Letter Department

GAVELLY HILL, Birmingham, November 18, 1908.

Dear Herald: Thought you would like to know what is going on here, and if anything is being done to create public interest, or to publish the gospel in these regions. We may not be as fully alive as we might be; but we are getting livened up a little by the appearance in our midst of Mr. William Jarman, who is lecturing here; and I took upon myself to write one of our daily papers in answer to articles which appeared therein, and feel highly pleased to think the editor was good enough to publish the greater part of my replies, without destroying the sense of my letters; and have pleasure in forwarding you the four cuttings which I think would be of interest to the readers of the HERALD; more especially Mr. Jarman's reply to my first letter.

With joy and pleasure I read your columns, which give me much valuable advice and instruction. Shall try to get other subscribers for HERALD. In fact got one yesterday after reading notice. But am sorry to say we have lost one by death, a true and good Saint in very deed. It is with deep regret I am called upon to report the death of our esteemed sister, Mary Ann Fellows, member of the Summerfield Branch, Birmingham, England, being called from life at a moment's notice, while following her employment, on September 10, 1908, just before leaving off time. She was a Saint in very deed, and connected with the branch for thirty-three years. Her delight was in attending meetings and assembling with the Saints, through hail, rain, or sunshine. She was very accurate and just in financial matters, although poor. Her first thought after receiving her weekly pay was to put by a portion for tithing. The next came her portion for branch expenses; and never to my recollection was a call made upon the branch for funds but what our sister was first and foremost with her mite, never neglecting one fund to give to another; also doing all that was possible to make comfort and create pleasure and joy. If she was absent one Sunday, the next found her to duty with double subscription. Many of the Saints, when informed of the sad news, wrote me from all parts, saying, Our sister was a Saint to her heart's core; a kind Saint; surely she will be missed; faithful worker, seeking the welfare of others; gentle, kind, loving, and humble; her love was a practical one; her only pleasure and hope was in the gospel; in faithful consistency to the cause she loved, she was an example.

Her earnings were a long way from one pound, or five dollars, per week; and she had to buy food, clothing, help pay rent, give tithing, room expenses, etc. When the branch decided to purchase the land for building a new chapel, out of her hard earnings and savings, she gladly offered and paid ten pounds, about fifty dollars, down, also cheerfully giving week by week a further donation, and was longing to see the new chapel raised for the glory of God's holy cause; and we are sorry she has not been permitted to live long enough to see it built. When she heard of any one sick or in trouble, she would walk miles to visit and cheer. Her labors and duties, which were many, were cheerfully and faithfully performed, as follows: Branch secretary and recorder; Sunday-school teacher; financial secretary or collector; treasurer of Religio; collector of one thousand shilling fund for missionary purposes; ready helper at parties; visiting sick and downcast; seeking to encourage members to duty; helping clean chapel and windows. Besides this she was collector and treasurer of several funds at the works where she was employed.

Who can give a better record than this? Her relatives give expression to these words, "She loved the church." There is more in this than appears on the face of it. The respect shown by her fellow work-people at the funeral shows to what extent our sister was appreciated.

It was a sad blow to us and all who knew her, the call being so sudden. Yet her end was peaceful, and she missed a lot of pain and suffering. TRINIDAD, Colorado, November 30, 1908.

Dear Herald: We can not write of crowded houses and intense interest, as some of the missionaries in other fields. Such do not apply to Colorado, but we are doing what we can.

A month ago a telegram from Sr. Lamb, of Raton, New Mexico, called the writer to that place to meet a couple of Utah elders who were more than anxious to meet the elders of the Reorganized Church. I spoke once and gave them the privilege of our meeting-place to reply. They put up a very weak argument on the divinity of polygamy from a Bible standpoint and then vamoosed. They did not return to any of our meetings. I met them on the street afterward, but they treated me quite coolly. They seemed to me to be ashamed of their procedure, that is, if they could be ashamed.

I stayed in Raton one week and baptized a young lady who I think will be a credit to the church. I then came to this place and secured the Seventh Day Advent church for regular Sunday services at a very moderate rent. I hoped to hold a series of meetings while here, but it is almost impossible to get a building. The halls are all in use by the fraternal orders and when not occupied by them the rent is beyond our reach. I have held meetings as opportunity offered and feel that good has been done in strengthening the Saints, and as we have a public place for Sunday service we feel that the prospects are brighter for Trinidad.

The Advent minister has treated us very kindly, much more so than they usually do. He seems to be of different material than the one we met at Burlington sometime ago. This place, like many others in Colorado, is sadly in need of some one who can devote his entire time to the work. Bro. H. W. Berry, priest, is in charge of the branch and is a faithful worker, but the care of family is such that he can give but little of his time to branch work.

I expect to leave for other parts of the district very soon, but do not know just where. There are so few to do the labor in this great State and so much that should be done, we hardly know where to go first. This is a coal-mining country and there is plenty to do and good wages to be made by those who wish to follow that vocation.

Still in the work,

E. F. SHUPE.

BURNSIDE, Michigan, November 23, 1908.

Dear Herald: After reading over the letters and other articles in the HERALD this morning, I thought perhaps a few lines from this part of God's vineyard would cheer some of the careworn and weary who are trying to come up higher, that they may receive life everlasting.

I love this work and I like to read how the work is progressing in all parts of the earth. My daily prayer is for the advancement of this cause which I know to be God's eternal truth. I hope to continue faithful, although sometimes I get discouraged when clouds gather round and it seems like beating against the current. But after the dark cloud passes over and the sun begins to shine, I still cling to the rod of iron, that I may not be carried down the stream into outer darkness; for we know it is a time of trials among the Saints. Many are falling away and everything goes to show the day of Christ is near at hand. So dear Saints, it stands us in hand to be ready to meet him, that we may have on the wedding garment.

We still have prayer-meetings every Sunday morning and Wednesday evening. We met last Sunday at the home of Bro. and Sr. Pierson, and surely it was a time of rejoicing. I believe nearly all present felt the presence of God's Holy Spirit. A request was made that we come together next Wednesday evening with prayer and fasting in behalf of a brother who is afflicted, that if it be God's will he may be healed.

Our worthy Bro. Richard Weaver, who was called and ordained under the hands of Elder G. M. Shippy, although young in years, is truly a help in this part, in trying to keep up the meetings and teaching the Saints to come up higher. I believe, if faithful, the time will soon come when he will be called to do a greater work in spreading the gospel. There are others in this part, also, who if faithful will in God's own time be called into the priesthood.

Ever praying that we may all live worthy of the name we bear and be gathered among the redeemed, is the prayer of your sister in Christ,
CORA E. JOHNSTON.

From the Far South.

Dear Herald: This finds the writer in the far southern part of Louisiana, where for the first time the great gospel message has been sounded. Elder James M. Smith and myself are here near Abbeyville, a city founded over two hundred years ago, and where the exile Acadians arrived from their far away Canadian home.

We crossed on foot, with grips in hand, for a six-mile walk, a large bayou, up whose waters we are told the boats of those banished people came from the Gulf of Mexico. Not many miles away the aged tree still stands where the beautiful maiden, Evangeline, the heroine of Longfellow's delightful poem, once stood after the long and perilous voyage was over. The contemplation of that historic event and the scenes surrounding us which bring it vividly to our mind, certainly create within our bosom a longing desire to see the great latter-day work presented to the descendants of that unfortunate people.

We had a few of them out to hear us and hope they will continue to come. They are all of French descent and adherents to the Catholic religion. Some of them have a mixture of Spanish and Indian blood flowing in their veins.

We are the guests of Mr. James Kite and wife who arrived here twelve years ago from Keokuk, Iowa. Sr. Margaret Kite is the daughter of Elder Alexander Struthers, one of the faithful and well remembered workers in the early days of the Reorganization. His father was an elder in England in the days of Joseph Smith, Jr.

At Eunice we met Bro. and Sr. Helms, who came from Texas, and we were rejoiced to find them still in the faith.

At Evengeline we found Bro. and Sr. T. C. Brady, formerly of Iowa. Eunice and Evangeline are towns not far from Abbeyville, where we now are.

If we could only speak French we would be all right here; but as we are unacquainted with that language we will move on. Most all the people are Creole and very few of them can speak English.

Hoping that these few items may be of interest and expressing a desire to press on in the service of God, we remain as ever,

Faithfully,

EDGAR H. SMITH.

News From Branches

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The month of November was a busy and profitable one. Beautiful lessons of strength and instruction were received through Brn. Tanner, Archibald, Remington, and Burgess.

A forty-five minute sermon was delivered Thanksgiving morning, after which forty-five minutes were enjoyed in a social way, when testimonies of thanksgiving and prayer were offered.

On Tuesday evening, the 24th, a stereoptican lecture was delivered in our church auditorium on tuberculosis, by the St. Louis Society, engaged in teaching of the treatment and prevention of that dreaded disease.

The regular branch priesthood meeting was held November 2.

Bro. Tanner baptized Bro. Baker, husband of Sr. Bessie Roberts-Baker, and we are pleased indeed to have so estimable a young man to work with us for the Master.

One of our very worthy young brethren passed from this life November 8. His funeral-service was held from his home in Alton, Illinois, the sermon being preached by Bro. Tanner.

Your sister in Christ,

2739 De Jong Street.

E. M. PATTERSON.

SPOKANE DISTRICT.

During the past seven weeks, Elder S. S. Smith and W. W. Fordham have been laboring in Nez Perce County, Idaho. Meetings began in Deer Creek Schoolhouse one hundred and eighty miles south of Spokane, on Craig Mountain, five thousand feet high, and twenty-five miles from railroad. Eighteen sermons were preached, a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school organized. A very good attendance and attention given to the latter-day message, a number of books were sold, and subscriptions for papers taken. We were cared for and assisted on our way to Reubens, where there was only one available place, a Presbyterian church. This was refused us. Members in Culdesac and Rosetta were visited. The gospel message has been preached for a witness, with little effect, at the latter place.

A series of meetings was begun in Glasby Schoolhouse, in the Cottonwood Creek, about half of the inhabitants are Indians, mostly of the Presbyterian faith. Thirteen sermons were preached to interested listeners. About fifty were present at close. One requested baptism, but owing to objections by relative, it was thought best to wait awhile.

The next opening was in George School. Four services were held, closing with good feeling, and request to come back.

By request of Sr. Sophronia Fels, meetings were begun in Fix Ridge Schoolhouse, at Juliaetta, and continued eight evenings. Only a few came out; but they seemed deeply interested, and from present indications will come into the kingdom.

The writer left for Palouse, Washington. Bro. S. S. Smith to begin meetings in Union Schoolhouse. The last two heard the latter-day gospel for the first time.

Bro. I. M. Smith will begin a week's meetings at Turnbrow Flats, October 29.

The Spokane District conference will convene December 12 and 13, in Saints' chapel, Spokane. The following missionaries are expected to be present: S. S. Smith, I. M. Smith, F. J. Chatburn, A. J. Layland, and E. Keeler, patriarch, of Portland, Oregon, also local priesthood. This will be a good opportunity for all who wish blessings.

An error occurred in last items. Bro. Fred Williams is president of Sagle, Idaho, Branch, instead of Wilbur Yates.

Elder Wardell Christy was the speaker at the Saints' church Sunday morning. Elder Holloway spoke in the evening. The afternoon prayer-meeting was rather more spiritual than usual. One brother referred to John Wesley's statement that the gifts of the gospel had been withdrawn because the Christians had turned heathen, and warned the Saints to beware that they do not turn heathen.

Editorial

"THE EVENING AND MORNING STAR" AGAIN.

The following is an editorial from the Evening and Morning Star, published at Independence, Missouri, by the Church of Christ (Hedrickites), John R. Haldeman, editor, under date of November, 1908.

The SAINTS' HERALD, in a recent issue, gives expression to the thought that the Evening and Morning Star is engaged in a persistent effort to befoul the character of Joseph Smith. We doubt very much if the real purposes of the Star and its supporters is understood by the HERALD editor. We feel sure that no one is more anxious than we to give the Prophet a good name. At the same time we can not willfully close our eyes to what comes before us as evidence.

The writer would gladly give the savings of a lifetime if he could disprove some matters connected with the life of Joseph Smith. No mention would be made of what we regard as the shortcomings of the Prophet, were it not that a certain element demands that these shortcomings be transformed into principles of truth and righteousness, and that those who fail to acclaim them as such shall be branded as heretical.

That Joseph Smith was a prophet we believe and stand ready to try to prove; that he had his weaknesses, we are forced to admit. But though we must admit his mistakes, yet we feel the good deeds he accomplished will vastly outweigh his mistakes. Furthermore, we believe that future generations, in the contemplation of the good he has accomplished, will forget to censure; for, as time elapses, the effect of his mistakes will be gradually eliminated and the great good to flow from his righteous acts will be wonderfully increased. An imperishable monument to the preponderance of good in the Prophet's life and ministrations stands represented in the thousands of devoted, humble souls to be found wherever believers in his mission live out their lives.

We await the decision of time to vindicate the course pursued by the Church of Christ towards Joseph Smith, certain that the day will come when our motives will be understood and our principles venerated. In the meantime, let our critics, if they wish, question the wisdom of our course, but in the name of righteous judgment, please do not accuse us of seeking to "befoul the character of Joseph Smith."

We insert this for the reason that there seems to be a disposition expressed in it to disavow any intention or motive to "befoul the character of Joseph Smith."

In what we wrote and of which this editorial complains, we think we wrote nothing with reference to the motive which might have moved the active portion of the Church of Christ, but did call in question what they were doing, and what had been persistently done, in the recognized organ of the church from Granville Hedrick in his Truth Teller, published in Illinois, until the last issue of the Evening and Morning Star. Not only have their acknowledged organs persistently been used in the attempt to disparage the character of Joseph Smith by alleging acts of wrong-doing against him as early as 1834, by which acts he had so far fallen from the favor of God that he was the victim of false spirits and gave false revelations by which the people were led into bondage to seducing spirits and made the advocates of false doctrines, but, in addition thereto, they have published pamphlets and booklets charging Joseph Smith with being the putative author and originator of the dogma and practice of plural marriage and himself as being a polygamist. These pamphlets so issued, for which the Church of Christ is responsible, have been circulated from their office and by their elders privately to the general public, and especially among the members of the Reorganized Church, wherever opportunity served, or there appeared a disposition to inquire into the faith of others, or were shaky in regard to their own philosophy.

We have just right to find fault with this method of procedure; not only as to the wisdom of it, but as to the disposition which prompts the doing of it; and we are pleased to notice this disavowal on the part of the Evening and Morning Star of any motive to befoul the character of Joseph Smith.

The apparent intention of the Church of Christ, as it is now represented by those who form its official organization, is to claim that the work done by Joseph Smith and others with him since some period in 1834 was not sanctioned of God, and was therefore necessarily void and of no legal effect. It is safe to state that the work done by Joseph Smith and those with him after the expulsion from Jackson County, Missouri, in which county they had hardly secured a foothold, was far greater, more widely extended and far-reaching in its effects upon the world than that done before that date, with the possible exception of the presentation of the Book of Mormon to take its place in the religious conflicts going on in the world. It was after the year 1834 that the faith of the church was formulated by an authorized assembly, its rules codified, its ministerial forces organized under Scriptural provisions, and the gospel propaganda begun which carried the Angel's Message abroad in the United States and to foreign countries. And the history of the church shows nothing clearer than that the work which was thus carried on received the active approval of the Holy Ghost, the Comforter, the Spirit of Truth, according to the promise made by Jesus Christ and the scriptural history as recorded by the evangelists and other New Testament writers.

If the good which the Prophet Joseph Smith did will overbalance the mistakes which he may have made, as this writer in the Evening and Morning Star states, in the very nature of the work which he accomplished, that done after 1834 must be taken into the account. No amount of sophistry, or assumption of virtue, upon the part of those who assail the character of Joseph Smith, for the purpose of vitiating the idea of divine approval, can dispose of the facts that the work of himself and his compeers received the marks of divine approval even up to the time of his death.

We are not now disposed to claim the mistakes which Joseph Smith made, whatever they were, should be credited to him for good or passed over without notice. The HERALD has now been the organ of the Reorganized Church for nearly a half century, and its official pages will be hunted over in vain to find any attempt to palliate or defend the wrongs which Joseph Smith or those associated with him may have done. If the Evening and Morning Star intends to state that the official membership of the Reorganized Church, including its editorial staff, are of those who demand that the shortcomings of Joseph Smith, or those of his compeers, are to be transformed into virtues or principles of truth, and that those who failed to do this should be denounced as heretics, then such statement is wide of the truth and charges that which is without foundation.

The Church of Christ had its opportunity, before the courts of the land, under the care and direction of its acting president, Charles A. Hall, in defending against the claim made by the Reorganized Church for the possession of the Temple Lot, to show that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, if they had been in possession of evidence worthy of the name of proof to have presented to the court. This they failed to do, notwithstanding the opportunity which was offered them, and the further fact that they went to the polygamists' stronghold in search of evidence. We refer to this for this reason: the secular courts are the proper tribunals for settling disputes between religious organizations in cases involving the right to the possession and use of landed property. In the trial of such cases there is a tribunal which discriminates in regard to the value of evidence, and that which is deficient in legal worth is excluded and only that which is valid is accepted. Our contention from the first, and now is, that the so-called evidences which have been adduced to convict Joseph Smith of having given the alleged revelation on plural marriage, and of himself being a polygamist, have been grossly inadequate to prove the charge made. Further than this, the Church of Christ, having failed, in its defense against the Reorganization, to show legally what it alleged as a mistake, a false theory, or a damnable doctrine and a wicked practice, whichever name may be chosen for it, it now should be precluded and estopped from urging this in its doctrinal or moral contention against the Reorganization or other portions of the believers in the message of the angel through Joseph Smith.

If the intention of the Church of Christ is to do what is suggested in the editorial, to await the arbitrament of time to permit the mistakes of Joseph Smith to be forgotten, that the good which he did may be predominant and be recognized by future generations, we suggest that those who are the responsible speakers and writers for that church set the example of forgetfulness.

We wish it distinctly understood by the foregoing suggestion that we do not wish it understood that we fear the effect of a denunciation of the mistakes or wrong-doings of Joseph Smith and his compeers, or that we hesitate to present and defend what we believe to be the honest and true and divine principles of so-called Mormonism, or the legal acts of Joseph Smith done in accordance with the law of the land and the law of God. We are of the opinion that the mistakes that Joseph Smith may have made did not separate him from the love and administration of God and the spirit of the latter-day work, any more than the mistakes of Abraham, of Moses, David, or any others of the ancient worthies separated them from the care and protection of God for the completion of the work to which they were called.

CONCERNING WILD OATS.

In this issue of the HERALD we give its readers the perusal of an excellent leader appearing in the Independence Examiner, for December 1, on the subject of sowing wild oats. The writer was evidently the editor of the Examiner and he has taken the unique method of giving his conclusions as the thoughts of a fictitious personage called Solomon Wise.

The conclusions are excellent, and coming as it does from an outside source may be considered as an every-day application and should be profitable for thought, comment, and observance among the Saints.

Many a father has had reason to regret the latitude given by parental authority, or neglect, for the sowing of wild oats upon the part of his sons. Wild oats is a profitless crop, and may even be dangerous; being of such a great variety of seed which is productive of the full corn in the ear.

If society could be assured that the sower only should be permitted to reap the matured crop, there would be less danger resulting from the sowing; but where the crop is of such a nature that children and children's children are compelled to reap in grief and sorrow, young men should be restrained so far as possible from the sowing. Unfortunately the Saints are not all free from the condemnation passed by Solomon Wise upon the over-indulgence of parents who allow their sons to obtain an experimental knowledge of the evils of society glozed over by an appellation so deceptive as wild oats.

Solomon Wise is right where he states that there should be no acceptance of the idea that there should be one law or rule for the woman in society and another for the man; the one virtuously restrictive, by which the purity of daughter, wife, and mother is merged in the glory of the woman; and the other, which passively allows the commission of that which is corrupting, soiling, and destructive of virtue, integrity, and honor on the part of the son, husband, and father. Virtue, or rather the practice of virtue, is said to be its own reward; this is only true in the sense that virtue is the result of right and clean thinking, the following of a rule prescribed by yourself for the regulation of your own conduct.

The Saints should hold the standard of purity high and then live up to it. We commend the conclusions of Solomon Wise to the readers of the HERALD.

Pastor of the M. E. Church, Lamoni, Iowa.

In the "Original Article" department of this issue we print the address delivered by Reverend Pittenger at the opening of the Graceland College winter term, as reported by Bro. L. A. Gould. The scholarly and able manner in which he handles the subject of education renders his address worthy the careful perusal of our readers.

A Christmas entertainment will be given at the church the afternoon of December 24. The senior, intermediate, and primary departments will be represented on the program.

The Straight Road

THE RESURRECTION.

The testimony of the scripture is that "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24:15.) Jesus Christ so taught. (See John 5:29.) Holy men of old saw the resurrection and were glad. Abraham was one of these, and being "tried, offered up Isaac, . . . accounting that God was able to raise him, even from the dead" (Hebrews 11:17-19), and perform what he had promised through him.

If ever man receives the earth for an inheritance or everlasting abode, it will be through the resurrection. Though the hand of the adversary has marred God's work, it has not frustrated or changed his purpose. The curse will be removed when sin shall have run its course and spent its power to blast and blight, upon the kingdoms,—animal, vegetable, and mineral.

Good remains in man and nature. The good will not be destroyed, but the dross will be removed from the crucible of human experience and trial; and from the trial, man will come forth purified.

The earth must pass through its purifying process, and be made fit for the inheritance of the righteous. (See 2 Peter 3.) Job said, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19:25, 26. He knew. He had "the witness in himself." (1 John 5:10.) It was given in answer to his question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" He will live again in the flesh. Jesus took up the body that he laid down. It was not quickened or reanimated by blood, but by Spirit. The same spiritual life will reanimate the bodies of his people. (See Romans 8:11.)

There is a philosophy and mystery of natural life that is not fully known. The fact of life; the phenomena of life is in evidence. Though the philosophy of spiritual life is not understood, spiritual life itself is a fact testified of by many witnesses. Its workings may be felt in body and mind, in healing and miracle power.

The signs were to follow the believer. (See Mark 16:17-20.) They are the workings of life in Christ, though "it doth not yet appear what we shall be" (1 John 3:2), in the full manifestation of life. The set time will reveal it. But "he that believeth . . . hath [the] everlasting life." (John 3:36.) It shall prevail in those who possess it. It shall drive death from the battle-field. The armies of heaven will be summoned for the final struggle. On a miniature scale, and at times of disease, the battle fiercely rages in the body. There are tissue-builders and tissue-destroyers. If the powers of life are sufficient, they triumph. Ofttimes they need assistance of nurse and physician.

There are forces of spiritual life. The name of Jesus Christ invokes them. He is their leader. He blazed the path of victory for men to walk in. The great and final miracle in the redemption of his people from their graves is assured by his resurrection. All who walk in the path that he trod and are willing to be tried even unto death, have promise of victory with him. The death of the body will not defeat them, even as it did not defeat him. He arose. So will they.

"There shall be a resurrection . . . of the just." Their resurrection will be first in rank and in point of time. For a thousand years they shall reign with him "till he hath put all enemies under his feet." (1 Corinthians 15:25.) "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."—1 Corinthians 15:26. It will not be destroyed till the unjust as well as the just are brought forth. Of these it is said: "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20:5.

But this last resurrection will not glorify the incorrigibly wicked. The filthy will remain filthy still. (See Revelation 22:11.)

Those who are rewarded or glorified in the resurrections will attain to a celestial, a terrestrial, or a telestial kingdom. "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Corinthians 15:41, 42.

All are to be raised, "but every man in his own order." (1 Corinthians 15:23.) The conquest of life over death will be complete in the release of every captive spirit, and the opening of every grave (then, "O grave, where is thy victory!"); but the ultimate glory, reward, or final loss, will rest with and be to every man, "according to his works."

SOWING WILD OATS.

It was very comfortable at the drug-store Saturday night, and the druggist, the lawyer, the doctor, the real estate man, and the abstracter were among those present. Solomon Wise was there, listening to the general talk and smoking his old cob pipe, to which a new, clean stem had been fitted. Presently there was a halt in the general conversation, and the old man began:

"I came to town to-day with a man who has a boy about sixteen. He is very proud of this boy, who seems to me to be a clean, manly fellow, but this father told me that all boys must sow their wild oats. That on that theory he was going to attend to the sowing and furnish the money. His idea was to get an older boy to show his son the things of the under world and teach him the ways of sowing oats, so that he might have the job over with in the best way. I have thought a long time about this, and I think that man was very wrong. I do not believe that wild oats is a crop which must grow in the mind of every boy before he is a man, and I do know that often no other crop will grow, once the evil wild oats has gotten a stand. I have in my time seen bright young men go physically disabled through a long lifetime because they sowed wild oats. I have seen others go down into the grave in most utter sadness because their own crop of wild oats was reaped by their children. I have seen marriages I considered criminal, and the taint of wild oats showing from generation to generation."

"But a boy will do these things," said the doctor. "He must go through experience to get wisdom, don't you think? I know even medical men who hold the theory, which is a very old one."

"I don't care what the old theories are, said Solomon Wise, "and I don't believe any boy has to go through evil things to be able to know and resist them. Doctor, does your daughter have to sow wild oats? Certainly not, and in her is the same human nature as in my boy. There can not be one rule for the man and another for the woman. I know men who never sowed wild oats; big, healthy, clean men, who were not ashamed to admit that they had never had experiences as they heard others tell of; men who raised families and looked the world in the face, from the foundation of a happy home. I am glad to see that this very matter is being discussed by prominent physicians and one of the great women's magazines of this country has printed some very strong articles on the subject. No, sir; the young man who keeps his mind and body sweet and clean is better prepared for life than the one who does things he is ashamed of, no matter how bitterly he may repent afterward.—Independence Examiner, December 1, 1908.

EDUCATION.

ADDRESS DELIVERED BY REVEREND H. G. PITTENGER, M. A., PASTOR OF THE M. E. CHURCH, OF LAMONI, AT GRACELAND COLLEGE CHAPEL, AT THE OPENING EXERCISES OF THE WINTER TERM, DECEMBER 2, 1908.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

I was thinking this morning as I came over to the college, with the thermometer down near the zero point, with more than the usual amount of ozone in the atmosphere, with our brain cells acting more quickly now than they have yet during this fall season, and the sunlight so beautiful, what a splendid day for the opening day of this winter term, what a splendid day to get the right kind of a start for the best term of your lives. That is the way that you ought to start every term, and thus keep up the standard through the entire time.

It was my privilege, when a student, sitting where you are this morning, to look into the faces of men like President Garfield, and other men of that kind, who came to talk to us at different times from the chapel platform, and they always brought us about the same kind of message. It might have been clothed in different language, as it was, coming from different men; but the message meant about the same. That is, that true achievement in college life is the result of application and hard work, and honesty.

I am glad, this morning, that I can stand here to talk to you, to take just these few brief moments of your valuable time; and I certainly feel honored that you have asked me to do this. And, knowing that you are representatives of different States, some of you from homes at a long distance from here, I would like to say something that would inspire your lives, and give you the key to a larger success, if I possibly could.

Every day the teachers are giving you the true philosophy of things. Education, you know, in the first place, is the right development of faculties; and, in the second place, the impartation of ideas. Primarily, development of faculties—the right development of faculties; and, secondarily, the impartation of ideas, or the reception of ideas.

Now, you are not going to get your education out of the books. To have a large library filled with books that you have been able to read, all of them, will not make you an educated man or woman. There is something deeper than this in the process of an education. And you are here, away from your homes, some of you making sacrifices that touch your very lives, and the lives in your homes; and you want to get the true theory of education, and build here the true foundation of usefulness for a lifetime.

There is an illustration of this thought that I would like to give you before I go any further with it. A few days ago I was in Southwestern Missouri and Southeastern Kansas, among the mines. They mine zinc and lead down there; but up around Lake Superior, there are iron-mines and copper-mines. Now when they take the ore out of the ground, it is a crude substance; it has to be treated to get the raw iron material out of it. It is almost worthless then. It is not very expensive; for all that they have to do is to dig it out of mother earth. But they then send it to school, to the common school, and it becomes cast iron. It is a hard substance, but valuable. Its value increases as they continue to educate it. Then the next step in the process of education is to send it to college, and it becomes wrought iron, of much greater value. Then the next step is to send it to the university, and it becomes steel of wonderful tensile strength. They put diamonds in velvet boxes; but it takes a gold box to hold the tensile, flexible hairspring of the watch. Hence you see the advancement of value as it comes up the schools of education.

There were men like Newton, the great master of natural science and electricity. He stands out before the world as one of the greatest men. General Grant was a great executive officer; could handle a million men easier than some of us can handle the man who lives in our body. Jonathan Edwards, the great theologian and evangelist, marvelous teacher of spiritual things. And so we could go on speaking of men who excel in certain lines, along certain lines, and possibly on other lines they were not strong. Now, what I would like to do, if possible, I would like to gather from each one of these men the strongest thing about them, put them altogether in one man, and build up before you such a man as that, and tell you that it is possible for you to aspire to such a manhood and such a womanhood as this. Now, if it is possible to do that in the process of an education, it is certainly worth our time to study the great problem, and how it can possibly be done.

It was my privilege to listen to Joseph Cook after he had spent thirty-three years at college as a student, and he lectured on the great subject, "Does death end all?" And it was marvelous, this great personality, looking in your face, with the great blue eyes, the wonderful face, and cultured brain, telling us just as near as human tongue could, some of the great mysteries that touch human life. And I thought that it was a great privilege that I had to look him in the face and listen to his words; and they ring through my soul this morning, and have through all the years; and from him I got some of the inspiration that has helped me in life to be a man.

Now we are in the midst of multiplied forces all around us, everywhere, unseen forces, great forces. Why, it is possible, anywhere you want to do it, to gather up enough electricity, any place that you want to build your plant, to gather up enough electricity to run all the machinery, turn all the wheels, and propel all the cars of any great city on the face of the earth, showing that there are marvelous resources all around us, that we have only commenced to approximate, and know how to get them, and to use them. It is said that Niagara has wasted five million horsepower every minute of time since she began.

Every cubic mile of air, at the point of saturation, contains seventy millions foot-ton power of pure electricity, and we are walking and living and breathing in the midst of these unseen forces all the time. And the reason why we build institutions of learning, get the very best men and women into our faculty that we can get, to teach you and to lead you, is, as near as possible, to help you grasp some of these forces and appropriate them to your own uses, and to the uses of your lifetime.

According to the nebular hypothesis, science takes us back to the time when the universe was a great limitless mass of fire-mist, away back there eons ago. As the planetary system was formed from this mass it was discovered that the moon revolved round the earth, and the earth and moon both revolved round the sun. And they have kept this up through all the centuries of time, without getting an inch out of place or a moment out of time. And this goes on and on and on.

If you were to wrap steel wires of the tensile strength of fifteen hundred pounds each, fast around the earth and the sun, so that the earth could be held in its orbit by the strength of these wires, reaching from pole to pole there would have to be wires enough, lying side by side, to perform the task, so that they would be so close together that a mouse could not pass between them. And yet, gravitation, the weakest force known in the universe, holds the earth in her orbit, and the moon in her orbit, and the great planets in their orbits. In the things that surround us this morning, in the atmosphere we breathe, and everywhere, we can see manifestations of this power.

Next above this is cohesion. Cohesion is the force exerted by particles of the same substance, holding them together; and they are held together so tightly, in some cases, that you can hardly break them apart by the use of the largest sledge-hammer. Take a cubic inch of iron, lay it upon an anvil, pound it with the heaviest sledge-hammer that you can lift, and you can see how tremendously strong the forces of cohesion hold the particles of iron together.

And just above this, a little stronger yet, is chemical affinity, and uniting of particles. Two gases united together in water, so closely adhering that they can only be disunited by the forces of lighting.

Then above this are the forces of vegetable life, lifting the great oak, and great trees hundreds of feet into the air, in defiance of gravitation; and these oak-trees, and all kinds of vegetable life disuniting these gases that we were talking about, in defiance of chemical affinity, and the leaves themselves carrying on this wonderful process that brings health to you and me; and if it were not for this office-work of vegetation around us, the atmosphere would grow unhealthy for us, and it would be impossible for us to live.

So in the midst of these great forces this morning, as students and teachers and patrons of this institution, we are living.

I look on the map this morning, and I can see dotted here and there on the soil of Southern Iowa, a few institutions of learning. None of them has a more beautiful place than you have. None of them has a more sightly place to build a college than has Graceland. And I covet for you such a gathering of students of the best young men and women of Southern Iowa, and the representatives of your church everywhere, as shall make this one of the best institutions of this great State in which we live.

Now we have been talking about these forces; and we have been wondering, sometimes, where they have been originated. We know this, that none of these forces are self-originating. You know that, if you ever stopped to think of anything, and think soberly and seriously, that none of these forces that surround us this morning were self-originating. We know that cohesion was not originated from gravitation. For you can take all of gravitation, all the force in gravitation, and put into cohesion, and you will find that it needs a large amount of force, more wonderful yet than what we have in gravitation, to make up what we call cohesion, so that cohesion did not originate in gravitation. You may take all the cohesion, and put it all into chemical affinity, and yet there is something lacking, you have not made up chemical affinity. You may put gravitation and cohesion together, and you have not approximated anything near to what chemical affinity means to us. So, as we go up the scale, we find that you can put all the forces that are inferior to the force we are talking about, together, and they do not approximate the force that is above it.

Now, above vegetable life is animal life, and above animal life there is man. And the crown of man is the mind; and there is the power. And we have come to talk about that this morning, in talking about the processes and philosophy and theories of education.

But it would not do to stop, after what we have said about these unseen forces around us this morning; for there is something greater than all this. After I, in my talk, built up before you the man composed of the very best things of the greatest men of earth for my ideal man, I did not say anything about the crowning thought of manhood and womanhood, that makes it possible for us to reach the very best that there is in life. Why, you can read a man's character in his walk. You can read a man's character in the way he takes his seat when he sits down on a chair. You can read a man's character in each page of the letter that he writes. There are a hundred ways of reading character. But there is something on which character is built, and these are the things about which we come to talk, when we come to talk about the highest possible reach in the education of the individual.

There is a book called the Bible. It contains a record of things that have been just as well attested as the fact that there was a Revolutionary War; or that there was anything in the great epochs of human history. And this Bible tells us that there have been instances of gravitation being set at defiance, and water burning like tinder, and men being lifted up in their life and manhood, and thoroughly transformed and revolutionized.

Christianity came into the world when heathenism was at its height, cultured, refined, educated, wealthy, with great armies at her command. Christianity, weak, without any of these things, starting from the weakest point, to-day has grown to be the grand force which moves this world along the lines of civilization; for civilization follows in the footsteps of Christianity. The great developments, and great discoveries, and great improvements, move along their line, following the footsteps of Christianity. And to-day the most marked progress that has been going on in the history of the world, the map of the world being changed in a single day, the life of the nations being changed because of the onward march of Christianity, the force and power that we have been talking about, that comes to us, recorded in the pages of this wonderful book, I wonder if that does not speak to us of some kind of an influence or power that must enter into the formation of character, the work of education, or preparation for the most successful life? It certainly does.

We have heard instances of men who started out to accomplish things in the world, with the very best education, without the force of great character, and the powers of a Christian life with them. They have accomplished wonders. And we have read in comparison with such men as these, what other men have accomplished who went out into the world only to preach the words of Jesus Christ, the Savior of men, but inspired by the force and power of his Spirit, and they wrought wonders.

The history of this world, to-day, is but the life of her great men; and the steps of her progress. The real biography of the human race, and her greatest achievement, is along the lines that I am talking to you about, when I am talking to you about the great achievements of the Christian life in the human being.

Inspiration! You want inspiration. A young man, one day, was on his way to a recitation. The recitation was in algebra, in higher algebra, when they were working out those intricate problems in roots. He did not have the lesson very well. Somebody stopped him on the way and said, "Can you explain this thing to me; for I am afraid to go into the recitation-room without having this thing mastered?" The young man said, "If that is true, I am afraid to go, too. Why, I am going with my lesson but half prepared." There came to him that moment, while these two young men were looking into each others' faces, an inspiration to be master of this subject. After that, he never shut his eyes in sleep until he was master of every intricate problem that he found in his lesson in mathematics. Mathematics trains the mind for thinking. The great problems that we work out are but laying the foundation of strong character in life; because we must be strictly honest when we study mathematics, the exact science.

If a man sells a horse to another man for one hundred dollars, and gives him ten ten-dollar bills; and when he goes home he finds that five of those ten-dollar bills are counterfeit, what could he do with that kind of a man? Why, he could put him in the penitentiary for a deception like that; for a deception like that becomes a crime before the civil law of our land. And every one of you this morning will agree with what I say, when I say it is a crime to do such a thing as that, under the head of deception. When the man took it, he thought it was all right, because it looked all right.

There is a possibility for deception in college life, too. The young man or woman who goes into the examination-room, facing ten questions, covering carefully and thoughtfully and rightfully the ground of the term's work, and passes in five genuine answers, and five answers that are not genuine, is a deceptive fraud; and there is fraud entering into the warp and woof of that education that some day will bring calamity to the man or woman in after life.

You know that the one kind of inspiration that we must have to-day that comes to us at this hour, in our lives, is the inspiration to the strictest honesty and integrity in laying these foundations for a fruitful life. To be dishonest one place is just as bad as it is another. It is just as bad to practice dishonesty in college as it is out of college.

I saw once in my life, when I was a student, two young men who were boon companions. One of these young men began to tipple, as it is possible sometimes to do. In spite of all the remonstrances and the coaxings and the pleadings of his companions, not only him but others, this young man kept it up, and by and by the habit had fastened itself upon him; and after he went out of the college with his diploma, a beautiful young man, to enter one of the professions of life, his course was downward in spite of all he could do, because he had allowed to become fastened upon him this awful habit. You know it is possible to contract habits stealthily, even in college life, that will ruin the brightest life in the future.

Beside the strictest honesty in the building of character, and laying the foundation of an education, we must lead pure and clean lives, too. Our lives must be clean, or this world will turn against us when we get out into active life, because this world is calling for men and women that are true, and clean, and pure, and upright. The world never called as loud as it does to-day for stronger character, and for better men and women. Society calls for this kind of manhood and womanhood to save it from dissolution. We want men and women, and we are getting them prepared and furnished and fitted in these institutions, to lead this world into the very best of thought, and in building up the very best of character, and the best of manhood and womanhood. And to do this we must be free from prejudice, free from narrowness, with catholic minds—that means broad, sympathetic, Christian minds—that can be touched by the needs of the human race.

I remember well, that our professor in practical theology used to say to us, "I know what you young men are going to meet when you go out into active life. You will meet hundreds and thousands of individuals, and you will find homes where it is almost impossible for human character to be built. And in these homes are born children, whose possibility, if planted in the right environment, would be a right and righteous life; and yet because of their environments, held down, cramped, circumscribed, they finally will be led to join the great throng of people who live ignorant, unsaved lives."

And your place and mine in this world is to help make the world better. I went into the public schoolhouse in Sioux City one morning. I used to take my little girl, every once in a while, to school in the morning, and talk with her and the teacher about what she was doing; and I believe every father and mother ought to do this. And as we looked into the faces of the children as they came in, some of them just as dirty as pigs, I said to her, "It would be a splendid thing if you had a washpan and two or three towels, some soap and water, and combs, and would spend the first half hour here every morning in washing these children's faces, and cleaning them up." "Well," said the teacher, "I have thought of that lots of times, and I have gone over the thing in my mind lots of times." And she said, "I have gone to the homes where these children live; and some of them are living where it is impossible to get a breath of pure air where they sleep at night. And they live in these kinds of places." And she said, "In some instances, the reason is because the father drinks." Oh, what a condition of humanity!

You know you can take mud and sunshine, and make the most beautiful roses, scented with a fragrance that is akin to the breath of angels. And this world is full of possibilities just like that.

I said awhile ago that there were great pockets of iron and copper on the shores of Lake Superior. Down in Cleveland and Pittsburg, and other places there are great furnaces going all the time where they ship this ore, and where they are educating it, and bringing it out into conditions that are right for the commercial uses to which it is going to be put. These great furnaces are burning all the time, and men are at work feeding the furnaces, taking care of the material, training it and bringing it out into its final condition. All over this country, everywhere, are young people—the raw material of humanity. And every institution of learning like this, is a representation of the great furnaces that I have been talking about, where the raw material is matured and cultured and trained to a manhood and a womanhood, fit to fill places of usefulness in life.

And the farther we go with this thought the more we are reminded that the human race is made up of individuals. While you are in college, it is an easy thing to go along with your classes, and in the masses; and you some way feel that there is a protection there. You can hide yourself behind the masses in which you mingle. But do you know, just as sure as you sit here this morning and see the sunlight and enjoy the pleasure of this hour, the day is coming when you must meet the world as an individual. And unless you fill your place as an individual, and hold the place that God has made for you, and made it possible for you to prepare yourself, unless you meet the responsibilities, as our brother prayed a while ago, fill that place thoroughly, honestly, and effectually, you are going to lose out in the great race of life.

And I covet for you this morning, every one of you as I look into your faces, the largest possible achievement and preparation for the best place that this world has for you. For there is such a place waiting for you. And it is only waiting until the time comes that you are ready to fill it. But let me tell you this, before I stop speaking: Don't get in too big a hurry to get into your place. The world can get along without you until you are ready to fill that place of usefulness.

I do not know whether every one in this room can be a professor in some institution of learning or not. I do not think you will. I do not think every young lady in this room can be a professor in some institution, or even a teacher in some city or public school; but the highest place that God can put you is in some home, the wife of some good man, to reign as queen in that home, because the home is the foundation of the strength and fiber of this great nation, for which we build these institutions, and for which we educate men.

And I could say the same for every young man in this house this morning. There is a place for you. It may not be somewhere where you are aspiring this morning, but some place where you can show the world the possibilities of a true man in every sense of the word. What we want to do is to build up character, stronger and better than ever before. That, after all, is the great work of education.

Now, the teacher can not do this for you. He can assist you along the lines that you are struggling. He can not pick up an education from his standpoint and put it into your life. It would not be practical if he did do that. It would be just like you if you read your Latin with a "pony," and after you read it it doesn't do you any good. It never does. But he can assist you along these lines of struggle, and help you by your own effort to develop these latent faculties, and develop them along right lines. These teachers are but guiding hands consecrated to this great work. Let them help you to the very largest achievement possible for you.

May God bless Graceland College, and every interest that she has in the world, and raise up for her many friends all over this country, until some day this beautiful campus may be dotted with buildings, making it possible for her to exert a larger influence upon the lives and characters of the young men and women of Southern Iowa.

An educated man stands, as it were, in the midst of a boundless arsenal and magazine, filled with all the weapons and engines which man's skill has been able to devise from the earliest time; and he works, accordingly, with a strength borrowed from all past ages. How different is his state who stands on the outside of that storehouse, and feels that its gates must be stormed, or remain for ever shut against him! His means are the commonest and rudest; the mere work done is no measure of his strength. A dwarf behind his steam-engine may remove mountains; but no dwarf will hew them down with a pickax; and he must be a Titan that hurls them abroad with his arms.—Carlyle.

IN THE INTEREST OF CHURCH LIBRARY WORK.

No one has the right to bring up his children without placing books in their reach. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books.

The love of knowledge comes with reading, and is almost a warrant against the excitement of passion and vice. The effect of books upon the mind is remarkable. They make the man. You can judge a man more truly by the papers and books he reads than by the company he keeps; for his associates may often be imposed upon him, but his reading is the result of choice.

Every book has a moral expression affecting either for good or ill. The life and feeling of a young girl fascinated by some glowing love romance, are colored and shaped by the page she reads. If it be false, weak, or foolish, she will be false, weak, or foolish.

The boy who reads deeds of manliness, bravery, and nobility, feels the spirit of emulation grow within him, and the seed is planted which will bring forth fruit of heroic endeavor and exalted life.

A man who gives himself up to the indiscriminate reading of novels and the trashy matter of the daily press, becomes nerveless, lifeless, and a nuisance. A woman who spends much time reading novels, will be unfitted for the duties of life. She is known by disheveled hair, vacant countenance, colorless cheeks, not possessing will-power to control her own silly emotions, but will burst into tears at midnight over the fate of an unfortunate lover. In the daytime, when she should be attending to domestic affairs, filling the highest calling under heaven,—that of wife and mother, she will be seen idly staring at nothing, biting her finger-nails, and bearing an attitude of dejection.

The home provided for her by the best efforts of her companion, and which she used to appreciate, looks plain and mean after she has traveled through a romance, wandering in spacious halls and palaces of luxury. Her industrious companion becomes unattractive after she has walked through imaginary parks and conservatories with plumed knights, or lounged in the arbor with a brave and polished desperado. She becomes dissatisfied with life and its conditions and the end is not yet.

How many young men who are doomed to death for crime make the confession that their downward career started with the reading of immoral literature!

Observe in the homes you visit, the books which lie upon the table, or note what is taken by its inmates from the public library, and you may judge largely, the intellectual taste, the intelligence of the family. You may judge as to their moral attainments and their spiritual advancement. As it is largely true that a man may be judged by the companions he chooses, is equally true that his character may be ascertained by the books he reads.

Seeing, then, the mighty influence of reading upon the mind, we should use the utmost caution, care, and wisdom in the kind of books we read. The welfare of our children and youth comes with outstretched arms pleading for our protection against the immoral influence of much of the literature with which the world is flooded. Authors to-day, in many, yes, in the majority of instances are men and women of business, seeking fame, popularity, and the "almighty dollar," regardless of the effect of their literature on the character of your child or mine. They cater to the popular trend of the social world, which is that of momentary pleasure, amusement, and hilarity.

The temptation to light and corrupt reading is usually strongest in the youth, those just stepping upon the threshold of man and womanhood. Unless the mind of our child is guided from the time he is old enough to love to hear "mamma" read "the sweet stories of Jesus," until he has reached the age of the dawn of manhood, we have failed as God's servants and hand-maidens in the trust imposed upon us, and the divine injunction, "Feed my lambs." And can only satisfy His law by suffering its penalty.

In a time when we are courted by free libraries, an innumerable host of cheap works clamoring for popularity, and life being too short to compass even those that are great and good, we should reserve no energy in thought or means to place in the hands of the Saints, both old and young, the best books obtainable.

As wholesome food is necessary to make strong healthy bodies, so good reading is necessary to make strong and well-balanced minds.

Since there is such a variety of books of every kind, how are we to be guided in the selection of proper ones? The fact that so much light and trashy literature is published and sold, proves there is a demand for it, and that the reading public create the demand. Public libraries of our cities are not free from literature not of the highest character. Their object is to create and foster a love for reading, hence are largely made up of matter of popular taste, much of which is far from being what we should have our children read in the formation of a character for eternity.

Parents who permit their children to choose, indiscriminately, reading-matter from public libraries, are making a fatal mistake. There must be the guidance of superior wisdom in the selection of books, even from public libraries.

Every parent should use his influence in placing the proper kind of books in the hands of his children, but, sad to say, many parents do not, and do not realize the need.

This need must be met, and the importance of educating the Saints on this line has been impressed upon the minds of many of the workers desiring that the command to "come up higher" may be more fully obeyed. This inspiration has resulted in an especial and systematic effort in the interest of library work.

The head of this arm of the work is a Library Board or Commission composed of five members, one being a member of the Church Presidency, one of the Bishopric, the Church Librarian, one chosen by the Sunday-school Association, and one chosen by Zion's Religio-Literary Society. District library boards are commissions of three members chosen by district conference, Sunday-school, and Religio society, respectively. A local library board is a commission of three members chosen by branch, Sunday-school, and Religio local.

These library commissions from the general to the local boards should be and we believe in the most instances are, laboring earnestly to acquaint themselves with the work, and are able advisors as to the kind of literature to recommend and select, and the plans of work to adopt. This provision we believe is born of inspiration from heaven, and will supply the long-felt need of parents in assisting them to select the proper books.

Under the church library movement the principle of coöperation is employed, thus enabling us to bear one another's burdens by each branch contributing means for the establishment and maintenance of libraries, governed by system and rules, enabling our children to study good books in a profitable way, and to understand the meaning of, "Seek ye words of wisdom from good books."

May the Holy Spirit move upon each member of the church to fully realize his duty, and inspire us with courage to throw around our children every needed protection, and place in their reach every facility in our power, to enable them to escape the allurements and wiles of an evil-minded society, and the snares of Satan, and help them to reach the Zion condition, "pure in heart."

We can do great things if we desire, with determination which brings a strong concerted effort, but if we do not, we have failed before our heavenly Father, and will not hear the longed-for words, "Well done, good and faithful servant," but will mourn in the agony of regret over "what might have been."

May Heaven help us to fill, in full, our mission, that we may glorify God in our children here and in the life to be.

Of General Interest

A CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DAILY.

The Christian Science Publishing Company of Boston announce their intention of publishing a daily newspaper to be known as the Christian Monitor. It will be, they say, "a strictly up-to-date newspaper, in which all the news of the day that should be printed will find a place." Its news service will not be restricted to any one locality or section, but will cover the daily activities of the entire world. The Christian Science Sentinel (Boston, November 21) is pleased with the way, for the most part, the new undertaking has been received by the press. It observes: "Although some seem to doubt the high ideals that have been set for the Monitor, nevertheless there has been a very general and sincere indorsement of these ideals." The Santa Barbara Independent says: "Should it succeed, it will be the ideal newspaper, a realization of the dream of editors. . . . If the Christian Science daily newspaper points a way to better things in journalism, no men will rejoice more than those who are engaged in newspaper work."

The Waverly Magazine (Boston) makes this editorial comment:

" 'It will be the mission of the Monitor, ' says an editorial in the Christian Science Sentinel, 'to publish the real news of the world in a clean wholesome manner, devoid of the sensational methods employed by so many newspapers. There will be no exploitation or illustration of vice and crime, but the aim of the editors will be to issue a paper which will be welcomed in every home where purity and refinement are cherished ideals.'

"Notwithstanding the fact that the Monitor will be owned by a religious body whose policy will undoubtedly be its own, and to whose desires and opinions it will at all times be subservient, we must commend the sentiments expressed in this editorial. We know too much of the selfishness, the social impurity, the political corruption, and the gross injustice in the world about us, and too little of the great good being done by an enormous army of God-fearing, uncomplaining, patient men and women, who are ever toiling for the welfare of their fellow men. Let us have less sensationalism and more decency in our newspaper methods. Let us continue, by all means, to expose and condemn existing evil, but not to the exclusion of legitimate recognition of existing good.

"But enough of this. Honesty is what we have a right to expect from our newspapers; plain, unblemished honesty. Let the new Christian Science daily give us at least that, and it will do much. Let it live up to its expressed ideals, and it will be a relief to the eyes and minds of a reading public, tired of the insignificance and impropriety of things too often placed before them. What the public desires to find in its newspapers is the truth—the truth that is wholesome, the truth that is beneficial, but the truth above all things.”

The Western Christian Advocate (Cincinnati) indulges in some humorous suppositions regarding the newspaper's effort to square the newspaper function with one of its imputed philosophical tenets. We read:

“The paper will sell for two cents a copy, or five dollars a year. We wait with much interest the issues of this paper. Should Boston have a great fire, and scores be burned and suffer intense agony, and ambulances and hospitals be utilized—pray, what report will the Monitor make? When the next fearful railway accident occurs, and the dead and mangled shall be heaped in disorder, and scalding steam shall add horror to the scene, with equal interest we ask what the Monitor extra will have to chronicle. Will it say: ‘When a Monitor reporter arrived on the scene of the wreck, we found many who imagined they were hurt. We spent some time attempting to quiet their fears. We remonstrated with the fireman, who was pinioned under his engine, with the steam pouring against his flesh, that nothing could possibly hurt him; that if he had faith to believe, there was no such thing as pain, the steam which he supposed to be hot, and the engine which he imagined was heavy would make no impression upon him; but the poor fellow was deluded in his error, and consequently died?’ When a careless painter falls from the fifth-story window to the cement pavement, will the Monitor deem the fact worthy of mention? And what will it have to say: that no limbs were broken, and the groans of the unfortunate man were due to mortal mind deceiving him into the belief that he was uncomfortable? We say we await the launching of this newspaper with deep interest.”—The Literary Digest, December 5, 1908.

At Christmas Time.

In a recent letter published in this column from Sr. Emma Burton, our readers will remember that in a vision given her while in Nova Scotia this passage occurs: “He said, ‘You must go in now.’ As I took the first step out from the vine, a fierce wolf-dog came tearing around the corner of the house, with mouth and teeth ready to devour. The Lord was standing between me and the dog. With his left hand he took my right, and as the dog made towards me, he put forth his right hand and, covering the dog's mouth with it, gently pushed the creature back, and I saw him no more. He held my hand while we walked to the door, nor did he release it until I had ascended the three steps, and stood inside the door, and he just outside on the upper step. As I turned and stood looking at him, thinking of how gently he dealt with that fierce creature, and how if it had been one of us, i. e., people of the earth, we would have hurt it if we could, and thought it our duty to do so, he said, in a voice so gentle, ‘Do not go out any more to-night,’ and closed the door.”

For some reason, it may be the holy influence of the near approach of this Christmas-tide, or it may be because the touch of sorrow is calling forth from heart-strings strains of minor melody, or it may be because the day is dark and bending clouds are heavy with the chilling rain, be that as it may, the lesson contained in this incident of the vision appeals to us with a strength and force never before experienced—the lesson of His infinite love and mercy. “Gently pushed the creature back,” and yet that creature was ready to devour one of his little ones unto whom if a cup of cold water be given he has promised to the giver a sure reward.

How often upon the journey of life we forget, or at best remember but indistinctly, the great truth underlying the whole plan of salvation—the vital truth that “God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son!” Loved the world in its sin, its misery and degradation, in its cruel inhumanity of man to man, its deadly hatred and its bitter wrongs. Loved it with the love of infinite compassion, of unbounded pity. Loved it because they were his children abiding here, and to save them from sin he was willing to give the most precious thing which in heaven or earth belonged to him—the Son of his love.

Before any man or woman can do effective, acceptable work for God, the soul must be baptized with this love—filled, saturated with it, until there is left no room for self, no space upon which to erect our lordly castles while our brother dwells beside us in a hovel. Oh, how long has the world stumbled along, groaning under its misconception of Christianity! How long have we, unto whom in this generation the law has been directly given, refused obedience to that law!

We are readers of the HERALD? We are believers in inspiration? If so, then it passes the comprehension of the writer how after reading the editorial, “Two phases of our high calling,” in the issue of November 25, any one claiming to be a Saint, can any longer go on ignoring the law of God in regard to those things of a temporal nature which it certainly demands of us. In this editorial the law is so simply, and yet withal so clearly, so plainly stated, that it would not seem possible for any one not to understand its requirements.

“Poverty,” Bro. Elbert writes, “is no part of the divine plan,” and yet we recall one bitterly cold winter here in Lamoni when a lone widow gave of her scanty supply of fuel to keep the little ones of her neighbor from perishing with the cold. The father had not been able to obtain work, and the storm and poverty walked into the home hand in hand.

There is a poem, the lines of which have often haunted the chambers of memory. A part of it runs like this:

“‘O God,’ I cried. ‘Why may I not forget?
These halt and hurt in life's hard battles
Throng me yet.
Am I their keeper? Only I—to bear
This constant burden of their grief and care?’

Why must I suffer for others' sin?
 Would that my eyes had never opened been!
 And the thorn-crowned and Patient One Replied, 'They thronged Me too; I too have seen.'

"'Thy other children go at will,' I said, Protesting still.

'They go, unheeding. But these sick and sad,
 These blind and orphan; yea, and those that sin
 Drag at my heart. For them I serve and groan.
 Why is it? Let me rest, Lord. I have tried—'
 He turned and looked at me; 'But I have died.'

"'But Lord, this ceaseless travail of my soul!
 This stress! This often fruitless toil
 These souls to win!

They are not mine. I brought not forth this host
 Of needy creatures, struggling, tempest-tossed—
 They are not mine.'

He looked at them—the look of one divine!
 He turned and looked at me; 'But they are Mine.'

"'O God,' I said, I understand at last.
 Forgive! and henceforth I will bond-slave be
 To Thy least, weakest, vilest ones.

I would not more be free.'
 He smiled, and said, 'It is to Me.'"

It is well, at this Christmas-tide, for us, as His children, to ponder these things in our hearts—yes, to examine ourselves and know of a surety whether we are in the faith or whether perchance we are deceiving ourselves. This gospel which we have accepted and which we believe, as Bro. Elbert has said, has provided in its economy both temporal and spiritual salvation; but of what avail is this provision, if we do not comply with its requirements? Christ was constantly besieged by the poor, the maim, the blind, and suffering ones of his day, and to bring to them both spiritual and temporal salvation he suffered and died a cruel and ignominious death. They are his, and this salvation is their right—a right into which sooner or later they must come. But how will it be with you and me? Will we have ministered unto them of our substance, or will we be among the number unto whom Christ will say, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it not unto me"?

Doctor Talmage gave the world these breaths of thought of Christmas joy:

"What a Christmas morning it will make when those with whom you used to keep the holidays are all around you in heaven! Silver-haired old father young again, and mother, who had so many aches and pains and decrepitudes, well again, and all your brothers and sisters and the little ones. How glad they will be to see you! . . .

"Bright Christmas morning of my soul's delight. Chime all the bells. Wreath all the garlands. Rouse all the anthems. Shake hands in all the congratulations, Merry Christmas! Merry with the thought of sins forgiven, merry with the idea of sorrows comforted, merry with the raptures to come. Oh! lift that Christ from the manger and lay him down in all our hearts. We may not bring to him as costly a present as the Magi brought, but we bring to his feet, and to the manger to-day the frankincense of our joy, the pearls of our tears, the kiss of our love, the prostration of our worship. Down at his feet, all churches, all ages, all earth, all heaven. Down all worlds at his feet and worship. 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men!'"

"Jesus started an influence that will go on until the last desert will grow roses, and the last weakling make full inhalation, and the last case of paresis take healthful brain, and the last illness becomes rubicund cheek and robust of chest and bounding of foot, and the last pauper will get his palace, and the last sinner taken into the warm bosom of a pardoning God! Where did all these start? In that cradle within sound of bleating sheep and bellowing cattle, and amid rough bantering of herdsmen and camel-drivers. What a low place to start for such great heights! O artists! turn your camera obscura on that village of Bethlehem. Take it all in—the wintry skies lowering, the flocks shivering in the chill air, Mary, the pale mother, and Jesus the child. No wonder that Paul Veronese, and Cuyp, and Rubens, and Tintoretto, and Correggio, and Perugino, and Ghirlandago, and Raphael put their best pencil in that scene.

"Lord God! by thy Spirit, fix that Madonna in all our souls! so these thoughts come in upon us at this gladdest part of the year!"—Selected.

Letter Department

CHEROKEE, Iowa, November 25, 1908.

Dear Herald: I see such a great lack of the home class Religio work. I feel some of the Saints are asleep along these lines. We sing,

"We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet
 To guide us in these latter days;
 We thank thee for sending the Gospel
 To lighten our minds with its rays."

Do we stop and think what we are singing? What was the Book of Mormon brought forth for? Did you ever stop and think what it cost to get it? It took the best blood that stood on America. Saints, what will it cost if you do not study it? The divine head of the church has been pleased to acknowledge the work of the Religio Society in the following words, given at the General Convention, in April, 1900:

"Thus saith the Spirit unto you, O my people, your prayers and sacrifices are acceptable unto your Father in heaven, and upon you shall rest his blessing. Behold, I the Lord will bless you according to your needs and your faithfulness before me, even greater blessings than thou hast received in the past. Thou hast been blessed, but this has been but a foretaste of that which awaits you if you will be faithful before me. I will use this organization for the establishing of Zion; therefore cease to complain of each other and be one, even as I have commanded you, and clothe yourselves with humility as with a mantle, and come to the light which has been given you. And your souls shall rejoice with greater power from your Father than you have ever received before. I the Lord have placed upon this organization my seal and it shall prosper and flourish, and from among you I will gather out those who shall represent my gospel among men. The harvest is indeed great and the laborers are few, therefore I will use this organization for the greater work which is to be performed for the salvation of men. Therefore hearken, and be faithful, and remember always to be humble, pray for, and hold up the hands of those who have been called to direct this part of my work. Be not discouraged at the elements which may oppose you; for my power shall be with you and my strength shall be sufficient for you. But you must needs be tested. Zion shall be established and the pure in heart shall rejoice. Rejoice and be comforted in thy heart, for I am with you, saith the Spirit. Amen."

The home department can go to all those who are unable to come to it. Every Latter Day Saint home, throughout the church, should take up this work and bring themselves in close touch with God and Christ; and I know no better way than in the home department. It will reach all those that want more light.

This Religio Society is so little understood by the isolated Saints! And, surely, you will remain in this condition until you get yourselves out of it. Without a Book of Mormon, we should be at a loss to know where to go, who was right; and so without a Book of Mormon the scientific and literary world are at a loss to know the true history of the founding and overthrow of the civilized people, once on this old America of ours. The world is proving its divinity. Bro. Joseph, in the year 1830, April 6, organized the kingdom (church), which organization brought about a complete restoration (see Revelation 14: 6, 7) of the primitive gospel of Christ; and we believe it is true. Truth is eternal, and prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost; not only in former days, but also in latter days; and the foregoing truths are being presented to an investigating world; and thousands of noble people are hearing, believing, and obeying the laws. And, according to the Bible, God is coming to visit the earth. Then he will take the empire of the world, bind Satan, remove the curse of sin, and reign with his resurrected and glorified Saints a thousand years on the earth.

Now, in order for us to be one of that happy number, we must study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. In order for you to do this, we want your name on the Religio record of the home department, as one of those who are learning rightly to divide the word of God. We invite you to become a member.

If we wish to help redeem Zion, we must understand how to work in the right way. If you are one of the isolated ones, this will unite you to a band of Religians, who have as their motto: "Onward and Upward." As a Latter Day Saint, you will realize the importance of studying God's word, and as the lessons outlined in our Religio Quarterly are the church doctrines made plain, no Saint can afford to miss this great opportunity before us. You can get the Religio Quarterly at the Ensign Publishing House, Independence, Missouri. Price twenty-five cents per year, or eight cents per quarter. And you can get the Book of Mormon for sixty-five cents, and all supplies of Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

MRS. BELLE CRIPPEN,

District Superintendent of Home Class work, Gallands Grove District.

WOODBINE, Iowa, December 5, 1908.

Dear Herald: Thinking the church generally would be interested in reading of the condition of the work in these parts, as the whole body is interested in the welfare of its members, I will say that so far as my observation has been, there is a general desire for the progress of truth, though there might be a greater zeal, a more fervent love, and a more earnest devotion for the cause of truth, and to that sacred cause. But, considering the state of the world, as to spiritual things, its deadness thereunto, and remembering that we are in the world, and are compelled to mix up with its devotees, it would indeed be miraculous if we were not affected by its influences more or less; and, being so affected, the results are seen in our lives. It would be difficult to find a member of the body that is willing to confess decline of faith; but empty seats at divine services, and especially at prayer-meetings and sacramental services, speak louder than words. These two latter services may be safely set down as tests of our spirituality; and, judging by them, I am forced to conclude that our spirituality is not very high. I do not want to be a faultfinder; but I remember that God said to the prophets of old, "Cry aloud and show my people their transgressions"; and as a watchman on the walls of Zion, I must not be silent in the hour of danger, lest God condemn me as a traitor to the cause of truth. Hence, I speak of things as they appear to me.

There are those among us, thank God, who give good evidence of their love for the truth; not in word only, but in deed. These truly are "the salt of the earth"! And their savor is manifest; they are truly pillars in the church! Not because of any high position they hold; but because of their integrity and real worth, for they are found among the humble followers of the Lamb. They are not found in their places in the house of God, because some brilliant speaker occupies the sacred stand; but because they love the worship of God and the fellowship of the Saints; and, be the speaker ever so humble, his tongue hesitant, and even stammering, they feel it their duty to be there to encourage him by their presence, and strengthen him by their prayers and fixed attention. How else can we expect the young and inexperienced ministers to "become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed"? Nor do these faithful followers take special pains to adorn their persons in costly apparel, thereby expecting to make the cause of truth respectable. They know that the only adornment that can give true respectability to God's cause, is that of a meek and quiet spirit, adorned with those same graces that have made the character of the Nazarene the grandest and most honored character of all ages. Hence, they are content with neat apparel, by which means they do not wound the spirits of the less fortunate, and drive them from the house of God, because they can not appear in so costly garments as the more favored ones can. Does it ever occur to the minds of the Saints that by such wide distinctions in dress we may be responsible for the loss of souls, our own as well as those of others—by our pride in dress?

I know of some who tell me they can not attend church, because of their inability to dress up to the style to which others do, and they fear they will be looked upon with contempt, and some think they are so looked upon. I am not willing to think any Saint of God looks contemptuously upon his less fortunate brother or sister; but the weakness of human nature is apt to surmise that such is the case. May God help both rich and poor to be infinitely more concerned in the true adornments of the soul, than those of the body. If we are not, we shall never be prepared to meet the great Bridegroom.

Last Sabbath I tried to break the bread of life to the little flock in Dow City, and visited our afflicted brother, Romanan Wight. He seemed like a poor, broken-down old man. He had been helpless; but was a little better. At his request I prayed for him, and with him. This was on Saturday. The next morning, President Jackson and I were called to administer to him. When we arrived, we found our genial brother, David R. Chambers, of Magnolia, had, in brotherly love, come to visit Romanan, and we unitedly administered to the sick brother. I called to spend an hour or two with him on Monday morning. He had slept six hours, and was feeling much better. I left him greatly encouraged, and much brighter. His faith in God remains.

When I arrived at Woodbine, I was met at the train by my daughter Alice. She told me I was needed at Logan, as Grandma Mary Marmoy was dangerously ill. She is the mother of my son's wife. Bro. W. R. Adams and I administered to her; but I feared the pale messenger had called her. She was relieved and slept. I returned home. The next day a card informed me that she was better; but on Friday morning she passed away. Sr. Marmoy was a sister of Sr. Hudson, of Columbus, Nebraska, who had also passed away. Our sister was a faithful member of the church. Her place in the house of God was never vacant when she had strength to go; and her life at home and abroad was illustrative of the glorious gospel she had obeyed long years ago. Her one regret was that only one of her four children was in the church; but we have hope that others will follow their mother's Christlike example. They are upright people, so far as they have light. Mother Marmoy, both by teaching and example, left them a pattern worthy of their imitation. Her remains are now on the way to Columbus, Nebraska, to be laid by the side of her husband. Elder W. R. Adams preached the funeral-sermon. It was full of comfort to the mourners, and of convincing evidences of the stability of the hope of God's people, and of loving exhortation for all to stand ready for the change. I rejoice to know that God is raising up young men, upon whose shoulders the burden of this work can safely be placed. I am doing what little I can to strengthen the Saints by visiting such branches as are convenient. My health is good; but the day of great endurance is past. I am,

Your brother,

CHARLES DERRY.

CORYDON, Indiana, November 28, 1908.

Dear Herald: Thinking my many friends in Eastern Michigan would like to know where I am, and what I am doing, I drop these few lines by request of my son David.

Bro. J. W. Wight transferred me to labor with him (David) for the winter. Accordingly I went home from the Eastern Michigan conference, and made preparation, and wife and I started. Stopped over night at Lansing, Michigan, to see our daughter, Lyda. Then to Elkhart, Indiana, where we met quite a number of my wife's relatives. They were very kind, and conveyed us from one place to another; and we had some nice talks on the gospel; but found some that were not so reasonable, and were sure they had the Holy Ghost. But we tried to show them that the kind they had caused them to deny many things that Jesus and the apostles taught, while the kind we had, caused us to accept what they taught; but we parted as the best of friends, and with the warmest invitations to call and see them on our return to Michigan.

We landed in New Albany, October 24, about eight o'clock in the evening. Mrs. Dowker was quite tired; but we thought she stood the trip well for her, as she is quite poorly. We found David and Jennie and baby well, and I think just a little pleased that we came.

We started at once to work for the Master. Held three meetings in town; then on October 28, took train to Corydon Junction. Bro. Felix Barksdale met us, and took us about two and one half miles over the hills and rocks to his brother Charley's, where we held meetings for about two weeks, with good liberty, good attention, and good turnout; and there seemed to be a good impression left, as we had invitations to return soon. Preached some in Byrnville. David's throat was troubling him some, so I went to Valeene, a new place; and, assisted by Bro. Ed O. Byrns, one of the finest young men I have ever met in the church, I preached four times; when David came, staying but a short time when he was called to Bordon to administer to Bro. Barksdale's child. I remained over Sunday, and filled the appointments we had out. Had the best turnout on Sunday, November 22. In the evening spoke about an hour on the coming forth of the Book of Mormon; and some said they could have listened another hour. They seemed sorry that we could not stay longer; but the trustee of the school sent us word that we could not occupy the house any longer. So I went home for Thanksgiving. While home David and wife, and wife and I, went over to Louisville, to see Bro. Metcalf; and there we met Bro. I. N. Roberts, and heard him preach. David invited him over to make a visit, and we had a meeting in our house on Thanksgiving. Bro. Roberts gave us one of the best sermons I ever heard. Subject: "The true vine."

November 27. Away on the morning train to Corydon. Bro. J. M. Wynn met me with the old white pony, and took me over the hills and rocks to his home, where I am now writing; and, say, Bro. and Sr. Wynn, and little Emma, make one feel at home. Had a good turnout of Saints and friends last night. I expect David to come from Byrnville Monday, the 30th; and we expect to labor together for a while. I feel quite well in body, and feel glad to be doing something for the Master. Hope the Saints will remember us in their prayers, as we feel the need of diyine help.

I feel it would be doing an injustice to those who so kindly cared for us, not to mention it. Bro. Charles Barksdale and wife made us welcome, and did all they could to make the meeting a success; also Bro. Ed O. Byrn, and little sisters cared for us while there. Bro. C. C. Byrn and wife did all they could to make it pleasant for us. Bro. Byrn is the only Saint at Valeene, and Mrs. Byrn is a member of the old mother church. Also Doctor John MacDonald (a Baptist) liked our preaching so well that he did all he could to help with the meetings. As he has the central in his home, he phoned all around to advertise our meetings. He spoke of sending for the Inspired Translation of the Bible. He felt the need of something to help us on our way, and gave us a dollar, which we were very thankful for. We visited some of the Rego Saints, and very sorry to find old Bro. William May so crippled with broken hip, caused by a fall on the ice some seven years ago, that he has not been able to do any work since. Also Bro. John May was just recovering from an attack of the grippe. Also we were very sorry to see the gospel work at such a low ebb there, partly on account of Bro. May's disability; and the prospects seem poor to raise the work there; but we expect to try, when the school term is over.

Bro. J. W. Wight told me there was a good class of people here; and we have found them so. But he did not tell me of the rocks and hills. And, oh my, they tell me I have not seen the worst of them. So I am wondering what the end will be.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WILLIAM DOWKER.

BOISE, Idaho.

Dear Herald: Some of your readers will remember a letter in the Hope a month or so ago from a boy named Roy Cowles, West Derby, Vermont, in which he said he had a weak back which prevented sitting up; his mother was an invalid and his father had been hurt, so that he was not able to work, and that they were very poor. He wanted some one to send him a "teddy bear." Perhaps others of the Saints were like me. I thought some one else would send him a bear, so did not.

My little son felt so sorry for him he wanted to write him a letter, which he did; but when the answer came it was from the mother, stating the little boy was dead and no one had sent him a bear. I have written to the mother since and she told me she makes and sells little articles, such as babies' boots, etc., trying to get her an invalid chair which costs twenty-five dollars. That seems to be about the only source of support for the family, also, and it must be very slow work saving for anything else. If I were able I would send the twenty-five dollars myself, but I am not. So I am going to make an appeal to the Saints in her behalf.

I have sent her one dollar, which I feel is all I can spare. Will others do the same? We are commanded to remember the poor and surely the Lord will be pleased when we do so. We pray for the poor and needy and afflicted, but how many of us work as hard as we might to answer our own prayers?

Few of us but could spare something to these poor people without missing it, and thus be laying up treasures in heaven for ourselves; and those who can not may help by petitioning the Lord to lighten their affliction and to move upon the hearts of those who are able, to help them. The address is, Mrs. Roy Cowles, West Derby, Vermont.

In the faith,

A SISTER.

PHILLBROOK, Montana, November 10, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for some time, and wife and I are always glad to get the dear old HERALD and Ensign and read the precious truths they bring by letters and sermons. They are our only preachers, and when I read of the grand reunions where the Saints meet together and hear such fine preaching, it makes me feel sad to think I am so far away and can not meet with them, and I am made to say in my heart, How long, O Lord, will it be before Zion is redeemed, and her children gathered in from the four corners of the earth! I hope to be among the faithful, and to stand with the just and true.

There are about twenty-five Saints living in this county, but they are like sheep without a shepherd. Some have drifted far from the true fold of Christ, and I hope to see the time when the Lord will see fit to send his servants in this part of his vineyard, and hunt up the lost sheep, and help bind the old Devil. The way I would like to see him bound is with a chain of love among the brothers and sisters; for I realize that Satan will reap a great harvest where malice and hatred prevails. May the Lord bless and keep his children and guide them through all the dark trials, is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

T. E. FITZWATER.

WALTHILL, Nebraska, December 5, 1908.

Dear Saints: My husband and I are doing all we can to warn our neighbors and tell them the truth. I believe we have laid a good foundation for a good work next year. The Book of Mormon takes well with the people. Indians are glad to find a person who can tell them where they came from. Those I have talked with think the Indian is not as good in the sight of God as the white people, and their religion is now second-handed, coming from God to the white people first, and then to them from the white race. I tried to convince them that a noble Indian was the equal of a noble white, but he answered me, No, that God had helped the white race to keep a record and the Bible was that record handed down and Indian had none. I did the best I could to show him the Bible was a record for all races and the Book of Mormon a record of lost tribes. He seemed delighted with the news and said he had heard that before, but now he would read the book and see for himself.

Now the religion the white people gave them is Bible doctrine and consists of faith, repentance, one God, and some kind of a drug, the Indian called it pa-ote. It looks like common beans, some red and some white, and a brown-looking tablet resembling a dried peach. These they take and swallow during the hours of devotion and claim for it visions, revelations, and a change of heart, dreams, etc. Their devotions look very good. They sing and pray and testify, exhort all to do good, not to drink nor lie, nor steal; take care of sick and poor. So I find lots of good in their religion, but I longed earnestly to speak their language to tell them the whole plan of salvation and tell them there was not a bean in the whole plan.

I longed earnestly for more strength and power, and for our own dear church more valiant workers, more branches standing on their feet instead of their head, although it might be better to stand on head than not stand at all.

I get these ideas from section 83, and verses 21 and 22, of Doctrine and Covenants. If all our branches understood the use that every member was to the branch, there would be less work for the president and more for the priest, teacher, deacon, and members in particular, and stand on their feet. They could never be thrown down. There would be less division if all branch honors were equally divided. I pray for the welfare of Zion.

SR. MARY A. CARTER.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, November 30, 1908.

Editors Herald: It is with a sad heart that I read of the affliction of Romanan Wight as we have been the best of friends and brethren for over forty years. And it was the work of two of his brethren that was the means of leading me to investigate this work, which is dearer to me than all the world. And I thought, in 1896, I could not last long if I did not get relief; but God, through his goodness, has spared me, and my health is better than for many years. The things that troubled me are going away. So cheer up, dear brother. Maybe God will heal you. If not, I have hopes that we will meet on the other side.

Your brother in Christ,

F. DOBIE.

BILLINGS, Montana, November 24, 1908.

Dear Herald: Billings is a town of twelve thousand inhabitants, with not a Saint, nor has the gospel ever been preached here in its fullness. About two weeks ago I ordered some tracts of the Ensign Publishing House. After receiving them, I began to distribute them, leaving one in each house, in their hand, with a request to read, and keep till called for. In four days I went around to collect them and leave more. Several were interested, and asked many questions. So I sent for more. Now, I send to you for still more. I expect to keep at it till I get literature in every house that will heed it. I am also keeping it in the public library, which had thirteen hundred readers last year; also the Y. M. C. A.

I intend to conduct street-meetings next spring. Any elder coming this way will receive a warm welcome with us. I expect to need one here to confirm, as I am only a priest.

J. H. WINCHESTER.

NEWMAN, Arkansas, November 23, 1908.

Dear Herald: As I and my family are all the Saints there are in this settlement, we have a great deal to bear, and I ask the brethren to do me a favor. Please send me dates of the organizing of the churches named here: Hard Shell Missionary Baptist, Free Will Baptist, Methodist, Campbellites, and all others you can handy. I want to know the names and dates of organizing, so I can show to the world that Joseph Smith had as good a right to organize a church as they had. So help me all you can.

If I were able to pay for them I would send for five histories; but I am not. I want to pay all I owe, and get in shape to go where I can live with the Saints and not the world. Pray for me when it goes well with you; and please give me all the instructions you can. I read the Bible and pray God to give me wisdom and knowledge, that I may withstand the fiery darts of the wicked.

Your brother in Christ,

A. L. BUTLER.

A Dream.

Dear Herald: While engaged in the mission department of the Lord's work at Morrison, Oklahoma, recently, the question was asked of the writer, "Why does the Book of Mormon give the Lord's prayer, 'Lead us not into temptation,' instead of 'Suffer us not to be led into temptation,' as the Inspired Translation renders it?"

Unable to answer it, the matter was made a subject of inquiry of the Lord, and upon the same night, November 27, 1908, while certain other matters were being presented in a dream, I asked the question, "Why does the Book of Mormon read that way?" Immediately a voice replied: "It is through the imperfections of men. Many times my servants have quoted me incorrectly. But the sentiment in the main, is good."

I awoke immediately, and arose and wrote it, lest I should forget the exact statement; and was confident that the Spirit had helped mine infirmity, in that I had not grasped so simple a matter before.

Two were baptized at this point upon Sunday last, one of whom braved the chance of exile from home, and the most severe condemnation of nearest kinsfolk for the sake of the gospel; and the other took the initiative in her family, and it is to be expected that the leaven of righteousness may have its effect upon the indifferent husband.

Floods "resistless and deep" have repeatedly devastated this locality during the year. The river, never known to be out of the banks for years and years, has been out time, time, and again, this year, cutting its destructive swath in the spring, then more surprisingly in the usual dry season, and now with another surprise in the winter.

And it was a unique baptism indeed, standing a mile or more from the river bridge, right in the middle of the public and usually dusty road, upon the incline of a hill, with water enough at a few paces from where the wild waves ravished the new shore line, to baptize as in Jordan.

JAMES E. YATES.

MORRISON, Oklahoma, November 30, 1908.

From Birmingham.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Elder J. E. Meredith has been conducting a little correspondence through the Birmingham Daily Mail with one William Jarman. The following clippings are from that publication, November 4, 6, 10, and 12, respectively.]

WHAT IS MORMONISM?

REVELATIONS AT HALES OWEN.

Last night Mr. W. Jarman, of Exeter, for twelve years high priest in Salt Lake City, Utah, who is conducting a crusade throughout the country against Mormonism, commenced a mission at the Drill Hall, Hales Owen. There was a large audience at the gathering, and Mr. Jarman, who is seventy-two years of age, gave an address upon his life in Utah and his ultimate escape from the city. He explained how he became a member of the Mormon Church, claiming that he was deceived by one of its missionaries, who led him to believe that it was a religious and prosperous place. Three thousand persons went into the city during the same year as he did, and ninety-nine per cent of them were secured out of the Christian churches of England. He knew that ninety-nine out of every one hundred persons who joined the Mormon Church were members of a religious society in England, and he contended that it was the duty of the ministers and clergymen connected with English churches to warn their congregations against Mormonism. They were known as the Latter Day Saints, and he found that in order to be a first-class saint one had to be continually full of whisky. (Laughter.) He understood that missionaries from the city had been meeting with some success in the Hales Owen and Black Heath districts, and it was with the object of counteracting their influence that he had paid that visit to Hales Owen. He strongly appealed to the people, and especially the young girls not to be led astray by the glorious promises of the Mormon missionaries. It was stated that he was a paid agitator, but this he denied.

WHAT IS MORMONISM?

Sir,—It seems very strange to me that it took a gentleman like Mr. Jarman twelve years as high priest in Salt Lake City to find out the errors and abominations he is trying to put before the public. Our laws teach us that every individual is innocent or accounted as such until he is proved guilty. And the ministers and clergy of our nation should not wish to scandalize any denomination, sect, or person without being in possession of substantial evidence. I would like to point out that there are two different bodies of Latter Day Saints. The one has its headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, originally presided over by Brigham Young, where the laws of the State and nation have been violated or broken, which has been admitted by the leaders of that sect. But that is no reason or justification for another body of people to be molested and scandalized for others' wrong-doing; and I feel sure you would only like to see justice dealt out to all. The other body is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, having headquarters at Independence, Missouri, United States of America, and publishing house at Lamoni, Iowa, and presided over by Joseph Smith, son of the founder of the latter-day gospel, which was established in 1830. The church made great headway during the lifetime of Joseph Smith the Seer, but after his assassination error and polygamy were introduced by Brigham Young and others, Brigham Young assuming authority and leading a portion of the Saints away to Utah. The gospel and laws governing the church condemn the errors taught by the Utah people, and if your readers wish to get a true account of the laws and history of Latter Day Saints' gospel they can do so by visiting the Reference Library, Ratcliff Place, Birmingham, where can be found volumes of the History of the Church from 1830 up to a year ago. Yours, etc.,

J. E. M.

MORMONISM AND LATTER DAY SAINTS.

Sir,—In reply to "J. E. M.," permit me to say that had I known the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints had a branch in Birmingham I should have told my audiences that all the accusations I make apply to the Utah gang of Brighamite Mormons, and do not apply in any way to the Reorganized Church. I am now this week lecturing in Preston. Next week in Smethwick, Oldbury, and Netherton, near Birmingham. If "J. E. M." will inform me if the Reorganized Church have a branch at either of the places named I shall be happy to make the distinction and clear the Reorganized Church of all blame, and show that they are a religious and law-abiding people both in America and England. All I say in my lectures has reference only to the Utah Brighamite church of latter-day bigamists and murderers. Yours, etc.

WM. JARMAN, Ex-Mormon Priest.

8 Central Buildings, Lancaster Road, Preston, Nov. 9, 1908.

UTAH AND THE MORMONS.

Sir,—I read with pleasure Mr. W. Jarman's reply to my letter in which he gives such a clear and plain distinction between the two bodies of people. The Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints have two meeting-places in Birmingham—one at Priestley Road, Sparkbrook, the other at the Council Schools, Ickniel Street, Hockley (temporary)—and have members in Oldbury and Smethwick. Mr. Jarman may know the difference between the two sects, but many of your readers do not. We, as a people, have had to suffer unjustly from a misunderstanding by the public. I am pleased to hear that Mr. Jarman promises to make matters clear to the people to whom he lectures. Credit should be given to any one who is bold enough to come out in public and expose evils. But, on the other hand, innocent and law-abiding people should not be called upon to suffer. Yours, etc.,

J. E. M.

News From Branches

TORONTO.

The Herald readers are doubtless anxious to know how the work in Toronto is progressing, and as nothing has appeared in your columns and yet so much transpiring that would be of interest, we assume the task.

The fifth season of the Majestic Theater meetings opened Sunday evening, November 1, with a crowded house, and each Sunday evening the large building is filled to its utmost capacity to hear the gospel so ably expounded by President R. C. Evans. The work has gained a wonderful foothold in Toronto and the Saints stand nobly by Bro. Evans in helping, each in his small way, and yet much is attained.

During the past summer Elder Evans built a nice residence here and he and his family are now comfortably located at 35 Huron Street.

A very pleasant Thanksgiving Day was spent by the Saints and by many interested outsiders who gathered in the basement of the church for a sociable afternoon and evening. At six o'clock a splendid dinner was served under the management of Elder Evans and the ladies' auxiliary, and afterwards a miscellaneous program was had up-stairs. Everybody thoroughly enjoyed themselves and thought it would be an excellent idea to make it an annual affair. These social meetings of the Saints and their friends are productive of good and give the Saints an opportunity of getting acquainted with each other. The need of tables has been greatly felt for some time; in getting up these affairs hitherto we have had to borrow from one Methodist neighbor. So Bro. and Sr. Evans devised a plan of getting over the difficulty by giving a taffy pull in the basement of the church Tuesday evening, November 24. Bro. Evans has not forgotten his trade by any means and the people were there to keep him busy which they succeeded in doing, for the taffy was so good the demand quite exceeded the supply at times. Ice cream and pop-corn were also sold and twenty-nine dollars was realized after all expenses. A good part of this sum went towards the purchase of lumber, nails, etc., and Elder Evans and several of the brethren got together and made the tables, so that now we have almost every convenience. The prayer-meetings and Religio are well attended and many honest in heart are being gathered in and bear testimony that this is the gospel they have been seeking for. May the Lord prosper his work everywhere.

Memories of Genius.

Not for a moment should be deprecated the modern tendency to protect so far as possible the memories of men of genius who have given of their best to the world. The world will not forgive those who needlessly soil the names of its benefactors. It is hateful to impute the lower motives, and to exploit the mistakes and failures of those whose ill deeds would never have been bruited had it not been for their nobler accomplishments. But this generous mood, this sympathy with human frailty, this acknowledgment of the law of evolution in the realm of ethics and conduct should not be carried to the point of erecting vices into virtues, of not merely excusing, but preferring, and even honoring those actions which simply demonstrate a lack of moral self-control. —From an editorial in the Christmas Century.

The question of wine for sacramental use was brought up by president of the Cucamonga Branch. The conference went into committee of the whole for consideration of the matter, and it was freely discussed in all phases. The following motion finally prevailed: "Whereas, the Lord has said it 'mattereth not what ye shall eat or what ye shall drink when ye partake of the sacrament,' also that 'either wine or water may be used,' 'as may be expedient,' therefore, Resolved, That the former resolution governing this matter be rescinded and the expediency of using wine, water, or other material be left with the several branches to decide for themselves." Frederick M. Smith counseled the Saints not to contend over the matter, as it was more important to partake of the emblems worthily than to be too particular what the material consisted of that was used in the service, and advised that the Saints endeavor to enter into the true spirit of Christ and manifest their willingness to serve him while thus partaking. The Saints used the Methodist permanent camp-meeting grounds, pavilion, and tents at Tent City. The location was splendid, surroundings and everything were conducive to good meetings. Bro. Pitt, the "sweet singer of Israel," was in charge of the music and used all the forces to the best advantage. Brn. Frederick M. Smith, Frederick A. Smith, T. W. Williams, Albert Carmichael, and F. G. Pastoral.

To the Saints in Lamoni Stake; Greeting: As we are entering upon the last half of the last month of the year, it seems wisdom that we should address the Saints a few words in regard to the financial condition of our stake, and express our appreciation and gratitude to those that have so kindly and generously supported the finances of the work in the stake this year, which have enabled us to meet the expenses of supplying the elders' families and our poor, as promptly as we have been able to do. So far our receipts for tithing and offerings have been much more than they were this time last year, and while those that have honored the financial law of the church have done well, we will still need seven or eight hundred dollars more to close up the year's work. If all would try and do their part, we would have enough and to spare, and the Saints in general would feel much better, having the consciousness that they had done their part of the work.

Observation and experience have taught me that the more we do our own part of the work, the less disposition we have to criticise or find fault with others for doing or not doing theirs as we think they should. All may not be able to comprehend the importance of the law alike, but personally I am not so much concerned about not being able to understand my whole duty, as I am whether I do it or not as I am capable of, and do understand it.

We are sometimes told that conscience is a creature of education. Well, if that is so, if Latter Day Saints have not educated their minds under gospel influences to comprehend gospel law or rules to do their whole duty, whether everybody around them does it or not, I have just this much to say, the gospel has been a failure so far as they are concerned. Remember the Lord has said, "that it is not the work of God that is frustrated, but the work of men." (Doctrine and Covenants 2: 2.)

It will be sad to think when we reach the other shore, what we might have done, and what we might have been. Remember the Lord has again said, "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 3. Is it good sense or judgment, to do as much as some have done, and then lose the promise because some are doing what they ought not, and others are not doing what they ought? Has the Lord not also said, "As I live, saith the Lord God, ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel."—Ezekiel 18: 3. This was referring to that that is contained in the preceding verse saying, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge." Verse 20, "The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son." "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."—Galatians 6: 7. Our sowing time is now. Reaping time will be by and by. What will our harvest be?

We expect to send to our different agents in the Stake, circular letters for them to distribute in their branches. Members who desire to pay tithes or offerings, will please pay through their branch agents where it is convenient.

Trusting we will be able to close the year's work without being in debt, we remain,
WM. ANDERSON,
December 9, 1908. For Lamoni Stake Bishopric.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Florida District; Greeting: At our last district conference a resolution was passed recommending the writer for appointment as Bishop's agent. Cure for Cancer.

Bro. Norman W. Smith hands us the following cure for cancer. This has been published before, but we have received inquiries concerning it, and hence believe it is worth republishing.

"I have noticed in your columns death from cancer, and I have often thought to send you a remedy that has proven successful in my hands in every case that I have applied it to cancers.

"The remedy is this: Spread a plaster of common sticking-plaster, cut a hole a trifle larger than the cancer, so that there will be a small margin of good flesh, about the sixteenth of an inch, all around the cancer, leaving the cancer and this small margin exposed; then apply over the plaster and resting on the plaster the cancer plaster, composed of one part of wheat flour, one part blood root (sanguinaria) ground fine, one part chloride of zinc. [Not quite so much flour.—N. W. S.]

"Mix the sanguinaria and flour with water, then the chloride of zinc. Mix well and apply over the cancer, letting it remain from twenty-four to forty-eight hours, according to the time the cancer has been standing. Then take off the cancer plaster, and dress with any good healing salve. In from a week to ten days the cancer will drop out. (Do not try to press it out.)

"Then heal with any good salve. Probably the best healing salve is the All-Healing or Black Salve. It is the best for a cancer, which I will furnish the receipt to any one writing for it, inclosing a two-cent stamp to pay postage.

"KENT, Illinois.

"LEVI CHENEY.

"Black salve for cancers: Take rosin and beeswax, two ounces of each, sweet oil eight ounces; melt them together, stirring in when near the boiling point. Four ounces of red lead. Stir until brown, and when nearly cool add two drams of camphor pulverized, and stir until cold. Then box for use. To pulverize the camphor add a few drops of alcohol and it will readily powder under pressure of a knife blade.

"NORMAN W. SMITH."

He married in his native land; his wife soon died, leaving him one child who is now a married lady. A few years ago he visited Denmark to persuade her to emigrate to America, but failed. During the seventies he married Mrs. Mathisen, a widow with children. To these he proved a true husband and a kind father. April 23, 1906, he was married to Miss Christina Hansen, who has done all she could to care for him. Funeral-services at the Saint's church, Gallands Grove, December 6, by Elder C. E. Butterworth. Wife, children, other relatives, Saints, and friends mourn.

Funeral-services conducted by Elder Charles Cooper. Interment at Green Lawn Cemetery, Nelsonville, Ohio.

BOATRIGT.—Daniel Boatright, deceased, near Adelphi, Polk County, Iowa, of stomach troubles of long standing, November 29, at the age of 65 years, 1 month, and 13 days. Previous to accepting the gospel he was addicted to the liquor habit, but from this he was freed, and since February, 1903, the date of his baptism, he has done much to get the gospel before his neighbors, and his home has been the stopping place of the elders. He served in the war of the Rebellion about ten months. He leaves a wife and one child with several more distant relatives. Funeral-sermon by Elder J. F. Mintun, November 30, at his home, where a large number of relatives and friends had gathered. Even those who had opposed him because of his faith, said at his funeral, "A good man has gone to rest."

He expressed a desire to recover, that he might be baptized into Christ and become a member of the Reorganized Church. Funeral-services were conducted at the Saints' church, Deloit, Iowa, at 3 p. m., Thursday, November 19, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth. The attendance at the services was good, thus giving evidence that Mr. Saul Hattery and Sr. Martha Hattery and family have the sympathy of the entire community in the loss of their son, brother, and father.

Where no farewell tears are shed.
She rests on the shore that beams with eternal day.

New Poem by Edward Markham.

Edwin Markham, who made a world-wide reputation a few years ago with his poem, "The man with the hoe," has written for the Christmas Woman's Home Companion a poem that is considered to be even greater than "The man with the hoe." Many who have read Markham's new poem, "Before the gospels were," consider it the greatest verse of recent years. "Before the gospels were" tells, with wonderful poetic imagination, the story of the gathering together of the materials for the gospels by Christ's disciples after his ascension. Never before has there been presented so illuminating a picture of what Christ's life meant to his disciples and why it was so accurately reflected in their gospels.

The opening verse of the poem is:

"Long noons and evenings after He was gone,
Mary the Mother, Matthew, Luke and John,
And all those who loved Him to the last,
Went over all the marvel of the past—
Went over all the old familiar ways
With tender talk of dear remembered days.
They walked the roads that never gave Him rest—
Past Jordan's ford, past Kedron's bridge,
Up Olivet, up Hermon's ridge,
To that last road, the one they loved the best."

The climax of the poem is reached in the last verse, which sums up all the thoughts that have been expressed in the preceding lines:

"So huddling often by the chimney blaze,
Or going down the old remembered ways
On many a lingering walk,
They held their wonder-talk,

Minding each other of some sacred spot,
Minding each other of a word forgot;
So gathering up till all the whispered words
Went to the four winds like a flight of birds!"

Mr. George H. Carter has been retained as Washington correspondent, Mr. Carter being well acquainted with the local needs, having been for several years on the local staff of the Capital. In addition to these features a weekly short story page of unusual quality has been secured to be published once a week. Books About Lincoln.

As the date of the Lincoln centenary approaches, interest in everything connected with Lincoln's life increases and justifies the number of books promised on the subject. The Macmillan Company announces what is likely to prove an important historical study in The Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, by David M. DeWitt, whose scholarly work on The Impeachment and Trial of Andrew Johnson is known to all historical students. The same publishers have already brought out one of the best Lincoln books of recent years in James Morgan's Abraham Lincoln: The Boy and the Man, which one of the important educational journals declares to be "by far the best story of the boy and man."

A HANDFUL OF GEMS.

Every great political or religious movement has given rise to its own literature. Those who have taken part therein have been moved to give their feelings permanent expression in poem, song, or essay. Perhaps the most sublime and enduring expressions of such feelings have been preserved in songs or poems. The great national songs of Germany, Great Britain, France, and Spain were born during times of political upheaval. In America our great wars for liberty and union gave birth to various songs, such as, "My country, 'tis of thee," "The star-spangled banner," and others that express our national spirit.

In the realm of religion those who have been profoundly moved upon by the spirit of Christianity have written our great hymns. It is not strange, then, that what we term the latter-day work has given rise to its own peculiar literature. Because of the fact that we have been constantly assailed, a great deal of our energy has gone toward producing works of argument. But we have found time to produce several books of a finer literary character, besides poems and songs that express the spirit and sentiment of our work.

Spiritual songs have cheered the Saints, both in the first organization and in the Reorganization. There has been an abundance of striking events connected with the coming forth of this work, and its later history, to furnish material for our writers. There is no stranger history than the history of our work from its inception.

The coming forth of the Book of Mormon has been commemorated in the song by H. S. Dille, the first verse of which we quote:

"Book of Mormon, hid for ages
On Cumorah's lonely hill,
Written by those ancient sages
Whom Jehovah taught his will;
Glad we hail it,
Fullness of the gospel still!"

More striking, perhaps, than any event is the peculiar spirit of the work, which included the reconciliation of man to God, and the restoration of the blessings enjoyed by former-day saints. This moving of the Spirit upon the people impressed them profoundly in the early days of the church, and to this day, perhaps, is not better expressed than in W. W. Phelps' hymn, "The Spirit of God like a fire is burning":

"The Spirit of God like a fire is burning;
The latter-day glory begins to come forth;
The visions and blessings of old are returning;
The angels are coming to visit the earth.
"The Lord is extending the Saints' understanding—
Restoring their judges and all as at first;
The knowledge and power of God are expanding,
The veil o'er the earth is beginning to burst."

As a people we have always recognized the need of having an earthly leader who is in touch with God. From no other people in this age of the world could there have sprung the hymn, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet." It fitly expresses our sentiment as a church, and is frequently heard in the assemblies of the Saints:

"We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays;
We thank thee for every blessing
Bestowed by thy bounteous hand;
We feel it a pleasure to serve thee,
And love to obey thy commands."

The spirit of song did not pass away during the dark and cloudy days of the church. It remained and has shone forth in the Reorganization. We have the small beginnings of our work, its progress and triumph, and the final establishment of Zion, as well as our own personal duty, outlined in the familiar hymn, "Let us shake off the coals from our garments." We understand that the first two verses of this hymn were given by the Spirit to David H. Smith during a social-service, and that the third verse was added at a later date:

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments
And arise in the strength of our Lord;
Let us break off the yoke of our bondage,
And be free in the joy of the word.
For the pebble has dropped in the water,
And the waves circle round with the shock—
Shall we anchor our barks in the center,
Or drift out and be wrecked on the rock?
"Let us waken our songs in the morning,
And let them at noontide resound;
Then the evening shall find us rejoicing,
While the law in our hearts will be found.
For the Lord is remembering Zion,
And bringing her comfort once more,
Shall we anchor our barks in the center,
Or drift out and be wrecked on the shore?"

Many of the Saints have been cheered by the hymn, "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light," composed by Sr. Carrie Thomas, the history of which has been given in the SAINTS' HERALD:

"'Tis a glorious thing to be,
In the light, in the light,
Which the saints of old did see,

The true light of God;
Revelation's holy light,
Is the light, is the light,
And all else is dark as night,
Save this light of God."

No great song ever comes into existence without some deep feeling back of it, and we might be deeply concerned if the church had passed to a stage when no songs were being given to her people; but we are encouraged with the thought that such a condition has not obtained. Zion's Praises contains a number of hymns composed more recently than those we have mentioned. Prominent among these is the hymn entitled "The angel message," composed by Bro. James L. Edwards. Bro. Edwards has prepared an account of the rather remarkable history of this hymn that will appear in the Autumn Leaves at a later date. The first two verses of this hymn are especially fine and we quote them:

"I have found the glorious gospel that was taught in former years,
With its gifts and blessings all so full and free;
And my soul is thrilled with gladness, and banished are my fears,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Chorus:

"Then praise the Lord, oh, my soul!
Abundant mercy, oh, how free!
In joyful song Thy Spirit doth accord,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

"I wandered long in darkness, yet sought the narrow way,
And my life was like the surging of the sea;
But now I am rejoicing in this the latter day,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me."

At this season of the year we are fond of singing those hymns that commemorate the birth of Christ. This event has been used as the chief theme in many songs and poems. Writers have seized upon the vigil of the shepherds, the star of Bethlehem, and the birth of our Lord in the manger, and have woven them into beautiful creations; but we are reminded that though the earth at that date was practically cut in two, the knowledge of the Lord was not confined to the Eastern Hemisphere. People on this Western Hemisphere were looking for the coming of the Savior. Five years before his birth the Prophet Samuel told this people that a sign should be given by which they might know of that great event. The sign was that there should be two days and one night without darkness. When the time came for the fulfillment of his prophecy we find a little band of saints under sentence of death providing the sign should not be given. The shepherds were not the only ones who kept watch. There were those in the New World who watched anxiously because their hope of life eternal, and their hope of life in this world, depended upon the giving of the sign. These events furnish a historical foundation for our writers to build upon. One writer in the December Autumn Leaves, writing over the signature of Sr. Berta, has woven the incident into verse as follows:

"Crimson the morn in the east,
Golden the time of noon;
The hours on wings flew swiftly past,
Each hour more quickly than the last
O'er the land of promise went speeding fast,— Eve cometh soon.

"The hush of a waiting throng,—
And a sound as a gasp of fear,—
A prayer as the rays of the sun grew long,
And stilled the one-time dance and song,—
And the strong grew weak and the weak are strong,
With sunset near.

"The promise is sure,' they said,
And they whispered it soft and low.
'Did the sign come not our hope were fled
Did the sign come not would our blood be shed,
Both youth and aged to death be led Ere morning glow.'

"The sun to his rest went down
And a joy-throb thrilled the throng,—
For the night was clear as the crimson morn,—
For the night was bright as the golden noon
And the cry went up, 'The Christ is born!'
With a song of praise on the air up-borne,
That day-night long."

There are many strange events recorded in the history of the people of God, as contained in the Book of Mormon, the flight of Lehi from Jerusalem, the journey of Jared and his brother from the tower of Babel across the unknown waters of the great deep. These are as remarkable events as can be found anywhere in history. Bro. Carl L. Potter has written a long poem descriptive of the vision of Jared's brother on Mount Shelem. We can not reproduce the poem entire at this time, but we desire to quote the first six verses, which give a picture of the encampment at Moriancumr.

"Outlined against the eastern sky
Where stole the first gray dawn of morning bright, Alone, Mount Shelem, in its majesty,
Stood forth in bold relief, with towering height.

"As some great monarch might have stood,
With conscious pride that none so grand as he
In all the land of Moriancumr
Gazed from so great a height upon the sea—

"The silent sea that peaceful lay
Still wrapped in slumber gentle as a child's;
And to and fro its bosom rose and fell,
As softly fall the leaves in woodland wilds.

"Upon Mount Shelem's ample slope
A forest dense of thriving fir-trees grew,
Where frisking squirrels and sweetly singing birds
In unmolested joy no danger knew;

"Where by a thousand sparkling springs
A dancing rivulet was amply fed,
That widened far its banks till to the sea,
At last, a mighty river, on it sped.

"Upon the beach so broad and gray,
Just where the river joined the quiet sea,
A tiny clustered clan of tents were pitched,
Like bee-hives nestled on the silent lea."

Scores of poems and songs of worth equal to those we have mentioned go to make up our church literature. Perhaps we have not even mentioned the finest of them, owing to lack of space. Surely our people may well aspire to develop themselves mentally and spiritually that they may give the most beautiful and striking expression to the truths that they treasure.

TWO PECULIAR CASES OF FANATICISM.

One of the most regrettable tragedies in the annals of crime committed in Kansas City, Missouri, ten miles west of Independence, occurred in the vicinity of Fourth and Main, adjoining the Central Police station, Tuesday afternoon, December 8, about half past three, in which one policeman was killed outright, another so badly shot up that he died at the hospital the following Thursday, and two others were wounded, one of them quite seriously. One man passing along the street was shot and also died Thursday, as did one of the assaulting party, and a young girl of fourteen killed by the officers in firing at a boat on which with her mother and sister they were trying to escape, and firing on the officers with a Winchester rifle.

A band of religious fanatics, as they are termed, consisting of one James A. Sharp, asserting himself to be Adam-god, the father of Jesus Christ, his wife, Melissa, called Eve, Louis Pratt, his wife and five children, Lulu, aged 14, who was killed on the boat, Lena 12, Mary 10, Dewey 8, and Edna 4, came floating down the Missouri River, reaching Kansas City a few days previous to the riot. They began teaching their doctrines on the street, singing, and collecting money, and for a day or two had held meetings in a mission house owned by a man named Creighton. Sharp claims to have had a revelation that he was "Adam-god" while on a farm at Woodward, Oklahoma, and gaining the conversion of his wife to this belief, they sold their farm and started out to proclaim the faith.

They drifted into the Dakotas, and learning of the trouble the Canadian authorities were having with a sect called the Daukoubars, they conceived the idea that they had a mission to that people, and immediately started to put it into execution. The officers of the Dominion, however, investigated the matter and expelled them from their borders, which so incensed Sharp and his followers that they vowed they would come back with fire and sword, keeping their word so far that they did go back armed with Winchester rifles, and for a time defied the authorities there. Finally they were again expelled, and ended up at Kansas City, where the fierce fight of Tuesday with the authorities ended their pretensions, though their intentions had been to float on down the river.—Zion's Ensign, December 17.

PINE BLUFF, December 10.—Three negro religious fanatics, calling themselves John, Nathan, and Thomas Christ, who declare that they were sent to Pine Bluff by Jesus Christ to "save souls and sinners," have addressed letters to Prosecuting Attorney W. D. Jones, Sheriff C. M. Philpot, Justice J. A. Frazier, Chief of Police A. J. Stewart and other officials of this city and county, in which they say the recent caving of the river bank was the work of "the Father," who, they say, prompted them to spread his teachings here. They predict more damage, asserting that "The Father is after the hearts of the people and is going to have them." The letters received by the officials differ materially and the writers make predictions as to the future welfare of officers and the city in general. They will be arrested if located, as the authorities believe the negroes lunatics.

Some months ago the three negroes paraded the down-town streets wearing nothing but fig-leaves. They proceeded to preach to negroes and others who gathered on a down-town corner and blocked traffic. The police interfered and all of the "prophets" were taken to jail. They fought the officers viciously and one of them had to be clubbed into submission. When their preliminary trials were called in the justice court of J. A. Frazier they created a big sensation in court, pleading their own case with phrases from the Bible. Each of the disturbers was fined fifty dollars and costs and sentenced to the county farm. A large crowd of negroes had gathered in the court-room and when the "prophets" were being taken from the justice office a large telegraph pole suddenly gave way and fell across the court-room door. The incident created a panic among the superstitious negroes here and they are still discussing it.

The three men were finally taken to the county farm, where they served brief terms, appealing their cases to the circuit court. They refused to eat while in jail and would not don clothing. They declare that the "Lord's son" told them to appear in public like Adam and Eve.—Arkansas Gazette, December 11.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The Independent Patriot has the following regarding one of the evils of the small town, an evil that should have no place in Lamoni:

"There are a few occupations in this world that are utterly destitute of every virtue and decent element; and one of these is the occupation of the bootlegger. That we have bootleggers in Lamoni every body is now aware. What are we to do about it? Lie supinely, and allow them to freely ply their trade, making drunkards out of our boys, as they are doing? Or will the citizens take some steps to again be heard in the matter, and again arouse public sentiment against these unprincipled wretches who dare to ply such a trade even in Lamoni? We are met with the query, What can be done? What can the citizens do to drive from our midst, the home, character, and life destroyers? Let us get together and try to ascertain some effective way of meeting the foe. Is it possible that in a town overwhelmingly temperance and law-abiding, a wretch like a bootlegger can ply his trade without fear of interference? We believe something can be done. We believe that public sentiment can make itself felt. We believe the pulpit and the press, both secular and religious should make united war on this utterly contemptible occupation. We believe Lamoni should at once do something. The evil is growing. It is ruining some of our boys, disgracing some of our men, and dishonoring the community. We suggest that the pastors of the two churches confer with the mayor, and take some action to at least diminish if not destroy bootlegging in Lamoni."

A pleasant feature of life at Graceland College is the effort to make the holidays pleasant for students who can not return home. The faculty will endeavor to make the season as enjoyable as possible. One feature of the season will be an old-fashioned Christmas tree Thursday evening, December 24, in the College chapel. The entertainment will be for the faculty and for students who can not spend Christmas at home, though students resident in Lamoni are invited. Vacation began Friday. Elder John Smith addressed the students Friday morning.

The usual stir of preparation for Christmas is observable everywhere. The schools have had their exercises, the Sunday-schools are perfecting plans, and home circles are getting ready for the usual feasting and merrymaking. We learn quite incidentally that one citizen intends to "cut out" the usual purchase of presents and instead place twenty-five dollars in the hands of the Bishop.

A large and almost perfect rainbow was observed in the northwestern skies early Saturday morning. Numbers of our people admired the unique spectacle.

Sunday was a fine winter day. Bishop Kelley occupied in the morning, his subject being the law of life. Elder Alma Kent spoke in the evening.

Special offerings were taken up in several classes at the Sunday-school to purchase baskets of provisions for those in need. This has become a regular and pleasant yearly custom. The Christmas offering will be taken up next Sunday.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

A visit to the Holy Land makes the Bible narrative appear more real; "whited sepulchres" are to be seen; beggars and lepers as in ancient times; remains of ancient terraces on the hills; and sites of old cities. Many customs have changed but little since ancient times. Among other things that interested me was a shepherd going before his sheep; this practice is in accord with the words of Jesus; "And when he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers."—John 10: 4, 5.

If a sheep gets lost and mingles with another herd, as soon as it hears its master's voice it will lift up its head, look around, and start toward its master—"they know the voice." Sometimes the shepherd is caught out in a storm and night comes on; as he goes along toward shelter, with staff in hand, he taps the rocks by the way, and the sheep though they can not see follow along with full confidence in the one that goes before. The psalmist David says, "Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."—Psalm 23: 4.

WORK IN THE OPEN.

Hundreds of people will stand on the street listening to a preacher whom they have never heard before, if he has something with which he can hold their attention. By the time a man has made a dozen or fifteen failures in attempting to hold a crowd around him while he delivers the gospel message, he will have learned the things that are necessary to achieve success.

Each man has a power within himself, and he must study how to apply that power to the work that has been assigned him, in order to accomplish the desired result.

Observation and experience have taught us that thousands will attend meetings on the streets or in tents or in the open air who would not go to the church or hall. The children, especially, whom we would win and lead to Christ, are particularly attracted by a tent and the freedom it suggests.

The people love the open air. Some of the greatest meetings and sermons mentioned in the Holy Scriptures were in the open. Pentecost, when three thousand were converted, was an open-air meeting. The meetings conducted by Philip in Samaria were in the open air. The great sermon of Saint Paul was preached on Mars Hill, in the open air. Many of the sermons and sayings of the Lord Jesus Christ himself were delivered in the open air. He loved to work in the open. The Sermon on the Mount was preached in the open air. John the Baptizer preached outdoors—in the wilderness.

The prophetic time of making excuses described in the fourteenth chapter of Luke, is now here:

So that servant came and shewed his lord these things. Then the master of the house, being angry, said to his servants, Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed; the halt and the blind.

There are millions of people, who have not been "warned" in the cities, and as many more in all parts and corners of the earth. The church has a duty to perform toward this great multitude. The church is responsible to God for preaching "this gospel of the kingdom" to "all the world for a witness."

The world is full of people with burdens of sadness, sin, and oppression. It is the business of the church to find such people. The cry of loneliness and despair going up from the honest in heart, should pierce the hearts of the Saints of Christ and stir them to activity.

Let those praying, paying, preaching members be more lively and energetic in the open campaign, for the cause of truth, and those members who are now dilatory will receive some touch of the divine Spirit which will arouse them to diligence.

During the Pertle Springs reunion of Independence Stake, about four years ago, Apostle Joseph Luff preached his first open-air street sermon. The sermon was delivered on the street-corners at Warrensburg, Missouri. In a conversation with Bro. Luff, after the effort, he stated that he had received the greatest endowment of the Holy Spirit while he was preaching on the street that he had ever been blessed with, and that he took the manifestation of the Spirit as an indication that the Lord was well pleased with the open street method of presenting the gospel to the people.

While inditing this article, I have received the earnest of the Spirit, that it is pleasing unto the Lord, and those who are concerned will be similarly affected when they read it. J. C. GRAINGER.

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well and doing whatever you do without a thought of fame. If it comes at all, it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after. And, moreover, there will be no misgivings, no disappointment, no hasty, feverish, exhausting excitement.—Selected.

WORLDLY CARES A MOMENT LEAVE US.

(Words by David H. Smith; music by Norman Smith.)

Worldly cares a moment leave us,
Thoughts of earth a while forbear,
All the vexing strifes that grieve us,
'Tis the hour of praise and prayer.
While we draw a little nearer,
To thy throne, Almighty Friend,
Bid our lamps of faith burn clearer;
Let thy Spirit now descend.

Bear to us thy testimony,
Bid our hearts with love o'erflow,
Sweeter than the amber honey
From the fairest flowers that blow.
From thy pure, celestial glory
Send to us thy gifts divine;
Bid the ancient gospel story
In primeval luster shine.

Fill us with thy presence solely.
Make our minds, and let them be
Wide and deep and pure and holy,
Even as eternity,—
Fenced about with pure salvation,
By the strongholds of thy word.
Let ecstatic exultations
Ring though each melodious chord.

Hope no longer, Saints beloved,
But your true religion know.
God's sure voice is not removed,
Though the world would have it so.
See our lovely elder brother,
Fairer than the sun that shines;
Rabbi Jesus, and no other,
Shall be leader of our minds.

Snowflakes flutter down from the clouds
And icicles hang from the eaves,
But the sleeping flowers never know,
And lie warm beneath the leaves.
The children polish skates and sleds,
They never find it drear;
The house is full of spicy smells,
And Christmas time draws near.

DETERMINISM OR FATE.

ELDER THOMAS JONES.

"What is it that can better our environment? The doctrine revealed long ago, 'Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself.'"

We find wandering aimlessly through life numbers of men and women, miserable and broken in spirit, endeavoring to find comfort in the thought that such a life as theirs must be lived; it was to be.

A young man has made his mistake in life by stealing gold, silver, or virtue. The result is that his passion leads him on to crooked paths of life and untold misery. The lustful son and daughter bring sorrow, by their pernicious ways, into the home. The mother weeps for her son, who, by his wrong-doing, is brought to the convict prison or the gallows. The father sorrows for the daughter who has gone astray.

We see a patient wife and mother lingering out her days with a drunken husband, a cruel man, whose qualities that she once loved are gone. At times she will say, "I suppose it was to be." The theory of the determinist is that everything was or is divinely appointed—on it goes to claim its relationship to that fate which draws down the curtain over this present life. The orthodox preacher generally endeavors to show that the hand of God is to be seen and felt in the death of the little babe, suggesting that God takes the little lamb to get at, or save, the sheep. Such things as these are hard to reconcile as the will of God. But there is a dream to account for, or a rap at the door or window. Conclusion: a presentiment from God that it was willed of him.

We do not doubt but what it is within the province of God to so foreshadow such an event in some way or other. If he does, it only proves that he has permitted it in the natural order of things. It seldom happens that he intervenes and prevents the processes of his law. If he does, it is a miracle. There has been and can be even that. I could give instances where satanic forces have plainly enough predicted the death of certain persons. It has been done by the shuffling of the cards, the planchette writing apparatus, crystal gazing, and the spiritualistic palmist.

There are two sources from which this information is liable to come. But usually neither of them proves that it was to be—prearranged in the purpose of God. There may be numerous causes for premature death, without setting them all to be the fate so often accepted.

It is determined for all men once to die—death in some way is the heritage of all flesh; it being a general principle. Premature death of children, men, and women in general, is seen around us in our experience. Doctors tell us that thousands of children die because of parental sins, and improper methods of feeding. What numbers of people are hurrying on to the grave by drunkenness, self-abuse in various ways, suicides, murders, and by plague or scourge that comes from God. Even the curse that comes from God can not be accounted as their destiny. It was their choice to receive punishment for wrong-doing, as it also was their privilege to receive reward for right-doing.

Who is it that seeks to persuade mankind that the varied results of these perversions of right principles are the sequences of a vain endeavor to do right? What spirits are there that persuade the children of men that we are simply in a state of evolution—all will come right by and by? What force is it that seeks to instill into the minds of the human family "that man can not sin against God"—"that he has no will of his own to exercise"? How do we hesitate to say—because we observe that it has been said long ago who it is. Nephi predicted how it would be in our day. The extremes of the past centuries in regard to the Devil and hell are but an idle tale now in the ears of men. They have pictured the wrong person as the Devil; the wrong kind of hell. The result is as his satanic majesty wanted it. He and his host inspire men and women to seek to reason God from the universe, and the Devil, the imaginary old fogie with a long tail, ape-like body, and long ears, away from the world. He laughs, and true; because he is not what they said he was.

And behold, others he flattereth away, and telleth them there is no hell [place of punishment]; and he saith unto them, I am no devil, for there is none; and thus he whispereth in their ears, until he grasps them with his awful chains, from whence there is no deliverance.—2 Nephi 12: 3.

It is none other than he who has evolved the fortune-teller, spirit medium, prognosticator, and planet-reader of our age, as well as those of ages past.

The doctrine of "it was to be," planet-reading, evolution of man, that man is not a creature of will but a machine, does not tend to alleviate the suffering of mankind or to brace him up to overcome himself. Man is a free agent to choose for himself the path he will go. What is it that can better our environment? No other principles but the doctrine revealed long ago: Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, might, mind, and strength, and thy neighbor as thyself.

It is not the application of these principles that has landed the world into the sin of unbelief, crime, theft, selfishness, murder, adultery, and the unnumbered social, religious, and political evils that enslave the nations of the earth. We again declare that the pity talked of toward the thief, liar, murderer, and drunkard, that he should not be punished, but restrained, is pity wasted, and is an empty philosophy. Christ says, "Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man" but "that which cometh out of the man that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of men, proceed evil thoughts," etc. Our restraint of the murderer or thief as a material remedy, is like the lady suggesting to a notorious convict that he had better have cut his hand off than to steal. "Go into life maimed." But the convict said, "Madam, it was not the hand but the heart that stole."

The gospel is the remedy, if applied. It has in it all the scope necessary, love toward God, with all the heart, might, mind, and strength—food for the heart and mind, recreation for our might and strength; mental and physical culture, the culture of the mind as well as the muscle.

The gospel is to be proclaimed in all nations. Mankind is asked to flee from modern determinism, and the fate of the evil-doer, and shun the dogma of "What is to be, will be." Do not despair, for God is anxious that all his creatures should engage in their own emancipation by repentance from sin and the application of holy and uplifting principles. The fact remains that if man is to have a better environment, he must make it by individual and collective reform of life and character.

The angels will not come to make our environment. We shall have to acquire the method by faith and obedience, and seek the coöperation of God, Christ, angels, and men, so that the peace on earth, good will to men, may be felt as God has purposed.

Yours for the truth,

THOMAS JONES.

THE GREAT ETHICAL LAW.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

"The life of Christ from birth to death, from Bethlehem to Calvary, was one of service to others. Harmonizing therewith, we find every teaching, every pronouncement breathing the altruistic principle."

When over the plains of Judea was sung the angelic announcement, "Unto us a son is born, unto us a king is given," it heralded the advent into the world of a being whose life and teachings were to have ever afterward a marked influence on the moral and ethical development of humanity. The king of peace had come.

Jesus of Nazareth, as a Jew, was born in the midst of a nation representing the ethical standard of the world. Justice and equity were had as the objects of the statutory laws of that nation, the basic principle on which they operated being from the Mosaic economy, "An eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth." To the giver of stripes shall stripes be given.

The Christ, whose thirty years of preparation for the glorious work of the three years in which his world-and-eternity-influencing work was consummated, lived and worked under the protection of Jewish laws based on this principle. He recognized what of justice was in the law; but, animated by his intense interest in humanity, his loving heart and sympathy for them in their sufferings resulting from their errors, his lofty mind illuminated by divine wisdom emanating from the very presence of Jehovah, he gave to the world, by example and precept, the great epoch-making, wonder-working, joy-producing principle of altruism, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," on which were based laws, more nearly just and equitable. This great ethical law, pronounced by the lowly Nazarene as being the first great commandment, has had its steadily increasing effect upon the forward march of civilization and intellectual and moral development. Trace, if you will, the effect of its dissemination, through the advancing cause of Christianity, and note the changes gradually wrought in the civil codes of the Christian nations, the effect upon laws calculated to establish equity. The principle of an "eye for an eye" demanded penal infliction for the sake of retribution, while the operation of the great basic principle of the Christian economy makes the great object of penal servitude not only the protection of society but the reclamation of the criminal. And justice and equity, though mercy may abound, are wrought by the operation of the great altruistic law of the Great Nazarene, Love thy God and make it known through love for thy neighbor.

The great ethical law is destined to change, it is now gradually changing (though we may think painfully slowly), the animus of our social operations. It should cause men (and we hope it does) to consider themselves as social units whose work is a social function, rather than to consider themselves personal units whose chiefest purpose is self aggrandizement. It will remove us from egoism to altruism. Under the old law every man is impelled by motives springing from self; and penal servitude inflicted for infracted law was retributive in effect rather than reformatory. Under the Christian law one's motive is service to others, and our efforts will be to save, not destroy, the erring ones.

The Christ came to enhance the glory, not of himself, but his Father, Jehovah. In his sojourn here he labored not for himself, but continually for others; and when at last he had passed through Gethsemane out upon Calvary, he died, not because of his errors, but as a sacrifice for humanity, that by the glorious consummation of his life of service to man and God, God and man, through sin once separated, could be placed at one. When the agony was over, and when the stiffening lips of the Master had cried, "'Tis finished!" the great atonement was accomplished.

His life, from birth to death, from Bethlehem to Calvary, was one of service to others. Harmonizing therewith, we find every teaching, every pronouncement breathing the altruistic principle. He constantly taught the eradication of egoism, the institution of altruism. In his humble life he exemplified it, in his glorious death he intensified it.

He taught and lived the love of God through service to men. Have his teachings found a response within us? Does his cry, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," find an echo in our hearts? Are we ready for service to others? Christ, who served us always, in turn demands service to God. Shall we not render it? He taught us how, and in return for his great sacrifice shall we not give him glorious service, render love to our great God by loving and doing for his sons, our fellow men? "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself." "On these two hang all the law and the prophets."—Frederick M. Smith in December Autumn Leaves.

A CHRISTMAS MESSAGE.

ELDER J. W. RUSHTON.

Our Christmas stands to us as commemorating the birth of the divine intent concerning man and the unveiling of his destiny.

Heigh-ho! Another Christmas is close upon us. We see sights and hear sounds which the fleeting years have familiarized to all.

During the next few days the old glad greetings will once again ring out in all their old-time cheeriness, and with the magician's wand of memory call up to remembrance many visions and recollections of the past joys and sorrows and charge the soul with brightness and sadness; alternating light with shadows.

And, in spite of the rude hand of modern skepticism and gross materialism, with almost childish expectancy the multitudes look for the coming of this time of warmth and good feeling, which, to many, it appears that Time dispenses with two niggardly a hand. Still it comes; and the world hails its coming with good cheer and almost hysterical gladness; and, though the good feeling is transient and largely histrionic, yet we would not forget it nor would we forego the Christmas holiday with all the faults which carping criticism would urge against it. In the face of all moral obliquities, there is, underneath it all, a strong moral force which is tending to brotherhood.

For a brief week, under the veneer of merriment and glare of gaudy decorations, with the holly, evergreen, and mistletoe, so rich in symbolism, we hide out of sight the grim and foreboding cares of life's stern realities and enter into a brief period of delirium; and, to borrow one of Ruskin's phrases, we "move in a circle of stage-fire." We enjoy good food, good drink, and good pleasure. Please define the word good "quantitatively" rather than "qualitatively."

But after all, is not Christmas an abnormal state? A feverish vision? We are poised for a short moment on the crest of a big wave of emotion, and in the exhilaration of the upward swing we live in an unreal world; and, as the receding wave carries us back once again to the normal and level, we again renew the fierce struggle for a bare existence, wherein once again the clash of arms, the groans of the wounded, and the strained look of anguish greets us on every hand.

Still, somehow, muddlingly, instinctively, we have got a sort of idea, a kind of mental nebula of the real meaning of this Christmas. Of course it is more or less grotesquely caricatured, but still, in our heretical way of keeping the "lovefeast" of God, we have grasped its inner, spiritual import, and though we have garnished it with the bedraggled and tinsel garments of materialism, "brotherliness," "peace," "equality," and "plenty," intermittently shines through it all.

But, like the Jews, we look for the coming Utopia, as they looked for the "restoration of the kingdom to Israel"; and the jangling dissonance between the divine ideal and the human attempt at its realization is bewildering.

We somehow vaguely sense that Christmas stands as a symbol of "Peace on earth and good will towards man," and with the usual muddling of the race we straightway attack the conditions, and like so many stage-managers and carpenters we proceed to remove the heavy somber scenery of tragedy and melodrama, replacing it with the glittering scenery of comedy and children's pantomime; and in the glare of artificiality, we spend the days in the burlesque of the Christmas lovefeast, reminding us somewhat of the Jewish desecration of the feast of tabernacles in the days of Jesus.

Amid it all, above all the crashing music of our pantomime, we hear the hysterical shriekings of the multitudes, "A merry Christmas and a happy New-year!"

The tragedy of it! Away they go like the conjured hallucinations of the opium or hashish victim, whirling and rioting in the mad attempt to forget "yesterday" and the coming "morrow" in the excitement of the present pleasure.

It was on occasions of this kind, when the inner self of the Master was strongly stirred, that he said, "Come ye apart"; or, "while yet it was night, a great while before it was day, he went up into a mountain to pray"; or, as in the case of the sickening spectacle of the Jewish debauch which had taken the place and name of the "feast of tabernacles," "he spent all night in prayer."

You can not get a true perspective until you "come apart." You can not meditate until you gather up yourself, and within the seclusion and quietude of your own heart you sort things out and analyze judicially things that are seen and experienced.

The age is infinitely poorer because it has developed a distaste for soul-analysis or meditation, and prefers the automatic way of living, and having everything served by means of a penny-in-the-slot machine. Even its culture, politics, and religion must be scrappy, and of the "four and a half penny" magazine brand. But if men lose the art of thinking and meditating, sure enough you will get ocular demonstration that Darwin's theory of human descent from the anthropoid age has something very strongly in favor of it.

What of this Christmas wish? Does it represent the irony of humanism? or, is it the sincere wish of the aching heart and throbbing soul at the back of things? Has our past, have our yesterdays provided the foundation for the merry Christmas and the Happy New-year, which is, after all, the ever-surging prayer of the great family of God on earth? And, as we look into the gloaming of the coming vistas and, as we from the vantage-point of the present see adumbrated the "coming events" in the mystic light of prophecy, are we assured of a Happy New-year?

Come ye apart and read the signs of the times! Look down upon this world of ours and notice the bustling activities which for weeks and months have been laboring to bring the supplies to meet the demands of this festive occasion, things to eat, things to wear, and things to amuse. Things! All things! Our Christmas is glorified in the demand and supply of "things" which the multitude hungers and thirsts for. The prevailing spirit of the age, the temper of the modern mind, the one great problem upon which all the energies and ingenuity of man is concentrated is summed up in the questions: "What shall we eat?" "What shall we drink?" "Wherewithal shall we be clothed?" and "What shall we play at?"

In the face of this the old-fashioned greeting "set" to the loud guffaws and tittering simpers is strangely out of place. Think of it! Be merry; let the heart be free from care and full of innocent joy,—the exuberant joy of childhood's innocency. Out of things? The wish is ghastly mockery. "Happiness" out of things to eat, drink, wear, and amuse? "Where we are not at ease we are not happy," said Sir Walter Scott. Are the possessors of "things" merely, either paragons of a merry life or a happy life? Is this the spiritual interpretation of the orchestral message of the Christmas morning which welled up in Bethlehem and since has suffused the world with its melody and illumined all the dark corners with hope? Never! Men with souls, the crowning triumph of creative skill invested with divinity, contented with the toys of matter and things of their making only; plenty to eat; plenty to drink; plenty to wear; plenty of property; and, above all, plenty of play! Can we insult our pedigree so glaringly and coarsely by claiming that we are merry and happy with such trivial and unreal chimeras? Is it so with us that we uproariously indorse the Master's description of the world-spirit of his day, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry."

Yet into the swirling vortex of passion and "fleshliness" the world plunges! And the plunging is the least of the woes; the desire for such plunging is worse; and the pleasure found in the plunging is worst. And in spite of the flimsy classifications of blood, cloth, and pedigree, how much alike we are! Rich men, poor men, religious men, irreligious men, working men, lazy men; indeed "all sorts and conditions of men" absorbed in the endeavor to satisfy hunger, thirst, greed, and passion. Not that these ought not to be satisfied; no, no, but what should be servants to higher and holier impulses are the masters. The body, the animal, is more than the soul, the intellect, and the divinity of man. Indeed, almost everything is subordinated to these commonest of all demands. Whatever is done, is done to increase opportunities to eat, drink, and be merry.

To-day we lavish honors upon the men who provide things to eat, brew beer, and distill whiskies, and amuse us by literary juggling or play acting. These are the ones upon whom the smile of royalty, falling, transmutes such from common, plebian clay into blue-blooded, privileged aristocracy; and shouts of approval testify that such a gauging of the public taste has not been exaggerated. Honors are symbols of public approval: the approval can only be bestowed when we recognize a more or less successful attempt to realize our inward ideal.

Let the press be subpoenaed as a witness; and dare we particularize? What is the public demand; what is the public taste? Let this undeviating mirror of public character reveal to us the inner want of the soul humanism. Look at commerce, at politics, at philosophy, and, lastly but not the less carefully, at religion, and let me again ask, "What is demanded?" Is it not a case of what can you give us to eat, to drink, to wear, to play with? And, with alacrity, we find caterers ready to bribe with things in earth and things in heaven. "Getting" is the summum bonum of humanity.

To "get," whether money, position, power, or an immunity from responsibility; but still to "get" is the most active motive and incentive we have. Even the fashionable craze of "democracy" is propagated largely by the bribe of "equality," more than by the principle of "Kenosis." It can see the desirability of all being for each, providing the "all" is you and the "each" is me. Even evangelicalism must cater to the popular spirit of the times and bribe men to righteousness by an offer of heaven and an escapement from hell. Our Christmas hilarity is largely the outcome of this disposition to get something. In spite of the corruption act, this getting is about all that many see to admire in the good old greeting which is so popular.

We do not mind that men who feed the nation honestly, quench its thirst seasonably, clothe it respectably, or even gayly, and amuse it thoroughly, should be rewarded as well as soldiers, statesmen, scholars, and men of justice. But the tragedy of it is in that men, as before stated, with souls, can either expect or be gratified with such baubles. While we congratulate ourselves upon our civilization, our advanced views of education, politics, and religion, and even rhapsodize about the discovery of the "divine" in the "human" a la "New Theology," these stern facts of experience are driving home to us the absolute, though unpalatable, truth of the despised Nazarene's knell-like maxim, "That which is born of flesh is flesh."

Even much of what we consider our Christian charity, when forced to the last analysis, is found to be more in the nature of "conscience money"; which, through the machinery of religious organizations, is doled out to palliate the victimized humanity suffering under the injustices inflicted by the cruel and relentless desire to get. And what escapes the absorbent properties of the sponge-like institutions percolates in the form of soup, blankets, coal, and sweated labor to the files of poor mendicants who only too often are, by this very process, receiving insult to their injuries. Let "justice" be done and "charity" would not be needed. This is one thing that was involved in the message of the first Christmas.

Still, it is once again Christmas-tide, and withal is the holiest and most pregnant of all our symbols, for we commemorate the "Incarnation of God." We respectfully ignore all the theological points which are involved, and notice the facts as they are in all the strength of their being.

Regard the birth of the Messiah in the village of Bethlehem as a myth if you will, treat it as a superstition of the priests, born of the world's childish age, and still we have left the marvelous and stupendous "Ideal" which was born into the consciousness of man. The astounding consciousness of divine nearness. With that flaming Star there was flashed into human history the mystic word "Emmanuel," and the current of history was diverted because from that time it was proclaimed by celestial voices; no others could have proclaimed the message, "God with us." Divinity was born in humanity! And in proportion as the consciousness of the indwelling divinity was sensed, was "the kingdom of God within our reach." "Peace on earth and good will towards men."

The harmony of heaven on earth! Think of it! All the celestial music of God's habitation springing up in this earth of ours, so long the crater which has belched forth smoke, fire, and the vapor of death to the rumblings and cracklings of sorrow and pain as an accompaniment. How? By what means? Good will manward!

"The kingdom of heaven is within you," said the Master. Let man but will "good," and "peace is on earth." Let man "will" evil, and God Almighty can not prevent the kingdom of the Devil!

There is no merriment in accretion; for, though a man shall gain the whole world, and the inward soul of the man be lost, what, what has been gained? There is no happiness in the multitude of things which a man possesseth, for both merriment and happiness are states of the soul, the conditions of being, and the dependency of the soul upon things without; for its condition leads us to the inevitable gloom of the pessimistic determinism, makes man the victim of circumstances, the sport of fate. His Christmas enjoyment will be complete with a "great fat goose, a barrel of beer, and a pocket full of money," as our children have been for years singing at the neighbors' doors.

How like the children we are after all our boasted progression. "Give the man the land, allow him to nationalize the means of producing wealth; give him equality, and you will make men not serfs or automata of him." Well, God knows we need men. But in light of knowledge dare we give strong meat to children? By all means let the land be the heritage of the toiler, let the means of producing wealth be in the control of the people, and let all men have equality of opportunity. But if the men upon whom this stupendous (aye more so infinitely than is dreamed of) responsibility falls, are incapable of using such "power," who can catalogue the miseries of such a state?

The Christmas message was right and that only can be right; universal harmony is from the inward willingness to goodness working outwardly. It is inconceivable that any environment, in itself composed of "things," can mould and fashion the subtle forces of intelligence and life—soul. Therefore, it is not the things or conditions which first must demand our attention; nor shall we feel satisfied if our Christmas greeting does not primarily and comprehensively apply to the "merriment" and "happiness," not of the circumstances, but of the inward adjustment of the moral and spiritual forces of the individual personality to the highest and holiest aspirations of which man is capable. To therefore discard the Christ, either as impossible or as a superstitious myth, is not a move forward but a necessary retrogression. Our Christmas stands to us as commemorating the birth of the divine intent concerning man, and the unveiling of his destiny, if only he will be true to that highest and holiest revealed in him; whose entrance into the world was the discovery of the "immortality of life." It is now too late to try to obscure the light of this divine glory. We have seen the vision, we have heard the voice, and from the summit of spiritual altitudes we have looked upon the "promised land" of coming "dominion." "But now we see not all things subjected unto him [man], but we see Jesus because of the suffering of death crowned with glory and honor." And in the sublime vision of transfigured manhood, we see the prophecy of humanity's finality and efflorescence.

So, even though we may retreat before the accumulating difficulties of the Incarnation and the miraculous conception of the Babe of Bethlehem, it can not be denied that a greater mystery is now encountered in the birth of the "Ideal of God for Man," in the soul of man. Man may attack the story of the first Christmas and the sacred mystery it enshrines, but while they attack the "symbol," "the substance" still remains as the invincible witness to the transcendent glory of the Christmas greeting. All the chameleon-like theologies of the transient centuries can not obscure the vision.

Not all the thunderings of humanity's tide against the rocks of this eternal truth can shake the foundations of our belief in this revelation of coming harmony; nor silence "the still small voice" of the responsive soul as its answer to the call of its divine counterpart, "Come up hither." Nor can the blatant agnosticism employ all its resources of withering sarcasm to effectively blast the immortal glory of the "ideal." We not only have it; it is us. And inevitably we are tending towards it as surely as the budding blossoms turn from the darkness of the night to greet the radiant glory of the rising orb of day.

Humanity can only be identified in hopes, ideals, and aspirations. Our Christmas greeting is the symbol of the crystallization in concrete form of those hopes and ideals, and the pledge of the answering of the noblest aspirations of the noblest sons of men the world has ever been blessed with. Having seen the vision of God in man, and the possible destiny revealed in Jesus, are we "satisfied" with those things which are separated from the prosperity and happiness which Christmas signifies by the whole diameter of being? Then, once again, redeeming the greeting of heaven to earth; of God to man, from the ribald jester and profligate and those whose highest ambition in the sacred festival is to eat, drink, and be merry, reverently and yet none the less heartily we join in wishing all "A right merry Christmas and a happy New-year."

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER M. M. TURPEN.

I was born near Pleasanton, Decatur County, Iowa, August 19, 1853. The country was new, then, and the opportunities for obtaining an education were very limited. I can well remember that when very young I had, like other children, a desire to know more about everything by which we were surrounded; and this thirst for knowledge increased to the extent that when I was sixteen years of age I commenced planning to prepare myself for a collegiate course, and was determined to spend my life in learning all I could. When laboring to this end, it was my good fortune to hear the restored gospel preached by Elders Z. H. Gurley, C. H. Jones, and others. The preaching of Z. H. Gurley convinced me it was the best I had ever heard; and C. H. Jones convinced me by his deportment that he was honest, and believed what he taught. So out of respect for him, and my great desire to know the truth, I listened to his teaching while in the pulpit, by the roadside, at the table, or in the harvest-field.

Being convinced that what he taught me was true, there were two courses opened before me. The first was to accept the gospel, and prove it to be true, as I was assured by his teaching that I could know for myself, and learn of the things that even the kings, princes, and sages did not know, and could only know by obedience. The second was to continue in school, learning all I could, thus becoming wise in worldly wisdom, and merit the applause of the world, being numbered by them as one of these wise men, loved and caressed. It took me some time to decide; for if I united with the ELDER M. M. TURPEN.

"At times it seemed there were two personages contending for control over me. One seemed to point me to the gospel of Christ; the other pointed out all the trials and persecutions."

Latter Day Saints, my name would be cast out as evil by my former associates; and my life's work would never be understood by many. Persecutions in every way loomed up before me, and the warfare was continually going on in my mind, while awake, one calling for the sacrifice of the good name I was seeking, with all that implied; the other to cast it all to one side, and go on after the worldly pleasures, and the wisdom one could obtain in that way, until at times it seemed to me there were two personages contending for control over me. The one seemed to point me to the gospel of Christ, telling me to go forward in humility, and obey, and be made worthy to partake of the divine nature, and learn of him through the operation of his Holy Spirit, telling me that if I rejected the truth, and cast it all away, I would have to take the consequences that would follow. The other pointed out all the trials and persecutions, and tried to make me believe I was rejected of God, and could not hope for a forgiveness of sins, and that if I offered myself to the church for baptism, I would be rejected, etc.

One day, while praying over the subject, the words of Christ came to me like a revelation, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." This was followed by a feeling of joy accompanied by the spirit of humility and light which words can not describe. There I promised the Lord I would obey his commands, if all the world should disown me.

I was soon afterwards baptized and confirmed a member of the church. This brought added joy and peace, and I spent many days of rejoicing in the church, with the Saints of the Lamoni Branch. Before we were able to have a church building of our own in which to worship, we met in private houses for prayer-meetings, and in schoolhouses for preaching. I was so happy in my church relationship that the persecutions that followed were not hard for me to bear. I could rejoice in tribulation, and all went well until it was made known to the president of the branch and others that if I continued faithful I would be called of God to take part in the ministry, and they told me.

This was more, then, than I could understand. It seemed an utter impossibility that I could have so great a manifestation and responsibility as a call from God. While in meditation and prayer over this, there would come to me many objections, such as lack of wisdom, and my feeling of unworthiness; but the greatest of all was this question, Do you know that Jesus of Nazareth was the Christ? And I could not answer, without a doubt, that I did. Then, again, How could you go before the world as a witness when you do not know beyond a doubt that he is the Redeemer? Then I would answer that I could not, and would never accept an ordination that meant an obligation to be a witness unless I could say, like one of old, I know that my Redeemer liveth.

In this frame of mind I spent some time in prayer, and at times almost despaired of ever obtaining such a precious treasure. Do not think, dear reader, that I did not believe he was the Christ; for I did. But to my mind there was and still is a great difference between belief and a knowledge that he is the Christ.

While praying over this, there came upon me the Spirit of God to that degree that it appeared that my whole mind was lit up, bringing with it such humility, joy, peace, gentleness, and love; yes, love for my enemies, and I could pray for those who had wronged me. This I knew was of God. This Spirit testified to my spirit that Jesus of Nazareth was, and is, the Redeemer.

While under the influence of the Holy Spirit, I promised the Lord that no worldly pleasure would I ever allow to stand between me and my duty. That if called upon to do so, I would leave my home and loved ones to bear witness of the Christ.

The time came when I was ordained a priest, and I commenced to labor locally, as opportunity offered; and, often, while standing in defense of the truth, there came to my aid the Spirit of truth, causing me to rejoice. I spent some time in this way, and then, in order to better the conditions of my family in a financial way, we moved to Kansas; for I was very anxious to become self-sustaining, so I could devote all my time to the ministry. While in Kansas, I was called to the office of elder, laboring there for nearly three years. While there, in company with Elders S. J. Madden and Moses Turpen, was called upon to go twelve miles to administer to Sr. L. R. Devore, who was very sick. While on the way we met a messenger who said he was sent to tell us she was dying. We then drove away from the road to a ravine, and had prayer for her. The Lord told us by his Spirit that our prayers were heard; and that when Bro. Devore met us at his home he would tell us the Spirit of God had spoken to him, telling of our prayer, and that God had spared his wife's life. When he met us, he told us word for word what I have related. Before we reached the home of Bro. Devore, after we had prayed, the gift of tongues came to me and I sang a verse, and also the interpretation, which was this:

"Go ye elders of the Lord,
And administer in my word;
Be ye faithful to the end,
For God the Father is your friend."

This was repeated in the tongue and interpretation. On entering the house we found the sister much better than she had been. She had revived and asked for something to eat, which frightened her aunt, who was watching her; but she told her she was better and would get well.

We then knelt in prayer, and while on our knees I was shown how near death's door our sister was; and it frightened me so much that the elders asked me what was the matter with me, as soon as they had an opportunity. We could not see that the sister received any immediate benefit from this administration. After a time had intervened, Bro. Madden taking charge, we repeated the administration. While engaged in prayer, the sick sister made one of the grandest prayers I ever heard, grand in faith, and childlike simplicity. While we were confirming, my brother, Moses Turpen, spoke to her by prophecy, and told her she should speedily recover. In a few days after this she was able to visit her sister, ten miles from her home.

Some time after this, Elder S. J. Madden and myself were fasting and praying for light. We were asking for direction, whether to remain where we were, or go elsewhere; and the Lord spoke to me, that I should return to Iowa, and locate my family; for it was his will for me to go into the active ministry; also telling Bro. Madden he should go west and continue to labor locally. This was fulfilled to the letter. For after my return, I was appointed a mission, and ordained to the office of seventy, and have spent nearly nineteen years in the active ministry.

Bro. Madden continued for a number of years to labor as stated, before he was called to devote his entire time in the ministry. The third year of my active ministry, I was appointed to labor in the Southeastern Mission, which called me to leave my loved ones, and be separated by over a thousand miles. During the following summer I became very homesick. I shall not try to describe my case. Ye missionaries may know, but do not care to tell. A good brother, feeling sorry, sent me ten dollars, and others gave me money, so I could make my family a visit; and, to make it stronger that I should go, my wife wrote that our babe was very sick. So, I now thought, that I had a splendid excuse to go; but having appointments farther away in Florida, I could not feel just right about it without taking it to the Lord in prayer. So I retired to a grove, and laid the matter before him to give me directions, and to my joy (and surprise to a certain extent) he told me to go and fill my appointments, and he would take care of my child. I went to my appointment, and in about ten days received another letter from my wife, stating that the doctor thought the babe was sure to die; and had sent me a telegram to come home at once; and that she had sent to Lamoni for the elders who had come and administered to the babe; and next morning the doctor came to see the babe, and, with a smile on his face, he said to my wife, "The babe is all right."

I might relate many more instances of God's goodness to his children; but will conclude by saying, I know that the manifestations of the Spirit, written of by Paul in 1 Corinthians 12, are in the church to-day; for, as unworthy as I may feel, I can in humility testify that, to a limited degree, I have enjoyed all of them.

Pleasant Memories of Christmas.

I love the pleasant memories of the olden Christmas time,
When the crackling of the yule log was music most sublime.
Methinks I hear the voices of the aged and the young Express their heartfelt pleasure in the merry Christmas song.
My heart with rapture mingles in their sweet and joyous strain,

In concord with the angels who sang on Judah's plain.
I join the sweet hosannas of the angels in the sky,
Hosanna to the Savior, who came on earth to die.
No wonder that I linger on these scenes so long ago,
So full of hope and promise to the slaves of sin and woe!
To-night I hear earth's angels sing that sweet melodious
strain,

"Glory to the Highest, Peace on Earth, Good Will to Man."
Again the old time gospel is sounding through the earth,
With all its precious promises and gifts of priceless worth.
And all who will come may come, to enjoy this feast of love,
A foretaste of the endless feast prepared for all, above.
And may God bless the angels that are singing here to-night,
And fit them for that heavenly choir in realms of endless light,

Where peace shall be eternal, and all divine the strain;
When filled with joy supernal, they shall with Jesus reign.
May young and old be there that are present here to-night,
Clothed in the wedding garment, and all lovely in His sight.
Then we'll sing the sweetest carols by men or angels sung,
Rehearse the sweetest story ever told by seraph's tongue.
The song of our redemption, the sweet story of His love,
How He became our ransom, when He left His throne above—
Was crad'd in a manger, suffer'd sorrow, grief, and shame,
Stooped lower than the angels that He might a world redeem.
Let us shout a loud hosanna for His matchless love, to-night,
And give our hearts to serve Him, and in His cause unite;
That we may learn the measure of that sweet and matchless song,

The song of our redemption, and His triumph over wrong.

In Memoriam.

Lines in loving memory of dear Helen, beloved daughter of Bro. Wilbert and Sr. Ella Johnston, who passed away to her heavenly home on the early morning of Saturday, August 29, 1908.

In the morning of life's sweet sunshine,
When the opening blossoms tell
How fair the sweet bud of promise,
How sweetly it blossomed and well;
In the light of the sun-kissed autumn
Our dear little Helen fled
From a world full of peril and sorrow,
To the Father's home instead.

In the morning of life's sweet sunshine,
Midst the garden of lilies so fair,
The Gardner walked; as he pondered
He plucked one here and there.
"Shall I have naught that is fair," saith he;
"Have naught but the bearded grain?"
Though the breath of these flowers is sweet to me,
I will bring them all back again."

Then weep not, dear heart-broken loved ones,
Though it seem as though all were lost;
And the earth but a temple of mourning,
And thy frail bark all tempest-tossed;

When thou reached the harbor of sunshine,
The land of eternal day,
Thy Helen shall greet thee with rapture,
In the land where God's children play.

The Long Ago.

Sing us a song of the long ago,
A song of the days we used to know,—
Sing of the olden Christmas times,
Their dolls and pictures and childish rhymes,
Of Santa Claus, and the cedar-tree,
That laughed with toys for you and me;
Sing of the Precious Child whose birth
Gave joy to all and peace to earth,—
Sing us a lullaby, soft and low,
Like our mother hummed in the long ago.

Sing us a song of the long ago
That will make our eyelids overflow
With tears, for the years that were blown away
By a breath from manhood's sterner day;
Only a vision remains to tell
Of the things we loved that have bid farewell,—
So sing for the breeze to turn and blow,
One faded blossom of the long ago
To our eyes now dimmed by the scalding tears,
Our souls poured forth in the din of years.

ONE MOTHER'S WAY.

The best way to help a boy is to understand him.

The wife of a United States senator once said to me: "What is the matter with my boy? He is sixteen years old now, and up to the age of twelve he was the most amiable, lovable, teachable child imaginable, and gave me his every confidence. But had he then been removed bodily and a strange boy set down in his place, there could not have been a more complete change. He became morose, irritable, sullen, and refused me his confidence. What can be the trouble?"

That mother, like many others, did not know that during the years from ten to twenty, when a girl comes into her gift of womanhood, a boy enters into his state of manhood, and while thousands of girls pass through their experience with no physical inconvenience or suffering whatever, there is never a boy who experiences the gift of manhood without being tortured by the temptations from without and the great tide of selfhood that wells up and consumes him from within. This period of adolescence in a boy's life is the pivotal point of his career, and the experience will make for his eternal salvation or damnation. He is at war with himself; he is sick; and never again will he so need the love, sympathy, patience, and self-control of those about him as now.

When but eleven or twelve years of age, perhaps, the boy, your boy, has all the feelings of a man and only the judgment and discretion of a boy. His one life-line to a pure morality for the future will depend on a perfect knowledge of self and powers now. If you do not help him now, he will readily turn to his companions for sympathy and confidence, and may be led into evil habits.

In the name of what all men might have been had God's truths always come to them through pure channels, I beg of parents everywhere to be true to your boys at this time in their lives. Tell the boy that the great gift of creative power that comes to him at this age is a divine gift, . . . given him to be held in trust for sacred relations only. Give such a knowledge of self as will bring with it the reverence that will make him scorn ever to desecrate self or dishonor others.

Some mothers are criminally guilty in drawing the sex line, and will say: "I can tell my girls these things, but if my boy's father can not tell him, he will have to go without knowing."

The training of children should never be a matter of sex, but of souls in which there is no sex, for God will require as clean a record of the one soul as of the other, regardless of the garment in which it is clad. A boy has the same right to the noblest and best in life as is given to girls, for there is not one bit of sweetness in the mother's girl that has not its counterpart in the mother's boy; there is not one bit of purity in the mother's girl that has not its counterpart in the mother's boy, and there is a sermon in that verse which says:

"There is no more excuse for my boy to be low
Than your girl, then please don't tell him so.
Don't send my boy where your girl can't go,
For boy, or girl, sin is sin you know."
And my baby boy's hands are as clean and white,
And his heart as pure as your girl's to-night."

If you have denied your child the knowledge of self as only you can tell it in all its sacredness and beauty, you have laid the corner-stone to an insurmountable barrier of false modesty that may prove your boy's ruin. It is not for you to say, "Shall my boy hear these things?" But it is for you to decide, "Shall he hear them from me, told in my chaste language, accompanied by my love and my prayers, or shall I let him go out to hear them, as he will hear them, but from the unclean companion who will tell these things either in foul talk or actual experiments in vice?"

Prepare your boy in advance for the gift of manhood that will come any time after the tenth year. Tell him what a comfort he is to you, and how you could not bear to live without him. Do you realize how you lavish your endearments upon your girls, forgetting that your boy's heart is just as hungry and loving as ever a girl's heart? . . . Above all, give him such a knowledge of his inestimable value as a potential father as will for ever give him the power to overcome, to resist, the power for self-control.

Knowledge, power, purity, is the natural sequence in the proper moral training of a boy, and the mother who follows this rule endows the world and society with another Galahad, "whose strength is as the strength of ten because his heart is pure."—Home Science Magazine.

Questions on January Reading.

What is the best way to help a boy? What will help us to understand? What kind of reading will be helpful? Have you noticed any difference in your boys at this age? Is there sufficient understanding concerning the difficulties of adolescence? What is needed by boys as well as girls during this period? Why is this the pivotal point of a boy's career?

What variance is there between a boy's feelings and his judgment at this time? If you do not give him the knowledge of self and his powers, what may be the result? What picture presented by the world urges the necessity of pure counsel to the boy upon these subjects? What result is to be sought in the imparting of this information? Why are boys often neglected in this matter? Should there be any difference in the standard of training for boys and for girls? Why not? What danger is there in sending boys where girls should not go? What is the effect of barriers between parents and children? What is to be gained by according the boy affectionate treatment? What idea of fatherhood should be given to the boy? What power will this aid in developing? What will naturally follow true knowledge given to the boy?

Program.

Letter Department

HOWELL, Michigan, November 14, 1908.

Dear Herald: The slanting rays of the early afternoon sun strike the window-pane, and envelop all in a flood of golden, mellow sunshine. It is indeed a glorious day. In fact, we have had some beautiful fall weather, with scarcely any snow as yet. The morning of the 16th it snowed quite hard, and, for a short time, it made one think of a little blizzard, to look out; but in less than an hour the sun was shining brightly, and the snow soon melted away.

I remember thinking how the elements of that morning corresponded with our lives. Is it not so, dear Saints? Are we not many times called upon to pass through and endure raging storms, of affliction, as it were, trial and sorrow, which seem so embittering and unbearable. Yet, before long, the sun again shines out upon our pathway in sparkling gleams. What a great comfort it would be to us if in our hours of darkness we would hold fast this precious truth: that if we but trust in him and do our duty, he will, with the hand of his love, "roll back the clouds by and by." No matter how many or how dark the storms and clouds here below may be, no matter if we have but little sunshine here, if we do our Father's will we will have an abundance of sunshine on the "other side."

It has been some time since I asked for space in your columns, not because I did not care to write, for I have often wanted to write, but reading so many comforting and cheering articles and letters, I felt that I should leave the space my letter fills for something that would be interesting and upbuilding.

It is said, "There is no vice so detestable as selfishness," but I believe I must plead guilty this once, for I think the greatest reason of my writing is because I am so selfish that I do not want my brothers and sisters to forget me.

So, as I am still afflicted, unable to walk, I hope all who read this will kindly remember me in their prayers, that I may have the strength to remain patient and cheerful to the end, and that I may live worthy of the blessings I am now receiving, that they may not be taken from me.

"Nearer, my God, to Thee, nearer to Thee, E'en though it be a cross that raiseth me."

How truly I can understand the meaning of that beautiful song, for I can plainly see that I have been brought nearer and nearer to God by my affliction, and I feel ashamed to think I get as discouraged and down-hearted as I do at times; for my blessings have been many, and I do not feel worthy of them.

One of the greatest blessings of all, it seems to me, is the extreme kindness and love shown me by my brothers, sisters, and friends; and in my prayers I never fail to ask God to bless and reward all those who have been kind to me in thought, word, or deed.

Dear Saints, we would not be so sparing of our kind words or pleasant smiles if we realized how much good they do. How many there are who are so sorely in need of these things!

The times when I become the most impatient and rebellious against my fate is when I think of the chances of saying some cheering word, of comforting some lonely heart, that I have let slip past unnoticed; and now that I am so anxious to do something for somebody I must sit and wait.

Well, my prayer is that I may not let the small opportunities of my present life pass by, waiting with folded hands for greater ones.

"Fading away like the stars of the morning,
Losing their light in the rays of the sun,
Thus shall we pass from this earth and its toiling,
Only remembered by what we have done."

How I love that song, and we surely can read between the lines and find a beautiful lesson there. "What will you be remembered by?" "What will I be remembered by?" when our eyes have closed in their last sleep? Will it be by kind actions and loving words or will it be by the unkind things we have said and done to our brother, our sister, our fellow men? May God help us not only to see our duty, but to do it also, to live so close to him that our lives will be as mirrors, and others looking can see reflected the life of Jesus Christ. May we live worthy of for ever basking in the sunbeams of God's love, is the wish of "Your little sister,"

DESDE DALEY.

DAVIS CITY, Iowa, December 13, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have read in the HERALD several times an article entitled, "The straight and narrow way," which reminds me of a dream I had sometime in June or July, 1905.

I dreamed I saw a city on a hill south of where I was standing, and I wished to go to that city. I thought of that straight and narrow way which I wished to travel; and as I looked I saw a road winding around a hill southwest of me. I looked again and saw a road commencing where I stood and running straight toward the city, but it seemed to go only about a mile and it looked too wide. So I concluded to look for a narrower one that I could see all the way. I walked a few steps to my left; then the thought came to me, if I did find one I would be making a crook from where I started. So I returned and examined the short road again, but could not see any farther than I could at first. I made up my mind it was where the straight and narrow way ought to be, and I concluded to follow it as far as it went straight. When I traveled almost to the end of this mile, I began to feel a little discouraged, as I could hear and see teams going west, across at the end of the mile I was traveling, and joining the crooked road I saw at first. They were driving as if going to a picnic or reunion; but I looked straight ahead of me, and saw a path continuing toward the city, but only a very few following it, and they were walking in single file.

The above dream has been a help and strength to me. I find in Matthew 7:13, 14, Christ's words: "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." I also read in the Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 6: 15: "O then, my beloved brethren, come unto the Lord, the Holy One. Remember that his paths are righteous. Behold, the way for man is narrow, but it lieth in a straight course before him, and the keeper of the gate is the Holy One of Israel: and he employeth no servant there; and there is none other way, save it be by the gate, for he can not be deceived; for the Lord God is his name." I find in John 8: 12 these words: "Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." James 1: 17: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning." 1 John 1: 5, 7: "This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. . . . But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his son cleanseth us from all sin."

I have learned from the sacred books and from this dream, that the straight and narrow path lieth before man, and if we have faith and courage to walk in the spirit of light that we already have, we shall receive more light, and the narrow way will develop as we move along.

THURMAN T. MCDANIEL.

RIVERTON, Iowa, December 12, 1908.

Dear Herald: We are trying to raise some money for a Christmas offering. Will report the amount raised later on. I attended a camp-meeting at Nebraska City. The attendance was small; but the few who did attend had a good time, long to be remembered. And our district conference was one of the best I have enjoyed for a long time; and the next Sunday after conference I had the pleasure of baptizing Francis M. Donaldson, of Council Bluffs, Iowa. And so the good work is slowly moving on.

Elder Joseph Arber holds meetings, and preaches to the Saints and friends of the Riverton Branch. Bro. Arber and Bro. James Comstock blessed the child of Francis and Mabel Donaldson. This was a few days before we baptized the father of the child.

Yours truly,

L. C. DONALDSON.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, Ohio.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to note that the work is progressing here very nicely. There have been eleven baptisms in about five months. Elder R. C. Russell is here with us at present and the Lord is blessing his efforts. He has baptized five this week and there are many more interested, and we believe some very near the kingdom.

Yours in the one faith,

581 South Third Street.

J. C. CARLISLE.

DIXONVILLE, Alabama, December 5, 1908.

Editors Herald: A few Saints from Santa Rosa Branch, and a few from Pleasant River Branch met with the Saints at Calhoun Branch on November 26, the day set apart for Thanksgiving, and devoted about one hour and a half to prayer and testimonies. We had several good prayers and testimonies in the forenoon, and at two o'clock in the afternoon preaching by Bro. Moroni Hawkins, and all present enjoyed themselves and were blessed with a portion of the good Spirit of the Lord. I am in hopes that all the Latter Day Saints throughout the world observed the Thanksgiving Day in thanking the good Lord for all the good blessings that they have received from him in the last twelve months.

I think sometimes if the Saints would devote more of their time to the work of the good heavenly Father, and live nearer to the law, that they would receive more of the good blessings that the Lord has in store for those that love and serve him. I do hope and pray that at the end of the next twelve months, every Latter Day Saint will be able to say and tell the truth that he has kept the law in every particular. And, dear Saints, when we do keep the law in its fullness, then the good Master will verify his promise unto us, and not before. Then, dear Saints, let us prove our faith by our works. The good Lord has said somewhere in the law, that if we love him we will keep his commandments. Then let us live spiritually, and pay our tithes, and ever pray for the redemption of Zion.

I will say before closing that Bro. T. C. Kelley and Bro. Slover are somewhere in this mission breaking the bread of life, I know, for they are always up and doing something for the good cause of Christ. Bro. Kelley has been with us, this makes three years, and the many good instructions and the pattern set by him will never be forgotten by the Saints in the Florida District. We hope to have him as many more years to preach for us, and Bro. Slover is liked by all that know him. May the Lord bless them, and all the missionaries, wherever their lot may be cast.

Your brother in Christ,

SAM DIXON.

SEATTLE, Washington, December 6, 1908.

Herald Editors: If there are elders or Saints residing at West Derby, Vermont, please call on Mrs. Leroy Cowles, (post-office address, box 36). She knows something of the gospel, but would like to know more. She is a "shut-in," and of course would appreciate an encouraging visit from any one. I have sent some HERALDS to her and am endeavoring, in my weak way, to do what I can for the spread of this glorious gospel.

Striving to become one of the "pure in heart," I am yours for the spread of truth,

IRENE EMSLIE.

FLINT, (Angola P.-O.,) Indiana, December 10, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am holding meetings at this place with varying interest—sometimes good attendance and sometimes poor. There have been so many meetings held here of late, that I suppose the people are "meeting tired." An ex-Catholic delivered a series of lectures against the Romish church. This was since my meetings begun; but he was kind enough not to commence his meetings till after mine had ended each night. He attended my services, and I his. Have been here now about ten days, and think to continue till over the 13th inst., and then perhaps may go to South Scott or Clear Lake.

We are having real winter weather here now.

Still in the conflict,

H. E. MOLER.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, November 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: Our weekly visitor, the HERALD, is a most welcome friend. We love to read its pages, and read the good letters and sermons that it contains. It is much prized by us. I do not see how we could get along without it. We take the HERALD and Ensign both, and when I think which one I would rather take if I had to take just one, I could not decide which one I would take, at the present. I would have to study awhile first, for I love to read both so much.

We were at church to-day. We had a good crowd; the day was a rainy one. Bro. C. J. Spurlock was the speaker, and he gave us a grand sermon. It was both interesting and instructive. We pray the Lord to give him strength of body to go out into the world and carry the gospel to the people, which he so much desires to do, and to help build up this latter-day work. We long for the time when the pure in heart will be brought to Zion, and Zion will be redeemed, and the Lord will come and reign with his people a thousand years, and then peace and happiness will reign in Zion, and not until then, when Satan is bound and can not deceive the nations any more.

Wishing the HERALD a more prosperous year the coming one than ever.

MRS. CLARA FLEEHEARTY.

GLADSTONE, Illinois, December 4, 1908.

Dear Herald: The elders of late have not called on us, though they are welcome. I suppose there are more important fields. I read the church publications, and that helps me to keep abreast of the times and the progress of the truth and the church in the world. It seems the principles of the gospel law have never been understood by the masses of the world's population in any age of the world, yet we hope to see the day when all will come to a knowledge of the truth. Have the faith and hope of the Saints in the fulfillment of the things promised, held in reserve for Zion's redemption, materially strengthened Zion's stakes in the world? The return of the Jews to their primitive inheritance, and in Zion and Jerusalem, shall be deliverance, and in the remnant whom the Lord our God shall call, a final deliverance for the nations of the earth, as the Lord hath said, and the return of the ten lost tribes of Israel.

It matters not what men may say, or the discredit they may place upon the prediction of their return, the Lord has said they shall return. What do we know about the astronomical position of the globe when the children were led away to the north country? Whether the globe's axis was in line with the sun as the globe traveled in its orbit, or whether it was as it is now. The Apostle Peter says some men will say all things will continue as they were since the fathers fell asleep. I would not think strange if those elephants thought the same thing when the globe changed out of line with its axis from the sun and left them in cold storage, and the children of Israel entered the chambers in the interior of the globe and the doors were closed about them until the indignation be passed over, as the Prophet Isaiah has said. Then let us take courage in the Lord. His arm is not shortened, but holds in reserve in his good pleasure that which will convince the world of righteousness and judgment; and may we who have sought the latter-day glory, be able to stand when he says, "Well done"! Remember me in your prayers.

J. L. RUST.

CHATTANOOGA, Tennessee, December 14, 1908.

Dear Herald: If you know the names of any Saints in Chattanooga, will you send me their addresses? We have just come here, and would like to know of any Saints here, as we feel very lonesome. This is a beautiful climate. I am writing in my shirt-sleeves, without a fire. We have started a three-cent lunch room, and any elders coming here will receive a warm and Christian welcome from us. We came here with very little money, and have prospered. God never forsakes his children. Living is cheap here, compared with the North. Will write again, soon.

News From Branches

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Just what you might expect, when everybody pulls on the same rope and in the same direction. That's when things happen. And that is just what the West Side Branch did in their late bazaar. For the past two months the enthusiastic committee have kept everybody's ears ringing with bazaar announcements, but no one expected half the results. It is expected that about one hundred and forty dollars will be realized after all expenses have been paid. Some branches may regard that as not a very gratifying result, but some branches are larger than West Side Chicago. We can not say too much for certain of the committee whose energy and foresight brought to us sumptuous donations from various mercantile houses. The "needle gang" did splendid work, as was evidenced by the ready sale of the various articles of fancy work, aprons, and household regalia in general.

A number of the South Side Saints were over, and we suspect them of taking notes; so do not be surprised if you should wind tidings of another bazaar in the Windy City. A report is current that they have a deal under way that will put them in a small church of their own, and but a few dollars in their treasury to begin with at that. Go on, neighbors, we don't envy you in the slightest, even though we have been "fund gathering" for the past five years, and have flatly failed at every scheme of church acquisition so far, and are now on our back like a gosling in the grass and nothing in sight.

The West Side has just gained a promising addition in the receiving by baptism a Mr. Sloan, who recently became acquainted with our people.

Santa Claus has paid our missionary an early visit in the Sunday-schools, voting him the means for a trip home for the holidays. It is no more than is due. Bro. Allen has been a faithful missionary, unceasing, unrelenting, untiring; always present, always useful, honored and respected by all, both in and out of the church.

And now the day of sacerdotal celebration is upon us: the commemoration of that wonderful gift from God to man, by PAUL the giving and receiving of gifts between friends. Saints, remember the import of that great gift, and make your gifts useful to correspond. And while you are giving and receiving, remember those faithful few to whom we owe so much. Loved ones at home have been the recipients of our munificence throughout the year, let us turn now to the real heroes of our day, the standard bearers of Jehovah. They and their loved ones might relish a useful gift, otherwise out of reach of their means to secure. Take a glance at your missionary; how is he fixed in the line of clothing; perhaps he is dragging about a shabby suit-case. How would a new one look for Christmas? Look him over; you will find him short, very short of something.

FIRST KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

The debate between Reverend W. G. Roberts of the Anti-organ Christian or Cambellite Church, and Elder S. W. L. Scott is ended. It was wholly a one-sided affair, especially on the question of spiritual gifts. Mr. Roberts agreed to affirm that the promise of the Savior that these signs should follow the believers in Mark 16:16-19 was limited to the apostles, and ceased at their death by divine appointment. Roberts tried to show that there were two classes of believers; those who had believed previous to the giving of the commission, and those who should or would believe through the apostles' preaching, so as to make it read, These signs shall follow those who have heretofore believed, that is, the apostles.

Bro. Scott defined it thus: Jesus, the author of salvation, commissioned his disciples in this manner: As my father has sent me, so I send you. Go ye into all the world and teach all nations, observe to teach them all things, whatsoever I have taught you, and those who believe your preaching and are baptized, to them is extended a promise of salvation; and those who would not believe their preaching should be damned, and the signs should follow those who had the promise of salvation. Then he turned to Acts 2: 39, where Peter speaks of the promise that Joel made, and showed that the promise of the Holy Ghost was not to the apostles only; but when Peter preached to the people, and they believed and were willing to obey, then Peter referred to the promise that Joel made and said: "For the promise is unto you [those who listened to Peter], and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Now who does the Lord call? Go and call every creature in all the world, and every man and woman that will obey the call the promise is to them.

In answering these statements and scriptures, Mr. Roberts showed himself so unfair that he is not worthy the consideration of Christian people. His argument was something like this: "My brother (referring to Bro. Scott) is like the Catholics. They have a pope. Old Joe Smith, he is their God. Their doctrine is of the Devil. They don't believe in the Bible. The Book of Mormon is their Bible. They claim to have the gifts; but, as the signs to follow as promised by Jesus have ceased with the apostles, their gifts are all of the Devil, where Joe Smith got the Book of Mormon," etc., etc.

Our meetings of late have been better attended, and the interest is good. The Sunday-school is nearing the one hundred mark. Our Christmas Offering for the sanitarium has reached one hundred and fifty dollars. The Religio is doing fairly well. The sisters' aid society have done well. They held their bazaar last week, and sold nearly all the goods they had made. Our prayer-meetings are from good to excellent. The preaching for the month past has been by our pastor, W. E. LaRue, S. W. L. Scott, Presidents Joseph and F. M. Smith, F. C. Warnky, and Doctor Joseph Luff. On next Sunday, we look for our former pastor, M. H. Bond.

Our cottage-meetings have all been suspended during the time of the debate; but we expect to revive them after the holidays.

Editors Herald: We have just got located in our new home, No. 811 Lydia Avenue, adjacent to the Central Church where we are to labor in this city. The Saints and friends have extended to us a hearty welcome, and we trust that after we become acquainted with the people and the various conditions, that we shall be able to achieve a degree of success in the advancement of the work of the Lord here.

No doubt there are many of the Saints and friends who have relatives and acquaintances living in the city; if so, I would be pleased to visit them and invite them to attend services at Central Church, corner Ninth Street and Lydia Avenue. Should any one desire me to cooperate with them to this end they may address me as above.

Loan Wanted.

For some time the First Chicago Branch has been making an effort to secure a church building. We have about $1,000 in cash and want to borrow $3,000 on which we will pay 6 per cent interest and give a first mortgage, and will pay interest, also a part on principal, semiannually. The needs of the work in Chicago are gradually increasing and the demand for a more suitable place of worship more pronounced. We are now meeting in a store building, for which we pay $19 per month and where we are very much annoyed by passing street-cars. We find also that it is a difficult matter to persuade the outsider that the gospel could possibly be preached from such a place.

Should some of our members be in a position to make this loan they will be greatly assisting the Lord's work here. If you are not personally able to thus assist us, we trust you will bring this matter to the attention of any who are, and use your influence in our behalf. I am a laborer for the spread of truth.

"Divining" for Water.

The divining-rod has a long history and an immense literature which is an odd and interesting mingling of fact and fiction. It has been frequently referred to in prose and in poetry; it has been treated as a myth; it has been gravely discussed by eminent scientists, and pictures have been printed showing it in action. Many persons of the present day regard it as a superstition or as a relic of past ages, and yet many others, as you state, still believe in it and use it for the discovery of underground springs or water courses.

I have brought the subject to the attention of several persons for whose opinion in such matters I have respect. Most of these ridicule the divining-rod and regard it as one of the most absurd of human delusions. But several stoutly maintain its value, and one cited, from actual experience, an instance in which the rod bent downward so forcibly that the bark was torn from the branch. An excellent well of water was obtained where this bending indicated the spring.

The common form has always been a forked or Y-shaped branch of the witch hazel, although other wood, such as peach, apple, ash, pine, has been employed. Some professors of the art have varied the shape of the rod, using sometimes a straight twig with a small fork only at one end; sometimes a straight stick curved by the pressure of the hands, or even a strip of metal or whalebone, has been used.

Many forms are still employed in this country for locating minerals and deposits of oil.

Since it has been so long and so extensively used, and therefore has so many advocates, to say that it has no value would not be reasonable. Yet every thoughtful person is necessarily skeptical. The rod succeeds in some hands and fails in others, even when carried above the same place. It has turned strongly and yet failed when carried across the same spot by the same person when blindfolded. It would be unscientific to claim that (varying according to different desires in different places) metals, buried treasure, oil, water, etc., directly cause the rod to rotate, for it can be easily proved that the rod when placed on supports or pivots over oil, metal, or water does not change its position. The explanation of the whole matter is that the mental state of the expert appears to affect the rod's movements, rather than any mysterious influence.—From "Nature and science" in December St. Nicholas.

An Ideal All-Around Newspaper.

Probably no other newspaper in the United States can show so brilliant an array of special features suited to the tastes and needs of every member of the family as the Chicago Record-Herald. Its regular daily and Sunday features include the letters of William E. Curtis and Walter Wellman, besides the special dispatches from the great centers. Next in importance comes the Record-Herald's unparalleled foreign news service, embracing its own special cables and those of the New York Herald, World, Journal of Commerce and Associated Press. Its pages devoted to commercial and financial news of all kinds are unsurpassed in scope and accuracy. Among other noteworthy features are its popular sporting page, its sound editorials, Kiser's humorous "Alternating currents," the lively "Stories of the street and town," the railroad and insurance columns, music and drama, society and clubs, daily reviews of the latest books, the continued story, the "Woman beautiful" department, the daily fashion article, "Meals for a day," news of the lakes, etc., besides a complete array of local and domestic news—all uniting to give the people of Chicago and the Northwest a complete and interesting all-around newspaper.

The Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald is an artistic and literary triumph. Famous authors and illustrators, fine paper and press-work, combine to make it the rival of the great independent periodicals and a distinct departure in Sunday journalism.

Ray Stannard Baker on the Spiritual Unrest.

In the December American Magazine Ray Stannard Baker begins a new series of articles on "The spiritual unrest." The first is entitled "Healing the sick in the churches," and includes the story of Emmanuel Church in Boston, and the great work of healing that is being done there.

Introducing his new series Mr. Baker says:

"Forty Protestant churches in various parts of the country—not to speak of hundreds of Christian Science churches—are now conducting 'religious clinics' or health services for the healing of the sick. Beginning with the work of the Reverend Doctor Elwood Worcester and his associate, the Reverend Doctor Samuel McComb, at Emmanuel Church in Boston in 1906, the movement has spread with a rapidity which indicates that it must have met a genuine human need.

"On the other hand, many doctors, health departments, and hospitals are extending their work into wholly new fields, social, psychic, philanthropic, which were formerly more or less within the province of the church. Both minister and physician, in these times of spiritual unrest, have grown discontented with their former successes. A new relationship is seen to exist between religion and medicine. Religion is reaching out over debatable ground to do the work of the doctor; the doctor is reaching out over debatable ground to do the work of the church.

"What, then, are these extraordinary new movements? How did they originate, what are they doing now, what are their possibilities and limitations? In answering these questions we shall not only come to a more complete understanding of the new movements, but we shall be able to see something of the conditions of spiritual unrest to which they are evident responses."

Susquehanna Bridge Disaster.

One of the worst bridge disasters in years occurred September 23, when a loaded coal train sank through the great Baltimore & Ohio bridge, between Perryville and Havre de Grace, Maryland, and plunged into the Susquehanna River a hundred feet below, carrying with it a three hundred and seventy-seven foot span of the bridge and cutting in twain the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad between Washington and Philadelphia. The loss was estimated at three hundred thousand dollars or more.

It seemed a miracle that no lives were lost, but it happened that there were no trainmen on the twelve-car section of the freight that went down. Just a few minutes before the New York and St. Louis express, running out of New York on limited time, passed safely over the bridge. Had the express gone down the loss of life would have been frightful, for it is almost a certainty that nobody would have escaped in the Niagara of steel and stone.

This disaster was another instance of engineers miscalculating the weight a bridge under construction can stand. The old bridge of the Baltimore & Ohio across the Susquehanna was built twenty years ago. About a year ago the rail-

Making Ice at Home.

How to make ice at home, cheaply and effectually, has long been the despair of the housewife, for, notwithstanding the many systems at present in the market, most of them are more or less unsatisfactory, some, indeed, being outside the pale of the practical on account of the cost of production. Ice for domestic purposes has become so essential to the well-being of Americans in especial and dwellers in hot countries in general that no excuse is needed for bringing to the notice of our readers a simple and comparatively inexpensive little apparatus capable, its inventors claim, of producing ice at a minimum of cost and labor through the direct agency of sulphuric acid. The machine in question is made at Reading, in England. We have not had an opportunity of personally testing the invention, but if all we hear from a good source be true, there is scarcely a doubt but that this machine has come to stay—at least, until some inventive genius, working on the same lines, goes one better, as the saying is, and simplifies what is already admittedly an extremely simple appliance. Where, we fancy, the invention will prove a special boon will be in the scattered districts where a refrigerating plant is conspicuous by its absence and whose inhabitants for months at a stretch every year are reduced to the necessity of imagining what ice is.

It is claimed for the new invention that it will produce a carafe of iced water in three minutes and a one-pound brick in twenty—and that so easily that a child can safely be entrusted with the work of manipulation. With half a gallon of acid—which constitutes a complete charge—one can ice from fifty to one hundred carafes of water, and the cost of this is entirely the local charge for sulphuric acid, plus the initial expense of the machine, which is purchasable for less than fifty dollars, the only extras being a dollar or two for spare absorbers or carafes. The machine is built on the principle that water will freeze when rapidly evaporated by a vacuum pump and a powerful absorbent, such as sulphuric acid.—From "Every cook her own ice-man," in Technical World Magazine for January.

What Grenfell has Done for Labrador.

When Grenfell came to Labrador, in 1892, he found the three thousand permanent residents and the thirty thousand summer fisher-folk from Newfoundland almost without religious or medical aid; in the clutches of merchants and traders who advanced them fishing outfits at enormous figures, and took their catch in turn, contriving to keep them in debt during their whole lives, and maintaining this system of bondage for generations, with misery and destitution universal; with children bare-footed and naked in a zero temperature, and parents so beggared as to borrow each other's clothes to come to him for treatment; with education virtually unknown, the ruling powers indifferent, if not criminally neglectful, and the region a veritable land of desolation for all connected with it.

Within sixteen years he has effected a revolution so complete and comprehensive in the conditions of existence there as to seem almost a miracle. Beginning by clothing the naked and succoring the sick, he has gradually, by judicious charity, encouragement of thrift, incitement to self-help and industry, and the preaching of the doctrine of practical Christianity, created a people comfortable, contented and free, in the main from the fear of perishing by hunger or nakedness,—formerly the fate of large numbers of the permenants.

The medical and spiritual needs of the "transients" have been as fully satisfied. He has built hospitals, orphanages, sawmills, and work-shops; he cruises among the fleet in a hospital-ship, and has launches attached to the land hospitals for the conveyance of patients to and fro, since there are no roads; he has established eight coöperative stores, providing much of the capital out of his private means, and asking no interest on it; has built a schooner every winter for some years, with lumber from his own mills, on plans drawn on a shingle by a local genius of a shipwright unable to read or write; has started classes in weaving, carpentry and other trades; has opened day and night schools, and put into service sixty lending libraries donated by Andrew Carnegie; has installed his own electricity, telegraphs and telephones; has charted the entire seaboard and mapped the terrain nearby; has imported reindeer from Norway to replace the man-eating "husky" dogs that are the terror of the region, and is now undertaking the most herculean task of all,—the raising of one hundred thousand dollars to transform a moribund seamen's home in St. John's into a fishermen's institute. This will really be what the word implies in a country where fishing is the chief pursuit, and where such a headquarters in one of the world's greatest fishing ports has been a crying need for so many years.—From "Grenfell of Labrador," by P. T. McGrath, in the American Review of Reviews for December.

The Lord's Prayer on a Pin.

Probably we have all heard of one-dollar gold pieces with the Lord's prayer engraved on one side. Several years ago these were worn by many as watch charms. Occasionally even now one may be seen thus worn. Such minute engraving may well be considered skillful work.

But recently this has been made to seem, at least by comparison, quite a simple matter, because Mr. William L. Stuart, a young man engaged in business in New York City, has performed the seemingly impossible feat of engraving the entire Lord's prayer on the head of an ordinary pin, to which he has added his name and the year, making altogether two hundred and seventy-six letters and figures.

Mr. Stuart did the work at odd times during his regular employment and with very ordinary tools, which seemingly are not adapted to such fine engraving. The pin was set in a block of wood, and a common engraver's tool used. A simple microscope, costing only about twenty-five cents, and known as a "linen tester," furnished the necessary magnifying.—From "Nature and science" in January St. Nicholas.

Editorial

A WORD ABOUT DEBATING.

The Latter Day Saints from the inception of the work and the organization of the church have been a debating people. Apparently this has resulted from an application of the injunction of the Prophet Isaiah, "Bring forth your strong reasons," which has been taken as a warrant to call on the various classes among men (who by reason of holding different views on the subject of God's dealings with men, would be likely to be arrayed in opposition) for a comparison of views.

In religion, as in politics and everyday life, it is bad policy to be parading the streets, stamping the rostrum, or occupying the pulpit with the metaphorical "chip on one shoulder" with the dare of boyhood's day, seeking for controversy or a fight. Nevertheless, it is a day of controversy. Whether the elders will or no, whether they seek it diligently, or whether they are wary and discreet in their pulpit utterances and private conversations with those who are without, in the prosecution of their ministry in their appointed fields, they are sure to meet with controversy. Having the truth, as we universally believe, it would be unbecoming absolutely to refuse to discuss our differences with others, or to ignore the challenges of the advocates of other faiths, who may be anxious to measure conclusions with us with regard to "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Disputation for the mastery is scarcely proper. Discussion for the purpose of arriving at the truth is permissible. Comparison of views, possessions, and beliefs, in a spirit of honest desire to reach just conclusion, is desirable.

The ethics of honorable discussion require the observance of certain courtesies in language and deportment which no honorable defender of the faith should either forget or ignore. An honorable disputant should never forget that the faith of another in regard to divine things is just as dear to that other as his own views are to himself; hence, in the presenting of his own views and the urging of his reasons and arguments in defense of his positions, he should treat his antagonist with the same kindness and courtesy that he would desire extended to himself.

Every revelation of a secret is the fault of him who first told it.—La Bruyère.

There's nothing new in the world save what has been forgotten.—Bardin.

We give our pity more readily than our esteem.—X. de Maistre.

Never make tears flow: God counts them.—Mme. de Lambert.

Folly always deserves its misfortunes.—N. Roqueplan.

Boastfulness, bombastic utterances, taunts, or threats are all out of place in fair debate. Ridicule, expressions of contempt, and the belittling of an opponent are evidences of weakness on the part of a disputant, and when exhibited have a tendency to weaken, with the hearers, the cause which one is advocating.

In our discussions we should remember that evidences are not always proof. We should therefore be careful that the evidences we present in advocacy or defense of the truths we hold should be worthy of being called proofs. In the language of legal advice "we should be sure of our evidence." It is dangerous to our cause and to our reputation as defenders of the faith, if we offer in evidence of our position that which is of doubtful propriety or that will not bear the closest of scrutiny as to its value in application to the purpose for which we introduce it. It should not only be relevant but it should be evidently applicable; that is, so clearly in accord with the position assumed that its application is easily seen by those who are listening to the discussion.

We lately attended a session of so-called debate where a disputant was engaged ostensibly in an endeavor to affirm and maintain by proofs the proposition that revelation from God and the manifestation of the miraculous gifts promised by the Savior in the sixteenth chapter of Mark, and written of by Paul in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians, had ceased by divine appointment at the death of the apostles. In the attempt which we listened to, this disputant spent twenty minutes in reading from a copy of what he called the Book of Commandments, evidently a copy of a book the publication of which in 1833, at Independence, Missouri, was interrupted by a mob, the printing-office invaded, the press destroyed, the type scattered, and the sheets of the unfinished work thrown into the street; which sheets, thus thrown away and scattered, were picked up by some and a few copies, so far as printed, preserved. This work, whether authorized by the church at the time or not, was not finished; nor was it ever accepted and indorsed by the church, up to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. It was followed by the publication of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in 1835, which publication was indorsed in its compilation of the revelations and church articles before publication, by an assembly which met August 17, 1835. This became one of the standard works of the church and as published by the church in Nauvoo in 1844, at the time of the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and has been published since by the Reorganized Church in different editions and recognized as a standard work.

The various extracts read by this disputant from this Book of Commandments were read by him with the claim that it was a standard book of the Reorganization,—“your own witness,” as he boastfully stated it. It was not introduced by his opponent on the part of the Reorganized Church, and could not in any sense be called a witness on the part of the side against whom he was contending. Is it not strikingly curious that this disputant, in an endeavor to show that revelation and the miraculous gifts ceased by divine appointment at the death of the apostles, should introduce as a witness a document which upon its face assumed the form of a claim to inspiration and revelation in very modern times; which document, if it was good for anything as evidence, would go to show a continuation of a revelation from God, or a restoration of revelation by the Spirit of the Master? Is it not more strikingly curious that this same disputant should introduce what he was pleased to call a witness which he vehemently claimed upon more than one instance was “of the Devil”? Can it be accepted as possible that a disputant holding membership with a religious body and acting as a representative of the same body, should so far forget the ethics of common and decent courtesy toward an opposing representative of a contemporary body of religionists, as to present the evidence of a witness claimed by him as being a witness of the opposite side of the question, and use it as collateral evidence in support of the cessation of the manifestation of the spirit of revelation, by divine appointment, especially when publicly charging that the witness that he introduced was “of the Devil”?

Assertion is neither evidence nor proof. This disputant evidently had fallen into the attitude of thought which seems to characterize a great many of those with whom the elders in the past have held debate, and which is in effect equivalent to the idea that these Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, have no rights in common with their coreligionists which these representative disputants of other faiths are under any obligation to regard or respect,—a very fatal mistake. It is a curious fact that disputants of this character expect the eldership of the Reorganized Church to treat them and their faith kindly and courteously, while at the same time they show an almost absolute indifference to, and disregard for, the commonest rules of civil conduct in the discussion of differences of faith before the public.

Why is this? Is it because that the eldership are expected to be more just, more observant of the Master's injunction, “Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them,” as a rule of civil and public conduct? If so, so let it be. The eldership can not afford to be ungentlemanly, or refuse to be governed by rules of reason, common sense, logic, and common courtesy, in which upright, honest men are engaged in the worship of God, in which they believe and are assured is the truth; whatever course of disrespect or the disregard of similar rules may be shown upon the part of those who meet them in discussion. Brethren, do not forget that you are Christian gentlemen, lovers of God and consequently lovers of men.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

It is customary for the presiding officer of a meeting at which the sacrament is to be partaken of, to give a short time for any one who may feel so disposed to make a statement with reference to himself in order to clear the way for the person so making the statement to partake of the emblems. This statement is usually of a general character, not specific as to any personal transgression; but is more in the nature of a general confession to the Lord of unworthiness, and the person is supposed to be forgiven by the Master upon such confession being made.

It is not necessary for the branch where this is done to take any business notice of the confession, should one be made, and forgive by formal vote, as it is to be taken for granted that such forgiveness is accorded. However, if a person should make a statement of personal transgression specifically stating what it was, the branch might with propriety entertain a motion to extend forgiveness, if the transgression was of a general character. If, however, a member should make a statement of shortcoming involving a transgression of a personal character against another member, it would not be out of order for the member supposed to be offended to make a statement forgiving the member making the confession of transgression before sacrament is administered.

If the transgression confessed is not forgiven by the person offended, if he be present in the meeting, or if said transgression is so grievously wrong that there is doubt or hesitancy in passing it over, or discussion arises in regard to it, discussion should cease and the individual making confession should not partake of the sacrament until the matter is adjusted. The members present at a sacrament-meeting where such an occurrence as above noted should take place, may, if they choose so to do, forgive the transgressor by formal vote, so that such transgressor might partake of the sacrament, having been forgiven the wrong done if any had been done. Members of the church present should always be willing to extend forgiveness when it is asked, especially so if the transgression is of a personal nature, or an error of judgment, or is not of a criminal nature demanding an inquiry before a proper church court.

All members of the church who may be present at any sacrament-meeting held by the branch, or district, or conference, against whom charges are not known to be pending, are entitled to the benefit of partaking of the sacrament, and take part in the meeting, whether they are resident in the branch or whether they are not resident, or, who, being resident, have not secured letters of removal from the branch from which they removed, if it be known that they are in good standing or where no charges are known to exist against them.

In order to secure uniformity of record and also for the purpose of keeping track of the church membership, the officers of a branch into which members have removed from other branches, who have not brought letters with them, should report such members to the branch from which it is known they have removed and ask that letters of removal be sent them that they may unite with the branch where they reside. This is in accordance with resolutions of conference on letters of removal and for the purpose of keeping proper record by the General Church Recorder.

It is in accordance with the church articles that all persons removing from one branch to another should take letters of removal and standing; where they neglect so to do it is right for the branches whence they remove to send letters either to them direct or to the officers of the branch to which it is known they are removed and where their membership will likely be. Too much carelessness is prevalent in this regard. No member should feel hurt or aggrieved if the branch whence they remove or to which they remove take notice of the neglect and correct their records by correspondence with the branch to which they remove.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The speaker at the Brick Church for the morning service was Elder F. E. Cochran. The evening hour was occupied by Elder F. M. Smith, who gave his lecture on the life of Christ and illustrated it by means of stereoptican views. The attendance was good, and we believe the lecture enjoyed by all.

On Wednesday night, December 23, was held the annual meeting of the Smith Family Association at the residence of Elder Heman C. Smith. A most enjoyable time was had. Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, was present, as also H. Hale Smith and Joseph R. Salyards, who are students at the State University in Iowa City.

The Decatur County association of State University alumni and students held a meeting at the local Methodist Episcopal church on last Monday night. This association was formed, we believe, about a year ago, and has for its purpose the promoting of interest in the State University among the people of the county.

The Straight Road

THE TRUE RELIGION.

"To preach 'Christ and him crucified' it is absolutely necessary to preach his gospel."

"Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith."—Hebrews 12:2.

That means that Jesus is the author and finisher of our religion; for the word faith in the passage quoted evidently has that meaning, as may be learned from what follows:

Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith [religion] which was once delivered unto the saints.—Jude 3.

The word common in this passage should be understood in the sense of general, or universal. That is the religion provided for all. Paul writes: "To Titus, my own son after the common faith." That is, Paul having converted Titus to Christianity, and baptized him into Christ, he became Paul's son in a religious sense. "With one mind striving together for the faith of the gospel."—Philippians 1:27, I. T. Jesus said to his ministers: "Go teach all nations."—Matthew 28:19. "Go preach the gospel to every creature."—Mark 16:15.

That religion which Christ and his early ministers taught, and which was sealed by the blood of "the Lamb of God," as the "new and everlasting covenant," and which was to continue in force until the end of the world, must of necessity be the true religion.

How can we better find out just what that true religion was and is composed of than to ascertain just what Jesus taught while here among men, as "the teacher sent from God"?

Jesus answered and said unto them, This is the work of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent.—John 6:29.

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3:16.

Let not your hearts be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me.—John 14:1.

My Father is greater than I.—John 10:29.

My Father is greater than all.—John 14:28.

Jesus answering saith unto them, Have faith in God.—Mark 11:22.

Speaking of the Holy Spirit, Jesus said:

He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.—John 14:26.

He shall testify of me.—John 15:26.

He will show you things to come.—John 16:13.

Thus Jesus taught the necessity of faith in God the Father, Jesus Christ the Son, and in the Holy Spirit. And he further teaches:

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.—Matthew 4:4.

Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death unto life.—John 5:24.

Thus Jesus taught that all should believe what God has to say whether by his own voice, the voice of his Son, or the words spoken by the Holy Spirit. The word thus spoken, or the gospel of Christ, contains the conditions of salvation, and forms the law by which all will be judged. In proof of which we offer the following as proof texts:

I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and I will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I command him. And it shall come to pass [in the day of judgment], that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.—Deuteronomy 18:18, 19.

Jesus applies this prophecy to himself, and shows the harmony existing between the Father and himself by the following words recorded in John 12:48, 49:

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words [the religion he died to establish], hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken [the gospel], the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting.

Jesus taught that it was necessary for him to suffer and die on the cross, as follows:

Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem.—Luke 24:46, 47; see also John 3:14-16.

Baptism is the third condition of salvation, as may be learned by the following citations: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John." That is the testimony the Apostle John bears of John the Baptist; and he records what John the Baptist taught in the following language:

And I knew him not: but he that sent me to baptize with water, the same said unto me, Upon whom thou shalt see the Spirit descending, and remaining on him, the same is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost. And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God.—John 1:33, 34.

Jesus obeyed the ordinance of baptism and Jehovah indorsed the obedience by his own voice, as follows:

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: and lo a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.—Matthew 3:16, 17.

Jesus taught that all mankind should obey this holy ordinance, in the following words:

And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.—Luke 7:29, 30.

Jesus administered the rite upon one occasion:

After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea: and there he tarried with them, and baptized.

Upon some other occasions Jesus stood by and directed his ministers while they did the baptizing. (John 3: 22; 4: 1, 2.)

Jesus practiced the laying on of hands for the blessing of little children and the healing of the sick. (Matthew 19: 13-15; Mark 16: 18; 6: 5; Luke 4: 40.)

Jesus authorized his ministers to lay their hands on baptized believers for confirmation, or the gift of the Holy Ghost. (Acts 9: 17.)

Jesus ordained his apostles; that is, he chose them, gave them the necessary charge, and conferred the required authority by the laying on of hands. (John 15: 16; Matthew 28: 18-20; Numbers 27: 18-20; Deuteronomy 34: 9.) The last two citations are given as showing the directions given of God as representing his will in ordaining ministers, and Jesus never ignored the will of his Father.

Jesus taught the resurrection, both of the just and the unjust, in these words:

Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live. . . . Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation.—John 5: 25, 28, 29.

Jesus taught eternal judgment. (John 5: 22; Matthew 12: 41, 42.) Thoughts, words, and deeds, will be taken into consideration by God and Christ, in meting out rewards or punishment, in the day of judgment. In proof I cite the following: 1 Chronicles 28: 9; Job 42: 2; Matthew 12: 36, 37; 25: 32-46.

Thus we establish by Christ's own teaching the six foundation principles of the gospel, which Paul gives as his brief of what Jesus Christ taught as his gospel. (Hebrews 6: 1, 2.)

Jesus, though he was the Son of God, enforced the truth he taught by his godly example, and the implicit obedience which he rendered to his Father's commandments, as may be seen by the following:

Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered; and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him.—Hebrews 5: 8, 9.

And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Philippians 2: 8.

Jesus says those who do the will of his Father are his brothers, sisters, and mother, and shall enter into the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 7: 21; 12: 47-50.)

The people of God purify their souls by faith and obedience. (1 Peter 1: 22; Acts 15: 9.)

The reward for our faith and obedience is the salvation of our souls: "Receiving the end of your faith [religion], even the salvation of your souls." —1 Peter 1: 9.

To preach Christ and him crucified it is absolutely necessary to preach the gospel; and its first principles are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment.

In these days we are often told that it is wrong to preach doctrine, because it brings division into the church. Yet the doctrine of Christ is composed of faith, repentance, baptisms, the laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment, and is, therefore, identical with the gospel. That is, if we preach the gospel, we preach the doctrine of Christ. If we preach the doctrine of Christ we preach his gospel, which "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Jesus Christ's religion is the true religion, for he "is the author and finisher" thereof. He is the author of the theory; he is our advocate with the Father; he supplies with divine help, and directs as we endeavor to develop the Christ character; and it is Christ that will resurrect, and bring us into the presence of God. When Christ's work is finished there will be no more death; and his people will be redeemed, sanctified, and be made like the resurrected and glorified Christ. 1 John 3: 1-3.

Original Articles

THE URIM AND THUMMIM.

While in Wisconsin last October the writer of this article received a request from the officers of the Lamoni Religio local to speak to them upon the subject of the Urim and Thummim. After this had been done there came a suggestion that it be written up, in order that students of the Book of Mormon in other places might see the scriptural and historical quotations and references. For that reason is this article now presented to such as may be interested.

The special point asked to be discussed was whether there existed in former ages more than one of the articles, or pair of articles, known as the Urim and Thummim; whether the one used on the Western Continent was a different one from the one had on the Eastern Continent, or if there was reason to believe they were the same. In fact this would bring in the question whether the ones given to the brother of Jared, about 2230 B. C., were the same as those used by Mosiah and Moroni, the pair that the Nephites called "the interpreters," as stated in Mosiah 5: 10 and 13: 1, and referred to by Moroni in Mormon 4: 8, small edition.

Now there had always been much uncertainty in my own mind on this point, and although I had been a reader and a student of the book during forty-four years, yet when this request came I thought it was too uncertain a matter to attempt an argument upon, either one way or the other, and therefore returned word to that effect; but I also said that I would give all the scriptural and historical facts that I knew of and not argue in favor of either theory, seeing that I felt entirely uncertain as to which was right; and then each hearer could decide for himself.

However, returning the same day of the evening meeting I examined the texts on the subject, as indexed in my copy of the Book of Mormon, and suddenly the one on page 200 (Mosiah 12: 3, small edition,) was strikingly impressed upon my mind as never before, though years ago I had underscored the words and had read and re-read them many times. There the language of the historian is as follows:

And now he translated them by the means of those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow. Now these things were prepared from the beginning, and were handed down from generation to generation, for the purpose of interpreting languages; and they have been kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord.—Mosiah 12: 3, page 200, small edition.

Here the special words so urgently impressed upon my mind, and that without any preconceived idea, or even a wish one way or the other, were those reading: "Now these things were prepared from the beginning," and, as by a flash of light, I felt forced to understand that it was a divine truth that the one pair had been provided by the Lord for the work they were created to do among his people in different ages, and that the words, "from the beginning," meant indeed from the beginning, from the first time that those articles were given to make truth known to God's people in their special manner of working. Then it also reads, "And they have been kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord," showing that he had control or charge all the time over this great gift, and that men had no power over them, to control or to move them, excepting as God willed. Saying that they have been kept seems definite as meaning one pair only, they existing and protected, cared for and used, according to divine purpose.

Then I turned to the oldest mention of the Urim and Thummim in either book, namely, the account of their being given by the Lord to the brother of Jared, Ether 1: 10, page 507, small edition. There they are spoken of as being "two stones," the same as in Mosiah 12: 3. And near the bottom of page 507 Moroni writes further concerning what he did with the plates, and with the translation, and with the Urim and Thummim. He says:

And he [the Lord] commanded me that I should seal them up; and he also hath commanded that I should seal up the interpretation thereof; wherefore I have sealed up the interpreters, according to the commandment of the Lord.—Ether 1: 11, small edition.

Thus Moroni was commanded to seal up the writing in the unknown language that was made by the brother of Jared, and also the translation of it; and as Moroni evidently already had the Urim and Thummim, he sealed them up also, for his labors as a historian and prophet were about over. That Moroni must have had them all along is evident by tracing the history in the Book of Mormon. The following quotation shows when Lehi obtained them, and no doubt they were given him by the Lord, as in the case of the brother of Jared. Read as follows:

After King Mosiah had done these things, he took the plates of brass, and all the things which he had kept, and conferred them upon Alma, who was the son of Alma; yea, all the records, and also the interpreters, and conferred them upon him, and commanded him that he should keep and preserve them, and also keep a record of the people, handing them down from one generation to another, even as they had been handed down from the time that Lehi left Jerusalem.—Mosiah 13: 1, page 200, small edition.

I have italicised these last words because they make it plain about their origin among the Nephites, that they were given to Lehi at the beginning of their migration. I have previously quoted from Mosiah 12: 3 (page 200) that Mosiah translated the writing on the plates of gold "by the means of those two stones which were fastened into the two rims of a bow," and these they called "the interpreters." Thus they had been passed down from one custodian to another for five hundred years, as it then was from the Nephite beginning. That was the second Mosiah, son of King Benjamin, and grandson of the first Mosiah.

It is also evident that the first Mosiah used them in translating unknown languages, for we find as follows:

In the days of Mosiah, there was a large stone brought unto him, with engravings on it; and he did interpret the engravings by the gift and power of God.—Omni 1: 10, page 137, small edition.

And again from what Ammon said to Limhi about Mosiah, as follows:

Now Ammon said unto him, I can assuredly tell thee, O king, of a man that can translate the records: for he has wherewith that he can look, and translate all records that are of ancient date: and it is a gift from God. And the things are called interpreters.—Mosiah 5: 10, page 159, small edition.

And on the same page, just before Moroni begins his synopsis of Jaredite history, the Book of Ether, there he speaks of the abridgment of Nephite history which had been made by his father, Mormon, and which Moroni was finishing to seal up before his death; there he refers to the Urim and Thummim, evidently as to be the means used in translating the Book of Mormon when it shall be brought to light in latter days. Of their work and the expected translation of it he says:

But the Lord knoweth the things which we have written, and also that none other people knoweth our language, therefore he hath prepared means for the interpretation thereof.—Mormon 4: 8, page 500.

No doubt the Urim and Thummim, or "interpreters," were had by him, together with the plates of record, they having been "handed down" from the days of Lehi and Nephi, a thousand years before his time. For there had always been among them righteous men to receive and care for them as sacred gifts from the Lord. And when he had made his final entries of Nephite history and written in the Nephite language his "account" of the Jaredite nation, then Moroni said, "I seal up these records." (Page 543.) Also he wrote, "Wherefore I have sealed up the interpreters, according to the commandment of the Lord."—Page 507.

Now if there had been two pairs of these, one had by Jared's brother and another given to Lehi and his people, then we would expect that two would be mentioned as with the plates when found by Joseph Smith fourteen hundred years after Moroni sealed and hid them. But instead of this we find the following word of the Lord given in June, 1829, to Cowdery, Whitmer, and Harris, namely:

You must rely upon my word, which if you do, with full purpose of heart, you shall have a view of the plates, and also of the breastplate, the sword of Laban, the Urim and Thummin, which were given to the brother of Jared upon the mount, when he talked with the Lord face to face, and the miraculous directors which were given to Lehi while in the wilderness, on the borders of the Red Sea.—Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.

After all these divine and human statements of fact it seems consistent to believe that the same means that had been "prepared from the beginning" (Mosiah 12: 3), had also been "kept and preserved by the hand of the Lord," and by him transferred from one people to another. They were taken away whenever a nation and its leaders went into wickedness, and later were given to the prophets and seers of righteous peoples when they appeared in the different ages of the world, no matter on which continent they might be. The Lord and his angels could both give them and take them as easily as they could take them from Joseph Smith when he disregarded the instruction given him (see Doctrine and Covenants 4: 6; 9: 1), and then return them to him when he had been chastened and corrected (see Church History); or as easily as the plates themselves were taken away when the translation thereof was finished, or as readily as was accomplished any other miraculous event recorded either in the Bible or in the Book of Mormon.

Even though at times they were sealed up along with sacred plates or parchments, that fact did not hinder the Lord from removing them at his will, or from giving them to other people. And when he delivered the Hebrew nation from Egyptian bondage, and raised up Moses to lead that people, then is found the first Bible mention of those miraculous things. And now, taking a retrospect of history, we find what has been written concerning them, as follows:

Namely, that the confusion of tongues occurred (according to Usher's chronology) about 2247 B. C. Soon after that was the beginning of the little band under Jared to journey to the "choice land" beyond the seas. And when in the secluded valley they had gathered their substance, they started and "did travel in the wilderness." The book says that they "did build barges in which they did cross many waters," by which is meant great or deep waters, not rivers, and then they came "even to that great sea which divideth the lands." There they built the final eight barges, and there, on "the mount Shelem," the brother of Jared had those wonderful divine experiences, and he "talked with the Lord face to face." (Doctrine and Covenants 15: 1.) Then was the Urim and Thummim first given to man, so far as history states. That was about, we suppose, 2230 B. C. And when all was prepared they set forth, and the trade winds that never stop, these winds, the book says, "did never cease to blow," and in three hundred and forty-four days they were wafted ten thousand miles to the shore of Central America.

From the words spoken to the brother of Jared we understand that it was not intended for that people to have the use of the Urim and Thummim, for they were sealed up by him for the purpose stated, and not "handed down" to his successors. However, more than seven hundred years after Jared's time there lived a man who was held in such favor by the Lord that he alone of all the people was permitted, like the brother of Jared, to talk with the Lord face to face. Religio students and other Book of Mormon readers, please notice the striking and important fact that Moses and the brother of Jared were practically equal in this great privilege of speaking face to face with the Almighty. We read of this fact about Moses as follows: "And the Lord spoke unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend."—Exodus 33: 11. (See also Exodus 25: 22; 34: 5, 28-35.)

And now had appeared a people whom the Lord selected to lead to freedom and to righteousness, if they would follow, and to lands and homes of their own; and to them he spoke as follows:

Thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.—Deuteronomy 7: 6.

And as the man who had the privilege of talking with God face to face must soon pass away, there was given another mode of revelation through which the Lord would manifest his will to Aaron, as chief priest, and to his successors in office, for the people of Israel to receive and be guided by. Therefore we read the commandment given to Moses and what he did, as follows:

And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the Lord.—Exodus 28:30.

And he [Moses] put the breastplate upon him [Aaron]: and also he put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim.—Leviticus 8:8.

Even Josephus, the Jewish historian, wrote of his uncertainty as to the manner in which the Lord revealed his will through or by these two stones, and learned men of the religious world have had various opinions about the method of communication. But the latter-day experience in translating, as well as Ammon's saying that Mosiah had something that he looked in, makes it clear that the things to be revealed were given in writing upon the stones. That the things revealed were to be very clear and comprehensible is seen by the word of God to Moses in relation to what Joshua, the great leader, should do in consulting the oracle then in the hands of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, for we read as follows:

And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him, after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation.—Numbers 27:21.

That was spoken in the year 1451 B. C.

The method taken to find Achan, Joshua 7:14-18, shows that a sure means of revelation was employed and which none disputed. Probably name after name appeared in writing and was read by the chief priest, until the final one condemned Achan as the guilty man. After that it is evident that the Urim and Thummim must have been kept in the ark of the covenant; because Bible history states as follows:

And the children of Israel enquired of the Lord, (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days.—Judges 20:27.

That year was 1406 B. C. Also see the inquiry made to find Saul, as related in 1 Samuel 10:22, and inquiries made by David as related in 1 Samuel 23:2-12 and 30:8, and 2 Samuel 5:23. Then we read about the Lord's rejection of Saul as follows:

And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.—1 Samuel 28:6.

All these things happened between 1095 B. C. and 1045 B. C.

It is thought by theologians that the Urim and Thummim continued with the Jews only until the Babylonish captivity, so says Doctor Richard Watson in his theological dictionary, published in London in 1831. From what is written in the book of Nehemiah it appears that they were not had among the Jews after their return from Babylon in 536 B. C. For there we read of the uncertainty about who held the true priesthood, and what was needed in order to know who were acceptable in the sight of God as his priests to take part in holy things. We there read:

And the Tirshatha [governor] said unto them, that they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim.—Nehemiah 7:65.

That is, they could not decide as to the validity of certain claims to the priesthood without revelation, and that could not be had until a descendant of Aaron having the sacred oracles should appear. But the Jews never had them again. Because they were unworthy and also because these great helps had already been transferred to Lehi, he being the leader under God of the righteous branch then already in the land of Joseph. That they were a branch of Israel, see 1 Nephi 6:1, 6; 2 Nephi 2:1, and Book of Nephi 9:8, small edition.

Another thing worth mentioning is that when Limhi's forty-three men returned from what we now call Central America, bringing with them the golden plates containing the Jaredite history (see Mosiah 5:9), there is no intimation that they brought the Urim and Thummim, or interpreters, with them. But Ammon told King Limhi that Mosiah had them and could translate the writing on the plates of record.

Summing up the foregoing history the writer of this article is quite satisfied now that there exists but one pair of the sacred articles, that the Lord gave them to the brother of Jared; then, when the time came, he gave them to Moses for Israel, and at their apostasy he gave them to Lehi, and they were hidden up by Moroni in 420 A. D., and there, in what we now know as Western New York, they were given to Joseph Smith to translate with, and then taken away when that work was done, probably to be brought to light when the Lord shall see that they are needed.

I will add that the "miraculous directors" that Lehi received, as spoken of in section 15 of the Doctrine and Covenants, were in no manner related to the Urim and Thummim. They were only to direct them on their journey, the compass spindle pointing the way they should travel. Upon the ball that inclosed the spindle it appears there was at times written such instructions as the Lord chose to give them, but that was for their temporary use and guidance, and for such reproof as might be needful. (See 1 Nephi 5:4, 11, 13; 2 Nephi 4:2, and Mosiah 1:3.

LAMONI, Iowa, December 5, 1908.

NEPHITE APOSTLES.

We will all agree, I think, that God did establish his church among the Nephites on this continent. The Book of Mormon shows that he did; but for what purpose was it done? Evidently for the salvation of his people. And inasmuch as they had not received, and could not receive, authority by succession from the church at Jerusalem, nor was it practicable for them to establish any contact with that body, therefore, it was necessary that the church should be organized according to the one and only pattern, a brief record of which we have in the New Testament.

God is impartial and unchangeable. Surely, I need not cite nor quote from the abundance of proof found in the Bible and Book of Mormon to sustain this assertion. Every Latter Day Saint is prepared to accept the statement without question. Very well.

Is the quorum of twelve apostles of any real benefit to the church? If it is, then that quorum is essential, whenever and wherever the church of God is established among men.

I know Paul says "there is one body," and "but one body"; but do these statements mean that a quorum of twelve apostles, such as was placed in the primitive church, can not be duplicated in the organization of God's church in America? or among the ten lost tribes of Israel, in the north country? or in any one of the planets, which may be inhabited? I think not. If it does, then the establishment of the church of Jesus Christ, in the last days, in the land of America, is an infraction on the true order, and should be rejected!

More than this. If the statements of Paul refer to the mere personnel of the church, rather than the divine order of organization and doctrine, then we have no more warrant for placing prophets, high priests, elders, priests, and teachers in the church, than for placing apostles therein. If this is what Paul meant, it is surely wrong to attempt to duplicate the old Jerusalem church in any sense whatever! And yet, it is a fact that there were, at least, prophets, elders, high priests, priests, and teachers in the Nephite church. What Paul evidently meant, is that there is one, and only one, divine order of doctrine, organization, and spiritual characteristic belonging to the church of God. Any different or conflicting order can not be divine because there is but one. The church at Jerusalem was the "one body." So was the church among the Nephites with twelve apostles in it, also the one organized in the state of New York, United States of America, by command of God, in April, 1830.

The fact that the Nephites "were in communication with the 'head,' the 'husband,' and as a part of the body were nourished by revelation," does not dispense with the necessity of a quorum of twelve apostles. If it does, then there were no apostles needed in the primitive church, nor in the restored church of the latter days. Paul compares the church to the body of a man, all the members of which have important work to perform. Notwithstanding the important and superior work of the head in giving intelligent direction to all the members of the body, the best results are secured when all the members of the body are in their respective places, and in the faithful performance of duty. To illustrate: The man who is deprived of his eyes suffers great loss. Why? Because the order and design of God in placing the eyes in the body are violated.

Paul, after telling us that Christ gave apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ," goes on to show, still further, the divine order and purpose:

That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ. From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4: 14-16. (Read Ephesians 4: 7-16.)

Jesus Christ is the true foundation, also the head of the church. He is the "Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending"; but we must accept him, not only as the Son of God who made atonement for all men, but as a perfect teacher sent from God. God did not build his church on the foundation of apostles and prophets, for such a foundation would be human and fallible; but he built it "on the foundation of the apostles and prophets." That is, the church was builded on the same foundation that the apostles and prophets builded, namely on the revealed truth of the eternal God. The term Christ comprehends the whole plan. There is, therefore, much significance in the following statement: "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever."—Hebrews 13: 8. (See also 1 Corinthians 3: 11; Isaiah 28: 16; Ephesians 1: 22, 23; Revelation 1: 8; Deuteronomy 18: 18, 19; John 12: 48-50; Ephesians 2: 20.)

Let us not forget the characteristics of the "one body." First, it is the church which is brought into being by the direction of God. Jesus said, "Upon this rock I will build my church."—Matthew 16: 18. Second, it is the church which teaches and is governed by the doctrine of Christ. Third, it is the church which is influenced and controlled by the “one Spirit,” the only one which is of God. This is the “one body,” wherever found.

I do not believe that the Nephite church was merely local, though, at different places, they established local churches, or branches. The land of America, it seems to me, is rather too large for a stake! Furthermore, if all the Nephites were organized into a stake, with North and South America as the territory, where was Zion, the central place, to which this stake was amenable? If “any proposition that has assumption as its foundation and main support is certainly illogical,” it might not be impertinent to ask, Where can we find the history of the organizing of this stake (?), any mention of a stake presidency, high council, or a bishop and his counselors, without which there can be no stake? In the sense of being entirely separated from the general body or church, a stake is far from being independent.

I believe that the Nephite “twelve” were apostles, and for the following reasons:

1. The twelve apostles constitute a very important part of the church of God. Why should they be left out when Jesus Christ organized his church on this continent?

2. They are called the “twelve” and “the twelve disciples,” in the Book of Mormon, an official designation applied to the twelve apostles, both in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, but to no other quorum in the church!

3. When Jesus commenced to build or organize his church on the Eastern Continent, he called and ordained twelve men whom he called apostles. On the Western Continent, among the Nephites, he called and ordained twelve men for his leading ministers and witnesses, and they were called “the twelve” or “the twelve disciples.”

And it came to pass that when Jesus had spoken these words unto Nephi, and to those who had been called, (now the number of them who had been called and received power and authority to baptize, were twelve), and behold he stretched forth his hand unto the multitude, and cried unto them, saying, Blessed are ye if ye shall give heed unto the words of these twelve whom I have chosen from among you to minister unto you, and to be your servants.—3 Nephi 5: 9; see also Moroni 2: 1.

4. The instruction given by Jesus to the Nephite twelve, the work assigned, in fact all the words which he spoke to them, taken as a whole, strongly favor the belief that they were chosen and ordained to be his leading witnesses and apostles. In fact this line of proof is irresistible. For proof, read what Jesus said to “the twelve” as recorded in 3 Nephi, especially chapter 5, paragraph 8; chapter 6, paragraph 1; chapter 8, paragraphs 6, 7, and 9.

5. Moroni, chapter 2, contains excellent proof:

The words of Christ, which he spake unto his disciples, the twelve whom he had chosen, as he laid his hands upon them. And he called them by name, saying, Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles. Now Christ spake these words unto them at the time of his first appearing; and the multitude heard it not, but the disciples [the twelve] heard it, and on as many as they laid their hands, fell the Holy Ghost.

The plain meaning of the words which I have emphasized in the above quotation is, “As you yourselves are apostles, it is your privilege and duty to do the work of apostles.” I know no other legitimate inference that can be drawn from the text. So we are not surprised to learn that “the twelve whom he had chosen” were apostles.

6. Notwithstanding what has been said of the limitations of the mission or “commission” of the Nephite twelve, we find it to be not only similar, but equal to that given to the first twelve on the Eastern Continent. When Jesus first sent out the first twelve, he said to them, “Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel.”—Matthew 10: 5, 6. Later, they were commanded to go to all nations, or into all the world. (See Matthew 28: 18-20; Mark 16: 14-20.)

It is true that Jesus said to the Nephite twelve, “Ye are they whom I have chosen to minister unto this people.”—3 Nephi 6: 1. What people? Evidently the Nephites and Lamanites, who were of the house of Israel, and located in North, South, and Central America. But is this all that Jesus said unto them about their mission? And even if it were, are we sure that they could not be apostles unless their mission was co-extensive with that of the first twelve? Did the first apostles ever prosecute their mission to the continent of America? But the objection is entirely removed by quoting the commission in full. “Therefore go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth.”—3 Nephi 5: 9. The italics are mine.

It is important to note that these words were spoken by Jesus to the twelve, at the time they were called, and in the presence of the multitude.

Behold I say unto you, that whoso believeth in Christ, doubting nothing, whatsoever he shall ask the Father in the name of Christ it shall be granted him; and this promise is unto all, even unto the ends of the earth. For behold, thus saith Jesus Christ, the son of God, unto his disciples who should tarry [three of the twelve]; yea, and also to all his disciples, in the hearing of the multitude, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; and he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe, in my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover; and whosoever shall believe in my name, doubting nothing, unto him will I confirm all my words, even unto the end of the earth. And now behold, who can stand against the works of the Lord? Who can deny his sayings?—Mormon 4: 7.

In this quotation, the Nephite twelve are designated so plainly that none need make a mistake. If these evidences embarrass the ministers of the church, it is very unfortunate for the Book of Mormon. We are, however, quite willing to stand on what is written in the sacred books of the church.

Of General Interest

A CHURCH PROGRAM TO WIN LABOR.

The obligation of the churches to "supply the spiritual motive and standards" for all movements that aim to bring about the real brotherhood of man was emphasized at the recent meeting of the Federal Council at Philadelphia. Doctor Frank Mason North, chairman of the "Committee on Church and Modern Industry," brought forward a striking series of recommendations that were unanimously adopted. They urge that "the study of existing conditions in the industrial world, their origin and outcome," be more definitely enforced in theological seminaries, schools, and colleges, through "courses in economics, sociology, and the social teachings of Jesus, supplemented, wherever possible, by investigation of concrete social facts." They further suggest the formation of study-classes and reading-courses in social questions among church-members. They recommend both pastors and lay members to fraternize with workingmen, to invite public discussion of their problems, and to advocate their cause when just. Especially is it urged upon all church-members, who are "involved in the practical problems of industry," to "accept their unparalleled opportunity for serving the cause of Christ and humanity by acting, in his spirit, as mediators between opposing forces."

A notable move in advance is made in the recommendation that the church "modify its own equipment and procedure in the interest of more democratic administration and larger social activity." Further:

"That more generally in its buildings provisions be made for the service of the community as well as for the public worship of God:

"That in its councils of direction workingmen be welcomed and the wisdom of the poor be more freely recognized;

"That in its assemblies artificial distinctions be rebuked and removed;

"That in its financial management the commercial method, if it exist, be replaced by the principles of the gospel as set forth in the Epistle of James, to the end that the workers and the poor, vastly in the majority in the United States, may ever find the church as homelike as the union hall, more attractive than the saloon, more tolerant of their aspirations than the political club, more significant of the best which in heart and life they seek than any other organization or institution which claims to open to them opportunity or ventures to offer them incentives to the better life."

Provision is made for a definite program which shall be initiated and carried out by the executive committee of the Federal Council. Thus:

"To organize under such a plan as it may in its discretion find expedient, a commission on the church and social service, representative of the churches allied in this council, and of the various industrial interests, said commission to cooperate with similar church organizations already in operation, to study social conditions and ascertain the essential facts, to act for the council, under such restrictions as the executive committee, to which it shall from time to time report, may determine, and in general, to afford by its action and utterance an expression of the purpose of the churches of Christ in the United States, to recognize the import of present social movements and industrial conditions, and to cooperate in all practicable ways to promote in the churches the development of the spirit and practice of social service, and especially to secure a better understanding and a more natural relationship between workingmen and the church."

The recommendations of this committee are based upon the following profession of faith:

"We deem it the duty of all Christian people to concern themselves directly with certain practical industrial problems. To us it seems that the churches must stand—

"For equal rights and complete justice for all men in all stations of life.

"For the right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, a right ever to be wisely and strongly safeguarded against encroachment of every kind. For the right of the workers to some protection against the hardships often resulting from the swift crises of industrial change.

"For the principle of conciliation and arbitration in industrial dissensions.

"For the protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational disease, injuries, and mortality.

"For the abolition of child labor.

"For such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.

"For the suppression of the 'sweating system.'

"For the gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

"For a release from employment one day in seven.

"For a living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

"For the most equitable division of the products of industry that can ultimately be devised. For suitable provision for the old age of the workers and for those incapacitated by injury. For the abatement of poverty.

"To the toilers of America and to those who by organized effort are seeking to lift the crushing burdens of the poor, and to reduce the hardships and uphold the dignity of labor, this council sends the greeting of human brotherhood and the pledge of sympathy and of help in a cause which belongs to all who follow Christ."—Literary Digest, December 19.

Lord of the New-Year.

The footsteps of a Child
Sound close beside us. Listen! He will speak,
His birthday bells have hardly rung a week,
Yet has he trod the world's press undefiled:
"Come with me!" hear him through his smiling say:
"Behold, I am the Way!"

Against the door his face
Shines as the sun; his touch is a command;
The years unfold before his baby hand;
The beauty of his presence fills all space.
"Enter through me," he saith, "nor wander more;
For lo, I am the Door!"

And all doors openeth he;
The new-born Christ, the Lord of the New-year.

New-Year Bells.

"Ring happy bells, across the snow,
Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring out the false, ring in the true.

"Ring in the valiant man and free,
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

Hark! do you hear them this glad New-year morning? They are ringing, yes, pealing forth upon the pure air of heaven their glad melody in chime upon chime, and the message they bear is ever the old, sweet, sweet story of "Peace on earth, good will to men." Long, long ago it was announced to man and to earth by the herald angels, but oh, as we count time, how slow its progress has been! How slow and much impeded!

Yes, it has been slow—slow as will be any work for the uplifting of humanity in which man has his own agency. But fear not and faint not by the way, for He who has promised us has taught us in our prayers to say, "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever."

Yes, praise, all praise to his holy name, who took upon him our nature, suffered in every way in which it is possible for man to know suffering; bore to the world a faithful testimony of the father, and upon the cruel cross sealed that testimony with his blood: the kingdom, the power, and the glory belong for ever to the Father.

"Send me," said Satan. "I will be thy son, and I will redeem mankind, that one soul shall not be lost, and surely I will do it; wherefore, give me thine honor."

It was God's plan to give man his agency; it was Satan's plan to deprive man of it and take to himself all the honor and glory. But God elected to send his Son—because he loved the world, and would not rob man of all which constitutes his moral greatness, his inherent power to choose for himself in whose service he would enlist. To choose the way of life that leadeth upward to God, or the way of death that leadeth downward to Satan.

Then, "Ring, happy bells!" Ring out this morning your glad message, peal upon peal, even as you never rang before; and while your music still vibrates and floats upon the air, bearing its message over hill and dale, until it is taken up by other bells, and yet others, until it comes back to us, having encircled the earth, is it not a good time for us to turn to the watchman and ask, "What of the night?"

Surely it is mete. And listen! The answer comes back to us from him whose locks have grown gray while he watched and waited; upon whose unsheltered head fierce storms have spent their force, and whose eyes have grown dim while watching. It comes, and with no uncertain sound: "The morning cometh and God's hastening time is here."

Ah, there is our answer from the watchman God himself has placed upon the walls! Have you heard it? "God's hastening time is here." If you have not, then listen! Listen to the bells as they ring across the snow to-day—listen and mark their message to the waiting world—the world that has so long groaned under its burden of sin and misery. Listen! for the spirit of liberty and freedom is abroad—the "valiant man and free," of whom the poet wrote. He is pointing you to the throes of Russia—that monarch of oppressing nations, humiliated by a people so small and heretofore unnoticed as to be held of little consequence by the ruling powers of the earth. But hark! For the bells to-day are telling you that when God established this Government the death-knell to all other forms of government was sounded. When he inspired men to frame the Constitution of these United States, it was his proclamation to the world that kings and emperors do not reign by any divine right—that as his own government was established upon man's free agency, so too was it his will that the governments of earth should be. And from this free government, Japan imbibed her first life-giving draught of liberty, and the heaven which came from free America, hidden though it be, is yet to work her own entire freedom.

Listen! for to-day the bells are ringing out the chimes of marvelous things! Do you doubt the answer of the watchman upon the walls of Zion when he says, "God's hastening time" has come? Then question again, "Watchman, what of the night?" What of the long night of those millions of China? Dawns the morning in that dark, benighted land? How the bells are pealing, ringing out as a swift courier imbued with the spirit of his mission. "Even here" there chimes repeat, "even here the night is fleeing away, and the beams of morning light are bathing the east in rosy splendor."

But marvel of marvels, what is this? Can it be we hear aright? Is it possible that from Turkey, from that land of the dagger and the strangler's cord, those notes of freedom are coming? Can it be that even here, "the valiant man and free" has found his way? Can it be that in this land which for centuries has been as a living monument erected by the powers of Europe to their own disgrace, the voice of freedom is at last heard? It is—it is, and to-day the bells are ringing out the shouts of freedom from that land bathed in the best blood of her every Christian neighbor shed while Christian nations (?) looked on and beheld, unmoved and without protest, save to call, "Hands off! He is my debtor."

"Ring in the Christ that is to be." Let us listen to the bells of 1909 as they peal forth their message to-day, heeding the tidings they are sending abroad over all the earth, and answer each to his own soul, "Am I ready for God's hastening time?"

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Flora Hannah, of Sand Run, Ohio, an aged and faithful Saint, requests the prayers of the Saints that she may be relieved of the very severe pains from which she has for days been suffering.

Letter Department

HAMILTON, Scotland, December 6, 1908.

Saints' Herald: I wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New-year; and may God's Holy Spirit be your guide. Since coming to Scotland, I have learned that it is not enough to convince our fellow men of the gospel because there are some who are now convinced of the truth, but they are not converted. The law of the Lord converteth the soul; but they have not yet complied; so, according to God's word there is no conversion as yet, although some have been convinced since my coming here. I have made many friends in many towns. Last two weeks visited Motherwell, Falkirk, Grangemouth, Denny, and Haggis, left tracts, and tried to plant some seed in each town. I will also visit likewise next week other places near by. And I think I am paving the way for better results. I have been getting so many letters of late indorsing a tent fund for Scotland, that I am a little encouraged to mention it once more, if you will pardon me. Bro. John Dear, of Belvidere, Illinois, was with me here visiting, and he looked the site all over. He says the tent with two men will be just the thing, and offers ten dollars to help. Elder William Lewis, of Wales, writes me of very favorable impression, and also friends in this country—Mr. William Jamieson, Jr., of Glasgow, a friend of Bro. R. May, of Independence, Missouri.

Up to this date we have not had much cold weather in this part—but a great deal of damp and rainy weather, although I have not seen any snow yet. But we may look for snow any day. Up to this date we have had good weather for a tent, in this field at least. But then, there is something else. Wisdom says, Never put tools into a man's hand if he does not like to work with them, because he is sure to make a failure, and he will blame the failure on the tools you gave him. This is the only way that a failure comes to tent-work. When a man does not want to work with the tent, then the tent does not want to work with the man. And wisdom speaks once more, Get the right man for the right place. If God speaks there is no mistake. Has the old method been successful? There is, in Scotland, after years of labor by our worthy, self-sacrificing brothers, all told and credit given (God will give us all our due reward for all our labor), fourteen members, with three going to England very soon; and many of those I have not seen at a meeting since I came here. So I do plead to try this tent method. Last night in bed I was impressed to convey this method once more. If it meets the approval of the powers that be, all will be well; and if not, then I have done my part by leaving the matter in your hands to approve or disapprove, as seemeth wisdom to you. And if it meets your approval, let me say that Bro. John Cairns, Bishop's agent, of Scranton, Kansas, is a good man to collect and credit all moneys sent to him by all that will be willing to help the cause and build up the kingdom of our Lord in Scotland. And further, Elder George Thorburn would be one of our best men for this country. He is highly spoken of, and well respected by all who know him. Let us conclude by saying, as for myself, I will do whatever is best, as wisdom directs. To God let me say, "I will do what you want me to do, dear Lord." "I will go where you want me to go."

May this new year be prosperous, and the truth be spread, and many souls be made glad through obeying the angel's message is my prayer,
JAMES BAILLIE.

PETERSHAM, Sydney, New South Wales, Nov. 10, 1908.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in Christ: With desire I write this letter to give some news to you how the work is progressing in this far-off land. It is difficult to get men to listen to sound doctrine in this age. Truly did Paul prophesy of this time, when men would not endure sound doctrine. However, I am not feeling discouraged, as one that has received testimony of a divine character of the restored gospel, having a spiritual desire to more fully present our message to the children of men.

We, a small number of Saints, members of the Balmain Branch, who are living in Petersham and Leichardt, have by consent of the missionary in charge been organized into a new branch, and are holding our meetings in a hall in Panamatta Road, Leichardt, which costs us ten shillings for the Sunday's meetings. We have decided to still improve our position, and have borrowed one hundred and fifty pounds and purchased an allotment of land, and put down the foundation for a new church building of wood, to be erected as quickly as possible with timber from Bro. John Wright's mill, of Tuncurry, on liberal terms. But we will not have near enough money to complete our task, therefore we must appeal for help, or see the work delayed. Brethren and sisters, will you help us? We are not strong numerically or financially. We realize a hard struggle ahead of us. Nevertheless any assistance you can send us will be thankfully acknowledged.

The work is making steady progress in this State, generally, but would like to see even more progress; but the Master knows best. Many of the old pioneers have passed over to their rest in this mission; yet the Master is calling some young men who are studying to show themselves approved, who soon will take their place in the priesthood. There is a bright prospect ahead of our new branch, if a continuance in humility coupled with zeal continues to predominate.

Elder G. R. Wells has just arrived from the north to assist us. He will commence tent-meetings here now as soon as help is provided by the missionary in charge, as Elder A. C. Barmore has been called down to Victoria. Truly the laborers are few, and the harvest is ripe.

It would gratify me to hear of some brother holding the office of patriarch being appointed to this mission. I am sure good would be the outcome of such an appointment, as a spiritual revivalist would not only be a great blessing to the rising generation of young Saints, but a comfort also to many up in years, who have come into the church since our worthy Bro. A. H. Smith visited Australia.

In closing my letter my heart's desire and prayer is to see the fulfillment of a prophecy given some years ago through our esteemed brother, John Kaler, while in conference in Balmain, Sydney, January 1, 1900:

"Verily thus saith the Lord, There is a great work to be done in this mission field, and, that my Saints may be qualified and have power to accomplish this work, it is needful that the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, also members of my church, live more humble and faithful. For verily, there are hundreds, yea, thousands, to be gathered into my church on this island of the sea. I, the Lord, have not been well pleased with my people in Australia in years gone by, for they have not been sufficiently willing to heed the counsel of the Lord. For there has been evil-speaking, contention, and backbiting among my people; therefore, I could not pour out my Spirit upon you to hasten my work in this land as I have hastened it in the land of Zion. But, verily, the hastening time shall be upon you from this very instant, if my Saints will live more humble and faithful before me; and I will raise up laborers unto the harvest, and send forth to preach this restored gospel by the power of my Spirit. For verily, I will choose the weak and foolish things of this world to confound the mighty and the wise. Therefore let mine elders, priests, teachers, and deacons rebuke the power of darkness, and stand faithful, declaring my gospel before the church and the world, and let mine Saints not find fault, but sustain them by the prayer of faith; and then will I pour out my Spirit upon you, and bless you with great blessings. Yea, verily, I will bless you in body and in mind, in basket and store, and will show forth signs and wonders among my people, and will heal their sick so that they need not resort to the arm of flesh for help. Therefore, live humble and faithful, and love one another. Let nothing separate you from each other, and the work whereunto you have been called, and I will be with you to bless by the power of my Spirit. Thus saith the Lord unto the conference of his people in Sydney."

I have meditated upon this prophecy many times, so that I might see a great ingathering into the various branches in Australia; yet I do not see the work roll on as quickly as I would expect it, hence I ask myself the question (let all other Saints do likewise): Are we assisting in this work as we ought to in warning our neighbor, and being active, live workers in this land where such a great promise is given to us from the Lord in the above prophecy? My heart is entirely in this work, and has been for the past twelve years. Many evidences have I had of its divinity, although I have had some trials and persecutions to go through for the testimony which I bear to its divinity. The Lord has been pleased at different times to draw the veil to one side, and I have seen things, times, and conditions of our future abode that I could not find words to describe what was shown me. At times my joy is of that character spoken of as the unspeakable joy, when the spiritual mind is so illumined above the ordinary times of gospel living.

Your brother in the gospel,

39 Norwood Street.

JOSEPH THOMPSON.

PIEDMONT, Oklahoma, December 23, 1908.

Editors Herald: The year closes, and we are again reminded that we are fast passing the mile-posts, which teach us that this life is only a span, and if we would wish to meet a good record in the great day of accounts, we must catch the moments as they pass, or life will flit away in one brief day as it were, and we will wonder what we have done with our time.

The year now just ebbing away has been the best one in mission work for Oklahoma in her history. Some of the men have done excellent work, and, it might be said of others,

Well done. The local work is in better condition than ever before in the district; nearly all the branches and the general outlook for mission work is an open door on nearly every hand, with an invitation to come and occupy. I expect that some of the Saints have been discouraged that we could not fill all their calls, but I wish to say we have done the best we could. I know the harvest time has come (Matthew 13:39) and we should pray the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into the vineyard, and we should also work as well as pray. Many young men are now ready and waiting; the Lord of the vineyard has called them, and they are ready to "go where you want me to go, dear Lord." But we, the people, have tied their hands. Do you inquire how? The call has come time and again from the Lord for us to come up higher and more fully comply with his word, and we might ask how can we do more than we have done, that would free the hands of the ministry? Read the frequent calls from the financiers of the Lord, telling us why they can not supply the needs of any more families than are now represented by the present force of workers, because we as a people, and not as individuals, have not done our duty in paying tithes into the storehouse of the Lord. Jesus said, "The children of the world are wiser in their generation than the children of the light," and it seems they are, for they certainly adjust themselves to conditions and work to advance their interests much more readily than they do in the spiritual life. We can not afford to remain babes; we must go onward and grow. Many of the Saints are doing good work and making fine progress.

My debate at Fanshawe with Yandall has been written up, but I will say that we met an able man and won a fine victory for the cause we love. Saints there are feeling fine. I preached a few times at Wilburton, Adamson, and Haileyville, while over east, and after returning from there had a four-week siege of malarial fever which caused me a loss of time from the field. I was at Cheyenne when I took sick and was very sick there for over two weeks. I think this was the first time in fourteen years in the mission field that I had to go home on account of sickness; but I am now able to be at work again, and have just closed a three-week meeting twelve miles northwest of here and have some names for baptism, one of them a brilliant young man, by the name of Fisher, who teaches the school where the meeting was held. I think he will be a valuable man to the church.

Wishing all the Saints a pleasant Christmas and a joyous New-year, I am your coworker, in Zion's redemption, HUBERT CASE, Bishop's agent.

TIDIOUTE, Pennsylvania, December 20, 1908.

Editors Herald: I desire an interest in the prayers of the Prayer Union and of all God's children in behalf of my little boy who has been sick for over five weeks with catarrhal pneumonia. Pray that if it is God's will that he may soon be restored to health and strength. Kindly remember me in your prayers.

Your sister in trouble, but still trusting in God, the ever-kind and loving father.

MRS. ALEX. MELLON.

The Marriage Law.

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.—Matthew 19:6. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it.—Ephesians 5:25. Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands, as unto the Lord.—Ephesians 5:22. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife, loveth himself. . . . Let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself.—Ephesians 5:28, 33.

From these passages of scripture, one would draw the conclusion that love was the primary "law" governing marriage; or that makes such a state possible. "Love" sanctifies marriage. It is the pivot on which two lives are drawn together, cemented and unified. "They twain shall be one flesh." "In the beginning God made them male and female." Told them "to multiply and replenish the earth." For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother and cleave to his wife; whom he is to love as his own body.

When God placed the man and woman he had made in the Garden of Eden, he said to them, Thou shalt not eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. Then came the adversary of every good and perfect thing and said, God did not mean you should not eat of the tree of knowledge; he meant you would become wise as he. Now we all know the sequel and the results of that disobedience of our first parents.

Well, God instituted the marriage ordinance, holy and pure. "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church," etc. Just as important as any other divine command, and just as susceptible of failure, if broken, as was in the first instance. But when was man ever satisfied, when there is one ready and willing to lead? So Mr. Satan is at hand as usual and says in his oily way, Oh, there is nothing to it. Love is so old-fashioned. No such thing as love in these days. Marry for money, beauty, home, a position in society, anything but love—that is foolishness.

And what follows this wise counsel? See the proud, ambitious mother teaching her children that "money" is everything (of which we are told the love of, is the root of all evil), the stern, austere father training them along the same line, modeling his home life by his own teachings, their company chosen by the bank accounts—money, money three times a day. Hence, we see a man with brains enough to carve a name in the world of fame, but who lacks the money to rise, so he must have a rich wife. So he reverses the order and loves the money instead of the wife. Here comes the proud, ambitious mother, looking for a handsome setting for the accomplished daughter, never once thinking of love in her ardent desire to accomplish her ends in gaining a rich man for that daughter. Do you think God joined such marriages? I don't.

Jesus the Christ organized his church here on earth, according to a certain pattern, governed by certain rules, and did not his satanic majesty set up one, too? Has he not in all ages contradicted the Savior? And do not his teachings bring turmoil and confusion to all who follow him? Then why say a marriage contracted under other than "love," "God has joined"? If God's laws are unchangeable, in one thing, they are in all. In my opinion, where love, purely love, has not been the real incentive for man and woman to enter the marriage state, God never joined them; for we know, if money or honor, position or home was the cause, love had very little to do with it. Then who made the match?

I was forced to marry a man (when quite young) for his money. Had been taught there was no such thing as love; and words can not describe the humiliation I felt. On bended knees I implored my mother to send the man away, or let me remain with her. But I was chided, called a baby, was trying to be strange. If there are any who doubt that love sanctifies marriage, and makes the bond holy and sacred, let them try my experience. There is the same craving for something not satisfied, as when you belonged to the orthodox churches—and were not filled, yet in ignorance of the cure.

The broken homes and scattered families, and others formed, till nearly all trace is lost of the original parties, is appalling. Every person that stands for right or high moral principles, cries out against the degenerate state of affairs, as they exist to-day. The violating of the marriage law, or the substituting of some other code for the one given by divine authority, has been the beginning of lowering the principle of morality, and every generation following has let the standard down a little further (for the sins of the parents are visited upon the children), till now chaos reigns supreme. How often do we hear repeated in our families, "There are no virtuous people, either men or women any more"; and we as often think they have good reasons for such conclusions. The doing away of love in the marriage law, and the affixing of something else, has done more to lower the moral standard than any other one thing. I would like to name the present substitute, but will not. Suffice it to say, we are a hard, proud, stiff-necked, rebellious people, gone away after idols.

I hope we, as Saints, will rise in the strength of the Lord, and live by every word that proceeds from his mouth. If God's law means anything, it means everything. Of course, you and I can not undo what is done; but we can teach our children the whole law of God, and to keep the whole law, live and abide by it every day. As a people, let's obey God's law in the marriage covenant as in the church covenant, and become a peculiar people, thoroughly furnished to every good work; for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but principalities, against the powers of darkness, or rulers of darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.

News From Branches

BRADFORD, MANCHESTER.

I must say that I have got so accustomed to your valuable paper, that I always feel a keen sense of disappointment should I fail to procure it on the Sabbath. I believe I read with increased interest from week to week the various articles and sermons which are published in it, and your correspondence column always has for me a special attraction, particularly if there are any letters published from the British Isles Mission. I have often felt that I would like to write and add my testimony to that of my brethren and sisters, with regard to the truthfulness of this great latter-day work. For I am satisfied that it is the power of God unto salvation to as many as believe. I have had such convincing proof since I became a convert that I can not, dare not doubt. And I do not hesitate to affirm that I know it is the restored gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and that we may lay claim to, and verify all the peculiar promises and blessings in the Scriptures, provided, of course, we are faithful to our God.

I represent a branch here whose members, I am glad to say, are most energetic in the work; so that our beloved president, Bro. Leggott, has plenty of willing helpers, not only for indoor but also for outdoor work. And I am glad to think that the meetings conducted by our Bro. Leggott during the past summer have been the means of creating a better impression in the minds of many. Thousands, I believe, have heard the word, most of whom have been prejudiced against the Latter Day Saints because of the evils of the Utah church.

True, we have not seen as yet much fruit for the labor expended; but, in the minds of many, bigotry and hatred have been supplanted by respect and honor towards the members of the Reorganization; and I decline to believe that other than blessing must accrue to many as a result of the humble efforts on the part of the members of the Bradford Branch.

Last Sunday week, our esteemed Bro. Rushton began a series of sermons in our branch, extending up until Friday night last; and it was apparent that one and all very reluctantly parted with our brother. I am sure a most profound impression has been created in the minds of many; and I am bound to believe much good must be the result, and a better understanding of our duties and responsibilities obtain amongst the Saints. Inclement weather was responsible for deterring many from enjoying the privilege of hearing our brother's eloquent and inspiring addresses throughout the week. I sincerely regret there was not a shorthand reporter there to take down our brother's discourse each night, with a view to publication in your valuable paper.

In conclusion, I ask for the prayers of the Saints, not only for myself, but also for my wife, who, I am glad to say, is also in the faith. Petition our heavenly Father for grace sufficient to enable us to train up our children in and for the work, and that we may remain faithful to the end. Such is the earnest request of your brother, December 7, 1908.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Sr. R. C. Evans, of Toronto, was in the city last week, visiting Saints and friends.

The young men of our branch have organized themselves into a pleasure club, and intend to put on some good programs at the Religio sessions. The young ladies have also organized and have enjoyed some pleasant evenings as a result.

Elder D. MacGregor, of Stratford, occupied the pulpit last week, giving us two good discourses on the prophecies of Daniel.

The election of branch officers took place at the regular meeting of the branch last week and resulted as follows: President, Elder W. Flegg; priest, Elder S. Pope; assistant priest, P. H. Phillipin; teacher, W. A. Hardey; deacon, R. Y. Martin; assistant deacon, J. Judkins.

Sr. Queen Sinclair, of St. Marys, was visiting Saints here for a few days last week.

We are pleased to welcome among us again Bro. and Sr. Vasbinder, who have been absent from us the past four or five months in Brandon, Manitoba, where Bro. John has been taking care of the interest of the firm he represents.

The Ladies' Aid Society, in connection with the branch, held a bazaar in the church last week, from which they will realize a neat sum. The sisters worked very hard and are well pleased with the results.

Saints to the number of sixty gave a surprise to the missionary's wife, Sr. R. B. Howlett, one evening last week. A very enjoyable time was spent. During the evening Sr. Howlett was presented with a purse of money and an address—Elder Shields reading the address while Elder Henley made the presentation. The sister made a suitable reply.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

We wish to thank all who have contributed to the support of missionaries and their families this year. All allowances have been settled promptly. Some Saints, however, have evidently overlooked or forgotten the Lord's portion, one tenth of their increase annually. Their names are not found written in the tithing book this year. Thus they have neglected an opportunity to assist in spreading the gospel message. "Blessed are they that do." Members should pay tithes and offerings to bishop or agent in district where they live. I receipt for money in the following counties in Washington: Spokane, Stevens, Ferry, Chelan, Okanogan, Douglas, Lincoln, Whitman, Adams, Franklin, Kittitas, Walla Walla, Columbia, Garfield, Asotin, Benton, Yakima, and Klickitat. In Idaho: Bonner, Kootenai, Latah, Shoshone, and Nez Perce.

Is your name written there? If not, do not wait too long. Make an effort and ask for help to keep the law of the Lord.

In the January American Magazine Ray Stannard Baker, writing of "The new mission of the doctor," tells how physicians are coming to acknowledge that mind and religion play a great part in healing the sick. He says, by way of introduction to his story of Doctor Cabot's remarkable efforts at the Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston:

"Man is not only a physical and material animal, but is also a thinking animal, a religious animal. Mind has a vital influence over the body, and religion may also be a powerful agency in healing disease. To this discovery the medical profession is being driven by the work of the new school of experimental psychologists and by the spread of popular healing cults like Christian Science, the Emmanuel Movement, Mind-Cure, and the New Thought. Up to the present year no medical college in the world gave a course in psycho-therapeutics or in psychology; now several strong courses have been established.

"In short, just as the church is beginning to discover that man has a body as well as a soul, the medical profession is beginning to discover that man has a soul as well as a body. The whole man must be treated; and he must be treated not merely as an individual and unrelated sick man, but as a component and essential part of our close-knit social life, where one man who is sick endangers the whole city in which he lives."

Sympathy.

Over the glad, the green land, you have gone,
Bright head bent low, none traveling too but Sorrow;
While I, as if it were all another's pain,
Set my poor words and few against your bitter morrow.
O friend and loved, O living golden heart,
No friend, nor loved am I, unless I wear
Myself, this woe—dim out my sun—and leave
For you, who now bear all, some less and happier share.
—Mildred McNeal-Sweeney in the January Century.
