Dr. Edward Everett Hale in his June page in Woman's Home Companion gives three working rules for conduct of life.

1. Live in the open air as much as you can.
2. Touch elbows with the rank and file.
3. Speak every day to some one whom you know to be your superior.

It is with real pleasure that we find the July Century in the morning's mail. We always have the assurance that there is something distinctive—above the ordinary, in the Century. We remember the files of bound Centuries in my father's library years ago, and the bundles and bundles of unbound numbers awaiting the binder. On rainy days we used to delve into these, rereading some things and reading others for the first time. The poets, artists, authors, soldiers, statesmen, actors, I was on reading terms with in those pages! Their names come in a flood, and I find some of them still in the columns of this good periodical, which is characteristic, and only proves the high plane it has continued to hold all these years. This last number has S. Weir Mitchell, Brander Matthews, David Homer Bates, George F. Shradly, M. D., Timothy Cole, and others. It will surely call out the enthusiasm of every magazine reader. There is much in every issue we would like to give our readers. The July number but increases our admiration for the Century and puts August further away.

"AMANA: THE COMMUNITY OF TRUE INSPIRATION."
No. 1.

HISTORY AND PRESENT STATUS OF AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT
IN COMMUNISM.

From time to time we have given some attention to the interesting community at Amana, Iowa. Our attention is again directed to this society by a book entitled, Amana: The Community of True Inspiration, published by the State Historical Society of Iowa, written by Bertha M. H. Shambaugh. Some of the information contained in this book will be of interest to our readers.

At different times during the past few years the HERALD has had occasion to mention the failure of various experiments in communism. Some of our readers who are more or less in sympathy with the ideals of communism have considered this unfair. The editors have been criticised both publicly and privately because of that fact. We do not resent criticism and do not expect to escape it. But criticism to benefit any one must be founded on facts. The facts are that we have given and probably shall give more space to accounts of the successful experiment in communism at Amana than we have given all told to all of the numerous failures along that line. Certainly we have given and probably shall give it more space than we have ever given to any one failure.

The society at Amana has twenty-six thousand acres of land, seven small villages, and about eighteen hundred members. The real founders of this particular sect are Eberhard Ludwig Gruber and Johann Friedrich Rock, who separated from the Lutheran Church because they had become dissatisfied with the "dead formality" of that organization. The society had its beginning in the year 1714. One of the distinctive features of their doctrine is their belief in continued revelation. Their position on that point is much like that taken by Latter Day Saints. As expressed by themselves, their argument runs like this:

"Does not the same God live to-day? And is it not reasonable to believe that he will inspire his followers now as then? There is no reason to believe that God has in any way changed his methods of communication, and as he revealed hidden things through visions, dreams, and by revelations in olden times he will lead his people to-day by the words of his inspiration if they but listen to his voice."

That is the best government which desires to make the people happy, and knows how to make them happy.—Macaulay.

The individual through whom revelation comes is known as the werkzeuge. The last of these inspired individuals was Barbara Heinemann, who died at Amana in 1883. They have consequently been without revelation since that date. The revelations received prior to that time through different prophets are held as being sacred equally with the Bible.

Space will not permit a detailed account of their history. While the sect remained in Germany they had their periods of depression, and their periods of revival. Dissenting from and opposing the established church, they were subject to persecution by both church and state, and finally were given the alternative of renouncing their faith or leaving their native land. Driven to find some new location, they, in sore straits, sought the word of the Lord and were directed as follows:

"Your goal and your way shall lead towards the West to the land which still is open to you and your faith. I am with you and shall lead you over the sea. Hold me, call upon me through your prayer when the storm or temptation arises. . . . Four may then prepare themselves."

Consequently in the year 1842 a committee of four came to America to select a new location. This committee purchased the Seneca Indian Reservation, a tract of five thousand acres of land near Buffalo in Erie County, New York State. Members of the society immediately began their journey to the new land, and in time the removal was completed although it covered a period of about ten years. The new community was named Ebenezer.

The society was primarily a religious organization, and communism originally had no place in their program. They did not intentionally embark on any elaboration of the theories of Christ or any human individual touching questions of sociology. They drifted into or were forced into communism as a result of various circumstances. In the Old World they rented and operated various estates, and rich and poor labored together in the interests of the community. When the move was made everyone contributed as best he could to the purchase of the tract of land in the New World. The constitution of the society in the New World provides that all land and all improvements, everything, in fact, with the exception of clothing and household goods, should be held in common. The prosperous members were to advance the money to cover all expenses and were to receive a proportionate share of the whole in the form of mortgages as security. It was the expectation that in time there would be a division of the property, and individuals would receive according to the amount they had invested, together with accumulated interest; but it became more and more evident to the elders that a division of the property would result in a scattering of the community. Also they began to give some attention to the statement found in the Acts of the Apostles regarding the primitive church, wherein it is said, "And all that believed were together, and had all things common."

Long, and at times, bitter discussion resulted. In the midst of the discussion a revelation (granting for the time that their claims are true) was received October 23, 1850, which settled the matter. In it the Lord declared that it was not his will that there should be a division of the property then or at any future time, and that if such a division should occur they would be scattered and their children would come to want.

Certain conditions did not please them in their new home. One trouble was the lack of available land. The community soon grew too large for the original tract. Another was the rapid growth and the near proximity of the city of Buffalo, which was about five miles away. They desired to escape from its worldly influences. Accordingly in the year 1854 they began taking steps towards another westward move which resulted in their purchasing a tract of about eighteen thousand acres of land in the commonwealth of Iowa. They were fortunate in being able to secure land in one large tract, and were wise enough to avoid purchasing scattered tracts of land. Their community is located near Iowa City and on the banks of the Iowa River. They selected a valuable soil for farming and gardening purposes, and there are tracts of timber and quarries of stone that have furnished the community with building material until the present date.

Immediately they set to work with a will, building houses, shops, factories, churches, and schools, planting orchards and vineyards, and raising flocks and herds. They have been fortunate in various particulars. In the first place during their early sojourn in the New World they were fortunate in having an exceptionally able leader, Christian Metz, who died in 1867. Again they were fortunate in that the society was and is possessed of the spirit of industry, frugality, and common sense, characteristic of the German people. The historian wisely comments as follows:

More communities have died for want of common sense than for want of capital. With the Inspirationists common sense has been the very cement in the foundation of their institutions. On such a foundation the superstructure of religious enthusiasm and communistic zeal can rest securely. Their extreme sanity, however, has been so rare a thing in communistic endeavors—particularly in religious communities—that it may be said to be the distinguishing features of the Community of True Inspiration.

Christian Metz seems to have been the embodiment of the excellent traits above mentioned, and besides being spiritually minded was an excellent organizer, and a far-sighted and capable man. It is said that every institution is the "lengthened shadow of some great man," and the community of Amana, as it at present exists, is largely the result of his labors and his wisdom.

The seven villages of the community are near enough together to facilitate a common oversight and to preserve a feeling of unity; at the same time, they are far enough apart to preserve their identity, and to avoid some of the evils incident to larger villages or cities. They are named Amana, or "Old Amana," the capital, Middle Amana, West Amana, South Amana, High Amana, and Homestead. Homestead was originally people with worldlings, but was purchased by the community in order to avoid conflict with hostile spirits.

Some years ago a resident tax-payer of Iowa County brought suit against the society on the ground that they had exceeded their corporate rights and were a religious corporation engaging in purely secular industries. The district court handed down the following decision:

We therefore reach the conclusion that no abuse of corporate power has been shown. Under the peculiar organization, aims, and purposes of the society, to deny it the privilege of engaging in secular occupations for certain purposes would be tantamount to denying its existence. If the theory of the State obtains we would have the absurd position of authorizing corporations to exist and denying them the means of subsistence. But it is said, let them organize a corporation for pecuniary profit. This would require the abandonment of principles which are the basis of their religious belief and faith and the promulgation of which is the primary purpose of the society. If they have a right to believe in community of property as a religious doctrine and to organize in order to live in conformity to that doctrine, any employment devoted to their support would be accomplishing the purpose of the society's existence.

The case was appealed to the supreme court, and the decision of the lower court was affirmed. The court held as follows:

A religious society, organized under Chapter 2, Title 9 of the Code, seeking to effectuate its ideals of religious life through the common ownership and management of the property of its members, may so acquire and hold real property and establish and conduct various industries, and so long as its enterprises are extended and conducted simply to meet the needs of its members and maintain them in a manner consistent with their religious faith to which its total income and accumulation of property is devoted will not be dissolved and its privileges forfeited on the ground that it has exceeded its corporate power.

Naturally the members of the society were rejoiced, and one can not feel otherwise than glad that they were not interfered with in their peaceful and inoffensive life.

The real and personal property of the community is listed on the books of the auditor of Iowa County at one million, eight hundred forty-three thousand, seven hundred twenty dollars. The historian makes the following comment regarding their attitude under prosperity:

Communitistic societies are like individuals. Many have been able to stand adversity, but only the steadiest-minded are able to stand prosperity. The Amana Society belongs to the extremely small class of the latter. In spite of the continued prosperity of the last half century, the "solidarity" of the community is still intact. The element of self-interest demanding individual gain and good is still kept in abeyance by the spirit of brotherly love.

The Amana estate is divided approximately as follows: Village and factory sites, five hundred acres; vegetable gardens, one hundred acres; timber land, ten thousand acres; cultivated fields, seven thousand acres, and grazing land, four thousand acres.

Power for the mills and factories is furnished by the mill-race which is fed by a canal seven miles long. As before stated, there are seven villages. Each of these villages consists of from forty to one hundred residents arranged along one long, straggling street. At one end of the village are the barns and sheds; and at the other, the factories and workshops. Each village has its church and school, its bakery, dairy, wine-cellar, post-office, and general store. It will thus be seen that the seven villages combined have about as many stores and shops as are usually found in one village containing as many inhabitants as the seven. There are also three railway stations, lumber-yards, grain-houses, and sawmills, and the community has been forced to establish and maintain hotels for the accommodation of visitors. Their desire to be left alone and to withdraw from the world is not respected by worldly-minded people. There are, on an average, about twelve hundred visitors annually. Many of these come from idle curiosity; many others come to investigate. The people of Amana are exceedingly weary of being investigated.

Each village has its water-works and fire-engine, and every able-bodied man is a member of the fire department. The loss by fire during the past twenty-five years has been between eighty and one hundred thousand dollars; yet the society considers it cheaper to rebuild than to insure. They have no hospitals. The feeble-minded, deaf-mutes, and insane are sent to state institutions. Milder cases are cared for by the community. They have also been obliged to construct what the younger people call a "hobo hotel" to care for the many tramps who are constantly imposing upon the charity of the community. Here they are careful to entertain strangers, but the chances of "entertaining angels unawares" are inconsiderable.

The form of government of the community, of course, is a matter of interest. The entire conduct of the affairs of the society rests with a board of trustees consisting of thirteen members, who are elected annually by popular vote from the whole number of elders in the community. This board has charge of both spiritual and temporal affairs and is known as the "great council of the brethren." Annually on the second Tuesday of the month of December the board of trustees elects out of their own number a president, a vice-president, and a secretary. These offices are usually reelected from year to year, as the community does not take kindly to changes in office.

Each village has a local government consisting of a group of from seven to nineteen elders, including the resident trustee or member of the great council. The board of trustees, or great council of the brethren, meets alternately in the different villages on the first Tuesday of each month. In the month of June of each year, the trustees lay before the voting members of the society (who comprise all male members who have signed the constitution, all widows, and female members who are thirty years of age who are not represented by some male member) a full statement of the real and personal estate of the society. In matters of very great importance special meetings of the whole society may be called; but they consider it a mistake to have many large mass-meetings. There is a tendency in the society to leave matters to those who best understand them. They have not gone to the extreme of democracy which considers that every man must have a finger in every pie. The historian is of the opinion that they have thus evaded one mistake common to similar societies, and cites a case of one survivor of one of the experiments under Fourier who was asked why the community failed and replied, "Talk, talk; too much d— talk."

The board of trustees is the high court of appeal in all cases of disagreement or complaint of any kind. The business of the community of a legal character is transacted at Marengo, the seat of Iowa County. The community has no lawyers. In cases of legal difficulty with the outside world they employ worldly counsel.

The governing board in each village is known as the bruderrath. They call into conference the foremen of the different branches of industries and such other members of the community as may on occasion be of assistance, and map out and arrange the work of the village. This board appoints a foreman for the different industries and departments of labor, and assigns to each individual his task. To this board individuals desiring more money, more house-room, an extra holiday, or any change of work, must make their appeal.

Each village keeps its own books, and manages its own affairs, but all accounts are finally sent to the headquarters at Old Amana where they are inspected and the balance of profit or loss is discovered. It is presumed that the accounts of each village will show a profit, but whether they do or do not makes no difference in the supplies allotted to the village or members thereof.

The system of government is thus a sort of federation wherein each village has a certain degree of independence, but all are under the general care and supervision of the "great council of the brethren."

DOWIE AND MAMMON.

It may not be too late to present something about the man who claimed to be Elijah II. The Chicago Tribune, at the time of his death, gave the following editorial estimate of the man and his work:

JOHN ALEXANDER DOWIE.

Chicago has been the scene of the chief events in the remarkable career just closed. John Alexander Dowie was Scotch by birth, and half his life was spent in Australia, but it was in Chicago that he gathered about him a body of enthusiasts who hailed him as an inspired prophet. A conspicuous example of the intellectual vigor which characterized his prime was the fact that he recognized this city as the best center from which to start a movement which he intended to become world-wide.

It will be a question among those who do not adhere to his church just now far Dowie believed in himself. Unquestionably there were moments when he believed that he had a divine mission. The sick said he had healed them. Converts were made in all quarters. He sent out his disciples to found churches in other countries. His success was so great that he may often have believed he was all his followers thought he was. But it is difficult to believe that he thought himself inspired when he began to exploit the financial possibilities of the position he had attained. Perhaps success had turned his head a little. It became impossible for some of his most devoted followers to believe that he was both sane and sincere in some of his later manifestations. The personal magnetism of the man was so great, however, that many accepted his identification of himself with the prophet Elijah, and were not shaken in their faith by the pomp and luxury with which he surrounded himself. A man of genius, of a peculiar kind, and of great personal force, he came near to founding a prosperous city and a new sect. If health had remained he might have held the confidence of his people until he could have left his colony on as solid a foundation as the state that Brigham Young created on the foundation laid by Joseph Smith. Mohammed was fifty-three when he fled from his enemies, having only a few confessed supporters. Ten years later he died, a king and conqueror, the head of a religion still powerful. Dowie at fifty-three was the unquestioned arbiter of the lives of thousands of people and the owner of great possessions, but ill health stripped his power from him, and at fifty-nine he lies dead, and his church probably will die with him.

No one else among the Dowieites has given any indication of ability to control the situation. Financial difficulties are real and urgent. Dissension is rife among those who have given up their worldly all to follow Dowie to his new Zion. Even a transplanting of the colony to Mexico would not remove it from reach by the influences of the world, and there is no one to lead such a migration. The probability is that the property of Zion will fall into the hands of the creditors, and that the name of Dowie will remain in history as that of a leader who was clever and powerful and almost great. The most significant thing in the whole episode is its illustration of the craving among the people for some one who will lead them out of themselves. The world is not entirely material, but there remain thousands who are willing to sacrifice themselves for an idea. The weak spot in Dowie's character was his promise of wealth and power to his followers. If he had promised them poverty and toil with spiritual blessings, and set the example of humility and self-denial, he might have made ten converts where he made one.

We note among other things the doubt expressed as to Dowie's inspiration, especially in his exploitation and founding of financial institutions, broadly hinting at the idea of personal aggrandizement. The "jingle of the guinea" not only "helps the hurt that honor feels," but it makes sweet music—to others beside Elijah II. The comparison of his work with that of Brigham Young is interesting, and in this connection, while Dowie's work apparently does not have the stability which characterizes, seemingly, that left by Brigham Young, they were parallel cases in that both died in possession of dishonest fortunes wrung from a blind following. Both were guilty of a gross breach of sublime confidence. A convincing proof of Brigham Young's usurpation and unholliness, like Dowie, was his avidity to convert leadership and position into coin of the realm and to pocket the coin. The Bee Hive was both mint and storehouse, and the golden eagle found there a long abiding place.

In direct contrast to the career of these two men is that of Joseph Smith. After many years of service to the church and the cause he represented, death found him in very moderate circumstances. Upon reliable information his estate did not amount to five thousand dollars at the utmost. As trustee-in-trust he held property for the church which was afterward disposed of, the proceeds going West, and it is a bit of interesting history that their agent made strenuous efforts to deprive the family of the Seer of every bit of private property left them. Only through the good offices of a friendly attorney, and by process of law was their plan frustrated and the prophet's small estate left untainted by Utah possession.

SCIENCE, TRUE AND FALSE.

There can be no actual conflict between true religion and true science, any more than there can be between any true facts, the correct relationship of which is fully understood.

There has been, however, a conflict between so-called religion and so-called science, hitherto and still unreconcilable from any agreed basis.

The facts of science and the affirmations of true religion must agree; both are existent truths coming from the same source, the Creator, God, the Father of all truth.

Paul was acquainted with the demand of ancient science, and rightly named some of them "science, falsely so-called."

The following from the pen of Lord Kelvin will help the "humble minister for Christ's religion" to put a truer estimate on the alleged claims of modern science which are urged against the faith in the effort made to defeat his mission.

I can not at all accept the view of those who assert that ether is atomic, since all my own investigations have clearly demonstrated to me that its structure is totally nonatomic. In fact, it has no structure in the accepted meaning of the term. Neither can I accept the view of those who assert that science neither affirms nor denies the existence of a Creator. On the contrary, science most positively asserts the existence of a creative power. We can not escape from this conclusion when we study the physique and the dynamic of living beings and "dead" nature which we see around us.

Modern physiologists again firmly declare that there is something else outside gravitation and the physical and chemical forces. This something is a vital principle. Science places before us an unknown. In thinking of this unknown we all become agnostics. We only know God in his works, but we are forced by science to believe with perfect confidence in other than physical, dynamic, or electrical forces. There is no middle term between absolute scientific belief in a creative power and the acceptance of the theory of a haphazard coming together of atoms. Here scientific thought is forced to accept the notion of a creative power. Forty years ago I asked the great Liebig during a walk in the country if he believed that grass and flowers grew solely as the result of chemical force.

He replied: "Not any more than I believe that chemical force can translate a book upon botany describing the phenomena of vegetation." Every act of the will is a stupendous miracle for chemical, physical, and mathematical science. If your intellect is strong enough you will be forced to believe in God, the foundation of all religion, and you will see that science is not at all hostile to religion. Far from that, it must be looked upon as its auxiliary.

DEATH OF BISHOP LEEKA.

The Saints will be pained to learn of the death of Bishop William Leeka. We understand that the funeral-services were held Saturday, July 11, at his home at Thurman, Iowa, sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley. Bishop Leeka was born June 14, 1830, in Clinton County, Ohio. He united with the church in Fremont County, Iowa, March 12, 1871. He held the office of elder, and later that of high priest, and was ordained to the office of bishop August 26, 1900.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Elder Joseph Lambert was the speaker at the church Sunday morning. Owing to the extremely hot weather the attendance was not so large as usual.

Sunday evening closed the week's series of meetings at Central Park. As before announced, services will be held there Sunday evenings during the remainder of the summer, or at least until reunion time. The Sunday evening sermon was by Elder Heman C. Smith. The attendance was unusually large. These meetings have been profitable and enjoyable. Excellent order has prevailed and close attention has been given to the speakers, despite surroundings that might distract attention, such as are usual with open-air meetings. Services were not held Monday evening on account of rain, but for the most part the weather was ideal, especially during the latter part of the week. And yet the people of Lamoni had a little experience with the kind of competition that is met with in open-air work in the world. Some kind of a medicine show chose to occupy that week in Lamoni and compete for the attention of those who prefer medicine shows to religion. Again, while our train schedule is not very elaborate, one train per day managed to arrive during the services, and as the depot grounds adjoin the park, the speaker had a bad ten minutes each evening competing with a locomotive and with noises incident to the arrival of a train at a village station. The speakers during the week were Heman C. Smith, Wardell Christy, W. H. Kelley, E. A. Smith, and E. L. Kelley. It was predicted that Lamoni would not repeat the experiment of holding park meetings; but the people are beginning to ask for another series.

The funeral-services of Sr. Martha Woods were held Sunday afternoon at three o'clock, sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith. She was the widow of Bro. Stephen Woods who passed away some seven years ago. Both were well known to the Saints of the British Isles Mission, also to members of the Reorganization in Utah.

Graceland College Board of Trustees is arranging to build a dormitory for boys. Daniel Anderson, president of the board, and David Anderson, president of the College, have been authorized to solicit funds. It is desired to have the building ready for use this fall, but work will not be begun until funds are secured to cover the entire expense. It is proposed to secure one hundred subscribers for fifty dollars each. Ten subscribers have been secured in Lamoni and probably numbers of others will be obtained here. Also the Patronesses Society of this place has donated one thousand dollars. The building is to cost five thousand dollars. There will be accommodations in the dining-room for sixty students and sleeping-rooms for thirty-four. In addition there will be reception-rooms, kitchen and rooms for hired help. Any one desiring to help in this work may send their subscriptions to either of the brethren before named.

Friday Bro. W. N. Ray, familiarly known in the Herald Office as "Dad Ray," treated the office force to bananas in honor of his seventieth birthday. He says that he is now living on borrowed time; it is the general wish of the office that his credit may continue good for a long time to come. Bro. Ray has been with the HERALD many years now, but is still hale and hearty and claims to be able to whip any man on the force. No one has accepted the challenge.

Mr. Noah Riggs of Indianola, Iowa, was a recent visitor in Lamoni. Mr. Riggs was a pioneer here about forty years ago. Later he moved away and this is his first visit here for seventeen years. He, with David Dancer, J. R. Smith, E. Banta, S. V. Bailey, and the order of Enoch, signed bonds to secure the right of way for a railroad through the township and also to secure two hundred acres of land for a town site. Some of them signed with fear and trembling, rather expecting to be swamped financially; but, as he expressed it, they sat back and waited and Bro. David Dancer engineered things so that they came out all right.

We learn that the Lamoni Sunday-school has four Church History classes instead of three as stated in our items two weeks ago.

Among our out-of-town visitors during the week were Bishop E. L. Kelley and Wardell Christy; both of whom assisted in the open-air preaching-meetings at Central Park.

Let any man, however great and gifted, say to himself, "The world is my natural enemy; all men's hands are lifted against me; I have no faith in friendship, or love, or human kindness, but I am ambitious, and I will succeed"—let that man toil as he may, his progress towards success will be retarded because he swims against the natural current of the universe. He who smiles and says, "The world is what we make it, friendship exists for those who deserve it, and love begets love," that man floats with the current, and all things assist him to his goal, however distant it may be.—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

BEARING SPIRITUAL FRUIT.

(A sermon for children, by Elder F. G. Pitt.)

It was Children's Day at the Saints' church Sunday, and the little ones had full sway at all the services. In the morning Elder Pitt gave the children a sermon adapted to their capacity. He read from John 15: 1-8. He illustrated the lesson by the use of the blackboard on which was drawn a grape-vine with beautiful clusters of grapes, to represent the true vine—Christ—and his true disciples. Those branches that had to be severed from the vine were those having no fruit. In contrast to the true vine were a number of false vines on which was no fruit. The central thought presented was the necessity for all true disciples to bear fruit. That, as the farmer plants the orange-tree and the apple-tree in order to get oranges and apples, so our heavenly Father calls us to be his children that we may bear fruit, and all the work bestowed upon us is for that purpose.

To further illustrate this thought, the speaker presented a quantity of fruit, such as oranges, lemons, and apricots, with the statement that if we could understand how this fruit was obtained it would help us to understand how to produce the fruit required by the Master.

He asked, Children, where did this fruit come from? From the trees.

And where did the trees come from? From the ground.

How did the trees get in the ground? They were planted.

Quite correct. Do you know, children, that we have to be planted, too, before we can bear fruit? Paul says (Romans 6: 5): "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." The third verse tells us how we are planted; it says: "Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death?" The fourth verse says: "Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death." Children, will this apricot-seed grow until it is planted? No.

How do we plant it? We bury it in the ground.

Quite true. So the Bible teaches that we have to be buried in water in likeness of Christ's death and burial before we can grow spiritually. When we are old enough to know right from wrong, and we do wrong, we sin; and the wages of sin is death, so that everybody who sins is in a condition of death. Then before they can be alive again they have to be buried with Christ in baptism; then, like this seed, after it is planted or buried in the earth, life and growth will be manifest. Only be sure that you are not merely baptized into a church, but into Jesus Christ.

When the seed is planted in the ground does the fruit appear at once? No.

What appears first? Leaves.

Leaves may be called the manifestations of life. You know a tree is alive when it bears leaves. Our bodies are alive when the spirit is within, so our souls are alive when we have the Holy Spirit. Paul names some nine manifestations of the Spirit. You count them as I read from 1 Corinthians 12: 7-10: Wisdom, knowledge, faith, gifts of healing, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretations of tongues. If you understand this, it will help you to know the true vine from the many false vines that can not bear these manifestations. Some people may tell you that these things are all done away, but do not be deceived, for the true vine never changes.

But will these manifestations of life be sufficient of themselves to satisfy the Master? No. Because he wants fruit, and these that we have named may be called leaves. And the branch that only bears leaves he is going to take away. But these leaves are necessary, for the vine could not produce the fruit if it was stripped of leaves, so we need these manifestations of the Spirit to enable us to bear fruit. Now let us see what the fruit is that God wants us to bear.

In Galatians 5: 22, 23, we read: "But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." How many fruits? Nine. Nine leaves and nine fruits. This is the kind of fruit Jesus wants us to bear. To succeed we must be a branch of the true vine. Then let us see that we are planted right, then grow right, then produce the right kind of leaves, and finally produce the right kind of fruit. Remember the text: "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."—Evening Index, San Bernardino, California, June 30, 1908.

THE NAME "MORMON."

There may be much or little significance attached to a name; it depends on the circumstances. It is true that we are living in an age characterized by caviling and unjust criticising: a man is made an offender for a word; but no one need fear, if he has the true side of every subject. As Emerson wrote to Carlyle: "Truth is ever born in a manger, but is compensated by living till it has all souls for its kingdom."

Philology is truly a fascinating subject, and how few persons have done more than gaze upon its broad expanse. Each language has words peculiar to itself. Discoveries, inventions, new diseases, different styles, and such, must be named, and these names, originally or in part borrowed from another language, take their place in the vocabulary of the tribe or nation that gave them birth. Some of the words grow old and die, others pass away in infancy. A living language is always changing, and sometimes for the worse, as we find to be the case when nations fall in the scale of mentality and morality. For example, the Attic dialect, which is the basis of our Greek grammar, and is the most cultivated and refined form of the Greek language, was the language of Athens during her period of literary eminence.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, in speaking of our Indian, says:

If we consider every little wandering horde a distinct community, we have a greater number of nations here than in all the rest of the world. . . . We think we perceive them all to be descended from the same stock, notwithstanding the prodigious diversity of their language. . . . In the absence of certain data it may be safe to set down the number of native American languages at about four hundred and fifty. Throughout the whole of these runs a thread of connection.

The foregoing statement is quite significant because it shows us the possibility of one language dividing into over four hundred dialects so dissimilar that the knowledge of the one furnishes no help to the interpretation of the other. Further, a language that has been preserved through the medium of sound only, must of necessity undergo changes when clothed with the science of alphabets. The gesture (which means so much in the language of the savage) is lost; the accent is passed over; the primitive meaning ceases. As a nation increases in wickedness, its very words that stand for goodness lose their meaning and in time cease to exist. Some tribes possess no word in the least corresponding to our "thanks," "love."

Archbishop French, in Study of Words, page 18, gives us a very remarkable example of the disappearance of one of the most significant words from the language of a tribe sinking ever deeper in savagery; and with the disappearance of the word, of course, the disappearing as well of the great spiritual fact and truth whereof that word was at once the vehicle and guardian:

The Bechuanas, a Caffre tribe, employed formerly the word Morimo to designate "him that is above," or "him that is in heaven," and attached to the word the notion of a supreme, divine being. This word, with the spiritual idea corresponding to it, Moffat found to have vanished from the language of the present generation, although here and there he could meet with an old man, scarcely one or two in a thousand, who remembered in his youth to have heard speak of Morimo; and this word, once so deeply significant, only survived now in the spells and charms of the so-called rain-makers and sorcerers, who misused it to designate a fabulous ghost, of whom they told the absurdest and most contradictory things.

You will bear in mind the following points:

1. Morimo is a word in the dialect of an African tribe. Its origin is unknown.

2. It primarily meant a "supreme, divine being."

3. The meaning was changed by the priests to designate "a fabulous ghost."

The best history of the Israelites is the Bible. About fifteen hundred years before Christ, Moses, a man learned in both Egyptian and Hebrew, led thousands of Hebrew slaves from Egypt. That these slaves understood the language of Egypt is reasonable to suppose, and it is also reasonable that much of that language was retained by the Jewish people.

The Book of Mormon informs us that a colony of Jews left Jerusalem six hundred years before Christ, and came to the land of America. The leader, Lehi, was a learned man, understanding Hebrew and Egyptian. This knowledge was transmitted to posterity through many generations, but many changes took place and there remained little resemblance to the original languages. There is one exception,—the proper nouns. Even to-day there exists the custom of naming children for their parents. This was considered a necessity among some Hebrews. (See Luke 1: 61.)

Glancing through the Book of Mormon, we notice several names; many seem strange: such as Aminadab, Anathoth, Arpad, Esrom, Jared, Nob, Laban, etc.; but they are found in the Bible. Then we have—Zeniff, Lib, Senum, Liahona, Seon, Deseret, and many others which seem peculiar to the Nephite record. It is possible that the ancient inhabitants of America originated these words; it is possible they were derived from the Hebrew or the Egyptian. The same word is often spelled differently in different languages. Take the Greek word Christopher, which means "bearing Christ." The French spelling is Christophe; the Latin, Christophorus; the Italian, Cristofaro; the Spanish, Cristoval; the Portuguese, Christiovaõ; the German, Christoph. Again, we find words spelled alike but of different meaning. In French the word pain means "bread"; in English it means "distress."

In the days of King James, the word let meant "to hinder," now it means "to allow." There are many hundreds of interesting things in this connection, but space is valuable, so I refrain from noticing them.

When the Book of Mormon was published in 1830, a question was raised as to the origin of the word. To this Joseph Smith replied:

It has been stated that this word was derived from the Greek word Mormo. This is not the case. There was no Greek or Latin upon the plates from which I, through the grace of God, translated the Book of Mormon. . . . We say from the Saxon, good; the Dane, god; the Goth, goda; the German, Gut; the Dutch, goed; the Latin, bonus; the Greek, halos; the Hebrew, tob; and the Egyptian, mon.

Hence, with the addition of more, or the contraction mor, we have the word Mormon, which means, literally, "more good."

We will assume that the foregoing definition is a correct one. The word Mormon would then be in part translated and in part transferred; the first syllable being a translation, the second syllable a transference.

Many things have been claimed for this word (Mormon); some are true and some are not. We are correct in saying that the word Mormon as applied to a prophet who inhabited the land of America hundreds of years ago, was not known to the people of modern times before the Book of Mormon was published. We are not correct in saying that the word did not exist in the pages of literature before 1829.

If George Washington, or some other person who lived in the eighteenth century, had visited France, entered a large library and called for the Annales du Museum, on page 184, volume 19, he would have noticed an article on natural history, by Saint Hilaire Geoffray. In this sketch the baboon is divided into a species, one of which is called papio mormon. And this was before Joseph Smith was born.

The early edition of Webster's Dictionary quotes Johnson, as follows: "Mormo, a bugbear; false terror." The editors of the Century Dictionary, which is considered by many to be the best dictionary in our language, informs us that Mormo is from the Greek, and that it means "A bugbear; false terror." They claim that Mormon is a modern Latin word derived from the Greek word mormon; that it is the specific name of the mandrill; that in 1811 Illiger named a genus of puffins mormon.

We are yet in the mire of speculation, as far as the origin of the word is concerned. Before me are three Greek dictionaries. The first by Giles, edition of 1840, and he gives the following: "Mormolykeion (mormo), a hideous spectre." "Mormos, fear." "Mormos, frightful."

Kontopoulos, in his dictionary of 1892, gives, "Mormolykion, a mask." "Mormoropos, terrific in aspect."

Liddell and Scott, in their justly celebrated Greek-English Lexicon, edition of 1883, on page 979, tell us that Mormo, also Mormon, means "a hideous she monster, used by nurses to frighten children with, . . . generally, a bugbear."

We have not learned when the word Mormon was introduced into the Greek language. About four hundred years before Christ Xenophon uses the word mormonas, and Aristophanes (a Greek grammarian of about 200 B. C.) uses mormona. (See Hell. 4. 4, 17; Ar. Ach. 582.) Hesychius, who lived about the end of the fourth century after Christ, in his Greek Lexicon, gives the following: "Mormoi, mormi."

The Bible teaches us that Adam was the first man;

consequently his language was the first language. This being true, every dialect, tongue, speech, has a common parentage; the Greek language being no exception. The word mormo, which seems to be a root or stem, with many branches, might have been borrowed from a sister language, and at that time meant just the reverse from what it means to-day. The reader will remember the word Morimo, found in the language of an African tribe. It primarily meant a "supreme, divine being," but after the passage of time, the word was changed to designate "a fabulous ghost."

Would I, because of this remarkable coincidence, be justified in stating that the word mormo is from the Greek word mormo, and means "a bugbear; false terror," "used by nurses to frighten children with"? No man can consistently claim that the word Mormon, the name of a prophet that lived on this continent centuries ago, is derived from the Greek mormo, and means "a bugbear." As has been shown, we find words spelled the same but of different meaning: the word pain meaning "bread" in French, and "distress" in English.

And, further, admitting that Joseph Smith might have been incorrect (and no person who believes in the prophetic calling of Mr. Smith, holds that he was infallible) in his definition of the word, such admission would not make correct the definition of any other man. The definition given by Mr. Smith may be the result of man's wisdom; perhaps he was aided by inspiration. This much is certain, the church has never accepted it as a revelation, and hence, is not responsible in any case. Every man has a right to his opinion—but that does not make his opinion right.

The following points, then, are evident, and can not be successfully controverted:

1. It can not be proved that the word Mormon originated with the Greeks.
2. It is not true that words are from the same source because they are spelled alike; yet it is true that
3. There was a mother language.
4. The word mormo might have originated in some language older than the Greek, and at that time meant the reverse from its present definition.
5. In the Scriptures there seems to be much stress placed on the meaning of names; and we read that in the end there will be given to each saint a new name.

6. In the face of the foregoing facts, and many others that exist, is it inconsistent to believe that God is responsible for the word Mormon, as applied to the old prophet and the book he abridged?

In the Book of Mormon is the fullness of the gospel. The claim of all Latter Day Saints is that the very keynote of the restored gospel is, more good!

The other proper names on the Nephite record may have been translated or transferred in full; but had the character or characters of the reformed Egyptian which represented Mormon been translated into English, we would have "more good"; this could hardly make a significant proper name; hence, the combining of the translated and transferred syllables or names.

All of this is possible; and what man or set of men will arise and say it is not so?

JOSEPH IN PROPHECY.

The mission of Joseph Smith is still an open question to thousands of professed Christians, and perhaps always will be. He is accepted by others, however, as a true prophet of God, and as one who believes in his divine calling and mission, I venture some of my reasons.

It was claimed by Joseph Smith and maintained but his supporters, that he was a descendant of Joseph of Egypt, who was sold by his brethren, and of the tribe of Ephraim. Our line of evidence or argument, therefore, will be to produce from the Bible scripture that will serve as proof that in future time, or in the "last days," there was to come one from the tribe of Joseph who was to be a noted prophet and leading character in the final gathering time of scattered Israel and the consummation of God's work in the world. We should consider that God is more interested in the welfare of the human race than we could possibly be, and with this knowledge and foresight he evidently did see the end from the beginning—not only the end, but the centuries, years, months, and weeks intervening.

As one great poet has said, "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players." God being the author of this great drama of human life, we are going to presume that he arranged the acts, scenes, sittings, etc., before the theater or stage was built; and we shall further presume that the leading actors were known or "foreordained." Paul says: "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate." (See Romans 8: 29.) It would be very unreasonable for the author of any kind of a drama to outline certain parts of a play, and fail to provide or secure an actor to execute that part.

The Bible is teeming with references pointing to a special work that God is to perform in the last days, just prior to the second coming of our Lord, at a time when Israel shall be gathered and the Jews rebuild the waste places of Jerusalem.

It is at that time, "the last days," when Joseph of Egypt is to receive the special blessings promised, when he is to obtain the "birthright." It is then that the feast shall be spread, when he shall make himself known to his brethren; then it is when Joseph shall provide horses and chariots for his brethren to come to the land of plenty, where they shall be protected by the King—not Pharaoh, king of Egypt,—but Jesus the crucified, Christ, the risen Lord, "the King of the Jews"!

In Amos 3: 7, we read: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." We first introduce the prophet Jacob. "And Jacob called unto his sons, and said, Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days."—Genesis 49: 1. The word you can not possibly refer to the individual sons, or son, but rather to the tribe.

Commencing with Reuben, who was the oldest of Jacob's sons, in truth the first-born, we read:

Reuben, thou art my first-born, my might, and the beginning of my strength, the excellency of dignity, and the excellency of power: unstable as water, Thou shalt not excell; because thou wentest up to thy father's bed: then defiledst thou it: he went up to my couch.—Genesis 49: 3, 4.

We introduce Reuben for the reason that he was the first-born, but for cause he lost his birthright and we desire to know which of the other sons or tribes received it.

It is very evident to all Bible readers that among the twelve sons of Jacob, Joseph was his father's favorite, and it follows in this case, as in others, that good fortune follows love.

We might here remind our readers that Joseph merited the favor and love not only of his father Jacob but also of his Father in heaven, for we read one of the most beautiful stories of him contained in the Bible; what sublime charity, love, and forbearance he manifested to his brethren who had so cruelly mistreated him; what a noble and Christ-like character exhibited in the kingly palace, (see Genesis 39: 7-12), proving himself a noble and worthy head of a chosen tribe through which God designed to do a "marvelous work and a wonder" in the "last days." (See Isaiah 29.)

To continue with Jacob blessing his sons we read again:

Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise: thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee. . . . The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be.—Genesis 49: 8, 10.

This agrees with Paul in Ephesians 1: 10:

That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ, both which are in heaven and which are on earth; even in him.

Every Bible student knows that Shiloh and Christ are one and the same. Jacob says, "The scepter shall not depart from Judah until Shiloh come." It is very evident that the tribe of Judah did hold the scepter of power until Christ, but by reason of the folly of the Jews (most of which were of Judah, as the ten or more tribes had scattered) Jesus says to them, in Matthew 23: 38, 39:

Behold, your house is left unto you desolate. For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

We take this as evidence that what Jacob referred to was now ready for fulfillment, that the scepter was to depart from Judah. It is reasonable and proper for us to inquire, Unto what tribe shall it be restored, in the "last days"?

Joseph is a fruitful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall: the archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him: but his bow abode in strength, and the arm of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob, (from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel.)—Genesis 49: 22-24.

Here is evidence to us that God in the last days was going to raise up a prophet from the seed of Joseph who would be a shepherd, a stone in Israel. The Jews in the days of Christ, evidently understood that some time in the last days there was to come a notable prophet. I believe, however, that their vision was somewhat obscured as to the exact time of his coming. Please note the following scripture on this point:

And this is the record of John, when the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to ask him, Who art thou? And he confessed, and denied not; but confessed, I am not the Christ. And they asked him, What then? Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not. Art thou that prophet? And he answered, No. . . . He [John] said, I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord.—John 1: 19-21, 22.

Again in verse twenty-five we have further evidence in our favor: "And they asked him, and said unto him, Why baptizest thou then, if thou be not the Christ, nor Elias, neither that prophet."

Now let us return to Genesis 49: 25, 26:

Even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts, and of the womb. The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills: they shall be on the head of Joseph, and on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren.

Joseph here receives greater blessings than either of the other sons, blessings from heaven and from earth. "From thence" [from Joseph] is the shepherd the stone of Israel." Jacob says, "Gather yourselves together, that I may tell you that which shall befall you in the last days."

Then it is when Joseph is to act his part in the great drama of life, in the last act, just before the angel of God shall declare "that there shall be time no longer." There was a custom observed in ancient Israel to keep records or "genealogy" of the tribes, also to note special blessings, if any, which may have been promised. So we find the historian or recorder taking up the line of our argument in 1 Chronicles 5: 1, 2.

Now the sons of Reuben the first-born of Israel, (for he was the first-born; but, forasmuch as he defiled his father's bed, his birthright was given unto the sons of Joseph the son of Israel: and the genealogy is not to be reckoned after the birthright. For Judah prevailed above his brethren, and of him come the chief ruler; but the birthright was Joseph's.)

We do not expect any one to take issue with us as to who the chief ruler was, or is. Christ, the chief ruler, came from Judah, in harmony with prophecy and the decree of God. Judah prevailed above his brethren and thus entitled himself to the parentage of the chief ruler, also to most, if not all the kings, temporal judges, rulers, and the scepter, and like the star of Bethlehem, it outshone all other stars. Its glory was bright; it acted its part. So also with the tribe of Judah, as a tribe. And Judah, in giving to the world the "chief ruler," performed the crowning act of his part in this great drama. But it remained for Joseph to take the leading role among men under the direction of the chief ruler, after Judah's day had passed.

As we stated in the beginning of this paper it was claimed by Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery that God revealed to them that they were of the tribe of Joseph, also of Ephraim. Let us see if any provision is made in the Bible for such a claim.

Joseph of Egypt had two sons, who, according to Jacob, were to act a prominent part in God's great drama of life. We have already shown where the birthright was taken from Reuben, because of his folly, and given to Joseph, for the recorder says, "But the birthright was Joseph's." Of Ephraim and Manasseh, the two sons of Joseph who were blessed by him, Jacob said, "shall be mine," even as Reuben and Simeon. Reuben was the oldest son and Simeon next, but they lost their places as first and second sons, and Ephraim and Manasseh were put in their place. Referring to the Prophet Jeremiah 31: 8, 9, we find that in the gathering time of Israel, God is going to bring them from the "north country" and from the "coast of the earth," "a great company shall return."

They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way [the restored gospel], wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

"Praise to the Lord for the great restoration

Brought by the angel to Joseph the Seer,

Blessed to open the last dispensation,

The church to establish, the gospel declare."

Many times in the prophets Ephraim is referred to as having forsaken the Lord and gone into idolatry, wickedness, and sin; but Ephraim, as are all others, is entitled to the pardoning grace of God when he "returns to God," "his iniquity will be remembered no more." Paul says in Romans 11: 1, 2:

I say then, Hath God cast away his people? God forbid. . . . God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew.

"God is not slack concerning his promise," and therefore we can not doubt his promise being fulfilled to Israel, especially his chosen tribe, his first-born. Jacob says it is to be in the last days. No one will deny that Ephraim had a very important work to do in God's great harvest-field; but by reason of sin and folly Ephraim seemingly, for a time, lost the favor of God. In Zechariah 10:9 the Lord says, "I will sow them among the people: and they shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again." In verse 8 we read: "I will hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased." Another text says, "Ephraim hath mixed himself with the people,"—lost his identity as a tribe; therefore, when Joseph Smith made the claim that he was of Ephraim, his claim was in harmony with prophecy. For it was Ephraim that God was to use in the last days to do "his strange work." It was from Joseph of Egypt that God was to raise up a chosen prophet in the last days; "from thence is the shepherd, the stone of Israel."

We should not overlook the statement of Jacob in Genesis 48:20: "He blessed them that day saying, In thee [Ephraim and Manasseh] shall Israel bless," or be blessed. When? Jacob says in the last days. As quoted above, Ephraim was to remember me in far countries. Countries far from where? Is it necessary to argue the question that the Prophet Jacob meant countries far from where he then was? The thought contained in the language carries us to America, far from the land of Canaan or Egypt.

Moses evidently understood this, for he says in Deuteronomy 33:13, 17:

And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the Lord be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, and for the precious fruit brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, and for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh.

In the foregoing we have a description of Joseph's land, the place where Ephraim was to remember the Lord in "far countries." It would be a skillful writer who could give a better description than did Moses of the land of America. We have already shown where Jacob says (Genesis 49:22) that Joseph's branches shall "run over the wall." Most any worthy historian tells us that in olden times people called the sea or ocean the wall; but we need not depend on historians altogether for our proof. When the tribes of Israel landed in Canaan, the promised land, they received their heritage or allotments of land. The tribe of Joseph was located at or near Sibmah. Bible writers call it the "vine of Sibmah." Isaiah 16:8 says:

For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness: her branches are stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

The principal plant was Ephraim; he went over the sea, to far countries. He went to that part of the great stage of life where in the last act he was to have a leading role in God's great drama. It would have been fatal for Joseph Smith to have claimed that he was of any other tribe than that of Ephraim. But as Job says, "There is a spirit in man and the inspiration of the almighty giveth them understanding."

Paul furnishes an allegory in Galatians 4, in reference to the two covenants; Agar from Sinai, the law of Moses, and Sarah from Jerusalem, the gospel of Jesus Christ. It required centuries of time for this allegory to be acted out. So, also, do I contend and affirm that the story of Joseph being separated from his brethren, lost to them but preserved by his God to provide and sustain his father's house, is a most beautiful and true allegory. That the tribe of Joseph was to be lost, his whereabouts unknown to the rest of Israel; but known and preserved by his God to feed and sustain the Israel of God in the last days, when Joseph would know his brethren (but they did not know him), and meet them as they come from the land of famine hungering for the bread of life, having been fed on the doctrines of men. Having authority from the king he would prepare the feast, fill their sacks with corn, without money and without price, and send them on their journey homeward, rejoicing towards their father's house,—the triumphant kingdom of God!

Had Joseph Smith made claims to any other tribe than that of Ephraim we could reject him as a false prophet. Had he commenced his work as did many of the reformers as a dissenter or a "bolter of the convention" or church, not claiming direct authority from the great King of Israel, we could then brand him as a usurper and false prophet. But his coming was in line of prophecy, his work and doctrine in harmony with the word of God, and the time of his coming in keeping with scripture, the last days, the gathering time of Israel when the angel of Zecharias 2 was to run and speak to this young man; in the day when Jerusalem shall be built as towns without walls, at a time when as Isaiah 29 says that an unlearned man is to receive a sealed book just a little while before Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field and esteemed as a forest. John on Patmos, wrapped in heavenly vision, looked down to future time, even to the end, the judgment day. While in this vision as recorded, 14: 6, 7, he saw an angel coming from heaven to earth with the "everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth," and declaring, "Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come." We can not escape the conclusion that this angel was to come in the last days at a time—the time, when Joseph was to receive his birthright, which is authority from God, the time when he is to have the leading role in the world's great drama of life.

Joseph Smith claimed that an angel of God came to him, and delivered the everlasting gospel; he claimed that an angel revealed unto him "a sealed book" and told him the time had now come when Jerusalem, Lebanon, would be restored and rebuilt "as towns without walls." The unbelief and scorn of the world will not, it can not change the decree of God, nor obliterate that which is recorded in Holy writ!

If professed Christians could only see the beautiful golden thread of truth that is woven and interwoven into this divine drama of human life, and could know in fact that it is a plan perfected from the beginning of time even before the world was, and that the leading actors were foreordained to their respective parts, they would then be free from the sin of unbelief and would not be found guilty of fighting against God. But it is to-day as in the days of our Lord,—“Through ignorance ye did it.”

As to the mission and work of Joseph Smith, I feel like the noble apostle when he declared to the Roman: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Neither should we be ashamed of the work that God has established in these "last days."

"We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the Gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays;
We thank thee for every blessing
Bestowed by thy bounteous hand;
We feel it a pleasure to serve thee,
And love to obey thy commands."

WHEN THE BOOKS ARE OPENED.

The art of writing is one of the best and most useful of the arts known to mankind. It was taught by the Lord to Adam in the morn of the world; for he was commanded to keep a record in his day. And men, wherever they have been taught in the light of the gospel, have kept record; so that out of the book which has been written shall men be judged at the day of judgment, when all mankind must appear before the great, almighty, eternal Father to be judged according to their works or deeds done in this life.

We will suppose it is the judgment day, and all those who have taken upon themselves the name of Christian are up to be judged. They say they have believed and accepted the Bible as their rule of action, to obey God through Jesus Christ, the teacher of mankind. Now they are permitted to explain the reasons for their belief. Yes, they believed in Christ the Son of God. He died and paid it all,—yes, all the debt we owe. And we had good and wise men for teachers; and we believed them. Some of us were sprinkled, others dipped, or poured, not for the remission of sins, but as an outward sign of an inward grace. And we did that believing it was all we had to do. We did not believe in the gifts and blessings of the gospel; for we believed as those good men taught us; so all those things were done away when the apostles of Jesus Christ died, and were no longer needed. Now, when that Bible will be opened, it will surely condemn them, for therein it is written: In vain do men worship Christ, as their Lord, if they do not the things he has commanded. And they have need of no other proof of disobedience than the command of God through Jesus Christ.

Then there will be another class of men who will come up to be judged, who will have believed in three books. Yes, Lord, we followed thy servant, Brigham Young, in all he taught us. We accepted the blood-atonement story, and have seen those who had their blood spilled to save their souls; also that wonderful plan of polygamy; and we wore the holy garments with a hole in the knee and one in the breast, and knew their secret; and Adam, our father and our God, and all the rest of that system. Why we even sang songs to the honor of thy Great Servant. We extolled him high. "God bless our Prophet, Priest, and King, our Leader, Brigham Young." And he is the mouthpiece of God to all mankind, the seer and revelator of his word. Surely we could have done no more to his praise. Aye, and when the books are opened, it will therein be found that this people had forgotten, or taken no heed to the commands of their Creator, through Jesus Christ, but had worshiped a creature of their own kind.

Yes, it will be a great day when the books are opened; for we can open them now and read of the things written to which the sons and daughters of men take no heed, indeed may not know nor care what things are written therein, such as we find in the book of Malachi, third chapter:

And I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not.

The work-a-day world of men say, We do not know any difference between Jew and heathen, saint and sinner. They work us just as hard, jew us just as tight, pinch us just as close, no matter what their profession as to belief and right-living. But one thing we do know, if there is one man meaner than the rest in the way of cheating in time or jewing in wages, that man is a Christian, and as for his loving his neighbors as himself, this we do know! he has no neighbors among working men.

Malachi makes mention of another book that the sons of men know not of, as we read:

Then they that feared the Lord spake often one with another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.

John tells us of another book which is the book of life. And the Nephites were commanded to keep record of all the doings of men; so did the Jaredites. And when the ten tribes come from the north, they will bring books with them; and that which they had written therein would judge their nations at the last day.

We have oftentimes heard it said that when the Europeans first came to America and learned of the Red Men, they were surprised to find them Masons, knowing the secret signs. The books of the Jaredites and Nephites tell us all about these things; but many men are wilfully ignorant, choosing to be wise in their own wisdom, counting the things of God as foolish fables. Much could be written about the books. They are of much importance as a subject for all mankind to study, so that they may be wise in the days of their earth life; that when the books are opened at the last great day of judgment, they may not be condemned as disobedient because of the things written therein.

BILLY SUNDAY'S REPLY.

The Interior (Presbyterian) publishes the following reply, from the pen of Billy Sunday, to the criticisms recently indulged in by some religious publications. Mr. Sunday's reply is entitled to as much publicity as the charges and criticisms received. Mr. Sunday's letter to the Interior follows:

"Knowing the fair spirit of the Interior and desiring to correct an erroneous impression given through the grossly misrepresented statements of the press as to what I said in a speech at Pittsburg before the Presbyterian ministers, I send you this. No man on earth appreciates the work of the minister and champions his cause more than I. I will allow no man to lead me in his loyalty to the church. I will allow no man to lead me in his furious and uncompromising assault upon the forces that sap her power and make her an incubator to hatch the devil's brood. I said many a preacher fails because he has no natural ability; is cold hearted; has ice-water and pink tea in his veins instead of red blood; lacks proper training; studies Christianity as others study science or philosophy. Ministers lack spiritual knowledge—it is theoretical with many; all the knowledge they have of God or Christ is an intellectual conception of some of his attributes that they have learned out of books. They know Shakespeare, Browning, Emerson, and the latest kinks in the new theology dreamed out over some beer mug and amid the tobacco in some foreign seminary. Many a preacher comes intending to do good work, but he finds himself pastor of some godless, worldly church, where his leading members are leaders in nothing but card-playing, dancing, theatergoing society wine-drinking, Sunday golf-playing, novel-reading, fudge-eating, neighborhood gossiping mollycoddles, and when the preacher brings his probe to bear and attacks these sins they tie up their purse-strings and say: 'We don't like that kind of preaching, and if you want to stay, you must preach differently.'

"I don't blame the preacher for his style of work, but I blame him if, when these sins need rebuking and God calls me to do it, then they criticise me and my vocabulary and mannerisms, which are as God-made me. I give God my unfixed-up personality. I am doing my best to make it easier for people to do right and harder to do wrong. I have been used of God to lead over one hundred thousand to stand for Christ. I have been used to make drunkards sober, thieves to steal no more, harlots to turn from merchandising their womanhood for gain to leading pure, upright lives; to turn homes of squalor and want into abodes of peace and joy. No one has more friends among the noble, good, true, pure, in the church and out than I; no one has more enemies among the godless, infamous, useless, in the church and out, than I.

"I never said at Pittsburg or anywhere else that the ministers were 'a worldly, fudge-eating, grafting lot of mollicoddles fit for the bughouse.' That was an infamous, willful, malicious, slanderous lie sent out by some newspaper. I love the church that Christ bought with his own blood, with every drop of blood in my body, with every brain molecule, corpuscle, tissue, nerve, vein, artery, and hair in my head, and am pouring out my life to help prepare her to meet her bridegroom.

"I would like my critics to come forward and show what they have done or are doing. This is the first letter I have ever written in explanation or defense, and I should not have written this, only I want the ministers to know that I would die for them and the ministry and that reports as to what I said were wrong. Yours on the firing line for God, home, and native land."

ECONOMIC EFFECT OF BUGS.

The currant crop is cut down this year by currant bugs and the scale anthracnose is killing the blackberries. Clubroot is affecting the cabbage. Yellow-stripe bugs are biting the cucumber-vines. Potatoes, besides the Colorado beetle, have developed blight and scab. Fruit-trees by the thousand have been killed by scale, moths, and other insects. Chestnut-trees, which have hitherto been immune, have now a fatal parasite of their own. Strawberry patches have been spoiled by the cutworm. A variation of the squash-bug attacks eggplants. Ants have developed a liking for radishes.

Of the many products of the farm and garden which grow in this neighborhood and climate, grass, corn, and lettuce are almost the only ones where a reasonably certain crop is assured through no other effort than preparing the ground, planting the seed and cultivation.

A farmer, truck-gardener or fruit-grower has now to be a chemist and a naturalist in order to succeed. He must understand the different combinations of lime, sulphur, copper, arsenic, and other poisonous compounds which should be administered to each plant at the proper time. If he makes the poison too strong he will kill the foliage as well as the blight germs and the insects. If he applies them at the wrong time he will kill the fruit-blossoms and the pollen-bearing bees and birds. If he does not apply them at all he will have no crop.

Fruit-growers of Oregon and Washington are crowding out near-by orchardists because they stick to fewer things, study them more thoroughly and produce more attractive fruit. It no longer pays to raise potatoes except on a scale big enough to warrant the purchase of expensive spraying machinery.

Insects are forcing a great change in agriculture. The man who has fifty thousand dollars invested in a scientific orchard, with all kinds of machinery and laboratory appliances, will seek to market his own goods, as do the Northwestern fruit-growers, without paying toll to a series of middlemen. He will put his name on his packages and guarantee the quality to be the same throughout, not the big apples at the head of the barrel with nubbins inside, or big strawberries on top of the box with the little sandy ones underneath and a false bottom cutting down the capacity.

The development of the other great industries of the United States has preceded that of agriculture. Agriculture will now have its turn.—The World, New York.

DEADLY EFFECTS OF EXCESSES.

Nothing is known of the value of abstinence in this age. Fasting and prayer as a combination have not been handed down to us by our forefathers. Dissipation of every kind stares us in the face at every turn. The victim of excesses knows nothing of life from its most magnificent viewpoint. He is usually jaded, worked out, and there are very few moments in his existence that he really feels that exhilaration, that buoyancy, that comes with superb health.

Intemperance is a terrible sin. Alcohol has ruined millions of lives and has shortened the lives of millions more. But it is not by any means the only evil. Overeating is a sin that exists in practically every home. It is not here and there—it is everywhere. How many years of your life are you spending for the privilege of stuffing your stomach. Some give twenty to twenty-five years, others from forty to sixty years. Have you figured out, dear reader, how many years of your life you are expending in this manner? There are excesses everywhere in life, but there is no evil, or no combination of evils that has such a terrible effect upon bodily vigor, upon nervous energies, as a continuous habit of eating beyond the needs of the body. You simply wear out the human machine years and years before there is really any need of its showing the slightest sign of weakness.

Learn to eat what you need. Learn to scientifically feed the human machine. Don't dissipate in work. Don't be excessive in anything. Take care of your body. It is the only one you have and you are liable to need it next year and the year after, and in fact, for many years to come. Don't wear out the vital organs by compelling them to handle from two to four times as much food as is needed to fully nourish your body.

Any attention that is given to these very important subjects will be repaid over and over again, hundreds, yes, thousands of times, not only in increased physical health, but your earning power financially will be vastly increased. You will be a better man, a stronger woman, and life will open up opportunities under these changed conditions that would amaze you.—Bernard Macfadden.

In the Morning.

Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning.

A dangerous time is the morning!
There is nothing to fear at night;
Calm are the eyes in closing,
Tired of the urgent light;
The body is healed in sleeping,
Trouble and labor cease,
The soul is in God's safe-keeping,
The heart is in perfect peace.

But who can say in the morning
How fierce will the trials be?
What difficult paths may be trodden,
What griefs may encompass me?
The great, wide world is sunlit;
But I see not an hour before.
What new, strange sorrows or dangers
The future may have in store.

Oh, speak to me in the morning,
Lord of my every day!
Thou art my great Director
As I pass to the hidden way;
If I hear thy voice in the morning
I open the day with song,
Forth shall I go to conquer,
Thy presence shall make me strong.

I think of another morning
After a long, long sleep—
But why should I fear the awaking
Since thou wilt my spirit keep?
Oh, speak to me in that morning,
Jesus, in thy sweet grace,
And I shall have found my heaven
In the light of my Savior's face.
May there be no cloud on that morning;
The clouds are for mornings here;
In the brightness of that great glory
All darkness will disappear.
Oh, sunrise that has no setting,
Oh, day of supreme delight—
God, give me the joy of that morning
After a restful night.—Marianne Faringham.

Unto the Hills.

Then, restless heart, take courage new,
Think of the things which shall abide,
The strength, unchangeable and true,
With which God's own are satisfied.
Thank him whose love his whole world fills,
And lift thine eyes "unto the hills."

Christian life, the conscious daily communion with the Father, is ever an uplifted look, afar from the limitations of self, toward the heavenlies—toward the place of freedom and infinite power, toward the grand realities of God.

Herbert W. Horwill says of the wondrous out-sight of faith:

"In the choice of a house a great deal depends on conditions entirely apart from the building itself. We think much of situation, aspect, outlook. Remove a Fifth Avenue mansion to the heart of the East Side, and there will be little demand for it as a millionaire's residence. Hamerton emphasizes the effect of surroundings on an intellectual worker, and lays special stress on the importance of some refreshment for the eye in the intervals of labor. 'For literary men,' he says, 'there is nothing so valuable as a window with a cheerful and beautiful prospect,' and he instances in illustration Montaigne's famous study in the third story of a tower, itself built upon an eminence.

"A man of active imagination may be stimulated or depressed not only by what he sees, but by what his mind pictures as lying beyond the range of his vision. Thus, Thomas Arnold not only lamented the monotony of the Warwickshire landscape, but complained that eastward from Rugby there was no fine scenery until one reached the Ural Mountains. 'Conceive what you look over, for you just miss Sweden and look over Holland, the north of Germany and the center of Russia.' There was a touch of human exaggeration in the suggestion that he could realize so vividly the dullness of the plains of Europe, but to so cultivated and sensitive a mind as his there was undoubtedly a real element of discomfort in the thought of the renewal, for thousands of miles, of the flat expanse that lay before his own dwelling. We can easily suppose that, though the neighborhood of Rugby had still been lacking in woods and hills, Arnold's spirit would have been not a little cheered if he could have pictured to himself scenes of beauty lying beyond the immediate prospect. If only his windows had faced another way, the same vivid imagination might have brought him stimulus instead of depression.

"So it happened to a certain exile in ancient Babylon. As he prayed he was wont to open his windows; and there came into his ears the din of traffic from the streets of the insolent world-conqueror, and before his eyes the spectacle of the flaunting material greatness of the power that had oppressed the people of God. He opened his windows—yes, but he opened them toward Jerusalem. Then, the palaces and terraced-gardens and lofty walls were as though they were not, for he saw through them and beyond them to the city of the Great King, and above the sounds of the near streets he heard once more the psalms of the worshiping multitude in Jehovah's temple. By the measuring-rod of the surveyor, Babylon and Jerusalem were full five hundred miles apart, but the spiritual faculty can annihilate mere geographic distance. If faith has its insight, it has a no less wonderful out-sight also. A chance neighbor, looking through the same windows, would have seen nothing but Babylon. To Daniel they revealed his own homeland, and, as he gazed, captivity and persecution and the loneliness of exile were forgotten.

"And wherever our dwelling-place may be set, it has windows that we may open toward the New Jerusalem. The inspiration that his outlook gave to Daniel answers the question whether the belief in another and better world makes any practical difference to our existence in this one.

"'Far o'er yon horizon
Rise the city towers.'

"But it is one of the blessings of the Christian's hope that it enables him to see beyond the horizon. How our daily work may be ennobled, here and now, if we will only bring into it the vision of heaven!"—Mary P. Denny in Christian Home.

Letter Department

WHEELING, West Virginia, July 1, 1908.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part of the Lord's vineyard would be read with some interest. We are moving along slowly, but are not making the rapid progress we naturally desire. However, a few have come into the church throughout the mission, and many more are investigating our claims. We have been disappointed in that many of the ministry did not enter upon their fields of labor as early this year as usual, and I am sorry to say that some few have not entered upon their missions yet. We hope that these brethren will soon make a start, or give the reason why they have not honored their appointment.

I wish to say in this connection to the Saints, that the treasury is at a very low ebb, as some of the ministers' families are several months behind in their allowances. If this condition continues much longer, some of our useful and able ministers will be under the necessity of going to work at manual labor to support their families. I have taken upon me to investigate the cause of the deficiency of the treasury, and conclude that it is not hard times with a majority of the Saints, as I know that over two thirds of them are working and have been right along; but it seems to be pure neglect on the part of many in not doing their financial duty, and the strange thing is that those who have the most in many cases pay the least, so the burden falls upon the few willing ones, who often make great sacrifices, when others should help share the burdens. Again, many of our members do not take the church publications, but literature of a worldly nature is often lying around in abundance. If all the members would unite in their efforts there would be sufficient in the storehouse of the Lord, and the Bishop and his agents would not have such a difficult task in supplying the demands made upon them by the needy poor and the families of the ministry, and the ministry would go forth more cheerfully in the work assigned them. Now, dear Saints, awake to your duty and opportunity, and help replenish the depleted treasury by sending in your tithes and offerings, and remember that this is a day of sacrifice and a day which calls for valor.

The disasters which have come upon the earth of late ought to evidence to the Saints that the Lord is moving in an effort to direct the attention of the thoughtless and careless to the fact that we are living in the last days, and that the end is fast approaching. The axiom, "A hint to the wise is sufficient," can be appropriately applied, in the condition of the world at present. Will we take the hint and act accordingly?

Some time since I was at Glen Easton and was pleased with conditions as I found them. We have quite a number of young men there who are quite active, and are making themselves useful in the service of the Lord. Such brethren as Gordon, Jasper, Gomerand, William Dobbs, and the Hall brethren, also James Craig and Henry Dobbs, are standing by the work by personal effort and wise counsel. Bro. Craig stands very high as a minister in the estimation of the people for miles around in that country, and has done much in the last nine years in removing prejudice and bringing our church work to the front. He has almost reached the allotted time of three score years and ten, but is still active and willing to labor in the service of the Lord. In all his ministerial labors he has had the unselfish and sacrificing help of his excellent companion, who is dearly loved by Saint and sinner.

I had the pleasure of calling at Steubenville and meeting with the Saints. I was pleased with the activity of the Sunday-school and branch workers. Bro. John Edwards is president of the branch and is ably assisted by Brn. Richards, Pace, and Joseph Edwards. Bro. Adolphus Edwards is an ever ready helper, and is also foreman of one of the important departments of a large tin-mill. I was kindly cared for during my sojourn there, neither did they forget that it requires money to enable the minister to go and come.

The Saints there, as well as many other places in the mission, will miss Elder Rees Jenkins who was sent to Wales this last conference, accompanied by his wife. We are confident that both will make their influence felt for good in their new mission.

The Wheeling Branch is increasing in membership by baptisms occasionally. The largest mill here, employing six thousand men, has been idle for eight months, with no prospects of resuming operations in the very near future.

We had the pleasure of uniting in marriage last evening, at the church, Bro. Gomer Liston and Sr. Matilda Neutzling, the latter a very active and efficient Sunday-school worker. Bro. Gomer is the son of William and Betty Liston, who are well and very favorably known to the traveling ministry who have passed through or been stationed in this city. The church was crowded with their many friends, both in and out of the church, which was evidence of their popularity. The ceremony was conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder C. Edward Miller, Sr. Louis Serig playing the wedding march; Bro. Matthew Liston, the groom's brother, being best man, with Sr. Edith Serig, cousin of the bride, as the bride's choice for maid of honor. Brn. Myron and Clarence Thomas acted as ushers. Bro. C. Edward Miller is pushing the work in the district and meeting with success.

POPE VALLEY, California, June 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church for over a year, but I am quite isolated and have not been inside of a church since I joined. I am trying to live faithful and true. I have one sister and two brothers who are Saints. In September an aunt and I are going to conference in Oakland.

Dear Saints, as I am a sick girl, I would like to have you pray for me that I may receive my health again and that I may continue faithful to the end.

Your sister in the one faith,

NELLIE TOMBLINSON.

MORRISON, Oklahoma, June 27, 1908.

Editors Herald: Our campaign of mission work for the year has begun in earnest. I learn that Brn. Simmons and Irwin have baptized seven at Wilburton. The men who have reached the field are active, and the opposing forces also are not asleep.

Our debate just closed at Horning with the so-called Church of Christ (Campbellite), in which we feel that a good work was done for our cause. Bro. Yates was my moderator and one Mr. Darnell acted as chairman. He was a fine man and rendered good service. Mr. Gorbet was a very kind and considerate, as well as a gentle, opponent. He said some ridiculous things about "Joe Smith," but we answered them and had plenty of time to get our position before the people. We made many friends and made the name of Latter Day Saint honorable in that community.

Mr. Gorbet took some very bad positions that lost him much prestige, for I drove him from one position to another all through the debate. Here is a sample of his weak points: Jesus Christ is never to stand on this earth again; the Jews are never to return to Palestine; the church was never to be warred against; no apostasy; no restoration. In fact he claimed there is no church on earth. He said he was a member of the church of heaven. I brought Bible proof for all of our belief and showed the crowd that his assertion was all the proof he had. All the outsiders, and even most of his own church members acknowledged that we won the victory. The chairman said it was wholly one sided, that we had won everything.

We have only a few members there, about seven, I believe, and the Christian Church has a large congregation. Bro. Yates remained there to preach over Sunday and the writer went to Terlton and preached a week. There we have a fine band of earnest workers, about fifty, and the young people take hold of the work with an earnestness equal to the best I ever saw. Surely God will bless them. I came on here to Morrison to be with the Saints over Sunday. Some are discouraged over loss of crops by flood. Oklahoma has sustained much damage this year by heavy rains causing floods all over the State.

As Bishop's agent, visiting Saints and trying to carry out the temporal law in this field, I would be pleased to hear from any one who can help. We do not expect impossibilities, but a cooperative effort, whether little or much, is what moves the great work onward. Brethren, one and all, let us be coworkers together with God.

Remember the dates of the reunions, the one at Freedom, Oklahoma, in Woodward County, beginning August 7, and the one at Ripley, forty miles east of Guthrie, beginning August 21. We hope to meet as many Saints as can come. Let us be cheerful in our warfare, and patiently meet any and all trials, and we will conquer by the help of God.

I expect our next debate will be at Fanshaw with a Church of God man, one I. W. Yandall.

As assistant minister in charge I will try to answer all calls for preaching as fast as possible. My permanent address is Piedmont, Oklahoma.

Ever for Zion's cause,
HUBERT CASE.

LEICESTER, England, June 3, 1908.

Dear Herald: We are always made glad to read your pages. Many times our hearts are filled with joy and gladness with the good news you bear. I have now been a constant reader for twenty years, and am not able to get along without the HERALD; it seems to me meat and drink. How so many get along without it I fail to understand.

Well, I am very happy to say that we are still rejoicing in the glorious latter-day gospel. The angel's message is still to me a glorious reality. It reveals to me a true and loving Father who meets out blessings to us in this our day as he ever did in the days of the long ago.

I have been blessed many times in my ministrations as an elder of the church. I can assure you, dear Saints, that God has many times visited us in this part of the world. We are not able to report much progress, and many of you are aware of the uphill fight we have in this boasted Christian country. To them their ways are better than God's ways. We have many disadvantages. As a rule we are few in number and are not able to get the best places to meet in, and this has been and is a great drawback to the work. But under these circumstances we are doing the best we can.

We have all been made sad by the death of our esteemed Brn. Dewsnup, Sr., and Caton, who have stood as pillars for the work in this country for many years. Many of the Saints in America will feel saddened with us. If those that have crossed the sea should see this we should be glad to learn of their welfare.

Ever praying for the progress of the work,
In gospel bonds,
149 Wolverton Road. WILLIAM ECCLESTONE.

CRESCENT, Iowa, July 6, 1908.

Editors Herald: Last night it rained very heavy, flooding the low bottom land around here and in some parts of the country the wind was the cause of some damage.

On the Fourth the Saints and friends of this neighborhood gathered in a beautiful grove for celebration, in connection with the Sunday-schools in and around Crescent. We had a very good program, the children taking part with honor to the cause and credit to themselves. Bro. James Lapworth and wife arranged for the exercises, and it was a day long to be remembered with pleasure by all.

On the fifth we were pleased to preach at Oakdale in the morning, Bro. Hayer doing the talking in the afternoon. We baptized three pretty little girls in the afternoon. Truly the Lord was pleased, for the good Spirit was present in a marked degree. The confirmation took place at Bro. Joseph Butler's, who made us right welcome with his good cheer. Bro. Peter Olson is the superintendent of the Oakdale Sunday-school and is doing a good work there, as the school seems to be making itself felt for good in the neighborhood. He has the help of other good workers. We should all be workers with God and cast in our might to help along this glorious gospel.

With love to all,
WILLIAM SELF.

HUNTINGTON, West Virginia.

Editors Herald: I and my husband are the only Saints here that we know of, and if it were not for the comfort that the Autumn Leaves and the HERALD bring, we would starve for spiritual food. What a joy and comfort they bring and how we long for them to arrive.

We go to a Holiness Sunday-school and have a lively time over the lessons. They have told us that they believe all the Bible, old and new. They have the Lord's supper at eleven in the morning, and feet-washing they do not believe in at all. Baptism they say is not essential, and when they baptize at all they do it by sprinkling.

One Sunday we studied the crucifixion, and I ask them where Jesus' spirit was while his body was in the tomb. Our teacher, the pastor, said there was no positive account. I told him Peter gave account and also that Jesus said to the thief on the cross that "this day thou shalt be with me in Paradise." He said he would investigate, would see the superintendent, and would straighten my mind on that point. So last Sunday the superintendent got up and read something that his brother minister in Cincinnati had written him about the subject referred to. It amounted to this, that Jesus went down to the pit and got on the Devil's neck and gloated over his victory, etc. My husband arose and said, "You take your preacher's word for that. Why not take the apostle's word? He said he went and preached unto the spirits in prison that were disobedient in Noah's time." The superintendent railed and said that was the Roman Catholic doctrine. My husband asked him what the difference was so long as it was Bible doctrine. "You say you take all the Bible and that is part of the Bible." The superintendent then got mad and said he did not believe it. And so you see how much they believe of the Bible.

We have in all six churches within six blocks of us, and others a little farther on. Rev. Torrey, of Chicago, was here four weeks and claimed eight hundred conversions. Other denominations claim numerous conversions. Our town has about twenty to twenty-two hundred population. I am acquainted with a number in each church and can see no difference since their so-called conversion. I think these other churches average up pretty well. What one leaves off the other takes up. I wonder how they can claim to be Christ's followers and do what their theological teachers tell them to do. And I cease to wonder that there are so many denominations when I think of their inconsistencies, and that the colleges are turning out machine-made hireling preachers by the dozen.

I am glad to belong to a church that takes all the word of God and is willing to take anything he may see that we need. I only wish I were able to do more in a financial way to help spread this reasonable plan of salvation.

As we have no meetings here we attend all the other meetings, and if we were not posted in the gospel through the Bible and the HERALD, sad would be our lot. We never let a chance slip to tell them about our faith and doctrine, and I recently had quite a controversy with a Campbellite lady about the authority of their ministers.

There is a question up before us and we will ask some of the Saints to answer it for us. Did Paul say, and if so, where, that he knew a man caught up to paradise whether in the body or not, he could not tell.

I ask all the Saints to pray for us that the work may be opened up here, or that the way may open for us to live where we can attend meetings among the Saints. It is over three years since we heard a sermon from one of our elders. We have never had an opportunity of partaking of the Lord's supper since we joined the church four years ago. That was in Jackson County, this State, and my husband was then appointed a teacher.

We would be pleased to have any of the elders call on us. Our address is 206 Eighteenth Street.

Your sister,
LOTTA TAMPLIN.

WHEELING, West Virginia, July 6, 1908.

Editors Herald: There was a time when we were able to take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign, the latter from the first. A few years ago my husband and I discussed the matter as to which paper we would drop, as we found it hard to pay for all three of them. I said I could not think of doing without the HERALD. He said he dearly loved the Ensign and could not do without it, and so it was decided to drop the Autumn Leaves. Both of us missed it, for we loved it, and we also loved each other.

I am called upon to give up the nearest and dearest I had on earth and much sooner than I had expected. This has been the greatest sacrifice of my life, but I do not mourn as those who have no hope, for I know my husband died firm in the faith. This is a blessing and a comfort to my soul. In his suffering he sought the hand of God through his servants, both here and at Steubenville, Ohio, receiving relief through administration. On the Sunday before he died he requested the Saints to remember him in the meetings, and afterward he was administered to and received a blessing and bore a strong testimony to the truthfulness of the work. He said it was the Lord's will to remove him and he was willing and not afraid to die, as he had always tried to live his religion and had never harmed others. He was a good husband and a loving father, a faithful member of the church, and a law-abiding citizen, having the respect of all who knew him.

To us were born ten children; three sons died in infancy, and the second youngest son and youngest daughter are yet with me, which is a great comfort. I crave a deep interest in the faith and prayers of the Saints, especially with those who are known to me, that I may be able to endure this hour of trial and live firm in the faith. I know this work is true and will stand. I have received many blessings and testimonies of the restored gospel. I have also had some bitter trials, but I thank God that his Holy Spirit has always come to me in power to help me in my hour of need. I also thank God that all my family are in the faith, and that all to whom they are married are in the faith also. The testimony of my soul to-day is that they have their father to thank for this, for he always taught them and showed them the way.

May God bless and strengthen all his children, is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. HENRY WINSHIP.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. William R. Armstrong, secretary of the British Isles Mission, writes under date of June 23: "You will have heard no doubt that Elder Rushton landed safely and is now hard at work again. I regret to state that Elder W. H. Greenwood is in poor health, owing to recent operations for polypi in the nose and throat."

News From Branches

OMAHA.

Bro. J. M. Baker, city missionary for Omaha and Council Bluffs, has brought his family to Omaha, and they are at home at 3015 Franklin Street.

Considerable interest has been manifested in the street-meetings held at Jefferson Square, by Bro. N. C. Enge. These services will continue indefinitely. Work is also being carried on in South Omaha by Bro. Enge and assistants among the branch workers.

The local Religio gave a musical program Sunday evening, June 28. It was most excellent and was well attended.

Wednesday evening, July 1, Bro. C. B. Woodstock addressed the Saints on Graceland College in general and the industrial department in particular. On account of threatening weather the attendance was comparatively small—a pity, for the subject is one which should interest both young and old. Bro. Woodstock's able talk drove home this fact to the minds of his hearers and impressed them with the value of the work.

Thursday, July 2, the Religio held its semiannual business-meeting and officers were elected.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

Our capital city has again enjoyed another annual Chautauqua season. The aim and object of the Chautauqua is to present to the public, at a small cost, the very best talent that is obtainable in the way of public speakers, and entertainment which is above criticism.

Among the public men of national reputation who spoke before the Chautauqua were Governor Johnson of Minnesota and Governor Hanley of Indiana.

Reverend W. A. Sunday, according to the estimation of the people, was one of the most luminous stars during the entire ten-day session. The management in announcing his appearance on the program, said of him, "He is the highest priced attraction ever booked for the Des Moines Chautauqua, with one exception. Reverend W. A. Sunday is the world's greatest living evangelist. He sweeps everything before him. No sham can stand under his powerful invective. He is a dynamo of energy, a trip-hammer of power, a consummate actor, a peerless leader, an impassioned orator, a genuine man, in deadly earnest, bent on a great mission." We thus mention him, because the world calls him great. He numbers his converts, during the years of his evangelical work, at ninety thousand persons. He, with all others, will be weighed in the balance. He will be rewarded according to his works. We laud him not as others do; we condemn him not as others have done.

Hans P. Freece had for his subject, "Mormonism and the Mormons." Mr. Freece was born and raised in the Mormon church, is a son of a polygamist family, and is a man of fine appearance. He is now secretary of the National Reform Society of New York City, and is now bitterly opposing the Utah church. His father is also an apostate from it. Notwithstanding the denial that polygamy is now taught in Utah, Mr. Freece said, "The Mormon church is as much polygamous as she ever was. Joseph F. Smith, its president, is a criminal, for he is living with six wives to-day, and the church is teaching polygamy as strong to-day as she ever did before." Mr. Freece said in his lecture, "I except the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," and in a personal interview he assured us that all he had to say concerning the Reorganized Church was complimentary.

He has published a book, bearing date of 1908, under the head, Letters of an Apostate Mormon to His Son. Mr. Freece, Sr., being an apostate from the Utah church, has written to his son of his experience in the church, going from Denmark, crossing Iowa and the plains in 1859, going into polygamy, seeing its evil effects, and leaving the church. In perusing the book we note these significant statements, "Do you know that the Mormon church has gone astray?" "No man can be a believer in the Book of Mormon and be a polygamist." "The Book of Mormon, once supposed to be the foundation of the Mormon church, is now considered dangerous for faithful Mormons to read. I know that from experience. I read it over and over again until the church could not hold me. A Bishop told a brother if he did not stop reading the book he would become an apostate. This same brother was afterwards brought to trial for heresy, and when he attempted to read his answers from the Book of Mormon he was compelled to put it away."

Another Chautauqua character of more than ordinary interest, was Shungopavi. The management in announcing him said, "He is a full-blood Moqui Indian, and gives Indian magic, Indian folklore, and white man's magic." Shungopavi claims to be of the Aztec race, and while in the city he was quoted in one of the daily papers as saying, "When Columbus discovered America he thought he had discovered a new country, but he was mistaken, for it was a very old country, many centuries old, a language as old, and a civilization of unknown centuries. The Aztec race has a symbol language that is centuries old. Part of it was a dead language to countless years back. The people of Europe did not people this country. The Aztec race was the first. This is now shown by certain manners and legends which the Pueblo and Moqui Indians have among themselves. Centuries ago they were of the same race. The Aztecs are not at all like the Tepee Indians. They are an altogether different race of people. The Aztecs came up from South America. People are waking up now and they send men of learning to Arizona and homes of the cliff-dwellers to study their customs and symbol writing. They are really surprised to find what a really fine civilization the Aztec Indian had many thousand years ago."

It was a delight to meet Shungopavi personally. He is the "medicine man" of his people, ready in conversation and intellectual. When asked for the tradition which he had concerning his people coming from South America, he declares a willingness to express himself, said that it would be the subject of an evening conversation, but that he would not care to take it up only at a time when he felt the influence of the spirit that he claims guides him in much of his work, that spirit being supernatural power. He also claims to be a descendent of the cliff-dwellers, and while conversing with him we wondered if we were sitting face to face with a man who had Nephite blood in his veins?

A. A. REAMS.

SPokane DISTRICT.

The semiannual conference of the Spokane District, held June 13 and 14, was well attended. The following missionaries were present: I. M. Smith, S. S. Smith, F. J. Chatburn. The latter was elected president of district. Three branches reported, Spokane, Sagle, and Roslyn. The Rosetta and Columbia River Branches failed to report. There was one baptism. Conference adjourned until December.

After conference Bro. S. S. Smith and W. W. Fordham went to Roslyn, Washington, a coal-mining town located in Cascade Mountains, three hundred miles west of Spokane. This is the greatest coal-mining town in the State. Estimated value of mines, $40,000,000. The population is principally foreign who care but little for religion. The Roslyn Branch record shows forty members. Many have moved away leaving present membership about twenty. Bro. Frank Holmes, Bishop's agent of Seattle District, is president of branch; John R. Allen, teacher, and Thomas Holmes, deacon. The Roslyn Sunday-school is in good working order. The future of the branch depends largely upon the efforts put forth by the priesthood and members. Six preaching-services were held. The Saints were strengthened, and weekly preaching-services were arranged for. The branch would be pleased to have Bro. F. A. Smith call when passing through westward. Bro. Joseph Chapman is a member of the Roslyn Branch, and is wide awake to the interests of the gospel.

The next place visited was Ellensburg, Washington, a village of about four thousand inhabitants, located in a beautiful valley twenty by thirty miles, well under cultivation and irrigation. About a dozen members living on ranches within easy distance of town where a hall has been rented and a Sunday-school was recently organized with Elder H. P. Hansen superintendent. The members are unorganized at this place, however, with Elder James O. Sheldon and N. V. Sheldon (the latter a Seventy, who has just arrived from Dow City, Iowa) the prospects are good for a branch in the future. Bro. F. A. Smith, please take notice. The local papers gave space for write-up and notice of meetings. Bro. William Sheldon has begun a large house and barn which will cost about $5,000 to complete. Crops and fruit are good this year. Irrigation is king in the Yakima Valley. Seven services were held at this place with best of interest. Bro. James Winegar and wife Clara are making themselves useful in gospel work. Others are awake to the great cause there.

James Story and Henry Smith were the next to be visited, located at Page, Washington, on the Snake River, they being busy gathering scanty crops as it was very dry there. Conditions were not favorable to hold meetings there.

The next place called on was Brn. B. R. and J. E. Turnbow in the prosperous Palouse County, where wheat averages from thirty-five to fifty bushels to the acre. A failure in crops is seldom known. Fruit in abundance. The Palousers turn out well and give best of attention. Elders always welcomed by members and nonmembers. The Turnbow schoolhouse is well arranged for meetings. George Turnbow has just completed a barn fifty by seventy-five, and is filling it with hay. Hay worth from fifteen to twenty dollars per ton. You may hear from Spokane District again if this does not find its way into the waste-basket.

A century ago French was almost accepted as a world-language because it had become the second language of every educated man, and because a book in French was accessible to all men of education everywhere. To predict the possible acceptance of English as a world-language means no more than this: that English may in time become the second language of all educated men everywhere, whether their native speech is French or German, Spanish or Italian, Russian or Japanese—Brander Matthews in July Century.

Mt. Ayr and Leon Chautauquas.

Residents of Lamoni and vicinity will have the opportunity this season of hearing some of the world's best attractions as they have been grouped into seventeen programs of exceptional merit for the Chautauquas at Leon and Mount Ayr, both under the management of the Redpath Chautauqua System, and both commencing Tuesday, August 4.

Among prominent speakers engaged are Captain Hobson, hero of the Merrimac; Doctor Thomas E. Green, Lyceum's best orator; George L. McNutt, the "Dinner-pail man"; Governor Warren G. Harding, of Ohio; and Opie Read, America's most popular writer, author of The Jucklins. Six great musical combinations appear in twelve big musical programs. The evening program will include such members as Ernest Harold Baynes, the famous naturalist; Doctor Thomas E. Will, Secretary American Forestry Association; and Doctor George Lamonte Cole, who uses ten native Pueblo Indians to illustrate his lecture, "The Cliff-dwellers." Residents of Lamoni and vicinity should provide themselves with season tickets in advance as they are purchasable of Mount Ayr or Leon merchants at one dollar and fifty cents, but at the gate will cost two dollars.

The one billion five hundred million people, more or less, alive on the earth to-day are but a mere handful compared with the countless generations who are to proceed from their loins in the future. All posterity now slumbers in our bodies, as we did in those of our ancestors. They demand of us the supreme right and blessing not only of being born, but of being well born, and they will have only curses for us if they awaken into life handicapped by our errors. Their interests should dominate all our lives, and we should live for our children, for our duty of all duties is not only to keep the life torch burning, but to brighten it a little if possible as it is passed along to our children's children. . . .

Happily there is a growing sentiment that those who are capable owe a sacred duty to the country and the State to contribute to the population and that those infected by transmissible diseases must abstain from so doing. Only the complete mother is the complete woman and only the complete father the complete man. Tertullian said, "The soul is restless till it finds its home in God." It is no less true that the soul of woman is restless till it finds the fulfillment of its deepest desires in motherhood. Is there anywhere one normal woman of thirty-five or forty, even though she be a feminist, who would not in her heart of hearts prefer a husband, home, and above all, children of her own to any or everything else the world has to offer? The wife enters, but only the mother graduates from the great college of life, and nature has no more magnificent procession than the gradual blossoming of wifely into motherly love. Without this there is arrest and immaturity. . . . The deepest instinct of every true woman's soul is thus to transmit life, and the profoundest and most inconsolable woe is the prospect of childless old age and death ending thereby the long chain of heredity that runs back to the dawn of life.—G. Stanley Hall in July American.

No. 2.

HISTORY AND PRESENT STATUS OF AN INTERESTING EXPERIMENT IN COMMUNISM.

The rules governing membership in this society are of interest. Each member on joining the society is obliged to give to the community his entire personal and real property, and for such payment into the common fund each member is entitled to a credit on the books of the society and a receipt signed by the president and secretary of the board of trustees. The contributions to the common fund of the society have ranged from the smallest imaginable sum up to fifty thousand dollars.

On joining the society the member is entitled to free board and dwelling, to care and support in case of old age or sickness, and is further entitled to an annual allowance from the common fund ranging from twenty-five to fifty dollars, and in some cases more. The allowance is fixed by the trustees, and the variations therein cause no little jealousy and discontent among the members. This allowance is made in the form of a credit at the village store, the individual receiving pass-book or coupon-book. The individual realizes that at the end of the year there is a day of inspection and a day of judgment, and he is prone to be cautious in his purchases. Moreover the community has its eye on him, and if he is extravagant, or foolish in the expenditure of his annual allowance, he feels the force of popular disapproval. The community aims to attain, as nearly as possible, to a condition of absolute equality.

The historian states that some years ago a certain talented member appealed to the First Brethren for a larger sum annually on the ground that his services were of unusual value to the community. The reply of the first brother was very striking. He sat by an open window overlooking a meadow where a half-witted lad was tending his flock of sheep. Pointing to him the brother said, "Doth he not perform the task allotted to him faithfully and to the utmost extent of his ability?" The discontented brother replied, "Yes."

"Go thou then, my dear brother, and do likewise. Be thankful that the Almighty God hath endowed thee with greater gifts, for therein thou hast already received a fuller allowance. Go render unto the com-

Life is a chain and our days as links thereof. We must make our days strong so they will bear the weight and responsibility of the years to come.

Each religion has a type of its own, to which it adheres during its whole growth and development.—Clarke.

No Christian ever learned to be a bigot by sitting at the feet of Jesus.—Doctor Washington Gladden.

Good morals are nothing more or less than what they achieve.

munity thy best service and offer up a prayer to the heavenly Father for his special kindness and gracious gifts to thee."

The spirit of this answer is worthy of the careful consideration of Latter Day Saints.

The individual who withdraws from the society, or is expelled, may receive back the amount that he invested when he joined the society, together with accumulated interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent, and if the board of trustees consider it just, they will make him some further allowance; but according to the constitution that he signed upon joining, he is not entitled to any remuneration for services rendered while he was a member.

They have made no especial effort to make converts, and receive new members with great care. They consider numerical strength of no advantage unless it is accompanied by corresponding merit. From time to time they have received additions from the ranks of those who are enthusiasts in schemes of sociological reform. These individuals have not fitted into the community, and have been a discordant note. The community owes its success largely to the fact that they have a common nationality, a common religion, and are one in blood and in sentiment. The exceptional person who is finally permitted to become a candidate for membership enters on a period of probation, signing an obligation to labor faithfully, to conduct himself according to the rules of the society, and to demand no wages. If at the close of this period of probation, he is found in full accord with the religious belief of the society, and in every other way seems a desirable person, he deeds his property to the society, signs the constitution, and becomes a member.

The growth of the society has been almost entirely from within. They succeed in holding their own people well, and it is said that sixty per cent of the young people who have wandered away into the world have returned.

The question of marriage has always been one to vex those engaged in communistic enterprises. Some communities have advocated free love; some, like the Shakers, have forbidden marriage; others, like the Icarians, have made marriage compulsory. At first the members of this society were opposed to marriage, but they have modified their views, largely through the influence of Christian Metz, and have come to look upon marriage with a degree of tolerance, believing with Paul that it is well to marry, but better to remain single. Individuals who are united in marriage are considered to have fallen to the lowest of three spiritual planes, and must gradually work their way up. A young man must not marry until he is twenty-four years old, then he must receive the sanction of the elders, and after receiving this sanction must wait one year. The application is first made to the resident trustee who in turn places it before the Great Council for their sanction. If the applicants are found fit, physically, mentally, and spiritually, the young people are considered promised, and the wedding day is set one year hence. In case the union is not approved by the elders, if the young people are at all like young people the world over, we suspect that the marriage takes place without much delay, though the historian is silent on that point.

The community does not believe in divorce for any cause. The newly married couple begin their housekeeping in two rooms which have been assigned to them by the society, frequently in the house occupied by the parents of one or the other. With the growth of the family larger quarters are provided by the elders.

The community has endeavored to maintain the home spirit, believing that to destroy the home is to destroy the community. On this subject the historian makes the following comment:

The cheerless cloisters of the Ephrata Community (notwithstanding the religious fervor of the early brothers and sisters, commonly regarded as the essential bond of successful communism) are empty to-day. One by one the Family Houses of the True Believers of the Shaker Communities have been closed. Even the great five-storied home of the Centre Family of Lebanon has been deserted; and the United Society of believers is represented by only a small group of the old guard. The Oneida Community with its Mansion House 'as a peculiar form of Society,' to quote one of its own members, 'is practically no more.' In truth the whole host of brotherhoods that have set sail on the communistic sea with the 'Unitary Dwelling' and 'Great House' ideal (despite the undeniable saving of labor and expense of such a plan) have miserably failed. The devoted men to whom the management of the Community of True Inspiration has been intrusted for the past century may not have been students of social science; but that they have been profound students of human nature is evidenced on every hand.

At more or less regular intervals in each village there is a kitchen. This is a little larger than the ordinary dwelling, and here the meals for the families in the immediate neighborhood are prepared and served. From sixteen to fifty persons eat at one kitchen, the number depending upon the location. The places are assigned by the resident trustee. Each kitchen is superintended by a woman appointed by the elders, who is assisted by three of the younger women, each taking her turn in working in the dining-room, preparing vegetables, cooking, and washing dishes. The general rule as to service in the kitchen is two weeks on duty, and one week off. The older women do not work in the kitchen as a rule, consequently it is sometimes necessary to hire help from the outside. These dining-rooms are furnished with long, narrow tables, seated with wooden benches, and the men, women, and children eat at separate tables. The members of the community are not given to fads in diet. They eat meat, vegetables, and fruit, and cereals, use tea and coffee, raise tobacco and make their own cigars, manufacture their own wine and use it in liberal quantities. Breakfast is served at six o'clock in the summer time, and a half an hour later in the winter. Dinner is at eleven-thirty. Supper is served at six o'clock in winter time, and at seven in the summer. Also they indulge in a lunch in the middle of each half day. Those who work in the fields carry their lunches with them, while bread and hot coffee are served to those who work in factories.

Care is taken not to overburden the women with hard work. Few women work in the factories, and those who work there are given the lightest of work. Those having children under the age of two years are not required to take any part in the general village work. Children over three years of age and under school age are amused in kindergartens or nurseries set apart for that purpose.

In connection with each kitchen is a vegetable-garden of from one to three acres. The superintendance and care of the garden is intrusted to the women, but the heaviest of the work is done by men. Care and respect are accorded to the aged members of the community. Unproductive members who are unproductive because of age or infirmity are given privileges and comforts equally with the others.

Members of the community do not approve of voting, or taking any part in politics, excepting when the interests of the community are at stake, on which occasion they vote as a unit.

It will be noticed that the hours of labor in most of the departments are quite long, but the laborers work in a leisurely manner, taking pains, however, to do their work well. They have none of the forms of amusement familiar to the world,—no dancing, no cards, no games, music, parties, sociables, concerts, lectures, or entertainments of any kind. Pleasures are discouraged, apparently simply because they are pleasures. Prayer-meeting is held every evening in the week, various services on Sunday, and every member is expected to be present at every meeting.

Their agricultural work is carried on according to modern and scientific methods. They purchase the best machinery to be obtained. Every department of labor has its superintendent who in turn has his lieutenants. The general plan of the field-work is determined by the board of trustees, but superintendents are responsible to the board for the further execution of their orders. They have succeeded in furnishing employment for their people beyond the point of success, and are obliged to employ from one hundred and seventy-five to two hundred men from the outside world. This they regret, as it is the means of contaminating the morals of their members. The hours of field-labor are from half past six to eleven o'clock in the morning, and from half past twelve to six in the afternoon. Frequently one department of industry is obliged to call upon some other department for aid during the busy season. They reap the advantages of organization, and the ability to command a large force of men at the time and place when it is needed. In agriculture they produce barley, rye, oats, corn, potatoes, and onions. They do not attempt to raise live stock or agricultural products beyond what is necessary for their own support. They have found manufactures more profitable than agriculture, and during past years have disposed of a part of their land on that account, as at one time their estate was larger than at present.

The products of their woolen-mills are known throughout the entire business world. These mills have been in operation for fifty years. They use annually over half a million pounds of raw wool. Most of this is purchased from the market. There are about one hundred and twenty-five persons employed in the woolen-mills. Of this number only about sixteen are outside help. They have developed some very skilled laborers, and the historian says, "It is deemed best by the Great Council not to disturb the peace of mind of the members of the Community by a too intimate knowledge of the value of skilled labor." They have ten men on the road as salesmen or "drummers."

The capacity of the mills is taxed to the utmost by the demand for their product. It is the aim of the society to manufacture good goods, and their honesty has secured them a market as wide as the nation. The hours of labor in the woolen-mills for the greater part of the year are from seven to eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and from half past twelve to six o'clock; but during the busy season the mills run from half past four in the morning to half past six in the evening. When the men work more than the usual number of hours they receive extra compensation, sometimes in credit, sometimes in cash, and sometimes in preferment of position.

Boys of from thirteen to fourteen years of age who are about to leave school are employed for a few hours each afternoon to learn a trade. If they show aptitude, they are carefully trained, and are given every opportunity to work up, but if their employment is not agreeable they are at liberty to choose some other line of work.

In Old Amana there is a calico printing establishment where four thousand five hundred yards of calico are dyed and printed every day. The patterns for the calico are designed by a member of the society. There are from twenty-five to thirty-five men employed in the calico printing establishment, ten of whom are outsiders.

The flouring- and grist-mills employ about sixteen men, five of whom are outsiders. There is a printing-office and book-bindery at Middle Amana. The job work for the stores and mills, the text-books used in the schools, hymn-books, and religious tracts are printed at this establishment; but the society publishes no newspaper or magazine or official organ of any kind.

In the three villages of Amana, Homestead, and Middle Amana, there are licensed pharmacies. The Inspirationists were the first people west of Chicago to begin the manufacture of pepsin. Perhaps as a result of their five meals per day, as we are told that it is the aim of the community to make and produce everything as far as possible that is needed by its members. In addition to the before-mentioned industries, each village has its shoemaker, tailor, harnessmaker, and even watchmaker. When these men are not employed at their trade they work in the factory or in the field. They also have slaughter-houses, dairies, and other institutions to supply the wants of daily life. In the early days they operated several breweries for the manufacture of beer, but with the passage of the prohibition law these were closed down in 1884. Their output of wine allows each individual about twelve gallons. A wine-keeper, often an elder, has charge of the supply, and each member is furnished with a wine-ticket.

While the laborers work carefully and apparently feel an ownership and an interest in everything that is done, they do not work swiftly, and some years ago when a grain-elevator was built by outside contractors, and members of the community worked side by side with other laborers, it was found that their best bricklayers could do only two thirds as much work as was done by masons from the city.

The schools of the community are a part of the county public school system, but they have their own teachers, and they conduct them in their own way. Between the ages of five and fourteen the boys and girls attend school six days in a week and fifty-two weeks in a year. The sessions of school open early and close late. The otherwise long and tiresome sessions are broken up into three parts. First the period wherein all the common branches are taught; second the hours of play when the children play their German games; and the third period wherein manual training and the trades are taught. During the winter time the younger boys and girls are taught to knit and crochet. In the summer time each child is taught to cultivate a plot of ground, for all the school gardens are planted and cared for by the children. When the time comes for the scholars to graduate, the occasional lad who has capacity and character is chosen by the Great Council to be a pharmacist, or doctor, or to perform some other important labor, and receives professional training at some good school of the world, the expense being borne by the community.

Many other items of interest regarding this peculiar people might be mentioned, but perhaps we have covered those points that are of especial interest to us as a people.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR IN HIS OWN DEFENSE.

HE IS SUPPOSED TO SOLILOQUIZE ON THE SUBJECT OF POLYGAMY.

[The following article appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune, Sunday, July 12. It probably is of sufficient interest to our readers to justify its publication in the HERALD.—HERALD EDITORS.]

It is time that my voice was heard in Utah in my own defense. Surely no one has more occasion to be heard in his own defense than I; and I nowhere more than in Utah, where Gentiles daily reproach me with the crime of polygamy and Mormons daily seek to justify themselves in that crime by the use of my name.

Thousands of people in Utah have accepted the doctrine of polygamy simply because they were told that I taught it; they regarded me as a prophet and were too ready to accept all that some one told them I taught.

If such people will think a moment they will discover that the most important question is, Is polygamy a true doctrine? My connection therewith is secondary. A little investigation will convince them that polygamy is not a biblical doctrine. To those who have reached that point I address myself in what can not be other than a successful effort to clear myself of any connection with the evil.

It may be questioned why my thoughts should appear in an organ of the Gentiles. Let me ask, Where in Utah is there a church publication or a church pulpit that would be open even to "Joseph the Martyr," if it were known that therein he would attack the doctrine of polygamy? I speak through the only avenue that is open.

To those who will follow me in this defense, let me say that there is not an authentic published word that ever came from my pen or tongue behind which a polygamist can hide. All my published utterances touching the marriage question absolutely prohibit such a contingency. From the time I began to present religious teachings to the world I realized that because of the peculiar claims I made and because I became a leader of men, I was a public man, in the public eye, whose sayings, teachings, and even deportment were subject to public scrutiny and criticism, and justly so. I stood before the public, taught in public, and none can justly say that I was anything but fearless in presenting my convictions. It was not my nature to conceal or cover up. What I stood for was boldly presented. On my record as a public man I should be judged. In other words, my public record should outweigh whispered tales and old womens' fables. I am willing to be judged by facts.

The Book of Mormon was published in 1830. In that book, in the second chapter of Jacob, the following language is found:

For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the scriptures: for they seek to excuse themselves in committing whoredoms, because of the things which were written concerning David, and Solomon his son. Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might raise up unto me a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph. Wherefore, I, the Lord God, will not suffer that this people shall do like unto them of old. Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and hearken to the word of the Lord: For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none: For I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts.—Wherefore, this people shall keep my commandments, saith the Lord of hosts, or cursed be the land for their sakes. For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people; otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things.

It has been charged that the closing words of this quotation leave a "loop-hole" for the introduction of polygamy. My Gentile friends say that I introduced that clause, "For if I will, saith the Lord of hosts, raise up seed unto me, I will command my people: otherwise, they shall hearken unto these things," because I had it in mind to introduce polygamy at a later date. To this I would reply that it is inconceivable that a man who contemplated introducing polygamy as a tenet of his church would write a book intended to be a text-book of his church and in it pronounce the doctrine of polygamy an abomination.

My Mormon friends say that God inspired the Book of Mormon and that he introduced that clause because he had it in mind to introduce the doctrine of polygamy at a later date. To this I reply that it is inconceivable that God would ever at any time or anywhere command his people to practice that which he had said was an "abomination" in his sight.

Some other interpretation must be placed upon this clause, one that will harmonize with the balance of the text. It is clear that no one, either man or any one reading the above quotation that the Book of Mormon looked with favor upon polygamy or expected that it would ever become a church tenet.

The fact must at once be apparent to the mind of any one reading the above quotation that the Book of Mormon says that polygamy was "abominable" before the Lord.

My Gentile friends who charge me with being the author of the Book of Mormon must admit that if that be true then those words expressed my opinion of polygamy in 1830. I will prove a little further on that that opinion never changed.

My Mormon friends, who believe that God was back of the Book of Mormon, must admit that if that be true, then the words quoted above expressed God's opinion of polygamy prior to 1830; and as God never changes that is his opinion still. Their strenuous efforts, then, to prove me a polygamist are simply attempts to prove me radically, monstrously out of harmony with God. If they succeed they simply prove that I was not God's spokesman, and the entire latter-day dispensation is for ever branded as a fraud.

February 9, 1831, the voice of God speaking through me to my people was:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit, and if he repents not he shall be cast out.—Doctrine and Covenants, Utah edition, 42: 22, 23.

Those who charge me with concocting these revelations rather do me a favor in one way because they thus place all the honor of having given such an excellent law upon my shoulders. They ascribe these lofty sentiments solely to me. They must admit that such pure teachings could not have emanated from a brain filled with lust.

On the other hand, my Mormon friends who profess to accept this revelation as coming from God, ought to be willing to admit that I obeyed its mandates; and they themselves ought to obey them. This commandment positively prohibits him loving any other woman in the marital sense. The individual who permits his heart to wander and his desires to go after other women shall lose the Spirit and shall be cut off. If this law were enforced in Utah to-day some high dignitaries would be excommunicated instantly, because they show no inclination to repent; the first part of the penalty is self-operative—the Spirit has been withdrawn.

The above quotation expressed my opinion of the sanctity of marriage in February 9, 1831, and does yet express it. God gave the law; I say amen.

About a month later another revelation was given containing the following:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation.—Doctrine and Covenants, Utah edition, 49: 15, 16.

The language here is plain and unequivocal. It limits the number of contracting parties to two (they twain). Any attempt to evade the force of this by equivocation or sophistry will be made only by those who are inoculated with the virus of polygamy and concubinage.

That I accepted it at its face value is shown by a notice that appeared in the Times and Seasons, February 1, 1844, volume 5, page 423:

NOTICE.

As we have lately been credibly informed that an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints by the name of Hiram Brown has been preaching polygamy and other false and corrupt doctrines in the county of Lapeer, state of Michigan.

This is to notify him and the church in general that he has been cut off from the church for his iniquity; and he is further notified to appear at the special conference on the sixth of April next, to make answer to these charges.

JOSEPH SMITH,

HYRUM SMITH,

Presidents of said church.

This notice appeared in the official organ of the church over my signature less than five short months before my death. It shows that I still classed polygamy among "false and corrupt doctrines." I had not changed my mind since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, with its statement that such a doctrine was "abominable" in the sight of the Lord. I still indorsed the statement before quoted from the Doctrine and Covenants, that a man guilty of lusting after other women should be cut off.

Now I submit that such statements coming from my pen and published during my lifetime indubitably set forth my opinions correctly and should in no way be set aside by statements made long after my death about what somebody heard somebody else say that I said regarding marriage.

If any one seeks to dodge the force of the above quotation by arguing that said Hiram Brown was excommunicated because he did not have the authority to preach polygamy and not because we regarded the thing itself as evil, I cite them to a notice that appeared about a month later, signed by my brother Hyrum, who was closely in my confidence and spoke for both.

NOTICE.

NAUVOO, March 15, 1844.

To the Brethren of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, living on China Creek, in Hancock County, Greeting: Whereas, Bro. Richard Hewitt has called on me to-day to know my views concerning some doctrines that are preached in your place, and states to me that somehow your elders say that a man having a certain priesthood may have as many wives as he pleases, and that doctrine is taught here; I say unto you that that man teaches false doctrine, for there is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here. And any man that is found teaching privately or publicly any such doctrine is culpable, and will stand a chance to be brought before the High Council, and lose his license and membership also; therefore he had better beware what he is about.—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 474.

This shows clearly that the doctrine was not one that was right or wrong according to a man's station in the church, high or low, but it was wrong in itself, and any man in any position in the church who advocated it was in danger of excommunication. There were those who were advocating it and had I lived they would have been brought to book for their crimes.

In proof of this assertion I quote the words of Elder William Marks, written fifteen years after my death, addressed to Elder Isaac Sheen. The events of which he writes occurred in June, 1844. He was at that time president of the Nauvoo Stake and president of the High Council. He was much troubled regarding the spiritual condition of the church. In vision he was shown that some people high in authority in the church had become corrupt. The words that I desire to quote are as follows:

A few days after this occurrence I met with Brother Joseph. He said that he wanted to converse with me on the affairs of the church, and we retired by ourselves. I will give his words verbatim, for they are indelibly stamped upon my mind. He said he had desired for a long time to have a talk with me on the subject of polygamy. He said it eventually would prove the overthrow of the church, and we should soon be obliged to leave the United States, unless it could be speedily put down. He was satisfied that it was a cursed doctrine, and that there must be every exertion made to put it down. He said that he would go before the congregation and proclaim against it, and I must go into the High Council, and he would prefer charges against those in transgression, and I must sever them from the church, unless they made ample satisfaction. There was much more said, but this was the substance. The mob commenced to gather about Carthage a few days after, therefore there was nothing done concerning it.—SAINTS' HERALD, volume 1, pages 22, 23; Church History, volume 2, pages 733, 734.

The reader will note that there is no reason to doubt Elder Marks' testimony. There was nothing strange in my taking him thus into my confidence, because of his high official position. Again, that which he said I told him is quite in line with my sentiments, as clearly proved by previous quotation from my writings.

It will be noticed that again in my conversation with Marks, only a few days before my death, I pronounced the doctrine of polygamy a "cursed doctrine," quite in line with the statement in my notice in the Times and Seasons in which I called it a "false and corrupt" doctrine. Have I established my opening statement that the adverse opinion that I held of the doctrine in 1830 never changed? If not, there is nothing in documentary evidence or in logic, and no man's reputation is safe.

The testimony of Bro. Marks has been used in an effort to prove that polygamy was practiced in Nauvoo during my life, with the idea of discrediting me. I have no objections to its being thus used, because even the casual listener will discover that, granting that the vice had gained a foothold, it was under a church ban and I as a man and as the president of the church was doing what I could to root it out.

Elder Marks' veracity will compare favorably with that of any in Utah who are likely to challenge his testimony. Moreover my Mormon friends will remember that we have the word of the Lord on record concerning him. In a letter written to the Saints of Kirtland during the year 1838, from which I quote, I penned these lines:

I would just say to Bro. Marks that I saw in a vision while on the road, that whereas he was closely pursued by an innumerable concourse of enemies, and as they pressed upon him hard, as if they were about to devour him, and had seemingly obtained some degree of advantage over him, but about this time a chariot of fire came, and near the place, even the angel of the Lord put forth his hand unto Bro. Marks, and said unto him, "Thou art my son, come here," and immediately he was caught up in the chariot and rode away triumphantly out of their midst. And again the Lord said, "I will raise thee up for a blessing unto many people." Now the particulars of this whole matter can not be written at this time, but the vision was evidently given to me that I might know that the hand of the Lord would be on his behalf.—Church History, volume 2, page 147.

If the people in Utah will accept the testimony of Bro. Marks they may be numbered among the many people whom he was raised up to bless. If, as in the past, they choose to form a great concourse of enemies, seeking to blast his reputation and mine, they may be sure that they will fail and he will triumph, because his testimony is pure.

I desire to mention only one more witness in my behalf, my true, faithful, well-beloved Emma. Her truthfulness was never challenged by those who knew her heart. If now challenged I can face the challenger with statements made by representative men of the dominant church in Utah that will compel any good Mormon to halt proceedings calculated to impeach her as a witness. During her last illness she was visited by her son Joseph, her son and mine, and questioned concerning the matter. Face to face with eternity she gave the following answers to the questions propounded:

Q. "Did he not have other wives than yourself?"

A. "He had no other wife but me; nor did he to my knowledge ever have."

Q. "Did he not hold marital relation with women other than yourself?"

A. "He did not have improper relations with any woman that ever came to my knowledge."—SAINTS' HERALD, volume 26, pages 289, 290; Church History, volume 3, page 257.

Such was her consistent testimony often repeated, as can be testified to now by living witnesses. In my life I wrote of her as my "faithful, unchangeable Emma," and after my death I have been made glad to hear her voice defending me against the vile slanders of professed friends.

I am aware that my Mormon friends, and Gentile friends as well, will present two lines of evidence in rebuttal of what I have here presented. First they will cite the so-called revelation on celestial marriage, now published in the Utah edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants under my name. This, as is well known, was not brought out till eight years after my death, at which time Brigham Young read it at a general conference in Salt Lake City. At that time he said that he had kept the document in secret all those years. Repudiate that document and brand it as a forgery.

It squarely contradicts my oft-published sentiments regarding marriage. I appeal to the sense of justice of the reader, and declare that such being the case, it should not be fastened upon me unless it can be traced back to me by witnesses who can substantiate Brigham Young's statement beyond a reasonable doubt. Such witnesses have never been produced. I will pay my further respects to this alleged revelation at a later date.

The second line of rebuttal will consist of the testimony of women in Utah who have testified that they were my wives. There are, or were, several of these women. Were their testimony really true, I might have been more reconciled to my early departure from this earth life. However, they propose to pursue me through all eternity, claiming that they were sealed to me for eternity. But I have not yet encountered any of their shades wandering through the regions of the blest. Can it be that they have been assigned to some other sphere? I will also pay my regards to their testimony in the near future.

I am fully aware of the exact meaning of my charge against Brigham Young and others who brought forth the so-called revelation on celestial marriage. I am aware that I place them under the charge of deception, fraud, and conspiracy. I am aware also that where a crime is charged a motive must be presumed for that crime. The motive in the case of Brigham Young and his immediate associates is found in the following facts: On the twenty-ninth day of August, 1852, when they brought this revelation to light, they were deeply imbedded in the mire of polygamy and concubinage. They desired to claim the sanction of heaven for their marital ventures. Not one of them was a prophet. Brigham Young himself is on record with a statement that he was not a prophet nor a son of a prophet. The revelation must be ascribed to some one who was known to have been a prophet. There was every incentive for them to do what they did, and thus not only escape the blame of introducing such a doctrine themselves, but at the same time gain the prestige of my name among the great body of their followers for the thing that they had promulgated.

In closing this part of my defense let me appeal to the editors and readers of the Tribune and to the members of the Mormon church: In the future, if you wish to quote me on the marriage question, quote from my statements published during my lifetime, and not from some document which appeared after my demise, and with which, even according to the claims of my Mormon friends, my connection can not but be considered doubtful.

The Mormons and Gentiles in Utah are alike inconsistent. The Mormons in that they present me to the world as a prophet of God and at the same time aver that I did things that were directly opposed to the teachings of the inspired books that God gave to the world through me. The Gentiles are inconsistent in that they pass over my well-known utterances regarding marriage and accept the testimony of certain people in Utah that I was a polygamist, the while they admit, nay, charge, that these people are unreliable witnesses on any other point in controversy.

Gentlemen of the Gentile community in Utah, you can not incriminate me because you have impeached your own witnesses. Gentlemen of the Mormon church, you are in conflict with the written word.

GRACELAND'S FACULTY STRENGTHENED.

T. J. FITZPATRICK.

Graceland College alumni and friends of that institution will be pleased to learn that Professor T. J. Fitzpatrick, of Iowa City, has been secured by the trustees for the school year of 1908-09. This will be especially good news to the residents of Lamoni and vicinity, as the professor and his estimable wife are well remembered and much respected by them. Professor Fitzpatrick will have charge of the higher branches in mathematics and the sciences, his specialties being geology and botany. We know of none better fitted for such work.

Professor Fitzpatrick is a member of several associations of scientists, being a Fellow of the Iowa Academy of Sciences, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and is connected with several historical societies, having for some months acted as collector for the Iowa State Historical Society, with headquarters at Iowa City.

As a book collector he has been highly successful, having an exceptionally large private library which will aggregate perhaps ten or twelve thousand volumes, two of his specialties in this direction being Linnæus and "Mormonism." He is said to have one of the best collections of Linnæus' works in the United States.

The college trustees are to be congratulated in securing the professor, for they thereby place this department on an equality with any in the state of Iowa. The HERALD extends its best wishes to Professor and Mrs. Fitzpatrick and assures them a welcome on their return to Lamoni.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Under the heading "Hymns and poems," we are going to give occasionally selected and original poetry and hymns, both old and new, such as we believe are of real merit, and will be appreciated by HERALD readers.

Elder Alvin Knisley writes from Bisbee, Arizona, regarding the work in that field, as follows:

"On account of the unsettled condition in Mexico we have been deterred from going far into the interior. Bisbee is still our headquarters and we write from thence (July 12). We continue to work among Mexicans and Americans. The few Saints here are very spiritual and that excellent condition of union prevails that has many times within the last two months evoked from the Master a verbal recognition when we assembled together. On one occasion the brethren were told substantially to 'trust in me along financial lines as well as spiritual and I will provide for you,' etc. They were told that as there was already a financial depression which would become worse insomuch that for their deliverance it would become necessary for them to meet together in fasting and prayer to God. A canker will break out that political parties will not be able to heal. Faith, repentance, baptism, equality of mind and heart must precede equality in temporal things. Legislation will not bring it. It is gratifying to behold Israel moving toward the center posts. It is regretful to see any moving away. An intelligent sister in Independence related to me a dream or vision. She found herself beside a railroad track. She was in some company. While walking leisurely along, they met a loaded train pulling in the opposite direction. She recognized that it had a number of Saints on; that it was pulling westward. When she had inquired what the Saints were doing there and where they were going, she was informed by a voice that they were heading for the west to take advantage of the speculative opportunities held out in that region, thinking that they would come back in time for the redemption of Zion. But, the voice informed her, they will find themselves mistaken. They will be too late. Zion will be redeemed in their absence.

"My abode is with Bro. John Farley and wife, quite recently married. Sr. Farley will be remembered as Miss Addie Condit in Idaho and Utah where she is extensively known. They have a comfortable home on the mountain, of which I have been a welcome sharer the past two months. Perhaps they have sympathy for me because that for so many years and until last January they were like I am now."

It may be of interest to our readers to learn that there are fifty-nine business institutions,—banks, stores, shops, factories, etc.,—in Independence, Missouri, controlled by Latter Day Saints.

One of the yellow journals of recent date advises parents to spank their children by "mental suggestion," something after the idea of healing by mental suggestion. Most parents will hesitate to adopt that method because most of them have tried it on other people's children, that being as far as they dared to go, and the results have not been very satisfying.

The "Question bureau" of the Toledo Weekly Blade, Thursday, July 9, 1908, contains an item that will interest our people, as follows:

I am an old subscriber, but rarely ask questions. Will you please tell us something about the Reorganized Church of the Later Day Saints?—T. M. B., Morgantown, West Virginia.

The Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is a continuation of the church which was organized at Fayette, New York, April 6, 1830, with six members. It was an anti-polygamist organization and was effected by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and others. Joseph Smith was chosen president. From the time of organization the church rapidly increased. After the death of Joseph Smith, Brigham Young became his successor. While at winter quarters near Council Bluffs, Iowa, in December, 1847, Young assumed the Presidency of the church, and led his followers to Salt Lake Valley, where he introduced such doctrines as Adam-god, blood-atonement, and polygamy. None of these had been accepted by the church or taught by its authorities during the life of Joseph Smith. In 1851 a number of persons and local organizations, some of whom had stood aloof from all factions, started a movement that resulted in a conference at Beloit, Wisconsin, in June, 1852. This conference renounced all allegiance to Young and others. The church has always been aggressive in its fight against polygamy. The organization has a membership of about fifty thousand. It is prosecuting missionary work throughout the United States, the Canadas, Australia, New Zealand, Society Islands, Sandwich Islands, the British Isles, Scandinavia, and other countries.

Men have often endeavored to substitute a system of ethics for the dynamics of a personal faith in God. But such efforts have generally resulted from or preceded a weakening of conventional morals and a degeneracy in society as a whole.—Matthews.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The chorister found himself minus an organ at the Sunday evening service in the park. But that did not seriously interfere with the musical program. The choir and congregation made the old song, "God is marshalling his army," ring out loud and clear on the still night air. It was an inspiring song; and it was an inspiring spectacle to see "both the aged and the youth" hastening toward the meeting grounds until an assembly to be proud of greeted the preacher. Elder Paul M. Hanson was the speaker; and we are safe in saying that the majority of those present, if not all of them, were well repaid for attending the service. One striking argument of the sermon was that if man were mentally capable and could start right and reason on and on he might at last devise a gospel exactly like the one God has promulgated, and would be led to institute similar ordinances, such as baptism, etc., every principle and ordinance of the gospel having a logical reason for existence.

President John Smith was the speaker at the Brick Church Sunday morning. In the afternoon the funeral of Elder John D. Bennett was held from the church, Elder Heman C. Smith being the speaker. Bro. Bennett died Saturday as the result of injuries sustained from a fall received the day previous. In his boyhood days Elder Bennett was a member of the Shaker society. He was baptized into the Reorganization in 1863 by Elder E. C. Briggs and was ordained an elder in 1864. He has been a resident of Lamoni for many years.

Graceland College museum is lately in receipt of some Indian relics. The first is an ax found by Frederick Judson in 1902 while plowing in his garden at Walworth, Wisconsin, and was presented by his father, Frederick Judson, through the hands of Bro. Aaron Allen, July 15, 1908. This ax is a perfect specimen of exceeding lightness in weight and of a dark color. The latter consists of five good specimens of arrow-heads found by Aaron Allen, of Lamoni, on Pottawagamie battle-grounds just northwest of Hartford, Michigan, and presented by him July 15.

The reunion of the Lamoni Stake is announced to begin August 21 and extend over two Sundays. It will be held at the usual place, on the reunion grounds south of town. These grounds have been rented by the committee for a term of five years and have been put in excellent shape. Good speakers have been secured and all other necessary arrangements have been made to assure a successful reunion; that is, providing the Saints have made or will make the necessary spiritual preparation. Good grounds, good tents, good speakers, good meal service, are only accessories; without proper spiritual conditions the reunion will fail.

Elders' Note-Book

MISSION WORK IN CITIES.

Much has been written of late on the subject nearest to the heart of every true missionary, "How to secure the attention of the people to our message?" Much of interest has been presented, and many ways suggested, but I am free to confess that no one way is the best in the abstract sense; that way is the best that is suggested by the Holy Spirit, and I think that this idea has been emphasized by several who have written. Then again there are places like there were in the days when Jesus preached, where he could do but little among the people because of their unbelief.

Every place has its peculiarities, and I think the cities have more of them than anywhere else. In some cities you find the Saints ready and willing to open their homes to cottage meetings, and spend their time inviting the people to such services; in other places there is an unwillingness to have the homes occupied with preaching-services, or to invite the people to a private house. I have labored in both places. Many have been convinced of the truth by hearing the word in private houses. There are other places where homes have been occupied, but the people would not come because the meeting was being held in a private house; there are other places where the people do not wish to go to halls, and would much prefer to attend services at a private house. In some cities the Saints are willing and anxious to go out on the streets, or anywhere that the servant of God may decide is best to try and reach the people, even willing to go out in the highways and hedges; but there are other places where the Saints feel a timidity about helping in street work, and but little can be done unless there are those who can assist in the song service.

In some cities there are those who can and do assist liberally with their means so that extensive advertising can be done, and halls rented; there are other cities where the Saints are not able financially to thus assist, even though they are willing, and then again there are those who are able and not willing to spend their money to do very extensive advertising; and then there are places where such advertising as may be done effectually in other places would not be of any great advantage.

City missionary work can not be done effectually without means and willing helpers and those who can be depended on to be present to assist when needed. There are in most places those who are willing to help, but their labor is such that they can not be present, or if present they are so wearied with the excessive labor they have to perform that they are unfitted to assist to any great extent.

One who has charge of missionary work in a city should have the perfect confidence of all, and so labor as to bring no justifiable reason for losing this confidence. He should have such confidence in God that should there be criticism of the work done, he will be assured that God approves of the effort made, and move on in the line of duty as led by the Spirit, trusting that God will, sooner or later, bring about that which will justify him in his course, even if it be not till the judgment day. He will have need of patience, that after he has done the will of God, he may secure the promised blessing due to the faithful laborer. He should be so humble that God will continually be a helper and give the encouragement needed, however much the opposing forces may seek to frustrate the best laid plans. He should be in close touch with the possibilities of the Saints where he is laboring, be subject to these possibilities, and arrange his work accordingly under the leadings of the Spirit. He should be in close touch with the work of the branch officers, and the auxiliaries of the church, and so far as possible use them to assist in the work intrusted to all, and yet not impose too great burdens upon others, and especially not ask others to do that which he is not willing to take a part in.

God has said that "no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care." (Doctrine and Covenants 11: 4.) The missionary should study to keep himself in this condition, and study to use those only that are trying to bring themselves to, and keep themselves in, this condition, for the reason that no other can assist in this work. Since this work is a missionary work, and its general officials are those under especial missionary responsibility in all the world, either by reason of their office, or by appointment, every local organization is an auxiliary to this one great responsibility of spreading the word of God, and thus representing the Spirit of the Christ, the Great Missionary, and the one without which we can do nothing, and the Spirit that must govern every one in the body of Christ to be his in fact, for, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."—Romans 8: 9.

When I read the very interesting articles of my brethren relative to their missionary efforts, I study to ascertain how much of it I can use when taking into consideration the conditions that I have to work with in the locality where I am laboring, and the capabilities of the Saints in meeting the obligations necessary to put the suggestions into practical operation; and I then seek the wisdom that cometh from God to select from the many good suggestions that can be made use of, wholly or in part, and how to modify each suggestion that it may be adapted to the work required to be done.

In cities where there are auxiliaries to the church there should be chosen those to have charge who are willing to labor under the direction of the branch and missionary authorities in that particular city where they are, so that the labor may be together. Each one should have such an interest in the success of the work that they will be willing to suggest any improvement in the work to be done, and leave their suggestion to be acted upon by those in charge, having faith enough in God to believe that their prayers and the prayers of their brethren and sisters ascending in unison for the direction of the Spirit to be given to those having charge will be answered; and if those in charge see that it would not be wisdom to carry out the suggestion be just as willing to labor along the line the Spirit may direct the ones in charge to labor as if they had carried out their suggestion.

The missionary should be a very spiritual man, and while in secret he may seek the Lord often, he may also inspire the spirit of prayer to be exercised by all who are interested, and at times resort to fasting and prayer in unison with all the Saints in the locality of the work to be done. His faith should not waver, even if the results anticipated are not realized, and he may have to endure some severe criticism because the results are not what should have been expected. He should leave the results with God, and so should all who are interested. Even though at times he may be directed to minister contrary to what he had anticipated, he should recognize that God's ways are not man's ways, and though our individual judgment might suggest a certain way of doing the work, and the Spirit should suggest another way, the Spirit's direction should be followed, and then if no immediate or apparent results follow he should be satisfied to let God do his work through him as an instrument in his own way. We are not our own, and should at all times realize and acknowledge that God has the right to have his work done according to his will.

Because some do not see immediate results they become discouraged, and begin to doubt whether they were led by the Spirit, though at the time they were fully assured of the source of direction. This has been the experience of every one who has preached the word. Some times they have been led very peculiarly to preach, differing from their outlined course, and while they were ministering the word were filled with the Spirit, yet soon afterwards, they began to be doubtful, and were made sad because of the doubts they had permitted to enter.

The minister for God can not rely on the pleasure he may give men, either in the church or out of the church, as to the efficiency of his service for Christ. Paul said, "For do I now persuade men, or God? or do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."—Galatians

1: 10. If we do not please men we shall expect to hear criticism, and should not be disappointed if we do, but whether criticised or not, if God approves of the work you are doing at the time it is being done, that should be sufficient satisfaction; however, always take notice of the criticism sufficiently to see whether there is any merit in it, and whether there is or not, consider the one offering it as doing so with an interest in seeing the work done in a better way than they think it has been done, and the way they possibly would have done it. We should do as Paul advised Timothy to do, under the direction of the Spirit, irrespective of what may be the results which we or any other may have anticipated, which advice was to "preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine."—1 Timothy 4: 2. Also follow the advice of Peter, who said, "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear"; always remembering the manner in which the answer should be given.

With a longing to see the ministry of the church endowed with greater spiritual power and humility,

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

CARRIE A. THOMAS, AUTHOR OF THE WELL-LOVED HYMN, "IN THE LIGHT."

SR. CARRIE A. THOMAS.

"Let us peacefully dwell with our brethren,
Being neighborly, upright, and kind,
Ever putting our faults before us,
And those of our neighbor behind."

My sister, Carrie A. Thomas, was the oldest daughter of Horace and Sally E. Church, being born at Mantua, Ohio, September 7, 1839. Her childhood was without particular event except that in the winter of 1844 and 1845 our mother's half brother, Justus Morse, came to visit at father's, and he being a Latter Day Saint and a high priest in the church, the winter was spent in discussing the claims of Joseph Smith and of the Book of Mormon. Father was early in life a Seventh-day Baptist, and mother a Presbyterian, both of the strictest sort, and it was only after this winter's argument, closely contested, and the reading of the Book of Mormon through five times, and fighting every step of the way, that father gave up and accepted the truth of the latter-day gospel as taught by the church.

After thus becoming acquainted with the church and its Book of Mormon, my sister took a great love for the reading of the book, and read it through no less than four times while a girl at home. She was a lover of the book and the story it told of God's love to his people on this continent, which was in close harmony with the teachings of the New Testament Scriptures to his people on the old continent. In the old family Book of Mormon are still to be seen the marks she made on the inside of the back cover to the book as each time she completed the reading of the book. This was the particular incident of her childhood, and which continued to young womanhood; for she imbibed the sacred teachings in her youthful heart. The love of God and his truth became the dominating trait in her character. Her supreme delight was the study of the Book of Mormon, with which she became very familiar. Its precious teachings were so indelibly impressed on her memory that she never lacked a testimony from it when needed. As she grew in years she did not cover her light under a bushel; but in word and by precept did she try to impress the precious promises of the gospel upon others, and to labor to lead them to the "true light of God."

Her childhood was mainly spent in Ohio, but in 1849 and 1850, on a trip with the family to Rhode Island, she became acquainted with her cousin, Charles N. Brown, and the correspondence that ensued later made him acquainted with the gospel plan to that extent that he obeyed its teachings in time, and in his later ministerial work wrought well, and many sheaves were brought into the fold, and many still live to love his memory.

My sister being the oldest of the family that lived, and our mother of very delicate health much of the time, early in her life it became necessary for her to take an active part, and with her loving disposition she soon became a prominent factor in the good and well-being of the family. Her tender care of her younger sister and brothers was more the part of a tender mother than simply a sister, and she seemed more to us as the former than the latter. With all her diligence in the duties of her father's home she found time to acquire a comfortable schooling in all the common branches of that day, and also others not so included at that time, namely, astronomy, algebra, geometry, etc., and she took pleasure in the study of the wonders in the heavens, as well as the wonderful formations of the earth on which we dwell, or to delve into the depths of the higher mathematical problems. This diligence placed her in early young womanhood in a position to act as a school-teacher, and she was successful and able to conduct schools of that time where others failed to manage or control, much to her own credit and the good of the schools.

In these early days schools were not graded as they are to-day, neither did they have many helps and school accessories as do the schools of our time. The average school of those times was composed of children running from the tender years of the primary department all the way up to young men and women, oftentimes twenty-three and twenty-four years of age, who would spend the winters in school, making a mixed attendance many times harder to manage and difficult to teach, all being in the same room and all under one teacher; and when oftentimes a school of this kind where one or more teachers had been very unofficially dismissed by the scholars in a hilarious manner, she was called on to take it, and in so doing was able to bring order out of chaos and success out of failure.

Early in life a love for art asserted itself, and she loved to place on paper with her pencil the imaginations of her soul, many of which were true to nature and a pleasure to her many friends. In the production of one of these occurred an incident long remembered by her, as it taught a lesson she never forgot.

On this occasion my sister had been requested to mend a torn place on the knee of her father's pantaloons before he went out for the labors of the day. The day was the usual one of duties and cares, and with it all she found time to place on paper the beauties of nature as it all appeared in her mind's eye, while in the open of the forest scene she had drawn, she drew a man, "the crowning work of God's creation." She had wrought well, her mother and children were tenderly cared for, the household duties nicely done, and this drawing accomplished with the rest, and when father arrived at the close of the day she made haste to show him the bit of art she had found time to produce. The appreciative parent could but admire the diligence and faithfulness of his youthful daughter in the performance of her duties and the seeming talent which was developing, and as he admired the drawing while she showed it to him, perchance he was thinking how to impress upon her a lesson he desired her never to forget, for he looked upon the drawing very closely, as if something were lacking, whereupon he observed, "And have you drawn a hole in the knee of his pants?"

This mild rebuke was enough for her. She had neglected this little duty and used the time with her pencil at a favorite pastime. But she made haste to prepare the pantaloons her father had asked her in the morning to mend. However, the lesson remained with her through life, as evidenced by her actions and an occasional recital to us children of the incident. The drawing was neatly framed and presented to father and adorned the walls of the sitting-room the remainder of his life.

THE FOREST PATH.

While the father admired the drawing he was thinking how to impress on her a lesson that he desired her never to forget.

Just prior to the removal of the family from Ohio a visit was received from mother's cousin, Millicent Bissell Thomas, and her son, Orlin B. Thomas, then a boy of some eleven summers, while Carlie was one year his junior. This was their first meeting, but they did not meet again till some ten years later and both families were located in Illinois, whereupon they again met and the young couple spent many happy hours, weeks, and months together; and the months lengthened into years. Both were lovers of music and drawing, consequently each was interested in that which was uppermost in the mind of the other. Both were likewise diligent in their studies, preparing for the schoolroom as teachers, and later both entered upon the duties of their choice, and the studies and experiences of each were of interest to both; so the time passed busily on. But this was not all. Both were likewise of religious parentage, but my sister had learned the true message of the everlasting gospel, and with all else that occupied their minds they found time to discuss these topics fully, and both became conversant with that which was very dear to her heart and that of her parents. She with clear and well-grounded reasonings from the Scriptures not only removed all barriers between the lovers on religious matters, but both became one in the love of the true and everlasting gospel, and subsequently, after having removed to Michigan, the two hearts were joined in one on April 14, 1864, and immediately their efforts were combined to make them a home in the new portion of the State in Allegan County, later called Hilliard's Station.

Having yet no knowledge of the Reorganization, together with father, mother, younger sister (whose husband also learned the true and everlasting gospel of the "girl he married,") they formed a little band of home worshipers on each Lord's day; there were also two surviving lads, four older ones having been in childhood snatched away by the ruthless hand of death, as also the youngest sister, a prattling child. They settled on the little home farm (forty acres) in the woods of the Wolverine State in seclusion from both the Christian and unchristian world, and in their little assembly sang the songs of Zion, sought the true and living God, and in that earnest, fervent prayer, secured to themselves the choicest blessings of a loving Father's hand.

To the happy union of the couple who are most prominent in our story was given on the 18th of April, 1865, a chubby boy to gladden their home, and in the words of the husband and father still living, "No stately walls ever domiciled a happier trio than did that neatly hewn log-cabin.

Early in 1867 some one of this little band of "Saints," lacking only the baptism constituting the new birth, saw in the Detroit Tribune a brief account of a people at Plano, Kendall County, Illinois, calling themselves Latter Day Saints, under the leadership of Joseph Smith, son of the martyred "Mormon prophet," and that they did not believe nor practice polygamy. The father of her whose life we briefly sketch immediately wrote to the leader of the little band at Plano, saying, "Send an elder; here are six of us waiting baptism." Responding, Bro. E. C. Briggs on the 13th of February, 1867, rapped at the door of the cozy little frame dwelling of "Father Church." Father Church immediately sent one of those little "brothers" over to break the news to her whose heart was too full for utterance. She fairly flew the beaten path of but a few rods and rushed in so completely overcome with joy that she dropped into a chair and burst into tears, not even waiting for the introduction and hearty handshake that followed.

On Saturday evening Bro. Briggs was introduced to three ministers of various denominations who were holding a protracted meeting in the school-house, as also to many of the neighbors. None asked his church name. He bore a touching testimony, and was invited to preach next morning, after which the large crowd followed a mile to the water where the six were baptized.

That evening in the little frame house a divine call and ordination and vote placed the father of our heroine in charge of the little flock. The wheels were set in motion, the work rolled on till the little band numbered thirteen, one of whom prophesied, "It shall yet number six times six and more," which was subsequently fulfilled to the number of forty-two. A sisters' aid society was organized, of which our sister was chosen president. The productions of her pen appeared in the church papers and were always entertaining and instructive, and oftentimes her writing was in poetry, which she loved to write. At times when writing a letter to a friend she would send them a poem which was cherished as a keepsake for many years. The Saints' Harp contains two of her productions, No. 1076 and No. 1078, "Mournful the time, and dark the day of Zion's desolation," and "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light, in the light." These are familiar to the readers of the Autumn Leaves, so I need not to give them in full except what was the fourth and next to the last verse of the latter, it having been omitted when published in the Harp, but sung and appreciated much by those who knew it.

"But we first the law obey
In the light, in the light,
As they did in Peter's day,
In the light of God.
Then the Holy Ghost is given,
Blessed light, blessed light,
'Tis the only light of heaven,
'Tis the light of God."

The only event closely associated with these words is that they were composed only twelve hours previous to the birth of her twins, and that the presence of the Spirit, so discernible in the writing of the hymn, was with her the whole day through, and to such a degree that she needed no professional attendance, her mother waiting on her. Needed strength and quick recovery was manifestly a blessing from the Lord, and the bright little girls, born March 16, 1868, very soon added much to the already happy home.

In the little branch the meetings were held alternately with the two clusters of Saints, a distance of six miles intervening. When the weather and conditions of the roads did not permit the sisters making the trip with ox-team and wagon, the brethren walked, seldom missing a meeting, in which, as a rule, every one present took part. Ofttimes did our sister put the twin babes to bed in the clothes-basket for the trip. Never a meeting passed in which her voice was not heard in song, prayer, and testimony. On one occasion, expressing her desire and determination to endure to the end, she said, "If I perish,

I shall perish striving." When she sat down Bro. Asa Cochran arose and said, "In the name of the Lord thou shalt not perish, but shalt have everlasting life." Any who knew her through life, can easily believe the prophecy a true one.

In the spring of 1873 she and family migrated to Illinois, where they spent the summer, resuming the journey to Iowa in October, "Zion" being the watchword, spending the winter in a little old inland village (New Buda), there being no house to be had in the "colony" under the auspices of the "Order of Enoch," until in the following spring, when a small house was secured on a farm of eighty acres, just across from which there was erected a temporary church building in the summer of 1875. Previous to that time the meetings were held alternately in a schoolhouse in the northeastern part of the settlement, and another in the southwestern part where they moved. Here was organized the first Sunday-school of the Lamoni Branch, in which our sister taught a large class of young ladies, her husband being the superintendent. In the church across from her home she taught the class so long as her health would permit, continuing also to contribute to the church publications.

On July 7, 1876, another little stranger came to complete her family of two boys and two girls. No pains did that fond mother spare to bring her precious children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The morning and evening prayers were never forgotten in that home. She had watched over them with a vigilance to be surpassed by no mother; but the time came when she could no longer direct their steps, or shield them from the allurements of the world.

The father in the meantime had been ordained an elder, and was not only laboring diligently for the good of his fellow men to bring them to a knowledge of the truth, but with his now feeble wife they did not lose sight of the soul's salvation of their own little family, and they were all inducted into the fold by their own choice, after having been thoroughly instructed in the ways of eternal life.

During the last few years of our sister's life, given above, her health had rapidly failed, and in the month of June, 1883, she took a ride to town, a distance of only two miles, and becoming very tired she stopped at her parents' for a rest and till she might feel better; but she rapidly grew worse, never going home, and lingered till October 13, 1883, when she passed from this earth-life. The following lines composed by her some years previous will suffice to portray the love of our Master which dwelt within her, and her desire that her family should live that they might have eternal life. May a lesson be gleaned therefrom that will be of use to each reader of the Autumn Leaves:

"Let us shake off the coals from our garments,"
As the beautiful poet has said;
Let us strive with our might to be perfect,
Like our Savior, 'the great living head.'
Let us see to it now, while the day lasts,
That we each take this matter in hand;
For 'tis one of the greatest importance,
And which we ourselves must command.

"Let us see to it well that our households
In excellent order are set;
For grievous afflictions might follow
Should we this great duty forget.
And then 'tis so pleasant to witness
An orderly household of Saints,
Where all are united and happy,
No jarrings, no strifes, no complaints.

"Let us carefully train up our children,
And teach them the only true way;
And prayerfully, faithfully watch them,
That their feet go not astray.
Let us teach them the faith of the ancients,
While childhood yet dawns o'er each head,
Like those sons of the children of Ammon,
They'll not doubt what their mothers have said.

"Let us peacefully dwell with our brethren,
Being neighborly, upright, and kind,
Ever putting our faults before us,
And all those of our brother behind.
And here is true charity needed,
The bond of perfection in life,
To help us to bear all things in patience,
And save from contention and strife.

"Let us seek for the poor and the needy,
And as much as we can give them aid;
Let us bring our tithes to the storehouse,
That the dreaded devourer be stayed.
Let us break off from all our light speeches,
Let us cease from much laughter and pride,
Let us make all our garments in plainness,
And in every commandment abide.

"Let us watch unto prayer, and be sober,
With a spirit both quiet and meek;
Let us strive for the gifts of the gospel,
And for 'wisdom' especially seek.
Let us study the dear Book of Mormon,
The Scriptures and Covenants too,
Storing up their pure precepts as treasures,
That we may be faithful and true.

"Let us shake off the coals of our garments,'
'Tis good exhortation indeed,
That we to each sacred commandment,
Should daily and hourly give heed;
For the Son will soon come in his glory,
With the great marriage supper prepared,
Then those who have lived for his honor
Will each have the promised reward."

THE LOVE OF GOD.

[This hymn was translated from the German by John Wesley. Its author was Gerard Tersteegan, who was a mystic and wrote upward of a hundred poems during a lifetime of three score and ten years.]

Thou hidden love of God, whose height,
Whose depth unfathomed, no man knows,
I see from far thy beauteous light,
Only I sigh for thy repose;
My heart is pained, nor can it be
At rest, till it finds rest in thee.

Is there a thing beneath the sun,
That strives with thee my heart to share?
Ah, tear it thence, and reign alone,
The Lord of every motion there!
Then shall my heart from earth be free,
When it hath found repose in thee.

O love, thy sovereign aid impart,
To save me from low thoughted care;
Chase this self-will through all my heart,
Through all its latent mazes there;
Make me thy duteous child, that I
Ceaseless may, "Abba, Father," cry.

Each moment draw from earth away
My heart, that lowly waits thy call;
Speak to my inmost soul, and say:
"I am thy Love, thy God, thy All!"
To feel thy power, to hear thy voice,
To taste thy love, be all my choice.

The Hour of Prayer.

Air: "Home, Sweet Home."

When weary of life, its vexation and care,
Oh, give me an hour with God's people in prayer.
The world and its folly, to leave at the door,
And feel in the presence of Jesus once more.

Prayer, sweet, sweet hour of prayer,
To feel that the presence of Jesus is there.

When trouble o'ertakes us, and evils resist,
And life is surrounded with darkness and mist;
For strength against Satan's attempt to ensnare,
Oh, give me an hour with God's people in prayer.

Refreshing indeed is the hour of prayer;
Its power to relieve is not met with elsewhere;
Where Jesus is present each want to supply,
And answers with precious gifts from on high.

Oh, grant me, dear Lord, through the hour of prayer,
A joyful relief from life's burdens and care;
Thy cause to me dearer; my hope more secure;
And heaven seem nearer than ever before.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

F. JOHNSON.

"O tender heart," we used to say,
"The world will serve thee ill some day;
So pure and glad, so frank and free,
Time holds a cruel dart for thee!"
O heart of joy, our fears were vain;
E'er life had stabbed thee with its pain,
Thy spirit soared to heights above,
Still dreaming that the world was love!

TO WHOM DOES THE CHILD BELONG? NO. 4. TO SOCIETY.

Recognition of the individuality of the child does not imply disregard of the rights of others. While it is true that each child is an integer, it is equally true that he is only one of a multitude of integers who are factors in this great problem which we call society, and while we fully comprehend that individual rights are sacred, we are just as fully aware that what is best for one is best for all, and vice versa. Therefore, while all arrangements for the welfare of the child are made with reference to his peculiar needs, we find that this coincides with the best interests of the community wherein he dwells. This is true in the minute details of life. It is not a question of minor importance whether he shall be fed with regularity from the very first. Upon this point rests the welfare, health, and comfort of the mother and other members of the family. . . . By regularity of habits in eating, the cause of temperance is forwarded. . . . The comfort of the inmates of the home depends, to a great degree, upon the regular and natural habits of sleep in the child. . . . The child has a right to demand that his habits shall be such that they will make life easier for him and all connected with him. . . .

It is incumbent upon the parents to train their children so that they shall be the least trouble to themselves as well as to their associates, and this can only be done by training them to demand as little as possible from others, and to rely upon their own sure, unfailing resources. The child that is always amused by some one else, is being trained for unhappiness in himself and to be a source of unhappiness to others. As parents we are too anxious to amuse our children; we do not allow their individuality to exercise itself in their plays. We so constantly supply them with expensive toys that we give their ingenuity no scope, and thus train them in extravagance, and limit their usefulness to society in that we lessen their productive power.

In training the child for his future place in society, the importance of courtesy must not be forgotten, and no one who has not had the experience can understand how difficult it is for one to display the little civilities of life, who has not been trained to them in childhood. The elderly person who has been allowed in childhood to reach at the table for food, finds it difficult to ask, and will perhaps find it easier to go without than to ask to be helped. The baby will not understand the "Thank you," and "Please," but if these words are repeated with every request made him, he learns to imitate, and bows his head, and says, "ta-ta," and the habit is formed before he can speak. Parents sometimes imagine that if they are courteous to the child, he will invariably be courteous to others; but this will not follow unless they exact courtesy from him; he must not only be spoken politely to, but he must speak politely in turn.

But true courtesy is not merely an outward observance of polite manners, it includes an unselfish thoughtfulness for the comfort of others. H. Clay Trumbull says: "If a man be marked by exceptional courtesy in all his intercourse with others, he has an advantage to start with in the struggle of life, beyond all that could be his by health and wealth and wisdom without courtesy."

Courtesy can not be taught by those who set a selfish example, nor is it taught by an outward observance of conventionalities without the heart of true politeness as its source. The child sees through shams and values them accordingly. The child will need little teaching in words to be dutiful, if he sees his parents always treat each other with kindly, unselfish courtesy; but if he hears the father say to the mother, "Oh, you are only a woman"; he imbibes the idea that women are inferior, and even though he doffs his hat to them in the street, he feels in his heart contempt for their inferiority. The gentle, loving, unselfish atmosphere of the home will do more to inculcate genuine courtesy than any number of worldly sermons.

Courtesy to others is also a training in self-respect. We must have more respect for ourselves when we are kindly thoughtful of others than when we are only selfishly thoughtful of our own desires and comforts. But courtesy will not make us self-conscious; for one is only thoroughly courteous when one forgets self. The best cure for bashfulness is ingrained courtesy.

One great problem for the parent is how to be just to the child, and yet not train him to exact from others more than his due. It would almost seem that the average American parent errs in both directions, at times being unjust to the child, at other times allowing him to demand more than is his due. At one time we say to him, "Get up and give this lady your seat," without giving him a chance to show himself willing to be courteous, or recognizing his right to a seat that he has perhaps paid for. At another we compel all adults to stop conversation in order that the child may express his opinions; and in both instances we are training him in ways that will make him a disagreeable member of society. Health and courtesy are grand foundation stones in the elements of success. How much greater influence personally Carlyle might have had if he had been healthy and courteous.

But a more important element of character is truthfulness. The first lessons in truth are given by example. The child who had never known any but straightforward dealings with himself, will have imbibed the elements of honesty, and will be truthful in turn. Deceit on the part of parents, promises made and not kept, business tricks boasted of in the child's hearing, are all lessons in dishonesty more powerful than any homilies on uprightness can possibly be. The mother who hides her bonnet, and slips away from her child, need not be surprised if, a little older grown, the child slips away from home or school. The parent who answers his child's innocent question with a half truth, need not blame some one else if he finds later that the child knows how to falsify. The father who, buying a bunch of grapes at a fruit stand, took a bunch, and gave it to his little daughter, while the pound he paid for remained full weight, had no cause for astonishment when he heard that the girl in her teens was accustomed to help herself to the belongings of her school-mates. This question of truthfulness is so broad in scope that we can only indicate its importance, leaving each parent to follow out in thought and practice the line of conduct appropriate in each case.

The man who is loudly grumbling at fate because he does not succeed, may have been a child taught by parents and friends to have what he cried for. It may seem a small matter to the mother that the baby is indulged because it cries, but the effects of such training reach onward all through life, and become of importance to society. If the desired article is something the child should have, he ought not to be permitted to cry for it. If he should not have it, he ought not to get it because he cries. How much a child may be allowed to cry is worthy of consideration. Self-control is something that can not well be left out in the training for character-building, and in their griefs or injuries even quite small children can be taught self-control; but it is quite questionable if it is ever advisable to suddenly check the audible expression of pain. It is said that soldiers who endure surgical operations without anesthetics will be less liable to traumatic fever if they give vent to their suffering in outcries of pain. Cries and tears are nature's outlet for nervous irritation, but a child can be taught to cry softly. The outcry is often a demand for sympathy more than expression or physical pain, and the child soon learns that he receives sympathy in proportion to the noise he makes. If he learns that it is the extent of injury and not quantity of sound that brings sympathy, he will act accordingly. We often go to extremes in giving sympathy to our children or withholding it from them. A little boy persisted in calling his father's attention to a small injury, until the father impatiently exclaimed, "Well, what can I do about it?" "You might say, Oh" was the reply, showing that the demand was for sympathy. Friends often are too ready with sympathy, and so train the child in magnifying small matters. I once saw an amusing illustration of this truth. A small boy had been trained by his parents to make light of his hurts. When he would fall in his play, the mother would say, "Down goes my little boy; up jumps my little man," and unless the injury were really serious, the little fellow paid no attention to it. Going with his parents to spend some time with friends, he soon learned that they were always ready to pity him; so if he fell down, before he made any outcry he would raise his head and look around to see who observed him. If father or mother were in sight, he would jump up without a word, but if they were not to be seen and any of the friends were visible, his cries were heart-rending. To wisely mingle sympathy, and at the same time to teach self-control, is a problem. To quiet the child by giving candy is purchasing peace at the expense of self-control, and is also a lesson along the line of self-indulgence, which may lead to intemperance in later years.

The object of all discipline is self-control, and the lesson must be learned in the family in order to fit the individual for the larger life in society. We are told that a large proportion of the inmates of insane asylums are those who have not learned self-control in childhood, and so lost their balance entirely when brought into contact with the worries and distractions of real life.

The child who has not learned to accept inevitable disappointment with equanimity, is poorly prepared for the trials and discouragements that await him all along life's pathway. I have known parents, who appreciated this fact, to endeavor to prepare their children for future disappointments by deliberately planning disappointments in their childhood. This seems to me refinement of cruelty. If parents are endeavoring wisely to order the child's life, they will find plenty of opportunity to thwart the wishes of the little one without taking trouble to create such opportunity; and matters of small import to adults are of intense importance to children, and their little crosses are as hard for them to bear as our larger ones are for us. Needless trials are often imposed upon children through the parents' granting requests without due consideration, and then recalling their permission. This is rarely excusable. It will be a good lesson in waiting if the parent takes time for deliberation and investigation before giving an opinion, and when the decision is reached, the child, in yielding his wishes, will have no feeling of injustice mingled with his disappointment.

Lessons in waiting are exceedingly important to be learned in youth. The men or women who must do a thing just the minute they think of it, who act first and deliberate afterward, are trying members of society, and often meet with losses because they did not know how to wait. The child may early be taught that, when he manifests impatience, he will have to wait the longer for the gratification of his wishes; taught also to endure the inevitable without complaining. I have seen people who had never been taught to wait, make a whole car-load of passengers, who were detained by some accident, exceedingly uncomfortable, while the patient man concealed his impatience, and gave his thought to lessening the tedium of delay by devices to interest others.—Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., in American Motherhood.

Questions on August Reading.

Of what is society composed? Do the rights of one member of society conflict with the rights of others? In recognizing the individuality of the child what else must be taken into consideration? What will result to the child from this consideration? To what extent is this true? How may regularity of habits forward the cause of temperance? How will regular habits of sleep benefit the child and his family? What will be the effect of good habits to the child and to those around him? What is the child's right in the matter? In what ways may a child be trained to demand little of others? What will make the exercise of courtesy easy? What more is needed to bring about this result besides treating the child with courtesy? What does courtesy include? What will be the effect upon the children of the father's attitude toward the mother? What is the best cure for bashfulness? Why? What problem is presented here? What two extremes are to be avoided? What element of character is more important than courtesy? What will the child imbibe from straightforward dealings with himself? What will be the effect of deceit on the part of parents? What should be the example of parents in honesty? What importance should we attach to self-control as an element of character? How may small children be trained in self-control? What wisdom may be used in the expression of sympathy? How may society be benefited by home discipline in self-control. How may children be prepared to meet disappointment bravely and patiently? What injustice may be done a child by hasty decisions? What is the better method? Why are lessons in waiting important to prepare children as members of society? How may they be taught to accept the inevitable without complaint?

Requests for Prayers.

Elder A. E. Stone, Willoughby, Ohio, requests the prayers of the Prayer Union in behalf of Sr. Cora Stone, that she may be restored to health. She is an intense sufferer, has been confined to bed for six weeks and unless she is relieved it is doubtful if she can withstand long.

Sr. Alice Savage writes from Mt. Vernon, Washington, requesting that those of the Saints so disposed will fast and pray for her daughter, Sr. Essie Smith, that if it be the Lord's will she may be healed of serious afflictions, be restored to health, and be able to perform the duties of life.

LAMONI, Iowa, July 9, 1908.

Editors Herald: The following few weeks of experience may furnish points of interest to some one.

Friday, May 15, the writer left Lamoni, Iowa, for Kirtland, Ohio, arriving in Chicago next morning; no special incident occurring on the way. A choice of railways was open to Cleveland, fare over one way being seven dollars and twenty-five cents, the other six dollars and twenty-five cents. The latter was chosen; accommodations good and a dollar saved. Copious rains had fallen and a luxurious growth of vegetation was rapidly springing up all along the way, looking beautiful.

On the train I chanced to meet an Episcopalian minister, on his way to Cleveland from Chicago. He was free to talk and we were soon engaged discussing religious topics covering quite a wide field, the following being some of the points raised:

"You practice sprinkling for baptism and baptize infants?"

"Yes."

"Why do you do that? Children have no need of baptism; baptism is for the remission of sins; besides, sprinkling is not baptism."

"We baptize for original sin."

"Why do you do that? Jesus Christ atoned for original sin, the sin of Adam; and of little children he said, 'Of such is the kingdom of heaven;' yet you presume to make them better by baptizing them, for which there is no commandment or precedent, or for sprinkling for baptism."

"Oh, yes; there is."

"Where is it?"

"In the prayer-book."

"Thunderation! that is only the invention of man; it is no authority."

"Well, that is where you will find it; it is not in the New Testament."

"Agreed; but Jesus says, 'In vain do ye worship me teaching for doctrine the commandments of men.' Your authority for infant baptism is of a piece with that which blinded and misled the Jews when Christ was here. Give me something that has the word of God to support it."

"There is none."

We are agreed again.

"Where can I get a book of clearest statement and best authority for the claim made by your church for the transmission of authority from the apostles, outside of the Roman Catholic claim? I heard one of your ministers preach on that at the World's Congress of Religions at Chicago, during the World's Fair, and I would like to look it up from your claims."

"There is none; nothing handed down at all; nothing in the claim; it is all bosh!"

Agreed.

"By what authority, then, does your church minister?"

"There is no organized church; Jesus never built any church. All we need is what is taught in Matthew 5 and 6—love God and your neighbor; do to others as you would have them do to you, and other like passages is all we need."

"Yes, but Jesus Christ said he would build a church: 'Upon this rock I will build my church.'—Matthew 16: 18. There was an organized church; I can prove it to you."

"How?"

"This way: Jesus said, 'Moreover, if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother; but if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear thee, tell it unto the church.'—Matthew 18: 15-17. How could it be told to the church if there was no church to tell it to? Again: 'The same day there were added to the church about three thousand souls.'—Acts 2: 41. How could something be added to that which did not exist?"

No reply.

"Did you ever read the Book of Mormon?"

"No."

"You should read it; you would run on to more surprising things in that book than in any you ever read; and you would know more about the Bible after reading it than you ever knew before. There is nothing bad in it, and it presents the very highest ethical code known."

"I will read it the first opportunity. I met one of your elders a short time ago, I think by the name of Webster; he requested me to read it. I am going to attend some of your meetings. If there is any truth I have not, I want it."

Changing position, I was soon in conversation with a lady and gentleman with a young babe, very cross. I remarked that they should give their babe something to quiet its nerves; it was nervous.

"Yes, it is teething; we don't give it anything."

"What do you do for it?"

"We just give it Christian Science treatment."

Judging from its screams, Christian Science was having poor effect, so far as quieting the babe. I stepped back to my clergy friend and said: "There is another couple fooled in their religion."

"What are they?"

"Christian Scientists."

He threw up his hands. "That is the limit; the poorest thing yet; nothing in it at all. There are a great many people joining them, however."

Agreed again.

By ten in the evening I was at Willoughby, where I slept well.

Sunday morning, the 17th, I met Brn. Greene and Becker. Bro. Greene went on to officiate at Cleveland, and I returned with Bro. Becker to Kirtland, stopping at the hotel now in charge of Bro. and Sr. Wilson, seemingly going ahead all right. I attended prayer-meeting at the hall in the afternoon. The interest was good. In the evening I preached at the same place, Bro. Becker in charge.

On the 23d I rode to Russell, ten miles away, with Bro. Frank Brockway, and stayed over night with Bro. Dupont. We had a pleasant visit. Mr. Dupont is not a member of the church, but is one of that sensible, manly kind of men that are willing to extend to their wives the same rights religiously they ask for themselves, and he permits her her religious belief without restraint. So we call him "brother." He and Sr. Naomi are not a great while out on the matrimonial road and the fates seem to augur happiness and success. Sunday, the 24th, after blessing the little babe that had come to gladden their home, named Laura Viola, we returned to Kirtland in time to preach the memorial sermon at ten o'clock in the Temple. A good feeling prevailed, Bro. U. W. Greene in charge.

I came here mainly to dispose of some property; was offered the money down for it, but the church was in need of it, so I wrote to the Bishop about it. While awaiting his coming, by invitation of Bro. G. T. Griffiths and family and Bro. French, I went to Columbus on the thirtieth day of May. There I met Bro. Elmer Long and Brn. Richard Matthews, French, and others prominent in local church work. They were holding holiday meetings in a tent, just beginning continuous services. I attended the Sunday-school, Religio, and prayer-meeting, which were well conducted; preached twice for them, and presided at one business-meeting by request of the branch president and vote of the members. Was that heretical perfidy? I had a pleasant visit at Columbus, and there are zealous workers there striving to honor the faith and get it before the people. May help and blessing attend them.

Sunday, June 7, I attended the afternoon park meeting in Cleveland, Bro. Will LaRue being in charge. Madam LaRue and babe were present also. Bro. LaRue appeared at ease and seemed to interest his hearers. The outlook appears a little propitious there. Later, I went with Bro. J. J. Phare to hear a Miss Florence Allen, Presbyterian from Utah, lecture on Mormonism. I attended with the intention of setting her right if she was radically wrong, but she was so lady-like and conservative in her statements, hitting the nail on the head every time, that at the close I arose and indorsed her statements. This she appreciated. She has resided in Utah for sixteen years, and appears conscientious in her work and stated facts as she sees them.

In the evening in the Saints' church I preached to a good audience, mostly church members. I was kindly cared for at Sr. Warnock's and at Bro. and Sr. G. R. Mock's.

Tuesday, the 9th, at Kirtland. The Bishop and Bro. Thomas Sheldon had arrived, Bro. Sheldon to labor in the Kirtland District and to be in charge of the Kirtland Temple for the present. Some favorable circumstances are seen in Kirtland. There is a promise of good crops and plenty of fruit. Sr. Storm was sick with appendicitis and Sr. Smith had an attack of diphtheria. Both were better when I left.

Business concluded, the Bishop and I started for Detroit. At Cleveland we were met by Bro. Eben Miller who piloted us to the boat, the City of Cleveland, a new boat plying between Cleveland and Detroit. At fifteen minutes of ten in the morning we were on our way across the lake. Had a pleasant trip, arriving in Detroit next morning. By invitation of Bro. Greene and the desire of the Bishop, I changed my mind and went into Canada. At evening we were at Chatham, and stopped over night with Bro. J. H. Tyrrell, being well provided for.

Saturday morning, June 13, we joined the Saints, going to Stephenson to attend the district conference. In due time we arrived there, where the Saints have erected a nice church building. The brethren came in from various parts until there was a surprisingly large number present. President R. C. Evans, U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, and Arthur Leverton, president of the district, were placed in charge, with suitable secretaries and other necessary officers provided. A good feeling prevailed all through the conference. We did not know but that we would find the pot boiling over in Canada and that it would be necessary to help hold the lid on; but everything passed off so smoothly and nicely that one scarcely knew he was in Canada. By the way, if any have a poor opinion of the Canadian Saints, they need but to go over and see in order to change their minds. They are just lovely. We have no criticism on the Prophet for sojourning in the Dominion. Who would not who has the time and can? A splendid social feeling and cordial good-will were manifest all through. All ate at one place, special provision being made for all. The writer lodged with Bro. and Sr. Atkinson, along with some twenty or thirty others. The parlor was a sea of beds. We slept soundly.

Sunday, the 15th, we returned to Chatham, and in the evening I preached in the Saints' church to an attentive audience, Bro. Greene and the Bishop being in charge. Slept again at Bro. Tyrrell's. Bro. Greene tried to coax me further along into his mission, but I concluded to return.

Tuesday evening, at ten o'clock, the 16th, found me in Coldwater, Michigan, at the home of Sr. Jesse Corless, her new name not remembered. The day following I spent with Coldwater Saints, seeing most of them. Bro. Star Corless took me in private conveyance to see those out of the city. It was most pleasant to meet these brethren again. We lived with them for many years and there was never the least discord or ill-feeling existing. But one elders' court was held there and that was imported. There is nothing more comforting than communion of the Saints.

On the 18th a goodly number of the brethren were going to Galien to attend their district conference, and I accompanied them to South Bend. I had a strong leaning to go with them, but concluded that the conference was well provided for, so came on. At evening I was in Chicago. Stayed over night at Sr. Castine's and received good care. The following day the Republican National Convention concluded, Secretary Taft bearing off the big prize, as is well known.

Saturday morning I arrived at Lamoni to note a change in the appearance of things for the better, so far as relates to crop prospects, etc. No difficulty in keeping busy if one wishes to, wherever he is.

WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

CARDIFF, June 24, 1908.

Saints' Herald: I promised to send to your columns a brief account of our voyage from the land of our choice to that of our birth. Myself, wife, and daughter, Ruth, bade farewell to the Saints and friends of Scranton, Pennsylvania, on May 30, at two o'clock in the morning. Several accompanied us to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western station, and waited to see us leave for New York. The last six months in Scranton had been of such pleasant character, that it was truly a task to say good-bye. We did so, however, with the promise that if all were well, we should call on our return home to good old Far West District, state of Missouri, which, by the way, we hope will be organized into a stake before that happy day (our return) comes.

For the benefit of those not familiar with the location of Far West District, I will explain. It lies between Independence, Missouri, and Lamoni, Iowa. The distance from Independence to Lamoni is about one hundred and eighty miles. Thirty-two years ago, when we moved into that district, there were only three branches of the church, with a membership not to exceed fifty, if I mistake not; and we had no church-buildings of our own. To-day there are about fifteen branches and about fourteen church-buildings, with a membership of nearly two thousand Saints.

I suggest that when the time comes to form the Far West Stake, a hearty invitation be extended to all of the household of faith in the Independence and Lamoni Stakes, to be present. I may not be able to be there, but shall bid all "God-speed" that may participate.

The conditions as they now are between Lamoni and Independence bring forcibly to my mind a prediction made by President Joseph Smith. In company with Alexander McCallum, his son-in-law, he left Lamoni for Independence, with horse and buggy, some twenty-five years ago. At that time there were very few Saints in the territory between Lamoni and Independence. Bro. Joseph said that he expected to see the day when he could leave Lamoni for Independence, and stop and have his meals and lodgings at the homes of Latter Day Saints. Such are the conditions to-day. The land is dotted, from Lamoni to Independence, with happy homes of scattered Israel, and is in fulfillment of the revelations to the martyred Prophet, that the time would come when the Saints would return and build up the waste places of Zion.

Prior to our departure from Scranton, I had heard that many of the Saints had concluded to see us off at the station. The hour being late, or, rather, early, I advised at our last prayer-meeting that they bid us good-bye at our stopping-place, which was at the welcome home of Bro. George Morris and wife. The advice was heeded by all, with the exception of ten. We arrived in New York City, at seven o'clock in the morning. A cold, chilly rain was falling, and the city looked as though it were deserted, being Decoration Day. We were the first of our little party to arrive, but all were in ample time to find their quarters on board the Carmania, which is one of the most comfortable boats afloat, built for comfort and not so much for speed, as it takes usually from seven to eight days to make the journey from New York to Liverpool, a distance of about three thousand, one hundred and ninety-five miles, over the southern course, which is about two hundred miles further than the central, and three hundred miles further than the northern course. From the first of May to October 1, the large liners take the southern course, which is one hundred miles south of the Banks of Newfoundland. They do this to avoid icebergs, which are numerous in the summer months along the central and northern course. We did not see any, but were informed there were some not a great distance away. For two days overcoats and wraps were in demand on deck. Experienced seamen can tell when they are near the icebergs, for as they say, they tell it by the smell and taste of the atmosphere. Still, the officials in charge of the ships do not trust to that method alone. They take samples of water, and if the thermometer shows changes, indicating cold, they take their samples quite often, every thirty minutes. More often in the night and during a fog, and if the indications are such that they are close to the icebergs, they slacken their speed one half.

There were twelve Latter Day Saints on board the ship: Bro. J. W. Rushton, James Baillie, missionary to Scotland; Rees Jenkins and wife, missionary to Wales; Bro. Daer, on a visit to Scotland, and Bro. Truman to England on a visit; Bro. and Sr. Giesch, and daughter, Louise, on a visit to Germany; myself, wife, and daughter, Ruth, to Wales.

At three o'clock in the afternoon, May 30, the Carmania started on her journey. She ran aground on some soft mud, but, fortunately, her twenty-one thousand horse-power succeeded in getting her into deeper water without calling for other help. The Carmania is six hundred and seventy-five feet in length; seventy-two feet and six inches in breadth; depth to the boat deck eighty feet; gross tonnage, twenty thousand tons; crew, four hundred and fifty hands; number of tons of coal consumed every twenty-four hours, from four hundred and fifty to five hundred tons. She is a triple-screw turbine.

During supper time, six o'clock in the evening, May 30, we got into what the sailors call the "swelled sea," and the boat began to heave, not bad, just enough to cause a person to feel that the floor was giving way from beneath his feet, and the head began to get dizzy. Several had to leave the dining-room, and wife was one of the first, followed by Sr. Giesch. Wife was unable to go alone, and I was of little support to her. Still, I was not sick, but I staggered, and not with strong drink. We were making poor headway towards our room, when one of the waiters came to our assistance, and we reached our comfortable quarters none too soon; for in this case, the signs did follow the believer, for wife had said she believed she would be sick. Ruth and Louise were numbered among the unbelievers, for they said they were not going to be sick, and after supper they both went up on deck to breathe the refreshing air of the Atlantic; but, about dark, they both had to follow in the footsteps of their mothers. I called at their room, number ninety-one, deck C, and found the four in a very humble position, doing the best they could under the circumstances. They all agreed that riding on the ocean wave had brought about a very unpleasant experience. For about two days they were paying tribute to Neptune.

The men folks, with the exception of Bro. Rees Jenkins, were more fortunate. They were always ready to answer the sound of the gong (calling to meals).

Morning of the 31st.—Sunshine, and the sea more calm. By noon we had traveled two hundred and ninety miles from Sandy Hook, and three hundred and fourteen miles from New York. In the afternoon we had rain and fog, and north-west winds, rough sea. In the language of the sailors, we had "dirty weather" and "choppy sea." Still the Carmania was steady, and all who were well enjoyed themselves.

June 1.—Had a very pleasant night's voyage, and all that were sick are very much better and on deck, with the exception of wife. She is not able to leave her room. At noon of each day a chart is put up showing the course we travel, and number of miles we have made every twenty-four hours. The chart to-day indicates four hundred and twenty miles. We are now going southeast. The day is pleasant. We passed two steamships and one sailing-vessel. There is a bulletin published daily on board the ship, giving us news received by wireless telegraphy.

June 2.—This is a beautiful morning. Had another good night's voyage, and as we retired, we thought of the song, "Röcked in the cradle of the deep."

We are four in a room, Brn. Rushton, Baillie, Giesch, and myself. The rooms are eight by ten, four single berths, two closets for clothing, two wash-bowls, and electric lights, and everything highly polished. Pressing on the button brings to the room the steward or nurse. There are baths with fresh or salt water, free. The dining-room is large and very neat, and the table well supplied. First call for breakfast at seven; lunch, at half past ten, consists of beef tea and crackers, served on deck or in the drawing-room; dinner at fifteen minutes past twelve; candy (butterscotch), at three, passed to all on the deck and in the drawing-room; tea, at half past five; supper at nine, consisting of tea, coffee, cocoa, lemonade, oatmeal gruel, crackers, and cheese. There is a fine orchestra that plays from half past ten to half past eleven in the morning, and from half past three to half past four in the afternoon. There was religious service Sunday morning, conducted by the minister of the Church of England. Music and singing were good, reading from prayer-books; too much form for me. Food plenty, quite a variety, with oranges, apples, ice-cream, and all kinds of jellies.

The third-class passengers are enjoying themselves by singing and dancing. There is one good-natured fellow among them, whom they call Pat, and he is a favorite with the old and young. He is comical and witty; no one is lonesome where he is. By his kind and innocent ways, he has the good will of the passengers, which they manifested by taking up a collection for him. Many in the second-class contributed to the same. One very amusing scene which was enjoyed by all the spectators in the second-class, was the tug of war between nine young ladies and nine young men. When the word go was given, the ladies three times in succession walked away with the boys. The secret of their success was, when the word was given, the girls were united, and as one person they would start and the boys with all their strength could not stop them. Of course, the girls had the sympathy and cheers of all. A little harmless play on board ship, away from the sight of land, is good for the digestive organs of all concerned, especially to those whose stomachs have been upset, so to speak.

At noon we had traveled four hundred and twenty-three miles. Weather fine, and our folks out to dinner; passed one steamer which had in tow a five-mast barge. We have passed the Banks, which are one thousand miles east of New York. We now change our course from southeast to northeast.

June 3.—Another bright morning. A little cool. All are well. The sea is calm. So far we have not seen any fish. At noon four hundred and fifteen miles was registered.

June 4.—Pleasant. Have received news from passing ships by wireless telegraphy, some five hundred miles distant. One message received seventeen hundred miles. The Bulletin is sold for two cents. Who would not give that for the privilege of reading a message received by the wireless that had come over the trackless sea hundreds of miles?

Brn. Daer, Giesch, and Baillie have been discussing on gospel lines with some of the passengers, and one Plymouth Brethren minister in conversation with Bro. Baillie tried to impress the people with the idea that all the Saints, or Mormons, as he called them, were one. But he did not succeed. Friends were made to the truth.

There are on board two Japanese; one of whom took passage in the first-class, and one on the same as us (the second). The one in the second is the general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Japan. He has been to the States to learn more about Christianity. He said that "the Christians disagree too much." He was given some of our literature, and Bro. Rushton exchanged addresses with him. He is a bright, well-educated young man.

There is to be a concert this evening in the dining-room of the second-class, admission free, at the close of which a collection is to be taken up for benefit of the Seamen's Orphan's and Widow's Home, in Liverpool and New York. Bro. Rushton, being asked if he would take part in the program,—he might sing a song if he felt so disposed, answered, "I am no singer, but here is one," pointing to Bro. Baillie, whose name was immediately placed on the program as one of the volunteers.

At noon we had traveled four hundred and seventeen miles. Owing to the fog we have run at half speed during the afternoon. The whistle blowing every five minutes, as a warning to the vessels that may be near. The fog lifted at eight o'clock. If others take the same care as the officials of this ship, there need be no collision. It is claimed that in ordinary weather the whistle can be heard from two to five miles.

Morning of the 5th.—More fog, and very thick, but lasted only three hours. The concert last night was very entertaining and enjoyed by all. Bro. Baillie sang, "I am going back to old Ireland," which, using a common phrase, "brought down the house." He was called back; the audience would not take "No" for an answer. He then sang a Scotch favorite, "What is the use of repining." This was also well received, and Bro. Baillie was highly complimented. There were eighty-five dollars collected in the second-class for the orphan's homes. There are to be two concerts this evening, one in the first, and one in the third, collection to be taken at each for the benefit of the homes. During the year 1907, eleven hundred and sixty-five children received the benefits of these orphan's homes. Of this number there were children of captains, officers, engineers, pursers, pilots, making two hundred and sixty-one; seamen, including carpenters and sail-makers, three hundred and ninety; firemen, coal-trimmers, three hundred and twenty-four; stewards, cooks, and butchers, one hundred and ninety.

At noon we registered three hundred and sixty-nine miles. That was good, considering the time lost owing to the fog. There were on board twelve hundred and five passengers; two hundred and fifty first-class; two hundred and fifty-five second-class; seven hundred in the third-class. The capacity of the boat is, first-class three hundred and fifty; second-class five hundred; third, twenty-three hundred.

June 6.—We are nearing the Irish coast, and the wind from that part is cold. At noon registered four hundred and fourteen miles. This was a disappointment to all, as we thought that the last twenty-four hours were the best run. The sea is choppy. They are getting out the baggage ready to be transferred at Queenstown, Ireland. Quite a number to get off. At six o'clock in the evening we saw land, which was enjoyed by all, for we had been nearly seven days where nothing could be seen but the mighty deep. At eleven o'clock at night the passengers were transferred onto the Queenstown boat. Half an hour later, we proceeded on our journey east for Liverpool, a distance of two hundred and twenty-five miles.

June 7, Sunday morning.—Bright and early we were on deck to have a look at the land of our birth, Wales. It is a beautiful sight, Ireland on one side, and Wales on the other. Sailing-vessels of every description were very numerous, and the sight was one not soon to be forgotten. Just eight days from the time we left the land of our choice, United States, we arrived in Liverpool at three o'clock in the afternoon. Here our company scattered to their respective fields. During our voyage, eleven of us sat side by side at the table during meals. On entering the boat, each one was assigned to his room, and were given their number at the table, which they held during the voyage. Bro. Rushton had arranged it so that we could all be together at the one table, which was much appreciated. Bro. Daer was in the third-class, but he will return in the second, as we would advise all that can to do.

We stopped in Liverpool with Bro. and Sr. Giesch and daughter, Louise, from Sunday till Tuesday, at nine o'clock in the forenoon. Monday, being a holiday (Whitsuntide), it would be difficult to travel, as all Wales and England go on pleasure trips.

June 9.—We left for Aberdare, Wales, intending to locate there or in Merthyr, but could not get suitable quarters, houses being very scarce. Plenty for sale, but not for rent. We stayed over night with Bro. and Sr. Silas Evans, of Aberaman. Came on the next day to Cardiff, and have taken up abode at 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff.

The Pennygraig Branch gave a reception in honor of the return to Wales of Bro. Rees Jenkins and wife and myself and family. After feasting on the sweet things prepared by the sisters, we were entertained by reciting and singing in English and Welsh. There has been added to this church during the last year several bright, intelligent young people, who are active in the interest of the cause. I was pleased to see the friendly feeling that existed among them all.

The British Isles conference will be held in Cardiff the first Saturday, Sunday, and Monday in August, and already Brn. Rushton, Gould and Greene are taking steps towards securing a hall and lodgings for those who may attend. We are having very dry and warm weather.

News From Branches

Dear Herald: The Providence Branch held its semi-annual business-meetings June 30 to July 2, inclusive. Elder J. D. Suttill was reelected president of the branch. Bro. Suttill spoke encouragingly, thanking the Saints for the hearty support they had given him, and urging all to make any suggestions that would tend to help in the work.

Bro. Edward A. Fox was reelected superintendent of the Sunday-school, and was quite emphatic in his demands that all should be more zealous in God's work. Under his direction the Sunday-school has prospered, until now it has one hundred and forty-five on its roll.

Bro. D. F. Joy was reelected president of the Religio, and with the aid of his assistant, Bro. Edmund M. Brown, is doing a good work for God and his church. The Religians are now zealously engaged in procuring a new organ for the church. May they have the support of all.

A bevy of young lady Saints were heard asking Bro. Otis A. Toombs (one of the committee on the reunion) the price of a very large tent, which sounded very encouraging for that department of the work, and it is hoped that other branches will have large delegations to Highland Lake, as many hands lighten burdens, and encourage others. If all will work with patience, cheerfulness, and willing hands, God's blessing will surely be with us. WILLIAM CALVERT.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Providence items should have appeared earlier, but were misplaced. We apologize to the correspondent.]

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

We had a nice visit from the stake presidency and they preached us two sermons, Bro. Harrington in the morning and Bro. Garrett in the evening; also Bro. Peak was over and gave us a good talk. We also had our local priesthood give us a total of fourteen short talks in one sermon; it was real good and entertaining. Long sermons are not the thing to draw crowds in hot weather, but spicy sermons, right to the point and instructive, are more appreciated and productive of good.

The semiannual business-meeting of the Religio was held and officers elected as follows: H. Sandy president, W. Lewis vice-president, Grace Palmer secretary, C. Sandy treasurer, P. Craig chorister, Ama Winning pianist, Sr. G. Hidy home class superintendent. Our members are increasing and the interest is good. The home class, under the direction of Sr. Warnky, is progressing nicely, three classes organized lately. The Sunday-school is making advancement under the directions of Bro. A. Larkey. On next Saturday all the schools of the city (eight in number) will have a picnic at Swope's Park. A good time is looked for.

The cottage meetings at different places are resulting in good. The Saints living near Centropolis are very active, and good results are apparent. Some of our prayer-meetings at the church have been very good, and God made promises to us which are stimulating us to be more active, and good results are sure to follow.

Last Sunday the writer baptized three precious souls and quite a number more are almost persuaded who no doubt will soon enter the fold.

May God help our preachers that they will not hold up other organizations for ridicule from the stand. It is unwise and God has forbidden it, and the result is bad. Jesus said to his disciples, "Be ye wise servants." If we present our own beautiful, angelic gospel in the spirit of meekness and love, God will crown our labors with success.

We can not pass without notice the letter from Coffeyville, Kansas, in this issue. Here is a case of altruism—a desire to do good for the sake of good, without any desire for earthly credit or praise—brotherly kindness. Let the good literature committees coöperate with this brother.

Bro. James L. Edwards, Melrose, Massachusetts, is the author of two songs, one published in the issue of July 22 and one in this number. He very kindly sent us the plates from which they are printed, for which we thank him.

Editorial

THE PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

The plains referred to in the caption are not the plains spread out before the "father of the faithful" as he sat before his tent at Mamre at the close of the day. Nor are they the plains over which he and Lot were gazing when the patriarch said, "Choose; if you go east, I will go west; if you choose the west, I will go to the east." No, the plains referred to are those near to Quebec in the province of Quebec, Dominion of Canada, over which the British and French fought so long and so well in the contest for the occupation of the Canadas, and on which Wolfe, for the Briton, and Montcalm for the Frank died; one, in defeat; the other, in victory, in a contest the result of which changed and fixed for time the political destinies of the north and northwest of the Western Continent.

An effort is being made in Canada to raise a fund by popular subscription to purchase the Plains of Abraham on which the last battles in that conflict were fought, for the purpose of making a public park to preserve that domain from the fate of the mercenary spirit of speculation incident to the growth and spread of all large and geographically well located cities such as Quebec now is.

In connection with this scheme of purchase, there is now being held at Quebec, a tercentenary celebration in commemoration of the French voyageur and explorer, Champlain, who founded Quebec in 1608. Of this tercentenary the London Times has good things to say in an editorial reproduced in part in the Toronto News for July 7, 1908, from which we quote.

We are not given to laudation of the victors in war; but when victories have fixed the status and policies of nations mention of the historical facts may be made even in the HERALD without prejudice; and as King Edward, of England, has shown a marked disposition to placate the animosities of the past, and to foster the things which make for the peace of the world, it is pleasant to read such expressions of good will and praise for the opponents of the past as the extracts from the Times has placed on record:

London, July 7.—The feeling which exists in England toward the tercentenary celebration was expressed in an article in the Times commenting upon a meeting in the Mansion House in regard to the movement. In part this article says:

"When the people of Canada read such speeches as those of Lord Roberts and Lord Crewe and such expressions of cordial concurrence as came from the Prime Minister, from Mr. Balfour, from Lord Lansdowne, and many others of like standing in the State, when they learn that, from his Majesty the King downwards, we in England are all of one mind in this matter, they can not but feel that the heart of the motherland beats in unison with their own, and that their fellowship in the British Empire is established and consecrated for ever. They know, too, that the sympathies of France are as keen as her share in the glories shortly to be celebrated is great and lasting, and that their kinsmen across the border in the New World are not less at one with them on this occasion than those across the seas in the Old.

"There is no occasion to protest, still less to offer proof, that these celebrations are in no sense intended to exalt the triumph of one great nation over another. They have not been so interpreted in France, they can not be so interpreted in Canada, where the early history of what is now the great Dominion is the common heritage of both races, where both are now united in brotherly concord in the building up of its magnificent and illimitable future, where both have fought with equal glory and evenly-balanced fortune in "battles long ago." In truth, the occasion should appeal equally to both races whose share in the making of Canada has been equally indispensable and equally honorable. The anniversary to be celebrated is that of the great Frenchman Champlain's first founding of Quebec in 1608. That is a purely French anniversary, and no Canadian who reflects on all that France has done for Canada, and all that her sons are not doing, will grudge the great soldier, sailor, statesman, and pioneer of France his well-earned meed of Canadian and British recognition.

"It profits not when recalling these 'old, unhappy, far-off things'—yet deeply sacred, too, in the memories of both races—to remember that the blood of England and France at one time flowed from men who faced each other in bitter and relentless conflict on many a stricken field. It flowed to the equal honor and glory of both, as Colonel Wood, the accomplished author of The Fight for Canada, has shown. Nor did it always flow from opposite sides. If France and England can look back now with mutual appreciation and respect to the achievements of their sons in conflict, so, too, can French and English Canadians recall many a hard fought field on which their kinsmen shed their blood as comrades fighting for the common fatherland of Canada.

"The two races have honorably crossed swords in the past. They now hang their swords up together in mutual honor of the illustrious dead and in everlasting token of their own reconciliation and peace.

"For this reason it is at once singularly appropriate and deeply significant that the permanent memorial of the Champlain celebrations is to be the rescuing of the Battlefields of Quebec, the immortal Plains of Abraham, from certain ignoble accretions and associations which have been heedlessly allowed to gather round them, and their dedication for ever to the memory of the great deeds that were done there. It is true that for many Englishmen the Plains of Abraham are associated only with the memorable scene of Wolfe's victory and death. But for all Canadians, whether of French or of British race, and for all students of Canadian history, they are associated, as Mr. Fortescue and Colonel Wood have shown, with much more than this. Montcalm was also stricken to death on the same memorable field, and died with equal glory, though not with equal fortune.

That conjuncture has long been commemorated in the monument erected by Lord Dalhousie in the Government Gardens at Quebec, bearing on one face the name of Montcalm and on the other that of Wolfe.

"It will again be commemorated not less worthily in the monument to both heroes which it is proposed that this country should present to Canada for erection on the consecrated Plains of Abraham. But even this does not exhaust the teeming and varied associations of those historic battlefields. The true story of the equal share of French and British in the glorious associations of Quebec is briefly told by Colonel Wood, and he shows that, if these shares be properly adjusted to the perspective of history, they constitute in themselves what he well calls an 'entente cordiale d'honneur,' which needs neither gloss nor concealment of any kind to secure its cordial recognition on both sides. 'Although,' as he tells us, 'in the five battles round Quebec the Britons have two victories to their credit and the French three, while the French-Canadians shared the glory of no less than four.' There is nothing, therefore, inappropriate or incongruous in commemorating Champlain's anniversary by the dedication of the Plains of Abraham to public and honorable use for ever."

A FAIR RULE TO APPLY.

An editorial in the Salt Lake Tribune, July 18, 1908, affords us a degree of pleasure. The editorial in question refers to the article entitled "Joseph Smith in his own defense," recently published in the Tribune and reproduced in the HERALD, July 22. The editors, as will be seen, quote the statement that men should ascertain Joseph Smith's views on marriage from his teachings published during his life and not from some document that appeared after his death, the authenticity of which is doubtful.

The Tribune commends this as a fair rule. We are pleased to note this statement, because it assures the memory of Joseph Smith fair treatment in the future from at least one great daily news journal, namely, the Tribune.

In the past there has been a disposition on the part of preachers and editors, as well as others, to exclude the leader in the work of restoration from the common rules of fair play. It has seldom been considered necessary to give him a "square deal." Evidence that would be ruled out of any court in the land has been cheerfully brought forward to condemn him. Men have preferred to consider him guilty until he could be proved innocent and have refused to listen to the evidence of his innocence. We quote the editorial:

On last Sunday morning the Tribune printed a communication, which is presented in the form of a soliloquizing defense of himself by Joseph Smith, Jr., who was the founder of Mormonism and the first President, Prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Mormon church. This is the first of a series to be published, and it deals entirely with the matter of polygamy. The next will be printed to-morrow.

The communication is interesting, in that it puts forward what appears to be a very fair test in determination of the origin of the doctrine of plural marriage as it is at present set forth in the official law book of the Utah church. It will be borne in mind that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is opposed to polygamy, its leaders claiming that Joseph Smith, Jr., not only did not introduce the doctrine of polygamy into the tenets of the church, but that he denounced the teaching and practice in unstinted terms of condemnation. Having produced documentary evidence in support of this contention, the author of the communication, speaking as the Martyr himself, suggests the following test rule:

"In the future, if you wish to quote me on the marriage question, quote from my statements published during my lifetime, and not from some document which appeared after my demise, and with which, even according to the claim of my Mormon friends, my connection can not but be considered doubtful."

In that request there is nothing unjust or unreasonable, from the standpoint of one who believes in the claims of neither branch of the church. Nor would there seem to be any inconsistency in it, even as viewed by the partisan on either side of the controversy. It is a well-known fact here that the doctrine and practice of polygamy were denied by Joseph and Hyrum Smith at Nauvoo; that there was not a line in the church law-book to authorize either the teaching or practice of plural marriage up to the time of the death of these two men; that the doctrine was first openly announced eight years afterward in Utah, by men who succeeded to the leadership; that still later it was printed in the Mormon Doctrine and Covenants for the first time in "Mormon history."

It will be necessary to go back again to the time of Nauvoo to throw some light upon the methods pursued in Utah to give authority for public promotion of the polygamous doctrine. Among those who had declared in the official church paper at Nauvoo that the church neither taught nor practiced polygamy, as then charged, were probably twenty members of the Female Relief Society of the church.

When the doctrine was announced openly in Utah it was stated that Joseph Smith had dictated the revelation to William Clayton, his confidential secretary, at Nauvoo in 1843, that fear of public indignation prevented publicity at that time; that Bishop Newell Knight made a copy of the revelation and preserved it, and that it was this copy which was used by the church in Utah as its authority for open promulgation in 1852. At the time of this public announcement of polygamy, in Utah, many of the saints were skeptical as to its pretended divinity. There was much questioning among those who knew of the specific denials which had been made officially in the Nauvoo Times and Seasons by Joseph and Hyrum Smith and by the members of the Female Relief Society. But William Clayton was later called upon to testify that he had written the revelation at Joseph's dictation; that Hyrum was present at the time; that the latter carried it to Mrs. Emma Smith, wife of Joseph, who tore it up. And (surprising as it may seem to the investigator) some of the members of the relief society, who at Nauvoo had denied the doctrine, testified in Utah that they were personally the plural wives of Joseph Smith.

That is the complicated situation. But the Reorganized branch of the church contends that Brigham Young utilized his autocratic power to forcibly procure this class of testimony from the individuals mentioned. And this testimony the leaders of the Reorganized Church unhesitatingly pronounce to be false.

With respect to the communication printed on Sunday, we have quoted what we consider to be the crux of its conclusion, by reproducing the rule which the author insists should be applied in consideration of the subject. We can not see but the rule is a fair one, and if the investigator shall share this opinion he will have some basis upon which to proceed.

The Tribune has no direct interest in the controversy which exists between the two branches of the Mormon church upon this point; but it takes such natural concern in the matter as would occur to any public journal upon any subject which affected a large community. And the Tribune interests itself as being unalterably opposed to, and determined to extirpate polygamous barbarism in the midst of civilization, by whomsoever introduced or by whomsoever practiced. But we do not hesitate to say—as will any fair-minded person who is conversant with Mormon history—that if the rule of judgment specified in Sunday's communication be adhered to in faith, the polygamous branch of the church is entirely without defense for the crimes it has perpetrated and authorized its members to commit.

However, it must remain with the investigator to decide whether he will accept the utterances of Joseph recorded up to the time of his death, all of which deny and denounce polygamy, as proof to conclusion; or whether he will take subsequent assertions of the Prophet's successors, supporting polygamy and attributing the origin of the doctrine to Joseph Smith, as authority.

It is interesting to note that if the rule prescribed in the communication—and a fair rule it seems to be, as said before—is to apply in the controversy, then the Utah church is apostate, and no act of the church or of its leaders is authoritative or legitimate. In any event, the Reorganized Church appears to have the best of the argument under that rule. It believes in Joseph Smith as a Prophet of God, and seeks to substantiate its belief through vindication of the man in his authoritatively recorded word. The polygamous branch likewise announces belief in Joseph Smith as a prophet of God, and that Brigham Young and others, down to Joseph F. Smith, the present leader, were and are his legal successors.

Under the circumstances, the Reorganized adherent has but one side to defend, and seems to be consistent in that defense. The Utah Mormon appears to be between two fires. Taking the written word of Joseph Smith for it, he must denounce Brigham Young and his successors as apostates and impostors. Accepting the assertions and testimonies of Young and the men who came after him, as against that of the first leader, the Utah Mormon must denounce Joseph Smith, the founder of his church, as a hypocrite, a deceiver of his people and a gross immoralist; he must repudiate the Book of Mormon as a fraud and the Doctrine and Covenants as the work of a blasphemous.

As to which he will do it is for the Utah Mormon to determine.

JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR IN HIS OWN DEFENSE. —NO 2.

HE PAYS HIS RESPECTS TO HIS ALLEGED SPIRITUAL WIVES.

[The second number of the article entitled "Joseph Smith in his own defense" appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune, Sunday, July 19. We reproduce it in full.]

As stated in my last communication certain women in Utah have testified that I taught them the mysteries of celestial marriage, and that they were married to me during my life and entered into relationships not wholly "celestial."

To controvert their testimony may seem ungracious and ungentlemanly, but the task is forced upon me. For them to pose as my paramours and under the guise of concubinage or polygamy to seek to usurp the place of my one lawfully wedded wife was an unwomanly task, and was of their own choosing, if we can relieve their later priestly advisers from responsibility.

I trust that those who read this defense will remember that to be accused in Utah does not necessarily mean to be guilty. Jesus Christ even is accused of being a polygamist, as is well known to those versed in the peculiar brand of Mormonism native to the Salt Lake Valley. I venture the assertion that women could be found here in Utah who would swear that they were his affinities and consorted with him along the shores of Galilee, if there were a shadow of a chance that they would be believed and if such a claim were not too great a reflection on their age. I just gather this impression from the fantastic claims of the many "living wives of our dearly beloved martyred prophet,"—martyred? Yes, martyred here in Utah.

This host of "wives" is about as numerous as the immortal legion of old citizens among the Gentiles who went to school with me and knew me well; and the statements of one are about as accurate as the statements of the other.

One of the most staunch advocates of her own claim to be considered one of my "relicts" was Eliza R. Snow, who departed the earth life December 5, 1887, in Salt Lake City. Her present whereabouts is unknown to me.

This worthy lady was quite universally known as Sr. Eliza R. Snow until comparatively recent years when her claim to a place in my bosom was challenged. Since then to make it sound more realistic, the faithful have called her Sr. Eliza R. Snow Smith. Her claims are set forth in Representative Women of Utah, page 2, from which I quote:

Here the Relief Society was organized by Joseph, March, 1842, and Sr. Eliza was chosen for secretary. There are now three hundred branches of the Relief Society. Eliza was at this time the wife of the Prophet.

Here we observe her claim that she was my wife in March, 1842, how long she had held that place at that date does not appear.

But another authoritative Utah publication, the Historical Record, volume 6, page 233, says: "Eliza Roxey Snow, married to the Prophet June 29, 1842, President Brigham Young officiating." If we were comfortably established as husband and wife in March why were we remarried again in June? Why this tinkering of dates? Is some one trying to make out a case?

But our Sr. Eliza is on record in a way most damaging to her testimony and her reputation for veracity. In the Times and Seasons, the official church organ, issue of October 1, 1842, appeared the following certificate, in connection with a similar certificate signed by leading men of Nauvoo:

We the undersigned members of the ladies' relief society, and married females, do certify and declare that we know of no system of marriage being practiced in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints save the one contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and we give this certificate to the public to show that J. C. Bennett's "secret wife system" is a disclosure of his own make.

This certificate is signed by nineteen women, and the name of Eliza R. Snow appears fourth on the list. October 1, 1842, she publicly declared that she knew of no system of marriage existing in the church save the well-known monogamic rule contained in the Doctrine and Covenants. Yet now we are asked to believe that at that very time she was a post graduate in the mysteries of "celestial marriage, including a plurality of wives," and was one of a large number of [my] polygamous wives.

Granting that she told the truth in October, 1842, she told the reverse years later when she set up a claim that she was my wife in March of 1842. Granting that she told the truth in after years in Salt Lake City she told the reverse in 1842. In either case she is discredited as a witness.

The rule of marriage referred to in the certificate signed by these nineteen ladies was adopted by the church in 1835 and formed a part of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, a part of the church law, until after my death. It suited me well enough as a church law, but obviously it does not suit the Utah Mormons, and a diligent search of their version of the Doctrine and Covenants will fail to discover it. In its stead you will find the revelation sanctioning polygamy. When God went out the Devil came in.

We believe that one man should have one wife; and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again.

According to the form of the marriage contract the parties both covenanted to keep themselves "for each other and from all others." No more concise, clear-cut, iron-clad, marriage ceremony was ever devised than that adopted by the church in 1835 and used during all of my subsequent presidency. And that was the only rule of marriage that our respected Sr. Eliza R. Snow knew anything about October 1, 1842. Utah historians might take note and "make another stab" at getting a suitable date for my nuptials with Sr. Eliza. They have fixed on two dates and neither exactly meets the urgent necessities of the case. They might well paraphrase the old song to read,

"Backward, turn backward, O Time, in thy flight!

Their dilemma deepens as we proceed.

Louisa Beeman may be termed "Exhibit B." Her claims are gravely set forth in the Historical Record, volume 6, page 233, as follows: "Louisa Beeman, married to the Prophet April 5, 1841, Joseph B. Noble officiating."

The facts in the case are that Louisa Beeman was not even a member of the church at that date and did not unite with the church until two years later. In my history, as published by the Utah Mormons, —Millennial Star, volume 21, page 75,—the following item appears: "Thursday, May 11, [1843,] six a. m., baptized Louisa Beeman, Sarah Alley, and others." Why, oh why, did not the prescient church historians date the baptism back or the marriage ahead? In case this item from the Millennial Star is reprinted at any time I suggest that my Mormon friends amend it so that it will refer to the sister as Louisa Beeman Smith, so that no partiality may be shown Sr. "Eliza R. Snow Smith."

The case of Mrs. Zina D. Huntington Young is perhaps the most amusing and remarkable one with which we have to do. It is said of this versatile lady:

Sr. Zina was married in Nauvoo, and had two sons; but this not proving a happy union, she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity, and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and was sealed to the prophet for time and eternity, after the order of the new and everlasting covenant. —Representative Women of Deseret, page 12.

The name of her first husband is given in Pictures and Biographies of Brigham Young and his Wives, as follows:

Sr. Zina was married to Henry Jacobs in Nauvoo, and had two sons, but this not proving a happy union she subsequently separated from her husband. Joseph Smith taught her the principle of marriage for eternity, and she accepted it as a divine revelation, and was sealed to the Prophet Joseph Smith for time and eternity, October 27, 1841, her brother, Dimick Huntington officiating.

The date of this romantic union is further immutably fixed on page 233, volume 6, of the Historical Record: "Zina D. Huntington, afterwards the wife of Brigham Young, sealed to the Prophet, October 27, 1841."

The Record of Marriages in Hancock County, Illinois, gives the date of the marriage of Zina D. Huntington and Henry B. Jacobs as March 7, 1841, John C. Bennett, mayor of Nauvoo, officiating.

Now we have the main facts regarding this lighting-change actress assembled. They run like this: She was married to Mr. Jacobs March 7, 1841, and within seven months and twenty days bore two sons, —not twins,—became dissatisfied with the union, separated from Mr. Jacobs, and was married to me. Surely there was little need for the introduction of polygamy when Zina D. and Mr. Jacobs could achieve such results under the old system of monogamy.

Furthermore this merry widow in 1846 (two years after my demise,) gave birth to a son and named him Chariton Jacobs.

She seems to have held the position of wife to Mr. Jacobs all the time. Her later story of seven months and twenty days of rapid transit from Jacobs to Smith with its accompanying enlargement of the census report of Illinois was concocted simply and solely to help her associates who were engaged in the work of foisting the doctrine of polygamy upon the church in Utah. She obtained her exaltation and was married to Brigham Young and is probably now engaged in helping him enlarge his kingdom in other worlds; to be exact in specifying their location might seem uncharitable. At least "Zina D. Huntington Jacobs Smith Young" never has answered to the roll-call in the realms of the blest.

These are fair samples of the living witnesses that in years past have strengthened the faith of the wavering. Their testimony is absurdly contradictory.

There is one serious break in the chain of evidence. It is this: Wives of "our dear prophet" have been brought forward a-plenty; but children none, and children are the excuse for polygamy. One lecturer confronts the Mormons with this amusing charge; he says, "According to your version we have Joseph Smith, about twenty-seven women, and God, entering into a combine for the express purpose of raising up a righteous seed. They work at it for about three years and have not a chick or a child to show for it."

My wife Emma bore me strong, vigorous, and healthy children. What a contrast to their boasted system of celestial marriage as a means of raising up a righteous seed!

To brand the testimony of these women as lies might seem ungentlemanly. We might borrow President Roosevelt's expression, and say that they were "constitutionally unable to set a proper valuation on the principle of truth"; but Brigham Young himself did justice to the situation when he boasted that they had the biggest liars in the world. (See Journal of Discourses, volume 4, page 77.) From the class of people of whom he spoke come these living witnesses. Is not their conflicting testimony suspicious?

I confront it with the testimony of my wife, Emma, delivered upon her death-bed:

He had no other wife but me; nor did he to my knowledge ever have. . . . He did not have improper relations with any woman that ever came to my knowledge. . . . I know that he had no other wives than myself, in any sense, either spiritual or otherwise.—Church History (L. D. S.) volume 3, pages 355, 356.

In my last communication I set forth my views on the marriage question as published during my lifetime. These views were based upon the teachings of the Bible, the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, wherein monogamy is enjoined and polygamy condemned. I cited positive proof that under my direction men were expelled from the church during the very last days of my presidency because they were contaminated with the doctrines of free love at that time trying to work its way into every religious organization. To be explicit, the men expelled taught polygamy and were expelled for that reason. These facts should not easily be overthrown by the contradictory testimony of certain women who had an object in view in testifying as they did. If fifty years from now a certain coterie of women testify that President Roosevelt privately taught them "race suicide," will the world accept their testimony or the published teachings of President Roosevelt? Yet it is to be conceded that if a certain combination of circumstances should make it profitable for them to do so women could be found who would so testify. Their testimony under such circumstances would not suffice to blacken his name unless it were unimpeachable and not self-contradictory.

In my particular case the world is confronted with testimony intended to prove that my private teachings were the reverse of my public teachings. To prove such an extraordinary claim the testimony must be above suspicion. I have examined this testimony and have shown that it is a mass of contradictions. Who can believe it?

There is an old book not much read now but considerably affected in my day, Upham's Mental Philosophy. In treating on certain forms of insanity the author says,

There is another class of persons who plainly show a derangement of this power by their readiness to believe everything. . . . They take no note of dates, characters, and circumstances; and, as they find nothing too improbable to believe, they find nothing too strange, marvelous, and foolish to report. This state of mind is frequently an accompaniment of light-headedness.

The esteemed ladies of whom I write took no note of dates or circumstance and nothing was too ridiculous for them to tell or for their associates to believe, providing it would associate me with their polygamous practices and thus give them a shadow of sanctity. That individuals in Utah would not hesitate to do me any injury in order to shield themselves is shown by the fact that the present head of the Mormon Church, Joseph F. Smith, stands in the position of branding his own father as a liar. In the Times and Seasons for March 15, 1844, Hyrum Smith said regarding polygamy, "There is no such doctrine taught here; neither is there any such thing practiced here." To-day his son is among those who say that at that very time I was both teaching and practicing polygamy and that Hyrum knew it. Joseph F. will do this in order to shield himself in the possession of his own five mistresses.

What would he and his associates hesitate to do to my reputation?

In my next communication I shall pay my respects to that venerable fraud, the so-called revelation on celestial marriage. JOSEPH SMITH, per F. E.

NOT A POLYGAMIST.

The Salt Lake Tribune, July 21, contains the following editorial comment on the second number of "Joseph Smith in his own defense."

On last Sunday morning the Tribune printed the second suppositious soliloquy of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon church, which is devoted to impeachment of the testimony of certain women of the Utah Mormon church who claimed to be the plural wives of the first Prophet.

For the purpose of illustrating the unreliability of witnesses procured by the Utah leaders in support of their contention that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, the author selects the cases of Eliza R. Snow, Louisa Beeman, and Zina D. Huntington. In all of these cases it is shown by means of authoritative dates and recorded statements that their marriage to Joseph Smith was an impossibility, unless in each instance each witness must admit that certain other facts connected with their lives were untrue, or that given affirmations by them made were false. From the showing made, and even admitting all of the contentions of the Utah church to be accurate, there is evidence of a most miserable recourse to falsehood. Whether it be contended that these women were the plural wives of Joseph Smith, or whether it be denied that such was true, the unfortunate women are placed in a most embarrassing position. Taking either horn of the dilemma, they appear to the world as having been bereft of conscience, honor, virtue, truth, or decency. And this conclusion is not of the Tribune's construction—it is forced by the evidence produced on both sides. It is a most regrettable exposition of fanatical degeneracy, and an eloquent testimony to the abject slavishness in which Mormon women served the lecherous Utah priesthood.

Aside from the historical data set forth in the article to impeach the pretended plural wives of Joseph Smith, another point is made which would seem to be of value in refuting the polygamous charge laid at the door of the founder of Mormonism by his professed successors in Utah. It is shown that by his legal wife, Emma, Joseph reared a splendid family of robust children, while by no evidence in existence can it be demonstrated that there was any issue whatever from the supposed polygamous unions. In fact, it may be well to supplement the article with the testimony given by President Joseph F. Smith in this respect. He confirms this particular evidence as follows:

"The chairman.—Can you name any person to whom he was married?

"Joseph F. Smith.—Yes, sir.

"The Chairman.—Or any child born to him—

"Joseph F. Smith.—Oh, no; I can not tell you anything about the children."

It is perfectly just to assume that there were no children whatever from these alleged plural marriages of Joseph Smith, otherwise Joseph F. Smith would have been very glad to name them to the Senate Committee. He was engaged at that time in endeavoring to furnish the world with evidence that the founder of Mormonism had introduced and practiced polygamy in the Mormon church, and he would not have missed opportunity to justify his own concubinage by ignoring the important proof available in the birth of children under the practice, had that evidence been available. So it seems to be admitted by the Utah church people that the contention of the Reorganized branch in this particular is well taken.

Two important points have been developed in the communications so far. The one is that Joseph Smith never left upon record his own authorization of polygamy, except we are to give credence to assertions made years after his demise by men steeped in the crime. The other is that at least three of the women who claimed to be plural wives of Joseph Smith occupied no such relation toward him, unless we conclude that in other statements which they made they uttered vicious falsehood. Next Sunday the article will deal with the pretended revelation itself—and this should be interesting indeed.—Salt Lake Tribune, July 21, 1908.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Cleveland Press, July 20, contains very favorable mention of the open-air services conducted by Elder W. E. LaRue at Wade Park, Cleveland, Ohio. These park services are a regular feature of the summer work in Cleveland.

Elders E. Rannie and L. G. Holloway are holding tent-meetings in Madison, South Dakota. They have an illustrated column advertisement in the Madison Daily Leader and have gotten out some neat handbills to call attention to their work.

Bishop C. J. Hunt sends in a handbill on which are printed twenty questions to be answered at his services in Defiance, Iowa. He says, "We have a vacant lot between two store buildings, temporary seats, pulpit made of boxes, a question box put up with printed instructions, a gasoline torch (borrowed), and a good interest."

The McArthur Tribune (Ohio), July 23, has very favorable mention of the character and work of Bro. A. B. Kirkendall, who is probate judge at that place.

The Straight Road

THEY WERE COUNTED AS A STRANGE THING.

AN APPEAL TO THOSE WHO ARE SUPPOSED TO BE TRAVELING THE STRAIGHT ROAD.

We appear to emphasize the six gospel principles named in Hebrews 6, and the form of church organization outlined in Ephesians 4, as a part of the only correct and divinely authorized basis of teaching and government ever given to guide the church of Christ; but any one who will carefully consider the matter, may perceive that this seeming emphasis exists in reality only so far as it has been made necessary from the failure of others to teach and practice them. They are really the outgrowth of the two great precepts upon which all of the divine economy pertaining to human progress is based. Jesus gave the latter as twin frontlets of the celestial will; they are the guiding stars of our destiny, one pointing through the azure vast to the perfect glory of Him whose transcendent blessings are diffused to all his creatures because of his infinite love for them, the other lighting the pathway to that glory by teaching us to be like him in blessing others as we may.

Let us consider them:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 37-40.

I do not know that any one has ever attempted to furnish us a substitute for them "just as good." If they sustain all the rest of the divine regulations for men, then we must conclude that for us to fail in conforming our lives to them is to write failure across our entire religious structure. To teach them is not sufficient; they must be the essence of our thoughts and deeds, otherwise we virtually teach heavenly wisdom, and practice human foolishness—are whited sepulchers, fair nowhere but on the outside.

The world is filled with selfishness. Its venom has paralyzed holy ambitions in many until the religion that they retain in their bosoms is but a putrescent corpse. In the midst of such conditions those who are "the light of the world" can not descend to feed the unnatural appetites, nor condone the weakness that excuses them; but with love actuating them, should point to the only true rule upon which perfect happiness is based, making powerful their precepts by consistent example. But to know what it means to love God supremely is to properly define love. Whose definition shall we accept? Human conceptions are imperfect, but we do not need to receive them as the highest analysis when he who gave the power of speech has revealed the omniscient definition, which in this case he has done. It is written in 1 John 5: 3, "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments."

The love of God embraces the desire to do his will, not so much in the abstract thought as in the concrete action. With such, obedience is not pain, but pleasure; and loss is gain—a few years given for an eternity. This love for God is coextensive with love for man; they can not be disassociated because the former is largely determined by and revealed in the latter. "He who loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."

A simulated religion is worse than none, because it is hypocrisy, of which class Jesus said, "How can ye escape the damnation of hell?" The sharpest denunciations of his life were directed against them. If all men would be true, heaven would dawn here now; and this is the petition we were from infancy taught to make when we prayed, "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Is it not true that we have repeated these words many times? And by whom did we desire God's will to be done when we made that request? Not by the birds nor beasts, but by ourselves, the church—the body of Christ.

It is inconsistent to hope that those who are in darkness will do this until those who are the "light of the world" shall by example dispel the gloom, and gather out the stones from the pathway.

We have assumed a work for God by the very terms of the covenant by which we became his children, and one is as certain as the other to every member of his church. By its provisions we recognize that our hope of celestial happiness does not—can not depend upon the deeds of any or all the mortals of this earth; but, on the other hand, does depend upon our individual acts. This ought to be a source of constant joy, and will be if our lives are commended of heaven.

Let us not portray the other side. We ought not to need it. A heart of flesh pulsating with quick sympathy for all, a noble love whose clarified vision beholds beyond the home gateway, life acts inspired by the divine baptismal fire that consecrates while it purifies, strength of purpose sustained by the heavenly manna and the water of life, and lo! Zion pure, beautiful—an heavenly temple crowned by a bright cloud of glory—angels clothed with celestial light, while glorifying all, the immortal Nazarene in our midst smiles our fears, our sighs, our tears far into the misty past. Ecstatic joy, sublime peace, supreme bliss, are but imperfect expressions of what this, the fruition of our hopes shall be. The choicest words inspiring human thought are weak, and the ink congeals, the pen staggers, the hand palsies, and the brain is impotent in its powerlessness to express that which is far beyond human experiences of all past ages, which "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard," but a glimpse of which God has revealed to us.

For many years have we gone forth with precept upon our lips, while Zion lay desolate through the failure of those whose affections were on "things of earth." The "set time to favor" her had come and she was told that she might be redeemed "even now," if she would keep the celestial law, and so we are here to-day waiting—waiting for what? We are waiting for ourselves to obey the celestial law! Or shall we say that we are waiting for others to obey it? I once heard one say "that the body can not go faster than those at the head will lead." Reverse it! Those at the head can not go faster than the body will follow without resulting in at least a dislocation which must bring serious consequences.

We are drawing near the close of our probation in which we may accomplish that which has been intrusted to us. The time for its completion is almost at hand, it would seem. The "reapers of life's harvest" are not confined to those called to labor in ministerial offices, but embrace all the children of God. Neither need we wait until we bow at the Redeemer's feet to offer him our "gold, frankincense, and myrrh." It may then be too late to find acceptance with him. He may then have no use for them. Every day of our lives is proving where our treasures are, where are our hearts. Convincing argument will never be needed. We are making our most convincing arguments to-day. May God help us to make such as our hearts will approve in the eternal day.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A TRUE PROPHET?

Joseph Smith is counted a false prophet by the world, but the following proves him a true one:

When but a youth of seventeen years, a heavenly messenger appeared and told him that God had a work for him to do, that his "name should be had for good and evil, among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that it should be both good and evil spoken of among all people." The same messenger quoted many prophecies of the Old and New Testaments that speak of the second coming of Christ, the preparatory work to precede the same, and of the final gathering of Israel, with the return of the "former and latter rain" to cause the mountains of Israel to yield their fruit to God's people Israel; "for they are at hand to come," and said they "had not yet been fulfilled, but soon would be." He also said of them, who draw near to God with their mouths, and honor him with their lips, while their hearts are far from him, "(they) will seek its (the restored gospel's) overthrow, and the destruction of those by whose hands it is carried." (See Church History, volume 1, pages 13, 14; also "Letters of Oliver Cowdery," pages 14, 15, 27.)

Joseph Smith's name truly has been had for good, by some, and evil by many among many nations, and there are more to follow. We may note that many of the prophecies quoted by the messenger, that were shortly to be fulfilled, have already received a partial or complete fulfillment. Just such people as mentioned by the messenger have persistently sought the overthrow of the gospel as set forth by Joseph Smith and the "destruction of those by whose hands it is carried." The death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, with many others, proves this statement true.

The translation of the Book of Mormon was Joseph's first, and, in some respects, his greatest work. On it rests much of the claim of divinity for this latter-day work. If it can be proved of divine origin, his claim as a prophet is sustained.

One of the greatest proofs of the divinity of the Bible is that prescience that scans the future and points out alike the destiny of men and nations, even down to the end of time. That same prescience is easily discovered in the Book of Mormon. Many of the predictions of the Bible relating to the second coming of Christ, of the preparing of the way before his second coming, of the return of Israel to their own land, of the restoration of that land to its ancient fertility, etc., have their counterpart in the Book of Mormon.

Nephi said:

I prophesy unto you concerning the last days; concerning the days when the Lord God shall bring these things forth unto the children of men. After my seed, and the seed of my brethren shall have dwindled in unbelief, and shall have been smitten by the Gentiles: yea, after the Lord God shall have camped against them round about, . . . and after they shall have been brought down low in the dust, even that they are not, yet the words of the righteous shall be written; . . . for those who shall be destroyed shall speak unto them out of the ground, and their speech shall be low out of the dust. . . . For thus saith the Lord God: They shall write the things which shall be done among them, and they shall be written and sealed up in a book, and those who have dwindled in unbelief, shall not have them, for they seek to destroy the things of God.—2 Nephi 11: 13.

This is the same "sealed book" Isaiah wrote of in his twenty-ninth chapter. The people of this continent were to write; their words were to be "sealed up in a book," and the "Lord God shall bring these things [their words] forth unto the children of men," in the last days.

The writer goes on to explain what the conditions of the world should be when the book would come forth, and how the learned men could not read it, and how the Lord should say to the unlearned man, "thou shalt read the words which I shall give unto thee."

And again, . . . the Lord shall say unto him that shall read the words that shall be delivered him, . . . Behold, saith the Lord of hosts, I will show unto the children of men, that it is not yet a very little while, and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field; and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest. And in the day shall the deaf hear the words of the book; and the eyes of the blind shall see out of obscurity and out of darkness. . . . Therefore thus saith the Lord, who redeemed Abraham, concerning the house of Jacob, Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face wax pale. But when he seeth his children, . . . in the midst of him [gathered], they shall sanctify my name, and sanctify the Holy One of Jacob, and shall fear the God of Israel.—2 Nephi 11: 19.

Objectors have said, "This is garbled from Isaiah." Not so. It is a more extended account of the book that was to come forth and of the time of its publication than Isaiah gave. It is simply another prophet's prediction of the same book and events. If two prophets speak of the same thing, could not God give them the same language to express their thoughts? If not, how would you explain the fact that in the second chapter of Isaiah we find almost the exact language that is in Micah, fourth chapter?

The principal features of this prophecy are as follows: The people, whose history this book is, should write a book of God's dealings with them; afterwards they were to be "brought down low in the dust"—destroyed. The book was to be "sealed up" and kept from the wicked, but eventually the Lord "shall bring these things [their words] forth unto the children of men"; the learned shall say, "I can not read it"; the unlearned is to read the words that God shall give him, and God shall say to him, "I will show unto the children of men, that it is not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field"; then Israel shall gather home and "sanctify the Holy One of Jacob."

From this we learn that God is to direct affairs, and after he has given the unlearned man power to read the sealed book he is going to show to the world his approval, by giving back to that land its historic productiveness. This, then, is to be the seal of its divinity. Has he filled his promise? Yes.

We will not attempt to give all the proof we have to establish this fact, as space will not admit of much, and the facts are too well known.

Watson's Dictionary of the Bible, published in 1832, two years after the Book of Mormon was published, shows what the condition of Palestine was at that time. He said:

All round about Jerusalem the general aspect is blighted and barren; the grass is withered. . . . The grain itself, like the strange progeny of famine, seems to doubt whether to come to maturity or die in the ear.

About the same time McClintock and Strong's Encyclopedia said of Palestine, "A land of ruins without man or beast."

Thus it was when the Book of Mormon was published. How is it now? Let the Bishop of Jerusalem answer: "When the century (the nineteenth) opened we could scarcely count their hundreds" of Jews in Palestine.

Now they are about one hundred and twenty-five thousand, or three times as many as returned from the captivity in Babylon. The land is also ceasing to sit desolate, it can support a larger population than it now holds. The restoration with efficient regularity of the latter rains, for so many centuries withheld, gives back its historic fertility. . . . God's providence must be concerned in bringing back the exiled race, and we note that his eye is again upon the land for good in the necessary preparation for its inhabitants.—Book of Mormon Tract.

Then Palestine is now "turned into a fruitful field" and the Israelites are returning. A later writer says: "There are two hundred and twenty-five thousand Jews in Palestine, or five times as many as returned after the Babylonish captivity."

Nephi continues to speak of the coming book thus:

And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written. . . . And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land. . . . And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth.—2 Nephi 12:14.

Many have believed the "words written." Many of the Jews are "beginning to believe in Christ." The Bishop of Jerusalem, referred to above, says they are turning toward Christ "all over the world." The following is in evidence on this point:

Reverend Peabody delivered a forceful sermon at the Episcopal church last Sunday evening upon the subject of the Jews and Gentiles, discoursing in a very interesting manner upon this ever wholesome and timely topic. Reverend Peabody showed the remarkableness of the rate at which the Jews as a people have been accepting the Christianity of the Gentiles during the last three quarters of a century.—Cook County, Wyoming, Mirror, December 18, 1903.

That is just about the length of time the Book of Mormon has been in print, and this shows that the Jews are "beginning to believe in Christ."

God commenced "his work among all nations . . . to bring about the restoration of his people" in the same year the Book of Mormon was published. Reverend Hollis Read, A. M., in his book, Hand of God in History, page 348, says that England attempted to pass an act in Parliament "in favor of the Jewish emancipation" in 1830, but it failed. "Yet in the same year a bill in their favor was passed in France." Since that time nearly all nations have favored them. "Jacob shall not now be ashamed, neither shall his face wax pale," as predicted by Nephi.

Another writer in the Book of Mormon said:

Now behold, I say unto you, that when the Lord shall see fit, in his wisdom, that these sayings shall come unto the Gentiles, according to his word, then ye may know that the covenant which the Father hath made with the children of Israel, concerning their restoration to the lands of their inheritance, is already beginning to be fulfilled.—Book of Nephi 13:6.

The same year the Book of Mormon was published (as we have seen, 1830,) measures were inaugurated by different nations that have resulted in the political liberty of the Jews and opened the way for a return to their own land.

We are often asked for a sign that God approves the latter-day work. Christ was accosted with the same demand, and answered:

Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will not believe.—John 4:48.

And then shall no sign be given it, but the sign of Jonas the prophet. For as Jonas was a sign unto the Ninevites, so shall also the Son of man be to this generation.—Luke 11:29, 30.

Jonas was the special sign in his day, Christ in his day, and God has given a sign in our day. Here it is:

Verily, I say unto you, I give unto you a sign, that ye may know the time when these things shall be about to take place, that I shall gather in from their long dispersion, my people, O house of Israel, and shall establish again among them my Zion. And behold, this is the thing which I will give unto you for a sign, . . . when these things which I declare unto you, . . . shall be made known unto the Gentiles, . . . and the works which shall be wrought among you hereafter, shall come forth from the Gentiles unto your seed; . . . it shall be a sign unto them, that they may know that the work of the Father hath already commenced unto the fulfilling of his covenant which he hath made unto the people who are of the house of Israel.—Book of Nephi 9:11.

The gist of this is: The Book of Mormon was to be a sign unto the world, that God would begin his work as soon as the book was published, to restore that land to its promised fertility, gather his people, Israel, back to that land, and "establish again among them my Zion." He has verified his promise, hence the sign is a true one.

The Lord said in the Book of Mormon:

Because my words shall hiss forth [in the last days], many of the Gentiles shall say, A bible, a bible, we have got a bible, and there can not be any more bible.—2 Nephi 12:6.

This is fulfilled almost everywhere the Book of Mormon is mentioned. Other prophecies from the Book of Mormon might be given, but we forbear.

We will next notice two predictions from the Doctrine and Covenants:

Verily thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come, that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place; for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations. And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war. (Revelation given December 25, 1832.)

The late Rebellion was a fulfillment of this prediction. The Southern States did "divide against the Northern States," beginning at the "rebellion of South Carolina." The little rebellion of South Carolina foretold in 1832 led to the final rebellion of 1861, and the war commenced "at that place." The first gun of the Rebellion was fired at Fort Sumter, in South Carolina. The South did call on Great Britain and other nations; since then all nations have been in war, and the end is not yet. Slaves did "rise up against their masters," and were "marshaled and disciplined for war" by the North. Some statements in this prophecy have not yet been fulfilled, for like the interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, it reaches to the end of time.

On December 27, 1832, two days after the above was given, the Lord said to Joseph:

After your testimony, cometh wrath and indignation upon the people; for after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, that shall cause groanings in the midst of her, and men shall fall upon the ground, and shall not be able to stand. And also cometh the testimony of the voice of thunders, and the voice of lightnings, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 25.

Most people are aware of the fulfillment of this prophecy, if they only stop and think. According to the statistics of recorded earthquakes, they have gradually increased from "one in twenty-nine years," about the birth of Christ, to "two hundred and seventy-seven in one year," in 1868. (See Parsons' Text-book, 132.) The late earthquake at San Francisco is fully in harmony with the above. The "waves of the sea" have "heaved themselves beyond their bounds." At Galveston, Texas, a few years ago, "the waves of the sea" destroyed much of the city and thousands of lives, and carried vessels ten miles inland. That was going beyond their bounds. There have been many other tidal waves.

Jeremiah 5: 22 says:

Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it can not pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?

From this, the waves could not pass the bound that God had placed for the sea "by a perpetual decree." But greater disturbance was to take place in these days, and as "God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets," (Amos 3: 7), he had to reveal this change in his plan to "his servant the prophet."

Could an uninspired man make so many prophetic statements and then secure God's power to fulfill them? May God help you to decide this matter aright.

"WE BELIEVE THAT IN THE BIBLE IS CONTAINED THE WORD OF GOD SO FAR AS IT IS TRANSLATED CORRECTLY."

Latter Day Saints have had to be apologists for their faith. The first charge usually is that they do not preach the Bible. Later, often, the charge is made that they preach too much Bible, things that belong to apostolic times, in the opening of the Christian Era, but not to the present.

The absurd and false charge that they substitute the Book of Mormon for the Bible has also been made, and at the times and places where the charge of too much Bible was raised. This would give as a result according to the objector's own estimate, teaching the Book of Mormon—too much Bible, which result, of course, they would not be satisfied with either. To satisfy those given to misrepresentation, being the victims of prejudice, is difficult.

The title of this article has been the basis of as much criticism, perhaps, as any part of the statement of our faith. It has been assailed often as a thrusta at the Bible, yet, it is a true statement of fact clearly made, so much so that it is self-evident. An honest person could not believe otherwise than what the statement contains.

"We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God so far as it is translated correctly." Who should be expected to believe it otherwise than that, "so far as it is translated correctly"?

Long before the Latter Day Saints published that, Wesley was on record in words more severe. In his explanatory notes upon the New Testament, third American edition, New York, published by Hilt and Thomas Ware, for the Methodist connection in the United States, Mr. Wesley says in his preface, paragraph 4:

In order to assist these [people in general.—R. E.] in such a measure as I am able, I design first to set down the text itself, for the most part, in the common English translation, which is in general (so far as I can judge) abundantly the best I have seen. Yet I do not say it is incapable of being brought, in several places, nearer to the original. Neither will I affirm, that the (Greek) copies from which this translation was made, are always the most correct. And therefore I shall take the liberty, as occasion may require, to make here and there a small alteration.

Wesley accepted neither the originals nor the translation, but proposed "as occasion may require, to make here and there a small alteration." Many since have translated to their liking, and made alterations according to choice.

The popular movement for revision by eighty-two scholars of England and America, in the years 1870 to 1884, has been followed by the American Committee's revision. Numerous others have also appeared, before and since. Will it still be a sin for Latter Day Saints to believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly? I hope not.

The St. Louis Christian Publishing Co., offer the public, "The Sacred Writings of the Apostles and Evangelists of Jesus Christ, commonly styled the New Testament, translated from the original Greek, by Doctors George Campbell, James McKnight, and Philip Dodridge, with prefaces, various emendations, and an appendix, by Alexander Campbell, stereotyped from the third edition revised." The first preface bears date of 1826, the third, 1832, the second and fourth not dated, the whole comprising eighty-two pages.

Mr. Campbell's followers, more than any others, have objected to the Latter Day Saints' position. They have also objected strenuously to others, and their own is not satisfying them. In view of this, the following is very interesting.

In the Christian Standard for July 19, 1902, T. A. Hall wrote:

There were no better nor more encouraging things said at the Terre Haute Convention than those said concerning our position. The unanimity was splendid. But how can we hope to restore an apostolic church without an apostolic Bible with which to work? It seems to me that the Christian Church will lose an opportunity, neglect a duty, and, in the end, suffer a penalty, if she does not improve this most opportune time for doing this. We are abundantly able, numerically and financially, to support a clear revision, unhampered by sectarian prejudice or ecclesiastical manipulation. There are revisions galore, but all of them circumscribed in some way. The existence of these make it so that one by our people need not be looked upon as such a departure. Let them call it a "Campbellite Bible"; we are in a woeful predicament when we shirk our duty to avoid epithet. The religious world needs a clear Bible with which to meet the destructive criticisms and the dissipated religious spirit of the present time. The Christian Church itself needs it. The foolish knight enters the lists having previously permitted the adversary to bend his lance. The church needs this also as a means of education. We are getting too much like other people. We need it as a means of awakening. There must be new issues to inspire new life, lest we settle down beneath the halo of our achievements. Our missionary boards could not employ two or three men to better advantage than for this. Let the work run in our leading papers, subject to criticism before final publication. Thus could be gotten and sifted the ideas of the whole brotherhood.

And thus is Alexander Campbell laid in the shade with his eighty-two pages of prefaces, his appendix, etc. They haven't a suitable Bible, and no one else has, as they view it. Mr. Hall thinks: "Thus could be gotten and sifted the ideas of the whole brotherhood." No doubt just that very thing would be brought out—"ideas of the whole brotherhood," and just as much more unprofitable as they are more numerous than their sole chieftain Alexander Campbell. Mr. Campbell thought translation perhaps should occur at intervals of two or three hundred years. But, alas! his own never came into general repute with his followers; and, as Mr. Hall says, "There are revisions galore," and his followers are in hard straits for an "Apostolic Bible."

Passing by numerous previous ones, the title pages of a few of this opening century may be of interest and certainly are pertinent to the issue:

Demand by way of challenge of the higher critics, by the Reverend T. T. Eaton, LL. D., editor of the Western Recorder (Louisville; Baptist). The Literary Digest of March 22, 1902, reports the matter thus:

The modern school of theologians hold that the Bible was written between 800 B. C. and 100 or 150 A. D., so that in the Bible we have the words of great leaders on the problems of religion for nine hundred years. This school regard the Bible as of great spiritual value, but as having the defects of the thinking and beliefs of the men of the times in which it was produced. . . . If these things be true, it necessarily follows that we ought not to be dependent for our Bible on men that lived between 800 B. C. and 100 A. D. Surely in all these eighteen hundred years, with the wonderful progress man has made along all lines, with the correction of so many crude and erroneous ideas held in the long ago, surely a better Bible can be gathered from the words of great leaders about the problems of religion, during the past eighteen hundred years, than was gathered for the nine hundred years previous. To admit that the thought of the leaders in regard to religion between 800 B. C. and 100 A. D. are superior to the thoughts of the leaders in these last days is to surrender the whole case of this modern school of theologians. And just as editors and redactors gathered (according to this modern theory) the good things about religion in the literature of their times, so as to give the world our Bible, so let this modern school furnish some editors and redactors who will gather the good things about religion in modern literature, and give us a Bible that shall be up to date. This new Bible ought to be as much better than the one we now use, as our times are more enlightened than the times of the prophets and apostles. While myself holding to the old view of the exclusive inspiration and the authority of the Bible, I yet would be very glad to see the up to date Bible, and I believe it is incumbent upon the theologians of this new school to furnish such a Bible to the world, so that it may be compared with the Bible of our fathers, and that the theory of modern inspiration may be put to a scientific test. . . . And can any one imagine a good reason why it should not be furnished? Ought not the world to have the best Bible possible? May we not hope that this new school of theologians will give us an up to date Bible?

What next? Latter Day Saints are still safe on position taken: "We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God so far as it is translated correctly."

Joseph Smith translated or corrected the Bible as he was aided by the inspiration of God. Comparison with all that exist reflect its superiority and it is safe to say all that may be developed in the future.

Forty-seven scholars produced the King James and Standard Version. Eighty-two, the Revised. Not satisfied with these, others will not likely satisfy. With these two leading ones, that by Joseph Smith is incomparably the best.

Of General Interest

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Tuesday, September 8, will be the opening day for the year of 1908-09. The prospects for a largely increased attendance is very encouraging. A faculty has been secured that in many respects is the strongest that Graceland has ever had.

For the position of president, Elder David A. Anderson, who graduated from Iowa State University in June, was secured, though he was offered the position as assistant in the department of education at the State University. Brother Anderson was recommended in the highest terms by the university authorities, and with the confidence and support of the membership of the church, we look forward to a successful school year. He will instruct in education and psychology.

We can, and do, present each individual member of our faculty as being proficient and deserving of the confidence and esteem of all. Nothing but thorough work satisfies us at this institution, and the efficient corps of teachers which we have to carry out our several courses of instruction assures a very high class education at a minimum outlay. Furthermore, the unusual amount of literary and musical talent centered in Lamoni lends an air of refinement from which the student body receives benefit. There are many advantages in many ways that we can not speak of for want of space. It is our aim to place the possibility of securing an education suited to the needs of the individual within the reach of every young person in the church or out of it.

Most of us who are older realize fully that we have not been as well prepared as we should have been; we haven't given sufficient time and attention to getting an education, and as a result must occupy the lower positions while those who made themselves thoroughly capable by advance and superior education pass on ahead and occupy the higher positions of trust and responsibility. We realize that we might have done better and that we might be giving a more effectual service than we are now capable of rendering.

Perhaps you are mistaken in thinking that you are too old or that you can not yet do much to improve yourself. Our courses are so arranged that we can help you if you will put forth the effort. Surely those who are parents will do all in their power to attend to the educating of their children. Write to President Anderson about your needs and he will be glad to do all in his power to assist you. Remember that it does not require a great amount of money nor a good education to enter Graceland. Any one can attend our college and secure his education if he is willing to work and study. Many have paid their expenses through college by working part time for citizens of Lamoni or in the industrial department of the college. We take special pleasure in assisting those who must earn their way through school and still do not in any way overlook the needs of those who are able to pay their way as they go.

THE LIBERAL ARTS COURSE

is first in importance, providing the higher education which means so much to its possessors. This requires four years for completion—the entrance requirements being practically the same as those of the leading educational institutions of the country. In this department of the work there is provided instruction in English, Greek, Latin, German, French, education, psychology, mathematics, chemistry, physics, geology, botany, biology, history, etc. If you are not qualified to take up this regular college course we have which is designed especially for your benefit. After the completion of this course you have freshman standing in the liberal arts college. Here you are associated with others of your own age and size and the embarrassment of being in classes with those so much younger than yourself is removed. Remember that we are your servants and that we shall be glad to help you along.

Competent teachers are in demand as they have never been in the past. Our makes a special point of combining the means for scholarship and professional training in such a way as to qualify the teacher to satisfy the demands that are now made of the teaching profession.

THE COMMERCIAL SCHOOL

is an important and popular department of our college, since it gives the students special preparation for positions that are ever open to those who are ready to occupy as accountants, bookkeepers, stenographers, typewriters, etc., in the great business world.

Then others of you will find just what you have been wanting in the INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT.

The manual training and direct experience provided will enable you to enter into the important and noble fields of the industrial world ready to meet every demand in a superior way.

THE SCHOOL OF MUSIC

furnishes most excellent advantages in both vocal and instrumental work, together with attendant branches. The instruction given is according to the most approved methods of our best musical colleges, and by competent teachers. It should be remembered also that the rates of tuition are very low.

THE SCHOOL OF ORATORY

meets a wide demand by affording training to the mind along with the ability to correctly and effectively express thought. The minister, teacher, merchant, banker, farmer, all need to be able to use their voices and to make themselves understood. This phase of the college work is not overlooked but is receiving its share of attention.

ATHLETICS.

It is admitted by nearly every one that students should give some time to athletic training to give them strong bodies for their work. The department of athletics in Graceland College will be under the direction of Roy V. Hopkins, of Princeville, Illinois, who comes to us highly recommended as an instructor as well as director of athletics, and we feel confident that the work will be safe in his hands.

We can say but little for the college here at this time. Every lesson is taught by a teacher who is a specialist. Every student will be given individual attention and every inquirer will be cordially and carefully answered. We want to give you the information you may desire. Just write to the president, D. A. Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa, for a catalogue, or with reference to any matter regarding the school, and you will receive the information if it can be furnished.

At present the Board of Trustees is making a strenuous effort to secure funds for the erection of a second dormitory. The one we have is a great success, but it is small. Our needs are great along this line. The proposed dormitory will cost five thousand dollars and will provide room for thirty-four lady students, together with reception-room, a dining-room having capacity to accommodate more than sixty boarders, apartments for keeper, help, etc. However, they are determined not to incur additional indebtedness in this work and unless immediate response is made it can not be provided for use this fall, even though its need is so urgent. The Board of Trustees appointed Daniel Anderson, chairman of the board, and President D. A. Anderson as their committee to raise the necessary funds. The effort is being made to secure fifty subscribers of one hundred dollars each and half of the entire amount is promised by citizens of Lamoni where the needs are most fully known. A few Saints have been written to regarding this matter, and if they or any others who are willing to contribute will write to the brethren on this committee making subscriptions, the building will be erected at once.

EXPENSES.

In making comparison of the cost of attending school at Graceland with that while attending other educational institutions, we find that our college enjoys a great advantage. This is made possible by the work of the industrial department. We are now able to provide most of our own vegetables, eggs, butter, milk, and meat from our own farm. Everything is fresh and pure. We are glad to be able to make these provisions for the benefit of our students. The catalogue gives full information in reference to expenses. Ask for one.

STRANGE MEN CLAIM STRANGE POWERS.

(This article is given for what it may be worth. Latter Day Saints have reason to know that newspaper reports of the doings and teachings of religious bodies are not always on a par with scripture so far as truthfulness is concerned.—HERALD Editors.)

A NEW CHURCH AT MASON CITY.

MASON CITY, Iowa, July 18.—The residence in this city of two men who style themselves divine healers, in the persons of the Reverend Francis Schlatter, who created such a furore in Denver, Colorado, six or eight years ago, where he is claimed to have healed thousands in the streets, and the Reverend Schrader, who was head of the "Divine Catholic Church," has developed a wonderful story in connection with the lives of these men as related by themselves. Father Schlatter claims to be no less than James Alexander Dowie, brother of the famed John Alexander Dowie, who founded the Zion church at Chicago and who died a few months ago.

Last week the two churches, headed by the two men, were united in one, and will be called the Holy

Christian Science Church. The Reverend Schlatter retains his place at the head and will be known as "general overseer and superior leader." Officially he will be known as "His Majesty Most Reverend Francis Schlatter, James Alexander Dowie." The Divine Catholic Church, which has a membership of fifty thousand people, ceases to exist, and with the union with the Science Church makes a membership of two million five hundred thousand. The Reverend Schrader gives up his title to Pope August and will be known in the church directory as "His Highness, the Very Right Reverend Schrader, Superior Minister and General Director of the Holy Christian Science Church."

With the vanishing of the Holy Catholic Church in name goes all the church ritual, its ceremony and forms. The candles and pictures which were used in profusion will go and the places of worship of the new church will be plain rooms, with no furniture save the seats and readers' desk. Each church is to have seven readers, the mystic number ranging from first reader to seventh, each to have specific powers and duties. They will get no salary, but each church will pay the expenses of its readers when on duty, maintain the church building and a reading-room which is to be open to the public twice each week, Sunday and Wednesday.

The union of the two churches is to pave the way for the presentation of the fifteen books of Moses, which has recently been discovered by revelation by Francis Schlatter. The books were written by Moses, and while the present world is in possession of but three and a half books, the others are soon to come. Father Schlatter in a dream saw on the continent of Europe, just where he refused to state, a great dome-shaped excavation in the earth. It covered fifteen acres, had fifteen doors, each door locked with fifteen keys and the keys in the hands of fifteen men. These men were controlled by divine will, according to Father Schlatter, and it is to he and he alone that the revelation of their whereabouts and the power to secure them has been revealed.

These wonderful books are the original from the hands of Moses. They were chiseled by him on slate, and that is the condition they have been received in. Why they have not been revealed to the world before Francis Schlatter explains is due to its sin and its ignorance. People have violated the law of God, and the churches in their bigotry have prevented the revelation, preferring to keep the people in ignorance. The great gaps in Bible history between Adam and Noah is to be revealed in detail, as well as the story of the years of childhood of Christ from his birth to the age of twelve, which are absent from the modern Bible. All this is to be told, and much more. The Reverend Schlatter claims to be able to reveal to the people the secret of his power of healing. In these twelve books will be explained the laws of living and of life and the secret of the art of longevity, of which the Bible only gives a glimpse in the stories of the old patriarchs. They will come, says the Reverend Schlatter, in the fullness of time. Within a few months at the outside, or as soon as the last book can be completed, and the manuscript of the fifteen sent to the bookmaker and printed. Their astounding revelations the Reverend Schlatter will not reveal only by inference. He evades all questions as to their contents, or to give, for instance, something of the story by giving off-hand the absent details of the life of the Nazarene.

But while the Reverend Schlatter is a little reticent about his books, he is ready to talk of his family. He was born, he says, of a Scotch father and a German mother in Glasgow, Scotland, sixty-eight years ago, six years after John Alexander Dowie. At the age of eight, God appeared to him in a dream in which he revealed to him his future life, and what was expected of him, and that he would be favored with peculiar divine favor and power. He kept his secret for a time, but what was his surprise to learn that his brother, John Alexander, had received a similar revelation. The surprise was mutual, and the brothers at once set about thinking out their plan of action. Finally one was revealed to John Alexander, the elder, that he should take the family name of Dowie, which for two generations before was famed for its powers as divine healers, and that James should take the name of the maternal grandfather, Schlatter, which was done. From that day to the end of John Alexander Dowie's life the two men worked separately, and the world never knew of the relationship till the death of Dowie in Chicago, when some way an inkling of the relation between the two men was brought to light.

As a young man Schlatter spent his time on the continent of Europe working his miracles of healing, and something like thirty years ago came to America, where his grandfather, Henry George Dowie, organized the Christian Science Church in 1801, of which the Eddyites are a branch, and here sixteen years ago the father of Dowie died. His first work, he says, was when a boy of healing a woman who had typhoid fever, and who immediately recovered her health and usual strength, and from that day to this his power has not waned, and he has traveled the entire country healing and relieving humanity of physical suffering. His greatest work was in Denver, Colorado, about ten years ago, where thousands were reported healed in the streets. A few days after this wonderful manifestation of power the Reverend Schlatter disappeared. He left for a mountain retreat, and later got possession of a white horse which he rode into Arizona, and one day while in prayer upon a mountain the animal broke its fastenings and left, and the Reverend Schlatter found his way out of his mountain retreat as best he could.

In one particular, at least, he resembles the man who he says was his brother, and that is in the violence of his language when confronting opposition. The merest protest or interference with him will bring down a torrent of abuse that borders the profane. The Reverend Schlatter has no use for intemperance, and the sight of a drunken man will enrage him in a moment. For that reason he is not a popular speaker, and no matter how large the audience he opens his vitriolic tirade upon, before he has spoken long empty seats stare him in the face. He thinks most people possessed of a devil or they would not have the trouble they do.

The secret of his power, the Reverend Schlatter says, is in his manner of life. He lives up to the law of God in every particular. He has never tasted a stimulant of any character from the mild beverages of the breakfast table down to the purest bourbon. Tobacco in any form is shunned, and meat never passes his lips. He lives on prayer and vegetables, and says he is in perfect health, as a glance at his clear skin and sparkling eye will amply testify.

What the new church will accomplish will remain to be seen. It is the hope of these two apostles to establish a church here in Mason City and to make this the headquarters of the Science Church of the world. Time will tell.—Register and Leader, July 19, 1908.

Are We Thinking?

"The use which God is able to make of two men in this world depends on the amount of the consecration—consciousness that is in their lives and souls. . . . It does not take great men to do great things, it only takes consecrated men."
—Philip Brooks.

Heretofore our efforts to direct the minds of our readers to consider the claims of Graceland upon the church have been entirely directed to the thought that an obligation rested upon the church to sustain this our one institution of learning by their patronage, their means, and their prayers. But now we come to ask in regard to Graceland herself. Has she any duties to the church, and if so what are they? Let it be understood that it is not our purpose to discuss the duties of Graceland simply as an institution of learning; but if, as we have heretofore maintained, Graceland has special claims upon the church, does it not follow, or at least is it not supposable, if these claims are met by the church, that thereby Graceland also incurs some special obligation to the church?

This we think none will deny; and, if not mistaken, we feel quite sure that in consonance with this view the church is looking to Graceland as a means in the hands of God of not only fitting her sons and daughters to go forth into the world prepared to contend successfully for maintenance and honorable positions; but far beyond and above all this has not the church a claim upon her that she shall also, as much as in her lies, fit her sons and daughters that their lives, their conduct may help to establish the kingdom of God and his righteousness?

"But Graceland," you say, "is not a sectarian school—neither a theological seminary. It is simply an institution of learning." We grant you this, and wish it distinctly understood that we have no reference whatever to any creed or doctrine; but is Graceland or is it not a Christian school? Those who have prayed most and labored most for its establishment have surely believed that this was not only the intent of its founders, but that indeed and in truth through each and every department of its conduct and management, Christianity pure and unadulterated was the keynote, the rock upon which it was founded.

This, then, being true, it is most natural that the church, in making her special claims upon Graceland, while she may well ignore creeds and doctrine, can not afford to abate one jot or tittle of her demand that it be the Christ spirit, the spirit of the gospel which shall permeate this school, and in just so far as it is possible the law which regulates temporal matters in the church which has founded and fostered this school shall also regulate its temporal affairs. If not, how then shall the church escape the condemnation of saying to one, "Sit thou here in a good place" and to another, "Stand thou here, or sit here under my footstool"? Are we thinking?

The gospel brought to the earth, and established by the Son of God, differs not one whit in this respect from the gospel brought to Joseph Smith by the angel. Christ said:

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me. . . . If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me."

The restored gospel comes with the demand: "The laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish"; or as expressed in a later revelation: "Haply they themselves may be saved (if doing no evil) though their glory which is given for their works, be withheld, or in other words their works are burned, not being profitable to me."

Is this view of the matter extreme, or is it really the plan of God? Is it a feature peculiar to the church which has nourished and is sustaining Graceland, or is it the very vitalizing principle of Christianity? Of it Reverend James M. Taylor, President of Vassar College, in a recent address entitled, "The ministry of education to life,"* in speaking of the responsibility of the teacher, has this to say: "But when we come to this responsibility of the school we are brought face to face with the teacher. Who is the teacher who has to bear this responsibility and to do this work? Where shall we find him? Where shall we find her? I suppose that what is so commonly said is partially true at least: that the great teacher is born and not made, and as seldom born as the great poet; but we have methods of making teachers, and excellent methods, too,—methods so good that good teachers are frequent; and may be made more frequent; and their products excellent.

"But whether born or made, there is one essential without which a teacher is not worth his or her salt. That is the missionary spirit, the spirit of service, the spirit which gives and asks no return but the joy of seeing fruitage from its work."

It is this spirit of service, this missionary spirit, which ever goes hand in hand with the gospel, and without which the gospel is but a dead letter that the church has a right to inquire: "Is it dominating Graceland?" It is not enough—far from it—that we know it has and is dominating those who are struggling to sustain our school; but is it dominating those who are teaching in that school, is a question of far greater moment to the church and the students of Graceland.

There is a wonderful power in example. "The man who lives right and is right, has more power in his silence than another man by his words." "It is a hard problem," said a prominent elder to us recently, "to teach our children the duty of laboring and sacrificing for the church, when constantly reminded by the obvious example of others that it is not done by those who are called upon to be examples for them. They are too young to have tasted the joy of giving freely without hope of return, and wonder why they may not do as others in the church are doing."

Could we but know and fully realize the force and power of example, would we ever be willing to cast its weight upon the wrong side? Can any one afford to give up the greater for the less? Christ offered to exchange with the young man treasure in heaven for his perishable earthly possessions; but he went away sorrowful, because his possessions were great, and he knew nothing of the joy which the ability and willingness to serve brings with it. Do we know, and are we thinking?

"Not merely by trying not to be selfish; but by entering into the new joy of unselfish consecration—so only shall you kill your selfishness."

*This address is so replete with grand and noble thoughts that it is our intention to give it entire to our readers in future numbers of the Home Column.

SAN BERNARDINO, California.

Editors Herald: As I never have written to the HERALD I thought I would write some upon the Sabbath question. I was troubled so much by the Adventists that I have concluded to protect myself. I write this for their benefit, and perhaps for the benefit of some others. I hope such will be the case at least.

A small body of people known as Seventh-day Baptists arose in 1664. They are, to-day, very few in number. In 1846 Seventh-day Adventists began teaching the Jewish Sabbath.

Few other people ever met with more disappointments during their existence, or made so many blunders. Miller, the founder of the Advent movement, finally opposed the Sabbath, and warned his followers against its observance. Scores of their most prominent ministers have at different times renounced the faith as an error. Many have been driven into infidelity as a result of mistakes of Adventism. The whole system is a yoke of bondage. Let them, if they can, prove that Adam kept the Sabbath, or that Abel, in presenting his holy offering to God, pleased him by Sabbath-keeping; or that Enoch who was translated was an observer of the Sabbath.

The Sabbath was not enjoined upon man, nor observed by the people of God, till Moses' time, or for two thousand five hundred years after creation. The early church did not believe that the Sabbath originated at creation. I shall give some reasons why the Adventist argument is unsound. The book of Genesis was not written at the time of creation, but two thousand five hundred years later, by Moses himself.

"And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made."

This is all they have to hold to. In fact this statement of Moses' in Genesis 2:2, 3, was not written until after the covenant, enjoining the seventh-day Sabbath upon the Jews, had been delivered upon Sinai.

Now we will examine scripture:

"Keep the sabbath day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee."—Deuteronomy 5:12. It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath."—Leviticus 23:32. "Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath day."—Exodus 35:2, 3.

If we are under that kind of a law, why not put them to death? Notice that they must not kindle a fire throughout their habitations upon the Sabbath day. What would you do in a very cold country? You would have to stay in bed all day. They must neither bake nor boil on that day:

"And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, To-morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning."

So you see Advents must stay in the house all day; and must do without fire. I think they would get awful tired of lying in bed.

"See, for that the Lord hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day."—Exodus 16:29.

Bro. Advent, I am clinching you a little tighter. They were stoned to death for picking up sticks on the Sabbath day:

"And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the sabbath day. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation. And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done unto him. And the Lord said unto Moses, The man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses.—Numbers 15:32-36.

Now if you are going to keep the seventh day, when a man transgresses the law, stone him to death. The law is of no value unless you can enforce it. The rest of you better follow Mr. Miller's example, forsake the error and seek after the truth. The Jewish law can not be kept, without suffering from cold, or for warm food. They drive their teams many miles on the Sabbath. They can not keep the Sabbath according to the law of Moses, nor do they stone those who fail to keep the law.

In Liverpool the sun sets Friday evening, at seven o'clock, which in San Francisco, California, would be ten minutes of eleven Friday morning. When the Adventist in Liverpool, England, begins to keep the Sabbath, Friday evening, their brethren in San Francisco, California, have eight hours and ten minutes yet to work. Now, do the Lord and the angelic hosts keep Sabbath with the Adventists in Liverpool, or in San Francisco? If with the Sabbatarians in Liverpool, then those in San Francisco are working eight hours and ten minutes while the angelic host keep the Sabbath.

Let two Adventists start from Chicago, one going east the other west, around the earth, each keeping carefully the seventh day, as the sun sets. When they meet again in Chicago, they will be two days apart. One will be keeping Sunday, the other Friday. How will they manage it? Each has given up his seventh day, and taken that of the world, so they have only a wordly day after all.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 3, 1908.

Editors Herald: The Kirtland District will hold its reunion and conference at Hamburg, Pennsylvania, August 7 to 16 inclusive. In connection with this reunion a few remarks may be timely. First, we are sorely in need of help, both for labor and cash. I have written to twenty-six members of the reunion association who promised to pay one dollar a year membership fee and only two have responded. All have had sufficient time to respond up to date. We need prompt action, Saints. We intend to care for the ministry free of charge, but this motto should apply to them, especially if they are in good health: He that will not work shall not eat. Ministers should not advise each other to stay away until the tents are put up and reunion started in good shape to avoid being put to work. Ministers can wait on the table once in a while and be generally handy if they want to. Let us all work and we will succeed. I should have your orders at least fifteen days before reunion begins for tents and cots, so none will be disappointed. Send all orders to the undersigned. Write M. H. Headly, Route 51, Transfer, Mercer County, Pennsylvania, when you expect to go. Go via the Pennsylvania Railroad. Send orders and money to me, Box 28, Cleveland, Ohio.

EBEN MILLER.

Editors Herald: You may already have received from some of the brethren who were in attendance, an account of the reunion which was held out in the sandhills of McPherson County, Nebraska.

As we rode out from North Platte, by team, over the twenty-five miles necessary to reach the meeting-place, we wondered where the people would come from to attend the meetings; for it is a sparsely settled region. However, Saints came by team one hundred and forty miles from Chase County, and by rail from various distances, and the meeting was pronounced a success. Although there were no additions, a good feeling prevailed, Saints were encouraged, and friends made to the cause.

On the 7th, after the close of the reunion, I came with Bro. Stewart Godfrey to the neighborhood of Lena post-office where reside three families of Saints besides his, and they had not been visited by an elder for more than a year. Last night I talked to them at the home of Bro. Nathan Bassett, and they were so hungry for the word they were willing to meet every night this week for the same purpose. I expect to remain over Sunday with them. This is indeed a lonesome region, for under the Kincaid law men take six hundred and forty acres of this land for a homestead and that makes the neighbors a long way apart. But some move away, as soon as they get title to land, so, in this whole township there are only about a dozen resident families. The nearest railroad town is about twenty-eight miles. Settlers find little valleys of fairly good land, so that a little farming is done. I am told that corn and small grain do tolerably well, while potatoes and all kinds of garden vegetables are raised in abundance on choice spots. Some of the Saints are looking forward to a removal to more congenial surroundings.

Yours in gospel bonds,

LEVI GAMET.

COFFEYVILLE, Kansas, July 12, 1908.

Dear Herald: We often read of those who know of people who would read tracts if they had them, but they themselves are too poor to buy them. If any one who can not afford to buy them, will please write to me, I will send them some if they will give them only to those whom they know, or have good reasons to know, will read them. Often a soul in darkness sees the great light by reading a tract.

Write to this address: R. F. D. No. 2, Box 37, Coffeyville, Kansas.

State how many you can use and on what subject you would like the tracts. A good many may see this and it might be that I will not be able to send to all, but write anyway. Let us sow the good seed. The Lord will take care of the harvest.

A BROTHER.

TIOGA, Texas, July 16, 1908.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home, and I do not see how I can get along without it, as it is all the preacher we have. I have not heard one of our elders for several years, and I take this method of letting them know our address and that we want some preaching here in the near future.

We are the only family of Saints here. We have several children that I want to be members of the church, and I think they will obey if they have an opportunity of hearing. I want, if possible, one or two of our best elders to come here in August and try to open up a new place for preaching. I live here in a hotbed of Campbellites, and they say they are aching for a debate with one of our elders. My closest neighbor is one of them. Yesterday he sent me one of their church papers, the Firm Foundation, it is called. It has in it an account of the debate just closed at Sonatine, Texas, between Bro. Aylor and one of their men. To hear them tell, we were beaten on all sides. The paper states several questions asked Bro. Aylor, saying he failed to answer all but two of them. I would send you the clipping, but need it for future use.

I live four miles west of the town Gunter, Grayson County, on the Frisco road. My doors are open at all times to the elders or to any true Saint. My post-office address is Tioga. I have a telephone connected with Gunter. So if any of the elders come and will telephone to me I will meet them in Gunter. My telephone number is fourteen, four rings. I would like to correspond with any of the elders who think they may be able to come here in the next month and meet these Campbellites. And I am very anxious to have the debate, as I have never heard one, and it might be the means of strengthening my faith, as I feel my weakness. But still I am contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may hold out faithful to the end.

In the one faith,

C. R. KEITH.

HUNTINGTON, West Virginia, July 12, 1908.

Dear Herald: We have written three times to your columns, but for some reason our letters have not been published. We are anxious to have this published, as we have friends who we want to know our whereabouts.

We are trying in our old age to live to be called worthy either to go to him, or to be prepared to meet him, if he should see fit to come before he has called us from our earthly tabernacles.

We have no associations with the Saints, as there are none that we know of around this place. We have not met with the Saints in worship for nearly four years. We attend some of the Holiness meetings and Sunday-school, but to us it is not the food that our souls long for. However, I believe they are able to set people to thinking about their souls' welfare in a way some other denominations do not.

My husband was appointed a deacon in 1904 by U. W. Greene, but we have never been where he could do his duty. He is desirous that the Saints pray that he may be situated where he may exercise in his calling. We are trying to serve God, but have little encouragement outside of the HERALD and Autumn Leaves. Pray for us that we may ever hold fast that which is good and that God may open the way for us to meet and worship with the Saints. We will be pleased to meet any of the elders at our home. We have heard that there were some of our elders at Ironton, Ohio. If so and they see this letter, we hope they will call on us or write and let us know of their whereabouts.

LOTTA and G. F. TAMPLIN.

FULTON, Iowa.

Editors Herald: We are trying to hold aloft the gospel banner here. We have a nice Sunday-school and there is much interest manifested by the children. On June 14 we had children's day, the program was good, and the children performed well. The house was full and quite a number of strangers were present. We also have a fair turnout at preaching-services and yesterday we had the pleasure of baptizing five precious souls into the kingdom. The day was warm and sultry, yet we had a good attendance. One young man we think will be useful if faithful. We look for more to follow.

At our Wednesday evening prayer-meetings our united petitions have been for the Lord to bring those near the Saints to a knowledge of the truth. We feel cheerful at the present.

I wish to make an appeal to the Saints of the Eastern Iowa District. I am short of means to pay the elders' families. I have only a few dollars on hand for the month. Do not wait until you get a nice sum on hand, but send now what you have. The families will either have to wait for their allowances, or I will have to call on the Bishop for help. I know some of the tithe-payers have moved into the stakes, which may be good for them, but we miss the tithing they paid. Now when you read this, please respond at once, those of you who can. Surely you will in no wise lose your reward. Some do nobly, others could do better, according to the way I look at the tithing law.

I hope to see those of the northern part of the district at the coming conference and reunion, if all is well.

Your brother,

JOHN HEIDE.

SOUTH ADDISON, Maine, July 9, 1908.

Editors Herald: I appreciate the letters so much from the brethren and sisters that I feel it a duty to contribute, even if it is not much. Let us use what talent the Lord has given us. "To him that hath shall be given, to him that hath not even that which he hath shall be taken away." The more we study the gospel the dearer it is.

The Lord says we should not be idle, "for he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." In the autobiography of Bro. LaRue, some weeks ago, I was made to rejoice. It strengthens me so much each time I read it. I have read it to some friends. This gospel can not be reckoned by dollars and cents.

We have had a number of beautiful and instructive sermons here during the past three weeks by Bro. Bullard. The attendance has been small, but God has promised and will keep his promise. The time has come in this place when they can not endure sound doctrine. Truly we are living in the last days. The harvest is plenty, but the laborers are few. May the Lord's people live nearer to him, so he will bless them as he has promised. Ever praying for the welfare of the people of God, I remain,

Your sister,

BLANCHE REYNOLDS.

ST. CLAIR, Michigan, July 13, 1908.

Dear Herald: We have bidden good-bye to one who has become dear to us through gospel association. I refer to Bro. J. W. Wight. During his stay with us, the weather being very warm, it was thought best to hold meetings in the park. This he did Sunday afternoon and evening to a large and attentive audience. We felt impressed with the beauty of the surroundings as we sat under the gently waving branches, with the brightly burning electric lights, and in full view of the blue waters of the St. Clair River, carrying on its bosom the commerce of a great nation. We were forcibly reminded of the words of Daniel and Nahum, as the swift cars and the boats loaded with pleasure-seekers passed on their way and the intensely earnest words of the speaker reverberated on the air with the glad gospel message. The deep solemnity of the scene impressed my mind as I looked at those assembled and thought of their responsibility before God in hearing the gospel news. In imagination I pictured some who were standing there listening to the echo of eternal words to their own condemnation when those words would meet them at the great judgment bar. Can we truly realize what a solemn position we occupy, chosen to hold aloft the gospel banner of King Immanuel to a dying world, to multitudes whose sad hearts carry a vague, unsatisfied longing that can never be satisfied and who try to down their sad longings in vain worldly pleasures. There is a terrible reality in the responsibility that has been given us with the gospel. How far are we held accountable for our brother's blood? Will the trifling, foolish words spoken so lightly be remembered as a swift witness against us when we stand before God? Oh, that our responsibility before God would weigh heavily on each heart, that we might become pure in heart before God, as only the pure in heart shall see God!

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

PAONIA, Colorado.

Editors Herald: We are still in the faith and trying to do what we can for the cause. We have a nice little Sunday-school that we hold at ten o'clock and I preach every Sunday night at a schoolhouse. Last Sunday we had fifty-five out for the evening meeting. The first night we had twenty. So the interest seems to be good. The Lord has raised up friends for the cause. When we first came they would not let us have the schoolhouse, but they are beginning to know who we are and the prospects are good.

I pray that we may so live that we may be used to the honor and glory of God, and may we, dear Saints, strive to honor the Lord in our lives. We are living in a day when we should live close to the Lord. I rejoice in this great latter-day work, for I know that it is God's work, and that it will stand.

We will find a home for any of God's servants when coming this way, and a place to preach. May the Lord help us all to be humble and may we walk in the light the Lord has been pleased to give us and may we continue to the end of the race. Remember me before the Lord, and may God speed the right.

Your brother in the one faith,

GARRY WALLING.

CATONVILLE, Texas, July 14, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am still in the conflict and on the battle-field, striving for the right and battling for the Master as best I can in my weak way. I am feeling well spiritually, knowing that God is in the work, rejoicing to know that God is God and that the gospel is true. Though the heathens rage and the people imagine vain things, God's word will not return void, but it will accomplish the things whereunto he has sent it. Jesus will continue the work until there is a people prepared to meet him when he comes to earth again.

I am domiciled at Sr. Aarons'. Her noble husband is not a member of the church, but he is kind to us and the work. I am preaching at this place, a new place, and have good crowds, good liberty, and some interest, I think. I am all alone in northeastern Texas, none of the brethren being able to reach me as yet. I have lots to do; more calls than I can attend to, and I feel very lonely, having been deprived of my former associate, Bro. E. A. Erwin, who has been with me ever since I joined the church. He has been sent to my native State, Tennessee. I would have been glad to go with him, but I will try to be content with my lot, praying that God will bless him in his new field, as also all the servants of the Lord, to do a good work this year.

Your brother in bonds,

P. B. BUSSELL.

MARION, Indiana, July 19, 1908.

Dear Saints: I am an isolated Saint, not another member to talk to. I have thought many times to write that the Saints may know of the faith and the hope that I have.

There have been many times when I have felt as though I was nothing. I can see so little that I have done or am doing, but last night I had a dream, and I have dreamed this same dream a good many times. But last night it awakened me, or, rather, I woke up for some reason or other. In this dream I was in a very large house. I could see no kitchen nor dining-room, only parlor, bedrooms, and small halls. The furnishings were beautiful and of different colors. The proprietor's room was pure white, woodwork and all, and the doors were large, folding doors of white. They were people I had worked for when I was a girl, and they gave me permission to pick out my room. So I went from room to room to find one that suited me best. I was all alone and was a little nervous, because I did not want to select a room where anybody had died, if I knew it. So I tripped lightly along trying not to wake up anybody. Finally I came to a large room which I thought was all right. Just then two women came to me whom I knew, and we sat down and talked. We were admiring the beautiful room and talking, when I awakened. This dream impresses me that if I will live faithful I will dwell with the Savior, that it was Christ and his Father who were in the beautiful snow white room. I have felt lifted up all day.

Dear Saints, pray for me and my husband that he may become a member of the right church. I hope some one will interpret my dream for me. My prayers are always for the Saints.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Sunday-school officers recently elected for the second half of this year were, superintendent, Miss Orpha Emslie; assistant superintendent, Ray Chandler; secretary, Miss Alice Mintun; treasurer, Miss Sadie Castings; organist, Mrs. Emma Allen.

Two dozen of the Graceland Receipt Books were disposed of in the branch here in one week, and more were ordered to supply the demand for them.

The date of the coming district reunion is August 27 to September 6, the meeting to be held at Baxter, Jasper County, thirty-five miles northeast of Des Moines, on the Chicago Great Western Railway. The reunion committee, the district presidency, have prepared a circular letter, and through it they are making an effort to reach every member of the church in the district, in the interest of the reunion.

July 27.

A. A. REAMS.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The last Sunday in June an enjoyable parent and cradle roll day program was rendered. Quite a number of little folks were given diplomas, graduating them from the cradle roll to the infant class. Six new names were added to the cradle roll list.

Regular monthly priesthood meeting of the branch was held July 14 when the latter part of Section 83 of the Doctrine and Covenants was discussed.

Tent meetings are being held in Lansdowne, and good interest and attendance are reported. We understand three were baptized there last Sunday.

Our Fourth of July picnic was an enjoyable event when a large number of Saints and friends gathered together and enjoyed amusements arranged by the committee, and pleasant social intercourse with each other.

While some are rejoicing, some are called to mourn. Miss Wierhake, a young lady who during her illness became greatly interested in the gospel, passed away the morning of the 17th. By her request Bro. Tanner preached her funeral-sermon. Our choir had charge of the singing, and eight of our young men acted as pall-bearers.

Another very sad affair was the sudden ending of the life of little nine-year-old George Crowson of Alton, who while playing ball the morning of the 17th was run down by a street-car and injured so severely that he died the evening of the same day. Bro. Tanner conducted the funeral-sermon Sunday the 19th.

Bro. Wallace Robinson gave us a short call one Sunday morning, and gave the Sunday-school a talk on normal work.

Release and Change of Appointment.

Bro. Nelson V. Sheldon, who has been in charge in Galland's Grove and Little Sioux Districts, having resigned from the missionary force on account of failing health and his consequent removal of location to the West, his resignation is accepted. Bro. Sheldon is a safe and able representative and we cheerfully recommend him to all with whom he may associate.

We have found it necessary to transfer Bro. Paul M. Hanson from Lamoni Stake to take the place of Bro. Sheldon in charge of the above named field. We trust he will be received with confidence and hearty support, for he is worthy.

HEMAN C. SMITH, for the ministers in charge.

Marriages.

BANTA—PITKIN.—At the home of the bride's parents July 18, 1908, Albert J. Banta and Jessie L. Pitkin, of Lamoni, Iowa, were married by Elder John Smith.

Died.

WALSH.—Sr. Susan Walsh. Susan May Hougas, youngest daughter of Thomas and Harriet Hougas, was born August 4, 1881. Was baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church July 24, 1892. Was married to Thomas Walsh, December 4, 1907. She passed peacefully away on the morning of June 27, 1908, at the home of her husband near Verona, Illinois. She leaves to mourn, a father, mother, six brothers, and numerous relatives. The funeral-services were held in the Saints' church at Mission, Elder J. Midgorden in charge, sermon by Elder Charles H. Burr.

The August Century is their "midsummer holiday number," and in keeping with the idea of vacations and outings, when people relax and shun mental effort, this number is conspicuously a fiction number. It contains ten complete short stories. "Nuf sed" along that line, but we make the additional statement that there are also other good things. These alone, however, should insure taking the Century on every vacation this summer.

On Taking Credit to Yourself for Being Virtuous.

In the August American Magazine David Grayson, author of "Adventures in contentment," tells "The story of Anna." It is the story of a "woods child," delicately told. In the course of the story the author makes the following comments: "Many a man, deep down in his heart, knows to a certainty that he has escaped being an outcast, not because of any real moral strength or resolution of his own, but because Society has bolstered him up, hedged him about with customs and restrictions, until he never has had a really good opportunity to transgress. And some do not sin for very lack of courage and originality; they are helplessly good. How many men in their vanity take to themselves credit for the built-up virtues of men who are dead! There is no cause for surprise when we hear of a 'foremost citizen,' the 'leader in all good works,' suddenly gone wrong; not the least cause for surprise. For it was not he that was moral, but Society. Individually he had never been tested, and when the test came he fell. It will give us a large measure of true wisdom if we stop sometimes when we have resisted a temptation and ask ourselves why, at that moment, we did right and not wrong. Was it the deep virtue, the high ideals in our souls, or was it the compulsion of the Society around us? And I think most of us would be astonished to discover what fragile persons we really are—in ourselves."

Bryan as a Literary Phrase Maker.

The new Bryan is a vastly more intellectual man than the one who stirred us twelve years ago. His speeches now are characterized with a finer literary style than those of earlier days. Witness the little address made almost without preparation at the conference of governors held in Washington a few weeks ago. One phrase used then has passed almost into a proverb. He was referring, somewhat indirectly, to the device by which men who represent what has come to be called predatory wealth evade punishment by going first from the federal courts to the State courts, or from the State courts to the federal courts. Mr. Bryan said:

"There is no twilight zone between the nation and the State in which exploiting interests can take refuge from both, and my observation is that most,—not all, but most,—of the contentions over the line between nation and State are traceable to predatory corporations which are trying to shield themselves from deserved punishment, or endeavoring to prevent needed restraining legislation."

Within twenty-four hours the President had adopted the metaphor of the "twilight zone," and it has passed equally into literature and into politics. It is a more restrained phrase, more poetic possibly, than the Bryan of 1896 might have used. At that time he would have been more likely to have said that there was not a No man's land. But to him advancing years and a more cosmopolitan experience have brought also a literary taste which finds expression now in all his platform utterances.—From "The New Bryan" by Willis J. Abbot, in the American Review of Reviews for July.

Mother.

At twilight here I sit alone,
Yet not alone; for thoughts of thee—
Pale images of pleasure flown—
Like homing birds, return to me.

Again the shining chestnut braids
Are soft enwreathed about thy brow,
And light—a light that never fades—
Beams from thine eyes upon me even now,

As, all undimmed by death and night,
Remembrance out of distance brings
Thy youthful loveliness, alight
With ardent hopes and high imaginings.

Ah, mortal dreams, how fair, how fleet!
Thy yearnings scant fulfillment found;
Dark Lethe long hath laved thy feet,
And on thy slumber breaks no troubling sound;

Yet distance parts thee not from me,
For beauty—or of twilight or of morn—
Binds me, still closer binds, to thee,
Whose heart sang to my heart ere I was born.
—Florence Earle Coates in the August Century.

Midnight Oil Means Suicide, Says Doctor Edward Everett Hale.

"People talk about the midnight oil as if it had some virtue attached to it," writes Doctor Hale in Woman's Home Companion for August. "In truth, four times out of five the midnight oil means overwork, or it means that you have neglected some duty which should have been attended to before the sun went down. Unless each night recovers the ground lost in the exertion of the day before, you are committing suicide by inches; and you have no right to commit suicide at all."

Of special interest in the August St. Nicholas is the full-page reproduction, from a portrait in sepia by E. Plaisted Abbott, of "Josephine," the granddaughter of Mary Mapes Dodge, so many years editor of St. Nicholas. The little girl, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Mapes Dodge, of Germantown, Pennsylvania, is said to resemble her grandmother in many ways, one of them being her love of dolls.

When Mary Mapes Dodge was herself a little girl, her portrait was painted by a well-known artist of that time, and she insisted upon having her dolly included in the picture. "I would not give up my dolly for all their coaxing," she used to say. So the two portraits, one of the grandmother, the other of the grandchild, each with a doll in her arms, hang in the Dodge home. The earlier picture has already been reproduced in St. Nicholas.

There are plenty of stories in the August St. Nicholas: Frederick Hall's "The hoarding of the waters," an interesting account of a lad's experiences with dry farming; Alexander Hume Ford in "A boy's paradise in the Pacific" tells about the abounding fun to be had in Hawaii on water and on land; and W. G. Fitzgerald has a "true" adventure article in "The divers of a navy and their adventures."

It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinions; it is easy in solitude to live after our own; but the great man is he who in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR IN HIS OWN DEFENSE. —NO 3.

HE PAYS HIS RESPECTS TO THE SO-CALLED "REVELATION" SANCTIONING POLYGAMY.

This interesting document forms section 132 of the Utah edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. My Mormon friends have carefully prefaced it with the statement that it was "given through Joseph, the Seer, in Nauvoo, Hancock County, Illinois, July 12, 1843."

I have something to say regarding its authorship, its absurdities, and its effrontery. It is a lengthy document but the marrow of the whole matter is found in paragraphs 61 and 62:

And again, as pertaining to the law of the priesthood: If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another, and the first give her consent; and if he espouse the second, and they are virgins, and have vowed to no other man, then is he justified; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him; for he can not commit adultery with that that belongeth to him and to no one else. And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he can not commit adultery.

You may search my teachings from the spring of 1820, when my first declaration on religion was delivered, until June 27, 1844, when I suffered the extreme agony, and you will not find a single syllable that breathes such a spirit as is couched in those words.

If these particular passages were not so repulsive they would be absurd because the very next one says:

But if one or either of the ten virgins, after she be espoused, shall be with another man; she has committed adultery, and shall be destroyed; for they are given unto him to multiply and replenish the earth.

Just so. The patriarchal polygamist who stands at the head of a household that is constantly growing by a process of accretion is deeply interested in having the earth replenished, but he intends to guard his prerogative of having part in the initial processes. If any of these ten virgins permits her fancy, like his, to stray far afield after other soul-mates she is "to be destroyed." He is constantly expanding and taking on new affinities while she sees her holdings gradually shrinking away,—to-day a man, to-morrow a half a man, day after to-morrow a third of a man,—poco tempo her (their) husband

A sad comment upon the unfaithfulness of man, is found in the fact that of all the host that once held sacred worship within the "city of the Saints" [Nauvoo], few have an inheritance there. Of those few, the family of "Joseph the martyr" form a part, and these are sedulously striving to sow the "word"; and some of them are combatting, step by step, for the ground lost in the battle where their father and uncle went down, and endeavoring to build upon the ruins of a past spiritual hierarchy, the pure theocracy of a "Risen Redeemer."—Editorial, HERALD, January 1, 1872.

reaches the Democratic ratio of sixteen to one. This is free love from the male standpoint. "They twain shall be one" comes to mean that he is one and she one sixteenth or some other divisible fraction.

The opening paragraph of this "revelation" is itself an absurdity, well fitted to introduce those that follow:

Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you, my servant Joseph, that inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand, to know and understand wherein I, the Lord, justified my servants, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; as also Moses, David and Solomon, my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines.

I am represented as asking God how he justified David and Solomon in having many wives and concubines, when, having translated the Book of Mormon, I well knew that it said, "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord." Isaac is mentioned also, when every student of the Bible knows that he was not a polygamist and that of the three patriarchs, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, his was the only household that was not torn with jealousies and quarrels. The others had experiences similar to those of Brigham Young, who at one time threatened to cast off all of his wives if they did not cease their quarreling. He said, "I will go into heaven alone, rather than have them scratching and fighting around me."—Journal of Discourses, volume 4, pages 55-57.

Paragraph 3 says that all who have this polygamous law revealed to them "must obey the same." Paragraph 4 says, "And if ye abide not that covenant, then are ye damned; for no one can reject this covenant, and be permitted to enter into my glory."

This law must be obeyed, and the unlucky wretch who does not obey it will be damned, because in more than one place it is taught to be the means of salvation, glorification, and exaltation. Now my Mormon friends have said in extenuation of their system that during the days of unrestricted polygamy only about two and one half per cent of their people obeyed that law. Then ninety-seven and one half per cent of the Mormon populace were damned. And inasmuch as the sexes are about evenly divided, with a slight excess of males, every good Mormon who secured the classical ten (foolish) virgins condemned nine other men to eternal loss, which could hardly be called brotherly love. Again, in paragraph 27, it is reiterated, "He that abideth not this law, can in no wise enter into my glory, but shall be damned, saith the Lord."

When we reflect that in its palmiest days it saved two and one half per cent of "the Lord's chosen people" and damned all the rest it strikes us that it is decidedly inadequate as a means of "salvation and exaltation." It is about as inadequate as those twenty-seven women who were married to me for the express purpose of raising up a righteous seed, none of whom bore me any children, good, bad, or indifferent.

It would be interesting to hear some good Mormon attempt the impossible task of reconciling paragraph 61 of this "revelation" with paragraph 22 of section 42. The latter says, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else." The former says, "If any man espouse a virgin, and desire to espouse another,"—er—ah,—"then is he justified; he can not commit adultery, for they are given unto him." He is safe in going as high as ten, and if the virgins are all right he is all right. To make it personal: After Joseph F. Smith married his first wife, if he obeyed the law to love her with his whole heart and cleave unto her and none else, how did he have any heart left to "desire to espouse another"? and how could he finally cleave unto four others?

Absurdities in this "revelation" are numerous and conspicuous but I will notice only two more. In paragraph 54 it is said of my wife, Emma:

But if she will not abide this commandment, she shall be destroyed, saith the Lord; for I am the Lord thy God, and will destroy her, if she abide not in my law.

Brigham Young says that she not only rejected this commandment, but destroyed the manuscript of the revelation. She was not destroyed; she lived to a respected and honorable old age. How do my Mormon friends account for this?

Of me it was said:

And I will bless him and multiply him and give him an hundred fold in this world, of fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, houses and lands, wives and children, and crowns of everlasting lives in the eternal world.

I am supposed to have accepted this covenant, yet a few short months later I was destroyed in the flesh. As a revelation this document is decidedly weak. It fails to make good on a single point.

Its effrontery is unlimited inasmuch as it proposes to usurp the place of the gospel as a means of salvation and exaltation. There is absolutely no limit to its promises and almost no limit to the license that it grants. Paragraph 26 says:

Verily, verily I say unto you, if a man marry a wife according to my word, and they are sealed, by the Holy Spirit of promise, according to mine appointment, and he or she shall commit any sin or transgression of the new and everlasting covenant whatever, and all manner of blasphemies, and if they commit no murder, wherein they shed innocent blood—yet shall they come forth in the first resurrection, and enter into their exaltation.

There is the license to commit blasphemy or any other form of sin, with the exception of shedding innocent blood (other kinds excepted), and the promise immediately follows that the individual thus steeped in sin, shall come forth in the first resurrection and enter into his exaltation by mere virtue of a belief in this covenant. John called the first resurrection the resurrection of the "just," but that was before the advent of this new covenant.

The promise is elaborated in the nineteenth paragraph. There it is said of those who embrace this covenant (and wisely abstain from shedding "innocent" blood, "They shall pass by the angels, and the gods, which are set there, to their exaltation and glory in all things.")

The individual who enters into this polygamous, sealing-for-eternity business may lie, steal, swear, commit adultery, even murder a Gentile, whose blood is not innocent, of course, and yet he will go away up the ladder of glory far beyond the angels and gods. The man who does not accept this covenant may live a virtuous life in full accord with gospel principles and he will be required to go away back and sit down,—if indeed he escapes being a lackey to his forehanded brothers of the large families, of whom it is said, "They have all power, and the angels are subject to them."

Truly this "revelation" is the Devil's own confession of faith.

My Utah friends may as well face the situation squarely. Paul said that the gospel of Jesus Christ was the power of God unto salvation. Christ sent his disciples out to preach the gospel and declared that those who believed it and were baptized should be saved. But now comes this new covenant and makes a man's salvation dependent upon the style and frequency of his marriages. Those who reject this polygamous document are damned; those who accept it are saved and exalted without regard to their moral conduct. In fact, from my standpoint, their exaltation is made dependent upon immorality,—the more illicit marriages the higher they go.

Let us now come to the question of authorship. Brigham Young presented this document for the first time to the church at a conference in Salt Lake City, August 29, 1852. At that time he said:

This revelation has been in my possession for many years, and who has known it? None but those who should know it. I keep a patent lock on my desk, and there does not anything leak out that should not.—Millennial Star Supplement, volume 15, page 31.

Thus it comes forth a thing of secrecy and darkness. In character and inception it comes within the range of Peter's prophecy, "There shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies."

As I have before stated such a doctrine must needs claim to have divine sanction back of it in order to secure its acceptance by the people. A revelation presupposed a prophet. Neither Brigham Young nor any of his associates were prophets. Brigham disclaimed the prophetic calling. The most natural thing was for them to ascribe the whole thing to me. What proof was produced? The word of Brigham Young, who claimed that he had kept the document in secret all those years. He had no original copy of it in my handwriting. He stated however that Emma Smith, my wife, had destroyed the original manuscripts because of her prejudices. Here is a possible corroborative witness. But Emma, when questioned about the matter, positively contradicted Young on all points. Her testimony, taken in the form of an interview and published in the Messenger, volume 1, page 23, is here quoted:

"Did you ever see any document of that kind, purporting to be a revelation, to authorize polygamy?"

"No; I never did."

"Did Joseph Smith ever teach you the principle of polygamy, as being revealed to him, or as a correct and righteous principle?"

"He never did."

"What about that statement of Brigham Young, that you burnt the original manuscript of that revelation?"

"It is false in all its parts, made out of whole cloth, without any foundation in truth."

One or two corroborative witnesses are brought forward by the Utah church, but their testimony will not stand examination. This document now under consideration so squarely contradicts all my known teachings that it would seem that no sane man would long suspect me of its authorship when he came to know the facts in the case. As opposed to it is the statement in the Book of Mormon, "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife: and concubines he shall have none," and the statement in Doctrine and Covenants, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else," and "It is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh."

The reader can hardly avoid strongly suspecting what I know to be a fact that the whole affair originated in the mind of Brigham Young. In fact after the doctrine had become somewhat popular with his people he made a guarded admission of that fact, still including me. He said:

While we were in England, (in 1839 and '40 I think), the Lord manifested to me by vision and his Spirit, things that I did not understand. . . . The revelation was given in 1843, but the doctrine was revealed before this.—Deseret News, July 1, 1874.

It was such people as Brigham and such doctrines as those taught in this revelation that we had in mind when my brother Hyrum wrote to the church:

Let the matter of the grand councils of heaven, and the making of Gods, worlds, and devils entirely alone. . . . And as to the celestial glory, all will enter in and possess that kingdom that obey the gospel, and continue in faith in the Lord unto the end of his days.—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 474.

The facts in the case are so evident that whenever they have been properly presented before men of judicial training who are capable of weighing evidence my name has been cleared and the blame has been placed where it belongs. In the famous Kirtland Temple suit, in the Court of Common Pleas,

Lake County, Ohio, February 23, 1880, Judge L. S. Sherman rendered a decision in part as follows:

That the church in Utah, the defendant, of which John Taylor is president, has materially and largely departed from the faith, doctrines, laws, ordinances and usages of said original Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and has incorporated into its system of faith the doctrines of celestial marriage and a plurality of wives, and the doctrine of Adam-God worship, contrary to the laws and constitution of said original church.

A similar decision was reached by Judge Philips in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western division of the Western District of Missouri, in the Temple Lot suit, 1894.

Senator Burrows, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, during the hearing of the Reed Smoot case, had an excellent opportunity to hear both sides of the question. In his speech in the Senate of the United States, December 11, 1906, he said:

In order to induce his followers more readily to accept this infamous doctrine, Brigham Young himself invoked the name of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, whom many sincerely believed to be a true prophet, and ascribed to him the reception of a revelation from the Almighty in 1843, commanding the Saints to take unto themselves a multiplicity of wives, limited in number only by the means of their desires. . . . Such the mythological story palmed off on a deluded people.

Senator O. F. Berry in an address before the Illinois State Historical Society, at Springfield, Illinois, January 24, 1906, said:

The writer is satisfied, from evidence entirely satisfactory to him, that Joseph and Hyrum Smith did not teach and preach the doctrine of polygamy. I believe the facts justify the statement that polygamy was first promulgated and taught by Brigham Young.—Page 6 of his pamphlet.

Facts have convinced these legislators and judges of mature mind and national repute; convinced them perhaps against their own inclinations, because the prejudices of the world are against me. Men are inclined to discredit my work from its inception. They would rather believe me guilty than otherwise.

I trust that the editors and readers of the Tribune are not so inclined. No man can afford to take that attitude toward any other man.

My Mormon friends of the rank and file, who are mostly honest and faithful souls, will hesitate to discredit their leaders; but is it not as bad to discredit me, whom they revere as a prophet? And their leaders have represented me as a licentious degenerate who was secretly practicing polygamy and as constantly lying to the world to cover that practice.

I appeal to the rank and file of the Mormon people to cease believing and teaching things that unauthorized men have sent out in my name. Turn, ere it is too late, to a belief in the pure principles of the gospel. Abandon your half-hearted defense of the awful doctrines taught in the so-called revelation of which I have written.

I at one time delivered the following prophecy:

While I have powers of body and mind; while water runs and grass grows; while virtue is lovely, and vice hateful; and while a stone points out a sacred spot where a fragment of American liberty once was; I or my posterity will plead the cause of injured innocence.—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 395.

That prophecy had a deeper meaning than I then understood. Vice is still hateful and virtue lovely in my sight and in the sight of God. My voice shall still be heard to plead the cause of injured innocence. No man was ever more cruelly injured than I when professed friends promulgated these doctrines of evil in my name. Nor was I alone injured,—the faith of thousands was shaken and the fair name of the church was befouled in all the world.

But thank God there are still avenues through which I can plead the cause of injured innocence. Thank God that in accord with my prediction my posterity are pleading the cause of injured innocence. You may have been taught to despise the Reorganization, at whose head my son Joseph stands, and with which all of my sons and most of my grandsons are identified, or were identified during life. But heed their message. They do not ask you to accept teachings that are contrary to the laws of God and the laws of our land; they do not ascribe such teachings to me.

With whom will you ally yourselves? With those who plead the cause of innocence? or with those who go to any lengths to brand me as a criminal.—Joseph Smith, per F. E.—Salt Lake Tribune, Sunday, July 26, 1908.

THAT CROOKED REVELATION.

The third number of "Joseph Smith in his own defense" appeared in the Salt Lake Tribune of recent date, and is reproduced in our columns of this issue. Commenting on it editorially the Tribune of Tuesday, July 28, has the following:

On last Sunday morning the Tribune printed the third epistle in behalf of Joseph Smith, Jr., in which the pretended revelation commanding the practice of polygamy is dealt with.

Most important in the evidence adduced to prove that Joseph Smith was neither the recipient nor the author of the supposed revelation is that which goes to show its utter inconsistency with all of the other doctrines put forth upon this subject by the founder of the Mormon church. The Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants are both brought forward in proof of the fraudulency of the so-called revelation on polygamy, so far as it relates to the pretended Smith origin, either as a personal announcement of doctrine or as the outgiving of the Almighty through Joseph.

Stress is laid upon the conclusion that Brigham Young introduced polygamy into the church, but that it was necessary for him to credit it to Joseph Smith in order to give to it the desired sanctity to insure acceptance upon the part of the Saints. Again, the request is brought forward that

Joseph Smith should be judged only by what are well known to have been his officially published utterances during his lifetime, and not by pronouncements subsequently brought forward by others and attributed to him. As if speaking out of his own mouth, the founder of the church protests that he has been grievously wronged by those who assumed control of the church after his death, in that they have credited to him doctrines that he never promulgated, and in accusing him of practices in which he had not engaged. He is anguished that Brigham Young and others should have so disregarded his good repute as to have manufactured supposed evidence to prove that he himself was a practicing polygamist, when the records contained in the public prints of the church contain the authoritative denials of himself and his brother, Hyrum, who suffered death with him.

More valuable than all, though, is the testimony of Mrs. Emma Smith, which is brought out to show that Joseph did not practice polygamy, and that she never saw a copy of any revelation justifying plural marriage, and that she consequently did not destroy any such paper. Mrs. Emma Smith was the wife of the founder of the church; she had every opportunity to know if her husband taught or practiced plural marriage; her evidence is of the utmost importance in deciding this question. She denies the contentions of the Utah church in most emphatic terms, and under solemn oath. If President Joseph F. Smith shall desire now to make good his own case, as he inherits it from Brigham Young and his successors, he must come forward and impeach the word of his own aunt—the only wife Joseph Smith was ever known publicly to recognize. As to that, however, it is not impossible to conceive that the present head of the Utah church would readily consent to defile the name of any relative, if only it would serve to give an odor of assumed sanctity to his personal conduct. It must not be forgotten that, under sacred affirmation, he set his father up to the world as a liar before all mankind, in the interest of his own protection in the eyes of his fellow men of to-day. What he would do in respect to his aunt, the Lord only knows.

Viewing the matter from an unbiased standpoint, the thought must occur to the mind that there is something decidedly crooked in the manner of introducing polygamy as a doctrine and practice authorized by the church. The assertion that the pretended revelation was received and privately promulgated by Joseph Smith is open to all sorts of questioning. And in so far as the direct evidence is concerned, Joseph Smith has a right to protest against being branded with the shame of its authorship. In order to fasten the guilt upon him, one must necessarily accept none but hearsay testimony—all that the Utah church can show.

But let the Mormon people unravel the tangle for themselves. It is only of concern to the Tribune that the unraveling may assist in annihilating the foul, barbaric rite. And whether the introduction of polygamy may be traced to Joseph Smith or to Brigham Young, it still remains that it shall be wiped out of our community life within the knowledge of this generation. The Tribune is no prophet; but it would be well to mark these words.

A SHORT TALK.

So many letters have been sent by the Saints for publication that we are compelled to hold some of them for a time or to make extracts from them. We trust none will take offense, and suggest that the Saints should remember that with matter sent in for publication it is often a case of the "survival of the fittest." We mean by this that those articles and letters gotten up in the best shape, most readable and most legible, will be the ones first used and often to the exclusion of those which require hard work to read and still harder work to get ready for the printers.

In the old days of hand composition, years ago when the work of the office was as nothing compared to the present output of the Herald Office, the editor could wade into most any kind of copy with his blue pencil and send it in to the compositors marked up and down and crossways, and let the "comps" dig it out. It can easily be remembered when the editors and the foreman would be called upon many times each day to make out a word or phrase illegible to the man who was setting the type.

But now, when using machines for our work, copy must be "good." We wish every writer to the HERALD could see the great amount of matter that has to be copied by typewriter in the editorial department before it can be used at all. We do not wish to discourage any one, but would like very much to have all understand the situation at this end.

We can not send anything to the machine men written in pencil or written on both sides of the paper. Close writing should be avoided. Leave plenty of room between the lines and a margin at ends of lines. The extra paper used is nothing compared to the unnecessary work in preparation of copy. This latter suggestion should be considered by typewritists also, and we are very glad to see the number of those using machines on the increase.

Please accept these remarks in the spirit given, and try to make your articles and letters what we can term good copy, thereby greatly lessening the work of the editors and greatly increasing the likelihood of your production finding its way into print.

THE SANITARIUM.

The friends of the sick and afflicted, the truly needy ones, will be glad to know that the Sanitarium building is completed and that diligent, energetic work is being pushed forward towards fitting and furnishing the same and the building of roads and walks necessary to its use, with the hope that by the first of September next everything shall be ready for a due entry upon its work of helpfulness and blessing. No one should fail to appreciate the magnitude of the task of fitting and furnishing such a building as this for use.

A suitable water supply has required the advance of five hundred dollars. The electrical fittings will require eight hundred dollars. Roading and walks, three hundred and fifty dollars. Outside water pipes and labor, two hundred and fifty dollars. Furnishing of fifty-seven rooms and halls, thirty-five hundred dollars. Necessary supplies, five hundred dollars. Total, fifty-nine hundred dollars.

The above is the least possible amount under the estimate, not the full liberal furnishings needed for all departments. It is possible to provide for it all, however, by the date mentioned if all will help; and if all will help the burden will not be too great for any one. We want to hear from you upon this at once; soon and freely as you can.

The institution is much needed, and when September comes in let us have it fitted ready for use. Bishops and Bishop's agents, the traveling ministry, local officers, and Aid Societies are authorized to receive and report these offerings,—but remember that we wish the report before the close of the present month of August. How many will report in "due season"?

Trusting the Lord may bless the work of all,
I am hopefully in bonds,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop,
Box 125, INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.
August 1, 1908.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Elder R. S. Salyards was the speaker at the Brick Church Sunday morning. Elder O. B. Thomas (known in Ohio as "Open Bible" Thomas) spoke at the Central Park in the evening. He gave the people an excellent discourse, addressed especially to nonmembers. The attendance at these services continues at high-water mark.

Elders John Garver and M. M. Turpen have been holding a series of meetings in the park at Pleasanton, continuing over two Sundays. Three services were held last Sunday. The attendance has been very good and the interest fine. Order has been excellent except that the meetings have been disturbed at times by the harangues of a man who is half crazy and wholly sanctified. On Sunday afternoon one man who is not a member of any church attempted to call him to order after our meeting had been dismissed, and not being sanctified, expressed himself in language more forcible than polite, so that the pleasant air of Pleasanton was unduly agitated. However these are minor matters compared with the difficulties that are met with in some places. The brethren feel that a good work is being done in Pleasanton.

Two errors crept into our report concerning the new dormitory for Graceland College. The dormitory is for girls, not, as stated, for boys. The old dormitory will be occupied by boys. The call is for fifty one-hundred-dollar subscriptions instead of for one hundred fifty-dollar subscriptions.

Thursday afternoon a "cleaning-up bee" was held at the reunion grounds. Weeds and brush were cleared away and the grounds generally put in shape for the coming reunion.

DUTIES OF THE PRIEST.

Having been given the subject, "Duties of the priest," it is not within my field to take up the history and origin of the Aaronic priesthood, because this would open a larger field of investigation than I am able to occupy at the present time in this paper. Suffice it to say, however, that at a very early time in the history of God's people, there were certain ordinances and services rendered by certain individuals, whom it has pleased man to call priests. It seems from what we are able to gather, that these priests were subordinate in authority to other priests of a higher order known as high priests, the main general distinction between these two orders of priests being that the higher, known as the Melchisedec, administered to the people in spiritual matters, whereas the lesser, or Aaronic, ministered to the people of God in temporal affairs.

There is no record showing that the Aaronic priesthood existed before the time of Aaron, but we find that the authority to minister as a priest was given to the descendants of Aaron throughout all their generations, and that this priesthood "also continueth and abideth for ever." (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 3.) This authority placed upon the Aaronic priesthood consists in holding "the keys of the ministering of angels," and administering "in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments."—Ibid. 104: 10. The Aaronic priests also minister "the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord, in his wrath, caused to continue with the house of Aaron, among the children of Israel until John," having taken "Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also." (Ibid. 83: 4.)

The lesser priesthood is comprised of priests and the appendages, teachers and deacons. (Ibid. 83: 5.) If a priest be a literal descendant of the first-born of the sons of Aaron, and if at any time he can prove his lineage, or does ascertain it by revelation from the Lord under the hands of the First Presidency, he may claim ordination to the office of bishop under the hands of the First Presidency, providing he be worthy. (Ibid. 68: 2.) Whether the bishops be literal descendants of Aaron, or high priests, ordained to this office, "the bishopric is the presidency of this priesthood, and holds the keys or authority of the same." (Ibid. 104: 8.)

The sons of Levi were called upon to bear the ark, offer sacrifices and the first-fruits, pronounce benedictions, teach the law, light the lamps in the tabernacle, keep the sacred fire always burning, furnish a quota and be responsible for the sanctuary, act as scribes, be present at and supervise the tithing, sound the trumpet in calling assemblies and in battle, examine lepers, place value upon things devoted, and attend to other minor duties.

Coming down to the present time, we find the same duties being performed by the lesser priesthood. Wherever God has a people these temporal matters must be attended to, and God has chosen the Aaronic priesthood to do this particular work. Of course, under the gospel law, these are of a little different type than under the Mosaic economy, yet they are not so distinctly different but that we can trace some similarities. The offering of sacrifices compares favorably with the administering of the sacrament: the one being the shedding of blood, and the destroying of the body of a fatted bullock, as a covenant and atonement; the other being an ordinance commemorating the death and shed blood of our Master, as an atonement for the sins of the whole world. In every age the Aaronic priesthood have looked after the financial division of the work of the Lord. In Moses' time they cared for the tithes and offerings and now they do the same work. As the Mosaic law was given to the people to bring them to a condition where they could comprehend the gospel, so the ordinances of the gospel intrusted to the lesser priesthood are intended to bring people into the kingdom and prepare them for the spiritual ordinances performed by the Melchisedec priesthood.

According to the tenth paragraph of the seventeenth section of the Doctrine and Covenants,

The priest's duty is to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize, and administer the sacrament, and visit the house of each member, and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret, and to attend to all family duties: and he may also ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons; and he is to take the lead of meetings when there is no elder present, but when there is an elder present he is only to preach, teach, expound, and exhort, and baptize, and visit the house of each member, exhorting them to pray vocally and in secret, and attend to all family duties. In all these duties the priest is to assist the elder if occasion requires.

Let us now consider each of these several duties separately. There is comparatively no doubt but that the priest, like John the Baptist, has the authority to preach, teach, expound, exhort, and baptize; but some members, who, if I am informed correctly, refuse to accept the emblems when administered by a priest, have no foundation in the law for their refusal in so far as I have been able to discover. We will notice in the above quotation that the priest is given the authority to administer the sacrament, but some of our people have endeavored to hold that this does not include the blessing of the emblems, but if we will look at paragraph twenty-two of the same section, we will discover that, in speaking of the blessing of the emblems, it specifically mentions, "And the elder or priest shall administer it; and after this manner shall he administer it: He shall kneel with the church and call upon the Father in solemn prayer, saying," etc. Then continuing, it gives the prayer that is to be used in administering, and clearly shows that the priest or elder in order to administer must first bless the emblems.

Concerning the priest's visiting the house of each member and instructing him along the different lines of duty, I think that one should use wisdom and discretion. The most successful teachers in the public schools are not those who offend the pupil and then try to teach him, but rather those who make the pupil feel that they are interested in his welfare. So it is with the visiting priest, if he is to be a success at his work, it is necessary that he study the characteristics of his brother whom he is to visit, noticing his peculiarities—for we are all imperfect—and endeavor to win him to his side by love and the spirit of truth. Another thing, equally as important for the priest, is that he be well read in the books, and keep himself in such a spiritual condition that he may have the Spirit of the Master with him in his ministerial work, as he may visit the Saints. I can not help but think that if we are in a good condition spiritually that the Abiding Comforter which is promised us will give us wisdom to that extent that we will do the best work possible for us to do, and the key to the Holy Spirit is humble and prayerful living.

I can not get away from the idea that possibly one of the greatest duties of the priest is to live a righteous life, because if he lives a righteous life, he will want to move out and perform his duty, and moving out, he will be given wisdom and will feel the power given him because of his office and calling. It is necessary that he understand the law before he endeavors to instruct others, because it is a psychological fact that a false teacher can do more harm than several teachers of the truth can do good.

Concerning a priest's being able to ordain other priests, teachers, and deacons, there is apparently no controversy, as well as his taking the lead of meetings when there is no elder present; but his taking lead of meetings when there is an elder present is a subject of considerable controversy. So far as I have been able to find, there is no other reference to this in the Doctrine and Covenants than paragraph 10 of section 17; but I can not see why an elder would be justified, if he happened to be present, in presiding over a branch business-meeting, over which a priest was chosen to preside, agreeably to section 120, paragraph 2, which says, "A branch may be presided over by a high priest, an elder, priest, teacher, or deacon, chosen and sustained in his office by the vote of the branch."

A priest chosen by the branch to preside over the branch is, in the eyes of the body, the best qualified individual available for the position. An elder who happened to be present at a meeting in the branch, might be a stranger to the membership, yet, according to the views held by some (including the Utah church), if an elder be present at a meeting it is the business of the priest in charge to call the elder to the stand during that particular meeting. We must remember that if the priest calls upon the elder to preside over a preaching-service, he must do so in a social-service or business-meeting; and we can at once see how incapacitated the elder would be, because, not being acquainted with the membership, he could not preside so judiciously during a social-service, nor understand so thoroughly the needs of the branch in a business-meeting. A man, to preside, should be prepared to answer questions regarding any matter under consideration, and this, this particular elder would be unable to do.

However, if we will look closely at paragraph 10 of section 17, we will discover the fact that it speaks of regular branch work and meetings in general; and it seems to me that the spirit of the clause is that a priest should not be chosen to preside over the meetings and work in a branch where there is an elder residing who is competent and in spiritual condition to do the work; but if a priest should be chosen, the elder would be subordinate to the priest in branch authority, if the elder lived within his jurisdiction.

Although a priest may assist an elder in all these duties, yet he does not have authority to consecrate oil, administer to the sick, confirm individuals members, or ordain others of higher authority than himself. A priest may travel, according to section 83, paragraph 22.

CONVERSION.

It may be a bold statement to make, but I believe it to be a true one, that any man or woman joining this church without fully intending to live the very best life possible and comply with the entire law of God, fails to conceive of the true intent and purposes of the gospel. It may be and perhaps is true in every case that we do not understand the work in its entirety in the beginning, and it is not supposed that we do; but the principal thing in the initiatory step taken is to get the consent of the mind to receive the truth as fast as it is made known to us.

I fear that in many instances we are only partially converted in this particular sense. In the first place we accept the work before we hear all of it, and we have only given our consent to that which we have heard and fail to sense the thought that possibly there may be something yet to come which we can not readily subscribe to.

The first principles are, in fact, easy to comply with, especially as they are generally taught. First, belief in God, giving very good reasons why we should. It all looks reasonable enough when the common argument is made, so we accept it as true. We are given to understand that the kind of life we are living is not in harmony with the will of God, so we are asked to repent, or in the language of the Apostle Paul, "Cease to do evil, and learn to do well," which of course means that we must quit doing wrong and learn to do right. While all these we regard as good, so far as they go, we are informed that God has instituted an ordinance by which we may have our sins remitted. So we are told of this ordinance just what we must do. We see that it doesn't cost us anything and we are ready to comply with that, also. We then go down into the waters of baptism and are immersed for the remission of our sins, and we come up feeling good because God has been so kind as to pardon all our past transgressions. We feel assured that this is the case whether we receive the evidence of pardon or not. But when we receive the gift of the Holy Spirit at or after confirmation we can certainly rejoice in spirit and feel like going on to perfection.

Now then, brethren, this is all done without any expense to us. It is the easy part to do, but the going on to perfection is another thing entirely. Do you know about the rich young ruler who came to Jesus and said, "Good Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" and how the Lord said:

Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother.

You remember how this young, rich, influential ruler said, "All these things have I kept from my youth up," and as it is recorded by Matthew:

Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shall have treasure in heaven: and come and follow me. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful: for he had great possessions.

He wanted eternal life, and beside that he was a goodly young man and evidently was willing to go as far as some are willing to go now, but the price was too great. He would not pay it. And as the Master thought on this circumstance he was moved by the spirit of knowledge, and said to his disciples, Verily [which is to say, surely, positively], I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven," and he further said, making it more emphatic, if possible:

Again I say unto you, It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God. When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?

We are of the opinion that the same question might be asked to-day and from the same identical standpoint.

The spiritual condition of the Jews was of that character as to warrant the disciples of Jesus in thinking there was but little hope for their people. Greed and covetousness had taken possession of the Jewish church until they used the house of God as a house of merchandise and made it a den of thieves. They had lost sight of the old Mosaic idea of equality. What was the trouble of this young ruler? He was far above the average young man of to-day, for he had observed the law as far as he understood it, and had respect for his father and mother, which is more than a great many have to-day. But we conclude that he was not wholly converted. He came to a part of the requirements that was too hard for him. He was willing to go as far as he could without it costing him his fortune, but rather than lose his riches he would take his chance of holding on to them, even though it cost him his eternal life. Oh, men will cling to the almighty dollar though it cost them their souls! With the language of the Master ringing in their ears that it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven, still they will hold to the god of this earth, loath to part from him, and are willing to take their chances of being cast out on account of their greed.

Then what shall we do, and where is the remedy? The trouble is we have not made up our minds to do as nearly right as we can. In fact we have not fully repented. No man can serve two masters when one is pulling in one way and the other is trying to lead another way. There is a spirit in man and the wisdom of God gives it intelligence or understanding.

The average man is led by some unseen power and that power is either good or evil. There are but few men that seem to be able to lead themselves and avoid the pitfalls of sin, but there are some who appear to be able to do so, and I find them to be among the honorable men of the earth. They do not scoff at religion, but they do sometimes point out certain ones who make a profession of Christianity and the deeds of those so-called Christians are so mean and contemptible that it puts a blush on the face of an honorable man and makes him feel glad in his heart that he is not a professed Christian. Such men as these are too honorable to do a mean thing and to stoop to the low and contemptible things that some do under the cloak of Christianity. And hence they do not seek God. Neither are they led by the Evil One. They are men of honor led by the impulse of doing right. It may be true that they do not succeed as fast in the things of this world as the other class, but their chance for eternal life is far better than the man who half repents of his sins and lets the other half go unrepented of.

You may ask what I mean by this. I say that the man that takes all of Christianity that he can get for nothing and rejects all that he has to pay for, or in other words leaves out the practical part of religion, is the man referred to. There is no use in trying to hide the thoughts that prompt us in this article. The fact is that religion of the right kind is not all theory.

The psalms that we sing as we praise our God are good and acceptable in his sight if we live in harmony with them. The testimonies that we bear must be true and in accord with the life we live or they will not bear fruit, and our prayers must be the pure, sincere desire of the heart if we expect an answer. Yet this is not Christianity in the full sense of the term. "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, to help the poor and the needy, to raise the fallen, to give comfort to the sick and afflicted. In fact, use the talent which God has given us with which to bless our fellow man. For an example, one may be grandly gifted as a nurse to care for the sick and afflicted. If so, he ought to use that talent for that purpose. It ought not to be a matter of compensation in this world, but simply to do good and lay up our treasure in heaven. Another may be especially gifted in comforting the aged ones by his bright and intelligent manner in conversation. Again there are those who are called to preach the gospel. They have talent in that direction and are expected to give their time to the church and the service of God. Is it right? We say yes. He should do so. Then what about the man that has a talent for making money? Should he give his service to the church and to God? Has he a right to use his time for selfish purposes any more than the minister? The minister does not look for his reward on this side of the grave, but is laying up his treasure on the other side. How about the man who labors in the things of the world? If he is laboring for self to use for his own comfort, he has his reward as he goes along, so is not entitled to a reward on the other side, for he laid up his treasures on earth, and may be rich in earthly possessions, but exceedingly poor in treasures in heaven. Such was the case of the rich man and Lazarus; the rich man was poor in heaven, and the poor man was rich in heaven. It is easy to see how these things may be reversed.

Our religion is not in word only, but in deed. It consists in what we may be able to do for others, more than what we may be able to do for ourselves. Neither may the rich man who gives his substance to feed the poor receive a greater reward than the poor man who gives of his pittance. Neither will the preacher receive a greater reward for his standing in the church because of his brilliant talent and grand sermons than will the preacher who with a stammering tongue and faltering voice, who with the pure love of God in his heart for dying humanity stands to declare the truth for truth's sake. Neither will the man who, because of his supposed superior talent, occupies an exalted position in the church, and who thinks he ought to have a greater compensation for his services than the poor preacher whose family goes scantily provided for because the allowance won't give better to them.

If we are to judge by the parable of the rich man and Lazarus we are inclined to think that things may be reversed in this also. I can not find a single sentence in all God's holy word that bears out the thought that one man will receive more than another in the judgment on account of his superior ability or talent. Neither will a man be rewarded for what he accomplishes in this world, but he will be rewarded for the honest efforts made by him in trying to live in harmony with the law of God. No man is able to set a value on his own talent. God will do that. Hence we must strike an equal balance between us.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER MARCUS H. COOK.

I was born January 18, 1864, near Dexter, Dallas County, Iowa. My parents lived on a farm in a neighborhood known as the Bear Creek Settlement, because there the society of Friends had built a large meeting-house (large for that time) near a small stream known as Bear Creek. The Friends in the surrounding country met there to hold their quarterly meetings, where they transacted their church business. My parents and all my ancestors, so far as I can trace, were devout members of that faith and as a result of their temperate habits and freedom from dissipation peculiar to that people, they were as a rule, a strong, sturdy class of people physically, and with a high moral standard.

Among my earliest memories I recall stories read from the Bible and the good and great characters eulogized and pointed out as examples of the ultimate triumph of the right. Those lessons and impressions have never been effaced from my mind, but still strengthen my faith in God, and make me more effective in the work I am now called to do, because they have helped to give strength and courage to meet many of the struggles and trials I have had to pass through.

As a boy, I was large for my age, awkward and bashful; very sensitive; intense in my passions and emotions; sometimes violent tempered when aroused, but suffered extreme remorse when I saw wherein I had done wrong. I was tenacious with regard to my ideas to the degree of stubbornness. At the age of eight years my school life began. My awkwardness and bashfulness often made me the butt of practical jokes played by my companions, sometimes resulting in violent outbursts of temper; but as I was taught from the Friends' standpoint that it was wrong to resist or contend with others and that it was our duty to suffer wrong patiently, my experiences were often very trying. There are but a few incidents during this period of my life that I shall mention here. I do remember, however, that as a child I often wondered and sometimes questioned my parents as to why the Friends did not practice baptism, for it seemed to me that the Scriptures plainly taught it; but they, being thoroughly acquainted with the Friends' doctrine, would answer me from their standpoint, and my faith in them was such that I accepted their explanations and tried to quiet my uprisings of conscience that would lead me to doubt their teachings. I also remember, often when I heard from the Bible the story of Jesus and his life and work, of wondering why we had no apostles in the church and why angels did not visit us as in olden times, and why the gifts of healing and definite direction, through the spirit of prophecy, were not enjoyed as in olden times; and I could not help sometimes thinking that we were unfortunate because we could not see what others had seen and hear what others had heard. I sometimes wished

I had lived when Jesus was here and that I might have followed him and gone forth as one of his servants to preach the gospel with the knowledge and assurance that was given to his servants in that day.

During those times I often had seasons of serious thought and regretted the evil things that I had done. I was taught to pray and can not remember when I offered my first prayer; but during my early childhood I often prayed to God for forgiveness for my sins and that I might know of my acceptance with him. It was upon one of these occasions that I received my first manifestations from God and I have never since been able to doubt the existence of God and his power to reveal himself to his children.

At this time, feeling that I had displeased God very grievously by my conduct, I earnestly sought forgiveness from God, and all night, with many tears, I plead for forgiveness. I arose in the morning before the others had awakened and kneeling alone before God I again began to plead with him, when a voice that I could hear spoke to me and a peace settled over me so calm and assuring that when the voice said that I was forgiven, nothing to this day could convince me that the Lord had not spoken to me. While this made a deep impression upon my mind, I was so strongly human that I did not escape going into and doing many wrong and foolish things. But through it all there remained a fixed purpose to overcome sometime all that was wrong and to make myself useful. I often thought seriously of God and eternity, and very few days passed in which I failed to pray to God. I was young and healthy and normally mischievous, and believe that I can fully sympathize with other wayward, headstrong boys, who are often so trying to their parents and teachers; and I am satisfied that no class of human beings are so grossly misunderstood as such boys are, and no time or conditions in life need more patience and care to bring out the good that is often hidden under the rough exterior of a mischievous, awkward, uncouth boy who is often neglected and left to feel that no one has either love or sympathy for him.

I made good progress in my school work and showed especial aptitude for mathematics, in which I had no difficulty in keeping in advance of my class. In other studies I held my grades without difficulty, except I was decidedly dull in grammar until the latter part of my school life, when I made good to some extent in that study. I was passionately fond of music, but had no opportunity to study it until I was nearly grown. I had neither liking nor adaptability for farm work and must have tried seriously the patience of my parents who lived on a farm. My mind turned to machinery and constructive work, but having no opportunity to learn a trade along these lines I remained with them on the farm until my father was stricken with a siege of sickness which made him for a long time unable to do the work of the farm. With a large family to support, my father failed, and at the age of sixteen I was thrown upon my own resources. An important part of my education, however, was accomplished by uniting with the boys of our community, when I was about fourteen years of age, in a debating club, where I had my first practice in public speaking, and it was there that I overcome my timidity in expressing myself before others. I consider the work done there as one of the most important parts of my education.

Our family moved to Casey, Guthrie County, Iowa, when I was seventeen. I worked on a farm near home during the summer and stayed at home and went to school the following winter. The summer after I was eighteen I worked near home until in the fall, when I went up into Dakota, where I worked on a stock farm during the winter. The next spring I came back into Western Iowa, where I worked among the farmers until the fall, when I returned home and went to the Casey High School the following winter, which completed my school education. From this time until I was twenty-two years old I worked in different places in Iowa and Nebraska, mostly on farms.

The spring after I was twenty-three I stopped at Neola and went to work near there on a farm. It was there that I first came into contact with the Latter Day Saints. I can not say, like some, that when I first heard them it seemed that I had found what I had always sought for. I was prejudiced against it. I had always heard and believed that the evils charged against the Utah people applied alike to all Latter Day Saints, and when I was first told that there were Josephites and Brighamites, I stated sarcastically that if I was going to be a Mormon at all I would accept the whole thing.

The first preaching that I heard was by some Utah elders who were very poor speakers, and outside of a few proof texts had very little knowledge of the Scriptures. I soon after heard an Elder Lamphier (if I remember the name correctly) who preached at the Ransom Schoolhouse. He represented the Reorganized Church, or, as they called them, "Josephites." While I recognized some force in his arguments I was conscious of no definite impression being made on me at the time. I heard him several different times. The following winter I worked for Remington Brothers, grain buyers in Neola, and while there attended the Methodist and Presbyterian churches. During the time previous to this I had grown careless and had done many things that I knew were displeasing to God. I often thought of my condition with regret, but did not break away from my sins as I should have done. I would sometimes, when alone, pray to God, but failed to receive the answer that would satisfy. While in this condition I hired in the spring of 1888 to Samuel Diggle, who lived on a farm in Union Grove, about seven miles north of Neola. When I began working for him I found that I was living in a Latter Day Saint family. While I was there, there was not much discussion of the doctrine of the church, but I was brought into contact with several members and unfortunately some of them were unfaithful, which gave me an excuse to condemn the work. If the Saints could but realize how we could disarm opposition by simply living the gospel, God only knows the power we would be for the advancement of the work.

I don't know just where or when I first seriously considered the claims of the church, but gradually I began to realize the force of the position they occupied. Early in the spring of 1888, before the General Conference was held, Elders J. W. Wight and C. A. Butterworth came into the neighborhood and held a series of meetings and baptized two into the church. Somehow I began to feel considerably perturbed regarding my position and the possible truth of the work. I would think of it when I retired at night, before going to sleep, and would awake with the thought in my mind, Is it possible that the religion of my fathers, that had developed such men and women as my father and mother and a host of noble characters that I had known, was a false, man-made system, and is it possible that these Latter Day Saints, with all their imperfections that I had seen, are God's chosen people and the custodians of the gospel message? Preposterous! It could not be! Still it would cling to me and the commands of God that men must repent and be baptized by immersion for the remission of their sins by some one whom God had authorized, seemed to be plainly taught, according to the construction put upon the Bible by the Latter Day Saints. But when I would take the same texts and use the Friends' method of interpretation, it looked quite differently. So I continued debating the question in my own mind. I had read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and during my childhood the Bible was daily read in our home, so I was quite well acquainted with its contents. Thoughts relative to the work continued to trouble me until I decided that as I knew there was a God, and as this question was all important, I would ask him for wisdom and understanding. Accordingly I knelt by my bedside and asked God to manifest to me if the claims of the church were true; and if false, to show me so that I might rest from the thoughts that were disturbing my peace of mind.

Soon after this, whether asleep or awake I can not tell, I saw a person at my bedside and the room was so light that I could see clearly. He was a man of ordinary appearance, rather short in stature, heavily set, blue-eyed, and wore a heavy, sandy mustache. He held an open Bible before me and pointed to the words of Jesus Christ recorded in Acts 26 where Jesus says to Paul, "Arise and go into the city and it shall be told thee what thou must do." He placed his finger under the word must and then disappeared; and then wide awake and with every sense alert there flashed through my mind with incomprehensible rapidity the statement of Ananias recorded in Acts 22:16 where Ananias told Paul, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord."

This was supplemented by other scripture statements, such as "God is no respecter of persons," "He is without variableness or a shadow of turning," "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day and for ever." Jesus told Paul that he must, and Jesus also recognized the authority of the church. He never changes. Ananias told him to be baptized and wash away his sins. How about me, can God who is no respecter of persons make an exception of me and release me from an obligation requisite to salvation, that Jesus Christ said Paul must observe?

Thoughts of this kind flooded my mind and sleep fled from me. I tried in vain to put some construction upon it that would weaken its force, but I could not dispose of the word must, as used by Jesus Christ. Finally I thought that perhaps the word must wasn't there, that it was what he ought to do, but I am ashamed to say that I was afraid to get my Bible and look it up.

After some time I could not endure the suspense, so I got my Bible and again I saw the page just as I saw it when it was shown to me in the night. Then began my struggle with pride. I knew in my heart that both baptism and the authority to administer it were required in the case of Paul and I could find no scriptural ground by which I could justify the thought that the same Lord would make an exception of me. But could I afford to unite with a people who were everywhere spoken against? True, I had been taught never to be afraid to stand for the right, and as a child I had dreamed of heroic achievements that would make me a name among men, but I had not counted on the right requiring me to occupy a position where my motives and even my intelligence would be looked upon with suspicion. I can never fully describe my feelings at this time. My father was at this time a minister in a society that was looked upon as standing for all that was good morally. My mother was an active member of the W. C. T. U., respected and looked up to. Must I, their child, place myself in a position that would be looked on with contempt, not only by them, but by all the associates of my childhood, and give my life to a cause that would close every avenue of success as viewed from every previous standpoint? It seemed that I could not yield, neither could I shake off the conviction that God required it. I could not disbelieve that there was a God, but still I fought against my convictions and was loath to yield to what I realized was my duty until I was stricken with a nervous collapse in which I was brought face to face with death. Several of my relatives among mother's people had died suddenly, and when it seemed that my heart ceased to beat and sight failed my eyes and I dropped into a chair, for the time partly paralyzed, my first thought was that I had refused to obey the gospel after all that God had shown me, and that now I must face my God, and I was not prepared. I was forced to admit at the time that if I was condemned it would be just. I can not tell just how long I remained in this condition. I was thoroughly conscious, but had a sensation all over my body very much like one feels when one of his limbs "goes to sleep," as we call it. I could not see; everything was midnight blackness for a few moments. The first indication of returning strength was when I began to see the light in the room, then the different objects became visible and I was soon able to make my way to my room, where I retired for the night, and then I was given to know that God had given me another opportunity to yield myself to him and do the work that he had for me to do.

This occurred the last Saturday evening of May, 1888. The struggle of that night stands out as one of the hardest fights of my life. I had not been so perfect, so pure and good, neither had I ever achieved such success as to justify the pride and rebellion that surged in my heart; but still it did arise with such overwhelming force that sometimes it seemed that even death would be preferable to obedience. Finally, through the mercy of God, the right conquered, my pride was broken, and I resolved before morning to cast my lot with the people that I was now thoroughly convinced were the people of God. When I arose in the morning I was weak in body, but I determined to act in harmony with what I had resolved, and so I went to the Sunday-school held at the Unionburg Schoolhouse, and at the close I went to Elder P. C. Kemmish and told him that I was convinced of the truth as taught by them and desired to unite with the church. He looked surprised, as he doubtless was, but spoke to Bro. T. Thomas, who was president of the branch there, and they announced my baptism for the next Sunday. According to announcement, on Sunday, June 3, 1888, I followed my Master through the waters of baptism, where my old life was buried and I arose to newness of life. I was confirmed at the water's edge and while I received no great manifestation at the time, I felt a quiet peace and the assurance that I had done right. I soon after began to discern a new force in my life that strengthened me to resist temptations that had previously overcome me, and was made to realize the truth of the statement in a revelation given to Hyrum Smith, section 10, paragraph 6, "And now I say unto you, put your trust in that Spirit, which leadeth to do good, yea to do justly, to walk humbly, to judge righteously, and this is my spirit." I also began to have a clearer understanding of the scripture than I had previously known, so that I saw that the Spirit of God was enlightening my mind in regard to the things of God, showing me the things of the Father and bringing to my remembrance the things that Jesus had said as he had promised in the fourteenth to seventeenth chapters of John.

My health remained poor for the next three years. I worked at different occupations, part of the time on a farm, sold books for a while, worked in a store in Persia, Iowa, taught singing in Persia the winter of 1888 and 1889, sold fruit-trees for a short time, and in the spring of 1890, worked on a farm in the Gallands Grove neighborhood. From there in the fall of the same year I returned to my parents' home, which was then near Waukeel, Iowa. I was stricken while there with typhoid fever, and after my recovery I began to get stronger again. I worked among the farmers there and near Grimes, Iowa, until the next spring, when I settled in Des Moines, where my home has been ever since. When the Des Moines Branch was reorganized in the early summer of 1891, I placed my letter there and on the seventh day of the following September was ordained a priest and elected branch priest. The following Sunday I preached my first sermon.

I was married the fourteenth day of the following December to Mrs. Almeda F. Higgins and the following spring had the privilege of baptizing her into the church. I continued actively engaging in branch work. I worked at house-painting during the summer and at whatever I could pick up during the winter. On November 14, 1892, I was ordained an elder. My wife had almost constant bad health for the first five years of our married life, and during the hard times from 1892 to 1896 we were sorely tried. Often I could not leave her to go to work, and when she was able to be left I could not always find employment. We became deeply involved in debt and were sometimes very much discouraged, but now I see that those experiences were for my good, as they have made me more merciful than I would otherwise have been to those who are unfortunate.

I had several manifestations of God's blessings that I haven't space here to record. I was once shown in a night vision or dream an outline of my life and work that has had such a fulfillment that it has greatly strengthened me in my confidence in God. I also had several severe trials resulting from evil conditions in the church, but the outcome has been to educate me, thus making me more efficient than I could otherwise have been in the work. In 1897 I was enrolled in the Fourth Quorum of Elders. Beginning with the year of 1899 fortune seemed to favor me. During that year in a dream or vision I was shown that my future work would be in the Quorum of High Priests. I can not take space here to give it in full, but I saw among other things that in the great harvest-field my work would be to shock up the grain that others had reaped, and as the heavenly peace that attends the Spirit of God seemed to rest upon me like a mantle, I was given plainly to know the line of work I would have to do. During the General Conference of 1900 at Lamoni, Joseph Smith came to me in a dream and told me plainly that I would soon be ordained a high priest, and I learned the next day that my name was being considered for such ordination. On May 20, 1900, I was ordained a high priest under the hands of J. W. Wight.

I continued as president of the Des Moines Branch for the next three years, being blessed in my ministrations, and often made conscious of divine help in my work. I was prospered financially, so that I had my debts paid and offered myself for appointment at the General Conference of 1903. I was appointed to labor in Clinton and Comanche, Iowa, and Fulton, Illinois, for that year; and the next year, 1904, Davenport, Iowa, Rock Island, and Moline, Illinois. I was called home because of sickness in my family, in the fall of 1904, and when able to go into the field again, I was transferred to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where I was re-appointed the following year. In the spring of 1906 I was appointed to the Des Moines District and was re-appointed this year. I have labored here as district president and have done what missionary work I could. I have acted on the High Council in the absence of members of the standing High Council, during the General Conferences of 1905, 1906, and 1907.

I have not been able always to do as I liked, but have made mistakes, and realize that before I can attain to that that I have aimed for, I will have much to overcome. I know there is a God who is able to give help to his children and hope that I may so abide in him that I may not walk in darkness, but that, as Paul says in 2 Corinthians 3: 18, I may be with those of whom he speaks as follows: "But we all with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

Your fellow worker in Christ,

MARCUS H. COOK.

THE UTAH GOSPEL MISSION OF CLEVELAND.

The above name is applied to a corporation located in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, at 1854 East Eighty-first Street. The Reverend J. D. Nutting is secretary and chief officer in charge. Associated with him are many business men of this city, also the Reverend Charles F. Thwing, president of the Western Reserve University. The object of this so-called mission is to combat everything under the name of Mormonism, and refers to the subject as "Josephite (Iowa) and Brighamite (Utah) Mormonism."

I recently called on the secretary, Reverend Nutting, just for the sake of acquaintance and to learn what the attitude of this organization is toward us as a church. The work of this mission is directed against us as a church in just the same way that it is directed against the Mormon church of Utah. Reverend Mr. Nutting astonished me by saying that he would much prefer to unite himself to the Utah church, rather than ours. He said that we as a church were restrained from immoral and corrupt practices by reason of our being in close association with the various Christian denominations; that their influence over and around us repel our progress in evil things; that if we as a people should remove to some place apart from the surrounding of these so-called Christian sects, in the outskirts of civilization, we would soon become as bad or worse than the Mormons of Utah. He spoke of having heard our missionaries preaching on the streets in Salt Lake City, preaching directly against the doctrines of the Utah people, but he regards our success in winning converts from their ranks as simply transferring them out of one kind of iniquity into another. He makes no particular distinction between us and the Utah people, and notwithstanding the fact that we sent the first missionaries to Utah, that we joined with others in favoring a constitutional amendment forbidding the practice of polygamy, and the fact that we as a church have ever maintained a strenuous opposition to the church in Utah, yet he will not recognize any material difference. He has a friend, a pastor, who lives not far from Lamoni, who informs him that our leading men are "none too honest" and can not be relied upon for truthfulness. He related an incident to illustrate his attitude toward us by reference to a family dinner given at Kirtland, Ohio, by some of the relatives of Isaac Morley, who was connected with the original church. While at this dinner some reference was made to the Reorganized Church and the difference between it and the Utah church; one of the pious guests arose and extended his arms and said, "The sideboards of Christianity count for a great deal, a great deal." It would seem from Reverend John D. Nutting's estimate of us as a people, that there is no good in us, not one redeeming merit, nothing worthy of any recognition whatever. I asked him if he could point to any definite results by which the success of his work would appear; and he said that he could not. He travels and lectures on Mormonism, sells pamphlets, written mostly by himself, engages men from several colleges to go to Utah, to spend the summer as missionaries, and their converts thus far have been very few, if any.

One of his pamphlets written on the subject of the origin of the Book of Mormon, composed by "a scholarly lawyer," attributes the origin to Spalding's manuscripts—not the one that was discovered in possession of one Mr. Rice and now at Oberlin College, but that it was taken from some other manuscript which they believe Spalding wrote, which they allege was stolen by Sidney Rigdon, who, together with Joseph Smith, engaged in making up the Book of Mormon. The fact that Rigdon never became identified with the church, until nearly one year after the Book of Mormon was printed, would suggest a little further improvement in the education of this so-called "scholarly lawyer." Many of his tracts contain glaring inconsistencies, such as attempting to make Joseph Smith the author of polygamy and Adam-God worship, and many other things for which there is no foundation in fact.

Reverend Mr. Nutting is a Congregationalist, and I believe he holds to the idea that the Mormons of every rank should renounce their faith and apply at the doors of the Congregational, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or to what is termed the "evangelical churches," for admission. This, it is safe to predict, they will never do; there are no charms in sectarianism for Latter Day Saints. While the so-called and self-styled Christians attempt to liken us unto the heathens as compared with them, yet there is nothing in our doctrine or history so heathenish, so unreasonable and unscriptural as infant baptism and infant damnation. Sectarianism has no good thing that Latter Day Saints have not; and the right to be known as a Christian in fact is restricted to those who are disciples of Christ by reason of having done what he has commanded. Could any of the sects of sectarianism prove to the Latter Day Saints that they had more fully obeyed the Lord; could they demonstrate that they are living more closely in touch with him; could they offer any substantial improvement upon our religion, then the way would be clear for them to make some impression upon us. As it is, we think that we can show these professing Christians many things in their creeds, and by many incidents in their attitude toward us, that they are unchristian in faith and practice.

Fortunately, there are those who have written on the subject of Mormonism who have had the manhood to see and recognize whatever of good may be in evidence. I quote the following from a book written by one John Codman, entitled, A Solution of the Mormon Problem.

Good men and women, here is your opportunity. Throw aside for the occasion, your sectarian prejudice; contribute liberally your money to sustain these worthy men (Reorganized Church missionaries). Send hundreds of them to carry their tracts and to preach in every city, town, and hamlet of Utah. Whatever danger there may have been in time past to those who would "beard the lion in his den," there is danger no longer. Anybody and everybody may now go anywhere and everywhere and preach what they please, without let or hindrance. At all events these "Josephites" are willing to incur the risk. They will accomplish a work beyond the powers of all other Christian sects. By preaching the Mormon doctrine as they claim that it "was once delivered to the Saints," they will convert men from the great sin, which we all deplore, without driving them into atheism and despair.—Pages 24, 25.

This man takes a consistent, reasonable view of the situation, and while he may disbelieve in our church and its doctrine, yet he knows what has been demonstrated as fact, that we are the only church that has accomplished anything worthy of mention in the fight against Utah Mormonism. The only effect this Utah Gospel Mission will have upon us as a church, will be to keep the fires of prejudice aglow among those who know us not. Their pamphlets are so far from anything that is reasonable, consistent, or right, that they will only be disgusting to any Latter Day Saint. Reverend J. D. Nutting has a standing invitation to publicly discuss his contentions with a representative of our church, which he has, so far, declined. Doubtless his time is more profitably spent in soliciting money for his mission, selling his pamphlets, and giving his lectures.

SHOULD CHURCHES ADVERTISE?

The question has been propounded: "Should churches advertise?" And the answer might again be put in the form of a question: "Why not?" The advertiser advertises with a definite purpose in view. That is the real advertiser. For there is one here and there, occasionally, who does not know how to advertise, nor why he advertises, and as likely as not, he believes that he is advertising simply as a matter of charity. "Just to keep some poor devil of a newspaper man alive, don't you know." But these men are exceptions, and rare ones at that. The average advertiser advertises because he wants to get results, and he knows that there is one way to get results, and that is through the columns of a newspaper.

Now, there may be churches, that are not quite definite as to what they want and what they may be here for, and of course, if they were to advertise, they would be in a most uncertain state of mind, as to the purpose and object of their advertising and the results to be expected, if any. But the others, who desire to grow and to flourish and to exert an ever widening influence for good, should not hide their light under a bushel. The minister can talk to hundreds from the pulpit, and he and the good deacons can meet other hundreds on the street and in their daily walks, but the paper can and does talk to thousands and it sees them every day and as a rule, it talks to them, just when they are in the humor for listening. Of course, the church that wants results, ought to advertise. As a rule, it does not object to gratis advertising. It ought to get on a business basis and pay for advertising, as it pays for anything else that it needs.

There is no question of professional ethics, tangled up in the question of church advertising. The average medical man is not opposed to advertising. In fact, he is constantly advertising himself and causing others to advertise him. The mere "Dr." in front of his name is an advertisement and a mighty good one. The fact that the doctors as a rule, taboo newspaper advertising that costs money, simply goes to show that highly educated gentlemen can be entirely and absolutely wrong on some matters and ridiculously conservative or reactionary in others.

Properly considered, the only people who should avoid advertising or should most carefully keep their names out of print, are such, who are ashamed of their business or calling, or who have particular reasons for desiring to work "in the dark." All others should advertise and this includes the churches.—Hawk-Eye.

Should churches endeavor to popularize themselves with the public? Should religious institutions follow the example of merchants and make known to the people the merits of their "wares"? In view of the reported falling off in church attendance and the apparent increase in frivolity in the world, the issue raised is one that should receive the careful attention of all those who are interested in spreading the work of organized Christianity.

Have you ever noted that you patronize those stores in your town which keep the attention of the buying public continually on themselves, on the improvements they are making, the sales they are conducting, the supplies they are purchasing, and so on? Or that the goods you purchase are the goods which are advertised most extensively in the magazines and newspapers? Or that the schools, the summer resorts, the railways, etc., that you patronize are those which are continually interesting the public in their history, their advantages, their usefulness and their work? Well, you do, consciously or unconsciously, and this demonstrates that advertising does pay.

Now, if advertising pays theaters, amusement resorts, hotels, whisky venders, mercantile establishments, schools and colleges, and every other secular thing, why should it not also pay the churches? If it were not for the attractive publicity work done by circuses, theaters, music-halls and such places, think you that they would be filled to overcrowding as they are? Not a bit of it! It is their enterprise in interesting men and women in their productions that wins for them success. It is the advertising done by the "houses of a thousand wonders" that is emptying the house of God. When this fact is once recognized by our clergymen they will begin to ask themselves whether Mammon's monopoly of up to date business methods should remain unquestioned. It was a wise bishop who remarked in defense of choirs that he was emphatically opposed to the Devil having a monopoly of all the good music.

And it will be a wise church management who will break through the ice of custom and begin to attract strangers to their services by effective advertising.—San Francisco Call.

The Ministry of Education to Life.

[We can not too highly recommend the following address, taken from the Kindergarten Review, to the careful reading of parents and teachers. Jesus says: "He . . . shall go in and out, and find pasture." Truly in this there is rich food for thought, and it may well cause some of us to inquire if we are living up to the standards of excellence which are found in pastures outside of Zion.—EDITOR.]

That Jerusalem was destroyed because the education of the children was neglected is an old saying of the Talmud. No such charge can be brought against America if we consider only the great expenditure for schools and teachers and all kinds of educational machinery. But, important as this is, the vital question is as to the spirit of the teacher, as to the use of this machinery, as to the ends for which all this vast treasure is expended, in fact and not in theory.

What is the education that is so essential to the existence of a commonwealth? What is the training that is the sole object of a nation in the aid of its teacher?

We are not to discuss the question of special education for particular ends. Our thought is rather of the general education for life. There is much nonsense talked among us impatient Americans regarding the preparation of children and youth for the specific sphere which they are to occupy in life, as if, in this America of ours, we could ever say, with much surety, what the specific end of a boy or girl shall be in the life that is before him.

You remember, perhaps, that little incident of the Norwegian girl, that must appeal to many a housewife. She had been told to sweep the room; she had been told to cook a meal; she had been told to dust; she was able to do none of these; and finally the weary housekeeper said:

"Nora, can't you do anything?"

"Oh, yes," she answered, "I can milk a reindeer."

And very much, I fear, of the special training of young people comes very closely to such an end as that. The specialist needs no defense and no encouragement. The vast triumphs of special study in every sphere that calls for intellectual effort and intellectual skill are patent to us all. In the field of transportation, of agriculture, of all the sciences, of all the trades, the triumphs of special study are magnificent. Nor does the youth in any of our schools who is fired with a particular purpose, who is guided by some special ambition, need any remarkable care. He will realize his aim. But the great mass of us are not so constituted. We have neither any remarkable special capacities nor any special aims. The great question for us is, What is the education that shall most minister to life? What is the education that shall prepare the youth for the largest possibilities of the future and form the foundation upon which they may be firm when the high tide comes, to the specific ends that are before them? What, in other words, are the fundamentals, the essential elements, that must be included in any true education? To see straight, to think accurately, to speak exactly; we shall all, I think, agree as to that. However formal the statement may seem, we know it is important, when we think of the great number of people we know who see confusedly, and think, if they think at all, without regard to fact, and who speak shamblingly and shabbily and in exactly. Even if one has gained the Doctorate of Philosophy, and so sees and so thinks and so speaks, he is not a well educated man. This is an absolute essential.

Education does not consist in what is too often contemptuously termed "book learning" alone. We must not only see facts and know how to use facts, we must train eye and hand and mind and speech, to answer to facts. But that is not enough, though it is very, very much. Education must give us a certain breadth of view. It must lead us out of provinciality.

I remember, years ago, of riding my horse into a little district in Ulster County, perhaps ten or twelve miles from the river, and as the boys gathered about me I began to talk to them of the Hudson River and of New York and I found several boys among them who had never seen the river, who opened their eyes at the accounts of New York that I gave them in a very casual fashion. They wondered, too, at a steamboat and a train.

We call that provincialism, but it is not confined to the little villages. Education must take every boy and lead him out of provincialism, until he knows that beyond the mountains there are also people. We must have breadth of view.

Our children must grow to recognize that no man may despise another man, and no race condemn another race; they must know that we are all of one blood,—all the races of the world,—and that we gather in the service of one Father.

But we must go a step further and find another element. There is an element that a true education ought to give, even to childhood, that is too commonly left out of our education, both in childhood and in youth, in young manhood and young womanhood. A true education ought to develop something of a taste for art and literature, for good books, for pictures and statues, and music, which are now so easily within the reach of all in our great centers. In other words, it ought to make a beginning towards the enrichment of life. Alas, as we live on and watch men and women in their adult years, how often we see it true that, whatever their bank accounts, they are miserable and utterly poor! They have not learned to commune with the minds of other ages, to enter into the beauty of thought and the beauty of life that have come down to us in literature and in the arts.

But all this we might have received and still lack the first essential of an education. We may have exact thought and exact speech, we may understand fact, we may have breadth and culture, and yet have failed to touch the bottom element in a sound education, and that is the will. An education must make boys and girls efficient, or it fails. It must not only open their eyes, but it must create purpose within them. It must kindle moral enthusiasm, it must give intensity of life, it must gather all the varied powers of life up into that sort of unity which enables the growing man or woman to use himself or herself in the direction of the greatest efficiency. We must not only teach children the obligations of life, but, if our teaching be sound, they must be stimulated to meet the obligations of life. Our capacities, our responsibilities, our opportunities,—education must open all these to us, but it must also, if it be a sound education, give us the ability to meet these, or, at least, the impulse to meet them. It must make us live. "To live," Rousseau said in that epochal book of his life, "is the education that I would give him."

There is one special phase of American life that calls for particular emphasis upon these fundamentals of education. I refer to the growing lawlessness of our American communities. I have not in mind merely the homicidal mania that seems to have gripped America, so that the homicides in a hundred thousand are twenty times as many as in Germany or England. I have in mind not merely the wild career of crime which seems to be so common. I refer to the unloosing of the bonds of so much of our social life, and the unloosing of domestic restraint, of domestic bonds, until our very literature, the literature that our children read, is permeated with this anarchic condition of social and domestic life, until our young men and young women grow up with their imaginations tainted and often with their minds unsettled regarding these fundamental questions of moral life. [This enforces the thought on page 129, November issue.]

It may be easy to indicate some of the reasons why we are really a lawless nation.

It is partially due, without any question, to our enormously rapid expansion, partially due to the enormous increase of wealth among us, with that life of luxury that has accompanied it. That, everywhere and in every age of the world's life, has begotten looseness of social life.

It may be due, in a considerable measure, to the enormously rapid immigration to America, which, while it has brought us a vast body of our best citizens, has also brought to us a very large and potent lawless element.

It may also be possible to state that this is not a product of foreign peoples principally, but an American product, and it may be possible to suggest that we owe a very large fraction of it to the ingenious and successful efforts of many able lawyers to set aside justice and to stem and to make impossible the action of the laws that have been enacted.

It may be possible, also, to suggest that the very aims of life that are held before our young people are responsible, in no small measure, for such results. When a generation is brought up to believe that the chief end of life is happiness, when children grow up with the idea that the getting or pleasure out of life is something more than to be good, when we cultivate the idea that the great object of life, after all, is to get what is popularly known as "fun" out of it, rather than, first of all, to be good and to do good, then we must expect this eruption of the barbarians, then we may expect the breaking down of the restraints of law, until, far and wide throughout our social fabric, to an extent hardly apprehended by those who have not looked carefully at the conditions, this spirit of unrestraint and of irresponsibility and of lawlessness may be brought home to us.

We may go further, I think, and suggest that certain tendencies which are called socialistic are adding very rapidly to this feeling of irresponsibility. I listened recently to a paper read to a small group of gentlemen, which advocated, or, at least, opened the question as to whether it was not the bound duty of the City of New York to give breakfasts and luncheons to all the school children who might need them, on the plea that they come ill fed to school, and, being ill fed, it is not possible for them to do their best intellectual work. We read in our papers, that the contention is now being made before the board that for similar reasons, because children with defective eyesight are unable to study properly, eye-glasses should be furnished to all who may need them.

Now, every man knows that such efforts grow out of kindness of heart and out of a sense, whether a right sense or not I will not discuss, of justice. Every man knows that the motives beneath such contentions are worthy of the highest respect, but if they tend to break down the feelings of responsibility of a generation of parents and if they tend to undermine the sense of responsibility in a generation of children, then better, far better, that half the children should go with defective eyesight, and far better that they should be hungry! Far better than that the nation should be undermined and that we should produce a proletarian like that of Old Rome, with her constantly increasing cries, on the one hand, for bread; and on the other, for the circus!

What our nation needs, what our people need, is more iron in the blood. What we need is an intense teaching of moral purpose and a creation of moral enthusiasm.

The great need of America is not physical stalwartness. When a justly celebrated professor, who has carefully observed American life, proceeds to tell us that the grave danger of American youth is that of being taught so largely by American women that they shall be feminized in their ideals and feminized in their intellects, some of us, who have also studied in Germany, begin to compare the American boy, taught largely by women, with what we remember of the German boy. We begin to ask ourselves whether we were so conscious of greater physical power and physical mastery and physical courage among the German boys, and we turn back with the conviction that the American boy is not very effeminate; that the American boy, as you meet him on the football field, does not precisely suggest the effects of the teaching of women; and that the American boy, in all his school life and in all his college life, can give points to almost any other boy, if measured by the intensity of his physical purposes and the constancy of his physical efforts and the unrest of his physical activities.

No; the great need of America is not physical stamina nor physical courage. We have heard too much preaching, in this day of ours, of physical strenuousness. What this nation needs to-day is the preaching of moral strenuousness, the preaching of moral conviction, the intensifying of moral purpose, the opening of the ideals of our children to the distinctions of right and wrong in commerce and in politics, so that theft shall be known to be theft, and lies shall be known to be lies, and impurity shall be stamped as impurity, and, whether embodied in the best of fiction or in the worst of our yellow journals, that the life that is impure socially is degraded and that nothing can save it from its degradation and impurity.

We do not need, in this generation, to put our efforts on the physical side. That is taking fair care of itself, and, I submit, better care of itself than it ever took before in American life. What we need, I repeat, is the strenuousness of moral conviction and the earnestness of moral purpose, and the bearing in upon the souls of youth of the conviction that the highest life is the best life and the most successful life is the purest life.

I do not mean to suggest for one moment that education, as we know it, is responsible for this lawlessness. No; far from it. I should go back of the school. The schools are partly responsible, but back of that is the responsibility of our home training and the responsibility of our social and domestic ideals. Our children are not trained as they should be at home, and they are not half as earnestly taught as they ought to be, in our families and in our churches, the laws of righteousness and morality. Religion, first of all, in the home and in the church, rather than in the school, is the great need of our American life—an education that antedates the education of the school. But the school must enforce these convictions, and if they have been neglected in the household, then the school must create them.

But when we come to the responsibility of the school we are brought, of course, face to face with the teacher. Who is the teacher who has to bear this responsibility and to do this work? Where shall we find him? Where shall we find her? I suppose that what is so commonly said is partially true, at least: that the great teacher is born and not made, and as seldom born as the great poet; but we have methods of making teachers, and excellent methods, too,—methods so good that good teachers are frequent, and may be made more frequent, and their products excellent.

But, whether born or made, there is one essential without which a teacher is not worth his or her salt. That is the missionary spirit, the spirit of service, the spirit which gives and asks no return but the joy of seeing fruitage from its work.

If you look down the long line of those who have been great in the history of education, you are struck by the number of those who rise above the level of their fellows in their appreciation of service. When you turn back to that great teacher of Greece,—and—through Greece, of generations and generations of men down to our own time,—Plato, you recall that vivid figure of his, of the cave where men sit imprisoned, their backs turned to the light, and see only the shadows of those who pass by behind them. Now and then a prisoner escapes from the cave and goes out into the great world and sees no longer shadows but sees things as they are. For what? That he may enjoy his larger liberty? No; that he may come back to his fellow prisoners again and impart to them the lessons of the larger life.

One may not contemplate the great line of teachers of every age without stopping reverently before the Great Teacher, greatest of all the teachers, greatest in his power of insight, greatest in his power of opening the truths clear to the bottom of the seeing soul, greatest in his inspiration to life, the teacher whose influence is most potent of all teachers in the world to-day. It was the Great Teacher who gave his life as a ransom for many.

Come down to this modern day and think of the one whose life was more of an inspiration to the teachers of a generation ago than that of any modern teacher. Men wondered at Thomas Arnold. They said it was a shame that Arnold should sit there at Rugby, teaching boys—stupid boys—Latin syntax, when he was needed in the cabinet and needed in the church and needed in the university. But Arnold sat there teaching Latin syntax, because he saw, in those boys that were construing Latin, the men who were to run the state and rule the church, the leaders of parliament, the leaders of the army and navy, the leaders of the university, and because he saw in Latin syntax an element of training of the sort that, well used, could shape and stimulate character. A few years rolled on and men began to paint the name of Arnold in their chancel windows, and, embalmed in poetry, as well as in noblest biography, his life had been a stimulus to our generation unequaled by that of any cabinet minister of England or any leader of its church.

That is the spirit of the true teacher—the vicarious spirit, the spirit which reaches out to give. There is no true teacher who is devoid of it, and no one who professes to be a teacher ought to allow himself or herself to sit in the ranks of the profession unless stimulated by a like spirit.

But I am told, and by the best authority, that in these latter days the number of those who are going into the profession with high ideals is decreasing and it is becoming, as men say of the ministry to-day, harder and harder to draft the best material into the ranks of our profession. Can it be true? There are many reasons that may make toward it in our time. Political considerations have something to do with it. Special phases of religion have sometimes to do with it. Easy mode of making a living has some influence upon it. And I fear that when our teachers unite, as they have in some places, into labor unions and influence legislation through lobbies, I fear that that also has something to do with the dignity and honor of the profession.

But, whatever the consideration, we want no men in this profession, and no women in it, who do not come moved by the spirit of the true teacher. We ask, at least, that the teachers of our country shall have that self-respect which shall deter them from continuing in a profession to which they can not give their best. We ask that they shall not, as stepping-stones to something else, as a gratification of ambition or the desire for money, sacrifice the welfare of our little ones. We demand that the men and women who enter this profession, be they few or be they many, shall come to it with this vicarious spirit, which gives and gives and gives beyond necessity, in the hope of the larger life that is kindled through their efforts and empowered by their enthusiasm.—Reverend James M. Taylor, D. D., President of Vassar College, in the Kindergarten Review.

Editors Herald: One year ago I moved here from Eastern Texas, and finding no Saints here, everything looked dark to me; but in the fall I found a few and we were visited by John Harp and S. S. Smith and heard some preaching that was very edifying to us, but we could not get the gospel before the people. The Baptists granted permission to preach in their church, but we could not get the people out.

About the first of June Brn. Aylor and Maloney were welcome visitors to our town, or city of about fifteen thousand. Bro. Aylor stopping only a short time, left the work in the most excellent hands of Bro. R. M. Maloney. As no gatherings of any kind are allowed on the streets, he got the public square, and held meetings about ten days at four o'clock on the square and at the writer's house at night. Then he went to Venus for about ten days; came back and renewed his talks on the square where he had large crowds of all classes. He has removed quite a lot of prejudice and has scattered the good seed so widely that I think some has fallen on good ground, and there will be harvesting in the future.

He had the pleasure of leading one precious soul into the water, a young man that was acquainted with the Saints in California. The old cry, "They are Mormons, was set up, but to our surprise we had a light storm that blew eight Mormon elders into our midst and the people found out we were not the same. Bro. Maloney gave a lecture on the difference which made the Utah elders very angry. So the good work goes on. I was glad to hear of Bro. Aylor's success in the debate at San Antonio. May God have the glory and may we live worthy of his blessings, that he may be mindful of us and visit us with the power of his Holy Spirit. Trusting in God, that we may all work together for the restoration of Israel and the redemption of God's people.

LAREDO, Texas, July 13, 1908.

Dear Herald: We came to this place from Houston May 4, finding ourselves about one hundred and fifty miles from the nearest Saint. We are on the Rio Grande River, amidst a population of twenty-five thousand people, ten thousand of whom are across the river in Mexico. The greater part of the inhabitants are of Mexican blood and speech. Several are Americans and a few are Italians and Spaniards. The Mexicans treat us with great respect wherever we meet them. They are so pleased that we want to learn their language and work among them. Some are intelligent, fine looking people and speak good English.

Our first preaching-service (which, of course, was conducted in English, since we are but primary students of the Spanish) was held in our own house. All came that we could make room for, some remaining on the porch and at the windows. A few days later we secured a vacant lot in front of our house to preach on and seated it with lumber on boxes. My husband, with an interpreter's aid, made a house to house invitation to the nearest neighbors. We went to the service with gasoline torch, Billhorn organ, and a few song books in both languages. The high wind (which is common here) put out the light a few times, but finally we succeeded in keeping it ablaze. Parties both large and small stepped in from each direction, making about one hundred in all. Against the wind, dust, and loud talking of children, the preacher addressed them about twenty-five minutes. The young people aided us in the singing, and at the close of the service some Spanish tracts were distributed, with an invitation for all to return the following night. Most all the children, comprising about one third of the audience, followed us home, without solicitation, asking us to play for them on the organ. But a little previous experience accounts for why we refused them; fearing we would be kept up the remaining half of the night. Most of them with willingness sat upon the floor, owing to the insufficiency of chairs. After jabbering a while to one another, they rushed to the door, exclaiming, "Gracias! Gracias! porque vds. to car en el organo." (Thanks, because you played on the organ.)

The second night the children were so noisy that one could scarcely hear the speaker, and a few onions were thrown by young men at a distance; even striking two or more who were interested in the meeting. The following day matters were improved by moving the service to a fenced lot, by invitation of the owner, Mr. Harper. Most of two weeks were employed with a fair attendance and a commendable interest.

Since closing we hold regular meetings in the neighborhood on Friday and Tuesday evenings of each week, and the few who are interested, keep coming.

About two weeks ago, an American overheard my husband conversing upon the Bible and invited him into his store-room for a scriptural interview. With great surprise he confessed to having learned something from the Latter Day Saints, outside of his course of study furnished by the Seventh Day Adventists. And he urged him to attend the Adventist meeting at a dwelling-house the following Saturday. But after my husband refused to confess that the Pope changed the Sabbath, and that the Seventh Day Sabbath belonged to the plan of salvation, the owner of the house, who also led the meetings, ordered him to get his hat and leave. This abusive conduct turned the investigator more in our favor, who said he never saw as great a Christian manliness exhibited as the Elder revealed in his quiet way of leaving the house. The man and his family are now believers and visiting us almost every day, and the Adventists are feeling sore over their loss. This breaks up the American class, except their own family, leaving them only a few Mexicans whom they kept out of reach of the fatal argument.

Yours in the gospel,

VIOLA AND W. H. MANNERING.

SAGLE, Idaho, July 14, 1908.

Dear Herald: As a Saint of the Sagle Branch I feel it my duty to let Sagle be heard from. I was never in a Sunday-school of any kind till I was twelve years old, but I was often trying to know something about the future. I joined the M. E. Church when I was twenty years old and prayed always that I might be led aright. I was healed of a lame leg while I was yet a Methodist. I know the Lord healed me, so I desired to work for him.

When I was coming to Sagle about five years ago, I was riding along in my wagon one day and thinking how I would puzzle those Saints at Sagle when I would arrive there, and presently I saw a vision. It was daylight, about three o'clock in the afternoon. I was carried away and saw a high hill and on the side of this hill were churches of all kinds. Right behind the hill was a large fire burning about one hundred feet high. I could see people swarming into those buildings, but none were coming out, and I could hear great noise and screams. This passed and I looked again and saw on the top of the hill one church. Everything was quiet there and on the building was the sign, "Latter Day Saints." This passed and I was driving along the road. I felt it necessary to bear my testimony before the world, for we know not the good we may do some poor wandering soul. The city set on the hill is a good parable for us to learn.

I know the Lord has delivered me from danger and trouble many times, and I hope to continue faithful to the end.

Your brother in bonds,
W. H. POWELL.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. E. Baggs, Mercedes, Texas: "We are still in the faith and hope to live worthy of the name of Latter Day Saint. We will look after the needs of an elder who might come this way."

By letter dated July 20 from Sr. Sarah J. Ross, Gilroy, California, we learn of her safe arrival home after an absence of three months visiting the Saints, relatives, and friends in Iowa, Missouri, and Oklahoma. She expresses her gratitude to her heavenly Father for his protecting care during her travels.

Bro. J. P. Wash, Salmon, Idaho, writes in regard to calls for help for needy made through the HERALD columns. He discovers that in one instance his personal contribution, though small, as he considered it, was really more than half of all the assistance given. We trust Saints who are able will not refuse to help in cases where actual need and want exist.

News From Branches

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

On account of peculiar conditions here the interest in our branch is slack, a few of us are trying to keep the work moving.

We feel indebted to you for the comfort we receive by reading the HERALD; we couldn't do without it.

We were very much interested in a debate a short time back between our district president, J. F. Curtis, and Elder Eads, a Mormon missionary. Bro. Curtis acquitted himself nobly.

Our branch president, E. A. Davis, has been called to Independence on urgent matters, and Bro. Hacket, of Lamoni, is offering his services to us at present.

This is a great city for holidays, pleasure-seeking. I see so much of it that I am inclined to be pessimistic in spite of what W. J. Bryan said about the world growing better.

The Saints continue to leave, going back east and settling in and around Zion.

Brn. J. F. Curtis, Sheehy, and Hackett are conducting street-preaching here. May the Lord bless their labors.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her people, the Saints of God, I remain,

Your brother in bonds,

1109 First Avenue.

Bryan's Prayer at the Cot.

During the St. Louis Republican convention, twelve years ago, before he ever dreamed of such fame coming to his name, William J. Bryan was housed in the Lindell hotel in a room with several cots. In the early evening, when the lights were turned low, one man found his way to bed early, and as he opened the door he found another tired reporter over by the window scarcely discernible in the shadows of the room. He was kneeling at his bedside, saying his prayers, and that simple piety won the hearts of those rough and ready newspaper men who occupied the room with him. It was William J. Bryan, who a month later thrilled the country with his "crown of thorns" speech.—National Magazine, for August.

Presiding Bishopric.

NOTICE OF CHANGES IN WORK OF THE BISHOPRIC AND APPOINTMENTS OF BISHOP'S AGENTS.

Massachusetts District.

The Saints and friends of the Massachusetts District please notice that at the last General Conference, Bro. M. C. Fisher, of Somerville, Massachusetts, was ordained to the office of bishop and has been duly placed in charge of church financial matters in and for the district of Massachusetts, in place of Bishop R. Bullard, who is in charge in financial work of the Eastern District of Maine. All business in connection with the district of Massachusetts in a financial way should be conducted through Bishop M. C. Fisher, who will perform all the duties of bishop in and for said territory, as per the rules and regulations of the church for carrying on its work of finances in the several stakes and districts of said church.

Tithes and offerings in behalf of the Reorganized Church in and for the district of Massachusetts please forward to Bishop M. C. Fisher, Winter Hill Station, Somerville, Massachusetts. We trust that in the further organization and arrangement of the work of the financial arm of the church the present year, Saints and friends will feel renewed interest in each performing his or her respective part, so that the supply may be sufficient for all demands of the church. I ask the blessing of the Lord upon each helper in his cause.

Eastern Maine District.

To the Saints and Friends of Eastern Maine District of the Reorganized Church: Please take notice that Bishop R. Bullard has been duly appointed in charge of the financial work in and for the Eastern Maine District of the Reorganized Church in behalf of the Presiding Bishopric of said church, and is duly authorized to transact business and work belonging to said district as bishop of the same. Also to act for and in behalf of the Presiding Bishopric in its work in the Eastern Maine District, according to the rules and regulations governing in said church. This is the second year of Bishop Bullard's labors in the Eastern Maine District, and we trust that the Saints and friends will give him ready help and assistance in the duties of his office, and I commend him to all.

North Dakota District.

The Saints and friends of the district of North Dakota, please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. William Sparling, as Bishop's agent in and for the district of North Dakota, and the recommendation by the district conference of said district of Elder Jerome E. Wildermuth, Fargo, North Dakota for appointment as agent, letters of appointment have been duly issued to Bro. Wildermuth, and we recommend him to the Saints and bespeak for him their earnest help in behalf of the work of the Reorganized Church.

The Presiding Bishopric also extend special thanks to Bro. William Sparling for his efficient services in the office of Bishop's agent for a number of years past. While we regret losing his help in a special way in this line of work, we trust that in the new duties of the office to which he has been called the Lord may specially aid and direct him. The Saints and friends of North Dakota will please communicate in their financial work so far as practicable with Elder Jerome E. Wildermuth, 1348 Front Street, Fargo, North Dakota.

Kewanee District.

The Saints and friends of Kewanee, Illinois, District, please take notice that at the last district conference recommendation was made for the appointment of Bro. Charles E. Holmes as Bishop's agent in and for the district of Kewanee, Illinois, who could give more time, it was thought, than Bro. Norris. Bro. Charles Holmes writes me, however, that he will be unable to look after this business as it should be, and can not give it more time than the present agent. Saints will please take notice that the present agent, Bro. James Norris, will continue the work of agent, and all tithes and offerings should be sent to him at his address, 1009 North Grace Avenue, Kewanee, Illinois.

Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio Districts.

The Saints of the above named districts please take notice that by the appointment and ordination of Elder J. A. Becker to the office of bishop, that the districts of Kirtland, Ohio, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and the district of Southern Ohio have been duly placed under the charge and supervision in financial work of Bishop Becker, who will look after and provide for the financial work in the same. Bro. Becker's permanent address is Willoughby, Ohio, R. F. D. No. 2. We ask for him the help of the Saints in his work in these districts, and trust that every member will feel it a special duty to perform his or her part in the work towards helping along the financial work in this territory. I commend Bro. Becker to the Saints and friends of said territory.

EUROPEAN MISSION.

The Saints of the European Mission have already been advised of the death of Counselor C. H. Caton, to Bishop Thomas Taylor deceased, and also of the death of Bro. Joseph Dewsnup, Sr., counselor. Until we can arrange for the ordination, or the transfer of a bishop to the British Isles, agents of the Presiding Bishopric will be appointed for that territory, who will act for and in behalf of said Bishopric, carrying out the church's financial work in the same. Appointments of agents will be made for the Birmingham and London Districts, Manchester and Leeds Districts, and for Wales, and if it is found wisdom also agent appointed for Scotland.

Birmingham and London Districts.

Saints of Birmingham and London Districts, please take notice that on the twenty-sixth day of June, 1908, Bro. J. E. Meredith, of Beatrice Villa, Hunton Road, Gravelly Hill, Birmingham, England, was duly appointed agent of the Presiding Bishopric in and for the district of Birmingham and London, and is duly authorized to act in and for said district in behalf of the Presiding Bishopric of the Reorganized Church, and to perform all duties incident to the work of a Bishop's agent in and for said district. We commend Bro. Meredith to the Saints and bespeak for him the earnest help, prayers, and faith of the Saints in these districts in his efforts in the financial work of the church. I trust the blessing of the Lord may be with each helper, and that the financial work of the European Mission may soon be placed upon a firm and substantial basis, that the missionaries and the worthy needy of these districts may be sustained as provided in the law of Christ.

District of Wales.

Saints of the District of Wales, England, please take notice that Bro. Edward Williams, Pontyates, near Kidwelly, Carmarthenshire, Wales, has been duly appointed agent to act in behalf of the Presiding Bishopric of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in and for the district of Wales. Bro. Williams is well recommended by Bro. J. W. Rushton, president of the European Mission, also by Bro. William Lewis and Bro. Rees Jenkins, missionaries, and we take pleasure in commending him to all interested in the work of the Lord in this district, and we ask for him the faith, prayers, and substantial assistance and aid of the Saints and friends in this territory.

Manchester and Leeds Districts.

By reason of failure to arrange for the work of a permanent agent in these districts to the present time, the Saints and friends of the Manchester and Leeds Districts, until further notice, may pay their tithes and offerings to Elder J. W. Rushton, president of the European Mission, who will receipt them for same, and make due report in behalf of the said districts until due notice shall be given of the appointment of a permanent agent for the same. Address Elder J. W. Rushton, 5 Woodland Mount, Spencer Place, Leeds, England.

In behalf of the Presiding Bishopric,
Very respectfully submitted,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, July 25, 1908.

SINCERITY.

Sincerity is the very life and vitality of every word and deed. Without sincerity we have a cold formality or a fervid hypocrisy.

Sincerity is necessary in order to accomplish effectual work. Even the forces of evil are ten times more successful when they secure earnest though misguided exponents. A zealot gone wrong is the Devil's most cherished and accomplished tool. Such men have burned their own friends at the stake. They have devised inquisitions, sharpened swords, headed crusades, incited massacres. The plans may have been coldly and carefully laid behind the scenes with malice and forethought; but mostly the details are carried out on the stage of action by men gone mad over some long-cherished notion,—monomaniacs. The most dangerous advocate of evil is the man who believes with all his heart that his particular evil is right. His power for evil is limited only by his ability and will exceed the power of another man of greater ability who feels that he is in the wrong.

On the other hand, sincerity multiplies a man's power for good. It mitigates his defects and strengthens his excellencies. Men will listen to an illiterate speaker provided he has some great principle of truth and is aflame with his message. If added to the last-named condition he is able, polished, educated, his power will be greater; but still the highest compliment that his listeners will pay him is to feel that he is in earnest, that he believes every word that he says. One great modern orator declares that an orator is one who "says what he believes and feels what he says."

Men respect a man that they have reason to believe is sincere, even though they may think that he is mistaken. They have charity for a man who is sincere even though he may be at odds with their ideas of right and wrong. And though we would not plead sincerity alone as a means of justification in the sight of God, it is a prerequisite to justification. Christ had more charity for the publican than for the hypocrite. Indeed his denunciations were drawn forth almost exclusively by the hypocritical. He had a kind word for the erring, a warning for

When the summer of youth is slowly wasting away into the nightfall of age, and the shadows of past years grow deeper and deeper, as life wears to its close, it is pleasant to look back through the vista of time upon the joys and sorrows of early years; then gathered around our fireside with those we love, the rough places of our wayfaring will be worn smooth; and away in the twilight of life the bright sunny spots that we have passed through will grow brighter. Happy indeed are those whose intercourse with the world has not changed the chords of their holier feelings, nor broken those musical chords of the heart, whose vibrations are so melodious, so tender, and so touching in the evening of old age.—From an old HERALD.

One charge that men of the world bring against professed Christians, and especially against the clergy, is that they are not sincere. There is no use in disguising the fact that the average workingman despises the average preacher. Outside of his own little circle of admirers the typical sectarian preacher is not reckoned with of as much force in the community,—to put the matter mildly. Men distrust his sincerity. They imagine that they smell dollars back of his smile. They hesitate to grasp his outstretched hand for fear it will soon be feeling its way into their pockets.

Perhaps they are not so far wrong, because God has said of this generation, "This people draw near unto me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their hearts far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precepts of men."

There comes to our desk [not for personal use] a monthly magazine called the Preacher's Helper. It contains sermon outlines for each Sunday in the month. Heads, subheads, and texts are arranged in order, with notes to indicate the main lines of thought to be elaborated upon. The preacher can pour his sawdust into this skinful of dry bones and with little labor and no inspiration have a rather neat and symmetrical creation. But it will never live, worlds without end. What poverty of thought, of feeling, of inspiration that such a thing becomes necessary to a preacher! A man better be as extravagant as Evangelist Sunday, provided he preaches his own sermons in his own way, and with enthusiasm.

Christ realized that his followers must be enthused, filled, alive with their message.

He also realized to the fullest extent that his followers must not divide their allegiance. In fact he declared that a man can not serve two masters. He can not be half Christian and half something else. Our readers may apply that as they will. The individual who feels that he is giving part of his allegiance to God and the rest to personal aggrandizement or exaltation, through business ventures, the whirl of social excesses, the lodge, or politics, will do well to consider the situation carefully. To point out the errors of others in that regard will not suffice. It is a rule that comes home. One evidence of sincerity is undivided loyalty.

God has instituted various tests of sincerity. One of these is the unpopularity that has usually attended his church. He has never offered riches, honor, or social position to men as payment for their allegiance. He offers them the truth, and the blessings and favor of heaven. It is the other party to the great controversy who offers ease and empire as a bribe, as he did when tempting Christ himself. Christ wants men to be Christians from principle or not at all.

Another test of sincerity is the peculiar prominence given to personal service in the Master's teachings. There is nothing more degrading than personal service when rendered for money alone. To wrest a subsistence from the soil, to dig it from the mines, to win it with the pen, all are honorable enough; but to wait upon the whim of another, for whom we have no regard, to bring his shoes, to stand behind his chair, to wear his livery, to wash his feet, all for pay, reduces one to the position of a lackey, a hired servant.

The gospel teaches love and humility. It demands personal service on that basis to be given where needed. To render personal service to those in need, to carry water, to bind up sores, to wash feet, is a test of sincerity. Yet nothing is more exalting than personal service rendered for love. He that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

The exhortation of the apostle was to put on the "whole" armor of God. Whether we work among Saints at home or among strangers abroad, to go into the work half-heartedly is to go half armed; and to go half armed is to meet defeat.

The whole-hearted, unreserved allegiance that God demands of us in these last days is shown by a quotation from section 11 of the Doctrine and Covenants: "Behold, I speak unto you, and also to all those who have desires to bring forth and establish this work; and no one can assist in this work, except he shall be humble and full of love, having faith, hope, and charity, being temperate in all things whatsoever shall be intrusted to his care."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

ANOTHER DEBATE AT MURRAY, UTAH.

Some time ago Elder J. F. Curtis held a debate at Murray, Utah, with Elder Jacob A. Eades, of the Utah church. Evidently some on one side or the other, or perhaps on both sides, were left with a desire "for more." At least Elder Curtis is again before the public at Murray, this time with a new antagonist. These debates are watched closely by the "Gentile" element in Utah. They are also watched, rather reluctantly, perhaps, by the "Brighamites." The members of the Reorganization hail them with delight, as they give us a chance to get the truth before the people of Utah in an open and public way in the presence of our opponents who are there to be heard in their own behalf. We feel that Elder Curtis has the truth and that he is personally well qualified to defend it. Below is a report of the opening session of the debate, taken from the Salt Lake Tribune, August 5:

The spacious Murray Opera-house was comfortably filled Tuesday night, the occasion being the first of a series of four public debates between Elder J. P. Curtis [J. F. Curtis] of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and P. J. Sanders of the Mormon church, as to whether Brigham Young or Joseph Smith, son of the Prophet, was the legal successor of the Prophet Joseph. Considering the relative size of the two churches, a fair representation of each was present, and the debate proved to be an animated and exciting one.

The question under consideration was, "Resolved, That Joseph Smith, son of the prophet, was the legal successor of his father to the presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints," Elder Curtis taking the affirmative and Elder Sanders the negative. The two debaters were well matched, and it was extremely hard to decide which one got the best of it the first night, but from the consensus of opinion of those in attendance, Elder Curtis of the Reorganized Church accomplished more than his opponent.

The two debaters were criticised more generally, however, for trying to prove so much in so short a time, and not sticking to one or two points and making them perfectly clear before proceeding. The minds of many of those present, who were not familiar with the history of the two churches, were left in a state of chaos, not understanding exactly what had been said, owing to the speakers not making themselves understood clearly in their attempt to cover so much ground in so little time.

One noticeable feature of the debate was the contrast between the manner in which the two gentlemen treated the subject. Elder Curtis kept perfectly cool and levelheaded, and made himself understood far better than Mr. Sanders, who became very excited and made several mistakes that he was not aware of at the time.

Elder Curtis began the discussion, continuing thirty minutes. He first read numerous passages from the church works, particularly the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, making it a point to bring out all the details of the law with reference to the organization and successor to the prophet of the church.

"Ladies, and gentlemen," began Mr. Curtis, "the question for discussion is whether or not Joseph Smith, son of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and to-day president of the Reorganized Church, is the legal successor of his father. There has been a great deal of dispute relative to this question, and, in my mind, it is time that we should carefully consider the matter, and see if some definite conclusion can not be arrived at. This can only be accomplished, however, by a careful study of the law regarding the question, and then it is left to be proved which of the two men was the rightful successor to the Prophet, according to the law."

Elder Curtis here read from the church works numerous passages in reference to the law, calling special attention to the fact that Joseph Smith was the one appointed by God to receive the revelations of the church. "And first," said he, "God was to appoint his successor; second, according to the law, his successor was to be appointed by revelation; third, the revelation was to come through Joseph Smith, who had been appointed by God to receive the revelations of the church; fourth, he must be ordained by the high council; fifth, he must teach the laws of the church as revealed through former revelations."

Mr. Curtis then declared that the young Joseph Smith, by which name he is best known, was ordained his father's successor in harmony with all these requirements, and in the brief space of time of a little less than ten minutes, made a pretty successful attempt to prove them. Mr. Curtis also declared that, according to these laws, if they were not lived up to as they should be a disorganization of the church would result.

When Elder Sanders of the Mormon church took the stand he made a very strenuous attempt to show that the young Joseph Smith was not ordained according to the aforesaid laws insomuch as he was ordained by men, referring to William Marks, Zines A. Gourley [Zenos H. Gurley], and J. Powers [Samuel Powers], who had apostatized from the church and no longer had the divine authority to confer such an office on any one. "What's more," declared Elder Sanders, "the young Joseph Smith asked these men to do it. How, for God's sake, can you call that being ordained in accordance with the laws of the church? God shall appoint the successor, it is true, but how in the world it can be claimed that young Joseph was appointed by the revelation of the Almighty I can't understand."

Mr. Sanders referred to each of the men who were prominent in the organization of the Reorganized Church, and showed up their bad traits to the best of his ability, fiercely attacking William Smith, son [brother] of the Prophet, who was prominent in declaring young Joseph to be his legal successor.

Elder Curtis, upon again taking the stand, defended William Smith. "William Smith," said he "was once ordained patriarch of the dominant church of Utah, but was 'bad' because he would not continue with the church that was bad itself." This remark brought forth considerable applause from the audience, and the speaker went on and proved beyond the possibility of a doubt, that the Prophet Joseph himself had ordained his son to be his successor. This proved quite a shock to his opponent, who, in closing the debate, failed entirely to mention it, despite the fact that the audience was anxiously waiting to hear him. Elder Curtis also succeeded in establishing the truth of his former declaration that young Joseph was appointed in harmony with the laws of the church to a large degree.

In concluding the debate, Mr. Sanders made another attack on William Smith, and also on Sidney Rigdon and several others who had apostatized from the Mormon church, forcefully declaring that Smith did not become a "bad" man until after he had left the church. During the closing part of his discussion, however, his remarks became very indefinite and he wandered away from what he was trying to prove.

The Tribune under date of August 6 continues its account of the debate as follows:

The second session of the debate between Elder J. F. Curtis of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and Elder P. J. Sanders of the Mormon church on the question of whether Brigham Young or Joseph Smith, son of Joseph Smith, was the legitimate successor of the Prophet, was held Wednesday night at the Murray Opera-house, and was devoted to a discussion of whether the priesthood of Melchisedec was granted according to the design of lineal descent.

The debate was opened by Mr. Curtis for the affirmative, who proceeded to show that the term "lineal descent" was one used by many of the writers of the church and even by leaders of the present Mormon church, including Brigham Young and Parley Pratt. He also showed that within the meaning of the term, young Joseph Smith, son of the Prophet, had been endowed with the priesthood and was consequently the legitimate successor of his father.

Mr. Sanders contended that it was never the intention of God, who designated the Melchisedec priesthood, that the honor should follow from father to son and insisted that such a claim would be ridiculous since it would involve confusion in the church.

Mr. Curtis replied that there could be no confusion since the question of fitness for the office would be considered and the main point at issue was the one of lineal descent. He claimed that young Joseph did not need to be endowed with the priesthood by his father, and that it would be necessary only for him to be endowed by some competent authority. This competent authority, he then proceeded to show, existed among men who had been priests under the Prophet and still retained their priesthood after the disorganization of the church, following the death of the Prophet.

He showed that Brigham Young had not reorganized the Mormon church, but had organized a new church, and had instituted many doctrines that were not in the original church.

Mr. Curtis' argument was frank, open, and logical, and his points clear and well made. He met every allegation of his opponent candidly, and explained many of his statements in a clear and forceful manner. Whatever may have been thought of his doctrine, he certainly made a perfectly logical presentation of his side of the case.

Mr. Sanders' talk, or sermon, it might be called, since it partook little of the character of an argument, was rambling, illusive, and without special point or character. At no time did he meet the points made by his opponent, and several times attempted to play upon the sympathies of his audience by references to men who had at some time been prominent in the church before the death of the Prophet. On several occasions he referred to some of the early officers of the church in terms that savored of ridicule and attempted to bring the laughter of his audience against his opponent by sallies of a veiled personal nature.

Mr. Sanders' argument was difficult to follow, and his discourse disjointed, and the few points which he did make appeared hardly to have a direct bearing on the subject at hand.

He alluded to the fact that Sidney Rigdon had left the church several times and then came back to it, and said that this was the kind of a man who had endowed young Joseph with the priesthood.

Many of the quotations used to prove his alleged points were from Tullidge's History, and Mr. Curtis explained that such quotations were hardly fair, since the history was not regarded by his church as authentic in every way. "There is much in it that is excellent," said Mr. Curtis, "and yet we can not be bound by everything that is written there. It was not authorized by the church, although it was written for the church by Mr. Tullidge."

Mr. Sanders observed with considerable glee that his opponent had disowned his book and exclaimed that perhaps he would next disown the Bible or the church law. He then proceeded to read a number of quotations from the work to show the truth of his contentions and attempted to cast aspersion upon his opponent by showing that Brigham Young was the legitimate successor of the Prophet. The passages read referred mainly to matters which have been the subject of much discussion and failed of full force on that account.

Both contestants were given two half-hour periods in which to display their arguments, and they took advantage of the time to the full. The audience was small and apparently decidedly in favor of the Mormon elder, for they applauded his sallies many times, and joined in laughter when he attempted to discomfit his opponent by covering him with ridicule. The debate will be continued Thursday and Friday nights.

Idleness is the dead sea that swallows up all virtues, and the self-made sepulcher of a living man. The idle man is the Devil's urchin, whose livery is rags, and whose diet and wages are famine and disease.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder O. J. Hawn writes from Brant, Michigan: "God is stirring the people of these parts, and I am blessed in telling the sweet story. I am in the country. Have the best interest that I have seen for years. Two more baptized yesterday and there are others who wish to be baptized this week."

President Joseph Smith writes from Toronto under date of August 6. He had been in attendance at the Eastern reunion, Highland Lake, Massachusetts. In company with Sr. Smith he left Boston Tuesday evening on his return trip and arrived in Toronto Wednesday evening.

The Iowa Journal of History and Politics, July, has this to say of two of our church publications, Autumn Leaves and Journal of History: "Excellent sidelights upon the history of the Mormons and upon the westward movement are to be obtained from two continuations running in Autumn Leaves, one of the publications of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints at Lamoni, Iowa. The contributions are: 'A series of letters from the past,' by Alvin Knisley; and the 'Autobiography of Elder J. C. Clapp.' . . . The two most important contributions to the April number of the Journal of History, published by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, are the continuations of 'Church history,' and of the department given to 'Local historians and their work.' The number is opened by a few pertinent remarks on 'The task of the historian,' by D. F. Lambert, with a plea for coöperation of the readers in the encouragement of the new publication. There is reprinted 'A brief history of the State Historical Society of Iowa,' by Benjamin F. Shambaugh, superintendent and editor of the society. Among the shorter contributions we note an article on 'Inspired Translation or correction of the Holy Scriptures,' by Heman C. Smith; a reprint of an article in the Saturday Evening Post of October 15, 1831, concerning the "Mormonites," contributed by T. J. Fitzpatrick, of Iowa City; and a review of a serial story by Don Carlos W. Musser dealing with the Mormon faith. The number closes with a continuation of 'Church chronology,' by Elder Alvin Knisley."

The Circle for August contains an article entitled "As a lawyer sees us," written by "a practicing member of the bar." He gives several conclusions arrived at after forty years of experience. Not the least interesting of his observations is this: "The clients most censorious in judgment and inexorable in demand for redress have been men high in the church or in the ministry. To accept less than the severest punishment of the malefactor or the principal and interest of the debt they obstinately oppose as the yielding of a principle. Prosperous Jews are, as a class, among the most honest, the fairest and best paying clients, and most amenable to the reason of the case."

Strickland W. Gilliland thus expresses his ideas regarding post mortem approval:

"If we had said in his lifetime
The things that we say to-day,
When sable carriages rumble
And bands the dead march play—
If we had said in his hearing
What we say when his senses sleep—
If we had said in his lifetime
What we say while his loved ones weep!

"But we held back the good within us
For a reason selfish, small;
We held it back till 'twere better
Not to have spoken at all.
For the praise of the dead whose living
We made as hard as we could,
Is only the coward's confession
That we knew ourselves less good."

An exchange remarks upon the failures of uninspired prophets: "Once upon a time an editor proud of his imaginativeness published, as a souvenir anniversary number, a newspaper dated 'a hundred years hence' and filled with the conjectured happenings of that far-off day. Those who recall the contents of that 'extra,' which has been lost for many years in the yellowing files of journalistic libraries, can scarcely have failed to ponder over the frailty of prophets as they read yesterday's news. The imaginative editor in the 80's excited incredulity with reports about skyscrapers fifty stories high. With more than seventy-five years yet to elapse before the day of the 'extra' rolls around, New York City has one building virtually fifty stories high and one projected which will thrust sixty-two stories, nine hundred and nine feet into the air. The imaginative editor wrote about airship regattas and an aeroplane suburban service. Yesterday's papers told of one airship sailing from Switzerland to Italy over the Alps, while Count Zeppelin drove another over Lake Constance for six and three quarter hours at an average speed of thirty-four and one half miles an hour—sometimes against a stiff wind."

The debate between Elders J. F. Curtis and P. J. Sanders at Murray, Utah, closed Friday evening. The attendance at the close was large, mostly Mormon, and the sympathies of the Mormons naturally were with their champion. However, the Salt Lake Tribune, (Gentile,) does not concede him the victory. The Saturday issue says: "The indications of the previous evenings had been that Elder Sanders would be hopelessly beaten by his opponent and his attempts at argument Friday evening confirmed this opinion. The methods of the two debaters were brought out even more sharply at the last session than they had been at any of the previous meetings. Elder Sanders attempted to appeal as much as possible to the sympathies of his hearers, whereas Elder Curtis unfolded a tremendous array of evidence to substantiate his contention."

LAMONI ITEMS.

The local Religio society has decided to furnish a free Graceland College scholarship to some worthy person who desires to attend college. Applications may be filed with the secretary at any time until September 4. The society will vote upon the names at its first meeting in September and the one receiving the highest number of votes will be entitled to the scholarship.

Elder J. W. Peterson was the speaker at the park Sunday evening, his subject baptism, his effort much appreciated by the people. There was the usual large attendance at this service,—very pleasantly in contrast with the former small attendance at the Sunday evening meetings. The wish is heard in many quarters that the branch authorities would arrange for another series of week-night meetings.

An encouraging interest is taken in the young people's prayer-meeting, held Tuesday evenings. A good spirit is present and the time is well occupied as a rule. The attendance is good, considering the season, though of course it is not so large as during the college term.

The Patriot has the following account of a new industry that is to be established in Lamoni:

"Mr. D. H. Carpenter, the father of C. I. Carpenter, is the moving spirit in the matter, and has for some time been engaged in preparing the building one door west of Danielson's coal office for this purpose. He has manufactured a glove table with a capacity of eight machines, four on either side, with a central trough into which the work can drop when one part is done, and be very conveniently taken when desiring to complete the work. Two machines will be installed at first, and others added as the business grows. Canton flannel gloves and padded mittens are to be first made, and higher grades of gloves as the trade justifies. Power to run the machinery will at first be obtained from the Herald Office power-house. Reliable promises of home patronage have been given, and trade in surrounding towns will be solicited."

Many people who boast of being "plain" and "blunt" speakers are merely coarse and boorish. Such persons are constantly inflicting wounds which neither time nor medicine can ever heal.—Selected.

WHO CHANGED THE SABBATH?

And he shall speak great words against the Most High, . . . and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time.—Daniel 7: 25.

Adventists quoting this will tell you that in fulfillment of this the pope of Rome changed the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday; and a belief in this induces more people to give up Sunday for Saturday than all other Adventist arguments. Convince honest people that Sunday-keeping is only a Catholic institution, a rival of the Lord's Sabbath, began away down in the fourth century, and they will cease keeping it, until they learn better. It is one of the main pillars upon which the whole Sabbatarian system depends. And yet in all the annals of history, is not any such thing taught; neither do they claim it: but all their proof is perversion of Catholic catechisms; yet they positively deny all other claims of Catholics, denounce their writers as cheats, forgers, deceivers, and liars; but the catechisms they accept as indisputable truth! and then grossly misrepresent them to prove that hundreds of years after Christ the pope, by his own authority, changed the Sabbath; and the catechisms are explained to teach this idea. But they teach nothing like it; but that the change was made "by the Catholic Church," in the days of Christ and his apostles. Thus:

Question. What are the days which the church commands to be kept holy?

Answer. The Sunday, or our Lord's day, which we observe by apostolic tradition, instead of the Sabbath.

Question. What warrant have you for keeping the Sundays in preference to the ancient Sabbath, which was the Saturday?

Answer. We have for it the authority of the Catholic Church, and apostolic tradition.

All know that Catholics claim that their church originated with the apostles, and that any change made by the apostles was made by "the Catholic Church," under "Pope Peter the First." Hence they claim that the "Catholic Church changed the Sabbath in the days of the apostles." Hence these catechisms teach the truth. Not as Advents misrepresent them; but that the Sabbath was changed by the church in the days of the apostles. Because some ignorant Catholic may say that some pope other than Peter, their first pope as claimed by them, changed the Sabbath, is no evidence of the truth of it. John Meiler, Rector of Saint John's Church, Healdsburg, California, says,

Having lived for years among the Seventh Day Adventists, I am familiar with their claims that the pope of Rome changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Such assertions are wholly unfounded. Catholics claim no such thing; but that the apostles themselves established the observance of Sunday, and that we received it by tradition from them. The councils and popes simply confirmed the keeping of the day, as received from the apostles.

And the Catholic Dictionary, by Addis and Arnold, on Revelation 1: 10, and Acts 20: 7, and 1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2, says:

These texts indicate that Sunday was already a sacred day, on which deeds of love were specially suitable. Hebrews 10: 25 shows that Christians had regular days of assembly. The scriptures given above show that the observance of Sunday had begun in the apostolic age; but even if the scriptures were silent, tradition would put this point beyond all doubt.

John Ankotel, A. M., Bishop of New York, says: "We think it was given by our Lord during the great forty days after the resurrection," etc. The Catholic doctrine exactly, as stated by all these eminent men, that the change was made by Christ and the apostles. I have asked numerous prominent Catholics, as all may do, and all testify to this. How different to say that they teach that the pope hundreds of years afterwards made the change. A sample of their perverted testimony.

I refer my readers now to my extensive quotations in Zion's Ensign, April 4, 1907, in proof of Sunday being kept from the days of the apostles. Eusebius, called the "father of church history," in 324 A. D., says that "very early every resurrection morn throughout the world" the saints met. Pliny, governor of Bithynia, wrote to Emperor Trajan, that they "met together on a stated day, before it was light" to "eat a meal." Compare with Acts 20: 7, where they met, Paul with them, to break bread. Pliny wrote from the region where Paul labored, only eleven years after John was on Patmos. Andrews, Advent historian, admits, "This, written by Pliny, relates to a church probably founded by Peter."—History of the Sabbath, page 237. It shows that the apostles kept Sunday then. Andrews also admits that the epistle of Barnabas, a colaborer with Paul, "was in existence as early as the middle of the second century, and is of value to us, as it gives some clew to the opinions that prevailed where the writer lived."—The Fathers, page 21.

Encyclopedia Britannica, the highest critical authority, says, "This work is unanimously ascribed to Barnabas, the companion of Saint Paul, by early Christian writers." And so Schoff Herzog, Johnsons, Hefele, and other Encyclopedias, and Smith's Bible Dictionary, all assign it to Barnabas, early, and some claiming for it a place in the sacred canon, read and revered in the church as next to the gospels, as early as 120 A. D., showing what the saints believed and practiced, immediately after Paul had waited at Troas over Saturday, as evidently those Gentile saints had never heard of the Jewish Sabbath, as a Bible cost a fortune then, having to be written by hand; none but wealthy Jews possessing one, and Gentiles never seeing one. Yet an apostle of Jesus Christ waited over that holy Sabbath (?); with the disciples working all around him, as no doubt they werè, never warning them, but going in and preaching to them on Sunday, "ready to depart on the morrow," Monday, not Sunday, as Advent leaders tell us, to evade the force of the fact that he preached upon "the first day of the week." That "day abominable to God, and hateful to Christ," as Advent books say; and then when a man fell down dead, Paul prayed, and God heard and raised him up; thus manifesting his pleasure in their worship on this "hateful day." Paul never warned them of their evil in sabbath-breaking, then met on Sunday to worship, and joined in that worship (see Acts 20: 7, 8), and then gave orders to the churches of Galatia, and Corinth, to perform on "the first day of the week" an act of worship, "a sacrifice acceptable, well pleasing to God" (Philippians 4: 18), without which none can be saved; to lay by them in store, "that there be no gatherings when I come" (1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2); but have it together, in one place, that he might take, or send it speedily to Jerusalem (see verse 3), as the saints were suffering there.

This was the year after he was at Troas preaching on Sunday, and the order to do this on Sunday implies that he knew their customs, as at Troas, of meeting on that day for worship, and would be in a proper frame of mind to do this benevolent act of worship. Paul followed the custom of the Jews with which he was familiar, who, each Sabbath day, made their collection for the poor, putting it in "the purse of the alms," or poor box, and he gave this order to the disciples to do on Sunday, as they met on that day. Why should Paul have named Sunday for this act, if it was not a day for religious service? Adventists say it implied no meeting that day; but only to lay it by at home. But this would defeat the very object Paul had in view. He could not wait for "gatherings [collections] when I come." So they were to have them all together when he came. But if they were to be laid by, by them at their homes, then the collection would have to be made "when I come," the very thing he commanded to avoid. McNight's translation says, "On first day lay somewhat by itself, putting it into the treasury, that when I come there may be no collections." Manifestly correct.

Now we quote from Barnabas the apostle: "Incense is an abomination unto me, and your new moons and sabbaths I can not endure [quoting from Isaiah 1: 13]. He has therefore abolished these things."—Barnabas, chapter 11. Andrews admits that he asserts the "abolition of the Sabbath of the Lord." (Testimony, p. 22.) Of Sunday Barnabas says, "Wherefore also we keep the eighth day with joyfulness, the day on which Jesus arose from the dead."—Chapter 15. Andrews admits that Barnabas teaches the keeping of Sunday, but argues that it is unscriptural. And so all through his books he combats the teachings of all the Christian fathers. Barnabas, an apostle, and colaborer with Paul amongst them, and others of them who no doubt talked with the apostles; while Andrews lived only eighteen hundred years after, and of course has a better chance to know than they. Hear him: "The reasons offered by the early fathers for neglecting the observance of the Sabbath, show conclusively that they had no special light on the subject, by reason of living in the first centuries, which we in this latter age do not possess."—History of the Sabbath, p. 308. And this from the oldest historian Sabbatarians ever had! Admits the early fathers, an apostle among them, Barnabas, "neglected" to keep the Sabbath; and kept Sunday. Admits the seventh day was not observed in the first centuries. How does this harmonize with the theory that it was, and that it was changed to Sunday by the pope hundreds of years afterwards? The Christian fathers might not have been as able reasoners as our friends, but surely they knew whether they kept Saturday or Sunday! And Mr. Andrews admits that they "neglected the Sabbath, and kept Sunday." We do not quote these fathers to prove a doctrine; we go to the Bible for that. But we prove the historical facts from them, that the early disciples did keep Sunday, as at Troas; hence it could not have started with the popes centuries afterwards.

The teaching of the apostles, 125 A. D., placed by some as early as 80 A. D., "By all odds the most important writing exterior to the New Testament."—New York Independent. Chapter 14 says, "But every Lord's day gather yourselves and break bread," etc., as at Troas. Of Justin Martyr Elder Andrews is compelled to make this confession, "Justin's apology was written at Rome, about 140 A. D., only forty-four years after John's vision on Patmos. It does not appear that Justin, or those at Rome holding with him in doctrine, paid the slightest regard to the Sabbath. He speaks of it as abolished, and treats it with contempt."—Testimony, p. 33. Andrews further says, "Justin held the Sabbath to be unknown before Moses, and of no authority since Christ. He held Sunday to be the day for worship."—Page 44.

Justin in his apology to the emperor states just what the Christian fathers held to them. But Andrews tries to make believe that he represented only a small party of apostate Christians, and was unreliable. But the facts are just the reverse. He held his dialogue with the Jew, Trypho, at Ephesus, where Saint John lived, in the center of the churches. Of him the American Encyclopedia says: "One of the earliest and most learned writers of the Christian church. Zealous in opposing heretics." Schoff Herzog Encyclopedia says of him: "An incontrovertible witness of the faith—in history." Devoted himself wholly to the vindication of the Christian religion, as an itinerant evangelist, having no fixed abode."—Volume 1, p. 482.

Thus traveling everywhere, he knew the faith of the saints in all places; and a few years after the apostles. Of him the great Eusebius, whom none can dispute, says: "He overshadowed all the great men who illuminated the second century by the splendor of his name."

McClintock's Encyclopedia: "His writings are the most important coming to us from the second century." And other testimonies of his grandeur as a disciple of Christ—yet nothing in Elder Andrews' estimation. I would like to quote a page from his first grand apology, how disciples from city and country met on Sunday, read apostles' writings, had prayer; their manner of sacrament, and their collection for the poor, deposited with the president; telling why they kept Sunday, etc., etc. (See page 67.) Elder Andrews dare not question this document, but only says, "Justin does not call Sunday the Sabbath nor Lord's day." What an objection! Justin was writing to a heathen emperor, who knew nothing of the terms, Sabbath, or Lord's day, but was familiar with the term, Sunday. So Justin of necessity used that term. But these are the indisputable facts set forth, that all disciples rejected Saturday, and kept Sunday, Justin saying that "Christ appeared to his disciples and taught them these things which we have submitted to you also for your consideration."

Strange that man with all these positive undeniable facts before him, can try to believe that hundreds of years after the Sabbath was changed by the apostate pope of Rome. Consider well this fact: from the days of the apostles themselves, the church was divided into opposing sects, great controversy about other things, yet all agreed in keeping Sunday, proof that it must have been universally believed among them. As Dionysius, bishop of Corinth, 170 A. D.; Borsanenes, of Edessa, in Syria, in 180; Clement of Alexandria, 194; Tertullian of Africa, 200; Origen, 225 A. D. The Apostolic constitutions, 250; Anotolus of Laodicea, 270; Victorinus of Peteria, 300; Peter of Alexandria, 306; all bishops, in all parts of the world, all testifying to the keeping of Sunday in their churches. Next, Eusebius, born in Palestine, the cradle of the early church, called the father of church history. Numerous encyclopedias extol him highly as "a man of extraordinary learning, diligence, and judgment"; "great scriptural learning"; "giving us what he found in the writings of the primitive Christians"; "a man of vast reading, well acquainted with the history of the church, from the days of the apostles," etc. Speaking of the patriarchs before the flood, he says, "They did not observe the Sabbath, neither do we,—because such things do not belong to Christians."—Book 1, chapter 4. Positive that Christians do not keep the Sabbath. Of a small sect he says, "They are those who cherish low and mean opinions of Christ—with them the observance of the law is necessary—They observe also the Sabbath, and other discipline of the Jews, just like them, but on the other hand, they also celebrate the Lord's day, very much like us, in commemoration of his resurrection."—Pages 112, 113. Even those Sabbath-keepers kept Sunday. Then he goes on and shows how, and why they kept Sunday as the Lord's day.

The claim is made that Sunday was a pagan rest day, and the Sabbath was changed by Constantine to that day; but hear Elder Waggoner: "Though the venerable day of the sun had long been venerated by them, and their heathen ancestors, the idea of rest from worldly labor in its worship, was entirely new."—Reply to Conridt, p. 130. This utterly destroys their argument that Sunday-keeping was taken from the pagans. The pagans never rested Sunday. Waggoner admits that. It was a common work day with them. It originated with the Christians, as I have abundantly proved. They point to Constantine's Sunday law as a change of the Sabbath; but Elder Waggoner admits there is no truth in that. He says: "Constantine in his decrees said not one word either for or against keeping the Sabbath of the Bible. It is safe to say there was nothing done in the time of Constantine, either by himself or any other, that has the least appearance of changing the Sabbath."—Replies, p. 150. True, although it contradicts all their books. Why not change them to suit this truthful confession?

In the year 321 A. D., Constantine, first Christian emperor of Rome, issued this edict: "Let all town people rest on the venerable day of the sun, but in the country, let all work, as it often happen that no other day is so fit for sowing seeds," etc. All Christians from the days of Christ had kept this day, but had no civil law to aid or protect them in it, and had become very numerous, and the old pagan religion was waning before it. Constantine's mother joining them, he was at least favorable toward them, shrewd enough to see that it was to his interests to favor this fast-rising religion. So, long before he professed publicly to believe, he passed many edicts favoring them. And as a far-seeing statesman, he protected them. Five edicts were passed before this, favoring Christians; and one in 323 completed the revolution. Christians by it were permitted to hold office in the empire. The Sunday edict was not made to please the pagans; for, as seen above, they did not keep Sunday; and, as shown, the Christians did, all, everywhere, keep Sunday; so this law was to favor and please them. It was not addressed to Christians, as they voluntarily kept that day; neither worded Christian terms, "Lord's day," as it was addressed only to pagans, couched in pagan terms, "day of the sun," that they might understand it and be offended less. So this law made no change in keeping Sunday by Christians, but only favored them by requiring pagans to keep it also. That this law was made by the request of Christian Sunday-keepers, is admitted by Adventists, thus: "It is demonstrated that the first Sunday law was enacted at the request of the church; in behalf of the church, expressly to help the church."—Battle Creek Journal, December 11, 1888. True; proving positively that the church kept Sunday before the law was made. Doctor Mosheim says, "The first day of the week, the stated time for the assemblies of the Christians, was because of a law by Constantine, observed with greater solemnity than formerly."—Chapter 4, section 5. Sozoman says of Constantine, "He also enjoined the observance of the Lord's day—because on it he rose from the dead."—History, p. 22.

But Adventists have given Constantine up, and made an entirely new claim for the time of changing the Sabbath. Elder Waggoner, appointed to meet the great dissenters from their faith, who are numerous, at last settles on the council of Laodicea, 364 A. D., forty-three years after Constantine's law, always before claimed (as in most of their books as the time of the change) as the place and time where the Sabbath was changed. The twenty-ninth canon of that council reads thus: "Christians ought not to Judaize and to rest on the Sabbath, but to work on that day; but preferring the Lord's day, should rest if possible as Christians. Wherefore if they should be found to Judaize, let them be accursed from Christ." "There now," he says, "if any one can imagine what would be changing the Sabbath, if this is not, I would be extremely happy to learn what it would be." Now I claim that I have completely met his demand; I have shown the time, the place, and the power that changed the Sabbath."—Reply to Conridt, page 141-151. He claims that this was a Roman Catholic council. Let us examine this. If the Sabbath was changed then, it was not changed before, nor after. All their books show that until after the days of Constantine, not until Justinian 533, was the bishop of Rome given "no authority whatever above the other bishops, and then a five years' war by Justinian under Belisarius in bringing other bishops under the bishop of Rome." (See all histories.) Waggoner says, "It was Constantine himself that laid the foundation of the papacy."—Reply, p. 148. He admits as I have shown that Constantine "done nothing to change the Sabbath." But that it was changed at Laodicea in 264, not until then. Yet forty years before that Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea, Palestine, having every possible means of knowing what Christians did throughout the world wrote his celebrated church history, giving him the title of "the father of church history," saying, "And all things, whatsoever that it was the duty to do on the Sabbath, these we have transferred to the Lord's day, as more honorable than the Jewish Sabbath."—Sabbath Manual, p. 127. So forty years before Laodicea, Christians did not keep the Sabbath, "but had transferred all things done on that day to the Lord's day," as in Acts 20:7; 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2; as "ordered" there and at Galatia. How could it be changed then in 364 A. D.?

The idea is absurd. After claiming that the Sabbath was changed by the Roman Catholic Church, by authority of the pope, beginning with the edict of Constantine, 321 A. D., and after being driven from the position, admitting their error, they then select a Greek city, Laodicea, one thousand miles east of Rome, in Asia Minor, as the place, and 364 A. D. as the time for the change; when they teach truly, in all their works, that the bishop of Rome had no control over other bishops, especially of the East, until 533 A. D., when Emperor Justinian gave him such authority, sustaining him in a five years' war under his general, Belisarius, in subjugating them. Elder Waggoner admits that Sylvester, bishop of Rome, 336, "had yet no authority whatever over any other bishops."—Replies, p. 143. And Liberius, bishop of Rome, in 364, the year of this council, "wrote in a very cringing and most submissive manner to the eastern bishops."—Bower's History of the Popes, page 64. And yet he changed the Sabbath to Sunday one thousand miles from Rome, in Laodicea, a church raised up by Paul himself, and intended no doubt, as at Troas, Acts 20:7, Galatia and Corinth, 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2, in regard to the manner of keeping "the Lord's day." See Colossians 4:13, 16. And Anotolus, bishop of Laodicea in 270 A. D., wrote: "Our regard for the Lord's resurrection which occurred on the Lord's day, will lead us to celebrate it upon that day."—Canon 16. And yet the pope of Rome having "no authority whatever over other bishops," as they admit, changed the Sabbath to Sunday, at that council; when it was only a small local council, magnified by Elder Waggoner into a great general council. Altogether untrue. The general councils were, first, at Nice, 325 A. D.; second, at Constantinople, 381; third at Ephesus, 431 A. D. (See all histories.) Whilst this at Laodicea is mentioned in no history of note. Mosheim, Reiter, Reeves, Milner, Socrates, Sozoman, and others do not mention it. McClintock and Strong say that thirty-two bishops from Asia were all that were present. Not one from the Roman Catholic Church in Europe; and yet "the pope of Rome" changed the Sabbath. The fact is this small council only regulated the long-established custom in this locality, of keeping the "Lord's day" as Constantine's edict did in the West forty-three years before. As Elder Waggoner admits, "The decrees of councils have not as a general thing been arbitrary, telling what must be so much as they have been the formulating of the opinions and practices, largely prevalent at the time."—Catholic Church, page 333. Exactly so, as Sunday had been kept as shown from the days of the apostles, their decree was that this custom should be continued, with more solemnity if possible, inasmuch as it had now the sanction of the civil law, because of the edict of Constantine, in 321.

Now hear Elder Waggoner in regard to the testimonies of all these Christian fathers, who testify unanimously against keeping the Sabbath, and that they did keep the blessed "Lord's day," in memory of his resurrection: "Surely could not produce any more drivelling nonsense than this. Such childish nonsense is seldom seen under the heading of reason. It would have been a blessing to the world if they had all been lost."—Fathers, pages 206, 207. Yes, indeed, better for those who are trying to deceive men into keeping the Jewish Sabbath, instead of the blessed resurrection day, if all these positive testimonies had been lost, and far better still if all the New Testament Scriptures had been lost also, as they are strictly in harmony with the fathers, and all decidedly against the Adventists.

Well, they ask, what of the prophecy in Daniel 7: 25? Why, they know and teach truly that this power was not to arise until after the ten horns, or kings, of Daniel 7: 24: "The ten horns . . . are ten kings that shall arise [out of Rome] and another shall arise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." And they teach truly that the ten kings did not arise until the sixth century, and that Emperor Justinian gave the bishop of Rome control of all other bishops, in 533, and with his armies brought them under him in 538. (See all their books.) Then comes in their great error, that the pope or papal power began their twelve hundred and sixty years' reign, "over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations," when all that are not willfully blind know that Justinian was emperor until 568, and the bishop of Rome subject to him until that time, never yet having subdued three kings. The seven of the ten that had arisen being converted to the Roman Catholic faith, were under control of the Roman bishop; and I quote from Bancroft: "In 568 Justinian died and Rome was left substantially to the control of the Christian bishop. When the Lombards formed a kingdom in the north of Italy the exarch, as the Greek emperor, or the one who ruled in Constantinople, Rome having been divided by Constantine, between his sons, Valentine and Volens, which divisions were still ruled by two, one called the Greek emperor, or exarch of Ravenna; and this exarch, and bishop opposed him (the Lombard), and the exarch becoming too powerful to suit the bishop; he supported the Lombards. Thus the temporal or political power of the popes arose."—Footprints of Time, page 135. In a former edition of the same work it states that at Justinian's death, the exarchate of Ravenna, Lombards, and Ostrogoths arose of the Arian faith; and a two-years war ensued with the bishop of Rome, he uniting the last two with him in subduing the exarch, then subduing them, made himself a triple crown, wearing it in commemoration of that event as the popes do to-day, beginning his civil and church rule in 570 A. D. "Before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots."—Verse 8. He removed their kings of the Arian faith, and replaced them by Roman Catholics, thus plucking them up by the roots, as Daniel expresses it. As the ten kings still remained, and were to, and did "give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God shall be fulfilled." (Revelation 17: 17.) That it should continue forty and two months and rule "all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." (Revelation 13: 5-7.) Beginning that rule in 570 A. D., ending in 1830, not as they say in 538, before it has subdued three kings. So their own books utterly condemn them, as he could not "think to change times and laws" until he came into existence.

They say he changed the Sabbath law, and thus changed times. The books says, "change times and laws." Both plural. So the prophecy has a much wider scope than they give it. "Times" means years, and changing the Sabbath would be changing but one law. And I have proved positively that the Sabbath was changed five hundred years before this power asserted its rights by subduing "three kings," so the mere assertion that he changed the Sabbath is false. The old law was changed by Christ. "The priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law."—Hebrews 7: 12. Hear Jesus changing them in Matthew 5: 21-27.

"The law and the prophets were until John"; since that time Christ's law. (Luke 16: 16.) Daniel 7: 25 applies to the gospel age, and so refers to the law of Christ; and this papal church has fulfilled this prophecy in many things contrary to Christ's laws. The Jewish translation says, "He shall change the festivals and the law." See the numerous festivals the pope has made: Holy Thursday, Good Friday; Saint Patrick's Day, and numerous others. But Isaiah 24: 5 makes it still more plain, "They have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant." Just what this power has been doing ever since its rise, but never changed the Sabbath, as incontrovertible proof is given that it was changed hundreds of years before this power came into existence.

THE REDEMPTION OF PALESTINE.

For a long time (excepting Bro. P. M. Hanson's articles in Autumn Leaves) our church papers have contained very little concerning Palestine, the long expected return of the Israelites, and the redemption of the land that was promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as an everlasting possession, for them and their posterity. This, even though for generations they have been scattered and their ancient possession largely desolate, until all the Gentile world declared that the idea of their ever being gathered was a great error. But the assurance of the truth of this idea, and its fulfillment as a part of the work of the Lord in the latter days, was given by the angelic messenger on the night of September 21, 1823, and we confidently look for the fulfillment of the prophecies contained in both the Old and the New Testaments, as referred to by the angel. For, among the words of instruction concerning the great events soon to take place, as spoken by the messenger to the young man to whom he was sent, were the following on the subject referred to. He said:

For, according to his covenant . . . his people, the house of Israel, must come to a knowledge of the gospel and own that Messiah whom their fathers rejected, and . . . be gathered in to rejoice in one fold under one shepherd.

It can not be that we have really forgotten, in the rush of other gospel work and business matters, that the accomplishment of said return and redemption is to be one of the very greatest events associated with the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ and the establishing of the millennial reign of peace and righteousness over all the earth. No, we have simply been busy preaching, writing, and publishing all about the first principles, the Book of Mormon, our own hoped-for gathering, and other points of doctrine, so that we have not thought so much of late about the world-wide original Israel and their land, and their restoration to it. Also we have been waiting the movement of events in the Lord's work of "preparation" which are necessary first before the accomplishment of his final purposes.

But on January 20 the writer of this article saw an editorial in one of the large Chicago dailies that has impressed his mind to consider that the world is taking note of the changes that are occurring, even though the journalists and the world at large do not understand the meaning of the changes; nor have they anything but a very small idea of the "signs of the times" that are now to be seen. The editorial referred to was published in the Record-

Herald, of the above date, under the caption, "The regeneration of Palestine." It reads as follows:

At the eleventh convention of American Zionists, recently in session at Atlantic City, the speakers presented evidence of success that must have been surprising to many people. In every important country the number of those who believe in reestablishing an independent Jewish state is reported as showing steady growth, and the actual colonization of Palestine by refugees from Russia and Roumania is proceeding apace.

Equally surprising are the facts given as to the success of the colonies and the revival of the industries and commerce of the Holy Land. Consular and disinterested private reports confirm practically the claims of the enthusiastic Zionist leaders.

Thus in a recent issue of the London Economist it was stated in an article on agriculture in Palestine that groups of colonies or refugees from Russia, Galicia and Roumania are scattered over the entire country; that their total holdings aggregate thirty thousand hectares, or about two and one half per cent of the surface, and that scientific cultivation has replaced the primitive methods of the Arabs.

The effect of the colonization may be gauged in part from the rapid increase in the export and import trade of Jaffa, the chief trading port of Palestine. The shipments of oranges have trebled in the last ten years, and in 1907 reached a value of nine hundred thousand dollars. The export of soap made of olive oil is also constantly increasing, and vine culture has been undertaken on a large scale. Large quantities of barley are sent to Europe, and dependence on foreign flour is decreasing. The chief import is cotton goods.

New railroads and harbors are planned in Palestine, and they will open new parts of the country and provide it with better outlets and trading facilities. An art and crafts school has been established and a polytechnic is projected. Silk and cotton will be grown, coal deposits near the Dead Sea will be utilized, and new industries are expected to spring up.

These and other facts lead the Economist to conclude its review with these hopeful words:

"Palestine, indeed, bids fair to be a land of the future as well as of the past. The industry and resource of its old inhabitants are restoring its ancient fruitfulness; their business capacity and enterprise may give it a commercial position greater than it has ever before enjoyed."

Such testimony can not fail to encourage the faithful Zionists, whatever its bearing may be on the question of restoring an independent Jewish state.

The reader will notice some points of especial interest in the foregoing editorial about the facts brought to light at the Zionist convention. Among these are the following:

That "in every important country the number of those who believe in reestablishing an independent Jewish state is reported as showing steady growth," and that the "actual colonization of Palestine" is "proceeding apace."

That surprising facts were presented "as to the success of the colonies and the revival of the industries and commerce of the Holy Land," together with the statement that "consular and disinterested private reports confirm practically the claims of the enthusiastic Zionist leaders."

That there has been a "rapid increase in the export and import trade of Jaffa, the chief trading port of Palestine." With this is the statement that in 1907 nine hundred thousand dollars' worth of oranges were shipped out to other nations, being three times as many as were sold ten years ago, and that there has been an increase in exports of other products as well.

That scientific farming is taking the place of the primitive methods of the Arabs. That is, the sowing, cultivating, and reaping are done by machinery. This makes for speed, perfection, and bountifulness in the crops.

That the people now dwelling in that land manifest such "industry and resource" that they are "restoring its ancient fruitfulness," and that the prospect is that "their business capacity and enterprise may give it [Palestine] a commercial position greater than it has ever before enjoyed."

That a school has been established for teaching the useful arts and trades, of course largely for boys and young men.

That coal desposits near the Dead Sea will be mined and silk and cotton be produced in the ancient land.

Undoubtedly the teaching of the people how to work, and especially how to pursue the trades and occupations that are common in the world abroad, will have much to do with changing the lives of the natives from the careless, easy, do-nothing ways inherited from their fathers, until there will come a gradual but a permanent activity, energy, and power among the different races and peoples who inhabit Palestine and the surrounding regions where dwelt the mighty nations of old. And they all will, in time, emerge from the darkness of centuries into the dawn of the new day which the Son of God is about to usher in upon the whole world. Then will come the gladness and joy of all nations, and the prosperity and happiness of all mankind, for they will love righteousness and accept the Prince of Peace to be their king.

Another point I desire to mention is the statement quoted from the London Economist where it says that groups of refugees from Russia, Galicia, and Roumania have total holdings aggregating thirty thousand hectares of the surface. A hectare of land is only two acres and four hundred and seventy-one thousandths of an acre, not quite two and a half acres. The amount thus stated would aggregate seventy-three thousand one hundred and thirty acres. Evidently this only means the land that has been taken up by those who have in recent years fled from their own nations to Palestine, that it does not include the older settlements and possessions. For I have an article taken from a paper twelve years ago saying that there were then six thousand Jewish farmers and their families in Palestine, and that one hundred thousand acres of land were then under cultivation. The article said that those farmers were at that time engaged in "grape-growing, silk-culture, fruit-raising and honey-production."

There are things to be said about the original size of the territory given of God to Israel and about the climate and the increased rains, but I will not discuss them now.

Of General Interest

PRESERVING GRAND OPERA RECORDS FOR FUTURE GENERATIONS.

A gift presented by an American to the French government has attracted widespread attention, as it demonstrates the unlimited uses to which that wonderful modern invention, the talking machine, may be put. Alfred Clarke, a New Yorker by birth, but a resident of Paris for a number of years, has had a vault constructed in the cellars of the Paris opera-house, in which have been placed hermetically-sealed leaden casks containing a number of records of the voices of present-day singers, as well as some orchestral pieces. The idea is to preserve these records for posterity, so that a hundred years from now the mellow notes of Calve, Caruso, and Melba may be heard by people who were born many years after the death of these artists.

It is only comparatively recently that the talkink machine has been so perfected that the reproduction of the human voice has become satisfactory and that these records could therefore take a place historically and scientifically interesting in the history of the world.

When Mr. Clarke first conceived his idea of thus perpetuating the voices of the great singers of to-day, he suggested his scheme to M. Charles Malherbes, the archivist of the Museum of the Paris Opera.

In presenting the subject, he asked M. Malherbes if he would not like to know exactly how Mozart executed one of his sonatas and how Moliere recited his comedies. M. Malherbes naturally replied that such information would be interesting and valuable. Whereupon Mr. Clarke said that what our ancestors could not do for us, we could do for our descendants. He then unfolded his plan to preserve in the archives a collection of vocal and instrumental pieces which are now rendered at the opera, so that musicians of the twenty-first century would know exactly at what tempo the conductor of the orchestra at this time rendered these compositions and how the singers interpreted their parts. M. Dujardin-Beaumont, under-secretary of Beaux Arts in the French cabinet, gave M. Malherbes authority to proceed with the preparation of the records. Commenting on the ceremony of sealing the records in the vault of the Paris Opera-house, the Paris Echo refers to it as a funeral for the burial of voices. In many ways this is a good description of what took place.

The records, especially prepared for the purpose, were made by Caruso, Scotti, Plancon, Tamagno, Melba, Patti, Schumann-Heink, Bonisegna, Calve, Kubelik, Renaud, Pugno, and other virtuosi and artists.

These precious disks were placed in the vault before mentioned, the vault and its contents both being the gift of Mr. Clarke, and they were accepted on behalf of the French government by M. Dujardin-Beaumetz with appropriate ceremonies. The disks were made of a new preparation of hard rubber which is considered indestructible. Nevertheless every precaution to protect them from the ravages of time was taken. They were placed in hermetically-sealed receptacles and the door of the vault was closed and locked, the key being placed in the archives of the opera. A tablet on the door states the name of the donor and the date.

The impressiveness of the ceremonies, which were held in the dark cellars beneath the opera and were attended by many distinguished men of letters, can well be imagined. The event was regarded as marking a new era in the arts.

The placing of the records in the library of the opera was at first considered, but it was decided that there would be less danger of destruction by fire or earthquake if they were placed below ground.

A change from the original plan of closing the vault for one hundred years was also made, and it was agreed that it might be opened after fifty years with the permission of the Minister des Beaux Arts.

All the essential parts of the machine for playing the records were also placed in the vault, so that if at the distant day when it is opened, the talking machine has been changed materially, these records may still be heard.

One of the most interesting circumstances in connection with the presentation was the speech made by M. Adrien Bernheim, one of the representatives of the government who was present, in which he quoted from something written by Theophile Gautier sixty years ago. Gautier said at that time: "Some day perhaps the critic, having become more enlightened, will have at his disposal means so that by stenographic notation he will be able to set down all the shades of meaning that an actor uses to portray the character. Then no longer shall we have to regret that all the genius dispensed at the theater is utterly lost for posterity. As now we have pictures perpetuated by the aid of light upon a sensitive plate, so we will attain the power in a manner more subtle still, to receive and hold the waves of sound, and to preserve thus the execution of an air by Mario, of a recitation by Mlle. Rachel, or a stanza by Frederic Lemaitre." That this prophecy, which was undoubtedly received with incredulity at the time it was uttered, should have been realized in so short a time is marvelous.

Mr. Clarke's idea has already been copied at the British Museum in London, practically the same records sealed up in Paris having been placed there. This is the inception of an entirely new field of usefulness for the talking machine, and its development along these lines will probably be unlimited. Mr. Clarke, who has been in this country for several weeks, has just returned to Paris.—Scientific American, July 25, 1908.

THE CRISIS IN THE MODERN CHURCH.

A trenchant arraignment of the modern church is presented by the Reverend Doctor Charles F. Aked, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, which is attended by John D. Rockefeller, in a series of articles, the first of which has just appeared.

Doctor Aked issues a ringing warning to the churches of to-day. The church, he says in the first of his articles, just printed in Appleton's Magazine, can not continue to live in the past. He declares that a church which does not take up social problems has "no claim to existence." "Such a church," he says, "if it be not laughed off the face of the earth, will remain only as the house founded on the sand, the refuge of the idler, the self-seeker, and the coward, but a refuge that will fail them when the storms that are gathering break upon it."

"I didn't want to do it," said Doctor Aked when asked as to his reasons for attacking the methods of existing organizations for religious work, thus laying himself open to the charge of "muck-raking" the churches. "I have been more or less a storm center ever since I entered the ministry, and I had planned for rest and quiet. Besides, it occurred to me that it might be felt that my Americanism was of too recent an origin to entitle me to the role of critic. But," and the gaze of the famous preacher wandered out of his study window, which overlooks the greenery and the glimmering lake of Central Park from the top of a big apartment hotel, "but the word had to be spoken and the opportunity to speak it in a way that would reach a host of thinking men and women throughout the country came to me, and so I am trying to perform the task that seems to me absolutely necessary to the salvation of Christianity.

"The question of the decreasing membership and waning influence of religion—the churches—is not a denominational question," continued Doctor Aked. "It is not a national question. It is a question as wide as Christianity itself. Conditions in America are, broadly speaking, the same as in England, and in England as in the rest of Europe. I can see the difference in this country since I first visited the United States fifteen years ago. The danger is not from direct attack on religion. This denial of belief, that is, atheism, has spent its force. What the churches have to fear is a more insidious danger—indifference. The man in the street says, 'the church is a back number.' He feels that he can do without it. If you ask him whether he believes in God, in the existence of an infinite power superior to man, the chances are that he will say 'Yes.' But questions of dogma, distinctions of creed, do not interest him and he refuses to concern himself about them. He has made up his mind that he can get along without religion—that is religion as it has been expounded to him. But this does not mean necessarily that he is irreligious.

"It seems to me that this indifference is more pronounced in America than in England, just as orthodoxy is more strictly defined and more unyielding over here. And where there is indifference to the church I can form no other conclusion than that the church itself is to blame. Yet the need of religion never has been greater in any age or country than in this country and in the day we live in. Churches exist and preachers are maintained to remind men and nations of the eternal laws they must obey and the eternal love in which they may rest. And in the United States they may yet be needed as the mainstay of social order. Either the churches have got to live up to the task of keeping the soul of the nation alive or they will perish."

"Do you think that members of the ministry generally agree with your views?"

"The facts speak for themselves. Statistics gathered by Doctor Josiah Strong show that the gain of the churches in membership in proportion to the gain in population is steadily and rapidly falling off. In the past twenty years it is less than half what it was in the preceding twenty. The trouble is that too much of our religion, both as it is preached and as it is practiced, lacks life. The attitude of a vast number of persons toward it is like that of the New York banker who said to a certain preacher at the conclusion of his sermon: 'This is the first time I ever knew that religion had anything to do with living. I thought it had to do only with dying and going to hell.'"

"But don't you think that many churchmen will disagree with you and claim that you are attacking religion itself?"

"Very likely. Differences of opinion are certain to exist among living men. It is only in a cemetery that you will find unanimity. All the evils of controversy are temporary; all its benefits are permanent. This is one respect in which religious thought in England is in advance of America. They are not afraid to discuss these subjects over there."

"How about the various schemes that have been adopted to attract men to church, such as vaudeville concerts, the serving of temperance drinks, billiards, athletics, and similar means?"

"They simply show how desperate the situation has become in some quarters. But I don't believe that the church can compete with the saloon by turning itself into a weak imitation, or with the theater by presenting a poor theatrical attraction. Practical religion must concern itself with the saloon, with politics, with questions of better homes and better home life for the poor, but the way to strengthen religion is not by debasing it."

"Practical religion" sums up the reform which Doctor Aked would introduce in the churches. In his own experience he has been remarkably successful by its application in attracting support to the churches with which he has been connected."—The New York World, July 26, 1908.

HARD RAPS FOR FAITH CURES.

PSYCHIC HEALERS SCORED BY DOCTOR F. C. RICHARDSON OF BOSTON.

Mental healing, higher thought, new thought, and all forms of so-called psychism were rapped hard yesterday afternoon in the homeopaths' conventions, when Doctor Frank C. Richardson, of Boston, read a paper entitled: "Prevalent psycho-therapeutic quackery a menace to the American intellect."

Doctor Richardson went after all the supposed psychic demonstrations in which the curing of disease is reputed as possible. When he didn't name them he struck by inference and when he had finished no doubt remained as to his opinion of persons who try to make others believe they are extraordinarily equipped.

"Modern instances of human credulity and mankind's love of the mysterious," Doctor Richardson said it was, this belief in the several cults of pseudo-religious psycho-therapy, a reign of fraud and self-deception that holds sway, popular delusions and the madness of crowds. Not the laity alone, he said, but orthodox clergymen have fallen victims to the craze, and even eminent physicians are lecturing publicly and writing magazine articles telling of the sophistries of the subconscious mind. In instances where clergymen have become infected with the popular madness of this dangerous form of cheating, the speaker said, congregations had fallen into almost ecstatic adoration of the minister, a condition quite generally called "pastoritis."

"When ministers supplement their ethical discourses," Doctor Richardson said, "by the employment of paid hypnotists to operate upon persons whose physical needs and mental weaknesses they can not possibly have the requisite knowledge to determine, it would seem time for a protest from the medical profession if not for actual legislative interference."

Doctor Richardson paid especial attention to the "Emanuel church movement" in Boston, in which the pastor, the Reverend Doctor Worchester, and his medical associates declare they cure from seventy-five to eighty per cent of the tuberculosis cases treated by them. He referred to the forced or voluntary resignation from churches of men who have entered the work of "mental healing" and other kinds of psychic activity, mentioning instances in the Episcopal, Baptist, Congregational, Unitarian and Presbyterian denominations. The "Emanuel movement," he said, was an outgrowth of Christian science and numbers its adherents by the thousands: "There are many physicians," Doctor Richardson said, "who can report cases where life has been sacrificed to this fetich of psychism. Daily thousands of children are being taught, even in the name of Christ, to ignore the evidence of their senses and to suppress their reasoning faculty. Whither can such teaching lead but to a dwarfing of the intelligence?"

"The witch-doctors of old, using mysterious incantations and conjuring diseases to leave the body, did not find such a gullible public as do the myriad minor fads of healing of to-day, many of which apparently depend upon devotional exercises than which the rites of the barbaric medicine man were not more fantastic.

"We have in Boston the 'New Thought College' which teaches 'personal magnetism and mental and spiritual healing.' Also 'The School of Divine Science of Health,' the advertisement of which announces, 'Absent treatments given successfully.' The 'Metaphysical Club' flourishes and has many members."

Even the musicians have broken into the healing business, Doctor Richardson said. From July 1 to September 10 the "Crotona School of Musico-Therapy" is to have a summer school at Croton-on-Hudson, New York. These musicians say their music cures disease. "It might be supposed," Doctor Richardson said, "that the patrons of such methods must be either ignorant, vicious, or possessors of those shallow minds etc., but, incredible as it may seem, those victims whom I have met bear the outward semblance of intelligence and refinement, and have always been considered by their neighbors as eminently respectable. The only explanation of their otherwise incomprehensible vagaries must be on the ground of weakened will power, which, to my mind, is the direct product of the prevailing psychic distemper, this 'wind of folly' which is sweeping over the land and threatening to assume cyclonic proportions and properties.

"I believe it to be the duty of the members of the medical profession to remonstrate individually and (if possible) collectively against the indiscriminate dissemination of the doctrines of psychism as applied to the art of healing."—Kansas City Star.

An Hour of Leisure.

One morning, not long since, I felt so tired and weary. A throbbing pain for the three days just past had racked my brain, and I longed for quiet and rest. My older daughters were away from home, and so many duties and cares of every-day life on the farm fell upon me so heavily that I felt I was unequal to the task. And with it all I felt cross and nervous; and when the morning's work was finished I thought to hie me away for a while and sit in the shade of the great tall maples which grew along the fence row. And as my little son and daughter were at play in the yard they would not miss me, or at least I hoped they would not; for I did so much wish to be alone and not have any one to bother me. Well I knew if they went along I would be compelled to answer many childish questions, and listen to them, and I did not wish to do this just then. Seeing them under the old apple-tree, I went quietly out of the back door into the road which led to the pasture, and started along the shady lane; and I thought, "I shall sit and rest a while, and then finish my sketch, which I have tried for two or three days to write, but because of my work and the headache I have never finished, although the thoughts have crowded themselves in a vague way into my mind." But as I was congratulating myself on my good fortune, I heard childish voices approaching me and saying, "Oh, there she is now! Let's run and tell her," and I knew I had been discovered. As they came running toward me I heard the little boy, "my baby," say, "You know what you p'omised me. You p'omised I could tell her foist."

I felt a bit ashamed of my conduct, for I knew they had been talking of me, and I stopped while they came and told me of the "cutest little bird" which had a nest almost finished in the grape-vines, and they said, "Do come and see it carry mud in its beak, mamma."

My thoughts instantly flashed back over a number of years when all my childish pleasures were shared by my mother, as she scarcely ever was too busy to listen to our little secrets and plans, so pleasantly smiling while we talked, scarcely ever chiding for any interruption when alone and her time not occupied with older persons. Without any hesitation I went with them, watched the birds a while, and then sought the much-coveted shade along the fence row. But not alone, as I had hoped, for they went along, one holding the other's hand and chatting so merrily. What mother could have told them their presence was objectionable, and really it was not, although pencil and tablet remained tucked away in the big work-apron; for I knew how useless it was to listen to the merry prattle of busy little children, and try to write, for they claimed my undivided attention. They said, "Let's talk about lots of things," so we talked of the birds, the flowers, the trees, the grass, the clouds, and the corn-fields. They rolled on the grass and turned somersaults and said, "How nice it is to have mamma come out to play with us." At last I noticed the time was slipping away and I must return to the house, for the noon hour was approaching, yet I felt refreshed and rested; for the hour had been far better spent than many another which had been spent among older people where idle, useless gossiping had been listened to which always has a decidedly unpleasant effect upon one's patience, and leaves unpleasant reflection for days afterward. When I reflected over the morning I went to the dresser and looked over a treasured poem I had saved, written by Alice Hamilton Rich, and it had a sweeter significance than ever before. Below I give the poem.

ELLEN SHERARD ADAIR.

There came an hour of leisure
 For which I had waited long;
 And I thought, "Now I will use it
 In writing a little song—
 A wonderfully sweet story,
 In runic rhyme it shall be;
 And the world will pause to wonder,
 At the genius given me."

While I lost my time in dreaming
 Of the song unwritten yet,
 Don came with a hole in his stocking,
 Which I shall not soon forget;
 For I rushed to the stocking drawer,
 And pulled it out with a will,
 And behold! not a single stocking
 But what was poorer still.

"I wants to come in, dear mamma,
 My dolly has broke her head,
 And unless you is the doctor,
 I fink she will be dead!"
 And the baby joined her brother
 In a dance, when she came in,
 And only another mother
 Ever heard such another din.

So I mended dolly and stocking—
 What else could a mother do?
 But my eyes were a little misty,
 And my throat was choking, too.
 For the power to write the poem
 Had flown beyond recall;
 And a place with the grand old masters
 Could never be mine at all.

And I wondered if the swallow,
 As she builds beneath the eaves,
 Of wood, and hay and stubble—
 If ever the swallow grieves
 That she can only twitter,
 While the nightingale can sing,
 And the skylark make the heavens
 With his glorious music ring.

Then I thought, perchance the Father
 Had only given to me
 The power to rhyme my stories,
 As I darned the stocking knee;
 That the heart of some other mother,
 When she read my simple rhyme,
 Might gather strength for her labor,
 As I had gained for mine.

Our Master hath said, "The angel
 Of the children, doth behold
 Evermore, the face of their Father

In the city of pearl and gold."
 Mothers, kept from the poet's corner
 By reason of children bands,
 May reach unto heights of heaven,
 By a chain of baby hands!

Classroom Heroes.

The part our colleges have taken in the spread of New Testament Christianity throughout the land, and on the mission fields, can hardly be estimated in words. From Bethany and Bacon College to the newest and most ambitious university, our schools have gone on year after year, reënforcing the zeal of consecrated young men with that knowledge and wisdom which will enable them to present the gospel in the most attractive and effective way; and while they are preaching Christ, gain for them the respect of the world of intellectual culture. What Paul the educated was to the primitive plea, that our colleges have been to the Restoration plea in saving its adherents from local prejudice and religious provincialism.

The history of our colleges is the history of self-sacrifice on the part of the noble men who have acted as college presidents and professors. Making full allowance for the gifts of the well-to-do and the numerous contributions from the rest of the people, our educational enterprises would have utterly failed but for the unobtrusive heroism of our teachers. Often have men of large natural talent and years of college training—eminent teachers—worked on half pay, when full salaries were meager at the best, that the churches of a State or whole region might have competent preachers and workers to build them up and enlarge their borders. The sum total of endowments and contributions to current expenses utterly fails to explain the history of our college success. No less than the money which the people have given, does the money which the professors and presidents have done without, tell the story of our successful college enterprises.

Men who, if they had turned their attention to secular education, or, smothering conviction, had looked to rich denominational connections for support, might have had salaries representing thousands of dollars, have been content to stay with our own schools on the pittance that an unskilled laborer received. Frequently cultured and noble teachers in our colleges have received but a few hundred dollars a year for their services, and we are sure the average salary, until the past few years, would fall well within one thousand dollars. The people had not yet been fully educated up to the importance of the college question, and so our presidents and professors were compelled to make great sacrifices for our educational work to be carried on. That they did not fail us, should secure for them the everlasting gratitude, and from this time forward the generous support, of a growing people.

Pages of the most entrancing stories of self-abnegation, of unpremeditated heroism, of gracious and cheerful poverty, and of undying devotion to the cause all true disciples love better than life, could be filled from the experiences of our educators, dead and living. And the most beautiful thing about it is that these good and wise men have been happy in the success of every evangelist, and have rejoiced in the work of every settled preacher, blissfully unconscious of the fact that no class of men in our ranks are acting a nobler part or doing more for their Master and for humanity than themselves.—Christian Standard, July 18, 1908.

"If we were as free with assistance as we are with advice, the world would be different."

Letter Department

TOLEDO, Ohio, July, 1908.

Editors Herald: No doubt many of the readers of the official organ of the church would be pleased to know of my whereabouts. Since last writing I have been quite busy in church matters.

The conference of the Chatham District held its semiannual conference with the Stevenson Branch, June 13 and 14. It is now a matter of history. There was a large gathering of Saints present, also a good representation of the church officials present, which added to the comfort of the Saints and strength of the work. Bro. R. C. Evans, of the First Presidency, Bishop E. L. Kelley, his brother William H., president of the Twelve, Bro. U. W. Greene of the same quorum, president of the mission, five of the Quorum of Seventy, two high priests, eleven elders, eight priests, and a number of teachers and deacons. The church was filled to its overflowing, the number running into the hundreds, quite a contrast to the time when the work was started at Buckhorn, I presume the first branch organized in Canada. Bro. John Shippy was one of the first, in the Reorganization, to preach the gospel, and was one of the first to preach the gospel at Buckhorn, where a branch was started; his brother, Joseph, being one of the first of several of his relatives to obey this work.

At that time some of the neighbors, becoming alarmed about the additions to the church, it became the topic of the day. A man by the name of Clark, a class-leader in the Methodist Church of that place, gave them to understand that there was no need of worry at the spread of Mormonism. "For Joe Shippy," he said, "would be able to haul all the Mormons that would ever be in Canada in his ox-cart." That prediction was made and has proven false, for the good work rolls on. The Pierre & Marquette railway stopped all passenger trains running east and west to let passengers on and off, and more than that, they ran a special from Blenheim to Stevenson for the benefit of the passengers west and east of Chatham. So we can be encouraged in our work to see that even the railroads are willing to comply with our wishes.

The branch did well in caring for the Saints, and the visitors expressed themselves pleased over the way in which the Saints fed and cared for them. The eight cents per meal covered the expense of the provisions. Some were almost of the opinion that it was impossible for the branch to care for the conference, but all worked faithfully and so the burden seemed light, and all, so far as I could learn, seemed comforted over it and are willing to undertake it again.

Every branch in each district should feel, as an organization, that they owe it to the district to which they belong to take their turn in having the conference from time to time, as it is a part of this work. We read in section 17, paragraph 13, Doctrine and Covenants, as follows: "The several elders composing this church of Christ are to meet in conference once in three months, or from time to time, as said conferences shall direct or appoint; and said conferences are to do whatever church business is necessary to be done at the time." In order to carry on this work the conference is a necessity. So why should a branch object to having the conference? It is God's work. We say we love it, etc. Now when we say it is so dear to us, we should never shirk our duty. If we do we can not claim a Father's blessing. Let us be up and doing while the day lasts, for the night will overtake us and we will not be able to work.

After a short stay at home, the time again came to leave loved ones and home to face a frowning world to spread the angel's message to the perishing world, which is full of isms and cisms of all kinds of religious faiths. It is evident I am among the number that are called upon to make the sacrifice of loved ones and home. It seems hard to have it to do, but some one has got to do it, or destruction would come upon the earth. So after a careful consideration of the whole matter, I have reason to think I was accounted worthy to bear the message to fallen humanity. It is my daily prayer that I may be true to the charge intrusted, doing all the good I can for the Master.

I came to this place about two weeks ago. Previous to my coming I spent two weeks with the Saints of Detroit. While there had the pleasure to listen to a sermon from our worthy president, Joseph Smith, and of shaking hands with him and his wife, who were on their way to Canada. The work there is moving onward in the city. Bro. Liddy is president of the first branch, and Bro. Thomas Miller is president of the second branch. Bro. A. E. Mortimer is rendering assistance to the work in the city. I hope for its success continually.

In this city I am making my stay with Bro. and Sr. Robertson, 609 Chestnut Street. The work is in a disorganized condition. Something getting out of place, some one had done wrong, and others had felt hurt; so it was finally concluded to discontinue the meetings. So I set to work calling on the Saints, trying to arrange for meetings, listening to the discouraging features in it. Finally I decided to hold some meetings and have done so with good results so far. The kind Father is blessing with his Holy Spirit to the comfort of all. I have decided to continue and do all I can for the work here. Toledo is a large field and plenty of room for work. I am informed the Brighamites have got a foothold here, and I will try to hunt them up to see if we get them to see the error of their ways and have them turn from them.

Old Bro. and Sr. Cairns reside here and are still holding unto the faith once delivered to the Saints; also Sr. Margaret McKenzie resides here and is a professional nurse whom I had met but once in about twenty-four years. When I first met her she was a child left without a mother to care for her. She had to work her way in this world as best she could, her father being of poor health and not able to render her any assistance. I feel proud of her to see what she had accomplished, and, best of all, she is steadfast in this latter-day work.

With kind regards to all readers of HERALD, I am,
Yours in gospel bonds,

SAMUEL BROWN.

BOTHELL, Washington, July 25, 1908.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed to bear testimony through your columns to the divinity of this great work. I have had wonderful manifestations through dreams and in different ways.

A few months ago I had a dream that puzzled me not a little: several weeks after another of the same nature. Still I was puzzled. Another dream came to me later and at the time I saw no similarity between these dreams.

In the first dream, I was about to cross a bridge in company with my cousin, Olive Sykes, who is a Saint, when I saw some Italians conversing near by. I walked slowly, but Olive hurried on. I could hear what they said, and although they conversed in their native tongue I could understand. I called to my cousin to come back, told her what they said, and we started toward a place where there were other Saints, to tell them, when I awoke. I tried to remember what the Italians said, but could not. It was a plot that could be carried out, should we cross the bridge, and further than that I can not tell.

In the next dream, I found myself in a house of worship. A company of Swedish girls, dressed all in white, sung for me in their native tongue. I understood plainly the beautiful words of their sacred song. Then they knelt and I understood what they said. When I awoke I could not remember a word; it was like a pantomime to me.

In the third dream, I seemed to be at home with husband and children, yet in a strange house. I said to my husband, "It is midnight," and walked into another room. There was a large open window in the roof and through it the sun shone making a square of golden light on the floor. I exclaimed, "The sun overhead at midnight!" and walked under the window to make sure. Looking up I saw the glorious sun in all its splendor shining through thick dark clouds and lining those near with a glorious light. Not a speck was over the sun and it seemed no farther away than the clouds. I called to my husband to come and see the sun shining at midnight. As he came I awoke, and I could not go to sleep for quite a while. A few days ago I was compiling some references for the work I started in the Sunday-school, the study of Israel from Abraham to the present day.

It was a very cloudy day and misty. I sat by the window looking out for a moment to rest, when a ray of light came down against the piazza post on the inside. The thought came to me, Is that more light for me? I at once thought of my first two dreams. Still the light remained. Then came the thought, The Swedish tongue and the midnight sun; and still the light remained. I thought again, Can it be my husband, my children, and myself as missionaries. I involuntarily clasped my hands and exclaimed, "God help me to do right."

The light left and I became myself. I started to my feet and walked the floor, and felt as though God was better to me than I could ever deserve.

I have had other dreams, and often, during this period of time, but these three seemed singled out and brought together before me. I have no knowledge of either the Italian or Swedish tongues.

My husband has dreamed of preaching and lately he dreamed of holding a bottle of oil in his hand and praying over it. He is not in the church, but is ready to obey and there are some others who will go with him unless a change takes place.

Every praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,
Your sister,
MRS. C. D. SCOTT.

HOISINGTON, Kansas, July 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the St. Louis Branch since July 5, 1906, being baptized by my brother, George F. Barraclough, who is the presiding priest at present at the Lansdown Branch at East St. Louis, and confirmed by Elders T. J. Elliott and S. A. Burgess on the same date.

I left the city that afternoon for Sedalia, Missouri, where I had no church privileges, only meeting with four or five Saints while there, and they were passing through, except upon three occasions when my wife and I went to Knobnoster and met with the dear Saints there, and two or three trips to St. Louis. On each occasion the Spirit was manifested plainly.

In June following my baptism I went to St. Louis to an eye specialist for my eyes, as I had what was called a double vision. I would see one object in two places at the same time; the muscles of my upper eyelid of left eye were paralyzed and I could only open it a little better than half way. I reached St. Louis on Friday, and went to the doctor Saturday, getting little encouragement. I prayed to God, that he might help me. The few Saints that knew me would say, "Why don't you be administered to?" I would hardly answer them, as I felt my littleness to ask God to bless me when my past life had been so unworthy of such a blessing. I was not doubting the ability of our heavenly Father, but I was ashamed to ask the blessing.

Nevertheless on Saturday night I went to God in earnest prayer in my behalf, and also that he might bring my companion into the church. I received an answer that she would obey the gospel, and I then went to sleep.

Next morning I went to Sunday-school at the Rock Church, where Bro. Tanner spoke on the divinity of the Book of Mormon, ably defending that work.

After the service Bro. N. N. Cooke came up and shook hands with me and exclaimed, "What is the matter with your eye?" I explained as best I could, when he said, "You had better come in and be administered to." I hung back and made no reply, ashamed to ask the blessing. Bro. Cooke left me and went into the room used for that purpose; then turned and came back; taking me by the arm he said, "Come on, Bro. Barraclough." I then went with him.

In the room was Bro. Paul Hanson, who had just returned from his trip around the world, and Bro. Tanner, I believe, though I am not positive, as my heart was too full and my eyes too full of tears to look up; also a sister. I can not call her name. I knew her in Webb City, Missouri, some six years previous. The elders blessed the oil in my presence. Bro. Cooke anointed, also offered the prayer.

Dear Saints, you who have not been in a position of the kind, can not realize how I felt, I was blind with tears asking God to have mercy on me. The prayer was short, asking God to heal the cause of the trouble.

I took a chair while the sister was administered to, my heart too full for utterance.

Then all left the room but Bro. Hanson, who took my hand and said, "I will remember you, brother." I thanked him and he left. I being alone, I stayed a few moments, dried my eyes and looked up, and, thank God, everything looked brighter; the double vision seemed not to be half as bad as when I went into the room. I could look out into the sunlight without any trouble, as before I could hardly see.

The following Tuesday I went to the doctor. He seemed surprised to see the change, I told him, but he said nothing in return.

The following week I was relieved and returned to my work. But before I left the city, my dear companion came to St. Louis and was baptized by Bro. Tanner, also confirmed by him, thus confirming the answer to my prayer.

This I wish to say to those Saints who have the privileges of the church, and who would rather attend a party than a prayer-meeting: My dear brother or sister, whoever you are, you are missing a golden opportunity God has given you to enlighten yourself in his work, that you might be a blessing to others.

I and wife have been here for seven months and have not seen a Saint outside of the ten days at General Conference last April, and on a trip we made to Belleville, Illinois, a couple of weeks ago.

Pray for us, dear Saints, that we might some day have the privilege of meeting and living where we may attend the services of God's people, to take active part in the prayer- and testimony-meetings, also that we might be found worthy on the resurrection morn.

May God bless and keep his people, is my prayer.

Your brother in Christ,
E. L. BARRACLOUGH.

PANA, Illinois, July 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have just returned from Gresham, Illinois, the scene of the Sparling-Boles debate, which closed last Saturday afternoon. The propositions discussed were similar to those in the Braden and Kelley debate, in which the two church propositions were discussed. Two two-hour sessions were held each day, one beginning at ten o'clock in the forenoon and one at two in the afternoon, with preaching-services at night. The attendance was large—nearly every day over one hundred teams on the ground, which probably brought three hundred people. Of course we could hardly expect the vanquished to acknowledge defeat, but with that exception it seemed to be the general opinion of the people, or as one man expressed it, "The Campbellites have taken the worst licking they ever had and they won't be quite so fast to pitch into other people and other churches after this."

Boles adopted the usual methods of garbling and twisting and digging up Utah Mormon history to sustain his points, but all in vain. Bro. Sparling was able to meet them at every turn and show their character and unreliability, while on the other hand Bro. Sparling used only their own church works and history to meet their church proposition.

Two were baptized on Sunday following the debate and I think perhaps others would have been had the weather been pleasant, but it was quite rainy in the morning, which no doubt hindered some from attending.

We believe the victory was complete and that prejudice was removed and the interests of truth advanced in that part of the country.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
CHARLES H. BURR.

FORT WORTH, Texas, July 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am making an effort in this city of seventy thousand people to get them to hear the angel's message. The world is running wild after sin, folly, and foolishness. Anything of a worldly nature attracts people more than do things divine.

The creeds, catechisms, and doctrines of men have so entwined themselves around the hearts of professed Christians that their finer natures—their divine, spiritual feelings—are so out of tune, so benumbed by worldliness and pride, that they can not feel nor see the beauty in the true gospel restored by the angel. "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend," are words which thrilled, stupified, and staggered the Roman governor. In the days of Pilate there was the one Cæsar. To-day we have thousands, and tens of thousands of them. The children of King Cæsar are scattered over the wide world, living in every nook and hamlet. Those who to-day are blinded with zeal for "the law" are crying out from every quarter: "If you aid or favor these Latter Day Saints, you are not Cæsar's friend." Indeed Cæsar has a wonderful hold on the hearts and affections of the people to-day. This is an age when the ruling impulse and ambition is to be "in the swim"—"in the push." It requires some courage to break away from the fascinating, delusive pleasures of the world—to leave worldly favor and come over to the side of right, over on the Lord's side.

"Who is on the Lord's side?" Those who follow the fashions and pride of the world? Those who indulge in filthy, disgusting habits? Those who spend all their earnings for themselves, and do not pay one tenth to the Bishop? Those of the Saints (?) who visit saloons and allow their carnal natures to lead them to commit sin and evil? Are we on the Lord's side when we disregard his word and follow our own fancy? How readest thou?

The Lord has said tobacco is not good for man. Did he mean that it was good for women—sisters in the church, and that they, both men and women, could use snuff to their hearts' content?

Oh, yes, "we" have the angel's message! "We" have obeyed the restored gospel! "We" have been baptized "for the remission of sins"; and "we" have received the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost—we believe in the signs following the believers—yes, sir, we do! I do not doubt but what the Lord is merciful, more merciful than I; but I do not believe, can not believe that God will or can lie in order to extend mercy. His law or his word will be our judge. (See John 12: 46-50.) Then in Proverbs 28: 9 we have this reading: "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination." How readest thou?

In my labors I feel a great need of more power from God; that the word preached may be effectual. I am not a sign-seeker, if I know myself; but I wonder, while reading the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, also the history of the early days of this church, why we do not have as great a degree of power as we read about. What wonderful power of God was manifested to Alma and his brethren! What wonderful power was given in the early days of this church, when our brethren would visit a place, baptize the whole congregation, preacher and all sometimes. Is the Devil's power gaining on the Lord's?

It is true, as I have suggested, that the people are enwrapped in worldliness and pride—and are rocked to peaceful slumber in the cradle of sectarianism, and religious nonsense. But that same condition evidently prevailed in the days of the apostles, in the days of Alma, and in the days of Joseph.

I am inclined to the belief that God's power is manifested when he has a united people, when his people are faithful to duty—when they have turned loose with both hands, heart, and soul from the world and its seductive influences and secret combinations—when they as a whole will give heed to the voice of the Spirit, as in one instance, the prophecy through Bro. Joseph Luff; also by Bro. J. W. Wight at last General Conference. It is a failure to presume to present God and his word, and have our hearts crammed full of love for the world and its ways—or even wishing for the mammon of the world.

The people of other churches think it a most terrible thing for our brethren to infer that they are not accepted of God—that they have no authority, etc., as churches. And yet we may lose favor with God to a degree by our own follies. And may I also suggest: That such might be the case, and we not know it?

I have gone to places to hold a series of meetings, where Saints were in discord, and not living as Saints should. Their minds and hearts were careless about the work. Oh, they were glad the preacher had come! That's good as far as it goes—but previously their lives had blocked the wheels, hindered the work, and grieved the Spirit. We could tell it—could read it on the vibrations of their voices, and see it in the expression of their eyes.

Many of the Saints seem to think that the signs following the believer are centered in the healing of the sick, prophecy, or speaking in tongues. But we are also promised supernatural knowledge, divine wisdom, and the discerning of spirits. With this we are able to see the conditions that confront us.

I believe in the doctrine of unity—unity with God and his Spirit. If we do not have that, it would be impossible for us to be in unity with each other. This work can not move forward without the power of God, and I have no hope of gaining and retaining that power only as I consecrate myself to him; turn loose from the world, and all its evil attractions, and worship him and him only; abstain from all that is filthy, evil, and sinful—in this we need the coöperation of all—every member in the church. If we could all consecrate our lives to him, we would have no reason to inquire, "Why don't we have more of the power of God with us in our ministry?" "Who is on the Lord's side?"

Yours in the conflict,
R. M. MALONEY.

Dear Herald: Husband and I are here in an isolated condition where there is no place to worship nearer than fourteen miles, not even a Sunday-school. We are as scattered sheep without a shepherd. We are here, as it were, among wolves in sheep's clothing. Dear Saints, husband and I want to do the will of the Master so as to meet his divine approval, so in a land of persecution and strife and hatred, we have to trust the Lord and his Holy Spirit for divine guidance. I do not live at all times as I should. Let us stand firm to our post and in faithful discharge of our duty. As we are the "light of the world," let us live so the world may see our good works. It is also by our works that we stand or fall. I believe there is a great good done by faithful living, by works and faith being linked together. We must show our faith by our works. This gospel satisfies the longings of the soul, as the Apostle Paul has said in Romans 1: 16, "It is the power of God unto salvation."

I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. I wish to give you a brief statement of my Christian life. I have attended protracted meetings time and again, and was in earnest about my soul's salvation. I did not get any results. This was in Georgia and Tennessee. I was at last baptized by A. G. Thomas, of Acworth, Georgia, a Campbellite preacher, and lived in that church for about twelve years and received blessings from God, as I was honest in my convictions, and God is a just and a merciful God and rewards every man according to works. I lived in Cartersville, Georgia, at that time, it being my native State. January 9, 1904, I was baptized by Elder Frank Tharn, of Utah. I now find my mistake again, and I want to be baptized into the true church of Jesus Christ by Elder Hubert Case, of Piedmont, Oklahoma, Branch. I trust he will see my letter. I desire to hold on to the rod of iron until the end and receive the crown that the apostle said was laid up for the faithful, and for all that loved the appearing of Christ. Let us be up and doing, as it is the doer of the word that is justified.

Dear Saints, let us not be careless about our tithing. We ought to contribute as we are commanded. If we disobey the laws of our land we know what the outcome will be. Although there are lawyers and law-makers that have a way of getting around the laws of the land, not so with God's laws. They are the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. The Bible says of God that he is unchangeable. I often ask my true friends to read Matthew 16: 26: "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

I ask all the Saints to pray for husband and me that the way may open for us to live where we can attend meetings among the Saints. I only wish husband and I were able to do more in a financial way to help spread the reasonable plan of salvation. Bro. Hubert Case married us last March (29th), and I want him to baptize me in August if he is at home in the month of August. Dear Saints, I have a true firm husband in the faith. This is a blessing and a comfort to my soul. He is a true husband and a faithful member of the true church and a law-abiding citizen, and has the respect of all who know him.

May God bless and strengthen all Saints, is my prayer.

Your sister in the faith,

MRS. ANNIE E. A. ULRICH.

PIPE CREEK, Texas, July 21, 1908.

Dear Herald: The conference of the Southwestern Texas District convened with the Bandera Branch July 10. Elder W. M. Aylor was called upon to preside, which he did to the satisfaction of all present. The following elders reported: W. M. Aylor, D. S. Palmer, John Harp, L. L. Wight, O. D. Johnson, and W. H. Mannering, the last two not being present, however. The First and Second San Antonio and Bandera Branches made reports. Bishop's agent, D. S. Palmer, also reported. A good spirit was present throughout. The preaching was of a high order and we think much good was done.

Brn. Harp and Palmer left to hold meetings at another point, Bro. Aylor continuing with us for several days. His preaching was well received by the people. His manly way and gentlemanly deportment have gained for him lasting friendship. I am satisfied that the impressions made upon those outside of the church are lasting ones, and that much prejudice has been removed, the work strengthened, and the Saints brought closer together. The outsiders as well as the Saints regretted that Bro. Aylor had to leave us, but our loss will be others' gain.

We need an elder among us all the time. We are a badly mixed people here religiously. We have Methodists, Free Methodists, Holiness, Baptists, and Apostolics. So you see that it is hard for us to gain much ground. We have no local help of any kind, but we are trying in our weak way to hold to the rod of iron. That a better day may dawn upon us and that we may hold out faithfully to the end, is my prayer.

F. HODGES.

TRENTON, Missouri, July 27, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have been absent from my field for five months because of the sickness and death of my dear daughter, Iva. I do not wish her back in this wicked world which is groaning under the burden of sin. How hard is the breaking of earthly ties! But what a consolation is in the word of God to those that die in the Lord, as stated in Revelation 14: 13, also Matthew 5: 5, 8. During all of Iva's sickness, not a cross word ever escaped her lips. With all her suffering she was so patient, and such faith I never witnessed in a sick person before. Iva was such a comfort to my wife in my absence. My wife is now alone and broken-hearted.

I have been enjoying an unusual degree of God's Spirit in my preaching ever since I came back to my field, for which I am thankful to God. Bro. Ammon White and I held a series of meetings in South St. Joseph Branch. They were a success. Seven were baptized by Bro. Ammon, and others are nearly persuaded. One little girl about ten years of age desired to join, but her parents forbade her doing so. She cried during baptism and would not be comforted. I have heard since that her parents have consented.

We were very well entertained by the St. Joseph Saints, and we were well remembered along financial lines. Each one preached a sermon at the First Branch and the Mission.

I find Bro. Ammon a congenial, spiritual, indefatigable worker. He is being blessed with the Spirit in his preaching. We are now in tent work and domiciled at the home of Sr. Profit. Her husband has not yet united with us; he is one of the good men of the earth, is in sympathy with us, and is highly esteemed by the people who reside here.

In the conflict for truth,

F. C. KECK.

STANFORD, Montana.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I have communicated anything to our HERALD, not from any lack of desire to write, but because I have not felt that there was anything of interest to report. We have been made to realize that we could use this rule in writing to our church periodicals, the same as bearing our testimony in meeting. We often feel our weakness and prefer to listen to others; but should the others feel as we, what would be the results? Closed lips and deaf ears can never accomplish much good.

There are fifteen Saints here, in an unorganized condition, who have been officered and nurtured for a short time by Elder F. M. Mauzey and his energetic companion, who have opened their doors for services.

I am thankful that we are enjoying the privilege of prayer-meeting, and also for the Sunday-school, which has been lately organized. Previous to the organization of the latter I had the following dream: I thought we had gathered at the house of Bro. Mauzey for meeting. On going into the room I saw a number of loaves of bread lying on the table. I wondered what it meant, as I did not see any wine. And as I was thinking, I heard a voice say, "Sunday-school." This was on Friday night, and there had not been a word spoken in regard to a school, to my knowledge. I was thinking of this dream when a sister arose and related a dream regarding Sunday-school. In the "mouth of two or three witnesses" the Sunday-school was established.

It does me good to see the little buds of promise learning the life of their Savior, and I rejoice when I know each one can work for the Lord. In my blessing I was told that my surroundings would be such that I might impart many of the things revealed of the spiritual character, that I might stand as a teacher to those younger and instruct them in the way of life and right-doing. I desire to be instrumental in God's hands in doing much good. I realize that it is only in keeping the commandments that we are able to use wisdom.

We know the work is of God and the responsibility rests on each one of us, and pure living is the greatest responsibility. When I read the different letters from the Lord's vineyard my heart is thrilled with joy to see the increasing efforts and the more earnest desire of the Saints. The coming of the Savior is near and our trials will therefore be greater. We should give more earnest heed, lest at any time we should forget. We can not find a single instance in the life of the Savior when he stepped aside from his duties to take up the things of this world.

We should devote more time to reading the good books and church publications. We will build upon faith and have a greater desire to labor for the cause. I have seen the time when Saints became very indifferent by neglecting to read the church papers. I have heard the remark, "We do not get time to read them." I think this is a mistake, for my experience is that we can always so arrange our work to entertain a visitor who has announced the date of his coming. Then, why should we not do likewise to receive the church papers? I always so arrange my housework that I can have time to read the HERALD and the other papers as soon as they arrive, and it is time spent profitably.

Let us be temperate in all things, let us serve God with honest hearts, and be patient through trials. Let us consider the covenant we made with God when we accepted this work, always remembering there is a work for each one to do, great or small.

Satan is working hard here in trying to destroy some. He tries all and especially the weak ones who are more or less indifferent. On the other hand, there are those who manifest an interest and those who do are desirous of having a branch organized here.

Ever hopeful for the future,
MARY V. BRANTWAIT.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 20, 1908.

Saints' Herald: It is a long time since I contributed to your pages; but I so often read letters from Saints who are isolated or discouraged, that my sympathy goes out to them; for there is so much happiness in the companionship of a true Saint; but God has provided for such while we have those precious books, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. How few Saints realize the comfort those books contain! But we must read them often to get the benefit of them. Have them quite handy so that when you need a few minutes' rest you can take them up; have a pencil handy too, to mark where you find it interesting to you; get them worn so that they open up easily.

How many of us ask for comfort, yet do not take it when it is offered. We are told to ask, and it shall be given; seek, and it shall be found. And for the discouraged, read the seventh chapter of Moroni, not once, but often. Also have an old Bible handy for every-day use; for we find an answer to everything there. Many a time have I, Bible in hand, asked God to comfort me, or chasten as he saw fit, and I have had my answer right there; and I know it was my answer. We must not be looking for great and wonderful things; but must see things naturally, as they are; and the great and wonderful will come when we are not looking for them. According to our life and faith in God we shall receive; but it rests with ourselves. If we keep near to God, he will ever be near to us; but we must earn his love. If we love others, we shall be loved of them, and see his love for us shining through their eyes. I found my greatest happiness in God while isolated, when only God and I knew how great my trials were. He alone knows and understands us through and through. Can we realize the promise of eternal life? Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man to know what the Lord hath prepared for those who love him; and if we have the love of God in our hearts, it is easy to keep his commandments; and with God's help we can overcome any besetting sin; for he will take away even the desire. There is a great deal expected of a Saint; for where much is given much is also required. So if we are the chosen of God, oh, how much better we must be than others. All the world loves genuine sincerity; even our enemies admire it. We all get discouraged at times; but if we are prayerful we shall have that sweet peace abiding with us; and we shall feel the comforting influence of God's Holy Spirit around us, that others will feel the influence of it, and believe in us, and in God, too.

I often think, if we only knew just how many days we had to live, how much more thoughtfully we should live them. But we should live each day hopefully, prayerfully, patiently; and some day we shall know why, and be glad for all our trials and afflictions, since they bring us nearer to God. And may we prove ourselves worthy of all the blessings, and let our lights shine as the stars in heaven, that we may hear, "Well done, good and faithful one."

News From Branches

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

The old maxim is, "No news is good news," which we hope is true of Burlington, as there has been none from us for so long. At least we have been holding our own fairly well. Our church is at present in process of repairs, which interfered somewhat with the services of August 2, and made it necessary to have no evening service. The building has been reroofed, a new double door has been put in in compliance with the new law which requires doors of public buildings to open outward. It is also to be papered, and painted in and out. A permanent walk will also be laid after a time. Our pastor, Bro. Charles Fry, is proving his efficiency by helping with the carpentering, papering, etc.

We have recently had the pleasure of a visit over Sunday from Elder J. W. Peterson, who was in our district for some time.

Our Religio president, Sr. Edith Jarvis, expects to leave Burlington on the 8th for Tacoma, Washington, where she will spend about two months.

The Ladies' Aid Society has made arrangements for the furnishing of a room in the Sanitarium. A part of the expense was met by an ice-cream sociable which they held at the home of our pastor July 29.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

All is moving fairly well in this city. Rebuilding is still being pushed to a great extent, and we now have hundreds of finer buildings than were ever seen here before. All the business streets are fast being returned to their old capacity for business, and the old firms are returning to the old stands they occupied before the fire. If it were not for the many vacant lots, and great quantity of ruins, we would not feel any difference to-day between old and new San Francisco. More business is being done now than before, and the old feeling of security has returned to the people, and they have apparently forgotten the terrible calamity that befell us. Gayety and pleasure are to be seen on every hand, and money-making is still the chief object in the minds of most of the people.

As to the rehabilitation and self-support, we have fully recovered ourselves. Of the three hundred thousand people made homeless by the fire, all who were able to care for themselves have returned to their previous condition of homes and business. Those who needed help on account of their losses, have received the necessary aid, and been put in a condition to support themselves. To-day there are no refugees left. The great work of "relief" is ended. All its affairs are fast being wound up, and on the 4th of August the committee will turn all over to the city officially. There are only four hundred and one people on our hands unable to care for themselves and they are now located in the relief house which supplants the almshouse. Who could accomplish so much in two years and three months? That is what San Francisco did with the aid she received from the generous-hearted public everywhere. To look at the prosperous business, the beautiful buildings, the energy and pluck of our citizens, we are surely entitled to a little credit for our American grit and push.

We are doing quite well in a church way. Our branch is in a good condition again. The attendance at our meetings is encouraging, and we are moving ahead. One man was baptized two weeks ago, and four persons are to be baptized next Sunday morning. We have a good, energetic president in John A. Lawn, and all are working in harmony and peace. Our speakers enjoy good liberty in presenting the word and some few outsiders are interested. We have bought a lot, and contemplate soon building a church, so we feel encouraged in the work, and intend to keep at it. All the Saints are well generally.

GEO. S. LINCOLN.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

A special branch business-meeting was held Monday evening, July 13. Several improvements for the branch property were voted upon and adopted.

Sunday evening, July 6, to the great regret of all, Bro. F. R. Schaefer tendered his resignation as president of the branch. It was accepted under protest, Bro. Schaefer having been felt to be an exceptionally capable presiding officer. His successor will be chosen at a special branch business-meeting to be held Wednesday evening, August 5.

The street-meetings, under the leadership of Bro. Enge, have come to a close. Three baptisms have already resulted, and there are hopes that the seed sown has not been in vain. On August 5 a decision will be reached as to whether the meetings shall continue further.

An invitation was extended by the Council Bluffs Sunday-school to the Omaha Sunday-school and Religio to picnic with them at Fairmount Park on Tuesday, July 28. So many enthusiastic picnickers responded that a special car was chartered by the Omaha crowd. A most enjoyable time was had by all.

"THE TRIUMPH OF CURTIS."

To date Elder Curtis has not written the HERALD concerning the outcome of his debate with Elder Sanders. Evidently he held his debate and went his way content to let others weigh the merits of his defense. Naturally the Utah people assert that Elder Sanders was victorious. The Deseret News has done some whistling among the graves since the close of the debate. It is fair, however, to presume that the verdict of the "Gentiles" who watched the course of affairs is more unbiased and correct, as they do not believe in what is known as "Mormonism," root or branch, and having nothing at stake can weigh evidence with unclouded judgment. So we are pleased to note that the Salt Lake Tribune unqualifiedly concedes that Elder Curtis was the victor in the affair in question. In the Sunday issue, August 9, we find an editorial bearing the title, "The triumph of Curtis," which we quote:

Elders Curtis and Sanders, representing respectively the Reorganized and Utah branches of the Mormon church, have finished their debate upon certain points in dispute between the two organizations. While it may be difficult to say that any great amount of satisfaction was experienced in the outcome, the reports show that Elder Curtis was the more capable controversialist, being better able to clearly present the evidence available in support of his contentions. There having been no arrangement for official adjudication of the debate, those who listened to their arguments are at liberty to form their own conclusions in the matter.

It was intended that the discussion should be confined to one of the chief differences existing between the two branches of the church. They both sprang from the same source—that is to say, Joseph Smith, Jr., was the founder of the organization which later became divided into the two branches named. It is claimed by the Reorganized section that the succession to the presidency of the church and the prophetic office accompanying belong to the Joseph Smith family by appointment and confirmation of the founder. The Utah branch contends that Brigham Young was the legal successor to Joseph Smith, and that the line of prophets following him form the legitimate succession. It was to this matter that the debaters, in the main, devoted themselves.

Perhaps there was very little of interest in the discussion to non-members of the church; but the question of succession is of vital importance to believers in the Mormon creed, whether identified with one branch of the church or the other. So far as the reports show, it is evident that both debaters sometimes left the subject in hand and invaded other disputed matters; but this can scarcely be avoided where the subject of succession is so closely associated with other questions that have lateral bearing upon the main point. Undoubtedly Elder Curtis was more faithful in adherence to the real subject-matter, and that in most of his digressions he merely followed Elder Sanders into partially extraneous questions in order to make reply upon some points that otherwise must have necessarily gone unanswered.

It is a peculiar thing that when an elder of the Utah Mormon church engages in discussion with a person who is not a believer in the mission of Joseph Smith, he is always desirous of sticking closely to the recognized text-books of his church; but when this same elder undertakes to discuss with one of the Reorganized branch, there appears to be a disposition to assert from personal conviction, and private interpretation, rather than to prove from literal documentary evidence. It is evident that this method of controversy entered frequently into the Murray debate. An adjudication founded upon the actual and authoritative proofs presented would unquestionably give the decision to Elder Curtis.

Setting aside altogether any question as to whether or not Joseph Smith's desire in this matter were just to the church and its membership, it was undoubtedly shown by Elder Curtis that the founder of the church intended his first-born son to succeed him in the office. It was also shown that Joseph Smith was the revelator to the church, according to its beliefs, and that his own writings as such indicate rather plainly what were his wishes in the matter of succession—and desires and instructions so expressed must be accepted by any member of the church as the will of the Almighty, or he must relinquish the very foundation of his faith. The Doctrine and Covenants, while perhaps a little ambiguous or vague upon this point, favors the contention of the Reorganized branch, if it favors anything at all, and Elder Curtis was successful in establishing the fact by recognized authority.

That the discussion was of deep interest to church-members of either branch can be readily imagined, when it is recalled that a permanent settlement of the question would invalidate the organization, the acts and the powers of one branch or the other. So far as we are able to see, the Utah church has reason to fear for its position in this respect.

NO DANGER FROM SOILED MONEY.

This is an age when many men of many minds are writing about diet, exercise, sunshine, fresh air, and germs. There is this consolation in the situation: If one will read long enough he will find expert advice exactly coinciding with his natural inclinations. If he is of a hungry habit he may be disquieted by the warnings of some abstemious mortal who regards two meals per day as excessive. He may learn with horror that he is "digging his grave with his teeth." Let him not be hasty, next week's issue of the "Live for ever" will extol the virtues of a lunch between breakfast and dinner and between dinner and supper,—with a glass of milk and pickle just before retiring. He will learn that most people are underfed.

One may take up "Fletcherism" and learn the bovine lesson of continued, thorough, persistent, conscientious, microscopic mastication. He resolves that he will never again bite off more than he can chew. Thirty-nine chews to the mouthful shall be his minimum. About two days later the learned savant D—— issues an edict that excessive chewing of food causes undue acidity, so demonstrated by science, and that the dog has the only correct method of surrounding his food. Thereafter the meal is gotten through with less laboriously.

Doctor A recommends plenty of beefsteak, and rest in a recumbent position. Doctor B goes in for bran and climbing mountains. Take your choice. It is so with the question of late rising as opposed to the well-known custom of the lark.

One man sees sermons in running brooks and microbes in everything. Cistern water, well water, spring water,—it is the same. Here are colonies of typhus germs, a block away in the same drop of water is malaria, and down the street a little way tuberculosis is swarming. As some one has said, "We have our choice, we may boil the water and swallow a cemetery or take it unboiled and swallow an aquarium." Happy day, presently another man of equal cerebral endowment, but filled with faith, hope, and charity, comes along and assures us that we need not fear. Most of these germs are of a friendly disposition and are filled with a sincere desire to do us good. Then we recollect that our grandfather drank straight from the old oaken bucket and lived to be a centenarian.

One of the latest pronouncements is regarding tainted money (not the Rockefeller kind) from which we quote, as printed in the Literary Digest, August 15.

It is possible to carry fear of dirt to an excessive degree. Dirt is not nice; it is never beautiful; it may be disgusting—all this without being positively dangerous. Dirt may furnish the soil for bacterial growths; yet these growths may be numerous without including a single germ of disease. Recent experiments would appear to indicate that the fear of infection from soiled paper money is practically without foundation; and it seems probable that this fear is the result of a single zealous pamphlet, diligently copied in the press. All this we are told by Warren W. Hilditch, of the Sheffield Laboratory of Bacteriology and Hygiene, Yale University, writing in the Popular Science Monthly (New York, August). The soiled money investigated in Mr. Hilditch's experiments was, he tells us, the dirtiest he could obtain from railroad, trolley, and theater ticket-offices, banks, drug-stores, and individuals. He goes on to say:

"The numbers of bacteria present on the bills ranged from 14,000 up to 586,000, with an average for twenty-one bills of 142,000. There seemed to be no connection between the amount of dirt and the number of bacteria present; the cleanest-looking bill that I used had next to the highest count (405,000), while the bill that looked the dirtiest had but 38,000. When a bill has been in circulation for a short time and has become somewhat cracked, and its peculiar glaze worn off, the bacteria very easily cling to it without the presence of dirt and grease.

"All inoculations gave negative results, the time limit being placed at from six to seven weeks. All of the guinea-pigs showed more or less local reaction, with swelling of the lymph-glands of the groin, but none gave any indication of even temporary illness. Inoculations of pure cultures of staphylococci, as well as of Bacillus verosis (which was at first suspected of being Bacillus diphtheriæ), also gave negative results.

"From the observations that I have made, it would seem that the bacteria present on paper money are non-virulent and the forms most common are the air forms. Could the loss of virulence be due to drying, the bills having a peculiar dry feeling, no matter how moist the air? or is there some antiseptic action in the ink for the printing of the bills? I have not taken up the question as to why the bacteria found on money are without virulence, but have confined this study to a careful search for pathogenic forms that might be present on the bills."

The present agitation for "clean money," the writer believes, is due to a pamphlet on the subject by A. Cressy Morrison, of New York, dubbed by the press "Clean-Money Morrison." Mr. Morrison quotes the Research Laboratory of the New York Board of Health as reporting large numbers of bacteria found on coins and dirty bills, which accords with Mr. Hilditch's own results; but the laboratory officials wrote to Mr. Hilditch, in answer to a direct query, that they had "never found any evidence whatever of the actual transfer of disease through money." Mr. Hilditch says further:

"I certainly agree with Mr. Morrison that the Government should issue enough new bills of small denominations to replace the old, and that it would be a good plan to allow the people to cooperate in the redeeming of the old bills by making the registry of all bills sent to the Treasurer for redemption, free. As for the establishment in all States of government stations for cleansing money, would the expense involved be justified, when we consider that not a single case is on record where an infectious disease has been transmitted through soiled money? Is there any method known whereby we can sterilize a stack of tightly bound bills; or will each bill be sterilized separately, perhaps by being spread on a continuous belt passing through a disinfecting solution? And would not the process of sterilization greatly diminish the (non-bacterial) 'life' of a bill? . . .

"The United States Treasurer, who has given this subject long and careful consideration, is emphatic in his statement that there is not the slightest evidence to show that the employees in his department contract infectious diseases any oftener than others who are not in this line of work. This also applied to bank tellers and clerks. Peculiarly enough, those who claim that they have made a careful study of this question do not seem to understand that persons whose vocation involves the constant handling of money are susceptible to the same outside influences or exposure that others are, and are therefore equally liable to contract infectious diseases in the ordinary way, and that the handling of money does not render them immune to disease. . . .

"Doctor Doty has for years made a study of infectious diseases, and especially the medium of their transmission. He has collected reliable statistics from paper manufacturers in this country, and has made a personal investigation of the rag-depots of Alexandria, Egypt; yet no evidence has ever been found to show that these ragpickers are more subject to infectious diseases than those not connected with the work. 'It is fortunate,' he says, 'that money constitutes such an unimportant factor in the transmission of disease, as nothing could be more farcical, from a sanitary point of view, than an attempt to disinfect it, although this has been seriously proposed. It is important that those who have given this subject careful investigation should aid in the education of the public, in order that they may have a proper understanding of the matter and not be alarmed by sensational literature on the subject.' . . .

"It is no surprise that the theoretical does not agree with the practical side of the subject under discussion. This is often the case, especially when the subject is one which concerns the general public, the majority of whom readily agree with any one who says that dirty money is a certain means of transmission of infectious diseases.

"Why shouldn't this be so, when we think of the dirt and odors that accompany some of our paper currency? The bills have been in contact with many hands, not necessarily infected ones, but some that have at least been in contact with sores or sputum. Certainly a black picture could be painted and the possibilities made to appear enormous; yet another view is clearly set forth by a bank teller who said: 'If one stops to think, money can't be a very common means of transmission, for if it were there wouldn't be so many of us alive today; the escape from sure death of those whose duty calls for the constant handling of money, is certainly not merely due to chance.'

"One conclusion that may be drawn, after a careful study of the subject, is that 'money constitutes an unimportant factor in the transmission of disease.' We want and certainly need a more frequent redemption of our soiled and worn bills, yet the facts and evidences at hand do not justify us in alarming the public needlessly by rash statements concerning our currency. Admitting the possibility that money may act as a medium of transmission, certainly the failure of any virulent disease germs to manifest themselves in the foregoing experiments will allow us to feel a bit easier in regard to dirty money."

After reading the above, those who in the past have burned their money to destroy the germs may discontinue that practice. The Bishop will feel no hesitancy in accepting ten, twenty, and one hundred dollar bills to apply on tithing or the Sanitarium. The Herald Office will experience new satisfaction in receipting for subscriptions to HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign.

Mortality among the elders as a result of handling germ-laden money has never been high. That is one of the deadly things that has not hurt them. Now, however, those who have hesitated to expose the traveling elder to such danger need hesitate no longer; they may relax their efforts to quarantine as much as possible of the world's filthy lucre. The sunshine that may thus be brought into homes of comparative want will do much toward destroying the few disease germs that cling reluctantly to their contributions.

AN APOLOGY?

In the story of "The minister who was different," the second story of The Two-story Book, beginning on page 44, the language used by Elder Pratt in his discourse at Mentone is taken from the tract, "Latter Day Saints; who are they?" by Elder T. W. Williams. Credit was not given for this quotation as should have been done. The author apologizes for the oversight.

The situation has its advantages. We may as well improve them according to the spirit of the meeting on advertising at the General Conference. In addition to its many other merits the Two-story Book contains some excellent paragraphs from the great tract, "Latter Day Saints; who are they?" Have you the Two-story Book? Have you the tract? Both may be obtained from the Herald Publishing House. Both are church property and are sold at a very low price.

THE "INDEPENDENCE STAKE REVIEW."

The HERALD Editors are in receipt of number one, volume one, of the Independence Stake Review. This is an eight page monthly publication gotten out by the Independence Stake, W. H. Garrett editor. The subscription price is twenty-five cents per year, payable to the Ensign Publishing House. The initial number contains articles by leading stake workers, and news from the various branches, and is a very neat and creditable piece of work. Our best wishes go with the Independence Stake Review.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We call special attention to the following letter from Bro. G. J. Waller, and suggest that those having any information concerning this matter take it up at once in the manner mentioned.

"HONOLULU, T. H., July 30, 1908.

"Editors Herald: The Pacific Cruiser Squadron is to visit Honolulu during the months of September and October, and there probably will be some young men on board the vessels who are members of the church. If so, the members of the Honolulu Branch would like to meet them, and I would therefore ask you to say, through the HERALD, to the relatives of such young men, that if they will write to the undersigned, giving their names and stating on what vessels they are serving, he will be pleased to call upon them and will try, with the assistance of other members here, to make their visit to Honolulu interesting and agreeable. Or it will serve the same purpose if they will write to the young men, requesting that they call upon me.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Bro. Joseph Roberts, president of the Religio, believes in advertising. He makes use of the two local papers for a weekly write-up of the society. Last week he had the following:

"We are glad to note an increase of thirty in attendance at our last meeting. But with the Religio as with other matters, numbers do not always count for success. Had much rather measure success by the amount of good work accomplished. Of course you miss something when you remain at home and play croquet (as some nickname Religious billiards) or go 'up town' and see the magnificent sight of the train coming in, etc., instead of coming to Religio on Friday nights and going into a class for the recitation where you can learn something and learn some one else something, remain for the program and enjoy it, be somebody and help some other body to be somebody, take a hold of opportunity as it is offered, and when you get to be old you will not blame yourself for being a dunce."

All branch services give way temporarily to the Stake Reunion which begins Friday. The local Sunday-school on invitation of the reunion committee will meet on the reunion grounds the next two Sundays.

I. S. McCrillis, socialist candidate for governor of Iowa, addressed a meeting in the town park Thursday evening. The attendance was not large, but those present gave the speaker an attentive and apparently thoughtful hearing. Mr. McCrillis is an orator of pleasing address and evident sincerity. The meeting was presided over by C. I. Carpenter.

President John Smith was the speaker at the park Sunday evening. The park meetings will be discontinued, at least until the close of the reunion. Bro. Joseph Lambert spoke in the brick church at the morning hour.

Elders' Note-Book

"WHAT MAKES A GOOD SERMON?"

Such is the title of an article in a late issue of the American Israelite, from the pen of Louis Witt, of Little Rock, Arkansas, whom we take to be a Jewish rabbi. The article is full to the brim of excellent and practical suggestions that are worthy of a much wider reading than they will get in a single paper, and we wish to make liberal extracts from it in this paper. What constitutes good preaching is a question that deserves serious and careful consideration, and it should receive a larger share of attention at the hands of preachers than is accorded it. What will please the people and elicit applause from the throng, is too often the scale in which a sermon is weighed when it is undergoing preparation for the market. Sometimes a preacher views his sermon about as a milliner looks at the hats that she expects to sell to thoughtless girls, and values it according to the quality of feathers and ribbons with which he adorns it. But we started out to let our readers know the points of a good sermon, as seen by the aforementioned rabbi. His introduction is as follows:

"It is not without a touch of the humorous for a preacher to give his congregation a pedagogic discourse on what makes a good sermon. Let him preach a good sermon, and the congregation will soon prove to him that they know one when they hear it. But will they—there's the rub! Far be it from a humble preacher to impugn the critical omniscience of his congregation, but he may be pardoned if he ventures to say that in just one thing—the valuation of a sermon—even a congregation may err! The preacher may prepare a sermon in which, after appraising it according to the highest standard he has been able to achieve as the result of years of patient study and spiritual discipline, he takes the utmost pride. But it falls flat on his people—as flat as a pancake!”

The trouble with the preacher who measures a sermon by the standard that this rabbi sets up, is that his congregation seldom measures up to that standard, and is incapable of appreciating a sermon that satisfies its demands. Two preachers, one ripe in experience, scholarship, and critical ability, the other, young, inexperienced, and wordy, lived and preached in the same town. The scholar and critic preached to small audiences, while the young and verbose declaimer discoursed to large crowds. In a conversation between the two one day, the elder said to the younger, “You know that my sermons are much more thoughtful and scholarly than yours; and yet I preach to a handful, while you preach to a houseful. How do you account for the difference?” The young man replied as follows: “You see the people as they come and go in the community. How many of them, do you suppose, think for themselves, and reach conclusions as a result of their own reasoning?” “About one in ten,” replied the elder. “I suppose that is about the proportion,” said the younger, “and you get the one, and I get the nine.” There is a good deal in that explanation.

Speaking of a preacher of the solid type, who sees that his preaching does not take with the people, the rabbi says:

“He hears of a preacher whose sermons seem to enthrall the crowds that flock to listen. He joins the throng. With bated breath he listens, eager to learn what makes the successful sermon—the sermon the people want. First comes a most superb exordium, congested with tropical imagery—the sun kisses the mountain peak, and the sea waves murmur, and the amorous rose blushes, and there is also the eternal fiat of creation; then the pulpit oracle begins to rumble with internal volcanic rumblings, and from his mouth issues dithyrambic, sesquipedalian verbiage that casts even the thunder and lightning of Sinai in the shade; then comes the peroration, when once more Aurora and the peak undergo an osculation, and the nightingale gives an encore, and the eternal creation has another fiat—and all is over! The congregation seem to have fallen under a hypnotic charm; a celestial afflatus fills them: with turbulent acclaim and in utter disregard of crepe-de-chene apparel, they crowd upon the perspiring spell-binder. ‘What a wonderful vocabulary!’ exclaim they ecstatically. ‘What gorgeous pictures!’ Preacher No. 1 has been taught his lesson. He mutters something about ‘hifalutin wind,’ but he knows now nevertheless what makes a ‘grand’ sermon, and he wends his way homeward, a sad, but wiser, man.”

What a splendid description of a meteoric sermon! And what an accurate estimate of its effect upon many people! But what is there in it to exalt Christ as the world’s Savior, or impress hearers with a sense of sin and the need of salvation? What is there in it to feed the souls of Christians, and make them “strong in the Lord and in his mighty power”? It is only like the “snowflakes on the river, a moment white, then melt for ever.”

The following sentences are freighted to the guards with thoughts that are apples of gold in a basket of silver:

“Nothing should be more sacred both for minister and congregation than the sermon, for it is almost the exclusive channel whereby moral force may pass from the one to the other. At all times has the living word been a potent instrument for moving masses and shaping civilization, and especially is this true in the modern pulpit, where preaching has almost monopolized every other function, and the preacher has become vox et praeterae nihil—nothing more than a voice. The sermon, therefore, is the preacher’s only justification and supreme opportunity. It links him with the great prophets of old, who, like him, were but custodians of a living word charged with moral power. His is the privilege and the duty of being a mouthpiece of God: for the divine has ever acted on the world through the mediation of the human word. The sermon, therefore, is intended to be a deliverance from on high. It is not a thing for congregational entertainment, or for rabbinical aggrandizement, and it does not consist in the swallowing of an unabridged dictionary, or in a pyrotechnic display—it is a message, a thought from God incarnate in the word of man. It must, therefore, first and foremost, have something to say—something that one may take home with him and think over, and, as a result thereof, be made to feel more in tune with his vast and mystic world in which he must spend his hours and years. A sermon must leave helpful thoughts behind it, else it is a waste of words and the loss of an opportunity.”

The position of the preacher gives him a great opportunity to take part in molding the thought and shaping the character of his age and generation, and this opportunity should not be frittered away in efforts to gratify the palate of a vitiated taste.

The following ideas are worthy of all acceptance and high appreciation:

“Eloquence is not an unnatural use of high-sounding phrases. It is a heightened impression on the imagination made by high thought, when conceived with impassioned earnestness and expressed with simple directness. We talk most eloquently and dramatically when we talk from the depths of the heart, and then we talk most simply and directly. Therefore should a sermon be simple and direct, for it should come from the heart. Nothing is more conclusive evidence of our devitalized piety than the kind of sermons we want. We come into our houses of worship, not for consecration, but for entertainment, so we shrug our shoulders at the natural, the thoughtful, the sincere, and applaud the vacuous, the hysterical, the bombastic. And preachers are but human; they crave to be popular, and so many of them give the people what they want to the degradation of the pulpit and the nullification of its moral purpose. This is always the most harmful consequence of a bad public taste, that it perverts the very one who alone can educate it."—Christian Standard, July 11, 1908.

BUILDING HIMSELF UP.

Are you building yourself up in the things which pertain to life? Are you seeking a mansion to reside in, to establish yourself in the midst of beauty and grandeur? Do you love riches? If your answer is yes to these questions, we have a few thoughts to present for your consideration.

Human nature, at present, is somewhat selfish; the divine is absolutely unselfish. Keep this truth in mind, as we proceed:

But godliness with contentment is great gain. For we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out. And having food and raiment let us be therewith content. But they that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.—1 Timothy 6: 6-9.

This picture is rather discouraging to the individual seeking after riches. The apostle did not say, Those who are rich; but, "They that will be rich." Paul was addressing a young man whom he perhaps had converted, for he calls him his "dearly beloved son." In his second letter he tells Timothy he remembered him night and day in his prayers. His love for him was exceedingly great, hence his earnest exhortations and instructions. He desired to see Timothy prosper and attain to an exalted position, spiritually—to build himself up. In the tenth verse the apostle mentions the fall of some saints who coveted riches: "For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows."

If saints in former days "erred from the faith" because of their love for riches, does it not seem reasonable to conclude that Saints of latter days who covet riches will also prove unfaithful? The language of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth verses carries no uncertain sound with it:

Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not highminded, nor trust in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy; that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

As a rule man makes money, then money makes the man. But there are exceptions. The apostle desired Timothy to instruct the saints to seek the riches of eternity, and to warn them of the deceitfulness of earthly riches.

"Then said Jesus unto his disciples, Verily I say unto you, That a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 19: 23. "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day."—Luke 16: 19.

This rich man died, the Savior tells us, and was put in the prison-house. Looking afar off into heaven he beheld a poor man, who had begged for the crumbs of his table, and seeing with him Abraham, he cried out: "Father Abraham, have mercy on me." But Abraham said, "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented."

The beauty of your home or person will not be present when you pass over to the beyond, your spirit alone remaining to be gazed upon by the heavenly hosts. At that time the issue will not be whether you had built yourself up to look fine in the eyes of men when on earth; whether your clothes were costly and your home furnished beautifully. No, the style, the fashion, all appearance of your earthly show will have perished, and the spirit alone is left to commend you—then come the great questions which all must answer: Is my spirit clothed with righteousness? Is it beautiful to look upon? Has it enough divinity in it to merit the approval of the Almighty, when his all-searching eyes penetrate it?

Do not prepare so much to be seen on earth; but make great preparation for your departure into heaven.

In the midst of the beautiful you should be beautiful. Among the gentle, pure, faithful, righteous, meek, lowly, saintly, virtuous, and heavenly, you will be very much out of place, should you not possess the qualities of those who have overcome, and are accounted worthy to abide in heaven.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.
EXPERIENCES OF BISHOP C. A. PARKIN.

BISHOP C. A. PARKIN.

When I first came in contact with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ I was an enemy to it. When I say enemy, I mean all the word expresses. My parents joined the early church in Sheffield, England, in 1845. I was born two years later, and in 1857 I went to Utah with my parents, one sister and one brother.

I was blessed in England by Glauod Rodger, of dear memory, and the blessing was given with so much of the Spirit that Bro. Rodger was asked to commit it to writing, which he did. In crossing the plains in those early days my blessing was lost, but my mother told me the main points of it, so that they are fresh in my memory now. "This child shall live to preach the gospel."

In 1862 I was in Nevada, across the desert, near a place called Rag Town. My parents being poor, I had to work at that early age. My home was in Jack's Valley. Mother had a dream and in it she saw the house where I was, on fire, surrounded by Indians, and saw them shoot persons in the house. The next morning father came after me and brought me home. The parties for whom I worked wanted me to go back, but mother said positively, no. In three months after that the dream was fulfilled to the letter.

Before father left England he paid into an emigration fund with the understanding that any need we had on the way to Utah would be supplied. On the plains mother was accidentally shot, the bullet striking the hip and ranging upward and through the breast. There were no doctors in our train, but she was cared for by an old Scotch lady who had served as a nurse in her own country. The first thing done was to apply tobacco leaves to the wound. Afterward prickly pears were used as poultices; and in six weeks she was able to cook our supper. I had been told that God could cure any disease, and I believed it, and offered many earnest prayers for mother, off alone in the bushes, that he would spare our dear mother. She lived until July 25, 1891, and passed peacefully away.

When we arrived at Salt Lake City in the fall of 1875, our cattle and all available things we had were taken from us to pay for mother's having ridden in a spring wagon belonging to the church.

I am not able to say what would have become of us, that winter, had it not been for an uncle who had been there a year or two, and who helped us to live. In the spring quite a body of the "saints" were sent to Nevada. We desired to go too, so mother went to the bishop of our ward and asked for permission to go, which was granted, with, "Yes, dear sister, and may God bless you and bring you safely back." But mother had no such intentions. Far from it, for she cried nearly every day when she learned of polygamy and some other things that were done there.

About this time, 1864, I went away to assist a party to drive cattle to Humboldt Meadows. While away the first elders of the Reorganized Church, Bro. Dykes and (I think) Edmund C. Briggs, E. C. Brand, and others, came into the neighborhood, holding meetings in the schoolhouses. They baptized my oldest brother, and when I came home he was very anxious to have me attend the meetings. I positively refused, and chided my brother for having anything to do with them. I could not believe they were different from the Utah folks. The neighborhood was aroused, as most or a good part were apostate Brighamites.

After a while I attended prayer-meetings, but my mind was set not to believe. I just went for the social part only. But the more I went the better I liked it, and my prejudice gradually gave way. I took the advice given, that is, to ask God in solemn prayer. I heard a great deal about the latter-day apostasy, and I finally became convinced, and my sister and I stood up in the prayer-meeting, as the request had been made, if any desired baptism to stand up. And so we were baptized in the Carson River when the water was full of snow and melting ice and the frost hung on the willows like feathers.

I thank God with all my heart and soul that I ever listened to the promptings of his Holy Spirit, and with joy I "remember the dawn of that day; when led by the Spirit the truth to obey." I know that my feet are planted upon the eternal rock of divine truth revealed through the "choice seer" in the last dispensation of the fullness of times. I have been made to know many times that God is with me by the power of his Holy Spirit, leading, directing, aiding me in my work,—that great and noble work to which I know I have been called by him who is eternal.

When I was called to the Aaronic priesthood, I doubted my call, as I had no evidence of it, but by the direction of our beloved President, dear and venerable Joseph Smith, I learned that I was fixed upon the rock of divine power to tell the gospel of the Son of God to man. And when at the district conference at San Francisco, on the eighth day of September, 1885, I was ordained to the eldership, I learned that I had additional divine power to continue the same work.

On the eighteenth day of July, 1900, I was ordained a high priest, when shortly afterwards I received unmistakable evidence of my divine calling, and confirmation that I should continue to work for the advancement of the Lord's work in the special line of the bishopric; and in the fall of the same year I was ordained a bishop under the hands of our dear and much beloved patriarch, A. H. Smith, and others, one of whom was Bro. G. T. Griffiths.

I rejoice to-day to know that God has called me to do his work. I am happy and content to know that if faithful I shall stand at last with the redeemed of God on the redeemed earth, and still be permitted by divine grace to minister for him. I unhesitatingly recommend the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints to men and women on the face of the broad earth, and pray that God will lead the honest to his great and marvelous work of the last dispensation. I have written this in the fear of God, and pray that his Spirit may accompany its reading as a confirmation of its truth.

"THE GATES OF HELL."

The caption of this article is taken from the statement made by Christ when he said:

And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 18.

There has been no little amount of controversy over the meaning and application of the above statement. It is well known that the Roman Catholic Church has interpreted it to mean that no earthly power could succeed in destroying the church; that Peter was the first pope; that he was the "rock" referred to upon which the church was built. We think that this scripture has thus been made to do service to a purpose not intended. It has served the Catholic Church as their principal argument for their boasted claim of being exclusively the only true church of Christ on earth.

The rock or foundation upon which the great church of Christ was builded, was the revelation of the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. Peter had that knowledge revealed to him, and in like manner all other disciples of Christ may be favored with the same privilege. Jesus had before stated:

No man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him.—Matthew 11: 27.

Again, in speaking to the disciples of the promised Comforter:

But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me.—John 15: 26.

By this statement we are assured that every disciple of Christ may receive a knowledge of the Christ by the testimony of the Holy Spirit. This is what Peter received and the fact that every other follower of Christ may receive the same knowledge is the "rock," as referred to. The idea that the church is "built upon Peter" is exceedingly weak and far-fetched. In order that we may understand the proper application to the words "the gates of hell," we must consider the nature and extent of Christ's mission. This is stated by Paul, in his letter to the Philippians, as follows:

Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Philippians 2:9-11.

Here we are given to understand that Christ's work extends to a field of three divisions: heaven, earth, and hell. It was his work to reconcile to himself the hosts of heaven, and he came to earth that he might extend the ministry of reconciliation to all the people. The record tells us that after his crucifixion, "He went and preached unto the spirits in prison."—1 Peter 3: 19. In this he fulfilled the prediction of Isaiah:

He hath sent me to bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.—Isaiah 61: 1.

Hell is the abode of the spirits of the wicked. We read:

And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day.—Jude 6.

It is stated that those to whom Jesus preached were those who were "disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the Ark was a preparing."—1 Peter 3: 20.

In the "apostle's creed," as repeated, without understanding, by thousands of professing Christians every Lord's Day, appears this statement: "He descended into hell." This being true, the "gates of hell" did not prevail against him, according to his words. As he was the chief representative of the church, it will be seen that hell, the prison, was opened and Christ preached the gospel to the captives,

Also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the spirit.—1 Peter 4: 6.

Christ did not say that the church might never be corrupted by the evil conduct of its devotees; nor did he say that the forces and opposing powers of the world would always be utterly unable to overcome the church. He said the gates of hell would not prevail against it, and we have seen that such was the case.

The church is a combination of the divine and human. It is divine in its institution, its plan and purpose. It is human as it is represented in human conduct.

The history of the church, from the time of Christ to the present day, reveals much of vital interest. After he left it, various forces from within and without set to work for its overthrow. Jesus said, "And from the days of John the Baptist until now the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force."—Matthew 11: 12. Paul foresaw the day, shortly after his departing, when, "shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock."—Acts 20: 29. Daniel, in his vision of the future, witnessed a power in the earth which, he says, "made war with the saints and prevailed against them," also that it should "wear out the saints of the most high."—Daniel 7: 21, 25. These and many other scriptures indicate that the evil powers of the world would prevail against the church and subsequent facts of history clearly establish the fact. We are well aware that most of the chief officers of the church were put to death in every inhuman manner, that thousands of the saints became martyrs for the faith. The church existed in a fragmentary condition as ruled principally by bishops until the time of the Roman Emperor Constantine. He suddenly became converted to Christianity, put a stop to the persecutions, exalted the clergy to places of undue honor and dignity, and made the first pope of the acting bishop of Rome—hence the Holy Roman Catholic Church. Such a thing as a pope had never been thought of until designed by a wicked, dissolute Roman emperor. From the fifth to the fifteenth centuries this institution became a vastly different church than that which was established by Christ. Mosheim, the historian, tells us:

The public teachers and instructors of the people grievously degenerated from the apostolic character. They seemed to aim at nothing else than to sink the multitude into the most opprobrious ignorance and superstition, to efface from their minds all sense of the beauty and excellence of genuine piety, and to substitute in the place of religious principles, a blind veneration for the clergy, and a stupid zeal for a senseless round of ridiculous ceremonies.

(Good Roman Catholic practices of to-day.) The sad epoch in the world's history known as the Dark Ages, was the result of the church of Christ having been turned into the church of the world. The word of God was completely fulfilled: the kingdom was taken by force; the saints were worn out and prevailed against, and the flock became a prey, a tool in the hands of the Roman Empire. The Reformation, begun by Luther in the fifteenth century and supplemented by the host of other reformers since his time, have served to protect the rights of man and to promote and extend the high state of civilization which is enjoyed at present.

Our church is neither a reformation nor a part or outgrowth of any other church. The church of Christ having vanished from the earth, the gospel as Christ taught it, with all its attendant ordinances, not being represented as of old, it follows as a logical sequence that if the true church and the true gospel is found on earth to-day it must have been restored—not reformed. The divine word indicates that such a work would be done. Daniel foresaw the time in the last days when the God of heaven would set up a kingdom. (See Daniel 2: 44.) It "shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever." That was not the kingdom as set up by Christ, for it was taken by force. It was left to other people in that it was taken from the Jews to the Gentiles. It did not stand for ever, for it was entirely overthrown. The coming of the angelic messenger (Revelation 14: 6), the restoration of the everlasting gospel, and the institution or setting up of the church of Christ mark the beginning of the kingdom which Daniel saw. It is truly a little flock to whom God has given the kingdom; but it stands under conditions which only the kingdom of God could endure, and it will stand, preparing a people for the coming of the King of kings, and Lord of lords. And when the bridegroom comes to meet his bride, then the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

OUR DUTY.

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" Man, a servant of the most high God, an object of his pity, love, and charity; man, created by God, blessed with life, health, and all that he is the possessor of! Are we, many of us, who have pride of the hope that is within us, truly grateful for the many blessings we so often acknowledge? Do we ever stop and think of the many points wherein we disobey his will? Do we ever think of the many times we show our ingratitude by not obeying some at least of his many just commandments? Do these facts ever come with force upon our conscience? Are we even too ungrateful to hearken to the whispering of that guarding Spirit which so often says, "Saints, do your whole duty"? Are we past realizing the fact that we all have a duty to perform? With much force the following comes to my mind:

"With my substance I will honor
My Redeemer and my Lord,
Were ten thousand worlds my manor,
All were nothing to his word.

"While the heralds of salvation
His abounding grace proclaim,
Let his friends, of ev'ry station,
Gladly join to spread his fame.

"Be his kingdom now promoted,
Let the earth her Monarch know;
Be my all to him devoted;
To my Lord my all I owe."

—Hymnal, No. 150.

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man."—Ecclesiastes 12: 13.

His commandment to bring unto him the first-fruits of our labor is just as strong, and ought to be just as impressive as when he said through the Prophet Malachi, "Will a man rob God?" or as when Ananias fell dead. Before or after, now and always, we find him unchangeable. The first-fruits of our labor is what he requires of us, or what he has commanded us to bring into his storehouse. If we fail to do this we will certainly not be doing our whole duty to God. Tithing and offering is the system that we as a people stand ever ready to defend as the only God-ordained method of church support. But are we ever ready to do our whole duty to God, and keep his commandments in regard to the law of tithing? Christ said, "Take no thought for the morrow," but to seek the kingdom of heaven; and then promises that the things needed shall be added. Will we doubt God's ability to keep his promises? or will we, in view of the fact that he has commanded us, do otherwise? What will we answer, those of us who have entered into an everlasting covenant with him? we who have told the world we know him to be an unchangeable God?

Brethren, let us press onward. Let us see that the work we love so well is not longer hindered, or its progress detained for want of our doing our whole duty. Let us lift ourselves from the sin that doth so easily beset us. Let us look on the mistakes of the past with care, that we do not repeat them. Let us arouse ourselves from our present, selfish condition, to a mighty united effort to support the cause we love so well. Let us show ourselves worthy of the confidence that has been placed in us, never ceasing in the conflict for his work, and it alone. When we look about and see a few heads white with the frost of time, having grown old and feeble in battling for the cause, and also think of the many that have passed away, some in the field, shall we disgrace the cause they have so far advanced, shall we leave the burden on a few, a burden that they now are not able to bear, with its increasing weight? Brethren, let us from this day forward put forth an effort that becomes a people of God's choice. Let us be indeed a people striving diligently to do our whole duty. Let us step forward with united and determined effort. Let us every one take it upon ourselves to see that the cause shall not suffer delay for want of financial support; and ever lean on the One who has so charitably promised us our reward. Ever praying for the welfare of God's people.

Of General Interest

RECENT PARALLELS TO THE MIRACLE OF PENTECOST.

At times in the history of the Christian church, the desire has sprung up, that the so-called "gifts of the Spirit," prophecy and "speaking with tongues," for which the primitive church was noted, be renewed again. This desire was always coupled with the thought that it was only the fault of the church if these gifts disappeared, and that this was brought about by the worldliness of the church and the lack of spiritual fervor and life. Such views and desires have then brought about occurrences similar to those stated in the New Testament. As examples of such movements, to renew the "gifts of the Spirit," I mention the Montanism in the second century and the Irvingites or the Catholic Apostolic Church, as they called themselves, in the thirties of the last century.

Similar occurrences happened again last year in Germany in certain circles of the Gemeinschaftsbewegung, a pietistic movement to awaken more religious fervor and belief in the German State Church again.

The occurrences are very interesting from the psychological standpoint and also because they furnish a better interpretation of all those New Testament passages treating of the "speaking with tongues" (for it is of this alone I will speak) than all commentaries combined. Take up any commentary to find out what the "speaking with tongues" was, and after reading through pages and pages of different views cited, you will be about as enlightened as you were at the start.

I base my report upon two members of the Christliche Welt, March 12 and 19, 1908, a German liberal religious paper, which gives extracts from the reports of eye-witnesses as they appeared in different pamphlets and daily papers, and also extracts from pamphlets and papers circulated among those communities in which the renewed gift of speaking with tongues occurred.

I shall not quote the accounts of the different eye-witnesses on the character of the religious meetings in which the "gift of tongues" reappeared. These reports tell about such meetings in Kassel and its vicinity and other places in Germany. The character of the meetings according to these reports was generally that of a genuine old-fashioned revival and camp-meeting such as all are acquainted with in this country. There was much fervent praying, emotional singing, admonitory addresses, followed by joyous clapping of hands, shoutings, groanings, stammerings, confessions of sins, etc. People fell to the ground and struck themselves with wild gestures. Some had visions and believed they saw the blood of Christ flowing; women embraced each other and shouted: "I have found the Lord Jesus." Others cast off articles of luxury, laying them upon the platform, and having thus renounced the sin of vanity joined hands in a religious dance. Everywhere reigned religious frenzy and hypnotic influence. But the most peculiar part of all this exaltation was the reappearance of speaking with tongues. Accompanied by strong convulsions of the body and nervous excitations, falling down upon the floor, first one, then more, broke out into inarticulate and unintelligible sounds, which formed words, then short sentences. The first impetus to this speaking with tongues among those people was given by two Norwegian young women who were brought to Kassel by an evangelist by the name of H. Dallmeyer. One of them had the gift of speaking with tongues and the other of interpreting them. Wherever they went the same phenomena appeared. One witness believes that he heard a sentence like this: "Shello mo dal bad bad nots hikrei." Another this sentence: "Sangela singela sing sing, mangala mangala mang mang." A third describes the sound he heard as reminding one of the Polish language, because of many consonant combinations, tsch, rz, and tz. A philologist belonging to the society who is acquainted with fifteen languages, thinks that he heard a simple uneducated man speak Spanish and Provençal. Before the speaking with tongues starts, as reported, a peculiar hissing and gnashing of teeth is heard.

The words and sentences spoken of course need interpretation. This is done either by the speakers themselves or by others. Here are some examples: "You deceivers, you bow with the knees but not with the heart!—Who does not depart from sin is damned.—All people of the earth live in whoredom, gluttony, drinking, pride, and avarice; I am a holy God. They will cry: You mountains cover us, but there will be no escape. The storm is coming, soon there will be a decision.—There are people here who have stolen apples, who have taken money when in military service; who have not paid their bills. The whole hall is full of thieves. I will reveal more yet, I will cut sharper yet, I will write your sins upon your foreheads.—You still love your gold and your cow and your horse more than me. Do you not know that he searches hearts and reins and knows everything that you think this minute?—There are some here who are bound to the flesh."

Any one of course will say that these revelations contain nothing very peculiar and important. About this later.

The speaking with tongues also occurs in singing. Some say that entirely unmusical voices suddenly sing all right, that even while singing a change of voice occurs, that one who sings soprano suddenly sings alto. Yes, some have even been reported to have performed chorus-singing in four parts.

A preacher by the name of Paul, who publishes a paper, Sancitification, tells how he received the gift of singing in tongues. (No. 110, November, 1907, of his paper. Bramstedt Bros., Elmshorn.) He says: "A great number of hymns and melodies were given to me. Heaven must be overrich in songs. But what I spoke and sang, I could not understand, since I had not yet received the gift of interpretation. But instead I received another remarkable gift. I could state that I sang in tongues well-known church-hymns. I sang the song "Lasst mich gehen," thus:

*"Shua ea, shua ea
o tschi biro ti ra pea akki lungo tari fungo u li bara ti ra tungo latshi bungo ti tu to."*

"Any one can see," says Paul, "how remarkably these words rhyme. And what is more remarkable, there is more rhyme in this song in tongues than in the German words. (!) When I made this discovery, I could not but praise God."

In regard to the interpreters of tongues we are told that some see before them the letter or writing which contain the interpretation; others hear the interpretation; again others understand the dark sayings directly. It sometimes happens though that a saying can not be solved.

How do the speakers with tongues come to this peculiar ability?

We are told that a speaker with tongues tells a fifteen-year-old girl she will also receive this gift. And sure enough, in the next meeting her tongue suddenly breaks out in the wonderful language. Even at the home the girl can not refrain from speaking in tongues. But not all get this gift so suddenly. Some must pray and wait for it long. We are told in their pamphlets that an American, Barratt, had to wait not less than thirty-nine days for the supernatural gift, and that he wrestled in prayer for it uninterruptedly one day for twelve hours. And what did he experience in those thirty-nine days? One day "something remarkable took place" in his jaws, but the real speaking did not yet set in. Another time he had "a wonderful sensation throughout the whole body." He then begged "a spirit-endowed Mrs. D. to lay her hands on him," but "the power" did not come. "Soon after this," he relates, "I experienced the previously noted convulsive motions in the muscles of the throat and my jaws took a firm hold, only stronger than formerly. Then after another meeting he once more prayed till late at night. Again he besought, and this time one of the brethren, for intercession and laying on of hands. He says, "Exactly in that moment the power of God began to work in my spirit. I fell in a swoon like Daniel (Daniel 10: 8) in the face of this divine revelation. About half past twelve o'clock I sat directly upon the floor. Now my jaws and tongue were loosened, but no sounds came." Finally, after he had asked a Norwegian brother and the above-mentioned Mrs. D. for further intercession, "he succeeded" in speaking with another tongue.

A tilemaker in Gross-Almerode (a town in the vicinity of Kassel, where religious meetings were also held) first experienced a spasmodic feeling in his neck which pulled his head backwards. He had to lie down on a bench; then finally the speaking with tongues broke out in him. A shoemaker of the same place received the gift after a deep, fervent prayer during the night; five times he spoke loudly with tongues; and then with a blissful feeling he went to rest.

But the most interesting are the observations which preacher Paul in Steglitz near Berlin made about his own case before he could speak with tongues. Paul was so impressed by the news that in America and Norway the power to speak with tongues had again arisen, that he went to Norway. What he saw there moved him to make a special study of the first letter to the Corinthians which speaks of the gift of tongues. From this he gained the conviction that he also should receive this gift. But when he read an article in an American missionary paper (Methodist), which said that nobody could know in truth whether he really had experienced "Pentecost" till he had spoken with tongues, he was certain that he himself, who had been baptized with spirit and fire, must also speak with tongues. From now on "he strove with his whole heart" towards that which God had in store for him. He patiently waited till God would give him the gift. He writes:

"I could not expect any help in this matter from any man, nor did I wish to. I did not therefore ask that any one should lay his hands upon me, as the apostles did. No, there was God's promise in his word, and he himself was there to fulfill his promise in me; and thus it came that I hungered and thirsted for the gift. I can not describe how strong this desire became."

In this frame of mind he held "nights of prayer" with other brethren. Meanwhile his lower jaw was now and then "touched so that it moved."

Finally the long desired thing happened: "On the 15th of September, in the forenoon-meeting, the power of the Lord came upon me and continued its work on my body throughout the whole day, as often as I was in the meeting. . . . In the evening we (seven brethren together) had another prayer-meeting. Between ten and eleven o'clock the effect on my mouth was so strong that my lower jaw, tongue, and lips moved as if to speak, without any effort on my part. I was fully conscious at the time, entirely at rest in the Lord, deeply happy, and I let all this happen without being able to speak. Even if I attempted to pray aloud I could not, for none of my German words fitted into the position of the mouth. Likewise no words of any other language I knew fitted the positions which my mouth now assumed. I thus saw that my mouth was speaking silently in a strange tongue; and I perceived that it would yet be given me to utter words correspondingly. About eleven o'clock most of the gathering returned to their homes, especially such as had to go to work early in the morning; and thus there only remained with me two brethren, one of whom was Reverend H. When he prayed my mouth again began to move, and I noticed that all I lacked was the ability to give sounds to the movements of my lips. I looked up to the Lord that he might vouchsafe it and soon I was moved to speak. But now something wonderful happened. It seemed as if a new organ was forming in my lungs which brought about sounds that would fit into the position of my mouth. Since the movements of the mouth were very rapid, this had to happen very quickly. In this way a wonderful language arose in sounds that I had never spoken before. I had the impression according to the tones, that it might be Chinese. Then came an entirely different language with an entirely different position of the mouth and wonderful sounds. Because we had just had missionary meetings that day on behalf of China and the South Sea Islands I naturally thought it might be a South Sea language. I do not know how long I spoke thus—surely some minutes. Then I had to break out in German in praise and worship of my God. I was sitting during all this, nevertheless my body was shaken by a great power, though in nowise unpleasant or painful.”—Reverend A Kampmeier, in Open Court, August, 1908.

What Shall My New Home Be?

The home of my youth was the home of perfection,
Where song-birds enchanted and wild flowers grew,
While every new trail was a path for inspection,
Which led to ripe berries no other ones knew.
This home that I loved is far distant back yonder;
No more in this life shall I see it as then;
But what shall my new home be, I wonder,
When I'm called to depart from the dwellings of men.

The loves and the joys and the glories of nature,
Which thrilled my young life in the days that are past,
Seem now but a horoscope cast of the future,
When perennial bliss will be certain at last.
Will the home up above in the mansions of glory,
Excel in delights those I knew as a child,
And the eternal youth of song and of story
Be fair as the worlds in mythology styled?

I know that my home where all Saints are united,
And our own loving Savior rules justly and kind,
Will be sweeter by far than the home which delighted
The swift passing years to our childhood assigned,
The songs of the ransomed, the glories transcendent,
Of the life that's eternal in regions divine,
Will repay all our griefs in a home most resplendent,
And bless for eternity your soul and mine.

A STRANGER AT THE DOOR.

Behold, a Stranger at the door!
He gently-knocks, has knocked before:
Has waited long, is waiting still;
You treat no other friend so ill.
O lovely attitude! he stands
With melting heart and laden hands;
O matchless kindness! and he shows
This matchless kindness to his foes.
But will he prove a friend indeed?
He will; the very friend you need;
The Friend of sinners—yes, 'tis he,
With garments dyed on Calvary.
Rise, touched with gratitude divine;
Turn out his enemy and thine,
That soul-destroying monster, sin,
And let the heavenly Stranger in.

TO WHOM DOES THE CHILD BELONG? NO. 5. TO THE STATE.

The public-school system of our land is a tacit recognition of the fact that the child belongs to the state, and that he must therefore be educated for his duties as a citizen. The first duty of the state is to recognize that the child belongs primarily to himself, and all true education should tend to develop his individual powers; that education is not cramming in, but leading out, and that physical education is the basis or foundation upon which must rest both mental and moral power. Disraeli said: "Public health is public wealth." It is therefore not only duty but policy for the state to guard the health of its children, first by enacting sanitary laws for the land in general, for cities, houses, schools, in particular, and then by the enforcement of these laws.

Ignorance of sanitary law in a mountain home in Pennsylvania resulted in the Plymouth typhoid fever epidemic. Neglect of sanitary precautions in Jacksonville, Florida, resulted in the epidemic of yellow fever. Indifference to the report of a "death trap" in a school-house in Indiana was followed by an epidemic of diphtheria among the children.

It is the duty of the state to see that no such slaughter of the innocents results through ignorance, carelessness, or indifference. School hygiene is a subject worthy of the profoundest thought of educators, not only in the sanitary condition of buildings and their ventilation, but in the consideration of individual needs of pupils. One has but to notice the stooped and crooked figures of many of our school children to become painfully aware of the fact that the state is not competently caring for her own. Desks and seats are often unsuited to the sizes of their occupants, and limbs are bent and chests are cramped and shoulders rounded thereby.

The habitual attitude of the body has its effect on character. The soldierly attitude not only typifies courage, but, in a certain sense creates it. If we desire to raise citizens who shall be upright, courageous, and self-respecting, we must insist upon the children's being trained to the habitual attitude which expresses these attributes. The cramped chest, the rounded shoulders, the head deflected forward from the normal upright position, is the figure of a slave, not a free-man, and the mental state follows the physical attitude. If we as a nation desire to be a ruling force in the world, we must educate our children to bear themselves as those who respect themselves, and are capable of self-control, while we guard against the attitude of arrogance and insolence.

So much writing is done in school nowadays that it is almost impossible to find a child not harmed in some way by sitting in a cramped position, more especially as the writing is all done by one hand. If children were taught to write equally well with either hand, the danger would be lessened. Teachers, whose hobby is discipline, ignore the natural tendency to activity in their pupils, and demand an immobility that is not only physically but nervously disadvantageous. To such teachers the quietest school is the best disciplined, and the martinet eye is watchful of every movement. If a scholar raises eyes from the page, the command goes forth, "Look on your book; turn your face this way; put your elbow off the desk," until in very consternation the child is transformed into a machine in which every spring and wheel that is under the teacher's reach is made motionless, and as a consequence thought power is deadened, stupidity results, and the child is then blamed for indifference or carelessness when he is no more to blame than an engine would be for refusing to run when the motive power was withheld.

In one school in Ohio, if a child has not a seatmate, the teacher places a pile of books in the unoccupied seat so that he by no possibility shall move out of his prescribed place. The kindergarten recognizes in its minglings of play with study that the child-nature demands activity; but the child comes to the public school from a life of unrestrained freedom, and is at once put into the pedagogical straight jacket, and punished if he rebels. The physical needs of the children are not unfrequently ignored by the teachers. The child gives the sign that asks permission to leave the room, the teacher denies the request, and the child sits in physical discomfort, unable to fix his mind upon his lessons, and, worse still, a condition arises which may result either in acute or chronic ailments of serious import.

The teacher will say, "If we granted all such requests, our children would impose on us." It is true we must admit this possibility, but the teacher whose authority is that of awakening in the child the inward motive of right-doing, will not be imposed upon as will the autocratic teacher whose own will is the only law the children are expected to recognize. Tyranny begets fear, and fear is the parent of duplicity.

Americanitis is the new name for nervousness, and nervousness is generated by unhygienic school methods. The very repression of which I have been speaking is a means of creating nervousness. The force that should have expended itself in muscular motion becomes a source of nerve-irritation, and perverseness, sleeplessness, headache, and nervous twitchings often manifest this.

Boys, in their more active out-of-school life, are less liable to permanent injury than girls, who are expected to be more quiet and decorous. We gladly hail all outdoor sports for girls. We welcome joyfully, too, all forms of manual training connected with public schools. Their benefits are manifold. They not only furnish an outlet for surplus energy, but they are direct educators for good citizenship. They have a moral value that is not given by theoretical knowledge.

They teach truthfulness; for to follow a straight line is to be true. In the turning, pattern-making, wood-carving, and carpentry—studies as well suited to girls as boys—are taught persistence, accuracy, judgment, truth, patience, precision, honesty (for only honest work succeeds), the perseverance that triumphs over repeated failures, the high ideal that will not be satisfied with less than the best. That pupil has not thrown away his time who has worked weeks to bring a plane surface to absolute perfection. He will be a better citizen therefor.

The system of emulation prevalent in schools, of studying to pass examinations, "to pass regents to be promoted to a higher grade," as if the grades were the eternal verities, is not a system calculated to develop good citizenship; and we can see its effects in the struggle for supremacy regardless of means employed, in the fierce strife to reach the world's glittering prizes of wealth and position without considering fitness or worth, in political corruption, and a general lowering of moral standards.

If the boy at school finds that trickery and dishonesty are rewarded by promotions, while honest plodding is unrecognized, he receives a lesson that will probably be put in practice when he becomes a scholar in the larger school of active life. If the every-day, faithful work in recitations counts for nothing because the timid child nervously fails in examinations, and daily failures are forgotten because the self-confident pupil by a little cramming manages to "pass," both scholars have been taught that successful shams are more to be desired than honesty, and the state will feel the effects of the teaching, and the strong fabric of true statesmanship will degenerate into a tissue of schemes and falsehoods.

If we as a people realized the value of the public school as an educator of citizens, and not merely a place where individuals are crammed with book knowledge, we should demand of teachers that all methods employed in training our children should be such as would develop honesty, truth, purity, and self-control, even though they fail to teach the alphabet or the multiplication table.

Doctor W. T. Harris says: "Every man has two selves, the great self of humanity and the institutional world, and the little self of individuality." Unfortunately it is this little self that receives most of the cultivation in our schools.

In one of our Ohio schools for girls, on the Mt. Holyoke plan, the idea made prominent in the household duties is, not that they are working so much to get the work done, as that this work gives each girl an opportunity to do daily something for every other inmate of the school, and thus the small duties are given the grace of philanthropy, and the girl grows out of the thought of her little self into an appreciation of the "great self of humanity."—Mary Wood-Allen, M. D., in American Motherhood.

Questions on September Reading.

What does the state recognize in the public school system? What is true education? Of what is physical education the basis? What is the duty of the state regarding the health of its children? What knowledge have we of evils resulting from sanitary conditions? What interest ought we to show in the hygienic conditions of our schools? What are the effects of desks and seats not suited to the size of their occupants? What effect does the physical attitude have upon the mind? What injuries may result from cramped positions in school? In what way are kindergarten methods superior to the ordinary discipline of the common school? How may physical evil to the child be avoided by the coöperation of parents with teachers? What may be accomplished by the teacher who awakens the motive of right-doing in the children? What may result from over-repression of physical activity? What may outdoor sports accomplish for girls? How is manual training on educator for good citizenship? How is the present system of school examinations detrimental to good citizenship? How will the state be affected by the failure to recognize the honest, faithful daily work of students? What should be the great purpose of education? In what sense has each of us two selves? What high ideal is represented in the work of the school mentioned?

Letter Department

JONESPORT, Maine, August 6, 1908.

Dear Saints: As it has been a long time since you have heard directly from this part of the Lord's vineyard, I think it may be well for me to break the silence, and inform you that the campfire is still kept blazing, yet not with such brilliancy as in former years.

What are the reasons? Many. One would judge from the numerical strength of our branch that more could be accomplished. But when you learn that it is widely scattered, and many of its members aged and infirm, their days of usefulness ended (yet strong in the faith, and waiting with patience and hope for deliverance from this earth life, to join the innumerable host gone before; while others have fought the good fight, finished their course, kept the faith, and have entered the portals of paradise, but the influence of their lives remains and can not be erased from the hearts of the living), and still others who have grown careless and indifferent concerning the work, leaving few, comparatively, to use the oars as it were against the tide, you will not wonder that it is not like days of yore. Nevertheless, I think the few have the work at heart, and never once think "to cease the conflict, till the summons home be heard"; but through storm and sunshine ever have held and will hold fast to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life.

Saints, you who are situated in large branches, that are fully officered, and all in line of duty, with talent displayed on every hand, just imagine if you can the many branches with but one officer—perhaps two, and one of them so situated that to perform his duty is impossible, with no material at hand from which to ordain others, and you can catch a glimpse of the condition of your less favored brethren scattered throughout the earth. Then let your hearts well up in gratitude to God for your blessed privileges, and also breathe a prayer in behalf of those who are struggling against many discouragements; but who, by the help of God do not intend to yield; but "for the vict'ry we will fight, or perish in the field."

When I read in the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign of the progress of the work along different lines, and of the army of young men and women coming to the front as efficient workers for the Master, my heart goes out in thanksgiving to God, with an earnest longing to be moving Zionward. Workers are needed everywhere, and I feel the importance of occupying upon the little talent intrusted to me, and sacrificing for the spread of the truth; and I am willing to follow where my Master leads.

During the last two years Bro. Bullard has labored in this vicinity, and Aroostook, with good results. He has opened up new places, and found friends and foes to the work, which is the common lot of all missionaries. As bishop he has presented the law of tithing in a plain and forceful manner, so that none can be excused with the plea of ignorance along that line. Several of the Saints, after learning their duty, made an inventory, and paid their tithing. Enemies of the work reported that Bro. Bullard scared them by an assumed revelation, pocketed the money, and went west to invest in a home; but being accustomed to such falsehoods, it did not jar us or him a particle. Opposition strengthens the true Saint.

Within the last year our hearts have been made to rejoice by the accession of nine to our branch, who are proving true and loyal to the work; all sisters except one. The men stand aloof, thinking, perhaps, that they have no need of repentance.

Last year, Bro. U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, made us a short visit, which resulted in much good in various ways. Seeing our need of local help, he recommended Bro.

S. F. Cushman coming to our aid; so on September 6, 1907, he came into our midst and is still with us, presiding over the branch, and trying to adjust matters so that better conditions may prevail. He is surely a shepherd to the flock, a wise counselor, giving words of comfort and strength in times of sickness, sorrow, and death, also encouraging the Saints to a higher life. We hope he may remain with us for some time to come; and we hope to manifest in our lives the sacrificing spirit exemplified in his.

Although we may feel cast down at times, yet we are not forsaken. God manifests himself by his Spirit when we go to our secret places for communion and prayer; also in our social service, when the few gather together to render thanksgiving and praise unto him who is the author and finisher of our faith; and the promise that Christ gave his disciples, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you: not as the world giveth, give I unto you," is verified.

Our conference at Beals last June, was a source of spiritual comfort and encouragement to the Saints assembled, the Spirit being present at all the services in a marked degree, especially the social service Sunday morning, where testimony and prayer was given by inspiration, also a prophecy delivered by Bro. Bullard containing admonition, reproof, and blessings on condition, to those present. With Bro. Bullard's consent I send this to be published, hoping that it may be beneficial to many, by stirring up to duty, to improve neglected talent, and to embrace present opportunities. Hoping that we may endure to the end, I remain,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. E. M. WALKER.

PROPHECY GIVEN THROUGH BISHOP BULLARD.

The word of the Lord burdens me; I will now try to deliver it: Thus saith the Spirit unto you my people, to you who have assembled yourselves to worship the Lord this beautiful Sabbath morning. The Lord even your Master is willing to bless you, if you will prepare your hearts to receive his blessing. And that you may receive the blessing and help you need, put away frivolity, pride, and lightness of speech far from you, that your walk may be acceptable before the Lord. Refrain from all those things that are unprofitable to a saintly life.

Remember, oh, remember, you are living in the hour of God's judgment, as well as in the day of his blessing. Heed, oh, heed this warning to you this morning, and turn to the Lord with full purpose of heart. Study the works of the church, and the word and law of the Lord, and thus inform yourselves of those things required of you.

Behold, wickedness is on the increase, and the earth is under a curse, and the snares of evil are thickly set for the unwary. The Lord demands a true-hearted service of his people, a walk of uprightness and of purity before him. Yea, you fathers and mothers, neglect not your family devotions. Erect and establish a family altar in your homes; gather your children around you, and teach them the principles of truth. Warn them against common evils existing among them, that they may be furnished with knowledge and strength, helpful to them in life.

Many have brought sorrow to their life because of a lack of these things, and because of neglecting their devotions and family duties. The heart of your Master yearns after his people. How many times his loving hands have been outstretched toward you in blessings and protection. How often would I have placed my arms of protection around you, had you hearkened unto my counsel, saith the Spirit. Yea, I would have gathered you together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wing for protection.

There are those present who shall be made to sorrow. Yea, some shall be clothed in sackcloth and mourning, for disease shall claim many, and the mighty arm of the Lord shall be withdrawn in its protection from among you; for my judgments shall be poured out.

To you who are outside the fold and church of my choice—you, who have heard my servants declare the gospel in its power many times, and have not hearkened unto the warnings and promises of God: You shall be left alone, ALONE, without light, without help, in dismay and fear. Your hearts shall sink within you, when the mighty billows shall roll and surge around you, when the terrible thunders shall crash, and the vivid lightnings shall flash through the heavens, and these rocks shall rend and crumble. My hand shall not protect you in the hour of peril unless you turn to Him who is mighty to save. Therefore turn to the Lord and do his commandments, and thus bring blessing and protection to you, saith the Spirit. Amen.

GWYNFA, LLANSAMLET, Wales, July 20, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have great pleasure once more to write a word or two to the HERALD respecting the latter-day work in this locality.

The Llansamlet Branch is in a fair condition at present; the officers and members are doing all they can to advance the cause of Christ in this place. The most of the members are faithful in attending meetings, and are blessed with the power of the gospel. The gift of healing the sick has been manifested here on many occasions; some of the members have received an immediate recovery from illness under the hands of the elders.

We have commenced preaching out in the open air at Llansamlet and Skewen, and we are having big crowds, and it seems that the people are becoming more interested in our doctrine than ever they have been before. We are having splendid attention, and I hope that much good will be accomplished by the preaching of the word.

I am longing to see the day dawn when the work of God again will flourish and grow rapidly among the people of Wales. The harvest is great and the workers are few at present. Let us ask the Lord of the harvest to send more inspired servants to the field. We require missionaries in Wales that can preach in the Welsh language to the people. That has been a difficulty in the past. The most of the missionaries from America were unable to preach in the vernacular.

The most injurious thing to the work here in the past has been the spirit of emigration. I hope that the missionaries will show their disapproval of the same. The Welsh people no doubt have been blessed with more gifts of the gospel than any other nation under the sun, and I think that some of my Welsh brethren and sisters that are at present on the other side of the ocean from here will confirm this statement.

The British Isles Mission conference is to be held at the city of Cardiff this year, commencing August 1, and we are hoping that we shall have a profitable time. May God bless the efforts of his children in advancing the cause of Christ among all the nations of the earth, is the earnest desire of your colaborer in Christ,
DAVID LEWIS.

SKEWEN, July 15, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have not yet contributed to your columns, but I feel impressed to write to-day. I am a young member in the church, but I have been blessed remarkably during the few months I have been a member. I have both felt and witnessed the power of God on many occasions.

But the power that I wish to tell you about particularly was in our Saints' fellowship-meeting held in the house of Sr. M. Collin, of the Llansamlet Branch. Sr. Collin had been unwell for a few days previous to Wednesday, July 8, and she suffered acute pain internally. There was a remarkable power of the Spirit present, when Sr. Collin arose in meeting and explained her condition, and asked the elders to administer to her. She said that she had been healed before and she was sure that God's power was the same to-day. Elders D. Lewis and H. Ellis complied with her request by anointing her with oil and laying their hands on her. Bro. Ellis prayed over her, with the result that she was instantaneously healed. Every one in the meeting testified to the power that they felt. I, myself, have been endowed with the power of God on numerous occasions, but never more than that night. We should each one try to live our lives day by day, that we may in sickness adhere to the ordinances of the church and manifest our faith in our heavenly Father, that we may receive his blessings. I myself realize that there is a power and divinity with the Saints that I have never experienced elsewhere, although I have been associated with other so-called religious bodies.

I ask the prayers of the Saints on my behalf that I may be faithful and that I may be able to do something for the Master.

Your brother and colaborer for Christ,
3 Ormes Road. F. SIMMONS.

KEOKUK, Iowa, July 21, 1908.

Dear Editor: We are having fine weather and crops are good. Our little branch is still progressing. Four have lately been baptized. Two of these were Sr. Brown and daughter. Sr. Emma Brown is a daughter of old Bro. John Moore, who resided at Montrose for many years. Many of the elders will recognize the name, as it was one of the stopping-places. Sr. Brown's grandfather was one of the brethren who worked on the Nauvoo temple. When the Saints were driven from Nauvoo he came with his family across the river and located at Montrose.

We had almost given up Sr. Brown coming in, although she kept saying she was going to obey soon. Sunday, a week ago, her youngest daughter, Opha, came up to me and asked to be baptized. We arranged for the baptizing and it was easy to see her mother was having a struggle. After Opha was buried with Christ, the mother followed and her oldest daughter, Grace, was very nearly convinced to surrender, but said in the near future she was going to obey the heavenly call. Miss Grace is our Sunday-school secretary and we hope she will soon be added to our number.

Sr. Howell was a member of the Baptist Church, but became dissatisfied. Her parents were members of our church in Nauvoo. There have been four Utah elders there trying to convert her and presenting her with a Book of Mormon and other works. But the Lord gave her light.

The other one was my boy, who is eight years old. We were glad to see him wanting to be baptized at the proper time. My greatest desire is that he may always be ready to heed the Lord's command, but hope the Lord will not call him into the ministry. Not because the ministry is not a noble work, but because of the many things that are brought to bear. I fear he may not be able to withstand and bear the burden.

Last Sunday we noticed in our congregation Grandma Bogue and her grandson, Bro. Farmer, who has become famous as a singer. There is a long article in the paper as to his success and the indication is he will soon reach the highest notch. He will soon sail for Germany to finish his work and to make a tour of that country. Bro. Farmer was baptized at Park Bluff reunion several years ago.

We will soon organize a Religio here.

Bro. Roy Young has left for home, after being here about three weeks. The brother labored faithfully while here and in other places. We hope the time will soon come when he will be sent to proclaim the gospel message. But how many useful men have to remain home because God's children fail to obey his law. May God speed the day when we will all be fully converted.

Your brother,

A. C. ANDERSON.

GOREVILLE, Illinois, August 5, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am traveling with our gospel tent and am having large, orderly, attentive congregations. The last three weeks I have been at Tunnel Hill, where I baptized seven, all grown people, and left others very near the kingdom. These make seventeen I have baptized since I came home from General Conference.

Monday, August 4, we came here, commenced meetings that night, and are having good crowds so far. This is where Elder T. C. Kelley and Daniel B. Turney held a debate some three or four years ago. We hope to hold forth here two or three weeks, or until it will be time to go to our Southeastern Illinois reunion to be held at Brush Creek from September 4 to 13.

We never felt better spiritually or more encouraged in the work. One thing only that worries us: the harvest is great, laborers few, and many calls for preaching. But wife writes, "I haven't a cent in the house, and haven't received my last two months' allowance. Am going on the third month." Other families are in the same condition. Our Bishop's agent's address is Thomsonville, Franklin County, Illinois. Saints, try to send in your tithes and offerings so he can receipt you and supply the families of the missionaries, who are solely dependent on you and him for their support, so we as missionaries may be free to go on in our work.

In gospel bonds,

F. L. SAWLEY.

BLISSFIELD, Michigan, July 23, 1908.

Dear Herald: To say you are a welcome guest at our home would not do justice to our feelings. We are more than pleased when you make your weekly visit, as the Ensign, Glad Tidings, and yourself are the only preachers here. It seems almost impossible to get the work opened up in this place; we can get a hall, but rent is so high, and only four here to pay it. If we could get a little help from the outside Saints we might have a two-day meeting, and that would give us an opening here. The hall will cost nine dollars from Friday night until Sunday. We can raise five dollars here among ourselves. I do not want the Saints to think I want to beg, but it is our duty to help the gospel along, and to open new places wherever we can, because we know that this gospel is the power of God unto man, and we may obey it as often as we can, and if we do not try to do our part as to sending it forth to the world, I wonder if we will not be found wanting at the last day. I wish to do all I can, and will whenever I have the opportunity. I want my husband to hear this gospel again so he will have a chance to obey it, as I know that is all that lacks in him. He was very much disappointed that he did not get to hear Bro. Scott when he was here last spring, but he was away from home and could not get to hear him.

Dear brothers and sisters, it is a great and glorious thing for us to say that we are in the church and kingdom of God, and we should be ever ready with heart and hand to further the cause to a dying world.

I wish to say to the sister who had a letter in HERALD of July 15, in Huntington, West Virginia, about a question she wanted the Saints to answer in regard to Paul's writings. You will find it in Paul's letter to the Corinthian brethren, 2 Corinthians 12:2-4, where Paul is speaking of being caught up to the third heaven, and again he was caught up into paradise. How glorious it is for us to say and know that we have something that the world has not, neither can it receive it, and neither can it take it away, so the Savior said. We should rejoice, and so I do when I can say I know that we have the gospel law of God which has stood the test since the world began, and will stand the test when the earth is burned with a fervent heat, and the heavens come together like a scroll. Come, brethren, let us be more faithful in the future than in the past, doing whatsoever our hands find to do, so when the great change comes all will be ready to enter into the marriage feast of the Lamb, for it will be the greatest wedding we ever attended, if we live so as to be able to enter in.

Pray for me, brothers and sisters, that I may be one that will be at that marriage feast. Yours for the upbuilding of the cause of Christ.

HARDIN, Missouri, July 21, 1908.

Editors Herald: Bro. Bootman and I came to this place yesterday. We expect to commence work as soon as the tent gets here, which will be in a day or two. Bro. Howard and family live here and will assist us all they possibly can in the meeting, for they are made up just that way. So far, I like this field fine. Have been kindly received everywhere I have been.

Bro. Bootman has baptized several since conference in this field and probably others will be baptized before the year closes.

We just closed a tent-meeting at Kidder last week, with not so much interest manifested on the part of the people as we would like to see. Yet we did what we could and will leave the result with God. The few Saints living in that vicinity took a deep interest and stood by us nobly in the effort.

Last Sunday week about sixty Saints visited us with baskets well filled with the good things of the land and we had "dinner all day and preaching on the ground" (a Southern phrase). We certainly had a fine time, Bro. Bootman and myself anyway. Saints were there from the branches at Kingston, Far West, Delano, and Cameron. Well, the sad part of such meetings is they come to an end and we have to part with the Saints who made it so enjoyable for us.

I spent the 4th of July at home, the first in ten years. I certainly had a good time. Sr. Henson and I took in the picnic from the first number on the program to the last. In our sixteen years of association this is the first picnic we ever attended together. Well, what of that? We have had sixteen years of picnicking together, that is, whenever I happened to be at home. But we are hoping for a thousand years of picnicking after a while without any break in the time.

What a wonderful time we are having in the world! I wish we had more power for good, and could hasten the completion of the work. We must be patient.

With a prayer for the welfare of the work, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

E. L. HENSON.

STEELETON, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, Canada,

Dear Herald: I have often felt refreshed and blessed in spirit by reading the testimonies and fine articles from time to time in our church papers; and I feel like writing a few lines to your valuable paper at this time. I feel indeed that it is a privilege to serve God in our humble ways of life; for indeed our heavenly Father has been kind and merciful to me in the past and in the present.

To-night is our Religio meeting night; but I am under the painful necessity of remaining in the house on account of a spell of sickness, and I do think it a privilege to be able to meet with the Saints in Religio, and to hear the fine stories of God's goodness read over, and talk of the people of this land of America. We have a good Book of Mormon teacher, Bro. McMindoe, who takes an interest in teaching. We also have a fine map to help us in our studies. The Saints here have worked hard in the past few years, have bought a nice lot, and are now building a church on it. Hope to be able to worship in it sometime this fall. The five families of Saints here have done well, although meeting quite a few setbacks. They are still plodding on, and even now quite a number of outsiders and friends are asking the question, "When will you be ready to open your new church? We are anxious to hear what kind of doctrine you preach." This shows us that, here as elsewhere, the laborers are few compared to the field which is white to the harvest. Men everywhere would be glad to receive this beautiful gospel of Jesus Christ, if only they heard it continually preached to them from time to time. Thus we believe that a great work will yet be accomplished in this town, and that God will yet bless the humble efforts put forth by the few officers of this branch.

All concerned in this glorious latter-day gospel, here, are doing their best to keep the gospel flag flying. We have long walks to place of meeting and Sunday-school; yet we are blessed with the sweet spirit of peace, and enjoy God's blessings for the effort made. Every time I enter the house of meeting, Sunday morning, at our Sr. Miller's, the beautiful words of the poet, "How sweet to my soul is communion with Saints," appeal to me, and make me think, If the sweet communion of Saints is realized in its fullest sense, when we are praising God in meeting on Sabbath days, and in prayer-meetings, how glorious will be the gathering of Saints at Zion, when Jesus will come to reign with us. May I and mine be found worthy to see that day, is my prayer. And my prayers are at all times for the ministry, and the children of God.

Yours for the truth,

MRS. P. WELLS.

POLLOCK, Missouri, July 13, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have no branch here at present. There was one here at one time, but it has been scattered. I have been preaching at different places in this part for some time. Yesterday I preached morning and evening. I have monthly appointments at the union church six miles west of my house, and a monthly appointment at the Aspach Schoolhouse.

My business has kept me from home the most of the time in the last three years, and when not at home I have been in Montana and Idaho. As my wife's people live near Princeton, Missouri, we celebrated the Fourth at that place. On arriving there on the third I learned there would be Latter Day Saint meeting there Sunday. I looked around and saw an advertisement to that effect, but it did not say "reorganized," but stated they had been sent out by Independence conference, so I sniffed Brighamites at once. Having no books with me, I drove five miles to my wife's brother, got the books needed, fixed for war, and when meeting-time came I was on hand. After one of seven elders that were there had preached, then my time came, and I asked to tell the people why they believed in polygamy, blood-atonement, and Adam-god theory, explaining what that heresy meant, and how they practiced it, using about thirty minutes' time. Then their spokesman got up and denied blood-atonement, and did not say why they believed in polygamy and Adam-god, and went on at a great rate about me not being a gentleman, and said that that was the way they had found all the Josephites. That was the way they said Elder White had abused them at Trenton, and falsified just as I had done. Then when he quit I again got up and told the people maybe they did not know what it took to be a gentleman in the eyes of a Brighamite, and then read an extract from one of Brigham's sermons, where it said that they had elders that could cut the cards with the smartest shavers, and so on, and told the people that was a gentleman according to Brighamism. And as I read extracts from the Journal of Discourses, and commented on and explained, they got warm under the collar, and could not refrain from stepping up to me and in a round-about way tell me I had lied.

I enjoyed good liberty, and, at times, the people applauded me. It was my first attempt to meet that heresy, and I handled them without any trouble. May God be praised for aid and assistance. I heard such remarks as, "That man was on hands with the goods, and plenty of them"; and, "It was a God-send that that man was here." Some ladies sitting in a buggy a few feet away asked me to step over to the buggy as they would like to shake hands with me. I heard many favorable comments, and left the two Saints that were present rejoicing.

Now I was out of my district, the Northeastern Missouri, so will ask the man in charge of that district to excuse me if I was "butting in."

We challenged each other to debate, but as I could not write anything that they would sign, I do not believe they wanted to debate. The leader's name is John A. Crosby.

In gospel bonds,

F. M. BURCH.

OMAHA, Nebraska, August 9, 1908.

Editors Herald: After a sojourn of six months in different parts of the States, I start to-day for Australia via Vancouver. I had some difficulty in securing a berth, as all were taken two weeks before time to sail; but I managed to get one by paying ten dollars extra.

I have enjoyed my visit at different points very much, and only wish I could remain a little longer to attend some of the reunions in Iowa; but unexpected changes have recently taken place in the Australian Mission that need attention, and so I hasten away without considering my own pleasure. I hope to visit Bro. and Sr. Burton, but the boat fare is too high to go by way of San Francisco.

I find the work in these parts steadily onward in most places, with quite an advancement in the Sunday-school and Religio, and bright prospects ahead. Our progress seems somewhat slow, but when we see the awful division among the other religious people, and their rapid falling off in membership, our faith still keeps bright and our hopes still increase in the ultimate redemption of Zion.

I would earnestly request the Saints to remember the far-off Australian Mission, for our laborers are few and scattered, and the harvest is very great. We need more laborers now. Who will volunteer to come and help us?

Ever praying for the building up of Zion, I am still in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

DETROIT, Texas, July 23, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have moved into a new place where there has never been any preaching and we are trying with all our might to introduce the work into the minds of the people here. Bro. P. B. Bussell came to our rescue and gave us a few good sermons, which have opened the eyes of some, at least. Some say they never heard so much Bible preached before and it is hard for them to believe it is the Bible. Bro. Bussell is an able defender of the truth, though young in the ministry. The Lord is blessing him wonderfully in his work for the cause.

Best wishes for all.

Tennessee and Kentucky Reunion.

Editors Herald: Our reunion convened at Foundry Hill, Tennessee, July 25, 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon. D. E. Tucker and J. M. Stubbart were chosen to take charge, the latter to act as secretary. J. R. McClain and E. A. Erwin, of the missionary force, arrived after the organization was effected. C. L. Snow also came in during the week, but was not able to take part in the preaching, as he has not fully recovered from his recent illness.

The preaching was done by E. A. Erwin, J. R. McClain, D. E. Tucker, and J. M. Stubbart, with a couple of short sermons by M. McFadden. Grace Shupe was chosen organist and M. McFadden chorister.

Bro. Scott Shupe was present part of the time and assisted greatly with his family band. He and seven of his children play on different instruments. His little boy of eight years plays the bass drum.

The preaching was good and well received. The singing was fine and the music excellent. Many enjoyed the spirit and wept for joy. The gift of prophecy in exhortation was enjoyed. The best of feeling prevailed and all who expressed themselves said it was the best reunion ever held in that district.

There was a large attendance of Saints from the district, and at nights and Sundays there were a great many strangers present. On Children's Day there was a very large attendance, and a splendid program was rendered in the forenoon and afternoon under the able direction of Bro. Shupe and led by his band. I judge that over one hundred took part in the march.

The Sunday-school and normal work received due consideration. Two sessions were devoted to normal work, in which J. R. McClain gave a talk on the history and translation of the Bible, and J. M. Stubbart gave a lecture on the duties and qualifications of Sunday-school teachers and officers, and another on the names and authorship of the books of the Bible.

The reunion committee and the Saints at Foundry Hill did nobly in preparing for the reunion and making it pleasant for all who attended. It was decided to hold the next reunion at Foundry Hill, beginning on the last Saturday before the first quarter of the moon in July, 1909. Albert Galamore, Manassa Gore, Joseph Alexander, M. W. Seaton, and John Overcast were chosen the reunion committee for next year. The running of a stand or boarding-tent was left to their discretion and direction. The securing of speakers and music was also left to them.

After the sacrament on Sunday afternoon, J. R. McClain baptized ten who were confirmed at the night meeting. Another young lady was to be baptized Monday by Bro. Tucker, and Bro. McClain was to go some sixty or seventy miles as soon as possible to baptize a lady who attended the reunion, also her husband and daughter.

One young lady joined the church who had never heard a sermon before attending this reunion. She did not know whether she would be permitted to return home or not. It seemed providential that she came to attend with an aunt with whom she has been visiting. She is bright and intelligent and will no doubt do good for the cause of Christ.

J. M. STUBBART.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. and Sr. Lyke, Brooklyn, Iowa: "We are among the isolated number and our papers are the only preachers we have. If any of the elders come this way, we would be pleased to have them stop here."

Bro. Joseph Arber writes that he is holding nightly meetings at Bartlett, Iowa, to crowds somewhat reduced because of heat. Rain needed. Prospects for crops not the best.

Bro. Bert W. Williams, Clarks, Nebraska, writes: "I have been here two years now and talked with the people quite a bit and I haven't found one that knew there were two organizations. They think that the Latter Day Saints are all from Salt Lake City and I doubt if any of our elders could do any good here, as there is a strong Methodist class here, and the people are the happy-go-lucky, don't care sort. Still, I would like it if one of the elders could come here. I would do all I could to help the work along. My house is open to any that come as long as they want to preach the gospel here."

Bro. Ammon White, Trenton, Missouri: "F. C. Keck and self have just closed a successful tent-meeting of twenty days at Trenton. Yesterday we baptized six and organized a Sunday-school of twenty-seven members, with J. D. Proffit, (one of those baptized), as superintendent. One lady, Sr. James Kelley, with her daughter, bids fair to lead others soon. Five others are seemingly at the door, and wept while the ordinances were being performed. The three sisters here (Proffit, Nellie Campbell, and Baker,) have certainly been energetic, and their lights have not been hid."

Bro. M. E. Worthington, Republic, Washington, writes that if there are any Saints thereabouts he would like to see or hear from them.

News From BranchesCHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

No rain in Chicago and vicinity for nearly a month, which means great damage to crops in this country if the dry spell is not broken shortly. The parks in the city are drying up, likewise lawns and gardens.

Some time ago the South Side Branch began a fund to bring the district tent to the city and move it from place to place, holding services during the week. This has been delayed, from some cause, for the present, but as the idea is one that would be productive of so much good results, so far as getting the work before the people is concerned, it ought to be kept up, and enough money secured to purchase tent and outfit, and hold it as church property between the three Chicago branches. The writer has been an earnest advocate of this idea for the past few years, and grows the stronger as he observes the success of other denominations along this line.

The Saints on the West Side have a number of lots in view, either one of which they are now able to purchase at a cash down deal, and then float a loan on the lot, and proceed to erect building of whatever description may meet the favor of the majority. There is some difference of opinion: some favoring a regular church building, while others favor what is termed a business and residence building combined. A long, open hall, such as could be used for a store, and a couple of small flats in the second story. The flats would rent for fifteen dollars each, and leave us the hall for church purposes. This plan seems to have the strongest support, as it is the easiest to put through, and besides being a self-supporting institution to the tune of thirty dollars per month. Considerable difficulty would be encountered in getting a loan for a regular church building, while the other, above mentioned, would meet the solicitation of any loan company.

The work in the branches is progressing smoothly, and many are preparing for district reunion at Plano, beginning August 21.

Cleveland and the Monroe Doctrine.

Mr. Cleveland, first among any American Presidents, made the Monroe Doctrine, as it is called, a fact alive, to be recognized as a fact, though not officially, by the government of Great Britain. Officially mattered little. Actually, factually, mattered much. The long coquetry between American administrations and British administrations had only comprised the playful throwing of grass and disclaimers. President Cleveland forced a recourse to arbitration by Great Britain and Venezuela, by which the power, the right, and the recognition of the United States as a third party, in high and equal interest, were regarded. The territorial integrity and immunity of this continent were assured. The fact of this Republic, as the predominant partner among and over other American governments, was impressed, and while not officially admitted has always unofficially been admitted. From that has flowed the Pan-American alliance, with all its complimentary, diplomatic, sentimental, and spectacular consequences.—From "Grover Cleveland as a public man," by Saint Clair McKelway in the American Review of Reviews for August

The Dead Rameses.

Imagine the greatest figure in the world—such a figure as this Rameses was in his day—with all might, all glory, all climbing power, all vigor, tenacity of purpose, and granite strength of will concentrated within it, struck suddenly down, and falling backward in a collapse whose thunder might shake the vitals of the earth, and you have this prostrate colossus. Even now one seems to hear it fall, to feel the warm soil trembling beneath one's feet as one approaches it. A row of statues of enormous size, with arms crossed as if in resignation, glowing in the sun, in color not gold or amber, but a delicate, desert yellow, watch near it like servants of the dead. On a slightly lower level than theirs it lies, and a little nearer the Nile. Only the upper half of the figure is left, but its size is really terrific. This colossus was fifty-seven feet high. It weighed eight hundred tons. Eight hundred tons of syenite went to its making, and across the shoulders its breadth is, or was, over twenty-two feet.

But one does not think of measurements as one looks upon it. It is stupendous. That is obvious and that is enough. Nor does one think of its finish, of its beautiful, rich color, of any of its details. One thinks of it as a tremendous personage laid low, as the mightiest of the mighty fallen. One thinks of it as the dead Rameses whose glory still looms over Egypt like a golden cloud that will not disperse. One thinks of it as the soul that commanded, and, lo! there rose up above the sands, at the foot of the hills of Thebes, the exultant Ramesseum.—From Robert Hichen's "The spell of Egypt" in the August Century.

In the early days, when hereditary aristocracy was well recognized in America, it was customary in the older colleges such as Yale and Harvard, as soon as a new class arrived, to send around to the villages from whence they came and get their comparative social positions, and then, as you will see in the older catalogues, that down to 1774 in Harvard and 1776 in Yale, they were arranged according to the social position of their families at home and not alphabetically, as is the case now. It is rather interesting for one of a democratic turn of mind to notice in the early classes of our colleges how large a proportion of distinguished men were at the lower end of the class. Rhode Island down to the time of the Dorr rebellion was governed by a hereditary aristocracy of oldest sons of the owners of a certain amount of real estate. These instances show that the aristocracy of the grandfather once had a position in this country.—Thomas W. Higginson.

Provision is made at the Iowa State Fair for double entertainment. There will be the regular night show at the race track amphitheater. This opens with a Liberati grand opera concert and is followed by Pain's historic and thrilling spectacle "Sheridan's Ride." At the live stock pavilion there will be each evening a double show of prize winning live stock and an appropriate setting of high class vaudeville and specialties. Reserved seats can be secured for either of these evening entertainments as well as for the races. Because of the better fair and the reduced rates Secretary Simpson and other officials of the fair anticipate greater crowds than ever before. The railroads will have their special excursion rates on sale the 19th. The rate is a fare and a half for the round trip. Many special trains will be needed for the extra crowds. The fair begins Saturday, August 22.

A laugh is worth a hundred groans in any market.—Lamb.

Very few persons are adjudged and found guilty of crimes deserving of the punishment of excommunication, who are justified in charging the church with injustice. Some feel aggrieved with the course that may be taken with them when they transgress church discipline; but if they really have a desire to be saved they will, as soon as possible, retrieve themselves and return to right ways of thought and action.—Editorial, HERALD, March 15, 1874.

A NEW CHURCH TO BE FORMED.

The Chicago Daily Tribune, August 14, contains a more or less sensational account of a proposed new church organization. The persons prominent in this movement, Albert and Jennie Blakely, united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in 1894. Jennie Blakely was expelled April 1, 1901. Albert Blakely was expelled January 15, 1903. Saints who were present at the late General Conference will recollect seeing Mr. and Mrs. Blakely in and about the church-building, distributing tracts and talking with the people. We quote from the Tribune account.

"Doubt and be damned," is the battle-cry of the new religion, according to Mrs. Jennie Blakely of 773 West Sixty-third Street, who, with her husband, Albert Blakely, is promoting it and who together comprise the "Kingdom of Heaven Church of the First Born."

The couple claim to have received a divine manifestation from out of the clouds fifteen years ago this coming twenty-ninth day of August, and they declare that ill will befall any newspaper reporter, the publication itself, and every one else who discuss it before its fifteenth anniversary.

Blakely is a carpenter. He has been looking after the repair of the street safety gates for the Chicago & Western Indiana Railroad for the last twelve years, and has been a close student of the Bible for a long time. He and his wife were formerly members of the Latter Day Saint Church and expect a large following from that creed and from among the Jews.

They filed their charter of incorporation in the county recorder's office yesterday, and, while it indicates that nine persons participated in the organizing of the church, Mrs. Blakely acknowledged that she and her husband are really the only ones who "acted," and that the others were merely "present."

Blakely is named in the papers on file as "ruler" and his wife as secretary, and the claim is made that the Almighty elected them. The objects of the church are given as follows:

To rule and refine.

To redeem Zion.

To set up the heavenly sanctuary.

To bind up the testimony and seal the law.

To work after the spiritual order of God in all divine ordinances.

To establish apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers with fundamental principles.

To gather in all Israel.

And said divine attributes and gifts, adopted as its corporate name, the following: Kingdom of Heaven Church of the First Born.

Mrs. Blakely was dumbfounded when visited by a reporter for the Tribune and asked about the new religion. She is of small stature, with piercing blue eyes, and wore a pleasant expression and an old red wrapper. The reporter got no further than the front door.

"How did you learn about it? Did you have a revelation?" she demanded.

"No. Just a tip. The paper is on file in the recorder's office," explained the reporter.

It had to be produced to convince her, and then she grabbed it. Earnest pleadings brought its return, after which she looked the reporter in the face sternly and commanded:

"Young man, I warn you not to have the wrath of God fall upon you and your family by acting contrary to his desires in this matter. Do not dare to publish a word about it before the 29th. On that day my husband will issue his declaration. It will startle the entire world."

"But I am sent here to get the news," pleaded the reporter, "and while your case may be one of devotion to your religion, mine is devotion to duty, and I need the money. If my employer tells me to write it I will have to take my chances."

"Tell your employer that you found me all filthy; that I had on an old red wrapper; that I am doing the family washing and baking, and that I have refused to see any one."

"But that would be deception."

"Not when it is done in the service of the Most High. Refuse, young man, I warn you, for God will have no mercy on those who will not obey his commands. God will provide for your wife and family, and you'll get a better job."

"Will you get me a better job?"

"Perhaps my husband will. He makes from sixty-five to sixty-seven dollars and fifty cents a month."

"The city editor is the boss; call him on the phone."

"No, I will go down and see him. I will warn him and warn the paper that it will suffer. On August 29 every paper in the country will get the declaration except the Tribune."

"Do you expect to mesmerize the boss?"

"No, I just want to look into his eyes and convince him that I am telling the truth, and warn him against danger. I wish to impress upon his mind that he is likely to be damned, and also of what happened to Lot's wife.

"My husband, myself, and my daughter, Grace, who died five years ago, were in our room one night when we received God's manifestation to begin this new religion fifteen years later. My daughter has visited me twice in her celestial body. Grace was seventeen years old when she was married, and her little son, Shirley, now seven years old, has been adopted by me. Grace's husband was good, but a man of the world and was given to playing baseball.

"Doubt and be damned, I warn you. We won't have any big edifice, and there will be no collections or choir boys. We will not be freakish like Dowie. My husband will quit his work and become a regularly ordained minister of the gospel."

"But he won't have any papers to show for it," suggested the reporter.

"Well, you haven't seen the writing," she said. "One above is writing the declaration that will be issued on the 29th, but my husband is holding the pencil. My husband will be ordained through the visitation from on high and the visitation of Moses coming upon him. There may be a little spiritualism in our new religion, but I wish to say that the way spiritualism is now practiced it is a deception.

"We believe in healing by the laying on of hands to a certain extent. Our creed is patterned after the nine covenants. My husband will not be any Elijah or those silly things. He will continue to be plain Mr. Blakely. We have fasted for as long as a month at a time, but not in the way fasting is generally understood. We remained with the Latter Day Saints only long enough to be baptized, for the creed has that power.

"Say nothing about this now. You can not, because you have taken no notes, and it is now beyond your power to remember our conversation, and don't try, because you will be trifling with the wrath of the Almighty and you will be damned. Come back on the 29th. We will revolutionize the world of religion."

NO SUCH REVELATION.

"Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land.— Doctrine and Covenants, page 219.

It is contended by the doctrinarians and pulpiteers of the Utah Mormon church that Joseph Smith received the pretended revelation, commanding the practice of polygamy; at Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1843. The laws of the state of Illinois at that time, for a long time previously, and up to the present time, declared and do declare the marriage of more than one woman to one man to be a crime against the commonwealth, and providing punishment for its commission. The revelation commanding obedience to the laws of the land, as now printed in the Doctrine and Covenants, is dated Jackson County, Missouri, August 1, 1831; the polygamous revelation being dated Nauvoo, Illinois, July 12, 1843—a matter of twelve years intervening.

So we have the Utah high priests asserting that the Lord deliberately reversed himself, permitting the contrary commandments to remain in the authoritative law book in evidence of inconsistency most rank and of impotence vastly pitiable.

But is it possible that the Utah Mormon controversialist will bring his usually "nervy" tactics into play and assert that his particular style of Lord is given to changing his mind between two States, and that it is nobody's business if he chooses so to do?

Let us explain, however, that polygamy is most dear to the Utah hierarchal heart, because it feeds on the lechery of men and fats on the virtue of women. And in support of this foremost devotion of their own, these Utah high priests would shame the Devil himself by making their God appear to the world as an inconsistent changeling, and a lackadaisical irresponsible. But the facts noted herein bear powerfully in support of the proposition that no such revelation as that on polygamy was ever received, or even claimed to have been received by Joseph Smith.—The Salt Lake Tribune, August 19, 1908.

There is a moral dignity in minding one's own business to which few can attain. Solomon says that he who meddles with business not belonging to him is like he who taketh a dog by the ears; whereas he who pursues a contrary course is like he who sits down to a good meal with no one to make him afraid.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Apostle C. A. Butterworth writes from Vancouver under date of August 15: "I am leaving here for Australia at one o'clock this afternoon. I preached for the Saints at Seattle last night. Weather here fine and sea smooth."

The South Wales Echo, August 6, contains the following on the divorce question: "The Daily Telegraph understands that the report of the committee of bishops, under the chairmanship of the Archbishop of Canterbury, on questions relating to marriage and divorce, will be issued this week. As most people are aware, the committee, which has been sitting for some time, has had before it a large amount of evidence from different parts of the world on the social and moral effects of divorce regulations; and the general tenor of the report, based on the evidence before the committee, will be in favor of greater rather than less, stringency in marriage contracts, and will emphasize the sacramental aspect of wedlock. Facilities of divorce and separation, especially having regard to the great increase of cases under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act of 1895, will be emphatically condemned."

At last we are classified. The Deseret Evening News, August 20, has an editorial on atheism. It seems that a certain street preacher of atheism got into trouble with members of the Catholic Church while holding forth on the streets of Salt Lake City. The News gravely avers that so long as atheists do not indulge in unseemly language they should be given the same liberties as "Salvation Army members, Josephites, and Holy Jumpers."

Doctor John A. Clarke, an English physician, in a recent issue of the London Chronicle attacks the fresh air fad. He says, "It is the way of the world to run after new things or new fashions, and as the fresh air cure has been, rightly enough, very much boomed of late years, a large number of persons have come to the conclusion that fresh air is the proper remedy for anything and everything, regardless of circumstances and conditions, and that it is impossible to have too much of it.

"One result of this has been the evolution of what I may term the fresh air maniac. To all outward appearance he is a perfectly sane and harmless paterfamilias, but watch him carefully and you will observe several things. He is always opening windows which everybody else in the house wishes kept closed. He insists on his children being kept out of doors for hours together when they are quite unfit for it, the result being that materfamilias is never without a nursing job on her hands. But this in no wise turns him from his obsession. Whenever he can possibly make other people uncomfortable or ill by the way he administers to them doses of fresh air he will not fail to do it. The more fresh air people have, he argues, the less sensitive they will be to chills. Salvation by fresh air is the gospel of his mission, and he is fully convinced that he is embarked on a wholesale life-saving effort."

The Herald Office has recently published an edition of memoirs of W. W. Blair, which is offered for sale in cloth binding at fifty cents. This publication covers the time of the rise of the Reorganized Church and contains the history of many events calculated to inspire faith in the latter-day message.

An interesting letter from Bro. T. W. Williams comes to hand too late for insertion in this issue. He says that the recent reunion of the Southern California District was "the most peaceful, harmonious, inspirational, intellectual, and spiritual gathering in the history of the district." During the reunion there were eleven baptisms. Elder Albert Carmichael was ordained a bishop in harmony with the action of the late General Conference. A quorum each of priests, teachers, and deacons was organized. Missionaries and their families were provided with tents and board free of charge. The dining-hall was run on the "cafateria" plan and proved a success. Elder Williams declares that the reunion people felt proud of their "Fredes." Fred G. Pitt is styled the "sweet singer of Israel" and has succeeded in winning the affection of the entire district. Fred A. and Fred M. Smith are commended for their lack of ostentation and show. Of the latter the writer says, "His sermons were broad and bristling with liberality. Whatever apprehension we ever held as to his policy we are sure no church or people are in danger of priestcraft or tyranny with a leader standing on a platform as outlined by our brother while here."

It will be well with all of us if, when we are called to leave this scene of action, we can do so with the feelings of charity and love for all mankind, which make the following peculiarly interesting. It is the last will and testament of an insane lawyer, an inmate of a poor-house in Chicago, and was found after his death. This coming into the possession of members of the Chicago Bar Association, upon resolution it was probated in due form and can be found among the records of Cook County, Illinois.

"I, Charles Lounsberry, being of sound and disposing mind and memory, do hereby make and publish this my last will and testament, in order, as justly as may be, to distribute my interest in the world among succeeding men.

"That part of my interests which is known in law and recognized in the sheep-bound volumes as my property, being inconsiderable and of none account, I make no disposition of in this my will. My right to live, being but a life estate, is not at my disposal, but, these things excepted, all else in the world I now proceed to devise and bequeath.

"Item: I give to good fathers and mothers, in trust for their children, all good little words of praise and encouragement and all quaint pet names and endearments, and I charge said parents to use them justly, but generously, as the needs of their children shall require.

"Item: I leave to children inclusively, but only for the term of their childhood, all and every the flowers of the fields and the blossoms of the woods, with the right to play among them freely according to the customs of children, warning them at the same time against thistles and thorns. And I devise to children the banks of the brooks and the golden sands beneath the waters thereof, and the odors of the willows that dip therein, and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees.

"And I leave the children the long, long days to be merry in, in a thousand ways and the night and the train of the Milky Way to wonder at, but subject, nevertheless, to the rights hereinafter given to lovers.

"Item: I devise to boys, jointly, all the useful, idle fields and commons where ball may be played, all pleasant waters where one may swim, all snow-clad hills where one may coast, and all streams and ponds where one may fish, or where, when grim winter comes, one may skate, to hold the same for the period of their boyhood. And all meadows, with the clover blossoms and butterflies thereof; the woods with their appurtenances; the squirrels and the birds and echoes and strange noises, and all distant places which may be visited, together with the adventures there found. And I give to said boys each his own place at the fireside at night, with all pictures that may be seen in the burning wood, to enjoy without let or hindrance and without any incumbrance or care.

"Item: To lovers I devise their imaginary world, with whatever they may need, as the stars of the sky, the red roses by the wall, the bloom of the hawthorn, the sweet strains of music, and aught else they may desire to figure to each other the lastingness and beauty of their love.

"Item: To young men jointly, I devise and bequeath all boisterous, inspiring sports of rivalry, and I give to them the disdain of weakness, and undaunted confidence in their own strength. Though they are rude, I leave to them the power to make lasting friendships and of possessing companions, and to them exclusively I give all merry songs and grave choruses to sing with lusty voices.

"Item: And to those who are no longer children or youths or lovers, I leave memory; and bequeath to them the volumes of the poems of Burns and Shakespeare and of other poets, if there be others, to the end that they may live the old days over again, freely and fully without tithe or diminution.

"Item: To our loved ones with snowy crowns, I bequeath the happiness of old age, the love and gratitude of their children until they fall asleep."

LAMONI ITEMS.

The event of the season is the stake reunion, now in progress. "Are you camping this year?" has been the common form of salutation for some time past.

The reunion opened Friday with favorable weather and every indication of success. The decline of interest that was predicted one or two years ago has failed to materialize. The interest seems better and the attendance larger than ever before. About one hundred tents are on the grounds. Many families attend who are not camping; they make the trip between town and the camp ground night and morning.

The stake presidency and the missionaries in charge were placed in charge of the reunion. Elder Paul M. Hanson, Bishop Hilliard, and Apostles W. H. Kelley and Heman C. Smith are present on invitation of the reunion committee. Arrangements were made for Bro. Leonard Scott to attend but at this writing he has not arrived. President Joseph Smith is expected in some time this week. Besides those mentioned there are several other elders whose homes are here who are in attendance, so that there is no lack of good speakers.

The committee has made extensive preparation, including the improvement of the grounds, building bridges, digging wells, providing rest tents for the use of visitors, etc.

An immense crowd was present Sunday at Sunday-school and at the three preaching-services. Elders W. H. Kelley, G. H. Hilliard, and Heman C. Smith were the speakers.

The auxiliary societies,—Sunday-school, Religio, and Daughters of Zion,—have charge of the morning hours, following the prayer-service, from Monday until Friday, inclusive. Business-meeting will be held Saturday. The stake council held their monthly meeting on the reunion grounds Tuesday afternoon.

There is no doubt that our annual stake reunion exercises a very favorable influence on the life of the community. Added to the pleasant outing and the opportunity for social intercourse there is a decided tendency to encourage serious thought along religious lines.

Misery is like opulence in that it has no patriotism.—Spargo.

The Straight Road

IS IT RIGHT TO TEACH DOCTRINE?

According to Webster "the doctrines" of the gospel are the principles of truth taught by Christ and his apostles.

Now while we admit that it is often harmful to teach speculative theories, or men's opinions, the evil is the result of human error and not because the doctrine of Christ is preached. Men's opinions are often errors, but the truth of Christ never.

Jesus sent his servants to teach all nations to observe all things he had commanded them. (See Matthew 28: 20.) All that he had commanded them would surely be doctrine. They had been so in touch with him that opinion had given place to knowledge. (See Matthew 13: 11; 1 John 1: 1-3.) Their doctrine was confined to the things that they knew, so all must admit that it was right for them to teach doctrine. But Jesus says of others (Matthew 15: 9) that to worship him, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men was vain, hence wrong, but of his apostles he says in Luke 10: 16:

He that heareth you heareth me; and he that despiseth you despiseth me; and he that despiseth me despiseth him that sent me.

But he said, Yea rather, blessed are they that hear the word of God, and keep it.—Luke 11: 28.

Speaking of himself he says in John 7: 16, 17:

My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself.

Also in John 12: 49:

For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak.

Speaking to his apostles he says in John 20: 21: "As my Father hath sent me, even so send I you."

From the above we see, first, that Jesus was represented by his servants and required people to hear them; second, that Jesus taught doctrine and was commanded by God to do so; third, that he sent the apostles as he was sent, which would bind them to teach the doctrines he commanded them to teach.

Now we are claiming that we who are continuing the work of the apostles should be sent as they were sent. Having by the same revelation, through the Spirit of truth, knowledge of the things of God (1 Corinthians 2: 10), knowing that Jesus is Lord (1 Corinthians 12: 3), and that his doctrine is true (John 7: 16, 17), and that we should bear testimony to the truth or doctrine we know to be true, and as Christ only spoke as he was commanded, men are not authorized to go further than he did and teach vain theories of the truth of which they are uncertain. Where this is done it is not right to teach doctrine. Those who do so are false prophets promising future baptism and blessings upon conditions that are not authorized of God. Such are most severely condemned. (See Matthew 7: 15; Revelation 16: 13, 14; 19: 20.)

Still, doctrine must be taught if understood and obeyed. (See Romans 10: 14-17.) It must be obeyed or loss and destruction will follow. 2 Thessalonians 1: 7-9:

And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.

As the gospel must be obeyed, obedience must refer to its truths or doctrines. John says in 2 John 9:

Whosoever transgresseth, and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God. He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son.

The church of God must therefore have in it those who know for themselves the truth of the doctrine of Christ and who are properly authorized to teach it.

Nations unknown to the apostles in the days of Christ have arisen and the same saving doctrines must be preached to them, necessitating living ministers inspired by the same Spirit enjoyed by the apostles, men who can preach the same doctrine, otherwise the promises of Christ and his mission to earth can never be fulfilled.

The doctrine one teaches and its fruits are the criterion by which we are authorized to judge those who claim to represent the way to salvation, for if God has sent them they will speak the things of God. (See John 3: 34.) If they do not bring this doctrine we are justified in rejecting them, though they be men or angels. (Galatians 1: 6-9; 2 John 1: 10.)

In representing the church of Christ we have no right to add to or detract from the doctrine he under God established, but should declare his whole counsel fearlessly, so far as we know it to be true. Theories that are unconfirmed human opinion should never be given as the doctrine of Christ. We should teach doctrine, but we must be sure that it is Christ's doctrine.

Men give some credit for genius. All the genius I have lies in this: When I have a subject in hand, I study it profoundly. Day and night it is before me. I explore it in all its bearings. My mind becomes pervaded with it. Then the effort which I make the people are pleased to call the fruit of genius. It is the fruit of labor and thought.—Alexander Hamilton.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE KINGDOM.

SERMON BY FREDERICK M. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
JUNE 28, 1908.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

If time permitted, this morning, I should be pleased to read as the lesson of the hour the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters of the record of Saint Matthew. And if the few remarks that we shall make this morning shall stir you up to a desire to read these chapters more carefully than you have been disposed to do previously, I shall feel well repaid for the morning's effort.

If it be necessary for me to take a text this morning, I should prefer to take that portion which reads, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come." And with this I would associate that crystallization of the great law, "All things, whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." I may be pardoned this morning if I shall briefly trace the history of the Master as a historical setting for the lesson that we wish to draw.

The record tells us that Christ was many years in preparing for his ministry. And in these years we see him working as a child, a boy, a man beside his father in that most common of all trades, carpentering; and we recognize that this vocation brought him into immediate touch with people of all classes, even with all the industrial conditions that existed in the nation of which he was a citizen.

Thus passing briefly over the long years of preparation, we read: "After many years, the hour of his ministry drew nigh."—Matthew 3:26, I. T. Recognizing that so far as his destiny was concerned, there was a time coming in his life when he should enter upon his specific life's work. I wonder if each one here has recognized the fact that sometime, somehow, the hour of his ministry will draw nigh? Have you found it? Are you looking for it?

Before the coming of the Christ, there came one called John the Baptist; and at least we Christians recognize that the mission of John the Baptist was to prepare for the greater mission of the Christ. In other words, John paved the way, and led up to the very hour, as the Scriptures say, when the ministry of Christ should begin.

"In those days," says the record, "came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea." And I wish to call particular attention to the cry that John raised, doubtless at the incipiency, or the very starting-point of his ministry. He came, says the record, "preaching in the wilderness of Judea." And what was the burden of his cry? "Saying, Repent ye." Why? "For the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Referring again to the mission of Christ, we read: "Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan, unto John, to be baptized of him." It is not necessary for me to call your attention to the details of this wonderful event in the history of both John and Jesus. Suffice it to say that Christ, in quieting the qualms of conscience manifest by John, says, "Thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." In other words, it was right for the Master to be baptized of John, and hence he came.

After the baptism of Jesus the record tells us that he was led into the wilderness. And there he passed through that three-fold temptation that presents the Master before us as a character unique in history, and one of the strongest that ever lived. After he had been famished by a forty-day fast, and was an hungered, the temptation of turning the stones into bread was presented to him by the tempter, and he exclaimed: "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." Following that came the temptation, after he had been led up to the pinnacle of the temple, of trying the powers with which he was commissioned, or over which he had control. He was told to cast himself from the pinnacle, and the angels would bear him up. And he replied: "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God." And the greatest of the three temptations, or the severest part of this three-fold temptation came when by some psychic power, or by some power known only to the tempter, there passed before the Master that wonderful vision of all the powers and the kingdoms of the world; and recognizing that in him was the power to become the greatest in all of these, or to become greater than an Alexander or a Napoleon, the temptation was presented to him, Worship thou me, the prince and power of this world, and all these are thine. However literal or however figurative this may be, it was one of the crises of the Master's history. He replied that there was one, only one, to whom worship was due. And Satan left him, because he recognized there was a character too strong to be tempted by even that great picture.

The record tells us that after the Master had passed through the ordeal of this three-fold temptation he went to Galilee. "And leaving Nazareth, in Zebulon, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the sea-coast." (Inspired Translation.) We see him thus going into various portions of the country which claimed him as a citizen or a son. And then the record says, "From that time Jesus began to preach,"—now note the burden of his preaching—"and to say, Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

Does it not strike you as significant that the burden of the cry of this man who was sent to prepare the way for the Master and lead up to the very hour in which his ministry should be introduced, was the same as that of Christ himself, in going around among the inhabitants of Palestine: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

The Jews were looking for a kingdom. Their nationality had been destroyed. Their kings had become subservient to, or had been abolished by, a greater power, and Rome was ruling the country by governors sent there to deal with the people as they pleased, so they sent tribute to Rome. And their national pride, and their economic conditions, their industrial conditions, their home conditions were so disturbed that they longed for the time when their nationality should be restored to them, and once more they should become a power among the nations of the earth. And hence there could not be raised a more startling or significant cry in all that land than this cry which was the burden of the preaching of John and of Jesus. "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

The Jews believed that this expected kingdom would be restored to them, accompanied by some peculiar manifestation of divine power by which they might recognize the kingdom for which they had been looking so long to come in all its majesty and glory, and at the head of which should sit a prince of the house of David. And here is heard the warning cry of each one of these men, raised with all the earnestness of firm belief: "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

And then the record tells us further that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching." Preaching what? "The gospel of the kingdom." And this was after he had presented to the world that illustration of his peculiar methods of dealing with men when he had gone to the sea-shore, and had called from their nets two fishermen to become his disciples and representatives. He told them to drop their work and come immediately, and he would make them fishers of men. Some of the disciples had asked that they have time to bury the dead. He said, Let the dead bury the dead. And had called Simon Peter, James, John, and Andrew. And then he and his disciples went about Galilee preaching—note—the "gospel of the kingdom" still.

Following on down the record we discover that his fame became great, and great multitudes of people, we are told, followed him from Galilee, Decapolis, Jerusalem, and Judea beyond Jordan.

Now, when we remember that these Jews were looking for this peculiar announcement, and had been looking long for the signs that their restored kingdom was at hand, we can readily see why this multitude followed this man Jesus, particularly, who was preaching the "gospel of the kingdom," that they might understand, or might learn more of this kingdom he announced, that they might learn if what they were looking for was really at hand. His fame became very great; and he was followed by multitudes of people.

And then we read that Jesus, "seeing the multitudes, went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: and he opened his mouth and taught them saying,"—and then he presented to them that most wonderful of all sermons, known to-day as the Sermon on the Mount.

Now, let us remember that he had been preaching the "gospel of the kingdom." He recognized the conditions existing politically, economically, and otherwise in his native country; he knew the intense longing of the people, expecting the time that the kingdom of God should come, over which a prince of the house of David should rule. He knew that those before him expected some of the principles of this kingdom should be presented to them; to be told more of the details of this wonderful kingdom which had been promised, and for the coming of which they had been warned by the cry, "Repent: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And hence, as the Master Mind, he knew that when this multitude had followed him into the mountain, and there listened to the teachings that flowed from his opened mouth, they would expect that he would lay down there something that would be fundamental. And he did. He gave to the world what has been properly termed the "Magna Charta of Christianity," or, as one writer has spoken of it, "the constitution of the kingdom of heaven." And because it is so fundamental to Christianity, and because it is the "constitution of the kingdom of heaven," we have desired this morning to call your attention to it.

After delivering this wonderful Sermon on the Mount, in a manner which even the Pharisees and the scribes recognized as having come with authority, he went again into the country preaching, preaching. And from that time onward, in every act of his life, in every sentiment that flowed from his mouth, every thought that originated in his brain and was given to the people, he exemplified, or he testified of, or presented to the world in some beautiful or striking form some one of the fundamental principles that he had announced in this Sermon on the Mount, which was the "constitution of the kingdom" that he came to found. And we have but to examine just a few of the incidents of his life to recognize the wonderful scope and magnitude of the adaptability of both the man and his mission to his work.

We call your attention to two or three, briefly. We will try to pick out two extremes. You remember at one time when he was a mere lad, his parents lost him. And with a mother's concern prompting her, Mary sought her son, and hunting for him found him—where? Found him in the temple discussing with the doctors. The doctors represented the very highest intellectual attainment of that land. They were men who had gone all through the schools of the land and acquired all the learning possible for them, and had studied the law—had studied the people, and were spending their time in contemplation of the law that God had given them through Moses and others, and the traditions of the people they represented, and the vast intellectual forces of the world, more particularly that nation as it existed there. And yet the Master, with all of the power and acumen of his great though then boyish mind, could, doubtless because of the exquisite learning imparted to him through the Spirit of God, discuss with them, even to their confusion, because he knew their philosophy even better than they.

The other extreme: We find him at one time surrounded by children, the little ones, those who were just beginning to learn the philosophy of this life, and to have the experience that should make them wise, perhaps, unto salvation. And we can imagine how some of the disciples, like some of us to-day, were disturbed by the chatter of little children, remonstrated, and attempted to drive the little prattling children away. But from the lips of the Master fell the beautiful words of rebuke: Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. He was at home among the children. As he had as a child among the doctors felt at ease, so here he now, as a man felt at ease and at home among the children. It represents the great adaptability of his divine nature, that in the midst of the learned doctors discussing their philosophy or among the little children listening to and guiding their prattle, he was at ease. Between these two extremes are incident after incident that we might enumerate this morning to represent the wide range of human possibilities. Thus we can not but see at once that he recognized all conditions, and was equal and ready with his discussion and the application of his lessons in all the scales and gradations of human attainments and possibilities. Between these two extremes we might cite the woman at the well who represented people of the lowly walks, or we might cite the ruler who came to him to learn the way of life. He healed the rich, and yet in healing the wealthy, sick, or going among them, he passed not the decrepit beggar by the wayside.

If it demonstrates anything, my friends, it demonstrates his Mastership; that all the range of human conditions were within his reach or range. That the Christ, this Master Mind, fully appreciated the range of his work and his mission and his own power to adapt himself thereto, let his teachings in the Sermon on the Mount bear witness. It is the touchstone through which his wonderful world-philosophy comes directly in contact with every human individual. There is no condition existing in the world to-day—no human being has fallen so low, so far as the scale of moral ethics is concerned, and no individual has reached so high, so far as human attainment is concerned, but somewhere in this "constitution of the kingdom" of God there is something that touches him directly and brings him in contact with this great world-philosophy of the Master.

It will be remembered Matthew says Christ was preaching the gospel, the "gospel of the kingdom," and his and John's first warning cry was to repent, as a preparation for the coming of this kingdom of heaven.

In the Bible we have a large number of references to the kingdom; and should you take references in the Bible to the "kingdom" in its various forms, and analyze them, you will find that we have the "kingdom" spoken of as the "kingdom of God," and the "kingdom of Christ"; the kingdom of heaven is spoken of so many times that we can divide it into references to the state of the church under the gospel, in which blessings were to be bestowed; as the visible church preparatory to the kingdom of glory; and as the state of the church in the world by which the gospel is made applicable to us in our various conditions; and further as the place of eternal happiness and glory. We have the "kingdom of priests" spoken of, and even the "kingdom of men."

With all these numerous references to "the kingdom," without that Spirit of God, which guides into all truth, to help us to comprehend the things of God, there can easily arise confusion as to what "the kingdom" is. And we find that the idea of "the kingdom" varies much among the people of to-day. Hence we see the idea varying all the way from a peculiar ethereal something that exists in the hearts of men, but is not visible, can not be felt, can not be applied in a material way, to the most material kind of an industrial kingdom that shall exist in this world among the people and has to do largely with our industrial and economic conditions. There are other varieties between these two extremes.

But I believe, my friends, that in all these references to the "kingdom of God" and "of heaven" and "of glory" and "of Christ" and "of men" and "priests" there is the one great kingdom referred to; and because it extends until it reaches mankind in all his conditions, we have it referred to in these different ways. In other words these various kingdoms are simply phases of the one great kingdom.

With this view, that these references in the Bible to these various kingdoms are simply references to phases of the same kingdom, we can recognize a form of government on earth, the church visible, in which are priests, representing and working for the purposes of God. It is the "kingdom of Christ"; for he is its great head. It is the "kingdom of God," for Christ and God are one. It is the "kingdom of heaven," for one of its objects is the institution of heavenly conditions. It is the "kingdom of glory," or the church triumphant, for through the grace of God working among men in the church militant will the final or complete glory of God be made manifest. Does not that combined view harmonize the references, my friends? Does not that make it one magnificent whole, in which we recognize that the glory of God will be consummated, and the great purposes of the plan finally accomplished, and man shall be made free because he shall know the truth?

With this idea in mind, we look at this "constitution of the kingdom of heaven." It is true that the teachings of this constitution of heaven, or this Magna Charta of Christianity, are addressed largely to individuals. But I challenge you to show how the teachings of that "Magna Charta of Christianity" as applied to individuals can be applied in any other way than to individuals as component parts of society, or in other words, to individuals associated with other individuals. And hence it is bound to effect more or less, and regulate their conduct one toward another, as well as their attitude toward God, and their conduct toward their church.

The community mind represents or comprises the aggregate of individual minds, and hence the community mind can only be reached by addressing oneself to individual minds. Christ was aware of this. As the Great Master Mind of the world he could not but know that there does not exist such a thing as the concrete community mind. He must reach the mind of the community through the minds of the people that were before him at the time of his preaching by reaching the individual minds thereof. And hence he recognized before him, as those to whom he was speaking, as said by one writer, this mechanic, that artisan, this fisherman, that housewife, and addressed himself to them in a way to be understood by them. And by reason of his great scope and adaptability, he found some point of contact by which he could reach directly each individual. He taught community progress by teaching that individual progress in its aggregate makes up the progress of humanity as a whole.

"The kingdom of heaven can only come as it comes in the hearts of individuals," said Bascom, in his work on the "Words of Christ." And perhaps it may be this way of expressing this truth that has been responsible for that illusive theory that the kingdom of God is a something existing only in the heart and nowhere else. Why, of course, the kingdom of God can only come into the hearts of men by reason of the fact that the preparation for the coming of the kingdom can only be made in the individual himself, and hence must reach the heart of the individual. In other words, preparation for the coming of the kingdom of heaven is made in the heart of each individual, and, as such, the kingdom of heaven does come into our hearts.

Now, with this idea still further in mind, let us examine just briefly some of the teachings of this constitution. Almost the very first words that the Master spoke in presenting this wonderful Sermon on the Mount were these: "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." And if there is one lesson more than others that should be impressed upon Christian people, it is the lesson that is contained in this brief statement that individuals, to be of service in the kingdom of God or the kingdom of heaven as stated here, must be characterized by humility. In other words, there can be no disposition on the part of those who would have the kingdom of heaven to say, "I am great and mighty, and hence there is service that is beneath my dignity." And in this connection we remember a remarkable incident, a striking illustration by the Master of the lesson of humility. It was when he came into the room in which the disciples had been assembled, and were at supper, when they should have been brotherly and at peace. But as we look from afar back into that room we see they were angry, and were lowering at each other. What was the matter? They had been discussing the question, Who is greatest in the kingdom of God, or who will be greatest when the Master goes? And because they had raised this question, they had each become puffed in his own dignity. They were prone to magnify their importance; and they had refused to offer to each other that peculiar mark of courtesy or hospitality characteristic of that country, the washing of feet. In that hot and dusty country sandals were worn on the feet, and sand working into the sandals chafed the feet, making them sore. And when a visitor, stranger or friend, came to the door, one of the first marks of hospitality was to bring water and a towel that the feet of the traveler might be relieved from the burning sand, and the chafing of the sandals.

And his disciples having come into the room to partake of the evening meal, were now quarreling with each other. They had refused to extend to each other that mark of hospitality. The Master, without question the greatest in the kingdom, coming into their midst, and recognizing the absence of humility, taught them the great lesson that has come down through all the world since then as one of the marked characteristics of the man. He took water, and girding himself about with a towel, washed their feet. The menial service of washing their feet was done by the Master as a lesson, not only to his disciples, but to all the Christian world, the lesson that any one who claims to be perfect must be humble, and be ready to extend service to men, and that there is no class of individuals too lowly to receive attention at the hands of those who would follow the example of the Master. We find him teaching the woman at the well, who was an outcast, teaching her how to live, and talking to her that he might thus elevate her and lift up. "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

And then, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled." It does not say that blessed are they that hunger and thirst after riches, after power, after worldly emolument, after worldly authority, or after position, to be placed higher than some one else. It says, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness," or that good shall prevail, or that right shall obtain. These are the blessed ones. We are told that our desire should not be placed upon riches, or the acquisition of power, or self-aggrandizement; but that our desire and longing should be after righteousness, that justice might prevail. "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness: for they shall be filled"; and, as remarked by one writer, "by that that they desire."

"Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy." As was sung to you this morning, one of the great characteristics of the God all Christian people worship, is that of mercy or love. It is what differentiates the God of the Christians from the gods worshiped by other peoples.

All through the life of the Master we find marks of the characteristics of mercy abounding in his life. We have illustration after illustration that the attribute of mercy was always present in his character, his teachings and his works. That it abounded in his life we have but to watch him as he passed into the great crucial test of his life, when he, the Christ, after he had passed through the Garden of Gethsemane, and had passed out upon Calvary, gave to the world his greatest example of mercy that it has ever seen. While he was there suffering on the cross, in agony of soul and body because of the contumely and abuse heaped upon him, the blood trickling down over his face from the wounds of thorns that pressed into his brow, in all the agony of his physical suffering, when he thought of his people, the people he would so gladly have sheltered 'neath his divine love, and yet they rejected him and now were killing him,—in the midst of all this suffering he exclaims, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." I do not believe that physical suffering through which he was passing then compares in the minutest degree with the suffering of soul and the mental anguish he was suffering because he realized that the people whom he would have gathered beneath his wings, as does a hen her chicks, had rejected him,—their Savior, for whom they had been looking so long. The physical suffering was nothing as compared with the agony of soul that he underwent in the knowledge that this very people, his chosen people, the Jews, had rejected the Messiah, the Savior, that their prophets had told them of so long before, and who warned them against his coming. They had rejected him, and were putting him to an ignominious death; yet, in the midst of all the agony of his soul he remembered them, and his heart was filled with pity and mercy, and he exclaimed to his heavenly Father, "Forgive them, for they know not what they do." It is one of the most marked examples of mercy that the world has ever seen. And hence, when the Savior said, "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy," he but announced a precept that his every act exemplified and intensified, even in the supremest moment of his life's work.

"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time," said the Master, "Thou shalt not kill." And then going down the list of all of the laws of Moses, he by his wondrous teachings, expands and spiritualizes the law. Instead of making it literal in its application, he broadens and widens its application, until the law of Moses has come down to us through the Christ, spiritualized and made alive, and vivified by the quickening power of his Holy Spirit. In other words, the Master was teaching that it was the spirit of the law, not the letter that we should observe; it was the spirit of the law that maketh alive, the letter that killeth. The law said: "Thou shalt not kill." He told us further, "Thou shalt not injure in any way thy brother." And thus he examined the whole of the law of Moses and in his masterly way he gave us the new law, quickened and vivified with that peculiar munificent, grand Spirit of the Master which makes it one of the most complete codes of ethics that the world has ever seen or ever will see.

And as if to emphasize what has been apparent to the student, that the teachings of this great message is something more than merely individual in its application, he exclaims: "Agree with thine adversary quickly," etc. It is thus made to apply, by the Master, to our conditions or relations one with the other. And in his teachings always, can we but discover the real spirit and intent of them, we will find they apply to us as component parts of society.

And then that prayer that we are taught by the Master to say, or as an example or pattern of how we should pray; the very first declaration of that prayer, which we have selected as a text this morning: "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come." And when we, on our bended knees in petitioning the throne of grace, utter the first words of this prayer, "Our Father," what does it mean? Does it mean that we are addressing some peculiar idol, or something that we have set up merely as a god? or does it mean what we say, and that we are addressing him as "our Father"? And if he is our Father, does it not carry with it the logical conclusion that we can not say, "Our Father," without saying to every man, "Thou art my brother"? In other words, if he is our Father, we are his sons. And if all mankind are the sons of God, then all men are brothers. And when an individual upon his bended knees, addressing the throne of God says, "Our Father," and then rising from thence, goes out into the world and treats any man differently than he would a brother, he in a way denies his statement that God is the Father.

"Thy kingdom come." Does it mean that we are waiting for that peculiar elusive something that only comes into our hearts, or do we pray for the coming of a literal kingdom, a kingdom that shall be so literal in its application, that the conditions with which we are surrounded shall be such that in it every man will act toward the other as a brother, and recognize themselves a part of the great universal brotherhood of mankind?

And then, as if to crystallize the whole of the teachings of his Sermon on the Mount, and to further impress the thought that God is the Father, or the universal Father of all mankind, the Master exclaims thus: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." And then, as if to impress the importance of the law more firmly than ever upon them, he exclaims, "For this is the law and the prophets." In other words, he states that it is a crystallization of all the law that has been given to the people of God through all the prophets in all times. It is the keynote of what he had been teaching, the summation of his and all the prophets' teachings. It is the very spirit and genius of the constitution of the kingdom of heaven. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." That is brotherly. "And where brothers are, there brotherhood will exist," exclaims one. And brotherhood does not exist when we do other unto others than we would have them do to us.

Surely, my friends, these teachings, so far as the application of this summation of the law that Christ has given to us, is nothing else than individual righteousness. You can not apply it in any other way. It certainly does apply to each individual as a member of society in their relations one to another. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do" is a criterion by which we can govern, and by which we must govern, says Christ, all our conduct to all our brothers. It is the crystallization of the teaching, too, that God is the Father; and that if God is the Father, then all men are brothers. And if we do unto our brothers as we would be done by them, or our neighbors, it means that we recognize every man as our brother, and hence we have filial obligations to him.

One writer has exclaimed that if we admit the parenthood of God, or the fatherhood of God, we must admit that all men are brothers, and sociological conditions, relations, or our gregarious tendencies are natural and not volitional. "Thus," says Doctor Gladden, "the very foundation of society is in religion." And this was said by him in opposition to some of the peculiar theories that are presented by the world to-day to the effect that economic conditions determine our social relations, thus relegating religion to an incidental position or place.

Now permit me to summarize briefly: The Scriptures are replete with references, in one form or another, to the fact that there is a kingdom of God, a kingdom of heaven, a kingdom of glory, etc.; they are, as we believe, references to one and the same great institution, calculated for the great emancipation of mankind, and the consummation or complete development of the plan that God had established from before the foundation of the world. And this kingdom extends so far in its scope, that it reaches all humanity, and contains ample provisions in its operations and in its principles for mankind, from the very time that they shall enter into the world—yes, even before they come into the world—until they shall have passed from this life and have gone on into that great beyond, when, surrounded by the effulgence of the glory of God, they shall pass on and on, step by step, until they shall reach the perfection that is with God; in other words, until they shall become perfect as God is perfect. I believe that the kingdom of God provides for all. That God has made arrangements for all men in all the conditions obtaining between these two great extremes. And the law has been given to us which shall operate in that kingdom through all time. It is that crystallization of the Sermon on the Mount that the Savior has given, that summation he gave both on the mount when he was giving his beatitudes, and later when he was questioned by the lawyer and asked, Which is the greatest commandment in the law. In his answer, in few words he said the whole law was comprised in loving God the Father, and further that the universal fatherhood of God demands that we shall recognize that thus every man, not only our nearest neighbor, but every man, to the uttermost parts of the earth, becomes our brother, and hence is entitled to brotherly conduct at our hands. This is, simply and substantially put, the whole teaching of Christ. In fact Christ said that on that statement hung all the law and the prophets. And hence our duty is to manifest, in our every act, this great crystallization of the law. And when we go on our bended knees and repeat the words of the prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven," and then pray for the coming of "the kingdom," our next duty shall be, on rising, to do our part towards bringing that kingdom, and show that God is the Father, by manifesting by our conduct that every man is our brother, by treating him as such.

That is my faith. Is it yours?

THE HOLD-UP ACROSS THE COUNTER.

It is really astounding what an amount of trustfulness there is in the human family, especially in that part of it inhabiting this country. It can be taken for granted that we credit things for what they seem. This is why unscrupulous ones wax rich and fat at the expense of the confiding persons with whom they do business. To realize the almost incredible amount of stupidity—no, call it trustfulness—that exists, it is only necessary to inquire into the doings of a comparatively recent addition to civic departments, the bureau of weights and measures in New York. Few cities have such a bureau. One or two have followed the example of New York, but the vast majority of towns have absolutely no check on the millions of small tradesman who are doing business across the counter with the representatives of American families.

It is not necessary to embellish the tale. It reads sufficiently sensational as a plain recital of actual happenings. In millions of homes just now ice is being delivered. It is supposed to be sold by weight. The ice man weighs it, or appears to weigh it. Does he? Here is the story of the bureau of weights and measures man:

A regular raid was made one day on the ice deliverers. Out of five hundred and eighty-two examined one hundred and seventy-nine violators of the law were found. Eighty-five of these dealers were not even making a pretense of weighing the ice. The man was merely handing out as small a piece as he liked and no one had the sense to call him to account for it. In the other cases the scales used were "doctored." The driver of the ice wagon was using the ice that he thus stole from his customers to sell for his own account.

In the coal business the conditions were found to be even more remarkable. Some of the dealers had no scales at all on which to weigh the coal. They simply did not burden themselves with such unnecessary adjuncts to a profitable business. When a ton of coal was ordered they put up as much, or as little, as they pleased, sent it along, had it shot down on the sidewalk or carried in as circumstances or the wish of the purchaser required, and thought no more of it, until the inspectors descended on them and haled them to court. Now don't begin to pity your neighbor. Did you weigh the last lot of coal you had in? Did I? No, of course I didn't any more than you did. We both took it for granted that the dealer was giving us a square deal. Perhaps he was. But the inspection of all the dealers at odd times might be valuable to the community.

To continue the woeful tale: One coal dealer put up his coal in bags, each bag purporting to weigh a hundred pounds. On a ton load re-weighed twenty bags were found to contain but 1,670 pounds—a net shortage of 330 pounds, or more than one seventh of a ton. An excellent scheme for the coal merchant when coal is sold for $6.50 a ton! The fact is we all accept any load that looks like a ton without question, and how many of us know what a ton of coal should look like?

But it was in the poorer districts that the cheating was found to be most iniquitous. A coal peddler was observed in the act of weighing out a supposedly hundred weight of coal upon a pan beam scale. It was noticed that the counter poise on the free end of the beam was missing, making the weight of the pan or scoop count with whatever article was weighed. It was also noticed that the four pound pea was set in the ninety pound notch, making, as was afterwards ascertained, a total steal of twenty-five pounds.

An interesting little scheme was unearthed in connection with one coal yard in which the deliveries were always taken for granted by customers. The wagon was first weighed, as is the case in all well regulated coal yards, and this weight deducted from the total weight when the loaded wagon passed on to the scales to be weighed for its contents before delivery. But observation and inquiry disclosed the remarkable fact that when the wagon was first weighed it was weighed without the driver. When it was weighed for the second time the driver sat on his perch, thus adding his weight to that of the coal. In the case of a man who happened to be on the wagon at the time the cheat was discovered the weight of the driver was 150 pounds and the customer was about to take on trust a load that was just that much coal short of the quantity he was entitled to. The trick was a deliberate attempt at theft.

Of the tricks discovered among the small grocers—and some large ones, too, it may be remarked—the most common was that of short weighing packages put up by the assistants during dull times in the store for use when a rush of business came. When the customer asks for three and a half pounds of flour the clerk reaches for one of the made up bags, hands it out, and the customer departs, well pleased at being served with such dispatch, carrying a bag that is several ounces under weight.

Sugar, tea, coffee, and other articles put up in packages during the time when the clerks are not busy have been found by the inspectors in innumerable instances to be grossly under weight. The customer has no opportunity of checking this swindle unless he or she weighs the package on the return home, and in how many households would such a thing be done? It is always taken for granted that the grocer is an honest man. One man caught at the short weight trick told the inspector that ninety-nine out of a hundred grocers did the same thing. He was doubtless speaking vindictively, as the man found out will do, but inspection is a highly desirable thing.

The number of butchers who have been found by inspectors to be using their scales as an avenue to an early retirement on a comfortable fortune is astonishing. Only on the assumption that the shoppers in this country are the most easily gulled in creation could the stories of fraud be believed. The indicators on the scales were found to be bent so that as much as a quarter of a pound would be saved to the butcher on each scale. The customer, it was explained by one grinning butcher, pleased with his own cleverness, never looked at the point from which the indicator started, but might glance at the point of its stopping to assure himself that he was getting his money's worth.

Most of the butchers whose games were stopped by the inspector did not take the trouble to bend pointers. They fixed the scale so that it never registered properly. One genius had sleight-of-hand salesmen who were provided with scales so delicately adjusted that the indicator wouldn't stop long enough for a customer to see how much his purchase weighed. The delicately swung pointer would dance up and down at widely divergent lines on the indicator. When it had danced to a point where the butcher had greatly the best of it, the sleight-of-hand operator would whisk the purchase off the scale, wrap it up and slide it over to the customer. There was never any complaint. It was all too bewilderingly rapid for the average shopper.

Of the number of articles used to make the purchase weigh more and thus give the storekeeper the benefit of the shortage it is almost impossible to speak in detail. Some storekeepers were found to have lumps of putty under the pan of the scale. Others had a handful of wire nails at the bottom of the scoop, kept from rolling around and disclosing their presence by a little cement, the cement of course also adding its weight to the amount that the customer paid for but didn't receive.

Most of the devices used, however, were not so badly fraudulent as these. No one would suspect an innocent looking package of paper hanging to the scales to be there to add to the weight of the purchase. It is used to wrap up the purchase, but its weight is on the customer's side of the scales always.

On one scale a seven ounce piece of solder was found on the pan. The storekeeper's excuse for weighing the customer's purchase with this solder was that there was a hole in the pan of the scales and he had placed the solder there because otherwise he would be cheating himself. This bar of solder is shown in one of the illustrations just as it was found.

So great a variety of hardware has been found on scales, in full view of the customer who was made to pay for their weight with his purchases, that it would take considerable space to enumerate them. The favorite is a hook or two, or three according to the nerve or rapacity of the tradesman. A hook looks like an innocent attachment of the scale itself and no one stops to inquire whether or not it is cheating him out of part of his purchase. The beauty of this addition of the weight of an iron hook to that of the customer's purchase is that the indicator registers correctly and the customer never dreams that the hooks hanging on the scale cause a short weighing.

One of the most ingenious of this variety of tricks was discovered recently by an inspector. The storekeeper had hung an electric light bulb over the hook of a scale. It looked like exaggerated honesty on the part of the tradesman, in placing a light where the indicator could be plainly seen by the customers. No one but the inspector saw through a scheme that added two ounces to the weight of every purchase.

Of the small street peddlers found to be using crooked scales the number was legion. The easiest trick was to place the scales on the wagon or borrow at such an angle that a correct weighing was impossible.

The bureau has an interesting collection of seized scales and weights. In the museum are weights that have been bored into so that some lighter substance might be substituted for the metal, spring scales with the spring fixed so that a five pound test weight placed heavily on this scale registered five and a half pounds and if laid on lightly but four and a half pounds; weights light from half to four ounces, scales with the pointer broken off and a piece of wire tied on to the broken end with a rubber band, and butcher's scales with as much as three and three quarter ounces weight of hooks attached to the hook of the scale.

In only a few towns, as explained, are the weights and measures of the tradespeople examined systematically. From what has been discovered by this one bureau the prodigious amount of cheating that is going on all over the country may be imagined. The trust magnates are not the only robbers.—H. D. Jones in September Technical World.

Lean Hard.

Child of My love, lean hard!
And let Me feel the pressure of thy care.
I know thy burden, for I fashioned it—
Poised it in My own hand, and made its weight
Precisely that which I saw best for thee.
And when I placed it on thy shrinking form,
I said: "I shall be near, and, while thou leanest
On Me, this burden shall be Mine, not thine."

So shall I keep within My circling arms
The child of My own love; here lay it down,
Nor fear to weary Him who made, upholds,
And guides the universe.

Yet closer come;
Thou art not near enough. Thy care, thyself,
Lay both on Me, that I may feel My child
Reposing on My heart.

Thou lovest Me?
I doubt it not; then, loving Me, lean hard.

Dear Readers: I will write you this once again from the South Sea Islands. The church papers of the last mail (May) brought the change of my husband's appointment from here to California; therefore we are looking forward with eager expectations to go to our dear native land, on the next mail boat, where we can mingle with Saints again; Saints whose very presence is cheering, and whose experience, conversation, and testimonies are like so many outstretched helping hands.

How eagerly we scanned the papers for conference news, but the effect was very much like that of reading or talking of music; the papers told about it, but did not convey the music, i. e., the portion that satisfies. But while reading Bro. F. A. Smith's pastoral to the Saints of the Pacific Slope Mission, I was enthused with zeal for the work as in days ago, for I felt that we were of the people to whom he was writing, or soon would be; and I wondered what I could do in my settled down condition, to help the work in that mission. I know of one line of work, which is duty, in which the sisters can do much, all sisters whether young or old, rich or poor; although they may never bear a testimony or utter a public prayer, or talk doctrine to any person; and that is, if an elder calls upon you, make him welcome. And if possible with your household duties, even make a little sacrifice of the "Martha" part in life, and be a "Mary" for the time being, and listen to instructive conversation while the opportunity offers, whether your husband is at home, or whether he is not. And if it is anywhere near meal time, or time to commence preparing for it, be sure to ask him to stay and eat with you. And while you are making ready, leave him to himself. He will enjoy the hour of quiet, with books and church papers. Do not feel embarrassed because you may have nothing more to offer than a very ordinary meal, or perhaps not so good as you usually have; with a tidy looking table, and a good welcome he will be satisfied, and you will feel much better than if you had inwardly excused yourself because there was not anything good in the house to set before him, or because you were hurried with your work, could not sit with him, or did not like to leave him alone, etc., etc. Elders require time to think occasionally, and would enjoy being shut up alone in the sitting-room an hour or two. Do not excuse yourself either, by saying, O, well, he is staying at Bro. So and so's, and of course he will get his dinner or his supper there. Of course he might, or he might get it at a restaurant, or go without, and not be in a very good condition for preaching in the evening, not because of going without his supper, but from the apparent lack of appreciation; and consequently not in the best condition to draw from the spiritual storehouse for their benefit. We know not how far we sisters may be responsible for a dearth of spirituality among the traveling elders. If he is not cordially received in one house, he dreads to go to another, especially near meal time, and does not know what to do with himself, which is not conducive to spirituality. But when cordially received by the Saints, and even a few pennies slipped into the parting hand; and on his part, wisely directed conversation, and a fervent "God bless you," both are happy, and in a position to enjoy the good Spirit. How I used to look forward to those benedictions in the early days of our experience in the church! And who shall say their impress has not been felt all through the succeeding years?

Some portions of the "Pacific Slope Mission" have, in years, that are past, been the scene of as great a degree of faith, zeal, and spirituality as has been witnessed in the Reorganization. And I wonder if it was not largely owing to the Saints being so ready to welcome the elders to their houses; yes, almost ready to quarrel with any who presumed to invite them more often than was their rightful share. There was no gossiping done in those days. The conversation was solid food. The faith of the Saints, and their eagerness to learn was an incentive to the elders to instruct. Faith produces faith. I will note one instance of the kind. Bro. D. S. Mills had been talking preëxistence to us. We had never heard it before, and were much interested in the subject, and wanted to hear more. It was then late in the afternoon; he was going to preach in the evening, and one of us, either my husband, or I, asked him to preach on that subject. He was taken by surprise, said he had never preached on it, neither had he looked it up. It was then my turn to be surprised, for in my uneducated faith I believed that he, or any other true servant of God could preach on any subject that pertained to the gospel without preparation, that the words would be given them in the very hour; and said, "If it is a true principle you can preach on it whether you have looked it up or not, and we would like to hear it from the stand." "Very well," he said; and I hastened to the kitchen to get supper. And he did preach on it to our entire satisfaction, and his own also. A good while afterwards he told us that the sermon was about as new to him as it was to us; that he then saw the subject as he never had before.

And now, dear sisters, we will all want to share in the reward for good works in the hereafter, will we not? So let us share in the good works here, and help to bring to pass a bright and successful year in the gospel work, and the reward will be sure.

We have not heard from Bro. and Sr. Lake since last writing. All Papeete are as busy as bees getting the town and the people ready for the 4th of July festivities. We hear that as many extra berths had been improvised on board the Mariposa as there was room for, and yet some had to be refused who desired to take passage this month. All are well at Taronā.

Letter Department

Dear Saints: We often read articles on consecration and what the rich men should do. I would like to drop a few thoughts regarding the poor man. The Bible states that it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of heaven; but in the Doctrine and Covenants we find this statement: "Woe unto you poor men, whose hearts are not broken, whose spirits are not contrite, and whose bellies are not satisfied, . . . whose eyes are full of greediness."—56: 5.

As I have always been numbered among the poor, I am not in a position to speak of the feeling of any but the poor and judge by my own feelings. Let us be honest with ourselves. "Be not deceived." But is there not often a feeling of covetousness or greediness? We may say, to deceive ourselves, "I am able to take care of myself, but I think those moneyed Saints should consecrate their money, so this or that poor Saint would get along better." Why worry yourself about "that" poor Saint? If you desire equality you can soon make them equal with yourself. God is able to care for all his children. We have all we can do to keep ourselves straight. The Doctrine and Covenants says, "He that watches for iniquity shall be cut off." It is not that we feel so bad for our poor brother or sister but that it hurts us to see them have more than we have. If any rich brother has taken anything from you unjustly, follow the law and have it made right.

No doubt but our well-to-do Saints are occupying better than we would if we were placed in their position, and we have a work to do just where we are, or God would make a change. He is the ruling power; let us trust him more and have more love and charity for all, rich and poor, weak and strong.

Let us read Malachi 3, remembering that God is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever. If the promised blessings are not received, the fault is with us, not with God; and I would say the same concerning the word of wisdom. Some hobby about tobacco, some coffee, some meat, while they are all equally important; but there is another point that I have not seen commented on: What about fruit out of season? I have just jarred eight quarts of apricots. Perhaps I am going contrary to the word of wisdom; as much so as my brother who drinks a glass of beer. We must remember the provision, "Keep my commandments." That does not mean simply to be baptized and have hands laid on us. We must live by "every word that proceedeth" from the mouth of God.

When I think of my many failings and shortcomings after receiving the many blessings I have received from my kind heavenly Father, I feel sad and think perhaps many in the world (or out of the church) have lived up to the light they have received better than I; and why should I censure them because they do not take kindly to the restored gospel? I do get discouraged sometimes when my neighbors do not care to talk on the religious subjects and I can not enjoy their association as I would that of the Saints.

I wish to express my appreciation for the HERALD. I would be lonesome indeed without it and the Autumn Leaves and Hope. I think "Success or Failure" is fine. I hope it will be published in book form. I would like to read it to my boys when they get larger. I can not keep my papers, for I am always giving them away.

I was reading the brother's letter on the Sabbath in last HERALD. I think his argument rather weak. I was a sabbatarian once. The same argument (that journey proposition) will apply to Sunday. I consider it the best plan to show them that the ten commandment law is not the gospel law, and I think they will find it hard to establish three laws. They have the moral law, or ten commandments and Mosaic law, yet where are they going to get baptism if the ten commandments are the "perfect law."

Well, dear friends, it is not easy to write and take care of babies. With love to all the household of faith, let me admonish you who are associated together, to remember that "if thy brother offend thee go to him alone." Do not try to deceive yourself into thinking you are not offended. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and asking the Saints to pray for me, that I may let my light shine, and if unable to do any good at least I may be kept from injuring the cause we all love so well,

Your sister,

FLORENCE PROPST.

COLUMBUS, Nebraska, August 14, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am out trying to cheer up the members and also to see if we can gather in some tithes and offerings into the Lord's treasury. I have been successful, to some extent, and see the work looks brighter. Our district is large, in length and breadth, but has only a few branches in it, and there is a large number of scattered members, anywhere from one to twenty in a place. This makes it slow work in visiting them. I want to visit all the scattered Saints in the district if I can; but do not wait for me to come and see you. Send your tithes and offerings to my home address, Blair, Nebraska, and get your receipt.

Some wait until the end of the year to pay tithing. If all should do so, what would the families of the missionaries do? The only thing that would be left for them would be to starve or have the husbands come home and go to work. You do not want them to do either, do you? For you get down on your knees and ask God to bless those who are sent out to call men to repent, and you also pray God to speed the day when we shall be gathered to Zion. How can God do these things when he has said we are to be workers together with him, and we fail to do our part? In that case we can be sure of but one thing: God will not be bound to do his part.

Did you ever think about this, that one tenth of all we possess belongs to God, and we will be held for it just the same as if we owed it to some man? We think God is very good and kind, that he will look over our debts to him; but what does he say? "Ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings." So how does this place us? It may seem a little harsh, but it says "robbed," and I have always understood that to mean the same as steal. And the book says, "Let him that stole, steal no more." And we are taught that when we know we have done wrong, we should repent. "Repent" also means to restore to every one that which belongs to him. Therefore, if one tenth of all we have belongs to God, we must restore it to him, or, as we speak of it, pay our tithes and offerings. If we fail to do so, then we are considered thieves and will be so judged. Let us take a warning from this and escape the wrath of God.

As an agent of the Lord in this part of the work, I ask you to give Him, as soon as you can, that which belongs to him, and if you do this because it is right, I can also promise you that he will be with you. Let me hear from all the scattered Saints in this Northern Nebraska District, and if I am able to visit you I will do so. I have found some good live members among those who are scattered, without a teacher or church; but God is with them and is blessing them day by day.

There have been some baptisms at Omaha lately. So a few are taking a step upward, being made anew. God has been with me, and I have felt to rejoice in him. Bro. Baker is making a good fight at Omaha, and we can see, under his care, (if the Saints honor him,) a more united advance made in Omaha against the sins of that city. He is a good and true soldier of the cross. Asking the prayers of the Saints that I may retain God's Spirit, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

H. S. LYTLE.

NAYLOR, Missouri, August 7, 1908.

Dear Herald: These lines leave me busy in the Master's work. Elder A. J. Fletcher and I came in these parts about three weeks ago and have been engaged in tent-meetings ever since. We have baptized five noble souls. The Naylor Saints are wide awake. Elder Henry Braun is the presiding elder, and Bro. Tom Lucas the priest. These brothers do some missionary work also on the outside. The Saints are talking strongly of building a church house. They are willing to sacrifice.

Next Monday we set the tent in the city of Naylor. Preacher Hunt (Baptist) says we will not be allowed to preach there, but we are going to "sight" him. Some of them down here think the "Mormons" (as they call us) will not be protected.

The other Sunday one Mr. Hart lectured at the Taylor Schoolhouse against us. After he dismissed I called the house to order and commenced to reply. This so enraged Mr. Taylor that he came up to the rostrum and called for help to take me down. I did not think he needed much help. Five men came to his side. Taylor mounted the steps, but he knew where the line was, and did not step over. He was afraid to touch me, for the majority of the people were determined that I should have fair play.

After Mr. Hart had concluded his lecture he put it to a vote whether I should reply and I received a good majority. He was so unprincipled he would not announce me, but said he would lecture after dinner. However, his "clique" made so much confusion I had to postpone my reply and finish at the tent at night. We intend to prosecute those who disturbed the peace.

This seems to be a ripe field. Bro. Smart had to leave on account of poor health, Bro. A. J. Fletcher has volunteered to labor the rest of the conference year in Southern and South-eastern Missouri. Saints, remember him financially and also the tithing law. My home address is 2219 Kellett Street, Springfield, Missouri. The church needs your help badly. Just ask the question, "Am I in the faith?" and act accordingly.

In the conflict,

A. M. BAKER.

OTTAWA, Kansas, August 9, 1908.

Dear Herald: We are among the isolated ones, not having any privilege of meeting with the Saints at all. There are none in this part that we have heard of. We came to this vicinity last spring and have been trying to let our light shine to those about us. We take all the church papers and do not hardly see how any one could be a Saint and not take them. We have been letting our neighbors read them. Some seem to be interested. One of them, after reading Bro. W. A. Smith's sermon on "The union of churches" in the Ensign of August 7, said he thought that was sound logic and he would like to have an elder come here who could talk like that.

We would be very glad to have one come, so if any should see this that can come we will give them a home and get them a house to preach in. We live five miles southeast of Ottawa.

Your brother and sister in gospel bonds,

MCKENZIE, Alabama.

Editors Herald: The Alabama reunion is history. The Saints of the Pleasant Hill Branch met and organized Friday morning, July 31, with T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, and F. P. Scarciff as president; M. S. Wiggins as secretary; D. T. Parker chorister; and Eugenie Parker organist. Committee to select speakers: D. T. Parker, W. A. Odom, and L. G. Sellers.

The order of meetings was: Prayer at half past nine in the morning; preaching at eleven in the forenoon, and at fifteen minutes to eight in the evening. Speakers: T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, F. P. Scarciff, W. J. Booker, Moroni Hawkins, and William West. But right in the middle of the reunion, we lost one of our main speakers. Bro. F. M. Slover was called to his home in Independence to his sick family. We regret very much losing him and that he was needed at home; but it was beyond our power to prevent, and we hope that by this time they are well.

This is our fourth reunion, and I believe the most spiritual one yet, though there was less work done, there being only seven prayer-meetings and seventeen preaching meetings, and two business sessions. Still the prayer-services were soul-cheering and edifying, and the preaching was instructive, being presented with much power and great force.

There were fifteen baptisms, all children but one. We had fair crowds during the day and large crowds at night. It seems that the people are getting better acquainted with the work and we are gaining friends on every side. If the Saints would only live up to the light they have, there would be a great awakening in this country.

The committee digressed only a little from the regular routine, and gave us a very interesting musical and literary program on Friday night, giving new courage and life to the people. Such changes are productive of much good I think, and there should not be a reunion without more or less of this kind of work.

We had quite a number of visitors from the Florida and Mobile Districts and were very glad to have them with us, and so will give them an invitation to come back next year.

The reunion next year will be at same place, beginning July 30 and running ten days. The reunion committee consists of J. B. McPherson, W. W. Parker, and L. G. Sellers.

Ever looking for the redemption of Zion,

I am yours in Christ,

M. S. WIGGINS.

MADISON, South Dakota, August 7, 1908.

Editors Herald: Although I have not made use of "printers' ink" for some time, I have in no sense lost interest in the great latter-day work and its ultimate triumph. Neither have I been idle, but for other reason I have not availed myself of the privilege of writing in your valuable columns.

Leaving home and loved ones I started for my field of labor about July 8. A little late as will be seen, but the birth of a daughter in our home accounted for the delay. I made brief stops in Omaha, Council Bluffs, and Sioux City. I spoke to the Saints in the last named place on my way up.

Upon my arrival here I found my colaborer, Bro. E. Rannie, getting busy in making preparations for tent work. Everything was put in ship shape order for our opening, which took place on July 19. We had some booklets printed advertising the meetings, also made use of the two daily papers which granted us the use of their columns in notifying the people who we were, and other items concerning our meetings.

The first real gun was fired at four o'clock in the afternoon on above date by Bro. Rannie to a crowd numbering about thirty grown people. His subject was along the line of the history of the church, making a special distinction between us and the Salt Lake people. At night I spoke on Utah Mormonism and tried to point out the wide differences in the two churches. About the same number were present as at the afternoon service. From that time on for a few evenings we had a fair attendance, but after a while the crowds began to get smaller and now we are not crowded for room.

Prejudice in a prominent way has manifested itself, but some few have shown a marked interest and we are not at all discouraged.

On one occasion a minister attended our service, and at the conclusion, upon learning the fact that we believed that all men would be saved according to their works done in life, he became somewhat irritated and showered some of his criticisms at the writer. We answered as best we could between sentences, as he seemed to think that he was the only one worth listening to. I have a string of titles almost as long as the moral law. Among some of the names he thought we were deserving of are, "a wolf in sheep's clothing," "hypocrite," "fool, that can't read Hebrew, Greek, or Latin." He informed me that he was going to notify the people to stay away. I asked him if he considered the people did not have intelligence enough to think for themselves. To this question he replied that they had not, but afterward corrected his statement. Things have been moving slowly along since that time and I have not discovered any falling off in attendance, partially for the reason, perhaps, that the attendance was small then and is still small.

We expect to go from here to Huron in the near future.

Just how long we will be in that city will depend on the interest manifested.

We are expecting Bro. H. O. Smith to arrive to-day, and no doubt he will be able to give us some assistance. We hope to see Bro. W. H. Kelley, but so far have not learned whether he will find his way to this part of the mission or not.

We hope to reach several places in the district before the cold winter sets in.

In some respects I think this field is about the same as other fields where I have labored, but we have some things to discourage the missionary here that I have not found in other places. I am glad of one thing, however, and that is we have a number of good, honest Saints who are willing to sacrifice for the sake of truth and to assist in getting the gospel before the people. I am hopeful that some fruit may be laid up for the Master's kingdom, as a result of our labor.

In gospel bonds,

L. G. HALLOWAY.

FRAZEE, Minnesota, August 9, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have been a member of the church for a good many years and have received many blessings. I have also passed through many trials, especially during the past two years. Since I was called to the office of priest and later to that of elder I have tried to the best of my ability to perform the duties placed upon me, and have met with many temptations and trials. Satan has tried me and tempted me to turn back and give up the work, but I have prayed and struggled along in my weak way and now I feel that the Lord has blessed me.

We have Sunday-school and prayer-meetings at our house every Sunday and sacrament every four weeks with fair attendance. On last Sunday, August 2, after Sunday-school, five gave me their names for baptism. Most any elder can imagine how I felt, for I had never been called on before to baptize. But I was determined to do the will of the Father, so we all went down to the river, a few minutes walk from the house, and I baptized them in the presence of quite a crowd. I thank God that he gave me strength to do his will, and I am hoping that before long I can arrange my work so I can have more time for study and attention to duty placed upon me.

My wife's mother is living with us now. She, also, is a member of the church. My whole family now belong. I would like to have some of the elders come this way. I had a letter from Bro. Whittaker, but at the time we all were afflicted with smallpox, so we could not answer his letter. We are now well and I wish he would come and see us.

Asking an interest in your prayers,

Your brother in the gospel,

WILLIAM C. GRIFFIN.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, August 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: Feeling the need of spiritual strength and development, some of us here attended the eastern reunion at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. We received more than our expectations; God's power was present; all seemed to enjoy themselves very much. It was a spiritual feast not to be forgotten. Not only were the gifts of the Spirit in evidence, but the fruit of the Spirit was present also, making one feel that it was indeed a blessing to be a Saint.

It was our first time to have met our worthy and beloved President Joseph Smith, whose counsel and example I can assure you were commendable. Apostle J. W. Wight's presence was very much appreciated; his effective preaching and testimony made us feel in Zion indeed. Missionary in charge, Apostle Greene, W. W. Smith, the Sunday-school pedagogue, were alive to their work. Our business manager, F. B.

Blair, made friends for the college. The new Massachusetts bishop, M. C., cared for the outer man. J. D. Suttill, district president, and many others that took part in preaching and testimony, singing, etc., were to be complimented for the success of the reunion.

The New York and Philadelphia District conference will convene here September 5, for the first time. We should like to see Bro. Greene with us. Inasmuch as he has not been here, he may better understand conditions for the work. Scranton is the third city in Pennsylvania; is the commercial center for half a million people, its population in 1907 being one hundred and twenty-five thousand and still increasing. It has many diversified industries; sixteen banks, two trust companies, forty-one school buildings, two high school buildings, one manual training-school, twenty thousand pupils enrolled, and four hundred and sixty teachers. We have ten colleges, five public libraries, eighty-five churches, three electric railroads, four steam railroads. Over thirty thousand people find steady employment in shops, factories, mills, and mines.

There is therefore, I think, an excellent opportunity here for a good missionary to tell the Gentiles of the angel's message, answering their questions and writing articles of information and defenses in the daily papers.

There are now four or more Utah elders here, who seem to be laboring systematically. They tract, preach on principal corners, sometimes twice in one night. I heard one of them say he visited five thousand homes in Philadelphia.

I shall be glad to see the time when our elders sent here do a similar work, not because the Utah elders do, but because the true gospel shall be brought before the people; for I believe there are many people in this city that could be reached with the "proper" effort.

I ask an interest in your prayers that I may walk worthy of God's blessings in this latter-day work.

Respectfully your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM F. HAWKINS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, August 13, 1908.

Dear Herald: Since last correspondence I have been busy, but have been hindered much because of bad weather. I tried lawn-meetings for near three weeks, but no special interest was noticed. Saints did well most of the time in assisting. Many were hindered in doing what they wanted to do. Have held a week of grove meetings, but the people were very busy stacking and threshing, so that it was not thought wise to continue longer at the present time; but there was an expressed desire that I should return and hold a longer series of meetings when the farmers were not so busy, which I will try to do.

I baptized one promising woman since last correspondence, the wife of Bro. H. H. Hand. Her interest in the work grows, and she will be an influence for great good if she remains faithful. Three others have been baptized of late, one a son of Bro. W. C. Fetter, and the other two were Sr. Maude Marshall and son, all of whom have a bright future before them.

We had the visitation of Bro. J. A. Gunsolley when on his way home from his northern trip. His visit did us good, giving encouragement to the study of normal lessons, and his preaching was instructive.

Last Monday night at the regular business-meeting all the branch officials were reelected, showing the confidence had in them by the Saints. But little to disturb the spiritual development of the Saints at the present, and many of those who were wandering out of the way have felt the attractive force of the Holy Spirit, and have in humility sought the Father's forgiving favor, and with few exceptions the Saints are in the way of life and struggling onward. The Religio is taking advanced steps of late, which makes us older Saints rejoice. The Sunday-school has largely recovered from its partially disorganized condition, and is gradually improving weekly. The library board has chosen as librarian, Sr. Orpha Emslie, who is bringing order out of confusion with the assistance of the board.

I find that the most effective work being done in the city is that done at the firesides. The Spirit of the Lord has blessed me abundantly in my public ministrations, and in my private labors, and some are becoming almost persuaded. The Spirit is opening up opportunities in a very satisfactory way, and the Lord is working with his Saints to minister the spiritual food needed, in some cases to their astonishment and joy, and the wonderment of their neighbors.

I start to the Eastern Iowa reunion to-morrow, and will return in time for the Des Moines District reunion. The preparation for the reunion of the district last mentioned is such that it should solicit the attendance of many of the Saints. It bids fair to be one of the best the district has ever held. The committee has left undone nothing within reason to add to the interest of those who will attend. The Sunday-school and Religio interests at these two reunions were left in my hands, by Bro. Gunsolley, and I hope to have the aid of every worker in the interests of these two auxiliaries to the church. We hope to see the normal work advanced, and shall do all in our power to that end. We urge all who have Sunday-school or Religio supplies, or Hurlbut's Normal Lessons to bring them to these reunions and come to make an active use of them. The district normal class of the Des Moines District will take up the work, and hold as many sessions as is consistent with the other exercises, during the reunion.

How often I feel my inability to do the things that lay nearest, and so few that have the devoted interest that leads them to seek to render the help that is within their power, that it places added responsibility on the few who will act! But how different now than it was years ago when there were but few who had any interest in the auxiliaries, and many were in opposition to them! I anticipate that the future is bright with prospects, and for this reason I labor on, hoping to give to the church those who will be more polished and effective helpers than I have ever been.

Letters from Australia and other distant fields indicate that the indifference so noticeably felt in Iowa is experienced there. The Spirit is being withdrawn from the people. A greater need of spiritual endowment is felt by all of God's servants in active service.

I am constrained to believe that too much stress is placed upon the children having money of their own, from which to give. It has had the tendency to increase selfishness in the home, and to divide the home interests in temporal affairs. I believe when tithing is paid by the father that all who are in the church of that family and not doing for themselves, should be included in those who have paid tithing. And I believe that all who are in the church of the family should be consulted in the giving, whether it be tithing or free-will offerings. I believe this would, to a large extent, unite all to save that the amount given would be larger. I have been led to think considerably along this line by some things that I have seen in the church publications. There are so many funds being raised that it is becoming a question of whether we are not overdoing things in the begging line. Nearly every Sunday there is a request to subscribe for something, and two and sometimes more committees are soliciting at times, and nearly all the time, for different objects, so that when the Bishop's agent or missionary comes along the members of the church feel that the burden is too heavy when they help, and if they do not, then the church work proper suffers, and sometimes the Bishop's agent is urged to do more active work, and the missionary, at times, is thought to be a little slow about pushing the work. It is hard to push the work in cities without funds to pay for printing and the rent of halls, or the advertising that has of late been referred to as so beneficial to the spread of the work, and it is hard for the Bishop to supply the needs of the work when the purchasing power of a dollar is being minimized by the increased price of nearly everything used by the missionary or his family. A centralizing of effort along the giving line would, in my opinion, be better for the church, and each family in the church.

Looking forward to the redemption of Zion, and to a place with the redeemed, I am encouraged to labor on, trusting in him who doeth all things well.

In the one faith,

1205 Filmore Street.

J. F. MINTUN.

COTTONWOOD LAKE, North Dakota.

Editors Herald: After our late state reunion, July 11 to 20, the writer went with Brn. Hilliard and Gunsolley across country westward. Through the kindness of Bro. William Stowell we were conveyed by team from Dunseith to Bottineau, and there we took the train for Antler, arriving in time to hold evening meeting. Bishop Hilliard delivered a sensible address in which the practical duties of Saints were pointed out.

The next morning Bro. Frank Howery drove us across to my house when, after a few hours spent in rest, Bro. Martin Spaulding drove us to the town of Sherwood. A socialist meeting prevented us from holding religious services, and we spent an hour listening to an exposition of socialistic principles by a Mr. Brower, candidate for governor of Illinois. Some good ideas were presented, and were it not that we have the "more sure word of prophecy," we might have been wholly captivated; but as it is we are not prepared to receive "another gospel." Now, for fear some may think we are misrepresenting the socialists, I quote as follows from their writings: "It (socialism) is the very marrow of Christ's gospel. It is Christianity applied."

In fact the claims of this new reform party were so strong that after Brn. Hilliard and Gunsolley left the next day for Canada, I felt impressed to shed a little light on the subject from a Bible source, and so announced a street service for Sunday evening, subject, "Socialism from a Bible standpoint." The result was a large crowd for our little town, and I distinctly received the assistance of the Spirit in that part of the discourse in which I showed the dual nature of every man and the necessity of a new birth, even by water and the Spirit, before selfishness could be eradicated from the human heart, that legislative enactments are totally inadequate to effect the desired end. All attempts to effect this, in any other way than the God-appointed way, would inevitably result in disappointment and eternal loss.

The next morning I took the train for Minot, where I again met Bro. Gunsolley, who reported a good time at the Hal-brite reunion.

At five o'clock in the afternoon I again boarded the train for the west, arriving at Ray four hours later. Next morning I started out on a twenty-eight mile trip on a load of lumber and store goods, and such a time! A genuine hot, southwest wind was blowing, nearly a hundred in the shade, and no shade, no trees, and only a small settler's shanty here and there. One tire of the wagon early showed signs of parting company with its fellows, soon after leaving town, but by pounding every mile or two we kept it on. Then one of the horses, a nervous broncho, gave indications of breaking down. So at sundown we had covered about eighteen miles. I wanted to put up at a settler's house, but the driver allowed that the horses, having been fed and rested, could make it in the cool of the evening. We started, and in a few minutes the tire came off. After much prying and lifting we got that fixed. Then came the mosquitoes in swarms. Through ravines and down steep hills we plunged, the driver evidently acting on the maxim that it is a poor horse that can not keep ahead of the wagon. When about two miles from our destination a sudden stop and a slight mixup with the horses and wagon decided the driver to unhitch and go the rest of the way on foot. I therefore arrived at Sr. Wheeler's at half past eleven o'clock.

Since then we have held meetings with good attendance and we fully expect additions to our numbers.

A few words of caution to Saints contemplating settling in the West. Do not go beyond the divide, that is, what is known as the "coteaus," or more fully, "plateaus du coteaus." It seems to be a natural division between where there is a reasonable amount of rainfall, and westward where irrigation seems to be necessary to success, unless you prefer ranching, which is a poor life for Saints and their children. Better study what the Lord has said about the gathering. I am afraid many are going west and will never return to take part in Zion's glory. Pray earnestly for the Spirit's guidance in all our ways, and we shall surely be led aright.

WILLIAM SPARLING.

EROS, Louisiana, August 17, 1908.

Dear Herald: We write you feeling that all will be interested in what we have been doing in the "sunny South," and the small measure of success we have had. Leaving home May 15, via the Kansas City Southern Railroad, I arrived at Dierks, Arkansas, where I met Elder James M. Smith, a bright and representative young man and a forceful and convincing speaker, as well as a pure and wise worker in the vineyard. We held three series of meetings in Arkansas, and on June 1 arrived in our field of labor, Louisiana.

We opened up at Benson, closed there and went nineteen miles to a place near Logansport on the Texas line or near it. Here we held a number of meetings, at the close of which we walked back a distance of nineteen miles and carried our grips. Fifteen miles were covered the first day, and at night Bro. James and self slept on the benches in an old forsaken church building of olden days.

At Pickering we stayed eleven days at the hotel (thanks to Bro. W. R. Pickering). Here we occupied energetically, Elder James M. Smith baptizing Bro. Alexander Jones. From there we made a long journey to Eros in the north central part of the State, where we have been for the last two months, speaking in three places, all within a radius of a few miles.

We both took the ague and fever here, Bro. James being unable to continue for one week and myself for two weeks. In fact, we preached one week when neither was fully able to stand, but the Father stood by us.

On August 16 we had the pleasure of leading two noble ladies, Mrs. Minnie V. Grant and Mrs. Sarah L. Morgan, down into the watery grave, and Elder Smith and I confirmed them at the water's edge, thus keeping the law. (See Doctrine and Covenants 52:3.) About two hundred people witnessed the event.

We must, at this point, speak of the kindness and sacrifice of the Saints here. They are truly generous and earnest Saints. Bro. Marion Fuller is a priest and their leader in their unorganized condition. We hope to see them all nicely united in a branch soon. They are all anxious to see Bro. I. N. White come this way.

We are in a difficult mission, and in the midst of the depths of error, confusion, and sin. Peace be to all, and blessing from on high.

EDGAR H. SMITH.

MADISON, Maine, August 17, 1908.

Editors Herald: I wish I could report a brighter outlook for our work in this State than I am able to do. The many agencies at work to uproot the work already planted, as well as those in force to prevent the seed sown from germinating, are legion.

Secret organizations, such as Masons, Knights of Pythias, Red Men, not excluding the Grange, seriously interfere with the growth and development of our people who are members or part of these organizations. Time, influence, and money are put in these orders, that should be used for the upbuilding and support of this greatest of all works,—the gospel.

I want to be placed on record as having both hands raised against these secret organizations as being right for, or beneficial to, the people called Saints. My experience here has strengthened my attitude as above expressed. The influence and associations attending these orders are not helpful to a spiritual, saintly life. It is the reverse in numerous cases. They seem to have a hold upon those who unite with them, that is fatal to spiritual interests, with very few exceptions. I think if some of our leading men who stand by these orders could see how fatal to our church interests they are, especially in Maine, they would be willing to exhibit the sentiment expressed by the great apostle in chapter 14, to the Gentiles in his letter to the saints at Rome. While extending liberty to all men to eat, drink, observe feast or fast days, etc., he would refrain from being a partaker in any of those things, where his weaker brother might stumble, or become weak. Does he not imply he would use his influence against those things? "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful." Is it not a fact that the ranks of the order of Free Masons are largely generated by "men of cloth,"—ministers? Is it not a fact that among these ministers are the most bitter foes this latter-day work ever had and still have? Do they not treat this work with scorn and contempt? Are they the friends of God? When uniting with this order, do you not vow to become a brother to each member thereof? When joining hands with them, then are you not occupying a "seat with the scornful" in the truest sense of the word? Is that the place where the flag or banner of King Immanuel can be raised to advantage? I will answer a most emphatic no to these questions. "Come out of her, my people," surely applies to those who have affiliated with that which has the impress of mystery—Babylon—upon it.

Our blessed Master, the Christ, can not look for his friends among the ranks of men who dishonor his work and use their influence to crush it out of existence. There never was a time when sterling loyalty to Christ and his work had a greater demand upon those professing his name than the present. There was never a time when the means in the hands of God's people could be used to better advantage than now. There was never a time when we could less afford to assist in the building of institutions which must crumble and fall, because of their worldly character and glory, than now. Our Saints' Homes, our Graceland, our Sanitarium, our children's home, our church publications, in fine, the building of our beautiful Zion, call for all we have and all our Father may bless us with, to establish and carry on the institutions he has named and approved. Oh that we may hasten the day by our faithfulness and loyalty to God and his most blessed church, that when he speaks to us it may not be by way of continual warning and admonition, but by kind loving commendations and approval of our work and service of love to him, because of our separation from the world and the proof we manifest of loving him with all our mind, might, and strength! If our interests are divided between God's work and the institutions of men (or devils as the case may be), how can our eye be single to the glory of God, our body be filled with light?

I believe our missionary in charge, Bro. U. W. Greene, had an experience in this State when being mobbed by some of the very order he had united with (if I am rightly informed), and when he used the sign of his order among his fraternal brothers, it passed by unrecognized. He finally withdrew from the order, after discovering the mistake he had made, and now has lifted a warning note against it. This to my mind is manly and right, and should go much farther as an argument against such orders or secret organizations than an exposition of the virtues and advantages claimed by those who prefer to remain with such organizations among the Saints of God.

I came here to labor in April last and applied for the use of a vacant building, the property of the Baptist Church. Of course the pastor to whom I applied had to confer with his church officers, with the usual result: I was denied the use of the building. After an interview of nearly two hours we separated, he to oppose any effort I might make in the interest of our work, I to engage a hall and do the best I could. He was true to his promise and the great day of accounts will reveal the results of my efforts. I opened up the work in a schoolhouse a few miles out, and a family named Read, well-to-do farmers (whose daughter taught school where I was preaching), were all deeply interested and all favorable to the work, when this Reverend McCaully made a house to house call, sending also one of his flock to warn them against this "Mormon monster." The result was a sudden change of atmosphere at my next meeting, and a chilly reception. My work was practically killed and no further invitation to occupy the schoolhouse. My audiences, also, in the hired hall fell off from thirty-five to five and six. I felt the Devil had scored a temporary victory through his true agents, both members, by the way, of the same secret order here in Madison.

I returned here a week ago, called upon a young man who has a tent fitted up for moving pictures. He said I could use the tent on Sunday. He would furnish electric light, etc., free of charge. I felt it was a good opportunity to reach a goodly number of people. My afternoon meeting was poorly attended, about eleven or twelve being present. I was offered some very fine slides on the life of Christ as a stereopticon display, which the young man was anxious I should use. I decided to use them, he to operate. But, alas, between afternoon and evening service, the same agents interviewed the moving picture proprietor; the result is the same as at the schoolhouse. I wonder, sometimes, why such characters are permitted to live to kill out the influence for good, brought about by hard service to God and humanity with prayers, tears, and pleading for success. I spent sleepless hours during the night trying to solve or unravel some of these peculiar happenings, when my mind was turned and directed to section 83, paragraph 16, of the Doctrine and Covenants. "He that receiveth you not, go away from him alone by yourselves, and cleanse your feet, even with water, pure water, whether in heat or in cold, and bear testimony of it unto your Father which is in heaven, and return not again unto that man. And into whatsoever village or city ye enter, do likewise. Nevertheless, search diligently, and spare not; and woe unto that house, or that village, or city, that rejecteth you, or your words, or testimony concerning me."

I believe I have rendered faithful service to God, the church, and the people of Madison. I advertised my meetings through the weekly paper, by posters in public places, by a large canvas notice, which could be read by any one, and delivered the message with all the power and plainness afforded me by the great and wonderful condescension of my heavenly Father. I feel my work here is done, unless specially sent for by those who have been convinced of the truth of my message, and as I leave I shall do as enjoined by the Master in his council to us his servants, as a testimony against those who have so persistently misrepresented me and the glorious work intrusted to my care. I do it with feelings of pity and sorrow for those who will suffer for the gross injustice heaped upon the work of God. I have no feeling of resentment in my heart towards my enemies, but feel constrained to honor the counsel given us by the great head of the church.

This thought is forced upon me, as I write: The time is at hand when God's servants will be instructed by the Spirit to refrain from covering the same territory again and again, but by a systematic and earnest warning of the people where they go to labor, they shall tarry until their work of warning is completed and their mission to such city, town, or village is finished; then their garments and feet can be cleansed from the blood and blame of that place, and their testimony to the Father accepted. I can see before me at such times, the outpouring of God's judgments upon the wicked and rebellious and the gathering out of God's people, even as Lot and his family were hastened from Sodom ere the consuming fire of God's judgment fell upon that doomed city. May we stand in holy places so that the angels appointed of God to conduct his people to places of safety may find us waiting for their ministrations. Let Zion adorn herself for her coming King, is the desire of our heavenly Father, the heavenly hosts, the church triumphant, and the faithful among men.

Yours,

RICHARD BULLARD.

NEW ALBANY, Indiana, August 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: I am again compelled to call the attention of the Saints of the Southern Indiana District to the fact that we have no money in our treasury. I am getting calls for aid from the poor, and need also to help the missionaries in our field. Certainly we should not let the Bishop send us money. Many of you can and are able to pay tithing and you should do so. I hope I will not have to make another personal appeal. Some few have done well, but many others have not answered my letter. Surely the Lord will not be pleased with such.

In gospel bonds,

JOHN ZAHND, Bishop's agent.

Western Canada Reunion.

The fourth annual reunion of the Western Canada mission was held with the Weyburn Branch at the Delight School-house near Halbrite, beginning July 23, 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon. J. L. Mortimer and J. A. Gunsolley were chosen to preside, T. J. Jordan, secretary. The branch musical committee was chosen to act during conference. They were Srs. Hattie, Frank, and May Jordan. The chairmen appointed John Neil and Alma Jordan to act as ushers. The presidency was also authorized to take charge of meetings during the sessions of conference. At the close of the first session Brn. Mortimer and Gunsolley made short addresses which were well received. The eleven o'clock preaching-service was in charge of W. J. Fisher. Bishop G. H. Hilliard was the speaker and the effort was a good one. Sunday-school convened at one in the afternoon in charge of T. J. Jordan. Bro. Gunsolley was chosen to preside. His opening speech was excellent and was followed by short talks from the following: Brn. S. Tomlinson, J. McMicken, B. Bergersen, and C. B. Bergersen, Bishop Hilliard, J. R. Neil, J. C. Mortimer, T. J. Jordan, and Srs. Amanda Fisher and Rosa Neil Vasbinder. A model class was organized with Sr. May H. Jordan as teacher. Their work was very interesting and instructive. Some criticism was offered at the close which resulted for the best good of all. Preaching at half past three in charge of Bro. McMicken, Bishop Hilliard being the speaker. The attendance was good and the effort splendid. At half past seven a Sunday-school program was given in charge of Bro. Gunsolley, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, readings, and some very interesting and instructive talks by Sunday-school workers.

On Friday, the 24th, morning prayer-meeting was in charge of Bro. Gunsolley. A good spirit marked this meeting. A feeling of unity and brotherly love prevailed. At eleven S. W. Tomlinson was the speaker, assisted by J. R. Neil. At one thirty in the afternoon there was a Religio session in charge of Bro. Gunsolley, which was very instructive. Preaching-service at half past three was in charge of William Fisher and Bishop Hilliard was the speaker, the Spirit of the Master blessing both the speaker and the hearers. In the evening again was preaching-service in charge of R. Broadway, Bro. Hilliard again being the speaker.

The branch business-meeting was held at half past eight, Saturday morning. The selection of officers resulted as follows: T. J. Jordan president, Florence Toovey secretary, C. B. Bergersen treasurer, R. Broadway priest, William J. Jordan assistant, J. McMicken teacher with Brn. B. Bergersen and Walstrom assistants, and C. B. Bergersen deacon. The Saints regret the resignation of Elder Fisher as president, owing to his moving away. J. R. Neil also resigned as deacon, owing to his early departure to attend Graceland College.

Prayer-meeting at half past nine in the morning was in charge of Elder Walstrom. A profitable time was had. Preaching-service at eleven was in charge of Elder Tomlinson, Bro. Gunsolley being the speaker. He talked interestingly on Graceland College and its mission. At half past one was a Religio service. General class work was taken up. The work was splendid and we hope for good results in the near future. At half past three there was preaching again, the meeting being in charge of Bro. Bergersen. Bishop Hilliard was the speaker. The time was taken up chiefly in "round table," and much information was given in regard to Zionistic affairs. This was plain teaching in a way we are all in much need of. Questions were answered to the satisfaction of all. Preaching at half past seven again in charge of T. J. Jordan. J. L. Mortimer was the speaker and his effort was commendable.

On Sunday morning was held a prayer- and sacrament-meeting in charge of Brn. Broadway and Tomlinson. The Spirit of the Master was present to bless. Preaching at eleven o'clock was by Bro. Gunsolley, which was a fine talk. The Sunday-school session in the afternoon was in charge of Bro. Gunsolley, in which regular lessons were taken up. At half past three preaching by Bro. Hilliard, assisted by Bro. Fisher. The house was full to overflowing at this meeting. At half past seven services were in charge of Bro. Mortimer. Bishop Hilliard was the speaker to a large crowd. This meeting closed one of the most successful and profitable reunions ever held in the West. We now have sixty-six members, and have been organized but four years. We have some excellent workers and the work is moving along nicely.

In the afternoon of Sunday, after the meeting, all repaired to the river near at hand, to witness the immersion of three candidates: Leala Nelson, and Mr. and Mrs. Retland. All were confirmed at the evening meeting, by Elders Tomlinson, Gunsolley, and Fisher. Surely it was a supreme delight to meet so many of the dear Saints. All did their part nobly. All of us partook of the great hospitality of the entire neighborhood. Bro. and Sr. McMicken turning over their entire house for the use of the Saints. We surely are indebted to Srs. May Jordan, McMicken, and Smith, who spared no pains in looking after our temporal bodies. Brn. Walker, C. B. and B. Bergersen, and Mr. and Sr. Twicky were there with tents and many were recipients of their kindness. Many others, also, contributed to our welfare. The Methodist people gave way both Sunday morning and evening and offered us the schoolhouse, which we surely appreciate very much indeed. Surely, as we have planted, God will bring forth the harvest.

We have four Sunday-schools, Zion's Hill, Rumford, Delight, and Weyburn Plains; one Religio, one aid society, and all doing nicely. May God speed the time when we will have more and more of his good Spirit, for surely all need of his good Spirit to stand in the holiest of places, as we perceive the sifting time is nigh. We hope soon to be gathered home to Zion where God will fight our battles for us and none can molest nor make us afraid.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Samuel A. Goodson, Venus, Texas, writes under date of August 7: "I am in the faith. We have closed a good conference. We had a splendid prayer-meeting Sunday morning. One Bro. Johnston testified that he was healed from terrible injuries received in a railroad wreck. He was given up by the doctors and was even placed on a cooling board. But the Lord healed him and raised him up. This was seven months before our conference, and he had come two hundred miles to attend. Brn. Aylor, Maloney, Hay, and Nunley attended and gave good sermons. Crops prospects good. Bro. Maloney had been preaching on the streets of Cleburne, with good attention."

Bro. James Eulitt, New Albany, Indiana: "I accepted this work thirty-one years ago, and find much comfort in the fact that I am a child of God, who has confirmed his promises to me."

Bro. Iver Carstensen, writes from Cordova, Illinois: "I am still holding fast that which is good, and I am trying to scatter seeds of good wherever I am. I try to show to the world that I am not of it. I have found some six or seven Saints here. Will some one let me know who our minister at Rock Island is? We want an elder to come and preach the word for us. I am hungry for it."

Bro. E. McEwin writes that Bro. and Sr. A. E. Burr lost their home and all household effects recently by fire, and they need assistance very much. Bro. Burr is needed in his ministerial work and can not be spared from it to rebuild. So what will the Saints do for them? Sr. Burr's brothers offer her a reward if she will leave the church, but she has stood faithful. Let all help who can. Send remittances to A. E. Burr or M. A. Burr, West Branch, Ogemaw County, Michigan.

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

Our membership is scattered over quite a large portion of the eastern part of the city. Our opportunities for gospel work are very good, and we are making progress nicely. The attendance at our church is fair. Since last writing Bro. A. T. Atwell baptized two, Bro. Leeton two, and the writer two. Nearly all are heads of families. These are all converts through preaching at private houses and cottage prayer-meetings. Through the efforts of the Centropolis mission, Bro. Ashbaugh in charge, many are becoming acquainted with us for good; but we are getting acquainted with our neighbors in the vicinity of our new church very slowly.

Our stake reunion convened on the 6th, and closed on the 16th. The committee had selected a beautiful place on high ground, covered with large trees, so that the ground was nearly all shaded. A splendid spirit prevailed from beginning to end, and the preaching was of a high, godly order, by Brethren H. C. Smith, A. H. Smith, G. H. Hilliard, A. H. Parsons, R. May, and R. Archibald. The sociability of the camp seemed to be the best we ever had in the stake. At the close a committee was appointed for next year with instructions to purchase a permanent place for the future.

Floating.

[The author of this touching poem, after many years of eminent professional success, was obliged, through illness, to give up all activities and lead a quiet life.—EDITOR.]

"Faintly as tolls the evening chime
Our voices keep tune and our oars keep time.

"Row! brothers! Row! The stream runs fast;
The rapids are near, and the daylight's past."

—Canadian Boat Song.

Yes, Brothers! Row! Row each his boat!
I row no more; I only float.
The stream, which long has been my road,
On which I hurried as it flowed,
And where the busy oar I plied
Or shaped my course from side to side,
Still strongly bears my failing boat—
I row no more; I only float.

I see the stream more swiftly run
Than when its course was first begun;
The rapids' boding voice I hear
Still drawing nearer and more near;
The noontide brilliance all is past—
Eastward the shadows long are cast—
But I no longer row my boat,
Or try to row—I only float;
Yet still find round me, none the less,
Abundant cause for thankfulness.

O Lord! Send Thou Thy peace to be Still a companion unto me,
That I may have no shade of fear
Of unknown rapids drawing near;
That I may hear the distant chime
Of bells beyond the walls of Time;
That I may feel my failing boat
Still in Thy guidance as I float,
Till I shall reach the tideless sea,
The Ocean of Eternity!

PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

No man can write, think, or talk intelligently about something he does not understand. That fact is none the less a fact because often ignored.

Even in the realms of fiction the most successful writer takes his imaginative flights from grounds with which he is entirely familiar. It is the rule that the most powerful works of fiction deal with characters, scenes, and modes of life that surrounded the author during the formative period of his life. No great book was ever written whose characters and events reflected the results of superficial observation or of information obtained at second hand. One of America's most famous short-story writers, Hamlin Garland, may be taken as an illustration. He was a product of the Middle West, and his early books, Main Traveled Roads, Prairie Folks, Wayside Courtships, etc., dealt with life in the Middle West. His types were living men and women, familiar to every dweller on the prairies. The reader came to understand their hard, unceasing, poorly-paid toil. With them he shared the summer's heat and the fierce winter storms. A thousand and one little details showed the author's intimate knowledge of the life of the prairie farmer. There was a reality about the whole that could be sensed by any one who had lived his life in Africa and knew nothing about the life of which Garland wrote.

Of late years Garland has essayed to work other fields, to him less familiar. He has written stories of the Klondike, stories of erratic cowboy life, stories of the precise East. His later books are flat, spiritless, and uninteresting. His characters are unreal and unconvincing. The author was never a part of the scenes that he attempts to describe. He stands outside the circle. He has never experienced the true inner life of the individuals and institutions of which he writes. He is not en rapport with his theme, and the reader quickly detects that fact.

If this is true of writers of fiction, whose work is more or less transitory, and written for the passing hour, how much more is it true of those who write along scientific or religious lines? There is a great deal of scientific writing, "falsely so called," current in newspapers and cheap periodicals that bears its own refutation in itself. And, at times, from the

We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
In feelings, not in figures on a dial.
We count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.
Life's but a means unto an end; that end
Beginning, mean, and end to all things,—God.
—Philip James Bailey.

inner ranks of the learned, some theory is expounded that can hardly have been reached after a comparison with known facts.

It is in the religious world, however, that we find the most deplorable situation. Men preach and write about God, without having any serious conception of his character gleaned from personal communion. The result is a hollow misrepresentation that men suspect, even when they can not clearly discern it. Men preach and write about religion, without having any profound personal religious experiences. From the charmed circle of the higher critics come doctrines that show an ignorance of the great text-book of religion, as well as of the common needs of humanity and the will and purpose of the Creator.

It was not so in the olden days. Men wrote of the things that they knew, as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. Prophets retired into deserts and solitary places and communed with God for long periods. When they stood forth to interpret him they could do so convincingly, because they knew his character, his thought, and his manner of speech.

John touches upon the thought in his first epistle where he says,

That which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the word of life. . . . That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. . . . This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.

Christ had his personal experience of fasting, temptation, and triumph. He got close to God. So close did he get that when he came forth as a teacher his hearers marveled because he did not teach as other men, but spoke as one having authority. No one ever really doubted the sincerity of Christ. His words rang true. They were coined in the mint of living, personal experience.

His disciples also were enabled to represent him so closely to the line of reality that their hearers perceived that they had been with Jesus and had learned of him. They went forth with an assurance that, unfounded, would have been absurd. One of them was able to say, "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding."

Paul, who did not accept the gospel until after the death of Jesus, and so in point of time had no advantage over those who live to-day, said, "Our gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power, and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

Such was the testimony of those who lived in the early days of Christianity. And, contrary to popular belief, the primitive church never saw the sun set on the day when immediate personal revelation ceased. They have been repeated in the history of the great latter-day restoration.

Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith testified as follows:

We, Joseph Smith, Jr., and Sidney Rigdon, being in the Spirit on the sixteenth of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand and eight hundred and thirty-two, by the power of the Spirit our eyes were opened, and our understandings were enlightened, so as to see and understand the things of God. . . . And, now, after the many testimonies which have been given of him [Christ], this is the testimony, last of all, which we give of him, that he lives; for we saw him, even on the right hand of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 76:3.

Listen to the testimony of Oliver Cowdery:

Man may deceive his fellow man; deception may follow deception, and the children of the wicked one may have power to seduce the foolish and untaught, till naught but fiction feeds the many, and the fruit of falsehood carries in its current the giddy to the grave; but one touch with the finger of his love, yes, one ray of glory from the upper world, or one word from the mouth of the Savior, from the bosom of eternity, strikes it all into insignificance, and blots it for ever from the mind! The assurance that we were in the presence of an angel; the certainty that we heard the voice of Jesus, and the truth unsullied as it flowed from a pure personage, dictated by the will of God, is to me, past description, and I shall ever look upon this expression of the Savior's goodness with wonder and thanksgiving while I am permitted to tarry, and in those mansions where perfection dwells and sin never comes, I hope to adore in that day which shall never cease!—Church History, volume 1, page 38.

Of his own experience Joseph Smith wrote:

I have thought since that I felt much like Paul when he made his defense before King Agrippa and related the account of the vision he had when he "saw a light and heard a voice," but still there were but few who believed him; some said he was dishonest, others said he was mad; and he was ridiculed and reviled; but all this did not destroy the reality of his vision, he knew he had, and all the persecution under heaven could not make it otherwise; and though they should persecute him unto death, yet he knew and would know unto his latest breath, that he had both seen a light, and heard a voice speaking to him, and all the world could not make him think or believe otherwise. So it was with me, I had actually seen a light, and in the midst of that light I saw two personages, and they did in reality speak unto me, or one of them did; and though I was hated and persecuted for saying that I had seen a vision, yet it was true; and while they were persecuting me, reviling me, and speaking all manner of evil against me falsely for so saying, I was led to say in my heart, Why persecute for telling the truth? I have actually seen a vision, and "Who am I that I can withstand God," or why does the world think to make me deny what I have actually seen; for I had seen a vision; I knew it, and I knew that God knew it, and I could not deny it, neither dare I do it; at least I knew that by so doing I would offend God and come under condemnation.—Church History, volume 1, page 10.

Nor are these isolated testimonies, for it is a matter of common occurrence in the prayer-meetings of the Saints to hear individuals testify that they know that this work is of God because he has revealed that fact to them. Of course, these experiences and these testimonies vary as greatly as do the individualities of men and women. There was but one Paul in the early church, and but one man had Paul's experience. But the promise then was and now is, "The manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." God set no time limit on that promise. It still reads in the present tense. It always will read in the present tense, with an ever increasing fulfillment, until we come to dwell perpetually in the presence of God. It is inclusive. No man is barred who truly obeys the law. The manifestation is to every man.

On the day of Pentecost Peter declared,

Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call.

That promise was as wide as the world and as unlimited as time.

The plea can not be made that God will not now grant personal experiences and testimonies to men. It is time, then, that more attention were given to their absolute necessity. When dealing with the eternal verities men speak most convincingly and intelligently when they speak from a rich personal experience.

Of course we can strengthen our convictions and enlarge our fund of knowledge by giving heed to the experiences and opinions of others. But what we feel, experience, and learn for ourselves must form the groundwork and center of our assurance. Nor can we in teaching go successfully far beyond our own experiences. No man can truly preach repentance who has never truly repented. No man can talk of love intelligently and convincingly unless he has loved God and his fellow man. No one can interpret the character of Christ unless he has come to appreciate Christ as a personal friend and Savior. And if those who have looked into the beyond find mortal tongue inadequate to explain its glories, what shall be said of those whose vision is wholly earth-bound?

ELBERT A. SMITH.

PRESIDENT SMITH IN DETROIT.

The Detroit Free Press, August 23, quotes President Joseph Smith as follows:

"I have had no quarrel with the Emmanuel movement," said President Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, and son of the Prophet, last evening, after preaching in the little church on Fourth Avenue, near Hancock Avenue.

"The Episcopal ministers are all right as far as they go, and sometime they will go the whole way; follow the example set by the Mormon church, and practice the laying on of hands and the anointing of the sick with oil."

President Smith appeared really pleased when assured that some workers in the Emmanuel movement are already advocating these very things.

"Time will be when the whole world will come to us," confidently said this son of the founder of Mormonism, apparently shaking off all the weight of his seventy-six years as he talked. "Were the teachings of the so-called Christian churches without error, there would be no differences among them.

"This morning we read of a move toward the amalgamation of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Roman Catholic Church. The Methodist Church, north, and the Methodist Church, south, are endeavoring to get closer together. The natural tendency is toward consolidation. But perfect agreement will never come until the churches confess the truth as the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints has it. I have been preaching this for fifty-two years, and I will continue to preach it as long as I have strength."

The Detroit News gives space to a short report of his sermon at that place and comments on his personality. We quote:

"Our position is a monogamous one. The law of God as given in the Bible, and the law of God as given in direct revelation to us is the law of one man and one woman. During all the years of my ministry I have fought the doctrine of polygamy as taught by the Utah church, and I deplore the popular idea that the doctrine of Mormonism includes approval of plural marriages."

Thus spoke Joseph Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, president of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, who is conducting all-day services for that congregation in this city, Saturday and Sunday. This distinguished son of the founder of Mormonism is returning to his home after a tour through Canada and a trip to Boston.

"My father was not a believer in plural marriages," he declared. "I was twelve years old when he died, and I ought to know. My mother was his only wife, and her children were his only children. He never claimed that his revelations included the teaching of polygamy. He did teach monogamy, and the false doctrine was introduced by Brigham Young and those who went west with him two years and eight months after my father was killed. Time and time again attempts have been made to prove legally that my father was a polygamist. They have failed. It has never been established as a fact."

Mr. Smith is seventy-eight years old and has been in ministerial work forty-eight years. His long face, with massive features, is lost in a snowy beard, but his voice and manner are vigorous and strong. He is accompanied by his second wife, perhaps thirty-five years of age and of remarkable personality. Her immense physique and strength make for a striking evidence of a wholesome type of beauty.

Reginald, aged six, the youngest son, accompanies him. The grandson of the Prophet is not a saintly youngster. This morning the entire household were thrown into panic because of his disappearance. The police was notified, and hasty searching expeditions organized, before he calmly strolled back to announce that he had been for a "car-wide." Joseph Smith has five other sons and four daughters. Besides his ministerial and missionary work he has edited the church paper for a number of years.

"And I'm proud to call attention to the fact that for all my long work I am a poor man," he said.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

John A. Slescher, editor of Leslie's Weekly, in a speech made before the convention of the National Editors' Association, at St. Paul, Minnesota, August 19, declared: "The urgent need of every great American city is for a daily newspaper that shall print less and better news; that shall exercise such censorship over its columns that no one's character shall be assailed, no institution's standing be discredited, no vested right be jeopardized, and no man or woman's motives pugned until the editor has justified his statements. Better less news and real news; better news a day late and right than a day earlier and wrong."

Apropos of editors, one of our subscribers sends the following to the HERALD Editors:

"When some high-minded editor shall go
From all the work and worry here below,
Thinking to dwell in fair elysian climes,
With surcease of bad stories and worse rhymes,
What if Saint Peter, at the golden gate,
Giving each comer his allotted fate,
Should, as the editor steps from the ranks
Of waiting spirits, say: 'Declined—with thanks'?"

LAMONI ITEMS.

President Joseph Smith, wife, and son Reginald reached Lamoni from Canada on Wednesday of last week and have been camping at the reunion grounds. President Smith preached to very large congregations Sunday morning and evening. They report a splendid time among the Canadian Saints and at the New England reunion. Brother Joseph says their trip down the St. Lawrence River was "the trip of all his days." He will soon give HERALD readers the benefit of his experiences. They resumed their homeward journey on Monday, having been joined here by their other boys, R. C. and Wallace.

Bro. Elbert A. Smith, associate editor, and his wife left last Thursday for Baxter, Iowa, to attend the Des Moines District reunion. From there they will go to Marathon, Iowa, where Bro. Elbert spent his boyhood days.

The Saints of Lamoni have enjoyed the opportunity of attending the stake reunion. Many have camped, and many have attended the various sessions from their homes. Several hack lines were in operation and all seemed to be kept busy. Elsewhere will be found an extended account of the reunion and should be of special interest to members of the Lamoni Stake.

The grand essentials to happiness in this life are something to do, somebody to love, and something to hope for.

The day returns and brings us the petty round of irritating concerns and duties. Help us to play the man, help us to perform them with laughter and kind faces, let cheerfulness abound with industry. Give us to go blithely on our business all this day, bring us to our resting beds weary and content and undishonored, and grant us in the end the gift of sleep. Amen.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Immortality.

The author of this hymn, James Montgomery, lived in Irvine, Ayrshire, Scotland, and died only as late as 1854, at the ripe age of eighty-three years. There were twenty-two stanzas, originally, in this hymn, of which the following seems to be the best selection:

"For ever with the Lord!"
Amen, so let it be!
Life from the dead is in that word,
'Tis immortality.

Here in the body pent,
Absent from him I roam,
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home.

"For ever with the Lord!"
Father, if 'tis thy will,
The promise of that faithful word
E'en here to me fulfill.

I hear at morn and even,
At noon and midnight hour,
The choral harmonies of heaven
Earth's Babel tongues o'erpower.

And then I feel that he,
Remembered or forgot,
The Lord, is never far from me,
Though I perceive him not.

So when my latest breath
Shall rend the veil in twain,
By death I shall escape from death,
And life eternal gain.

Knowing as I am known,
How I shall love that word,
And oft repeat before the throne,
"For ever with the Lord!"

The Spur.

Because of your strong faith, I kept the track
Whose sharp-set stones my strength had well-nigh spent.
I could not meet your eyes if I turned back:
So on I went.

Because you would not yield belief in me,
The threatening crags that rose, my way to bar,
I conquered inch by crumbling inch—to see
The goal afar.

And though I struggle toward it through hard years,
Or flinch, or falter blindly, yet within,
"You can!" unwavering my spirit hears:
And I shall win.

—Aldis Dunbar in the September Century.

One Soul.

Could any little lamp, though lifted high,
Lighten the void abysses of the sky?

Could a faint roseleaf, blown into the sea,
Perfume the oceans of immensity?

Could one chord sound in melody so far
That all space echoed to the farthest star?

And yet your soul, amid the infinite,
Makes all a fragrant harmony of light!

—Charles Buxton Going in the September Century.

Elders' Note-Book

FACE TO FACE WITH THE CITY.

St. Louis is a great city. I felt the spirit of the world present in power. It impressed me in three ways. First, an awe of its power; however right the gospel is, however pure, here was a great power that regarded it as a bubble. A great, well-dressed, rich, influential power also, that prided itself on being just exactly the realization of perfection, and if brought to notice us at all, by any means, would do so through its eye-glass in unmitigated scorn, or with that nonchalant curiosity that it would show over a specimen of fossilized lizard. Indeed I question if it would do so with the same interest. Here were heathen, but who dared speak to them? How could they be brought to hear our report? How like the breaking of a twig in the forest, that report sounded, or would sound amidst the bustle and stir of this great city! Here was Babylon, and here was a grain of sand.

It impressed me in another way. Alas! here was another Babylon. One sat in rich chambers, clad in purple and gold; the other, however scorned by her proud sister, is ever her haunted trouble, her untiring shadow, walking the street in every guise; evil, wretched, filthy, unclean, unclean, unclean. Hiding in noisome alleys or unholy recesses, under shadowing, moldy walls, where naught but black old piles of lumber, and tumble-down, decaying buildings met the eye.

Here was a great power also that might have been originated in the central pit of hell. Here were heathen; but who shall help them? Here was Babylon, from whose physical wretchedness and moral degradation one turned and fled as from a pestilence.

A shade, a picture arose in my mind, it was the form of the holy Son of God. Holiness, judgment, glory, clothed his form; and the vast city sank in power and appearance. The awe was broken. The grain of sand became a diamond, and was lifted above the whole city. A city with great excellence, but the gospel appeared more excellent.

It impressed me yet one more way. Here were stores of art, pictures of beauty and truth, carvings of delicate design and lesson. Here were enough pleasant and instructing sights to see, to last one a year, and cultivate his finer, better nature all the time. Here was the light that lighted "every man," shining in great clearness; but the higher light testified of the time when these things shall flow to Zion, when Christ shall reign, and Zion become the light of the whole earth.—David H. Smith, in TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, March 1, 1872.

When all things are finally averaged, the moral will be found to coincide with the useful.—Halleck.

EQUALITY UNDER THE LAW OF CHRIST.

SERMON BY BISHOP E. L. KELLEY, AT INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, APRIL 15, 1908.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

For our scripture lesson I invite your attention to the reading of the fiftieth Psalm:

The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, and called the earth, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah. Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God. I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt offerings, to have been continually before me. I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he goats out of thy folds: for every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fullness thereof? Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats? Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the Most High: and call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. But unto the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, or that thou shouldest take my covenant in thy mouth? Seeing thou hatest instruction, and castest my words behind thee. When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers. Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit. Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes. Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver. Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I show the salvation of God.

I judge there is no division of sentiment upon the question that equality is the law that should govern the household of faith, the church. It is taught in the Scriptures, due reference having been made in the Psalm that has already been read; it was taught by our Savior; taught by the apostles; and it is taught in the revelations of our own time.

From the latter I read:

Wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.

In connection with this I invite your consideration of paragraph 2, section 69:

And also my servants who are abroad in the earth should send forth the accounts of their stewardships to the land of Zion, for the land of Zion shall be a seat and a place to receive and do all these things.

You will notice from the reading that stewardships are not only the rule in the church in the land of Zion, but properly the rule outside; and we will try to refer, during the short time allotted, to some of the hindrances to the successful administration of the law of stewardships. In section 77, paragraph 1, we are directed as follows:

That you may be equal in the bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.

In section 98, paragraphs 1 to 3, we are instructed as to the direct cause of the disasters to the Saints in the early history of the church, and delay in entering upon the full administration of the law of equality:

I, the Lord, have suffered the affliction to come upon them, wherewith they have been afflicted in consequence of their transgressions; yet, I will own them, and they shall be mine in that day when I shall come to make up my jewels. Therefore, they must needs be chastened, and tried, even as Abraham, who was commanded to offer up his only son; for all those who will not endure chastening, but deny me, can not be sanctified. Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances.

The evidence shows clearly that it is the will of the Lord that equality shall exist among his people. And I suppose all will agree that that equality is the equality that is described in his law, too. It is not for the speaker, this evening then, to say what that equality shall consist of, except as he speaks in accordance with the law of Christ wherein equality is defined. The fact that men and women have not understood what the Lord's rule of equality is has led them to wrong conclusions in the church in the past, and leads them to wrong conclusions to-day. These misleadings, however, will not bring us nearer the goal that we hope to attain; but are the adversary's means of prolonging, or procrastinating, the time when we shall reach that hoped for condition.

If the Saints in 1833 so clamored over the questions of division and equality, as they understood them, that they actually transgressed to such an extent that they polluted the ground that God had permitted them to enter upon, we ought to be careful that we do not make a like mistake in our time. If he did not tolerate this in them, he would not in us. Notice again the reading. It was not simply on account of the fact that some members would not contribute to the treasury, while others would; but rather because the people were not in a proper frame of mind and heart so that God could perform his work among them. They were clamoring to have their own ways and rule in the matter. I will read just what the Lord says of their doings:

Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances.

Equality, then, is not to be attained by the clamor of the people in contradistinction to what God has spoken upon it. On the contrary it must be by, and in harmony with, his direction as contained in the law. This is further urged in the fourth paragraph of the same section:

Therefore, let your hearts be comforted concerning Zion, for all flesh is in mine hands: be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion.

I refer to this, for sometimes it has been said if the Lord would only speak he could hush the clamor to a certain extent. Has he not spoken upon a like occasion? Did he not say for us to be quiet;—"be still"? Contention and clamor is not the way to attain to unity; to oneness; to equality; to anything that God will accept in the hereafter. And we can lose what is before us as easily as his children did in the past. We can lose, too, when we may think we are doing God service, because of being misinformed and misdirected. We often misjudge because we do not know what other men have done, or what they are doing. We are uncharitable enough to think that we are performing our parts of the work, and that every one ought to grant this; but we can not trust our brethren to perform their parts of the work and extend to them the same worthy confidence we ask for ourselves. Zion will not be built up in this way, neither will equality, as outlined in the law, be thus brought about successfully or even entered upon.

Reading again from the Doctrine and Covenants, section 58, paragraph 9, we are instructed as follows:

And now, verily I say, concerning the residue of the elders of my church, The time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land, except they desire it through the prayer of faith, only as it shall be appointed unto them of the Lord. For, behold, they shall push the people together from the ends of the earth.

This shows what a wide and extended work is before us, and that we must not undertake to do something that will not meet the approbation of heaven, neither the commendation of wise and good men. For if we fall short of either of these attainments, we must fail, as others have failed in the past.

I have before me the article entitled, "Duties and responsibilities of the Saints," sent out by the Bishopric to the church January 18, 1902, and which was before some of the leading quorums for consideration at the time the Lord spoke upon the question the April conference following. The article states:

The full time having arrived under God's order and blessing, the Bishopric calls upon the Saints everywhere to yield full and complete obedience to every mandate of the law, with a free heart, willingly, and as the Lord has blessed every one, whether with much or little; and all to be used for the purposes designated in the revelation. The Presiding Bishop, therefore, will administer this law, take the testimonies and receive surplus properties and special consecrations of the Saints in every place according to the provisions of the law concerning the same. And the bishops in the stakes of Zion will proceed to administer the law of the Lord touching surplus properties and consecrations in connection with tithes and offerings in their respective stakes according to the rules and regulations furnished by the Bishop of the church, that there may be harmony and equality in the administration of the law among the people, making due report of the same to the Presiding Bishop. Bishops in districts, and Bishop's agents, will also carry out these provisions so far as the same are applicable, under the instruction and advice of the Bishop and his counselors. Thus the church will work unitedly for the building up and establishing of Zion, and her interests, according as the Lord has designated concerning stakes, and of churches outside, as provided by sections 58: 10, 11; 63: 8, 13.

I read this to show you the mind and purpose of the Bishopric in 1902, when it sent forth the article, "Duties and responsibilities of the Saints."

Then the question arose before the quorums upon this article as sent forth, What should be done with it? And the answer is what is found in the statement in the revelation, that the "application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to." That is farther along the road towards equality than any resolution that you have passed during the present conference. Why have I, then, been opposing resolution upon resolution here? Because piling up resolutions does not help but often hinders us in our work. They do not help us; they are a hindrance to our progress; for people claim afterwards, that we pass a set of resolutions one year, and another set another year. Suppose that the resolutions are just in harmony with the law as we have it before us, what then? By piling up resolutions, have you strengthened the law of Christ, or have you simply weakened the effort to execute the law, on the part of those who are in charge? Men should be wise!

Now another thought with reference to the interpretation of this law by the Bishopric. Each officer who is called upon to perform special work in the church is to decide for himself which is the proper way or manner under the law to perform that work. Some have contended there is an exception to this in that—the Bishop can not decide as to how he shall perform the work under the law. The thought is, We will tell him how to do his work! Now, can you not see how far that is out of line with the true way? You certainly could not make the Bishop the exception; and if not, then under such rule no individual can decide how he will perform his work. He would have to come and ask somebody else all the time. The true gospel theory is that when a person is sent out to perform a work for the church, Christ authorizes and instructs him by the divine Spirit, and thus qualifies him for the performance of that work. The Bishopric is no exception to this rule. And if Christ does as he promised to do, sends the Comforter with the promise that it shall direct or "guide you into all truth," why not let us trust him and move wholly in accordance with the law, instead of trying to execute by resolutions, and fostering the idea, often thoughtlessly thrown out, that we are altogether too far from the law in some things that we have done? For an illustration: I call your attention to a reference that was made by a member upon the floor during the conference to the tract entitled "An address to the Saints." I do this in order to show how far in our assertions we may get out of the way. The "Address to the Saints" is as much law to the church as the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is to-day. It was accepted and sent out by the Presidency, the Twelve, and Bishopric. The Seventy duly indorsed it. The High Priests indorsed it. The Elders indorsed it; and the lesser quorums indorsed it. Then it was brought before the General Conference, and the General Conference indorsed it as a law to govern the church, unanimously, with the exception of six votes. And yet somebody stands up here and says there is a great "loophole." This proves how far we can get out of the way. Is it proper for one to stand up here and attack the law as it exists, in order to carry out some special or pet idea? Certainly not; if one is dissatisfied with the law he must attack it in a direct proceeding before the courts, and not in a collateral way. The brother objected to the clause defining surplus, and read: "Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business,"—that is as far as it was read. Why did he stop at a comma? If a party wants to attack a paper he should read the full statement,—present what is in the paper; then if he can find a loophole, it will be worth paying attention to. The paper reads: "Whatever amount or kind of property can be spared by any person without injury to his business, or impairing his stewardship." What is his stewardship? His means of livelihood. Would this definition then injure any one or serve any one at the expense of another? Certainly not. But lest somebody might mistake the meaning, it is expressed in the same connection in a different way as follows: "In other words, it is that part of a man's property which he has more than he has need." Is not that according to the law? That is the "Address to the Saints." And it is correct, but the garbled quotation was not.

I proceed now with the main question before you, that of equality. I have already read from the law showing that in order to attain this we must have equality in both temporal and spiritual matters; which is quite right and proper. But what is equality? Let us approach that question as wise men, and see if we can not first decide what true equality is. We must have equality in temporal things as well as in spiritual things. How do we have equality in spiritual things? Does that exist to-day? If so, how does it exist? Here is a brother before me who simply holds membership in the church. Here is another who is president of a branch in the church. Another brother is president of a stake. And there is another brother over there who is the president of a district. Another one who is president of a mission. And we have the president of the church who presides over the entire church. Do they all have the same work? No. Is their work outlined in an equal quantity? No. Because one party is given to preside over a mission, is it a fact that nobody else is on an equality with him unless he is also given a charge to preside over a mission? No. Are we unequal because of these distinctions and differences in our work? Now there is not one of you who will say this makes inequality. Wherein does equality consist then? Equality consists in giving to each one opportunity and work according as he has talents and ability to perform, and permitting each one to operate according as his work shall be, to the interest of the church of Christ. Not every one doing the same thing. Not every one having the same thing; but each one performing the work that it is proper for him to do, and each one apportioned his work according to his calling and ability.

Now I believe that equality in temporal matters is approached in a like way; and that the individual who expects to approach it in some other way is patterning after the ways of the world, and not after the way of Christ. Did you ever hear tell of the world, in any phase of it, from the time of Adam to the present time, reaching the condition of equality after its ways? No! Then let us not pattern after the world.

Equality, as defined in section 81, paragraph 4,

Doctrine and Covenants, is as follows: "And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships." Who defines equality here? Christ. Is everybody willing to let him define what equality is? It has been said by some, Let us walk "according to the law of God." That is what I say. But it is not for everybody to jump up and tell what the law of God is on this or that, when the church has spoken, authoritatively, until he has in a direct manner attacked and overthrown the church ruling.

"Oh, well," says one, "the church might be wrong." But it is more likely the individual may be wrong than the church. The church is far more likely to be right; so we ought to forbear that kind of work. That is the reason there were jarrings, contentions and disputations, and lustful desires in 1833. Everybody said, "Nobody has a better right than I have to judge," and yet the Lord, when he was here, said, "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged." Men and women may judge unrighteously. They judge from different standpoints. Every man and woman is entitled to his or her opinion. Nobody tries to question that in the church. But we say this: That it is proper to place things in their proper time, and proper order in our work and assertions, that there may be harmony in God's house.

In defining what equality is, then, the Lord says:

You are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just: and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent.

God has never instituted any means to put a limit upon the work of individuals who labor for him. That is not found in the law anywhere. But he has given greater opportunities by supplementing the abilities or talents of his children; and it is wisdom in him that each one shall be given an opportunity to develop what is in him, instead of restricting his power of doing good.

So you will notice that equality is brought about by offering to the people such a system as will bring about opportunities to all; like opportunities to every individual; equal opportunities to all. Suppose that you should give me a manufacturing establishment to manage, as my brother who sits with me to-night is managing one. I would not have the ability to do that. He has the ability, however. Should I say, There is no equality unless you take away his manufacturing establishment, because I could not manage that? You just as well say that there is no equality because we permit one of the Twelve to take charge of a mission, and set me to work in the affairs of the Bishopric; but you would say, I am not fit for taking charge; my work is in some other direction. But are we not upon terms of equality in our work after all? What is equality? "You are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships."

And what is a stewardship? It is that which has been apportioned as the business or work of a member under the direction and counsel of those who are set to apportion stewardships among the people.

I know the thought often comes, If you permit a person to go out and use his talents and gather whatever he can, he will take everything. He will accumulate so much that nobody else will have an opportunity. Well, he will, in a sense, after the ways of the world. But he does not, after the way of Christ. Contrast, for a moment, the differences between the two. Under the law of Christ:

Every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundred fold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.

This is wholly unlike the rule of the world, and yet every one has full opportunity to do all he can, and be a helper of others instead of an oppressor.

Can there then be differences in inheritances, and yet true equality? Certainly; who in the audience will say there can not? I know sometimes the thought comes up, Why, here is a brother in Independence who has a fine residence. I would like to have that. And of another, it may be said, He does not have very much of a residence. I would not like that. Well, do you know, that never troubled me for a moment. By and by the inheritances are to be apportioned by lot to the Saints, and if I should have a fine residence to-day, and some other brother a very poor one, and I have not performed my part towards the church, and he has performed well his part, when the allotment comes he will be transferred to the fine residence, and I must take the one that is in keeping with my life and works. The brethren here of the stake know full well that I have told them time and again that so far as having a fine building, trying to be ahead of my neighbors, is concerned, it never entered my mind when I came here, before I came, nor since. And I have stated during the present conference, that I would prefer not to be where I live at present. Why am I there? Simply for the good of the church, not for my own good. Much better for me to be other places. And if sometimes some of you should be thrown in the breach and take the same place, you may be as much interested in getting away from it as was one of the Twelve when he owned it a short time ago.

Do not think that the person who is placed where the responsibilities come without cessation, is in the place that brings most peace and happiness in this world, except as he may have the peace of Christ with him. Now I hope there is no one here who will ever think of entertaining that jealous feeling in his heart that is spoken of by the Lord in section 98, without he first stops and examines himself, "what spirit he is of." Notice: "There were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires." That is what split the church up and rent it asunder. And the spirit is so far beneath true Saints that it ought never to be entertained for a moment in a single heart.

Equality is not brought about in this world through the kind of a house a man lives in; neither on account of the fact that he does or does not own as much land as another man. It may be brought about to a certain extent by the fact that he lives as closely to the law of Christ as others. That would, and should, make a difference in leveling distinctions and bringing about the rule of equality. For a person, whoever he may be, unless his heart is right, will not stand approved in the day of judgment, when the rewards are made up. First of all, a man's mind and heart must be right.

To bring about equality, is a work of great faith. Those who are afraid to trust God do not have faith in him. And those who are afraid to trust the church, ought not to go out to represent it. I would not represent it one hour, if I had not faith in the church, as well as in God. If I say I have faith in God, but no faith in the church, and yet hold membership therein, I misrepresent his church and that far at least misrepresent Christ. If it is his church, then it is to be regarded and sustained as referred to in the Ephesian letter. Christ has cleansed it with his own blood; he "so loved the church, that he gave himself for it," that it might be washed, be "without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." When a person accepts the idea, and believes that it is the church of God, and yet without protest can hear it berated and for a trifle casts opprobrium upon it, he is falling down greatly; a distance down, too, that will never bring to him equality on a high plane. It could only bring that equality that men and women reach by going downward instead of upward.

"But," says one, "in bringing about this equality, how do you expect that it will be done?" Certain properties are referred to, here in the law of Christ, as being in the hands of individuals, as stewardships. I was pleased with one statement that the bishop of London made when he was in our country last year, which was: "That all properties held by the people in this world are held in the nature of stewardships; and all we have, we are stewards of it." That is a correct basis; and if there are any

Latter Day Saints who think that what they have is theirs absolutely, they should revise their ideas of ownership; for soon they will be called upon to answer upon the other side, if they do not answer here, for the use they have made of it. All we have in this world comes to us as stewards. Jesus taught this as recorded in the sixteenth chapter of Luke's gospel. In this he sets forth the work and duties of stewards, and that they should diligently occupy, and render, or give, an account of their stewardships from time to time. It was in this connection he commanded:

I say unto you, Make to yourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness; that, when ye fail, they may receive you into everlasting habitations. He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much.

Why does Jesus talk about one in his church being faithful in that which is least, and another one faithful in that which is much, if equality consists in the fact that every one has just the same? The equality view as set forth by many is simply an absurd idea. It is not found in any of the books. But Jesus continues:

And he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, [this shows we are stewards, does it not?] who will give you that which is your own?

We now have that which is another man's, Christ's, as taught in the fiftieth Psalm, "For the world is mine and the fullness thereof." You and I are stewards of whatever we have placed in our hands here. The question for us to settle is, How shall we conduct ourselves in this stewardship business? "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" is the language of Jesus. What we have then in this life and what we are approaching to, are two different things. Men are working to-day as stewards, but hoping for something by and by of which they are heirs and owners. It has been said here, that an elder who goes out and sees that others are drawing more from the treasury than he does, if he could not draw in proportion, he did not feel like going out at all under such administration as that. But I went out under just such circumstances as that, just such circumstances exactly; and I did not stop to inquire whether I could claim one cent from the treasury. But I had this promise behind me: Christ says, Go, and by and by you shall have houses and lands, and wife and children. When? When Christ promised it was to be given. He said, Go, and take no thought what ye shall eat or wherewith ye shall be clothed. Had I hesitated, whatever the church did, I could not have been accounted worthy of receiving as those who moved out in faith and performed their work.

The man who goes out to represent Christ, and his kingdom in this world must not stop and consider whether he is to have his inheritance to-morrow, or forty years from this time. Abraham looked forward all the days of his life, "for a city whose builder and maker was God." Looked forward in promise. And who am I that I should say, I will not go out unless I know that I am going to get the reward right away? It should not make any difference in my leaving home. And when I left my home and left it standing empty, took my family where I did not have any home, simply trusted in the Lord, I asked no conditions. After eight years in my new field of labor I had secured another home, partially paid for. But when the Lord advised that I leave that, I did not hesitate for a moment, but moved at once to a place where I had no home, and so far as my choice for a residence was concerned, it would not have compared with the one I was leaving. Did I do right? All of you will say, Yes! Who is it then that stands up and says, "Well, I must be sure before I am willing to count all things a loss for Christ's sake"?

Now I call your attention again to the fiftieth Psalm; because I do not want you to forget some of the things that we find taught there: "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." Who? Those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. No others. Any man or woman who will not make the sacrifice might just as well make up their minds that they have failed now; they will not be commended in the time of the gathering. So it should not be a question in the mind of any as to whether they will make a sacrifice for God's work or not. It is the rule to make it; and the individual who is not willing to make it can not move forward. "Well," says one, "that refers to the elders, does it not?" The answer is: It refers to anybody and everybody that expects to gather. Anybody and everybody. No differences of opinion among us in this regard; and this is the way that the Bishopric understand and teach the law. That there is to be absolute equality; but it is to be that reasonable, just, and sensible equality that agrees with the law of Christ.

Now, for one I do not like the use of the word socialist, in connection with our work, any more than I like the word Mormon in connection with our work. I never go by the name Mormon; never call myself that. We are directed in the law of Christ that we shall not do this. Mormon is the name of a man; and Christ taught, If ye call my church after the name of a man, it is not my church. We should call ourselves after the name or designation set forth in the law. And if the law clearly sets forth that we are Saints, let us call ourselves Saints; and if anybody calls us Mormons, we can pity them because they are ignorant. They do not know what we should be called. We need not get mad about it, however; no more than the early saints because they were called Christians. Peter says, "If any of you suffer as a Christian"—that is, if they call you a Christian as a nickname, do not get mad, or be ashamed, is the idea. Do not quit the faith because they do that; but if you suffer as a Christian, just go on and attend to your work. And I say if any of you are called Mormons, do not desert the faith because they call you names. They called Christ our leader far worse names, and he suffered and sacrificed and endured to the end; and by and by he is to be the triumphant head. The head of whom? Those who patiently suffer and sacrifice for his cause, and who count nothing too good for them to throw in the balance, in order that the church of Christ may prosper.

But there are two ideas with reference to how the church might accomplish its work. One party says: Let us bring all that we have together, and divide it up, so that each one shall have just so much, and let us go to work that way. Our reply is, This would be a breaking down of those who now have stewardships, that is a means of livelihood, without the building up of anything. The theory of socialism in the world is to destroy our present conditions, but it has no reasonable law by which to rebuild. This theory can never be the rule of Christ's church. His law provides for the building up and classifying of the new conditions as the old disappear. Like the disappearance of the old man in the rite of baptism, it vanishes as the new man appears in a higher and better life; but to destroy the old without attaining the new, frustrates God's designs.

In the church of God the rule is individual inheritances for the Saints, and not community ownership only. Individual ownership is the rule in God's law. Individual ownership is not the rule in worldly socialist circles, but is just the reverse. That is the reason we can not use the term in advocating our faith without misrepresenting the church. It is like the use of the word Mormon. A word that is all right if correctly understood, but calculated to misrepresent the faith of Christ if used to apply to his work in instructing a people who have learned only the abuse of the word. The work of the church today, instead of severing ownership and title from the membership of the church, is just in accordance with the law that I have read; it is to see that all members have title and ownership to a proper stewardship and inheritance.

He shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion, that he shall hold it, even this right and this inheritance in the church, until he transgresses and is not accounted worthy by the voice of the church, according to the laws and covenants of the church, to belong to the church; and if he shall transgress and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; therefore he shall not retain the gift, but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.—Doctrine and Covenants 52: 1.

This direction is in accordance with the law of the land, too. Suppose that we would undertake to turn all the possessions of all the people of the church over to one common fund. You could not even pass the title. A lawyer in this city drew up a deed for me to accept last year, containing nineteen and one half acres of land. He drew it to me as trustee for the church. I said, "I do not think I could receive that deed." "Why?" "Well," I said, "that does not pass the title to me, nor does it pass the title to the church. Examine the statute and see if you do not come to the same conclusion." He said he would; and went and examined the statute. "Well," he says, "I guess it would not have passed the title." So I would have been paying for something when I didn't have any title for it. We must go according to the laws of the land and this is directed in the paragraph of the revealed law just read. We must be organized according to that; and if we are not organized according to the laws of the land we can not organize at all, in this country, and we ought not to want to. "But," says one, "can there not be a community ownership of a storehouse?" Certainly there can, and the church holds out this. Well, suppose you would get a million dollars in that? Well, I would like to have a million dollars in the storehouse. The law of the land permits that. Suppose you had two millions? All right, the law of the land permits this. For what purpose? For assisting this brother to an inheritance, if he can not furnish one for himself; and that sister to an inheritance, if she can not furnish one for herself; and so on, each one being supplied with a proper inheritance. Now, let me see if that is in accordance with the revelation, section 82; paragraph 2:

All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances.

If their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances, then the inheritances have to be furnished.

And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecrations of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor.

"But," says one, "there are not going to be any poor, are there?" The Lord says in a prior revelation to this, that until the time when all things may be done according to the law, the Bishop shall travel and look after the poor. He limits the time with reference to that, as you will find in section 44, paragraph 3.

Now here is where we are face to face with conditions. It is right and proper for people to own their own homes, and they are to own sufficient so that they are not dependent in their rights. If a people arrange to have all their properties in one common ownership, and the jurisdiction with just a few individuals, who are placed at the head, it would place them in a state little better than bondage. "Oh, well," says one, "we would not place it under the supervision of any one individual." Who would do it, then? "Well, the people, themselves, would do it." But the business supervision and control can not be carried on by the multitude, but a select few, and this few in such a community as that would be the governors or bosses of the affair, and necessarily all others in their operation and work subservient. No one can withdraw at will because there is no individual ownership but only a community ownership. Now if you want to build up an oligarchy, a trust the biggest the world has ever seen, just take (the law of the land permitting it) and transfer everything to a trustee to be held in common, and let the Bishopric, or the Twelve, or the Presidency, or the Seventy, or the High Priests, or all of them together, have charge, and see how long the liberties of the people will be safe. I would not advise my boy to go into an institution like that, would you? If he did not do just what somebody in there thought he ought to do, what rights would he have? The worst trusts that this world has ever known have been church trusts. Now, do not forget that. I am as much opposed to the church trust, as to any other kind of a trust; and I am opposed to all other trusts, too.

But I am in favor of equality among the people. But how is it to be reached? Oh, well, we were reading here from section 81, paragraph 4; and now I will present it as it is here. Each individual shall have a stewardship, so that his abilities may be brought out and that he may make good use of his talents. From time to time he renders an account just as he did when he received the stewardship. If he is a farmer, he renders his account; so if a merchant or a manufacturer. And if he has rendered an account at the beginning of the year, and he finds that at the ending of the year, by diligent use of his stewardship, he has accumulated to the amount of one thousand dollars, then what does he do? He has received his stewardship. "Well," says one, "he will have to turn over all of it into the treasury." Now that is only partially true. When a person has returned with his thousand dollars at the end of the year, and after the payment of the tithe, then the question of depreciation, or repairs of his stewardship would have to be taken into consideration, and also as to whether it was necessary to enlarge or lessen the stewardship to any degree. And when this was determined that a part of that thousand dollars was necessary for this purpose, he would use a part of it for that. "But," says one, "maybe he would want to use the whole thing." Oh, no. He counsels with those with whom he counseled at the first; and it is all done under proper direction and counsel, so that there is no opportunity under the law of Christ of taking advantage of anything like that. But if he has a legitimate excuse for placing a part here, or an addition there, or it is proper to do so, he should have the privilege, so he may grow and build up in this world and do good. "But," says one, "he might extend so far that he would usurp the rights of others." No; he could not do that, for the reason that he has to render his account, just the same as he did at the beginning; and it is in counsel as before, and together it is determined whether the balance is turned into the treasury or used to repair or extend the stewardship, after that the tithe is paid. The first thing after a person renders his account at the end of the year, and it is found that he has gained a few dollars is, that the tithe be paid first. "Well," says one, "how does that come?" The answer is, That is the law as set forth in section 106. I do not know how to change it; so I will turn and read it, and let you answer what you will do.

Thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually.

So the first thing that comes along after having gained something is to turn over the tithe, a tenth, which is the Lord's. For it reads, "And this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord." Then the first thing to do rendering the account, is to pay the tithe. Then there will be nine tenths left to distribute in the proper place and the proper way. "But," says one, "I never knew that there was any tithe after that we had divided up, and begun with the surplus." This is the law. And no one has any right to change the law.

Now I read the second paragraph of section 106:

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion.

So that rule is in force to-day. This followed when the stakes were announced by revelation; the organization being formed, the announcement was sent out by the Bishopric; and when we received divine light upon the question the Lord said: "The application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to." "Well," says one, "won't it hurt somebody?" It will not hurt us one half as much to do as it will if we refuse to conform. Suppose it is a sacrifice; let us sacrifice then. But it is no more a sacrifice so far as the execution of the law of consecration than it is a sacrifice to pay the tenth; and we have done that. I remember twenty-five years ago, when even the eldership did not accept the tithing law; but I am standing now in a day when the churches on every side of me are accepting it. One Methodist church in Kansas City, at our doors, last year, adopted it as a rule to govern in their church. So I might mention many other churches.

The law of Christ provides a way for bringing about equality: Such a way as will not disinherit anybody. A way that will not injure your business. A way that will not tear down and impoverish, but will build up and establish. His rule will give homes to those who have no homes and protect the homes of those who have homes. It will curtail or regulate those who have more than they should have, or that they have need of, and wisely distribute to those who have less than they have need of. Such a system will give an opportunity to every boy and girl so they may receive equal advantages with others. It is only since this conference began that I was asked to assist a boy so that he could finish his education for the year in the college. It would take about fifteen dollars, and without the help he would have to quit school. Do you think we neglected to help him? Do you think we have neglected to help a great many of the children of this place who needed a better opportunity than their mothers could furnish them? I could mention a number who have been helped not only here, but in different States. Children in Knobnoster, Missouri, who would have had no opportunity for an education this past winter, if it had not been for the treasury. Children in Oklahoma and in Kansas the same way. Children also in Lamoni, Iowa. It is the opportunity that is being afforded them that will bring the desired equality.

Years ago, when we were discussing the necessity for an educational institution, it was claimed before the body that if you would furnish the means so that equal opportunities could be had by the young people of the church, that the question of equality would soon be solved. The poor boy in this world will make advances with the rich boy every time if you will give him the opportunity of climbing and do it in the right time. So that when you make comparison and say of the poor boy, "Oh, yes, he could not have come up, because the other one has had such fine advantages," do not forget that the rich son has stunted in great part his intellect, by a failure to use, or an abuse of the opportunities he has had, and the poor boy will overtake him. You may ask where is the law for giving every poor boy and girl in the church an equal opportunity with every other one? Let me read the law again to show you how the Lord would have it done, and the way the Bishopric are trying to do it.

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefits of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just.

Every one entitled to it. And the present year there have been many homes in this town, and a number in other places that we have had to save to the Saints by rendering this aid the past few months. And we have helped quite a number who have not been able yet to pay it back. Our treasury will be better off when they are able to do so. But we should help these persons; give them an opportunity. Our work is to build up, not to tear down. I again quote the statement of the revelation that I began with, because I have already detained you too long; where the Lord instructs his people, let us have no "jarrings, and contentions, and envyings, and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires." If we will put that from us, we do not have a very long distance to go to reach equality; but if we can not do that, we can never be one. And in the midst of the selfish, covetous, envious clamor the Lord speaks and says:

Be still, and know that I am God. Zion shall not be moved out of her place, notwithstanding her children are scattered, they that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritances.

Let us be quiet then; not talk so much until better informed. If the Bishop does anything that is wrong, it is very easy to prefer charges against him, and place them in the hands of the President of the church, who will call the High Council to pass upon the matter. And if he sends out a statement of the law, and that statement is contrary to the law, why not go to work legitimately, as the Lord says, and place the matter before the quorums of the church, and let the quorums decide whether that is the law or not, if we do not receive divine direction touching it; so that all things may be done in harmony and in order and contention and bickering may cease. If we will do this, Zion will yet prosper.

At the close this question and reply:

Question.—You referred to the deed that was made, to some property here, that was defective. Was it not because the Bishop as such could only hold a certain amount of property?

Answer.—Certainly. Parties undertook to deed more than the church could take under the statute, so the title would not pass. The church is entitled to so much; but it can not take title to what people think sometimes.

Of General Interest

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

Last night was issued the full text of the encyclical letter, in which the bishops of the Anglican Church, assembled from all parts of the world at the Lambeth conference, embody the result of their deliberations. The bulky document touches upon a large variety of subjects of supreme interest to the church and to the entire religious public. The point of most interest for the moment is the action which the bishops have taken regarding the present state of the marriage law.

The resolutions at which their lordships have arrived bear out the forecast which was published in the Daily Telegraph some days ago, to the effect that the general tendency of their action was to tighten rather than relax the marriage tie, emphasizing as deeply as hitherto the sacramental character of wedlock.

What is, however, of as much importance as the resolutions themselves—of even more importance, perhaps—is the fact that one of the number, and that the most crucial of all, was adopted by a majority of only eighty-seven votes to eighty-four.

It will also be noticed that the thorny question of the effect of recent legislation on the subject of marriage with a deceased wife's sister is expressly left untouched.

The various findings of the conference on the subject of marriage and divorce are thus set forth:

The growing prevalence of disregard of the sanctity of marriage calls for the active and determined coöperation of all right-thinking and clean-living men and women, in all ranks of life, in defense of the family life and the social order, which rest upon the sanctity of the marriage tie.

The influence of all good women in all ranks of life should be specially applied to the remedying of the terrible evils which have grown up from the creation of facilities for divorce.

This conference reaffirms the resolution of the conference of 1888, as follows:

"That, inasmuch as our Lord's words expressly forbid divorce, except in case of fornication or adultery, the Christian church can not recognize divorce in any other than the excepted case, or give any sanction to the marriage of any person who has been divorced contrary to this law, during the life of the other party.

"That under no circumstances ought the guilty party, in the case of a divorce for fornication or adultery, to be regarded, during the lifetime of the innocent party, as a fit recipient of the blessing of the church on marriage.

"That, recognizing the fact that there always has been a difference of opinion in the church on the question whether our Lord meant to forbid marriage to the innocent party in a divorce for adultery, the conference recommends that the clergy should not be instructed to refuse the sacraments or other privileges of the church to those who, under civil sanction, are thus married."

Their lordships then voted on the following resolution:

When an innocent person has, by means of a court of law, divorced a spouse for adultery, and desires to enter into another contract of marriage, it is undesirable that such a contract should receive the blessing of the church.

The voting was as follows: For the resolution eighty-seven, against eighty-four, majority for three.

The conference regards with alarm the growing practice of the artificial restriction of the family, and earnestly calls upon all Christian people to discountenance the use of all artificial means of restriction, as demoralizing to character and hostile to national welfare.

The conference affirms that deliberate tampering with nascent life is repugnant to Christian morality.

The conference expresses most cordial appreciation of the services rendered by those medical men who have borne courageous testimony against the injurious practices spoken of, and appeals with confidence to them and to their medical colleagues to coöperate in creating and maintaining a wholesome public opinion on behalf of the reverent use of the married state.

Subjoined is the section of the bishops' encyclical letter dealing with "marriage problems":

The purity of family life is the basis of all national stability; and it is the function of the church not only to bless the marriage itself, but also to guard the integrity of the family in all its stages. In pursuance of this function, it has been our duty to deal with evils arising from a low estimate of marriage, the unfaithfulness of married people to the vows by which they are bound, and the terrible increase of facilities for divorce. In the face of these and similar evils, we have felt it to be our duty to re-affirm the principles on the subject of divorce which were laid down by the Lambeth conference twenty years ago, and to assert our conviction that no view less strict than this is admissible in the Church of Christ. But we would lay especial stress upon the fact that it is in the realm of life more than in that of thought that evils of this kind are to be fought and overcome; and we would impress upon all our people the necessity for the formation of a pure and upright public opinion amongst women and men alike, which will not suffer the evils of which we speak to go on unchecked with impunity.

We are aware that upon some of the questions which have been raised on the subject of marriage we are speaking with less decision than may be expected, and that there are questions with regard to which we fail altogether to give such guidance as in some parts of our communion is gravely needed. In so far as we have thus failed, it must be remembered that the conference is gathered from churches differing not only in the conditions under which they have to deal with these questions, but also in the formal canons, diocesan, provincial, or general, by which their action is ruled. In view of this fact we have come to the conclusion that these questions must be dealt with separately in the several churches of our communion. We have on this ground left without an adequate or general declaration of judgment the difficulty which has been constituted for the Church of England by recent legislation concerning marriage with a deceased wife's sister.

A further evil with which we have had to deal is of such a kind that it can not be spoken of without repugnance. No one who values the purity of home life can contemplate without grave misgiving the existence of an evil which jeopardizes that purity; no one who treasures the Christian ideal of marriage can condone the existence of habits which subvert some of the essential elements of that ideal. In view of the figures and facts which have been set before us, we can not doubt that there is a widespread prevalence amongst our people of the practice of resorting to artificial means for the avoidance or prevention of child-bearing. We have spoken of these practices and endeavored to characterize them as they deserve, not only in their results, but in themselves; and we would appeal to the members of our own churches to exert the whole force of the Christian character in condemnation of them.—Daily Telegraph (London).

SOME TUNNEL BUILDERS.

Not all the bees one sees on the flowers are the busy little fellows who supply our tables with honey. Of course you all know that the great family of bees may be roughly divided into the social bees, those that live together in populous communities, and the solitary bees who live only one or two in a home.

Instead of building their homes of wax, some of these industrious little solitary fellows are tunnel-builders and excavate their homes in the earth. By no means is theirs a light task, and the amount of work sometimes done by a single bee is enormous —almost beyond belief. It has been approximately calculated that the little blue digger-bee (Augochlora) digs such a tunnel in proportion to her weight that if a man weighing one hundred and eighty-five pounds would equal it, he must dig a hole four feet in diameter and twelve hundred and ninety-five miles deep. And this represents less than half the work done, for this computation takes no account of the branches and cells. Furthermore, it has been since discovered that this little bee digs two of these tunnels during her lifetime.

The tunnels of some of the solitary bees are driven horizontally in the sides of steep slopes, and others are sunk vertically from the surface of the level ground, according to the habits of the different species. Leading from the main passageway, there are short branches which terminate each in a widened chamber or cell. The whole interior of this cell is plastered with a cement that makes the walls smooth and waterproof and also hardens them so the earth does not fall in.

These little bees differ slightly in their opinions as to which is the best food and, consequently, some species store their cells with a pellet of pollen while others are sure that honey, with a little pollen added, is by far the best food for a young bee. In either case, an egg is placed on the food-mass and the entrance to the cell closed up. When the lowest cell is properly stocked and sealed, the next one above it is undertaken, and the next higher one, and so on toward the top. In this way the earth from each succeeding cell fills the passageway below it and so prevents access to the cells by the natural enemies of the bees.—From "Nature and science" in September St. Nicholas.

The style of Bunyan is delightful to every reader, and invaluable as a study to every person who wishes to obtain a wide command over the English language. The vocabulary is the vocabulary of the common people. There is not an expression, if we except a few technical terms of theology, which would puzzle the rudest peasant. We have observed several pages which do not contain a single word of more than two syllables; yet no writer has said more exactly what he meant to say. For magnificence, for pathos, for vehement exhortation, for subtle disquisition, for every purpose of the poet, the orator, and the divine, this homely dialect, the dialect of plain working men, was perfectly sufficient. There is no book in our literature on which we could so readily stake the fame of the old unpolluted English language; no book which shows so well how rich that language is in its own proper wealth, and how little it has been improved by all that it has borrowed.—Macaulay.

The Mother of Bartimeus.

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

She held her child to her breast,
And there came a sound like the rush of wind
Where three rode out to the West.
"Now who may ye be, and what do ye bring?"
And they made her answer meet,
"We be kings who ride to a greater King
To lay our gifts at His feet!"

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

Full bitterly smiled she,
"And though He be greater than all kings born Can He make my child to see?"

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

Looked out in the middle night
For she heard the passing of human kind
And voicing of men's delight.
"Now who may ye be that ye fare so late?"
And they made her answer meet,
"We be shepherds who seek a prophet great
To cry our prayers at His feet!"

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

Full scornfully smiled she,
"And though He be greater than prophets passed
Can He say my child will see?"

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

She spake to her little son
"Now what dost thou hear and what dost thou find That thou smilest, oh, saddest one?"
"Oh, mother, a voice as of one new born
From afar it spake to me;
This prophet and king thou dost mock and scorn
Will one day make me see."

The Mother of Bartimeus the Blind—

Think you that day knew she
That day by the gates of a walled-in town
Where the maimed and the beggared be,
Where the word was said and the hand was touched
And the blind was made to see?

Evening and Old Age.

"O'er the hills the sun is setting,
And the eve is drawing on;
Softly fall the shades of twilight,
For another day is gone.
Gone for aye, its cares are over,
Soon the darker shades will come;
Still it's sweet to know at evening,
We are one day nearer home."

After the busy day of cares and toil is over, how sweet the coming of evening to the weary toiler! When the sun has for hours sent her scorching rays upon the earth with all her burning fervor, and we feel tired and careworn, almost ready to faint by the way, but for the knowledge we have that just a little while longer and the shades of evening will fall around us, and the cool, soft zephyrs kiss our foreheads once more, and cool our feverish brows, thus bringing rest to our weary bodies, yea, and sweet peace of mind to those who can say, "One more day's work for Jesus, one less of life for me." If the day has been spent in doing deeds of loving-kindness, if we have helped to cheer the lonely, comfort the broken-hearted, if we have given a smile, a loving caress to some one who was early in life ill-advised, and has shipwrecked on life's stormy seas, one who has not maintained the standard of purity and virtue, as we who have had the blessed light of the gospel to illumine our pathway, also our saintly mother's counsel and advice to guide our feet, which otherwise might have gone more easily astray; yea, if we have brought hope and lightness of heart to one such soul, then the day may well be counted as well spent; for not even a sparrow falls to the ground without our heavenly Father's knowledge, and are not the souls of the children of men worth more than many sparrows? If we have been patient in times of trial when our young and giddy girl with her frivolous sayings and doings has tried us, if we have kept back the word of reproof and gave words of kindness and motherly counsel instead; and to our wayward boy gave a gentle embrace and kissed his cheek and said, Mother loves this boy if he is rude sometimes, and told him you are looking forward to the time when he will be a good and useful man; if you have done this, when you have felt tempted to scold, you have gained a victory for yourself, and have bound the ties of affection for you closer about your boy's heart.

There are so many small deeds of kindness to be done which will bring peace of mind to us at evening, if we are workers together with Christ in this last dispensation of time; for, dear Saints, it seems to me that this work of winning souls to him is not wholly intrusted to the elders. How very much we can do to prepare the hearts of those about us to receive the gospel when it is taught by those in authority, if we only try patiently and prayerfully to live the life we profess to live. Through the influence of one mother and wife, whose life was consecrated to works of loving deeds, who has taught by precept and example, many times whole families have been brought to a knowledge of the truth as contained in the gospel, and if we have felt the influence of the Spirit within us, inspiring us to live day by day as though it might be the last for us, then when the sunset side of life is reached, happy will we be if we know we have not lived in vain, if we, looking backward, can see where the seed sown with prayers and tears sprang up and brought forth more abundant fruit than we had ever even dared to hope for.

What is more beautiful to look upon than a beautiful old age? one who has grown old in the service of the Lord, when the hoary hair reminds one of a crown of glory that awaits the faithful and just? Those who have not been idlers in the vineyard of the Lord, who with the Christ the vineyard labor have tried so unselfishly to share. In the morning of life we are looking forward, but during the years from youth to old age, when often the rays of adversity are cast athwart our pathway, as the sun on a hot summer day, we may lose sight of the fact that others have cares and trials as great as ours, and perchance greater, and should not forget that there is no one so weak that can not give the hand that may help a soul to live and rise again from the sodden clay. Splendid achievements may never be yours, but the deed that for love's sake is done endures and will blossom for ever, from day to day. If we meet the trials of every day life as become the mothers in Israel, then can we have the assurance as the Psalmist of old that "the Lord is my shepherd and I fear no ill." Then can we look forward to the gloaming with peace, and rejoice that the conflict is almost over, and that soon the sun will set for us to dawn in a brighter sphere, where friends and loved ones gone before will join to greet us;-

"For even the dead, our Master has said,
Will rise by the power that saves us,
To meet us again in the gathering when
We stand before his throne."

INGHAM, Nebraska, August 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: On June 26 wife and I and our daughter-in-law started to the "sandhill reunion." We arrived at North Platte on the 27th. Teams were there, sent by the Saints, to convey us a distance of twenty-five miles to South Tryon. There were three teams, fourteen grown people, and several children, and we had a very pleasant trip, camping at noon for dinner. Sr. Barrett had her camera along and we had our picture taken while we were eating.

About six o'clock we arrived at the camp-grounds. Tents were up and everything in readiness for the meetings to begin. There were tents, bedsteads, springs, and provisions—all in abundance, for our comfort. The Saints had furnished all this, being helped, however, by some of their neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. M. C. West and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Davidson. Not a cent was charged for anything, the Saints telling all to make themselves at home and take no thought of who was furnishing these things, and if there was anything wanted, to let them know and it would be forthcoming. Such meetings as these make one feel at home, so much more so than where everything is on a cash basis. And I feel that they should be that way. Bro. Prettyman was on the ground, working with all his might to get the new church-building inclosed, so it could be used for the reunion. They expect to finish it soon.

The speakers were Brn. Prettyman, Gamet, Kelley, and Gunsolley. Bro. Gunsolley's work was principally Religio and Sunday-school work, but between times it was preaching. He entertained us well. All the preaching was fine and the prayer-meetings were excellent. Bro. Gunsolley said his work was not so much to preach as along other lines, but we thought he did some fine preaching just the same.

All spent the Fourth on the ground and with an abundance of ice-cream, lemonade, and candy, we had an enjoyable time. We had also a short program; Judge Eller, of McPherson, county attorney, made us a good speech.

In all the ten days there was nothing to mar the harmony that prevailed among us. The young Saints took hold and did their part well. I must pronounce it the best reunion I ever attended, although the attendance was not so large as in a thickly settled country. Peace, harmony, and the good Spirit were there, and to God be all the glory.

Editors Herald: I hope the inclosed cutting from one of our most reliable London dailies may prove of sufficient interest as to justify publication in the columns of our church paper. [See department "Of General Interest."]

Evidently this serious question of marriage, divorce, and remarriage is forcing itself on the attention of all the churches and organizations who have the moral and spiritual welfare of the people at heart. The prevailing indifference to the sacredness of the promise made by the one to the other, "to keep myself for the other alone and from all others until death do us part," is working such havoc in the domestic circle and undermining the foundation of our national character so universally that these prelates of one of the most influential churches in the world, and gathered from every part of the globe to the Pan-anglican conference, have faced the question and unswervingly place themselves by the side of the Master in the pronouncement of him who was so reticent regarding legislation, but on this matter was emphatic and inflexible.

It seems regrettable that our own church should be so slow and hard to persuade to trust the unerring Christ on this question of human need and felicity. Surely, it seems to me, as the "body" of Christ our identity lies in the readiness with which we respond and the completeness with which we accomplish the will of the Spirit whose habitation we are; and our lack of confidence, our refusal to respond to the manifest will of God, whose habitation we claim to be, must, in the light of physiology and pathology, be regarded with alarm as symptoms of a serious disease.

If I am not mistaken, when the body refuses to respond to the will of the mind and does not the thing the mind would desire, such a state is diagnosed as a most distressing form of paralysis, designated in the language of the materia medica, as locomotor ataxia.

I hope that the example of fidelity to the Master shown by these organizations, whose claims we have adversely criticised in the past, may be a stimulus to us and arouse within us a passion for our beloved Lord which will express itself in confidence and unflinching obedience to his command. May we never see the day when our church for whose sake blood, fire, and smoke have been braved, whose progress to the perfect expression of the mind of God has been sown with sacrifice and tears, shall be helpless in the paralysis of unbelief or rebellion.

SPOKANE, Washington, August 19, 1908.

Editors Herald: The hot wave from the East struck Spokane a few weeks ago, and since then we have been suffering from the heat and dust; but, as we usually have pleasant evenings and nights, we console ourselves with the thought that "it might be worse." Spiritually, we feel that we are gaining, slowly it may be, and that our gain is of a kind that will endure; but there is still so much room for improvement that we have to sometimes stop and take our bearings before deciding as to whether we are really gaining in the divine life or not. When we look at the life of our Savior, so full of love and tender compassion, and then look at our own lives, so full of selfishness and harshness, the comparison is not at all flattering to us; but it is gratifying to know that, notwithstanding our many imperfections, he still loves us and blesses us with his Holy Spirit. So we take courage and press on, looking unto Jesus as the author and finisher of our faith.

Last Sunday, the waters were troubled again, when Bro. George Winegar buried four more precious souls in the watery grave, with their Savior, that they might rise to walk with him in newness of life. And so they continue to come, not so very many at a time, but as they are led by the Spirit.

Some sickness in the branch, the past few weeks, the result of the hot weather, I suppose.

Looking over the situation here, I see no cause for discouragement or discontent. True, everything does not go just as I should like for it to go; but that is not to be expected: I have not yet been able to make my own life just as I would like to have it, hence I try to have as much patience with others as I wish them to have with me. Let us strive to grow together in this work, helping each other over the rough places in life; for we all strike those rough places, sooner or later, and all need help.

Hoping, praying, and working for the victory,

In the faith,

ISAAC M. SMITH.

OMAHA, Nebraska, August 19, 1908.

Dear Herald: I thought some would like to know how we are getting along in our new field of labor in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Well, we got moved into our little home on June 18, and we found it rather tiresome trying to get settled and holding street-meetings at the same time. The street-meetings continued about ten weeks with the result of one Jew being baptized. Bro. Enge was holding those meetings when we moved and Bro. Baker has assisted him. Since then there have been four more baptized, three residing out of the city, and one Sunday-school scholar. The work is moving slowly, but we find plenty to do. The Council Bluffs Sunday-school had a picnic and invited the Omaha Sunday-school to join with them. They did so and chartered a car, and over seventy went. All had a fine time.

The Omaha Religio had a social the other evening and invited the Council Bluffs Saints to join with them, and for all the weather was rainy, there was quite a crowd came over.

My brother, C. A. Butterworth, was here for one week. He left for Australia on the 10th, by way of Seattle, and from there to Vancouver, expecting to sail on the 14th. He was not feeling well when he left and it made me feel sad to think of him taking such a long journey alone, and yet not alone, for the Lord had promised him he would be with him and that he would reach his home in safety. O 'tis "good to be a Saint in latter days."

We received word from our daughter a few days ago saying the debt was at last paid on the Sioux City church and now the church will be dedicated at the coming conference, the first of October. Only three and one half years ago we bought the church with a membership of about fifty and to-day the church is clear of debt and a membership of one hundred and fifty. Will some one show me a branch that has done better? Surely the Lord has blessed the dear Saints there, and to-day their church building is worth three thousand dollars. There is a move on foot here to get a better location or church building. A committee has been appointed and has gone to work. Bro. Baker has gone to assist in erecting the big tent at Council Bluffs, as the reunion will begin there Saturday. Quite a number are expecting to go from here and tent, and may the Lord bless us all with his Spirit is the humble prayer of your sister,

In the one faith,

JENNIE BAKER.

PITTSBURG, Kansas, August 18, 1908.

Editors Herald: Since coming to my new field I have found plenty to do, and the prospect is that good will be done. My first point of attack was Gross, Kansas, a coal-mining town, operated by Bro. Hisle and Mr. Jenkins. Bro. R. T. Walters and the writer were together. We arranged seats of lumber in an old store building. Our meetings were well attended. Several became interested, and in time we will get good results.

Next we met with the Saints at Sherwin, Kansas, for conference. Although it was stormy most of the time, all enjoyed the meeting, as it was a splendid one, and in all points above the average. The Spirit of the Lord in tongues and interpretation through Sr. Depew and Bro. Robertson, gave us encouragement and told all to become more active and he would bless us and the church with greater power.

After this conference Brn. George Jenkins, Walters, and I became interested in getting a tent that was for sale in Pittsburg, and by the kindness of the Saints in Weir City, Pittsburg, Scammon, and Bro. Connor, of Fairland, the money was obtained. The tent has already been used in Pittsburg and Scammon. There are so many places where it could be used that it looks like one is not enough for the district.

While at Weir City, Kansas, Bro. D. S. Crawley assisted in street-meetings. The brethren of the branch procured the use of the band wagon, and we preached to the people who could not be gotten out to the church. As to the good done, I can not say. In this, like in other missionary work, we leave it in the hands of God. But one thing at that place is worthy of note, the Saints old and young came out and stayed with us, showing their courage and love for the work.

Through the energy of Bro. Messil we preached at Daisy Hill. He procured the use of Miner's Hall, and we had a splendid hearing. Webb City, Missouri, was our next, and here we found a good band of Saints. Many of them we knew in our boyhood days, and it was solid comfort to see them still sound in the faith. Considerable advertising was done, and we preached for ten days in their commodious church. From here we moved to Purcell, Missouri, a lead-mining town having no branch organization, but quite a number of good Saints. They procured the use of the Christian church, they reserving Sundays and one night in the week. The weather was so warm it was difficult to get many out to meetings. The Saints are making an effort to get a place of their own,—the proper thing to do. Joplin was the next place, where we held meetings in Blendville Church over Sunday, and Monday evening we moved our meeting to the pavilion in the park. Bro. Thurman is president of the branch and everything seems to be moving along nicely. There is endless demand for work in this district. I am hopeful as ever in the cause.

J. ARTHUR DAVIS.

VENUS, Texas, August 19, 1908.

Dear Herald: I promised Bro. J. T. Riley I would write some of our experiences in Arkansas where we had some interesting times. I have been living in Texas for years, but my wife's health failed and for that reason we started on the move, like Abraham, not knowing where we would go, but seeking a country where conditions would be beneficial to

Sr. Sallie's health. And in the words of a Christian (Disciple) preacher, who is an enemy to the work there, "We had to come to the sparkling spring-water of Arkansas," and he also said this was proof that signs do not follow us. However, she regained her health there and we thank the Lord for it as also for all the other manifestations of his goodness to us; for we were blessed in our efforts while there.

We had been there but a little time when the Lord showed me that he had a people there and that I had a work to do. Being in the mountainous part of that country, about twenty-two miles west of Hot Springs, and having plenty of the very best water to drink, we were very well satisfied, except for the fact that, so far as we knew, there was not a Saint within many miles of us. So we said if we could make Latter Day Saints out of some of our neighbors we would supply that deficiency. The way opening up, we went to work talking and preaching, and were wonderfully blessed in our efforts, which soon proved to be effectual. The Spirit was poured out on the people wonderfully. They began to see visions and have spiritual dreams directing them. and I soon had the pleasure of baptizing seven souls into the kingdom, all heads of families and of the best people of the country. We became much attached to them.

But while the Lord had been doing a good work, the adversary and his agents were energetic, too. They tried to outtalk and outpreach us and failed. Once when Bro. J. T. Riley was preaching they tried to see what virtue there was in mob violence. Right in the middle of a very interesting discourse the people were startled by the report of guns. A shower of eggs and rocks caused the congregation to become excited. But that brave soldier of the cross, Bro. Riley, did not flinch or move and very soon brought the house to order and went on with his sermon. That night we received a letter as follows:

"Notice to Mormons and specially to Mr. Tom Riley don't you let the sun go down on you Sunday night in this part of the country we as sitersons don't aim to have iny sutch stuff preached threw this country. Mr. Riley Stanefer you must cut youre part out or we will tend to you and the rect if necessary we don't ame to have the children brought up under iny sutch Mr. Steve McGrew you must stop letting Mormons lay around youre place or we will tend to you in good shape Bud Colman you must stop that bunch of Smithites lying a round you or we will see after you Mr Roy Standefer you must cut your part out at once or we will tend to you White caps of Ark."

But the sun went down several times while Bro. Riley was there. He continued several days and baptized two. He made a good impression while there and we look for him to be back in September, with Bro. I. N. White, to organize a branch.

As for us, we are back in Texas, but we expect to return to Arkansas. We were there about ten months, and now there is a good opening that must be looked after. We want to say to the dear Saints in that part of the vineyard that we believe the Lord intends for us to go back and stay, for it seems that is the only place where my wife can have health.

In the work.

W. R. STANDEFER.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Hale W. Smith writes from Deer Lodge, Montana. In addition to regular duties he has managed to take advantage of the good fishing near there, and recently had captured some thirty mountain trout from the Rattlesnake, which is a mountain stream near by. He had also ceased other activities long enough to unite in matrimony one Sr. Mabel Jones to a Mr. Hoskyn, of Washington.

Northwestern Oklahoma Reunion.

The Northwestern Oklahoma Reunion convened August 7, 1908, near Freedom, Woods County, Oklahoma. Organized by choosing Bro. I. N. White to preside, T. W. Chatburn and Hubert Case as assistants, W. D. McKnight secretary, Amos Chase chorister, Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser assistant chorister, J. H. Baker janitor, Amos Chase policeman. Committee on finance: T. W. Chatburn, I. N. White, and James Yates. Order of services was as follows: Sunday-school at eight o'clock in the morning. Prayer-meeting at nine; normal work at ten. Preaching at eleven, and at half past two in the afternoon, and half past eight in the evening. The following took part in the preaching-services; I. N. White, T. W. Chatburn, Hubert Case, Lee Quick, James Yates, Amos Chase, J. H. Baker, J. E. Page, Brn. Durfey, and Marion Hancock. O. A. Bender and Henry Bivins assisted in presiding. The normal, Sunday-school, and Religio work was conducted by Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, of Independence, Missouri. Sr. Allie Chase was organist. Bro. Moreland was assistant policeman.

The voice of the Spirit through Sr. Ina Bivins admonished the Saints to doubt not the power of God, to be more humble and patient, and the Lord would pour out his Spirit on them. The field is all ready to harvest. Thrust in your sickles and a branch will be organized in this place before long. Bro. Moore had a number of the Saints to sing and speak into his phonograph and the new records were put into use. Bro. Case preached on tithing.

Again the voice of the Spirit admonished the Saints to the study of the three standard books of the church and the coming to the unity of faith before gathering to Zion. Four children were blessed. The sick were administered to.

Voted to hold the 1909 reunion at Woodward, Oklahoma, on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad; A. V. Tregó, H. R. Kent, and W. L. Mikel, its committee. A vote of thanks was given those who assisted in making this reunion a success. A collection was taken up to help pay the missionaries' fares. The sacrament was administered to the Saints on Sunday. Bro. Clyde McAllister was ordained to the office of priest by I. N. White and T. W. Chatburn. In the Sunday prayer-meeting twenty-four testimonies were borne. Over two hundred persons attended the Sunday afternoon sermon preached by Apostle I. N. White on the subject, "What shall I do to be saved." Four persons were baptized during the reunion. Bro. Alvin H. Mooney was ordained to the office of priest. Bro. Chase was appointed to act as solicitor for Bro. Case, the Bishop's agent. Thirty-nine dollars and twenty cents were turned over to the agent as profits from the boarding-house by Bro. Chase, on Monday, August 17. Adjourned to meet as above, at call of missionary in charge.

Southern California Reunion.

Editors Herald: When the astute historian of the Southern California District has transferred his vision to canvas, I am sure Huntington Beach will stand out in bold relief compared with the various mountain peaks in the cluster which indicate the progress of the church-work in the Southwest. I can not tell you all the good things which happened at our late reunion. It was the most peaceable, harmonious, inspirational, intellectual, spiritual gathering in the history of the district. It lingers now in memory as a pleasant dream, a fertile oasis, a foretaste of the Zion to be.

Huntington Beach is an excellent seaside resort about thirty-five miles from Los Angeles. The committee was very fortunate in securing the Tent City concessions, which included a large, airy, modern pavilion with seating capacity for fifteen hundred people, together with a commodious dining-hall completely furnished—all for fifty dollars.

The tents were furnished for the campers at reasonable rates, clean linen being continuously supplied on application. The camp lay about three blocks back from the ocean. The tents were arranged in blocks with streets running at right angles all through the camp.

F. M. Smith, F. A. Smith, and T. W. Williams presided over the reunion. Surely, we feel justifiably proud of our two "Fred's." Their deportment and dignity were commendable. There was no ostentation or show. No desire to impress the people with their position or place. Nothing to indicate that they were other than one of "us." Such actions go right to the heart of the typical Californian. We may be an unconventional people, but the way to win the confidence of the Californians is to be one with them. In associating with these two men one is conscious of power and strength on their part. You realize they are giving out rather than taking in. You take something away with you; you do not sense that they have drawn anything from you. They were willing to occupy where placed by the people, content if they but served the people and helped to make the meeting a success. We consider Fred A. one of us now, as he was here last year. Fred M. has the confidence of the people. His sermons were broad and bristling with liberality. They were intellectual treats. Whatever apprehension we have ever held as to F. M.'s policy, we are sure no church or people are in danger of priestcraft or tyranny with a leader standing on a platform as outlined by our brother while here.

For years I have been trying to impress upon the appointing powers the necessity for consideration and care of the work here. I am sure our brethren have had their eyes opened from personal observation and we can depend upon them for help in this direction. I have been in California ten years and, for the life of me, I can not see why some of our men have come to the conclusion that this is a "hopeless territory" and the people "pleasure-drunk." Californians are very little different from other people. In fact most of the people have come from the States the past few years.

I must not pass over our other "Fred," F. G. Pitt. Sweet singer of Israel, indeed! His voice rings out as clear and brilliant as a woman's. He has "fallen in love" with this mission and the entire district reciprocates the affection. "Ye easterners" will have to offer him some other inducement than cold winters and hot summers if you ever get him back again.

The speakers at the reunion were F. M. Smith, F. A. Smith, A. Carmichael, A. A. Ballard, F. G. Pitt, and T. W. Williams. Please pardon me if I have not mentioned each individual title. Here we respect a man's official position so much that we believe the inherent power within, which inures to him as a result of his office, will more fully impress the people than to constantly parade the office he holds whenever his name is mentioned.

During the reunion Albert Carmichael was ordained a bishop in harmony with provisions of last General Conference. The Spirit bore witness to his call and the ordination prayer was a characteristic dedication. Bro. Carmichael was admonished by the Spirit that trials awaited him, but was promised grace and strength for every duty. Something else transpired which is of special signification to our district. Priests', teachers', and deacons' quorums were organized. Each quorum starts out under auspicious and promising circumstances.

We adopted a new plan in feeding the people. We ran our dining-hall on the cafeteria plan. It proved a complete success. Eastern brethren say they never attended a reunion where everything was so convenient and their wants more fully supplied. In order that the people of the East may know what a Californian reunion means let me capitulate: The missionaries and their families are all provided for without any cost to them. Tents for the missionaries cost twenty-two dollars and twenty cents. Meals for missionaries fifty-five dollars and fifty cents. Money supplied missionaries fifty-five dollars and fifty cents. Our reunion cost the district about two hundred and fifty dollars, and cost the Saints as a whole, including everything, over two thousand dollars. We paid all expenses and have over forty dollars as net profit. The results fully justify the outlay. Two preaching- and one prayer-service were held each day. Set hours were arranged for bathing. Nearly everybody went in in the early morning as this did not necessitate dressing twice. The bathing was exhilarating and the young people, while enjoying the sea, were loyal to the church and missed but very few services.

This was F. M.'s first experience with the ocean: He shipped considerable salt water the first time he went bathing and when first struck by a big "comber,"—well, Webster does not supply the words to describe the look on his face. He tried to burrow through the sea-bed, but his head was too hard, even though he effected a noticeable abrasion of the skin. He will recover.

There were eleven baptisms. A branch is to be organized at Santa Ana to-morrow night. This gives us two new branches during the year. All goes well here.

Yours in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

LOS ANGELES, California, August 19, 1908.

Eastern Iowa Reunion.

Since my last communication I have been in attendance at the Eastern Iowa reunion held at Oelwein, Iowa, which closed yesterday. This was the first reunion held in this district, and, as an experiment, proved satisfactory to all. The executive committee consisted of James McKiernan, L. E. Hills, and J. F. Rulon, with J. F. Mintun secretary. A set of very good rules was adopted, so good that they were so well observed there was no need of calling attention to them afterwards.

First service was held on the evening of Friday the 14th, followed by services each day at half past nine and fifteen minutes to eleven in the morning, and at half past two and fifteen minutes to eight in the evening, till the close. The services held were one business-session, three prayer, one sacrament, twenty-seven preaching-services, and five auxiliary sessions. One name was given for baptism for Sunday, but leaving in the afternoon I did not witness it. The preaching was good, the prayer-meetings were accompanied with the Spirit in power, in great power at one of them, and the auxiliary sessions were commented on by those present as having done much good. There were present of the missionary force, Elders James McKiernan, L. E. Hills, Amos Berve, J. B. Wildermuth, and the writer most of the time, and Elders W. E. Turner and F. B. Farr part of the time. Besides these was Patriarch C. E. Butterworth, whose presence and work were a great help to the success of the reunion.

The evening sessions were well attended, considering the prejudice that had previously been manifested there. Much prejudice was removed, some are near the kingdom, and many are investigating this wonderful work. The tent will remain at this point for some time following the reunion.

I am resting and preparing to attend the Des Moines District reunion, which begins next Friday, while trying to catch up with some of my correspondence.

I greatly rejoice to see the advancement of the work of God in the lives of so large a number of the Saints, so many who are becoming more humble, and to see the increased manifestations of the Spirit by way of the gifts of knowledge and the wisdom of using it, and as much as for anything else I rejoice to see the spirit of jealousy and envy being eliminated from the hearts of those who profess to be the followers of Christ.

J. F. MINTUN.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Lamoni Stake Reunion.

The fourth annual reunion of the Lamoni Stake held its sessions from Friday, August 21, to Sunday, the 30th inclusive. It was an all around success. The meeting was held on the reunion grounds, a fine grove located on a sloping hillside, situated one mile south of the center of the city of the stake. This property, consisting of forty acres, was leased from Sr. Anna A. Dancer for a period of five years, without charge, except the cost of incidental improvements necessary to the welfare of campers. The large tent was located on a shaded spot where stately overarching elms protected the assemblies from the sun's rays. Near by were the dining, refreshment, and rest tents; and, stretching away at various points along the hillslopes, were located the tents of the campers.

The grounds are splendidly located, well drained, and nicely shaded, the general arrangement being conducive to health, comfort, and enjoyment. During the past year the reunion committee, assisted by the generous efforts of brethren and friends, made numerous improvements. The grounds now are equipped with two tile wells, two cement bridges, well shaded hitch-racks, additional toilet buildings, with more camping space cleared. A first-class lighting system was purchased and installed, which provided abundant illumination without the smoke of the gasoline torch in the tabernacle. An independent phone line to central was also built.

The program consisted of prayer-meetings at nine o'clock; preaching at eleven; auxiliary society meetings—including the interests of the Daughters of Zion, the college, Sunday-school, and Religio—were held from Monday to Friday inclusive at half past two; preaching at eight o'clock in the evening. All meetings were well attended, hacks from town and private conveyances bringing many in addition to the campers. The prayer-meetings were good; they were quite well attended by the young people, needless to mention the older ones, as to attendance. The old people from the Homes got their share of enjoyment. The preaching, as a rule, was very good, some of it excellent, and on the whole, in advance of that of former years, indicating increased spirituality and growth. In addition to the local and resident ministry of the stake, President Joseph Smith, Bishop G. H. Hilliard, and Bro. Paul M. Hanson were present from abroad and helped very much by their efforts. President Smith spoke twice the last Sunday; Bro. Hilliard presented his department of the work; Bro. Hanson delivered one sermon, and on Friday evening delivered his lecture, "Around the world," to an audience which filled the big tabernacle and crowded the outer edges. Paul was himself, and gave entire satisfaction to his audience. The people were much pleased to have with them President Joseph Smith and family, who arrived on Wednesday, the 26th, from Detroit. They tented on the grounds and added to the social and general spirit of the gathering.

By no means least among the features conspicuous at this reunion was the spirit of friendly, social enjoyment. The Saints from all parts of the stake have become quite well acquainted with one another, as a rule; being brought into closer association, they have learned to understand and appreciate one another as members of one common family in the Lord. A spirit of peace and light, of friendliness and quiet restfulness, prevailed among the people. Such influences are normal and valuable. This feature means much for the people and for the cause. If any "middle walls" of social position (?) have prevailed in the past, these reunions are helping to break down and to assimilate all as members of one common Lord. This prevailing sense of spiritual social consciousness has been awakened, and is developing quite satisfactorily, partly as a result of this annual opportunity to mingle together in both the spiritual and the social opportunities of the gathering.

This reunion also furnishes to many of the people of the stake—with others who came from other fields—about the only outing they have during the year. A busy people, who labor for temporal necessities, they look forward to the camping season with pleasant anticipations. They enjoy the gathering better than do those who make long, wearisome trips with the excitement attending the usual "excursion." Here, in the woods, they and their children enjoy spiritual and social pleasures free from harmful and distressing influences.

The young people have had a good time. They have, as a rule, assisted at the general services. Their pleasures have been innocent, reviving, and orderly. "Marshmallow" and "watermelon" parties, in season, have been features of their program. There are many fine young people in the Lamoni Stake.

People from the surrounding country turned out in large numbers, especially at the Sunday services. Many heard the gospel who would not otherwise have heard the word.

Quite a number from distant points were in attendance, Chicago, Independence, Detroit, St. Louis, and other places being represented.

The Lord recognized his people; words of instruction, admonition, and encouragement were spoken. Six were baptized.

At the business-meeting a committee was appointed to provide for the reunion of 1909. The stake reunion seems to have become an established factor, a necessity to the people. It is probable that the committee in charge will take steps to purchase its own tents, possibly to build a pavilion, as finances may warrant. The committee already possesses considerable reunion property, and future expenses probably will decrease.

The missionaries in charge and the stake presidency were in charge, Bro. and Sr. D. A. Anderson were in charge of the music, Bro. and Sr. J. W. Peterson did their usual satisfactory work in the dining and refreshment tents, Bro. Samuel Shakespeare was chief of police, and to the undersigned fell the work of acting as secretary.

News From Branches

ST. LOUIS.

Quite a number were added to the fold since last report. Through Bro. Tanner's efforts in Alton, Bro. Ashby was baptized July 26.

Much good has been accomplished through the tent-services in Lansdowne, as five were baptized last week. We are thankful that God has been with the Saints there and heard our prayers in their behalf. Bro. Beard baptized four on August 9.

God indeed has been good to our young Sr. Gladys Gall in restoring her from her serious illness. Special prayer was asked for Bro. Grainger, who met with an accident and is confined in a hospital here. Bro. and Sr. Holten's little babe was blessed by Brn. Archibald and Cooke and named Alpha Harold; also the sweet little boy of Mr. and Sr. F. H. Koste was blessed by Brn. Archibald and Roberts, named Francis Henry.

Good sermons have been delivered by Brn. Tanner and Archibald.

Bro. Archibald performed the ceremony which united in marriage Mr. Thomas Graham and Sr. Daisy Thomas, of Cheltenham.

Graceland College.

Graceland College opens September 8, 1908. Some students have already reached Lamoni and are completing arrangements for their year's work. Present indications warrant us in expecting a larger attendance this year at the opening than other years have shown.

I am privileged to announce that President Joseph Smith will be a prominent participant in the exercises of opening day. Special musical numbers from those in charge of the music department will also be features to delight those in attendance. At this time also the members of the faculty will be introduced to the public and will respond as they feel disposed.

It seems hardly necessary to speak of the mission of Graceland, or of the hopes and desires of the founders and sustainers of this worthy institution. However, we do feel called upon to say this much: We are positive that the college is fulfilling an important and an imperative mission and that it is doing it well. We are further assured that the day of much greater things is upon us. We have been uplifted by the many encouraging words received from different sources and especially by assurances from God of his interest in and approval of the work.

Those of you who intend to avail yourselves of the benefits of advanced education and those who need better qualifications for life and its many changes should consider seriously the unparalleled opportunities afforded at Graceland. I seriously doubt the possibility of finding another educational institution so highly favored in point of faculty qualifications, healthful location, moral environments, and opportunities for spiritual growth. Parents having children are under obligations to do all they can for those placed in their care. Surely all Saints will be desirous of patronizing their own institution insofar as the desired courses of instruction are offered, other conditions being equal, or nearly so. If it is necessary or advisable to send your child away from home to be educated, do not be forgetful of the fact that school days come at a time in life when lasting impressions are made and when character and future activities are determined. Do not fail to make selection of a school, the environments and associations of which will conduce to a closer walk with God. This is the thing of greatest importance to the young.

During the past year we have been able to furnish employment to many young people, thus affording them an only means of educating themselves. We are putting forth every effort to make it possible to greatly increase facilities along this line. At present we are making an earnest effort to secure sufficient funds to provide another dormitory. We have been reasonably successful thus far and have strong hopes of being able to build this fall. We are determined to avoid indebtedness and hence are waiting for the full amount to be subscribed. It is estimated that the building will cost five thousand dollars. We lack about fifteen hundred dollars at present of having the required amount. We are laboring under disadvantages because of lack of room. This dormitory would relieve the congestion and make a good home for many students who are now unable to be with us. Can you not be one to assist in this cause? Come, let us labor together. Send me your subscriptions immediately.

Yours in a worthy cause,

D. A. ANDERSON.

HADEN.—August 9, 1908, Stewartville, Missouri, John Haden, born December 10, 1840, in Haroad County, Sweden. He united with the Utah church in 1862. After working as a missionary for three years, he emigrated to Utah, and was married to Ellen Swensen the same year. He soon found that he had been deceived. He underwent many hardships there, and in 1868 he and companion again heard the true gospel, it being preached by Elders Larson and Alexander McCord. They were baptized by Alexander McCord and confirmed by W. W. Blair. They afterward moved to Iowa, lived there about six years, and then moved to Missouri. He leaves wife and ten children and many friends to mourn. He was a loving husband and father and was always faithful in his testimony to the truthfulness of the gospel.

Startling Decline in the Number of Students for the Ministry.

A western minister says, in the September American Magazine:

"The startling decline in the number of students for the ministry is causing alarm in all branches of the church. In fifty-eight theological seminaries the number is over seven hundred less than twelve years ago, though the population has increased eight million. In one leading denomination the loss has been thirty-three per cent, while the membership has increased over two hundred and fifty thousand. Historic Andover Seminary, with seven instructors, a library of fifty thousand volumes, and an endowment of eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars, has but twelve students.

"Statistics gathered by H. D. Williams, of Boston, show that of American farmers, ninety per cent come from farmers' families; of lawyers, forty; doctors, thirty; bankers, forty-two; ministers only eight per cent. Ministers' sons are turning largely to other callings, and they are probably doing so because of conditions within the churches."

"Then the writer goes on to describe some of these conditions. What he says about the inadequate support which the church gives a minister is particularly interesting:

"After spending ten years' time and enough money to have set himself up in business, a minister gets on the average less than six hundred dollars a year. He is expected to furnish his talents at a discount of from thirty to sixty per cent because he is a minister; and pious people generally figure religion on a charity instead of a business basis. The inadequate salaries are materially reduced in the long run, as short pastorates mean time lost, expense of moving, etc. So in many cases the church is starving to death the goose that lays the golden eggs."

Our Trade with Guatemala.

The most important results from the opening of the transcontinental line will be the increased American trade with Guatemala and the developments sure to be brought about in that republic. Guatemala is the most populous, and in many respects the richest and most highly developed, of the Central American countries. It has an area of about forty-eight thousand three hundred square miles, just about that of New York. No State or country of anything like similar area is by nature richer or more promising. It has vast areas of fertile agricultural land, a splendid climate, great forest and mineral wealth, and is rich in scenic and historical attractions. Nearly all the products of both the temperate and tropic zones grow to advantage. Wheat, corn, barley, and hemp flourish. Coffee of a superior quality and sugar cane are great staple crops. Fine cotton is raised, and the country seems ideal for stock. Over one hundred fruits and vegetables are grown, including all the common ones of our country and many tropical edibles we do not know. The banana is the principle fruit cultivated, and with coffee, mahogany, and rubber makes up the principle exports of the country. Only a small portion of the available area has been developed agriculturally. Little has been done with the forests and the mineral resources. From the mountain streams can be developed a large amount of power, and a wide range of industries should be successfully established, where at present there are scarcely any outside of the sugar factories, a single cotton-mill, a few small tanneries, and the salt works at San José.—From "Guatemala's transcontinental route," by M. A. Hays, in the American Review of Reviews for August.

The September Century's leading article is the first popular account given to the public of the Wright Brother's aeroplane, written by themselves and liberally illustrated with pictures from photographs supplied by the authors. Their experiments—which are among the most interesting and important now being carried on in the scientific world—place these men at the head of American aviators; and their article is of special interest in view of the fact that they have contracted to deliver to the United States Government a machine, the trials of which are planned for late August.

Editorial

SENIOR EDITOR ABROAD. ✓

We take pleasure in reading with the Saints, readers of the HERALD, after our summer's absence from home in visiting Ontario, the reunion at Boston, and the reunion at Lamoni. We report excellent feeling among the Saints wherever we have been. Our visit at Toronto and the suburb, Humber Bay, Owen's Sound on Lake Huron, north from Toronto some one hundred and twenty-two miles; Garafraxa, where we spoke in the little church erected by the Saints some years ago, and to the little band at Stratford, and the congregation at Detroit, Michigan, gave us to understand that the same spirit prevails everywhere among the Saints, that spirit one of desire for unity and progress.

There has been advancement among the line of the churches in Ontario and they are as a rule in an excellent condition spiritually.

The congregation at Toronto is growing numerically and they are meeting their obligations incurred in building with a determination to overcome a seeming difficulty and pay what indebtedness may have occurred. We understand that the annual payment due July 25 was in hand to be paid over in due season.

We found the church at Garafraxa much too small, making it difficult for them to invite their neighbors to meet with them, as the smallness of the church would prevent many who otherwise would attend under the idea that visitors would crowd the members.

The congregation at Toronto is under the charge of Bro. Archie McLean, who has in Brn. Gillett, Bennett, Wilson, Marchmont, and others of the officials excellent help and are doing an excellent work.

The congregation at Humber Bay is doing excellently, though the house is also getting small, and it will not be long till it will be necessary to have larger quarters.

We found the branch at Stratford, in charge of Bro. David Smith, few in number. We preached to them in the little church on Brunswick Street when about all in the village were present. A child of Bro. Bell was quite sick at the time, but a letter from Bro. Daniel McGregor received at Lamoni stated that she was out of danger and rapidly recovering.

We met with the Saints at Detroit on Friday, the twenty-first day of August, and stayed with them until Tuesday, the 25th, speaking to them and their friends twice on Saturday, the 22d, and twice on Sunday, the 23d, having good audiences at each meeting,—quite commendable under the circumstances of their wide dispersion about the city and the difficulty of meeting together often. We found a disposition to progress and there is certainly necessity for it. The congregation numbers somewhere between two and three hundred, a good many of them engaged in active labor for the things that perish, but having a desire for the onward march of the truth. They are meeting in quarters which they hold by frail terms, the land belonging to a railroad company, the building erected by some church organization which moved to other and better quarters. It is made of wood and is rapidly going to pieces by the gnawing tooth of time, and soon will be untenable if their term of occupancy is not terminated by the railroad company's owning the land, in which case they will have to remove the building from the premises. They have an opportunity of purchasing an excellent building in a better location for very much less than the building cost when erected, as also for much less than they could build a similar building not nearly so good. Our advice to them was if they could be sufficiently united in purpose and could reach the purchase, to secure it.

We found Bro. R. C. Evans busily completing his residence in Toronto, to which place he has been induced to remove, intending to continue the services begun some four years or more ago in the Majestic Theater. He had an offer from a prominent citizen for the use of a large skating-rink which could be used in the summer season, but all this spring and a large portion of the summer was too cool for a meeting in a place of the kind. In each place we visited we found a feeling of regard and spiritual esteem and a decided appreciation of the work which Bro. R. C. has been doing. We were gratified by this, as it was more or less indicative of the safe basis upon which the work of Bro. Evans had been done. His work in charge of the affairs of the Bishopric has been quite marked with success. Rumors have been scattered abroad that he had erected a large and expensive building in the city of Toronto. This is a mistake. He has built a comfortable but not large building, and it is not in an expensive part of the city of Toronto. The rumors which have been in circulation in regard to it are erroneous, and tend to discredit Bro. Evans unnecessarily, whether intended to do so or not. We know, for we have visited Bro. Evans and were privileged to eat with himself and family at the first meal partaken by them in their new quarters, and that before their furniture was distributed. The finishings and furnishings of the house and its accommodations, though modern, are not of the expensive kind.

At Stratford we found Bro. Daniel McGregor quite sick of an old complaint. Bro. George Lindsay was with him and together we administered to him, through which act he received relief, and the next morning was up and about as usual, except suffering from a gathering in his right ear, the result of a cold taken while on a trip east upon an excursion trip with others.

Stratford was named after the Bard of Avon and is supposed to be located on a small stream called Avon. The city is unique in this, that it has a population of fifteen thousand, is quite an active manufacturing center, and is built around a triangular square; that is, there is a triangular building in the center, and the three sides of this building present fronts on streets following the triangular lines with the lines of business houses built on the opposite side from the center building. Streets radiate from the center in such a way that each part of the city is about equi-distant from the business section of the city where the court-house, city hall, post-office and other city buildings are located, thus making it equally easy for the dwellers on those streets to reach the center without the intervention of a trolley line. By the kindness of Bro. McGregor we were permitted a pleasant ride round the city, including a visit to the Old Folks' Home. A large manufacturing plant pushed by St. Louis, Missouri, men and money, makes furniture.

At Owen Sound, we found also a city of supposed fifteen thousand, largely in the lumber business, and what seemed quite strange was the fact that one of the largest, if not the largest of the lumber plants is an American institution, the word American standing for the United States.

The meetings at Owen Sound were held in the city hall which the brethren had secured. Here we found Bro. U. W. Greene in charge, with others of the missionary force, and the Saints gathered from around the country. The spirit of the meetings was excellent. Bro. R. C. Evans accompanied us and we had the pleasure of listening to discourses by him, Bro. U. W. Greene, and Frederick Gregory, and were also privileged to address the Saints upon the occasion.

Some seem to have flung away all the golden grain of practical wisdom, which they had enjoyed so many opportunities of harvesting, and most carelessly to have stored their memories with the husks. —Hawthorne.

IN MEMORIAM.

WILLIAM LEEKA.

Bishop William Leeka departed this life at his residence near Thurman, Iowa, on the eighth day of July, 1908, at the age of seventy-eight years and twenty-four days. Bishop Leeka was born June 14, 1830, in Clinton County, Ohio; was baptized and confirmed by Joseph Ball and Truman Gillette into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Bentonsport, Van Buren County, Iowa, March 12, 1840. He united with the Reorganized Church in 1871, was ordained an elder November 14, 1875, by Apostle T. W. Smith. He was ordained a high priest April 18, 1898, by W. H. and E. L. Kelley and M. H. Forscutt, and ordained a bishop August 26, 1900, by President Joseph Smith and Patriarch Henry Kemp at Shenandoah, Iowa. For many years prior to his ordination as bishop, Bro. Leeka had acted as Bishop's agent for the Fremont District of the church, and continued to act as agent for that district after the ordination until the time of his death, fully and wisely fulfilling the duties of his office.

Bishop Leeka was of German descent. His parents emigrated to Virginia at an early time. In November, 1848, he came to Fremont County, Iowa, with his parents, and has resided there since that time. August 28, 1873, he was united in marriage to Miss Rachael S. Seward, of Van Buren County, Iowa. To this union there were born six children, all of whom are living, to wit: Roy Bismark, Madison, Clarence Oliver, Lorena, Sadie, and Jay D.

Except Roy Bismark and Clarence Oliver, all reside in or near the old homestead, Thurman, Iowa.

Funeral at the Leeka church near his home, attended by a large gathering of neighbors and friends as well as Saints. The remains were interred in the cemetery on the bluffs overlooking his former residence. Funeral in charge of and discourse by Bishop E. L. Kelley.

The church in the death of Bishop Leeka loses one of its energetic and faithful members. He was widely known and of good repute among Saints as well as among those with whom he dealt in the world.

MONEY AT FIVE PER CENT.

The manager of the Herald Publishing House would like to borrow of some of the Saints a few hundred dollars for which he is willing to pay five per cent interest. This money is not to increase the indebtedness of the Herald Office, but to replace money which is now borrowed at a higher rate of interest. The debt of the Herald Office will be very materially reduced by February 1, 1909. The office has done more in getting out new books during the last year than in the past five years, and it will take time to sell these books.

This affords an opportunity to some to accommodate the publishing department. Address F. B. Blair, manager, Lamoni, Iowa, in reference to the matter.

THE SANITARIUM.

On returning to Independence, Monday, August 31, I learned by conversation with Bro. G. H. Hilliard, of the Bishopric, that the Sanitarium is very rapidly approaching completion. With the exception of the lighting-plant and water connection it is about finished. These are finished except making the proper connection, and the fact that it is so far completed makes it an object to the Saints that those who have not yet handed their mites to the general fund for the erection of the Sanitarium, would do well to take the matter under consideration and see if they do not feel that they would like to have a part with others of the Saints who have been subscribing liberally to this institution which has been directed to be built by divine appointment.

We learn incidentally that the estimate still needed made in the last HERALD, will be a little too small; that it will require some five thousand dollars to put it in a finished condition. There surely must be a sufficient number of those who have not sent in their help to furnish this amount and more. When the institution is completed it will be an asylum for the reception and care of those who can not otherwise be properly cared for, either in body or spiritually, and which can be reached by care and attention.

We desire not to offensively urge the necessity upon the Saints; but the great desire that the whole church shall be personally interested in so excellent an establishment for so good a purpose, makes us think it wise to present the matter as we have learned it as to its condition to the better consideration of the readers of the HERALD. There will be an opportunity when the rooms are completed for those who may choose so to do, to furnish stated rooms in the building for the care of patients in a similar way as rooms have been furnished at the Saints' Home.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. John C. Grainger, though confined to a hospital, is not idle. He has supplied the editors with many interesting items and quotations. He sends us a copy of the first issue of the Flame of Fire, published at St. Louis, Missouri. From its editorial page we discover it is "the organ of the People's Pentecostal Church," and under the caption, "The church not founded by men," is the following: "The People's Pentecostal Church is simply the name for a band of believers who, by reason of their having been born of the Spirit, are now members of the 'general assembly, and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven.'—Hebrews 12: 23. The 'Church of the first-born' was founded by Jesus himself two thousand years ago. Individuals become new branches of the true church when they are born of the Spirit, John 3: 5, whether their names are put upon any denominational church record or not, making not the slightest difference."

Bro. W. A. Doty, Baxter Springs, Kansas, sends us a copy of the News-Republican, of that city, which is the official paper for an old soldiers' reunion held there every year. Under the heading "Prophets," is found a reproduction from the HERALD for November 23, 1889. Bro. Doty says: "I had this put in the reunion daily, thinking some would read it that otherwise would never hear of it." It contains Joseph the Seer's prophecy on the Rebellion, a Reverend Akers' prophecy on the same, and comment on the latter by Abraham Lincoln. For the benefit of HERALD readers we will use this in the near future.

It is said that the next great European war will cause an expenditure of blood and money that will make all previous wars seem insignificant. General Blume, an eminent military expert, in making a report to the German general staff, states that if war broke out next year or next week, Germany could put in the field 4,750,000 troops. A war fought against another European power would cost Germany at least one billion, five hundred million dollars a year as long as hostilities lasted, while the indirect loss, through financial and commercial stagnation, would be far greater. As the nation or nations at war with Germany would suffer in at least the same proportion, the drain on the resources of Europe would be appalling. Appalling, too, would be the losses of armies killed and wounded. General Blume estimates that the casualties would exceed the twenty per cent recorded on the Japanese side of the late war.—The Lookout.

The Sword of Laban—such is the latest ebullition from R. B. Neal and fellows at Morehead, Kentucky. The Sword is to flourish monthly at ten cents per stroke, one dollar per year. Their "Foreword" begins: "This monthly will be authority on the Mormon issue," which statement quite naturally implies that their other periodicals have not been or are not authoritative. We almost thought Bro. Neal had forsaken his mightier pen for the sword until our eye encountered the following: "We have at our command the best pens of the nation," which we take to be but a figure of speech only. Unfortunately the names of these "best pens of the nation" have not been given for our information, and so we will be interested in learning what additional talent they have enlisted in their cause. While the significance of their use of this name is understood, we suggest that they exercise care, for they may bring ruin to themselves through a reckless use of this new-found sword. The men who were intrusted with it in the Book of Mormon times were men of God. The best we can wish for R. B. Neal and his "best pens," is that this latest venture will measure up to the standard attained by the Helper and other similar efforts. If they can see where they can correct any great wrong in the actual living and application of pure Latter Day Saint doctrines, they should be calling attention to them. Otherwise their rehashing of old, threshed-out, and threadbare stories represents but a huge waste of time and futile effort.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Evening services at the Brick Church were resumed Sunday (6) after two months of park meetings. These open-air meetings have been well attended and we believe were productive of good.

The speakers last Sunday were Elder John Garver in the morning and Elder E. E. Long in the evening.

All weekly prayer-meetings are set for Wednesday evening. Heretofore they have been held on several different nights. The sacrament-service on Sunday was well attended, the church being filled almost to crowding. The interest of the Saints in this monthly meeting is commendable and should be extended to other services.

The Straight Road

ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

Judgment is that spirit of wisdom enabling to know right from wrong. Judgment is also the sentence or decision of a judge. The approach to perfectness in the sentence must be measured by the degree of wisdom resident in the judge. Man is finite and imperfect, hence his judgment is finite and uncertain, hence not eternal; for all things finite must have an end. God is absolutely and superlatively perfect; not only in wisdom, but in power, and love, and justice; hence his judgments must be of the same nature, perfect, and his sentence just, and eternally the same.

Eternal judgment is, therefore, God's judgment; because God is eternal, and his ways and judgment are eternal. Peter says, "The word of the Lord endureth for ever." The Lord says by Isaiah, "Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand." An infinite God would have a wise and loving purpose, and would so "think" to do for the best for man, the only creation in his own image.

God's purpose in the creation of man was that he might be happy; and it is to be supposed that it was beyond his wisdom to so arrange that man might not be finally happy. Standing on what we do know of God's judgment, and looking off into the immensity of the unknown concerning the same, we conclude we know but very little. All of God's judgments are not revealed; but what are revealed testify to his love and mercy and wisdom and justice. God's laws are like himself, perfection. The wise man stated, "God shall bring every work into judgment, . . . whether it be good, or whether it be evil." The standard of judgment will be his perfect law. The good must be rewarded according to their good, and the evil according to their evil. This is in harmony with, "For the Son of man shall . . . reward every man according to his works."

A judgment and sentence implies an examination, the hearing of evidence; and this implies degrees of right and degrees of wrong. And, as God's wisdom is such as to enable him to determine all this perfectly, the sentence must be commensurate, whether in punishment or reward. As there are bounds and degrees to the good or evil, there must be bounds and degrees to the penalty; and if so, how, in justice, could a sentence be pronounced, and a penalty inflicted, which has no bounds or limitations, the magnitude of which can not be measured—an eternity of eternal punishment?

The object of punishment is reformation, not to appease wrath or satisfy vengeance; but that through discipline man may learn to obey the law of life and happiness. "The law of the Lord is perfect," and "he that keepeth the law, happy is he." Man is alienated from God because of transgression of this law, and is it not a reasonable thought that, in the eternal judgments of God, finally "every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear." (Isaiah 45:23.) The Lord hath so sworn and purposed.

Jesus went and preached to the spirits in prison, among whom were the antediluvian sinners, who had been there since the flood, in the prison-house, as prisoners of hope, undergoing a discipline that made them, or some of them, ready to accept deliverance; for Paul said Jesus "led captivity captive." Paul says, also, to Timothy, that God "is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe." The execution of God's judgment was placed upon the shoulders of Christ the Savior. Isaiah says, "The government shall be upon his shoulder, . . . Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end."—Isaiah 9:6, 7. And Paul says, "For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed, is death."—1 Corinthians 15:25, 26. This fits nicely with Isaiah's testimony that of the increase of his government there shall be no end. As in Adam all die, so all are made alive in Christ, "but every man in his own order." God's eternal sentence upon mankind will require "orders" to answer the end of justice in meting out commensurate rewards, whether of good or evil. In God's justice and wisdom it is very apparent that he has provided a "special" salvation, "prepared" a special place for—promised a high glory to—his little flock, his jewels—his martyrs, his faithful witnesses—those willing for the gospel's sake to pass through "great tribulation."

Paul illustrates this by the glory of the sun, and other and inferior glories by that of the moon and stars, which it seems is provided for those who, neglecting their opportunities in this life, have passed the disciplining ordeal and received such punishment as to satisfy justice, when by the blood of the covenant Jesus shall say to the prisoners, Go free. When we contemplate the wondrous works and judgments of God we are constrained with good, old, patient Job to say concerning him, "Which removeth the mountains, and they know not; . . . Which shaketh the earth out of her place, . . . Which commandeth the sun, and he riseth not; and . . . spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south."

How marvelous and great is this being whose love is as great as his power, in whose habitation is found justice and judgment! As we approach him in obedience to his perfect law, we become more like him in all his attributes. David said, "Teach me good judgment and knowledge; for I have believed thy commandments. Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word."

Let us so live and work that when the judge of all the earth shall come, his sentence may be, "Well done, good and faithful servant; . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

"I STAND AT THE DOOR, AND KNOCK."

SERMON BY PATRIARCH ALEXANDER H. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA, JULY 5, 1908.

PATRIARCH ALEXANDER H. SMITH.

I have selected for my reading-lesson this morning a portion of the Revelation of the Lord Jesus to John, third chapter of that book, beginning at the fourteenth verse:

And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried with fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.

That portion of this reading-lesson which seems to have been presented to me for thought, upon which to converse with you, is found in the twentieth verse. I have often used this text, and have often heard it used; but never has it been presented to me in like form as it has been presented upon this occasion. I have used it in making the application of the mercies of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in presenting the gospel to the children of men. I have heard it used along that direction. But this morning it has struck me from the reading that it is an address made by the Spirit to the church—to one of the churches organized early in the history of the preaching of the gospel. And when I read it, it may be possible that my hearers may see some reason for the application of the language to the present time, under the organization of the church in the present age:

Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me.

Do you note the promise that is made here, when the answer is made to the voice of Him that knocketh? How easily we can apply this language to the preaching of the word! How easily we can make the reference that might be found in the language: "Go . . . preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." But when we ask the people to recognize the voice of our Lord and Savior in this call, and promise salvation, we call attention to the fact that the Lord is knocking, knocking, knocking at their hearts, asking the privilege to come in. And we make the application that when the voice of the Lord is heard, he that heareth and yieldeth obedience to the commandments, comes to the door of the church, and enters through baptism into the door of the church, is fulfilling that which is found implied in the text. He is coming in! We are opening the door! He is coming in! Where? Whence the echo that rises in the heart of him that is seeking indeed the coming of the Lord Jesus? "I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." We like to call the attention of the people to the statement made in the commission as recorded in Saint Matthew, where he commands his disciples to go preaching, teaching "all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always"—"ALWAY, even unto the end of the world."

Now can we glean in this language, can we glean in the promises of the Savior, anything that would lead us to locate the time understandingly, when the promise of the Lord may be fulfilled to us? One of the apostles has written, exhorting the people to entertain strangers, to be careful to entertain strangers, for some have entertained angels unawares. Be careful to entertain strangers; for peradventure (that is, it may be possible) our experience may be of that character that angels may come to us, that we may entertain them. Now is this a figure of speech? Does it mean that when we shall have labored and lived, and borne the heat and burden of the trials of a long life here in this mortal experience, and pass from this stage of action, that we shall entertain strangers on the other side? Does it mean that? Or does it mean that the Lord, in his loving mercy, in the carrying out of his divine will in the preparing, has prepared a people who shall have kept his commandments to that extent that they shall be worthy, worthy to have the angels come and dwell with them, or abide even but a short time? Ah, we know how our hearts are thrilled, softened, and made tender, when our children come, our loved ones come to visit us and stay for a time—come in to sup with us. The joy of reunion, the joy of communion, the joy of the presence of our loved ones is such that we are filled with happiness, peace, and joy; and our entire effort is to make those loved ones that have come to visit us in this life, to make them happy, to cause them to feel the joy that is swelling within our hearts; and we rejoice in association, and are glad in the communion of loved ones in this life. That is actual; that is real; not a figure of speech in this. We understand that. Now is it possible that figurative language relative to the coming of the Lord Jesus is of such a character that it means anything; or that, if it means anything, it is so far away in its fulfillment that we can not grasp and lay hold of the influences of love that should swell in our hearts at the entrance of the Lord Jesus, our Master, to sup, and dwell with us but for a short time, for a season only?

What should be the business, the chief business of a child of God in life? We are promised that if we are obedient to the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, and are baptized, we shall be saved. And oftentimes I think that this seems to some to be the acme of all that is commanded, and that as we progress in life, and obey so far, we have no need of any further than that, because the promise is that we shall be saved. Do you believe that? Do you believe that the promise follows simply upon the outward obedience to the commandment to enter into the waters of baptism and be saved? We are now engaged in building, in building the house of the Lord. Now this may be used as a figurative speech, for we are growing in numbers as a church. We recognize the church as an organization to represent the building of the house of the Lord: We are growing in stature. That is, the building is spreading out. The foundations have been laid, and the structure is being reared; and we are growing in knowledge. We are growing in knowledge relative to the administration of the system, in the execution of the law of the Lord. We are growing in knowledge; are we growing in grace as a church?

I want to call your attention to some things that have been the burden of my thought of late when looking upon the work as it is spreading and growing and becoming immense—because it is becoming immense—as I can behold it permeating the various countries, nations, and societies to whom the gospel of the Lord Jesus goes, who accept and receive it. It is growing, becoming an immense work. Why, once, in my early ministry, when I went out to preach the gospel, I believed that I knew something relative to the gospel and its promises. I thought I did. And it seemed perfectly easy to convince those to whom I went to talk relative to the truth of the gospel, because it seemed so plain to me; and because the results, the culmination of the efforts of the ministry of Christ seemed so near. It seemed to me that I could grasp with my understanding the nature of the results of the preaching of the gospel. But as I grow older, and as the work presents itself to me, as my thought goes out and studies the nature and character of it, it is so much grander that what I had understood relative to it in the past, sinks into insignificance, comparatively speaking.

I have talked about the redemption of Zion. I have sought to understand the nature of Zion's redemption. Sometimes I have found fault with our brethren, some of them, because they have said that we did not want a brick and mortar Zion. There will be no brick and mortar Zion. The Zion and the only Zion that we may anticipate and expect is the Zion spoken of in the promises of God in the land of the East as a material Zion. But I have reflected that the promises given to the individual that obeys the commandments of God is of that character that if the people lay hold of the commandment and work to the achievement of the result designed, there will be a Zion; the pure in heart. And the gathering of Zion will be the gathering of the pure in heart; and the redemption of Zion and the household of God will be the redemption of the pure in heart.

I want to call your attention again to the revelations of the Lord Jesus found in the twenty-second chapter, the last chapter of the book of Revelation. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Is that a figurative speech? Is Zion, the city of God, with the beautiful pearly gates, and the streets paved with gold, simply a figure? Think you it is simply a figure? If it is a figure it represents something. What does it represent? Fact. It represents something designed in the mind of God, the Creator. It represents that which has been declared by the true and faithful witness shall take place, shall come to pass, shall be the result of the operation of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. It will not be the result simply of the outward act of the ordinance of baptism (however, that is essential and necessary); but it will be the result of the obedience of those who obey the commandment to be baptized, and who live in keeping with the rules of life revealed of the Lord Jesus Christ to prepare them to enter into the city through the gates, the means by which God hath ordained that men and women shall be prepared to come into his presence and be worthy.

What if we should prove ourselves unworthy to enter in? Whose fault is it? Is not Jesus standing knocking at the door of every heart? those who are in the church as well as those who are out of the church. Is not the presence of the influence of that Holy One with each child of the covenant, that when each child of the covenant doeth that which is wrong, is there not a witness in the heart of the individual that the Lord is there, knocking at the heart, asking but the entrance, that by the entering the evil may be rebuked, and stand rebuked?

I ask the question, What should be the principal business of the child of the covenant, one who has covenanted to keep the commandments of the Lord Jesus? The principal business of that individual is to make himself pure in heart; not simply the conforming to the outward ordinance. That is an easy compliance as compared with the watchcare that should be in the mind and heart of each individual to govern him every day, night and day, all the time, sleeping and waking, at his business, at his play; always, always there should be the intent in the heart of the child of the covenant to correct every error he discovers in his character, in his living. Some years ago there was published in the HERALD a vision. One of our brethren beheld a beautiful temple of God, and beautifully describes what he saw. He saw those coming and approaching the temple and coming into the temple. He himself approached near enough to discover that the temple's entrance was guarded. There were swords that dropped across the door that prevented one who was not worthy entering into the temple of God. And the vision of the temple was of that character that he that saw the vision examined himself to see if in his heart there was any spot of earth that would bar him from entering the temple.

Can you place yourself in that condition, each individual, in imagination or thought, before the beautiful temple of God, and realize that within the temple of God are found those that are recognized as the children of God, realize that in the temple of God are found all the joys and comforts that are promised of God to the redeemed and ransomed, and in your heart is the feeling of passionate, earnest desire to go into that beautiful temple, and yet perceive those swords as they tremble with power, closing the door to you? Can you think of a condition of this kind, and not realize, then, that there is imposed upon you the duty to make yourself worthy, so that when you approach the beautiful temple of God you need not fear that the swords will drop to hinder your entrance?

What is the business of the children of the covenant? The business of the children of the covenant is that they watch every minute, every hour of their lives, every day, that nothing stands between them and their God. And it is not enough for us to eschew the evil alone; but we are commanded to shun the very appearance of evil. Oh, think! think! I have tried to think; I have tried in my mind to see a people like that. I have tried to see a people which are pure in heart, in my mind. We are approaching to that degree of perfection. And yet, it seems so far, oh, so far. I have passed my seventieth birthday. In my early efforts in the ministry it seemed to me that I could see the morn of the coming of the Lord Jesus, and it seemed to me that if I lived right, agreeably to his commandments, I would live to see his coming, that I might be among those who should welcome him when the sound of the trump of God should announce his approach. I had that hope. I had that ambition in my heart, to so live that I might be worthy, that, should the call come, it might not take me unawares. And yet, to look back over my past life, all these years, I tell you plainly if I had my life to live over, with no better knowledge than I had in the beginning of it, I do not believe that I could better it. But if I were permitted to live it over, with the knowledge that I have received in the influences of the Spirit of God, I could better it. I know I could. Feeling this way, then, I look into the future, and ask myself, Can I make my future like that that I would hope to be if I were permitted to live my life over again? I ask you, my hearers, to take this matter to yourselves. And if in your thought you have had this same vision of the past presented to you, seek to make your time that remaineth with you so much better than your lives have been in the past that God may come in and sup with you. He may not come in person, tangible as another man would come, in the mortal flesh; but I want to tell you that he will come; if you accept his commandments, and live so that you are pure in heart, he will come and be with you.

I ask my hearers to ask themselves the question, when they have sat down to their table to partake of the nourishment necessary to this mortal life, and then ask their Lord and Master to bless their food, did they never feel the coming in of a third person to partake with them as they partake of the nourishment of this present life? If you have never felt the coming in of a third person, the influence of the presence of the Lord and Master in the partaking of the food of this natural life, how can you expect that you can always feel, or ever feel the coming in of the presence of the spiritual Christ into your spiritual life?

If the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ means anything, it means everything. If it means spiritual salvation beyond this present life, it means present salvation in this present life.

It is not hard for the man who reasons on this subject to come to the conclusion that if individuals obey the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ from the time they come up out of the water and receive the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit, if they live in agreement with the covenant they then and there make, it does not take one with very strong reasoning powers to understand that their salvation there and that moment begins. It is not a matter that is put off until this body lies in the dust, but it is a matter that begins when they pass through the door. It is a matter that begins when they invite the Lord in to sup with them. And let me tell you, the evidence of your salvation will be with you all along the pathway of life, and the evidence of your acceptance with the Lord will be with you, if you are seeking to make yourself perfect as the Father which art in heaven is perfect. Perfect in your sphere of action! You all understand that. God does not expect you to be perfect as God; he expects you to be perfect as a man; he expects you to be perfect as a woman, a woman in the Lord, keeping the commandments of the Lord with heart pure and holy before him. He expects his children, those who are obedient to him, to so live that their lives may reflect this fact, that they are of the kingdom of God, they are the blessed people, and they are the ones that God depends upon in these latter days to correct the errors that are found in the world relative to the wickedness and sin that are found in the world. And how can they do it if they give way, and in their own persons and bodies do those things that the Lord has commanded should not, and will not be done in the kingdom of God?

I have tried in my weak way to look beyond the borderland. Sometimes I think that I am presumptuous, that I have been presumptuous when I have tried to look across, across and between, across that gulf that seems to exist between this life and the life beyond. I can not separate the two. I can not separate them when I look for the results that are promised of the Lord Jesus Christ. I can not put off till the next world that which seems to me so fitting in the world that now is—that would be so grand.

Oh, would it not be a grand sight to see the people keeping all the commandments of God, worshipping God under the influence and by the power of his Spirit, all moving together upon that high plane of perfection that is represented as essential and necessary, and will be found by and by? When the Lord Jesus shall come, it will be found.

Did you ever feel in your hearts that you were ready, that you were willing—did you ever feel in your hearts that if the Lord Jesus should come to-day, that you would be ready to meet him? Did you ever feel that way? Have you ever asked this question, Am I ready? am I willing? am I willing to give up all that I have and am to see the coming of the Lord, to be with him when he does come? It is a natural hope. It is a natural anticipation, when we take into consideration the promises that are made in the gospel of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. The hope was found in the hearts of those who listened to Paul and Peter, and to the other apostles of the Lord Jesus Christ. The hope was found in the hearts of the apostles themselves, that they would live to see the coming of the Lord Jesus, that they would be in this present life at the coming and establishment of the reign of the Lord Jesus, when Jesus should sit upon the throne of David, and rule in righteousness, and actually reign among the righteous people upon the earth. That hope was found in their hearts. That hope was found in the hearts of the first who accepted the angel's message in the latter day; and many, oh, how many, died in despair because that hope was withheld from them, and they were not permitted to see the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ, in mortality. That hope is found in your heart. That hope is found in my heart. But I have been made to believe that the coming of the Lord Jesus is of that character that it matters not to me whether I sleep or whether I am awake and in this life when he comes. If I live righteously before him, and keep his commandments, I have his promise that he will bring me forth, and that I will be among those who shall meet him at his coming and reign with him. And while I have this promise, I realize that it is possible for me to lose that. So have you the promise, and it is just as possible for you to lose the reward at the coming of the Lord Jesus as it is for me to lose it.

(What matters it to you and to me whether we sleep in the tomb, if, when the trump shall sound, and the graves shall be opened, we are among those that shall come forth at the sound of the trump, to meet the Lord at his coming? Why, sometimes I have been carried away so in thought upon the possibilities of the enjoyment that will be in the heart at the coming of my Lord and Savior, that I have almost heard the tramp, tramp, tramp of the coming host, when the sound of the trump shall be. I have seen, in my thoughts, the flashing of light from the east, as it showed the presence of the coming of the Lord, as it passed o'er hill and vale, and through the world. I have seen in thought the people arising and going forth to meet the Savior when he shall come to reign as King of kings and Lord of lords.)

There is another side to the picture, unfortunately. The side that is represented in the declaration of the prophets, that there shall be those whose hearts shall be filled with fear—fear; and they will be calling upon the rocks to fall upon them and hide them from the face of the Lord. And I wonder, I wonder if Zion in latter days, I wonder if the Saints of God who are in the main making a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ will feel that fear at the coming of the Lord Jesus. I know I am not afraid now. Under the influence of the Spirit, I am not afraid; I am not fearful. But there are times when I am almost; when realizing my weakness and the passions of mortality, I am afraid. Oh, I am afraid. But I hope, I pray earnestly that the Spirit of our God may be given to us as a people, that we may live before the world so that we may prove to them that we are the pure in heart.

Do you want an inheritance? What is an inheritance? What does it mean? I have been thinking over that subject—the subject of an inheritance. What does it mean. If I have a thousand dollars, and move into the land of Zion, and buy me a little home, is that home my inheritance? Do you think it is? As we commonly understand the word inheritance, it means a possession that has descended to us from our parents. If we are made a child of God, and are the children of God, we shall receive an inheritance from God. But if we are not children of God, we are not promised an inheritance. Did you ever think of that?

Now I have heard, often heard the effort made to make it appear that all the human family are the children of God; that the great fatherhood of God is of such grandeur in its nature that it could embrace and did embrace the whole human race; and because we are of the human race and thus sons of God, all of the race are our brothers. When I hear that effort made from the pulpit, I ask myself the question, Where is the necessity for the law of adoption? Where is the necessity for the law of adoption if I am a son and heir naturally by reason of my creation? Why should I be adopted into the family of God? I am there already.

Again, there are some words of my Savior that strike me with terrible force when I hear this thought impressed upon the minds of those who are listening. The words of the Savior: "Ye are of your father, the Devil." I know it is hard language; but it is not mine. There are, then, those who may be recognized as the children of God. There are those who may be recognized as the children of the Devil. It is easy for us to understand this. "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are." If you yield yourselves to obey the Devil, you are servants to the Devil, and become sons of the Devil. How can you explain it otherwise? But if you yield yourselves servants of God, and do his will, and obey his commandments, you are the children of God. Then are you entitled to an inheritance. It does not matter how many acres of land a man has in this present life. It does not matter how many dollars he has. If he is a millionaire a thousand times told, and yet is not obedient to the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, he is not a child of God, nor an heir to an inheritance in the celestial kingdom of our God.

Listen to the reading of our lesson to-day, where the Lord tells the church through the angel of the church (that we understand to be the president of the church to whom the Spirit is talking). We understand there the statement made that this particular branch, or this particular church, in the lesson that we read to you, said they were rich. They said they were rich, and wanted for nothing. And yet, the Lord tells us that they were poor, miserably poor, destitute, and naked in the presence of God. We may be recognized as the church of God by the world; but to be the church of God, and to be clothed upon with the riches of God, we should keep his commandments, and should live each day in such a manner that we may retain that remission of sins obtained by reason of obedience in going down into the waters of baptism—live each day so that we may retain that remission.

Do you not know that the lesson is taught by him that goeth down into the waters of baptism, coming up out of the waters of baptism, that the old man in that act dies, and the man is born again; that he comes forth a new man, a babe born into the kingdom of God? Then his life begins, a new life—it should be a new life. And those things that he has done heretofore, thinkingly or unthinkingly, that are not in keeping with the commandments of the Lord Jesus Christ, he must cease to do. We may deceive our fellow men. We can not deceive our God nor his Christ. We may deceive our fellow men by living a life seemingly pure, our sins hid from every eye. But to live a life that is recognized of God, that entitles an individual to an inheritance in the kingdom of God, we must live from our hearts that degree of purity that shall enable us to mingle with the angels of God. And blessed is he that keepeth the commandments of the Lord; for he shall enter in at the gates.

What is outside of the gates? Did you ever read what is outside of the gates of the beautiful city? "For without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie."

Now I am not saying that any of you have done any of these things. Do not understand me that. You, in your homes, in your domestic life, close the door upon characters that are represented in this statement. You, in your domestic life, will forbid the entrance into your houses, into your domestic circle, those men that you know to be murderers, that you know to be thieves, that you know to be whoremongers, those that you know to be liars, unfit for the association of the righteous of God. You would do that? And do you not suppose God will do it also?

Now, our duties are, as the people of God, each one, to keep the commandments of the Lord Jesus to work righteousness; for in working righteousness we clothe ourselves in white, in the raiment of the ransomed and the redeemed, in the city of God. It behooves us, it is our business, our chief business, as a people, to make a success of our covenant, and so live that God will recognize us as his people; and by and by when the trump of God shall sound, his people shall be prepared to meet him. Look, look for righteousness. Look for good. Look for the good that is in thy brother. Look for the good that is in thy sister. Look for the good that is in those all around thee. Stop looking for evil. Stop looking for the word, to make thy brother an offender; stop looking for that. It will be seen prominently enough without looking for it. Each one seek to find the good, emulate the good that is in your brother. Each one seek to represent the character of your Lord and Master; and, my word for it, when the inheritances are given, and come from the Master, even Christ Jesus, you will receive your inheritances. Jesus says, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." All things!

Now let it be your abundant duty, your work, in the future, to overcome. Do that and you will find your inheritance in the city of God. May God bless you.

Every morning comes the light, and a fresh chance of doing better. Is it not the sheerest folly and ingratitude to let yesterday spoil the God-given to-day?

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER L. G. HOLLOWAY.

I was born November 20, 1876, in Hamilton Township, Harrison County, Missouri, about ten miles from what is now Lamoni, Iowa. Here I resided with my parents until I was about five years of age, when my parents removed to a small farm they had purchased some five miles away. We there resided for some five years and then moved to a place near where I was born. Here I spent my boyhood days, working with my father on the farm.

When I was a small boy my parents heard the gospel and accepted it and it was taught me by them. However, it did not have much influence with me until I was near sixteen years of age. At that time I began to be moved upon by the Spirit, which made an impression on my mind. On many different occasions I would seek some secluded spot and there pour out my soul in prayer, asking God to enable me to do his will. I always received assurance that my prayer had been heard and that which I now recognize as the Spirit would come to me in such a manner that I would rejoice under its influence.

One evening after retiring for the night I had a dream in which I was permitted to see the second coming of the Savior. I dreamed that the sky was darkened and all kinds of birds, beasts, and people seemed to be moving to one central place. A personage came to me and said, "Come with me and get the Book of Mormon." I accordingly went with him to a place where it was and there it was given to us. I was told at that time that there was a part of that record that had never come to us as a people (which I did not know before), and that it was time now for it to be brought forth. As we were returning with the sealed part of the book I looked and the heavens were enveloped in fire, and at the same time I was caught up into the air and was told that this was the coming of the Savior. I asked myself the question, "Will I be permitted to be where Christ is?" I was answered, "If you are permitted to be caught up to meet the Savior, you will be permitted to be with him." At this time it had never entered my mind that we would be caught up to meet the Savior when he came. The dream had a wonderful effect upon me and I began to think that if the Master would come he would find me on the outside. So I began to reflect very seriously on my condition, and on one occasion I promised the Lord that on a certain date I would comply with the law and be baptized. When the day came I could not get the consent of my mind to go and do as I had promised the Lord I would do, if he would spare my life until that day. I did all I could to dismiss the subject from my mind, but it seemed impossible for me so to do. However, I did not go, but kept putting off the very thing that I knew would bring relief. Each day the feeling grew stronger, and again I promised the Lord that on a certain date I would be baptized. When I made this resolve in my mind I felt somewhat relieved, and day by day, as the time approached, I began to dread it, as I had on the former occasion. Finally the day arrived, and I got up in the morning and I really wondered if I would do as I had promised. There was no human being that knew of the struggle that was going on within me. I went to the barn lot and caught a horse, preparatory to my starting for the elder whom I wished to baptize me. I did not mention to my parents where I was going. Something I had never done in all my life was to go away from home without getting their consent. I would bridle and then I would unbridle the horse, and time and again I did this. One power persuaded me to do that which I knew to be my duty, and the other power said, "No, you won't." I finally got on the horse and started, and, strange to say, my parents did not ask me where I was going. If they had I would never have gone. On the way over to where the elder lived, this controversy was going on within me.

I arrived at the elder's home and found him and his son there. Bro. C. H. Jones was the elder, and those that know him will testify to the fact that I needed not to mention religion, as he would do that. Soon we were talking on religious topics. I sat and listened to him for nearly two hours. Still I lacked the courage that would enable me to tell him what I wanted. Finally I looked at a small stream not far from the house and ventured to ask him how deep it was. Upon this question he looked at me in a peculiar manner, as if to say, "What a foolish question!" He replied, "I don't know. Why?" I replied that I wanted to be baptized if it was deep enough.

We soon repaired to the water and there on the nineteenth day of March, 1894, I entered the kingdom of God. Then I did not care if the entire world knew that I was a Latter Day Saint; in fact I wanted them to know it. I took pride in the fact that I was a member of that organization known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ. On my way home I heard music than which nothing could be sweeter to the ears of man. I knew, as well as I knew that I had a being, that what I had done was pleasing to my heavenly Father, and the angels were rejoicing because of my obedience to the principles of life.

Soon after I had entered the church I concluded to take up the work of a salesman for pianos and organs. Therefore, for a short time I worked with Bro. C. D. Hammer. After a while I concluded to try it myself, and went to Western Iowa, stopping in Red Oak, which was a thriving town, but after going to every dealer in that city I could find no one that wished to give me employment. Staying there over night, I concluded to go on to Hastings, a small town some twenty-five miles farther west. Here I had an uncle living, and I concluded to try it on the farm again, after my unsuccessful attempt at selling pianos and organs. I then hired to my uncle at fifteen dollars per month.

The first week passed away slowly, as it was my first trip away from home. On the next Monday morning we had to market a carload of hogs, and at the early hour of three o'clock in the morning we were loading our first load of swine. This was taken to the station and at eight we were loading another. After my team was loaded and all were about ready to start for the station again, one team becoming frightened soon my team was unmanageable. I was thrown from the high wagon upon the tongue; one horse kicked me and I fell under the front wheel of the wagon which passed over my body at the waist line. The hind wheel passed upon my body. When the team turned suddenly to the left, the coupling pole split, and box, hogs, and all were thrown off on me. I got up as soon as liberated from this condition, but everything was dark and I began to throw up immense quantities of blood. My uncle helped me to the house. A physician was immediately called (contrary to my wish, however), who, after making an examination, said there was no hope for my recovery. My parents were notified and all began to watch for the end to come. I was in such great misery that I asked the physician to give me something that would ease the pain. He administered morphine in such quantities that it would have been fatal to any ordinary person, but the drug had no effect upon me. What was I to do, among entire strangers (with the exception of my uncle, who was not a believer in any religion)? Was it possible that the end had come! It seemed that every limb could have been torn from my body without making the pain any more severe. While in this condition I heard a voice that said to me, "You shall not die, but live and declare the words of the Lord." Never did words come to mortal that were more cheering than those words were to me. It gave me such great faith that no person could make me believe that I had to die. I immediately began to grow better, to the astonishment of all, and in a few hours all pain had ceased, and in three or four days I was able to walk around the yard. My father having arrived, in response to a telegram, I concluded to return home with him. I here wish to state that no medicine was given me except the two doses of morphine, and that never affected me in the least.

After my arrival at home I made some foolish ventures in the mercantile business that proved to be detrimental to my good. I began to lose the spirit of the gospel, going from bad to worse. In the month of August, 1896, I went to Southern Kansas, and on down into the Indian Territory. I well remember the first time I took the name of God in vain. It seemed smart to me to use such language and soon the habit was acquired that was hard to correct. I also took to gambling and to drink, and many hours have I spent in the gambling-room. I will state that I do not wish any who may read these few lines to think that I take pride in relating these dark scenes in my life, but I only want to show how the Lord feels after those who are in darkness.

I returned to my home in the month of December, after an absence of four months. The following spring I went to Western Iowa, the place where the accident happened to me. I remained here only a short time and went on to Nebraska. Here I worked a short time and returned home. During the following winter I spent my entire time in the gambling-room.

My friends began to leave me and I realized that I was respected by no one. I would then resolve in my mind to try to do better, but temptations were too strong for me and I allowed myself to be drawn into things that my very soul would despise at times. Many times there would come to me the words I had heard while suffering as the result of the accident, which were, "You shall not die, but live and declare the words of the Lord." I would say, Is it possible that I will yet reform and preach the gospel? For that was what I understood it to mean. I still believed those words were true, and had it not been for that fact I hardly believe I would have ever taken up the work again.

This condition of affairs continued for about three years. During that time I passed through the darkest scenes of my life, on one occasion facing death because of some who were my bitter enemies as a result of stories circulated against me, which, however, were not true. I lost all the money earned at gambling, and my credit was so impaired that no one would trust me to one penny's worth of goods.

The officers of the branch were kind to me, and on one occasion, as they were visiting me, one brother asked me to pay him and his family a visit. This came as a surprise, as I thought I was so far beneath the notice of good, respectable people that none would care to have me visit them.

Never was an invitation more gladly accepted than this one. I rejoiced to know that I still had a friend who, although I was unworthy to mingle in his society, was willing to lend a helping hand in the hour of need. This brother (who was Price Mc-Peek) always showed an interest in my welfare, and had it not been for him I seriously doubt whether I would ever have become interested in the gospel again. I went to the brother's home on one Saturday evening and spent the night with him. On the next morning he had his son and daughter take me to church, and from that day to this I have been a regular attendant at the services of the Lord.

I immediately began to correct the many mistakes I had made, and found I had friends who were willing to do all they could to help me break off from my former associates, who did all they could to get me to follow in the old beaten paths of vice and crime. On many occasions they would beg me to take part in some game and, when I would refuse to do so, they would say all kinds of things about me and say, "You will never quit, so come on." Those who have never tasted of this kind of life can not realize how hard it is to give up those bad habits. Neither can they know how hard it is to resist the pleadings of those who insist upon your doing that which your conscience tells you is wrong. However, step by step, I was able to correct my errors, and soon I found that the temptations were not so hard to resist.

After a short time I was made president of the Religio, and was also superintendent of the Sunday-school. On the eighth day of February, 1903, I was ordained to the office of priest under the hands of Heman C. Smith and Columbus Scott. It was told me in the ordination that I would be blessed in my ministerial labor, but I should not think that it came from mortal man, but to give credit to the great Giver of light for that which would give me help in the discharge of my duty. I labored in a local capacity for nearly two years, preaching at different places in the Lamoni Stake, and assisting in whatever I found to do.

I felt impressed to place before the Quorum of Twelve a willingness to work, if in their wisdom they thought best to give me an appointment. At the conference held in Lamoni in the year 1905, I was appointed to labor in the Seattle and British Columbia District. On the eleventh day of May I started for my field of labor. On the sixteenth I arrived in Seattle, Washington. While there I made my headquarters at 1202½ Seventh Avenue with Bro. F. W. Holman, president of that branch. I labored alone for some time, but the Lord abundantly blessed me and I got along very nicely for a beginner. I well remember my first series of meetings. After preaching for some ten nights I quit, as I thought the people had enough gospel. Although they were coming out well and seemed very much interested in what I was telling them.

After laboring in several different places I went to a small town near Seattle and there I had a presentment that I shall never forget. The people were members of the Lutheran Church and had been baptized in infancy. Several asked me if I was going to preach on that principle, stating that if I did they would leave and not attend any more. I felt sure that if there was anything really needed it was a sermon on that subject. One old gentleman asked me to baptize his nine-day old baby, and when I refused he did not seem to like the answer that I made him, which proves how inconsistent some are.

I took the matter to the Lord in prayer and I received what was to me evidence that it was wisdom for me to preach on that topic. On going to the schoolhouse I asked the Lord to bless me with the same degree of the Spirit that Moroni had when writing upon it in the Book of Mormon. When I arose to speak the Spirit came to me in such a degree that I was seemingly lifted from the floor, and for nearly an hour I was blessed as never before in my life. Those who had said they would leave me seemed to forget what they had said, and not one of them moved from his seat. I tried to show them that infant baptism was not right and was displeasing in the sight of God. After going home I had a vision in which I was permitted to see Satan and was made to realize the great power that he possessed. I will not take up space to relate this experience, but will simply say that there is no pleasure in being in the presence of the Evil One.

During this year I labored a short time in the Spokane District, but returned to the Seattle District later on in the year. While preaching in a small town in the southwestern part of the State, Hump-tulips by name, I had a manifestation of the Spirit that will remain indelibly stamped upon memory's tablet. It was on this wise: I had been preaching for several evenings, together with Bro. N. C. Enge, and we had baptized several. Among them were a lady by the name of Patridge, her two daughters, and a son. The husband and father was well pleased at first, but later on he found fault with some things that we presented, and became very bitter against us.

On one occasion I was going to the schoolhouse to visit the school and as I was about half way there a voice asked me, "Where are you going?" I replied, "To the schoolhouse." "Why are you going to the schoolhouse?" I replied, "Because I was invited to visit the school and I thought I might do some good." The voice then said, "Don't go to the schoolhouse, but go to Mr. Patridge's." I was at the time going in a northwest direction and it was necessary for me to turn and travel in a southwest direction to reach the place where I was told to go. I immediately turned in that direction and after walking about a quarter of a mile I came to the place. I went to the door and rapped, but no response came. I began to reflect: Was it possible that I was deceived? I felt sure that it was the Spirit that had commanded me to go, but now it seemed that I was deceived. However, I walked down into the barn lot and there I found the brother (or the one who afterwards became a brother) and another gentleman in a religious talk. After a few words there was given me by the Spirit a question I propounded to him, and no doubt it had weight upon his mind, as in a few days he came into the church. He several times had declared that he would never be rebaptized, saying that his former baptism was all right; he was at the time a member of the Baptist Church.

Many other things I could mention that enabled me to do the will of Him I try to serve, but this will do for the present, as it will enable the reader to see the means that the Great Framer of the universe has of directing those that are laboring for the advancement of the Master's cause.

When the appointments were read at the close of 1906 conference, held in Independence, Missouri, I found that I was to labor in the Rocky Mountain Mission. After a visit with home folks I again started for my field of labor. During the year I labored in Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Utah, laboring with Bro. Isaac M. Smith in Montana. During this year I had several manifestations of a similar character to those already mentioned, but will not take time and space to mention them. I returned home on March 16 and on the next day I was married to Miss Blanche Henderson, of Seattle, Washington, whom I had met on my first missionary tour.

I was again appointed to labor in the Rocky Mountain Mission, and was assigned to the Montana District to labor with Bro. Edgar H. Smith. I had been laboring as a priest, but before starting for my field of labor this time I was ordained to the office of elder under the hands of Heman C. Smith and Frederick A. Smith, on May 21, 1907.

In conclusion, let me say that some may criticise me for the mistakes I made. To such let me say, I have had no disposition to conceal the truth, and while the things I have related are unpleasant, and many times I have suffered pain to know I have made so many mistakes, yet I can now see that the guiding hand of a loving Father has been over me all the days of my life, although I have not done as I should. I keenly feel the loss of time that can never be recalled, that to a certain extent has left a shadow that can never be removed. I say to the reader, profit by the mistakes of others. I have found that doing good to our fellow men is the greatest pleasure man can be engaged in.

I have related things that were of comfort to me, as well as things not pleasant, and I sincerely trust they may prove to be of value in making some better fitted for the presence of the Great Judge when he comes to reward the children of men.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

If there has ever been a "dream of the ages" among men of science and invention, not mentioning dreamers and Darius Greens, it has been the achievement of actual flight through the air. Balloons are well known, but they are bound to go where the winds take them, not subject to any control whatever, except as to the height of flight. Today the world is really beginning to see that flying-machines and dirigibles are going to be successful, in fact are successful.

There are two classes of airships just now being exploited, dirigibles, in which buoyancy is acquired by means of gas-filled bags or balloons, and aeroplanes, which are heavier than air and must raise themselves mechanically as well as propel themselves. Count Zeppelin has been very successful with the former in Germany. Mr. George H. Guy, in a comprehensive article in the September Review of Reviews, has the following in regard to Zeppelin's work:

"The air-balloon has always been associated in the public mind with the idea of a passenger-carrying craft of the air. Zeppelin gave it length and great size, making it into a steerable ship. A balloon of the large dimensions of his designs needs a rigid structure, or frame, whereby its shape can be preserved under all conditions, and especially when it is being driven rapidly through the air. Zeppelin saw that such a frame should be rather a part of the balloon itself, than be suspended below it, and so retard its propulsion. This frame he supported in the air by a number of small balloons carried in the "hold" of the airship, and he thus gave these balloons, or gas balloonets, as they are called, protection from the sun's radiation and other influences. Underneath the elongated aerial hull he attached two large watertight aluminum cars, containing the motors, steering, and other apparatus, connected by a long passageway with cabins in the center. From these cabins ascended a flight of stairs through the body of the ship to a small platform on its upper side, which gave an unobstructed view of the sky for astronomical or other observations.

"In the fourth ship named after him Zeppelin embodied the improvements suggested by his construction of three consecutive ships of this type. He was about to demonstrate by its agency that a commercially useful means of air transportation had at last been attained, when it came to its untimely end at Echterdingen, partly through inexperience in handling it,—in the air as well as on the ground,—and partly from the weak points of inadequately tried machinery. The ship measured four hundred and thirty-five feet, with a diameter of forty-three feet at its greatest width. She could carry twenty-five passengers. The direction of travel was controlled by a series of planes, and the ship had four propellers, driven by two one hundred and ten horsepower motors. In her last trip, in which she sought to secure the prize of five hundred thousand dollars offered by the German Government for the ship remaining in the air for twenty-four hours, she had already been out twenty hours, and had traveled a distance of three hundred and thirty-five miles.

"Zeppelin has, however, demonstrated that the power-propelled balloon will eventually equal in speed practically any other vehicle man has ever employed for useful locomotion."

In America Captain Baldwin has done the most toward flight by means of the dirigible, and his recent experiments have resulted in the United States Government accepting his ship for government work. Of Baldwin's work Mr. Guy says:

"The foremost name connected with dirigible work in this country is that of Captain Thomas S. Baldwin, who has recently met successfully the conditions of the test established by the Government. The balloon had to have a speed of twenty miles an hour in still air, to be designed to carry two passengers having a combined weight of three hundred and fifty pounds, and be capable of carrying in addition one hundred pounds of ballast, to compensate for the increased weight when operating in rain. The gas-bag of Captain Baldwin's balloon is eighty-four feet in length with a maximum diameter of eighteen feet and a minimum diameter of sixteen feet, and a capacity of eighteen thousand cubic feet. The frame is sixty-six feet long. The twelve-foot propeller, placed on the forward end of the frame, has a speed of four hundred and fifty revolutions per minute. The distinctive feature in the provision for the handling of the ship is a number of box-kite planes near the forward end, operated by the aviator for lowering or raising the ship, and keeping it on an even keel all the time. The ship is driven by a twenty-horsepower Curtiss engine. The type of this airship is distinctly American. While in some features it strongly suggests that of Santos Dumont, it is just what a ship would be which embodied all the points of the Zeppelin on a very small scale. For instance, the frame is almost as long as the gas-bag, and is attached closely to it by means of a fine strong netting. The operators are carried in two cars, and the plan of vertical steering is identical. Moreover, the shape of the hull of the Baldwin greatly resembles that of its enormous prototype.

"Those who know Captain Baldwin as a man as well as an aeronaut never had the slightest doubt that he would fulfill the requirements of the Government tests. He has made three thousand ascensions, and he has never received a scratch."—American Review of Reviews for September.

The Scientific American for August 29 says:

"After its preliminary trials to determine the speed, . . . the committee which had charge of the testing of the Baldwin airship superintended the test for endurance on August 15. In flight the previous day an average speed of nineteen and sixty-one hundredths miles an hour was maintained. The requirements were that in the endurance flight the airship should maintain an average speed equal to seventy per cent of this and that it should fly continuously for two hours. The test was not started until eighteen minutes to seven in the evening. The same four and one eighth miles course from Fort Meyer to Cherrydale, Virginia, and return was used as was followed the day before. The speed obtained was somewhat higher in one direction owing to a strong cross wind. The airship rounded the course seven times, and then flew about a mile out and back in order to complete the two-hour flight. It was in the air two hours, one minute, and fifty seconds, with the motor running continuously, and in this time it traversed a distance of nearly twenty-eight miles. As it fulfilled all the conditions, it has been acquired by the War Department, and Captain Baldwin is at present engaged in instructing the officers of the Signal Corps in its management. A considerable number of short flights have already been made."

Along the line of aeroplanes the Wrights alone hold the attention of those interested in this subject. Wilbur Wright has been making flights in France, while Orville Wright is in America making flights for the benefit of the Government. The Wrights tell their own story in the September Century and it is well worth any one's time to read it through. The following is an excerpt:

"In order to show the general reader the way in which the machine operates, let us fancy ourselves ready for the start. The machine is placed upon a single rail track facing the wind, and is securely fastened with a cable. The engine is put in motion, and the propellers in the rear whirl. You take your seat at the center of the machine beside the operator. He slips the cable, and you shoot forward. An assistant who has been holding the machine in balance on the rail, starts forward with you, but before you have gone fifty feet the speed is too great for him, and he lets go. Before reaching the end of the track the operator moves the front rudder, and the machine lifts from the rail like a kite supported by the pressure of the air underneath it. The ground under you is at first a perfect blur, but as you rise the objects become clearer. At a height of one hundred feet you feel hardly any motion at all, except for the wind which strikes your face. If you did not take the precaution to fasten your hat before starting, you have probably lost it by this time. The operator moves a lever; the right wing rises, and the machine swings about to the left. You make a very short turn, yet you do not feel the sensation of being thrown from your seat, so often experienced in automobile and railway travel. You find yourself facing toward the point from which you started.

"The objects on the ground now seem to be moving at much higher speed, though you perceive no change in the pressure of the wind on your face. You know then that you are traveling with the wind. When you near the starting-point, the operator stops the motor while still high in the air. The machine coasts down at an oblique angle to the ground, and after sliding fifty or a hundred feet comes to rest. Although the machine often lands when traveling at a speed of a mile a minute, you feel no shock whatever, and can not, in fact, tell the exact moment at which it first touched the ground. The motor close beside you kept up an almost deafening roar during the whole flight, yet in your excitement you did not notice it till it stopped!"

The Literary Digest has this to say concerning the subject of mechanical flight:

"The average man does not know that mechanical flight is no longer a mere aspiration, but a mighty serious reality," says Byron R. Newton, writing in Van Norden's Magazine, of the marvelous progress the Wright brothers and others have made in aerial navigation. 'It is just as certain,' says one inventor, 'that aeroplanes will soon be built to carry four or five persons two or three hundred miles as that men will live to build them and ride them.' And Peter Cooper Hewitt, going even further, declares that in the next decade he 'expects to see air craft crossing the Atlantic with perfect safety.' These prophecies, coming as they do at the time when the United States Government is making its official trials of the Wright flying-machine for practical army work, lend added interest to the experiments."

The Scientific American gives an account of Wilbur Wright's latest flights in France:

"On account of the small race-track near Le Mans, . . . and also because the great crowd of spectators somewhat confused him, Wilbur Wright made arrangements to fly above the military field at Auvours. . . . After waiting several days before he was able to use the field, Mr. Wright at last, about six o'clock in the evening, on August 21, was able to resume practice and to make two excellent flights of one minute, forty-six seconds, and two minutes, eighteen seconds respectively. During these flights, which were made in a seven-mile wind, the aeroplane described a figure eight and made other complicated curves at a height of from ten to fifty feet above ground. . . . Some German military men who witnessed them expressed great admiration of the machine and its aviator. When going with the wind in the second flight, Mr. Wright estimated that he attained a speed of practically fifty miles an hour, which was a greater speed than he had ever reached before."

In view of the foregoing, is it too much to believe practical and safe navigation through the air is a thing to be realized in a very few years? With ballooning a greater altitude must be maintained for safety. With aeroplanes or dirigibles great height will not be necessary. On the contrary, it will be avoided for the same reason of safety. With a perfect guiding system and experience in driving it will be necessary to fly only high enough to avoid houses, trees, poles, or other obstructions. Thus in case of accident, no great fall can result so far as distance is concerned. Aeroplanes and dirigibles of no great size will skim over fields, rising above obstructions when encountered and stay close to the ground wherever free from them. Without tracks or trolleys its limitations will be on the ground side only.

While gasoline-engines are now used, with the completion or perfection of the wireless transmission of electric energy, a material lessening of weight will result. There will be nothing left for our sky pilot to worry about other than the scuttling of some other navigator, sending all hands on board down to a hard bump, or the dodging of wireless telegrams.

Sunday Reveries.

I am so weary; mind and heart have failed me;
My trembling lips can scarcely frame a prayer.
Father, stretch out thy hand, protect and save me
From the abyss of doubt and fell despair!

I have been foiled in all my best endeavors,
My earnest efforts for a higher life;
False friends have led me into deeper errors,
That filled my heart with bitterness and strife.

Is there no "balm in Gilead" for thy daughter?
No cooling stream midst pastures green and fair,
That I may lave me in its healing waters
And find relief from all-consuming care?

O, pitying Lord! if I might only borrow
A brief respite from care and every pain;
Might sleep and quite forget, until the morrow,
I would take every burden up again.

The Moon's Lesson.

BY PRISCILLA.

One night when all the household was wrapped in slumber except one whose nerves suffered, and who could not find relief in the sleep that the weary body needed so much, and after hours of sleepless, restless tossing on the bed of pain, she crawled to the couch by the parlor window where she could watch her "old friend," the moon, who had been the sharer of so many of her midnight vigils of sleepless, suffering nights, and who indeed seemed like an old friend. To her had she cried out her bitter heartache with no fear of betrayal.

To-night the sore heart can find no relief from the pain that is fast destroying the body, and the still worse pain that is drinking her very heart's blood, till her only longing is for the rest that knows no waking to pain and sorrow.

But as she lies here, the dear friend rises and looks smilingly in on her, and slowly rises upward, till a small cloud stops, as it seems, its progress. But no, up it rises above the cloud, and glides gently on. Again a larger cloud stops it, and again it rises above it, still smiling, and still rising higher. But the invalid sees the clouds are fast gathering, and feels that soon the "old friend" must disappear for the night; but again it comes from behind the clouds with the same old persistence, and till the wee, small hours of the morning did the invalid watch the struggle, and at last the "old friend" came out conqueror, for all the clouds disappeared, and the glorious light of the moon flooded the earth with its brilliancy. The sufferer reviewed her own life with its storms and tempest, the battles and failures, hope and despair, and learned a lesson from the moon's struggle and victory, that even though clouds, storms, and tempests may come with cruel blast, though friends forsake, and loved ones prove untrue, though the body may be racked with pain, God is above all, and if we fight our battles bravely, with a smiling determination not to be crushed down, he, our great, loving Father, will not let us suffer more than we are able to bear; for he will give us strength for our day and trial, and at last when the clouds have passed away, and we see his smiling face, we shall then know and understand why we, as well as the moon, must have these clouds to obscure our light for a time, that we may rise above them, and with the peace this lesson brings the invalid feels to say as the little poem,

NOT SHUT IN.

"Shut in," did you say, my sisters?

Ah no! only led away
Out of the dust and turmoil,
The burden and heat of day.
Into the cool, green pastures,
By waters calm and still,
Where I may lie down in quiet,
And yield to my Father's will.

Earth's ministering ones come around me,
With faces kind and sweet;
And we sit and learn together
At the loving Savior's feet;
And we talk of life's holy duties,
Of the crosses that lie in the way,
And they must go out and bear them,
While I lie still and pray.

I am not shut in, my sisters,
For the four walls fade away;
And my soul goes out in gladness
To bask in the glorious day.
This wasting, suffering body
With its weight of weary pain,

Can never dim my vision,
 My spirit can not restrain.
 I wait the rapturous ending,
 Or rather the entering in
 Through the gate that stands wide open,
 But admits no pain or sin.
 I am only waiting, sisters,
 Till the Father calls, "Come home,"
 Waiting with my lamp all burning,
 Till the blessed bridegroom come.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

The Bible in Rhyme.

The following poem is from the parish paper of the church of the Holy Apostles, Philadelphia. It is a concise summary of the contents of the books comprised in the Old Testament:

In Genesis the world was made
 By God's creative hand.
 In Exodus the Hebrews marched
 To gain the promised land.
 Leviticus contains the law,
 Holy and just and good;
 Numbers records the tribes enrolled,
 All sons of Abraham's blood,
 Moses, in Deuteronomy,
 Records God's mighty deeds:
 Brave Joshua into Canaan's land
 The host of Israel leads.
 In Judges their rebellion oft Provokes the Lord to smite;
 But Ruth records the faith of one
 Well pleasing in his sight.
 In First and Second Samuel
 Of Jesse's son we read.
 Ten tribes in First and Second Kings
 Revolted from his seed.
 The First and Second Chronicles
 See Judah captive made;
 But Ezra leads a remnant back
 By princely Cyrus' aid.
 The city walls of Zion
 Nehemiah builds again,
 Whilst Esther saves her people
 From plots of wicked men.
 In Job we read how faith will live
 Beneath affliction's rod,
 And David's Psalms are precious songs
 To every child of God.
 The Proverbs, like a goodly string
 Of choicest pearls, appear.
 Ecclesiastes teaches man
 How vain are all things here,
 The mystic Song of Solomon
 Excels sweet Sharon's Rose,
 Whilst Christ, the Savior and the King,
 The rapt Isaiah shows.
 The warning Jeremiah
 Apostate Israel scorns,
 His plaintive Lamentations
 Their awful downfall mourns.
 Ezekiel tells in wondrous words
 Of dazzling mysteries.
 Whilst kings and empires yet to come
 Daniel in vision sees.
 Of judgment and of mercy

Hosea loves to tell.
 Joel describes the blessed days
 When God with man shall dwell.
 Among Tekoa's herdsmen
 Amos received his call.
 Whilst Obadiah prophesies
 Of Edom's final fall.
 Jonah enshrines a wondrous type
 Of Christ our risen Lord.
 Micah pronounces Judah lost,
 Lost, but again restored.
 Nahum declares on Nineveh
 Just judgment shall be poured.
 A view of Chaldea's coming doom
 Habakkuk's visions give.
 Next Zephaniah warns the Jews
 To turn, repent, and live,
 Haggai wrote to those who saw
 The Temple built again.
 And Zechariah prophesied
 Of Christ's triumphant reign.
 Malachi was the last who touched
 The high prophetic chord;
 Its final notes sublimely show
 The coming of the Lord!

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY,

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, U. S. A.

Dear Brother: In accordance with the advice of Bro. Rushton, we have located here. I have as yet visited but three branches; found them in very good spirits. They appreciate what the late General Conference has done in appointing three missionaries for this field. They gave us a warm reception. There have been some able young men added to the church this last year, and I believe they will be of much value to the cause. Already their voices are heard upon the highways in the presentation of the gospel. I am very pleased with their zeal and effort, and believe that the good Master is standing by them.

The British Isles conference will be held here the first Saturday, Sunday, and Monday in August. Bro. J. W. Rushton is already on the ground, getting things in shape, such as looking for a hall, making preparations to advertise in the papers, having two or three missionaries hold open-air meetings some weeks before conference, and have about ten thousand circulars printed, with the time and place of conference on one side and "What we believe" on the other, with an earnest invitation for all to attend the services. These are to be distributed at the various homes; not pushed under the door, but placed in the hands of some member of the family, the husband or wife if possible. We are in hopes that such an effort will bring out a large attendance to the services.

Myself, wife, and daughter Ruth are well. We had a very pleasant voyage. The sea was a little rough for a few days, but the good ship Carmania did well. She is a very steady and pleasant boat; not so fast as some others, seven or eight days is usually the time. In conversation with some that have been on the Mauretania and Lusitania, they said that they would not again go on those ships. The powerful machinery causes so much vibration that it is very unpleasant for the passengers; they prefer to be two weeks on the Carmania than one on the Mauretania or Lusitania. They were built for speed and comfort, but only accomplished in the first. If you ever come to this land, get a ticket by the Carmania. The rooms in the second-class are extra large, much more so than on the Campania or the Cedric. By the way, I have heard that you intend to pay a visit to the British Isles soon. If you do, please call at 137 Severn Road, Canton, Cardiff.

In my judgment, Wales should have a bishop. I believe that the work from a financial stand would receive more support from members here and in the States. As the customs have been, the agents here received tithes and offerings and forwarded to the bishopric in England. The missionaries and families receive their allowance from England. If we had a bishop here, when short of funds, he could deal directly with the general Bishopric of the church. As matters now stand, we have to appeal to the Bishop's agents, and they to the bishopric of the British Isles, and if they had no funds, matters would be very discouraging. It might be said that the Lord will care for the appointment of the bishop in due time. I read that we are workers together with him, and it is not always necessary to be commanded; but should move out in doing what good we can for the advancement of his work. The instructions are already given in the law, and I believe a suggestion along this line is timely.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

ALBION, Idaho, August 20, 1908.

Editors Herald: I suppose all who write for publication in the HERALD aim to give information or to edify. For these reasons I read your pages, and if I chance to miss any numbers of HERALD, or Ensign, I am glad to find missing papers among the Saints where I may roam. Editorials and letters are specially skimmed. If "cream of the wheat" is to be had, I rather expect it there, under "Editorials." Of course, letters tell me what is "doing" in the fields during the seed-time and harvest. I find excellent notes in Sunday-school, Religio, and Mothers' Home Columns. How we read, and why we read, depend on our interest in the matter.

The gospel of Christ admits of the theoretical and practical, and as we are not "crowned except as we strive lawfully," so if our practice is in harmony with our theory, it is conclusive that our theory must be in harmony with the truth as it is in Christ, or our practice will not lead us to the perfection of the fullness we hope for. The intellectual faculties must blend, with the spiritual in the lead, or in control, to keep the body in perfect control. So it occurs to us that editorials are closely scanned to learn the trend of sentiment of those intrusted to lead out in teaching the law of the gospel,—not only editorials, but all who write or preach on doctrine. If we hunger and thirst after righteousness, it is only to be filled with the Holy Ghost, the bread from heaven.

With a correct understanding and practice, and the mind staged on thoughts elevating as advised by Brother Paul, in Philippians 4:8, undue criticism of others, personally, or on their writings, should be avoided as pernicious. Yet it is not good to allow the personal conduct or written thoughts of any one to lead us to swerve from the truth as the Comforter gives it to us. Not all Saints search the scriptures, or pray as earnestly as needful, and so are liable to be tossed to and fro by the conflicting logic of others.

We are all children for a season of development in the new childhood in Christ. Some stay longer in the kindergarten than needful, and possibly all of us do; but all have not the same advantages which come by reason of use of our senses, to "discern both good and evil," and the true and false. Along this line I have wished very often that "our writers" would use the Inspired Version of the Scriptures instead of mystifying quotations from the "common."

It must be known that I have the floor just now, so no one may call me down ere this reaches the editor's sanctum, but it might be supposed I accept all the crumbs from the table of the sanctuary, if I never speak my thoughts. I claim an aversion to quibbling, as well as other Saints, and only assert my right to the Holy Spirit as a "guide into all truth." It is stated in what is written, "The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh." Fleshly appetite has no conscience, but is an inveterate gainsayer and quibbler. If we "be led of the Spirit," we are free from all bondage,—the Lord's freemen. The problem to be solved by Saints is as to what is the will of the Spirit versus the flesh. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification," "that every one should know how to possess their vessels [bodies] in sanctification and honor." The true marriage is a type of this sanctification. Love sanctifies. The true spiritual mind judges all conditions, at least so far as it has to do in worldly contact.

I came here on the 20th of June, among other reasons, to see my little flock of children and grandchildren, over forty in all. I expect to return to Langworthy, Iowa, in September. I visited among the Saints very agreeably, to me, at Center Junction, Green Valley, Baldwin, Joinerville, and Chattanooga, while there in the spring. I only wish "all the world would remember and turn to the Lord" and be truly Saints, thus ending the contention as to what to do to be saved.

For Zion, hopefully,

CHARLES ALBERTSON.

DELTA, Colorado, August 21, 1908.

Dear Herald: What comfort you bring, and what pleasure to read your columns! But sometimes, like a true friend, and all unconscious of it, you cause a pang, for instance, we hear of an elder coming over the range, or of one going to stop at Delta. To look through your much loved columns only to find he has not come over, or like the priest or Levite, he has passed on the other side! Before General Conference Bro. Fred A. Smith stopped long enough to give us two sermons which were, as one brother expressed it, "the two best sermons" we ever heard. Surely it was a feast to our hungry souls. I am not finding fault with HERALD or the elders, but where the fault lies I do not know. If it is ours I am sorry, but one thing I know: the people need help here. The sheep need feeding and, sorry to say, the lambs are starving. Can we not have some help? As the tears are dropping from my eyes I write this and a prayer is in my heart, Oh Lord, send us some good Samaritan to bind up the wounds!

Towards morning of July 14 I had a dream. It seemed like there were a good many people around. A young woman lay before me. They said she was dead and they were preparing to bury her, and tried to get me ready. But I contended she was not dead, and as I looked, her face began to move. She smiled and turned over. I stepped up towards her and said, "I knew you were not dead." Then speaking to the people I said, "I knew she was not dead." This is as near as I can remember to write it. The dream worried me. As I had been thinking of cleaning the church house here, I and my youngest son, Warren, went up that afternoon, and were working hard and hurrying to get through. It was almost night and sprinkling rain. While cleaning the chairs at the door of the church, and thinking how I would like a blessing, Would the Lord approve of my work? Would he send me some sweet dream? the interpretation of the dream I had that morning came to me in force, with these four words: "It was the branch." Joy and comfort it gave me. I went home and told the folks I had been well paid for my work.

A few of us are still keeping up the Sunday-school. I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in our behalf, and may the Lord bless the church and all its officers.

Your sister in the faith,
MRS. MELISSA B. WOODS.

SHERWOOD, North Dakota, August 24, 1908.

Editors Herald: This morning finds me at the home of Elder William Sparling, where I arrived at a late hour last evening. Bro. Sparling and I held meeting yesterday afternoon and evening in Mohall, a town about ten miles from here. We preached in the evening on the street to a large and attentive audience. I have not had much confidence in street-preaching, but must confess that if all such efforts could have as good audiences and attention as we have had, I believe it is profitable labor.

Bro. and Sr. Sparling had a very bad accident about a week ago. They and Bro. Alonzo Whiting were driving to their home from the town of Sherwood where they had been holding preaching services. Their team took fright at a dog which ran out at them, and ran away across the prairie. The buggy was upset by new breaking and all were thrown out on the rough sod. Bro. Sparling had his right arm and two ribs broken, and Sr. Sparling had her right arm and left leg broken, both receiving severe bruises in addition. However, both are improving as fast as could be expected. Sr. Sparling's case is the more unpleasant, as she is so very badly crippled with rheumatism.

We had a very successful reunion at Dunseith this year, and the best attendance and interest we ever had. Brn. Hilliard and Gunsolley were very successful in their lines of labor. We believe the Saints of North Dakota, though somewhat widely scattered, are progressing along gospel lines. There are quite a number of devoted, earnest workers.

Quite a number have been baptized this year, and the field of mission work is widening each year. Harvest is now on here and there is but a medium crop in most parts of the State, and not even so good as that in some sections.

The writer is visiting some of the small branches during the busy season, and expects to visit other places when gospel labor is more favorable.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
LEONARD HOUGHTON.

HAILEYVILLE, Oklahoma, August 27, 1908.

Dear Herald: The little town of Haileyville is in mourning to-day; twenty-nine precious souls are lying dead in the morgue from an accident in Mine No. 1 of this place. This was caused by three half-barrels of black oil, which was used for oiling the cars, catching on fire at the bottom of the shaft. The flames were in the main air-way from the shaft to the men's working places, and when the smoke reached them they tried to escape, but the smoke overcame them and they perished in the slope, not more than two hundred feet from the fire and the shaft.

The work of rescue was hot and dangerous because of the roof falling at intervals and because of the intense heat and smoke. I hope it may never be my lot to see and to assist in such a sad, heart-rending sight.

I was in the mine at the time with two more Latter Day Saints, but all of us got out without a scratch, for which we are thankful to our God.

I was called to go back as a rescuer. We found in a space of a hundred feet, eight mules and twenty-two men dead, and in the next two hundred feet, eight more mules and five men, the rest being covered up, but were found afterwards.

The work of rescue is ended and the work of burying the dead is now on for to-morrow. Over a thousand cars of rock fell, and it will cost some two or three thousand dollars to get the mine in working order again.

The accident happened at twenty-five minutes of nine o'clock on the morning of August 26. Part of the men escaped unharmed. The number that escaped is not known exactly, but all of the Saints are all safe and well. Among the dead there were twelve Americans and twelve Italians, and the rest were Russians and Slavs. I ask the Saints to remember us before our God.

In bonds of love,
Box 403. JOHN S. WHITE.

PAWNEE, Missouri, August 30, 1908.

Editors Herald: I feel to write a few words from this part, hoping that others may still be encouraged in the work, and also to let many friends know of my whereabouts, and that I am still laboring as circumstances permit.

Notwithstanding I have been very busily engaged in the mercantile business for two years, I have tried to let no opportunity pass, either temporal or spiritual, without making some effort to do something for the work. Of course, all know when we are employed to labor for others that our time is theirs or nearly so; but so far I am glad to say of my employer that he exacts no time I lose when I am called out to attend to the duties in the work, although he is a member of the Christian Church, and I am proud to say he is well thought of by all who know him.

I am glad to say I am disposed to do what I can for the work. My labors since I came here have been principally with the people of Evergreen, Pawnee, and at the Lone Rock Branch. I have been in attendance at Lone Rock now five Sundays out of six, preaching seven sermons, one being a funeral-sermon. And I had the pleasure of baptizing eleven, six young ladies, one young man, and four children. Several others tell me they will be ready soon for baptism. So we feel the good Spirit is still striving with the people. May God speed the work.

T. J. BELL.

SULPHUR SPRINGS, Texas, August 25, 1908.

Dear Herald: We never see anything from these parts, as there are no Saints here except ourselves, and we feel to write. Our preachers have never been here, except one visit by Bro. E. A. Erwin. We need some elder to come here and preach the gospel of Christ to this community. If any see this and can come we will take care of them as long as they wish to stay.

There is a Christian preacher who desires to debate, having challenged anybody and everybody to debate with him. I also have two daughters who want to be baptized. I make this appeal to the elders of the Northeastern Texas District. We live in Hopkins County, eight miles south of Sulphur Springs, R. F. D. No. 5, Box 84. So if any can come between now and Christmas, write and let me know when to look for them.

We ask the Saints to remember us in their prayers, as we are far from others of like faith, that we may remain faithful to the end. None but those who have lived in an isolated condition know anything about how to appreciate meeting the Saints.

Your brother and sister in the one faith,
C. L. AND C. B. WEBB.

Southern Wisconsin Reunion.

This reunion of Saints and friends has now gone into history. The camp of Saints was upon the beautiful shores of Lake Monona. Here we met Saints from all over the State, some from Illinois, Michigan, and Iowa. It was with hearts of joy and gratitude that the Saints met each other. Organization was effected Saturday afternoon as follows: For presidency: J. W. Wight, W. P. Robinson, J. O. Dutton;

G. J. Brookover, secretary; Nettie Stevens, organist; W. L. Dennis, chorister; for policemen, W. A. McDowell, W. P. Robinson, W. L. Dennis, C. C. Hoague.

We are very much pleased to note that these little (?) brethren were not called upon to exercise their authority. O. M. Carpenter and W. L. Dennis acted as ushers, and G. J. Brookover, J. W. Wight, and Julia Dutton as press committee.

The speakers during the reunion were J. W. Wight, J. J. Cornish, W. P. Robinson, W. A. McDowell, Lester Wildermuth, J. O. Dutton, G. J. Brookover.

Quite a number of non-members attended these meetings, especially in the evenings.

There were twenty-six tents pitched, most of these being large cottage tents. The average attendance daily was about one hundred. We can say that this was one of the best reunions ever held in this State. We consider that much good was accomplished. G. W. BROOKOVER.

Spokane District.

The weather has been quite hot here of late. Many of the city folks have sought the cool recesses of the mountains to fish, hunt, and gather berries.

Sr. Effie Benedict and son Plat, of Helena, Montana, worshiped with the Saints at Spokane Sunday, while on their way to Seattle.

Bro. F. J. Chatburn, of the missionary force, who has his family located at Sagle, Idaho, passed through Spokane Thursday, the 13th, for Colville and Myers Falls, Washington. Bro. and Sr. Gordon live at the latter place and we are told Bro. Gordon has bought Bro. Chatburn's ranch in the Big Bend country, and will move to Mould, Washington, some time this fall. The infant son of Bro. and Sr. W. J. Brewer died at Spokane, Saturday, July 18. Funeral-sermon by I. M. Smith, pastor.

The Spokane Sunday-school voted five dollars for the Sanitarium, which surely is not a misplacement of funds.

Bro. F. A. Smith, minister in charge of this northwest mission, preached two excellent sermons Sunday, June 26, at Spokane chapel. On Tuesday following, President Frederick M. Smith edified the Saints at the same place. Both left for coast points on the Wednesday following.

The Spokane Sunday-school picnic in Liberty Park, July 30, was ideal, and all enjoyed the outing splendidly. About one hundred attended.

Bro. and Sr. Nathan Powell are the latest arrivals at Spokane, having transferred their residence from Sagle, Idaho. We understand he is to engage in the wood business. He has bought Bro. Lamb's property.

Sr. M. Fordham's two sisters, of Santa Ana, California, have concluded to try Spokane climate and opportunities.

Sr. S. S. Smith and two babies arrived at Spokane August 1, from Independence, Missouri. They have located at Sagle, Idaho, temporarily. A free wood-pile together with free rent are among the attractions there. The cool mountain air is to be considered inviting this hot weather also. Bro. Fry, please take notice, Spokane is objective point for one missionary at least. Bro. I. M. Smith has come to Spokane to stay.

Bro. George W. Winegar baptized four in Spokane River at Spokane, Sunday the 16th.

Bro. F. J. Tripp has a large automobile carrying about a dozen passengers, and is making a success of showing strangers the city of Spokane.

Bro. S. S. Smith passed through Spokane last week on his way to Nez Perce County, Idaho. He reports conditions there not very favorable for missionary labor. In the country threshing of the abundant harvest is in full blast. Wheat is going from thirty to forty bushels to the acre.

It might be well for the Blue Rapids Branch of Kansas to take notice that some of their scattered members are at and near the vicinity of Lewiston, Idaho. J. S. Goble and wife, as well as their two sons, Don and Will, are there.

Prospects for the work are fair and we confidently look for progress and development for Zion's redemption here, as well as elsewhere.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. A. J. Layland writes from Raymond, Idaho: Elder W. A. Brooner and I have been traveling together in Idaho and Wyoming for about two months, trying to get the people interested in the gospel; but so far we have not been able to accomplish much. We hope for better results in the near future."

Bro. J. R. Hacker, Big Cabin, Oklahoma, desires Brn. Closson and Smart to come to his place and hold meetings any time this month. He lives six miles southeast of Big Cabin, between Long View and Midway Schoolhouse.

Bro. Hale W. Smith writes from Deer Lodge, Montana, that he had held a two-night discussion with Elder J. C. Fullmer, of the Utah church, with a fair attendance.

News From Branches

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

A special business-meeting was held on August 5. Bro. J. M. Baker, the missionary appointed to Council Bluffs and Omaha, was chosen to succeed Bro. F. R. Schafer, the latter having resigned the presidency of the branch. It was decided to discontinue the street-meetings at Jefferson Square.

Six persons have been baptized into the Omaha Branch during the month of August. It is interesting to note that the baptism which was brought about by the Jefferson Square meetings was that of a Hebrew, the first Jewish member of the Omaha Branch. He bore witness that he came not of his own will, but because the Spirit sent him. It may be hoped that this Hebrew convert may spread the truth among many of his brethren.

It was voted to suspend all services at the Omaha chapel from Sunday, August 23, through Sunday, August 30. The Omaha Saints are thus being enabled to attend the reunion at Council Bluffs.

The Omaha Religio held a social at Hanscom Park on Thursday evening, August 6. The Council Bluffs Religio and Sunday-school were invited. Owing to threatening weather the attendance was not very large, but the occasion was nevertheless very enjoyable.

The Ladies' Aid Society gave a social at Hanscom Park Friday evening, August 14. All present enjoyed themselves and a small sum was cleared.

I have seen

A curious child, who dwelt upon a tract
Of inland ground, applying to his ear
The convolutions of a smooth-lipped shell:
To which, in silence hushed, his very soul
Listened intensely—and his countenance soon Brightened with joy; for murmurings from within
Were heard, sonorous cadences! whereby,
To his belief, the monitor expressed
Mysterious union with its native sea.
Even such a shell the universe itself
Is to the ear of faith.—Wordsworth.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints of the Fremont, Iowa, District: The death of Bishop William Leeka leaves a vacancy in the office of bishop, and thereby, the place of Bishop's agent in the above district, both of the counselors of Bishop Leeka having removed from the district.

Until further notice and appointment of an agent for said district, Sister Lorena Leeka, who has transacted the business of the office for the past two years, during the sickness of her father, the bishop, is hereby duly authorized to transact and carry on the work of Bishop's agent in and for the said Fremont District, and to perform any and all work usual to Bishop's agents. Sr. Leeka is duly authorized to receive and receipt for funds as agent of the Bishopric and we ask the Saints and friends of the Fremont District to be forward to help her in her work in the office.

It is with sorrow and regret that the Bishopric are called upon to chronicle the death of Bro. William Leeka. He was ever faithful in his office and helpful in the Lord's work in the district. His services greatly aided the general work of the Bishopric and we can not but note that what has come to us and the church as a loss is to him great gain. It will be well for us each and all to remember the lesson of his life, and be ready when the call shall come to us. Address all communications to the agent, as follows: Miss Lorena Leeka, Thurman, Iowa.

In behalf of the Bishopric, I am, very respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, August 31, 1908.

Sanitarium Notice.

All parties having money to send for the Sanitarium, or who wish any information regarding the institution or its management, or who wish to file applications for positions, etc., will please direct all correspondence to Bishop E. L. Kelley, and not to me. This will save much time and trouble. I do not expect to have anything to do with any feature of the business management. If I have any part in the institution it will simply be to look after the sick after they arrive. Only the medical work and church ordinances for their benefit come under my attention as the one in charge. I do not know when the place will be equipped for general work—it may be several months yet. I am not able to answer the numerous correspondents, hence take this method of directing the same to where it belongs, and where there are clerks and stenographers enough to give attention properly to the matter.

Very truly,
JOSEPH LUFF.

Conference Notices.

London District will convene with the Port Elgin Branch on October 3. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are requested to send report for the past year. Railroad rates have been secured; purchase a one-way ticket and get a certificate. Secretaries should send in branch reports promptly after September 1. We hope to see every branch represented at this conference. J. Hannah Leeder, secretary, Port Elgin, Ontario.

Owing to the busy season of the year and by consultation with Apostle F. M. Sheehy, the Utah District conference will be postponed until September 26 and 27. The Sunday-school and Religio conventions will be held on Friday before the conference. The church at Ogden, where the conference will be held, is located at 1509 Washington Avenue. Bro. F. M. Smith, of the Presidency, will probably be present. J. F. Curtis, president.

The conference of the Eastern Michigan District is hereby called to meet with the St. Clair Branch, October 3 and 4, 1908. All ministerial reports should be in the hands of the president, William Davis, of Ubly, Michigan, before that date. We hope for a full report from all the ministry. F. O. Benedict, secretary.

Convention Notices.

As the Religio convention of the Central Michigan District is drawing near, it is our duty to arrange the program. We want to hear from each local, informing us what has been prepared for this meeting. Let us know, please, before October 1. Address Miss Elsie Janson, Rose City, Michigan. W. E. Harder, Bentley, Michigan.

Notice.

I shall be pleased to correspond with any Saint or friend of the Western Nebraska and Black Hills Mission wishing the services of a missionary. Address Bayard, Nebraska, or Lamoni, Iowa. Elder James Edmund Kelley.

Corrections.

In HERALD for August 12, in news letters from Omaha, the number of baptisms as a result of street-preaching at Jefferson Square should have been given as one instead of three.

Died.

SNEAD.—George Snead was born in Gentry County, Missouri, May 24, 1860; died August 8, 1908, near Lone Rock, Missouri. He joined the Baptists in 1884, and in 1887 was married to Sarah Allen. To them were born six children, who mourn with the mother, seven brothers, and four sisters. Like many others he was opposed to the church and doctrine up to a few months before his death, but he became more favorable, and a few days before demise had given his consent to his wife and children to be baptized. The two oldest daughters have done so, and others are near. Funeral from the Lone Rock church, sermon by request of the deceased was by T. J. Bell, assisted by Price McPeck.

LAVERY.—At Ionia, Michigan, August 26, 1908, Arda D., daughter of Bro. and Sr. Jerome Lavery, passed into that peaceful rest, aged 4 years, 5 months, and 18 days. This little one was a great sufferer nearly all of her life. All that could be done by loving hands was done by her parents and her sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Guy Glazer, all of Ionia, Michigan. Sermon by Elder Samuel Stroh, of Coldwater, Michigan.

The proposition to build a magnificent road from Washington to Gettysburg as a memorial to Abraham Lincoln is the theme of an attractive article by the Hon. J. T. McCleary in the September Review of Reviews. Mr. McCleary has served as a special representative of the Lincoln Memorial Commission appointed by Congress, and after spending some time in Europe in search of ideas, came to the conclusion that a beautiful and permanent roadway would be a more fitting memorial than any form of shaft, building, arch, or bridge. The arguments that he advances to sustain this view are both interesting and instructive.

The Land of Worship.

Prayer pervades the East. Far off across the sands, when one is traveling in the desert, one sees thin minarets rising toward the sky. A desert city is there. It signals its presence by this mute appeal to Allah. And where there are no minarets—in the great wastes of the dunes, in the eternal silence, the lifelessness that is not broken even by any lonely, wandering bird—the camels are stopped at the appointed hours, the poor, and often ragged, robes are laid down, the brown pilgrims prostrate themselves in prayer. And the rich man spreads his carpet, and prays. And the half-naked nomad spreads nothing; but he prays, too.

The East is full of lust, and full of money-getting, and full of bartering, and full of violence; but it is full of worship—of worship that disdains concealment, that reckns not of ridicule or comment, that believes too utterly to care if others disbelieve. There are in the East many men who do not pray. They do not laugh at the man who does, like the unpraying Christian. There is nothing ludicrous to them in prayer. In Egypt your Nubian sailor prays in the stern of your dahadiyeh; and your Egyptian boatman prays by the rudder of your boat; and your black donkey-boy prays behind a red rock in the sand; and your camel-man prays when you are resting in the noontide, watching the far-off, quivering mirage, lost in some wayward dream.

And must you not pray, too, when you enter certain temples where once strange gods were worshiped in whom no man now believes?—Robert Hichens in the September Century.

The Technical World Magazine reaches us each month and is full of interesting things. The September issue contains the following leading articles: "Mexico puts vast falls to work," detailing some great engineering work in our sister republic; "The hold-up across the counter," which deals with scales and tricks whereby the purchaser is defrauded; an article on shotguns; shoemaking; warships; "Country of natural bridges"; and numerous other subjects of much human interest. The magazine is profusely illustrated and is very readable indeed.

"The most beautiful queen on any throne' she has long been called." Kellogg Durland thus begins his marvelous life story of the Tsaritsa of Russia in the September Woman's Home Companion. "She is tall and stately; her hair is luxuriant and rich in color. Eyes that some call blue and some call gray look out through long, dark lashes, and in them lies a great sadness, an appealing wistfulness touched with regret, a silent melancholy. Yet as a child she was known as 'Sunny.'

"The life story of 'Sunny' has never been told in English. This is curious, because there probably is not a person in the world who would not like to hear the wonderful romance of how a poor little German princess became a great sovereign, the co-ruler of one of the vastest empires on earth, the mistress of a fabulously rich and bewilderingly extravagant court, and perhaps the most powerful woman in Europe. 'Sunny' was the childhood nickname of this poor little princess, and after a quiet girlhood, where there was a constant struggle to maintain appearances, she was courted by a wayward gallant who was heir to a mighty crown. 'Sunny' lost her heart to the royal wooer, and he, putting aside the less noble loves of his reckless, youthful days, pledged himself to her—persistently courted her against wide opposition—turned a deaf ear to the counsels of emperors and queens who tried to discourage the match, and after years of battling with diplomatic intrigue and personal restraint he carried his purpose, married the German princess, who was truly the bride of his heart, and raised her from the obscurity and poverty of her own home to the rank of empress. This is the story of Princess Alix of Hesse whom Nicholas II made Tsaritsa of Russia."

Quite the most interesting bit in the alluring pages of the September St. Nicholas is the story of how that dearest of all children's classics, "Alice in wonderland," came to be written, told by Helen Marshall Pratt. It is a charming tale of the friendship of a quiet, reserved, bookish young lecturer at Christ Church College, Oxford, and of three dear children, daughters of the dean of the cathedral.

Boating on the river, with tea on the banks, and story telling along the way, was the favorite play of these four comrades; and of the many stories told on these outings the adventures of "Alice in wonderland" were written down to please little Alice Liddell, second of the children, later finding their way into print.

"So little did the author understand what a wonderfully ingenious and fascinating book he had written, that he did not expect the first edition would ever be sold. But the two thousand books were very quickly disposed of. Every one wanted to read 'Alice,' and to have his friends read it. Not only little children, but grown people enjoyed it, and edition after edition has been printed and sold, and to-day it is even more sought after than when it was first published. It has become a classic and holds a place on children's book shelves with 'Robinson Crusoe' and 'Hans Christian Andersen.' 'There is not a spot in the civilized world, not a library with any pretension to literature where the Jaberwock and the Cheshire Cat are unknown.'"

The frontispiece of this September issue is a reproduction of Elizabeth Sparhawk-Jones's "Roller Skates," which was exhibited at the one hundred and third annual exhibition of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

Practically every one knows that the United States Government maintains a standing army of nominally one hundred thousand men and under stress of emergency can muster ten times that many on short notice. But there are comparatively few who know anything of the life, the daily routine, of the regular soldier either in time of peace or in time of war.

Within recent years it has become a part of the war department to assemble regular troops at different war stations once a year for the purpose of indulging in mimic war. Still later the experiment of ordering large detachments, including every branch of the service, to assemble at favorable points for the purpose of public exhibitions, showing the daily life of the soldier in time of peace, the drills, marches, and training that fit him for the activity of war on short notice.

The first of these tournaments was held in St. Joseph, Missouri, in September last year. So eminently satisfactory was this first tournament to the war department that a second and larger military carnival was ordered to be held in the same place again this fall and it is considered not at all unlikely that the military tournament will become an annual feature with the war department.

The variation from the monotony of life in forts has a salutary effect upon the men, and the prizes hung up afford a stimulus to them to strive for excellence in the various feats which are called for from them.

The coming tournament will bring together five thousand men who will be in camp about a mile from the scene of the carnival performances and the camp life of the regular soldier will afford one of the interesting features of the week of September 21-26 in St. Joseph.

"To prevent salt in saltcellars from becoming damp and lumpy, when filling them put in ten to twelve pieces of rice," says Woman's Home Companion for September. "This will not come through the holes in the cover of the saltcellars, but will break the lumps of salt and gather the moisture; thus the salt is always dry and fine."

JOSEPH SMITH AND KIRTLAND BANK.

The Saints as a whole will be interested in what we present taken from one of the published journals of the day with reference to the banking system of the United States at the time that the Kirtland Bank was instituted, which bank, according to articles of agreement when organized, was called and known as the Kirtland Safety Society Anti-Banking Company.

We have seen quite a number of the bills issued by that famous Kirtland Bank, which by the animosity of those who were at war with the faith and in consequence with the church because of its faith, succeeded in making it notorious. We have wondered why the words society and banking were divided by the word anti inserted between them, as a title of the bank; but in a special published in the Chicago Tribune of Friday, August 28, we learned how that might have occurred. There would appear from this article coming by wire from New York under date of the 27th, that there had been a sort of legislative guarantee given for the stability of banks which extended from 1830 to 1840 or 1842, the subject-matter for government by the following abstract from this article.

The facts as to the law's operation are clearly set forth in a work entitled The History of Banking, by John J. Knox. It was called the New York safety fund system, and the bill passed by the legislature in 1829 provided that all new banks and such others then existing as might be willing to avail themselves of the law by rechartering pursuant to its provisions should pay into the state controller and treasurer one half of one per cent on their capital stock annually until a fund of three per cent was created.

Out of the fund, as created, the losses to depositors in failed institutions were to be paid, and when the fund was reduced below the standard three per cent on the capital stock of all the contributing banks, it was to be made good by further assessments.

The bill provided further that the bank safety fund should be the subject of special supervision, and to this end three banking commissioners were appointed with power to make regular examinations at intervals of four months and special examinations whenever they saw fit. All told, the measure was considered the acme of perfection, as indicated from this statement of the Senate banking committee in reporting the measure:

"The committee flatters itself that it has hit upon a measure that will possess the valuable recommendations of creating a complete and infallible security to creditors and that will impart a solidarity to the currency and to the bank paper of the State not equaled by any in the world."

But these bright hopes were not realized. The first result of the bill was a speculative craze for starting new banks subject to its provisions, which was made easier because the stocks of such an institution found a ready sale throughout this State and elsewhere among investors who had heard of the wonderful safety fund scheme. Agencies were organized throughout the country to promote the sale of these securities, and "melons" were cut for the political and personal friends of individuals engaged in the speculation.

Some people are so careful about casting their pearls before swine, that they neglect to cast their bread upon the waters.

Next came an era of contests for the control of institutions so established. The commissioners appointed under the safety fund law became alarmed and remarked that the new incorporations exceeded the limits of reasonable investment.

As early as 1832 the bad effects of the scheme became felt. A large increase of currency followed the establishment of the safety fund banks, which encouraged overtrading and was considered one of the causes of the financial crisis of 1834-5.

In 1836 specie payments were suspended and affairs speedily went from bad to worse until 1841, when ten out of ninety safety fund banks failed and revealed the fact that the fund accumulated was notoriously insufficient to pay the debts of the suspended banks. The law was repealed the following year, and it was not for fifteen years afterward that the situation was straightened out.

We do not insert this with any degree of reference to any political significance which may attach to it, but merely as an item of interest and as furnishing a possible basis for a legal defense of those who may have been interested in that unfortunate venture, the Kirtland Bank. It is evidence that it was one of the banks that followed after. By the adoption of this "legal guarantee" the safety of the funds of the depositors was sought to be assured to the depositors. It is a fact which every reader knows who has taken any notice of economic controversies in reference to the financial conditions that have been prevalent in the United States for the period of time between 1830 and 1840. Apparently the Kirtland Safety Fund Bank was begun under the sanction of the law; that it was not begun without a proper consideration of the legal enactments of the State, and that it failed, not because of any fraudulent intent of its projectors, but for the same reason which resulted in the failure of numberless banks all over the United States during the same period; that its failure was not a matter of intention, but a matter of misfortune and resulted for the same reasons that other banks of a similar character failed. It is usual to infer that when men do things which have to be done under statutory enactment they do them with proper intentions and not to avoid just conclusion of the law.

The word anti may have been inserted between the words society and banking to designate the individuality or nature of the institution or company, or to distinguish it from other banks, those not operated under the guarantee law; but as to that we can not say. We simply give the matter as a subject with the saying, "for what it is worth."

"Doing" religion and "talking" religion are different matters.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

We are asked the question whether it is right to use Zion's Praises in our public preaching-services. The answer to this question is obvious. It is just as proper as it is to use the Hymnal or the Harp if those officiating choose to use it. It is a collection of excellent hymns and songs, some of them written by our own people, though the majority of them better fit the service of the Sunday-school and Religio. That is no reason why they may not be used in public meeting-service.

We have frequently answered the question whether it is right to administer the sacrament to those of other denominations and the question now comes up again. We answer no. They are not members with us, are not amenable to our rules, do not have the same perception of the validity of the sacrament as we do. They do not understand the matter of discerning the Lord's body as we do and therefore it is quite improper to administer the sacrament to them. We have no control over the members of other churches and have no authority to administer to them the sacrament or the Lord's supper.

We are asked to answer the following: Is it proper in blessing the bread for the sacrament to say "His broken body"? If we accept the formula of words given in the Book of Mormon, book of Moroni, and in the seventeenth section of the Book of Covenants, paragraphs 22 and 23, as governing the case, it would not be proper; for there is plainly written the formula of words to be used. The expression is incorrect, anyway, as not conforming with direct prophecy and in the fact that in the crucifixion neither his body nor his bones were broken, though the flesh was marred by the nails in his hands and feet, and the spear thrust in his side, and the thorny crown placed on his head. The expression, "his broken body," is a figure of speech quite unnecessary in the formula of blessing the bread.

It is improper for missionaries temporarily sojourning in a branch to change the time of branch services, either the preaching- or the prayer- and testimony-meetings, without the knowledge and consent of the officers of the branch through consultation with said officers, unless there is grave disorder in the branch and the officers will not consent to proper inquiry and prevent the proper discharge of the missionaries' duties. We are charged to respect each other in the respective offices to which we are called. Common courtesy demands that officers chosen by the branch and holding office without charges of misconduct should be officially regarded by the missionaries of the church who may be laboring in their midst. If we, ourselves, do not respect those who are called to office, how can we expect the Lord's Spirit to respect those same officers?

Many questions arise as to the rightfulness or wrongfulness of doing labor on the Lord's day, Sunday, the day of rest. The rule of its observance given in the Book of Covenants by revelation makes it clear that unnecessary labor ought not to be done on the Lord's day. It is a question of propriety in many instances rather than of absolute right or wrong. There are professions and avocations followed that may sometimes require labor to be done on the rest day, for instance, in farming and gardening there may be at times crops maturing that must be looked after or the products will be ruined and lost to the one who raises them. In such case it is right to take care of the perishing material, but it is far better for those who toil on the farm and in the garden so to time their work that there will be no chance for loss by the occurrence of the rest day.

There are some occupations in which some of the Saints are employed and in which they are required to labor on the Lord's day, they being engaged in laboring for others than themselves; for instance, persons employed in hotels, in the keeping of which work must be done for guests who require ministering to for food, shelter, etc. We lately met two daughters of a Saint's family who are employed in a station restaurant which necessarily is kept open on the Sunday, and these young sisters being employed there are required to give their services on that day. They do not control their own actions in this regard, as their employment is necessary for them, and if they did not serve they would necessarily be out of employment.

There are some other occupations in which we think the persons employed therein could arrange it so they would not have to labor on the rest day, such, for instance, as catering to the public, as photographing, where the proprietor owns the establishment and does the work for himself. Employment of a similar character might be mentioned, such as hack-driving, livery-driving, hotel-keeping, saloon and eating-houses, and numbers of others.

The large cities of a better class are striving to regulate with regard to Sunday and these make a discrimination between the classes which cater to the public in the way of necessities of food and medicinal shops which are allowed to prepare and sell a number of classes of food that may be termed luxuries and yet are considered essential to the comfort of the citizens of the city.

We are of the opinion that the stricter the day of rest be kept within the line of the rule found in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants that on this the Lord's day the Saints should do no other thing, the better it will be for them.

"And on this day thou shalt do none other thing, only let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart, that thy fasting may be perfect; or in other words, that thy joy may be full. Verily this is fasting and prayer; or, in other words, rejoicing and prayer."

We are of the opinion that the better keeping of that quietude and observance of the rules, the greater will be the blessing. Too loose living and disregard of the requirements of the Lord's day is productive of a loss of spiritual enjoyment and should be avoided. If a man desires to set a good example to his fellow man he should so arrange his affairs of labor and business that he is at liberty to keep the Lord's day in accordance with its provisions.

Our experience of many, many years has shown us beyond contradiction or doubt that ordinary labor performed on the day of the Lord is productive of loss to the one who does it. Years of experience in farming confirms this opinion and we have known numbers who have sought to harmonize their allegiance to the church and failed. We believe it will be the result in almost every case where the service of the Lord's day is unrecognized. It is especially unfortunate to the church where an elder, either local or traveling, is disregarding of the right of the Lord's day. We should by all means try to honor the Lord in this as in other things.

A branch rule provides that nomination of branch officers shall be made by ballot. In order to facilitate matters a motion was made to suspend the rule and declare Sr. _____ elected as secretary. Is it necessary to first have a motion to suspend the rule and then another to declare the sister elected, or does the one motion cover the whole ground and is it in order and proper?

Yes. The rule requiring nomination by ballot having been made by formal vote and action must be in like manner set aside by like vote of suspension before the declaration of appointment could be properly made. This is parliamentary.

GRACELAND COLLEGE.

Tuesday, September 8, was opening day for the year 1908-09. The college opens with very bright prospects. Enrollment of students shows greater attendance than for any year in the past. The faculty is larger and better equipped to look after the needs of the students than ever before. President D. A. Anderson starts the year's work with enthusiasm.

Graceland is growing and winning friends daily, and the time is coming when all will recognize its mission. Many things could be told about the sacrifices of some of the students now enrolled which would dispel every doubt as to the place Graceland is occupying and is to hold in the life and work of the young men and women of the church.

DETROIT SAINTS PLAN TO BUY NEW CHURCH.

Bro. John Henry Shippy, of Detroit, a son of the veteran missionary, Elder John Shippy, and his wife have been visiting their relatives and friends at Lamoni, and incidentally enjoying the Lamoni Stake reunion. He hands us the following from the Detroit News Journal:

Members of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Fourth and Hancock Avenues, are negotiating for the purchase of a German Lutheran church on Hendrie Avenue, just off Woodward. The exact purchase price has not yet been fixed, but it will be in the neighborhood of twelve thousand dollars.

The church in question was originally built for the Presbyterians about twelve years ago. After several years the congregation split, one part going farther out Woodward Avenue and the other coming down town. The structure is of brick and is one of the best buildings of its kind and size in the city. The lot is of sixty-five foot frontage.

The building occupied by the Latter Day Saints at present is a wooden structure. It has served them for the past four years and the congregation, which at present numbers more than three hundred, has outgrown it. Another reason why a change is desired is the fact that the lot belongs to the D. U. R. In its new quarters the organization will be independent.

About two months ago Bishop E. L. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, paid Detroit a visit and looked over the new church. He expressed his opinion that the structure was just what the congregation needed. Then it was announced that Joseph Smith, president of the Reorganized Church was coming east and the congregation tendered him an invitation to visit Detroit. Negotiations for the purchase of the church were under way at the time, but several of the members, including Elder Franklin N. Liddy, suggested that the purchase be held up until Reverend Smith inspected the church, which he did Friday. President Smith, however, is reserving his opinion, but every indication points to a favorable decision before he leaves the city the first of the week.

Reverend Smith addressed a fair sized audience Saturday night. He is an interesting speaker. He is seventy-eight years of age and has been preaching for the past forty-eight.

"It is a wonder to me how a person can misconstrue the scriptures in such a manner as to start new religions," he said Saturday night. "But it is true that men do that and get a certain band of followers. They claim they are in the right and lead people away from Jesus Christ by their teachings."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We have noticed several press items concerning a number of women converts to the Utah church being imported from Europe. Just what the truth is about these immigrants we do not know. Some have evidently made hasty conclusions, but we prefer to know more about it before forming any opinion. The following is from the Anaconda, Montana, Standard, August 25:

"BOSTON, August 24.—The local board of immigration inspectors held a special session to-day and further investigated the cases of about one hundred Mormon women converts who arrived yesterday on board the steamship Republic. As a result of today's examination forty girls were held for further inquiry and Margaret and Catherine Roe will be sent back to their father in Liverpool, England.

LAMONI ITEMS.

New sidewalks is the "slogan" with Lamoni citizens at present, and at the rate cement walks and crossings are being put in, our town is likely to be in excellent condition by the time of our next General Conference. The most important improvement is a six-foot concrete walk past the city park where Sunday night services were recently held. For this we are indebted to our energetic park commissioners.

The fall attraction here is our Harvest Home Festival, which is to be held on Thursday and Friday of this week. There is great local enthusiasm in this fair, exhibits and contests being along the line of "stock, poultry, grain, fruit, vegetables, fancy work," cooking, and art. We think this festival commendable because it creates a lively interest and a friendly competition in things of vital importance to the growth and development of this section.

Elder Richard J. Lambert was the speaker at the morning service at the Brick Church, and presented features of the Lord's financial plan as outlined in the direct teaching of Jesus Christ contained in New Testament record. Elder George W. Blair occupied in the evening on the subject of Paul's work as a minister for Christ and the gospel as given in his teachings.

Whooping-cough is still popular in Lamoni, but is slowly losing ground for lack of victims. All the patients are pleased when it is over and glad to know they won't have it again.

I was recently quite startled by this expression: "Nothing pays better than prayer." But I said to myself, "After all, is there anything that pays better than to hold the mind perpetually turned toward the ideal, always facing the sun, with hope, cheer, and expectation?" "Trusting God with our desires," holding the mind open to success and happiness, to the light, and refusing to face the darkness, certainly ought to be a good investment. There is nothing truer than "According to thy faith be it unto thee," or, "According to thy doubts and thy fears, thy lack of faith be unto thee."—O. S. Marden in June Success Magazine.

Elders' Note-Book

SATURDAY NIGHT MUSINGS.

"Let your light shine."

Another wave rolled in from the ocean of time—another week's record sealed for His opening—another week's march toward the beautiful beyond—another Saturday night!

There are weary ones all over the land to-night, who are glad for the beautiful Sabbath of rest that follows so closely each Saturday night. The toils and hardships of the week have been cheerfully borne, for they that labor have been earning, to spend for the good and comfort of those who share with them life's cares and joys.

There are aged ones, those whose locks have been whitened by the frosts of many winters, who are glad that another week has been snatched from time and given to the accumulated years of eternity; because they are thus brought nearer the fruition of their hopes, that are based on a well-spent life.

There are those, too, who have heavy trials, great crosses, strong temptations to bear and resist, who are glad that another week's striving here has added to the triumphs over there! And there are many who are young, upon whom the sun of prosperity has just begun to shine, who are glad to be so much nearer the goal of their ambition. How is it with us, brethren and sisters? Are we, too, glad that 'tis Saturday night? The sky is overcast with dark and murky clouds; the wind sighs and moans in fitful blasts, making us realize how great are the blessings we enjoy. The warm fire, the bright, cheerful light, from the lamp trimmed to our liking; the soft carpet under the feet, the cozy room—pictures on the walls, books, magazines, and last, though not least, the sympathy of warm hearts—the presence of those who give kind words, who are glad we are at home and not a wanderer in the outer darkness of this Saturday night, are all blessings from the All-father, for which we should feel very grateful and strive to be, what I hope we have been in the past, worthy.

The darkness now hanging over earth is dense and deep; so that the belated traveler is scarcely able to pursue his journey. He can barely discern the outlines of objects, while they are not sufficiently distinct to give him confidence to proceed. To advance is dangerous—remain he must not! In this condition, how great a blessing would be light; how true a friend who would guide to a place of safety!

Brethren, there are many who are wandering in spiritual darkness, more deep and dense than the darkness of this Saturday night! They desire light,—the glorious light of the gospel. They need some friend, who is familiar with the way, to point out the landmarks; to tell them something that will be a sure guide—a kind of "Star of Bethlehem"—for the end they seek is a Savior's love and pardoning favor.

Said our Lord: "Ye are the light of the world!" How many are there, sitting in their comfortable homes to-night, perusing the columns of the HERALD, who have let their light shine during the week for the benefit of those who are thus groping their way through spiritual darkness, and the mists that hang over, and around the road of life?

Having escaped the dangers hidden under the smooth surface of false theories; having eluded the tempting glare of false lights, and turned a deaf ear to the flattering cry, "Lo here" and "Lo there"; having escaped the rocks upon which others have stranded, who have attempted to build upon other foundations than that he has provided, have you forgotten that there are others exposed to danger? That there are thousands at sea who are unacquainted with the perils which surround them, and which threaten their destruction?

Some are drifting towards dangerous rocks; some have stranded upon hidden shoals, while others are "tossed to and fro," their course uncertain, having no compass and the night is coming on! They realize that there is danger, and are straining their eyes in the hope of discerning some beacon light which shall guide to the harbor—the haven of rest.

Brethren and sisters, for these "let your light shine," for they are they who are "carried about with every wind of doctrine"; they are they who need our kind offices—our guidance—the benefit of our better light. This is a duty which belongs to every true Latter Day Saint, for thus do we show forth our faith by works—"good works" which, when men see, they glorify our Father which is in heaven. It is meet that we follow the example of Jesus. He says in that beautiful prayer, recorded in John, seventeenth chapter: "I have glorified thee on the earth. . . . For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me." To-night, do we thank him for the glorious words of promise which he has given us, and for bringing to our knowledge the divine truths of the gospel—the beautiful plan of salvation—the sure faith which in the "evidence" of the greater blessings in store for those who are faithful doers of the work; and which are kept for us until we shall be "called from labor to refreshment"—until the day of awards and recompenses—the resurrection of the just.

Shall we then withhold our aid from those who are seeking the treasures we have found? Shall we, miser-like, hide away our talent, or shall we remember the admonition of our Savior—"Freely ye have received, freely give?"

Let every brother, every sister, answer, "We will choose the better part!" "Having anchored our barks safely within the harbor, we will let our light shine; a beacon to those who are struggling against adverse winds and counter currents."

When I look out into the darkness, of this night, my heart swells with gratitude to God for his mercies, and I breathe a prayer for those who know not "the way," and "the life," and the hope of the Christian. On such a night as this those beautiful lines of Bro. David's come with force to my mind:

"Thank the Lord for the plan he hath given,
That will render us pure as a child;
That will change this cold world into heaven,
By his Spirit so holy and mild.
And the hope of a portion in Zion,
Shall cheer us till trials are o'er,
Let us anchor our barks in the center,
And be safe from the rocks on the shore."

To those who are wandering in darkness, let me say, Do not despair. Trust in God; there is light for you, and the harbor is nigh. But there is but one entrance and the way is narrow. There are many pilots, crying, "Go here," or "Go there"; but beware of them, for not all have certificates from proper authority. Make yourselves familiar with your chart—the Bible—and you will be better prepared to detect any variation from the true course. Be watchful, be faithful and earnest, and you will discover light that will guide you safely into the haven of rest, where you will receive the recompense of reward for your striving, and where there will come to you, nor any that are his, another Saturday night.—Jerome Ruby, in SAINTS' HERALD, April 15, 1870.

HISTORICAL LECTURE BY ELDER HEMAN C. SMITH, AT THE NAUVOO REUNION.

It affords me some gratification to witness the interest that is taken to-night, I am persuaded, not in me, but in the subject that has been announced for presentation. I feel the weight of responsibility when speaking upon historical subjects, and when writing upon them, as much or more than I do upon any other subject that I am called upon to treat. Man may think, he may plan, his motives may be good or bad, they may be poor or the reverse, but of this the historian has nothing to do. But immediately, when man acts, it becomes the property of the historian, and to be an impartial historian is an effort that I fear none of us have ever succeeded in fully. To carefully examine, to investigate, to determine what the facts of history are, and to record them without giving expression to our feelings and ideas, sometimes to our disgust, is a difficult task. But the impartial historian may tell what has transpired, whether he indorses it or not, he has no more right to withhold praise from the man to whom praise is due, or to censure unjustly the man that is opposed to the historian's view, than has the judge upon the bench to render an unrighteous verdict because of his prejudice.

So to my mind, the office of a historian is one of the most responsible positions in which a man can be placed.

To-night, I would avoid as far as I can practically, giving my opinion in regard to what has happened, giving utterance to my disapproval of the acts, or my approval of them. What I desire to do, so far as I may be able to control myself, is to present to you the best result of my researches as to what was done by the parties that I may be in sympathy with, or by the parties that I may be opposed to. The subject of the church history is a broad one, even though it may be applied to the Latter Day Saints, and I would not be able to-night, to speak to you in regard to even the general features of the history of Latter Day Saints from the beginning, much less to go into detail, and I am under the embarrassment, in order to meet the occasion, to speak of a section of the history not the beginning or the end, but taken, as it were, from the middle, and speak to you in regard to the history of the church so far as it relates to Nauvoo, and the surrounding country. But in doing so, it will be necessary for us to go back a little farther, and to speak of the causes that led up to the settlement of this place by the Latter Day Saints, of the things that transpired immediately before they came here, but in doing so, I shall not undertake to present before you the doctrine believed by them. That has nothing particularly to do with this subject. Suffice it to say, that the Latter Day Saints have proved by their conduct that the theory they advocated was, in their conviction, true. They have suffered enough by the world to convince the world that they were sincere. Further than that, we have nothing to say in regard to the theory they espoused, the doctrine they suffered for, the hope they had in the future life, or as applied to the life that now is.

In the winter of 1838-39, one cold, bleak day, there might have been seen standing on the banks of the Mississippi River, opposite Quincy, Illinois, a woman hardly having arrived at the years of her full development, but a mother, and around her were clustered four children. Friends she had many, but these friends were in just as destitute a condition as she was. Her natural protector was languishing in a Missouri cell, and by the orders of the Executive of Missouri, she had been banished from her home. Standing there without means, desirous of crossing the mighty Father of Waters, the river having frozen, she, with two of her children in her arms, the other two clinging to her skirts, crossed upon the ice. Finding a friendly shelter upon this side of the water, she waited for the long-expected time when her husband would be released from what she considered a condition of bondage, and he be permitted to come and care for her and her children. That woman was Emma Smith, whose honored remains lie within the precincts of your city. The children that she carried in her arms were Frederick, who also lies here within the holy ground that marks their resting-place, the other, one whom you all know, whose familiar figure you see upon the grounds, Alexander H. Smith. The two that clung to her as she walked across the ice of this majestic river, were President Joseph Smith and an adopted daughter, who has also departed this life. So that three of the five have gone on to their account, the other two fast approaching the shore beyond. I simply mention these because they were prominent characters in the history of the work. But they were no exception; thousands of people crossed the uncultivated, largely uninhabited soil of Missouri, and I am told that they could be tracked by the blood from their feet. In destitution, in poverty, they came to the friendly shores of Illinois.

Now, while I do not care to express an opinion as to the causes that brought about these troubles, I think it is my duty as an historian, to present to you what the consensus of opinion was, or at least, what the different opinions were in regard to this trouble. I have read in some books, some periodicals, that these people were a very immoral people, that they were a people that were making an effort to displace their neighbors, that they believed it was their right to possess that soil, and that all others must depart; that they were so out of harmony with the people surrounding them that they could not live together in peace. I have read the claims of misdemeanors it is said they were guilty of, and while I ask you to read these things, and to give them the weight that ought to be attached to them, as every lover of true history must do, I would also ask you to see more than one side, and to take into consideration the fact that this testimony is not universal.

In doing so, I would not introduce the people mentioned who were in question, but I desire to introduce some testimony from the public prints of that time, which may have been forgotten, that present the other side of the picture, and give us to understand that there were many who did not believe these people to be worthy of such treatment as this, but who thought that the persecution to which they were subjected was unjust. I quote a few of these passages to-night for your consideration, lest you may have lost sight of them, for it has been the work of the historian generally, outside of those who are in sympathy with the church, to present the other side before the people, and these things have been lost sight of, many of them, years and years ago. We have taken the privilege of preserving a few of them and will now ask you to listen to the statements that are made in regard to the right and the wrong of this persecution, and this trouble that arose in Missouri that caused the Latter Day Saints to come to Illinois.

The Democratic Association of Quincy, Illinois, on February 28, 1839, after inviting other citizens to meet with them, passed appropriate resolutions, which were signed by Samuel Leach, chairman, and J. D. Morgan, secretary.

Resolved, That we regard the rights of conscience as natural and inalienable, and the most sacred guaranteed by the Constitution of our free Government.

Resolved, That we regard the acts of all mobs as flagrant violations of law, and those who compose them individually responsible, both to the laws of God or man, for every deprecation committed upon the property, rights, or life of any citizen.

Resolved, That the inhabitants upon the western frontier of the state of Missouri in their late persecutions of the class of people denominated Mormons, have violated the sacred rights of conscience, and every law of justice and humanity.

Resolved, That the Governor of Missouri in refusing protection to this class of people when pressed upon by a heartless mob, and turning upon them a band of unprincipled militia, with orders encouraging their extermination, has brought a lasting disgrace upon the State over which he presides.

About the same time the Quincy Argus for March 16, 1839, contained this statement:

We give in to-day's paper the details of the recent bloody tragedy acted in Missouri—the details of a scene of terror and blood unparalleled in the annals of modern, and, under the circumstances of the case, in ancient history—a tragedy of so deep and fearful and absorbing interest that the very life-blood of the heart is chilled at the simple contemplation. We are prompted to ask ourselves if it be really true that we are living in an enlightened, a humane and civilized age—in an age and quarter of the world boasting of its progress in everything good, and great, and honorable, and virtuous, and high-minded—in a country of which, as American citizens, we could be proud—whether we are living under a constitution and laws, or have not rather returned to the ruthless times of the stern Attila—to the times of the fiery Hun, when the sword and flame ravaged the fair fields of Italy and Europe, and the darkest passions held full revel in all the revolting scenes of unchecked brutality and unbridled desire?

We have no language sufficiently strong for the expression of our indignation and shame at the recent transaction in a sister State—and that State MISSOURI—a State of which we have long been proud, alike for her men and history, but now so fallen that we could wish her star stricken out from the bright constellation of the Union. We say we know of no language sufficiently strong for the expression of our shame and abhorrence of her recent conduct. She has written her own character in letters of blood and stained it by acts of merciless cruelty and brutality that the waters of ages can not efface. It will be observed that an organized mob aided by many of the civil and military officers of Missouri, with Governor Boggs at their head, have been the prominent actors in this business, incited, too, it appears, against the Mormons by political hatred, and by the additional motives of plunder and revenge. They have but too well put in execution their threats of extermination and expulsion, and fully wreaked their vengeance on a body of industrious and enterprising men, who had never wronged nor wished to wrong them, but on the contrary had ever comported themselves as good and honest citizens, living under the same laws and having the same right with themselves to the sacred immunities of life, liberty, and property.

You will observe then, that the opinions at that time were not all one-sided. Even those who were not in sympathy with the so-called Mormons were outraged at the conduct that was exhibited by their neighbors. I have many such extracts as that, but I have not time to read them to-night, but I will give you an extract from just one more. Many others, if you desire, I can produce for you, but I read from a letter written from the neighborhood from which the Latter Day Saints were expelled in Missouri, but one not in sympathy with either party, and you will see what his description of the two classes of people were. You will discover by the very first statement he makes that he is not in harmony with Latter Day Saints, yet you will discover that he is far from being in sympathy with the other class. He wrote to his friend in the East and the letter was published in the Boston Atlas. After speaking of an inquiry in regard to the trouble, he says,

The Mormons, I need not say, are a weak and credulous people, whose chief fault is the misfortune of having become the dupes of a villainous impostor. They have an excess of that as to which the world at large is exceedingly deficient, i. e., faith. They have been misled; and they are to be pitied. But I have yet to learn that their faith taught them immorality. I have yet to learn that it encouraged disobedience to the laws or encroachments on the rights of any fellow citizens.

The Mormons were in truth a moral, orderly, and sober population. They were industrious farmers and ingenious mechanics. They were busy about their own affairs, and never intermeddled in the concerns of their neighbors. They were exceedingly peaceful and averse to strife, quarrels, and violence. They had established schools, they encouraged education; and they all had the rudiments of learning, taught under our school system at the East. They had begun to open fine farms and put their lands in a high state of improvement. Many of them were surrounded by numerous comforts, and some with even the elegancies of life.

In all these respects their condition presented a broad contrast to that of their neighbors. Of these neighbors, many had been there for years—much longer in fact than the Mormons—and had made few advances upon the Indians they had displaced. Mud hovels, a “truck patch,” hunting, and buckskin breeches were their highest aspirations. Letters they despised as much as they did the conveniences or comforts of life. Bold, violent, unscrupulous, and grasping—hating all who differed from, much more who excelled them in the art of living, the relations between them and the Mormons may readily be inferred by any man who has read a single chapter in the history of human strife.

The Anti-mormons (for I must distinguish this horde of demi-savages) are exceedingly intolerant. They are refuse Kentuckians and Tennesseans, intermixed with Virginians of the same caste, in whom the vice of sectional pride, which marks these people, and a prejudice against all others, especially those belonging to the free States, whom they indiscriminately brand as Yankees—is exaggerated to the highest pitch. Such persons, if they could do it, would incorporate into the constitution of Missouri a provision to prohibit emigrating thither of anybody not belonging to their own “kith and kin.” They have also personal pride to an excess, which leads them, however, not to emulate a rival’s exertions, but to envy his success and hate his person. They have, however, a grasping disposition, which stimulates them to acquire; but not industry and enterprise enough to lead them to acquire honestly. They prefer plunder to fair means, if they can only conceal the knowledge of their foul play; because rapine gratifies their propensities to force, indolence, and acquisition. They are bold, crafty, and when inspired by revenge, energetic and persevering beyond any other race of men.

This reading shows him to be out of harmony with both parties, but he gives a little description of both. I present this simply to show you that at the time the people came to Illinois, there were different opinions in regard to the trouble that brought them here, and coming here, they found a place of rest for a time, after having been driven from the shores of Missouri. Of those that were languishing in dungeons, including Joseph Smith, the merits or demerits of the circumstances which placed them there, I am not discussing to-night.

They came to Illinois, and on May 1, 1839, there were two large tracts of land bought in what is now the city of Nauvoo; one containing one hundred and thirty-five acres, was purchased of Mr. Hugh White, the other of Isaac Galland. For the White property they paid five thousand dollars, and for the Galland property they paid nine thousand dollars, or gave their obligation to do so, and immediately afterward, Joseph Smith, then president of the church, moved into the log house built by Hugh White. It stands to-day, having been remodeled to some extent, and is known as the “Old Homestead.” He moved his family into that on May 10, 1839. At that time there were only ten houses upon the flat, six in what was called Old Commerce, and four farther south and east upon the flat. And from this small beginning in 1839, there began the building of a city. I have not the time to-night to enter into all the details. Some of these things you may know, and some of them you may think you know, and I do not doubt there are many opinions in regard to what transpired in those days, and I have been rather amused than otherwise since I have been in this place, to hear the different things that have been told by those who claim to know, and even the different places that have been pointed out by those who know in regard to where a thing transpired, or where such an individual resided. Perhaps it will be well for me to read a brief description of the city at the time they came here, as dictated at the time by Joseph Smith to his scribe, James Mulholland, doubtless the man for which your business street here is named.

Tuesday, June 11, [1839]. I commenced dictating my history for my clerk, James Mulholland, to write. About this time Elder Theodore Turley raised the first house built by the Saints in this place; it was built of logs, about twenty-five or thirty rods north northeast of my dwelling, on the northeast corner of lot 4, block 147, of the White purchase. When I made the purchase of White and Galland, there were one stone house, three frame houses, and two block houses, which constituted the whole city of Commerce. Between Commerce and Mr. Davidson Hibbard's there were one stone and three log houses, including the one that I live in, and these were all the houses in this vicinity, and the place was literally a wilderness. The land was mostly covered with trees and bushes, and much of it so wet that it was with the utmost difficulty a footman could get through, and totally impossible for teams. Commerce was so unhealthy, very few could live there; but believing that it might become a healthy place by the blessing of heaven to the Saints, and no more eligible place presenting itself, I considered it wisdom to make an attempt to build up a city.

It was not a very inviting place to build a city, but future conditions have shown that it was a good place to build one, and as we have before said, it might have been one of the leading commercial centers of the world, if conditions had been right for it.

Shortly after this, they purchased twenty thousand acres of land upon the other side of the river, including the town of Nashville, and people began gathering, not only those that were in Missouri, but they gathered from other parts of the world, and began building a city, taking measures for its future government, some of which I want to point out to-night, and I want you to remember them, because you will hear, no doubt, and have heard how bigoted they were, and how impossible it would be for others to live in their midst under the conditions that would exist where they had control. I will pass by some items of interest that I would like to talk about.

Soon after they came here, they organized what is known with us as a stake, an organization believed to be the best for the discipline of the church, and for its developments. We have not time to describe or explain its workings to-night. They built a stone boarding-house near where the steamboat landing is now, for the purpose of entertaining those who should come by water. They appointed a committee of delegates to go to Washington City, composed of Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Elias Higbee, to present their grievances to the general Government, the wrongs that had been inflicted upon them in the state of Missouri, and ask for redress. They went and made the effort, and it was upon this occasion that those words were uttered by Martin Van Buren that found their place in our history, which gives the key to the whole situation. At the time when they had an interview with the President of the United States, and presented their claims, he said, "Gentlemen, your cause is just, but I can do nothing for you." I leave you to think about that, and simply record the act that was done, and the words that were said. Leave you to determine whether the words said by the President of the United States at that time, were in accordance with the rights and liberties guaranteed to the people of this Government under the Constitution of the United States. I leave you to judge whether there is power in this Government to right the wrongs of every citizen or not, without expressing an opinion as to whether they were unjust or not. I make these remarks based upon the expression of Martin Van Buren.

Late in 1839, about November of that year, a publication was started here in the interest of the church, edited and controlled by Don Carlos Smith and Ebenezer Robinson. That publication continued for six years, then was discontinued at the time of the expulsion of the people from this place. A charter was granted by the state of Illinois for this growing city, and they were given special privileges under that charter. Some of the things that have been practiced under that charter have received adverse criticism. Whether they were wise or not is not our privilege to state, but I give to you their reasons for incorporating, and I presume the same reasons were taken into consideration when the legislature of the State granted them.

This charter was granted on December 16, 1849, signed by the Governor. After speaking in the charter in regard to such other duties, prerogatives, and privileges generally granted to citizens, we call your attention to one or two clauses that have brought about some criticism. One of these which has not been criticised was the privilege of organizing a university in the city of Nauvoo (see the twenty-fourth section of this charter), but in the twenty-fifth section we find the authority for organizing what was called the Nauvoo Legion, a military body of men. I have heard it expressed by many that this was a church organization. The charter granted by the legislature of the state of Illinois provided for it, and made it a part of the State troops. I will read to you that clause:

The City Council may organize the inhabitants of said city, subject to military duty, into a body of independent military men to be called the "Nauvoo Legion" the court-martial of which shall be composed of the commissioned officers of said legion, and constitute the lawmaking department, with full powers and authority to make, ordain, establish, and execute, all such laws and ordinances as may be considered necessary for the benefit, government, and regulation of said legion; Provided, said court-martial shall pass no law or act repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or of this State; and Provided, also, that the officers of the legion shall be commissioned by the Governor of the State. The said legion shall perform the same amount of military duty as is now or may be hereafter required of the regular militia of the State, and shall be at the disposal of the mayor in executing the laws and ordinances of the city corporation and the laws of the State, and at the disposal of the Governor for the public defense, and the execution of the laws of the State or of the United States, and shall be entitled to their proportion of the public arms; and, Provided, also, that said legion shall be exempt from all other military duty.

You all know, that were acquainted with those times, that every able-bodied citizen was required to do military duty. And here they were granted, by the legislature of the state of Illinois, their right to organize a legion, and to do what the law required, made subject to the State, and the defense of the Government. Now in connection with that, I want to call your attention to the statement made by the First Presidency of the church about the purpose of this legion, as well as the purpose of other things. They made this request of the State legislature, which was granted.

The Nauvoo Legion embraces all our military power, and will enable us to perform our military duty by ourselves, and thus afford us the power and privilege of avoiding one of the most fruitful sources of strife, oppression, and collision with the world. It will enable us to show our attachment to the State and Nation as a people, whenever the public service requires our aid, thus proving ourselves obedient to the paramount laws of the land, and ready at all times to sustain and execute them.

Mark you, the law required military duty, and profiting by the scenes of the past, they avoided coming in contact with those who were not in sympathy with them, and organized a legion here, subject to the authority of the Government, where they could do their military duty by themselves, and yet be subject to demand by the State for defense when necessary. Was there any harm in that? I leave you to judge in regard to it.

In regard to the moral standing of this community, it can be best understood by the legislative acts; the legislative acts are generally the result of the demands of the people, and express largely the conditions that exist at the time, and I will invite your attention to a city ordinance passed in those early days in regard to the vending of intoxicants. You may see what kind of a condition would have obtained here, if the people then in control, all or nearly all of them being members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, had continued; what would have been the condition in regard to the sale of intoxicants:

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, That all persons and establishments whatever, in this city, are prohibited from vending whisky in a less quantity than a gallon, or other spiritous liquors in a less quantity than a quart, to any person whatsoever, excepting on the recommendation of a physician duly accredited in writing by the "Chancellor and Regents of the University of the City of Nauvoo," and any person guilty of any act contrary to the prohibition contained in this ordinance shall, on conviction thereof before the Mayor or Municipal Court, be fined in any sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars, at the discretion of said Mayor or Court; and any person or persons who shall attempt to evade this ordinance by giving away liquor, or by any other means, shall be considered alike amenable, and fined as aforesaid.

This ordinance was aimed at the suppression of the retail business. It has been claimed that when this ordinance was passed it provided punishment for any one who retailed liquor except Joseph Smith, the mayor. Do you see that in the ordinance? It provided that any person, it made no exception, that was engaged in the retail of intoxicants, should be subject to punishment. There is no ground for the statement made in some histories, that it provides that the business shall be left in the hands of Joseph Smith. I present this and other things of like character, simply to show you what might have been, if these conditions had continued in the fair city of Nauvoo. I do not care to make a contrast between what might have been and what is; you can draw your own conclusions.

You have heard, no doubt, of the religious intolerance of these people; how, that if they had continued in power here, no one else would have dared to erect a place of worship, that they would have deprived any one from worshipping God according to the dictates of his own conscience except themselves. I want to present an ordinance upon that subject by the City Council, in the interest of truth. I want you to understand what was the condition, or what was the prevailing opinion as expressed in the legislative acts in the City Council of Nauvoo:

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Nauvoo, That the Catholics, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Latter Day Saints, Quakers, Episcopalians, Universalists, Unitarians, Mohammedans, and all other religious sects and denominations, whatever, shall have free toleration and equal privileges in this city; and should any person be guilty of ridiculing, abusing, or otherwise depreciating another, in consequence of his religion, or of disturbing or interrupting any religious meeting within the limits of this city, he shall on conviction thereof before the Mayor, or Municipal Court, be considered a disturber of the public peace, and fined in any sum not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, or both, at the discretion of said Mayor, or Court.

It is hereby made the duty of all municipal officers to notice, and report to the Mayor any breach or violation of this or any other ordinance of this city that may come within their knowledge, or of which they may be advised; and any officer aforesaid is hereby fully authorized to arrest all such violators of rule, law, and order, either with or without process.

This ordinance to take effect and be in force from and after its passage. Passed March 1, A. D. 1841.

JOHN C. BENNETT, Mayor.
JAMES SLOAN, Recorder."

Does that look like religious intolerance, that they would not have permitted other denominations of Christians to come in here? Even the church named for Mohammed is mentioned in the ordinance; not only Christians, but no matter what their religion was, by this ordinance of the city of Nauvoo, they were granted equal privileges, and no one was permitted to disturb them in their religious worship. They were so strict as to say that a man would be amenable to the law and punishable for the offense if he ridiculed them, which might have been a little too strong for some, but it was none too strong for intolerant men. So the idea that has gone abroad in the world and has found place in some things called history, viz, that they were intolerant, that no one else could live with them and enjoy religious liberty, is without foundation in fact. Religious liberty is provided for here by those who controlled the city, and most of the members of the council were members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. There would have been nothing to prevent, if they had remained here and acted under that ordinance, erecting the spires that now mark the spot where you people reside, they could have been erected here then as well as now, if these people had remained here and exercised their idea in regard to toleration and religious liberty. That is the history for the years they were here. We can not say whether or not they would have changed their minds, but we have evidence that they did not change them as long as they lived here.

The Nauvoo House, called the Nauvoo Mansion, was erected by an incorporate body for that purpose, and there has been a criticism made in regard to some things that transpired in connection with that. It has been said that partiality was shown to the family of Joseph Smith, because it was provided in that, that there should be a suite of rooms in it that they were to occupy for ever, giving them a place and securing to them rights and privileges not secured to other people of the church. Now I want to tell you how these rights and privileges were secured, and I think you will admit it is just about the same provision you would make for your children if you had an opportunity. Let me read to you what has been said in regard to it. This charter was also granted by the legislature of the State.

And, whereas Joseph Smith has furnished the said association with the ground whereon to erect said house, it is further declared that the said Smith and his heirs shall hold, by perpetual succession, a suite of rooms in the said house, to be set apart and conveyed in due form of law to him and his heirs by the said trustees, as soon as the same are completed.

Why was it? In consideration of the ground being given by Joseph Smith that suite of rooms was to be deeded to him and his family. Would you not make a provision of that kind if you could, and have the contract made that in consideration of real estate or some other value transferred to an incorporation, that you and your family should receive benefits therefrom? It was a consideration made in law, not a special favor bestowed upon them, or a gift, but a remuneration for value received, the land being furnished with that consideration.

On April 6, 1841, the corner-stone of the temple was laid here on the block adjoining where we stand to-night, a magnificent building was erected there, we need not go into the details. Contributions were made, not only from the people round about the city and throughout the United States, but from foreign lands also, so that this building was being pushed to completion, when the trouble began. Right here, let me say, that here, as in Missouri, there are different stories told in regard to the cause of the trouble. That there were arrests made for pocket-picking, theft, conterefting, and other causes is well known. That is part of what is called history, and we have a statement which we might read here, to the effect that they recognized the fact that such characters had found place in their midst, that they were rendezvousing here—this they admitted, but they claimed and proclaimed to the world that they were anxious to rid themselves of this class of society. That was the other side. I will not present the statement made by the Saints, however, but I will take time to read another statement of the governor of your State, Governor Ford. He makes the statement in the history of Illinois, that some of those who were anxious to get rid of the people here, and to deprive them of their public rights, drove cattle and took other property and left it within the precincts of Nauvoo, so that it would be found there, that they might have a pretext for driving the Saints from the place. I do not say that was true. There are two sides to the question; but Thomas Ford made the statement, whether true or not.

The agitation having begun, it continued, culminating finally in the destruction of the temple, in persecution, in bloodshed, and on June 27, 1844, in the bloody tragedy at Carthage, when two of the leading men of the church were assassinated, brought home to their loved city of Nauvoo, still in death. When they were brought here, this same woman that I told you about in the beginning, after having suffered so much, gathered her children about her, and after allowing the multitude to pass by and look upon the silent form of her loved one that lay here in state, looked upon his face, unwilling to say anything that would arouse feelings of revenge, simply said, "My husband, O my husband, have they taken you from me at last." She lived here in this city most of her life, and many of you knew her, and know whether it would have been in harmony with her character, and her disposition, to have been faithful to the last in defense of such a man as Joseph Smith was represented to be by his enemies.

But this did not end the trouble. Ah, I have wished that conditions had been otherwise than what they were. But differences arose among the people called Latter Day Saints; no longer did they present a solid front against the enemy, but there was discord among them; unwise men aspired to the leadership, and on the 8th of August, 1844, a meeting was called here, somewhere on the ground near where we now stand, by Sidney Rigdon, who was counselor to Joseph Smith in his lifetime, where he claimed he was by right the guardian of the people. Brigham Young, who was president of the Quorum of Twelve at that time, seemed to take charge of the meeting, though it was called by Sidney Rigdon, and then and there arose a difference; conflicting statements have been made in regard to them, and in regard to the events that transpired. In the character of historian, we have no right to say which was right and which was wrong. In the character as an advocate of the church, I might say, but as a historian, it is my place to say what was done.

There was a division made between Rigdon and Young in regard to this office, the majority sustaining Brigham Young; eight of his quorum stood with him, making a division not only in the church but in his quorum. He took the reins of government in his hands. As an individual I might express an opinion, as a historian, I can not; but I tell you that there was a condition of things ripening here between the church and between its persecutors, and among the different factions of the church, that brought about the dismemberment and aroused the populace against them. Without argument as to which was right and which was wrong, these people who had come here and undertaken to build up a city, had succeeded wonderfully until they had made their city the most popular in the state of Illinois. Had proclaimed religious liberty to the people, had secured by charter a provision for the erecting of a university, where they hoped to educate their children, and those who might come to them in quest of education. All these things had been established. They perished because of conditions at Nauvoo, as a result of the church being divided. Brigham Young and other members of the Quorum of Twelve claimed it as their right to be presidents because they were members of the Quorum of Twelve. Those who adhered to Sidney Rigdon believed, because he was a member of the First Presidency, it was his right; and James J. Strang claimed that an angel came to him and appointed him on the day that Joseph Smith died, to be his successor. These three gathered the most, they warred among themselves, they disputed in regard to conditions that should obtain among them.

There were also a few, and among them members of the Quorum of Twelve, two of them at least, who maintained that under the law of the church, the right of presidency should descend to the son of Joseph Smith. It was but a feeble voice, comparatively, that was raised upon this issue, however, but it grew in volume until it culminated in the reorganization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and to-day are assembled members of the Reorganization in this city under this canvas to-night. They came here for the purpose of presenting to you the faith of their fathers, a faith that was strong for religious liberty and the rights of men, according to this ordinance we have read in your hearing. If there have been wrongs committed by members of the church, we have no defense to make. If there have been errors, death's hand has been laid upon those who committed the error. But now as a representative of that faith, not simply as a historian, I take the liberty to represent that faith, and to say that we come to you for the purpose, therefore, to have you understand, that so far as past difficulties and troubles have been between the citizens of this place and us, we come to bury the hatchet, to say to you, Let the past be past; let all the bitterness and trouble that has been engendered between our friends pass away; and let the same religious liberty that was preached in the ordinance we have read to-night, which gave equal rights to every one with the Latter Day Saints, be enjoyed by all in the city of Nauvoo and elsewhere; and let the spirit of our faith be proclaimed far and wide over this town and other towns, until the spirit of liberty shall be known and felt among all nations, and we may dwell together as brethren, and live together as fellow citizens, and enjoy the rights guaranteed to us under the Constitution of these United States.

May the benediction of God's peace rest upon you. I would like to say more upon this subject, and read more of the things that transpired at this time. We come without any feeling of enmity, without any bitterness, laying aside the prejudice of the past, and ask you to meet with us and stand upon one platform. We implore the God of heaven for his help. We ask that the divine influence of the Holy Spirit be shed abroad in our hearts until we all arrive to a oneness with Christ, until we stand before him by whom all wrongs that have arisen between us can be adjusted. We are not competent to judge.

When those men plead with the Government for redress, and came back here without it, they made a solemn resolution to appeal to the court on high.

Let me say to the Latter Day Saints, we have taken an appeal, it is in the courts, we have appealed to that court, the highest tribunal, and let me advise you not to try the case out of court. Wait until the final judgment, and in the meantime, do all you can to exemplify the teachings of the Master, join hands with everything that is good and truly noble among men, and try to bring about conditions that will be grander and better than they have been in the past. May God's blessing rest upon all, and in the spirit of our fathers who preached religious liberty to all worshipers of God, we say to-night, Let the benediction of God's peace rest upon you, whatever your faith may be.

Most men would be willing to acknowledge their faults,—if they had any.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

LIFE AND EXPERIENCE OF ELDER J. E. BOZARTH.

I was born in Perry County, Illinois, February 4, 1870. Early in life I became interested in religion, and as my parents and almost all of my brothers and sisters had died, of course this created a greater desire in me to be prepared to meet them in heaven; for the preachers said that they were there, and if I ever wanted to see them again I must be religious. And as all my father's folks were Baptists, I of course thought that was the church. I attended their revivals year after year and went to the mourner's bench and sought earnestly for religion; but it was not there. By and by I changed communities and became acquainted with the Methodist Episcopal Church and attended Sunday-school and preaching some four or five years. I found them to be just as good as the Baptist people, and had just about made up my mind to unite with them, on condition of their taking me in as a full member and baptizing me by immersion. This they refused to do.

At this time I had heard but one sermon preached by the Saints, and I had given it no thought; but the parties that went with me to hear those they pleased to call Mormons preach seemed to be very much interested and told their wives what a wonderful sermon they heard. But they never did accept it, and so I had the pleasure of preaching to these same people in after-years. Just after I had decided to unite with the Methodist Church on the above conditions, Elder J. M. Smith began to hold grove-meetings in the community and I went to hear him, and followed him in scriptural references. At first I thought he certainly had another Bible, but when I went home and began to look for my scripture I found it all in my old Bible, that I had read so long, and the same old book that the Baptists and Methodists preached from all these years. As I began to read the references that I had gleaned from the discourse, the old book, though shelf-worn and torn by use, seemed indeed like a new volume, and when I would read such scripture as the great commission given to the apostles, in Mark 16: 15 and Matthew 28: 18-20, and as he began to reason on the unchangeability of God and show that he was no respecter of persons, the light began to come in upon my soul. My wife was a great help to me in the investigation of the angel's message. Though she did not belong to the church, yet she was a strong believer.

We lived close to the Methodist preacher by whom I had been instructed and who was a special friend of mine. He and I worked together a great deal that summer, and at the noon hour he would raise the subject of religion. Of course his ideas of the plan of salvation and those of my wife differed, and she would get the best of both of us in the argument. I could see very plainly that if a girl could so completely tangle a preacher who had preached for years that he could not get out, his creed must be faulty.

My wife never once hinted that she ever expected to unite with the church. Her parents belonged to the church and when we would go there, of course her father and I would talk on the subject of religion and would read with a different meaning, as he would glean its pages of the references referring to the organization of the church, and the gifts and blessings that were enjoyed in the ancient church, in 1 Corinthians 12; Ephesians 4. Of course there are other scriptures on this subject that he did not read that I found later, such as Luke 6: 12-16; 9: 1-6. I then learned of the law of adoption by which men and women become citizens, and of the governmental law by which characters are developed in adopted citizens; Hebrews 6: 1, 2; John 3: 5; Acts 8: 17; 19: 5, 6. I began to rejoice that I had found the glorious gospel that was taught in former years, with all its gifts and blessings so full and free, and my soul is thrilled with gladness and my fears are banished since the precious angel message came to me.

At this juncture I went to the Methodist church again and the preacher came to me and said, "Well, John, we have made up our minds to take you into the church and go to the creek and baptize you." I said, "I think I have found something better; I believe I will investigate further." In a short time Elder T. C. Kelley came to the same grove and began to preach, and I was thoroughly convinced from a biblical standpoint that these men were preaching the gospel. They told the people they could test the matter for themselves, for Christ's promise was on record, if any man would do his Father's will he could know of the doctrine, whether it be of God. (See John 7: 17.) I had long desired to know God, and to know him is life eternal. I made up my mind to put it to a test, and so I and wife were baptized by Bro. T. C. Kelley.

I think it was in the fall of 1891, but before I was baptized, this Methodist preacher told me that if I ever united with the Mormon church and would say there was anything in it, he would have to believe it; so in a short time after I united with the church I went to his house on business and he asked me about what I knew. I told him that I knew it to be the work of God. Of course he began an argument and as I would wind him up on one point he would jump to another, until he finally landed on Joseph Smith. Said "old Joe Smith" was not a prophet of God, so when I told him we were to judge a tree by the fruit it bore, and if we should judge Joseph Smith by the religious or spiritual fruit he bore, the Bible would warrant us in saying he was a prophet. I began to show him that through the agency of Mr. Smith the church had been restored with all the officers that were placed in it by Christ eighteen hundred years ago, with the same gifts and blessings and signs to follow the believer, as did anciently; and the same plan of salvation that was begun to be spoken by the Lord and was confirmed unto that generation by them that heard him (Hebrews 2: 3). That men had again been clothed upon with authority from high heaven to preach that gospel and to induct men into the kingdom of God; that the Father recognized their work by sending the Holy Spirit through the ordinance of the laying on of hands, as in the case of Philip's preaching. (Acts 8: 5-17), also in Paul's case (Acts 19: 1-7; Hebrews 6: 1, 2). The woman stormed out, "Such doctrine as that can't be talked in my house," so instead of him believing what I said in regard to the truthfulness of the latter-day work he turned against me; and whereas they had been my warmest friends they now became my enemies. I could tell many more such experiences, but for fear of being too long will not.

In 1898, on the tenth day of February, I was ordained teacher and was chosen by the Parrish, Illinois, Branch as presiding teacher, and filled that office as best I could until March 3, 1901, when I was ordained an elder. I was then elected president of the Parrish Branch, and served as pastor of that branch four years. As it was a country branch, we had preaching only on the first Sunday in each month. The other three Sundays I would go with Elder F. M. Davis, who was ordained the same time I was, from six to twenty-five miles on horseback or in a buggy and preach after working hard all week. We would start Saturday noon and many times ride home after night service on Sunday; and sometimes not get in till Monday noon. But for our pay, the sweet influence of the Spirit of the Master would fill our souls, and we would be made to rejoice in delivering the angel's message.

Some time in the summer of 1901 I visited my sister, who lived twenty-five or thirty miles away. On returning home I called on my wife's brother, who lived some five miles off the main road and about fifteen miles from my house. He was in the store business. There I met a Freewill Baptist preacher, and we had quite a scriptural talk; and he wanted me to preach that night. Said he would send some boys over the country and get me a congregation. I could not stay that night, but I told him I would come back on a certain Saturday evening, if he would let us have the church and announce our meeting. This was agreed to and he promised in case he failed to get the church he would fix seats in the grove; so everything was all right. When the time came Bro. F. M. Davis and I went down. Meeting had been announced, but they refused us the church and no seats were fixed. There was a schoolhouse just across the road from the church, but my brother-in-law said there was no use in trying to get it, for he had tried and failed. Pretty soon a gang of men gathered in front of the store and the Baptist preacher was among them. I went to the door and passed the time of day with them and said, "Gentlemen, you know our business here; the meeting has been announced and no place for the people to gather. We have no team to haul lumber, so we need some assistance." No reply was made.

Bro. Davis began to look gloomy and pretty soon said we had just as well go home. I said, "No, the people will come here to-night and we must preach to them." The Spirit seemed to come over me, and I said, "Come on and let's go see the trustees of the schoolhouse; I can get it." We went to one and he said he did not care, but said one of the others would not let us preach in the house. I said, "I believe he will." He said I could go and see him; "he has the keys, but I don't think he will let you have them." We went and approached the old man. I introduced myself and also Bro. Davis. We talked a few minutes and I told him our business. "Well," said he, "you men don't look very dangerous; you don't seem to have harm; I don't know as it would hurt the house for you to preach in it." "All right," I said, "let us have the keys, so we can have the house cleaned up a little." He did so, and the house would hardly hold the people that night, and we were blessed in preaching and in our social talks with the people while there. This gave me courage always to do my part and trust God for the results.

I would love to tell more of my experiences, but space will not admit. I hope the readers of this brief little story of my religious life will take courage and

"Don't give up and say forsaken,
Don't begin to say I'm sad;
Look, there comes a ray of sunshine,
Catch it quick, it seems so glad."

Dear reader, when this gospel found me, I was weak and sickly. I was thought to have consumption. I had not been free from pain in my breast very long at a time, for a number of years. So one time I had been looking for a little place that I could buy, had been out two or three days, got in home late with the sick headache and worn out. We had company that night, and I stayed up until the rest of the folks had gone to sleep. I knelt down and prayed and asked the Lord to heal me of the headache, which he did before I got up, or at least my head got easy. I went to bed, dropped off to sleep, and pretty soon I awoke; the house was light to me as could be and a personage was standing looking over the foot of the bed at me, and said, "If you will go and have Brn. Curtis and Morris administer to you, your lungs shall be healed." These brethren were preaching at the Saints' church about five miles away. The next day I went, was administered to, and my lungs have been apparently good ever since. May the Lord have the praise and the glory for it. This was Emsley Curtis and J. A. Morris, in the fall of 1893.

One other testimony and I will close my story, for fear of taking up too much space. After I was ordained an elder, the first thing when any of the children would get sick I would administer to them, in harmony with the Bible (James 5:13-15), with no doubt in my mind but that they would get well, and so they did. In the summer of 1900 our baby boy, then about three years old, was taken very sick while I was away from home. On my return my wife sent word for me to come in quick, but I thought I would put my horse up first. She sent again and told the boy to tell me to come right away, that Andrew was awfully sick. When I entered the house I could see that he was very bad, but I thought the Lord would heal him, and so I anointed him with oil and prayed for him. He dropped off to sleep and I thought he was all right, but he looked so bad it seemed to scare my wife. She said, "John, something will have to be done for that child." That seemed to scare me and I said, "Well, what do you want done? Do you want the doctor?" She said, "Something will have to be done." So I went for the doctor. When I returned with him the child was still asleep. The doctor examined him and said the child was not much sick, but he roused him and gave him some medicine. The child began vomiting again and just kept it up. He doctored him several days, but the child got no better, and I became very much worried and doubts began to come in my mind in regard to my call to the ministry, for the first and only time. Being tired and worried, both in body and mind, the boy was asleep and wife and I went to sleep. The light was left burning, and of course the room was light. Pretty soon, for some unknown reason, I woke up, raised my head, and was looking over the room, when I heard a voice speak these words: "You are engaged in a good cause, go on." These with many other testimonies have been a source of pleasure and comfort to me, and I can say with the poet,

"Now for celestial glory in the presence of the Lord,
I will work and watch and humbly bow the knee;
No longer faith, but knowledge in true and sweet accord,
Which the precious angel message brought to me."

I came to Knobnoster, Missouri, April 7, 1905. Was chosen by the branch before my letter came, to preside as pastor, and have been elected from time to time ever since. We have a lot of good Saints here who are helping to keep the camp-fire blazing.

Let me say in regard to the sick boy referred to above, the next day after I heard these words, "You are engaged in a good cause, go on," I sent for Elder F. M. Davis. We administered to the lad, and he wanted to get up and eat. His mamma tucked him up, gave him his dinner, and he was all right.

In conclusion, let me say,

"How dear to my heart is the story of old,
The story that ever is new;
The message that saints of all ages have told,
The message so tender and true.

"It came to my heart when all fettered by sin;
I sat in the prison of doubt:
Like angel of old, the glad story came in
And led me triumphantly out.

"It comes to my soul when the tempter is nigh
With snares for my way weary feet;
It tells of the Rock that is higher than I
And leads to its blissful retreat.

"When sorrow is mine, and on pillows of stone
My aching head seeks for repose,
This story brings comfort and peace from the throne,
My desert blooms forth like the rose.

"When down in the valley of shadow and death
I enter the gloom of the grave,
I'll tell the old story with life's last breath
Of Christ and his power to save."

"J. E. BOZARTH."

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

The following strong hymn was written by Joseph Stammers (1801-1885), who was a lawyer whose avocation was literature, and is the only one of many which has survived.

BREAST THE WAVE.

Breast the wave, Christian, when it is strongest;
Watch for day, Christian, when night is longest;
Onward and onward still be thine endeavor;
The rest that remaineth endureth for ever.

Fight the fight, Christian, Jesus is o'er thee;
Run the race, Christian, heaven is before thee;
He who hath promised all faltereth never;
O, trust in the love that endureth for ever.

Lift the eye, Christian, just as it closeth;
Raise the heart, Christian, ere it repositeth;
Nothing thy soul from the Savior shall sever;
Soon shalt thou mount upward to praise him for ever.

By so much as we have received the earnest of our inheritance in our Father's kingdom, by so much as we delight in the communion of his saints, by so much as we love to enter his presence in prayerful intimacy by authority of Christ who revealed him to us, by so much it is our noble duty to make known our Father's plan of exaltation, to make known his system for the evangelization of the entire world from the time of Adam until the end of time.

Of General Interest.

SITUATION IN TURKEY.

No nation probably has been more misunderstood of recent years than the Turks. The hateful outrages which have been perpetrated in Armenia and in Macedonia have given the impression that the Turks as a nation are a wild, fierce people, governed only by violent passions which manifest themselves in massacre.

Nothing is further from the truth. The Turk is a peace-loving, law-abiding man who has a peculiar passion for patriotism and strong family attachments. That which was brutal and lawless was banded in the hired assassins who have constituted the army, and in the wild tribes of Kurds. The racial feeling in the nation is strong enough to overcome the differences between Christians and Mahometans, and nothing is more striking at this moment than the way in which the combatants in Macedonia have thrown aside their arms and the contending parties have exchanged amicable embraces.

All this and much more gives us some understanding of the amazing scenes which are now taking place at Constantinople, where men are dancing in the streets for joy, and, like released captives, are singing loudly and waving flags, and cheering almost day and night. The whole thing reads like an Eastern fairy tale.

Here is the Sultan, who has worn a coat of mail, hidden away in his palace at the Yildiz Kiosk, lurking in a protected shelter, unable to face his people. Now he stands before a vast crowd of over one hundred thousand men of all races—Arabs, Armenians, Kurds, Greeks, and Turks. He thanks them for their confidence in him, reiterates that he means to abide by the new Constitution, and prays God to guide him aright for the best interests of his empire. But behind the Sultan there is an army of officials who are practically doomed, and two at least will pay with their lives for an almost life-long betrayal of a trust. Izzet Pasha has already taken refuge in the German Embassy on the banks of the Bosphorus, but I question whether he will escape his fate. Nine hundred and fifty common criminals were released from the Turkish prisons. This act, which emanated from the palace, has however, been badly received, and it is thought that it is the work of the reactionaries, who propose to form a Black Band with a view of provoking disorders. The freedom of the press now will tolerate no more intrigue, and the things which have been whispered in corners will be proclaimed from the housetop.

Prominent among the young Turks who have brought about this millennium is Santo Semo, a young man who has been brought up in French colleges in Paris, under the influence of Prince Sabaheddine, a nephew of the Sultan, and grandson of Abdul Mejid. When this young patriot visited the Hague he gave a lecture which produced a great sensation among the Turkish delegates, "The Ottoman Empire of to-morrow." He was a true prophet, for, although his words seemed wild and reckless, every prediction has since been fulfilled. "We have insisted," he says, "on the complete clearing out of the palace clique, the removal of a garrison of twenty thousand Albanians from Yildiz Kiosk, and the introduction of young Turkish ministers into the cabinet."

"What is the alternative," asked a correspondent, "if you do not get your terms?"

"The Sultan must be deposed, and the heir, Mahomet Rec-had, will be placed on the throne."

"But this reform will not end with Turkey; it will extend to Persia."

So prophecies the young patriot, and indeed facts prove that he is no dreamer of dreams. Two hundred and sixty-five newspapers have been established in the last week in Turkey as the result of the suppression of the censorship.

"We are going to make a clean sweep of the Ali Baba, the four hundred thieves," is the motto of the young Turk, who addressed multitudes in the streets.

TESLA'S AMAZING PROPHECIES.

The recent prophecies of Nikola Tesla, our famous electrical magician, are straining our faith to the breaking point. He declares that wireless telephony around the world is a feat easy to any expert. He tells us that future warfare will be carried on by the use of electrical waves. Mr. Tesla continues:

Even now, wireless plants could be constructed by which any region of the globe might be rendered uninhabitable without subjecting the population of other parts to serious danger or inconvenience.

But his next statement is the most astonishing of all. Indeed, it is the most amazing statement ever made by a man of science:

It appears, then, possible for man, through the harnessed energy of the medium and suitable agencies for starting and stopping ether-whirls, to cause matter to form and disappear. At his command, almost without an effort on his part, old worlds would vanish and new ones would spring into being. He could alter the size of this planet, control its seasons, adjust its distance from the sun, guide it on its eternal journey along any path he might choose through the depths of the universe. He could make planets collide and produce his suns and stars, his heat and light; he could originate life in all its infinite forms. To cause at will the birth and death of matter would be man's grandest deed, which would give him the mastery of physical creation, make him fulfill his ultimate destiny.

Astounding prophecies! Still, they seem not impossible to me, for I believe that man is destined to penetrate the locked mystery of nature and to exercise an incredible dominion over the world-forces.—Edwin Markham, in June Success Magazine.

When the Children are Away.

When the children are away we forget the noise they made,
We forget the sighs for peace that escaped us while they played;

We forget how much we longed to be free to leave it all,
And how lonely we become when the night begins to fall!

When the children are away, moved to no more murmurings,
We forget the piercing shrieks and the marred and broken things.

And the clock so loudly ticks as the night falls, still and black,
That it seems as if it tried in its grief to call them back.

When the children are away ghosts of pleasures that are fled
Seem to hover in the rooms and around each little bed;
Home is but an empty word, and how distant seems the day
That shall bring them shouting home—when the children are away!—S. E. KISER.

Patience.

Dear Ones of the Home Column: This beautiful afternoon as I have been meditating upon the responsibilities and cares which devolve upon mothers, I thought to say a word to you who are younger, whose hands are "tied" as it were, with the care of little ones; for it does seem monotonous, at times, as many know.

Not long since a sister whose home is blessed with little ones, the youngest being twins, said to me, "It seems to me that a mother who has no babies—no small ones—is so free." And indeed in one sense we are free. Free from physical worry and tire. Free to sleep at night if we are not worrying over those same babies who are no longer babies, but men and women, no longer playing about our feet, or tucked away in their cozy little beds next room to ours, if not beside our own bed. Sin is abroad in the land; trials and temptations are upon every side. Only those who have been called home to the Father's house of many mansions are secure. It is only of those you can say of a surety, "I have no need to fear."

While we are rearing our little ones, let us try to let patience have her perfect work within our hearts and homes; for an impatient mother is next to a failure. If we have been partakers of his Holy Spirit, let us strive patiently to overcome the errors of our past, and it may be a very hard struggle to do so; but we have the promise that no trial so great shall overtake us but his grace shall be sufficient.

In looking back over the past years, I see many times where it would have been far better had I experienced greater patience in the management of my children. And again, I remember many beautiful lessons they taught me while I was trying, in my weakness, to teach them. The fact of my being an invalid for many years is known to many of you, and mothers whose health is poor, and who have the responsibilities resting upon them that make stronger ones sometimes feel unequal to the task, can realize how impatient one feels sometimes.

One little incident I shall relate. I needed my little girl so much one morning, as I had no other help but my children, and her father sent her across the fields on an errand for himself, and I told her to hurry. But she stayed so long I was all impatience, and a sharp rebuke was intended for her heedlessness and disobedience. Finally she came, face flushed, perspiration running down her cheeks, the bright eyes aglow with a joyous light as she held out a bunch of flowers, some field lilies, some morning-glories, and one belated dandelion, and she said so proudly, "I hurried just as fast as I could to gather them for you because I know you love the flowers so much."

I took them, unable to say only "Thank you, dear little girl," for a great lump in my throat was choking me, and I placed them in water, and said, "Oh, that I might be more patient!" But the unkind word was not uttered, and I remembered Paul's words while speaking to the Hebrew brethren, "Let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us." Although far from kindred or Saints, let us remember that,

"Before our Father's throne
We pour our ardent prayers;
Our hopes, our fears, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares.

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear,
And for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

Few mothers but at times have felt themselves unequal to the task of rearing aright the little ones intrusted to their care, more so if they be Christian mothers; for they will feel how great the responsibility of leading and guiding aright the immortal beings intrusted to their care. Let us strive patiently and faithfully, for we have been told that our Savior was tempted as we, yet was without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in every time of need.

Lovingly your sister,

ELLEN SHERARD ADAIR.

Request for Prayer.

Bro. J. G. Morgan, Harbor Beach, Michigan, asks prayers in his behalf that he may be healed of nervous prostration with which he has been afflicted for twelve years.

Sr. Addie Dotton, Stonington, Maine, requests the prayers of the Saints for her nephew, Raynolds Sylver, who is afflicted.

There is the aristocracy of origin, the aristocracy of the grandfather we may call it. There is the aristocracy based on wealth, the aristocracy of the dollar we may call that, and then there is the higher aristocracy of wisdom and virtue of having no relatives hung or whom you particularly wish to have hung. Abraham Lincoln predicted that the third form would control in time and that education would be so general that everybody would be included. That is undoubtedly the highest form, but it must be reserved, I am afraid, to future times and imaginary places. Up to this time the aristocracy of birth and the aristocracy of money have divided the world between them.—Thomas W. Higginson.

"Religion is not a little, fenced-off inclosure, within which all is sacred, and outside of which all is secular and profane. There is no such distinction to be drawn. Religion is life, character, conduct; it reaches up to heaven, and down into the smallest details of daily duty; it covers everything."

Letter Department

ITHACA, Michigan, September 3, 1908.

Editors Herald: This date finds me at the above point, and at the end of a sixteen-day effort here on the streets of Ithaca. The attendance and interest have been varied, sometimes large crowds, and at other times few listeners. Cool nights have been against us, so cool now that it is most too cool for open-air meetings. Quite frosty here this morning. There are seven Saints here, all zealous in the work, and eager to do what they can toward the forwarding of the truth. Very little interest is shown by outsiders, although two or three have shown some disposition to consider our message. We are repeatedly reminded that the time is at hand when the Devil "hath great wrath because he knoweth he hath but a short time."

At last word Bro. Scott was at Williamston with the tent. We go to Belding to-morrow to attend the two-day meeting to be held there on the 5th and 6th inst. We expect to meet Bro. Scott there. Then on the 12th and 13th we are to be at Grant.

This is a large field (Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana) and only two ministers in the active field, which makes it hard to reach all the points where work might be done. My work so far has been at New Troy, Galien, Buchanan, Hartford, Grand Rapids, Alto, Lansing, Howell, and the present point. Have been kindly received by Saints in all these places, and though we have passed on to other places, the kindness shown by those among whom we have labored, as we passed along, is by no means forgotten.

We were favorably impressed by the zeal of the little band of Saints at Lansing during our short stay there. Also while there we had the privilege of meeting our old Holden, Missouri, neighbors, Bro. W. P. Buckley and family. It is good to meet those who were near to us in days gone by. Bro. Buckley resides in Jackson, and his love for the work seems unabated. May God bless all his children is my prayer.

Yours in gospel work,

H. E. MOLER.

SHARON, Pennsylvania, September 1, 1908.

Editors Herald: I wish to tell the Saints of the good done for the work by Elders R. C. Russell, Richard Baldwin, and Jonathan Hollibaugh in Sharpsville, a small town three miles northeast of Sharon.

It was the first time the gospel was ever preached in Sharpsville; and Brn. Baldwin and Hollibaugh had to endure much opposition in securing a lot for the tent, and were pestered by a little Methodist preacher, who, through his very efforts to keep his "flock" away from us, only aided in their becoming interested in our work.

If ever the Spirit of God was with a Latter Day Saint elder, it was with Bro. Baldwin in all his sermons. Words spoken with power from on high in Bro. Baldwin's grand, deep-toned voice stirred many to the knowledge of the truth of our teachings, and also awakened us Saints to a fuller sense of our responsibilities and made us rejoice that we had taken up this glorious cause.

Especially good was his answer to the aforementioned preacher's disgusting sermon "exposing Mormonism." It required two discourses for this reply, as he was requested to preach Sunday afternoon for the benefit of two hundred mill men. At this service and in the evening the tent, the lawns about the tent, the sidewalks, and the porches of the houses in the vicinity were crowded with people eager to hear our side of the story.

After the Hamburg reunion, Bro. Baldwin was joined by our eloquent Canadian missionary, R. C. Russell. Too much can not be said of Elder Russell. He very quickly won his way into our hearts by his happy, kind-hearted, religious nature. His sermons are marvelous and at the same time are told in good plain English. He is a wit by nature and he pleased his audiences by his humorous sayings and beautiful manner of telling the gospel story.

His last sermon, which was based entirely upon an argument he had had with a Methodist lady before the meeting commenced, was great. Words were put in his mouth that astonished and held spellbound his very attentive congregation, and, when he had finished and asked who wanted to embrace the work, many of the people, who now had heard of our way of presenting the gospel of Jesus Christ for the first time, could hardly restrain themselves from arising and giving their names for baptism, and they have resolved to investigate our doctrine. It is indeed with sincere regret that we see Elder Russell leave us to take up other duties.

Five new members have been gained for the Master, two more are to be baptized in the near future, and many in Sharpsville and surrounding places are seeking light.

Yours for progress,

ELEANOR G. JONES.

ST. JOSEPH, Missouri, September 1, 1908.

Dear Herald: 'Tis with a feeling of joy we know we have the gospel, and to read the official paper of the church, the HERALD; for how can any Latter Day Saint get along without it or fail to peruse its columns? While I have never helped fill its columns, I thought perhaps there were some who would like to hear how the Second St. Joseph Branch is getting along. Now when I say "branch," I do not mean the gospel, for we know the gospel will always get along all right, for it is right; but how we are individually and collectively as a branch.

We are now a little over a year and a half old, and not unlike the experiences of other branches, we have rough and rugged hills to climb, for now and then the hills rise in the valley. But climb them we must. After renting halls for about eight months, we purchased a church-building from the Christians, they having built a larger church just a block away. Well, so much for the building. Let us turn our minds to the branch. Yes, God has blessed us in our efforts and the efforts of Bro. W. P. Pickering and Hale W. Smith, who were with us last fall and held a series of meetings when several were baptized, and through the efforts of Brn. Ammon White and F. C. Keck, who did both indoor and outdoor preaching for two weeks, which resulted in nine being baptized. This makes about eighteen baptized since our organization, besides a goodly number coming and renewing activity who were on the scattered list, so to speak. But I must not forget to say the efforts of all were and are appreciated.

While Brn. White and Keck were with us, I am informed later, the ministers at this end of the city advised the people to stay away from us, as we were trying to explain the mysteries of God. One minister, after learning that we had baptized one of his members, went to her house and told her that she had made a mistake and he feared that if she did not come back to his church she would be lost, as we did not teach the Bible, but taught false doctrine; and that the Book of Mormon was not fit for her to read. This was more than I could stand without saying something, so I wrote him the following letters without even a reply:

"July 26, 1908.

"REVEREND S. W. HAYNE,

"Pastor of Gooding Methodist Episcopal Church.

"Dear Sir and Brother: I am informed that a few days ago you called on one of the members of our church, who had just been baptized, and made a statement that we were false and did not teach the Bible, and that you feared that if this individual did not change and come back to your church, she would be lost. Now, if this is your honest thought, you ought to try to see others of like faith, including myself, and show them the error of their way, for we teach to accept truth wherever found, on Christian or on heathen ground. Now as you have made the statement above mentioned, I, with my congregation, will throw down the bars, if bars there be, and give you an opportunity to show us the error of our way, and present unto us your faith and doctrine in our pulpit, and give me the same privilege of using your pulpit to present our faith and doctrine. Now, dear brother, if we are false, as you claim, and you have the truth, you certainly will not hesitate to accept this proposition; for truth has nothing to fear. Now as you made the statement that we teach false doctrine, you, a minister of a gospel, will certainly be willing to prove your statement.

"Yours for truth."

(Signed.)

The second letter to him was as follows:

"August 2, 1908.

"Dear Brother: As yet I have received no reply to my letter of July 26. So I now write asking for a reply, as certainly you are willing to prove your statement when given an opportunity, as I offered you my pulpit, and in exchange asked the privilege of occupying yours. Now, if this is an obstacle, I will waive the use of your pulpit and use ours instead, for our creed includes a free pulpit and an open Bible, and we are willing and anxious to explain and defend the doctrine we teach at any and all times and in the open field. So I now invite you to use my pulpit to show us where we are wrong and present us the doctrine you represent and I in return to do likewise. Come, 'let us reason together.'—Isaiah 1: 18. 'Be always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you.'—1 Peter 3: 15. Hoping to receive an early reply, I am as ever willing to accept truth wherever found."

(Signed.)

As yet no reply, but the gospel still wends its way, slowly but surely. Will she surmount every obstacle that comes in her way? Yes, truth will triumph. Let us push it along by reading the HERALD and Ensign and all church publications in connection with other good books, etc.

Yours for the work,

JOHN L. BEAR, JR.

WILLIAMSTON, Michigan, August 31, 1908.

Editors Herald: The two-day meetings appointed at various places in this district have so far been quite successful. Ithaca, Howell, and Lansing have contributed to give opportunity for the spread of the latter-day message.

At the latter-named place, the services were conducted in a tent pitched on the "state lot" in the midst of thirty-five thousand people, but few of this vast number "knew of the things which pertain to their peace." Saints were edified, encouraged, and strengthened for renewal of the conflict of life. The great mass of the people moved right along. They were informed of the effort by poster and newspaper advertisement, and "how often would we have gathered them" into the tent, and into the fold, "but they would not." Quite a number of the world attended, but in comparison to the population of the capital city, only a few.

Saints attended from Howell, Flint, Webberville, Williamston, Oak Grove, Dimondale, Jackson, Coldwater, and Bath, Michigan; also from Little Rock, Arkansas, and Indianapolis, Indiana. Bro. H. E. Moler and the writer were the speakers. Bro. Buckley, of Jackson, was installed at the organ, and kept "his post with sleepless eye," while Brn. Dexter and Barss as "privates out on picket, guarded against the least surprise." Two reporters were present, at as many times. The Republican, morning, gave a very fair write-up; the Journal, evening, gave us a manifestly unfair report. We waited on the latter and succeeded in getting in their columns a tardy and meager correction. It was a correction, though the plaster did not show up as large as the wound, even if we did cut it to cover.

Services were excellent, and a very pleasant spirit pervaded, both in preaching and in social sessions. One feature of the preaching-services which took well, was a male quartet, consisting of Elders Buckley, Scott, Moler, and Dexter. Billhorn's sacred chorus book was used, and all thoroughly enjoyed the rendition. Everything nice, and grand and noble, seems to fit exactly into the latter-day work, and finds its appropriate place very lovingly. The great temple of truth is beautiful in its building, but through distorted vision, how few see the divine symmetry!

We are here in tent-work. Have held about eight services. The attendance has been quite fair evenings. Saints here say the interest is better than they have ever known it. Bro. Joseph Dexter has been assisting and has conducted some nice street-services. We seek to sow the seed by the side of "all waters."

Bro. Moler is at Ithaca in street-services, and writes us of large audiences and interest. We go to Belding September 5, and from thence to Grant, where meetings are announced.

Hopefully yours,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

COOKES POINT, Texas, September 9, 1908.

Editors Herald: I want to call your attention to the strongest point against polygamy in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants. You will find it in Genesis 4: 19: "And Lamech took unto him two wives: the name of one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah." Here was where polygamy began: In Adam's family, away in the land of Nod, with not a single good man among the Cainites, and no prophet of God sent to them; so that if Lamech got a revelation to take a plurality of wives it was from the Devil or man, for it is evident that it was not from God.

Yours for truth,

E. W. NUNLEY.

SEARSBORO, Iowa, August 5, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been reading some of your church literature of late, and after having been carried about with every wind of doctrine for a number of years, have at last found the true doctrine of the church of Christ, and, I believe, directed by the will and Spirit of God. Having been led into the light unexpectedly, for a considerable time past I have been studying and reasoning with the word of God on the line of the Spirit, taking up such passages as, "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the body profiteth nothing." Then again, "God created man after his own likeness," and after his own image; "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in Spirit and in truth." But I now see how that God must deal with us literally, in order that we may get into or put on Christ, in order that we must receive his Spirit that will guide us into all truth. First get into his church by submitting to his commands, walking in his precepts, that we may be guided by his Spirit.

I am writing for information. I would love to annex myself to the church, but just how I am at somewhat of a loss to know. There is no church nearer than Lamoni that I know of, no members of the church in all the country. It seems I had to go to Oklahoma to find out the way of life; at least, while there last May, I came in contact with a member who gave me a good talk and literature that got me on the right road. I afterward sent to the editor of Zion's Ensign, Independence, Missouri, who sent me several pamphlets, which I read and reread carefully and with much interest. There are two churches here, Methodist and Quakers, which I attend alternately.

Yours in Christ,
J. M. ROBERTSON.

Reunion of the Des Moines District.

The reunion of the Des Moines District, held at Baxter, Iowa, closed Sunday, September 6. This is about the tenth annual reunion to be held in the district; the first to meet at Baxter. The attendance was good considering the scattered condition of the Saints. The meetings were spiritual, order prevailed during the entire time, and the Saints enjoyed themselves and were blessed and strengthened.

Elders M. H. Cook, J. F. Mintun, Wardell Christy, and Elbert A. Smith were present and presented the word at the preaching-services. Elders Cook, Christy, and Smith were chosen to preside over the reunion, the last named brother also being elected to act as secretary.

The reunion was held in a fine grove adjoining the town. The citizens of the community paid all the expenses of the grounds and a balance of two dollars and fifty cents. Their courtesy and good will were much appreciated and speak well for the good repute of the Saints who live in that part of the country. The people of the town treated us with uniform courtesy and those who attended services gave close attention to the speakers. The reunion grounds adjoin the baseball park and the baseball managers voluntarily postponed their Sunday games (although they had been advertised) in order to not interfere with the services.

The Des Moines District has many excellent Saints with whom it is a pleasure to meet. Their missionary force is limited, only three men, and one of these confined mostly to the city of Des Moines, yet they are fortunate in one way; their missionaries are fine spirited men with whom it is a pleasure to work. So far as we learned they labor together without friction or jealousy, in humility and gentleness.

Four afternoons were devoted to normal work, Bro. J. F. Mintun in charge. This was a profitable feature of the meetings and most of those in attendance availed themselves of the opportunity to get an insight into the normal work.

An Awakening in Wales.

CANTON, Cardiff, South Wales.

There are certainly golden opportunities before us in the little land of Wales. Privileges that hitherto were few and far between are now many. I believe I am safe in saying that not in the history of the Reorganized Church in Wales have there been such opportunities to place before the people, through the columns of the various periodicals, our faith, as now. In all civilized lands the press is acknowledged as a power which has no equal; no other medium can bring before the public any matter in such a short space, as the press.

The people in Wales have been poisoned by the abominations of Brighamism, and because of this it was a difficult task to get them to hear and investigate. Even the press, with a few exceptions, would not publish anything in favor of the Saints; hence it was an uphill work to get the public to understand that Latter Day Saintism is not Brighamism, and not until they are convinced of that fact can we, with consistency, look for progress.

On July 28, Bro. J. W. Rushton succeeded in getting into the columns of the South Wales Daily News, published in Cardiff, a very valuable article setting forth in plainness the claims of the Reorganized Church and the departure from the faith of the Salt Lake Mormons. The Daily News has a very large circulation, and is one of the leading morning papers in Wales. Other papers copied very extensively from this article. The British Isles Conference was also mentioned, which convened in Cardiff, August 1-3. During its sessions the reporters for the News and the South Wales Evening Echo attended, and gave us a valuable write-up. The Echo is published by the same firm as the News, and has eight editions daily, and has an average circulation of one hundred and sixty thousand copies per day. The claims of our church were presented in plainness, and were doubtless read in thousands of homes that hitherto knew nothing of us. Prior to the convening of the conference ten thousand bills were distributed by Brn. Thomas Taylor, of Leeds, England, Thomas Jones, of Nantyglo, Wales, and the writer, at the various homes in Cardiff, which is one of the leading cities in Wales, with a population of about two hundred thousand, and I am pleased to say, is one of the cleanest cities that I have ever seen. The time and the place of the conference with the epitome of our faith was the message of the bills. Two weeks prior to conference, the above brethren held open-air meetings, and Bro. Taylor and the writer continued for three weeks after the conference. We also had the assistance of Bro. Thomas Gould, president of the Cardiff Branch. Some interest and considerable excitement were aroused at these meetings; as to what the result will be, time will tell.

Mr. Thomas D. Evans, reporter for the Rhondda Leader, sent word if we would furnish him with items of interest concerning the conference and our faith, he would see that it was published. The president and secretary of the mission, Brn. Rushton and W. R. Armstrong, wrote a good article, which was published in full. Bro. Pickton, of the Aberdare Branch, a young man in years and in the church, has had a hearing in the Aberdare Leader, also in the Cambria Leader, of Swansea. We have several promising young men that have come into the work in the last twelve months, that we hope will be able defenders of the work in this land. Bro. Henry Ellis, of Llansamlet has had several short and plain stories in the Swansea Post and Leader. The writer has also been heard in the Post and Leader, and in the Llanelly Mercury, besides reporters and editors of the Post and Leader and Swansea Herald (the latter Welsh and English publication) have presented the difference between us and the Utah faction in unmistakable language. So, in my judgment, the way is opened up as it never has been before in getting our faith into the homes of thousands.

The Anti-mormons, of Swansea, interrupted our people at Llansamlet, Sunday evening, August 9, in an open-air service. Messrs. J. W. Perry and T. Dalling, president and secretary of the society, were very bold and made use of some harsh language. They distributed bills, the heading of which was, "Wholesale robberies and murders by the Mormons or Latter Day Saints." They asked the several hundred people present if they wanted Mormons in their community. Some answered, "No." "Then clear them out," they cried. The brethren explained that they were in no way connected with the Utah Mormons, but Mr. Dalling knew better and promised that next Sunday evening, August 16, they would be present to prove that all Latter Day Saints were Mormons and believers in the abominations of Brigham Young. Our people agreed to meet them and discuss the matter. Brn. D. Lewis and H. Ellis requested me to be present to assist them in the defense of our faith.

Saturday, in company with Bro. Rees Jenkins, we went to Swansea, called on Messrs. Perry and Dalling, but they were not home. We left some literature in hopes they would see their mistake, and set us right before the people on Sunday evening.

According to promise they were present and a chairman was chosen, who proved to be a gentleman, notwithstanding he was classed as an agnostic. I had said to some of the Saints that I did not believe that Perry and Dalling would try to class us with the Utah Mormons, after reading the literature which we had left at their homes, but that they would try to persuade the audience that Joseph Smith taught polygamy. In this my prediction was fulfilled. We had three speeches, fifteen minutes for the first two, and ten minutes to close. Mr. Dalling had the opening speech, and to the surprise of all, he never referred to the two churches, just as I had predicted, but asked several questions: First, When and where was Joseph Smith born? Second, When did he receive his first revelation? Third, Was he not tried before the court of the land for teaching polygamy? Fourth, Where was he killed and why? With this he said, "After Mr. Lewis answers these questions I will speak," and sat down, and had only occupied about half his time.

I stated that I presumed that many were surprised at the course Mr. Dalling had taken, as he had promised to prove his assertion made the Sunday evening previous. Still, I would cheerfully answer his questions, from memory. After doing so I proceeded to show that we were a separate and distinct organization from that of Utah; that we were the lawful successors to the original church of Latter Day Saints organized in the year 1830. Mr. Dalling then tried to prove that Joseph Smith taught polygamy and was summoned before the court of the land. But, in justice to Joseph Smith, he said, he was acquitted, and was prevented from putting into practice the doctrine of polygamy by being killed. I quoted the law on marriage from the three books, and stated that during the lifetime of Joseph Smith the law was honored and respected, and is still honored and respected by the Reorganization. I further stated that if it could be proved that Joseph Smith, Jr., taught polygamy, he was a transgressor of the law of God and of the land, and that I would reject him and the evils as quick as I had Brigham Young and his abomination (polygamy). I said that we follow no man, only as he follows Christ, and though an angel from heaven should teach any other gospel or law that conflicted with the word of God, we would reject him. I challenged Mr. Dalling or any other man to show anything from church publications printed prior to the death of Joseph Smith, that sanctioned polygamy.

The above position had weight with the people and destroyed poor Mr. Dalling's strong weapon, which he had relied upon to overthrow our faith. Nearly all those present were Welsh people, and there is a favorite saying with them that I reminded them of, in as strong and as loud a voice as I could, so that every one present could hear, for it was estimated that from one thousand to fifteen hundred were present: "Y Qwir Yon Erbyn Y Byd." (The truth against the world.) Though crushed to earth will rise triumphant. This was received with much favor.

It was then agreed to adjourn to the following evening, August 23. I asked if they would meet us during the week nights, as I did not favor holding discussions on Sunday; but they answered, "No." So as they were the aggressors, we thought it wise to defend ourselves.

At the close of the service many expressed themselves as being pleased with our position, and the spirit manifested by us in our defense, and said, "Why go back to the days of Joseph Smith? Why not judge the faith of the Latter Day Saints by what they preach and practice here in this country," and they referred to Brn. D. Lewis, Benjamin Davis, and Henry Ellis, of their vicinity. "These men have been here for years, and they are men of good character. They have never at any time, to our knowledge, said one word in favor of polygamy, but the opposite." I was truly glad that our brethren stood so high in the estimation of the good people.

Owing to the rain on Sunday (23d) there was no discussion, and Messrs. Dalling and Perry did not put in their appearance; so no arrangements were made for the future, except that we sent them an invitation to continue the discussion, and also to discuss the church propositions to be held indoors. We have not yet heard from them. Copies of the invitation and propositions sent to them were also sent to the Post and Leader, of Swansea, and the Mercury at Llanelly. We did this in order that the public may know that we were still ready and willing to stand in defense of our faith. We would have continued open-air services at Llansamlet had the weather been favorable. The interest there is such that we should by all means like to be able to continue our efforts. We ought to have some means at our command, so that we could rent public buildings, and print Welsh and English tracts. I have had five thousand small pamphlets printed, size three by five inches, eight pages with cover. On the front cover: "Only one church of Christ. There are many churches of men. Our creed, all truth. An open Bible and a free pulpit." On the inside page, as well as on the back of the cover: "An innocent people misrepresented; their faith not understood." It contains the origin of polygamy, and presents our church in the true light, also the epitome of the faith. In my opinion this is a little gem, and should be placed in every home. They cost thirty cents per hundred.

There are three missionaries in Wales: Brn. Rees Jenkins, Thomas Jones, and the writer, and we are anxiously in hopes that friends of other lands, especially the Welsh Saints, who are interested in the success of the mission work here, will bear in mind that it takes money to rent halls and purchase literature, and we should have both.

In conclusion, I repeat that there is an awakening among the people of the land that should not be lost sight of. I remain,

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

137 Severn Road, August 27, 1908.

North Dakota.

I was called here to let the people know the difference between the true Saints and some Mormon elders who are here preaching on the streets. They publicly acknowledged their belief in polygamy.

Elder William Sparling had his arm broken and Sr. Sparling her arm and leg broken in a runaway at Sherwood, but both were doing nicely the last we heard.

Brn. Houghton are in the northwestern part of the State somewhere.

Thrashing will soon be over if this nice weather continues. The crop proves to be lighter in places than many expected. God's work seems onward in this State.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. F. G. Pitt, San Bernardino, California: "Church work is moving along nicely here. The good effects of our late reunion are still being felt. A goodly number in attendance at meetings and a good spirit manifest. The Saints were pleased with Bro. F. M. Smith's visit and timely instruction. The future is brightening, so we are hopeful."

Sr. Cashman, the lady who has been sick at Liberty Home, has recovered and will soon be about. She was very low, but extra care and kindness by the matron, Sr. Rudd, saved her,—almost a miracle. The sister writes: "To all the Saints

I wish to say I have received the best of care from our matron and all in the home, or I would not be here to-day."

Sr. Lucy Entrekin, Biloxi, Mississippi: "The debate between Mr Ben Bogard, of the Baptist Church, and Bro. T. C. Kelley starts on the fifteenth day of September. The people are preparing for it and all are looking for a good time."

News From Branches

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Of important interest it is to the work in the city, that our missionary, after completing his labors on the Sanitarium, is at last permitted to reach his field, and take up the work which awaited him. But in the meantime matters have progressed nicely under the care of the local force and an occasional visit from the district missionary, and especially must we mention the splendid work among us of Bro. Vanderwood. One of our brethren visiting in the East this summer, brought home no little flattery for the local force of Chicago, since it had been remarked to him by some of the priesthood of the Rochester, New York, Branch, that "Chicago has a splendid local force."

Bro. Allen has met with the priesthood of both branches here (the West Pullman, or third branch, having but slight priesthood representation) and talked matters over with them, carefully defining the duties of each officer, and enlarging upon the best means for carrying into effect their labors; how that much wisdom and prayer is needed by an officer to properly deal with the knotty problems which he may be called upon to solve.

Sr. Shultz's daughter was severely burned a few days ago, particulars we did not learn. Sr. McGuire, who has lately undergone an operation, has returned from the hospital and is reported to be progressing nicely.

The sisters are working faithfully in preparing for the bazaar, some time in October, for the building fund.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Eastern South Dakota; Greeting: Dear Saints, it is with a feeling of gratitude to our heavenly Father, and to you, that I write these few lines. Many of you have responded nobly to the needs in a financial way in the past, and I feel quite sure that you have not been deprived of any of the comforts and necessities of life by so doing, and you surely must be conscious of the fact that you have God's approval and blessing. It is not because you are less faithful than others that we call your attention to present and future needs of the Lord's work, but because the human heart is prone to forget present duties in reflecting on what we have done in the past, and also because we have become accustomed to those in official positions reminding us of present needs.

Your experience in life has taught you that every year brings to your homes practically the same needs; you must eat to preserve your physical life; you must buy new clothes to protect your bodies from cold and heat; you need fuel to keep warm, and all your needs and wants find a duplicate in the missionaries' families, and as the greatest part of the tithes are used for that purpose, when you pay your share you are giving the missionaries' families an opportunity to have what you believe you need for just necessities.

That your minds might be refreshed and enlightened, I will call your attention to a few things needful for you to know. The Prophet Isaiah, 1: 19, said, in referring to Israel, that the willing and obedient would eat the good of the land. The same person who told you to be baptized, also said: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in my house."—Malachi 3: 10. In Proverbs 3: 9, we are told to honor the Lord with the first-fruits of our increase. In Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1, the Lord says the law of tithing is a standing law for ever. In the same book, 75: 4, we are informed that it is our duty to assist in supporting the families of the elders engaged in missionary work, and in 70: 3, we are told that a failure to honor the temporal law is one of the causes why the Spirit is withheld from us. A failure to keep his law was one of the causes why our people failed to possess the land of Zion. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.) A failure on the part of some to honor God's law will not excuse us; we are rewarded in spiritual and temporal blessings for what we do. The failures of others will not rob us. In seeking to carry out the law the Bishop instructed me to pay the allowance of Sr. L. G. Holloway, wife of my collaborer, and up to date she has received only a portion. So you can perceive that it takes faith to be a missionary's wife as well as a missionary.

"There is a work for you to do,
No other one can do for you.
Arise and work though great or small,
For by our works we stand or fall."

To those who have been faithful in the past it will be a source of joy to know that you have been blessed of God, and that you have the gratitude of many grateful hearts who have been clothed and fed as a result of your generous and loving deeds. To those who have been forgetful of those duties, that make for peaceful communion with our Lord and fill our hearts with love, we will say that God does not want your money because he can not get along without it, but rather that we might do his will, and eliminate selfishness from our natures, and be entitled to his favor and his blessing, in spiritual and temporal things. Paul says in this connection: "Not that I desire a gift: but I desire fruit that may abound to your account."—Philippians 4: 17.

Unless you know where I am when you write, address me at Omaha, Nebraska, 3318 Taylor Street.

Your collaborer in the gospel of Christ,
EDWARD RANNIE,

Bishop's Agent for Eastern South Dakota.

Important Books of the Month.

Among the works of general interest which The Macmillan Company promises for publication this month are Realities and Ideals by Frederic Harrison; Highways and Byways of the Pacific Coast, by Clifton Johnson; The Seeming Unreality of the Spiritual Life, by Henry Churchill King; The United States as a World-Power, by Archibald Cary Coolidge; Volume II of Professor Edward Channing's History of the United States; The Evolution of Modern Orchestration, by Louis Adolphe Coerne; The Principles of Anthropology and Sociology in Their Relations to Criminal Procedure, by Maurice Parmele. These in addition to the two novels already announced—Wroth by Agnes and Egerton Castle, and Cousin Cinderella by Mrs. Everard Cotes.

Of far reaching interest and importance in the September Century is the discussion of "The future wheat supply of the United States," by Edward C. Parker, of the University of Minnesota agricultural experiment station. He points out the many means which may be utilized to meet the future demands for wheat, prophesying that agriculture, still only in its infancy, is bound sooner or later to have a rapid and widespread development, and that the limit of its possibilities will be extended by each succeeding generation. Since writing the article Mr. Parker has been called to Manchuria by the Chinese authorities to organize an experiment station.

SANCTION OF THE LAW.

The sanction of the law of the land is the penalty determined by the lawmaking power as punishment in the event of a violation of that law. This applies equally well to the laws of God and even to a greater degree, because punishment for violation of law is inevitable. For instance, with municipal laws the penalty generally fixed for the crime of murder is the death of the slayer; but many murderers there are who have escaped this penalty because of various and obvious reasons. But the penalties imposed by God upon sinners against his decrees can not be escaped. They are as sure and certain as death itself.

In addition to the so-called penalty attaching to violation of the laws of the land, there is another sanction as severe in many cases and often more to be dreaded than imprisonment or the infliction of fines. It is the moral censure of society. Of course this has a bearing or influence to a degree which differs according to the mental and moral make-up of the man against whom it is directed. It can easily be imagined that there are men who would readily pay fines or even suffer imprisonment in order to do certain things forbidden by law, but who would not risk the reproach of society resulting from the exposition of their guilt. On the other hand there are those upon whom the adverse opinion of society has little or no effect.

It can be seen, therefore, that this additional sanction is a good thing. It is of greater influence with the majority of men in the keeping of law and order than the prison itself; the fear of exposure prevents many a crime.

So also with the laws of God: There is the sanction of his laws which declares that men shall be judged by their works and shall suffer for their misdeeds. There is the additional sanction contained in the words, "I am not well pleased," and "God does not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance"; as also the moral restraint of fellow Christians and the good opinion of brethren and sisters. While all admit God's omniscience, leaving no doubt as to his knowledge of sin, yet few there be, comparatively, who really keep this fact in mind. Christian men and women know not only that sin is violation of law for which atonement must be made, but also that it displeases God who is their best friend and whom they love and do not wish to offend. They also love their brethren and sisters and wish to maintain a righteous standing in their hearts and minds. Alas, that this is not more operative among men, since the love of God and right doing are not of themselves always sufficient to keep men within the law!

S. M. Traum, Christian Disciple, is the author of a series of articles appearing irregularly in the Christian Standard. The first number was published in the issue of May 16, 1908. This writer claims responsibility for the disaffection of Elder M. R. Scott, of Wirt, Indiana, who was once a brother, but who is now a minister for the Disciples.

Among nations there exists what is called international law, which, at first thought, seems an anomaly, because the term law predicates a superior power from which the law comes and by which the same is to be enforced. But with independent nations there is no superior power recognized, each having, by virtue of its independent existence, rights and privileges equal to that of any other. When differences now exist between nations and arbitration is to be made, certain things are taken into consideration known as international law. They are the former decisions and actions of courts of arbitration, which are matters of record and therefore recognized, and to that extent are as binding as law. They are supposed to be founded in justice and are brought to bear the same as the common law or decisions of municipal courts, and effect the disposition of cases in equity in a like manner.

So much for the application of international law. The question is, What makes it law when there is no compelling power recognized? A resort to force of arms in settlement of difficulty is another proposition and does not enter into the consideration of this subject. What makes it law, then, when there is no ruling power to enforce its observance or determine the penalty of its violation, when actual and written prohibition does not exist? It is the sanction of the world, the commendation or censure of mankind. With nations, as with any form of organized society, this regard for the opinion of others and even the opinions themselves are determined largely, almost wholly, by the introduction of Christian principles. It is a powerful factor for good; it should be respected by individuals and encouraged by communities.

International difficulties are being adjusted according to principles of justice which many years ago, when this higher sanction did not exist, would have resulted in war and bloodshed. Turkey has finally recognized this sanction,—this approval of right and disapproval of wrong, which is being felt more and more among the world, and the "sick man of the East" is granting a constitution to his subjects. The world approves.

Saints should try to strengthen the moral uplift. The moral influence of communities differ to a marked degree and are found to be in proportion to the actual morals of the people. Let criminals know their misdeeds are not only against the law, but are harmful to the welfare of society. We should not withhold censure from sinfulness, but should, of course, exercise charity and love toward sinners. We thereby honor God.

CORRECTNESS OF BIBLE TRANSLATION.

"We believe that in the Bible is contained the word of God, so far as it is translated correctly."—Epitome of Faith, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ.

Opponents to the restored gospel have taken exception to the foregoing. They do not like the idea that there may have been mistakes in the translation of the Bible. In view of this fact we believe the following under the title, "The danger of excessive literalism," will be of interest, as it tends to strengthen our faith in the above. We quote from the Literary Digest for September 5, 1908:

The Reverend Doctor Charles F. Aked, a clergyman of unquestioned orthodoxy, explains through the pages of one of the popular magazines how an extreme theory of "literal inspiration" applied to the Bible may prove a stumbling-block rather than a prop to Christianity. His frank words may prove of value to those who are ready to think the Bible invalidated by a single proven error. "So long as the man in the pulpit pretends that the Bible is infallible, just so long will the man on the cars politely ignore it," writes Doctor Aked in Appleton's Magazine for September; and he goes on to show how inevitably a certain amount of human error must have crept into the text during the long centuries of copying, translating, and retranslating. When we face the accepted facts of the case, he points out, "the infallibility of the English Bible becomes an impossible conception." Yet he finds the notion still loosely floating about the churches "that the Bible came down from heaven, cleanly printed, nicely bound in morocco, and gilt-edged, with a book-marker against the text which has been erroneously made to declare that every scripture is inspired of God." The result of this theory that even in the English version every sentence, word, and punctuation-mark is "guaranteed by the Holy Ghost" is thus depicted.

"Men are told that the Bible is the infallible revelation of God to man, and that its statements concerning God and man are to be unhesitatingly accepted as made upon the authority of God. They turn to its pages and they find historical errors, arithmetical mistakes, inconsistencies, and manifold contradictions, and, what is far worse, they find that the most horrible crimes are committed by men who calmly plead in justification of their terrible misdeeds the imperturbable 'God said.' The heart and conscience of man indignantly rebel against the representations of the Most High given in some parts of the Bible. What happens? Why, such men declare—are now declaring, and will in constantly increasing numbers, and with constantly increasing force and boldness, declare—that they can have nothing to do with a book whose errors a child can discover, and whose revelation of God partakes at times of the nature of blasphemy against man. To such Bible-rejection has Bible-worship led! But the Bible remains the noblest monument of the religious genius of the race. It preserves the words of the most truly inspired men of bygone ages. It contains the record of the revelation of God. And it stands in unapproachable majesty, as a volume, the Book of books, superior to all others, and itself a literature not merely inspired, but inspiring the literature of the world."

Doctor Aked reminds us that the Revised Version of the English Bible "is based on the Authorized Version, which is an improved edition of the Bishops' Bible, which was a bad copy of Cranmer's Bible, which was based on Coverdale's translations of Dutch and Latin translations and Rogers' version of Tindall's Bible." But textual errors had ample opportunities to creep in long before the English version existed. "The earliest Hebrew copy of the Old Testament of undisputed date goes back only to the tenth century A. D.," we are told, although the oldest Greek version, that in the Vatican, "dates from the first half of the fourth century." Considering the case of the Hebrew version, Doctor Aked writes:

"For a period, therefore, of not less than twelve hundred years, and perhaps of two thousand, copy had been succeeding copy, generation following generation in the world of books even as in the human race. Twelve centuries of 'editions' had gone the way of all papyri, even as twenty centuries of human beings had gone the way of all flesh, and this parchment was heir of all those ages in the foremost files of—books. Had no copyist made one mistake in the course of twice a thousand years? As compensation for the late date of our Hebrew authorities can be set, it is true, the scrupulous fidelity with which the Hebrew amanuensis did his work, his reverence for the letter of the document on which he was engaged, and the consequent comparative purity and reliability of the text. But still—

"Consider this one fact: In a perfectly marvelous way the Jews contrived to preserve a literature without having a vowel in their language. The very thought of it staggers one! Let any man write out a column of to-day's newspaper, omitting every vowel as he writes, and then try to write out from the copy he has made a fair copy back into English! He will find it a tedious and painful task; and he will find as well that there are many words which may mean one or two or three different things, according as he inserts one vowel for another. And he has to depend on memory, on his insight into probabilities of meaning, and upon his natural capacity for making sense of obscure 'copy,' for the exact word. Now let him imagine himself engaged not on a paltry column, but upon the entire Old Testament! And this was the position of Hebrew learning during the whole course of its history down to the sixth century after Christ. Then the Jews began to put in the vowel points which they had invented; but did they invariably put in the right vowel, or have they now and then given us a word or two which ought not to have been in the Bible at all?"

Again, turning to those books of the Bible which Protestantism group as Apocryphal and which Roman Catholicism accepts, Mr. Aked continues:

"Men decided which books were 'Bible,' and which were not. They had no miraculous power, no miraculous information, no miraculous commission. They were men of like passions with ourselves. Some were abler men than we are, and more learned. Some were neither so capable nor so well read. But they resolutely set themselves to consider problems, and they gave the best solution they could hit upon. By tact and insight and all the resources of literary criticism open to them, they sought, zealously and prayerfully, to define the place of the various books which claimed to belong to the Bible. But—

"It is palpably absurd to regard every question, disputed for twenty centuries, debated by innumerable councils, Jewish, Catholic, Protestant, adjusted time after time by the simple expedient of a majority vote, as so irrevocably fixed by the will of divine Omnipotence that to reopen any question, to reconsider any evidence upon which men of other ages took action, to travel over the ground trodden by them, with their own methods of inquiry and with prayer to the God they worshiped for the aid of the Spirit for which they begged, to do exactly what they did—form an independent and reverent judgment—is a crime so heinous that the bitterest words in the vocabulary of Christian hate must needs be spoken, and the deadliest weapons in the armory of religious persecution forged against the heretic and the sinner. The decisions come to may be right. They may be wrong. But they were the decisions of men, and as such are subject to criticism and revision equally with any other conclusions in the whole realm of intellectual life."

RELIGIOUS TOLERATION IN UTAH.

A little incident of interest happened in Salt Lake City recently. Bro. E. C. Briggs, who has been active in street work and in the distribution of our church literature, was arrested, upon complaint of Charles H. Wilcken, of the bureau of information at the temple grounds, and he was haled into police court for violation of a city ordinance which forbids the handing out of advertising matter in a certain section near the temple. Details are perhaps unnecessary, but Judge Diehl passed on the case in a peculiar way.

Judge Diehl found Mr. Briggs technically guilty, . . . but discharged him. . . . He did not think the city council, when it drew up the ordinance, meant to class printed matter pertaining to church work as advertising. . . . The judge said he did not feel disposed to impose a fine, for it had been a common practice of other churches to give out printed matter telling of church work as freely as did Mr. Briggs, in the restricted district.—Salt Lake Tribune, September 15, 1908.

This disposition of the case strikes the Salt Lake Tribune as remarkable. We quote from their editorial of September 15:

In the case of Elder Briggs, which Judge Diehl decided practically both ways yesterday, the court was quite right in saying that the complaint presented a new case. . . .

The idea that a man is not free to hand religious tracts to passersby on the street is indeed something new in America. But if the court considers that an offense, how does it happen that there is no punishment for that offense? Simply because no such offense is named in the law or could be named in the law, and no penalty could possibly be provided for anything of that kind.

Suppose a Mormon elder should be arrested in any one of the eastern cities for handing out Mormon tracts at houses or to persons he might meet on the street: what a howl would be raised here about religious persecution and about the intolerance of the community in which such "an outrage" could be perpetrated! And yet in Salt Lake City our city court gravely professes to find some sort of offense or objection in Elder Briggs handing out on the street some tracts in support of the doctrines of the Reorganized branch of that church.

It is a very curious commentary upon the puerility of that court to have an outcome of this kind from it. If Elder Briggs is to be prosecuted for handing our Reorganized tracts here, we suppose that the like punishment should be visited upon any Christian minister, colporteur, or Bible agent who might hand out tracts of the American Bible Society, foreign mission tracts, Methodist tracts, Episcopal tracts, Presbyterian tracts, or any other form of religious literature. The whole idea is too preposterous to think about!

In a later issue the Tribune, under the heading, "Bigoted intolerance," devotes an editorial column to the Briggs case, quoting freely from Utah documents to show that Utah Mormons have always used the plan of distributing tracts and literature in getting their views before the people, and are guilty of "cowardly intolerance."

The recent arrest of Elder E. C. Briggs of the Reorganized Church, at the instigation of the polygamous Mormon church, because he distributed religious tracts upon the streets, has brought forth volumes of condemnation from all classes of people, including a large number of Utah Mormons. On all sides the cowardly intolerance displayed by the church authorities throughout the case is unsparingly denounced, and the effect of it has been to work injury to the whole Mormon organization.

[Here follow numerous quotations from letters, sermons, pamphlets, newspapers, etc., showing the Utah methods of scattering literature from house to house and on the streets, including a statement from their president:]

"All we want is a free field and a fair fight. We would like to be treated honorably."—President Joseph F. Smith to Pittsburg Times, April 3, 1908.

It is quite impossible for the Mormon church authorities to escape responsibility for the arrest of Elder Briggs. For months past, according to a statement made by Mr. Briggs (which doubtless will not be denied), he has been warned by attaches of the bureau of information to cease handing his religious tracts to persons passing that vicinity. From warnings to desist, the intolerance and persecution passed to threat of arrest if Elder Briggs persisted in doing in Salt Lake City what Mormon missionaries do in every city and town and hamlet in the country. Elder Briggs stood upon his equal rights to disseminate his own doctrines, and he was arrested and haled before the police court. . . .

The underlying cause for the arrest was in the fact that Mr. Briggs was distributing religious literature, denouncing polygamy and contributing proof of its utter falsity as a pretended doctrine of the Mormon church as these doctrines were originally contemplated and established. This constitutes the most offensive lese majeste imaginable, in the eyes of the polygamous president, Joseph F. Smith. Hence the prophet, who hypocritically states that all he wants is a "free field and a fair fight," caused his minion to go out and suppress the offender. . . .

As represented in the foul lechers who tyrannize over their people, the church is a mass of festering hypocrisy, deceit, intolerance, and vicious persecution.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Our missionaries to Wales have been active and successful in getting into the pages of local papers. Bro. Lewis says: "In the last four weeks we have been favored by the press. I am safe in saying that not in the history of the Reorganized Church in Wales has there been extended to us such courtesy. To my knowledge, eight of the periodicals have had favorable comments about our faith by the editors and reporters, besides articles that have been written by our force, namely, Bro. J. W. Rushton, William Armstrong, Henry Ellis, Bro. Pickton, and myself. Thousands have been informed of the difference between us and the Utah Mormons, who have by their abominations brought a disgrace upon the fair name of the church. I am grateful for the open door (press) by which we have been able to reach so many homes, and bring before them the faith of the true Latter Day Saints."

Bro. Elbert A. Smith, associate editor, writes from Marathon, Iowa: "By invitation of the local pastor of the Baptist church, I occupied their pulpit on Sunday night, September 13, and had the largest audience any of our elders ever secured in this section. The invitation came without solicitation and is a tribute to the standing of the few members who live here."

Patriarch J. H. Lake desires that we announce that his niece, Ruth Strand, who lives in Canada, would like to know the whereabouts of her son, John Strand, who left home some time ago and stayed in Michigan for a short time. While there he became a member of the church, and went West afterward. It is quite necessary to find him as there is some money left to him. He should report to J. H. Lake, Willoughby, Ohio, or to his mother, whose address he will doubtless know.

Bro. John Lloyd, St. Louis, writes us at the request of Sr. Kitchingham, who has lost track of her son Alfred.* He was last heard of at Chicago, where he attended one of the branches. Any one knowing his whereabouts can communicate with Sr. Kitchingham at 2941 Thomas Street, St. Louis, Missouri.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The Harvest Home Festival for 1908 is history, and the interest manifested by the people of Lamoni and vicinity is remarkable to those who have had no previous opportunity to see what this festival means. Exhibits of all kinds were excellent. Several brethren of the HERALD force and church offices are premium holders as a result of competition in live stock and poultry.

Elders J. W. Wight and J. W. Peterson were Sunday speakers at the Brick Church.

Work at Graceland is in full swing. The presence of students at church meetings of all kinds is quite noticeable. The Athenian Society holds meetings on "Saturday evenings at Athenian Hall," as President Anderson expresses it. Visitors are always welcome at the programs rendered, and are always repaid for any trouble in attending, as programs are of a high order.

I'd rather have a little nosegay on my breakfast plate than a bank of cut flowers on my coffin.

The Straight Road

A PLEA FOR CONTINUED REVELATION.

The principal reason why a plea for continued revelation is made necessary, is because the Christian world at large rejects the idea. Modern theology has taught that God no longer speaks to men as formerly; furthermore, it declares that God will not speak to men again. It is conceded that God has spoken to men, in the various incidents as related in the Bible; that he will continue to speak to "holy men of God," as they are "moved by the Holy Ghost," is denied.

A plea for continued revelation will of necessity include a plea for the unchangeableness of God. Is God changeable? Is he a respecter of persons? Has the Holy Ghost changed? In denouncing continued revelation, modern theology must affirm that God is not the same; that he is a respecter of persons; that the Holy Spirit, which proceeds from God, is not what Christ promised it to be.

Of the unchangeableness of God we read, "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning."—James 1: 19. Of our Savior we are told, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." (Hebrews 13: 8.)

The Holy Ghost, proceeding from God and manifesting himself to men according to the will and wisdom of God, is continued revelation. Wherever "holy men of God" may be found in all the world, in all ages of its history, God may speak to them. One chief reason why revelation ceased after the times of the apostles was because of the fact that the Christians were turning to heathenism and very few, if any, "holy men of God" were to be found. If such men as Peter, Paul, and James had continued to exist, continued revelation would doubtless have been manifested through them. The oncoming of the Dark Ages was inevitable. The fulfillment of the prophet's declaration, "For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people" (Isaiah 60: 2), was surely at hand.

Over one thousand years were passed wherein this darkness, manifesting itself in ignorance, heathenism, and priestcraft, has left an almost incredible record upon the pages of the world's history. Emerging from this benighted condition came the reformers, one by one. They revolted at the utter inconsistency of a corrupted church. Not all the reformations were free from this tainted corruption, and from them men have originated still further reformations, and such work is yet going on. This condition of things was fast leading up to the event foreshadowed by the prophet when he said, "Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear toward me is taught by the precept of men."—Isaiah 29: 13.

By taking an unprejudiced view of sectarianism, to-day, one may discover a complete fulfillment of this prophecy. Their fear toward God is taught by the creeds and precepts of men. No higher authority is claimed; they have removed their hearts from God and forbidden him to speak to them. They would not believe him if he did. They honor him with their lips, but refuse to comply with the commandments as God gave them in the New Testament. As their fathers, they thirst for the blood of any man who comes to them as a true prophet of God. They denounce as a fanatic any one who dares to contend for the faith, organization, and blessings of the church as built by Christ, in the primitive age. In the face of this condition the Lord has said, "Therefore, behold, I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid."—Isaiah 29: 14. The complete fulfillment of this prophecy, the restoration of the gospel and the true church of Christ, is, without doubt, the marvelous work here referred to by this prophet. The time of fulfillment is indicated by this further prediction, "Is it not yet a very little while, and Lebanon [Palestine] shall be turned into a fruitful field, and the fruitful field shall be esteemed as a forest?"—Isaiah 29: 17.

The true church of Christ was organized by command of God, to men who were so directed and moved upon by the Holy Ghost, April 6, 1830. Within a few years of time thereafter, the land of Palestine, only inhabited by wandering Arabs, its cities in ruins, only a desert and barren waste for many centuries past, was suddenly awakened to life and fertility by the return of the former and latter rains. Jerusalem has since been built up,—the town without walls, as declared by the prophet in Zechariah 2: 1-6. An angel from heaven was to bring back to earth "the everlasting gospel." (Revelation 14: 6.) And as Jesus said, "Elias truly shall first come, [before his second coming,] and restore all things."—Matthew 17: 11. Thus the gospel and the authority of the priesthood have been restored in fulfillment of God's word. The revelation and witness of the Holy Spirit have been enjoyed by the people of God as in days of old.

Concerning the Holy Ghost Jesus said, "He will guide you into all truth. . . . He will show you things to come."—John 16: 13. Again, "He shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you."—John 14: 26. The plea for continued revelation is, that the Holy Ghost will now actually do, for those who possess it, just what Jesus said it would. God having set in the church apostles and prophets (1 Corinthians 12:28), it follows that he will speak through them the revelations of the Holy Ghost. We are told, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God."—1 John 4:1. The church, to protect itself against fraud or deception, puts to the test all that is offered for its guidance as revelations from God. Only that which is attested by the Spirit, and which harmonizes with all other revelation, is accepted, no matter from whom it is received.

The world to-day is full of deception, including false and seducing spirits of evil. The presence and abiding influence of the Holy Spirit is promised the people of God, that they may be able to discern that which is of God, that which is of man, and that which is of the Devil. It is said, "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."—1 Corinthians 2:11, 12. One chief reason why the world of the past and present rejects continued revelation, is because of their unregenerated condition. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him."—1 Corinthians 2:14. God gives the Holy Spirit "to them that obey him" (Acts 5:32). No man can expect to receive it by any other means, and no one can retain its guiding influence, except by love, humility, and purity of life. It was Job who declared, "But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding."—Job 32:8. The natural man is endowed with the light, "which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1:9.)

By obedience to the gospel we are "born again" from the natural into the spiritual, by which we are able to see and comprehend spiritual things. Without this new birth it would be impossible for us to comprehend or appreciate the value of continued revelation. Paul tells us that he did not receive the gospel from any man, but that he was taught it "by the revelation of Jesus Christ." In his natural unregenerated condition he could not possibly see the kingdom of God; he was struggling within the bondage of a false and man-made religion; when he was freed from that and was born again, God gave him an abundance of revelations by which he obtained a knowledge of him.

In his letter to the Ephesians he says, "Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you, making mention of you in my prayers; that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him."—Ephesians 1:15-17. Paul had received such knowledge and knew it was possible for others to receive the spirit of wisdom and revelation which would give them a knowledge of God. It is evidently a false theory that would attempt to teach otherwise.

The Holy Ghost is promised to "as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2:39.) And Jesus has declared, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God."—John 7:17.

If no other argument for continued revelation to the church and to individuals could be found, it would seem that this statement would be all sufficient. He that follows Christ "shall not walk in darkness but shall have the light of life." This is our plea: that our faith should cease to be an experiment; it should and may become a reality. Every person who follows Christ, who does his will, may have the personal satisfaction of his acceptance with God. If men seek after him, working righteousness, they will find him to-day as ever. Our gospel comes not in word only, but in power, in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance.

THE CORRECT MODE OF CHRISTIAN BAPTISM.

The first baptism that we read of under the Christian dispensation was John the Baptist. It is written of him,

There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.—John 1:6, 7.

Mark 1:1-5 speaks of him as God's messenger. Luke says:

The word of God came unto John the son of Zacharias in the wilderness. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.—Luke 3:2, 3.

Matthew records it thus:

This is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias.—Matthew 3:3.

From these scriptures the fact is established that John was sent and taught of God what to do and how to do it; hence it is reasonable to conclude that he knew his duty and how to perform it. Therefore whatever mode of baptism he preached and practiced must be the divine order, and since no other mode is taught in the New Testament for the remission of sins, we have no authority for the use of any other than that which God gave to John.

The baptism of Jesus by him will determine the mode ordained of God to be followed by all men; all other modes are not of God.

Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.—Matthew 3: 13.

And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water.—Matthew 3: 16. (See also Mark 1: 9, 10.)

These two witnesses declare that when Jesus was baptized he went up straightway out of the water, hence he must have gone down into it. Surely he would not go down into it if sprinkling, pouring, or making the sign of the cross had been the mode.

The Apostle Paul certainly understood the divine mode, and he says:

Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized unto Jesus Christ were baptized unto his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism unto death: that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life.—Romans 6: 3, 4.

In the fifth verse he speaks of baptism as a planting, "in the likeness of his death." No man leaves the seed on the top of the ground, uncovered; he buries it. So the true believer is buried with—like—Christ in baptism. See also Colossians 2: 10-12. This agrees with Christ's teachings to Nicodemus. See John 3: 3-8. In the fifth verse Christ declares the necessity of being "born again," and says:

Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God.

There never was a birth without a concealment, hence the body must be buried in the water, as Paul declares they were, and to be baptized or born of the Spirit our spirits must be overwhelmed with the Holy Ghost; thus the entire man is born again.

Paul says of Christ:

He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost.—Titus 3: 5.

Again:

Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word [according to the word].—Ephesians 5: 25, 26.

That John's baptism was Christian was evident from the fact that Christ honored it:

All the people that heard him, and the publicans, justified God, being baptized with the baptism of John. But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him.—Luke 7: 29, 30.

It was one of the means by which John was to prepare the way before Christ. Paul so acknowledges John's baptism. (See Acts 19: 4.)

In conclusion, if human learning can add any force to the word of God, the scholarship of the world is in favor of the argument that immersion in the water is the true mode of Christian baptism. The fact that they do not practice it is only evidence of the perverseness of the human mind.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT D. A. ANDERSON

AT OPENING SERVICES OF GRACELAND COLLEGE, SEPTEMBER 8, 1908.

PRESIDENT D. A. ANDERSON.

It is with some diffidence, Mr. Chairman, that I respond to your introduction. The responsibilities which I am compelled to assume in accepting the presidency of Graceland College seem to fall heavily upon me this morning. Not that I shall permit them to overburden me, for I remember that God requires only a reasonable service. Hence, I go forward in humility, seeking to do my full duty and trusting him for needed assistance.

I look upon our educational interests as being an important department of church work, and I feel that all departments should be interested in, and helpful to, each other. Without claiming any priority of right, I expect all to assist in this phase of the work, as in others, to the extent that it is possible.

One of our prominent educators, Doctor Dewey, says, "Education is life." This, to the mind of many, is the most adequate definition of education that has ever been enunciated. The inheritance we receive at birth gives us an existence which is the resultant of all the accumulated activities of our ancestry.

However favored we may be by nature, we must receive proper nurture in order to become individuals capable of rendering to society the service which it needs, and to God what he requires. Our life is made up of sensations from our environment and our responses thereto. Every influence exerted upon the individual plays an important role in his development. Education, as the coadjutor of nature, equips man for the most favorable reactions in a civilized community. Nature is the kind mother; the school, not destroying, but utilizing and transcending, the powers of nature, is the Alma Mater of civilization. Among the educative factors are the home, the street, the school, and the church. "The school can not send real men into society unless the home sends potential men into the school. Education can neither create nor endow, it can only develop. . . . Men are not made after the fashion of the factory, but of the garden."

"The transition from youth to manhood is 'where the brook and river meet.' The brook of delightful promise empties into the river of service. Out of the ear grows the full corn. The blossoming of youth becomes the fruitage of maturity."

The church has not fulfilled its mission to the youth, the street has exerted too great influence over them; some homes have not been as intelligently supervised as is necessary, nor have the schools reached the degree of excellence demanded of them. These several factors must be contributors to each other. There has been too much scattering of forces. They must be unified. So much isolation entails great loss of energy which might and should be conserved. To overcome this condition all these factors should be identified with life. The greatest teacher the world has ever known indicated his aims when he said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."

His teachings, and all teachings of value, result in a fuller life. The transformation of the lives of the disciples of Christ has been a wonder to the world. How different the lives of the inspired apostles from the monotonous activities of the fishermen of Galilee! We can not be as great teachers as was the Savior, but we shall endeavor to teach by example as well as by precept in such a way that the value of our work may be evidenced in the more abundant life of those who may be students.

If I understand the aim of Graceland it is development for greater efficiency in life's legitimate activities—intellectual, physical, moral, and spiritual excellence being the goal sought. We shall endeavor to see to it that our lives and teaching, as well as the environment of each individual student in our college, shall be such as to, in every way, conduce to this end. We realize that "morality and religion as dispositions of the heart and will can only be grown by the individual possessing them under the potent influence of suggestive patterns of righteousness and spirituality. . . . And the highest duty and privilege of the teacher is to be in whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report what he is willing for his pupils to become."

This much for our teaching; now to our needs. More room for our educational work, larger and better equipment, more nearly adequate facilities for caring for our students, and other things which we do not now enumerate come under this head. However, it is contrary to my policy to consent to launching any project which will incur additional indebtedness to the church. Nevertheless, I am strongly in favor of taking advanced steps as rapidly as can consistently be done.

Board of Trustees, faculty, students, and friends, I greet you with pleasure. I trust that our association may be such as will fulfill Graceland's mission.

I ask those who are students to remember that your presence here this morning is perhaps made possible only by the sacrifice of parents or friends. In using your opportunities do not be forgetful of the fact that these anxious hearts are centered here and that loving mothers and fathers are praying for your good. Let me urge you to fulfill their fondest hopes. Trusting that our endeavor may issue in a fruitage acceptable to God, let us labor together.

"UPON THIS ROCK I WILL BUILD MY CHURCH."

SERMON BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH, DELIVERED AT LAMONI STAKE REUNION, AUGUST 30, 1908.

(Reported by Estella Wight.)

The text for the hour's discussion we will find somewhere in the sixteenth chapter of the gospel according to Saint Matthew, which is very brief, and will not take you a great while to remember it: "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

A good deal of controversy is had in the world, and I think some among the Latter Day Saints, as to what the "rock" was. It is supposed by some that because the Savior said to Peter, "Thou art Peter," the word Peter coming from petros, meaning a rock, it would be built upon him as an officer called by the Savior, and as a consequence upon his successor, whoever he might be. But I am not going to bother much with the legendary teaching of the world.

I believe as the brother expressed it this afternoon, that our faith is defensible, and that all that we have need to do is to put ourselves in the way of receiving the necessary help and the proper support from Him who is the author of the truth. Those of you who are students of the Bible, and I suppose that this congregation is amply conversant with the Scriptures, will remember that this language was elucidated from the lips of the Savior because of answers that were made to him by the disciples when he asked them the question, "Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" Peter, with the number, presumed to answer him, and suggested that one man said he was John the Baptist; and another, one of the prophets; and another something else; no doubt presenting the various controversies that were going on among the religious as found in religions of the period.

This did not appear to satisfy the Savior, and so he put the question to them directly: "But whom say ye that I am?" I have an idea that he did not desire any speculative statement from them, and that he was persuaded they had some kind of an idea who he was. Peter assumed to answer him: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Another of the evangelists has the answer, "Thou art the Christ of God." And in another place the answer to a similar question is, "We believe in, and are sure that thou art Christ, the Son of God."

It is a pleasant study to take these different statements made by these evangelists and compare them. The central thought is the same; but it shows that in the presentation of it, or in the recording of it, they use slightly different terms, but I am not going to quarrel about that with anybody. It is enough to reflect that away back yonder in the olden times of the reformation when bigotry and persecution were rife, that two men differed in regard to this proposition, the difference being between them, as I understand it, that one of them said that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, and the other that he was the Christ, the living Son of God. How they succeeded in adjusting this difference I do not know, but it is immaterial. After Peter had answered his question in this form, the Savior said to him, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven. . . . And upon this rock will I build my church."

It is evident from this text that Jesus, at that time, had the intention of building a church, and everybody that knows anything about the composition of a church, understands that organization was intended evidently, and that this organization must have been enacted by reason of the formation and affirmation of tenets or principles of faith. Now one of the questions that interests myself and my brethren, all of them, is this: Was it to be considered an idle purpose? Was it simply the breathing of a fanatic? Was it the simple impulse of enthusiasm at the time, or was it the reflection of a determined purpose with the intent to put it upon record so that it should go down the stream of time, until time's work should cease upon the world? And I presume that all whose thoughts are directed to what is called the Christ idea of salvation will answer at once, It was not an idle statement. It was not the breathing of an impulse of a fanatic, a temporary impulse for the accomplishment of something that he may have designed; but that it was a deliberate statement by which this august Son of God has compromised himself with those people to whom he made this assertion, and that all who might subsequently listen to their teaching and become acquainted with them and with him as their Lord. And for the purposes of this hour, as the saying is, I am from Missouri, and I "want to be showed," and I want to ask questions, and desire to answer them unto myself, and unto others, if it be possible for me so to do.

What was it that was revealed? What was couched in that small word that they referred to? "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father who is in heaven." What was it? So understanding the expression, what was the effect as enunciated by Peter, authorized by Jesus, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"? A simple affirmation of the fact, putting it upon record as to the result of direct inspiration from God, the Father. "And upon this rock I will build my church."

As I look upon these lights, or as I think about the telephone with which communication is had to others away from these grounds; as I think upon the cities that are lighted with electric and with gas lights, I am forced to make an inquiry, or led to make an inquiry, What is it that gives the light? Is it that peculiar vapor that has evolved from the liquid in this lamp to which fire has access? Is it the gas that we touch with a match and turn on the current of the supply that makes the light? Is it the electrical current meeting with its proper resistance that makes the light? Or is it the copper wire, through which the current of electricity flows, or is it the pipe through which the gas that burns is conveyed? Or is it that peculiar combination of apparatus and wire by which that light is made to burn? That is the question.

I have heard from my boyhood, at different times, that this rock referred to is the "rock of revelation." But I can no more see an accurate connection, of secure deduction from the statements, and from that which is conserved by the voice of revelation, I can see no such strong relation between it and the light to which I have referred that will warrant me to put in the place of that which has been revealed the means by which the revelation is brought to man. I have asked the question of myself a great many times, Is it the conduit through which the water flows that we may characterize as the water? Is it that chain of pipe that carries the gas and the water, that carries the current of electricity that constitutes the revealed fact of the light? Is it? I have failed to answer that question, in that manner, satisfactorily to myself. I have heard eloquent men undertake to show that it was the "rock of revelation," that Jesus Christ intended to represent upon that occasion. I think differently from them, with all respect to them and the conclusions which they have reached.

I believe I read in modern revelation somewhere of an individual that was called the support of Israel—"the Shepherd, the stone of Israel." I believe I read somewhere in the scriptures that the stone that was rejected of the builders became the head of the corner. I believe that I read somewhere in the New Testament scriptures that Jesus Christ was that foundation upon which the church was built. I believe that the Apostle Peter says that no other foundation can be, or has been laid, than the "foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Now my opinion is my conclusion from the consideration of this text, from an examination of the fact, the statement made by Peter in answer to Christ, and Christ's answer to him, and the assertion made by him that "upon this rock I will build my church," that it was upon the imperishable character of him who is the shepherd and stone of Israel. And when I read in the Book of Mormon that no man can be saved except by faith upon Jesus Christ, when I read in the New Testament Scriptures that salvation comes to man through no other way, and take up the lines and read in several places where the promise is made directly to the believer that the Father and Son will take up their abode with that believer; when I read that the Spirit's inspiration coming to different individuals shall testify of this man, Jesus Christ, as to who he is, and all this, I make my conclusion that the rock referred to was the fact that Jesus was the Christ. Solid, sound, and something absolutely secure. A foundation that has been laid by the Almighty, and by the concurrence of this assertion, and himself and the Father sending the Holy Spirit to confirm it, had been to effect in those people confidence that in his work for the children of men, he would at some time build his church. Now was he doing it? Did he begin it? Has he continued to keep it up? Is it our province to find such a church? Are we just in expecting that one here to-day in our midst? If any there be, is it any one of these various churches of which we have popular demonstrations that meet in those places where the spires reach heavenward? And if so, which one is it? One thing is certainly sure, that whatever may be your difference of opinion with me, or from me, any one of you, if you have any latent hope within you that when the time of life shall have expired, when you shall be called upon to drop the earthly warfare, to lay down the weapons of this earthly conflict and take up an abode elsewhere, you are to be received into some place of pleasantness and peace, any one who has an expectation of that character, trusting it to have been made possible for them by virtue of the inspiration of Jesus Christ, must agree with me that Jesus Christ must not have proved to be a false prophet anyhow in that generation. Now, I say, if you can reach the conclusion that Christ was mistaken, that he made a mistake, and that he wrought unfaithfully, that he wrought unavailingly, and that the great mission upon which he was sent has proved to be a failure, I would certainly drop my every effort to preach to the children of men the saving grace of that Son of God. But every time I take up a portion of sacred writ, every time I undertake to delve into what some may have supposed to be the mysteries of the life and character of Jesus Christ, I am always led to this one unavoidable conclusion: that God intended to save the world through Jesus Christ by making them acquainted with him.

I read somewhere that a certain class of people at a certain time, will say unto him, "Have we not prophesied in thy name? Have we not done many miracles in thy name?" And that he will look upon them coldly, and according to the King James translation will say, "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." But the King James translation seems to me to be faulty there, for Jesus himself must have known and been well acquainted with those that were for and those that were against him; therefore I am prepared, as was our brother this afternoon, to accept the better definition, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity, ye never knew me." That coincides with a statement of the prophet found away back yonder when Israel was gone away from God, when he charged them directly with swearing falsely whenever they said the Lord their God liveth. He said, "You swear falsely if you said your God liveth." How did that happen? Was God living? Yes. But did they know it? They could not testify of their own knowledge. They had wandered away from God and the work which he had appointed them to do. They had gone into devious ways. The knowledge of God had been taken from them, and as a consequence they had gone from him, and they did not know him, and though they did swear that the Lord their God liveth, they did swear falsely. More importance attaches to the answer to this question in an argumentative or logical form, or one of plain common sense, than one might at first suppose; because if there is not an effort being put forth, if this Holy Ghost, who is and was and will be for evermore, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, that is imperishable, unapproachable, the one mighty and strong, the one great Redeemer of the world,—whatever term of adulation or greatness you choose to attach to him it matters not; if this same man is not now engaged in an effort to build his church, his promise has proved to be futile, we must write him among the failures of the past and call him a false prophet. You can not afford it. You can not afford it, and must not for a single moment presume to entertain the thought that Jesus was or is but a false prophet. If you could and should at once conclude it, every prop upon which the so-called Christian economy rested is swept out from under the Christain's hope for salvation and he must inevitably fall into despair. Sweep the knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, shown by the revelations of the Father to them who accept the philosophy, that listen to the truth, abide in the doctrine, and receive that which has been promised, the gift of the Holy Ghost—sweep that away from this Christian economy, and there is little of it left.

Now you must conclude (for I am satisfied and can feel that you will do so, for some of you have heard us preach for years and have not accepted our philosophy)—I can feel this acquiescence in your minds, that he who serves this man Jesus Christ must have that knowledge somewhere, somehow, and the truth of his church. He has said upon that rock He will build his church, and he must continue to build it, or begin something and complete it, or this promise is a failure. What are we to look for?

I can remember when I first began to preach, I used a kind of crude illustration. It was this: I send my boy out to look for a certain house, and send him along the road, and I tell him that it's about so far off, and I tell him to go and find it. The lad looks at me a little bit and he says, "Papa, what kind of a house must I look for?"

"Oh, it's a house."

"Well," he says to me, "there's a good many houses on that road, how shall I know this one when I get to it?"

The little fellow starts away, and he goes off in the search, and he comes across a house. That must be the place, and he asks somebody about it, and they tell him, "Oh, yes."

He goes across the street and he asks another man, and he points to another house, a different one which does not look at all like the other place. And so he comes back to me afterwards, and he says, "Papa, tell me what kind of a house I am to look for?" And I tell him that as he goes down the street when he comes to one that is painted partly white and partly yellow, to walk up to the door and ask who resides there, and if he receives a certain answer to return to me and tell me. Now I have given him a kind of definite understanding of what he is to look for, and he comes back to me with a certain kind of satisfaction.

Now, mind you, this promise is not upon this rock will I build many churches; it is not upon this rock will I build the Latter Day Saint Church. Now you can not make exception to my using that term, and that is not the statement, but "Upon this rock I will build my church." Whenever any man tells me by the word church there is not meant some kind of a mutual organization of men which shall in their system of faith and in the workings of their church and association be called in name as the church of Christ, and receiving the ministrations of his Spirit directly, I must be excused from accepting that conclusion, and why? Why, because presuming upon that which he had said in reference to it, that he authorized the sending out of a band of men to preach, and as our brother the other night said, "How can they preach except they be sent?" and who is authorized to send them? If it is Christ that is to build the church, he is the one that is to send those that are to preach him, and if he sends those who are to preach him, then he must support the statements which they make, if they comport with the commission by affirming that for which they are sent.

I know there are business men listening to me to-night, and I say to you that when you send out agents to accomplish a business of your own, you send them within restricted lines, and they are not authorized to misrepresent you. If they do they can not bind you; but in order to present their doing so by misconceiving or misrepresenting you with what you have sent them to do, you fix it up in a written contract as to how far the province of their agency goes, and while they keep within the lines of that province of their agency, they bind you, and you are under obligation to stand by them; to pay the prices which they offer, and to take the goods which they purchase, or to accept the price they bring for that which you sent them out to sell, or to do the business you sent them upon. You are bound, and they can compel a fulfillment of the obligation upon your part in their favor.

How about this church, and how about the one that is going to build it? Does he choose his own agents? Does he choose his own ministers? Has he done it? Turn to the second chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and read the closing portion of the chapter where they, referring to the disciples, were "praising God, and having favor with all the people. And the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Now it is not the doctrine of predestination or foreordination. It is a simple statement that those men went out, and in the pursuit of their agency they preached Christ, and that by virtue of thus preaching Christ thousands heard, believed, and obeyed, and being ministered unto, they became members in the great church of which these men were chosen representatives. I used to wonder why it was that these men could stand such awful persecution, and I used to wonder what I would do; but when I became engaged in preaching this mission of Jesus Christ, and became satisfied in regard to the answer of this question of the Master, and to that statement made by Peter, and that he had promised that upon a certain rock he would build his church, I became perfectly contented with the sentiment of his answer; for with this position, assumed by him that it was a fact that Jesus was the Christ, that constituted the rock, and that he proposed in his ministration to bring to pass unto those who heard and obeyed, the giving to them a knowledge that he was the Christ.

I join with my brother who spoke this afternoon and his wonderful democracy of no special favorites in this regard of the Almighty to the people upon the earth, that the promise is universal, that he gives to every one, and I know why he emphasized that every one. Now that's precisely the theme of the commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," and the promise is not made to them that believe not, but to those that believe. There's the promise, to every one that believeth.

Now my inquiry is, How does God propose to make man acquainted with that fact? If he continues to build his church, then these intellectual minds are moved to become living integral parts of his church. If he prescribes what they must do, then he must somehow arouse and enthuse within their beings such a consciousness that he is the Christ that they may become lively stones, individual stones in the great building which he has erected. How shall he do it? You go into our cities, and on examination of the buildings you find there you will see a uniformity of the building material either on the outside or on the inside, all in uniformity with the design, and so there is in the construction, in the gathering together of the material into one building. You can not find that the architect or the artist has made a mistake; but in it there is a symmetry about the whole thing.

Now this church is to be composed of individual, integral persons. Every one must fit in its place. Every one must bear a part of the entire building, must have such a conception of it, must have such an understanding of it, must have such a spiritual intuition of it, that they are in perfect accord with every other portion of it from the spire,—or from the ground—well, I was going to say from the ground work up, and I will just use that, I think it is the better term. Our time is passing, and I do not want to talk to you too long to-night, but I want to get before you, if I can, two or three ideas about it.

I believe I read somewhere in the fourteenth and the fifteenth of John in reference to the Holy Ghost, that when the Holy Ghost which is the Comforter "is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." In another place he is called the Spirit of truth. Read the twenty-sixth verse of the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters of John's gospel and you will find this understanding. Now here are three (and you know I am dealing in three's to-day, and here is our three-fold composition): It is the Holy Ghost. You ask what the Holy Ghost is, and I tell you it is the Comforter. You ask what the Comforter is, and I tell you it is the Spirit of truth. Now you have scriptural warrant for it. It is the complete truth, the absolute truth, the unadulterated truth, any forcible adjectives that you can get to make it satisfactory to yourself,—it's the truth, as our brother said to-day.

Now Jesus proposes to build upon the truth, not upon error, but upon the truth. What else is there now that God could give better, surer, stronger, more competent to build up and to make steadfast to those who hear the message and who obey, than the consciousness within their souls that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God? What one single thing could give a more complete character of steadfastness than that? Is it possible for us to conceive of anything in our religious experience that would so completely fit us and qualify us to withstand the temptations that surround us, to withstand the evils to which we are subjected, to maintain our integrity and our proneness to always stand up and maintain the truth under any and all conditions? Is there any one single thing that God could do for us that would be superior in itself, or in its results, than this one conviction that Jesus is the Christ? I know of no other thing so complete in its character, that gives me so much satisfaction, that places me more strongly upon the pedestal of faith, upon the broad platform of universal good to mankind, "Peace on earth, and good will toward men," than the one conviction that Jesus is the Christ. And when it reached my soul, I said to myself, and so I have tried to tell my fellow men, Whatever there may be in store for me, whatever may now or in the future be awaiting my coming, one thing God has done for me, either for my good hereafter, or for my condemnation, and that is to show to me and to make me conscious that Jesus is his Son, and that he sent him as the Redeemer of the world.

He has provided a means by which this may reach every son and daughter born into the kingdom of God, so called, or into the church of the living Lord. It is done for one in one way; it is done for another in another way, and it is of such a character that it compels in itself a building up through the perfecting of the individual in such a way that it forms a component part of the completed whole.

I once read a book, larger than this one I hold in my hand, gotten up by a learned philosopher, and which undertook to prove that we know because we become conscious of. It was given to me by a learned gentleman who had finished his education over in the town of Dusseldorf, in Germany, having gone from the town of Plano, where I used to live, and spending a number of years there in Germany. He came back an educated man, with every particle of confidence in the Christian religion driven away by the education that he had received over there. And he thought that probably he could put something in my hands that would win me from my faith in Christianity, and he handed me that book, asking me to read it. As I took it and looked at it I said to him, "Mr. Cook, I'll tell you what that book is." I did not open it and had not read a page. I said, "That book is a learned disquisition to prove that we know because we know."

He laughed at me and asked if I would read it. I told him yes, and so I took it with me, and after I had read it about three fifths through, I came across a certain page, on which the author had used the terms a priori, meaning "from the beginning." Five separate times it occurred on that page, and just about two thirds of the way down I found this remarkable statement, "We know because we become conscious of." When I took the book back to Professor Cook, I asked him if he would tell me the difference between the two statements, "We know because we know," and "We know because we become conscious of." And he took the book without a single word of assent, and smiled as if his object had been defeated. I thought it was.

Whenever a woman obeys the gospel of the Son of God, and has received the gift of faith, or the word of knowledge, or the word of wisdom, or the helps and governments mentioned in the fourth chapter of Ephesians, and has received the testimony from the Lord that Jesus is the Christ, and the doctrine is true; whenever a man obeys the word, and comes into contact with this religion, as Jesus and his apostles did, becomes obedient thereto, and receives by the ministrations of the Spirit the word of wisdom, the word of knowledge, the Spirit of faith, prophecy, or the interpretation of tongues, helps, and governments, that man receives a communication from God that is equivalent to making him conscious that Jesus is the Christ. Not all receive of these various gifts, but God, through the Holy Ghost, or through the beloved Spirit, gives to every man severally as he will, according to the peculiar organization of the individual, according to the peculiarity of his wants and necessities. He puts the necessary evidences in his church to be given according to the different peculiarities of its members.

I remember one time and place I heard a sister bemoaning, "Oh, my leanness! Oh, my leanness!" and as attention was called to her she said that she was not conscious that the Lord had accepted her, and her spirit and soul were mourning. I arose, after she sat down, and asked this question: Who was it that just a little while ago was stricken unto death apparently? Her children had gathered around her, she was propped up in her bed while the approach of death was very near, and almost with the death pallor upon her forehead and her face. Two elders of the church were called in, and in the semi-darkness of the room one of them took the oil-bottle and anointed her and they laid their hands upon her and administered to her, and in twenty minutes her daughter-in-law took the chair from behind her back, supported with pillows, and she laid down, and the elders found her the next morning at eight o'clock sleeping sweetly, and she arose from her bed and received her breakfast and went about her business. When I called her attention to this the woman arose to her feet and asked God's pardon, and she asked the pardon of her brethren that she had been so blind as not to see that God, through Jesus Christ, had remembered her, and that she had received of this gift of faith, or this spirit of faith, and had been brought back from the confines of the grave.

Upon another occasion I went down into Mills County, my brother Alexander and myself, and we found there one of the good sisters of the church whom the physicians had given up to die. Gloom was upon the household. Darkness reigned. We could feel it sensibly as we entered into the house about eight o'clock in the evening. Her relatives had gathered to pay their last respects, and walked with quiet step lest they might disturb her in the hour of death. I met the physician as he was going out of the door and told him that myself and my brother were officers of the church to which the sister belonged, and had been sent for to administer one of the rites of the church, and asked him if he had any objections to our performing the ordinance. He gave his consent and said, "I am free to say to you, that if that nervous condition could be overcome, her chances for life are just as good as mine or yours."

I thought I recognized what the difficulty was that was beyond his reach, but he did not like to give me a sanction of the exercise of our rites.

But my brother and myself went in and anointed her with oil, and as we laid our hands upon her head I had that spiritual intuition that there was something resting upon the mind of that woman, that if it could be understood and could be explained, she would not only live, but she would live happily and contentedly.

I made inquiry the next morning, and found her sitting up and her sister combing her hair, and she looked fresh and bright. Her sickness had gone. The Spirit had been present with her. I sat down by her side, and I learned that an elder in preaching in the schoolhouse near, had been indiscreet enough to say that unless they had received one of the outward manifestations, such as prophecy, speaking in tongues, or interpretation of tongues, they had not been accepted of God, and they had not received the birth of the Spirit. The poor woman had never spoken in tongues, had never spoken in prophecy, and there had been no such manifestations in her case, and she mourned that her effort was not accepted of God. I sat down by her and talked to her of the manifestations of the Spirit as the Apostle Paul might have talked from his statement made in the twelfth chapter of Corinthians and the fourth of Ephesians, and it was not long till the light of intelligence came to her, and she comprehended what I had to tell her; for if there ever was a woman that had received that acceptance from God, it was that one. She had received help, she had received a consciousness, but she had not been able to recognize it from the description that the elder had given. I want to correct, if I can, such a misunderstanding as that.

But again, there is one thing more, and this is the last that I will notice. It is a peculiar, a strangely peculiar, effect that is wrought upon the soul of the individual, a conviction that comes in such a character and in such a way that it is absolutely irresistible, and yet the person can not point out the hour, or the second, or the minute in which that strange conviction came and he was able to say, "I know. I know because I have become conscious of it."

Let me give you one instance in my own experience: Before I united with the church I tried to be skeptical. I am partially so now. I do not believe in accepting everything upon first presentation without thought. I must see something that is of worth in it. I was not satisfied with regard to the resurrection. My doubts of the existence of a God had been disposed of. I became satisfied that the world had come into existence by design, and to the Designer must be accorded all the qualifications and power of infinite wisdom, knowledge, and goodness; for all creation that I met with anywhere was indicative of the fact that God had a design for the good of all, and that those dwelling upon the face of the earth would be expected to fill that design of their creation under his continual goodness.

This resurrection I could not understand. But when I went up to Plano, in 1865, I was called upon to preach two funeral-services for two dear daughters, sisters, one dying at the first of the month of May and the other the last part of the month. When this first service came to me, and I was called upon to preach the funeral-sermon, I did not know what to do. I went to God, my Father, and asked him to instruct me what to do, and the voice of the Spirit came to me saying, "You take the place which is appointed for you, and from which you are expected to make the effort, and you will receive in the hour that you need." I did so, and when I arose to speak, the resurrection of the dead was clear to my mind from the reading of the Book of Mormon, and I was not only satisfied with the spiritual statement, but I was absolutely satisfied; for if Jesus was raised from the dead, by just that same power that raised the stricken body that paid the penalty upon the cross, so also could every being be lifted up and raised from the confines of the tomb. The same power, the same authority. I scarcely needed the statement of the Apostle Paul, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies." And from that time to this the resurrection has been clear to me so far as it is possible for a man in mortality to understand it, with no better qualifications of mind and soul than I have.

Again, I was sitting one time in a schoolhouse in which we were holding our services up at Bro. Israel Roger's. Close by my side sat Bro. Charles Williams. Some of you older brethren will remember him. Bro. Charles Williams was a man of iron will, and a man so composed and so calm that if you would torture him, you would not be able to wring a tear from him, nor a groan.

As we were sitting there a brother arose in the midst and began to speak in tongues, one of the most beautiful tongues I ever listened to in my life, and you can realize the sensation that was within me as I listened to it; and to my astonishment I heard a voice, clear, thrilling, and distinct, "The Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity." I looked startled, the man was still speaking in tongues, Bro. Williams had not turned his head, but as I looked at him he was crying like a child, and as he turned to me he said, "I have heard that 'except ye become as a little child, ye can not enter into the kingdom of heaven,' but I never knew what it was to feel like a little child before," crying like his heart would break.

Again, as I turned my attention to what was being done, I heard the voice clear, plain, distinctly saying, "The Book of Mormon is of divine authenticity," and with it came such power of the Spirit that I became conscious that that book was intended as a witness, as I tried to show this morning, a witness unto at least the latter-day Israel, of what God intended to do for the children of men. And so, my brothers, my sisters, you who have received something of that character, it is by this knowledge that Jesus is the Christ, and in and by which you may confidently assert it, though you may not be able to point out the hour, nor the exact time, that you became satisfied in your soul that Jesus is the Christ and the doctrine is true. Maintain it, and you are in the province of the fulfillment of the statement made by the Master, "Upon this rock I will build my church."

POLYGAMY.

Where, when, and by whom was it originated? We read in Genesis, chapter three, that God made a man, and that he took one of his ribs and some flesh, and made a woman, and presented her to Adam as his wife. Adam said, "This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh: . . . Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife [not wives]: and they shall be one flesh."

God had told them to multiply and replenish the earth; so not very long after that Adam and Eve had quite a family, and among them were two boys that made offerings to God, and the offering of one was accepted, and the other was not. Cain, whose offering was not accepted by the Lord, got mad about it. God told him if he did well he would accept him. One day when he, Cain, was in a field with his brother, Abel, he rose up and killed him. God brought him to account for it, and told him he was cursed from the earth. Then he went from the presence of God to a land called the land of Nod, east from Eden. How far we do not know; but, it seems, so far that Cain and his people had no intercourse with the balance of Adam's family any more. Cain took one of his nieces with him as his wife. Here in the land of Nod he and his people built a city, after they had multiplied considerable it seems. We see, in Genesis 4: 19, that Lamech, one of Cain's family, took two wives, whose names were Adah and Zillah. Here is the first account of polygamy. It is self-evident that God did not reveal the doctrine to Cain or his family; for he had no communication with any of them. He had not sent any of his servants to preach to them. They were away off by themselves in darkness, black without and within, under the control of the Devil. So it is evident the Devil gave them a revelation to practice polygamy.

God always acts like himself, and so does the Devil. God and Christ have said that man should cleave unto his wife, not wives. The Devil and man have said that man can have two or more wives at the same time. We see that some of God's servants, since the Devil introduced the abominable doctrine, have practiced it; but without any authority from God.

Since we have found the origin of the doctrine, we will notice in a brief manner the modern revival of the abominable doctrine. We have a revelation authorizing and justifying it. It is no trouble for us to see from whence this modern revelation came. It is evident it came from the same source that the other came from that caused Lamech to take two wives. It is a reproduction in character. From this time on, I aim to hit the serpent on the head; for I have more confidence in our ability to kill the snake by cutting its head off, than by chopping its tail off.

"Oh, but," say those who are in sympathy with the abominable doctrine, "why don't you do the work Abraham did, if you are the children of Abraham?" It seems to me that such persons think that about all that Abraham did that was worthy of imitation was the practice of polygamy. But the fact is, that is about all that Abraham did that was wrong. "Well, but," say these same people, "don't you believe Joseph Smith was a prophet?" I say, "Yes." They say, "He gave the revelation on polygamy in 1843." To make a long matter short, I say, It does not matter through whom it came; it was from the same source that the one was coming through Cain's family, and there is no room for a doubt as to where it originated. See! see! see! It commenced to be practiced in a murderer's family, one who had entered into a covenant with the Devil to do whatever the Devil told him to do. God's law has always been, "Cleave unto your wife," not wives. Be not divorced from her for any cause except fornication. The Devil says, Take two or more wives. Man says, Divorce your wife or wives for a great many causes.

I say, in concluding this article, Let us put our trust in God, and do his commandments, and we will be saved from sin and its consequences.

E. W. NUNLEY.

But more subtle are the dangers of the aristocracy of wealth—the way in which it is to reach us and to attack our government and its institutions and control them. Of these we know nothing, for it is a thing of yesterday. There has not been time enough to know it. I can remember when there was but one man in the neighborhood of Boston, Mr. Cushing of Watertown, who was even suspected of being a millionaire. I used to hear it discussed in my boyhood: "Do you suppose, now, that Cushing has really got a million dollars? I tell you a million dollars is a great deal of money. One could not have as much as a million dollars." What is a million dollars now in the regions of our modern Chambers of Commerce? Respectable poverty.—Thomas W. Higginson.

INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY.

We were waiting at a railroad station, a large company of us, with the train away behind time. We expressed our opinion as to railroad travel in general, and dusty, grimy, uncomfortable waiting-rooms in particular. Two mothers interested me. One had in charge a pretty, restless girl of twelve, perhaps. The other was in charge of her sturdy boy, aged about eight. He had found a seat for his mother, carefully dusting it beforehand with a bit of paper that he took from his small pocket. He abundantly rinsed the one drinking-glass and brought it filled with water, to refresh her. He set her small grip close beside her, and laid her palm leaf fan within reach. These things all attended to, he walked to the door and looked up and down the road, glancing frequently back to his charge with a protective air that said: "Don't be troubled, I shall not leave you."

His glance was always greeted by the little mother with a smile, as she leaned back in her chair and rested as well as she could.

Not less weary-looking was the woman with a young daughter in charge, but there the similarity ended. How that mother did worry! "Charlotte, dear, don't lean your elbows on the window seat! Don't you see how you soil your sleeves?"

"Oh, Charlotte! don't go outside; stay here with me."

"But, mamma, it's so hot here! I don't want to."

"Well, then, stay right by the door. Don't for anything step on the track; the trains keep coming and going all the time."

The girl went out, and presently seated herself on the edge of a handcar standing on the track.

"If I were you I wouldn't sit there," volunteered a man who was working about the steps. "You'll get your dress all black off the wheels; and, besides, one of them trunks might topple over and hurt you."

"Mamma can see me, I guess," said the girl, "and she doesn't care." So she sat still and swung her feet. Only for a few minutes. Then the mother, unable to trust her charge longer out of sight, came to the door. There followed exclamations of dismay and gentle reproach.

"How could you sit in that dangerous place?"

"Why, mamma, you didn't tell me not to sit on the handcar," said the girl, listlessly. "And I thought you could see me, anyway. I won't sit there again." And she disappeared outside once more. The mother went back to her seat, but very soon rose up again.

"Do sit still and rest yourself!" urged a woman who was with her. "Charlotte can't get into anything dreadful here. You told her to keep off the track, didn't you?"

"Yes, I told her that," said the tired mother, "but there are other things; she is only a child, you know. I don't feel easy with her out of my sight." She went forward and stood in the doorway watching her irresponsible daughter.

Meantime the sturdy boy of eight came and leaned over his charge. "Would you mind my walking up and down the platform a few times?" he asked.

"No," she said, promptly, with smiling lips and eyes, "I know you won't step off the platform; mother trusts you."

I can't think of a temptation that would have taken that boy's feet from that platform. He was a responsible being and his mother trusted him. But the little girl did not know that she was being selfish, and babyish, and learning to be untrue; because manifestly she had been trained to lean upon her mother; to use her mother's judgment and conscience and common sense, and never her own.

It is one of the hard lessons that we mothers have to learn: this giving over of a measure of responsibility into our children's hands; training them to be accountable not simply to us, but to themselves for their words and acts.

The mother at the railroad station is by no means alone in her blunder. Dear me! the name of such blunderers is Legion!

I made one of a number of guests at a dinner table one day, where there were several children. One mother was in misery because her little girl, eleven years old, was at a side table with other children, and she could not catch her eye to telegraph a negative with regard to certain dishes. Not that the child did not know that her mother disapproved of them; or at least had disapproved of them but the day before—but a child trained to assume no responsibility over herself must be always having "line upon line." What she could not do yesterday she thinks—if she thinks at all—that she may perhaps do to-day. At least she will attempt it and see whether or not her mother will stop her.

Young Robert, who has inherited a delicate constitution, tramped about at recess without his rubbers and took cold. Why? Because his mother had not said that day, "Be sure and wear your rubbers"; and the other "fellows" didn't wear any, so he didn't. To be sure he knows that he always has a cough after getting his feet wet, and he knew that the ground was wet; but that doesn't matter; he has not been trained to think, nor to assume responsibility; his mother issued no command that day, and she is the person to be blamed. Boys of that stamp are given to doing what "the other fellows" do.

A multitude of illustrations crowd before me. The world is filled with young and older people who are following the multitude, without sense of personal power. Such have ever on their lips: "They did so," or "They didn't do so," as excuse for conduct. Never a phrase indicating that the words, "I ought," "I ought not," have taken root in their hearts to blossom into action.

Individual responsibility in little things—if there are any little things,—holding the child accountable, so far as may be, for his doings and goings and sayings; training him to live "As seeing,"—not his mother's eye always upon him, not his father's warning glance reaching after him, human eyes can not do this; human influence is limited—but "As seeing Him who is invisible"—this and this only will develop true manhood, true womanhood.

One Bible verse, world-wide in its application, intense in its individuality, should be rooted deep in the heart of each little child; rooted and cared for and cultured that it may yield afterwards its tremendously important fruits. That verse is:

"Each one of us shall give account of himself to God."—"Pansy" in the American Mother.

Questions on October Reading.

In what way does responsibility strengthen character? How may individual responsibility be taught to a child? How early may this training begin? In what ways? What do you imagine had been the early training of this boy? What of the confidence between him and his mother? How would this training affect him in his manhood? What was wrong in the mother's dealing with the little girl at the station? Is it never necessary to caution a child about dusty window sills, etc., in traveling? What would you think of the suggestion to provide a dust cloth, making the child responsible for its use in such places as would come in contact with its clothing? How would this add to the comfort of the child and his traveling companions on the train? What advantage would there be in avoiding the unnecessary, "Don't"? Is not a suggestion by which a difficulty may be avoided, usually better than a simple command to keep out of a difficulty? What loss would there be if another did the dusting for the child? How may children be taught to feel responsibility about their own safety? What makes "irresponsible" children? What is the effect upon a child of trusting him? What must be the preparation for this trust? To whom should a child feel himself accountable? What effect will individual responsibility have upon a child's health? What place should the words "I ought," and "I ought not" have in a child's conscience? What Bible verse contains instruction that will help to impress the importance of these words?

STANBERRY, Missouri.

President Smith: Bro. H. N. Hansen has continued his labors in the city of Copenhagen and baptized two. He does not feel as if great results would follow his efforts in the near future, nor does he think it wise to abandon them at present. He says others are somewhat interested and may unite with us after a while.

Bro. P. T. Andersen has opened up some places in the vicinity of Horsens, and had a number out to hear him. He was at Aalborg when last heard from. Some there are quite interested, and I was in hopes they would unite with the church this summer. They may do so. I have instructed Bro. Andersen to continue his efforts there. Both Bro. Hansen and Bro. Andersen report war and contention in the Brighamite camps of both places, and that the elders have a hard time to keep their people.

Bro. Muceus has had large meetings in a new place, Kragero, Norway, and had good meetings in other places, one being baptized. The Saints at Eidsvold have purchased a lot and aim to build a small chapel in the near future.

Bro. J. H. Hansen reports a hard time at Guttenburg, Sweden, on account of labor troubles. Saints have held their own but have seen hard times. He was to start work in another part of the country where prospects were good for the work, and I expect to hear of good results before winter.

Brn. Okerlind and Lundquist have been quite successful in their efforts in Eskildsteena and vicinity; have opened up a number of new places, and five had given their names for baptism, and I have learned indirectly that they are now members of the church. Bro. Lundquist wants to be released on account of ill health.

Bro. C. A. Swenson has been very active in the south of Sweden; has baptized one, his mother, whom he says is quite an influential woman and has been a good church worker for a number of years. He thinks she will do good for the cause. He has lately sent me a well-written tract which I favor publishing if means can be had for that purpose.

For a report of what has been done in Germany, I am indebted to Bro. Kippe, of Berlin. He informs me that Bro. Smolny, a priest, has baptized five in Selecia, and that he had been down there to confirm them and hold meetings with them. Thus we have another opening in Germany, and I wish we had men to direct the work there. Bro. Kippe does not have much hope of anything being done in Berlin for the present. I think the rural districts and smaller towns of South Germany will be a better field.

PETER ANDERSON.

GAY, West Virginia, September 6, 1908.

Editors Herald: This is my first attempt to write to your columns. I read so many good letters and sermons from all parts of the world, and realizing the great blessings and privileges that God has blessed the Saints with, of corresponding with one another, I want to say that I am trying to so live that when the time comes to be weighed in the balance I may not be found wanting. I am getting old; have passed through many trials, and have enjoyed many great blessings. I know this great and marvelous work is of God. There are many deceivers gone out into the world. I have some writings here, and want to send those ring prayers and this revelation [Blakeley, Chicago,] I received last February one year ago. I have received another ring prayer copy. I do not think God works in and through ring prayers. I should like to have some instruction on this through the HERALD.

ELIZABETH JEFFRIES.

CHETEK, Wisconsin, September 2, 1908.

Dear Saints: Many times I have thought to write, but never until now have I decided to do so. It has been a long time since I have seen anything in the HERALD from this part, and perhaps there are some that would be glad to know that there are still a few Saints left here carrying on the great work of the Lord, or trying to, with a great many difficulties at times. It seems sad to think that at one time this was a flourishing branch, with bright prospects for the future; but many of the Saints have moved away and many have grown cold and indifferent. We have the Lord to thank that he has remained with a few, and, dear Saints, I can say that God has poured out his Spirit upon the people of this place, and we are all trying to come up higher and higher, as we have been commanded so many times.

There are many of the elders that we would like to hear from through the HERALD, as we eagerly await the approach of this valuable paper each week. It is a grand thing to read the letters of the Saints, and my eyes are filled with tears as I read of the many trials some have to endure, and especially the elders as they are out battling for the truth. It did me good to read the letter one of the sisters had in the last week's HERALD of how the sisters could make it pleasant for the elders by inviting them to their homes and making it pleasant for them. I hope to do more in this way in the future, as well as in all ways pertaining to the gospel work.

I have been made to rejoice and felt God's Holy Spirit as I have read the prophecies in the HERALD and Ensign. I only hope there will be more of them published, for I feel, dear Saints, that we need to know the words of the Lord and live by every word that proceedeth out of his mouth.

Bro. W. P. Robinson is our district president, and I can say he has been a faithful worker in his office and at this place; we hope and pray he will be as faithful in the future; he has tried his best to make this place delightful in the sight of God, and I hope we may see our brother back here before long, and, there are many other elders we would gladly welcome back who have preached the gospel in its fullness at this place.

At the conference at Porcupine last spring my husband was called as a priest, and also my brother, James Mair, Jr., was called as teacher, through Bro. W. P. Robinson, and they were ordained at the two-day meeting held at Chetek on the following Saturday and Sunday. I feel that they both have a great work to do, and am glad they have lived faithfully, and that the Lord has been pleased to call them into his work.

Dear Saints, I can say I know this work is of God, for in the silent hours of the night God has given me testimonies of this work and has revealed unto me many things concerning the destruction of this earth, and other things which I am thankful for. I only hope to live faithfully, that I may receive more knowledge from time to time.

Ever praying for the advancement of God's work and the redemption of Zion, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. JOHN MCGINNIS.

STANBERRY, Missouri, September 10, 1908.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have contributed anything for the columns of our good church paper, but it has not been on account of a lack of interest. The work in the Nodaway District seems to be in as good a condition as ever.

I had the privilege of attending my first reunion at Guilford from August 10 to 19, which was a spiritual feast to me, though I only attended a few days. Bishop E. L. Kelley, Heman C. Smith and Peter Anderson, of the Twelve, Brn. Harpe, Day, Gunsolley, Pickering,—all added strength to the reunion and gave us some fine discourses under the influence of the Holy Spirit which made one rejoice to know that we were numbered with the Saints of God. Last, but not least, we would not forget to mention the fact that during the reunion Bro. Charley P. Faul, that good-natured and affable, rotund bachelor, of DeKalb County, was present, shaking hands with the Saints and inviting them to attend the Stewartsville reunion. I wish we had a few more brethren like him; as he belongs to the "sunshine band."

Bro. F. M. Bass and wife, who came here from New Florence, Missouri, are quite a help to us in the work. On Monday, September 7, the writer had the privilege of leading his youngest daughter into the waters of baptism, where she was "buried with Christ," in the presence of several who gathered to witness the solemn and touching ordinance of the Lord's church. May the Lord bless Sr. Cobush, as she has passed through great affliction. This makes three that have been baptized here this summer, Bro. Anderson baptizing two young boys on July 22.

We have some fine prayer-meetings, notwithstanding the Evil One is doing his best to destroy the work.

We learn that a Sr. Haguewood is living out at Mt. Pleasant, near this place, and we expect to call on her in the near future.

I have been doing more preaching this summer than ever before, which has been mostly in private houses, and I feel that God has wonderfully blessed me. Last Sunday night I spoke on the subject, "The safe way, or what must I do to be saved?" with good liberty. To God be all the praise. Ever pray for me that I may be faithful.

Your brother,

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

MELROSE, Massachusetts, September 8, 1908.

Editors Herald: It is some years since I wrote you, but desire to say to many I have ministered the word to in times past, that I am still in the faith. Some time ago I spent three weeks at Dennisport on old Cape Cod and found a royal welcome among the Saints and friends. I held a series of services while there and enjoyed the influence of divine light in presenting the word. One sister was baptized, converted to the work by Bro. Ralph Farrell, who is remembered with a deep and lasting affection by all outside and inside the church.

The Saints at Fall River, New Bedford, Attleboro, and Providence seem to be progressing nicely and are earnest and diligent in the work. Brn. Arthur Phillips and Arthur Koehler have been doing efficient work in the tent, and are situated in the city of New Bedford at this writing, where the writer had the privilege of speaking last Sunday week. I came to Somerville, Massachusetts, last Friday, and found Bro. Frank Bussell alone in a wide house. So he, not being a woman, took me in and we enjoyed ourselves, especially in getting breakfast. Sunday was sacrament day and we had a nice meeting, in a nice church, with a nice people. The writer preached at evening service.

Bro. Holmes Davison is home on the sick list with a bad throat trouble. May he soon be able to preach again.

On Labor Day the Sunday-school here had a picnic. My, what a time! Bro. Albert Hoxie is a wonderful man in a wonderful town. He is made up of noise, smiles, good nature, music, and song, and a few other pleasing attributes that some others may tell you about.

Dear old Boston! Let me wander far or near, over sea or land, in cities great or small, in woodland vast, on silvery beach, or rugged mountain scale to view a sun-kissed valley green, with stream and bush and gentle rising hill; my heart turns to thee with crooked streets and state house old, with noise and clash and clang, a hundred sounds of nerve racking kind amid which I can sit me down and rest.

Yours as ever,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

HURON, South Dakota, September 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: My colaborer, L. G. Holloway, and I concluded our season's tent-work and have put the tent away. The attendance has been very small here and very irregular, only a few coming the second time. It is not because the people did not know, for we covered the city twice with advertising and the newspapers have been very generous to us and called the attention of the public to the fact that we were not connected with the Salt Lake Mormons. In Madison we were located near the business part and here we went in the suburbs, among the cottages, but it seemed to make no particular difference. We believe some good has been done, especially in removing prejudice. Two were baptized. Bro. E. E. Willard's wife was baptized by Bro. H. O. Smith. She has been making a careful study of the Lord's work and concluded that the craft that she was sailing in was a derelict and so transferred her passage to the gospel ship. R. D. Addison, of Columbia, this State, called on us with a request for baptism, which we cheerfully complied with, and by the advice of Apostle W. H. Kelley, ordained him to the office of priest. So now we will have one local worker in this mission.

I wish to call the attention of the Saints of this mission that by the advice of my superiors we will plan for a reunion in the northern part of the State to commence June 4, 1909. This date is selected because the Minnesota and North Dakota reunions follow and the chief missionaries will attend all three. We will attempt a small innovation: instead of importing missionaries from other fields we will depend on those sent to the above-named three States and will try to use the money usually spent in that way to get some of our young musical talent to attend, and while they enjoy a brief vacation they can render good gospel service. It will be well for the reunion authorities in Minnesota and North Dakota to consider this idea. Perhaps we can join our efforts and have a nice band of singers visit all three in their order. I will be glad to hear from any of the Saints interested in this matter. All suggestions cheerfully received and carefully considered. My home address is Omaha, Nebraska, 3318 Taylor Street.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EDWARD RANNIE.

ALICE, Ohio, September 8, 1908.

Editors Herald: As we have not seen anything from around here for some time, we will send in a little sketch. There were two Utah elders here some time ago trying to deceive the people, but could not say anything to us, but they got headed off on everything. They tried to make us believe that we did not have the original church or faith. We have Bro. E. E. Long's picture with our belief on one side which we showed him. He gave us his card and their belief on it, which we are inclosing. We also read some in their Book of Mormon. He asked us our belief in marrying and we referred him to the Book of Mormon, Jacob 2: 44. He got to looking in his book of Mormon, then said it was not in there. We showed him in our Book of Mormon. His book had only thirty-five verses, where ours had fifty-three. He read some in our Book of Mormon. Mr. Woodbury said we were the offspring of Brigham Young's church, and we told him he was badly mistaken. The name of another was Joseph R. Hicks.

We wish the HERALD and all of its readers peace, harmony, and the good Spirit, and to God be all the glory is our prayer for the redemption of Zion.

Your brother and sister in Christ,

EDWIN E. AND ADA LAMBERT.

MODESTO, California, August 31, 1908.

Editors Herald: Three or four years ago you published in the HERALD a cancer cure, and at the time I put three or four copies with the receipt away, but now that I need them, I can not find them. Now what I want is to get the receipt. Perhaps some of your subscribers having copy with the cancer receipt would be kind enough to send it to me or to you for publication.

An old subscriber,

JOHN JAMES.

ETNA, Washington, September 7, 1908.

Editors Herald: Being a close reader of the HERALD and seeing but very few letters from Washington, I thought a few lines to it might be of interest and profit to all.

The missionary force in this district consists of J. D. Stead, William Johnson, William Hartnal, and George W. Thorburn. All are doing their best to get the work before the people. My eight years in the field has taught me that in every district there are hindrances in prosecuting the work; but I believe we are confronted with conditions on the coast we have not to meet in the Middle States. We find three classes of people out here, or three conditions existing among the people: First, those who are here for pleasure; second, those who came with a view of making money and then going East to buy a permanent home; third, those who are permanently located here. The first two, as a rule, are hard to get interested in the gospel. So with the other natural hindrances, short summers and long rainy winters, the work does not progress as fast as in the Middle States.

We have six branches in this district, located at the following places: Seattle, Vancouver, and Tacoma, Washington, Nanaimo, Westminster, and Chilliwack, British Columbia. Those branches are composed of some very fine people whose lives have an influence for good on the community where they live, and because of this we can say they are the children of God.

So far this year I have been laboring with Bro. William Johnson. I find him a pleasant companion and an able defender of the faith. With the exception of the place we are laboring in, our meetings have been on the streets.

In June we began our meetings on the streets in Nanaimo, British Columbia. This is a place where it has been hard to reach the people. For eight years we have been trying by tent and renting halls, but met with very little success. So this year we took our little organ. Sr. LaMure manipulated it for us, and with the rest of the Saints we made it interesting for the people, till hundreds stopped and listened to us unfold the beauties of the gospel. I am glad to say the good Spirit was with us in preaching and singing.

From Nanaimo we went to Cumberland. Bro. and Sr. Sommerville are the only Saints living there. They are doing their best, both by precept and example, to teach the people that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation. Our meetings there on the streets were also well attended.

From there we came to conference, which convened at Centralia, Washington. We had a good spiritual time. Brn. F. M. and F. A. Smith were with us. Their good counsel and sermons were appreciated by all.

From Centralia we came to Vancouver, Washington. There, like the other places, we began preaching on the streets for two nights; then to the city park for seventeen meetings. We got a good hearing at this place, and the Saints rendered noble service in the way of singing and in a financial way. While I can not say I enjoy street work, still this summer's work has convinced me that it is the best way to reach the people.

At present we are domiciled with Bro. and Sr. Shippy, who are the only Saints living here. Their lives have gone out in the community for good, so it is not hard for the missionary to get a hearing. This is a tie camp fifteen miles back from the railroad. We are holding meetings in a schoolhouse two miles from here with fair interest.

I feel I am still in the work for good, and new evidences of its truthfulness come to me day by day. My earnest desire is to do my part in bringing about the conditions prayed for in the sixth chapter of Matthew. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven."

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

Two-Day Meeting.

BELDING, Michigan, September 11, 1908.

Editors Herald: The two-day meeting of the Belding Branch has gone on record as one of the best, if not the best held in the district. Elders S. W. L. Scott, of Coldwater, Michigan; H. E. Moler, Holden, Missouri; Alvin Ellis, Boardman, Michigan, were the speakers. Bro. Andrews, represented Sand Lake; Bro. and Sr. Lavery, Ionia; Bro. and Sr. Omans, Greenville; Bro. Melvin Ellis, and wife, Sr. John Ellis, and daughter, Alto. Bro. Rodgers Lowell and a sister whose name I failed to take down, came from St. Louis, Michigan. Quite a number of outsiders attended, and altogether we think much good was done and seed sown which will be reaped by and by.

On Friday evening, Elder S. W. L. Scott preached a very able discourse on the "signs of the times," taking as a basis for his remarks the twenty-fourth chapter of Saint Matthew.

On September 5, at the morning meeting, Bro. Alvin Ellis took for his subject, the principles of the gospel found in the eighth chapter of Acts, fifth to thirty-fifth verses. Many words of commendation were heard on the effort of our young brother.

At half past two in the afternoon we again assembled in the church. Elder H. E. Moler occupied the hour, taking as a text Hebrews 6:1-10; showing the position of saints of former days compared with Saints of latter days. At the evening service Elder S. W. L. Scott preached. His discourse was on law. A good congregation and good attention while he dilated on the government of God's kingdom. At half past nine on September 6, opening remarks were made by S. W. L. Scott. Sacrament was then administered by S. W. L. Scott and H. E. Moler. Prayers and testimonies followed, interspersed with songs of Zion.

At half past ten Elder Moler spoke from Ecclesiastes 3:14, 15, in connection with Ecclesiastes 1:9, 10. The unchangeability of God was the subject.

The afternoon was preaching again. Elder S. W. L. Scott was speaker, showing divine authority and restoration of the Jews.

At the evening service Bro. A. Ellis spoke from Matthew 20, showing fulfillment of prophecy. At the close an infant was blessed by Elders Moler and Scott. Several were administered to during the week.

A peaceful spirit pervaded all the sessions, and the time for parting came all too soon. How good it is to dwell in love and harmony! It seems a foretaste of the one thousand years.

Elders Moler and Scott continued the meetings till Thursday night with good attention, with what results eternity will tell; but Saints were strengthened and built up in the faith.

MARY DUNSHEE, Corresponding Secretary.

On the Mountains of Middle Tennessee.

DIXON SPRINGS, September 7, 1908.

Editors Herald: The last time I appeared in your columns I was packing my grips for my field of labor, Tennessee and Kentucky. In the month of May I said good-bye to my dear wife and children, and boarded a train for the east. Began my work at Memphis, but it, like many other cities, is given over to its idols,—money and pleasure. From thence I traveled in Western Tennessee and Kentucky, holding some successful meetings and meeting with some as good Saints and people in general as it ever was my lot to meet. I had the pleasure of laboring some with Bro. Robert McClain, of Fulton, Kentucky. He is a noble worker and has a bright future, also labored some with Bro. J. M. Stubbart, of Lamoni, Iowa.

I came up here the eighth day of July to open the work in this country, but was sent for to help with the reunion which convened at Foundry Hill in Western Tennessee on the 25th of July; so I got to preach only a few days.

I returned to this place a few days ago, and will try to plant the work here, God being my helper. This is a fine country with rich valleys and mountains where corn and tobacco grow as fine as eye ever looked at. The springs are putting forth their never-ending fountains of water as clear as glass, and as cold as if it were coming from an ice-house. The people are in a prosperous condition, having beautiful homes and fine stock. We have fine crowds to preach to, and I think some are becoming interested. They say they never heard such fine preaching. Tennessee is noted for some things, such as Andrew Jackson and Sam Huston, who won Texas' independence at San Jacinto, also the great Smoky Mountains we read so much about, and now if she will just become famous for the angel's message it will indeed be a great country.

So, ever praying for the redemption of Zion, and the speed of the gospel, asking the prayers of all that read this letter, for my health, as it not very good, and hoping to eat dinner with loved ones, I am,

Your brother in the conflict,

E. A. IRWIN.

Spring River District Reunion.

Reunion was held at Columbus, Kansas, from August 14 to 24, district president and sub-missionary in charge presiding. Ministry present: Patriarchs, H. Kemp, A. White; Bishops' E. L. Kelley, E. Short; High Priests, A. V. Closson, E. A. Davis; Seventy, G. Jenkins, J. Arthur Davis, J. T. Riley, R. T. Walters, J. Alfred Davis, I. P. Baggerly, L. R. Devore; Elder W. H. Smart.

Preaching was from fair to excellent; prayer-meetings from ordinary to very spiritual. Auxiliary work, including normal study, was conducted by district executive committees, assisted by Bro. Ammon White the last few days of reunion. Much interest was manifested by all, and special talent exhibited by our young people in this department, as also in the music of reunion services. One of the greatest factors to the spiritual benefit of the Saints, was the labor of Bro. Henry Kemp in patriarchal blessings and other spiritual ministrations.

Many expressions of approval of and satisfaction in our meetings were expressed by the world's people, who attended quite largely. We are hopeful of good results, if the work is followed by wise effort. The Saints of the district are advancing in knowledge and wisdom, manifest in the improved character of their work from year to year. That most of them are, and desire to be students and scholars of truth, is evinced by the universal interest taken in all departments of the work.

A boarding-tent was conducted by the committee. One who deserves especial mention is Bro. Nunamaker, of Joplin, Missouri, who was first cook, and so patiently and kindly prepared palatable and wholesome food so necessary to the comfort and success of the reunion. None will object to this or higher tribute to our brother, as all realized the sacrifice and appreciated it.

MOLLIE DAVIS, Secretary.

First Kansas City Branch.

While we are not making progress very fast, yet we are advancing and our watchword is "Onward and upward." Not only are our local elders and President M. H. Bond, active, but also our priest, teacher, and deacon. Bro. H. Sandy, presiding priest, is continually at his post of duty, and he is very ably assisted by the teacher, S. Sandy, and by our deacon, G. W. Salender.

The writer is holding meetings in private houses on week evenings, assisted by Priest Walter Lewis and some of our young lady singers. We are meeting with success everywhere we go.

Elder Ashbaugh, who has labored in charge with others, in the eastern part of the branch very successfully, has resigned, and President Harrington has appointed Elder D. F. Winn in charge, and we feel that God will crown his efforts with success. We have a territory of about four by three miles which includes about fifty thousand people. We believe there is no better field to labor in than this, and we have been stimulated and encouraged by the Lord through the gift of tongues, that there are thousands of people in this city who are honestly desiring to know the truth. Organization and system are necessary, and the stake presiding are doing well in that direction.

Our new church at Ninth and Lydia Streets is well located and easy to reach by the various car lines, by new converts and friends.

There they can be nourished and fed upon the pure milk of the word and not upon the incorrect traditions of man-made churches and infidelity. Elder W. H. Kelley, of Indiana, lately preached for us, and we are glad to hear so many favorable comments, that it is so plain and comprehensive and a feast to our souls. Come again, Bro. William, and let us know beforehand, and we will try to have the church full of interested hearers.

Our stake conference convened at Independence on the twelfth and thirteenth. A good spirit prevailed. On Sunday, the thirteenth, the collection was thirteen dollars and thirteen cents. At eleven o'clock we listened to a wise and intelligent sermon by our much esteemed President Joseph Smith.

In the last six months there have been baptized into the branch by Elder S. Sandy, five; by Priest J. W. Nanny, two; by Elder E. T. Atwell, two; Priest M. M. Leeton, two, and by the writer eight. Two more have given their names for baptism.

This report and that of the auditing committee attached thereto were accepted as correct. Owing to the fact that nearly all the members of the Byesville Branch had removed to other localities, the following resolution was passed: "Resolved, That the Byesville Branch should be and is hereby dissolved, and all members formerly holding membership therein be granted letters of removal by district secretary." A resolution was also passed that the organs belonging to Kirtland District be returned to the district at once, and placed in the care of the bishopric. Election of officers was as follows: G. A. Smith president, but as he tendered his resignation because of having been appointed to labor in another part of the mission, the following resolution was adopted: "That whereas Elder G. A. Smith, who was elected president of the district at this conference, and who had been appointed by the general church authorities to labor in another district, and for this reason has tendered his resignation as district president, which has been accepted; therefore be it resolved, That we tender our brother a hearty vote of thanks to show our appreciation of his services for us in the past." F. J. Ebeling was then elected president, E. E. Cozadd secretary. Resolution passed: "That we look with favor upon the organization of the different quorums of the priesthood in the Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio Districts, and correspond with the church presidency in regard to the matter." And lived it while here below.

SISTER NETTIE.

They will miss her at home, they will miss her,
But the toils of this earth are all o'er.
We hope she'll obey the glad gospel
On the other bright beautiful shore.

We all have obeyed this glad message,
Except sisters Hannah and Jen;
And how sad for us all with the blessed,
If they are not free to come in.
But those who obey not this gospel
He leaves to remorse, fear, and doubt;
O God, to them give of wisdom,
That they turn ere the way is barred out.

God is not partial with persons,
The law all must try to obey,
For if we reject this glad message,
We never will meet on that day.

New Glass Making.

We all know that there is one pane of glass for the rich and another for the poor, known respectively as plate and sheet glass. And while both have essentially the same composition, they differ greatly in the purity of the materials used and the method of manufacture. Until a few years ago sheet glass—the window-pane of the multitude—owed its origin to the blower's breath. But in 1903 Mr. John H. Lubbers, of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, invented a window-glass blowing machine which was described as "the newest marvel in the industrial affairs of this country." And now another Pennsylvanian, Mr. Irving W. Colburn, of Franklin, Pennsylvania, has gone one better and perfected—at a cost of two hundred thousand dollars—a machine which makes glass without blowing it at all—turns it out in a continuous sheet and enables one man and two boys to efficiently perform the work of thirteen skilled mechanics.—From "Making sheet-glass by machinery," in October Technical World Magazine.

The Bumblebee's Monopoly.

The closed gentian is a flower that seems to reserve its nectar especially for the bumblebee, and is always closed to the plundering butterflies and thieving crawlers. But the bumblebee is cute; he has found the secret door and has the strength to open it. Watch him as he alights on one of these closed blossoms and you will see an amusing performance. First he thrusts his tongue into the folding door at the top of the flower, then prying it open, in goes his head, followed by his body, until he is nearly lost to sight, nothing but his hind legs and the tip end of his abdomen sticking out, while his beeship sips the sweets within—a just reward for his ingenuity. But after all his efforts to get in, his stay is brief, and shortly, with a lot of kicking and commotion, he backs out and departs, the flower closing after him.—From "Nature and science" in October St. Nicholas.

SENATOR WILLIAM BOYD ALLISON.

It was with a great regret that in our absence from home we read of the death of William B. Allison, senior senator from Iowa to the upper house of Congress. This regret arises from two considerations, the one being the fact that the senator had long been a trusted public servant against whom no charges of guile or malfeasance in office had ever been made.

It may be that the state of Iowa can not point to any great achievement by which the State had been materially benefited, the result of actions upon the part of Senator Allison in the nation's councils.

In other words, it is almost equivalent to saying that William B. Allison, citizen of the state of Iowa, and holder of an eminent position as a statesman in the national council, has not used the prestige of his position, nor his personal influence, to bring to pass any scheme of political profit or personal "graft" for himself or other citizens of the State. He was content to maintain the integrity of an honest man watching the affairs of the nation as well as the affairs of the State, and so far as lay in his power, to prevent the adoption of any enactment, or the passage of any law by which the material welfare of either nation or state should be impaired, or the people robbed under the guise of plausible legislation. He may not have been brilliant, but he was honest and steadfast in the adherence to principles of private and public conduct which enabled him to safely keep his head undisturbed by the clamors of politicians or the fretfulness of local speculators, and keep himself unspotted from the ways of political evil.

The fact that he was considered as a Nestor in politics, a man whose natural ability and acquired information made him a safe political counselor; one who could be approached in case of an emergency, and whose virtue could be relied upon, made his career a remarkable one and reflects great credit upon the State which he so long and so faithfully served.

The second reason for our regret is this: We early became acquainted with Senator Allison upon our becoming a citizen of the state of Iowa, and was always met by him frankly and openly, without any exhibition of prejudice upon his part, and as a representative of a people who formed a worthy part of the citizenship of the State whose rights he was willing to stand for, in his private life and his public conduct as a representative of the State in the national councils. We learned to esteem him as one who would fearlessly defend the right when required, and as one who was approachable under proper conditions to listen to a citizen of his State for the cause which he might represent. It was to Senators Allison of Iowa, and Burrows of Michigan, and Congressman Hepburn of the eighth congressional district of Iowa, to whom we could safely refer as to the position and the people of the Reorganized Church in cases of controversy which might arise in Congress in which the interests of the church might be affected.

The following is a receipt for making a tattler. It is rather an odd dish, and we submit it because thereof: "Take of the vine called 'runabout,' and the root of 'nimble tongue,' of each six hands full; fifteen ounces of 'ambition,' the same quantity of nonsense. Bruise in the mortar of misapprehension, boil them over the fire of wild surmises, strain through the cloth of misconstruction, cork tight in the bottle of malignity, suck now and then a draught through the quill of envy, and you will be prepared to speak all manner of evil against your neighbor."—Selection in old HERALD.

Doubtless Iowa has other citizens who may be called upon to succeed Senator Allison as their representative in the Senate of the United States, who will serve them with equal ability as a statesman; but we predict that none will be chosen who will surpass William B. Allison in the virtue of citizenship, honesty of representation, and steadfast integrity to the principles of rightfulness and fair dealing for the benefit of both state and nation. We trust that he may have a worthy successor.

WOMAN, POLYGAMY, AND THE "HERALD."

Quite a number of years ago we made the statement that of all the so-called factions into which the church was split after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, "the Reorganized Church was the only one that could afford to wait."

By this we meant that the basic elements upon which the Reorganized Church was built were of such a character that no matter what time might bring to pass of the past, there could be no revelation of such a nature as to destroy the fabric, if the basic elements were wisely regarded. And no development of opposition among the fragments into which the church was broken could disturb the foundation upon which the church was built, nor affect the fabric thereon, so long as the builders believed and maintained the integrity of their adherence to the substantial character of the foundation upon which they had built.

Fortunately for the contention of the Reorganization, the events which have been transpiring in the world, near and remote, are of such a nature that they strongly corroborate the position taken in the contention. Polygamy, wherever it has flourished in the past, has been disregarding of human life, especially so with regard to woman. Seclusion behind closed doors, and behind peculiar social restrictions, and the exclusiveness of ownership, strongly suggestive that women were the chattels subject to the control, will, and whim of the husband owners, have made the lot of woman in the harem a degraded one. The following, taken from the Kansas City Journal for Sunday, September 20, will afford an illustration of the value of the position assumed in regard to polygamy taken by the Reorganized Church at the first and still maintained:

Astounding above all features connected with the uprising in Turkey is the coming to life of the women of the realm.

In Turkey's centuries of history the women of the country may never be said to have lived. Here was the confinement of the harem. She never could appear in public with her face exposed. Laws, both of religion and of the state, compelled the sex to regard itself as the absolute slave and possession of man, and for a Turkish woman to have walked in public without having her face covered in the heavy swathings of tradition, would at one time have been to invite death, and in later years imprisonment.

But in the coming of the new era, the Turkish woman has played a glorious and important part.

They have torn off their veils, and marched openly in the streets of Constantinople, shouting the cry of the revolutionists, and bearing aloft banners inscribed:

"Liberty, equality, and fraternity."

When this sight first presented itself to the public the sensation was tremendous, and it is said that the sultan and his advisers on seeing it permitted, understood that the world had moved on for Turkey, and that the only act possible was to concede a constitution and get in touch with the new conditions.

Nor did the demonstration started stop at the mere abandoning of veils, the waving of banners, and shouting in the streets.

The new woman of Turkey has presented to her brother this proposition:

That since she has been his companion in the revolt, and has borne all the perils of assisting in rebellion, and would, in the event of failure, have been the victim of the sultan, she has a right to share fully in the fruits of the victory.

There she asks that she be elevated to a plane of complete equality, and be allowed to take part in politics and have her vote.

The disposition of the young Turkish party is to grant this request. They understand that the women of the nation are bound to wield a powerful influence in the events of the next few years, and that policy, no less than justice, would dictate giving them a place of fullest partnership in the great movement to bring the country into the fore rank of progress.

One Moslem priest, a man of great power in Constantinople, has, after a search through the records, decided there is no law of the Koran that compels woman to wear a veil in the streets, and he thus officially absolves them of the need. This decision was the occasion for greatest joy on the streets, since the Turkish woman is naturally very religious, and even in her zeal for political freedom would hardly wish to oppose those teachings which have been handed down to her from the centuries.

Even the Sheik-ul-Islam, the all powerful head of the Moslems, has indorsed this decision, and has come forward with the still more notable concession that there is no law to show that a man must take more than one wife.

This at one stroke removes what has always been a favorite plea of the licentious, that it was the law of his religion that compelled a man to take to himself more than one wife.

Had even this noted functionary dared to utter such a radical opinion before the success of the revolution was established, he would have been summoned to the Yildiz Kiosk, and ordered to drink a cup of coffee in which enough poison had first been placed to insure his speedy exit from this vale of tears.

But now such a deliverance has a far different effect. It is said that the sultan himself, who, instead of being "Abdul the Dammed," as heretofore, has now proclaimed himself to be a Liberal, and president of "Committees of the Ottoman Union and Progress," is actually considering the abolition of his harem.

The sultan has three hundred and sixty wives. If he would put them from him, and adopt the monogamous practices of the other rulers of the world, he would at a stroke free himself from the odium of his past life as representative of all that was black, tyrannical, and ignoble to be the most enlightened and progressive ruler the country ever knew.

Only the strong opposition of his courtiers who, too, would be compelled to do the same thing, in case Abdul set the fashion, is said to hold the ruler back from the commission of an act which he is said to believe would restore his popularity.

Undoubtedly such an action would win the approval of the women, who are now going the streets dressed in the fashions of Paris, going to the mosques, which previously was prohibited, visiting the Christian churches and theaters, and shaking hands with their Christian friends on the streets.

The men of the nation have taken no rough advantage of this innovation. Instead, they have either contented themselves with cheering groups of unveiled women, or in case one chanced to be encountered alone, of respectfully bowing or lifting the hat.

JUDGE MCPHERSON AND THE IOWA MULCT LAW.

We have frequently wondered what relation the so-called Mulct Law bore to the official recognition of the right to sell intoxicants as a beverage in Iowa.

The fight in favor of prohibition in 1882 was a strong one, and the temperance element prevailed by a large majority, but were defeated by what was called a clerical error in the transportation of a resolution from one house of the legislature to the other. It appears, however, that elements have been at work to bring about a contest between the prohibition law of the State passed a quarter of a century ago and the later enactment known as the mulct law.

We are distinctly pleased with the thought that this contest has been urged in a court over which an Iowa man presides. The following, which we take from the Kansas City Journal for Sunday, September 20, will be quite interesting to the readers of the HERALD and may be held as strikingly in accord with the finding of the Indiana judge who expressed the opinion that the selling of intoxicants could not be made legal as it was prima facie unlawful of itself, and, therefore, could not be made legal.

DAVENPORT, Iowa, September 19.—In throwing out of the United States court yesterday a petition of the United Brewers Company of New Jersey for an injunction against the Davenport Civic Federation, Judge Smith McPherson quoted a federal statute to the effect that the writ of injunction shall not be granted by any federal court to stay proceedings in any state court, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.

The United Brewers Company was seeking an injunction against the Civic Federation interfering with saloon fixtures and leasehold rights in Scott County, on the ground that the company had not been made a party defendant in a case on which appeal to the United States court was taken.

Judge McPherson, in making this decision, declared that the Iowa liquor law, which permits saloons to be run by paying the so-called "mulct tax" of six hundred dollars a year and complying with certain strict regulations, is in no sense a license law.

The Iowa prohibitory law, he ruled, is still in force, the mulct system simply giving saloons defense against prosecution, but the law specifically providing that it shall not be considered as in any way legalizing saloons.

"Complainants are wholly mistaken when insisting that this is a license system," said the court. "There is no liquor license system in Iowa, and has not been for a quarter of a century. For that length of time there has never been a lawful sale of liquor in the State.

"No person to-day can lawfully sell liquor as a beverage. All sales of liquor as a beverage in the state of Iowa are unlawful. Of course, this court will not discuss the propriety of state legislation.

"The legislature of the State has power, under our Constitution, to absolutely prohibit the manufacture, use, or sale of liquor as a beverage. Under the Iowa law the mulct system is not a legal system, but absolute compliance with its provisions by saloons simply gives saloon-keepers and clerks a method of establishing criminal prosecution."

Reading the above we are still in quandary as to why the so-called "mulct law" may not be considered as a license law, notwithstanding Judge McPherson's finding. If a man pays six hundred dollars per year to the county or the state for the purpose of securing grounds for defense against prosecution for selling intoxicants in case some person should choose to file complaint against him, why may it not be called a rule of law in the sense of so authorizing them to so sell; even a continuing imposition of fine for selling, if the one prosecuted and fined could afford to pay excessive fines by reason of proceeds of such sale, why might not such repetition of fines paid be regarded as a license to sell?

However, if Judge McPherson refrains from commenting upon the propriety of the actions of the legislature, it might be taken as significant that his plain statement that there has been no case of lawful selling of liquors in Iowa for a quarter of a century, is strongly reflective upon the law-makers of the State. We are pleased to know the action and decision of Judge McPherson.

GRACELAND COLLEGE DAY.

Next Sunday (October 4) is College Day. This day is set apart for the taking up of collections in all the branches of the church. Branch presidents should call the attention of their respective branches to that fact and do what they can toward encouraging a liberal donation for the support of Graceland. The resolution setting apart such a day was adopted in 1905, and reads as follows:

"We favor recommending to the conference that the expenses of running the college be met by voluntary contributions for the purpose, and that one day in each year be set apart, to be known as College Day, upon which offerings, in the manner of collections, shall be taken up in districts and branches of the church, to aid the college work, the same to be forwarded to the Bishop of the church to be devoted to such purposes."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"The SAINTS' HERALD is the best paper of its kind that I know. R. B. Neal, Pikeville, Kentucky." We might, because of its wording, put this in the list of doubtful compliments; but we choose to exercise charity and accept it at par value. We thank Bro. Neal and trust a disposition toward fair-mindedness may always characterize men claiming religious motives.

We wish to acknowledge a pleasant visit to our office of four elders of the Utah missionary force. They were Elders W. H. Stewart, of Logan, W. S. Swapp, of Kanab, T. J. Hunt, of Enterprise, and John S. Anderson, Glendale. They had been in attendance at a conference at Shenandoah, Iowa, and were on their way to Humeston, Iowa. We have wondered why Lamoni has not been visited oftener by ministers of the Utah faction.

The following is from the Blair, Nebraska, Pilot: "A religious discussion is being held every evening this week in the Latter Day Saints' chapel, one block east of the post-office. The disputants are Elder A. Adams, of Omaha, and C. J. Hunt, of Iowa. This week Mr. Adams affirms that the Church of God, of which he is a member, is the Church of Christ in fact and is in harmony with the Bible in doctrine, organization, and practice. Mr. Hunt denies. The speakers have two thirty-minute alternate speeches each evening, beginning at eight o'clock. Next week Elder Hunt will affirm the same proposition for the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The men are said to be experienced debaters and their friends anticipate an interesting and profitable discussion. They will hold a special session Sunday at fifteen minutes to three in the afternoon. Seats free."

We recently received a clipping from a well-known Toledo, Ohio, paper, taken from a page devoted to questions and answers. It purported to be an account of the Latter Day Saints or "Mormon" church, but was so sadly twisted and entirely out of line that one of our subscribers requested us to send something to the paper in correction. Still more recently a clipping from a Pennsylvania paper was forwarded to us. This is an account of a band of some forty people at Silvermine, Connecticut, who "claim to be the last of the orthodox believers who did not follow Brigham Young in the exodus to Utah." All we have to say about either of these clippings is that there are some very "yellow" journals in the land. Saints should discriminate and neither read nor encourage the reading of cheap, trashy papers of any kind. For the same reason we think best not to attempt corrections in the case of the papers mentioned, as they cater only to the abnormal and morbid.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Our long spell of drought and heat was broken Saturday night. Those who were wishing for a change were gratified, but figuratively speaking, they have jumped out of the frying-pan into the ice-box. Sunday was cloudy, wet, and cold. The sudden change from extreme heat was felt very keenly.

Our Sunday-school superintendent, Professor Gunsolley, met with the school Sunday morning for the first time in several weeks. He has been absent in the interests of normal work. Regular quarterly examinations were conducted by Sr. Anna Salyards in the second primary and intermediate classes. It is intended to extend this feature of the work into the senior classes.

Next Sunday is Graceland College Day. President Anderson promises us special music, special speaking, and a special collection. This is a day set apart by General Conference on which to collect money for Graceland College; branches everywhere, throughout the entire church, should observe it and give according to their ability.

Speakers at the church Sunday were Alexander H. Smith and Robert M. Elvin.

Bro. John Garver of the stake presidency, and Elder M. M. Turpen have been holding tent meetings in Hiteman, Iowa. They have been having splendid interest and at last report had baptized eight, and there were indications that others would follow. In some ways Lamoni Stake is a hard field to work; but if taken in the right way there are great opportunities for the missionary force. Thousands of people within the stake that bears the name of the church headquarters are densely ignorant of our faith and history. We need preaching here, as elsewhere, that is well advertised, to start with, and that is full enough of life and enthusiasm to attract and hold attention (perhaps at the risk of being called sensational) and yet spiritual and logical enough to appeal to all that is best in man. Success to our stake missionaries at Hiteman and elsewhere.

Everybody likes and respects the self-made man. It is a great deal better to be made in that way than not to be made at all.—O. W. Holmes.

COLLEGE DAY.

OCTOBER 4, 1908.

The Saints, one and all, should remember every special work the church is striving to maintain in order to protect and care for the afflicted and needy, and to educate and instruct its young people so they may be prepared in the best possible way to fill their respective duties in life.

The fact should not be overlooked that what is to the interest of one member in pushing forward any good work of the body is to the interest of all, directly or indirectly, and that the more fully and readily each performs his duty to the body, the better he helps himself. This is true not only in the special sense that we are blessed in the growth and development of the church, and in the good of every member, but also in the eternal reward so aptly referred to by the apostle when excusing himself for his repeated calls for help upon the saints at Philippi: "Not because I desire a gift, but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." This is as Jesus directed: "Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven."

It may be questioned that possibly we may be asked to help in things where the future rewards do not attach. The answer is, Not anything the Lord has sanctioned, or directed to be done in his church. It is said complaint is made because the Saints are called upon to help in so many things. But if it is a part of the church's work and the work must lag if we do not help, are there any who feel out of sorts because they are asked to assist? On the contrary, ought not all to feel gratified to know that the officers in the church whose duty it is to see that the work is not neglected, have been diligent in urging its accomplishment? Is there any one in the church who is more anxious for his personal and private gain in the things of the world than he is in the success and the triumph of the work of Christ? Now if there is, let him stand up and be counted. And if there is not, then who is it that complains because the Master's work is being pushed? Should it not be carried forward with all our mights—as well as with the "mites"?

Jesus while here, so urged in his work: "Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Judea until the Son of Man has come"; and they had not. The time of his offerings was there before they had accomplished their work. So it is to-day; and the advice is the same, "Let us work while it is day."

If we do our best, working in wisdom, we can not do too much. Let us then be faithful to the trust imposed; do what we can and do it cheerfully and well,—the Lord asks no more.

The church in its General Conference has set apart one day in the year for special work and collections in the interest of Graceland College, and named the first Sunday in October of each year as that day; every stake, district, branch, and individual member should see that the church direction is observed, and all work as a unit to the gathering in of a proper offering for this educational work. Let us not only see that those around us perform their parts, but each see that his own is done; then the blessing will come.

Bro. Oscar Anderson, Lamoni, Iowa, is the college treasurer, and all college funds may be sent direct to him, and a due account will be kept and reported, as though sent to the Bishop's office. When you send in the money state what it is for so that the College may have its own. This is the college day offering specially.

May the Lord bless the helpers.

Very respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

REFORMATION, RESTORATION, AND UNITY.

The above caption may seem rather peculiar to some at this time; but it may not be inappropriate during this year of grace, 1908, to notice to some degree the trend of religious evolution, that we may not lose sight of its progress, or retrogression, as the case may be.

Reformation as it relates to religions as such, is little talked or preached of any more. It seems that the idea or ideas of reformation reached their zenith some years ago, and have ceased to be living issues. And well they might; for as to how the church should be formed anew, after the Dark Ages, and the church in form, doctrine, and spirit, had lain in an unorganized condition for so long a time, leading minds differed as to the form it should take, what tenets it should advocate, and what officers should occupy, and as to the authority these officers respectively should exercise. It is to be admitted that the opinion of one man as to these questions was the equivalent of every other man's opinion. Each one's opinion was a standard equal in authority with every other one. But in this they did not, could not agree, consequently a unity on this great and important subject was an impossibility. Subsequent disunity and division demonstrates this to be true. An agreement could not be attained. Each great leader had, therefore, to be content to advocate the claims of the standard he had raised, and rally to his respective opinions what numbers he could; each, as many as he could to trust his opinions to bring to them eternal life, bliss, and glory.

Man never has originated, in all the ages of the past, and never can originate an infallible rule of church organization and government, because it is not in man's ability to do so. And as we note the results of his puny efforts to do so, it is not putting it too strong to assert that it would have been better for the world of mankind had he not made the effort to do so,—and as the fruits of his efforts now appear, and the failures in this respect strewn along the historical way, we are reminded of the statement of the olden time prophet as he, no doubt, looked down to this so-called religious reformatory period, and foresaw man's feeble effort at attempting to legislate for God on man's behalf, and exclaimed:

Therefore, behold, I [God] will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: for the wisdom of their wise men shall perish, and the understanding of their prudent men shall be hid.—Isaiah 29: 14.

Our Savior, too, discounts such pretensions on man's part, when noting the failures of the Jewish leaders when he was here, saying, "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15: 9.

Reformation has been going on, now, for a period of over four hundred years, on the part of learned men; and now that it is apparent that man's wisdom can proceed no farther, for it is plainly seen that religious division is contrary to principle, the efforts of the successors of the great and good reformers are now turned to an attempted unifying of the great religious bodies formed (not reformed by the leading Protestants; for these bodies never had a prior existence to their days). Not one of these formations antedates the days of Luther, and some do not date prior to 1860 A. D. Had these differing bodies been based on principles, they all would have been united at first in one body, for the incontrovertible reason that principles never differ from each other so as to divide that system based on them, neither do principles vary with the lapse of time. This is another incontrovertible evidence that religious bodies differing are based on human opinions only. If religious bodies based on human opinions are not a success standing separately, alone, will they be more successful, or more likely to stand, unitedly? United! How are all the contrarities thus amassed to be harmonized? Many of these opinions must be sacrificed before the unity can be effected. If united, will they more surely save mankind, than if left divided as originally organized? How? Why?

To reform, is to form anew, after the thing reformed has once been formed, and subsequently fell apart, thus disorganizing. But these differing religious bodies are not reformed churches; for such of them as have not already ceased to exist, are just as primarily organized. Therefore, in reality, they are not re-forms, but at most are only "dissenting protestants."

But originally having been organized separately, and radically differing from each other, and therefore being devoid of principles, so far as being formed and organized is concerned, they will be as devoid of principles constructively united, as though remaining separate, as now. The gospel as given through Christ was not intended of him to be the basis of a multitude of differing systems of faith. The gospel is a definite message or system, and is based on divine, eternal principles. Paul gives us plainly to understand this. Hence, he refers to "the first principles of the oracles of God," and "the principles of the doctrine of Christ" (Hebrews 5: 12; 6: 1), and proceeds to name plainly the first principles of the oracles of God.

The universe in all its departments is based upon principles. Where principles are not, there divine order is not, and real existence is not. Where principles are not, only confusion and uncertainty exist. Principles are eternal, foundational, necessary, eternally unchangeable truths. Music could have no existence, save for the principles on which it is based. This is true of mathematics, as is known the universe over. Notation, time, tones, melody, harmony, style, and other didactics, must be, or music is not. Numeration, addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division, as principles, must be, or there is absolutely no mathematics in the universe. These and all other sciences are a unity in all languages the world over. No questioning these statements. It is said these are discoveries. But more is claimed for the gospel than that it is a discovery. It is a revelation from God in order to man's eternal salvation. Is there more certainty to man's discoveries than to God's divine revelations to man? Learned men seem to proceed on this idea: Man can tell his fellows truth to a certainty about things, but man's Maker can not! Poor man, to thus assert his superiority to his Maker! If man does not thus, why make religious confessions of his own to go by? Why not make a direct appeal to God's creed, the gospel? And if what is already revealed is not sufficient, why not appeal to him for the needed information? The gospel is a perennial fountain of truth. From it the stream of the water of life ever flows to man in need: "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed."—Romans 1: 17. Not "was"; not "will be"; but "is" revealed.

The gospel comes not to us "in word only, but also in power [authority.—C. S.], and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance." (1 Thessalonians 1: 5.) In the gospel, through the Holy Ghost, does God reveal himself, has revealed himself, and will continue to reveal himself to his children, else he and his gospel have changed.

The gospel, God's means of continued revelation to man, is the basis of Christ's church or body, and is designed to teach and produce unity among men, concerning and in the church of Christ. Note the following:

And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona: for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my father which is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.—Matthew 16: 16-18.

Again, Jesus says:

For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me.

And again:

Neither pray I for these [apostles] alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me.

This prayer of Christ will never be answered till all who believe in Christ are one in belief, in faith. (See John 17.) But faith comes by testimony, by hearing the word of God:

How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher [or a witness to testify—C. S.]? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? . . . So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.—Romans 10: 14, 15, 17.

They must hear God's word, we see, not human opinion—not man's interpretation of God's word, however learned he may be. Man's opinions, and his human interpretation of God's word, has been made the rule and basis of church-building, during the so-called Reformation period; and, hence, the diversity and confusion that has prevailed. Hear the Apostle Peter's understanding of how faith is begotten and born:

And when there had been much disputing, Peter rose up, and said unto them, Men and brethren, ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us, that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe.—Acts 15: 7.

This is so plain that comment is unnecessary. That unity of faith and practice, doctrine and precept, is born of and grows from God's word, is God's design, is further shown by Paul, thus:

Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment.—1 Corinthians 1: 10.

"Be perfectly joined together," "no divisions among you," "in the same mind," "the same judgment"! How much farther from division in preaching and in church-building than these statements of holy writ can anything be?

But let us note the following by the same great apostle to the Gentiles:

I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace.

What is the "unity" that the Spirit of God, as well as the word, teaches? Here they are:

1. "There is one body" of Christ, the church.
2. "One Spirit," the "Comforter," the Holy Ghost.
3. "One hope"—all saints hope for the same kingdom, glory, and immortality with Christ.
4. "One Lord," our Savior, Jesus Christ. And in the one body, or church of the living God, there is
5. "One faith." God's word and Holy Spirit advocate but "one faith," the faith of the gospel.
6. "One baptism." Not two, nor three that man can perform. Baptize expresses an act, a definite action, not an indefinite act with several modes,—as definite as the word fell (the tree or man "fell"), as definite as the word walk, or as the word see. The word wash does not express the act demanded by the word baptize. Nor does the word sprinkle, nor the word pour. Hence, wash, pour, and sprinkle do not come from the same original word in any language or dialect. To baptize is to "immerse," to "dip under," "bury," to "be born of" the water. "I have need to be baptized of thee," said John the baptizer to Christ. "Baptism" is a principle, which, in execution as an ordinance in God's church, translates a person from this into the beyond, from the world into the Christ, into his body, the church. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."—Galatians 3: 27. By this baptism, or burial "with him," is the "unity" taught brought about, "For ye are all one in Christ Jesus."—Galatians 3: 28. (See Romans 6: 4.)
7. "One God and Father of all, who is above all."

Thus we discover that the unity taught by the word and Spirit of God includes the "one body," or church of Christ. This great gospel truth is now slowly dawning on the religious world.

But a statement or two is due this subject, here: The church of God, or kingdom of heaven, the "one body" of Christ (see Colossians 1: 13, 18), was established by divine power and direction. By the power of the Holy Ghost was it made to live and act. By authority and direction was its ministry called and constituted, and administered its word, doctrine, and ordinance; and nothing short of divine wisdom can perpetuate it, or reestablish that church, when it ceased to exist through the great apostasy of the first to the fifth centuries of our era.

Jesus says, "I will build my church." (Matthew 16: 18; also see Ephesians 2: 20-22.) He set in it first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly evangelists, fourthly high priests, fifthly pastors, sixthly bishops, seventhly teachers, eighthly deacons (see Ephesians 4: 8-13; 1 Corinthians 12:13-29; 1 Timothy 3: 1-7, 8-12; Hebrews 5: 1-6; Genesis 14: 18-20; Psalm 137: 9-16; Acts 20: 28, 29), also elders, helps, and governments.

But let us carefully note the following. God's immutability is to be considered in connection with this topic. For four thousand one hundred years God, at intervals, revealed himself to man, as he was found worthy, by working righteousness, and exercising faith, gospel faith in him. "I am the Lord, I change not."—Malachi 3: 6. "With whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning."—James 1: 17. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever. [All past, present, and future]"—Hebrews 13: 8. Now since God gave revelation to man, as was found necessary for four thousand years, with no intimation of a change, if at the end of that time, at the giving of John's revelation, he ceased to reveal himself to man, as was universally claimed by all Protestants of the sixteenth and subsequent centuries till now, and their followers, and if Christ then ceased to exercise his prophetic office, it follows as logical that they have changed, and that all churches or religious bodies founded on this belief are founded on the doctrine that God—the Godhead—are changeable beings, and are therefore against the plain statements of his revealed word, to begin with. But he could not change in the least iota from what he is, as set forth in his word, without ceasing to be the perfect God that he is. How can he change his infinite attributes of power, knowledge, wisdom, truth, justice, mercy, or love? know a little less than all knowledge? decrease his power? vacillate regarding infinite truth? vary slightly from infinite justice or mercy? change from a God of infinite love to one of hatred? He always has hated sin, and ever has and always will love poor sinners. Even should the time ever come when he will cease to feel after the sinner, he will not change and hate him. Why should he? So we conclude that when the great work of church-building is left to the wisdom of man, and the revelation from God is left out, it is no wonder churches differ and are founded on the sand, and in time must tumble to ruin in the day of trial, by the immutable law of God.

The unity of differing faiths on "principle" is, for the foregoing reasons, an impossibility. A confederation of differing religious bodies can not be agreed to, save on some minor, subordinate, and temporary subject, purpose, or end. Its internal conflicting doctrines and opinions will weaken a confederation to a fall surely as principles are true, immutable, and essential to the existence of things, and to their unity.

Crops of grain can not be produced without the earth and its germinating salts, lime, and other elements; nor without the sun, its light, heat, and action; nor without water. This is true as all experience demonstrates, if the truth of it never were asserted in words.

Notice this: A being never can be saved, a new-born child of God in his eternal kingdom, independent of faith in God, his Son Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost. All will say amen to this. "He that cometh to God must [yes, must,] believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6. Man can not be saved in his sins. He can not be saved from his sins so long as he chooses to continue in them. He will continue in them so long as he does not turn away from, and joyfully, gladly cease and forsake them. He must submit to the regenerative process—he must, or die in his sins.

"Then said Jesus again unto them [Pharisees], I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins: whither I go, ye can not come. . . . I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins."—John 8: 21, 24. The only alternative for man according to these words is to repent of his sins, believing with all the heart that Jesus of Nazareth is the Christ the Son of God. He must repent of all his sins. But you say, "We do believe that he is the Christ." Then do not resent and reject his word. It says, "Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he can not see the kingdom of God. Nicodemus saith unto him, How can a man be born when he is old? can he enter the second time into his mother's womb, and be born? [One can not be born, or born again without entering into the elements he is to be born of and emerging therefrom. He can not.—C. S.] Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 3-5. Must and can not are positive and arbitrary terms. But we must yield or we die in our sins and are lost. In verse 11 Jesus says, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness." Again he says, "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day. For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting: whatsoever I speak therefore, even as the Father said unto me, so I speak."—John 12: 48-50.

Principles being fundamental and eternal, are absolutely arbitrary. No dogmatism of man can move or remove them. By them the universe is made to eternally stand. Nor does it make it more true that man must "be born of the water and of the Spirit or he can not enter into the kingdom of God," than if he had never said it. It is true independent of his statement. Just as it is true that the only way into this world is by natural generation. The truth, law, or principle is absolute. In the nature of things, it can be no other way. None is known. Man must be regenerated to be saved. He must submit to the law of regeneration. God's word, by which he is begotten (see James 1:18), the gospel by which his heart and mind are changed, comes from God. The water in which he is baptized, of which he is born, is the creation of God. The Holy Ghost, by which he is baptized and enlightened, comes from God. And, hence, to be begotten of God's word, and which begets faith in him, and by which his mind and heart are changed, the birth or burial in water (see Romans 6:1-4; Colossians 2:11, 12), and the baptism of the Holy Ghost, is being "born of God." Nor has he a desire to live in sin, which is transgression of "the law of the Spirit of life." (Romans 8:1, 2; John 1:9.) God has revealed no other way for man's regeneration and eternal salvation.

Ordinances are the embodiment of principles. All developments, operations, and official enactments in God's economy, both natural and spiritual, are in strict accord with principles, and are done through regularly ordained ordinances. Ordinances are laws based upon principles. The sun, the moon, and the stars perform their office-work according to set, specific ordinances. (See Jeremiah 31:35, 36.) So with the ocean tides, and the earth in its seasons. (See Job 38:33, 8-10.)

Israel were required to observe strictly the ordinances contained in the law; but failed to do so (see Malachi 3:7; Ephesians 2:15), and so were chastised and finally rejected.

The gospel of Christ is a system of specific and well-defined law based on principles, expressed in ordinances, the fully stated design being to redeem and save mankind. The gospel "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth"; "the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost"; "he hath anointed me to preach the gospel"; "repent ye, and believe the gospel," said Jesus, and his Apostle Paul. It is the authority of Jesus, and that of his chosen ministry by which the ordinances are administered that binds them on man. Christ's atonement and blood consecrates and ratifies the gospel covenant. See the type of this in the great law given to Israel. (See Exodus 24:3-8; Hebrews 9:19, 20.) The blood of the covenant was sprinkled on "the book" as well as on the people.

"This cup is the new testament in my blood," says Jesus.

Is baptism in water for remission of sins, when preceded by gospel faith and repentance a gospel ordinance? It surely is. The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" was: "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."—Mark 1:1-4. (See Acts 2:38, 39; 10:47, 48; 22:13-16; Matthew 28:17, 18.)

Is the laying on of hands for the gift and baptism of the Holy Ghost a gospel ordinance? It most assuredly is. (See Acts 8:14-17; 9:17, 18; 19:1-6; Hebrews 6:1, 2.) "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you," said Jesus to his apostles, when commissioning them to preach the gospel unto the nations. (Matthew 28:20.) And they taught the nations to observe this ordinance.

Any, therefore, who reject the gospel ordinances of baptism and the laying on of hands, and for the purposes indicated, place their feet on that part of Christ's blood that consecrated them. Christ made sure the resurrection of the dead by "the blood of the everlasting covenant." (Hebrews 13:20, 21.) Moreover, by the covenant, ratified by the blood of Christ, will mankind be judged, rewarded, and punished. God is no respecter of persons. He will tolerate no partiality with man in dealing with his law. And to reject any one or number of the ordinances of his law and covenant is to "break" it. (See Isaiah 24:1-6.)

This is just the complaint made by the Lord of this covenant against the inhabitants of the earth, and the penalty is his "curse," and the burning of the last day,—Christ's coming in glory to reign, judge, and reward. Through the ordinance of laying on of hands, by God's command, children are blessed, men are ordained to their respective offices in the church of God, the sick are healed, and spiritual blessings are conferred on the faithful in Christ. (See Mark 10:13, 14; John 14:12; 15:16; Acts 13:1-3; 1 Timothy 1:6; Titus 1:6; Mark 16:18; 6:5; James 5:13-15.) Jesus' blood reaches us through our obedience to the ordinances of the everlasting gospel. Let this truth be remembered.

The contrast! Let us contrast the foregoing plain, harmonious, divine teachings with the following human incongruities, from the so-called Reformation leaders, and note the diversity between them and the Bible.

Doctor William A. Hale, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, in a representative sermon preached in the Presbyterian church, Dayton, 1906 (he had been pastor of the Reformed Church, offspring of the Lutheran, for thirty years), said:

It is true that the sanctity of age commends itself to us.

We have a passion to go back into the centuries and fix our bearings by what we call the tenets of the great founders and leaders of historic movements. But unless these leaders can rightly claim divine authority that I am satisfied belongs to Moses, the apostles, and to Saint Paul, their sayings and writings must for ever be subject to revising by succeeding ages as certainly as the readjustment of science is dictated by a greater and truer knowledge. The whole question in my judgment must be determined by the attitude of thought towards the Bible.

A proper "judgment" is this last statement. But what about the "authority" of those "founders" of churches, and "leaders of historic movements"? Moses was authorized by direct revelation from God through God's angel, and told just what he was authorized to do in purview of his calling. (See Exodus 3.) And was also informed that difficulties lay in his way. Was Martin Luther or Ulrich Zwingli so-called and authorized to do what they did? The entire history of the world does not contain any such statement concerning them. They do not so claim for themselves. The apostles were called and given authority from heaven by God's own Son, the Christ. Was John Knox or John Calvin thus authorized by revelation from God direct to them? They do not so claim. No angel from heaven administered to them. Jesus never spoke to them giving them authority to reform or build the church, in his name, that history gives us any account of. No inspired prophet spoke to them, and ordained them as Jesus did the apostles. The popular religious world can not endure so close a relationship, or communion with God, even at this late day. Since not only the "writings" but also the institutions "formed" (without the "re"), the works and "movements" of those great leaders and founders have been revised and re-revised for three hundred and fifty years, we hence conclude that these leaders did not possess the "authority" that belonged to Moses, the apostles, and to Saint Paul. And it seems from revisions of religious forms and tenets now going on that the end of revision like that of science is not yet.

Of the creed of the Reformed Church, the Doctor says it "was formally adopted January 19, 1563, almost three hundred and fifty years old." Let us remember that it is an impossibility in the nature of things for a religious institution to antedate its creed. This reformed institution, being an original formation, never had an existence in the history of the world prior to the adoption of that creed. It is not, therefore, a reformation of Christ's church. No revelation came from God at that date. Whence, then, its authority? This author further said: "The regal truth of the Reformation was that of salvation by grace. The preaching of salvation by works had failed. It resulted either in self-righteousness or despair, either of which was fatal. Was the night referred to by our Savior,—wherein no man can

'work the works of God,' on in and prior to 1563? It is strange that Jesus did not know that 'salvation by works' would 'fail.'" That statement made to justify a religious movement is but a half truth. God's word unites faith and works as the securing of eternal life. "Faith without works is dead," says James. And grace divine enjoins good works that God ordains that we "walk in them." (Ephesians 2: 8, 9.) Call that statement a regal truth? There is only a half truth in it. Grace that saves man is the gospel. (See Romans 1: 16, 17.) It is "the word of his grace." (See Acts 14: 3.) "The grace of God that bringeth salvation" teaches "us that, denying all ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world." (Titus 2: 11, 12.) God's grace or the gospel of his grace, commands all men, "all nations," to be baptized for the remission of sins. "Worldliness" says we can omit this and still be saved. God's grace teaches us that he saves us "by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost." (Titus 3: 5.) This is one of the righteous acts or works that God's grace enjoins in order to salvation, but which the Reformation may omit, and be saved anyway! God's grace, by which we are "saved," the great gift of his gospel, constitutes those who "obey it" (2 Thessalonians 1: 8), "his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." (Ephesians 2: 10.) God's good works have never failed. It is men's human creeds that bring confusion and failure. God's power abounds toward all who obey him.

"We agree now that one who believes in the love of God, in the sacrifice of Christ, and in salvation by faith in his promises—one who openly confesses and serves him—is a child of God and will be everlastingly saved, no matter what rites he serves." Why not believe in God's commands, as well as his promises? All his promises are to be realized on condition that his commands are observed. Moreover, there are no "rites" to observe, only as commanded, unless they are human rites, as sprinkling and pouring have been substituted for God's command to be baptized.

Each of the ministers who preached during the series of meetings arranged at Dayton, told why he was what he was. The sermons are plain. Reverend Doctor M. B. Fuller, Dayton, Ohio, in his sermon said he was what he was because of "the preachableness of the creed," and doubtless the various representatives of all the diverse creeds claim with equal truth and authority the "preachableness" of their respective creeds. But where and with whom did the idea of the creed originate? Not with Christ or his apostles or prophets. Not with the Bible. The Bible has this to say relative to human statutes being substituted for God's commandments: "For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, and had feared other gods, and walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the Lord cast out from before the children of Israel, and of the kings of Israel, which they had made."—2 Kings 17: 7, 8.

The heathen, without any revelation from God, made religious "statutes" of their own, and the "kings of Israel" under like circumstances did as the heathen [Gentiles—C.S.]; and they made religious "statutes" also, and sinned against "the Lord their God," and "he removed them out of his sight." (Verse 18.) "Also Judah kept not the commandments of the Lord their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made. And the Lord rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of the spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight."—Verses 19, 20.

Thus was Israel and Judah rejected of God for forming "statutes," that led them away from God's laws and commandments. This evil characterized Judah till they were led in their blindness to reject their Savior. (See Malachi 3: 7.) "This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honor-eth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15: 8, 9. Creed-making led ancient Israel away from God to their rejection of him, and creed-making and creed-following will ever have the same effect in any age. No creed can be substituted for the divine law, and men be saved by it. See what multitudes have been led away from God's command given by the Holy Ghost, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 38), by the substitution of pouring and sprinkling in its stead, by the creeds and dogmatism of men during the last sixteen hundred years. The Doctor continued: "As members of the Methodist Church we have a Christian right to existence. The Savior did not pray that we be one in ritual or government, but, 'one in us,' that is, in spiritual life and love, while Paul reminds us, that 'there are diversities of operations' and administrations, yet nevertheless there is the same Spirit."

It seems that some are almost gifted to hide truth by words, to darken "counsel by words without knowledge." (Job 38: 2.) If one did not understand that the Doctor was a religionist, he might think he was toying the Bible. Now listen to the Savior's words of prayer: "For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them."—John 17: 8. These apostles were to go into all the world and preach those words. (See Matthew 28: 18, 19.) Again he prayed: "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth. As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."—Verses 17, 18. God sent him to preach "the gospel," "the kingdom of God" (Luke 4: 18, 43; Mark 1: 14, 15); and he sent them to "preach the gospel to every creature." (Mark 16: 15-17.)

After thus praying to his Father for the apostles, his prayer continues: "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."—Verses 20, 21.

If the "one in us" quoted by the Doctor is to be understood as he construes it, and as represented in the divided sects as to-day, based on differing creeds, it in reality meant that Christ prayed for divisions among all who believe in him through their word, as divided in this age! And their being divided is to be the infallible evidence to "the world" that God sent him into the world as the Christ! Else how is his prayer to be answered? Further, God's word given to the apostles and which they were to preach to the world was designed to beget a diversity of faiths, not "one faith," a multitude of differing creeds as the basis of differing churches and church politics, "as it is this day." "Many bodies," not "one"; many spirits, not "one." Exit Paul. (See Ephesians 4: 1-6.)

"Diversities of operations" and "administrations" is made to do duty in the interests of conflicting creeds and diverse bodies, churches, just as though, while Christ prayed that all who "believe" on him through God's word "may be one," the Holy Ghost would operate against the Son's prayer, and teach disunity in belief, and thus divide the Godhead! Christ prayed for us all to be "in the unity of" the faith and the "Spirit"; God and the Spirit would baptize us into many differing bodies! Let us hope that the light of truth may penetrate the dark recesses of the confusion that now prevails in the world, and save men from the whirlpool of spiritual death and unbelief a divided religious world is sinking them into. The ringing of the changes on "a free salvation," "a full salvation," and "a felt salvation," "evangelical," "evangelicalism," means no progress in the gospel work, so long as the foundations and the doctrinal buildings thereon do not in fact and on principle agree, but divide men.

A STRONG RELIGIOUS POSITION.

Reverend H. P. Whidden, Baptist, stated in his sermon,

I am a Baptist because I believe that an unprejudiced study of history shows that Baptists were the first among great Christian denominations to stand for these two vital principles from which others that I shall mention are naturally deduced. 1. The supremacy of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord in the heart of the individual, and 2. The absolute worth of the individual life.

Nothing peculiarly strange about these two statements that they should form the basis of a religious body separate and apart from those who believe the gospel. That Christ is the king of saints was taught in apostolic days; that in life from the dead, and the Savior of man, he is the king of glory, his entrance or revelation into the world, and the power of the Holy Ghost as the element of the gospel by which his Messiahship is brought to the knowledge of man, is the great rock on which his church is founded. (See Matthew 16: 16-18; 1 Corinthians 12: 13.) "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." "The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." By the natural mind, unaided by the revealing power of the Holy Ghost, man can not know the truth.

But as it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things that God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. . . . even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. . . . Now we have received . . . the Spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God.—1 Corinthians 2: 9-12.

Wherefore I give you to understand, . . . that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost.—1 Corinthians 12: 3.

By the Holy Ghost, its revealing power, only can man be a witness for Jesus Christ. Surely there is nothing of the modern Baptist in this teaching of Jesus and Paul. They deny present-day revelation by the Holy Ghost.

But after making Christ supreme in the hearts of the believer, and referring to his command to the apostles to baptize the nations, and quoting several New Testament passages enjoining obedience to this ordinance of the gospel, and quoting the great leaders of the past as to what baptism is, its so-called mode, he says, "Yet we do not believe that in any form of baptism there is a particle of saving power." As a climax to this statement this Reverend D. D. says, "There is the principle that formed faith in Christ, alone saved." I emphasize two words here. He calls this a "principle." But I have been looking through God's revelations to find proof of this or a statement in the least resembling it; but fail to find in them any where that "faith in Christ, alone saved."

It is no "principle" at all. Indeed it is not true. Faith in the Godhead is all essential, but so is repentance, likewise baptism in water. Peter says, "Baptism doth also now save us."—1 Peter 3: 21. Jesus says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16: 16. So Jesus and Peter both differ from the expressed form of this modern religion. It really does not precede the days of Roger Williams, so this divine affirms, virtually, thus:

In the year that Roger Williams arrived in Massachusetts the General Court passed the following: "It is ordered that henceforth no man shall be admitted to the freedom of this commonwealth but such as are members of the church within the limits of this jurisdiction." So we see that it still remained for some one to proclaim the doctrine of soul-liberty in its fullness, so far as the relation of church and state were concerned. Expelled from Massachusetts Williams soon landed at Narragansett Bay and ere long established what historians call the first absolutely free commonwealth in the world.

Roger Williams was doubtless a good man; but he did more for civil progress and liberty than for the development of religious advancement, if his followers interpret him aright. Let us see. The historian, Bancroft, says:

At the time when Germany was desolated by the implacable wars of religion; when even Holland could not pacify vengeful sects; when France was still to go through the fearful struggle with bigotry; when England was gasping under despotism of intolerance, almost half a century before William Penn became an American proprietor; and while Descartes was constructing modern philosophy on the method of free reflection, Roger Williams assented the great doctrine of intellectual liberty and made it the corner-stone of a political institution.

The great truth of personal liberty of conscience in religious and civil relations, so long forced to slumber during the Dark Ages, began to dawn early in the fifteenth century, and gradually grew more brilliant as circumstances developed in the world until through the agencies used its sun arose on the American Continent two hundred and fifty years later. But mostly in civil matters, for religious intolerance has not all disappeared yet.

All the reformers of society, religious and political, aided in this good work, and light along these lines increased; and the "Mother's" family also increased during those times—but when the time had arrived for the kingdom of heaven to be restored (see Isaiah 2: 1-5; Micah 4: 1) "in the last days," and before our Savior comes to "judge among the nations," and proclaim that wars shall "cease unto the end of the world" (Psalm 46: 9), who shall presume to legislate for heaven without the divine commission? To whom did the angel of the Apocalyptic vision come and bestow the divine authority to again proclaim "the everlasting gospel" to the nations, and gather from Babylon God's children? (See Revelation 14: 6, 7; 18: 1-4, 8.)

The Reformation, so-called, has not reproduced the kingdom of heaven. At least they have so decided among themselves—at least they have not decided which one of themselves is the church fully restored. Each decides not to acknowledge the other, or their accepted and respective lines of authority. Where, then, in all this medley is the kingdom?

LEAVES FROM LIFE.
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF CHARLES DERRY.

PATRIARCH CHARLES DERRY.

I am the youngest son of Charles and Amelia Litley Derry, and was born on the twenty-fifth day of July, 1826, at Walsam Wood, Staffordshire, England. My father had died seven months prior to my birth. My mother was a godly woman, and in my early infancy she dedicated me to the Lord, to be his while I should live, taking for her pattern Hannah, the mother of Samuel of old, and with the same purpose. She was poor, and having my brother and myself to care for, she was compelled to hire out to work for a living, and as no one would permit her to have her children with her, she had to put us out to the care of others when I was ten weeks old. My brother was placed in his grandmother's care and I to the care of an aunt, but negligence on her part bid fair to limit my days to my infancy, which, when mother saw, she placed me in more kindly and careful hands; and when about two years old, I was placed in the care of my maternal grandmother, with whom I remained until I was between nine and ten years of age, when I went to work for a living. Here was the end of my scholastic education. I had learned to read, and the Bible, Pilgrim's Progress and Æsop's Fables were the books from which I drew the pabulum for my youthful mind. But much as I loved to read the Bible, I can not truthfully say that I followed its teachings.

Grandmother was a good woman, very rigid in her way, and my obdurate spirit could hardly bear restraint, hence I was by no means a model child, and harshness did not modify my disposition, hence I look back with regret to my youthful waywardness. I might have been different had I my loving mother's personal care, but that could not be. Mother kept her resolve to remain a widow until my brother and I were in a condition to earn our own living, and when we were of proper age, she apprenticed us to learn a trade each, my brother to harnessmaking and I to the blacksmithing, mother clothing us until we were twenty-one years old. When she had thus situated us so that she knew we were provided for, she consented to give her hand again in marriage, and have a home of her own, to which she could invite her children.

My lot did not fall in a pleasant place, nor favorable to training in the way of righteousness. My shopmates were a drunken, swearing crew, and by no means inclined to favor the mistakes of a friendless boy, and my proud spirit not willingly submitting to tyranny, did not make it easier for me. But as I learned in after-years, mother had dedicated me to the Lord, I have long since been assured that her offering was accepted, her prayers heard, and the leadings of the Holy Spirit were manifested in those youthful days. I hated their drunken debaucheries, and I despised their profane language as much as I hated the tyranny, but I found my heart inclined to serve the Lord. I attended Sunday-school, and when about fifteen years of age the minister of the church called Independents organized a class for the study of theology and invited me to become a student. I did so and some time afterward he offered to send me to college to study for the ministry, but I was bound by the law to remain an apprentice until I was twenty-one years old, hence could not avail myself of that privilege.

When I was about seventeen years old, I became convinced that it was my duty to be baptized by immersion, and was accordingly immersed. After an examination by a committee as to my spiritual condition, they decided that I was saved and therefore a fit subject for baptism; thus I became a member of the Baptist Church. When about nineteen, my brother told me of a people called Latter Day Saints, and of the fun that he and some other young men had in opposing them. I resolved to go and hear them. He begged me not to go lest I should be deceived by them. He was a Methodist. Having a mind of my own, and being curious to know what they taught, I went one Sabbath afternoon. About fifteen or twenty people were assembled in the town hall. Two men, not dressed in clerical robes, nor using the language of the learned, but men whose hands were hard and begrimed with toil, had come from their distant home to teach this people. I knew their teaching was biblical, and I listened as they declared the principles of the gospel, until the last preacher declared the Baptists had no authority to baptize. I arose immediately and left the hall.

About one year later I determined to go again, and I found quite a congregation. They were holding a social meeting, commemorating the death of Christ, then a prayer-service. I had often heard people praying for a "Pentecostal shower," but I had never seen one, and had never met with anybody who had. But here and now I saw such manifestations of power that I knew were not human, and a sweet and blessed influence filled the room, and not the room alone, for it seemed to me every heart was filled with it, and my own drank in its blessedness, until I said in my heart, "If ever there was a Pentecostal shower it is here to-day." There I heard unlettered lips speak, in angelic tongues, the wonderful works of God. The language was sublime; it bore evidence of divine power, and a holy calm pervaded the entire assembly and a sweet and peaceful spirit filled my breast, hence it was impossible for me to attribute it to satanic power.

But human nature is perverse, and I was not prepared to cast in my lot with a people despised by all the world. Satan was alert and by his cunning snares I was led into the follies of the world, and especially into the use of profane language, which I had always been shocked to hear, and which I was now really shocked at coming from my own lips. Many times I have smitten my breast and cried to think of my great profanity, and I have asked myself, Shall I never become a man and govern myself? And it would really seem as if an answer would come assuring me that I should yet have power to control my tongue and use it only for the glory of God. I had lost faith in the Baptist theology, and I was at sea, as a ship without a rudder.

By and by I was twenty-one years old, and my apprenticeship bonds were broken, and irksome as my bondage of eight long years had been, I was now in the world alone, as a "lone sparrow upon the housetop." No home, and without employment, but I had two strong arms and hands and my mother still lived. I could go to her and be comforted, for she never lost interest in her children. I soon found employment in a large foundry, and secured board and lodging with my mother for a reasonable sum. In this foundry I had a little experience: arrangements were made at pay-day that the workmen should be paid at a tavern. When the boss counted out my wages, there was sixpence short. I called his attention to it. He said that went to pay for a quart of ale. I replied, "I do not drink ale." He said I must pay for it whether I drank it or not. I replied, "I don't pay for what I don't have." He said I could not work there if I did not submit to that rule. I told him emphatically that I would not work for any man that exacted submission to such a rule. I found employment elsewhere.

In the meantime my stepfather said to me one day, "Charles, you are well acquainted with the Bible, there is going to be a discussion between the Methodists and the Latter Day Saints and I would like you to go and hear them." I told him I would. They occupied alternate nights. The first night that I went was occupied by the Methodist. The first part of his discourse was devoted to the character of Joseph Smith and the Saints, whom he painted in blackest colors, which I thought must be correct, for surely a minister will not lie. He next criticised their doctrine. Here I discovered that he was misrepresenting God's word, and the thought flashed to my mind, If this man can misrepresent God's word, he can misrepresent God's people. I will now fathom this matter to the bottom.

I attended the debate all through. I sought divine aid that I might judge rightly. I studied the sacred record and my constant prayer was, "O Lord, if the Latter Day Saints are thy people, lead me to them; if they are not thy people, lead me from them; I want to do thy will."

I had faith in God. I was satisfied that when I asked him for bread he would not give me a stone. I studied, I compared, I prayed with all the earnestness of my soul, for I felt it was a matter of eternal life or death. I saw no vision. I heard no voice. I beheld no miracle, but the light of eternal truth burst upon my soul with a clearness that swept away all doubt, and I resolved to obey the heavenly message, as Jesus had declared it, and as it had been restored in the wisdom of God by angelic hands.

On the next Sabbath after thus resolving, I started for the Saints' meeting to be baptized, but there was no meeting—they had gone to a conference in the town of Birmingham. I can not describe my disappointment, and much less can I portray the terrible temptations to which I was exposed during the succeeding week. Suggestions that there was no God; all religion was a fable; there was no hereafter. It seemed as though the fiends of hell were let loose upon me until I was nearly overcome. But when the Sabbath returned strength was given me to attend the Saints' meeting, and at the close I requested baptism. The elder told me he was to baptize a young man the next night and he would baptize me then. I replied, "Now is the accepted time. Now is the day of salvation. I must be baptized now, October 3, 1847." He baptized me, and to say that the Spirit of God rested upon me, is to put it mildly. My whole being seemed filled with the divine influence, and as I arose from the watery grave I felt impelled to give glory to God for his redeeming love, and I testified to the vast crowd to the truth of the gospel.

When I made known what I had done to my people, my stepfather told me I could stay no longer under his roof. I calmly took him at his word, but it was hard to leave mother. Other relatives turned their backs upon me. I had disgraced them by uniting with such a people as the Latter Day Saints, so they thought. "They had expected better things of me." This treatment did not discourage me; I knew I had obeyed the truth. In my confirmation my future was portrayed, and the divine influence filled my heart with unspeakable joy.

Within three months from my baptism I was called into the ministry, ordained an elder, and sent out to preach the gospel to the world, just as Christ sent out his disciples. Truly in this God was true to his plan and purpose. (See 1 Corinthians 1:26, 29.) "I conferred not with flesh and blood," but obedient to the heavenly call, I went forth trusting in God to qualify me for the work, conscious that if he did not qualify me I would prove an utter failure. But I also realized the imperative necessity of doing my part in the application of my power in study and research for the hidden treasures of knowledge and wisdom. I never believed in the theory of "opening the mouth and God would fill it," though I had a traveling companion of that faith the first three months. When the time came to test his theory, he was left every time, and as a result he was called in, and I have never been called in yet; but I thank God for his forbearance with my weakness.

I want to tell of the first meal we ate on the first day of our travels. We were going to the city of Litchfield, the estate of one of the lord bishops of the Church of England. On our way, we called on a couple of Saints to cheer them on the good way. They were very poor, but they insisted on us eating at their table. The meal consisted of stale bread and bacon-fat spread on it, and the sugarless coffee we drank was made from burnt crusts of bread. It was the best they had and they gave it to us in the fullness of their love. We ate and asked God's blessing upon the aged couple, and went on our way rejoicing, and I have never forgotten old Bro. and Sr. Hodson, of Walsam Wood, Staffordshire, England, and I do not believe the Lord ever will.

My first sermon was preached in the cathedral, city of Litchfield. He who had called me stood by me. The audience gave evidence of their appreciation of my effort, but right here it seemed necessary that I should receive a permanent lesson as to my dependence on God and my own nothingness, and the loving Father effectually taught me. My next sermon was in the neighborhood where I was baptized. I had taken my text, nor was I guilty of wandering from it; I could do nothing but repeat it over and over. I said to myself, "Charlie, if that is the best you can do, go home and stay there." It was a bitter lesson but given in love, and I have always tried to profit by it. I can not give one hundredth part of my ministerial experience in the space allotted me, but I will give a few instances to illustrate the kindly dealings of my heavenly Father toward me and some that are truly representative of the writer. At the end of three months my yokefellow was called in.

About that time I was requested to accompany another brother to the town of Redditch, a place famous for the manufacture of needles. This brother had been there, but had failed to get an audience. We traveled twenty-one miles that Sabbath and I preached three times in the open air, my companion desiring me to do the preaching. No one invited us to eat or lodge with them, so we went to Bromsgrove and stayed with some Saints. The next day we returned to Redditch, where I preached again in the street. No one opposed, yet no one offered us their hospitality. Like the Master, we had nowhere to lay our heads, nor wherewith to satisfy hunger. After preaching, we wandered into the fields to spend the evening in prayer, and now a very strange circumstance occurred: While I was engaged in prayer, a strong and vivid impression came to my mind that the young lady to whom I was betrothed was suffering, and at the point of death, and with that impression the spirit of prayer rested upon me in a powerful degree, and as though I had the actual realization of her perilous condition, I prayed God in the name of Jesus to rebuke the foul spirit that was afflicting her, and restore her to health and vigor. I was at least thirty miles distant from her, but I trusted in God. Afterward we found a wagon under a shed; there we lay the rest of the night, until our morning prayers broke the slumberings of the lark and quietly he arose in the air and joined his sweet and inspiring motions with ours in praise to Him who gave us all life and every blessing we have.

This was now Tuesday morning and on Thursday I found myself at her side, and without relating my experience, I inquired about her health. She told of her sickness and terrible suffering; that it seemed to her and the rest of the family that she could not live. I inquired as to the time of her greatest suffering. She told me it was about eleven o'clock on the Monday night. I then told my experience at that same hour of the same night, and she testified that at that hour she was relieved of the pain and restored to health. Here I received evidence of the watchful eye of God over his children, and his willingness and power to communicate with and bless them that trust in him.

About this time, the summer of 1848, I was sent to the ancient town of Bridgenorth in Shropshire, to warn the inhabitants of the near coming of Christ, and declared the only means of preparation, namely, the gospel. On my way I visited my mother, and preached to her that gospel. She received it with gladness, and now it was that she revealed to me the circumstances of my early infancy, and her dedication of me to the Lord, as already stated. I afterwards baptized her, to her joy and to my unspeakable satisfaction. She assured me that she never lost confidence that God accepted her dedication of me to the Lord, and she felt the blessed assurance that I would yet be found in his service. As I left her on the occasion of my visit, she put a silver sixpence in my hand, and with her parting blessing I wended my way toward my destination some thirty miles away. My journeyings were nearly always on foot and alone.

About ten miles from mother's I met with a small branch of the church, called the Wordsly Branch, all strangers to me in the flesh, but as I proved, not strangers in the Spirit. At their request I preached to them that night and they seeing that my shoes were worn out, presented me with the first pair of boots I ever wore. In them I traveled on to my new field of labor. On my way I reflected upon the fact that I was going to a strange place and without means, except the sixpence mother gave me. I came to a lonely place, and knelt down under a large tree. I presented my case to the Lord, that I was out at his bidding and in his appointed way; and I held the sixpence in my open hand, told him that was all I had, that he had promised to provide for my necessities, and I earnestly and believingly besought him to supply my wants. I then traveled on, but by some means I wandered into a by-way. Unconsciously I sat down to write a poem, but a very strange breeze arose immediately around me and produced a strange feeling in me, and with the impression that I must move on, I did so and found myself in a forest. It began to rain. I saw a small cabin built of poles. I went in there and wrote some verses. A young man about my own age came to the door, demanded to know what I was doing there, and said that the keeper would have arrested me had he seen me. Seeing that I was writing, he requested me to let him read it. I put it into his hands, but my writing was so poor he requested me to read it. I did so. He then asked what I was; I told him and asked permission to preach the gospel to him, in which I occupied about twenty minutes. He said the doctrine was very reasonable, and gave me a crown piece, which was five shillings. I asked his name. It was "Lord Stamford." I thanked my Lord for sending Lord Stamford to me with means for present needs. I found my way out of the woods and reached Bridgenorth; preached each night for two weeks, baptized five precious souls and confirmed them. Here I met Bro. William Hawkins, who had come from another district, and we labored together. I found him a faithful laborer and a pleasant companion. We had some interesting experiences together which want of space will not permit me to relate now. But I shall ever cherish his friendship.

Early in 1849 I was united in marriage with my betrothed, of whose sickness and recovery I have already spoken. Ann Stokes, the mother of my children, who for nearly seven years willingly and uncomplainingly endured the hardships of a missionary's wife, which I hope none are called to endure now.

I must pass over many important incidents during more than six years of labor in the English mission field, in which I was greatly blessed, and during which my family were sometimes provided for in an evidently divine manner. But in 1852 polygamy was proclaimed, which brought a great shock to the church in Great Britain, and reduced its numbers, and I confess that for a brief season I was led to believe it of divine origin. The cunning manner in which they threw a glamour over the practices of Abraham, Jacob, David, and Solomon, blinded my eyes as to the real truth, although I never had a desire to "Pass by the angels and the gods." I was always contented with my one wife.

In 1854 I was counseled by the church authorities to go with my family to "Zion" (?) and was recommended as worthy to enter its sacred (?) precincts. Obedient to counsel I went with my wife and children, hoping to realize that it was indeed the Zion of the Lord, but which I found to be hell. God in his mercy, as I see it now, thought best to take my beloved and loving wife to her rest. She had suffered enough, and had never shrunk from known duty, cost what it might. She died on the way and I endured worse than the bitterness of death in this terrible separation. I with my two little helpless babes arrived in the valley of the Great Salt Lake, destitute and alone.

It did not take long to discern that that was no Zion. I looked for purity, but I found corruption. Instead of unity and peace, I found dissension and strife. Instead of true brotherhood, I found envy and greed. I hoped to find better things from those in authority, but I found greed and oppression. My heart was sick; my whole being was disgusted. I could not return, I had no means. I was in the grasp of the monster, and I resolved to do the best I could under the circumstances. I had to live for my children. Life had lost its value for me. I knew of no other people that had clung to the truth I had obeyed, and which had given me so much joy in the past; and the terrible thought of delusion haunted my mind. But there were evidences in the past that I could not forget, that testified strongly of God and of Christ, and the truth of the restored gospel, but my soul was wounded. I had given the only part of my life that was worth having to the pure gospel of Christ and now I must feed on ashes and dirt in this pretended Zion. In the meantime God comforted my heart by giving to me another mother to my children, in answer to my prayer, and her their lustful eyes coveted also, but she was deaf to their flattery and blandishments.

We endured the loathsome conditions four years and a half, and then by strenuous efforts, and the goodness of God, we found our way back to the United States, or rather to the then territory of Nebraska. Here I found my mother and brother, whom my letters had caused to halt. We were received with parental and brotherly kindness, but the worry and hardships on the journey had exhausted our powers of endurance, and soon after our arrival, wife and myself were taken down with sickness, and we lay helpless side by side for a number of weeks, but received the best care that our friends could give us. We were glad to be once more where liberty could be enjoyed and with our loved ones.

We left the Salt Land in the beginning of June, 1859, and landed in Nebraska about the end of August. In the year 1860 I began to hear rumors of a Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints under the presidency of the son of the Martyr. But I looked upon it as a ruse by Brigham Young to decoy the thousands that had left Utah back into his net, hence I paid no attention to it. But early in the year of 1860, when visiting a neighbor, he handed me a number of the True Latter Day Saints' Herald. He was not a member of the church, but had acquaintances that were, and this HERALD had been sent to him for me. I read it all aloud to him, and as I read, that same divine influence that I had received upon my entrance into the church and which had been with me in all my ministry rested mightily upon me, and I said to him, "That just suits me."

I returned home, told my wife and children what I had found, and asked their forgiveness for wrong-teaching. I now told them God lived, Jesus Christ was the Redeemer of mankind, the Bible was God's word, the Book of Mormon was true. We had a little prayer-meeting. One never to be forgotten. We all wept and prayed. I told the Lord I would bow to his will, and asked him to lead me as he wanted me to go. Utah, like a dark cloud, stood before me. I shuddered, but said, "Lord, thy will be done." The cloud vanished, and peace and joy filled every heart. God had tested me; he had found me loyal and the bitter cup was dashed away, and his divine benediction given. It was now agreed that my wife should make me a few cookies, and I would start into Iowa and endeavor to find the officers of the Reorganized Church.

This was in the end of February, 1861. The snow was eighteen inches deep on the prairies. We were about fifty miles from the Missouri River. I plodded on until I reached that stream; snow had been melting and water covered the ice shoe deep. I trusted in God and launched out on the treacherous river. The truth was more precious to me than life. I landed safely on the Iowa soil, or mud and slush, for I had at last six miles of it to wade through to reach Council Bluffs. I had been told the name of a man who lived there, who was a member of the church. I walked up the main street, saw a man cutting wood; I inquired where a man named Isaac Beebe lived. He straightened up to full six feet in height, saying, "Right here in this body." I told him my errand and asked permission to stay with him till morning. He replied, "Come in, we are to be careful to entertain strangers, for thereby we may entertain angels unawares." I told him I was no angel, but simply Charlie Derry. He introduced me to his wife, who also made me welcome. He told me he thought I would find two elders about ten miles east of there.

The next morning I started on to find them. The country was all covered with slush and mud. I traveled until I was tired, and seeing a log cabin I went to seek rest. I was cordially invited in by the lady of the cabin. I then inquired for a family named Campbell, the name given me by Mr. Beebe. She replied, "This is the place." I then told what I was in search of. She thought the two elders would be there in fifteen minutes, and in about that time they came. I told them my errand, and inquired about the church and its doctrines, and I found to my satisfaction that they had no fellowship with Brighamism, but held to the gospel as Christ taught it, and which I had received in my native land. I journeyed with them to Farm Creek. Their names were W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs. We were all welcomed at the home of Mr. Calvin Beebe, Sr., and on Sunday, March 3, I was baptized by Elder Blair and confirmed by him. While his hands were on my head he inquired what office I formerly held. I replied, "I am not here for any office, but simply for a place in the kingdom of God." He replied, "It is my duty to ordain you an elder." I submitted, and he ordained me to the office of elder.

Contrary to my expectations and intentions I was called into the mission field in a short time afterward, and on the 15th of April, 1861, I was enabled to begin my work, through the generosity of E. C. Briggs and J. M. Putney. I labored in Western Iowa until June, 1862, when I was appointed on a mission to England in connection with J. W. Briggs and J. Jeremiah, at a conference held in Gallands Grove, Iowa. Here I saw for the first time Joseph Smith, the eldest son of the Martyr. There and then we formed a friendship that has never been broken, and I trust never will.

On or about the 6th of December, having been ill for many weeks and still very feeble, I started to fill the mission appointed me. I had just thirty-five cents in my pocket, but I had faith in God and five thousand miles to travel by land and sea. The church bore my expenses across the sea, and while I did not solicit aid directly or indirectly from any earthly being, my way was opened to the sea and I was cared for beyond my expectations. Wherever I went, though an entire stranger to all, after I left Western Iowa, I was received with such cordiality as can only be manifest by Saints of the Most High.

I did not take a cabin passage across the deep. I remembered I had left my family in a log cabin twelve feet square on the outside, and depending on the promise of several brethren to see that they did not want for the necessaries of life. And here I want to say these brethren nobly filled their promise. I thought it my duty to sacrifice my comforts for the loved ones at home.

I feel that I must relate the two following incidents in my journey: While walking up Broadway, in New York, I came to an artist's window; I saw a large picture representing a ship on fire. It seemed grandly and terribly real; it seemed I could almost hear the terrible shrieks and cries for help, and the agonizing groans of the dying; the bright tongues of flame reaching out in every direction, licking up the ship's rigging, devouring the crackling timbers, and hundreds of poor wretches being devoured by the flames. Many others were vainly trying to save their lives in boats and planks till my heart sickened at the horrible sight, and I was filled with terrible fear, so much so, that it was with great difficulty that I could prevent this body of mine from turning around and going home. I can not describe the struggle between my spirit and body. The one desirous and determined to fill my mission at all costs, and the flesh cowering and trembling with fear at the possible dangers of the deep. Then I vividly realized the force of the Master saying, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." God gave me strength; I conquered and went and secured my passage and went on board the ship Baltimore. I had my berth in the steerage.

On the fourth night out from New York, the vessel rushed into an ice-field, while going about ten knots an hour. I was awakened by the grinding of the vessel as though it was on rocks. I went on deck. I could see nothing but a solid field of ice in every direction. It had knocked a hole in the fore part of the ship fourteen feet long and about one foot deep. The cry rang out that the vessel would sink. Even the crew partook of the fear. Here I had the privilege of seeing the weakness of the moral courage of people that had no faith in God, but were scoffers at his truth. I had presented the gospel to my fellow passengers; they treated it with contempt. Now they came to me filled with the most abject fear. I told them, "Gentlemen, I came on board of this vessel in the name of God Almighty. This vessel will carry me to Liverpool, or if it does not, another will." They thought I was a strange man, but the good ship Baltimore carried us safely over, but every man had to work his passage at the pump.

I landed in Liverpool on the 4th of February. After resting a day or two I visited George Q. Canon, then president of the Brighamite church in the British Isles. I made known to him my mission, and requested the privilege of presenting my message to his people in their place of worship at headquarters. He branded me and my brethren as apostates and denied me the privilege of occupying any place of theirs. I invited him to investigate the matter before his people, reminding him that I was alone, and if he and his church were right, it would be an easy thing to expose my errors and prove me wrong.

Brn. Briggs and Jeremiah did not come to England until the middle of May. I threw down the gauntlet to Canon counselors, but they dare not take it up. I asked Canon if he would publish Joseph's epistle in the Millennial Star. He refused. But here is an instance of his deceit and love of falsehood. In the next issue of the Millennial Star he published a pretended prophecy, claiming that it had been revealed to him that apostates would soon be among the "saints," trying to lead them out of the true church. Then followed a denunciation upon all who should receive these "apostates" or bid them God-speed. When I went among them this fraud had all the effect of a genuine revelation, (although I had done the revealing,) for it closed almost every door against me. But I continued to work against the terrible odds.

Brn. Briggs and Jeremiah found me at Westbromwich on the 15th of May. To say I was glad, is putting it mildly. The greater part of the responsibility was now upon stronger shoulders; hitherto I had borne it alone, but I shirked no duty. I may not have accomplished much, but I had done what I could. Space will not allow me to give the varied experiences I had during this arduous mission. I met with many obstacles, but defeat never. Many of those I went to bless closed their doors, their ears and hearts against me and my message; but for this I was prepared. There were some noble souls who received me, ministered to my wants and encouraged me, and while they used caution, as mere men and women in the examination of my message, they accepted it and rejoiced in the deliverance that had come to them.

I can not name all, but prominent among them were Charles Sheen and wife; Thomas Taylor and wife; Henry Tyler and wife; William Morgan and wife; Sr. Jane Fox, now Sr. Jane Berry of Atchison, Kansas; Richard Stokes and wife; John H. Morgan and wife, and others in Wales and in different parts of the land, whose kindness will never be forgotten. I continued my labors until the month of June, 1864. Then wearied and worn down by hardships and exposure, the Lord opened my way to return home; but when I boarded the vessel I had just one farthing left after my passage was paid, but the thought that I was going home to my loved ones made me feel rich, and I still trusted in God. I was seven weeks upon the sea in a sailing vessel. A severe fever assailed me; ship's doctor thought I would have to sleep in the depth of the ocean, but my work was not done, and I am here still, forty-three years after that wearisome voyage.

Since that time I have labored in Iowa, Illinois, Missouri, Minnesota, Nebraska, Idaho, Utah, Dakota, and Canada. In the last place I was on a visit, but I unfurled the gospel banner to the breeze. If my work is measured by the number I have baptized I shall be far behind many of my brethren; but if grubbing up the roots, removing the stones, breaking up the ground, and sowing the seed is counted as of value to the Master, I shall be content. I have never sought soft and easy places, and if I have watered the seed where others have broken up the ground and planted, I have never failed to give credit for their work. I take no special credit for the offices I have been called unto, but if the Master shall find that I have done my duty, I shall be satisfied.

I may have overreached the bounds of space allotted, but I could not crowd it into less space and do justice to myself or the readers. My history is written up to the present date. I have not thought it worthy of publication, even if I had the means to publish it.

His Dream of Mother.

BY ELLEN SHERARD ADAIR.

He had passed from the rosy dawn of youth
To the sunset side of life;
He had drunk to the dregs the bitter cup
Of sorrow, grief, and strife.
Homeless and sick on a couch he lay,
A sister watched o'er him the while;
A change seemed to come o'er his face one day,
Hard lines gave way to a smile.

For hours he had tossed on a bed of pain,
Feverish, restless, and sad;
But he fell asleep, and a beautiful smile
Told the watcher once more he was glad.
"You have slept, my brother," she kindly said
In a voice so low and calm;
"You are better, I'm sure, you look so bright,"
And he feebly answered, "I am."
"I had a beautiful dream while I slept,
I went back to the dear old home;
And mother was there, and together we wept
While she embraced me and called me her son.
"She said, 'You have come to see me at last,
My own dear boy, you have come';
She kissed me again, and the dream was past,
But its sweetness still lingers on.
"Tis years since they laid her dear form away
In the grave so cruel and lone,
And my home and hopes all vanished that day
When I knew that dear mother was gone.
"Oh why have I been so slow to see
She was not dead, but only gone on;
And it seems she is watching and longing for me,
Her wayward boy to come home."
The tears fell fast on the furrowed cheek,
His sister drew near his side;
"Our Savior came the lost ones to seek,"
She said, while he sadly replied:
"God being my helper, from this day I'll try
To amend the wrongs I have done;
I'll seek to be worthy a home on high,
And again meet my mother at home."

Old Mothers.

It is not of young mothers that I wish to speak—mere girls with babies by the hand, their faces almost as round and pink as the infant's, and with slight difference in the modeling of feature except for the lift of the lids over the glad eyes and the winsome pride of the mouth; they are but children leading children; their maternity, to a degree, as wistful and incomplete as that of a little girl nursing a doll—but of real mothers, their hair streaked with gray—'tis the silver of a crown; their shoulders bent—'tis the weight of an imperial robe; and their steps unsteady—'tis the painful, beautiful mounting of the highest throne in the world—motherhood.

They are earth's queens, these tired old mothers. No youth or beauty can wrest their scepter from them, for only time and sorrow have given them dominion; but, alas! they rule, oh, so gently that we are hardly conscious of their sovereignty, and only do them homage when they are gone! Then we weep wearily, like heart-sick children, and refuse to be comforted. We decorate the mound 'neath which the patient form lies; we write songs of memory to the gentle presence that will never sit beside our heart again, and, too late, we yield our hearts to them who all their lives yielded their hearts to us.

In life we may have grudged them reverence, the heritage of age; we may have slighted their trembling old womanhood. Oh, the pity of it! Every true mother is in a large sense a Christ, for like Christ she has suffered, and like Christ she is too often crucified at the last.

"True sister of the Son of Man;
True sister of the Son of God;
What marvel that she leads the van
Of those who, in the path He trod,
Still bear the cross and wear the ban?"

But unlike His, hers is no tangible cross to cast its commanding shadow adown all the centuries. Indeed, men often fail to recognize this tree when they see it. Its upright is neglect, and the arms selfishness. Look well; at this very moment your own mother may be stretched upon it. Her age may render her querulous; is that your excuse? Her stiff fingers may bungle with her dressing if she is poor and no one aids her; her untidiness repels you, perhaps. Her movements are so feeble, so wavering, she renders you impatient. You have come to expect so much of her, and she can do so woefully little now you feel aggrieved. And so at last you unconsciously confess it; she is a burden, and from the hour of this acknowledgment her Calvary draws near. Her faults, often the lapsing back into childhood's ways, grow contemptible in your eyes. Her rambling conversation irritates you. You ignore and interrupt her, as though she were in very truth a child. You say her memory is failing. Perhaps it is; but one thing she remembers unto her last—her love for you, which you have seemingly forgotten, as the Jews forgot the love of Christ.

And thus I put the question to you who are sons and daughters: How many of you are Pontius Pilates? For thus are gentle mothers crucified; not one here, one there, but multitudes of them all over our Christian lands.—Mary M. Mears.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, September 12, 1908.

Editors Herald: It was indeed a pleasure to me to be in attendance at the Lamoni stake reunion—from the beginning to the close I thought it was a success. The services were spiritual, the attendance good, and the reunion committee had made the grounds pleasant to occupy. So that depressed spirits were removed by exultant forces. The reunion was a blessing to me; in the firmament of my past it shall shine as a bright star. In my youth I came to the conclusion that it is better to be with the people of God, though they may be poor, than with the rich where wickedness dwells. I am glad that my lot is cast with the church of God, restored to earth in these latter days by the hand of an angel. In comparison with the great work of God all else pales into insignificance.

The pleasures of wrong-doing are temporary. In Christianity, the only true foundation, is found that which gives to man the true perspective of life; seeing life as it is the children of God are willing to sacrifice many things which for the present would be joyous, and they choose what seems to some the more difficult path. Two paths running in entirely different directions are being followed, the one by the world, the other by the church. The world is running in the wrong direction. Men have sought luxury, rank, distinction, gratification of the flesh, etc., imagining that in them happiness is to be found. Never! Happiness is an assurance of acceptance with God, without such acceptance no man is truly happy. Any philosopher who would show men how to be happy should first find out God. Myriads have failed in their pursuit of happiness for the reason that God was given no consideration, without whom there can be no happiness.

There is a fine company of Saints in this city, and the prospects are bright for much good to be done by the church, Religio, and Sunday-school. The church-building is now paid for, and will soon be dedicated. This speaks well for the efforts of Bro. J. M. Baker and others of the ministry and the Saints here who have acquitted themselves creditably in God's harvest-field.

The press is, and has been from the first, favorable to our work; sometimes a synopsis of a sermon preached is called for and then printed. The movements of the church are given due notice, and withal we are treated fairly.

The sixth annual interstate (Iowa, Nebraska, and Dakota) fair is now on here. The city is thronged with visitors. Many from the country are in, and hotels are crowded. The gay life is sought—toward the theaters, skating-rinks, fair-grounds, and other places of amusement, the surging crowds go, and into the vortex of hurrying humanity every one seems anxious to plunge. To-day the fair closes. The carnival spirit is in the air, and as long as it lasts everybody is expected to be good-natured. On the streets is heard the cry, "Confetti! confetti! confetti!" The walks are covered with the little pieces of paper, and people are seen fighting their way through the crowds, wiping the stuff from their eyes, nose, mouth, and hair. It is a time of revelry.

I do not think it amiss to call attention to a prophecy given by the Apostle Paul, a prophecy which relates to our time. Perhaps we can profit by heeding the warning given in connection with the prediction. Here is the prophecy:

"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."—2 Timothy 3: 1-5.

It would be well to run over the list with care and see if there is anything mentioned from which we should "turn away." It is not right to imperil ourselves or to do anything that would imperil others; our safety lies in being on the side of God.

Perhaps I should say I was pleased, too, to be in attendance at the Little Sioux reunion, where I enjoyed the meetings, and being with friends, many of whom I had not seen since I was here just before going on my foreign mission.

Any one desiring to call my attention to places in the Little Sioux and Gallands Grove Districts, where preaching is desired, or where prospects are fair for new openings to be effected, address me here, 1000 West Seventh Street, which is my permanent address. Those having reports to make will please take notice of the above address; blanks designed to facilitate reporting can be secured from the Herald Office.

Looking for Zion's redemption, I am,

SENTINEL BUTTE, North Dakota, Sept., 14, 1908.

Editors Herald: I believe this country is a good cropping country, at least it has been for the past six years. The country is developing very fast. Thousands of acres have been broken up this spring and summer. We are located in west of the "bad lands," in fact, right on their western edge. Heretofore it has been thought this country was too dry for farming purposes. It was not put to a test until the last few years, which has brought out the fact that we have ample rain during the spring months and in July to insure a crop.

The wheat yield here this year is fine, oat crop a little light. The oat yield is running from thirty to fifty bushels to the acre. The flax crops are good.

I very much appreciate the church papers, and feel that I can not get along without them without a great spiritual sacrifice. There is one other family of Saints living in this vicinity, a brother John Brier; but we have not yet got to make his acquaintance. Hope to soon.

We would be glad to have any of the elders, or any other Saints, for that matter, call and see us. I do not know that the gospel was ever preached around here, but there are several people here who have lived among the Latter Day Saints. So there might be a chance of an opening. I have talked with some. The most of them seem favorably impressed, yet they are not inclined to talk on the subject a great deal. God has blessed me a good deal with the presence of his Spirit since coming up here, and may I live a life worthy of that love, is my prayer.

Yours in gospel bonds,
G. W. LINDSEY.

Editors Herald: Will you please announce that our church here, 610 Center Street, will be dedicated Sunday, October 4. This building was formerly owned by the Congregationalists. It is commodious, well located, and the Saints have been wise in acquiring it. Elder J. M. Baker, who did his part well toward securing the structure, is expected to be present, and to give the dedicatory address. The district conference will be in session here at the same time, and a large attendance is expected.

Letter to President Joseph Smith.

Dear Sir and Brother: It was with feelings of the greatest pleasure that I received your letter of July 10, dispatched from Toronto. I sincerely hope that you enjoyed your trip to the Dominion.

Yes, dear brother, I remember that last evening at Bro. Clarke's supper-table when we were privileged to meet so pleasantly and part so happily. I hope we may again be privileged to meet at the great marriage supper-table of the Lamb. I feel thankful to think that the steamer rugs proved to be a comfort to yourself and fellow traveler on your homeward journey.

Your visit is remembered with pleasure in all those places you named in your letter and some you have not named.

Yes, there are kind hearts and true in this mission and not the least are those of our dear Bro. Clarke's household where we last met.

With you I agree that the places of our late departed brethren, Thomas Taylor, C. H. Caton, and Joseph Dewsnup, will be difficult to fill. Their great service to this mission is now better understood than when they were with us.

Old Bro. Holmes, too. Well, there was only one Simon Holmes, and he has crossed the river. They need another one of the same caliber, but he is not there.

I read your letter over to the Saints at our late August conference and it was much appreciated. The following resolution was then passed, a copy of which I was asked to forward to you:

"Resolved, That we appreciate the kind words of sympathy received from our president, Joseph Smith, through Bro. W. R. Armstrong, to whom we submit our kind regards, wishing him health and God-speed in the responsible position he holds, during the remainder of his days."

I thank you very much for your encouraging words to me personally. I would desire to become more useful to the church which we love so well.

I visited our brother, Ernest Dewsnup, a few days ago, in order to bid himself and wife farewell, prior to their sailing with their family for Canada by the turbine steamer Victoria, on August 28. This is our brother's sixteenth time of crossing the Atlantic. His aged mother is feeling the loss of her dear departed husband very much. They had been married fifty years when our brother passed away.

Our late mission conference at Cardiff was a spiritual experience which will live long in the memories of those who were present. The brotherly kindness, spiritual meetings, pleasant associations, and glorious weather made our visit to Wales a happy one.

In conclusion, accept sincere good wishes and gospel love from the Saints here, including the Clarke family, Sr. Armstrong and myself. Kindly convey the same to Bro. R. C. Evans.

Your brother in Christ,
WM. R. ARMSTRONG.

News From Branches

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Sr. R. C. Evans, of Toronto, was in the city last week visiting Saints and friends.

Sr. M. F. Derby, of Selkirk, was visiting in the city last week.

Last Wednesday evening the ordinance of baptism was administered to Mrs. Turner and Miss Annie Bateman, Elder Shields officiating. They were confirmed by Elders Henley and Pope.

Elder Shields, missionary, occupied the stand the past two weeks.

Sr. Thomas Timbrell has returned from visiting friends in St. Marys.

We are pleased to note that our aged Sr. Hunt is once more a great-grandmother by the appearance of a baby boy at the home of Sr. Stephens (nee Grace Everitt).

Sr. Likins, of Paris, was also visiting in the city last week.

W. A. HARDEY.

NAUVOO ITEMS.

Since last writing an "account of ourselves," we have had several series of meetings, the visiting elders being S. M. Reiste, James McKiernan, F. B. Farr and wife, Charles Fry, C. E. Willey, L. E. Hills and wife, and the illustrious members of the monument committee. They have all put forth their most strenuous efforts to better our condition here, resulting in the baptism of Srs. Jane Marshall and Rose Water, daughter and granddaughter of our aged Grandma Howard.

There are no signs of any very sudden change for the better that we can see. Lately, as never before, we have felt pretty sad at times.

The Brighamites have discontinued regular services, and seldom meet except when some twenty or more elders drop in for a conference, and even then (as on a recent Sunday afternoon) preach to as low a number as three.

We are now holding only Sunday morning services over a mile from home, in a room in the old Homestead. Our Sunday-school is usually pretty well attended, until lately, followed by preaching-services.

People in town are becoming anxious as to the result of the action of the monument committee while here. We are frequently asked if "it has died out," etc. Has it?

This week Bro. Heman Hale Smith has spent two days with us, seeing the sights in and around Nauvoo, on his way to school at Iowa City. He has been much interested and we have all enjoyed his call on us.

Last week Sr. Walker, editor of the Hope; and Sr. Resseguie, of Lamoni, spent several days in town, making the Oriental Hotel headquarters. We certainly enjoyed visiting with them. Together we drove through the town and saw all the remaining places of interest and thence out to the old cemetery. Sr. Walker said she had long desired to climb "those old hills once again"; and enjoyed doing so, although it brought to her mind many sad remembrances. She related to us many things of interest concerning those early days. We regretted their sudden departure; but her ill health seemed to demand it. Sr. Resseguie said she could have stayed a month and rested; that she "felt happy" right here.

On the fourteenth day of August we held our annual district Sunday-school picnic at Mormon Springs. There were one hundred and seventeen present, four schools being represented. Seven children were baptized by M. H. Siegfried, all from families of Saints in Rock Creek and Fort Madison. The day was a most enjoyable one; a nice program was rendered; ice-cream, cake, and lemonade were plenty; beside the big lunch.

The trolley line has fallen through; but another one is being planned which is more likely to succeed. The town is piped for water, but the "works" don't work, much to our chagrin. But one improvement we have, certainly, is the electric light plant recently installed. Before long most of the town will be lighted. This feature, together with two miles or more of cement walks, make our long trips on foot much more enjoyable.

MADGE SIEGFRIED.

SHABBONA, MICHIGAN.

Our branch is still having its regular meetings. Every Sunday afternoon we have Sunday-school and social-service, while Wednesday and Friday evenings have been set apart for testimony and Religio services, so if all are regularly attended there is great need of work.

Our branch president is a worthy and noble man, ever ready to give a cheering word and assisting hand to those who are in need. Many things have been put in his pathway to hinder his progress, but thus far he has come out more than victorious. We pray that God may give him additional light and understanding, that he may be enabled to accomplish the work that has been given him.

In the month of July we were given a vacation of two weeks from home duties, and we were permitted to attend a two-day meeting held at McGregor, Michigan. We enjoyed the pleasant associations of Saints, of those who are earnestly striving to follow in the footsteps of the meek and lowly Nazarene. It made us feel a tinge of sadness in missing the faces of those who had been with us before on like occasions, and were now absent from our midst. We hope so to order our lives that when God sees fit to call us to our rest and reward, that we may be prepared to meet those who in days past and gone have been such a help and benefit to us. But this two days of meeting came too soon to an end, and when the word "good-bye" was spoken, we, in company with the Minden City Saints, started for that place. While there we were privileged to attend a Religio meeting, Sunday-school, and preaching-service. We thoroughly enjoyed ourselves and felt the good Spirit of the Master. We found some humble and energetic Saints trying to do all they can for the Master's cause, trying to become pure in heart; for we know it is only the pure in heart that will dwell in Zion.

After spending a week with the Saints at that place, I was again made to say good-bye. I stopped at several other towns, and at the end of two weeks was back home and on duty again, feeling much better both spiritually and physically. Elder R. Etzenhouser, our new missionary, spent a week with Saints at Shabbona, preaching every evening.

His sermons were instructive and thoroughly enjoyed. Good crowds were in attendance.

The conference of the Eastern Michigan District will convene at St. Clair on October 3 and 4. How willingly we should give up all worldly amusements, all that would not be beneficial to our spiritual growth and development, and instead, plan on attending some of the gatherings of the Saints where we receive strength and are encouraged to press on in the divine way. We know that the pleasures of the world do not help to strengthen us spiritually for

All in this world is but vanity,
And must wither and perish away;
But in Christ there is something enduring,
And will last till the end of the day.

With love to all the Saints,

CELIA M. LORENTZEN.

Conference Minutes.

OKLAHOMA.—The semiannual conference of the Oklahoma District convened at Ripley, August 28, 1908, President T. W. Chatburn in the chair. I. N. White was chosen to preside, with Hubert Case and T. W. Chatburn to assist. Those of the ministry reporting were T. W. Chatburn, Hubert Case (baptized 3), J. E. Yates (baptized 4), Lee Quick (baptized 33), J. F. Grimes (baptized 1), J. T. Riley, and J. W. Bishop's agent's report was read and referred to an auditing committee. The matter of disorganizing the district was then taken up. It was moved and seconded that the organization be continued. Carried unanimously. The following preamble and resolutions were then introduced by T. W. Chatburn: "Whereas, The present system of district boundaries is inconvenient for the minister, missionary, district president, and members; therefore be it resolved that the Oklahoma District, in conference assembled at Ripley, this the twenty-eighth day of August, 1908, hereby petition the several districts interested, that they concur with us in redistricting the state of Oklahoma; making three districts of the State, to be known as Eastern, Central, and Western Oklahoma Districts; the divisions to be on the ninety-sixth and ninety-eighth meridians, respectively, running through the State from the north line to the south line of said State. Therefore be it resolved that we ask the General Conference at its next session, to be held at Lamoni, Iowa, 1909, to appoint a committee to take into consideration the advisability of so redistricting the state of Oklahoma, and to report to said General Conference at their earliest convenience." This resolution was moved and adopted, and Brn. I. N. White and T. W. Chatburn were authorized to act as a committee to present the resolution to the other conferences and authorities interested. It was moved to organize a branch at Terilton, Oklahoma. Motion carried, and the matter was left with the missionary in charge to attend to as soon as practicable. It was also arranged that all members belonging to the Oak Grove Branch who are to be included in the new organization should receive their letters of removal on date of said organization. Officers elected for ensuing year: T. W. Chatburn president, Alice M. Case clerk. The conference sustained by vote the following officers: Minister in charge, I. N. THE REVELATION ON THE REBELLION; SOME CRITICISMS EXAMINED.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, concerning the wars that will shortly come to pass, beginning at the rebellion of South Carolina, which will eventually terminate in the death and misery of many souls. The days will come that war will be poured out upon all nations, beginning at that place: for behold, the Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States, and the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations.

And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war.

And it shall come to pass also, that the remnants who are left of the land will marshal themselves, and shall become exceeding angry, and shall vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation; and thus, with the sword, and by bloodshed, the inhabitants of the earth shall mourn; and with famine, and plague, and earthquakes, and the thunder of Heaven, and the fierce and vivid lightning also, shall the inhabitants of the earth be made to feel the wrath, and indignation, and chastening hand of an Almighty God, until the consumption decreed hath made a full end of all nations; that the cry of the Saints, and of the blood of the Saints, shall cease to come up into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth, from the earth, to be avenged of their enemies.

Wherefore, stand ye in holy places, and be not moved, until the day of the Lord come; for behold it cometh quickly, saith the Lord. Amen.

The foregoing revelation was given to Joseph Smith December 25, 1832. We copy it from the Pearl of Great Price, published at Liverpool, England, in 1851.

Given as it was nearly thirty years before the breaking out of our great Civil War, and predicting as it did that world-famous event, with numerous details connected therewith, it is entitled to be considered one of the most wonderful revelations (in the way of forecasting events) ever given to man.

So far as we are aware no one has challenged the proof that it was published as early as 1851 (ten years before the actual beginning of the war). Curiously enough, however, some have challenged its authenticity. For instance, we have before us a letter from the pastor of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Indiana, containing such a challenge. It is argued that this revelation did not appear in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants or in any church

The upset in Turkey, with the resulting prospect of constitutional government, religious freedom, and equal rights to all races, has opened a new prospect to Zionism. Heretofore purchase and ownership of land in the Turkish Empire has been prohibited to Jews, but now, according to a London dispatch in the Sun, secret land purchases made by Jews in Palestine, notwithstanding the prohibition, are being declared, and a Jewish syndicate is said to be negotiating for a large part of the Sultan's private domain, now in the market, and comprising the whole length of the Jordan Valley from Tiberias to the Dead Sea. Given a free hand in Palestine, to buy and possess what is purchasable, and to live and work under fair laws, Jewish capital and energy may accomplish very interesting things.—Harper's Weekly.

publication during the life of the Martyr, and that consequently we have no more proof of its authenticity than we have of the authenticity of the polygamous revelation (?) claiming the date of 1843. The cases, however, are not at all parallel. This revelation contains sentiments and predictions that were published at different times during the life of Joseph Smith and over his own signature; while in the case of the polygamous revelation its leading sentiments and teaching are exactly opposed to the teachings of Joseph Smith as published during his life. We have good reasons for suspecting the authenticity of the one; we have no reason to suspect the authenticity of the other.

We have before us a book entitled Mormonism, by John Hyde, published in 1857. This, as our readers well know, is one of the many books that have been written against the church and with a desire to discredit the work of Joseph Smith. Yet this writer did us good service in that he put on record the main features of the revelation on the Rebellion several years before it was fulfilled. He also helps to identify the man through whom the revelation came and the date when it was given. On page 174 of his book he quotes from a statement made by Joseph Smith, April 6, 1843, as follows:

I prophesy in the name of the Lord God, that the commencement of the difficulties which will cause much bloodshed, previous to the coming of the Son of Man, will be in South Carolina (it probably may arise through the slave question); this a voice declared to me, while I was praying earnestly on the subject, December 25, 1832.

While we would not accept the testimony of Mr. Hyde if in conflict with known facts, we do not hesitate to accept it when it is in harmony with known facts. It is a known fact that such a revelation as Mr. Hyde says Joseph Smith claimed to have received was published over his signature long prior to the breaking out of the Civil War, and both Mr. Hyde's version and the revelation as published in 1851 are in full accord with statements published by Joseph Smith during his life, as will be seen by our quotations from his letters to Mr. Seaton and Mr. Calhoun, also by reference to his predictions as found in Doctrine and Covenants, section thirty-eight, paragraph six, and section forty-five, paragraph eleven.

Both of the revelations last mentioned are worthy of notice. The first named, given in January, 1831, says:

Ye hear of wars in far countries, and you say that there will soon be great wars in far countries, but ye know not the hearts of men in your own land. I tell you these things because of your prayers; wherefore, treasure up wisdom in your bosoms, lest the wickedness of men reveal these things unto you, by their wickedness, in a manner that shall speak in your ears, with a voice louder than that which shall shake the earth; but if ye are prepared, ye shall not fear.—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

People at that time, according to that revelation, little knew the hearts of men in their own land. They looked for wars in foreign countries. God bade them look at home ere he spoke with a voice that would shake the earth. Wendell Phillips, in an oration delivered shortly after the death of Lincoln, said:

The judgments of God have found us out. Thirty years ago none heeded the volcanic fires which slumbered below. . . . But what the world would not look at, God has set to-day in a light so ghastly that it dazzles us blind. What we would not believe, God has written all over the face of the continent with the swords' point in the blood of our best heroes.

The second revelation referred to was given March 7, 1831, and says:

Ye hear of wars in foreign lands, but, behold, I say unto you, They are nigh, even at your doors, and not many years hence ye shall hear of wars in your own lands.—Doctrine and Covenants 45: 11.

In line with the quotation from Hyde, as helping to fix the responsibility for the revelation touching the Rebellion, we quote from Joseph Smith's letter to N. E. Seaton, editor of a newspaper in Rochester, New York, January 4, 1833.

And now I am prepared to say by the authority of Jesus Christ, that not many years shall pass away, before the United States shall present such a scene of bloodshed as has not a parallel in the history of our nation; pestilence, hail, famine, and earthquakes will sweep the wicked of this generation from off the face of the land, to open and prepare the way for the return of the lost tribes of Israel from the north country. The people of the Lord, those who have complied with the requisitions of the new covenant, have already commenced gathering together to Zion, which is in the State of Missouri; therefore I declare unto you the warning which the Lord has commanded me to declare unto this generation, remembering that the eyes of my Maker are upon me, and that to him I am accountable for every word I say, wishing nothing worse to my fellow men than their eternal salvation; therefore "fear God and give glory to him for the hour of his judgment is come."—Repent ye, repent ye, and embrace the everlasting covenant, and flee to Zion before the overflowing scourge overtake you, for there are those now living upon the earth whose eyes shall not be closed in death until they see all these things, which I have spoken, fulfilled. Remember these things; call upon the Lord while he is near, and seek him while he may be found, is the exhortation of your unworthy servant,

JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 707.

At the time when the revelation in question was given, December 25, 1832, there was some excitement in the United States caused by the attitude of South Carolina in claiming the right to nullify an act of Congress and the further right to withdraw from the Union at will. On November 19 of that year South Carolina met in convention and on the 24th of that month declared certain tariff regulation passed by Congress null and void. This state of affairs doubtless caused Joseph Smith to "pray earnestly" over the matter, as he states, and it was revealed to him that South Carolina would rebel and that a great and disastrous war would follow. Mr.

Neal thinks that if Joseph Smith had dated his revelation even a few days prior to the nullification act of November 24, 1832, it would have had more weight, but we have already quoted from two predictions of Civil War made several months prior to that date.

At the time of the giving of the revelation that is the immediate subject of this editorial, December 25, 1832, war had not occurred. Mr. Neal's contention that South Carolina was at that time in rebellion can hardly be sustained. Edward S. Ellis, A. M., in The History of Our Country, volume 3, page 746, says, "The alarm bell of Secession did not toll until thirty years later."

As late as February 12, 1833, President Jackson in a message to the Senate said, "No order has been at any time given 'to resist' the constituted authorities of the state of South Carolina within the chartered limits of said State."—Messages and Papers of the Presidents, volume 2, page 634. That very day Mr. Clay introduced the bill that settled the matter.

In "South Carolina during the nullification struggle," Political Science Quarterly, June, 1891, as quoted in History for Ready Reference, we read, "Some preparation, although little, was made for a conflict of arms; nor was there any certain show of readiness in other Southern States to stand by South Carolina in the position she had taken."

South Carolina had not rebelled; she had simply argued her right to rebel and secede at any time. The vigorous action of President Jackson together with the passage of the Clay Compromise Bill settled the matter early in the year 1833 and all was serene again.

Many thought that the matter was ended. But Joseph Smith was on record that South Carolina would rebel and that war would follow. Who was right?

Perhaps the latest criticism of the revelation in question is found in the initial number of the Sword of Laban. The Sword of Laban is the official organ of the Anti-Mormon League, succeeding the late lamented helpless Helper. The Helper passed away some time ago owing to impaired circulation with complications. Now the league struggles for articulation through a new mouthpiece. The Sword of Laban, true to the nature of its progenitors, starts out with a guessing contest. Each subscriber is given a guess at the number of subscriptions coming in, and certain prizes are raffled off to the favorites of fortune. This mild game of chance appeals to the clerical members of the Anti-Mormon League and lends zest to an otherwise dry proposition.

R. B. Neal, of Pikeville, Kentucky, editor of the Sword, is author of the article to which we refer. He makes the charge that following the settlement of the difficulty with South Carolina (in 1833)

Joseph Smith lost confidence in his own prophecy and did not give it a place in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Whether he lost confidence or not cuts no figure in the case. The prophecy was fulfilled, no matter who lost confidence. But we have already quoted Mr. Hyde to show that Joseph Smith did not lose confidence in the prediction. He publicly reiterated it in 1843, ten years after Henry Clay's Compromise Bill had apparently settled the difficulty; moreover he at that time indicated one of the causes that would lead to the rebellion. Furthermore Joseph Smith wrote to John C. Calhoun under date of January 2, 1844, regarding the sufferings, persecutions, and losses of the Saints. The letter is too long to quote as a whole, but in it was a prediction that unless the United States should pursue certain courses of honor and justice, "God will come out of his hiding place and vex this nation with a sore vexation—yea, the consuming wrath of an offended God shall smoke through the nation, with as much distress and woe, as independence has blazed through with pleasure and delight."—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 395.

It is a fact that the just demands made in that letter were not complied with. It is a further fact that the prediction contained therein was fulfilled. Lincoln himself pronounced the war a scourge sent of God.

Mr. Neal makes some criticisms. Among other things he says, "Wars with and among 'other nations' did not 'shortly' or longly follow South Carolina's rebellion." Evidently Mr. Neal has not yet heard of the Franco-Prussian War, the South African War, the Spanish-American War, the Russo-Japanese War, and others, which shows an astonishing lack of military information on the part of one who proposes to wield the "sword of Laban." The seer of Pikeville also enters the field of prophecy and says, "No other war resulted then from it, or has since been the result of it, or ever will be." There is so much that Mr. Neal does not know about the present that he will do well to let the future alone.

Mr. Neal finds fault with the statement, "The Southern States shall be divided against the Northern States," and declares that it "was not a strict warfare between North and South." He bases this argument on the fact that some Southern States did not secede and that loyal regiments were recruited in the South. In resorting to such a futile argument he betrays the weakness of his position,—no better arguments were at hand. The Civil War was a sectional war, and in all literature pertaining thereto it is classed as a war between the North and the South. Following their secession, the people of South Carolina assembled in convention, adopted an address "to the people of the slaveholding States of the United States," in which they said, "The Southern States now stand in exactly the same position to the Northern States, that the colonies did toward Great Britain."—The Great Conspiracy, page 231.

He next finds fault with what he calls "the plain prediction that Great Britain, with men, money and munitions of war, would take a red-handed part with the South against the North that would lead the North to call in other nations to help her." This is a deliberate reading into the document of something that is not there, and does not accord well with the motto of the Sword of Laban, which is, "Our aim: To be good and to do good." No one can find fault with such a target; but their shooting is execrable. The statement was made in the revelation, "The Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain"; but it was not said whether Great Britain would side with the Southern States or with the Northern States or with neither. All that about Great Britain "taking a red-handed part with men, money and munitions of war," originated in the ink-pot at Pikeville.

Mr. Neal also quotes the words, "And it shall come to pass after many days, slaves shall rise against their masters," etc. He says, "Not an instance during the whole war in any part of the South of the uprising of slaves, or of their burning a house or killing a master." "This fact," he says, "stands out like a bright ray of light in a dark place." The dark place is Pikeville-on-the-pike; the ray of light is moonshine.

In quoting the sentence above referred to he very adroitly cuts it in two and omits that part which shows what the nature of the uprising of the slaves would be, i. e., that they should be "marshaled and disciplined for war." The object in omitting that part is obvious enough, but the surprising feature is that it should be done by one who is just aiming to "be good," the great arch-enemy of fraud and deception. The sentence reads, "And it shall come to pass, after many days, slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war." It is a fact that after the war had progressed for "many days," even until 1863, many slaves rose up to fight in their own behalf and were marshaled and disciplined for war and fought bravely under the stars and stripes on many a hard fought battle-field. John A. Logan, in his history of the war, devotes one chapter to the brave deeds of "the armed negro." He tells how the "black regiments" won laurels at Port Hudson, Milliken's Bend, Fort Wagner, Wilson's Wharf, Petersburg, Deep Bottoms, Fair Oaks, and Appamattox. But, omitting all reference to their being armed and disciplined, as Mr. Neal has done, we have good authority for the statement that slaves did rise up against their masters.

The quibble is sometimes made that negroes thus armed at the time of their arming were not slaves because the emancipation proclamation had set them free. Elder Heman C. Smith answers that argument in Truth Defended, page 208. It is a fact, as John A. Logan says, that the Emancipation Proclamation set the slaves free,—on paper. Lincoln himself compared it to the "Pope's bull against the comet." The question of their freedom in fact was the very thing at issue and was not settled until the close of the war. Moreover the proclamation was simply a war measure subject to repeal at the close of the war if Congress so saw fit, and the negro in fact had no rights of freedom in the Constitution until the Constitution was amended in 1865. Still further it is a curious fact that the proclamation applied only to negroes within States that were in rebellion after the first day of January, 1863, and as the Encyclopedia Britannica (Americanized) observes, presented the anomaly of being in force only where it could not be enforced.

Men on both sides of the great contention spoke of the armed negroes as slaves. John C. Abbott, in his History of the Civil War in America, in speaking of Milliken's Bend says, "Here the slaves and their masters were brought face to face in the death-gripe, and the masters bit the dust."—Volume 2, page 291. In a message to the Congress of the Confederate States, November 7, 1864, Jefferson Davis, president of the Confederacy, deplored the arming of slaves by the Union, but defended that policy on the part of the Confederacy. He said, "A broad moral distinction exists between the use of slaves as soldiers in defense of their homes, and the incitement of the same persons against their masters."

Mr. Neal says that this revelation "with a limber-tongued elder back of it" easily convinces unthinking people that Joseph Smith was "an all wool and a yard wide prophet of the Lord, warranted to never fade, tear, rip or wear out." This is a wild and woolly conception of what a real prophet of the Lord is. The facts are that when the average man reads this revelation it seems necessary for some limber-tongued "Anti-mormon," half cotton, scant width, off color, to talk him into a reluctant half notion that it is not such a clear case of prophecy as he had thought. That is the feature that is disturbing Pikeville at present.

Mr. Neal further says, "Note right here that the revelation predicts that amid all their wars and rumors of wars, of fire, of blood, of thunder and lightning and scourges, that the Saints were not to be moved."

Mr. Neal speaks for a body of men who make a jest of Joseph Smith's violations of the rules of grammar. The superfluous "that" in the above quotation attracts attention to their own ability to blunder in the use of language. But there is a graver question involved, one of honesty. The revelation does not contain the statement that Mr. Neal says appears there, and he knows that it does not. There is no prediction that the Saints should not be moved, or even that they should not desire to be moved. They are commanded and exhorted to stand in holy places and not be moved. Quite in line with the exhortation or commandment of the Apostle Paul to the saints of his day to stand fast and be not moved, though in fact they were persecuted and driven hither and thither. The difference between a commandment and a prediction is too apparent to be overlooked excepting intentionally. To overlook it intentionally merely to gain a point over an opponent, indicates a peculiar moral condition on the part of one who professes to make it his life's work to expose and brand hypocrites. Can it be that Mr. Neal has hold of the wrong end of the branding-iron?

Much more might be written regarding this remarkable revelation had we the space, but we will only notice one or two additional facts. The "remnants of the land" mentioned are the Indians, not guerilla bands left after the disbanding of the Union and Confederate armies, as Neal and others have thought. And it is a fact that needs no comment that the Indians (the remnant of the former inhabitants of the land) did marshal themselves during and after the Civil War and vex the Gentiles with a sore vexation during all the days between the massacre at New Ulm and the Battle of Wounded Knee.

The declaration was made in the revelation that the Southern States would call on the nation of Great Britain and also on other nations, as the following shows, "And the Southern States will call on other nations, even the nation of Great Britain, as it is called, and they shall also call upon other nations, in order to defend themselves against other nations; and thus war shall be poured out upon all nations."

Barnes' History, page 222, says, "England and France had acknowledged the Confederate States as belligerents, thus placing them on the same footing with the United States. The Southern people having, therefore, great hopes of foreign aid, appointed Messrs. Mason and Slidell commissioners to those countries."

Jefferson Davis in his Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government, page 367, says:

The public questions arising out of our foreign relations were too important to be overlooked. At the end of the first year of the war the Confederate States had been recognized by the leading governments of Europe as a belligerent power. This continued unchanged to the close. Mr. Mason became our representative in London, Mr. Slidell in Paris, Mr. Rost in Spain, and Mr. Mann in Belgium. They performed with energy and skill the positions, but were unsuccessful in obtaining our recognition as an independent power.

These were details in connection with the Civil War that no man could have foreseen in 1832 when the revelation was given or in 1851 when it was published.

Other events mentioned in the revelation, such as the ultimate destruction of the wicked, the breaking down of all nations, and the coming of the Son of Man, are matters of prophecy supported alike by the Old and the New Testament. Probably no believer in the Bible will care to challenge the revelation on those points.

One more point: An effort is made to prove that the revelation predicted that all the wars foreshadowed therein should come as a direct result of the Rebellion of South Carolina, because the closing sentence of the first paragraph says, "And thus war shall be poured out upon all nations." This is in a sense an independent sentence, yet it refers back to all that has preceded it in the paragraph. All that can justly be made out of it is the statement that "thus" (in like manner) as war was poured out upon the Northern and Southern States it should be poured out upon all nations.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday was observed as College Day in Lamoni, as elsewhere. An excellent special song-service was held at eleven o'clock. Addresses were made by Elbert A. Smith and David A. Anderson. The collection amounted to about three hundred and fifty dollars. Twenty dollars of this amount came from the Sunday-school.

Bro. George H. Wixom, of San Bernardino, California, was the speaker at the Saints' Home in the evening. His discourse was much appreciated. There were a number in attendance from outside the "home circle." Elder Wardell Christy occupied at the Brick Church in the evening.

The Supply Store now occupies the north half of the fine brick building recently erected by Bro. Anderson. Elsewhere in this number of the HERALD appears an article from the British Isles Mission regarding the advantages of coöperation. Lamoni has a number of fine stores, mostly owned by Saints, but we are reminded in this connection that the Supply Store is unique in that it is owned by the church, with the exception of a very small share that is owned by one individual. Patrons of the Supply Store receive a cash rebate of one dollar on each twenty-five (cash purchases) and the profits of the store go to the church. The Saints in and around Lamoni who are really interested in promoting church enterprises have a chance to demonstrate their sincerity.

The young peoples' prayer-meeting and that of the older people are both held on Wednesday evening. The former is held in the upper auditorium of the church; the latter in the lower auditorium.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The following statement from Bishop Grafton presents a very sensible view in regard to Sunday recreations. We commend the reading of it to all, especially to those who are inclined to think any exhibition of playfulness on rest day out of line with Christian character. It is a fact well known to all that the basis of our faith so far as the individuality of man is concerned, is that every one is endowed with responsibility at the same time that he is with individuality, and that there will be no unjust interference with either upon the part of the Lord.

If reward is to be individual and at the same time to be compatible with the justice of God, or with the conception which we have formed of God, then there must be a commensurate degree of individual freedom for the exercise of our personal judgment as to human conduct, or there is a too striking disparity between the idea of individual responsibility and consequent reward.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is true in a wider sense than he who first made the remark thought it had when he said it. Man to be free must neither be fanatical to the extent of his responsibility, nor a slave to dogmatism to the extreme of dullness.

"Bishop Grafton, of the Episcopal diocese of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, whose attention was called to an attack on Sunday baseball by one of his clergy, gave the following as his views on the much discussed question: 'Whether any recreation on Sunday is allowable must depend upon the individual conscience. If recreation interferes with his primal duty to God then it ought to be given up, and while a number of devout Christians would abstain from the recreation named, there are others who look at baseball games or attend a free concert at the park, which is not harmful to their spiritual life, they having done their duty by attending in the morning the divine worship prescribed by Christ. Sunday is a day of devotion, rest, and recreation. While the church forbids all servile work that can be avoided, it does not interfere with any recreation that does not interfere with a Christian's devotional duty.'

That the love for liberty and personal freedom from improper personal domination does not rest alone in the breasts of the white man or the red, is seen by the attitude of a class of Turks who are the burden-bearers in Constantinople and other Turkish cities. The following print current in the public journals is indicative of this universality of love of freedom: The Constantinople correspondent of the Neue Freie Presse, of Vienna, says that among the first of the many organizations who marched to the Yildiz Kiosk to express thanks for the constitutional decree were the burden bearers, or hamalis. These powerful, athletic Turks, for the most part beautiful men, despite their dirty garb, have a well-organized society which lays down the laws by which they are guided in their vocation. They come from Asiatic Turkey, where they leave their wives while they work industriously and honestly for a few years, save their earnings and then return to their homes. The bad pavements and the narrow winding streets preclude the dray in Constantinople, and these men take the place of the dray horse. On long poles they may be seen carrying great bales of goods, pianos, safes and all sorts of heavy property. They are fanatical in their religion and thoroughly Turkish, but it seems that they appreciate the advance toward liberalism, and showed their ability to live up to European methods on the day after the demonstration, when they struck for higher wages."

At a meeting of the "Gideons," an organization of Christian traveling men, recently held in Kansas City, it was decided to undertake the work of placing a Bible in every hotel in the country. The Gideons were organized in 1899 and now number about three thousand active traveling men.

The Des Moines Ministerial Association seems to have challenged our standing as an evangelical church. At least they hesitate about accepting Elder Mintun as a member. At last writing they had not settled the case. The Des Moines Capital has this to say about the matter: "Will Reverend J. F. Minton, pastor of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, be admitted to membership in the Des Moines Ministerial Association? This is the question that Doctor Minton is asking himself, and he doubts if he will be permitted to become a member. At to-day's meeting of the association Chairman R. E. Williams of the membership committee reported favorably or otherwise on the application made by Reverend Mister Minton a week ago. The report was adopted by the association. None of the ministers would give any explanation for the omission of Doctor Minton's case, but they refused to say that there was any desire to exclude him from the association. Doctor Minton was present at this morning's meeting and called the attention of those present at the omission. The committee on membership gave out that it simply had not yet taken any action on the minister's application.

"In reorganizing the Ministerial Association for the season all the members of the association merely as a matter of form applied for membership, and all but Doctor Minton were favorably reported upon.

"Membership in the association is restricted to evangelical ministers, and it is known that some of the evangelical ministers do not recognize the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints as evangelical. If Doctor Minton is refused membership it will be on this ground. He and his church contend that it is evangelical. There is a difference of opinion as to the exact meaning of the word.

A Mormon's wife, coming down-stairs one morning, met the physician who was attending her husband. "Is he very ill?" she asked anxiously.

"He is," replied the physician. "I fear that the end is not far off."

"Do you think," she asked hesitatingly, "do you think it proper that I should be at his bedside during his last moments?"

"Yes. But I advise you to hurry, madam. The best places are already being taken."—The Mirror.

Have you heard of the latest freak of individual interpretation? Well, one Captain Theodore Valiant proposes to establish a church in Washington, District of Columbia, with the dancing women, the cymbal players, the singers and the games just as in the days of Moses and Solomon. Of course, he will insist that it is thoroughly Christian, although his scheme totally ignores Jesus Christ and the church which he established.—Church Progress.

REFORMATION, RESTORATION, AND UNITY.—NO. 2.

THE DIVINE PLAN OF RESTORATION.

It is not in man to direct his own steps, much less those of the Almighty. (See Jeremiah 10: 23.)

The Bible teaches a "last days" restoration of the gospel, and consequently of the gospel kingdom. The seed of the kingdom is God's word, not man's opinion. Christ reserves unto himself the right to sow this seed (word) whether personally or through his agencies. (See Matthew 13: 18, 19, 31.) The final crop is to be sown in "the dispensation of the fullness of times," or "times of restitution" (Acts 3: 21; Ephesians 1: 8-10), or what may be termed the dispensation of "the eleventh hour" (Matthew 20: 6, 7).

In all the dispensations of the past, by revelation given through angels, revelators, and prophets who lived at the designated "hours" of their respective introduction, were they introduced, as see the calling and labors of Abel (Matthew 20: 1; 23: 35; Hebrews 11: 4; Genesis 4: 4—Abel the prophet of God), also Enoch, who "walked with God," lived the gospel law (the only way man can walk with God), was a prophet, knew not only the gospel but preached the second coming of Christ in glory to reign and judge the world (see Jude, verse 14), was changed physically so that he did not see death, for "he pleased God" (Hebrews 11: 5). Also, the great prophet, Noah, "a preacher of righteousness," and therefore of the gospel, for the righteousness of God is revealed in the gospel (see 2 Peter 2: 5; Romans 1: 16, 17), became "heir of the righteousness which is by faith" (Hebrews 11: 7); and the righteousness which is by faith is gospel righteousness and faith (see Romans 4: 13; Galatians 5: 4, 5).

These things are written of the labors of the "early" "morning" hour dispensation. As the result of their labors, a church of God, saints, "sons of God," then existed. (See Genesis 6: 2; Galatians 4: 5; 1 John 3: 1, 2.)

Likewise was also the "third hour" of the day dispensation introduced by divine revelation. A heavenly call of men to the ministry. (See Matthew 20: 3, 4.) Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Melchisedec, and others labored in that dispensation. These men were high priests, called and "anointed" ones, and prophets of God. They were heirs of the world to come. They evangelized among the nations, and proclaimed the glad tidings through Christ, and celebrated "the atonement." (See Genesis 14: 18, 19; 15: 1-8; 17: 20, 21; 22: 15-18; Psalm 105: 5-15, especially verses 13 and 14; Matthew 8: 11, 12; Romans 4: 12, 13.) Their inheritance is secured to them by faith that it might be by grace, and this grace is the gospel of Christ (see Titus 2: 11-13; Acts 14: 3; Ephesians 2: 8, 9), the gospel of his grace (see Galatians 3: 8).

God having predetermined that the Gentiles might be justified unto life by faith in Abraham's seed, Christ, delivered the gospel to the people and to him, in the third hour dispensation.

It may just as confidently be affirmed that the sixth hour dispensation was introduced by revelation from on high—to dispense is to hand out. Dispensation—the act of handing out, dispensing. This dispensation was opened up at the call of Moses and Aaron (see Exodus 3) by angelic administration. After Israel's deliverance from Egyptian bondage, the gospel hope was preached "unto them," as well as "unto us [Hebrew saints]," says the Apostle Paul (Hebrews 4: 2), but faith was lacking on Israel's part, as there shown. Israel went so far, however, as to be immersed in the sea and in the cloud, and partook of Christ, the spiritual rock that attended them; but they afterwards turned back in heart. (See 1 Corinthians 10: 1-7.) And by transgressing the gospel, and failing to keep the gospel, the law "was added" because of that transgression, "till the seed should come to whom the promise was made." (Galatians 3: 19.) Jesus was preached unto Israel prior to his mission into the world in the meridian of time. (See Acts 3: 20.) Let us remember that sin is the transgression of law, and where no law exists sin is not imputed. (See John 3:4; Romans 4:15.) And transgression was not imputed to Israel prior to the giving of the law, that it might be "added because of transgression," unless a law existed before "the law" "was added." And as the gospel and the law are the only two systems of law given of God to man, the gospel must have been known to Israel before the law was given to them.

The law was not given till four hundred and thirty years subsequent to Abraham's day. The legal covenant was not entered into by any portion of the human family till after it was spoken to Israel at Sinai. (See Deuteronomy 5:3-22.) "And he added no more." (See also Galatians 3:17.) So that to Israel "was the gospel preached" as well as "unto us," in the "sixth hour" dispensation.

In the dispensation of the "ninth hour," "laborers" were again called, authorized, and sent into the Lord's vineyard by revelation. (See Matthew 20:5.) John the Baptist was sent, commissioned, an Elias, a restorer (see Matthew 17:12, 13), to prepare the way of the Lord and to immerse in water (see John 1:32, 33). Jesus himself honored the ninth hour dispensation with his personal ministrations, reestablished his church or kingdom, and set the ministry in the great building in order. (See 1 Corinthians 12:28; Luke 6:12-16; Ephesians 4:8-13.)

The church, as a great, divine, spiritual building, was to "grow up in him"; not divide and disorganize, but "compacted" together, "fitly joined together"; not disjoined, but developed into "an holy temple in the Lord." (See Ephesians 4:15, 16.) God's ministry were to work together unitedly, so as to maintain the unity of the one body (see Ephesians 4:12, 13), and maintain the unity of the faith!

Such was God's design; but, alas, God's designs connected with man's agency often fail to reach a fulfillment. From Adam till now the general history of man is a failure to keep his commands, a failure to abide the law based on eternal principles. Human policies are preferred, and darkness and division and confusion are the inevitable results.

We hardly need to tarry here to array the many biblical and historical evidences of the apostasy from the faith, as the Dark Ages drew on. That the church, as established in ancient apostolic days, did depart from the faith, did become disorganized, did cease to exist as then established, is incontrovertibly established by the heroic efforts to reestablish the church, under the guise of a so-called re-formation. Great and learned men have been trying to get back to original Christianity, as they claim, for more than four hundred years. No part of Protestantism will deny this. But in their great effort they have adopted, or agreed on no universal standard of doctrinal authority. The results are a variety of creeds, differing confessions of faith, and, consequently, a variety of churches in existence; and none of them correspond to the original pattern, as described in the New Testament. Many innovations on the faith Jesus taught have been introduced. Such as popes, archbishops, prebendaries, and other humanly instituted officers, offices, and doctrines, which, without any divine warrant, are imposed on men's consciences as though they were essential to salvation; while the truths, and principles, many of them taught in the Bible as essential to man's salvation, are entirely left out and untaught; in fact are opposed as heresies now! Many of the truths sanctified by the blood of Christ in the atonement are set aside as non-essential, and superceded by human traditions.

All this but renders the great restoration of the gospel and the church necessary now. And that the gospel in doctrine and ordinance may be administered to divine acceptance, it is essential that the administrative authority be also restored. No man, in human affairs, is satisfied to have his "will" probated upon, except by a legal court. No one expects to adopt a child into his family, and make it an heir of his estate, except by the judge of a legal court. No one of a foreign nation can be adopted into citizenship in the United States, except by those authorized to administer in these civil rites. But in the eternal things of God, things that relate to man's eternal inheritance, in the never-ending hereafter, man proposes to have God a great deal less particular, and allow almost any unauthorized act to be acknowledged, and he bow to it! They seek to impress us with the idea that almost any proposal they make to God, he must necessarily acknowledge and accept. But contradistinguished from all this, the great Creator of man declares to us:

Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure: . . . yea, I have spoken it, I will also bring it to pass; I have purposed it, I will also do it. Hearken unto me, ye stouthearted, that are far from righteousness: I bring near my righteousness; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry: and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.—Isaiah 46:9-13.

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.—Isaiah 55:8, 9.

By the foregoing we learn that God declares beforehand his purposes, that he will see that his purposes are accomplished, and that, too, not as man proposes, nor according to man's thoughts; but in a higher, grander way, a divine way. And further, he, in the accomplishment of his grand purpose in the salvation of man, in the great restoration in the last day as well, has given to his Son, Jesus Christ, to be preëminent. "Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people."—Isaiah 55:4. A "witness," a "leader," and a "commander" of "the people." Let Christ be the standard, and the leader, and commander. It is the province of his people to follow him.

The heavens are to retain, keep him up there, till "the times of restitution." (Acts 3:19.) The eleventh hour dispensation is introduced, closely connected with the second coming of Christ in glory. Indeed, it is a work of God now being done preparatory to the second coming of Christ. A prophetic messenger has been authorized by the hand of a heavenly messenger to open up the preparatory work foretold. (See Malachi 3:1-6; Matthew 17:10-12.)

And our Savior, the leader and commander, identifies the Elias to come as being John the Baptist; and declared, after John's death, that he "shall first come and restore all things." "First come." That is, before Christ comes. Prior to the restoration of the Jews to Palestine in the last days, before the Lord comes to dwell in the midst of Jerusalem, an angel of God was to give information to a "young man" concerning this great event. (Zechariah 1:1-10.)

In John's revelation on Patmos, and amidst scenes closely connected with the downfall of great Babylon and the harvest of the earth, the end of the world, the following is seen:

And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters.—Revelation 14:6, 7.

The fact that man so objects to the way here set forth for the reformation and restoration to be inaugurated in the last days, in the "eleventh hour" call, is one of the decisive reasons why it is God's way. "My ways are not your ways," says he to man. And another reason is, it is in harmony with his way of doing, as it relates to his past dealings with man.

"The everlasting gospel," embodying as it does the unchangeable principles of truth, being the seed of the kingdom of God, as now being declared to the nations and kindreds of the earth, comes in contact with men's reason, leading them to see the logic, the reasons, and whys, informs their judgment, and they are convinced of the direct relation of God to his work.

Light began to be shown to the "young man," Joseph Smith, as early as 1823 A. D. As the light increased and the time drew on for the introduction of the work, in 1829, on a certain day in the month of May, he and Oliver Cowdery went into the grove,

God's temple, "to pray and inquire of the Lord respecting baptism for the remission of sins, as we found mentioned in the translation of the plates [of the Book of Mormon]. While we were thus employed, praying, and calling upon the Lord, a messenger from heaven descended in a cloud of light, and having laid his hands upon us, he ordained us, saying unto us, 'Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness.' He said this Aaronic priesthood had not the power of laying on of hands, for the gift of the Holy Ghost, but that this should be conferred on us hereafter; and he commanded us to go and be baptized, and gave us directions that I should baptize Oliver Cowdery, and afterwards that he should baptize me."

The historian continues:

The messenger who visited us on this occasion, and conferred this priesthood upon us, said that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist, in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James, and John, who held the keys of the priesthood of Melchisedec, which priesthood he said should in due time be conferred on us—and that I should be called the first elder, and he the second. It was on the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and twenty-nine, that we were baptized and ordained under the hand of the messenger.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 35, 36.

The testimony of Oliver Cowdery to this wonderful event is:

This was not long desired before it was realized. The Lord, who is rich in mercy, and ever willing to answer the consistent prayer of the humble, after we had called upon him in a fervent manner, aside from the abodes of men, condescended to manifest to us his will. On a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the gospel of repentance. What joy! what wonder! what amazement! While the world was racked and distracted—while millions were groping as the blind for the wall, and while all men were resting upon uncertainty, as a general mass, our eyes beheld—our ears heard, as in the 'blaze of day'; yes, more—above the glitter of the May sunbeam, which then shed its brilliancy over the face of nature. Then his voice, though mild, pierced to the center, and his words, "I am thy fellow servant," dispelled every fear, we listened—we gazed—we admired! 'Twas the voice of the angel from glory—'twas a message from the Most High! And as we heard we rejoiced, while his love enkindled upon our souls, and we were wrapt in the vision of the Almighty! Where was the room for doubt? Nowhere: uncertainty had fled, doubt had sunk, no more to rise, while fiction and deception had fled for ever! But, dear brother, think, further, think for a moment, what joy filled our hearts and with what surprise we must have bowed, (for who would not have bowed the knee for such a blessing?) when we received under his hand the holy priesthood, as he said, "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer this priesthood and this authority, which shall remain upon the earth, that the sons of Levi may yet offer an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!" I shall not attempt to paint to you the feelings of this heart, nor the majestic beauty and glory that surrounded us on this occasion; but you will believe me when I say, that earth, nor men, with the eloquence of time, can not begin to clothe language in as interesting and sublime a manner as this holy personage. No, nor has this earth the power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or comprehend the wisdom which was contained in each sentence as they were delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 37, 38.

We now have before us the references to the Bible prophecies, some of them, with the plain prophetic statement of John the Revelator, as the basis of our proposition: The restoration of the last days; the eleventh hour dispensation was to be—has been—introduced by the direct interposition of God, through the agencies of angels and new revelation, and the administrative authority recommitted to man in order to the restoration of the church or kingdom of God, and the proclamation of the gospel to all nations preparatory to the second coming of Christ, the resurrection of the righteous dead, and the glorious reign of Christ on the renewed earth; also the concurrent testimony of the two witnesses with whom the great work began. How like the calling of Moses by the angel, only Moses was alone, as was Zacharias in the temple at Jerusalem. (See Exodus 3; Luke 1.) How else should the All-father introduce the great "dispensation of the fullness of times"? (See Ephesians 1:8, 9.) In what more appropriate manner could the authority to consummate the great work of restoration be given than in the way described by Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery? How could certainty have attended the introduction of the work without a plain revelation from God? This work had to be begun somewhere, sometime, with somebody, or God's word fail. Come, ye worldly-wise objectors, and tell us of some way more in harmony with God, and less in accord with man's way, than this, as given in the foregoing relation!

Priesthood authority is the only authority in nature our Savior has to give to mortal man. It was what he possessed as a preacher (see Luke 4:18, 19), "the high priest of our profession" (Hebrews 3:1; 9:11). Melchisedec had exercised this priesthood on earth (see Genesis 14:18), and Jesus was a priest after that order. "Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec."—Hebrews 7:17. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself," says Paul, "but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."—Hebrews 5:4, 5. The priesthood of God, as exercised by Melchisedec, and other men called to the same honor, has no human descent (see Hebrews 7:3); but comes from God only. "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?"—John 5:44.

But is it such a strange thing that John the Baptist should appear again in the capacity of a ministering angel to renew the authority in order to the initial stages of the great work? That John was to do a work in preparing the way for the Lord's second coming, is foretold in the word of prophecy; for we read:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts. But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness. Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the Lord, as in the days of old, and as in former years. And I will come near to you to judgment: and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the Lord of hosts. For I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.—Malachi 3:1-6.

Now, dear reader, look right at this prophecy for a brief time, and note the following, as we enter the contrast. All this prophecy is to be fulfilled just prior to and at the second coming of our Lord. He did not come suddenly to his temple at his first coming. He was born in a stable, cradled in a manger, and grew up as other children, at Nazareth; and learned the carpenter's trade, and was obedient to his parents. (See Luke 2:51, 52.)

He did not "purify the sons of Levi" at his first coming, nor was the offering of Jerusalem "pleasant unto the Lord" at that time. But "he came to his own, and his own received him not." (John 1:11.) He wept over Jerusalem's wickedness, at that time. (See Luke 13:34, 35.) He foretold its desolation, and the scattering of its children, and their remaining in a captive condition among the Gentile nations "until the time of the Gentiles be fulfilled." (Luke 21:20-24.) The children of Jerusalem then slew Jesus and cast him from them, and have been in a state of condemnation till this time. Paul deplored in the most deeply abject way their rejection of Christ, and their going into blind unbelief (see Romans 9:1-3), and predicted that they would remain in their blind, rejected condition "until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in" (Romans 11:25-27). Desolation has rested like a pall over Jerusalem and her land since Jerusalem's destruction by the Roman arms in 70 A. D., till this our day. God's power is now being turned to Jerusalem, so long in ruins, and her children, as the Gentile times are now closing. This since the restoration began, 1822-1830, as hereinbefore shown. Further, our Savior did not come near to "the false swearer," "sorcerer" ers," "adulterers," and the ungodly oppressors of "the fatherless," the "widow," and the hireling, at his first coming. (See John 8: 1-11.) Says he: "Ye judge after the flesh: I judge no man." "I am come a light unto the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world."—John 8: 15; 12: 46, 47.

John the Baptist's second mission is indicated in the following language:

And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord.—Luke 1: 16, 17.

Just the opposite of turning the hearts of the fathers to the children and the children to their fathers at John's first mission, occurred. See this:

And the brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children shall rise up against their parents, and cause them to be put to death. . . . For I am come to set a man at variance with his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law.—Matthew 10: 21, 35.

These were, and ever have been to this time, the results growing out of the mission of John and Christ, at John's first showing unto Israel. The unregenerate rise in opposition to the truth; but when Israel as a body turns to the Lord in the last days, through the power of the gospel restored, and are brought into that same gospel covenant that their fathers rejected, the hearts of fathers and children will turn to each other, and to the doctrine of Jesus, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

The covenant of Jeremiah 31: 31-35, was offered to Judah by John and Christ; but they at that time rejected it. (See John 1: 11.) "For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him."—Acts 13: 27.

Paul, in the Roman letter (chapter 11), argues at length the downfall of Israel through their rejection of Christ, when he was here, and their being "grafted" again into the family of Abraham through Christ, his gospel; be turned "away from their ungodliness," at "the fullness of the Gentiles," of their times. (Romans 11: 25-27; Luke 21: 24.)

Of John the Baptist, Jesus says: "But what went ye out for to see? A prophet? yea, I say unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he, of whom it is written, Behold, I send my messenger before my face, which shall prepare thy way before thee."—Matthew 11: 9, 10. John was as great in his mission work as Moses, Enoch, Noah, or Elijah; for there had "not risen a greater than John the Baptist," says the Savior. But where was or is it written of John, as here quoted by our Lord? And we answer: In Malachi, chapter 3, verse 1. But our Savior makes this subject of John's second great mission plain as he descends from the mount of transfiguration. First by identifying John the Baptist as "the Elias which was for to come," and referring to the fact that he had been put to death at that time; and yet in the face of all this, he declares: "Elias truly shall first come, and restore all things." The three apostles, Peter, James, and John had been on the mount with Jesus to see his second coming in glory, in a "vision." (See Matthew 17: 9-11; 2 Peter 1: 16-19.)

By seeing the transfiguration vision, the coming of Christ in glory, they had a better understanding of "the word of prophecy," as it related to this subject, than they could have had aside from this. And in view of the foregoing statements we may see the harmony of the testimony of Joseph and Oliver, with the word of prophecy relating to the "restoration" of the gospel and the kingdom of God, growing out of the gospel restored.

The great restoration is a biblical question, a prophetic question; and who is to restore, and the how, are Bible prophecy questions. It is not to be left to the speculation of men unaided by revelation from God. And of his work he says, "I the Lord will hasten it in his time." When the Lord set his hand to introduce the great work of restoration of "the everlasting gospel" by angelic administration, and thus authorize a proclamation of "this gospel of the kingdom," as "a witness unto all nations" (see Matthew 24: 14), it mattered not that men opposed it. Men "always oppose what they do not understand."

Subsequently to May, 1829, of the work to grow from the setting of the divine hand, as at that time revealed, it was said by the Almighty:

For verily, verily I say unto you, that ye are called to lift up your voices as with the sound of a trumpet, to declare my gospel unto a crooked and perverse generation: for, behold, the field is white already to harvest; and it is the eleventh hour, and for the last time that I shall call laborers into my vineyard. And my vineyard has become corrupted every whit; and there is none that doeth good save it be a few; and they err in many instances, because of priest-crafts, all having corrupt minds. And verily, verily I say unto you, that this church have I established and called forth out of the wilderness; and even so will I gather mine elect from the four quarters of the earth, even as many as will believe in me, and hearken unto my voice; yea, verily, verily I say unto you, that the field is white already to harvest; wherefore, thrust in your sickles, and reap with all your mind, and strength.—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 1, 2.

"How shall they preach, except they be sent?" is a question embodying a principle upon which God has always acted in his beneficences to mankind.

No man, in any age or dispensation, was ever called to the ministry by God's word previously written. That he should be called in harmony with it is the exact truth. Noah's commission was never intended for a call to Moses. Nor was that of Moses a commission to Joshua. Paul did not go back to the commission given to Peter for a call to preach the gospel. Nor was the call and commission of any ancient apostle or evangelist a commission to any one or all of the reformers of modern times to go out and rear churches among men.

That God should speak from the heavens to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, and others, and commission them with a dispensation of the gospel in this final and "eleventh hour" call and dispensation, is but acting in harmony with his immutability, and maintaining his justice and infinite impartiality. Here, then, is evidence in harmony with the teachings of the Bible, in favor of the great latter-day work, from every material point of view.

It is a strange thing to be a Bible-reader and believe that because great men may differ with each other regarding their religious ideas, that that is an all-sufficient reason for breaking the bond and going out and organizing churches, new and differing ones. Is this not strange! And yet this seems to be the sole reason in each case for the forming of each new creed and the addition of each new organization that comes into existence. Instead of building by virtue of a new commission from God, or because his written word demands it, or because there is any divine warrant for it in precedent or example, or instead of building on God's word, or any truth therein contained, it is building churches on the differences in men's religious opinions! Here is the original, the primal cause for the existence, and these differences of religious opinions are their basis. I say "opinions" because it is not claimed in any instance from Catholic down through the grades of Protestant religious movements, that God has had anything to say, or delivered one word to them about church-building. Let us here give an instance, illustrative of the truth in general of the foregoing statements. At the religious institute conducted in Dayton, Ohio, in 1906, wherein each minister was invited to take part, and tell why he was what he was, Elder I. J. Cohill, of Dayton, on "Why I am a Disciple of Christ," speaking of the origin of the church he represented, said:

In 1807, Thomas Campbell, a minister of the seceder branch of the Presbyterian Church, and a very godly man, came from the north of Ireland and settled in Western Pennsylvania. He was the only minister in a wide extent of country. In his community he found families of Christian people of various denominations. Baptists, Methodists, and the differing schools of Presbyterians. Sectarian feeling ran high, and he found that these people would not attend his ministrations because he was not of their particular denomination. Hence, families of Christian people drifted into godlessness. Religious life was at low ebb. The Lord's day, as well as the Lord's house, was ignored. Families were divided, and while each recognized the others as Christians, yet they could not partake of the communion together because of denominational bitterness. Mr. Campbell was distressed at the sight of the decadent religious life of the community, the division in families and the sectarian intolerance. Being the only minister in the community he felt responsible to God for the religious life, not only of his own people, but of all the community. Out of the conscientious convictions of this man of God has grown a movement that has enlisted a million and a quarter of people who support forty-one institutions of higher learning, in which are nine hundred and ninety-seven young men preparing for the work of the ministry; they maintain also eleven homes and hospitals in the homeland as well as numerous hospitals, schools, and colleges in foreign lands, where four hundred missionaries are supported. I give you only this brief word of whence we came and whereunto we have come, for I care more to tell you what we are and where we are going. . . . It is the purpose [of the Disciple Church.—C. S.] to avoid the incidentals of denominationalism that the essentials of Christianity may be emphasized—and that thereby the last unity of the church may be restored. Christ is not divided; the prayer of the Master for his people was that they all might be one; the apostolic injunction is to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. . . . We plead for the restoration of the apostolic church; for the New Testament simplicity; for the New Testament faith; for the New Testament evangelism, with its principles, its message, its zeal.

These passages are from a report of the sermon as reported from the lips of the speaker, and published at the time in the Dayton, (Ohio), Journal. They show the origin of the Church of Disciples. They have sought to "restore" "in its essential features" the primitive apostolic church," says the speaker—a plain admission that "the primitive apostolic church" "in its essential features" was, till subsequent to 1807, lost! If not, why seek to restore it?

But do not forget that the origin of this proposed restoration was a move growing "out of the conscientious conviction" of Doctor Thomas Campbell. He differed from the Christian sentiment of the Christian churches and "Christian families" in Western Pennsylvania, and they differed per se from him, and this divided sentiment became the cause of a new "movement," that has grown. No command of God connected with the new movement. No divine commission. No revelation from God commanding it. Did not the denominations, from whom Mr. Campbell differed, have "conscientious convictions"? Were not their movements based on the varying "conscientious convictions," just as divine and just as authoritative in God's sight as were Mr. Campbell's? Honest differences of opinion should not validate one man's religious "movement," and discredit the other. One is as legitimate and authoritative as the other, so long as there is no command of God for either. All have equal right to rear religious movements, so far as man's rights go. Religious toleration can not but agree to this.

But we ask, What are "the essential features" of “the apostolic church,” “primitive”? Let us consult the New Testament right here.

The church or kingdom of God, as instituted and organized in apostolic days, to begin with, had no non-essential features. God does not deal in non-essentials in the gospel of man's eternal salvation. Anything less than what he then instituted would not have been the church, would it? Did he have to experiment in churchmaking as men do in human government constructing? Did he build and afterward find out that a change in organic structure was what he needed to reach the end he had in view—man's salvation? If so, the principles upon which he originally constructed were laid aside and others were substituted. And the original essential features of “the primitive apostolic church” were found to be inadequate, and other “essential features” were substituted! But God does not so deal. “He [God] is the rock, his work is perfect.”—Deuteronomy 32: 4.

I know that, whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him. That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.—Ecclesiastes 3: 14, 15.

So wrote the wise man, as he viewed the immutability of God in respect to his purposes and counsels. And Paul taught the eternal truth: “Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and to-day, and for ever.”—Hebrews 13: 8.

When God through Christ built his church, it consisted of divine authority by which the government was established, set up, or instituted, and its laws administered; it consisted of officers “set” therein, clothed with this authority that their ministrations might be valid and lawful. No man in the church assumed to minister without being duly called of God. David, while taking a prophetic view of the government of Christ, says, “I [God] will also clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.”—Psalm 132: 16. “But ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord, men shall call you the Ministers of God.”—Isaiah 61: 6. And it must not be forgotten that the Prophet Isaiah is speaking of Christ's mission. (See Isaiah 61: 1-6; Luke 4: 18.)

The priesthood of the church by way of official distinction, are thus designated:

Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healings, helps, governments, diversities of tongues.—1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28.

Paul is speaking of the church as a great whole, a unit, the one body of Christ.

Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first into the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ: that we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive.—Ephesians 4: 8-14.

Here is the official structure of the church in general as primitively organized. But we must not omit the bishops and deacons, as an all-important integral of the divine structure. God's will with respect to his purposes and intentions, whether it relates to the worlds he creates or the establishment of his kingdom among men, that immutable WILL is expressed and made known by what he does, creates. The New Testament expresses God's will as to what he designed the church to be, and in the restoration of the church, nothing short of the reëxpression of that unchanged will can be expected; and, hence, the church as restored must consist of all the identical principles of doctrine, the same official structure, the identical spiritual life and power, and endowments as it consisted of in New Testament days. Anything short of this would not, will not be the church restored.

Our Father has been pleased to shine “out of Zion, the perfection of beauty,” from time to time, such degree of light as man has been able to receive and profit by, such degrees as might elevate him into communion and accord with Himself; but man has as often, as a mass, turned away from heaven's light to his own devices; and in the infinitely important question of his religion, as it related and relates to his own eternal life and welfare, has chosen his own devices. They prefer to make their religious differences of opinions the basis for church foundations, and building, rather than the revealed light of heaven, God's word. Here, in men's differing minds, is the source of church divisions, or differing churches and religious faith; not so with God. His works in all his creations are characterized by unity and harmony. One man inspired by God's Holy Spirit does not in his revelations contradict another man in the revelations of the Spirit to him. God is not against himself.

As for the church, doctrinally, organically, and in spiritual endowment, no one can tell what it is, aside from the expression and description of it found in the revelations of God. Principles, which in their nature are eternal, must be the basis of it in all its relations, not men's “conscientious conviction,” based only on their differences of religious opinion.

The principles of “the everlasting gospel,” are the materials of which God's church is constituted. These only will eternally save, and remain.

CO-OPERATION PRACTICALLY APPLIED IN BRANCHES.

I do not know whether it has struck you as to the amount of money that is being continually wasted to the church as a general body, and to the members individually, in the purchase and manufacture of the commodities of life, and, not only this, also a certain amount of employment that might be found for brethren and sisters. Let us consider:

First. We are all needing food, clothing, furniture, and household effects in the general way. We are purchasing these commodities from some one; they are making, to say the least, a retail profit out of us; in the grocery, from fifteen to twenty per cent, and in the drapery, from twenty-five to thirty-three per cent, and, in some instances, fifty per cent. Now this profit can be saved to us as a church, and as individuals, which is continually going into the hands of private enterprises, and is wholly lost to us except in the case where members are in the various coöperation societies, and then they seldom get fifteen per cent or three shillings in the pound back for goods purchased, showing them that at the lowest there is about ten per cent totally lost.

Now, having briefly pointed out to you this waste which is continually going on every day, week, and year, is there a remedy? Yes. The remedy lies in coöperation. What is there to prevent the members of each branch purchasing at a wholesale price the commodities in the shape of groceries, drapery, boots, furniture, and the general necessities, and selling them to each other.

It may be said that we can not buy the quantity to get it at a wholesale price, also it may be said that it will require a large amount of capital to stock the store in the first instance; but these are obstacles which do not stand in the way to the extent that may be thought. For example: In Leeds, March 11, 1907, a number of the members of the Wortley Branch determined to commence a coöperation society. Two of the brethren called upon several wholesale warehouses, explained the object that they had in hand, and that their terms would be cash for goods, with the result that both for drapery, boots, ironmongery (hardware), and groceries, we obtained their best terms for cash, which has been maintained ever since. We then collected thirty shillings from the members, and went and spent that amount on goods that were wanted at once, which realized two pounds, four shillings. We then spent the forty-four shillings on goods that were wanted, and the capital increased as it was turned over. We then proceeded to organize ourselves with president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, and a committee of management, and got the members to subscribe, as they were able, amounts to make up one pound shares, until at the present time the amount of capital share in the society is eight pounds, nineteen shillings. We have purchased from ourselves, three hundred and fourteen pounds, and eight pence. The stock in goods and cash was, at our last quarter, balance about seventeen pounds, fourteen shillings, and two pence halfpenny. We have paid out to the members in dividends, forty-seven pounds, two shillings. We have also five pounds to hand to the Bishop of the church.

The rule as to the division of profit is as follows: Ten per cent of the gross profit first to the Bishop; five per annum on fully paid up one pound shares, three shillings in the pound to the members on their purchases. We also allow all the members the privilege of selling goods to outsiders or to any who are not members of the society, and the purchases are booked to the member and they get three shillings in the pound, which is equal to a commission of fifteen per cent on all that they sell.

Now, this is a work that has been and is being carried on by and between fifteen and twenty members. Our reputation with the wholesale people is the highest; we stand on their books free from debt, which is creating a greater confidence, resulting in greater privileges for us. It is also giving prestige to us as a church by being acknowledged by those outside the church as being a splendid work, and approaching the social ideal, namely, each for all and all for each.

Now, if fifteen members can in one year make a profit of fifty pounds by supplying themselves, out of which ten per cent is given to the church, (five pounds,) and there are, I am given to understand, in this mission thirty branches, some with more than fifteen members, but averaging them at fifteen members all around, this would mean to the Bishopric in the mission one hundred and fifty pounds, out of money which is all the time going in the hands of private enterprises. This is only by buying wholesale and selling retail. If we produced also, which is within the range of possibility, we should then be in a position to find employment and help each other in a still more practical way.

Now, I submit, this is worthy of our consideration and adoption in all our branches; and will wonderfully help the work and have the tendency of cementing the brethren and sisters together in that brotherhood which we all profess.

To-Day.

BY ELLEN SHERARD ADAIR.

Dear ones, are we improving the opportunities of to-day as we should? While it is true of us that our little ones are under our own influence, guided by our own hands, do we also remember that time glides swiftly away, and the opportunities to instill in their minds the truth as taught in the gospel in a few years will be past, it may be for ever? If we live, and our children do, too soon will come the parting hour. They will be gone from us into the various walks of life. It is only a commonplace occurrence among our neighbors and friends when a grown son or daughter launches forth upon the great ocean of life, leaves the paternal roof, and many times it is for ever. We give the parting hand, wish them success, often tell them to be a good boy or girl, and then think but little more upon the matter. But how about the home from which they are gone?

An instance of this kind is vividly recalled to mind, a happy country home where brothers and sisters and parents all meet at eventide to read, to sing, and have family devotion, also to talk over all the little happenings of the day. Happiness seems to reign within this home. A casual observer would be led to think discontent would not enter there. But alas! as in most other homes, a son is growing restless, longing to see more of the world, to "do for himself." He announces his intention to the happy group. It is evident a shadow has fallen on the happy home circle. At last the day comes, a breakfast is eaten in silence, a very unusual thing for them. None care to talk. Each is busy with his own thought. The team stands at the door, the trunk is loaded, it seems almost like a coffin going out of the home. The good-byes are said amidst tears and weeping, and he is driven away to the station. The returning brother brings back some little presents for them all and says he sent them back and said you must not cry for he will come back some day. How lonely everything seems now! The old dinner-bell which all summer long rang out her welcome peals so loudly, sounds now like the tolling of a funeral knell. Everywhere you look something seems to speak of the absent one. At night the small brother, whose pet and constant companion he was, who followed him by day, who slept with him by night, lay sobbing as if his little heart would break, "Because my Henry is gone." For days none can scarcely speak the name so often spoken among them so short a time ago. Will he fall into temptation and go down in the great whirlpool of intemperance? Will the fair tempter lure him from paths of virtue and honor? Will he come back good and true as when he went? He, the handsome, tall man with curling, brown hair. Although so large yet often at evening stretching himself across a chair, his feet upon a stool, his head lying in his mother's lap as they talk of the future, the past, often of the gospel. Will he remember those talks? The sisters who have been his constant companions since childhood, will he remember to walk as chaste as when in their company?

Another brother went out from this home in the years that are past, borne away in a beautiful snowy casket. But there were no fears for him, only sufficient time to heal the bleeding wound, for

"It is not always death that causes
The tears unbidden quick to start;
For other sorrows keen, severe,
Can chill the once glad, merry heart."

Not so with those who go forth to the great battle of life. For those sickness, heartaches, trials, disappointments await upon every hand. Let us therefore try to prepare them for those things with which they are sure to meet sooner or later. Let them take sweet memories of a home life with them that will be entwined about their hearts as long as life itself shall last. Let us try to instill into their minds a love for that which is good and pure. Teach them to realize that in every time of need they can depend upon the promises of Almighty God. It is well to teach them to "Believe in God, believe that he is, and that he created all things both in heaven and in earth. Believe that he has all wisdom, and all power, both in heaven and in earth. Believe that man doth not comprehend all the things which the Lord can comprehend."

When this is thoroughly instilled in their young minds, you have given them a safeguard which will be as an anchor to the soul in time of adversity; for if we verily believe that all power, all wisdom are his, also that we do not comprehend all that he comprehends, surely many times we will find it easier to await the final consummation of things which perplex us. Whereas if we are not in possession of this knowledge we many times would act with greater hastiness.

I am aware of one fact which is an important one to my mind, and this is, we can sermonize with our children until it becomes like an old song to them. But we can be playful, jolly, and cheerful with our children without being irreverent. But when the opportunity presents itself, add here a word, there a word, and almost every day some question will arise, some idea be advanced which will give rise for a little talk along the gospel lines, and when a question is asked we should never let our work hinder us from then and there answering them for the hope within us, as best we can. For if they are old enough for these queries to arise in their minds, they also are old enough to reach some conclusion about the matter, and wrong impressions are hard to be gotten rid of when once found in the mind of a child. Hence the necessity of our trying to make right impressions at first. Let us not wait until some other time to answer them what they wish to know now, for when the day that is here goes into its grave, let it go with just as few lost opportunities as we possibly can, for

"To-day is the only day we have:
Of to-morrow we can't be sure,
To seize the chance as it comes along,
Is the way to make it secure.
For every year is a shorter year,
And this is a truth sublime,
A moment misspent is a jewel lost,
From the treasury of time."

Letter Department

BEEVILLE, Texas, September 14, 1908.

Dear Saints: I am this morning impressed with a desire to bear my testimony of the goodness of God toward me through a long life which seems to be now drawing to a close. And it may be that this is my last opportunity for aught we know. My life is truly in the hands of God. I suppose that I am one of a few of the many that saw the remains of those who, in the hands of God, organized the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and viewed in their earthly home all that remains of them after an unholy mob had done the work of demons. I saw many thousands that day dropping the unbidden tear over the lifeless forms that had given their life-blood as a sacrifice, and we, too, must sacrifice if we would win.

A great deal of my life has been a blank—lost—thrown away, but that I can not redeem. The misspent life is gone to the wind, but through the message of God we can redeem ourselves. This I have been trying for the last twenty years to accomplish, but at times the demon devils have almost defeated my efforts; but all honor to Him, I am yet in the faith, God has been indulgent with me, and I feel sure of the final result, if I only stand fast in that which he has intrusted to my efforts.

As I have said, I commenced in the work of the Reorganized Church, but I can not say, as I have heard others say, that I have never doubted; for the Adversary has tried me on every side, but from place to place, and from pillar to post I have fought him, and many times, without the help of the Holy Spirit, I could not have conquered. But the promise of God has been with me in my severest trials, and the manifestations of his power have set me on my feet. In my deepest afflictions I have seen the finger of God upon the wall, and have been able to cry out, "I know that my God liveth," and although my flesh shall perish I shall see him when he shall be made manifest in the fullness of his glory, and the perfect thing shall come, and we shall see as we are seen and know as we are known.

The ministerial work that has fallen to my lot, much of it, has been on the frontier, amid strangers, and has been beset with thorns and thistles. I have fought with beasts, not at Ephesus, but in Texas, but, after all, I owe no ill-will to any man, and in the matter of lucre I owe no man anything. (A good thing, by the way, for if I did I could not pay it.) Yes, I owe a debt of gratitude to those who have kindly contributed to my necessities many times in my travels and in my afflictions. In my experience in my ministerial work I have had many evidences. Through the power of God the sick have been healed under my administration. Many have been made to rejoice in my weak efforts, and the word of God has taken hold upon the hearts of a few, and when I am made to realize how few, I wonder why not more. But God knows, and what we know is very limited, but the hand of God in that great day will reveal the hidden mysteries. We have only to wait the appointed time when the mists shall be cleared away, and the great overhangings are thrown back, and we are permitted to gaze upon the glorified condition of the revelation of the Son of God, and when the angels descend and gather the bad out of the kingdom, and Christ will be ready at that time to deliver it up to the Father. Oh, that all mankind could see it and be made to rejoice!

I have not preached a sermon for over five weeks, but I am feasting continually upon the riches of God's eternal word, and my dreams and visions at night upon my bed are a continued feast to my soul. My cup is almost full. Many times have I entered into sweet counsel with my brethren, and the wise counsel of my better informed brethren has been a source of enjoyment to me during the last twenty years of my life. The one that has stood closest to me in life, passed into the unseen world six years ago—the wife of my youth. My children since that time have been a source of comfort to me; all the affection that could be bestowed they have heaped upon me. Had it not been thus, I guess I would have been on the other shore by this time. I have reached that period that I can say the sting of death is no longer a dread. I can look into the open grave and say, "O grave, where is thy victory?" You can only contain the mouldering body. The spirit you can not imprison.

I shall remain at this place likely about four weeks yet. I will try to reach the local conference of San Antonio next month. Will perhaps remain there a few days, then to Cleburne, and later to Sweet Water, where I shall likely winter. I shall then be deprived of the sweet communion of Saints, but I am sure the communion of the Holy Spirit will be mine to enjoy. I am one of the isolated ones. To such, hold to the promise and you will be comforted. It is not without conditions.

Dear Saints, remember the sanitarium and the orphans with all the help you can give; the work will not be overdone. The Bishop will not be burdened with your money. He has a place for it as soon as he gets it, so send it along. Have no fears. God will bless you. "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."

I think of the past years of my life with mingled regret and pleasure. With regret that much of my life has been wasted. The pleasurable thought is that all the years have not been a loss, but that I have had pleasure in striving, in the last few years, to make my life useful to my Redeemer in the work of these last days, for a betterment of the world, with the hope that by the time the remaining days of my life have been told, it may be said the world is better by my having lived in it. I shall pray that with the efforts of the people of God, as coworkers with him, Zion may be redeemed.

I would love to spend the remaining days God may give me in this life with his people, but the outlook at present indicates that I shall not be where I can enjoy their association; but I have no fears for myself. Loving hands will care for my comfort. So may the blessings of God abide with his people. I hope with confidence to meet you all on the other shore where the peace of God will reign for ever. Fare you well.

SKEWEN, Wales, September 5, 1908.

Dear Herald: I feel impressed to write concerning our experiences here at Llansamlet. We have been holding a series of preaching-services in the open air. On August 9, while preaching to a large audience, we were interrupted by some men who came from Swansea (four miles distant) who called themselves the Anti-mormon Society. They publicly accused us of being murderers, robbers, thieves, seducers, polygamists, scamps, devils, liars, and in fact everything that was bad. A little uproar ensued, but not of a serious nature, when finally it was arranged to hold a public debate on the following Sunday, August 16.

Bro. William Lewis, missionary for Wales, came down from Cardiff, forty miles distant, to assist us. I was very much surprised, as were all the Saints, at the course taken by the Anti-mormons, for the only question taken up from August 9 was, "Why was Joseph Smith shot?" They had several other questions to put forward, but not one word in reference to their vile and slanderous accusations. We did not have the privilege to defend ourselves, as they suggested we should. The debate adjourned from August 16 until August 23.

Weather being unfavorable on the 23d, Bro. Lewis returned to Cardiff, and wrote the Anti-mormons from there, suggesting, as the weather was unfavorable, that we finish the debate in a hall or chapel. This suggestion was ignored by them and they came up again on August 30. They said they wanted the debate ended that night, as they had no more time to waste at Llansamlet (which time they evidently had wasted). Bro. H. Ellis was prepared to take up the arguments for the Saints (in the absence of Bro. Lewis), but was not permitted to do so. The Anti-mormons actually occupied the whole of the time in trying to belittle the Saints and prejudice the minds of the audience (about twelve hundred) against them, when the sergeant of police stepped up and ordered them to leave.

I am satisfied they have done us no harm by their actions, for we have made a host of friends in the neighborhood. Good will come out of it, for we are still active and intend to continue to preach the glad tidings whenever or wherever we can.

There has been a great deal of comment by the press in regard to this action which has been very favorable to us. They have shown the distinction between our church and the Utah church, which means a great deal in this locality.

Praying for the welfare of the Saints and the onward spread of the gospel, I am,

Your brother and colaborer for Christ,
3 Ormes Road. F. SIMMONS.

LONG PINE, Nebraska, September 22, 1908.

Editors Herald: On Monday evening, September 14, Elder James E. Kelley, of Lamoni, arrived in Long Pine on the six o'clock train, and came up to the house, and we were very glad to see him. He said he would stay and visit with us one day; I secured the Odd Fellows' Hall for two nights, the 15th and 16th, and Bro. Frank Cochran of Lamoni, happening to be in town the evening of the 15th, he assisted Bro. James with the service that evening.

Bro. Kelley gave us two splendid sermons, but only a few came out to hear him, seven, I believe, besides my family. The people here are much prejudiced against our religion, and will not even come out to hear it.

I will be happy if the time ever comes when I can get my family where we can attend our own church services. We are always glad to see the elders at any time.

Yours in bonds,
J. J. DAVIDSON.

STIDMAN, Oklahoma, September 19, 1908.

Editor Herald: As I enjoy reading the HERALD, thought I would again contribute to its Letter Department. As I have not written since April 10, and several have written me concerning this place, and having been here longer now than before, am better prepared to answer the main inquiries. This is a new inland town, just building, twelve miles from railroad, with a prospect of becoming a good town, on account of a good prospect of a railroad coming through the place within a year. An oil company is drilling for oil at the present time, with good farming country surrounding for support of the place. Should there be any of the Saints who are looking for a location for business, or for a change in places, I think that they would do well here, as town property is cheap, lumber can be bought at fifteen dollars per thousand, good walnut shingles at four dollars and a half per thousand, and other shingles cheaper. And with a limited capital one could do well here. Also, if this should come to the notice of any blacksmith brother, who would like to come to this place, I would like such for a partner, as I am needing a partner. I have a good shop, just built, with very good tools, and a good run of work.

Bro. William Abbot, of Lamoni, spent a few days here in June, and preached a few sermons, but seemingly with no result.

A Campbellite evangelist held a meeting here in April, and challenged the Baptists and any and every one for a discussion. But the Baptists would not accept. The last Sunday in April, learning that I was a Saint, he hopped upon what he termed Mormonism, its origin, doctrine, and practice. Having been of the Utah church once himself, he thought he could tear it out root and branch, using the Brighamite literature to show that the Martyr was a polygamist, abusing the early Saints with such works as Gilbert's, telling the people that he was reading from court records, making no distinction between the Reorganized and the Utah churches, although he had previously admitted to me in the presence of several of his members that there was a difference. So, after a two-hour lecture, as he pleased to call it, I made a short talk, in which I demanded his authority for such outrageous talk. But he refused. I also challenged him to prove by good authority that Joseph was a bad man; also challenged him for a discussion, and he would not accept. Then I made the challenge broad enough to cover all the different preachers there at the time, and none of them would accept for a while. But by persuasion, one, Chambers accepted. The discussion was to begin in August; but the same Chambers came and tendered his resignation in July, and they would not furnish a man to meet me after Chambers backed down.

In the last two weeks of August the preacher before referred to held another meeting at this place, and did as he did before, challenged the Baptists and Methodists; but they paid no attention to him, and he took care not to jump on me any more. He preached two weeks; baptized nineteen. But the people are falling out with him. His people want me to furnish an elder to debate with him; but I tell them that I can take care of him.

I would be glad if some of the elders of this district would come this way.

I attended on last Sunday a meeting held by the Creek Indians. They are of the Baptist denomination. It makes my heart yearn for them to think they are traditioned as they are. They are devoted to their faith. Every time they have preaching, which is once a month, they take their dinner and preach all day, and half of the night before going home.

They have a nice church building, also what they call their kitchen, which is larger than their church. There they serve their meals, and make all feel at home. And at their big meetings they go and camp and preach nearly all the time, and the last night of their meeting they preach till daylight. They can beat any people I ever heard singing, and are the most devoted to their worship of any I ever saw. The most of them can understand English. I think that a good work could be done among the Indians here. The dinner they made on last Sunday cost them two hundred and seventy-five dollars, and their contribution amounted to two hundred and eighty-five dollars. They fed nearly a thousand people.

Your brother,
A. C. CHRISMAN.

FAIRFIELD, Nebraska, September 23, 1908.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this part of the vineyard might be of interest: I arrived at this place yesterday from Beatrice, where I assisted Elder N. C. Enge in holding street-services. Bro. Enge is a veteran street-preacher and succeeded in creating quite an interest during his short sojourn there. He commenced the fight by preaching on the preëxistence of the spirit of man, and ending with the principles of the gospel. Some expressed regret at our leaving so soon, and invited us to return.

The night of the 16th, my mother, Mrs. A. Burgess, was taken sick, and unable to be up till noon the next day, when Bro. Enge administered to her. Within twenty minutes after the administration she arose and ate dinner with us, and went home in the afternoon, a distance of eleven miles. Bro. Enge and I came on to DeWitt yesterday, and there separated, he going to Omaha, and the writer coming here to look after the interests of Sunday-school and Religio work.

Would say that the prospects seem good for the organization of a Religio at this place. I feel strong in the faith, and am satisfied that Zion's cause will eventually triumph.

In gospel bonds,

ROBERT BURGESS.

HARRISON, Nebraska, September 19, 1908.

Dear Herald: I thought I would write you again, to tell you that I have found a family of our dear Saints. I was so glad to find them, as I was so hungry to see a true Saint once more; and we feel that the Lord is good to grant us this blessing; for there are no others like our own dear Saints. Pray for me that I may grow in grace, and learn more of his great love for us.

I would ask you if you can send one of our good elders to this place right away? It might be the greatest of blessings to get the true gospel before the people of Harrison. There is no preacher here now, and it might be one of the best times to let the people hear the true word of the gospel. Some would like to hear our belief.

As ever, your sister in the one faith,

MARY L. WIGHT.

Box 71.

BOTHWELL, Canada, September 15, 1908.

Editors Herald: We are pleased to be able to write you again under favorable circumstances. Since we last wrote to your precious columns a few changes have come, of which some are pleasant and some are sad.

Sr. Maggie Dent, who has been afflicted for more than eighteen months with cancer, has passed to her reward to-day. During her illness there were many prayer-meetings held at her home in her behalf, and many times has she heeded the commands of the Lord in calling for the elders, and as a result of the combined efforts of all the last six months of her life have been spent with very little or no pain as compared with others who suffer from the same affliction. She was a very patient sister during her whole sickness, and has won the love of her acquaintances both inside the fold and out. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved family.

We have just been blessed with a series of missionary meetings on the street and in the hall in Bothwell by missionaries, Brn. G. M. Shippy, John Shields, and B. Saint John, the latter only being privileged to remain for the first two evenings.

The services commenced on August 6 and continued until September 8. Hundreds heard the gospel during this time and many who were strongly opposed to this latter-day work are now friends to the cause. The missionaries showed such a spirit of earnestness and kindness to all that they left an impression on investigators that can never be erased.

In those sermons entitled, "The narrow way" and "Utah Mormonism," several were heard to say, "Those men are the deepest we ever heard, and have such a knowledge of the Bible compared to what we other churches have."

The missionaries made strenuous efforts to advertise their meetings, and some of those efforts seemed to be a little humiliating to some of the Saints who are not so fond of showing their colors to the world; but before the meetings were over we believe that all the Saints were pleased to have it known that they were numbered among those who had God and his holy angels on their side.

While there were no additions to our branch, some have promised to obey, and we sincerely hope that the missionaries above mentioned, who have so endeared themselves to the hearts of the Saints, may be privileged to return and reap some of the harvest which they have sown.

Praying for the onward spread of the gospel,

JOHN C. DENT.

HAMILTON, Scotland, September 5, 1908.

Saints' Herald: Since coming to this country, I have found it very much like it was two years ago last spring when I wrote to your pages. Not very much encouragement for the gospel bells to ring in Scotland, except it is by some other means than asking people to come out on the streets to hear you. Scotland is a wet country. Last year the crops were not in until near the Christmas holidays, it rained so much. This year the rain has started, and the crops were just beginning to be harvested. Now, since looking over the condition, with prayerful consideration, and considering the money that it takes to rent halls, my best thought is, if any good can be done and if a tent ever was a success, this might be the country for it.

Of course I know that the church is not able to spend all the money that some of us would like; but could we not get up a tent fund for Scotland by our Scottish brethren in America? Think of it, you Scots, and let our General Conference send two of our young, courageous brethren to work this tent; and if they are not received in one city they can go to another, until this little island has all had the warning cry. I am one of the poor Scots of America, but very anxious that this should be tried, so to start our tent fund in America for the benefit of Scotland, I will give twenty-five dollars, whenever you name your date of collection. Try to let this be done before next General Conference.

This nation is retrogressive at present. When I was a boy in this land, we used to hold a fast day every six months like what we call Thanksgiving in America, and nearly every one would go to the churches to worship. The churches were often well filled. But that day is past. No such thing now. And on Sundays the churches are nearly empty in every city where I have been. But in tent work (and there are quite a few in Scotland) you can get a few. Expecting something new, I suppose. The only crowds of men at the corners of the streets that I have seen, are filled with the spirit of socialism. The most of these are atheists, and they are getting stronger every day, working with all the power they can, and the results will be seen before long. Brethren shun the places in which you can not get the Spirit of God. I would like to say much on this, but I will try to forbear. It is not the gospel. Let nothing take the place of the gospel, nor rob us of our reward, which is the crown, if we endure to the end. But Scotland is feeling the oppression very hard at present; not much demand for labor, so we have thousands of men that can not get work. Inclosed is a clipping from Glasgow Weekly News for September 3. Hope you may publish it, even if this letter should find the wastebasket. Our brethren are also feeling the effects of it. They are about to give up the little hall that we meet in at Hamilton. But we will try to keep it another quarter, that is, three months.

Since coming here I have been presiding over Hamilton Branch, and have been visiting other towns through the week. But I find this to be a little expensive, although I have traveled a good deal on foot. Yet, sometimes we have to eat, and that costs money, where you are not known in all these new towns. Well, we are out of a job, because it rained all last week, and a good start on this one.

I hope you will consider this tent fund proposition with a prayerful thought. I believe it depends on you Scots who can spare some of your abundance, of which the Lord has made you stewards. Could you spend it in any better way than in laying up your treasures in heaven? or on earth that heaven may be built up by a righteous people? Let the gospel sound in the valleys and on the mountains of Bonnie Scotland. Do your part, and then you will have nothing to fear. God will bless you in doing it, if you do it for the pure love of the truth, and for the sake of humanity, that the gospel may reach all the workmanship of God's hands. The Scots are famed for taking an active part in all that is progressive, and surely you will not withhold that which will help to forward the gospel to our fellow men. May God bless you all, and may the honest in heart soon hear the glad news of salvation, is my prayer.

JAMES BAILLIE.

A REMARKABLE MANIFESTO.

To-day's gathering of the unemployed is the outcome of a manifesto published last week end, in the following terms:

"The unemployed in Glasgow can starve no longer. They have been quiet and peaceful. They have waited patiently on their rulers' pleasure.

"But still they and their wives and children starve.

"Thirty thousand men, thirty thousand women, one hundred thousand children in this city of plenty are hungry now.

"The fathers can not get work; the mothers can not get work; the children are crying.

"Flesh and blood can stand it no longer. the Government finds a million pounds for a Dreadnought to kill; it must find bread for the people to live.

"This week the Government has sent a cheque to the Distress Committee for £5,000. It will not do. It is an insult.

"There must be Bread Riots soon. We can starve in peace no longer. 'We want bread' is our motto, and we are covering Glasgow with an organization preparing for desperate measures.

"We want help in various districts of the city. We want the names and addresses of unemployed men who are willing to help, and we want these names and addresses at once.

"The children are crying now.

"We expect (and are make arrangements for) every Socialist branch rooms being put at our disposal.

"Are you a man? Then, in heaven's name, come and give us your help."

The manifesto (a correspondent adds) is signed by two of the unemployed, but a number of well-known men in the Socialist ranks are interesting themselves in the matter.

LYNNVILLE, Kentucky, September 23, 1908.

Editors Herald: As it has been some time since I wrote for your columns, I will write and let you know I am still on the firing line.

My time has been quite well occupied of late. Since the reunion I spent about three weeks, in all, at Eagle Creek, where the work was revived considerably and one baptized. At Paris, Tennessee, I spent about three weeks with the tent. A good work was done there. At this place, known as the Highhill Branch, I have been laboring a week to-day. This week I am preaching at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, and at half past seven in the evening. The interest is very fair, considering it is a busy time. Farmers are cutting tobacco and hay and working with their sorghum.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. M. STUBBART.

Southern Illinois Reunion.

Reunion was held at Brush Creek chapel, eight miles south of Xenia, Illinois, from September 4 to 13, and all who attended and participated in camping on the grounds and attending the preaching, testimony, prayer, and other services were greatly encouraged and expressed themselves as being well paid for the sacrifice made and effort put forth to attend. Elder Henry Sparling was selected to act as chairman, Bro. F. M. Davis associate; F. L. Sawley was chosen secretary; A. H. Burroughs chorister; F. L. Sawley organist. These two had the privilege of choosing their assistants. Four police and two ushers were chosen who did their work well, as splendid order prevailed all through the reunion.

The preaching was done by Brn. Sparling, J. A. Tanner, G. H. Hilliard, F. L. Sawley, S. H. Fields, P. T. Plum, and Lloyd Moore. The Sunday-school and Religio work was under the direction of Elder J. A. Tanner, assisted by F. L. Sawley and others, and consisted of institute and normal work, with one model Religio service under the direction of Elder F. L. Sawley. The workers manifested a deep interest in the auxiliary work. Bro. J. A. Tanner's work along this line was well received and greatly appreciated. Bro. Hilliard first heard the gospel in this district; did his first preaching, debating, etc., here, hence he is always a welcome guest anywhere in this district.

It was voted to hold another reunion in August, 1909, in the Springerton Branch. Brn. Sparling, Davis, and Sawley were continued as the reunion committee for 1909. Although this part of the country is suffering because of drought, the roads being extremely dusty, and the weather very warm, the campers were cheerful and the reunion was a success.

REPORTER.

RINARD, Illinois, September 21, 1908.

Northern California Reunion.

The Northern California reunion has come and gone. It was preceded by many earnest prayers and anxious preparations. It was organized in peace and so continued, and ended with a multiplied degree of peace and divine grace. It enters into history as the best all-round reunion held in this part of the State within my knowledge. The First Presidency, the Twelve, the Seventy, the High Priests, the Patriarchate, the Bishopric, the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons quorums were each represented.

President F. M. Smith, F. A. Smith, T. W. Williams, C. E. Crumley, J. F. Wiles, J. A. Lawn, J. A. Anthony, C. C. Joehnk, C. A. Parkin, J. F. Burton, C. W. Earle, C. W. Hawkins, and J. M. Terry did the preaching. There were forty-three services in all during the ten days and no lagging of attendance at any of them. Over fifty young people with a few older ones held two prayer-services at six o'clock in the morning, at which about forty testimonies were borne at each service. Sacrament-service was held on the last Sunday from fifteen minutes past nine to fifteen minutes to eleven. Forty-seven minutes of this time was given to prayer and testimony in which fifty-five testimonies were heard, beside prayers and songs, including tongues, prophecy, and interpretation.

President F. M. Smith's sermon on Graceland College was well received and increased the already friendly feeling for that noble institution. His four sermons were all well received, especially the one on "The life of Christ." Bro. T. W. Williams, with his paradoxical methods, in four sermons gave good satisfaction, and aroused latent thoughts which will evidently end in good. I speak specially of these two because this was their first visit to our district.

The general impression, in a spiritual way, made by the visiting ministry was good, and the general verdict of all who expressed themselves was that it was the best reunion yet held here. The unanimous vote was favorable to having another reunion next year at Irvington, the same place. The new committee consists of C. W. Hawkins, of San Jose, John Lawn, of San Francisco, J. A. Saxe, of Irvington, J. H. Driver, and the writer. The committee organized with J. M. Terry chairman, J. A. Lawn secretary, and J. H. Driver treasurer. There are four John's on the committee, so look out for a good reunion in 1909.

On Wednesday, September 9, Bro. Joseph F. Burton was ordained to the office of evangelical minister under the hands of Brn. F. A. Smith and F. M. Smith. The district conference convened Tuesday and passed peacefully through its routine business. Bro. F. A. Smith, president of this mission, presented the call of Bro. Burton to the conference, and it received a hearty and unanimous sanction. Surely Bro. Burton is loved and esteemed by the Saints here.

There were nine baptized during the time, Bro. C. W. Earle officiating. They were confirmed Sunday morning at eight o'clock under the direction of Bro. F. A. Smith, Brn. J. A. Anthony, J. A. Lawn, C. W. Hawkins, and C. W. Earle officiating.

Bro. F. M. Smith started for home on Monday, sailing for Los Angeles, thence eastward on the 17th. Bro. F. A. Smith remains with us to prosecute his mission work. We regret Bro. F. M. could not longer remain with us to become better acquainted with the Saints.

Bro. T. W. Williams returned to his southern home on Monday. He did us good by his visit and we shall stand ready to welcome him at any time.

In gospel bonds,

J. M. TERRY.

From the "Tobacco Belt."

Many of the HERALD readers doubtless are not acquainted with the tobacco-plant; though there are none, possibly, who are not acquainted with it in its manufactured forms.

The tobacco-plant, while growing under proper conditions, is very luxuriant. If permitted to grow to full development, it will attain a height of five or six feet, terminating in a large blossom that produces many seed-pods filled with numerous seeds.

The seed stock is not usually permitted to grow more than two or three feet high, when it is "topped" to throw the strength into the leaves. Only eight to twelve leaves are permitted to grow on a stalk, and in some varieties these grow quite large, sometimes as much as fourteen inches broad and three feet long. It is a grand sight to see a field of several acres covered with these plants, in rows about three and one half feet apart each way, about three feet high, and the tips of the leaves nearly reaching the ground, which is almost hidden from view.

While the plant is nice to look at from a distance, it is not so nice to come in contact with. It is covered with a sticky substance that adheres to the hands and clothes and makes it quite disagreeable to handle. If this were the only unpleasant feature in its culture, the tobacco-raiser would fare well; but it is infested with the "horn worm" that would effectually strip it of its leaves, were "eternal vigilance" not kept up to destroy them. In the ordinary (or the old) way, every plant must be examined once a week to catch and kill them; but as men get "wiser and weaker" they devise labor-saving means; so the improved method is to spray the plants with paris green.

Whether the paris green improves the flavor of the tobacco, or strengthens its resident poison, I have not learned; but as poisons often create an appetite in men for their use, I suppose the paris green habit will grow.

Worms are not the only pests that have to be kept off the tobacco. Suckers must be kept off, too, or the strength would go into them that should go into the leaves. These require weekly attention.

To prepare for, and grow a crop of tobacco, one must start very early in the spring and prepare a bed for his plants, on which he burns a log-heap to sterilize the ground from other seeds. When his plants are grown to proper size, he has his ground prepared and laid off, then comes the backaching work of setting the plants. After this comes cultivating and hoeing a number of times, then the worming and suckering, and then the cutting, housing, curing, stripping, etc.

The cutting is done by splitting the stalks, cutting them down, and hanging several on a stick. These sticks, with their load are hung up in big barns, about twenty feet to the eaves, on poles arranged about four feet apart, and in tiers two and one half feet above each other; so that the barn, when full, is packed, with but little air space, from six feet of the ground to the top.

After the barn is filled, it is "fired." That is, fires are built under the tobacco to dry up the moisture, and cure it. This takes but a few days. Great caution must be used when the tobacco gets about dry; for a blaze reaching it would set it afire like powder. If a stick of dry tobacco should fall into the fire, the barn, with its contents of several hundred dollars worth of tobacco, would go up at once in incense to the god of Tobaccus.

After the tobacco is cured is it stripped, and the leaves sorted and pressed into hogsheads and shipped to the factories where it is manufactured.

About three or four acres of tobacco is as much as one man can care for. If he gets a good crop and a good price, he may get one hundred dollars per acre. If he uses plenty of paris green, he may increase his crop a couple of acres. At the best he has but little show to get ahead in the world. So we find the "tobacco belt" mostly occupied by poor people and small farms. When a man can command plenty of help, he can raise larger crops, and has some hopes of advancement.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

The announcement of the conference of the Utah elders caused some stir among the ministers of the city, as you will see by the Register and Leader, a copy of which I have mailed the HERALD editors, and the reporter of that paper informed me of their presence in the city before any of the papers had published a notice of their coming, and requested me to make a statement for publication, which I was glad to do, the greater part of which appeared in the paper.

At the conference they indorsed the official work of President Roosevelt, and gave as their reasons that it was because he had favored the seating of Reed Smoot, and they make their boast that the decision of the Senate in favor of the seating of Smoot was one of the most favorable omens that the people are losing their prejudices against them, and are now willing that they should without any opposition prosecute their missionary work in the United States. They applauded the work and character of Brigham Young, and made the claim that he was as noble a man as Moses, Abraham, or Isaac. On account of the unfavorable conditions of the weather I do not believe that they did much missionary work in the city, and have not heard of any tract distribution having been done by them.

The Taft demonstration was equal to anything that has occurred in the city, and the Republicans claim that he made at least one thousand votes by his visit.

At the Ministerial Association this forenoon a paper was read by a Reverend Richardson, of Valley Junction, in which the philosophic basis of Christian Science was discussed in a way not favorable to that cult. He claimed that their philosophy was that God was a principle, not a personality, that man was but the idea of God, not a personal entity, and that life was but a dream, an illusion, and presented his evidence from their own writings. He then showed by contrast that what the Buddhist and the Brahmin claimed for their religion was embodied in the basic philosophic principles of Christian Science, and that these heathen religions were being taught and largely believed in by the people because they were clothed in the claims of being Christian and scientific, neither of which it was.

A fine point came up in regard to who should be members of the Association, and a committee was appointed to so far explain their constitution that it might be more fully understood in the future, and the term evangelical came in for a hearing, and you may hear further from this subject when they have defined who shall be members of the Ministerial Association.

In the discussion of the paper on Christian Science, a Reverend Helfestein claimed that the atonement stood for the healing of the body as well as the saving of the soul, and that when the fullness of the gospel was preached it would be an antidote for the false ideas of Christian Science, which he claimed was of the Devil. To the idea that Christ's atonement stood for the healing of the body without the use of medicines there were some protests, but several sustained this contention. I felt glad to hear such a claim sustained by men of such prominence, but they dubbed this idea the "Emanuel movement," instead of being a part of the work of Christ through the gospel, as I had the privilege of telling them.

Efforts by the missionary, supplemented by the branch officials, are being made to continue the cottage meeting plan, already begun, during at least the first part of the winter, and we hope to enlarge upon this effort the latter part of the winter, the Lord willing.

A much better feeling is prevailing in a general way in the branch, and the Sunday-school and Religio are becoming more active. Two of the intermediate classes held a social about ten days ago, and about eight dollars was netted and turned over to assist in meeting the running expenses of the branch; besides it was a pleasant evening for the young.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

During the month of September, the Saints have received instruction through Brn. Tanner, Archibald, Remington, and Burgess, Bro. W. C. Carl of the Landsdowne Branch, Bro. T. J. Elliott, president of the Landsdowne Branch, and Bro. Sparling of the missionary force.

District conference convened at Belleville, September 19 and 20.

Bro. and Sr. Tanner, with their daughter Elizabeth, attended the Southern Illinois reunion, and report having had a splendid time.

The Mite Society's bazaar held the 25th and 26th, was very much enjoyed, and we trust was a success in a financial way. Supper was served both evenings, a fine program was rendered Friday evening, under the auspices of the Religio. Booths of fancy work and useful articles were arranged on the lawn, which looked very attractive. The sisters and all who assisted them are to be commended for their interest and zeal in carrying out their arrangements.

Sunday-school and Religio attendance and interest is fairly good. We hope that attendance will be better now that vacation time is over.

E. M. PATTERSON.

2739 DeJong Street.

ADELAIDE, SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

The work in this land is moving onward. There are here, as elsewhere, many hindrances to progress. In South Australia we have as yet but one branch, and that is operating in the center of the city of Adelaide. The Sunday-school, Religio, and Daughters of Zion locals are keeping up regular weekly meetings, and their educational value is being plainly demonstrated in the improvement noticeable in both old and young. We notice that those who attend these meetings keep more in touch with the work of God and take a keener interest in its operations throughout the world. Interest in religious subjects of any kind is at a very low ebb in all parts so far as the writer's observation permits him to judge. The tendency on the part of all classes is to utilize the Sunday for out-door exercises; and those who desire religion do not care for that of an unpopular kind, be it ever so true.

There is also a tendency noticeable in some branches to become leavened with worldliness and run things as close to the pattern of the other churches as possible. This, of course, can have but one result, viz, loss of spiritual power and consequent downfall. It would appear, from the writer's observation, that we have a fine constitution, but that we are lacking the administrative power. No matter how good the law, it is useless if left unadministered. The transgressor is permitted to flourish within the church, and consequently membership is lightly held, and the Law-giver dishonored. There seems to be room for improvement along these lines.

The Melbourne Branch has been thrown into confusion through the absconding of Elder Mackie, who left his post of duty in a sensational manner, and presumably will never return to it. We are anxiously awaiting Bro. Butterworth's return from America, when we hope some things now disturbing may be rectified.

Trusting that God will give us all grace to conquer, and that the church will keep so close to the right as to make triumph certain, I am

Yours in bonds,

J. H. N. JONES.

THE WORK IN TORONTO.

Coming to the immediate purpose of our present writing, and noticing incidentally the many and obvious improvements in the style and make-up of our beloved organ, the SAINT'S HERALD, where the pictures are, I consider, a very decided improvement and acquisition to the letter press, though I would personally like to see the editorial question-box reinstated, as by that means many knotty and troublesome theological points were briefly and finally disposed of, which would otherwise perhaps have evoked extensive letters upon the disputed point or subject. Many are the instructively interesting sidelights which a historian might throw upon the work in this still-growing and popular city of Toronto. From the time when, years ago, a few young sisters met together in a small room (or store) for worship and prayer and testimony, in a comparatively remote portion of the city, till the time when a hall was rented upon or near the corner of Queen and Bathurst Street, and up to the still later erection of the brick church on Camden Street, prior to the new and more commodious church on Soho Street, there has been a series of triumphs, interspersed, however, with set-backs and seasons of gloom and trial and reverse.

Undoubtedly the attractive and eloquent Sunday evening lectures, both at the Massey Hall, and still more recently at the Majestic Opera-house, in this city, by our able brother, R. C. Evans, contributed in no small degree, under divine assistance, to the very creditable position of the work here in general, and to the Toronto Branch in particular.

In spite of the many attractions and inducements of a kind calculated to ruin the said lectures by entirely depleting, or attempted depletions of the opera-house audiences, the interest initiated has been not only maintained, but even augmented; for the exclusion of large numbers for want of even standing room became and still remained a nightly occurrence.

Perhaps even more effective than the lectures themselves, was the beneficial practice by the lecturer of reply to any written questions at the close of each discourse, the questions to be deposited by the inquirer in the collection plates as they were handed around among the people.

This had a remarkably good effect, as it had the intellectual pulse (so to speak) of the audience brought to the point of actual manifestation by means of questions propounded. Certainly, some of the inquiries were doubtless flippant and facetious; but on the other hand, a great many of the questions show that a large proportion of the audience had not only obtained a clear intellectual grasp and appreciation of the various subjects presented to their notice, but that they had very ably and intelligently thought out and considered every possible objection that could rightly and reasonably be urged in opposition to the proposed theme or doctrine. In short, it would be well nigh impossible to indicate, without unwarrantably intruding upon the space rightly belonging to other of your correspondents, the many and varied ramifications in which good has been accomplished in Toronto by these able disquisitions, not only in the opera-house, but in the church; and our humble prayer is that the great Author of every good may be graciously pleased to preserve our respected brother's life and usefulness in the divine cause.

It only remains for me to add that the good work alluded to has been ably and effectively sustained during the summer months, when, of course, all the services are held in our new church on Soho Street.

By the way, I was not a little pleased to be informed, upon so good an authority as the eldest son of the Martyr, that the stained glass window at the eastern end of the church here, which bears a pictorial representation of the angel Moroni appearing to Joseph the Seer, is literally correct, the picture being a very good likeness of his lamented father.

The interest continues, and even increases; for the church services are well attended, especially that in the Sabbath evening when it is almost entirely filled, and the interest exhibited in the faces of the hearers present is proof positive of the absorbing interest created by the preacher's words and subjects.

Baptisms, too, are salutary and signal evidence of the Lord's approval; as there is scarcely a Sunday passes by, but two or three precious souls are "buried beneath the liquid grave," to arise again in newness of life and spirit with Christ their Lord and Master.

The welcome decision upon the part of our esteemed President R. C. Evans, to reside with his family permanently in Toronto, certainly adds prestige and permanency to the work here; and inquirers of every creed and nationality are welcome to his new and commodious home on Huron Street, to receive replies to any inquiries regarding this latter-day work, in all of which he is ably seconded by his esteemed partner, Sr. Lizzie Evans.

Died.

LLOYD.—Catherine Lloyd, born February 15, 1835, in Cambria County, Pennsylvania, died in Eldorado Springs, Missouri, August 4, 1908. Funeral conducted by Elder I. N. White, August 5, in the Methodist church at Eldorado Springs. Sr. Lloyd accepted the gospel, March, 1870. It is not too much to say she was one of the most devoted Saints the church ever knew. She passed away, seemingly, not leaving a lingering doubt in the minds of a vast field of acquaintances of her acceptance with God, and entering into the glory prepared for the pure and the good. She left a loving husband, Elder Abner Lloyd, and two children, E. W. Lloyd and Annie Elizabeth Jordon, to mourn her absence. As everlasting peace crowned her efforts, so may the loving husband and children live to enjoy it with her in the sweet by and by.

LEYTHAM.—Robert Myrta, son of Robert J. and Clarinda M. Leytham, was born at his father's home eight miles southeast of Dunlap, Iowa, May 19, 1907, and died at the same place, Sept. 19, 1908. Funeral-services were conducted at the Methodist Episcopal church, Dunlap, Iowa, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth, of Dow City, Iowa. Mr. Robert J. Leytham is a son of Mr. Richard Leytham of Persia, Iowa, one of the oldest settlers of that section and is well to do and highly respected by all who know him. Considering the age of little Robert Myrta the services were quite well attended. The remains were laid to rest in the Dunlap Cemetery to await the first resurrection.

HANSEN.—Nils Hansen was born near Aalborg, Denmark, September 21, 1867; came to this country in 1888; was married to Cathrine Kalstrup, January 7, 1893. To them were born five children who with their mother mourn the loss of a kind and loving husband and father. Bro. Hansen died at his home near Bedison, Missouri, September 1, 1908. Sermon by Peter Anderson.

CRONLIN.—Charles W. Cronlin, husband of Sr. Cora Cronlin, a daughter of Bro. and Sr. A. C. Stone, of near Lamoni, Iowa. He fell into a threshing machine, the machinery crushing the lower part of his body; causing death in forty-five minutes. He was born April 12, 1882, and died September 16, 1908, at Hetland, South Dakota, leaving a widow and two small children. Funeral-services by Elder Edward Rannie, in the Congregational church, in Hetland, South Dakota.

JUDD.—William, was born at Chingford, Essex, August 18, 1858; was married to Alice H. Kemp. Was baptized into the church June, 1880, by F. R. Tubb. He was a quiet, earnest brother whose delight was in the work which he had accepted as divine, and for several years labored in the branch as priest and teacher. His death took place with tragic suddenness, August 30, 1908, after being operated upon. He was at work Friday morning and was brought home helpless and then removed to the hospital, but all the loving help and medical skill employed failed to arrest the departing spirit of our brother, and he passed peacefully away as the Sabbath day was dying in the west. He was laid to rest in the cemetery at Enfield amid many manifestations of the esteem in which he had been held, J. W. Rushton being the minister officiating. He is survived by a wife, four sons, and one daughter.

Death is Painless.

Doctor Woods Hutchinson, a celebrated physician, writes an article of surpassing interest on "The curiosities of sleep" in the October American Magazine. He tells why shoes feel tight in the morning, why one curls up for a nap, why one grows drowsy in a stuffy room, why great men recuperate quickly, and why various other interesting things are true. On the subject of the painlessness of death, he says:

"This opposition between death and sleep does not, however, destroy one consoling analogy which has been drawn between them, and that is that they are both painless, and cause neither fear nor anxiety by their approach. It is one of the most merciful things in nature that the overwhelming majority of the poisons which destroy life, whether they be those of infectious disease or those which are elaborated from the body's own waste products, act as narcotics and abolish consciousness long before the end comes. While death is not in any sense analogous to sleep, it resembles it to the extent that it is in the vast majority of instances not only not painful, but welcome. Pain-racked and fever-scorched patients long for death as the wearied toiler longs for sleep. The fear of death which has been so enormously exploited in dramatic literature, sacred and otherwise, is almost without existence in sickness. Most of our patients have lost it completely by the time they become seriously ill.

"While many of the processes which lead to death are painful, death itself is painless, natural, like the fading of a flower or the falling of a leaf. Our dear ones drift out on the ebbing tide of life without fear, without pain, without regret, save for those they leave behind. When death comes close enough so that we can see the eyes behind the mask, his face becomes as welcome as that of his 'twin brother,' Sleep."

A Great Pessimist.

Pessimism is a transitory state of Aryan thought, but it is the normal condition of Hebrew thought. As Renan observed, in the whole of the Bible there are only two bright and joyful books—the "Song of Solomon" and the "Book of Ecclesiastes." All the rest, especially the prophets and the "Book of Job," form one sublime and colossal cry of pain. Even to-day, after the lapse of many centuries, every Jew of genius is almost destined to convey bad tidings to men, for all the great Jewish thinkers have almost always brought to light some painful phenomenon of life. Thus Spinoza announced to mankind that good and evil do not exist; Marx, that society is the battle-field of a desperate struggle between the social classes; Lassalle, that, by the "brazen law," workmen, in spite of their most strenuous efforts, can never earn more than the minimum which is just sufficient to keep them from starvation.

In this, Lombroso shares the common fate of his race. Not only has he affirmed that civilization augments crime and that man is fundamentally inclined to evil, but he has formulated the theory which is, perhaps, the most pessimistic one of the whole century—the theory which was destined to destroy the hero-worship introduced by Carlyle, and which has so many followers in England: I mean the theory that genius is a form of degeneracy.—From Guglielmo Ferrero's "Lombroso, prophet and criminologist," in the October Century.

ANOTHER CASE OF MISTAKEN ZEAL.

The readers of the HERALD have read of the arrest of Brother Edmund C. Briggs in Salt Lake City, Utah, charged with an infraction of a city ordinance which forbids the distribution of circulars or advertisements upon certain streets of the city. One of the special districts thus designated by ordinance includes the streets immediately converging upon the Temple inclosure, including the Temple, Assembly Hall, Tabernacle, and the Bureau of Information.

Brother Briggs was arrested and taken before Judge Diehl, for the reason that he was offering to persons upon the streets tracts published by the church, including his own written article, "Who's afraid?"

These tracts could by no means be construed to be circulars or advertisements such as it was evidently intended to be reached by the ordinance upon the violation of which Bro. Briggs was arrested, if what the Deseret News states in its issue for Saturday, September 19, is correct. The following is what the Deseret News stated:

The city has an ordinance making it a misdemeanor to distribute "any circular, handbill or advertisement whatever" on the streets in the business districts of the city.

The council many years ago adopted this rule because the distribution of handbills, particularly at conference time, became a nuisance. The bills were nearly always thrown into the streets, filling up the gutters and causing extra work and expense to the street department. But this Briggs, notwithstanding he had been warned that he violated the city ordinance by distributing his circulars in the streets, persisted in doing so, until the officer arrested him. His religion, or the contents of the tracts, had nothing to do with the incident.

It will seem from this that the News, though calling Bro. Briggs' tracts circulars, admits that they are tracts, and that they were of a religious character. It may be, as the News contends, that those who may be called the heads of the church, meaning the leading officers, did not order or direct the arrest of Bro. Briggs, but it will hardly be credited that these leading men would not know what Bro. E. C. Briggs was doing in the city, and on the streets adjacent to the Tabernacle. Brother Briggs has been in the city of Salt Lake for a number of months. He has been in open controversy with one of the prominent men of the church and one of

For every one hundred ministers, officers, and members in the church there are only four people won to Christ out of the world in a year! What a record! It can only mean that thousands of Christians whose names are on church rolls are doing nothing to win any one to Christ.—H. A. Johnson, the tracts which he was evidently circulating was a published controversy between himself and that man. The circumstances are of such a character that the leading men of the church must have known what he was doing; and it is fair to presume that his conduct has been discussed in the councils which these men have held, and it is not hard to believe that some course of treatment toward Bro. Briggs had been determined by such council. So, while the News may be technically right in stating that they had nothing to do with the arrest of Bro. Briggs, the influence of the council may have had something to do with the matter.

Brother Briggs, in writing us under date of September 22, says:

I have been very careful to use all with perfect courtesy, have not ever in my life made any personal attack on Brigham Young or any of his successors.

I have been careful and have not shunned to quote them correctly; and that is what they have called slander and abuse, but that you very well know.

I was requested by those who were officers in the Bureau of Information not to hand out my literature to any on the Temple, a ten-acre lot. Of course, I acquiesced in their request; and then one of the elders again came to me in the Tabernacle and requested me not to hand out any of my tracts to the tourists. There were four hundred of them present, at least. In fact, the elder told me there were five hundred of them present. Of course I followed their instructions in this matter.

But when they forbade me to hand any of my tracts to persons on the streets, I thought it was carrying the matter too far; and I told them so, and disregarded their request. They forbade me doing it and threatened several times to arrest me.

Officer Charles H. Wilcken came to me about three weeks ago, called me to one side, and said, "I now want to tell you friendly that I have had counsel with those in authority, and I am a man of authority, and I know what I am doing. And if you hand out any more literature, or tracts on the streets here, I will arrest you." I informed him that I had read the city ordinance he had referred to, and I know it does not cover my case, or have any relation to religious literature. And that I had seen those who had authority in the city, and that they had informed me that the city ordinance did not prohibit my tracts or cover my case or the kind of literature I was handing out. Bro. John Davis was with me. We were near the gate, about twenty feet from the gate at South Temple Street when this occurred.

Wilcken was the man who telephoned to police station to have me arrested, and pointed me out to the police when I was arrested, and the only one who was witness against me. I was twenty-one feet from the ten-acre lot gate when I was arrested.

The occurrence has brought me in contact with many of the city officers; and I have had the chance to hand them hundreds of my tracts and I have improved the opportunity.

The city attorney and my attorney, Judge A. J. Weber, told me not to pay any attention to the matter, as though nothing had happened. I have acted upon their advice and have been handing out my tracts as before. They say the police judge is a "Jack Mormon," and all know that the ordinance against advertising cards and circulars, such as are often thrown on the streets, does not cover my religious tracts. The release without fine was designed to keep me from carrying my case to the higher courts. In fact, the city attorney said that my arrest was not legal and that he would see that there was no more arrests like it. The occurrence has brought us, or the church, prominently before many thinking people and made me friends who are anxious to see me and get my literature. I have sent many tracts into many of the eastern cities, and to Europe, and the islands of the sea, Japan, and Africa, through these tourists. It is astonishing to see how many thousands are here all the time, and they are all anxious to get my tracts, some offer to pay for them. I have special favor in presenting our hope to them.

Last Sunday I attended their stake conference. One of the leading speakers affirmed that the church was not rejected and bore his testimony as usual, that Joseph Smith was a prophet and that their church is of God, etc.

After meeting, two of their elders walked with me to First South Street and were very talkative. Others were gathered around us, one hundred and fifty or more. One of the Tribune men said three hundred. Some were doing their best to argue with me; others appeared very much interested. It lasted for three hours. Fortunately I had my books with me, and was able to read the law of God on all the subjects of church government and history of occurrences as they took place in organization. I found many friends in the crowd who would defend me when the Mormons would try to misstate my words; they were strangers to me. After the three-hour talk a Jew invited me to take dinner with him at the restaurant. He is a business man from San Francisco. I have an appointment to meet him at his hotel on Wednesday. He is a very bright fellow, though very skeptical on all religious subjects; but was very much interested in my talk. He first took me for a Mormon, but soon found out differently, and when he saw the Mormon elders lie and misstate facts, and even what I read in his presence, it at once enlisted his sympathy in my favor.

By the statements of the papers and from Bro. Briggs' letter, a pretty fair estimate of the conditions of this arrest and its possible consequences may be seen. If there was no interference upon the part of the leading men of the church in Utah through the influence of which this arrest of Bro. E. C. Briggs occurred, the best that can be said of it would be, that it was a case of mistaken zeal upon the part of Officer Wilcken, who doubtless thought that he would by this arrest put a stop to the influence which Bro. Briggs was exercising upon the minds of the passersby through the distribution of his tracts. This is not the first time that such mistaken zeal has defeated itself.

What a wonderful change has come over the elders of so-called Mormonism, using the term as applying to the Utah Mormon organization! At the opening of the dispensation in 1830, and from then on to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, there was ever manifested among the eldership a disposition to meet antagonists of all classes who might choose to make attack upon the faith; and every facility either of information or opportunity for examination of the faith and a discussion of its claims, was offered to every antagonist. The right to use the press, access to halls and churches, preaching upon the streets, and every possible way by which the propaganda might be carried on were made available, and those who opposed them were strongly urged to bring on their strong reasons. Has the hardihood and the chivalry of the eldership departed from them? And are the so-called "sons of God" now fearful that their craft may be exposed?

Years ago we gave notice to the church in the West and to every other section of so-called Mormonism, that the Reorganized Church proposed to put to the question each and every conflicting body of associates, and all classes of claims made by any claimants, and would stand or fall by the results of such examination. This is still the attitude of the church which the HERALD represents. The truth has nothing to fear; neither should those who advocate and defend what they hold to be the truth, either shun or deny legitimate investigation.

THE TRUE METHOD AND AIM OF EDUCATION.

A SYNOPSIS OF THE ADDRESS BY ELDER ELBERT A. SMITH, AT LAMONI, IOWA, "COLLEGE DAY,"

OCTOBER 4, 1908.

My subject this morning is the true aim and method of education. I invite your attention to three passages of scripture. The first is found in section 90, paragraph 6, of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, wherein it is said, "The glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth."

The second is found in 2 Corinthians 3:18 where we read, "We all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of our Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory."

The third is found in the Book of Covenants 85:36, where we find the commandment, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

Here we have three links in the great chain of progression. First we have the idea that the glory of God is intelligence; second the idea that we are to move forward by degrees until we share in the glory of God; third the idea that one important way by which we can make progress is to secure learning even by study and also by faith.

Sometimes when we become enthusiastic while talking about religion in connection with Graceland College, we are reminded that Graceland College is "non-sectarian." I hope that because of that fact no one expects me to make a dry academic address from which the idea of religion shall be carefully excluded. I hope that no one present will be pained at hearing the idea advanced that in at least one particular Graceland College is (or should be) a genuine, dyed-in-the-wool Latter Day Saint institution; that particular is in its aim and method of education. Perhaps no one will be pained at such an expression when I explain the Latter Day Saint ideal of education further, because they will discover that it is the Christ ideal.

I am aware that some grievous things have been written and said about our people. Mr. R. B. Neal in the first number of his Anti-mormon paper said that there were some "sad and outrageous papers to be written about the Latter Day Saints." Yes, "sad and outrageous papers." Notice; it is the papers that are outrageous. Most of us have heard and read many sad and outrageous misrepresentations of the church. Some day the true history of the great latter-day work will be written for all to read, and at least one chapter therein will be devoted to the thought that the ideals of Christ were our ideals.

The statement is made in the first text that I have chosen that "the glory of God is intelligence, or in other words, light and truth." I believe that light and truth are spoken of in more than a figurative sense as inseparable parts of intelligence and of God's glory. We know that when God reveals himself to men it is sometimes necessary for him to veil himself in order that they may not be destroyed by the brightness of his glory. We know that angelic visitors are surrounded with a bright halo of light. We know that all things are dependent upon light for their life. In the winter when light is partially removed from the earth, a condition of frozen death obtains. In the spring when the light comes flooding back again all things are rejuvenated. We see the barren landscape again painted with all the beautiful colors of grass and flowers. Every blending of color, every conception of beauty therein portrayed indicates intelligence; some great brush in the hand of some great Being has painted the canvas. God is the artist and light is his brush.

We notice an intelligent operation even in the life of plants. You may plant side by side the tomato and the rose. One will select the material necessary to build and color the rose; the other will select from the same soil the material to build and color the tomato. If an artist were to imitate the two we will concede that it would require intelligence to select the colors and spread them upon the canvas. Whence comes the intelligence that enables these two plants to perform a feat that is much greater? It comes with the light that gives them life.

We are told in the Book of Covenants that God is in the light of the sun, which same light quickeneth our intelligence, and we believe that light is the conveyor of life and intelligence throughout all the universe.

We are aware, also, that truth, or a knowledge of truth, must be had by an intelligent being. The little child may have a perfectly formed brain, but he is yet in ignorance. He begins to ask questions about everything that he sees. Every truth that he comes in possession of broadens and brightens his intelligence until, if we are to trust the word of God, there may come a time when he will be in possession of all truth, and will understand the true relationship of things past, of things present, and of things to come.

We call your attention again to the statement that the glory of God is intelligence. We know that God is perfect in all his attributes; but if we can find the one in which above all else, he is superior to man, we will have found the keystone to his greatness. God loves; we also love. His love is always a blessing; ours is sometimes a curse. Some parents love their children so well that they think they can not correct them. Presently the child, never having known law in the home, grows up and opposes himself to all law outside of the home. The intelligence of God enables God to make his love always a blessing, and if necessary, he will punish and correct the object of his affections. Power is intrusted to man, at times, and often is immediately used to destroy or injure others. God is in possession of all power. His intelligence enables him to use it so that he blesses himself and others. So also with our abilities and our use of them as contrasted with the abilities of God and his use of them. Over all his attributes reigns supreme intelligence and directs them ever in ways of righteousness. Intelligence is the keystone of his greatness: his glory is not in what he has done, but in what he is.

It must be so with us as well. God is greater than anything he has done, and we must be greater than any task that is assigned to us, or we can not perform it. Our glory finally will be in the highest sense in what we are; and if God's glory is intelligence, we must become an intelligent people if we are to share in that glory. I do not mean by that that only college professors, or college presidents, or learned men of the world shall have a share in the celestial glory. Far from it. Professor Lancaster, of Canada, in addressing a body of scientific students, took occasion to perpetrate a little joke at the expense of his fellow scientists. He told of an individual who died and to his surprise found himself consigned to the lower regions. He was further surprised to find the excellent arrangements made there for the comfort of the inmates. At noon of the first day he was served with a sumptuous meal. The thing that astonished him most was a glass of ice water. He said, "How in the world do you get ice here?" The attendant replied, "We manufacture everything that we need. We have many scientific gentlemen here."

I conceive that it is possible that there will be many scientific gentlemen there; and that the learned professions and arts, as well as the trades will be well represented there. Perhaps there will be some church members there. Possibly there are some who think there will be a consignment of editors there later on; at least some letters that we receive would seem to indicate such an idea.

The point is this, an education that brightens the brain and neglects the soul is a one-sided education. An education that takes thought of time and no thought of eternity is a one-sided education, and such is largely the kind of an education that we find in the world.

The idea laid down in my second text is that we shall seek learning by faith as well as by study. The world has divided these two methods of obtaining an education. Yonder is the school where people seek learning five days in seven by study. Here is the church in which others seek learning one day in seven by faith. We want first to combine the two classes of people, and have our students in the schools also in touch with God and with the inspiration and blessing that comes in answer to faith. We want our church-goers to be students; studying nations, laws, histories, and all good books. Every man and woman, young or old, should be a student.

I am sure that those who were in attendance at our young people's prayer-meeting last Wednesday evening and saw the many earnest young people who were there, and heard the prayers and testimonies of both students and professors of Graceland College, will admit that here in Lamoni we are combining, to a degree at least, study and faith in our search for knowledge. I believe that it is combined here to an unusual degree. Perhaps the individual who teaches your child in the day-school, teaches him in the Sunday-school. Not that we believe that church and school should be united under one roof, but both students and scholars should be seeking the instruction that can be given them by both God and man.

There is a broad field for us to explore. Think of the things for us to learn in a secular way if we would keep abreast with the world even, while in the spiritual field we can hardly conceive of the heights that we must attain to arrive at the Christ ideal. We are commanded that we should love our brother as ourselves. Think of the wonderful development we must make before we reach the condition where we can and will love our brother as ourselves. Christ even went further and commanded us to love our enemies and pray for them. Why, we do not take time enough to pray for our friends, and how many do you suppose there are who pray for their enemies?—unless they pray like the little girl who prayed for her grandmother. Her grandmother was sick with the rheumatism and could not stand the cold weather, so the little girl prayed, "Lord, make it hot for grandma." Perhaps that is the way we pray for our enemies: "Lord, make it hot for them,—and if you need any help, let us know."

Prayer is said to be the soul's sincere desire. We may not offer the words that I have quoted, but if we really desire our enemies to have trouble that will be our prayer.

There is in the life of every tree a time when it may be bent or straightened, a time between the little twig and the mighty oak when we can direct it aright or cause it to become dwarfed and deformed. There is a period ere the clay hardens so that we can not make further impression upon it, in which we can mold it into beautiful shapes. There is a period in the history of individuals when we can reach and teach them ere they become hardened and permanently deformed by contact with the world. Let us make that period in the lives of our boys and girls as long as we can and improve it to best of our ability.

Let us not permit our young people to go out from the common schools into the immediate struggle of life. The boys and girls who enter upon life to-day are going upon a battle-field. Those who fail will be crushed. Those who succeed will be hardened and brutalized by the methods they seem compelled to use in order to be successful. Let us use every means that we have to prepare our young people for the struggle of life and to fit them so that therein they may take an honorable part, and in their struggle observe the laws of Christ. It will be the means of saving them and saving others.

We present Graceland College as one of the institutions that will help to achieve our aim in educating our people, and will help them to enforce a true method of education. Perhaps some one will say that it does not always attain to that ideal, and they will point out some boy or girl who has come to Graceland and has gone astray. We might with equal propriety look into the history of almost any branch of the church and find therein individuals who have gone astray. Shall we say then that we will abolish those branches, that we will dispense with the branches in Kansas City, Des Moines, St. Louis, Denver, San Francisco, San Bernardino, and elsewhere and send our pupils to the Catholics and the Methodists and the Presbyterians to receive their spiritual education. No, we say, we will oversee the spiritual education of our own people; and I say we must also oversee their secular education so far as possible at present. We must not attend to one and neglect the other.

I am aware that there are those who are opposed to Graceland College. We concede the sincerity of their opposition, but believe that they are mistaken in their methods. For instance, not long ago I heard one individual say: "In my home branch David Anderson raised three hundred dollars for Graceland College. If I could have been there about an hour, he wouldn't have got it."

I have nothing against this man. He is a personal friend of mine, and a man of honesty and integrity, but I want to strike at that idea. Shall I say that because Graceland College is not managed to suit me in all particulars, I will do my best to destroy it? Shall I not rather say, There are some things in Graceland College that do not suit me, and I will endeavor in company with my brethren to have those objectionable features removed, and in the meantime do my best to support Graceland College and keep it in an active and vigorous condition; for it is the strong and active body that can resist the encroachments of disease? When we weaken the body we but encourage the diseases that may be preying upon it. What would be the result if we carried this opposition into every field of church work? We will say that I am opposed to some things that are found in the Sunday-school; I am also opposed to some things that are found in the Religio; there are things in the branches, and even in the church itself that I do not like. Shall I do my best to destroy all of these institutions? If so, I become a religious (or an irreligious) anarchist. Far better if I shall do my part in strengthening these institutions and in helping to remove whatever evils may have crept in. I can seek along legitimate lines to care for them in harmony with my ideas, or at least in harmony with the ideas of the majority of my brethren.

I hope it will not be necessary for us to beg for Graceland College. Our people do not believe in begging. I have heard of instances in which individuals were enticed into some church building and then the doors were locked and they were kept there until they subscribed a certain sum of money. I feel that if that were attempted here with a congregation of Latter Day Saints our doors and windows would suffer injury. We do not wish to keep you here by force. If there are those who can help Graceland, who feel that they should do so, but will not do so, we will not detain them. They can go now. If there are those who would like to help and can not, God will recognize the generosity of their hearts. Those who can help and will, will receive a blessing.

May God help us to increase our intelligence along the gospel line, to brighten it and broaden it and deepen it by study and by faith; and may we be successful in helping others that they also may accomplish the same result.

By poetry we mean the art of employing words in such a manner as to produce an illusion on the imagination, the art of doing by means of words what the painter does by means of colors.—Macaulay.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

According to the Idaho Scimitar one L. S. Young, grandson of Brigham Young and member of the church in Utah, claims to have received the sealed plates that Joseph Smith predicted would be translated at some future time. He claims to have received them from the hands of an angel in Oakland, California. He proposes to translate them and publish the translation to the world. Church authorities in Utah have repudiated his claims and think him insane, deluded, possessed of the Devil, or a victim of autohypnotic suggestion.

At the recent conference in Salt Lake City the Utah people adopted a resolution striking at the liquor traffic and encouraging law-makers in general to pass restrictive laws. One James C. Bowen thought it an opportune time to mention other evils and proposed an amendment to the liquor resolution to the effect that church members should do all in their power to help the Government put down polygamy and unlawful cohabitation. The chairman did not entertain the amendment; an usher requested Mr. Bowen to leave the sacred precincts of the tabernacle, and kindly piloted him to the door. Exit Bowen. "Great is Allah and we are his people."

One brother recently wrote to Bishop Kelley as follows: "Would like to have you tell me what they have for amusements at Graceland College. It has been told around here that there are pool and billiard tables in the college for the boys. There are some that would like to help, but think if the college indorses such things they don't wish to help." The brother in question did right in writing to get the facts in the case. But the individual who started or helped to circulate such a false and wholly incredible report ought not to be a member of the Latter Day Saint Church; he is wasting his peculiar talents in a church where people are required to tell the truth. How can the college defend itself against such people? Is it necessary to issue statements that President Anderson does not swear at the students, that beer is not served during recitation, and that the professors do not play cards during chapel? Or will our people use a little of the spirit of discernment and reject that which is so evidently false and malicious.

The Brooklyn Branch will celebrate its anniversary by a reunion to be held Sunday, October 18. There will be a roll-call of the one hundred seventy members; and other services and exercises including Sunday-school, Religio, Normal Class, preaching, prayer-meeting, and baptism will fill out the day pleasantly and profitably.

LAMONI ITEMS.

At the business-meeting Tuesday evening the committee on church extension reported. They estimated that a plain building of reinforced concrete, fifty by one hundred feet in size, without lighting or heating plants would cost eight thousand dollars. They thought the branch not in condition to erect such a building just at present and thought it unwise to build a cheaper structure. A permanent committee on church extension was created, consisting of the members of the former committee. The members are Heman C. Smith, John Smith, C. F. Church, W. A. Hopkins, and R. J. Lambert.

In some way during the past week the rumor became current about town that Bishop Kelley was so seriously afflicted as to be disabled. Letters of inquiry written to Independence elicited the assuring reply that the rumor was unfounded and that the Bishop was in fact enjoying unusually good health.

Some little time ago Governor Cummins sent a proclamation throughout the state of Iowa requesting ministers and congregations to observe Sunday, October 11, as "mothers' day." These services were to be held in a measure as a state wide participation in the services of the Iowa Congress of Mothers that met in Des Moines on the same date. The Governor in his message touched upon the great need that exists for stronger men and women and the consequent wisdom of guarding children against the many serious, yet alluring temptations of modern times. The day was observed at Lamoni at the morning services. Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert spoke on the mutual responsibilities of parents and children. He expressed the idea that a consistent, thorough performance of duty on the part of parents and teachers would work a wonderful transformation even in the short space of ten years. He was followed by Sr. Callie B. Stebbins, who delivered a short address full of earnestness and enthusiasm and good thought. This meeting can not fail to result in good to the community.

Sr. F. B. Blair and her class in art held an art exhibit Friday and Saturday in the room formerly occupied by the Supply Store. A very large number of pictures was exhibited, some of which were excellent. Lamoni has a large number of devotees of the brush, both in oil and water colors.

The wise man loves his hours of silence, for he has learned that without silence no wisdom is acquired.

In our disputes and differences it is wise and well to remember that no man is always right—nor always wrong.

Elders' Note-Book

A MINISTERIAL ANECDOTE.

HOW THE LORD ADMINISTERED AN ANTIDOTE FOR EGOTISM.

ELDER J. C. CLAPP.

(As he appeared during the early days of his ministry.)

(Elder J. C. Clapp relates the following experience that came to him as a young man engaged in his first missionary work:)

Our first stop and attempt to preach was at Visalia, (California) in Tulare County, about two hundred and fifty miles from our starting-point. We had heard that the people of Visalia were very full of prejudice against the Mormons, but we supposed that when we showed them the difference between us and the people of Utah that we would be all right; but we expected some opposition, and for my own part I did not care, for I felt I could face almost anything for the cause we represented; and I wanted to get to work. We camped about a half mile out of town and got our dinner, and while our horses were resting a man by the name of Wilson came up and began to talk about cattle. He was a butcher. Bro. Sparks and Bro. Prothero were stock men, and the conversation was all right for them; but it did not suit me a bit, and finally I got a chance to put my oar in, and I said, "Well, we did not come here for cattle. We are all of us Latter Day Saint preachers and what we want to know is if there is a chance for us to preach in Visalia."

The man said, "Latter Day Saints! Do you mean Mormons? My God! man, if you mention it in town they will hang you higher than a kite!"

This seemed to frighten the brethren and they did not care to try it; but although they were all of them old men, and I was young, I felt determined to preach. So I began to fix up a little, and Uncle Hervey Green said, "Joe, what are you going to do?"

I said, "I am going up town."

"What are you going for?" said Bro. Green.

I said, "I am going to see if they will hang me," and off I went.

I had been in town but a short time when I met the sheriff, a Mr. Thomas, and I made arrangements to get the court-house to preach in for three services on the coming Sunday. This was on Friday, and as it was rather late in the afternoon I hastened to the schools in the city to have the appointment given out before the schools should be out. I then went back on the street and met the sheriff again, and in conversation with him I learned that he had lately married one of the fair daughters of Elder Jacob Adamson of Petaluma, California; so then I was not afraid of the people hanging me in Visalia. While I was yet talking with Mr. Thomas, a Mr. Snell, a Methodist preacher, came along, and the sheriff introduced me to him as a Latter Day Saint preacher.

Mr. Snell said, "Well, I don't know but you are just the man I am hunting for; for I have got an appointment out here on Elbow Creek and I can not fill it, and I am looking for a man to fill it for me. Now could you fill that appointment for me?"

I said, "Yes, sir, with pleasure."

"Thank you, thank you," was the reply.

While we were yet talking, an old man by the name of Samuel Fulton came up and Mr. Thomas introduced me to him and he at once got deeply interested in our conversation and asked me to go home with him; but the evening was approaching and I felt that I ought to go back to our camp. The old gentleman's place was right on my way to the camp, and in our walk I tried to make good use of the time explaining our doctrine to him.

When we got to his door he said to his wife, "Well, Achsah, I have found it at last."

"Found what, Sammie?" said the old lady.

"Found the truth," said the old gentleman.

"Well, thank the Lord for that," said the good old lady.

We did not exchange many more words till Mr. Fulton bade me go to the camp and bring the whole camp up to his place, which we did, and found a hearty welcome for all and plenty for both man and beast.

These two old people had been followers of Emanuel Swedenborg, but they both readily accepted the truth, and lived and died earnest Latter Day Saints.

When I went back to the camp and told the brethren ren what I had done, they were much surprised and elated; and I felt so built up and elated over my success that I presume I became exalted over it, for I began to think that there was hardly one that could have done so well. I can now see it was necessary for me to be humbled, which was soon done, as the sequel will prove.

I went to the Elbow Creek Schoolhouse, took Bro. Prothero with me and filled the appointment there, and left Brn. Green and Sparks to fill the morning hour at the court-house. I rather took the lead in the making of these appointments, although I realized that Bro. Green was an old veteran and that I should be subject to his counsel; but I was very anxious to get to work and try to do something.

I spoke for over two hours at the Elbow Creek meeting, and with such great freedom that I was astonished, and the people seemed perfectly spell-bound, and it added greatly to my self-conceit; but when at night I undertook to preach in the court-house I found out my mistake, and learned that it was the Holy Spirit that did the work at Elbow Creek. It was "me, just me," that did it at the court-house, for I made such a failure it almost made me sick. I hoped then, and still hope that that sermon took much, if not all, of the egotism out of me. At any rate the result was that I became more studious, humble, and prayerful.

We labored in Visalia till we baptized quite a number and organized the Visalia Branch.

THE CELESTIAL LAW VERSUS SECTION 106.

In Doctrine and Covenants 127:7, we are instructed that the gathering must be done according to the Fishing River revelation; and the Fishing River revelation (see section 102:2), says that Zion must be built up by the principles of the celestial law, "otherwise I can not receive her unto myself," etc.

What is the celestial law?

God's law, as given to the church originally, by which Zion is to be built up, most assuredly.

He first introduced his law in section 42, having previously commanded them to gather at the Ohio, and there they would receive it (see sections 37:2; 38:7; 39:4; note especially what a grand revelation section 38 is, all the way through).

After gathering at the Ohio, he proceeded to give them his law, with which all later revelations must harmonize. Especially note the emphatic command in verse 1 to "hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you." It was to be obeyed at once. According to section 122:6, it is to be obeyed now; for, "the law given to the church in section forty-two, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given to-day."

Passing over the first part of section 42, coming to the financial part, paragraphs 8 and 9, it is stated that members of the church should consecrate their property to the bishop or church, "with a covenant and deed that can not be broken," a legal deed of the land. And this for the benefit of the poor and needy. And when the bishop has received these testimonies, or these deeds, then each man is to be made a steward over that portion which he "has received by consecration," or in other words the inheritance that is deeded to him by the bishop, which shall be an amount sufficient for himself and family; no more, no less. Every man is to receive his inheritance by deed from the bishop; there is positively no other provision made for any one, whether he be rich or poor. Section 51, paragraph 1, shows plainly that this is so, when it says the bishop shall appoint "every man equal according to their families," etc.; and when he does it, he is to give "him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion," and he is to "hold this right and this inheritance in the church," until he transgresses; and if he transgresses he is to have no claim on the gift to the church, but is only to have claim on "that portion that is deeded unto him." This is not speaking specially of the class that have nothing to give the church for the poor and needy, or of the poor and needy who receive from the church, though the rule will apply to them in part; but it is speaking particularly of those who have more than enough to supply their wants and needs, and who "consecrate to the bishop for the poor and needy of my church," and yet they receive their portion from the bishop by a deed, a writing that shall secure unto them their inheritance. Where is the provision for them, or any other class, to receive or hold their inheritance in any other way? There are some who advocate the doctrine that this class especially have complied with the law when they give their surplus, and retain enough for their support, or inheritance. But the law specifically points out that this class have their inheritance deeded to them from the bishop, the same as any other class. And this agrees with the understanding of Joseph Smith, as set forth in his letter to Edward Partridge, as recorded in Times and Seasons, volume 6, pages 800 to 802 (see Church History, page 300).

Brother Edward Partridge; Sir: I proceed to answer your questions, concerning the consecration of property: First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this: a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book: therefore to condescend to particulars, I will tell you that every man must be his own judge how much he shall receive [receive, mind you, not consecrate; he consecrates all], and how much he should suffer to remain in the hands of the bishop. I speak of those who consecrate more than they need for the support of themselves and their families. [Ah! the same class specially mentioned in section 51; and they consecrate that portion which they need for the support of themselves and their families, as well as the surplus.]

The matter of consecration must be done by the mutual consent of both parties; for, to give the bishop power to say how much every man shall have, and he be obliged to comply with the bishop's judgment, is giving to the bishop more power than a king has; and, upon the other hand, to let every man say how much he needs, and the bishop be obliged to comply with his judgment, is to throw Zion into confusion, and make a slave of the bishops. The fact is, there must be a balance or equilibrium of power between the bishop and the people; and thus harmony and good will, be preserved among you.

Therefore, those persons consecrating property to the bishop in Zion, and then receiving an inheritance back ["receiving it back," mind you, in complete accord with sections 42 and 51], must show reasonably to the bishop that he wants as much as he claims. But in case the two parties can not come to a mutual agreement, the bishop is to have nothing to do about receiving their consecrations; and the case must be laid before a council of twelve high priests; the bishop not being one of the council, but he is to lay the case before them.

A letter written by Joseph Smith to W. W. Phelps, November 27, 1832, as recorded in Times and Seasons, volume 5, pages 673 and 674, reads as follows: "It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not their inheritance by consecration, agreeably to this law, [section 42] which he has given that he may tithe his people," etc., showing that there is but one way to obtain an inheritance, in harmony with God's will, just as stated in sections 42 and 51. And this we understand to be the law in vogue to-day, notwithstanding the position taken by many.

Our understanding is that section 106 is in direct conflict with section 42.

Section 42, and the corroborating revelations, together with Joseph Smith's interpretation of them, require a complete consecration, and the equalization of God's people, and the retaining of this equality by the provision that when a man should obtain more than is necessary for his support, it shall be turned into the storehouse (see Doctrine and Covenants 42:14), all of it above his support; while section 106 simply requires their surplus property to begin with, and only a tenth of their "interest" annually thereafter. In other words, if they obtain more than enough for their support, they pay but one tenth of the "interest" to the storehouse. This will not, can not retain equality.

The Lord in all of his dealings with this church, from the very start, has never indicated anything but a complete consecration, as the law fully designates in section 42, paragraphs 8, 9, 10, and 14; and section 49, paragraph 3, which covers the divine conception of equality in this one short statement: "It is not given that one man should possess that which is above another; wherefore the world lieth in sin." Also in section 51:1 he instructs the bishop to give "every man equal according to their families," etc., which was to be an example in other places (see paragraph 5). Section 70:2, 3, plainly designates equality for everybody in the church, and section 58:7 tells us Martin Harris was to be an example unto the church in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church, etc. And what was the commandment to him? See section 18:5, in perfect harmony with section 42, and with the prophet's letter to Phelps as before cited.

Not only is section 106 in conflict with section 42, but its authenticity may well be questioned for other reasons. The first time it ever appeared in print was in Millennial Star, August 15, 1844, nearly two months after the Prophet's death. And the Prophet in his lifetime seemed to know nothing at all about it, although the date of its receipt is given in the Brighamite history as July 8, 1838. As our authority for this statement we refer you to Joseph Smith's letter of February 2, 1842, as recorded in volume 3, page 731, Times and Seasons, in answer to a letter from Mr. Richard Savary, making inquiry as follows:

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1842.

Mr. Joseph Smith, Sir: Though a stranger to you personally, yet the knowledge of your character (given me by others) makes it unnecessary for me to offer any apology for thus troubling you. And I entreat you to believe me, when I say, that it is with a sincere desire to arrive at the truth of things that to me and all others are of the most vital importance.

I now wish to know through you the laws and regulations of your church—what is required of its members—how much (if a man of property,) must he contribute annually for its support? In short, what is required to constitute good membership?

If you will please answer those questions comprehensively you will confer a favor on one who with pleasure subscribes himself your friend and humble servant.

RICHARD SAVARY.

To this Joseph Smith replied:

In answer to the above I would remark, that it is required of all men to have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; to repent of all their sins and to be baptized (by one in authority) in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and to have hands laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost, to constitute them a member in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I would respectfully refer you sir, to our Book of Doctrine and Covenants for information concerning the "laws and regulations" of our church as being given by the revelations of God for our guide and instructions.

Respecting how much a man of property shall give annually we have no special instructions to give; he is to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to provide for the widow, to dry up the tear of the orphan, to comfort the afflicted, whether in this church or in any other, or in no church at all, wherever he finds them, to believe and obey all that God has revealed, does reveal, or will reveal, to do good unto all men, to be a member in good standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

You will notice in this letter, Mr. Richard Savary asked the direct question as to whether there was any certain or specific amount required of church members annually, and especially of a man of property, and Joseph Smith, you will note, answers, "Respecting how much a man of property shall give annually, we have no special instructions to give," but simply refers him to the Doctrine and Covenants, which was the 1835 edition, the only one extant at that time, and could not have contained this purported revelation of 1838. Now if Joseph Smith had really received this revelation, which specifically states that one tenth of the "interest annually" is required, he surely could not have said there were no special instructions as to how much a man should give "annually," but would have told him, "one tenth of the interest." And why should not this revelation have been published until six years after the date assigned it, and two and a half years after this letter was written, if Joseph Smith received it? Can you name any other revelation as important as this, which was treated thus, except the polygamous revelation?

The 1835 edition did contain the "celestial law," section 42, by which Zion was to be redeemed, and to this Joseph refers Mr. Savary, which sets forth no special amount as required, but demands all above what is necessary for their support, whatever the amount, and whenever obtained, not necessarily an "annual" affair.

Section 106 stands on a par with the polygamous revelation, so far as authenticity is concerned. Both are claimed to have been received before Joseph's death, but neither was put in print until afterwards, and both conflict with section 42, the celestial law, which says, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else" (verse 7), on the marriage question; and on the financial question, points out that every man is to receive his inheritance "by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family," and afterwards, if he obtains more than enough for his support, he is to turn all above his support into the storehouse.

Also note the striking similarity of the introduction of section 106 and the revelation on polygamy.

1. Section 42 plainly states the law on marriage, as quoted above; but when men permitted Satan to entice them away from the strict requirements of the monogamic rule, and wanted something different, they professed to approach the Lord with a question, and to receive reply, as follows: "Inasmuch as you have inquired of my hand, to know and understand wherein I, the Lord, justified my servants Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; as also Moses, David and Solomon, my servants, as touching the principle and doctrine of their having many wives and concubines."—Section 132, Utah Doctrine and Covenants.

2. As a parallel, section 42 gives the law on the financial question, but when pride and selfishness entered in, and men were unwilling to abide the strict requirements of that law, but wanted something different, they professed to approach the Lord with a question (and to receive reply) as follows: "Oh, Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the property of thy people for a tithing," etc. (section 106), when his law touching the matter had already been given.

The celestial law had already been given, which showed that the Lord did not justify those who had many wives and concubines, yet these men were not willing to abide that law.

The celestial law had already been given, which showed how much the Lord required as a tithing, but these men were not willing to abide that law.

Furthermore, any one acquainted with the history of the church, at Nauvoo, a year or two prior and following the death of the Prophet, can see the rapid strides toward apostasy; and without doubt the Reorganized Church will eventually wake up to the fact that the apostasy was greater and began earlier at Nauvoo than we have been wont to believe; and that many things which we have accepted will have to be discarded. We have good evidence that many things were changed, and especially the memoirs of Joseph Smith as published after his death, and immediately after his death, too. C. W. Wandell states in his diary, where he comments on the History of Joseph Smith as published by the Brighamites, headed

REFLECTIONS.

I notice these interpolations because having been employed (myself) in the Historian's office at Nauvoo by Doctor Richards, and employed too, in 1845, in compiling this very autobiography,

I know that after Joseph's death his memoir was "doctored" to suit the new order of things, and this too by the direct order of Brigham Young to Doctor Richards, and systematically by Richards.

The Brighamites themselves testify as follows:

Moreover, since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young, and approved by him.—Page 5, Preface to Utah Church History, Period 1, "History of Joseph Smith, the Prophet, by himself."

HISTORY OF SECTION 106.

On August 8, 1844, at a special meeting of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, convened at the stand in the City of Nauvoo, President Brigham Young called the audience to order. This was a meeting called by the Quorum of Twelve for the purpose of choosing a guardian or trustee for the church, and where the Twelve were chosen to preside over the church, and where they began to lay their plans first in public toward usurping authority; and near the close of the meeting a purported revelation on "tithing" was "referred to." "And the manifestation of every saint seemed to be, We will do as the Lord has commanded, and the assembly was dismissed with the blessing of the Lord." The hint of a new revelation on tithing took so well that they were encouraged, and so anxious did they become, that before they could take the time to publish the minutes of this conference, they had to publish the new revelation on tithing in the very next issue of the Times and Seasons, August 15. The minutes of conference were not published till September 2, two weeks after the revelation was published to which the minutes refer; but nearly a month after the conference was held, where the feeler was put out, to see if the Saints would bear it. The conference was held August 8, and the revelation "referred to." The revelation was published August 15. The minutes of the conference of the 8th were published September 2. This new revelation "referred to" is section 106, and was published with the following introduction:

A WORD TO THE WISE.

In order to have the saints understand their duty and the requirements of the Lord, we have thought it advisable to publish the following revelation concerning tithing: and after this we think that saints will not want to know what their duty is: he that runs may read, and a fool need not err.

They had outdone the Lord now, in giving the celestial law, and they felt sure they had the law of tithing (?) so plain that any fool could understand it. And yet, later they found it necessary, to suit their purposes, to make it a little plainer. And they make it appear that the Lord had forgotten something and had to give an addenda ten days later than 106, with the following heading:

REVELATION GIVEN JULY 18, 1838, MAKING KNOWN THE DISPOSITION OF THE PROPERTIES TITHED AS NAMED IN THE PRECEDING REVELATION [REFERRING TO 106].

Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time has now come that it shall be disposed of by a council composed of the first presidency of my church, and of the bishop and his council; and by the high council; and by mine own voice unto thee, saith the Lord. Even so. Amen.—Millennial Star, vol. 16, p. 183.

See how easy this made it for Brigham Young to assume the position of "trustee in trust," and get control of the church funds.

Let us examine the law a little further. In February, 1831, the Lord gave his law, section 42, which was for the purpose of redeeming his people, or according to section 38:7, "that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people," etc.; and September, 1831, section 64:5: "Behold, now . . . it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming)," etc. A day for the tithing of my people, not of. In this revelation the Lord says that it is "day of sacrifice." How much of a sacrifice is it to pay a tenth?

Any one knows it would not be a very great sacrifice for the majority of the people to pay a tenth; but when it comes to giving all but one's "support," one's needs and just wants, it is, and always will be a sacrifice to man, until we can arise above selfishness and attain to the spirit of the celestial law, section 42. Up to September, 1831, we have nothing on the temporal law but section 42, which requires all but our "support," our just "needs," "sufficient for your needs and wants," every man equal "according to their families," etc., etc.; and all over and above this to be put into the storehouse:

Nevertheless inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse.—Doctrine and Covenants 70:2.

If there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individual of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.

If thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:14.

This is the law the Lord gave "for" the "tithing" of his people, as he says in Doctrine and Covenants 64:5. Evidently this is the one referred to, as it was the only law in existence in 1832; and (unless we accept section 106) the only one given to the church yet. And why should we accept anything different, when we have the perfect law, section 42, "the celestial law," the only one that can redeem Zion; for "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself." (Doctrine and Covenants 102:2.) When was this revelation given? In 1834, four years before the date given to section 106, so they must have had the celestial law before section 106 was given. And what did they have on this subject? Section 42, only.

And what does the Lord say to us right now? Section 127, paragraph 7: "The gathering must not be in haste, nor without due preparation, and must be done in accordance with the Fishing River revelation," or section 102, which refers to the law of section 42, and says it can not be done any other way. Undoubtedly, then, this is what the Lord meant by the "tithing" of his people—a complete consecration, and receiving an inheritance deeded back from the bishop (church), inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family, that they might escape the day of burning of which he speaks in section 64. Also section 94, paragraph 3: "Behold this is the tithing and the sacrifice which I the Lord require at their hands," etc. Not only the building of an house; but the complying with the law, that all moneys may be raised according to this law, the only plan he ever gave us by which to raise money for any purpose. Then why try to help the Lord out by raising money by ice-cream suppers, festivals, fairs, concerts, musicals, etc., etc., and desecrate the house of God as the Lord said to Bro. Joseph Luff. (See HERALD for June 6, 1906.)

Evidently the above rendering of the law was Joseph Smith's understanding, as he wrote to W. W. Phelps, November 27, 1832 (see Church History, volume 1, p. 259), as follows:

It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not inheritance by consecration, agreeably to his laws which he has given that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning, should have their names enrolled with the people of God; neither is their genealogy to be kept, or to be had where it may be found on any of the records or history of the church; their names shall not be found, neither the names of the fathers, the names of the children written in the book of the law of God, saith the Lord of Hosts.

Notice the very tithing spoken of in section 64. When was this? November, 1832, six years before 106, concerning a "tenth," is purported to have been given. And what was the law then? Section 42. A complete consecration! The law of the celestial kingdom, the principles of which can alone redeem Zion. If Zion can be redeemed by the principles taught in section 42, and the Lord receive her unto himself, what need have we of 106? Does God change? Does God deal in non-essentials? Is God a respecter of persons? Does he save one people under one plan, and another by another plan?

This revelation of 1838, section 106, is the web in which so many become entangled when they undertake to teach us the law pertaining to temporalities. How often have we heard men from the stand, and have read their writings, when they have gotten along nicely, and their effort was edifying, until they attempted to weave 106 in, and have become like a ship at sea, without a rudder, tossed to and fro upon the waves of darkness, scarcely any two giving the same interpretation!

Then let us examine the law, taking the revelations that can be authenticated, using the Inspired Translation of the Bible, and the Book of Mormon, and see if we will not all agree on the question of temporalities. I mean all who are really honest and want to learn their duty fully, not seeking an excuse to keep their means, neither seeking to teach in a way to gain the favor of the rich.

Question.—If one lives up to the celestial law, which requires a complete consecration as a beginning, and the receiving of an inheritance by deed from the church, and thereafter turning over to the storehouse all above his support, from time to time, as obtained, when and how can he comply with section 106? section 42 having the precedence.

OBJECTIONS.

1. "But," says one, "the Lord says, 'And let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption'—Doctrine and Covenants 102:10." And the objection is made that the celestial law, relating to equality, and inheritances, etc., will not be put in operation until after Zion's redemption, and the coming of Christ.

That is, the law given to bring about the redemption of Zion is not to be put in operation until after the redemption is brought about! Do you believe that? No, the thought is simply this: The commandments given concerning Zion and her law are to be executed, not only in bringing about the redemption of Zion; but the same celestial law is to continue in force after her redemption, when the commandments will be fulfilled, and the work completed under the reign of Christ.

If the idea of the objector be true, that the financial part of the celestial law is not to be put in operation until after her redemption, it will apply with equal force to the other commandments of the law. Let us see how it would read, changed to suit that idea: Section 42, beginning in paragraph 7:

Thou shalt love thy wife, after the redemption of Zion, with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her, after the redemption of Zion, and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, after the redemption of Zion, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit, and if he repents not, after the redemption of Zion, he shall be cast out. . . . Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor; after the redemption of Zion, nor do him any harm. . . . If thou lovest me, after the redemption of Zion, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments, after the redemption of Zion. . . . And again, thou shalt not be proud in thy heart, after the redemption of Zion; let all thy garments be plain, after the redemption of Zion, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands, and let all things be done in cleanliness before me, after the redemption of Zion. Thou shalt not be idle, after the redemption of Zion; for he that is idle, after the redemption of Zion, shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer. And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, after the redemption of Zion,—

But isn't that enough to show the absurdity of trying to put off until after the redemption of Zion, the requirements of the celestial law, which are given for the purpose of bringing about that blessed condition?

2. It is held by some, regarding section 42:9, that the statement that one may be "made a steward over his own property, or that which he receiveth by consecration," is sufficient to prove that a man may retain his inheritance without having it deeded to him from the Bishop, and this is just as acceptable to the Lord as the other way.

Now the word or in this connection has one of two meanings. 1. It may have the force of either. 2. It may have the force of "in other words." This latter is undoubtedly the sense in which it is used in the passage under consideration; and thus every man is to be made a "steward over his own property, [in other words,] that which he has received by consecration." This harmonizes completely with section 51, and with Joseph Smith's letter to Edward Partridge, as before quoted.

3. Abraham and Jacob both paid tithes of a "tenth," and surely the "tenth" must be all right.

But the Inspired Translation spoils this theory (see Genesis 14: 20, 39) regarding Abraham, showing that the tithes paid was all above that which he had need, instead of a "tenth." The King James Translation says that he "paid tithes of all." (Genesis 14: 20.) And regarding Jacob, the reason he paid a tenth was to fulfill a special vow he made with the Lord (see Genesis 28: 20), not because of a command from God. Will the objector please show one single place, either in the Bible, Book of Mormon, or the authenticated revelations of the Doctrine and Covenants, where there is a command to the people to pay a tenth, under a gospel dispensation, in any age?

Now brothers, and sisters, let us be honest with ourselves and God, and not seek excuses to hold our means contrary to God's will, as it will condemn us.

We have herein endeavored to state our honest views in regard to section 106 and the celestial law; and if any one has sufficient light to harmonize section 106 with section 42, and show us our error, if we are in error, we would be exceedingly glad; for we do not want to be deceived; neither do we want to trifle with sacred things; nor do we wish to contend against any revelation of God that is authentic and can be identified; for we remember that the word came through Alexander H. Smith to the Hedrickites: "Cease to contend against the revelations I have given through my servant." But where is the evidence that God gave 106? But he also said in the same word, "There are and will be mistakes, but they are the mistakes of men. They can not hinder my work, but will cause loss to those who suffer themselves to be deceived thereby. Be ye wise and obedient."

We realize that men are fallible, and may make mistakes; and while a mistake may have been made in accepting 106, and incorporating it in our Doctrine and Covenants, it can not hinder the ultimate triumph of God's work; yet all who allow themselves to be deceived by that mistake will suffer loss. The loss will be theirs, but God will do his work just the same.

In conclusion let us say that we are firmer in the faith, to-day, we believe, than ever before. We have perfect confidence in the complete fulfillment of the laws of God, and his promises to his children; but feel that we must be awake and alert, and prove all things, and "hold fast that which is good," and that which will stand the test of scrutiny.

Yours for the truth,

F. M. WELD.

NEPHITE APOSTLES?

The statement is sometimes made by those who have not given the matter due thought and consideration, that Jesus chose a quorum of twelve apostles from among the Nephites, and placed them at the head of his church upon this continent. This is a good position for us to take if we want our opponents to defeat us, but it has no foundation in fact, and no proof for the assertion can be found in the three standard books of the church. Our attention was called to this question a few years ago by one of our opponents, who produced a sound argument that if such were the case (and he assumed it to be the position of the church), then Christ would have two churches fully organized; instead of "one body," he would be the husband of two "brides," and a polygamist.

Upon looking the matter up, we found that nowhere did Christ call the twelve disciples whom he chose to lead his church upon this continent, by the name of apostles, but always disciples. This notwithstanding the fact that he several times spoke to them of his apostles at Jerusalem, which goes to show that it was by design that he always made the distinction in terms.

There can not be two quorums of twelve apostles in the church at the same time, and it would be well for those who make such statements to look the matter up.

In the Sunday School Exponent for October, page 230, is given what is purported to be "Four lists of apostles," and the names of the twelve disciples whom Jesus chose as leaders in his church upon this continent are given as one of the four. We are sorry to see such a position taken and given to the world in our Sunday-school organ, for it is erroneous and misleading, and will handicap the representatives of the church in their defense of the work.

We defy any one to find one place in the Book of Mormon where those men were called apostles. The fact is that they were a high council of high priests, such as is authorized in Doctrine and Covenants 104: 14, and were to preside over the stake which was organized upon this continent by the Savior. They were not given an apostle's commission, and told to go into all the world, neither do we read of any seventies being chosen to assist them, as would surely have been the case if they were apostles. But their office plainly was to preside over the church as a stake high council.

It would be well not to overlook the vast difference between the terms apostle and disciple; they are almost opposite in meaning. An apostle is one sent. A disciple is a follower. The twelve apostles differ from other officers in the church in that they have a world-wide commission. (See Mark 16: 15; Doctrine and Covenants 104:11, 12.) The twelve disciples chosen by the Savior from among the Nephites (Nephi 9:2) were given no such commission.

We have also heard the three Nephites who were to remain upon the earth, called apostles. This is another mistake that should not be made, and one that a little care would prevent. They are nowhere called by that name.

The plan of church organization was then, as now, perfect. Then it had twelve apostles upon the Eastern Hemisphere and stakes in other lands, among the different tribes of Israel. True the twelve apostles might not have been aware of the existence of those stakes, but God had a purpose in keeping it from them. (See Nephi 7:2.) Now there are twelve apostles on this hemisphere and stakes are to be organized elsewhere.

This work is beautiful and harmonious, and the more we study it the easier it seems to defend it; but it is not easy, nor is it pleasant to try to defend or apologize for the mistakes which place a club in the hands of our enemies, to be used as an effective weapon against that which is of itself impregnable. Hoping that the light may be turned upon this question, and that the truth may prevail, we close.

Of General Interest

EASY TO WED; EASY TO PART.

This magazine is constantly asked by its readers to deplore the increasing number of divorces or to indorse the clamor for stricter divorce laws. But our friends overlook one fact: we have repeatedly said that we do not believe that the demand for more rigid divorce laws is the wisest or fairest solution of the problem before us.

The trouble with us is not that it is so easy to get a divorce, but that it is too easy to get married. We have a notion in this country that it is "un-American"—whatever that may mean—to place the slightest obstacle in the way of two hearts that want to be mated. The way to the marriage altar must be unobstructed, we say. All this is very pretty in theory, but how does it work out in practice? Is it fair to our young people that we leave the way to the marriage altar so open and so unobstructed that they can, under the influence of a mistaken momentary impulse, an emotional moonlight rhapsody, a temporary ballroom infatuation, seek a clergyman or civic officer, and be joined to each other for the rest of their lives? Is it wise to leave the way to the marriage altar so open that four young couples, filled with the careless fun of an evening's hay-ride, can stop at a parson's house and get married "just for fun," as they did last summer? Is the marriage altar to be made so light of that a girl, piqued because the bridegroom does not appear on time—detained by his mother's serious illness, as it afterward developed—can jump into a waiting carriage outside with a friend present, drive to a minister's house and return to the waiting wedding party married? Is it wise to leave the way to the marriage altar so unobstructed that a bride standing at that altar can "change her mind" and marry the best man instead of the prospective bridegroom, as happened recently? Is it fair to young people, full of the love of fun, that in one part of our country, at least, a man can, in jest, refer to a girl, in the presence of a third party, as his wife, and the two are, in the laws of that State, legally married if the girl chooses to hold the man to the joke? All this is leaving the way to the marriage altar open, yes, wide open; but pray what does it make of the marriage altar itself but a jest and a mockery?

It is easy enough to say, apropos of the instances cited, that they are exceptional: that they are the pranks of silly and heedless girls and boys. But that is not the point. Pray of what else does youth consist but of heedlessness and folly? The real point is that such serious pranks are made possible by our marriage laws: that we allow those laws to be so lax that such exceptional instances can occur: making a joke of one of our most sacred institutions. It is idle to blame the young people who perpetrate these follies. It is we elders who are to blame: it is due to our mistaken notion that the way to the marriage altar must be left open without those proper and sufficient safeguards against which youthful lack of knowledge which the young have a right to expect we shall provide for them. It is not only absolute folly, but is also manifestly unfair, to leave the way to marriage so wide open as to make possible the most mistaken marriages, and then bar the door at the other end and make escape by divorce increasingly difficult. Yet that is exactly what we are planning to do in all this unreasoning clamor for stricter divorce laws.

If we want to call a halt to the present increase in divorce which is rightly disturbing us so much, let us begin at the right end: at our marriage laws, and surround them with sane safeguards. If it is deemed so criminally "un-American" to follow the wise European method, born of the wisdom of hundreds of years of experience, to proclaim and publish an intention of marriage from ten to thirty days before the actual ceremony, let us not forget the significant fact that the Society of Friends in this country (or "Quakers," as we popularly choose to designate them) follow the spirit of this custom, with the result that divorces are singularly few among them. Well might we of Protestant faith learn wisdom from the recent enlightened order issued by the Roman Catholic Church in America, that matrimonial engagements shall hereafter be reported in writing to the priests of the church. It is true that the Roman Catholic Church prohibited divorce before providing this recent safeguard to the entrance to matrimony, but it is highly significant that the church authorities have deemed it expedient and necessary to make the provision. The time has come for us to recognize that what we intended as an unobstructed path to the marriage altar has become a path of unprotected danger: that liberty has been confused with license, and instead of concerning ourselves with such mistaken agitated zeal over securing stricter divorce laws, that we turn to a proper and decent safeguarding of our marriage laws. When we have tightened the lock on the front door a bit, then let us think of tightening the screws on the back door. But let us fix the front door first.—Ladies' Home Journal, October, 1908.

PRESENT-DAY ILLUSTRATIONS.

The parables of Jesus must ever remain most forceful and applicable because they are ingrained in the very nature of things, yet if he were on earth to-day he would probably use many modern inventions as illustrations of truth just as he used the familiar objects of his time. It would be well for us to observe the lessons lying all about us. Some town children may not understand without explanation the parable of the sower, and many country boys and girls in days to come will not understand the use of the old-fashioned sickle. On the other hand, the baseball pitcher with his curves illustrates Satan with his temptations, and the average town boy will understand what is meant when he is told to be careful, or Satan will strike him out. The calling up of the telephone central station is a symbol of prayer, by which we can reach persons at a distance, God touching their hearts in answer to our petition. The trolley shows the necessity for power. The automobile emphasizes the need for constant watchfulness, as we speed on the journey of life, and wireless telegraphy illustrates inspiration.—The Lookout.

According to a clerical journal published in Rome, the Pope is to be presented on the occasion of his jubilee with a Marconi wireless apparatus to be installed in Saint Peter's. Perhaps this combination of new with the old is prophetic of a new spirit permeating the church.

We may cry out about the beauty of eating bread with Him in his kingdom, but it is wasted breath and a rootless hope unless we plow and plant in his kingdom here and now.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

(The following poem was written by Bro. C. A. Martin, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. It may be sung to common metre doubled.)

Prayer.

Prayer is the keynote to success
 As on through life we go,
 A means to overcome distress
 Of sorrow, scorn, and woe.
 A means by which the sick are healed,
 The blind are made to see,
 The deaf to hear, the lame to walk,
 And worthy poor made free.

Prayer is the source through which we seek
 The favor of the Lord,
 A way by which the poor and meek
 Are blessed with one accord.
 By prayer the dead were brought to life,
 The evil power cast out,
 And ships upon the sea were saved
 From being tossed about.

In God's own word which he has given
 In this the latter day,
 The admonition plainly is
 That we should watch and pray.
 The righteous prayer availeth much
 When we upon God call,
 For he himself has spoken such
 To mankind, one and all.

How thankful we as Saints should be
 For God's infinity,
 That we can call upon his name
 No matter where we be.
 That we can claim his promise true
 And full of righteousness;
 "If you will hearken to my words,
 Then I am bound to bless."

Then pray for unity and peace
 That sin may not enhance,
 Pray that all evil powers may cease
 To be within the branch.
 Pray for the priesthood, for the sick,
 The tempted and the tried,
 Pray that the power from on high
 May in our midst abide.

Pray for the cold and luke-warm ones,
 That God may help them see
 Their danger, e'er it be too late
 And they rejected be.

Pray for our loved ones in the flesh
 Whom we desire to see
 Within the fold, that they also May serve God as do we.

Pray for those in the ministry
 Beyond the swelling tide,
 And for their dear ones left at home
 That God may there abide.

Pray for God's servants everywhere
 And for the laity,
 Pray for the local officers
 Whate'er their work may be.

The need of prayer is very great
 In this momentous age,

When men are brought down to deceit
 By Satan's awful rage.
 Then come, ye Saints, surround God's throne
 In earnest, heartfelt prayer,
 Both publicly and privately,
 That we may blessings share.

November Reading for Daughters of Zion.

During the whole of one of last summer's hottest days, I had the good fortune to be seated in a railway car near a mother and four children, whose relations with each other were so beautiful that the pleasure of watching them was quite enough to make one forget the discomforts of the journey. It was plain that they were poor; their clothes were coarse and old, and had been made by inexperienced hands. The mother's bonnet alone would have been enough to have condemned the whole party on any of the world's thoroughfares; but her face was one which gave you a sense of rest to look upon—it was so earnest, tender, true, and strong. The children—two boys and two girls—were all under the age of twelve, and the youngest could not speak plainly.

They had had a rare treat. They had been visiting the mountains, and they were talking over all the wonders they had seen, with a glow of enthusiastic delight which was to be envied. In the course of the day there were many occasions when it was necessary for her to deny requests, and to ask services, especially from the oldest boy; but no young girl, anxious to please a lover, could have done either with a more tender courtesy. She had her reward; for no lover could have been more tender and manly than was this boy of twelve.

Their lunch was simple and scanty, but it had the graces of a royal banquet. At the last, the mother produced three apples and an orange, of which the children had not known. All eyes fastened on the orange. It was evidently a great rarity. I watched to see if this test would bring out selfishness. There was a little silence—just the shade of a cloud. The mother said: "How shall I divide this? There is one for each of you. And I shall be best off of all, for I expect big tastes of each."

"Oh, give Annie the orange. Annie loves oranges," spoke out the oldest boy, with the sudden air of a conqueror, at the same time taking the smallest and worst apple himself.

"Oh, yes, let Annie have the orange," echoed the second boy," nine years old.

"Yes, Annie may have the orange, because that is nicer than the apples, and she is a lady, and her brothers are gentlemen," said the mother, quietly.

Then there was a merry contest as to who should feed the mother with the largest and most frequent mouthfuls. Annie pretended to want the apple, and exchanged thin, golden strips of orange for bites out of the cheeks of Baldwins. As I sat watching her intently she sprang over to me, saying: "Don't you want a taste, too?"

The mother smiled understandingly when I said: "No, I thank you, you dear, generous little girl; I don't care about oranges."

At noon we had a tedious interval of waiting at a dreary station. We sat for nearly two hours on a narrow platform, which the sun had scorched till it smelled of heat. The oldest boy held the youngest child, and talked to her, while the tired mother closed her eyes and rested. The two other children were toiling up and down the banks of the railroad track, picking ox-eye daisies, buttercups, and sorrel. They worked like beavers, and soon the bunches were almost too big for their little hands. Then they came running to give them to their mother.

"Oh, dear," thought I, "how that poor, tired woman will hate to open her eyes! She never can take those great bunches of common, fading flowers, in addition to all her bundles and bags." I was mistaken.

"Oh, thank you, my darlings! How kind you are! Poor, hot, tired little flowers—how thirsty you look! If they will only keep alive till we get home we will make them very happy in some water, won't we? And you shall put one bunch by papa's plate and one by mine."

She took great trouble to get a string and tie up the flowers; and then the train came, and we were whirling along again. Soon it grew dark, and little Annie's head nodded. Then I heard the mother say to her oldest boy: "Dear, are you too tired to let little Annie put her head on your shoulder and take a nap? We shall get her home in much better case to see papa if we can manage to give her a little sleep."

How many boys of twelve hear such words as these from tired, over-burdened mothers? Soon came the city, the final station, with its bustle and noise. I lingered to watch my happy family, hoping to see the father.

"Why, papa isn't here!" exclaimed one disappointed voice after another.

"Never mind," said the mother, with a still keener disappointment in her tone; "perhaps he had to go to see some poor body who is sick."

In the hurry of picking up all the parcels, the poor daisies and buttercups were left in a corner of the rack. I wondered if the mother had not intended this. May I be forgiven for the injustice! A few minutes after I passed the little group, standing still, just outside the station, and I heard the mother say: "Oh, my darlings, I have forgotten your pretty flowers. I am so sorry! I wonder if I could find them if I went back! Will you all stand still and not stir from this spot if I go?"

"Oh, mamma, don't go, don't go. We will get you some more. Don't go," cried all the children.

"Here are your flowers, madam," I said. "I saw that you had forgotten them, and I took them as mementoes of you and your sweet children."

She blushed and looked disconcerted. She was evidently unused to people, and shy with all but her children. However, she thanked me sweetly and said: "I was very sorry about them. The children took such trouble to get them; and I think they will revive in water. They can not be quite dead."

"They will never die!" said I, with an emphasis that went from my heart to hers. Then all her shyness fled. She knew me; and we shook hands, and smiled into each other's eyes with the smile of kindred as we parted.

As I followed on, I heard the two children who were walking behind saying to each other: "Wouldn't that have been too bad? Mamma liked them so much, and we never could have got so many all at once again."

"Yes, we could, too, next summer," said the boy, sturdily. They are sure of their "next summers," I think, all six of those souls—children, and mother, and father. They may never again gather so many daisies and buttercups "all at once." Perhaps some of the little hands have already picked their last flowers. Nevertheless, their summers are certain. Heaven bless them all, wherever they are!—Helen Hunt, in Pennsylvania School Journal.

Questions on November Reading.

With what manner did this mother secure services from her children? How did she make her denials of their requests? What was her reward? How much farther would her reward extend? What may we learn from this family's enjoyment of their meager lunch? What elements in the character of these children did this help to develop? What method was employed in this development? Where was the responsibility for generosity placed? In what sense was the boy a conqueror? How was he also a leader? Would it have been fair to any of the four children for the youngest to be given the choicest portion, had the mother not known she would be willing to divide? Why was it the better method for the children instead of the mother to make the divisions? How did the mother make use of her opportunity to teach courtesy to her boys? What made it possible for the mother to close her eyes and rest during the waiting time? What would the children learn from their mother's treatment of the flowers? What may be discerned in the little child's willingness to sit with her brother and the boy's willingness to care for her? What examples of patience did this mother set for her family?

Dear Herald: As there has been no word from this little part of God's footstool, for sometime, at least, I feel this afternoon to send a little to your columns. We have a nice little branch at this place, and for the most part, a lively one,—each one anxious and trying to serve God and to live up to his commands to the best of his ability. Although we are "sheep without a shepherd," as it were, and have passed through much trial and discouragement, yet we feel encouraged, and feel that God has recognized us in our work here; and if we are only faithful, we will receive the blessings he has promised unto us. It rests with us, and we are desirous of so conducting our lives that God will soon see fit to raise up one to lead us, and watch over us here, as he has promised.

Last week Bro. Berve was here and organized a Religio, for which we feel thankful. We have a membership of twenty-four, and we feel much encouraged for future good and interest in this feature of the Lord's work. We feel the need of an elder very much, as only occasionally do we have any preaching, and oh, what a boon to us when it does come! It gives us food for thought for sometime, and helps, encourages, and strengthens us in the gospel warfare.

Dear Saints, may we live each day as though it were our last, and so we may be ready to meet our Judge, when we may be called away from this life. Our life here is uncertain. We know not what day, what hour, what minute we may be called to face our Maker. So let us be diligent, faithful, steadfast in this glorious work, so that when we do depart this life, we will not be ashamed to meet our Father, and acknowledge him as our loving and heavenly parent, which he surely is.

Hoping and asking the prayers of God's people everywhere, that we, as a little, struggling branch, all alone, without a shepherd, may prosper and be worthy of God's promises.

I am your sister in the faith,

MRS. ADEANE HOPKINS DAWSON.

Editors Herald: Leaving Omaha, I had a very pleasant trip across the continent to Vancouver, where I took passage for Australia. I managed to stop long enough in Seattle to visit a few Saints and preach one sermon for them. They seemed to enjoy my few hours' stay with them, and I am sure I did, and only wish it could have been longer. The Fraternal Order of Eagles was having a great day in the city, and the midnight train was packed with them. Smoking, drinking and a big fight was their order during the night, and one of the "Eagles" got his beak flattened out, and eyes closed, which would give him a bright remembrance of "Eagle's day" at Seattle.

I thought if this was a sample of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, one had better listen to David, where he says, "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners." The gospel has all that man will ever need, and more than he is living up to at present.

We left Vancouver at noon, August 14, on the good ship Aorangi, which brought me over the sea seven months ago, and we had a smooth sea and quick trip to Honolulu, excepting the second day out, which was rough enough to upset all, excepting a few. Fortunately I escaped, and stood the rolling well. I met Bro. Waller, and spent a few hours in profitable conversation with him on matters in connection with our work in general. I had intended to stop in the islands a few weeks; but on account of news, that one of our missionaries had unaccountably disappeared, I thought it best to continue my voyage.

We are now nearing Figi, and will arrive at six to-morrow evening. This is Saturday and to-morrow will be Monday; you see we will have no Sunday for thirteen days, making the longest week I have ever seen.

I am well and happy, still longing for the Lord to send more laborers into the harvest, which is now ripe and ready for the sickle. "Thrust in thy sickle and reap."

Editors Herald: I am now one among the Saints. I was baptized the 6th of this month by J. M. Perkins. It did not take me long, after earnest prayer, to find out that the Saints were my heavenly Father's choice; and I honestly believe that his guiding hand led me to the truth. I shall never cease to praise God for it. As yet there is no branch here. We hope to get one though; and if work will accomplish anything, we will have one in time.

The Methodists had a baptizing here, two days, and had a large crowd, while we had only a few; but I do not feel alone, as all Saints seem closer than friends of the world that denied me because of my late step.

There is a good field for work here, and we hope to bring other souls in before long. Bro. Perkins, though somewhat hindered at present, having a store to look after and times being hard, is doing all in his power, and preaches more gospel in one hour than all the others the year around.

I have read the Book of Mormon through and believe every word of it, and hope it will find its way into the homes and hearts of those outside the church.

A revival meeting is being held here by the Methodists, Baptists, and other churches, except ours.
