A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopaedia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

A FLOWER FOR THE GRAVE OF JOSEPH BURTON.

Last week we chronicled the death of Joseph Burton. To-day we feel impelled to pluck a flower for his grave.

Joseph Burton was of that type of men who are themselves the best possible argument in defense of the great gospel that has made them what they are. God send us more such men.

Of late years Brother Burton has not often attended the General Conferences, but his work in the Society Islands has kept him in the eye of the church, and in former years he traveled extensively, so that he was generally known. Wherever known he was loved and respected.

In looking over his life we do not find anything especially brilliant that he ever did. He simply lived his religion, day after day, year after year,—that was all. Perhaps that is the most brilliant thing a man can do.

He never headed any great movement in the church. He never posed as the sole living defender of the right. He never thought himself God-appointed to ride a hobby hard and long over the tender feelings of his brethern. He never advertised. He never dazzled his listeners with oratorical fireworks. He simply lived his religion in a quiet, sane, dependable manner. As a result he became, in character, deportment, and appearance, like Christ. He reminded men of Christ by the spiritual influence that he gave off.

He held various offices in the church. We do not think of them now. The man it is that we remember. He was ordained a patriarch about one year ago. But he had long held the fatherly spirit; and habitually when parting from his friends invoked God's blessing on them. This was no affectation. It was the same spirit that led Christ to bless the home from which he was departing, "My peace I leave with you." His life of calm, steady, deep faith left peace in the troubled hearts of those to whom he administered.

Joseph Burton has passed to a well-earned reward. He is well rid of the cares, perplexities, sorrows, and pains of a long earth life. Cheerfully enough we can say to him in his own speech, "Good-bye! God bless you!"

It is to his wife that the sympathies of the church go out. Joseph Burton was a sea captain. Many voyages they took together. Of late years they were constantly together. Long periods of mission work among a dark skinned people of an alien tongue threw them upon each other's resources to entertain, instruct, support. But now she is left without her captain, to make harbor alone, facing the lowering, yet sun-tinged clouds of evening. No, not alone. For the Master said, "I will not leave you comfortless."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A CORRECTION.

It will be remembered that in the HERALD for August 25, I called attention to matters contained in a sermon-tract, issued at the Ensign Office, stating that I could not indorse the use of a certain letter and statement, stated in the tract.

I am assured by Bro. R. C. Evans, of Toronto, Ontario, in whose sermon, delivered at Saint Louis, October 10, 1904, the portions evidently referred to were used by him, and which sermon was published in the Ensign in January, 1905, and was subsequently put into tract form for publication, that I have made a mistake in stating that I called his attention to the objectionable features at the time the sermon was delivered; that it was not until considerable time after the sermon was preached that I called his attention to it, and that it must have been after it was published in the Ensign, in January, 1905. I cheerfully accept this correction from Bro. R. C. Evans, as I had no intention of the Presidency making him responsible for the matter appearing in tract form. I am further assured by him that he has no recollection of being consulted in regard to the matter by the Ensign Office about issuing the sermon in tract form. Had not my attention been called to the tract by Bro. Joseph A. Ferris, when proposing to use it in tract distribution, I probably would not have paid any further attention to it; but after the action of the conference, making the Presidency in effect responsible for the tracts issued by the church for public distribution,

I felt that it was proper to make the statement I did for the reason stated, that the matter had not been presented to the Presidency before it was transferred from the Ensign into tract form. This is all I had in view in the statement made in the HERALD, calling attention to it, and I regret that any inference of blame upon the part of Bro. R. C. Evans should have been conveyed by what I wrote, as he was not responsible for the matter appearing in tract form.

Possibly inference may have been taken from the wording of the notice, that sermons delivered by the eldership, which may be published in the HERALD, Ensign, or other papers, should be submitted to the Presidency before such publication. If such an inference has been carried by the statement made, it was not intended, as the Presidency does not assume the right or prerogative to make such interference in the ministrations of the eldership. Each elder is responsible for his own utterances, and must stand the consequences of any mistakes in either statement or argument he may make in his public utterances, as well as be entitled to receive commendation for the propriety of statement and soundness of argument, which may characterize his statements or sermons. The Presidency does not assume to dictate nor to interfere in such cases, reserving only the same right of criticism that justly attaches to other readers of such sermons, when printed. But the conference having made the Presidency impliedly responsible for what may appear in tracts for distribution by the church, it is their prerogative to object to what may appear in tracts for publication, the subject matter of which has not been previously submitted to them for examination and approval. This is all that I intended by the notice which I gave, having no intention to put any serious blame upon anybody in this instance.

JOSEPH SMITH, President.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL NUMBER 51. REORGANIZED LATTER DAY SAINTS' CHURCH, HOWARD AND ONTARIO STREETS, PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA.

We welcome efforts among our church people to grasp, hold, and help the men, women, and children of the world. We were aware that such an effort along unique lines had been made by the church in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, during the summer months; but we are surprised to learn the magnitude and success of the work accomplished. It is pleasant to reflect that aside from the good done to the many children involved in this venture there will be created in many individuals of the coming generation an understanding of and respect for the church. Sr. Eunice Winn Smith, secretary of the organization that undertook the work referred to, writes describing it fully as follows:

For some time it had been apparent to the workers of the church that something ought to be done for the children of the neighborhood, during the vacation months. Upon their advice the church took the matter up, granting the use of the building and lawn for the conducting of a daily vacation school, under the direction of the following committee: Walter W. Smith, pastor, chairman; Albert B. Hall, deacon, treasurer; John Zimmermann, bishop of district; Orrin K. Fry, church chorister; Miss Anna Zimmermann, superintendent primary Sunday school; Mrs. Walter W. Smith, secretary.

The school was supported financially by voluntary contributions from members of the church and parents of the children, no charge being asked for admission, and the contributions more than covered the expense of the school. Each child was given the first piece of work of each kind that he finished. Charge for material was made for subsequent pieces.

While the school was conducted under the auspices of the church and managed entirely by the local committee, we acknowledge with gratitude the assistance rendered by the National Vacation Bible School Committee, as also the committee of Philadelphia. The Monday conferences proved a source of inspiration and served to unify the work. The summary of daily reports was very encouraging, as it showed us how we compared with other schools. The help received from the Philadelphia Institute for workers was invaluable, and we appreciate the work of those who so ably conducted it.

The school opened July 6, with one hundred and twenty children present, and increased rapidly until it numbered two hundred and thirty, which was the limit of our capacity. Of this number one hundred and twenty-five were boys, one hundred and five were girls; eighty-three of these were in the kindergarten. The average attendance was one hundred and forty-eight, or sixty-four per cent of the enrollment. Fifty per cent were British-American, twenty-five per cent were German-American, and twenty-five per cent American, French, Jewish, and Armenian, there being very few foreign-born children.

Walter W. Smith, pastor of the church, was chosen director of the school and industrial leader for the boys. Miss Gertrude E. Copeland, industrial leader for the girls; and Mrs. Ernest L. Taylor, B. S., Bucknell University, assistant director and kindergartner. Volunteer help was asked for from the membership of the church and was responded to by four young men and ten women, whose time was so arranged that each leader had two assistants every day.

The daily Bible story, outlined by the National Committee, was told in each department; and the songs presented by the committee were used. School was opened daily with prayer and scripture reading, some physical culture work was done, and the occupation period lasted from 10.30 until 12 noon each day, in which time the boys wove hammocks, made raffia mats and baskets, reed baskets and knit horse-lines; while the girls embroidered doilies, hemmed handkerchiefs, crocheted washrags and doll tam-o'-shanters, and made raffia mats and bags. The kindergarten children did regular kindergarten work, sewing cards, weaving mats, stick-laying, parquetry papers, block building, clay modeling, bead stringing, etc.

Peace Day was observed by regular peace day program, including the singing of "The dawn of peace," and the telling of the story, "The Christ of the Andes."

Our school participated in the general commencement at Bethany Chapel, being represented by one hundred of the older children and ten teachers, who went from the church in a special car, taking two hundred and fifty pieces of their work for the general display. The children enjoyed the commencement immensely, and the teachers decided that it was an unqualified success, and gave us an impressive idea of the magnitude of the work accomplished by the vacation schools of Philadelphia.

Our school held its local commencement Friday evening, August 20, finishing its session of seven weeks. Commencement program was rendered in the auditorium of the church, and consisted of regular morning exercises, to which were added several songs, and a short address by the pastor. Six hundred and eighty pieces of the children's work were displayed to admiring parents and friends of the children, some three hundred of whom came to see the work and talk with the teachers; while the children were given refreshments on the lawn.

In order that the influence of the school may be more permanent, a vacation school league has been organized, with one of our active young church workers as leader. It is the purpose of the league to meet monthly, thus bringing the children of the school under the influence of the church, and deepening the good impressions made during the school term.

We consider that the school was a success from every point of view. Through it we came in contact with the National Committee on Daily Vacation Bible Schools, and had an opportunity to explain our doctrine, and to show that we stood for righteousness. Our school ranked second in Philadelphia, of thirty-one schools, and fourth in the United States among one hundred and one schools. In the vicinity of the church we made many warm friends, and came in contact with people who had never visited the church or known anything much about it, and although there was opposition by the minister of a neighboring church, it had no effect on the attendance of the children, for the parents knew we were doing them good. Hundreds of children were gathered in off the streets and their play and thought directed toward good things, and only those who have no playground for their children save the street, can appreciate what that could mean for the children and for the busy mothers, who had nothing to offer in lieu of the street. Last but not least, was the benefit that came to the young men and women who came voluntarily to help with the children, through this work they felt the joy of trying to save others, which is the spirit of the gospel.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The next number of the SAINTS' HERALD Historical Series will be by Sr. Anna Salyards,, and will be entitled, "The organization of the church and the restoration of the priesthood." Sister Salyards is now, and has been for many years editor of the Gospel Quarterly. At present she holds the position of instructor in Bible teaching and religious pedagogy in Graceland College. The subject assigned to her is an important one and those who read this article will find it worth their time.

The following are items concerning Brother Burton's life and work:

He was born April 9, 1838, at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, and entered the church in 1873, being ordained a year later, May 4, 1874, at San Benito, Cal., to the office of elder, under the hands of Alexander H. Smith. He was ordained a seventy January 1, 1888, at Hastings, Victoria, Australia, under the hands of Elder T. W. Smith. He was ordained to the office of high priest September 6, 1900, at Oakland, under the hands of Alexander H. Smith and Gomer T. Griffiths, and finally received ordination to the office of patriarch one year ago, September 9, under the hands of Frederick A. Smith and Frederick M. Smith. He was well known to the church at large, and was loved by all who knew him. His best known work in the church was accomplished in the South Sea Islands, where he spent many years as a missionary, laboring among the natives. He felt a sincere love and affection for the people of those islands, and when he came from there the last time he felt that his life's work in the church was nearly ended.

Sometime ago Elder James Huff, of Omaha, Nebraska, was appointed chaplain of the state prison. Recently the Methodists of the Southwestern Nebraska conference became much agitated over the appointment and passed a resolution declaring it an insult to the intelligence and morality of their fair State that a "Mormon" should hold such a position. Bro. C. H. Porter, of Wilber, Nebraska, appears in the Lincoln Daily Star, of September 29, in an able defense of Brother Huff, clearly explaining that the good Methodist people were misinformed, having in mind possibly the Utah contingent, and informing them that Brother Huff is a representative of a church that is the peer of the Methodist or any other denomination.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The Sunday morning hour was occupied as a memorial service in honor of our late Bro. J. F. Burton, of California, who passed to the beyond on Friday, October 1. Elder Heman C. Smith was the speaker and the sermon will be given to the HERALD readers at a later date.

In the evening Priest Oscar Anderson was the speaker.

Lamoni's Harvest Home Festival was held on Thursday and Friday of last week. A great deal of local interest is shown in this fair; interesting speakers are provided, and for the benefit of farmers a first-class stock judge is always present to give them timely talks about cattle and horses. Good programs are given forenoons, afternoons, and evenings.

Lamoni is in need of larger and better school buildings, and it is proposed to build. The movement has just begun, but we are hopeful of tangible results.

"The heart which is happy in doing good has an unfailling mine of joy. Riches take wings, friends leave us, achievement proves unsatisfactory, but the joy of doing good remains, and that is the highest joy of all."

THE INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT AT GRACELAND.

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the third in our series of articles explaining the work of Graceland College. The author, Prof. C. B. Woodstock, has charge of the Industrial Department.)

PROFESSOR C. B. WOODSTOCK.

Even though this brief sketch of the Industrial Department may be somewhat tardy in appearing, we have no excuse to offer other than the pressing demands made upon our time by this rapidly growing branch of Graceland's development.

The aim of the department from its beginning was to build up the "self-help-for-students" idea. Not only is it true that a reasonable amount of work helps to make a good balance with arduous class room periods, for any student, but it has also been found to be true that the great majority of the young people of the church come from the more humble homes, and can not attend college without some provision to help, at least, in defraying their expenses while in attendance. It has been found further that well balanced periods of labor, study, recreation, and sleep tend to develop healthy bodies, clear minds, trained intellects, and strong will powers, which are much in evidence in scholastic attainments, on the athletic field, or on the forensic platform. There usually is a certain desirable element found in the young person who goes hundreds of miles away from home to attend college knowing that, when he arrives, he will have left but a few dollars, aside from what he may earn, to meet his many expenses for four years.

The "self-help" idea was not original with Graceland. It has been adopted to a greater or less extent by all colleges and universities, excepting those private schools which take students only from aristocratic families. However, at Graceland there can be no thought of charity in connection with work offered students. Our young people want no charity. Many of them do want an honest means of earning their way while attending Graceland. While fifty dollars in cash given to a needy student might help him for one year, that same amount invested in the industries of the Industrial Department would enable the same young man to be independent, to earn fifty dollars or more by his own labor, which the investment made possible. This would be true the first year and also true for each succeeding year; not one, only, reaping the benefit, but many.

The department has been in operation for two years, though many students were employed before that time by private parties. The first year twenty-six young people, coming from Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, California, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, West Virginia, Nebraska, Utah, and Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, and Canada, were employed. Last year forty-two were employed about the college premises, and some twenty in various lines of work over town.

These students came from eleven States, four provinces of Canada, and one from Germany. There were paid to them through the department over two thousand one hundred dollars. Fully forty students attended college who otherwise would have been denied the privilege. The tuition paid by these students, when calculated, is no mean sum, to help meet the general running expense of the college.

At the opening of this year we are employing twenty-five young people in the industries of the department—janitor and furnace work, the farm, garden, dairy, and poultry yards, the kitchen, din-well, Michigan, a prominent poultry raiser of that section, and editor of Poultry Pointers, to assume the superintendency of our college farm and to develop our poultry industry, will be welcomed by all.

A GROUP OF "INDUSTRIAL STUDENTS."

ing room, laundry, and bakery, and the shop where various lines of constructive work are followed. A large number have been found employment over town. A very large number desiring to attend but who would have to work, were forced to wait another year. We are at present employing all our facilities will provide for. The only way we can do more good is to enlarge along some lines of our industries. For instance, our laundry employs three students; we are forced to use primitive methods and be content with a small capacity. We have the chance to purchase a complete, up-to-date laundry outfit at a remarkable bargain. The investment of one or two hundred dollars by some parties interested in the education of our young people would employ twice as many students and give us a profitable industry. Our shop facilities are limited. One good brother at his own expense gives us a much needed plainer. We have plans on foot for the purchase of a jointer, and a band saw, and the erection of a temporary machine shop. If our friends do not fail us these will soon be a reality.

Brother Blett is eminently qualified for the position and will devote most of his time to the management of our poultry and the editing of his paper which, beginning with the October number, will be issued from the Herald Office. Poultry Pointers has already attained an enviable position among poultry journals, is a twenty-four page issue, full of terse, practicable, poultry pointers, just the things that poultry men want to know; not long, prosy articles that nobody reads. The proceeds from the publication will go into the department, and as much of the labor as possible will be done by our students. There are good indications of our soon having a printing shop to add to the list of our industries. Brother and Sister Blett and family seem fully consecrated to the problems at hand and willing to spare no effort or sacrifice to make their new field of labor a successful one. We bid them welcome to our circle of workers.

I wish to advise all who are thinking of applying for a place in the Industrial Department next year to begin to plan at once. Write to the undersigned without delay and state fully your circumstances. While we would be glad to give some employment to all who desire, for the present we must reserve our places for the first ones who apply who absolutely need the help they seek.

THE ROOMY HOUSE ON THE COLLEGE FARM.

The coming of Bro. Ernest B. Blett from Far-

Unless it can not be avoided, do not come expecting to earn every dollar of your expense. Should we give you that amount of work, you would be seriously handicapped in carrying a full course of studies. Better to try to sacrifice some this year and have something to help yourself with next year.

SHOP PRODUCTS.

We have never started the year with a better feeling among our young people. All who are working seem determined to do their best and make their work satisfactory. Any suggestion of snobbery or superiority of those who can afford to pay their way over those who labor is quite unknown. Under the wise management of Miss Rogers and Professor Hopkins, dean of the women and the men respectively, the young people who have their homes at the dormitories form a very congenial family.

That our efforts for good may never slacken until God's people (his young people) shall be fully qualified for his service and prepared for his coming, is the most sincere prayer of

Your brother in gospel bonds,
CHARLES B. WOODSTOCK.

INDUSTRIAL ZION.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following article is from the pen of a commercial traveler of considerable experience, who has made a special study of industries that may be started on a small scale at Lamoni or elsewhere where the Saints may have a foothold. It should be of interest and practical benefit to our readers.]

"The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light."—Luke 16: 8.

Brother A went into Brother B's store and bought a can of corn and a pair of overalls. Brother A was a farmer and Brother B a merchant, both living in one of the stakes of Zion.

The corn was grown and packed at Batavia, New York. The packer sold and shipped it to a jobber in Chicago. The jobber resold and re-shipped it to good Brother B in Iowa. The cloth from which the overalls were made was woven in Massachusetts. It was shipped to the manufacturer at Abingdon, Illinois. The finished garment was shipped to the wholesaler at Chicago, and from there found its way to Brother B.

Twenty per cent of these purchases remained with Brother B. Eighty per cent left the community and never came back.

Leave the twenty per cent out of the consideration. That is a minor factor. The eighty per cent is what we are after.

Brother A as has been said, was a farmer. He toiled early and late. Corn, oats, and the beasts of the field were the fruits of his toil. The corn and oats grew, and the hogs and the cattle pastured, on land valued at about one hundred dollars per acre. The corn was sold in the ear; the hogs and cattle were sold on the hoof. Notwithstanding his toil; notwithstanding the best management of which he was capable, Brother A found it a hard struggle. Some years, when corn was not up to its average yield, oats a little off, the market on hogs and cattle a little low, this good brother could "make both ends meet" only by eating head-cheese and ox-tail soup! And even then there would, sometimes, be a little deficit. In the years of plenty and good markets, if he paid all expenses, and had a little tithing, a consecration, or an offering to lay before the bishop, he felt he had done well indeed.

But as for acquiring a competence for old age—why, the dear, good brother will never see it, only in dreams.

Now what is the matter with Brother A?

He sells raw material. He buys finished products. And eighty per cent of what he pays for those finished products—food, clothing, house-furnishings, tools, farm implements, and other sundry necessities—goes out of Zion and never comes back. Instead of being kept at home, it goes to enrich the railroads, the wholesalers and their employees, the manufacturers and their employees, and the communities which produce the raw materials from which these products are made!

The balance of trade is against him! Consider it carefully. Is Brother A an exaggerated illustration of the Reorganized Latter Day Saints as a whole?

We are, in the main, tillers of the soil. We are, taken as a whole, poor. As a church, it is a struggle to make ends meet. Our good Bishop is oftentimes—like poor Christian—"hard put to it" to care for the poor, keep the elders in the field, and successfully prosecute the general work of the church.

Some good brethren who have the welfare of the cause at heart were once considering the possibility of buying goods direct from the manufacturer, thus saving the middleman's profit.

Why not save the whole eighty per cent? Why not buy the raw materials from our brethren who produce them, and manufacture the finished product among ourselves? Why not give this employment to our own brethren and sisters? Why not keep this eighty per cent in the stakes, and send it round and round, causing prosperity, comfort, and plenty to come and abide with us, instead of giving it to those who are not with us, nor of us, nor for us, only so far as they profit by our toil?

We could do it!

Do not understand us to be extreme. We do not claim that we as a people could produce absolutely each and every article consumed in Zion. But the writer does believe that we could produce, raw and manufactured, the larger part of our food and clothing, and many other articles,—furniture, farm implements, etc.,—and that in time we could produce so much more than we consume, and which could be sold in the world's markets, that the "balance of trade" would be in our favor, instead of being against us, as it now is.

Nor do we speak disparagingly of farming nor of those who engage in that occupation. Everything comes from the earth, "the mother of us all." The tilling of the soil is one of the most honorable of occupations. But if a community would be truly prosperous, the toil of those who till the soil must be supplemented by the toil of those who convert the raw materials into finished products. We need not enlarge further on this point than to quote the words of an eminent and recent writer:

Why is the manufacturer wanted? Why pay him money to come and to build in your town? Because from the time he first strikes the spade in the ground to dig the foundation of his mill, he employs labor, he scatters money, he helps every farmer, every storekeeper, every church, every tax collector, every human being, every enterprise in the neighborhood.—Charles Heber Clark in the Saturday Evening Post, January 11, 1909, page 11.

"INDUSTRIAL ASSOCIATIONS."

The two most cheering words the writer has heard in connection with this restored gospel for years! Zion has not been industrial—in some sense or senses, at least. She is now commanded to become so. (See "A Revelation to the eldership," given April 18, 1909, paragraph 5.) Surely we have been slothful, because we have waited to be commanded! Verily, the children of this world are wiser than the children of light.

Hear Mr. Clark again:

The most imperious obligation upon any nation is to find for its people employment at productive industry. . . . Man at work is the most valuable asset of a nation. An idle man, consuming without producing, burns the candle at both ends.

We hardly need add that what is true of a nation is true of its integral individuals and communities.

We have not been industrial in the sense meant by the late revelation. What can we do to become so?

In this article we can only suggest a few of the things which we could do. The first problem, to the writer's mind, is how to make one-hundred-dollar land pay a profit commensurate with the investment. It can not be done from corn, oats, hay, hogs, cattle, and sheep alone. The writer knows of farms where strawberries, grapes, cherries, apples, asparagus, pieplant, string beans, onions, celery, etc., etc., are made to pay from one hundred dollars to four hundred dollars per acre clear profit above all expenses annually. Volumes might be written about the items mentioned in this one paragraph alone. "A word to the wise is sufficient." All of these are industries in which men of small means can engage.

Did some one say "markets"? Bless you, the world to-day is paying the highest prices ever recorded in its history for these things, and the markets—not one, but many—are right at our door! And these products can be marketed, not only in fresh form, but canned and preserved in tins and glass.

Just here let me beg your indulgence to present this advertisement, recently appearing in prominent magazines:

It's Always Fresh

You never saw a can of Raris Sugar Corn that was sour—it never has a chance to get sour.

The corn is all cut from the fresh gathered ears by delicately adjusted machinery; it is then thoroughly cooled by dropping down over ice and immediately cooked and sealed up. A most rigid inspection of every can makes souring out of the question.

Such is our extreme care, in every detail, a care that has enabled us to make our an absolutely perfect product, the standard of excellence by which other brands are judged.

A vital point in corn flavor is the harvest time. There are many days when Raris Corn is good—there is one day when it is the best.

It is a part of our unceasing watchfulness that every ear be gathered just at its prime. Thus we always get the choicest natural product when it is full of milk and when its flavor is the richest and most delicate.

Our Raris Corn is hermetically sealed in all its freshness and we bring it to you tender, sweet and creamy as it came from the garden.

We think you will be interested in our illustrated book, "Five Foods Ready to Serve." It tells about others of our New England products for the table. Let us send it to you.

Say, could we do all that at Lamoni? Could we? Yes? All right,—why not do it? Here's another:

Drink
Chautauqua
GRAPE JUICE

AND YOU WILL GET THE REAL GRAPE FLAVOR

Did you ever pluck a cluster of Concord Grapes from the vines in early morning and taste of the delicious fruit? Then you get the real grape flavor. Brenner's Grape Juice is prepared by our own careful methods in an up to date factory right in the heart of the famous Chautauqua County vineyards. It contains no sugar other than found in the grape. It contains no coloring matter other than found in the grape. We preserve the natural grape flavor. It is heavier in body, richer in color, and more delicious in flavor than that of any other Grape Juice.

At fountains and particular dealers. If your dealer can not supply you write us for name of nearest distributor and get a recipe booklet mailed free.

Could we do that, too? Well, I guess we could if we tried. Then, for Zion's sake, let's try! True, these things can not be done in a minute, a week, a month, or a year. But, for Zion's sake, let's make a start somewhere along these lines. Then, too, there are so many other lines of industry. Parenthetically, let us remark, that as a community we have lost many, many dollars by letting our butter-fat go to outside creameries, and from there to the East, when there is a woeful dearth of good butter right at home. Isn't it about time we stopped that leak?

We let our hogs and cattle go away on the hoof, and then buy them back in carcasses and cured meats, and pay freight both ways. Couldn't that leak be stopped? But that leads us into rather deep water—tanning of hides and manufacture of leather and shoes and all that. However, in time it will all have to be done, and we might as well begin to think about it now.

But now for a few industries we have observed; and permit us to say that we have never knowingly lost an opportunity to visit industries and factories, hoping that the knowledge thus gained could some day be turned to furthering the cause of industrial Zion.

One good customer of ours at Burlington, Iowa, shipped wheat from Oklahoma, Kansas, and Minnesota to Burlington, and ground it into flour, and breakfast food,—similar to Pillsbury's Vitos, or Wheatena, or Cream of Wheat, you know,—and sells it in the open markets at a profit, too. Ought we to do that at Lamoni? Incidentally, corn meal, Shredded Wheat Biscuit, Triscuit, Toasted Corn Flakes, Post Toasties, Grape Nuts, Egg-O-See, Rolled Oats, Anaher Oats, Malta Vita, and in short the whole list of breakfast foods and cereals. The processes of manufacture are all extremely simple. Couldn't we do that at Lamoni? I guess we could if we tried!

"Capital," did you say? Read the history of Grape Nuts. Its manufacture was begun in a small building formerly used as a barn; and by one man, with very limited capital. And that is briefly the history of hundreds of the large manufacturing enterprises.

As a community we spend hundreds and hundreds of dollars annually for breakfast foods and breakfast cereals. This money could be kept at home. It would take time, and brains, and toil, and patience, and money to do it, but it is time for us to be thinking about it.

But to return: At Oskaloosa, Iowa, there is a factory turning out overalls, jumpers, work shirts, etc. Another at Abingdon, Illinois. Both of these started in a very small way, and both now employ many women and girls. This is another industry that could be made successful at Lamoni, at least to the extent of supplying home wants in this line. We venture that the actual amount in dollars of these goods sold in Lamoni would be astonishing. And we actually pay from seventy-five to eighty per cent of this to Chicago, Minneapolis, Dubuque, and Saint Joseph, when we could keep it all at home, except the price of the cloth, thread, buttons, and the freight on these items.

Did we say cloth? No, we will not say that. Bro. John Smith once said to the writer that cotton cloth could be woven in Iowa as well as in Massachusetts, and we believe he was right.

At Clearfield and Harvey, Iowa, we found men, seated on the old-fashioned "horse," manufacturing harness by hand; selling them all over the United States; couldn't produce enough to supply the demand.

At New Boston and Oquawka, Illinois, we found firms manufacturing wagons by hand; selling all they could produce, and wishing they could turn out more. The sales of these two little factories aggregated over one hundred and fifty wagons annually. (The writer sold the paints and varnishes for these wagons, and the brushes with which the paints and varnishes were applied, and he is telling you but the plain, unvarnished truth.) All this, too, right in the palmy days of the machine-made wagon. And practically under the shadows, too, of the large wagon factories of Moline and Abingdon, Illinois.

Could we do that at Lamoni, Iowa? We could if we tried.

And so we might go on, and on. About the woolen mills at Bonaparte and Farmington, Iowa; the canton-flannel glove and mitten factory at Kewanee, Illinois; the glove factory, brush factory, and foundry at Fairfield, Iowa; the broom factories at Alpha, Illinois, and Deshler, Nebraska; the canning factories at Oskaloosa, Burlington, and Keokuk, Iowa; the vinegar and pickle works at Burlington, Iowa; the brick and tile plants at Centerville, Creston, Ottumwa, and dozens of smaller towns all over Iowa. These and many other things we could do if we would but turn our attention to them.

We believe, too, that these things will be accomplished mainly by individuals who begin, in a small way, on their own resources, making the business or businesses pay for their own enlargement. We believe this because nearly all large manufacturing enterprises have begun in just this way. It is a large task, and will take years, but this should not deter us from making a start.

We believe that if Lamoni will work along these lines, success will come.

Let no one understand that the foregoing is intended from a purely selfish or worldly standpoint, to mean that individuals should heap to themselves riches. But it is respectfully submitted as a business proposition, that there can not be substance in the Lord's storehouse unless it is first produced by individuals; and that therefore, the sooner we begin real productivity, the sooner the Lord's storehouse will be filled, and Zion be redeemed.

F. E. COCHRAN.

Cheerfulness is as much a Bible command as honesty, though few people think of it in that way. There are many who would shirk from going into a neighbor's house and carrying off a little bit of loose change or any valuable that might be lying about, and yet do not hesitate to go time after time and rob him of courage and hopefulness. People who insist upon cherishing depressing moods and doleful views have no right to wander about spreading the infection; they should be quarantined until they can show a certificate of healthful spirits. To run into a friend's cheerful home for a call, and needlessly to leave behind an atmosphere of gloom and discouragement is worse than a social blunder; it is a sin.—Forward, April 3, 1909.

"The girl who is continually hurting the feelings of other people without meaning to do so, betrays a lack in herself. For the delicate perception which promptly recognizes what things will please and what will wound another, is one of the fundamental characteristics of real womanliness."

Better be alone than in bad company.

Of General Interest

Do We Need Ministers?

The question which serves as a title to these remarks is not our own. It is asked, in the Homiletic Review, by the Rev. Dr. George W. Richards, whose own answer seems to be that we do still need ministers of the gospel, but they must be men trained to adapt themselves to the changed and changing conditions of these times. We might supplement this answer by declaring that we do not need more clergymen to meddle with politics, to open Sunday baseball games with prayer and preaching, or to waste time and words foolishly by planning alterations of the Federal Constitution which would restrict the suffrage to fathers of families and increase a man's voting power according to the measure of his fatherhood.

Doctor Richards, however, takes no account of the weaklings, the posers, and the sensationalists in the Christian ministry. He takes up his subject seriously, and points out that the annual production of Protestant ministers by the schools of universities of Germany has fallen off fifty-four per cent in twenty years while the enrollment of students has increased one hundred per cent, and that, while the number of law students in this country in the same period, has increased eight hundred and forty-eight per cent, the number of theological students has not kept pace with the growth of population. These statistics may merely prove that there used to be an overproduction of ministers. Surely there is no complaint of a scarcity of them now.

Doctor Richards infers that much of the work once done by "the mitred bishop and the gowned priest" is now done by the Young Men's Christian Association, "the teacher, the lecturer, the social-settlement worker, the philanthropist, the printing press, and the phonograph." There is more truth than jesting in this inference, of course, and although Doctor Richards, as a theologian of broad ideas and sound logic, goes further into this subject than we care to follow him, we may safely say that while there is no excuse in these days for an overproduction of ministers, yet those who have qualities above the ordinary as ethical teachers and spiritual guides will find no lack of work cut out for them in the modern world. The best education is needed to strengthen and develop those inherent qualities; the old ignorance of the masses is disappearing, and the enlightened people demand enlightened leaders and will follow no others.—New York Times.

The Food We Eat.

A recent bulletin of the Pure Food Commission gives some interesting data about dealers in food supplies.

It seems there are about two hundred and fifty thousand retail groceries in America.

In many of these groceries people sleep at night, or directly adjoining them are living rooms.

Hundreds of these stores are managed by men and women who have no idea of hygiene or sanitation. The idea of not handling food products with unclean hands—or with the bare hands at all—has never occurred to them.

The floors of certain groceries inspected by the commission had not been scrubbed in ten years. The counters, scales and shelving had never known hot water.

The quality of the goods sold was a minus quantity to the proprietor. He sold the thing which gave him a profit, or which the people wanted, and beyond this he knew nothing, and cared nothing.

The fact that certain articles used for food absorbed the odors of substances near and the impurities of the place was not known nor appreciated.

Spitting on the floor by clerks and customers was common, and, moreover, invited by precedent and example.

In several instances consumptives were hired as clerks because they would work cheap and were too weak to do out-of-door labor.

In such stores sugar is ballasted by sand; baking powder reinforced by alum; coffee with chicory; molasses with glucose; spices with starch.

Prunes, raisins, and other dried fruits were kept in barrels covered merely by a coarse wire mesh on the street, where the air was filled with flying dust and dirt, and rotten refuse near at hand.

It seems unkind to point out the weaknesses and wrongs in a business where so many good men are employed. Yet the public should be aroused to the danger that lurks in the unsanitary grocery.

We all eat, and the amount of sickness caused by unwholesome foods can not be calculated.

Very few housewives give as much attention to their food supplies as to dress. In eatables they take what the grocer sends; but in dress goods they select with great care, and often with the help of an expert. In one case some one's eye may be offended, but in the other the whole family may be poisoned.

Which is of the greater importance?

Fortunately, most of us possess resiliency or resisting power, so we get away with our "peck of dirt" without difficulty, but sensitive people with a low degree of vitality often, no doubt, suffer from impure and adulterated foods.

The moral seems to be: Buy your supplies from men of intelligence, who know what they are selling and who have a pride in their business.

In German universities the students use the word Philater, or grocer, as an epithet. There is no good reason why a grocer's business should not be just as honorable as that of a doctor, lawyer or preacher. The doctor looks after you when your body is impaired; the lawyer takes care of a reduced or threatened estate; the clergyman cares for the sick soul; but the grocer is supposed to supply your needs when you are well and in health.

Pick your grocer with the same care that you do your doctor, your lawyer or clergyman. His responsibility is just as great as theirs. He should be just as normal and just as intelligent.

Above all things, pay your grocer—whether you do the others or not. He has to pay for his goods—the others mostly supply advice. And advice is an article which, having no use for it yourself, you pass along to others. The peculiar thing about advice is that the more you give out the more you have left. This is not so with groceries. And often the poor grocer feels compelled to sell adulterated stuff because his loss is less if you do not pay him.

In food supplies it pays to buy the best. Also, it pays to buy from a man who sees that his customers pay for what they buy. Cheap men sell cheap goods to cheap people. An adulterated life is fed on adulterated stuff.

Buy the best and pay for it what it is worth. Food paid for is much more digestible than the other kind. Pay as you go.—Elbert Hubbard in New York American.

"You do not know who is watching you, or who will be influenced by you. Some one will. Anyhow, do right and trust God."

"The Christian should be constantly growing in grace and developing in spiritual strength, like a tree in rich, alluvial soil."

The First Day in Oklahoma.

A PICTURE DRAWN FROM PIONEER LIFE.

It was the first day they had spent alone since coming to the new State. Both the children had had la grippe and were still too sick to take to their sister's home, who lived two miles away, and papa and Willie were going to look for a place to move to. It was very early in the morning when they started, and they said they would not return before the next evening, and perhaps not then. They felt very lonely to say the least, when they drove away, for their sister's husband was down on the "claim" building a new house, and of course she could not come over, for the team was gone and she had two babies and could not come alone and walk that distance. Then they had been told that their neighbors were Russians and could converse but little in their language. One could look as far as the eye could scan the country around and all they could see were a few windmills, and fewer still were the houses to be seen; for the houses were many of them "dugouts" or "half dugouts," and either one was not usually discernible a very great distance away. But one thing that helped to divert their minds to quite an extent was the passing trains of cars. The railroad passed the house to the west, and as they could not get a very good view from the windows, mamma allowed the children to throw wraps about them and stand in the west door and watch them during the warmer part of the day. What long trains the Santa Fé did run here! They counted the longer ones and found they had all the way from forty-five to sixty cars in a train. And when they went by the children waved and sometimes were real pleased when some one would signal back at them.

Mamma got some bright pieces of cloth and covered some small pasteboard boxes for them. One she gave to Jennie for a work box, one to Lawton to use as he pleased, and he soon had it filled up with marbles and pieces of string and such things as please boys most. Then she read to them and talked a good deal about the canyons which lay to the east of the house, of the great bowlders of rock which overhung the cliffs, and told them of the time when the earth underwent such a transformation.

But try as they would they were lonely and homesick, and their minds kept wandering back to the happy times they had had before coming here. They wondered what Leona and Martha, Jake and Frank were doing and where old John, the dog, was, and if he wished to see them as badly as they did him. About noon two boys came and asked to get a wagon, stating they had come from Lineville, and that their papa and the children's father were acquainted, and he had just got there that morning and needed the wagon to help unload their car.

They all talked as fast as they could for the few moments the boys could stay, and although never having seen them but once, some four or five years before, they each seemed to feel they were already the best of friends. This cheered them for quite awhile, but as the day wore on Lawton cried, and Jennie said she did hope it wouldn't sand storm while they were gone. As yet they had only seen one sand storm, and that seemed a terrible affair to them. Her mamma told her a sand storm would be better than a snowstorm—one like the blizzard they had had a week before, "but most likely we shall have neither," she said, "for the weather seems fine yet."

At last Lawton turned over on the bed and floated away to dreamland town. But Jennie could not sleep, and as her mamma was sitting by the bed quietly engaged with her own thoughts, she said, "Oh, dear! what will we ever do to-morrow? We were so lonesome to-day."

"Fiddlesticks!" said her mamma. "What do we care about to-morrow? They say it never comes. Only to-day comes, and in the morning perhaps you will not feel one bit lonely."

At length she said, "Let's go to the door and listen, and maybe we will hear papa and Cousin Willie coming."

And her mother replied, "They will not come, but we will listen." So they opened the door and stood very quiet. At length they heard a woman's voice say, "She has a light and the door open, so I guess they are not in bed yet."

They stood for what seemed to them the longest time and never heard another sound except the howling of the coyotes up in the canyon. At last the mother said: "That was very strange, but I surely heard it quite plainly." So she blew out the light and again went to the window and stood peering out into the darkness, when presently she saw two dark objects coming from the direction of the canyon. They both stood very still wondering why they came so silently. When just a few feet from the door one said: "Oh, my! have you got breath enough left to call them up?"

The other laughed and said, "Let me puff awhile first."

Then Jennie jumped to the door and threw it open while her mother lighted the lamp as quickly as possible, for they recognized the voices. It was Stella and Verda with the two babies. Verda had the larger one on her back and Stella the smaller one in her arms. But they had changed burdens occasionally so both might stand it the better. They knew they were alone, and thinking the children might have grown worse they came after dark. They said they were not so tired as they were short of breath coming up the canyon.

"Weren't you afraid?" said the mother.

"Oh, no," they said, "only a little shaky when the coyotes howled so near us down there in the darkness."

"We heard some one say we had a light and was not in bed yet," said Jennie. "What have you been doing all this time since?"

"Really," they cried, "did you hear that? Why, we were away back at the top of the hill on the other side of the canyon, and had no idea the sound could reach so far as this."

"And did not care to waste our breath in farther conversation just then," Stella laughingly added. "We were thinking of the long slope to come up on this side."

After they rested awhile they ate some more supper, for they declared that what they had eaten must have all "jolted down," for they were hungry enough now. They talked and read until all were both sleepy and tired. Then they stayed until the men returned home, so they were not nearly so lonesome as they had anticipated they would be, and the unhappy to-morrow never came.

When a man refuses to give the supreme place in his heart to Jehovah, it is because he refuses to give up the worship of some other god. Every man needs a god, and every man has a god to whom he gives allegiance and service. It is as impossible for a man to live without having an object of worship as it is for a bird to fly when taken out of the air.—Dr. C. L. Laws.

Letter Department

PROVO, UTAH, September 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: Though not having any special encouragements to report, yet I send a few lines to let your readers know that we are still battling for the right, trying to improve such opportunities as we find, feeling confident in the ultimate triumph for the truth.

Since our reunion and conference, at this place, which closed on the 5th, Brother Holloway and I continued with a series of meetings, preaching each night for a week. Our tent being pitched near the principal street, it afforded a good opportunity for those who cared to attend our services, and we are glad to say, that while the attendance was not large, it was fairly good.

After concluding our tent meetings, I made a brief trip to Mammoth, Juab County, and as far as Vernon in the southern part of Tooele County. The last named place is where I and my parents landed upon our arrival from Denmark in the fall of 1864, and where for one and a half years we made our home. I felt like seeing the old stamping ground once more, and at the same time to improve whatever opportunity might be found in preaching the gospel to the people. The only one of the old residents that I found was a man by the name of E. J. Pearson, in whose employ I worked during the summer of 1865. I found him a staunch Mormon and loyal to the rule of J. F. Smith, yet he and his wife treated me with all the kindness I could hope for, making me welcome at their home. I found the people quite busy taking care of their crop, being delayed in their work by an unusually wet season. In consequence I cut my visit short, but, however, preached once while there, occupying the Mormon meeting house. The attendance was fair, considering the place is a small one, consisting of only about twelve or fifteen families.

Upon my return I again made a stop at Mammoth, a mining town in what is called the Tintic district. I had a desire to tell the people of that town our story, and on Sunday morning, finding the Mormon bishop, Mr. A. Steedman, I made application for the use of the meeting house. I found Mr. Steedman a nice and pleasant sort of a gentleman who readily consented to grant me the privilege sought, when the building was not otherwise engaged, and it was agreed that I might preach there the following Thursday and Friday nights. I somehow feared that there might yet be a hitch in the program, and sure enough, the same evening, just as I was ready to retire for the night, I was informed that the "Josephite missionary" was wanted at the phone. I there received the information from Bishop Steedman that he found himself under obligation to cancel his consent to me using the meeting house, as he had learned that the instructions from President J. F. Smith were, not to grant their houses to missionaries of the Reorganized Church. I told him that I was sorry that such was the case, as I thought we ought to treat each other with common courtesy, and as we would like to be treated in return; that I had hoped the time was coming when we would come together as men and in the spirit of kindness and good will, discuss our differences, that a proper understanding might obtain and right and just conclusions be reached. He told me that he felt about it as I did, but as he must obey his superiors he could not let me have the house.

I called on Bishop Steedman two days later and we had an extended conversation. He admitted that he was not posted on church history, and that he was unprepared to meet our claims, but he hoped at some future time to be better informed. I suggested to him that the policy pursued by him and his people under the direction of Pres. J. F. Smith would continuously debar his people from becoming qualified to meet our arguments and claims, even if we were in the wrong. I urged that the course for him and his people to pursue, that would largely aid him and his brethren to successfully combat the erroneous claims of the "Josephites," if their claims are not founded in truth, would be to throw open their doors and give us a hearing, and also read our literature, and in that way become thoroughly posted and informed as to our position. He thought I was right and admitted that it was strange that orders from headquarters had been what he had learned, but said he understood that some correspondence between Pres. J. F. Smith and the President of the Reorganization was the cause that had led to the strange order from the authorities of his church. This, of course, was news to me, and I concluded that he was laboring under a misinformation.

While I was not permitted to preach in the Mormon meetinghouse, the trustees of the Congregational church granted me the use of their building free of charge, and I held two meetings there. The minister, a Reverend Richards, was present and gave us encouragement. The attendance, however, was small, and I think that not a single person of the dominant church made an appearance, but I was informed that there was quite an audience on the outside trying to listen to what was said. Reverend Richards informed me that he at one time was located at Bevier, Missouri; that he knew the Saints there and had found them to be good people. This I was glad to hear.

I found, however, friends at Mammoth, and besides Sister Davidson, who, with her son, Grant S., and his children reside there, I will mention Mr. James Hutchinson and wife who carefully ministered to my necessities and helped to make my stay comfortable. Pres. F. M. Smith, who was called to Mammoth a couple of years ago to preach the funeral of Brother Davidson, will no doubt remember friend Hutchinson and family, who now seem to think that it was a privilege afforded them, at that time, to entertain a grandson of the prophet.

With reference to the work in general, I think we have no reason to feel discouraged, yet I wish we could report greater progress. The opposition from the dominant church is strong, not openly and aboveboard, but in an underhanded and in the most unfair manner. People belonging to that institution are not free, and dare not act upon their own conviction of what is right or wrong. Whoever might chance to attend our meetings are looked upon as on the way to apostasy, or at least as being weak in the faith. I am convinced that whatever good may be accomplished in this mission, must be through preaching the gospel of Christ in the spirit of love, and with due regard for the feelings of those who differ with us, no matter how plain to us may appear their error and delusion. To point out their mistakes and to beat them in argument will not accomplish much, unless at the same time their hearts can be touched with the fire of God's love, and that within their souls can be created a love for the eternal and unchangeable truth. Man alone can not do this, but I believe the faithful preaching of the gospel of Christ, under the blessings of the Master, is the only means for the salvation of man in Utah as well as elsewhere.

Yesterday was a big day for this little city, as we were favored with a visit from William H. Taft, President of the United States. This being the home of Senator Reed Smoot was perhaps the cause that led up to being so highly honored. The President's train arrived at 12.45 p. m., and his party, including Governor Spry, Senators Smoot and Sutherland, and a number of other distinguished characters, were met at the depot, and with automobiles conveyed through the principal part of the city. Afterwards, President Taft addressed a crowded assembly at the stake tabernacle, at the conclusion of which a number of us had the privilege of shaking the hand of the nation's chief executive. His train left at 3 p. m. for Salt Lake City, where I learn that he will make a stay until over Sunday.

With confidence in the Lord and his grand and glorious promises, I remain,
Your coworker in Zion's cause,
H. N. HANSEN.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Ensign, with other church publications, are the only preachers we have had the privilege of entertaining for the past three years. Although isolated from the church and from church privileges, yet we derive much spiritual help from your columns, and especially from the letter department. We have a strong desire to see the work forwarded. We have often heard it said, "How I love this latter-day work! The Master has said, "If thou lovest me, thou wilt serve me and keep all my commandments." Now if we do truly love the work, as we say, we must also love God, and if we love God we will serve him and keep his commandments. I notice by reading some of the articles in the church publications that there are a great many articles from the bishops and others in regard to robbing God. I wonder how severe the punishment would be which we would mete out to robbers found robbing our bank account. God has a bank account with us and he needs the money in his business just as bad as we do in ours. Do you ever wonder what will be the punishment to those found stealing his moneys? We do not want to be cursed as was ancient Israel as recorded in Malachi 3:8-10. So let us examine ourselves to see if we are truly in the faith, and whether or not we are in that band of robbers. Although much could be said of God's goodness to us, I will make this short. Ever praying for the welfare of the work, I am,

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. M. DANIEL.

ALICE, OHIO, September 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are isolated from the Saints and take this means of telling the readers of the HERALD, especially Brethren Devore and E. E. Long, and other elders who know us, that we are still in the good cause and striving to do the Master's Will, that we may stand with the blessed in Zion. We have often to face the tempter, but we have been blessed with health this season when there has been so much sickness around us. It seems the Master has spared us alone for some good cause. We have heard no preaching since 1903. We are isolated but are strengthened by the sermons in the HERALD. We are strong in the faith and pay our tithing when we possibly can. Asking the prayers of the Saints that we may ever live faithful and receive the Lord's blessing to the end.

Your brother and sister in Christ,
EDWIN E. AND ADA T. LAMBERT.

NAPA, CALIFORNIA, September 26, 1909.

Dear Readers: We are still alive in the cause of truth and very much interested and encouraged. Two very worthy people and neighbors of ours have recently received the truth, having been baptized at the late reunion at Irvington. They are Brother and Sister Haskins.

We rejoice more particularly because we had been the only ones (wife and I) of our faith in this locality, and we have been praying the Father to open the way for the gospel to be planted and the work established here, so that we might have the association of people of our own faith. Our prayers have been heard and our hopes are beginning to be realized; all honor to God for his wonderful love and mercies.

Much credit is due to Brn. F. B. Farr and J. W. Lea for their faithful labors in instructing and convincing Brother Haskins. Brother Haskins had been interested in other religious faiths and meeting Brother Lea, undertook to convert him, and was himself led into the light.

We have decided to start a Sunday school at once and feel confident of success if faithful and earnest. Dear Saints, pray for us that we may be humble and faithful. May peace, love, and wisdom abound among us all, and may we faithfully perform our whole duty unto God and unto one another.

STEVENSON, ONTARIO.

Editors Herald: By request of the missionary in charge I attended the reunion at Crabtree, Ohio, from August 21, to 30. There was a goodly number present and a pleasant time was enjoyed by all. The preaching was good and also the prayer services were quite spiritual and all seemed interested in them. Brother Gunsolley had the Religio and Sunday school work in charge and several very interesting sessions were held.

The Saints of Crabtree furnished board and lodging for all that came, a few of the Saints from abroad using sleeping tents. The weather was favorable during the entire time and all seemed to enjoy themselves and to feel that the week had been well spent.

Only one of the photos that were taken of the tent was good, and they have been printed and sent to all parties ordering them.

On September 30, I came to Ironton and held a meeting with the few Saints at the home of Brother and Sister Everman. From there I came to Huntington, West Virginia, and held several meetings there at the home of Brn. Ben Sparks and Tamplin. Some interest was manifest and I think some will obey in the near future. From there I came to Parkersburg, met Brother Griffiths, and we made our stay at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fredericks over night and part of the day. Her sister, Sister Bradish, with whom Brother Griffiths had been acquainted for years, was there; the time passed very pleasantly in the relating of experiences. On Friday, September 4, we left for Greenwood, West Virginia, to attend the district conference to be held at that place. We arrived at our destination about six in the evening, and had to drive about four miles to the place where the Saints reside.

The Saints of that place have a very handsome church, it having been erected about two years ago.

On Saturday organization was affected by choosing G. T. Griffiths to preside, with D. L. Shinn and Samuel Brown to assist; and Frank L. Shinn as secretary. The business passed off pleasantly and the reports as read showed that the work was moving on nicely. Report of B. Beale, Bishop's agent, showed a net gain in the last year. It is evident that the Saints in the district are awakening to a sense of duty along that line as well as along others, and I bespeak success for them. The preaching was good and the prayer and testimony meetings were a spiritual feast. All felt that the week was well spent and all felt loath to part, especially those who had the care of the visiting Saints.

The writer remained for a week after the conference, setting in order some things necessary for the welfare of the branch. The work bids fair to be very successful under the care of Bro. C. F. Williams, who was ordained a priest at the conference.

On arriving at Clarksburg, where I intended to hold a series of meetings, I received a telegram that my sister was dead; so I immediately left for Mitchell, Ontario, arriving there the next day. She had been bothered with heart trouble for some time, and just before leaving the room, her husband asked her how she felt, and she replied, "Quite well." A little later she was called to breakfast; but made no answer. Examination proved her to be dead. She lived the life of a Saint, having been baptized in 1879, by the writer, on the old homestead, where she was born. Her husband was afterwards ordained an elder, and has sought to magnify his calling, and always received words of encouragement from his wife. She had been promised that she would live to raise her children. Recently she told her husband that as this had been accomplished, her work was done, and she was ready to go whenever the Lord saw best to call her.

Death is making inroads in the family. This is the second sister I have lost since January. Life is uncertain and death is sure, but there is one great consolation, the family so far has died in the hope of the restored gospel, for the establishment of which upon the earth and for the salvation of men, the Seer of Palmyra gave his life.

The work in West Virginia moves on nicely. The Saints are awakening to a sense of their duty and I feel very much encouraged as to the outlook. I hope to see it accomplish its object—the redemption of Zion. So to the Saints of West Virginia, I expect soon to return to my field of labor and hope to have the coöperation of all, that good may be done.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

SAMUEL BROWN.

BENTON, IDAHO, September 19, 1909.

Editors Herald: Thinking of God's work to-night and being somewhat downhearted, I am led to drop a few lines to my favorite paper, the HERALD. I have been a member of the church for almost six years, and as I look back over my life I can see where He has blessed me a great many times. Being high-tempered, and a drunkard and gambler before I joined the church, I can say that God's work with me has not been in vain. Since I took upon me the name of Jesus, what troubles me the most is that I wish I had never spoken evil of anybody. As to what anybody may have said about me, I can only say that if it was the truth, I am sorry that I did so many evil things; and if not true, I am glad that it is not. I can thank God to-night that I have no hardness against anybody, and if I have any enemies, I have nothing against them, but wish them success in right doing, and am their friend to help them in anything that is right. I have made up my mind that if I can not say something good about a person I will not speak his name at all. But as saying is one thing and doing is another, time alone will tell how well I will succeed. I have learned one thing, that God's ways are not my ways, although my ways sometimes look better. It is hard at times to say God's will be done, but I am learning to say it.

I wish we could learn to love one another; those that are strong should help those that are weak. Why should we be strangers with our love that is given us by God? Jesus says, "Freely ye have received, freely give."

As I see many of my acquaintances leaving this life, and as we do not know who will be next, I have firmly resolved to treat everyone well, so when they are gone I will have nothing to regret.

STEPHEN DRAZEY.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA.

Editors Herald: I am writing you from this land far from America to ask you to make the following request known through your columns: I have a cousin who holds a prominent civic and ecclesiastical position in Washington, District of Columbia, and I would like, if possible, that some elder, preferably one who knows me, visit him and explain to him the genius of the latter-day gospel. An opportunity is afforded in the fact that he wants from me a copy of the Book of Mormon, which I promised to supply some time ago, but forgot it and he recently wrote me reminding me of the promise and asking me to fulfill it. Here is an excellent opportunity to get that much misunderstood and much misrepresented book before those who, under ordinary circumstances, would never hear the truth concerning it. His name is William V. Tunned, and his position is professor of history, Harvard University, Washington, District of Columbia. I think the church might take this matter up of supplying him with a Book of Mormon, and literature upon the divine authenticity, from an archæological, ethnological, and theological standpoint. If this catches the eye of some good brother, and he makes up his mind to fill the bill, will he kindly so write through the columns of the HERALD?

I am still laboring in South Australia, and must say that there have been lately a greater variety of hindering influences than I have ever before met. Probably many of them, if borne patiently, will prove of educational value and give us a greater knowledge of men and the powers that dominate them under some circumstances, and thus we may in time grow nearer the ideal minister who could be "all things to all men." We have learned more than ever of the malignant forces that lurk beneath the apparently smooth exterior of men, whose manifestation has proven unto us that our only hope of final victory lies in our power to adapt ourselves to the conditions and permit ourselves to be governed by the divine forces accessible to us by obedience to the gospel of Christ. There is no better or more effective way, so far as I know, successfully to meet the enemy of all souls than is shown in the life and precepts of our Lord. They are capable of direct application to our everyday lives. I do not mean to say if your eye offend you literally to pluck it out, but rather pluck out that which makes the eye offensive to the whole body and have substituted an eye single to the glory of God. As we journey along our ideas and methods undergo a change, and I sometimes fear that most of us but imperfectly represent the life and saving methods of our great Master.

Sometimes I feel that we as a people exhibit too much pugnacity in our presentation of the gospel, forgetting that the power of the message is that positive force of love which exemplifies itself in self-abnegation, as expressed in the saying of the Master, "And I if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." And in the old book, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee." Brother Barmore, of Melbourne, in writing to me said, "The Lord evidently found this way most effective. Can we find a more effective way? Are we wiser than God? Verily, no; for it is the way of Him who said, 'I am the way and the truth and the life.'"

In the writing of many of our articles and tracts, I am impressed with the thought that the negative thoughts of our opponents are given too much prominence, thus crowding out the beautiful, positive truths, which, if intelligently presented, would flee as the darkness when we open the window and let the light in. We do not think of taking a bucket and baling out the darkness; that would be useless. We find it increasingly difficult to get our work before the people. Those who go to church seem to be quite satisfied that they have all the truth they need, and those who do not are content with sport for a god. It is next to impossible to reach those who worship at the latter shrine, for the chief development is muscular, in those who play and those who do not play the fine points of a game of football, for instance, and this crowds out the space where the finer thoughts of the gospel might have found room. One may walk about from suburb to suburb with a bag and a brain full of God's richest truths, and find nothing but barren soil and stony ground. Truly the servant of God must be content with the lot of a stranger and pilgrim here while seeking a city whose builder and maker is God.

May we, through confidence in the promises, through the power of faith, be enabled to rest contented with our lot and labor on for that reward that is promised to those who endure faithful through the much tribulation incident and absolutely inseparable from a close walk with the God of Israel.

J. H. N. JONES.

ERSKIN STREET, Goodwin Park.

DEER ISLE, MAINE, September 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: I take this opportunity amid the mad rush and hurry of business life to write a few lines to your valuable paper, from which I have received so much encouragement and strength for the great struggle and work of life. I feel thankful to my heavenly Father, and to every good influence that has had a tendency to help me onward and upward, for the position I am in to-day, a member of Christ's body, a part of the accepted church of the great head. And I want to say that the longer I am in that blessed body, the more I realize day by day the value of being in communication with God and his people and things other than worldly possessions. For to these I owe all that I am, of a good nature, and through the associations I feel stronger in every way and better prepared to meet the adverse things of life than ever before.

Nothing strengthens one more for any work than to live constantly in close touch and in perfect harmony with the truly great and strong things of the Lord. As I travel about from day to day and from town to town and city to city, nothing impresses me more than the fact, everywhere clearly visible to the thinking mind, of the grave results of man living out of harmony with his Creator and Lord. I notice, almost without exception, that in those places where the law of God is kept most closely, there is to be found the best class of citizens, and where the saloon and Sunday laws are kept, the young people are cleaner, brighter, and in every way better than they otherwise are found. What a pity that in this land of so-called freedom, man will allow himself to be bound by chains and shackles heavier and stronger than the material ones could ever be! I find in many places men and women who are willing to open places of business on the Lord's day for the dollar that is only buying for them eternal damnation. Is it any wonder in view of this that the Lord is calling for men to come up higher, and be prepared for the destructions to come upon those who know not his name?

Asking all to remember me in their prayers, and looking and hoping for the ultimate victory.

WALLACE A. SMALL.

On thy cold, gray stones, oh, sea!
And I wish that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

Thus wrote one of the gentlest of men, the truest of friends, and the sublimest of poets. Nothing is more mysteriously wonderful or less obvious to humanity in the marvelous psychology of man, than the way in which strangely startling and sometimes even brilliantly scintillating rays of thought will dart and flash into our minds, with nothing whatever either in ourselves or our immediate environments to give rise to them.

Thus on the beautiful afternoon of Tuesday, September 21, 1909, I am filled with a sense of profound joy and intense satisfaction in the thought that before he crossed to that other shore, that profoundest of statesmen, that deepest of philosophers, that humblest among great men, the Right Honorable W. E. Gladstone, received the copy of the Book of Mormon, on the fly leaf of which was inscribed the autograph of our esteemed and beloved president, Joseph Smith. I shall never forget the gentlemanly, kindly, and grateful letter which I received under his own signature. After saying that among his large collection at Hawarden Castle, he possessed a copy of an early edition of the Book of Mormon, he added that he should also prize deeply the copy sent to him by the eldest surviving son of Joseph Smith, and particularly as he had the kindness to attach his own autograph to the gift, or words to that effect. It was printed on violet headed note paper surmounted by the right honorable gentleman's monogram, and he added in violet print, "Hawarden Castle, Cheshire."

Thus the truly great and noble and honorable men of the earth receive with respectful esteem and sympathy the testimony of the firstborn of the truest prophet of God that ever breathed or thought or wrote or spoke; and of whom it may even yet be uttered, "He being dead, yet speaketh."

Who can say but this aged and venerable white haired statesman may yet come forth in the first resurrection of God, having received the testimony of the father in the same courteous, earnest, and gentlemanly spirit in which he received that sacred book bearing the autograph of the eldest son of the true prophet of the church of Christ on earth?

Depend upon it, my brothers and sisters, that the power of the press, though mighty and strong, is but in its very earliest infancy, as an adjunct to this everlasting gospel, and if only one or two of the very able letters and articles which I see before me in the last current number of the HERALD could be printed and diffused by thousands and by tens of thousands at the great world's fairs and expositions of which Brother A. W. Gorbutt writes so ably in his interesting letter, what a grand army of souls would set forth on their march to Zion! Surely here, if anywhere at all, is an ample and golden field for one or more of the Lord's richest stewards, to have this HERALD printed and distributed in tens of thousands, broadcast upon the face of a sin-stricken earth and people, blindly groping for that greater, that everlasting light, and crying like the poor dumb beast of the field, "Who will show us any good? Lord, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us."

Such an one would win the welcome plaudit, "Well done," and would be laying up treasures in heaven, where moth and rust do not corrupt and where thieves can not break through and steal.

Finally, if the proposed martyrs' memorial never attains its just and right proportions here below, yet when the martyrs shall appear surrounded by an innumerable concourse of angels at the right hand of God, their memorial shall be a gorgeously grand and unfathomably beautiful one, to which the thousands of earth's noblest and most gifted children will count it an honor to flock, to gaze upon and peradventure to weep over. Their memorial shall be an everlasting one, enshrined in the hearts of the noblest, purest, and best of God's own earth-born children. Many who now only know by hearsay or by reading, but who have ardently longed for that day, will see for themselves the glorified and cleansed visage of Uncle Joseph and Hyrum, Alexander Hale, Sisters Lucy and Emma, and all who have washed their garments and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

The Lord is graciously blessing his work here in Toronto, though it is only fair to state that the enemy is doing his utmost to sow tares amidst the wheat—discord and strife among the brethren. Still, "our hope is in God that made the heavens and the earth, the sea and the dry land, and who will not suffer the righteous to be moved out of his place." Pray for us all.

Yours in the covenant,

F. R. TUBB.

Seattle Reunion.

Seattle and British Columbia, Spokane and Portland districts jointly held a reunion at Seattle, Washington, August 13 to 23, 1909. Among those who were present of the missionary forces were Brn. F. M. Smith and I. N. White, of the First Presidency and Twelve, respectively, together with Elders S. S. Smith and M. H. Cook, presidents of the respective adjoining districts. Also Bishop Ellis Short, of Independence, Missouri, who ably discoursed upon the financial part. Aside from our missionary in charge, Bro. F. A. Smith, who upon the day of his arrival in Seattle received the sad news of his father's sudden death, Alexander H. Smith, Presiding Patriarch, all the missionaries laboring within the three districts, with perhaps one or two exceptions, were in attendance. The opening session was called to order by Pres. William Johnson, and a temporary organization was effected, placing Bro. F. M. Smith to preside, who chose Brn. William Johnson, A. V. Closson, and M. H. Cook as his associates. F. W. Holman was chosen secretary, with Hale W. Smith to assist. Preaching meetings were held mostly three times and prayer services once and twice each day. One afternoon service was accorded the Daughters of Zion auxiliary, which was ably presided over by Sr. F. M. Smith, secretary of the Advisory Board, and was much enjoyed by all present. A goodly number were on the grounds and mostly remained all through, taking advantage of the camping facilities afforded. Much knowledge and extensive instruction was imparted from the stand, the principles of salvation were ably disseminated, and an enjoyable time was had by one and all. Seventeen were baptized on the last Sunday, and baptism was also administered to two young men from Ringling Brothers Circus during the preceding week. A dining tent was conducted upon the cafeteria plan, and upon the whole, the management came out ahead something over $107.00 after having paid all expenses. They have since entered into a contract to purchase the large assembly tent, first having been sustained and re-elected to officiate in the same capacity in a permanent organization, thereby taking advantage of the proportionate rental as a partial payment. Said management was also empowered to appoint the time, select grounds, and proper facilities for the holding of a reunion within the Seattle and British Columbia District some time during the year 1910, which will be duly advertised in ample time.

WILLIAM JOHNSON, FRED'K HOLMAN,
of Reunion Board.

Council Bluffs Reunion.

The following is a report of the reunion held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 21 to 29, 1909, by the Fremont and Pottawattamie districts of Iowa and the Northern District of Nebraska: In the meeting held for organization, Saturday, August 21, Brn. J. W. Wight, Eli Hayer, and J. M. Baker were elected presidents. Brother Wight was expected to be there within two or three days, but for some cause unknown to the writer, he was unable to meet with us, which caused some regret. However, the other two members of the presidency did the work very well.

The following are the names of some of the elders that were present: F. B. Blair, F. A. Smith, W. M. Self, H. S. Lytle, R. T. Walters, Paul Hanson, Joseph Arber, and a number of others from the three districts; also Patriarch Joshua Carlile was on the grounds, and gave a number of blessings.

The preaching was good and instructive, and the prayer meetings were enjoyed by all present. With the exception of a few who suffered from physical ailments, all seemed to enjoy themselves thoroughly, and a spirit of sociability and brotherliness was manifested by all.

There were about forty-five tents on the grounds, besides the preaching and dining tents.

The auxiliary work of the church was given an hour each day, the Sunday school sessions in charge of T. A. Hougas, General Superintendent, and the Religio in charge of District Superintendents J. Harding and Lorena Leeka.

At the business meeting held Saturday, August 28, it was decided to hold another reunion in 1910, and the matter of time and location was left to a committee composed of A. Badham, J. M. Baker, and S. Harding. It was moved and carried that one of the regular sessions each week day at the 1910 reunion be given to the auxiliary work.

At the closing meeting Sunday evening, a vote of thanks was extended to the neighbors for kindness shown us, and also to the choir, and to the reunion committee for their labors.

S. C. JACOBSON, Secretary.

Warrington Branch, England.

The supreme motive which actuates me to write at all is my earnest desire to perpetuate this work to the glory of God. In doing so, I trust to be able to present something not merely interesting, but something which may arouse, to a greater interest, those who may have, through some cause or other, become discouraged or weary in the fight.

To begin with I will say that I was born August 28, 1871, in the town of Birmingham, Warwickshire, England. At an early age I and a younger brother and sister were left motherless; I dare say some of my readers will understand what that means. To us, as children, it meant the changing of the course of our lives. I, being the eldest, took my brother along with me to a Church of England Sunday school. Those childhood days I recollect, mother playing the piano while she sang from Sankey's collection. Even now those happy scenes will come up in my mind's eye. At times I have almost been led to desire that I could remain a child, but I know such a desire would be selfish.

About two years after mother's death the scene changed; that brightened surface became dull by reason of my father marrying again; this time a person who was a Roman Catholic. I am afraid that, as in many cases, instead of the love of God being the predominating feature of his life, the love of mammon held sway, thus bringing about a change in him as a father and in us as his children. He had sold himself and us children to the Roman Catholic Church into which we were baptized—I mean sprinkled. I entered into my new life with a zest which if employed in the latter-day work no one need be ashamed of. Do you ask to what extent was I carried? I answer, as far as a zealous but enslaved will could carry me. I became an altar boy, took up a portion of the Latin language, served the priest with wine (that wine which did and does intoxicate) at the altar, twice or three times on Sunday and often at early mass through the week, and on feast or saints' days, carried the incenser containing a charcoal of fire on which to burn the incense for use during mass. I became so engrossed in the doctrine that I was ready to do anything in the shape of penance in order to atone for my sins; in fact one time I placed hard dried peas in my boots under my feet. Think the next time, however, I will steep them before putting my feet in. I shall never forget the agonizing torture that I underwent, and if anyone doubts it, just let them try it. Again I have witnessed young women eating the priest's scented snuff, under the belief that it had some peculiar healing power. My zealotness has led me to kiss the feet of images, to pray to Blessed Mary and all the Saints, to wear over my shoulders two pieces of cloth fastened together with tape in the belief that I should be saved from peril in shipwreck or such dangers.

I might continue with a recital of many incidents of similar character, even to the filling of a book with things almost incredible, but I must restrain lest I weary you with what I have written. It is only by way of contrast to the life I am now called to live by reason of my acceptance of the gospel. However, before I speak of this latter-day work, I wish to ascend step by step, through the various stages of my religious career until I joined that church.

In the year 1888 I traveled from Birmingham to Liverpool, by road, a distance of probably a hundred miles, and this walking feat rid my physical frame of rheumatic fever, with which I had been bedridden for several days. With me it was either die in bed or on the highroad, and so I chose the latter, and the further I went the better I became, and whereas at first it took me an hour to walk a half mile, I could walk four miles per hour. From Liverpool I went to the Isle of Man by boat, which place I left about fourteen years beforehand. Being now married and eventually locating in Warrington, my wife and I were captured by the Salvation Army. The army was undoubtedly an instrument either in God's hands or man's, of arousing my mind to activity, having grown into a stupor.

By these constant pleadings, "Do come to the 'penitent form,'" I at last yielded, I believe more out of a desire to prevent further annoyance than from an intelligent comprehension of the meaning of the action, and allowed myself to be led like a sheep to the "penitent form." I was then expected to show some visible signs of sorrow, in the shape of weeping or crying aloud for mercy, but I could not do either. I do not know whether they thought I was a hardened sinner or not; however, I have wept many a time since, when I look back along the furrows of time, yes, and rejoiced too, when I realize the way in which God has led me.

After laboring with the Salvation Army for about eighteen months, I came in touch with a body of people of the old fashioned Quaker stamp. I well remember the first Sunday morning on which I met with these people to break bread. I experienced a reception of a flood of light immediately upon the commencement of the meeting. This was the second step in advance. I had enjoyed the Spirit in connection with the Salvation Army, but here was a greater degree of it. I then realized that for me to go back would have been a retrograde movement, and I therefore decided to throw in my lot. Many are the happy moments that I enjoyed in their midst. Their unity, brotherly kindness, and what to my mind stood out more conspicuous, as a pattern to the world, Latter Day Saints included, was their neatness of attire. They scorn the idea of finger rings (I have seen some of my brothers with them on and the thought has struck me, "How unnecessary!"). The idea of their wives or daughters wearing gaudy dresses or hats containing expensive feathers was unknown, aye, and many are the beautiful birds that have paid the penalty to satisfy the ungodly craving for adornment. Outward dress proves inward desires; a sober, cultivated taste for meekness, produces humility in deportment inseparably connected with one's attire. I have also thought that the price spent in unnecessaries would greatly help in God's work, would aid the Bishop in supplying the elders' families with the necessities of life.

About three years after joining the last named body sickness overtook me and compelled my return to the Isles of Man to recruit. While on the island I became associated with Primitive Methodists; again I received enlightenment. Returning from the island I took up my abode in Liverpool. In this place my wife and I became acquainted with the Independent Methodists, and it was while passing to and from their meetings that I heard, at a street corner, the Plymouth Brethren holding forth their doctrine of baptism by immersion, and although I argued to the contrary, I eventually became convinced that such was the correct method, and of course yielded. Another step in advance.

After a short stay at Liverpool, we finally went to Warrington where I came in contact with the latter-day work. At Warrington I worked in a warehouse of the railway company, and here I met Brother Gysh, who so often invited me to their cottage meetings that at last I found my way there one Sunday evening, and not long afterwards I found my way into a watery grave for the second time.

This was the last great step. In the course of time I was called to the ministry, and as priest I have met with joy and sorrow, the joy, however, abundantly compensating for the sorrow.

Permit me now to introduce the history of the branch of which I have the honor to be priest. On March 7, 1895, our late president, John Schofield, now removed to Birmingham, came from Bradford to Warrington in search of employment, and was fortunate in obtaining it almost immediately. Work continued good, and he remained and in a little less than two years he was united in matrimony to Miss Nellie Clegg. Both were members of the East Manchester Branch, taking up their abode at Number 8 Gorsey Lane, Warrington, which same address was looked upon as an oasis in a desert. Tramps, beggars, wayfarers, neighbors, ministers, and missionaries always found a welcome and assistance at that haven of rest.

At the suggestion of Brother Pitt, missionary in charge, Brother Schofield began tracting on Sunday mornings. As a priest he labored in that direction and was greatly blessed every time he administered the precious word in tract form, and several from time to time became interested. While thus engaged he was placed in charge of the Manchester Mission in Warrington. After a time he became acquainted with a young man, who, while not accepting the work himself, invited Brother Schofield to the men's Bible class of the Congregationalists. At this class he was privileged to present the work, and while thus attending he made the acquaintance of a young man, J. S. Grundy, who after careful and prayerful consideration accepted the faith and was baptized by Bro. Henry Greenwood, president of the Manchester District.

About twice per month elders came to Warrington and held cottage meetings in Brother Schofield's home. These elders, and also visiting brethren, were constantly taken to the Bible class, but were eventually told not to come any more. Brother Schofield was now joined by Brother Grundy in tracting. They continued to invite the people to cottage meetings. Through this method Brother and Sister Gysh and Sr. Emma Roberts accepted the gospel. Then Brother Griffiths, of the Twelve, organized the few members into a branch.

On the evening of December 30, 1902, I at last yielded, after repeated invitations from Brother Gysh, and found my way to Brother Schofield's home. That is now more than six years ago, yet I well remember the first time I came in contact with this work. How the doctrine, coupled with the general deportment of the Saints, especially of the officers, stood out in bold, unmistakable contrast to the husks on which I had been feeding for so many years. Of course, I realized that their deportment was the result of an intelligent conception of the gospel. Not long after this Bro. John Rushton held a week's special meetings in the Coop Society's rooms on Warwick street, Warrington, which I attended, and it was while listening to Brother Rushton's Paul-like addresses that I was convinced of his truthful position, and eventually accepted the only work which perfectly reflects the true character of God and Christ and his church.

My wife, although at first opposed to this work, at last gave way under the convincing arguments presented by Brother Rushton, and was eventually baptized. Since then many are the dreams and visions, day and night, that Sister Byfield has received, also, by audible voice; by heavenly messengers has she often been confirmed in the faith. Who can rob her or anyone else of such undeniable testimony that God lives, and that those who, though often misunderstood and grossly misrepresented, even by members of the church, are recognized of God when endeavoring to the best of their ability to conform to God's laws.

Through tracting, Brother Chandler became interested and after patient inquiry was baptized. This brother has now a conception of the work that many members of much longer standing would have reason to be proud of, and I believe that if he is humble he is fitted for a higher position than branch president.

The cultivation of that Christ-like meekness of spirit is, however, absolutely necessary in every Saint, but especially in the officers, before any genuine progress can be made. My motto is, "Call a spade a spade." Straight uprightness, like the poplar tree, will stand a great deal of vituperation from a host of enemies or uncertain friends.

As time advanced the branch passed through severe trials, and it seemed as if the powers of hell were arrayed against it to secure its overthrow. I well remember it cost me some pain, but it cost Brother Schofield many a sleepless night and weeping hour. Through slackness of work, Brother Grundy and family were compelled to leave Warrington. What is it that makes one feel sad, with a choking at the throat, just because a family is moving away? What is that gnawing sensation in the breast, causing a feeling almost impossible to explain? Is it not because the affinity that exists is more clearly made manifest then than at the time of even partial severance? The same thing occurred at the departure of Brother Schofield and family, but not so with those who had left our ranks because they were not of us. Saints, there are rents in the scene hard to repair, breaches hard to fill. If some of those who make them could realize this I believe they would be prepared to make greater sacrifices.

The work continued to advance, adding to our number Bro. William Brown, who has a well-balanced mind, and is a zealous worker. His wife, Sr. Clara Cank, Brother and Sister Carter, Brother and Sister Fleming, and six children. Great has been the change in the lives of this family, particularly in that of Brother Fleming. He is now holding the offices of deacon, Sunday school superintendent, janitor, secretary of tract fund, and in fact he is willing to hold any office to help the work along.

Following the above additions, Brother Rushton held a two-night debate with the champion of sectarianism, Mr. Percy Ward. Although there were no additions as the outcome of the effort, much prejudice was removed as the result of Brother Rushton's powerfully convincing demonstration of the impregnable position of God's true church.

Let me now add our late branch president's testimony concerning the Warrington Saints: "For their number, and the length of time the branch has been established, I dare say there are none more noble and active in the Lord's work, in the mission." Having brought the history of our branch pretty near up to date, I will proceed to give you a few of the many evidences received by individual members, convincing them that this is the Lord's work. Also some from outside whose evidence is unimpeachable.

Bro. Grundy received in answer to prayer, a vision of a large concourse of people. Hovering above them was the Son of God in the act of watering the people. Brethren Grundy and Schofield had worked most assiduously without apparently any fruit from their labors. However, the word they had sown was being watered by the good Shepherd, and subsequently members began to be added, and as a result of the faithfulness of these brethren, the vision had imparted a lasting encouragement.

At another time, Brother Grundy's little boy fell from the first story of a house in course of erection, and although badly injured, by the laying on of hands was perfectly restored. Sister Byfield heard a voice saying that there were many in the church that had not been called.

A year ago I was not expected to recover by the doctor, and as I lay upon the threshold of death through an attack of pneumonia and bronchitis, even my finger nails turned black. Yet through the laying on of hands I was restored, to the utter astonishment of the doctor, who declared that in all his experience he had never seen a case like mine. I am now better than I have been for years, praise God. Both my wife and children have been restored to health by this same ordinance.

One of our sisters, soon after baptism received the vision of a beautiful, bright light, just as she was retiring for the night. This she holds as a testimony to the work, being in answer to prayer.

My eldest daughter, aged eight, had a vision of angels; also while in school a few days ago, she was transfixed by a bright star that appeared in her hand. She asked the girl next to her if she could see it and she said no, then she replied in the absence of the teacher, "You must have done something wrong or you could have seen it, for I could see the star quite plain."

On several occasions our elders have been called upon to minister to the sick outside the church. One in particular I will mention: A gentleman by the name of Stott, who held the position of town councilor and magistrate, a socialist by the way, had a sister about sixteen years of age who was taken seriously ill, insomuch that the doctor had no hope of her recovery. Mr. Stott, being in touch with our branch through Brethren Schofield and Grundy, requested the prayers of the Saints in her behalf. The matter was brought before the branch, and it was decided to devote the following Sunday to prayer and fasting. The event passed unnoticed and nothing was heard of it for probably two months afterwards, when one Sunday afternoon, while Sunday school was being held, there came into the room a lady accompanied by a young girl. After the school had closed she introduced herself as Mrs. Stott and the girl as Mr. Stott's sister, who had been so dangerously ill and for whom we had fasted and prayed. She said that the recovery was so marvelous that she had decided to bring her a living witness, and she certainly looked the picture of health. It is needless to say that both doctors and friends were profoundly astonished, and we were all made to rejoice at this another manifestation of God's recognition of his church, in these latter days. Much more might be added, but I am satisfied that what I have written will be or ought to be enough to encourage the weary and faint, so that just as our blood courses through our veins from member to member, to stimulate and nourish every part, so may the evidences herein produced send a thrill of not mere gladness, but of the essence of life which will travel through every member of the body (church), stimulating every fiber, blending into a unity and oneness, binding us together as one to the glory of God and the uplifting of his people, severing only the withered and dead branches.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
WALTER BYFIELD.

News From Branches

BELDING, MICHIGAN.

A two-day meeting was held here on September 4 and 5, and I believe all who attended were benefited. Brn. S. W. L. Scott, W. D. Ellis, and McKnight, assisted by the local brethren, held the gospel banner aloft and many remarked that they had never heard better sermons. On both days meals were served at the church, and there was a good crowd all the time, many coming from a distance. On Sunday at 9.30 the sacrament was administered, and some stated that they had not had the privilege of partaking for over a year. We were glad to have the isolated Saints among us and invite them to come again. Brother McKnight remained with us until Wednesday and Brother Scott until Monday, and we enjoyed the good sermons they preached. Trusting that this gospel work may go on until all the honest in heart are gathered in, I am, VIVIA DAVIS.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The services during the past month have been edifying and unlifting. The word as delivered through those whom God has called to represent him, has been delivered with the Spirit's power and for that reason has been very edifying and "meat in due season." At the prayer services many strong testimonies have been borne as to God's love and mercy for his children. The sick have been healed and many blessings have been received.

Our branch business meeting was held September 7, and district conference convened in Saint Louis, September 18 and 19. The district officers were by conference vote authorized to purchase a gospel tent and make arrangements for a reunion next year. Bro. Clyde Baker of the Cheltenham Branch was ordained to the office of priest.

On the evening of September 20, a priesthood meeting was held for all the priesthood of the district. The Cheltenham church, we are pleased to note, is to be dedicated October 17, and we are anticipating a feast of good things the week following, when Brn. F. M. and E. A. Smith will hold services at the Rock Church in Saint Louis. The services are to begin the evening of the 17th.

The auxiliaries are moving along nicely. The Mite Society as usual is moving along to a good end. Our choir deserves special mention because of the splendid services rendered at conference both Sunday morning and evening, giving us words of praise before and after each service, the quality of which evinced thorough practice.

Fair attendance at sacrament service Sunday morning, and feel many were abundantly blessed with the Spirit, if not all. If all the Saints could just appreciate what strength and benefit are derived from these meetings, we think more would exert their utmost efforts to be present. We surely desire to make improvement month by month, so should not neglect any of the opportunities given us.

Elder P. Pement occupied in the evening.

Brother McGann returned Sunday morning from a trip to Carthage, Illinois, to visit his daughter: Reported an excellent visit, having met Bro. Joseph Smith and his wife and a number of the Saints.

We still do not see the number at prayer meeting we desire. Wednesday evening, October 6, besides the regular attendants, were Sister Warlick, Brethren Oliver, Cotton, and Stone.

Thursday, October 7, a number of the ladies of the church and some of the gentlemen met to perform some work at the church, cleaning and polishing the opera chairs, etc. Elder Allen is still busy painting the rear room, but hopes to finish most of the work in a short time. As nearly all the work has been performed by the missionary and the brethren, it has taken a long time, as some can only work in the evening. How thankful we are for our little church, away from the noise of the street cars, and not near any dwellings with noisy people.

As our items seem to be scarce, will ask space for a few lines which is my daily prayer:

"Just for to-day, what more can heart demand
From one who will each longing understand?
Thy love withholds no treasure, so I pray
'Choose what may come, but give me strength to-day.'"

Cleveland Branch is advancing. We had a good large prayer meeting Wednesday evening, and Elder J. C. Farnfield dropped in as a surprise to all of us. Sunday morning, during Sunday school session, Ethel Ovenden, one of our most punctual scholars, was baptized into the church by Elder F. T. Haines, who is branch president and also our Sunday school chorister. This is the second time our new font, which was built in the basement, has been used since it was built by Elder R. C. Russell and two brethren of this branch. The new sister was confirmed by Elders J. C. Farnfield and Theo. Schmidt at the morning service, following which was sacrament service with a large attendance for us, over fifty being present and nearly all Saints. Many prayers and testimonies were offered, causing a longer service than usual. There was a good evening service, B. Farnfield in the pulpit. He spoke to about forty hearers. Bro. Thomas, who presided, has come from Pennsylvania to stay with us. Brother Farnfield, who has a mission in Straffordville, Canada, told me that he preached there last week to a larger congregation than ours, and that there was not a Saint among them.

Conference Minutes.

WESTERN MAINE.—District convened at Little Deer Isle, Maine, August 28, 1909, at 2.30 p. m., president J. J. Billings in the chair. The following officers were chosen: U. W. Greene and J. J. Billings presidents of conference; E. M. Browne secretary pro tem; Louisa McDonald organist; Electa Gray chorister; E. M. Browne assistant chorister; H. B. Eaton usher. Visiting Saints extended courtesies of conference. Statistical reports from Little Deer Isle, Stonington, and Mountainville; ministerial reports from J. J. Billings, J. N. Ames, and H. H. Billings. Pleasant Home Branch of East Lamoine was disorganized. President and secretary of the branch were ordered to grant letters of removal from the Pleasant Home Branch to the Independence, Missouri, Branch, to the following persons: Almeda J. Closson, Margie E. Closson, Agnes F. Closson, Eugene E. Closson. It was decided to hold the next conference at Mountainville, November 27 and 28, 1909. Bishop's agent reported as follows: receipts, $173.00; expenditures, $75.00; amount on hand, $98.00. F. M. Carter was chosen secretary of district and E. M. Browne, secretary pro tem.

NEW YORK AND PHILADELPHIA.—District convened in conference in the Saints' chapel, corner of Howard and Ontario streets, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, at 4 p. m. U. W. Greene was chosen to preside, assisted by district president, A. D. Angus; R. E. Hockman and E. B. Hull clerks; Sr. Belle James, stenographer. Branches reporting: Brooklyn, 175; Broad River, 44; Scranton, 882; Philadelphia, 198; Baldwin, 79. Ministry reporting: Patriarch Joseph Squire, sr.; Bishop John Zimmermann, sr., high priests Walter W. Smith and Archibald D. Angus; Elders A. E. Stone, William Anderson Ellsworth B. Hull, George Baty, Daniel C. Carter, Evan Lewis, Daniel T. Shaw, John H. Newstead, James Wilson, Henry Carr, Homer Buttery, Benjamin R. McGuire, Ephraim Squire, Hosea H. Bacon, George Potts; Priests Ira W. Humes, Judson Cable, William Hobson, Samuel A. Reeves, John Lawrence, M. O. Matthews, Richard J. Hawkins, John Zimmermann and William Plunkett. John Potts, of Brooklyn, New York, was ordained to the office of Priest by U. W. Greene and F. M. Sheehy. Adjourned to meet at Scranton to the call of the president. R. E. Hockman, secretary.

LITTLE SIOUX.—District conference was held at Magnolia, Iowa, June 5 and 6. Business session opened at 10.30 a. m. and organization was affected by selecting Sidney Pitt, sr., and S. B. Kibler, of the district presidency, and J. W. Wight and Paul M. Hanson, of the missionary force, to preside; J. D. Stuart as clerk; and S. B. Kibler as chorister. President Pitt stated in his opening remarks that the work was onward and upward in the district and that he had derived much satisfaction and pleasure in visiting at the home of Saints and others in the district. The statistical report from the twelve branches in the district gave the following totals: Number at last report, 1,815; present number, 1,819, which included 1 patriarch, 6 high priests, 3 seventy, 39 elders, 32 priests, 30 teachers, and 21 deacons; 18 gained by baptism, 8 by letter, and 4 by certificate, a total gain of 24; 15 lost by letter and 5 by death, a total loss of 20; a net gain of 4; 2 marriages and 3 ordinations. Forty-five priesthood reports were submitted, showing 336 sermons, 461 times assisted, 56 priesthood meetings attended, 52 official visits made, and 736 other meetings attended, 17 baptized, 23 confirmed, 2 ordained, 6 marriages solemnized, 12 children blessed, and 186 sick administered to, besides much other labor not specifically mentioned. The spiritual condition of the branches reporting showed some improvement. A resolution was adopted providing that the priesthood should submit their reports to the district clerk before each conference, and only the summary be read to the conference by the clerk. Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando, reported $90.60 on hand February 1, received to June 1, in tithes and offerings, $1,559.61, paid out $429.70, remitted to the Bishop $1,100, balance on hand $120.58. Received also for Graceland farm $20, for college $1, for Sanitarium $2.50, and for children's home $2.50, all of which he sent to the proper authorities. Still on hand in tent fund $5. Had received as consecration one lot in Graceland Addition, Lamoni, Iowa, valued at $150. Bigler's Grove, Sioux City, and Moorhead each invited the next conference to meet with them, but the choice fell to Bigler's Grove by a majority vote. The time was fixed for October 2 and 3, at 9 a. m. for opening of prayer service, and 10.30 for business session, but was later changed to October 8 and 9. The new officials for ensuing conference year are president, Sidney Pitt, sr., who chose as his assistants, Joseph W. Lane and James A. Donaldson, which choice was ratified by the conference; clerk, James D. Stuart; member of library board, W. R. Adams; treasurer, A. M. Fyrando, who was also sustained as Bishop's agent. The presidency of the district was instructed to provide for all two-day meetings. The tents were left with the assistant missionary in charge and the district presidency, and if those operating them found it necessary they should make a levy on the branches for expenses incurred. The attendance at all services was good and interest and enjoyment keen. James D. Stuart, clerk.

SEATTLE AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.—Semiannual conference of the district convened upon the afternoon of the 21st and ascertained by the several reports at hand that the Seattle Branch had a present membership of 190, a net gain of 17; New Westminster, 28, gaining 1; Chilliwack, 37; with no change; same taken in connection with last report from the Nanaimo Branch, having a membership of 11, together with the enrollment of disorganized branches of Castle Rock and Tacoma with a total membership of 60, having lost 11 therefrom, leaves a total of 326 for the district, after having transferred the Vancouver, Washington, Branch, with 19 members, to the Portland District. Ministerial reports from Elders William Johnson, D. W. Davis, and P. W. Premo, also from Priests A. W. Gorbett and Josiah E. Rhoades, were read. Bishop's Agent Frank Holmes, of Roslyn, Washington, reported, showing amount on hand February 12, 1909, $167.93; subsequent receipts, $218.62; with disbursements of $385.44; leaving on hand August 1, 1909, $1.11. Seattle was designated as the place for holding the next conference, leaving the appointing of time in the hands of the district officers, who have decided upon the second Saturday in February, 1910, being the 12th day thereof. Be it remembered by all who desire letters of removal from the above named disorganized branches, that they can obtain same from the undersigned officers. William Johnson and Frederick Holman, president and secretary respectively of the district, and of the reunion board of management. 1202-½ Seventh avenue, Seattle, Washington.

EASTERN COLORADO.—Conference convened at Denver, Colorado, September 4, 1909, with Brn. E. F. Shupe and J. D. Curtis presiding. Reports from the branches indicate a net gain of 18 for the district. The Bishop's agent reported having received $451.41 as tithes and offerings. Disbursements exceeded receipts by $60.55, with a large amount of allowance unpaid. By conference action the district authorities were directed to issue an elder's license to Bro. James K. Adams, of Loveland, Colorado. The following should be noted by all members of the local priesthood: It was voted that in the future all local priesthood reports be made through the branch presidents. The Pueblo Branch was declared to be disorganized. Election of officers resulted as follows: President, E. F. Shupe; vice-president, J. D. Curtis; secretary, F. A. Russell. The next conference will be held in Colorado Springs, Colorado, the time to be named by district president. A vote of thanks was tendered Bro. W. E. Wolfe, retiring secretary. Services were such as are common to all district conferences. The Denver Saints seem to know how to produce "sunshine," even if it does rain all the time, and all the visiting delegates appreciate the courtesies extended. F. A. Russell, secretary pro tem.

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—Bro. John Teeters was elected president; Elizabeth Teeters, secretary; Myrtle Coop, treasurer. Privilege of voting was extended to all visiting Saints. John Teeters was sustained as Bishop's agent. Report of Bishop's agent as follows: On hand, $1.90; receipts, $0.80; accounts on hand, $2.90. Jacob Jemison and John B. Graham were appointed a committee to audit the books. They reported the accounts correct. Scandia Branch reported a gain of four in membership, 1 elder, 2 priests, 1 teacher; elders reported 19 sermons preached, 1 baptized, ordained 3. Northwestern Homestead Branch, 5 sermons preached, assisted 33 times, baptized 2, confirmed 3. Twin Creek Branch, increase in membership 1, priests 1, deacons 2; elders reported 19 sermons, baptized 1, confirmed 3; also administered to sick. Bro. H. E. Taylor had no report, but said he had been busy in the Lord's work. Jacob Jemison was appointed to visit and report on the J. F. McClure case at the next conference. The president was appointed to investigate the case of Brother Parkens, and report at the next conference. A motion was carried to levy a tax on each member of fifty cents to pay the expenses of president and secretary to the next conference. The next conference will be held at Seldon, Kansas, the first week in December. Bro. Jacob Jemison was ordained an elder under the hands of Brn. Hilliard and Jemison. Elizabeth Teeters, secretary.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—District convened at Huntington Beach, California, September 6, 1909. T. W. Williams, R. Bullard, and Charles E. Crumley were elected presidents. A little damper was thrown over the meeting by the Methodists refusing to let us have the use of their auditorium which we used last year. This year it stood idle with doors locked and we were compelled to use our large tent. The Huntington Beach Company, however, were very nice to us, granting us the use of the grounds and providing everything they could for our comfort, which was fully appreciated by our people. The good Spirit was there, and what does it matter whether you worship in a tabernacle or a tent so the holy influence is there to pervade the meeting. The meetings were all quite spiritual and the gifts were frequently manifested. The Bishop's report showed total receipts, $1,614.54; disbursements, $1,484.83; due district, $120.61; error last account, $.90; balance on hand, $8.20. On account of Bishop Carmichael being called to take charge of the Herald Office, the report was closed when turned over to our new Bishop's agent, Bro. Fred Adam, on July 23, 1909. Brother Carmichael was extraordinarily conspicuous by his absence, which was partly made up by Bishop R. Bullard, of Maine. The long felt need of a reunion ground of our own took on concrete form. By spontaneous response we raised over $800.00, over half of it being paid in cash. Brn. R. T. Cooper, Levi Heminway, and Will Mills were continued and

Nat. Carmichael and Fred Adam were added to the committee for securing a desirable location for the grounds. The committeemen are diligently pursuing their commission. The afternoons were given over to social intercourse, allowing time for recreation and various meetings were held. The Daughters of Zion held a very successful meeting and resolutions were adopted soliciting the State legislature to suppress various forms of immorality which the society felt needed checking in the state and nation. We must not fail to mention the manner in which the cafeteria supplied the needs of the outer man. It was even remarked that we fared too well for the spirituality. The priests' and teachers' quorums organized a year ago showed activity and good results of the year's work, and report advancement in their respective lines of labor. The following resolution which unanimously prevailed, voiced the feelings of the assembly: "Whereas, in the course of human events, our beloved patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, has been called to pass over to where his fathers wait for him, and, whereas, he has endeared himself to God's people, and to the Southern California District, where he has labored as a missionary and as a father in Israel, and, whereas, blessings have flowed from God to many in the district through his work in the fulfillment of his office as Patriarch, be it, resolved, That we express to his family and to Joseph Smith, his brother, and coworker, our heartfelt sympathy with them in their bereavement, and that we consider the loss ours as well. Our sorrow is robbed of its bitterness by the thought that our brother has joined the faithful servants of God, who have gone before." Richard Bullard, Charles E. Crumley, Olive M. Clapp, William Schade, committee. R. T. Cooper, secretary.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN.—District convened at Madison, Wisconsin, September 4 and 5, 1909, at the close of the annual reunion. Bro. W. A. McDowell was chosen president; J. O. Dutton assistant; Oliver McDowell secretary. Branches reporting 6; membership of branches reporting as follows: East Delavan, 67, loss 1; Oregon 58, gain 2; Flora Fountain 95, gain 7; Janesville 51, loss 1; Buckwheat Ridge 48, gain 4; Wheatville report ordered returned for correction. By order of the conference the name of the Oregon Branch was changed to Madison Branch. Bishop's agent reported: Balance on hand last report, $109.64; received, $532.50; disbursements, $550.50; balance on hand, $91.64. District treasurer reported: Balance on hand last report, $6.72; receipts, $46.57; disbursements, $40.55; balance on hand, $12.74. Officers elected: President, W. A. McDowell; vice-president, J. O. Dutton; secretary, B. C. Flint; treasurer, E. W. Dutton. Speakers during the conference were C. E. Butterworth, W. A. McDowell, E. J. Goodenough, J. O. Dutton, J. J. Cornish, C. H. Burr, and J. T. Hackett. Conference adjourned to meet with the Wheatville Branch at the call of the district president. B. C. Flint, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.—The Daughters of Zion of Southern California held a very pleasant session on September 9, 1909, during the reunion of the southern district. A number of papers were read, also a discussion on different topics was held, five minutes being allowed each topic. Reports were had from the Los Angeles and Newport locals. We hope to see this work taken up in the rest of the branches in the district during the coming year. Mrs. N. Carmichael, secretary pro tem.

Toronto District will convene at 10 a. m., October 23, in Toronto. All cordially welcome. H. Leeder, secretary.

London District will convene at London, Ontario, on Saturday, October 16 and 17, at 10 a. m. Delegates will be met by the billeting committee and located as wisdom shall direct.

We trust that the motive with every individual delegate will be spiritual, edifying, and instructive. P. H. Philippin, secretary.

Convention Notices.

London District Sunday school association will meet in convention, at London, Ontario, October 15, at 10 a. m. Ap- point your delegates and have names placed on certificates on proper form supplied each school if possible before Friday, the 10th. Frank Gray, secretary.

Convention will be held October 22, 1909, at Audubon, Min- nesota, the day preceding district conference. Hallie M. Gould, secretary, Clitherall, Minnesota.

Spring River District Sunday school association and the Religio will convene at Weir City, Kansas, October 22, 1909. Mabel C. Holsworth, secretary.

Far West District Religio convention will be held with the Mount Pleasant local, four miles north of Cameron, Missouri, October 22, 1909, at 10 a. m. Fannie L. Ehlers, secretary.

Notice of Release.

To whom it may concern: This is to certify that Elder James E. Kelley, who, at the General Conference of 1909, was assigned to the Western Canada Mission, has, owing to uncon- genial climatic conditions, been most honorably released from said particular mission, that he may seek a climate more suitable to his health. We most heartily recommend him as a minister worthy of confidence and suited to make a success of either city or rural missionary work.

Respectfully submitted,
R. C. RUSSELL,
U. W. GREENE,

Ministers in charge of Mission No. 3.

ARTHUR, ONTARIO, September 9, 1909.

Notice.

This is to notify all the secretaries of Sunday schools of the Saskatoon District to send their reports as soon as possible to Minnie Smith, Ribstone, Alberta.

Notice of Tent Work.

At our late district conference, I was appointed to select two others to act as a committee to collect funds and buy a tent suitable for work in the district. We hereby ask all the branches in the Northern District of California to col- lect funds to buy this tent and forward to me. We also ask those who have had experience in tent work to give us any information at their disposal, with reference to the best kind of tent, shape, size, quality of duck, and best place to buy, whether in California or in the East. We commend the zeal of the sisters of Stockton, a number of whom have taken upon themselves to earn one dollar each for the tent. One sister will earn hers at the washtub, one at the cannery, one by sewing, one by making doughnuts and selling them from house to house. One little girl earned fifty cents by selling Belgian hares for her papa. Some other children earned money by working in the cannery. We hope this zeal will continue throughout the district. "A word to the wise is sufficient." Your colaborer for Christ,

C. A. PARKIN,
For the Committee.

235 THIRD AVENUE, RICHMOND DISTRICT, SAN FRANCISCO.

Notice of Release.

To Whom it May Concern: This is to certify that N. C. Enge has been released from mission appointment.

AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of the Winnipeg District; Greeting: As you are all no doubt aware I am your servant as Bishop's agent, and I would hereby make an appeal to you, not only to urge you to do your duty to God in the matter of tithing, but also to ask your prayers in my behalf, that I may do my whole duty in this great work. We have been favored with a boun- tiful harvest; let us not forget the One to whom we are the most indebted.

God has laid down definite laws relative to what he requires of our holding and we must obey those laws or we are not honoring him. If each one of us does his duty in this matter there will be an abundance, so we should see to it that the good work is not held back by our negligence. Love is the fulfilling of the law; so let us each strive to love Him with all our hearts, and if we do, everything will be all right.

I will be pleased to hear from all at an early date, even if you can not send offering at once. Let me know your intentions and let us get acquainted and labor together in this grand latter-day work.

Your brother,
L. H. CARTER.

Died.

MILLER.—Roland Earl, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Miller, died at Lamoni, Iowa, September 23, 1909, aged 1 year and 15 days. The cause of the death was spinal disease and kidney trouble. Sermon by H. A. Stebbins, assisted by G. R. Wells.

MOORE.—On September 27, after an illness of seven weeks with pleurisy and other complications, Alexander Amos Moore, eldest son of Elder Samuel and Sr. Ellen Moore, of Mart- burg, Ontario, aged 23 years, 4 months, and 11 days. Brother Alexander was an exemplary young man, and by his death the Rostock Branch loses one of its main supports. Brother and Sister Moore feel their loss keenly, for they have lost a noble son. They have the sympathy of the community, but better still, they know the gospel of the Son of God, and have faith in its promises. Services conducted at the house, Elder Frederick Gregory officiating. Interment in Stratford cem- etery.

RALSTON.—At McClave, Bent County, Colorado, August 11, 1909, Eva Augusta, daughter of August and Carrie Ralston, aged 13 years 2 months, and 13 days. Was baptized by Elder J. F. Petre, May 1, 1905. She will be sadly missed in the home as she was the mainstay of an invalid mother. The funeral was one of the largest in the history of the neigh- borhood. Elder E. F. Shupe preached the sermon at the Enterprise Schoolhouse. Interment at Fairview Cemetery.

"The clouds may gather, mother,
And troubles fall like rain,
The sun will shine above them,
And all be bright again."

BERRY.—At Trinidad, Colorado, August 25, 1909, Elmer John, infant son of Hobart W. and Della Berry, aged 11 months and 4 days. Funeral from the house. Sermon by Elder E. F. Shupe. Interment in the family plot in Trinidad.

WATTS.—Sr. Mary Watts was born in Glossup, Derbyshire, England, November 25, 1835; became a member of the Reor- ganized Church May 9, 1885, at Fall River, Massachusetts. She remained faithful until her death, at Little Compton, Rhode Island, August 23, 1909. She leaves three children to mourn their loss, two sons and one daughter. Funeral services in charge of Elder William Anderson, sermon by Elder H. W. Howlett. Interment at Oak Grove Cemetery, Fall River, Massachusetts.

LONGFIELD.—Dr. Jesse Longfield was born at Sunbury, Northumberland County, Pennsylvania, September 4, 1836. When he was two years old his father moved to Trumbull County, Ohio, and eight years later to Wisconsin, where he was reared to manhood. He attended the public schools, Fort Atkins Academy, and Milton College, graduating from the latter in 1860. He began the study of medicine, privately, and whenever his earnings permitted would attend school. He graduated from Bennett Medical College, at Chicago, Illinois, in 1869. He practiced at Armington, Illinois, for a year, then came to Turney, Missouri, on May 10, 1870, where he died September 2, 1909. He united with the Reorganized Church July 10, 1869, and was known to us at Plano, Illinois. He was an honest, frank, fearless man in the defense of his faith, but never was very ostentatious or anxious to display what he knew. He was much appreciated in the society where he lived, and held the respect of the community at large. Funeral service conducted by Bishop George H. Hilliard.

VAN METER.—Mrs. Lizzie Van Meter, aged 21 years, 5 months, and 2 days, at Twin Creek, Idaho, September 8, 1909. She leaves to mourn, a father, mother, husband, three brothers, and two little sons. She was baptized on June 21, 1908, by her father, and confirmed a member of the church on the same day. She was the daughter of F. T. and Maggie Coats, and the wife of Jacob Van Meter. How sad to record the death of our dear ones; but what is our loss compared to paradise's gain. We thank God for the provisions he has made for the soul.

SUTTON.—Mrs. Anna Sutton departed this life September 22, 1909, at her home east of Iron Mills, Iowa. She was born at Nabark, Indiana, August 31, 1846, and when but a child came with her parents westward, and located north of Maquoketa. In 1864 she was married to William Sutton. To this union were born five children, three of whom survive her, George, Russell, and Walter. Her husband preceded her in death more than twenty-two years; John died in 1893, and Ollie in 1894. In 1888 she became a member of the church, and ever after remained true and loyal to the faith of this church. Funeral sermon was by Elder John Heide, and she was laid to rest beside her husband and children.

PROTHERO.—John, was born September 23, 1829, and died September 19, 1909, aged 69 years, 11 months, and 26 days. He was a native of Wales, and came to California in 1854. He was married to Charlotte Marlin in 1865, and to this union were born fourteen children, ten of whom are now living. He joined the church in 1864, at San Bernardino, California. Funeral sermon was by Elder T. W. Williams, at El Toro, California.

Why I Left the Ministry.

"As a minister I found that I could not be honest," says a former country pastor in Woman's Home Companion for October. "I could not be honest in business matters, I could not be honest morally. I could not be honest socially. Repeatedly I made the attempt. Repeatedly the attempt ended in disaster." After a long and bitter experience, he came to the conclusion that the small church owes four duties to its pastor. They are:

"1. Pay up. Turn in your contribution to the church treasury with the utmost promptness. Leave the treasurer no excuse for running your minister into debt.

"2. Speak out. When the church is about to choose a new pastor, raise the question immediately as to the stamp of preaching expected. Conservative or progressive, let it be settled then. Better a hot debate and the consequent hard feelings than a sham acquiescence that keeps things smooth for the time, and later subjects a minister to a process of doctrinal bullying that degrades his manhood. If subsequently there arise disagreements, see to it that they are met not by bringing pressure to bear sporadically upon the pastor, but by bringing pressure to bear, when necessary, upon his parishoners. By this I mean demanding that they reach common ground on which they are willing to stand consistently.

"3. Be considerate. Refuse to ruin your pastor's usefulness by heaping upon him a host of unnecessary tasks. Leave him time to fulfill his larger obligations honestly—time for solid, patient, conscientious preparation for the pulpit, time for the faithful shepherding of the flock.

"4. Be natural. The pose people assume toward a minister is a survival of a bygone time, and so is their insistence that he practice an artificial severity of life. The natural, instinctive attitude is that of candor in the one matter and of respect for his individual convictions in the other.

"Some day, when Christians have come to understand that only as these four simple rules are obeyed can a clergyman maintain his honesty, there will result a reformation that will make the preacher's calling what God means it to be—the noblest, the most inspiring, the most hallowed in all the world. And never again will a man write an account of how he left the ministry to save his soul!"

Why Have Men Sought the Pole?

The nations have never been so much impressed by any other geographical event as by the announcement that the North Pole has been attained. It has been a world-wide topic for the past month. The northern apex of the globe has been photographed and the men acclaimed as having unfurled their flags over it are the heroes of the day. It is a great event and the story of the conquest of the Pole will live in history; and yet not a vital human interest will be affected by it.

Times have changed. Scarcely a pulse in Europe beat faster when the Western Hemisphere was brought to light four centuries ago. News traveled at snail's pace then. Generations passed away while the New World, piecemeal, was coming into view. A century elapsed before the great fact dawned upon the minds of men that a vast redistribution of human enterprise was to be the potent sequence of a geographical discovery.

The race to-day wants every nook and corner of the earth to stand out in the light, both for the good we may gain from them and for the completion of our knowledge of the little planet we inhabit. Nothing less will satisfy human need and curiosity. The attainment of the Pole signifies that we can and will produce a map, some day, which will picture the whole world just as it is.

We read of this final triumph as the culmination of three centuries of striving to reach the North Pole. But the Pole was never sought, for itself, until the nineteenth century. Robert Thorne, Henry Hudson, and other old mariners searched the ice edge for openings to the north, not that they had the slightest interest in the Pole but because they imagined they might find a passage to China across it. The early whalers were concerned about the Pole only if they might find new whaling grounds there. Some of them made good northings, and two or three even declared that they had been to the Pole, but their stories will not dim the luster of the present achievement. The quest of the Pole as a distinct object of geographical discovery has been known only for ninety-two years, and it began when the British Admiralty commanded Captain Buchan, with two vessels, to reach the Pacific by crossing the North Pole. The British flag ever since has been floated by most of the leaders who have struggled and agonized and died in their almost superhuman efforts to reach the coveted goal. There was more significance in Peary's dispatch that he had nailed the Stars and Stripes to the Pole than appeared on the surface.—From "The North Pole at last," by Cyrus C. Adams, in the American Review of Reviews for October.

Exaggerating Trifles.

You can always take a man's measure by the way in which little annoyances and petty vexations affect him. If he exaggerates them, talks a great deal about them, spends valuable time fussing over them, you know that he is not a big-souled man.

The habit of making a fuss over a little thing, of exaggerating the importance of what, to great characters, would be but a trifling annoyance, is not only indicative of smallness and narrowness of nature, but is also demoralizing and weakening.

The really large man will not allow himself to be troubled by trifles. If he wants to go anywhere, he does not make a great ado because it rains, is hot, is muddy, or because he "does not feel like it." This would be too small, too picayune for the broad, large-minded character.

Some people are upset by the least obstruction thrown in their path. They "go all to pieces" over somebody's blunder—over a stenographer's mistake or a clerk's error. Large natures rise above such trifles.

Some men do splendidly when they have the encouragement of good business, the tonic of good times; but when business is dull and goods remain on the shelves unsold, or they have any little discord in their homes, they are all upset. They are like children; they need to be encouraged all the time, for they can not work under discouragement.

"I have seen men lose their temper and waste energy swearing at a knot in a shoestring, or something else just as insignificant. The foolish or ill-tempered have no range in their scale. Small, irritating things come to and 'tag' us all; but the only way to conquer them is simply to smile and 'pass them up.'"

Every one owes it to himself to live a real life, whether he is rich or poor; to be, and not to seem. He owes it to himself at least to be genuine.—Success.

A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

38-10 JOHN C. GRAINGER.

The church building edition of The Expositor, Cleveland, Ohio, the preacher's magazine, with its 104 pages, is the most attractive number yet published. It has 15 pages of apt sermon illustrations, 10 pages of church methods and finances, 8 pages of sermons and outlines, 14 pages of church plans and building information—one man telling how he saved $4,000 on his church building, another giving details of raising $16,000 for a new church on the bond plan. Even the technical information is made interesting. The Expositor is well worth its subscription price of $1.50 to any pastor. To any pastor planning to build a church, the October number is worth a year's subscription.

UTAH ELDERS ON LAMONI.

During last June sixteen elders of the Utah faction visited Lamoni. It took them four months to get out a satisfactory report of the occasion, but at last it came out in the Improvement Era for October. It could have been done quicker in the days when Brigham Young made his famous boast about having the biggest ever; but it would not have been done a bit better. This report is really an excellent piece of fine-screen, hand-etched, three-color work. The colors were blended in this way: The elders were green when they came to Lamoni; they were blue when they left; and there was a pronounced streak of yellow in the man who framed up the report. These are not the usual three colors, but it will do. We reprint the report in full, and for the benefit of those who were not present at the meetings we italicise the portions that are true:

The elders of the Northern States Mission have lately visited Lamoni, Iowa, headquarters of the Reorganized Church. They were sadly disappointed, after reading the literature of that church about Lamoni, their headquarters, to find it a village of 1,500 people. The mud was hub deep, and there was an old time town pump in a principal cross-street,—a signal of anything but progressiveness. [Many Utah towns have quite abandoned the town pump in favor of the Smoot drugstore.] Togo is the railway station, the population consisting of the agent and his wife, and Lamoni is three miles distant. [Now this shows what a Utah elder can do in his line when he tries. Lamoni is its own station, with four passenger trains daily. Togo is three miles distant and has no ticket office or agent, simply a man with a pie counter.] There are two hotels in Lamoni, but neither would do credit to a town half the size, in Utah, fifty years ago. The only hall in town was condemned as a fire trap, so the elders asked for the Reorganite meeting house, which seats about 1,200 people, and obtained it for four nights, June 14, 15, 16, and 18.

There were sixteen elders who enjoyed a most interesting and profitable week, which, however was one of great anxiety to Heman C. Smith and other leaders of the Reorganites who were kept anxious to know what was coming next—and they are not beginners as diplomats. [One statesman has defined diplomacy as "cunning and ornate lying."] Our elders were well posted, and acted as one man, thus beating them at every turn by good generalship. Heman C. tried to draw them away from the history of the Reorganite organization, and get them to answer questions, but the elders steadfastly delivered their message and carried out their plans. Written questions, however, were answered at the close of each meeting. Monday night one thousand people attended and heard the elders discuss the restoration of the gospel. On Tuesday more were present. The elders spoke on how people obtained misunderstanding of others, citing their own knowledge of the great work of the Latter-day Saints as learned from prejudiced men so full of hate that they lovingly hug a lie and tell it as the truth. At least seventy-five per cent of the hearers were in sympathy with what was said. One of the elders then spoke briefly on the misrepresentations that brought Johnston's army to Utah; and on the Mountain Meadow massacre, until they acknowledged that their view on these points did not do justice to such splendid-spirited men as they found our elders to be. On the questions of blood atonement and polygamy they were told that no man among us believes in these doctrines, according to their conception of them, and further, the Reorganites are not in a position to learn the truth about them. [We admit that much of it is kept covered.] The elders sang a quartet, "O My Father," by request of the aged people in the audience, many of whom wiped tears away when the song was finished, and many voices [two] cried, "Thank you, thank you." At the close of the meeting they said it was the same old spirit they felt in England, and the same sweet song. We learned later that those aged people were chided for requesting it.

On Wednesday night baptism for the dead and temple work were the topics treated, and they were forcibly presented [this was the night when Elder Willard said we would have the wool "clawed" from our eyes] and well received. Many of the members are growing restless, lest the ambition of their early membership should not be realized before they are called to meet their loved ones on the other side. Twelve questions were asked us, and the elders answered them in ten minutes on Friday night.

By this time Heman C. was very nervous and he occupied Thursday night in giving abuse, his general stock in trade. He did it so poorly that a number of his people told the elders they had never heard "Brother Heman C. so muffled in speech in his life, nor seen him when he had such a hard time to explain himself." One man said he could not find his books, let alone something to talk about. The contrast was so great in spirit that it did our cause good.

On Friday night the elders treated authority, not once mentioning the "Reorganization." They referred to some fair-weather Saints who had not the courage to follow the church in the hour of trial, but who stood behind, yielded to and curried favor with their enemies, and even joined them in misrepresenting the Saints. They referred to Marks, Gurley, and Briggs, and appealed to their reason concerning the uncertainty of such unstable characters to ordain a "Prophet."

The elders of the Reorganites seemed disturbed at our elders visiting the people in their homes.

"The majority of the people welcomed us," says the report written by one of our elders, "and many seemed overjoyed, begging us to come again. Some said they were growing tired of being bulldozed by a few men, [this is a good one,] chief among them being Heman C. Smith. It has been a practice to flag our gathering Saints, who have lingered by the way to make money, and tell them that, 'The Prophet of the Lord is Joseph Smith, and he lives in Iowa and not in Utah.' A number of such people who were deceived said they would gladly leave, if they could dispose of their property. It was reported that the authorities hinder people in selling their property. Some told us they still felt that they belonged to us, never having been baptized into any other church.

"The tracts distributed were Morgan's No. 2, 'Plan of Salvation,' and 'Baptism for the dead,' by Joseph F. Smith, jr., and 'Corner Stones of Reorganization,' we having first corrected the error on Z. H. Gurley. They admitted their own Church History was indefinite on this point from which we were led into error. We, however, acknowledge with thanks Brother Joseph F. jr.'s line calling attention to it. The points on Marks, Gurley, and Briggs from the Herald seemed to stagger them, and if these are answered it will be later. They did not approach them in their meetings nor in the last issue of the Herald.

"Some of their elders asked us about debate, so, just as their Sunday meeting was closing, we handed them a note saying if they wished a discussion we were prepared to name a committee to make arrangements. The stake president read the note to the audience without first reading it over. When he got part way through he hesitated but finally completed it. Heman C. Smith arose, pale as a sheet [those sixteen lamblike high school boys from Utah had us all terrorized (?)], said there was a standing challenge to debate in Lamoni on conditions that we would give them a counter debate in Salt Lake City, then sat down. Some of their elders were angry with this reply and thought it showed the white feathers. They thought Heman's reply ought to be reconsidered and ended with, 'who's afraid?' but Heman in his three nights seemed to have exhausted all his argument without knowing what we had.

"Our elders came away feeling well satisfied with results from beginning to end. Came away wonderfully strengthened in their testimony of the truth. Two elders were left there for awhile; for it certainly looks like many are disappointed in not finding the promised Prophet Joseph 'mighty and strong.' They seem to be waiting for a chance to repent and do their first works over. Some have never met any elders of the Church before.

"Elbert Smith's report in the Saints' Herald of our visit is a very tame criticism [this report is very wild] when we count the many who sought us out and told us how they had been deceived and beaten by coming to Lamoni. One old brother and wife (Stewart by name) who used to be employed by President Young said, 'Brother Brigham appeared to me seven years ago and said, 'Brother Stewart, you have lost by not staying with me. I don't know whether he meant financially or spiritually.' We suggested, 'both, my good brother, both.'

"Many other interesting things we learned about the waning influence of the organization, which we may report later."

INDIVIDUAL CUPS AT SACRAMENT.

We began preaching the gospel of the Son of God, together with the administration of the sacraments of the church, including the sacrament of the Lord's Supper as found stated in the Bible, New Testament Scriptures, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants. Since that time we have continued to preach and to administer and partake of the sacrament, wherever sacrament day has found us among the Saints. We have never known, either by observation or experience, a single instance in which physical harm from disease has ever come to an individual through the ordinance of baptism, whether such administration of the rite was had in ocean, lake, pond, running stream, or baptismal font. It would seem that the same divine wisdom that ordained and made valid the rite of baptism as an ordinance of admission to fellowship in the body of Christ, the church, had also so far sanctified the waters to be used according to the locality where baptism would be administered, that they should be blessed to that extent that no person, immersed in honesty of purpose and heart, should suffer any loss of health by disease, by the act of immersion as required in the rite of baptism.

In like manner we have for the same length of time administered the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, using bread and wine, and in some instances water instead of wine, and like observation and experience have shown us that in not a single instance have the seeds of disease ever been sown through the partaking of the bread and the contents of the cup in the fellowship meetings of the Saints. It would seem that the same Divine Providence which secures the devoted disciple bent upon obedience to the Lord's command, "Repent and be baptized," from any evil physical effect from immersion in water, such as is available wherever the church administers the rite, has also provided by the same mysterious providence security against the spread of disease in the common use of the plate and the cup among those found worthy to partake of the emblems used in the sacrament.

To our way of thinking, there is more danger of inhaling the microbes of disease from frequently overcrowded and overheated rooms in private and public buildings in which the Saints assemble and mingle indiscriminately together, when frequently the atmosphere becomes fetid with the exhaled breath of those thus crowded together, than there is in the fancied touch of the fingers on the plate or the lips to the cup.

Granted that there may be now and then an individual whose lips or beard may be tainted with the uncleanness of tobacco, some drug or chewing gum, the general rule among the Saints is that on the day appointed for the sacrament they go, individually and collectively, in cleanliness of body and of spirit as nearly as is possible from the conditions in which they are living, and may be said to be clean. We are of the opinion that the closest of scrutiny by the most pessimistic advocate of the single cup theory would not disclose a single instance of disease following the partaking of the sacrament originating from the use of the common cup. It seems to us that there would be almost as much reason for providing a separate air tube reaching to the outside atmosphere through which persons might breathe and avoid the contaminating, lurking, disease germs in the breath exhaled by individuals, bearing in their bodies the several diseases to which human beings are liable, who possibly may gather at times at the sacramental service.

Not long since we noted in a letter written in the HERALD what seemed to us to be a rather touching, though possibly a mirthful conclusion, to which the individual was led by an apparent dream or vision, or sudden illumination of mind, after being bothered by reading and thinking about the various articles which have appeared in the HERALD in favor of the individual cup system.

That solution was simply the word faith. We presume the application would be that those who desire to partake of the sacrament should go to the house of worship in cleanness of body and of mind, and partake of the emblems in prayerfulness and the exercise of faith toward God, without thinking about being contaminated from the touch of a neighbor's lips to the common cup. It is almost enough to make a strong conservative or an outright unbeliever to chuckle in his sleeve to think that would-be Christians, who are all looking forward to the time when human barriers between the faithful, preventing their full appreciation of and enjoyment of Christian association, should be so squeamish and fearful of being physically poisoned through the bread or the wine which commemorates common remembrance of the body, the church, of life, suffering, and death of the Lord of life and glory. It brings to mind a little story which we read a long time ago about a young gentleman and a young lady to whom the young gentleman was paying very devoted attention, visiting a restaurant where one of the dishes which they partook of as a refreshment was strawberries and cream. In the course of the feast of the luscious fruit, the young lady lifted from her dish one of the finest and largest berries and playfully offered it to her gentleman escort. As if disgusted at her want of womanly cleanness, he said, "Why, you have had the spoon between your lips, and now you offer the same to me. I am surprised at you." The young lady's reply to this peculiar objection was this: "I think, sir, you are too extremely fastidious. You refuse to eat a berry from the spoon which I may have had between my lips, but you would not hesitate to partake of a kiss from those same lips by pressing your lips upon mine." This was a charming rebuke. The young man's fastidiousness lost him the regard of the young lady. She measured in his act, not only his want of gallantry, but his selfishness as well.

What may have been the surroundings of the disciples at the Lord's Supper which was given in the Scriptures as our example, it must be clear to every reader and every thinker that at the time the thousands were fed and the fragments were taken up, it was a sort of an outdoor feast, and there was a great commingling of all classes, and there could have been no possible objection urged against the breaking of the bread and the passing of the fishes by the hands of the Lord and his disciples. To us who have grown gray in the service, and have seen so much of the communion of the Saints without any known instances where disease has been communicated, this controversy about the use of the common cup and the substituting of individual cups in the administration of the sacrament, seems childish, more the result of squeamishness, or of the sentiment, "Stand aside, I am holier than thou," than of the sentiment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Upon one occasion, in an argument held with a brother touching the having of separate cups and plates for the administration of the sacrament to the colored contingent among the Saints, against our objection to such a move he urged this argument: "Well, maybe you would like to sleep with a nigger!" To this we replied that this was no argument, that there were white brethren who ate at our table and sometimes slept in our bed, and we would walk from Plano to Sandwich to procure a place to sleep rather than to sleep with them. He wanted to know why we made this expression, and our reply was this: That a dirty white man was no more pleasant companion to sleep with than a clean black man, and that there was no necessity for our sleeping with either. All this had nothing to do with the administration of the Lord's Supper at which those who met were members of one common Lord and according to the Book of Mormon, in an association where there was neither bond nor free, black nor white, but all were one in the Lord. The idea being that at the common board of the Lord distinctions existing among men, giving rise to personal exclusiveness, were lost sight of upon the hypothesis as stated by Peter, "I perceive that God is no respecter of persons, and has made of one blood all the nations of the earth and has appointed the bounds of their habitation."

We are looking forward to the time when there shall be gathered together out of every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, those who obey the gospel and whose respective places in the great future world will be appointed of the Lord without relation to the prejudices existing in human environments, and where we may be the sheep of the common fold and one Lord shall be shepherd over them all. Why, then, should we urge unnecessary distinctions among us which can only result in final disunity of feeling?

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bishop E. L. Kelley and Elder Heman C. Smith visited Nauvoo during the past week and completed the purchase of the Nauvoo House. This old, historic building is now the property of the church,—purchase price, three thousand dollars. This is the house that is mentioned in Doctrine and Covenants. It was in course of construction when Joseph Smith was killed. Afterward it passed in some way into the hands of Major Bidamon and in course of time became the property of his son Edward, from whom the purchase was made.

The Western Wave, Western, Nebraska, comes out with an editorial defense of Bro. James Huff, chaplain of the Nebraska State Penitentiary. It seems that the Baptist State Association, in recent convention at Lincoln, passed resolutions in regard to Brother Huff and has asked the governor to "place a more suitable person in charge of this work." The Lincoln Star says that the attack of the Methodists and Baptists on Brother Huff has stirred up the convicts who have been listening to his teachings and they have prepared a statement of indorsement and that it was thought that every man in the institution would sign the paper. The Wave continues: "The governor will no doubt keep his head on straight and allow such resolutions to pass into the hot air channels from whence they emanate."

A few weeks ago the National Tribune, official paper of the Grand Army of the Republic, published an article entitled, "The land of fulfilled promise," which dealt with Utah and the Latter Day Saints. The whole article was filled with misrepresentation of Joseph Smith, the Seer, common error which has grown out of the unnatural and ungodly system in the mountains. In the last week's issue of the Tribune, two communications from members of our church were published in refutation of the mistakes. In another column we reproduce these letters for our readers.

The Straight Road

Beyond.

It seemeth such a little way to me
 Across to that strange country—the Beyond;
 And yet not strange, for it has grown to be
 The home of those of whom I am so fond;
 They make it seem familiar and most dear,
 As journeying friends bring distant regions near.

So close it lies that when my sight is clear
 I think I almost see the gleaming strand.
 I know I feel those who have gone from here
 Come near enough sometimes to touch my hand.
 I often think but for our veiled eyes
 We should find heaven right round about us lies.

I can not make it seem a day to dread
 When from this dear earth I shall journey out
 To that still dearer country of the dead,
 And join the lost ones so long dreamed about.
 I love this world, yet shall I love to go
 And meet the friends who wait for me, I know.

I never stand above a bier and see
 The seal of death set on some well-loved face
 But that I think, "One more to welcome me
 When I shall cross the intervening space,
 Between this land and that one 'over there';
 One more to make the strange Beyond seem fair."

And so for me there is no sting to death,
 And so the grave has lost its victory.
 It is but crossing—with a bated breath
 And white, set face—a little strip of sea,
 To find the loved ones waiting on the shore,
 More beautiful, more precious than before.
 —Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THE RESURRECTION.

What is meant by the expression "resurrection"?
 Scripturally, it has reference to the raising of our bodies from the grave.

It has been computed that over one hundred and forty billions of people have been born into the world since Adam's time, and that over one hundred and forty billions of people have died, and their bodies returned to Mother Earth. So that we scarcely know what clod of dirt was not at one time a fragment of some living soul.

Are all these to be raised from the dead and restored to life?

Yes; for Christ says in John 5: 28, 29, "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Paul said that "there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." (Acts 24: 15.) Again: "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive," etc., which proves that the resurrection will be universal. There is to be a time when the grave will cease to have a victory. (See 1 Corinthians 15: 54, 55.) As long as it holds in its grasp one single body of Adam's posterity, it can boast of victory.

Who was the first to rise from the dead?

Paul says Christ was to be the "first that should rise from the dead" (Acts 26: 23,); that he should be the "first-fruits of them that slept" (1 Corinthians 15: 20); that he should be "the first-born from the dead" (Colossians 1: 18); and John says that he should be the "first begotten of the dead" (Revelation 1: 5). It would be senseless to talk about my being the "first-born" or "first-begotten" of my father's family, if I were the only one that was born or begotten. The law of Moses provided for the offering of the first-fruits of their crops, flocks, etc. Paul, making use of the Mosaic usage, says Christ was the "first-fruits" of them that slept, meaning that he was the first of the great harvest of dead bodies to come to immortality. Others were raised before Jesus, such as Jairus' daughter, Lazarus, the widow's son, Dorcas, and others, but they were only restored to mortality and had to die again.

Were not some raised in the time of Jesus?

Yes. Matthew 27: 52, 53, tells us "that many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of their graves after his resurrection."

What kind of a body had Jesus after his resurrection?

He told his disciples he had a body of "flesh and bones." (Luke 24: 39.)

Did he take that body with him?

Yes, for Peter says his "flesh did not see corruption." He showed them the wounds in his hands and feet (see Luke 24), and when he returns he is to display the same wounds. (See Zechariah 13: 6.) After declaring that he had flesh and bones, and partaking of food in the presence of his disciples, he ascended in bodily form before them. (See Luke 24.)

Then is he to return with the same body?

Certainly. He is to exhibit the same wounds. He partook of food before his ascension, and when he returns he is to eat and drink with his disciples in his Father's kingdom. (See Matthew 26: 29; Luke 14: 15; 22: 16-19; Revelation 19: 9.)

How are we to be raised?

Like Jesus.

Are we to have bodies like him?

We are, John says, when he comes "we shall be like him." (1 John 3: 2.) Paul says he will "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his." (Philippians 3: 21.) Paul says we are to be in the "likeness of his resurrection." (Romans 6: 5.) David looked forward to the time when he would awake in the "likeness" of Jesus. (Psalm 17: 15.)

What about the passage which says that "flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God?"

That does not say that flesh and bones can not. Paul said, "Corruption can not inherit incorruption." When Paul said flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God, he was merely choosing another form of words to say: A mortal man can not inherit the kingdom of God. If it can be established that a body can not have blood without being mortal, and can have flesh and be immortal, that settles the question. Paul did not mean to shut out Christ; he knew that he had flesh and bones.

Job 19: 23-27. Job knew that he would see God in his flesh, when he should stand upon the earth in the latter day.

Ezekiel 37: 1-15. The whole house of Israel is to have a literal resurrection. The bones stand up, flesh comes upon them, skin covers them abroad, after which they are animated, made alive.

Isaiah 26: 19, 20. My dead body shall arise. The earth shall cast out her dead.

Psalm 16: 9. My flesh shall rest in hope.

Are we not to have spiritual bodies after the resurrection?

So we are. But what is meant by spiritual bodies? Do you think it means the spirit alone? That would dispense with the resurrection. If we are to possess nothing but our spirits in the next world, then there can be no resurrection at all, since it is a fact that we have our spirits before the resurrection takes place. We are in the disembodied spirit form before the resurrection takes place, and if our condition is in no sense different after the resurrection, then the resurrection has no meaning. Christ had a spiritual body after his resurrection; yet he had a body of flesh and bones. You can not avoid the doctrine of the literal resurrection. What do the graves open for, if nothing is to come out of them? We hold that our spirits without our bodies are not capable of celestial glory.

Are all to be raised at the same time?

No. Paul says "the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thessalonians 4: 14-18.)

When will those who are not dead in Christ rise—the rest of the dead?

John says, "The rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20: 4-6. A thousand years' reign of Christ on earth with his people is to intervene the two resurrections. During this time, Satan is to be bound, to be deprived of his liberty. When the thousand years have expired, and a short season, during which time Satan shall be loosed from his prison, then all who have been left in their graves shall come forth. The sea, death, and hell, all deliver up their dead. Death and hell are to be "cast into the lake of fire" done away with, destroyed, having accomplished their purpose? And there is to be "no more sea." Read Revelation 20 and 21.

Are we to understand that our resurrected bodies are to be identical with those that are placed in the tomb—that the same atoms which compose our bodies at death are to be brought forth from their grave?

We are not discussing in this treatise, the extent to which our resurrected bodies will be identical with the bodies that are put in the grave. We are advocating herein, and have proved, both that there will be a literal resurrection, and that we will have bodies of flesh and bones. A measure of identity, as also a literal resurrection, is made apparent in the following texts: Psalm 49:15—Souls to be redeemed from the grave. Hosea 13:14—Ransom thee from the grave. Romans 8:19-23—Redemption of our bodies. Romans 8:11—Quicken your mortal bodies. 1 Corinthians 15:35—Give to every seed his own body. Daniel 12:2—Many that sleep in the dust to awake. 1 Corinthians 15—"It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." "We shall be changed." 1 Samuel 2:6—Lord "bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up."

V. THE CHURCH ORGANIZED; WORLD CONDITIONS AT THAT TIME. BY CHRISTIANA SALYARDS, EDITOR OF THE "GOSPEL QUARTERLY."

GOD WITH US.

One of the most encouraging and inspirinig impressions that remains with the attentive reader who follows the account of the rise of the church in latter days arises from the realization that God was in the work, laboring with men to establish in the earth those proper conditions that shall bless humanity.

That God is ever at work in the affairs of men, quietly exercising the hand of power and slowly but surely bringing to pass his first designs, is recognized by some not numbered with us, and one has given beautiful expression to the thought that

"Behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,

We Latter Day Saints are wont to say something like this in the simpler words, "We are laborers together with God." How would our work move forward, were the realization deep in the hearts of all, so deep as to be the source of energetic consecration upon the part of each to that work which the Lord says he has "intrusted to all" and to which he calls us all, not only his ministry, but those of us who are in business, and those engaged in those occupations which bear the commoner name of work! How much more of peace would be in our lives, were we fully conscious that, not far distant from us, is God, "keeping watch above his own"!

In those early days, when the plates had been received by Joseph Smith, when it was necessary for the young man to be diligently concerned to keep them safe from wicked hands, when he was laboring under great difficulties to do the work of translating the ancient writings, he was given abundant reason to know that he was working together with God, and that the protection of heaven was over him, so long as he was faithful in his part of the work. This is true also of us, and the realization should bring us comfort and peace in times of difficulty.

Struggling with poverty, Joseph could not give to the work intrusted to him the time he desired to give it, and his wife, who wrote for him, could give but a small portion of her time from the cares that pressed upon her. Then Joseph prayed, asking the Lord to send him a scribe, and he was answered that only a few days would elapse before such help would come to him.

DAYS NEVER TO BE FORGOTTEN.

According to Lucy Smith's history, Samuel Smith and Oliver Cowdery were even then on the journey from Manchester, New York, where Joseph's parents resided and where Oliver had been teaching school and boarding in the Smith home, to Harmony, Pennsylvania, where Joseph was living upon a small farm which he had bought from his wife's father. Three days after Joseph's prayer for a scribe, they came to his house, and Oliver told him it had been impressed upon his mind that he should have the privilege of writing for him in the work of translating the plates he had received.

The young men sat and talked until late that night of the wonderful things that were transpiring in connection with the beginning of the work in which they were called to bear a leading part. How near the heavens must have been to them, and what earnest thoughts must have filled their hearts!

They set to work at once upon the translation of the records. This was in April of 1829. Oliver Cowdery refers to that time as "days never to be forgotten," when he sat and wrote the words dictated to him by his companion who translated with the Urim and Thummim the history, or record, called the Book of Mormon. He says the utmost gratitude of his bosom was awakened as he sat under the sound of a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven.

THE AARONIC PRIESTHOOD RECEIVED; FIRST BAPTISM.

As they thus pursued their work, they found mention of baptism for the remission of sins, and, not understanding to their satisfaction, they went into the woods on a certain day in May to pray and to inquire of the Lord concerning the matter. How simply their narrative reads here, where they tell us that, while they were praying, a messenger descended from heaven in a cloud of light, and, laying his hands upon them, ordained them to the Aaronic priesthood saying, "Upon you, my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion, for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth, until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness!"

This angel said his name was John, and that he was the one called John the Baptist in the New Testament. He directed Joseph and Oliver to baptize one another, Joseph first to baptize Oliver, and Oliver then to baptize Joseph. He told them the Aaronic priesthood which they had received did not authorize them to lay on hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, and said that, in due time, they should receive the Melchisedec priesthood, which holds that authority.

Perhaps we, to whom the principle of baptism for the remission of sins and the distinctions between the Aaronic and the Melchisedec priesthood are comparatively familiar, can not realize the impressiveness with which this instruction came to those two young men in the seclusion of the woods with an angel of God as their teacher. Oliver Cowdery tells us that they were surrounded with majestic beauty and glory and that their hearts were filled with joy and surprise as they bowed their knees before the messenger from heaven and received the holy priesthood under his hands. He says that no eloquence of time can clothe language in so interesting and sublime a manner as did the holy personage, and that this earth has not power to give the joy, to bestow the peace, or to comprehend the wisdom contained in each sentence as it was delivered by the power of the Holy Spirit.

As we read, there wells up within us the wish, tinged with regret, that we were treasuring up with deeper appreciation those precious things which God has intrusted to us, that we were teaching them with more diligence to our children, and that, in the hearts of our children, there were warmer love for the church and those things for which it stands.

In harmony with the instructions of the heavenly messenger, Joseph and Oliver baptized one another under the authority of that priesthood which had been bestowed upon them. The date of this event is given to us as May 15, 1829.

THE HOLY SPIRIT IS RECEIVED.

The narrative of Joseph Smith tells us at this juncture something very significant. He says that, after their baptism, they were filled with the Holy Ghost and that, as they continued their work, the scriptures were laid open to their understanding, so that the true meaning of difficult passages was revealed to them in a manner which they could not have attained previously. This is a part of the work the Holy Spirit does for those who receive it. It is the teacher sent from God to guide us in the ways of truth. We need it, because it opens to our understanding principles we can not comprehend in our own natural power. "The things of God no man knoweth, except he has the Spirit of God." How earnestly we should strive to obtain this teacher of truth! Without its teaching, no man can be prepared for the presence of God.

Joseph and Oliver were compelled to keep secret the fact of their having been baptized, on account of the spirit of bitter persecution that raged against them. The third person to be baptized was Samuel H. Smith, a young man of about twenty-one, a brother of Joseph next younger than himself. This baptism also was in the month of May.

Not long before this time Joseph had made the acquaintance of Mr. Peter Whitmer, of Fayette, Seneca County, New York, and, in the month of June, David Whitmer, a son of Peter Whitmer, came to the home of Joseph Smith with a two-horse wagon for the purpose of conveying Joseph and Oliver to the home of his father, that they might there continue their work undisturbed. Lucy Smith's narrative says that Joseph's wife remained at home to take charge of affairs in her husband's absence.

The people of the county in which Joseph Smith was now located were generally friendly and were disposed to inquire into the truth of the strange rumors that began to be noised abroad. Many opened their houses for meetings for the purpose of instruction and explanation. Many seemed desirous of finding out the truth and were willing to listen and to be obedient when they had settled in their own minds what was required of them. Before the month of June had closed, Hyrum Smith, a brother of Joseph, five years older than himself, David Whitmer, and Peter Whitmer, jr., were baptized in Seneca Lake, and, from this time on many became believers of the restored gospel and were baptized.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery remained in the home of Peter Whitmer until the work of translation was finished and the copyright secured. Immediately upon the completion of the work, Joseph sent a messenger to his father and mother with the good news and with a request to them to visit him. The next morning they set out, accompanied by Martin Harris, and before sunset they were with Joseph and Oliver at Mr. Whitmer's. That evening was a joyful one, spent in reading the manuscript in which all were so deeply interested.

THE THREE WITNESSES.

While the work of translation was in progress, it had been noted by those doing the work that it had been decreed by the Lord that, when the book should come forth, its genuineness should be attested by three witnesses who should be permitted to see the plates from which it was translated. Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and Martin Harris desired to be those three witnesses, and Joseph Smith inquired through the Urim and Thummim concerning the matter. In the answer that was given, it was promised that they should be permitted to view the plates, if they would rely on the Lord with full purpose of heart.

It was while the parents of Joseph were visiting him at Mr. Whitmer's that those three men had the wonderful experience that qualified them to testify to the close of their individual lives that the Book of Mormon was divinely given to the world and to declare with words of soberness that an angel of God came down from heaven, laid before their eyes the plates from which it was translated, and assured them that the translation was correct. It was in the retirement of the woods where they had gone for prayer that this marvelous revelation was granted them.

Joseph's mother tells in her history of the great relief experienced by her son when these three witnesses were granted to share with him the burden of bearing testimony to the world of the divinity of the Book of Mormon. She also says of the three witnesses that no tongue could express the joy of their hearts and the greatness of the things which they had both seen and heard. According to her narrative, it was after the return of herself, her husband, and Martin Harris to their homes, and when Joseph, Oliver, and the Whitmers had come to visit them that the plates were shown to those eight witnesses whose testimony, with that of the three special witnesses, is recorded in the Book of Mormon. It appears from her story that these eight witnesses saw the plates but not the personage who delivered them to Joseph and who received them again from his hands.

THE CHURCH ORGANIZED.

While still engaged in the work of translation, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery became very anxious to have that promise realized which had been made to them by the angel who conferred upon them the Aaronic priesthood, which promise was that they should receive the Melchisedec priesthood which holds the authority for the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. For some time the young men made the matter a subject of prayer, and, finally, that which they had so greatly desired was bestowed upon them; for the command came to them from heaven that Joseph should ordain Oliver to be an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ, and then Oliver should ordain Joseph to the same office. They were directed, however, to defer this ordination until such a time as it was practicable to have their baptized brethren assembled together, that they might make known whether they sanctioned this ordination of Joseph and Oliver. Thus early did the Lord indicate that broad principle of justice and liberty which later was couched in the command that all things shall be done by common consent in the church.

The Lord continued to give instruction and direction preparatory to the organization of his church at the same time that the work of translation was being carried on. Commandments were given concerning the manner of baptism, concerning the duties of elders, priests, teachers, deacons, and members of the church, concerning the administration of the sacrament, the manner of dealing with transgressing members, the holding of conferences, the removal of members from one branch of the church to another, etc.

The work of translation drew to a close, and the Book of Mormon was printed in the spring of 1830. According to the statement of the man who claims to have set the type for it, the book was all printed by March, 1830. Very soon after, the church was organized.

On Tuesday, the 6th day of April, 1830, in the house of Mr. Whitmer, with six members present, the organization was affected. The meeting was opened with solemn prayer and then the question was asked of those present if they were satisfied to be organized as a church. The vote of consent was unanimous. Then that which had before been directed was attended to as a necessary step, Joseph ordaining Oliver an elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and Oliver afterwards ordaining Joseph to the office of elder. The sacrament was then administered for the first time in the church, and each individual member present received the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost and in confirmation of his membership in the Church of Jesus Christ.

We pause here to note that, though witnesses to the world of the divinity of the Book of Mormon, Martin Harris and Joseph Smith, sr., had not yet been baptized. According to Lucy Smith's testimony, those two men were baptized on the same day on which the church was organized. We have observed that, on that day, Joseph and Oliver were ordained elders of the church. Other men were also called and ordained to different offices of the priesthood, as the Spirit of God made manifest and, after a happy time of rejoicing in the blessings of the Holy Spirit, the meeting, so small in numbers, but so great and far-reaching in its results, was dismissed.

The work was now earnestly prosecuted and many were brought into the church, notwithstanding the opposition of unbelievers which, in many instances, was violent in its character. God was with his little flock, "keeping watch above his own," and they were cheered, comforted, and made strong for that which was given them to do.

THE FIRST CONFERENCE.

On the 1st day of June, 1830, the first conference of the church was held. About thirty members were present besides many others who were in sympathy, either believers, or anxious to learn the claims of the church.

The services of the day were opened with singing and prayer. Then the sacrament was administered, some who had been baptized were confirmed, others were ordained to various offices of the priesthood, and a joyful time was had in the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the little band. Joseph Smith says of that day that its events combined to create within them sensations of rapturous gratitude and to inspire them with fresh zeal and energy in the cause of truth.

WORLD CONDITIONS AT THAT TIME.

To study the history of the church without reference to the surrounding conditions is to obtain only a partial knowledge of God's work, and the result of such partial knowledge may be failure to see that the Father of all men is working with all his children and for the advancement of all.

If certain men have been chosen instruments in giving to the world spiritual light received by direct revelation, other men have been chosen to bear a part in the world's intellectual and moral reforms, and other men have been leaders in material developments that are as stepping stones in the way of progress leading up to higher things. The material, the intellectual, the moral, the spiritual, all have their part in the nature of man, and all must be brought to perfection.

All is being brought into that condition, and he who looks upon the world's work and advancement should realize that, from the beginning, God has been working with men and that his efforts have not returned to him void. When we regard, it may be with wonder, the achievements we attribute to men, we may well exclaim in our hearts, "What hath God wrought!" for he who, at Sinai, filled men and women "with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work," has never ceased to reward the efforts of those who seek to improve. God has worked with men in the industrial world, in the intellectual world, in the political world, as well as in the spiritual world.

In that time when the church was organized, a strong tide of emigration was setting toward the rising West. From New York and other eastern States, travel was toward Ohio, then a western State. From Kentucky, some were pushing into Indiana and Illinois, and, from South Carolina and Georgia, the move was toward Alabama.

In those years when God was training the boy of New York for his future work as the head of his church, another boy, a few years younger, was swinging his ax in the forests of Kentucky and Indiana. He, too, was under training for service in another place. In an important period, he was destined to be the head of the nation under whose free flag the church was established.

In the year in which the church was organized, this boy, grown tall and strong and hardy, stalked two hundred miles through mud and water, driving a four-ox team. The occasion was the removal of his father's family to Illinois, where the young man gained his reputation as a rail splitter.

Joseph Smith, servant of the Lord, was then twenty-five years old, and Abraham Lincoln, servant of the Lord also, was twenty-one. Each served in his place and did that which he was raised up to do. When that work was finished, each died a martyr's death at the hands of lawless men, the one was mourned and is still loved by a church; the other was mourned and is still loved by a nation.

In the early times of slow travel, the minds of men were exercised to find ways to shorten distance, to lighten burdens, to improve conditions; and God worked with them, giving them understanding and rewarding their efforts to rise into better conditions.

In those years when God was preparing a man to bring forth the word of his gospel, scores of other men with brawny arms were cutting down forests, blasting rocks, building embankments and aqueducts and locks of solid masonry to make the western lands easier of access from the East. They were at work upon a very important public improvement, the opening of the Erie Canal, a project much ridiculed, however, by many before its accomplishment proved its practicability and the astuteness of its promoter.

Eight years of toil were necessary, but it was toil that helped to open up the new West. Lucy Smith tells us in her history of traveling to Kirtland via this canal in company with other Saints who were gathering to the church in 1830. The canal was opened in 1825. Before it was opened, goods, wares, merchandise going west from Albany to Buffalo were carried at a cost of one hundred and twenty dollars per ton. After it was opened, it cost but fourteen dollars per ton to carry freight between the same places. Travel also was made easier than before.

In 1828, ground was broken for the first passenger railroad in America. Charles Carrol, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, a man over ninety years of age, struck the first spade into the ground saying, "I consider this among the most important acts of my life, second only to the signing of the Declaration of Independence, if second even to that." It was, indeed, but another act leading to independence and freedom, for all true progress tends toward that end.

In 1830, the first locomotive ran over this road, the first trip being only about thirteen miles, from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills. The trip was made in somewhat less than an hour. On the return trip it had a race with a spirited gray horse belonging to a Baltimore stagecoach. "The gray horse did its best; the puffing, wheezing little locomotive did its best likewise. Finally, steam conquered, and a great shout of victory went up from the dozen passengers of the wagon (which the locomotive drew)." That shout meant that the days of stagecoaches were numbered. Since that time, roads of steel have opened up this vast country in all directions, and from ocean to ocean the land is inhabited by the free people of a mighty nation. And we say again, "What hath God wrought!"

In the ears of Latter Day Saints, reference to the "poor, unlearned young man" invariably means Joseph Smith; but James Russell Lowell once wrote a poem which begins:

"In a small chamber, friendless and unseen, Toiled o'er his types one poor, unlearned young man."

And this poor, unlearned young man was not Joseph Smith, but William Lloyd Garrison. At the same time when Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were toiling in obscurity to transcribe to manuscript copy the contents of the Book of Mormon, this other young man, "friendless and unseen," was toiling to give the world another publication, and, on New Year's Day of 1831, he gave out from Boston his first number of The Liberator, which was devoted to the abolition of slavery. He was not only the publisher of his paper, but he was the sole writer for it, and he had to be his own printer and carrier.

He suffered extreme opposition, being at one time dragged through the streets of Boston by a howling mob. In his intense earnestness in advocating the freedom of the negro, he went to the extreme of insisting that it should be done, even if it broke up the Union. This was one cause of the violent opposition to him, of which he said that he found the prejudice of northern men harder to deal with than that of slaveholders. Yet, because his heart loved humanity, this young man became a strong influence in the abolition of the great evil of slavery. He suffered violence, imprisonment, contempt, and false accusations, but he gave himself unreservedly to the cause of oppressed men, and he did good.

His extreme position, that the slaves should be freed, Union or no Union, was opposed in the great drama by other men of equal nobility and calmer judgment who saw the necessity of preserving the Union of the States, and so we find Daniel Webster, with his commanding eloquence, impressing upon the American people "the inestimable value and sacredness of the Union."

1830 to 1833 is given us as the time when he lifted his voice thus eloquently for the preservation of the Union, and, when we open our Doctrine and Covenants, we find it was in this same period that the Lord said to Joseph Smith that he had established the Constitution of this land by the hands of wise men whom he had raised up for this very purpose, that it should be maintained for the rights and protection of all flesh, and that it was not right that any man should be in bondage to another.

How plainly evident it is that God has his servants in honest-hearted men outside of the church as well as in it! The men of the church have a specific work, but they have not the whole work of the world's advancement. Great hearts and great minds are at work out in the world and under the directing hand of God. They are laboring together with God to bring to pass his purposes.

In that period which we are particularly considering, that time when Joseph Smith, as a servant of the Lord, was bringing forth the Book of Mormon and organizing the church, there came from England a man named Robert Owen who sought to introduce some social reforms. One historian makes this statement concerning the views of Mr. Owen: "He held that there should be an absolute social equality, and that no matter what kind of work a man did, whether skilled or unskilled, it should be considered just as valuable as the work of any other man."

In England, Mr. Owen was a mill owner and had adopted the policy of expending a large portion of his profits upon his workpeople. He opened a school for educating them and set up a coöperative store on the primitive plan of buying goods at wholesale prices and selling to his workpeople at cost.

His American experiments were a failure, "owing to a combination of circumstances and facts," says a recent biographer, and that failure impaired his influence in England. Unfortunately, also, he later accepted modern spiritualism. It is conceded, however, by prominent students that Robert Owen was "in a large way one of the promoting spirits of the coöperative movement which was later started at Rochdale and which has grown to be one of the greatest economic advance movements of our times."

It seems to us that when Robert Owen looked below the surface and perceived that the honest work of one man is equal to the honest work of any other and that there should be an absolute social equality among men, he saw what the Lord said in so many words to the chosen prophet of his church, and it is to be noted that Mr. Owen was making his efforts to bring to pass such conditions among men at the same time when the Lord was saying these things to Joseph Smith. That Robert Owen failed in a measure and that the church as yet has made little progress toward the ideal social condition, is no proof that the principle of social equality is not the correct one. It simply proves that men are sometimes slow to receive that which is true and altogether right.

GOD IS NOT FAR FROM ANY ONE OF US.

We have touched upon a few of the important phases of the world's work in that time when the Book of Mormon was brought forth and when the church was organized. Much more is worthy of being considered in connection with that great event, but even the little glimpse we have taken into the condition of the church and its surroundings reveals to us that God is supervising the world, not the church only, and that his servants are at work in all the various lines of human endeavor that lead men upward, that make life freer and happier.

God is nearer to the world than men think. The dimming veil is between us and hides from us his glory, but he is not far from us. He is standing just within the shadow, keeping watch over his own.

GENTILES VERSUS ISRAEL.

I call attention to the words of Jesus as found recorded in Luke 21:24, the last clause in the verse: "Until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Do the Gentiles understand the startling import of this declaration made by the Savior?

The angel Gabriel told Daniel there was a specified time determined upon Israel (Daniel 9:21-24). At the end of that time the Jews had crucified the Christ, and rejected his doctrine, the everlasting covenant, and the natural branches of the tame olive tree, the Jews, because of unbelief, were broken off, and the wild olive branches, (Gentiles) grafted in (Romans 11:17-20). How were they grafted in?

By obedience to the principles of the doctrine of Christ (Hebrews 6:1, 2).

Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles, in his epistle to the Galatians, 3:27-29, says: "For as many of you [Gentiles] as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." In this way were the Gentiles grafted in, and the Church of Jesus Christ established among the Gentiles. The church was to be a light to the world, and revelation, the Lord revealing his will to the church, was the light to the church; but when the Gentiles became unfaithful to their trust, and broke the everlasting covenant (by perverting the gospel of Christ, Galatians 1:6-8), revelation ceased, and the darkness spoken of by the Savior, came upon the church. He that walketh in darkness (without divine light, revelation,) knoweth not whither he goeth. (John 12:35.)

The Gentiles have had the writings of the apostles, the New Testament, it is true, but do they understand its truths? Have they obeyed its precepts? I wish to call attention, briefly, to some of the things revealed to John on Patmos as they have important bearing upon this subject. Revelation 12: "And there appeared a great wonder in heaven; a woman clothed with the sun." A woman is a symbol of a church, a harlot is a symbol of a corrupt church. The last verse shows this woman to be the church of Jesus Christ, and in verses 6 and 14 it says the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, and she was to remain there a specified length of time. When this time ended, it was shown to John, an angel would fly in the midst of heaven having the everlasting gospel (the covenant) to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Surely another dispensation. To Jew and Gentile, all that dwell upon the earth. But to the Gentile first, then to Israel. In the Savior's time it was to the Jew first, then to the Gentiles. In Revelation 17 an angel said unto John, "Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore that sitteth upon many waters. This woman, not clothed with the glory of the sun, but arrayed in purple and scarlet color and decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, and upon her forehead was a name written, "Mystery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth." This Babylon the great does not comprise the whole wicked world, but is composed of professed worshippers of God, mother and daughters, the entire corrupt Gentile church. This can be clearly seen as verse 15 says in explanation that "the waters which thou sawest, where the whore sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." The inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of their fornication. (Verse 2.) There is but one thing this can refer to: false doctrines, corrupted doctrine of Christ, and with the wine of her false doctrine, has intoxicated the nations. The corruption of the ordinance of baptism, from the divinely authorized immersion for the remission of sins, to sprinkling, or pouring, as an outward sign of inward grace, nonessential, etc. Creeds are as discordant as the languages of those who were dispersed at the tower of Babel,—a most appropriate designation of the Gentile confusion, Babylon the great.

Another angel "cried mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen."—Revelation 18:2. This fall of Babylon is a moral fall and denotes her rejection as a religious body or people by the Lord, as we see by reading the fourth verse where the cry is made, "Come out of her, my people," after the announcement that she has fallen, "And be not partakers of her sins." Her fall had taken place; but she still existed to sin against God.

This condition of the Gentiles was foretold by Paul in 2 Timothy 3:1-8. Also: "For the time will come when they [the Gentiles] will not endure sound doctrine [the doctrine of Christ]; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."—Timothy 4:3, 4. This is the condition of the Gentiles in the last days, when the everlasting gospel is again sent to earth, (Revelation 14:6,) and the Gentiles reject it as did the Jews in the Savior's time, and thus they have fallen by their rejection of the restored gospel.

Paul, the apostle of the Gentiles, says in Romans 11:24, 25:

For if thou wert cut out of the olive tree, which is wild by nature, and wert grafted contrary to nature into a good olive tree; how much more shall these, which be the natural branches, be grafted into their own olive tree! For I would not, brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits, that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in.

Have the times of the Gentiles been fulfilled? We find them indifferent, or blinded by prejudice, they will not hear, therefore do not see and understand that there has been another gospel dispensation ushered in, though the Scriptures plainly testify of it. They mistake a pious appearance for true religion, and barter their souls on the altar of popularity, blindly follow blind leaders who teach for hire the precepts of men. What are the results? Jesus said to the Jews, when they rejected him and his message of love, "Therefore say I unto you, the kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof."—Matthew 21:43. Again, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."—Matthew 23:38. When the Gentiles reject the everlasting gospel restored to earth by the angel (Revelation 14:6) then their house shall be left unto them desolate; for we read (Revelation 18:2) that the angel cried "mightily with a strong voice, saying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." The wild olive branches would be cut off (the Gentiles) and the natural branches grafted in (Israel), when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in (Romans 11). Moses foretold this time to Israel in Deuteronomy 4:30, 31:

When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto his voice; (for the Lord thy God is a merciful God;) he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers which he swore unto them.

The descendants of Ephraim, the son of Joseph, were to be the first of Israel, to be grafted into their own olive tree, in this last dispensation of the last days; for the Lord said in Jeremiah 31:9: "I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born," the first to be obedient to the voice of the Lord, to obey the everlasting covenant, the gospel of Christ. Again, the Lord said of the children of Ephraim in Zechariah 10:9: "And I will sow them among the people [the Gentiles]: and they [Ephraim] shall remember me in far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again." "I will hiss for them [Ephraim], and gather them: for I have redeemed them."—Verse 8. "And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph."—Verse 6.

There was a record written for the house of Judah, and another record written for the house of Joseph, (Ezekiel 37:16-21,) and the Lord said; "Behold, I will take the stick [record] of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick [record] of Judah, . . . and the sticks whereon thou writest shall be in thine hand before their eyes." Surely, the Lord had a great purpose in joining these records together, to be placed before the eyes of Israel; for the next verse says he will then gather Israel and bring them into their own land.

Now some things written in this stick of Joseph I wish to call attention to:

Now these things are written unto the remnant of the house of Jacob; . . . And behold they shall go unto the unbelieving of the Jews; and for this intent shall they go, that they may be persuaded that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.—Book of Mormon, p. 699, last edition.

For behold, thus saith the Lord, I will liken thee, O house of Israel, like unto a tame olive tree, which a man took and nourished in his vineyard: and it grew, and waxed old, and began to decay. . . . And it came to pass that the master of the vineyard saw it, and said unto his servant, It grieveth me that I should lose this tree; wherefore, go and pluck the branches from a wild olive tree, and bring them hither unto me; and we will pluck off those main branches and we will cast them into the fire. . . . And the lord of the vineyard hid four of the tender branches of the tame olive tree in the nethermost parts of his vineyard.—Jacob 3.

This represents some of Israel as being hid, that the people of the world knew nothing of, and some of the decendants of Manasseh were of these branches, and decendants of Ephraim another. Lehi and his sons and their families, decendants of Manasseh, (Book of Alma 8) the first-born or Joseph, came to America 600 B. C. Decendants of Ephraim, Joseph's second son, mixed among the Gentiles, came to America when the Gentiles came. We read again, in 1 Nephi 4:

And now, the thing which our Father meaneth concerning the grafting in of the natural branches through the fullness of the Gentiles, is, that in the latter days, when our seed shall have dwindled in unbelief, yea, for the space of many years and many generations, after the Messiah shall be manifested in body unto the children of men, then shall the fullness of the gospel of the Messiah come unto the Gentiles, and from the Gentiles unto the remnant of our seed [Israel]. And at that day shall they know they are of the house of Israel.

Wherefore, our Father hath not spoken of our seed alone, but of all the house of Israel, pointing to the covenant which should be fulfilled in the latter days. The children of Ephraim, the first-born of the Lord, the first of Israel to be grafted in, by obedience to the gospel, called out from among the Gentiles as in Revelation 18: 4: "Come out of her, my people." Why was the stick of Joseph put into the hand of Ephraim by the Lord? I wish to read in the stick of Joseph (1 Nephi 4):

Wherefore, they shall come to the knowledge of their Redeemer, and the very points of his doctrine that they may know how to come unto him and be saved; then at that day will they . . . not receive the strength and nourishment from the true vine.

They shall be grafted in, being a natural branch of the olive tree, into the true olive tree.

Surely a marvelous work and a wonder! (Isaiah 29: 13, 14.)

OF GENERAL INTEREST

MASTODON BONES IN IOWA.

BONES OF MASTODONS, FOUND IN WESTERN IOWA.

There seems to be a large amount of misapprehension in the public mind, just now, relative to certain fossil bones which recently have come to light in western Iowa. Attention has been directed to these finds through the work of the Iowa geological survey as it was prosecuted in Harrison and Monona counties; but the survey disclaims any responsibility for the strangely distorted and ludicrous notions now current in the press of the State concerning the significance and zoölogical relations of the animals represented in the fossil collections.

In the first place, none of these fossil animals are new to science, although it is true that some of them have not heretofore been found in Iowa. In the second place, there are no "gigantic creatures partly resembling horses and partly elephants unlike any heretofore discovered." The horses are true horses, and the elephants are true elephants, and all of them have been heretofore discovered.

The plain facts are that throughout Iowa, especially in the southwest, there are great beds of sand and gravel lying between two glacial deposits and representing a long interglacial interval of mild climate. During this interval areas of luxuriant forests alternated with grassy plains over the region drained by the Missouri River. At the same time there ranged through the forests or roamed in herds over the plains a number of large herbivorous mammals, among which we find the imperial elephant, the southern mammoth, the mastodon, at least one camel, three species of true horses, two of the gigantic sloths—the mylodon and the megalonyx, a large elk-like stag, an undetermined bison and other animals of which the remains are too fragmentary for identification.

These animals sometimes occupied the low flood plains along the swollen streams of the time, and their skeletons became embedded in the torrential alluvial deposits.

The interval during which the events above noted took place has been called the Aftonian. Aftonian forests, soils, peat beds, stream deposits, with all their included animal remains, were covered with a second mantle of drift brought by a second great ice sheet coming from the north. Modern drainage has cut deep valleys in the accumulations made by Aftonian streams and Kansan glaciers and has reexposed the ancient sands and gravels. These gravels are worked extensively in connection with recently developed cement industries, and bones and teeth of the Aftonian mammals are found just where they were buried during the Aftonian interval.

The horses, elephants, camels, sloths, stags, and bisons are not new to American geology, but this is the first time that this particular assemblage of mammals has been recognized in Iowa.

The one thing that may be claimed for Iowa science is that this fauna, representatives of which have heretofore been found at widely scattered localities, is now, for the first time, referred to a definite geological horizon, to the Aftonian interglacial interval.

The age of geological times and events can only be expressed relatively. It can be said that the Aftonian is old as compared with some things in this world; it is very young as compared with others; just how old it is, if reckoned in the ordinary units by which men measure time, no well-informed person would venture to say. The 2,000,000 years set down in some of the published accounts is certainly an excessively poor guess. Using the best available data as a basis of calculation, it may be said that the age of the Aftonian should fall somewhere between 100,000 and 200,000 years; but the possible error in all such estimates suggests the desirability of accepting them with some degree of caution.

The geological survey is interested in other bone-bearing beds of Harrison and Monona counties, which are much younger than the Aftonian. Remains of the buffalo, the deer, the beaver, and other modern types of animals have been found at many localities, and under conditions which reveal the following succession of events:

1. The valleys of the smaller streams draining the uplands were cut to grade and were well broadened out at some time in the past, possibly within the last few hundred years. The country was occupied by the buffalo and the other animals constituting the fauna of Iowa just before the advent of the white man. Beaver dams were built across the small valleys, ponding back the waters and producing broad, shallow marshes. Buffalo and other hoofed animals mired in the beaver marshes, and their skeletons were preserved in the soft, slimy muck.

2. The phase (1) just described was brought to an end by some change of grade in the Missouri River, which caused the lateral valleys to fill to a depth of twenty feet or more with the silt washed down from the uplands. How long this second phase of equilibrium lasted—whether hundreds or thousands of years—no one can tell. Graded valleys maintain their status until some change disturbs the perfect adjustment.

3. Within the last thirty years a new change in the grade of the master stream has led to a scouring of the lateral valleys, and steep-sided gulches have been cut in the filling of the second phase to depths ranging from fifteen to thirty feet. The old beaver dams and mired skeletons of phase (1) are reexposed. The finding of these skeletons, including bones of the buffalo, has been widely chronicled in the press of the State.

All of these finds have large scientific significance. It would be a calamity to science if these animal remains, whether older or younger, were lost; it would be little less of a calamity if the fossils were to be scattered among mere curio collections in Iowa or elsewhere. It is to be hoped that all such material may be brought together at one place where it may be carefully studied and preserved, to the end that we, in time, may know in detail the geological history of the highly favored commonwealth in which it is the pride of every Iowan to have his home.

It is gratifying to record the fact that the owners of the lands and gravel pits become enthusiastic volunteer assistants on the Iowa geological survey.—Samuel Calvin, head of department of geology, State University, in Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa, August 1, 1909.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Dear Brother: I notice in a recent number of the HERALD Walter Malone's poem, "Opportunity"; but to my mind you omit the finest verses in the poem as I have it. In full it is as follows:

"They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in;
For every day I stand outside your door
And bid you wake, and rise to fight and win.

"Wail not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day—
At sunrise every soul is born again!

"Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blighted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

"Art thou a mourner? Rouse thee from thy spell;
Art thou a sinner? Sins may be forgiven;
Each morning gives thee wings to flee from hell,
Each night a star to guide thy feet to heaven.

"Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,
To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,
But never bind a moment yet to come.

"Though deep in mire, wring not your hand and weep;
I lend my arm to all who say, 'I can!'
No shamefaced outcast ever sank so deep
But yet might rise and be again a man."

Yours,
H. O. SMITH.

Wherein Was Moses' Greatness?

Moses—born a slave, condemned before birth to death, hidden by his mother, found and adopted by the daughter of Pharaoh, brought up in the family of the king, educated in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, yet never forgetting his own people; slaying an Egyptian who was wronging one, then a fugitive from Egypt, sojourning forty years in the land of Midian, summoned by a voice from heaven to return to Egypt and deliver his brethren from slavery, accomplishing their deliverance through wonderful manifestations of miraculous power, leading and ruling them for forty years in a wilderness journey to the borders of Canaan, forbidden by the Almighty to enter this, the promised home of the descendants of Abraham, but permitted from Pisgah's summit to gaze upon it, then buried by unseen hands in an unknown grave—this man looms up a gigantic figure of early Jewish history. He not only assumed power and ruled a race for forty years; he also framed a body of laws which has challenged the admiration of the world, and placed him among the great lawgivers of earth.

To sustain his right to this place we are not called upon to measure his code by those of later time, nor to prove its adaptability to other races and other conditions. The great merit of a statute is that it answers the existing needs of the people for whom it is enacted, that its effect is elevating, and that it is capable of present enforcement. That his laws do not in all cases respond to our notions, either ethical or political, does not necessarily belittle him as a lawgiver, for laws which we require and enforce, if promulgated by him, might have been persistently and universally ignored. A dead-letter statute is a mistake.

In determining his greatness as a lawgiver we must, therefore, consider the conditions of the people for whom he framed his laws. They were a people just emancipated—and we know something of the conditions and capacity of a race coming out from slavery. It was the part of the statesmanship to enact laws which the recently emancipated Israelites would obey, and at the same time laws which pointed upward rather than downward, and which the more fully they were obeyed, the higher would be the resultant civilization.

The greatness of Moses as a lawgiver appears in the fact that his laws, whether original or selected, are as a whole so full of merit.

The merit of these laws is attested by the fact that under them the Jewish nation lived and prospered for many centuries, and that they are to-day accepted by the Jewish people as authoritative. Surely a body of laws which hold a people of their intellectual capacity, and with such power of race preservation as distinguishes the Jews, must possess great intrinsic worth. These have been their laws, notwithstanding all the changes in life and habits. At first a pastoral people, with limited wealth, measured by flocks and herds, a movable ark the center of their religious life, lacking the splendor of a court, engaged in no wars of aggression. After this a new form of government, a monarchy, great wealth, a temple whose magnificence was the object of the world's admiration, a civilization and personal culture, attracting the attention of all. For centuries wanderers, objects of persecution, under the ban of popular prejudice, and only of late slowly rising into power through individual action, yet ever maintaining, without a break, their separate racial life. During all these changes of national life, these varied forms of individual experience, the laws of Moses have ever been accepted as authoritative, their lawyers simply interpreters of these laws, and their law books but commentaries on them.

WHY JEWS ARE TENACIOUS OF THEIR LAWS.

Looking within them for the secrets of their power we find that the religious element is the basis, the marked characteristic of the entire Mosaic legislation distinguishing fact is the constant recognition of one God, a single Jehovah, entitled to the worship of all intelligent beings. Not only is there no suggestion of a multitude of divinities, but there is, on the contrary, an unflinching protest against the idea of numbers. The ten commandments open with the declaration, "I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me." And then follow the denunciations of idolatry, blasphemy, etc. This is the keynote of those laws, and the Jewish people stand to-day as the race which for three thousand years has preserved with unchanging faith and in the face of all temptations, the doctrine of the singleness of the supreme Being. It is no wonder that the Jews are tenacious of those laws. They see that science is more and more affirming that in the nature of things there is and can be but one supreme Being, one infinite Power back of the seen and material. They see that in those laws of Moses, given to them more than thirty centuries ago, is a provision of that which science affirms to-day, and they can but feel that as their custodians they are entitled to the respect of mankind.

We may also well consider the sweep and comprehensiveness of these laws. They touched the life of the individual and the nation in all relations, social, economic, political and religious. The form of government was established, although subject to change, and in fact was changed. They contained a judicial system and an entire code of criminal law. Social relations with penalties for violation of obligations were defined. All the minutiae of worship and religious ceremonial were given. Expiation for sins was provided for, and the terms and conditions of expiation named. And all was done in the name and by the authority of Jehovah. "Thus saith the Lord" was the beginning and the end of the laws of Moses.

Again, notice the superiority of the Mosaic laws over those of surrounding nations. Space forbids more than two or three illustrations. One is the means taken to protect the life of one wrongfully accused, and the rule by which in capital cases the witnesses were required to take part in the execution. They had to face the consequences of their testimony. "The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people." True, this would not stop all false testimony, but it would tend to check it. Not only was this required, but there could be no sentence of death except upon the testimony of two witnesses to the same facts. No single witness was sufficient to take away a man's life. "At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is to die be put to death; at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death." As under our national constitution no one can be convicted of treason except "on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court."

A BOON FOR THE UNFORTUNATE.

Whatever might be done with the alien and his property, the servitude of a Jew terminated and he was restored to his ancestral possessions when the year of jubilee came. This was a bankrupt law whose benediction to the unfortunate debtor has never been equaled in the legislation of any country. As a boon vouchsafed to the Jews alone it tended to develop love for and pride in race, and has undoubtedly been one factor in creating in that people its marvelous racial tenacity. No wonder they have always felt themselves to be a peculiar people, separated from all other races and peoples by the special care and providence of Jehovah.

Reference may also be made, though without enlarging on the subject, to the various provisions designed to enforce purity, uphold the sanctity of marriage, and give the wife a more stable position than she enjoyed among surrounding nations. Not that the legislation in those matters responds to our higher conceptions of the value of the family. The important fact is that purity was so vigorously enforced, a purity which has characterized the Jewish people to the present day.

Moses does not fall short when placed beside the great law-givers of the race.—The Sunday School Times.

Editors Herald: All the news of the late General Conference has at last reached us, and we feel that there is a gradual advancement along the right line. Some parts, of course, at times, seem to be at a standstill, but sowing and cultivation must always take place before the harvest. The alterations in official positions were certainly made for the best interests of the work in general, or they would not have been made. And if we wish to be colaborers with Christ, and advance in the divine life, we must be willing to labor in harmony with his choosing. I am persuaded from what I have read, and from observation, that the Lord has a kind of training school in which his servants are being prepared to act for him, long years before they have any knowledge of it; and when they are fully prepared, the way is open for them to enter in and occupy. And when their course is run, by reason of old age, transgression, affliction, or otherwise, the power that directed their call will provide for their release, and the work will move onward in spite of all earthly opposition. Zion can not be moved out of her place; and although her children may be scattered for a time, they will return and build up her waste places, and occupy the land in the Lord's own time. This is the decree. And like the rain and snow which descend to water the earth, accomplishing the great purpose of God for our temporal welfare, so his word, the good seed of the kingdom, must be scattered to the ends of the earth, and yield an abundant harvest for the garner at the Lord's second coming.

The tares are thicker and growing much faster than the wheat in many parts of the harvest field; throwing out their twining vines and choking out much of the tender crop of wheat. Every form of Satanic power and influence seems to be marshaling itself against the truth, in order to destroy and prevent the Lord's work on the earth. He may succeed for a time, but must be defeated and destroyed in the end.

Our new missionaries arrived safely by the last mail boat, after a pleasant voyage across the great deep. They were met by the Saints in Sydney and Brisbane and given a hearty welcome. They have now entered the field, and are about their Master's business, although I have not had the pleasure of meeting them, being about six hundred miles from their landing place.

We are facing our difficulties as best we can, and trust that time and the hand of Providence will assist us to rectify and set in order all things necessary to extend the interest of God's kingdom, and accomplish all that he has designed in us.

Ever praying for the advancement of truth,

Yours in the faith,

C. A. BUTTERWORTH.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, September 29, 1909.

Saints' Herald: Here I come to tell your readers that I am again at home. I have been associated with Brother Mannering in a series of meetings. We held a ten-day meeting at Texas Central Branch, with good turnout and interest from start to finish. Baptized and confirmed one, a married man; a number more seemed to be near the kingdom. The Saints seemed to be much revived and encouraged. I find Brother Mannering a very nice and agreeable elder to work with. I think he and I would make a good team. He is putting in all his spare time studying the Spanish language and seems to be making good headway; he is very studious.

After the meeting was over I came home and he went to San Marcus. Brother Mannering intended to stop off there and go out in the country to preach. He expects to be at San Antonio next week where he and wife live. I visited the Philadelphia Branch in Falls County last week; found the Saints getting along about as usual. They want meetings there by some able elder. I notice that they had a fine place to preach and they say that they have good turnouts of outsiders to hear. It seems a good chance to get the gospel before the people there.

There are a number of places in this section of Texas for preaching, but very few preachers of our faith to fill them. If circumstances would permit I would preach much more than I do. I hope the way will open up for me to do more in the ministry some time in the future, and believe it will. I am still in the faith and conflict.

E. W. NUNLEY.

Editors Herald: I have just returned from my first reunion at Irvington, California, and words can not express my joy and happiness at meeting with those of the one faith, all worshipping the same God and in the same way. Too much can not be said in praise of those comforting and instructive sermons. Having been isolated in the mountains of Lake County for years with only the "silent preacher," one's feelings can better be imagined than described. I met dear old Brother Clapp; it had been many years since our last meeting.

It was my good fortune to act as secretary for the reunion, as it brought me in closer contact with the Saints than I otherwise would have been. I had the pleasure of meeting Brother and Sister Terry for the first time. He is well qualified in every way for the onerous position he holds, and we were all proud of our district president. My companion attended the reunion at the same place in 1907, and as on many winter evenings, we would sit around the fire and she would tell me of the things she had seen and heard there, I could only be a silent listener, and could not realize what I had been missing. Now I live it all over again and it gives me much comfort.

I had often heard my companion speak of several brothers and sisters she had met there, and to whom she had become particularly attached. When I met the noble Lawn family face to face, I felt as though I had always known them; especially the brethren, who are worthy expositors of the angel's message. The grand old mother in Israel had much reason to be proud of her sons and daughters. Sr. F. H. Lawn endeared herself to everyone by her zeal and simplicity, earnestness and kindness towards all; also Sister Wiles, the proud and happy mother of Johnnie Wiles, who had been preaching in our neighborhood. It is impossible to name all the dear Saints toward whom we felt particularly attracted, they were such a band of noble men, women, and children.

It had never been my good fortune to meet such a band before.

I wish to mention a very remarkable occasion which took place. On Sunday about 1 a. m., a heavenly illumination was over the grounds where the large tent was, sufficiently bright to enable one to find a pin among the straw and leaves. The entire town was in darkness, even the street on each side of the tent. It was a dark, moonless, starless night. Several people witnessed this.

Another remarkable sight related by Sr. Mary A. Wiles, of Tipton, Tulare County, California, on September, 1907. Her two grandchildren, aged about nine and fourteen, came running in and exclaimed, "Come, grandma, and see the writing in the sky!" Across about one third of the heavens, on a bluish roseate background, were these words in glowing red letters, each beginning with capitals: "Great men shall flee from San Francisco, State, Cal."

Another one related by Sister Hartsough, of San Francisco: On the night of the great earthquake, April 18, 1906, her attention was called to a white cloud, from which appeared the Savior waving his hands over the city, saying, "Give them more! Give them more!"

As a result of the servants of God, ten precious souls were buried beneath the water in Nile Canyon. There were three ordinations: Brother York of Ukiah, to the office of elder; the writer to that of priest; and Brother Darrow to a teacher.

One feature of the reunion that deserves mention was the entertainment at the close by the little tots. One about the age of four years, daughter of Brother Bush, of Oakland, played, "Nearer, my God, to thee," on a small violin. It brought down the house. The house was crowded and in every way the entertainment was a success.

This may seem rambling, but I must tell you what one of the brothers, Brother Icem, colored, told me. He had heard some Utah elders preach and he said it reminded him of boys saying their little pieces—so devoid of the Spirit. He is very well informed and full of zeal for this latter-day work.

The names of many of our sick were presented at the beginning of one of our prayer and testimony meetings, and while we were praying for them, our heavenly Father gave us the assurance that "our prayers had been heard and accepted, and that they should be healed according to their faith and his wisdom." All of the prayer and testimony meetings were very spiritual and the gifts of the gospel frequently manifested. God made known to us through tongues and prophecies that he was pleased with our meeting together, and that he would pour out his blessings on all those who were faithful.

The citizens of Irvington and vicinity are very favorable to the Saints, regarding it as a blessing to hear them each year. Some of the business men have expressed themselves as being willing to help them financially, if it is necessary to acquire more territory, as it soon will be, as the numbers are increasing, rather than to have them move elsewhere.

Your brother in Christ,
E. F. ADAMSON.

MONTREAL, QUEBEC, CANADA.

Dear Saints: On the north shore of the Saint Lawrence River, in Canada, five hundred miles below Quebec (city), are several settlements of fishermen and hunters. It takes one month for mail to reach them from Montreal. A young man, interested in the work, is going to winter there. In his letter to me he says there is no literature or tracts of any kind to be had and requests me to send him some tracts. He undertakes to spread them along the coast for a hundred miles at no cost to us.

The settlements are not large, as you can see by the description he sends of some of them: Regasha, six families, twenty-five people; Romaine Bluff, four families, eighteen people; Herington Harbor, thirty-five families, etc., for over a hundred miles.

Navigation will soon close and no mail will be able to go in until spring. If you have any spare tracts or any odd Books of Mormon, and are desirous of helping to reach these people with the gospel, send a few of the simpler ones to John Emberley, Romaine Bluff, North Shore, Province of Quebec, Canada. Do not omit any of this address and mark all "tracts" as "religious papers."

I hope that we will remember the sunshiner's motto, "Do something for somebody quick."

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. CHARLES MOTTASHED.

BOONE, IOWA.

Dear Herald: Saturday evening, September 25, 1909, at Fraser, Iowa, Miss Marion Bibbs, of Boone, Iowa, gave a musical entertainment which was carried out in a most pleasing manner. She donated half of the proceeds to the Latter Day Saints' Sunday school at Fraser, Iowa. The Sunday school desires through the columns of the HERALD to extend to her their heartfelt thanks and gratitude for her kindness and most generous offer. May God bless her in her efforts of life.

SARAH M. RODGERS,

Secretary pro tem.

LAGRADA, MISSOURI, October 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been wanting to write to some of the Saints for a long time, but hardly knew where or how, as I am such a poor scholar and have not seen a Saint for ten years. They never come here, and I am too old and poor to go away. I think some of the preachers ought to come down here. There is no railroad nearer than eighteen miles. Stover is the nearest, but they could get a conveyance most any time to Lagrada.

There is a Methodist church at Cable Ridge that could be secured for preaching. They let a couple of Brighamites in last month and they have stirred the people up considerably. They left tracts and sold several Books of Mormon. I think it would be a good time for a Josephite to step in.

Myself and husband joined the church at Allendale, Missouri, in 1877. My husband died six years ago. I have had very little church privilege, but am a whole souled Latter Day Saint.

MARY ELLEN STUART.

WEST JORDAN, UTAH, October 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: Being in Salt Lake City during the last two days of the semiannual conference of the Mormon church, I improved the opportunity to attend. I had the privilege of listening to a number of the leading men, upon almost all subjects imaginable; such as their great prosperity, Zion in the tops of the mountains, the power and authority of the priesthood, home industry, and a great many other themes, including as to how often a man ought to kiss his wife.

The discourse of greatest interest to me was delivered by Elder B. H. Roberts. I was a little prejudiced against the man, because of his record of the past, but I was compelled to admire his sermon, because of the unassailable truths it contained. He spoke of God's unchangeability, saying that when a man says that God changes, or grants his people the privilege to violate his laws, he blasphemes the Almighty. He read from the Book of Covenants, where it says that God does not walk in crooked paths, and turns not to the right or the left, and he spoke of this unchangeable God as the one whom the Saints should serve. He made the admission that the Latter Day Saints, because of their unfaithfulness and unwise acts, had brought upon themselves many of their troubles in the past.

But the discourse was evidently not pleasing to Pres. J. F. Smith, as he spoke vehemently at the conclusion of the conference concerning some who would say foolish things and thereby give their enemies a chance to use the same as a weapon against them. He declared with considerable emphasis: "It is not the prerogative of any one to point out the failings of Joseph Smith or Brigham Young, or of any other of the leading authorities of the church."

His little speech was to me the most intolerant and bigoted effort I ever listened to, and I felt to thank God for the liberty and freedom enjoyed by God's people of the Reorganization.

In gospel bonds,
H. N. HANSEN.

HEYBURN, IDAHO, September 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: On leaving conference in the spring I visited in Independence, Missouri; also our old home, Saint Edward, Nebraska, and left there on May 20 for home, accompanied by our daughter, Mrs. Alvin Knisley, and a friend from Nebraska. I invited different ministers to come our way, but have not seen one or heard a sermon since I heard President Elbert Smith preach the "Open door" sermon. I enjoyed it again when I read it in the HERALD. There is a new schoolhouse nearing completion one and one fourth miles from our place, and if some of the elders will come this way I will try to get it for them.

Brother and Sister Farley, of Bisbee, Arizona, have been visiting their niece, Sister Handy, and I met them at her place. Sister Handy and my friend from Nebraska took a trip to Malta, Idaho, and passed by the old mill built by Jonas Chatburn, and they told me that Fred A. Smith worked there years ago. We saw two bald eagles, beautiful mountain streams, and many mountains, and crossed two mountain summits. In all, we had a very pleasant time, but were glad to get home. While we were gone they had a bad hailstorm here—something new for this country. It broke four big window lights out of our house and many for others.

I was glad to read of Brother May's safe arrival in the Islands. Words can not express the sorrow I felt on reading of the death of Bro. Alexander Smith. I think the pale reaper is getting in his work in earnest. We should all be ready when the Master calls, and I believe he was ready.

I am still in the faith and determined to press on to the end. I am very lonely out here so far from any Saints, except Sister Handy, and she is five miles from us. There are a great many Mormons in this country, and whereas at Malta, Idaho, there used to be forty Saints, now there is only the Condit family. The rest are all Mormons. They have built a church and all they use it for is to dance in.

May we all stand firm in our places. I am praying for the redemption of Zion.
MRS. E. A. GILL.

STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA, September 29, 1909.

Dear Herald: The work here is moving, yes, moving—not rapidly, but still moving in the right direction. This refers more particularly to the district, although Stockton, as a locality and part of the district, takes its place among the workers. I have an idea it will take a new start when we get the old church building made into a new one, which we are hoping will be soon.

I was at San Jose Sunday, September 19, preaching twice and on Monday night at the home of Brother and Sister Bates, where the good Spirit assisted to make plain some things necessary for the Saints to know and practice. On Wednesday, the 22d, I preached a funeral sermon with excellent liberty and spirit. I think good was done by it.

I came here last Saturday, preached twice on Sunday, and on Sunday night had a preacher to hear—and if I do say it myself, it was the climax of all the efforts of my life. I was not the only one that said so. My object in saying this is to show that the Master has not left us alone, for which we give him unbounded praise and thanks. We think this may be a precursor of the glorious time so near at hand. "Awake, Saints, awake, no time now for reposing." Peace fills our hearts as we trust it does yours.

I must speak of the prayer meeting at San Jose on Wednesday evening. It certainly was very enjoyable. The Spirit pervaded the whole assembly at Bro. Fred Lawn's house; everyone was visibly affected. There were no outward manifestations of the gifts, but the joy, peace, love, and sympathy that filled our souls! All seemed to want to do their duty and to make the meeting a success, which it surely was. The last meeting I attended at home was a counterpart of this one. We feel the Lord was with us to bless. Praise his name.

Your servant for Christ's sake,
C. A. PARKIN.

PARIS, TENNESSEE, October 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: This is the first time I ever tried to write to our church paper. I enjoy reading the Ensign and HERALD so much that when reading the letters I often am filled with the Spirit, even unto tears of gladness, to see how the work of God is moving on and how the Saints enjoy the Spirit, and all working for the redemption of Zion.

I am young in the Master's work. I was baptized June 14, 1908, by Elder D. E. Tucker, and my mother came in at the same time. Brother Tucker was the first one I heard preach the beautiful angel's message. I am glad I heard and obeyed the same. I know this is the work of God, and that we are indeed the children of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Let us all live so we can love his appearing and be able to stand and not be cast down to hell.

We are doing all we can to get the gospel before the people. The local officers are preaching in private houses, but, dear Saints, just listen and I will tell you something: We are trying to build us a small church. It will be well located, just about a mile from the L. & N. depot, and we would be glad for all the Saints that can to move here and make this their home. There is a nice little band of Saints here now, but we would be glad of more. We would also be glad of any help we can get on the church, if any feel like helping us a little, please send to committee, Bro. L. L. Boothe, Paris, Tennessee.

Your sister in the one faith,
IDUMEA COBB.

OTTAWA, KANSAS, September 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: We have been in an isolated condition for over three years, and it seems much longer than that to me. I was always used to going to Sunday school and meeting every Sunday, unless sickness prevented. Those who have that privilege do not realize the full extent of the blessings they enjoy.

We have been trying to get some of the people here interested in the Lord's work, but they are so blinded by prejudice that it seems an up hill business. There is a Methodist Episcopal church three fourths of a mile from our house. We got the consent of four of the trustees to let one of our elders have the use of it. So we wrote Brother White to come, but his family was sick, and before he could get here the one that was against us called a meeting of the trustees, and their minister was with them, so we were voted out. Then we got the promise of a schoolhouse on Friday morning before Brother Ammon White was to come on Saturday, and when we got there Saturday evening they refused to let us have the key. But not to be outdone, Brother Ammon held meeting on the steps. The parties that were custodians of the keys said they were going away that evening, but instead they turned out their lights and hid out and listened to the sermon. Prejudice runs high here; one man went so far as to say he would not let a Latter Day Saint come into his house. There is one family that seems to be interested. We loaned them the Book of Mormon and lots of tracts, and let them have the HERALD and Ensign.

We attend the Methodist services, but they are as husks. We would like to get an elder again this fall and try again, to see if any will lend a listening ear. If we do our part and they still refuse to see or hear, the condemnation will rest on their own heads.

Your sister in the faith,
GRACE E. ADAMS.

MISSOURI, VALLEY, IOWA, October 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: A few lines from this place might be interesting to some of your readers. The church papers are a source of comfort to us and we greatly enjoy reading them.

Bro. W. A. Smith preached here one week this summer and twenty-two were baptized; others seem nearly ready for baptism as a result. We feel that much prejudice was removed and great good done for the cause here. The Saints are encouraged to press on in the glorious gospel. Brother Smith was wonderfully blessed with the Spirit, words came to him as fast as he could speak them.

May the gospel of Christ Jesus triumph over every opposing force, is my earnest prayer.

T. H. PARKER.

EAST PHARSALIA, NEW YORK, October 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: Will say through your columns that the work is moving along nicely in northwestern New York, and myself, with all the Saints, feel encouraged in the work. I have baptized thirteen so far this year and will baptize another bright, young woman Sunday, the wife of an intelligent young man I baptized on last Sunday.

I can not say the field is ripe already to harvest in this part, but by hard labor we are able to gather out a few. I can see a marked desire for spiritual development among the Saints of my mission, but can not say that it is altogether what it should be yet. This is my second year in this field, and I find the Saints to be a kind, hospitable people, ready to minister to the needs of the missionary, which is a test of true brotherhood; for the Master said, By this ye may know my disciples.

We anticipate the organization of a branch at Greenwood, New York, October 23, and another at Fulton and East Pharsalia later on. Some promising young men have been pointed out in the different places to hold the priesthood and carry on the work in the branches; but some, no doubt, will in due time move out into broader fields.

We feel encouraged and can truly say and sing,

"Thank the Lord for the plan he has given,
That will render us pure as a child."

ALMA BOOKER.

ODELL, TEXAS, October 5, 1909.

Dear Herald: We enjoy reading the church papers, more especially the HERALD, as we for the past year have been of the isolated ones. I take great pleasure every Sabbath evening in my little prayer meeting, as I call it, reading the many good letters of the brothers and sisters to my little ones, and explaining the gospel to them, and I am made to rejoice in this glorious work.

There are no Saints at this place except myself and family. We are trying to sow the good seed as best we can. Husband has been preaching some, as he is a teacher. Have quite a few interested; would like so much for an elder to come this way. Bro. B. F. Renfroe, of Davidson, Oklahoma, came in March and preached two excellent sermons. Hope he will come back soon. One man, a Campbellite, came last week and said he was not satisfied with his doctrine, and wanted to know when Brother Renfroe would return.

The Lord has been very merciful to us, and I wonder in what way I can best show my thanks. I realize we all have a work to do, and oftentimes think how true are the words,

"Arouse, arouse, why idly stand?
Why sit at ease with folded hand?
There is a work for you to do,
No other one can do for you.
Arise and work, though great or small,
For by our works we stand or fall."

We mothers, I sometimes think, have the greatest work of all. How very, very careful we should be to set the right example before our little ones, the ones God has intrusted to our care. Oh, that we may have wisdom and make of them just what the Lord wants them to be!

Ever praying for God's children, and asking an interest in the prayers of others, I remain,

Your sister in the faith,

ABERDARE, SOUTH WALES, September 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am sending this to the HERALD so that you may all know that the work of God in this place is at the present time in a prosperous condition. I am not at present taking any paper of the church, but I hope to do so before very long, as one is a great comfort to me. It seems to give me a renewal of courage to continue on in the good cause of our Master.

I have been in the church now over five years, and my testimony is that if it were not for the voice of the Spirit I might still be wandering about from one church to another in my search for truth without being any the wiser as to how it is possible to become a true disciple of the great Redeemer. Our Father knew my desires and it was as it is written in the Scriptures, Seek and ye shall find; knock and the door shall be opened unto you. It was through the preaching of the gospel in power that I came into this church, for I could not withstand the striving of the Spirit after I heard it preached in its fullness for the first time of my life.

I have been blessed with many dreams both before and since coming into the church, and I know that God is able to guide me safely through all trials and temptations. I desired greatly in this life to have a faithful partner, for I felt if I could not have one as spiritually minded as myself it would be far better not to have one at all. I am thankful that God has granted unto me my request, which helps me to continue faithful in the cause of Zion.

Not long ago I was blessed with a dream. I dreamed that I was preaching out in the open street, close by a very large park, and I seemed to be clothed with the power of the Spirit. There was some railing running along the side of the park, and inside of it I saw a circle of seats upon which sat a lot of people dressed in all the latest styles, and in the center I saw a man very much like a Church of England clergyman, and he seemed to have been preaching to them. But no sooner had I begun to preach than they arose from their seats and fled.

It seemed that I was carried in the Spirit into an upper room and that I was seated at a little table with another personage, which seemed divine. Upon the table I saw three tablets about the size of a Church of England prayer book (pocket size). They seemed to be smoking with heat, and there was a kind of blue vapor going up and down them. There appeared to be writing upon them, and the person by my side told me to read. I leaned forward to read, and as I looked the blue vapor seemed to rise up and cover the words. The same kind of a thing happened again the second time, and afterwards the person arose from the table and left me and seemed to smile upon me.

Not so very long after this dream I was given the Book of Mormon to read for the first time. At first I put it down, but afterward I picked it up again and begun to read, and I seemed to be full of the Spirit. Sometimes I would be alone and I often felt as if there was a second person by the side of me, but I could not see this person. Every time he touched me I seemed to fully understand that which I was reading was true.

So you see I was guided by the Spirit into a full understanding and knowledge of the truth of the angel's message.

Yours in gospel bonds,

H. SNOOK.

The One Cup Again.

Let us examine some of the arguments advanced against individual communion cups.

We are told that "there was but one cup used formerly among the disciples of our Lord, and that they lived to a good old age." Where is the proof of this assertion, either regarding the "one cup" or "age"? To say it is so doesn't necessarily make it so. It appears to me as a realism of the "blind leading the blind." And the next assertion would stagger the pillars of knowledge. "The even more remarkable fact, that neither the Lord of life and glory, nor his contemporary disciples, nor even your respected parent and his compeers knew anything at all about the deadly microbes," etc.

When did our anyone learn "that the Lord of life and glory" was ignorant of some of his own creation. It appears to me that it would be better to weigh our words carefully before writing, and not go on making assertions which nothing in scripture or science can support.

Again we are told, "How very strange that none of these beloved and ancient worthies were aware of just one well-known, authenticated fact in the biological science, to the effect that for every single disease germ, or infection microbe, there are untold thousands—nay millions of normal, pure, and healthy microbes in the atmospheric air we breathe and in the water we drink, which instantly prey upon and destroy all deadly bacilli before they have had time to enter the vesicles and to poison the blood corpuscles of the human body."

If this were only so, how happy we could be, but, alas, the evidence is otherwise; for we find infection and contagion in the air we breathe, in the water we drink, and in the soil. Sometimes this contagion is limited, sometimes unlimited, expressed in the terms, miasmatic, epidemic, and pandemic, such diseases, for instance, as cholera, influenza, smallpox, typhoid fever, tuberculosis, and myriads of like ills. And yet the very air, water, and soil which serve as the carrier, according to our friends, is overlaid with these disease-destroying, life-preserving, pure, healthy microbes.

It is certainly a well-known and authenticated fact in medical science (which has to do with the pathogenic germs) that no such safeguard (as has been represented) exists. True, there are many saprophytic bacteria which destroy some of the pathogenic variety, but not all. For instance the bacillus typhosis, or the germ of typhoid fever, it finds its way into a brook, a pond, or a well; it infects all who drink it, and even freezes up in the ice, and is carried to distant lands or localities, and in the consumption of the ice deals out sickness and death. And yet the same water contained over two millions of micro-organisms per cubic millimeter of the life-saving variety spoken of. Where does the well-known and well-authenticated biological fact fit in here?

Considering the air we breathe, an analysis in our city (and we suppose other cities to be similar) has shown that on one street, taking the measurement one foot from the ground, there were over fifty millions of micro-organisms, principally tubercle bacillæ (pathogenic) to the cubic millimeter. Where are the physiological antagonists in pure, healthy microbes? This was on the open street; surely these little life guardians ought to be able to get in their work there. What is the trouble? Simply this. The pathogenic germs are more virulent and resist the counteracting and immunizing powers of the saprophytic variety, the former, toxins, destroying millions of the latter before their antitoxins can be furnished in sufficient quantity to equalize their destructive power.

But this has nothing to do with the one wineglass. It is a well-authenticated fact that the human mouth has millions of microbes in it, pathogenic and otherwise. To make a culture we simply touch the tongue or buccal mucous membrane with a sterile platinum wire, taking the least possible portion, and we get a growth in twenty-four to forty-eight hours.

Now if the slightest touch can secure a growth, how much larger growth will we get when the lips are pressed to the cup, and where are the "pure, healthy microbes" to get in their work? In reality, it takes millions of the latter to combat successfully a small colony of the former.

To demonstrate, place a common pork sausage in water over night. In the morning take a glass slide and cover glass with the microscope. Touch the wire to the outside skin of the sausage and smear the specimen over the cover glass. After sterilizing the wire in the flame, touch it to the tongue, and again smear your second specimen over the cover glass, place the slide and cover glass under the microscope focus and watch the battle, for surely you will see it, and sad to relate the porker will gain the victory. In this case where were the pure, healthy microbes of the water and air. They should have destroyed these pork imps over night, but alas, their virtue was lacking.

It is a mistake to think these saprophytic bacteria are going to kill any and all pathogenic organisms, or hinder them from entering the blood corpuscle. Take it in the case of malaria, we find the plasmodium malaria in the center of the red blood corpuscle. He got there in spite of the pure, healthy microbes. Again, in anthrax tetanus, or in the case of infection by streptococcus, staphylococcus, pneumococcus, and in fact, the whole cocci family; they are exposed to air, light, heat, and almost every agency, and yet they are present and can make their presence known every time condition or opportunity is given them. These little microbes habitually occupy the surface of the body and all invaginations. They are there, and all the talk the multitudes of earth's people can do, will not alter the fact; they are there and there they will stay.

One writer quotes from a Dr. T. Stephenson, of London, England. The statements following in his quotation I most heartily indorse, but at the same time I wish it to be distinctly understood that the medical fraternity are a different class of people than the so-called medical men mentioned in the article. These are not medical men at all, but charlatans, quacks, and frauds in general, and have no more right to the name of doctor than a pagan teacher would have to the name of a minister of the gospel.

The revised rendering of 1 Corinthians 11:25, as given in one article, to my mind would have been better unsaid; for it proves nothing, and the true rendering of 1 Corinthians 10:17 does not weaken my former argument one iota.

Perhaps some one will enlighten us as to which are the merely human fads and fancies, "the one glass which can not be proven to be correct," or the several cups in which is cleanliness, reason, and unrepulsiveness.

If the argument for the one glass is true, then we as a people are guilty of a misdemeanor every sacrament day; for we use more than one in each branch of any size, and if it means one then only one should be used in a branch. Further, if it means one and only one, then the whole church must meet together at some appointed place, and the whole church throughout the whole world must partake from that one glass, otherwise the argument fails.

Let us be consistent with law, common sense, and revealed knowledge. To my mind it doesn't signify anything whether we have one or a hundred glasses; it is the spirit in the partaker which signifies and not the number of cups.

Let us progress with the times and not hold to old traditions. "In the time of their ignorance God winked at, but now he commandeth men everywhere," etc.,—progression,—what was good enough for their fathers was not good enough for them. We are a couple of thousand years further along; let us be wise, more god-like, and we will be less liable to the evils which lurk in the way of inconsistency.

W. A. SINCLAIR, M. D.

We read in Paul's letter to the Ephesians of the "sleight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive," but it remained for one C. C. Platt, of the Anti-Ordinance Church of God, or "Come-outers," with whom we have just closed a debate here, to give a practical demonstration, not only in "sleight of men" but also sleight of hand performance, with "cunning craftiness" enough to deceive those who love not the truth.

It was upon this wise: Mr. Platt had been making a determined effort to do away with the Lord's Supper, laying on of hands, and baptism, and had announced to the people on the previous evening that he would give a practical demonstration of baptism.

The supreme moment for the display arrived—our opponent came to the front with several bottles of chemicals and a pail of water. Holding up a bottle of clear liquid, he explained, "This represents the man for our demonstration of baptism." He then poured a little liquid in from another bottle, saying as he did so, "This represents the entering of the impure thought, or of sin into the heart of man." A black cloud then appeared in the first bottle which he then shook to thoroughly mix, which made it as black as ink. He explained that sin's contaminating influence blackened the soul. Putting in the cork he then proceeded to baptize the bottle in the pail of water and showed at each dipping that the black still remained. Then taking another vial he poured some from it, saying, "This represents the Holy Spirit's action upon the soul." Whereupon the cloud in the bottle was cleared away, and thus with this "sleight of man and cunning craftiness" and sleight of hand unto deception, he seeks to cater to the inherent disposition in man, to say, Lord, My Lord, but not to do his will and obey his commandments.

We had five minutes in reply to this little bottle performance, and by the aid of the Spirit we quoted this statement of Paul of the cunning craftiness and sleight of man—turned it upon our opponent, where it belonged, and showed from the same chapter that the very officials which God had set in the church as a safeguard against being tossed to and fro and carried about by every wind of doctrine and cunning deceptions, were wanting in his church, and that therefore he was not immune from deception himself, and was in the role of an officer of Satan, to deceive others by sleight of hand work in opposition to scriptural baptism "for the remission of sins."

It would be very unseemly in us to assert that the victory was ours in this discussion, if the assertion was not supported by some facts which our opponent can not deny. These facts are:

First. We signed up for ten sessions. He began to arrange to quit after having debated three, tried to quit at seven, and did quit at eight.

Second. We have two names for baptism next Sunday as a result, and we expect one other at least.

Third. We challenged our opponent in public to the discussion of the same propositions, discussion to be published, and he made no response of any kind.

Shrewd, strong, and able men may make a showing in defense of error for a time, but the Lord hath chosen the weak things of this world to confound the mighty and strong. A soap bubble hath some attractions, but rather let us be attracted by that which fadeth not away, "the everlasting gospel."

JAMES E. YATES.

MAY, OKLAHOMA, October 9, 1909.

SEILING, OKLAHOMA, October 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to inform the readers of the HERALD of our work here in Seiling. Although we have no branch at present, we have enough members and officers in the church to hold our regular services, including Sunday school, Religio, prayer meeting, preaching each Sunday morning and evening, and sacrament meeting third Sunday of each month. We have no meeting house of our own, and at present we rent the city hall for $1 per Sunday, in which we hold our worship. This, however, is not a very desirable place for services, as it is not comfortable in winter, and the room beneath it is occupied as a pool room and is open Sundays as well as week days. So we are in need of a church building of our own. Now comes the principal object of which I write.

Our Mite Society, (the most prominent organization we have at present) is doing all in its power to raise funds for a church. We are few in number, compared with many branches of the church, and also other denominations in Seiling. There are already five churches here. The first one built was a Latter Day Saint church. The Saints, many of them, moved away, the work dwindled and the branch disorganized. The church was sold and is now owned and occupied by the Friends. But within the last few years other Saints have moved in, the work has been revived, and is in good condition, and we are hopeful of an organization soon.

Just now our Mite Society is preparing for a church fair, to be held December 17 and 18, and I take this means of asking the sisters, in general, for donations from the various things that will sell at an occasion of this kind. Anything in the line of fancy work, crochet work, handkerchiefs, aprons, dressing saques, and kimonas. Any gift, no matter how small, will be greatly appreciated. Now sisters, don't let anyone of you read these lines and fail to send us a donation. Send something, if only a handkerchief.

Trusting I shall hear from many friends, especially the Oklahoma sisters, I remain, MRS. R. M. MALONEY.

News From Branches

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

Since last writing Omaha has had some unpleasant as well as pleasant experiences. We had a long and hard pull to get through the hot weather. And it was hot, too!

Just as soon as we began to recover from this, here came the street car strike which left us all suspended; some in one place and some in another. We are hardly down to normal yet. But things are looking a little better now. I wonder when man, O vain man, will learn that two wrongs will never, no never, make one right.

Well, one of the pleasant things is to have enough of the abiding Comforter that when placed in conditions of the above we can from the depths of our souls pray that the Lord will be merciful to all and show them the wrong before it is too late; also for the assurance that when Zion is redeemed such things will never be. May we all be there, is my prayer.

We had a very fine reunion at Council Bluffs. A good number of the Saints of Omaha had the privilege of attending. Fifteen were baptized, of which the Omaha Branch got five or six. A number of the members from here attended the Decatur conventions and conference. All expressed themselves as being blessed in so doing.

Several changes of late have taken place in the Sunday school and Religio, and more are contemplated. Our officers are working hard to raise the interest in both. We believe they will be successful if they do not get discouraged. I hope all will give them the support they deserve. The branch is trying as well to move out on some new lines, to interest and encourage the weak. We are in hopes to be able to hold a special series of meetings in the near future, with special advertising, special speakers, special music, all in a special place in the heart of this great city, so as to get the Lord's work before this people. Let us have your prayers that we may be successful.

Bro. E. Curtis, father to Apostle J. F., dropped in upon us by surprise just before Sunday school opened to-day. At eleven o'clock he preached a fine and timely discourse to the comfort of all present. He is to speak again to-night.

Ever working and praying for the advancement of the people of God,

I am yours,

J. M. BAKER.

Traces of an Arctic Tragedy Discovered.

On August 30 we arrived at Rudolf Island, the most northern of the Franz Josef group, and simply a mass of ice and high glaciers where we had planned to spend the winter. While cruising near Northbrooke Island I saw one day from the "Crow's nest," a singular dark body just awash on the surface of the water. As we came nearer and nearer, I was possessed by a rather unusual desire to know what this dark mass was; putting up my glasses, I gave the order for "dead slow," and we passed the object closely on the starboard side. I saw clearly that it was the body of a man clothed in a great skin coat, with the usual hood, and with mittens on the hands. The face was not discernible, but it dawned on me suddenly that this might be the remains of the Swedish balloonist, Andree, who had been lost in the Arctic about two years before; or, perhaps, one of the men who had been lost in the Abruzzi expedition. I was about to stop the steamer and procure the body when it occurred to me that to take a corpse on board would destroy the good spirit and courage of the members of the polar party, for there is a general superstition among sailors that a ship is doomed when a dead body is on board. The first officer and myself were the only ones who witnessed this ghastly spectacle, and neither mentioned the fact, fearing that the discovery would cast a shadow over the entire party. We have both always believed that this was the body of Andree, and I have often regretted that it had not been in my power to give him decent burial.—Captain Edwin Coffin of the Ziegler Polar Expedition, in the National Magazine for October.

A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of 'the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

The Books We Read.

What we read has an actual effect on us. Books are also like people in that. The people among whom you spend most of your time will make you more or less like them, and the books you read will make your mind something like themselves. If we get into the habit of reading silly or careless or cheap literature, we gradually lose the power to read what is strong and true and fine. It is occasionally necessary to take a good deal of trouble to read a fine book, just as it requires care and time to do a fine piece of work. But it is worth the trouble. What is called a taste for good literature is one of the most delightful possessions in life. We must begin to get this taste while we are still young or we run a risk of never getting it at all; in which case we lose for ever out of our lives all the beautiful and wise and noble books which the world has been making for us these many hundred years. It would be like going about in a few ugly rags when the closet upstairs is full of charming clothes ready to put on, and ours only for the trouble of unlocking the closet door.—From Hildegard Hawthorne's "Books and Readings" in November St. Nicholas.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

CHURCH DEDICATION.

At the invitation of the president of the Second Missouri District, and the president of the Nevada Branch, James Moler and C. W. Keck, respectively, the senior editor visited Nevada on the 9th instant, accompanied by G. H. Hilliard and A. H. Parsons, Bishop's counselors, for the purpose of assisting in dedicating the church building which had been erected at that place. The building is nicely located and is excellent of its kind.

The branch at Nevada is entitled to great credit for having secured such a building. The extent of this credit will be seen from the following statement made by C. W. Keck, at the opening of the exercises, which statement is taken from a notice of the dedicatory services, published in the Daily Nevada Mail, for Monday, October 11:

After the opening song service by the choir, C. W. Keck, president of the Nevada Branch church, read the following report, which is of special interest:

"The Nevada Branch was organized northwest of Nevada, November 23, 1890. February 4, 1900, a small hall in the rear of the old rink building was rented and branch headquarters moved to Nevada. Sunday school, preaching, prayer, and later religious services were held in this place for some time, until the old Baptist church was rented for a time. Then a few services were held in the court-house until we were refused the use of same, after which all services were held in private houses until the completion of this building.

"October 5, 1902, the first active steps were taken toward the building of a church when at a business meeting it was decided to build, and a committee was appointed to solicit funds for that purpose. In February, 1903, the lot was purchased. Shortly after plans prepared by Architect F. L. Lacaff, were accepted, and A. C. Dempsey, W. H. Jordan, and C. W. Keck were chosen as building committee and trustees. Building was commenced in June, and sufficiently completed so that the October, 1903, conference was held in it. Total original cost of building was $2,753.14. When completed we were in debt $1,000. Interest, repairs, etc., since have amounted to $359.68, making a total, $3,113.82. Of this amount $38.75 was donated by citizens of Nevada, $68 by Saints outside the Nevada Branch, the remainder, amounting to $2,957.07, has been donated by thirty-five members of the Nevada Branch.

The song service was rendered by the little choir of the Nevada Branch, assisted by some of the visiting Saints from other branches of the district, and was very good. The services were in charge of Bro.

A. H. Parsons. The sermon was delivered by the senior editor, and the dedicatory prayer was by Bro. George H. Hilliard, the benediction being pronounced by Bro. James Moler.

The closing paragraph of the notice in the Mail we give below, as it fairly represents the matter, stated therein:

The new church is a splendid structure, handsomely decorated, and is a splendid monument to the members who worked and sacrificed that it might be erected and dedicated to their Master.

The sermon was a discussion of the general subject of prophets, ancient and modern, the topic being presented from Matthew 24: 14, and Revelation 14: 6, and a presentation of the principles of "the gospel of the kingdom," and "the everlasting gospel," referred to in the citations respectively, as found delineated in the gospels and the epistles of Paul. The effort of the preacher was well received, and the general impression of the entire services seemed to be good. Brother Parsons remained at Nevada, intending to preach on Monday evening and possibly on other evenings during the week.

The little band at Nevada are entitled to great credit for their exertions and sacrifices, and are hereby congratulated in having so patiently strived and so pleasantly achieved so worthy an object.

A PROPHECY WITH REMARKABLE FULFILLMENT.

Bro. Joseph Luff, of Independence, Missouri, has received a letter from Bro. Charles H. Lake, in charge of the missionary work in the Society Islands, dated September 26, 1909, which he has kindly granted us the privilege of using in presenting an incident which will be read with interest by the Saints. We are permitted to present it by Brother Luff, and it is as follows:

Dear Friend in America: I am going to write you another circular letter, to tell you of our day of rejoicing in Tiona to-day.

Brethren May and Savage have been with them during the week, and early this morning, Berti and I went out to their regular tri-monthly reunion of all the Saints who happened to be on this island. Brethren May and Savage did the preaching and I interpreted them, also in the prayer service, which made quite a strenuous day for me.

I had asked the Saints to make the afternoon prayer service a memorial to the Patriarch Alexander, whom they had all met, and for whom they were all sorrowing. It was truly remarkable some of the testimonies that were borne regarding his work in these islands of the sea. Different ones told forecasts that had been made in their patriarchal blessings which had truly come to pass. One sister told of how her husband and a number of relatives had gone away to the low islands in a small boat, and that they were lost track of and were a month overdue in Tahiti. She went to Alexander and asked him if they were still alive. She says he thought for some time, then brought his chair and sat right down in the doorway, where he looked out upon the ocean, for some time, then turned to her and said, "They are safe upon an island where they have gone for refuge. To-morrow (Monday) they will leave that island, and next day they will be in Papeete."

She at once carried the encouraging words to her relatives and friends, but next day began to doubt, and wanted to send a boat to look for them, but Brother Burton told her to wait another day, which she did, and sure enough at two o'clock Tuesday morning, her husband and friends landed in Papeete.

This is a striking circumstance and surely indicates that the spirit of prophecy was upon the Patriarch when he uttered the prediction so singularly fulfilled.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR.

We are reminded of the truthfulness of the trite saying, "The way of a transgressor is hard," by the receipt of a copy of the Anaconda Standard for October 14, from which we quote the following dispatch:

HELENA, [Montana], October 13.—Assistant District Attorney C. S. Ford returned from Thompson Falls and Polson, where he represented the Government at preliminary hearings of persons charged with crime. At Thompson Falls the hearing was held of an alleged gang of counterfeiters. This case promises to become one of the most interesting tried in Helena in recent years. The defendants are Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith Lee and John Smith Lee, jr. They were bound over, and young Lee and his mother will be brought here to-morrow. Lee, sr., is now in the county jail. A second son, Henry Lee, was apprehended in Idaho on the charge of passing counterfeit coin, and it is said he will plead guilty when his case is called at Moscow, Idaho.

Secret service operatives of the treasury department, who were called into the case after the arrests had been made, pronounced the coins found in the possession of the Lees the best imitations of the real thing they ever saw.

Suspicion was first attracted to the Lee family after Henry Lee had been arrested at Sand Point, Idaho, for passing a worthless ten dollar gold piece. He refused to talk, but papers in his pockets furnished a clew as to where he hailed from. Officers then visited the works of the Burnt Forest Silver and Copper Mining Company, the Lee property, situated about six miles from Trout Creek. Joseph Smith Lee was there, and when John Tissue, deputy sheriff of Sanders County, rapped, there was a rattling of locks and doors and then Lee demanded who was without and what was wanted.

"I'm cold; I want to get in and get warm," replied Tissue, giving a false name. The door was slowly opened and Lee appeared, holding in his hand a big six-shooter. The visitor started back with feigned surprise and then entered in response to Lee's invitation. The door was closed and the other officers slipped up. While Lee was building a fire, they entered and when he swung around, he looked down the muzzles of a circle of six-shooters.

The completeness of the mine and of the counterfeiting plant surprised the officers. A fine tunnel ran into the hill a distance of two hundred feet. There were cabins, blacksmith shops, blowers and all other machinery required in the operation of a mine. Another surprising thing was the arsenal. There were three beds in the Lee house and in each was found a rifle, shotgun, or revolver. In every room was found a weapon of some sort, so that at a single step a firearm could be picked up if needed. Plaster of paris, babbit metal, crucibles, and gasoline furnaces were found, as well as a number of finished coins.

The arrest of the Lee family was a great surprise to the people of the vicinity. The family had lived in Sanders County four or five years and had borne an excellent reputation. Only about two weeks prior to his arrest Lee, sr., delivered a funeral sermon.

The senior Lee is seventy-one years old, but is mentally and physically alert and agile. He is the same Joseph Smith Lee, it is declared, who was one of the band of "destroying angels" who swooped down upon and killed the emigrants in Utah at the Mountain Meadow massacre, many years ago, and who was left for dead in a hog pen.

John Smith Lee, jr., the son, is a jeweler by trade, a fact which the officers say accounts for the clever workmanship shown by the coins. The Lees were supposed to be developing the Burnt Mountain mine, and it is said they sold considerable stock in the concern.

We insert this item of news for the reason that for a number of years Joseph Smith Lee, who came to the Reorganization from Utah, was an elder of the church and preached to some extent west of the Missouri River and in Utah; but becoming impatient under restraint made disturbance in one or two of the Nebraska branches of the church, and under the administration of Elder James Caffall, minister in charge, was disfellowshipped. He sought to create a division, evidently believing that the position assumed by him was a correct one, but which failed to impress any particular number of the Saints, and his effort failed. We had lost track of the man for quite a number of years now, and greatly regret his coming to light in such unfortunate and unenviable circumstances. Truly the way of the wrongdoer is precarious and detection seems to lurk upon every side of him. We greatly regret the departure of this man from right ways, both because of the name which he bears, and because of former associations with him.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

From some peculiar freak of curiosity we are constantly being inquired of by individuals whether priests, teachers, and deacons are authorized to preach or may preach when invited to do so by competent branch authority, or when opportunity offers to them, whether by invitation or where they may be sojourning for the time being. The revelations of the Lord to the church signify clearly that priest, teacher, or deacon, may teach, expound, exhort, and invite all to come to Christ.

Whether this may be called preaching or not, it clearly authorizes these officers, under proper circumstances, to teach the people that may be in the church, exhort them to the discharge of their respective duties, and invite those not in the church to the consideration of the faith of the church, and invite them to come to Christ. They may do this when requested to do so by presiding authorities in the branches, or in the mission field, and may upon their own motion, where opportunity is offered and where there is no presiding officer to consult in regard to the matter, stand before the people and declare the gospel as they understand it, and may fill appointments by agreement and consultation with presiding officers in the branches or places near by, where opportunity is offered, or whence invitation comes to them.

The revelations to the church provide further in specific words: "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor." It is also further provided that he that is moved by a desire to do so, is called to thrust in his sickle and reap.

Presiding elders and ministers in the field so far as practicable should aid and assist the officers of the lesser priesthood, advising them regarding their duties as standing ministers, and also securing from them help in their missionary efforts when and where it may be done advisedly. While making this statement in regard to the right of these officers to declare the word, whether it is called preaching, teaching, expounding, or inviting all to come to Christ, we do not intend to detract from the privileges and prerogatives of the higher priesthood, but to teach within the province of the law itself. Even lay members may defend the faith, and declare their understanding of the gospel when the faith of the church is attacked in their presence, and no accredited minister of the church is present to take up the defense of the church and its position. In this, as in other things, that part of the law which says: "He that waiteth to be commanded in all things shall be counted as a slothful servant," will apply. Honest men, earnest men may use the talent and the understanding which God may have given them to obtain a knowledge of the faith and may present it when circumstances may favor, and there should be no unnecessary jealousy in regard to prerogatives of the eldership, when no invasion of their right is either intended or implied.

We have been asked these questions so frequently that it does seem as if people who read the HERALD do so with small regard for what they read, or that every person must have a personal reply to personal questions asked upon these points. Please take notice, and try to remember, and give the law its fairest and widest interpretation compatible with the spirit as well as the letter of it.

Priests are authorized to baptize, and, where there is no other higher officer present, to administer the sacrament, and may assist an elder in this duty. But the priest may not lay on hands in confirmation or other wise; unless it be under emergency to ordain other priests, neither teacher or deacon is authorized to baptize or to lay on hands.

Saints living in branches may hold what are called sociables, or party gatherings at their own houses or in buildings which may be occupied by them where the majority of the branch may favor, so far as the public buildings are concerned. Persons may give parties in their own houses, inviting those of their neighbors whom they may choose to take part in receptions, social gatherings, without breaking any rule of the church or law of God that we know of.

A resolution was introduced some years ago, and adopted by the conference, that dancing as conducted in the parties and balls of the present day, is conducive to evil and should be discouraged. Questions of whether it is right or wrong for a person to go to a dance, must necessarily depend upon the conditions and circumstances obtaining in each case that may be called in question. The editors of the HERALD have neither right nor privilege of sitting in judgment upon personal conduct of the members of the church, and say that this thing is right and that thing is wrong, or this thing is wrong and that thing is right, by public statement, for which there is not specific statement in scripture, or in the rules of the church, hence it is useless to ask the editor to state whether it is right for a church member to go to a dance, as he is not authorized to answer the question authoritatively. All he could do would be like anyone else, to express an opinion. The senior editor of the HERALD has taken no part in dancing since he united with the church in 1860. Up to that time he did occasionally take part in a social dance, but when he assumed the role of preacher, he deemed it to be undignified for a preacher to take part in a dance. At the same time he has never presumed to sit in judgment in defining the rights of personal conduct belonging to his brethren.

The character of parties which may be held in the homes of the Saints largely partakes of the character of the neighborhood in which the people live, and the editor has no right or prerogative to define what are right and prohibit by opinion what are wrong, while he is not acquainted with the habits and peculiarities of the neighborhood. This matter is governed by the public opinion of the majority of the branches into which the church may be gathered. For instance, social parties of different nature where songs and recitation, short speeches, hymns, ice cream and cake are had, sewing parties, shower parties, tacky parties (the editor doesn't know what these are), and surprise parties for a specific benevolent object toward the parties surprised, may be inquired about of the editor. The editor may have an opinion in regard to some of these parties, but he has neither the right nor the prerogative to pronounce upon the right or the wrong, giving sanction to one and disapproval of another where no rule of scripture or rule of the church has made definition in regard to them.

The church as yet has not passed a rule either approving or disapproving the social parties held among the Saints at their homes, and occasionally in public buildings used for that purpose, and hence the editor is not authorized to say that the church either upholds or denounces every kind of party that might be inquired of.

The rule in section 68, paragraph 4, Doctrine and Covenants, requiring that those dwelling in Zion shall have their children baptized at eight years of age, will apply to Saints living in branches everywhere, with equal force and propriety in regard to the duty of parents to see that their children are so properly instructed that they may be led to ask for baptism as soon as they arrive at eight years of age. No parent is justified in forcing or compelling a child to be baptized, neither are parents justified in neglecting the teaching of their children either by themselves, or through the Sunday school, to properly understand the principles of the gospel so that when they arrive at the years of accountability they may make the proper choice of their own free will. There are parents who have neglected this duty of properly teaching their children who have had reasons to mourn very seriously their children going away from the principles of the faith, separating into the world, and being carried away with its vanities, or evil practices, or becoming united with some other faith. Parents who have taken pains to teach their children have been greatly blessed in seeing their children, one by one, when arriving at proper age, requesting baptism. There is no more reason for supposing that a parent in Zion will take any more pleasure in the obedience of his children to the gospel of Christ, than will be exercised by a parent living either in branches removed from Zion, isolated and away from either branch in or out of Zion. We have known of many an instance in which the parents have lived for years separated from the church privileges, and whose children have been so taught that when opportunity offered they were ready for baptism, though they may have passed the eight years' limit. Such cases are by no means rare, and it is our opinion, whatever it may be worth, that parents who value the welfare of their children should see to it that they are properly instructed in the principles of the gospel of Christ. To do this they should take the church periodicals and books, and themselves become instructed, that they may properly instruct their children.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

New York papers report the widening of the breach between two factions of the New York Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church over the ordination of three theological graduates who had expressed doubt as to the virgin birth of Jesus Christ. When the matter came up for vote only thirty out of two hundred stood against their ordination. A meeting of the opposition was called and it was there decided to carry up their protest to the Synod. These insurgents object to such liberality of views as will reject the raising of Lazarus and the actual resurrection of Christ.

By advices from Bro. F. A. Smith, we learn that Brn. A. V. Closson, Hale W. Smith, and other elders at work in the Northwest are succeeding finely, and the branches are improving in spiritual condition in different localities. We are pleased to note this, for some difficulties have been in the way in the Northwest which prevented proper development along spiritual lines. It is sometimes surprising to know how small and trivial affairs will originate controversies which result in great trouble to both the local and the presiding missionary force. Why can not Saints live in peace, and do unto others as they wish others might do unto them?

Saints and friends will please take notice that Bro. W. T. Rushton has been appointed agent for the Herald Publishing House at Independence, Missouri. The brother will canvass for subscriptions for the HERALD and other publications and will solicit orders for books, etc. The management will greatly appreciate all business coming through this appointment.

The Cheltenham Saints of Saint Louis dedicated their chapel on Sunday, October 17. Elder J. A. Tanner was in charge; Elbert A. Smith preached the sermon; Russell Archibald offered the dedicatory prayer. Splendid music was rendered by the choir under leadership of Bro. E. C. Bell. The building is a very neat brick structure.

Speakers at the Brick Church, Lamoni, on last Sunday were Elders Albert Carmichael in the morning and D. C. White in the evening.

IN MEMORY OF JOSEPH BURTON.

I am the true vine, and my Father is the husbandman. Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit. Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch can not bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me. I am the vine, ye are the branches: He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing. If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned. If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you. Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples. As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love. If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love; even as I have kept my Father's commandments, and abide in his love. These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full. This is my commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you. Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain; that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.—John 15: 1-19.

I do not appear before you to-day for the purpose of speaking of the memory of a faultless character, for there has been but one such known to the world, and He is the author of the words we have read this morning. But I do come before you to call your attention to the record of one, who, in his life and service, followed so nearly in the pathway of the divine Master, that it could be said of him forcibly and in a special manner, that he gave his life for his friends; and the statement made by the Master was, "That greater love hath no man than this." Not that in the hour of peril he placed himself where he took the blow intended for the life of another and thus died; that would be an easy death compared to the giving of one's life through a long series of years for the good of humanity, that his brother might live.

Such, I feel free to say, was the life of Joseph F. Burton, who was not well known to the church, only by his work, for all the years of his ministry, almost, were spent on the frontier or in the extreme ends of the country. But I think all those who knew him best will bear me out in the thought that Joseph F. Burton never had a dollar that he reserved for his own use exclusively; that he never exercised a power of body or mind that was used solely for his own selfish purpose, but that in all his labor he was devoted to the interest of right, to the upbuilding of humanity, to the comforting and strengthening of his brethren. During all those years of sacrifice and toil his life has been going out. Every exertion made by him, as is true with others, part of his life was given for it. In this he steadily followed the path marked out for him by the divine One whose words we have read this morning.

JOSEPH AND EMMA BURTON.

We are told that his suffering in the latter part of his life, during his last days, was very intense. This reminds us again of Gethsemane and Golgotha, where One who devoted his time and life for others, died in pain and sorrow, not sorrow for his own condition, but sorrow for the condition of others. We sometimes wonder, aye, we sometimes murmur, because those whose lives have been devoted to good deeds suffer so, and often we have thought it, often we have remarked in regard to it, that we do not know why one so devoted to right should suffer so much as he expires, and this life passes away. But our murmurings are but faint echoes of the agonizing cry that sounded from Mount Calvary so long ago, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me."

But when we come to look at it, this is but the logical sequence of the law of cause and effect. When a man lays his physical and mental powers upon the altar, sacrificing them during the service of years, he must then in a measure be without them. Then the final trial comes and he must suffer. So we feel resigned to the fact that our loved ones suffer because we realize that they chose that life which brought suffering, laid their all upon the altar of truth and right with the desire to benefit humanity.

I have personally known Joseph F. Burton, have been intimately acquainted with him personally and officially. I have known him to err, but I never knew him to willfully wrong a human soul. I have been with him through trials that tried men's integrity, tried their loyalty. I have been with him in the hours of rejoicing, I have been with him in the hours of anxiety and trouble, and I always found him true. I have never doubted him.

I would like to relate one little instance, if I can, when, at a public gathering some years ago, he called me into his room, and related to me that it had come to his ears from a creditable source, that one from whom he expected better things, had been saying some cruel things in regard to him, and asked my advice as to what course he should pursue. I felt grieved that he should have been so wronged, for I was in a position to know that the statements made regarding him were not true, and I expressed myself in language more forcible than elegant in regard to it. I saw that he was tried. It took all the strength of his manhood to maintain his Christian forbearance at that time. After I had made the remarks that I did, he looked up to me with tears in his eyes and said, "Let us pray for the brother." And we did; we knelt there together and prayed, and if I admired the man before, I loved him then, aye, more, I loved the erring brother for whom we had prayed, as I had never loved him before, and to this day, though years have passed since then, my love for both has not lost its force upon my feelings.

Joseph F. Burton was born at Yarmouth, Yarmouth County, Nova Scotia, April 9, 1838. He was the son of a Baptist minister, a minister of considerable note in that part of the country, so we learn. He was brought up to exercise a moral, virtuous, honorable influence on society. That teaching had its effect upon the life of the boy and the man. In due time he united himself with the Baptist Church, and so far as we are able to learn, was a consistent and exemplary member. In following a life calculated to lead him into rough society, (following the sea for many years,) we have yet to learn that he yielded to those influences to any large extent. In early life he was united in marriage to Miss Emma Davison, who has since been his constant companion so far as circumstances would allow, until he departed this life on the 1st day of October, 1909. She yet survives him, and it is in accordance with her request that we are here to-day to speak a few words in memory of her departed husband. We wrote her about the time these services would take place, and

I doubt not that she has remembered the hour, and that her prayers are mingled with ours at this moment, as we pay this tribute of respect to one whom she so deservedly loved and whom we loved.

I am not quite sure, but I think there were five children born to this union, two of whom preceded him across to the other shore, and three of whom survive him, his son Frank, his daughter Dora Howland, and his daughter Addie Matthews, all of California.

Because the life upon the sea separated them so much, because it was so hazardous, and because she was often left behind him, and her anxiety was so great in regard to his welfare, and because they desired to place themselves more exclusively in each other's society, they resolved to quit that seafaring life, which he had followed since he was fourteen years of age. Some of their friends having preceded them to California had written back of the advantages to be found there. I think it was in 1869 they left their home in Nova Scotia and proceeded to the Pacific Coast. Their friends having settled in the mountains of San Benito, near what is called Jefferson, they of course proceeded there. There they undertook to make a home, and there the gospel found them. In conversation first with Bro. John Carmichael, an uncle, I believe, of the brother who is on the stand with me to-day, they learned something of the principles of truth, he having been connected with the church in years that were gone, but having drifted to California in the dark and cloudy day. Later, missionaries of the Reorganized Church in the persons of Daniel S. Mills and John R. Cook visited the neighborhood. Brother Burton very soon became interested in their message and gave it an investigation, desirous of discovering all the truth that he could. Though we do not know that he was particularly dissatisfied with his religious experience in the Baptist Church, he wanted to know all that he could know in regard to the truth, and if there was more than he had he wished to possess it. The result was that on December 7, 1873, at Jefferson, California, he united with the church, the rite of baptism being administered by Elder John R. Cook. Two days after his baptism, he was ordained a priest by Elder Daniel S. Mills, and was chosen to act in that capacity in the branch. He entered faithfully upon his duties in that calling, as he had always done and has always done since, devoting himself to the work without reservation. He believed it was his duty so to do.

May 4, 1874, at the same place, he was ordained an elder under the hands of Alexander H. Smith, Daniel S. Mills, and Hervey Green. Then his mission field became a broader one, and without going into details, we wish to say, he labored as faithfully and acceptably in California as his circumstances would admit, sometimes as a traveling elder, sometimes as a local elder, sometimes in a presiding capacity, and sometimes under the presidency of others. Whatever position he occupied, according to the best testimony I have, he occupied fearlessly, yet humbly. There was no such thing in the nature of Joseph F. Burton as jealousy of the success of another, he always rejoiced when his brother was honored, when his brother was successful, and suffered with him if he was humiliated.

While thus laboring he felt that he would like to devote himself more to the work of the ministry than he could do under his condition then. Having opened a farm, it required his attention. He thought if he could dispose of that, for the country where he settled was not a fruit country, it was an agricultural country, especially adapted to small grain, and could get into a place where he could have a smaller area, he could make a living by raising fruit and devote more time to the church. There was, at that time, quite an excitement in regard to the country further south, near what was then called Gospel Swamp. He went down, looked the country over, but was not favorably impressed with it, he liked the mountain country, where he lived, better. He came back, put a price upon his farm, told his wife, so she relates, "If anyone offers me the price I ask for it, I will take it for granted that I ought to go whether the country is agreeable or not."

But a short time elapsed before his offer was accepted, and he realized from the sale of the place where he expected to make his home, the sum of twenty-five hundred dollars. Without going into detail, I want to say to you that that twenty-five hundred dollars was never reserved, not a dollar of it. He went to the southern country, bought a small place to make himself a home, but all that he had then was laid upon the altar of sacrifice. He entered into the work of promulgating the gospel of truth to the best of his ability, using every advantage that was given him. A few years spent in devoting most of his time to the ministry, resulted in his having sacrificed his all, except the little home that he had made. He suffered privation and poverty, sometimes at a loss to know what there was in store for him in the way of earthly support, for in those days it was not as it is now, there was no elders' allowance for their families, but they received just what was presented to them by those who loved the truth and were willing to share in the sacrifice. Sometimes having plenty, perhaps, at other times not knowing from whence support was to come.

While in this condition, a burning desire which had taken possession of him and his companion from the time they became acquainted with the truth, to carry the gospel message back to their native land, was increasing, and in the spring of 1882 they came east to attend the General Conference at Independence, and having been appointed by the authority of the General Conference, they went back to Nova Scotia. His was the first preaching that had been done in that country under the authority of the Reorganization, though a brother-in-law, brother of Sister Burton, had visited there and talked to some of their relatives about the restored gospel. Brother Burton was the first missionary and established the work under great difficulties in the Province of Nova Scotia, a work that has not prospered as much as in some other places, yet has never died out. He established two branches there. They labored there together, turned from the doors of those they loved sometimes. They endured great privation and suffering, but with unbounded faith in God and his truth, they labored to establish the work, laboring there two years, leaving their children in California. Returning in two years' time they attended a General Conference at Stewartsville, Missouri, in 1884. Though they had not met their children for two years, when the proposition was presented to him and to her as to whether they would be willing to accept a mission to the far-off land of Australia; after some hesitation, wrestling with his own feelings and the desire to go back to his home and enjoy his family, he consented, and ere the year 1884 had passed way, he and his wife and youngest daughter sailed for Australia. There again for three years and a half, if I mistake not, he labored with unwavering zeal and confidence for the establishment of the truth.

I will just say that before he started upon this mission, it became necessary to make a greater sacrifice, and in order to provide for the passage of his wife and daughter and to meet other expenses, he sold his home, receiving a payment therefor, using that payment in the promotion of his mission to Australia.

While there, on the 1st day of January, 1888, he was, by the direction of the General Conference, ordained to the office of seventy under the hands of Thomas W. Smith. An instance is related in regard to this ordination that I will mention here. When Brother Smith was making the prayer prior to his ordination he prayed, so I had it from the lips of both Brother and Sister Burton, that as he was the only one there authorized to assist in this ordination, the Lord would send an angel to assist him in the ordination of Brother Burton to this office if approved by him. He proceeded with the ordination. At the supper table that night, he said to Brother Burton, "You had an experience in the ordination that you have not mentioned, and I would like to hear it." Brother Burton said, "Yes, I felt two pairs of hands upon my head distinctly; I felt the others as distinctly as I felt yours." Thus the answer of the prayer of Brother Smith was verified, and the ordination of Joseph F. Burton was approved, doubtless, being ordained by angelic hands as well as the hands of Thomas W. Smith. This happened at Hastings, Victoria.

After this he returned to this country, broken in health, his voice gone. It was then I became more intimately acquainted with him than I had ever been before. I met him at Stewartsville, but had little chance to make his acquaintance. He returned from Australia while I was in California. He had not reserved any of his physical force, he had done everything he found to do, he put his whole life into his work. When he came back he could not speak sufficiently audibly to address an audience and be heard, and for several weeks, perhaps months, he remained in that condition, he was also otherwise physically afflicted, but strong in the faith.

I shall remember so long as my memory lasts, the following experience: When a reunion was held at Leguna, California, I was called upon in connection with Brn. Daniel S. Mills and Daniel Garner to administer to Joseph F. Burton, who had come home from his missionary work in this condition. While our hands were yet upon his head, and while our prayers had not yet ceased, he spoke in a clear and distinct voice, "Praise God, brethren, I am healed." And that afternoon he occupied the stand and addressed the congregation in the open air in a voice sufficiently strong to be heard distinctly. Thus his physical powers, after having been spent in the work, were for a time restored to him, and he used them again just as faithfully as he had done before, reserving nothing from the service of his God and his brethren.

I think he realized fully the truth of the principle contained in the poem of James Russell Lowell:

He's true to God who's true to man; whatever wrong is done,
To the humblest and the weakest 'neath the all beholding sun,
That wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves most base, Whose love of right is for themselves, and not for all their race.

'Tis ours to save our brethren, with peace and love to win,
Their darkened heart from error, ere they harden it to sin;
But if before his duty man with listless spirit stands, Ere long the Great Avenger takes the work from out his hands.

They are slaves who fear to speak for the fallen and the weak,
They are slaves who will not choose hatred, scoffing and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink from the truth they needs must think;

They are slaves who dare not be in the right with two or three.

I say he realized the truth of the sentiment contained in these verses. He was gentle, kind, loving in disposition. Though jovial and good-natured always, he was not an enthusiast in regard to the service of God, so far as form was concerned, but his religion and his service consisted in what is expressed here, "He's true to God who's true to man."

After returning from Australia he sought to make a home again. An opportunity was offered him to enter a piece of land where he first settled in California. He did so, and erected a humble cottage and there, when he was not actively engaged in ministerial work, he and his wife, his children were grown then, found a resting place in what he was pleased to call "Mount Olivet," a local name which he gave the place. When I visited them in their humble home, he met me on the outside of the door, and in his genial, good-natured way, said, "Welcome to Mount Olivet, all of it."

That home was not reserved from off the altar of truth. He was willing to sacrifice that as he had sacrificed before. I think it was in 1894, when a movement made throughout this church to build a gospel boat fitted for the work in the islands was consummated. Inquiry was made by the authorities of the church for some one capable to take the boat to the islands. Joseph F. Burton had had experience in seafaring life, had been both mate and captain on vessels, had visited almost every land and clime upon the globe, and he said, "I will go. I will take charge of the boat, if you wish me to, and take it to the islands." It was a great undertaking, and perhaps none realized the undertaking more than he did, for the vessel was not large, not the kind of a vessel that one would expect would be safe upon the deep, it was too small for a trip like that. Not but what it was just what they wanted in the islands when it arrived there, but to take it across the intervening space was the great task. But he undertook it, and he successfully accomplished it. Being so well acquainted with navigation, his calculations were very accurate, and everything worked just according to his plans. One of our poets who saw the vessel in vision wrote of it as follows:

Upon the deep, dark, heaving sea,
Where ocean storms wild revels hold,
Great ships from every clime, I see,
By raging billows rocked and rolled.

And there, amid that sailing throng,
A luster-laden wavelet's crest
Evolves a boat; it scuds along
An atom on the ocean's breast.

No steam-forced wheels, no towing line;
Propelled and stayed by natal force,
This pygmy, through the foaming brine
Unswerved pursues its southern course.

'Tween sable surge and lowering skies,
From tiny masts, small pennants float.
Ah! looking now through spirit eyes
I see our little gospel boat!

Oh! precious consecrated craft,
 Launched out upon that vast domain,
 May breezes soft our treasures waft
 And bring our loved ones home again.

While there, though but a brief time he remained, he endeared himself to the natives. They loved him. He made an impression upon their minds that to this day, no doubt, has not been effaced, and when he came back they wanted him to return. They plead for his return. They thought Josefa, as they called him, was the man they wanted in the islands, and they petitioned time after time for his return, and eventually he went back, and you know all of you, the history of his life there to some extent. We none of us know the details. I had been in correspondence with him the most of the time, and his letters would breathe a devotion to that people. Unappreciated sometimes, like the Master, he gave his life for them. They did not always appreciate his sacrifice, his love and devotion, and interest in their welfare.

I never believed, and I never expect to believe that the man whom I knew to be tender and loving and kind, with whom in all my associations with him, every act of life was an expression of gentleness and kindness, even in his official capacity, did more than he was obliged to do against the rebellious ones to maintain the integrity and virtue and well-being of the church and kingdom of God.

Prior to his greatest trial in the islands he returned again expecting to remain in this country for the rest of his life. He wrote to me that he wished to settle down in California and remain there the rest of his days. If he had done so at that time he would probably have been alive to-day. But there came a great disaster in the islands, and the waves of the sea, heaving themselves beyond their bounds, brought desolation and destruction to many whom he loved, and who loved him, and they were discouraged. To the assembly of the church in conference at Independence, the revelation came saying that some one should go and administer to them in their sorrow and trouble, and that "my servant, Joseph F. Burton, though aged, will be an efficient officer and representative of the faith." I do not think it told him positively to go, but it said he "may be intrusted with this difficult mission." He said, "I will go." He went. You know the result. You know that the trouble that had been gathering there resulted disastrously, spiritually as well as otherwise, to many, and Joseph F. Burton had to stand in the breach there and be tried as few men have been tried in this latter-day dispensation. There the finishing stroke was made. There the last trial that ended the life of this noble man came to him, and he laid what remained of that faithful life upon the altar of truth, and came home to die.

He was ordained to the office of an high priest at Oakland, California, September 6, 1900, under the hands of Elders Alexander H. Smith and Gomer T. Griffiths; and an evangelical minister at Irvington, California, September 9, 1908, under the hands of Elders Frederick A. Smith and Frederick M. Smith. In the first named office he did some of his most faithful service, in the last named office he was permitted to do but little on account of failing powers. All we know of the last struggle, though we heard from time to time that he was growing worse, is this telegram. Since then we have no particulars. Dated October 1, 1909. "Joseph passed away this morning. You preach his memorial. E. Burton." That is all we know about it.

While this has been a trial to me, and I realized from the first that it would be, I am glad that I can pay this tribute of respect to one with whom I have labored and one whom I loved. That I can speak these words in regard to him to-day and say that I have been with him in adversity and prosperity; I have slept beneath his roof and he has slept beneath mine. I have seen him in circumstances where the souls of men are tried; I have found him true; I have found him faithful; I have found him devoted; with his all upon the altar of right. I see in his life a reflection of the life of the divine Master. I see the Spirit of the Master manifested in his work, from the beginning until the end. I see him as he passes through the shadow of death, suffering like his Master had suffered before him, perhaps not so intensely; he passes down into the valley of the shadow of death; having laid his physical and mental powers upon the altar, he goes down suffering for want of them, especially for want of physical strength. I can see no farther. But I have faith to believe that he who followed the Master through the shadow of death, ("Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends,") though he has passed into the shadow where my eyes can not penetrate, he has received welcome there from the divine Master, as well as from his associate ministers, who have gone on before.

I expect to see no happier moment, I expect to have no more of the taste of eternal life while here, than I had in that hour when, at his suggestion, we bowed together and prayed for an erring brother who had wronged him.

In conclusion, as evidence that God cares for and provides for the faithful, permit me to say that the home that Brother Burton supposed he had sacrificed when he started to Australia was in a peculiar manner preserved to him. The party to whom he sold did not continue the payments and it reverted to him again. The Santa Ana River overflowed the place and it was supposed to have become valueless. It indeed looked like desolation. The water, however, receded from the place, leaving a deposit which enriched and rendered it more fertile than ever before. Since he returned from the islands the last time he sold it again realizing therefrom the sum of four thousand dollars. With this he purchased a little home in Colton, California, which he has left for his widow, and assisted his daughter who was financially embarrassed to remove the encumbrance from her home. Then, in harmony with the spirit of sacrifice that had ever attended the labors of himself and faithful companion, they took the remainder, over four hundred dollars, to Bishop Carmichael and consecrated it to the promulgation of the gospel to which they had devoted their all; reserving nothing to provide for their own comfort.

Thus did Joseph F. Burton live and thus he died. With all his mental and physical powers fully consecrated and laid upon the altar he died for his friends, and "Greater love can no man have than this." To him will be verified the words of the divine Master: "He who loseth his life for my sake shall find it." May He whom they so faithfully served comfort the heart of her who shared his sacrifice and toil. She leans upon the mighty arm of God and upon his church for succor, comfort, and support, and she shall not trust in vain.

SELF-CONSECRATION.

Sermon by Elder U. W. Greene, at General Conference, Lamoni, Iowa, April 7, 1909.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

I invite your attention this evening, to a few verses recorded in the ninth chapter of the testimony of Luke, beginning at the fifty-seventh verse:

And it came to pass, that, as they went in the way, a certain man said unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest. And Jesus said unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head. And he said unto another, Follow me. But he said, Lord, suffer me first to go and bury my father. Jesus said unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God. And another also said, Lord, I will follow thee; but let me first go bid them farewell, which are at home at my house. And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

I have read from the fifty-seventh verse to the end of the chapter. The last verse contains these words, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." And I wish to couple with that the thought found in the sixteenth verse, "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

Jesus Christ was the speaker. Several people had evidently become interested in his teachings. They desired to follow him under certain conditions. There was not an entire consecration to Christ and the service of God; but almost without exception they sought an excuse for not doing what the Son of Man would have them to do. Jesus, in the text which I have selected to-night, was addressing those who evidently had embarked in his service, who had received a call from God to duty; and as he noted the excuses they offered, he said, "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."

I believe that to be just as true to-night as when uttered to the few who were in the presence of our Savior; that it is applicable to you and me, to all the members of the church, in every land and clime.

APOSTLE U. W. GREENE.

You doubtless have observed that Jesus frequently illustrated truths by very simple stories. All of the people in that locality were familiar with plowing, just as the inhabitants of these Western States are. They sought to plow a straight furrow then, as people do to-day. It was not for the man with his hands upon the plow to be constantly looking back, but steadily forward toward the end of the field, toward the end of his duty. The man that would stop constantly, and be looking to the rear, could not make satisfactory progress, or accomplish that which the Master desired.

Upon one occasion, in seeking to illustrate the beauties of the gospel life, the kingdom of heaven, Jesus likened it unto a man that went forth to sow seed, some of which fell by the wayside, some upon stony ground, some where the thorns sprang up and choked it. Other seed fell upon good ground. And when his disciples did not understand fully what he meant by that, he explained the parable unto them, saying, "The seed is the word of God." He in person was acting as the sower of the seed at that time; and all who are called to be his servants, who are recognized as his children, are expected to be engaged in the work of seed-sowing. The human heart is the field where the seed drops; but, unfortunately, all hearts are not in a proper condition to receive the word of God and bring forth good fruit.

Let us note what he says upon this. Those that receive the seed "by the wayside are they which hear; then cometh the Devil, and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved." How many times in our experience, as we have been preaching the gospel have we observed people interested, apparently drinking in every word. They would come from night to night. They would desire to talk to you; but presently a change would come over them. You could not tell what was the matter, what had happened. But if perchance you could get in touch with them, you would find that some person had gotten them by the coat, what we term 'button-holing' in this age of the world, and they had been warned to keep away from the meetings, not to listen to those preachers, for they were presenting error, not truth. It is true with the ministry to-day as it was with the Savior anciently. The religious people of that age entered into a conspiracy, that they would put out of their synagogues any man who followed him, or that confessed him in any manner. So great was the pressure brought to bear upon them, that people were afraid to confess their honest convictions.

It is true now. People stand in fear of their fellow-men. What will this one or that one say if I go and listen to the Latter Day Saints? And because of that a great many, whose hearts have been touched by the word, turn from it, and they never obey the gospel. Jesus says they receive the seed by the wayside; soon the adversary comes—you know sometimes he appears in human form, working through human instrumentality—just as soon as he comes in that manner, their courage fails, and they turn from the way of the Lord.

Let us note the next expression we have here: "They on the rock are they, which when they hear, receive the word with joy; and these have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away." How frequently our hearts have been pained because of that fact. There are so many that we have looked upon as honorable men and women, who have been shining lights in our midst, who have endured for a while. By and by temptation has crossed their pathway. They have lacked the moral courage to resist, and have fallen by the way.

Let us note the next expression. "That which fell among thorns are they, which, when they had heard, go forth, and are choked with cares"—I pause and examine that for a moment. Have you ever met with people like that? It has been my fortune or misfortune to travel quite a number of years, and I constantly hear people murmuring. I visit homes where the good housewife is not in the best of health, has a family of children, and she is encumbered with care, oftentimes burdened with distress of body. There is murmur and complaint there. "Why, I have so many burdens resting upon me that I can not live my religion as I ought to do. The children are so fractious, I lose my patience with them." Have you ever observed that?

I meet with men on the farms, and they are not satisfied. They murmur and complain at their hard toil, the poor pay, and the deprivations from which they suffer. "Oh, it is drudgery to live that life."

I have been in towns where people work in the mills, and have frequently heard them say, "It is a dog's life. We might as well be in state's prison. For six months of the year when we go in the mill it is dark, and it is dark when we come out. We have no opportunities for pleasure, no good times whatever." It is a life of drudgery, a life of complaint.

I have visited men who, with hammer in hand, pound the rock upon the quarries, and they say, "I tell you this is hard. People do not work like we have to. We are so tired and weary at the end of the day that we rather go to bed than to prayer meeting." They are cumbered with the cares of life.

I have many, many times, been among those who go down to the sea in ships, and have heard the sailors say, "This is a dog's life. Why, it matters not whether the sun shines or the rain falls, when the skies are clear or the fog rests its mantle about us, we have to be on the quarter-deck, taking turn at the wheel, losing sleep, working hard, and subject to exposure; how can a man be religious under such conditions?" They are cumbered with the cares of life.

Let us note the next expression we have here: "And riches"—A great many Latter Day Saints are not encumbered with riches; but unfortunately we are living in a peculiar age. It is an age of covetousness. Now that word means an excessive desire for riches, to be used improperly. Our scientists frequently speak of people who lived centuries ago as having lived in the stone age. Some have referred to this as the iron age; but I believe, more correctly speaking, we might term it the age of graft. In the larger towns and cities, and it may be true of the smaller ones as well, men are bought and sold for a price. Mr. Thomas W. Lawson, of Boston, in his celebrated articles on "Frenzied finance," said, speaking of the legislature of one of the richest States in the Union, that its members were bought and sold "as you buy fish in the market or sausage in the stall." He mentioned their names. He told the price that was paid to them, and when and where. I could hardly believe it; but, it was true.

Men become enthused politically in every part of the land, and they believe that the destiny of the country is dependent upon the election of certain men to office. But, unfortunately, back of all the enthusiasm, is greed for gain. In the busy marts of the world, how difficult it has been for a man to obtain that for which he paid his money! If you want to buy a pair of shoes, you put up the price asked, but the shoes, about nine out of ten, have underneath the thin piece of leather, wood, or a composition of scrap leather that will dissolve if it comes in contact with water—absolutely worthless so far as wear is concerned.

I observed last January that the papers in the city of Cleveland were advertising ladies' garments and dresses; fifty dollar dresses for twenty-five dollars; forty dollar cloaks for fifteen, eighteen, and twenty dollars; gentlemen's suits at such a wonderful discount. And they would tell you that the garments were all wool, every thread of them; but it was not true. To illustrate what I have in mind: The young people in the city of Cleveland entered into an agreement that they would live two weeks just as Jesus would have them live; and at the end of the two weeks they met in the various churches in that city and related their experiences. This was the most common experience: Young men and women who were clerks in the large stores said that they were under the necessity of lying to their customers, of telling what they knew to be absolutely untrue, and that the manager had said, If you do not obey orders you can not work for us. Their bread and butter depended upon what? The telling of a falsehood!

This inordinate desire for riches chokes the word of God, out of many hearts. And, unfortunately, I have met with those who, after obedience to the gospel, went out into the busy marts of the world, and sought to make money; and as they piled up a few thousand dollars their heads were lifted high, and their ideas seemed to soar until they soared completely away from their spiritual moorings in the church.

Let us note the next expression: "And the pleasures of this life"—It seems to me that with many the good seed of the word of God is answered by the pleasures of this life. Now do not misunderstand me. I do not believe for one moment that God intends to put people in a straight-jacket. I have very little use or sympathy for the old puritanical religion that made one put on a long face; and when they kneel to pray do it in a sing-song tone, as though

God could be deceived by that imitation of crying. I do not believe that God is pleased with the hypocrite at all. He has designed that man should be happy. And the most happy people in the world are those who have the gospel and are living as God would have them to. One of the greatest gifts that God has given unto people is that of little children. You love your children, as I love mine. Yet, we have different ideas as to the training of them; and I am going to tell you mine to-night, whether you like them or not. I have believed for years that the best place for my children was at home, under the eye of father and mother, and that no place should be made so happy as home for the children. And when they have wanted different amusements, I have furnished them, so far as my limited means would permit. When they have asked for music, it has been supplied. When they have asked for croquet or tennis, we just saw that they were furnished therewith. When they desired games in the house, we furnished them just as far as we could; would do even more if our means permitted. Now, not infrequently I meet people who say, You are making a mistake. Am I? Now let me tell you the contrast. I met a man some few years ago in the East who said he would not allow his boys to play a game of checkers; he would not allow his children to have a game of authors, because they were made of cards; and he intended to bring them up in the way they should go. He succeeded wonderfully until they were sufficiently old to go out, and then they deceived father and mother and obtained what they wanted outside, and they went to the bad in just a little while.

Here are some things that in the mind of your speaker are wrong, where we should draw the line. I do not believe it is possible for a man or a woman to take the Spirit of Jesus Christ with them into the dance-hall. I am satisfied that the man who devised what are known as the popular dances of the present day, did so expressly to bring the sexes in contact with each other in such a way that upwards of eighty thousand of the fair daughters of this land fall and go into a life of sin and shame annually. Time to draw the line there.

I have very little use for the popular card parties of the present time, bridge whist and so on. It is very popular, I know; but almost invariably the people who go there gamble; and from a small price upon a game they soon become infatuated until gambling becomes a mania with them; and, as a rule, the common people lose, for they come in contact with professional players who are making their living by fleecing others. It is time to draw the line at things like that.

Very many of the theaters of the present day are disastrous in their effect upon those who attend them. There are some plays that have good morals to them; but that which is popular to-day is that which tends to immorality. Something that makes an appeal to the baser passions, which implants no lasting truth upon the mind of any one. It is time to draw the line there.

I am satisfied that if the people of the church would adopt this as a rule, that no mistakes would be made: Go to no place where you would not be willing to take with you the President of the church; where you would feel ashamed to take the Lord Jesus Christ. If that thought comes to mind, and you say, Well, I don't believe I want to invite Jesus to go with me there, then you had better stay at home.

There is a statement in the second chapter of the second letter of Peter, that I would like to impress upon your minds, "If after they have escaped the pollutions of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, they are again entangled therein, and overcome, the latter end is worse with them than the beginning. For it had been better for them" never to have put their hand to the plow, than to have looked back. That is the thought. Now let me give the correct rendition. "It had been better for them not to have known the way of truth, than, after having known it, to turn from the commandment delivered unto them."

Now, for just a few moments this evening let us note very particularly the second part of our text, "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God." Jesus had turned to the young man and said, "Follow me." And the boy had looked back, saying, Why, Lord, my father is dead. Permit me to go and bury my father, then I will come and follow you. But he said, Let the dead bury their dead. "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God." How can a dead man bury a dead man? It seems preposterous, doesn't it? But in the light of that which is revealed in holy writ, it is plain. Those that are out of Christ are dead in trespass and sin. Let those who are out of Christ, who have never obeyed the gospel, that are dead to God, dead to the divine life, look after those things; but there has come unto you this day a call, a call to duty, to activity; "Go thou and preach the kingdom of God."

I remember reading in the Old Testament, that upon one occasion the Lord put his Spirit upon Elijah, the prophet, and told him to go and anoint Elisha to be his successor; the old man came where he was and found the boy plowing in the field with twelve yoke of oxen. And as he came up to him he threw his mantle upon him and turned away; the boy ran and fell down at his feet and said, Let me go home and kiss mother and bid father farewell, and I will come and follow you. The old man turned to him and said, What have I to do with thee. And the boy began to think, Why God has sent him, and I have received a call to duty and to action; what shall

I do? He killed a yoke of oxen. He took the implements with which he had been plowing, gathered wood, and made a feast. He called his friends that were at work with him, to eat, then separated himself from everything that bound him to the former life, and went after the man of God. What was the result? Why, the word of the Lord tells us that he was one of the greatest of the prophets. With him the Lord wrought mightily. What happened? He cleansed the leper, he raised the dead, he had but to pray, and God heard and answered the prayer; even after his bones lay bleaching in the grave a dead body being carried into the sepulchre touched them, and was raised to life again. One of our brethren out in Ohio sang a song when I first went into the State; the chorus of the song was descriptive of the prophet and his work:

"There was power to cleanse the leper, power to raise the dead,

Power to fill the empty pots with oil;

And it's ready, waiting for the worker, who in Jesus' steps will tread,

And leave their lives of ease for ones of toil."

I believe the sentiment of that song to-night; that there is power to-day with God, and Jesus Christ, and in the gospel. And one great reason why it is not exercised more is that there is a lack of consecration on the part of those who have received the call to duty, "Come and follow me."

How often they seek excuse! I have observed that, sometimes, with our ministry. We would all like to have an appointment this year, near home, would we not? I would for one. My children are growing up so fast I hardly can keep track of them, especially if I do not see them more than I have the past few years. Sometimes there is an intense longing in my soul to go home and stay with my family, and I envy some of the brethren of the High Priests' Quorum, who are pastors, they take their families with them and stay at home. If God would permit it, I would like to exchange work with you, and have the privilege of being near the loved ones. That is a little sentimental, isn't it?

Now, what confronts us to-day? You brethren of the seventy, of the elders, of the priests, who have sent in your names and asked for missions, have you stopped to consider the question, that you have been called of God; and that there confronts you to-day the marching order of Jesus Christ, "Go thou and preach the gospel"? In just a few days, without doubt, we will be singing,

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountain or plain or sea.

I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord;
I'll be what you want me to be."

And I would, to-night, that the spirit of that consecration hymn could enter into the hearts of those that are about to go to the various mission-fields, and that they could go out from this conference so consecrated to God and the work whereunto they have been called that there would be no running in home every few months, no shirking of duty, no strenuous efforts made to have our missions changed to some more congenial clime; but, having implicit trust in God, recognizing the divine call that has come to us for consecrated lives, be willing to go anywhere, be willing to do and to dare for the Christ's sake.

We have put our hands to the plow. Are we going to look back? We have entered into his service. We are called to be lights to the world, and to all its inhabitants. There has been given unto us a message, the issues of which are life and death to all around us. There are people who are hungering for the bread of life.

Since I have been here in Lamoni, I have received letters asking for more men in various parts of the field where I have labored this last year than I could possibly supply. Every man I have had could be put in the new places to meet the present demands that are coming.

A brother remarked in my presence the other day, Have you observed that but few of the young men of the church are asking for missions, and are willing to go out and engage in the service of the Lord? Yes, I have observed it. And I have observed it with a degree of sadness. I have observed this, that there are so many of them who say, I want to go to work, I want to get some money. I want to get a home. I want to get a little nest-egg to rely upon when I am old.

Why? Because they have not faith in God. Because they have not confidence in Jesus Christ. Because, they have not confidence in the triumph of his work, they want to go it alone.

We want to offer an excuse, and say, Why, permit me to get this little nest-egg, permit me to build my home, and all that, and when I get things just as I want them, why, then I will go and preach the gospel.

What a mistake we are making! I believe that the call that may be this night burning within the hearts of some of the young men of this church should be answered with the response, Here am I, Lord, send me. I believe that it should burn so deeply in the heart that the life should be completely consecrated, and that every tie, and everything that binds us to this world, and to the natural life of pleasure or carnality should be cut off. We should stand out, trusting God, and moving forward, as he has decreed in his word.

And I have observed another thing; and that the spirit of covetousness is manifesting itself within the church. Sometimes I am afraid it hits our ministry more or less. I notice the brethren studying the Bishop's report, to see who had the most money last year; and sometimes as we study it and do not understand all the conditions, it seems as though some one is getting too much; they are getting more than we are, and there is murmur and complaint. Can I impress upon you to-night, brethren, this thought, that it does not make any difference what other people do, you and I who have been called to the service of God have something to do, and what is that? Just what God will have us do, regardless of what any other man on the face of the earth may do; get right with him, become consecrated entirely to him and to his service.

There is another thought that seems borne in upon me this evening, and I want to impress it upon you, if I can. The Prophet Alma, upon one occasion, sent his boy on a mission. He was a good man, you know, a high priest over the church. And he expected great things; and after a time a report of evil came to him. Things were not right. So he started into the land where the boy had been sent to labor. And he found that he had given himself over to pleasure. He had given himself to wine and to sensuality. When he met the boy he said, Oh, my son, when the people saw your conduct, they would not believe my words.

Have you ever thought of the message in that respect, how easy it may be to become a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offense, and by our conduct to do that which will make it an absolute impossibility for some one to preach the gospel and win souls to Christ? Then how careful we should be in our deportment, everywhere, that not even the breath of suspicion or slander might be truthfully urged against us in our work, that our lives should be so consecrated in response to the call that comes that we will be ever in the proper place, not the improper one.

There comes to my mind in connection with this thought of consecration to the work of God, and the demand for immediate service, a story that I read in the Autumn Leaves, if memory serves me right. A man who was a Catholic priest, whose study had led him to the conclusion that Catholicism was wrong, did not know what to do. But in a city some miles east of here he saw a piece of paper blown by the wind in the street, and as he picked it up and examined it he found a tract containing an advertisement of a conference of the Church of Jesus Christ, to be held at Nauvoo. "Well," he says, "that is strange; I never heard of that church before. The Church of Jesus Christ, I believe I will go down there."

And he went to Nauvoo. He heard the Prophet preach one sermon, and he was convinced in that sermon. At the close he arose and asked for baptism. Brother Joseph led him to the water and immersed him in the Mississippi. He sat down on the end of a log, his hands were laid upon his head in confirmation, and the Spirit rested upon the Prophet, and said, Ordain him to the office of elder, which he did. Then the spirit of prophecy moved upon him, and he said, Go and preach the gospel. My messenger will go before thy face; the opening way shall be prepared before you. You shall lack for nothing. You shall come again bearing many sheaves.

He said, Why, Brother Joseph, I have come down here to conference, can't I stay until it is over?

The Prophet looked at him a moment and said, Go now and preach the gospel.

But I am all wet. Can't I go back to the house and get some dry clothes?

Again the message came, Go now.

And he started out on the street, wondering, Well, this is a strange experience. I wonder where I am going. I came down here to attend the conference, and I have been baptized; I have been ordained, and I am going out on a mission all wet. Where in the world am I going, and what in the world does it mean? But he kept walking. By and by a team drew near in which were two or three men. They asked him to ride. He did so, and they looked at him and remarked, Why, you are wet, where have you been?

He told them the story of his conversion in simplicity, and they became interested and said, Well now, that is unusual. Come down and stop with us to-night. There is a little hall near there, and we will get you a congregation. So he went to their home and was provided with dry clothing, and found lodging. They opened the hall, called in the neighbors and he began to preach. And presently he baptized about thirty members into the church, if memory serves me right.

When he came back how truthfully he could say, I have lacked nothing. The opening way was prepared. God's word was fulfilled, and I have come here with these souls that have heard the gospel and accepted it, just as the Lord promised me.

I can see truth in that. If that man had waited until the close of the conference he would have lost his opportunity. If that man had waited for dry clothing, he would have lost his opportunity. When the call came for duty he was ready. He responded instantly. The Lord stood by him. And there was power that accompanied his word, power that entered into the souls of the people and wrought upon their hearts, and they were convinced and became obedient to the truth.

I would to-night that the Lord would give unto us more fully the spirit of entire consecration to his service. And not only to the brethren of the ministry, but I would like to address it especially to those who toil in the avocations of life, to-night. There is just as large a field of opportunity for you as for the brethren of the ministry; and as God prospers you, pay your tithing, comply with the law of consecration, do your duty, that you may have your share in the rich blessings that are promised, and that you may be permitted to enter in at last to the rest promised unto the children of the Lord.

Of General Interest

Current Reading.

THE TREND OF READING.

More and more clearly is it recognized that the public to-day is being educated by the publications of general circulation. Greater responsibility, therefore, rests on the publisher for his production, and on the reader for his selection, of periodicals.

The present multitude of periodicals has this serious disadvantage: we are tempted to use our leisure, not in the thorough and fruitful reading of one, but in the careless and unproductive skimming of many. If in the home there are young people with mental habits yet unformed, it is especially better to have not many periodicals, but a few, each one of which has been thoughtfully selected.

What periodicals we do have should be the best. In determining which these are we should be sure, first of all, that the weekly paper or the magazine for which we subscribe is edited not merely for the selfish interest of the proprietor, but really for us. The publisher of a popular periodical is under a constant temptation to sacrifice the interest of his readers to the desire to gain greater circulation. Under the plea that he must give his readers "what they want," he surrenders his moral self-respect and shirks his plain duty as a public servant. The publisher concerned chiefly for the commercial value of a large circulation has not the courage to give the conscientious editing which insists upon the best work of the best minds. He is in the shameful position of one who uses the great moral instrument which he controls solely for his private gain.

THE PARENT IS THE LEADER.

We must be sure, therefore, that the periodical we invite to our homes is honestly edited for us. If there are young folks, the reading of the home must be watched with double care. Boys and girls enjoy the same sort of reading as their parents: for the very young it must, of course, be more simply phrased, but even for them it need not be different in kind. Parents are, in any case, the natural leaders in selecting the reading for the family. Whether they realize it or not, what they read will powerfully affect the choice of their young folks. They need not think that they can indulge in questionable reading and not have their children do so, too. In the family no book or periodical should be allowed which does not help to build mind and character, and is not an inspiration to high ideals. It is both a parental and a public duty to see that young folks are wisely guided in their reading. Their emotions are quick, their imaginations overactive and undisciplined, their love of excitement is keen; the critical powers are low, their judgment is immature, their knowledge of the realities of life is practically nil. They have, as a result, substantially no natural protection against the literary charlatan and quack.

STORIES OF CRIMINALS.

Even the boy of the best upbringing may be powerfully attracted by the sensational story of impossible adventure, by tales of crime and criminals, by cheap, slangy and vulgar comicities. The girl may be fascinated by the silly, false and offensive sentimentality of a certain mushy kind of cheap love-story. They may, in short, be easily caught by any writing which is crude in color, violent in incident, questionable in taste, and specious in morals. How can they know, who as yet know little of life, that these highly colored pictures of it are most misleading?

At its worst, cheap reading destroys their minds and their morals. For the pleasure given by this reading is, in its essence, a sort of nervous excitation differing little from that afforded by certain drugs. It becomes a habit, a dissipation, a deeply rooted craving for excitement almost impossible to destroy. It spoils all taste for really wholesome books, it makes anything like mental application impossible; it weakens the moral fiber as any vicious indulgence weakens it, as any habit which masters the individual weakens him. And having thus debilitated mind and character, this "literature" adds to its evil effects by all sorts of immoral and vicious suggestion. Science of late years has taught us more than we ever knew before of the subtle power of suggestion; better than ever before, consequently, can we realize the mischief done by unwholesome books, periodicals and newspapers. Those who print fascinating stories of fast life, of thieves, confidence men, and race-track gamblers and all that disreputable crew, incur a heavy responsibility. Their satanic literature makes fast boys and girls, and of fast boys and girls, some are sure to become criminal men and women.

READING IS COMPANIONSHIP.

Contrast with the young people with whom reading has degenerated into a vice the boys and girls whose taste has been trained and strengthened. There is no greater benefit than a sound taste for reading, a cultivated love for what is best. For what is reading in its highest form but companionship with the best informed, most learned, most moral, most cultivated minds in the world? It is to have ready access to practical information, to the highest moral influences, to the largest wisdom, to the most uplifting inspiration. It is to have the character strengthened, the efficiency increased, the mind "suppled" and exercised, the spirit refined and exalted. It is to have efficient mental power—the ability, that is, to apply and concentrate the mind.

Not many boys and girls probably will reach either the lowest degradation of reading or its most exalted plane. What we wish to make sure is that what steps they do take shall be not down but up. The question is how that may be best managed. We believe that the key to the problem lies in the right choice of fiction. Every now and then comes a boy whose natural bent toward mechanics, or botany, or travel, or electricity, or what not, is so strong that he will read instructive books from the start. Happy are that boy's parents, for the task of making his reading useful to him is easy—they have only to see that he does not grow mentally lopsided by too exclusive attention to his hobby. But not many boys, and perhaps fewer girls, have such strong natural bents. But there never was a child since the dawn of time who did not beg for a story. The love of a story is deeply implanted in human nature, and is universal; and through this taste for fiction, the writer and editor can reach the nascent character and do a useful work—nor need he disdain or any parent fear an instrument which He who told the parables did not despise.

A HIGH PURPOSE NECESSARY.

The writer for the young, whose aims are really high, must first of all make his fiction interesting. Then into his fiction he must inject the salutary influence. This he may do in a great variety of ways. He may, for example, utilize his tale of adventure to awaken a taste for natural history, an interest in foreign lands, people and customs, or to give an interesting lesson in geography, or to instruct in the wonders of some courageous trade like bridge-building or railroading. Again, he may utilize his story of temptation and moral struggle to awaken admiration for the nobilities of character. It is possible for the story-teller to start a thousand impulses toward reading of a higher grade; the actual transition from fiction to the literature of instruction is what he can not manage.

A GOOD PERIODICAL—A LIBRARY IN ITSELF.

That, the parent, the librarian and the editor can do. The parent may assemble a library for his children, can guide, help and suggest, say the word in season which encourages the leap from good fiction to better fiction, from the hunting sketch to the book on nature, from the historical tale to history. But not many parents have the money to buy the books or the leisure to do the teaching, and some have not the tact and knowledge, and public libraries and librarians are not omnipresent.

It is the editor who can do most. The periodical costs infinitely less than the private library; it is not fixed, like the public library; at small expense it can be brought into the remotest home. But what is a still greater advantage is the fact that it can print the instructive and the entertaining, fiction and fact in juxtaposition—where the most thoughtless young reader will sometime be prompted, having read the one, to read the other. The editor can grade his reading, and vary it, and so provide a constant inducement to readers to take a step upward. The ideal periodical for the family will be one so edited and arranged as to provide what may be called a graded school of reading, which can take the youngest child and lead him up and on until he reaches maturity, and then—still interest him! For since the parent, as has already been said, is the natural leader in the reading of the family, a family paper will be the best—a paper, that is, which is interesting to young and old alike, which they read and discuss together, and which makes for real companionship between all the members of the family. No parent, recognizing his responsibility for the family reading, can fail to see what opportunities for correcting, stimulating and directing the family taste are afforded by the constant, familiar family discussion of what is read in common by himself and his wife, his daughter and his son.

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—The publishers of The Youth's Companion have caused the foregoing to be printed in the hope that it would suggest the queries, What are the standards by which periodicals for family reading should be selected? and Who is responsible for the selection?)

The Land of Fulfilled Promise.

THE MEMBERS OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH ENTER PROTEST.

M. D. Murdock, Millersburg, Illinois, is a warm admirer of The National Tribune, but was very much surprised to see the article, entitled "The land of fulfilled promise." He belongs to that portion of the Mormons known as the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. Many of them wore the blue and carried muskets in defense of the country, and he wishes to say that the statements in regard to the Book of Mormon are only a "rehash" of the old Solomon Spalding story. The thing purporting to be the original Book of Mormon, and which is now in the archives of Oberlin College, Ohio, is no more like the Book of Mormon than day is like night. It is not true that no one but Joseph Smith saw the golden plates. In the first part of the book is the testimony of three witnesses who saw the plates and the testimony of eight that they had seen and handled the plates. These witnesses repeated this testimony on their deathbeds. Antiquarians in their researches have substantiated the truth of the Book of Mormon. It is a mistake to say that Joseph Smith created a serious schism by his revelation as to spiritual wives. This is not true, as was shown in the Court of Common Pleas of Lake County, Ohio. Polygamy, Adam-god nor blood atonement was not taught by Joseph Smith and his people, but were introduced by Brigham Young and his associates. While Brigham Young fulfilled the prophetic vision, it is also true that he has been all along a violator of the law, and no man can follow his teachings and be a good American citizen.

Mrs. Emeline J. Davidson, Mammoth, Utah, does not doubt that the Mormons had a hard time crossing the plains, but she knows that Joseph Smith was no impostor and that he never made any promises or prophecy that did not come true. She understands through Brigham Young and other Mormons that it was only after they were at what is known as "Winter Quarters" that they decided to go into the Salt Lake Valley. They were going to California, as they supposed. She has read the Book of Mormon, reported to have been written by Solomon Spalding, which is in the library at Oberlin, Ohio, and knows that it is not anything like the true Book of Mormon. It is nothing but a dime novel. She does not think Joseph Smith had the revelation at Nauvoo in regard to spiritual wives. That was concocted by Brigham Young after Joseph Smith's death. She knows nothing of the present head of the Salt Lake church, but the church followers of Joseph Smith have their headquarters at Lamoni and Joseph Smith's son is the head of the church. At his death his son will succeed him. The Salt Lakers have fulfilled the prophecy in Jeremiah, where it says: "For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited." Mrs. Davidson is the widow of Comrade J. A. Davidson.—National Tribune.

The Olden-Time Gospel.

BY ERMINA PERKINS KEARNEY.

How dear to my heart is the olden-time gospel,
 Jerusalem gospel, so pure and so true;
 It gave to its children the gifts and the blessings
 So precious of old which our forefathers knew.
 The different gifts by the very same Spirit,
 Of faith and of wisdom and visions, it told;
 Of healing and tongues, and of interpretation,
 And prophecy, too, in this gospel of old.
 That promising gospel, that truth-telling gospel,
 That prophetic gospel, that gospel of old.

Though I'm far removed from the time when this gospel
 Was given by Jesus to people on earth,
 I still can rejoice in its glorious message
 As given again in its latter-day birth.
 The very same gifts, visions, healings, and knowledge—
 The very same gospel we offer to you;
 It's God is unchanged, and the very same Savior,
 The very same gospel our forefathers knew.
 The trustworthy gospel, the soul-saving gospel,
 Our forefathers' gospel we offer to you.

Pray do not reject it and class as unworthy

This olden-time gospel the Savior hath sent;
 It is for a witness to all tongues and people,
 And everywhere calls unto sinners "Repent."

'Tis God who has spoken, his word is for ever,
 He's Alpha, Omega, beginning and end.

Reflect, oh reflect on this message most precious,
 Which he the last time to his children doth send;
 The thrice-blessed gospel, the life-giving gospel,
 The olden-time gospel our Father doth send.

CLINTON, MISSOURI, August, 1909.

"A Christian Gentleman."

A party of Americans was camping by the Sea of Galilee. They had started at five o'clock from Nazareth, and by hard riding, as riding counts for inexperienced riders, had reached Tiberias for a late luncheon. The tents had arrived before them, and were partly up.

Many of the tourists sought their shade as soon as luncheon was over, and threw themselves down for a half hour of rest. One of them fell asleep. He was an elderly man, and the journey had been hard upon him. Scenes to which he had looked forward most eagerly he now beheld with languid interest. Many of the emotions which tourists anticipate in sacred places come to them in the retrospect. At the time of the visit sheer fatigue and the various distractions of travel render elevation all but impossible.

The day's heat contrasted greatly with the chill of the early start. The saddle was an unaccustomed seat. The elderly tourist had but one ambition when luncheon was over, and that was rest. He had slept little in his tent in Nazareth the night before, but the sleep into which he sank the moment he lay down in the shade of the tent at Tiberias was a perfect luxury of oblivion.

"Wake up! Wake up!" cried the dragoman, when the old gentleman had slept but half an hour. "It is time for a sail on the lake. The boats are at the landing. Wake up!"

The tired traveler rose with something hardly less than fury in his voice and manner.

"How dare you waken me?" he demanded. "I will have you discharged, you insolent fellow!"

The dark skin of the dragoman flushed, the color mounting through the tan to his temples. Then he calmly said, "You are a Christian gentleman. I am an Arab. It is not becoming that I should answer you, except to say that I was doing my duty."

The American's turn had come to flush, and it was a blush of shame. "I have learned many lessons on this tour," he said to himself, "but this one I did not look for."

He went to the water's edge and bathed his face. How cool the water felt! How refreshing had been even his half hour of sleep! How sorry he would have been to miss the sail this glorious afternoon!

He sought the dragoman and offered his hand.

"Forgive my hasty words," said he. "I was very tired. I thank you for waking me, and for your patience under my unjust words. I will try to prove myself what you have called me."

The two men clasped hands with genuine respect and mutual admiration.

Then came the sail, and such a sail! At first there was no wind, and the boatmen were "toiling in rowing." But as they emerged into the wider area of the lake, a sudden breeze sprang up, refreshing and cool, and bore the boats swiftly over the blue surface of Galilee; and every wave that rippled along the side seemed eloquent of Him who sailed that sea and loved it.

Now they approached the shore and saw fishers mending their nets; now they launched forth into the deep; now they landed to see a sacred spot; now they sailed again. Not till darkness began to fall did they return to their supper of fish caught from these waters, and to a night of perfect rest in the quiet tents beside the sea.

One tourist, as he knelt beside his cot and thanked God for the day, asked forgiveness for his hasty speech, and prayed for grace to be, in the vexations and discomforts of travel, "a Christian gentleman."—Selected.

MEDIA, ILLINOIS, October 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: Some time has elapsed since I have written to your columns, but have not read your pages without interest.

Our work here in Kewanee District is not as onward as it could be if we had more missionaries. We are almost compelled to work alone; in fact, we have done much street work alone the past summer. It certainly takes some "nerve" for one to start alone on the street, but spurred on by the knowledge that the work can not meet defeat, and if one serves God he has no need to fear, you feel like it is not so lonely after all.

Our conference at Joy, Illinois, was a good one and well attended, which indicates a good spiritual condition. I will be at Henderson, Illinois, on the 17th of October to stay a week or ten days in a series of meetings. Should any one desire meetings please address me at Henderson, Illinois. Will try and answer any correspondence.

Our debate with the Christian preacher "fanned out." He couldn't find a date that he could possibly use. We had propositions made out, but they didn't suit because we wanted him to affirm his church was the church of Christ. The most he cared about was a whack at Joseph Smith and Book of Mormon. Well, in order to be good, we allowed him to write his own proposition. Just listen: "Resolved, That the Book of Mormon and Joe Smith's revelations were a base fraud." He very kindly offered to change the word base to a "less harsh word having the same meaning." Nice (?) man. He wanted to be good, but really didn't know how. His resolution was a bluff, but when we quietly nodded and said, "That will do," he was surprised and looked for knothole number two to sneak out at. His time was very much taken for a month ahead and finally he said, "Well, I'll write to you when I'm ready." We told him we didn't expect to hear from him at all.

The Presbyterian preacher at Joy is still howling for vengeance and should meet his "Waterloo" as soon as possible. The Saints there are sorely tried on his account. May God give them patience to endure.

Ever hopeful for God's cause,

MIDDLETOWN, OHIO, October 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: At the conference and reunion I was appointed by Brother Griffiths to return and continue my labors at this place. We have a nice church house and quite a goodly number of Saints here. This is a manufacturing city of about eighteen thousand people, but one of those few places in the great State of Ohio which has not gone dry.

We find our labors to be of a pleasant nature here, with quite a large field for operation; yet it seems hard to interest the people to the extent we desire. About eighteen young people have been baptized during the summer, and wife and I are making a house to house canvass. Our Religio and Sunday school are increasing in attendance and also a good interest is manifested by most of the Saints. We have great hopes for the future of this place, as we have our next conference here next February.

One of the most pleasant experiences of my ministerial life was had here on the evening of September 25 at the home of Bro. Thomas R. Wren, when he and his good wife celebrated their golden wedding, which had been first celebrated in Maidstone, England, on September 25, 1859. The home was nicely decorated with flowers and an assembly of about fifty were present. Covers were laid for fifty and an excellent luncheon partaken of. Many were the beautiful and costly presents received. One, a loving cup, nicely engraved, was presented by the Middletown Branch. But that which needs the most fitting tribute of respect was a letter sent by the management of the Champion Coated Paper Mills, where our brother has been employed for quite a number of years, a copy of which I herewith inclose. It is only proper to say that we are made glad when one of our elders can have a voluntary tribute like this given him after almost a lifetime of service. His many friends and acquaintances will be pleased to learn that he is still able to continue his daily labor, though seventy years of age.

"HAMILTON, OHIO, September 25, 1909.

Wren; Dear Sir: In the absence of my father and elder brother I feel it to be my pleasant duty and privilege to write to you upon the occasion of your golden jubilee and ask Mr. Rolfe to bring you this note and read it so that all of your guests may know the feelings of friendship that we have for you and appreciation of your years of loyal and efficient service in our employ.

"We are proud of men who work to the best of their ability and commend you as an example to the world.

The campaign for the winter has been outlined for us this winter by our minister in charge (Brother Griffiths) and he has set the example by being out in the front, paving the way for others to follow in the work. I feel like doing everything I can for the advancement of the work we all love so much. After an experience of about thirty years I feel more anxious than ever to be made a partaker in the final triumph of the angel's message and the glory that shall follow.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, October 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: Near the middle of August last we were told of the presence of four elders fresh from Utah. When questioned they were not slow to tell the people that Joseph Smith was a polygamist or argue the scripturalness of the proposition. They further stated it was useless for any one to deny. So I put in an appearance at the close of their Sunday night meeting. While I first (on being given a hearing before the crowd on the streets of Nebo) conceded the truthfulness of the first principles which they had taught as sufficient to save, I could not refrain from urging why they kept back that important clause in Doctrine and Covenants that makes salvation dependent on polygamy. I further urged them to explain how they could believe Joseph and Hyrum Smith honest and believe them polygamists. Since their public denials of that criminal doctrine if they succeeded in proying them polygamists, it would prove them liars. Not only the Smith brothers, but others said they knew of nothing of the kind in Nauvoo except Bennett's secret wife system. I publicly challenged them to prove that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, and offered one hundred dollars if they could prove that Joseph or the church prior to June 27, 1844, taught that nefarious and abominable God-dishonoring doctrine. They agreed to come back in November, but have not heard from them since.

Elder J. A. Tanner, of Saint Louis, closed a week's meeting here September 29, which was edifying and instructive to the Saints.

I was one of the participants in the dedication of the Baptist church at Gillispie, Macoupen County, Illinois. It came about in this wise: I have two brothers who are Baptist preachers. Elder H. L. Derr, of the Baptists, was selected to assist the good people of Gillispie Baptist Church to solicit funds to pay off their debt. Being acquainted with all of us brothers, he thought the novelty of two brothers holding a discussion would serve as a drawing card to draw a crowd. The crowd was what he wanted; the crowd must be had or no collections. So my brother Robert and I were invited "to discuss the Mormon question." The discussion was held October 2, from 3 to 5 and from 7 to 9 p. m. The proposition was "concerning the teaching and doctrines of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints according to the scriptures." I opened the discussion before that audience mostly of Baptists and some Baptist preachers, in the affirmative, by going carefully over the published epitome of the faith, urging the necessity of notice of all the points. I kept this epitome continually before the audience. Not one of these points were noticed.

The old stock in trade, "Old Joe Smith," "equal with Christ," "Why not be resurrected," etc., were brought forth. Some aping of W. G. Roberts was had. Although this is strictly a Baptist hold, when all this silly stuff was exposed, it proved to have no weight.

On Sunday, October 3, at 3 p. m., Elder H. S. Derr and writer occupied on the proposition, "Can a child of God so apostatize as to be finally lost?" I affirmed and Elder Derr denied. At 7 we discussed the proposition, "Does John 3: 5, 'Born of water and of the Spirit,' mean water where it says water?" I affirmed and Elder Derr denied. This made in all seven speeches or sermons in favor of this latter-day work I had the privilege of making in the new Baptist church. The people treated me kindly, taking me to their homes and showing me all the consideration one could possibly wish; more invitations to visit than I could respond to. I stayed part of the time with a Baptist preacher to whom I became endeared. The fair spirit, the earnest consideration, and intensely interested audience that was given the message that I brought them, together with their kind and hospitable recognition, indelibly stamps upon my soul a profound love and affection for that people.

One told me that if I could preach their (the Baptist) doctrine with the liberty and earnestness that I defended the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints, I could command a salary of two thousand dollars per annum. Leaving self in the background and placing the honor where it belongs, I feel to thank God that he in his own way is honoring his own cause and will continue until latter-day glory is yet beheld on wider fields and broader plains. Oh, that the untold thousands of honest men and women who never heard this great message may yet hear and live in its light! I told them there that I would be glad to assist in that way in dedicating every Baptist church in the State of Illinois. I have invitations to debate questions of church differences in Franklin County, Illinois. I am hopeful in the conflict.

Editors Herald: The writer of this letter greatly enjoys your weekly visits. His first subscription was January, 1876, and he has not missed a number to this date that he is aware of. The contents of your pages are very uplifting. They grow brighter every day.

I want to call your attention to a statement in your issue of September 29, page 928. In a letter from Eldorado Springs a statement is credited to Paul that money is the "root of all evil." Now it may be that the compositor or proofreader has made a mistake and given the quotation wrong, but if they have not, then the brother should tell us where the quotation is found in Paul's writings. I can not find it in my Bible. We may be accused of having another Bible. Latter Day Saints do not like to be misquoted and as a result misrepresented. Paul is not alive to defend himself against those who misquote him. We should always defend our friends in their absence, if their friends or their enemies misquote them. I come to the defense of my friend Paul and ask for the chapter and verse.

Your brother,
EDWARD RANNIE.

GOODWIN, OKLAHOMA, October 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are busy in quest of the scattered members of the Western Oklahoma District, and are finding a few of them as we journey.

Since August 20 we have been constantly in the field, although a good share of the entire year has been so spent, but when we were appointed president of the district we felt that our entire time was demanded and accordingly made arrangements to enter the field and give our exclusive time and attention to the work of the ministry. We expected to commence September 1, but a call from Brother Case came to us, requesting that we be in attendance and assist with the Terlton reunion. Accordingly we complied and have been busy in the field ever since.

Times for the farmers in this State are generally hard this year, on account of the severe drought and hot winds. Accordingly there were many who were not able to attend our reunions. To help to recompense in a measure for this, we projected and held a grove meeting in Sterling Grove, near Richmond, Oklahoma. This was September 11 to 19 inclusive. In this effort we were assisted by Bro. Hubert Case and the local brethren. An excellent spirit was manifested and a good time had. One was baptized and more were near the kingdom.

From this meeting Brother Case was called home by news of the illness of his eldest daughter. Here we were made to rejoice by Bro. H. F. Durfey offering to join us in a trip through the northwestern portion of our district. We had been wondering how we should accomplish this journey, but Elder Durfey, with his team and buggy, came to our rescue, and we were very glad of the proffered assistance. We wish to say right here that we found Brother Durfey an able as well as congenial coworker.

We left Seiling, September 21, visiting friends and Saints and preaching as opportunity offered in and near the following places: Curtis, Moreland, Woodward, Fern, Buffalo, Doby Springs, May, Surprise, Weeks, and Grand.

From this latter point Brother Durfey returned home to look after business interests and we are alone in the work here at present. We were sorry to lose him but hope to have his help again later on. We have found quite a number of isolated members, some of whom we have been able to put in touch with other Saints, isolated like themselves and not aware of any others of the covenant near by. At May, or near the old Bethel post-office, at the home of Bro. C. H. Blakesley, we met Brn. J. H. Baker, James Yates, and S. J.

Hinkle, gathered for the discussion to be held there between Brother Yates and a Reverend Platt, I believe, of the Holiness persuasion. We would have liked to remain to witness the battle, but could not. Here we turned over a few names of scattered ones to Brother Baker, as we saw that our time would not permit us to reach every point individually.

We are trying as far as possible to visit all the scattered Saints of this district before the February conference, which is to be held at Davidson, Oklahoma, February 19 and 20. From this point we expect to return to Seiling and vicinity about the 18th and will reach home (Alva) by the end of the month. Then we propose to turn southward. We should be glad to hear from any of the scattered Saints of this field and will answer all calls as far as practicable.

A. M. CHASE.

AKRON, IOWA, September 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have thought many times how selfish it is to be always feasting on the good I receive from others' letters in the HERALD and Ensign and never to contribute anything for the good of others.

While I was in Independence this summer I heard it said that if the Saints were very diligent in their fastings and prayers they might have Joseph spared to them a number of years. I have not yet known of a set time of fasting and prayer especially for him.

I am a firm believer in the prayers of the Saints. I can not say I have such faith in my own prayers, but I do not cease to pray. Some of the disciples of Christ failed in some of their efforts and turned to ask why they failed. Jesus told them, "Such went not out but by prayer and fasting." I am sure there has never been a time when God's people needed to be humble and diligent in the Master's service more than now.

While reading my Bible lesson to-day I was impressed to write to the HERALD readers that I might encourage some one to renew their diligence and try to heed the oft-repeated word, "Come up higher." My lesson was the twelfth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, wherein King Herod stretched forth his hand to vex certain of the church. He killed James and because he saw it pleased the Jews he was going to take Peter, but instead he imprisoned him, intending to deal with him later. But in the meantime many of the church were gathered together praying. Now a damsel answered the rap at the door, but was so delighted to see it was Peter and the very thing they were praying for, that she did not stop to let him in but ran back to tell them he was at the door. They were so shocked they could not believe it possible that the very thing they were praying for was granted. My great wonder is, if a fast and prayer day was appointed for Joseph to be healed and spared, would we pray in such faith that if it was granted we could believe our prayers were answered, or would we say as those praying people did to Rhoda, "You are mad"? O, for a faith that will not shrink.

I have heard it said a sister was healed instantly through the Prayer Union, and why not, if we have faith in God and his promises? As I said, I have not faith enough in my own prayers, but I do want the prayers of all God's children that if it be his will I may be freed from such constant suffering and that my loved ones may in some way be brought to a knowledge of the truth and obey it.

Let us pray without doubting. I was going to prayer meeting once and started early to stop and visit a sick woman that belonged to the Christian Church, and I told her where I was going. It was twelve blocks from my home to the church. She said, "Mrs. Christy, are not you afraid to go so far to meeting?"

I said, "No, what would I be afraid of?"

"Why, tramps."

Well, I said I did not like to ask God to take care of me and then doubt him. She said she did not think of that, but she had not enough faith anyway.

Dear Saints, let us pray for one another, for the day is fading fast.

Your sister in bonds,

M. A. CHRISTY.

O'KEEFE, WEST VIRGINIA.

I have been holding meetings in a schoolhouse near the station Devon. The first time that I was at the meeting only few were out, and that was about the usual crowd. After the preacher ran down, I asked the privilege of saying a few words, which was granted me. I stated that I was here for a few days, and would like to talk to them if no one else had an appointment, and it was so announced. I was rather surprised to see so many turn out, as the seats were all filled. I suppose some came to see if I had horns. After I had spoken sixty minutes, although three other speakers were present, only one spoke after me. I had heard him before and had talked with him on the train. I preached along the line that Jesus and the apostles of old taught, and some of the conflicting teaching we have to-day. When he got up I thought it was to close the meeting, but he gave out a text, "Preach the word." He said that he had nothing else to preach. Said that the brother had preached the word to us, yes, had preached the gospel in its purity and that they should give heed to it. Said he was glad to have me with them, and hoped I would stay for some time, and that they would turn out and hear me, for it was the word of God.

There were not so many out the next night, and less the next, and yet everyone seemed glad that I was going to stay longer than I had intended. Thursday night was my last appointment, as it was announced that some other preacher was to preach Friday and Saturday nights. He didn't come Friday night. When I came back from the office I called at the house near the schoolhouse and the preachers were there, and we got onto scriptural things. I knew he didn't preach, but I spoke more for the benefit of those in the house, but he indorsed all I said and said it should be so to-day, etc.

On Sunday, I had an enjoyable time in filling my appointment at the schoolhouse. When I first got there, no key could be found, but we finally got one from a hotel, and a young preacher and myself opened up. After a while some children came and at length we had the church filled with old and young, who had come to hear the Michigan preacher, as they had reported that I was from Detroit, instead of Flint. While I was waiting I sang, "There is a land immortal." I sang in a clear tone, which surprised me, and I think I must have sung in the Spirit. Some said they had never heard the like in the mountains before, and that may have been true, for I couldn't name any tune that I have heard them sing since coming here. The young preacher opened the meeting with prayer for me. I spoke as led by the Spirit for over an hour, although some thought it had not been over thirty minutes. As usual, at the close of the meeting, the people came and shook hands with the preacher, and some ladies who are here visiting and who had not heard me before, said they would not have missed it for anything, as they were highly pleased and edified.

A preacher who claims to be a bishop of the Baptist Church spoke Saturday night. He was what I would call a "slug hammer" preacher, and the two churches that I stood with in my young days got hard blows from his hammer. When I was asked by his followers the next day what I thought of his sermon, I answered that I couldn't make much out of it as I couldn't understand him. I was not used to that kind of preaching. I said I might tell them in my sermon on Sunday, and they said, "Do."

Sunday came, and I was at my post to deliver the message that God had for those that might come to hear. I saw some strange faces that hadn't been out before and it was in line to introduce myself to them, and tell for what purpose I was with them. I told them I had nothing new to tell them, and yet it was new. It was the same old story that God the eternal Father sent his son down to the earth to tell the people, and which Christ sent his servants to carry to the nations and to the ends of the earth. I told them they were advised the other night to examine very closely every man's claim, and I hoped that they would and prove all things by the word of God. I told them that "he that is of God, will speak the things of God," and that I did not belong to the class that the brother spoke of the other night, although I was raised in that faith, and thanked God for the good teaching I received while with them. They believed that some were born to be saved, and some to be damned, and as I belonged to the elect, I would be saved no matter what I did.

When I found out by reading in God's word that sprinkling was not the mode of baptism, I got into the Baptist boat and sailed in that for a while; but neither did they have the Bible mode of baptism. I was taught that before I could become a member of that body, I had to believe that out of Christ there was no salvation, and the only way to get into him was by baptism, and that baptism was by burial in water. That would exclude all other kinds of baptism. I was also taught that it took all the churches to constitute the body of Christ. I told of the times when we had protracted meetings, and all seemed to enjoy the same kind of a spirit, and I often wondered why all this contention in dividing the spoils, if all the churches composed the body of Christ. What difference which church was joined? You could hear some say, "Amen" to that, but they didn't know what I had to tell yet. What troubled me most was that those who didn't come in with us to the Baptist Church were not baptized and didn't know how it would go with them at last. So I went to my preacher about it. He asked me what was troubling me. I asked him why these dear brethren that were joining other churches were not baptized, and he replied that as long as they thought it was baptizing (meaning sprinkling) it would be all right with them, that God would not keep them out of heaven just for a little water. "Then it is easier to get into heaven than it is to get into the Baptist Church?" His reply was that I shouldn't pry so deep into the scriptures, and if I didn't stop I would go crazy.

Then I told the people how the gospel found me, and this was an eye opener for a great many of them. It started them thinking and they are still thinking and asking questions.

I would like to tell you of my experiences for this week. I have been telling the people of the people that are coming from the north country that is near at hand, how the Spirit of God will be poured out on all flesh, about Jesus coming to reign with his people, etc. This is all new to them. I expect to speak Sunday at Devon, and perhaps north of here.

A. MCKENZIE.

Extracts from Letters.

Andrew Walters, Barryton, Michigan: "I want to help the cause all I can, as thereby I am helping my ownself, being one of the faith. Our branch (the Fork) of northern Michigan is about all gone away, which causes me to feel sad and tears often start to think of the good old times we used to have when the branch was in a flourishing condition, when we feasted on the Spirit. But I am in hopes of moving to some other live branch soon. If any of the Fork Branch should see this, I will say my family and myself are well in body and firm in the faith. With love to all and best wishes for the cause."

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Just returned to the city from a two-week service at Hastie, during which several stated they believed we taught the truth, and others are investigating. Some to be baptized there in two weeks.

Doctor Osborne, who assisted J. Wilber Chapman in his revival services in this city, spoke before the Ministerial Association this morning. Among many good things stated were these:

"Theaters are paying good dividends while the churches are running in debt.

"The church members are furnishing the money to pay the dividends to theater syndicates.

"The majority of the churches in the large cities are about half filled while the theaters are crowded.

"Ministers are paying too much attention to the professional and not enough to the spiritual.

"Divorces are on the increase, principally in the Protestant denominations.

"A great mistake is being made in this, the children attending the Sunday school and not attending the church, and the parents attending the church but not the Sunday school,—a fruitful source of separations of a serious nature in the home, and in the spiritual association of families."

Sr. Kate Waller has been selected as secretary of an association to establish a children's hospital in the city.

Brother Dexter made a short stay in the city. He was engaged by the Banker's Life Association, as stenographer, and assisted in church work actively while here.

Sr. Clara Brockett has passed through a very severe trial. Within a month she buried her eldest daughter, a beautiful and accomplished girl of eighteen years, and also her husband, who was very ill when the daughter was buried.

Bro. W. Christy temporarily moved his family here while his wife is taking treatments. Sister Christy is a great sufferer, and the treatment very severe. But hopes are entertained that she will be permanently relieved by this means. A surprise was executed in their favor last Monday night when a large number of the Saints met and brought for them material supplies for the table.

On Tuesday and Tuesday night Sr. M. H. Cook was surprised twice, and will carry with her the good will of the Des Moines Saints. She departed last Thursday night, for Portland, Oregon, where Brother Cook is laboring in the ministry. We wish her a safe journey.

We had the pleasant associations and able ministrations of Elder R. M. Elvin one Lord's Day, he stopping while on the way to the meeting of the League of Iowa Municipalities at Fort Dodge.

Many are afflicted with throat trouble, bordering on diphtheria.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

The Cleveland Branch for the week is of good report. Our prayer meeting last week was larger and as the prayer meeting is considered the thermometer of the church, we are rising. Brother Titus, of Mentor, Ohio, was with us for the evening.

Sunday morning we expected Brother Garrett, of Independence, Missouri, to be with us, but he failed on account of sickness. Elders Theodore Schmidt and Haynes visited him at noon, administered to him, and he was benefited.

Brother Farnfield, of Canada, spoke at the evening service to a good audience. We had visitors from Kirtland. Brother and Sister George and Brother and Sister Hughes. Sister George is here to help the sisters organize a Daughters of Zion local. Sr. R. B. Webbe is secretary.

Brother and Sister Garrett were with us last Wednesday evening at prayer meeting. We had twenty-three present, which is a good number for us. The Spirit spoke through Sister George words of instruction, encouragement, and promise to the branch and also to Brother Farnfield, who has been home with us these two weeks, but who is now about to return to his mission in Canada.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, October 17. How much we would like to report that there was a large attendance at Sunday school and every one on time, but that will have to be postponed until some time in the future. Elder F. G. Pitt occupied during the morning hour, theme, "Examine yourselves and see whether you are in the faith." Many good thoughts were presented. If all the Latter Day Saints were bearing abundant fruits of the Spirit, what shining lights would be pointing out the way of salvation to those who are wandering in darkness and error! How many of us are doing just a little better than we were three months ago? The ministers tell us there is no standing still in the Christian life, we must either go forward or backward; so all should be on the watch to see that we are not moving in the wrong direction. Elder Pement occupied in the evening, not so many in attendance, but there were a number of very appreciative listeners. Sr. J. D. Stuart, of Magnolia, Iowa, and her son L. C., who is a resident of this city, were visitors in the morning, Sister Stuart leaving for her home in the evening.

We are glad to report that Sr. T. Vanderhoof and her little daughter have returned from their trip to Galien, Michigan. Our workers are greatly missed when they are absent, as not many are regular in attendance at all services.

Some of our members have been on the sick list, but are reported better now, Sisters Warlick, Durfee, and Strange. How our prayers should ascend for those who suffer, and also for those who are carrying heavy burdens.

All Saints who are planning to come to the city, please note that our church is located on Sixty-sixth and Honore streets, not on Cottage Grove, as we left that location months ago.

Tuesday, the 19th, was "tag day" for the homeless and parentless children. One thousand society women, actresses, and others were provided with tags printed for the occasion, and large boxes to hold their money, any one giving them from a penny to one hundred dollars were given a tag to fasten on their coat, so no one else would ask them. The tags were to be found on the cars, streets, buildings, and any place where people would be passing, and I do not think many people were overlooked unless they tried to avoid lending assistance. Over forty thousand dollars were collected in this manner, and think it is quite a scheme, as most every one desires to help the children and they can give just what they want, and very few people will know it, possibly not any.

Conference Minutes.

NORTHERN NEBRASKA.—Met at Decatur, Nebraska, October 2, 1909. Prayer meeting at 9 a. m. in charge of H. S. Lytle and J. M. Case. At 10 business meeting was called to order by J. M. Baker, president, who was chosen to preside over the conference; Sr. Anna Hicks was chosen secretary; Sister Baker was chosen chorister. Business passed off peacefully. Practically all being transacted at the forenoon session. The afternoon session was a priesthood meeting, when several points of interest were discussed with profit to all present. During the business session a resolution prevailed inviting the Southwestern Iowa reunion (of which the Northern Nebraska District is now a part) to hold its session of 1910 in the Northern Nebraska District, if a suitable location could be obtained. Adjourned to meet at Blair, Nebraska, the first Saturday and Sunday in February. Preaching by H. S. Lytle and J. M. Baker. A peaceful time was enjoyed throughout. J. M. Baker, by request of secretary.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—Conference met with the Fanning, Kansas, Saints at 11 a. m., September 25, 1909, district president, Samuel Twombly, and assistant minister in charge, H. E. Moler, presiding. Branch statistical reports were read as follows: Atchison 82, loss 2; Blue Rapids 118, gain 6; Centralia 32; Fanning 102, gain 6; Topeka 54, gain 6; Idylwild 69, loss 1; Scranton 93, gain 1; net gain for the district, 16. Ministry reporting: Elders H. E. Moler baptized 1, Samuel Twombly baptized 5, W. S. Hodson, James Baillie baptized 4, W. H. Murphy, V. F. Rogers, George R. Ketchum, A. L. Gurwell, Frank G. Hedrick baptized 2; Priests W. H. Bivens, William Brooks; Teacher B. F. Thomas. Of the eight elders, two priests, and one teacher reporting, the following work was done in the past six months: Services attended 342, sermons 87, in charge of meetings 193, baptized 11, ordained 1, official visits 23, holding official positions 13. The motion of the Blue Rapids Branch for the ordination of Brother Bivens was lost. Adjourned to meet with the Atchison Branch the first part of March, the exact date to be set by the district president. The conference was very spiritual. Frank G. Hedrick, secretary.

Conference Notices.

Western Oklahoma District will convene at Davidson, Oklahoma, February 19 and 20, 1910. Let the branches take notice and as far as practicable send delegates. Also let them have their reports in the hands of our district secretary, Sr. E. T. McKnight, Alva, Oklahoma, not later than February 15. Let the local ministry send in their reports, also, that we may know of our available forces and be enabled to work together for the triumph of the cause of Christ. And finally, brethren, let us diligently occupy as time and opportunity may permit, in telling the glad tidings of the restoration, that we may have a good report, not alone to our district conference, but for the Master in whose cause we labor. A. M. Chase, Alva, Oklahoma.

Convention Notices.

The joint session of the Massachusetts district Sunday school and Religio associations will convene in Somerville, Massachusetts, Saints' church, Sewall street, off Broadway, November 13, 1909, at 2.30 p. m. Ora Holmes, secretary, 141 Prospect street, Providence, Rhode Island, Mary Lewis, 202 School street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

Interstate Institute.

The Independence Stake Sunday school and Religio associations will hold a joint institute during the holidays, commencing Tuesday, December 28, 1909, at the Stone Church in Independence, Missouri.

The first session will open at 1.30 p. m. and close at 5. Second session will convene at 7.30 p. m. and close at 9. And the same hours will be observed on Wednesday the 29th. Outside expert help will be present to set forth the best and latest method of procedure in teaching. Also some of our own best talent of the general workers from abroad are expected. A cordial invitation is extended to all the workers along these lines in adjoining districts. This will be the opportunity of your life to obtain a start in the right direction to become a successful instructor. Proficiency is demanded in every class of work; why not have it in this the grandest work of all preceding ages, in which God hath purposes of gathering in the evidences of the past in support of his marvelous work in the closing dispensation.

Programs will be sent out later to all those who will notify us that they want to come. Come, do not fail to be at this intellectual feast.

Yours in gospel bonds,
A. H. PARSONS,
Superintendent Sunday school.
W. A. BUSHNELL,
President Religio.

A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

PREACHING TO THE SPIRITS IN PRISON.

It will be remembered that some time ago Governor Shallenberger, of Nebraska, appointed Elder James Huff chaplain of the State penitentiary. This appointment aroused the ire of the good Methodist brethren of the Southwestern Nebraska Conference, who adopted resolutions of protest. The Baptists followed suit and at the close of their State convention in Lincoln adopted the following resolutions:

Whereas, the Governor of the State has appointed an elder of the Mormon church as chaplain of the State penitentiary, and

Whereas, the presence of this man in this responsible office is resulting in the complete demoralization of all religious work in the penitentiary and is grossly offensive to the inmates themselves, therefore be it resolved:

That we, the representatives of the Baptist churches of Nebraska, hereby record our solemn protest against this appointment and most earnestly petition the Governor to place a more suitable person in charge of this work.

Resolved: That we believe the religious work in all the State institutions should be conducted in the most generous and Christian spirit and by men who have the confidence of all our citizens.

The resolution appeared in various publications together with a statement made by one member of the convention to the effect that the appointment was distasteful to the convicts and that the religious services as a consequence had become disorderly. The unfairness of the attack aroused the inmates of the penitentiary and they drew up a spicy document that was signed by one hundred and sixty-nine of them and published in the Lincoln Daily Star, October 9:

To the Lincoln Daily Star:

We, the undersigned, inmates of the Nebraska State penitentiary, desire to make this statement in answer to the publication of October 7 in the Lincoln Daily Star, referring to the Baptist decry of Reverend Mister Huff, the present chaplain of this institution.

To Whom It May Concern:

We, the undersigned, greatly regret the fact that the members of the Baptist State convention should have been so greatly misinformed regarding the influence and results of the religious teaching performed by the Reverend Mister Huff at this institution.

We do not remember of ever hearing the cat-calls or groans during his preaching as mentioned in your paper, and we believe that the parties who would deliberately misrepresent the true facts of Mister Huff's work here, should be called to account.

For years we have taken pride that among us are some of the champion liars of the world, but we believe in giving credit where credit belongs, and we cheerfully transfer the degree of honor to the parties who informed the members of the Baptist convention that the work performed here by Reverend Mister Huff was either offensive to the inmates, or the demoralization of the religious work at this institution.

We have neither seen nor heard of any act performed by the Reverend Mister Huff that was not the act of a Christian. We have received from his sermons only the word of God, and if the Baptist State convention or society in general were half as interested in our welfare before we came here, as they are in criticising the present religious work here, Reverend Mister Huff would be short of a congregation.

We wish to thank the members of the Baptist state convention for their interest in us, and extend to them our cordial invitation to attend our religious services and thus satisfy themselves of the true state of affairs here.

We wish also to state that we have confidence enough in our present governor and warden to believe that they are interested enough in our welfare to appoint no man chaplain of this institution that to their belief is not a fit and proper person for the place; and if reformation in the future continues to increase at the rate it has in the last six months, the authorities here will have made a record that the State of Nebraska can feel proud of.

Since Chaplain Huff has been installed here, he has vacated the pulpit for various speakers of different denominations. We understand this invitation is open to any who wish to come, and if a Baptist sermon is so much better than what we are at present receiving, we are surprised that the pastors of that denomination should so far forget us as to not even offer us a sample.

To those who are worrying for fear we may have accepted the Mormon faith, we wish to say that those of us who were single before Reverend Mister Huff was appointed chaplain here, are still so; and some of the late comers that had wives and children at home, have left them to join Chaplain Huff's congregation.

Under date of October 11 the Lincoln Daily Star devoted two columns to an interview with Elder Huff in which he explained the history and belief of the church so that the incident has at least served to get our position before the public. Other papers have taken up the subject, most of them in support of the appointment of Elder Huff. The Ainsworth Star Journal (October 15) has this to say:

There is much tribulation in certain quarters because Governor Shallenberger has appointed a so-called Mormon elder to be chaplain of the penitentiary. Governor Shallenberger is a democrat and has a large number of democratic newspapers and statesmen to rush to his defense. The Star-

Journal is not aiming to assume that role, but it wants to say a word in favor of a much misunderstood class—the so-called Mormons, from the number of whom this appointment was made.

These so-called Mormons are not in affiliation with the Salt Lake church. . . .

The Lamoni church is composed of as good Christians and as law-abiding citizens as can be found anywhere in the world. They have a large following in Nebraska. There is a church organization here in Ainsworth. If there are any better people in Brown County than the members of this church the Star-Journal would like to see them.

This is a land of religious liberty. Anyone has the guaranteed right of freedom of conscience and religious belief, and there should be no bar against anyone on account of religion. Governor Shallenberger had a perfect right to appoint a member of this church to be chaplain of the penitentiary and he could not have gone to a better class for a chaplain.

The Western Wave (October 15) prints the resolutions adopted by the Baptist Association and then makes the following editorial comment:

We dislike to make any comment, as those who are posted will blush for shame over the above article. But to those who are not posted, if any such there be, we will add a few words to set them right:

To begin with, there is no "Mormon Church." Consequently the Governor could not have appointed such an one as chaplain of the state pen. This is an epithet more often applied to the polygamous church of Utah. As to the influence: It would be difficult to imagine the picture of a respectable preacher of any church corrupting the morals of the inmates of the pen. . . .

Elder James Huff can afford to suffer the thrusts of those who misrepresent him, as he is the representative of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, a Christian denomination that has suffered much for their faith. Such manifestly unfair and uncalled-for resolutions have a tendency to lower the religious standing of the writers, in the minds of all fair-minded persons. The governor will no doubt keep his head on straight and allow such resolutions to pass into the hot air channels from whence they emanate. A more lengthy item throwing much light on the subject will be found in the Star of October 12, and is on file in this office.

So much in the interests of fairness, true religious freedom and toleration, to keep history straight and to show our sympathy for the under dog, especially when his behavior is up to standard.

The True Voice, Omaha, edited by Rev. Peter C. Cannon, under date of October 8, has a short but pointed editorial on the subject:

A Mormon elder is now the chaplain of our state penitentiary. Quite a number of our Methodist and Baptist friends are frothy with indignation. Why should they be? Has not this chaplain as much right to interpret the Bible as the late one? The Methodist throws out several scriptural books on the same authority that the Mormon adds one—the Book of Mormon. Besides the Book of Mormon was completed by one Morony, an exile from Clare, for there never was a Morony born that did not originally come from Clare. The chaplain is all right; let those who object to his services keep outside of the penitentiary and he won't bother them.

Greatness does not depend upon a conspicuous place, nor upon brilliant talents, so much as upon the right use of the powers God has given us.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Saints will take notice that the subscription price of the Journal of History has been reduced to ONE DOLLAR per year. At this modest price this magazine should experience quite a boom.

In last week's issue we omitted to show the authorship of the article concerning Bro. Joseph Burton. This was a memorial sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith given at the Brick Church, Lamoni, on the 10th inst.

Two important meetings of the Presidency, Presiding Bishopric, and others were held in Independence, Missouri, October 26. A preliminary organization of the United Order of Enoch was effected and articles of association were adopted. A board of twelve directors, including the three members of the Presiding Bishopric, was elected to hold office until the first general election. Those elected were E. L. Kelley, E. A. Blakeslee, G. H. Hilliard, Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, G. E. Harrington, Roderick May, A. H. Parsons, I. N. White, Joseph Mather, Ellis Short, W. E. LaRue. At a meeting of the directors E. L. Kelley was chosen president; F. M. Smith, secretary; and Ellis Short, treasurer.

We learn by the Kansas City Journal that one E. Peterson, president of a socialistic association recently incorporated under the name of The United Order of Equality has filed a protest in the circuit court against the use of the name The United Order of Enoch by the church.

The text of the articles of incorporation and further minutes of the organization will be published later.

Speakers at the Brick Church on Sunday were Elder R. M. Elvin in the forenoon and Elder C. B. Woodstock in the evening.

Stake conventions and conference were held last week at Evergreen. There was quite a large attendance by Lamoni Saints.

"The closing of a home for disabled clergymen near Philadelphia is ascribed to the prohibition of the use of tobacco by its inmates, in accordance with a stipulation to that effect in the founder's will. Priests and ministers of all denominations smoke. The long-stemmed clay "church warden" pipes testify by their name to old ecclesiastical sanction of the practice. Smoking is a form of self-indulgence. But is the habit of sufficient moral seriousness to be viewed as a question of conscience with a man of religious vocation, or a matter of taste merely? For decayed clergymen whose life-work is over, smoking would appear to be as innocuous morally as for mariners in a snug harbor."—New York World.

We have already noticed the agitation which resulted from the appointment of Bro. James Huff as chaplain of the State Penitentiary of Nebraska. We have just received an editorial clipping in regard to this subject from the Ainsworth (Nebraska) Star-Journal which speaks much for the local Saints of Ainsworth. The editorial is as follows:

"There is much tribulation in certain quarters because Governor Shallenberger has appointed a so-called Mormon elder to be chaplain of the penitentiary. Governor Shallenberger is a Democrat and has a large number of Democratic newspapers and statesmen to rush to his defense. The Star-Journal is not aiming to assume that role, but it wants to say a word in favor of a much misunderstood class—the so-called Mormons, from the number of whom this appointment was made.

"These so-called Mormons are not in affiliation with the Salt Lake church. They have their headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, and broke away from the mother church because of polygamy and because of numberless other things that the mother church was doing that did not meet with their approval.

"The Lamoni church is composed of as good Christians and as law-abiding citizens as can be found anywhere in the world. They have a large following in Nebraska. There is a church organization here in Ainsworth. If there are any better people in Brown County than the members of this church the Star-Journal would like to see them.

"This is a land of religious liberty. Anyone has the guaranteed right of freedom of conscience and religious belief, and there should be no bar against anyone on account of religion. Governor Shallenberger had a perfect right to appoint a member of this church to be chaplain of the penitentiary and he could not have gone to a better class for a chaplain."

"The Methodist Recorder says that the membership of Saint Luke's Church, Baltimore, is made up exclusively of saloonkeepers. The church is organized for the distinct purpose of opposing local option and prohibition. According to press reports the pastor says: 'I have behind me one hundred saloonkeepers. The members obligate themselves not to sell to minors; not to sell to persons who are already intoxicated; not to sell after hours; not to sell on such days as are prohibited by law. Every man who joins our organization immediately becomes a model saloonkeeper.' He also says, backed by his one hundred saloon-keeping members, he is going to drive the Anti-Saloon League out of the State. In this, however, he is probably mistaken.

"If a hundred saloonkeepers get together in an organization designed to promote their unholy business of promoting intemperance, they may think it a very sharp piece of trickery to call their piece of perdition machinery by the name of church. This does not make it a church any more than calling it a lodge of Good Templars, or the United States Senate, would make it to be either one of those bodies. They do not deceive anyone by their bit of hypocrisy, not even their own hearts, deceitful above all things though they be, and desperately wicked."—Herald and Presbyter.

Many important events occurred during the sojourn of the early church in and around Kirtland, Ohio. The "Church in Ohio" will be the subject of the next number in the Saints' Herald Historical Series. The author, Bishop Richard Bullard, will be remembered, if for no other reason, because of a former article on the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, an article that attracted very favorable notice.

The following clipping entitled, "Indian Progress," has been sent us and we believe it will be of interest to all Saints:

"There has been a change of conditions among the Indian population of the United States in the last ten years which is but little appreciated except by those who have made it a subject of special study. The Indian is gradually becoming a satisfied landholder and farmer. His children are being more carefully educated and his domestic establishment is acquiring in increasing degree the comforts and conveniences common among his white neighbors. In short, the red man, after a long period of hardship, due partly to his own indifference and partly to the ill-advised policy of the Federal Government, is at last coming into his own.

"It is quite commonly believed that the Indians are decreasing in number, whereas the fact is exactly the reverse. Official figures recently published show that our Indian population at present is upward of 300,000, an increase of more than 40,000 in the last twenty years. Some 30,000 Indian boys and girls are in schools maintained by the United States Government at an annual cost exceeding $3,300,000, and many graduates of these institutions have become successful tillers of the soil, with homes of their own.

"Perhaps the most striking evidence of Indian progress is to be found in the record of approved leases of Indian lands to white settlers. The number of such leases this year is 2,000 less than it was in 1908, and thus far in 1909 fully 1,000 Indians have been granted the privilege of handling their own allotments, though the title to the lands is still retained by the Government.

"The old policy of treating the Indians as mendicants and helpless dependents has given way to the saner one of dealing with them as men capable of self-supporting industry if properly encouraged and instructed. To that end, they have received a larger measure of control over their own lands, and hundreds of them have received practical instruction in farming, with the result that they are prosperous and contented. So rapid, indeed, is their advance in intelligence and industry that government and educational experts express the opinion that at no distant day the Government can safely withdraw its guardianship over the Indians and give them entire control of their own affairs."—Evening Mail.

READINESS to shift responsibility to the shoulders of others is a common failing, and it is nowhere more apparent than in civic affairs. Voters remain away from the polls for trivial reasons, carelessly saying, "There will be enough without me." Men and women fail to protest against flagrant wrongs because they dislike to be prominent or to take the trouble, yet they hope that the same reason will not deter others. But patriotism that counts for anything counts on doing as well as on talking. "We built the wall," is the statement of the historians of the returned exiles. Each man realized that he had his appointed task, his part in the great public work of the restoration.—Forward.

In writing of the recent developments in the controversy which has been waging in the ranks of the Christian Scientists in New York, one of the papers published in that city has the following to offer under the title of, "The Revival of Witchcraft":

"If one of the charges against Mrs. Stetson, the deposed reader of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, is really that she practiced a sort of witchcraft by directing 'destructive thought currents of malicious animal magnetism' against Archibald McClellan in Boston, Mrs. Stetson's accusers will have to explain how they reconcile the fear of danger from such an influence with the essential principles of Christian Science.

"Christian Science undoubtedly accepts the idea of malicious animal magnetism. There are several references to 'M. A. M.' and its influence in Mrs. Eddy's works. The idea is that a current of thought, directed in the effective manner which most Christian Scientists recognize as possible, may exercise a hurtful influence as well as a beneficent influence.

"But here is where Christian Science has a certain advantage of the old animist beliefs: It holds quite firmly that though this 'M. A. M.' may be quite real, it can not stand against the power of God, and that the power of God may be applied protectively by any understanding person. It would seem that all that Mr. McClellan, of Boston, would have to do in order to withstand Mrs. Stetson's shafts of destructive thought would be to realize intensely that these shafts were powerless against the divine health that he had in him. In other words, his good thought could always cancel Mrs. Stetson's bad thought—supposing that she had the disposition to 'M. A. M.' him.

"However, that must be somewhat inconvenient form of faith which requires the continual working out of a sum in beneficent and malific cancellation. It would apparently be much better to get rid of the wizards and witches, and workers of hidden arts, and concentrators of streams of malicious animal magnetism, and all that kind of thing, by the simple expedient of realizing, intensely or otherwise, that the wizards and the rest of them can't do it.

"The only people whom witchcraft has ever troubled have been those who believed in it. Those who do believe in it will probably continue to be troubled by it. The rest of us are immune.

"Yet, as immunes, we may be able to take an objective sort of interest in this revival of ancient magic, in this intellectual application of the dark principles of voodooism. It really is a curiously interesting thing. We are asked by Mrs. Della Gilbert to believe that a friend of hers, living in America, put a man to death in Paris by scratching his photograph with a pin and concentrating on him her thoughts of the 'punishment he deserved.' Also, that Mrs. Stetson's personal following have been holding meetings for the purpose of annihilating her enemy by thinking all together: 'McClellan—six feet underground!'

"All this may indicate that the world is getting a little tired of knowing that so many things are not so. After having had the chambers of its mind cleaned and swept of all its delusions, the world begins, perhaps, to yearn to have some of the old cobwebs back. It experiences an inner need for some bats, vampires, and other boggyish creatures to hang up in the dark corners. If the malific notion of our colored brethren about an image or a picture, with a pin to be stuck in it and a hostile concentration of thought projected through space, comes in handy, why not make use of it?"

PATRIOTISM that counts is not simple and easy. There is often this difference between the professional politician and the true patriot! Some politicians are looking for anything but a chance to work—they wish to draw a salary for doing little or nothing; but the true patriot is ready to work hard, for the benefit of his country, and, if need be, to work for little or nothing. "The people had a mind to work," was one secret of the successful performance of the great task set before the patriots of Nehemiah's day.—Forward.

GOD'S WAYS OR OURS, WHICH?

Does our safety and salvation depend upon our keeping the entire law? We think so.

Doubtless that which made the ushering in of all God's preparatory work so necessary was the result of disobedience to the revealed law. In Isaiah 29 we find the prophet forecasting conditions that would be prevalent at the time of the coming of the marvelous work, a condition of lethargy and lip service, spiritual drunkenness and apostasy, and on account of this wretched condition, their hearts would be removed far from him. Hence the Lord declares he will proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder. Marvelous because God's wisdom and ways will be shown forth in contrast to those of men, and that to the extent that unregenerate wisdom will seem powerless as to the promotion and carrying on of God's work acceptably to him.

Now as Saints of God should be and are a progressive people, we should be mindful of the mistakes others have made, thereby escaping those things that have engendered the disfavor of God, caused failure, dissatisfaction, and continual loss, both here and hereafter. The church has continually taken a strong position in the presenting to the world the great need of a more faithful adherence to the law of the Lord. The dire results of treating any part of his word and commandments in a neglectful way have been dwelt upon and presented as being dangerous and seductive. The Scriptures foreshadowing the coming forth of God's work in the last days, with all its blessings, powers, and authority, have been faithfully presented, and as a result men and women have been added to the church and the greater part have received the promised testimony, "You shall know of the doctrine."

Now, a very important juncture has been reached, namely: Are you and I faithful and obedient to the requirements of the law in its fullness with which we have so earnestly urged others to comply, and of which we should be foremost in the observance? If not, are we consistent with ourselves and God? There has never been a time when the field was so white for the harvest as now. The spiritual, political, and material realms all proclaim the existence of this ripening condition, and God, knowing the condition which would prevail just before his second coming, was able and willing to give to his people such law and counsel as would enable them to escape many of the hurtful and soul-destroying agencies here on earth, and at the same time develop them in faith, obedience, and all gospel work, so that they would be prepared to meet the Lord at his coming.

Equality in temporal matters must be the order here, but he has declared that preparation must be in his own way. See Doctrine and Covenants 101:2:

I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low, for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

These seem to be strong terms to apply to the disobedient who will not impart of their substance. However, we are not the author of the statement, and have no apologies to offer for its being there. The Lord clearly states his position relative to our duty in temporalities. One thing we should certainly remember and that is that he is going to make provision for his Saints; and do it in his own way, and those who can and will not assist in this way, will not secure favor from him, but chastisement and loss of a serious nature.

When we stop and scrutinize the prevailing conditions pertaining to the temporal conditions now extant in the world, can we not easily detect the wisdom, justice, and mercy of God, in that he has so graciously made provision for all the wants and necessities of his children, both as to their temporal and spiritual necessities? And that equality in temporal things may be had, he takes from the prosperous among his people in their seasons of prosperity and places in the hands of his appointed channel to be used to alleviate the wants of the poor and needy by clothing the naked, feeding the hungry, assisting them in obtaining homes, etc. (Section 42, paragraphs 8 to 12.) The Lord has said to us through his prophet that this section is operative now the same as when given.

Now, to make a summary of the present situation, it seems to the writer about this: We are engaged in God's work, and are or should be the salt of the earth. Can we be so and not assist God in his work of saving mankind when he has told us what is required of us? Are we willing to assist him in his way, or shall we withhold our substance of which we are only stewards, and in so doing become unjust stewards?

We may be asked if God is not able to accomplish his work without men and women being continually asked to contribute to it. To this we reply: God has given us a way. He has asked us to assist him. He has said, I am God, I change not. He would not be God if he did give us another way. Let us therefore keep the law. He has said to us that "this is a day of sacrifice and a day for the tithing of my people," and that he that was tithed would escape the great day of burning. (See sections 64 and 65.)

The Lord has further said that if we love him we will keep his commandments, and that we will remember the poor and consecrate of our properties for their support, and inasmuch as we do this we do it unto him, and it is well that our attention is called to the jealousy and great favor which the Lord has in all ages exercised in behalf of the poor and meek of the earth, and he has said that they that do it unto the poor, do it unto him.

In section 102 we find the Lord spoke unto those assembled and said they were full of all manner of evil, but the most prominent evil was that they did not impart of their substance to the poor and needy. Now the church is almost as a unit in the desire that the gospel of the kingdom should go to the people as rapidly as possible, Zion be redeemed, houses of worship built, and the families of the priesthood maintained while the representatives go forth with the gospel proclamation to the world. The Lord has informed us how this work is to be accomplished. See section 106; in it we are informed that it is through the tithes and consecrations of the people, and this is a standing law for ever. You can see the necessity on every hand for a united effort upon the part of the people. The nations are in commotion. The times are perilous. The sandy foundations are shaking and men and women are casting about for that which is more stable and consistent. The servants of the church are willing to go forth and make the sacrifice demanded of them, though the continuous absence from home and loved ones is severe and oftentimes trying to the utmost. Still they faithfully respond year after year when the demand is made upon them.

We must remember that the Lord has made known his way, and the work can not be accomplished in some other way. The church in providing for the poor, sending out laborers and building up Zion, can not proceed only as the people make it possible for her to do, by the keeping of God's law governing those conditions. The Lord said to the church in section 98, par. 10: "There is an abundance to redeem Zion even now, were the churches who call themselves after my name willing to hearken unto my voice." We believe there is now an abundance to enable the church to perform its work if every one would make the proper effort and let the Lord's work be paramount to all other things. We are to labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work entrusted to all. This does not mean that just the elders must labor, or that a part of the people must pay tithes and offerings, but all.

We are sometimes met with the argument, "I am in debt, and must wait until I am free." Now the Lord does not require impossible things of his people, but would it not be well to make a preferred creditor of him? Have you not owed him the longest time? Should you not at least begin paying some on the debt to him, and thus deal fairly with him so that no charge of robbery can be brought against you. (See Malachi 3.)

Now, we can not, any of us, afford to overlook these God-given requirements. The Lord and the church may afford it, but you and I can not. The Lord has said something about the windows of heaven. Let us get them ajar by keeping his commandments, and that in his way. The Lord said to his eldership in section 64, that he required the heart and a willing mind. Now if we honor him by keeping his commandments, it exhibits a willing heart and mind; if we do not keep his law, unwillingness and failure will be chargeable to us.

Many of the Saints are fully in line in regard to temporalities and are doing just what God requires of them, and he will not be slow in remembrance of them. Others are slothful, not seeming to comprehend that the Lord will hold them accountable for their stewardship. Others have been allured into paths of doubtful and ruinous speculation, such as gold, silver, lead, railroad stock, etc., which have brought dissatisfaction and regret in most cases. Still others have been discouraged by some of the church representatives who have in their heated zeal stretched out their hands to steady the temporal ark, by seeking to place a different interpretation upon the temporal arm of our church than that taught by the Presiding Bishopric of the church, whose interpretation the Lord said should be acceded to, and by so doing have brought hesitancy to many, and as a result the Lord's work has been hindered and delayed.

Now that there may be meat in the Lord's house, let us go forth as children of the light and work in God's way. Then we will soon begin to realize equality, equality as foreshadowed by the law, which is that everyone will have equal claims on the properties of the whole church, according to their wants and needs, inasmuch as their wants are just. It matters not how beautiful a system God has given to us, if any fail to make it operative in their lives by not doing the things required, the result to such will be failure and loss. Therefore let every man learn his duty. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104.) Every man must learn his duty, and slothfulness and neglect upon the part of any will not be overlooked. Such will be numbered among the unworthy.

Then let us not be content to say, "Lord, Lord," and still not do the things he requires of us. Possibly a little more doing and less theorizing would be more acceptable to God. Let us try it, and note the results.

EVIL EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

"Avoid the use of tobacco" is a sentence well known to all Latter Day Saints throughout the world, and I am pleased that such counsel is found in our Doctrine and Covenants. I have not always discerned the wisdom of this advice as I see it to-day, although I have lived in the light thereof for over twenty years. Yet I am delighted that we have always presented this noble and exalted platform to the world, but more especially to our Christian friends of all shades of opinion, and not only so, but we plead with clarion voice in the words of the restored gospel and the light of present-day revelation, "Come up higher, come up higher." How strange it should be regarded as degrading when one decides to throw in his lot with the Saints, yet when the true position is known, the opposite fact is revealed.

My observation has been quickened somewhat by reading the report of the ninetieth conference of Primitive Methodists held at Southport, England, June 17 to 24, 1909. Here is the entire newspaper clipping:

The following resolution was posted up in the conversation and smoke room: "The conference notes with profound gratitude the gift of a box of well-seasoned cigars, per the Rev. J. T. Barkley, and hereby expresses its high appreciation of the thoughtful action of the donor, who desires to remain anonymous. We recommend the delegates to visit often the room where the fragrant weed is kept, and assure the donor that the box will soon be depleted of its precious contents, and a daily repetition of the gift will be a source of joy to the majority of the genial delegates to the conference."—Leeds Mercury, June 21, 1909.

Is this truly the "primitive methods"? Would the Apostle Paul have favored such a resolution? We affirm that he would not. No, a thousand times no. But on the other hand, one thinks I hear him in tones of anguish reproving, rebuking, and condemning the very thoughts, and by virtue of his divine calling appealing to them in such words as are found in Romans 12: 1, 2:

I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God.

Where is the sacrifice of this conference of ministers? Did I hear you say there is no sacrifice? Yes, you are correct, there is no sacrifice, no reasonable service; for instead of being transformed by the renewing of the mind, the evidence proves that they are not renewed in the spirit of their mind. They still conform to worldliness; they mind worldly things. With what result? Kindly note another very interesting item from the same report:

The report of the candidates examining committee was adopted: It showed again a decline in the number of candidates to about one half what it was three years; sixty-three candidates were recommended; three did not attend; nine were rejected on the medical examination; fourteen failed to gain the minimum number of marks, and thirty-seven were sent forward to the written examination.

What a condemnation to be sure! Is this the fruit borne by the "fragrant weed"? A failure of twenty-six candidates, just think of it. What a percentage of loss; what a need for the transformation of the mind, without which they can never prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God!

"Avoid the use of tobacco." Do you not think we are needing the clarion voice to-day? Is the angel message a vain one, or is it truly needed? Will you accept the invitation to "come up higher"? Primitive Methodists, come back again; your primitive method is far too modern.

Listen again, my friends, to the counsel of God: "Tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man."—Doctrine and Covenants. Your conference report proves that that counsel is true. All medical testimony also confirms the statement. Let me present you with some medical evidence in confirmation of the above. The following statement is taken from the Beacon Light, an anti-smoking journal, for June, 1909:

DIALOGUE AND DEMONSTRATION.

Doctor.—"Well, my man, what is your trouble?"

Patient.—"I feel right run down, doctor."

D.—"Do you smoke much?"

P.—"About thirty cigarettes a day on the average."

D.—"You don't blame them for your run down condition?"

P.—"Not in the least. I blame my hard work."

The physician shook his head. He smiled in a vexed way, then he took a leach out of a glass jar.

D.—"Let me show you something," he said. "Bare your arm."

The cigarette fiend bared his pale arm, and the doctor laid the lean, black leach upon it. The leach fell to work busily. Its body began to swell, then all of a sudden a kind of shudder convulsed it, and it fell to the floor dead.

"That is what your blood did to that leach," said the physician.

He took up the little corpse between his fingers and thumb. "Look at it," he said. "Quite dead, you see. You poisoned it."

P.—"I guess it wasn't a healthy leach in the first place," said the cigarette smoker sullenly.

D.—"Wasn't healthy, eh? Well, we'll try again." And the physician clapped two leaches on the young man's thin arm. "If they both die," said the patient, "I swear off—or, at least, I'll cut my daily allowance from thirty cigarettes to ten."

Even as he spoke the smaller leach shivered and dropped on his knee, dead, and a moment later the larger one fell beside it.

"This is ghastly," said the young man; "I am worse than the pestilence to the leaches."

"It is the empyreumatic oil (nicotine, a colorless oil, and one tenth of a grain of it will poison a dog) in your blood," said the medical man. "All cigarette fiends have it."

"Doctor," said the young man, regarding the three dead leaches thoughtfully, "I half believe you're right."

That statement simply confirms our position again. Again we repeat, "Avoid the use of tobacco; it is not for the body, or the belly; in fact it is not good for man."

Here is a very remarkable case, which I took from The Yorkshire Evening News, May 19, 1909: "A man in Moscow celebrated his hundredth birthday by smoking a cigarette for the first time in his life. He died half an hour later. It is a clear case."

In confirmation of all that is here presented, I will now give you two cases of cancerous growth. The first was taken from the paper already mentioned, for June, 1909.

CANCER FROM CLAY PIPE.

Doctor's theory of how the disease may be set up.

The smoking of a clay pipe was suggested as a probable cause of cancer by a medical witness at an inquest on Saturday upon a Richmond gardener named George Trigg, age forty-eight. . . . Witness stated that the man had had excellent health until a short time ago, when a growth developed on his upper lip. He attended at the Middlesex Hospital, when it was found that the growth was of a cancerous nature. He underwent an operation under chloroform with marked success, and was afterwards bright and cheerful.

It was discovered, however, that other cancerous growths had formed in the neck and that it was necessary to perform a second operation. Deceased's heart failed under this operation, and he died almost immediately. A medical witness was asked if there was any indication of how deceased contracted the cancerous growth. Witness: "He smoked a short clay pipe on one side where the growth formed, and that might have had something to do with it." The jury returned a verdict of death from misadventure, and expressed the opinion that the hospital authorities were in no way to blame.

This evidence is clear and conclusive. The second case of cancerous growth is one which came under my own personal observation, while in the line of ministerial duty; i. e., visiting a sick brother who lay in the Leeds Infirmary, he having passed through a most serious operation. It was during one of these visits that I saw this poor fellow wheeled into the sick ward from the operation table, and put into the bed next to that of the brother whom I visited. He was an awful sight to look upon, there being only a very small portion of his face to be seen, owing to the bandages, etc., about his head and neck. I endeavored to give this poor man a word of cheer, day by day, as I visited my brother, and the following story is what this poor soul told me of his case:

"This is my third operation; my complaint is what they call cancerous growth of the mouth, throat, and neck. They tell me it is very doubtful if I shall ever be free from them."

"Have you any idea as to the cause of these cancerous growths?" I inquired.

In answer to my question he said, "Well, I will tell you the truth about this matter from the beginning. I am a Nanny, and when I have done my day's work, I generally call at a public house for a pint of ale. One day I called for my ale as usual, and also requested them to give me a clay pipe. I put the clay pipe in my mouth while I prepared my tobacco; when I took the pipe from my mouth it stuck to my lips and brought away with it part of the skin from my lips. I did not think much about it at the time, but shortly afterwards it became very painful, so I was advised to come here. They told me upon examination that it was a cancerous growth, that I should have to undergo an operation. I came inside and this is now my third operation. If I had taken the first in time, I might have been completely cured, but as it is they can not tell where they may appear next."

Poor man! I felt almost helpless, but I tried my best to cheer him. How very true the words, "The wages of sin is death." Why, one will ask, is it a sin to smoke? Reader, can you doubt it in the light of the above evidences? Yes, it is indeed a sin to use tobacco in any form, and I will explain why it is a sin. The first law of nature is self-preservation, is it not? If so, let me ask, how can we preserve our bodies, healthy and clean, if we permit poisonous and cancerous matter to enter into them? We sin, therefore, against ourselves, in the first place, in body, mind, and spirit. We rob our nation of her healthy, strong, and robust manhood. It is a sin to steal. We sin against God; in fact we rob God in that we lose power (ability) to procreate to our species, strong, healthy, robust in body and in mind. They lose that force of character, that purity of mind, that intellectual understanding of the divine order and design in all creation; in fact I go so far as to say that I believe some lose even the power to procreate at all. Can you wonder at the degenerated condition of the world to-day?

If men would purify themselves and be clean as God designed, they would be healthy and their tissue pure and strong. Men of God would be born. Righteous principles would prevail, and mankind would begin to understand what was meant by God when he gave man dominion over all things and commanded him to subdue all things unto himself. Instead of the above condition obtaining, we find man in slavery even to his own body.

Again, we sin against our families and also our neighbors; first by example, second by weakness of volition, third by enslaved habit. You, yourself, know that we can not present the evidence of the above evils to any living soul with any good effect, while we ourselves portray such weakness of character by example, by weakness of will power and filthiness of habit.

Avoid the use of tobacco. For what reason? Listen: "That your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example."—Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.

In conclusion let me submit the beautiful words of the Apostle Paul, 1 Corinthians 3:16, 17:

Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are.

Every Latter Day Saint will understand this plain and pointed lesson of the apostle. No man, be he saint or sinner, can afford to pay the price that is here referred to. "If any man defile the temple, him shall God destroy." The things of time and sense do attract us in this life, but remember we are working for eternity, and not for time only. It is impossible to use tobacco without defilement. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." (See Doctrine and Covenants 119:3.)

Let us, therefore, abstain from the use of tobacco in any form. For the sake of health, of cleanliness and pureness, both in person and in thought. Because such an ungodly habit is unnecessary, expensive, and selfish, and very often the purchase money is the price of death. Finally, reject not the counsel of God against yourselves, but accept the knowledge of life, which our Father in heaven wishes us to possess.

Of General Interest

"A Certain Rich Man."

A powerful sermon was preached by Dr. Washington Gladden in his church at Columbus, Ohio, on William Allen White's book, A Certain Rich Man, which has attracted more thoughtful attention than any other novel published this year. The title of the book, Doctor Gladden remarked, is a text from Luke 13:16, and the book is itself a great sermon. "The kind of folly which the certain rich man of Luke's parable exemplifies is illustrated in Mr. White's story. It is the craze for accumulation. The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully, and he reasoned within himself, saying, 'What shall I do, because I have not where to bestow my fruits.' And he said, 'This will I do; I will pull down my barns and build greater, and there will I bestow my fruits and my goods.' That is the form of the madness, it was accurately noted far back in history, but it is raging to-day tenfold worse than it was then. 'What shall I do?' This is the cry of the prosperous everywhere. 'My ground has brought forth plentifully; my grains are abounding; I have enough for health, enough for life, enough for love—enough—but what is enough? A little more.'

"Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the things which he possesseth. Deep in our hearts most of us find ourselves openly at war with Jesus, on this proposition. The certain rich man of Luke's parable may or may not have been an exceptional man in Luke's generation, but he is the typical man of Mr. White's generation. To trace the workings of this abnormal passion in the human heart and in human society is the purpose of this novel—for it is a novel with a purpose. Most novels that are worth much have some purpose behind them. The story, not less than the poem, is an interpretation of life, and he is a poor interpreter who can not show us not only what life is but what it ought to be.

MEASURES UP TO THE TIMES.

"Mr. White's story could not have been written ten years ago. The sentiment to which it appeals, the popular moral judgment which, in the denouement of the plot, it assumes, did not exist ten years ago in any such volume that a story could have been founded on them.

"The story begins in the days of the struggle for the possession of Kansas, and introduces us to the pioneers from

New England. The first third or quarter of it is pictorial rather than dramatic; for anyone who wishes to know how Kansas came to be, these chapters are profoundly interesting.

"The certain rich man is John Barclay. His father and mother were pioneers in 1857, when John was only four years old; his father, who was a Congregational minister from Massachusetts, was killed in a fight on the border on the journey to Kansas, after he had preached an abolition sermon with his prairie schooner for a pulpit. The young widow carried her boy to Sycamore Ridge, and there began the fierce struggle for existence, supporting herself by the severest manual labor until the schools were organized in which she found useful employment and decent livelihood. Mary Barclay is a great character; the strokes of the pencil are few, but she is finely drawn, homely, dignified, veracious, honorable, loyal to her ideals, and for ever true to the memory of her lost hero. It was not for want of good guidance in his childhood that John Barclay became a Philistine.

STORY VIVIDLY TOLD.

"The outbreak of the Civil War in 1861 is vividly told in the adventures of two boys under twelve, one of whom was John Barclay, who ran away with the army and received in the battle of Wilson's Creek a wound that crippled him for life.

"By the time he was fifteen he had begun to develop the thriftiness, which he had undoubtedly inherited from his Yankee grandfather. Such traits have a way of skipping a generation. He traded a carbine that he brought from the army for an Indian pony and then he began business for himself. 'He organized the cows of the town into a town herd, and took them every morning to pasture on the prairie. . . . His limp put him at a disadvantage, so he had few fights; but he learned cunning, and got his way by strategy rather than by force, but he always had his way. He was a born trader; he kept what he got and got more. His weakness was music. He kept two cows in his herd in the summer time for the use of the melodeon at the Thayer House, and moved it to his own home and put it in the crowded room, and practiced on it at night, when the other boys were loafing at the town pump.'

"A little later John went to the university at Lawrence and returned after five years with a degree of Bachelor of Laws, and entered into partnership with his mother's old friend, General Philemon B. Ward, one of the great characters of the book—one of the typical idealists of that new community—one of the men by whose faith the world lives. At once John began to be reckoned with as one of the powers that be; his hand was in every enterprise in which there was money to be made—in finance, in town development, in local politics.

"One of the first of his brilliant schemes was the Golden Belt Wheat Company. The panic of '73 had impoverished most of the farmers; they had nothing to live on while they were making the next crop. Barclay proposed to lease their farms at three dollars an acre, advancing the money in March. 'His plan was to organize a stock company, and sell his stock in the East for enough to raise eight dollars an acre for every acre he secured, and to use the five dollars in making the crop. He believed that with a good wheat crop the next year he could make money and buy as much land as he needed. But that year of the panic John capitalized the hardship of his people and made terms with them which they could not refuse. He literally sold them their own want. For the fact that he had a little ready money and could promise more before harvest on which the people might live—however miserably was no concern of his—made it possible for him to drive a bargain little short of robbery.'

TYPICAL OPERATION.

"This was only a sample of his operations. Most of the schemes that he worked were within the law; if criminal practices had to be resorted to he generally managed to force some one else to take that risk. His masterful combination grew and prospered. Mills, elevators, and railroads dropped into his open palm as the ripe fruit falls from the bough.

"As president of the Corn Belt Line and as controlling director in the North Lake Line, he got rates on other railroads for his grain products that no competitor could duplicate. And when a competitor began to grow beyond the small-fry class, Barclay either bought him out or built a mill beside the offender and crushed him out.

"And then, one day, after long years of growth in the under consciousness of men, an idea came into full bloom in the world.' This idea was the birth of public opinion. 'Public opinion! It is not substantial, it is not palpable. It may not readily be translated into terms of money, or power, or vital force. But it crushes all things before it. . . . Money can not hold it, arms can not hold it, cunning can not baffle it. For it is God among men. Thus he manifests himself in this earth. . . . Barclay was beginning to feel upon him night and day the weight of the popular scorn. He called it envy, but it was not envy. It was the idea working in the world, and the weight of the scorn began to crumple his soul. . . . The people were beginning to question the divine right of wealth to rule because it was wealth.'

PUBLIC OPINION MADE LAW.

"Then came laws forbidding railway rebates, and the machinery of the Government was set in motion to prevent such combinations as the National Provisions Company. Suits against it were brought in half a dozen States. Barclay was furious. He could not understand why he should be disturbed in a course which he had been following so long. But slowly the truth began to percolate into his mind. His early education began to rise in his consciousness and reassert its power; many things united to give force to the testimony borne in upon him from every side, that great gains may be a curse to a man with a conscience.

"Once or twice in his career the everlasting realities had been brought home to him. When his daughter became affianced to the son of General Ward, that old idealist sought him out and told him some very plain truths. The arrangement was that young Ward should become Barclay's private secretary, with an interest in the business. The old man was half distracted. 'Would you take my boy,' he cried, 'my clean-hearted, high-souled boy, whom I have taught to fear God, and callous his soul with your damned money-making? How would you like me to take your girl and blacken her heart, and teach her the wiles of the outcasts? And yet you're going to teach Neal to lie and cheat and steal and make his moral guide the penal code instead of his father's God. Shame on you, John Barclay!'

"It is doubtful whether since Nathan faced David a more convincing word than this has been spoken by one man to another. Doubtless it gave John Barclay a good many bad quarter hours. But he was destined to hear another testimony even more searching from the mother who bore him. 'Here you are,' she said to him, 'fifty-four years old, and what have you done? You have killed your friend, and your friend's father before him; you've wrecked the life of the sister of your first sweet-heart, and put fear and disgrace into her father's face for ever.' It is a terrific arraignment, in its irresistible truth and in its heart-breaking tenderness. You may search literature for any message to the men of this generation more prophetic than Mr. White has put into the mouth of this strong-hearted woman. The very word of God is in it, 'quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword.' Is it incredible that such a man as John Barclay should be melted in such a flame? I do not think so. I think that the conversion of John Barclay which follows conforms to the logic of the situation. He was in hell, a hotter hell than Dante ever imagined, and there was a way out; why shouldn't he escape?

"For such a repentance there must be works that were meet. They were not withheld. It meant, of course, the putting away of this ill-gotten power, and this was not so difficult a thing to do as is sometimes imagined. The National Provisions Company was simply a big blanket of debt spread over a large group of industries. Barclay owned a majority of the stock, he managed to get most of the rest of it, by exchanging for it his other securities, and when he made a bonfire of those seventy-five millions of certificates, nothing happened except that a big load of debt was lifted from that group of industries. Not a wheel stopped; the mills and the elevators and the railroads went right on; their fixed charges were reduced by so much, and there was more to divide in profits and wages—that was all.

"Mr. White has dared to suggest to us that a plutocrat may repent and be forgiven. That is a good hope which may well be cherished, not only by the plutocrats, but by the rest of us.

"I have given, of course, but a meager outline of this great story, which in its ethical and its social significance, is the most important work of fiction that has lately appeared in America. I do not think that a more trenchant word has been spoken to this nation since Uncle Tom's Cabin. And it is profoundly to be hoped that this book may do for the prevailing Mammonism what Uncle Tom's Cabin did for slavery."

Professor Ferrer.

There is little dissent anywhere, here or abroad, from the opinion that the Spanish government made a profound mistake in causing Francisco Ferrer to be shot. His death has made a momentous stir in Europe which is by no means likely to end with the riots in Paris and the outbreak in Pisa and the resulting damage to its cathedral. Ferrer was arrested and tried in 1906 for complicity in the attempt on the life of King Alfonso, but was acquitted. He was arrested again last month charged with having incited the rioting last summer at Barcelona. It will be recalled that that disturbance was started as a protest against the sending of Spanish troops out of the country to fight the Moors. Ferrer was tried by court martial and condemned. His attorney says his trial was not fair, as witnesses were not examined in open court, but their depositions were read.

Theoretically, he was a philosophical anarchist like Kropotkin. Practically, he was an educator, apparently the most notable in Spain. Having command of a good deal of money—either his wife's or that of some woman backer—he started in Barcelona and other places eighty or ninety "modern schools," said to have been in most respects the best schools in Spain. General Linares, the Spanish Minister of War, says of them in a dispatch to the World that they were schools "where children and adults of both sexes were impregnated with the doctrines that there is no God, no family, no fatherland, no national flag, no necessity for any church—in fact, all the doctrines proclaimed in the anarchist congress." We would not wonder if that were largely true, but, at any rate, they were schools where the knowledge that was imparted was not censored and measured out by the Roman Catholic Church as it exists in Spain. Whatever errors they may have inculcated, at least the light of such truth as there was in them was not smothered by the stifling pall of Spanish clerical supervision.—Harper's Weekly.

Daughters of Zion Reading for November.

FOUNDING A HOME AND THE RIGHTS OF EACH OTHER IN THE HOME.

I realize that I have an extensive subject, one which deserves careful consideration, and one not easy to confine within the limits of a short paper. I will try, therefore, to condense it as much as possible.

Home making is a very common occupation among the adults of the human race. The character of it is so vitally important, however, that we very much need all the help possible to begin this work aright, and in a way to produce the best results. We should receive this instruction or help previous to our experience in married life and thus be conscious, when we assume this responsibility, of the importance of the work in all its breadth and meaning. The founders of the homes now existing should be able, largely by example, to exhibit to their children what constitutes a home where love dwells and peace reigns. That is, the example should cultivate within the children a love for that home and its peaceful atmosphere, then when the time comes for each one to move out for individual usefulness he will already have been fitted for it.

The two who found a home should be very careful to make a proper start. Otherwise the best results are much more difficult to obtain. Do not think because love is strong and constant that there will be very little to watch in conduct one towards the other—which is the element that makes the home atmosphere. Neither should we expect that at the founding of a home there is less need for watchfulness than at future times. Rather than this expect that the perfect working of a perfect system, inasmuch as human members can make it so, will come from the most intimate and constant acquaintance of its members. Each one should bear his share of responsibility and be careful not to scrutinize more closely the conduct of his companion than his own. We can help each other very much, at times, by pointing out, in a proper manner, little faults and failings which will creep into the conduct of most of us. But I wish to emphasize the fact that we must keep close watch of ourselves. Let it not be enough to say that we have faults, as all of us are willing to acknowledge, and then paying no heed to seeking them out, go on closely observing and criticising our partner. You may think that people who truly love each other will not be guilty of this. The conclusion is not necessarily right. It is only one of the rather common mistakes, unconsciously made, among good people. For you know we can not always see our faults as easily as we see those of others.

I believe very strongly in the reign of the spirit of peace. Let it be a ruling spirit in your home. Its establishment can not mean the effort of one alone, but two or more who are associated together. A very true statement as presented in our reading, "The basis of peace," is that the peacemakers are not only the ones who may settle difficulties, but those who prevent them. The maintaining of peace by both these methods is governed largely, I believe, by a desire to know ourselves and each other as we are, and the great stand-by and help is the assistance of the Holy Spirit.

Let good cheer be a prominent factor in your home building. You know it is far-reaching in its effects. I have seen the countenance change instantly by contact with a person who is cheerful in his warfare, and as quickly change in the opposite direction when the opposite condition obtained. Especially should women furnish this attribute in the home. It is true that both should constantly cultivate it, but I believe that after all the woman has a little easier chance to do so, as a rule. She has her home to dwell in, he has it only a rather small portion of the time. She cares for the children, principally, and along with the care comes a rich compensation in the cheer that they infuse. She deals with comparatively few in the outside world—he with many—and under varied and trying circumstances often. And from a physical standpoint, she has opportunity, and should make full use of it, to breathe fresh air constantly, and this certainly does affect the mind. This advantage is not always at his command, in fact is quite often denied him. Give these ideas a thought at least before excusing yourself for being at all pessimistic.

One important point in the preservation of peace is to have firmly grounded the thought that all will not be sunshine, that so long as I am not perfect my companion must not be expected to be. Look for more or less of an unpleasant nature in some way, then when it appears, observe it closely, dispassionately, and with a view to ridding the home of it, if possible. If it is a fault in yourself, confess it freely, and ask your companion to help you see it and overcome it. If it is a fault in him, judge wisely the time to tell him of it and do it in the right spirit, and should he not receive it kindly do not be discouraged even at this. But make a tactfully persistent effort, not a nagging one, to further help him, until you will most probably see a result, often beyond your expectations, especially if your effort has been a prayerful one.

Let us remember, however, when practicing all these methods towards the cultivation of peace and perfection in the home, that these desirable conditions must not be obtained at the sacrifice of some God-given principle. In other words, do not shirk a duty in order to preserve peace. If you know that some particular subject may jar upon your companion, do not decide solely on that account to avoid it, but, rather think deeply whether it is something that should be considered. If you decide that it is important, tell your companion so. Ask his forbearance while you present it and earnestly do your part. It may take some judgment if you bring about desired results, and should he not be performing his part, he may ignore your counsel and of course there may be loss to the home inmates in one way or another. For this you are not responsible, however, if you do your duty. But at the commencement of your home life together tolerance should be cultivated by both parties, and only thus is freedom and justice obtained—two essentials on the road to perfection. Cultivate in your own mind a calm feeling of peace and love, and desire to do good and then you may approach the most troublesome questions with profit. The real feeling in the heart has much to do with resulting conditions. Analyze your own self and see that you are in the right condition of mind before you try to suggest reform to anyone else.

"Curved is the line of beauty,
Straight is the line of duty;
Follow the last and you shall see
The other ever following thee."

All I have said is equally applicable to both partners in a home. The sum of responsibility should be shared equally.

Of course one must have more care and responsibility in one line—the other another. But each should seek opportunities to do favors and give substantial help when possible. Be sure also always to do your share of duty, for this is one of the greatest helps towards happiness. Do not allow yourself to complain under hardship and have the idea that your partner has not so much to bear as you have. Some other time may reveal hardship for him when you are more free and more favorably situated. Indeed, it is not a plan abounding in good results to allow one's self ever to feel that his burdens are greater than others. We can not judge that, justly, so let us not attempt it at all. Leave it to the just Judge of all the earth who sees and knows all things.

Questions on November Reading.

Why do the founders of a home need instruction? When is this instruction needed? Toward what should the conditions of the home tend in its influence upon the child? What attention should be given in the founding of a home? What constitutes the home atmosphere? What need is there for watchfulness in regard to the conduct of its members? What should be subject to scrutiny? What help can each give by suggesting improvement in the other? Where should we apply the greatest watchfulness? What should we do about our own faults? What may be generally supposed concerning two who love each other? What, in fact, is frequently true? What should rule in the home? Can this be assured by the efforts of one? Who are real peacemakers? What results from a knowledge of each other? What should be a prominent factor in home building? Who should cultivate this? Can we say that this is easier for one than the other? How may circumstances vary the conditions? What are the benefits of cheerfulness? Are there any conditions under which it should not be sought after? What is the meaning of being cheerful in our warfare? How are children an aid in cultivating cheerfulness? What should be our attitude towards the shortcomings of the other? How should one go about helping the other in the overcoming of a fault? In seeking to preserve peace, what should not be sacrificed? What should be cultivated by both in regard to faulty conditions? What should govern in approaching troublesome questions? How should responsibility be shared? How should each meet his portion of hardship? What may varying circumstances bring to each? What is our capacity for judging of the comparative weight of burdens?

Program.

Hymn No. 11 Saints' Hymnal; prayer; reading from Home Column with discussion; paper, "Tact in dealing with difficult situations in the home"; paper, "Compensation in the care of children"; roll call; business; closing hymn and prayer.

Requests for Prayer.

Sr. Minerva Johnson, Tryon, Nebraska, asks the Prayer Union to pray for Sr. Mary E. Godfrey, who is greatly afflicted, that God may heal her if it is his will.

A minister's wife and a layman's wife have been telling each other, at the request of the editor of The Sunday School Times, how each would behave if she were in the other's shoes. The published advice that has been passing between parsonage and pew is brimful of common sense. There can be little question that it is needed, on both sides. Perhaps if the advice were followed by both sides there would be fewer church problems than there are.

Letter Department

Editors Herald: I wish to make use of this medium for the present to thank the many dear Saints for the soothing, comforting, and stimulating letters received in this my great bereavement when human sympathy is so sweet; and to assure them and all who have remembered me in their prayers that they have not been offered in vain. Though the tears oftentimes flow, I realize that of myself I could not have borne up under even the strain of the last month of my husband's sickness as I have, before the sorrow came, and still the same sustaining influence is with me so that I can abide here in our home all alone during the days, busying myself with the many things that need to be done. Each letter will be answered as soon as practicable.

To-day the island mail came. How strange and how lonesome to receive it without him. To him, those were the milestones looked forward to with eager interest. And how sad the hearts of the Saints there will be when this mail boat returns. God bless them there and those here also.

E. B. BURTON.

UNIOPOLIS, OHIO, October 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank you for the questions answered sometime ago as to members of the old church being baptized into the Reorganized Church. The testimony of Cowdery, Harris, and Whitmer, as contained in the last paper, is the strongest evidence possible to the divinity of the gospel. After having been set out of the church a number of years, and then to live and die testifying to the truthfulness of the latter-day work, was certainly a miserable end for them.

I often rejoice in the testimonies of our dear brothers and sisters. See what a cloud of witnesses we have! I don't see how the raising of the dead would be any better, considering the time and circumstances from the beginning to the present time.

Brother, what could we do, if all worked together to the selfsame thing. The answer is, What is it we could not do? Suppose there are sixty thousand members, and one out of three would put up twenty-five cents a week for the church necessities. One week would be a little over five thousand dollars.

O, brethren, where will the stars in our crown be when we are carried up to Abraham's bosom? Then we will say, "If I was back to the vineyard I would lay up more treasures in heaven." But we will not be allowed to do that. Then we will think of Bro. I. M. Smith's sermon in the Ensign on one word, "Remember." I feel encouraged this morning; feel like we ought to be doers and not hearers only, deceiving ourselves. I hope to be more humble.

Your brother in Christ,

JOHN W. GROSS.

MONTOYA, NEW MEXICO, October 6, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the Saints through the HERALD that I am still alive and believe I am still in the faith; I know I am in the fight.

I began my work here last spring as per appointment. My congregations have been small. Many people go away to work for support. Crops were short last year. Land worth taking is about all taken, but relinquishments can be had cheap. We are allowed to file on three hundred and twenty acres. I don't think it safe to try to make a living here altogether with the plow. I believe broom corn will be the money crop here. I see the price is good and this country seems to be specially adapted to it. A great deal of it will be put out here next year.

I wish some good Latter Day Saint with a little money, and who could pray, sing, and preach, would come out here and help me out. We can not work much of the time on a farm, it is so dry, and he would have lots of time to help me.

I have had one debate with the Campbellites and replied to a Methodist man's lecture. One Baptist preacher called me a liar and proved it by another Baptist. I have replied to them and they are mad clear through. I met the Baptist preacher's witness that he used to prove me a liar by and I rubbed him hard and he drew his knife on me. His actions and conduct showed that he was brimful of the spirit of his master. Fortunately for him and me I did not have the same spirit. I am ever so thankful for the gospel of peace that helps men to overcome their mean, fighting disposition.

I am getting along slowly, but doing all I can, and I believe this country, after while, will be a good field for us. I believe I am on the ground at the proper time. There are a great many schoolhouses and all are open to all denominations here. If I only had a horse and rig so as to travel around over the country, I could get along so much faster. My son runs the place and I am doing what preaching I can. I can not keep busy and that is trying on me. For eighteen years I have labored in Arkansas and Oklahoma and could put in all my time, and was happy. But here I can not get the people out, on account of them being so scattered, as well as careless and indifferent.

I wish Bro. C. Scott could send some of the surplus of Colorado's big crop over here. Maybe it would help us hold down our claims and attend church.

As ever,
S. P. SIMMONS.

GATEWOOD, ALABAMA.

Editors Herald: This is the first letter I have ever written to the HERALD. There are not many Saints around here. There has been a Holiness meeting going on here for some time. They have a revival once in a while.

My father is a Latter Day Saint preacher. Brother Kelley and Mr. Love are to debate about six miles from our home. I want to attend if it is possible. I want all the Saints to pray for me.

I have been a member of the church about three years. I was baptized by my father.

I remain,
MAGGIE MAY BANKESTER.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, October 6, 1909.

Editors Herald: I entered the missionary field July 17, and have labored in Philadelphia practically all the time, until a few weeks ago when I came to this place, my native town.

Fourteen years ago I accepted the angel's message at this place. At that time just a handful of people were willing to listen to the truth as it was presented, but now they have quite a nice branch of faithful and earnest workers.

Sunday, September 19, another promising young lady by the name of Ella Carter was added to the fold by Elder William Anderson. We all rejoiced to see her step out and obey the truth as she will be a great help to the work. One great feature of note here is that the Saints are trying to let their light shine in the world. They have won the confidence of the people.

Elder William Anderson and I are laboring together and I find him a very congenial man to labor with. He has great patience with one who is young in missionary work. It is a great sacrifice to leave home and loved ones and go out in the world, yet when I think how many precious souls there are in the world who know not the beautiful truths of the gospel, I am willing to consecrate my life's service to the Master and ask him to use me as seemeth good in his sight.

Sunday, October 10, our souls were made to rejoice when five more entered the fold. One young lady came up out of the water and her husband took off his coat and was baptized too. When one young man was baptized his mother said she must follow her son and be a help to him. So you see that the good work is moving on. Others have given their names for baptism. Brother Anderson is well liked here in Maryland and I believe there will be a good work done. Let us all be faithful to the end of the race.

Yours for the spread of truth,
IRA W. HULMES.

HOOD RIVER, OREGON, October 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: I notice in the HERALD for October 6 an account of a conversation between Brother Grainger and Rabbi Kohn of Saint Louis. If his translation of Isaiah 29: 14 is correct, it will surely be of use in talking to our Jewish friends.

We have recently had the privilege of conversing with a Mr. Wineburg, a clothing salesman, who has studied for a rabbi. He claims he has a first cousin who has charge of the setting apart of the property to the settlers coming to Palestine.

Mr. Wineburg lectured to the Saints and friends in my house three times and expressed himself as being pleased to meet with a people who understood the prophetic history of the Jew. He stated that the Jews were fast returning to their own land; that three-fourths of the travelers through the Mediterranean Sea were Jews going to the land of Palestine; that each New Year night in all their synagogues the world over, they stand up and unitedly give a cry in Hebrew, which interpreted means that they hope to be in their own land one year from that night; that there was a deal being consummated now between Great Britain and Turkey by which the land of Palestine shall be given to the Jews. He also stated that the Jews in Palestine are self-sustaining; that the land is very productive; that dates and grapes are in abundance.

He seemed to appreciate the work done by Joseph Smith in educating the people that God was working with the Jews and that God would gather them in to their own land; that they would become one nation and that one from the seed of David would be king over them all.

We read the twenty-ninth chapter of Isaiah to him and presented him with a copy of the Book of Mormon, which he promised to read, at the close of a prayer service which he attended. A brother spoke to him in prophecy and told him that if he accepted the work and was faithful God would use him as a servant to preach the gospel to his own nation.

Surely the time is fast approaching when the gospel message shall be declared to the Jewish nation. In fact it is pleasant now to talk with the Jew regarding the fulfillment of the prophecies recorded in his own history; prophecies that have been and are now being fulfilled in connection with the restoration of the gospel. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people saith your God, speak ye comfort to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins." "For I would not brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, least ye should be wise in your own conceits; that blindness is happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles be come in . . . as it is written, there shall come out of Sion the deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins," or "pardon her iniquities."

Your brother in faith,
N. T. CHAPMAN.

UKIAH, CALIFORNIA, October 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: It is with pleasure that we write of the labor performed in this part of the Lord's vineyard.

Elder J. F. Wiles came to Willits in July and held several services in the little schoolhouse and created an interest in at least two homes where the gospel was unknown. It gave strength and courage to the few scattered Saints of this community. We visited Potter Valley, which lies between Willits and Ukiah, and there Brother Wiles preached twice to the Indians who are natives of this valley. We felt the influence of the Spirit and words can not express how much we enjoyed meeting with the isolated Saints of Potter Valley. But elders are restless creatures and so were soon on the move again. The next stop was made near Ukiah, where Brother Wiles preached a few evenings in another country schoolhouse, then away to attend the reunion at Irvington where we profited by the advice and counsel so lovingly given to the Saints from our reunion pulpit. It was truly the most spiritual reunion of years, and after our feasting on spiritual food we returned to our beautiful Mendocino County and were soon made happy when Elder Wiles, reënforced by Elder F. B. Farr, returned. We again held one service in the schoolhouse near Ukiah and then obtained the opera house in town, where a number of evening services were held, but as usual, without much success, and the elders felt that the cost was greater than the interest demanded.

Then through the kind donation by Brother Hager of a hall in Ukiah, a sacrament meeting was held Sunday, October 3, and a preaching service in the evening by Elder F. B. Farr, which were well attended by the Saints from Potter Valley, twenty miles distant, and by the Saints in and around Ukiah.

The Saints will continue to hold meetings in the hall every Sunday, as Brother York was ordained an elder while attending the reunion and thus we trust the good work may roll on. A Bible class has been formed and one meeting already held at the home of Sister Hager, where friends and neighbors were invited in to study the Scriptures.

We thank the elders for their visit and good sermons and the spiritual food received. I feel to say to the Saints, by name if not by spirit, if they open their homes to the servants of God and entertain them by the true Spirit of Christ (love), I know they will be blessed more than money can buy. Turn them not away, for thereby you are losing blessings money can not purchase.

I was very sick, but knew what the doctors would tell me if I went to them, so I put my trust in God and sent for the elders. Brother Farr administered to me and I got up the next morning, healed all through. Oh children, you can not do too much for this work. It is God's and as long as you shirk from duty and turn a deaf ear you can not receive his blessing. God can not look with pleasure on evil and we are all known to him.

Your sisters in bonds,
C. B. LANDRUM.

REAGAN, TEXAS, October 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: Many times the question is asked, Is the church growing farther and farther from God? Because there are some characters in the church that were in it long years ago, some will stumble and say they want out of it. But what kind of company would they be with on the outside? What did Jesus say in the parable about the wheat and tares? (Matthew 13: 24, 30.)

So, Saints, look not at others, but remember your salvation depends upon your personal effort. But what kind of tares will we find in the church? Different kinds. Read Doctrine and Covenants, page 158, and many other places. Liars are one kind of the tares and the most hurtful of all, for they can disturb more than anything else. They can cause more hardness; cause brothers and sisters to fall out with each other; they can tell falsehoods on a brother and sister that will cause others to lose confidence in them. Why will they do it when they see how many times they are condemned by the scripture. Read Doctrine and Covenants, pages 100, 158, 166; Revelation 21: 8.

"But," says one, "you are too hard on the liars." I am not nearly so hard on them as God himself, for he will put them in the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. Paul says to teach, warn, rebuke. (2 Timothy 4: 2.) Whom must we warn, teach, rebuke? Those that break the law, surely, for the law is not for a righteous man. (1 Timothy 1: 9.)

My heart has been made sad at the different things that I have heard here of late. Saints ought to be careful what they tell. I see a disposition in some of the laity that ought not to be. If they hear something that sounds funny to them, they can not stand still till they get to tell somebody else. If we will read the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, I do not think any of us will want to tell anything but the truth to each other. Let us live on our knees more and I think we will do better.

Since I last wrote to your columns I have lost my wife, the world and all happiness to me. She died the 11th day of June. Left me with one nine-month old baby. He is at my brother's. They are Latter Day Saints. I am doing all the preaching I can. I have been bothered to some extent on account of financial affairs, having two doctors with my wife, then burial expenses which took a good deal of money. But by the help of God, when I get it all paid and straight, I will go and try to get others to go where my treasure has gone.

It gives me great satisfaction to know that the Lord showed her and me before that she would go. I saw two or three months before she was taken, and about a week before she died she saw herself dead and saw me with the baby at her feet looking very sad; more so than she had ever seen me. She did not dread death, except for leaving baby and me and some of her people. She said she felt ready to go. A few days before she died she wrote some poetry to me and here is one verse:

"Don't raise a marble monument
Above me when I die;
But simply say to those who came,
'Here doth my treasure lie.'"

Pray for me that I may hold faithful.

Your brother,
ALBERT VANCELEAVE.

DENVER, COLORADO, October 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: The recent article in the HERALD in regard to the apostasy of Jason W. Briggs, brings to my mind some experiences the writer had with him a few years before his death, that may be of interest.

When I came to Denver, twenty-one years ago, Brother Briggs was living in this vicinity, I think on a small ranch just northwest of the city.

After the Denver Branch was organized and we began holding meetings in Euclid Hall, Brother Briggs was a frequent visitor at our meetings. I had known him when I was a boy; but he had passed from my memory, and he attended our meetings several times before we knew who he was; in fact, I think we did not find out his identity till the winter that Elder T. W. Smith and wife came through here on their way from missionary labor in the Society Islands.

I well remember hearing Brother Smith make the statement that in conversation with Brother Briggs on his attitude toward the church, he said he had never denied anything connected with the gospel. Also at a Sunday school picnic Elder M. F. Gowell and the writer had a long conversation with Brother Briggs and the conclusion of the matter was that he advised us to stick to what we had espoused, that there was nothing better. I felt that he had a warm spot in his heart for those who were in accord with the teachings of the Reorganized Church.

We have had plenty of preachers lately: Brethren Scott and Bullard have been with us for some time, and Brother Sheehy came in Friday of last week. The writer has been at Colorado Springs for some time; but returned last week to take charge of the construction of the new church building. The work has at last begun, and we hope to have a place we can call our own to worship in as soon as money and labor can complete it.

The contemplated discussion between us and the Christian minister of Boulder that was to begin November 1, has been postponed till later.

E. F. SHUPE.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, October 27, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have recently returned from Mammoth Springs, Arkansas, where I found Sr. J. A. Harper, who went there with her husband last May from Michigan. She has aroused an interest among the friends she has made since going there, creating a desire to hear preaching by some one of the elders of our church.

I was there only a few days. Sister Harper tried to get the Methodist house to hold some meetings in, but was refused on the ground that they had been imposed upon by strangers who had been permitted the use of their house and who had taken collections and then suddenly left. As Sister Harper is connected with a Mrs. Arnold who runs a restaurant, and there being room, a few were gathered and we had the privilege of discoursing to them upon the principles of the gospel; whence it came, its powers and prerogatives, etc. I had most excellent liberty for near an hour, leaving a good impression and a desire to hear more. But as we were not a missionary appointee, did not have any further meeting, coming away shortly after.

We left a promise that we would use our endeavors to have some one sent there to preach and open up the work. We feel sure there is an opening there and a good one, for several were anxious to hear more.

I hope this will not find the wastebasket, so the president of that mission will see it and send some one there as soon as possible.

While there I met with the editor of the State Line Republican, who promised me to publish an article in his paper, which article I have sent him. The editor told me he had read a good deal about the Mormons. He did not seem prejudiced.

The article mentioned was short, giving an outline of the differences between the Utah church and the Reorganization.

D. D. BABCOCK.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

Editors Herald: I have mailed you the New York Herald's giving most interesting accounts of Cook's north pole expedition. The celebration of the discovery of the Hudson River by Hendrick Hudson and of Fulton, the first steamboat builder, is in full blast. All nations are represented with warships and appointed representatives. It is a magnificent spectacle. I wonder if ere long there will be a clash between nations with these terrible engines of war. This all looks friendly; as though it should cement the nations together. But Satan is not yet bound; the Prince of Peace has not yet come to his temple; the gospel has not been withdrawn from the Gentiles to go to the Jew. I believe a final battle will come with awful destruction and final end of war. They shall beat their weapons of war into plowshares and pruning hooks, but not until he reigns over many nations, King of kings and Lord of lords. Then the Devil, who has caused a clash of arms and bloodshed from the beginning, will be cast into that bottomless pit. We turn our mind's eye in faith towards the final gathering to Zion for refuge and safety.

The time is ripening, the call from God is near at hand. God's faithful children will soon hear the message of angels and his servants warning all to gather not in haste but wisely. The temple will be built; the sign to all nations shall be heralded; nations will feel that the restoration of the gospel has finally received an indorsement of a matchless grandeur; kings and princes of the earth shall come; all things both in heaven and earth shall be gathered in one; the marvelous work and wonder has finally carried to success the design of that which was decreed, by God, and consummated in a final latter-day Israel that came up through many trials and tribulations. Creeds, dogmas, and forms of godliness will melt away into mists of the past.

Our bodies should be made a living sacrifice, the temple and abode of the Spirit of God. To do the works that each one has been born into the kingdom of God to do, let us put far from us our differences and be reconciled to God and be living epistles known and read of all men.

2 WEST TWENTY-NINTH STREET.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, October 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: Our debate with J. Hunt Beard is over and we emerged from the conflict with colors flying high. He is the fairest man I have ever heard in debate, yet he became lost to his own proposition on two evenings and went back to discuss the merits of the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith.

One of their members called me a liar twice while I was making my closing speech on their church. I quoted R. B. Neal's pet phrase, "It's the hit hound that howls," and went on with my argument.

We signed a proposition to debate the Book of Mormon as a separate question, but the congregation had all the debate they wanted ere the second proposition was over, so Mr. Beard must look elsewhere for a place to hold it. We made new friends to the cause of truth and lost none.

At the close of the debate Beard passed out a lot of Neal's lying leaflets, but they are harmless in comparison with the other side. We have nothing to fear from him except his serpentine proclivities in spitting out his venom where we have no chance to meet it.

SINKING SPRINGS, OHIO, October 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: The following lines will be evidence that I am still in the land of the living. Many moons have developed and faded away since I last wrote you. Have been watching for items from the secretaries of the New Philadelphia and Crab Tree reunions, but as yet none have materialized. Both gatherings were a success and very beneficial, spiritually, to those who attended.

The former was largely attended. Missouri, Iowa, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and Ohio were represented. The social meetings were of a high order and the preaching was excellent throughout. Bro. Elbert Smith, of the Presidency, was present and delivered a number of able, spiritual sermons which were well received by those in and out of the church. His unassuming manner and meek and humble attitude towards others makes him a companionable and agreeable associate with the ministry and laity. He was a general favorite. The Saints will look forward to his reappearing next year.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, who was in attendance about four days, is a good "mixer" and made friends for himself, the Sunday school, Religio, and Graceland College. His satisfactory explanation of matters pertaining to the work of the college had a tendency to remove objections some may have had to contributing to Graceland. He also rendered valuable assistance at the Crabtree reunion.

The New Philadelphia reunion consisted of the Ohio, Pittsburg, and Kirtland districts. Next year the West Virginia District will be taken into the fold, upon their request. We look forward to large reunions in the future for these districts. Bishop J. A. Becker, R. Baldwin, Mrs. Hattie Griffiths, J. McConaughy, J. Jaques, D. R. Winn, and C. Ed. Miller made up an efficient committee who systematized the work and helped to make the reunion the success it was. A number of the local members gave valuable aid, as also did some who were not members of the church. The citizens of New Philadelphia showed their appreciation of our presence by an invitation to return next year, published in their daily paper, and if possible the invitation will be accepted.

The mayor permitted us to preach on the city square. A large transfer wagon conveyed singers, preachers, and a billhorn organ to the square, the speaker preaching from the wagon. Bro. Elbert A. Smith demonstrated that he was a willing worker along any line by doing his part in the street work. It was a successful way of advertising the reunion as large crowds stood and listened. In addition to those mentioned there were present of the ministry John H. Lake, James Craig, F. J. Ebeling, T. U. Thomas, L. D. Ullom, and many of the local ministry. John Gillespie, of Cleveland, Ohio, in charge of the dining hall, was later assisted by William Liston, of Wheeling, West Virginia. About fifty tents were on the ground besides buildings which were formerly used for an amusement park and were occupied by some of the Saints.

Mr. Levi and Squire Crabtree, Brother Piles (an old brother eighty-nine years old), and the balance of the Saints amply provided for the reunion at Crabtree. The attendance of Saints was not as large as we expected, but the outsiders were more in evidence than at New Philadelphia.

In regard to the work in general, encouraging reports are coming in from T. C. Kelley in the South and from others of the ministry. The work is slowly moving along; many baptisms have been reported in different parts of the field. "Our friend the enemy" seems to be unusually active as we have had many debates in the last quarter, generally with the Christian-Campbellite Church, and more in anticipation. Elder Francis J. Ebeling will engage in discussion commencing October 26, at Rarden, Ohio.

There is need for additional active workers in the field, but this can only be made possible by the Saints paying their tithings and freewill offerings, so the Bishop will have funds on hand. The Saints have been very dilatory in many places in this regard and the families of the ministry are suffering for it.

The grim reaper has caused us sadness in taking away Brn. Alexander Smith, Joseph Burton, Sister Pitt, and Sister Sheehy, as we have been acquainted with them all for many years. It was my good fortune to be associated with Brother Alexander in my early ministerial labors and always felt indebted to him for the interest he took in me and for the kindly, encouraging help he gave me in the days when I needed it. I always found him to be a noble, faithful minister in the service of the Lord. Truly a good man has gone to his rest. It is well to be prepared, for we little know when the summons will come to us.

I regret that some of the ministry violate the rules of the church by not reporting at the first of each quarter. We trust those who make this a habit will reform and hereafter send in their reports on time.

Wishing all success,
G. T. GRIFFITHS.

SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI, October 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: A few of the faithful Saints of the Springfield Branch are still trying to keep the fire burning on the altar and still contending for the faith once delivered to the Saints. We have a nice little church building and have recently finished a cement walk from the front door to the street and brick sidewalks leading to the different points of the compass.

We are located in the best city in the Ozark region, the land of the big red apple, where everybody is busy and there is work for more. We believe we have the best climate north of the equator, where the old grow younger and the young are robust and beautiful. Come and breathe the ozone that floats over the hills of Joseph's land, even the land that Moroni traveled over bearing the precious burdens on his long journey to the hill that was to conceal for fourteen hundred and seven years the grandest message ever revealed to man, the fullness of the everlasting gospel. No doubt, while he was standing on top of the Ozark Mountains and viewing the beautiful landscape, he lamented the fate of his people more than ever thinking what might have been had his people been true and faithful, and was loath to leave the land he knew would be beautified in after ages by another people and those people would reject the message he was transporting to the lonely hill that was to hide the same, even the hill Cumorah, until the time appointed when the Lord would proceed to do a marvelous work, even a marvelous work and a wonder. But let us return to the queen city of the Ozarks.

Here opportunities are open to honest, energetic Saints that want to come to a good live town and a healthy country. Three large railroad shops and many other minor industries employ laborers, besides many opportunities for garden farming, poultry farming, and dairy farming. There is a market the year round for all kinds of farm products. This year we have been cursed with a drought, but this is a rare exception.

We have the finest schools that the State affords, from the ward school to the best colleges and State Normal. Best of all, we are in the region about Zion. We need some good, live, energetic Saints to help us build up the work here in the best country on earth. To the Saints that are satisfied and doing well where they are, I would say, Stay there. It is those that want to better their condition that we want to see come and come with a desire to stay. Those that have means to invest will find opportunities to suit their individual likes. There is no reason why this should not be a desirable gathering place for the Saints and finally become a strong stake of Zion. The varied industries of our city will offer the wage worker employment; those that want to go into business for themselves will find all kinds of lines open to them. Our city is growing. Now is the time to buy, while property is cheap.

We would be glad to have some good elder locate here and take charge of the work and relieve those that have been in charge so long. It might be the means of infusing new life into the work. The harvest is truly great, but the laborers are few. My prayer is that the Lord will send more laborers into the vineyard.

The writer has been in the church about eleven years this month and can say that this work, yea, this marvelous work and a wonder that was brought forth by the choice seer, who was an instrument in God's hands to carry the angel's message, even the everlasting gospel which Paul had declared was the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes, this work, I say, is true and carries with it the evidence. My testimony as a living witness is that if we will live the gospel it will make of us new creatures and will help us to overcome our faults. I was a user of tobacco when I was baptized into the church, notwithstanding I had been a member of the Christian Church for over thirty years and never was taught that it was wrong to use the filthy weed. But no wonder, when the elders themselves would sit in the pulpit and chew the vile stuff. But the gospel of Christ will cleanse and help us to purify ourselves if we will go before God in humility and ask him to help us, then turn away from our former habits and sins. He will purify our hearts by faith, and if we walk in the light as he is in the light, the blood of Jesus Christ his Son will cleanse us from our sin. The gospel will remove pride, prejudice, and hatred from our hearts, if we will only humble ourselves before God and truly say, Thy will be done. There is a power in the gospel that even many of God's people have failed to experience, because they too often grieve the Spirit by failing to keep the word of wisdom. I find there is all in it that the Lord promised. It surely is health to the navel and marrow to the bone, and we shall find wisdom and great treasures of knowledge, even hidden treasures, and shall run and not be weary. So there is enough in the gospel to induce us to make ourselves pure and holy if we are willing and obedient. On the contrary, if we are not, we will soon forget that we have been purged from our old sins.

Knowing these things, what manner of persons ought we to be? Let us hold fast to the rod of iron that leads to the tree of life. My prayers are that God's Saints will strive to come up higher unto the perfect day.

I am still in the conflict,

J. W. QUINLEY.

STONINGTON, MAINE, October 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: I find it extremely difficult to restrain myself from venting my feelings of praise and thanksgiving, fearful lest over-exuberance may suggest to others that objectionable disease called big-headedness. But just the same, brethren, I feel a little like the Dutch convert who, endeavoring to testify of the goodness of his Maker, told it tersely in original style: "I feel me so goot I don't know how."

Well, dear brethren, we arrived here some nine weeks ago, a stranger in a strange land, but greeted with the hospitable welcome characteristic of these Deer Islanders. Everything, of course, was a little out of the ordinary, even to the bill of fare, with its clams, lobsters, chowders, and other things unknown to us Canadians.

I may say that our first efforts in this mission were directed to the citizens of Attleboro, where, after a week's preaching on the streets, we were obliged to cease, owing to loss of voice; could not speak above a whisper. While there we met with a noble band of Saints whose kindness I shall never forget.

Following former instructions we arrived at this place, an island off the coast of Maine. We learn since arriving that these parts were preached to many years ago by elders of the early Reorganization.

Meetings were commenced in the usual way, and during the first two weeks Elder Greene and writer alternated in preaching. He leaving for other parts, we continued alone, save with what assistance wife has given me, in visiting the interested ones, and that was not inconsiderable.

Services have been continued every night, and frequently we have preached twice a day, ministering to the men on the quarries.

Well, I may say that extraordinary interest has developed; it seems that the powers of darkness have been rebuked to a marvelous degree, and people are inquiring for the old paths who never before were interested.

And it seems that the very angels are helping in the good work. The other day in conversation with the wife of one of the leading citizens, a business man, I learned that the visions of heaven had been unfolded to her. Our conversation ran as follows:

Q. I understand you have had a vision, Mrs. K?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the vision you saw an angel?

A. Yes.

Q. You held conversation with the angel?

A. Yes.

Q. Now as to the nature of this vision, do I understand that you were brought to a place which you thought to be paradise?

A. Yes.

Q. You were prevented from entering, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the words of the angel to you at the time of prevention?

A. He said I had more yet to do.

Q. I understand that during the same day another angelic messenger came to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did this messenger deliver you any message?

A. He said that the Latter Day Saint doctrine was all true, but that few of the Saints would enter the beautiful place I had seen.

Q. Did he refer to the Saints throughout the world or the Saints of this community?

A. Just the Saints of this community.

Q. And did this messenger tell or show you anything else?

A. I was told that I had more to do.

Q. Then you were told a second time that you had more to do?

A. Yes.

Q. Upon receiving the vision did you relate it to any?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you or any of your people ever connected with the Latter Day Saints?

A. No.

Q. Previous to the vision you did not believe that the Latter Day Saints' Church was the right one?

A. No; I did not.

Q. You are now satisfied, I presume, that the ordinance of baptism and all connected with the church is of God.

A. Yes.

Q. You now feel ready to go forth into baptism and unite with this church?

A. Yes.

This was presented to her previous to my coming and I am glad to say she was baptized yesterday. Again, the other evening, an elderly lady from an adjoining island attended our services for the first time and in conversation related how an angel had visited her saying that there was more for her yet to do; and it was with remarkable interest she listened to the gospel teaching. She invites us to their home island, promising us a home while we minister the bread of life. And so the work rolls on.

Forty-three have been baptized the last few weeks and others are standing on the brink. I have quite a job getting my baptismal garments dried between baptisms. Never experienced such an amazing inquiry for the word before. Am busy from early morn till late at night. Have been blessed with extraordinary strength to meet the demands. And such a Spirit in our service! Well, pardon me if I write a little loud, but believe me, we are having glorious times.

One of those baptized was a strong Catholic, a young man of educational abilities, who, if humble and faithful, will make his mark in the work. We have got rid of about four hundred of A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, thanks to the liberality of Saints who pay for what we distribute.

Her propose continuing here some time longer while the "open door" stands ajar, and shall hope that many more will embrace the gospel.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Editors Herald: We are told that tobacco is for all sick cattle, to be used with wisdom and skill. Last winter our cow took sick. We remembered what the book of Doctrine and Covenants said, but we had no knowledge of how much to give, and knowing it was a poison we hesitated to give it; so waited about ten days, doctoring her as our neighbors and friends suggested, but to no avail. Knowing she would die if something was not done to relieve her, we got some tobacco and gave her. One dose was sufficient and the next day she was eating. Just a short time ago our other cow took sick. We did not hesitate this time, but got ten cents' worth and gave her just as it was. The second day she seemed all right again.

I prefer the tobacco in as natural a condition as possible. But to those that may be like we were, afraid to give it, I would like to say ten cents' worth won't hurt them.

In my last letter in the HERALD is a slight mistake. It should read, "we can have health and partake of the common cup," instead of communion, meaning common communion cup.

Sometime ago some one writing to the HERALD said something about a briefer church history. I agree with him that we should have it and then every Saint should make a special effort to get it before the public. Although our Church History is not one bit too large for our own use, the people of the world have not time to read so much.

I also wish we had a book or two like Book of Mormon Lectures and Divinity of the Book of Mormon Proven by Archaeology, with some other name. Not that I am ashamed of the name, but that I know from experience that people looking over a lot of books and seeing the name Book of Mormon will often pass that book by when really they know nothing at all of the book, only they suppose it is something connected with Utah Mormonism, while if they would only get a glimpse on the inside of the history and archaeological findings of the ancient inhabitants of America, they would become interested.

Editors Herald: I feel impressed at this time to write by way of testimony to the truthfulness of the church. It has been a long time since I heard any preaching or even met with the Saints, but we are still in the faith and still praying and trying to live worthy of God's blessings.

I have been a member of the church about ten years and I am satisfied that if all the testimonies that I have received were written they would fill a book of several hundred pages. Before I was baptized I prayed to almighty God that I might receive evidence direct from heaven whether the work was true or false and continued to pray even when I was baptized and confirmed. When Brother Kent had taken his hands off my head he started to sing a song and Bro. P. B. Bussell, with others, joined him. With tears of joy and gladness the Spirit was poured out in much power and rested on all that were in the house.

From that day I have had hundreds of testimonies in dreams and visions. I have asked the Lord to show me many things which he has done. I have seen and heard the words of the Lord saying, "Son, be faithful." I have seen the second coming of Christ; have seen the resurrection of the dead. I saw the dead come forth from the grave and heard them praise God. In vision I have seen Joseph the Seer; heard him prophesy, and saw it come to pass. I have also been taken out of this life and carried into the life which is to come to the faithful. I have been given the spirit of angels with power to soar in the air; have been carried high up into the heavens with power to return at my own will. There was no fear of falling, no dread; and all this by the power of being surrounded with his Spirit.

Oh, that we were worthy of receiving what there is in store for us.

Eastern and Western Wales Reunion.

A reunion of the Eastern and Western Wales districts met at Cardiff, October 2 and 3. Missionaries J. W. Rushton, William Newton, Rees Jenkins, and Thomas Jones were present, as also Bro. J. E. Meredith of Birmingham. Saturday evening was occupied by several of the Saints rendering solos, recitations, and impromptu speeches. Sunday morning at 8.45 a priesthood meeting was held, Brethren Rushton and Meredith in charge, a goodly number of the ministry being present. At 11 ten minute speeches were given by Brn. Rees Jenkins, L. Jones, W. Newton, J. G. Jenkins, J. E. Meredith, and T. Gould, on subjects dealing with purity, tithing, love, equality and unity, righteousness, inspiration, and economy. Fellowship meeting was called for 2.30 p. m., the Saints not partaking of food from breakfast until after fellowship service, and a spiritual feast was enjoyed, the Spirit being present and manifest outwardly in gifts of tongues, prophecy, etc. The son of Brother and Sister Pugsley, of Aberdare, was confirmed during the service, having been baptized during the morning by Elder Silas Evans of Aberman. Evening service at 6.30 was occupied by Apostle J. W. Rushton. After service a resolution was passed that we hold another reunion next year and that the arrangements, as also the time and place of meeting, be left in the hands of the presidents and secretaries of the two districts. Collections for the day amounted to £1 7d. It was generally felt the reunion was a success, beneficial to all participants, encouraging and strengthening in the ways of righteousness.

Two-Day Meeting.

A two-day meeting was conducted at Knox, Indiana, October 16 and 17. Brn. S. W. L. Scott, B. St. John, and J. B. Prettyman were chosen to preside. They were given the right to determine the hour and nature of meetings. Sr. Mollie Pierson was elected secretary, and Sr. Bertha Lohse chorister and organist, with privilege of choosing her assistant. She chose Sr. Irma Pierson.

The meetings were beautifully successful; attendance good, and a fine spirit prevailed. The first session was devoted to prayer and testimony, and as this date marked the twenty-third anniversary of Brother Scott's presence and labor among us, many testimonies were reminiscent, some of which dwelt largely on Brother Scott's labors among us, in that of visiting us in time of sickness and sorrow and administering comfort and cheer, also presenting the gospel many times with power, and when needed he proved himself capable and willing to defend the church against the evil the people seem anxious to heap upon it. In many ways he had endeared himself to us, and we can truly say, "Our brother."

The sermons were logical and full of instruction. The members of the Church of the First Born treated us kindly, coming out at each service, and helping with the singing. They are following the admonition to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good.

Extracts from Letters.

Mary M. Green, in forwarding college offering to Bishop E. L. Kelley, writes: "We had the pleasure of attending the Chatham District conference held in Chatham and met Bro. F. B. Blair, and on the whole thought it a very good conference, a good spirit prevailing throughout, some worthy ones were baptized, and the Chatham Saints deserve credit for the aid they gave in entertaining the other Saints. Trusting the afflicted and weak in the faith may receive strength. It pays to live a good Saint, it pays in this life, it pays when death comes, it pays when those who are left to talk about us when we are gone. A good life is the best, try it.

News From Branches

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

This month has been one of resplendent events which will be long remembered by us for the lasting impressions of good they have left us.

One of the most important was the dedication of the Saints' chapel in Cheltenham, October 17. The dedicatory sermon was delivered by Bro. E. A. Smith, one of the Presidency, and the prayer was by Bro. R. Archibald, who also as representative of the Bishop, received the papers and key from Brother Tanner, president of the branch. He returned the key, both making appropriate remarks. The choir of the Saint Louis Branch furnished the singing, and altogether the service was very impressive indeed.

The Saints of Cheltenham, though so few in number, are worthy of commendation for the accomplishment of so noble a work. May they continue to strive in doing good for the Master.

During the week beginning with October 17 and ending October 24, we were privileged to enjoy a series of meetings by Bro. Elbert A. Smith and we were indeed instructed and lifted up in the blessed word of God. Each sermon seemed full of good, edifying thoughts which we do not think will soon be forgotten. We also received enlightenment during the month through Brn. C. J. Remington, S. A. Burgess, J. A. Tanner, M. L. Masten, and R. Archibald. The district priesthood meeting was held Sunday, October 24, at 3 p. m.

Our Sunday school parents' and cradle roll day was held September 26, and among the features worthy of mention is that the little babe of Mister and Sister Podkin was blessed by our superintendent, Brother Billinsky, and four baptisms were performed by Brother Tanner, one of which was little Grace Billinsky, one of our Sunday school scholars. The other three precious souls were adults; two from Oak Hill and one from Cheltenham.

The first week of October was the Centennial week of our city, and on the first Sunday all services both Sunday school and church were along historical lines. At the sacrament service the older folks sat together in the front of the church and many of the old time hymns were sung. The evening service was devoted to the history of our city and the latter-day work in Saint Louis.

The city was beautifully illuminated and decorated and parades were held every day. All seemed to unite in the festivities which will remain as a mark in our city's history.

Our pastor was called to Bevier to attend the funeral service of Sister Williams, of that city. She, with her daughter Hatty, spent several days in Saint Louis this summer and we regret to hear of her early demise, and extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones.

Bro. and Sr. Ed. Bell are rejoicing over the arrival of a fine baby boy which came to them October 9.

Your sister in Christ,

Higdon, J. A. Wagoner, J. H. Tibbles, S. C. Williams, W. E. Reynolds. Bishop's agent G. W. Beebe tendered his resignation, which was accepted. A. C. Silvers was recommended for appointment to fill vacancy. The resignation to go into effect January 1, 1910. The next conference will convene at Rich Hill, Missouri, February 12 and 13, 1910. The Saints' church at Nevada, Missouri, was dedicated on Sunday by President Joseph Smith, assisted by A. H. Parsons. Dedicatory prayer by Bishop G. H. Hilliard. A. C. Silvers, secretary.

SOUTHERN MISSOURI.—District convened with the Pomona Saints, Saturday, September 25, at 10 a. m., with vice-president J. F. Cunningham in the chair, Elder A. M. Baker was called to assist in presiding. Seven branches reported, as follows: Beaver, 62; Springfield, 156; Ava, 85; Pomona, 83; West Plains, 49; Woodside, 47; and Thayer, 28. Ministry reporting: Elders A. M. Baker, W. P. Bootman, J. W. Quinly, O. E. Ensley, J. F. Cunningham, G. W. Bootman, A. M. D. McGuire, T. J. Simpson, J. C. Chrestensen; Priest Fred Moser, jr. Bishop's agent, A. M. Baker, reported: Receipts $456.00, expenses $444.79, balance due church $11.21. District treasurer reported; receipts $14.57, expenses $3.74, balance due district $10.83. District officers elected: A. J.

Fletcher, president; J. F. Cunningham, vice-president; Benjamin Pearson, secretary and treasurer. A recommendation was read from the Beaver Branch that Benjamin Pearson be ordained to the office of elder. Also one from Thayer, presenting the names of G. A. Davis, and Riley Cunningham for ordination to the office of elder and teacher respectively. After due deliberation, the ordinations were ordered to be provided for at this conference. A motion prevailed that no one shall hold office in this district who uses tobacco. Next conference to be held at Springfield in March, 1910. Sermon at 7.30 p. m., by W. P. Bootman. Sunday at 10 a. m., Sunday school in charge of local officers; 11 a. m., J. W. Quinley preached, assisted by Benjamin Pearson; basket dinner on the grounds at noon. At 2 p. m. we again gathered for social service; sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered under the hands of A. M. Baker, G. W. Bootman, A. J. Fletcher, and Fred Moser. The Spirit of the Master was present, and admonished some of the Saints to lay aside their jealousy and come up higher. Benjamin Pearson was ordained an elder under the hands of Elders Cunningham, Quinly, and Fletcher. The prayers and testimonies were of the inspiring kind, and all were edified. At 7.30 we again met to hear the gospel expounded by Elder Baker, subject, "The open and closed doors." After the sermon the auditing committee reported the Bishop's agent's book and report correct. The ordinations of Brethren Davis and Cunningham were left with the submissionary and district president. A vote of thanks was extended to the Saints of Pomona Branch for their kindness. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

CENTRAL ILLINOIS.—The twenty-fifth assembly of the Central Illinois District was called to order by President Charles H. Burr. Frank Curtis was chosen to assist the choir; the usual order of business was transacted. At our last conference which convened at Taylorville, the district purchased a gospel tent. Charles H. Burr and David Smith, missionaries, in whose hands it had been placed, reported that the tent had been in the field for three months, in which 78 sermons and 3 baptisms and confirmations had been the result of the three months' operation; and that much good had been done and much prejudice had been removed throughout the district. Treasurer reported that since the adoption of a resolution to that effect collections had been taken up at each branch in the district three times in the year; but this did not meet the expense of the district; and that the taking of collections at each conference was much more preferable, for the reason that the collections were larger. We enjoyed the presence of Bro. Frank Curtis, and he was invited to speak. He gave us a talk on our duties and responsibilities, and making answer for our negligence; where the work is moving there is a great deal to do, and we must grow in a spiritual condition in order to meet success. He also gave us an inspiring sermon on Sabbath morning, along the same lines; there being a larger number to attend the Sunday services than on Saturday. We feel to say that all were encouraged to move forward in discharge of duty. On Saturday evening at 7.30, the Religio and Sunday school of the district rendered a very pleasing and appropriate entertainment, which consisted of songs, recitations, papers, dialogues, and wreath drills. At the 2.30 social and sacrament service, there were confirmations of four young girls, baptized at 1.30 by David Smith; the sacrament was administered, a few prayers were offered, and a great many testimonies were borne, a good portion of the Spirit being manifested. Quite a number of the Taylorville Saints leaving on the evening train were not privileged to hear another one of Bro. Frank Curtis' inspiring sermons. Adjourned to meet at Taylorville on the first Saturday and Sunday in February, 1910. Charles C. Simpson, clerk. 920 East Oak street, Taylorville, Illinois.

POTTAWATTAMIE DISTRICT.—Convened with the Boomer Branch on Saturday, October 9, 1909. Pres. S. Harding being absent, conference was called to order by Counselor C. B. Bardsley who, with Counselor J. A. Hansen, was chosen to preside over the conference. In the absence of the district secretary, Charles H. Wright and W. M. Self were appointed clerks of the conference. Branches reporting: Boomer, 58; Council Bluffs, 330, gain 12; Crescent, 155, loss 1; Fontanelle, 32, gain 2; Hazel Dell, 58; North Star, 137; Wheeler 46, loss 1. Ministry reporting: Elders Joshua Carlile, W. M. Self, J. Asher, R. McKenzie, J. C. Lapworth, J. A. Hansen, D. Parish, C. B. Bardsley; Priests J. P. Christensen, S. W. Underwood, A. C. Riley; Teachers J. C. Adams, P. W. Frederickson, H. M. Liles; Deacons Charles H. Wright, A. A. Gaylord. Bishop's agent J. A. Hansen reported: Balance on hand last report, $298.16; receipts, $802.25; disbursements, $727.50; balance on hand, $327.91. President Harding reported the reorganization of the branch at Fontanelle. Teacher C. O. Lentz presiding. On order of conference the chairman appointed E. H. Carlile, D. Parish, and Steven Jacobson a committee to audit the books of the Bishop's agent for the year 1909 and report to the conference at Council Bluffs on February 2, 1910. J. Charles Jensen, secretary.

SOUTHERN INDIANA.—The one hundredth conference of the Southern Indiana District convened with Union Branch October 17, 1909. William Dowker and John Zahnd were chosen to preside. E. O. Byrn was chosen clerk, assisted by Jacob Halb; Mrs. Martha Judkins, organist; Edward Fird as janitor. Branches reporting: Byrnville, 101, loss 4; New Albany, 25; gain, 4. Priests reporting: Jacob Halb, Charles F. Davis, John Zahnd, Charles H. Fish, and E. O. Byrn; Teacher G. B. Miller; Deacon Charles Ferguson. E. O. Byrn, district treasurer, reported: Total expenditures, $2.26; receipts, $1.65; on hand, $2.47. John Zahnd, Bishop's agent, reported: Receipts, $119.78; expenditures, $127.75; due agent, $7.97. Moved that upon the recommendation of Union Branch Jacob Halb be ordained to the office of elder. Plainville Branch and Lily Dale Branch were disorganized. Moved that records of disorganized branches be placed in hands of district secretary. Next conference was appointed for New Albany Branch to convene May 3, 1910, 2 p. m. The following delegates were chosen to General Conference: E. O. Byrn, William Dowker, W. H. Fewell, Jacob Halb, John Zahnd, Sr. John Zahnd, Charles F. Davis, Charles H. Fish, G. B. Miller, and D. H. Baggerly; delegates to cast majority and minority vote. Conference recommended that a branch be organized at Clay City, Indiana, said branch to take in the scattered members in west side of district. Sunday at 9.30 a. m., district Sunday school association was organized. John Zahnd, superintendent; Charles H. Fish, assistant superintendent; E. O. Byrn, secretary; Charles F. Davis, treasurer. At 2.30 p. m., social service, Brn. William Dowker and John Zahnd in charge. Jacob Halb was ordained an elder by Elder William Dowker. Speakers during conference were Jacob Halb, John Zahnd, E. O. Byrn, and William Dowker. Thanks were voted to Saints of Union Branch for hospitality and kindness shown visiting brethren. E. O. Byrn, secretary.

SASKATCHEWAN.—At 2 p. m., on July 14, a session of the reunion was called to order, Apostle R. C. Russell and others presiding. After the announcement of the object of the meeting a motion was carried that the business be transacted by the assembly en masse. A motion amended to the intent that the territory, the Province of Alberta, also the Province of Saskatchewan, barring five ranges adjoining Manitoba, as previously outlined by General Conference, become organized into what shall hereafter be known as the Saskatchewan District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was put upon its passage and carried unanimously. The election of officers for the new district resulted as follows: T. J. Jordan, president; Josh Dobson, first counselor; J. R. Beckley, second counselor; Grace S. Diggle, secretary; W. E. Nelson, treasurer, who was also sustained as Bishop's agent, as appointed by the Bishop; Pearl Van Eaton, librarian; permanent auditing committee, John Neill, E. W. Fisher, William Toovy. Some special committees were appointed and some financial matters were attended to. Resolved to meet in conference at Ribstone, Alberta, January 1 and 2, 1910. Grace Diggle.

LONDON.—District convened at Saint Thomas, Ontario, June 12, 1909, Elder R. C. Longhurst, president of district, in charge. The following were selected to preside over the conference: Presidency of district, R. C. Russell, U. W. Greene, and R. C. Evans; secretaries, H. Leeder, J. L. Burger, and J. T. Thompson. Committees appointed: Credential, A. McMullen, R. W. Tarzwell, F. Gregory; press, R. J. Farthing, F. Gray; administer to sick, G. C. Tomlinson, W. Place, D. B. Perkins, F. Mesle, J. Wilson, J. C. Farnfield. Organist, G. Bigger; chorister, C. Raisin; ushers, J. V. Clark, N. Martin, J. Judkins, J. Pycock, R. R. Cert, J. Shields. Courtesy of the floor was extended to visiting Saints. Bishop's agent's report was read as follows: Report from September 29, 1908, to May 31, 1909, balance due last report, $2,929.69; total received, $4,654.35; total expended, $6,643.68; balance due church, $940.36. Auditing committee reported that upon looking over the auditors' reports of the books since coming into the care of Elder R. C. Evans, Bishop's agent, there has never been once that they have found an error in the accounting of the many thousands of dollars received, and recommended that a unanimous vote of thanks be tendered Brother Evans for his faithful services. This recommendation and report was adopted. Credential committee reported. It was moved that the report be adopted and recommendation be acted upon and committee continued. The recommendation was that two names be stricken from Stratford delegation, they having appointed too many delegates. Treasurer's report was read as follows: Balance on hand last report, $34.26; received since, $21.71; expended, $30.00; balance due church, $25.97. Auditors found this correct and treasurer's and auditor's reports were adopted. Secretary's financial report; On hand, $43; received from treasurer, $10.00; expended, $7.47; balance on hand, $2.96. Auditors found report correct and it and auditors' report on it were adopted. Motion prevailed that district pay the expense of district president to General Conference. Addie Grant, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

MINNESOTA.—Sunday school association met in convention at Audubon, October 22, 1909. Thirty minutes were given for prayer and testimony meeting, Elder J. E. Wildermuth in charge. Convention was called to order by Supt. Kate M. Jepson at 11.30 a. m. A statistical report could not be given because the quarterly reports were not all received. Written or verbal reports of the condition of following schools were given: Clitherall, Frazee, Audubon, Almova, Minneapolis, and Bemidji. Some excellent papers were written by Srs. Eleanor Whiting, Ida Home, Sadie Johnson, and S. Houghton, Brn. Frederick Green, Charles Sundern, Robert Wildey, and Matthew Jepson, and one by the members of the primary class of the Minneapolis school. Brn. S. Swenson, J. E. Wildermuth, W. E. Peak, and E. A. Stedman were elected delegates to the General Convention and a motion carried that gave the district superintendent power to appoint and furnish credentials for delegate from Minneapolis.

MOBILE.—The Sunday school and Religio of the Mobile District met in joint business session at Bay Minette, Alabama, September 3, 1909, at 7 p. m., Oscar Tillman presiding. Verbal reports of officers of each department were interesting and encouraging. All visiting members were invited to take part in the convention. Schools reporting were: Three Rivers, Theodore, and Bluff Creek. Reports show that schools are progressing nicely. Theodore was the only Religio local reporting. Bro. Miller, home department superintendent of Religio, reported eight members in that department, showing a gain of 4 since last report. Bro. Kelley made quite an interesting and instructive talk on the work of the auxiliary societies. Convention adjourned to meet Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock prior to the convening of next district conference and at the same place of conference. Edna J. Cochran, clerk, Biloxi, Mississippi.

Conference Notices.

Alabama District will convene with the Flat Rock Branch, on Saturday, November 20, 1909, at 10.30 a. m. Will branch officials please see that all reports are promptly made out and forwarded? Let all Saints attend and aid in making the meeting a success. J. R. Harper, president.

The Presidency.

Died.

BEACH.—Mr. Stephen Beach of Pleasanton, Iowa, died October 10, 1909. He was born in Long Island, New York, October 15, 1824. He came to Decatur County, Iowa, in 1875. He was identified at one time with the Latter Day Saints, but withdrew from them. He was an honorable man. Funeral at Saints' church in Pleasanton, sermon by M. M. Turpen.

HARBSTREIT.—Rebecca Ann, born December 5, 1866, in Kenton County, Kentucky, and died of paralysis, September 30, 1909, at Hyatt, Daviess County, Indiana. She was the daughter of Bro. William and Sr. Elmira Harbstreit. She leaves to mourn a father, mother, one sister, and four brothers. Services at the house by Brother Zahnd, assisted by Brother Grieves, interment at Cornetsville Cemetery.

OLSEN.—At Leon, Iowa, October 1, 1909, Sr. Malinda Olsen, aged 71 years, 8 months, and 17 days. She is survived by two sons. Her husband, Bro. O. A. Olsen, died last April. She united with the church in 1861, baptized by John Shippy, in La Salle County, Illinois. Her body was brought to her home in Lamoni, where the funeral service was held in charge of Bro. William Anderson. Sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, benediction by Bro. Heman C. Smith, prayer at the grave by Bro. A. S. Cochran.

WILLIAMS.—Florence Louisa, daughter of Mr. Charles and Sr. Ann Louisa Williams, and granddaughter of Bro. John J. Watkins and Mr. Nicholas Williams, came to her death at Lucas, Iowa, October 2, 1909, from the effects of a kick received from a horse, about five hours before her spirit took its flight. She was born July 5, 1906, at Lucas, Iowa. Funeral services were held at Saints' church, October 5. Elder E. B. Morgan preached the sermon, assisted by Elders Parley Batten and John Harp, after which the lovely form that was once the abode of a loving and gentle spirit, was laid to rest in Fry Hill Cemetery.

LEYTHAM.—Elizabeth Taylor was born in Liverpool, England, April 15, 1829. She was married to Richard Leytham November 12, 1848, in Saint James Church, in Liverpool, England. To this union fifteen children were born; seven sons and eight daughters. She, with her husband, emigrated to America, coming direct to Florence, Nebraska. They resided here until the spring of 1865, at which time they moved onto a farm near Portsmouth, Iowa. In 1879 they moved to Persia, Iowa, where she continued to reside until her death, which occurred September 26, 1909. Her age was 80 years, 5 months, and 11 days. She united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in February, 1865. She lived a consistent Christian life, and died in full faith of a part in the first resurrection. She leaves to mourn a husband, five sons, and four daughters. The funeral services were held at the house September 28, Elder Joseph Seddon preaching the sermon, after which the remains were laid to rest in the Cass Township cemetery, near Portsmouth.

HALL.—Cecelia Catherine Hall was born July 16, 1820, on Christians Island, a Danish possession in the Baltic Sea. She died at 12.40 a. m., Thursday, October 7, 1909, at Council Bluffs, Iowa, of old age. She came to America in April, 1854, going direct to Utah, from whence she came to Council Bluffs in June, 1857. In the fall of that year she removed to Missouri, returning to Council Bluffs in June, 1859. August 11, 1862, she was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder Thomas Revel. September 22, 1864, she was married to Elder Andrew Hall, removing to Little Sioux, Iowa. Here they remained until the spring of 1869 when they removed to Council Bluffs, where she remained until her death. She is survived by an only son, J. Charles Jensen, Elder Hall having died December 22, 1899. The funeral discourse was delivered in the Saints' church by Elder Charles Derry. Interment in Walnut Hill Cemetery.

The Spirit of America.

The Spirit of America, the book by Professor Henry Van Dyke which has already attracted, in a translation, considerable attention in France will, it is announced, be ready for publication next month. The basis of this book is the talks which Professor Van Dyke delivered when exchange professor at the Sorbonne. The French press has hailed it as a remarkable analysis of this country and its people.

No man ever sank under the burden of to-day. It is when to-morrow's burden is added to to-day's that the weight is more than a man can bear.—George Macdonald.

A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—Herewith we reproduce the text of the Articles of Association of the United Order of Enoch. The document was read before a meeting of the First Presidency, the Presiding Bishopric, the presidency and bishopric of the Independence Stake, and other members of the church who were present, at a meeting held in Independence, Missouri, October 26, at 10 a. m. The meeting again convened at 3 p. m., at which time the Articles were signed by the persons named in the document. Directors were elected and these directors proceeded to elect their officers. The names of the directors and officers appear in the body of the document. Those present fully sensed the importance of the step being taken and felt that the favor and direction of God was with them in the meetings, according to the promise made in the revelation given at the late General Conference.—E. A. S.

A helping and benevolent association for the benefit of the poor, by furnishing equal opportunities to the needy, upright, and industrious in a financial, educational, and social way, with those who are more fortunate, and the supplying of stewardships and inheritances to the worthy who may lack.

ARTICLE 1.—STATEMENT.

Articles of Association adopted by the undersigned in accordance with due enactment and resolutions passed by the General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at its annual meeting held in Lamoni, Iowa, April 6 to 21, A. D. 1909, authorizing further organization by the Bishopric of said church of the Saints for purposes of transaction of business interests for the benefit of the poor and necessitous, and the general work of improvement and settlement of the worthy, who need homes and help.

ARTICLE 2.—AFFIRMATION.

Pursuant to instruction herein set forth, we, Ellis Short, I. N. White, W. H. Garrett, M. H. Bond, W. E. LaRue, G. E. Harrington, H. R. Mills, Joseph Smith, Roderick May, A. H. Parsons, David T. Reese, G. H. Hilliard, D. J. Krahl, W. R. Dexter, Frederick M. Smith, Elbert A. Smith, E. L. Kelley, J. T. Curtis, J. Mather, W. E. Messenger, W. B. Kelley, being desirous of forming a corporation under the laws of the State of Missouri, and more particularly under the provisions of Article II, Chapter 12, Revised Statutes, 1899, providing for associations of a benevolent and educational character, do hereby associate ourselves for the purpose of becoming a body corporate for the benefit of the poor and industrious who need, and the transaction of business necessarily connected therewith as herein set forth.

ARTICLE 3.—OBJECT IN OUTLINE.

The purpose of this corporation shall be to aid and assist the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need, promote temperance, morality, and equality, and provide against the evils of selfishness, covetousness, anarchy, and crime of every description, and thus conserve, to a degree, the good of the community, and the good of the state, by a voluntary coöperation in the use, application, and distribution of the wealth of those who may be members of the association, and who shall contribute for the purpose, and of the means which is gained by the association in its legitimate work and business, and also that which may be voluntarily contributed or consecrated for these benevolent purposes by those who do not hold membership in the organization.

ARTICLE 4.—NAME AND TERM.

The name of this organization shall be THE UNITED ORDER OF ENOCH, and its chief or principal place of business shall be in the city of Independence, Jackson County, and State of Missouri, but supplemental organizations and places of business may be located in adjoining and other counties, and when necessary for the carrying out of its work in other States, organizations or places of business may, according to the provision of the statutes of such States, be established in the same; and the association shall continue for the period of ninety-nine years unless sooner dissolved by the voluntary concurrence of at least three fourths of its members, and the concurrence therein by a majority vote of the General Conference of the said Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

ARTICLE 5.—NATURE AND WORK.

This association shall have no capital stock divided into shares; it shall not be run for individual pecuniary profit, but for the objects herein set forth; the properties of the same shall not be individual, or held in severalty, but in common. The homes and stewardships, however, which are provided for under the founding and management of the order, shall be individual, that is, held in severalty, each person or family holding in fee simple unless otherwise arranged at the time of setting the same apart, or when making the final settlement.

ARTICLE 6.—SPECIAL STATEMENT OF WORK AND POWERS.

The purposes of the association are:

First, to provide the advantages of permanent employment, and thereby permanent homes, especially for those found worthy, but who are unable to arrange for steady employment and who are without sufficient means to procure homes for themselves.

Second, to furnish educational advantages for the youth of both sexes when parties or parents are unable to do so themselves, either by rendering to the parties such assistance as will give to them equal opportunities in the public schools, or in providing for them the advantages of the higher, or special institutions of learning.

To accomplish this work, it will be necessary to acquire by gift, purchase, devise, or other legal and just methods, real and personal property; also acquire lands for farming, building, fruit raising, and gardening purposes; to establish, build, maintain and operate dairies, shops, or other general works, which will furnish facilities in furnishing employment, business, or stewardships of various kinds, and for industrial education or training; and for suitable homes or inheritances, and to hold real and personal property, to improve, sell and convey the same; the properties, accumulations or gains from all or any of such business enterprises, including live stock, real or personal property, farms or industries, and labor of whatever kind, in due time to be sold, or otherwise disposed of, the proceeds of which shall be the common property of the said corporation, or order, for its use and benefit in maintaining and carrying out the benevolent work herein provided, and for the settlement of its accounts and stewardships with its members, laborers, and officers, for actual and necessary services rendered, and for taxes, and whatever legitimate or current expenses, not named or enumerated herein; but the operations of the farms, shops, and the products of the same in no case to be for the pecuniary profit or benefit of any person or persons, corporation or corporations, but to be placed in the common treasury and used solely for the maintaining of the proper stewardships of its members and for the benevolent, beneficial and helping purposes herein set forth.

ARTICLE 7.—MEMBERSHIP.

Membership in the order requires as a prerequisite a full compliance with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual, and those referred to as temporal; that is, the precepts and ordinances of the gospel having been fulfilled through acceptance and obedience to the law of life as set out in the Holy Scriptures, together with a due compliance by each member of the law relating to temporalities, in that same law of life, and known as tithes and offerings, and specified under the work of inventories and consecrations. Also, the following specific duties set forth in the law of equality, to-wit:

A. To render a just and true account of the condition and business of his or her stewardship annually, setting forth the amount, or value, with the loss or gain of the same for the period named, together with a faithful estimate of necessities, and the amount required for repairs of stewardship, or the enlarging or extension of the same when proper, for the succeeding year.

B. Stated or annual settlement as provided under the law by turning into the treasury or storehouse any surplus or talents remaining after such fulfilling of the law, as relates to the tithe of the increase for the general benefit of the church.

C. In case of a lack or shortage, after a faithful and attested performance of duty in his or her stewardship for a time, or a year, such steward to receive from said treasury or storehouse, such a proper and just supply as the law directs according to "his needs and wants, inasmuch as such wants are just."

D. That in all labor and association each and everyone shall seek the interest of good of his neighbor, "doing all things to the glory of God."

E. In case of withdrawal, or transgression and expulsion, such person or persons shall retain that which has been set apart or deeded to him or her or them, for a stewardship or inheritance, but shall have no further claim upon the common treasury and shall not be entitled to any withdrawal, benefits, or interest in the common fund or storehouse, whatever.

ARTICLE 8.—MANAGEMENT.

A. The affairs of this corporation shall be under the supervision and management of the Bishopric of the church, as hereinbefore set forth, with the assistance and coöperation of a board of nine trustees to be selected by the members of the order from among their number, who shall in all matters pertaining to this association, act with the said Bishopric, thereby forming a board of twelve trustees, who shall organize by the selection of a president, a secretary, and treasurer, and perform any and all business necessary for the good of the order, a two thirds majority of said board thus constituted and voting as a unit, being necessary for the transaction of all business of the order at any meeting of the same, but a less number may adjourn from time to time. The trustees may also appoint an executive committee to act in business matters when the board is not in session.

B. The members of the Board of Trustees shall be elected at the annual meeting of the members of the association to be held the first Monday in April of each year or at an adjourned meeting of the order held subsequent to the said first Monday in April, and shall hold their offices until their successors are chosen and qualified. Vacancies occurring in the board may be filled at any time by the unanimous action of a majority of the members of the board, properly constituted, being present and voting.

C. The Board of Trustees may adopt by-laws, not inconsistent with these articles and the statutes of the State, as may be deemed necessary for the management of the affairs of the corporation and the carrying out of the work of the order.

D. The president, secretary, and treasurer herein, shall perform the duties usual to such offices in similar associations in addition to the specific duties named herein, providing such duties are not inconsistent with the rules of this association.

ARTICLE 9.—THE TERM "BISHOPRIC."

The "Bishopric of the church" herein referred to comprise the Presiding Bishopric of said church, but in the organization and work of this order, the bishopric of the stake, or district, wherein such, or similar organization is effected, or in which this order may be established and transact business, when such local bishopric is in harmony in spirit and work with this order, shall be associated in work and in council of the same.

ARTICLE 10.—CONVEYANCE OF REALTY, SEAL, AND PRIVATE PROPERTIES.

This corporation shall have a seal, and all conveyance of real estate shall be approved by the Board of Trustees of the order or association, and be signed and sealed by the president of the same. And such association may sue or be sued in its corporate name and all claims made against it shall be made in the corporate name and the individual or private property of the members shall in no case be held liable for the debts of the association.

ARTICLE 11.—DISSOLUTION AND DISTRIBUTION THEREUNDER.

It is hereby provided and made a part of the conditions of this order, that in case of the dissolution, or abandonment of the work of the same, that the properties of the order, after satisfying all just debts of the same, shall be turned over to the Presiding Bishop and Trustee of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for the use and benefit of the poor and needy of the said church as the Bishopric of the same and the General Conferences shall from time to time direct. And the officers of the order shall make due report of the work and condition of the same annually to the General Conference of the said Reorganized Church.

ARTICLE 12.—TRUSTEES.

The names of the persons chosen by these incorporators to act as trustees until their successors shall have been legally chosen are as follows: F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Roderick May, G. E. Harrington, Elbert A. Smith, W. E. LaRue, I. N. White, A. H. Parsons, and the following persons have been chosen as officers by the said Board of Trustees: E. L. Kelley, president; F. M. Smith, secretary; Ellis Short, treasurer; executive committee, E. L. Kelley, F. M. Smith, Ellis Short, Joseph Mather, Roderick May.

In testimony whereof, we, the above named incorporators, hereto set our hands at Independence, Missouri, this 26th day of October, A. D. 1909.

THE WORD "SURPLUS."

Editors Herald: At a meeting of the Joint Council of the Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric, held in Lamoni, Iowa, April 17, 1909, action was had which will be of some interest to the readers of the HERALD.

It appears that some difference of opinion had arisen among bishops, bishops' agents and counselors, relative to the meaning of the word surplus, used in the "Address to the Saints" by the Joint Council. The matter was referred to the Joint Council of the Twelve, Presidency, and Bishopric, by a meeting of bishops, bishops' counselors, and bishops' agents, in which this difference arose; and to this Joint Council the Presidency submitted the following opinion, which was indorsed by the Joint Council, after considerable discussion:

"The Presidency are of the opinion that the word should mean, when used by the ministry and the church, that part of a man's possessions, whether of moneys or properties, of which he has no present or immediate need; the word need being determined by the man's position, sphere of action, his business, and his dependencies. Not all have a surplus, many may have; the widow standing before the treasury giving her two mites did not give her surplus, she did consecrate of her living. Many widows and dependent women, hard-working, self-sacrificing, give of their labor a consecration, yet all may give of that which they have if they choose who may have no surplus under the general laws, either as tithing, freewill offering, or consecration."

Those who have a copy of the "Address to the Saints" might be pleased to know the interpretation of the word surplus, as given by the Joint Council.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. Thomas R. Allen, of Lamoni, Iowa, desires to know concerning the whereabouts and welfare of two granddaughters, Helen Green and Sarah J. Green, whom he has not seen for about twenty years. They used to be located at or near Bellville, Illinois, and the brother thinks that perhaps some of the Saint Louis or Bellville Saints may know about them. If any do know of them and wish to communicate with the brother they should address him at Lamoni.

One of the signs of the times that show progress and general uplift is the result of the election in Salt Lake City. The American Party has scored a signal victory over the party controlled by the priesthood, or church party. The church authorities have disclaimed any connection between church and politics, but the contrary has been altogether too patent to allow belief in their disclaimer. One of two things is apparent: The Utah Mormon church is losing its grip because of being outnumbered by the Gentiles, or the Mormon people are shaking off the fetters of priestcraft.

Perhaps the greatest sacrament service in the history of the Christian churches in America, if not in the world, was held by the Disciples of Christ during their great convention in Pittsburg last month. Twenty-five thousand partook of the bread and wine, and the service required one hundred elders and one thousand deacons.

The speakers at the Brick Church on Sunday were Elders E. A. Smith and G. W. Blair, and sacrament service was held in the afternoon, and a spiritual time was had, in spite of a severe storm during the meeting, when a few timid ones were somewhat alarmed. A great many of the Saints had come fasting and special prayers were made for the health of President Joseph Smith, Sister Walker, and others of the afflicted. Assurances were given that the sacrifices and prayers of the Saints had been heard and would be answered.

A novel innovation in the form of megaphone preaching was lately introduced at the open-air meetings at which Philip Sidersky presents the Gospel to the Jews. The crowds attending these services have become so large that it is necessary to adopt this means of reaching the "uttermost parts" of the gatherings. Mr. Sidersky has extended these services from Baltimore to Philadelphia and Washington.

There are one hundred and ninety-five thousand Jews in Chicago, almost one-tenth of the whole population. Of this large number there are only thirty who are actually members of any Christian church, though six hundred are said to be secret Christians.

"The churches are crying for more ministers, more young men of brain and heart, hope and spirit for their valiant enterprise. Therefore we believe the public should be made to realize that with the demands of the day for efficient service and the increase in the cost of living—especially in our large cities—the salaries of these self-sacrificing men, who are ever willing to serve to the utmost, should be raised to a more than living scale and be paid as promptly as any other business obligation."—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Lawrence, Kansas, minister has recently resigned from a local pastorate and has taken up work with a street railway company. He says: "I don't believe a minister can lead an honest life now. If he preaches the truth, he will be condemning the lives of most of his congregation and offending them. He passes over this and that and lives a lie every day of his life in order not to offend the influential members of his congregation. Thank God, I am earning an honest living now."

PATRIOTISM that counts does not become discouraged because the work looks hard. The spirit that inspired the doleful words, "There is so much rubbish; so that we are not able to build the wall," is not the spirit of the patriot. The true patriot courageously takes hold of his task as soon as possible. He begins, too, at his own door, in the spirit of the New England farmer who, when asked what could be done to better neighborhood conditions, said, "I ought to fix my sewer, and my neighbor ought to move his pigs"; or in the spirit of the Illinois man who, appreciating the disgrace of permitting snowdrifts to block the walks, decided that he, at least, would clean the paths before his own house.—Forward.

VII. THE CHURCH IN OHIO. EVENTS FROM 1830 TO 1838. BY BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD.

Some of the most important events of our church work are chronicled from events and experiences in and around Kirtland; so what I may write in this limited article will largely represent the work in that place.

I will commence with the revelation given October, 1830, to Parley P. Pratt who was commanded of the Lord to go into the wilderness among the Lamanites, taking with him Oliver Cowdery, Peter Whitmer, jr., and Ziba Peterson. See Church History, volume 1, page 126; Doctrine and Covenants, section 31. Of the early life and ancestry of these men read Church History, volume 1, pages 126, 127.

AN IMPORTANT MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

The exact date of the commencement of this important journey is not given, but chapter 8, Church History, volume 1, gives the following:

Of this mission Joseph writes: "Immediately on receiving this revelation, preparations were made for the journey of the brethren therein designated, to the borders of the Lamanites, and a copy of the revelation was given them. Having got ready for their journey, they bade adieu to their brethren and friends, and commenced their journey, preaching by the way, and leaving a sealing testimony behind them, lifting up their voice like a trump in the different villages through which they passed. They continued their journey until they came to Kirtland, Ohio, where they tarried some time, there being quite a number in that place who believed their testimony and came forward and obeyed the gospel. Among the number was Elder Sidney Rigdon, and a large portion of the church over which he presided.

"These men left position, influence, and friends behind them, to encounter for Christ's sake dishonor, scorn, poverty, and hardship. But what a thrill of joy must have pervaded their souls as they led into the waters of baptism those who had received the message of life intrusted to them. The objective point before these men who can be classed as the early pioneers of the great latter-day work was the land of Zion, 'but their stay of two or three weeks in Kirtland resulted in the baptism of one hundred and twenty-seven souls, and this number soon increased to one thousand.'"

With the work firmly planted in Kirtland to be taken care of by Sidney Rigdon, Isaac Morley, John Murdock, Lyman Wight, Edward Partridge, and many others who had been ordained to the ministry, the mission to Missouri was again continued. I will not follow these men in their perils and hardships, but remain with the Saints at Kirtland. We are here introduced to Orson Pratt, who had been baptized by his brother, Parley P. Pratt, September 19, 1830, and became influential in church work. This eventful year closed with a record of some of the most wonderful events of our church history. The Book of Mormon was given to the world, several branches were built up in New York and Pennsylvania, the work was firmly planted in Ohio, many influential men accepted the truth and were made ministers of the gospel, intrusted by God with a "mission to Zion where the banner of truth was to wave as a beacon light to the scattered of modern Israel, in all lands and climes."

VERY IMPORTANT REVELATIONS.

Joseph writes: "The year 1831 opened with a prospect great and glorious for the welfare of the kingdom." In the latter part of January Joseph and his wife accompanied Sidney Rigdon to Kirtland. The branch then numbering nearly one thousand had imbibed some false ideas, concerning a "common stock" project, which were corrected by the timely advice and counsel of the prophet. Here the mouth of the prophet is opened in prophetic utterance. Revelation after revelation is given to the church, as well as to important men individually. Section 42 of Doctrine and Covenants, containing such valuable information to the church, was given soon after Joseph's arrival at Kirtland, setting forth the great message of truth to this generation, repentance and baptism for the remission of sins. The place for the building up of Zion the New Jerusalem was indicated and the hearts of the children of God were made glad, because of the promises of a time and place for the gathering of Zion's children together. The question of authority to act or officiate for the church was decided. The conditions under which the work was to be presented, viz, under the direction and inspiration of the Holy Spirit, were stated. That command that has struck terror (or should) to the hearts of the advocates of polygamy, "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shall cleave unto her and to none else," was given; also, the law of consecration and equality, providing for the poor and the building up of Zion, etc. This section is one of the most important messages for church government ever given to man.

In all during the year 1831 thirty-four prophecies of the most vital import were given through God's chosen prophet and seer to the church and God's servants. God knew the powers working against his cause and the evils that would exist and enter the church, and provided laws beforehand that exigencies might be met with a "thus saith the Lord," so that men persistent in wrongdoing would be left without excuse. The signal as recorded in history reveals the wisdom of our heavenly Father. During this time Joseph was busy translating the Scriptures.

AN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE.

On June 6, 1831, the elders from the various parts of the country assembled in conference. At this gathering the fullness of the Melchisedec priesthood was first conferred. This is explained by Lyman Wight as follows:

On the 4th of June, 1831, a conference was held at Kirtland, Ohio, represented by all the above-named branches.

Joseph Smith, our modern prophet, presided. Here for the first time I saw the visible manifestation of the power of God, as plain as could have been on the day of Pentecost; and here for the first time I saw the Melchisedec priesthood introduced into the church of Jesus Christ, as anciently, whereunto I was ordained under the hands of Joseph Smith, and I then ordained sixteen others, such as he chose, unto the same priesthood.—Church History, volume 1, page 193.

At this conference six high priests were ordained. At that time P. P. Pratt received his ordination to the high priesthood. How confirming and strengthening this occasion must have been when the Holy Spirit fell upon the church in her early experience, bringing the evidences needed for the strengthening of those who were to meet so much of persecution in their work. The man of sin was also getting in his deceptive work in imitating the gifts of the Spirit, calling for wisdom and discernment to be exercised in their midst.

The next General Conference was appointed to meet in Missouri and several elders were called to go by different routes, two by two, to meet in Missouri, there to hold conference. Three elders selected thus to travel and labor apostatized and refused to go. Jacob Scott, Edson Fuller, and William Carter were the three deserters from the ranks. W. W. Phelps about that time united with the church. Joseph left Kirtland for Independence, Missouri, June 19, in company with Sidney Rigdon, Martin Harris, Edward Partridge, W. W. Phelps, Joseph Coe, and A. S. Gilbert and wife, agreeable to the command of the Lord. They traveled by wagon, canal boats and stages. From Saint Louis, Joseph, Harris, Phelps, Partridge, and Coe traveled on foot to Independence, Missouri, arriving about the middle of July.

In July a revelation was given at Independence pointing out the spot for building the temple, etc. This spot was dedicated August 3 by Joseph Smith. August 9, Joseph started for Ohio, arriving at Kirtland on August 27, 1831. The early part of September was spent by Joseph in preparing to remove to the town of Hiram for the purpose of engaging in the translation of the Bible. Joseph moved his family to Hiram, Portage County, September 12, and lived with John Johnson; this place was thirty miles distant from Kirtland. Orson Hyde was baptized the first Sunday in October, 1831. This man occupied an important position in the church and was chosen to carry to the nations the message of life and salvation.

A BISHOP APPOINTED.

On October 25 a conference was held at Orange, Cuyahoga County. Another conference was held at Hiram November 1; another being held on the 11th, showing that important work was being done in Ohio during this time. Revelations were frequent to direct in church matters; these were prepared and sent to Independence, Missouri, for the benefit and blessing of the Saints there. Sunday, December 4, at a conference held at Kirland, Newel K. Whitney was called, ordained, and appointed bishop of Kirtland. The work at this time was spreading to Shalersville, Ravenna, and other places.

JOSEPH AND SIDNEY MOBBED.

In January, 1832, a conference was held at Amherst, Lorain County, Ohio, where much important business was transacted. The translation during this time was progressing and on February 16 the wonderful vision of the different glories was given.

After this wonderful experience of Sidney Rigdon and Joseph Smith, a mob with fiendish spirit came to Joseph's in the dark of night, dragged Joseph and Sidney from their beds, and resorted to the most inhuman treatment that devils alone would inflict upon inoffensive men. Dragging them by their heels, scratching and tearing their flesh, with a bucket of tar they completed their fiendish work, leaving these two men who had been called of God to be the benefactors of mankind, to crawl to their resting place more dead than alive. This work was perpetrated under the flag of liberty, by men associated with religious organizations, who continued to persecute and menace the home of "Father Johnson."

JOSEPH SMITH ORDAINED PRESIDENT; HIS SON JOSEPH BORN.

Again the work of translation was hindered and as mobs were threatening Joseph at Kirtland, he with N. K. Whitney, P. Whitney, and Jesse Gauze started for Missouri, arriving at Independence, April 24, 1832. Here Joseph was acknowledged as President of the church of the high priesthood at a general council of the church called together by Joseph. His ordination having taken place at Amherst, Ohio, at a conference of high priests, January 25, 1832. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 244.)

Sidney Rigdon and Frederick G. Williams were ordained as his counselors March 13, 1833, thus completing the organization of the First Presidency.

On May 6, 1832, these men of God, Joseph, Rigdon, and Whitney, commenced their return journey to Kirtland, like Paul of old, "not knowing what awaited them there," but duty's call must be responded to, and the work of God fraught with so much importance must be prosecuted. Each journey seemed to be attended with great peril, both by land and water. On this journey Bishop Whitney received a badly broken leg through runaway horses. Joseph, the true, loyal friend he always proved to be to his brethren, stayed by his afflicted brother until he was able to be removed.

On Joseph's return to Kirtland, he at once resumed the work of translation. On September 22, 1832, the important and interesting revelation on priesthood was given. What a wealth of information it contains. (See Doctrine and Covenants, section 83.) Joseph's work kept him constantly on the move. As the work spread over the land, he was constantly called upon to settle disputes and difficulties arising often through a misunderstanding of the law.

While called away to journey to Albany, New York, and Boston, he writes the letter to his wife which breathes the true spirit of love and tenderness. This letter was written just before his son Joseph was born:

I returned to my room to meditate and calm my mind, and behold, the thoughts of home, of Emma and Julia, rush upon my mind like a flood; and I could wish for a moment to be with them. My breast is filled with all the feelings and tenderness of a parent and a husband, and could I be with you I would tell you many things. . . . I hope you will excuse me for writing this letter so soon after writing, for I feel as if I wanted to say something to you, to comfort you in your peculiar trial and present affliction. I hope God will give you strength that you will not faint. I pray God to soften the hearts of those around you to be kind to you, and take the burden off your shoulders as much as possible, and not afflict you. I feel for you, for I know your state and that others do not; but you must comfort yourself knowing that God is your friend in heaven, and that you have one true and living friend on earth, your husband, Joseph Smith.—Church History, volume 1, pages 258, 259.

His son Joseph, destined to be his successor as president to the church, and a prophet and leader to the people, was born November 6, 1832.

THE WORD OF WISDOM; INDUSTRIES.

About this time many ordinances were observed by the elders, among which was the washing of feet as introduced by Joseph as found on page 278, volume 1, Church History. This was carried out after the manner of Jesus Christ and his apostles as found in John 13. The school of the prophets was also established and did a good work among the ministry. The revelation known as the "Word of Wisdom" was given February 27, 1833, which after seventy-five years of test, proves to be in harmony with the best minds of the age, as well as a boon to the children of God. Matters pertaining to industry were kept prominently before the church. Lands were purchased to establish a brickyard for the purpose of building up the place, also using the stone quarry thereon. A tannery was purchased to give employment to the Saints now settled in Kirtland in large numbers.

In June, 1833, the revelation to build the Kirtland Temple or "House of the Lord" was given. A committee of three was appointed to obtain a draft of construction for the inner court, the committee consisting of Joseph Smith, jr., Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams. The committee on building, Reynolds Cahoon, Jared Carter, and Hyrum Smith, commenced immediately to obtain stone, lumber, brick, etc., for this purpose.

About this time D. P. Hurlbut was cut off from the church for unchristian conduct with the female sex. We mention this because of his prominence in unearthing the Spalding Romance in later years. July 2, 1833, the translation of the Holy Scriptures was finished and thanksgiving and gratitude was presented to God for the help afforded to complete a work of so much importance. This glad news was communicated to the brethren in Zion.

THE KIRTLAND TEMPLE.

On July 23, 1833, the corner stone of Kirtland Temple was laid, an event remarkable in the history of the church, because of the interest the Lord himself has taken in the building then in course of construction. The site, dimensions, and general architecture were given of him, as revealed to David, concerning the temple at Jerusalem thousands of years before.

I present the following to show the spirit of sacrifice which characterized the Saints during the erection of the Temple, "which was carried on under the most adverse circumstances and at great sacrifice." Heber C. Kimball records in his journal that he returned from Missouri to Kirtland on July 26, 1834. He there stated:

All this time the brethren were laboring day and night building the house of the Lord. Our women were engaged in spinning and knitting in order to clothe those who were laboring on the building, and the Lord only knows the scenes of poverty, tribulation, and distress we passed through in order to accomplish this thing. The sisters spun the wool, got it dressed, woven, and made up into garments for the brethren who were erecting under the direction of the Almighty, the house being built to his name. Elder Rigdon was busy urging them to work with all their might to accomplish the work in the time appointed, that God might accept it at their hands. Looking at the sufferings and poverty of the church he frequently went upon the walls by night and by day and frequently wetted the walls with his tears, calling aloud to the Almighty to send means whereby the work might be accomplished.

Joseph Smith was acting as foreman in the quarry, the Presidency, high priests, and elders all alike assisting; those who had teams assisting by drawing the stone to the house. These all laboring one day in the week, carrying sufficient for the masons for the whole week. This was continued until the walls were reared. During all this time terrible persecutions were endured by the Saints, especially by those in Missouri. Prominent men were also publicly attacking the work, Alexander Campbell being not a whit behind the chief of them. During this time conferences were provided for, and were held at various places, the Evening and Morning Star being an active agency in publishing passing events. Enemies within and without the church were harassing Joseph, employing all their powers to frustrate the designs and purposes of God as revealed to the church through him. Yet, under these adverse conditions, the work of the Temple progressed, the way being opened to continue the work, causing rejoicing among the Saints.

The brethren entered into a covenant with the Lord on November 29, 1834, that if he would bless them in temporal things so that they could meet their obligations, they would pay one tenth to be bestowed upon the poor in the church or as he should command. Thus, we find Joseph and those in authority with him in the church putting themselves in touch with the Almighty by being foremost in the observation of the law relating to temporalities, as well as that called the spiritual work of the church.

"THY WOODS AND TEMPLED HILLS."

This is a scene in Kirtland, Ohio. The Temple is seen in the distance.

THE TWELVE AND SEVENTY CALLED.

An event of great importance in the history of the church was the choosing and ordination of twelve apostles. According to the record this took place during February, 1835. They were chosen February 14 and several of the number were ordained the following day, others at a later date. The names of those chosen were Lyman E. Johnson, Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Hyde, David W. Patten, Luke Johnson, William E. McLellan, John F. Boynton, Orson Pratt, William Smith, Thomas B.

Marsh, Parley P. Pratt. The work of selecting members for and organizing the First Quorum of Seventy began February 28.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

I must hasten now to note briefly the effect resulting from the work and sacrifice of the Saints in building the temple. On Sunday, March 27, 1836, the Temple erected to the service of the Lord was dedicated to his name. The months and years of toil, sacrifice, and anxiety, but of persistent energy and determination in its building, were at last ended. The morning dawned upon souls full of thanksgiving and praise to the Almighty for his blessings in strengthening them for the work he had intrusted to their care. "This historic building stands on elevated ground south of the east fork of the Chagrin River, about three miles from Willoughby, Ohio, and about six miles in direct line from Lake Erie."

The building is of stone, plastered without and within. It is three stories high, exclusive of the basement. The first and second stories are auditoriums, each fifty-five by sixty-five feet on the inside, exclusive of the vestibule on the east end, through which is the entrance to the building and in which are the stairways. The lower room was to be dedicated "for sacrament offering and for your preaching, and your fasting and your praying, and the offering of your most holy desires, unto me, saith your Lord." The second room was to be dedicated for the school of the apostles. In each of these rooms are eight pulpits, four in each end; those in the west end were intended for the Melchisedec priesthood and those in the east end for the Aaronic priesthood. The third story is divided into small rooms.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED.

The auspicious day had arrived and the people of God began to assemble before eight o'clock in the morning. At nine o'clock the doors were closed, as every seat and aisle was crowded. Sidney Rigdon was the speaker for the morning service, after which Joseph Smith was presented to the assembly as their prophet and seer, and was received and acknowledged as such by a rising vote. The vote was unanimous in the affirmative. The question was then put and carried without a manifest dissenting sentiment, to each of the different grades of quorums of church officers respectively and then to the congregation.

Joseph had come in by the door of common consent, as the Lord instructed. With singing, led by a well-trained choir, the services were made joyous and pleasing to God and to his people. With an intermission of about fifteen minutes the services were continued. Joseph offered the dedicatory prayer, which was marked by pathos, earnestness, and spiritual power, with thanksgiving flowing from a heart which was breathing tenderness and adoration to God. The Temple had received its baptism of water by the tears which fell from the eyes of the suffering ones who had assisted in its building under the scenes of persecution attending their work, for then foes were unrelenting in their hatred and persecution, and had sworn that its walls should never be raised. Their tears had also flowed for their brethren in Missouri who during these years had been despoiled by their enemies. The scene had changed; sorrow had given place to joy; the soul's fountains were opened as the baptism of fire descended upon the house of the Lord and the assembly of God's children. The windows of heaven were open; the angelic hosts were employed by the eternal Father to assist in this service; the choirs of heaven took up the strains of inspirational song offered by the Saints in their service, and thus the feast was spread and the food supplied suited to men and angels.

Who can say that Moroni, who was the first messenger to introduce this wonderful latter-day dispensation to Joseph, was not among those who assisted in making that memorable service perfect? We reluctantly leave this occasion of God's manifest blessing to his children.

TIMES OF TROUBLE.

The year 1836 was one of great importance to the church in Kirtland. Joseph and his fellow-officers were busy in establishing business institutions; among others the Kirtland bank of which so much has been said by the enemies of the work. Seeds of dissension were being sown among the Saints by those who had promised to support the church and those in authority, causing much trouble and anxiety. This was followed by mob violence when Brigham Young was forced to leave Kirtland, December 22, 1836. Thus the year closed with clouds of apostasy, confusion, and mobocracy hanging over the work established in Kirtland.

The year 1838 dawned upon the church in Kirtland in all bitterness, so much so that Joseph and Sidney Rigdon were obliged to flee from Kirtland, their families following them, because of the intolerable abuse heaped upon them. January 12 they were followed by their enemies for more than two hundred miles, armed with pistols, etc., seeking their lives. The weather was bitterly cold, making this journey one of suffering and danger. The journey was long and tedious; they being two months on their journey, arriving at Far West March 14.

The work in Missouri now claims the concentrated attention of those in authority, so we leave rather abruptly the outline we have tried to present to the reader, of the wonderful work of this latter-day dispensation accomplished under God in Ohio. To my mind, Kirtland, Ohio, stands out boldly, towering above every other spot of historical note relating to the work of latter-day Israel. Faneuil Hall, Boston, Massachusetts, is called the "cradle of liberty," and it has well earned that name, as its doors are ever open to the advocates of liberty and to those who are using their influence and oratorical powers for the suppression of tyranny and misrule. What Faneuil Hall has been and still is to America's great republic and universal liberty, Kirtland has been to the Church of Jesus Christ, or kingdom of heaven, established by the God of heaven through his servant and prophet, Joseph Smith, April 6, 1830. The constitution or gospel as there presented to the world as a propaganda of peace among men and of universal liberty, has no equal, for it stands preëminently above all others in its towering heights as a beacon light to earth's nations. It was at Kirtland, Ohio, where church organization in its most complete form was effected, and where general classification of laws and the duties of God's servants were outlined; where revelation upon revelation was given as God hastened the equipment of his church for its wonderful evangel to the world.

The incidents as recorded in our Church History of the work there are intensely interesting and full of inspiration. I offer to you, "gentle reader," a few of those historical facts which have appealed most strongly to my mind, with a prayer of hope that you may find cause for renewed diligence and sacrifice in the work which has caused so much suffering and persecution to those who worked so faithfully to bring about its establishment in the earth.

ANOTHER CLAIMANT FOR POLAR HONORS.

Years of my life were spent in endeavors to reach the north pole, not of this material world, but of the world of thought. Finally I succeeded, years ago, and ever since I have felt that I owe my fellow mortals the benefit of my experiences. I have shrunk from the performance of the unpleasant task of submitting them to the public, but circumstances seem to have conspired to force me to act.

I don't claim to have been the first man to reach the north pole of the thought world. Many are perishing there every year. Very few return and bring acceptable records with them. In my northern researches I was greatly assisted by the observations of other explorers, chief among whom, of modern men, were Shakespeare and Pope.

Shakespeare was so near the pole that he concluded that "we are but shadows in pursuit of shadows."

Pope seems to have traveled all around the pole in search of some place where he could reach it without sacrificing his soul. One place he was so near to it that he said of man:

"He hangs between, in doubt to act or rest;
In doubt to deem himself a God or beast."

He finally gave it up saying, "'Tis but a part we see and not the whole."

King Solomon reached the ninetieth degree and he knew it as well as did Cook or Peary. He did not come away in such a hurry that he left his notes and records with the Eskimos, and without equivocation he declared:

"Man has no preëminence above the beast, as the one dieth so dieth the other, all go to one place." Which means, "All a man knows is acquired through the senses. No senses, no soul." (Aristotle.)

"The mind is not moved by itself."—Aristotle. Which means, Man is an imaginary identity, which in other words means, he isn't now and never was, or the soul is merely a delusive feeling.

Solomon, like every other man who has been through the great mill, experienced the mental torture that attaches to the unhappy conviction, hence he exclaimed, "All is vanity and vexation of spirit"; turn as he would it was only to look south toward more genial climes.

He beheld the masses of his subjects toiling on in the enjoyment of faith and hope, he knew that their part compared with his was like a pleasant dream by a hideous nightmare. Was it surprising that he should warn his people against the dangers of polar expeditions, and endeavor to promote their faith and hope by building a great temple to the God in whom they put their trust? Solomon is frequently referred to as the preacher; but nowhere is he styled a preacher of righteousness, doubtless because his convictions precluded the possibility of doing so with propriety. Nevertheless he commended the preaching of righteousness and the dispensing of the bread of life, in word, as well as by building the temple.

I am truly thankful that the great masses of my fellow-creatures do not and can not see things as they appeared to me at the pole, thus:

"Life at best is like a flower,
That blossoms through one sunny hour,
A bright, illusive dream.
A wave that breaks upon the shore,
A lightning's flash that straight is o'er,
A phantom seen, then seen no more,
A bubble on the stream."

The reason it is so difficult to reach the north pole of the thought world and return is that it is located in the center of a great maelstrom. You get near the pole and in your eagerness to get there and nail the stars and stripes to it, you press forward without noticing what you are getting into; you are caught by the whirlpool and carried down into the great mill, and before you can escape, if you should be so fortunate as to do so, your soul is ground finer than powder. If you should make your escape and get back to civilization with your mind clothed in raiment half as comfortable and elegant as that which adorned the body of Doctor Cook when he reached Copenhagen a few weeks ago, you may thank your lucky stars.

Now, dear readers, I have no doubt that most of you are quite willing to take the word of Doctor Cook and Commander Peary concerning that which is at the North Pole of the physical world, and let it rest at that.

Most people shrink from the thought that "when men die, at once they cease to be." As for myself I came to the conclusion that if this be true, then ignorance is bliss. If you would give the unhappy thought a wide berth, abandon any desire you may have to see the north pole of the metaphysical world, and join the comparatively happy, contented throng in praising God from whom all blessings flow.

Whilst I was suffering intensely from the cold of this Arctic temperature, I loved, wooed, won, and wed a young woman who was living in the sunny south of the metaphysical world. She did then, and still does belong to the Latter Day Saints, a people who enjoy an abundance of faith and hope. Could nature or nature's God furnish a better antidote for an overdose of doubt and unbelief, especially when one was in such a hopeless condition and ready and willing to take his medicine, "Man's necessity is God's opportunity"?

I found those people so much happier than I was that I longed for the sunny south. I united with them; not that I really believed as they did; but that I wished I could so believe. I took part in their worship as best I could, thereby courting faith. As a result I now feel, "There is a God that's ever near," a supreme, living intelligence that is cognizant of and interested in my individual welfare. I can not prove it, and have not a ghost of a desire to disprove it, as an ounce of comfort, consolation, and happiness is worth more to me than tons of frigid, distasteful, mathematical, metaphysical consolation. "A little philosophy inclines men's minds to atheism, depth in philosophy bringeth them about to religion again."

I feel that I have been forced through the complete round of human experience and now my heart beats in unison with that of our nation. I can bow the knee without the least shame, present the best of reasons for so doing, and ask divine guidance for this little craft I call me, just as our rulers ask divine guidance in making and enforcing our laws.

Elders' Note-Book

PRAYER.

Some people think prayer is a telephone,
A patent transmitter to hire or own,
And at every hint of a small desire,
They call up the busy Central Wire
To plug into the Great White Throne.

Some people think prayer is an elevator,
A sort of an automatic waiter,
Eternally ready, supernally swift,
To pick them up and give them a lift,
Whenever they signal the Operator.

Some people think prayer is a kind of a kite,
A little erratic as yet in flight,
And consequently it isn't claimed
That it always reaches the spot where aimed,
But it carries the message up all right.

Some people think prayer is a flying machine,
Impressive in power but inclined to careen,
And if any part of the motor snaps
The whole thing falls in a huge collapse,
With your wrecked hopes somewhere in between.

But maybe prayer is a road to rise,
A mountain path leading toward the skies
To assist the spirit who truly tries.
But it isn't a shibboleth, creed, nor code;
It isn't a pack horse to carry your load;
It isn't a method; it's only a road.
And perhaps the reward of the spirit who tries
Is not the goal, but the exercise.

MINISTERIAL ANECDOTES.

NO HURRY.—The minister of a certain parish in Scotland was walking one misty night through a street in a village when he fell into a deep hole. There was no ladder by which he could make his escape, and he began to shout for help. A laborer passing heard his cries, and, looking down, asked who he was. The minister told him, whereupon the laborer remarked, "Weel, weel, ye needn kick up sic a noise. Yo'll no be needed afore Sawbath, an' this is only Wednesday nicht."—The Argonaut.

A clergyman was once annoyed by people talking and giggling in church. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said:

"I am always afraid to expose those who misbehave, for this reason: Some years ago, as I was preaching, a young man who sat before me was laughing, talking and making uncouth grimaces. I paused and administered a severe rebuke.

"After the service a gentleman said to me: 'Sir, you have made a great mistake. That young man you reprov'd is an idiot.' Since then I have been afraid to reprove those who misbehave themselves in church, lest I should repeat the mistake and reprove another idiot." During the rest of the service at least there was good order.—Selected.

THE RELIGIO GOSPEL LITERATURE BUREAU.

The work of this department is to encourage and educate the Saints in reading and distributing the best tracts, all the church papers and other church literature, to place our work, the gospel, before the world.

The writer having been lately appointed General Superintendent of this work intends to have it on a good working basis in every Religio local and branch of the church. We are commanded to warn our neighbor. Jesus says to occupy till he comes. The grand privilege of occupying under the leadership of our Lord, the King of Glory, is ours to enjoy; to occupy as the apostles and saints of old have occupied; to love the spreading of the gospel more than we love our own lives. Our heavenly Father says his word shall not return to him void. Blessed assurance that our labor shall not be in vain.

At present we wish to make a special effort in distributing what the writer and many others consider the best general tract published by the church. The number of the tract is two hundred and nine and the name, "The Church of Jesus Christ; Where is it? How shall I know it? There are many churches of men; Only the one church of Christ." On sale at the Herald Publishing House. William Lewis is the author, though his name is not printed on the tract. Of this tract one brother says: "Best I ever read; it will either condemn or convince those who read it." Another: "I gave one to a non-member who said he had never read anything like it, asked me to take twenty cents and get him a dozen, which I did." Still another: "This tract certainly breaks the ice; it has stirred up some of my friends who read it who for years have refused to talk religion with me."

The Presidency and Bishop highly recommend this tract, and we would like to know that it is in every Latter Day Saint home.

The Gospel Literature superintendent of the Independence Stake has introduced this tract to the Saints in five branches with good success, selling seventeen dollars and seventy cents' worth. He has also succeeded in placing it on sale at the large news stand in the great union depot, Kansas City, Missouri. This news stand accepted one hundred to sell. The brother will endeavor to have it placed on sale in bookstores. Up to the present time he has only tried one bookstore and they accepted seven dozen to sell.

The Independence Stake Religio president, William Bushnell, a live worker, has been successful in directing and assisting to plant the gospel literature work in the locals under him. Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, general president, will be glad to know of the success of this work in every district and local in the church.

The leaflet of instruction is being revised, also the report blanks; both will be sent to district presidents in the near future, and all local committees then will know what is expected of them.

Here are a few plans you might use at once:

1. Place racks with tracts in every Latter Day Saint church.
2. Secure subscriptions to Autumn Leaves.
3. Order by freight five or ten dollars' worth of tract No. 209, (Herald Publishing House,) and sell them at twenty-five cents a dozen to the Saints.
4. Place Autumn Leaves and Ensign in public libraries and reading rooms.
5. Raise funds for gospel literature work.

Another article will be published which will be illustrated and will explain this work more fully.

The Baby of the Court.

The whole neighborhood resented its coming, and that resentment was really the first thing the neighborhood had ever had in common—except, perhaps, its love of quiet and seclusion, which it had never taken the trouble to mention. It was not a social place, this modest and respectable block where everybody was busy, and wasted no time upon neighbors. No one knew when the unwelcome addition arrived, but it lifted up its voice in a wailing, insistent cry, that left no doubt of its presence.

"Dear me! I didn't know there was a child in the court," said Margaret, looking up from her water colors. "Why doesn't somebody stop its crying?"

The question appeared to be in other minds, also, for presently, Margaret, to her amusement, saw old Mrs. Means come out on her steps and peer up and down the street. Usually her intercourse with Margaret went no further than a bow when they chanced to meet, but now, as she saw the girl at her open window, she remarked:

"Somebody ought to quiet that child—wherever it is."

The old bookkeeper on the third floor at the corner made almost the same observation, when his path crossed Margaret's the next morning—made it somewhat complainingly, for the cry had disturbed his sleep through the night. Where was that child, and why didn't they keep it quiet? Margaret's cousin and roommate made a similar contribution to conversation when she came home from work, and Margaret laughed.

"My dear, that little infant has awakened this whole silent neighborhood to speech. I've seen the little dressmaker talking to Mrs. Means, and the bookkeeper talking to both of them. It's getting to be very funny. Everybody is gravely informing everybody else that there is a baby in the court, and that somebody ought to stop its crying."

Nobody appeared able to stop it for very long at a time, and the sound grew so pitiful that there could be no thought of fun left in Margaret's kind heart. She pushed aside her photograph coloring one day and followed the cry.

"Is the baby sick?" she asked of the anxious-faced woman who greeted her. "I'm your neighbor, three doors north, and I heard the baby crying."

"I'm afraid everybody's heard it," interposed the woman, "but I don't know what to do with the poor, little thing. I believe it's fretting for its mother, baby though it is—fretting about her and the change from the country to this shut-in place. She was my sister, and she died last week. There was no one but me to take the child, but I can't half take it out and do by it as I'd like to do, on account of having to keep up my work. I take in fine ironing, you know."

Margaret did not know. She had scarcely known the woman by sight, but the sadly common story of sorrow, and the flower-like face of the little one, drew her at once.

"Maybe some of the rest of us can help a little," she said. "It's a fine afternoon; let me take her out into the air for awhile—just up and down the court."

The aunt consented gratefully, and in a few minutes Margaret was pacing slowly up and down with the helpless little bundle in her arms. Mrs. Means saw it, and came to her window.

"Oh, you have that baby! It's quiet enough when it's out of doors, isn't it, and almost asleep?"

Margaret rocked it softly in her arms, and told its brief story in a sentence or two before she passed on. When she repassed the house Mrs. Means' window was open, and the older woman called to the girl:

"Come in a little while and rest, won't you? I'd like to hold the baby a bit myself while you tell me more about her."

There was little more to tell, but the invitation was so urgent that Margaret could not well refuse, and found herself in her neighbor's cozy room for the first time. The call was returned two days later, when the baby had been taken to Margaret's home.

"I saw you bring it in," confessed the caller, "and I thought I'd run in and hold it a little while so that you could have a chance to get your dinner started. You cook for yourself and your cousin, don't you? I'm going to see the aunt some day, too, if you think she won't mind."

In less than a week the woman who did fine ironing had made the acquaintance of the little dressmaker—who could "just as well as not take the baby" when she went on her daily walk—and of the bookkeeper, who ventured rather timidly to offer a second-hand baby carriage, "which the friend who owned it wasn't using," as well as of Mrs. Means, whose heart had gone out to the little one the moment it lay in her arms. So many friends and so many outings appeared to agree with the tiny girl; the fretful crying ceased, and the little form rounded day by day. She was the neighborhood baby, and the neighborhood in its devotion quite forgot that its members had ever wanted to be solitary and undisturbed. It was the old bookkeeper—and it seemed an entirely natural thing for him to do—who waited at a corner to give Margaret the latest news one day.

"Little Meg has a tooth."

"That child needs a lot of new clothes, short dresses, now that she's beginning to use her feet," announced the little dressmaker, "and a warm cloak for these windy days. The aunt hasn't much time to attend to such things, and she can't do it alone, anyway. I think we women ought to have a sewing bee."

That idea met ready favor. It was not easy to find hours when the busy members of the little community could be at leisure at the same time. Once it would have been deemed impossible, but now it was planned for and accomplished, and the one sewing evening grew into several.

"I'll be right sorry when they're over," confessed Mrs. Means, "they've been so sociablelike. But there's one thing," she added, brightly, "the baby'll wear the clothes out, and we'll have to do it over again."

"I've been thinking," said Margaret's cousin, hesitatingly, "of other children round on the other street that I pass every day on my way to the store. It's not a pleasant neighborhood like this, and they're not cared for like our baby."

"Poor things!" murmured the dressmaker. "We needn't be too selfish to let our kindness overflow a little bit. Let's keep up our sewing circle."

And no one realized how the shut-in court had changed—how it had grown into friendliness, sympathy, and outreaching charity at the voice of a little child. In doing for others they themselves had been richly blessed.—Kate W. Hamilton in Pilgrim Visitor.

Letter Department

MOUNT CARMEL, ILLINOIS, October 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: This morning my mind is wandering to our dear church papers and to the great good and comfort they are to the Saints. How much I do enjoy the letters from our brothers and sisters. Their experiences are ever a benefit to us and each week their pages are read with delight. By reading I find the experiences of the Saints are much alike. None are going through life on "flowery beds of ease." But all have hope and faith in that day of rest which we often sing of in that sweet by and by.

Dear Saints, let us live in harmony with what we teach and want others to be. We should be a light to the world. If we have oil in our vessels and are clean and pure ourselves, the light will shine to those around us.

O, that we could come to that height in our spiritual lives where we could desist from fault-finding with the works and plans of the dear Father and look upon his work as one of the dearest works in the world.

I have been wonderfully blessed in the last few months and even from the earliest period of my life. I have had many dark trials to go through. But it is a true saying, behind the darkest cloud is a ray of sunlight. It seemed at times I could not bear the trials, but I often sang, "O, for a faith that will not shrink," and knew that God would not burden me more than I was able to bear.

I often think of a statement made in Paul's writing where he said if we only had hope in this life of all men we would be most miserable. But we have a greater promise than any in this life if we only live for it. May the Lord help each and every one to learn their duty and help us all to work together and try to build one another up, and heed the call to come up higher and receive the blessings that the Lord has in store for the faithful. I still ask the Saints to pray for my husband that he may obey the gospel so we may work together in this work, for I know it is of God, and the time remaining in which to work is short.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. SARAH GREISS.

OLTON, TEXAS, October 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: Words can not express the joy and encouragement that come to our hearts as we read the good letters, testimonies, and other items of interest. I shed tears of joy while reading how our work is being displayed at the Alaska-Yukon Exposition. We can know through this that God works mightily among his faithful Saints.

O, how we long to hear our gospel preached! We are some of the isolated ones and do not know of any Saints or church for miles around. We are surrounded by all denominations and are classed with the Utah people. We trust that God will in due time make them understand the difference. We are still hoping and praying that the Lord will send us a teacher.

We have a union church here and we go to the house of worship whenever we can, but how we would enjoy the privilege to mingle with our own people. But we have only our silent preachers: HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Hope. We are enlightened more by them than by hearing the word as it is preached to-day.

I can truly testify that God has not forsaken us. He has been our guide in sickness, trials, and tribulations, and has answered our prayers in dreams, and we know that he is ever near us when we are striving to do his will. May the HERALD ever prosper.

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. EMMA SCHREIER.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, October 19, 1909.

Editors Herald: I think Wilburton is a good old town for the reason that I first saw the light of the gospel here. I was born and raised in northeastern Texas; cradled in a Baptist cradle, I joined that church when about twenty years old. I lived up to the best light I had for awhile, but finally gave up all hopes of any hereafter, in fact I did not care.

But before this time I had married and my wife being a Latter Day Saint and I a Baptist, that did not go very well together. She had the advantage when we came to the scripture, so you see all I could do was to deny the truth, so I did that as fast as I could.

When about three years had passed the light of the gospel came to me, and on February 14, 1909, I was baptized by Bro. S. W. Simmons. It was about five o'clock in the evening and the snow was falling thick and had been all day, but it was the happiest time of my life. I went forth and did the best I could. I was ordained on the 29th of July, and since that time I have done the best I could to spread the angel message. I have had the pleasure of seeing two of my sisters come into the church.

We have a good Sunday school here of which I am the superintendent, and also a good Religio society. We have prayer meeting twice a week, preaching Sunday morning and evening, all of which are very interesting.

My prayer is that this great work will roll on and on until all the pure in heart are gathered in. I realize that there is a great work to be accomplished and that the time is here for us to do something more for the work than we have done in the past.

In gospel bonds,

TULARE, CALIFORNIA, October 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am glad that I ever heard the true gospel and obeyed the same. I have been blessed many times. I have seen the healing of God's hand in my family, and of late I have been blessed. I have been sick since the 1st day of May, sometimes in bed for weeks at a time, and I was administered to several times and always received a blessing, but it seemed as though it would come back on me again, and I was administered to the 18th of July under the hand of Bro. J. B. Carmichael, and received a great blessing. I have never had any bad sinking spells since, but am not yet fully restored to health, and I ask an interest in your prayers that I may be fully restored to strength. Ever praying for the welfare of all,

Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. SARAH DAMRON.

UTOPIA, TEXAS, October 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am glad to say that the latter-day work is progressing nicely; prejudice being removed daily and the statement and promise made by the Lord being verified in that his people should find favor in the eyes of the people.

The Saints throughout the district feel well and have a desire to move onward. The district bought a tent last spring and arranged seating capacity for twelve hundred people. We have lacked at times for more seats. Brn. W. M. Aylor, W. H. Mannering, and myself, with the assistance of the local brethren, have kept the tent pretty well occupied all year.

The writer in company with W. H. Mannering came to the above place some days ago, it being ninety-five miles west of San Antonio. Bro. E. B. Bennett and family live here. We have held two meetings with fair crowds and some interest manifested.

Ever praying and laboring for the redemption of Zion,
D. S. PALMER.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, October 21, 1909.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I can not resist this beautiful autumn afternoon, taking my pen in hand and trying to express some of my thoughts. As I look out upon Nature, with all its beauty and grandeur, and the very elements are as quiet and peaceful as a babe rocked to and fro in its sweet slumber, I can not help but think, if only the whole universe could be as peaceful as the surroundings seem to be at the present time, what a great joy would reign! But alas, hear what you may, pick up almost any paper of the day, and therein, somewhere, you will find turmoil, strife, and wickedness of almost every description. We only need to pause a moment and reflect, that perilous times are fast coming upon us, and this should be as a "warning," to us as Latter Day Saints, to be faithful, diligent, and strive to sail along on the sea of "righteousness," and day by day, it matters not whether it be a mild or tempestuous sailing, if we continue faithful on our voyage, we will some day anchor safely across on the other side, on that "peaceful shore" where Christ and his holy ones shall dwell.

"Lead me, Savior, lead me ever,
Never from thee let me stray;
Keep me close that naught may sever
Me from thee or from thy way;
I would walk for e'er beside thee,
While life's darkest vale I roam;
Thou alone can'st safely guide me,
To my everlasting home.

We are weak, erring creatures, and how true it is that at all times we must have Christ as our stay, our pillar by night and by day. Dear Saints, all we can do for our blessed Savior is but little. He suffered and died that we might live, but how many there are in the world to-day that are enjoying all this world can afford, never thinking of Christ nor the great beyond! How many will have their lamps trimmed and burning, preparatory for the Savior at his coming? I do feel to thank my great Creator for the blessings he has and is bestowing on my companion and myself.

Ever striving to live faithful,
SR. IDA L. SNOW.

CORBIN, MONTANA.

Editors Herald: I want to say I am highly gratified as to the way in which the HERALD has been edited in the past few months. I don't see where it could be improved upon and I think every member should take it, and read it too, and thus give every encouragement possible to its worthy editors.

I am still trying to continue in the faith. Since last writing I have been visited by Elders D. R. Baldwin and S. S. Smith, who preached here. While listening to their able discourses I was made to feel the power of God by which they spoke, also there came to my mind the thought: Why do people have to go back two thousand years or more for the word of God, and that the word as it was translated by uninspired men, while here we have men endued by the same power by which men spake in days of old? If they speak by the same power, where the difference whether we get the word of God at the mouth of a Paul, or a Timothy, or a Stephen, or a Baldwin, a Smith, a Brown, or a Jones? Since God never changes. It stands to reason, then, that the principles of saving truth never change, that the doctrine of eternal salvation, through faith in a crucified and risen Redeemer, never has to be modified or intensified. God knew from the beginning even to the end what would be the best condition for mankind to come to, to be worthy that salvation; therefore, his servants speak to-day by the same spirit by which his servants spake in days of old, and all such teaching, whether then or now, is gospel, scripture, the law and precepts of God, given for the saving of mankind.

I would like to pen some thoughts on the portion of scripture found in Job 21: 15: "What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have, if we pray unto him?"

There seem to be diversities of opinion among believers in him as to just what the Almighty is. Jesus Christ said, "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth."—John 4: 24. This spirit is composed of certain attributes, to-wit: eternal, immutable, invisible, incomprehensible, unsearchable, omniscient, omnipresent, being seized of the following properties to the very highest degree, even to an unsearchable extent, as holiness, justice, goodness, mercy, and love. If, then, the word be true that man was created in the image and likeness of God, it is easy to imagine a being with body, parts and passions, possessing all the divine attributes. When the question is asked, What is our God? we have but to cast our minds back to the beginning and follow his dealings with the children of men and we understand what our God is in all things that concern us.

First, he is our father, our creator (Genesis 2: 7), giving man his shape or form, and as Genesis 1: 26, 27 seems to consummate the fatherhood of God and the sonship of man, for in that God gave man his image and breathed into him his life, would it not be logical to conclude that as like produces like, so man—the inner man—which the Almighty breathed into the dust-made man, was a part of the great giver. Man, then, being an integral part (though small) of the Almighty, is made beholden to that from whence he came. This being true, it would seem to be sufficient reason why we should serve him, because from him we receive all we are or can ever hope to be, all we have or can ever expect to have.

As one so all powerful would have no occasion to lie or deceive, man can give the utmost credence to any and all promises made by the Almighty. When, therefore, he promised man salvation, it was a conditional salvation, there being certain works required of all alike. Here again he showed his love, in that he would treat all alike; giving to all the same opportunities and the same rewards for the same service; sending the sunshine and rain, the bounties of heaven and earth upon all alike, so that there was left no reasonable excuse to be given why we should not serve him.

The Almighty set the bounds and laws to govern in all things from the least even unto the greatest of his works; by these it is easier for man to find his true position among the Almighty's works; hence the lines of service necessary to the obtaining of the promised salvation. Man has every reasonable incentive to service.

On account of space I will briefly notice the second question in the verse given: "And what should it profit us, if we pray to him?" Prayer as I understand it is the gateway to the presence of God; it is the only means given to enable us to reach the Almighty. Holiness is the key to unlock the gate which separates us from our God. Faith is the hand which holds the key; the abhorrence of evil gives the hand strength to use the key in an efficient manner. The love of God and man in our hearts fits us for service when we have learned how to use the above-named principles in the interest of truth.

I was at one time in a condition of darkness, estranged from the way of righteousness and truth. Then as a reward for that condition I had disquieting fears, shame, sorrow, and a general condition of hardness. But by and by faith entered my soul bringing rays of light and peace and hence a desire to forsake those darkened ways, which I call repentance. Those rays broke in upon my general darkened condition and enabled me to see that God was in it, leading me to joy and peace. I clearly saw it was necessary to lay hold upon the promises made by the Almighty, and continue step by step unto the keeping of every command; in proportion as I lived by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God, was the joy increased. So baptism and the laying on of hands followed in their order, all bringing that fuller measure of joy, according to the daily practice of the Christian virtues, such as faith, love, patience, temperance, knowledge, brotherly kindness.

In nothing has the joy been greater than in the caring for the ministry and the paying of tithes as I have been given the opportunity. These, then, are the joys of service received in this life, and there are abundant promises of everlasting life, redemption from death, unspeakable love, peace, and all that goes to make happiness. Now is not all this sufficient reward to induce anyone to make the effort necessary to obtain the blessing sought; even eternal life, with all that condition affords.

God commanded Adam to come unto him through the avenue of prayer. Enoch and his people, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, all evidently appreciated and took opportunity to present themselves for the blessed condition of prayer. David, before his sin, we understand, was a man after God's own heart and a careful reading of his Psalms reveals the fact that his great achievements in life were made possible through his tenacious cleaving to God in the act of prayer. Furthermore, that prayer as a means to favor with God is taught all through the history of God's dealing with mankind. It is commanded repeatedly. Yet many people seem averse to this simple means of grace.

"What then should we profit if we pray to him?" Let us rather reverse this question, and put it thus: What should be our loss if we never pray to him? Who can answer? Who can say what they would miss of peace and joy in this life, to say nothing of the life after this, if we pray not unto him? I can testify that I was unfamiliar with the grace and love of God until after much prayer. After many pleadings a spirit of faith was given to enable me to grasp the promises of the Almighty. Oh, reader, if you have not done so, try it. It will yield greater returns than all the mines of earth, for the life consists not so much of what one has of this world's goods as in the loving favor of God and his prototype, man. Hence the command of our Savior to lay up treasures in heaven, (Matthew 6: 20,) and thus have treasure that would never be lost to us.

Can anyone doubt that a good deed done bears its own reward? Take a very simple case for instance; how many have had the poor unfortunate humbly knock at your door and ask in faltering tones, caused by weakness, for food. Oh, how your heart was stirred to its very depths to see the look of contentment gather on the face of the poor one as the gnawings of hunger were appeased and you rejoiced to think of the words of your Savior, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."—Matthew 25: 40.

So much may be enjoyed in life as rewards of service to the Almighty, the Father, and to the fellow-man, the brother, that it is impossible for man to answer in definite terms all the joys, all the peace, all the everlasting bliss that may be rightly earned by striving through life to add every morsel to be gained in trying to answer by life works the questions, "What is the Almighty that we should serve him, or what should it profit if we pray unto him?"

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 10, 1909.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: I would like to present a few thoughts that were awakened in my mind by hearing a lecture by one of our brethren, entitled, "The value of knowledge." The text used may be found in John 17: 3: "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." The speaker plainly showed that it is knowledge—true knowledge—which will be the means of leading us in the way to receive eternal life, and the thought came: How exceedingly desirable—how priceless in value must be knowledge of that character that can lead us to the way of life! How, and where, is such knowledge to be obtained? I was scarcely conscious that such a question formed within my mind, yet in a flash there was a quivering of my powers of discernment, that caused me to understand more clearly than ever before the plainness of that Way. Our knowledge of spiritual things must come through the medium of God's Spirit, for though we may get a measure of it through the study of the word, and have been commanded to search that diligently, we are informed therein, and have proven by experience, that we can not understand the things of God save by the Spirit of God. Does the Almighty, then, require us to study something we can not possibly understand? Verily no, for there in his Scriptures he tells us plainly what to do that we may receive of this Spirit that leadeth into all truth or knowledge. There we learn that those who, in true repentance and sincerity, have obeyed the gospel, have been baptized and confirmed, are entitled to the gift of the Holy Ghost. This has been spoken of as an "abiding Comforter," yet we do not seem to be always conscious of its presence, even when, as far as we know, we are in harmony with the gospel requirements. Certain it is, that there are times when we are blessed with a greater degree of the divine power, and can then clearly discern its beautiful, uplifting, enlightening influence, quickening the mental powers, and enabling us to gain knowledge which is truly desirable to have. What is it that brings or causes such experiences? The Book of Doctrine and Covenants gives us to understand that we receive the Spirit through prayer (Doctrine and Covenants 63: 16); perhaps not always at the time of prayer, but by cultivating a disposition of prayerfulness. I remember reading once a thought expressed in the Herald like this: "There is more power in prayer than this world dreams of." When I read it I thought: "Yes, and more power in prayer than even the children of God themselves dream of." If we did realize its power, would we not strive more earnestly and seriously to live so that our prayers might not be hindered? Think of this promise of Jesus to his disciples: "If ye shall ask anything in my name I will do it." We might put that to the test, to take that one verse just as it reads there, and get our faith shaken in consequence, and this shows the necessity of studying the Scriptures until we are reasonably familiar with them, because in the next chapter the same promise is given with a condition attached: "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you," as the Book of Covenants has it; we are in condition to receive what we ask for when we are purified and cleansed from all sin. The Lord adds this, however: "But know this: it shall be given you what you shall ask," or in other words, it shall be given you to know what to ask. Does this bar us from prayer then, if we are not just in the right condition? I feel sure not, for an evil spirit will never prompt us to pray, so that even if we have done wrong, yet feel a desire to pray, it is a good beginning to make, in fact the best beginning to make.

In Doctrine and Covenants 5: 16, the Lord invites us to look unto him in every thought without doubt or fear. Oh, what a gracious, loving invitation! Shall we not respond to it often—gratefully and gladly? We can not come too often, for we are told so many times in the Scriptures, as well as by the gift of prophecy, to be constant in prayer. The longer I live, the more I realize that in admonishing us so often to be prayerful, our Father designs to draw our minds away from the things of this world, its foolish and fleeting pleasures, and to teach us to find our happiness in him now in this life, so that when we pass over we may feel at home among the pure ones whose companions we hope to be. Prayer does not necessarily mean asking for blessings or favors alone, but we may humbly and reverently talk with our Father above, as with a dear friend, concerning our desires, our perplexities and trials, as well as of our appreciation of what we have already received and there is this blessed assurance: that unlike earthly friends, this greatest and best Friend knows our hearts better even than we do ourselves, and can never misunderstand us. Saints, in these days of deception and false religions, there is great and serious need for us to draw near to God by prayer and study, that we may be fortified against that which would lead us into paths of error. Let us resolve to give at least a few minutes each day to the reading of that which Christ commanded us to "search," that we might thereby gain eternal life, and remember that "secret prayer is the key with which we can unlock God's storehouse of blessings," as we have been informed through the gift of prophecy.

COLDWATER, MICHIGAN, September 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: Remaining "out of type" during the year rapidly passing, justice, perhaps, demands that I should jot a "few wee dotty dimples" from this part of the great field—"the world." Conditions do not appear exceptional here, as things move along, in secular paths, with a breakneck speed. The public dons an "air" that seems to say, "We are in the swim," while the relation between merchant and patron, capitalist and laborer, suggests a condition which we call, for want of a better phrase,—commercial hypnotism. Prices of necessities high and still soaring, and labor cheap; yet no conflict between labor and capital? Every one, most goes about daily avocations, taking the anomaly—high prices and cheap labor,—easy, and as if the conditions were but a ripple on the great sea of industrial and commercial life. Well, there is a consolation, in learning to adapt ourselves to conditions; we are learning something, even if it is only how. We may solve the problem of what it is to "possess our souls," if "patience" does not exhaust. But the look back- ward, and the look forward, is made easy of comprehension by occupying the high view-point afforded by the present truth—the latter-day work. For it irradiates the entire circle of being. If what has been, is man's best, what a failure! The sons of greed hold earth with the grasp of Cain, and rise like the shades to keep it. The conditions are important as Educators, but low. The unfair getting of riches has, for cause and effect, the abnormal; but these give the holder glory.

"And he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, Jacob hath taken away all that was our father's; and of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this glory."—Genesis 31:1. But this is not the glory on which Paul and Christ placed a premium—the glory and honor of God—only as its uses may subserve God's glory by diverting into the channel of man's redemption. For we learn that God's "Endless work" is "to his glory, to the immortality and eternal life of man," even the "many worlds which have passed away" with all their appointments. (Doctrine and Covenants 22: 8, 9.) Also, "Who will render to every man according to his [works] deeds": To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory and honor (God's glory and honor) he will render "immortality and eternal life." The rebuke for sordid and earthly glory has followed the revelations of God from early dates. "Be thou not afraid when one is made rich, when the glory of his house is increased; for when he dieth, he shall carry nothing away: his glory shall not descend after him."—Psalm 49: 16, 17. The globe is a mystic Babylon, a world-wide countinghouse. "Machinery rings like the forges of the gods." Yet we die in the midst of plenty, and slander God's bounty. Nature is so bounteous that we perish with hunger, and one writer exclaims, "The cry of want because of 'overproduction,' is a paradox, a created wrong, a maintained crime." The contrast: "He that hath eternal life, is rich." Against this boon of Him who holds the exchequers of the universe of worlds in his keeping, the "triple alliance" has waged a very successful warfare. "The world, the flesh, and the Devil"—a happy trio, united in the effort of stealing jewels from the crown of that victor who "had not where to lay his head." But the jewels were willing to be filched, for the sake of the world and the flesh.

Well, dear editor, the foregoing is a peculiar prelude to a letter, isn't it? But thoughts, as an expression of the soul, when once the fountain is unsealed, flow on independent and perpetual. It may depend on material agencies to arouse, but when the spring is touched, the intellectual machinery set in motion, there is a walking forth into the illimitable fields of thought and truth.

The gospel truth is progressing slowly in these parts, so far as numbers flocking to the "standard" is concerned. The "triple alliance" is bold, daring, and assertive. The factors in this formidable "alliance" are "knighted" and "decked with beautiful plume." But doing right will vanquish every opponent.

We were privileged to attend, and in an humble way take part, in the reunion of the Western Michigan District, at Kenwood, on beautiful Lake Cadillac, July 31 to August 9. We pronounce it a "success." The concluding sessions were larger than previous ones. There seemed to be three arrivals to one departure. The spirit of the assemblies was excellent. An orchestra of twelve to fifteen pieces, supporting as many choir voices, and accentuated by the audiences, lifted one's soul "heavenward." This phase of the reunion was under the direct charge of Brother Doty, and evidences what may be done "if we will." So many young Saints attended, and in the Spirit of testimony evinced their earnestness, energy, and gladness to be engaged in the great work. Upon inquiry of the presiding officer if this promptness and interest were usual at home, or just abroad, he promptly replied, "They are the same at home." How commendable! We could feel that "the Lord of the harvest" would use them.

This Kenwood reunion was not the first one held in Michigan, as one writer placed it in your columns. Three years ago the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District conducted one at Coldwater, on the grounds called "The Narrows," at which time a "reunion association" was organized by Apostle J. W. Wight. The next autumn the reunion convened at Knox, Indiana, and there died for want of financial support. I may be pardoned for thus directing attention to this matter, but history appears to better advantage, in point of reliability, where facts are harmonized.

On August 19, by special invitation, I made an address to the people at Montgomery, Michigan, where the Soldiers and Sailors Tri-State Encampment, as an annual affair, was being conducted. This is the second time the association has asked our services. A large assembly met, and we felt the enthusiasm, and gave the best we had in hand.

Taking leave of grounds, I boarded the afternoon train, met Sister Lue and my two boys at Jonesville, and departed for the reunion at Howell, Michigan. This was advertised as a reunion of the Lansing, or "Capitol City" Branch. Not a district affair, but a general invitation was extended. The affair was nice, and quiet. I could imagine Apostle William H. Kelley arising to a point of order, and asking for the law, when he was elected to assist the district president as the item appears in Glad Tidings from the report. Well, we have some things yet to learn before we are "orderly keepers of the law," as were the Saints of old. (See Acts 21: 24.)

A good feeling prevailed during this reunion, largely, and a number were baptized—mostly children. Patriarch Bailey was present, and gave good counsel in the Spirit of affability. R. Etzenhouser, our staid archæologist, was among the campers, and did not feel at all perturbed when confronted with that pharisaic qualification about digging among "dead men's bones." All right, Brother Rudolph, I did not feel sleepy when you expatiated. The reunion "passed off" very pleasantly and, we believe, with good influence.

I have been busy in two-day meetings since, in company, part of the time, with Elders St. John and McKnight. Our first was with Clear Lake Branch, and its Spirit was so good that it is almost proverbial. Two, husband and wife, were baptized on Sunday. The Spirit of the Lord was present on that beautiful Sabbath morn, and prayer being offered by Bro. W. F. Shaub, while the foamy capped waves seemed to bear both song and invocation, out a little distance, then lifting them up toward the blue sky, and hearts were made glad, as once more our Lord's burial and resurrection were symbolized according to Paul in Romans 6. The preaching was by Elders St. John, McKnight, and the writer, and the influence of the services and association lingers. The Clear Lake Saints are too old to flatter. They usually make services enjoyable. And just here, permit me to say, the presence of the Spirit in pouring forth the live truths of God and his Christ, in public service, is much dependent on the condition of the audience. A live interest, hungry, eager, and attentive-ear audience, will invite inspiration and kindle a flame in the speaker's breast, and illumine the mind, while a listless, cold, sleepy, indifferent audience will make both the preacher and building a "cold storage." "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." The services at Belding were good. Brother Garver, the pastor there, was feeling "heavenly" as is usual during those times. But as the corresponding secretary there took minutes, no doubt but you will have something to present to your readers in regard thereto. We organized at every point where these services are conducted. We want to educate along right lines. Anything worth doing, is worth doing right. When we learn right, and learn to do it right, we won't have that to learn later on.

In conclusion, we do not believe the Lord has forsaken us over in these regions. We find an effort being made to do something to be saved. I came from Blissfield on Monday. The eleven Saints at that point are doing nobly in the cause. They are all young Saints with commendable desires. They conduct Sunday school and prayer service and realize the leading of the Spirit. May "blessings to the ancients given, in the light," be given to the moderns in the light.

Hopefully,,

SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA,

August 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a brief outline of my experience since the late General Conference may be of interest to some of the Saints.

Leaving Lamoni at the close of conference, I spent a short time near Pleasanton and Lineville, Iowa, visiting relatives and preaching a few times. I also spent a short time with kinsfolks in Warren County before returning to my home near Franklin, Nebraska, where a few happy weeks were spent with parents, brothers, sisters, and old-time friends.

Early on the morning of July 1, I bade an affectionate farewell to the dearest ones of earth, and hurried to the railway station and was soon on my way, taking a last look through tearful eyes at the well-loved home I was leaving so many, many miles behind to take up my God-appointed work in a distant land.

I joined my colaborer, Bro. J. W. Davis, at Independence, where we were kindly entertained by the Saints for nearly a week. We shall long remember them for their hospitality, and the many good wishes expressed for us.

Tuesday evening, July 6, boarding the train at Kansas City, we were hurried rapidly across the plains, leaving all familiar scenes behind us. We arrived at Denver about five in the evening of the following day. We found a pleasant home with Brother and Sister Bartlett, and with them attended the prayer meeting in the evening, where we met a number of the Saints who also wished us God-speed on our mission.

We resumed our journey next day via Canyon City and Provo to Salt Lake City, through a wonderland. The course from Denver to Canyon City is along the foothills, to our right; in the distance, the Rocky Mountains loom up like great black clouds against the horizon, while all around us is a barren waste bestrewn with rocks and stubby sagebrush, and only relieved here and there by the appearance of a brightly flowering cactus. At Canyon City we got a view of Pike's Peak, from a distance of perhaps ten miles, with a white cloud lingering caressingly at its summit and ribbons of snow extending down its side. Leaving Canyon City we entered the Royal Gorge, and scenes of wondrous beauty and grandeur greeted us on every hand. What joy to know that the hand that formed those everlasting hills, that cleft those chasms in the rocks, and opened up a highway for the mountain torrent to flow down to the sea, is our Father's hand, and is leading us! Sometimes, like the wildly rushing stream at our left, tumultuously over cataracts and down rugged rocky courses, and sometimes quietly beneath silent shades, and through quiet meadows. But always onward toward that greater life which is as much superior to our present existence as the placid waters of the ocean are greater than the mountain brook.

During the night we passed over Tennessee Pass, rode for a short time down another canyon, and early in the morning, I think at a station called Green River, left the water course and for hours rode through a desert land where even the hardy sagebrush and cactus are no longer to be seen, arriving at last in the beautiful, sun-kissed valleys of Utah, where the hand of intelligent industry has arrested the mountain stream in its mad career and caused it to spread over the parched and barren plain. And the result, fertile fields, meadows fragrant with alfalfa bloom, fruitful orchards, rich pastures, sleek cattle, beautiful farm homes, prosperous towns and villages, contented parents, and happy children.

We arrived in Salt Lake City late in the afternoon and having Bro. T. W. Chatburn's address, called upon him, and were made acquainted with some of the Saints, who made us comfortable during our stay.

We visited the Brigham Young monument, his grave, and the graves of a number of his wives, the Lion and Bee Hive houses, Amelia Palace, and other places of interest, besides attending an organ recital in the Tabernacle and, taking a swim in the lake.

Bro. F. A. Smith arrived while we were there, and as Brother Davis desired to visit his brother in Oregon, he went on Saturday evening and I remained with Brother Smith, hearing him preach in our hall in the city Sunday morning, attending the Brighamite meeting in the afternoon, and in the evening going up to Ogden, where I again had the privilege of listening to Brother Fred. Was kindly entertained by Saints at Ogden that night, and next day, in company with Brother Smith resumed my journey, arriving at Portland Tuesday evening. We were met at the station by Bro. M. H. Cook, and conducted to the home of Bro. E. Keeler, where we spent a pleasant evening. Next day continued our journey as far as Seattle, where I spent one day at the exposition.

Leaving Brother Smith at Seattle, I arrived at Vancouver, B. C., Friday, July 16, at seven o'clock in the morning, just three and a half hours before our ship was due to sail. I soon found Brother Davis, who had arrived a few hours before me, and with the assistance of Brn. George Thorburn and J. D. Stead, who were doing missionary work in the city, we soon succeeded in getting our baggage transferred to the boat, and were ready to go at the appointed time, but were told that we would be delayed until six in the evening; so we went home with some Saints with whom we spent the day pleasantly.

Of the next few days I will say but little. I did pay a little tribute to King Neptune, Brother Davis joining heartily in the exercise. However, we ate a little each meal time, and in a few days became good sailors.

We were pleased, on rising on the morning of July 24, to find that our boat was at anchor outside the harbor of Honolulu, waiting for the health officers to examine us, and permit us to go on shore. Most any land would have looked good to us then, as we were getting real tired of seeing nothing but water. But such land we had never before seen. From the blue water of the harbor to the highest mountain peak, everything was beautiful. It was of this land that Mark Twain once said, "No alien land in all the world has any deep, strong charm for me but that one, no other land could so longingly and beseechingly haunt me sleeping and waking, as that one has done. Other things leave, but it abides; other things change, but it remains the same. For me its balmy airs are always blowing—the pulsing of its surf-beat is in my ears; I can see its garlanded crags, its leaping cascades, its plummy palms drowsing by the shore, its remote summits floating like islands above the cloud racks; I can feel the spirit of its woodland solitudes; I can hear the plash of its brooks; in my nostrils still lives the breath of flowers that perished twenty years ago."

Going on shore we sought at once the place of business of our esteemed Bro. G. J. Waller, by whom we were made welcome for the short time we had to stay. Brother Waller introduced us to a native brother by the name of Harbottle, in whose company we took a turn round the city, seeing many places of historic interest and great beauty.

One thing I noted that pleased me much, was the manifest desire of the natives to learn our language, customs, and business methods. Not only are the children kept in school, but day schools are maintained where many men of middle age are earnestly working to fit themselves to take up the various vocations of the white man. This is true not only of the native Hawaiian, but also of the Chinese and Japanese citizens, nearly all of whom can converse readily in our language.

At three o'clock in the afternoon Brother Waller returned with us in his automobile to the landing, and a few minutes later we were again putting out to sea, a number of the young natives following us for a short distance, diving for the coins that some of our passengers threw out to them. It was quite exciting at times to see three or four of them struggling under the water for the possession of a piece of money.

The most noteworthy thing that happened on our trip from Honolulu to Suva was the dropping of a day. We had no Sunday, August 1, this year. We arrived at Suva, Fiji, on Monday, August 2, late in the evening. I was by no means as favorably impressed with the native Fijian as I was with the Hawaiian. He does not possess the ambition to learn, can very rarely speak English, and seems to have very little business ability. His Excellency, Sir Everard im Thurm, governor of the islands, arrived on our boat and was welcomed royally. A native band played and native soldiers of the king, in blue coats, resplendent in gold lace and brass buttons, but without trousers, were on parade. They wear a winding sheet around the lower part of their person. The speeches of welcome and address of the governor were delivered in the town hall, but I saw no natives there, nor were the natives mentioned in the governor's address.

There is one thing that I do wish to say in favor of the Fijian; he is a fine specimen of physical manhood and is a natural musician. As we were leaving the wharf a little after dark, a number of natives began to sing. It was then I took off my hat to the low-browed, dark-skinned, flat-nosed, busy-haired brother, and I have had a degree of respect for him ever since.

We arrived at the harbor near Brisbane, Sunday, August 8, and were met at the wharf by Bro. J. W. Barcus, president of the Brisbane Branch, with whom we spent the remainder of the day, meeting with the Saints and receiving our first welcome to Australian shores.

Bidding farewell to the Saints after the evening service, we returned to the boat and were soon sailing toward Sydney, arriving there Tuesday a little after noon. Again we are met by Saints, and conducted to the home of Bro. W. J. Haworth, where a crowd of Saints gathered in the evening to bid us welcome.

After we had been introduced, and had enjoyed some excellent music, we were invited into the dining room, where the sisters had prepared a nice supper; speeches of welcome were offered by several of the brethren, to which we responded to the best of our ability.

We were indeed thankful to our heavenly Father for all his goodness to us. We had been favored with beautiful weather on our voyage, had encountered no rough sea, had been kindly favored by the Saints wherever we had the pleasure of meeting them, had reached our destination in excellent health, and were accorded a welcome that was all that could be desired.

Our minister in charge, Brother Butterworth, having advised that one of us remain here in the city, and the other go north in the vicinity of Newcastle, it was decided that I remain, so Brother Davis boarded the train for Newcastle, Saturday, August 14. I was sorry to part with him so soon, as I found him a pleasant companion and an earnest worker for the Master.

So far, I am well pleased with the mission. I like the Saints of Sydney and think I will enjoy coöperating with them in gospel work.

To the many who desire personal letters I wish to say that my time for writing is limited, so please consider this a letter to you. We will welcome any letters from America as we are still deeply interested in the progress of the work there.

Hopefully,

Dear Editors: I am happy to meet with you once more. I have been ill and confined to my bed all summer; can sit up in bed some and work a little, but have not been able to keep up my prison work for lack of means. I am blessed with the dear Ensign and HERALD. I love to read the good things in them and trust to meet with some of the Saints later on. We are isolated from neighbors or friends, though the sick are all around us. Should any of the kind ones care for fancy articles for Christmas gifts, I would be happy to supply them, as we are greatly in need of comforts. Husband can not do any heavy work; manages to do the work around the house. Some days we live alone and are sadly in need of cheer. I want all to pray for us that we may be healed and blessed.

MRS. LEROY COWLES.

GRINDSTONE, MICHIGAN.

Editors Herald: I am only a young girl of sixteen trying to do my Master's will. I have been in the church seven and one half years, and have never regretted the step I have taken, but often regret that I have not done enough for this noble cause. I thank God that I was led into the waters of baptism.

I have been healed of many afflictions by the Lord. I was at the conference at McGregor, and had a good time. It certainly was a spiritual feast. It made my heart rejoice to see so many young people there.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I will ever press onward and upward. My prayers are for the Saints of God, and the advancement of this work.

I am your sister,

ELEZZENIA HUNTER.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, October 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: In my letter in HERALD for October 20, there was a mistake in saying Bro. W. A. Smith preached here one week: It should have read nine weeks. There have been four more baptized since the meetings, making twenty-six since July. Bro. W. A. Smith commences another series of meetings here to-night. We think more will be baptized.

Your brother in Christ,

T. H. PARKER.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLORADO, October 17, 1909.

Editors Herald: In the conference minutes of eastern Colorado as published in last week's HERALD, appears an error in that it is stated an elder's license was to be given to James K. Adams. The name should be Krockett Seli, of Denver. James K. Adams, of Loveland, was received into church membership on evidence of baptism. I regret the mistake occurred, especially if I am to blame.

In bonds,

F. A. RUSSELL.

News From Branches

THE FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ORGANIZATION OF THE GALLANDS GROVE BRANCH.

Gallands Grove quarterly conference of said district convened in Gallands Grove, Iowa, on October 22, 1909. Missionary in charge, J. W. Wight, with the president of district, was called to the chair. Conference opened in the usual way and the business was transacted harmoniously, after which conference adjourned. No meeting at night on account of storm and people so widely scattered.

On the 23d the Gallands Grove Branch convened at 10.30 a. m. to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its organization as a branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; President Drayton D. Holcomb in charge, Bro. James Pearsall chorister. Hymn, "God is marshaling his army," was sung with the Spirit and understanding; prayer by C. Derry. "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light" was then appreciatively sung. Elder E. C. Briggs, who organized the branch in 1859, was the speaker of the hour, taking for his text the same passage of scripture from which he preached his first sermon here in 1859. There was a good and attentive audience and the speaker had fair liberty, occupying one hour and thirty minutes, during which time he gave a brief sketch of the Reorganization of the church, as well as of the Gallands Grove Branch.

After the sermon every one was invited to partake freely of a rich repast prepared by the noble handmaids of the Lord—the sisters of the branch. The sisters of Gallands Grove do nothing by halves and a better dinner could hardly be spread before a hungry multitude, and I need not tell you that ample justice was done to the rich viands prepared.

At 2.30 p. m. a social service began in charge of Elders C. J. Hunt and J. L. Butterworth, during which an interesting, spiritual, and profitable time was enjoyed. Of those who spoke, Alexander Black, one of the charter members of the branch, but a boy when the branch was organized, has kept the faith, and ever since he owned a home he has kept that home open for all who needed a resting place, and especially for the servants and handmaids of the Lord, irrespective of their social condition or of their standing in the church of Christ. He has a fairly large house, but it is no larger than his heart.

In the evening of the 23d Elder Paul M. Hanson delivered his interesting lecture on his travels in the Holy Land.

On the 24th at 10.30 a. m. a sermon was preached by C. Derry. A large audience of attentive listeners was present, after which another rich repast for the temporal nature was prepared by the same generous and skillful hands that had prepared the meal of yesterday, and all were again made welcome, irrespective of their faith or condition. At 2.30 p. m. Bro. James Pearsall conducted a soul-inspiring song service, after which Elder J. W. Wight delivered an excellent sermon on the duties of the Saints, to a crowded audience, Bro. John Jordison being in charge. At 7.30 Elder Briggs preached again. The writer was not present and can not speak of its excellence, but as the people afterwards expressed themselves on the subject, I have no doubt the sermon was good. Elder P. M. Hanson was billed to deliver a lecture on his trip around the world on the evening of the 25th.

It would not be proper to close this report without referring to those dear old members of the branch who have contributed so much to the growth and success of the good work in the branch and surrounding country, but who have passed to their reward. The Van Ausdales, Roundys, Jacksons, McIntoshes, Holcombs, Hawleys, Crandalls, McCords, Kuykendalls, Homeses, Williamsons, Lynches, and many others whose names I can not now recall, but who endeavored to make the name of Latter Day Saint honorable, and above all to glorify God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who lived and died in the faith of the Lord Jesus Christ.

In Gallands Grove the first general semiannual conference was held that was held in the West. Here the writer first met our beloved President Joseph Smith and others of the leading men of the church. Here I saw the great contrast in the spirits of the men who were at the head of the two churches, called by the name of Christ. Here was manifest the spirit of love, of liberty, of order, and of God. In the West I had seen the spirit of oppression and usurpation, crushing out all that was noble in humanity. I thank God for the spirit that prevailed in the Reorganized Church. It was the spirit of liberty, of love, of righteousness, and of God. May that spirit ever abide with us and inspire our hearts with true brotherly love for each other and all mankind and first, last, and all the time, and above all else, the love of God, is the earnest prayer of the writer.

CHARLES DERRY.

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Since last writing, we have had some little addition to our congregation. Sr. Virginia Wasson, whose home was formerly here, has again settled in Burlington, after living in Galesburg for some time. Also, Sr. Eva Thomas and son, William, from Lamoni, have made their home in Burlington.

Our district conference at Rock Creek, October 2 and 3, was much enjoyed by Burlington representatives. There were eight or nine in attendance from here. As those who went were nearly all active Sunday school workers, that work was somewhat hampered here, but we hear good reports of the day, notwithstanding.

The National Purity Congress, which was in session in Burlington from October 18 to 22, aroused some interest among our people. Bro. and Sr. M. H. Siegfried, of Nauvoo, were here in attendance, and remained until the following Wednesday. A lecture on the history of Nauvoo by Brother Siegfried was announced for Sunday evening, but on account of sickness, he was unable to give it.

Sunday, October 31, immediately following the regular session of Sunday school, the ordinance of baptism was observed. The step was taken by one of our little Sunday school workers, Jennie Kunz, who had just celebrated her eighth birthday during the week preceding.

Our Religo president, Sr. Edith Jarvis, who has been visiting in California and Tacoma, Washington, since about the middle of August, is expected home Monday, November 8. During her absence the Religo has been in charge of Brother Fry, as vice-president.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

CENTRAL NEBRASKA.—Convened at Clearwater, August 28 and 29. Called to order by the president, Levi Gamet, at 10 a. m. There being few present the hour was devoted to prayer and testimony, which was a source of encouragement to those present. The business session opened at 2.30 p. m. President and vice-president of district were chosen to preside over the conference. The secretary was granted the privilege of choosing an assistant, Sister Butler, of Inman, being chosen. The minutes of previous meeting were read and approved as read. Branches reporting: Inman, 65; Bone-steel, 75; Round Park, 32; Clearwater, 72. Ministry reporting: Elders Levi Gamet and J. W. Smith; Priests Charles Hutchins, Charles Derry, and W. E. Kester. Bishop's agent's books showed receipts, $966.31; expenditures, $816; balance on hand, $150.31. Moved that the next conference be held at Inman, commencing the first Saturday in February and continuing over Sunday. The nature of the meetings and the appointment of speakers were left to the presidency. A motion prevailed that there should be a collection taken at the Sunday preaching services. Sermon Saturday evening was by J. W. Smith, of Bemidji, Minnesota. Sunday, at 10 a. m., preaching by Levi Gamet. At 2.30 prayer service; evening sermon by J. W. Smith. W. E. Kester, secretary.

FAR WEST.—Convened with the Delano Branch, October 23, 1909, William O. H. Simmons and I. N. White presiding; Charles P. Faul and S. H. Simmons, secretaries. Charles P. Faul, Bishop's agent reported: On hand last report, $427.10; receipts, $1,015.10; paid, $1,187.25; balance on hand, $254.95. Chair appointed John S. Constance, G. W. Mauzey, and Bert Bean as an auditing committee. This committee reported they had examined the accounts of the Bishop's agent and found the same correct. Branch reports were read as follows: Cameron, 105; Delano, 102; Saint Joseph, 623; Stewartsville, 237; German Stewartsville, 83; Alma, 31; Second Saint Joseph, 80; Oak Dale, 27; Edgerton Junction, 49; Norborne, 29; Kingston, 91; Far West, 58. Convention Notices.

Alabama District convention will convene with the Flat Rock Branch immediately preceding the district conference to be held at the same place, Saturday, November 20, 1909. All schools in district take notice and send in report and representation. A prayer and social service will be held before the regular routine of business is taken up. Bertha D. Harper, superintendent, McKenzie, Alabama.

The Presidency.

NOTICE OF MISSIONARY RELEASE AND APPOINTMENT.

At his request, Bro. Thomas J. Sheldon has been released from General Conference appointment, and by concurrency of the First Presidency and missionary in charge, Brother Sheldon is appointed to labor in the Far West District, Cameron objective point, self-sustaining, as circumstances permit.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,
Secretary of the Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 3, 1909.

Special Notice.

Notice is hereby given to all whom it may concern that one Ogden T. Christy, jr., late of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, was expelled from the church by the Philadelphia Branch, June 24, 1909, on the charges of forgery and false pretense. It has come to our knowledge that he is working among the Saints obtaining money in the same manner (sometimes under another name). The Saints are hereby warned against his operations. He is a short, stout man with a round face, very affable and of pleasing address.

WALTER W. SMITH,
President of the Philadelphia Branch.

Addresses.

Elder J. C. Clapp, R. F. D. 2, Box 55, Tulare, California.

To the Isolated Saints of the Massachusetts District.

If you are living in a place where the gospel has never been preached and can open your door to a missionary, please let me know, as I am desirous of effecting new openings for the introduction of the Master's work. Address me at 21 Massasoit street, Fall River, Massachusetts.

RALPH W. FARRELL.

Third Quorum of Seventy.

Dear Brethren: It will soon be time for us to be looking after our program for quorum work for next session. I take this method of asking you to write me any suggestions, topics or themes for discussion, that your committee may be able to prepare the program in ample time so all who may be assigned to the different parts may have a chance to prepare. Address me 14 Congress street, Buffalo, New York, at once.

H. O. SMITH, President.

Died.

SHEEN.—Harriet Tansure was born January 6, 1830, at South Killworth, Leicestershire, England. She was married to Charles Sheen in the year 1850. She was baptized at Birmingham, England, in 1863, by Elder Charles Derry. She and her husband emigrated to America in 1865, since which they have resided at Monticello and Lamoni, Iowa, and Highmore, South Dakota. At the latter place her husband died December 7, 1897. She then returned to Lamoni, where she resided until her death, which occurred October 18, 1909. She was the mother of twelve children, five of whom survive her. She was buried from the Saints' Church, Lamoni, October 20. Sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith.

The First Aeroplane Built by a Woman.

Typewriter, secretary, lawyer, aeronaut—Miss Lillian Todd has been all these, and she tells about it in the Woman's Home Companion for November. She is the first woman who has built an aeroplane—and she designed it herself.

From earliest childhood she has been interested in machines and has patented a number of inventions. Like the Wrights, she has worked very quietly and perfected her machine without fuss or feathers. Her description of the machine has a feminine touch.

"The outline of the machine is original, though very recently approximated abroad; it is based on a minute study of the wings of the albatross in the Museum of Natural History. The full length of the machine is forty feet, and the three planes are parallel in the curves. I have gone on the principle that if two planes are good, three are better, to support a heavy engine, when the weight is not materially increased. The framework is specially-selected, straight-grained spruce. The wires holding the planes are the best imported piano wire. The upper covering of the planes is of the finest unbleached muslin; the lower, which sustains most of the strain, is of seven-ounce army duck. These coverings are substantially sewed on—a departure from a man-made machine."

Travel by Dirigible.

The balloon has an enthusiastic champion in Mr. A. Leo Stevens, whose conclusions are drawn from very wide experience. Mr. Stevens has made more than seventeen hundred gas flights, and has taken aloft ten times as many passengers as any other sky-pilot, licensed or otherwise.

"There is a sense of freedom and of quiet progress about a dirigible balloon flight," said Mr. Stevens. "A dirigible flight gives you ample time to enjoy your journey. You float along at a comfortable fifteen miles an hour or so, and the great panorama beneath you unfolds itself gradually. You have time to enjoy the marvelous scene and the curious unexpected effects of perspective from this point of view. A balloon trip is free from all sense of hurry.

"An aeroplane, on the other hand, carries you along at an express-train speed of forty miles an hour or more. The earth is swept past you with bewildering rapidity. As a rule, an aeroplane does not rise to any great height, and you rush along comparatively close to the ground. There is little chance to look about. You have none of the extended views possible from the higher altitudes traveled by balloons. A ride by dirigible may be compared to an old-fashioned coaching trip,—when you roll smoothly along and, from your elevated seat, command a view of the surrounding country. An aeroplane flight is more like the dash of a limited express train, with fleeting glimpses of the scenery.

"An aeroplane seat is cramped, and you hold on for dear life. The basket of a balloon or the staging of a dirigible gives you room to move about. You can keep a log of your progress trip and eat your dinner; even sleep with perfect comfort. There is, besides, a far greater sense of safety in a balloon, contrary to a very general impression. Personally I am greatly distressed by height. I can not stand on the edge of a high building for fear of falling, but I feel perfectly comfortable at any altitude in a balloon. The wind eddies about a high building and, as you imagine, threatens to pull you over. It is much the same with an aeroplane. A balloon, traveling with the wind, is absolutely free from this sensation.—From "How it feels to fly," by F. A. Collins, in the American Review of Reviews for November.

The Best Family Newspaper.

An ideal newspaper for the American home must be habitually clean and high minded, it must offer something of interest to every member of the family, and it must present daily the news of the whole world in authentic and readable form. A large contract, you will say. Well, the newspaper that comes nearest to filling it in the West is The Chicago Record-Herald. Its moral tone is always high, its news service is unsurpassed, and probably no other paper in the United States has so brilliant an array of special features suited to the tastes and needs of every member of the family.

Business and professional men have long regarded The Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading because of its unequaled faculty for getting all the news of the world and putting it into the briefest possible form for the busy man. They also esteem it for the reliability of its financial, agricultural, and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction in the excellent sporting department, which fills four entire pages on Sunday and a page or more on other days. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer The Record-Herald on account of its well-conducted feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion news and hints for home dressmaking, Mme. Qui Vive's pungent and sensible beauty talks, Marion Harland's famous page, and the rest of the good things that make up the handsome Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy the Little Nemo and other Comic Section pictures, with the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. And all the family together can enjoy the interesting travels and special articles of William E. Curtis, Mr. Kiser's humor and verse, the serial stories and many similar features outside the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the West.

A STUDY IN AMERICAN FREEMASONRY.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory, of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

THE ONENESS OF GOD AND CHRIST.

Christ said, "I and my Father are one."

What was the exact meaning of that statement? Some have made it the basis of the doctrine that God and Christ are only one person, one entity, one individual. Color may seem to be given to this theory by statements found in the Book of Mormon, the one in Mosiah 8 and 5 being a fair sample:

And now Abinadi said unto them, I would that ye should understand that God himself shall come down among the children of men, and shall redeem his people; and because he dwelleth in flesh, he shall be called the Son of God: and having subjected the flesh to the will of the Father, being the Father and the Son; the Father because he was conceived by the power of God; and the Son, because of the flesh; thus becoming the Father and Son: and they are one God, yea, the very eternal Father of heaven and of earth; and thus the flesh becoming subject to the Spirit, or the Son to the Father, being one God, suffereth temptation, and yieldeth not to the temptation, but suffereth himself to be mocked, and scourged, and cast out, and disowned by his people. And after all this, after working many mighty miracles among the children of men, he shall be led, yea, even as Isaiah said, as a sheep before the shearer is dumb, so he opened not his mouth; yea, even so he shall be led, crucified and slain, the flesh becoming subject even unto death, the will of the Son being swallowed up in the will of the Father; and thus God breaketh the bands of death; having gained the victory over death; giving the Son power to make intercession for the children of men: having ascended into heaven; having the bowels of mercy; being filled with compassion towards the children of men; standing betwixt them and justice; having broken the bands of death, taken upon himself their iniquity and their transgressions; having redeemed them, and satisfied the demands of justice.

Also in Matthew 9 and 19 Jesus speaks of the law of Moses, and says, "I am he who gave the law."

Many other passages might be quoted from the Bible and Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants that have been called to our attention as teaching that God and Christ are in fact but one person.

Is that the correct conclusion to draw from the statement, "I and my Father are one"? Let us see.

When Joseph Smith had his first wonderful vision he saw both God and Christ. He says, "I saw two personages (whose brightness and glory defy all description) standing above me in the air. One of them spake unto me, calling me by name, and said, (pointing to the other,) 'This is my beloved Son, hear him.'"

Either there were two distinct persons, God and Christ, Father and Son, or else Joseph Smith is, as the world claims, an impostor. Fortunately he is sustained by biblical proof, for we read of Stephen, "But he, being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God."—Acts 7: 55, 56.

Here again we have God and Christ seen as two persons, side by side in their glorified condition.

Again we read, "And there came a voice from heaven, saying Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Mark 1: 11. Here we find the Father, one person, in heaven, speaking to Christ, another person, on the earth.

On the occasion of his resurrection Christ said, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended unto my Father; but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God."—John 20: 17.

We also find Jesus praying in the Garden of Gethsemane, and closing his petition with the memorable declaration, "Nevertheless not as I will, but as thou wilt." We can not conceive of Jesus praying to himself, but rather accept the matter as it stands. There were two individuals, one praying to the other. Each was capable of willing, yet they kept their wills in complete accord, and so in that sense were one.

These and a hundred other scriptural statements force us to the idea, commonly accepted by the Saints, that the Father and Son were two persons. Yet we conceded that they were one God. The sense in which they were one is glimpsed in a statement found in later revelation: "I say unto you, Be one; and if ye are not one, ye are not mine."—Doctrine and Covenants 38: 6.

How are the Saints to be one? Were all the church members to become one great big individual?

Such must be the case if God and Christ are one individual, for the Saints are to be one as they are one. The idea leads directly to the old idea of unity taught by Brahmanism, which is thus expressed:

JNCampbell
RFD #
11 Aug 10

"Those only who have attained a knowledge of God are rewarded by absorption. . . . This union with the Deity is the total loss of identity."—Ten Great Religions, page 119.

The Christian idea of oneness is different, for we read of the city of Enoch: "And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind."—Doctrine and Covenants 36:2. This was what Christ prayed for when he said, "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one, as we are."—John 17:11.

Thus we arrive at the idea that God and Christ are one in the same sense in which their people are to be one; and the people, while retaining their individualities, are to be one in heart and mind, one in purpose.

This harmonizes well with the statement quoted from Mosiah, where it is said that the Father and Son are one God. The very language conveys the idea of two individuals, one styled the Father, the other styled the Son. The statement concerning Christ, to the effect that God himself should come down and be crucified, may be understood when we remember that the title of God given to the Father is with equal propriety given to Jesus Christ. To choose one of several more or less crude illustrations we will say that there are three persons in the First Presidency of the Church. Yet so long as they work harmoniously they are as one, and anything done by one of them in the line of official work is done by all. Recently when a junior member of the Presidency visited the Pacific Slope it was announced that President Smith was in that field. Precisely the same statement could have been made, and in the same words, had his father been there in his stead.

This helps us to an understanding of Christ's statement that he it was who gave the law. They were one in purpose, sentiment, and work from the very beginning, and we are told of Jesus that "without him was not anything made that was made."

ELBERT A. SMITH.

BRADEN AMONG PHILISTINES.

Not long ago a gentleman calling himself the Reverend Clark Braden arrived in East Aurora. He was sincere, serious, highly educated and wore long patriarchal whiskers. He announced that he had come to engage with me in a six-days' debate as to the truths of revealed religion.

He plainly stated that he considered me an arch-infidel, and his purpose was either to convert me, or else to humiliate me in my own town, in the presence of my neighbors. If we didn't get through the debate in six days, he was willing to stay a month. When would we begin?

I tried to excuse myself on the plea of work, other engagements, etc.

He demanded that I should cancel all other engagements; and if I was a sincere lover of truth as I professed to be I would now stand by my colors.

In fact, this I must do, or he would brand me before the whole village as a coddling coward and a Number Six agnostic jackanapes.

I then took a little hand myself at questioning. And it seems that, although I had never had any communications with this reverend gentleman—which fact he acknowledged—he came as the representative of another man, and he flashed up a lengthy letter from an unknown, fully authorizing me to argufy with Brother Braden six nights and days together, or else come off my psychic perch.

In the meantime Braden had gone up to the "Blizzard" office, and had gotten out five hundred handbills, scattering them all over town, denouncing me as this, that, and the other.

About this time there came to me a bright idea, thus: If Braden could act as the substitute for another to orate with me in a theological gabfest, then I, too, could appoint a substitute, and the two could have it out.

Accordingly, I appointed Ali Baba to reason with my friend with the lilacs.

I ran Ali up against the adversary, and they got at it quick, with no preliminaries.

In about five minutes they were calling each other all the names in the billingsgate calendar. And in ten minutes, by the stop-watch, Ali had the reverend one by the scruff, pushing him toward the front gate, both talking loudly and fast. Their conversation was heard for a half a mile.

The last I saw of the zealous one, he was going down the road, stopping now and then to shake his fist at the seat of infidelity, and uttering remarks in italic.—The Philistine.

PATRIOTISM that counts looks beyond the present. We are building not simply for ourselves, but for those who are to come after us. Thus it is not true patriotism that says, "What if the forests are disappearing? there will be timber enough for many years"; or, "Let us not worry about the waste of our present method of coal-mining—we'll all be in our graves before the supply is exhausted." But have we no concern for what may happen in the days of our children? It was a strategic move when Nehemiah placed the families of the workmen before their eyes as they built and fought. The thought of others that day nerved many an arm that would have fallen powerless if moved only by thought of self-interest.—Forward.

THOUGHTS ON MAN'S FALL AND REDEMPTION.

When guilty man o'erwhelmed with shame
Shrunk from his Maker's searching eye,
Then flashed that dreadful sword of flame—
Justice decreed that man must die!

Fallen, degraded child of sin—
Heir but to wretchedness and death!
How could he hope God's love to win
Since he had broke his plighted faith?

His birthright sold—a fettered slave—
All had vanished from his grasp;
No power had he himself to save,
But sunken, fallen, all was lost!
Yet though stern justice's decree
Had passed, his Maker for him yearned;
And mercy pleads to set him free,
And love infinite for him burned.

A ransom's found! Justice appeased,
Now sheathes his dreadful, flaming sword,
The Son, with whom God is well pleased,
Stands pledged that man shall be restored.

Jesus, our great Redeeming Lord,
Thou willing sacrifice for sin!
Be thy great name for aye adored,
Thy love did endless glories win!

Not for thyself, thou hadst no need,
The boundless realms of bliss were thine,
Poor would have been the brightest meed
Compared with riches so divine!

Thou laidst thy boundless glories by
To bear man's sorrows, wear his ban,
Nor didst thou shrink for him to die,
Such was thy boundless love for man!

Yes, thou didst die that he might live
And reign with thee in endless bliss,
Enjoy the glories God can give;
Oh, where is love divine like this?

Eternal praises swell my soul
For love so precious, pure, divine.
Then, Lord, accept me, take the whole
Of this poor heart and make me thine.

I want to live alone for thee,
To thee I consecrate my life,
Lord, help me from all sin to flee,
O, help me in this bitter strife;

That I the victory may gain
O'er sin and Satan's deadly power
Through him who on the cross was slain—
Thine be the glory evermore.

THE CHOICE SEER.

OUR BELOVED MARTYR.

No royal blood coursed through his veins,
No crown was on his noble brow,
No gorgeous trappings decked his form,
No courtiers at his feet did bow.

From halls of learning he'd not culled
A knowledge of things new and old,
No houses, lands, or fields had he,
No coffers filled with shining gold.

But better far than wealth or crown,
To be the chosen in God's plan,
The glorious gospel to restore,
And bless the race of fallen man.

A man was he in grandest sense,
Of common name and pedigree,
His heart beat warm with yearning love
For all God's frail humanity.

Oh, what is earthly pomp and fame,
The tinsel glitter of the sod?
Naught in the world with this compares,
Our Martyr was a friend of God.

Like his great Master, slander oft
Caused him to drink the bitter draught,
Oft, Satan's minions at him hurled
The cruel, venomed, piercing shaft.

Like Jesus, he was called in youth
To stem the tide of bigot flood,
Like Jesus, too, in manhood's prime,
He sealed his mission with his blood.

He's gone from earth, his work remains,
Rich blessings which to all extend,
We mourn his loss, revere his name,
Our leader, prophet, seer, and friend.

Enshrined he is in all our hearts,
Oh, may this grace to us be given,
To live as he lived, while on earth,
And clasp glad hands with him in heaven.

Under every clock in a factory at Cleveland, Ohio, is the motto, "Do it now!" Such a motto, lived up to by everyone, would spare the world much trouble. It would add thousands of good deeds to daily happenings, save many firms from bankruptcy through bad debts, paint hundreds of pictures only dreamed of, write books without number and straighten half the tangles of our social life. The habit of putting off disagreeable duties is responsible for much needless unhappiness, for these bugbears weigh on the mind and prevent the satisfied content that comes from duty well performed. Most tasks promptly undertaken prove less difficult than we anticipated, and the joy of accomplishment often compensates for any hardship experienced.

WILL A MAN ROB GOD?

Drawn by J. E. Wildermuth.

THE RECORD.

Is it true that a man, the creature, will rob God, the creator? The oft repeated statement is made, "What do I owe him?" What I have I have earned by my own powers, and why should I be under obligations to him? This depends upon the hypothesis of two questions. First, Who is man? Second, Is he responsible for that which he may have?

Man's origin would have largely to do in helping to settle these questions. It is a fact that he originated somewhere and somehow, and that not of himself; this would be self-evident that somewhere there is a superior whom man might call his Father, or the author of his creation. Nature in all her beatitudes reveals and declares a superior to man; but just who or what he is and what his name is nature fails to tell us, yet it speaks loudly as to the facts of the existence of this superior intelligence.

As we look into the faces of the beautiful lilies and roses by the wayside they tell us of a loving hand, of an intellectual mind which could not only form and fashion but give life and make laws for its continuancy; yet silent as to what we shall call this wonderful, creative, intellect. The study of astronomy opens to the mind of man a wonderful field of thought in which this intellectual, creative power evidences to man the attribute of foresight as well as aftersight in organizing the system of worlds of which we occupy a very insignificant planet, compared with some of the others associated with it in this solar system; and observing that each planet in this system is governed by a law having its path, times and seasons, and working harmoniously together magnifying the author of their creation, we conclude that he has power not only to create, but to control and to preserve.

Each of these fields of thought reveals to us the fact of a law governing, and it is true that there can be no law without a lawgiver. Hence, we conclude that as man is the highest type of intelligence of the creation and having not originated himself, he must have had his origin from the same intellectual source as the lilies, roses, the planets, and all animated matter known to man. And this creative power in some way and some how has, and will make itself known to man, the creature, as it has to other objects which it has created and preserved and perpetuated by law. David said, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel . . . our Father, for ever and ever." Moses, when aroused to note the fact of a call which he comprehended was one superior to the call that man might have given, said, "Who art thou?" He desired to know who or what it was by which he was sent and was to go in. The answer came, and while simple, yet it was profound, "I am that I am"; "I am hath sent" you. "Thus shalt thou say unto" them "the Lord God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob hath sent you." As we pass briefly over the history of those ancient worthies we are forced to say, as did David, Blessed is "our Father."

Jesus said, "I am the express image of my Father." The history is sufficient to enable us to understand that the avenue is open for direct communication from our father. Hence we can know for ourselves, if we want to, who and what is the name of this wonderful creative intelligence that we have observed in the works of nature and the revealment of himself in the Bible, by direct revelation to one's self. With the amount of evidence thus available, man is forced to acknowledge this creative intelligence as the Father of the universe, and when he does this the first question is answered: I am his son.

The second question, though separate, is of the same phase and largely answered in discussing the first, and his responsibility to his father is made evident also. As all nature responds to him so should his sons. Hence, all that man has, came to him by reason of his sonship. And for the use and blessings bestowed his father only asks him under the general law to contribute one tenth for the use and benefit of those who need.

Man often gets enthusiastic and tells his fellows how he loves his heavenly father and the work he has committed to his trust, and how he would like to see it move forward, but alas, how soon the temperature drops to zero when asked to contribute his portion to assist some poor unfortunate soul. Yet this same individual would not rob his fellow-men; he is honest and a careful man in all of his dealings in every respect but this one. As an apology for the nonperformance of duty along this financial line he says, I have earned this myself and it is mine, and can I not do with it as I please? Poor soul. He has forgotten his origin and who his father is, and who has multiplied favors for his benefit, and who gave him all he has, and without these divine blessings he would not have a meager living. Hence, the Father says, "Will a man rob God?" "Bring all your tithes into the storehouse."

In stake organizations we have greater or other duties for this special work of a higher and better consideration than can be found elsewhere. Yet Saints sometimes say, I won't comply with the law and lay all before the Bishop, for it is none of his business what I have. And others will say, If I knew that the leading men in the church had complied with the law I would do so, too. Just as though the law would be ineffectual if the leaders of the church should fail to comply with its provisions. While we are forced to confess that it is a poor idea to preach what we do not practice, yet if the preacher fails to practice what he preaches it is evident that his failure would not make ineffectual the law, but he would be a lawbreaker himself. God hath said, "My word shall not return unto me void," hence the question is not what others do, but "What is required of me?"

The books of the Independence Stake bishopric reveal the fact that five hundred and fifty-eight inventories have been filed up to July 2, 1909, and they are coming in nearly every day, indicating that something is being done along the financial lines in this stake. These inventories reveal all that an individual has, and when a person lays all he has before the Bishop in this way, he is following God's way, and his method of raising means to carry on his work. But when we gather means in our own way by ice-cream socials, and paid entertainments, and the like, it is leading us from God instead of to him. Yet Saints will say that they know this work is God's work, and if it is, can he not carry it on in his own way? but they say the people will not contribute sufficiently, hence we must do something to raise funds for spreading the gospel and caring for the poor, and it is the fashionable method used in all the world among all church people, and we might just as well be out of the world as out of style. While we linger around this thought we remember the psalmist said, "The law of the Lord is perfect." James also said, "He that looketh into the perfect law of liberty." These scriptures are indicative that God's law needs no amendments or additions made by human intellect. It is perfect and could not be so unless there were provisions for the execution of said law. Why then tread on grounds where Jehovah is not found? How can we love the work we call his when we will not do that which he has provided that we should do?

The one redeeming feature to the earnest and diligent contributor of the work which we all profess to love so well, is that every man is to be judged and rewarded according to his works. If some of these professed followers of the meek and lowly Christ would learn and sing occasionally the beautiful song, "Where shall I spend eternity?" while enjoying the liberties that lawfully belong to others, it is possible they might see that equality, so far as they are concerned, and that their zeal for the truth they profess to love, is questionable.

Well could the Father bring the accusation in an interrogative way, "Will a man rob God?"

A. H. PARSONS, of the Independence
Stake Bishopric.

WILL THE WICKED BE CAST INTO FIRE?

Matthew 13: 49, 50: The angels shall come forth and sever the wicked from among the just, and shall cast them into the furnace of fire.

Mark 9: 47: And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.

Revelation 21: 8: But the fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death.

Book of Mormon, book of Jacob 4: 13, large edition: And according to the power of justice, for justice can not be denied, ye must go away into that lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up for ever and ever, which lake of fire and brimstone, is endless torment.

Book of Mosiah 1: 77, 78, 79: Therefore, they have drunk out of the cup of the wrath of God, which justice could no more deny unto them than it could deny that Adam should fall, because of his partaking of the forbidden fruit; therefore, mercy could have no claim on them no more for ever. And their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames are unquenchable, and whose smoke ascendeth up for ever and ever. Thus hath the Lord commanded me, Amen.

Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4: Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and deny my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, . . . these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power.

Is the fire above referred to, as it will be, literal fire? Literal means real; real means actual. We might ask, Is there any other kind of fire spoken of in Scriptures but literal fire? If so, what kind of fire would that be?

Mark 9:46, 47, Inspired Version, reads:

And if thine eye which seeth for thee, him that is appointed to watch over thee to show thee light, become a transgressor and offend thee, pluck him out. It is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire.

The Lord saw fit to correct this passage of scripture, which shows that the eye referred to was not the literal eye. Why, then, if the fire was not to be understood as literal, did he not so state? Seeing that this translation was given by direct inspiration from God, we would expect him to speak in terms we could understand, and as we know nothing about any other than literal fire, we had best so consider it.

In Doctrine and Covenants 1:5, we have this express language:

Behold, I am God, and have spoken it; these commandments are of me, and were given unto my servants in their weakness, after the manner of their language, that they might come to understanding.

That being true, in section 63:5 the Lord says:

And verily I say unto you, as I have said before, He that looketh on a woman to lust after her, or if any shall commit adultery in their hearts, they shall not have the Spirit, but shall deny the faith and shall fear: wherefore, I, the Lord, have said that the fearful, and the unbelieving, and all liars, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie, and the whoremonger, and the sorcerers, shall have their part in that lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death.

"As I have said before," we will find, refers to Revelation 21:8, as above quoted, thus confirming the truthfulness of the book of Revelation, as well as of the facts therein stated. The testimony in the two books agrees as to who shall enter into the condition as above referred to. However, section 76:4, above referred to, makes the matter plainer. When will an ordeal of this kind be first introduced? Not, as some suppose, immediately at death; but at the end of the thousand years' reign, and the "little season," spoken of in Revelation 20:2, 4, 7, 9:

And he [the angel] laid hold on . . . Satan, and bound him a thousand years, . . . after that he must be loosed a little season, . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years [the Saints], . . . And when the thousand years are expired, Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, . . . and fire came down from God out of heaven, and devoured them.

The word them signifies Satan and all who choose to associate with him.

In agreement with the above, in Doctrine and Covenants 43:7, we have the following:

Behold, verily I say unto you, that these are the words of the Lord, your God; wherefore, labor ye, labor ye in my vineyard for the last time: for the last time call upon the inhabitants of the earth, for in my own due time will I come upon the earth in judgment; and my people shall be redeemed and shall reign with me on earth; for the great millennial, which I have spoken by the mouth of my servants, shall come; for Satan shall be bound; and when he is loosed again, he shall only reign for a little season, and then cometh the end of the earth; and he that liveth in righteousness, shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye; and the earth shall pass away so as by fire; and the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know, until they come before me in judgment.

The Savior agrees with the above as found in Matthew 25:31, 32, 41:

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all nations. . . . Then shall he say also to them on his left hand, depart from me, ye cursed into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

In 2 Peter 3:7, 10, we find the following:

But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up.

The Inspired Version renders the tenth verse differently, and is as follows:

But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall shake, and the earth also shall tremble, and the mountains shall melt, and pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall be filled with fervent heat; the earth also shall be filled, and the corruptible works which are therein shall be burned up.

In agreement with the above see Doctrine and Covenants 98:5:

And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, or of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also, that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth.

In the latter quotation we see the object of the burning or cleansing process of fire, "That all things shall become new." That the knowledge and glory of God may "dwell upon all the earth." I wonder if that spoken of, that will cause to melt with fervent heat, is not literal fire.

It seems plain from the above scriptures, as set forth in all three of the books, that at some time, Satan, together with those who choose to remain in their wickedness, will be cast into fire. So far as the writer is concerned, he has no apology to offer for the word of God. From Revelation 20:6-10 we learn that when Satan is loosed out of his prison, he will go forth to deceive the nations—Gog and Magog, to gather them together to battle, and will compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire will come down from God out of heaven, and devour them.

This will be one of the times that Satan, together with those who fight on his side of the issue, will be in fire. As to who constitutes the Devil's army, is explained, to some extent at least, in Doctrine and Covenants 85:35: "And the Devil shall gather together his armies, even the hosts of hell"; but they shall be defeated, and "cast away into their own place." And their own place will be (Revelation 20:10) "the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." Whether this "for ever and ever" means endless duration, has not been, nor is it likely to be, revealed, only to those who are partakers thereof. (See Doctrine and Covenants 76:4.) Man's final judgment will not take place until after his resurrection.

Those who obey and live up to the gospel rule, either in this world or the next, before the coming of Christ, will, at the coming of Christ, be raised from the dead, together with the heathen and they that die without law; and shall reign with Christ a thousand years on the earth. (Revelation 20:6; 5:10.) Doctrine and Covenants 28:1, 2:

Listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, . . . for the hour is nigh, and the day soon at hand, when the earth is ripe; and all the proud, and they that do wickedly, shall be as stubble, and I will burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that wickedness shall not be upon the earth; for the hour is nigh, and that which was spoken by mine apostles must be fulfilled; for as they spoke, so shall it come to pass; for I will reveal myself from heaven with power and great glory, with all the hosts thereof, and dwell in righteousness with men on earth a thousand years, and the wicked shall not stand.

After the thousand years' reign, and the little season, all the remaining dead will come forth and be judged.

Revelation 20:12-15: And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God: and the books were opened; and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire.

John 5:28, 29: Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation.

Doctrine and Covenants 28:7: But, behold, verily I say unto you, Before the earth shall pass away, Michael, mine archangel, shall sound his trump, and then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels.

To the mind of the writer, it will take the ordeal of fire, as above brought out, in order to convince the Devil and his angels that God is all in all, and that to him belongs "the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever." And that it will be needful for "the sons of perdition" to pass through the same in order to the destruction of their resurrected bodies, that they may become or be placed in such condition as to be fit associates with the Devil, or, as directly expressed by the Lord, Doctrine and Covenants 76:4:

They shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof.

It seems that the above scriptures ought to be sufficient to convince the erring, or those who would like to walk, or persist in walking, as near to the dead line as they dare to, that they had best have an eye to walking so far from the dead line that they will keep directly in the straight road that leads to eternal life.

Should anyone feel moved, in order to present the truth of the mission of Jesus Christ, to teach that there is a possibility of redemption after death; they should be extremely careful in so doing, as not to leave the impression on the minds of the hearers that the same degree of salvation can be attained by obeying the gospel in the spirit world that there can be by obeying the gospel in this world. The writer can find no evidence to prove that those who do not come forth in the first resurrection and reign with Christ a thousand years will ever be prepared to dwell on the new earth, but will evidently be compelled to occupy on some other globe, either a terrestrial or that of a teletial.

Doctrine and Covenants 85:6: And again, verily I say unto you, The earth abideth the law of a celestial kingdom, for it filleth the measure of its creation, and transgresseth not the law. Wherefore, it shall be sanctified; yea, notwithstanding it shall die, it shall be quickened again, and shall abide the power by which it is quickened, and the righteous shall inherit it; for, notwithstanding they die, they also shall rise again a spiritual body: they who are of a celestial spirit shall receive the same body, which was a natural body; even ye shall receive your bodies, and your glory shall be that glory by which your bodies are quickened. Ye who are quickened by a portion of the celestial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness; and they who are quickened by a portion of the terrestrial glory, shall then receive of the same, even a fullness: and also they who are quickened by a portion of the teletial glory, shall receive of the same, even a fullness: and they who remain shall also be quickened; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place, to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received.

This shows that the earth will be changed to a "celestial kingdom" and the "righteous shall inherit it," while the terrestrial and teletial will inhabit other worlds or kingdoms, as the following shows (same section, paragraph 9):

All kingdoms have a law given: and there are many kingdoms; for there is no space in the which there is no kingdom; and there is no kingdom in which there is no space, either a greater or lesser kingdom. And unto every kingdom is given a law; and unto every law there are certain bounds also, and conditions.

We learn from this that "there are many kingdoms," either greater or less, and that each has its law governing; and that therefore, teletial beings will not inhabit this earth in its final redeemed state. This earth, during the thousand years' reign, will no doubt be in a terrestrial state, and some if not many of the inhabitants at that time will be terrestrial beings, such as the heathen, and they that die without law, but they may develop sufficient during the thousand years' reign to enable them to occupy the new earth; but in case they do not, there will be room for them on some other globe, known as terrestrial.

May this article convince every Latter Day Saint that reads it, of the necessity of living very close to the teachings of the three books, touching practical righteousness.

ETHIOPIA AND ISAIAH 18.

There chanced to come to my notice last winter, while at the home of Fred Hansen near Persia, Iowa, a book entitled, A Scripture Gazeteer, by John Griffith Mansford, printed in London in 1829. On pages 110 to 119 is quite a lengthy article on Ethiopia as to history and location, and I copied such parts of it that I thought to be of service to the ministry, and that they may have the benefit of it I send it to the HERALD, as the readers will doubtless remember that Rev. Haupt claimed in the HERALD not long since that Ethiopia was south of Palestine and not west and therefore America could not have been mentioned.

Cush, Cutha, Cuthea, Cushan, Ethiopia. . . . Compelled by the influx of new settlers from Arabia, Egypt, and Canaan, to extend their migrations still further westward, into the heart of the African continent; where only, in the woolly-headed negro, the genuine Cushite is to be found.—Page 110.

The Cushite shepherds who invaded Egypt from the East, and held it in subjection for the space of two hundred and sixty years immediately preceding the era of Joseph, or according to others, DRR years before this era, and the remainder by a second invasion and a new dynasty, which extended to the time of the exodus. . . . Isaiah 18:1 says, "Woe to the land shadowing with wings which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia," which is generally interpreted as a denunciation against Egypt. Doctor Horsley translates this passage, "Ho to the land," converting the language into that of encouragement: certainly much more consonant with the spirit of the chapter which thus opens, and which is addressed to a people who are to perform great service to the people of God. He conceives, indeed, the rivers of Ethiopia to be the Nile.—Page 111.

Doctor Shuckford conceives the country meant in this prophecy to be Egypt. . . . It is much more consonant with such a description, if Egypt have anything to do with it, to suppose the Nile with its branches, to be meant, whose source is in the African Ethiopia; and to some distant country beyond which, in the direction of the sea, this prophecy yet to be completed, refers. . . . About four hundred years before Christ, Herodotus, in his second book, which treats of Egypt, makes frequent mention of Ethiopia; meaning exclusively the Ethiopia above Egypt. . . . The capital of the African Ethiopia; which is described by Herodotus as a great city in his time, namely, four hundred years before Christ; and was separated from the rest of the world by almost impassable deserts. . . . The best representation of the Cushite, in regard to features, is, perhaps, to be found in the Egyptian Sphinx, the probable work of the Ethiopian, Cushite invaders of that country. . . . It is probable, indeed, that the distinctive character of the whole family of Ham, whose name implies burnt or black, was Ethiopic.—Page 113.

Cushite in the heart of the African continent.—Page 115.

Many of the Ethiopic tribes inhabiting the torrid regions of the African continent.—Page 116.

The descendants of Ham, which make up nearly the whole of the vast continent of Africa.—Page 119.

EGYPT.

A country of Africa . . . called by the native Egyptians, "Chemí," or the land of Ham. . . . Egypt was first peopled after the deluge by Mizraim, or Mizr the son of Ham.—Page 146.

From the above it is certain that all of Africa was generally in former times called Cush or Ethiopia and even Egypt was settled first by that race. The negro is the true Ethiopian. The river Nile rising as it does in the heart of old Ethiopia, and having several outlets, could well be called the "rivers of Ethiopia."

Sincerely,

J. W. PETERSON.

ONE WAY TO PREVENT DIVORCES.

As the divorce question seems to be agitated to a great extent by the press, and even has found its way to our church papers, I thought it would not be amiss to offer a few thoughts. We will refer particularly to the members of our church. If we would heed more carefully the admonition to pray over our flocks and herds, and even the more important subject of marriage, I believe that the divorce evil would not invade our ranks to such an alarming degree.

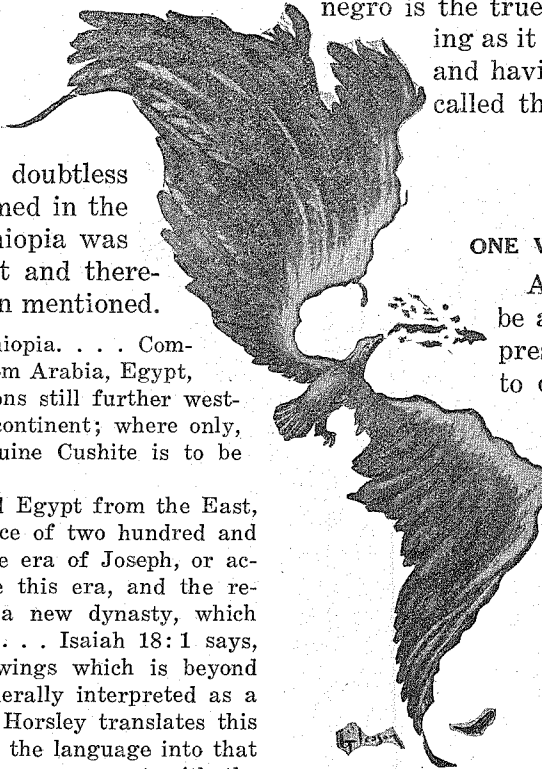

One prominent writer stated in substance as follows: "The most important and sacred duty imposed upon the human race, receives by the majority the least thought and consideration. In the common ordinary walks of life, business, trade, etc., we must prepare and fit ourselves, or we will be relegated to the rear or background for the more thoughtful and courageous. How about marriage, no qualifications required, no difference how ignorant or degraded, or even criminal, so the rigid hand of the law is evaded.

"THE LAND SHADOWING WITH WINGS."

From a cut formerly used in the National Magazine.

How many of our boys and girls from sixteen to twenty-three are prepared and capable to enter into the marriage covenant? It is said in ancient Greece it was very difficult to get married under thirty years of age, and I believe that rule might be applied to some modern people with good effect. How many times have our hearts ached for little people, who were punished in fits of anger, and given such poor training because the parents were not prepared for the arduous task. How many realize that it is ordained of God, and the important step they are taking, one which will influence their lives for all time to come? How really necessary then that they should know the Lord's will concerning them.

We are thankful that some of our missionaries and others can testify, that they did not enter into this covenant without evidence from the Lord that they were doing his will. How grand it would be if all of our members could make the same statement. Do you think there would be many divorces then? How well our ministers would be prepared and fortified to preach on the marriage question, and what good advice could be given by all members to young people both in and out of the church.

We wonder how many of our young people, yes, and older people too, would be willing to pray fervently and wait on the Lord for years to know his will on this vital question? Possibly the majority would be like a young sister, who was shown in a vision the Lord's choice of a companion, but as he did not make his appearance for a few years, she grew weary of waiting, and possibly began to doubt regarding the vision, so married a good brother in the church. In a short time afterward the man in the vision appeared on the scene, and the sister then realized how much she could have loved him, and how much better they were adapted to each other, but by her impatience and lack of faith three homes may not have been as happy as they might have been, and what the regrets for her, as long as she was bound to her present husband.

How our young people and older ones rush into marriage; they would not wait six months or a year longer for anything in the world, while the Lord might consider it best for them to wait six years. Another sister knew eight years before who her companion would be. Do you not think that she was happy and perfectly willing to await the happy event, and strive to live each day as the Lord would have her? Should not anyone be exceedingly happy and thankful, that the creator of the universe would be so kind as to direct one of his struggling creatures to walk in the right way? He knows our inclinations and who would be happy and congenial with us far better than we; then why not trust him? How many believe they should use their good sense and wisdom in this regard? That is all right, but the sad experiences of so many in the past have revealed the fact that human wisdom was not sufficient. If you have decided to make this a subject of prayer, do not decide in your mind that if you do not receive an answer within a limited time, that you will make your own decision, as the Lord may not take the trouble to notice you. "Thy will be done" in this case, as all others. Come unreservedly before the Lord, and you surely will not go unrewarded. Just think what a "peculiar people" we would be, if there were no divorces among our number, and all the marriages were happy, as they could not be otherwise if all endeavored to live according to the will of the Lord.

Some of our young people are in such haste to get married, they can not wait until any preparation is made for a home, and then sometimes they feel even too poor to take church papers, no tithing to pay, and can not assist with the branch expenses, as the money must be used for the support of the family. Does this look as if they loved the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind and strength? On the contrary, does it not show that the Lord has a secondary place in their affections, and they will look after their own pleasure first, and possibly think of his work after while? "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you."

Not to our knowledge has anyone received evidence to marry out of the church, nor has anyone been turned away empty who came before the Lord in an acceptable manner. We should have faith enough to believe that if it is the Lord's will for our young ladies to marry and they are faithful, that he can provide husbands whether the branch where they reside lacks young men or not. One lady made the statement, "When a girl gets ready to marry and there are no young men in the branch, what is she going to do but marry out of the church?" Are we capable of deciding whether it is our time to marry or not, possibly the Lord has other plans for a few years, and then there will be provision made. Do not let our girls shudder with the thought that some one might call them an "old maid," as worse things could happen to them. From observation the "bachelor girls" as a class are far happier than the majority of married women, and apparently are more interested in the church work. How many of our sisters have made the statement, "If I were to marry again, I would never marry out of the church," but it seems so many must learn by experience which sometimes is a bitter teacher.

One noted writer made this statement in a magazine not many years ago, "If our men would live righteous lives, in two or three generations we would not know our people, as they would be so beautiful." How about it if all our brothers and sisters would endeavor to be guided by the Lord on the important question of marriage? Would not love and harmony be in the homes, and surely would not all be at peace in Zion?

AN OBSERVER.

Letter Department

LAMONI, IOWA.

Editors Herald: In the month of June I went east mainly on some special work in hand, and while on the way returning I met, near Cleveland, Ohio, Brother and Sister Anderson, Oscar, Belle, and Baby Kelley; Sr. Anna Dancer and her boys, David and Howard, on the way to attend the Massachusetts reunion, and visit such points of interest in the East as limited time would permit. Thinking that I could serve the interest of the cause as well and be of some aid to them in the meantime, concluded to return with them, they to finance the way, a very important factor on a trip of this kind.

We first visited Kirtland where most of them had not been. Found the hotel full, so there was no room for us at the "inn," but good Sisters Greene and Steffee took us in and made us very welcome and comfortable at their homes.

This was Belle's first visit after a number of years' absence. Her early school days were spent here. She was with a number of her school-girl chums again and they were not slow in letting each other know it was a mutual happy meeting and that they still loved each other. Belle and Baby Kelley were the features of our little company. The rest were obscured for the time; but isn't it interesting to see girl friends meet, greet each other with, "Glad to see you," "Bless your heart," "I have been just wild to see you," kiss each other, and weep for very joy, while love waves vibrate out around like shimmering sunbeams on a garden of flowers. Snakes would become docile and cease to bite under influences like this; the lion lose his ferocity and start to eating straw with the ox, and the bear amble off grazing with the cow. So much under the sporadic miniature of girlish love force in effectiveness, what must be the potential and transforming power of that thing called love, when all-pervading as taught in biblical lore. It is first and last. Jesus said, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might. This is the first and great commandment." And the second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Again, "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." John says, "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him," and this commandment have we from him, "That he who loveth God loveth his brother also." "For this is the message that ye heard from the beginning, that we should love one another." These are fine tests of faith, confidence, and unity, and they point the way to the millennium. The antithesis of this is "hate." The hotbed of malice, envy, jealousy, revenge, maliciousness, an evil eye, etc., which leads to bondage and death. It is written, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." Again, "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death, but he who hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes." All this and much more are things to think about when one is aspiring to Zion conditions and the Saints' rest, and will be sure to lead to self-examination and comparison with the true standard when thought upon. However, this is not a good place for a sermon.

July 25, I was with Brn. Griffiths, Stubbart, and the Saints at Kirtland. Brother Stubbart preached an able and encouraging discourse in the Temple at 11 a. m. A lively interest was taken in the afternoon prayer meeting. It was encouraging. By special invitation we dined together at Bro. John H. Lake's. Brother Lake is active for one of his years, and Sister Lake cheerful and interesting as usual.

At 7.30 p. m. the writer discoursed to an attentive audience in the Temple, Brother Griffiths in charge. It seems very homelike about Kirtland, and one meets with many smiling faces in this well-known, sequestered village.

But in due time we arrived at the reunion grounds by the lakeside in Massachusetts, the campers just emerging from the evening service. The brethren gave us a warm welcome, and the committee made ample provisions for our stay and comfort. We were among Saints. Love and friendship was the greeting on every hand. Each person seemed to strive to make the other happy. The services held were good all through. Those in attendance were comforted and encouraged. So the reunion was a decided success. Of course, in a recital like this, we can only generalize, but lots of nice things could be said about persons and things, and then some more.

Brother and Sister Smith, of Lamoni, our own John and Kate, were present and appreciated. Time up and meetings closed, we hied away to the elite city of Boston, enthusiastic sightseers. The Common, Old South Church, Faneuil Hall, Bunker Hill, Harvard, etc., was enough to revive the spirit of colonial and Revolution days and we were glad we were Americans, ready to fight the war over again, admonished, however, that the nation that behaves itself best is greatest. A few hours' ride on "old ocean" and we were at Plymouth. Stood on the Rock upon which the Pilgrims landed, persecuted, ostracized, and driven to the New World where they might enjoy religious freedom. They struggled for years on this rocky coast for bare existence and love of freedom. But their names and influence still live.

At Providence, Rhode Island, we were kindly entertained by Bro. and Sr. George Gates and daughter Minnie. True to their saintly habits, Brother and Sister Gates took a day off and led the way to some of the interesting places in and about the city. We visited the beautiful cemetery east of the city, where wealth is lavishly expended to beautify and memorialize the last resting place of loved ones, all that they can do. Stood in the shadow of the monument erected to the memory of the great man, Roger Williams, who stood so valiantly for human rights. Strolled through the park that bears his name, took in a shore dinner, visited the library, Brown University, the famed Roger Williams church, etc., and at evening joined in the prayer meeting at the Saints' church. It was an interesting meeting, the Saints active in the service. It was a treat to meet Providence Saints again.

Next day we were welcomed at Fall River by Doctor Gilberts. On invitation we joined them in a car ride to New Bedford, where we spent the evening pleasantly with Brother and Sister Bently, daughter and son-in-law of the aforesaid John Smith. A bounteous repast was provided and everything went well. Brother Bently and Sister Esther are just magnificent in their own home. I remained over night, the others of the party returned to Fall River. The following day Doctor Gilbert and one of the managers conducted us through one of the big cotton mills. Most interesting to those who never saw how the raw material is turned into thread, and so on up to the finished cloth. The Brethren Gilberts then led the way to the famed city of Newport, where millionaires congregate to live and do as other people can not do. Everything very fine here. Too many things of interest to undertake to point out. At evening, after paying our respects to Sister Ann's dinner, we went aboard the Plymouth and spent the night on the great waters, arriving at New York City next morning. Crossed the bridge to Brooklyn, and went to No. 965 Stant Marks avenue, to receive a welcome by Bro. and Sr. George Potts and family, known as the elders' home, where "the weary be at rest." Soon to meet Bro. and Sr. Ephraim Squires, Brother and Sister McGuire, Bro. and Sr. Frank Lester, Bro. and Sr. George Baty and young Bro. George Potts and Ethel, and later too many to try to name.

The following day being Sunday we attended meeting at the Saints' church. Bro. John Smith was present and preached an interesting discourse in the morning, the writer speaking in the evening. It was a pleasure to meet the Brooklyn Saints again and the day was spent to edification. We planned to see things in the greater New York next day, but as goes Burns, "The best laid plans of mice and men gang aft a-glee." It rained and continued the next day. We saw something of the great city, however, but time limit would not permit a longer stay; so Wednesday we went on to Philadelphia and were kindly entertained at the home of Brother and Sister Zimmermann. They had just returned from their western tour and knew how to sympathize with folks that wanted to see things. The young people led the way to points of interest in the city. The house of Betty Ross, who designed our beautiful flag; Independence Hall, crowned with historic events, and where hangs the bell that rang out the notes of freedom in 1776, that have traveled around the world. We had splendid guides and enjoyed the luxury of seeing. One text in the Bible is surely true: "The eye is never tired of seeing or the ear of hearing." Philadelphia is a great city and opulent, such as anyone may be proud of having a home in.

At Washington Congress had adjourned and it was house-cleaning time. Some of the principal places were closed. At the White House they were painting and dusting, the chief occupant being away, so we did not see "Mister President." But there are the Capitol buildings, the library, state buildings, the monument, gardens, etc. Lots to see in Washington at any time. But now I was left in care of Brother and Sister Peck, and the others of the company started at swiftest speed on their return, and arrived in due time safely home.

Later I went to Sterling, Virginia, to see W. R. Davison and family, a pleasant family of Saints. At one time they lived in Magnolia, Iowa. I overheard Brother Davison ask a man for the use of the Methodist church, in which to hold a meeting, the minister being away. The reply was, "No, that is settled, you can not have it." How is that for free America, toleration, and Christian courtesy, not to hint about the golden rule. Thank heaven for the Latter Day Saints' belief in a free pulpit, free discussion, and the right of proving all things and holding fast to that which is good. Bro. Davison is held in esteem in the neighborhood, is the post-master and a member of the choir, and teaches in the Sabbath school. But the spirit of intolerance is a curse here as well as many other places.

On Sunday, by the kindness of Brother Davison, I attended with them the big ten-day Methodist camp meeting, to see how they do things down in Virginia. There was a large attendance and the morning sermon quite good. A noticeable feature was the absence of colored people. Not one on the grounds, though, as the saying goes, the woods were full of them. It was explained that they knew better than to come. Race distinctions are drawn taut here and the colored folk stay in the places assigned them by the whites. It is explained that this rigid distinction has to be kept up for the reason that there are so many of the colored race so stupid, self-willed, and bumptious in manner that they will take advantage of every privilege extended to them by the whites, and insist on social equality in every way. It is likely the South know the colored folk best. But right here lies a very serious and unsolved problem.

September 4 and 5, I attended the district conference held in Philadelphia. Prominent among those present were U. W. Greene, William Anderson, Albert Stone, Brother Hull, John Zimmermann, Walter W. Smith, Francis M. Sheehy, the district president, etc. Sr. Belle James, of note, was there also. A good representation of the district was present and everything done with the best of feeling, and what appeared to be for the best interest of the work. The meeting will be looked back to by those present as a glad time of social enjoyment, spiritual encouragement, and comfort. Monday was Labor Day, a holiday. I spent the day mostly with Brethren Zimmermann and W. W. Smith. It was cool and breezy. Brother Zimmermann furnished the horse and buggy and Walter and I joined him in a ride through the parks. The hours passed pleasantly and Sister Zimmermann's picnic dinner furnished in the park was just the thing to make one feel in good spirits on a holiday.

On the way returning home I stopped at Coldwater, Michigan. I attended five meetings in their pleasant little church. Brn. S. Stroh, Frank Granger, Star Corless, and S. W. L. Scott present and taking part. It is very agreeable to meet with the Coldwater Saints. I arrived home on September 18.

1 CASTLE COTTAGES, TREBANOG, PŴRTH,
GLAMORGAN, WALES, October 12, 1909.

Dear Brother Carmichael: Your letter and also a parcel containing books on Utah "Mormonism," etc., came to hand to-day. I thank you for your kindness in forwarding the same, as they will be a great help to me in striving to let the people know that there is a real difference in the teaching of Utah Mormonism from the teachings of the church from 1830 to the present.

The chief object of the Utah elders seems to be to keep the name of Joseph Smith the Martyr prominent before the people as the founder of the Utah church and the real author of plural marriage in the church. They seem to idolize his person, while they take great pleasure to calumniate and slander his character.

While, in one sense, the latter-day work may not be affected a great deal by the innocence or guilt of Joseph Smith, yet in the minds of the general run of people it figures; and since the proofs are overwhelming in his favor, we want to get them before the public. The press seems to favor us and we should make good use of the advantage. May truth prevail.

With kind regards, your brother in bonds,

REES JENKINS.

WOODBINE, IOWA, October 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: Seldom does any news appear from this region; not that all are dead spiritually or naturally, nor yet because there is nothing good to report. I believe we have good, earnest, stanch members in this district and not a few as compared with our numbers of members. We have a live president, Sidney Pitt, sr., and so far as I know the branch presidents are alive and that goes a great way to keeping branches and districts alive.

Our reunion was a success, I believe, all through, though I only attended from Thursday to Sunday to 1 p. m. The preaching was excellent both from a spiritual and temporal point of view. The preachers I had the pleasure of hearing were Bishop Kelley, H. C. Smith, J. W. Wight, F. A. and F. M. Smith, F. B. Blair, and Paul Hanson. I believe their efforts were appreciated by all. Other duties kept me from attending prayer services, so I am not prepared to speak of them. I thought there was one mistake made in not responding to the earnest invitation of the city of Denison. Not that I could find fault with the treatment of Little Sioux; they did nobly, but for nearly fifty years that place has heard the restored gospel and has the privilege of hearing it every Sabbath. We have long tried to get an opening in Denison but for some reason have failed, and it seemed opportune now as they manifested such an earnest desire to have our reunion there. But we submit to the will of the majority.

I did not attend the Little Sioux district conference, because in response to an invitation three months before I had promised to attend the conference of the Pottawattamie District at Boomer. The weather being stormy and the Saints widely scattered, very few attended. I was called away from there to preach the funeral sermon of a dear old friend and sister, Mrs. Andrew Hall, of Council Bluffs, mother of J. C. Jensen, well and favorably known to many of the ministry. Sister Hall united with the church in Council Bluffs, in 1862, being baptized by Elder Thomas Revel. She had lived a consistent life and was well prepared for the change. I think she was eighty-nine years old. While her body had been long enfeebled with old age her mental powers were preserved unto her, and she enjoyed the happy consciousness that she was a child of God.

I want to say on behalf of her son, for the purpose of presenting an example of filial love and faithfulness, Bro. Charles Jensen (as he is generally known) cared for his step-father, Andrew Hall, in his long and heavy affliction, with all the faithfulness of a son, and when Brother Hall was called home Brother Jensen cared for his mother, watched over her night and day, ministering to her every want with unyielding patience and true filial fidelity, which will certainly bring upon him the favor of God promised to those who honor their parents, and a glorious reward in the life to come.

I am trying to do a little for the cause of truth. I visit branches convenient to get to and break the bread of life in my humble way to them as well as to our own branch. Bro. S. B. Kibler ably presides here and is a true and earnest man, kind and gentle with all and generally found at his post of duty.

Your brother,
CHARLES DERRY.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, October 20, 1909.

Dear Sirs and Brethren: We expect to baptize several persons into the church locally within the next few days.

A neighbor asks me if I can tell her the whereabouts of three relatives, Elijah, Jeremiah, and William Rowlett, formerly of Kettering, England. They are members of the Mormon faith who lived in Maitland, Missouri. If any of our missionary staff should meet with persons of that name will they kindly communicate with me?

Your brother in Christ,

12 RYE STREET, C UPON M.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS, October 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: Another district conference with records made and sealed has passed into history, and the sadness of parting has been ours once more, but the strengthening memories of the gathering offsets in a measure the sadness of parting.

A time of rejoicing was had by all and the evidences of blessings received in restoration of loved ones to health were many and some were stirring. The old-time prayer and testimony was again in evidence and all were held in the influence of the gathering of those who have been called to be Saints.

Bro. A. B. Phillips, of Boston, is an able worker in the vineyard and in the opinion of your writer one whom man, the church, and God would approve. He has been doing street work with success, having engaged the earnest attention of all creeds and classes. So well did he that it was suggested that he come in the fall and use a hall down town.

Bro. M. H. Bond, of Independence, was here and preached with old-time vigor and force, and looking over the ground of past encounters he was no doubt impressed with the results of his former stay in this city and viewed with more or less satisfaction the result of his work.

Brother Greene preached an interesting sermon, closing a very satisfactory conference.

THE DALLES, OREGON, October 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: Will you please publish a few lines from an isolated sister? I am one of the unhappy ones, but will not state any grievances. I have no chance to attend meetings, neither have we any neighbors. I would like to hear from some one who is happily situated in a small branch of the church. I never had a desire to be in a large branch; would rather live in a small branch, so that I could be sociable and on good terms with everyone belonging to the branch.

I am the sister who requested letters several years ago. My situation is even worse than it was then. I have consoled myself with the thought that my time on earth might not be long. I have boys whom I would like to see serving their Maker and trying to make sure of their eternal reward. I would like to hear from some one in regard to a good place to locate and the price of land, either near Lamoni or somewhere in Missouri. I want to be in "Zion's stakes." Saints, please pray for me that my burden may be made lighter. O for a change from what I now have to endure.

From a most unhappy sister,
MRS. M. DAMRON.

(The following comes in answer to a letter, published some time ago, from Bro. J. H. N. Jones, in which he made request for somebody to supply his cousin with a copy of the Book of Mormon. See HERALD, vol. 56, p. 975.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 22, 1909.

PROF. W. V. TUNNED,
Harvard University, City,

Sir: I am informed that you desire a copy of the Book of Mormon to read. This information came to me indirectly through the instrumentality of your cousin, J. H. N. Jones, in Australia.

Permit me to inform you that a copy of the above-mentioned book may be had at the Carnegie Library in this city.

Very respectfully,
WILLIAM FROYD.

ALLENDALE, MISSOURI, November 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: I bear my testimony to the truth of the gospel that is preached in these latter days. It is the new and everlasting covenant; the glorious gospel restored by an angel. The Lord raised up Joseph the Martyr and others to organize the church on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone, at a time when darkness covered the earth and gross darkness the people. A little one has become a thousand and a small one a great nation. The Lord has hastened it in his own time; the Lord raised up one mighty and strong to set in order his house. To God be all glory, honor, and praise. May the Lord bless his dear people is my prayer in Jesus' name.

Your sister in the true faith if worthy,
SALOME ROBERTSON.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, October 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: I arrived home, once more safe, after riding two thousand miles on Nahum's chariots, from Machias, Maine, to Independence, Missouri. It was one of the most profitable summer's work I have put in in the forty years of my ministry.

The first thing I did was to repair the chapel at Little Kennebec, holding services at the same time evenings. Sometimes I thought the chapel would not be able to seat another one, but they said, "There is room for one more."

I was in Maine four months; preached seventy-seven sermons; baptized fifteen; reorganized the Little Kennebec Branch with sixty-five members, and organized a Sunday school with one hundred and twenty-five present to start on. I also baptized seven on Head Harbor Isle and had Sr. E. M. Fralker and Bro. S. F. Cushman go there and organize a Sunday school. I blessed twenty children; administered to the sick many times; ordained two deacons; confirmed eighteen; visited many houses of people both in and out of the church. Several told me they would obey the gospel when I came back in the spring. The work took a fine start in Eastern Maine, if it is only kept up. We made many friends to our noble cause.

I picked up the HERALD and read about the Utah elders on Lamoni, and I wish to say to the Saints of Lamoni Stake, is it possible that any one of you would be on the side of the Utah elders or their corrupt church when the Book of Mormon positively declares that a man shall have but one wife and concubines none? Read Jacob first two chapters; then read Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, paragraph 7: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart and shall cleave unto her and none else." In the face and eyes of the above, is it possible that we have living at Lamoni or anywhere else any of the Josephite Latter Day Saints that would lock arms with such lawbreakers as the Utah church is? I hope and pray that there is not a member of the Reorganization at Lamoni that gives his voice or favor to Utahism, for it is rotten as hell can make it. The truth when lived up to will make us free in Christ our Lord.

Yours truly,

J. C. FOSS.

WOODBURN, INDIANA, October 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: As my soul is overwhelmed with the Spirit this morning I feel like bearing my testimony through the HERALD. I know for a truth this latter-day work is of God, and how I love his work! We are isolated, but God does not forget us. He pours out his Spirit upon me and causes me to rejoice and praise his holy name. He has heard and answered my prayers and blessed me and mine since I came into this gospel.

I have had trials, but he has caused me to stand. I realize I am still on the earth and I know not what trials I may be called to go through with yet, but I hope whatever may come I will trust in him that is always ready to help. I want to say to the young, be brave soldiers of the cross and prove faithful to the end. Surely great will be your reward. You see the old must pass away and you younger children must keep the work moving until Zion is redeemed. May God bless all is my prayer.

Your sister for the truth,

MRS. A. V. DAVIS.

VANCLEAVE, MISSISSIPPI, October 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: While at home alone this fine morning, reading and thinking over my past life, I feel somewhat sad, and I shed tears for what has been lost by the weakness of the flesh; but when I lay that down and just think of the many blessings I receive from the Lord by yielding obedience to his commandments, I desire to do more for the cause that we are engaged in. I hope the Spirit of the Lord will arouse the people of this branch of the church, as well as everywhere else in the South, to live better and attend the meetings and be more sincere; that we might have more of God's love shed abroad in our hearts for our fellow-man.

I am glad that some if not all realize, at this place, that this work is God's work, for it has had some of Satan's best tests as to its divinity. The future is still bright.

Among other things that come under my observation are some truths of my past life and the testimonies of my service in the church. I attended General Conference in Independence in 1906, and there met Bro. A. H. Smith and called for my patriarchal blessing, and in this blessing he said, "for I perceive that thou wilt be called upon to exercise judgment," and in another place, he said, "I bless thee, bidding thee not to doubt the call that has been given thee, but to enter in with full determination of heart." Such wonderful counseling as this all along the pathway of life from the Lord's servants causes my heart and soul to burn within me. Oh, that I could use a pen as some can! It would do my soul good.

Hoping and praying for the welfare of all the faithful in the Lord's vineyard,

Your brother in the battle for the truth,

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, October 24, 1909.

Editors Herald: To-night is to be the last of the spiritual feast here for the present, as Brethren Farr and Wilds close a series of meetings of nearly two weeks. They close for lack of interest. It seems a pity that such soul-cheering sermons have to be preached to empty seats, that is, so far as outsiders are concerned. We are sorry to part with these brethren, but we take comfort in the thought that we have with us yet Brethren Lawn and Daley, and we have no fear of anything the enemy of righteousness can bring forth against the work as long as Bro. George Daley is with us and the divine Spirit is with him.

In the night of the 11th of October I had a dream which has been in my mind ever since. I dreamed that I and a great number of other people were traveling up the side of a mountain. It was not steep, only about thirty degrees, until near the top. There were many tracks of a miniature railway at a less grade, so we had to cross the tracks. Each person had his place to travel in; that is, no one could follow the other. Some were traveling fast, others slow. I was going much faster than a man could run, yet I was not fatigued. There could be no turning back or stopping. Near the top of the mountain it became so much steeper that the last fifteen or twenty feet overhung and at the top there was brush mixed with the soil. When I took hold of the brush to pull up by, I only came against something solid; then the brush would break loose, and when I would open my hand it looked like straw or stubble and earth. I got high enough to look over the top of the mountain and there I saw a most beautiful sloping landscape and many persons clad in white. Each one seemed so happy; but they were busy doing something (each one by itself), but I could not see what. One was only about twelve feet from me, I saw it was my father-in-law, (Elder H. S. Green,) who passed away from this life about thirteen years ago. I thought, if I could attract his attention he would come to my aid, but I could not attract his attention. Then I realized that I never could get over this terrible place unless Jesus came to my rescue. To fall was sure ruin. Then I said to myself, I have faith, for I have seen my Savior and heard his kind voice. He has heard and answered my prayers many times and I began to pray that "the Lord Jesus would come and help me over this terrible place." When I received the assurance that he would come to my aid and that I should be able to hold on where I was until he should come. Then the dream passed away. Can anyone give the interpretation? I would like to have it.

Ever praying for God's people, that we may come up to a higher plane of spirituality, that God's name may be glorified, is the prayer of,
 Your brother in Christ,
 2118 I STREET. W. N. DAWSON.

BANTRY, NORTH DAKOTA, October 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: The progress of the work is onward in this northern State. A profitable and interesting district conference continuing from July 3 to 11 gave encouragement to all.

Under the able direction of those in charge the missionaries were wisely distributed around the State. The writer, in company with Brother Swenson, laboring in Ward, Bottineau, and McHenry counties up to harvest. The Lord mercifully blessed our efforts, the result being, along with the labors of Brother Whiting, seven names added to the Antler Branch, two to the Lake View Branch, and one week ago a noble young sister of fourteen years had the courage to confess her Savior, her name being added to the Lansford Branch.

The Saints here at Bantry are making a united effort to erect a church building at Milroy, a new town half way between Towner and Bantry and very conveniently situated for the members of the Lake View Branch. A pleasing feature in connection is the friendship and generosity of those outside the church, giving about half the actual cash in addition to a nice corner lot in the residence part of the town. We trust the Saints will continue to deserve the respect and esteem of all good people.

The building commences to-day under the direction of Brother Waganer; a practical carpenter, and bids fair to be completed at Christmas, entirely free of debt.

I leave here to-morrow for Medicine Lake, Montana, expecting to drive along with a young brother in search of a homestead. The northeast part of Montana, heretofore devoted to stock raising, is now filling with new settlers, and we think it advisable to do all we can to plant the gospel standard at the front. Our experience in the past as a pioneer missionary has shown good results from getting into new districts before other denominations get the people banded together and inclosed with a wall of pride, prejudice, and bigoted intolerance. Any of the scattered Saints desiring meetings, address me at my new home, Loraine, Ward County, North Dakota.

By request of Brother Wildermuth I stand ready to receipt for tithes and offerings and would add that I will forward or come and assist in making inventories. Dear Saints, let us get into the line of duty and do it in a systematic and business-like way.

Yours for progress,

WILLIAM SPARLING.

WINTER HILL, MASSACHUSETTS, October 28, 1909.

Dear Herald: It is a long time since we have applied for room in your columns, but Boston is nevertheless alive, and undergoing many changes.

We are always a handful in the summer time, compared with our winter attendance, so many of our number get out of the city and sojourn at the beach or in the country, in many cases for the sake of the children. We are all back to headquarters again, and consider our interest as well as attendance very good, but we are often reminded that this is a life of changes, coming and going, meeting and parting.

We were much pleased to have with us some few weeks ago Bro. M. H. Bond and wife; surely it made our hearts rejoice to clasp their hands, and to hear the voice of our brother in testimony to this work. We were sorry their stay could not be longer, but hope we may be so favored again, if not on account of the marriage of a daughter, some other pleasant occasion. Personally, I felt sorry they could not have been here at reunion time, not only that we might hear from Brother Bond, but that Sister Bond might enjoy the associations of the East with Aunt Kate Smith, who, with her worthy husband, was with us. Steps are being taken by the committee of the Eastern Reunion Association for permanent organization and permanent camping grounds; nothing definite as to the latter is yet decided. It is a step in the right direction.

Now our hearts are troubled and sad over the departure from us of our brother A. N. Hoxie, jr., who has so nobly carried on our Sunday school work for over two years. Not only in Sunday school work has he been felt for good, but in the music of the church as well as Sunday school. We believe that he is going into a broader field of usefulness, and that he will be a power for good, especially among young men and women. We tried to surprise him by adjourning a Sunday school business meeting the Tuesday evening before his departure on the following Sunday, and with bouquets (in words) endeavored to show him we love and appreciate him, and bid him God-speed, with a nice suit case, which will often remind him of his Boston friends. We are hoping to see him in Boston once or twice at least before he leaves for Chicago.

We have some nice (which is a Boston word, they say) additions to our branch, one being Sr. Alma Dunn, of Toronto, Canada, who has stopped with us since reunion, having come with Bro. and Sr. Daniel Macgregor, whom we enjoyed so much at our reunion, and who are now successfully laboring in Maine. Another new member in the person of Harry H. Kozman, from Cleveland, Ohio, who is studying at the Fisher Business College, and Harry Smith, from Independence, who is attending "Tech" in Boston, help swell our ranks of fine young men.

Our primary department is growing like a weed, Bro. and Mrs. W. A. Sinclair having recently contributed a boy to it, Bro. E. H. Fisher and wife a pair of twins, a boy and a girl, and M. C. and Florence Fisher another boy. We conclude that Zion is in need of men.

Bro. U. W. Greene has been with us for several days. On October 23, he, assisted by M. C. Fisher, united in matrimony Bro. Harry Cole, of Brookline, and Sr. Edith Haynes. On Friday night of last week, at a meeting of the officers and teachers of our Sunday school, when Brother Hoxie asked Brother Greene to give us a stirring speech, he addressed us thus: "It affords me great pleasure to-night to meet with the stoics and epicureans on Mars Hill in the Athens of America." After the "stirring" speech, with several others on Sunday school work worthy of mention, we enjoyed a very pleasant social time, including refreshments served by our hostess, Sister Bradt.

We are hoping soon to have Bro. John Suttill and his family, of Providence, Rhode Island, here to live, as he is "trying out" a position in Boston, and now meets with us on Wednesday evenings.

The angel of death has taken from our membership a worthy sister in Sr. Orilla Sheehy. She came east late in the summer, or about August 8, from her daughter Ruth Leeka's home in Custer City, Oklahoma. Being so sadly afflicted with blindness, and feeling that she was of little use to those around her, she prayed to die rather than to get well, and about the 29th of August, at her sister's home in Maine, with her husband at her side, she peacefully dropped off to sleep without a struggle. It was hard to see our Brother Sheehy leaving us for the West to return to his field of labor, and realize that he was bereft of his companion in life. He stopped at the New York and Philadelphia conference in September, when starting west, and was given some words of comfort while there, we are told.

We have some sorely afflicted in our numbers, some afflicted mentally and spiritually because of the inroads that Satan has tried to make, and others physically. One of the latter is our Bro. Earl Newcomb. We are hoping and praying that he may be healed and live to yet enjoy good health.

We were wonderfully strengthened by the manifestation of God's love in sparing to us, and especially to her companion and little ones, Sr. Sarah Fisher, who was as near death's door as could be and not pass through. She is gaining rapidly, and able to superintend her own household now. The twins are doing finely also.

Bro. and Sr. C. H. Rich, formerly of Columbus, Ohio, are settled in Boston or Winter Hill for the winter. Brother Rich is often heard from the pulpit, and Sister Rena is a star teacher of the senior class in Religio.

Wedding bells are ringing, and we will have to tell you later on of the new home added to our branch by Sr. Ada Sanford and Bro. Lloyd Newcomb. We are safe in telling you that the grocer will undoubtedly leave a turkey at their door (if they don't prefer chicken).

Our district convention meets in Boston, November 13 and 14. We are looking forward to a pleasant and profitable session.

Lest we weary you, we will save the rest for next time.

Yours with love for the work,

MARY O. LEWIS.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I contributed to your columns, and there is so much to say, that I believe would be of interest to your readers in the various parts of the world, that I do not know just where to begin. This part of the mission, the Far West District, is one of the landmarks or stamping ground of the Saints from 1835 to 1838. It is stated in the Book of Covenants as part of the "regions round about," and I am glad that the Saints are moving in, in harmony with the command as found in section 57, also 98, paragraph 9. Our esteemed Pres. Joseph Smith stated twenty or twenty-five years ago that as he went overland from Lamoni, Iowa, to Independence, Missouri, with horse and buggy, a distance of about one hundred and seventy-five miles, he expected to see the day when he could leave Lamoni for Independence, and find lodgings with Saints, and have his three meals a day with them, which could not be done at that time, but has been so it could be for the last ten years, and to-day he can stop between meals, and visit with Saints, and preach every night in their own houses of worship. Truly has his prediction been literally fulfilled.

There are in the Far West District about two thousand members, divided into about seventeen branches; some of which are small, and there are about sixteen churches, all paid for but two, and they will be soon. The prospects are very encouraging for the work. In my judgment it would be wise for those who intend to locate in the regions round about, if they are farmers and have means to purchase their home, to rent, for the first year, so that they can become acquainted with the country, and buy to a better advantage. As a whole, northwestern Missouri is a good farming, stock-raising, and fruit country. Plenty of good water, and a healthful country. Crops this year are very spotted, that is owing to the extreme wet weather in the fore part of the season, and the extreme hot and dry in part of July and August. The corn crop was cut short. Oats and wheat were fair, with a good crop of hay. Apples and peaches are a failure in some parts, and a good crop in others. Cherries and small fruit generally good.

The price of land is from twenty to twenty-five dollars higher in some parts, and no better in quality, neither is there any better market, but owing to the immigration of our people principally into some sections, people have taken advantage, and have raised the price of land. In Grundy County good farms can be bought from sixty to seventy-five dollars, while in Dekalb, Clinton, and Platte counties, farms that are no better are selling for one hundred dollars per acre.

Good farm hands are in demand at twenty-five dollars per month for the season, with board and washing. In Saint Joseph, a city of one hundred and twenty-five thousand population, good tradesmen, such as carpenters, machinists, bricklayers, are paid from three to six dollars a day. Common labor one dollar and fifty to two dollars for ten hours. There are several large packing houses in the south part of the city: Swift, Armour, Nelson Morris, and Hammond. They employ a large force of men. They pay from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars per day. Girls are in demand for housework at wages from three to six dollars per week. They are scarce, as there is such a demand for girls in the factories, and they prefer to work there, for they have their evenings and Sundays, and they make from five to ten dollars a week. A man who has a family of girls can do well in this city. The State law will not allow any to work in factories under fourteen years.

Our late district conference, held at Delano Branch, October 23 and 24, four miles north of Cameron, was noted for unity and peace. Not a single jar in the business sessions. Truly we are getting on higher ground, and we ought to. The testimony meeting on Sunday afternoon was a season of rejoicing. In my visit among the various branches, I notice a very earnest desire on the part of many to help this good work along. Still, in some of the branches, I have found able, intelligent minds putting forth all their energies in laboring for this world, and taking no interest in helping to advance this work. They are strong in the faith, but not in the spirit of the work. At Trenton, Grundy County, we have a faithful band of Saints that have been lately organized into a branch, with thirteen charter members. Brn. J. D. Proffit, presiding elder; J. W. Whitehead, priest; and J. N. Kelley, teacher. There are at least twelve good people there who are deeply interested, and ere long will unite with the church. August 8, the Sunday school held their first anniversary, which was a success. Some of the friends assisted in the entertainment, and in supplying well-filled baskets. They met in a beautiful grove, on the banks of Grand River. School at 10 a. m., preaching at 11 and 6 p. m. by the writer. At 2 p. m. the school gave a very edifying entertainment. At the close, we all assembled on the side of the hill in the midst of beautiful flowers, shrubberies, when one of the best artists in Grundy County arranged us all in line, and took the photo which is so highly spoken of. I must not forget to mention that all came to the ground with well-filled baskets. When the contents were placed on a long table, I suggested that a committee be appointed to take note of the contents, as I had not seen such a variety placed on one table before. I thought it would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD, who never have had the privilege to witness what Joseph's land does produce. I give you the list, and when we bear in mind that no one was instructed to bring certain line of eatables, the reader will agree that Moses spoke the truth in the thirty-third chapter of Deuteronomy, when he said, "Blessed of the Lord be Joseph's land, for the precious things brought forth by the sun." Notwithstanding the variety there was, I am safe in saying that it could be largely increased, had the good wives known that a record was going to be made. Some may think as they look over the list, that we were extravagant in feasting as we did. In answer to this, I refer them to what the good Lord said in section 59, paragraphs 4, 5: "Verily I say, that inasmuch as ye do this the fullness of the earth is yours: the beasts of the fields, and the fowls of the air, and that which climbeth upon the trees, and walketh upon the earth; yea, and the herb, and the good things which cometh of the earth, whether for food or for raiment, or for houses or for barns, or for orchards, or for gardens, or for vineyards; yea, all things which cometh of the earth, in the season thereof, are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye, and to gladden the heart, yea, for food and for raiment, for taste and for smell, to strengthen the body, and to enliven the soul. And it pleaseth God that he hath given all these things unto man; for unto this end were they made, to be used with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion: and in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments.

About seventy-five in number, men, women, and children, gathered around the table, and with thankful hearts, partook of the generous supply that the Lord in his goodness had so wisely provided for man. I never did believe that man was to live on bread alone; and I have thought when hearing some say that you must not eat this or that, that they virtually found fault with what the good Lord had created for the benefit of man.

After all had partaken of the noonday meal, the table was spread for supper, and still there was a great deal returned to the homes. Thus closed a day long to be remembered, not only because of the abundance that satisfied the outer man, but because of the good that was accomplished in presenting our faith to some who had never heard it before, and who expressed themselves as highly pleased with the services of the day and with the spirit of sociability that was among this little band of Saints. I predict that Trenton ere long will have a large branch of the church. There is much credit due to Sr. J. D. Proffit for the introduction of the work in Trenton. For twelve long years she was alone, faithfully standing up for the angel's message, and pleading with her companion to unite with her in the good work, which he did a little over a year ago, and to-day he stands highly respected by those within and without the church, and is a leader in the true sense of the term.

The following is the list: Cakes: chocolate, carmel, jelly roll, devil's food, angel's food, brownstone front, cocoanut, white, pink, total 9; pies: peach, apple, custard, cherry, blackberry, cheese, 6; meats: fried chicken, beef, pork, salmon, bologna, 5; vegetables: tomatoes, corn, pickles, cabbage, beets, beans, 6; fruits: oranges, bananas, apples, 3; salads: potato and eggs, slaw, sour and sweet pickle salad, 3; jellies: apple, plum, currant, blackberry, raspberry, 5; bread, butter, cheese, crackers, honey, dried beef sandwiches, chicken dressing, rolls, 8; sliced cucumbers, 1; wheat and corn bread, coffee, milk, and ice water, 5; all varieties, 50.

Your brother,

WILLIAM LEWIS.

SELDEN, KANSAS, October 31, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been very busy in my field all fall except for two weeks when I was called to Iowa by the sickness and death of my dear mother, who passed to her reward September 22, and while we feel heavily the loss yet we mourn not as those who have no hope, as she died firm in the gospel.

From there, agreeable to previous arrangements, I came west in my field to Eustis, Nebraska, where I had the pleasure of meeting some of the brethren of the missionary force and the Saints of that place in the dedication of their new church, October 3, 1909. Dedicatory service was held at 3 p. m., prayer by Elder C. W. Prettyman, sermon by the writer. Previous to the sermon Elder G. W. Johnson, in behalf of the branch of which he is president, in a few well chosen words, presented the deed of the property to the church, which was accepted by Elder C. H. Porter, the representative of the Bishopric for southern Nebraska. Brother Porter's remarks were very appropriate and well chosen and were well received. Appropriate music was rendered by the choir.

The church is a very neat structure, being twenty by forty in size, with belfry. It is painted and seated, has gas lights, and is in a fine location. The lot was donated by a real estate firm and the church built by the sacrifice and efforts of the few Saints at that place. Total cost about one thousand dollars. The first effort to build a church was last spring, and October 1 saw it dedicated and paid for. We think this is very creditable for a small branch.

From Eustis Brother Prettyman and I went to a place north of Riverton, Nebraska, where we held a series of meetings. This being an entirely new opening we continued a week and a half. We were well cared for at this place by Mr. and Sister Frances Peck. Some of the Saints from Franklin drove twelve miles and rendered valuable assistance during these meetings.

While we were there a Methodist preacher, who had been having regular appointments there, made an attack upon the peculiar people who were so foolish as to believe in the laying on of hands for administration to the sick. We took occasion to answer on the next evening to a crowded house. We feel that good was accomplished and that some are near the kingdom.

On account of feeling the need of a few days' rest I am home for a short time, but shall soon be in my field again as I see the need of active work in this field as there are so many demands for preaching.

Yours in gospel bonds,

J. R. SUTTON.

AYLBURTON, LYDNEY, GLOUCESTER, ENGLAND.

Editors Herald: I would not like to be without you, because you contain food for waiting souls, both spiritual and educational. In our district we have had a few baptisms since I wrote you last. In the Gloucester Branch there have been Brother and Sister Miles, Sister Harris and Bro. T. Trapp, and a Sister Dames. There is a lively branch there presided over by Bro. E. J. Trapp; Brother Mackey, teacher; and Brother Miles, deacon. We hope to have the branch fully officered soon.

There have been two baptisms at Lydney, Sister Howard and the writer's son Isaac's girl, Maud. On the 9th, Bro. Watson Trapp was baptized at Nantyglo.

My brother Alf is now president of the Nantyglo Branch, supported by Brn. L. Allen and J. C. Jones. Cardiff has Bro. Ben Green for its president. Bro. Thomas Gould has been its president for years. I trust that both branches will grow the better for the changes. Lydney has been mainly kept together by Brn. T. Griffiths, J. C. Hedford, Charles Kelsey, and Y. Ellis.

We have four branches in the Eastern Wales District now and we hope ere long to have another in the Rhymney Valley. We have several scattered members there and we are going to baptize some others in a week or two. Our Bro. George Cope and wife are going to reunite with us and several of his children, too, with two others who were once of the faith of Brighamism.

The Lord has promised us that his work shall again prosper in this land. We have tried to live worthy of the promise and can now see remarkable indications of its fulfillment. The power of the Spirit has convinced where we have felt helpless; to God be the praise.

We had a reunion of the Western and Eastern districts of Wales at Cardiff on October 2 and 3, which was indeed rich with spiritual experience. Brn. J. W. Rushton, Rees Jenkins, and William Newton, of the missionary staff, were present. We had Bro. J. E. Meredith with us, the president of our elders' quorum, who, with others, gave timely advice and teaching to the ministry. The Spirit's presence was felt throughout and a feast was enjoyed in the social service. Inspiring testimonies were borne, prayer of the right kind was made, and the Spirit spoke to the encouragement of all, denouncing sin and advising purity of life and purpose. The eyes of most were seen to be moistened with that loving Spirit which breaks down every barrier and before whom the stoutest heart exclaims that man is as nothing. One was baptized by Bro. Silas Evans, Brother Pughley, who will become a worker if I mistake not. Another brother who had struggled to overcome the weed and had not prevailed to his satisfaction asked to be blessed by the laying on of hands so as to conquer. I hope he shall thrust in his sickle and reap. I do not think in all Wales we have above one or two who love the weed or strong drink more than their salvation.

The Lord instructed his servants to organize in this land for the prosecuting of his work. Then do not let us get the gold fever, as so many have, or the emigration fever. The Lord wants us to organize ourselves here, to again let the hills and dales resound with the message of restoration. Zion! some say. Yes, but some leave and go to other places besides Zion. Let us even at a sacrifice, brethren, exhaust the opportunities of these islands, and if we fail not to live honest, with a clear conscience, we may move out.

In my fifteen years in the work, I am certain that I have seen cases where the Devil has made it his business to make some of our people dissatisfied with their lot, on purpose to injure the Lord's work. I do not wish to dictate what people shall do, but we should be discreet and unselfish if we would do the Master's bidding. My plea is that small branches can ill afford to lose their members; it works disaster.

I hope the Saints who have gained financially by moving away will remember the Llanelly appeal for the repairs of the old chapel there. I trust that ere long we shall see the financial arrangements more satisfactorily than it has been for the last year or so.

I hope that the time is not far away when the Lord shall designate a bishop for this country. I believe he will direct in this matter. In Wales, too, we feel that an evangelical minister would be of advantage to the children of God; not so much for sentimentality, but for the real purposes of his calling. The patriarch is to travel in branches and districts to and for the blessing of the Saints; to lay on hands to confer spiritual blessing. I presume that we shall not desire our patriarchal blessing from the same standpoint of the spiritualistic palmist. But upon the same basis as we expect to receive by the laying on of hands restoration from sickness, or as confirmation for the receiving of the Spirit.

Yours in the faith of Jesus,
THOMAS JONES.

Editors Herald: Will you please correct error which appears on page 1054 of this week's issue of HERALD in the Pottawattamie District minutes, in the tenth line, where it reads, "J. Asher." This should read Joseph Arber.

Yours in the conflict,
JOSEPH ARBER.

SAN MARCOS, TEXAS, November 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: I write these few lines for publication, asking all the Saints who read this to fast and pray with me on Sunday, November 21, in my behalf, that if it be the Lord's will I may be healed. I have been afflicted over three years with disease of the throat and indigestion. I ask the Saints everywhere to pray for me that I may be healed.

SARAH M. MCWHORTER.

DES MOINES, IOWA, November 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have just closed a series of meetings at a new opening, the most pleasant during my missionary work. I held forth for two weeks and three days and most of the time the large schoolhouse was very well filled and at times it was packed. There were several offers to build a church if I would occupy for the first year. It is a community where those most interested are very able to do as they desire. Was busy visiting all during my stay and many calls unfilled for want of time.

I am, yours very truly,
W. CHRISTY.

Missionary Experiences in London.

Editors Herald: It is a long time ago since we attempted to add to the interest of your columns, but we believe that many of our brethren and sisters in the old country and the new would like to know from time to time of our whereabouts and some little of the progress of this great latter-day work. We take this opportunity, therefore, and will try and tell a little of our experience and trust we shall be more successful than we were on the occasion of our last endeavor, which took place about a year ago and apparently found its way into the wastebasket.

Since my appointment for the present conference year as missionary to the Manchester District I have labored in the capacity of branch president of the Northeast Manchester Branch and also had charge of outdoor work in this city. We have conducted two open-air meetings each week, we believe with fairly good interest. On Saturday evenings the open-air service has been held at Stevenson Square, in the center of the city. Here was the rather unique experience of the Utah Mormons holding forth at one end of the Square and the Reorganized Church at the other. This, while at the first apparently disconcerting, was in the end very much to our advantage, as this was instrumental in showing the public very clearly that Mormonism as represented by the Utah people is very different to the message of the Latter Day Saints as presented by the Reorganization, and finally we had the satisfaction of seeing that this, apparently, was too much for the Utah people, for they have ceased their meetings at that place. Sunday evenings we meet at Mill Street, Bradford. At this place we have held forth for years and our services there have long since been recognized as permanent.

On the invitation of our mission president, and with the consent of branch and district, we came to London to engage in a six-week open air campaign, arriving on August 20. We reached our place of residence, along with Brother and Sister Goulee, about six o'clock in the evening and were at once made welcome and to feel "at home."

Next morning, feeling refreshed in body and mind, and after talking over matters with a view of finding out the best way in which to commence operations and also asking for divine guidance, we accompanied Brother Willie, the only son of Brother and Sister Goulee, who was just finishing his holidays, on a visit to the city which is the center of a population of over seven millions, and enjoyed the sights. We also visited the great Crystal Palace, an erection for the people's enjoyment by the late Prince Consort. We enjoyed the music of two tremendous choirs. The first being a choir of several thousands of children, and the second being the choir of over five thousand, accompanied by a very large orchestra and the big organ. It was an experience which will never be forgotten, to listen to the volume of sound as it swelled and ebbed in such beautiful rhythm. At night we enjoyed the display of fireworks by Brock's. There is no doubt but what this display is the finest that could be witnessed. We enjoyed the various exhibits of the Wholesale Coöperative Society, which were evidence of the popularity and the success of this wonderful movement of modern times.

Sunday morning, the 22d, we went in company of Brother Worth, the district president, and Brother Goullee, the branch priest, to Victoria Park, which is about four miles away from where we were located. After spending a little while in looking around we selected a place to hold a meeting. We started, and very soon had a large and attentive audience; Brother Rushton was the speaker. The talk was very much appreciated by the people and at the close we sold two shillings and eight pence worth of our tracts, "The important message," by Brother Taylor, for one half penny, and "Can belief alone save?" and "The apostasy and the restoration" for one penny each. In the afternoon we went back to the park to hold a meeting, but as a band was playing close to our pitch, we concluded not to compete with it. We noticed several meetings were being held in several adjacent places, the Suffragettes were being addressed by Mrs. Cobden Sanderson. This lady is the daughter of the late Richard Cobden, and her address was a very fine argument, showing the justice of the claim of the women for enfranchisement. Then there was a meeting of the National Secularists Society being addressed by Mr. Cohen, one of the ablest lecturers of this association. A short distance away another large crowd was gathered to listen to a Christian Evidence lecturer. Truly this is a place where almost every idea can be heard. At night we held a meeting in the Saints' chapel in Bow Common Lane. This chapel is in one of the poorest parts of London and faces a Catholic church and schools, and is sandwiched between two public houses. This little church looks forsaken and has a poster pasted up, "This building for sale." The surroundings are bad from every point of view. We had no strangers in, but the Saints heard with pleasure our esteemed mission president.

At 8.30 p. m. we made our way to Burdett Road, a main thoroughfare, and had a very good outdoor meeting, with a fair crowd and good interest. Some promised to attend the meetings held in our chapel. One man whose name I do not remember, belonging to the "Edinburgh Castle," the main institution founded by the late Doctor Barnado, complained that a good opportunity had been missed for speaking of the blood of Jesus. But after a little conversation with Brother Rushton, he left us wishing us "God-speed." Here we gave away some tracts and then made our way home, feeling weary in body, but thankful to God for his goodness to us, in giving power and opportunity to proclaim the gospel message, and also for the good appreciation of the same by the listeners.

We had arranged with the brethren to meet in Hackney on Monday night, at 8 p. m. At the appointed time, along with Brethren Clift, Bishop's agent, and Hockaday, we opened our meeting off the main street, Mare street, and speedily had a good crowd and good interest. Here we sold some tracts and one man wanted to have some talk about the matter presented, so we took his name and address and made an appointment to meet him at his house.

Tuesday night it rained very heavily and so prevented us holding a meeting at Clerkenwell Green as previously arranged.

Wednesday night we went up to Hyde Park. Without doubt this is a "world's arena." Here we heard almost every grade of doctrine possible to be conceived. The first crowd we gleaned had for two hours been discussing the question, "Is there a God?" And after looking around, we felt confident that we had a message from the "Unknown God" to deliver. So we made inquiries of the policeman as to the conditions of open-air meetings in this park, then finding what we thought was a suitable spot, we commenced, and soon had a large crowd, and after nearly two hours' talk we announced we should be there again the next Wednesday evening, all being well.

Open expressions of pleasure were many and cordial and promises to be in attendance were made. One man came to us when we were leaving and said that the talk was just the thing needed there and promised to be there to assist us on the following Wednesday evening. On Thursday we held a service in our hall and preached to the Saints.

Friday we went to Enfield, about ten miles from the city, traveling by tramcar and on foot. The ride and the walk were very fine; as the country around in the autumnal tints was a picture. At this place we met a few Saints and partook of the hospitable kindness of our Sister Judd, sr., who about one year ago lost her husband, William Judd, under very distressing conditions. Although trials and difficulties seemed to be many and severe, yet she was cheerful and conversed freely of her confidence in God. At 7.30 p. m. we left the house for the Green to hold open-air service, accompanied by some of the young brethren and sisters. The place of meeting was away from the town and not very well lighted up.

Here we found it very difficult to attract the people, and it was not easy to talk to them. After meeting we went to the police and made inquiries as to whether we could hold services in the Market Place or on the main streets, but we were told, no. We learned afterwards that this privilege, once enjoyed, had been greatly abused and that, I suppose, was the reason of our refusal.

Saturday we went to the Tower of London, and while there we felt to be in the presence of our forefathers who, daring to teach the truth as they understood it, had been tortured and done to death in the most horrible manner. We felt some little the great price which had been paid for the great liberties we now enjoy and our prayer was, "Lord, help us to use this liberty wisely." Quite close to the tower there is the remarkable bridge, which is the last to span the Thames as it unites with the ocean, and the great leaves are frequently elevated to permit ocean-going steamers to pass to and fro.

For centuries, around this spot human destinies have been centered, and many issues, good and evil, have been evolved in the passage of time. The place is permeated with memories of the incidents which have all been working for the development of the great powers and influences which to-day make our country great in every sense of the word.

From here we went to the Cathedral of Saint Paul's and took part in the very beautiful service which was in progress, passing on our way, the tall column of masonry erected to commemorate the devastating fires which years ago had swept out the old city with its plague-stricken centers and on the ruins of which the foundations of the present metropolis are laid.

Sunday morning, the 29th, once again we were in the Victoria Park and were greeted by a larger crowd and the interest was intense. At the close we had some opposition from the Socialists, who, by the way, are overwhelmingly strong here as in the provinces. However, at the close, we had good encouragement and the hearty applause which the people gave by clapping their hands manifested that we had the warm sympathy of the great majority of the audience. Had we had more tracts upon the "Apostasy," we could have sold them quite readily. We sold close upon two shillings' worth. Also we sold a number of those already named. Some made diligent inquiry where our meeting place was and promised to attend.

On Monday I was called home to attend the funeral of my brother-in-law who had died rather suddenly, and also to attend to some pressing business matters. I returned to London on Wednesday afternoon. Brother Rushton meeting me at the station, we proceeded to Hyde Park, and about 7.45 commenced our service. Here we soon had a big crowd and increased interest; we also had some little opposition. Some seemed to be puzzled and many made diligent inquiries as to who we were. Here we were laboring at some disadvantage, as we are not allowed either to give away or to sell literature of any kind. Hyde Park, from where we are staying, will be about seven miles, so at ten o'clock we started for home. On Thursday night we were at the usual meeting, the hall. On Friday we again started for Enfield and at eight o'clock pitched on the Green. But the success was very small. Our young brother, John Judd, president of the branch at Enfield, talked for awhile with good liberty, but very few gathered around. So in conference with the young brethren, we decided to try once more and if we had no better results to give it up.

Sunday morning, the 5th of September, we again made our way to Victoria Park, and with a larger crowd than ever, and for two hours the people gave splendid attention and seemed to be well pleased with the efforts made, and at the close were eager to purchase our tracts. We sold out on this occasion again. In addition to the other brethren we had our aged brother, Thomas Bradshaw, with us. This old veteran was in his element and once again the fire of youth was kindled in his veins and he longed to be in the fray. We have visited our old brother and his wife at their residence, 48 Repton street, which is historic in the work in London. We soon found that our brother is living in the beautiful thoughts of the past. He told us of many experiences which he, along with others, had often enjoyed, and to them were unmistakable evidences of divine favor and approval. Many of these have passed away and our dear brother is one of the gradually and speedily lessening number of worthies to whom the church is indebted for many years' faithful service in her interests. We were interested to be reminded of the many brethren who had visited London on behalf of the work here and who had been made comfortable under this old roof. Brn. Josiah Ells, Jason W. Briggs, Mark Forscutt, and J. S. Patterson had often enjoyed our brother and sister's hospitality at this very place. Brethren Griffiths, Caffall, H. C. Smith, and Brother Pitt were in affectionate remembrance.

At this park meeting many promised to attend our meeting in the hall, and Brother Rushton was asked to go and talk at one of the Wesleyan chapels. At night we were again at the chapel, and after the service indoors were once again on the street in Burdett Road. We had a good audience, some again promising to come to the meeting the following Thursday, and they fulfilled their promise.

Monday night we made our way to Hackney again and we had another good meeting, this time meeting with good opposition. A young man and his wife got into the ring and bore testimony that they were socialists and vigorously stated their belief that it was a shame so many should be working so hard for small wages out of which it was impossible to purchase the necessary food and clothing for comfort. At the close again we sold some of our literature and the people were very cordial in their invitation to us to stay longer. But it being upon ten o'clock and a journey of about four miles before us, we announced a meeting for the following Monday and left, promising to tell them more of our remedy for the removal of evil from our midst.

On Tuesday night we went to Finsbury Pavement, a spot right in the heart of the city, and according to information we were the first to attempt open-air meetings at this place. We soon found out the reason; it was very noisy owing to enormous amount of traffic. However, we held a meeting and found batches of men and women hurrying home from their work. After talking a little while we arrested the attention of a nice little audience and at the close gave away quite a number of our tracts. But the traffic being so heavy and noisy, we concluded that it was not the best place we could get for holding meetings. However, we were satisfied that some good had been done.

Wednesday we again made our way to Hyde Park, and once again we had a two-hour meeting and still the people cried out, "Go on; we have come here to learn! Tell us more!" But it was nearly ten o'clock, so we told them to go home and put into practice what they had heard, and all being well we should be there next Wednesday. One man came part of the way home with us. He said we ought not to leave London, but should remain here and take a large hall, as the people were so interested they would find the money all right. We felt glad in our hearts for such a good reception and lifted up our hearts in thankfulness to God. Arriving home later than we care to do, having a long way to travel, we found our good Brother and Sister Goullee waiting for us, they having to rise early next morning for business. But when we told them of the result of our meeting they rejoiced with us, and our good sister made herself busy in preparing at so late an hour a really good cup of tea, which tasted exceptionally good under the circumstances.

Thursday night again we held our service in the hall and had eight strangers present, who enjoyed the service. On Friday we went to Enfield, but as we had no better success than had attended our effort on the previous occasion, we decided to give up the outdoor meetings there. We promised to spend a Sunday evening each at Enfield before we left the district.

Sunday, the 14th, in the morning, once again we were in the Victoria Park to conduct our service. We had a big crowd and a little opposition from a secularist. At the close of the meeting he came and shook hands with us and said he had enjoyed the meeting. Brother Rushton went with Brother Clift to his home where a company of about eighteen were present, and after tea a meeting was held with Brother Clift in charge, and our missionary was the preacher. The effort was well received and good done. The writer held forth in the hall. Also after the indoor service another good meeting was held at Burdett Road where Brother Rushton joined us.

On Monday evening we were in Hackney and preached to a good crowd and had a good hearing and plenty of opposition; but at the close the people seemed loath to leave.

On Tuesday we had the pleasure of attending the Houses of Parliament and listening to the legislators of our country. First of all a number of questions were asked of the various government officials and then the house was resolved into a committee of the whole for the purpose of considering the budget. We heard several leading politicians make attacks upon the increased death duties, and also the defense by the ministerialists, including the famous Lloyd George, the present Chancellor of the Exchequer.

From there, accompanied by Brother Goullee, we proceeded to Finsbury Pavement, but decided not to hold another meeting there, thinking that a better place could be secured for open-air work. We therefore made our way to Haggerston and at about 8.30 we commenced a meeting. We met with good success, had a good audience, gave away a number of tracts, and returned home rather late, but conscious of having received and dispensed some little good. Wednesday we again made our way to Hyde Park. We soon found some faces we had seen before, evidently lingering about, waiting until we commenced. At eight o'clock we commenced and we had a great and hearty reception. At the close, amidst applause, a gentleman came to Brother Rushton and asked him to come to Saint James Hall, Piccadilly, and speak for them on the Sunday. But owing to the dates all being engaged and our Sundays already finding us opportunities for three services, the invitation would have to be declined this time.

On Thursday night we held forth in the hall. On Friday we went to Walthamstow to "spy out the land." After making inquiries of the police we decided to hold a meeting the next Friday evening, as it was then too late to commence on that occasion.

Sunday, the 19th, we again made our way to Victoria Park and were soon surrounded by a large crowd of eager listeners to the plan of life and salvation as we tried to expound it, the writer leaving for Enfield to attend the Sunday school and evening meeting, where we were kindly cared for by Bro. and Sr. John Judd. I had a most enjoyable time with the Saints there. At the close of the meeting in Victoria Park a gentleman got onto our platform (two ginger beer boxes), and made a very neat speech, in which he expressed his pleasure at what had been stated and that they had never before heard so able an exposition of the Christian faith and he had pleasure in moving a vote of thanks, and asked all who approved of the same to show by lifting up the hand and clapping. We got quite an ovation. When it was announced that only one other meeting would be held this season, general regret was expressed.

On the following night at Hackney we had good meeting, but mixed with some little interruption from a drunken man, and we felt that the effect was not agreeable to us, nor to the large crowd of listeners. Tuesday night we again held forth at Haggerston to a larger crowd than before. The people here are very poor and apparently not very wise with the little they do get. We saw many men and women in the public houses misusing the little power they had. On the Wednesday we were in Hyde Park, and as we had no stand or platform, we were at a disadvantage; so we took advantage of the opportunity to hire a platform for the night. We mounted our pulpit and soon a larger crowd than ever gathered around. Then some of the evangelical religionists, who had been displeased at the success we had had, and the few that had been listening to them, commenced a service with a larger choir and commenced to sing us down. We stood down at this and moved our stand, but the crowd followed us to a quieter place. At the close of our meeting, when we were making known our church, one of these men, who had been loudly protesting that "he was saved by grace," came upon the scene and began to speak about the work in a very disrespectful manner and to slander the name of Joseph Smith, but we had a very good meeting. On Thursday evening we had a very good meeting in the room. Friday night we commenced operation at Walthamstow and had a large crowd with some very persistent opposition from the socialists, but we are sure good results accrued from our effort. One man following us made particular inquiries where our hall was situated, saying that he would try to attend. On Saturday we went over to Woodgreen, where we spent a very pleasant evening with Sister Howell and family.

Sunday, the 26th, we commenced our last series of meetings for this season. We had a meeting that would delight the Latter Day Saints. A very large crowd listened intently to the message and an exhortation to read the literature we had sold to them seemed to be received as by one man. At the close we could have sold a great many more tracts than we had with us, our total sales that morning amounting to two shillings and eight pence worth. One man, a Hackney guardian, who had been a secularist since he was twenty-one and is now seventy-three, said that he was in harmony with the teachings of Jesus Christ as they had been presented by us in the park. Thus with us you will feel it was hard to bid them, "Good-bye." But we trust to meet some of them again next year if all is well.

At night Brother Rushton was in Enfield, and the writer preached in the hall and also had a meeting at Burdett Road with a fair number listening, we believe, with good effect.

Monday night we were in Hackney and at 8.30 commenced to hold forth, and soon had a large crowd of eager listeners to the method of saving from the evil conditions by which we are surrounded, as taught by Jesus Christ. At the close several questions were asked and satisfactorily answered. On leaving we had the hearty shake of the hand from those who had been frequent attendants at the meetings. So at near ten o'clock we left, telling them we would try to be there next summer.

Tuesday we again had a visit with Brother and Sister Bradshaw and daughter; the brother not being able to get out to meeting, owing to age and infirmity. We found them very cheerful. Our brother took us into the past, bringing to our remembrance the names of many of the old warriors who have passed on to their rest. Among the names mentioned with affection were, Brn. Joseph Dewsnup, C. H. Caton, Thomas Taylor, also Brn. Thomas Hughes, H. Greenwood, and W. Armstrong, besides others of whom our old brother retains happy memories which brighten his declining days. He told us of his first visit to Manchester in Grosvenor street, of which he had some interesting memories, also the conference in Leeds, at which brethren Gillen and Griffiths were present. After bidding "Good-bye" to our brother and sister we made our way to Haggerston. The day had been dull and much rain had fallen, but though the rain still descended very slightly, we held another meeting. Even though it rained nearly all the time we had a fair crowd and some heard the truth with delight.

On Wednesday we again had a wet day, but at night we made our way to Hyde Park and there met our Brother Goulee and commenced meeting about 7.30. Although the night was wet and the ground damp, we soon had a big crowd eagerly listening to the method of salvation taught and lived by Jesus; we had a little seasonable opposition. The meeting closed with many expressions of approval and we left, realizing that we had left many friends behind.

Thus ended a most pleasant and, we hope, profitable campaign. Though we have not any converts to our cause, we have laid a good foundation upon which we trust we may be able to build next year; and we have reached thousands of people with the message of the restored gospel, whom we trust will think over what they have heard.

Yours faithfully,

GEORGE WILLIAM LEGGOTT.

135 CLAYTON LANE, CLAYTON, MANCHESTER, Oct. 3, 1909.

It is always an interesting and agreeable task—to your neighbor—when he tells you how he would run your home or your business if he had a chance. And it is not always a profitless thing to let him do so, either. Many a man has picked up a valuable hint from such gratuitous, outside advice, which he never would have discovered for himself with his face close to his own work.

Miscellaneous Department

Conference Minutes.

KEWANEE.—District convened with the Joy Branch, October 2 and 3, 1909. Organization was effected by choosing William H. Kelley, missionary in charge, O. H. Bailey, sub-missionary in charge, and D. S. Holmes, vice-president of district, to preside; Mary E. Gillin and Laura Dicky, secretaries; Eva Bean, organist; O. H. Bailey, chorister. Statistical reports showed: Kewanee, 142; Millersburg, 125; Tri-City, 104; Joy, 77; Buffalo Prairie, 60; Peoria, 49; Dahinda, 49; Media, 21; no report from Canton. Ministerial reports from Elders William Willetts, Kewanee, and O. E. Sade, Joy. Reunion committee reported that the reunion held at Moline, Illinois, August 13 to 22, was a success both spiritually and financially. Treasurer C. Dykes, of joint committee, submitted report showing a balance of $17.40, which had been equally divided between the two districts and placed in the "missionary fund of each." District treasurer's report showed total receipts, $17.08; total disbursements, $17.08. Bishop's agent C. E. Ball, reported from February 28, 1909, to September 1, 1909: Receipts, $971.15; expenditures, $820.03; balance due church, $151.12. Standing board of auditors reported these accounts to be correct. The following was adopted, "Whereas the Lord has said that tobacco 'is not good for man,' Doctrine and Covenants, section 86: 1, and again in section 119: 3 the Lord declared that 'man shall avoid the use of tobacco,' and whereas the General Conference of April 13, 1892, adopted a resolution confirming the action of the 'twelve' in refusing to appoint missionaries who do not honor the Lord in avoiding the use of tobacco; and called the attention of district and branches to observe the example of the 'twelve'; therefore be it resolved, That no member shall be eligible to hold office in any branch of this (Kewanee) district who is addicted to the use of tobacco." By vote, Brn. Amos Berve and O. H. Bailey were authorized to ordain I. A. Chamberlain, of the Tri-City Branch, to the office of elder. The Saints of Davenport were given the privilege of withdrawing from Tri-City branch and organizing themselves into a separate branch as per petition from Tri-City Branch, while the name of the Tri-City Branch was changed to that of the Twin City Branch. A committee, consisting of Amos Berve, O. E. Sade, and C. E. Ball, was appointed to act in conjunction with a committee from the Eastern Iowa District to make arrangements for holding another reunion. The committee was instructed to effect a permanent organization from members of the two districts for reunion purposes. The following were chosen delegates to General Conference, those present to cast full vote of district and in case of division a majority and minority vote: O. E. Sade, O. H. Bailey, Amos Berve, Kitty Pine, J. L. Terry, George Sackfield, J. F. Adams, G. J. Brookover, Mary E. Gillin, Anna Amos, Elizabeth Cole, Charles M. Gillin, C. E. Ball, W. V. Holmes, J. W. Wight, William H. Kelley, Arthur Berve, Sr. George Sackfield, Sr. J. L. Terry, D. S. Holmes, L. J. Adams, Brother Gainy, Sister Gainy, Alfred Needham, Myra Cady, John Chisnall, Minnie Berve, Charles Davis. The next conference will be held at Millersburg, in June, 1910, at the call of the district presidency. Mary E. Gillin, 115 Clarke avenue, Peoria, Illinois.

Convention Minutes.

FREMONT.—District Sunday school association met with the Thurman school near Thurman, Iowa, October 22, 1909. At 9 a. m. social service in charge of C. W. Forney and Jay Leeka. At 10 joint business session with Superintendent Lorena Leeka in chair. The Religio transacted the business necessary for the district Religio. C. W. Forney then took charge by request of the superintendent. The minutes of the last session were read and approved. Reports from the eight schools of the district were read and accepted. Reports were received from all the district officers. At 11 institute work in charge of Sr. Lorena Leeka. At 2.30 p. m. business concluded. At 3.30 institute work. On account of bad weather the conference gave Saturday evening for the Sunday school program, which was very nicely rendered. Adjourned to meet at same place and just preceding the next conference. Mabel Redfield, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN KANSAS.—District Sunday school convention was held at Fanning, Kansas, September 24, 1909, with superintendent, Sr. Flo McNichols, in chair; Ray Twombly chosen secretary pro tem; Sr. Hedrick was elected organist; H. E. Moler chorister. Sisters Hedrick and Williams were chosen credential committee. Sunday schools reporting: Atchison, Blue Rapids, Fanning, Topeka, and Centralia. Notice was given by Brother Hedrick that at the next convention the matter will be taken up of discontinuing the delegate system. A lesson in Religio normal work closed the afternoon session. At 8 p. m. several profitable subjects were discussed and a paper by Sister Hedrick, subject, "The power of example," was read. Solos by Sister Hodson and Dittmore were rendered. The district journal was read by its editor, Sister Miller. All felt amply repaid for their attendance at the convention. Ray Twombly.

LITTLE SIOUX.—Sunday school convention was held at Bigler's Grove, near Woodbine, Iowa, on October 7, and an especially profitable time was enjoyed. A good joint prayer service was held Thursday evening. For Friday the program had been arranged as a discussion of the standard of excellence, as outlined in the July Exponent, and many new points were brought out. It was found that the Little Sioux District lacks only a part of one point of being a second grade district, but when the convention closed, each went to his home determined that the remaining two points should be installed in our school before another convention. It was adjourned to meet at Logan, Iowa, February 3 and 4, 1910. Esta Stuart, secretary, pro tem.

SOUTHERN MICHIGAN AND NORTHERN INDIANA.—Schools met in convention at Galien, Michigan, October 8, with assistant superintendent in chair. A change of officers was made throughout, only retaining D. B. Teeters, of Ray, Indiana, as treasurer. Starr Corless was elected superintendent, Ralph McElheny, assistant superintendent, and Sr. J. W. McKnight, secretary. Eight schools were reported: Clear Lake, Galien, Hartford, Grant, Lansing, Belding, Coldwater, and Blissfield. A vote was taken asking each school to take a collection a Sunday or two previous to each convention, the same to be sent to Treasurer D. B. Teeters, to be used for district expenses. It is expected the coming year some work will be done in the district by the superintendent. Let us be workers together for the Master. Mrs. J. W. McKnight.

EASTERN IOWA.—District association convened at Muscatine, Iowa, September 24, 1909, the superintendent, Elder C. G. Dykes, in the chair. The district secretary being absent, Elder James McKiernan acted as secretary pro tem. Seven schools reported: Clinton, Muscatine, Baldwin, Fulton, Marion, Waterloo, and Green Valley. Convention adjourned to meet at the same place and one day previous to next district conference. Cora E. Weir, secretary.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—District Religio and Sunday school associations met in convention at McGregor, October 8, 1909. The following officers were chosen: Religio, W. F. Smith, president; James Mead, vice-president; William Völz, treasurer; Emma Völz, librarian; Ada Webb, superintendent of gospel literature; James Mead, home class superintendent. Sunday school: James Mead, superintendent; Richard Weaver, assistant superintendent; Emma Whitford, secretary; Mrs. F. C. Stevens, treasurer; Cora Anderson, librarian; James Mead, home class superintendent. The following resolutions were adopted: To rescind the taking of collections in schools the first Sunday in month and return to rule in Book of Rules; each school is authorized to purchase report blanks and send in quarterly reports to district secretary. Will all Sunday school officers kindly take note of the latter motion and have secretaries purchase blanks and report promptly. Next quarter ends December 31. Emma Whitford, secretary, 123 Commonwealth avenue, Detroit, Michigan.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of Portland District: I would say my address is Vancouver, Washington. Anyone having tithes or offerings to spare can send it to the above address and I will promptly receipt for the same.

Some have done well since our last conference, others we have not heard from. Is it because you do not understand the law of tithing? Or do you consider you have nothing to pay? When you come to this conclusion, consider well your surroundings. The Lord says, "The world is mine and the fullness thereof." What did we have when we came into this world? Do we not possess something that has been placed to our trust? Do I hear someone say, I am poor; I have debts to meet; soon as they are satisfied I am going to commence paying my tithing. Sad mistake! I have heard others say, "It takes all I can make to keep up expenses; I am always behind." Again are we justified in paying fifty cents tithing when we have a good bank account and owe the Lord three or four hundred dollars?

These are some of the conditions that exist in the church that are tying the hands of our Bishop. What does the Lord say? "It is a day of sacrifice and a day of the tithing of my people." (Doctrine and Covenants.) Well I remember the first tithing we paid. We were in the condition of the first named. We could not see where we could spare one dollar, but after talking the matter over with my companion we decided we would want five hundred dollars to be set out on the road. So we owed the Lord fifty dollars. We resolved to meet this first. We raised twenty-five dollars. With it I sent my note to E. L. Kelley for six months bearing seven per cent interest, and at the end of this time I paid the note, and I want to say I have always considered it as good a move as I ever made.

To the one that never has anything and is getting good wages for his services, Can you not discern a leakage somewhere? Compare your store bill with the unnecessary things you have bought; the times you have attended the theater or have gone pleasure riding. Remember we are stewards here and will be held accountable for how we use our earnings. To those that have and won't pay we can only refer them to Doctrine and Covenants 42:16, latter clause.

Now, brethren and sisters, of whatever condition, where we have been in error, let us wake up. The required one tenth of whatever we have over and above our living, providing our living has not been extravagant. If we spend our means for unnecessary things we will be held accountable for it.

Another mistake is made by waiting to get the full amount to send at once. Send what you have to spare. It is the small amounts from each one that keep the wheel moving. I received a letter from a sister a short time ago accompanied with two dollars for tithing which she had earned by picking hops. She stated they were living in a woodshed this winter till they could get something better. How many realize that this is a day of sacrifice? She is preparing to reap the good things of eternity.

In conclusion I want to say I am establishing a permanent record of finance for the district, and I hope to have every member's name on it before the coming conference for some amount. Let us surprise our worthy Bishop with a few dollars to help meet the expenses of the coming conference. Remember it takes money to send the elders out to their fields of labor.

Yours in bonds,
L. STOVER, Bishop's Agent.

Notice of Appointment.

Bro. J. D. Curtiss, of the Seventy, who has been relieved from missionary work the past few years on his own volition, has now reëntered and will labor in Colorado.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 13, 1909.

Died.

KNIGHT.—Myron Earl, darling son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Knight, and grandchild of Sr. H. F. Pratt, of Shenandoah, Iowa. Born August 1, 1909; died October 29, 1909. Loving hands did all that could be done for the little one until God relieved him and called him home. Funeral services at the home three miles east of Shenandoah, conducted by Joseph Arber. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

SHAEFFER.—Sr. Mary Shaeffer was born March 17, 1825, at Princeton, Pennsylvania. She was united in marriage to Conrad Shaeffer in 1845. To this union ten children were born, two sons and eight daughters. She was baptized at Inland, Michigan, July 21, 1907, by Alvin Ellis, and died at the home of her daughter, Sr. Flora Crawford, Springfield, Oregon, aged 84 years, 7 months, 5 days. Her husband, one son, and two daughters preceded her in death. She was a faithful Christian and respected by all who knew her. Funeral services conducted by Elder E. Keeler. Interment in Laurel Hill Cemetery at Springfield, Oregon.

For a Nobler Race of Men.

The November number of The Twentieth Century Magazine contains a deeply thoughtful paper from the pen of Prof. Rockwell D. Hunt, Ph. D., of the University of Southern California, on "Eugenics," in which the author makes an earnest appeal for better generation. One of the most hopeful signs of the day is this awakening on the part of leading educators to the importance of considering fundamental causes rather than attempting to cure evils that are the result of carelessness, indifference, and criminal neglect.

For persons interested in the present civic awakening, the news departments of this magazine will prove invaluable, as here from month to month is given briefly the most vital news of the day concerning Public Ownership, Direct Legislation, Municipal Advance, Coöperation, and Woman's Progress.

The Decreasing Demand for Drugs.

The use of drugs in the treatment of disease is declining at the present time at a very rapid rate. Patent medicines particularly are being relegated to the background. Their general consumption will soon be a thing of the past. I hardly think that any of the patent medicine manufacturers will be able to boast in the future, as they have in the past of spending a million dollars for advertising each year. To be sure, there are many who will still continue to use patent medicines. Faith in the mysterious medical route to health has become so ingrained into them that it will disappear only when they pass into the other world. Those who are open to reason, however; who are capable of doing a little thinking on their own account, are certain to ultimately refuse to countenance the claims of those who look upon medicine as a remedy for all complaints.

Drugs have had their day. Their use will decline with marvelous rapidity within the next few years. The drugging doctor will soon be regarded as a factor in the ignorance and superstition of the past and a true science of healing will spring into robust life, and in consequence the span of human life will be marvelously lengthened. There is no excuse for dying of acute disease. Death should not come until the body is actually worn out. When death comes it might reasonably be termed preventable, in almost every case, and it is the inefficiency of our present methods of healing which makes its occurrence possible.—Bernarr Macfadden in November Physical Culture.

The Value of Charcoal.

Charcoal has great value as an antiseptic. Smoked ham will keep for years packed in charcoal. A few lumps of it in a cistern will keep the water pure and sweet. A quantity of it in a cellar will absorb the odors, and a small lump boiled with cabbage or onions will do the same. Butter put into small vessels completely surrounded with charcoal will keep sweet a long time. A paste of powdered charcoal and honey makes a good dentrifice. It not only cleans the teeth, but disinfects them and sweetens the breath. Taken inwardly it is good for the digestion and relieves constipation.—Home Department, November National Magazine.

A Study in American Freemasonry.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a Mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

NUMBER 47

Editorial

PAUL, YOU WERE RIGHT.

In his day Paul made a remarkable prediction concerning our day. He said that in the last days perilous times should come; that men should be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, unthankful, unholy, without natural affections, incontinent, fierce—

But stop! Surely Paul has erred on one point. Men shall be fierce? Why, this is the age when women faint at the sight of blood! Men groan inwardly when they read of cruel customs still in practice in Mexico or the Congo region. When Messina is shaken the whole world sends contributions of money, food, and clothing, to help the poor survivors. This is the age of anæsthetics, hospitals, Red Cross societies. This is the age of tender hearted, sentimental, even squeamish humanity. Nothing disagreeable must be talked of at the breakfast table, and the head of the family turns pale at the thought of decapitating a chicken. Paul, you are wrong!

But hold, what is this? A negro in Cairo, Illinois, commits a terrible crime. He is arrested and so comes under the protection of the State, and according to all of our carefully cherished traditions is entitled to a fair trial, and if guilty to a decent execution. But immediately these talcum powdered gentlemen of the twentieth century turn out with shotguns and pitchforks and hunt the poor negro down. The sheriff can find no safe place in which to lodge his captive anywhere in the surrounding country. Howling mobs debauch from every town toward which he heads. At last the two weary fugitives, the sheriff (representing the law) and his supposed-to-be-innocent-until-proven-guilty prisoner are captured. The negro is dragged to the most public place in the city while thousands of the "best citizens" howl for his blood. Most surprising spectacle of all, these tender-hearted, dainty women of modern times seize a rope that has been thrown over the crossarm of a telephone pole and drag the strangling negro into the air while other women hold their little children up that they may watch his struggles.

After the negro has been hanged and shot to death in about equal proportions the mob takes the body and cuts the heart out to pass around among the spectators. The remains are dragged several blocks to be burned at the scene of the crime. When the fire dies down spectators rake the ashes for souvenirs,—toes, fingers, or vertebrae.

Paul, you were right.

This story, now a week old and out of date as news goes, was called to our mind two days ago by a peculiar coincident. While taking an old picture from its frame the writer found an old fragment of newspaper that had for years reposed at the back of the picture. It was a fragment of a newspaper published in Burlington, Iowa, during the autumn of 1873. Instantly our eyes were attracted by this item:

Thirty murders have been committed in Cairo, Illinois, within ten years, without one adequate punishment. Finally, the people there have decided to quit testaments and moral suasion, and try a little hanging. The first experiment was made last Friday.

This illustrates the folly of the thought that violence and crime will cure violence and crime. Thirty-six years ago the people of Cairo began their experiment in mob violence, acting on the theory that a terrible and immediate punishment would frighten and deter other criminals. The experiment is still being carried on with an increased brutality that is frightful. To-day, instead of producing thirty murderers in ten years, Cairo produces thousands in one night, for the men and women who hanged the negro were murderers.

True, the negro's crime was a terrible one, the worst that can be imagined, one that invariably stirs every white community into a tumult of rage. Yet the negro is not the only one to blame in this case, as in others. The negro is not here on his own volition. He came at our earnest and forceful solicitation. He had no choice. We took him as a savage and kept him a long time in enforced ignorance and slavery. Then we suddenly turned him free and expected him to spring at once to a level of civilization that in the regular course of events could only be reached after hundreds of years of evolution.

We instilled into his head the idea that the negro is socially and in every way the equal of the white man; and later with clubs and torches attempted to impress him with the fact that there is an impassable wall between a negro man and a white woman.

We opened to him the schoolhouse and the saloon. We gave him text-books, novels, stand-up collars, dude clothes, whisky, morphine, cigarettes, cocaine. For one Booker T. Washington, who is wise enough and strong enough to select the good and reject the bad that our complex modern civilization offers, there are a dozen of his race who are weak, ignorant, and confused; and we ruin them in body and mind. During the days of slavery no negro ever assaulted a white woman. But now we reap the fruits of our own sowing and then go stark, staring mad. We lapse back into the condition of savagery in which we found our victim, the negro, at the start, and apparently know no method by which to deal with the situation save that of blind, brute force.

This incident with others of like nature that happen from time to time impress us with the thought that Paul was right. He either understood the tendency of modern environment better than some do, or else he had a better understanding of human nature. It only takes a certain combination of circumstances to cause the modern veneer of civilization and Christianity to fall away and many men and women are discovered to be as cruel, fierce, bloodthirsty, and unreasoning as men ever were at any stage of their development.

To close our editorial at this juncture might give a wrong impression. The age is not by any means wholly bad. The same community (or one very similar) that produces the Cairo mob produces the heroes of the terrible mine disaster at Cherry, Illinois, men who displayed a very high type of generous bravery. Paul at the time saw only the dark side of life in the last days,—there is a brighter side.

Had Paul been able to see the events recently happening in the mine bearing his own name (the Saint Paul Mine) he might have written another verse something like this: "In the last days perilous times shall come. There shall be many degenerates, but, thank God, there shall be some true women and some brave men who will give their lives for their fellow-laborers." E. A. S.

HERALD OFFICE ANNOUNCEMENT.

To all who desire to subscribe for Autumn Leaves for the year 1910 and will send their remittance now, the November and December numbers for this year will be sent them free of charge. The Autumn Leaves for the next year will be as good or better than in past years. Many important articles are in course of preparation that will make Autumn Leaves very interesting. It is good for both the young and the old. Subscription price is $1.00 per year and should be sent to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

When this HERALD reaches you the Autobiography of Bishop R. C. Evans will be upon the press at the Herald Office. This book has been carefully revised and brought down to date and will be put up in a neat cloth binding at the popular price of 75 cents. Elder Evans had a large sale for his book in Canada and has donated the sale of the book in the United States to the Industrial Department of Graceland College. The profits on the book will be used to develop the possibilities of offering employment to young people of limited means while they are attending college.

It is expected that the book will be ready to mail before Christmas time and orders can be sent now to the Herald Publishing House and they will be filled as soon as the book is ready for sale.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The next number of SAINTS' HERALD HISTORICAL SERIES will be entitled, "The church in Jackson County, Missouri," by President Frederick M. Smith. It deals with the history of the church in Missouri during the early thirties and has one chapter devoted to "the return" of the church to Missouri and its present status.

All the Saints are interested in the various church institutions, Graceland College, the Saints' Home, Herald Publishing House, the Sanitarium. Not all of the Saints, however, have had the privilege of seeing these buildings, but the next best thing is to see the series of three-color pictures now running in Autumn Leaves. These frontispieces are attracting very favorable comment among patrons of Autumn Leaves. The college and Saints' Home have appeared in the October and November numbers, and the Liberty Home is to appear in the December number. Others are to follow. No one who can spare one dollar should be without this splendid magazine.

We notice the receipt of a copy of the Fox River Star, Batavia, Illinois, in which is a lengthy account of the removal from Batavia of Bro. J. B. Rodger, formerly of Lamoni. The brother has been connected with the Challenge Company of that city for many years and now leaves to take up work in Kansas City. It is a source of much satisfaction to know that Saints like Brother Rodger are making enviable reputations among the people of the world. There is one paragraph of this report that we wish to reproduce, and it is in the way of advice from the brother himself in making a speech after being presented with a gold watch: "Now, I want to say something to you boys. I am only a boy myself, to be sure, but at this time I can say, though nearly fifty years of age, I have never in my life smoked a cigar, taken a chew of tobacco or snuff, and have never taken a drink of liquor. Not because I had no chance, for I started out very young to work my way up, from herding cattle on the frontiers to the position you see me in to-day. I do not say this to boast, but hope you will do as I have done—stick to what you believe to be right and you will never regret it.”

We have been flooded with clippings from generous brethren in the East and elsewhere concerning the struggle within the ranks of the Christian Scientists. We have thought best to await the outcome and then give HERALD readers the benefit of a brief review or summing up of the matter. Latter Day Saints need not be disturbed by what comes out in the wash when faddists fall out. We have already noted a number of editorials concerning Mrs. Stetson and her suspension from the Church of Christ, Scientist, and the judgment of the journalists may be inferred from such headings as, “The propaganda of witchcraft,” and “The new diabolism,” etc. We will have something in our next issue in regard to the subject.

The following from the Indianapolis Star in regard to tithing will be of interest to our readers:

“A return to the ancient tithing system entailing the giving of one tenth to God is advocated by the Rev. Phillip W. Corya, who spoke by invitation Sunday night at Broadway M. E. Church. His address is entitled, “Biblical financial methods.” It will be delivered in a number of the churches of the city by the Rev. Mr. Corya, who is pastor of the Mapleton M. E. Church. Tithing, it is held, will solve the financial problems of the church and put the church fair and the oyster supper on the shelf. A nucleus for the movement exists in tithing bands already organized in the Methodist churches of the city. Some are already, it is declared, paying one tenth to God.

“‘All religion is a matter of giving,’ said the Rev. Mr. Corya. ‘It is fundamental in the Bible, though the methods are not so definitely stated. Types of giving may be grouped under four different heads. First is the go-as-you-please method, which means that people will take a collection for this or that rather than be bothered about it. This method soon works that in the end people would rather be bothered than take the collection. The second is giving enough to maintain one’s respectability. Under this method, when one’s financial or social business status advances the incentive to give in proportion drops away. Third, is the method of giving upon impulse as much as you can. This method is sure to be followed by the corresponding reflex when nothing is given. The fourth method is the laying by of something in order that we may give.’

“There is abundant scriptural evidence, according to the Rev. Mr. Corya, that God instituted tithing to finance the evangelization of the world.

“‘It is, of course, possible,’ he said, ‘that God could overturn a mountain, and unearth enough gold to start the gospel to the ends of the earth, but it has been ordained that men are to be reclaimed through the efforts of men. There is overwhelming evidence that tithing was recognized as an institution before the time of the Old Testament history. By giving one tenth is meant, it is also very apparent, one tenth of the net income, or in the case of the business man, one tenth of the net profits.’

“To the objectors, he said, the tithe was a debt to God to be acknowledged as any other debt.

“‘A man can not owe God and expect to prosper. A man who does not pay his debts we regard as a rascal. How, then, shall we regard a man who acknowledges his earthly obligations, but slights the one that he has in God. What God gave, God can take away. To those who tithe blessings flow in abundance. Not for a moment, however, should it be inferred that blessings can be bought. The sense of the obligation discharged will give the added spiritual strength and earning power. God’s work can only go on as men meet their obligations to the church, as men finance the movement. It is the common investment for the uplift of all.’”

“Larger than Westminster, larger even than Saint Paul’s, is the Church of Santo Domingo. This great edifice, renowned in many countries, is known not only for its size, but for the beauty and magnificence of its decorations and the many historic events entwined in its history. The church was built on consecrated ground, having been the site of the martyrdom of two Dominican priests, who were killed by Indians in the time of Cortez.

“By 1550 there were a number of Dominican friars in Oaxaca, and the question of erecting a church and convent for the use of the order was agitated. The exact date of the beginning is not known, but it must have been shortly after the middle of the sixteenth century they began the work with a few laborers, who gave their services, and every member of the order worked hard collecting more funds. A petition was sent to the King of Spain for assistance, to which he responded generously. From time to time the King sent other contributions, and there was no halt in the work.

“Saint Paul’s Cathedral in London measures 510 feet by 250 feet and cost $3,741,770, or 7,497,540 pesos, or some 5,000,000 pesos less than Santo Domingo. Some idea of the size of the structure can be obtained when it is considered that four buildings the size of Westminster Abbey could be set on the ground covered by the Dominican temple. At the present time, however, only a small part of the church is used for worship, the other portions having been converted into barracks by the Government.

"Owing to the great height and thickness of the walls of the church, it has been used for a fort on any and every occasion when necessary. No wars, however, marred the serenity of the early Dominican, and each year saw the church increasing in wealth. The library was ranked among the greatest in the republic. The interior was decorated in many places with pure gold."

Sunday speakers at Lamoni were Elders J. R. Lambert, and S. A. Burgess, of Saint Louis.

THE warfare of the patriot is of many kinds; the evils that threaten our land can not all be overcome by physical force or by the ballot. There is a lesson to be learned from the members of that Young Men's Christian Association who arranged to cash the checks of railway men in their city that these might be kept from applying at saloons; from the Christian Citizenship Committee of the Christian Endeavor Society that fitted up a free reading room near a saloon, and from the missionary society which supplied free ice water to teamsters and pedestrians during the stifling days of August. There is room for much consecrated ingenuity if one would show himself a true patriot. —Forward.

Only One Day at a Time.

"Day by day the manna fell,
O to learn this lesson well;
Day by day with strength supplied
By the life of him who died."

One day, when dark storm clouds hung o'er me,
And trouble loomed fearful and high;
No shelter nor refuge before me,
My spirit seemed ready to die;
The arch tempter whispered in malice,
While darts of suggestion he hurled,—
"See, even the church doth not need thee, Go back and find peace in the world."

"Shall I ever,"—I pondered in sorrow,
Be able to hold to the end
The hope that on some bright to-morrow,
I'll see my Redeemer and Friend?
For my trials and my weaknesses tell me
Amidst ever-increasing dismay,
'Tis a vain and chimerical fancy
To think you'll see Zion's glad day.

"Shall I ever endure the temptations,
The mocking revilings and scorn,
When e'en now my heart and flesh fail me,
And my soul with the conflict is torn?"
Then in a low, soft gentle whisper,
A voice spoke as lowly and sweet,
"My servant," it said, "In thy weakness
My strength is made perfect and meet.

"For if thou dost moment by moment
And hourly thy purpose renew,
Will not day by day dawn for thee brighter?
My Spirit shall help thee quite through."

My travel-worn soul was refreshed,—
Like earth plants revived by the dew,
I awoke with this trembling petition,
"Lord, seal thou thy goodness anew;
"O help me, in storm and in sunshine,
To live to thee just but this day;
Be thou my strong friend and protector
Whilst here in the valley I stay:

Till at last I may humbly behold thee
'Mid glittering cohorts who throng
Within those pearl gates that enfold thee,
And hymn to thy praise this new song.
"Unto Him who hath loved and redeemed us,
And washed in His own precious blood,
From all our transgressions who healed us,
Our Maker, our Savior, and God.

Lord, seal thou thy goodness anew,
Oh, help me in storm and in sunshine,
To live to thee, just but this day;
Be thou my strong friend and protector
Whilst here in the valley I stay.
Till at last I may humbly behold thee,
'Mid glittering cohorts who throng
Within those pearl gates that enfold thee,
And hymn to thy praise this new song.

!!Unto Him who hath loved and redeemed us,
And washed in His own precious blood,
From all our transgressions, who healed us—
Our Maker, our Savior, our God.
For him in the glorious perfection
Of beauty in Zion to see,
Is worth all the storms and temptations
Which earthlife has heaped upon me.

To hear his blessed Spirit exalted,
Beyond every power below,—
To join in the peons of rapture
Which angels and archangels know,—
Is worth the hard warfare and conflict
With sin and temptation and woe.
'Tis worth all the struggle to serve him,
The tempest, the battle, the cross,—
The daily besetments that hinder,
The gain that we counted but loss.

These, these, we will lay down before him,
And, casting our crowns at his feet,
We'll for ever and ever adore him,
In his glorious likeness complete;
O then, with what joy we shall conquer,
The millions in Satans array,
Because our beloved Lord and our Leader,
Bestow on us "strength as our day."

The Straight Road

HOW MAY WE DISTINGUISH THE PRIEST OR MINISTER SENT OF GOD FROM THE PRIEST OR MINISTER OF THE WORLD?

ELDER L. E. HILLS.

In the New Testament scriptures we read of two classes of priests or ministers: those sent of God who have been given the right to use the names, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, who can bind in heaven what they bind on earth; the other class whom the people appoint unto themselves, who turn away their ears from the truth:

When Jesus was questioned as to his authority by the chief priests, scribes, and elders, he asked them to answer as to John's authority. He said, "The baptism of John, was it from heaven, or of men? Answer me."—Mark 11: 27-33.

To know the priest or minister sent of God, is to know the baptism from heaven, essential to salvation. To know the priest or minister of the world, not sent of God, is to know the baptism of men,—nonessential. The baptism sent of God was for the remission of sins. John was a man sent of God (John 1: 6), and he was baptizing for the remission of sins. (Mark 1: 4; Luke 3: 3.) It is in Matthew 3: 7 we are given to understand that to be baptized by John was to flee from the wrath to come.

Jesus authorized baptism to be taught for the remission of sins. He told Paul to go into the city and it shall be told thee what thou must do." (Acts 9: 6-17.) And Ananias, sent by the Savior, said to

Paul, "And now why tarriest thou? Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins."—Acts 22: 16.

After Jesus appeared to the eleven and commanded them to go into all the world and preach the gospel, saying, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," we find them on the day of Pentecost all teaching baptism for the remission of sins. (Mark 16: 14-17; Acts 2: 37, 38.)

I will now invite your attention to what is said in the New Testament of the two classes of priests or ministers:

The Priest or Minister sent of God.

Romans 10: 15: "And how shall they preach except they be sent?"

John 3: 34: "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God; for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."

Matthew 18: 18: "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven.

Men sent of God will baptize with the baptism from heaven, for the remission of sins, essential to salvation.

The Priest or Minister of the world.

2 Timothy 4: 3, 4: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

Jesus said, "If the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch."—Matthew 15: 14.

Men not sent of God, baptize with the baptism of men, only, and their baptism is nonessential.

Jesus said, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name [the name of Jesus], saying I am Christ, [teaching that Jesus is the Christ,] and shall deceive many."—Matthew 24: 4, 5.

Paul wrote to the Ephesians 5: 6: "Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience." Vain words! Jesus said: "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men."—Matthew 15: 9.

If when our names are inscribed on a church record they are not duplicated on the pages of the book of life, wherein are we benefited? All the virtue we can discover in church fellowship is associated with the thought that heaven has assumed obligations on the one hand, acknowledging her ministry on the other; if the professed agent has not been sent of God, and can not bind in heaven, he well deserves the name of impostor.

Sincerity and an earnest desire to be a minister for Christ, a college or theological education, the sanction of a church, a good name, all of these qualifications never gave a man authority to preach and officiate in the ordinances of the gospel in the name of Christ so that he could bind in heaven that which he bound on earth.

Again I call attention to the words of Christ in Matthew 7: 21: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

"For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God," and will teach mankind obedience thereto.

There are many systems of religious philosophy taught in our day by as many different classes of priests or ministers, all claiming to teach the words of God. Are they all teaching the doctrine of Christ? The doctrine of Christ is the word of God. (John 7: 16.)

How then can we tell the priests or ministers sent of God from the priests or ministers of the world?

I wish to state here, that in all governments or organizations authority to represent is given to man only when he has been duly elected, appointed, or confirmed and ordained to some office. I wish to show that this is true of the government of God.

In all ages when and where the law of God has been taught to mankind with authority to officiate in his name, only those called of God and ordained to the priest's office have thus been honored. Hebrews 5: 4: "And no man taketh this honor [office] unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron."

The Lord told Moses to take Aaron and sanctify him; "That he may minister unto me in the priest's office." (Exodus 40: 13.) And that no man can take the office unto himself we see in the case of King Uzziah (2 Chronicles 26: 16). He transgressed against the Lord his God, he went into the temple of the Lord to minister in the priest's office, and behold he was leprous, because the Lord had smitten him.

Two hundred and fifty princes, men of renown, gathered against Moses and Aaron, taking censors to burn incense, and Moses said to them, "Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi, seek ye the priesthood also? And there came a fire from the Lord and consumed them."

There were two orders of priests, the Melchisedec (the greater) and the Aaronic (the lesser). Under one or both of these priesthoods the government of God has been administered whenever and wherever he has had a people on this earth since Abel's time, each priesthood having its separate and specific duties assigned.

"Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest;" but was called of God an high priest after the order of Melchisedec. (Hebrews 5: 5-10.) The Savior called to the priest's office, and he called whom he would and ordained twelve that he might send them forth to preach. (Mark 3: 13-15.) To ordain means (Webster's Dictionary) to establish in some office or order, to invest with ministerial or sacerdotal power and authority. It is clear in Mark 3: 14, that authority to preach was given to the twelve by ordination, but to what office were they ordained? Hebrews 3: 1: "Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the apostle and high priest of our profession Christ Jesus." This is plain, indeed, they were partakers of the heavenly calling, the priesthood or priest's office, but Peter makes it still plainer. 1 Peter 2: 5: "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." Paul says in 1 Timothy 2: 7: "Whereunto I am ordained a preacher [priest] and an apostle," etc.

The Melchisedec and Aaronic priesthoods, continued in the church of Jesus Christ, the kingdom of God, until the church went into the wilderness, as in Revelation 12. On page 411 of Eusebius' Ecclesiastical History, it says there was an innumerable company of priests of the lower order (order of Aaron), and this three hundred years after Christ.

Men called of God and ordained to the priest's office were assigned to the different branches of the work. Romans 12: 4: "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office."

Exodus 19: 5, 6: "Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me above all people: For the earth is mine, and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation."

And in the church or kingdom of Christ it is the same.

1 Peter 2: 9: "But ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people."

Psalms 132: 13, 16: "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; . . . I will clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud for joy."

Revelation 20: 6: "They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." The kingdom of God is a kingdom of priests in all ages. Now how can we tell the priest or minister sent of God from the priest or minister of the world?

First, without revelation from God no man can be called and sent of God. Second, men called of God as was Aaron will be called to the priest's office. Third, they must hold either the Melchisedec or Aaronic priesthood. Fourth, they must speak the words of God, the doctrine of Christ, nothing more, nothing less. (2 John 9, 10.)

How are men called of God? As in Acts 13: 2; 1 Timothy 4: 14.

How were they placed in the priest's office? They were ordained as in Acts 13: 3; Numbers 27: 22, 23; Deuteronomy 34: 9.

WHAT IS MAN?

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him?"—Psalm 8: 4. To whom shall we go for an answer to this ever arising question? Can the aged man from the abundance of his experience and the extent of his observation tell us? Can the man of science, as a result of his research, inform us from whence man is? Can he solve for us the mystery of life? Can he explain the power by which we are endowed with intelligence, the ability to love and to hate, experience pleasure and pain and the various sensations and emotions incident to life?

Wherever man is found in any stage of development from the dark-skinned, low-browed savage of the forest to the most cultured and intellectual in civilized lands, this question is a living issue. And so far as man unaided by divine insight is concerned, the barbarian is as near to the correct solution as is the scientific. We will, therefore, pass by the varied and unreliable opinions of men and seek by an examination of divine revelation (the only safe and altogether trustworthy place of information) to find a satisfactory solution of the question. Paul is indorsed as God's witness (Acts 22: 15). Let us see what he thinks man is. Acts 17: 28, 29: "We are also his (God's) offspring." Also Hebrews 12: 9:

Furthermore, we have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us, and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live?

Here we have the testimony that our earthly fathers are fathers of the flesh only, and that we have a heavenly Father who is the father of our spirits, hence that which is of the earthly parents is subject to man's examination and analysis and is found to consist of carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, sulphur, phosphorus, iron, and lime,—all earthly elements; but none of them have any of the sensibilities of life, nor is it possible for man to so combine them as to endow them with such. The spirit can not be analyzed by man, because it is the offspring of God and is in the likeness of its father. (See Genesis 1: 26.) Jesus says in John 4: 24: "God is a spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

As the universe is upheld by the almighty power of God, so our lives depend upon the operation of the spirit within.

The spirit of man will sustain his infirmity.—Proverbs 18: 14.

For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him.—1 Corinthians 2: 11.

The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God.—Romans 8: 16.

But there is a spirit in man: and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding.—Job 32: 8.

For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also.—James 2: 26.

From the foregoing quotations we learn that the presence of the spirit within the body enables man to sustain his infirmities and gives him understanding, while without the spirit he would not know "the things of a man,"—would be dead. But we are sometimes told that the spirit of man is the breath, and the argument is offered that God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." "The spirit of man is in his nostrils," etc. Now to those who hold to this theory let me kindly suggest that they turn to the concordance in the back of their Bibles, and find the references to the word spirit, and read, substituting the word breath for spirit, (which would do no violence to the text if spirit means breath,) and see if they are greatly edified by such texts as the following:

"His breath was troubled."

"Hardened his breath."

"A woman of a sorrowful breath."

"A broken breath."

"Vexation of breath."

"Grieved in breath."

"And the child grew and waxed strong in breath."

These texts, with many others, we might cite to show how absurd is the claim that the spirit is only breath; that it was the understanding of holy men of old that the body was merely the dwelling place or clothing of the spirit or soul; and that they looked upon death as being the separation of the spirit and body, and not as a complete cessation of intelligent existence, is evident from the following scriptures:

Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me.—2 Peter 1: 13, 14.

For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose I wot not. . . . Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better: Nevertheless to abide in the flesh is more needful for you.—Philippians 1: 21-24.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. . . . Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord: . . . We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord. Wherefore, we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that everyone may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.—2 Corinthians 5: 1-10.

That Jesus did not teach that the spirit or soul ceases to exist at the death of the body is proved in his counsel to his disciples in Matthew 10: 28:

And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.

And again we read in Luke 16: 22-25:

And it came to pass, that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom; the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom. And he cried and said, Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my tongue; for I am tormented in this flame.

Here Jesus represents both Lazarus and the rich man to be in a conscious condition, though, as he plainly says, both are dead. But the objector may say this is only a parable. We are not prepared to admit that Jesus would misrepresent true conditions in a parable. That these conditions really obtained shortly after the death of the body, and not after the judgment, is evidenced by the statement of the rich man in verse 28, that he still had five brothers living on the earth. Using this language at its par value then, we have Jesus teaching that the spirit does not die at the death of the body, but if worthy is carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom to rest from its labors (Revelation 14: 13); or, if unworthy is consigned to a place of punishment. John also testified to the consciousness of the spirit after death in Revelation 6: 9:

And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth.

Again says the objector, If the spirit does not die all men are heirs of eternal life, but only the faithful will be rewarded with immortality.

Let us examine the word along this line. Is eternal life promised as a reward for service?

Romans 6: 23: "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Here we are told that eternal life is a gift, not a reward. See also Romans 5: 18. Eternal life is mentioned as a free gift. Reading Romans 5: 15-21 we learn that this free gift is passed upon all to the justification of life. Turning to 1 Corinthians 15: 21 we read: "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Here the statement is clearly made that everyone that received a mortal body because of Adam's transgression, shall receive an immortal one by reason of the atonement of Christ. But listen to verse 23: "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." And a man's works will determine what his order shall be. Revelation 22: 12: "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be." John saw the last great resurrection which is to take place a thousand years after that of those that are Christ's at his coming. And though they were all raised, and came from the graves, from the sea, and from hell, (Revelation 20: 12-14,) everyone was judged out of the things written in the books according to their works. Some were only worthy of banishment with the Devil and his angels, but all were raised from the dead by the power of the resurrection, and received that to which their works entitled them.

Thus according to God's word do we answer the question, What is man? He is God's offspring made in his image and likeness, clothed in mortal flesh, but through Jesus Christ a lawful heir of immortality. Shut out from his birthright by reason of sin, but with this promise to cheer him as he meets the varied forces of evil arrayed against him: "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son."

CONFERENCE RESOLUTION NO. 529.

At the General Conference of 1903, held at Independence, Missouri, there arose a question as to whether a member of the church could in any way withdraw from membership in the church without specific charges being preferred; such procedure to be had in cases where persons not being guilty of any transgression and possessing good moral character and simply desiring to be released from further association with the church. The matter was referred to a committee who considered the matter and reported as follows, which was adopted by the conference:

NO. 529, ADOPTED APRIL 8, 1909.

"Your committee to which was referred resolution of the Burlington, Iowa, Branch, touching Conference Resolution No. 284, respectfully reports:

"1. That in considering the same it is compelled to note the inconsistency in the statement of the alleged finding and report of the elders' court referred to, in holding that the parties asking to dissolve their connection with the church were in "good standing" in the body. They may not have been in any open violation of any moral precept or rule of the body, but it can not be properly held that a person who has interposed a demand that he be separated from, and wholly withdrawn from any and all connection with, the church of Christ as we hold it, 'still remains in good standing.' The act to separate himself, and his continued refusal to hear the officers who have labored with him to reclaim and convince of the error of such a step, would necessarily enter into the question of his good standing.

"2. Your committee are of the opinion that much of the seeming trouble arising in cases where persons request to withdraw from the church is only from taking a one-sided view of the matter, and a failure to comprehend the action necessary under the law of Christ to effect the object of separation. There is no provision in the law of Christ whereby separation may be had by voluntary withdrawal alone. The body must act in order to make effective the separation, and when it acts, to use the language of the Savior, it 'cuts off,' 'severs' the individual from the body, as the branch is severed from the vine; and while in the case of persons it would be permissible for them to claim and say that they withdrew, yet when the body or church acted, they would in fact be cut off. There could be no alternative to this and give the party the benefit of his request.

"Since the law of Christ does not provide for a separation except by act of the body, should a party simply make the claim to withdraw and move out and the body not act, he would go out and continue a member in fact, notwithstanding the seeming separation. If, then, the provision for separating by its terms seems harsh, it is the harshness imposed by the law, and not the church; and whereas other societies may have adopted more liberal methods, it must not be forgotten that they have also adopted more liberal methods for the receiving of members than is provided in the law. We are not, however, privileged as a church to change the law in either case.

"3. In the matter of final action on the part of the body, it is advised as to the condition and state of its members through the findings of a properly constituted court. A branch in this way arrives at a place from which it may act. Your committee are of the opinion, however, that it is not necessary to formulate charges against a person who may wish to withdraw, either of apostasy or violation of the law in terms, in order to convene a court to hear such a case, but that the hearing should take place upon the act in question; viz: The persistent contention of the member to withdraw from the body; and should the court find that THIS claim is persisted in, and that due and diligent labor has been performed by the church officers to reclaim the member without effect, that the finding should be that the request be granted, and the member be severed from the body. This persistent claim to withdraw, in the opinion of the committee, is the only 'specific charge' necessary, as referred to in Conference Resolution No. 284."

Most laws, whether human or divine, are usually subjected to interpretation and I am aware that there exists some misunderstanding over the interpretation of the meaning and application of the law or rule as quoted above. The correct interpretation is doubtless what is desired by all whose duty it is to see that the law is kept. From the latter part of the above resolution it seems perfectly clear to me that members in the church who may desire, for any reason known to themselves, to sever their connection with the church, may do so without any charge being preferred against them; furthermore, if they are guilty of a "violation of the law in terms" and desire to withdraw from the body without the formality and scandal of a trial, it is their privilege to do so. A member becomes a member by the exercise of his own free will and accord and who shall say he can not dissolve his relations with the body in the same way? Why must we persist in kicking a man out when he wants out and will readily go out if given a fair chance? As it seems to me, the duty of the church in the matter is to ascertain beyond doubt that it is a fact that such request has been really and truly made on the part of the member desiring to withdraw, a statement in writing to that effect from the party would be good evidence, after due labor on part of the church officers should the member not be induced to change his mind, a court may then be convened and all the evidence necessary to the granting the request is sufficient proof of the "persistent claim to withdraw." This may be thoroughly established by the statement from the party and the testimony of the church officers who may have labored with him. Thus, as above stated, the "Finding should be that the request be granted, and the member be severed from the body." In my experience I have found this rule to be very practical and consistent in the settling of cases where otherwise a great deal of trouble and scandal would have been produced and no good whatever accomplished thereby.

THE "JOURNAL OF HISTORY."

THE AUTHORIZED HISTORICAL MAGAZINE OF THE CHURCH.

Did you know that the JOURNAL OF HISTORY has the most extensive circulation outside of the church ever reached by any of the church journals? It has.

Did you know that through the JOURNAL we are getting our literature before the men who are making history? Just step into the Historian's office if you don't believe it and see the magazines with whom we exchange. Our periodical is in the hands of many of the leading historical societies in the country. We think that will do something to help correct errors regarding our history. What do you think about it?

Do you know what men outside of our ranks think of us? Well, listen: First we have the distinction of being the only publication of a religious character west of Philadelphia that is listed in the Annual Magazine Subject Index for 1909, published by the Boston Book Company. This is a subject index to the leading historical and biographic magazines.

Here are the opinions of some of our readers. We wish we had room for more.

It is certainly a very creditable publication, both editorially and typographically, and will make a valuable addition to the periodicals in the State Historical Department.—Johnson Brigham, Iowa State Librarian.

The workmanship displayed upon this first number of the Journal is a credit to any printing plant, and the matter too, deals with the beginning of a strange religious movement—strange because we have so long been accustomed to consider and believe that the days of miracles and supernatural happenings belonged only to the dim past.—Hon. Guy P. Arnold, President of Decatur County (Iowa) Historical Society.

A very commendable publication makes its first appearance in January, 1908. It is a quarterly magazine called the Journal of History, and is published by the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Lamoni, Iowa. The editors are the Church Historian, Heman C. Smith, Frederick M. Smith, of the First Presidency, and Assistant Historian, D. F. Lambert. Under the direction of these energetic men a good historical product may be expected.—From the Iowa Journal of History and Politics, Benjamin F. Shambaugh, Editor.

It will be of considerable interest to our readers, and particularly so to any who are followers of the great historical movement of the Church of the Latter Day Saints, to know there has just been issued from Lamoni, Iowa, a magazine which is to be a quarterly, and entitled the Journal of History. This important periodical will occupy a distinctive field, and as it is to be under the general supervision and editorial direction of Mr. Heman C. Smith, historian of the church, it will no doubt contain material of intrinsic value, not only to those of the Mormon faith, but to the student of Iowa history in the broader sense.—Daily Republican, of Cedar Rapids.

WHAT WE HAVE FOR YOU.

HISTORY.—We have on file in the office many old and valuable documents, (which we are going to reproduce for you at our earliest opportunity. Every article in the JOURNAL is intended to be an exhaustive treatment of the subject in hand. We spare no pains to bring to light all the data we can find on each subject and present it to you in a condensed and comprehensive manner. We are giving you the results of years of patient research and you can have it all in an hour or two's reading. It's just the thing for the traveling elder, the Sunday school or Religio teacher; in fact no Latter Day Saint should be without it. What do you think of a number all about Nauvoo, for next April? Interesting? Well, I should say so. It is to have a history of Nauvoo, the Nauvoo House, the Nauvoo Temple, a visit to Nauvoo, a view of Nauvoo by a Methodist minister, and all sorts of other things, including illustrations of historic places. A historic number devoted to Independence and Lamoni and other special subjects are contemplated to follow in due time.

Do you know that in your district there is a local historian writing up the history of your own branch? And that he is in direct touch with the Historian's Office? And that some day the results of his work will be published in the JOURNAL? The histories of the Fremont and Michigan districts are running now. Subscribe for the JOURNAL and get the history of your own district.

BIOGRAPHY.—You have heard them preach, wouldn't you like to read about the lives of the men who have made the church? Of course you would. Read the lives of such men as Charles Derry, James Caffall, Israel Rogers, James F. Burton, and others of the church and those who have rescued it and built it up. One of the best things we have in store for you is an extensive biography of Alexander H. Smith written by his daughter, Vida E. Smith, which we will publish immediately upon its completion.

There are one hundred and twenty-eight pages in every copy of the JOURNAL and not one of them but what is full of interest for you. Just try a copy and see.

CONTRIBUTORS.—First there is the editorial force, Heman C. Smith, Frederick M. Smith, Daniel F. Lambert. Then there are a host of others who have contributed to our columns during the two years of our existence: William Marks, John Whitmer, Mrs. Marietta Walker, Bishop Charles J. Hunt, Elbert A. Smith, Ellsworth B. Hull, Holmes J. Davison, Gilbert J. Waller, Alvin Knisley, Prof. Benjamin F. Shambaugh, Prof. T. J. Fitzpatrick, Charles Derry, H. Hale Smith, Mrs. Vida E. Smith, John J. Cornish, Charles Fry.

These people have something to tell you, and besides we have new talent of interest to you during the following year.

WHAT WILL IT COST YOU?

Just $1.00 per year. Other magazines of its class would cost from $1.50 to $5.00 per year. We have only one magazine on our exchange list which is as low as ours and that one is advertising a University. The highest is $5.00, and has the same amount of reading matter, carries advertising and furnishes no illustrations. We give you a high class paper (no advertising from which to derive revenue) and appropriate illustrations. The JOURNAL OF HISTORY is only two years old and is growing all the time, we are putting it in the rank of the highest class of periodical historical literature. Show your appreciation of this fact and secure its benefits for yourself by sending your name with one dollar to the Herald Publishing House and you will have the privilege of testing our claims for one year.

DO IT NOW.

DISCORD AT THE HOLY SEPULCHER.

The "deadliest scandal of Christendom" enters, we are told, about the Holy Sepulcher in Jerusalem. It takes the bayonets of Islam to keep the Christians from each other's throats, says James Creelman, who in a recent visit to the East to investigate the Adana massacres saw a condition of things both in Jerusalem and in Bethlehem to make Christians weep. As a matter of fact, "this confusion of Christendom among its supremely sacred shrines" makes the Turk laugh and the Jew marvel. The facts in a nutshell are given in this paragraph from Mr. Creelman's article in the New York Times:

"Greeks, Latins, and Armenians, robed, mitred, hooded, and sandaled, with Syrians, Copts, Abyssinians, and what not of minor churches huddled on either side of the great Christian denominations, insult and conspire against each other, and condescend to vulgar fist brawls, while hosts of poor pilgrims, haggard, weary, and white with want, pour their pitiful savings into monastic treasuries in which are already piled gold and jewels enough to make the splendor of the Cæsars look dim."

This is the bone of contention between these priests of antagonistic races:

"This sacred place, where for more than sixteen centuries Christendom has wept and prayed over the small rock-hewn chamber in which it is said Joseph, of Arimathea, laid the dead body of Christ; where emperors and empresses, kings and queens, popes, cardinals, steel-clad crusaders, military conquerors, millions of travel-weary pilgrims, the greatest and the meanest of earth, have knelt in awed silence, is a white marble chapel, six and a half feet long by six feet wide, with a tomb of once white marble slabs at the side—the top slab being cracked in the middle—and forty-three precious little silver lamps twinkling faintly at the ends of chains overhead."

The keeping of the sacred place is deputed to these warring sects with sharply defined privileges for each coming from the Sultan himself. Says the writer:

"So jealous are these churches of their rights and so ready to resist the slightest encroachment of others upon their privileges, that it would require a special firman of the Sultan himself to permit one church even to dust a lamp belonging to another church. The right of each denomination to sweep or dust any part of the sacred building is set forth in imperial firmans, each spot of the floor or wall being measured to an inch—and this minute and almost incredibly strict system of regulation extends even to the stones of the outer courtyard. To keep Christian monks and priests from assaulting each other in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, the Sultan and his ministers prescribe the time at which the doors shall open and close, the order in which each church shall celebrate mass, or have other religious exercises, naming the day, the hour, and the minute of each event that takes place, enumerating the exact number of candles and lamps to which each denomination is entitled in each particular place, and just when they may be trimmed; and not a picture may be moved or cleaned, not a nail or tack disturbed without an imperial document from Constantinople.

"The lofty arches of the venerable church, with its wonderful aisles and chapels, are gray with the dirt of ages, and even the ceiling of the great dome above the sepulcher of Christ is disfigured with bare patches and hanging tatters of blue fresco, because the contentious followers of the humble Nazarene, in whose name they spit upon each other, can not agree who shall have the honor of repairing it."

The writer quotes the words of the Arab guardian who sits in the doorway and keeps the keys of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, a duty that has reposed in his family since the days of the great Omar. He said:

"If we were not here the Christians would kill each other. There are times when it is necessary to have a thousand of our soldiers inside of the building to keep the peace. Think of a whole Moslem regiment with rifles and bayonets on duty in a Christian church on Easter Sunday! These monks and priests have no more reverence for this place than so many merchants have for their shops. They quarrel and abuse each other from one end of the year to the other and we are constantly called upon to interfere when they beat each other with fists and brooms, yes, sometimes with knives and hatchets. But there is never a Moslem who enters the church without removing his shoes.

"In all the years I have sat here I have never seen a Christian monk, Greek, Latin, Armenian, Copt, or Syrian, give alms to the miserable men, women, and children who come here for help; yet it is a common thing to see Moslems bestow money on the beggars in and out of the church. And no king has such rich treasures as these monks can show, while the pilgrims pour new fortunes into their hands every year.

"Oh, it is terrible here! There is so much fraud, so much hatred, so much jealousy. I have even seen Christians shouting and swearing and fighting like common street ruffians around the tomb of Christ itself. We Moslems, of course, guard this church because it is the shrine of one of our greatest prophets, Jesus, but also to keep the public peace."—Literary Digest, November 6, 1909.

"GONE DOWN SYMMES' HOLE."

CURIOUS MONUMENT IN OHIO TOWN RECALLS DEMOLISHED ARCTIC THEORY.

Standing in the city park at Hamilton, Ohio, is a queer-looking monument. Upon a marble plinth stands a globe hollowed at each pole and marked with the lines of geographical measurement. It was erected by Americus Symmes before the civil war out of respect to the memory of his father, John Cleves Symmes, author of the remarkable "Theory of concentric spheres, demonstrating that the earth is hollow, habitable within, and widely open at the poles."

The monument and the countless books and pamphlets that were written following the promulgation of this theory are testimonials to what may be accomplished by mere persistence in any cause even though it be faulty and entirely erroneous, as was the Symmes theory. The discovery of the North Pole by Dr. Frederick Albert Cook and Lieutenant Shackleton's near approach to the South Pole have forever settled the previously admitted absurdity of open or concave poles. It is interesting to recall the fact that there was a time when this geographical doctrine had many supporters.

Symmes, who was a nephew of the first landlord of the country on the Ohio River between the Miami rivers, first announced his discovery (?) in 1818 at Saint Louis. In his short brochure he asked for "one hundred brave companions, well equipped, to start from Siberia in the fall with reindeer and sleighs on the ice of the frozen sea; I engage we find a warm and new land stocked with thrifty vegetables and animals, if not men, on reaching one degree north of the latitude of 82 degrees. We will return the following spring."

After a series of public lectures he petitioned Congress in 1822, through the famous Richard M. Johnson, of Kentucky, for a subvention in order to equip an expedition. The canny

Senate unanimously rejected this appeal, and two years later the general assembly of Ohio took similar action. One of his converts, Jeremiah N. Reynolds, of Clinton County, with the cooperation of Messrs. Rush and Southard, members of President John Quincy Adams' cabinet, and Doctor Watson, a wealthy resident of New York City, in 1829, fitted out the ship Annawan and set sail in October for the warm and fertile concavity they believed to exist at the South Pole. They reached a latitude of 82 degrees south and thus fully demonstrated the incorrectness of the Symmes theory.

Its author died in May, 1829, fully believing that his calculations were correct.

It is interesting to note that he was the first to select the winter season for the polar journey, an idea which Peary and Cook made part of their scheme of exploration.

As far as can be ascertained, John Cleves Symmes was never nearer the North Pole than lower Canada, in which he fought as a soldier in the war of 1812. His polar regions existed only in his imagination, but so ingenious were his pleadings that thousands of otherwise sensible men firmly believed in "Symmes Hole," as the vernacular of that day had it. That nickname became part of the slang of the period between 1820 to 1830. When a man disappeared under suspicious circumstances he was accounted for by saying: "He's gone down Symmes' Hole."

So has this ludicrous theory been effectually demolished by the practical and physical work of a hardy line of brave men!—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Thanksgiving.

O men! grown sick with toil and care,
 Leave for awhile the crowded mart;
 O women! sinking with despair,
 Weary of limb and faint of heart,
 Forget your cares to-day, and come
 As children back to childhood's home!

Follow again the winding rills;
 Go to the places where you went,
 When, climbing up the summer hills,
 In their green lap you sat content;
 And softly leaned your head to rest
 On Nature's calm and peaceful breast.

Walk through the sere and fading wood,
 So lightly trodden by your feet,
 When all you knew of life was good,
 And all you dreamed of life was sweet,
 And let fond memory lead you back,
 O'er youthful love's enchanted track.

Taste the ripe fruit of orchard boughs,
 Drink from the mossy well once more;
 Breathe fragrance from the crowded mows,
 With fresh, sweet clover running o'er;
 And count the treasures at your feet,
 Of silver rye and golden wheat.

Go, sit beside the hearth again,
 Whose circle was once glad and gay;
 And if from out the precious chain
 Some shining links have dropped away,
 Then guard with tender heart and hand
 The remnant of your household band.

Draw near the board with plenty spread,
 And if in the accustomed place
 You see the father's reverent head,
 Or mother's patient, loving face,
 What'er your life may have of ill,
 Thank God that these are left you still.

And though where home hath been, you stand
 To-day in alien loneliness;
 Though you may clasp no brother's hand,
 And claim no sister's tender kiss;
 Though with no friend or lover nigh,
 The past is all your company—

Thank God for friends your life has known,
 For every dear, departed day;
 The blessed past is safe alone—
 God gives, but does not take away;
 He only safely keeps above
 For us the treasures that we love.—Sel.

To Brother and Sister Rannie.

[Sr. Rannie wishes the following inserted in the Home Column, believing that other bereaved mothers may be in a measure comforted by it, even as she has been.—EDITOR.]

Fain would kindred dear and loving friends
 Assuage the grief so deep,
 Which we know has well nigh bowed you down,
 Since Frances fell asleep.

With a parent who has lost a child,
 'Twere useless to condole,
 For it seems that no words can be found,
 Such sorrow to console.

Of her future bliss you have no doubt,
 For she obeyed God's laws;
 And loved his work, and wished to live
 To labor in his cause.

Yes, she's safe and saved, oh, blessed thought!
 Rejoice, and praise the Lord,
 For the way in which you led her feet,
 You'll gain a rich reward.

When the noble young are called away,
 We grieve, and wonder why.
 Though they're useful here, oh, is it not
 A blessed time to die?

In the spirit world, your child's at rest,
 From wasting sickness free,
 And with little baby brother Mark,
 Will wait in peace for thee.

She is free from coming judgments there,
 And from satanic foes;
 She will never know a woman's cares,
 Nor woman's griefs and throes.

If the Lord should speak to-day and say,
 "I'll send her back to thee,
 To remove thy grief, and bless thy home,"
 What would your answer be?

Ah, methinks your parent hearts would cry,
 "Keep her, dear Lord, we pray,
 Where she's safe from all the evils which
 We mortals can not stay."

There are others left for you to love,
 And guide along rough ways.
 Then press onward, seeking comfort sweet,
 In prayer and songs of praise.

It will not be long,—time moves on wings,
 Ere Frances you will meet,
 And receive again her fond embrace,
 And feel her kisses sweet.

There will be no dread of parting then,
 Death will have lost its sting,
 And again, with pleasure unalloyed,
 You'll hear her sweet voice sing.

Let us not complain when trials come,
 But meekly bear each one,
 And repeat dear Frances' dying words,
 "Thy will, O Lord, be done."

With loving sympathy,
 MRS. A. E. DEMPSEY.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, December 10, 1904.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Julia Schnabel, of Drake, North Dakota, desires the prayers of the Saints that if it is the will of the Lord, she may be healed. She is afraid she will lose the use of her right arm.

Sr. Will A. Stoddard, Tryon, Nebraska: "As my mother, Sr. Mary Godfrey, is sick, I send this request in her behalf and ask the Saints to pray for her that she may be healed of her affliction, if it be the Master's will. The doctor says medicine can not cure her, and the trained nurses say she can not stand to take medicine, and that there is no cure. She believes and trusts in prayer and in calling on the elders, but we don't know at present where they are."

Elder J. F. Wiles, Ripon, California: "Sr. Eva M. Green has just obeyed the gospel and has been afflicted for several years. Please pray earnestly for her recovery, for she is worthy."

Sr. Anna E. Ervin, Dundes, Ohio: "Please request the prayers of the Saints for me in my affliction. I have a cancer on my nose and unless the Lord comes to my rescue it will be fatal. I sincerely trust in him."

Letter Department

JASPER, MINNESOTA, November 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of October 13 I read with interest, the letter of Bro. J. H. N. Jones, of South Australia, in which he made request for some good brother to supply his cousin, William V. Tunned, of Harvard University, with a copy of the Book of Mormon and other literature upon the divine authenticity of the book, etc. I said, when I read the letter, that I would supply them, but have waited thinking possibly some acquaintance of Brother Jones might prefer to do so; and as Brother Jones wished mention made through the HERALD, and I have seen no notice of this being done, I have concluded to do so, with a prayer to God that it may be as seed sown upon good ground.

Your brother in bonds,
 A. H. A.

MOUND CITY, MISSOURI, November 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: Conference of the Far West District met here with the Ross Grove Branch on the 24th ultimo. Threatening weather cut down the attendance, but those who came can go home and report an excellent time.

Among other things the counsel of the good Spirit said: "There are young men among you whom I would have called, but they have not approved themselves unto me. Some I have called, but they have not magnified their calling. Thus saith the Lord unto you, my servants, unite yourselves according to my law and I will bless you and direct you as you have never before been directed."

Some feel the force of these words and resolved to correct the matter. All could see the divinity of the counsel to unite according to the law already given; no new organization hinted at. "What more can he say than to you he hath said; You, who unto Jesus for refuge hath fled?"

By letters from Australia I learn that our new missionaries are at work and making a good impression. One brother describes Elder Davis as "a fine spiritual young man and an excellent speaker. When I see men of his stamp, I am ready to wish I was an American, notwithstanding I learn from newspaper sources that you have the opposite of his kind in Yankee land." Another letter speaks of Elder Robertson as one of those solid men that they can depend upon.

Hastily yours,
 G. R. WELLS.

MISSOURI VALLEY, IOWA, November 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: I just closed my meetings here last night where I have been for eleven weeks. Yesterday, I led seven more precious souls down into the cool water and baptized them into the church and kingdom of God, and at the close of my meetings last night two others demanded baptism and I baptized them this morning. This makes thirty-two at this place during my eleven weeks here and Bro. D. R. Chambers baptized two more. The good Lord has blessed me in my efforts for the truth in this place. We have some noble Saints here. I pray that God will bless them in their efforts. Bro. J. R. Fry is the presiding officer here and a noble man he is, too. May God give him wisdom to watch over the little flock. Many others are near the door of the kingdom and as I write I feel the sentiment of the old hymn, No. 145, "Praise ye the Lord."

Your brother,
 W. A. SMITH.

STONINGTON, MAINE, November 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: The work of grace continues unabated at this place, twelve more having been baptized since last writing you, making fifty-five within the last few weeks. I never experienced such an upheaval before.

The Lord is simply beating back the powers of darkness and shivering the veil of unbelief which has held so long the people of Israel. The Saints are all wrought up, feeling fine, and attending services every night.

Recently we baptized some leading members of the Methodist society, which has caused no small stir. Can't help it; they must come and Methodists are no exception to that exacting edict, "Except a man is born of water and the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of heaven."

We continue here a while longer—well, until the Lord enlightens us to depart. One has been called to the ministry very recently and others will be.

With regards to all,
DANIEL MACGREGOR.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA, October 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: As per conference appointment I have been laboring mostly in Pittsburg and West Virginia districts and some in Kirtland District. I had the pleasure, with Brother Griffiths, to visit Kirtland and preach in that hallowed edifice, the Temple. I also was privileged to attend the New Philadelphia reunion, which I enjoyed very much.

I spent five weeks at Steubenville, Ohio, preaching on the streets. Some nights the meetings were well attended; other times it was like preaching to the walls of the buildings; none but a few faithful Saints that accompanied me, seemed to pay the least attention, a few passers-by stopped, but none seemed to care for the gospel message. However, on most evenings we had a few regular attendants. One of these, and a young lady at that, was privileged to be at a few meetings and is now rejoicing in the glorious restored gospel. Others promised to continue the investigation.

We read that the gospel is to go to all nations as a witness. That of course will be in a representative sense, for many nations of people have died without hearing its sound. It seemed to me that that promise was in a sense fulfilled in Steubenville, for there were Jews and Gentiles, white and black, professed Christians and heathen Chinese, English, Irish, Scotch, Welsh, Italians, Bohemians, Slavs, etc., who gave a listening ear to the gospel message. Some heard nearly every sermon preached there, others heard but a few sentences and passed on.

The Long-Beard debate is now a matter of history. It passed off fairly smooth. Beard only once making a special tirade on Joseph Smith's character. Brother Long defended the truth nobly. Friends were made to the cause, and those who were interested in the gospel were strengthened in the faith.

The Book of Mormon proposition was signed, but it was not discussed. The Christian people seemed to think they had enough debating, and I think Mr. Beard thought so, too, for he talked of taking up that and other propositions at some other nearby point, but after waiting for a week to see what he would do, he finally let us know the debate was off.

I was assisting Brother Long as his moderator. After we got word there would be no more debate, Brother Long started for his field in southern Ohio, and I am arranging to take a trip further south in West Virginia. I am enjoying the labor in this field fairly well so far, and especially the society of the Saints.

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. M. STUBBART.

ASHOVER, DERBYSHIRE, ENGLAND, Oct. 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been in this work a little over one year and often when reading your dear columns I have had a desire to bear a word of testimony as to this noble work. I feel that whilst I am waiting another waits for me. I am truly glad that in these the last days that I have had such a privilege of hearing the true gospel, and I feel more than glad that I have obeyed it. I do not take the HERALD myself but I hope some day to be able to take it. I can not express my enjoyment in reading the letters sent by the dear sisters and brothers. They are full of cheer and encouragement.

I often feel that I can not do as much as others do, but God has given us each a talent of some kind. Whether it be one, two, or three, let us use them in the best possible way, so as to bring others into the fold and family of God.

I live outside of the Claycross Branch but we have the blessed privilege of holding a meeting once a fortnight at Sister Turner's, a distance of about three miles away. We have some splendid times which will never be forgotten, the Spirit being present among us. I think you all will agree with me that the difficulty is not in the meeting together, but in parting. But thanks be to God the day is fast approaching when we shall meet to part no more, when we shall change our vile bodies that they may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. Not as the various sects of to-day would tell us, that we shall all be in a spirit form, having neither body nor parts. Away with such teaching as this. We know that the resurrection of Jesus Christ, if taken alone, ought to be sufficient in regard to this. Not a thing intangible but a living reality to take each other by the hand in love and union and hail our friends. Death and sorrow shall be at an end.

I had the pleasure of being present at the reunion at Claycross on the 10th of October, Brother Taylor being our speaker. A fairly good number were present, many of whom I had not had the pleasure of seeing before. The following Sunday Bro. S. Holmes had the honor of leading two young brothers through the waters of baptism to be initiated into the fold and family of God. I pray that they will endure to the end and be of great use in the world.

I myself being in the hey-day of life would like to say a few words to you who are about my own age. We are living in a day when everything around is most pleasing and attractive to our eyes. We have to be very careful as to where we spend our time. If they put the name of Jesus Christ at the head of things now, it appears all right, but I fear if he was present here to-day, as he drove them out of the temple for making his Father's house an house of merchandise, so he would do now for making the places of worship theatrical. I do not say we are always to stay in the house, so as to make ourselves miserable. Not at all. Let our time and pleasure be spent in such a way as not abusing the things which God has given us, so richly to enjoy, so that when we have finished our amusements we may feel better for having done so. My teacher used to say, Always try to have a companion better than yourself. If we keep this in our minds we shall not get far wrong as to whom we associate with in life and it will be a great help to us. Let us try, then, so to live, that when we pass from this present state of action, the world may be made better for us having lived in it. As the hymn says: "Let us keep our spirits pure, and unto the end endure, in the light of God." This is my prayer and that all might come to a knowledge of their Redeemer.

Pray for me with the others that I may be faithful unto the end, so as to hear him say, "Come up higher."

In the only true faith,
MISS M. E. MATHER.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, October 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: The Toronto district conference, with its fragrant memories, its pressing problems, and its kindly greetings and sadder partings, is now a thing of the still recent past. The cycles will roll and the inferior planets (at least,) of the solar system will run many revolutions ere the memories of that gathering—with its absorbing truths and powerful lessons—will have for ever passed away.

When,—for the first time in our lives,—many English and Canadian Saints listened last Saturday evening to the stirring and soul-enthusing address of Elder Fred Blair—the able and beloved son of a respected and honored father,—and heard him inquire with solemn emphasis and amidst breathless silence, "What is the worth of the boy? Can you weigh his worth in the scales, or his value in tens of thousands of dollars?" we were solemnly and irresistibly reminded of that other and terribly startling interrogation by the great Lord of the conflict,—"For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" (Matthew 16: 26.)

And when with rising inflection, the speaker went on to describe the value and worth of our church's own (Grace-land) College, your correspondent, and I believe that I may add, many others in that attentive audience, said within themselves (like one of old), we are verily guilty in this matter; in that the aims and claims and the effort and exertions of that God-owned and God-recognized institution have not met with anything like the moral or material encouragement it deserves or has required at our hands! Surely such a curriculum as our brother described is one that need fear neither competition nor comparison with any college in all this expansive land.

There is an old and well authenticated saying that "history repeats itself," and as an instance of the truly remarkable manner in which the words and events of long by-gone years will seem, (as it were) to rush forward and dovetail themselves into the scenes and actions and words of the "living present," Elder Frederick Blair had no sooner commenced his sermon than there rushed into my mind, (clearing at one bound a gap of quite twenty years,) the title and arguments of one of the most straightforward and impressive editorials I ever perused in the pages of the HERALD, at that time a smaller and very different kind of sheet to what it is now. The article was by the then First Counselor, W. W. Blair, and was entitled, "Don't joggle the boat," and I am more than ever convinced that if the pungent and pregnant counsels of that editorial had been generally obeyed and given heed to, there would scarcely by now be a town or hamlet in the United States or Canada without its living and active branch of the Reorganization, for our church would by now have attained its 100,000 mark of progress and distinction.

Take notice, inasmuch as the old saying has it, "It is never too late to mend." I might casually mention that it is not even yet too late to heed Bro. W. W. Blair's injunction.

On the following morning (Sunday) all hands were on deck, (as the sailors say) to hear Elder H. O. Smith deliver his address, and although he took one or rather two texts in the tenth chapter of Psalms, he pretty soon turned both of them down and took up Daniel 1: 12 and began to pound into tea and coffee for all they were and more than they were worth. However, there is no denying the fact that it was a very able presentation as far as it went. The only question in your correspondent's mind being whether Bro. H. O. really went far enough while he was about it; for to have been strictly logical to his own line of argument, he ought to have tabooed every mortal thing under the sun but dry bread to eat and cold water to drink! And even the latter, harmless and innocuous beverage has its sworn enemies, for the late Sir William Marchison used to declare that cold water was so swarming with microbes that it was not fit to drink until it had been twice boiled. The British Medical Journal asserts that there is probably not a single article of food or drink but what can be, and in fact is, adulterated.

A certain elder who was an ardent and pronounced "food faddist" in the old country, (or visiting the old country,) once commented adversely upon my "sinful cup of tea" when all the while he was himself imbibing a mixture of chicory and cocoa that was about five degrees centigrade hotter than any cup of tea I ever drank in my life!

Saint Paul declares that "the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." (Romans 14: 17.) I can not believe that the infinitely wise and infinitely good Creator of heaven and earth intended to place such a paramount emphasis upon such a trivial matter as the drinking or nondrinking of a cup of tea as to obliterate all such solid and eternal virtues as faith, hope, and charity; or, as to utterly banish and obliterate all good feeling and fellowship between members of one common Lord, one universal brotherhood, and one everlasting Home.

It is only fair to state right here (as the Americans say) that there was no such spirit of rancor or censoriousness in Elder H. O. Smith's sermon. The entire presentation, (though quite decided as to the demerits of tea and coffee) was couched in a really gentlemanly spirit of liberality and forbearance toward all who might honestly and conscientiously differ from him upon this or other points of gospel economy or of church policy.

Finding that I have greatly exceeded the amount of space which I originally proposed to, myself, I must speak of Apostle R. C. Russell and Bishop R. C. Evans' eloquent and stirring discourses in a future number, God willing. Suffice to say that the conference in its entirety went far to establish and to promote that genuine spirit of love, fellowship, consideration, and esteem which should characterize the august and visible body of true Saints, known in Scripture as the Church of the Firstborn, whose names are written in heaven.

Yours in bonds,

Dear Herald: After an inquiry of six months and over, in this city, I am fully persuaded in my own opinion as to the best interests of the Reorganization and the policy to be pursued. However, this is in no sense a dictation to the church nor even a suggestion as to what it must do, only my opinion based on close observation and experience while among this people. It can all be summed up in two propositions, first, We need a chapel of our own, an average ward meeting house would do us, for we could not reach the best. There are 38 wards in the city, each ward has a chapel costing from three to ten thousand dollars, we should have an average house, plain, yet inviting, and centrally located, also a parsonage for the elder's family where he could be found 365 days in the year, to talk to, encourage and instruct all who may visit him, also to distribute tracts, papers, history, and books, especially the new translation, thus our headquarters would be soon well advertised and a depot of rest for hundreds of weary souls.

It is the rank and file, the honest souls, anxious to break away from priestly denomination and abject control that we may reach, many of whom have been born and reared in this valley and have never looked over the rim of the great basin, knowing but little of the church or the world only that which has been sifted through the Brighamite sieve which means; all who oppose this church are either Gentiles or apostates and the Reorganization their greatest enemy, and the one to be the most feared.

2d. The policy pursued by our elders should be one of kindness which would be in striking contrast to the one pursued by the dominant church, demonstrating to them that we have the better goods and more in harmony with the gospel of Christ. Our elders can be too radical and severe, and thus hinder the object sought. We should work along the lines of the least resistance until we have gained their confidence and prove to them that we are their friends in some things, instead of enemies in all things. They are taught, we are their most bitter enemies and point to our vituperative sermons and writings which are made to do duty as persecution and preclude the possibility of reaching them and give sanction to, and sustains their contention. Not one will meet us in discussion on the streets or otherwise, nor can we occupy in any ward meeting house in city or State. The leading men know we are in the right and have the light, all the books and weapons to vanquish them on any field, but because we can, is no reason why we should be unduly radical. I have been surprised at myself being of such a radical, positive disposition, at the feelings of love and sympathy I have for them, they are in a sense "bone of our bone" "Ephraim," Israel astray, and need encouragement and kindness instead of caustic castigation. A few are returning, many would if they could, the way will open we feel sure for those who desire, to return and aid in building up the waste places, "and let not the men of God hinder their coming." We do not want to be an ally with the Gentile world and pursue the same methods they pursue and with them rejoice in a spirit of elation because of their downfall. They must return to the "old paths," there is no other place for them to go, and we should see to it that we prove ourselves their friends instead of enemies. We should manifest that we are a church of peace, a church of construction instead of destruction, to perpetuate all the good and eliminate all the bad. We as elders should not be vindictive nor unduly antagonistic, but men of peace and charity for the erring ones, a strife only, that will maintain and vindicate the fair name of the church and the principles taught by its founders. Polygamy is practically dead, and is fast dying out never to be taught again in the United States, and if they should seek other climes in which to perpetuate it, they will only place themselves in the pillory of public contempt. The younger element are at heart ashamed of it; the older, many of them, are sorry it was ever launched as a tenet of faith, therefore let it die and be forgotten and show them we are their friends in a gospel sense, and not their enemies. Thus we would disarm them of their greatest weapon and in my opinion a few years would show the potency of such a policy in the gathering of Israel astray.

RIPLEY, OKLAHOMA, November 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: Please give space for a few lines from Oklahoma again. Brother Yates and I came here a few weeks ago and began a meeting. Our interest is good, but the enemy is surely restless in this land of freedom, where the gospel can be preached. Brother Yates held a debate out west, and has another one over east soon. And as our meetings progress here we are threatened with one of their big guns. But we have heard their "big guns roar" so much they are no terror to us any more, so we stand our ground on the firing line, and thank God for victory and trust him for strength to endure in the conflict.

Brother Yates baptized five here about a month ago, and, among them, Bro. John Ballard, Sister Jones, and I do not recall the others. And last Sunday we troubled the waters again and baptized Brn. Ed. Dillon, of Oklahoma City, and Will Vickery, of this place, and I think more are soon to follow. Brother Yates was called to Terilton to administer to Bro. Harvey Reid, who is very low of typhoid fever.

The echoes of the Warlick-Curtis debate are heard through the Bee. Reverend Hoffman and I are having a little debate through said paper, and Yates will soon be heard in reply to Warlick's defiant fling at us. Calls are numerous to "come and preach for us," and our few men are busy as bees and we can not answer a tenth of the calls with any degree of satisfaction.

Brn. E. H. Smith and Chase are visiting the two districts and preaching a few sermons in a place, but there is a "dearth" for men to go answer the calls and "stay" by a "good" interest until we build up branches. It can be done now in many places in this mission, and we are praying the Lord of the harvest to "send more laborers into his harvest." Where are the reapers and what are the sinews of war? The tithes of all God's people, to fill his storehouse and equip a host of willing men for the service of God? I was glad to read that sermon by Bro. E. A. Smith, "Behold I set before you an open door. We must enter in and occupy or God will call for fishers and hunters" who will.

Our hearts are saddened at the loss of noble veterans who have stood long and firm at the post of duty, such as A. H. Smith, J. F. Burton, and others. My first year of mission work was to the South Sea Islands with Brother Burton, when we went out on the Evenalia. That is a very hard field for mission work, and much worse for elderly people like Brn. Burton, Devore, Forscutt, and Newton. We hope to organize branches at Ripley, Alva, and Seiling in the near future. We sincerely hope the local men will work as God has called them, and keep the branches alive, and free our hands as much as possible. Brethren Durfey and Hinkle have done nobly of late in assisting the missionaries in a material way as well as spiritual.

May the Saints awake to their duties and the needs of the work, is the prayer and desire of your coworker.

HUBERT CASE.

CHILTON, TEXAS.

Editors Herald: We have had a very short crop this year, but we got a good price for it, which made up some of the shortness. We need rain at present to put the land in a shape to plow well.

I must tell you that we have got old Satan raised here in good shape. Bro. Johnie Hay was here in the spring and held a meeting and made many friends to the cause. Since that time Bro. Albert Vanleave has been here and held a meeting and some of the people are liking the faith all right, as far as they have heard. I think if we would have a few more good meetings, there could be some good done. I noticed a letter from W. R. Standefer in the HERALD some time ago that was fine; but I do not think I could stay in the stand and preach with some one throwing stones at me. Go ahead, Brother W. R., this is God's work that we are in and God will take care of it. I know from whence I speak. I have seen the blind made to see and have seen the sick healed in less than one minute, and I know that it was the power of God that did it.

I could tell something in regard to tithing that was miraculous if space would permit, and will some other time. I also saw my mother almost raised from the dead. We had given her up and sent a telegram to my sister to come at once if she wanted to see her alive. That was on Sunday and the next day she sat up and ate her breakfast; and the next day she got up and went on her way rejoicing. You can talk about the power of God! It was there; the signs do follow us when we live for them and do not follow the hypocrite, that is, one that just wears the name. So let us all put on the breastplate of faith and get the blessings that are in this

CALIFORNIA JUNCTION, IOWA, November 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: As I have seen no letters from this place in your columns I felt that the Lord would have me testify to his goodness and mercy to me. I have been a member of this latter-day gospel only a few weeks, but my heart has been long with it. The way was not opened for me to come into the church until September 21, at the Southwestern Iowa reunion at Little Sioux, where I was baptized by Bro. Joseph Lane and confirmed by Brn. F. A. Smith and S. B. Kibler. It is my prayer that I may let my light so shine that I may be an instrument in bringing others into this fold, for I know it is true. He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God "or if I speak of myself." Just let us hesitate for a moment and think what man is that God should be so mindful of him; that he should give his only begotten Son that through him we might have eternal life.

Often I feel discouraged that I have so many crosses to bear, again when I think of my Savior, who was never known to smile, how he suffered and was rejected by his people and crucified that we may have life more abundantly, I then grow more humble, for the servant is not above his master. I am glad he has chosen me to be a handmaiden of the Lord. This life is but a warfare; we can not see beyond the vale, but some day all things will be made known unto us if we walk humbly and meekly before the Lord, keeping his commandments, crucifying ourselves to the worldly elements of this life and trusting him to the uttermost.

I attended divine services at Missouri Valley last Sunday, where we partook of the emblems of our Lord's broken body and shed blood. What a glorious testimony and prayer meeting we had! There was a perfect melting down and truly God's Spirit was with us. I would that I had the privilege of attending church regularly, but that is another cross, as my husband's health is poor and then, too, he does not believe in this gospel. But it is my prayer that God some way in his own due time will show him he is wrong and cause him to turn and embrace this work.

A number of God's people were buried with Christ in baptism last Sunday, among whom were my sister's three children. God bless the branch at Missouri Valley and elsewhere and may we all prove faithful unto death.

I would like to relate here that twenty-one years ago last month my husband and self were converted and baptized into the Christian Adventist, or soul-sleeping church. My husband's father was a minister of that faith. I felt so rejoiced in the work and was sure I was right that I was sure I should live to see the coming of the Lord. I hungered and thirsted after righteousness, and my Bible was my constant companion for more than two years. I was happy in my faith.

My father, who is now asleep in Jesus, told me one day that my church was no church at all. This made me feel sad. I began to think I might be wrong. Mother loaned me her Book of Mormon and several of her church books to read, which I read, and pondered them in my heart. I began to realize I did not have the fullness of the gospel.

Soon after this our second child was born and with a missing vertebræ in the spine at the back of the neck, letting the spinal cord project out through the cavity without a covering of skin. The doctor told us he could not live ten days. However, he did not die, but lived and grew, but suffered terribly by the tumor filling with the fluid from the brain. We took him to several of the best physicians in Council Bluffs; they all said an operation would prove fatal, as it was so near the brain, and also said he could not possibly live more than thirty days longer. We were in despair over our darling. Mother and myself wanted to have him administered to, but my husband was not willing. He said it would do no good, as those gifts were done away with the apostles.

My mother said prayers could save and it is God's will that this child should live. She took the case before the church at Crescent City (as we then lived near that place) and every Thursday afternoon at the sisters' prayer union they poured out their souls to God in prayer in behalf of our babe. They continued their prayers until my mother, who has been in this church more than forty years, had a dream in which the tumor fell off and the cavity was filled with a white, pithy looking substance. She came to tell me her dream, and the babe was well. Although it looks the same as it always did, it never hurts him nor fills up with fluid off the brain. He is grown now and nineteen years of age, a living witness of what God can do for his children. He performs all kinds of hard manual labor and he is a wonder to all the doctors that know him. Those that know him wonder how one of God's creatures can go about with a part of the spine gone. All things are possible with God. Most of those sisters who were instruments of the Lord in bringing about this healing are alive to-day and can testify that what I state is true.

In the spring of 1893 we came to this place. We put our letters in the Methodist Episcopal Church here, as there was no other faith near and we felt that we must have a church home. We withdrew last year. I ask the united prayers of the Saints that my husband and two sons may yet be brought into the church. Pray for me that I may grow in grace and be faithful unto death.

Yours in faith and hope,
MRS. SADIE LONG.

LANCASTER, NEBRASKA, November 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: I desire to write of my work here as chaplain of the Nebraska State Prison. I was appointed to the position by the governor on July 15, 1909, and have filled the position since, apparently to the satisfaction of the prisoners and prison authorities, but with the censure of other religious societies.

My work is to hold preaching services every Sunday morning at ten o'clock, and Sunday school is held at eleven, so there is only about a half hour for the sermon. I have about four hundred of the prisoners present at every service and when the weather is pleasant there are about one hundred visitors present, so that I have a fair congregation without the prisoners and the attention is good, as also is the order.

I have the privilege of inviting others to speak in my place and I have had one Methodist and one Presbyterian preacher to fill the pulpit for me, but so far have failed to get one of the Latter Day Saints to come. I have tried in my weak way to give them something of the gospel as we teach it and would like to have any of the elders that can make it convenient to come through Lincoln, Nebraska, and stop over Sunday, to come and do the speaking for me in the morning and then they can speak to the Saints in the city in the evening.

The prisoners are like all others: they tire of listening to one person all the time, and while I do not expect to convert many of them, yet it is preaching the gospel as a witness and they are a part of them that need the preaching as well as those outside the bars. Our elders frequently speak to much smaller congregations than I have here without the prisoners, and perhaps should any stop over here as much good might be done in one sermon as anywhere else.

Yours in bonds,
JAMES HUFF.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: The HERALD bore the good news to me this day of the great interest manifest at Stonington, Maine, under the wise and faithful labor of Bro. Daniel Macgregor. I have been made aware for the past three years by the Spirit that a mighty work was to be done in Maine, if the right kind of men filled with the Spirit of God would be sent there. I was made satisfied when I learned that the latter-day Daniel had entered the Old Pine Tree State that he would do good to the people.

I was informed twice by the Spirit that I should go among my people and that I should lead many into the church and kingdom of God. After I had led fifteen precious souls into the Church of Christ by baptism last summer on the rock bound coast of Maine, I saw the commencement of the fulfillment of what the Lord told me. I am made satisfied my work is not done in Maine, if permitted to go again next year. I should have stayed there this winter, but I felt a long, cold winter on Uncle John would be too much to face.

I am glad that western Maine has caught the beautiful breeze of the Spirit, as well as eastern Maine. It is time the people are awake to a sense of their duty everywhere, for there are great things in the near future. Coming in the East I can say, like Brother Daniel, when I started in last spring on Little Kennebec, I felt the power of the Evil One and at times hardly knew how it would end. I would go alone by myself and plead with God; and I would say, Father, am I deceived or have I been deceived by a false spirit to come here and meet what I do? And at one time I said, I'll go to the Western Maine conference and see if I feel better; but the Spirit said to me, Stay here in eastern Maine. I then went to Head Harbor Isle and preached twice and left, intending not to go back, but after I got back to Kennebec the Spirit said to me, "You must return to the island, for your work is not done." I obeyed the instruction given, and before I left the island I baptized seven of the best on the island. Still there are more to follow, if kept up.

I see Brother Greene is in eastern Maine. I hope he will get down humble and sound the gospel trumpet long and loud, in the spirit we preach. When the people catch that spirit and under it obey the gospel they get a good conversion. But if in some other spirit it is not of me, saith the Lord.

May God bless you, Brother Macgregor, lift up your voice, spare not, but cry aloud repentance and obedience to that people. I am glad you carried some of the good old Canada spirit to Maine with you. If you remember, we got our blessing the same time at Lamoni, under the hands of dear Uncle Alexander, whose hands now sleep till the resurrection morn, but his noble spirit is still talking to those in the better land above. We had excellent promises.

While in Maine I administered to Mrs. Luella Foss, at Machias, for cancer. She was carried by her doctor to two hospitals for operation. The doctors all told her to go home and make up her mind to die. I told her of the power of our gospel. She asked me to administer to her, so also did her husband. I did so and I felt the sweet power of God come to her relief. October 15 I received a letter from her saying, "I feel fine, the cancer is leaving me." On the 27th I received another letter saying, "My cancer is all gone." For which we say, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Dear Herald: In an issue during the summer you contained a letter, "An interview with Schlatter," from us, and as the recent press dispatch contains the announcement of the death of this man at Hastings, Nebraska, we come again to mention him. We met the man when he was in Des Moines during the summer, interviewed him, saw him in public, and in private, and we believe, measured him according to his work as a man. He wrote his name, Rev. Charles McLean, home address as Boston. He told us of his life which we mentioned in the interview. His greatest claimed work in divine healing was in Denver, in 1894. We know nothing of that work, and only speak of him as we saw him the last year of his life. He was peculiar in many ways. He has a fascination for newspaper collections, clippings concerning himself. He has traveled much in his so-called ministerial work of over thirty years, and has sought newspaper notoriety. Whatever mention was made of him in the press, whether kindly, or in adverse criticism, he saved the clippings, and had this mass of clippings together in great rolls, without classification or order of any kind.

During his stay in Des Moines he was arrested and taken to Clinton to answer to charge of obtaining money under false pretense. When arrested, on his person was found cash to the amount of nearly five hundred dollars, and yet one would have thought by his forlorn and untidy appearance that he was in need. He satisfied the Clinton officials by the return of money and again came to Des Moines, but only for a few days. From here he doubtless continued his wanderings from place to place, until death overtook him at Hastings, as above noted.

He made great claims, saying that his earthly mission was foreshadowed in a vision to his mother before he was born, and throughout his career he claimed to be the only living representative of Jesus Christ on earth. In his public appearance in Des Moines, in the presence of a multitude of scolding people, he pleaded for the afflicted to come to the stand to receive his treatment, the laying on of hands and the prayer of faith. For one man who thus went to the stand, out of curiosity likely, he offered a brief prayer, and then whispered to him saying, "You have not faith to be healed immediately, but if you will come to my room in the hotel we will give you seven treatments, at seven dollars a treatment." This man did not follow him to the hotel, but some who did were asked to lay the seven dollars on the table before he would proceed with the laying on of hands. This was the character of his work during the later years of his life. At one time in his life he claimed to give free treatment, but admitted that as age crept upon him, he felt the necessity of making a charge in order to lay up some money.

Such was the man, Charles McLean Schlatter, the faith healer, who has attracted country-wide attention during his career. He leaves no followers, no organization behind him. He has been called prophet, faith healer, crank, and fakir. Measured from any standpoint for his own claim as the only living representative of Christ on earth, he falls short in every way. He has now passed to his reward, and we are of the opinion that his name and his work will be forgotten within a very short time.

Yours,

A. A. REAMS.

A Message from the Mountains.

As I sit musing this beautiful Sabbath evening, my mind seems to dwell forcibly upon an article on the first page of our last week's (October 25) edition of the HERALD, entitled, "Utah elders on Lamoni."

It is putting it mildly when I say I was amused at their audacity and pretensions, but lovers of truth out here who have seen and are acquainted with the Mormon people, and especially with those holding the priesthood, are not surprised at it. They said, "They enjoyed a most interesting and profitable week at Lamoni," notwithstanding the mud being hub deep in the street and the nonprogressiveness of the people there. Although the streets were so deep in mud and the people so nonprogressive and Heman C. Smith and other leaders of the Reorganized Church there were so very uneasy, those sixteen Mormon elders were given perfect liberty in the use of the church and a respectful audience! I wonder if they would return the compliment to the Reorganized elders out here in Utah? Ask Joseph F. Smith?

They reported seventy-five per cent of the hearers were in sympathy with what they said. Perhaps Joseph F. Smith aims to immigrate to Iowa; he would be sadly missed here.

His advice in politics and his leadership in stock companies would also be missed. Whatever you do, don't remove "our prophet" from our midst.

Of course the Mormon elders do not favor "blood-atonement" or "polygamy"; they never did; neither would they sustain or recognize any man in authority who in the past or present has upheld such a theory! They are too progressive (the Mormons) out here in the mountains to ever recognize, much less believe such semi-civilized, Mohammedan, Asiatic ideas as those.

Do I believe any true Latter Day Saint can be so easily tossed to and fro by Mormon elders in their arguments in favor of temple work? I guess not! I have a better opinion of my brethren at Lamoni than to believe they can be swayed so easily. I don't think they are so easily hoodwinked.

To lovers of truth out here, those who have noticed the workings of the priesthood in the Mormon church in their influencing and controlling their members temporally as well as spiritually, it is surprising, even shocking, to think they have the nerve to mention being bulldozed in Iowa! Rotten!

I never have seen any of our elders trying to use any great amount of influence outside of the cardinal principles of the gospel and truth against error as it was taught by Joseph Smith the Seer. If they were to go beyond their jurisdiction or introduce an idea outside of truth, I would certainly denounce it, even if it came from an elder. I am just a common lay member and may always be, but I hold sacred the idea of free thought and free speech, and always shall. Can the Mormon people boast of freedom of speech and action? Not by any means. Then what of their statement in regard to bulldozing of the elders at Lamoni? We who have seen both sides think we are in a position to know. It looks to us like a very ridiculous break for our Utah friends.

God forbid that any Latter Day Saint or any honest person should be led astray or compromise themselves by listening to and accepting the teachings of men advocating theories absurd, ridiculous; even though they may call themselves elders. Let us be independent; have a head of our own.

Ever praying for the ultimate triumph of truth and the redemption of all true Saints,

Your brother in Christ,
C. A. LAYTON.

TOPLIFF, UTAH.

A Testimony and a Reason.

To the Saints and Others in Western Iowa or Elsewhere: To those who have read the "Banditti of the prairie," now running in the Logan Observer, of Logan, Iowa, I desire to make the following statements: In this story Mr. Bonney makes it to appear that the Saints of Nauvoo under the leadership of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, were responsible for the horrible deeds which he takes upon himself to relate. For the benefit of all interested, whether investigator of the work, new member, or of whatever persuasion, I will make the assertion that I do not believe the Saints guilty on any one of the charges made. And now for the reason: From the year 1860 to 1885 as boy and man I lived among and was personally acquainted among others with those named below. Please understand that during the years named I did not believe the doctrines of the Saints. They were my neighbors and I knew them intimately and understood they had been with the Smiths, from Kirtland and Jackson County, Missouri, down to the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and had refused to follow Brigham Young to Utah, and had made them homes there in western Iowa.

I challenge the world to produce better men morally than those I shall name, and remember they had been for years under the spiritual, mental, and moral influence of Joseph

Smith and his compeers. In my immediate neighborhood during the years named lived until their death the Ellisons, Hankins, Schofields, Chapmans, Hallidays, Chambers, Bullards, Sweets, Lathams, Halls, Meffords, and on the west side of the county the Adamases, Merchants, Gamets, and others. Now in all these twenty-five years I say I never heard of a single shady or dishonorable act committed by a single individual named above. The worst charge ever handed out against them was that they were Mormons—terrible indeed! Again I challenge the world to pick at random thirteen non-Christians; watch them as the Saints are known to be watched for twenty-five years, and if all stand blameless at the end, why, then I will admit the teachings of the latter-day dispensation stand for nothing.

But now, even as it was with the ancient Saints, we see them maligned, persecuted, and despised, only because their faith and motives are misunderstood; and they are misunderstood because mankind is willing to be led by the influences which lead to evil, and evil only. Therefore, dear Saints, whoever you are, do not let false rumors disturb you. We know that truth will eventually prevail and each one receive according to his works. Then shall those who would destroy your faith now, be ashamed, condemned, relegated to that condition for which they have labored. Let us therefore give the more diligent heed to the faith and doctrine of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, resting on the assurance that our works do follow us, and that he that has promised is faithful to the fulfillment of every promise.

So there really is nothing to fear, except that we shall fail as individuals to come up to that condition desired by our Savior when he said, "Be ye perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." I believe Joseph and Hyrum Smith were indeed and in truth the accepted servants of the Most High, as witnessed by the lives of these men I have named and many others who for years were under the direct influence of the latter-day prophet.

Yours for fairness and truth,

ISAIAH M. DUNGAN.

CORBIN, MONTANA, November 2, 1909.

A Word from Sr. Alexander H. Smith.

Dear Saints and Friends: I have just returned from Colorado, where I spent the months of September and October visiting my sons, Joseph and Arthur and their families.

I brought with me from there, and find waiting here, many letters; letters that have been coming to me ever since last August, when the terrible blow fell that left me widowed; letters that speak of a world of comfort and sympathy; letters so kind and beautiful that I want to answer them all, but my sorrow bears hard on me, and not less as time has gone. As yet, I shrink from writing. Be assured of my appreciation and love, and know that your remembrance of me has brought strength and solace.

Some day I may grow more accustomed to this long, silent mission that holds my dear one from me; but now I feel the absence, so intense and silent, too keenly to write much.

Gratefully, hopefully yours,

ELIZABETH A. SMITH.

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, October 31. Lovely day, more like May than the last of October. Elder Pement occupied in the morning, enlarging on the theme, As Paul was called a heretic for preaching the doctrine of Christ, so we are called heretics for believing in the doctrine as taught by the Latter Day Saints, or the gospel of Christ. Are we all willing to show our colors at all times and places, even if we are considered deluded or weak minded? Elder Allen gave good instruction in the evening.

If all the HERALD readers did not see the account of our golden wedding in the Ensign, we desire to state that Bro. William and Sister Strange celebrated their fifty years of married life on Monday evening, the 25th of October. Thirty-one of the family were present, only one grandson being absent; four generations represented. The family comprise, besides the bride and groom, three sons and three daughters, all married, fifteen grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Quite a number of Saints and friends were present and all had a very enjoyable time. They have our prayers and best wishes, especially the aged couple.

The Gleaners met at the home of Sr. T. Vanderhoof, Thursday, November 4, in the capacity of a business meeting, and sustained their former officers, Sr. T. Vanderhoof, president; Sr. H. P. W. Keir, secretary and treasurer; but elected Sister Bradbrook as vice-president, that office not being filled recently. We trust that the officers will be able to do good work and accomplish a great deal of good.

A number of our people have been on the sick list, Sister McDurfee, Sr. Laura Sherman, and others, but are glad to note that they are improving.

We hope all will read the church papers. We know many are not; but they do not realize what they are missing. The good words said of Bro. J. F. Burton should inspire every one of us to do our best in each day's warfare.

"The lives of great men all remind us,
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing leave behind us
Foot-prints on the sands of time."

Conference Minutes.

EASTERN IOWA.—District convened the 25th and 26th of September, 1909, at Muscatine, Iowa. Branches reporting: Clinton, Fulton, Green Valley, Osterdock, Marion, Strawberry Point, Muscatine, Baldwin, Oran Center (now Oelwein Branch). Seventies reporting: James McKiernan, J. B. Wildermuth, L. E. Hills. Elders Warren Turner, C. G. Dykes; Priests D. L. Palsgrove, L. B. Moore, D. J. Dierks, Robert Smith. Bishop's agent, John Heide, reported: Total receipts $506.38, total expenditures $506.22, balance due church 16 cents. Robert Smith, secretary.

BRITISH ISLES.—Annual conference met in the East Manchester meeting house Mundy street, Lonsight, at 6 p. m., on July 30, 1909. President J. W. Rushton occupied the chair, assisted by Elders W. Newton, H. Greenwood, James Baty, and John Austin of Sheffield. George Foster of East Manchester, was elected deacon, to call others to assist, and J. W. Green and wife were chosen chorister and organist respectively. Minutes of the 1908 conference held at Cardiff were read and corrected. The mission president reported 53 additions by baptism during the year. He said there was marked improvement in some places and prospects for further additions were very favorable. Our missionary staff is small and statistics represent results largely of the activity of local brethren. He mentioned the return of missionaries Elders James Baillie and William Lewis to America, the former on account of home affairs, and the latter because of sickness in his family, and stated that the late General Conference had not added to our staff, but the Presidency had sent over Elder William Newton since conference, who would labor in the southwest of England. We have also Elder W. H. Greenwood who has not fully recovered his health. A mission has been opened up at Bradford (Yorks) where we have a small but faithful band of Saints and the mission is being worked by the Leeds brethren. We hope to have a branch in that city ere long. Bro. Rees Jenkins, seventy, has labored mostly in western Wales. My recent visit there impressed me very favorably. There are good opportunities in Aberaman, Porth, and Llanelly, and in the open air work. Brother Jenkins will continue there concentrating in the western district. There are several promising young men there who are gaining friends for the work. Bro. Thomas Taylor has concentrated his efforts in Sheffield. He has done a very fine work and aroused considerable interest. This has resulted in several baptisms, which have stimulated the work in Sheffield, and to a large extent resuscitated to all appearance a defunct branch in that city. Our brother has been supported by Brn. John Austin and Arber. Good interest has been aroused in Rotherham and Woodhouse, easily reached from Sheffield. Bro. Thomas Jones, who by the instruction of the late General Conference has recently been ordained to the office of high priest, has labored with effect in Plymouth. He has visited Exeter and since the beginning of the present year has labored in eastern Wales, where his labor has been well appreciated. Bro. Leggott labored in Scotland during autumn of 1908. He did some very good open air work there, distributing literature. I found that our brother's work had greatly impressed quite a number of persons when I visited Scotland shortly afterwards. During the year 1909 our brother has labored in the Manchester District, acting as president of the Northeastern Manchester Branch, and in charge of the open air work in the city of Manchester. In reviewing the work of the mission as a whole, I find the following places manifest the liveliest interest and represent the points where increase and success have followed the endeavors made: Sheffield, Enfield, Claycross, Sutton-in-Ashfield, Leeds, Plymouth, Aberaman, Porth, Northeastern Manchester. Stockport and North Manchester have lately been improving. There have been several added by baptism in Exeter. In this branch they have an admirable band of workers and what is very conspicuous is the consistency of the work done. Year after year the same steady work is performed, and when you remember that the president of the branch is a cripple and not one of the ministers is very well favored, so far as learning and ability is concerned, all credit is due to the Saints of this branch for the consistent manner in which they live their religion. In Scotland the work has all but died down, owing to the continued emigration of members of the church, the last being that of Brother Murray and family. I keep in touch with the few remaining who are not numerous enough to keep up branch organization. Brother Macpherson, of Glasgow, has been very busy during his holiday in conversing with people about our work and as a result I have about forty addresses given to me. To each of these I have sent a personal letter and some of our literature. The work generally in the Birmingham District leaves something to be desired. The only branch which seems to be really alive is the Priestley Road Branch, Birmingham. London is very low and we must make some effort there if we are to retain what little influence we have there. I have tried several times to get a good man who will do the necessary work as a missionary appointed there, but so far without success. I am trying to arrange for about five or six weeks' work in the open air along with Brother Leggott, if we can have the financial support necessary. The work in Cardiff is not in the state we should like to see it, and the president requests if we can at all, to help there by missionary labor. They need it, but it requires money for boarding the missionaries. In Lydney the work is very low and needs some effort to revive it. I am pleased to say that owing to the good work of Brother Trapp, in Gloucester, we were able a few weeks ago to organize a branch, and I am glad to say there is every prospect of a good, live church being established. We have prospects of a good work being done at Llanelly, but money is needed for the missionary effort, and also the renovation of the chapel, which is rapidly going to decay. In general there is prospect of increase in this mission with faithful and persistent effort. Besides enthusiasm and ability to repreent the doctrinal position of the church we need tact and judgment. Finally we trust that all will, to the best of their ability, do what they can financially and spiritually to assist us in the endeavors to spread a knowledge of the gospel of Christ which has been restored to us in these latter days. Elder Thomas Jones reports labor since July 31, 1908, in Cardiff, Lydney, Plymouth, Exeter, Gloucester, Bargoed, Pontllynn Nantyglo, Brynmawr, and Nantyglo. He had sown abundantly, but had not reaped abundantly. He had had trials and perplexities, considerable embarrassment and worry through financial matters. He attended 212 meetings, preached 96 times, distributed 1,702 tracts, administered to sick 18 times, blessed 4 children, baptized 3, confirmed 4, and ordained 2. Elder William Newton reported landing in Manchester on June 30. He had preached 3 times in the East Manchester Branch and attended other meetings twice in South Manchester, and twice in Northeastern Manchester. One young lady has given her name for baptism. Elder W. H. Greenwood reported labor in several parts of the Sheffield District and around Manchester. During the past three months he had labored in Leeds and Bradford. At the commencement of that period he had been elected president of the Wortley (Leeds) Branch and at the request of the president of the mission he has taken the oversight of the work in Bradford (Yorks). Here he had been helped by Priests A. Manderfield, H. Harper, J. H. Sykes, and William Williamson, who are willing to preach and fill rota-plan appointments in Wortley and Bradford. In the latter place reside Sisters Horton, Schofield, and Wormald, all of whom are earnest and faithful. In this place we are invited to fill appointments at the Friends' Adult Bible Class. I have an appointment for August 29. Elder Rees Jenkins reported that his labors were confined chiefly to the Western Wales District. Though the work is not very flourishing it is progressive. The secretary stated that a report had been received from Elder Thomas Taylor addressed to the president and he would present it on Monday.

Birmingham District was reported by Elder W. Ecclestone as not good spiritually. We have some good, energetic workers among us, but we do not seem to make the progress we would desire. The Birmingham Branch seems to make headway, but the other branches are at a standstill. Some members have lost interest. The majority of the brethren are sons of toil. We would like to see them spend their hard-earned money on that which brings satisfaction. Sheffield was reported by Elder John Austin as in good spiritual condition. Eastern Wales was reported by Elder Thomas Gould who said that some progress had been made during the past year. Several have been added by baptism. Three have been ordained to the office of elder and each one has been elected president of a branch. One branch has been organized at Gloucester with Bro. E. J. Trapp as president. Bro. Ben Green is president of the Cardiff Branch and Alfred Jones president of the Nantyglo Branch. The spiritual condition of the district is fairly good. The Manchester District was reported by Elder Henry Greenwood. There is room for improvement, and is much to be thankful for in the little progress made. There is much labor being performed which we hope will result in increase. Visitation of the members (by the officers) seems the thing most required. Western Wales was reported by John G. Jenkins to be in a prosperous condition, though there are a few black spots here and there. Our watchcare must be first for those who are striving to reach higher altitudes, for it is through them that we have to illuminate the dark recesses with the light divine. In some of the branches the brethren are holding outdoor services and are blessed. There is a better foundation for the upbuilding of the work than I have ever seen before. We need more missionaries. Our one missionary is doing what he can. The Wortley Leeds Branch was reported by Elder W. H. Greenwood, president, who said that he had pleasure in reporting improvement in the spiritual condition of the branch. Progress during the past three months was marked. Bro. Robert Rallings reported Sutton-in-Ashfield in a good spiritual condition with the exception of one or two who are lukewarm, and for whom he prayed. He had attended nearly 300 meetings and baptized 7. He had attended a good spiritual conference at Sheffield, where the president of the mission, J. W. Rushton, and Thomas Taylor were present. The Heavitree Branch, under the presidency of Elder H. Wilson, sends in a statistical return only, but we have reason to know that a good spiritual branch is established. There are 26 members. Elder James Baty, of the Manchester District, reported verbally, showing how he had fulfilled the duties of his office whenever he had been called upon. Elder Joseph R. Greenwood reported acting upon the lines of his calling as patriarch of the Birmingham District, in proportion to the will of the people. He had not ministered many blessings, but in other ways he had fulfilled his duty. His heart was still in the work. He found the Saints slow to discern the need of his ministration. The mission president next presented his report as book agent. He stated how he had taken this work over from Bro. Alfred Fysh, of Warrington, who still had tracts and pamphlets which had not yet been handed over to him. Business had not been brisk, and he thought it advisable that the conference should appoint another who would be able to devote his time to the work. Bro. J. W. Rushton next announced the arrangements made for the Sunday services and procession.

The committee on letters of condolence reported as follows: "We your brethren report that we have, according to your instructions, written and forwarded letters of condolence to J. Dewsnup, sr., of Manchester, and C. H. Caton, of Sheffield, copies of which are in the hands of the mission secretary." Signed, J. W. Rushton, H. Greenwood, W. R. Armstrong. The committee on mission rules reported: "We your brethren report that we have not yet completed the revision of the mission rules and therefore ask for further time. We respectfully suggest that the name of the mission president be added to the present committee." Signed, J. W. Taylor, W. R. Armstrong. The report was received and the requests granted.

At 10.30 a. m. on Sunday, August 1, the Saints met in the Longsight public hall. The chair was occupied by Elder W. H. Greenwood, assisted by Elder J. G. Jenkins. The speakers were Elder Rees Jenkins who labored to prove that love and righteousness needed to be shown in our lives by the doing of the commandments. The discourse was highly spiritual and practical. At 2 p. m. the Saints met in our East Manchester room, Longsight, for the purpose of holding our procession. This was greatly interfered with by heavy rainstorms. Our dear Sister Green, upon whom fell much of the work of providing the children with baskets, etc., took disappointment bravely. The chair was taken by Elder James Baty. The school exercises were led by District Superintendent Elder S. F. Mather, full of the old time fire, who was ably assisted by Elder J. W. Green and wife. Remarks suitable to the occasion were made. The front of the platform was lined with baskets of natural flowers, and if we did get showers of rain without, we certainly got showers of blessing within. A good, old-fashioned fellowship meeting at 3 and many warm and cheering testimonies were borne to the strengthening of the Saints. At 6.30 p. m. the meeting was in charge of Elder Henry Greenwood, assisted by Elders William Newton and W. R. Armstrong. Matthew 18 and President Joseph Smith's proclamation of 1861 were read by the secretary of the mission. The speaker was Elder J. W. Rushton, who offered prayer, asking for an inspired message to deliver to the people. He then read John 3 and discoursed for about an hour. At 10.45 a. m. on Monday, August 2, conference again met; President J. W. Rushton occupied the chair, assisted by William Newton and Henry Greenwood. Two letters from Elder Thomas Taylor, in which he refused to recognize the British Isles Mission conference, were read, when it was resolved that we report the action of Bro. Thomas Taylor to his quorum, expressing our regret that the brother has put himself out of harmony with his brethren, the missionaries, the local ministry, and members of this mission, and this mission conference, which is recognized by the church. At 2.15 p. m. Bro. J. W. Rushton occupied the chair, assisted by Brethren Newton and Greenwood. It was now resolved that an auditing committee be appointed to examine the financial secretary's accounts and report to this conference. Elders James Waugh and Thomas Brien were appointed for this purpose. The following report from the Seventh Quorum of Elders was next read and approved. "We the Seventh Quorum of Elders report progress. Second Counselor J. W. Taylor having resigned, S. F. Mather was chosen to fill his place. The president, J. E. Meredith, requested Elder James Baty, sr., William Newton, and Henry Greenwood to attend to the ordination." The report of the Sixth Quorum of Priests was presented, accepted, and spread upon the minutes. It was decided that the place of holding next annual conference be left with the mission authorities. Mission officers were sustained by vote, after which it was resolved that we appoint a standing committee to audit the financial accounts. This proved to be Bro. T. Brien for three years, Bro. James Waugh for two years, and Bro. S. F. Mather for one year. A communication from the late Presiding Patriarch, Alexander H. Smith, was now read to the meeting by Bro. James Baty, evangelical minister of the Manchester District. Votes of thanks were given the East Manchester Branch for hospitality; the catering committee for the way they attended to our wants. The Sunday school authorities and the procession committee for arduous labors, by a unanimous vote; to George Foster, the conference deacon, and his assistants; to the chorister and organist, Bro. and Sr. J. W. Green. The financial secretary reported: "I have received during the year cash, £19 13s. 4d. including subscriptions to the One Thousand Shillings Fund, conference collections, and tracts sold. The expenditure for the same period has been £23 19s. 6½d. The One Thousand Shillings Fund shows receipts for £14 10s. 4½d. The tract account shows receipts (including 5-11 balance from the year 1908) cash 11-3. The expenditure shows 3-4 has been spent, thus leaving a balance to carry forward next year of 7-11. The conference account for Cardiff shows receipts £4 17s. 10½d. Expenditure £21 5s. 11d., leaving a deficit of £16 8s. ½d. The deficit upon the whole of the accounts is met by drawing from the balance which was in hand at the end of the year 1907 and 1908 and leaves us with a balance to go forward with in the year 1909 and 1910 of £9 12s. 10½d. Of course out of this balance we have to meet within the next few days the whole of the expenditure of the present conference. Trusting my work has given satisfaction to the body.—Elder Joseph Dewsnup. The auditors presented the following: "We your committee appointed to audit the books of the financial secretary of the mission, report to your honorable body that we have done so from August 1, 1908, to July 31, 1909, and find them correct. The books are kept in such an admirable manner that they show at a glance every item of expenditure. Our brother deserves the highest praise for his work in this regard. James Waugh and Thomas Brien." Reports of the financial secretary and auditing committee were received and the committee was discharged. Brother Rushton stated that the One Thousand Shillings Fund had not interfered with the incoming of the tithes and offerings, for they had received more since the fund has been in vogue. In answer to a question put by Brother Meredith respecting a circular letter issued by the financial secretary wherein he stated that a change would be made in the catering of this conference, Brother Dewsnup stated that the funds of the mission were very low prior to the holding of the conference. This gave the officers some concern and the result was that we resorted to the method adopted at this conference. As the Bishop's agent, he thought a Saints' first duty was to pay tithing, the second to help his branch, and the third to help the One Thousand Shillings Fund. At 6 p. m. business was resumed. Brother Rushton presided, assisted by Elders William Newton and Henry Greenwood. Resolved, That this conference hereby express its opinion that these annual conferences are very necessary to the spiritual uplifting of the people and hereby approve the system of the One Thousand Shillings Fund for raising the means for conference expenses and pledging it to do all in its power to support the same. Resolved, That the balance, after defraying conference expenses, be used at the discretion of the presidency of the mission for the printing of tracts suitable for mission work. Resolved, That the conference of the British Isles Mission respectfully petition General Conference, to be next held in Independence, Missouri, 1910, to consider the legality of these mission conferences and express the same by resolution. President, J. W. Rushton; Secretary, William R. Armstrong.

Convention Minutes.

LONDON.—Convention of the London District met in London, Ontario, October 14, 1909. Was called at 2.30 p. m., by District President John Judkins. District presidency was chosen to preside; J. L. Berger as secretary, and Maud Cambridge as organist. Usual order of business was cared for. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, John Judkins, London; vice-president R. J. Farthing; secretary, Lucy Yerks; treasurer, Ruth Greer; librarian, J. Winegarden; home class superintendent, Ida Bannister. Owing to the dividing of the old district, the convention was small. A good spirit and feeling prevailed. In the evening a suitable and profitable entertainment was given. When the convention adjourned, it did so to meet 9 a. m. on Friday previous to and at the same place as district conference. Lucy Yerks, secretary.

We can not ourselves find happiness until we have taught others the way.—Success.

Conference Notices.

Conference of the Idaho District will be held at Boise, Idaho, November 27 and 28, 1909. Let all branch reports reach our district secretary, I. Condit, Bliss, Idaho, in time for conference. Let the local ministry also report. Saints coming to conference can call on Bro. R. C. Owen, at 808 Eastman street, near corner of Eighth and Eastman streets. William Glauner, president.

Pastoral.

The ministry of Mission No. 1 will please remember that to be prompt in reporting it will be necessary to send reports for present quarter not later than January 1, 1910. From Brethren Crabb and Joshua Carlile I did not receive reports for last quarter. March 1, 1910, will be the last report for the year and on that date I will be glad to get a report from every local man in the mission, for the year.

Notice to the Priesthood.

The Lamoni Stake quorum of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons will meet in joint session at the Brick Church on Sunday, November 28, at 2.30 p. m. All members of these quorums are requested to be present. The subject for consideration will be a study of section 128, Doctrine and Covenants.

PROGRAM COMMITTEE.

A Wonderful News Service.

Have you ever paused to think what a marvelous organization must be necessary to lay before you each day an accurate account of the happenings of yesterday in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia, the islands of the sea and the whole expanse of our own continent, all in a single newspaper? The intricate network of cables and telegraph lines, the complicated chain of news-gathering agencies stretching across continents and oceans, the innumerable reporters working daily for you under tropic suns and over arctic snows—have you ever felt the romantic thrill of it all in reading a great modern newspaper such as The Chicago Record-Herald? We mention this paper especially because of the completeness of its domestic and foreign news service. It has a correspondent in every town or city of importance in the United States, a veritable army of them in all. In addition it has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world-wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news; also that of the New York World and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that of the great coöperative newsgathering organization, the Associated Press. With such a vast and complete news service it is not strange that The Record-Herald so easily holds its own as one of the great newspapers of the world.

A Study in American Freemasonry.

Based upon Pike's Morals and Dogmas of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, Mackey's Masonic Ritualist, The Encyclopædia of Freemasonry, and other American Masonic standard works. Edited by Arthur Preuss. Second edition, published by B. Herder, 17 South Broadway, Saint Louis, Missouri, 1908. Price $1.50.

This book gives, among other information, a history of Masonry, its meaning of the cross, the significance of "G," its books of faith, its altars and religion, its morality, and its antiquity.

The study also shows the probable origin of the Adam-god idea and the male and female principle, or father-mother theory of the Godhead as advocated by the Brighamites. It is written in a calm, argumentative manner, giving authorities for all the allegations the author makes, so that no offense is felt by a Mason while reading it. The connection of Freemasonry with the Roman Catholic Church before the edict of excommunication by Pope Clement XII in 1738, shows the family relationship, and accounts for the similarity of practices and usages of both organizations.

A Study in American Freemasonry, also contains reasons why Latter Day Saints should not affiliate with any oath-bound secret combination to get gain. I commend the book to those who are interested in the subject. Please mention SAINTS' HERALD when answering this advertisement.

Text: "Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the Most High."—Psalm 50: 14.

I feel that this is a solemn and sacred occasion; in fact, any occasion is solemn and sacred when an intelligent people meet to offer thanksgiving to a great and loving God. Thanksgiving is one of the highest types of prayer. We go to God and ask him for something, and the motive that prompts the prayer may be selfish, but when we have received that for which we prayed and come back to return thanks, it is because we are prompted by gratitude, one of the noblest traits of the human heart. I say that this is a solemn and a sacred occasion if our thanksgiving is sincere and from the heart. If it is not sincere it is a hollow mockery. I trust to-day, while there may be many who will observe the day simply as an occasion of feasting and holiday, that all over this broad land there are many hearts that will be moved to count their blessings over and be truly grateful to their God.

THE LIFE UNDER THE FOUNDATION STONE.

This holding of an annual thanksgiving, or harvest home festival, has become a great institution in the land, and it is like all other institutions, if we trace it to its source we shall discover a certain important fact. It is said that the ancient Slavs had the custom that when they erected any important building they would place under the first foundation stone some living creature. It was their idea, I suppose, that by so doing they would impart life to the inanimate structure so that it would grow in majesty and vitality. One Russian painter has taken this for his theme. In his painting we see in the foreground a pit that has been prepared to receive an immense corner stone, while at a little distance there stands a woman, beautiful and instinct with life and vitality. She is struggling with several men who are forcing her towards the opening in the ground. She struggles and screams and pleads but there is no relenting in their stern faces. The lot has been cast and she is destined to be buried alive under that huge corner stone.

In a broader and better sense when we look under any human institution we find the life of one or more men or women; and the institution is perpetual and strong and enduring in proportion as they put into it vitality and force of character.

When we look under this institution of our annual Thanksgiving Day we find the stern, yet pious Pilgrim Fathers. We are told that the first Thanksgiving to be observed in America under the present civilization was in 1621. A certain man by the name of George Morton in writing a private letter from Plymouth used this language:

Our harvest being gotten in, Governor Bradford sent four men on fowling, that so we might after a special manner rejoice together after we had gathered the fruit of our labor. They four in one day collected as much fowl as with a little help besides served the company almost a week.

A STRIKING SCENE IN AMERICAN HISTORY.

This was the first Thanksgiving Day, and we note that Chief Massasoit with about ninety of his Indian braves came in and met with the white men and feasted with them for about three days. Now there is a picture in American history that is worthy of our consideration. Here we find these dusky Indian braves with Massasoit at their head, representing in a way the many, many tribes of red men then holding dominion over this broad continent, the Algonquins, the Iroquois, the Sioux, the Cherokees, the Seminoles, the Delawares. With them met these few white men, the first waves of the great deluge of civilization that was to sweep over this land and submerge and almost destroy the red men. Before the struggle for the possession of this great continent began they met together and feasted and gave thanks and then the red men faded away into the dusky forest and the white men went to their homes.

But think of the character of those Pilgrim Fathers, who, hemmed in as they were between the savage red men and the deep sea, cut off from resources and comforts of their home land, could meet together and offer thanksgiving to God for the benefits that they had received. They had landed on this continent the year previous, one hundred and twenty of them, and during the winter one half of their number had died and they had suffered great hardship; but now when Providence began to smile on them the first thought that came into their minds was one of gratitude.

These were the men who "made the sounding aisles of the dim woods ring to the anthem of the free."

AN EXPERIMENT IN COMMUNISM.

While it is entirely foreign to the subject that I have in mind this morning, I want to digress to give you a little item connected with their work, because I feel that it will interest some of the church members who are assembled here. These men who assembled at Plymouth under Governor John Carter (who died during the first year) established a system of pure communism. They tilled the soil in common and everything that they raised they cast into a common storehouse, and then each one took out as he had need. Professor Ely mentions this in his studies in the Evolution of Industrial Society, and it seems that under this system they did not get from the soil the returns that they ought to have received. It continued until they were forced to adopt another system, and Professor Ely quotes from the history of the colony as written by Governor Bradford, as follows:

So they begane to thinke how they might raise as much corne as they could, and obtaine a better croupe then they had done, that they might not still thus languish in miserie. At length, after much debate of things, the Govr. (with ye advise of ye cheefest amongst them) gave way that they should set corne every man for his owne perticuler, and in that regard trust to them selves; in all other things to goe on in ye generall way as before. And so assigned to every family a parcell of land, according to the proportion of their number for that end, only for present use (but made no devisision for inheritance) and ranged all boys & youth under some familie. This had very good success; for it made all hands very industrious, so as much more corne was planted then other waise would have bene by any means ye Govr or any other could use, and saved him a great deall of trouble, and gave farr better contente.

You will notice that these men (as we believe directed by wisdom and under a certain degree of inspiration) anticipated to an extent the very system that God later instituted for the giving of stewardships to men according to their circumstances and abilities and then using the surplus that some would produce for the help of those in need. It is interesting to note this the first experiment in communism pure and simple to be made on this continent under our civilization (the first so far as we know) and the later experiment in allotting stewardships. The second system to be adopted worked very well, for under it men were given a little land to manage and plan over for themselves, and as a result they threw into their work all their energy, and results were much better for the community than under the former system.

The first colonies observed thanksgiving days at intervals. At the close of the Revolutionary War Congress appointed a day of thanksgiving. George Washington appointed a day of thanksgiving after the Constitution of the United States was adopted; and since the year 1863 the President has annually appointed a day to be observed throughout the entire land.

I want to present for your consideration two themes. You know those dry old preachers two or three generations ago had their firstly, their secondly, and their thirdly, and about when they reached their thirdly the people went to sleep and the beadle had to go around and rap them on the head to arouse them in time for the benediction. But you will not go to sleep on thirdly this morning, because there is not going to be any thirdly. Simply firstly, What have we to be thankful for? and secondly, How shall we express our thanksgiving?

WHAT HAVE WE TO BE THANKFUL FOR?

In regard to this question of being thankful there are various attitudes of mind, as there are on other questions. I go out onto the street to-day and meet various classes of men. I meet one man who is smiling and cheerful, and I say, "What have you to be thankful for?"

"Oh," he says, "I have so many things that I haven't time to tell you all."

I meet another man hastening to his work and stop him to say, "Brother, what have you to be thankful for?"

He says, "Well, I haven't really given it a thought. I haven't had time."

"Haven't you got your home?"

"Yes."

"Haven't you got your wife?"

"Yes."

"Haven't you got your children?"

"Yes."

"And your work?"

"Yes."

"Well, then, you have something to be thankful for, and you should take time to express your gratitude."

I meet a woman busy with her work, and I ask her, "Sister, have you anything to be thankful for?"

She says, "I don't know. I haven't given it a thought."

"Haven't you got your home and your husband and your children and your work? Hadn't you ought to take the time to be thankful?"

I meet another sister, and she possibly expresses the sincere feeling of some hearts not usually expressed in words. I say, "Sister, what have you to be thankful for?"

She answers, "I haven't got a thing in the world to be thankful for."

"Haven't you got your home?"

"Yes, and it keeps me drudging from morning till night. I simply have to bake and stew and boil and fry and sweep and dust and sew and knit and darn from morning till night." (I don't know whether the stenographer got all of that or not, but anyhow you sisters can tell that it is not the beginning of the work that a woman has to do.)

"Haven't you got your children?"

"Yes, and the little brats pester the life almost out of me."

"Haven't you got your husband?"

"Yes, and he is the chief reason why I am not thankful to-day."

Now, I will tell you, you ought to have the experience, you and your husband, that they have had in Cherry, Illinois; your husband down in a burning mine three hundred feet and you tearing your hair out in the fear that he would never escape. At the end of seven days if he got out you would think more of each other than you do now.

Possibly it will do us a little good to think of the condition of those people that we have been reading about during the last few days. Not that I want to sanction the thought that our happiness should be more intense because of the thought that others are in misery. God knows that a realization of the sin and suffering there is in the world tends to subdue the hearts of thinking men on a day like this. I suppose that there will never be a day of perfect rejoicing until pain and death shall be driven from the world. But when we think about the things that those people suffered, it calls our attention to the blessings that we are enjoying, and we can be truly grateful to God for that which we have received.

If we may, we will picture the scene in that mining town in Illinois. It is Saturday. The miners are down in the earth at their work; the women are engaged in their work at home.

Suddenly the cry runs through the village, "The Saint Paul mine is on fire!"

Every woman and child rushes towards the mine, and among them there is one we notice, Mrs. Eddy, who hastens to the scene of the accident. She runs here and there, asking this one and that one, "Have you seen my husband?"

Finally one answers, "Yes, at the first alarm he leaped into the cage and went down into the mine to help rescue the miners."

"And didn't he come back?"

"No, and he can't come back. The hoisting shaft is on fire."

And so for seven days and nights this woman, with others, suffers all the anguish that the human heart can picture. She hangs around the mine by day and by night. She sees them seal it over with timbers and sand, thus apparently cutting off the last hope. She asks of the mining experts, and the geologists, "Is there not some hope?"

And they all say, "No, every man in the mine died during the first twenty-four hours. But she and the other women insist, "They are still alive."

That is the faith that is in the hearts of many, and faith knows more than science does sometimes. Science said that Lazarus could not come forth, but faith said that he could. And so she pleads with God for his delivery. He is down there in the mine starving and she can not get bread to him. He is dying for the lack of air and she has millions of miles of it.

But when seven days have passed and they are bringing up the dead the cry comes up from the pit, "We are bringing up living men!"

They lead them forth one by one so wrapped in blankets that the crowd can not identify them.

But some man who can not keep a secret shouts, "We've got George Eddy here!" and the wife cries out, "George, is it you? I am here waiting for you."

I will guarantee that the sky looked blue to George Eddy and his wife. That dingy mining village looked like paradise to them. She had time to leave her sewing and sweeping and baking to wait for him then.

One sister said to me, "I have always had the habit of running to the gate to meet my husband, and some have told me that I should be getting his dinner ready instead of running to meet him; that the way to a man's heart is by way of his stomach. What do you think about it?"

"Well," I said, "if your husband wants a wife you are all right. If he is simply thinking about his stomach, he had better get a hired girl or go to the cafe, or he might take the advice that was given by a waiter to a certain individual who was very fond of green corn, and kept ordering corn until he had cobs piled all around his plate. The waiter finally touched him on the shoulder and said, "Say, mister, it would be cheaper for you to board at a livery stable."

Now, possibly it will do us good as men and women to think of the experiences of those people in Cherry, Illinois, and be a little more kind to each other ere the daylight is taken away from our eyes.

THE FIRST GREAT THANKSGIVING DAY.

What have we to be thankful for? I have had some people come to me with this idea. They say that the world is so full of wickedness, sorrow, and degradation that it is not right to be glad and thankful. "Why," they say, "I can not understand the condition of things. I do not see why God permits so much suffering to exist in the world."

Well, we can only understand the present in the light of the past and the future, and I go away back in the history of time to the dawn of creation and we are told in the book of Job (thirty-fifth chapter) that when God laid the foundation stones of the world the "morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." That was the first great Thanksgiving Day, and they never would have shouted for joy had they not known that the good that would come to humanity would overbalance the evil and the sorrow and the sin.

I look into the future to the time that John saw, to that next great Thanksgiving Day when the voice as of many waters shall be heard shouting "Hallelujah!" and when the new earth shall come and all sin and sorrow shall be banished, and God shall make his habitation with us and every tear shall be wiped from every eye. And so I say that we have cause to be thankful. We can be thankful.

We can not enumerate all the blessings we have to be thankful for,—shelter and clothing and food, human associates, the companionship of the Saints, and the blessed gospel that has been intrusted to our care. Nor must we forget the inalienable right that God has given us to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," and that we live in an age and in a place where we have the best opportunity ever given to anyone to enjoy life, to have liberty, and to engage in the pursuit of happiness. We can not enumerate our blessings.

HOW SHALL WE EXPRESS OUR GRATITUDE.

Now, how shall we express our gratitude? How shall we be thankful? "Well," some one says, "in the orthodox way. Make a feast and bake a turkey, load the table down and eat until you are almost dead." Yes, we might go to the table and ask the blessing that the little boy did who said, "Lord, have mercy on these victuals," and we might add, "Have mercy on those who eat."

Two little boys were engaged in a fight. It was the day after Thanksgiving. A third little boy stood watching them and a stranger came along.

"What are these boys fighting for?" asked the stranger.

"Well," said the other boy, "each one insists that he was the sickest after he ate his Thanksgiving dinner."

Now we are to be thankful. That does not necessarily mean full of turkey. The man with the biggest turkey is not always the most thankful. While it is all right to eat a good meal, because this is a day of feasting, that does not properly express our gratitude to God.

IN SONG AND PRAYER.

There are three ways that come to my mind in which we can express that thankfulness. The first of these we have already employed. It is mentioned in the ninety-fifth Psalm: "O come, let us sing unto the Lord; let us make a joyful noise to the Rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms."

That is one way of returning thanks to God, in prayer and by the hymns that we sing, because the hymn sung in a proper way is a prayer to God.

We turn to Luke 17: 12-17 and we find a picture of the ten lepers. There they stood, outcasts from society, compelled to sound their warning cry, "Unclean! unclean!" whenever anyone came near, and as they saw the Master passing by they cried out to him. And he in his power and mercy reached forth his hand and told them they should be healed, to go and show themselves unto the priests and be cleansed. They went away healed, but only one of the ten ever came back to thank him. He said, "Were not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?"

I trust that the proportion is not that small among us. That having received the blessings that we have received this year, it shall not be said of us that only one in ten came to God with sincere thanks.

And so as the emblem of the first mode of expression I might hold in my hand the Saints' Hymnal from which we often sing these words of praise:

"Praise ye the Lord, 'tis good to raise Your hearts and voices in his praise."

THE AMERICAN DOLLAR.

And second emblem is the great American dollar. If the shelves of the merchant are groaning with cloth, and the granaries of the farmer are bursting with grain, they can transform these material things by way of our currency and make them sound the praises of God.

The clink of these dollars when they fall in the tills of the church to go towards feeding the poor and the preaching of the gospel and the purchasing of lands in Zion,—the clink of these dollars sounds sweet in the ears of God.

THE CUP OF COLD WATER.

And the third emblem that I might hold up before you would be a cup of cold water. The Master said that if we give even a cup of cold water in his name we shall not lose our reward.

This cup of cold water is simply a type of service rendered to humanity. We do not need to take it literally. If some individual comes to our door on a hot August day and we give him a cup of cold water, that is the literal fulfillment of that promise or statement, just as it was when following one of the great battles of our civil war the Union soldiers retreating from the battlefield went straggling through a village and the girls and women stood at gates and handed to them cups of cold water, bread and butter, and various other things they had in store.

SANCTUARY.

Whoever thou art that enterest this church,
Remember it is the house of God;
Be reverent, be silent, be thoughtful;
And leave it not without a prayer to God
For thyself, for him who ministers,
And those who worship here.—Central Church Bulletin, W. E. LaRue, editor.

TOLD ON THE PREACHER.

Rev. Daniel Isaacs once alighted at an inn to stay the night. On asking for a bed he was told he could not have one, as there was to be a ball that evening, and all the beds were engaged.

"At what time does the ball break up?" asked Mr. Isaacs.

"About three in the morning, sir."

"Well, then, can I have a bed until that time?"

"Yes, certainly; but if the bed is asked for you will have to remove."

"Very well," replied Mr. Isaacs, and away he went to get between the sheets.

About three in the morning he was awakened by a loud knocking at his chamber door.

"What do you want?" he asked.

"How many are there of you in there?" inquired a voice.

"There's me, and Daniel, and Mr. Isaacs, and an old Methodist preacher," was the reply.

"Then there's plenty of you." And the speaker passed on.—Selected.

"Pardon me, Doctor Nextly, but it is simply preposterous for you to want to marry my daughter. You are more than twice as old as she is." "I know that, Mr. Sykes, but when she has been a preacher's wife ten or fifteen years she will look fully as old as I do."—Chicago Tribune.

Little Dot—"Our minister prays ever so much louder than yours does."

Little Bub—"I don't care if he does. Our minister jumps the highest when he preaches. So there, now."—Literary Digest.

* * * * *

WHY SOME PREACHERS SUCCEED.

Just a word at the beginning. Victory costs. The price must always be paid for delivery. "When you see a man," Sam P. Jones used to say, "standing at the top of the hill, he has climbed there; he hasn't lit." We wear our own robes and we forge our own crowns. "Let no man take your crown," means, then, let no man take your allotted work away from you. He who takes your work takes your crown. "Ye are my joy and my crown," because the converts were the result of faith and toil and sacrifice. All true men climb to success. The business man does. The physician does. The politician does. The commercial man does. Is the preacher to be discounted? The business man's hours are long, his anxiety at the top notch, his responsibility real and his effort steady. The physician carries his patients in his heart, attends to every call, does repugnant things and scarcely ever complains. Talk to a commercial man, and he will tell you how he travels on freights and "plugs," puts up at all kinds of hotels, puts up with all kinds of rebuffs, studies human nature, suits himself to every customer—all to win. The politician lies awake at night, wondering what he can do to win and how best to push the campaign, and how to please. Why should the minister expect an easy time? One word more: The minister should know at the start that his one business is to save men. All his preaching, all his studies and visits, all his labors and amusements, all his habits, all his recreation, must bear upon that. If this conviction is not the deepest in his nature, he must fail. For this he is paid. He must not be an idler. He must study men and truth continually. He must strive as much as in him lies. When he does this he can let God take care of the results. But if he does not all he can for the salvation of souls, he is obtaining money under false pretenses, and he ought to feel bad about it, as the congregation is sure to.

If a man be not a hard worker in the ministry, it is conclusive proof that he does not believe his own message; and to stay in the ministry of the gospel, when one is an infidel to the power of the gospel to save, is hard work and fruitless work. Some preachers manifest:

1. The fundamental elements of Christian character, and succeed because they are manifestly good men. But as it takes more than a good woman, these days, to be a good wife, it takes more than a good man to be a good minister, too. John the Baptist's work was to prepare the people for the coming of the Lord, and the business of the preacher is to secure by every honorable means the reception of the message, and to remove from every man, so far as is in his power by a brave and manly life, every obstruction to its reception. When he lives the life, he lives the message. But when he does not, it is proof that he does not believe the message he proclaims to others.

No lie spoken can be noble;
An acted lie must be ignoble.

"Lame men healed" as of old is still the novel argument for Christianity. It must ever be.

2. Some succeed because they are hard workers. They love work—the harder, the better. There are professional obligations on a minister to "study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed," as well as religious reasons. The world is making rapid progress in everything.

"My! how this world is moving on
Beneath the sun and moon;
I can't help thinking I was born
A hundred years too soon."

wrote Frank L. Stanton.

Worldlings depise a lazy minister. They expect him to be a worker. They work—work very hard. These men of business rise early and toil late. They are keeping up with the times and competition in all departments. Take that man who is a lawyer. He naturally asks whether a man who has the spiritual estate of men to deal with ought not to be as industrious as one who has to deal only with temporal estates. Take the physician. He naturally asks whether a man who has "the care of souls" ought to be less strictly engaged than he who has only the care of bodies. These men of mental and bodily labor reasonably depise an idler in any department, particularly in a calling the most pressing and important. A lazy man has no business in the pulpit.

3. Some succeed because they rise early to study. They prepare themselves for the pulpit. The minister has to deal with the most complex and profound questions of life and destiny. He must read the scriptures, biography, history and experiences—especially his own—and he must discuss these, not so as to merely entertain or satisfy the intellects of his hearers, but to make them better and arouse them to action. He is an utter failure if he does not make these discussions intensely profitable to their souls. A lawyer is a failure who never carries a case, however much he may entertain the court and the jury. A physician is a failure, however much he may entertain the intellect of his patients, if they all die. The French physician is a good illustration in point: He asked an English surgeon how many operations he had of the kind. The English physician said that he had ten of the sort referred to, "and I am pleased to say all got well." "Oh," said the French surgeon, with a shrug of his shoulders, "I have had one hundred." "One hundred, indeed," said the English doctor; "how many did you save?" "Oh, I did not save any, but the operation was beautiful," said the French surgeon. Some preachers preach like the French surgeon operates.

4. Some preachers succeed because they use common sense. They think often on their feet. Preachers are approached sometimes as if they had neither good sense nor horse sense. A minister was invited to witness an operation, upon the invitation of the surgeon, on one of his patients. He remarked, when everything was ready, "Doctor, don't you think we had better open him with prayer?" A farmer asked a young city minister to grease the carriage while he got the horses. When the farmer returned he said to the preacher, "Have you greased the carriage?" "Yes, I have greased everything except the things the wheels run on and I can't get at them," was the answer. Have you never been humiliated because of the lack of good sense in a preacher? I have.

5. Some preachers succeed because they have impressed the community with the fact that they are high-toned gentlemen. They are all-around gentlemen. He has an unseen and unconscious influence in society. He can not be "a cipher with the rim rubbed out" there. He must buy his food and raiment. He must trade in the stores. He must use money. He must neither be lavish with it nor stingy with it. A grasping, stingy minister is contemptible. He must not, on the other hand, allow the other fellow to cheat him. He ought to know his rights and quietly and kindly maintain them. A grocer or an insurance man, or any man, who has "fooled" the preacher during the week, is not likely to have much respect for him on Sunday. A preacher is depised who does not take care of himself and "play the man." While all this is true, the preacher must never "stand up for his rights," or resent injuries, or injure others. The Lord will repay. The highest right is the right to yield that right to others. They must never keep men out of their dues longer than they can help. I personally know that it is not always possible to meet one's obligations. But the preacher must never take advantage of kindness or trade on it to the hurt of himself or his creditor.—James Small in Christian Standard.

"Many a young man thrown for the first time into the whirlpool of business, and seeing evidences of dishonest dealings on the part of those whom he has previously trusted, comes to doubt whether there is any such thing as honesty in the world. Happy is that young man if he can say to himself: 'I know that I am honest. Therefore I know that elsewhere there must be honest folk, whether it is my lot to meet with them or not.' Nature makes no monstrosities wholly without connection with the rest of her work. The boy or man who thoroughly believes in himself can never entirely lose that faith in humanity without which all effort is paralyzed."

"The faith which has no difficulties is scarcely worthy of the name of faith at all. It is the faith in the blue sky while all around are storm and ruin, that counts—the faith of the young bird in the sunny land to the south which it has never seen, but toward which it flies with the first signs of winter."

THE SAINTS' HERALD HISTORICAL SERIES.

VIII. THE CHURCH IN JACKSON COUNTY, MISSOURI.
BY PRESIDENT FREDERICK M. SMITH.

PRESIDENT F. M. SMITH.

Portions of history are sorrowfully read, and painfully recorded by the historian. We fain would pass over with little or no mention of some of the happenings of the past wherein human frailty is apparent, were the past alone concerned. It has been said that a historian can not be kind, he must record things as they were as nearly as possible; but a faithful record of past mistakes is at times most kind when viewed in the light of the lesson the record might have for the present or future.

There is a chapter which must appear in any history of Missouri which is regretfully read, painfully written, by any citizen of the State who is jealous of its fair name. The treatment of the "Mormons" by the Missourians is far too replete with error, and particularly the treatment by citizens of Jackson County, as the members of the then new religious institution with their peculiar religious views, came into this then frontier State seeking a refuge from unfortunate persecutions which seemed to follow them, during the early thirties, before Kansas City was, only a few short years after Independence received its charter.

Men have long been prone to kill their neighbor because they differed from him in their idea of God, and all religions or churches in incipient stages have been subjected to persecution. But who shall say that the "Mormons" have and do not meet more than their share?

ORIGIN OF THE CHURCH.

This peculiar sect originated in Western New York, through the religious experiences of Joseph Smith, which began when he was a mere lad. He has told us that he became religiously wrought upon by some revival meetings, and through prayer sought a solution of the problem of which church to join. In answer to his prayer, he states in his history, he was visited by a "heavenly messenger," who told him to join none of the then existing churches, as they were all wrong and "their creeds an abomination" in the sight of God,—a sweeping statement which when he repeated it was sure to bring upon him the bitter opposition and resentment of zealous devotees of the churches of that day. Following the admonition received, he joined none of the churches represented at the revival meetings which had so wrought upon him, but on April 6, 1830, with five others, he organized a church, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. That same year the Book of Mormon appeared, Joseph Smith and his followers claiming it to be an account of the prehistoric inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere, which account Joseph translated by divine assistance from some golden plates which he found in the earth where they had been deposited by the last historian of the pre-Columbian Americans many centuries ago. On the plates, he claimed, were engraved "reformed Egyptian" characters, which he by a peculiar gift from God was enabled to translate. He also claimed that a heavenly messenger, John the Baptist, had conferred upon him the priesthood of God which had long ago been taken from the earth because of transgression.

Joseph Smith and his followers were vigorous proselytizers, and converts were made rapidly, several "branches" or local churches of the faith being organized in New York and Pennsylvania.

MOVING ZIONWARD.

Shortly after the organization of the church, the leaders left New York State and moved westward, settling at Kirtland, Ohio, Joseph Smith moving his family the latter part of January, 1831; and Kirtland for a time became headquarters.

In the early part of 1831, P. P. Pratt and other elders of the church left Kirtland and went westward on a mission. In about four months they reached Independence, Missouri, where, their account informs, two of their number went to work as tailors, the others moving on west across the frontier to do missionary work among the Indians, or "Lamanites" as they called them.

Oliver Cowdery, one of this band of missionaries, wrote a letter back east which was shortly afterward published in one of the "Mormon" church publications. It was dated "Kaw Township, Missouri, May 7, 1831," and described the conditions then existing here. In June, 1831, Joseph Smith and a company of the "Saints" left Kirtland, Ohio, bound for Independence, Missouri, where they arrived the middle of July, going by wagon and canal boat to Cincinnati, thence by steamer to Saint Louis, and from Saint Louis some going on foot to Independence, reaching there shortly before the remainder of the company who waited at Saint Louis for boat. This was probably the first "band" of the Latter Day Saints to reach Independence with a view to settling in their new "Zion," as they termed it, the place having been revealed to them by God as the gathering place for his Saints to prepare for the second coming of the Savior. In July, 1831, Joseph Smith pointed out the spot on which a great temple should be erected to which Christ should come. This spot is believed to be on the famous Temple Lot at Independence, invariably pointed out to the visitor there. The spot for the Temple was formally dedicated on August 3, 1831.

The "Saints" lost no time after their arrival, but began to build houses and to proselyte, two converts being baptized the first Sunday after the band arrived. In August, Joseph Smith wrote to friends "back east":

"On the 2d day of August I assisted the Colesville Branch of the church to lay the first log, for a house, as a foundation for Zion in Kaw Township, twelve miles west of Independence."¹

"THE EVENING AND MORNING STAR."

The influx of the "gathering" religionists was steady. A press was bought in Cincinnati in the fall of 1831, and shipped to Independence, a lot of paper being shipped in April, 1832, from Wheeling, West Virginia, to be used in printing a monthly paper. The paper, The Evening and Morning Star, made its appearance in June, 1832, and appeared regularly till the office was destroyed by a mob in 1833.

As this paper played an important part in the trouble which arose later between the "Mormons" and the citizens of Independence and Jackson County, it might be of interest to quote its prospectus, which appeared shortly before its first number was issued:

The Evening and the Morning Star, besides the secret of the Lord, which is now with them that fear him, and the everlasting gospel, which must go to all nations, before the Holy One shall stand upon the Mount of Olivet, and upon the mighty ocean, even the great deep, and upon the islands of the sea, and upon the land of Zion, to destroy the wicked with the brightness of his coming,—will also contain whatever of truth or information that can benefit the saints of God temporally as well as spiritually, in these last days, whether in prose or poetry, without interfering with politics, broils, or the gainsayings of the world. While some may say this paper is opposed to all combinations under whatever plausible character, others will know that it is for an eternal union whose maker and supporter is God; thus all must be as they are, inasmuch as they that plow iniquity and sow wickedness reap the same; but wisdom is justified of her children.

JOSEPH SMITH RECEIVED AS PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH.

It was at a general concil of his church held at Independence, Missouri, April 26, 1832, that Joseph Smith was formally received as president of the church. [He had been ordained to the office of president of high priesthood, June 25, 1832.]

Soon after the Saints were well established, Joseph Smith left for the East, and the affairs of the church in "Zion" were left in the hands of Bishop Edward Partridge, Elders W. W. Phelps, Gilbert, and others. W. W. Phelps and Company were the publishers of the Evening and Morning Star, and they also issued some books for church purposes, besides issuing a weekly newspaper called The Upper Missouri Advertiser.

The growing body of "Mormons" were not long destined to enjoy peace in their "Zion." In April, 1833, a mass meeting, attended by about three hundred citizens, was held in Independence, at which were discussed "ways and means" to rid the county of the "Mormons" already there and prevent others from coming. No plan could be agreed upon, and the meeting broke up a failure.

THE SLAVERY QUESTION ARISES.

In the July, 1833, number of the Evening and Morning Star there appeared two articles which had a tendency to ripen the citizens' apparently growing hatred of the "Mormons." As these articles are often referred to subsequently, it may be well to give them here. The first is an editorial entitled, "Free people of color"; the second is a circular to the elders in Zion and abroad. The editorial is as follows:

FREE PEOPLE OF COLOR.

To prevent any misunderstanding among the churches abroad, respecting free people of color, who may think of coming to the western boundaries of Missouri, as members of the church, we quote the following clauses from the laws of Missouri.

"SECTION 4. Be it further enacted, that hereafter no free negro or mulatto, other than a citizen of some one of the United States, shall come into or settle in this State under any pretext whatever; and upon complaint made to any justice of the peace, that such persons are in his county, contrary to the provisions of this section, it shall appear that such person is a free negro or mulatto, and that he hath come into this State after the passage of this act, and if such person shall not produce a certificate, attested by the seal of some court of record in some one of the United States, evidencing that he is a citizen of such State, the justice shall command him forthwith to depart from this State; and in case such negro or mulatto shall not depart from the State within thirty days after being commanded to do so as aforesaid, any justice of the peace, upon complaint thereof to him made may cause such person to be brought before him and may commit him to the common gaol of the county in which he may be found, until the next term of the circuit court to be held in such county. And the said court shall cause such person to be brought before them and examine into the cause of commitment; and if it shall appear that such person came into the State contrary to the provisions of this act, and continued therein after being commanded to depart as aforesaid, such court may sentence such person to receive ten lashes on his or her bare back, and order him to depart the State; and if he or she shall not depart, the same proceedings shall be had and punishment inflicted, as often as may be necessary, until such person shall depart the State.

"SECTION 5. Be it further enacted, that if any person shall, after the taking effect of this act, bring into this State any free negro or mulatto, not having in his possession a certificate of citizenship as required by this act—[he or she] shall forfeit and pay, for every person so brought, the sum of five hundred dollars, to be recovered by action of debt in the name of the State, to the use of the university, in any court having competent jurisdiction; in which action the defendant may be held to bail, of right and without affidavit; and it shall be the duty of the attorney-general or circuit attorney of the district in which any person so offending may be found, immediately upon information given of such offenses to commence and prosecute an action as aforesaid."

Slaves are real estate in this and other States, and wisdom would dictate great care among the branches of the church of Christ, on this subject. So long as we have no special rule in the church, as to people of color, let prudence guide; and while they, as well as we, are in the hands of a merciful God, we say: Shun every appearance of evil.

While on the subject of law, it may not be amiss to quote some of the Constitution of Missouri. It shows a liberality of opinion of the great men of the West, and will vie with that of any other State. It is good; it is just, and it is the citizen's right.

"That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences; that no man can be compelled to erect, support or attend any place of worship, or to maintain any minister of the gospel or teacher of religion; that no human authority can control or interfere with the rights of conscience, that no person can ever be hurt, molested or restrained in his religious professions or sentiments, if he do not disturb others in their religious worship:

"That no person, on account of his religious opinions, can be rendered ineligible to any office of trust or profit under this State; that no preference can ever be given by law to any sect or mode of worship; and that no religious corporation can ever be established in this State."

From the latter article [see "General Interest" in this number SAINTS' HERALD] it will be seen that there were about twelve hundred of the Saints in and around Independence.

TROUBLE BEGINS.

After the appearance of the July number of the Star, trouble for the Saints rapidly accumulated.

The citizens issued the following circular on July 18, 1833:

We, the undersigned, citizens of Jackson County, believing that an important crisis is at hand as regards our civil society, in consequence of a pretended religious sect of people that have settled and are still settling in our county, styling themselves Mormons, and intending as we do to rid our society "Peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must," and believing as we do that the arm of the civil law does not afford us a guarantee, or at least a sufficient one against the evils which are now inflicted upon us, and seem to be increasing by the said religious sect, deem it expedient, and of the highest importance, to form ourselves into a company for the better and easier accomplishment of our purpose, a purpose which we deem it almost superfluous to say, is justified as well by the law of nature, as by the law of self-preservation.

It is more than two years since the first of these fanatics or knaves (for one or the other they undoubtedly are) made their first appearance amongst us, and pretending as they did and now do to hold personal communication and converse face to face with the most high God; to receive communications and revelations direct from heaven, to heal the sick by laying on hands; and, in short, to perform all the wonder-working miracles wrought by the inspired apostles and prophets of old.

We believed them deluded fanatics or weak and designing knaves, and that they and their pretensions would soon pass away; but in this we were deceived. The arts of a few designing leaders amongst them have thus far succeeded in holding them together as a society, and since the arrival of the first of them they have been daily increasing in numbers, and if they had been respectable citizens in society, and thus deluded they would have been entitled to our pity rather than to our contempt and hatred; but from their appearance, from their manners, and from their conduct, since their coming among us, we have every reason to fear that with but very few exceptions, they were of the very dregs of that society from which they came; lazy, idle, and vicious. This we conceive is not idle assertion, but a fact susceptible of proof, for with these few exceptions above-named, they brought into our country little or no property with them, and left less behind them, and we infer that those only yoked themselves to the Mormon car who had nothing earthly or heavenly to lose by the change; and we fear that if some of the leaders amongst them had paid the forfeit due to crime, instead of being chosen ambassadors of the Most High, they would have been inmates of solitary cells. But their conduct here stamps their characters in their true colors. More than a year since it was ascertained that they had been tampering with our slaves and endeavoring to sow dissensions and raise seditions amongst them. Of this their Mormon leaders were informed, and they said they would deal with any of their members who should again in like case offend. But how specious are appearances. In a late number of the Star, published in Independence by the leaders of the sect, there is an article inviting free negroes and mulattoes from other States to become Mormons and remove and settle among us. This exhibits them in still more odious colors. It manifests a desire on the part of their society to inflict on our society an injury that they know would be to us entirely insupportable, and one of the surest means of driving us from the county; for it would require none of the supernatural gifts that they pretend to, to see that the introduction of such a caste amongst us would corrupt our blacks and instigate them to bloodshed.

They openly blaspheme the most high God and cast contempt on his holy religion by pretending to receive revelations direct from heaven, by pretending to speak unknown tongues by direct inspiration, and by diverse pretenses derogatory of God and religion, and to the utter subversion of human reason.

They declare openly that their God hath given them this county of land, and that sooner or later they must and will have the possession of our lands for an inheritance, and in fine they have conducted themselves on many other occasions in such a manner that we believe it a duty we owe ourselves, to our wives and children, to the cause of public morals, to remove them from among us, as we are not prepared to give up our pleasant places and goodly possessions to them, or to receive into the bosom of our families as fit companions for our wives and daughters the degraded and corrupted free negroes and mulattoes that are now invited to settle among us.

Under such a state of things even our beautiful county would cease to be a desirable residence, and our situation intolerable! We, therefore, agree, that after timely warning, and receiving an adequate compensation for what little property they can not take with them, they refuse to leave us in peace, as they found us, we agree to use such means as may be sufficient to remove them, and to that end we each pledge to each other our bodily powers, our lives, fortunes, and sacred honors.

We will meet at the court-house at the town of Independence, on Saturday next, 20th inst., to consult ulterior movements."

This circular was signed by about one hundred citizens.

SAINTS GIVEN FIFTEEN MINUTES IN WHICH TO MOVE.

As announced by the circular, on July 20, about four or five hundred strong, the citizens met and appointed a committee to wait upon the "Mormon" leaders and demand the suspension of the Evening and Morning Star, the immediate removal of the leaders from the county, and the checking of further "Mormon" emigration into the county. The "Mormons" asked for thirty days to move their effects and dispose of their properties. This was refused. They asked for ten days and were refused. They were told fifteen minutes was long enough for them to start. The conference of the committees then broke up and rioting broke loose. The frenzied citizens razed the printing plant of W. W. Phelps and Company, the press was broken, the type pied and thrown into the streets, the furniture broken and thrown out of doors, and Mrs. Phelps, with several children, one sick, were turned out of the home. The mob, still unsatisfied, started to destroy the general store of Gilbert, Whitney and Co., but Mr. Gilbert promised to pack the goods and move, and they desisted. But they caught Bishop Partridge and a Mr. Allen and tarred and feathered them.

The citizens again assembled on the 23d, and issued threats against the "Mormons," ordering them to leave at once or every man, woman, and child would be whipped. John Corryll, John Whitmer, W. W. Phelps, A. S. Gilbert, Edward Partridge, Isaac Morley, and others of the leaders of the Saints placed themselves in the hands of the citizens. The citizens appointed the following named as committee to meet a committee from the "Mormons": Samuel C. Owens, Leonidas Oldham, G. W. Simpson, M. L. Irwin, John Harris, Henry Childs, Harvey H. Younger, Hugh H. Brazeale, N. K. Olmstead, James C. Sadler, William Bowers, Benjamin Majors, Zachariah Waller, Harman Gregg, Aaron Overton, and Samuel Weston.

The "Mormons" appointed the following: Edward Partridge, Isaac Morley, John Corryll, W. W. Phelps, A. S. Gilbert, and John Whitmer.

The following agreement was reached:

Memorandum of agreement between the undersigned of the Mormon society, in Jackson County, Missouri, and a committee appointed by a public meeting of the citizens of said county, made the 23d day of July, 1833.

It is understood that the undersigned members of the society do give their solemn pledge each for himself, as follows; to wit:—

"That Oliver Cowdery, W. W. Phelps, William E. McLellan, Edward Partridge, Lyman Wight, Simeon Carter, Peter and John Whitmer, and Harvey Whitlock, shall remove with their families out of this county on or before the 1st day of January next, and that they, as well as the two hereinafter named, use all their influence to induce all the brethren now here to remove as soon as possible—one half, say, by the 1st of January next, and all by the 1st day of April next; to advise and try all means in their power to stop any more of their sect from moving to this country; and as to those now on the road, they will use their influence to prevent their settling permanently in the county, but that they shall only make arrangements for temporary shelter, till a new location is agreed on for the society. John Corryll and A. S. Gilbert are allowed to remain as general agents to wind up the business of the society, so long as necessity shall require; and said Gilbert may sell out his merchandise now on hand, but is to make no new importations.

"The Star is not again to be published, nor a press set up by any of the society in this county.

"If the said Edward Partridge and W. W. Phelps move their families by the 1st day of January as aforesaid, that they themselves will be allowed to go and come in order to transact and wind up their business.

"The committee pledge themselves to use all their influence to prevent any violence being used so long as a compliance with the foregoing terms is observed by the parties concerned."

We wish most heartily that we could record that the pledge was lived up to, and that upon the scenes of the fall of 1833, the curtain could be for ever drawn. But they are of authentic record, and form a blot upon the escutcheon of Jackson County which can never be removed. The Saints were not permitted to be in peace till the time for going, but were disturbed, by their homes being stoned and otherwise injured.

DRIVEN WITH GUNS, STONES, AND CLUBS.

In October, long before the time specified, open hostilities were resumed, and by gun, and stone, and club, the Saints, men and women and children, were driven from their homes, fleeing before those who in defiance of law were by violence attempting to rid themselves of unwelcome neighbors.

The first of the open hostilities after the agreement, occurred on October 31, 1833, about two miles west of Independence. This was quickly followed by others. The "Mormons" in places tried to defend themselves and lives were lost on both sides. Colonel Pitcher, at the head of the militia disarmed some of the Saints, taking fifty or sixty guns and pistols.

The details of the hostilities we can not here set out. But the "Saints" were driven from the county, most going northward into Clay County, where they found temporary refuge, taking such of their movable property as the haste of their flight permitted. Some went into Van Buren County, from which they were again driven, some into Lafayette County, from where they were soon expelled. But this is another story.

The work of the mob (for such only can it be called) was complete. Every member of the Latter Day Saints was driven from the county. The Saints appealed to the local peace officers, but were told to defend themselves. Be it said to the honor of the then governor, Daniel Dunklin, and attorney general, Robert W. Wells, that their official attitude, whatever may have been their personal feelings, towards the "Mormons," was one of fairness and liberal interpretation of the law. Attempts were made by these officers to have some of the perpetrators of the outrages indicted; but the local feeling in Jackson County against the "Mormons" was too intense. The citizens had their way.

The flight of the "Mormons" from their homes before an enraged mass of citizens, made in the inclement season of the year, with a stern winter facing them, the flight so precipitate in many instances that proper clothing was not taken, the destitute people, many barefooted, leaving at times a bloody trail in the snow and mud, a people fleeing from their homes to hunt a refuge among a more tolerant people, constitutes a picture that no fair minded Missourian can look upon with other than shame, no matter what provocation the "Mormons" may have given. Can Jackson County wipe out the stain on her fair name?

Before the spring of 1834 had far advanced every "Mormon" had left the county. Attempts were made to compromise the trouble, and make some adjustment with the "Mormons" concerning their abandoned property; but all attempts at general compromise failed. What adjustments were made were individual matters.

OTHER POINTS OF GATHERING.

The mass of those who left Jackson County went to Clay County, where temporary refuge was found. Trouble soon arose, however, and Caldwell County was founded by them. Still later they left Missouri and fled to Nauvoo, Illinois, which they built up. They rapidly increased in numbers. In 1844, however, Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, presidents of the church, were murdered by a mob, in Carthage jail, Illinois, and soon the church membership was torn by contentions of aspirants to the mantle of the slain leader and prophet of the church.

FACTIONS ARISE; THE TRUE CHURCH.

In 1846 and in subsequent years Brigham Young, one of the aspirants for the leadership, president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles at the time of the death of Joseph Smith, led away thousands of the Saints into the Rocky Mountains and settled in Utah, where they have increased in numbers till now they number about three hundred and fifty thousand. Many refused to acknowledge Brigham Young, and followed other leaders. James J. Strang led some into Wisconsin, and on Beaver Island founded the Court of Saint James. Charles B. Thompson gathered some in Western Iowa, and at Preparation founded a communistic society. Lyman Wight led others to Texas. Another faction was led by Granville Hedrick, commonly known as "Hedrickites." Others in 1851 and 1852 "reorganized" the church, denounced Brigham Young as the successor to Joseph Smith, pronounced polygamy and other doctrines introduced by Brigham Young as heresies and not in the doctrine of the church in Joseph Smith's lifetime, and in 1860 elected Joseph Smith, the eldest son of Joseph Smith the founder of the church, as the president of the "Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints." In numbers this church is to-day stronger than any of the factions named except the Utah church, and has been twice declared by the courts to be the church in true succession to the one founded by Joseph Smith.² Its headquarters is at Lamoni, Iowa, though they have large numbers in Jackson County, and their largest local congregation is at Independence.

The differences between the Utah Mormons and the Reorganized Church are marked. The Reorganized Latter Day Saints denounce polygamy, Adam-God worship, and other prominent and characteristic doctrines of the Utah Mormons, and teach obedience to the laws of the land, and good citizenship generally.

THE RETURN.

Now for the return. The latter part of the sixties and the early seventies found several families of the Reorganized Church back in Jackson County, a family of Nobles settling on Rush Bottom probably in 1868 or 1869. They were soon followed by other families of this organization, among which might be mentioned the Etzenhousers and Pilgrims.

In 1867, however, a small body of "Saints" under the leadership of Granville Hedrick moved into Independence, from Bloomington and other points in Illinois, and in June, 1868, published at Independence volume 2, number 1, of the Truth Teller, a paper of which they had published the previous numbers at Bloomington. A small body of these people have since remained in Independence, though the followers of Mr. Hedrick have never been numerically strong. At present these people are in possession of the famous Temple Lot, on which they have a two-story frame building in which they hold meetings and from which is issued occasional numbers of the Evening and Morning Star.

In 1873 members of the Reorganized Church, ten strong, organized the Independence Branch of the church in Independence. The membership has grown steadily by accretion, by baptism, and the return of the Saints to "Zion" to build up the "waste places" thereof, until to-day the Independence congregation of that church numbers about two thousand souls, and worships in their handsome stone church on West Electric Street, one of the finest church buildings in Independence. But Independence has not received all the returning Saints, for in Greater Kansas City are eight or nine regularly organized branches or local churches of the Reorganized Church, besides several regular "missions."

The congregations are:

- First Kansas City Branch.
- Second Kansas City Branch.
- Third Kansas City Branch.
- Fourth Kansas City Branch.
- Armstrong Branch.
- Chelsea Park Branch.
- Argentine Branch.
- Grandview Branch.

Central Latter Day Saints' Kansas City church, 9th and Lydia streets, was recently purchased from the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Utah "Mormons," for a number of years past, have maintained mission headquarters of the Central States Mission in Jackson County; being in Kansas City until March, 1907, when they purchased and moved into their present mission quarters, corner of Kansas and Pleasant streets, Independence.

BUSINESS ENTERPRISES OF THE "MORMONS."

An accurate list of the property holdings of the various kinds of "Mormons" in Jackson County is not necessary here; but it will be of interest as showing the rapidity of their return to know that the Utah Mormons, besides their mission headquarters, rent a hall for regular meetings, and from other rented quarters publish their mission paper, The Liahona; the Elders' Journal, with a circulation of about ten thousand. They have also built near the Missouri Pacific Depot a large plow factory called the Danielson Plow Company's Factory, from which are supplied plows mostly for Utah. Only a few families of the Utah Mormons have as yet moved into Jackson County, though one can not long talk with any "Mormon" without learning that they some day expect to return to Independence to build the great temple.

The Hedrickites as an organization own little or no property outside of the Temple Lot, though some of their members are in business.

The Reorganized Latter Day Saints are by far the strongest in property and number of any faction. Besides the large stone church with its annex, just opposite the Temple Lot, the church owns a building near the corner of Osage and West Lexington streets in which is one of their church printing plants, the Ensign Publishing Company, from which is issued a weekly church paper called Zion's Ensign, with about seven thousand circulation. On Blue avenue, near the western limits of the city of Independence, this church has recently erected at a cost of about fifty thousand dollars a large Sanitarium, situated on a tract of land of about five acres. Surrounding it are the newly erected homes of a number of Saints built on lots bought since the Sanitarium started. Some of the fine residences of the city of Independence are owned by Reorganized Latter Day Saints.

The newspapers of Independence recently announced that the Reorganized Church would soon build a large office building for the use of the general church officers. The officers now there have offices in the Clinton Block and the Jackson County Bank building.

A hasty investigation by the writer of this chapter recently made, revealed the fact that the members of the Reorganized Church control about fifty-nine businesses in Independence, distributed as follows:

- | | |
|------------------------------------------|---------------------------------|
| 1 state bank. | 1 publishing house. |
| 2 planing mills. | 1 inventor's store. |
| 1 coal mining company. | 1 house moving firm. |

| 1 foundry. | 1 meat market. |
| 1 casket factory. | 1 undertaking establishment. |
| 1 stationery store. | 1 nursery. |

| 2 cement and construction companies. | 2 tailors. |
| 6 groceries and meats. | 1 hardware. |
| 1 bakery. | 3 doctors. |
| 1 sewing machine store. | 1 plumbing company. |

EARLY TEACHINGS OF THE SAINTS.

In the number of the SAINTS' HERALD HISTORICAL SERIES appearing in this issue reference is made to an open letter addressed to elders in Zion and churches abroad published in the Evening and Morning Star, July, 1833. The article in question is reproduced here in order that it may be read in connection with the historical article. It also serves the purpose of bringing out the true teachings of the church at that day, and we discover how terribly the Saints were misunderstood by their neighbors. They were charged with being lazy, dishonest, and piratical. The truth is, as will be discovered by reading this article, that all the Saints were expected to work, all were required to pay their debts, and no idea was held that land in Missouri or elsewhere should be acquired by force. They fully expected to pay for that which they got. The article follows:

THE ELDERS STATIONED IN ZION TO THE CHURCHES ABROAD, IN LOVE GREETING.

Dear Brethren: One year having passed since we addressed the churches abroad on the situation of Zion, and the state of the gathering, it seems to be our duty, to again address the Saints on the same subjects. Although you frequently learn through the medium of the Star, our situation and progress, yet we indulge a hope, that a circular from us, particularly setting these things forth at this time, will be received by you in fellowship.

We have abundant reason to thank the Lord for his goodness and mercy manifested unto us, since we were planted in this land.

With the exception of the winter season, the gathering has continued slowly. At present, we have not the exact number of the disciples; but suppose that there are near seven hundred. Include these, with their children, and those who belong to families, and the number will probably amount to more than twelve hundred souls.

Many have been planted upon their inheritances, where, blessed with a fruitful soil, and a healthy climate, they are beginning to enjoy some of the comforts of life: in connection with peace and satisfaction of pure and undefiled religion; which is to visit the widow and the fatherless in their afflictions and to keep ourselves unspotted from the world: this brings down the blessings of peace and love from our Father, and confirms our faith in the promise, that we shall see him in the flesh, when he comes to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day.

Here let us remark, that our duty urges us to notice a few letters which have been sent from this place by persons seeking the loaves and fishes, or by such as have lost their standing among men of character in the world. In the letters alluded to are some facts; but the most of them are false.

It is said that women go out to work. This is a fact, and not only women, but men too; for in the church of Christ, all that are able, have to work to fulfill the commandments of the Lord; and, the situation in which many have come up here, has brought them under the necessity of seeking employment from those who do not belong to the church; yet, we can say as far as our knowledge extends, that they have been honorably compensated. And we are willing that the decree concerning mankind, thou shalt eat thy bread by the sweat of thy brow, should be fulfilled. Members of the church have, or will have, "deeds" in their own name.

One Bates from New London, Ohio, who subscribed fifty dollars for the purpose of purchasing lands, and the necessities for the Saints, after his arrival here, sued Edward Partridge and obtained a judgment for the same. Bates shortly after denied the faith and run away on Sunday, leaving debts unpaid. We do not mention this to cast reflections, but to give a sample of his work manifested since he came to this land.

No man that has consecrated property to the Lord, for the benefit of the poor and the needy, by a deed of gift according to the laws of the land, has thought of suing for it, any more than the men of the world, who give or donate to build meeting houses, or colleges; or to send missionaries to India or the Cape of Good Hope.

Every Saint that has come to this land to escape the desolations which await the wicked, and prepare for the coming of the Lord, is well satisfied with the country, and the order of the kingdom of our God; and we are happy, to say, that the inhabitants of Zion are growing in grace, and in the knowledge of those things which lead to peace and eternal glory. And our hearts are filled with thanksgiving for the privilege of bearing this testimony concerning our brethren on this land.

One object in writing this epistle, is, to give some instructions to those who come up to the land of Zion. Through a mistaken idea, many of the brethren abroad, that had property, have given some away; and sacrificed some, they hardly know now. This is not right, nor according to the commandments.

We would advise in the first place, that every disciple, if in his power, pay his just debts, so as to owe no man, and then if he has any property left, let him be careful of it; and he can help the poor, by consecrating some for their inheritances. For as yet, there has not been enough consecrated to plant the poor in inheritances according to the regulation of the church, and the desire of the faithful.

This might have been done, had such as had property been prudent. It seems as though a notion was prevalent, in Babylon, that the church of Christ was a common stock concern. This ought not so to be, for it is not the case. When a disciple comes to Zion for an inheritance, it is his duty, if he has anything to consecrate to the Lord, for the benefit of the poor and the needy, or to purchase lands, to consecrate it according to the law of the Lord, and also according to the law of the land; and the Lord has said, that in keeping his law, we have no need to break the laws of the land. And we have abundant reason to be thankful, that we are permitted to establish ourselves under the protection of a government, that knows no exceptions to sect or society, but gives all its citizens a privilege of worshiping God according to their own desire.

Again, while in the world, it is not the duty of a disciple to exhaust all his means in bringing the poor to Zion; and this because, if all should do so, there would be nothing to put in the storehouse in Zion, for the purpose which the Lord has commanded.

Do not think, brethren, by this, that we would advise or direct, that the poor be neglected in the least; this is not the desire of our hearts; for we are mindful of the word of our Father, which informs us that in his bosom it is decreed, that the poor and meek of the earth shall possess it.

The welfare of the poor has always a place in our hearts; yet we are confident, that our experience, even had we nothing else to prompt us to advise on this point, and that wholly for the good of the cause in which we labor, would be sufficient in the minds of our brethren abroad, to excuse a plainness on this important part of our subject.

To see numbers of disciples come to this land, destitute of means to procure an inheritance, and much less the necessities of life, awakens a sympathy in our bosoms of no ordinary feeling; and we should do injustice to the Saints, were we to remain silent, when, perhaps, a few words, by way of advice, may be the means of instructing them, that hereafter great difficulties may be avoided.

For the disciples to suppose that they can come to this land without aught to eat, or to drink, or to wear, or anything to purchase these necessities with, is a vain thought. For them to suppose that their clothes and shoes will not wear out upon the journey, when the whole of it lies through a country where there are thousands of sheep from which wool in abundance can be procured to make them garments, and cattle upon a thousand hills, to afford leather for shoes, is just as vain.

The circumstances of the Saints in gathering to the land of Zion in these last days, are very different from those of the children of Israel, after they despised the promised rest of the Lord, after they were brought out of the land of Egypt. Previous to that, the Lord promised them, if they would obey his voice and keep his commandments, that he would send the hornet before them, and drive out those nations which then inhabited the promised land, so that they might have peaceable possession of the same, without the shedding of blood. But in consequence of their unbelief and rebellion, they were compelled to obtain it by the sword, with the sacrifice of many lives.

But to suppose that we can come up here and take possession of this land by the shedding of blood, would be setting at naught the law of the glorious gospel, and also the word of our great Redeemer; and to suppose that we can take possession of this country, without making regular purchases of the same according to the laws of our nation, would be reproaching this great Republic, in which the most of us were born, and under whose auspices we all have protection.

We feel as though enough was said on this point, knowing that a word to the wise is sufficient; and that all our brethren are aware of the fact, that all the tithes can not be gathered into the storehouse of the Lord, that the windows of heaven may be open, and a blessing poured out that there is not room enough to contain it, if all the means of the Saints are exhausted, before they reach the place where they can have the privilege of so doing.

Do not conclude from these remarks, brethren, that we doubt in the least, that the Lord will fail to provide for his Saints in these last days; or, that we will extend our hands to steady his ark; for this is not the case. We know that the Saints have the unchangeable word of God, that they shall be provided for; yet we know, if any are imprudent, or lavish, or negligent, or indolent, in taking that proper care, and making a proper use of what the Lord has made them stewards over, which is their duty to, they are not counted wise; for a strict account of everyone's stewardship, is required, not only in time, but will be in eternity.

Neither do we apprehend that we shall be considered as putting out our hands to steady the ark of God, by giving advice to our brethren upon important points relative to their coming to Zion, when the experience of almost two years' gathering, has taught us to revere that sacred word from heaven, Let not your flight be in haste, but let all things be prepared before you.

Then, brethren, we would advise, that where there are many poor in a church, that the elders counsel together and make preparations to send a part at one time and a part at another. And let the poor rejoice in that they are exalted; but the rich in that they are made low, for there is no respect of persons in the sight of the Lord.

The disciples of Christ, blessed with the needed revelations.

from him, should be wise and not take the way of the world, nor build aircastles, but consider, that when they have been gathered to Zion, means will be needed to purchase their inheritances, and means will be needed to purchase food and raiment for at least one year: or, at any rate, food; and where disciples, or churches, are blessed with means to do as much as this, they would be better off in Zion than in the world, troubled as it is, and will shortly be, with plagues, famines, pestilences, and other destructions upon the ungodly.

On the subject of false reports, which are put in circulation by evil-minded men, to ridicule the idea of the gathering of Israel, in these last days, we would say to our brethren abroad, believe them not. The Evening and Morning Star was established expressly to publish the truth, and the word of the Lord, that the Saints might not be deceived, by such as make broad the borders of their garments and love the uppermost rooms at feast; yea, by such as bind heavy burdens which are grievous to be borne, and lay them upon men's shoulders, but will not move them with their fingers. Yea, we give this caution that the disciples may not give heed to the gainsaying of those who seek the honor of this world and the glory of the same, rather than seek the honor of God and his glory; nor those who have turned away from the church of Christ, and denied the faith delivered to his Saints in these last days.

Brethren, the Lord has begun to gather his children, even Israel, that they may prepare to enter into and enjoy his rest when he comes in his glory, and he will do it. No matter what our ideas, and notions may be upon this subject; no matter what foolish report the wicked may circulate to gratify an evil disposition, the Lord will continue to gather the righteous, and destroy the wicked, till the sound goes forth, IT IS FINISHED.

It ought to be known abroad that much improvement is needed in the cattle, sheep and hogs, in this part of the country. For the sake of comfort and convenience, as cows here are worth from ten to fifteen dollars, our brethren would do well, and we would advise them to purchase before they arrive in this region.

In fact, if they journey according to the commandments of the Lord, pitching their tents by the way, like Israel in the days of old, it would be no more than right to drive cows enough to supply every family, or company, with milk on the way.

They would then have them when they arrive here; and if they selected of the best breeds, they would lay a foundation for improvement. A thing of which all our brethren who are acquainted with raising stock, will at once see the propriety.

The sheep of this State, are large, but as their wool is coarse, the breed would soon be improved, if our brethren would drive with them, some Merinoes or Saxony. As soon as the wool and flax are had among the brethren, sufficient for the purpose, they will manufacture cloth for their own use in the church.

The swine in this country are not good, being the old-fashioned shack breed, and much inferior to the large white grass breed of the Eastern States. If any could introduce this breed into the church in Zion, what little pork might be wanted in the winter would be much better, and easier raised.

It is a matter of some surprise to us, that our brethren should come up to the land of Zion, as many do, without bringing garden seed, and even seeds of all kinds. The Jaredites and Nephites took with them seeds of all kinds; and the Jaredites, all kinds of animals. And although the Lord has said that it was his business to provide for his Saints, yet, he has not said that he would do it, unless they kept his commandments.

And notwithstanding the fullness of the earth is for the Saints, they can never expect it unless they use the means put into their hands to obtain the same in the manner provided by our Lord. When you flee to Zion, we enjoin the word, prepare all things, that you may be ready to labor for a living, for the Lord has promised to take the curse off the land of Zion in his own due time, and the willing and obedient, will eat the good of the same: not the idle, for they are to be had in remembrance before the Lord.

One very important requisition for the Saints that come up to the land of Zion, is, that, before they start, they procure a certificate from three elders of the church, or from the bishop in Ohio, according to the commandments; and when they arrive to present it to the bishop in Zion, otherwise they are not considered wise stewards, and can not be received into fellowship with the church, till they prove themselves by their own goodness.

Some of our brethren may at the first instant think, perhaps, that this is useless and formal, but a few reflections, will be sufficient for them to see the propriety of it, and more especially, when they learn that it is a commandment given us of the Lord.

Our brethren will find an extract of the law of this State, relative to free people of color, on another page of this paper. Great care should be taken on this point. The Saints must shun every appearance of evil—as to slaves we have nothing to say. In connection with the wonderful events of this age, much is doing towards abolishing slavery, and colonizing the blacks, in Africa.

The foregoing remarks have been addressed to our brethren abroad, considered as one general body, and have been designed as general information to all. We can not close this epistle, compatible with our duty, without particularly addressing ourselves to our brethren, the elders, to whom is intrusted the preaching the everlasting gospel, the glad tidings of salvation to Israel, and to all the Gentiles, if they will but listen to the invitation.

Brethren, we are aware of your many afflictions, or at least in part, some of us having been eyewitnesses to the things of God, and having been called to bear testimony of the same from the first, since this gospel has been proclaimed in these last days. The desire of our hearts for your prosperity we can truly say is inexpressible; for when you are prospered, we are, and when you are blessed, we are blessed also. The afflictions which you are necessarily called to undergo in these days of tribulation and vengeance upon the wicked, call forth from our hearts unceasing prayers to our common Parent in your behalf, that you may be enabled to deliver his message in the demonstration of his Spirit, and call together his elect from the ends of the earth, to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, even to Mount Zion.

By those few expressions, you will see brethren, how important we view your callings. We do not consider that it is our duty to direct you in your missions; but we will give you in few words what we have reason to expect relative to the gathering of the Saints, according to the revelations of the Lord.

By the authority of your callings and ordinances, you, no doubt will admit, it will be expected, that you will know your duty, and at all times and in all places, teach the disciples theirs; but we are sorry to say, that in some instances, some of our brethren have failed to do so.

We would remind our brethren of a clause in the covenants, which informs us, that all who are ordained in this church, are to be ordained according to the gifts and callings of God unto them, by the power of the Holy Ghost which is in the one who ordains them. We would also remind them of one valuable caution recorded in Paul's first letter to Timothy, which says, Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins.

Those cautions, however, are particularly addressed to our young brethren in the ministry. We know, that many of our brethren are wise in these important parts of their labors, and have rid their garments of the blood of this generation, and are approved before the Lord.

We will proceed further, brethren, to notice some particular items immediately connected with your duties, and what, as we said before, we have reason to expect from you; according to the revelations. In one given December 4, 1831, we learn that it is the duty of the elders of the church in the East, to render an account of their stewardship, unto the bishop appointed unto the church in that part of the Lord's vineyard.

The Lord says, And now, verily I say unto you, that as every elder in this part of the vineyard, [the East] must give an account of his stewardship unto the bishop in this part of the vineyard, a certificate from the judge or bishop in this part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward, and as a fruitful laborer; otherwise he should not be accepted of the bishop in Zion.

And now, verily I say unto you, let every elder who shall give an account unto the bishop of the church, in this part of the vineyard, [the East] to be recommended by the church or churches, in which he labors, that he may render himself and his accounts approved in all things.

We hope brethren, that you will be particular to teach the disciples abroad, prudence and economy in all things. Teach them in plainness, that without regular recommends, they can not be received in fellowship to the church in Zion, until after they have proven themselves worthy by their godly walk. And those who are recommended by you, we expect, will be such as are personally known to you to be disciples indeed, and worthy the confidence of all Saints.

Viewing the quotation relative to your obtaining a certificate from the bishop in the East concerning your worthiness, you can not blame us, brethren, if we are strict on this point. It may be understood therefore, by our brethren, elders, who come from the East, and do not bring a regular certificate showing that their labors have been accepted there, that they can not be accepted in Zion. We do not set ourselves up as judges in this; we have only a desire to see the order of our Redemer's kingdom observed in all things; for his commandments are precious with us; we have them in our hands, and they are sacred to our hearts.

Our brethren who labor in the churches a distance to the west of the residence of the bishop in the East, who do not render their accounts to him, shall be particular to bring recommends from the churches in which they do labor, and present them, with the accounts of their labors to the bishop immediately after their arrival here. And those elders who labor continually in preaching the gospel to the world, should also be particular to render their accounts of the same, that they may show themselves approved in all things, and be known to be worthy of the high office in which they stand in the church of Christ.

Having said considerable concerning those particular points which are necessary to be observed by our brethren who journey to this land, and also a few words to the elders, we deem it a privilege before we conclude, to say something more to the church at large. In the previous remarks, however, we presume our brethren may make many improvements; and, perhaps discover some errors; if so, we can say, that the best of motives have prompted us to write to our brethren; and if some small errors are to be found, we are certain that the general ideas are correct, and will be a means of doing good, if those who are immediately interested in the same, give heed to them.

Dear brethren in the new covenant, accept this as a token for a salutation in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, from your brethren in Zion. While we are permitted to witness the great things which are continually taking place in fulfillment of the prophecies concerning the last days, as the children of God are gathered home to prepare themselves for the supper of the Lamb, our language, that is, the English tongue, fails to express our joy.—Evening and Morning Star, vol. 2, no. 2.

THE NEW DIABOLISM.

The quarrel in the Christian-Science sect, whatever its outcome, has brought out certain practices that can not but do injury to the faith, say outside observers. Mrs. Stetson's suspension, resulting in various accusations and denials, has furnished the outside world with admissions from both sides in the controversy that diabolism exists as an acknowledged element, though its practice is forbidden to the faithful. The deposed leader of the First Church of Christ, Scientist, of New York, has been accused by Virgil O. Strickler, first reader, of attempting "mental assassination of her enemies and of preaching the false doctrine of a dual existence." The curious interpretation of this doctrine is that a "Christian Scientist could do things for which the real Scientist was not responsible, and which the Scientist could deny under oath afterward." Mrs. Stetson, according to reports, has maintained "that with a perfectly clear conscience she could deny any act committed by her simply by falling back on what she termed the fourth spiritual dimension, or the 'absolute.'" The world has come to know these peculiar forms of reasoning through the publication of a diary kept by Mr. Strickler, of which we read in the New York Times:

"Mr. Strickler's diary is considered one of the most important documents which have appeared thus far in the proceedings against Mrs. Stetson. It was kept by the First Reader for several months prior to Mrs. Stetson's trial by the mother church. That part of the diary made public yesterday tells of a scene in the church just after Mrs. Stetson returned from her preliminary examination in Boston on charges of false teaching and mal-practice.

"It says that Mrs. Stetson then made the statement that she could, with perfect propriety, deny teachings of which she was accused, and which were not in keeping with recognized Christian Science, although her other self, so to speak, would have to admit them.

"The diary also contains purported statements of several of Mrs. Stetson's practitioners telling of having fallen back on this fourth dimension or mental reservation of Stetsonism in testifying in a lawsuit several years ago. This lawsuit is supposed to have been one over a bequest of fifty thousand dollars made to Mrs. Stetson by one of her former students.

"Mr. Strickler said, in making public part of his diary, as well as some of the Boston testimony, that as the matters involved had been very disquieting to Christian Scientists all over the country for several years, he thought it best to let the facts be known. When Mrs. Stetson was first brought to trial before the Boston authorities, he declared, she was excused, but admonished not to continue her offenses. Had she heeded this, Mr. Strickler said, she would not have had her license to teach revoked.

"The directors waited two months during which she was given every opportunity to abandon the errors pointed out to her by the directors," said Mr. Strickler. "Failing to do this, the directors began an investigation on September 25, at which twenty-five of Mrs. Stetson's students and practitioners were the only witnesses. On their testimony the action of the directors was based. Later, an investigation by the trustees in New York was started. The fact that many of the witnesses testified before the trustees here exactly to the contrary of what they had testified before the directors in Boston, was due to the pernicious doctrine taught by Mrs. Stetson. That doctrine, utterly at variance with the teachings of Christian Science, was that a witness might testify with propriety from the "absolute" or the "fourth dimension" of spirit."

Mrs. Stetson has followed these revelations by an "emphatic denial" of their truth. In her published rebuttal she is supported by a statement from Mrs. Kate Y. Remer, one of the "admonished practitioners," who forestalls public judgment upon these subtle doctrines by saying that "the question involved in determining the difference between mental malpractice and mental defense therefrom is a metaphysical one, difficult alike to understand and to make clear to anyone not thoroughly conversant with Christian Science." Mrs. Stetson deals with the subject in these words:

"In answer to the statements in Mr. Strickler's diary, I can only say: I never knew its contents, and the statements contained therein are absolutely so involved and filled with misrepresentations and reversal of truth as to be incomprehensible. The only answer is an emphatic denial. I will briefly review what happened at the time and place cited by him on July 31, 1909:

"On my return from Boston we had the practitioners' meeting, as usual; first, the reading of the Bible lesson, at the conclusion of which, as was our custom, we discussed the problems pertaining to our Christian-Science work. At this time I intimated to the practitioners the possibility of their being called upon by the board of directors of the mother church to explain what they understood by malpractice. At the same time I in no way either told or intimated to them that I had been in Boston or that I expected to go. We then discussed at length how we handled malpractice, also the difference between that and the true practice of self-protection, or defense, against malicious animal magnetism (of evil thoughts and their effect on the human body); furthermore, what is implied by 'personal control.'

"I found all but three or four clear in their understanding. Among those who were confused was Mr. Strickler, and I was surprised to find that he seemingly could not grasp the metaphysical point that there exists a difference between mental malpractice and self-defense, and questioned the use of names in self-protection.

"I will give as an illustration what I understand the difference to be between mental malpractice and 'indispensable defense' (Science and Health, pp. 451 and 452), or self-protection:

"If I felt sure that I was being attacked, either ignorantly or maliciously, by any person, I should fill my thought with the qualities of God, truth, and love, which alone render one invincible to the entrance of evil in any form—fear, doubt, envy, malice, jealousy, revenge, and whatever proceeds from the carnal mind. From this fortress of defense I should declare God's omnipotence and everpresence, and that there is no other power or presence. In other words, I should come to him reflecting truth and love, and should declare that he is God's image and likeness, a spiritual being, perfect and immortal. I should then speak to the error which might be operating through the human mind, for which he has been an avenue. I should endeavor to see him as our leader writes on page 476 of Science and Health: 'Jesus beheld in science the perfect man, who appeared to him where sinning mortal man appears to mortals.' Then I should declare that malicious animal magnetism in all its phases and forms was powerless to work through his human personality, using him as an avenue to injure me or anyone, or to hinder the progress of Christian Science. This could only bless the corporeal man, and is doing unto others what we would be willing to have others do unto us. It would heal the sick by casting out the evil thoughts which produce mental and physical disease. It is the superiority of spiritual power over material sense, and is not malpractice.

"Mental malpractice is the influence of one so-called mortal mind over another, and may be either innocent, ignorant, or malicious.

"Innocent malpractice: A mother is often an innocent malpractitioner upon her child. With her own thought filled with the fear of disease or accident, apprehensive of danger for her little one, she produces these impressions upon the child's mind, to be afterward manifested on the body in the form of disease.

"Ignorant mental malpractice is constantly in operation among those who are ignorant of the power of thought and exercise their human wills to obtain that which they desire.

"Malicious mental malpractice is any thought entertained or expressed with intent to govern or injure another.

"True Christian Scientists, admitting but one mind, striving to have no other mind but the mind of Christ, to have one God and to love their neighbor as themselves, can only bless all whom their thoughts rest upon."

The comment of the New York Tribune upon which it calls the "new witchcraft" is this:

"The squabbles of saints have never been good for the cause of religion, and Christian Science can hardly fail to suffer at least a temporary setback in its successful career by reason of the revelations that have come from the dispute in its leading church in this city. 'Malicious animal magnetism,' 'mental assassination,' 'mental self-defense from M. A. M.' and the other extraordinary doctrines and practices brought to light by this quarrel fill the public with amazement. Yet there is no disagreement among the faithful about the potency of 'malicious animal magnetism,' nor about the effectiveness of 'mental assassination.' Both sides assert that such diabolism exists and that its practice is for—to the true religionists. When the public gets over its astonishment and its amusement at these novel doctrines it will perceive that they are logically a necessary part of the Christian-Science theory. If good can be accomplished by thought, then evil can be accomplished by thought. If thought will make a man well then thought will make him ill. 'Malicious animal magnetism' is only the reverse side of that beneficent mental attitude toward humanity of whose good effects churches full of exceptionally cheerful and prosperous people are the invariable witness.

"The world has been confounded by those smiling multitudes of sick and impotent said to have been made whole and certainly kept in an excellent frame of mind; and though it is disposed to grumble when beneficent spiritual magnetism, if that is the reverse of 'M. A. M.,' misses its aim, and a life that might have been saved by a pill or powder is needlessly sacrificed to a belief, yet it has been reconciled to what it has hitherto known of the creed and practices of Christian Science and become tolerant of them. But this new revelation, that the followers of Mrs. Eddy believe that they can think an adversary to death, and that with the utmost gravity they accuse each other of practicing such 'mental assassination,' will rouse new and what ought to be insuperable incredulity.

"You are the bondwoman and your son is the son of a bondwoman and the bondwoman and her son must "go out" before the free 'woman' smacks of the voodoo, while 'mental assassination' and 'malicious animal magnetism' are reminiscent of the 'evil eye' and the burning or sticking pins into a waxen image of an enemy. Fundamentally the diabolism of Christian Science does not differ from witchcraft. In favor of the new witchcraft, however this much may be said: Its punishments are relatively kind. Removing a 'card' from an official journal is much more humane discipline than purging with fire."

Thanksgiving.

The day appointed by President Taft as a day of national thanksgiving is past, and we trust that as a people we fully entered into the spirit of it, and from our hearts gave thanks to our heavenly Father for the unnumbered blessings with which the year has been crowned.

But while the day of thanksgiving is past, there yet remains with us a portion of the year, and yet another day to which all of us are looking forward with joyous anticipation. A day just like no other day because of the sacred memories associated with it and the heaven-born influence which it brings to millions of longing, weary hearts. In the calendar there is no other day like Christmas, is there? It will soon be here, and very few there are who will not be looking for some gift, some token of kindly and loving remembrance to send to dear ones far away, or bestow upon those in their home; and we come to tell you what we have and to ask you in the midst of your many purchases not to forget your own people—the household of faith. In our publishing house are many volumes worthy to be included in your list, and every dollar so invested helps the church to increase her usefulness. But we now wish to speak of one not before advertised, and which is published especially for the benefit of the Birth Offering Fund.

In the early days of the Reorganization we had with us a poet—a sweet singer in Israel. He has been taken from us and the voice which once charmed all listeners, when heard in song or raised in defense of truth and righteousness, has long been stilled in death. But the sentiments and thoughts which swayed the soul of David Hyrum Smith, and which he embalmed in verse, still live and breathe—still go forth upon their mission of cheering the hearts of the weary, of repeating the angel song of "Peace on earth, good will to men." One of these poems, "At last," filled to repletion with comfort for the weary, toiling ones of earth, and permeated in every line with a living faith, has now been illustrated, and will this year be issued from our publishing house in booklet form for the holiday trade; and how can it be otherwise than for us to expect many orders for this neatly bound, handsomely illustrated booklet at twenty-five cents a copy? All of the illustrations are original and embrace the poet's family entire, as well as others of his relatives, among them a recently taken and faithful likeness of Brother Joseph. Encourage us by sending in your orders early, and if you wish to help the Master's work, mention this opportunity to your friends and enlist their interest also. We feel safe in promising you that you will not be disappointed or regret your investment.

Letter Department

PAPEETE, TAHITI.

Dear Herald: The last mail brought me more mail from inquiring Saints than I could answer before the departure of the steamship Mariposa for America.

The Saints have expressed a great desire to hear from me, their request being that I relate a few of my experiences as well as other items of interest. Thus realizing that many are anxious to hear from the newly appointed missionaries to the islands of the sea, I take pleasure in selecting a few items from my diary and present them to your columns for publication.

It was with mingled feelings of lonesomeness and rejoicing that we (Elder H. W. Savage and myself) bade a few of the Saints of San Francisco farewell at the wharf, August 6, about half past eleven o'clock, when we boarded the Mariposa, bound for the Society Islands.

We passed through the Golden Gate at about twelve o'clock, then, "Farewell, our native land, farewell," until we shall again behold thy shores, which time we hope shall be after a season of diligent service for the Master.

As the time neared that we would see the last sight of the American shores, and realizing that upon yonder promised land we were leaving loved ones, both of the ties of nature and the ties of the gospel, we were reminded of these words,

"Yes, my native land I love thee,
All thy scenes I love them well,
Kindred, associates, happy country,
Can I bid you all, farewell."

We were reminded how oft we have sat in the assembly of the Saints and from the depths of our hearts have sung,

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,
Over mountain and plain, or sea," then all feelings of hesitancy vanish and we unreservedly sense the sentiment of the following verse:

"In the deserts, let me labor,
On the mountains tidings tell,
Bear me on, thou restless ocean,
Far in distant lands to dwell."

Comforted are we in the thought that we are going because the Master called, and he has made our duty plain, also that his presence shall supply the loss of all we leave behind.

We are here also reminded of the statement of our worthy President of the church, at the last General Conference, wherein he said that many of those whom we could ill afford to lose would be taken from among us this year, and while this has proven true, and many of the faithful servants of God have been and shall be taken from among us, it is necessary for others to put on the armor.

We are now out of the sight of land and are being carried safely over the billowy deep, and we engage in a season of prayer that our journey may be one of safety, void of sickness, and that He who holds in his arm the tempests of the ocean might preserve us from all harm and danger.

Our moments upon the sea were spent in various ways. Having brought my guitar along I often sang the songs of Zion which cheered the lonely heart and dispelled all fears.

After eleven days of travel we came in sight of land, Tuesday, August 17, which was a small lagoon island called Rairoa, forming a part of the Tuamotuan group, and which is about two hundred miles from Papeete, Tahiti, our destination.

When we came in sight of this island it was about sunset, and as we stood on deck admiring the scene we fancied that we felt something like Columbus did when he discovered

America, and also as the Nephites must have felt when they came in sight of the promised land.

It was a beautiful sight. The island was almost covered with cocoanut trees, the island birds were flying around us. Nature seemed to have favored the island immensely from the fact that it was but a coral island upon which the vegetation grew.

The sun, which had for a few moments been hid behind a cloud, now shines brightly upon the beautiful island before us. It is a beautiful picture, and nature now makes its own frame, the serf forming the lower part of it, and the beautiful rainbow, which now comes into sight, incloses the balance of it. We now come in sight of another island to the west of us and we behold one of the most beautiful scenes that the writer has ever witnessed. It is the ocean sunset. I would not undertake to do justice to it by way of description, but I will make mention of it, for it was so indelibly impressed, stamped upon my mind. No matter how skillful the artist might be, he could in no wise do justice to the grand scene of this beautiful sunset upon the southern Pacific Ocean.

You can better imagine what a grand scene this was when I inform you that as I stood and gazed upon the scene my mind was so enrapt that I offered up a silent prayer to the great and marvelous One who created the heavens and the earth and was the author of this (his) handiwork that presented such an appealing picture to the eye.

I afterwards learned that most of the inhabitants of these two islands were Saints.

Comforted were we in the thought that upon the morrow morning we would be laying anchor in the harbor of Papeete. It was a beautiful morning. We arose before the sun did, and prepared for landing.

The sun soon made its appearance, and before us was the beautiful island of Tahiti, with its lofty peaks and its covering of verdure. Papeete has a beautiful harbor and is a beautiful city indeed to be found upon such an isolated island as this.

We are now alongside the wharf and hundreds of people are on board and on the wharf with anxious hearts. Our Brother Lake is one among them, and after making a good guess as to who we were he hails us, and we soon meet both him and his wife and a few of the natives, and then we proceed to the mission house, which is but a short distance from the church. As we pass the church we discover that there are a goodly number of the Saints gathered there to welcome us. The gathering was of the nature of a prayer service, their testimonies being mainly speeches of welcome in behalf of the newly arrived missionaries. As we entered the door of the chapel every one of the natives arose, singing a song of welcome for us. We can not express the deep feelings of praise to God for the great degree of his Holy Spirit that we felt during this service. Brother Lake, Brother Savage, and myself were seated upon the front seat. After a few prayers Brother Savage arose, and in an earnest manner expressed his desires in connection with the island work. Brother Lake interpreted for us, and in this way the natives heard from us. The writer arose and told them that he praised the Lord for having carried them safely over land and sea, also thanking the Lord that the journey was void of both sickness and accident.

I do not wish to burden your columns. I will say further, however, that our experiences have been encouraging and have been of a nature that we can truly say that it was a power far greater than that of man that directed in our being sent here, and we solicit your prayers that the encouraging promises given us in connection with this work may be fully realized by us for the benefit of this people, who are a kind-hearted people who would lay the last morsel of food at our feet rather than to see us want.

If there ever was a time for the young men to fit and prepare themselves for work in the kingdom I believe the time is now, when the Lord is calling home many of his aged servants, and just as sure as the Lord calls the aged one home, he will call the youth into service if they will do their part.

The spirit of thorough consecration is the spirit of this latter-day work. There should be no sacrifice too great for us to make for the kingdom of God.

When supplicating to the heavenly Father remember the islands of the sea, where the Saints are rejoicing because of our arrival.

"See from all lands, from the isles of the ocean,
Praise to Jehovah, ascending on high,
Fallen the engines of war and commotion,
Shouts of salvation are rending the sky."

Little did we think last year that so soon would we realize the truthfulness of this song. We should all be "minute men" in the gospel, and when we answer the call should be found standing faithfully at the post of duty.

You shall hear from us later.

Your brother and Christ's servant,
J. CHAS. MAY.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, November 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: With much interest I peruse the pages of your valuable paper each week, and while I esteem most of the articles of great worth, yet I believe if some of your correspondents would pay more heed to the advice of our worthy editors in regard to discussions our HERALD would lose nothing in value.

There has been one not of our faith who has had access to my HERALD for the past eight or ten months, he has had to laugh at the discussion on the one cup, while I could not blame him. Is it not possible the Lord will have to admonish us again about contention respecting the sacrament if we are not careful, as he did in Doctrine and Covenants 119: 5? I have failed to see in any of the articles where the Lord has said definitely to use one cup only, or individual cups, so would it not be wise to let each branch decide as to its own rule; if I think it is best to have individual cups then I can bring it up before the branch where I am a member and if the branch see the way I do, they can as a body adopt it, and if they do so, I believe the Lord will recognize them in their sacrament if they do it with an eye single to the glory of God.

I also believe that if we use the one cup that God will protect us against disease as he has said these signs would follow them that believe, and if they would drink any deadly thing it would not hurt them.

He has also promised us health in the word of wisdom. I wonder how many are keeping the word of wisdom and are trusting God for their health.

I believe I can truthfully say the work is moving along nicely in the Tri-cities. One thing noticeable is the spirit of unity among the Saints. We have the building fever here at present. We want to get the basement so we can meet in it this winter if possible. We have about half of the cement blocks made for the basement. The work has been retarded some owing to some sickness. If there is any who feel they would like to help us, any amount will be highly appreciated.

Hoping the Saints everywhere will remember us here in their prayers,

In gospel bonds,
IRA A. CHAMBERLAIN.

SAINT CLAIR, MICHIGAN, November 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: Having attended the McGregor conference, Eastern Michigan District, I feel impressed to say a few words, also having in mind some who were prevented by circumstances from being there, but who no doubt helped us with their prayers. Surely the angels were with us at McGregor and the Spirit of God was with us to cheer and comfort, and words of encouragement were spoken to a noble servant of God who is tireless in his efforts in behalf of this wonderful work, and he was told to "Go on, go on."

Surely God is to-day working a mighty and a marvelous work. And while listening to Brother Etzenhouser as he unfolded that wonderful relation of hidden mysteries bringing to light the secrets of past ages, our souls were stirred to their very depths. Michigan may well feel proud of her share in contributing her quota of wonderful proofs to the divinity of the marvelous work of God. This is indeed the age of discovery; the spirit of investigation is in the air; it permeates everywhere and the things that are transpiring are strong evidences that "God's purposes are ripening fast," "unfolding every hour," and if we would have a share in it we must begin now.

We often hear the words, "I love the gospel." These are mere empty words, just a worn-out phrase, if it is not accompanied by substantial help. Do you love the gospel one dollar? Do you love the gospel five dollars? This is very well illustrated by the case of the farmer who lost his barn and all its contents by fire. His neighbors gathered to condole with him on his loss, expressing their sorrow only in words. An Indian present who saw that mere expressions of sorrow would not repay the farmer for his loss, rose to his feet and said, "Me sorry five dollars; how much you sorry?" We love the gospel only so far as we are willing to give, and our saying, "I love the gospel," proves nothing. We are blessed in this work just so far as we are willing to give and so bless others.

MRS. A. MCKENZIE.

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA, November 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of this paper for several years, and consider it and Autumn Leaves two of my best friends. With each number, they grow dearer and more necessary in the home, as we grow in knowledge and realize more the importance of good advice and practical instruction. I love to read the letters from Saints who are trying to serve God, and as we rarely hear a sermon by our elders, the fine editorials and articles by Saints of so much experience are indispensable to us. Although I have many trials (who has not?) and my faith, and, I confess, patience are often tried by lack of spirit and diligence in older Saints, yet I am hoping that I may live faithful to the end, and receive the reward of the just. I have been in the church nine years, was baptized at the age of eight.

There is a protracted meeting in progress here, Holiness, and they are having quite a little excitement (among themselves). They teach repentance, baptism, any mode to suit your personal taste, and sanctification. No laying on of hands, prophets and apostles not needed now, the gift of tongues absolute foolishness, except in foreign countries, in fact, it would be a world of trouble to separate the "word" according to their idea.

We had the opportunity, recently, of hearing some excellent sermons, when Bro. Ivan Davis spent almost a week in Miami, and how we enjoyed them! We would be so glad to have an elder here again, we need so much help. We have a very nice little Sunday school now, although there are only a few members here.

Ever praying for the children of Zion,

VIDA CATO.

News From Branches

PAPEETE, TAHITI.

Just a line to let the Saints in America know that their brown brethren of this mission are striving in their way to advance the Lord's work in this island. The Saints of the Taronia Branch are building their portion of the wall, and when that is finished, will begin collecting money for a new chapel. The branch at Makatea expect soon to begin their portion of the wall, so that the church is taking a forward move along temporal lines. I am not so sure as I would like to be that they are making the same advancement along spiritual lines. That is not so easily discerned.

We are contemplating a trip to the low islands, and expect to leave Tahiti the latter part of this month, or the first of December, and will make for the farthest-off island upon which we have a branch, where we will dedicate a new chapel. The name of that island is Amanu. We will then visit Hao, Taega, Takapoto, Takaroa, and thence to Manihi, where our April conference is to be held. This will be the first conference held in the low islands for four or five years, and we are expecting a large attendance. Some of the islands to which we are going have not been visited by a white missionary since Brother and Sister Peterson were there, and possibly not since Brother and Sister Case visited them, so that we are expecting good results from this trip. Will suspend the printing of the Orometua until we return to Tahiti, but will finish out the year's editions before leaving.

Some of the Saints seem to be quite concerned about the thought of suspending the publication of our monthly paper, and say, What will we do for news? As though that was the most important part of the paper. They are not all that way, however, at least there is one I can call to mind who always says, "Faarahi i te evanelia, e haapoto i te parau api." ("Enlarge upon the gospel, and make short the news.") So you see, ye editor has about as difficult a task in this mission, although not so great, as in the Herald or Ensign offices. We are quite sure to please the majority, however, if we enlarge upon the news. If this people would only hunger and thirst for righteousness, they certainly do for news, there would surely be an advancement along spiritual lines.

Brethren May and Savage, called by the natives, Ioane and Himana, are rapidly acquiring the use of the Tahitian language, much more rapidly than did wife and I, each bearing their testimony quite often in the native tongue, and Brother May preached his first sermon last Sunday, beating your writer by three weeks. All that Brother Savage needs is a little more courage, which will come in time, and shortly, too.

Our friends will not hear from us so promptly for a while, but we hope to be remembered by them just the same.

C. H. LAKE.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, November 14. Raining in the morning, so our attendance at Sunday school was not large. The question of purchasing a piano was considered, when it was voted that Srs. P. McGann, T. Vanderhoof, and A. C. Schwartz make the purchase.

Elder Allen gave us a very instructive sermon entitled, "We should endeavor to be content with our surroundings." We often wonder how many of the Saints possess a really contented spirit. We trust all are striving for that boon, and we surely will be better by making the effort. Elder Pement gave us good instruction in the evening.

We regret to report that the two elder children of Bro. and Sr. Alma Pitt have the diphtheria, but understand the danger point is passed, for which we are thankful.

The social committee of the Religio are planning a literary and musical entertainment for Friday evening, the 19th inst.

We have had five hundred bills printed which have been distributed principally in the neighborhood of the church, inviting the people and stating that no admission will be charged. A few feel that we should treat the world as our guests, and we usually entertain them free of charge. We will report our success or failure next week.

We submit the following lines, as we feel they contain good counsel for Religio workers:

"We shape ourselves, the joy or fear
Of which the coming life is made
And fill our future atmosphere
With sunshine or with shade.

"The tissue of the life to be
We weave with colors all our own,
And in the field of destiny
We reap as we have sown."

Alice Cary Schwartz.

6549 MARSHFIELD AVENUE.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Now that our district conference is over the branch has settled down to quiet life. Elder B. St. John, missionary, occupied the stand last Sunday morning and evening. The Sunday School and Religio are working for a joint rally day next Sunday. Our rally days have been very successful in the past and we look for a big time this year. Bro. Frank Gray, superintendent of the school is working hard for the advancement of the scholars, and Bro. James Winegarden, president of the Religio, is keeping the local on the move.

The Young Men's Club is making arrangements for a debate with the Christiadelphians. In all probability Bishop Evans will be our champion. The debate is for five nights. Our young people of the Religio gave a very successful concert at the Old People's Home the other night. A very good program was carried out. Elder Fligg acted as chairman. The inmates were so well pleased that an invitation was extended for the Religians to come again.

W. A. HARDEY.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

We have just passed through quite a cold snap for a few days, but now the weather is all that we could desire. The attendance at church is very good. Our preaching has been, besides our presiding elder, W. E. LaRue, Apostle I. N. White, Bishop E. L. Kelley, and President F. M. Smith. Our Sunday school averages about one hundred, and a good interest is manifested. Sr. D. H. Blair was appointed a representative of our school to the International State Sunday School Association to be held at Moberly, Missouri, this week. Our Christmas Offering is nearing the $200 mark. Our Religio is just about holding its own. At our last business meeting Bro. L. H. McDonald was recommended to be ordained to the office of deacon and was so ordained and appointed to assist the presiding deacon.

Bro. and Sr. W. P. Crevisto, of Saint Louis, were received by letter of removal and are nicely located at Lister avenue, near Sixteenth street. Sr. H. L. Ashbaugh, who was hurt by the street car sometime ago, was hurt internally and is quite poorly, though it is believed that she will recover. Sister Warnky, who sprained her ankle four months ago, is yet unable to get about without the aid of crutches.

Our Sunday school will give a box social in the near future, the proceeds will go to help swell the Christmas Offering. Bro. Alfred White preached last Sunday night at the Centropolis mission, and prayer meeting just before preaching; a good spirit prevailed. Bro. F. G. Pitt is expected to preach there next Sunday.

GIVING THANKS.

But this cup of cold water is only a type of a thousand services that we can give to humanity, according to their needs at the time when we come in contact with them.

"Well," some one says, "I don't see how that is expressing thanksgiving to God." Why, did you notice the sentiment in the prayer that was offered when the brother said, "We realize that the best way that we can acknowledge our gratitude is to follow in the footsteps of our Lord and Master"? What was it that he did? We are told that he went about doing good.

TWO FUNCTIONS OF RELIGION.

Sometime ago I was struck while reading a definition of religion, written by Professor Blackmar of the University of Kansas. He says that religion is concerned first, in defining our relations to the spiritual powers above, and second, in defining our relations to man. Or, as he expresses it on another page, that religion is concerned first, in defining our belief along doctrinal lines, and second, in directing or controlling our conduct.

Religious people have made a mistake sometimes. They have thought that religion was concerned only, solely, and entirely with our relationship to God. Some ethical teachers make the mistake of thinking that the whole duty of man is to treat his fellows properly and leave all questions concerning God out of his consideration. But religion is concerned with our relationship towards God and towards man, and while it is pleasing to God that we shall offer to him vocal expressions of praise and thanksgiving, it is just as pleasing to him that we render service in deeds of kindness towards our fellows.

I turn back to the eighth chapter of Nehemiah, and I read about a certain thanksgiving that they had in those days, and at that time this truth was impressed upon the minds of the people. It was after the people had returned from the Babylonish captivity, and Ezra, the scribe, had brought forth the law and read it to the people and caused them "to understand the law." The people rejoiced to stand on holy ground and hear the word of God expounded by one of their own men, and so they appointed a day of thanksgiving, and Ezra said, "This day is holy unto the Lord your God; mourn not nor weep. For all the people wept when they heard the words of the law. Then he said unto them, Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared: for this day is holy unto our Lord."

Now you notice how this principle was taught on that day of thanksgiving. They had sounded their praises to God. Then Ezra said, "Go your way and rejoice, but do not forget to send portions to those for whom no provision has been made." It had the sanction of God in the days of Ezra, the scribe, and Christ put his seal of approval upon it when he said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Then the expression of our religion as it affects our neighbors for good pleases God, and brings us pleasure, joy, and satisfaction.

I trust that the Lord will help us to-day that we may count our blessings over and return to him a sincere and whole-hearted measure of praise and service.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The industrial department of Graceland College has a chance for four girls to work for their board and attend college. Write at once to C. B. Woodstock, Lamoni, Iowa.

President Joseph Smith has prepared an article dealing with his reminiscences of past scenes in Liberty Hall, known as Liberty Home. Some of the most important years of his life were spent in Liberty Hall. The article will appear in the holiday (December) number of Autumn Leaves, together with a splendid three-color cut of Liberty Home as it now is. The holiday number of Autumn Leaves will be one of the best ever issued. It is profusely illustrated and is full of good articles. Those who are not subscribers should send in their subscriptions in time to get this number.

Miscellaneous DepartmentConference Notices.

Spokane district conference will convene at Spokane, Washington, corner of Smith and Third streets, December 11, 1909, at 10 a. m. We want a report from all the branches in the district. Would also like to have reports from all the officers. We expect a good attendance. A. V. Closson, president, 415 South Fisk street.

Quarterly conference of the Northwestern Kansas District to be held at Seldon, Kansas, commencing Saturday, December 4, 1909. All Saints are cordially invited to come and meet with us and have a time of spiritual rejoicing. We do not know who of the ministry or brethren will be there to assist. Elizabeth Teeter, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Spokane District Sunday school convention will be held at Spokane, Washington, Friday, December 10, at 2 p. m. Oliver Turnbull, secretary.

The Bishopric.

To the Saints of Northern California; Greeting: The time of year when the books will be closed is fast approaching. Everyone should have his name recorded as having paid tithe, offering, or consecration, to do their duty and make it possible for the men who have been placed in charge of the financial part to do theirs. I offer very hearty congratulations to all who have honored the law of Christ in this regard. Let all remember the books close December 31. Let everyone help the church and thus help themselves and "lay up for themselves treasure in heaven," while our duty should be done honestly and faithfully without respect to reward.

CHAS. A. PARKIN.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

Bring ye all the tithes, and prove me saith the Lord of hosts.

I will open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing.—Malachi 3: 10.

This year is nearing the end and our books will be closed December 31. There are about three hundred members living in the Spokane District; one hundred and fifty-six names appear on the tithing book. Is your name written there? None are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God. (See Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.) Are we all making a personal application of the whole gospel law? We are asking a great deal of God, even eternal life,—what are we willing to give? Are we relying on the promises of the Master suggested in the accompanying illustration, or have we departed from the narrow way which leads to success and perfection.

Died.

SPENCE.—Bro. James M. Spence died October 13, 1909, by falling from a grain elevator on which he was working, a distance of ninety-seven feet. He was dead when picked up. Said brother was born in West Virginia, July 22, 1868, was baptized December 20, 1885, by J. R. Rudd at Dow City, Iowa. He was a member of that branch at time of death. Funeral preached at the Saints' church at Council Bluffs, Iowa, by Elder J. M. Baker, assisted by the Christian minister of South Omaha, Nebraska, October 15, 1909, at 2 p. m. Interment in the Council Bluffs cemetery. He leaves a wife, infant babe, two sisters, and one brother, all of whom were present at the funeral, and other relatives and friends to mourn.

EYLER.—At Bartlett, Iowa, Guy W. Eyer, grandson of Bro. and Sr. William Eyer, born September 27, 1908; blessed July 27, 1909, by Elders W. E. Haden and R. T. Walters. Died October 25, 1909. Funeral preached by R. T. Walters, assisted by John Huston; interred in the Thurman cemetery.

BLAZEY.—On August 28, 1909, at Mitchell, Canada, George Blaze. He was born February 21, 1823, in Norfolk, England. Was baptized by Elder Gregory at Mitchell, on June 4, 1895. For nearly a year deceased had suffered with a cancer in the eye. He bore his affliction patiently, looking forward to his release with the hope of one who had been faithful in duty. Two sons and two daughters are left to mourn. He was preceded in death by his wife by five years. Sermon by Bishop Evans. Interment in Woodland Cemetery.

WILLIAMS.—Mrs. Elizabeth A. Williams, wife of Elder John T. Williams (deceased), was born at Aberdare, South Wales, April 3, 1846; came to America at the age of 14 years. She was married to J. T. Williams, July 4, 1866, at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. To this union seven children were born; four boys and three girls. She and her husband moved to Bevier, Missouri, in February, 1878, where they have been staunch helpers in the work until death. She leaves to mourn three sons and two daughters. Funeral services were conducted from the Saints' chapel, October 27, in charge of Elder F. T. Mussell. Discourse by Elder J. A. Tanner. Thus has gone to rest a faithful wife, a loving mother, and devoted Christian.

TYRRELL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 8, 1909, Mr. A. H. Tyrrell, aged 75 years, 1 month, and 23 days. He was not a member of the church, but in life and character he was a good example of what all men should be, honest in dealing, clean in speech, generous in action, kind and benevolent. His wife, Sr. Elizabeth Tyrrell, has been a true Saint for forty years. From March, 1906, he has failed in health, but waited the call with calmness. The funeral sermon was preached by Elder H. A. Stebbins, assisted by Bro. A. S. Cochran.

SAMPSON.—At Saint Joseph, Missouri, November 17, 1909, Miss Martelda Sampson. She was born at Stevanker, Norway, July 22, 1883. She was christened in the Lutheran Church when an infant, and was ever recognized as a member of that church. She came to America in May, 1909, where she had one sister and two brothers. She leaves both parents, two sisters and one brother in her native land, besides the relatives named who are in America. She was buried from the home of her sister, Mrs. Barney Nelson, in Lamoni, Iowa, on November 19. The services were in charge of Elder Joseph R. Lambert, and the sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith.

Japanese Dwarf Trees.

These charming dwarfed trees are entirely a product of the patience and skill of Japanese gardeners. The dwarfing of these is kept a secret by them and has as yet never been found out or imitated to such a marvelous degree by any other nation. While there are dwarf fruit trees grown in Europe, especially in Germany and Holland, no such tiny specimens have ever been produced there. The trees which are used for dwarfing by the Japanese embraces all varieties of conifers, such as pines, cedars, cryptomerias, junipers; many evergreens, such as ilex, Citrus trifoliata, etc., some flowering plants like azaleas, maples; also some fruit trees, such as oranges and plums, which blossom and bear the most tiny fruits to perfection. It is claimed for some specimens of cedars that they are over five hundred years old. These very ancient trees are handed down from father to son in some families, regarded as priceless heirlooms. It is to be regretted that so many of these beautiful dwarfed trees are lost through ignorance of the attention they require. The danger lies in overcare more than in neglect. Too many people imagine that these pretty foreigners need especial attention and coddling, when, on the contrary, a great deal of fresh air, a reasonable amount of water and not too much warmth are the chief requirements. They are all hardy, and too much warmth in overheated rooms is sure to kill them.—From "Nature and Science," in December Saint Nicholas.

The Church Struggling to Save Itself.

"The church to-day is like a fort under sudden attack—in the night—with many of the captains asleep," writes Ray Stannard Baker in the December American Magazine. He continues:

"Several groups of churches, chiefly in the Middle West, under the spirited if spectacular leadership of men of the type of Billy Sunday, have dashed into revivalism, and by means of the old-fashioned emotionalism of the evangelist have stemmed for the moment the tide of attack. On the other hand, certain churches, especially in the East, have been slowly retreating toward the citadel of Authority. At Boston I found Doctor Worcester, now the leader of a considerable number of church workers, advancing Emmanuelism to counteract the steady encroachment of Christian Science and the New Thought, which have been beguiling away many of those who formerly marched under the banner of the old churches. And wherever I have gone I have found a still larger and more active group of leaders absorbed in building new outworks—parish houses and gymnasiums, bowling alleys and clubrooms, carpenter shops, shooting galleries and dance-halls—to counteract or at least to parallel the advance of the social settlement idea and the expansion of function of the public schools and other municipal institutions. Never before in history, perhaps, was there such a variety of church-saving experiments going forward; and never a more evident lack of a commanding voice of prophecy, or a generally accepted plan of campaign."

THE MAN WHO STOOD BEFORE PILATE.

Address by Elder Elbert A. Smith, at the opening of the winter term, at Graceland College, November 30, 1909. Reported by Estella Wight.

TWO PICTURES.

I am pleased this morning to meet the president, the faculty, the students of Graceland, and the friends of Graceland who are here.

I am requested to address the students, and most of you who are assembled here are young people. The first thing that I wish to do is to congratulate you on the fact that you are young. It is worth fifty dollars a minute of any man's money simply to be young, to be in the dawning of your young manhood and womanhood, full of vigor and life and hope, and with all the great future before you. I am sure that Rockefeller would be willing to pay that much (fifty dollars a minute) if he could be young again, and he would raise the price of oil until he could be young for ever. Old Ponce de Leon traveled over the land, wearing himself out seeking for the fountain of perpetual youth. But he never found it, and no man has ever found it.

Let me present to you two pictures that in a way are typical of life: Here we have a little boy who has cast his toys aside. He sits with his chin resting in his hand and a dreamy look in his eyes. He is looking into the future to the time when he shall be a man. He says, "I shall be happy then." And over yonder we see an old man sitting with his chin resting upon the head of his cane. With dreamy eyes he is looking into the past to the time when he was a boy. He says, "I was happy then." And that is the experience of life. We do not stop to realize that we can be happy now. Let me exhort these young people that in the midst of the whirl of life they shall take time to be happy now, and realize what the present really means.

THE GREAT TEACHER.

The subject that I have selected this morning is, The Man who stood before Pilate. I call especial attention to one of his utterances: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

I make no apology this morning in presenting to these students and teachers the Man who stood before Pilate as the greatest of all teachers, because he has been so recognized by thinking men of all classes. At one pole of thought we have Ingersoll, the unbeliever, saying, "To that serene Man I gladly render the tribute of my homage and my tears." At the other pole we have Peter, the believer, saying, "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." I stand with Peter. I make no apology in presenting Christ as the great Teacher. The only apology that I have to make is that I must appear as his representative.

You remember the history, how Christ stood before Pilate and Pilate questioned him and Christ answered, "For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." And Pilate turning to him said, "What is truth?"

Here we find Christ as an outcast, despised, a prisoner in bonds, and this great man, putting to him the question, "What is truth?" Christ was the representative of spiritual things, the delegate from the kingdom of heaven, while Pilate represented Rome and so in a sense all the world. In putting to him that question, "What is truth?" Pilate made no mistake. He came to the one man who was qualified to explain truth. And from that great Teacher came the statement that I have already quoted in your hearing, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

NO SUCH THING AS SCIENCE VERSUS RELIGION.

Sometimes in the past religious people (falsely so-called) have said that we must not investigate. They have tried to grasp the hammer of the geologist in mid air and stop his investigations. They have forbidden the astronomer to search the heavens. They have tried to bring the researches of the biologist to an end. They have said, "If you seek to read the history of the world as it is revealed by the rocks and the sky, and in the organized forms of living beings, you may discover something that will overthrow the Bible."

I want to tell you here and now they never had any authority for such a protest from the lips of the Man who stood before Pilate. They have been fanatics and not Christians. Christ serenely felt that no one at any time or any place would ever discover any truth that would come in conflict with that which he taught.

In the past we have been told that science and Christianity were in conflict. Well, it is true, that which some men have thought that Christianity taught and that which some other men have thought that science taught have conflicted, but in many cases we have discovered that one and sometimes both of the men in this controversy were wrong, and I believe that when the perfect man shall arise to explain what true Christianity teaches and the infallible man shall arise to tell us what science really teaches, the two of them will speak as it were with one voice. There is no such thing as science versus religion.

This statement that I have quoted to you, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free," has been quoted and has been taken for a motto by the greatest thinkers in our age and in other ages. I believe, if I remember correctly, that it adorned the education building at the World's Fair in the city of Chicago. It was the best motto that the combined wisdom of the nations of the world could select to represent the aim of education in the nineteenth century: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." And if this country shall again hold a World's Fair that shall be representative of all the nations of the world, they can not find a better motto to represent the aim of true education, which is to teach men the truth and by virtue of that truth to make them free.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

Pilate said, "What is truth?" We have a definition given to us by way of revelation. (Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.) The statement is made, truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come. If we might change the wording, we would state it in this way: The man who knows things as they are, as they have been, and as they are to be, is in possession of truth. And right in harmony with that thought I wish to present an extract from the writings of Edward A. Ross, professor of sociology in the University of Nebraska. I notice in his book, The Foundations of Sociology, these statements, (the first words in the preface):

"To the student of society present themselves the questions, What is? What has been? What tends to be? What may be? . . . The first two are tributary to the third. . . We seek truth not merely for the pleasure of knowing, but in order to have a lamp to our feet."

Why, these are the questions that confronted the philosophers of the Greek age and that confront theorists to-day. These are the questions that confronted the mystic of old who retired into the forest or desert resolved that he would remain by himself and think and think and think until he should solve the problem of existence,—what is? what has been? what is to be?

In all the questions that confront society to-day we could arrive at the truth of the matter if we knew and understood conditions as they are, as they have been, and as they are to be.

But unfortunately, or otherwise, we can not tell what the future holds for us, that is, we can not absolutely know. We see only a part of the circle of truth. The future is sealed to our view, excepting as it is revealed by a higher power or as we correctly surmise. We can not possibly tell what will happen five minutes in the future. We have instruments so delicate that they can record an earthquake that is taking place five thousand miles away, but they can not tell us of one that is due to arrive five minutes from now.

When you go along the streets of a large city you may see signs here and there, "Your fortune told," or "Your future revealed." One man said that he had presented himself to several of these fortune tellers, and only one of them had ever told him the truth. She told him that she would tell him something concerning his future that would be of interest to him, if he would give her a dollar. He gave her the dollar and she told him that he would see the time when when he would need that dollar, and he said that the prediction was absolutely true.

The future is sealed to our vision. The men of the weather bureau, it is true, from their knowledge of weather conditions now, and as they have existed in the past, can hazard a prediction concerning the weather conditions in the future, but they may be mistaken. They do not know.

So I advocate the idea that all progress of society and of the individual must be based on faith and knowledge combined. We study what society has been, we study what it is now, and on the results of these studies we base our calculations of what society will be in the future. Trusting that our conclusion is correct we move forward, and we must walk to an extent by faith and not by sight.

THE PROVINCE OF REFORMERS.

It is the province of reformers to study society as it is, and as it has been, that they may reach a conclusion concerning what it "tends to be," and then they may so change the course of events that we may have that which should be instead of that which tends to be, in all instances where tendencies are wrong.

I DON'T BELIEVE; I DON'T KNOW.

Some one may say, "I do not want to accept this idea of faith." But I want to say that those who have ever amounted to anything in the history of the world have been those who have moved forward in harmony with a faith that was based on knowledge. While you have your teachers here in Grace-land, you will discover by inquiry that they have their teachers. They are reading after such men as Ex-president Eliot, Professor Ely, Howard, Ross, Blackmar, Strong, and many others whose names even may be unknown to me. And if you should inquire of these other teachers, you would find that they were following the writings of still other teachers. Each teacher is a student, and each looks to another as his teacher, and as the highest Teacher of them all I present the Man who stood before Pilate.

But some come to me and say, "I do not believe this, or I do not believe that." Now, young people, do not waste your life telling the world what you do not believe. The world wants to know what you do believe. It wants you to move forward with an affirmative belief, believing something and shaping an active life in harmony with your convictions.

One man buttonholes me and says, "I want to tell you something. I don't know that there is a God. I don't know that the Bible is true. I don't know that Christ is the Savior of the world." I want to say to that man that I haven't the time to make a catalogue of the things that he doesn't know. There are too many of them. Let him make a list of the things that he does know. It will require less time.

It is faith based upon knowledge that has always moved the world. Why, there is the case of old John Brown. I was reading his history as written by his son, and the son says that when John Brown made his raid on Harper's Ferry he fully expected to be killed. He did not expect with his little force to overthrow the armed power that was back of the slave trade; but for years he had been preaching and writing against slavery, and he had been rail-roading escaped negroes north to freedom. But he discovered that the task was too gigantic. As well try to draw the Atlantic Ocean through a rye straw. He became convinced that there must be some spectacular protest made that would direct the attention of the whole world to the perpetual crime of slavery. He had faith in the power that there is in the blood of martyrdom, and so with some eighteen or twenty of his "fanatics" he made his attack upon Harper's Ferry, was duly captured and executed. But that which he had believed would happen did happen, and in a very short time armed men, by ones and twos, in companies, regiments, and great armies were marching through the land singing, "John Brown's body lies a moldering in the grave, but his soul goes marching on."

A PERSONAL APPEAL.

There is a personal appeal in the statement, "Ye shall know the truth." Christ did not say, I shall know the truth and that will be sufficient for you, as I will direct all of your affairs. He said, "Ye shall know the truth." Every man likes to know the truth for himself. He likes to obtain it, if possible, by personal research. Sometimes there is a protest on the part of students against study that in itself is prompted by the form that the study is required to take. Pupils at times play truant. Elder Carmichael (formerly a teacher) tells of two boys whom he overheard talking. One of them said in his slow, drawling way, "Clint, which would you rather do, go to school a thousand years, or die?" And Clint said that he would rather die.

But it is not that a boy does not want to know, because he is by nature a standing question mark. He wants to know about everything. But he does not see the need of studying books on natural history when he can go to the old millpond and find frogs and tadpoles and other specimens by which he can study natural history at first hand. Why learn to bound Germany when you can not bound the old homestead?

Your speaker remembers how, when he was a boy, whenever we could get to the railroad track, we would spread our pennies along the rail in order to see what the engine would do to them when it came along. We had been told about a boy who spread his pennies along the rail and presently a car came along with one wheel that was hot and picked them all up and carried them away. We had also heard of one boy who had all his pennies flattened out so large that he passed each one of them out for twenty-five cent pieces. We were willing to have our pennies flattened out.

In the same way the human race has tested theories, many of them absurd, some of them true, and has arrived at the truth. Our experiment was no more foolish than that of the alchemists who thought that if they could find the philosopher's stone they would be able to transmute the baser metals into gold. The fallacy of that idea was discovered, but in time man found that he could transform black soil and sunshine and rain into ten-dollar gold pieces by way of the harvest field.

Man naturally prefers to get knowledge at first hand, but the store of human knowledge is so vast now that we must have access to libraries, schools, and colleges. We can not test all theories personally.

EVADING RESPONSIBILITY.

The Man who stood before Pilate did not propose to reveal to his followers all knowledge without an effort upon their part. His motto was, "Work while the day lasts." Knowledge is obtained by study and study means work.

You remember that Pilate, when he did not dare to convict Christ, and did not dare to set him free, attempted to avoid the responsibility of the situation by washing his hands of the whole matter. Young people sometimes attempt in like manner to avoid the responsibilities of life. Mr. Gustavus Meyer, who is authority on such subjects, says that there are at least five hundred thousand tramps in the United States, the great majority of whom are between sixteen and twenty-one years of age, and not all vagrants are on the road. One writer says that there are three kinds of tramps. One man comes to the back door and begs for bread because he can not get work. Another comes to the back door and begs for bread because he will not work. The third, a young man, comes in at the front door and puts his feet under his father's table and eats three times a day. He spends his time on the street corners wearing loud neckties and hilarious socks, smoking cigarettes and throwing dice, while his father works to earn the money that he squanders.

All this signifies that there are many young men in the world who are seeking to avoid the responsibilities of life, just as Pilate did. But no man ever succeeded in avoiding a responsibility when it was placed upon him. We must act well our part or suffer the consequences.

A FIVEFOLD STRUGGLE FOR FREEDOM.

"Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Freedom is a wonderful word. We close our eyes and before our minds in panorama we see a thousand battlefields. We see the waving banners, the tossing spears, the dead and living heroes who have fought for political freedom. We see a thousand martyrs who have died on the crucifix or at the burning stake in the interest of religious freedom. Only as men have grasped the truth have they been able to obtain and retain the freedom for which such sacrifice has been made.

But, you say, we are free, and the long struggle for freedom is successfully ended. That is a mistake. It is the mistake that the Jews made when Christ addressed this language to them. They said, "We have never been in bondage to any man." The struggle for freedom is not won. We are not even free politically excepting as we are eternally vigilant. At any time in any community the people may find themselves ruled by a corrupt political ring. One writer says that the best in the community are fortunate if they are not ruled by the worst.

Professor Howard, of the University of Nebraska, says that since the dawning of the reformation there has been in progress a five-fold struggle for freedom; a struggle for political, religious, intellectual, economic, and social freedom, and that the struggle is still in progress with increasing intensity. In all of these domains of social and individual activity men can become free only as they obtain a knowledge of the truth.

Certain men have siphoned off a certain amount of truth from the great fountainhead and are willing to sell it to you in their books, or by way of the lecture or college course; and some of them will tell you that there is no fountainhead. Do not believe it. Avail yourselves of the knowledge that they place at your disposal, but do not let them cut you off from the fountainhead.

We can only obtain a certain knowledge of the great questions regarding man's mortality or immortality, the existence of God, and the future existence of man, and the future status of society as we accept the revelation that God has given us of the future. With a careful study of conditions as they are, and as they have been, with the aid of the intelligence that we have and that which has been revealed, we may form our ideas of what the future holds, and then with a well-founded faith we can move forward, shaping our conduct and forming our characters so that we shall be able to meet that future.

In closing let me present this thought: Do not educate yourselves for this life alone. Life is brief and seems like a dream. It is not a dream, for "life is real, life is earnest"; but it seems like a dream, and though you are young now, suddenly you will be aroused to the realization that you are old, perhaps shaking with palsy and depending upon the charity of others. This life soon passes, but before all of you there stretches an eternity for which you should prepare yourselves.

I hope that those who are assembled here to-day will take advantage of the opportunities that are presented to them, that they may work earnestly and search after that which is true, because it will bring them not only social freedom, but individual freedom as well.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Sanitarium will be opened on December 15. On that date, at two o'clock in the afternoon, formal exercises will be held, at which it is expected Bishop Kelley, Mayor Jones, Historian Heman C. Smith, President Elbert A. Smith, Doctors G. T. Twyman, Joseph Mather, J. W. Green, N. P. Wood, and P. C. Palmer; and Editor William Southern will make speeches. Special attention is called to the necessity of persons, contemplating entering the Sanitarium, first making arrangements for reception before coming to Independence.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

EXPERIENCES OF ELDER S. V. BAILEY.

In the year 1864 Bro. S. V. Bailey went to Coldwater, Michigan, on some business, and hearing that one of the brethren of the church was sick, he went to see him. The man was Doctor Ainsworth, and as soon as Brother Bailey entered the room he said, "The Lord sent your brother Oliver here to baptize me, and he has sent you here to preach my funeral sermon." He felt the truth of the sick man's word, and with it came a full realization that he was not equal to the task. He had only preached a few sermons, and never one for a funeral. Coldwater was a large and growing city, and the people there boasted of their fine and eloquent preachers. All this went quickly through his mind as he sat by the bedside of the passing soul. Then he was also desirous to present the gospel in such a way that it would demand the respect of the people. He knew that many would hear the gospel for the first time, and that, if rightly presented, friends would be won for the truth, and friends were so few in those days. So from the time, which was Friday, that he went out from the bedside of the dying man he fasted, and in his mind was the constant cry, "Lord, help me to represent you aright."

The next day he received word that the Doctor was dead and in dying had requested that Brother Bailey preach his funeral sermon, which would be held on Sunday.

Doctor Ainsworth was the only one of his family that belonged to the Latter Day Saints. His children felt mortified that their father had made the request he had concerning his funeral, for their friends were among the best of the place; still they did not feel like disregarding their father's last wish, so one of the sons-in-law took pains to explain to his friends that this man had been asked to make a short talk because his father had so wished it, that the man could not preach much, and so they must not be expecting anything of a sermon.

Sunday was a bright, clear day, and Doctor Ainsworth had lived there many years, so there was a crowded house. As the elder walked up the aisle of the church, he noted the large congregation, and all fear left him, and in its place came a great longing to teach those people the way to eternal life. His text was, "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to the house of feasting," and for one hour he talked fluently of the life to come, and the narrow way that leads thereto. The people listened eagerly, some leaning forward as though they feared losing a single word.

He rode to the cemetery with a Mr. Chandler, who was a Methodist class-leader of the town. As they rode along Mr. Chandler said: "I have been happily disappointed to-day; for you preached the best funeral sermon I ever heard, and I have heard many preachers offer hope of the life to come; but to-day you made it seem a certainty. I knew that you were a man that supported your family, and so, of course, could not give much time to study, and so I was not expecting much."

"Yes," said the elder, "we Latter Day Saints preach without pay, but there is an inspiration that goes with this gospel, and it was through the influence of the Spirit that I was enabled to preach as I did to-day."

Mr. Chandler continued: "There are many things that I do not believe as my Methodist brethren do, but I have thought it best to go on with them. Most people think there is nothing in your doctrine that is good, and that the Book of Mormon is all bad, but I know better. When a young boy I helped set the type for the first Book of Mormon."

"Yes," said Brother Bailey, "and that is why you fail to believe with your brethren."

Mr. Chandler never united with the church, but through the years that followed he continued a firm and faithful friend to the Saints.

At another time, somewhere in the early seventies, Bro. S. V. Bailey heard that a Doctor Alger, of Coldwater, was intending to lecture on Mormonism at the Ball Schoolhouse, a few miles out from the city. He went and talked with the doctor and inquired his reasons for the attack upon the Saints. The doctor said he thought it his duty to show up Mormonism in its true light, and he felt no fear but what he could convince many.

"If I were you I would not do this," advised the brother. "You were raised with some that are now Saints, and don't you know them to be the best of people? So what can be wrong with a religion that makes good citizens and good neighbors?"

But the doctor said that he was determined to show the people what a fraud Joe Smith and his golden Bible were.

"Very well," said the brother, "but let me warn you if you fight these people, just so sure will you lose friends, and instead of being popular as you are to-day, your very name will almost be forgotten in this place."

In a few days the following announcement appeared throughout the town: "Tuesday evening at the Ball Schoolhouse, Doctor Alger will lecture on the subject 'Mormonism compared with my mother's Bible.' A suit of clothes will be given to any man who can refute the evidence brought forth."

Of course such an advertisement brought out a large crowd, and most of the Saints were there. It is needless to dwell upon the lecture, for it was the usual kind, consisting of stories concerning the dreadful character of Joseph Smith, of his trying to walk upon the water, and his falling in. He dwelt upon his wickedness in claiming to be a prophet, and ended by saying that the Book of Mormon proved the man's ignorance.

As the lecture was nearing the close, a young lawyer wound his way through the crowd to Bro. S. V. Bailey, and asked him if Elder Briggs would make a reply. "No," was the answer, "but the young man with him will. His name is E. L. Kelley."

As the doctor closed his speech, he said he regretted that he must leave at once, but that it was necessary, as he had a patient that required his immediate attention. At once the young lawyer was on his feet, asking if the doctor would wait twenty minutes for a young man who was present to win that suit of clothes. The doctor's answer was that he could not do it.

"Will you wait fifteen minutes for this young man to win the suit?" But the doctor said it was impossible. Finally he put the time down to five minutes, but by this time the doctor was leaving. Most of the people like to see fair play. They lose faith in the man who does not keep his word, and it seemed to them that a patient that had been left for two hours could still have waited a few minutes. The lawyer then announced that on Friday night E. L. Kelley would answer the talk they had just listened to, and urged them to come and hear him.

The next day was an unpleasant one for the doctor. Even the street urchins would accost him as he passed with "How's that patient?" "Where's that suit of clothes you promised?" and "Who got in a hurry?" He had expected to be praised and lauded, but he noted that his friends forgot to praise and talked of other things.

On Friday night Brother Kelley spoke at length and satisfied the Saints at least, that the name and character of Joseph Smith had been misrepresented, so while he did not win the suit of clothes, he won friends for his Master's cause.

This lecture by Doctor Alger against a quiet, law-abiding people, made him very unpopular. Ere many years passed his influence had waned, his practice had grown small, and before he died his name was practically forgotten. But the young lawyer who gave, as it were, just a cup of water, became county attorney, and finally a judge, and to this day he continues to say kind words of the Saints of Southern Michigan.

At one time Bro. S. V. Bailey was conversing with a lady about this latter-day work. Finally she said: "Your explanations are satisfactory and reasonable. I like the preaching of your elders, but people are always telling me that I must take care, that there is 'a nigger in the fence,' in other words, that you believe things that you don't preach, and I ask you the question, Have you taught me all?"

His answer was that he had taught her the gospel just as he understood it; that nothing had ever been taught him that he could not proclaim upon the housetop; that many people did not hesitate to tell plain, unvarnished lies about us.

Only a few days passed before Brother Bailey and wife were invited to her house for supper. Bro. E. C. Briggs was there and a brother of Doctor Alger, who was also noted for his hatred of the doctrine of the Saints. Of course with such a man on one side, and Brother Briggs on the other, there was bound to be a talk on some phase of religion, and to-night it was baptism. When the man was worsted on every point he fell back on the weapon so often used against us, a weapon whose correct name is lie. He leaned back in his chair and in a pompous manner said, "Elder, to prove to you the injurious effects of baptism, I will relate one incident that happened in this neighborhood when one of your elders went to baptize. I saw it and all the neighbors saw it.

"Philo and Hyrum Corless' families were pretty good people, and their neighbors all liked them, even if they were Mormons. Their wives, as you know, were sisters, and their father came from Canada to live with them. He was an aged man, and his daughters feared he would die without being baptized, so they urged him until he consented to be baptized. They dug a hole down in a low place and there they baptized him, and the old man died before they got him to the house."

As the man finished his face wore a complacent smile, as much as to say, "That settles baptism." The company at that moment left the table, and Sr. S. V. Bailey went at once to Mr. Alger's wife and said, "Your husband is mistaken. I am Philo Corless' daughter, and grandfather lived a number of years after being baptized, and instead of the hole your husband told of, he was baptized in Coldwater River, where the water is as clear as crystal."

The poor woman looked mortified and said: "I presume he is mistaken, for he gets things mixed up at times."

Brother Briggs had heard the talk between the two women, and stepping back to the dining-room he said, "What about this, Mr. Alger?" Here is one of Philo Corless' daughters, and she says her grandfather lived for sometime after being baptized, and you say you saw him die as they were returning from the baptism, and you say you saw him baptized in a hole, while she says it was a river."

The man did not try to explain his misstatements, but made a hurried departure.

Mrs. Ball said, "Well, I have found the 'nigger in the fence,' only it is not on the Mormon side, and it was not long till she was a Latter Day Saint.

This little band of Saints had many and varied experiences in their endeavor to warn their neighbors, but to them the hard struggle counted but little in comparison to their blessings, and the comfort and joy they found in their religion.

A PERSONAL GOD OR NONE.

The cult known as Christian Science so far as its name is concerned must be regarded as anything else than that implied in its assumed title, for the following reasons:

1. Its putative founder denies the personality of God, man, and the Devil, and in so doing misquotes the Bible while professing to believe it, the word of God, a divine revelation. A revelation making known what? Something impossible of conception, or comprehension, by any intelligent being. Any proposition which denies the personality of God, man, or the Devil is unscriptural and unscientific, and can not therefore be regarded as Christian in any sense whatever. Before proceeding further, we give here the first plank in the platform of Christian Science: "There is neither a personal deity, a personal devil, nor a personal man."

2. It is unscriptural for the following reasons: The Scriptures ascribe to God all the elements and qualities of personality. Paul says of Christ in Hebrews 1: 3: "Who being in the brightness of his [God's] glory, and the express image of his [God's] person," thought it not robbery to be equal with God. If Christian Science be true, we have presented to our view an impersonal idea, which being but an idea, (something that can not be seen, touched, tasted or handled,) is yet the express image and likeness of another idea, equally incapable of self-assertion or proof. The difficulty in the way of accepting this so-called Christian Science does not end here; an image not only implies personality in itself, but in its antecedent original. Further, as the original possesses all the attributes or features of personality, so its image must have the same features, such as form or shape, and must find expression through a material form or shape is an essential condition of personality, while an idea can not be said to have form or shape only as it may be expressed in oral or written language.

But such an expression is not the idea itself, but only the medium, or vehicle for the transmission of the idea from one mind to another. In the quotation here given, Paul not only affirms the personality of God, but of Christ as well. The following passages present to us positive proof of the existence, somewhere in the universe, of an intelligent, personal being, which for want of a better term we call God.

PERSON.

Hebrews 1: 3: "Who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person." Genesis 1: 26: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." John 5: 37, form, shape. Phillipians 2: 5, 6, parts, hand, back parts. Face in Genesis 35: 30; Exodus 33: 11; eyes in 2 Chronicles 16: 9; hand, fingers, and arm in Hebrews 10: 12; "But this man [Christ] . . . sat down on the right hand of God." Isaiah 62: 8: "The Lord hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength." Exodus 24: 11: "And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God."

This last quotation proves that God can be seen by the natural eye when he sees fit. Exodus 31: 18: "And he gave unto Moses, . . . tables . . . written with the finger of God." Feet, Exodus 24: 9, 10. "Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of elders of Israel." All this testimony against the word of this leader of the greatest religious fraud that has ever been sought to be imposed upon mankind; a fraud opposed to both religion and science.

PERSON OR IDEA, WHICH?

Christian Science, so-called, seems to me but an elaboration, or amplification of the old sectarian theory that being a spirit, and as such opposed to matter, an immaterial being, without body or parts, can not be a person. All scientists (except Christian) will agree with me in this proposition: all ideas are but the impressions of the mind of some person, or persons; and may be true or false; i. e., these impressions are formed from observation, or use, of personal faculties one or many, in combination; and if these faculties have been improperly developed, or dwarfed, and distorted by false education, the ideas expressed will have in them an element of falsehood.

In harmony with the foregoing proposition I will now proceed to inquire how the primitive idea which Mrs. Eddy calls God had its origin, for we must not forget that an idea can in no case originate itself. If we admit for a moment the obverse of our proposition to be true, then it follows that before this supreme or primitive idea came into existence, there was or could be no existence either spiritual, or material. In the platform of this cult, occurs the following:

First, "There is neither a personal Deity, a personal Devil, nor a personal man." As the second and third terms of the above proposition are the logical results of the first term we will confine our reasoning to this one.

If this be true, why is it that this truth, or triad of truths, was never discovered through all these centuries? Like all other teachers, Mrs. Eddy begins her pious creed by affirming that which she seeks to deny. Why can not she and everyone else see that no word of negation can be used except in connection with an affirmative? The negative in every instance is destroyed or loses force by the use of preceding affirmation. In all denials concerning God and his attributes, the negation amounts to nothing more than an assertion or admission of ignorance. "I don't know," amounts to the same thing,—nothing. If we do not know that God exists, it is equally certain that we can not prove his nonexistence. How did Mrs. Eddy learn that personality is not a characteristic of the Deity, the Devil, or man? How does she know that this article in her creed had any higher or deeper source than her human imagination? How could the great All kind communicate to that in which there is no mind?

Mrs. Eddy, no more than others, could be known, or recognized, only through an apparent personality, and if that which is apparent is necessary to the recognition of individual existence, how are we to distinguish between that which is true and that which is false? Communication of thought could only be made from one mind to another mind, and if there is no personal man, Mrs. Eddy does not exist, only as a mere fancy; therefore, her utterances are nothing. From nothing, nothing comes; i. e., the real can not evolve itself from that which is unreal.

Second, "That God is principle, and not person; mind, and not matter; that is what the scripture declares it, namely, life, truth and love." To this proposition we have this to say, that life, truth, and love are not things, but only the conditions of existing things; as length, breadth, height, and weight are conditions or characteristics of things material. Mrs. Eddy may say that there is no matter, but that will avail nothing; for with equal show of reason I might, as others have, assert that mind is not and matter is the only all and eternal. Mrs. Eddy, by denying the personality of God, reduces God, man, and the Devil as well, to the condition of mere ideas, and places herself and all others of her cult in a very awkward dilemma from which it is no easy task to extricate themselves; for one asks how can a mere idea become conscious of its own and the separate existence of other ideas, and how did this great primal idea in the formation of other ideas infuse into them a consciousness of themselves and others? Would not these ideas become possessed of some of the characteristics of mind to which belong the power to reflect and form conclusions?

How can an idea be said to feel, think, reflect, and do? How can an idea become conscious of that which has never existed? For it must be evident that if an idea (if for the purpose of investigation we ascribe to it personality) becomes conscious of the existence of other ideas, it can only do so by seeing them individually, separate from, and outside itself. But how can we conceive this to be true if "man is (only) the conception of God, and mind is not in man?" How evident it is, that we can not (try as we may) avoid speaking, acting, and thinking of ourselves and all other intelligent beings (including God and Satan) as complex, or composite, personal beings, composed of spirit and matter, each differing from the other in nature or qualities, yet each necessary to the other; for a complete expression of personality, mind, or intelligence having seat in the spirit is expressed, or manifested in and through the material forms; the attributes of the material being made use of or utilized by the spiritual forces.

Ideas may rightly be regarded as forms of thought, or impressions of things seen, heard, or felt, either contained within, or thrown outward by some intelligent personality. Those ideas or impressions may be regarded as right or wrong, as we look at things from a right or wrong viewpoint, or our mental vision is distorted or obscured by preconceived wrong impressions. If we admit for a moment the possibility of idea unassociated with, or apart from, personality, we are at once confronted with this difficulty; if the idea (as it must be regarded) is a primal unit, it can not in the very nature of the case, be other than what it is; hence there can not be any such thing as right or wrong. To relegate this conclusion where it rightly belongs (to the realm of error) we need only to remember there is a mental condition known as consciousness in every individual; i. e., we see John Smith as John Smith, not as Peter Jones; but should we perchance mistake John Smith for some other individual, the fact still remains, the personality of John Smith still stands out in all the distinctness of the unit of personality. John Smith can not be other than himself; our mistake does not in any way change the fact.

We have said sufficient on the question of the personality of the Deity for our further inquiries to the question, Man, is he a personal being, first remarking that person and individual are the same in meaning to all intents and purposes. Mrs. Eddy, because she can not do otherwise, is compelled to recognize the personality of herself, and of every other individual, so far as known to her. Notwithstanding her denial of the fact, she must also speak and act from the viewpoint of personality. She could never have written her book, or published it to the world from any other viewpoint. She must at least have conceded the possibility of the real existence of matter. If she bases her denial of personality upon her theory that matter does not exist, the same difficulty still stares us in the face. It is not to be supposed for a moment that she would have us believe that she has not written a book. Did she use pen, ink, and paper, and employ the wonderful printing press as a means of making known her views to the world? If so, do not her actions give the lie to, or, to put it more mildly, contradict, her published statement of her faith? That all these things are the outward and visible expressions of ideas, no one will deny; they are more than these, they are the material facts that made the expressions possible.

When we can believe Mrs. Eddy's utterances, we can as easily relegate her wild vagaries to the shades of oblivion. Turn it about as we may we can see no way of accepting Mrs. Eddy's conclusions, for if we can not believe in the existence of that which we see to be endowed with all the elements of personality, how and on what evidence can we believe in the existence of that which we have not, nor can reach, taste, or see? We have in Mrs. Eddy the strange anomaly of a would-be teacher of truth admitting in every possible way the reality of that which she asserts to be nonexistent, in order to prove the existence and consequent reality of that which can not be perceived, only as we judge of it as an invisible cause or agency, manifesting itself and its characteristics in and through a visible and therefore real form.

Mrs. Eddy further states in the second plank of her platform, as follows: "That science decides that matter or the mortal body to be nothing but a belief and an illusion." So far from this being the case, science affirms both the eternity of matter, and also recognizes the mortal body, and all other forms visible to human eye as material facts and verities. Mrs. Eddy's term (Christian Science) which she uses as a name for her cult, is a palpable contradiction of terms, and as such a most stupendous falsehood, when applied to her teachings, for they are neither Christian nor scientific. The Bible teaches that man is a twofold being composed of spirit, the ego or real self, and a material form or body, which will be perpetuated and reunited with the spirit in the life beyond, thus continuing the personality known in this present life as man.

Therefore, Mrs. Eddy's theories can not be truly defined as Christian Science. Science, as defined by the leading thinkers and philosophers, could not have existed only as based upon the theory (true or false) that matter is real and eternal both as to its past, present, and future. Mrs. Eddy's system of doctrine can not therefore justly be regarded as scientific in any sense, since it conflicts with, and denies the underlying facts and principles of, all science. Therefore the following conclusion is self-evident: that the so-called Christian Science is a most blasphemous insult to both Christianity and science, and should at least be classed with the "many inventions" which men have sought out (or rather a "doctrine of devils") in their mad zeal to oppose the truth and "appear wise above that which is written" in the Holy Scriptures.

In conclusion I can do no better than to quote the closing words of Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York: "At the last, false Christs and false prophets shall arise, and shall show signs and wonders to seduce, if it were possible, even the very elect, but behold I have foretold you all these things." Let all beware, lest following after this ignis fatuous they thereby prove themselves to be not of the elect, but the dupes of agnostic mysticism, insidiously palmed off upon Christian America in this twentieth century under the guise of Christian Science.

WHY DO WE WANT THE CIRCULATING LIBRARY TO BE A SUCCESS IN OUR DISTRICT?

(As the holiday season approaches many of our readers will be interested in selecting books for their children. Such may receive benefit from the following article written by one who has had practical experience in educational work. It will also be of interest to those who are engaged in district library work.—EDITORS.)

We have asked ourselves this question over and over again. If we have any selfish motives we do not know of them. We believe it is one of the means of educating the children of the church. The older people, too, need good reading, but it is for the young especially that I present a plea for better reading. Their tastes are not formed, and their minds can be directed and trained to choose the good. If I were to answer this question, "Why we hope this work may be a success," I would say, "For the purpose of helping to save the youth of the church."

Other questions that come now are, What books shall we select for our libraries? What ought to be our standard of books to put before the children? First, I believe that we ought to put nothing there that teaches doctrines contrary to the gospel plan as taught by Christ and his apostles. There are many good books, but when we come to look them over carefully we find perhaps one wrong principle taught. That will be that much that will have to be undone. I think our church books should be among the first. I think the autobiography of different ones are among the best of books to put before the youth of the church. Let that include also those who have lately become members. Why we do not have more of these books is a query in my mind. Judging from the articles that have been in the HERALD we think more books of this kind could be written with profit to all. If several of those "Leaves from a life" could be put together they would make an interesting book.

Shall we select books according to their binding, price, or contents, or shall we take into consideration all of these. Sometimes books are bought because they are cheap, and a larger number can be secured for a certain amount of money. Shall we think we have a library because our shelves are well filled with books? The longer I live in this world the more I am convinced that the things which can be used and are used are of the most importance in this world. I believe it will pay to get good books in good binding, not gaudy, showy binding, but substantial binding, but the contents should be the first consideration. The principles taught there should be those that will lead the children to higher ideals, and help them to lead better, nobler lives. If we get those that have some "goody goody" characters, they will not help the children. There must be characters true to life, and these "goody goody" characters will not lift their standard of living higher. These characters must be true to the right kind of life.

If the people that we get acquainted with in books meet temptations such as we have to meet in this life, it will be something we can understand. There are so many books that have a healthful tone in them, that strengthen the mental, the moral, and the spiritual part of our natures, just as good, wholesome food strengthens the physical part of our natures.

Shall we call a book good just because it is interesting to the child? Our taste for reading has to be cultivated just as our taste for food has to be sometimes. Some children, yes, some older people, too, have a depraved taste for reading as well as for food. If we know that certain foods are not good for us we can leave them alone. If we know that certain other foods will build up our bodies, we can eat those foods and eventually learn to like them. So it is with books. We need some mental physicians, if you will allow that term, a great deal more than we need the physician for our bodily ailments.

A child can be taught to leave those books alone that are harmful, but there must be something interesting, wholesome, and instructive as well, put in their place. Teach the child to read good books, and he will learn to love them. Keep him supplied with the good ones, and he will not want the bad. His mind can be trained till it will take no enjoyment in that which will not elevate.

Surely "of the making of books there is no end." If there were not so many kinds it would be better. It makes my heart ache when I see children reading books that are really harmful to them when there are so many good things to read. Parents, what would you think of your child if you sent him to pick flowers and on one side were the beautiful, fragrant blossoms, and on the other side rank, poisonous weeds, and he went to the side where the weeds were growing and picked those? Would you not warn him? There are some plants that have beautiful blossoms and when you pick them they are harmful. Some one says, "But the good books are not all on one side of the road and the bad on the other." So much the more need then, of your directing your children's reading and helping them to tell the good from the bad. If they picked weeds instead of flowers, how soon you would tell them, and warn them of the dangers, or show them how useless those weeds are. How many a parent and teacher, though, will let their children pick up and read anything they may wish. I maintain that it is better for children to read nothing than to read books or papers of a questionable character. You will need to guard your children's reading the same as you would their companions. I know of a young girl who does not care much for the association of other children, but she loves books. I believe that the characters she gets acquainted with there are just as real as the real characters that other children delight in playing with and talking with. I am not sure but they have as much influence in shaping her thoughts as the living characters do. You can keep your children at home to keep them from evil company, but if you are not guarding them in regard to their book companions, they may be meeting characters just as bad as those you are trying to keep them away from.

I remember how my mother used to meet some of the papers that came to our home, not by being subscribed for, but as an advertisement. She would say, "Better put that into the stove," and I did. It became a habit, and even now when such papers come I tear off the wrapper and by the appearance of the paper I usually know its class and place it where it belongs. Perhaps there was some good there, but it was too risky to let me as a child look there to search out the good. As Brother Hougas said at Nauvoo Sunday school convention, "You would not send your child out to gather mushrooms where the poisonous toadstools grow."

Since reaching mature years I think time is too precious to spend in looking over a field of weeds to gather the one or two little faded blossoms that may be found there, and it is certainly a waste of time to do that in literature when there are such large fields of bright golden blossoms of thought that we can not begin to gather them all. My wish is then to give the children the best there is in our literature. Let them have the best thoughts of the best women and men of our country. Let their thoughts become the thoughts of the children who read them, and those thoughts will lead to as great and good actions.

CLERGYMEN AND PHYSICIANS WORK TOGETHER TO HEAL SICK.

The study of this movement convinces us that the church has an important mission to discharge to the sick, and that physician and clergyman can work together to benefit the community.

Since the fall of 1906, our work has prospered among the nervously and morally diseased, and in it we consulted several of the leading neurologists of New England to ascertain first whether such a project would meet with their approval, and secondly, whether they would be willing to cooperate. They gave a favorable response.

Our work began in this respect when Dr. James J. Putnam presided at the preliminary meeting and made the first address.

Thus, from the beginning, our work has been closely associated with very able physicians, and we have nothing without their cooperation and advice.

NO NEW DOGMA ESTABLISHED.

In this movement, we establish no new dogma. We desire to give each patient the best opportunity of life and health which our means allow. We believe in the power of the mind over the body. We believe in medicine, in good habits, and in a wholesome, well-regulated life. In functional nervous disorders we make free use of moral and physical agencies, but we do not believe in overtasking these valuable aids by expecting the mind to attain results which can be effected more easily through physical instrumentalities.

Now, for instance, if a bad headache is caused by eye strain or generally enfeebled condition, the result of a digestive disturbance, a pair of glasses or a belt is frequently far more effective than suggestion. God cures by many means, uses sunlight, healing and nourishing substances, water and air.

The knitting of a broken bone or the furrowing out of new blood courses in a diseased limb is just as truly his work as the restoration of a wounded spirit.

LARGE GROUP OF MALADIES.

We confine our practice to that large group of maladies which are known as functional disorders. We believe God has power to cure all diseases, but we do not believe that God has cured all diseases by the same means.

The affections of the personality are neurasthenia, hysteria, psychasthenia, hypochondria, alcoholism, etc. These spring from moral causes and they produce moral effects. In this domain the beneficent action of drugs and medicines is extremely limited, and the personality of the physician is everything.

We advocate the diagnosis of disease and the preservation of records, without which no treatment can be regarded as scientific or even safe.

SCIENTIFIC SIDE OF WORK.

We are constantly dwelling upon the scientific side of our work, with the purpose of recommending it to honorable physicians. No reward is accepted for our services, and we feel that the church must enter this work, because people desire spiritual help and sustenance.

Our stand is taken upon the religion of Christ, as that religion is revealed in the New Testament and as it is interpreted by modern scholarship, and we have combined with this the power of a genuine science.

Many persons outside of our denomination have taken up with this movement. The work itself is meant to become a part of the normal parish work, and it is to be used for those who are normal, and then it is to be used for those who are sick and need a consoler and helper, never to take the part of the physician. In short, this important work is to apply ethics and religion in the common work for mankind. Doctor Worcester and myself are working along these lines in Emmanuel Church.—Rev. Samuel McCook in New York American.

RELIGION AN AID TO MEDICINE.

(The following is a summing up of the Emmanuel movement by the editors of the New York American, and was published in connection with the preceding article by Reverend McCook.)

The Emmanuel movement, now widespread, is not new so far as theory goes, its founders acknowledge.

The plan of assisting physicians or of physicians helping the teachers of "the movement" has simply been worked out on scientific lines.

Originating in Boston by the Rev. Elwood Worcester, it has grown wonderfully. The "movement" differs from all Christian healers who dispense with the use of medicines.

Certain functional diseases, as science generally understands, are amenable to psychotherapy. But in organic cases "the movement" only attempts to assist.

In all cases no fee is charged. In all cases, too, there must be an attending physician. Through the means of Christ "the movement" promises to hasten cures.

It aims to be a charitable organization. Its preachers and teachers go into the slums, where tuberculosis is ravenous, place the patients in clean beds and send for a physician.

Moral suasion, the force of good example, the observance of the laws of hygiene, good food and fresh air, with the prayers of devout men and women, assisted by a scientific physician, its advocates say, will destroy malignant cases of neurasthenia. Its work proceeds upon lines where moral diseases also lie.

The Emmanuel movement disclaims any alliance with any organization claiming that cures may be had by prayer alone, by laying on of the hands, etc.

It claims to have now an organization composed of clergymen, physicians and students which for intelligence will equal that of any other in the world. Its devotees and followers are everywhere. Doctor Worcester claims its teachings will triumph over both hemispheres.

Character Building.

The world is full of imitations and imitators; and the world is full of failures. Nearly all the failures in the world, failures even as measured by our false, foolish, and superficial standards of failure and success, are due to lack of individuality. A person can not make a more serious failure, however, than that of not being himself. Even though, because of gaining wealth, or fame or some other possession which the world almost invariably misplaces, we call a man a supreme success, yet, if he has failed to be himself, he is a colossal failure. Success consists in doing our best in the place for which Nature has prepared us.—From December Physical Culture.

Thanksgiving.

The day appointed by President Taft as a day of national thanksgiving is past, and we trust that as a people we fully entered into the spirit of it, and from our hearts gave thanks to our heavenly Father for the unnumbered blessings with which the year has been crowned.

But while the day of thanksgiving is past, there yet remains with us a portion of the year, and yet another day to which all of us are looking forward with joyous anticipation. A day just like no other day because of the sacred memories associated with it and the heaven-born influence which it brings to millions of longing, weary hearts. In the calendar there is no other day like Christmas, is there? It will soon be here, and very few there are who will not be looking for some gift, some token of kindly and loving remembrance to send to dear ones far away, or bestow upon those in their home; and we come to tell you what we have and to ask you in the midst of your many purchases not to forget your own people—the household of faith. In our publishing house are many volumes worthy to be included in your list, and every dollar so invested helps the church to increase her usefulness. But we now wish to speak of one not before advertised, and which is published especially for the benefit of the Birth Offering Fund.

In the early days of the Reorganization we had with us a poet—a sweet singer in Israel. He has been taken from us and the voice which once charmed all listeners, when heard in song or raised in defense of truth and righteousness, has long been stilled in death. But the sentiments and thoughts which swayed the soul of David Hyrum Smith, and which he embalmed in verse, still live and breathe—still go forth upon their mission of cheering the hearts of the weary, of repeating the angel song of "Peace on earth, good will to men." One of these poems, "At last," filled to repletion with comfort for the weary, toiling ones of earth, and permeated in every line with a living faith, has now been illustrated, and will this year be issued from our publishing house in booklet form for the holiday trade; and how can it be otherwise than for us to expect many orders for this neatly bound, handsomely illustrated booklet at twenty-five cents a copy? All of the illustrations are original and embrace the poet's family entire, as well as others of his relatives, among them a recently taken and faithful likeness of Brother Joseph. Encourage us by sending in your orders early, and if you wish to help the Master's work, mention this opportunity to your friends and enlist their interest also. We feel safe in promising you that you will not be disappointed or regret your investment.

MARRIAGE IDEALS.

Why should we live together, save to understand and love each other, to inspire each other's hearts and minds, and unify each other's lives and deeds? We live together, not to sink into each other's lives, but to enlarge each other's lives and hearts and make a sanctuary for the race. If man and wife live together with any lower ideals than this, they will surely enter into the greatest unhappiness for themselves, and build something worse than unhappiness for their children. A house divided against itself can not stand, and a discordant marriage breeds dissolution of both mind and body for the children who are the fruits thereof.

There is hardly a marriage contract entered into that does not, in the beginning, have shining about its portals the sweet halo of heaven. Then why do we not see even a deeper glow and radiance at each hearth-stone where love is supposed to have reigned for years? Why do these ideals seem to grow less and fade away, you ask—for in too many marriages there is scarcely a trace of the ideal left before the meridian of life is reached. Browning says we must "have some bliss to die with," and in order to have that, it must have attended us all the way. That is the whole secret—we must have our ideals at the start and see that we preserve them to the finish.

How many people marry and then "settle down," as the saying goes; we really and literally should marry and then rise up. . . . To live the perfect life we must work without ceasing, and I believe that the most perfect life can be lived in the mother and father relationship. Jesus shows us how, in the oneness of flesh into which man and wife enter, they begin to have some sense of real unity—oneness of mind. Unless we find unity in the person, we will never find it in spirit. If we have real unity, it will express itself through every avenue of our being, body and mind.

Christ showed how man and woman are joined together because of their spiritual origin, because God made them in his own image and likeness. In their godlike natures only are they married, and nothing human can put them asunder.

Have mothers and fathers been finding each other in the "image and likeness of God," and endeavoring to establish their marriage and their parenthood in the spiritual sense, that in so doing they might receive their children as of the kingdom of heaven? Do they really feel that God, divine love, has joined them together, rather than their personal whim and will?

Paul speaks, in Ephesians, of the ideal marriage and spiritual relationship between man and woman, who are the temples of God not builded with hands. He pictures the perfect ideal which should exist between husband and wife, and makes the relationship symbolic of the spiritual unity. He shows how it is our schooling and preparatory experience which will usher us into the higher things of spirit. Let us read it, mothers and fathers; let us study it together and digest each word thoroughly and assimilate it into our everyday lives.

In reading Froebel, we are constantly brought face to face with the fact that he takes this spiritual statement as his starting point, constantly reiterating and restating, in varied forms, his "confession of faith." He knew that the unwritten volume and the unformulated scheme of life must stand on the fact that the mother and father relation—namely, marriage—must be on the spiritual basis. Very few except Jesus, Saint Paul, and Froebel have ever dared to claim that it was absolutely and only a spiritual relationship; but this, indeed, they claimed for every other human relationship. . . .

We must begin at the source of things if we would build for eternity; and if we desire true results as Christians we can find the source only in God and the spiritual unity of human life. The father and mother who consciously plan to have a perfect family; to build a perfect house for them to live in (however small), to make, through the spirit, the perfect home—can never be working for anything less than perfected society and state; and they will make for it more definitely than any other agency.

It were idle to discuss marriage from an anthropological aspect, or trace even the philosophic and religious establishment of it. It is here among us an established, sacred, and necessary ordinance. We need not even discuss whether it is a failure or a success, as the conclusion always depends upon the life of the one who is arguing. We who have entered into it for the truth's sake have only one duty, and that is to make a success of it; and we can only do that through persevering and expanding our ideals concerning it.

We know of perfect marriages and we desire nothing less for ourselves. A perfect marriage must have ideals to start out with and ideals to close with. Even if linked with blindness and ignorance, these ideals will stand the wear and tear when nothing else will. They will help over hard places, weaknesses of heart and body. In fact, a woman or man who has set the standard of a perfect married life will often sacrifice heavily rather than lose it. Jesus has said: "Seek first the kingdom," and if we try to seek the kingdom of heavenly bliss in marriage, we can hardly guess what riches will be added unto us.

Where is the woman or man wise enough to sense the full and sacred meaning of parenthood before choosing a mate? To speak ideally, the man and woman together should seek to unite the desires of their hearts with the wisdom which will work for the well-being of their children and the perfecting of the family. Even if we do not see into these things until after we have made many mistakes, let us work and reconstruct, for homes we must have; and how can we have homes unless some one consciously plans the contents and determines the quality of them?

Think what home means; it means not a place of shelter nor a place to enjoy our food, save in a single sense. Home means the beautiful entirety contained in the family—father, mother, child—all inclosed in a unity, whatever the shelter over their heads may be. Home, like heaven, is a condition, not a place. When we look about us and see how few marriages rest on principle or on character, and how few homes are being consciously built on a Christian foundation, demanding of all, honesty, coöperation, and respect for each other's highest ideals, it makes us question what means our boasted civilization and our claim as a nation of homes.

Not instinct's governing in the marriage relation, nor human ambition, nor desire, nor personality, but love—the divine intelligence of the mind of God—that is the only thing that will bring about ideal homes and social conditions. Nor is this an empty phrase to sound sweetly on the ear; but in every action the father and mother, the husband and wife, should be governed by a vast and all-inclusive love, a love that dares sift and purify itself daily, knowing that its eternal qualities will bear chastening and cleansing. And what if the dross do fall away? Where such love is practiced, marriage is a success; home is indeed heaven, and our children the children of God.

Personal love, as I have said so many times, is all dross. It limits, it is selfish, it is jealous, it is a dangerous thing to keep house with, and it can only be washed out through unselfish sympathy, and through the love divine which is so wise, so strong, and so unfailing. To make married life a success, this sifting process must constantly and consciously go on between the father and mother. Of course, if the sons and daughters of our race were properly reared in the beginning, their time of mating would never be a time of problem-making, but a time of beautiful fulfillment to their own lives and a time when the abnegation of self should begin for the sake of the child and a new race.

But few young people have the full and proper preparation for life; the greater part of their development is left until after they have entered the marriage state; and how rife with disappointments this crucial time often is! Most of us are obliged to begin to learn at the time our preparatory stage should be finished. But it is never too late to begin to dare to live truly. If each might only feel the deep purport of the united life and lay down selfishness and personal opinion! Daughters and sons, before they reach the age to contemplate marriage, should be inspired by their parents to feel the richness and truth of the pure family relationships, and taught to look forward to experiencing them. It ought to be included in the school training of our young men and women in the shape of special lectures by consecrated thinkers—men and women who are working for the purity of the race.

Froebel says: "Shall we, men and fathers, and mothers too, not at least be frank, and cease to conceal from ourselves the never-healing wounds and the permanently callous places in our disposition, the dark spots left in our souls by the ruthless extirpation of noble and elevating thoughts and feelings in the days of our misguided youth and boyhood? Shall we never see that noble germs were at that time broken and withered—nay, killed—in our souls? And shall we not heed this for our children's sake?"

Ah, there is the great secret! If the marriage relationship always looked beyond itself into its relation to the child, the first hour of its consummation would be dedicated to self-purification, to unselfishness, to a reconstruction of the old broken feelings and ideals for the sake of the child.

It takes a mighty determination on the part of a man and a woman to hold to the vision of a perfect marriage. But I desire especially to talk with mothers, and to hold them responsible for the fulfillment of their whole duty. Not that I believe that it is possible for the mother to do more than half; but the mother half is a large half, and a beautiful half, and if she does her half perfectly, perhaps she will find that perfection never divides itself into halves, and that after all she receives the whole blessing.

The mother is the highest embodiment of love. If the mother gives love, actual love, it is an undividable thing. A pure woman's love contains the whole; it is the love of a friend, sister, wife, mother, all in one, and carries with it the individual gift of each in unity. God is in such love-relationships as a mother establishes with her own family, and through such love we find God in humanity. By loving man whom we have seen, we learn to love God whom we have not seen.—Andrea Hofer Proudfoot in American Motherhood.

Questions on December Reading.

Why should husband and wife live together? Is the answer given here merely theoretical or can it be made practical? What will result from a lower ideal? How shall we hold to our ideals? In what sense should the expression, "settle down," be modified? What is the tendency of true fatherhood and motherhood? In what is the only true marriage? In the true marriage, how will children be received? What are the words of Paul referred to? For what are the father and mother working who hold the ideal of having a perfect family? Can any other agency do as much? What is the duty of those who have entered into marriage? What are necessary to the perfect marriage? What will these ideals do for those who hold them? What will come to those who "seek first the kingdom of heaven" in the relations of the home? How should we plan and work for the ideal home? What constitutes the real home? How should each regard the other's ideals? What will bring about ideal homes and social conditions? What kind of love will make marriage a success? How should the time of mating be prepared for?

Beyond what should the marriage relationship look? To what?

Request for Prayer.

Sr. John Harbottle, Primrose, Nebraska, writes: "I have been sick for six weeks or more, in bed most of the time with heart trouble and dropsy. The doctors have almost given me up. I ask you, brothers and sisters, to remember me in your prayers. Pray for me that if it is God's will, I may get better."

Letter Department

BEARDSTOWN, ILLINOIS, November 4, 1909.

Editors Saints' Herald: The district conference convened at Pana, October 9. Elder J. F. Curtis, one of the ministers in charge of the field, was with us. All felt that we were benefited by his presence. Four little girls were baptized during the conference. Soon after the close of the conference Brother Curtis went to Taylorville, while the writer stayed at Pana a few days and baptized an estimable young lady there. On October 20 we came to Beardstown, passing Brother Curtis who was still at Taylorville. That same evening we were requested to preach in a private house, the home of one of the brothers, and were also informed that there was a family of Utah Mormons in town and that no doubt they would attend. Of course we responded to the request, and at the appointed hour were at the place and were introduced to Brother and Sister Shoup, formerly of Waverly, this State, and it was while living at that place they were visited by Utah missionaries and led into that church. But not being able to secure work there they had moved into this place and it was after coming here that for the first time they learned they had been deceived and lead astray. They told the writer that they were told repeatedly by those Utah men that there was no other Latter Day Saint Church; that they represented the one and only one there was; and when questioned upon the belief in the doctrine of polygamy, they emphatically denied it and maintained that it was not a doctrine of their church. After they had baptized them they gave them their Doctrine and Covenants and informed them that that was their law book and they must make it their guidebook and govern their actions accordingly.

It was only a few days later that the sister found that far-famed revelation contained in section 132, Utah Doctrine and Covenants. Well, that settled the question for her, and when she read it to her husband they both saw where they had been duped and said they were done with all kinds of religion from that time.

They were in this frame of mind when they came to Beardstown, and more by accident than otherwise found members of the Reorganization here. At the preaching service we took the books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, and showed the difference, as well as the prophecies concerning the latter-day apostasy. At the close of the service Sister Shoup said, "I am ready for baptism." About ten o'clock the following morning we gathered at the water side and baptized all three of them, Brother and Sister Shoup and their son, Charlie.

We came here expecting to put up and operate the district tent for a short time. We found a suitable place and got it up and begun holding services in it at once.

Brother Curtis came up from Taylorville bringing good reports of the work there, eighteen baptisms while there and a spiritual revival among the Saints. Brother Curtis has been with us till this morning, when he took the early morning train for Springfield and the southern district. The same week that we baptized Brother and Sister Shoup, we also baptized two young ladies, and yesterday Brother Curtis led two more precious souls into the sin-cleansing waters, Brother and Sister Davis, excellent people, and we predict they will make fine Saints and be a great help to the work here. They have a son who I think will not be long in following in the path they have taken. Last evening their little daughter was blessed.

The work is onward in this district; thirty-one have been brought into the church since the district conference convened on October 9 at Pana.

While these conditions are cheering to the heart of the missionary, yet there are others that are very unpleasant to contemplate, and we wish and hope and pray the time may soon be when more unity, peace, and harmony may prevail among God's people.

After Brother and Sister Shoup had discovered that they had been deceived and where they stood, they wrote to one of the elders who had been instrumental in their deception, stating what they had discovered and requesting that their names be taken from the record and in a short time received a letter which I inclose.

To me at least it is a confirmation of a statement in regard to their veracity which Brother Joseph wrote to me about nineteen years ago in answer to some questions and statements I presented to him for answer which had been submitted to me by Elders Croft and Cummins, then of the northern Wisconsin mission. In the letter inclosed misrepresentation is very apparent in the following sentence: "We have notified your conference president of your letter and have requested him to send orders to you to enlighten your mind a little on this subject and explain to you that we do not still hold to this doctrine [plural marriage], but that since the manifesto issued by President Wilford Woodruff, and which is contained in the last edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, plural marriages have been discontinued."

Your brother in gospel bonds,

CHAS. H. BURR.

(The editors wish to state that the following letter is a reply to one appearing in our issue of November 24. The brother takes exceptions to certain statements in the former letter. Now, as a matter of fact, Brother Tubb's letter appeared in print before the editors knew that there was anything therein to which Brother Smith might object. Our policy is to eliminate everything which we feel may be construed as too personal, and the following letter might never have been written except for the unusual circumstances whereby the first one got to press without our notice. We regret the incident, but in fairness to Brother Smith we can but give his reply equal publicity.—I. A. SMITH, ASSISTANT EDITOR.)

HAMILTON, ONTARIO, November 30, 1909.

Editors Herald: The wounds we receive in the house of our enemies are expected, and they are passed by without thought, but when we receive wounds from those who should be our friends, we stand aghast sometimes, and we wonder why it is that such things are. In the issue of the HERALD for November 24, I find a letter from the pen of F. R. Tubb, of Toronto, Ontario, which to my mind, contains one of the most deliberate efforts to belittle a sermon of mine, which I preached in that city at the late conference held there, that I have ever seen penned. In fact, I have never in all my ministerial career ever had criticism coming from the enemy which contained so many misleading statements as this one written by a man who claims to be a brother in the church, who therefore should be above such things, and who should second every effort for good that is made.

In the first place I did not take my text from Psalms, 10th chapter, as stated by the brother, and in the second place I did not turn down my text, or texts, but stuck close to them all the way through, as everyone who heard my sermon, and comprehended it, can testify. My theme that morning was "Thankfulness," and my text was taken from the 107th Psalm, if I remember correctly, and read, "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever. O that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men." (Verses 1 to 8.) I called attention to some of the testimonies which had been given in the prayer meeting just closed, and stated that one of the best ways to praise the Lord and give thanks to him was to abide by his council and give attention to his advice, and that I thought that such praise was more acceptable to the Lord than all the testimonies that we could bear in prayer meeting, that a living testimony was greater than a spoken one. I then went on to show the reasons we had for thankfulness in the care that God had manifested in the welfare of his children in all ages of the world, and showed that he had not only manifested his love towards us by giving a spiritual law for our guidance, but that he had given us the benefit of his wisdom by even directing us in what we should eat and drink, and that he began this evidence of his care thousands of years ago in mentioning the clean and unclean beasts in the law of Moses, and in other ways warning the people of the effects of wine and strong drinks upon them. I then went to Judges 13 and read the advice and counsel given by the angel to the wife of Manoah, in which she was told how she should live prior to the birth of her child, and how she should raise the child after he was born. I made the statement that so far as I knew, and the record showed, that was the only instance on record where a child was born directly under instruction given by God, as to the meat and drink of the mother prior to his birth, and also where God prescribed the meat and drink of the child after his birth, specifically, and the result was the strongest man who ever came into this world. I then appealed to the mothers who were bringing children into the world, and asked why they did not heed (if they had not done so) this instruction. I tried to show that we might learn much from some of these examples which we found in the sacred word, and that if we would carefully study God's word, we might find many things which would be of benefit to us, and which were not contained in specific commands. I made the point that in this narrative, incidentally thrown into the record, apparently, was taught the greatest principle of prenatal influence; that the character of the child was affected by the actions of the mother prior to its birth. I then passed to the prophecy of the birth of Christ and quoted the statement made in Isaiah, 7th chapter, "Butter and honey shall he eat that he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good." I showed from this that while God did not directly command the eating of "butter and honey," yet there was a very emphatic declaration that what we ate had something to do with our power to "refuse the evil and choose the good." The language will admit of no other construction to be put upon it. We have no record of what Christ's diet was while growing to manhood, but the passage just quoted would indicate that his mother was very careful to use the foods prescribed by God in governing his diet, and that the result was the greatest man morally and spiritually that was ever born into this world.

I then went to Daniel 1:12, and used the four Hebrew boys whose history is given there, to show that those who followed the diet prescribed by God were not only "fairer and fatter in flesh," but that they were "ten times better" in wisdom and knowledge than those who were brought up on the diet prescribed by the king. Hence the value of God's advice and counsel to us, and how thankful we ought to be for it, and that while in his mercy he had made provision for the healing of the sick when we had become afflicted because of our lack of heed to his advice, or because of conditions over which we might have no control, we might more acceptably show our thankfulness by living in the way he had pointed out, and so avoid, to a large extent at least, the calling upon him for the blessing of healing.

I then turned to the "Word of wisdom" and showed that God, acting like himself, in his care for his children, had, in the very inception of this latter-day work, given us specific direction in regard to what we should eat and drink, and that we would doubtless be better off if we were as strict as the four Hebrew boys in our compliance with his directions. I then took up "strong drink" and proved by several quotations from medical journals and other sources that the Lord was right when he advised us to refrain from the intoxicating cup. I quoted experiments made by medical men upon different occasions which showed the effect of intoxicants on the children born of drinking parents. One man made the experiment on ten families of drinkers and ten families of sober persons, and that the result of these investigations was in favor of the sober families, or parties, in the ratio of seventeen and five tenths per cent to eighty-one and nine tenths per cent. I then went back to the advice given the mother of Samson, and showed that it was evident that the Lord was right when he advised her not to drink wine or strong drink prior to his birth if she wanted to have a strong, healthy child, whom God could use in his work.

I said much more than I can write on this subject, then turned to the statement made on the subject of tobacco, and presented statistics and evidences on the vicious effect of tobacco, physically, mentally, and morally, and hence proved that God was right again when he had told us that tobacco was not good for us.

I then took up the statement in the "word of wisdom" that "Hot drinks are not for the body or belly." I stated that there was some doubt in the minds of some people as to what was meant in this statement, "hot drinks," but went on to give my reasons for believing that tea and coffee were referred to. First, It was the term by which these drinks were known at the time the revelation was given. Second. It was universally conceded to mean tea and coffee by the church when first given. Third. That when some began to doubt it, that Hyrum Smith came out in the Times and Seasons, the official paper of the church in Nauvoo, and made the statement "in the name of the Lord" that it meant tea and coffee, and it was so interpreted by the man through whom the revelation came. Fourth. Medical men everywhere were telling the people now that tea and coffee were responsible for many of the ills of life, and quoted several extracts from the opinions of these medical men to prove it, and further showed that the terms, "tobacco heart," "whisky heart," and "coffee heart," were common terms among the medical men of to-day. I further showed that the term, "hot drinks," could not refer to hot water, for the reason that the statement was that they were neither good for the outside or inside of the body, but that every well-appointed bathroom had its "hot water" for the bathing of the body, and it was conceded that a hot bath was good for the outside of the body. I do not believe that God thinks that I am such a consummate fool that he would tell me not to scald myself either inside or outside, and hence I do not believe that the word, or term, "hot drinks," has any reference to the temperature of the drink, but to something which was known by that term, at the time the "word of wisdom" was given.

About the only good thing that Brother Tubb said about the subject upon which he seems to think that I spent my whole hour, was that I "began to pound into tea and coffee for all they were and more than they were worth." I agree with him that if I pounded into them at all I pounded into them for more than they were worth, for every careful reader of the "word of wisdom" will at once be impressed with the idea that while God recommends tobacco for "bruises and sick cattle" and strong drinks for the "washing of your bodies," he passes up tea and coffee, or "hot drinks," as neither good for the outside or the inside of the body, and does not recommend them for anything. They may have their medicinal powers, but if they have God does not say so here.

I spoke one hour and a little over, I think about one hour and ten minutes, and I am quite positive that I did not use over ten minutes at the outside estimation, in disposing of tea and coffee, and one would think from Brother Tubb's letter that I did not talk about anything else. I can not account for it in any other way than upon the hypothesis that Brother Tubb was asleep during all the first part of my sermon, and when I reached the tea and coffee part and he heard the words, "tea and coffee," he woke up, thinking that he would get a cup, and when he found there was nothing of the kind on tap, he straightway went to sleep again; for I talked about other things after I left the tea and coffee question, but not one word of this, apparently, reached the ears of my critic. This disposition of the question may be a rather severe one, but it is the only charitable way that I can see out of it, for if he heard all my sermon he has gone to work deliberately to convey a false impression to those who were not there and did not hear it, and has attempted to make me appear ridiculous.

He not only makes me appear ridiculous, but he practically accuses me of preaching something which would "obliterate all such solid and eternal virtues as faith, hope, and charity; or as to utterly banish and obliterate all good feeling and fellowship between members of one common Lord." Is there no bond of fellowship between brethren, only over a cup of tea or coffee? If so, then God was wrong when he said it was not good for us, and he should have told us to use it in our sacraments instead of wine.

One of the things, however, which has been and always will remain inexplicable to me is, that when I quote the simple statements of God I am at once accused of being a "food faddist." In the sermon I preached in Toronto I did not once express a dogmatic opinion, but I simply told what I believed and why I believed it, and presented the plain word of God. Why did not Brother Tubb say that, "The only question in your correspondent's mind being whether God really went far enough while he was about it; for to have been strictly logical to his own line of argument, he ought to have tabooed every mortal thing under the sun but dry bread to eat and cold water to drink"? Why make me responsible for the "word of wisdom"? Why not call God a "food faddist"? Why turn his wrath upon me because I simply quoted what God said? I did not advise the abstaining from anything but what God said was not good for us. One of the most sickening excuses that is offered in this world is offered by Brother Tubb in his letter. A certain brother, of course he was an American, or visiting brother, told him that his cup of tea was "sinful," but he was justified in refusing to accept his advice because the brother who gave it was doing something just as bad or worse. That is, I am justified in stealing a horse because my brother steals a team. Bah!

Here is a stock argument of the man who does not believe in baptism: "I can not believe that the infinitely wise and infinitely good Creator of heaven and earth intended to place such a paramount emphasis upon such a trivial matter as water baptism that I can not get into heaven without it." Part of this language you will notice is Brother Tubb's language. I simply paraphrase it to show what we meet from the world every day. I say if God said it, it is not trivial. I do not care whether it was about a cup of tea, or water baptism. If God said a cup of tea was not good for me, I shall believe him, and that is what I believe he said, and the more experience I have with tea and coffee drinkers the more I am convinced that God told the truth. It is the things which we call trifling which sometimes show which way the wind blows. It was too trifling a matter to think about for the high and mighty prince when the prophet of God told him to go and wash in Jordan seven times. He wanted the prophet to do some great thing, and he turned away in wrath, but it was the waters of the humble Jordan which were instrumental in finally cleansing him from his leprosy.

All I have to say, in conclusion, is this: If men do not want to accept God's word and abide by it, I do wish that they would not be like the Pharisee of old, neither enter into the kingdom of God themselves nor suffer those who are entering in to go in; or in other words, do not hinder the preaching of God's word by defending their own besetting sins or faults. When the church eliminates the "word of wisdom" from the Book of Covenants, perhaps, I will cease to teach it; but as long as it remains as it is, and as long as I retain my faith in this latter-day work, I shall look upon that "word" as one of the grandest testimonies of God's loving kindness to his people. I look upon it in that way because it does treat of what the brother is pleased to call "trivial" things. It illustrates the fact that Christ told the truth when he said that the hairs of our head are all numbered and not one sparrow should fall to the ground without the Father's notice. It illustrates the fact that no matter how small may be the benefit to be derived from refraining from or partaking of food or drink, God does not want his children to miss that benefit, and so he gives us this "word of wisdom" that we may know what his will is concerning the temporal salvation of his Saints. The world is suffering to-day because of a rejection of his word, and will not latter-day Israel be as justly condemned if they do not abide by the word? We sing "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and despise the prophet's words. I am willing to be called a crank, a "food faddist," or anything else if I am called that because I teach God's law. I would rather be called all of these names than to have to admit, when I stand before the throne of God at last, that I had failed to declare the whole course of God.

Yours for the truth,

H. O. SMITH.

LAMONI, IOWA, November 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: If you will permit me to give an account of a visit I made the latter part of the summer to Salt Lake City and some other parts of Utah and Colorado, it will help me to fulfill some promises I made when on my visit.

On the 8th of last August I left Lamoni with my wife as a traveling companion, reached Saint Joseph, Missouri, but did not start for Denver until about midnight. We reached there about 4 p. m. the next day. About an hour later we took the Denver & Rio Grande train for Colorado Springs, reaching there about 8 p. m. We then looked up a brother of ours, named Joseph Smith Anderson, whom our family had not seen since he left Saint Louis about thirty-three years ago when we lived there. It was a pleasant meeting.

Two days later we started for Salt Lake City. As we took the southern route we went by way of Pueblo, and as we passed the Royal Gorge and other magnificent scenery, it fairly bewildered my wife, as she had never seen a mountain until she came to Colorado, and this was her first visit. We arrived in the beautiful city of Salt Lake after having been on the road one night and one day from Colorado Springs.

We hunted up our General Conference missionary and found the irrepressible T. W. Chatburn, who secured for us a very pleasant home with an aged and worthy sister named Pettit, and her son, who treated us very kindly. When we were able to locate where we were, we found ourselves in the first ward and within about two blocks of where we had lived in the winter of 1855, when we first went to Salt Lake City with our father's family, and it is not to be wondered that it brought many old scenes to our memory. That winter I lived with Bishop Peter McCue, who was then bishop of the first ward. In the spring, when I was just sixteen years of age, the bishop appointed myself with another young man who lived in the same ward, to receive our endowment. But as my father objected, he not having received his, I lost what I considered then an honor. It was the custom in the bishop's house for us to take our turn in family prayer, and of course when I prayed, I prayed for Brigham Young, Heber C. Kimball, and Jedediah Grant, these three being the First Presidency then, and all others in a general way, so I think I can understand the young people of Utah better than if I had not gone through the experience I did in former years. And let me here express myself as having a high opinion of the young people of Utah. I believe the most of them came from honest, sincere, and sacrificing parents, many of whom left happy homes, believing they were doing God's will in crossing the barren plains with all the hardships that attended it in an early day. And especially the hand cart companies that crossed in 1856, whom we met when we were returning to the "States" as we called it then.

My visit to Utah convinced me that there is no use in us trying to fight the Utah Mormons by cold argument alone. If we can not reach their minds by kindness and keeping before them what we have got that is superior to theirs in the spirit of good will with patience, we will never reach them at all.

I tried to take in the situation there the best I could and returned home with this conclusion: that our missionaries there have not a fair chance; that they are compelled to labor under disadvantages, especially in Salt Lake City, in not having a permanent place to worship in where they could advertise our work. What they need there is a good, respectable church building in a good locality, where the missionaries could have a good room adjoining our church that could be used as an information bureau where our missionaries could be found several hours every day, with a liberal supply of our church works, and an abundance of tracts written especially for that mission. If it will not pay to prosecute that mission with system and vigor and give our men all the help they need, we had better abandon that field, and not have such men as T. W. Chatburn, L. G. Holloway, H. N. Hansen and others that we met out there, wearing their lives out, laboring under such great disadvantages as they are at present.

Bro. T. W. Chatburn told me if the church would buy a good lot there, in a proper locality, that he could build a suitable church with the help that he could get in the city and surrounding territory. I believe the Saints there would support such a movement, and if it could be done, T. W. Chatburn is the man to do it in my opinion.

We visited Ogden, Provo, and Nephi City, where my wife's uncle lives, and we were very kindly treated. There were many incidents that happened that might be of interest to mention, but I will only relate one at this time. While in Salt Lake City we were returning from the Tabernacle one evening on the street cars. They were crowded and many had to stand up, and in the friendly western style one gentleman asked me where I came from. I replied, "Iowa." He then asked, "What part?" I told him "the southern part" and he asked, what was the "name of the town." I replied, "Lamoni." Then he exclaimed, "Oh, that is the headquarters of the Josephites." I replied, "That is what we are," and that in a few days we were going to visit my wife's uncle who lived about ninety miles south in Nephi City, and the last time I saw him, about twenty-five years ago, he told me that we had the shadow, meaning the Reorganized Church, but they had the substance, meaning the Utah church. I then stated that if polygamy was the substance we were satisfied with the shadow, when a lady present apparently took exception to what I had said and very promptly replied to me, "You won't deny that Joseph Smith was a polygamist, will you?" I then stated that we would only admit it in the following way: "That you people say that Joseph Smith had more wives than one, but we say if he did, that he had them eight years after he was dead, and that if he had been a polygamist, they had made him one by proxy."

The Utah people evidently believe in the infallibility of the priesthood, and have been carefully taught to obey counsel, pay their tithing, and they are all right. They seem to want to have great confidence in their leading men, while we of the Reorganization may think we are exercising our rights in the gospel in not having enough. At the same time I am impressed with the thought that our leading men are under a double obligation to see that they give no just cause for any lack of confidence that may exist with us.

In bonds,

WM. ANDERSON.

LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY, November 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am rather young in the work, but I feel the responsibility laid on each and every one of us, to do our part in this great warfare. For sometime the Saints here have felt discouraged, feeling as though we were left alone, but God, our heavenly Father, has promised never to leave us alone, but striving on as we did, God's hand was with us.

Our dear Brother Metcalf has baptized eighteen into our branch within six weeks, also six in Ohio while laboring there, the majority of them being young people. How glad we should feel to see the young coming in, as the brother stated in his sermon on last Sunday, "The old are passing away, so the young must fill their places." So we feel greatly encouraged and are trying by the help of the Lord to live an acceptable life before him. Although many obstacles are thrown in our way we should try to overcome and not give way, for as we read, the reward is to the faithful and the true.

Asking the prayers of all the Saints that the work may move forward in this wicked city and at last may we hear our Savior's words, "Thou art worthy, enter in and receive thy crown."

Your sister in Christ,

KATE SCHMIDT.

EUNICE, LOUISIANA, November 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith although I do not live it at times. All the preaching that I get is through the HERALD and Ensign. It has been ten years since I heard any preaching. I ask the Saints to pray for me and my family that we may live aright. We get a letter from Bro. E. W. Nunley every once in a while and they encourage us very much. We are glad that he has not forgotten us, as he was the one that baptized us in Texas.

Aylor-Crumley Debate.

By your permission I will gladly send report to the readers of our church paper of the debate just closed at this place by Bro. W. M. Aylor, and Elder J. W. Crumley of the Church of Christ.

Detroit is a peaceful little village of about eighteen hundred or two thousand population, on the Texas Pacific Railroad, in northeastern Texas. Mr. Crumley is pastor of his congregation here and hence well known. Brother Aylor commenced the debate as a total stranger to the audience. Our gospel and work was just as strange, none of our brethren having preached here before.

The usual church propositions were discussed; each disputant affirming his church to be in harmony with the New Testament church in origin, organization, doctrine, faith, and practice. Brother Aylor affirmed his church for six sessions, then Elder Crumley affirmed his church for six sessions. Brother Aylor opened the debate by reading numerous clippings showing what class of people we were—what our neighbors said about us. This was kindly received by the audience. Elder Crumley replied in his logical (?) style and said that the old soldiers also held reunions and gained much favor with the people, therefore they were the Church of Christ. He then made a dash at Joseph Smith and his revelations, reading from Doctrine and Covenants: "If you do not accept the words of Joe Smith you will be damned!" He tried hard to arouse prejudice on this point, but failed.

In showing organization Brother Aylor referred to 1 Corinthians 12, where God "set in the church first apostles"; also Luke 6: 12, where Christ chose them and ordained them. (John 15: 16.) Ephesians 4: 11-13 explains what they were "set" in the church for, for the perfecting of the Saints—"till we all come in the unity of the faith." And that debate was good evidence that we were not yet to the unity of the faith. Matthew 11: 12 explains why the apostles did not continue in the church. The fierce persecution under Nero and other pagan rulers hindered the church from doing what it otherwise would have done. Then the ingathering of evil men (Acts 20: 29, 30; Matthew 13: 47; 2 Peter 3: 2); finally when the church was clasped in the arms of pagan Rome, and the "man of sin" (2 Thessalonians 2: 3) introduced false doctrine and thought to "change times and laws" (Daniel 7: 25), the church proper had lost its glory and was now robed in the garments of evil (Revelation 17). But Elder Crumley freely admitted an apostasy, yet failed to understand the meaning of it or see the effect it had on the church.

Brother Aylor showed that the church had its origin or commencement with John the Baptist, then continued with Jesus, who completed it in organization during his lifetime; then on Pentecost the church as a whole received its endowment and power. He urged that the gifts referred to in 1 Corinthians 12, Mark 16, James 5: 14, would be enjoyed now as in the days of the apostles if the people would make themselves worthy to receive them. It will be observed that the promise is: "These signs shall follow them that believe—no promise whatever to unbelievers.

The story of the bill of fare was related: A certain man started in the hotel business, provided an abundance of good things to eat for his boarders and family, and thus established for himself and his hotel a wonderful reputation. Then the "good things" began to disappear from the table. After a few years one of his former boarders returned—glad to get back to that good hotel. With keen appetite and hunger he seats himself at the table; glances over the bill of fare, orders his dinner. "Why, yes," says the waiter, "help yourself." "Help myself?" the man cries, "why, bring me my dinner, so I may eat." "Oh, you are behind time, sir, we don't furnish anything now but the bill of fare; just help yourself by reading what we used to have." This was a revelation to the people, and was followed with applause and laughter.

Elder Crumley tried to offset it by demanding "the goods"; "give us some of these signs"; "the proof of the pudding is the eating of it." Brother Aylor kindly replied that if he wanted these good things he would have to enter the hotel, and not stand on the outside at the back door and beg for a "hand-out." This again brought the house down. The people fairly shouted with laughter.

Our opponent next made attack on the Book of Mormon, labored to show conflict in dates when Christ was born and crucified. Declared there was a difference of ten days in time of birth, as given in Book of Mormon and in the Bible, also forty-seven years in time when Lehi left Jerusalem, Book of Mormon giving it six hundred years before Christ and the Bible five hundred and fifty-three. He admitted the people on the Western Continent had different methods of recording time, one having twenty months for a year, the other twelve. So he lost out on that.

We were informed by Mr. Crumley that there was no hint in Isaiah 29 of a book coming forth; neither did Zechariah 2 refer to any other young man but Zechariah himself, nor did Nahum 2: 3-6 refer to our modern railroads. The argument offered in opposing our rendering was, "I defy him to prove it." There was an abundance of this kind of argument furnished by Mr. Crumley, seasoned highly with stamping his feet and pounding his fists in Brother Aylor's face, beating the stand and his Bible till he acted more like a wild man than a servant of the Master. The contrast in the deportment of the two men was plainly visible, and was one thing that won for Brother Aylor.

The people know "that by their fruits ye shall know them" is a divine way to judge. Whether it was by the good example of Brother Aylor or the pressing demands of his brethren, that caused Elder Crumley to behave better, we will not say, but there was a visible difference in his manner as the debate continued, so that toward the close he acted reasonably well. He is really an able defender of his faith, and a few more debates with Brother Aylor he will learn to be nice and gentlemanly while he is at it.

The worn out story of Solomon Spalding being the author of the Book of Mormon was flashed out as though it was the first time the argument was ever made. The testimony of D. H. Bays, Howe, Luce, President Fairchilds, and all others introduced by Brother Aylor was not to be compared to "I dare him to deny it." This was the convincing argument to Elder Crumley, his moderator, and a trio of his brethren, but the two hundred or more people listening could not see it that way.

There was considerable controversy over Hebrews 6: 1, 2; Crumley contended that all six of the principles there referred to, belonged to the moral law and had no belonging in the gospel of Christ. His object in this, no doubt, is to do away with the laying on of hands. He persistently urged that Paul said, "To leave, leave, leave these things and go on to perfection." Brother Aylor contended that Paul did not mean we could go on to perfection without the principles of the doctrine of Christ, but after having observed these basic principles of faith, repentance, baptism, and laying on of hands, we continue on building character worth as the followers of Christ.

At the close of Brother Aylor's proposition, after six nights, the people were nearly all for us, so far as the favor and good will was concerned. Mr. Crumley led in his affirmative by defending the word church—people called out, that it was sent upon Pentecost, nine o'clock in the morning, no apostles, no seventies, no elders, no nothing in the church before that time, for the simple reason there was no church before that. He furnished Isaiah 2:2; Daniel 2:35-44; Zechariah 1:16; Ephesians 2:20; Mark 8:21; as scriptural evidence to prove that church was to be and was set up on day of Pentecost. In fact nearly all scripture in the Bible, all prophecies had fulfillment and application to Pentecost, according to Mr. Crumley. He rallied around and around Pentecost till I wondered why he didn't get some of the inspiration that was furnished on that day. Isaiah 2 has no reference to second coming of Christ, nor condition which shall follow that event, but was fulfilled on Pentecost.

This Pentecost rally had become so exceedingly conspicuous by now that Brother Aylor told the following story: That Mr. Crumley reminded him of a man who unfortunately was crippled, and had a wooden leg. This man was out quite late in the night with his friends, freely imbibing the intoxicating beverage. About one or two o'clock in the morning he started home, but walking over a plank sidewalk his peg leg dropped in a knothole. The other foot being free he began walking around and around, not removing the peg-leg from the hole. About an hour or more later some of his friends found him still performing the ring movement, and asked him what he was doing. And with joy and confidence he answered, "I am going home." The people saw the application and it brought forth an outburst of applause and laughter.

Mr. Crumley's next effort was to prove the origin of his church. He gave Walter Scott as the leading man, kept rather shy of the Campbells; referred to many of the same prophecies as are used to prove a restoration, but gave no credit to God's prophet. Brother Aylor read extensively from their own books, showing where the movement started, that it was in Pennsylvania. Read how Thomas Campbell performed baptism by climbing out on an overhanging root and had the candidates to wade out up to their shoulders and then he would duck their heads under. This provoked another good laugh. Also read how A. Campbell was expelled from the Baptist Church. During the day Brother Aylor had composed a few lines of poetry and when he had but three minutes yet to speak, which would close that session, he read them. This produced a tidal wave of applause, the people were simply yelling with laughter, and it was difficult to secure order and quiet so we could have a sober benediction. This was on Monday night, Mr. Crumley had three more nights to labor for his lost cause. It was indeed not a joy even to us to see how the people had left him (as it were) and flocked to Brother Aylor. The man had utterly failed to sustain his cause or maintain his standing with his own brethren. It became worse and worse against him as the debate continued. The closing night some of the ladies of the other churches brought three extra large, lovely bouquets, and while the closing song was being sung, came forward and handed them to Brother Aylor. Some of the members of Elder Crumley's church had heard during the day that Brother Aylor was to receive some flowers, so they prepared two for Mr. Crumley.

It was not simply the sight of those lovely flowers, nor the applause of the people, that spoke mostly in favor of Brother Aylor and his work, but as the benediction was said the whole congregation surged forward with happy faces to shake hands and give money to the true servant of God. I am four days past forty-eight years old; have been in this church all my life; have been in the ministry since 1893; but this debate in a new place, among strangers, is the most complete victory for us I have ever had the pleasure of witnessing. Brother Aylor had been urged during the week to remain over Sunday and preach, a score or more had made this request. He promised to do so if they would secure him a place to preach. He is announced to preach to-night and twice to-morrow in the same church where we held the debate, owned by the "Church of Christ" people. The agreement is to repeat the debate at Manchester, after about a week's rest. We have also signed propositions to meet Mr. J. W. Yandell, Free Will Baptist, at Lydia in December.

We rejoice because we know our work is true, that God has been with us and made good his promise: "I will give you favor in the eyes of the people." This was gloriously realized here. We have been kindly cared for free of charge. Brother Aylor made his home during the debate with Mr. and Mrs. Dunagan of Mr. Crumley's congregation. They treated him very kindly all the way through. Many have invited us to their homes. They have given us money. We have sowed the seed, we believe, on good ground and shall hope to gather a rich harvest of souls as our hire in days to come. We leave the result with the Lord.

We are happy in the service of the Master. With love to everybody.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Ad. H. Richter, writing from Tularosa, New Mexico, says: "If any of the elders should come through here and wish to stop, let me know. Tularosa is located thirteen miles north of Alamegordo, on the main line from Kansas City to El Paso, Texas."

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Baptisms have been quite frequent of late, one baptized at Hastie and five in the branch lately.

Change in the officers of Sunday school on account of the departure of Bro. A. Robinson for Graceland College last week. Sr. Hattie Clark was selected assistant superintendent to fill vacancy.

Bro. Ward Christy spent Thanksgiving at home, and gave two excellent sermons last Sunday. He intends spending some time in Boone, beginning this week, in missionary work. Sister Christy is improving slowly.

The State Teachers' Association brought several of the members of the church to the city, too numerous to mention here. Sr. Alice E. Mintun, who is teaching in Ute, Iowa, spent a few days at home during the convention. She attended the Sunday school and sacrament service before returning.

The president of the branch is absent from the city nearly all the time this fall, and expects to be absent about all winter. He is conducting what he calls an educational moving picture entertainment.

Bro. O. Salisbury is absent from the city on business for the firm for which he is acting as manager, and expects to travel a good part of the time this winter. Bro. Clarence Skinner is expecting to start away from the city in the interest of the same firm the first of next week and be gone two months. His wife is to spend the time he is absent at the home of his parents in Lake City. They were both received as members of this branch last Wednesday.

Last Wednesday there was granted letters of removal to Bro. M. H. Cook and family to the Portland Branch, Oregon, where they expect to make their future home.

Bro. Emslie Curtis is again able to be at services. He has been unwell for several days.

Bro. Ole Oleson was called to Marshalltown to attend the funeral of a brother who was killed by a train in Chicago.

The husband of Sister Waller is not well, and has not been for several weeks, but he is trying to be at work most of the time, so we learn.

Quite extensive preparations are being made for an appropriate commemoration of the day decided upon generally as the birthday of Jesus Christ, and a profitable time is anticipated.

Gen. J. B. Weaver is to give a lecture on the subject of divine healing this week. There is an association that is meeting weekly and making that subject an especial study, and General Weaver has become interested, and now is one of its advocates. What makes this lecture of some importance is the fact of the political and social prominence of Mr. Weaver. He is also one of the strongest advocates of temperance.

The city missionary has been absent from the city most of the time during the summer, but is now arranging for cottage meetings and meetings in mission houses, if fortunate in securing them. He has partial promises, but there are many things more certain.

Several manifestations of the power of God in healing of late here, the most prominent of which is the healing of Sr. M. T. Cracraft, who was very acutely attacked with what the physician called appendicitis, and was surprised at the speedy recovery. He said that many physicians would have insisted that she undergo an operation. God gave her the relief that was superior to what a surgeon could have given, and in a hundredth part of the time.

J. F. MINTUN.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

This branch is gaining ground spiritually and with much unity of purpose. All the various services are being well attended, especially the evening. Bro. James Calhoun, a faithful member of this branch, was suddenly called away, leaving a widow and three boys. Sister Calhoun was at the Sunday services, on November 14. Her mother was then baptized just before the evening service by Elder F. T. Haynes, and confirmed by Elders T. J. Schmidt and F. T. Haynes.

The attendance at Religio has grown in numbers and interest lately. We had two special meetings this week of a social nature; on Tuesday a surprise party at the home of Bro. F. C. Webbe, and on Friday evening at the church building by the Religio. Both occasions were very enjoyable.

Bishop Becker, of Kirtland, was with us last Sunday, November 28, and occupied the evening hour and gave us a good talk on tithes and offerings.

The Daughters of Zion met at Sister Farnfield's recently. This is a new organization here, with Sister Schmidt president, Sister Ida Webbe, vice-president.

We hear that Bro. J. C. Farnfield has had the way opened up for him in his missionary labors, as he was told by the Spirit on his last visit home here that the same would be.

F. C. WEBBE.

Shining will cost me something. All light means an expenditure of force. Both fat and wick must be consumed in burning. But can I grudge the expenditure? Much I not rather glory in it, when, in proportion as I am expended in his service, I am myself transfigured by the flame that consumes?—Rev. G. H. Knight.

Gould as stake secretary was offered and accepted. It was moved that we tender a vote of thanks to Brother Gould for his services as secretary of the stake. Carried. The matter of choosing a secretary was deferred until the afternoon session and the Stake Presidency was requested to nominate some one to occupy the office. Report of the bishop of the stake was read. It was moved that the stake presidency provide for the time and character of services, appoint speakers, and presiding officers. Carried. It was moved that the time and place of holding the next conference be left with the Stake Presidency. Prevailed. Short talks were given by R. S. Salyards, John Smith, J. H. Martin, J. S. Snively, and Joseph Roberts. At 2.30 p. m. the session was called to order by R. S. Salyards. Bro. J. F. Garver of the presidency was requested to take the chair. A communication from the presidency nominating H. H. Gold as secretary of the stake was read, and a motion to ratify the nomination prevailed. A communication from the Presidency approving the recommendation from the Graceland Branch of Bro. A. L. Keen for ordination to the office of priest was read. The recommendation was indorsed. A communication was received from the presidency approving the recommendation of the Evergreen Branch of Bro. W. E. Shakespeare for ordination to the office of priest. Brother Shakespeare being present expressed willingness to accept, and a motion prevailed that the recommendation be approved. The evening hour was occupied by preaching by R. S. Salyards, assisted by O. E. Bender and W. T. Shakespeare. Sunday morning, Sunday school in charge of the local officers, followed by preaching by Bishop William Anderson, assisted by Joseph Roberts and A. C. Anderson. Afternoon, preaching by C. H. Jones, assisted by H. N. Snively.

NORTHEASTERN MISSOURI.—Conference of the Northeastern Missouri District convened at Higbee, Missouri, September 25, 1909, at 10 a. m., J. F. Curtis presiding, assisted by F. T. Mussell and W. B. Richards; W. C. Chapman secretary. Branches reporting: Bevier and Higbee. Ministerial reports were read from W. S. Macrae, T. J. Sheldon, F. T. Mussell, W. B. Richards, William C. Chapman, F. A. Evans, Frank Lofty, Ed. E. Thomas, R. R. Jones, F. Palfrey, P. J. Raw, C. A. Brown. Bishop's agent's and treasurer's reports were read, audited, and found correct. F. O. DeLong was ordained an elder under the hands of J. F. Curtis and F. T. Mussell. F. T. Mussell was elected president, W. B. Richards vice-president, and W. C. Chapman secretary and treasurer. Time and place of holding next conference were left in the hands of the district officers. Preaching by J. F. Curtis and F. T. Mussell.

Convention Minutes.

UTAH.—District Sunday school and Religio met in joint session in connection with the reunion and conference at Provo, Utah, September 3, 1909, G. J. S. Abels presiding; Sr. Anna V. Layton was chosen to act as secretary. The forenoon was devoted to Sunday school work, the afternoon to Religio. District secretary of Religio reported 4 locals, total enrollment 81, average attendance 41. Both Sunday school and Religio moved to contribute $5 each towards the expense of the reunion. A normal class was started. Anna V. Layton, secretary, Toppliff, Utah.

TORONTO.—District Sunday school association met in convention at Toronto, October 22, 1909. Called to order by Superintendent J. T. Thompson at 10 a. m. Verbal reports of officers showed the work was progressing. Statistical report showed schools in district at time of organization, June 27, 1909, 31; organized since, 1. Twenty schools had reported. Present membership of schools reporting 722; number of sessions 475; total attendance 13,503. Afternoon session was devoted to business at which Assistant Superintendent F. Mesle presided. Officers for the following year: J. T. Thompson, superintendent; F. Mesle, assistant superintendent; D. B. Perkins, treasurer; Ada Hamilton, secretary; W. Faulds, librarian. A petition from Religio convention was read and request granted that we unite in convention work in future. Time of next convention was left to the call of executive. It was resolved that ten dollars be donated to Library Commission for literature. Speeches on Sunday school work were made by the following: Brn. J. L. Mortimer, G. St. John, F. B. Blair, H. O. Smith, and J. Shields. A paper written by W. J. Landes was read by R. C. Russell. Evening session was presided over by R. C. Evans. Address was made by R. C. Russell. Debate by F. Mesle, D. Pycock, J. Pycock, and J. T. Thompson. Subject, "Which sways the greater influence for good, the home or the Sunday school?" Recitation, Eva Milligan, Ida Place; address, R. C. Evans; selection, Toronto Orchestra. The paper read at afternoon session was by motion ordered published. Collection amounted to $8.67.

The Sanitarium.

NOTICE TO THE SAINTS.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Independence Sanitarium, it was determined that the opening exercises of the Sanitarium would be held December 15, 1909, at 2 p. m., at which time a suitable program will be rendered and the building thus formally put into service.

While it is thus officially announced that the Sanitarium will open December 15, I wish to urge upon those who may contemplate asking for the services of the Sanitarium, not to come until arrangements have first been made with the proper authorities. A board of physicians will be appointed, and no persons will be admitted to the Sanitarium until their cases have first been passed upon by this board of physicians, except perhaps in emergency cases. Hence it will be apparent at once that no one should come to Independence expecting to enter the Sanitarium, until he has first made arrangements with the proper authorities for his admittance into the Sanitarium. This will be necessary to avoid disappointment.

FREDERICK M. SMITH,

Marriages.

SHELDON—PALFREY.—At the residence of President Joseph Smith, 1214 West Short street, Independence, Missouri, November 22, 1909, at 8.25 p. m., President Smith officiating, Elder Thomas J. Sheldon and Sr. Louise Palfrey, formerly of Macon, Missouri, now of Cameron, Clinton County, Missouri, were united in marriage, according to the laws of the State of Missouri, and the rites of the church. The mother of the bride, together with Sisters Etzenhouser and Altha Deam, officers of the Religio and their husbands, Brn. Merrill Etzenhouser and W. H. Deam, and a cousin of the bride, John M. Lloyd, were by invitation present to witness the nuptials. They will be at home at Cameron, Missouri, where Brother Sheldon has united with Brother Palfrey in a business venture, and has removed there for that purpose.

Died.

CALHOUN.—James G. was born June 27, 1871, in Wheeling, West Virginia, and died October 19, 1909. He and his companion were baptized by Elder O. B. Thomas, at Cleveland, Ohio, February 11, 1901. While living in Wheeling, they frequently attended the meetings of the Saints, but did not unite with the church until they had moved to Cleveland. Funeral services at his late home near Martin's Ferry, Ohio, by Elder O. J. Tary. The brother had been troubled for sometime with heart failure, but on the day of his death, having returned from Cleveland, Ohio, was unusually cheerful. About 7 o'clock he was taken suddenly with an attack and in about thirty minutes was dead. He lived his religion. For him we do not mourn. May God help the bereaved sister to care for the three children left solely on her care.

BADHAM.—Elder Amazon Badham, at Henderson, Iowa, November 16, 1909. He was born near Henderson, Iowa, January 22, 1853, and lived on the farm where he was born until a few weeks before his death, when he took up his residence in the town of Henderson. He was married to Miss Melvina Peck, May 30, 1875. To this union were born eight children, five of whom, with his faithful wife, survive him, three daughters and two sons, all of whom are married but one son. He united with the Reorganized Church May 29, 1868, and ever after was a consistent and faithful member. He was ordained a priest June 9, 1889, and an elder August 22, 1891. At the time of his death he was both president of Farm Creek Branch, and of Fremont District. He was ever honored as a man and trusted as an official. The funeral was from the Methodist church in Henderson, November 18. Services in charge of Elder T. A. Hougas, and the sermon by Elder Heman C. Smith.

OLIPHANT.—Jonas L. Oliphant, born June 13, 1853, at Urich, Ohio. Died November 19, 1909, at his home in Rich Hill, Missouri. He was married to Miss Jennie Adkins on April 13, 1879. Born to them in this union six children, three boys and three girls. He was baptized at Rich Hill, Missouri, January 31, 1894, by Elder J. C. Foss. Surviving him, a wife, one son, Frankie, three brothers, and two sisters. Funeral sermon preached by Elder George Jenkins, of Holden, Missouri. Interment in the Rich Hill cemetery.

PEARSON.—Elder Samuel Pearson was born at Corinth, Ontario, April 5, 1851. He joined the Reorganized Church when very young and continued a faithful member until the day of his death at Saint Thomas, Tuesday, October 26, 1909. He was ordained to the office of teacher, March 6, 1898, and to the office of elder, February 7, 1909. A short time after his ordination as elder he was elected president of the Saint Thomas Branch, and at the London district conference held in Saint Thomas, June 12, 1909, he was chosen vice-president of the London District, continuing in both offices until his death. Elder Pearson was engaged in business in Saint Thomas as a contractor, and was treasurer of the Builders' Association for a number of years. A short time before his death he was taken ill with typhoid fever, which developed into an attack of acute peritonitis. The funeral service which was held from his residence on Celestine street, on October 28, was conducted by Elder R. C. Longhurst, president of the London District, assisted by Elder J. C. Farnfield, of Cleveland, Ohio, and was attended by the Builders in a body, six of them acting as pallbearers. The funeral cortege to the cemetery was one of the largest ever seen in the city, and a special carriage was required to convey the floral offerings. While the funeral service was being held, every man engaged in any way in the buildings trades in the city, stopped work for half an hour, thereby paying a beautiful tribute to his memory. Elder Pearson is survived by his widow and one son, L. O. Pearson, grocer, and secretary of the Retail Merchants' Association. His father, Elder Christopher Pearson, of Corinth, Ontario, is still alive, and two brothers and five sisters also survive him.

REA.—Bro. Thomas Rea was born December 11, 1854, in Leeds County, Ontario, Canada. Died September 19, 1909. September 27, 1882, he was married to Miss Mary Moran at Smith's Falls, Ontario. Two years later they moved to Hillman, Michigan, where they have since resided. Brother Rea was a busy worker and a staunch advocate of the latter-day work, always keeping his house open to the ministry. He endured much pain and suffering the last five years with little lament. Although administered to he seemed to receive no relief physically. He was baptized by F. H. Brooks, at Hillman, on October 7, 1894; was ordained a teacher in Hillman Branch, October 11, 1896, by Elders George Jenkinson and John Kier, which office he held at his death. He left a wife and three children to mourn, besides brothers and sisters and many friends outside. An infant boy preceded him a few years ago. We are constrained to rejoice for him in that while we struggle on he is at rest—for a short time till Jesus comes.

What the Small College Can Do.

Most of the best undergraduate work to-day is being done in the smaller colleges of the country. The best university work, on the other hand, is, of course, being done in the great institutions. The requirements for entrance to college have been pushed too high. As a presumptive rule, the ordinary boy should be prepared for college in the nearest high school, should enter college at sixteen or seventeen, and should attend the college nearest the place where he lives. He should have a pretty well rounded curriculum; should learn to read, write, and spell the English language (as was usual in the earlier college period); should gain some hold upon the history of the world, with its great classical traditions; should get a firm grounding in the principles of science and economics, and should then be ready either to go to business, or else to enter one of the great American or European universities for post-graduate or professional studies.

For university work, our institutions can not have too much equipment in the way of libraries, laboratories, opportunities for original research, and environment of productive scholarship. For college work, on the other hand, the facilities do not need to be vast and bewildering; and the great thing now, as forty years ago, is the training of an all-round man, so that he may live a fine life of intelligence and character among his fellows.—From "College reform,—and football," by Albert Shaw, in the American Review of Reviews for December.

We want to call our readers' attention to the Des Moines Capital's Bargain Period from December 21 to 28, at which time the Capital can be secured for the entire year 1910 for $2.

The Capital publishes by far the best market report of any Iowa daily, and has so been recommended by practically all the grain dealers in Des Moines. The Capital is published in the afternoon long after the close of the day's markets so that no paper can get your markets to you any earlier, no matter what date the paper bears.

During the past year, the Capital was the only paper that published Cook's own copyrighted story of his discovery of the North Pole; the only paper publishing the copyrighted story of Lieutenant Peary's discovery of the North Pole; the Capital was the only paper which published Taft's Des Moines speech in full; the only Des Moines paper that published the President's message in full; the only paper publishing complete list of the Iowa winners in the recent western land drawing.

The year 1910 bids fair to be an eventful year, the nomination and election of State officers, the South American squabble, the development of interior waterways, the opening of new lands to settlers, the scientific discoveries and achievements, are only a few of the great news features of the year 1910.

SOME MODERN TENDENCIES.

EDUCATION AND TRAVEL.

But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end; many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.—Daniel 12: 4.

Daniel predicted that in the time of the end many should run to and fro, and knowledge should be increased. That prophecy has been fulfilled in a remarkable manner. This is the greatest age of education and travel that the world has ever known. One has but to visit any of the union depots in Chicago, San Francisco, New York, Saint Louis, or to watch the tide of travel on the ferry boats at Oakland or the crowds in the subway of New York, to be struck with the fact that the great masses of mankind are moving to and fro.

At the same time our educational institutions are the pride of the modern man. The Pilgrim Fathers landed on American soil in 1620, and only sixteen years later, in 1636, Harvard College was founded with a working capital of four hundred pounds, voted by the general court of Massachusetts. In 1638 John Harvard gave half of his property, and all of his library to the new educational institution. To-day Harvard University has thirty-three hundred students and three hundred professors, exclusive of assistants. And Harvard University is only one of thousands of educational institutions in America. It was started on four hundred pounds, but our ideas have changed. Only a short time ago a will bequeathing fifty thousand dollars for the purpose of establishing a college in Saint Louis, Missouri, was set aside by the courts on the ground that it was "grossly inadequate" for the purpose. The various state universities bring educational facilities to the doors of the people and we note that the registration in the University of Michigan for the present term is five thousand two hundred and fifty-six.

Our periodicals also serve the purpose of educating the people and are a unique feature of this age. The daily newspapers reach every home. It may be a matter of question whether or not they educate the people, as many of the statements contained in their columns one day are denied the next; but there is a better class of literature in the shape of our great magazines. The ablest writers in the world are writing for their pages. They command the talent of the most learned university professors and the strongest and best political reformers and social workers, who write for them on topics of living interest, bringing to the doors of the people an intelligent discussion of vital questions. These periodicals have a tremendous circulation and exert a great influence in shaping public sentiment. Nor must we forget the numerous free libraries and the vast number of books that are written, published, and read each year.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

The evidence seems to be that there is going on, for economic or social reasons, most serious weakening of the marriage tie.—Homiletic Review, December, 1909.

There is no question connected with the administration of the law so fertile of litigation and so exacting of public attention as divorces.—Justice Henry B. Brown.

It is a matter of serious question whether or not we are living on a moral plane that is equally high with our educational plane. For instance, the Government report on marriage and divorce, recently issued by the director of census, shows that to-day there are three times as many divorces in the United States as there were in 1870, (both in proportion to the population and in proportion to the number of marriages). Japan is the only country in the world that has a higher divorce rate.

Professor George Elliott Howard says that the ratio is about one divorce in twelve marriages, while Professor Walter F. Wilcox says the ratio is one in ten.

The movement toward increased divorce, however, is not limited to the United States. On that question Professor Howard, who is professor of sociology in the University of Nebraska, writes in McClure's Magazine, of December, as follows:

The freer dissolution of marriage is a world phenomenon, huge, portentous. How should it be interpreted? Assuredly it signifies somewhere the action of sinister forces, vast and perilous. Doubtless here we are face to face with an evil that seriously threatens the social order, that menaces human happiness; an evil to overcome which challenges our deepest thought, our ripest wisdom, our most persistent endeavor. It challenges, too, our highest moral courage.

It is worthy of note that one fifth of the divorces granted during two decades, or in other words, one hundred and eighty-four thousand five hundred and sixty-eight divorces, were granted on the charge of drunkenness. The other leading causes are desertion, cruelty, and infidelity. The great majority of the divorces (sixty-six per cent) are granted to women. This fact is held by some writers to indicate one thing and by others to indicate another, and by still others to indicate both of the conditions in mind. Some hold that men are growing worse, others that women are becoming more independent, and still others that both arguments are true.

In the early days of Rome there were practically no divorces. In those days the woman passed, to use their term, "under the hand of the husband," and was completely in his power. If she left him she went out penniless into the world without any means of support. Under those conditions women never applied for divorce. But during the third century before Christ many Romans became very wealthy, and it became their custom to settle a dowery upon their daughters when they married. It was so arranged that if these women became divorced they took the dowery with them, and immediately divorces rapidly increased.

Women to-day have a similar independence, only it is obtained in a different way. They have what is termed economic freedom; that is, they can support themselves by becoming stenographers, trained nurses, or entering any of the thousand vocations that are now open to women. In many cases they will fare better than when depending upon their husbands for support. Under these conditions they are more independent and will not tolerate drunkenness and abuse as they did formerly. We quote from one writer on this point:

Take the craving for divorce. Is it due to the example or advocacy of certain influential persons? Rather must we lay it to the opening of doors to a feminine career and the relaxation of old beliefs which constrained woman to bear uncomplainingly her yoke.—Foundations of Sociology, p. 191, by E. A. Ross.

This accounts partially for the increase in divorces, though it may be true that there is also a moral decline on the part of men and women. Paul said that in the last days men should be without natural affection and the statistics that we have given indicate that Paul was right. It is the opinion of observers like Professor Howard that the home is losing its hold upon people; that it is becoming less and less an important factor in modern civilization. The tendency seems to be toward the granting of free divorces for either man or woman whenever either party tires of the marriage contract.

THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN CLASSES.

One of the things that attracts the attention of people to-day is the tendency to draw a sharp line between the rich and the poor, with an increasing animosity and inequality between the classes. Mr. Charles Booth, in his book on East London, divides the population into eight classes. Not until he reaches the fifth class does he find families with an income of from twenty-two to thirty shillings per week and with enough to eat from day to day. There are then four classes below the line of those who have enough to eat, while above that line in the remaining three classes there are those of extreme wealth, the lords and aristocracy with vast estates and great bank accounts. This condition, more or less extended throughout the empire, has brought about a crisis in British politics.

Conditions are not so bad in America, yet the fact that the families of the miners who perished at Cherry, Illinois, were in absolute want within a few days after the pay envelope ceased its periodical visits shows how close many American workingmen live to privation. It is now discovered that the homes of the widows and children of those miners do not properly protect them against the inclement weather; yet they are as good as they were two months ago when the miners were living and at work every day digging the coal to keep others warm.

It is also urged and probably truly that there are thousands of children in all of our large cities who go to school daily with insufficient nourishment, without sufficient clothing, and who return home at night to insufficient shelter; while, on the other hand, there are boys in Harvard and Yale who have but to touch the bell and they are waited upon by a lackey whenever they feel the need of a cocktail, or desire to have their clothes brushed. This is on the authority of Albert Shaw, editor of the Review of Reviews, who in the December number makes it the basis of an argument that boys and girls should attend the smaller colleges where more equality prevails.

These conditions of inequality in public schools are but typical of conditions throughout society, and they are not favorable to the rearing of the boys and girls who are to constitute the society of to-morrow. Whenever we read of one boy, who, like Abraham Lincoln the statesman, or Millet the painter, has struggled up through poverty to greatness, we are inclined to think that poverty and hardship make for greatness; but we should reason that such men have succeeded in spite of their poverty, just as some others have succeeded in spite of their riches. Boys and girls are the best crop that we raise, and they are like other crops; the best soil for our standard crops is not found on the barren hillsides, neither in the rich hotbeds of a fancy gardener. The best soil for the rearing of successful men and women is not in the palace or in the hovel, but in that society where they are neither starved nor stuffed,—where they do not have luxuries and where they do not lack necessities.

Unjust inequality has existed always. It existed under feudalism and it still exists. But in those days people did not notice it as they do now. To-day the eyes of the people have been opened by the educational facilities that we have noticed, and the people at large are watching conditions with increasing restlessness and jealousy. The matter is constantly agitated in the pulpit and the press, on the streets, and in the legislative halls. The times are restless and critical. They are ripe for wise adjustment or for civil strife. Various methods are suggested to remedy conditions. The anarchist proposes to strike down all law and return to primitive conditions. Yet twenty-one miners entombed in the Saint Paul mine could not exist seven days in that primitive condition without adopting certain rules and recognizing certain leaders, and they were compelled to bind one of their number who would not submit to the rules of the majority. The trade unions would seek the cure by constantly confronting employers with an ever increasing organization calculated to compel them to give the workman his rights. Socialists would seek the cure by having society own and control the means of production and direct the distribution of the wealth produced. Social reformers would first create a public sentiment in favor of honesty and equality, and second pass such legislation as would insure those conditions. The man of religious inclination looks to the churches for the cure.

These various reformers encounter their greatest obstacle in human nature. One writer says:

This desire of each individual for wealth to be consumed by himself rather than by some one else can be eradicated only by replacing his egoism with altruism. This would be an excellent thing to do, but how is it to be done? As many unsuccessful experiments have proved, the theory of communism will not work except among a selected community, of marked unselfishness and exceptional habits, of mutual toleration and concession. Indeed, with human nature as it is or is likely to become, both communism and capitalism must and do fail; and for the same reason.—James MacKaye, a Fabian socialist, author of "The economy of happiness," in the Arena, June, 1907.

As we view the situation, Christ formulated the system by which this community of unselfish men, possessed of mutual toleration, can be builded up—the only community in which equality can obtain and be maintained. When we turn to the churches of the day there is evidence that they have not the plan or the power that Christ had in contemplation. These conditions of inequality and injustice mentioned continue not only in spite of the churches but in the churches. At the New York state conference of religion at Rochester in 1906, the Reverend Doctor Strong stated that he had investigated the matter and found that the one hundred most influential rich men in the United States are members of various churches,—active members in good standing.

In fact the churches have been drawing away from the poor. The movement in New York City is typical of a movement that has been going on in every large city in the United States. While foreigners and people of the lower classes have been moving into down town districts, the churches have been moving out. And on this subject Reverend Charles Stelzle, superintendent of the labor department of the Presbyterian Church, has this to say:

The church to-day seems to have arrived at one of the most crucial periods of her history. . . . No one can successfully deny that the church is slowly but surely losing ground in the city. Nearly every city in America is witnessing the removal of its churches from the densely populated sections where the church is most needed. Within recent years forty Protestant churches moved out of the district below Twentieth Street in New York City, while 300,000 people moved in. Alarmed for her safety and her very life, the church has sounded a dismal retreat in the face of the greatest opportunity which has ever come to her.

Ray Stannard Baker, writing in the American Magazine, June, 1909, commenting on this statement, has this to say:

Not only have the working classes become alienated from the churches, especially from the Protestant churches, but a very large proportion of well-to-do men and women who belong to the so-called cultured class, have lost touch with church work. . . . In short there has been a gradual separation, a drawing apart, of the churches of the rich, and the chapels and missions of the poor. . . . This is the situation which the Protestant churches are facing. Many of the rich are in the churches: nearly all the poor are outside. . . . They help the poor child and give no thought to the causes which have made him poor. They have no vision of social justice: they have no message for the common people. They are afraid to face the world "without purse or scrip": they have no faith.

These conditions led Doctor Crapsey to state before the Rochester conference, regarding Protestantism, "We are standing at the deathbed of a great religion."

As a church we believe that the struggle between classes will become more intense, and according to the book of Covenants it will become very violent. When these conditions obtain, though naturally our sympathy will be with the poor, we, as a people, can not indorse the violent measures that will be adopted by both classes, and in that event we are instructed to gather to Zion where we can work out the Lord's system for the bringing about of equality. This does not mean a retreat, for from Zion the law shall go forth, and it will be the haven of rest for the poor and the oppressed of the earth. To-day, as we see it, when all Protestant denominations have failed to meet the situation, (a tacit confession that the gospel of Christ is not with them,) there comes to the true Church of Christ the greatest opportunity that it has ever had.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A CHANCE FOR CO-OPERATION.

Last year, to fill a very urgent need, the trustees of Graceland College started the building of Patroness Hall, a dormitory for women. The building also contains a dining room for both men and women. There was a necessity for it to furnish proper accommodations for the students and to preserve sanitary conditions. The rent of the rooms in the building will in time pay the cost of construction, but cash is needed now as the builders will not wait. Now here is our chance to demonstrate the advantages of coöperation. The trustees are offering for sale three hundred "Rent coupons" worth ten dollars each in room rent in either dormitory. Buy what they have to sell and a donation will not be asked for.

Sunday schools and Religio societies can easily purchase one or more of these coupons and either give or sell to some one of their members when coming to Graceland. This would be peculiarly fitting as the college is run for the benefit of the young of the church and the dormitory was erected for their greater comfort and convenience.

Many of the Saints who have children that will attend the college in later years, can purchase these coupons now and lighten the expense to be met later. Sort of savings bank idea.

Some Saints have no children to send, but are willing to help some poor student gain an education and they can do so by purchasing rent coupons and the trustees have a large number of worthy young people who would appreciate such help. Will we coöperate? We surely ought to as the burden would be so slight for each one that it would not be felt, and the results of a united effort will free us from debt. Send your orders to F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa, who has been appointed by the College trustees to look after this matter.

A "JUBILEE" HERALD.

How many SAINTS' HERALD readers realize the age of the HERALD? In January it will be fifty years old. The editors are arranging to get out a jubilee number in celebration of our semicentennial. This will be a double number, filled with interesting historical articles, profusely illustrated. The leading editorial will be by President Joseph Smith, who writes up his recollections of his connection with the SAINTS' HERALD. It is our purpose to make this number something to be remembered. It alone will be worth the price of the HERALD for the coming year. No old subscriber should drop the HERALD, and we ought to make this the greatest year in our history for new subscribers. There will be many who will want to get extra copies of this number, and the price will be announced later so that they may send in their orders.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Poultry Pointers, the journal published in the interests of the industrial department of Graceland College, wants an agent in every town at once. Cash commission paid. Write Poultry Pointers, Lamoni, Iowa, if you want to pick up a little money easily.

The next number of the Saints' Herald Historical series will be by Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the Central Church of Kansas City. The article is entitled, "The tragedy at Carthage." As the writer says, "No more tragic event ever occurred in the history of the church than in the martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith." The subject is handled in an excellent manner, and will be interesting to our readers.

The appearance of the holiday number of Autumn Leaves was delayed, but it will soon be mailed, and coming, as it does, at the near approach of Christmas, it will be more interesting to its readers than it would have been had it appeared earlier.

Elders' Note-Book

FROM ARKANSAS.

One of our elders far down in Arkansas writes to Bishop Kelley for a little means to supply him with an overcoat, and reports his labors as follows: "I am still down here where the 'jaybird died with the whooping-cough.' And where the 'Arkansas traveler' found the 'big rock at the forks of the road.' Not far from the memorial place where 'Sanford Brown got so thin on sassafras tea, that he could hide behind a straw.' And where the 'gals chew more tobacco than their maw can chew.' Sure this is 'Arkcan-saw.'"

I closed a two weeks' meeting yesterday and one man stepped forward and gave me twenty cents. Am preaching here and have fine crowds and good interest."

We congratulate the brother and hope that his wintering in Arkansas will be not only for the good of the people but for the betterment of the birds also. The overcoat has been furnished.

The dean of a western university was told by the students that the cook was turning out food not "fit to eat."

The dean summoned the delinquent, lectured him on his shortcomings, and threatened him with dismissal unless conditions were bettered.

"Why, sir," exclaimed the cook, "you oughtn't to place so much importance on what the young men tell you about my meals. They come to me in just the same way about your lectures."—The Argonaut.

Bishop Potter was to preach at a certain parish in the West in the evening, and the congregation was not a little amused at the somewhat ambiguous announcement of their worthy pastor, who said:

"Remember our special service next Sunday afternoon. The Lord will be with us during the morning services, and Bishop Potter in the evening."—Homiletic Review.

"Do you think they approved of my sermon?" asked the newly-appointed rector, hopeful that he had made a good impression.

"Yes, I think so," replied his wife. "They were all nodding."—Tit-bits.

A young preacher who was staying at a clergy house was in the habit of retiring to his room for an hour or more each day to practice pulpit oratory. At such times he filled the house with sounds of fervor and pathos, and emptied it of most everything else. Phillips Brooks chanced to be visiting a friend in this house one day when the budding orator was holding forth.

"Gracious me!" exclaimed the Bishop, starting up in assumed terror. "Pray, what might that be?"

"Sit down, Bishop," his friend replied. "That's only young D—— practicing what he preaches."—Everybody's Magazine.

A well-known divine was preaching one Sunday morning on the subject of "The Great and Small Things of Creation." To illustrate his thought that nothing was either too vast or too tiny to be of interest to God, he proceeded in these words:

"The Creator of this immense universe created also the most infinitesimal atom in it. The Architect of these vast mountains fashioned also the tiniest thread of gold running through them. The God who made me, made a daisy."—Lippincott's.

THE MODERN PRAYER.

Oh, Lord, I come to thee in prayer once more
But pardon that I do not kneel before thy gracious presence—for my knees are sore,
With too much walking. In my chair, instead,
I'll sit at ease and humbly bow my head.
I've labored in the vineyard. Thou dost know
I've sold ten tickets to the minstrel show,
I've called on fifteen strangers in our town,
I've baked a pot of beans for Wednesday's tea—
An "old time" supper it is going to be,
I've dressed three dollies for our annual fair,
And made a cake which we will raffle there.
Now, with thy boundless wisdom, so sublime,
Thou knowest that these duties all take time.
My children roam the streets from morn till night,
I have no time to teach them to do right.
But thou, O Lord, considering my cares,
Will count them righteous and heed my prayers.
Bless the bean supper and the minstrel show
And put it in the hearts of all to go.
Induce all visitors to patronize
The men who in our program advertise.
Because I chased the merchants till they hid
When'er they saw me coming—yes, they did.
Increase the contribution to our fair,
And bless the people who assemble there;
Bless thou the grab-bag and the gypsy tent,
The flower table and the cake that's sent.
May our whist club be to thy service blest,
The dancing party gayer than the rest,
And when thou hast bestowed these blessings—then
We pray that thou will bless our souls.
Amen.—Selected.

THE OBJECTS OF QUORUM ORGANIZATION.

OBJECT.—That which is aimed at; the ultimate purpose.

QUORUM.—Such a number of officers or members of a body as is competent to transact business.

ORGANIZATION.—The arrangement of parts for work; systematic preparation for action.

THE ULTIMATE PURPOSE OF SYSTEMATICALLY ARRANGING CERTAIN NUMBERS OF OFFICERS OR MEMBERS OF THE PRIESTHOOD FOR WORK OR ACTION.

I have heard men assert that they could see no object in having quorums in the church; they did not understand where there was any benefit to be derived from such organizations; and I confess that for a long time I was of that opinion myself.

There have been, and are yet, many in the church who have never had the opportunity of meeting with a quorum of the order of the priesthood to which they belong. For several years I was in that position, and I often wondered, What is the use of quorums? I pondered over it; after I had attended the sessions of my quorum in 1901, which were my first meetings with them, I was still in the dark, for but little was done at those meetings, so I reasoned:

God does nothing unnecessarily; he has given no commandment that is not for our good, and if God has set quorums in the church there is some purpose in it. What is that purpose?

In Doctrine and Covenants 120:3, referring to quorums, the Lord says, "All are necessary and equally honorable, each in its place." That is, all quorums.

The Lord says they are necessary. Well, what are they for? When we search the revelations given to the church we learn from Doctrine and Covenants 104:11, that the quorums of the Presidency, the Twelve, and Seventy, have, as one object of their organization, the interpreting of the law, and the formulating of decisions. Do we need anyone to interpret the law, or to formulate decisions? Is there need for such work as that to be done in the church? Are you all agreed as to the interpretation and the application of the laws of the church as found in the Doctrine and Covenants? I scarcely think that anyone of you would be so rash as to say that you are. Then we need somebody to interpret the law. We need somebody to formulate decisions which must be observed as the standard of interpretation of the particular parts of the law which may be in question. This is one of the purposes of the organization of the three leading quorums, the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Seventies.

We find in section 107:44, that there is still another object in the organization of the seventies' quorum, that they are to be organized as traveling ministers. Do we need any traveling ministers? or when the call comes to "send us a preacher," could we depend upon the local ministry to answer the call? How many of you would go upon a few days' or a few minutes' notice to answer calls for ministerial labor? We need minute men, men who are so provided for that they can go where called upon, to carry the gospel to the people. I think you will all agree that we need a traveling ministry. The quorums of seventies are to train men for this work.

In section 107:42 we find that the High Priests' Quorum is to be composed of men who shall be standing presidents to the church. Do we need a body of standing presidents from which may be drawn competent men to preside over large branches and districts? or could the interests of the work be best served by depending upon the promiscuous membership of the priesthood to fill such places of responsibility? The quorum work of the high priests is calculated to better qualify men for this work.

Since the Lord says that all are necessary, then we conclude that in their place the lesser quorums, the elders, priests, teachers, and deacons are as important as those of the higher orders of the priesthood.

In section 107 we are informed that the elders' quorums are to be composed of standing ministers, to qualify men for the work of standing ministers, if you please. Do we need standing ministers? or could all the ministerial work be done as well by the traveling ministry? Did you ever know of a man who did good work as a traveling minister, but who would soon have things in a turmoil when he tried to act as president of a branch? Then we need standing ministers, and they need to be educated, trained for this work in order to serve the best interests of the body. The Lord says that in the elders' quorums men are to be taught for this purpose. Section 120:10 says that men for the seventies' quorum are to be chosen from the elders' quorums, indicating that elders who are organized into quorums should be better qualified by reason of such organization and its work, for the work of the traveling ministry.

By a careful reading of sections 17:10, 11 and 23:22, it will be seen that it was intended that priests, teachers, and deacons are to be standing ministers to the church, each in their special line of work. Elders may travel, so may priests, but it is their primary work to be standing ministers to the church, caring for the local work under their charge.

We have now located the various quorums of the church, but for this discussion we are particularly interested in those of the elders and the Aaronic priesthood. We can easily see the necessity and importance of the general quorums; but what benefit is there in these lesser ones? Can we not labor in our calling just as well without spending our time and our means keeping up these quorums? Let us see what the Lord says about it. In section 104:38-41 we are told that it is the duty of the presidents of these several quorums to sit in council with their brethren and to teach them their duty, according to the covenants. Do we need to be taught? or are we all perfect in knowledge and wisdom? The Lord evidently recognized that some one needed to be taught, for if the presidents are to teach, some one must be there to learn. If we all have a perfect knowledge and understanding of the laws and policies of the church and are all agreed in regard to these things, then we might say that we have no need to be taught, but so long as our knowledge is imperfect we need to learn. It is true that when we go to the world we go to teach and not to be taught; so did the disciples of old, but Jesus first called them together in council and taught them what they should teach to the people. Jesus not being here in person now, uses divinely commissioned human instruments to continue his work, and he has made it plain that in the quorums we should receive instruction to fit us for our work.

Are you elders all agreed as to the administration of the laws of the church which come under your particular line of work? Are you all fully acquainted with all the doctrines and policies of the church, the procedure in laboring with and prosecuting transgressors, conducting courts, etc.? If not, then you need to be taught. The Lord has chosen the president of your quorum to teach you.

Are you priests all agreed in your work? Of course you can agree that it is your duty to visit the house of each member, but when you come to my house is it your duty or your privilege to ask me if I have family prayer, keep the word of wisdom, and attend to my family duties or not? Some think it is your duty; others would tell you it is none of your business.

If you are not united in your interpretation of the laws and your duties, then you need the work of your quorum, where under the inspiration of the Spirit of the Master you may be taught by your president.

Are you teachers agreed that you should attend all the meetings of your branch, that you should visit the members from house to house in their homes, that you should notice those who decline to partake of the sacrament and labor with them, etc.? Doubtless were you to be asked to vote upon these propositions or any one of them, the ballot would reveal considerable division. Some look upon a teacher as a policeman, and if he is seen to enter the home of a member it is at once surmised that there is trouble there, something is wrong, hence some teachers hold that they should not visit the homes of the Saints unless sent there to settle difficulties. Do you need to be taught? Section 104 tells you where to go.

Are you deacons all agreed that it is your duty to make a house to house canvass of your branch for financial contributions? Some think that being deacons does not obligate them to attend to the financial work of the branch, nor to take care of the church building, nor to act as usher for the public services, but hold that they are only to assist the teacher when called upon. If you are not united upon these and other features of your work, then you need the work of your quorum, that you may become efficient servants and approved of the Master.

The Apostle Paul tells us that God set in the church helps, governments, etc. In speaking of the offices of presidents and counselors of the various quorums, the Lord says in section 107: 46, "The above offices I have given unto you and the keys thereof for helps and for governments, for the work of the ministry, and the perfecting of my Saints."

Our work is to be instrumental in perfecting the Saints, till we all come to a unity of the faith. If we are not united, how long will it take us to bring the body to a unity?

Much more might be introduced to show the importance of quorums in the church, but I will leave that to be brought out in the discussion and close by calling attention to one more line of work which has been designated for the quorums in case of contingency. Section 122: 10 says that "should the church fall into disorder, or any portion of it, it is the duty of the several quorums of the church, or any one of them to take measures to correct such disorder." Here is responsibility, trust, and honor placed upon every quorum of the church.

Do we need quorums in the church?

Where do you stand? Are you a member of a quorum? If not, your duty is plain. If you are, are you receiving the benefits from it that God has designed? Do you attend its sessions? If not, why not?

The methods of procedure and plans of work for the accomplishment of the objects designed in quorum organizations is an important subject of itself which may be considered at another time.

C. I. CARPENTER.

(Delivered before the joint session of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons of the Lamoni Stake, at Lamoni, Iowa, February 28, 1909.)

THAT patriotism counts most which says, "In God we trust," and proves its words by really trusting him. Discouragement is easy for the man who forgets the Lord, but if, like Nehemiah's followers, we remember the Lord, conquest becomes possible. When General Armstrong, the founder of Hampton Institute, was confronted by difficulties in his patriotic work, he said: "It would be wrong to humanity to fail, and the way is clear. God has not darkened the way."—Forward.

A PROFITABLE TALK.

PART 1.

JOHN.—Well, Dan, according to the 90th Psalm, we are living on borrowed time, having passed three score and ten years, and I am truly glad to see you so comfortable in your modern home. What a contrast your present surroundings are with those of sixty years ago.

DAN.—Yes, I appreciate our home, and I have not forgotten the days of small things. Wife and I often talk of our early experience in that little twelve by sixteen log-cabin, with its clapboard roof, dirt floor, and old-fashioned fireplace; one door, and small window; twenty-five miles from post-office or store; located in the woods, not one house in sight. For light, we had the tallow dip or candle, and often only the burning log in the fireplace. I asked our son Rob, when he and his bride were undecided where to spend their honeymoon, how it would suit them to start out in life as we did. He replied, "Such life would be transformation." The present generation do not know that they are born. They have everything at their finger ends, and still they are not satisfied.

JOHN.—How true the sayings of Milton: "The mind in its own place, and in itself can make heaven of hell, and a hell of heaven." And the Spanish proverbs: "The contented man is never poor; the discontented, never rich." "If you are but content, you have enough to live upon with comfort." "Since we can not get what we like, let us like what we can get."

DAN.—I have not forgotten those days. It was work, work, work. No annual vacations; when we were married we had that little log house and only five acres in cultivation; balance of the eighty acres in timber; we had a yoke of oxen; one cow, brood sow, half a dozen sheep, and one dozen hens, and we were truly happy, and the world seemed bright to us, and we went to work with a will; put in our little crop, and all the spare time I was cutting down timber, making rails, and clearing the ground. Wife looked after the garden; milked the cow, made what butter and cheese we needed, and helped to burn brush. That was how we spent our honeymoon, and we kept it up for ten years, living in that one log room. During that time four of our children were born. My wife spun the wool, and wove the cloth, and made all of our clothing. She was a helpmate, in every sense of the term; and she was no exception to the women of that day.

JOHN.—The pioneers in New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio had much to do, for it was no small thing to clear twenty to twenty-five acres of that heavy timber land. Our prairie farmers do not know what it is to improve a farm. In our boyhood days, we harvested the grain with a sickle and cradle; thrashed it with a flail, or tramped it out with oxen.

DAN.—When we compare the present with the days of our youth, it is marvelous the progress that has been made in every department of life. The steam and electrical conveyances on land and on the water! The telegraph and telephone system, and the great steamships, equipped with wireless telegraphy! What will the next fifty years bring forth? Truly this is a wonderful age; wisely named the fast age. When my parents came to this country, they were three months crossing the Atlantic in a three-mast sailing vessel, that did not exceed in weight one hundred tons, and was then one of the largest vessels afloat. To-day, our mammoth liners, from twelve thousand to thirty-two thousand tons, cross in five or six days, and it is within the possibilities of the next few years when men will go from New York to Liverpool in the air ships. In the midst of all the inventions and wonderful progress of this age, I would like to be permitted to see the next fifty years; but I am confronted with the fact that ere long I shall go the way of all the earth, and I am deeply concerned as to what awaits me in the great beyond. You and I have been fortunate so far as the things of this life are concerned. We have raised large, respectable families, and have been liberal with our means, in helping public enterprises, giving to charitable institutions, and while I am not a member of any religious body, I have always helped them in building houses of worship. I could not see my way clear to unite with any one of them, for the reason I did not know which one was the church of Christ. I do not believe that all can be that church, with their conflicting creeds. I read in Matthew 16:18, that Christ said that he would build his church. The Roman Catholics say that they are that church; the Greek Catholics maintain that they are the true church. Our Protestant churches say that both the Romans and Greeks have departed from the original faith taught by Christ and his apostles. Admitting that charge to be true, I ask which one of the Protestant churches is the true church of Christ. The answers are numerous and conflicting, so I am at a loss to know where the true church is.

JOHN.—I have given the subject much thought in the last twenty years, and I am glad that you have mentioned it. Prior to that time I had not taken any interest in religion; I had persuaded myself that if I lived an honest, upright life, when the end came, it would be all right with me, that there was no need to unite with any particular religious body, for in my judgment they did not agree with the church of the New Testament in doctrine or organization. As stated by you, Christ did say that he would build his church upon the rock, and I am getting anxious to know where it is, for after a careful investigation of the Scriptures I am convinced that it is the duty of every man to unite with it, and do what he can to support it, for Christ came to earth to do the will of his Father. That was, to offer to man the means of salvation, for man was in a lost condition; the mission of Christ was to place within man's reach means to save him; restore all that was lost in Adam; and my understanding is that he established his church or kingdom, and all that would accept of his doctrine and become members of his church, live upright lives, should have eternal life. While I believe that there are good people in all the churches, Catholics and Protestant, and in fact, outside of any religious body, there are some noble, honorable men and women, and according to the Scriptures, "they shall be rewarded for all the good they have done," and this promise holds good to all men. Many, like ourselves, have stood aloof from any religious body, for the reason that they could not understand that the various religious organizations were of divine origin, and not in harmony with the church of the New Testament.

DAN.—Did I understand you to say that the promise in the Scriptures is that all men, whether they are members or nonmembers of any church, shall be rewarded for all the good they have done?

JOHN.—That is my understanding, for I read in 2 Corinthians 5:10, "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad"; and in Revelation 22:12, "Behold I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man, according as his works shall be." You and I are among the number, and shall be rewarded for all the good, or punished for the evil we have done.

DAN.—Why, that is very plain and just. Had I known the Scriptures made such promise, I would not have worried as I have done; for, as I understand matters now, if I lead an honest, upright, peaceable life, doing what good I can to mankind, there is no need of me uniting with any church.

JOHN.—While it is according to the Scriptures that all shall be rewarded according to their works, good or evil, we must not lose sight of the fact that as Paul says (Ephesians 2:12), "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Again he says, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ, the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."—1 Corinthians, 15:22, 23. From the above we learn that had it not been for Christ, man would have been lost, for he partook of the nature of Adam, and it is essential for man to believe in God, in his Son, and in the Holy Ghost; "without faith it is impossible to please God."—Hebrews 11:6. We are not responsible for death coming to us or our posterity. It was because of the disobedience of our father, Adam, and some have found fault with God for permitting death to pass upon all men, saying that it is unjust. But we understand that all that was lost in Adam is restored in Christ. That is, all that die, regardless of the life they have led, shall be resurrected, but, as stated in 15th of Corinthians, "every man in his own order," that is, those who are in Christ, and those who are out of Christ; the good and the wicked; saints and sinners. The first unto resurrection of life, the second unto the resurrection of damnation. "The dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thessalonians 4:16. "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ."—Revelation 20:6. "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished."—Revelation 20:5.

From the foregoing passages and others I understand that only those that are in Christ shall come forth in the first resurrection, or in the resurrection of the just or of life. Man may have lived a good, honest, upright life, so far as dealing with his fellow-man was concerned. Still, if he has died outside of Christ, having rejected his commandments (gospel), treating them lightly, saying I see no need to become a follower of Christ, and keeping himself aloof from his church, he will have no claim on the promises that are made to all that will follow him. With this understanding, I am very anxious to find the church that Christ established, for I want to become one of that body that I may be entitled to blessings of the household of faith, having a part in the first resurrection, and to reign with Christ and his faithful followers for ever and ever. A foreigner can not have equal rights with a citizen. He can not vote; in time of adversity he has no legal claim on the government. He is permitted to take up a homestead, improve it by building houses and barns, planting orchards and vineyards, but, at the end of five or seven years at the most, if he has not become an American citizen, he has no claim to the property. He may have been a good, honest neighbor, paid his taxes, but the farm is not his, and he will be compelled to vacate in favor of a citizen. No one to blame but himself. So I understand it will be with us, when we pass to the other shore. If we have not become citizens of the kingdom of God, have not put on the wedding garment, we shall be cast out. (See Matthew 22:11, 12.) Jesus said, "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."—John 3: 19. Man may reject the light, first, because it is not popular; second, he can not live in that light and do evil; third, he prefers to adhere to the traditions of men; fourth, he fears that his business will not be a success. Jesus said, "But whosoever will deny me before men, him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 10: 33.

DAN.—I have received light, and I can now see that the mission of Jesus Christ is a great blessing to man, and I consider it my duty to manifest by my works, that I do appreciate that which he has done for me, by accepting of the message, the great plan of salvation that he has presented to man. But, tell me, where is his church, and how shall I know it, for there are so many claiming to be his? Just think of the several hundreds that are in the world, teaching conflicting creeds, and claiming that they are all representative of the faithful Son of God.

JOHN.—Yes, it is a great pity that the religious world is divided and subdivided with so many conflicting creeds, and the majority of them maintain that it is immaterial as to which one you unite with, and indeed, I agree with them, for, in my judgment, one has as much right to establish a church as the other, but the question I would like to know is, Where did any of them get the authority to organize the church, and say it is the church of Christ, when he has organized his own church nineteen hundred years ago?

DAN.—Could they not take the Scriptures and organize according to it?

JOHN.—Yes, but they are not in harmony with the Scriptures. You and I could form a church, taking the Scriptures as a pattern; but, would Christ recognize the work done by us?

DAN.—I can't see why he would not. The more workers he would have in the vineyard, the greater the harvest; for, what one church may fail to gather in, the others would.

JOHN.—He might say, "Peter, John, and Paul I know, but who are you? if you are so anxious to labor in my vineyard, why not come into the church established by me?" Do you suppose if we were to go out and organize lodges, after the order of the Masons, Oddfellows, or Woodmen, that they would recognize the work done by us without us first having authority from them to perform such labor?

DAN.—No; I do not suppose that they would permit anyone to go out and represent them, unless authorized by them.

JOHN.—Every organization delegates its authority to those that said organization chooses to send out as its representatives. When men take the responsibility of representing any organization without authority, they place themselves liable to the law.

DAN.—Working for the salvation of souls is different. We read, "That whosoever will, may come and drink of the water of life freely." So if I choose to go and invite sinners to come unto Christ, I can do so.

JOHN.—Yes. A noncitizen of this government can explain to foreigners the benefits derived from being a citizen. But he could not give them papers of citizenship; neither could you or I, as an American citizen, issue naturalization papers, unless we were authorized by the Government to do so. I can not see how any man not a member of the Church of Christ can initiate members into that organization. You have already admitted that you do not know where the church of Christ is, and for you to go out and represent that which you know nothing about, would be inconsistent. In my judgment that is the secret to the serious mistakes made in the religious world: men running without authority, organizing the various churches. Jesus said, "All power is given to me, and as my Father sent me, so send I you." He did not send all that would read that statement. Again he says, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you, that you should go and bring forth fruits."—John 15: 16. From this I understand that it was Christ that did the choosing as to who should be his ministers.

DAN.—Yes, I understand that Jesus called and ordained his ministers, for he was here in person and could give the matter his personal attention. But after his ascension I understand that he moved by the Holy Spirit upon the minds of those that he wanted to labor in his vineyard; hence, we hear men say that the still small voice has spoken to them, saying, "Go and labor for the salvation of souls."

JOHN.—Yes, I have heard young men say that prior to their studying for the ministry they were impressed to do so, in that way; but I can not accept of that as sufficient evidence for the call and authority to go and preach the gospel and officiate in the ordinances of God's house.

DAN.—My understanding is that they are led by the Holy Spirit to take up that line of work, and after they have qualified themselves by graduating in that line of work, the church ordains and gives them authority to officiate in all of the ordinances of said church.

JOHN.—That would do, if those so-called or led to do ministerial work, would preach the same faith and that the church ordaining them was the church of Christ. But the various churches are organizations of men, and they can not show that they have been authorized of God to represent him. I do not doubt but what the ministers of the conflicting creeds have a desire to represent Christ, but where and when did he choose and ordain them? I may desire to work for you, but I could not go out and represent you unless you had accepted of my service.

To make the labor a success, both the employee and employer should be agreed. As evidence that the Lord has not chosen the army of ministers now in the world, we read, "He that is sent of God, speaketh the words of God."—John 3:34. "He that is of God, heareth God's words."—John 8:47. "Be ye one, as the Father and I [Jesus] are one." Paul said, "Now I beseech you, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you."—1 Corinthians 1:10. "If ye are not one, ye are not mine," Jesus said.

To make my idea plain, let me refer you to what took place here in our city last year. Twenty-five young men graduated for the ministry. Five of them were ordained by the Catholic Church; three by the Baptist; four by the Christians; two by the Methodists; two by the Presbyterians; two by the Congregationalists; three by the Unitarians; two by the Episcopalians; and two by the German Lutherans. If the twenty-five were questioned as to their authority, they would answer, as stated by you, that they were prompted by the Spirit's small voice to take that line of work, and were given authority by their respective bodies to represent them. It is very inconsistent to claim that God approves of the labor of those twenty-five men that differ so materially in their religious creeds. In the first place, the five Catholic ministers maintain that the twenty sent out by the other eight churches are merely representatives of men; that the Lord recognizes only the ministry of the Catholic Church; and while the twenty are willing to admit that the call and authority of the five Catholic brethren may be approved of the Lord, they all preach conflicting creeds. And what is true of the above twenty-five ministers is true of the thousands there are in the world; hence I am justified in saying that the ministers of the various churches are not chosen of God, and their authority to represent him simply comes from the organization of man.

DAN.—I agree with you that I do not believe that God has called men to present conflicting faith, or that which is not in harmony with his word, and the mystery to me is, How can we tell which of the many churches is the church of Christ, if any is? When Jesus said that he would build his church upon the rock, what do you understand that rock is? If we can locate it, we may be able to find the church.

JOHN.—The language of Jesus is as follows: "Peter answered, and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. And Jesus answered and said unto him, Blessed art thou, Simon Barjona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father, who is in heaven. And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."—Matthew 16:16-18. We notice that Peter had received the knowledge that Christ was the Son of God. He did not receive it from flesh and blood, but from God. How did God reveal that knowledge to him? Paul explains: "Wherefore I give you to understand, that no man speaking by the Spirit of God calleth Jesus accursed: and that no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost."—1 Corinthians 12:3. So it was by the Holy Ghost that Peter was informed that Jesus was the Christ, which is in harmony with the promise. "But when the Comforter [the Holy Ghost] is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me."—John 15:26. The Holy Spirit, the power of God, the spirit of revelation, is the rock that Christ built his church upon. Notice its office work. First, we read of it moving out in the morn of creation, "when the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light: and there was light."—Genesis 1:2, 3. "Will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment."—John 16:8. "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will show you things to come [revelation]."—John 16:13. By this Spirit are gifts distributed to members of the church, viz: wisdom, knowledge, faith, healings, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues, interpretation of tongues. By it (the Holy Spirit) is the resurrection of the dead to take place. Can you call to mind anything superior?

Of a church having such to rest upon it can truthfully be said that it is built upon the rock, and just so long as the church will honor and respect the rock, it will never be moved, and the only way to remain upon the rock is to keep and teach the commandments of the Lord. When we teach for doctrine the traditions or commandments of men, then we are building upon a sandy foundation.

DAN.—I can not call to mind anything that is more fitting than the Holy Ghost, and surely it is in every sense "the rock." Now, where is the church to-day that is built upon that rock? Can you give a description of its organization and doctrine taught, for I understand that the various churches claim to build upon that rock, and some say that Jesus is that rock?

JOHN.—Jesus is called the corner stone, the foundation. (See Luke 20:17; 1 Corinthians 3:10.) The foundation must have something to rest upon, and Jesus wisely selected the Holy Ghost. I shall cheerfully try and give you a description of the organization of the church established by Jesus Christ. First, we read of him choosing twelve men and ordaining them, whom he called apostles. (Matthew 10:1-5.) Second, we read of the quorum of seventy being chosen. (Luke 10:1.) In 1 Corinthians 12:28, we read that God set in the church, apostles, prophets, and teachers. In Ephesians 4:11, we learn of evangelists and pastors. In Acts 15:4 and 20:17, we learn of elders; and in Titus 1:5, the instructions are to ordain elders. In 1 Timothy 1:1, the office of bishop is named; and in Philippians 1:1, deacons are named, also in 1 Timothy 3:8-12. And in Acts 6, we learn of the ordination of deacons. John was a priest by ordination and lineage, and Apollos was a disciple of John, evidently a minister after the order of the Aaronic priesthood. (Acts 18:24.) From the above I learn that there are ten separate and distinct officers in the church, and I have not found any scriptural authority that they were only to remain to establish Christianity, as is claimed by some.

DAN.—Do you believe that the apostles and prophets were to continue?

JOHN.—In Ephesians 4:11, 12, we read that God gave some apostles and prophets, evangelists, and pastors and teachers, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, and they were to remain till we all come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God; and as already referred to (1 Corinthians 12:28), God set in the church apostles and prophets, and Paul tells us in Ephesians how long they were to remain. So you can see that the demand for apostles and prophets is just as essential as ever. I know that some maintain that there were no successors in office to the first quorum of apostles, which is misleading and not true. Matthias was chosen in place of Judas, but lost his apostleship by transgression. (Acts 1:26.)

DAN.—Yes, I can see the wisdom of appointing Matthias, so as to have the chain of witnesses unbroken, as in the evidence of the resurrection of Christ; but I do not know of any other being called, except Paul, and he was a special apostle to the Gentiles.

JOHN.—Barnabas was called the same time as Paul, and he was named first. (See Acts 13:1-3, and in 14:14 they are called apostles.) That makes fifteen apostles. Then we learn that James, the Lord's brother, was an apostle. (Galatians 1:18, 19, making the sixteen.) There are twenty-one apostles mentioned in the New Testament Scriptures, which destroys the philosophy that there were no successors to the first quorum of apostles.

DAN.—Was not James one of the first twelve chosen by the Savior?

JOHN.—No. We have the name of James, the son of Zebedee, and James, the son of Alphaeus, but not James, the Lord's brother. History informs us that none of Jesus' brethren believed in him during his life time, and John 7:5 confirms that: "For neither did his brethren believe in him." In Acts 1:13, 14, we have the names of the apostles present when they met in the upper room with Mary, the mother of Jesus, and his brethren.

DAN.—What about prophets? Did not Jesus say that the law and the prophets were until John?

JOHN.—Yes, but since then the kingdom of God (the church) is preached. (Luke 16:16.) By this we understand that the law and the prophets had their fulfillment in the introduction of the kingdom of God. Not that there was not to be any law or prophets after John, for there was law given by the Savior, and he, himself, was a prophet, so declared by Moses, and Luke 24:19 calls him the "mighty Prophet," and John is declared "the prophet of the Most High God."—Luke 1:76. "There were in the church at Antioch certain prophets."—Acts 13:1-5. "And Philip the evangelist, . . . had four daughters, virgins, which did prophesy."—Acts 21:9. Judas and Silas were prophets. (Acts 15:32.) Then Paul speaks of the gift of prophecy given to the members of the church. Why should he speak of the gift of prophecy as one of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, if there are no prophets?

DAN.—What was the doctrine taught by the church of Christ?

JOHN.—Faith, repentance, baptisms of water and of the Spirit, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment. These are some of the principles of the doctrine of Christ. (See Hebrews 6:1-3.) The following teaches baptism for the remission of sins: Mark 1:4, 5; Luke 3:3; Acts 2:38; 22:16. Baptism of the Holy Spirit: Matthew 3:11, John 3:5; Acts 1:5. In support of the doctrine of the laying on of hands: Acts 8:17, 18; Mark 16:18; Acts 19:6, 7; James 5:14, 15.

DAN.—As the above is an outline of the various officers and doctrine in the church of Christ, is there any other sign or means that distinguishes it from the churches of men?

JOHN.—Yes, in 1 Corinthians 12, we read of nine spiritual gifts promised to the church, and Paul did not want the saints at Corinth to be ignorant of that important matter; and Joel 2:28 mentions dreams and visions to be given to the people of God, and Jesus said that the signs would follow them that believe. (Mark 16:17, 18.) In John 7:17, Jesus promised knowledge to all that did the will of his Father, and Paul adds (1 Corinthians 12:7) that the Spirit is given to every man,—of course, to all that do the will of God. The above is a true presentation of the church of Christ and his apostles; as I understand it, and I am in hopes that I shall yet locate it. When I do, I shall with pleasure inform you.

DAN.—I shall be very grateful to find just such an organization. The description given is in harmony with the Scriptures, and is so plain that there is no need for anyone to be deceived. Still, I can not call to mind a church with apostles, prophets, seventies, gifts, and blessings, and such is the character of the one established by Christ and his apostles.

JOHN.—Paul compares to the human body the church of the New Testament. He says, "For the body [church] is not one member, but many. . . . The eye can not say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body [church], which seem to be more feeble, are necessary."—1 Corinthians 12: 14, 21, 22. Where is the consistency for the religious world to say that apostles, prophets, healings, tongues, visions, and dreams are done away with, no longer needed, and then maintain that they have a perfect church or body; just as well say that the human body is perfect without the eyes, nose, ears, and legs? Nothing is left but a dead, disfigured body. The thought presented by Paul is that as one of the members of the human body can not say to the other, "I have no need of thee," neither can the deacon say to the apostle, "I have no need of you," nor the elder or bishop say to the prophet, "I have no need of you." "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body [human or in the church], as it hath pleased him."—1 Corinthians 12: 18.

DAN.—I have enjoyed myself, and have had much light, and hope that we shall meet again in the near future.

PART 2.

JOHN.—Well, you have been rather long in returning the visit; still I am glad to see you. Have you been reading the Scriptures and satisfying yourself that I gave you the correct idea of the church built by Christ and his apostles?

DAN.—Yes, I have made quite a study of the Scriptures, and I have no reason to change my mind, or find fault with what you said.

JOHN.—Well, I am very pleased, and now I am prepared to tell you where the church of Christ is, organized after the pattern of the New Testament.

DAN.—Well, the news seems too good to be true. Where did you find it?

JOHN.—It is the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, known as the Latter Day Saints.

DAN.—Well, that is news, but not good news. Good day.

JOHN.—Wait, I want to convince you that what I say is true.

DAN.—Don't mention Latter Day Saints to me.

JOHN.—What is there objectionable in the name or the people? Are you acquainted with them or their faith? Do you know anything unbecoming in them? I hope you do not confound them with the followers of Brigham Young, called Mormons, with headquarters in Salt Lake City, Utah?

DAN.—No, I do not confound them with the Mormons. I know that they do not believe in polygamy, and other evils of Utahism, but the idea that they, the Latter Day Saints, are the church of Christ. Why, the last I would ever think of. In fact, I could not be made to believe that they are the church of Christ. It is an outrage for you to try and palm off any such foolishness on me. I know you are well posted in Scripture, and you are the last man that I would think of ever saying such untruths. The next thing I shall hear, unless you are careful, is that you have been taken to the asylum. Why, John, I am startled to hear you make such a statement!

JOHN.—Again I ask, What do you know about their faith or their standing in the community?

DAN.—I can not say that personally I know anything about their faith, only what I have heard from others. So far as their reputation is concerned, I never have heard anything out of the way. I have known of their church for years. I knew of them before they built their house of worship and that is over twenty-five years ago. But, I can't get over the idea that you claim they represent the church of Christ. You will have to excuse me. I do not consider it worth while to spend time in discussing this matter.

JOHN.—I do not wish to insist on your stopping, but unless you can give better reasons than you have, I shall be justified in saying that you have passed judgment before hearing the evidence, and the good book says that he that judges a matter before he hears it to him it is a shame and a folly. At this late hour in your life, past the three score and ten years, you certainly can not afford to be guilty of that. There is too much at stake for you to treat it so lightly.

DAN.—Listen. Do you think you can get any man that is posted in the Scriptures or has the least idea about such an important matter as the church of Christ, and who is acquainted with such insignificant body of people as they are, scarcely recognized by the Christian world, or those who make no profession, to believe that the Latter Day Saints represent the church of Christ? I look upon them as an honest, humble, law-abiding body of people; poor, so far as the things of this world are concerned, doing no one any harm, not any of them holding a popular position in the world.

JOHN.—I am glad of the compliment you give them; an honest, humble, law-abiding people; that is just the class of people that you will find in the church of Christ, if they follow their Master. Christ said, "The poor have the gospel preached unto them."—Matthew 11: 5. Again he says, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou hast hid those things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes; even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight."—Luke 10:21. Had you lived in the days when Jesus established his church, you would have found fault because it was composed of the poor and its leading ministers were men from the humble walks in life, poor fishermen of Galilee. Had he (Christ) consulted you and others you doubtless would have suggested that he choose men from among the highly educated and popular classes of the age, those who were rich and were of note in society. Paul says, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble [popular], are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things [unlearned] of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty."—1 Corinthians 1:26, 27. I have carefully compared the church of former day Saints with this of the Latter Day Saints, and they are identical in organization, doctrine, gifts, and blessings.

DAN.—I presume that the Church of Latter Day Saints is a good imitation, and, pardon me for saying, a counterfeit.

JOHN.—If only an imitation or a counterfeit, as you say, please tell me, where is the genuine? Let me give you some of my experience in connection with my investigation of the Church of Latter Day Saints. I attended one of their General Conferences. I heard several sermons on the doctrine of Christ and the organization of the church and the gifts and blessings, which were along the line that we have been talking. I attended several of their prayer and testimony meetings, and my soul was made glad in listening to the earnest, humble prayers offered by the brothers and sisters, and the remarkable testimonies of the wonderful manifestation of the power of God in healings, visions, and dreams. Then, for the first time in my life, I heard the gift of tongues, and the interpretation of tongues, and prophecy. I thought of the saying of Paul: "How is it then, brethren, when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation; let all things be done unto edifying."—1 Corinthians 14:26. I also attended some of the business sessions, and I was informed that upon that floor there were the quorum of the twelve apostles, the president of the church or prophet, with his two counselors, the seventies, high priests (pastors), evangelists, elders, priests, teachers, bishops, and deacons, and as I looked upon that assembly, and called to mind the soundness of the doctrine that I heard preached, and the solemn and sacred testimony meetings, I said, "This is truly the church of Christ, as it is in perfect harmony with the Scriptures." By that assembly missionaries were appointed to labor in Australia, Sandwich Islands, British Isles, and to the various parts of the United States, and those missionaries go out on equal basis.

DAN.—What do you mean by equal basis?

JOHN.—The missionaries receive no salary. Their families are provided for. The wife and each child receive so much per month. The church pays the expenses of the missionaries to their respective fields.

DAN.—Do I understand that the wife and children of the leading men are on the same basis as the families of those who are not considered as their equal in presentation of the word?

JOHN.—That is correct.

DAN.—What about the unmarried minister?

JOHN.—He is on the same basis as his fellow minister. He has no family, consequently has no need to draw from the church treasury. There are several of the ministry that go self-supporting, that is, receive no allowance for their families. Do you suppose if this church were only an imitation or a counterfeit, as you have intimated, that the ministry would leave home and loved ones under such conditions? In my judgment this body of people are manifesting by their works that they are deeply interested in the salvation of souls. Some of their ministers have left good, paying positions and have entered the ministry without purse or scrip. The church is doing a noble work. They not only care for the families of the ministry, but their first duty is to look after the needs of the worthy poor. Now, Dan, you stated that you were perfectly satisfied with the description of the church of the New Testament, as I presented it to you, and you have also stated that you have not been able to locate the church that was in harmony with the New Testament. Therefore, I ask you, as the honest man I believe you to be, to prove all things, and to hold fast to that which is good. Do not let popularity lead you from the truths of heaven. I give you an invitation to investigate the claims of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

Of General Interest

THE HISTORICAL DEPARTMENT OF IOWA.

EDGAR R. HARLAN.

As now organized, this department dates from the first day of July, 1892. Its chief purpose is the collection of historical data relating to our own State and the Territory of the Middle West of which it originally formed a part. Special efforts are made to collect Iowa newspapers from the earliest dates to the present time; works of state and general western history, biography and genealogy; works on the history of all our wars from the earliest times; works relating to the North American Indians; county histories, maps, Iowa pamphlets, biographies of our noted men and women, printed or in manuscript; printed or written documents relating to early settlers and settlements; reports, catalogues, and broadsides relating to the churches, educational and benevolent institutions of the State; in short, every species of data which can throw light upon local, state, or western history. Two hundred and eighty-six Iowa newspapers are currently received, and twenty-nine from other States, making a total of three hundred and fifteen. The library is especially strong in genealogy, local history, and the history of the Civil War.

The department publishes the Annals of Iowa, an illustrated historical quarterly magazine of eighty pages, which has now completed its eighth volume. This is made up of original contributions in history and biography. By direction of the trustees it is sent to every organized library in our State.

In addition to the Annals, the historical department is to be credited with the following publications: Eight biennial reports; "John Brown among the Quakers and other Sketches," by Hon. Irving E. Richman; "First census of the original counties of Dubuque and Des Moines," edited by Dr. Benjamin F. Shambaugh; "History of the Constitution of Iowa," by Doctor Shambaugh; reprints of the laws of Iowa, 1838-39 and 1839-40, and the hitherto unpublished journals of the council and the house of representatives of the extra session of 1840; "Early settlement and growth of western Iowa," by Rev. John Todd.

The department has secured over one hundred fine portraits in oil of distinguished Iowans, which are now on exhibition in the art gallery of the historical building. More are promised in the near future.

The library of the historical department on January 1, 1909, consisted of the following: Bound volumes of newspapers, 5,266; books and pamphlets in the library, 16,363.

The museum includes seven large cases for autograph letters, manuscripts, and portraits; a collection of recent, aboriginal, and historic pottery—some of the most interesting specimens of which were found in our own State; a large collection of stone implements, among which is an Iowa ax weighing thirty-one and three-fourths pounds—one of the largest ever discovered—with hundreds of flints; many teeth, tusks, and other bones of the mammoth and mastodon, all of which were found in Iowa; two large cases of birds—mostly specimens found within our State; many Iowa mammals; four large aquariums stocked with Iowa fishes; a case of Indian baskets, bead work, implements, and weapons, the most of which were manufactured by the Masquakie Indians of Tama County; a collection of arms—cannon, mortars, swivel guns, rifles, muskets, carbines, swords, and pistols, in use during the Civil, Spanish, and Philippine wars; and duplicates in bronze of most of the historic medals issued by the United States Government.

Besides the historical department and hall of archives, the State library and the Iowa library commission are accommodated in the magnificent historical building which is now nearly completed. (Foregoing data taken from the Iowa Official Register.)

The accompanying portrait is that of Edgar Ruby Harlan, the curator of the department, recently appointed to fill the vacancy made by the death of Charles Aldrich, the founder of the department. Mr. Harlan was born in Indiana, but came to Van Buren County, Iowa, when but four years of age. He is a graduate of the law department of Drake University, in the class of 1896. He served as county attorney of Van Buren County four years. Early in 1907 he was appointed to assist in the work of the historical department, and he has now been appointed curator by the board of trustees of the department.

Edgar Allan Poe, in one of his weird stories, relates how a friend, lying on a lounge, saw through the window a huge and terrible monster coming swiftly down the mountain-side toward the house. Looking at the same place the next day, he found that it was only a small death's-head moth crawling slowly down the window frame.—F. N. Peloubet.

A Christian will find it cheaper to pardon than resent. Forgiveness saves the expense of anger, the cost of hatred, the waste of spirits. It also puts the soul into a frame which makes the practice of other virtues easy.—Hannah Moore.

Have You?

Dear Friend: Have you included in your list of Christmas remembrances our illustrated booklet of David H. Smith's beautiful poem, "At last"? It is the only memento of the kind ever published by the church, and is a gift intended to move the heart to higher levels of faith and hope. You can not afford to miss this rare chance of sending so much of cheer to at least one friend at this Christmastide. On sale at Herald Office. price twenty-five cents.

The Way of the Lonely Heart.

Always at the holiday season I had followed the way of the Loving Heart, and my fellow traveler had been one who laughed with me and sang to the chime of Christmas bells.

But the day came when I was left alone, and I knew that never again should I fare joyously, and that henceforth my pilgrimage should be along twilight paths.

And it was thus that I learned of the Way of the Lonely Heart, which is a shadowy way, somewhat steep and stony, and many who travel it need help to reach the heights.

And following that way, I came first to Jean.

"May I breakfast with you on Christmas morning," I wrote, "and help with the tree lighting?" And her answer came back: "You dearest dear, the morning would have been the hardest, and yet I must keep my sadness from the boy."

At nine o'clock I found them, waiting for me, the boy with the scarlet of his cheeks matching the holly in his white blouse, and Jean a tense black figure behind him.

"Last year father lighted the candles," he said as I came in.

"Yes, dear." Jean's hunted eyes sought mine.

I took the boy in charge after that, and while the little lights starred the tree with pink, and green, and yellow, I talked of the days when Jean and I were little girls and went to school together.

"She was such a pretty little girl!"

His eyes shone. "With long curls?"

"Yes. I remember the day that she was naughty and cut them off."

"Tell it."

And I did. And once Jean laughed, and the hunted look went out of her eyes. And when I went away, she said, "You dearest dear, now I can get through the day."

My pilgrimage took me next to Penelope, who writes stories, and who has a little fame and much beauty.

I found her prone on a couch, her face a white oval between bands of dark hair.

"Don't say 'Merry Christmas!' to me," she cried sharply.

So I kissed her in silence and laid against her cheek a bunch of valley lilies.

She clutched at them and asked:

"How did you know that he always sent lilies?"

And then she sobbed and sobbed.

"My heart is broken."

"But he loves you," I said.

"He loves money more."

"No—he loves you too much to put you into a poor setting, and he is too proud to share your money."

"What is pride against love?"

"Put yourself in his place. If you had lost everything would you ask a woman to share your poverty?"

"If she were willing——"

"Look at it from a man's standpoint. He has told you that he must wait until he has recovered part of what he has lost. He is sore; sensitive; don't doubt him, dear——"

"Ah," she caught my hand, "talk to me—make me have faith——"

And I preached a little of the doctrine of self-forgetfulness. "You have dreamed so much, and your search is for the ideal. He is a real man. Be patient, and some day he will understand your need of him and his of you."

Gradually hope came to her, and she sat up. "I am going to put a spray of lilies in a letter and send it to him," she said. "I wrote so bitterly this morning."

It was a long way from Penelope's apartment to the tenement where an old man lives who kept books for the One who had traveled with me the Way of the Loving Heart.

I took a basket with me and spread a little table, on which I set out roast chicken and celery and bread and butter, and I made his tea and heated gravy and mashed potatoes and mince pie over his little gas stove.

He sat in a big chair, all crippled with rheumatism, and watched me.

"It's mighty good of you," he said, over and over again; "the woman downstairs cooks my things. But I can't pay much and she is careless."

When everything was ready, I pinned a bit of mistletoe in his lapel and stuck some holly in a vase.

And then we had our lunch together. For the old bookkeeper is a gentleman, and he talked of the One we had both loved.

"He had such a great heart," he said, and I assented eagerly, for I was hungry to talk of my sorrow, and yet I feared to sadden other friends. But my little bookkeeper was not saddened. He lived in a land of memories, a pleasant land, where he walked and talked with those who had gone before.

And as he was refreshed in body by the food that I had brought him, so was I refreshed in soul by the spiritual manna which we shared.

"I will come often," I told him, as the afternoon waned. "It helps me to talk to you."

"One lonely heart can always help another," was his simple philosophy, and he was smiling when I left him.

The house to which I came next was a house of Discord. There was a son, and a daughter, and the son's mother. A trio of unhappiness. And the fault lay with the son's mother; and yet she was my friend, and I knew that hers was a lonely heart, and that loneliness had made the bitterness, and the bitterness discord.

She sat alone in her big front chamber, although there was a merry party in the rooms below. But the son was not merry, nor the son's wife, for over them lay the shadow of the unhappiness upstairs.

"Why don't you go down and join them?" I asked, when I had presented my little gift.

"I am not wanted," stiffly; "they have each other."

And then I took her hand in mine.

"Dear Margaret," I said, "is life to go on this way to the end?"

"Is it my fault?"

And wondering at my courage, I told her, "Yes."

"Oh, how can you!" she flung out. "It is they who are selfish."

"They are young—and it is we who know more of life who can show them the beauty of unselfishness. You can never win this way, you can only win by following the way of the Loving Heart."

Her eyes questioned, and so I told her of that Way, and how each year we had tried to follow it, and how love had always won love, and bitterness would always be repaid with bitterness.

"Peace on earth, good will—" I finished, "why not show good will to your own—to your little boy, who, after all, is still your little boy, and to his wife, who at heart is a little troubled girl? It is you who must bring harmony into this home, Margaret."

"If I might," her voice was wistful.

Then she stood up and smoothed her hair, and in the mirror she nodded at me.

"I am going down," she said.

And as I passed the door of the living room I saw the light in her son's face as he welcomed her.

The Way led next to Mazie, who works in a department store, and who lives in a dingy hall room. She is dear and sweet and good, but life has brought her nothing but drudgery. Her little face as I saw it, during all the hard weeks of the pre-holiday season, at the ribbon counter, had haunted me, and when I found that she was an orphan and alone, I asked her to dine with me on Christmas Day.

But we did not dine at home. I knew what young girls like, and I had a big bunch of violets to pin on her shabby coat and my gift to her was a set of furs, and so it was a transformed little maiden who went with me in a taxicab to a certain famous hostelry.

"I have never seen anything so lovely!" Maizie kept saying as she sat at a table in the corner of the great dining-room and looked upon the golden-lighted rooms, gay with poinsettia and throbbing with music. "I have never seen anything so lovely!"

Her delight in the dainty service, her healthy appetite, which reveled in the delicious food, her eager interest in the people at the other tables, took me out of myself.

"How good you have been to me!" she said, as we went out.

"It is you who have been good," I told her; "you have given more than you have gained."

"Why, what could I give you?"

"You have youth and hope," I said, and as she tucked her hand in mine I knew that my friendship with little Mazie held the promise of many good things for both of us.

When I had taken Mazie home, I came back to Jean.

It was late, and the boy was in bed, and Jean sat before the little open fire reading the Book of books.

"Read to me," I told her, and she turned to the Twenty-seventh Psalm.

"It isn't exactly a Christmas chapter," she said thoughtfully, "but it belongs to you and to me. 'Wait—be of good courage—and He shall strengthen thy heart—'"

I stretched out my hand to her and told her of my day.

"After all," she said, thoughtfully, when I had finished, "it was all the Way of the Loving Heart, dearest dear."

And I saw that it was, for they all love me, and I love them—storm-tossed Penelope, and the old bookkeeper, and Margaret, and little Mazie, and Jean, my best-beloved friend.

And because this Way of Loneliness led me to unhopèd-for heights, I have told of it, that others, following, may, in the joy of Christmas service, find again the Way of the Loving Heart.—Temple Bailey in December Outlook.

ROBERTSDALE, ALABAMA, November 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: This will inform the HERALD readers that the writer is still actively engaged in the mission field, "away down south in the land of Dixie," where the cotton and the sugar-cane grow and where the flowers are still in bloom. I have lately acted as a moderator in two debates of twelve sessions each, with two hours to each session. The first debate was held at McKenzie, Alabama, from October 18 up to and including the 23d, in the church house owned by our people. The other debate was held near this place from November 1 to 6 in a house owned by the so-called Church of Christ, sometimes called Campbellites. Bro. T. C. Kelley represented the cause of truth against falsehoods and abuse from the mouth of one W. G. Roberts, of Rippey, Iowa.

The discussions resulted in a victory for the truth. Roberts' stock in trade was to browbeat, abuse, and to belittle Brother Kelley and to misrepresent and slander the Latter Day Saints. So much abuse and ridicule disgusted many of the people. I have heard many debates, but Roberts can, in some respects, put up the most unreasonable and the silliest mess of stuff and call it an argument, of any man that I ever heard in debate. Instead of being a shrewd debater, and accurate in statement and representation, he misrepresents the real facts so often and is so abusive and such a browbeater that good, intelligent people soon become disgusted with him. He is so full of egotism and self-conceit, and boastful in his manner, and so loud and boisterous in self-praise, that some who have never heard him before might be led to think he is a great debater, if they take noise for argument. But the facts in the case are, he makes a great big noise with but very little argument. A few assertions that he made were as follows:

"He (Kelley) don't believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." "He don't believe in baptism for the remission of sins." "He don't believe the Bible." "The Book of Mormon came from hell, and can almost smell the smoke on its leaves." "Joseph Smith was a polygamist." "Young Joseph, his son, admitted that his father was a polygamist." "When Joseph Smith died the Saints expected him to rise from the dead the third day." "Joseph Smith killed three men at the time of his death." "Mormons destroyed one whole town in the State of Missouri, and burned Methodists alive." "Mormons (the Reorganized Church) want to take the life of every Gentile." "Book of Mormon teaches murder." (He read one statement in the book to prove it, which is found in King James' translation in Micah.) He admitted the statement was in Micah, but said in the Book of Mormon it taught murder and that it, the Book of Mormon, came from hell, and was a fraud. And at the same time tried to defend the Bible in the presence of intelligent people who knew that if it condemned the Book of Mormon as a fraud the same thing in the Bible would prove the Bible a fraud, and Brother Kelley did not hesitate in showing him up on that.

Doctrine and Covenants teaches stealing in section 64:6. (Another falsehood like the one about the Saints burning Methodists alive.) Tried to make it appear in Doctrine and Covenants 83:1 that the dedicating of the temple lot by Joseph Smith referred to the dedicating of the temple by Joseph Smith, which is to be built in the future, and wanted to know how the temple could be dedicated by the prophet after his death. (A new objection, but very silly indeed.) "Mormon, the Reorganized Church, more bloodthirsty than the Indians"; "worse than the Catholics."

He tried to leave the impression on the minds of the people that the Saints were dangerous and were liable to break out and destroy. He would not allow Kelley to call him "brother," for, said he, "That would put me lower than Christ." Balaam's beast had the Spirit, therefore he was a Saint and a full brother to Kelley, and then he tried to bray like a donkey. "Baptism of the Spirit could not be a permanent element in the church." "Apostles were not given before Jesus ascended." (See Mark 3: 13, 14; Luke 6: 13.) "Apostles are living officially in the church now." "Can not find where Barnabas was an apostle." (Acts 14: 14.) "Paul chosen an apostle in 35 A. D., but not chosen to fill vacancy caused by the death of James who was killed in 44 A. D. (But chronology of the Bible does not show Paul an apostle until 45 A. D., next year after the death of James; see Acts 13: 1-4; 14: 14.) "Comforter to the apostles only." "Jesus Christ will never reign on earth." (See Job 19: 25; Zechariah 14: 5-9; Revelation 5: 10; 20: 4-6.)

"Timothy an uninspired man." (See 1 Timothy 4: 14; 2 Timothy 1: 6-14.) "The learned man and the unlearned man spoken of in Isaiah 29: 11, 12; found in 1 Corinthians 1." Asserted that we claimed that all of our church histories were inspired, and then added all the pages in Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Church Histories together to get the number of pages of inspiration claimed by the church. (Showed to be false by Brother Kelley.) "Generation has passed away in which temple in Independence was to have been built." (False.) Read Jeremiah 19: 11; to prove that Jerusalem would never be built up again. (Kelley showed by several prophecies that the interpretation was false and that the city would be built up again after the destruction in 70 A. D., and that the Jews would gather back and be planted in their own land, no more to be "pulled up out of their land, saith the Lord thy God." (See Amos 9: 14, 15; Ezekiel 37: 21-25.)

"No increase of rain in Palestine and the Jews are not gathering back to that land." (Kelley showed by unmistakable evidence that there had been an increase of rain and that the land is fruitful in Palestine, and that the Jews are gathering back to that land; and that, too, in fulfillment of many Bible prophecies since the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. "Kelley admitted the Book of Mormon came from the Devil." (False again.) Read a purported affidavit from Peter Ingersoll which represented Joseph Smith saying that he had the "damn fools fixed and that he would carry out the fun." "Principles of the doctrine of Christ in Hebrews 6 has reference to the law of Moses." "Revelation ceased by divine appointment." "Book of Mormon teaches polygamy on page 116." "Revelation on the war fixed up by Mormons after Joseph Smith's death." "If that was true, which I do not admit," said Kelley in reply, "it was put in print in 1851, nine years before the Rebellion, and it came to pass just as stated, hence the prophecy is true." But Joseph Smith did utter such a prophecy, as we have several important evidences to show. In the work of John Hyde, published in 1857, he cites a statement from Joseph Smith made on April 6, 1843, concerning this matter, showing that Joseph Smith declared publicly the place where it would begin and the cause: "I prophesy in the name of the Lord God, that the commencement of the difficulties which will cause much bloodshed, previous to the coming of the Son of Man, will be in South Carolina (it probably may arise through the slave question); this a voice declared to me while I was praying earnestly on the subject, December 25, 1832."—Mormonism, by Elder Hyde, p. 174; Church History, vol. 1, p. 263.

We have several statements that were made during the lifetime of Joseph Smith to the effect that he prophesied of the events that are spoken of in the revelation, and it began to come to pass at the rebellion of South Carolina, and after many days slaves did rise up against their masters, who were marshaled and disciplined for war. Over one hundred and seventy-five thousand colored troops were marshaled for war against the South and over fifty-two thousand of them were from the territory not included in the emancipation proclamation, which shows they were not free men, and every nation upon earth has been involved in war since the rebellion of South Carolina.

Brother Kelley not only showed by statistics that every nation had been involved in war, but that there had been an increase of earthquakes, etc., as indicated in the prophecy. Roberts said there had been earthquakes all along and to prophesy of earthquakes was no evidence that Joseph Smith was a true prophet. Kelley said there had been earthquakes right along before Jesus came and he had prophesied of earthquakes when he came, and so did John the Revelator. So if the prophecy of earthquakes would prove Joseph Smith a false prophet, it would prove that Jesus and John were false prophets on the same principle. So he did not have any more to say about earthquakes, but Kelley showed that there has been a great increase of earthquakes since 1832, and that it was an evidence that Joseph Smith was a true prophet.

"Jews waded blood knee-deep a few years ago in one of the Eastern nations." "Moroni wrote upon the hole," and Roberts offered to let anyone in the audience have his pencil to write upon a hole. "Young Joseph said that his father lied." "Oliver Cowdery denied his testimony to the Book of Mormon and joined the Methodist Church." "Joseph Smith found the manuscript of Spalding." "Church established on Pentecost." "A. Campbell was the president of a robbing and thieving institution." "The Church of Christ was restored by Luther, Wesley, and A. Campbell." "Church went into the wilderness in 567 A. D., and remained in the wilderness twelve hundred and sixty years, and was restored in 1827 A. D., by A. Campbell, when they organized the first congregation, at which time there was a complete return to the word of God."

He said A. Campbell restored the church, but denied that he established the church, and then challenged Kelley to produce one statement from one of his brethren who had ever claimed that A. Campbell established the church. Kelley then read a statement from Daniel Sommer, one of their chief men and editor of the Octographic Review, that A. Campbell did establish the church, and thus met him with a statement from the mouth of their chief leader, as wide and as broad as the challenge; but Roberts said that was unworthy of notice and just went right on with his noise and silly talk. But the people saw the point in spite of his silliness. He read an affidavit by one W. L. Crowe to the effect that Benjamin Winchester, an elder in the old church, said to Crowe that Joseph the Martyr was a polygamist and a very bad man. Winchester said that Crowe lied. See article in HERALD for January 24, 1906, under the heading of "W. L. Crowe exposed," which contains a refutation of the Crowe affidavit. I was prepared to refute it when I met Crowe in debate at Shaw, Kansas, had he brought it up, but he did not have the cheek to bring it up there and try to defend it in public, but he let Roberts have it, who, as Bro. W. H. Kelley says, is toting it around with which to make merry with his friends, deceiving and being deceived.

Bro. C. J. Hunt furnished a refutation of the Crowe affidavit to both HERALD and Ensign, but Roberts was silly enough to try to make it appear that it had been gotten up since his debate with S. W. L. Scott. The facts in the case are, it was published in the HERALD nearly three years ago and Brother Hunt furnished me with a copy before it was ever printed in the church papers. Men can not down the Book of Mormon and the latter-day prophet. Joseph Smith was a prophet of God and we can defend him as easily as we can defend Moses, Isaiah, Joel, or John the Revelator, or any of God's ancient prophets.

One rule of the debate said that if either party resorts to personal abuse of his opponent or his opponent's brethren, it shall be taken as evidence that he can not maintain his position by fair argument. Roberts did abuse his opponent and his opponent's brethren a great deal of the time during both debates, hence went down in defeat on that ground as well as on other ground. He claimed the oil spoken of in James 5: 14, was olive oil, but that oil was not used in connection with healing the sick or working miracles (see Mark 6: 13); but he claimed elm bark or fat meat or a mush poultice would do just as well as the oil that James referred to with which to anoint the sick.

I have not the time to write up all the silly things that he used, but I only refer to a few and also to a few of his assertions and false statements without giving any reply from the other side for lack of space, but there is one truth which Roberts told in that debate which I was glad to hear him tell, and which I am pleased to mention here, and that was repeating a statement to the audience that Brother Kelley had written in a letter to Dr. J. F. Love to the effect that in case Roberts held the debate it would not be worth publishing in book form. That was one time he represented his opponent correctly.

He tried to mock Kelley in every way that he could. He would bray like a donkey and he would open his mouth wide and bow his head and try to mimic a sick person while vomiting, both in noise and actions, thus trying to mock Joseph Smith at the time he vomited after being poisoned. Sometimes he would hallo, "O Joseph! Joseph!" almost as loud as he could several times, then put his handkerchief over his face and cry out like a person heartbroken, and weeping bitterly over the loss of some dear friend, apparently trying to mock the friends of the prophet who were mourning and weeping over his body when it was brought to Nauvoo for burial.

The propositions discussed are as follows: The church with which J. F. Love stands identified, known as "The Church of Christ," is a human institution and unapostolic in faith, name, organization, and doctrine. Joseph Smith was an impostor and the Book of Mormon a fraud. Kelley affirmed the first and Roberts the latter proposition. When Kelley would make a clear-cut argument and back it up by a plain passage from the Bible, Roberts would mention another verse and would begin to browbeat and ridicule his opponent because he did not quote that.

He harped on this in Book of Mormon, first book of Nephi 5: 48: "They crucify the God of Israel." Therefore the book is a fraud because it claimed God was crucified instead of Christ. Isaiah 9: 6 says, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father." In Matthew 1: 23, we read, "Behold a virgin shall bring forth a son and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is God with us." These and others were brought forth to convince the people that Christ was called God in the Bible as well as in the Book of Mormon, but Roberts went right on with his ridicule and abuse. But he could not cover up the facts from the minds of intelligent people.

Roberts was so reckless that he even stated that A. Campbell was the president of a robbing and thieving institution, yet he claimed that Campbell restored the church, and so Brother Kelley defended the character of Campbell as well as the character of Joseph Smith against the unsupported statements of this braggart. Our cause was ably defended by Brother Kelley and he would have done much better if the other side had brought forth arguments instead of so much silly talk and abuse. Kelley quoted 1 Corinthians 12: 7: "But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal." Roberts said it did not mean that, but the opposite. Our cause is not hurt by reason of the conflict, but the Saints as a rule are feeling well in the work.

My debate that was to have taken place at McKenzie in August with the Baptist, did not take place because Baptist man did not appear. Hopefully in the gospel work.

F. M. SLOVER.

HITEMAN, IOWA, November 18, 1909.

Dear Herald: The Hiteman Branch was organized May 30, 1894, with sixteen members, by High Priest William Anderson and Joseph Snively, William Anderson being district president. Bro. William Loach and the writer were ordained priests the same day; Bro. William Loach being its first president. The following named brethren have served in that capacity since then: Morgan Lewis, John R. Evans, Edward Rowley, W. E. Williams, and William Wilson, who is now serving. From sixteen members the branch grew till it numbered about seventy members, then a scattering took place, leaving the branch for a while without any male members. Bro. John R. Evans, of the missionary force, was appointed president, and with the aid of some noble sisters the work was held intact. Afterward some Saints moved in and with baptisms the branch now numbers one hundred and seventy.

The missionary brethren who have labored here are R. M. Elvin, John R. Evans, William Anderson, Joseph Snively, John Smith, John Garver, M. M. Turpen, John Harp, Charles Harpe, E. B. Morgan, Paul M. Hanson, John S. Roth, R. S. Salyards, and probably others, all doing a good work. The branch has not been without its trials, but what branch has been entirely free from them? We are pleased to say the branch is now in a good condition. Quite a number have been baptized within the last three years. Our Sunday school and Religio and Sisters' Aid Society are doing a good work and are presided over by Srs. Mary Miller, David J. Williams, and Sr. Harriet Dooms, respectively. May God's blessing attend our auxiliaries and inspire those in charge with the sacredness and beauty of the work intrusted to them, as they are helps in the kingdom of God.

Two Utah elders came here last month and asked for the use of our church building to preach in, which was granted them with the understanding that we expected to reply to them. They preached two nights. We were fortunate to have Bro. E. B. Morgan here to answer them. He occupied two nights in his reply. The names of the Utah elders are Pare and Bunderson, the man Pare doing the preaching. This man Pare is the best posted Utah elder it has been my privilege to hear. It would be well if all elders of the Reorganization, whether traveling or local, would keep themselves posted on differences between the churches. Many of the Utah elders in years past have said they were not as well posted on church history as we were, but now it seems that some of them are reading and informing themselves, and from their deductions think they are able to meet us. I believe we can truthfully say the work did not suffer at the hands of Brother Morgan. Brother Morgan, I believe, fully justified our position, though as he said, two nights was a short time to answer so many questions. Our brother is fully informed and posted on these things and it would be hard to get a man better acquainted with the differences. In honor to the Utah men it should be said they acted honorably; their deportment was excellent and undoubtedly their zeal is commendable, worthy a better cause. I would like to see them all convinced of the errors of their position.

May God bless the angel message and all those engaged in its promulgation. I feel to bear witness again that this work is of God, because of the many evidences given me of its divinity. May we live as God desires us to live that we may obtain all he has promised.

Your brother in the faith,
W. E. WILLIAMS.

Israel Astray.

Whatever may be written in these articles touching the above caption it is not with a spirit of acrimony, enmity, or a detestable feeling we have for estrayed Israel, for in our very soul we sympathize with and pity the thousands of honest-hearted souls who are priest-ridden and tithe-burdened under an exacting, mathematical, Brighamite priesthood, which filches from the poor, unsuspecting dupe fully twenty per cent of his hard earnings to keep in affluence and wealth a score or more of "noiseless prophets" and well dressed gentlemen. The average tithe payer not only pays ten per cent of gross earnings, but pays contributions to his meeting house, various church organizations, contributes to mission funds, and not infrequently maintains a son or relative in the field. This enormous tax and constant drain is eating into the very vitals of the system, and while it teaches "true humanity" it is impoverishing the dupe, blasting his hopes, and destroying his ambition, and many who have for years quietly submitted are now openly avowing it is only to the end that a chosen few may gloat over gold and live in luxury. That our brethren may see the seeds of destruction that are sown in this as well as in other ways, that are slowly but surely rushing them on to their doom, is the only object of this series.

The municipal election of recent date resulted in the complete overthrow and defeat of the church power, almost a thousand majority for the Gentile mayor, and all the councilmen save two were elected. The church forces, Republicans and Democrats, by command of church diction, "fused" in order to defeat the "wicked Gentiles"; but all to no purpose. The city is now thoroughly under Gentile control, which evinces the fact that when brethren are in the "booth" they will vote against their "taskmasters," whereas in the open they dare not oppose.

It is apparent to the younger element that the older and the leaders of the church, are living in violation of the law of the State and of God as interpreted by the manifesto, and those that are disregarding the law should be responsible for its enforcement, but instead they are direct lawbreakers themselves or are very friendly to those that are. In some States of this Union conditions such as exist here are bids for the rope of the lyncher or the torch of the incendiary; the only safe course is obedience to the law of the land and there will be no need of breaking the law of God. No man is big enough to decide for himself whether he will or will not obey the law, and the bigger the man who assumes such prerogatives the greater the harm to the community; for if one has the right to ignore the law others will try to do the same. We believe this to be the darkest apostasy the world has ever seen, and the most cunningly devised fables that were ever hatched by Satan have been in order to keep the honest in heart blinded to the real facts. The forces placed in motion by the divine hand can not be ignored or turned down with impunity. Prenatal conditions are doing their work here. Slowly but surely the microbes of destruction are already located in the very vitals of this cunningly devised fable. The mother that bore the child and dare not express her contempt and hatred for such a system under the fear of threatened mortal and eternal destruction, has marked her child with eternal hatred against such a religion. One particular case in point will illustrate hundreds that exist: A man who, holding a responsible position, having passed through the temple and received his endowments, and still a member of the church, whose father was a polygamist, in speaking of the unpleasant conditions that prevailed in the family, gnashed his teeth, clenched his fists, with eyes that gleamed with passionate hatred, and declared under the most curdling oaths that it was all a fraud from beginning to end, and that he would fight it as long as he lived. The knitted brow, the distorted face, the angry eye, the blasphemous words, and the hatred expressed are the result of the expression and condition of that much abused wife and mother, when her Lord would say, "My dear, I will have to go over to my other family to-night." And thus the younger element, hundreds of them, are virtually skeptics, agnostics, and infidels. There is really no love for God, Christ, or his gospel in their hearts. However, a man is not measured for his moral worth, but by his commercial value, and if up to "standard" no crime in the calendar will turn him out of the church.

News From Branches

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

New Albany Saints are still on the move. While our numbers increase slowly we can see a rapid increase spiritually. God's Spirit has been with us on several occasions of late, and has comforted many. There is a marked tendency on the part of all to do their part. Brother Jaegers, who was baptized in July, coming to us from the Catholic Church, was spoken to by the Spirit on last Wednesday night at prayer meeting, and we think he has an important work to do in God's cause. Our preparation for a nice Christmas eve is encouraging, as the Sunday school is arranging a fine program. The Religio work is progressing nicely and we can certainly thank God for what he has helped us to accomplish in the past two years in raising up a nice branch here. May many honest souls yet unite with us in our earnest prayer.

Convention Minutes.

District Sunday school convention met at Higbee, Missouri, September 24, 1909, with Superintendent P. J. Raw in the chair. Bro. William Chapman and Sr. Ellen Davis were chosen as the credential committee. Bevier and Higbee Sunday schools reported. Report of the home class superintendent was read and accepted. Adjourned to meet at the call of the district officers. Willie May Chapman, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Let all who contemplate attending the district conference and convention at Ribstone, Alberta, from the east take notice that they must come on the Grand Trunk Pacific and get off at Edgerton. Teams will convey them to Ribstone. The train leaves South Saskatoon at 7.40 a. m. and arrives at Edgerton at 2.47 p. m. on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays only. Mixed trains get here the same day, lying over night at Biggar. Those coming from the west must leave Edmonton at 8 a. m. Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, stay over night at Warrington and arrive at Edgerton at 8.20 the following morning. I am further authorized by T. J. Jordan, president, to state that Thursday, December 30, will be occupied by Religio work, Friday with Sunday school, and Saturday and Sunday with conference work. Let all who expect to come advise me as to what day they will come so they can be met and cared for. H. J. Davison, Edgerton, Alberta, locating committee.

The Sunday school-Religio convention will meet at Saint Joseph, Missouri, at Seventeenth and Faraon streets, on January 8 and 9, 1910, at 10 a. m. Let all secretaries of both auxiliaries see to getting reports in early to the respective secretaries. We expect to have a general worker there to instruct. It will be necessary to choose delegates from both auxiliaries to the General Convention. Also election of officers of both, as well as other business. Come everybody. Carrie M. Lewis, District Sunday school superintendent; B. R. Constance, District Religio president.

The first district Sunday school convention of Southern Indiana District will convene at 2.30 p. m., January 1, 1910, at New Albany, Indiana. Five schools have already joined the association since its organization, and we trust to have reports and representation from all, in order to get our work established in full before spring. Delegates will be elected to the General Convention and officers of the district will be chosen for the year. John Zahnd, superintendent.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints of South Dakota; Greeting: The year will soon be gone with its opportunities to do good by aiding in the financial part of church work. Has a loving Father blessed and prospered you? What have you done for his work? Have you thought of the aged, the poor, and the missionaries' families, for which your tithes and offerings are mainly used? Do not postpone this important matter. God knows of your ability and desires to give. Our record for good is made up of deeds, not broken promises. I would like to have a Christmas offering from each child. Parents should encourage and help their children in so worthy a work.

Send to my home address, Independence, Missouri, 709 South Fuller Avenue.

EDWARD RANNIE, Bishop's Agent.

December 2, 1909.

HOW DO YOU LOOK?

Not as to your physical face, but your spiritual deportment and obedience as reflected in from the gospel looking-glass. James 1: 23-25 informs us that as some are hearers and not doers of the word, they are forgetful of their looks and as to the manner of men they are. But that those who so "looketh into the perfect law of liberty and continueth therein, not a forgetful hearer, but a doer" of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed. The deed we now want to remind you of is the payment of tithes, offerings, consecrations, etc., which is a part of the gospel or perfect law; and if a part of the perfect law, you have not rendered a perfect obedience if you have been a forgetful hearer, and you can not be blessed in this deed (tithing) until you have been a doer of the work. In the 27th verse we are told "To visit the fatherless and widow in their affliction," is pure religion. One purpose of such visit should be to minister to their financial needs, and how unless we comply with the financial law? For if they are left to individual ministrations, some are apt to be neglected and suffer.

Some withhold their substance because things do not suit them. For the same reason we might get out of the church, for we are not all suited with all things done. Some object to allowances for the ministers' families. Will you tell us of a better way? The writer, his sister, and mother suffered physically, were cold and an hungered in a good live branch (?) most of two years, while our father was on a foreign mission. Why? For the reason that in 1875 to 1877 no allowances were made. Few paid tithes, the home Saints had no rule. "What was everybody's business was nobody's business." While there were one thousand acres of timber within five miles of us owned by Saints, yet we suffered for wood and mother at one time paid her last dollar for a load of green wood to warm us. No method. Fifty-five dollars in cash from good Bishop Rogers was all we had from headquarters.

Hence we judge knowingly when we say that while there may be faults in present system, it is the best possible under present conditions. The man who withholds his tithes to-day is either unconverted, or seeking an excuse. The latter is the most inexcusable; the first should receive the admonition given to Peter: "When thou art converted strengthen thy brethren." So take another look into the perfect law and see if "thou lackest one thing yet."

The year 1909 is near its close. We have made the best record ever recorded in this Little Sioux District. But did you help make it? One hundred and sixty seven out of a possible 1200 payers have sent in $3,750.00, an average of more than $22 for each one on our books. This is fine for the 167; but what of the more than 1000 who have not responded? We have maintained the district expenses and allowances and have sent Bishop Kelley $2,500.00. Did you help? If not, was it because you were forgetful? We have no complaint to make on the record of the 167; but what of you? We trust you will take another look and straightway be a doer by sending us your portion in accord with the law.

Your brother,
ALMA M. FYRANDO.

MAGNOLIA, IOWA.

Resolution.

Be it Resolved, First, That we, the members of the Lamoni Branch, do hereby extend an invitation to all branches and members of the church, that see this notice in time, to join with us in fasting and prayer to Almighty God for the morning and noon meals, Sunday, December 19, 1909, in behalf of our beloved but much afflicted president, Joseph Smith.

Second, Let us gather together upon that day in mighty faith, petitioning our heavenly Father to spare him to the church, if his work be not done, and if it be God's will to relieve him from this pain and affliction.

Third, Believing as we do, God does all things for the best and that many times our afflictions are blessings in disguise, let us earnestly pray that if there is a lesson intended for the church or our brother in this affliction, we, together with our brother, be given light and understanding, to speedily learn this lesson; that God may say it is enough, and that where pain and sorrow is now, health and happiness may reign.

But if in God's infinite wisdom he does not see fit to relieve our brother, as we so much desire, let us pray that he with us be given patience, strength, and courage to say, "Thy will, O God, be done."

Fourth, Let us further remember the kind hands that are caring for him, that they may be given strength and such blessings as they need to do all in their power to comfort him who has so long merited our respect and confidence.

Be it further resolved, That our secretary be authorized to send a copy of this resolution to the HERALD and Ensign and request them to publish it.

H. H. GOLD, Secretary.

Died.

WILLIAMSON.—Infant son of Jimmie and Myrtle Williamson, was born August 27, 1909, at South Alabama, and was laid to rest in the Pleasant Hill cemetery near McKenzie, Alabama, August 28, 1909.

WHITEHEAD.—Little George A., son of Bro. Jay S. and Sr. Lucy Whitehead, was born May 17, 1908, at Mexico, New York. Was blessed December 13, by Alma Booker. Died at the home of its parents in East Syracuse, New York, August 8, 1909. Little George was an exceedingly bright boy, but it seemed wisdom with God to call him home to dwell with the redeemed. Funeral from the home; sermon by Alma Booker.

SURDAN.—Thomas J. Surdan was born July 26, 1836, at Virgil Cortland County, New York. Baptized into the Reorganized Church September 10, 1905, by Elder A. B. Phillips. Died November 19, 1909, at his home in Potter County, Pennsylvania. The brother was loved by all who knew him because of his kind disposition. He united with the Greenwood Branch by certificate at its organization, November 6, 1909. The sermon was preached by Alma Booker at the M. E. church in Simerlinville, Pennsylvania.

TREMBLY.—Mrs. Margaret was born in the State of Ohio on December 18, 1839, and died on November 9, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. T. Dodson, near Ingram, Nebraska, after an illness of a complication of diseases. She was baptized by S. D. Paine, August 9, 1896, at Earl, Nebraska. She was married to Nelson Trembly, August 27, 1857, and to this union were born eleven children, eight boys and three girls, four of the boys having died in infancy. All of the other children except C. H. Trembly, of Decatur County, Iowa, were present at the funeral. The funeral sermon was by Elder G. W. Johnson, of Eustis, Nebraska, and the remains were laid to rest in the Plain View Cemetery near Maxwell, Nebraska.

REID.—Harvey R. Reid died at his home in Terlton, Oklahoma, November 16, of typhoid fever. He was born at Augusta, Kansas, October 15, 1880. He moved with his parents to Oklahoma in 1893. He was called home about September 1, on account of the sickness of his father, H. E. Reid, whose death occurred on September 28. He was a member of the Reorganized Church and was faithful to his duty. While in his right mind he talked about being a minister of the gospel when he got well, having been called to the office of deacon but circumstances had prevented his ordination. He leaves a mother, three sisters, and two brothers. The funeral services were held Tuesday and the remains laid to rest, after a short service by Elder A. J. Moore, in the Terlton cemetery.

WEBB.—Dr. E. B. Webb, at his home near Arnett, Oklahoma. He was born in Chautauqua County, New York, 1827; died November 24, 1909. He united with the church about 1865 and died in the faith. Cause of death was heart failure.

KEEN.—Howard Oscar Keen was born October 2, 1888; died November 15, 1909, near Norwood, Iowa. He united with the church August 15, 1909. He leaves a father, mother, four brothers, and three sisters. Two brothers and three sisters preceded him in death. "In his life the example of patience did abound; may this quality in our lives be found."

WOLVERTON.—Mary Catherine Lippincott was born December 4, 1869, in Franklin County, Pennsylvania. She moved to Nebraska with her parents, James and Jane Lippincott, when about eight years old. She was married to George L. Wolverson at Fairmont, Nebraska, February, 20, 1889. To this union five children were born, four of whom, with the husband and father, are left to mourn her departure. She departed this life at Shelton, Nebraska, November 17, 1909. She united with the church June 4, 1897, being baptized by Elder James Stubbart. Funeral services were held at the Baptist church at Shelton, November 19, conducted by Elder C. H. Porter.

HOLMES.—Richard Holmes, son of John and Mary Holmes, was born in Rich Hill, Missouri, June 4, 1889; moved to Roslyn, Washington, with his parents the same year; lived in Roslyn until three years ago, when he and his father went to Seattle, Washington. Richard was taken with typhoid fever and was sick only one week when his spirit took its flight. Died at Roslyn, September 23, 1909. He leaves father, grandmother, several uncles, aunts, cousins, and a host of friends to mourn, his mother preceding him ten years. Funeral discourse was delivered at Roslyn at the home of his grandmother, by Elder D. W. Davis, of Seattle, Washington.

ALVIS.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 24, 1909, Mrs. Elizabeth Alvis. Elizabeth Wood was born March 21, 1857, at Chandler, Indiana. In 1873 she was united in marriage to Mr. Clark Alvis, who preceded her to the other side about five years ago. At the time of his death they were residents of Cincinnati, Ohio, thence she removed to Columbus, Iowa, and about two months before her death she came to Lamoni. She leaves one daughter, Mrs. Thompson, and a grandchild two years old. She was a consistent member of the Methodist Church. Funeral was from the home of her sister, Sr. James Heathman, Elder John Smith in charge, Elder Heman C. Smith preaching the sermon. She was interred in Rose Hill Cemetery.

ESTES.—Lydia Ellen, died at Seattle, Washington, October 7, 1909. She was born at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, October 2, 1850. Was baptized into the Reorganized Church October 4, 1903, by Gomer T. Griffiths; confirmed by the same. She was an earnest, consistent believer unto death, loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves husband, three sons, three daughters, and many warm friends to mourn her decease. Funeral sermon by F. A. Smith, assisted by William Johnson and George W. Thorburn.

O'CONNELL.—At Lamoni, Iowa, November 13, 1909, Bro. Michael T. O'Connell, aged about 79 years. He was born in Ireland, but came to America when seven years old. His parents obeyed the gospel, and so did he at the age of ten. They moved to Nauvoo in 1842, and to Wisconsin in 1845. Later he went to Idaho, and in 1892 came to Lamoni. He held to the faith throughout life, and in 1906 gave his property to the church and entered Saints' Home. By his request Bro. H. A. Stebbins preached the funeral sermon, Bro. James Anderson assisted.

Unchivalrous Chivalry.

We are accustomed to think of the Middle Ages as a period in which women, though denied some of the privileges which are theirs to-day, were nevertheless idealized and revered. Only in part is this romantic tradition true. Chivalry, a system of military manners in vogue from the eleventh to the sixteenth centuries in western Europe, did indeed pretend to encourage the utmost deference towards women. Mr. George Willis Cooke, however, writing in the December Chautauquan, points out that gallantry, courtesy, and sentimental love took the place of the more substantial recognition of the economic and political rights of women.

In his article which is entitled "Women under feudalism and chivalry," Mr. Cooke points out the charm which still lingers over the tradition of the courts of love in Provence. Yet this very chivalry, on the surface so charming, "fostered sentimentalism, formalism and immorality. It injured the virtues and the real merits of women and brought them praise in place of justice." Says Mr. Cooke, "It was well for civilization and for real gallantry when chivalry passed away. The lament that chivalry is dead is a waste of sentiment, for only in its death could woman come to her true development of womanhood and a real influence on society."

Law in the Wilderness.

An officer of the mounted police is not an exponent of the law; he is the law itself. When he rides his cayuse to foot-hill camp or threads on snowshoes the worn north trails of the trapper, he goes clad with the authority of courts. He preserves order, but he also makes arrests; he tries offenders in his own courts, and then escorts the man upon whom sentence has fallen to a prison of his own making, where the law-breaker may be incarcerated for ten days or thirty years. Back of that slight, silent, steel-nerved rider is the strong arm of England and the whole of Canadian jurisprudence, and when he speaks, it is as one with authority. In extreme cases, when the death penalty has to be enforced, one mounted policeman may have to act as clergyman, executioner and coroner.

"All this I swear without any mental evasion, equivocation, or secret reservation. So help me, God,"—with these impressive words do raw recruits and grizzled soldiers enter the service of the mounted police and swear fidelity to his majesty, Edward VII. It is not prospective wealth that tempts a man to become an empire-builder in this mounted force of Greater Canada, "for hard is her service, poor her payment."

The newly recruited constable gets sixty cents a day, his term of engagement is five years, and he may look forward to reengagement on a second term, with a staff-sergeant's pay of from one to one dollar and fifty cents a day to work up to. Recruits must be between the ages of twenty-two and forty, active men of thoroughly sound constitution and possessed of certificates of exemplary character. They must be able to read or write in either English or French, understand horses, ride well, measure up to the minimum height of five feet eight inches, have a chest measurement of thirty-five inches, weigh not over one hundred and seventy-five pounds, and be unencumbered with a wife.—Agnes Deans Cameron in the Christmas Century.

A Master of the Art of News-Letter Writing.

William E. Curtis, the famous correspondent of The Chicago Record-Herald, probably has a more enviable position and is read by more men and women daily than any other newspaper writer in the United States. He can go anywhere in the world and write on any live topic that he chooses, so long as he interests his hundreds of thousands of readers. He has traveled several times around the world and written entertainingly about almost every country under the sun.

Every day in the year, without vacation or intermission, Mr. Curtis has a two-column letter in THE RECORD-HERALD. The remarkable thing about these letters is their power to interest all classes of readers. Women read them with the same enjoyment as men. Whether the subject be politics, travels, a new kink in the Monroe doctrine, an interview with the newest money king, or the personal history of an Egyptian mummy, the story is always told with a limpid simplicity and an unflinching sense of interest that keeps one reading to the end. No other correspondent now living can match the record of Mr. Curtis as a popular purveyor of timely and useful information. Whether he writes from his home in Washington or from the wilds of Mexico, from the gay streets of Paris or some remote temple in India, he always has something fresh and entertaining to tell.

Mr. Curtis began his newspaper career in Chicago as a reporter in 1872, speedily became a managing editor, resigned to serve as secretary of a government commission sent to South America, and fulfilled his duties so brilliantly there that Secretary James G. Blaine placed him at the head of the new bureau of American republics. He is almost as widely known in South America and Europe as in the United States. At the world's fair in Chicago he was the executive head of the Latin-American department. He is a member of almost every learned society in Washington and many in Europe.

Nobody outside of The Record-Herald office knows under what flag Mr. Curtis will next be hanging up his hat, but everybody knows that, whether in be in Patagonia or Kamchatka, he will find something interesting to write about. Merely to read his daily news-letters is a liberal education. He does his full share toward making The Chicago Record-Herald the best home newspaper in the West.

OPENING OF THE SANITARIUM.

Dedicatory prayer by Joseph Luff:

Creator of the heavens and the earth, of the sea and the fountains of waters. Essentially thou art God. Thy attributes are divine, thy resources infinite. All of thy works proclaim thy majesty, and stir us to reverence as we contemplate them, as they come within the range of our impression or vision. And yet with this immensity of revelation before us, we desire to avail ourselves of the privilege given to us in the direction and counsel of the Spirit, and of thy Son Jesus Christ, to address thee as "Our Father who art in heaven." For we believe it to be the more appropriate on this occasion, as under the regime of thy paternal regard this

I ask, O Lord, that thou wilt accept this building at our hands. It expresses the faith of thy people. It carries with it the evidences of their willingness to sacrifice at thy behest, and bears in itself the testimony that indeed we love thee rather than the concerns that pertain merely to this life alone.

We humbly ask in Jesus' name that thou wilt so manifest thy regard and approval for the service thus rendered, that thou wilt indite the prayer that is now being breathed with reference to it, that those who shall be in charge of the interests to be served and subserved within its walls, shall be made conscious from day to day that there is coming into their lives, their hearts, their intellects, and into their nervous being, a helpfulness of divinity, nerving them for the duties devolving upon them, and qualifying them by faith to look forward and expect a divine benediction in attestation of the work that they perform. Grant, we pray, that whosoever house has been ordered and we feel ourselves closest thus to the pulsations of thy heart, and we feel within ourselves the vibrations that assure us of our welcome as children into thy presence.

Believing it to be a direction of divine grace, and that a revelation has been given to that end, this house has been builded to thine honor, and I, as thy humble servant, have been asked to hand it over to thee formally, by prayer, in the presence of this people and thus to dedicate it. I ask in the name of the Matchless One whom thou has given to us as Redeemer and Friend, by which to be brought near to thee, that thou wilt inspire me to do it in a manner to be approved by thee, and not only be of interest but of divine benefit to those who shall be affected by the influences that grow out of the service thus rendered to thee in the name of thy Son, shall be brought to receive ministrations within these walls shall immediately be made to feel that the atmosphere surrounding them in this place has been sanctified by the presence of God, of his angels, and the operation of his Spirit. That whosoever shall be called upon to officiate in the sacred ordinance of thy house, as they stretch forth their hands to lay them on the afflicted person, or to pour the oil that has been consecrated to that end on the head of the individual in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, may receive unto themselves the evidence of thy favorable regard for this service rendered, and may find the evidences of the truthfulness of that statement made by the Son of God himself, "I will be with you to the end of the world," manifesting itself in signs following the believer, and the sick being healed among the rest. That whosoever shall come to serve as officials and in the capacity of medical advisers or directors, together with those whom they bring here, or those whom they come to wait upon, shall receive at their hands a service which, supplemented by thy divine power, shall prove to them that the circumstances of the erection of this house and dedicating it to God was not in common with ordinary events of life, but one upon which God had condescended to put his peculiar blessing and allow the favorable influences of his operative grace to attend and be manifest from time to time.

Grant that whosoever shall wait upon the sick—the attendants, the nurses—or whosoever shall come as visitors to offer a word of comfort or advice or suggestion, or whoever in any capacity that may be considered by human mind more menial than this, from the roof above to the floor beneath, shall be moved upon, whether consciously or unconsciously to them, by a grace so distinctly divine, as shall enable them to perform with accuracy and pleasure the work devolving upon them. Grant, we humbly beseech of thee, Lord, that from this day things may be so ordered within it, until its doors shall no longer need to be open for such purposes, or until thou thyself shall declare it to be unnecessary, that a continuous, uninterrupted stream of that which indicates thine immediate presence in coöperation with those here serving shall be dispensed, which shall give free and vigorous witness to the thought that in dedicating this house to thee we did that which is in accordance with thy will.

Thus, Lord God, we ask thy blessing upon directors, upon nurses, upon attendants in whatever capacity, upon elders, upon those in charge and the associate ones with them, and may divine grace so be and abide among them and with them and in their interest that those on whom they may be attending may be stirred by the evidences confronting them to the consciousness that more than human agency is surrounding them, and that it is a good thing to bring here those who need attention because they have divine consideration and blessing that is not common to the ordinary environments of the world or of life.

Regard us in this petition, and make record of it in heaven, and may it constantly be in thy sight and mind. Bear in mind those chosen to represent thee in this work by thine own will and who have consecrated themselves to this service, with the determination that so long as thou shalt give intimation of thy grace and assurance of thine approval, they will so devote themselves, without selfish hope of human reward or without consideration of anything that appeals alone to the carnal mind; but who seek as first duty, like their Master, to bless others as opportunity shall occur.

Oh, God, accept this offering, bless its walls, bless it from the foundation to the cap stone, bless all who shall be associated with it, and sanctify its administration from beginning to end. Accept this building at our hands, and consecrate it to thine own ends, and if we have failed in mentioning in our petition anything that may be essential to its completest success, fail thou not in adding because of our defect.

Thus petitioning, oh, Lord, we present to thee this expression and testimony of our sacrifice and love, in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The formal opening of the Sanitarium occurred at Independence, December 15. The exercises were conducted in the reception room of the first floor of the Sanitarium, under the direction of President Frederick M. Smith. Keen interest in the institution drew a large crowd that overflowed into adjoining rooms and occupied every available foot of space on stairways and in hallways and corridors.

The meeting was called to order at half past two o'clock and the Independence choir sang, "Guide us, O thou great Jehovah." The opening prayer was offered by Bro. W. H. Garrett, of the Independence Stake Presidency. Bishop E. L. Kelley made the opening speech. It is proposed to publish a pamphlet giving a complete report of the entire proceedings. At present we can give only partial reports of the speeches made. In part Bishop Kelley said:

This institution I understand is made and builded for the purpose of accommodating, first, those of our own faith who need and want to have its accommodations. It is similar to our Saints' Homes or Old People's Homes. We made the condition in the outset a number of years ago, that in building these homes, they were, first, for good and worthy members who did not have any means of making a home for themselves, and who were needy and ought to have such a place. Second, they were for those individuals who were good and worthy members who had means, but had no proper or satisfactory place for themselves, but could furnish a place with their own means. Those who have neither means, nor way of providing themselves homes, they were the first to be admitted. Then the second. And the third, in order, is any individual who shall need, whether he is a member of the church or not. These come in as the third class; that is, the others have the preference when all can not be accommodated, and all of you will readily see they should have in an institution thus builded.

In the building of this institution there has been gathered and expended by the church altogether the sum in building and grounds of $52,854.28. The offerings that were made directly for this purpose amount to $34,323.38, and the income that was brought in by the sale of certain timber that was cut on the land here and the sale of brick, etc., material that was left over, amounted to $437.34, making a total of $34,760.72. This, together with what the church furnished directly, has paid for the institution, so that there is not one cent of indebtedness upon the building nor upon the grounds. We start then to-day in this situation. There has been donated the present year, in addition to this, as offerings for the purpose of furnishing this institution, the sum of $2,345.43.

Mayor Jones of Independence followed in a speech expressing earnest and we believe sincere appreciation of the institution. He stated that the city would be glad to use the operating room in emergency cases, as heretofore no such institution has been available.

The choir rendered an anthem after which Elder Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, read an historical sketch of the movement that had led up to the completed structure. This paper will be printed in full in our next issue.

Following Bro. Heman's paper Elder Joseph Luff, Physician to the church, offered the dedicatory prayer, a remarkably inspirational effort that touched the hearts of those present.

Srs. Myra Brackenbury and Violet Hughes sang a duet, and Elder Elbert A. Smith followed in a speech dealing with the present movement toward combining physical and spiritual methods in the treatment of the sick.

Brother Luff spoke at this juncture in part as follows:

I confess to you that it is not without some misgivings that I finally consented to accept the position to which I have been appointed, and as some of those who are present will bear me witness, they did not receive that consent until day before yesterday. For three years and a half, or three years since last April—notwithstanding my avowed readiness to do what I believed was the will of God, I have held that in assuming responsibility of this kind, or of any grave importance, that purported to any degree to be under the direction of God, the individual whose life was involved therein was at least entitled to some token from God in support of that appointment, witnessing its approval to him. I did not receive that until the day before yesterday, hence I had notified the brethren that I should have nothing whatever to do with the Sanitarium, and never withdrew that statement from them until Monday.

I shall not go into any details with reference to what changed my mind, but simply satisfy you by saying my mind was illuminated to the degree that enabled me to look out and see a policy for the institution that had not been before outlined, as I had understood it, and that the peculiarities that characterized my attitude as a professional man and that distinguished me from most, if not all others, was indeed one of the considerations why I had been selected, there being other reasons besides that. I want to say to you to-day that I can only bring into the management and conduct of the affairs of this institution the knowledge I possess or may acquire. I can not use any other man's intellect and education, only in the sense that I can assimilate it. I am, as is known to you all, and I state it plainly, a homeopath, by profession. It is true as has been said, that there is no intention in the establishment of this institution to indorse any particular school of medicine or anything of that kind; but I wish it understood by all that so far as my jurisdiction goes, there can be nothing else. I know nothing else. I could not practice anything but homeopathy if I would. I would not if I could. My friend here, Doctor Wood, if he were in charge, would not make this a homeopathic institution. He could not if he would. He would not if he could. He differs from me. To the extent that my rule and government reaches this is to be recognized. I hold it as I hold my religion—sacred. Thirty-five years ago I accepted the faith of this society and left a more popular church in my native town of Toronto, Canada, of which I had been a representative. After careful thought and study I started out on my career as a representative of the faith I now profess with this thought before me: that for every prayer I offered, every sermon I would deliver, every ceremonial observance in which I was participant or to which I voluntarily consented, I should have to eventually make answer to God, and I resolved on entering upon missionary work that would take me most probably from one extreme of the United States to the other, that when it came to a question that necessitated decision on my part as between the pleasure of God and the pleasing of men, if I could secure the pleasure of God and the good will of my brethren at the same time, by any single act that might seem to be called for at my hands, well and good; but that the consideration of pleasing God should be made paramount in my life, and if both points could not be gained, I would thus decide, then let results follow as they would.

I accept this work with that thought to-day. My first thought is to make this a spiritual house. My first duty in it is as a minister and servant of Jesus Christ. My second business will be to perform and direct such medical services as I believe can be consistently supplementary to the great divine thought as I have been made to digest it and assimilate it within myself, and as I shall have wisdom given to me to comprehend it—this, I believe, is corroborated of what was given to the President of the church.

Of my brother here, my professional friends, or any other medical friends in this city or other places who shall be permitted to bring patients into the building, the question shall never be asked, What is your religious convictions or leaning? with any view to interference. The patients will always be asked if there is a preference in a medical line, and whom they prefer to wait upon them, and whoever shall be called for by them shall have the fullest liberty in that line, and all the facilities of this institution shall be placed subject to their legitimate requirements in order to help them to make a success, to the extent possible of the services that are being rendered. And if individuals shall come here of different faith to that held by those who builded this house and which shall be here represented in general, and they shall require the services of ministers, whether it be of the Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, or any other denomination, every facility within this institution so far as I have jurisdiction will be put at their disposal that they may be enabled to secure whatever consolation they believe to be available to them under the religion they have espoused. To the extent to which I shall officiate, my ministrations shall be only that belonging to the peculiar religious and medical belief which I represent. Could it be any other? The responsibility of that which differs from it, rests and rests entirely with those who make other selection. Every dose of medicine given, every application external, every operation performed within these walls under my direction, or by my counsel, will, I believe, confront me by and by, and I did not consider the assumption of position as minister in the church thirty-five years ago as a matter of any greater importance than I do the acceptance of this appointment to-day. I hope by the grace of God to so move that I can keep that thought in view always, and never prescribe on paper or orally or never consent within these walls to the performance of anything without first satisfying myself that the reason that moved me to that performance will be acceptable to God when I offer them to him at last. That is my hope. My position.

Dr. N. P. Wood was the next speaker. Evidently Doctor Wood has had experience as a speaker and he kept his hearers in a happy state of mind. He expressed satisfaction at the broad spirit of toleration that he had observed.

Dr. Joseph Mather read a carefully prepared paper that was full of good thought and won favorable attention.

Mr. William Southern, jr., editor of the Independence Examiner, made the closing speech. He relieved the gravity and tedium of a long session with numerous flashes of wit, making good natured drives at physicians, lawyers, editors, and everyone in general.

Altogether, the exercises, under the skillful direction of Bro. Fred M., passed off in splendid form, and both Saints and nonmembers went away very favorably impressed.

The trustees of the Sanitarium are F. M. Smith, E. L. Kelley, George Harrington, George H. Hilliard, Ellis Short, Roderick May, and Joseph Luff. Dr. Joseph Luff will take charge immediately as medical director and will select the board of physicians. The board of physicians will pass upon all applicants.

PROPHECY DELIVERED BY ELDER JOHN SMITH.

The following prophecy was given through Elder John Smith, President of the Lamoni Stake, at a union prayer meeting held in the basement of the Brick Church, at Lamoni, Iowa, November 24, 1909. It was the evening before Thanksgiving Day. A good Spirit was present and we feel that our readers will be interested in the prophecy:

My spirit is burdened to-night, and the Lord says that his promises are yea and amen to them that believe in him.

I have taught my people that I could be found through fasting and prayer. This should be done with fervency of spirit and with true faith, which is acceptable unto me. And it is not pleasing to me, your heavenly Father, that there should be so much indifference. I am daily bestowing my blessings upon my children while danger is moving fast among the children of men. The pages of the history of the past are black with disaster and suffering, but this is nothing compared to what the future will bring, because wicked men are waxing worse in the world, seeking the lives of their fellow-men, and danger lurks upon every hand, and according to the promises of my gospel your only safety is in keeping my commandments. My soul yearns for your diligent service in my work. I have heard your prayers in the past, I have blessed your sick, I have prospered you in the affairs of your labors in business according to my promises, and yet many of my children have forgot my kindness to them. O, I would call upon you as a loving father, as a tender parent, that your hearts may be turned wholly unto me, and that you may remember that there is no safety save in keeping my commandments and doing my will; and no matter whatever danger may threaten, even should you lose your life in the keeping of my commandments, your reward is sure before me.

Never forget, therefore, my dear children, that the loving Spirit is still waiting to enter into your hearts, if you will open and let him in and keep my commandments. Be ye therefore faithful and diligent. My work shall go on though wickedness shall increase, and suffering, disaster, and turmoil shall fill the land and the homes of the people with sorrow; yet those who are faithful to me shall win the eternal crown. The time is coming, yea, near, and that is why I am urging it upon my people, when the cry shall be heard, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh." But many have grown careless, many are growing indifferent, many for whom I have the richest blessings. But now is the day of salvation. Now is the opportunity of your life and I plead with you, by all the powers that I can send upon my children, that you will listen to my commandments, give heed to my servants, seek to do my will and keep my commandments, and my blessings shall rest upon you.

Seek not to make light of the manifestations of my Spirit, because the purpose for which I have placed them in the church is to edify, to comfort, to instruct, and to strengthen them, and only by this and by their faithfulness before me shall my people and my loved ones be able to overcome. Amen.

SANITATION AND CIVIC PRIDE.

Despite the cold weather a good sized crowd attended the lecture by Rev. F. M. Smith, at the court-house Thursday evening. Reverend Smith took for his subject "Sanitation and civic pride," and he handled the subject in a manner indicating that he had great knowledge along that line. The lecture was illustrated throughout with scenes from actual photographs of conditions of Independence, Missouri, and Dayton, Ohio. Some of the photographs of the streets and alleys in Independence showed a condition far from sanitary. Some of these views were taken in the vicinity of the public square. The lecture was suggestive throughout instead of merely condemning the unsanitary conditions as they exist in many parts of the city. Reverend Smith gave suggestions as to how the unsightly places could be made real beauty spots with very little trouble or expense. All enjoyed the views of Dayton, Ohio, and grounds around the National Cash Register Company, which the company has spent considerable time, and money in beautifying. The lecture was given under the auspices of the commercial club, the members of which have taken a decided stand for civic improvements. Everyone should hear the lecture of Reverend Smith and it is likely arrangements will be made to have the lecture repeated at some future date.—Daily Sentinel, Independence, Missouri.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. Leroy Eastwood, of 147 Wabash avenue, Detroit, Michigan, desires to communicate with any church members who may be able to put him in the way of securing a moving picture outfit and passion play films to use in lecturing to prisoners in the State prison. Anyone who can help him will do well to get in touch with him by correspondence.

The Business Manager of the Herald Publishing House would like to get in touch with all members of the church who are practical pressmen, book-binders, or printers. The Herald Publishing House is very much in need of help at present. We often need help and, all things considered, we would like to hire church members. Let us hear from you so we can keep in touch with necessary help. Address Business Manager, Herald Publishing House.

The HERALD Editors are in receipt of a letter from Bro. F. R. Tubb in reference to the letter of Bro. H. O. Smith's appearing in the HERALD of recent date. Brother Tubb desires to disclaim any intention of hurting Brother Smith's feelings, or reflecting adversely upon his work as a minister, and closes by saying: "I again respectfully apologize to Bro. H. O. Smith, assuring him that no hurt was intended him as a man or as a prominent minister of the gospel."

"Never stand waiting and hesitating when your conscience tells you what to do."

THE SAINTS' HERALD HISTORICAL SERIES.

IX. THE TRAGEDY AT CARTHAGE.

By Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the Central Church, Kansas City, Missouri.

(EDITOR'S NOTE.—In presenting this article in this connection we deviate from our original plan. The article on the "Church in Nauvoo," should appear at this time, leading up to the tragedy at Carthage. But owing to illness, Elder Mark H. Siegfried, who is pastor of the church in Nauvoo and historian of the Nauvoo District, and who has the matter in hand, has been unable to prepare his article in time for this number. His article will appear later; probably in the Jubilee number of the HERALD.)

The assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, which occurred at Carthage, Illinois, on the 27th of June, 1844, was without doubt the most tragic event in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. The story of that fateful incident has been told repeatedly by tongue and pen, by friends and foes, by those who aimed to make known the facts concerning the incident and by those who used the incident as a subject for fiction and sensation. The public ear has been more effectually reached by the enemies of the men and the cause they sought to promote, and therefore it is well that something may be said in defense of the defenseless.

RELIGIOUS MARTYRS.

Some have laughed to scorn the idea that these men were entitled to be recognized as martyrs of religion, they have asserted that they received the due reward of their deeds and in fact ought to have been killed long before they were. The Latter Day Saints believe that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were put to death for the same reasons that instilled the murderous spirit in those who caused our Savior to suffer death; the same influence that caused Nero to order that Paul should be beheaded; the same power that has ever arrayed itself against the servants of God from the foundation of the world. It is the way of the world to praise dead saints and persecute living ones, and if martyrdom is now on the decline it is because martyr mongers are more wise.

Napoleon once said, "It is the cause and not the death that makes the martyr," and while there may have been other things, yet it is certainly true that it was for the cause of their religion that these men suffered death. Before they announced their religious convictions they were unnoticed, but ever after they were made to lead a stormy life, a life that surely no one would choose for all the reward that earth gave them. It was vainly supposed that with the passing of these leading characters, the cause would also receive its final deathblow and the world would be rid of this obnoxious sect; but it was not so. One writer expressed himself in these words concerning their work, so sure was he that the religion established and taught by the Latter Day Saints had fallen no more to rise:

A mushroom growth upon a rich bed of decay, which sprang up merely because something better was not planted, but had no enduring root. It might flourish for half a century or more upon the scum of vice in America and the ignorance of Europe, but could enjoy at best but a sort of living death, and must soon wither and decay.

Once again was proven the truth of the saying attributed to Saint Jerome, "The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church." The work for which these men died has lived on and is living still, with no prospects of dissolution, failure, or decay. When we survey the past and realize the conflicts and ordeals which the work has survived, we can not but admire the firmness and stability of the cause, undaunted by its foes, undismayed at the machinations of the adversary, and commanding the good will and respect of reasonable men upon the merits of the righteousness of its principles.

Bancroft, in his History of Utah, has this to say:

Whatever else may be said of Joseph Smith, it must be admitted that he was a remarkable man. His course in life was by no means along a flowery path; his death was like that which too often comes to the founder of a religion. . . . The founder of Mormonism displayed a singular genius for the work he gave himself to do. . . . The prophet's days were full of trouble. His people were often petulant, his elders quarrelsome, his most able followers cautious and captious; while the world scoffed and the neighbors used violence, his high priests were continually asking him for prophecies, and if they were not fulfilled at once to the letter they stood ready to apostatize; many behaved disgracefully and brought reproach and enmity upon the cause.—Pages 184, 185.

GATHERING CLOUDS.

It will be well here to review the conditions which like the gathering storm clouds were fast approaching and threatening to burst forth in their fury only to be satisfied when this tragic deed was accomplished. It is with difficulty that we look back to that day and time and fully comprehend the contrast of conditions then and now. Then, that portion of country was on the frontier of civilization; the course of empire was gradually pushing westward; the country was sparsely settled and in many instances the inhabitants were affiliated with roving banditti, which were common at that time. The people as a rule were coarse and rough, and as a rule were ignorant; being inured to the hardships of frontier life they had developed peculiar traits of character.

The Saints having been driven under the exterminating order of Governor Boggs, from their possessions in the State of Missouri, came to a beautiful site on the banks of the Mississippi, in the State of Illinois, where they built a city which they called Nauvoo. A regular charter was obtained from the State, providing for a mayor and council, municipal court; and the city council was authorized to organize the inhabitants, subject to military duty, "into a body of independent military men to be called the 'Nauvoo Legion.'" This provision was for the protection of the city and was under the authority of the state officials and subject to them. During the few succeeding years the city made a rapid progress, the population was constantly increased by large numbers of immigrants—converts to the faith who were seeking association with the Saints.

THE "EXPOSITOR."

On June 7, 1844, appeared the first issue of a paper called the Nauvoo Expositor. This paper was published and instigated by parties who had been excommunicated from the church and were enemies to the church and its officers. Its object was to stir up strife, to aid the enemies of the church by publishing slanderous stories. Its columns were filled with foul abuse of such a character that the city council met and pronouncing it a nuisance, ordered the mayor (who at that time was Joseph Smith) to have the establishment and paper removed without delay, in such manner as he should elect. The result was that the city marshal proceeded with assistants to the office of the Expositor and removed the press, type, and paper to the street and destroyed them. This event, whether wise or unwise, provoked an outburst of sentiment from the people far and near, and was the culminating act which hastened the tragedy. F. M. Higbee, one of the proprietors of the Expositor, went before a justice of the peace at Carthage, and obtained a writ for the arrest of Joseph Smith and members of the city council, charging them with riot. Joseph Smith and others for a time refused to submit to trial by this court and were meanwhile arraigned before the municipal court of the city and also before D. H. Wells, justice of the peace, and in each instance they were acquitted.

JOSEPH WILLING TO MEET THE ISSUE.

Joseph Smith, the mayor, made a report of the destruction of the Expositor, to the governor of the State, and stated that if the governor had any doubts concerning the legality of the proceedings he had only to signify it, and all who were implicated would go before any legal tribunal at the state capital and submit to an investigation. They also agreed to waive any legal proceedings in the matter and go upon his expressed wish. During this time mobs were collecting; rumor was spreading; inflammatory speeches were being made from pulpit and rostrum; the most slanderous reports that could be invented were freely printed and eagerly read. One rumor was to the effect that Joseph Smith and his associates were ensconced in the stronghold of Nauvoo, defended by the Nauvoo Legion, defying the law and refusing to respond to the call of justice, whereupon some two or three thousand men rallied to the support of the Carthage constable, some of them coming from Missouri, and stood ready, as they said, "Not only to arrest Joe Smith, but to burn his town and kill every man, woman, and child in it."

Here we may pause to reflect that the matter of the destruction of the Nauvoo Expositor could not be held as a crime whose penalty should be death. It was only a matter of the destruction of property. Some have held that the suppression of this paper was a blow at the doctrine of a free press. We must consider, however, that free press and free speech have limitations, and when the abuse of either becomes so obnoxious, so vulgar and obscene that it may properly be declared a nuisance, a menace to those affected by it, there should be some means by which it can be promptly dealt with. Some may be inclined to think the measures taken were too harsh, but it will be remembered that it was done after due consideration by the city council, and they were willing afterward to answer to any proper higher authority for their action. There may have been other means more wise by which the town could have rid itself of such a scurrilous sheet, but doubtless these men acting as public servants did what they thought was for the best in the emergency. If they erred in judgment and were wrong we would not seek to justify them; if they were right in the matter we are not elated over their vindication; but we can not believe that such a deed could merit the death of those who participated in it.

As the enemy continued to grow more demonstrative in their wrath the town prepared for defense. The Saints had not forgotten the bitter experiences in Missouri, where they were driven from their homes and shot down as though they were wild beasts. Here they had property, they had wives and children to protect from lawless assassins. And who would dare to call himself a man, who would not in cases of extremity use even violent means to protect his own from being brutally treated and murdered by outlaws? The Nauvoo Legion was called out and placed under arms by instruction of the governor of the State, who was Governor Ford. This gave rise to rumor that the Mormons were about to make a raid on the neighboring settlements. In consequence of this the governor came in person to Carthage, a few miles from Nauvoo. The writ were committed to jail, without examination, where they met their death.

THE TRAGEDY.

Governor Ford had said to them, "I pledge you my honor however, and the faith and honor of the State, that no harm shall come to you while undergoing this imprisonment." The same day the governor went to Nauvoo, with a detachment of soldiers, leaving a guard of but eight soldiers at the jail where the prisoners were confined. About five o'clock in the afternoon a mob, consisting of about one hundred and fifty men with painted faces, was for the arrest of the parties implicated in the destruction of the Expositor was again renewed and Joseph and Hyrum Smith, though willing to submit to legal investigation when protected, feared the violence of the mob and crossed the river into Iowa, where for a time they were secure. Upon the assurance of Governor Ford that they would receive the protection of the militia they returned, and with the city council went to Carthage and gave themselves up and were admitted to bail for their appearance at the next term of the circuit court. It is to be regretted that they were not permitted to answer to this court for their offense. They were evidently not terrified at the prospect of the result of a fair hearing. They had good reason, however, to fear the mob who were thirsting for their blood. Immediately upon being released on bail pending their hearing, Joseph and Hyrum were again arrested on a charge of treason against the State of Illinois, and seen approaching the jail. In company with Joseph and Hyrum, were Willard Richards and John Taylor, who at that time were prominent officials in the church. They were all in an upper room in the jail and as the mob was ascending the stairway an effort was made to barricade the door. While doing so, Hyrum Smith was mortally shot and falling to the floor exclaimed, "I am a dead man!" Joseph attempted to leap from the window in the room and while so doing received several fatal wounds and fell to the ground exclaiming, "O, Lord, my God." The fiends, not yet satisfied, set up the lifeless body against a well curb and riddled it with bullets. John Taylor received several wounds from which he afterward recovered. Willard Richards escaped unharmed. As soon as the mob had accomplished their brutal deed they fled at once; they doubtless knew that Taylor and Richards were yet in the jail, but they were satisfied to know that Joseph and Hyrum were dead.

THE SAINTS PURSUE A NOBLE COURSE.

The governor was returning to Nauvoo when a messenger informed him of what had happened. It was supposed that the Nauvoo Legion would immediately proceed to war to avenge the death of these men and the ears of the governor were filled with reports of that character. The people seemed to overlook the fact, that the Legion was subject to the authority of the State and while most of the soldiers were members of the church it can not be shown that they were ever disloyal to the authority of the DEATH MASKS OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH.

State. When they were commanded to surrender their arms they did so at once without any thought of resistance. Governor Ford made official inquiry of the city council as to what was the "feeling, disposition, and determination of the people there, in reference to the late disturbances; ascertain whether any of them propose in any manner to revenge themselves, whether any threats have been used, and what is proposed generally to be done by them." The city council met on the 1st day of July, 1844, to make answer to the governor in an official manner. Part of the proceedings as unanimously adopted were as follows:

Resolved, thirdly, to further secure the peace, friendship, and happiness of the people, and allay the excitement that now exists, we will reprobate private revenge on the assassins of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, by any of the Latter Day Saints. That instead of an appeal to arms we appeal to the majesty of the law, and will be content with whatever judgment it shall award; and should the law fail we leave the matter with God.

Resolved, lastly, that we highly approve of the present public pacific course of the governor to allay excitement and restore peace among the citizens of the country, and while he does so, and will use his influence to stop all vexatious proceedings in law, until confidence is restored, so that the citizens of Nauvoo can go to Carthage or any other place for trial, without exposing themselves to the violence of assassins, we will uphold him and the law by all honorable means.

Notwithstanding the reports that rumor has supplied that the Saints banded together to avenge the death of the prophets, it can not be shown that any true Latter Day Saint ever violated the sentiment as expressed in the foregoing resolution. As the assassins were never brought to justice the matter of revenge and vengeance is in the hands of God by the will and desire of all true Latter Day Saints. I shall ever hold this incident as a treasure in my memory.

The attitude which was taken on the part of the parties aggrieved in this matter was not only praiseworthy, it was the true exhibition of Christian fortitude which in time past has made martyrdom sublime and sorrow triumphant. The bodies of the slain were brought to Nauvoo. Mother, wife, and children must for the last time look upon the pale faces from whom no word could be spoken again. They remembered that Joseph had said, "I am going like a lamb to the slaughter. . . . I have a conscience void of offense, toward God, and toward all men—I shall die innocent, and it shall yet be said of me, He was murdered in cold blood."

On leaving them Hyrum had read a selection from the Book of Mormon in part as follows:

And it came to pass that the Lord said unto me, If they have not charity it mattereth not unto thee, thou hast been faithful; wherefore thy garments shall be made clean. And because thou hast seen thy weakness, thou shalt be made strong, even unto the sitting down in the place which I have prepared in the mansions of my Father.

THE LAST FAREWELL.

We will here quote the mother's words as she describes the sad occasion of seeing the dead bodies when they were brought back from Carthage:

After the corpses were washed and dressed in their burial clothes we were allowed to see them. I had for a long time braced every nerve, roused every energy of my soul, and called upon God to strengthen me; but when I entered the room and saw my murdered sons extended both at once before my eyes, and heard the sobs and groans of my family, and the cries of Father! Husband! Brothers! from the lips of their wives, children, brothers and sisters, it was too much. I sank back crying to the Lord, in the agony of my soul, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken this family!

A voice replied, "I have taken them to myself, that they might have rest." Emma (Joseph's wife) was carried back to her room almost in a state of insensibility. Her oldest son approached the corpse, and dropped upon his knees, and laying his cheek against his father's, and kissing him, exclaimed, "Oh, my father, my father!" As for myself, I was swallowed up in the depth of my afflictions; and though my soul was filled with horror past imagination, yet I was dumb, until I arose again to contemplate the spectacle before me. Oh! at this moment how my mind flew through every scene of sorrow and distress which we had passed together, in which they had shown the innocence and sympathy which filled their guileless hearts! As I looked upon their peaceful smiling countenances, I seemed almost to hear them say, "Mother weep not for us, we have overcome the world by love; we carried to them the gospel, that their souls might be saved; they slew us for our testimony and thus placed us beyond their power; their ascendancy is for a moment, ours is an eternal triumph."

OUR COURT OF APPEAL.

If we were to view this situation from a worldly standpoint it would seem that the enemy had triumphed. It truly was a dark and dreary ordeal for the church as well as for the bereaved members of the grief stricken family. I can not see that the world could have desired the church and the members of the afflicted family to take such a dastardly deed with more commendable patience and Christian resignation. Both were made to suffer the bitter injustice of evil men, and the following statement made by the present Church Historian, Heman C. Smith, in a recent lecture at Nauvoo, fitly expresses the sentiments of all true Latter Day Saints to-day:

When those men plead with the Government for redress, and came back here without it, they made a solemn resolution to appeal to the court on high.

Let me say to the Latter Day Saints, we have taken an appeal, it is in the courts, we have appealed to that court, the highest tribunal, and let me advise you not to try the case out of court. Wait until the final judgment, and in the meantime, do all you can to exemplify the teachings of the Master, join hands with everything that is good and truly noble among men, and try to bring about conditions that will be grander and better than they have been in the past. May God's blessing rest upon all, and in the spirit of our fathers who preached religious liberty to all worshipers of God, we say to-night, Let the benediction of God's peace rest upon you, whatever your faith may be.

Had Joseph and Hyrum Smith joined hands with the gay and popular world; had they indorsed its ways and courted its praises at the sacrifice of their convictions, had they denied the truth of the message which God sent them to declare, there would have been no tragedy at Carthage. From the standpoint of the Bible, it is certainly nothing to their discredit that they had their enemies. We read: "Woe unto you, when all men shall speak well of you! for so did their fathers to the false prophets."—Luke 6: 26.

In the beginning of his career Joseph had testified that the angel of the Lord had informed him that his name would be had for good and evil throughout the world. Thus it was with our Savior and with all of the true servants of God, they have been loved by those who knew them best and hated and despised and killed by those whose imagination and evil designs were inspired by ignorance and prejudice. Since these men were killed there have appeared before the public a number of men and women who have claimed that they were prophets and messengers of the Lord; some of these movements have not survived the test of time, others are flourishing to-day and are far from being considered as insignificant. What one of these pretended prophets has been slain for his religious convictions? The world loves its own and therefore receives them with open arms and praises their great works. Jesus has said, "But because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you."—John 15: 19.

It has ever been alleged by the enemies of the martyrs, Joseph and Hyrum Smith, that they were guilty of teaching polygamy; this has ever been denied by reference to well-authenticated facts. But however, it is interesting to note that the pretended prophet of the Mormon Church in Utah, Joseph Fielding Smith, has removed any doubts the world may have had concerning his views on matrimony by openly and boldly confessing himself before the authorities of the nation to be the husband of five living wives and the father of forty-two children. We pause to inquire, has anyone made an attempt to kill him because of this acknowledged evil, this outrage on civilization and travesty upon all professed Christianity? Instead of threatening his life many of the world have admired his daring; because he belongs to the wicked world, the world lets him alone.

BUILDING THE TOMBS OF THE PROPHETS.

Conditions in the world have greatly changed since this tragedy was enacted and the people in general have come to look at things with a more sane and consistent view. Were it not for the fact that these men died for principle the incident would have long since been forgotten. History is repeating itself and the majesty of the word of God is being openly revealed. Jesus said:

Ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garnish the sepulchers of the righteous, and say, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets.—Matthew 23: 29, 30.

And, reader, is it not rather strange that the citizens of Nauvoo and vicinity should recently propose to assist in building a monument to the memory of the martyrs whose blood was shed by their fathers? Such is the case. More than this, in 1877 the "citizens of Nauvoo and surrounding country" framed a petition asking that the headquarters of the Reorganized Church be established at Nauvoo. This petition was signed by a list three and a half yards long, and included the names of nearly all the leading business, professional, and laboring men of the city and immediate vicinity. Does not this indicate a praiseworthy change in the attitude of the people? And are not the children of Joseph Smith and the true Latter Day Saints who have been associated with them to be congratulated that by their good morals and upright citizenship they have commanded the respect of the children of those who killed their fathers? A religion that can stand the test of time will not fail to attract the attention of the world, and when falsehood, ignorance, and prejudice have been exchanged for truth, knowledge, and justice, the names of Joseph and Hyrum Smith will appear in honor; and in the ages of time to come, many who may read of the tragic event of their death will recognize them as prophets of the Lord and martyrs of the true Christian faith. Of Milton, the great English poet, it was once said, "Mr. Milton, the blind adder, that spit his venom on the king's person," while after the true worth of the man appeared he was worthy to be acclaimed "the mighty orb of song." Jesus, once accused of being an impostor, a gluttonous man and a deceiver, by his worthiness has outlived the memory of his accusers and by millions is recognized as the Son of God. Joseph and Hyrum Smith, the victims of intolerance, prejudice, and abuse, will surely be recognized as having been instruments in the hands of God to give to modern thought its greatest introspection of spiritual truth.

SIDE BY SIDE.

Lines to the memory of Joseph and Hyrum Smith.

BY VIDA E. SMITH.

Side by side, two boys they played,
 Side by side in manhood prayed;
 Side by side defended right,
 Side by side felt rest or flight.
 'Mid joy or persecution sore
 The banner of the Christ they bore.
 Side by side on that dark day,
 All innocence, they rode away
 Across the hills that summer time,
 When bird and flower were tune and rhyme,

And only friends were dumb
 To Earth's sweet call and Nature's hum.
 Side by side and hand in hand
 They prayed in that fair sunlit land,
 Until—! a few short hours and now
 No pulsing breast, no soul-lit brow.

Yet side by side they bear them slow,—
 How sad the low-voiced carriers go
 Across the June-green, hill-crowned way

To where the sweet home shadows lay;
 Then side by side let softly down
 In yonder gloom-enshrouded town.
 Down, down to sleep, left side by side
 Close where the mighty waters glide.

The years go by—half hundred more;
 By kind old earth all covered o'er
 Their ashes lie, who shall decide
 They sleep not on,—thus, side by side?
 Ye who would bear from one
 The powdered dust or mouldering bone
 Of brothers—stay, let fall thy hand.
 On this dear spot let memory stand
 In shaft or column or low stone,
 Where brother's bone with brother's bone
 Has lain for years; let them abide
 In life, in death, thus, side by side.

“Personal love to a personal God is the fundamental element of happiness and peace in religion. The kingdom of heaven comes within us, as George MacDonald puts it, when God's will becomes our will. ‘While God's will is our law, we are but a kind of noble slaves; when his will is our will, we are free children.’”

THE FIRE BUILDERS.

No. 1.

Out of the darkness, light; out of the chill and dreary atmosphere of failure and regret, a clearer sight, a warmer heart, a better life. Our efforts may seem to be in vain when they result in failure, but the failure itself need not be in vain. The responsibility is upon us of making our failures serve a good purpose in showing where we have been inexperienced, thoughtless, weak, unjust. Then out of the darkness and cold shall flame forth lights and warmth; out of the wrong shall come the right; out of the tears of a child, the smiles of childhood.

The warm days had lingered on until at last the keen edge of an autumn wind, severing the seasons, turned the summer adrift to the mists of the silent sea.

Standing in the dim light and chilly atmosphere of my cellar, I had touched the match to the paper and bits of wood in the furnace. My little boy of four and a half years—superbly built, noble fellow that he was!—stood by, with his two chubby hands filled with sticks of kindling, ready to throw them into the fire when I should open the door and give the order. The arrangement had been that he might come down and "help me" build a fire, with the understanding that he must be careful not to soil his dress with the wood—he should hold it out, and not hug it in his arms; neither must he get against the sooty furnace. He was naturally methodical and neat, so that there seemed to be nothing exacting in the conditions upon which we started down for a bit of grand good fun.

The flames were roaring up the chimney. "Now," I said, "when I open the door, you shall see the fire, and you must throw in the sticks quickly, or the smoke will pour out into the cellar."

It was an exciting experience—the first time my boy had had a hand in fire-building, the very thing that he was always warned to keep aloof from. The roar of the draught, the fierce fury of the flame, the lurid light in the cellar dusk—he almost forgot to throw in the wood.

"Quick!" I said—"Quick, while the door is open!" One stick went in; the second struck the plate inside, and I pushed it in. "Hurry!" I said again; and the third struck the side of the door frame and fell to the floor.

Of course the little fellow was dazed for the moment. He was expected to make haste in a work that was wholly novel, as well as exciting, to him. Should he stop to pick up that stick, or throw in the two that he still held? One stick on the floor, the roaring fire, the outpouring smoke, too many orders from me, the work of it, the play of it, the novelty of it, the bewildering haste of it all—he stooped hesitatingly for the fallen stick, and instinctively tightened his grasp on the others by folding them into his arms against his immaculate frock! I shut the door in haste, and, seeing his attitude, broke out with: "Now look at that dirty wood against your clean dress! I told you that you should not come down here if you did that!"

He looked confused a moment, then dropped the wood, turned round and ran toward the stairs, ascended and disappeared. In that crucial moment, what silent criticism must the keen, logical sense, the half godlike instinct of childhood, have passed on me! Relatively, I had expected more of him than I could expect of myself or of any grown man. I heard the quickening feet of my little helper on the floor overhead, heard him climb the stairway to the second story, and while I stood mutely wondering at the suddenness of his departure, I heard him burst into a loud and piteous cry. He had not fallen—no; he had not hurt himself; it was I that had fallen, I that had hurt him. But he was in his mother's arms; his head was on his mother's shoulder.

I loved that boy. I loved to teach him; but I ought to have sat at childhood's feet to learn, before I expected him to sit profitably at mine. I would not have hurt him for the world; but I did not know what a child was, and consequently could not shield him from myself. I should have known myself and human nature better, had I known him better. "The child is father of the man."

When the next autumn came, what would I not have given to see again that childish expectancy, those little hands filled with wood, that noble head and regal form lit up with the weird glow from the furnace flames? I longed in my heart to sit at his feet as my teacher; to help me, to please him by showing that he pleased me.

He was logical, I was illogical; he was true, I was false; he was doing his best, I was doing my worst. I had imposed conditions which could not be complied with. I had exacted a promise which he was too innocent, too inexperienced to know that he could not keep. I reflected upon him as morally disobedient, when he was only physically fallible; as obstinate, when he was only confused and embarrassed; careless, when he was only bewildered; heedless, when he was only hurried; false, when he was truest to himself and to me; wrong, when his best wish and motive was to be right.

Yes! I would have given my life to tell him how I had wronged him; but he was now where he needed no further instruction from me, where he was no longer in danger of being ignorantly blamed and unjustly reprimanded. Those little feet were farther above me than the floor just overhead, and the voice of the pained and injured spirit had gone to join the voices of the thousands of thousands around the great white throne.

One, two, three, four years passed. But I was more than four years older. I had lived a whole new life, for I had time to sit down and think. In the silence of my sorrow, I could turn over the pages of the past. A life that was gone came before me as a new life that is. He was my helper, my educator, now, if not then. He had passed beyond my teaching, that I might pass for evermore into his.

No. 2.

Five years went by. The keen autumn wind came again. "Would you like to go down in the cellar and help papa make a fire?" My spirited boy jumped from his chair, his golden curls dancing upon his shoulders, as he hailed with delight the promise of so rich and novel an experience. I exacted no promise from him which common sense—to say nothing of experience—taught me he might not be able to keep, though I was cautious to impress him with the necessity of being careful. I would try to show him how to keep the wood from soiling his dress. He was nearly four years old; almost the same age as his brother—whom he had never seen—had been at the time of the incident just recorded.

A shuddering awe crept over me for the moment. Was I competent to undertake with my second boy that which I had so signally failed in with my first? Was I to be trusted with that tenderest, truest, most godlike of all earthly things—the heart of a confiding child? Could it be that God was willing to try me again? Could I make reparation to my lost one by doing for his little brother that which I ought first to have done for him? All those five years I had longed to recall that one day in my life, to be just where I had been unjust, and to heal where I had wounded. Was it possible that now an opportunity had come?

The flames were roaring up the pipe again, and my little man was standing, as did his brother, years before, with his hands loaded with wood. I almost trembled as the past came before me and so overlaid the present that each seemed to lose its own identity. I seemed to see one picture through the other, so that the two weirdly mingled their outlines and colors. Was I dreaming? No! it was a heart-searching reality. In an instant the sting of the old regret pierced me and inspired me to feel that success might be learned from failure, that past pain might bring present joy, and joy for ever.

"Quick!" I ejaculated, "while the door is open. Throw in the wood quick!" One stick after another flew into the flames; then one struck the door frame and fell to the floor. History was repeating itself with painful accuracy of detail. Should he let that go, or throw in others? Volumes of smoke poured out, and I hurried him again. He was confused and I knew it. As his brother's pupil, I had learned to recognize that and to respect it. I saw him clasp the wood to his breast as he stooped. He soiled his dress, but he was not disobedient; he was doing his best. He believed that he was my helper, and so he was, even in a better way than he knew. He picked up the stick, threw it, and it fell again.

"Never mind," I said; "don't hurry too much. I will hold the door until you are quite ready." (Oh, that I had said that five years ago!) The next time he tried, he succeeded. Yes, he succeeded, but not half so much as I did. I helped him in his bit of fun, but not half so much as he helped me in my bit of life-learning.

We started upstairs together. No hurt spirit fled before me in quest of solace. His trusting little hand was laid in mine. It took both those hands to build that fire. A serene little face looked smilingly up to me. It was not a piteous cry of a wounded heart that I heard, but the sweet music of a joyous voice, saying eagerly, "Did I help you papa?" Only God knows why I put such an emphasis on the answer, "Yes, my dear little boy, you DID help me." Then, breaking loose from my grasp, I heard his little feet outrun me, not to his mother for refuge from trouble, but for very joy to tell her that he had been my helper.

And somehow I think that the angels knew that I held two little hands, and saw two little faces, and answered two little voices, and sought to lighten two little hearts when I said, "You helped me." Perhaps I helped them to build a fire; perhaps they helped me to build a character; and perhaps, too, they "builded better than they knew." But God knows. —Patterson Du Bois in Beckoning from Little Hands.

Questions on January Reading.

How may our failures serve us? Is it not frequently the case that a parent needs to shield a child from himself? How might this necessity in part be avoided? Who should seek to acquire a knowledge of child nature? What allowance should we make for the inexperience of children in exacting promises of them? Cite other instances in which a child might be helped by a respect for his confusion.

Letter Department

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, November 19, 1909.

Editors Herald: It has occurred to me that if all your readers take as much pleasure in reading the letters from the active missionaries as I do, then I have hardly done my duty toward the church papers. So will put off writing no longer.

The day following the adjournment of General Conference I met with the High Council at Independence, which continued its sessions till about the close of the month. May 1, I went to Chicago for a short visit with wife and children, after which wife accompanied me back to Independence.

A part of the work assigned me was to take charge of the missionary work in Kansas City. A number of the brethren, mostly local workers, had been holding street meetings. These were called together and organized and I assisted them what I could in street preaching. I found these brethren to be zealous workers and able to hold their own, drawing large audiences and hardly needing much of my assistance, so I devoted most of my time in other directions, mostly in tent work and assisting in the various branches. Our best success was at Dixon Park, where Brother Arber and I held forth in a little tent about three weeks and baptized four very nice people.

I have been somewhat hindered in my work in Independence on account of illness, something entirely out of the ordinary with me, for I have always enjoyed good health. But the heat this summer seemed to be more than usually oppressive, and I drank a great deal of water, not of the very best quality either, and I had hard work to keep up, a good share of the time. On the other hand, Sister Pitt, who had been very ill for years, seemed to regain her strength rapidly, and enjoyed better health than she had for a very long time.

In the latter part of August we accepted a kind invitation from the Lamoni Stake authorities to take part in their reunion. My health had improved and wife was feeling well. But on the cars, soon after leaving Kansas City, a cinder blew in wife's eye; and by the time we reached Lamoni, her eye was quite inflamed. We immediately applied remedies, and the next morning we thought the trouble was over. The eye was still a little inflamed, but seemed to be doing as well as we had reason to expect. In the afternoon, Friday, I went to the reunion grounds, and remained all night. The next day, finding plenty of work to do, I remained all that day, keeping in close touch with wife by phone, and even up till six o'clock Sunday morning, every inquiry brought the answer that wife was all right. But about 9.30, I received a message that she was not quite so well, and I immediately went to her, and found that erysipelas had set in and both eyes were closed. We sent for assistance at once, and applied remedies, though we had not the slightest idea that it was anything serious. Yet in about two hours after I arrived at her bedside she fell into a sleep, from which we were unable to arouse her, and passed into the better land at six minutes to four the next morning. The bitter anguish of that hour none but those who have passed through like ordeals can understand.

We brought all that was left us of a dear wife to Independence for interment. All our children were present at the funeral. And thinking that perhaps the change would benefit me, I accepted an invitation from the children to accompany them to Chicago. But do what I would I could not shake off that terrible spirit of gloom that seemed to settle down like a cloud upon me. In five days after my arrival, I was taken to my bed with typhoid fever, and for a time I began to think I would soon join wife on the other side. But it seems now that God had willed it otherwise. Thanks to the many prayers offered up in my behalf, my illness in bed was of short duration, only three weeks. And though I am not well at the present, I am slowly gaining strength, so that I am taking up my work again, and I trust I shall be able to finish it acceptably to God, and then it makes little difference whether the time be long or short.

I have passed through the most painful experience of my life, but through it all the Lord has been very good and I have had no cause to murmur. I have learned lessons that doubtless could have been learned in no other way. It has brought the other world much nearer to me than ever before, and I have learned to look upon death as a friend rather than an enemy, and should not be feared. It is too bad that people have been subject to a false education so long, and that it should require these painful experiences to enable us to understand the truth. It is just as natural to die as it is to be born, and the Lord will provide for our passing out of this world just as well as he provides for our coming into it. After all, this world is but a school in which the lessons of life are being taught us to prepare us for that larger life, the real life which is to come. May the good Spirit help us to be patient, obedient, and faithful, is my prayer.

KIRTLAND, OHIO, November, 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: Certainly our heavenly Father was a wise and far-seeing God to give to the world such a perfect plan of redemption where every individual under the sun may have life more abundantly.

When my mind goes back to the church in its infancy, and as I sit writing, viewing the house of the Lord, varied are my feelings, sad to think of the great sacrifice made by our brethren in this very place and happy to know that so many were faithful to the trust placed in them.

Also those now moored in different parts that carried the work on so many years, it seems I can appreciate their feelings and interest in this place. As my lot has been cast among the Saints of Kirtland, being a stranger among them some year and a half ago, I must say we have found Saints in deed and truth, who have assisted in every way to forward the work here, and God is blessing us.

Sunday, November 14, I led six precious souls into the waters of baptism and administered that sacred ordinance to them, this being my first. The spirit of peace and love was there in great abundance, as I heard many of the brethren and sisters testify. We have a good Sunday school and Religio, all are working for the redemption of Zion.

Wherever we may be in the future, I will always have a great interest for the work in Kirtland.

Sincerely yours,

ERNEST W. WILSON.

MELBY, NORTH DAKOTA, November 16, 1909.

Editor Herald: This is a pleasant winter's morning on the snow-covered hills and prairies of western North Dakota. Most of us are much interested in scanning the columns of the HERALD'S letter department and often catch there a slight view into the life experience of many whom we very kindly remember, and are glad to note the success all along the line.

While there has not been any exceptional success, yet there has been some advancement in spiritual development all along the line of labor, and in harmony with the statement of our venerable president at our last General Conference, this has been a year of increased activity and labor. Not at any time since the beginning of the year has there been a time when there was not ample opportunity for labor. Not always, however, in preaching many sermons or baptizing great numbers, but in visiting various communities and isolated families, holding preaching services on Sundays, and by times a few sermons during the week; thus keeping alive interest that has been created in times past, as well as creating new. In fact our audiences here in North Dakota are not usually large, and one must learn to make the best of small opportunities. However, we have many earnest, generous-hearted Saints and friends here in North Dakota, and feel that our work (or the Lord's) is surely being planted in many parts of the State.

The writer believes that if the gospel in its fullness and beauty is presented from the affirmative standpoint, leaving those who may choose to believe error to follow their own error, that in time many will lose faith in the theories of men and join our ranks. Little good is done by being always on the stool of criticism either in or out of the church. Undue criticism may please the vain notions of those who are looking for an excuse from walking in the humble path of duty and labor, but those who are really and sincerely engaged in what they believe is good, are seldom persuaded to leave it till something better is shown to them, even though they may believe that which they have is not altogether as it ought to be. The thought expressed by Senator Chauncey Depew when he was approached by an infidel, is worthy of our consideration, when he said, "Until you have something better than my mother's Bible to offer me, I choose to keep that which I have." So it may be with those of the various creeds: until you have something better to offer them than that which their mothers have taught them, they may choose to keep that which they have. Do we not do the same?

Our annual reunion, held at Dunseith July 3 to 13 was, I think, considered a success by those attending, a source of strength to all. Brn. J. W. Wight, W. E. Peek, Swen Swenson, and J. A. Gunsolley, of the ministry from a distance, were present, besides those of the district. Some very good social meetings were held in which the Lord spoke to the Saints in the gifts of the Holy Spirit. A few were baptized.

The Saints donated very liberally, as usual, in bearing the expense of the reunion. In fact it is sometimes remarked by the ministry attending the North Dakota reunions, that considering the scattered condition of the work here, the Dakota Saints excel older districts along financial lines. Many of the Saints here deserve commendation for their efforts in this regard. For the good of the work in general, I hope the same may continue, as it is certain those who thus sacrifice will reap a rich spiritual reward in time to come.

After the reunion the ministry scattered to the various parts of the field of labor. The writer first began by a forty-mile ride with our good brother and district president, J. S. Wagner. Brother Wagner has had much misfortune and discouragement the past few years, but it does not seem to lessen his zeal for the gospel, nor his efforts to do all he can to assist the church or his brethren. He is one of the Lord's earnest ones. After a short visit with the Saints of Bantry, Bro. James Drader took me to Towner, where I took train for Minot. Our little branch of Bantry Saints are not lacking when it comes to helping the missionary along. They are now engaged in building a church. We hope they may be blessed in their efforts.

After a short visit with the few Saints of Minot, the writer took another trip of thirty-five miles overland to Bro. Frank Whiting's home near Rydler. Brother Frank's family is one of the isolated families of Saints, but as a means of introducing the gospel, we could wish there were one such family in every vicinity in the State. Frank is another of the Lord's earnest ones, and is doing all he can to let his light shine.

I continued traveling, visiting Bismarck, Cannon, Ball, Berlin, and returning home the last of August, where I remained till the 14th of September. And perhaps needless to say, no weeks of all the year pass so pleasantly and rapidly as those spent at home with wife and our three little boys, after one has been months away, and how soon the time arrives to prepare for the leaving for other months to come; and how sad to hear in pleading tones the lisping words of the little, innocent one, "Papa, no go away; papa, no go away." And at last with tears in his eyes say, "Go, papa I, go, papa I." (Let me go with papa.) At last the sad good-byes are said, and a last fond glance is taken of home (with all it means) and one is swiftly carried by the rushing train on to the great broad prairie of North Dakota, where days and nights must be spent in labor and travel.

The first stop is Fargo, where over a week is spent, a part of the week by the bedside of Brother and Sister Baker's little eight-year-old daughter, who was seriously sick with congestion of the lungs, but was relieved by the mercy of the Lord and soon made well. The next place was Clifford, where a few days were spent (partly helping in the hayfield). Preached a few sermons and was kindly received by the Saints, who did what they could to assist me in the services and otherwise.

Then I began a trip through the northern part of the State, visiting Lawton, Loma, Dunseith, Lansford, Minot, Ryder, Garrison, and on to this vicinity, which is about forty miles north of Dickinson, in the southwestern part of the State. This is a newly settled district and neighbors are from one to two miles apart. Sr. H. A. Moffit and her two married daughters are the only Latter Day Saints in this vicinity. Mr. Moffit is very kind to us, also all others, and I hope to accomplish some good while here.

I expect to continue labor here in this western part of the State until Christmas; may then go home for a short visit. I was much pleased to see in the last HERALD the account of one of the visible tokens of Zion's redemption, "The United Order of Enoch." May it have great success and accomplish for Zion all the Lord said should come to pass. And may our heavenly Father give inspiration and help in all departments of his work. To this end let us all labor. I hope to do my part.

LEONARD HOUGHTON.

MARION, MICHIGAN, November 19, 1909.

Editors Herald: I pen a few lines to let you know from this part of the field. I came here about January 1, preached about three weeks with good interest and liberty. I came here again about the last of October, preached only a few sermons, and was called home, as my daughter was very sick. Was home and other places about two weeks, then felt directed to go to Marion, so I came here and started again. One has been baptized, the first one in this place. Another has asked for baptism and will be baptized to-day. The work is commenced here. Would say the gospel work is moving along fairly good. My home address is 617 Fitzhugh street, Bay City, Michigan.

Your brother and colaborer in gospel bonds,

A. E. BURR.

VINEYARD HAVEN, MASSACHUSETTS, Oct. 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: When we take upon ourselves the name of Christ at the waters of baptism, we have promised by this act to follow Jesus; to let his life be an example ever before us, a light to lead us to a better life. We read in many places where Jesus healed the sick, opened the eyes of the blind, caused the lame to leap for joy, raised the dead; in other words, that he went about doing good continually.

In answer to his mother's question at one time, he says, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" We fail to find a single instance where he neglected his Father's business to seek his own pleasures. We have promised to follow his example. Are we as Saints of the Most High trying to do the same, to keep the gospel law? Can we and will we ask ourselves the question, Am I about my Father's business? Can we at all times show in every instance that we have not neglected our Father's work?

The greatest command to mankind is, to fear God and keep his laws, and this is man's first duty in life, above all other duties. We read in Romans 12:1, 2: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God." Those who are in favor of the worldly pleasures can not surely say,

"I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord,

Over mountain, or plain, or sea;

I'll say what you want me to say, dear Lord,

I'll be what you want me to be."

DELMONT C. TORREY.

MONTREAL, October 31, 1909.

Brethren: In your valued issue of the 6th inst., article "Literal translation of Isaiah 29:14," there seems to be something radically wrong with the learned rabbi's translation of the word Joseph.

In looking the matter up since the publication of the article many evidences were found tending to prove that the interpretation given by him was incorrect.

The printed characters of the Hebrew language are generally consonants, the vowels following being indicated by little dots. These dots when placed in connection with a consonant, according to their number and position, make all the difference in the world as to the meaning of the word.

In the present instance the Hebrew character denoting S with its vowel signs, is the main question to be considered. If the Hebrew S here used was meant as a part of the proper noun Joseph, it would have had two dots under it, instead of which it will be found with only one.

The word Joseph, as seen by referring to Genesis 30:24, means literally "to add," and being a verb it possesses the three tenses.

In Isaiah 29:14 the word is used as a verb and translated literally would be, "Therefore behold I will add a marvelous," etc., as will be seen by the one dot under the letter S, denoting that it is the future tense of the verb and not the proper noun Joseph, the letter S of which would have two dots.

If Isaiah 38:5 is compared in Hebrew with Isaiah 29:14 it will be found that the characters translated, "I will add," are identical in every respect with the ones translated (Isaiah 29:14), "I will proceed." To be consistent we would have to render Isaiah 38:5 as "Behold, Joseph, I will add unto thy days fifteen years," or, "Behold, I will add Joseph unto thy days fifteen years."

Again in Isaiah 7:10 will be found the past tense of this verb in the words translated "Spoke again"; literally it is, "The Lord added to his words" (already spoken) to Ahaz.

The following will show the vowel and value of it as determined by the dots under the letter S in Joseph:

S...—S ay, signifying Joseph, a proper noun.

S...—e as in berry, verb, past tense Joseph.

S...—e, verb, present tense, joseph.

[Dots should be placed under letter, but we are not able to show them except as above.]

Six Hebrew commentators, whose writings I have examined, are a unit on this point, one explaining particularly that the word is a verb by calling attention to the one dot.

To use the word Joseph and then the words I will proceed, or I will cause, is simply a superfluous repetition. It would be like saying, "A two-wheeled bicycle."

In conclusion may I ask that the brother give us, if possible, the rabbi's reason for rendering the verb as a noun. It is possible that he has found something to cause him to think his rendition is nearer the original than is the King James or the Inspired Translation.

Ever striving for the advancement of Zion's cause,

730 SAINT CATHERINE STREET, WEST.

STONINGTON, MAINE, November 26, 1909.

Dear Herald Readers: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

Dear Saints of the common salvation, the Lord is still extending the day of salvation to this place. For long years it exemplified its name, "Stonington." The gospel message made no particular impression save that a few continued in faithful allegiance to the covenant and amid sunshine or storm carried on the work of Christ. But there comes a time when even the adamant rocks will cry out for very reverence and the heavens of distressing drought will weep with blessings upon a parched, impoverished soil.

Well, so it is, our night is over, and Stonington's salvation is nigh at hand.

Just think, dear Saints, some sixty-eight precious souls have been gathered into the fold of our Lord during the last few weeks, and another has asked for baptism to-day. [Later advices place these figures at seventy-six. EDITORS.] It is interesting to watch the unimpeded progress of this marvelous work. It seems that the hastening time has come. A sister from an adjoining town was commanded thrice in one night to go to Stonington and get baptized into the Latter Day Saints' Church. Another sister came here on a week's visit to her son who had just previously joined the church, and in the midnight hour awoke, seeing a small, flickering light over the bed of her son, who lay in an adjoining apartment. Presently the light grew to exceeding brilliancy, lighting up the room. "Surely," said the sister, "my son has found the true light at last." Well, this worked wondrously upon her as she realized the small, flickering light represented his first situation as a devout Methodist, while the latter and larger glorious light stood for Latter Day Saintism; and though a lifelong Methodist herself, was baptized into the new found faith.

Another was visited by an angel quite recently and told to get baptized if she would escape the judgments of God. Another in a dream or a night vision, saw the liahona or brass ball of Book of Mormon story, and on it were inscribed instructions to himself and which were changed from time to time.

Well, the work is onward, the stolid hearted of years are being moved upon by that sin-convicting power, and are wrought upon to shake off the past and accept the present.

The most general objection I meet is, "I am not good enough to be baptized." And pray tell me if that isn't a goodly confession. Isn't that just how God wants the people to feel. True it is, for who is there good enough for the presence of his Lord, to enter into sacred partnership with the eternal? They are falling into line, however, recognizing that if it is goodness they want they must apply the pardoning power of Christ manifest in the soul-saving gospel of heaven.

It is quite interesting to hear the Saints tell their dreams relative to the coming baptisms from time to time. Some time ago I startled the Saints by telling them a dream I had in which I saw myself washing my watch chain, which is a gold one. The interpretation was that each link symbolized a soul destined for celestial sunlight, golden glory, that would be baptized. Well, there were thirty-six such links. Pity it wasn't one of these long, two-yard, ladies' chains I was wearing. The thirty-six links were found all right when "lo and behold," another had a dream that there would be eight more baptized. That would make forty-four. Well, we got the forty-four all right. One would think this was about enough for the nerviest dreamer to dream, when lo, another arises in the camp of the Saints publicly proclaiming there would at least be sixty. This was Brother Haskell who, when he dreams a dream, believes it, and for joy generally shouts it abroad. Freeman is one of our spiritual brothers who is greatly blessed of the Lord. Might say that when I heard the brother tell his dream beforehand I felt a little "skeery." I didn't know where the candidates were to come from, as to all appearances we had about completed our work. However, Bro. George Knowlton came to his assistance, dreaming that there would be five dozen at least, thus confirming what had previously been presented. While these brethren were dreaming it out we kept on preaching, and at last were gratified to see the sixty. Surely we had enough, but no, these nery Saints kept on dreaming. "More baptisms, more baptisms," said several. "All right," said I, "I'll do the baptizing if you'll do the dreaming." Well, they're at it now hard and heavy. The other morning a sister, whether asleep or awake, says she was seated at a table and saw ten pieces of lead around her plate. They started to flip until they all flipped themselves into a tumbler of water standing near by and instantly they changed into bright, shining pieces of gold. Now there's no need of me interpreting this. If any don't understand it, just please write some of the scores of interpreters here in Stonington.

Everybody is talking and feeling the presence of the kingdom. The other day an old soldier of the War of the Rebellion came along asking for baptism. He had not been out to meetings but had read our literature.

"Is this the limit," asked "Aunt Chat," as the noble, unfortunate fellow hobbled along on a peg-leg. "No," we replied, "this is the lim-less." He was baptized and now rejoices in the restored gospel.

I am still pounding away and I want to assure you it is not any smooth preaching that's captivating the folks. We just simply arise in the name of the Lord and tell them that every other church is wrong and this is the only right one; and if they don't believe and obey it, they'll be damned. Somehow or other they believe it. I tell you, brethren, the Lord is working.

We shall continue a while longer, hoping that the repentance of the community will save them from an impending calamity.

I must not overlook the gracious assistance accorded me by one and all of the Saints who, by their presence and prayers, are standing by the work. In particular am I indebted to my wife for her help, who by reason of her large experience, is enabled to reach the people in her fireside and Sunday school talks. Two or three months ago a Mrs. George Duke aroused her husband one night, relating how that in a night vision she was trudging along a broad way bound for paradise. Presently she was stopped by a river preventing further progress. In the dilemma a woman appeared, bidding her take a road which was a very narrow, winding path. The woman pointed it out, and taking it, the pilgrim went on her way rejoicing, eventually reaching the promised land. Time wore on, when one evening wife had occasion to call on this Mrs. Duke, purposing to engage her in a gospel talk. She had no sooner crossed the threshold than Mrs. Duke exclaimed aloud, "There she is now." Yes, this indeed was the woman she had seen in the vision, and seeing her now for the first time, readily recognized her guide. Needless to say Mrs. Duke is now glorifying God, having been baptized a few days ago. Her husband comes along to-day.

I find in the branch officers, headed by Bro. Henry Eaton, faithful and unremitting help.

I close, hoping that the Saints will keep on "a dreaming" and the coins keep on "a flipping."

Hopefully,

DANIEL MACGREGOR.

Dear Herald: Inclosed find clipping from a Denver paper, giving account of the laying of the corner stone of the new church building.

The day was gloomy and threatening, and looked like snow every minute; but we felt the Lord had favored our efforts so far, and hoped and prayed for pleasant weather during the ceremony. The breaking of the clouds and the shining out of the sun just as the prayer was offered was indeed to many of us an answer to prayer.

The building is progressing nicely under the supervision of the writer, assisted by others of the Saints. The Beardsmore family, composed of father and three sons, are doing the brick work which will be a credit to them as well as the Denver congregation. Most of the work is being done by the Saints. We hope to have the roof on before Christmas. It will surely be a relief when we can move from our present quarters to a better place.

May the Lord continue to bless and prosper us until the last dollar of indebtedness is paid.

The extract referred to from the Denver Republican says: "Lowering skies, with a chill breeze sweeping the congregation, did not affect the fervor with which the corner stone of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was laid yesterday afternoon. The new building is at the corner of Logan avenue and Speer boulevard, and is partially completed. It is being built at a cost of seven thousand dollars by the congregation that has been holding services for the past eleven years in the former Swedish Lutheran church at the corner of Arapahoe and Twenty-second streets.

"The new church is a brick structure, thirty-six by sixty-two feet, and it will seat two hundred persons. It represents the fruition of years of planning and preparation on the part of the church members. The location is exceptionally well favored and the building, when completed, will be an architectural ornament to its section of the city.

"Bishop Richard Bullard, of Boston, Massachusetts, was the principal speaker on the program.

"An impressive feature of the corner stone laying was the only appearance of the sun during the day. Just before the ceremony was performed the clouds lifted for a moment and the congregation noted the stronger light that shone on the bishop's face as he advanced to perform the sacred duty. The brief appearance of the sun seemed to come as a benediction on the impressive act." E. F. S.

KERNAN, ILLINOIS, November 21, 1909.

Dear Herald: As the shades of another Sabbath eve are coming on, and I am somewhat lonely, will endeavor to write a little in hopes of doing some good at least. We moved from Dahinda, Illinois, about two months ago, where there was a nice branch of the Saints. Now we are isolated. We do indeed miss the association of God's people and the church privileges. Have felt that it was best to make the move at this time. But though we do miss the Saints, yet we can read, study, and pray here and enjoy God's Holy Spirit and know that his Spirit is with us wherever we go, so long as we strive for it and keep faithful. May God help us to let our light shine at this place and whenever opportunity affords to do what we can to enlighten others in the glorious gospel.

We live about five miles from Streator and if there be any Saints living at that place, please write us here. If we can visit a Saint occasionally it will make our hearts rejoice. There is a little church across the way here and how lonely it makes me feel, wishing it were one of our own, and that we might be able to worship there. It belongs to United Brethren, but is not in use at the present time. A Methodist minister is trying now to secure it for services from time to time. I only wish one of our own faith could make use of it. I do not know whether it would do any good or not. A Streator paper came out a few weeks ago in a great harangue against Joseph Smith, etc., so people may believe it all around here. It seems in this age of enlightenment, the world should know better, but they seem very ignorant. Perhaps they want to be, in a great degree.

May God help my companion and myself to do good at all times, and perhaps help people to see here in this place. May he bless his people everywhere, is my prayer.

In the faith,

MRS. ADEANE DAWSON.

PENDENNIS, KANSAS, November 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: We enjoy reading the HERALD and other church papers, as we are of the isolated ones. We do not get sermons only as we read them in the HERALD. There are seven of us here that belong to the Saints; there was one more, but she has gone out of the church. My two boys and wife and two granddaughters. Oh, how I would like to shake hands with an elder, for we need one here to preach to us. There is a schoolhouse here close, that can be used if some elder happens to come out this way. Let us know and we can come and get him at Pendennis. You may do a great deal of good. From your brother in the Lord,

M. J. COOP.

BENTON, IDAHO, November 12, 1909.

Editor Herald: The thought has often occurred to me that it would be a benefit to the church to have a paper especially to treat on business and business methods, run by some party or parties, educated along those lines to aid and help those whose gift it is to make money. It may look like mixing worldly things up with spiritual, but money the church must have. The Bible says pay your tithes, the church says pay them, but how to get them they do not say. The real trouble with everybody is how to make money. Some have more than they know what to do with, many have none.

There has been some talk of the rich dividing up with the poor, but you will not see that time; I will not see the time; it probably never will be seen unless it is in the church. Some people have more money than they can count. Things are not divided rightly. I know it, you know it, but does that do us any good? Therefore, how are we going to get our share of the money? The government says you must make it; make it honestly, but how fast they do not care; that is up to you. We have as much right to it as anybody. Any one can do as much good with money, if they handle it right, as they can do by preaching. The preacher is helped and taught by the church, but the money-making man has no help only what he can pick up or gain from the outside world.

Why should the Saints not help one another to prosperity? I believe in living and letting live. Therefore I think that the church needs a business paper as well as a spiritual one, to advise in saving and making money honestly. As a matter of course, this is just my idea of the matter. I see lots of ways I could make money, but what troubles me most is, how to make it right. What is right by the law of the land may not look right in the sight of the church.

If the Lord blesses me in making money, I for one am willing to live up to the doctrine of the church and also the Bible, and let the Lord have his tenth to carry on his work; also to help those who have not the knowledge of making money themselves. If I have the gift of making money, or in other words, if I should have the ability to make money, I would consider it a gift from God, and would feel just as much condemned by withholding it from the church, or in other words, stealing it from God, as I would if I had the ability or a calling to preach and would not accept it. Wherefore I see no reason why the business man should not be educated by the church along his line, as well as the preacher along his line.

Right is right any place and any where, at any line and any trade; therefore it seems to me that the moneyed man has no more right to withhold his help or knowledge from the church than the preacher has to withhold his. Nevertheless, we can not pay our tithes unless we make them, and we can not make them unless we know how. It would be like the preacher going out to preach and not knowing what to say. So if there was a paper in the church to treat on those lines, we would not have to look so much to the outside world for information.

Thanking you for your attention, I am very truly yours,
STEPHEN DRAZEY.

HARRISON, NEBRASKA, November 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: To-day, as it is the Lord's day, and I am alone, and it is snowing hard, it came to my mind to write a few lines to our dear pages to tell you how I do enjoy its dear letters that come from all parts of this great vineyard that belongs to us if we only trust and obey. I am trying to live right before my heavenly Father, though I am isolated from every one of our dear people, and I do sometimes get weary of loneliness for the chance of being among God's chosen ones. I am so glad that I can claim the name of Saint. I am not very old in this latter-day work, but I do believe it is of God. I am reading the Book of Mormon and our Church History. I am truly convinced that it is right. Pray for me that I may have a right to the tree of life.

As I was reading my Ensign to-day I came to the Lamoni items. I see that you have some dear old soldiers, Saints in our dear beloved church. I thought it would not be wrong to tell you that I am an old soldier myself, and I thought like this, that I was all alone and am the owner of four hundred acres of land, and if you had any one of them that is alone and could take care of it and is honest and true, and wants to come out and see if he would like this country, we might want to be partners in our old age. But I would not want a cripple, for he could not look after the land, and I would not want one over sixty or sixty-five, for I am sixty myself, unless he is real active on foot and a good Saint, for I could not stand to be misused in my old days. Now if you have knowledge of such a man, let him write to Box No. 65, M. L. W., Harrison, Nebraska, and I will get his letters.

M. L. W.

WOODLAND, TEXAS, November 13, 1909.

Dear Herald: I feel to rejoice over a victory that has been won here the last twelve days. Elder W. M. Aylor and a Mr. Crumley of the Christian Church have been in debate at Detroit. Although I had not the pleasure of attending it all, I was pleased to attend four times. I will say I never heard as much talk about any one man as there is about Elder Aylor. It seems he has made more friends than any one could for the length of time. The fame of his intelligence has spread far and wide.

When I came in the church in this community, to see the condition of the minds of the people, I would never have thought that this gospel would have the wearing it has to-day, but such is the case. Now I had a dream about three years ago I would like to relate, the fulfillment of which I believe I have seen in this discussion. I thought that there were a couple of elders I had never met at Detroit holding a tent meeting and I was attending. I thought I never had seen such a power of the Spirit present as there was during the preaching, and the last night of the preaching I was present and I thought I was standing quite alone to one side of the audience, and was very much interested in the service, when an angel stood beside me and beckoned me to look, and I looked to the northwest and saw quite an army of soldiers all arrayed for battle. I asked the angel what this meant and he said it was the enemy of this work, and said that they had a decree from the United States to kill every one that believed Joseph Smith a prophet. I said to the angel, Well, they will have to kill me, for I will not deny my testimony to the prophet of this work in this age. So while we were conversing the elder stopped preaching and the audience all stood in amazement and wonder at the advancing army. They soon were all in array, ready for the battle, the Saints all abreast with the enemy, and about that time one of the prominent men of the town was converted, I thought, and went up and down the aisle that was between the armies and preached the gospel, telling the people that Joseph Smith was a true prophet; and he did so until the last enemy fled and peace was still with the Saints.

Now when I heard of the debate at this time the dream had become almost forgotten, or I had not thought of it for a long time, and when I heard of this discussion it flashed to my mind at once: You have seen the victory in this place. And so it was the Christian man did better far than the elders often meet.

I feel very thankful to my heavenly Father for his love and kindness toward me and my family. My husband accepted the gospel this summer and I am very thankful. I feel as though I am not altogether alone in the fight, or it seems as my force has increased in the battle. I can say of a truth that the Lord has ever fulfilled his promises with me. Dear Saints, it may not be right when you desire the most for the promises of the Lord to be fulfilled that it pleases him to bless you, but if you hold out faithful he surely will give you the desired blessing if you apply your lives to the gospel law.

We must remember that we must obey all God's laws and apply them to our lives if we expect such blessings as are promised us. We must always understand they are on condition. Ever praying for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. M. M. AARONS.

NEBO, ILLINOIS, November 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: Since my recent letter I held a six-day debate at our church in Howl Hollow with Elder H. L. Derr, Missionary Baptist. We had crowded sessions each night except the last, November 11, which was not generally announced. We were rained out November 10. On Sunday the interest was all that we could ask. My liberty and blessing throughout the debate was even more than I had anticipated.

Elder Derr suggested that we select six disinterested men as jurors, to which I consented. These six men were escorted to a front seat, and solemnly charged by Elder Derr's moderator to give their decision according to the law and evidence, no matter which one of the attorneys presented it. They were placed where they had no opportunity to discuss the matter among themselves. Each one was given a small piece of paper, and charged to write the name of the winning man and deposit it in the hat passed by one of the moderators. Time came at last for decision, and notwithstanding the Book of Mormon was on trial, when the six pieces of paper were opened, the name of Elder Derr was not found on one of them—no, not one. This was somewhat mortifying when so many had been bent on destroying the monster Mormonism. During debate one gave his name for baptism, which was attended to on Sunday morning.

We mustn't boast, but there has been rejoicing in the camp. Brother Paxton came in at the close of the debate and held meetings over last week. He is now preaching at a new place near here. We are going back and forth. This is a new schoolhouse and bids fair for permanent work. Many of them never having heard yet, some well along, others are Saints, prejudice waning,—all make the prospect flattering. Brother Paxton's efforts are certainly appreciated.

Brother Paxton beat his best last night. He had suggested that I preach, but I was impressed differently, and when I witnessed the results, I was confirmed in it. Arrangements are about completed for debate with Elder Derr again. This will be held at Beardstown in the Baptist church for six nights during the ministers' meeting up there, and the associations of two districts. I ask an interest in your prayers. Hoping and praying for the Lord's help to every child,

W. A. GUTHRIE.

BOTTS, FLORIDA, November 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: About two months ago I sent in the minutes of the Florida district reunion. At the bottom of the notice I said the visiting Saints of Alabama and Mississippi rendered valuable assistance in the meeting. The way it appeared in the HERALD is that the Saints of Mississippi rendered valuable assistance, not mentioning the Alabama Saints. It is a very small mistake and the Alabama Saints assisted as much as any of them, and wish you would kindly correct the error in your columns.

O. O. SIMMONS.

BEAVER CITY, UTAH, November 26, 1909.

Dear Herald: It may be of interest and benefit to some good family of Saints to know that Beaver City is in need of a good bakery. There is a lady here who runs one on a small scale, but it is not able to supply the demand for bread. There are several hotels here and a great demand for bread. The party must understand his business and be able to bake good bread, and then he will be able to get a good share of this business.

Yours in the truth,

EDWARD M. DAVIS.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, November 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to say to the officers and members of the Eastern Michigan District that after an absence of some thirteen years I have been assigned to labor in your district again. It will be practically a new field to me, and desiring to accomplish the most possible good in the spreading of the gospel, I humbly ask your cooperation and assistance. If you are living in a place where the gospel message has never been preached, and can open your door to a missionary, please let me know, as I am desirous of reaching out into new places where the Master's cause has not yet been introduced. If we can assist in reaching the people in the vicinity of the branches, we will be glad to do so also. Hopefully,

J. A. GRANT.

ELGIN, MANITOBA, November 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: Could you kindly tell me if there are any Latter Day Saints in or around Elgin, Manitoba, Canada? Any information will be appreciated.

ARCHIE BUTLER.

LOGAN, IOWA, November 19, 1909.

Editors Herald: I truly enjoy reading the HERALD; it is filled with many good thoughts and instructions. I only wish I were able to read more, for I sincerely love good reading, but sometimes my physical strength forbids my reading as much as I would like to do. I have not seen anything in the HERALD from Logan for a long time. I feel that indeed I am one of the very weakest of God's creatures when it comes to spiritual strength, for when I examine myself I find there so many weaknesses that I wish and am trying hard by the help of God to overcome, that I am led to exclaim, What is mankind that God is so mindful of him?

We have just had the privilege of enjoying a series of meetings held here by Bro. J. W. Wight and surely they may well be called a spiritual feast by all who heard the gospel as taught by him. He had good liberty and good interest was manifest, especially by the Saints. All seemed to enjoy the meetings and I think we all might profit by heeding the good instructions given. I can not be contented to sit still and do nothing, and so I am trying to help in some way or other in this work we all love so well.

I do not believe we should sit still in waiting for opportunities to work, but we should be seeking opportunities to do something for some one or something for the church. There are sick ones all around us who need comfort and cheer and surely it costs nothing to give that, a kind word, a pleasant look, or a smile may be the means of helping many a careworn and suffering one to take fresh courage and start life anew. There have been times in my life when a pleasant call or hearty handshake or a cheering smile from those I loved did me more good than gold could have done. I am resolved that whenever I can I will do all I can for others who are in like condition as I was then, be that little or great, because of the joy in pleasing others and for their good and the good of the cause.

I hope to see the work prosper and pray for all Saints that we may be Saints in very deed. So far as I know the Logan Branch is in good condition. There seems to be a strong brotherly feeling existing among the Saints here of love and kindness for each other. Some of our number have moved away, but new ones are coming, and usually the attendance is very good. Some outsiders are investigating, and I can see nothing for us to complain of worse than ourselves, which of course might well be improved in some way or other. As the old year is most gone I hope we all will be more able to lay off the old man and put on the new one with the coming new year. Let us make a united effort to do all the good we can through the year that is near at hand, and we will be surprised with the results. Let us all help cheerfully and freely in our Christmas Offering, be it little or much. There are so many calls for ministers to preach the gospel, and we know it takes money; their families need support, and in helping send the ministers we will be helping to preach the gospel.

Yours for truth,

MRS. MAY BENC.

BAR HARBOR, MICHIGAN, November 28, 1909.

Dear Saints: While here in the vessel, with nothing to disturb our thoughts of those who are gathered together on this day at Mountainville for conference, we think of them, sharing in the spiritual work, and long to be with them, though we can not be there in person. We pray for the blessing of the kind Father of love to be with them all, and he surely will bless all those who try to keep his commandments. What a happy family we can be just by keeping the laws and commandments he has given us, which are not hard! For instance, "Be ye kind to one another," and "Do unto others as ye would that they should do unto you," are not very hard to keep if we try, and they mean such a lot to our happiness in this world and a reward hereafter. The Lord has rich blessings in store for the faithful. I mean to be one of them, trying to live to have part in the first resurrection, and do what I can to help others do the same.

Yours in the faith,

PEARL F. BILLINGS.

FANSHAW, OKLAHOMA, November 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: The branch in Fanshawe is nearing the completion of a nice church building, a good frame building, and it is ready now to paint. We have a good stove and bell installed and ready for use, and we ask our elders to note this and if they can give us a call, we shall appreciate it.

As soon as we get the church painted we want to have it dedicated. There is a question among us, however, as to whether we should have it dedicated until we get the debt which we contracted paid. We had to borrow $100 to complete it. Can we do so? I wish some of the brethren would give us some advice. A number of brethren and sisters all over the States have helped us financially, for which we are very thankful. May God bless all who took pity on us when our enemies put us out of doors, and we had no place to worship or teach our children the great latter-day gospel. Our enemies are surprised, as they never thought we could build a church. As the branch was poor, I gave them the lot and deeded it to the Church of Latter Day Saints, in care and custody of our Bishop, and I think the deed should be recorded in the clerk's office and then turned over to one of the bishops.

The first time we met to hold Sunday school, I was prouder of the building than any public enterprise that I ever had part in, and my heart leaps with joy and thanksgiving when I think of the dear Saints that sent us money with a few lines of encouragement, telling how they were praying for our success. The young people are making arrangements to buy them an organ. They have appointed Sr. Katie Stephens as chairman of the committee to take up a collection each Sunday for this purpose. Katie is a young lady belonging to the Choctaw Indian tribe. She is fifteen years old and is generally loved among the Saints. She is the treasurer of our Sunday school.

Bro. W. R. Smith will commence a series of meetings November 27. We hope there will be several additions.

Ever praying for the redemption of Zion,

J. H. LEWIS.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, November 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: Have read and reread your editorial in the issue of November 10, giving an outline of what was done at the initial meeting of the United Order of Enoch.

To enter into a critical analysis of the document at this time is inopportune and unwise. I deem it permissible, however, to say a commendable word or two.

Nearly ten years ago, at one of our General Conferences, we were discussing the character of financial and mercantile organizations and the propriety of the church taking stock in said companies, etc. I recall one statement which I made in a speech on this occasion. It was, "We can never expect God's approval or blessing to be with an organization the policy of which is to make dollars the index of power instead of brains and moral worth." I well remember I was interrupted several times during the speech lasting but a few moments. Well do I recall an incident wherein a couple of my brethren who were engaged in mercantile affairs took me aside and bluntly told me that I might be all right to preach the gospel to the world, but I knew nothing as to how business must be conducted. I felt then, I feel now, that love and mercy, justice and right are above profits with God. I knew in my own soul, by the light which God had given me, that, if ever there was a business institution established with which God had to do, it would inculcate the thought contained in this sentence quoted above.

What was my gratification, then, on reading the following sentences in the text of the Articles of Association of the United Order of Enoch, the organization provided for at the last General Conference: "This association shall have no capital stock divided into shares; it shall not be run for individual pecuniary profit, but for the objects herein set forth; the properties of the same shall not be individual, or held in severalty, but in common. . . . The operations of the farms, shops, and the products of the same in no case to be for the pecuniary profit or benefit of any person or persons, corporation or corporations."

My statement on the floor of the General Conference ten years ago may have been wrong; the quotation from this article 5 of the Articles of Association of the United Order of Enoch may be wrong, but of one thing I am clearly satisfied: if this article quoted above is correct then my position taken ten years ago is fully vindicated. I do not refer to this in the spirit of self-exultation, for I have received enough knocks in my short ministerial career to satisfy me that a man is void of judgment who looks to men for applause or depends upon human appreciation as an inspiration to service. We are all standing for the truth, for truth's sake, regardless of what others may think or say.

I believe, however, it is nothing more than just to some of us who have stood for certain great economic truths, and have been misunderstood by those who did not take the time to study our position, that when an official body, representative as this one is, enunciates the very essence of one of the great principles which we have contended for, the points of agreement be pointed out. It is pardonable if some of us rejoice. Rejoice, not with an "I told you so" spirit,—God forbid, but rejoice in the realization that we are getting nearer to God.

It is to be regretted that we are so weak, all of us so weak, that there existed an apparent necessity that provisions be made for the exigency of abandonment at the initial meeting of the organization. I feel sure so long as the members of the association remain loyal to these features of the articles which I have hitherto quoted there will be no occasion for abandonment.

Well, "the world do move," and we are growing. The growth may be slow, much slower than it ought to be, but so long as we are climbing, hope springs up in our breast and we are inspired to better service.

There has not been enough given to the public, as yet, to indicate the scope and character of the institution, but certainly the prospectus has several commendable features. Further than this deponent saith not.

As ever your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, November 29, 1909.

Dear Herald: Elder J. F. Curtis and myself commenced meetings at the Brush Creek church November 6. Had good congregations and fine interest. Brother Curtis had to leave me the 22d, and up to that time we had baptized thirty-two. Brethren Plumb and Moore came then and we continued until last night, the 28th. We had crowded houses and a good spirit through all the meetings. We held prayer meeting for two hours each evening before preaching, and it was grand to see the young Saints take their part. There never was such a waking up—forty-six in all, most adults. The Spirit of God was truly with us in power and the Saints are very much built up.

Dear Herald: Five were baptized for the Cardiff Branch on November 14. Things are brightening throughout the Eastern Wales District. Presidents of branches are alive to the interests of the Lord's work. Thought I would drop a line as good news always tends to encourage all in the work.

I should like to get the address of F. R. Tubb, in Canada. Can you tell me if Elder George Potts is alive, who one time presided over the Brooklyn Branch. Also is Brother Webberly alive, who was one time active in Cardiff, but now for some time in the States? A card to my home address on these queries will be greatly appreciated.

Your brother in Christ,
THOMAS JONES.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, November 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: Having been raised a Methodist, and being strong in the faith of what I then believed to be right, I found it hard to give vent to my feelings and come into the true church. But at last when I had heard so much of it preached and read so much of the truth I laid all prejudice aside, gave way to my conscience, and was finally baptized June 13, 1909, by Bro. Lloyd Moore. To God I give the glory for leading me into the blessed light. I have felt the assurance which God has made manifest to me, by his Spirit, each day, that I am in the right way, and I have a desire to remain in the work the rest of my life. We have had a series of meetings of three weeks' duration at this place, conducted by Brn. Henry Sparling and Frank Curtis, through which much good was accomplished. Brethren Plumb and Moore were also present during the latter part of the meeting.

The Saints assembled at six o'clock each evening and held a two-hour prayer and testimony meeting, followed by preaching. Brother Sparling delivered a prophecy and all the Saints seemed to feel the power of the Spirit upon them. Many of the older Saints say that it was the most spiritual they ever attended. God was with us in every service. The whole surrounding country is stirred up and we have had larger crowds than ever before at this place. There were forty-six in all baptized, the youngest being eleven years of age and the oldest seventy-seven years. We trust that the Spirit will continue to work on this community and that there will be many more brought to the fold.

Asking the prayers of the Saints that I may ever be faithful and continue in the work of the Lord,

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. LIZZIE SLOVER.

A Correction.

In my letter which appeared in last week's HERALD, after "No laying of hands," I unintentionally omitted, "except for the healing of sick and ordaining the ministry." They do not believe in the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Your sister in Christ,
VIDA CATO.

"There is never a day so dreary
But God can make it bright,
And unto the soul that trusts him
He gives songs in the night.
There is never a path so hidden
But God will show the way,
If we seek the Spirit's guidance
And patiently watch and pray."

Conference Minutes.

SOUTHERN NEBRASKA.—District convened with the Saints of the Blue River Branch at Wilber, Nebraska, at 11 a. m., September 26, 1909, with C. H. Porter, president, in charge. The secretary being absent, Edith Trask was chosen secretary pro tem. Elder Wilber Savage was associated with the chair. Preaching at 11 a. m. by Robert Burgess; social service at 3 p. m., and preaching at 8 p. m. by C. H. Porter. Conference assembled at 10 a. m., September 28, in business capacity. The committee on credentials appointed were Z. L. Gouldsmith and Robert Burgess. Elder C. H. Porter read an article written by himself to the Daily Star in defense of Brother James Huff, recently appointed as chaplain in the State Prison, replying to a resolution adopted by the Methodist conference. The committee on auditing appointed were Wilber Savage and Z. L. Gouldsmith. Bishop's agent's report read as follows: Balance due church December 31, 1908, $133.63; receipts, $684.80; expenditures, $681.85; balance due church June 30, 1909, $136.58. Ministerial reports were then received from J. W. Waldsmith, C. H. Porter, William Grubb, Edward Rannie, Samuel Broliar, J. R. Croft, Wilbur Savage, Gottlieb Keller, and Robert White. Statistical reports of Nebraska City, Blue River, Eustis, Fairfield, and Franklin branches were read. The secretary entered a bill for $1.41, which was allowed and ordered paid. District officers, consisting of C. H. Porter, president, H. A. Higgins, secretary, and C. H. Porter, Bishop's agent and historian, were sustained by vote. Conference then adjourned to meet with the Nebraska City Branch in January, 1910, at the call of the president. H. A. Higgins, secretary.

FLORIDA.—Conference met with the Pleasant View Branch November 13, 1909, at 10.30 p. m. Brn. T. C. Kelley and W. A. West were chosen to preside and E. N. McCall secretary. Minutes of previous conference read and approved. Three branches reported and after some corrections on the reports of the Calhoun and Pleasant View branches they stood as follows: Santa Rosa, 74; Pleasant View, 44; Calhoun, 73. Ministers reporting: Elders B. L. Jernigan, preached twice, blessed one child; W. A. West preached eight times; Priest W. M. Hawkins preached five times; Claiborne Dixon, teacher, reported. Samuel Dixon, Bishop's agent, reported: Cash on hand last report, $95.85; received since, $81.00; paid out $156.85; balance, $20.00. Ruby McCall, treasurer, reported no funds during year. Election of officers resulted as follows: W. A. West, president; B. L. Jernigan, vice-president; E. N. McCall, secretary; Ruby McCall, treasurer. Adjourned to meet with Santa Rosa Branch on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in February, 1910, at 10.30 a. m. Elder T. C. Kelley was the speaker in the evening as also on Sunday at 10.30 a. m. and 2.30 p. m. E. M. McCall, secretary.

NODAWAY.—Convened with the Ross Grove Branch October 23 and 24, 1909. Bro. E. S. Fannon was selected to preside and W. B. Torrance was selected to act as secretary. Sr. May Jenson was selected as organist and W. T. Ross as chorister. Alma Nelson, R. K. Ross, and T. A. Ivie were appointed by the chair as credential committee. Statistical reports showed Guilford 96, gain 4; Bedison 90, gain 9; Sweet Home 61, loss 1; Ross Grove 44, gain 1. Ministry reporting were Elders C. E. Harpe baptized 3, E. S. Fannon, C. C. Nelson, R. K. Ross, T. A. Ivie; Priests W. T. Ross, I. M. Ross, R. F. Hill, W. B. Torrance baptized 5; Deacons Christian Kalstrup and Alma Nelson. Statements from Brethren Harpe and Fannon regarding the Rising Hope Branch were followed by a motion that the reports of the brethren be received and said branch be declared disorganized. Treasurer W. B. Torrance reported as follows: On hand June 6, 1909, $4.61; paid out on outstanding warrants, $4.61. Debts all paid to date. A request that the conference hear a report from the reunion committee was granted and Brn. E. S. Fannon and T. A. Ivie reported. The report was accepted and the committee discharged. Moved and carried that the secretary-treasurer of the reunion turn over the balance of reunion funds into the hands of the Bishop's agent to be used by him until called for by the district. Bishop's agent reported as follows: Due church January 1, 1909, $197; received since, $473.50; paid out, $639; on hands October 23, 1909, $31.50. Moved and carried that we accept the report and sustain the Bishop's agent. Bro. C. E. Harpe having incurred some expense in looking after district work assigned to him, it was moved and carried that a collection be taken up to defray this expense. The sum of $3.52 was contributed.

District historian, E. S. Fannon, reported at length, requesting all to write to him giving items of miraculous manifestations of healing, etc. Moved and carried that the district president and counselors, in connection with Bro. T. A. Ivie, act as a committee and take under advisement the holding of a reunion in 1910 and report to our next conference. Moved and carried that we appoint a committee to audit Bishop's agent's books and report to next conference. Brn. T. A. Ivie, C. E. Harpe, and W. B. Torrance were selected. Moved and carried that in event of the first counselor, A. E. McCord, to the president of district moving out of district, the president be privileged to choose another to fill the vacancy. A vote of thanks was tendered the reunion committee and also to the Saints of the Ross Grove Branch for the hospitality shown and entertainment of the visitors during the conference. Moved and carried that this conference recommend that an entertainment committee be appointed in the branch where the next conference is held. Brn. C. E. Harpe and Gomer R. Wells were the speakers during the conference; Brother Wells favoring us with a lecture on the land of far-off Australia. A part of Sunday afternoon session was devoted to short speeches. The following brethren responded: W. T. Ross, Alma Nelson, W. B. Torrance, R. F. Hill, Alex Jensen, and E. S. Fannon. It was moved and carried that the next conference convene with the Bedison Branch, the first Saturday and Sunday in February. W. B. Torrance, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

MASSACHUSETTS.—District Religio and Sunday school association met in convention at Somerville, Massachusetts, on November 13, 1909. Religio business session at 2.30 p. m. in charge of Vice-President E. M. Brown. Election of officers for ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Mrs. Leon Jordan, 84 Groveland street, Haverhill, Massachusetts; vice-president, Ada B. Sanford (now Mrs. Lloyd Newcombe), 207 A Pearl street, Somerville; secretary, Mary O. Lewis; treasurer, Franklin Dobbins, 10 Walnut street, Brockton, Massachusetts; member library board, Edmund M. Brown, 117 Parade street, Providence, Rhode Island; superintendent home department, Mrs. Franklin Dobbins. Evening service was devoted to Sunday school business, after which was read the district paper, The Gleaner, by the editor, Lucie H. Sears. The Sunday school election of officers resulted as follows: Superintendent, Lucie H. Sears, New Bedford, Massachusetts; associate superintendent, Mary O. Lewis; secretary and treasurer, Ora V. Holmes, 141 Prospect street, Providence, Rhode Island; member library board, E. H. Fisher, 100 Sycamore street, Winter Hill, Massachusetts; primary superintendent, Mrs. Dr. W. A. Sinclair. Delegates to General Convention were chosen by both societies. The completing of a new report blank to be used by the locals in Religio work for reporting to the district was left in the hands of the special committee, Edmund M. Brown and Mary O. Lewis. On Sunday morning, November 14, at 9 o'clock a joint prayer service was held in charge of A. B. Phillips and R. W. Farrell. At 10.30 the Sunday school had charge of the program, consisting of papers by Albert Sanford, W. W. Smith, and Georgia Spinnett; the blessing of three babes, and graduation exercises for twelve graduates of first course in normal work, speech and presentation of diplomas by E. H. Fisher. Afternoon service devoted to Religio work. During this service Albert N. Hoxie, jr., and Albert Sanford were ordained to office of priest. A solo was rendered by Ada M. Lewis. At 7.30 there took place the reading of "What we believe" in concert, three papers left from the afternoon service, after which J. D. Suttill, of Providence, Rhode Island, spoke on the "Sunday school and Religio." A vote of thanks was tendered to the Boston Saints, as also the retiring officers in both societies, and convention adjourned to meet in Attleboro, Massachusetts, second Saturday in May. Mary O. Lewis, 202 School street, Winter Hill, press committee for Religio and Sunday school.

Convention Notices.

The Far West district Sunday school association will meet in convention with the Zion's Star Sunday School, Saint Joseph, Missouri, January 8 and 9, 1910. It is earnestly hoped that there will be a large delegation, as this will be the first convention held since the resolution was passed that the Religio and Sunday school combine, and hold their convention separate from the conference. Will those secretaries to whom I have written answer at once, and will all the secretaries make out their December reports on Sunday, January 2, and send them to me the day following, so that I can summarize them in time for convention. Mary Kinnaman, secretary, 112 South Seventeenth street, Saint Joseph, Missouri.

Information Wanted.

Wanted: To know the whereabouts of William J. Griffiths, a deacon, by the Taylorville, Illinois, Branch, so as to communicate and labor with him. When last heard of was somewhere in Missouri; address all communications to Charles C. Simpson, clerk, 920 East Oak street, Taylorville, Illinois.

Proposed Amendments.

Notice is hereby given that at the next General Sunday School Convention amendments to the constitution of the General Association will be proposed as follows:

Article IV, section 1, insert after the word "secretary" the words, "a Home Department superintendent."

Article V. Change numbering of sections 4 and 5 to 5 and 6 respectively. Insert as number 4: "Home Department Superintendent.—The Home Department superintendent shall be a general executive officer in charge of the Home Department of the General Association under the general direction of the superintendent of the Association. He shall make statistical report to the General Secretary annually, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar year. He shall aid by counsel and advice the district Home Department superintendent when called upon or when he may find opportunity. He shall have charge of the work in all unorganized territory. He shall transfer all classes or members to the care of district associations as soon as such associations make proper provisions therefor and will accept the work."

Constitution for district associations, article III, officers, section 1: Names. Insert in third line after the word "secretary" the words "a Home Department superintendent."

Article IV, Duties of Officers. Change numbering of section 4 and 5 to 5 and 6 respectively. Insert as number 4: "Home Department Superintendent.—The Home Department superintendent of the district shall have charge of that department of the work under general direction of the district superintendent. He shall aid by counsel and advice the local Home Department superintendents when called upon or when opportunity may be found. He shall have charge of all classes or members not under the care of schools, and shall transfer to the schools all classes or members as soon as the schools make proper arrangements to care for the same. He shall make report to the district secretary annually or otherwise as the district superintendent may direct."

By-laws for Sunday schools, article I: In third line insert after the word "secretary," the words "a Home Department superintendent."

Article II.—Duties of Officers. Change numbering 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, to 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9 respectively. Insert as Section 4: "Home Department Superintendent.—Under the direction of the superintendent of the school, the Home Department superintendent shall have general care of the work of the department. He shall make efforts to promote the welfare of the department by thorough canvass of the territory considered to be within the precincts of the school to secure all members that may be induced to take up the work. He may with the consent of the superintendent appoint all visitors and assign them their work. He shall make such report to the officers of the school as they may require. He shall transfer all contributions received promptly to the treasurer of the school, keeping accurate account of same. He shall receive from the school such supplies as may be necessary for the proper conduct of the work. He shall transfer any or all members or classes to the main school who may choose to join same, or whom he may induce to attend the regular sessions of the school."

"The home department," as found on pages 15 to 20 of the 1907 edition of the Constitution, which was "temporarily adopted" at a General Convention some years ago, shall be amended so as to conform in principle to the foregoing changes; shall be arranged in articles and sections and properly numbered; any changes found necessary to conform to the Constitution shall be made.

Article XI, amendments. In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "Herald three," and insert in lieu thereof the words "The Sunday School Exponent two." The sentence would then read: "Notices of said amendments must be published in The Sunday School Exponent two months previous to the convening of each session."

Article IX, Basis of Representation.—Section L, in fourth line, insert after the word "members" the words "or fraction thereof over one half."

Article V of Constitution for Districts.—Section 2, voting. In the sixth line insert after the word "thereof" the words "over one half."

Respectfully,

VERNA GAMET.

Died.

UPDYKE.—Benjamin Updyke was born January 28, 1818. Died February 3, 1909, at his home near Andover, Allegheny County, New York, old age being the main cause of his death. The brother retained consciousness until the last moment of his life. Funeral from the home; sermon by Alma Booker.

Wholesale Lynching Averted in Iowa.

An exciting account of the most bloody conflict that ever occurred on Iowa soil since white possession, with the exception of the Spirit Lake Massacre, is to be found in a biography of Colonel Thomas Cox, an early Iowa pioneer, which has just been published by the State Historical Society of Iowa. Harvey Reid, the author of the volume, relates how Sheriff Warren of Jackson County, and Colonel Cox precipitated the struggle by an attempt with an armed posse of over forty men to arrest a gang of horse thieves and counterfeiters, who, after succeeding in evading conviction upon numerous trials now bade defiance to law and order and waved a red flag from their rendezvous at the hotel of their leader, W. W. Brown, at Bellevue, in Jackson County. When night settled upon the dead and wounded of both sides, the intensely excited settlers counseled together till dawn as to the method of disposing of the surviving captives. Adjourning till 10 o'clock in the morning they voted by a ballot of red and white beans dropped in a tin cup on the question of hanging. By a vote of forty-two to thirty-eight the frontier tribunal decided that instead of hanging, the thirteen wretches should be given from four to thirty lashes on the bare back and be sent down the river in skiffs without oars. Thus was lynching narrowly averted. No member of the gang ever returned to Jackson County, although several were implicated in the murder of Colonel George Davenport in 1845 at his home on Rock Island.

"Father, I bend to thee;
Thy grace extend to me
From day to day.
Safeguard me in thy fold,
From prowlers, false or bold;
Guide, strengthen, help, uphold
From day to day."

DOCTOR COOK AND THE NORTH POLE.

From present appearances as gathered from the press dispatches Doctor Cook did not find the North Pole. At all events that which he has offered as evidence lacks the qualification of being proof. One of the American Societies has accepted the claims of Commander Peary, though it remains to be tried out before the general body of scientists in the United States.

We reserved our opinion as to the correctness of Doctor Cook's statement, as we did also upon the claims of Commander Peary. We thought it possible that each of these explorers might have found what he believed to be the Pole, that is to say, the point where the lines of longitude would converge, and where the lines of parallel slip off the rounded top of the world, as a rope would slip off the rounded top of an apple or a ball. We thought it was possible that neither man had succeeded in making such exploration as would warrant reaching positive conclusions, as to what the condition at the pole might be. It seems better to wait development of events authorizing the establishing of the fact or the probability of the region being discovered, before jumping to conclusions which seemingly disturb the traditional teaching of many of the eldership touching the occupancy of the north land by the so-called lost tribes of Israel, upon whose approach to warmer climate the ice was to flow down at their presence.

Facts are stubborn things, but suppositions are evanescent. It is safer to so build our theories and our predictions from human judgment along such lines, that our faith in God and the final triumph of his cause will not be shaken from its foundation if predictions fail and speculations prove to have rested upon unsubstantial foundation. As we once stated to a brother who had uttered a prophecy, touching the possible blotting out of the fair scene of the landscape at Nauvoo, "Dear brother, make your prophecy of that character, that if it fails your faith will not be destroyed." His prediction was, that within four years from the date on which he stood on the brow of the hill, surveying that wondrous scene of beauty, that the besom of destruction would sweep over it and blot it out from human sight and remembrance. More than five times four years have passed since that day, and the scene is still as fair as ever, though the inhabitants have been removed and vegetation covers the waste places, even many of the streets which then lay beneath the gaze and marked places of human habitation; and the brother's body lies somewhere in one of God's half acres, waiting the day of the resurrection, when hills and valleys and plains will be crowned with the glorious beauty of a regenerated world.

If it should be discovered that Dr. Frederick A. Cook deliberately planned a fraud, which he has foisted upon a confiding world, it is one of the hugest jokes with which the scientific world has ever grappled. If he has disappeared from public gaze to live out the remainder of his life in the valley of human disgrace, a crowding sense of humiliation will certainly poison the enjoyment of the ill-gotten gain which he gathered from confiding people, eager to hear of his experiences in the regions of bitterest cold.

It seemed a marvelous thing, that a single individual, unauthorized by any scientific association, should have projected such a search as Doctor Cook reported that he had undertaken, and had succeeded, but what a stupendous farce, if it be proved that his reports are untrue, has been played upon the people. It is almost equally astonishing as the other would have been.

But what of human reputation. Doctor Cook was indorsed by many who seemed to vouch for him as a man of rectitude, a man of ability, and a man whose word might be trusted. If he has played this reputation false, it would seem to prove again the adage, "Opportunity makes thieves of us all." The amount which Doctor Cook has received of the currency of the realm is ridiculously small as compared with what he has surrendered in exchange for it.

The year 1909 has been a great centennial year. In it the world has celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of at least eight world-famed great men: Abraham Lincoln, William E. Gladstone, Alfred Tennyson, Charles Darwin, Edgar Allen Poe, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Frederic Chopin, and Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy. One of these men long dominated British politics; another presided during the most stormy and critical period of American history; three of them were renowned as writers; one as a scientist; and two were great musical composers.

MAN LEARNS TO FLY.

Some remarkable achievements have been heralded during the year. The first advertisement of an aeroplane ever published in a magazine appeared in the Literary Digest November 13. Wyckoff, Church, and Partridge are the adventurous pioneers in the realm of commerce who thus undertake to manufacture and supply to the public trade their airship, the Herring Curtiss Aeroplane. Operations of the Wright Brothers in America, Count Zeppelin in Germany, and Monsieur Bleriot in France have attracted considerable attention to the possibilities of aerial navigation and the year has seen the greatest progress ever achieved in that line.

May 29 Count Zeppelin in his dirigible airship began a flight that lasted thirty-six hours, during which he covered eight hundred and fifty miles. At the time, this was described as "the most remarkable flight of man in the history of the world." July 25 M. Bleriot with a French aeroplane accomplished the sensational feat of flying across the English Channel. October 4, during the Hudson-Fulton Celebration in New York, Wilbur Wright covered twenty miles with his aeroplane in thirty-three minutes. Two weeks later Count de Lambert in Paris covered thirty miles in fifty minutes, circling above the Eiffel Tower at a height of thirteen hundred feet. On November 3 Mr. Farman at Mourmelon, France, kept his aeroplane in air continuously for four hours, covering one hundred and forty-four miles.

RESCUE BY WIRELESS.

It has been remarked that 1909 "saw for the first time boats called from beyond sight or hearing, without wires or any other old-time method of communication, to the assistance of sinking ships." Reference is had to the dramatic summoning of the Baltic to the aid of the Republic, of the White Star Line, wrecked in collision with the Florida, at five o'clock on the morning of January 2, outbound off Nantucket with four hundred and sixty-one passengers on board. Another triumph over the Atlantic was the record run of the Mauritani; eastward trip, four days, thirteen hours, forty-one minutes; westward passage four days, ten hours, and fifty-one minutes; making the "highest record for highest daily runs, fastest passages, and highest speed between the Irish Coast and Sandy Hook."

THE NORTH POLE DISCOVERED—PERHAPS.

Early in September Dr. Frederick A. Cook "electrified the world" by his telegram announcing the discovery of the North Pole. His claim was thus stated: "After a prolonged fight against famine and frost we have at last succeeded in reaching the North Pole." The world enjoys being "electrified" and less than a week later another tremendous sensation was sprung when Commander Peary telegraphed, "Stars and Stripes nailed to the Pole." Cook claimed to have reached the Pole April 21, 1908; Peary claimed to have reached it April 6, 1909. Then began a torrid controversy that raged throughout two hemispheres and seemed in no way reduced in temperature by the frigidity of the subject. Doctor Cook elected to submit his case to the scientists of the University of Copenhagen, and as is well known to our readers, that august body returned an adverse verdict. Commander Peary's claim remains unchallenged to date by the general public or any reputable scientific body and it seems probable that he will go down in history as the discoverer of the Pole and the year 1909 will be recorded as the year in which that memorable feat was accomplished.

IN THE CHURCH.

The year has been marked by activity and success in missionary work. As we write, these words from Daniel Macgregor greet our eye:

STONINGTON, MAINE.

Things are moving along smilingly. Since last writing you, some seventeen precious souls have troubled the waters of baptismal regeneration, making sixty all told since coming to this town. Might say that the town, being of considerable size, there are a few more we would like to get.

Quite interesting to listen to the Saints who, by the way, are living in the seventh heaven these days, relate their dreams concerning the growth of the work. A little while ago I startled them by saying I expected we would baptize at least thirty-six. How I knew was that I had a dream in which I saw myself washing my gold watch chain, something I had never done. The interpretation was that each link symbolized a soul. Say, wasn't it a pity that it wasn't one of these two-yards-long ladies' chains I had? Well, the thirty-six came along all right. This being fulfilled, one of the Saints dreamed that there would be at least eight more baptized—that would make forty-four. Sure enough they came also. After this Brother Haskill arose in one of our meetings and testified that in a night vision he had seen sixty baptized. Another dreamed we would get five dozen—about the same thing. Well, yesterday, in the oft troubled waters of the old Atlantic three were immersed beneath the briny wave, making up the sixty.

LOSS BY DEATH.

The year has been marked by some very notable losses in the ranks of the ministry, notably during the months since the assembling of the General Conference. Elder John Hawley (familiarily known as Uncle John Hawley) who had been with the church since the days at Far West, Missouri, died April 17. Bishop Metuaore, of the Island Mission, died April 18. Elder D. S. Crawley died May 5. Elder A. E. Mortimer, of the Canadian Mission, died May 8. Elder Johnson Hay died June 16. Presiding Patriarch Alexander H. Smith passed away August 12, and was quickly followed by one of his associates, Patriarch Joseph F. Burton, October 1. Elder Amazon Badham, president of the Fremont District, died November 16.

NOTABLE EVENTS.

At least two important events will cause the year to be remembered in the history of the church. The Sanitarium at Independence, Missouri, was opened December 15 with appropriate services and was formally dedicated to the service of God in the work of ministering to the sick. This is in fulfillment of the revelation given to the church April 14, 1906. In this institution consecrated and devout men and women will essay to apply such remedies both spiritual and physical as are contemplated in the work of God for the healing of suffering humanity. December 20 the first patient was admitted, a non-member of the church, whose leg was mangled beneath the wheels of a moving train. He was brought in under the care of Doctor Twyman.

The other important event to which we refer is the organization of an Order of Enoch at Independence October 26. For some time past there has been a growing feeling in the church that the times are ripe for a forward movement toward economic independence and equality within the church. This feeling at times expressed itself in restless dissatisfaction; but oftener, we trust, in prayerful thought and profitable discussion. It took best form perhaps in a mass meeting of the eldership during the late General Conference. As a result of that meeting (in part at least) and the prayers and fastings of the people the Lord spoke to the eldership through the prophet authorizing the proper officers of the church to proceed to organize the people as wisdom, inspiration, and circumstances might indicate. The mass meetings at which the request for light was made and the latter one to which the revelation was presented were unique in the history of the Reorganization. These meetings, the organization effected at Independence, and in fact the entire forward movement will cause the year to be remembered.

CHANGES IN THE HIGHER QUORUMS.

At the General Conference referred to, certain changes were made that are worthy of note. In harmony with revelation, Elder Joseph Luff was released from the Quorum of Twelve that he might more fully enter upon his work as Physician to the church. He is now actively engaged as medical director in the Sanitarium. At the same time Elder Heman C. Smith was released for similar reasons from the same quorum that he might devote his entire time to his work as Church Historian. Elders J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell were called and ordained to fill the positions thus vacated. At the same conference Elder R. C. Evans was released from the First Presidency, in harmony with the revelation; his place was filled as directed, and he was ordained a bishop in harmony with the voice of the church. These changes, together with the vacancy created by the death of the Presiding Patriarch, mark the year as one of change.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

A LETTER FROM THE ISLANDS.

As the time nears for our contemplated trip to the low islands, we feel to write somewhat of events as they are transpiring here in this far-away mission.

Since writing our last letter, we have held a memorial service for Elder Joseph F. Burton, who was in charge of this mission for a greater number of years than any other one man, and who is remembered and honored as a father to the mission. The name of Tamati (T. W. Smith) and Iosepha (Joseph Burton) are mentioned more frequently among the native Saints than are any others.

The whole day was devoted to his memory, Turatahi, president of the southern half of the mission, preaching a sermon at eight o'clock in the morning, from 1 Peter 4:16-19, followed by Varoa at ten o'clock, using as his text, Hebrews 11:39, emphasizing the first part of the verse in speaking of the good report that was heard of him throughout the mission.

At the afternoon sacrament service, Alfred Sanford spoke very feelingly of his having labored so long and faithfully among his brethren in this part of the world.

In the evening, Tai was the speaker, but his text is now forgotten. It was thought best to turn all services over to the natives for that day, and we have no reason to be sorry for having done so.

The owner of the vessel upon which we are to sail, told me to-day that he would leave Tahiti not later than December 8, so it behooves us to get a large share of our correspondence attended to before the mail steamer arrives from America, and could you hear the typewriters clicking just now, you would know that we fully realized that fact. We are not expecting to receive any more mail until we reach Manihi for conference in April next, as we fear to have it chasing us about from island to island.

The "Pupu" people returned from the diving islands last Sunday morning, and on our way home from Tiona that afternoon we stopped at the hill to meet them, and although they received us with evident pleasure, it is equally evident that they will not soon be applying for rebaptism. They bore testimony to the truth of the work, and said they would remain in it until death. They do not admit that they have been cut off from the church. The Brighamites and Seventh Day Adventists are trying their best to get them, but with no apparent success.

The brethren have completed one hundred and fifty feet of the wall, and are still working on it, and have finished the steps that go up over it in front of the missionary house.

The white merchants of Papeete, including the French, are very much pleased with the improvement being made, and so express themselves when we meet.

The work of the phosphate company in Makatea is booming just now, and when the Panama Canal is completed, Tahiti will become a half way place between there and Australia, and is therefore doomed to be of more importance in shipping circles.

Ever wishing for the advancement of Zion,

Yours in gospel bonds,

C. H. LAKE.

PAPEETE, TAHITI, November 29, 1909.

JUBILEE NUMBER OF THE HERALD.

The Jubilee number of the HERALD, celebrating its fiftieth anniversary, will be issued January 26. The editors would like to get the addresses of any Saints who were readers of the HERALD at any time during the first year of its publication, 1860. Regular subscribers, of course, will receive the Jubilee number of the HERALD, but those desiring extra copies should write immediately to the Herald Publishing House. Extra copies will be ten cents for a single number, or twelve numbers for sixty cents.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It is the custom of the association, known as the Family of Joseph Smith, the Martyr, to meet annually on the 23d day of December, which is the anniversary of the birth of Joseph Smith. The meeting this year was held at the home of F. M. Weld, Lamoni, Iowa. About thirty-six members were present. The family now has on its roll one hundred members. These are direct descendants of Joseph Smith with their husbands and wives. A feeling of sadness pervaded the hearts of those present owing to the death of one of their associate presidents, Alexander H. Smith. A committee was appointed by the meeting to draft resolutions of condolence and these resolutions will appear elsewhere in the HERALD columns.

President Joseph Smith and Apostle F. A. Smith were elected as associate presidents of the family association for the coming year. The next annual meeting will be at the home of Elbert A. Smith.

President Joseph Smith being unable to attend the meeting and there being an earnest desire on the part of the family to meet with him, it was resolved that the executive board and the program committee be instructed to arrange a meeting of the family at Independence at some time during the year, providing it shall be found practicable.

R. B. Neal says that Joseph Smith was a "money digger." A recent number of the Sword of Laban, edited by R. B. Neal, contains thirteen appeals for money, direct or indirect, (most of the appeals are sufficiently direct). The paper is only a little eight-page affair.

It will be remembered that R. B. Neal attained some little notoriety for a time through the pages of the Helper, the official organ of the anti-Mormon league. This went down and later he appeared in a department in the Christian Standard. This also fizzled out. And now Neal is going down for the third time. Any of the elders who feel to lend a little aid to a dying man may send their remittances to R. B. Neal, Pikeville, Kentucky.

The Provo Herald, of November 23, 1909, contains three advertisements that are representative of the position of Senator Reed Smoot on the question of prohibition. Senator Smoot is an apostle in the Utah Church, and it is to be supposed that his attitude, to a degree at least, represents his church. These advertisements are as follows:

"Thanksgiving wines and liquors at Smoot Drug Company."

"Do you think Thanksgiving will be complete without a bottle of our finest wines? Smoot Drug Company."

"Do not miss getting a bottle of wine for Thanksgiving. Smoot Drug Company."

Our Utah brethren should clip these ads. and place them in the Book of Covenants alongside of the Word of Wisdom as a reminder of how they are not observing it.

Emerson's definition of a great man is one "who, in the midst of the crowd, can maintain with perfect sweetness, the independence of solitude." It is easy to think our own thoughts and preserve our integrity in solitude. It is comparatively easy anywhere to do right in a harsh, domineering spirit which will make righteousness hateful to all who come in close contact with us. But to do always the right thing "with perfect sweetness"—that is indeed greatness more than royal.—Selected.

Elders' Note-Book

MAKING IT PLEASANT FOR THE PREACHER.

"It's not everybody I'd put to sleep in this room," said Mrs. J—— to the fastidious and extremely nervous young minister, who was spending the night with the family. "This room is full of sacred associations to me," she went on. "My first husband died in that bed with his head right on those very pillows, and Mr. J—— died sitting right in that corner. Sometimes when I come into the room in the dark I think I can see him sitting there still. My own father died lying right on that sofa under the window. Poor pa! He was a spiritualist, and he always said he'd appear in this room again after he died, and sometimes I'm foolish enough to look for him. If you should see anything of him to-night, you'd better not tell me, for it would be a sign to me that there is something in spiritualism, and I'd hate to think that. My son by my first husband fell dead with heart disease right where you stand. He was a doctor, and there's two whole skeletons in that closet that belonged to him, and half a dozen skulls in that lower drawer. Well, good night, and pleasant dreams."—Tit-Bits.

METHODS IN GOSPEL WORK.

I wish to relate a few successful and unsuccessful methods employed which have come under my personal observation and experience. Where a good interest is found, the best results are obtained by staying with that place from three to eight weeks, and our men who do the most baptizing have, as a rule, adopted that method. Meetings held from two to ten days, as a rule, will just work up an interest, only to be left hoping some one else will visit that point and follow it up with good results. I think a better method is to gather the fruit while there, for if one goes away they do so only to let that interest die out, and in a year or more some one else will call and preach a few sermons, just to revive the interest and leave them again. In the opinion of the writer that method is a failure.

Very true, that method will sow the seed of the kingdom, and educate the people, but other denominations have come along frequently and reaped what we have sown. I believe Paul was the wisest and most successful missionary among the ancient apostles, and we learn that he stayed in a town until he built up a church if permitted to remain. Again Paul was an organizer. We find if we follow him that he preached and organized churches. We can turn the honest thinking people in our favor in a week or ten days or by a good spirited debate, and men of the world are ready then to help build us a church, and we can baptize more people than we do after such an effort if we would continue preaching and accept of the willing offers of the people to put up a building and organize a branch. Those who brave the world and the reproach incident to the acceptance of the angel's message desire a church home. They should have it, too, and could in many instances, if they would stay with a good interest as long as they should. We should "preach ourselves out of a crowd, or build a church."

It costs money to travel and work up one interest after another, only to move on and on to new fields, breaking new ground and reporting few baptisms. That method may be the best for district presidents, visiting scattered members, and preaching a few times in a place; but surely the missionary force ought to get better results from their time, talent, and the means spent. While the people are coming our way, many talking of being baptized, the Lord is working with them by the Spirit, and seemingly has opened the door in that place for us to occupy. Then is the time for us to do our effectual work and build up a church. "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of the light." The sectarian ministers have, in many instances, proven that statement true, using better methods than the servants of God. Again, the armies of the nations in their methods of warfare, in making an attack, aim to storm the fort till victory has come, or they are defeated. If victorious, they hold that point of vantage ground by garrison.

Our method is by branch. We wrestle not "against flesh and blood, but against spiritual wickedness in high places," and ours is a warfare not only for the men on the firing line but for the members, and especially the isolated ones, who as a rule furnish the traveling expenses for the traveling elder to fly from one point to another.

Experience is a slow teacher and a very slow method for our men to adopt, when our ministrations mean so much to the church and to the world. We should adopt the very best methods and stay with them. There are exceptions to the rule, of course, but we should adopt some rule of action which the successful man has found to be the best method, in building for the church for time and eternity. We need pastors and local workers in many instances, and could have them if we would hold good series of meetings in new fields like Oklahoma, until we baptize material enough to hold the fort while we move on to other fields.

Another method used by our people that I wish to call attention to is that of debates. Oklahoma and Texas has been a battleground for years and we have won victory after victory, and now it is so well known that the people are not so ready to believe the old slanderous stories and unscrupulous statements of men that oppose us as in years that are past. And I think that we would do well in some instances to ignore them. They have been so numerous in the past few years that it has been difficult for some of our men to hold many good series of meetings, which I believe to be God's method of saving souls. Debates are all right when necessary. But to spend our time with every unscrupulous fellow who throws dirt in the air is only cheapening our cause.

Prejudice is not so bitter in this mission as it was a few years ago. Unchristian and ungentlemanly statements against our people hurt the men who make them worse than they do us. I believe that to hold the gospel standard high and call for lovers of the truth to rally to it, and teach the world both by precept and example that we have been good and learned of him is the better method.

"WILL A MAN ROB GOD?"

"Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

We often hear it said by the members of the church, "Surely this is the work of the Lord, because of the perfectness of the gospel as taught by the church." When questions are presented to us we pride ourselves in being able to turn to the word of God and find the answer. When some one asks us what we believe with regard to baptism we hesitate not in giving the answer, because it is clearly expressed in the word of God. Again we are asked, "What form of church organization do you have?" And our bosom swells with pride as we refer them to the teachings of the Savior. "What is the office work of the Holy Spirit?" is next presented to us, and our joy is overflowing as we tell them of what the Holy Spirit does for us.

Would it not seem strange if the Lord, who has so clearly expressed himself upon matters touching our spiritual welfare, should he not also be interested in our temporalities and express himself equally as clearly thereupon? Why can we not recognize the hand of God in our temporal affairs? We are so wont to speak of the little that we have as being all our own, that which we have earned by our own strength. We fail to see the hand of God and to recognize that part of it is his. "Why, no, I would not rob God," you say, and yet upon further consideration you are found doing the very thing. How? Like the children of God did in the days of Malachi: "In tithes and offerings."

We do not seem to take as much pride in telling our inquiring friends about this subject as we did in telling them about baptism, organization of the church, office work of the Spirit, etc., and yet it is equally as important and as plainly taught. Perhaps it is because we have not fully complied with it ourselves and hence approach the question with less confidence.

"If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments." How much do you love the Lord? Enough to believe and obey the following?

And of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28: 22.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.—Deuteronomy 14: 22.

Ye tithe mint and rue and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment and the love of God: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 42.

And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest; yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchisedec, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood for ever. And it was this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid . . . tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed.—Book of Mormon, Alma 10: 1.

Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.—Nephi 11: 3.

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

Verily I say unto you, that it is my will that an house should be built unto me in the land of Zion, like unto the pattern which I have given you; yea, let it be built speedily by the tithing of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.

Is this not sufficient to give us an understanding of what the Lord requires of us as his children? Added to this we have the interpretation of the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, as formulated in an Address to the Saints: "The word tithe means tenth, and the rendition of a tithe as referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or a tenth of the increase."

When should we comply with this law? Now. The "doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." The work of the Lord needs your assistance. "The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few," is the condition confronting the church at the present time. The cry comes, "Send forth laborers." This the church is trying to do, but is handicapped because of the slackness of many of the Saints. "What shall the harvest be?" This depends partly upon you, or perhaps it would be better to say, as we read these lines, this depends partly upon me. What am I doing to help swell the harvest? But, says one, I still owe a mortgage of one thousand dollars on my farm. When I get that paid then I will pay my tithing. What, make the Lord wait until your neighbor is paid? Yes, but the Lord told us to "owe no man anything," therefore I must pay my neighbor first. Did the Lord tell you to contract the debt? No. Then why try to excuse yourself because of your indebtedness? The tenth of what you have above your indebtedness is the Lord's. It is not yours, and you are robbing God by withholding it from him. Long years we have been praying for the redemption of Zion. Why not labor toward that end as well as pray for it?

We should comply with the law right now. First, because the work of the Lord needs your assistance. Then again, we should comply with the law because of our love for service. We frequently hear Saints in bearing their testimony of the work say, "I love the Lord with all my heart." Do you, when at the same time you are withholding your tithes and offerings? Again we hear them say, "My trust is in the Lord." Is it, when you are refraining from complying with his law for fear you may have need of the money? Let us put our trust in the Lord in all that the term implies. Think of the great work now lying before the church as made known in the late revelations. Come to the rescue with your aid, be it much or little. Do it willingly. "The Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat of the good of the land of Zion." The church needs your willing service now in order to meet the demands of the work, to care for the poor and needy, to provide for those dependent upon the church for support, to arrange for the establishing of God's children.

"Ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings." You notice we can rob God in withholding our offerings as well as in the tithing. Our obligation does not cease when our tithes have been paid. We have heard it expressed that when one has paid his tithes he could spend the remainder for whatever his soul lusteth after. But God will hold us responsible and accountable for the use we make of that with which he has blessed us. We are but stewards of the same. Picture the sad condition of those who, when standing before the Lord at the Judgment Day, will have it said to them, "Ye have robbed me." On the other hand see the countenances of those who have been faithful in all things. What a contrast! May God help us to be obedient in all things.

BISHOP J. A. BECKER.

REASONS WHY

YOU SHOULD HEAR THE LATTER DAY SAINT FAITH EXPLAINED BY THEIR OWN REPRESENTATIVES.

1. The first reason is: because it is right that one person should properly understand the faith of another. A man with any amount of experience in human affairs ought to know that any society is better able to properly present the facts than its enemies are. One ought to have honor enough about him to want to know the facts. If one has the true faith of the Bible it will not hurt him to compare it with others, and if he does not possess all the truth, it will benefit him to examine anything else claiming to be of God. The true Latter Day Saints claim their faith is both orthodox and evangelical, and in the strictest accord with the New Testament faith. Should not such claims be heard and examined? But we insist on being heard for ourselves inasmuch as some have misrepresented us in the common literature of to-day, and falsely and unjustly connected us with other denominations.

Because the faith of Christ has always been opposed by certain religious bigots, the Latter Day Saints are not above their Master, in having their cause misrepresented by both pulpit and press, and themselves frowned upon by those who have the opportunity, if they would only take it, of knowing better. Because of this misrepresentation, many refuse to avail themselves of the opportunity to learn the facts, but prefer to accept the unproven statements of some speaker or writer who, like themselves, may be either ignorant of, or prejudiced against, the faith of the Saints.

2. The Constitution of our country grants to everyone the right to worship God according to his own conscience. That right should not and will not be abridged by those who are truly American, neither by legal enactments, the sword, the darkened frown, or the cold shoulder. The latter two are perhaps worse forms of persecution than the former two, and are most certain to reveal the lack of the good Spirit in the heart of those employing that kind of persecution. It is both un-American and un-Christian.

The laws of the land grant to every man the right of self-defense. Semi-civilized and even barbarous nations have some such law. Shall it be said in America and among those who claim to be Christians that this law is flagrantly traduced and Latter Day Saints not be privileged to explain their own doctrine and history? We ask for a hearing and then a comparison with the church of the New Testament in faith, organization, and gifts of the Holy Spirit. Will the reader allow prejudice in his heart or fears for his own faith or the scorn of the vicious to cause him to treat that request with silent antipathy?

3. Jesus has said: "As ye would that men should do to you do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6: 31. Some benevolent societies, and some churches, claim this as their golden rule. Are they willing to put it in practice and apply it to Latter Day Saints? As the reader of these lines would have others kindly and earnestly examine his faith, so it is his duty, in the sight of God, to do also to others "likewise." Those who refuse to do so stand self-condemned in the sight of our heavenly Father. Their conscience must most surely smite them when they think of their own injustice, and contemplate the results of their hypocrisy at the judgment day. We must do unto others as we would have them do to us if we maintain a clear conscience and obtain the full reward promised to the faithful.

4. Solomon said: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him." This is good advice for all to follow and especially for those who try to trace their origin to the building of the temple. Latter Day Saints desire to explain their faith in every neighborhood, believing it will make more noble men and women everywhere, helping all more clearly than ever before to see their duty to God and their fellow-men.

Who will judge before hearing it? Who will hear first? He that answereth a matter before he hears it is not as reasonable as those who lived three thousand years ago.

In some places certain prejudiced ministers care so little for the shame or folly of it that they advise their members not to attend the services of the Latter Day Saints and not to obtain a knowledge of their faith. The true reason many times is because they fear to compare faiths; especially is this true in places where they are somewhat acquainted with ours. In some cases they may be grossly ignorant of the faith of the Latter Day Saints, and thinking its tendency is toward evil, warn their flock to beware. No minister that really knows the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints and has studied it with a view to finding good in it, will ever advise his hearers to keep away, nor will he fling stones at the Latter Day Saints from behind his pulpit, for no system of faith is more scriptural or more moral and uplifting.

Why should a minister refuse his members the privilege of getting a correct understanding of the faith of others? Does he fear comparison? Or does he consider their minds too weak to tell truth from error when they hear it? As stated before, many times they fear comparison, but reverently inform their members for their spiritual good (?), "It is best that you do not read of, or listen to, other faiths, as it will make you uncertain and unsteady in your own." That has for centuries been the cry of Catholicism. They have refused their members the privilege to listen to Protestants, or even to read their books. Indeed they may not read their own without counsel from the priests. For centuries Protestants have been proclaiming against such censorship as "ignorance incased in bondage," but it sometimes occurs that Protestants want "ignorance incased in bondage," when Latter Day Saints appear in town. One ought to feel humiliated to think truth will not bear comparison with error, or that one truth compared with another would weaken both. Can not those who have the truth in one church listen to a truth in another without becoming weak in their own? Ah, no! that is not the reason the minister doesn't want his hearers to go elsewhere. He fears they may find elsewhere some more truth, and he will miss them at collection time, for a minister who will advise his flock not to search everywhere for truth and goodness is not preaching for their good. He is only preaching for his own selfish, financial end. Latter Day Saints do not fear to have their members go elsewhere to seek for truth. It never weakens their faith. It generally makes them stronger. Better leave a faith that could be changed by every wind of doctrine. The faith of Jesus Christ fears no comparison, fears no conflict, and fears no just criticism. If one has a weak faith better keep it wrapped in swaddling clothes and securely housed from coming in contact with anything else, but it will not be of much service to you. When the storms of life appear, and the waves of passion dash high, it will be of little service to you. Examine the faith of the Latter Day Saints and see if it will not be of more service to you. Keep all the truth you have and strengthen it with more. The true faith of Christ will furnish you with the abiding Comforter and he will be with you for ever.

5. The Devil opposes most that which contains elements most destructive to his kingdom. No society perhaps has been more severely persecuted by the evil influences operating through the pulpit and press, than have the Latter Day Saints. But this ought to be a testimony to those who are thoroughly acquainted with the Bible that there may be some truth among a people who are so generally opposed, especially when we are abundantly able to prove that the opposition has no grounds whatever for their persecution. This has been our claim all along and we have stood ready with the proofs. Does not the Bible reader remember that Jesus said, "Blessed are ye when all men shall revile you and persecute you and say all manner of evil against you for my name's sake"? Does he not remember that Jeremiah said, "Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird. All of the birds round about are against her"? The reader will find that in all ages of the world the truth was evilly spoken of, and this age is no better than any other. Human nature is the same now as ever, and so is the Devil. Why should not Latter Day Saints be heard in their own defense? More especially seeing they have been misrepresented by others.

To give the reader a general idea of the faith of the Latter Day Saints we present the following brief outline.

We believe Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was sent to make an infinite atonement for a fallen race, and also to teach the only effectual plan of salvation ever given to man, and exemplify the same in his life.

HISTORY OF THE SANITARIUM.

BY HEMAN C. SMITH.

(Paper read at dedication of the Sanitarium on December 15, 1909.)

To speak of the events connected with the erection of this pile of brick and mortar would be a short story, but to treat the subject comprehensively, we must speak of the causes leading up to the consummation of the building.

Right here we are reminded of the philosophy of Mark Twain, when he said: "Anybody can write a book but to write a preface—ah, there's the rub."

The earliest record we have of man and his relationship to herbs is as follows:

And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so. And the earth brought forth grass, and herb yielding seed after his kind, and the tree yielding fruit, whose seed was in itself, after his kind: and God saw that it was good.

After this creation the use of herbs was referred to man in the following language: "And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree, in which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat."

It would be a reflection upon the wisdom of the Creator to say that he provided herbs for the use of the man in good health, but made no herbs adapted to the use of the sick man.

That he did not limit himself, however, to the uses of these ordinary means of providing for man in sickness or in health must be apparent to all; and hence every thoughtful man will accept the reasonable account that he in time of emergency employed the extraordinary system of sending bread from heaven in the shape of manna, perpetuating the widow's loaf and cruse of oil, increasing the loaves and fishes upon which the multitude fed, and of saying to the sick of palsy, or other disease: "Arise, take up thy bed and walk."

Yet God would not have his creatures to ignore the wonderful provision made for them in the ordinary things which our beautiful earth brings forth in abundance. Ordinarily he provides water through the means of rain and dew, and again through extraordinary means it gushes from the rock at his command.

Usually water is turned into wine by the slow process of its passing through the vine and its fruit; again God employs the extraordinary, as at the feast of Cana.

In the treatment of the sick the churches have generally resorted to the ordinary means to the exclusion of the extraordinary, thus placing themselves entirely in the hands of man, and hence have been imposed upon by quacks and unscrupulous men. Seeing the fallacy of this, Latter Day Saints have been inclined to run to the other extreme, relying upon the extraordinary to the exclusion of the ordinary. Results have demonstrated the last practice to be more satisfactory than the first; and yet we can not safely ignore the ordinary means of healing, for as we are informed and have observed: "All have not faith to be healed." To despise the ordinary means or to neglect to skillfully apply them would be analogous to refusing to drink water only as it came forth from the rock at God's command, or to eat bread only as it falls like manna from heaven.

This ordinary provision to meet the demands of God's afflicted people is very beautifully set forth in the writings of Alma recorded in Book of Mormon:

And there were some who died with fevers, which at some seasons of the year was very frequent in the land; but not so much so with fevers, because of the excellent qualities of the many plants and roots which God had prepared, to remove the causes of diseases to which man was subject by the nature of the climate.

Alma discloses here the conviction of his own mind to the theory that God prepared plants and roots for the purpose of healing diseases. It follows that there should be those among God's people who by research and study are competent to skillfully prepare and apply those divinely provided remedies.

When the gospel was restored in the last days, the instruction connected with it was broad enough to include all the provisions God had made for his people. The door was opened through which the marvelous and extraordinary manifestations of God's power could be realized in the healing of the sick, and men were especially authorized to officiate in the name of Christ in rebuking diseases; but this was not all. To prevent quacks and unreliable and unprincipled persons imposing upon his people he appointed one to treat his people, according to the ordinary provisions made by him. In a revelation given to Thomas B. Marsh in September, 1830, while the church was in its infancy, we find the following:

Behold, I say unto you, that you shall be a physician unto the church but not unto the world, for they will not receive you. Go your way whithersoever I will, and it shall be given you by the Comforter what you shall do, and whither you shall go. Pray always, lest you enter into temptation and lose your reward. Be faithful unto the end, and lo, I am with you. These words are not of man, nor of men, but of me, even Jesus Christ, your Redeemer, by the will of the Father. Amen.

Thomas B. Marsh was also called to act as a minister in spiritual things.

In harmony with this was the instruction given in 1906 in obedience to which this institution was erected. It reads as follows:

It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant Joseph Smith has already stated to you. This should be done as soon as it is found to be practicable, and without unnecessary delay. The presiding bishop and his counselors and the bishopric of the Independence Stake should take counsel together in locating and establishing this sanitarium.

It is also expedient that these should be assisted by the advice and counsel of one of my servants who is acquainted with the laws of health and the practice of medicine, and who may have charge when the institution is established. It is in accordance with the instruction given to my servant Joseph Smith that my servant Joseph Luff, who has been giving his attention to the study of medicine and has been preparing himself for usefulness in this direction, be associated with this sanitarium as a medical director and physician to the church and be put in charge, that he may be an assistant to those who seek the aid of this institution of the church, in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician, with those who from time to time may be called to administer in laying hands upon the afflicted and sick, where they may be removed from influences and environments unfavorable to the exercise of proper faith unto the healing of the sick.

As you see, this institution is not only for the ordinary method of healing but for the extraordinary as well. Where God's people may receive such treatment as is provided for in the law free from the unhallowed influences of the scoffer and the unprincipled or inefficient professional.

All this is in harmony with the instruction which says:

And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands upon them in my name; and if they die they shall die unto me, and if they live they shall live unto me.

The statement of Joseph Luff made at the conference when the above instruction was received shows that the same influence or power through which the instruction was given had been preparing him for the important work for which he was designated. He said:

I want to say to the church that I have sensed very keenly for the past seven years that I was an object of criticism, occupying by the calling of God a place in the Quorum of Twelve, and yet entering upon the study and practice of medicine. I want to say further that so far as the conditions that led to my decision in that direction are concerned, they were not of my choosing. It was a matter of coercion in a physical sense. I was absolutely disqualified for the work of preaching. The way opened before me, or suggestion came to me after my last mission in the East, and I began to consider this new movement. I believed that the thoughts within my mind were stirred by the divine Spirit. If they were not, and if my leadings in connection with what has developed since then have not been those of the divine Spirit, I am not capable, nor have I ever been, of telling what the leadings of the divine Spirit are.

I have with upraised hands, fearing my own weakness and folly, asked God to keep me in his protecting hand. I sought neither money nor power nor place, but simply to be an agent in his hands, so recognized by the church, to go wherever and do whatever he might suggest, and I was ready to take whatever consequences might come from my pursuing that which was pointed out by him.

I wrote to the President of the church. I obtained his answer. I stated in my letter to him that I hoped he would think carefully over the matter, because whatever his advice to me should be I should follow it. That advice came in accord with what had been my own impression, and with the statement in it that he had received divine assurance that it was right, and hence advised me.

Since then, in the prosecution of the work, I have sought for grace to occupy, not knowing what the ultimate might be, and have believed myself all along to be led, not only in the selection of the school of medicine; but in the attitude that I should assume in distinguishing between some things that were right, and others that were wrong, in the course to be followed there.

My work has grown already and I am dealing with men from California to Maine in the private capacity in which I have served as a physician, and I know that this new capacity will, when it is published abroad, be a signal for correspondence from one end of the country to the other, requiring advice and treatment, far and near, and some wisdom greater than I have heretofore possessed will be essential. I believe that only from the Almighty, who has imposed this duty and this obligation, can that wisdom and that power come. And if the channel through which he conveys his grace is the church, I as a part of that church may legitimately appeal to you, in so far as you may feel an interest in my work, to exercise your power of prayer to God that unto me he may give that grace that will enable me to occupy as a man of God should occupy, and in a way that will reflect credit, and no ill upon the body.

President Joseph Smith at the same time and place said:

In the appointment and the establishment of a sanitarium at Independence, here, there will be quite a number of things that will enter into a consideration. It is in the hands of the Bishopric, general, and of the stake, at as early a day as practical to secure necessary land and building. It ought to be borne in mind that we must not get excited, or go to an extreme. It is a necessary institution. It is not an indorsement of any special system of medicine, not intended to be that by the church. And the officer who will have charge, Bro. Joseph Luff, having been led up to the consideration of this question, to which I myself have been informed from time to time, and I might say privy to it, will take great pains, undoubtedly, to see that the interests of those who will place themselves in this institution for treatment shall receive that which is best calculated for them. If anyone wants the services of any other physician (if they want a physician at all) that privilege will certainly be accorded them, just the same as it will be accorded to them not to take any medicine at all.

The object of this is to secure a place, if practicable, where our people may be treated by their own faith, persons of their own faith, free from harassing and embarrassing conditions. . . .

I believe that Brother Luff has been led. I see nothing derogatory to his ministration as a member of the apostles' quorum in undertaking this work, having the oversight of it. Therefore I believe that we should exercise steadfast faith in God and in each other, that we may have what we are asking for and expecting.

The parties named in the instruction took the matter under advisement and subscriptions were solicited. The admonition to keep out of debt necessarily caused delay in starting. In July, 1907, this tract was purchased, plotted, and named Kennington Addition to Independence. In the north part of this addition, fronting on Blue Avenue, a five-acre lot was reserved for Sanitarium purposes. Excavations began in August, 1907. The stone basement followed as soon as the excavation was ready. On October 8, 1907, the brick work began. By the end of the year much of the brick work had been accomplished and steps had been taken towards the incorporation of the Independence Sanitarium. There had been expended for labor and material $13,809.05. This with the cost of the site netted an expense of $19,809.05. This creditable showing of Saints and friends encouraged the committee and work was pushed with vigor.

At the April conference of 1908 the committee reported that the walls were completed, the plumbing done, electric lighting apparatus in, heating plant set, basement floor cemented, and a part of the plastering done. The total cost to the time had been $22,299.96, and offerings had been received to the amount of $24,251.48. At the Annual Conference of April, 1909, the committee reported the building complete, fixtures contracted for, and furnishing begun. The total cost to that time had been $49,248.60, of which $16,118.74 had been paid from the general church fund, leaving a total of $33,129.86 raised by donation. This amount has been paid for this purpose, and applied as you see in less than four years from the date of the special instruction to build. If these figures do not agree with the Bishop's, remember his are up to date, while mine agree with report of committee last April.

The General Conference of last April referred the arranging of the opening exercises to the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Sanitarium Committee. This gathering is the result. And here the historian's duty ends, as it is not his province to deal in futures.

Day by Day.

I heard a voice at evening softly say,
Bear not thy yesterday into to-morrow,
Nor load this week with last week's load of sorrow.
Lift all thy burdens as they come, nor try
To weigh the present with the by and by,
One step and then another, take thy way;
Kindle thy hope. Put all thy fears away;
Live day by day.

Though autumn leaves are withering round thy way,
Walk in the sunshine. It is all for thee.
Push straight ahead, as long as thou canst see;
Dread not the winter whither thou mayest go,
But when it comes, be thankful for the snow.
Onward and upward look and smile and pray;
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
The path before thee doth not lead astray.
Do the next duty. It must surely be
The Christ is in the one that's next to thee.
Onward, still onward with a sunny smile,
Till step by step shall end in mile by mile.
"I'll do my best," unto thy conscience say;
Live day by day.

Live day by day.
Why art thou bending toward the backward way?
One summit and then another thou shalt mount.
Why stop at every round the space to count?
The past mistakes if thou must still remember.
Watch not the ashes of the dying ember.
Live day by day.

—Selected.

Lovingly Dedicated to the Saints of the Delano Branch of Thirty Years Ago.

"Where is now the merry party
I remember long ago,
Laughing round the Christmas fire,
Brightened by its ruddy glow?"

To-night my mind goes back to scenes of childhood, and again I catch a glimpse of a Christmas time which is now "far away." It was when a child in the dear old Delano Branch, where my parents and brother and sisters and myself obeyed the gospel, and I recall many things which have been relegated to the past, yet, to-night it all seems but so short a time ago, and they come with a lingering sweetness which makes the reflection pleasant to me.

There are many things of which I think, yet the one uppermost in my mind is of the Christmastide when the Saints met at my father's house, and, bringing their well-filled baskets spent such a happy, merry Christmas together. Yes, there were men and women, youths and maidens, and sweet little children. Brother Delano was there and "Aunt Lucy," who years ago wrote pretty stories for the Hope. There were so many that I can not name them all, yet I see them in memory, and it would make me glad to meet them again after all the years which have intervened. Among the number I well remember Sr. Maria Bozarth, her pleasant face aglow with pleasure to think that both herself and children were permitted to go and enjoy a day like this.

When thinking of the many noble women who have married elders, my mind often goes back to her. She truly was a model of patience, and so self-sacrificing, enduring much for the gospel's sake. I assure you her children can call her blessed, and her example still lives on though she is dead.

There were several of the mothers who were present on that occasion who have passed on to the other side. Of the number I recall was Sister Worden—jolly old soul she was; Sr. Ella Beebe—such a little mite of a woman that she was the recipient of many jokes. Then there were Sisters Simons, Sherard, Douglass, and Daniels. All have "Gone from us for ever,

Longer here they might not stay;
They have reached a fairer climate,
Far away, far away."

There was the Noftsgar family, the Vandusens, the families of each of the departed sisters I have mentioned. Then there were "Aunt Bettie," "Aunt Catherine," and "Uncle Ned," as they were familiarly called; and among the young people I so well remember the large twin girls, Angie and Emma, and the twins of my own age, Ella and Ellsworth. There are many to-day scattered over the land who are the children or children's children of that merry group, that happy little band of Saints who loved each other as saints of God should do; and the only family of that small branch which being hindered by sickness from being among the happy number, was generously remembered in a substantial way that afternoon, some thirty years ago.

Nor have I forgotten one family of which I have as yet made no mention, that of Brother and Sister Terry, and little Moroni, their sweet, prattling boy of but a few years. But somehow when I think of them my mind does not linger on the Christmas scenes, but wanders quickly to the white schoolhouse up on the hill, where with patience and kindness he taught for two consecutive terms the boys and girls of the district, and there is always a feeling of pleasure connected with the reading of articles written by J. M. Terry, or "Uncle John."

But to return. Since that time some have passed away whose going was like the closing of a bright summer's day, so young in years were they. Some went down like a shock of corn, fully ripe; and others, none but the all-wise Father knows why they should lay down their lives which were so dear to companions and children, and leave homes so lonely without them, and little ones in this unfriendly world without parents to guide them. "But we know our heavenly Father knows, and he doeth all things well."

"Yet there are some few remaining,
Who remind us of the past;
But they change as all things change here—
Nothing in this world can last.
Years roll on and pass for ever;
What is coming, who can say?
Ere this closes, many may be
Far away, far away."

Dear ones, wherever you are, whatever your surroundings in life, remember that although man may change, yet is the Lord the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and that although the heavens and earth pass away, yet will his words never fail. Let us be faithful, and when we shall meet in the great reunion on the other side we shall rejoice together with those gone before, although many of us shall have come up through great tribulation.

Yours in bonds of love,
ELLEN SHERARD ADAIR.

Letter Department

DAGONIA, MISSOURI, November 12, 1909.

Dear Herald: We are busy. Elder W. P. Bootman is with us, preaching to good crowds at Shake Rag Schoolhouse. Since several have been baptized they are calling it Mormon Rag. This is in Reynolds County.

We closed a debate at Naylor, Missouri, November 24, with John L. Fry, representing the non-progressive Campbellites. Although the Christian church at Naylor represents the progressive, they indorsed Mr. Fry. He was very ungentlemanly. He declared that out of twenty-four debates I was the biggest little scoundrel and hypocrite he had ever met. Not being able to secure a chairman, such trash could not be shut out. But Mr. Fry killed himself by such unmanly conduct. The Campbell proposition came last, and I had the closing speech. After Mr. Fry had delivered his last speech, he told the people they were all dismissed. At that moment I was on the stand and they remained, while Fry was packing his grip to leave for the depot. When he saw that the people were going to remain he sat down and sweat like a trooper, while I recapitulated on Campbellism under the influence of the Spirit. I felt its quickening power especially in quoting Acts 7: 51: "Ye stiff-necked and uncircumcised in heart and ears; ye do always resist the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." We feel satisfied with the result.

There is a good little band of Saints living near Naylor. We enjoyed our visit with them. Let me say to all the Saints in this southern Missouri region that the time for closing the Bishop's agent's books will be December 31. I want all your names on the book for tithes and offerings. The church needs your help. I am rejoicing in the Lord's work.

In gospel bonds,
A. M. BAKER.

BLAIR, NEBRASKA, November 16, 1909.

Editors Herald: I take this means of letting you know that we are still working in the interest of the cause. It has been storming since Friday last, and the rain turned to snow, and now we have about three inches on the ground. Gospel work is moving rather slowly in this district. Workers are scarce, traveling and local. So very little is done in missionary work. As soon as the corn is out there will be plenty of openings for several preachers. There is more advancement among the scattered members, I believe, than among the branches. Some who have never had branch privileges are yet strong in the faith. It is of great encouragement to the elder to find those people, after years in the church, no branch and little preaching, keeping the law as well as those who have been hearing preaching every Sunday, and a greater percentage of those paying tithing than in the branches.

That is where we are falling short. Only about eighteen per cent of the members of the district have their names on the Bishop's books from year to year. This year has been the best one since I have been agent, both in the amount received and in the number of names on the books. I hope to hear from the Saints who read this who have not paid in tithes and offerings for the year. I hope they will think about the matter and send me the money they owe the Lord, so that I may be able to supply the missionaries' families and the poor. There are some that we were unable to supply for last month, and still owe them, so I take this means of asking you for help. Send it in so we can send it to those who are waiting for it. This is a debt you owe to God and to the servants you send out each year, depending on you to support their families while they are gone. Don't you think you ought to do your part? You can't expect them to do theirs unless you do yours. Anyone wishing preaching or even a visit from an elder, write me.

H. S. LYTLE, Bishop's Agent.

LANHAM, NEBRASKA, November 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: You can imagine how much I enjoy the pages of the HERALD each week, since it has been several months since I have heard a sermon preached by one of our elders.

Lanham is on the Kansas-Nebraska line; half the town is in Kansas and half in Nebraska. The population is mostly German.

There are three churches in town, the German Lutheran, Catholic, and Christian. The Christian church building has not been used for over two years, however. We are using it this winter to hold our lecture course numbers. There is a new piano in the building and we have several quite talented musicians and vocalists in town.

I have often thought what a good opportunity it would be for an opening for our faith, and should any elder desire to come here I will do all I can to further the work in this place. I have been here three months and in that time have attended church once—at the German Lutheran. It seems too bad that the church building which I have mentioned remains unoccupied while in some places the good work of extending the gospel is retarded in a measure by the lack of a place in which to hold services.

Hoping to keep in touch with this glorious work and to help it along,

Your sister in the one faith,

BERTHA BRANDON.

GRINNELL, IOWA, November 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: For the first time in the twenty-nine years that I have been in the ministry, I have been tied at home on account of the illness of my wife, and I have been kept at home for two months on her account. Remember us at the throne of grace.

I have just finished reading the October number of the Journal of History, and truly that number is worth more than the price of a whole year. Yes, the one article, "The Missouri troubles," is worth the year's subscription. The article ought to be read by every Latter Day Saint, and especially by those weak in the faith. What a weapon that is to meet the enemy with! A confession by the world that the Saints were very much wronged and misused by their enemies, and, as we read in Deuteronomy 32: 31, even our enemies being judges. Well, the whole Journal is just fine, and the Autumn Leaves is getting better every number.

I opened a new place at Searsboro about twelve miles south of Grinnell last month, and baptized a very fine man there, Bro. James M. Robinson. He will be a member of the Lincoln, Nebraska, Branch next spring. Also performed the marriage ceremony for a very fine couple while there, both outsiders. There was a fine interest and good attendance during the meetings, and a warm invitation to return again and hold more meetings, which will be done just as soon as the way opens.

I remain your colaborer,

J. S. ROTH.

EROS, LOUISIANA, November 22, 1909.

Dear Herald: We have been permitted by the help of our blessed Redeemer to have Brn. James Smith and Jesse Simmons with us. They have been holding meetings, and have had large and interested crowds. Several were converted and baptized. Many that did not join are strong in the faith. The brethren left here and went to Arkansas. I was made to rejoice under the sound of their voices, and to shed tears of joy at the many good, comforting words to the people of this place. We realize that there are people in this world who cast all manner of scorn at us and at the elders who are fulfilling His command, but let us press on and look to him, the one that is able to reward. Jesus said, "Blessed are ye when men shall hate you, and when they shall separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and shall cast out your name as evil for the Son of Man's sake." This is my consolation. They may persecute us, but I put my trust in him who is able and willing to do all things if we obey his holy word. Let us try to do our duty and hold up this work and be faithful.

Pray for me that I may keep my heart pure and live up to the commands of our blessed Savior, and that I may reap a great and rich reward in heaven.

Your sister,

JESSIE WILLIAMS.

WILLAPA, WASHINGTON, November 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: The work here is more than holding its own in the most of places where it has been planted.

Our difficulty here is like that in many other places, so much ground opened up, and few local men to care for it; hence of a necessity the missionaries must spend much of their time among the Saints.

Brother Stead and I have been together most of the time this year. We started our summer's work by holding a series of meetings in Langley, baptizing five. The Saints helped what they could and made it pleasant for us.

From Langley we went to Vancouver, B. C., where we held meetings for five weeks on the streets. While we did not baptize any, I believe it is safe to say that more people listened to the presentation of the gospel than at any other time in that place. The Saints of Vancouver, New Westminster, and Nanaimo, gave us valuable assistance.

After leaving Vancouver we preached in Bow and Baker, Washington, also Clayburn, B. C., with some interest. The last named place is where the Hartnell Brothers run a saw mill; a Latter Day Saint is always made welcome there.

After our reunion (which convened August 13 to 23) we went into the southern part of the district, J. D. going to the Mossy Rock country. I came to Centralia, and after a short time Brother Stead joined me at Centralia. We held a two-week meeting at this place, baptizing one, also helping to organize a Religio. We have a fine spiritual, intellectual, and zealous band of young people at this place.

Seven of our meetings held in Centralia were held in the Church of Christ building. Some of their leaders did not believe what we told them, so they challenged us for a debate, and unless some one bluffs out, there will be a theological fight in this neck of the woods this winter.

From Centralia we went to Chehalis. Having no public building to hold meetings in Brother Ward opened his house for us. The third night we preached a man came up to me, and asked me if we were Latter Day Saints. (It was his first night.) I told him we were. He asked what faction. I told him, "What is commonly known as Josephites." He then said he was one, and this was the first Latter Day Saint sermon he had heard in seventeen years. Again he asked me if I knew D. F. Winn. I told him I did. He said, "That is a brother of mine in the flesh." So he rejoiced to see us, and we were glad to meet him.

I am sure our meetings in Chehalis did good. Some are very near the kingdom.

From Chehalis we came to Doty, but conditions not being favorable to hold meetings, we concluded to try some other time. So we came to Willapa. We are holding meetings in the M. E. church, but there is so much rain it is hard for people to get out. This is my fourth year in Washington as a missionary and I never witnessed such rainstorms before.

My work this year with my associates, and among the Saints, has been very pleasant, and above all, the good Lord has comforted and assisted by his Spirit.

Your brother in Christ,

GEO. W. THORBURN.

1330 ADELAIDE STREET, OKLAND, CALIFORNIA.

Dear Herald: A few years ago I dreamed I lived in a beautifully appointed home. Everything was arranged to please the artistic senses and its furnishings were rich and harmonious, and I saw the Master of the house busily engaged in placing flowers here and there about the rooms and up the stairway to please and cheer me. But as I passed them on my way to the second floor my countenance was sad, for the foundation of the house was low and the plumbing old and unsanitary. I thought, "We can not live in a house like this; we must find another place." I was on my way to my room to dress. I was anxious to please my Master, as he was so thoughtful of me. I was debating in my mind whether I should put on a white gown or one of some delicate hue. I knew he would rather have me in white, but I was indifferent about white and thought light blue would do just as well. While I was turning these thoughts over in my mind, my attention was drawn toward a side door and upon opening it I found a woman standing there. I told her that though there were unsanitary conditions that distressed me it was a lovely home and invited her in to look at it. She very gently but positively said, "No! If that is so, it would do no good, for I could not stay there with those conditions."

I woke up with the feeling to stay where I was, or keep my home and improve the conditions.

Simple dream though it was, inspired or not, I do not know; but I do know it has been a lesson to me many times, when I felt my trials were more than I was justified in enduring. It taught me not to settle down and be content with impure surroundings, but to lift up the foundation and remove all filthiness. It taught me not to give way to fretfulness and worry, but to be cheerful in well-doing, and to show my appreciation for the many blessings I was receiving from time to time by putting on the robe of purity.

The song says, "The saints shall wear robes as the lilies." Then why should we hesitate to put them on now?

Again it taught me the Holy Spirit could not dwell in "unholy temples," but when the right improvements were made it would come and dwell.

If these lessons carry a message to your readers, I will be glad that I have passed them on.

Yours in Christ,

EVA A. JONES.

XENIA, ILLINOIS, November 29, 1909.

Thinking perhaps it would be encouraging to the Saints I will try to tell of our good meetings which closed last night, November 28. Bro. J. F. Curtis and Henry Sparling came to Xenia and began meetings at the Saints' chapel, seven miles from Xenia, on Saturday, November 6. The weather was very unfavorable at first, but the Saints came out anyway, and as the meetings progressed the weather grew better and the crowds increased. Brother Curtis introduced a feature new to us here, of having a prayer and testimony service preceding preaching meeting. It was greatly appreciated by the Saints and the Lord was pleased to pour out his Spirit upon us. The spirit of prophecy was given to Brother Sparling twice. The Saints were told that the Lord was well pleased with their efforts and were told to continue the meetings. Bro. Sam Hoover was called to the office of elder and was ordained. Bro. William Clements was called to the office of teacher and was accordingly ordained.

On Saturday, November 13, Bro. G. H. Hilliard came down and preached to us twice, and then went to other fields. The brethren named continued the services and on the 15th one was baptized; on the 19th, five more; on the 20th, ten; 21st, two; 22d, fourteen; 23d, three. On Thanksgiving Day the Saints brought their dinner and afterward repaired to the water and baptized five more. On the 28th two were baptized, and to-day, the 29th, four more were led into the water, making forty-six in all. The meeting closed with many more almost persuaded to obey. Those baptized range from Sunday school children to the very aged ones, including several young men and ladies. Two of the sisters were sixty-six and seventy-seven respectively.

The Lord is surely moving on the hearts of his people and is calling on the Saints to awaken and come up higher. Brethren Plumb and Moore came on the 20th and materially assisted in the meetings. Brother Curtis had to leave us on the 22d, but the meetings went on with unabated interest. It has been frequently stated by those both in and out of the church that we never had a better meeting; truly it was a Pentecostal time for us and we thank the Lord for his condescension and trust that the work here may retain all the strength it has received through these services. The influence of our meetings has been felt all around.

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, December 12. Still very cold and stormy weather, and, we think, the fifth rainy Sunday, which has diminished our attendance quite a little. We note the children and older ones are quite interested in preparing recitations, songs, etc., for our entertainment Thursday evening, the 23d. We truly believe in entertainments in our churches if they are the proper kind, to elevate and cause us to think more and more of the gospel, and inspire us to better deeds.

Elder Allen occupied in the morning, expressing many good thoughts regarding the Christ, his life of self-sacrifice at all times, and how we should endeavor to follow such a noble example. Will we be nearer this Christmas than we were last to reaching our ideal as a Christian?

Bro. Arthur Sherman occupied in the evening.

Sr. Addison Frantz with her two little daughters is here visiting her mother, Sister Kelso, and two sisters, Sisters Bradbrook and Keir.

Wednesday evening's prayer meeting was enjoyed by all present, if only a few. Bro. E. K. Lester, from Grinnell, Iowa, and his niece, Mrs. Robey, worshiped with us.

Wishing the HERALD readers a very Merry Christmas.

Conference Notices.

The Montana District conference will convene at Deer Lodge, Montana, February 19, 20, 1910, at ten o'clock. We hope that as many of the scattered Saints and those of branches as can possibly attend will do so. A. J. Moore, president.

The members of the Southern Nebraska District will meet in conference at Nebraska City, at 11 a. m., January 23, 1910. Reports must be made to include all work done from July 1 to December 31, 1909. Send all reports to the secretary, Elder H. A. Higgins, at Nebraska City. C. H. Porter, president.

The Bishopric.

AGENT'S NOTICE.

To the Saints in the Southern Indiana District: As the year 1909 is almost ended and I will soon make my annual report, I notice many names not on my book. I would like to see all Saints obey God's financial law as to tithing and consecration. Many have promised to do so, but have not kept the promise. This should not be. We do not know when we will need help, so should always remember the poor. I will kindly ask all collectors and branch officers to write and make special effort to send me at least twenty-five cents from every Saint in your respective places, so we can start the year 1910 even. Send before Christmas. Who will be the first to make the effort? Some could send twenty-five dollars. I can not see you again, but you can all realize how hard I am working to get our district self-sustaining. I have written over five hundred letters the past years and many have not been answered. Dear Saints, can you realize how much work this is, when I must also work each day to provide for my own. Do not lay this notice aside, until you have written me a letter, inclosing at least ten cents in it. I make this appeal to all sincere Saints, and all that wish to gain eternal rest in the life to come. Wishing you a happy New Year, and praying God's blessing upon you that you may realize your duty, I am,

JOHN ZAHND, Bishop's Agent.

Order of Evangelists.

Dear Brethren: In the HERALD for September 22, appeared a short address to you, which I thought at the time it was written, and still think was the least I could do, under existing conditions, and do my duty. In that address are found the following statements:

"I would be pleased to receive a brief letter from each one of you, that we may become better acquainted, know more about your condition, physical and otherwise, your work, desires and prospects. We can not acquit ourselves before God, whose servants we are striving to be, without a constant effort to do what we can, striving always to be careful and earnest. Rightly understood, the injunction, 'trust in God' covers the whole ground."

How many of our number have complied with this request? Just one, though two and one half months have elapsed since its publication. Is this right? We are quite willing to think that it was simply an oversight, but such an admission, if it is correct, evinces a degree of thoughtlessness and carelessness that should not be in our midst. Is it possible that after having been properly called and ordained as spiritual "fathers" to the family of God on earth, we have failed to grasp the importance of punctuality and promptness in all our work? Fathers should be proper examples to every member of the family.

Many of us are growing old because of the lapse of years and ill health. It is but little we can do at the best. If we ever very glad, when a successor to our departed and beloved president had a desire to do anything for the leading purpose of showing the people that we know how to do it, I trust that we have thoroughly gotten over that foolishness. I shall be glad, if it has been properly chosen and ordained, for, under existing conditions, let me assure you, it is no easy matter for me to carry this responsibility. But is it not our duty during the interim to do what we can to support the work? We think so. When the time comes for individual reports (from March 15 to April 1, 1910,) what shall we receive? Something more complete than in response to our other request, we trust.

Shall I hear from each one of you as soon as practicable? As the apostle taught, so let us be: "Brethren be not children in understanding: [but fathers] howbeit in malice be ye children, but in understanding be men."—1 Corinthians 14: 20.

J. R. LAMBERT, President pro tem.

LAMONI, IOWA, December 8, 1909.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints in Northern Kansas; Greeting: The ministerial force by General Conference appointment in this field is very limited. Of the four appointed, one has resigned and quit the field, two of the others have been kept at home on account of sickness in their families. I, therefore, in view of these conditions, do most earnestly request every man that holds the priesthood, thus having authority to preach the word, to make every effort in his power to fulfill that responsibility. No matter how weak and incapacitated you may feel, dear brother, if you can get even a few on Sunday to listen to you in telling the gospel story, and will courageously do your duty, humbly trusting in God, you will be made to realize that you are gaining strength and being blessed.

Brethren, do not hide your talent. True, life and its opportunities are passing away, and what are we doing? How shall we answer in the day of judgment if we are indifferent to this divinely imposed duty? Let us be more spiritual, more prayerful, more humble, and then—work.

I know a great work can be done by the local priesthood if the effort is put forth. There are a number of places where work has been done, and interest aroused in the past, that we may not be able to reach or visit in person. In some of these places there seems to be a decline in interest both on the part of members and outsiders. Shall we stand idly by, inactive and unconcerned while the enemy is doing his utmost to hinder God's work?

And now to the members: By all righteous means encourage the brethren of the ministry. This is needed, for in many places this has been neglected. Do not entertain the idea that nothing can be done in your locality, save by a General Conference appointee. Give the local ministers to understand that they have your prayers and assistance. Assist to make appointments and encourage them to keep them up. Should there be openings where the local ministry can not reach, or if a special effort is needed at any point, kindly inform the undersigned and we will try to render whatever assistance there is in our power.

As we are now nearing the end of the year and will soon enter upon the scenes and opportunities of the new, let us turn our hearts more fervently toward the great God and his eternal truth as restored in these last days. Let all, both ministers and members, heed the command, "Let him that is warned, warn his neighbor." This is our duty. My home address is Holden, Missouri.

H. E. MOLER.

Assistant Minister in charge of Northern Kansas.

DOWNNS, KANSAS, December 10, 1909.

Notice.

On account of unfavorable delay in getting out the Daughters of Zion reading for December, there will be no leaflets sent out for this month, as they could not be sent out in time for the meetings.

MRS. B. C. SMITH.

To the branches of the Kewanee District: At the Kewanee District conference held at Joy, October 20-23, 1909, the following resolution was passed: "Resolved, that no member shall be eligible to hold office in the Kewanee District who is addicted to the use of tobacco." All branches in the district are requested to act in harmony with this resolution at the coming elections.

O. E. SADE, President.

Correction.

For some cause my letter in a recent HERALD referring to my work in Steubenville, omits the mention of Bro. H. C. Gilham's baptism. He attended my meetings there faithfully and was baptized with the sister there mentioned. He is a man of ability and will be a great help to the cause.

Herald Publishing House

$100.00 Gold Bonds, bearing interest at five per cent

Dated August 1, 1909

Due August 1, 1914

Redeemable after due notice is given by the Herald Publishing House.

These bonds are offered to the purchaser at par.

The interest coupons call for payment semiannually—on February 1st and August 1st.

Both principal and interest payable at the State Savings Bank of Lamoni, Iowa.

These Bonds are backed by the very best of security, consisting of assets of $100,000, and afford the purchaser a chance to invest with perfect assurance as to the soundness of the investment.

Note some of the facts about our bonds.

(a) They are of small denomination, thus enabling those of very moderate means to become purchasers.

(b) We ask no premium—your interest is clear.

(c) We have issued only 250 bonds—$25,000 dollars' worth—all of which goes toward payment of our debt incurred in adding improvements since the fire.

Mound Bayou Colonists Race Builders.

The negro colonist of Mound Bayou owns his land, or rents it at standard cash rentals from negroes. He hauls his cotton to the gins of Mound Bayou, stores it in the warehouses and sells it in the market of Mound Bayou. He buys his fertilizers and his live stock in the town, and his building materials he gets at the Mound Bayou lumber yard. He purchases his calico, his jeans and his furniture from the Mound Bayou general emporium. He even reads his news by the week in the Demonstrator, Mound Bayou's paper. He takes his physic from a negro doctor and he gets his new teeth from the Mound Bayou dentists. They are expensive teeth, for his penchant is toward gold crowns and other glittering dentistry. Finally he is buried by a Mound Bayou undertaker.

In brief, the profits of all his transactions go to his race. His industry and thrift contribute to the prosperity of his race, his town and, indirectly, to his own welfare. He has become, though he does not know it, a race builder.—From Hiram Tong's "The pioneers of Mound Bayou" in the January Century.

White Slavery and its Methods Exposed in Book Now on Presses.

War on the White Slave Trade is the title of a book now on the presses which will be issued within a few days under the editorial sanction of Ernest A. Bell, secretary of the Illinois Vigilance Association for the Suppression of the Traffic in Women and Girls. The book constitutes the most sensational indictment of the white slave traffic ever published. It goes into statistics, but is for the most part a record of cases that have come under the personal observation of those men and women who have written the matter contained in it. The work will be placed in the hands of churchmen everywhere for the purpose of informing them as to the methods of those who make a business of trafficking in women, and already a list of ten thousand copies has been bespoken for churches and societies interested in the suppression of white slaving.

How little do they see what is who frame
 Their hasty judgment upon that which seems.
 —Southey.
