CONCERNING 1909.

With this issue the SAINTS' HERALD enters upon another year. We hope that it may be a year of advancement and growth, both for the HERALD and for its many readers. Our interests are indissolubly bound up with the interests of the members of the church. If they stand we stand; if they fail we shall fail. As they broaden and grow, mentally and spiritually, their growth will be manifested in the issues of the HERALD through which they speak their sentiments; if they lose a little in spiritual vigor and mental keenness, that too will be evident. Even their material prosperity will affect our well-being. We believe (in no boastful way) that our readers are of the "salt of the earth," the best people in the world. Whether or not we are fully justified in that thought, they are our brethren, bound together with ties stronger than the ties of blood, and to them we extend our best wishes for the coming year.

The SAINTS' HERALD is the official organ of the church. The church is the kingdom of God on earth; the official organ of the church is the mouth-piece of that kingdom. It does not follow that every word that appears in the HERALD correctly represents the belief of the church. Correct statements of teachings found in the three books or of positions adopted by the church in an authoritative assembly represent the church. Statements conflicting therewith are (presumably) false notes struck by individuals. Conclusions drawn from scriptural statements, and ideas regarding subjects upon which the church has not spoken represent individuals and should not be held to represent the church as a whole. These statements are as true of the editors as of any other writer.

To present that which is first true, second profitable, and third seasonable, should be the aim of all writers. Christ always presented the true, the profitable, and the seasonable, and such may well be the ambition of the official publications of the church of Christ. To err in judgment and present that which does not come under this category is not an unpardonable sin, if it is an error of the head and not of the heart.

The paper that represents Christ should be filled with communications that shine with the Spirit of

A special and commendable feature of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition to be held at Seattle from June 1 to October 16, is the fact that seven of the larger buildings will be permanent in construction, and will revert to the Washington State University at the close of the fair. This is the first time a world's fair has undertaken the construction of permanent buildings and these structures will lend a substantial appearance to the fair.

Christ. Bickerings, personalities, accusations, ridicule have no proper place therein. There is room in the HERALD for an expression of differing opinions; there is no room for accusation and recrimination. One brother may differ from another, but he has no privilege to hold him up to ridicule, or to brand him as ignorant, dishonest, or weak in the faith. Discussion must not be dragged down from its high plane as a true method of discovering the truth to the low level of personal abuse. Those who descend to that plane are the worst enemies of free speech, because they compel the ending of the discussion.

We congratulate the church on the fact that her representatives seem more inclined to speak and write affirmatively and moderately. The readers of the HERALD are intelligent and critical; and the writer who, figuratively speaking, erects a symmetrical, substantial, and faultless structure of thought will be appreciated,—he does not need to make any display of destroying some other man's structure. We should have the most capable, the most fearless, yet the most courteous and considerate writers in the world.

It is complained that some of the representative men of the church do not write for the columns of the HERALD so much as they should. Such complaint comes to the editors. We have felt at times that such was the case. Important events happen in the mission field and those in immediate charge fail to acquaint the church with the event. Inspired thoughts flood the brains of these men but are never reduced to writing. Probably there are reasons for this. One reason is that many of those who are termed "representative men" are exceedingly busy. The amount of work that they do is not even guessed at by those who have never been associated with them enough to understand the duties and problems that confront them constantly. Perhaps another reason is that they fear that some one will imagine that they are "advertising" if they appear in print frequently. Our best workers are unostentatious, and it is to their credit that they are. But we are sure that this fear, if it exists, does not justify silence. For the hearty support of those who have given time and thought and work toward making the HERALD a success we extend our thanks.

We have a number of important articles from various contributors to appear during the year 1909. Among other contributions we have an armful, literally, of autobiographies. Most or all of these are excellent reading, and they will continue to form an interesting department in the HERALD. We beg the indulgence of those who have contributed these autobiographies, numbers of them at our personal request. Obviously all of them can not appear at once. Some must wait and have waited a long time.

We have not consciously shown any partiality in selecting those that have already appeared.

The Round Table will continue to appear at intervals during the year. It is the intention to publish another installment of this new department in the next issue of the HERALD. For some time there has been running a discussion of section 106 that might properly have appeared in the Round Table only that it was running before the Round Table was instituted. The discussion of this subject so far has been conducted in excellent spirit and we trust that it will terminate profitably. Articles published and in hand for publication seem to cover the ground on this subject pretty thoroughly. It is well to carry such discussions far enough to encourage thought and research in the hope of ascertaining facts; but not to such lengths as to weary the reading public.

We have numbers of excellent articles in hand for the Straight Road. They will be of considerable value to loan to inquiring friends. Elders should remember the Elders' Note-Book and contribute such items as may be of interest therein.

News from Branches forms an interesting addition to the HERALD, only there are not enough branches reporting. Live branch presidents everywhere should see to it that occasional items appear from their branches. Obviously we can not find space for purely personal items, such as births, marriages, blessing of children, etc. But items of general interest, the spiritual condition of the branch, its efforts toward spreading the gospel, its ups and downs in the great struggle, may profitably be reported.

We have been endeavoring to work up a series of articles on important events in church history, to be written by various authors. Some of the articles in this series we have secured, others are promised. Their publication has been delayed, but we will get to it soon, and when the series appears it will be worth while.

One elder writes that the HERALD came while he was in the midst of a debate with a spiritualist and it contained just what he needed to help him meet the issue. Another individual writes that he is sustained and comforted by letters found in the Letter Department. We are glad if we are able to help the Saints in any way in their varied and complex needs. May the grace of God help us to labor together during the year.

If we do not live in this world to see the little children we rescue grow up to full manhood and womanhood in Christian homes, we may on the other shore have the reward of the Master for having helped "the least of these."

MONOGAMY AMONG THE ANIMALS.

Advocates of polygamy have at times advanced the plea that nature supports their peculiar ideas of marriage. They have even sought for examples among the lower animals. Now comes Ernest Thompson Seton, a naturalist of repute, and a writer of animal stories of national fame, and declares that the animals have in many instances worked their way up to an ideal form of marriage,—which proves to be monogamy. In his new story, Domino Reynard, he says that the "higher animals" especially, are monogamous. This, perhaps, is the "most unkindest cut of all" to our Utah friends, to find themselves classed among the lower animals.

We quote from a press report that has been going the rounds. Our extract is from the Burlington Hawk-Eye, December 26:

To thoroughly appreciate Mr. Seton's position in regard to this subject of the marriage relation among animals one needs to recall a recent paper of his on the "Natural history of the ten commandments." In this paper he advanced the theory, which he supported by incidents taken from his own observations, that obedience to five at least of the ten commandments is a law of the lower animals. The promised Domino Reynard story will thus, in a way, be a practical illustration in fiction form of what Mr. Seton believes to be the fox's innate respect for the seventh commandment.

"It is commonly remarked," he says, "that while the Mosaic law did not expressly forbid polygamy, it surrounded marriage with so many restrictions that by living up to the spirit of them the Hebrew was ultimately forced into pure monogamy. It is extremely interesting to note that the animals in their blind groping for an ideal form of union have gone through the same stages and have arrived at exactly the same conclusion. Monogamy is their best solution of the marriage question and is the rule among all the higher and most successful animals.

"There are four degrees of monogamy. One in which the male stays with one female as long as she interests him or desires a mate, then changes to another; for this reason may be many times as long as hers. Thus, he may have several wives in the season, but only one at a time. This is convenient for both parties, but it is open to the same objection as frank polygamy. It is the way of the moose. A second kind, in which the male and one female are paired for that breeding season only, the male staying with the family and sharing the care of the young until they are well grown, after which the parents may or may not resume their fellowship. This is admirable. It is seen in hawks. A third, in which the pair consort for life, but the death of one leaves the other free to mate again. This is ideal. It is the way of wolves. A fourth, in which they pair for life, and in case of death the survivor remains disconsolate and alone to the end. This seems absurd. It is the way of geese.

"In making observations one is hampered by the fact that association with man has always been ruinous to the morals of animals. There can be no doubt that the dog, now so promiscuous, was originally a monogamous creature. One of the great difficulties besetting the growing of blue foxes for their fur, on the islands of the Bering Sea, is what has been called the obstinate and deplorable monogamy of those animals. The breeders are working hard to break down this high moral sentiment and produce a blue fox that does not object to polygamy, promiscuity, or any other combination, and so remove all sentimental obstacles to their experiments.

"To sum up; there is evidence that in the animal world there has long been a groping after an ideal form of marriage. Beginning with promiscuity, they have worked through many stages into pure monogamy; and, other things equal, the species, owing to natural laws, are successful in proportion as they have reached it, and, therefore, have developed an instinctive recognition of the Seventh Commandment.

EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY.

On December 28 earthquake and resultant disaster caused the death of tens and it is feared hundreds of thousands of the people in the provinces of Cosenza, Catanagro, and Reggio di Calabria, which form the southwestern extremity of Italy and which are often referred to as the "toe of the boot."

First reports were meager and the papers, contrary to the rule, greatly underestimated the loss of life and property, and each day the horror grew until the total deaths have been placed by some as high as three hundred thousand. The tidal wave following the shock sunk vessels and inundated parts of the land, and it appears from later reports that whole islands have disappeared with their thousands of humanity.

Even at this date, January 4, absolutely reliable information can not be given. Those who have survived the terrible disaster are starving and homeless. Italy's King and Queen are present in the danger zone helping in the work of rescue. Assistance is being given by all countries and food supplies are being rushed to Italy with all possible speed. On January 2, the President announced that he had dispatched two ships with three hundred thousand dollars worth of food and supplies. Nearly every city in the United States is giving liberally and it now seems as if the suffering thousands will be well taken care of, the only difficulty being the time required to transport supplies to the stricken region.

On December 5, 1840, this same section was shaken by earthquake and thousands lost their lives, though hardly to be compared with this latest disaster. The Millennial Star for February, 1841, quoted a short account from a London paper which gave a summary of the conditions following the quake at that time.

While the loss of life from the shock of last week can not yet be given definitely, it now appears to be upward of a hundred thousand, accepting the most conservative estimates. The loss of life at San Francisco in 1907 was placed at less than five hundred, and from this it may be possible to grasp the magnitude of this present catastrophe.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It is reported that the Bishop of London will appoint a council to consider the question of healing by spiritual methods. Medical men are included in the movement, which indicates that they do not wish to eliminate the medical practitioner. It is not reasonable to suppose that in case of fractured limbs cure can be effected by spiritual means alone. As one writer puts it, religion is recognizing the physical, science the spiritual, phases of mankind. The principle of this movement is said to be "a sane combination of the powers of faith and exact medical science."

The Religio Paragraph, number two, reaches our desk, and we note a change in its editorial staff. We notice, also, that by recent action of Independence Stake convention, its publication is assured as long as certain contingencies exist, that is, as long as its worthy editor and staff can hustle enough advertising to keep the balance on the right side of the ledger. The Paragraph has our best wishes for its success and a long life.

Nine hundred and forty-five thousand, six hundred and twenty-five divorces is the record for the twenty years between 1887 and 1906. This shows a startling growth in the number of divorces as compared with the twenty years preceding. Laws in the West are much easier on persons wishing divorce than they are in the East. Social conditions there are said to be "freer." Statistics are somewhat interesting along these lines, but they do not help materially in the consideration or the solution of the divorce question.

A brother, in one of our Iowa districts, desiring to show his faith by his works, made a canvass of two of the branches of the district where he resides and succeeded in selling nearly sixty dollars' worth of the church books. He is certainly to be commended for his zeal, and the management of the publishing department would be pleased if some one in every branch of the church would do likewise. Who will do this work in your branch?

The latest prediction of the end and destruction of the world came from Nyack, New York. Lee J. Spangler is the name of the prophet. He gave Sunday, December 27, as the date, and was going to retreat, with his followers, to the mountains on that day and witness the obsequies of the earth. New York papers ventured the prediction that Spangler would very likely wear a coat of tar and feathers instead of a white robe in case he failed to make good; but up to date we have not heard that anything has been done to the prophet.

Francis Schlatter, so-called divine healer and faith curer, one time "Messiah and heavenly prince," is reported as having made his appearance at San Diego, California, after a long absence or silence.

He now claims the Freeland Isles as his home, islands not shown on any map and not to be reached, Schlatter claims, except by direction of a guide. He says these islands are about five hundred miles east of Tahiti, and makes great claims for their climate and fertility. Schlatter is accompanied by Bishop Schrader, another divine healer who is somewhat known in the Western States, but who claims to be Crown Prince August, upon whom will fall the mantle of His Majesty, the King, upon his demise which, in view of Schlatter's age, will likely take place before many years.

Another self-styled "Messiah" came into notice again this last week when Cyrus R. Teed's death was announced from his colony in Southern Florida. Press reports from that place state that his followers were awaiting his resurrection and were holding his body unburied until that event takes place. Teed's title was "Koresh I" and the colony is known as the Koreshian Colony. This sect originated in California, but later Teed conducted a "heaven" at Chicago. Here the nature of his institution was investigated and Koresh was forced to flee, narrowly escaping a lynching.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Elder Elbert A. Smith was the morning speaker at the Brick Church, and Elder F. M. Weld preached the evening sermon. The afternoon prayer- and sacrament-meeting had the best attendance of any recent prayer-meeting, perhaps the best ever had at a meeting of this kind in Lamoni. While the auditorium has been often well filled, on last Sunday the increased attendance made it necessary to use the gallery. This is another indication of the time when it will be necessary to have a larger assembly room than our present building affords. At a recent Sunday night meeting people were turned away on account of lack of room, but this was due to a special attraction. Sunday night meetings, as a rule, have not the attendance they should, although the morning services very often fill almost every seat in the house.

Christmas Offering in the Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school we learn is upward of two hundred dollars which we consider a pretty good donation. Recent election of officers resulted in only a few changes, G. W. Blair being chosen superintendent and H. H. Gold being made secretary.

The New-year was ushered in in a manner somewhat unusual. The weather is more like spring than winter, and to-day a thick fog hangs low over the land. We wonder if Boreas is deserting us, or is just making shorter and more interesting visits when he does come.

Elders' Note-Book

A FEW PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

The place of worship should be opened, dusted, ventilated, and warmed half an hour before time for opening service.

Meeting should begin and close on time. The best time to close a prayer-meeting is while the interest is good.

Just previous to time of opening meeting, or when the minister enters the pulpit, all conversation should cease with the congregation seated, and thus make unnecessary that most distasteful expression, "The congregation will please come to order."

Overcome the habit of turning round and gazing at those who come in late. Whispering or reading during service is a great breach of etiquette.

Welcome the stranger and make him feel at home; before he leaves hand him some reading-matter. Should he be a missionary, see that he has a place to abide, without his having to put up at a hotel.

When a minister is sent for, either to administer or to preach, see that his car-fare is paid and his temporal wants supplied while with you.

Should the minister who is to preach be a stranger, kindly conduct him to the pulpit and offer him a seat, rather than let him sit in the audience while you open the meeting, leaving him to work his way to the pulpit as best he may.

Instead of leaving the few to bear the financial burden of the branch, let each do his part, and that weekly. Religion is a part of your living; pay for what you consume, the same as you do for food.

Extend to all a word of kindness and good cheer, especially to your pastor. Avoid anything like flattery, but if his sermon has done you good tell him so occasionally. It may keep him from growing discouraged.

By following these suggestions, some of us will be taking a decided step forward, and will help to make the coming year a happy one.

STRONG MEAT(?)

In a recent statement from an elder, he has the ten lost tribes in the interior of the earth, and calls them some other sheep that Jesus went to preach to (in the heart of the earth). This brother would have the wicked spirits and the ten lost tribes all together in hades, living and dead, unless he give us another and better explanation. Perhaps he may have pondered over it since, to make it more plain. If this is true, please pray for me, that I may have a better understanding. If not, pray for the other one and let me alone.

THE WAY TO GOD.

SERMON BY ELDER JOSEPH R. LAMBERT, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
JULY 12, 1908.

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me; hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people. Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name; for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.—Isaiah 55.

I will reread three verses from the lesson read, as they may have some bearing on what I say. I say they may have, because I do not know just which way I shall move.

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts. For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

I was privileged, with a number of others, to listen to an excellent discourse last evening on the first principles of the gospel. To me it was one of that kind of efforts that the more you think about it, the better it becomes. And while I think it is entirely proper, and very needful, that we should become acquainted with our limitations and our imperfections, it is likewise needful that we should duly consider what God has done for us; and how this imperfection may be removed, and the vast distance between God and us be overcome.

As soon as we render obedience to the first requirements of the divine plan, it will be admitted, I presume, we begin to travel toward God. The thought has occurred to me that if, as is claimed by some, God is a progressive being, how shall we ever reach him? Evidently he can travel a great deal faster than we can; no comparison between the rapidity with which he can travel and the slowness with which we travel. And while I can see something on the other side, yet it will be well for us to consider this a little. How can we ever reach God in that way, if God is a progressive being?

In our lesson, a sharp contrast is drawn between the ways of God and the ways of men; but I am inclined to believe that a superficial examination of this scripture, by some, has led them astray. It really has been made an excuse for our mistakes. And when a criticism is offered on that which is done, when it is connected with the name of God, and is presumed to be a part of the work of God, no matter how good that criticism may be, or how unanswerable the criticism is, we are told that God's ways are not our ways. That is enough. That settles the question.

Now it seems to me that when the prophet draws this distinction between our ways and God's ways, the first thought, and the leading thought, is that he refers to man in his darkened and sinful condition. He does not refer to the children of God, enlightened by the gospel, because we must admit that when we move in harmony with the light of truth, we move in harmony with the will of God; and when we move in harmony with the light of truth, our ways are like God's ways, they are in harmony with God's will, and he would not condemn them. And the only sense in which he can say that his thoughts and ways are different from ours, and higher than ours, as the heavens are higher than the earth (if we are enlightened by the Spirit), is that we are limited. We can only proceed to our limitations—only so far; but God can move away beyond! His ways are higher.

You will remember that the prophet was speaking to Israel. Israel had been very wicked. A great portion of their history shows that they lived in wickedness. They were living far beneath their privileges, and the prophet means to condemn sharply and strongly the ways of men in the wisdom of men, as placed in opposition to the ways of God.

We are represented—that is, the children of light are—in the New Testament, as workers together with God. Now, when we are working together with God our ways are acceptable to him. And just so far as we are able to go, we are able to walk with God.

We read here, in this good book, that Enoch walked with God; and Enoch and his band were finally taken home to God, because they walked with him. Now, what Enoch and his followers did, it is possible for us to do. And if we do the same work that they did; or do the work committed to us as well as they did theirs, and render a like faithful obedience to the requirements of the divine plan, the result will be the same; we will be a happy people, a useful people, the light of the world. And, finally, we will be taken home to God.

Those who render obedience to the gospel are entitled to the Holy Spirit. What will this Spirit do for them? In the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth chapters of John, the Great Teacher defines the office-work of this Spirit. He says, "He will guide you into all truth." All truth! Not all at once. It shall take of the things of the father and show them unto you. It shall bring to your minds whatsoever I have said unto you. "He will show you things to come." That is wonderful work; wonderful work, indeed. And the slowness with which it accomplishes its work for us, is owing to our low condition; it is owing to our inability to exercise the faith that is necessary, the intelligent obedience that is necessary to secure unto us a greater portion of the divine Spirit. But so long as we move in the right direction, it will continue its work, until we are perfected and able to stand in the presence of God, and enjoy the good things which he has offered to those who are his.

Therefore—and it is an opportune time, now, in the history of the world to consider it; for there are a great many things, very dissimilar in their character, being done in the name of God, claiming to be done by divine direction—we are entitled to this Spirit in all that Jesus has said it will do for us. And when anything is presented to us, purporting to be divine in its character, and we are enlightened by this Spirit, we are entitled to render a correct judgment in that way; and if it does not commend itself to our judgment, under the enlightening influence of this Spirit, it is our privilege, nay, our duty, to reject it at once. This is our safety. And I make no distinction, whether it is done within the church of God, or without. For the Devil can step inside the ranks and accomplish his purposes, if we will permit him to, just as well as he can accomplish them without—and far better; he can make greater progress by far. We ought to be very careful to keep him out.

So I think there is no excuse for work that will not commend itself to the judgment of those who are enlightened by the Spirit of the living God. Let us take the responsibility of whatever mistakes we make, and not try to excuse ourselves by saying, "God's ways are not our ways."

But I was thinking, after listening to the presentation of the first principles of the gospel last evening, something about what God has done for us, in the divine plan. And a little incident occurred yesterday, just a little thing—you know how a little thing will sometimes bring a thought to your mind in a very impressive way. Your speaker, a great many years ago, was called the skeleton preacher in Green County, Iowa; but he weighed a number of pounds more than he does now. If he was a skeleton preacher then, what is he now? I stepped on the scales last evening, not with fear and trembling, nor to see how much I weighed, but to see how little I weighed. And I found that I weighed just one hundred and eleven pounds. So I am conscious of the fact that I am decreasing. A short time ago I weighed one hundred and sixteen. My average weight was, when I had fair health, one hundred and forty. I once weighed one hundred and forty-six; never more. Then, after I was engaged in ministerial work for a time, I weighed on an average about one hundred and thirty in the winter time, and one hundred and twenty-five in the summer time, for a good many years; then I commenced falling off, and gradually got lighter and lighter, until I have reached one hundred and eleven.

And after stepping off the scales and thinking a little about where I was going, I thought, "Well, thank God, I still have a bright appreciation of his love, his wisdom and goodness, as manifested in the divine plan; and my lightness tends in no way to destroy my appreciation of his power and wisdom and love, in originating and revealing to the children of men, and restoring to the children of men in the last days, through the young seer, the gospel plan—the great gospel plan." Now this did me a great deal of good. I feel to rejoice in it this morning, to rejoice exceedingly. And I feel like sketching, in an imperfect way, of course, just a few of the things connected with the principles of the gospel, which may tend to help us to give it more thorough investigation, and result in a more full appreciation of what God has done for us.

These principles were named by the speaker last night, as they are mentioned by the writer of the Hebrew epistle: Faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment.

Faith, we are told in the word, purifies the heart. Faith is the key by which we unlock the great storehouse of God, and are enabled to draw therefrom according to our needs. This is done by faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please him [God]; for he that cometh to God must believe that he is [but that is not all—must believe that he is, not was], and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." Now let me tell you, our faith is in harmony with this present tense, and the ministers of the day have never been able to get over it. We must believe that he is, not was; and the whole system of the restored gospel is in harmony with that is. Now think about it. There is a point here, and I rejoice in it. I know we are imperfect. I can see that others are; they can see that I am. And I can see a good many imperfections in myself. But I rejoice in the knowledge of the truth. And I know a little about what it will do for us, if we have that intelligent faith that will move us in active obedience to the requirements of the divine plan. This is the first principle. I can not tell you what may not be accomplished through faith; but nothing in the spiritual warfare can be accomplished without it.

Repentance is the second principle. I am afraid, sometimes, that we do not appreciate the principle of repentance. It seems to me that lovers of the truth ought to comprehend the great privilege that God has granted to sinners to repent. They have the power to turn away from sin. I am glad God has given to us this privilege. It means a practical turning away from sin. I once, when traveling in Southern Indiana, was permitted to look into a translation of the Bible made in the days of Queen Elizabeth of England, fifteenth century I believe. And in this translation that scripture in Acts, second chapter, where it says, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ," in this version it reads, "Amend your ways, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ." Well, I thought that was a good translation. "Amend your ways." Why anybody, everybody can understand that. But then it is much easier sometimes to understand than it is to do. To amend our ways is an important work. I am in love with the sentiment expressed in one of our baptismal hymns; and I have a growing appreciation of the words found in that hymn. It begins:

Lo, on the water's brink we stand,
To do the Father's will,
To be baptized by his command,
And thus the word fulfill.

Now comes that part that I appreciate so well:

Lord, we have sinned, but we repent,
And put our sins away,
With joy receive the message sent
In this the latter day.

This is the sentiment that should actuate us when we obey the truth. This is the spirit in which we should move forward when we come into the church of God, and then the teachers and other officers of the church will not have so much trouble with us. We will come in as true converts. And so long as we try to be faithful we will be guided by that Spirit, we will move along the low way of humility like little children, and will have power with God, and accomplish good. This is the spirit of the gospel. And the gospel without its spirit is a worthless thing. It is like other things without the spirit—dead.

So I think when God has granted unto us this privilege of repenting of our sins, he has done a great thing for us. And the best way for us to appreciate what he has done is to move in obedience to the requirements of this principle and repent, every one, and obey the commandments of the Lord Jesus, as found in the ancient gospel, the restored gospel, and thus come to God.

The purpose of the gospel is to bring us to God. You remember one statement made by the Apostle Peter. He says that Jesus "once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God."

Christ suffered for us. That is, Christ suffered that he might bring us to God. The thought is that his work was done for the purpose of bringing us to God.

Now you will find that every principle of the divine plan performs its important part in bringing us to God; but we must become acquainted with them and render an honest and intelligent obedience to them in order that they may accomplish their work. We see how faith brings us to God. Well, there is nothing more hateful to God than sin. He hates sin. I am glad that he does. And that is about the only thing that we should hate. We should not hate our brothers and sisters, though they go wrong, though they wander. It is wrong to hate them. We may hate the wrong they do; but how can we ever reclaim them if we hate them? How does God do his work? Does he do it through hatred? He accomplishes it through love. "God so loved the world." Loved the world? Yes. When it was in darkness and sin, he loved the world, and sent "his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." So we should love each other. And if we are going to be coworkers with God, we must work upon the principle of love. In accomplishing our work we must be moved and influenced and directed at all times by the principle of love. But, like God, we may be permitted—nay, it is our duty to cultivate a hatred for sin.

We never can be saved in our sins. That is the reason we are commanded to repent. That is one part of our work, and God will never perform our work for us. In his divine wisdom he ordained that man should act for himself. He gives to him agency; and that which man can perform for himself, he must do. God, if you will permit me the expression, can not repent for us. Neither can one individual repent for another. But every sinner must repent; and every disciple must repent whenever he is overtaken in sin. And we should live so that we can see our imperfections, and wrongs, and keep setting ourselves right. There is a great deal of repairing necessary to be done. If an individual does not repair around his home, and in the home, if he does not keep things in decent shape, does not keep them up, they run down. It is wonderful what an amount of repairing is needed. Just about as soon as a thing is finished—made new and complete—it begins to deteriorate, go down; something is wrong in a few days, and it needs repairing or replacing with something. Now, we have a great deal of repairing to do. We may see our imperfections and our mistakes, and when we do, we should go to work to correct them. That is the way we will make progress. God will help us in this work, and it will so influence intelligent men and women as to lead them to see that we are making a just effort. It is not a disgrace for us to confess our weakness and our wrongs. It is a disgrace to continue in them. It is a disgrace to try to hide them and lead the people to believe that we are all right when we know we are not correcting our wrong ways. That is a disgrace. You may know when people repent. They will confess their sins and forsake them. This is the evidence.

So I am glad that God permits us to repent. I am glad that he has authoritatively commanded all men, everywhere, to repent. Let us not affirm, "Well, this applies to everybody outside of the kingdom." It applies to us whenever we commit sin, just as much as the principle of faith applies whenever it is necessary for us to receive spiritual blessings to lead us along in the warfare, and in the discharge of duty.

Baptism is for the remission of sins. I do not understand this as some of the brethren seem to understand it. And I may be wrong, and they may be right. But I understand that it is "with a view to" the remission of sins. The word for comes from a Greek word as used in Acts 2:38, which means "with a view to." That is the literal meaning of the Greek word from which we get the translation "for," "with a view to." So I understand that our sins are actually remitted by the Holy Ghost; and we are baptized for the remission of sins it is true. It does not lessen the binding character of the obligation one bit; but it simply shows that that which is called the Holy Ghost and fire blots out our sins. One part of its office-work is to burn up the chaff, and to burn up that which is corruptible; and when we receive the Holy Spirit, then the actual remission of our sins occurs.

By the way, Nephi says, after speaking plainly on the ordinance of baptism, "Then [adverb of time] cometh the remission of sins by the Holy Ghost and fire." This is a plain statement; and Moroni, likewise, says, in the Book of Mormon, that we are baptized unto the remission of our sins; that is, in order to the remission of our sins. Well, it is very necessary that we should get rid of our sins in some way, and this seems to be one leading purpose of the ordinance of baptism; but it will not accomplish its purpose unless we exercise true faith in God, and truly repent. And the Book of Mormon brings this out very plainly, saying that we must be sincere, and that we must have truly repented of our sins, in order that it may accomplish its work. It is possible to go through the form of baptism, and be immersed. We might be immersed fifty times, and it would not do us any good whatever. In fact fifty times would not do any more good than one, anyway. But we must obey carefully in order that the promise of God may attach, and we may realize that which he has promised to those who obey intelligently and sincerely.

Then comes the promise of the Holy Ghost. What will that do for us? Oh, I can not tell you; I can not tell you. That is to be experienced. I can tell you a few things that may indicate in a slight degree what it will do; but I can not tell you what it will do, only in this partial way. As we have already seen, it is the Spirit of truth. We need that. We have the spirit of error in the world; and it is seeking to intrude everywhere, and will obtain wherever an individual will give it but half an opportunity,—the spirit of error, which is the spirit of darkness, opposed to the truth, and opposed to right. But with the truth, as it is with God, goes this Spirit of truth, and with error, as it is taught by man, goes the spirit of error. So the children of God, who are to perfect their lives; and prepare themselves to dwell with God, must have some infallible guide. Now, do not mistake what I say. I do not say Latter Day Saints are infallible; for I have learned they are not. But I say that God has provided for us an infallible guide, and that is the Holy Spirit. It guides into all truth, and into nothing but the truth. Never guides into anything else. We need that. It has done a great deal for us. I rejoice in the degree of progress that we have made under the influence of this Spirit. But how much greater it would have been, if we had been a little wiser, a little more diligent in the service to which God has called us! How much more it would have done for us!

So, now, when we obtain this Spirit which guides us into all truth, and takes the things of the father and shows them unto us, then we have the mind of Christ, the mind of God, just to that extent that we are guided by the Holy Spirit. This lessens the distance very materially between God and us. This is what brings us nearer to him. This is what en-bles us to teach and to instruct, and to be taught; to teach intelligently; for the hearer is entitled to the Spirit as much as the preacher; and when they are both guided by the same Spirit, both are edified, and good is accomplished, and we rejoice together. This is the divine plan.

I do not like darkness. This may be one thing to encourage me a little to believe that I am moving towards God; because I love light. I love the truth. Truth and right and light are words that are full of music to my ears.

Now we can not be instructed in spiritual things, so as to help us on toward God, unless the instructor is influenced by this Spirit. That is the kind of a man, and the only kind of a man we need to teach us in order that we may understand, the one that is influenced by the divine Spirit. And we place our whole confidence and trust in Jesus Christ as the Great Teacher sent from God, because he was perfect. He was faithful in all things. He "loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows." He received the Spirit not by measure as we receive it. We receive it by measure; sometimes the measure is very small; sometimes it is larger. We can afford to put our whole trust and confidence in him; but we can not afford to put that same trust and confidence in any other living man. Every other man must be placed upon his merit, and taken for what he is worth. That is the only way we are safe. It is just as necessary, while we are moving toward God, that we should be protected against wrong and evil and deception, as it is that we should become acquainted with right. Both are necessary. And we are liable, nay sure, to be imposed upon if we neglect either one.

Now it may appear that there is a conflict. I want, if I have time; to call your attention to it briefly. There are some passages in ancient revelation, and some in modern revelation, that would seem to signify that as children of God we did not need to be taught by man, but simply be taught by the Almighty. I will call your attention to one, at least, in the New Testament, and one in the Doctrine and Covenants.

In John's first epistle and second chapter, beginning at verse 24, we read this significant statement:

Let that therefore abide in you, which ye heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye shall continue in the Son, and in the Father. And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him. And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

I think this is faithful instruction; but the language is singular. That "the anointing" or that Holy Spirit "which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you;" but this anointing that abideth in you "teacheth you of all things." Not all at once.

Well, we will let that drop for the present. I turn to the Doctrine and Covenants here, which has much to do with the restored gospel, and in the very first revelation in this Doctrine and Covenants, section 1, after rehearsing how the Lord revealed himself to Joseph Smith and commanded him to do a certain work, we read in paragraph 4:

And all this that it might be fulfilled, which was written by the prophets; the weak things of the earth shall come forth and break down the mighty and strong ones, that man should not counsel his fellow man, neither trust in the arm of flesh, but that every man might speak in the name of God the Lord, even the Savior of the world; that faith also might increase in the earth; that mine everlasting covenant might be established; that the fullness of my gospel might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, unto the ends of the world, and before kings and rulers.

I am glad that God has put this work on such defensible ground. We can go before the people without shame, everywhere, and defend the work according to the records which we have. Here are the purposes announced in the revelation—why God sent the gospel, and restored it to the children of men through Joseph Smith. Why? Just think about the purposes here. They are grand: That faith might increase; that the everlasting covenant might be established; that it might be proclaimed by the weak and the simple, which is according to his great wisdom, in all the world; and thus the people might be saved in God's own way. I am proud to defend this claim. I am glad to confess before you that in my weak efforts to do it, in the past, the great God has stood by me. And sometimes, when there was a good deal at stake, it seemed to me he stood right with me in the stand. It seemed to me that I could almost feel his touch, while I was defending these claims before the people; and I would be recreant to my trust if I should ever go back on the truth with which I have become acquainted.

But you notice what it says, that man should not trust in his fellow man; but that every man might be able to speak in the name of God the Lord, the Savior of the world. Why? John says they were able to speak that way because of the anointing they had received, this Holy Spirit, the same anointing that Jesus received; but we do not receive it in the same degree. But it is the same anointing.

And because of the restoration, we are placed in a position that we are entitled to the full promise, the promise of the Master that we should receive the Holy Ghost, that influence which is promised unto you and "your children, and all that are afar off," says Peter, "even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Through the restored gospel we are placed in a position before God which entitles us to this promise. Hence we are able to speak in the name of God the Lord, the Savior of the world, and go forth and sound the gospel trumpet like they did in days of old.

Well, now, this same book says, "Teach one another, . . . teach ye diligently, and my grace shall attend you." And the New Testament conveys the idea that the true ministers should teach, and the church should honor them in their position as teachers, and listen to their words. I believe this is right, too. But there is an apparent conflict, but it is only apparent, it is not real. You take and read carefully the fiftieth section of the Doctrine and Covenants, and you have the matter unraveled. That shows we are not justified in receiving that from any source which is not in harmony with the Spirit of truth. It shows that the hearers are entitled to this Spirit as well as the teacher, the minister. And when the minister is guided and directed by this Spirit, he is teaching for God; and it is not trusting in man to receive his teachings and obey them, and to learn from that which he presents. It is trusting in God, and in the leading way that he has ordained by which we are to become acquainted with these things. There is no conflict whatever. But when we can not feel nor see, under the divine influence of the Holy Spirit, that that which is taught is according to the will of God, and yet because of the man's position in the church we receive it readily, blindly, then we are violating the commandment, and we are moving downward instead of upward, away from God instead of toward God. So I am glad that he has revealed these things so plainly for us. It is for our good to pay heed unto them.

Now, there are the principles of the resurrection and eternal judgment. The resurrection brings us physically, so to speak, physically into an immortal condition. That is a step toward God, do not you see? And a wonderful step. The ills and trials and sorrows of this life left behind! No more tears, no more sorrow, no more death. He will wipe away all tears from our eyes. He will make everything new—new heaven, new earth, and a new people will have been made, through the divine plan. Transformed by the power of the gospel, and made new and complete by the resurrection of the dead, that body and spirit, in connection with each other, may enjoy a fullness of reward.

Then God's eternal judgment, which is a provision of the divine being, by virtue of which we shall receive that to which we are entitled, that which we have prepared ourselves to receive. And if I am not worthy to dwell with you, the time then shall have come when I shall no longer bother you. I will no longer be permitted to dwell with you. The time of your trial is over, your probation ended, and I will be placed where I belong. And you will be placed where you belong, in higher and better conditions, to receive the reward to which you are entitled. This is eternal judgment.

May God bless and help us with increased ability to appreciate the grandeur and perfection of the divine plan, is my prayer.

IS IT TRUTH OR ERROR?

If we are wrong, may God protect the work, and expose our error; but if right, may he turn on the lime-light of his Holy Spirit, that the honest in heart or all who desire to learn the truth, may see it, is our earnest prayer.

Our Motto: "Do more good."

We believe the mission of man in this world is to do good to his fellow man, and in order to do his whole duty, he will keep the commandments of God, and thus be approved by him; or in other words, he will "love his neighbor as himself," the first great commandment, and if he does this the other commandments will be easy, and follow as a natural consequence.

Then, according to our motto, when we have done good, let us continue and do more good. We hope that when we present a few thoughts that may not be in harmony with the common view, or understanding, we will not necessarily be considered a crank, or one who has lost faith in the revelations of God, as we have not. This work is dearer to us to-day than ever before, and we see much more in it than ever before.

Do you not know that there can be no development if no one ever breaks over and presents some new thoughts or ideas, but everybody keeps on thinking in the same channel, or sometimes in the old ruts? While we do not think it impossible for us to be mistaken, but with this view in mind we earnestly petition our readers to prayerfully and carefully study our line of thought and citations, both in this article and our former one, "The celestial law versus section 106," before you condemn us too hard.

Now for a few thoughts more on section 106. Section 106 was not published until after that noted meeting on August 8, 1844, where the Twelve took charge of the church (see Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 637); and was placed in the Doctrine and Covenants by them when they revised and published the Doctrine and Covenants after Joseph's death. The 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants was the last edition published in Joseph's lifetime; and this section 106 comes from or through the same source as many others purported to have been received by Joseph, which we have rejected. Why accept one and reject others? (See Times and Seasons for number we have rejected.)

Are you not also aware that not a single revelation after the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants was ever adopted by the church or any of the quorums until the Reorganized Church, by a blanket motion, and without investigation, adopted the book as a whole, as published by Brigham and his collaborators of the Twelve, after Joseph's death? as they had control of affairs at that time. And do you not remember what Bro. Wandell said, that he personally knew there were changes made from what Joseph left them. (See his statement in our former article.)

Those who are studying carefully the history of the past are finding out many things that we did not know then, nor even suspect.

The Evil One was so very active just then to get control of the church (in such an opportune time) that it is not safe to put a limit on the extent of their wickedness and apostasy without absolute knowledge, especially in the light of later developments. We only wish all the Saints had access to the history of those times, and the utterances of Brigham Young and his collaborators at that time. We think if they had they would not wonder at our position. We not only have the word of Bro. Wandell that they changed things, but we have their own writings and publications to prove our statement. Note our Journal of History for January, 1909, and you will find an article prepared in the Historian's office, showing that they (the Brighamites) changed things to suit them at the time. There the statement is found that they have made 6,333 changes in the new church history as compared with the Millennial Star, both claiming to have been written by Joseph Smith himself.

If you do not think there have been any changes, just pick up the Inspired Translation of the Bible and read the revelation to Joseph as published in that and compare it with the same revelation as published in the Doctrine and Covenants, and ask yourself who changed it. We have the original of this revelation attached to the manuscript of the Inspired Translation of the Bible and know the one in the Inspired Translation is correct. This was not published in the 1835 edition, but put in the Doctrine and Covenants after Joseph's death.

Do you know that the tenth was not taught in this latter-day dispensation till Brigham taught it in the very same issue of the Times and Seasons, August 15, 1844, that section 106 first saw the light? and this was under the caption, "An epistle of the Twelve," but written and signed by Brigham, and dated August 15, 1844. Read it if you can get it, volume 5, page 618, Times and Seasons. We wish to quote a part of this "epistle." That in brackets is ours. When he gets down to the temple he says:

The temple must be completed by a regular system of tithing, according to the commandments of the Lord [referring undoubtedly to section 106, which they had now published in the same issue] which he has given as a law unto this church, by the mouth of his servant Joseph. [What a bold assertion, in the face of section 42, the law already given to the church, showing how the means are to be raised for the building of houses of worship, etc. See Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.]

Therefore, as soon as the twelve have proceeded to a full and complete organization of the branches abroad [why reorganize the branches? Were they not all right under Joseph? Ah, they had usurped authority now and wanted things changed to suit the new order of things], let every member proceed immediately to tithe himself or herself, a tenth of all their property and money, and pay it into the hands of the twelve; or into the hands of such bishops as have been or shall be appointed by them [the twelve] to receive the same [why pay into the hands of the twelve, if there was nothing wrong? Had not the bishop been the custodian of all funds in Joseph's day? Certainly! Again, if everything was all right, why appoint new bishops of their particular choice? Did not God recognize the bishops of Joseph's day?], for the building of the temple or the support of the priesthood [what does section 106 say about the support of the priesthood? Can you not see what is on the mind?] according to the scriptures, and the revelations of God; and then let them continue to pay in a tenth of their income from that time forth, for this is a law unto this church as much binding on their conscience as any other law or ordinance. [What does Joseph tell Savary was the law of the church? See former article, HERALD, October 14, 1908. But notice! And let this law or ordinance be henceforth taught to all who present themselves for admission in this church [why the necessity of so much stress on teaching it henceforth, if it had been taught previously?], that they may know the sacrifice and tithing the Lord requires, and perform it, or else not curse the church with a mock membership as many have done heretofore. [Again notice.] This will furnish a steady public fund for all sacred purposes, and save the leaders from constant debt and embarrassment.

Ah, yes, Brigham proved in after-years what he had in mind; to have a steady flow into a public treasury for the benefit of the leaders. And this, in our judgment, is the foundation of the tenth being taught in this church.

Surely no one can, after a careful and thoughtful study and comparison, think sections 42 and 106 agree. In order to accept section 106 at all as coming from God, we will have to accept it as a kind of Moses law, because the church had fallen so low, or rejected the gospel law, section 42, to that extent, that, like the children of Israel, they needed a Moses law to lead them up to the better or gospel law; and this Latter Day Saints are loath to believe.

But there is another serious objection to this and section 106, as this was given for Zion and her stakes, and we have been applying it in a scattered condition, since the teaching has been that the tenth was for the Saints abroad, and consecration when gathered to Zion or her stakes. But we have been teaching 106 itself wrong, as the first requirement in that is the surplus property, and that has not been required.

"But," says one, "the preface of the Doctrine and Covenants says, 'Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful, and the prophecies and promises which are in them shall all be fulfilled,' etc.," and surely, the Lord will not permit anything that is not true to be put into the book. Let us see. It is a poor rule that does not work both ways. That is, if the Lord will not let anything be printed along with this preface in the Doctrine and Covenants, it being sacred, he will not anywhere else; but the Brighamites have the very same preface to their Doctrine and Covenants; and do you believe all that is in their book? No, God never destroys man's agency.

Again, the Songs of Solomon were in the Bible long years, and were considered by many learned men and literary critics as the best book in the Bible, the most inspirational and educational; but when the Lord gave us the Inspired Translation he told us differently, and gave instructions to leave it out.

Truth can not be crushed to earth without rising again, and will stand investigation; and if the idea is good that God would not let a revelation be in the Doctrine and Covenants so long and not tell us it is wrong, there can be no danger in investigating it, as he will surely not let any harm come from it, if it is explained wrongly by some; and if it will not stand scrutiny, what can we think?

So much for section 106. Now let us answer a few objections to our position on the tenth. We are told section 114 teaches the tenth. We can not see it that way. This, we believe, refers to the law given in section 42, the same law God used to tithe his people with in Enoch's day, in the apostles' day, in the Book of Mormon times, and what he gave this people to start out with in this dispensation, as explained and understood by Joseph Smith, a complete consecration. (See Joseph's letter to W. W. Phelps, Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 673.)

You might ask, How can this be, when he says, section 122, paragraph 5:

When I said unto mine apostles, "The twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for purposes of self-aggrandizement by any one, be he whomsoever he may be;" the one whom I had called to preside over the church, had not yet approved himself unto the scattered flock; and I gave this command unto the quorum next in authority in spiritual things that the scattered ones, and those who had been made to suffer might have assurance that I would not suffer that he whom I had called should betray the confidence of the faithful, nor squander the moneys of the treasury for the purposes of self. And for the reason that the law of tithing was but little understood, and would not be observed, unless it should be taught, and enforced by the precepts of the chief missionaries of the church. It was not then intended, nor is it now, to burden them with the duty of looking after the disbursements of the moneys in the treasury, or the management of the properties of the church; except as it may be at times necessary to do so in council with the presidency, the high council in case of exigency, the bishopric, bishops, or bishop's agents abroad, or the conferences; and in accordance with the agreement hitherto made. Whatever burden the quorum may have felt rested upon them in this regard, they are now absolved from, the end designed by it having been reached; except that should it become apparent to the quorum that there was abuse in the administration of the temporal affairs of the church, they shall at once make such inquiry and examination through the proper officers of the church as will correct the evil and save the church from injury.

If this is not so, why did he say the law was the same to-day in section 42 as when given? Paragraph 6:

And further the Spirit saith unto you, that "with the Lord one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as a day;" therefore, the law given to the church in section forty-two, over the meaning of some parts of which there has been so much controversy is as if it were given to-day."

He laid this work upon the Twelve, because Joseph was newly called, and not tried, so the church would have the necessary confidence in him. But now he has been tried and proved worthy, and the church has confidence in him that he will not permit the means to be squandered, and thus the purpose is accomplished, so the Twelve could now attend to their own particular work, only in case of abuse of finances, etc.

We do not believe paying the tenth under the gospel law is the "tithing" of God's people, as contemplated in the gospel law. We believe it requires a complete consecration of all you have, and the receiving back of your inheritance in a financial sense, and a consecration of all your time and powers in a spiritual sense. So, when God speaks of his law for tithing his people, or the law of tithing, he means a complete consecration.

We state again, the law of one tenth can never make and retain equality. (If this is controverted, we are prepared to prove it.) And this one fact alone is sufficient to prove God never intended anything else under the gospel law, as his law was a perfect and equitable law. That is what he gave Enoch and his people. (See Doctrine and Covenants 77; 81; 89; 93; 101.) That is what he gave the apostles. (See Acts 2:44; 4; 32.) That is what he gave the people in Book of Mormon times. (See pages 418 and 424, large edition.) And that is what he gave Joseph Smith. (See section 42.) And when we speak of the law of tithing, we believe it means the law of consecration, or the celestial law, or law of the celestial kingdom, as spoken of in section 102 and elsewhere.

We are told section 114 refers to the same law as section 106, or the tenth. Now, how can this be, as section 106 plainly says it is a law for Zion or her stakes. Did we have Zion or her stakes then? You know we did not. But we did have the same condition before us as we had when section 42 was given. And we fear the Quorum of Twelve did not observe and enforce by proper precept the financial law of God. And God does not say they did, only that the responsibility they thought rested upon them in the disbursing of the funds, they were now released from; and that Joseph Smith had been tried and found true.

Again, Doctrine and Covenants 126:10 is used to disprove our position:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy.

"Taken as a whole." What does this suggest? To our mind it suggests that there might be something wrong, as we can not take any one section, but the whole. And this is our position, that section 42, the law, and all the rest on the same subject down to section 106 agree with section 42, and refer to a complete consecration; and section 106 alone stands for a tenth.

We are not so sure the interpretation put upon the law does not jeopardize the liberties of the people, when it is better understood; and as to our neglect of duty or privilege of appealing to the quorums, it is never too late when a reasonable number conclude it is time to do so. But as to the three quorums seeing the law alike, we have not seen the evidence as yet. True they must have come to some kind of an agreement, when it (The address to the Saints) was signed; but their teaching since leads us to think they did not understand the meaning of their own address alike, even then.

Now, brethren, it would be too bad if we would wake up to the fact that we have been mistaken, and have accepted the theory of man and not of God; for, seriously, brethren, it does look to us like we have based our financial teaching and practice on a theory introduced and promulgated by man, Brigham and his colaborers, the Twelve, after Joseph the Martyr's death. (See Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 618, "An epistle of the Twelve," written and signed by Brigham.)

We can not find the tenth taught in Joseph's lifetime; but can find plenty of evidence of the complete consecration. July, 1840, Bishop A. Ripley, making an appeal for money, makes these statements among the rest (see Times and Seasons, volume 1, page 137), after speaking about their trials in Missouri (italics ours):

Now under these existing circumstances, brethren, groaning under poverty as you see that we are, and being under a solemn obligation to our God; and to the inhabitants of this generation, to promulgate the pure doctrine of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, what is to be done? Shall the work stop for the want of means? No, God forbid, we will propel the wheel of the kingdom by the power of union, until we accomplish all things whatsoever our God has commanded us; and we firmly believe that the brethren who have funds will notice this appeal and come to our aid, and give us influence, so they may be heirs with those who offered their all in sacrifice, and by this obtained a knowledge that the course of life which they pursue is according to the will of God. See Book of Covenants, Lecture 6, 9th paragraph.

It is vain for persons to fancy to themselves that they are heirs with those, or can be heirs with them who have offered their all in sacrifice, and by this means obtained faith with God and favor with him, so as to obtain eternal life, unless they, in like manner offer unto him the same sacrifice, and through that offering obtain a knowledge that they are accepted of him.

Has there any one yet told us where there was a command to pay the tenth in any of the books under a gospel dispensation outside of section 106? True there seems to be a few cases where it may have been paid; but what is the preponderance of evidence? The selfishness of man in all ages has caused him to do as little as he possibly could, trying to make himself believe he was doing God's will.

Again we read:

And whoso standeth in this mission is appointed to be a judge in Israel, like it was in ancient days, to divide the lands of the heritage of God unto his children, and to judge his people by the testimony of the just, and by the assistance of his counselors, according to the laws of the kingdom which are given by the prophets of God; for verily I say unto you, My law shall [no "ifs" nor "ands"; shall] be kept on this land.—Doctrine and Covenants 58:4.

Does this teach a tenth? Are inheritances appointed under the tenth?

Behold the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold here is wisdom. . . . And now I give unto you further direction concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church.

How much did Martin Harris lay before the church?

Behold this is a great and the last commandment which I shall give you concerning this matter [he must have received similar instructions before, or the word last means nothing] for this shall suffice for thy daily walk even unto the end of thy life. [Notice the penalty if he rejects. Is God any respector of persons?] And misery thou shalt receive, if thou wilt slight these counsels; yea, even the destruction of thyself and property. Impart a portion of thy property, yea, even part of thy lands, and all save the support of thy family.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 5.

Do the following mean a tenth?

And if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse [why?], that all things may be done according to that which I have said [the law, section 42: 8, 9, and 10].—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14.

Nevertheless inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 2.

Read the following citations and see if they can be carried out under the tenth, or section 106: Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3; 77: 1; 77: 3; 81: 4; 48: 2; 49: 3; 51: 1; 101: 2; 101: 12; 102: 2; 81: 3; 83: 8; 42: 16.

Now, brethren, we have not written what we have simply to find fault, or to be engaged in a controversy, nor with the idea that we would convert everybody to our view; but did think we might drop something that would set you to thinking, and do some good, and thus be complying with our motto: "Do more good."

You have now read both our articles, and the kindly criticism of the different brethren; and, as we do not want to make this a controversy of words, we will not take up your space and time by taking up each opposing article and analyzing the arguments separately, as we had anticipated every argument made, except one, and can not see anything in that.

Now, we do earnestly implore you to go back and reread our arguments from the beginning, and those of the brethren, too, and prayerfully and carefully, without prejudice, weigh them, asking God to direct you in your decisions, and accept what you can make yours, or what appeals to you as the truth, as truth is what we all want and must have. And, surely we are willing to give up all of our errors for one single truth, when we can see it.

But let us remember we are to be judged by the word of God, and held responsible for not learning it when the opportunity is offered.

Now, may God sustain and help all to see the truth, and keep us steadfast to the end. His way, not ours, is our earnest prayer. F. M. WELD.

ON THE WORD OF THE LORD.

It is written, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple." Who is the Lord? He is Jesus the Christ, the great, allwise teacher, sent from the great, eternal Father, to teach men the way to true happiness. He is the Word of God to mankind, as it is written, "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." And his words shall condemn or justify men at the last day; just as they have obeyed or neglected to obey, so shall their judgment be.

He taught Adam in the morn of creation, and sent men his word from time to time, all down through the ages, whenever they were willing to receive that word as their rule for action. Mark ye, his law is perfect. We can not add thereto or take therefrom. To be converted is to obey his word; and to be wise is to live in obedience to his word, as our rule for action in all things. One thing wonderful, is the simplicity of his word; so plain to the understanding, none need err. The learned and the unlearned are here equal; no excuse for disobedience.

One thing strange but true, men ever have been disobedient, choosing their own way, walking in their own foolishness. This is the history of the doings of men. The flood came, the language was confounded, the Jews were scattered among all nations, because men refused to obey. The poets have sung, What might be done, what could be done, if men were wise and loved each other? Aye, who can tell? But men have not loved each other. Nay, they have despised, scorned, and oppressed their fellows. Full of envy and pride, stiffnecked and vain are men. For that cause the gospel is preached, the Spirit to comfort is given, and the gifts and blessings made manifest to them who walk in obedience to the word. Thus it was in the days of Enoch, of the apostles at Jerusalem, and of the Nephites. They held all things common for two hundred years. None rich, so there were none poor; and they were all partakers of the heavenly gifts, because they lived in obedience to the word of the Lord, his one command, "Love ye one another."

What does that mean? Some good preacher tell us, for that is just what the world of men are asking. Aye, you that claim to be Christians, Can men prove their love, when one has an abundance, and the other is in need? When did the Nephites become wicked? when they divided into classes?

Some of us can remember in the early days of the church in Scotland, the blind were led down into the water, came up rejoicing, their eyesight was restored; the deaf also blessed in the same way. These were in the days when we held all things common, as the Lord did bless and prosper. One day, to our misfortune, Brigham Young's agents came. Then we had gospel tramps living on the people, a tithing law, men got into contention and strife, the gifts and blessings ceased among us.

Men have ever loved to err; quick to do evil; slow to do good. They act in accord with their love and desires. The weakest spot in most men is the love of the use of the woman. So there came a law, a revealed wonder! Yes, men could have all the wives they wanted—aye, to raise up a righteous seed.

Mark you, this law had been hid for years, had a narrow escape from a wicked woman, who burned the original writing; but a good, wise man saved a copy. Good fellow!

Man's next weakness is the love of money. So they were not willing to give all; but would give a tithe. To give a dime and have the rest of the dollar pleased them so well that they went away back to the days of Abraham to prove it. Yes, he paid tithes. Who said he did not? But the church has said it. Yes, and in some countries the church compels men to pay tithes that do not even believe, and who said it was wrong to pay tithing? But do you not know those men have to be scared into that much; for he who is tithed shall not be burned. Aye, they escape good then.

Let us suppose two men in business, have good homes, carpeted floors, pictured walls, musical instruments, and all the comforts that prosperous men have. At the year's end, they each have a surplus of five hundred dollars. One pays a tenth, and so by law is justified. The other pays five hundred to the Bishop because he loves to do good. Now there is no law for goodness; but out of the abundance he has received he gives for the good of his fellows, and thus obeys the word: If you love me, keep my commands. And one command give I unto you, that ye love one another. Why, Lord? So that the world may know that you are mine. Now which is the noblest and most Christlike, the one who gives all to do good, or the one who gives a tithe to escape a burning?

Thus it was, step by step, they chose their own way. Next came baptism for the dead. This thing pleased their pride. Oh, yes, they were to be great men, saviors on Mount Zion. The dead could only find salvation through them. Ah, the blind foolishness of men. They had forgotten that most wonderful Word that tells the depth of the mercy and goodness of God, the eternal Father. Listen: They that knew no law shall have part in the first resurrection. Now, think of it! Since the days when the Saints suffered violence and wicked men forced their rule, put to death in rack, torment, and burning all who opposed them, those many millions that knew not are all to come forth on that day when Christ shall come to destroy the rule of the wicked, and be king of all the earth for a thousand years. Ah, how beautiful, how soul-cheering, comforting, and consoling is the word of the Lord!

Much is said about Abraham and his tithes. What of Enoch? who tells of him and his city, who so loved each other that the Lord took them? They tasted no death. Men looked in wonder. Zion had fled.

Christ tells us, because of the hardness of the hearts of men, Moses suffered them to give a bill of divorcement, but it was not so in the beginning.

And because of the hardness of the hearts of men to-day, the Lord suffered them to offer a tithe; but it was not so in the early days of the church, nor in the days of the Nephites.

Men say it is impossible for them to obey the word of the Lord, "Love your enemies." And who can really love their neighbor as themselves? It is written that the dead, small and great stood before God, and they were judged, every man, according to their works. Then the question is for us all, Will my works or doings stand the approval of the great eternal Father? If not, we shall surely be condemned without excuse.

THE FIGHT ON TUBERCULOSIS.

The time has come in the educational campaign against tuberculosis for cities and towns to institute still more aggressive measures in the combat against this disease, they should organize committees for the control and relief of this disease. Communities should stir themselves to a thorough investigation of the best methods of combat and all along the line there should be a progressive movement toward efficient coöperation. The time has come when an attack should be made on the strongholds of the white plague. It is essential that committees be formed and money raised to be used for this specific purpose. The financial problem, always serious, will find easy solution in the mayor of the city setting apart a day which may be observed as "tag day." This method of raising money commends itself to the sober judgment of a great many workers in the various fields of charity and where it has been carefully planned has proven satisfactory.

Another idea which is gaining prevalence and is proving popular is that of the tuberculosis stamp which can be secured no doubt from the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis in New York. The stamp does not of course carry parcels or letters but is placed upon packages and letters and is secured by the public for the specific purpose of helping the committee to secure funds for its work. Any city which has tried this plan has found that the people are more than willing to assist, thus providing funds for carrying out the plans of such committee. The message of Christmas will never be more redolent of hope for the great class of hopeless consumptives than this year. The prophecy of the future is upon the people and no inspiration is needed to predict that tuberculosis is doomed. In an hour of expectancy like this it is highly necessary that every one shall contribute his share in making the victory complete.

As the winter closes in many people will find it necessary to make their houses warm by adding storm windows. On the living apartments the storm window may not be so objectionable, and yet to insure the highest opportunity for health the house would be better without them. But it is little less than a crime to put storm-windows on the sleeping apartments of our dwelling-houses.

It is believed that there can be nothing of greater importance to the health of the people and nothing more detrimental than to inclose with storm-windows the rooms which are occupied during the hours of sleep. During sleep the processes of elimination are going on very rapidly in the body. Poisonous gases are being exhaled from the lungs in great volume. If therefore the air is not constantly supplied with oxygen from the outside it is impossible to keep the air of the room pure; it soon becomes vitiated and foul with the most disastrous poisons. In many houses the sleeping-apartments will be sweltering with filth and foul air and it is imperative that especially the sleeping-rooms of children shall be supplied with abundant ventilation. Colds and catarrhs will be the order, and croup, sore throat and tonsilitis will be the bane of the children in such cases. The parent or caretaker of a child who imagines that the sleeping-room should be closed against cold fresh air makes a serious mistake. There is nothing that can give such vitality to a child as plenty of fresh air. Should any fear a draft in the room let them follow that which is suggested here: Lower the top half of the window its full length. Tack a piece of Indian Head muslin to the top of the window-sash and carry it to the top of the window frame, tacking it firmly there. Do not tack the sides so that the window may be shut in case of a driving storm, thus letting the screen fall inside. This will act as a protection against drafts and offers a very inexpensive mode of ventilation.

Persons who will follow the above instructions will find their children going through the winter without sore throat or tonsilitis in almost every instance, and in the event a child should take cold do not close the windows but protect the child properly and place his bed beside the open window. He will rapidly recover. This is only an intimation of what should be done regarding the increased protection against cold sought during the winter season. Do not put storm windows on your sleeping apartments.

The combat against tuberculosis must be by strengthening the armies of defense in the body. In every human body there are wonderful resources and powers which, if normal, will resist the invasion of many vicious germs, not only of the tubercle bacilli but other germs. Therefore the increased resistance of the bodies of children is a matter of supreme importance. Lack of good nourishing food, lack of ventilation in sleeping apartments, adenoids in the air passages of the throat, enlarged tonsils and defective teeth are all to be reckoned with. There is need of medical inspection of all children who show malnutrition, and parents might justly be charged with criminal neglect who permit their children to make an unequal race in life, when by simple precautionary measures in the early age period these things might have been corrected.—From Press Bureau, Department of Tuberculosis, Des Moines, Iowa.

SPIRITUAL HEALING IN THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The Catholic Church has always had an equivalent of the Emmanuel movement, declares Reverend Thomas E. Sherman, son of General William T. Sherman. In the Catholic Universe (Cleveland) we read:

"There is nothing new to Catholics in the Emmanuel movement, for our church has had, and used, the same method of healing through the mind for hundreds of years. Our confessional takes the place of suggestion. Ever since I was seven years old I have relieved my body of mental troubles by confession. The great interest with which the people are receiving the Emmanuel movement shows the desire of the American people for a more adequate religion, one which touches the whole mind and body.

"In interviews that I have had with several superintendents of insane asylums they tell me that there are many patients in them as the result of a study of Christian Science. The doctrine would have one not believe in his senses, and teaches that nothing is real. The Emmanuel movement is the antithesis of the Christian Science teachings, in that it teaches people that pain is real, and that evil is real, but it teaches that these pains are brought on by a wrong state of mind. For years and years the Catholic Church has used suggestion to ease the mind and mental troubles of our church-members.

"Like the teachers and sponsors of the Emmanuel movement the priest coöperates with medical men. Many times I have had a doctor say to me: 'Father, this is a case for you, and not for me.' Again, where there is any organic trouble, the priest does not try to cure, but to ease the mind of the one suffering, thus lessening the trouble and eliminating the mental anxiety."—Literary Digest, December 19.

Real charities suffer greatly from being classed with the swarm of frauds that buzz over the country every year.

Letter Department

BILOXI, Mississippi, December 15, 1908.

Dear Herald: After reading over the letters and articles in the HERALD this morning, I thought perhaps a few lines from this part of God's vineyard would cheer some of the careworn and weary, who are trying to come up higher that they may receive life everlasting. I love this work, and I love to read how the work is progressing in all parts of the earth. My daily prayer is for the advancement of this cause, which I know to be God's eternal truth. I hope to continue faithful, although sometimes I get discouraged, when clouds gather round and it seems like beating against the current; but the dark clouds pass over, and the sun begins to shine, and I still cling to the rod of iron, that I may not be carried down the stream into outer darkness; for we know it is a time of trial among the Saints. Many are falling away, and everything goes to show that the day of Christ is near at hand. So, dear Saints, it stands us in hand to be ready to meet him, that we may have on the wedding garment.

I have been in the church over twenty-eight years. I was ordained a priest the same week that I was baptized; and I have never regretted the step I took. I joined the Methodist Church when I was quite young, lived up to the best light I had until I heard the gospel in its fullness, then I received it and have been a Latter Day Saint ever since. We are now near the close of the year. I have preached fifty-three times this year; assisted in seventeen meetings; have visited lots of the sick and prayed with them, and done lots of fireside work; and hope, by the help of the Master, to do more the coming year. I am very feeble now. My health is very poor. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be restored to my health again. There are lots of calls for me where I have been, and at other places; but my health and means are such that I can not go now. The field is already ripe. Let us thrust in our sickles and reap. The harvest-time is at hand. That we may all live worthy of the name we bear, and be gathered among the redeemed, is the prayer of

Your brother in Christ.

R. M. KING.

HAMBURG, Iowa, December 16, 1908.

Dear Saints: We can not report great things in the way of success; but we are gratified to be in a position to say that we are holding our own. I was called to this place in consequence of the appearance in and around this country of the Utah elders, who have made things pretty lively, inasmuch that some, and especially the Methodist minister, have become much exasperated over their labors here. While we had an announcement in the local paper that we would speak on Sunday evening upon the subject, "What difference is there between Utah Mormons and Latter Day Saints?" he, too, had an announcement, the subject of Mormonism exposed. We were sorry we could not be in attendance to hear him; but we learned from some of his congregation that he confused our people, whose neat church is only three blocks from the big Methodist church, with the Utah people. We are happy, however, that his effort has only proved to be against himself, as I have been told by some of the most respectable people in town that they were sorry to think the minister lowered himself so much in trying to belittle others, whose reputations are well known here.

In company with Elder N. L. Mortimore, branch president, we visited the home of this Reverend Adams, to ascertain why he had thus misrepresented us, when he denied it. We told him it was strange that he should deny it, when a number of his own congregation had told it around town. We said to him, there was one thing sure, and that was there was a lie out, and some one had to father it. We were satisfied who had done the falsifying. He became enraged with us. He further made the statement that when he was up in Harrison County, he knew that when our big reunion used to be held around Woodbine, our people would invariably send off to Utah for our leading men as speakers for the camp-meeting. How is that, brethren of the Gallands Grove and Little Sioux Districts? He further made the assertion, that some of our brethren had promised him a "white-capping," which we told him we disbelieved as not having a particle of truth in it. He finally left us in rage. We felt rather sorry for the man, and asked ourselves what kind of a representative of Christ could this man be?

We have thought well to write an article to the local paper, and upon seeing the editor, he said he would gladly publish it for us. We have tried, in a kindly spirit, to show the public there is a great difference between the Reorganization and the Utah church. Since our series of meetings began last Sunday, we have had splendid audiences to speak to each evening. And we are hopeful that good will accrue to the cause. I held a successful series of meetings in the Dawson Burg Schoolhouse for two weeks, leaving some investigating the truth, who, I believe, will unite with the church ere long.

On December 6, I organized a Sunday-school in the town of Tabor, with an enrollment of twenty, and prospects of more. I also preached a few times in the Goode settlement, where the sisters' aid society helped the missionary along by giving me money to purchase some clothing with. It certainly was appreciated. I have been treated everywhere in the district with kindness. As the year is fast ebbing away, in looking retrospectively we are confronted with the question, How much have we done this year to advance the truth of God? The vindication of time alone will tell. Ever praying and laboring for the triumph of Zion,

Yours in gospel bonds,
JOSEPH ARBER.

RANDOLPH, Missouri.

Dear Herald: Having been some time since writing for your readers, I thought it only justice to the many, both strangers and friends, who have corresponded with me in the past, and to whom the Spirit has sent messages through me, to let you know of my whereabouts once more. The first of August it came quite forcibly to my mind, that I would visit my old home in Eldorado Springs, Missouri. So I took it to the Lord and became satisfied it was right for me to go. Arrived in Kansas City in time to attend the last few days of the reunion, then on to Eldorado Springs. Stayed five weeks, and attended the reunion at that place, meeting many whom I would not otherwise have seen. It was a joy to meet so many old friends, as three years had passed since leaving there. I then went to Holden to visit Srs. Devore and Kent for a few days, the latter having lived in my town some years before. But my stay lengthened into weeks, and almost into months. Instead of visiting a few, the invitations were many; and having nothing to call me back to the Home in a hurry, I found visiting with them very pleasant indeed. I have never met a more sociable, friendly, and spiritual people anywhere. I feel that I can not say enough in their praise. In a membership of over four hundred many live in the country. I was surprised at the long rows of teams hitched to the racks. The afternoon meeting was very spiritual, so much so that I asked if it was not unusual. "No," was answered. "Sometimes it is even better." The Spirit rested on me and gave words of comfort to the faithful, but warnings with earnest appeal to those who are at ease in Zion.

The Lord has truly been with me on this trip, and am assured it was his will that I came. Many times have messages been given through me in public assemblies, also to private people where I visited. So often I have seen God's hand in sending me here or there, because he had something important for them. I have also answered all letters received. It has been such a joy to me when finding those who were groping in darkness, but desiring to get the truth, to tell them the true gospel story, freed from the traditions of men. And I was at times surprised at the freedom with which some in other churches expressed their dissatisfaction with their church, reaching out, reasoning along lines tending toward our church. Truly many are thinking for themselves, independent of church creed.

I have so much to make me rejoice. God has been so very, very good to me, so much better than I deserve.

One week from Monday, December 14, I expect to return to Holden and make it my future home. I shall not return to the Home at Lamoni. I ask the Saints to pray that I may always be ready to do the Lord's work. Address all correspondence to Holden, Missouri.

Your sister in gospel work,
MRS. M. J. PHIPPS.

STILLMAN, Michigan, December 14, 1908.

Dear Editors: I am a little girl twelve years old, but have never written to the HERALD before. I have two sisters and one brother. Papa, mamma, my two sisters, and myself belong to the church; but my little brother is too young, only three and a half years old.

Bro. George Burt baptized me, and confirmed me also, when I was eight years old. Just the winter before I was baptized, I was instantly healed of tonsilitis, through the administration of Bro. Burt; and I also saw my little brother healed instantly under Bro. Burt's hand, when he was a little baby.

I know beyond a doubt that this work is true, and my earnest desire is to press onward, put my shoulder to the wheel, and help this work along. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may prove faithful to the end, and at last meet you all where parting will be no more. My prayers are ever for God's children.

I can hardly wait from one month to the other to get my Autumn Leaves. I enjoy reading them very much.

Your sister in the one faith,
MERL VENIRA REA.

COOKES POINT, Texas, December 19, 1908.

Editors Herald: Perhaps somebody would be interested to know that I went and visited the Saints in Ellis, Johnson, Robertson, and Falls Counties, preached to and visited them at their homes. Found them in a scattered condition, as a rule, getting along about as well as could be expected by any one who is acquainted with Texas members. They believe the doctrine as they understand it. We still hope for the better. I am still in the faith once delivered to the Saints.

E. W. NUNLEY.

LEES SUMMIT, Missouri, December 19, 1908.

Dear Herald: I feel it a responsibility and duty I owe to the Saints at large, to let them know my whereabouts. I and my family have now been in Zion (Jackson County, Missouri,) for eighteen months or more. We think the country good; but our circumstances have been such that we have not yet become adjusted financially. But we are hoping for the best. Religiously, I think we are quite favored, having regular Sunday services, preaching, sacrament, and Religio. The Saints in the main are, I think, striving to live their religion. We find that it takes no small effort to live the whole law, and our soul cries out, "Lord, increase our faith. Enlighten our understanding, and make us what we should be."

We have lately been favored with associates from Kansas City and Independence, Missouri, who rendered us a good program along Religio lines. They have given us a new impetus, and we hope to profit by the same, being more diligent in the exercise of our God-given faculties or talents.

During the latter part of October and the fore part of November, I was privileged to spend a short time at my old home in and about Minatare, Nebraska, calling upon and visiting with the Saints, finding all quite well. Was much pleased to meet my old neighbor, Theodore Harshman, who is now a brother, having been baptized by Bro. James Kelley some time ago.

I was also pleased to meet Bro. C. W. Prettyman again, who, although aging, is still busy and apparently in his full spiritual mental faculties. I also met for the first time Elder Kelley. I admired his earnest and fervent spirit. Unflinchingly, without timidity, he stepped into the cold, rippling waters of the North Platte River upon a cold, stormy day, when Bro. and Sr. Roberts presented themselves for baptism. The confirmation was spiritual.

Considerable inquiry was had regarding Zion by friends and Saints. I gave the best advice and instruction I could. With kind wishes to the Saints and all mankind.

D. W. SHIRK.

TORY HILL, December 20, 1908.

Dear Editor: I take much pleasure in writing a few lines. It is quite a while since I have troubled you with my scribbling.

We had Elders J. Thompson and D. Pycock here to labor in our part this fall, in November, and they surely presented the gospel in its truth and plainness, and quite a few outsiders heard the truth, but none seemed to feel the necessity of obeying, but would come and listen, and give good attention. But if there were no more to obey, we feel that it was reviving and building up the Saints, and gives fresh courage to press onward and upward to the mark of duty.

It seems as though we are exiled and left alone, when there are only ourselves, that is, I mean, three or four houses with those trying to do the Master's will; but God is as good as ever; he is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and meets with the two and the three. Trusting that God will bless all his covenant children, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

WILLIAM B. DACK.

Lively Times in Utah.

OGDEN, Utah, December 15, 1908.

Editors Herald: I feel as though I should write a letter to you, and tell of conditions as I find them. I left home the fore part of June for my field of labor (Ogden and vicinity). This is a new field. What I mean by that is, it is neither Jew nor Gentile; it is latter-day Israel in an apostate state. Am sorry that "blindness in part has happened to Israel." Oh, how blind and dark the mind of man can get!

After getting located I endeavored to take hold of the situation in earnest, so I betook myself to reading for all I was worth. In the meantime I attended a reunion of the Heber Stake of Zion; but they called it a conference. Of course they are so blind they do not know any better. This is how the law reads on that point:

"The several elders composing this church of Christ, are to meet in conference once in three months, or, from time to time, as said conference shall direct or appoint. And said conferences are to do whatever business is necessary to be done at the time."

There was not a motion made at the time, just simply preaching, and it was "simply," and don't you forget it. Here is a statement made by Joseph F. Smith. You know he is the presuming president out here: "Latter Day Saints have little to do when they stand on a street-corner and listen to a street-preacher." Say, now, was not that too bad to make such a statement as that, when so many of his dupes ask the public to listen to them? He knew what was coming, so he thought he would hinder, if possible. But possible got the start of him and was not overtaken by Mr. Smith, as you will see further on.

In a few weeks I was called to Salt Lake City to assist Bro. Curtis; so I went at it with gloves—told them they were all right, but needed fixing. Bro. Curtis, My! he went at it without gloves, and told me to take my gloves off, and of course I obeyed "counsel" and made a statement like this: that I had as many children from one wife as Brigham Young had from a dozen. That brought out this query from one of the crowd, "I wonder how many children he has?" I said that I had only two, and only one wife. Brigham Young had ten wives (that is what they call them out here, but the Book of Mormon calls them a very bad name) who had no children. He had six wives that had one child each. Now if you read section 132, Doctrine and Covenants, Utah edition, verse 63, this is found: "For they were given unto him to multiply and replenish the earth." Not heaven. So there is no loophole out of the trouble.

Ten women given to Mr. Young, Joseph F. Smith says, by the church; Brigham Young says of the Lord. Now whether it be by the Mormon god or the Mormon church that these women were given, either of them or both are extremely ignorant. No child from ten. This is from their books. Job said, "Oh that my enemy had written a book." The trouble here is they have written too many books, and such a mess they have made of it!

Now to prove that statement that the church gave the women to these men, the following is offered—Joseph F. Smith before the Senate Committee in the Senate Smoot Case:

"SENATOR OVERMAN: Is there not a revelation published in the Book of Covenants here that you shall abide by the law of the State?"

"MR. SMITH: It includes both unlawful cohabitation and polygamy.

"SENATOR OVERMAN: Is there not a revelation that you shall abide by the laws of the State and of the land?"

"MR. SMITH: Yes sir.

"SENATOR OVERMAN: If that is a revelation, are you not violating the laws of God?"

"MR. SMITH: I have admitted that, Mr. Senator, a great many times here.

"SENATOR OVERMAN: I did not know that you had.

"MR. SMITH: And I am amenable to the law for it. But I see the point of the Senator's question. Gentlemen, you have shown a great deal of leniency in permitting me to express my views here, and I do not want to be offensive, and I do not want to take more time than I need to. But the church itself—I understand your point, that the church forbids me to violate the law, certainly it does—but the church gave me those wives and the church can not be consistent with itself and compel me to forsake them and surrender them."

There it is for you. Quite a number got interested. They got so interested in the matter that two of the crowd had a fight over the matter. We had all the way from one hundred to four hundred every night; as a direct result of the street-preaching, Bro. Briggs baptized one the other day. The people here put me in mind of a statement in the Testament: We know that God spake to Abraham. (Yes, what was it? "Put away the bondwoman with her child.") We know that God spake to the prophets. They left the law on the plains coming here, and now they say, We have the "testimony." I doubt much, if you would go around the earth, whether you would find more testimony and less knowledge than you can in Utah.

From Salt Lake City we came to Ogden. Had quite a lively time of it. Had the streets blocked, and the Mormons blocked, too. One smarty yelled, "What have you got for sale?" Well, if I had you I would not have anything. That provoked a smile from their sanctimonious faces, and it almost made me smile, too. This night we had between seven hundred and a thousand listening to us. I got them started by stating that Joseph F. acknowledged, while at Washington, District of Columbia, that he was violating the law of God and the laws of the land, and the law of the Mormon church. Then I was called a liar, and they put something ahead of the word liar. They call it mountain grammar out here. It sounded quite bad to a Josephite. The man said he was an elder in good standing. Am at a loss to know what they would have to do to be in bad standing. Well, when Bro. Curtis got started the crowd was ready to start too, and they broke up our meeting. I will here give what the reporter of the paper had to say about it:

"FREE SPEECH IS NOT ALLOWED IN OGDEN.

"JOHN DAVIS AND J. F. CURTIS OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH HOOTED OFF THE STREETS.

Special to the Tribune:

"OGDEN, September 19.—Free speech was throttled on the public streets of this city to-night by what appeared to be a well-organized gang of hoodlums.

"John Davis and J. F. Curtis, representatives of the Reorganized Church, essayed to hold services at the corner of Twenty-fourth Street and Washington Avenue. The meeting had hardly got under way when from the crowd that surrounded the two Josephites were hurled insulting remarks and abuse. In vain the speaker, J. F. Curtis, begged to be allowed to proceed with his address, but the crowd which surged around him drowned his words in a storm of jeers and hisses. While waiting in hope that the noise would subside, both Curtis and Davis were actually spat upon by several of the rowdies in the crowd.

"Seeing Patrolman Fred N. Tout standing near by, Mr. Curtis told the Tribune that he asked for protection, but the officer, he says, replied, 'I have all that I can look after here,' and allowed the disorder to continue. Although armed with a permit from the chief of police to hold the outdoor meetings, the two men of the gospel found that they could not continue, and quietly folded their books and went home. Before leaving they were further insulted and jostled by the crowd.

"The trouble, according to the two Josephites, started, when, in a short address by Mr. Davis, the speaker said that Joseph F. Smith had admitted in Washington, District of Columbia, during the Smoot investigation that he had violated both the laws of the State and the laws of God. Instantly a man who afterwards said that he was a good member of the Mormon church, shouted, 'That is a damned lie.' This seemed to be the signal for further interruptions until the two men found that all efforts to continue the meeting were fruitless."

Now think of Joseph F.'s statement in the tabernacle of Ogden: "Latter Day Saints had little to do to stand on a street-corner and listen to a street-preacher." His followers had less to do when they broke up our meeting.

Since coming to Utah I have baptized nine, old and young. I am not going to say that others are interested, or they might send me back here. By the way, I do not care if they do. I just like to get on the street-corners and in the shops and wear them out.

I was sorry for Bro. Briggs when he was arrested. He looked at me and said, "Will you go with me?" I said, "Oh, yes, I will go with you and stay right with you, too." The reason I wasn't arrested, was that I had been a little quicker than the good old patriarch and had given all of my tracts away, and was standing under a tree. So I went with him and did the talking at police headquarters, and the result you all know.

Just one more thought. I got to talking with a Welshman in front of the News office, quite a large crowd gathered to hear the talk (I really thought a Welshman knew better), I mean the other one, than to join such a church). Soon two others got to arguing the case, so I quietly got out of the crowd and got up against a lamp-post. Am a little acquainted with those things. And, lo and behold, here came a patrol wagon, but I was not in it (I mean the crowd). By the way, a Mormon was talking at the time, so he was told to get out of there. Had I been there I would have been in it twice, both the crowd and the wagon.

Well, I am glad I am alive. Hope to continue for a long time. Peace be with you, and blessings be multiplied. Hoping for the speedy redemption of all these apostates, I remain,
Your brother in the one faith,

JOHN DAVIS.

If any of the brethren want any of those books they can have them for fifty cents. In the book are the statements of Reed Smoot, Joseph F. Smith, and Layman. Address John Davis, 1509 Washington Avenue, Ogden, Utah.

Debate.

Editors Herald: The debate between the Saints and Advents in the Saints' church, near Lexington, Tennessee, is a thing of the past.

Bro. J. R. McClain met W. F. Barron of the Christian Advent Church, Monday, December 14, for a twelve-session debate on the church propositions, the divinity of the Book of Mormon, and the prophetic mission of Joseph Smith.

Our church affirmed first, and when they got to the middle of the proposition on the Advent claims, Bro. McClain was called home, owing to his sister's sickness. He defended the cause manfully, while with us. I then had to take up the work, and the result was fully satisfactory to the Saints. They are greatly strengthened, and more fully united than they have been for months.

The Spirit of the Lord was with his people to a goodly degree. Some had dreams and visions that they saw fully demonstrated in the course of the debate. Before the debate began, I was shown in a vision that a certain brother would come back in the faith and be all right, who had given up the work and said he would have nothing more to do with it. He is now rejoicing in the work, and stronger than ever.

Barron was the weakest debater, I think, I ever saw debate. His efforts on the church propositions were very weak. On the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith's mission, he was much stronger; but his strength was mostly borrowed from R. B. Neal, David Whitmer, and Oliver Cowdery. Most of his criticisms were on the ground that the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants taught the immortality of the soul, which he does not believe in.

He tried to make capital out of the fact that there were mistakes in the first edition of the Book of Mormon. My answer was that the imperfections were due to the brevity of the reformed Egyptian system of writing they used, for Mormon said, "If our plates had been sufficiently large, we should have written in Hebrew . . . ye would have had no imperfection in our record."—Book of Mormon, page 500. The unimportant words were, doubtless, omitted, and so did not appear in the translation, and had to be supplied by the translator, as was often the case in translating the Bible. Here is where the mistakes occurred, and Joseph was left to his own judgment whether to use who or which, etc.

Barron tried hard to find a conflict between the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants. He did find two that I recognized as such. One was in the age of Enoch at the time of his translation. The King James Translation gives it three hundred and sixty-five years, and so does the Lectures on Faith in the Doctrine and Covenants; while the Inspired Translation and Doctrine and Covenants, section 104, paragraph 24, gives it four hundred and thirty. My answer was that the Lectures on Faith were taken from the King James Translation, while the Inspired corrected this as it did the age of Ahaziah, in 2 Chronicles 21:120; 22:1, 2, which, in the King James makes him forty-two years old at the death of his father, and two years older than his father. The Inspired says, twenty-two at the death of his father. I showed also many other corrections made in the Inspired Translation.

The other conflict was between certain statements in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. Those he cited in the Book of Mormon were as follows:

"Then I say unto you, they [those who die the second death here spoken of] shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed according to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption."—Page 238. "Second death, which was an everlasting death as to things pertaining unto righteousness."—Page 239. "And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end."—Page 72.

In opposition to this was offered the following from the Doctrine and Covenants, 18:1:

"Surely every man must repent or suffer, for I God am endless; wherefore, I revoke not the judgments which I shall pass, but woes shall go forth, weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; yea, to those who are found on my left hand; nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment; but it is written endless torment."

I passed this by in the debate as a quibble; stating that the Doctrine and Covenants did not state there was an end to torment, or that there would be; and hence I saw no material conflict. This was true as I then looked at it. It only said, "It is not written that there shall be no end to this torment." And it does not say there will be. I had not noticed carefully what had been written. It had been written, as cited, "Their torment is . . . for ever and ever; and has no end." The conflict was in just what had been written. The theory as to torment having an end was not altered. The only way I can account for this conflict in what was written (one place stating "their torment is . . . for ever and ever; and has no end," and the other, "It is not written that there shall be no end to this torment") is that the latter is not correct; for the former had been written long before.

In a vision given to Bro. Yates, and related by him recently in the papers, is an explanation given by the Spirit why there is a discrepancy between the Book of Mormon and Inspired Translation on a certain point. The answer was, "My servants have sometimes misquoted me," or words to that effect. This, too, must be a mistatement; for the contrary had been written.

This was not the worst we had to meet. We were charged with universalism; which, he argued, is directly opposite to the teachings of the Book of Mormon. This, he also argued, proved we did not accept the teachings of the book which we claimed contained the fullness of the gospel. It teaches that there is no end to that torment (the second death), no redemption from it (see pages 173, 238, 239; Doctrine and Covenants 28:12, etc.); and it also teaches that there is "a punishment which also was as eternal as the life of the soul." (See page 315.) From this he argued that if we teach that all will be eventually redeemed from punishment, we must renounce the teachings of the Book of Mormon; and, if we renounce its teachings, it is self-evident that we view it as a fraud ourselves. To prove that we teach universalism, he introduced R. C. Evans' tract, "Future punishment," and quoted, "I abhor, despise, denounce, and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment and unconditional election."—Page 15. And, "I believe that Christ was manifest in the world to destroy the work of the Devil, to destroy death, to rescue all from the grave, to enlighten humanity, to save the lost, to redeem the fallen, and finally restore perfect harmony in all God's vast universe."—Pages 16, 17.

This, we could not deny, teaches universalism; but we preferred to stand by the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and also the Bible, all three teaching the same doctrine. In harmony with the above teachings of the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants teaches, "They can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall," "eternal damnation." (Section 28, paragraph 12; section 76, paragraph 4.) And the Bible says, "They shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever."—Revelation 20:10. Christ said, "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."—Mark 9:48. We would not admit that the church teaches so contrarily to the books, even though some of its leading men do. We looked on that as an individual matter. It is truly embarrassing to have to answer for such contradictory teachings.

Joseph, the Prophet, said, "Say to the brethren, Hulets, and to all others that the Lord never authorized them to say that the Devil, nor his angels, nor the son of perdition should ever be restored, for their state or destiny was not revealed to man, is not revealed, nor ever shall be revealed, save to those who are made partakers thereof; consequently those who teach this doctrine have not received it of the Spirit of the Lord. Truly Bro. Oliver declared it to be the doctrine of devils. We, therefore, command that this doctrine be taught no more in Zion. We sanction the decision of the bishop and his council, in relation to this doctrine being a bar of communion." Signed, Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, F. G. Williams. Dated, June 25, 1833, Kirtland. To brethren in Zion. (Church History, vol. 1, p. 301.)

I wish to ask the church, Whither are we drifting? Are we standing by the books, or following the contrary teachings of men? Are we standing by our Prophet, or otherwise?

Yours for harmony's sake,

J. M. STUBBART.

News From Branches

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The spirit of love and good cheer is everywhere manifested in the celebration of the birth of the blessed Savior of mankind, who brought "peace on earth and good will to man." May this blessed spirit ever be with us throughout our entire life's work.

Our Sunday-school celebrated with a nice entertainment for the little folks Christmas eve, and sweet were the carols that were sung of the Christ-child's birth.

A soul-cheering and strengthening sacramental service was enjoyed the first Sunday of the month, and uplifting and edifying discourses were delivered by Brn. Tanner, Archibald, and Burgess at the various preaching-services.

Regular business-meeting of the branch was held the evening of the 1st of December; and district conference convened at St. Louis the 12th and 13th. The officers' work having been satisfactory in the past, they were sustained by both branch and district for the ensuing term.

Bro. Tanner has been laboring in the district the past week or so. He reported one baptism at Nebo, Illinois.

The Landsdowne Saints are now worshiping in their own edifice, for which they feel very thankful.

Sr. Bettie Hansaaker is reported to be seriously ill and needs our prayers. Sr. Billinsky remains about the same. Others are convalescing slowly.

We extend to all best wishes for a bright and prosperous New-year.

Conference Notices.

Lamoni Stake conference will be held at Lamoni, Iowa, February 6 and 7, 1909. Delegates to General Conference will be chosen. We suggest that branches send their reports in harmony with the law, Doctrine and Covenants 17: 25. Leon A. Gould, secretary.

Conference of the Alabama District will convene with the Pleasant Hill Branch Saturday and Sunday, January 30 and 31, 1909, at 10 a. m. We would be very glad to see a large crowd out. Remember we had only ten out last conference, including one sister, one missionary, and two local elders. Please do not stand back and say, "They will attend to what business there is to do. I do not know of any to come up." Get your necessary work done and be at the opening session Saturday. Do not wait till you get there before you think over the business to be done: Delegates to General Conference, resignation of secretary to consider, and election of a new one. Branch officers see that your reports are correct. M. S. Wiggins, secretary.

The Southwestern Oregon District will convene at Myrtle Point, Saturday, February 27, at 10 a. m., and hold over Sunday. A good attendance is desired. It is the time for election of officers, the appointing of committees, and setting the time for the district reunion, and considering what can be done the coming season with the tent, and for the advancement of the work in the district. If any of the scattered Saints have any requests to make we would be pleased to have them send them in. We would urge all the Saints to attend, and we request the branches to have their reports ready. Let us make an extra effort and see if more can not be done the coming year than the last. A. A. Baker, president.

District semiannual conference of Seattle and British Columbia District will convene with the Seattle Branch at 10 o'clock, a. m., Saturday, February 13, 1909. It is expected most of the missionary force and others together with the local forces will be in attendance. It is requested of all branch clerks to make up their reports early enough to reach the undersigned, at least, a week before conference, blanks for which will be sent them in ample time. It is hoped that a goodly number of the laity throughout the district will be present. Fredrick W. Holman, secretary, 1202½ Seventh Avenue, Seattle, Washington.

Died.

JOHNSON.—James R. Johnson was born at Lenawee County, Michigan, January 25, 1836; died in his home at Canton, Iowa, December 17, 1908. He became a member of the church in 1889, and shortly after was ordained to the office of priest. The funeral was held at the "Old Stone Schoolhouse" which was inadequate to accommodate the large concourse of people who gathered to pay their respects to a true follower of Christ, a loyal citizen, a loving father and husband. He leaves wife, two daughters, and three sons to mourn. The funeral was held December 20; sermon by Elder Amos Berve.

Soldiers Oppose War.

Colonel William Conant Church, editor of the Army and Navy Journal, who contributes to the December Chautauquan an article entitled "Armies the real promoters of peace," maintains that the horrors of war are so appalling that it is not necessary to exaggerate them as is frequently done by partisans of the peace movement. One such misrepresentation of this he cites in which it is stated that forty thousand men lay dead and dying on the field of Gettysburg. In reality the actual number was something like a fourth of this.

Colonel Church further denounces as libelous the statement so frequently made that military men endeavor to provoke war in order that they may see active duty and secure the chance of promotion. His experience with soldiers and sailors of nearly half a century convinces him that they are unanimous in their dislike for war and do all in their power to prevent it. Contrast this with the boast of a certain member of Congress that he brought on the war with Spain.

The Best Books of the Year.

One of the prominent religious weeklies has just printed a collection of opinions from a large number of individuals on "the two most interesting books of the year," and it is rather surprising to find how books of serious value predominate over fiction. Among the works that are mentioned, for instance, are: Professor Royce's Philosophy of Loyalty, the latest published volume of Nietzsche's works. President King's The Seeming Unreality of the Spiritual Life, Professor Rauschenbusch's Christianity and the Social Crisis, the latest volume of John Morley's Miscellanies, The Dynasts, by American Leaders.

The announcement that President Eliot had resolved to lay down the burden of Harvard's presidency on a certain date did not indicate a withdrawal from his larger function of public leadership. It is one of our national safeguards that the republic always has uses for disinterested, intelligent, wise and courageous counselors, whether they hold high place or speak simply as citizens.

In recent years circumstances have drawn attention to certain features of American life of a most unhappy nature. Strong but unscrupulous men have occupied the public mind to such an extent that we sometimes lose sight of the strong men of scruple—of the men of light and leading—with which the country is fortunately blest.

Of such were the late Daniel C. Gilman and Charles Eliot Norton—each in a different way, and in somewhat separate fields, standing for the noblest things in the life of the American people. None can "despair of the Republic" when characters like these are bred amid our institutions, and so easily gain hearing and influence. Nor, again, when men of the equipment and character of William H. Taft and Charles E. Hughes are elevated by the suffrage of the people to the highest places in the public service.—Editorial in the January Century.

A Famous Newspaper Man.

William E. Curtis, the famous correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, writes a two-column letter for his paper every day in the year without intermission. His powers of sustained work are as great a marvel as his faculty of always making his matter interesting.

Probably no other newspaper correspondent in the country is read so regularly and eagerly by so many thousands of men and women as Mr. Curtis. Mr. Curtis has traveled several times around the world, visiting every country under the sun, and writing a larger number of brilliant and interesting letters of travel than were ever before produced by a single hand. Many of these have later been reprinted in book form. One of his latest expeditions for the Record-Herald was through Mexico, resulting in a series of letters as entertaining as those he wrote a few years ago from India, Turkey, and the Holy Land. His forthcoming letters from Ireland, Russia, and Germany will rival in importance and interest any of his previous contributions.

Beginning his career in Chicago as a reporter in 1872, Mr. Curtis rapidly rose to be managing editor. He resigned that position to accept a government appointment as secretary of the South American commission. So brilliantly did he perform the duties of this office that James G. Blaine, Secretary of State, placed him at the head of the Bureau of American Republics. At the world's fair in Chicago he distinguished himself as the executive head of the Latin-American department. He is a member of almost every learned society in Washington and of many in Europe. It is not strange that the Record-Herald prints Mr. Curtis' letter every day in the first column of the front page, and that nothing but a California earthquake can displace it from that station of honor.

A Real American.

A little book by President Nicholas Murray Butler of Columbia University, which has just been published by The Macmillan Company under the title The American As He Is, will receive a welcome out of all proportion to its size and modest appearance. After all the books that have lately been written about us by foreigners, there is need of a careful and dispassionate estimate of the American by an observer of native birth and training. President Butler has many qualifications for performing this task well. He is both a scholar and a man of affairs, an observer whose thorough sympathy with the American spirit of to-day rests on knowledge of other times and places. The book contains the substance of a series of lectures which he delivered a few months ago at the University of Copenhagen, where he appeared at the invitation of the rector and faculty as an interpreter of American life. The book is divided into three parts: The American as a political type; The American apart from his government; and The American and the intellectual life. The first of these divisions contains many valuable observations with regard to the conditions which underlie our political activity, and the last division is an admirable essay on American ideals and achievements in education. But probably the second section will be of most general interest, for here the author considers social and economic conditions. In touching on such topics as the American's attitude toward money, his emotional temperament, his religion, his business efforts, his attitude toward law, President Butler shows himself not only as a keen observer but also as a thinker, able to draw philosophical conclusions from his observations.

Every one who is interested in the study of our social and economic evolution will find in this little book something of distinct and original value. It is particularly stimulating when read in connection with another recently published book, Mr. John Graham Brooks' As Others See Us, in which is to be found a summary of the opinions of foreign critics on the United States.

Farm Wealth Makes a Record.

While the year 1908 brought to the railroads, manufactories, and general trade such depression as was inevitable after the financial crisis of the preceding autumn, the twelve months following the panic were for the farmers of the United States the most prosperous in the history of the country. Secretary Wilson's report of the Department of Agriculture gives the final figures of the size and value of the year's crops,—and amazing figures they are. The total value of farm products reaches $7,778,000,000, a gain of 4 per cent over the value of these products for the year 1907, and a gain of 65 per cent over the year 1899. In this decade the farms have produced new wealth amounting to the staggering figure of $60,000,000,000. Corn is still king in its contribution to the farmer's pocket; the value of the 2,643,000,000 bushels raised in 1908 was $1,615,000,000, or more than one fifth of the value of the total products of agriculture. This year cotton has wrested second place, in rank of value, from the hay crop, which has always, until 1908, been next to corn. And yet the hay crop is the greatest ever produced,—68,000,000 tons, worth to the farmers $621,000,000. Close after hay comes wheat, the 660,000,000 bushels raised in 1908 having a value of $620,000,000, which is more than 10 per cent in excess of any previous wheat crop's value. Minor crops, barley, rye, beet-sugar, and potatoes, were, except the last, which suffered from unfavorable weather, well up to the records in point of quantity, and all made new records in value. Dairy products brought the farmer nearly $800,000,000, poultry and eggs even more than the cotton, and animal products, as a whole, nearly $3,000,000,000. The farmer in 1908 produced new wealth four times as great as all the minerals taken from the ground, including oil and the precious metals.—From "The progress of the world," in the American Review of Reviews for January.

A series of articles on Lincoln's life and character—to include hitherto unpublished documents from his own pen and that of one of his secretaries, will be one of the strong features of the Century in 1909. Frederick Trevor Hill has written of "The Lincoln-Douglas Debates," the fiftieth anniversary of which occurs this year; and there will be later papers on "Lincoln as a boy knew him," "Lincoln as a peace negotiator," "Lincoln and the theater," etc.

Our reference to Boreas in last issue was apparently resented by that belated gentleman, for we had hardly gone to press when we were as if in the hollow of his hand. Twelve degrees below zero and a roaring gale out of the north brought a severe change from the balmy weather we had been enjoying.

Speakers at the Brick Church were Patriarch A. H. Smith in the morning and Elder Charles Albertson in the evening. Priests H. H. Gold and W. R. Dexter occupied at the Homes.

At the afternoon meeting of Sunday, Brn. W. A. Grenawalt and J. E. Anderson were ordained to the office of deacon, under the hands of Elders John Smith and Heman C. Smith.

SOME MODERN REFORMS.

1. UNITING MEDICINE AND PHILANTHROPY. THE WORK OF DOCTOR CABOT.

While our elders are safe in taking the position that the world is growing worse in certain particulars, and in those strictly as predicted in the word of God, it will not do to assert that the world is growing worse in every way. Alarming downward tendencies are to be noticed. The forces of evil are concentrating, becoming more audacious, aggressive, and cunning. On the other hand the forces that work for good are becoming concentrated, and in many instances are more wisely directed by those who have the human responsibility of their control, and are capable of more widespread beneficence to the human family. Everything indicates an approaching crisis, a climax in the age-old struggle between good and evil.

In this number we notice an advance step in the treatment of disease. Our next will note an advance step in the treatment of crime. Ray Stannard Baker is author of the following statement: "Just as the church is beginning to discover that man has a body as well as a soul, the medical profession is beginning to discover that man has a soul as well as a body."

This is no new discovery to Latter Day Saints, because for seventy years we have found revelations to the church associating spiritual instructions with instructions regarding diet, sleep, cleanliness, and other matters of general hygiene. There is danger, though, that the world may lead us in the practical application of these ideas.

The January American Magazine contains Mr. Baker's article, in which is found the sentiment already quoted. The most striking feature of this article is the account of the work of Doctor Richard C. Cabot, of Boston. We quote:

Doctor Richard C. Cabot of Boston, in his first annual report of the Social Service Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital, quotes from "Alice in Wonderland":

"Have some wine," said the Hatter.

"I don't see any wine," said Alice.

"There isn't any," said the Hatter.

Doctor Cabot says that scenes suggesting this conversation between Alice and the Hatter have been enacted many times every week in the Out-patient Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital. A patient comes to be examined; after looking him over the doctor says: "Take a vacation." "Get a light job." "Buy a set of teeth." But among most of the patients who swarm the clinics of that great hospital, the doctor might as well say, "Get the moon," or "Have a star"—for they are too poor to afford the remedies prescribed, or too ignorant to use them.

A man who visits the hospital suffering from no other debility than hunger—and this is an actual case—is advised that he needs a tonic. A poor woman comes in suffering with tuberculosis. The doctor says, "You must stop work; you must sleep out of doors; you must have especially nutritious food." But like Alice, she doesn't see any; and there isn't any. She has no money to provide for sleeping quarters out of doors, or for extra food, or knowledge how to employ such remedies properly even if she had them; and if she stops work, she starves. A woman with a large family of children is advised that her life depends upon having a certain operation performed. But for some reason she does not return to the hospital to have it performed. When the doctor hunts her up and scolds her for not doing the right thing, she says: "But what about the children?"

At this point the machinery of the hospital breaks down and goes to pieces. Its science is unavailing; it can not cure this woman because she has diseases not set down in medical works—the disease of poverty, the disease of dependent children. What shall be done with the consumptive? Give her the best and costliest of scientific advice, which she can not possibly follow, and let her go out, not only to die, but to spread the infection of her disease? What shall be done with the poverty-stricken woman and her children? And what shall be done with the hungry man? Give him a tonic and turn him out to die?

Deep questions these, human questions, reaching far outside of hospitals and medical science, and far into complex, every-day human life. For a long time these questions have been asked in vain. To thousands of public clinics and dispensaries in this land every day come crowds of patients, mostly poor, afflicted with every manner of human ill. Most of the doctors who see them are young, most of them serve free in order to get the experience and training which they are to use in their privately paid practice among richer people. The Out-patient Department has long been regarded as a mere stepping-stone to higher things. These young doctors endeavor to see as many patients as possible, for in that way they chance upon a larger number of interesting cases which they can study profitably at leisure. It is significant that a man or woman is regarded not so much as a human being as a "case"—a "good case," a "bad case," an "interesting case." Even though the doctor's heart is big—and many a doctor's heart is wide open to human distress in every form—he can do little or nothing for these people, except as "cases." He has no time: he, too, must make a living. He must rush and hurry, he must rise to a privately paid practice. He can dose his cases or order a surgical operation, but rarely, very rarely, does he get a glimpse into the heart of the human being who stands quivering before him, or realize that this, also, is a man. In many dispensaries prescriptions have actually come to be printed and given out to a great variety of cases. A dispensary, in short, is a vast machine for the treatment of hastily observed outward symptoms, in which little or no attempt is made to reach or cure the deep-seated sources of the disease which may lie far from anything that the doctor can hear or feel or see—beyond, indeed, his most sensitive thermometer, his most perfect stethoscope; it may lie deep in the moral character, it may proceed from a deranged family life, it may be religious, it may be social.

Newly awakened to these profoundly human aspects of disease the doctor, like the clergyman, feels his inadequacy, his futility; and he, also, sees visions of new spheres of usefulness to mankind. Indeed, not only the practice but the whole point of view of the medical profession is changing, and not less radically than that of the church. . . .

Doctor Cabot established the Social Service Department in October, 1905. He had long cherished the plan; indeed, he had grown up in the atmosphere of that humanitarianism which has so long marked the best thought of New England. His father was the biographer of Emerson, his mother, after raising a family of seven boys, became a leader in the public work of Brookline: overseer of the poor, member of the board of education. Her personality and influence are still felt in Boston. Doctor Cabot was educated at Harvard, first broadly in philosophy and psychology, afterwards in the medical school: a man first, then a doctor. Though a member of no church, his view of life is profoundly religious: broad, deep, inclusive.

"I mean by religion," he says, "the deepest there is in any human being. When you reach the core of any man, you reach, it seems to me, the divine spark in him; that is, you reach his religion. Religion is not one energy or one interest among others, . . . it is the heart, the center, the core of every interest. In my opinion any man is slovenly and slipshod who does not find religion as the ultimate motive and goal of his task, whatever it is. Under this definition it is obvious that we can not go to the bottom of any trouble, whether it be health or grief or anything else, without reaching religion. If religion includes the whole of our life as a house includes a room, then the man who would set his house in order must know all the rooms, must know the whole of the house before he ventures to touch any part of it."

It will be seen how easily, from this view of life, sprung Doctor Cabot's idea of treating the "whole man": the doctor to direct his physical upbuilding, the social worker to reach the hundred and one outside influences which always play so important a part in the health of a man.

During the first year of its existence Doctor Cabot raised funds among his friends (adding a large part himself) to support the Social Service Department. The workers found a place in a corner of one of the great corridors of the hospital, and there the department has grown steadily in importance and significance. Since the first year, though the expenditures have increased largely, a sufficiency of money has been contributed to carry on the work.

At the present time some twenty social workers, about half of them paid, half voluntary, are engaged in the various activities of the department. The paid members of the staff are all experienced social workers or trained nurses—and it is little enough to say that they are a remarkable group of women, doing a remarkable work.

At the head of the staff is Miss Ida M. Cannon. Though the workers are constantly conferring with one another and with Doctor Cabot and other physicians connected with the hospital, the work naturally falls into a number of divisions. For example, the tuberculosis cases are looked after by Miss Gertrude L. Farmer and Miss Ellen T. Emerson 2d, a granddaughter of Ralph Waldo Emerson; patients suffering from nervous troubles, and there are many strange cases presented to the department, are attended to by Miss Edith N. Burleigh and Miss Antoinette Cannon. To Mrs. Jessie D. Hodder come the pitiful cases of unfortunate girls. The general work of hygienic teaching, the education of mothers in the care of delicate children, the problem of vacations and outings for those who need them as a part of their treatment, and so on, are looked after by various members of the staff.

Twenty-one thousand new patients came to the Out-patient Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital last year. Wherever, among this stream of suffering humanity, as it passes before the doctors, there is a case having a peculiarly human problem, the man or woman is referred with a colored slip to the Social Service Department for human treatment, just as he would under other circumstances be referred to the surgical ward, or the Zander room, or ordered to take baths.

"For some patients the best prescription is a friend," as one of the doctors put it to me.

In the first year 683 cases were thus sent to the Social Service Department, the second year 1,441, and last year 1,554. I have before me a number of the small colored prescription blanks which the doctors give to the patients,—and the suggestions on them are astonishing enough—they are so little medical, so deeply human. Here is one:

"She is working too hard; needs advice as regards hygiene and diet."

Another patient came with this direction:

"An undernourished child who needs better and more food, which his parents can not afford."

Another: "Patient says she must return to work on account of finances. She really is not in condition to do so yet. Can you do anything for her?"

Another: "Patient is completely run down, overworked and played out. Cares for a large family. Needs rest."

Another: "Patient needs spring back brace, $8.00. Can not pay for it."

Curious complaints in a hospital, are they not? Poverty, misfortune, overwork, large families, human tragedies. And yet these have an intimate bearing upon health: if the patient improves he must have changed conditions.

The patient comes to the Social Service often shaken by the strain of examination before the doctors, usually more or less ignorant, not knowing where to turn, or what to do next. And here he finds immediate sympathy and help. He is encouraged to pour out his human story. The number in the family, the wages, the sort of home the patient lives in, the moral and religious status, the problems which beset his life—all these things are scarcely less important than the physical factors. For under the new conception of healing of disease as public work, the meaning of diagnosis becomes immeasurably broader.

Mr. Baker gives an account of several specific cases and the manner of treating them. When necessary money is furnished to secure medicines, nourishing food, or needed rest and vacation. When necessary the society exerts itself to secure a change of work and environment for the sufferer. When necessary, a friend is provided for those who are suffering from the mental troubles that come to men and women who are alone, cut off from human sympathy. In every case excellent advice and counsel is given and every effort is made to reform the lives of the patients.

The fact is recognized also that individual symptoms are really social symptoms. Back of the disease in most cases is poverty or crime (or both) and a betterment of social conditions is the way to strike at the root of the disease.

All this is quite in line with one department of our work as a church. We should heed it well. God has made provision for those who have not faith to be healed at once. He has commanded us to build a sanitarium, the commandment in fact antedating the late wave of sentiment that has led the world to adopt similar methods and has set ministers to studying physical symptoms and physicians to studying soul symptoms.

And whosoever among you are sick, and have not faith to be healed, but believe, shall be nourished with all tenderness with herbs and mild food, and that not by the hand of an enemy. And the elders of the church, two or more, shall be called, and shall pray for, and lay their hands on them in my name.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12.

This is a union of scientific and religious methods and contains all that is good in both the Emmanuel Movement and in Doctor Cabot's work, with the further recognition (not given in either the Emmanuel Movement or Doctor Cabot's work) that those who have faith may be healed of the most serious diseases in answer to prayer, presupposing that they are willing to live in harmony with physical and spiritual laws.

In order that the work thus commanded may be carried out successfully God has given a further commandment that if obeyed will systematize our methods:

It is the will of the Lord that a sanitarium, a place of refuge and help for the sick and afflicted, be established by the church, at Independence, Missouri, as my servant Joseph Smith has already stated to you.—Doctrine and Covenants 127: 1.

It is contemplated in this revelation that patients in the Sanitarium shall receive both medical and spiritual treatment, and the man who has immediate oversight of that part of the work is a regular practicing physician, and also one of the leading spiritual representatives of the church, and is to act "in his spiritual office and his calling as a physician."

We also should be prepared financially to put our methods of healing within the reach of those who need them most. The gospel goes further and contemplates social reform within the church in such a way as to eliminate crime and privation, which are stated by Mr. Baker to be at the root of all disease.

Purge ye out the iniquity which is among you; sanctify yourselves before me.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 3.

In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

Shall we keep pace with divine revelation and a little ahead of worldly wisdom? E. A. S.

Official estimates now place the mortality in the stricken district in Italy at one hundred and fifteen thousand and give the number of homeless and starving survivors at upward of two hundred thousand. This disaster is surpassed only by a similar one at Yeddo, Japan, in 1703, which resulted in the death of two hundred thousand, and that at Antioch, in 526, which is credited with the destruction of over two hundred and fifty thousand. The earthquake in Italy was followed within a few seconds by a wave thirty-five feet high which came over the lower coast lands and took its awful toll in the death of thousands of those who had survived the destruction directly caused by the shock.

Original Articles

SECTION ONE HUNDRED SIX.

INDORSED BY THE CHURCH; APPROVED OF GOD; IN HARMONY WITH OTHER REVELATIONS; THEREFORE AUTHENTIC.

We desire to occupy a little space in the "Original Article" department under the same rules that govern other contributors; and with their privilege of speaking as an individual. We wish to deal with the subject affirmatively so far as is possible.

Section 106 is important. It is no temporary law. We can not suppose that God gave it as he did the Mosaic law, because the people to whom it was given were not willing to obey a higher law. The Mosaic law, like all laws given under such conditions, was temporary and transitory. Section 106 declares itself "a standing law for ever." It is not a law to be observed merely in transit to a higher condition. It was not given to satisfy the whims of the people at that time. God does not legislate for coming generations of men for ever simply to rebuke the instability of one generation. We must regard section 106 as a fraud or accept it as a genuine revelation and a part of the "celestial law" to govern in Zion and her stakes perpetually.

Is section 106 authoritative? In arriving at a conclusion in the matter we first ask, Has the church ever indorsed it as a part of the church law and as being of divine origin? Has it ever come under the general rule that a revelation must be adopted by the church ere it is binding on the church?

If it develops that the church has indorsed section 106 and we care at this late date to question her wisdom in doing so, we must examine the section on its merits. What are its internal evidences? Are its doctrines in harmony with those found in other revelations? Is there reason to suspect that it is a forgery? We may add to our examination of its internal evidences the question, Has God ever expressed his approval of it in other revelations received and accepted by the church?

If section 106 passes these tests we are bound to respect it as part of the church law until the church, or God, or both repudiate it. Any adverse opinion must remain a private interpretation.

The thought might occur to us right on the start that section 106 is on the same footing with the alleged revelation sanctioning polygamy, as we have no printed record of either being made public until after the death of the Prophet. But there are vital differences between the two that we will proceed to point out. The one contains doctrines that are condemned in the word of God as abominable. It is absolutely known that shortly before his death, and some time after the revelation was said to have been given, Joseph Smith pronounced the doctrines referred to false and corrupt and set the precedent of expelling individuals from the church for teaching them. It is evident that the "revelation" on polygamy did not originate with God or with Joseph Smith. Section 106 does not contain such doctrines; in fact its doctrines are taught elsewhere in the word of God. The cases are not parallel.

The revelation on the Rebellion is an instance of a revelation that was not published during the life of the Martyr, and we do not find authoritative mention of it until some twenty years after it was given, yet it is not at all in the same class with the so-called revelation on polygamy, and may be accepted and defended as a genuine revelation, and has been so defended by the leading men of the church and the rank and file of ministry and membership. In spite of its deferred publication it is a genuine revelation, though unlike 106, it has never (to our knowledge) been adopted as a law binding on the church, and has never been incorporated in the body of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

There were men living in the not distant past who testified that they knew of section 106 at the time when it was given in Far West, in 1838. Their testimony is not accessible to us, at this writing, but we are personally satisfied that section 106 came from the pen of Joseph Smith. If we reject it we must do so on the ground that he was deceived in the production himself or that he wished to deceive others.

To return to the comparison, the so-called revelation on polygamy was brought out eight years after Joseph Smith's death and certain evidences go to show that it was made up by Brigham Young. The fact that it correctly represented his peculiar views on the marriage question at the time of its publication fits in with the evidences mentioned; had it conflicted with his views at the time of publication we could not regard him as its author. Section 106 was publicly presented by Brigham Young (and the Twelve) at a special conference six weeks after the death of Joseph Smith. There is not a particle of evidence that he (Brigham) concocted it, and the supposition that he did is destroyed by the fact that it conflicted with his ideas and the ideas of the Twelve on the financial law. In the same number of the Times and Seasons in which section 106 was published (August 15, 1844,) there appears an epistle from the Twelve signed by Brigham Young, president of the Twelve. He says:

The temple must be completed by a regular system of tithing, according to the commandments of the Lord, which he has given as a law unto the church, by the mouth of his servant Joseph. Therefore, as soon as the Twelve have proceeded to a full and complete organization of the branches abroad, let every member proceed immediately to tithe himself or herself, a tenth of all their property and money . . . and then let them continue to pay a tenth of their income from that time forth, for this is a law unto this church as much binding on their conscience as any other law or ordinance.

This epistle conflicts with two of the fundamental statements of section 106 and proves all but absolutely that neither Brigham Young nor the Twelve wrote section 106 or it would have presented their views. Brigham stated that the first step was to pay one tenth of all; section 106 says that the payment of all surplus property is the first step. Brigham said that one tenth of the income should be paid following the first step; section 106 says one tenth of the increase.

Was section 106 ever adopted by the church? Yes. In the first place it has long been an integral part of one of the three books that have ever been recognized as the standard books of the church. If it has never been indorsed by the church, then Saint Matthew, the Book of Revelation, Isaiah, Genesis, Nephi, and Ether have never been indorsed. The general sentiment of the church as expressed both publicly and privately by the priesthood, the press, and the membership is back of the three books. But we have a more formal and specific expression of approval. At the semiannual conference of the church at Gallands Grove, 1878, a resolution was adopted, part of which we quote:

Resolved, That this body, representing the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, recognize the Holy Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, the revelations of God contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, and all other revelations which have been or shall be revealed through God's appointed prophet, which have been or may be hereafter accepted by the church as the standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine, and the final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising, or which may arise in this church of Christ.—Church History, volume 4, page 239.

Section 106 was a part of the book so adopted. If section 106 was not approved as a revelation from God binding on the church, no other section in the book was approved. Is it possible that inasmuch as the resolution indorses the "revelations of God" we may decide in our own minds that section 106 is not a "revelation from God," consequently did not come under its provisions? Let us be perfectly honest with ourselves. Any one might with equal propriety seek to evade the force of the resolution as touching any other section or all of them and find himself partially or wholly in accord with the world, but not in accord with the church.

We are aware that there are pronouncements in the three books thus adopted that are not from God, —even the Devil is quoted at times; but such pronouncements are not presented in the books as being from God, while the section in question is so presented and was so supported by the resolution.

Clearly the intent of the resolution was to indorse the book as a whole, section 106 as surely as any other: consequently in its language section 106 is a part of the "standard of authority on all matters of church government and doctrine" (the doctrine of tithing included), and the "final standard of reference on appeal in all controversies arising or which may arise in this church of Christ" (including controversies regarding tithing).

However, we are not left in doubt about the attitude of the church touching this particular section. Another part of the resolution referred to says:

Resolved, That the law of tithing as given in the revelation of 1838 [section 106], and referred to in the revelation of 1861, is applicable to the church in its present condition, and should be observed.

Whatever may be our opinion of the applicability of the law at that time it is clear that the church gave specific examination to section 106 and approved it as a revelation whose teachings were binding on the church. The decision has never been reversed, and in our opinion sufficient reasons do not exist to justify its reversal.

The leading teachings of the section had been adopted at even an earlier date by those quorums of the church especially appointed to expound the financial law, as we shall see later.

Now if we care to go back of the decision of a General Conference, a thing that can be done effectually only in another body of equal or greater authority, we must examine the internal evidences of the section in question.

Its leading teachings are that members of the church should consecrate all of their surplus properties, and that following such consecration they should pay as tithing one tenth of their increase annually. The first step, the consecration of surplus, is termed the beginning of their tithing. Are these ideas in harmony with other accepted revelations? The first, that of consecration of surplus, is clearly in harmony with sections 42 and 101, and other revelations that might be named. The second idea, that of a continued tithing denominated a tenth, claims our attention. Is such an idea elsewhere taught? Granted that it is not, we may well scrutinize section 106 very carefully, though even such a contingency would not in itself alone justify its rejection. It would be difficult to find elsewhere in the Book of Covenants such a statement regarding the use of flesh as is found in the Word of Wisdom; that fact does not justify the rejection of the Word of Wisdom. It is accepted as a part of the church law.

Is there a specific command anywhere else in the three books to pay one tenth as tithing. Perhaps it is not said anywhere else in so many words, "Thou shalt pay one tenth of thy increase as tithing," yet the idea is clearly taught. It might be difficult to find the express commandment, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife," elsewhere than in the ten commandments; yet it is clearly taught elsewhere. Blot out the ten commandments and we could still gather God's idea regarding our attitude toward our neighbor's wife. Blot out section 106 and we still have the law of tithing; though section 106 has the superior virtue of terse expression.

Tithing is commanded. It is and has been a law in all ages:

And Abram (Abraham) gave him (Melchisedec) tithes of all he had taken.—Genesis 14: 20 I. T.

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock. . . the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse.—Malachi 3: 10.

Ye (the Pharisees) pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Matthew 23: 23.

It is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

We see that section 106 is in accord with other scriptures in teaching tithing. Is it in accord with them in teaching tithing as a tenth? We have already quoted from Genesis 14: 20 the statement that Abraham paid Melchisedec tithes. What was it that he paid as tithes, in the specific instance mentioned in that verse? Paul tells us in Hebrews 7: 1, 2 that Abraham gave "a tenth part."

Thus we have the Apostle Paul's definition of tithing. Christ himself has accredited Paul as a "chosen messenger to the Gentiles." We freely accept Paul's interpretation of baptism (Romans 6), shall we accept his interpretation of tithing, as it comes to us, free from error, in the Inspired Version of the Bible? The Book of Mormon (Alma 10: 1), in which is contained the fullness of the gospel for our edification, puts the same interpretation on tithing in the same way.

Melchisedec was the "keeper of the storehouse of God," having been appointed to "receive tithes for the poor." Abraham, under a gospel dispensation, in obedience to a gospel law, paid him a tenth as tithing (whatever he may have given either before or afterward in the way of consecration). When section 106 requires us to pay a tenth under a gospel dispensation it is in full accord with that ancient and honorable precedent and does not incriminate itself as being a fraud of human or diabolical invention.

That the payment of a tenth as tithing was customary under the Mosaic law is evident from the quotation already made: "And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock. . . the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord."—Leviticus 27: 32.

Thus we have tithing enjoined under both Mosaic and the gospel dispensations, and in both defined as a tenth. While the Mosaic law was transitory, many gospel principles were taught under it and were carried over into the gospel dispensation, being perpetual truths.

We also have the carefully considered and clearly expressed definition of tithing as given by the foremost church officials of our day, those whose duty it is to understand and teach the law, those who are entitled, if any are, to divine inspiration in stating it. The Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric met in joint council in Lamoni, May 1, 1903, and formulated an address to the Saints. It was no hasty or ill-advised affair. They went at the matter prayerfully and they tell us that they adopted their address after "careful consideration." In that address they say:

The word TITHE, means tenth; and the rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or a tenth of the increase.

This address to the Saints was adopted by the General Conference of 1905 as a "proper presentation" of the law. It fully supports the teachings of section 106, so far as the matter of tithing is concerned.

In a revelation given to the church October 7, 1861, (section 114,) the Twelve were associated with the Bishop to "execute the law of tithing." Later, in 1894, (see section 122,) the Lord told the reasons why he so associated them. They were, first, because the President was then unknown to many in the church, and it was necessary to assure the membership that they would not be robbed under the guise of tithing; and second, because it was desirable to secure a better understanding of the law of tithing. A careful reading of that revelation (section 122) fails to discover any divine criticism of the teachings of the Twelve. They were released from any direct burden of overseeing the disbursement of tithes, but were retained as teachers of the law. They had constantly taught the paying of a tenth as tithing. God was satisfied with their teaching. It tended to establish one of the ends sought (a better understanding of the law of tithing) and God committed himself to the continuation of such an understanding.

We have, then, tithing enjoined. We have it interpreted in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and by the leading church officials as being a tenth. It is so defined by leading lexicographers, who give the literal root meaning of the word as a tenth. We may safely accept the universally accepted primary meaning of a word as stated by lexicographers, if it does not conflict with scriptural facts, though we can not always accept their deductions. Webster states the primary meaning of baptism satisfactorily enough, though we can not accept his latter conclusions that sprinkling or pouring may come under the term.

Ere we reject these interpretations it might be in order to await some equally precise and authoritative statements that tithing is not a tenth.

Section 106 bears internal examination well. The section itself is in full accord with early pronouncements by the church officials. An epistle of the Twelve and Bishopric issued April 8, 1867, says:

Those who possess nothing beyond the needs of their families, can have no surplus; and as this is the beginning of tithing required under that law, such can not strictly be regarded as subjects of the law of tithing.

A council of the Presidency, members of the Twelve, high priests, and elders, held as early as October 16, 1866, adopted resolutions teaching both consecration of surplus and tithing as taught in section 106.

Do the teachings of section 106 conflict with any clearly stated principles found in other revelations?

It will not do to reject a revelation simply because it conflicts with our ideas on doctrine. Certain divines who can not accept the idea of gospel signs reject the closing verses of Mark 16 and all other scriptures that teach what they are unwilling to accept. The fact that we personally do not wish to recognize that tithing may mean a tenth will not justify us in rejecting section 106. We should be careful and not hastily reject it on the ground of conflict. The skeptic looks for conflicts in the word of God,—and finds them. The Christian essays to reconcile seeming conflicts and succeeds. In section 83 the man who has an extra coat is enjoined to give it away; section 42 commands people to take no garment without paying for it. Here is a seeming conflict that might induce some to reject one or the other or both of these sections. Yet both are true and may be reconciled.

It is not impossible to reconcile section 106 and section 42. According to the first named one pays all his surplus property as the beginning of tithing,—so far no fault is found, as that is the sentiment of section 42. The seeming difficulty arises when section 106 goes on to say that after so doing he shall pay one tenth of his increase annually. It might be argued that this will permit him to go on and accumulate and retain another fortune and so inequality obtain. But it must not be forgotten that section 42 is still in force and it requires other consecrations from time to time.

The fact that after the first consecration a man is required at intervals to consecrate that which he can spare will prevent the return of inequality in temporal things. We may be asked, "Why pay one tenth annually if we are to give all our surplus at irregular intervals a little later on?" The mere fact that we do not now see the necessity of observing those various steps does not destroy the validity of the revelation. Methodists can not see the need of baptism by immersion; Disciples can not see the need of laying on of hands. The point remains that the two sections can be reconciled; and that equality can be maintained.

Was tithing taught in the "old organization" prior to the death of Joseph Smith? A more important question perhaps would be, Should they have taught it then? There may have been a careful and persistent effort to teach and explain the financial law at that time, but if so it was not properly reported in the official publications of the church. A careful perusal of the files of the Times and Seasons during some of the most important months in the history of the church discloses only occasional reference to the law and very little effort to explain it thoroughly through the public prints. However, we do find both consecration and tithing taught. In Times and Seasons for December 15, 1842, Lyman Wight reports a conference held at Olive Green. He speaks of an address by Elder J. P. Green, and says that he "called on the Saints to step forth and obey the commandments of the Lord, by building the Temple, and the Nauvoo House, which would be done by the gathering of the Saints, and the tithings and consecrations of the Lord's people."

The Millennial Star, October, 1842, contains a notice signed by Parley P. Pratt and Thomas Ward:

We here give notice that Elder Hiram Clark has been specially commissioned by the authorities of the church at Nauvoo to come to this country as a general agent for the church; to aid in emigration and to act as an agent for the temple; to receive and forward the tithings and consecrations for the same.

These quotations show briefly that both tithing and consecration were taught as parts of the financial law. True, it is not said that they taught tithing as one tenth, but if they defined it at all, and they probably did, they must have given the biblical interpretation.

In fact, on page 29, volume 1, of the Church History, we have Joseph Smith's own account of how he and Oliver Cowdery united in prayer, November 29, 1834, and covenanted with God that if he would bless them financially they would hereafter give a tenth to be bestowed upon the poor, and expressed a wish that their children and children's children might know and honor the covenant. They were given the assurance that they would receive the desired blessing.

It is true that Richard Savary wrote to Joseph Smith in 1842 and asked, concerning a man's duty to the church, "How much (if a man of property) must he contribute annually for its support?" Joseph Smith replied, "Respecting how much a man of property shall give annually we have no special instructions to give." This might seem to discredit the provision of 106 that a man shall give one tenth of his increase annually. But even if that idea is correct, a private letter from Joseph Smith, perhaps hastily written in the press of work at that date, is not sufficient to set aside a document approved by general church vote and by subsequent revelation. Such a thought would border on the attitude assumed by some who have regarded the slightest private expression of opinion emanating from Joseph Smith as law and gospel. But in fact there is no such provision in the law as Richard Savary asked for. It is not said in section 106 or elsewhere whether a man shall give five, ten, fifty, or a thousand dollars annually.

Moreover, if Joseph Smith's letter proves that he never had heard of section 106, simply because he failed to state its provision for the paying of one tenth annually, it also proves that he never heard of section 42, because he utterly failed to point out the very important provision under which Savary should have placed all his surplus property in the hands of the Bishop instead of scattering it indiscriminately among the poor.

In 1902, (section 126,) the Lord said:

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.

The Lord forestalls any attempt to reject a part of the book when we teach the law of tithing by saying that we shall accept it as a whole. Shall we make the specific error that he has warned us against? Moreover, he says the book "as accepted by the church." As so accepted it contained section 106. The Lord knew whether or not it was a true revelation; and whether or not he gave it in 1838 it became his in 1902 when he indorsed it.

We reduce the argument to a syllogism, that it may be easily comprehended:

The Lord has said that our interpretation of the financial law should be determined by the Book of Covenants as a whole; section 106 is a part of the Book of Covenants: therefore section 106 must have its part in determining our interpretation of the financial law.

The major and minor premises of the syllogism are correct. Its conclusion is logical and inevitable. It may be avoided; it can not be refuted.

In view of the foregoing no one can justly criticize members of the Bishopric or any elder of the church for including section 106 in his teaching of the financial law; he is bound to do so as a church representative, because God and the church have both said that he shall. No one can safely dispense with section 106 and say that he is representing either God or the church in his teaching of the law; to do so is to ignore the great ideals of common consent and majority rule that safeguard our unity and freedom and to substitute one man power, private interpretation, and minority rule.

The section in question meets the test conditions. It has been adopted by common consent of the church in a representative General Conference. Its teachings have been reaffirmed by leading church authorities and in General Conference. Its doctrines are supported by other revelations. God has sustained it as a part of the law governing tithing. It is authoritative. ELBERT A. SMITH.

DUTIES, RESPONSIBILITIES, AND FAITH OF THE SAINTS.

As we shall soon reach the closing time of another year, it will be well to look back over the immediate past and review the work done, comparing the same critically with the written word, so as to determine whether the law of Christ has indeed been fulfilled in our work, or whether we have come short. Forty years ago attention by divine commandment was called to the necessity of "fulfilling" the law relating to temporal matters. Doctrine and Covenants section 114, paragraph 1. And it will require but little reflection on the part of any one in order to know that so long as the law of Christ or any part of it remains unfulfilled, as a people we are lacking, not having performed the duties required of us.

As children and followers of the Holy One, who became such because he was obedient in all things, we can not in any sense afford to fail in keeping the least of the commandments which he has given us. The church was advised as early as 1834 of the necessity of obedience to all the laws of God, and instruction plainly given that "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer."—Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2.

It is not our object in this review to judge any brother or sister as to their standing, or worthiness or unworthiness, under the law. Each is to do that for himself. But it will be expected of us to point out, in so far as we are able, in much plainness, the requirements under the law, that all may have a quickened sense of duty and a clearer conception, if possible, of the law relating to the unrighteous mammon, or riches of this world, as illustrated by Jesus in the parable of the unjust steward.

The Master taught plainly the results and consequences of both the performance and the nonperformance of duty in these things, not leaving the task to those who might err. He said: "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?"—Luke 16: 10-12.

The things which we now have are not our own, but God's. Christ has wrought out for us a rich inheritance which is to be given as our "own," if we shall prove ourselves faithful. Each then should awake and examine himself faithfully, as the Lord shall judge in faithfulness by and by.

Seventy years are now accomplished since the instruction was given: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming) for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon."—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

This harmonizes so wonderfully with the testimony given by the inspired Psalmist, and of which he states, "The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken," that no doubt need arise as to the divine touch of the revelation. "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalm 50: 2-5.

The establishment of Zion, the coming of the Lord, the terrible burning, the testimonies of heaven and of earth, and the gathering of the saints who have made a covenant by sacrifice, are all here set forth in majesty and power. Surely no faithful Saint can ever hesitate to perform his duty because it will be a sacrifice to do so after studying this language.

In the ministration of the law of Zion touching temporalities, as with the law relating to spiritual things, there is a proper order, and each step is taken as men and women are in condition to make the same. Faith in God is not had without hearing the word of God. There can be no true baptism without faith and repentance. But after the condition of hearing the word, faith is possible; and under the conditions of both faith and repentance, baptism may be administered; all these having been performed, another new and extended step, the laying on of hands, is provided for under the law. Should a person demand the ministration of the laying on of hands as a first step he would never gain the position of practical advancement in divine things.

This law is equally true in the administration of that which relates to temporal matters. Had the church, when under the form of branch and district government only, demanded the administration of the law that is made applicable in Zion and her stakes, failure and confusion must certainly have ensued. The distinctive line outlining the conditions was clearly drawn in the revealed law, so that no mistake need be made in a proper administration. The instruction is given: "It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established."—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11. If there was no necessity for a stake there was no necessity for the administration of a section of the law that was made applicable under the condition of a stake; and the work of gathering tithes and offerings would be carried on, as in the case of the preaching of the gospel by John, preparing a people for more perfect things, if they should not reject the counsel of God by refusing to obey what they could obey.

We are called upon to occupy ground as we advance, not before. It was necessary for Israel to cross the Jordan before attempting to apply certain laws and usages to Canaan; and we have our Jordan before us and the wilderness about us in a spiritual sense, and are required to work accordingly. These conditions were foreseen and pointed out in the revelations, hence some features found in the law: "Let those commandments which I have given concerning Zion and her law, be executed and fulfilled, after her redemption." This is not to be interpreted to mean that we shall wait until the redemption has been completed before any part of the law is applicable and binding, but as a step is made in the work of redemption, so the Saints must occupy accordingly and fulfill the law relating to such new condition.

Following the order of development and growth intimated in the law, on the 15th of April, 1901, the following instruction was received and subsequently accepted and acted upon by the church: "My people are directed to establish two stakes; one at Independence, one at Lamoni, Iowa, organizing them after the pattern which is found in the law."—

Doctrine and Covenants 125:10. Authoritatively, then, we pass in part at least from the governmental forms of branches and districts to that of stakes, and by this step take upon ourselves all the responsibilities and duties incident to the new relation, and are entitled to all the privileges, and blessings promised for the new order, providing we are faithful in carrying out the laws revealed for the government of the same.

Under these advanced conditions none ought to be surprised that greater sacrifices are expected, and that a fuller consecration of our powers, affections, and interests are required to the service of God by the people than before. When a stake had been appointed and the Saints were gathering to Far West in 1838, special petition was made of the Lord to know what was required of the people; they prayed: "O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy children for a tithing." There could have been little or no question as to what was a proper tithe under the law as applicable to the church in a scattered condition at the time, for numerous instances of precept and example are contained in the Scriptures setting forth the rule and practice. The people at this time, however, seem to have been apprehensive that the special work they had undertaken would require special diligence and sacrifice on their part, and they seem to have done that which was eminently proper under such circumstances,—appealed to the Lord for instruction and received the following:

"Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church in Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord."—Doctrine and Covenants 106:4.

The law is not local in the sense that it was for these people alone, however; for the second paragraph, like the promise of Peter on Pentecost Day, extends the application, as follows: "Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. . . . And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion. Even so. Amen." This instruction more fully revealed the law applicable under the conditions named. Nearly seven years before, the Lord spoke of the work of sacrifice and gathering as follows:

"And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys accordingly as the law directs."—Doctrine and Covenants 67:7.

The example here presents also another feature of importance to the Saints—that of inheritances. And the important instruction, "concerning the residue of the elders," as set out in the ninth paragraph, should not be overlooked. Considering the general sentiment known to have been held to by the people at the time, the statement becomes a wonderful prophecy, now literally fulfilled, showing that time would be required to accomplish the work and the necessity of carrying the gospel message to all people. It reads: "And now, verily I say, concerning the residue of the elders of my church, The time has not yet come, for many years, for them to receive their inheritance in this land, except they desire it through the prayer of faith, only as it shall be appointed unto them of the Lord. For, behold, they shall push the people together from the ends of the earth." No place is found, it seems, for either elder or layman in the gathering without proper sacrifice and the exercise of supreme faith in God; nor should anything less be expected. "Men and women in order to inherit heavenly things must show by their obedience and fidelity to the principles belonging thereto that they are worthy. It may require great sacrifice on their part to attain it. It may demand the manifestation of great courage and faith, or all of these; but it is certain that attainment is only had under these conditions. Jesus said to his disciples: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. This he spake unto his disciples, saying, Sell that ye have and give alms; provide not for yourselves bags which wax old, but rather provide a treasure in the heavens, that faileth not."—Luke 12:35, 36, I. T.

To have required less of the Saints in 1838 than was asked in the first century would have been unlike God.

It is stated in section 42:8: "If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose." This applies to all the church, and in effect is much the same as surplus, as stated in section 106. In laying the foundation of Zion, lands have to be purchased, and storehouses established, and all kinds of industries set in operation as fast as possible, that there may be places for the Saints to live, something for them to do, and their necessities supplied; but this will take time. In order to have means to operate with, it will be necessary for all who can to turn over their surplus, or now make a first consecration, according to their circumstances and ability, that there may be means to establish storehouses, buy lands, and make the necessary preparation for the complete consecration of the residue as stated in paragraph 10, section 42: "And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants."

To reach this final condition and to make our work a success, this law must be fulfilled, that all things may be prepared, and nothing done in haste. When the Saints began to gather in the land of Zion in 1831, they were requested by revelation in Ohio to give of their means to buy land in Zion; all the churches being called upon to do the same. "And let all the moneys which can be spared, it mattereth not unto me whether it be little or much, be sent up unto the land of Zion, unto them whom I have appointed to receive."—Doctrine and Covenants 63: 10.

This seems to be the Lord's way to establish Zion, and all should gladly labor with him to accomplish the work intrusted to the church. The apostle says: "For we are laborers together with God; ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."—1 Corinthians 3: 9. Then we must work according to his direction and pattern, else we toil in vain. With the law demanding the surplus let us comply, and all everywhere make a first consecration as a beginning at least; and when there is sufficient in the treasury, those in charge will move forward with their part of the work, as fast as deemed wise, or as the Lord shall direct. We do not want the cries of the worthy poor to ascend to God in vain, and we must do the Lord's work in his way. Both propositions must be met.

In the fiftieth Psalm the Lord says, "The world is mine and the fullness thereof." We, then, are only stewards under God. This is in harmony with what he says in section 101: 10: "Behold, all these properties are mine, or else your faith is vain, and ye are found hypocrites, and the covenants which ye have made unto me are broken; and if the properties are mine then ye are stewards, otherwise ye are no stewards."

The full time having arrived under God's order and blessing, the Bishopric calls upon the Saints everywhere to yield full and complete obedience to every mandate of the law, with a free heart, willingly, and as the Lord has blessed every one, whether with much or little, and all to be used for the purpose designated in the revelations.

The presiding Bishop, therefore, will administer this law, take the testimonies and receive surplus properties and special consecrations of the Saints in every place according to the provisions of the law concerning the same. And the bishops in the stakes of Zion will proceed to administer the law of the Lord touching surplus properties and consecrations in connection with tithes and offerings in their respective stakes according to the rules and regulations furnished by the Bishop of the church, that there may be harmony and equality in the administration of the law among the people, making due report of the same to the presiding Bishop.

Bishops in districts, and Bishop's agents, will also carry out these provisions so far as the same are applicable, under the instruction and advice of the Bishop and his counselors. Thus the church will work unitedly for the building up and establishing of Zion, and her interests, according as the Lord has designated concerning stakes, and of churches outside as provided by section 58: 10, 11; 63: 8, 13.

Carrying into effect these provisions will not in any manner interfere with the contributions in the way of special offerings made for college purposes. The law directs the application of the funds herein called for, and every cent of it is needed for the purposes named. The law is also definite touching the duty of the Saints to the college, and this duty should be discharged by every member, for none should neglect to heed the voice of the Master touching it, and fulfill the obligation. All unpaid subscriptions to the college should be forwarded as soon as possible, so they may be applied and the debt canceled.

It may be said that the Bishopric is making a good many calls for money for church purposes, all of which is frankly conceded. But we ask in reply, Is it not necessary to do this if the work is kept advancing toward the accomplishment of the things spoken of in the law? It is also a truth that must not be overlooked, if we would judge aright in these matters, that notwithstanding the fact that there are many calls for help for first one special necessary church work, and then another, the Saints who have sacrificed and helped in all of these things are better prepared to comply with the last call made than they were at first. It is said that "giving does not impoverish the Lord." True; and it may also be truly said that giving, for the benefit of the Lord's work, does not impoverish his children. This is one of the fruits of righteousness to be shown forth in the lives of God's children. Men and women glorify God by giving of their means as they may also in other work, hence, the law of giving. The apostle says: "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Again, "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Jesus said: "Every branch in me that beareth not fruit he taketh away; and every branch that beareth fruit he purgeth it, that it may bring forth more fruit." This is true of the one who "honors God with his substance" as in anything else. And instead of saying to the members who have done a good work in anything, It is enough, you need not do anything further, the promise is that the Lord will help them, that they "may bring forth more fruit." We trust, then, that we shall never be called upon to meet the excuse that a person has already done something, therefore, should not be called upon again. We are called upon to give as we are able, not more than we are able to give, and the motto and prayer of every member, of every elder in the field, of every general and local officer in the church should be, Lord, help me that I may be able to do more, rather than relieve me from helping further.

We are engaged in the most important work known to man. Do we think it will be accomplished without extraordinary faith, courage, and sacrifice? Let us not deceive ourselves, and let every man and woman make choice of what they will do. Remember the exhortation of the Lord to Joshua: "Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed; for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest."—Joshua 1:9.

Trusting fully in the promises of the Lord to his Saints, and that his work will be fully accomplished in his own time, we are,

Your colaborers in the truth,

A FINANCIAL PUZZLE.

I have no desire to offer an extended analysis of consecration and tithing; but there are some things which puzzle me. They have troubled me for a long time. I am not alone in this. I would like those whose duty it is under the law to enlighten me. If these difficulties can be surmounted I am sure it will afford comfort to many besides the writer.

Nothing in this article is intended to be personal.

It is farthest from my thought to impugn the motive of the Bishopric or any one else.

I believe section 42 was given in February, 1831, just ten months after the organization of the church. I think I am safe in affirming God never acts prematurely, at least this has been our strong argument against the revelation on celestial marriage and the cohorts of Brigham Young. At this time he enjoins the church to "hearken and hear and obey the law which I shall give unto you." This section was in fulfillment of a promise made during the same month, conditional on their assembling with prayer and faith, that a law would be given "that ye may know how to govern my church and have all things right before me." According to this it was applicable as soon as it was received. It questions the intelligence of the Almighty to take any other position. There was no gathering at this time, no stakes, no special manner of giving inheritances; and tithing was not mentioned in the entire section.

Why is it the Bishopric did not teach and enforce paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 of section 42 from the first of the Reorganization? The Reorganization was as fully established and in as good a position to teach section 42 as the early church was in 1831. God told the church then to "hearken and obey." The Lord said in section 122 that the provisions of section 42 "are the same to me now that they were in that day when I gave the revelation," showing that section 42 was, and always had been, in force so far as the Lord was concerned, and inasmuch as the Bishopric tell us that there is no conflict between sections 42 and 106, then I repeat, Why has it been that paragraphs 8, 9, and 10 of section 42 were not taught and enforced by the Bishopric of the church?

Where is the authority for teaching the membership to pay one tenth of all they possess as a beginning of tithing? I know, in the earlier years, the case of Abraham as recorded in King James' translation was reverted to; but the rendition in the corrected translation by Joseph Smith makes such an application impossible. It lines Abraham up with section 42. The practice of paying one tenth of what one possesses as the beginning of tithing does violence to section 42 as well as section 106.

You can not sustain "a tenth of all you possess when you come into the church or when you commence paying tithing" with the account of Abraham, or with the law of Moses in the New Translation, or with section 42, or with section 106. I want the divine authority for this teaching. I see by HERALD of October 28, it is still the doctrine of the Bishopric. Let us have the specific authority for said instructions. No ipse dixit will suffice. Inasmuch as section 126, paragraph 10, says, "The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric taken as a whole," I want to know, according to this provision, where there is any warrant in this book for the payment of a tenth of all one possesses when he comes into the church as the commencement of tithing. Please quote the passage.

Section 106 says as "the beginning of the tithing of my people" "I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop." The Bishopric of the Reorganization have taught the beginning of tithing is to pay a tenth of what one possesses when he comes into the church, or when he begins to pay tithing. How can we justify this teaching in the light of section 106? If you apply this section solely to "Zion and her stakes," then there is no specific provision in the book for paying either one tenth of your possessions or one tenth annually outside of Zion. If of general application, why has the Bishopric taught the reverse?

We are told that tithing always means a tenth. Section 106 shows that it means much more than this. The "beginning of tithing" was "all surplus property." No tenth about that, but all surplus property. We have no reason to believe that Abraham had ever paid tithing before the event recorded in Genesis 14 where he paid to Melchisedec. Therefore, as is shown in section 42, the beginning is a complete consecration; the one consecrating only being allowed "sufficient for himself and family"; so Abraham when he paid his tithing first paid "tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." It is somewhat assumptive in the light of paragraph 1 of section 106 to say that tithing is simply a tenth and nothing more. Tithing has not always been a tenth even in the usages of nations. In England for instance we read, "where there was by custom a particular manner of tithing allowed different from the general law of taking tithes in kind, such as a pecuniary compensation, or two pence an acre, or a compensation in work and labor, as that the parson should have only the twelfth cock of hay."

Reference is made to Abraham paying a tenth of all the spoils he took in war to the Lord. I never could understand how God could be a party to spoilation in any form, much less being the recipient of one tenth of that which one man took from another. The New Translation corrects this. The only goods he brought back was that which belonged to Lot, his brother's son, which the kings had taken, and it must have been with Lot's concurrence that he could rightfully turn over what he had reclaimed in battle. In verse 40 we learn that Abraham not only paid "tithes of all he had taken" but "tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed which God had given him more than that which he had need."

If an appeal is made to the practice of Abraham, where is there any harmony in the light of the better translation of Joseph Smith with the present and past teachings of the Bishopric? If you say Abraham paid only one tenth of all he possessed "above that which he had need," how will you harmonize this with the teachings to pay one tenth of all we have when we come into the church? If it means what it says, how will you harmonize with both section 106 and section 42, and either or all of them with the present teachings of the Bishopric?

We are told that the Reorganization has gone ahead "step by step." The statement also being made "it is impossible for the people to comprehend the whole law at once" so we must proceed "step by step."

We must conclude from the practice of the Bishopric that the first step was to pay "a tenth of all we possessed when we came into the church or when we begin to pay tithing." The second step is one tenth of our increase annually. The third step is inventory and surplus. I am informed the next step will be consecration and inheritance. Now where can you sustain such a series of steps? Not from the practice of Abraham! (See Inspired Translation.) Not from the law of Moses! Not from the Book of Mormon! Not from the Doctrine and Covenants! According to section 126 the Bishopric was to find warrant for their teachings in the "Doctrine and Covenants, taken as a whole." Where is it? I confess I can not find it. Can any one quote section or paragraph where such an authorization will be found? If section 106 only applies in "Zion and her stakes" then where is the authority for those outside of Zion paying "one tenth annually"?

The Lord certainly knew in 1831 how much the people could comprehend. May I ask why he gave them consecration first and tithing seven years afterwards? In 1831 he did not say anything about paying a tenth of all one possessed when he comes into the church. I wonder why? He did not say anything about paying a tenth of increase annually. Why? And this was the very law he gave them so "that ye may know how to govern my church and have all things right before me." How could they have all things right before God if a tenth of all they possessed and a tenth of the increase annually were the first steps of the temporal law, when that which he gave them made no provision for the same, but flatly contradicted such a procedure? I would like to know how a man could consecrate all above that which he had need and yet at the same time pay only a tenth of all his holdings? I wonder how a man could at the same time consecrate everything and receive back "inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family" and so continuing "from time to time" to consecrate all his accretions above that which he had need and yet, simultaneously therewith, pay only one tenth of his possessions and one tenth of his increase annually! I wonder how section 106, which only provides for the payment of surplus once and a tenth of the increase annually and which must eventuate in inequality, can harmonize with section 42 which provides for a complete consecration, a return to the man of his family needs and a recurrent consecration from "time to time" which can but produce equality.

I may be dense, brethren, but I can not see how having once paid my surplus property and paying one tenth of my increase annually can possibly be a law operating in Zion when at the same time there will be a law (section 42) which provides for a complete consecration of everything, a return to the donor of "sufficient for himself and family" and thereafter from "time to time" any individual in the church "having more than is necessary for their support" shall consecrate—not "a tenth"—but all above what is necessary for their support.

The teaching and practice of the Reorganization has been first tithing with no specific definition; later on this was defined as a tenth of all our earthly possessions, followed by a tenth of our increase annually. This is now augmented by a call for inventories and surplus.

Section 106 places surplus first, instead of last, hence we have been, and are now, in direct violation of section 106. Eliminate this section and we have no semblance of authority for our teachings and our practices.

I have never been able to harmonize section 42 with section 106, or section 42 with the teachings of the Bishopric; neither have I been able to harmonize section 106 with the teachings of the Bishopric. To my mind all three are in conflict as above shown. In sections 42 and 106 consecration comes first. We have it last. Section 42 provides for recurrent consecrations all above needs. Section 106 says a stipulated proportion annually. The present Bishopric teaches first a tenth of all we possess in direct violation of section 42 and section 106; then a payment of one tenth of our increase annually, which agrees with section 106, but violates section 42. The Bishopric have indicated that some day we will consecrate all and receive inheritances which then will violate, in the time of its application, both section 42 and section 106.

The HERALD for October 14 has an article on the authenticity of section 106. If said position is correct, then it has no place in the Doctrine and Covenants. Reference to section 126 does not help us out at all. It only complicates matters and implicates the author of the latter revelation. There has always been a standing rule which must be applied before revelations become a law to the church. I am credibly informed that the practice received the sanction of the Almighty. If it did not, then we have been wasting our time and energy all these years and the quorums could have spent their time to better ends than testing revelations. Is it necessary to have the quorums consider and pass upon the revelations before they become a law? If not, why do we do it? If it is necessary, was section 106 so acted upon? The author of the article referred to adduces proof to show it was not, which so far has not been refuted. If God gave section 126 he knew whether such action had obtained. It now brings us to this dilemma: Is it necessary for the quorums to pass upon revelations before they become a law? If you say yes, then the validity of section 106 does not depend upon and can not be maintained by quoting section 126. If you say no, then you put the whole practice of the Reorganization to public shame and ridicule. If it is necessary, then we must prove that such action obtained in order to maintain the revelation, for we have thrown it into the teeth of Brighamism that the revelation on celestial marriage was not of God because it was never acted upon by the quorums. The writer in HERALD for October 14 says it was not done. Was it? If so, then in this particular the position of the church is consistent. If not, then it implicates the author of section 126 in recognizing it and violating a specific provision of the body.

We are told to "pay our tithing, one tenth of our increase, or what we have when we come into the church; file our inventory with the bishop, as the time has come to do that; then go on making what we can in righteousness and pay our tithing as required."

Personally, I believe in equality of opportunity. Section 42 has been my economic anchor for many years. I have been working, hoping, praying for the time to come when this section would be fully enforced; but with all considerateness for those who advocate the present interpretation of the law, I can not see how we are going to harmonize the above statement with "all your surplus property" in section 106 and full consecration as mentioned in section 42. The filing of an inventory in itself does not conform to section 42. The paying of one tenth of our increase annually does not conform to section 42.

The church to-day has adopted the plan of inventories, but, so far, of what utility have they been? I am not particularly objecting, as I have filed mine, but I fail to see results. How much actual money has come into the hands of the Bishop as a result of said inventories? Have all of the leading men of the church and the missionaries filed their inventories? Have all of them made complete consecrations as provided in section 42 and received "inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family"? Have all even paid over their surplus property as provided for in section 106? If not, why not?

When Richard Savary in 1842 wrote Joseph Smith, "How much (if a man of property) must he contribute annually for its support? In short, what is required to constitute good membership?" and when Joseph Smith making reply said, "Respecting how much a man of property shall give annually we have no special instructions to give," had section 106 been received and adopted as a revelation? If Joseph Smith gave the revelation, it had, for it bears the date of July, 1838, three and a half years before. How could he, in the face of the provision of section 106, which specifically says "one tenth of all their interest annually," have replied, "we have no special instructions to give"? If he had access to section 106 he deliberately evaded the issue. His answer was perfectly proper if section 106 had not been received.

We are told that the revelation given April 16, 1902, provides for the entire church submitting to whatever interpretation the Bishopric may put upon the law providing the liberties of the people are not put in jeopardy. This very concession does violence to the very fundamental law of the church which says; "all things shall be done by common consent." Does this revelation provide that the entire church shall take the mere ipse dixit of the Bishopric? If it does, then I for one can not and will not conform to it. I have fought one man power all my life; a resentment therefor was my birthright when my parents smarted under its galling yoke in Utah. Must we submit to the interpretation of the Bishopric if perchance we can find no warrant in the law for their position? Then of what utility is the law, anyway?

Listen! This privilege granted the Bishopric is predicated upon what goes before in the revelation: "To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric taken as a whole." Then it is only when the Bishopric are guided by the revelations in Doctrine and Covenants that we are to adhere to their application of the law according to this provision. Suppose they present anything which can not be sustained by the "Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church," are we under any obligation to accede thereto? No, verily, no! Those who give their assent thereby become a party to said infraction. It is our privilege to respectfully ask for the law whereon they predicate their application. It is their duty to supply it. The Book of Doctrine and Covenants was to guide the advice and action of the Bishopric, taken as a whole. When so guided, the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to.

If they presented anything for which there is no warrant in the law the church is under no obligation to accede thereto.

In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, either in the Bishop's application of the law or in their teachings aside from the law, we can appeal to the quorums of the church in joint council.

In all of the past years I have not shared any insinuation of dishonesty against the administrators of the temporal law. That the Bishopric have labored assiduously to execute the law as they see it, I cheerfully concede; but, withal, it is possible for all men to err. I am not setting up my opinion against theirs. I have simply presented objections to their position as it seems to me. I am willing to be set right, if I am wrong.

There is not a line in the Book of Mormon which enjoins tithing. The Book of Mormon throughout can be lined up with section 42. I can make the Inspired Translation, Book of Mormon, and section 42 blend. Can any one go farther? I can not share with some of my brethren the statement that this church has never made a mistake. When we discover our error, whether it applies to a single individual or to the entire church, it becomes our duty to confess and correct. It is better to correct an error than to remain in darkness.

Fraternally yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

EARLY POSITION OF THE REORGANIZATION ON TITHING. SURPLUS AS THE BEGINNING OF TITHING.

The idea is sometimes held that the present teachings of the church on the tithing question have been taught by the representatives of the church ever since the Lord gave the revelation as found in section 114, in which the Twelve were instructed to take measures in connection with the Bishop to execute the law of tithing. For the benefit of all concerned, we will present the early teachings of the church in this matter, as found in our Church History and other publications of the church.

Section 114 was given October 7, 1861. On October 25, 1861, the first general epistle of the Twelve, under the presidency of Joseph Smith, son of the Martyr, was issued. This was eighteen days after section 114 had been given. We quote as follows:

To all the Saints Scattered Abroad, Greeting; Brethren: Since it has pleased God to call forth the true successor in the Presidency of the church, in the person of Joseph, the son of Joseph, the Martyr, in fulfillment of the promises made to his people, we, in obedience to the injunctions of the Holy Spirit, call upon you to give ear to the voice of the Good Shepherd, and return to the whole law, . . . Be it known unto all saints that in this the reorganization of the latter-day work, we point only to the old paths from which so many have turned aside in the dark and cloudy day. . . . faithful elders will be sent as speedily as possible to all quarters . . . and to enable us to do this . . . we appeal to all saints whom the Lord hath made stewards, to aid the same by tithing themselves according to the law of God, and place it in the hands of the Bishop of the church for these purposes. . . . We are aware that this law has been appealed to as a warrant for acts manifestly oppressive, . . . But the perversion, not the law, have been the instruments of this wrong. "My ways are equal and your ways are unequal," applies to the execution of this law. Obeying it in its spirit, is equal; submitting to its perversion, is unequal and oppressive. To such as are willing to live by every word of God, and inquire, What is required by this law? we point to the law itself. Firstly, your surplus is required. Secondly, after this, one tenth of your interest or gains from time to time. You are all stewards of the great Master, and what is needed to prosecute your own stewardship is not required, but above this is your surplus; that is required, and of this you, and each of you, are to judge, and be your own exactors, and Israel's exactors are to be all righteous. . . . It is but a systematic freewill offering, gathered where it is not needed and placed where it is, for the general weal.—Church History, volume 3, pages 299, 300.

On October 16, 1866, at a council held at Sandwich, Illinois, composed of the Presidency, three of the Quorum of Twelve, two high priests, and several elders, a number of resolutions were adopted, urging, among other things, that the Twelve should "preach on the law of tithing, in connection with . . . the gospel" also that the "bishops, in connection with the ministry of the church, should travel and preach the law of tithing." And "resolved that we do most earnestly entreat all the Saints to remember, that all their 'surplus property' is the Lord's, and that it is needed for the support of the poor of his people, and the families of the elders whose time is engaged in the ministry." (Church History, volume 3, pages 453, 454.)

On April 8, 1867, there was issued an epistle of the Twelve and the Bishopric from which we quote:

The reports of the elders from every part of the vineyard show that doors are open on every side for the word to be preached; and the cry from across the sea is, "Come over and help us," and still but few comparatively are in the field. Why is this? The reasons are, that most elders have families, who look to them (very properly) for the necessities of life. This is the first duty of every head of a family, and the Lord holds such responsible for its faithful discharge, and while God recognizes this obligation, he has imposed another, viz: to travel and preach the gospel. Some are required to do this continually; and that they may do so, without neglecting their duties to their families, the Lord has commanded a law of consecration and tithing for this very purpose, among others, that the hands of those bound may be loosed. . . . In view of the law of God upon this subject, and the requirements of the work, and the responsibilities resting upon us to "execute the law of tithing," . . . we have unanimously presented our exposition of the law in question, in a resolution that will accompany this, which we believe is in unison with the letter and with the Spirit, as we believe we have been led by the Spirit; and in the name of the Lord it shall bear testimony to you also.

While we regard a tenth as what the Lord requires, we also recognize the right and duty of all who tithe themselves to exercise a prayerful watchcare over its uses, that all may be done agreeably to the will of the Lord. Those who possess nothing beyond the needs of their families, can have no surplus; and as this is the beginning of the tithing required by that law, such can not strictly be regarded as subjects of the law of tithing. And such as have over and above, or a surplus, of them the Lord requires this surplus, which the Lord calls a tithing, or tenth; while all may bring their offerings into the storehouse of the Lord, from time to time, as the Lord gives to them, and in proportion to the willingness to do so, will the blessings of Heaven descend upon the cheerful giver.—Church History, volume 3, pages 472, 473.

We now quote the resolution mentioned in the above quotation from the epistle:

We, the Quorum of the Twelve, in view of the wants of the cause in which we are engaged, after careful, protracted, and prayerful deliberation touching the same, and the law under which such wants can only be supplied, and to answer our consciences towards God, and towards the church, have adopted the following resolution:

Resolved that we regard the law of consecration and tithing as a means of fully establishing equality among the saints in the building up of Zion, as the kingdom of God, to which we look for the coming of the Lord Jesus to reign a thousand years upon the earth. But the scattered condition of the church precludes the carrying out of the law in its fullness. Yet the present necessities of the work do require a portion of tithing and consecrations, and we believe that the tithing that is now required is one tenth of the properties of all who possess a surplus; afterward, one tenth of their annual interest annually. Others not having more than supplies their necessities, are expected to bring their freewill offerings, as the widow brought her mite.—Church History, volume 3, page 474.

In this extract, as we have quoted from the "Epistle of the Twelve and the Bishop," is the first teaching we are aware of that claims one tenth of the properties of a person as a tithing, or as the beginning of tithing. But it will be noticed that even here it is claimed that only those who have a surplus should pay the one tenth of their properties or possessions as a beginning of tithing, and one tenth of their interests annually thereafter. While "those who possess nothing beyond the needs of their families, can have no surplus; and as this is the beginning of the tithing required by that law, such can not strictly be regarded as subjects of the law of tithing."

The writer of this article does not now, nor never has indorsed the theory that one tenth, no more, no less, of what a person possessed was required as a beginning of tithing; but that, as section 106 teaches, all of their surplus was required as a beginning of tithing, no matter whether it was more or less than one tenth; for thus hath the Lord said in his word in section 106. At a church council held at Plano, Illinois, May 6, 1872, composed of Joseph Smith of the Presidency, Bishop I. L. Rogers, and Josiah Ells, E. D. Briggs, and W. W. Blair of the Twelve, among other things adopted, were the following:

3. That it is imperative and important that the law of tithing be taught as tithing, by the local and traveling ministry including the bishopric.

4. That the principles of consecration, donations, and freewill offerings, should be taught as distinctive and separate from the law of tithing, by the local and traveling ministry.

5. That any member of the church can tithe himself or herself in accordance with the law whatever may be their temporal condition.

6. That every member of the church may, and should comply with the law of consecration, and freewill offering, by setting apart of their substance, or their income from labor, or the increase of their substance, and paying over the same to the proper persons designated from time to time to receive such consecrations and freewill offerings.

7. That this method of sustaining the finances of the church is not in conflict with any law of the church, but it is in accordance with the spirit of every known law, both in the Scriptures, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

We omit paragraphs 9 to 14 as not bearing on the subject. Paragraph 15 we quote, as follows:

15. That tithing means a tenth, and applies to all persons who have made a consecration of whatever they may have deemed a surplus:—surplus being construed to signify, in this case, that portion of property and money which a member of the church may feel that he can and will spare as a first consecration out of his or her possessions; this tenth required being but the one tenth of the yearly increase after such surplus has been given.—Church History, volume 3, pages 699, 700.

From these quotations from our own Church History, we find that for nearly eleven years after the giving of section 114, there was no teaching that the law required one tenth of what a person possessed as a beginning of tithing, regardless of what they possessed.

The writer of this article holds the position that tithing and consecration are synonymous terms when applied to the law given by which we are to be governed in our supporting the church financially. Whatever we give to the church under that law—no matter what we call it—is a consecration or the setting apart of our means for sacred purposes, or for the use of God's work. Thus, when we say the law of tithing, or the law of consecration, it means one and the same thing. We believe that Joseph Smith the Martyr thus understood it from the fact that he linked the two terms together in a way that we can not separate them and make two separate laws of them, as some do, or attempt to do, but in our judgment unsuccessfully. The Martyr, in writing to W. W. Phelps, November 27, 1832, says:

It is contrary to the will and commandment of God that those who receive not inheritance by consecration, agreeably to his laws which he has given that he may tithe his people to prepare them against the day of vengeance and burning, should have their names enrolled with the people of God.

Now, if by the law of consecration we are to tithe ourselves, then the law of tithing is evidently the same thing and there are not two separate laws.

It is true, a donation or a freewill offering is also a consecration, but there is no written law to govern us in our donations and freewill offerings, but each one is a law unto himself to give when and where and as much as in his judgment should be given.

In 1864, when Apostle J. W. Briggs was in Wales, he published a paper called the Restorer. In its first number, he published a challenge to George Q. Cannon of the Utah Church, who was then president of the Utah mission in the British Isles. The challenge was to discuss the differences in the teachings of the reorganization and Utah church. Some of the points specially mentioned were thus expressed by Apostle Briggs:

Mr. George Q. Cannon; Dear Sir:—I learn . . . that you teach polygamy as a doctrine of the said [Utah] church, and that one tenth of the possessions and earnings of all members, regardless of the necessities of their families or dependents, is required by the law of tithing. . . . I teach polygamy as abominable in the sight of the Lord. And I also teach that the tithing required by the law, is a surplus, and a tenth of interest (not principal), and that your teaching in reference to it, when carried out in practice, is oppression and robbery. Hence, one of us must be grossly deceived or a deceiver. The above points of difference are palpable and irreconcilable. Either you or myself are teaching falsehood in the name of the Lord. And I am willing to be subjected to the scrutiny of investigation. Are you?—Church History, volume 3, pages 398, 399.

From this it appears that Apostle Briggs taught in Wales the same doctrine as was taught by the church in America, viz, that the law required first the surplus and one tenth of interest afterward. And that to take more, as the church in Utah was doing, was "oppression and robbery."

We will now quote from a tract on "tithing" as published and sold by the Reorganization in an early day. The author of the tract is not given, but it was written to show what tithing was according to the books and in contrast to what was taught and practiced by the church in Utah. We will quote principally what the writer of the tract gave as his understanding of the law and not his comments on it as contrasting it with the teachings and practice of the Utah church. He says:

Tithing and consecration are designed of God as the means whereby his people are to be made equal in temporal things, without which they can not be equal in spiritual things. Their design is to take the riches of the rich, and give what is needed to the poor.

He then quotes from Doctrine and Covenants 101:2:

I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine, and it is my purpose to provide for my Saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves.

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." And to the foregoing agree the teachings of Enoch, the New Testament, and the Book of Mormon. The Spirit of Christ is the spirit of liberty, of love, of unity in righteousness, and of equality, both in temporal and in spiritual things. Holy men and women of every age have practiced, as well as taught these things. Bad men have both taught and practiced the opposite. . . . The tithing should be collected for the poor, instead of from them. They are to receive needed aid from the tithing, instead of paying any. The poor, who are worthy to belong to the church, are worthy to be aided by the rich. This is according to the word of God, and the Spirit of Christ, and the great principles of love and unity which must ever actuate the church of God, and mark the teachings of its priesthood. The poor may contribute of their mites, as did the poor widow, but this is not tithing, it is simply an offering.

All are under obligations to build up the church in righteousness, with their might, mind, and strength; but the law of tithing takes means only from those who have it to spare, and not from those who can with difficulty supply their ordinary wants. The law of tithing, when faithfully executed, oppresses no one, deprives no one of anything they really need. It is designed to supply want instead of creating and increasing it. It proposes to take means from where it is not needed, and put where it is, and thus bring about an equality for the common good. It is a principle by which one member of the body of Christ manifests its care and love for all others. The members of Christ's body (the church), are members in common, members of one another. When one rejoices, all rejoice. When one suffers, all suffer. The law that governs one, governs all,—it blesses all, it humbles all, it enriches all. The law reads:

The writer of the tract then quotes all of section 106, and paragraphs 8 and 9 of section 42, and then comments as follows:

Here, then, is the law and the only law, by which Zion and her stakes can be built up. The "standing law" for the priesthood, as well as the people "for ever."

1. The Saints are to be tithed of their surplus.
2. Those who have paid their surplus are to pay one tenth of their "interest" (which is their gains) annually.
3. The tithing and consecrations are to be used for the relief of the poor, "for their support," also for the building of the temple, laying the foundation of Zion, for the priesthood, etc. . . . This law diffuses the properties of the Saints, equally, among them all, according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs. (See Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.) . . .

The law of tithing, as found in the books, proclaims equality, and "liberty to the captives." It lifts up, and gladdens the heart of the poor, of the aged, and of the infirm. As it is the offspring of love, so it is sustained by love. The church can not be fully organized without it, and Zion can not be sanctified without it; and if the Saints, in their gathered condition, are not organized according to it, "they shall be cut off." (Doctrine and Covenants 51:1.)

Brigham Young and his coworkers, have taught the people to pay one tenth of all they possessed, whether they were rich or poor; to pay one tenth of all their time, or its equivalent; to pay one tenth of all their earnings, etc. It will not do for God's people to say, We have done thus and so, because our "file leaders" have counseled us. The fact is, God holds every Saint accountable to him for his own conduct, let the leaders do as they will. Every man must stand or fall for himself; not trusting in another. All men are to be judged, not for another's doings, but for their own. And all people who have the books; Bible, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, will be justified or condemned by the word of God contained in them. Every man will be held accountable for his own sins in the day of judgment, in spite of "file leaders." If we govern ourselves, touching the matter of tithing, consecrations, donations, and offerings, by the law and the principles laid down in these books, it will be well for us, both in time and eternity.

The Saints who will tamely submit to the unlawful exactions of their leaders, are but forging their own fetters. The Saints should go "to the law and the testimony," and if their leaders "speak not according to these, it is because there is no light in them." . . . The Lord holds the officers in the priesthood responsible for their acts, and the Saints are authorized to do the same.

"It shall come to pass, that the inhabitants of Zion shall judge all things pertaining to Zion; and liars and hypocrites shall be proved by them, and they who are not apostles and prophets shall be known." By this we see that the Saints are to "judge" of the acts, character, and fitness of their servants,—the ministry, and of "all things pertaining to Zion," which includes the temporal things, tithings, consecrations, with all church moneys and church properties. . . .

The acts of the priesthood are valid and binding on earth and in heaven, when they are in accordance with the law of God; and when they are not, they are of no force, and are not binding, neither with God nor man. The law is supreme. The priesthood may err, and indeed are liable to do so, but "the law of the Lord is perfect," it is that which is ordained of God to govern both priest and people. The secret of power, in the priesthood, is in learning, and doing the commandments of God, "and his commandments are not grievous." "I, the Lord, am bound when ye do what I say, but when ye do not what I say, ye have no promise."—Doctrine and Covenants 81:3. "He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayers shall be an abomination."—Proverbs 28:9.

Without further comment, we submit the foregoing extracts from the early teachings of the Reorganization to all who may be interested in knowing the facts as to what was taught in the earlier days of the same. Ever praying that God's law may be vindicated to his name's honor and glory.

Don't Make the Wrinkles Deeper.

Is father's eyesight growing dim,
His form a little lower?
Is mother's hair a little gray,
Her step a little slower?
Is life's hill growing hard to climb?
Make not their pathway steeper;
Smooth out the furrows of their brows,
Oh, do not make them deeper.

There's nothing makes a face so young
As joy, youth's fairest token;
And nothing makes a face grow old
Like hearts that have been broken.
Take heed lest deeds of thine should make Thy mother be a weeper;
Stamp peace upon a father's brow,
Don't make the wrinkles deeper.

In doubtful pathways do not go,
Be tempted not to wander;
Grieve not the hearts that love you so,
But make their love grow fonder.
Much have thy parents borne for thee,
Be now their tender keeper;
And let them lean upon thy love,
Don't make the wrinkles deeper.

Be lavish with thy loving deeds,
Be patient, true and tender;
And make the path that ageward leads,
Aglow with earthly splendor.
Some day, thy dear ones stricken low,
Must yield to death, the reaper:
And you will then be glad to know
You made no wrinkles deeper.

The Boo Rag.

Editor Mothers' Home Column; Dear Mothers: As I glance backward this morning, I hear a faint, pitiful wail in the dead hours of the night. Again as a young, inexperienced parent, I light the lamp, kindle a fire, and hold our dear little one's feet to the oven door. We lovingly caress, and affectionately rub the aching limb. We apply cloths wrung from hot water, we resort to the camphor bottle; we unsparingly apply good liniment. We exhaust again and again our meager, little store of knowledge, and finally appeal to our loving Father of all light and life, and still our little one writhes with pain: the sleepy moan at intervals develops into lusty crying.

"Oh, it's nothing but a case of the old fashioned leg-ache; the little bones are growing, that's all."

But how many thousand peaceful homes are suddenly wrought into an hour's turmoil? And, how many thousands of my innocent, playful, God-blessed little friends unnecessarily suffer in this way?

It is this last feature of the case, and my never-dying love for them, that inspires me to write. I turn backward again, and live over those days when I first studied Hydropathy, where I learned that the application of a cloth wet in cold water is a speedy and all-sufficient remedy. And again I hear the little ones cry out in the night time: "Ma-me—Ma-me. I wis ood pease dit a boo rag." One end of a small towel is wet in cold water and quickly wrapped around the chubby little leg and I hear him say, "Boo-boo, dat's cole." He waits only for his accustomed loving embrace, then cuddles down, and the peace of God broods over the home. Mothers, "Go thou and do likewise."

A Man's Mother.

Man, if you have an old mother, be good to her. Tell her that you love her. Kiss the faded old lips. Hold in yours the work-knotted hands.

Scatter a few of the flowers of tenderness and appreciation in her pathway while she is still alive and can be made happy by them.

Don't wait to put all your affection and gratitude and reverence for her into a costly ton of marble inscribed "Mother."

Don't wait to throw all of your bouquets on her grave. It's mighty doubtful whether an angel in heaven takes any interest in cemeteries or gets any satisfaction from revisiting earth and contemplation of a flattering tombstone; but it is utterly, certainly certain that you can make your old mother's heart sing for joy by showing her, while she is alive, just one tithe of the love and appreciation that you will heap upon her when she is dead.

These words are written for some one particular man who reads this page. I do not know his name, but I know his story.

He is a middle-aged man, married, prosperous. He is a good man, highly respected, and he hasn't an idea but what he is doing his full duty by his poor old mother who lives in his home and whom he supports. He supplies her wants. She eats at his table, is sheltered by his roof, is warmed by his fire, is decently clothed by his hands; but that is all.

He neglects her.

He never says a word of affection to her.

He never pays her any little attentions.

When she ventures an opinion, he cuts it short with curt contempt.

When she tells her garrulous old stories, as old people will, he does not even try to conceal how much he is bored.

In a thousand unintentional ways the old mother is made to feel that she is a cumberer of the ground, an impediment in the household, an old-fashioned and useless piece of furniture of which every one will be glad to be rid.

Under this coldness and neglect the poor old mother's heart is breaking, and in a letter written in a trembling and feeble handwriting, she asks me if I can not say something that her son will read, and that may make him think.

Ah, if I only could!

If I could only say to him, "Man, man, give love as well as duty to your mother. Give her the wine of life as well as the bread. Don't forget the woman who never forgets you.

Of course the man will say, and truly, that he is busy, overworked, careburdened; that he has the claims of wife and children upon him; that he is often irritable through sheer physical weariness and overstrain.

Granted. But your mother's life has not been easy. Your father was a poor man, and from the day she married him she stood by his side fighting the wolf from the door with her naked hands, as a woman must fight.

She worked not the eight or ten-hour day of the union, but the twenty-four hour day of the poor wife and mother.

So cooked and cleaned and scrubbed and patched and nursed from dawn until bedtime, and in the night was up and down getting drinks for thirsty lips, covering restless little sleepers, listening for croupy coughs.

She had time to listen to your stories of boyish fun and frolic and triumph.

She had time to say the things that spurred your ambition on.

She never forgot to cook the little dishes you liked.

She did without the dress she needed that you might not be ashamed by your clothes before your fellows.

Stop, man, and think what life would have been to you if she had treated you in your childhood as you are treating her in old age!

Suppose there had been no soft breast on which you could weep out your childish sorrows, no clinging arms to enfold you and comfort you when the things of your little world went wrong?

Would it not take away from you the memory of all that is best and sweetest in life? Is there anything else so pitiful on earth as the little child that is motherless—that is an alien in a strange home—that has no one to love it?

Yes, there is just one other figure more forlorn than the little, unloved child, and that is the old mother, who is unloved by the children she raised and who is doomed to spend the last years of her life in a glacial atmosphere of neglect; her devotion, her labors, her sacrifice forgotten.

Remember them now while there is yet time, while she is living, to pay back to her in love and tenderness something on account this very night.

Go home and put your arm around the shrunken old figure. Kiss the drooping old mouth with a real, live, warm kiss, instead of giving her a perfunctory peck on the cheek. Tell her that she is the greatest mother a man ever had, and that all you are she made you.

It will cause her very soul to leap with joy, and make the world a place of circling joy, and life itself swim in a rosy mist of bliss for her—if she does not drop dead with surprise.—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. C. K. Preston, of Springfield, Nebraska, desires the prayers of the Saints in her behalf, that if it be God's will she may be healed. She has been suffering with dropsy for some months, and realizes that so far as the power of man is concerned, there is no hope of her recovery. But she has faith in God.

Letter Department

MINT, Missouri, December 31, 1908.

Dear Herald: I will write you again, as I would like to learn a sister's name who sent me a dollar in answer to my letter in the HERALD quite a while ago. Her address is Decatur, Michigan. I received sacrifices from several of the good and kind brothers and sisters, and I answered them all except this sister, and she failed to sign her name. I trust the Lord will bless her, and all the good Saints for their sacrifices to the poor and needy creatures here on earth. I dearly love this true gospel work.

One sister sent me a sacrifice from the Saints' Home. She wrote me a long, saintly letter, and sent my children some good reading she had cut out of papers. The old year goes out with lots of good done for the cause of Christ; but there is still room for us all, as true saints of God, to do more in the future for the good of the cause than we have done in the past. And, dear Saints, let us try to do more in the year 1909.

The more I say and do for this great work, the better I love it. I grow stronger in the faith each day. We take the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Zion's Hope, so we have plenty of good reading. If all parents would take some or all of the church papers, and let their children read them, and read them to their children, they would be kept closer in touch with the work of the Lord. Let all try it, and see what a difference it will make with your beloved sons and daughters. We subscribed for Autumn Leaves for our daughter a year ago, and she has since become a member of the church. We subscribed for the Hope for our little boys, one was eleven the 15th of last November, and one will be thirteen the 27th of January, 1909; and they are waiting now for Bro. A. M. Baker to come and baptize them; and they have just read themselves into the church. So you see what you can do if you will keep good reading before your children, and try to get them interested in the gospel work.

Our faithful Bro. G. W. Anderson preached at our school-house the second Sunday in December. Brn. Clarence and Fulton Anderson were with him. They are his sons. Bro. and Sr. Anderson have been faithful in bringing their children up in the gospel work. They have five children in the church, and two little ones who want to be baptized. I think they will be baptized when Bro. Baker baptizes my two boys. They are very sweet little children, and I love them both. We have preaching every first Sunday up at our little Grove Spring Branch, in our church-house; and my husband, J. C. Atkinson, and Bro. G. W. Anderson preach every third Sunday up at Bro. T. J. Jordan's, about four miles from our place, in a private house. We live about thirteen miles from the Grove Spring Branch. Dear Saints, pray for me, that I may hold out faithful to the end.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. J. C. ATKINSON.

WICHITA, Kansas, December 20, 1908.

Dear Herald: I wish to say that I feel myself as one of the isolated ones, though I do not know how close there may be one of our faith, or even a branch. I have been here nearly four months, and have not heard the gospel explained in its purity since I arrived here. Though, while we are in such an isolated condition, we do not know how much good we may do by just speaking a few words. I am persuaded that by a few words spoken, I have caused one thinker to investigate and to say that he could see no other way. He seemingly is as anxious to obey the gospel as I am to hear another sermon. I would ask that you please inform us through the HERALD, or some other way, of the closest branch to Wichita; or if any of the missionaries should be passing by, they are kindly requested to stop at 221 South Exposition Avenue.

S. D. HUFF.

GREENWOOD, Missouri, December 31, 1908.

Editors Herald: I wish you a happy New-year. I have read your pages twenty-nine years, and I expect to read them as long as the Lord permits me to live, and you continue to speak to the living and publish the good news of the everlasting gospel. Will you kindly speak a word to our Scandinavian brethren and sisters, as the letter of Bro. Okerlind, in the Ensign, touched my feelings. He is over in Sweden as our missionary; as I learned from his brother-in-law, David G. Lundquist, who has lately returned from that mission after spending something over two years in that field. He reports that some people have accepted the restored gospel, as we teach it. Can we let them go with one meal a day, and without any tracts to distribute, and we live in this country, having plenty? Shall we act as the Jews when they get well established here, and have plenty? They care but little for their ancient Canaan.

We believe that the coming of our Savior is near at hand; and, if we are faithful, we shall meet him. But how will we feel, should he say to us, Why did you not help my servants over in that land where you came from?

If you will but sacrifice a little for the work in that far-off land, and send it to the Bishop, he will attend to the rest, and God's blessing will be yours to enjoy. Let us do more for his work this coming year than we have done in the past. Peace be with you, is my humble prayer in Jesus' name.

Your brother in Christ,
C. J. CARLSON.

News From Branches

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

At a recent business-meeting, the West Side Branch held its regular election of branch officers. Bro. S. C. Good was chosen president, Harry Passman priest, Charles Shaw teacher, and Guy Fairbanks deacon. Sr. Marie Richter was chosen organist, and Sr. Dottie Logan chorister. Reports from all committees and officers place the branch in a fair condition. Bro. and Sr. J. F. Keir were granted letters of removal from Chicago Branch to DeKalb. Bro. Keir's removal created a vacancy on the building fund committee and Bro. William Sloan was elected to succeed him. Bro. Allen, chairman of the building committee, reported that church-building outlook was not the darkest thing in the world, but that he had several schemes under way and one especially which he was working on, and hoped to render a pleasing report to the branch in the future. Ye brethren afar off, we are not asking for donations, we are asking for loans, of from one dollar up to three thousand dollars, all of which we will pay back in a few short years, with good interest. Times are so prosperous here in the city that men who are loaning on real estate do not care to loan on church property. So you see where we are in the straits.

At our last writing, the South Side people had a splendid proposition under way, and had submitted the congregation an offer on a small church, which we understand had been, or would have been, accepted, but on the night before the deal could have come off, this particular little church, with two others in the vicinity, were set on fire by unknown parties, and the "particular little church" was seriously damaged. Providence? interference? or what-not, the thing happened, in a manner that is altogether strange. The churches have suffered considerably here from the united elements against them. That is, we have here the united societies for the prevention of crime, and the more speedy and efficient work of relief and combining of forces against corrupt combinations, and pitted against this is naturally the united "interests." Maybe these "interests" set churches afire! The churches are their most effective enemies, and where would you expect an enemy to strike an enemy? Block his heavy battalions, of course. Not necessarily the Devil, for his children are ever the unconscious agents of his base design.

The latest report of the bazaar committee is that near one hundred and sixty dollars was cleared after all articles were disposed of. Twenty dollars better than at first reported.

We will say to those who read our items, and who are acquainted with and interested in the work in this peculiar city, that all departments of the church work are in good condition. The Saints here are not all schooled in the live interests of the church as one will find in the central branches, but on the principles of the gospel all are up to the standard. To us there is the future prospect and work of gathering to Zion, to those now in the stakes there is the present responsibility of building up Zion.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

A new enterprise in the shape of a workingmen's hotel is being promoted, at which the price of lodging will be from one cent to twenty-five cents, and on Saturday, the 2d, will occur a ticket sale, each ticket being the price of a bed. This movement is under the auspices of the American Salvation Army. On account of so many now being out of work there seems to be a great need for something of this kind, instead of those who are without lodging being put in jail.

The State Teachers' Association, which had just closed, was of much interest on account of some radical positions taken by some of the leading educators of the United States. College fraternities came in for their share of criticism.

Professor Norton, of Cornell College, averred that these fraternities tend to aristocracy, that they are exclusive, and tend to "idleness, slouch, and vice." They are exclusive in that "they forbid friendships except within the narrowest limits. They arrogate to themselves the social life of the university, and with their round of dances, house parties, and other functions, imitate the ostentations of 'high society.'"

President Abbott, in her address said, among other good things, that "to-day the young in our high schools have too few responsible tasks. They are too little at home. They are too fond of cheap amusements. They read magazines and newspapers to the exclusion of great books. They have no serious outlook in life." She said of the teacher, "Here, if ever, he (the scholar) needs the ideal high school teacher; one independent of machinery; one who can 'lift and lead.' . . . In this one place, in the high school, he must be a specialist in the study of human nature. In addition to this he must know how to fathom what a general humorist calls the 'abyss of the dark prejudice which the natural man has against those who would inform the mind.' His instruction needs to be 'direct, clear, and simple.'" As much could be said, and more, of the teacher in the Sunday-school, and the needs of the hour are great for such teachers everywhere.

Miss Alice Tyler, of the State Circulating Library, said in answer to a question at the round table talks, "I think the comic supplement is demoralizing to children, and I welcome the day when the papers will have done away with the Sunday comic section." This is also the decision of the Congress of Mothers, who believe that to save the children of the country the comic paper must be done away.

Reverend W. B. Forbush said in his lecture, "There should be an Emmanuel movement in the churches for boys, with a setting aside of the so-called young people's societies, and the Sunday-school quarterlies that look like last year's almanacs," but he gives no satisfactory reason, unless it be in this statement: "The industrial, educational, and moral conditions of the world for the past fifty years have changed, but there has been no advancement in that time for the adaptability of these conditions on boy-life."

This reference calls to mind the session of the Ministerial Association a week ago last Monday, when a talk was given upon the two topics, "The unity of the church," and "The minister's duty," given by Reverend A. L. Frisbie, who was formerly the pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church in the city, but is now, on account of age, retired. He plead for unity of the Christians, could not suggest the procedure to bring it about, but claimed that the missionaries in foreign countries were largely solving the question by a federation of their forces, and by laying aside church distinctions. The plea for something to be done to increase the power of the minister to influence the people was to suggest the fact that possibly as ministers they were not associating the healing the sick with the preaching of the word. In accord with this same conclusion was the United Brethren, the Christian (not Disciple Christian), and the Friend minister. All confessed that they believed that as Christ gave power to his ministers to heal the sick as well as to preach the gospel, they had come short of fully representing the spirit of a true minister for Christ in that they had not entered upon this part of their duty. I was requested by one of the Presbyterian ministers, who was somewhat acquainted with our belief upon that principle, the principle of healing, to give my ideas, saying that he would like to hear them. Accordingly I gave them briefly our faith, and several acknowledged that such was their belief, one minister saying that he had advocated this idea once and was "set down on" for so doing. The earnestness with which this subject was treated was somewhat a surprise to me, and the expressed willingness to come up to the high standard of the calling of a minister was very encouraging indeed.

In the Register and Leader for December 31, 1908, is an item that shows the birth of a new church organization in Marshalltown, this State, named "My Church." Of the constitution of this new church the paper says: "The document is literally filled with biblical references, and practically every rule that the members will be compelled to live up to is substantiated by some passage of scripture." Some of the articles of the constitution are:

"The sabbath meeting must be harmonious.

"All business must be conducted on a cash basis; no debts are to be allowed by 'My Church.'

"Any unruly member may be expelled from 'My Church' by a three fourths vote of all other members.

"Any elder who misses three meetings without sufficient reason therefor is to be removed from office."

A series of great revivals begins this week, several of the churches having special evangelists. Not the least among those who have come to the city is Elder Charles Reign Scoville of the Disciple Church, who expects to be in evangelistic work here for two months, pleading the cause of that church.

In an editorial in the Daily News entitled "Let us alone, cry the guilty," there are some very suggestive remarks worthy of thought by church members, by which they may determine by what spirit they are led. Here are some quotations from the guilty as the reasons for wishing to be let alone: "The less said about this the better. It's scandal-mongering." "This is St. Louis business, not for the country at large." "Philadelphia can settle this for herself. It is none of the country's business." "It hurts the city. It disturbs business. It causes unjust suspicions." The conclusion the editor comes to is wise. Here is a part, "Every time that cry goes up, 'Let us alone, we will take care of this ourselves,' is a good time to stick the probe deeper, and for the public to prick up its ears for further revelations." The church is affected by this same spirit, "Let us alone." And it is always the guilty that thus express themselves. When difficulties exist in the church in families it is said, "Let us alone, this is a family affair." When it is between two families it is said, "Let us alone, we can settle it in our own way." When it is among several they say, "Let us alone, and mind your own business, this is our business." Ofttimes this is said to the branch officials whose business it is to see that the membership attend to all family duties," and who are to see that there is "no iniquity" or "backbiting" in the branch among its members. The only effectual way of permanently removing difficulties that exist among the members of the church, whether in the home or elsewhere, is in God's way, and through his representatives, actuated by the spirit of reconciliation. The "let us alone" policy is one of the tactics of the Devil, and was expressed at one time when Jesus exercised his power over evil spirits.

The Christmas entertainment at the Saints' chapel was very pleasant, and clean of any misrepresentation of the Christ-spirit. Many of the recitations were an expression of excellent thought, and will make the one commemorating the thoughts better, if none other. On account of the funeral of the babe of Bro. Walter Clark being held on the afternoon of the 24th, sadness was felt on the part of several, which minimized a part of the Christmas cheer, but even this made the hearts of the Saints better.

J. F. MINTUN.

STEELTON, SOO, ONTARIO, CANADA.

Inclosed find a billhead, showing a little of the work which is being done by our beloved brother, Elder R. B. Howlett. He has now been with us since the early part of November, and expects to remain with us the remainder of the winter. We held our Christmas-tree entertainment in the new church-building on Christmas Eve. All present spent an enjoyable time. Our first prayer- and sacrament-meeting was held in the church, Sunday morning, January 3. It seemed to us like old times to worship God in a church-building once more. Quite a few strangers turned out to preaching-service in the evening. The brethren and sisters have worked nobly and well to occupy the church in time to hold meetings for the new year. Elder Howlett, though preaching and taking an active part in all meetings which were held in the Saints' houses, worked hard every day, and has been a great help to us, both in manual labor and finance, coming to the front with means as well as hard toil to help the brethren accomplish the work of building. And I know he will be blessed in his labors; and, if I know his mind aright, I think up in this country of Algoma is the hardest mission he has ever been called upon to fill; but we know the Spirit of God is with him, aiding him in his work. And I also know there are times when the sweet Spirit of the Master, Jesus, shows to me that the holy angels of heaven are guiding our brother, Elder Howlett, giving him wisdom and comfort, when the powers of darkness and opposition try their hardest to overcome him; but we know the work of the gospel of Jesus Christ will stand, and the honest in heart will come in to hear the word of God, and obey the message of truth, which is for them, and to all the children of men; for God is no respecter of persons.

I do not desire to take up the space which I know is precious to others; but thought some of the readers of the HERALD who are acquainted with many Saints here would like to hear of the progress being made in this corner of God's vineyard. I ask an interest in your prayers, that our brother, R. B. Howlett, may be blessed in his labors here, together with the officers, that God may bless us, as a small body of people, to promulgate the gospel, that others may investigate our claims for the cause of truth.

Your sister in Christ,

January 4, 1909.

SOME MODERN REFORMS.

II. THE TREATMENT OF CRIMINALS.

Abolish the cruel custom of prisons, (except certain cases,) penitentiaries, and court-martials for desertion; and let reason and friendship reign over the ruins of ignorance, and barbarity. . . . Advise your legislators when they make laws for larceny, burglary or any felony, to make the penalty applicable to work upon the roads, public works, or any place where the culprit can be taught more wisdom and more virtue; and more enlightenment. Rigor and seclusion will never do as much to reform the propensities of man, as reason and friendship. Murder only can claim confinement or death. Let the penitentiaries be turned into seminaries of learning, where intelligence, like the angels of heaven, would banish such fragments of barbarism.—From "Joseph Smith's views on the government and policy of the United States," Times and Seasons, May 15, 1844.

We are pleased to be able to point to an experiment in prison reform, somewhat along the lines suggested by Joseph Smith, in actual progress at the present time only about eight miles distant from the place of his residence at the time when he wrote the words above quoted. We refer to the work being done under Warden Sanders in the penitentiary at Fort Madison, Iowa. Mr. Sanders' ideas are the subject of bitter attack in certain quarters, and perhaps not all of them are defensible, but some of them are so in line with the views expressed by Joseph Smith, and both seem so in harmony with reason and justice, that we hail a practical test of their value.

The history of prison life during past ages is dark and terrible almost beyond comprehension. It has often occurred that the treatment of the criminal was infinitely worse than any crime that he could have committed. Prisoners were unreservedly at the mercy of their captors. They were cut off from the reach of friends; dungeon walls told no tales, no laws restrained the jailor. Torture, cold, starvation, disease, darkness, and final oblivion were their unhappy lot. The whole object of punishment was obscured, forgotten, uncared for. Vengeance was the watchword.

The three-fold object of penal servitude is to protect society, to deter others from crime, and to reform the offender. A growing understanding of this object has led to several important changes in the treatment of prisoners throughout the entire civilized world. In fact certain so-called reforms were in progress in the United States when Joseph Smith

The man who "never gets time to write a letter" is lost. Do you recall how much it pleases you to get a prompt reply to your correspondence, no matter how unimportant the subject or how inconsequential the answer? Don't you have a better opinion of a man who answers his letters promptly? You immediately say to yourself, "There is a fellow up to snuff." The chances are that he has about as much work as yourself, but he does not let every one know it by neglecting his correspondence.

issued his famous pamphlet on the government and policy of the United States, from which we have quoted. But those reforms were wholly alien to the ones that he suggested, as different as darkness is from light, and have been partially or wholly abandoned as the managers of our various state penal institutions have gained experience and wisdom.

One so-called reformed system of prison discipline may be said to have originated with the Quakers. They were opponents of capital punishment, for humanitarian reasons, and under their influence Pennsylvania adopted the system of solitary confinement without occupation for mind or body. Many states followed this lead, and in 1816 New York built the great Auburn penitentiary and began to conduct it under that system. It is said that there "every prisoner was kept continuously in complete isolation. He saw no one, spoke to no one, and did no work."

With all due regard to the gentle Quakers who are said to have advocated this system as a substitute for capital punishment, it resulted in a worse hell than any devil could have invented. To sit or lie all day in a small cell, seeing no one, and with nothing to do but hate man and God and eat one's heart out, hour after hour, day after day, year after year, could have one of several endings, all alike terrible.

We are told that "many prisoners became insane, health was impaired, and life greatly endangered." The result was that an effort was made to mitigate the severity of the system. Prisoners were given work and were associated at their work, but under a strict and rigid rule of silence; and wardens and watchmen were permitted the greatest license in inflicting bodily chastisement. This was a step upward, and the solitary cell was reserved for the most hardened and hopeless, thus partially recognizing the truthfulness of the observation made in "Joseph Smith's Views" regarding the uselessness of "rigor and seclusion," excepting in certain cases.

The "solitary system" was thus replaced at Auburn (and in many other prisons, including the great prison at Sing Sing) by what has been called the "silent system."

Another system has been tried in the United States, known as the "contract system." Convicts were hired out to private citizens who put them at work in mines or on plantations. Under this system convicts became slaves subject to the most cruel atrocities, their taskmasters not even being restrained by the considerations of personal ownership that were more or less potent in insuring sufficient food, clothing, and shelter, and the safeguarding of life and limb under other forms of slavery. This system has practically been abandoned in the United States.

Many instances of improved methods in prison management might be cited, but we prefer to notice briefly the efforts of Warden Sanders at Fort Madison, and be it remembered that the state reformatory is at Anamosa, the more hopeless cases going to Fort Madison, so that efforts to reform prisoners at the last named place show a growing tendency to maintain efforts for the reformation of prisoners to the last extremity.

W. H. Davidson of the Burlington Hawk-Eye visited Fort Madison recently to investigate conditions there, and from the Hawk-Eye, for December 31, 1908, we quote Mr. Sanders' own statement of the purpose underlying his work:

My plan in the dealing with these unfortunates is to so reform them as to fit them for a return to the world. We have four hundred and thirty convicts now, the smallest number in years. Of these less than half a hundred are in for life. The others will sooner or later go back into the world. Is it best that they shall be so "punished" that they will return to freedom full of sullen revenge or of hopelessness for the future, or so helped and encouraged that they may have a chance to hold up their heads, and once more take the part of men in the common walks of life? I think you will agree with me that my plan is right. I can see in the faces of these men, who would fight at the drop of the hat for me, and in the erect and self-respecting attitude they are assuming under these influences, a promise of better things for them when their sentence is up. Even the "life" men show a better spirit because there is hope even for them.

Some of the methods employed have been introduced by Mr. Sanders, some were in operation when he came there and he has developed them. Some of them, perhaps, are missapplied and may not work out well, but all are intended to work a change in the character of the individual and to fit him for a return to active life in the world. The aim is to teach the prisoners self-respect. First grade prisoners are permitted to wear plain clothing; second grade prisoners wear checked clothing; only "third graders" wear the obnoxious stripes. All are permitted to dress up on holidays and Sundays and to ornament or beautify their cells. An orchestra has been organized among the prisoners. An appeal is made to honor under the "trustee" system. A splendid prison library has been built up.

Most striking of all, approaching Joseph Smith's idea of turning the prisons into seminaries, an excellent school is conducted during two and a half hours of each week day evening. All branches are taught, from spelling up to higher mathematics and civil engineering.

It is Mr. Sanders' ambition to secure a prison farm to be operated in connection with the penitentiary, so that prisoners may be given out-of-door employment under necessary guard. Considerable outdoor work has been done by prisoners for several years past, in the way of erecting buildings and walls. This too is in line with the views quoted at the beginning of this editorial, to the effect that prisoners should be put to work on the roads or other public works. It is argued that work in the open will be a remedy for the physical debility that comes to those who are closely confined in the prison. At the end of their term they will be better prepared to go out and cope with the tremendous odds that at best will confront them. It is hard for a sick man to take the upward course and keep it in competition with able bodied men, when in addition he bears the stigma of having been a jailbird.

It is a difficult thing, of course, to draw the line precisely at the happy medium between undue severity and undue leniency. Prison life must still maintain enough severity to make its infliction a punishment that will serve as a protection to society and a deterrent menace to the criminally inclined. Yet the other side of the punishment should not be forgotten. If the prisoner is reformed, the safety of society, so far as he is concerned, is given the soundest protection. It is safe, just, and Christlike to work towards that end and to adopt such methods as shall encourage physical, mental, and spiritual health and development.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

REGARDING JOSEPH SMITH'S BAPTISM.

Query: We are asked, Why was Joseph Smith, the Seer, baptized by Oliver Cowdery for the remission of his sins; if he had received a remission of his sins before baptism, as stated in Doctrine and Covenants, section 17, paragraph 2?

There is nothing in paragraph 2 of section 17 that indicates that Joseph Smith was baptized for the remission of his sins after he had received a remission of them; but, presuming that the questioner is correct in his supposition that such a remission of sins was prior to his baptism by Oliver Cowdery, we answer, that as Jesus, to whom sin was imputed though he knew no sin, was baptized by John in Jordan that he might fulfill all righteousness, in like manner, Joseph Smith, who had received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of his sins, was baptized to fulfill the righteous law; that, as it was becoming in Christ to bring the body, Jesus, into subjection to the divine law of righteousness, that it might be free from the sins imputed to it, so in like manner did Joseph Smith submit to baptism that he too might conform to the righteous covenant of the gospel law, and be found within the lines of the rule found in paragraph 7, of the same section 17, in which it is stated that any person who manifests by his works that he has "received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church."

ABOUT PRESIDING.

The twelve and seventy constitute the traveling presiding high councils of the church; and whether in or out of districts or branches, are to be considered as leading representatives of the church. High priests and elders when traveling under appointment of the church as missionaries act in the same capacity and authority in their respective fields as missionaries, as either a seventy or a member of the twelve, when these are not in such field. Neither holds a higher priesthood over the other. Their priesthood is the same though the one may hold the higher authority.

A high priest or an elder may be chosen or elected to preside over a district or branch, and may preside as such president though there may be members of the twelve or of the seventy residing in such branch or district. They preside over the branch or district and the members in such branch or district, not as general officers of the church, but by virtue of their being chosen to hold such office. They may not preside over either twelve or seventy who are appointed as missionaries to travel, to direct their labors or restrict them in their office work, but have the care over the branch or district over which they are chosen to preside.

The presidency of branch or district is confined to the membership within the territory in which the branch or district membership reside. A high priest or an elder appointed or chosen to preside over a district is authorized to be present at the several conferences held by the district, and to preside over the business sessions of such district, unless there are reasons why he should not do so known to those who may be present. He may or he may not assume the chair to preside without a motion properly made and seconded and carried by virtue of which he is called to the chair; but should there be missionary authority present, whether such missionary authority should be a member of the twelve or seventy, or a high priest or elder in charge, it would be right and proper for the president of the district to either ask such missionary authority to preside or suggest that he be so chosen; for the reason, that should questions arise involving church law or discipline the missionary is authorized to decide such question, rather than other authority, and such missionary authority might otherwise interfere; and it is safer to accept the statement of the revelation which states that when the traveling high council are present they should be considered and their advice taken. A proper observance of this courtesy in precedence, or in preferring one another in honor, will prevent the unnecessary agitation of the question as to who is highest in authority.

A real Christian is the best exponent of the gospel of Christ.

BUSINESS ITEMS.

The first number of the Journal of History for 1909 has been mailed to those whose names are on the regular subscription list. We have received many warm words of commendation for the Jorunal during the past year. While it is of greatest value to the ministry and especially those in the missionary field, yet it should be in the home of each family of Saints and no Sunday-school library should be without it.

Our missionaries are going without purse or scrip and we have therefore made them a special offer to send them the Journal for one year free of charge, upon their sending us three yearly subscriptions for the magazine. If the Saints appreciate the labors of these men who are devoting their time to the work of the ministry, here is an opportunity to show their appreciation and at the same time help to qualify them for the best work. The subscription price is $1.50 per year and should be sent to the Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

President R. C. Evans, 35 Huron Street, Toronto, Ontario, has a few copies left of his Autobiography which he will mail to those who send him their address with a remittance for $1.00. We have had several inquiries for this book and this notice will give the desired information to all.

The new edition of the Book of Mormon is all printed and as soon as it can be bound will be ready to mail. The paper and cloth bindings we hope to have ready about February 1 and the leather bindings a very little later. Orders will be filled in the order in which they are received. The book is a great improvement upon the old edition and we presume that it will have a large sale.

The Church History in four volumes sells at $6.00, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00 according to binding. We have a large number on hand and we will dispose of one hundred sets at a discount of ten per cent if the four volumes are ordered at once.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Seismic disturbances are so common and frequent in some sections of the United States that they are hardly taken notice of so far as apprehension of danger therefrom is concerned. In fact, there are localities where these tremors are a matter of local pride. Reelfoot Lake, Tennessee, recently brought into prominence by crimes of nightriders, is one of these places. Here the lake takes its name because of the almost constant vibrations of the earth, and the people there show little concern on their account. It is a matter of record, however, that there are earthquakes the year round, harmless, of course, in most instances. Over one hundred thousand quakes have been recorded in the last fifty years.

The Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa, comes out with a New-year announcement that it will not enter into any "further contracts to carry liquor or questionable medical advertisements." It has heretofore maintained that any "legal business" should be entitled to advertising publicity, "but all rules have their just limitations," and as it is "largely the spokesman of a state that has set its face against" this kind of business, it is going to regard public sentiment to the point of shutting out such advertising. The Register and Leader is taking advanced ground and such a step should be commended by all good citizens everywhere.

We have nearly four thousand volumes of the Church History on hand and want to sell them. To make a special inducement to buy now, we are going to offer the books at a discount of TEN PER CENT, where the four volumes are ordered at once, until one hundred sets have been sold. The long winter evenings are before you, and you can not spend them to better advantage than by studying the history of the church. If you do not want to spare the money to buy them all, why not form a club with some of your friends and take advantage of this liberal offer. Sunday-school libraries should all have the Histories. If you have no library, begin one now by getting a set of Histories at a reduction. Address Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa.

The Sunday School Times for January 2, comes out in a golden jubilee number in celebration of its fiftieth anniversary. Half a hundred years is quite a span, and in contemplating this jubilee issue of the Times we were reminded that the HERALD will soon round out an even fifty years.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Elder William H. Kelley was the morning speaker at the Brick Church and Elder R. J. Lambert occupied at the evening service. The weather had moderated considerably from the severe cold of the previous Sunday. Regular services were held at the Homes.

There are three cases of smallpox in Lamoni, all in quarantine and of a very light form. Very little apprehension is felt in regard to it, as the health officer seems to have the situation well in hand, and there is little danger of an epidemic.

Reverend H. G. Pittenger of the local Methodist Episcopal Church has announced his resignation, having received a call to a pastorate in Kansas.

SUCCESS IN BRANCH WORK.

READ AT THE BRITISH ISLES MISSION CONFERENCE.

(By request of our honorable president, J. W. Rushton, I submit for your consideration this paper. As the needs and conditions in branches differ, I assure you that the task has been a difficult one for me to comply with.)

This depends largely upon the officers. If they do their duty there will be success. Experience has taught us that to be successful in any line of business, those in charge must put forth an effort to understand their duty, and be willing to put their shoulders to the wheel. In Book of Covenants, section 104, paragraph 44, we read:

Let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence. He that is slothful shall not be counted worthy to stand, and he that learns not his duty and shows himself not approved, shall not be counted worthy to stand.

In the above we have two classes, and if they do not their part, they shall not stand, or, in other words, shall not be sustained in their calling. It matters not in what office they may have been appointed to labor. The officer is to learn his duty, and to labor in the office to which he is appointed, in all diligence. If after learning his duty he becomes slothful and negligent in his work, he should not be sustained.

The second class referred to is the one that puts forth no effort even to learn his duty. Consequently, he can not by his works show that he is approved. Both classes are a detriment and the work will not prosper so long as such are in charge. I understand from the above that a person may be appointed to labor and at the time not fully understand his duty; but, if he puts forth an effort, in the spirit of humility, and magnifies his calling to the best of his ability, he shall have needed light and wisdom. If the branch officers, from the president down, strive to learn their respective duties and labor in their calling, continually, the branch will make progress. Paul said to Timothy, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

The Lord, in his wisdom, has placed the various officers in the church, and he looks for each one to do his duty in caring for the flock. The president has much responsibility. He is to see that all of the officers in the branch magnify their calling; he should be in close touch with each one, take them into his confidence, talk freely of the best methods to keep up the interest in the branch. He should be strong in the faith, and alive in the spirit of the work. He should help to develop the talent in the branch, by calling on them to speak and to take charge of services. Remember the admonition, "Let the strong sustain the weak." It is a mistake for the president to occupy all the time, either in charge of the services or in the preaching of the word. The inexperienced need opportunity to develop.

It may be well to refer briefly to the duties of the officers, especially the priest and teacher, upon whose shoulders, in connection with the president, rests the care of looking after the flock. The priest is to visit the house of each member and exhort them to pray vocally and in secret and attend to all family duties. It would be a source of strength to the priest, and highly appreciated by the Saints, if the president would occasionally accompany the priest in his visits. The priest should give special attention to the young in the work, and more especially the young in years. When it is possible, he should inform the families of the time he would call on them in his official visits, and ascertain if it would be convenient for them for him to do so. By so doing, arrangements can be made to have all the family present, and to have the privilege to give each one such instructions as he may think advisable. Let not the visits be too long, lest they become tiresome and unprofitable. Avoid the adoption of an iron-clad, universal rule or form to go through. Seek for the Spirit and wisdom, to present such thoughts as will be food in due season. The priest will meet with different conditions. That is, in one home he will find a family that are young in the work. They may never have prayed or spoken in public. Here is a splendid opportunity for him to teach them the necessity and the value of prayer, as John and Christ taught their disciples. At the next home there may be those that have been in the work for years, and who take part in the fellowship meetings, and have their family prayers. So it will not be necessary for him to instruct them along that line, but, as he is to exhort them to attend to all family duties, he finds here a necessity to instruct them to keep proper hours. The young men may have been in the habit of being out late at night, and getting up too late Sunday morning to attend Sunday-school or preaching-service. And the young ladies take their evening walks with their company, but, as it is unbecoming for them to be seen in the street or parks at late hours, they return with their company to the home, but time goes on just the same in the home as it does in the park, and the clock strikes eleven, half past eleven, and twelve, and then it dawns upon their minds that they are not keeping the admonition found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 85, paragraph 38: "Retire to thy bed early, and arise early that your bodies and your minds may be invigorated." It might be asked what this has to do with success in branch work. It has this: If we honor the admonition to retire early, we set an example to others, and will wield an influence that will help to make the branch work a success. There are other lines of work that come under the jurisdiction of the priest, and he should, where necessity calls for it, advise the families to comply therewith. One is cleanliness. It is necessary that our persons, our homes, our clothing be clean. It is no disgrace to wear a garment that has a patch on it, if clean, or to live in a small house, with only two rooms, when our means will not justify us to get to larger quarters. But it is unbecoming and a disgrace to make our abode one year after another in a house where the walls, ceilings, and the floors are the same color as the stove, and the windows decorated with the accumulated dust of months, and the bedclothes look as though they had been forgotten by the wash-woman, and the odor is very unwholesome, and vermin very plentiful. All of which are unnecessary in a Christian home. Soap and water are plentiful and a little energy applied will bring about pleasant conditions, and set an example that will help to make those not of the faith anxious to associate with us, and help to make the branch work a success. The Savior said, that his people should be the light of the world, in industry, sociability, cleanliness, charity, and temperate in all things. I once heard Bro. J. F. McDowell lecture. Subject, "Silk and calico Christians." He stated that there were people who, if they did justice to their creditors and their profession as Christians, ought to wear calico dresses instead of silk. In other words, live within their means, in a three-room house instead of six.

The teacher is to watch over the church always. Be with and strengthen them; see that there is no iniquity, no hardness of heart with each other, neither lying, nor backbiting, nor evil speaking. He should see that all the members attend the services as often as they can, and partake of the sacrament, and, if he notices some not partake, he should approach them in a fatherly way and offer his service to help and adjust matters that hinder them from partaking of the bread and wine. It is his duty to be present at all services, especially the fellowship-meetings. He should see that the members do not get into the habit of visiting the parks or other places of worldly amusement on the Lord's day, or to spend their Sabbath in visiting, and thereby hinder others as well as themselves from assembling at the house of prayer, and if he needs any assistance in his work he is to call on the deacon.

If the president, priest, teacher, and deacon magnify their calling, success will follow their labors. Upon the other hand, if they become careless and negligent, the branch will partake more or less of the same spirit. The officers should hold council meetings to devise the best methods to keep up interest in the branch. Call on district and mission authorities to help them in preaching of the word, and hold a series of meetings, at such time as will be convenient for the majority of the members and friends to attend. Also call on home talent, those of the priesthood who are inexperienced who need opportunity to develop. One good plan is to appoint missions; have some one that is experienced in charge, and have the young, inexperienced ministers to help. Another good way to help to develop the young, especially those that are embarrassed, is to appoint three speakers; let them occupy twenty minutes each on a given subject. I have arranged several meetings of this character. Upon two occasions, we had the following subjects: First, the duty of the parents to the children, and the duty of the children to the parents. Second, what has the church done for me, and what have I done for the church? These subjects were well presented, and all present edified. The service which was held at fifteen minutes to eleven, Sunday morning, was a departure from our regular form, having three speakers in place of one. These services proved to be a drawing-card. Many that had not been accustomed to attend the morning meetings were present. The Sunday-school children, who had been given a special invitation to be present, enjoyed themselves. It is an old saying and a true one, that a change of pasture is good for the calves. These services did not take up to exceed one hour and twenty minutes. This plan brought out a variety of ideas that were beneficial to all present. Besides, it gave the young minister a valuable experience.

All services should begin promptly on time. It is a bad policy to get into the habit of commencing services from fifteen to thirty minutes late. Do not wait for the congregation. Educate them to be prompt. If the president is not present then let the priest open the meeting. If both are absent, let the teacher or deacon do so. If there are only two present, when the time to commence service arrives, do not wait. Again, do not hold meetings too long. We can not well have a set time to close our fellowship-meetings. We should be governed by the number present, and the interest taken. Sometimes it is wiser to hold services longer than others. Still, it is better to close in proper time with good interest than to let the meetings drag and be compelled to close for the lack of interest. It is not profitable to continue the meetings to a set time when there is not sufficient interest to justify. Long sermons in the regular branch services, in my judgment, are a mistake. When a minister is noted because of his habit of preaching long sermons, it will have a tendency to decrease the audience. Especially is this true when the speaker is governed by the amount of material he had prepared, and does not intend to conclude his discourse until the stock in hand is exhausted, regardless of the liberty he may have in presenting the same. We can not, in the preaching of the word, have a set time as to how long we should continue speaking. Sometimes more good is done in twenty to thirty minutes than if sixty minutes are consumed. It is not always the length of the discourse that does the good, but the spirit in which it is presented. As a rule, in a regular branch preaching-service, forty-five to fifty minutes is sufficient time. And what is true of the fellowship-meeting is of the preaching. It is more wise for the minister to stop when all are interested, than to continue until they become anxious for him to close, and this they will manifest by the constant looking at the clock or their watches, and get uneasy in their seats. One secret of success in branch work is to conduct all services so that all will be interested in them, and then they will come again and bring others with them.

The time and place of service to be where most convenient for the majority. Care should be taken not to overtax the membership with too many services. When a branch can hold three services on Sunday, one of them should be school, one prayer and testimony, and the other preaching. To hold two preaching-services every Sunday, and prayer but once in a month on Sunday, in my judgment, is a mistake. In section 59 it is contemplated that part of the Lord's day should be set apart for prayer, for we are admonished, as follows: "And that thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world, thou shalt go to the house of prayer, and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day, for verily this is a day appointed unto you to rest from your labors, and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High." To hold but one prayer-service on the Lord's day in a month, or twelve in a year, and substitute instead seven or eight preaching-services per month, or fifty-four in the year, in my judgment, is not in keeping with the above instructions. It is true that nearly all branches have the mid-week prayer-services, and all should put forth a special effort to attend. Personally, I favor having one prayer- and testimony-meeting every Sunday and one in the week, and if these are attended, and the privilege appreciated, there will be spirituality, which is the life of the body, and success to the branch is sure. In conclusion, I repeat, To make branch work a success, the officers must be united, each one laboring in his office, and those who can not or will not do so, should be released and others appointed.

THEORIES REGARDING GOD.

The idea of God, or of the existence of a god or gods, is not new; neither does the writer present this article with the thought that he has discovered anything new in theory, or is in any way capable of giving additional certainty as to the existence of God.

God is largely to every one what he himself is capable of interpreting him to be.

In the language of one writer:

For thousands of years humanity has placed the last and supreme basis of all phenomena in an efficient cause, to which it gives the title of God (deus, theos). Like all general ideas, this notion of God has undergone a series of remarkable modifications and transformations in the course of the evolution of reason. Indeed, it may be said that no other idea has had so many metamorphoses; for no other belief affects in so high a degree the chief objects of the mind and of rational science, as well as the deepest interests of the emotion and poetic fancy of the believer.

A comparative criticism of the many different forms of the idea of God would be extremely interesting and instructive.

We will have to deal with what became the most general and universally accepted definition of God. Not as to the etymological definition; but as to what was held as to the image in the mind being as operative in the affairs and destinies of men, theism, which is a belief in the existence of God, with or without a belief in a special revelation. And, as one writer puts it under this head:

He is always conceived in a more or less human form, as an organism which thinks and acts like a man—only on a much higher scale. This anthropomorphic God, polyphyletically evolved by the different races, assumes an infinity of shapes in their imagination, from fetichism to the refined monotheistic religions of the present day. The chief forms of theism are polytheism, triploteism, amphitheism, and monotheism.

According to the amphitheist, the world is ruled by two different gods, a good and an evil principle, God and the Devil. They are engaged in perpetual struggle, like rival emperors, or pope and anti-pope. The condition of the world is the result of this conflict. The loving God, or good principle, is the source of all that is good and beautiful, of joy and of peace. The world would be perfect if his work were not continually thwarted by the evil principle, the Devil; this being is the cause of all that is bad and hateful, of contradiction and of pain.

While the above relative to the conflict that is being waged constantly between God and the Devil is presented by the writer derisively, and with a view to its incongruity from his viewpoint, yet for the benefit of Christian believers, and in confirmation of a statement found in the Book of Mormon that "everything has its opposite," we will quote his next paragraph:

"Amphitheism is undoubtedly the most rational of all forms of belief in God, and the one which is least incompatible with a scientific view of the world."

This is no modern invention, and will give us some satisfaction that, amid the multiplicity of theories, we possess the best and most ideal, even from a scientific point of view. In crude form, it has had its existence among the most intelligent of other ages. He says:

Hence, we find it elaborated in many ancient peoples thousands of years before Christ. In ancient India, Vishnu, the Preserver, struggles with Shiva, the Destroyer. In ancient Egypt, the good Osiris is opposed by the wicked Typhon. The Early Hebrews had a similar dualism of Aschera (or Keturah) the fertile mother earth, and Elion (Moloch or Sethos), the stern heavenly Father. In the Zend religion of the ancient Persians, founded by Zoroaster two thousand years before Christ, there is perpetual struggle between Ormuzd, the good god of light, and Ahriman, the wicked god of darkness.

Whether these similarities of belief were all born of experience, by observing the positive and negative forces of the universe, or as a legend handed from one generation to another that had its origin in a revelation from God, is not known. Let it suffice that, if true, neither time nor place will affect its authenticity. Monotheism, which is a belief in only one God, was the doctrine announced by the great Jehovah as soon as practical after the Hebrews came out of idolatrous Egypt. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," was the sweeping declaration made against every phase of idolatry. Judaism, Christianity, and Islamism all had their birth on the Mediterranean. Each claimed to be, or were, originally, monotheistic. However, Christianity became polytheistic, and is largely so to-day.

The ancients worshiped the things they most feared, and the things from which they thought they got the most benefit. Lunarism and Selenotheism were of a lower comprehension as to the source of the greatest good. The Parsees who are a remnant of Zoroasterism, are fire-worshipers. They worship the sun. In this, their ideas as to the source of life, or as to its being the source of life, are correct. Pantheism teaches that God and the world are one; or the form of monism which identifies mind and matter, making them manifestations of one absolute being: the doctrine that there is no God apart from nature or the universe, everything being considered as part of God or a manifestation of him. Pantheism is opposed in principle to every form of theism in that it does not admit of the Deity being in human form, nor that God is a separate, living, distinct entity apart from the material world or universe. The advocates of pantheism claim that as the result of an advanced conception of nature in the civilized mind, at the very dawn of philosophy in the religions of the earliest civilized peoples in India, Egypt, China, and Japan, this doctrine was had in crude form.

We do not meet a definite philosophical expression of it until the hylozoism of the Ionic philosophers in the first half of the sixth century before Christ. "Ionic school" was a name given to the representative philosophers of the Ionic Greeks, who debated the question, what was the primordial constitutive principle of the cosmical universe. Many of the most profound thinkers and scholars have advocated pantheism. And to-day among our greatest scientists, we find its greatest apostles and strongest defenders.

The Trinity is a doctrine that God the Father is God, that Jesus Christ is God, and that the Holy Ghost is God; each of them separately is God, and collectively they are one God. If this be true, as explained by many, then there are surely three Gods. If each of them is God separate and independent of each other, then we have polytheism, the very thing that God has denounced. Jesus always referred to his Father as his superior; and in speaking of the Father uses, "your Father" and "my Father" as interchangeable. For example, Matthew 5: 16, 45, 48, "your Father in heaven"; 6: 8, 32, "your Father knoweth"; 6: 9, "our Father which art in heaven"; 7: 21; 12: 50, "the will of my Father"; 25: 34, "ye blessed of my Father"; Luke 6: 36, "As your father also is merciful"; John 6: 37, "all that the Father giveth me shall come to me; and him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out"; thirty-eighth verse, "for I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me"; John 5: 19, "verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do"; verse 22, "for the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son" (this is delegated authority); twenty-third verse, "that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him"; John 8: 49, "I honor my Father"; 10: 29, "my Father, . . . is greater than all"; thirtieth verse, "I and my Father are one."

These quotations are far from being ambiguous. Were there any ambiguity, I would try to bring other scriptures to reënforce those already given. Jesus Christ was sent as a true representative of his Father. He glorified him on earth. And as the one, "the only begotten of God," he has and always will be glorified in that that his Father is glorified. The same may be said of the Holy Ghost as a co-operative agent, inasmuch as it is the burden of their labors to bring glory and honor to God the Father by constraining the sons of men to repentance and a progressive righteousness. I fail to see how it is possible that we can glorify God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ and that the Son and the Holy Ghost would not be glorified. Jesus says, "I and my Father are one." In this sense the words of Jesus may be understood: "If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the scripture can not be broken."—John 10:35. As to the finality or culmination, we find in 1 Corinthians 15:28: "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." One other passage should be used before leaving the subject: "Jesus saith unto her, Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father, and your Father; and to my God, and your God." This locates the Father and God of Jesus Christ; and that there is but one God, the great Elohim of the universe, as the central figure and objective for all worship.

Pantheism may appear irrational, and but a crude idealism of God. But let us examine our own position, our belief in God, as the primordial self-sufficing being, the author and upholder of the universe. It carries us back to a time when God and God alone had an existence when the whole world was chaos. If there were no life outside of himself, we are forced to this position, that God means a personal, extra-mundane entity, preëxisting or antedating any and every other form of life, there being no correspondence between himself and his environments. How long this condition continued, no one seems to know. There being no cycles, there would be no means of recording time. That God could live without being in correspondence with other forms of living matter is not compatible with our highest concept of life. Hence we are unable to give it credence.

That God evolved primarily from the dead universe, and was self-creative, suggests that other gods could just as easily have come into being by the same or similar processes. As with mountain ranges, the youngest being the largest, so with this process the latest product in god evolution could by chance be greatest and most powerful, and in establishing their respective claims to godhood because of disagreement, cause the crash of worlds and the universe.

Again, if God at any one time possessed all life, and it within the limits of his own body, and no other being, plant, or any other form of living creatures existed, then it is just as safe to say that God is father to the animal creation, as much so as to the human family. Snakes and every ferocious beast are as much in possession of divine life as is man, only in lesser or greater degree. This would constitute a kind of pantheistic theism.

If we think of God as an eternal, everlasting, intelligent, acting force, without beginning of days or end of years, it may relieve us. If matter is eternal, and indestructible, then it is as eternal as God. The finite can not fully comprehend the infinite. Space is limitless and duration endless. The human mind can not comprehend this; yet the short time allotted to man affords him sufficient time to realize and to know that we are subdividing a portion of eternity into time, seconds, minutes, hours, days, etc. Men's interpretation of God will ever differ in proportion as they are capable of reflecting the divine conception. God and life are coexistent in time and place; and it is beyond the penetrable precincts of the human mind, the secret of the great God is had in reserve. E. B. MORGAN.

CHARITY.

Perhaps few words in the English language are as little understood, in regard to the true meaning and real application, as is this much misused and abused word Charity. The popular idea, strengthened by revealed light from some of our standard dictionaries, and writings of learned men, is that charity consists mainly in aiding and supplying the temporal wants of mankind. And while this in a measure is true, it is also equally true that such an idea no more fills the entire requirements of what a charitable person should be, than does faith alone fulfill all the requirements of the gospel law. It is in both but a very small part of the whole.

There are many people who would be shocked, at least, if told that they lacked charity in its truest sense; and yet, alas, that there are only too many such—many who are perhaps sincere, but who lack the proper understanding—that we sometimes wonder how, in these days of enlightenment, such things can be. Therefore the demands seem to call for more light on this important subject; and, as the Lord has enjoined upon us to get understanding with our knowledge, we will try and shed some light, with his help, upon this neglected subject.

If we could but place ourselves first of all in that state of mind where we could convince ourselves that the giving of money, food, clothing, etc., was but an outcome or result of true charity, and was of only secondary consideration, instead of first, we should be taking one long step toward a proper understanding of the matter. I would consider it useless to teach a person to so give in order to make them charitable; for if they were truly charitable, such duty would take care of itself and come forth as a natural result.

To avoid tedious reasoning, which oftentimes is useless, let me say that charity and Christian love go hand in hand, for, practically speaking, they are the same. No one can possess one without the other. No one can be a Christian minus charity, and no one can be really, truly, charitable without being a Christian. If it sounds strange, it is nevertheless true as well. Now to the word for proof:

In 1 Corinthians, chapter 13, you will see much that Paul writes about this subject. He begins by saying that if he could speak with the tongue of men and angels, though he enjoyed the gifts of prophecy, understood all mysteries, had faith to remove mountains, bestowed all his goods to feed the poor, and finally gave even his body to be burned, and yet was void of charity, it would profit him nothing. Why? Simply because even after observing the principles of the gospel law, faith, repentance, etc., and being blessed with the gifts which follow the believer, had we no charity in our hearts and lives to go with all this, we could never hope to succeed or see the fruits of true living; for the good reason that, devoid of charity, of love, we are also lacking the foundation upon which the entire structure, material and spiritual, of all things, seen and unseen, is builded. Indeed, the foundation on which our very faith rests, because before faith, repentance, baptism, etc., must come charity—love, which must first so work upon our hearts as a part of the Holy Spirit's work as to soften and prepare them to receive the word of life therein. In the fourth to eighth verses we have a very good outline of what charity is, and what its outcomes or results will be.

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind." "What," says one, "to be truly charitable, must I be patient in all things with long-suffering and kindness toward all, even my enemies?" Truly so. We must give patience and forbearance as well as temporalities.

"Charity envieth not." Though your neighbor has much more than you, you should not envy him of his rightful possessions, or covet his belongings.

"Charity . . . is not puffed up." No really charitable person thinks more of himself or herself than he or she ought to think; and under no circumstances or conditions—never, no never—even feels inclined to be proud. Why? Because charity, as before said, is love; and the pure love of God in our hearts will leave no room for selfish, satanic pride. Quite a step toward perfection!

"Doth not behave itself unseemly [unchristian-like or unsaint-like], seeketh not her own [only], is not easily provoked [angry—a condition where the Holy Spirit speedily takes its flight, and Satan finds an unarmored spot to attack], thinketh no evil." It seems to the mind of the writer that if this alone were the result or fruit of charity, it would still hold its place among the highest attributes or qualities of a Christian life. For, let me hasten to say, that the individual who is ever ready and willing to think evil of any one, to say nothing of those with him in the household of faith, though he may possess all the other good qualities possible, is but a stumbling-block, to say the least, not only to himself, but to all those with whom he is associated. This may sound rather strong possibly to some; but there are many, alas too many, who from sad experience, both personal and as a branch, can testify of the truthfulness of the fact. One who is addicted to such a deplorable habit generally sees only the bad, the debased, the natural in a person, to the exclusion of all the good and noble that the same may do. And when one is ever ready to see an evil, intentional or otherwise, in an individual, and determined to see only the dark side, I dare say there are very few who could be found to successfully stand such a test. Not but what we ought to stand, but do we? Oh, how much better for all concerned, and especially with God's Saints, if we could but have enough true charity in our hearts, so much forgiving and heart-softening Christ love as to cause us to forget to look or think of our brothers' or sisters' evil, much less to judge them; and, instead, to see their good qualities, and to try to work with and for them that such may predominate the bad, and in this way make them better and more useful members of the household of faith. How many agree with me that this is the better and more Christlike way? Many, many there are in our branches, who, to-day, might be powers for good as working officials in our church and kindred organizations, who are being held to the ground by the slander and falsehoods and injustices which have needlessly been brought about surely because of evil thinking and imaginations on the part of those who, if possessed of Christian charity and brotherly and sisterly love would and should have been their helpers, and given encouragement to them in time of trials and temptations. Remember, you can never build up an individual or an organization, in the church or out, by discouraging, by evil reports and the like, and by poisoning others' minds concerning them. If you see faults with any one, go, as the scriptures direct, to such an one in the spirit of love and meekness to tell him alone the fault; then you will be in a position to cast out your own faults and to offer acceptably to your heavenly Father your sacrifices and obligations. But to proceed:

"Rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth." We will not, if charitable, have a natural tendency to evil because we will be so filled with the Spirit of truth that it will lead us finally into all truth. Charity and untruth can not both at the same time occupy the heart of man.

"Beareth all things [is patient and long-suffering even when evilly persecuted], believeth all things [that are good and of good report], hopeth all things [of a Christian nature], endureth all things [of any nature]."

I might add to this list other selections from the word bearing upon the subject; but, as space forbids, perhaps the above will be sufficient, as far as quotations are concerned.

But, who, in the face of such evidence from the word of God, accepted as such by us all, will longer claim that there is nothing more to charity than mere giving of temporal things; and that, without it, one can live a saintlike life in its highest and truest sense?

Then, to recapitulate briefly: To have true charity in the heart, we shall bring forth as a natural consequence the fruits thereof. We will be long-suffering; kind to all in thought, word, and deed; will not envy; will not give place to pride in our lives or bodies; will see that our conduct is of a truly saintly and Christlike nature as much as possible; will be mindful of others as well as our own welfare and enjoyments; will not be angry; will think no evil needlessly; will rejoice and be glad only in the truth; will bear slander and persecution patiently, and, if possible and practicable, silently for Christ's sake; will believe all truth; hope for all onward and upward tendencies; and will endure unto the end to receive for this faithfulness the promised reward and crown of eternal life.

And, if we do so, what will be the result? Our lives will be made so bright, happy, and spiritually clean and strong, that not only will we be enabled to keep the celestial law, and receive its attendant glory; but the church will be wonderfully blessed by our association with it, because we shall see so much to do in helping our brother and sister, and in helping them to better their condition, and to become charitable too, that the branch or church will be made strong and pure; for is it not a fact that the church is but what the individuals as a whole, good or bad, make it? Our life will then speak more for the cause we profess to love, than all the words you or I, or the combined forces of the world's best orators, could ever pour into the listening ears of mankind. The example of such loving charity would convince those outside the fold quicker and more surely than all the arguments that have ever been used. Then, through the exercise of our duties, our financial problem would no longer be such, the church would be cleansed, and built up, and Zion in a position to be owned and received by her Lord.

Saints and friends, why need I say more? Argument would but weaken what has been written. But one thing is as sure as that heaven or earth exists, or that God reigns supreme: Unless Saints arise to a newness of life and example through a spirit of love and Christian charity, we can never hope to reach the heights of perfection, or the reward here and hereafter, of the faithful, of God's chosen people. That we may faithfully and prayerfully examine ourselves for good, before it is too late, is my prayer, in Jesus' name.

"TRUTH SHALL SPRING OUT OF THE EARTH."

THE FACTS OF AGES TELL FOR THE PALMYRA SEER.

Any one who cares honestly to make the search will see that discoveries on both continents, Orient and Occident, bring together the facts of ages in support of the Seer's work. There is now ready and in the proper hands an article covering this sweep on languages and characters. A limited digest beforehand may be of interest and service.

The viewpoint from which this begins and becomes of interest is the test to which Joseph Smith put the Book of Mormon characters when submitting a transcript of characters to the learned Anthon, as God had provided (Isaiah 29:11.) Anthon and many since would-be wise men, of various callings and professions, have assailed the work, accentuating the test which has continued these many years and resulting in, as God said it would: "The wisdom of their wise men shall perish," and the complete confirmation of Joseph Smith's work.

Bible believing people are committed to the one source, Adam and Eve origin of all races. So, also, to one source, languages and their characters are traceable backwards to a primal Semitic, not far this side of the time of the Tower of Babel, Southwestern Asia its home. The forefathers of Abraham, of Cushite stock, possessed it and established such empires as Chaldea and Egypt. Phœnicia also arose in its time. This Cushite-Semitic language reached the Phœnician stage; Greek supplanting it in Europe, the Aramean elsewhere. The latter produced the more modern Hebrew, Arabic, and Syriac; Latin, too, occurring in its time. Oxford Bible Helps tell us, in 1896, of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, principal languages of use in the transmission of Holy Scriptures, that "the identification of their common origin is of quite recent date." The origin of less popular ones would not have been earlier discovered.

Isaac Taylor, in his The Alphabet, 1883, says in preface: "It soon became manifest, however, not only that the history of the alphabet had never been written, but that to some extent it had not even been discovered."

The American Encyclopedia of 1875 said: "There is no comparative grammar of the Semitic languages." Wright, in Comparative Grammar of Semitic Languages, of 1890, says the same of that date. So, it is comparatively recent that final conclusions could be formed on such lines.

Remaining monuments or relics are few. Promiment, and allied closely to Bible interests, are the Moabite Stone of 900 B. C. and the Siloam Inscription of 700 B. C. The characters of these are referred to by writers both as Phœnician and Hebrew. Next, perhaps, is the Egyptian Rosetta Stone of 195 B. C., also related to the Bible interests. The Prisse Papyrus, supposed to date 2500 B. C., the Abu Simbel Record of 700 B. C., and various other relics are of service in the consideration. These, it is held, wonderfully support the Bible. The characters of these by resemblance show they are related and inter-related, and that this applies to the differentiated languages, as literature on the subject also shows.

The characters of the four American finds: Grave Creek Tablet, of Moundsville, West Virginia, of 1838; Kinderhook, Illinois, plates, of 1843; Davenport, Iowa, tablet, of 1877; and Le Plongeon's finds as set forth in Sacred Mysteries, of 1886, from Central America; beside that of the Book of Mormon and with it furnished as strong resemblances to those of the Orient Bible land and of each other. So, all blending, the characters and finds that support the Bible as certainly support the Book of Mormon. As God provided the authorship, mission, and destiny of each, it is complete. Hard as this may be for the opposers of the Book of Mormon, it is as true. Resemblance to Egyptian, Phœnician, Hebrew, Chaldee, Aramaic, Syriac, and Arabic runs through the whole, in those of both continents; even "Egyptian and Arabic side by side" can be found, though, perhaps, "ridiculous" to some!

M. T. Lamb's criticism of twenty-two years ago, and that of various others since, that numbers of the Book of Mormon characters were but a poor use of English characters, meets its death-blow in that these are found in rich profusion on the relics of both continents; more in those of the Orient than here, and reaching back to 2500 B. C. On the Abu Simbel Record the ten English characters: figure 1; A, B, E, K, M, N, O, X, V in reproductions number one hundred and one, while the whole number is but one hundred and ninety-seven; so English in recurrence preponderates by four. Very English that, and 700 B. C. at that!

Thus, from 2500 B. C. down, in all finds referred to of the Orient and here, to that of Central America in 1886, runs a line of evidence completing the test begun in 1828 by the transcript sent to Anthon.

Change and variation mark all in the transit down the ages. All things human change. Strangely, too, and still not strange, through all run resemblances. To some, Hebrew covers but two periods, and hence of two kinds; others claim four periods and kinds.

Not only is Joseph Smith, by this long-continued test, set free from the charge of forgery of the characters; but it is clear that God had a purpose in all these finds in relation to both the Bible and the Book of Mormon in vindicating his servant and his work.

The Book of Mormon names in rich profusion, from Lehi to Moroni, exist in literature centuries before Joseph Smith was born. The names "Mormon" and "Moroni" are found also in families for a similar period, and still remain.

Applying to land, river, people, and towns, various of the Book of Mormon names are found in Central and South America as is evidenced in Rand, McNally & Co.'s Atlas, and other works.

The many attempts to crush the work of Joseph Smith as an alleged fraud and imposition should have, ere this, made of some victorious champion a world renowned character. But, alas! they have risen, failed, and are lost to view as such deliverer.

God said of his work committed and to whom committed, "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper." And so it is. Of the entire coterie of assailants reference to one may well represent all.

Where? oh! where is Braden just now?

The man of wisdom (?) so rare!

He is lost to the world's appreciation at last,

Not the child of its tenderest care.

Joseph Smith put to the test the Book of Mormon characters in 1828, two years before the Book of Mormon was published, submitting the transcript of characters to Anthon. A forger or counterfeiter was never known to invite a test by inspection. Joseph Smith as an honest man possessing the plates, could well afford to do it, and he did.

"The heavens are telling;"—sublime words of sacred song. Fitting words to represent Joseph Smith's experiences in the translation of the Book of Mormon and allied work. And ever since the earth has been "telling" in vindication and verification of that work. "Rejoice ye saints of latter days," and, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Enthusiasm is like steam in another respect; it will escape through the least little leak. Discouragement and disappointment put the mental boiler to severe strain, but a good engineer knows how to heal the rents. The first warning is a little squeaking sound of dissatisfaction, mingling its discord with the harmonious rhythm of the machine. Do not let the weakness spread—do not lose your enthusiasm—that is yours. You need it individually, you need it in your business, and you need it for your employers.

FACING LIFE'S MISTAKES.

There are only two classes of people who never make mistakes,—they are the dead and the unborn. Mistakes are the inevitable accompaniment of the greatest gift given to man,—individual freedom of action. If he was only a pawn in the fingers of Omnipotence, with no self moving power, man would never make a mistake, but would be degraded to the ranks of the lower animals and plants. An oyster never makes a mistake,—it has not the mind. Let us be glad of the privilege of making mistakes, glad of the wisdom that permits us to realize them, glad of the power that enables us to turn their light as a glow of illumination along the pathway of our future.

Mistakes are the growing pains of wisdom, the assessments we pay on our stock of experience, the raw material of error we can transform into higher living. Without them there would be no growth, no progress, no conquest. Mistakes are the knots, the tangles, the broken threads, the dropped stitches, in the web of our living. They are the misdeals in judgment, the unwise investments in morals, the profit and loss account of wisdom, the misleading by-paths from the straight road of truth—and truth is but the accuracy of the soul. Human fallibility, weakness, pettiness, folly, and sin are all mistakes. They are to be accepted as mortgages of error to be redeemed by wiser living, never weakly taken as justifying bankruptcy of effort. Even a great mistake is only an episode, never a whole life.

Life is simply time given to man to learn how to live. Mistakes are always part of learning. The real dignity of life consists in cultivating a fine attitude toward our own mistakes and those of others. Man becomes great, not through never making them, but by profiting by those he does make; by being satisfied with a single rendition of an unwise act, not encoring it into a continuous performance; by getting from it the honey of new, regenerating inspiration, with no irritating sting of useless regret; by building a glorious to-day on the ruins of his yesterday; and by rising with renewed strength, finer purpose, and freshened courage every time he falls.

If we have made an error, done a wrong, been unjust to another or to ourselves, passed by, like the Pharisee, some opportunity for good, we should have the courage to look our mistake squarely in the eye and to acknowledge it frankly with no flimsy alibis of excuse to protect an anemic self-esteem. If we have wronged, we should right; if we have hurt, we should heal; if we have taken unjustly, we should restore; if we have been unfair, we should become just. Regret without regeneration is an emotional gold brick. Every possible reparation should be made; if confession of regret and inability to atone be the utmost we can do, let us at least do that. If it be impossible to repay to A, the individual we have wronged, because death has closed the doors of atonement for ever against us, let us make the rest of the alphabet legatees of the love, thoughtfulness, help, kindness, and justice we owed to A,—paying to humanity our debt to one human being. Those who waken months or years later to the realization of a wrong, sometimes feel it is better to let confession or reparation lapse, that it is too late to reopen a closed account; but men rarely feel wounded if asked to accept payment on an old promissory note outlawed for years.

Some people like to wander in the cemetery of their past errors, to reread the epitaphs, and to spend hours in mourning over the grave of a wrong. This is a new mistake that does not antidote its predecessor. The remorse that paralyzes hope, corrodes purpose, and deadens energy is only a sort of indigestion of the soul which can not assimilate an act. It is cowardly, selfish surrender to the dominance of the past. It does no good to the injured, to the individual, to others, or to the world. If the past is unworthy, live it down; if worthy, live up to it and surpass it. We can not change the past; but transformed into new purpose, we can compel that past to change our future, making it a new, larger, brighter future than we would have dreamed of or than would have been possible without it. If we can get real, fine, appetizing dividends from our mistakes, they prove themselves not losses but wise investments. They seem like old mining shares, laid aside in the lavender of memory of our optimism, and now by some sudden change in the market proved to be of real value.

Realizing mistakes is good; realizing on them is better. When a captain finds his vessel is out of the right channel, carried by negligence, by adverse winds, or by blundering through a fog from the true course, he wastes no time in bemoaning his mistake, but at the first sunburst takes new bearings, changes his course, heads bravely toward his harbor, with renewed courage to make up the time he has lost.

Musing over the dreams of youth and how little one may seem to have realized them, is a dangerous mental dissipation. In very small doses it may stimulate; in larger ones it usually enervates. It over emphasizes the past at the expense of the present; it adds weights to purpose instead of wings. "It might have been" is the lullaby of regret with which men often put to sleep their best efforts. We do not need narcotics in life so much as we need tonics. We may speculatively try to reconstruct our life from some date in the past when we might have done differently. We build on a dead "if." This is the most foolish brand of air castle.

We go back in memory to some fork of the road in life and think what would have happened and how wondrously better it would have been had we taken the other turning of the road. "If we had learned some other business;" "If we had gone west in 1884;" "If we had married some one else;" "If we had bought telephone stock when it was 35;" "If we had taken a different course in education;" "If we had only spent certain money in some other way;"—and so we may run our empty train of thought over the slippery "ifs." Even if these courses would have been wiser, it is as impossible to change them now as for the human race to go back to the original bit of protoplasm from which science declares we are evolved. The past does not belong to us,—it would be useless if it did,—it is only the golden present that is ours to transform into a new past it will be joy to look back to in the years to come.

The other road always looks attractive. Distant sails are always white; far off hills always seem green. It may perhaps have been the poorer road, after all, could our imagination see with perfect vision the finality of its possibility. The other road might have meant wealth; but not happiness; fame might have filled our ears with the sweet music of praise, but the hand of love that rests so trustingly in ours might have been denied us; Death itself might have come earlier to us or his touch stilled the beating of a heart we hold dearer than our own. What the other road might have meant no eternity of thought could reveal; no omnipotence could enable us to walk therein even if we wished.

We can not relive our mistakes; but we can make them the means of future immunity from the folly that caused them. If we were impatient yesterday, it should inspire us to be more patient to-day. Yesterday's anger may be the seed of to-day's sweetness. To-day's kindness should be the form assumed by our regret at yesterday's cruelty. Our unfairness to one may open our eyes to the possibility of greater fairness to hundreds. Injustice to one that may seem to have cost us much, may really have cost little if it makes us more kind, tender, and thoughtful for long years.

It is a greater mistake to err in purpose, in aim, in principle, than in method of attaining these. The method may be modified easily; to change the purpose may change the whole life. It is easier in mid-ocean to change the direction of the course than to change the cargo. Right principles are vital and primary. They bring the maximum of profit from mistakes, reduce their friction to a minimum. False pride perpetuates our mistakes, deters us from confessing them, debars us from repairing them and ceasing them. False pride makes a man eclipse himself with himself.

Man's attitude toward his mistakes is various and peculiar: some do not see them; some will not see them; some see without changing; some see and deplore them, but keep on; some make the same mistakes over and over again in principle, not in form; some blame others for their own mistakes; some excuse their mistakes by saying that others do the same things, as though a disease is less dangerous when it becomes epidemic.

Failure does not necessarily imply a mistake. If we have held our standard high, fought a good fight for the right, held our part against heavy odds, and have finally seen the citadel of our hopes taken by superior force, by overwhelming conditions, or sapped and undermined by jealousy, envy, or treachery, we have made a failure, but not a mistake.

The world condemns us for our nonsuccess. What does the silly, babbling, unthinking world know about it? What does it matter what the world thinks, if we have done our best? Sometimes men fail merely because they have the courage to forego triumph at the cost of character, honor, truth, and justice. Let us never accept mistakes as final; let us organize victory out of the broken ranks of failure and, despite all odds, fight on, serenely confident of the final triumph of right.—William George Jordan.

We stand, in a manner, at the parting of the ways. We can see clearly that a transition from the first aristocracy has taken place and is going on. The aristocracy of birth has lost its hold all over the world and is losing it still more. Europe was once occupied by a series of nations under the control of absolute monarchs or hereditary governing bodies. There remains but one absolute monarch in Christian Europe, the Emperor of Russia. There remains but one hereditary governing body, the English House of Lords, and that has such inroads upon its membership that it furnishes to-day rather a proof of the decline of the aristocracy of the grandfather than of its permanent perpetuation. No body has solid power where its very membership depends at any moment upon the ruling sovereign. So far has this gone that, year by year for the last century, the assimilation of the aristocracy of birth with the aristocracy of wealth in the House of Lords has gone on more and more. Indeed it began nearly three centuries ago. From the time when King James the First, as far off as 1611, created at one stroke two hundred baronets and sold the baronetcies for one thousand pounds apiece, from that moment the English House of Lords ceased to be, as it had largely been before, the receptacle of the illegitimate offspring of kings, and came to be more and more, like any American legislative body, under the influence of great wealth.—Thomas W. Higginson.

SELF REVERENCE.

If it be true, as some of our critics say, that the young people, especially the young girls of to-day, are tempted to think too much of their bodies, of their shape, and grace (or awkwardness), and above all, perhaps, of the ways in which they shall be clothed, it is also seriously true that in many cases too little is thought of bodies; they are handled carelessly, often contemptuously; some people seem to feel half ashamed of having them at all! The remedy for this state of things lies—where so many remedies do—with mothers. We do not begin early enough to teach that our bodies are very important and also very unimportant parts of ourselves.

Incidentally it is true, many mothers teach quite early in their children's lives the importance of the body's covering. But yesterday I watched the fretting and fuming of a child of seven because her new dress, being fitted, was not low enough on the shoulders nor short enough as to skirt and sleeves to suit her cultivated ideas! If we could, in some way, clothe the little creatures becomingly, and keep them sweet and clean, without their having to think any more about clothes than the roses do about their leaves, would not it be restful?

But that is not my subject. Never mind the clothes, just now; let us give heed to the bodies themselves. How shall we teach our children to reverence them?

I know how NOT to do it. It is curious how we learn by the mistakes of others!

I know a very sweet mother, one who is exceptionally wise in some lines, who yet makes a daily family exhibition of "baby in her bath." Not the aunts only, but the maids from the kitchen,—and on occasion, staid and dignified "Uncle Jim" himself,—leave their employments and hurry up to the nursery at the fond mother's call to see her lovely little "cupid" in her tub toss the water about in reckless glee, chuckling and gurgling the while, not like a water sprite, but like a little immortal who knows that she is on exhibition. A pretty sight it certainly is, and yet—

How shall one voice one's objection to so apparently innocent an exhibition?

"You are a perfect prude!" an indignant young mother said to me, one day, when I tried to do so.

"The idea!" said another mother. "What is there more beautiful than the human body in its innocence and perfection? I want people to admire my baby's exquisitely molded form."

"It will be just as exquisite when she is sixteen," I said, "and aunts and uncles and cousins will remain, we will hope, pure-hearted and loving, but—Shall you make an exhibition then, of your daughter in the bath?"

The only reply I received was an indignant: "What utter nonsense!"

It does sound like nonsense, I will admit, to thoughtless people who are entirely unable to appreciate the early hour in life in which cords of association of ideas begin to bind us. Perhaps there is no use in trying to explain the objections logically; at least to people who are not themselves close students of mental influences. There are some things that we can feel, but can not reason about. Let us then try to cultivate in young mothers the feeling that from very birth the baby's body is a sacred trust, never to be used for purposes of exhibition, however innocent, never to be needlessly exposed.

Not long ago I was a guest in a home where an unusually precocious child of three was being made ready for bed before the admiring eyes of three or four intimate friends. The proud mother took off even the little shirt to show the child's exquisite outlines; and the little one laughed, and patted her lovely arms, and enjoyed it all. What harm? I wonder if I am wrong in believing, as I assuredly do believe, that that mother will find it harder to teach her child lessons of self-respect, self-modesty, self-reverence than she would have found it without these early displays.

Not long ago a little child of four years was sharply reproved and finally whipped because she shrank painfully and persistently from an exhibition of her person to an intimate friend.

The object for the exhibition not being, of course, serious and important, but to gratify a whim on the part of the guest.

If I had been in control in that house, the temptation would have been to whip the mother, instead of the child. From all of which you will discover that I have pronounced views with regard to very early beginnings in lessons of self-reverence.

A woman once told me that the proverb: "Evil be to him who evil thinks" she believed applied to me; that people who could think of anything evil in connection with the perfect form of a little child simply in its own exquisite flesh, showed what manner of persons they were.

But not even that stinging rebuke changed my belief. The truth is I knew that the speaker was not only angry, but was also a little bit self-condemned, or she would not have so spoken.

But let me suppose that you as a mother are alive to all these advanced ideas with regard to the subtle laws of very early influence, and have guarded your child from all such avenues of possible harm, until now he reaches the age when you need to give positive instruction, how shall you begin?

I knew one mother who, before her son could speak the words plainly, taught him the Bible verse: "I will give thanks unto Thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made." Then, every evening during their half hour of confidential talk she gave him in minute detail some proof of the truth of this Bible verse. He was much interested in "chu-chu cars," and had been allowed to stop and examine the great engines and to ask numberless questions about them. That evening his mother told him of the engine in his body that worked day and night at its appointed task. She interested him in the great water system of the city in which they lived; she went with him to see the reservoir, and they watched the laying of some of the pipes; and for several nights thereafter he was absorbed over the marvelous system of veins and arteries and transmitting pipes and—what not? that his own small body contained. He had a chance, one evening, to look through a small telescope, and saw wonders; and was led to think of the two perfect telescopes that he carried about with him daily. He was allowed, one day, to speak to a friend through that marvel of modern invention, the telephone; by that time he was ready to think for himself, and said, presently: "I've got two telephones to my house, haven't I?"

For days, for weeks, for months the marvel went on, given in serial chapters; the revelation of one small human being to his human self. Illustrated continually by the marvels that men had made—not created; for the boy came to see for himself that their work was copied from that wondrous creation of the Master, the human body. Every night he repeated with ever increasing reverence the words: "I will give thanks unto Thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made."

"But this requires special knowledge of physiology and kindred branches of study!" sighs some poor mother whose early opportunities were limited.

No, dear friend, it doesn't. The more knowledge the better, of course. If you have had the advantages of a liberal education, be thankful and use them. If you have not, take courage, and resolve to learn some things, first for yourself, then for your children.

The mother of whom I am speaking, who unquestionably succeeded in her object, had practically no book knowledge when she began. She had excellent common sense and observant eyes and a determination to teach her boy some lessons that he ought to learn. She bought a few books, a very few, for her means were limited. The Man Wonderful, by Doctor Mary Wood-Allen, Madame How and Lady Why, by Kingsley, and that inimitable book, The History of a Mouthful of Bread.

These, with the paper covered manuals issued by the Woman's Temperance Publication House, for the teaching of temperance lessons, comprised her library. She found it all-sufficient. With scraps of time, almost stolen out of a busy life, she prepared each day her twilight lesson or story; and went on her triumphant way; leading her small son, and in after years, her daughter, step by step through the wonders of their own bodies; teaching at every step, incidentally and almost of necessity—although there was deep design in her work—a lesson of self-reverence.

The day came when she was ready for an additional step in her work, and what she reckoned a rare illustration was given to her. A friend of her girlhood came to visit them, and among her belongings was a small, velvet-covered, velvet-lined, gold-clasped box that held a breast pin set with very costly diamonds. The mother's eyes, always on the watch for help in her work, seized upon it, borrowed the box and its contents for a twilight lesson.

As soon as the boy spied the box he exclaimed over its beauty.

"Careful!" said his mother, "Are your hands beautifully clean? The box is very delicate you see; it will soil easily."

"What is it for, mother?" asked the boy. "What does Mrs. Riedsell keep in it?"

"What makes you think she keeps anything in it, Harry?" The boy looked wonderingly at his mother.

"Why, mother, it is a box!" he said. "It was made to keep something in, of course; folks don't make boxes just for nothing. And it has a gold clasp! May I open it, mother?"

What delight he had in those diamonds! In their glory the box was almost forgotten. Yet he shut it with utmost care, afterwards, and handled it with new respect; it guarded a treasure. Tell me if you do not think that a boy so trained, so led up to the thought, was ready for the words:

"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

The body is, after all, only the box for the diamond to live in while it is awaiting the owner's call. But what a box! The very care with which it has been made, hints at its use. With what care it should be handled, since it contains an absolutely priceless gem! It is possible to injure those diamonds by rough handling of the box; nay, it is possible to lose the box, diamonds and all! The mother almost held her breath over the solemn possibilities of the illustration she had sought.

But can not any teacher see how comparatively easy it was for that mother to press home her lessons about the sacredness of the human body, and to explain in detail just what would injure its delicate mechanism, not only, but peril the diamond itself.

There is even a deeper truth than this, and a stronger verse. Does any Christian mother want to forget it? Should not it follow close upon the other two, and be the motive of motives for self-reverence? Listen?

"Know ye not that your body is a temple of the Holy Ghost?"—Mrs. Isabella MacDonald Alden (Pansy) in the American Mother.

AUSTIN, Nevada, November 24, 1908.

Editors Herald: Herewith find remittance for the Autumn Leaves. There is very nice reading in the magazine, and we would be very lonesome without church literature. We take Zion's Ensign, have been taking it for years, and have bought books and tracts of almost every kind; and do not know what we would have done without them; for we have not heard an elder for over nine years. But we have to keep up the best we can. We are two old people. My wife is sixty-seven, and I am seventy-two, and we have tried to pay our tithing. We feel that it is our duty, and we are willing to do all we can to help build up the kingdom of God. I have bought a good many tracts and given them away to any who were willing to take them; but as there is no preacher, they are not very anxious to take them. If a Latter Day Saint elder could come, he could have a home here with us as long as he could stay; and we would be glad to do anything we could. We remain as ever,

Your brother and sister in the gospel of Christ,
JOSEPH MARSH AND WIFE.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, December 28, 1908.

Dear Herald: I feel like telling you I am very glad to see you, as you are a very dear and faithful friend to me, now, as you always have been for the last forty years and more that I have taken you. You have nearly always come at the appointed time, with good news from far and near, with joy and hope and encouragement for all. Yes, I often think of the many dear brothers and sisters who live away off in lonely places, who have no other preachers than their beloved HERALD. How anxiously they look for you, and how eagerly they examine every page.

I have these many years lived right here in Nebraska City, since we first came here over the ocean from our dear old Denmark, in 1866; and there have been many days in this period of time, and months at a time, when you were my only preacher, and I felt the need of no other. I have not forgotten how I loved you; but I think much more of you to-day.

You were my first teacher in this American language, when we came to this land of promise; and the first letters I tried to teach my first-born were the SAINTS' HERALD. And I herewith inclose a post-office order for five dollars that you may visit some lonely ones who will know how to appreciate your worth.

Now, dear Saints, I will tell you something that you may not know. To-day is my last day. That is what I always call it, to-day. But I have had a good many days and years since I began telling myself that to-day is my last day. The first and only one that I heard saying it, was our good and sainted brother, Mark H. Forscutt, who passed away some few years ago. He was preaching to us, and said (seems as if I can hear him now): "To-day is my last day. Yes, brethren and sisters, it is so. I mean, that we should live each day He grants us life, in thoughtfulness, in holiness, worthy the name we have taken upon us, the name of Christ, or 'Saints of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.'" And since I heard him say these blessed words, it has almost constantly been on my mind, and I have tried to live more careful and thoughtful of myself, that I sin not; but, oh, I feel that I have many faults and am far from perfect. I may have another day to-morrow, and still others thereafter He may grant me; and I shall always try and strive to travel onward, faithfully, in the narrow way, attending to my present duty as well as I understand it, that when my last day comes, if it be to-day, or some other day, I may be found worthy to be promoted to a higher grade of life, where I may still continue to learn, and learn more fully and perfectly of him who giveth liberally and unbraideth not; for that is my only conscious hope and joy of heaven, that I may henceforth receive more knowledge and understanding of the virtues and attributes of the Lord God, our Father, and his great work, the plan of salvation.

On my way through life, as I look back, I can see times and places where I have felt almost entirely overcome by trials and circumstances, and I would be downcast for a little while; but the inward joy would come suddenly, filling my heart with new hope, and the consolation the gospel gives. "The gospel of Christ!" The very sound of these words is always such a comfort to my heart; and it seems as if I have always had it there, as I was but seventeen when I received the glad news, and was baptized in water, for the remission of sin. It was in the year 1861, in my own country, where I heard the elders preach upon the gospel and the different principles of it, and knew it right away, and was inspired with this inward joy and love and peace that has never left me; and by this love of the gospel, I have been able to bear up under heavy burdens and look upon life as a precious gift of God. It is not this mortal, natural life I consider so much, but it is lengthened out into eternity, it is everlasting, and there is no limit set for the soul or spirit of man, by nature, or our God.

Editors Herald: Another year, with its privileges, has passed. Each passing day should remind us that the opportunities to accomplish good become less, and the necessity of "working while the day lasts" is emphasized upon every hand. Discouragements may come, but why should they ever cause us to become faint-hearted? It may seem the work is gaining ground so very slowly that we may wonder why it is. We can not attribute it to an unwillingness upon God's part to fulfill what he has promised, as history shows God to have been ever ready, and that failures have always been upon the part of man. As a people are we not slow in reaching out to partake of the blessings of God? No one but ourselves are to blame for our not enjoying more of the evidences of divine love. At our late reunion held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, while Bro. H. C. Smith was speaking upon the high calling of the Saints he made this statement: "I am convinced that as a people we are living far beneath our privileges." The Spirit seemed to testify that he spoke the truth, indeed. My own experience has taught me that when I have drawn near to God he has never failed to draw near to me.

The work in the Pottawattamie District, though not in as lively a condition as might be, has many faithful and loyal members. So far as your writer knows, the tithing receipts for the year just closed have been larger than any previous year. Names of faithful ones of years gone by have been written, and others who have never contributed are making a beginning. It is an indication that the work in old Pottawattamie is not dead, and that there are many who are willing to support the faith of their fathers.

Entering in upon the work of the new year I trust the Saints of this district will labor earnestly together for the "accomplishment of the work intrusted to all," that when this year is closed we may all be found strong in the faith and with renewed evidences of our acceptance with God.

Praying for the success of the Israel of God everywhere,
I remain,

Yours in gospel bonds,
J. A. HANSEN.

Brother Editor: Husband, myself, and three children were baptized November 10, 1907. Two other children were blessed the same day. Since that time we have found the Savior very precious to us, and we are rejoicing to think this blessed gospel message was brought to us. It came through Bro. and Sr. O. E. Green, now of Lamoni, then neighbors to us. They came in the hour of need, our oldest boy being very sick. I also took sick, but through God's mercy we were spared, and are now a part of the Little Green Valley Branch. Our desire is to grow in knowledge of the truth, and let our light shine before the world so they can see that we have been with, and learned of Him.

May God richly bless you in your efforts to get the truth before the people, is my prayer.

A sister in the faith,
MRS. C. M. DESART.

RIPLEY, Oklahoma, December 29, 1908.

Dear Saints: Since coming to Oklahoma, I think I have had great success, taking into consideration the small amount of health and finance I have had to do with. I have been in Oklahoma three months. The Pawnees, Cheyennes, Otoes, and Iowas have heard about the Indian Bible, and in every tribe above mentioned my colaborer and I have had the luck to get hearings at all their big meetings, except one. And after the first meeting, we get hearings at other big meetings.

Speaking not for my colaborer, but for myself, I do not know where I will get the two cents to send this communication to you; but I think there are two or three cents in the baby's pig yet. But one thing seems certain, to accomplish much I must have money and books. The amount of books is limitless, and so is the money, and you can enlarge on that statement as much as you wish. When I get more than I need I will send to the Bishop.

All the tribes of Lamanites in Oklahoma can be visited between now and General Conference; but, my dear brothers and sisters, it takes money; and if you think I will get too much of it, I will give you a weekly report, and show you how little it is, and make you all ashamed of yourselves that you will let so important a matter go by unheeded as the presenting the Book of Mormon to the dear Lamanite people. They are not the Indians they used to be. They are a dear, good people; and I tell them that you love them as a people, which you do; but you must awake to the fact that it takes works in the shape of dollars and books to accomplish the work you so much hope for, the work you testify is saving your souls. If this call is not heeded, I must go to work. I can not live or ride from tribe to tribe on Oklahoma air; you will have to send some one more interested in this dear people than I am to work on air. I could go into details and answer some of the questions that I know you will ask in your minds; but I believe I have said all that is required of me. Your action will determine my action.

DOW CITY, Iowa, December 26, 1908.

Editors Herald: One month and a half ago I dictated a letter to you which I supposed would be my last communication to your columns, as I have been afflicted with shaking palsy for over four years, and was for two weeks unable to move my hands and feet; and for two months I could not get up out of a chair alone. I was so bad for over a year that I could not put my hands on the top of my head, and the doctor said my throat was paralyzing. But now, thank God, the prayers of the Saints have so far prevailed with the Lord that for over three weeks I have been able to walk alone, put my hands on my head, feed myself, see to read some, and can talk quite good. For all these blessings I do thank my Redeemer and the Saints who have taken so great interest in me.

I have of late received many good and encouraging letters and take this means of thanking the writers for their comforting words. I will gladly answer if I am ever able to write again. I know what it is to come down close to "the valley of the shadow of death," for I have experienced it of late. I also know that this blessed gospel can and does take away the sting of death.

I am not well but am able to walk four blocks without resting. My trust is in the Lord.

Hopefully yours,
ROMANAN WIGHT.

Editors Herald: I was baptized by E. C. Brand, and confirmed by him and A. Haws, in the spring of 1869, and ordained a deacon at the same time, and they organized a branch of twenty members. A short time after that, Bro. W. W. Blair came to Austin, Nevada, and he and Bro. Haws ordained me a teacher.

In the spring of 1876, I got word from my people in Scotland that father was sick, and I better come home. I left Austin, went to New York, got aboard a liner; and when about half way I was walking the upper deck, and God revealed to me that father would be buried before I got home. I was sorry; for I had not seen him for fourteen years. I got home; it was so. I told the people what church I believed in. I did not know whether I belonged to the priesthood or not; for I believe that many are placed in the priesthood who do not belong there. I asked God about it. He was pleased to send an angel to me, and told me that I was called to proclaim the good news and glad tidings of the gospel; that I belonged to the priesthood; and told me a man's name, and I must go and tell him of the good news. I would not have gone to that man, for I did not like him. He taught when I was a boy; I went to him awhile. I went four miles to his house. He and family were at home. I told him what I believed. I did not tell him anything about an angel; that would be too strong meat for him. I gave him milk. He said that was the best that he ever heard, and wanted to hear more of it. I told him that if I could get a house I would talk to the people. He said, "I will get you a house," and he told me how to advertise the meeting. He helped me all he could, and everything worked well. He wanted some books, and I gave him the book written by the Prophet's mother. He loved the book. I had meetings in different places. I wrote to the Herald Office for some one to help. Bro. Taylor, of England, saw the letter and wrote to me. I did not get it, and did not know Bro. Taylor had written me till about ten years afterward. I was there about fourteen months. I thought one witness was too little, and I wanted to go to America. I did not want to go, if God wanted me to stop longer. I asked God what I should do. The same angel came to me again. He told me that I had told the people enough for that time, if I did not tell them any more. Dear reader, you do not know how happy I felt. I made ready, and two sisters and a brother-in-law came with me. We went to Ray County, Missouri. We bought a small farm there. After a while, I did not like it. I went to Austin, Nevada. The other three stopped there. The two sisters were baptized there. I stopped a few years in Nevada and worked in the mines. Then I went to California. I got a good home in Eldorado County, and I have spoken at different times to angels, and had different revelations, and God has shown me a large field of potatoes on the Isle of Shetland, and it ready for the last work to be done on it, and no one at work on it. He showed me the work that I did there at the bottom of that field. He said it was well done. I saw it as plainly as I see the pen in my hand. If I can sell my home here I will leave this fine climate and go to that isle in the North Sea, which is a bad climate, for the sake of the sheep there, that they may rejoice in the gospel as I do. God has done great things for me; and I want to work for him while I live. He has shown me that I am going to gain the glory I started for; but it is only by exceeding great faith that I shall go through to the end. May God help us all who have made a covenant with him, that we may have perfect faith in him, or we can not please him.

I was almost blind in one of my eyes. For over twenty years while reading the HERALD, I had to hold my hand over the eye. It was very painful. A voice said, Ask God to heal your eye. I asked God to make it as good as the other, and as soon as I spoke the words my eye was as well as the other—both perfectly well.

I got the erysipelas in my face. I asked God what I should do to cure it. He told me at once what to do. I did it. In less than five minutes I was perfectly well.

A large forest fire started here one summer, driven by a strong north wind. It came within a few steps of my buildings, and the smoke and heat were horrible. I was about to run for my life. I called on God to change the wind. As soon as I spoke the words, the wind came from the south, stronger than the north; it roared like thunder, drove back the fire from my buildings, and nothing was hurt.

HARRISBURG, Illinois, December 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: I was baptized fourteen years ago last September, by Elder I. P. Baggerly. The following May our Bro. V. D. Baggerly was at our house and preached two sermons. I gave him my subscription to the SAINTS' HERALD. Am sorry to say I paid for only one year; not because I did not want to pay, but because I could not. And now, if my memory serves me right, I still owe five dollars and fifty cents. If you have the old account, please send it to me; for I want to renew my subscription, and also to send money enough to pay up the old account.

I am the only Saint I know of nearer than Tunnel Hill.

We live thirty-five miles from there, so we do not get to go to the Saints' church. My husband is a friend to the restored gospel, and I wish some of our elders would come and stay two or three weeks and preach for us. I have two girls, both married, neither of them in the church. I have one boy. He signed for Autumn Leaves last year, or rather I did for him. He likes the paper very much. We are going to renew our subscription. We just received your kind letter, but are not able to send for any books now. We truly wish we were, for we know they would be of great value to us. The Graceland receipt book I may send for if I have money enough left when I get my old debt paid, and pay for the Autumn Leaves and HERALD in advance. I could not do without these precious papers, and will not as long as I can get them. But do not send them if I fail to pay in advance. Pray for my dear children and husband. I so much want to see them all in the church.

Your sister in the one faith,

R. F. D. 4.

MALINDA J. HYDE.

LAMONI, Iowa.

Editors Herald: The following reminiscence may be of interest to some. Passing home claims, with other incidentals, Saturday, July 11, found the writer at Sioux City, Iowa, at the home of Bro. J. L. Parker; kindly received. Next morning, I preached in the Saints' church and attended their Sunday-school; and in the evening listened to a good temperance lecture by a Mr. Sawyer, a young student of promise. Met with a number of the resident Saints, and the day was pleasantly and profitably spent. The following evening I preached again for the Saints. They seemed to be doing well, and endeavoring to go ahead. They were greatly in need of an active missionary, however. This was provided later by the appointment of Bro. Paul M. Hanson to labor there. Tuesday, the 21st, I crossed the river into Nebraska, and called on my brother, George T. Kelley, at Pierce. This is quite a nice section of country. George is serving as judge in that county, and seemed to be busy. Two culprits were arraigned one day for shoplifting, caught with the goods, and inside of an hour they were "in for thirty days." Prompt action seems to please the people of Nebraska, as George is serving his second term.

Returning on the 25th, I went to Columbia, South Dakota, and was met by Bro. D. R. Addison, and received good care at his home, three miles distant, where he and family occupy a ranch of six hundred acres. Crops looking well, and harvesting begun. I remained here several days and attended to some business matters which had been postponed for over twelve months. I found Bro. and Sr. Addison, with their family, in the faith, exemplary, well known, influential, and in good repute in the neighborhood. May they succeed at their effort at home-making in the West, and be encouraged in the faith.

The 29th, I went to Hecla, and was kindly received at the home of Bro. C. H. Lamport. Would not have known but his wife was in the faith, if she had not told me. Seemed just as good. Bro. Lamport took me out in the country to visit Bro. Moore and Bro. Barry and their families. They were busy harvesting, and interested in the faith. We had a pleasant visit with them. Miles and miles of grain ready for the reapers. Great country this!

While here, notwithstanding the busy time, we succeeded in holding two public meetings in a hall in town, and one in a schoolhouse in the country. A good interest manifest in both places. At a time when the people were not so driven with their own work, a good work might be done here by a proper effort. Just at close of the Sunday evening discourse, Bro. J. P. Bierlein drove up with his private conveyance from Kidder, twenty miles east. Next day I accompanied him home, to find a welcome and pleasant stay with Bro. and Sr. Bierlein and daughter Martha. Bro. Bierlein took much interest in having me visit the Saints and friends. We called on Sr. Grant at Kidder, to find them very busy, but chatty and interesting. Visited Bro. William M. Mitchel at Newark. Pleasant stay.

August 5, Bro. and Sr. Bierlein, Sr. Martha, and I rode twenty miles into North Dakota, to Straubville, to see Sr. G. H. Schulte. She seemed cheered by our visit, is in the faith, but meets with but few Saints. On the way returning, we called on Sr. Ed Burk and Henry Schulte. It will be seen that the Saints are widely scattered here; but they are sticking to the soil, trying to get a start in the world. I admire their courage. I observed that every one knows the faith of Bro. Bierlein in his community; and if any do not they have only to stand still a few minutes, and he takes pleasure in telling them. He is well known and influential. May success attend them, and thanks for kindnesses.

By some means, I lost the names and addresses I had for North Dakota, so could not go there; hence changed program, and Saturday, the 8th, I arrived in Minneapolis, Minnesota. Soon found 427 Knox Street, and received a kind welcome at Bro. Lundeen's. Bro. E. Curtis was here, and had been preaching with good effect for some time. The day following, at eleven o'clock, Bro. Curtis preached a good discourse, and in the afternoon baptized two or three persons. At evening, the writer occupied the preaching hour, with an attentive audience. This being my first visit to Minneapolis, it was a pleasure to note their earnestness in the faith, and to form the new acquaintances. I made my home at Bro. and Sr. Pierce's, whom I met in Salt Lake City. They came in from the mining districts somewhere. While in the city they were baptized by Brn. Curtis and Stead. It was a pleasure to meet them again, including Frances. They have relatives and friends in Minneapolis, and are doing well in the faith. The Saints are striving to make good success. A Sunday-school and Religio are being intelligently and successfully conducted. There is zeal and enterprise; but a pushing elder among them would be of great benefit to them.

Leaving Minneapolis, and calling at a few points by the way—former places of labor—meeting with a few Saints and friends, noting interests and changes, Thursday, the 20th, I arrived home.

The 21st, in company with Bishop Anderson, attended the opening of the Lamoni reunion, this being my first attendance at a reunion at this place. The grounds were inviting, preparations ample, a plentiful supply of speakers on hand, and a good attendance. There was an excellent social spirit manifest, the preaching good; the Sunday-school and Religio received attention by principal workers; the Saints, active and earnest in the prayer-service, the Holy Spirit being sensibly present at times. The last day, President Joseph Smith preached the morning and evening discourses in a forceful manner, which were well received. The reunion was a decided success, and another provided for 1909, to be held at the same place.

September 7, I started to attend the reunion announced to be held at Nebraska City, Nebraska; but meeting with Brn. E. L. Kelley and Heman C. Smith at St. Joseph, Missouri, changed course, and accompanied them to the Stewartsville reunion, then under way. Bro. Smith went on to Bevier, and E. L. and I to the camp ground, arriving in time to hear Bro. G. H. Hilliard's discourse in the evening, which was good. The next day, at eleven o'clock, E. L. preached a very excellent discourse to an appreciative audience. The camp had been made attractive here, and provision made for all. There was a nice body of Saints in attendance, cheerful and happy. The prayer- and testimony-meetings were actively engaged in, and full of life. Seemingly every one had something to say, and improved the first opportunity to say it. Sr. Etzenhouser rendered valuable service in her line of work, directing in the Sunday-school and Religio services, which was appreciated. We were domiciled at Bro. and Sr. George Summerfield's, receiving the best of care. Thanks.

Thursday, I went to Nebraska City and joined the reunion there. The campers were occupying a pleasant grove, with the needfuls provided, and were enjoying the noonday meal when I arrived. The attendance was not large, nor the speakers plentiful—room for another. The prayer- and social-services were very enjoyable. The Sunday-school and Religio work was in charge of Sr. McNichols, and was very successful. She seemed to be in demand all the time, and was ready to respond with efficiency. The reunion was largely under the care of Bro. E. R. Briggs, resident; and whose home was open to all, Sr. Briggs energetically looking after the interests of all in attendance. The names of most of the elders present have slid through our fingers, so do not try to give them. The preaching was up to the standard, however, and the reunion a success, and it was voted to hold another next year. A Mrs. Adelaide A. Kirby was in attendance, who at one time, when she was a young girl, went to school to the writer, up in Iowa. We had not met for many years. She requested baptism, and the writer baptized her. She was confirmed by the elders present, administered to, and so went away rejoicing. The reunion closed with an excellent spirit prevailing with every one.

After stopping over night with Bro. and Sr. Waldsmith, Friday, the 15th, I returned home, and on the 25th attended the district conference being held in Cameron, Missouri, Bro. Bootman joining me on the way. We arrived at the place of meeting in time to hear Bro. Ammon White present some good thoughts to the Sunday-school and Religio classes, and listen to the rest of the evening's program, which was entertaining.

Saturday, at eleven o'clock, the conference convened, Brn. David Powell, W. P. Pickering, and the writer being put in charge. The regular business was transacted with dispatch and good feeling. A good interest was manifest in all of the meetings. There are some very praiseworthy Saints in this district, who are zealously supporting the cause, and appreciate what a splendid thing it is to be a Latter Day Saint indeed. Brn. Harpe, Goodrich, Bootman, White, Daniels, and mayhap others shared in the preaching-services. Altogether, the meeting was a successful and comforting one. We were well provided, as were others, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Daniels.

Brn. Powell, Pickering, and myself, having been appointed a committee to visit Kingston and, if found practicable, to organize a new branch of the church in an outlying community there, after having given notice, Tuesday, the 29th, we met in the church at Kingston, at eleven o'clock, and after some deliberation, following the common consent rule, the organization was effected, and named Oak Dale; Bro. Coleman Snider chosen president. A priest, teacher, deacon, and secretary were also provided. With the fifteen members present, together with those absent and intending to unite, would make the number twenty-three. Unity of action and good feeling were exhibited all through, so the new church starts out with the good will of all who were present. May the Lord of the harvest give it good success.

We were greeted with a good audience at the evening meeting.

The 30th, Bro. and Sr. Pickering brought us with their private conveyance to Oak Dale, where we visited and dined with the Brn. Sniders, called on Bro. and Sr. Adams, and so returned to Hamilton, thanks to Bro. and Sr. Pickering for kind care and assistance. We took train at Hamilton, Bro. Powell getting off at Stewartville, and the writer going on to St. Joseph. Stopped over night with Bro. and Sr. Kinnaman; and, through their kindness, attended the musicale in the evening. Very interesting. The following day returned home.

October 10, I attended the district conference at Thurman, Iowa, arriving there about noon. Met a number of Saints at Sr. Leeka's; that seemed to be the convenient place to stop. At two o'clock met in the conference, Brn. Eli Hayer and the Brn. Hougas and Arber in charge. By request we aided in the afternoon work. Unity of action seemed to prevail in all that was done. Chief leaders in the Sunday-school and Religio work being present, Bro. and Sr. T. A. Hougas being assisted by the Srs. Leeka and Pace, that part of the work was well provided for. Bro. G. H. Hilliard was present in the interest of the church finances, and preached a very forceful discourse on the financial law. Brn. Hayer and Haden delivered effective discourses, assisted by others, so the time passed profitably and pleasantly. While here I was kindly cared for in the cheerful home of Sr. Leeka. Through the kindness of Bro. J. Leeka, a number of us were taken by automobile over to the east school-house, where Bro. Arber was holding a series of meetings. Bro. Arber requested the writer to occupy the hour, which he did, and was listened to attentively by a good audience. Bro. Arber has evidently been interesting the people, as there was a good-sized audience present.

The 14th Bro. J. Leeka and sister, Lorena, brought me in automobile twenty miles on my way, to Bro. and Sr. Beckwith's. Thanks. Had a pleasant stay at Bro. and Sr. Beckwith's. They are in the faith, and belong to the industrious and pushing class of people, and have a pleasant family.

Saturday, the 17th, I visited the home of Sr. Kirby, near Douglas, Nebraska. Her husband is not a member of the church, but received me cordially, as did all of the family. I met here a Mr. Childs—Christian preacher, called Campbellites—a very promising young student. The next day I attended his church in the morning, and he delivered a good discourse on charity. Through his kindness the use of his church was accorded to me for the next evening, and he made the announcement. In the evening I attended the Methodist church, and by invitation assisted the minister in his service. He delivered a good discourse, announced my meeting, and in several ways showed himself much of a gentleman and a Christian.

Monday evening arrived with clouds and rain, thus breaking the long dry spell, and thus defeating my meeting. Through the kindness of friends, however, an announcement was gotten out for the next evening, word circulated, resulting in a good attendance of attentive listeners. Threatening weather and dark nights were discouraging of success, so it was thought the part of wisdom to postpone further services for the present.

The 22d I came to Shenandoah, Iowa, in time to attend the evening prayer-meeting, which was changed to one of preaching, and I occupied the time. It was a pleasure to meet with the Saints here, this being my first visit to Shenandoah. Was pleasantly cared for at Colonel Pace's. He is an old soldier, so we had an old fashioned visit; then, he is a good entertainer, so is Sr. Pace, grandma, and daughter. Everything went well. Next morning I called on Bro. and Sr. Wilcox at their store. It snowed during the night, and Bro. Wilcox was just opening a box of rubbers. I had none. Well, he handed over the goods. Nothing like being just in time. Returned home that day.

Friday, November 6, in company with daughter Belle

Anderson and baby Kelley, I journeyed to Independence, Missouri, intending to stay about twenty-four hours; but learning of a discussion pending between Bro. S. W. L. Scott and one Roberts, concluded to stay and listen a few nights.

Sunday morning, the 8th, I listened to a good discourse delivered by Bro. George H. Harrington. In the afternoon I baptized Miss Glenna Marie Kennedy. She was confirmed by Brn. Harrington, Kaler, and myself at the prayer-service.

Bro. Scott having arrived, he rather insisted that I should act as the moderator on his side in the debate. I accepted. Heard that Roberts was a stalwart, and on the way to devour Latter Day Saints, and thought I might enter a school of learning. I knew Bro. Scott was primed for most any kind of attack, so I expected to see things up in the air, figuratively speaking, and amazingly interesting. Twelve nights were arranged for at Kansas City, and twelve for Independence. This venture of course changed my whole program. This will explain. Having procured an expert stenographer, Sr. Morgan, and everything in readiness, on Wednesday evening, November 11, 1908, the parties all met in the Christian church, Kansas City, to begin the contest. Mr. Roberts selected Elder Gray of his church for his moderator. Then we agreed in selecting a Mr. Goldsby for the third moderator. This proved a fortunate selection. Being a member of the Methodist Church, he could have no interest except to see that fair play was accorded each disputant. Then we soon learned that he was an ex-judge, and an attorney at law, so competent to fill the position with credit, which he did. There was a good-sized audience present at the beginning, composed largely of Latter Day Saints. What a compliment to our society, or church, to see its members inspired with the lofty sentiment and grace to be present to personally test the merits of the matters brought against their faith, and note the proofs advanced in its favor; following the rule, "Prove all things, hold fast that is good." No room here for being carried away with blind fanaticism, false theories, or false doctrine. The following were the propositions for discussion:

1. The Book of Mormon contains a revelation of God's will to man, and its teachings are worthy of the respect and credence of all men.

2. The Scriptures teach that revelation and all the gifts of the Holy Spirit spoken of in Mark, sixteenth chapter, and 1 Corinthians, twelfth chapter, ceased by divine appointment at the death of the apostles.

Scott affirmed the former and Roberts the latter proposition. It was expected that this would be a scholarly inquiry of a high order, possessing much of interest and merit, the evidence and proofs of the respective faiths being brought out on either side. But Mr. Roberts was disappointing from the start. Instead of the high-minded gentleman and learned debater, accurate in statement, and competent, he proved to be an irresponsible and unscrupulous scavenger and pettifogger, impudent and assertive, rather than argumentative, a braggart, indulging in flings and billingsgate intended to feed any who might be prejudiced against the faith of his opponent, even descending to downright lying, asserting a thing in one speech and denying it in the next. The writer has engaged in a good many debates, heard a good many others, but in some respects Roberts can put up the silliest mess of stuff and call it argument that he has ever listened to. He was keen to indulge in dirt-sliding. He wanted to attack the character of Joseph Smith the Seer, and others, by marshaling the tales and stories put in circulation by enemies of the faith; but he was ruled down. Finally he introduced in the second proposition what he called an affidavit by Benjamin Winchester, and was permitted to read it, but it was vilest slander. Come to find out, Winchester never made any such statement, but the affidavit was made out by another man, who stated that Winchester told it to him. Winchester denied saying any such thing; but it just suited Roberts' caliber. He was toting it around as a nose-gay with which to make merry with his friends, deceiving and being deceived, knowing all the time that it was a lie. Roberts never ran out of something to say, but then, the stuff! If he could not recall anything else, he would repeat the story of the old maid who was so cross-eyed that when she cried the tears would run down her back. Of course he could have been ruled down, and so he was in Kansas City, and he objected to the third moderator. We secured another for Independence—excellent man—but he objected to him, so we went on with the two moderators, the audience largely Latter Day Saint. We thought it best to give him rope and let him disgust the audience by killing himself, and he effectually did both. Roberts did not care for proofs and argument, but anything reflecting on his vanity would excite him. Nothing seemed to affect him more than when Scott would make a clear-cut argument and then exclaim; "It is as plain as the nose on Bro. Roberts' face." That made him look sick. He has an enormous nose, and he knows it, and no disgrace; but he is so full of vanity and conceit that it was amusing to see him squirm while the audience laughed.

What Roberts really wanted was to have the meeting broken up in some kind of row, while he retired in glory and reported that the "Mormons had broken up the meeting," but his desires were not realized. It was easy to read him. Roberts knew he was defeated, but he just kept on talking just as though people did not know any difference between sense and twaddle. Roberts' theology and assumed positions on the Bible are unusually weak. He is in the habit of boasting that he has met some thirteen Latter Day Saint elders in debate, and many others, including Clark Braden, all of whom, in Roberts' view, were terribly worsted. No Latter Day Saint, however, need have any fears of meeting Roberts in debate. All he needs is a suitable proposition, intelligent audience, and three competent moderators that will hold him strictly to accepted rules of debate.

Christian courtesy, with Roberts, is counted as fear, and kindness as weakness. Hold him strictly from the word go, and he is defeated to start with, unless he improves.

At the close of the debate Roberts sat down among his friends feeling his defeat, and whimpering. Bro. Scott turned and offered him his hand; but, no, sir, he would not take it. Finally Scott sat down, and in a little while Roberts came over, presumably urged by his brethren, some of whom appeared to be very nice people, and extended his hand. Thus closed the great Scott and Roberts debate.

Bro. Scott did excellently on his side, as the report will show later, and would have done better had he had an opponent that brought forth proofs and argument rather than silly, verbose prattle.

After all our effort to take down the speeches, at the last Roberts refused to have his speeches published. Said he did not know they were to be published, or he would have done differently.

"We will furnish you a copy, and you can revise."

"No," he said, "I haven't time to revise. My time is engaged for a year. I would rather have it over again, if it is to be published."

It is intended that Bro. Scott's side will be published at all events. Send and get a copy when it is announced.

Rees Jenkins, 124 Cemetery Road, Trealaw, Rhondda, Glamorganshire, Wales.

We were recently in receipt of the Christmas number of Gleanings in Bee Culture. The management of this splendid paper on bees and bee culture recently made inquiry of a number of their subscribers as to their occupations, their patronage of advertisers generally, etc., and the reports received have been very interesting indeed. About fifty per cent of their readers are reported as farmers, while the other fifty are quite evenly divided among about fifty other classes and occupations. Any inquiries concerning this publication or the bee business in general should be addressed to the A. I. Root, Co., Medina, Ohio.

Died.

"Rest, sweet baby, rest,
We wish not your return;
For you it is the best,
While we a lesson learn.

Was like a sweet scented flower,
Whose fragrance still remains
To cheer each lonely hour."

SAWYER.—Harriet M. Sawyer was born May 3, 1845, at Vienna, Ohio, and died at her home in Lamoni, Iowa, on December 19, 1908. She united with the church in 1877, being baptized at Gibson, Ohio, on April 22 of that year, by Elder J. F. McDowell, and was confirmed by him. For fifty years she lived at Fort Recovery, Ohio, at which place she has one brother, two nephews, and four nieces. Interment in Rose Hill Cemetery.

DYER.—Sr. Emiline Dyer, a long time Latter Day Saint, passed peacefully to her paradise home, December 7, 1908. She was born March 29, 1837; was baptized June 15, 1873, by Elder Joseph Lakeman. She was a constant, faithful, and reliable Saint. Her hands had been extended many times to the sick and suffering ones. Her work was well done. Her testimony will be missed. Sermon by S. F. Cushman.

Her husband, father, and one brother had preceded her to the great beyond. Funeral from the Saints' church; sermon by Elder E. F. Shupe. Interment at Fairmont.

IN REGARD TO HEALING.

What is called the Emmanuel Movement has roused quite a bit of inquiry; and with the inquiry there has also come what smacks very, very strongly of the old time sectarian prejudice and opposition. To what extent our neighbors of different denominations have the right to denounce the teachings of Christian Science as a delusion, a snare, a fraud, or a pack of lies is quite questionable; for if we are correct in our presumption that the basis upon which these differing denominations claimed the attention and credence of the public is human and human only, the same claim may be successfully maintained by Mrs. Eddy and her fellows of the Christian Science philosophy. Nor do we conceive it to be consistent, now that some of these so-called Christian denominations are adopting what is known as the Emmanuel Movement, which is but a modified form of what has been professed by Christian Science devotees, that is; healing by suggestion or the influence of mental and spiritual confidence, that these denominations have any just right to sit in judgment upon those who entered this field before these later manifestations in the so-called Christian churches.

For instance, we note statements made by the Reverend Johnston Myers of Chicago, in a late effort intended to be a defense of the Emmanuel Movement as adopted by Bishop Samuel Fallows, of Chicago, in the Emmanuel Baptist Church in Chicago, at Twenty-third Street and Michigan Avenue, before a class gathered for the purpose of studying the teaching of Bishop Fallows upon the treatment and cure of human ills. The report of the substance of the Reverend Myers' statement was given in the Chicago Tribune for January 5, 1909, from which we quote:

Doctor Myers began by discussing what he called the common sense method of treating ills, then gradually worked around to Christian Science, Mental Science, and other beliefs of this sort.

"Christian Scientists will tell you that there are no human ills," said he. "Still they have hundreds of healers with their great signs out in front of their doors.

"I want to tell you that their belief is a mass of lies, founded on falsehood of the most insidious sort. At their meetings you hear more lies than at any other meeting of the kind, or any other kind for that matter, in the world.

"They tell you of magical cures which never were made, or where the supposed patient never was sick or injured. Just the other day I learned of one of the leaders who got up in

Seldom can the heart be lonely,
If it seeks a lonelier still,
Self-forgetting, seeking only
Emptier cups of love to fill.

Because we freely love.
—Paradise Lost.

a meeting and told of having broken her arm in three places, then cured it with her own efforts. It so happened, however, that there was an old woman living in the same flat with her—a woman who never left the house and, consequently, saw her every hour of the day—who never had heard of the accident at all. That is the way with most of their marvelous cures.

"The most terrible part of this whole thing is that human lives are being sacrificed to this delusion every day. There isn't a week—oh, I will say month in order to be exact—that somebody personally known to me does not die as a direct result of his belief in this delusion.

"How many times have I looked down into the casket which held some friend whose life was the price of his belief in this delusion. In many cases it has taken but two weeks for death to follow the 'conversion' to this belief.

"There isn't a hospital in this city which does not hold Christian Science members who are being treated with medicine and by physicians. I will admit I am a believer in some patent medicines myself.

"What we are going to do, according to Bishop Fallows' teachings, is to embrace all of the common sense methods of curing our ills. There is no reason to exclude any of them. Let us have our good mental suggestions, let us have the beneficial medicines and the physicians, as well as the Bible teachings. They all are good."

Bishop Fallows declared Doctor Dowie's teachings, Christian Science, Mental Science, and New Thought all deserved to be classed together. There was not a spark of truth in any of them, he said.

We have no desire to find unnecessary fault with Reverend Myers and Bishop Fallows, or with others attempting to follow this new healing movement; but when these gentlemen talk about "common sense" methods for the treatment of diseases and make claims for their own methods based upon a system devised by human sagacity alone, with a sort of half-hearted claim for a great degree of spirituality in the movement, it is calculated to make a believer in the direct statements of Jesus of Nazareth, the Great Healer, smile with a degree of pity not very far removed from contempt.

We do not doubt the statements made by the Reverend Myers that he has known many instances in which persons placing confidence in Christian Science for the healing of their afflictions have failed to receive what they hoped and prayed for at the hands of the healers, and died while trusting to the efforts made by those in whom they trusted. Nor may we question too closely the assumption that if these same parties applied for medical treatment they would have lived. However, as they did not make appeal to medical science, the conclusion that they would have lived had they done so is at least suppositious; they might have died under a physician's care as hundreds have done and are doing every day.

Why Reverend Myers, Bishop Fallows, and others of like position in the churchly denominational world, who are looking to the guidance of the people both in regard to their spiritual and physical ills, do not take the complete teaching of Jesus of Nazareth, the Lord of life and glory, as the basis and foundation principle of their philosophy of healing seems to us remarkable and strange.

It is said respecting the teachings of Jesus that the common people heard him gladly. This is practically to say that the upper, elite, and fastidious neither heard him gladly nor accepted him, but followed the bent of their own inclinations and the teaching of their class. There is a false ring to this striking attempt to mix common sense with a philosophy of religious teaching and practical commingling of religious teaching and medical physical science under the garb of spirituality. It seems to us, looking at it from the ranks of the common people, that it would be better far to take the spiritual teaching of Jesus direct, without human shading or the bias of the culture and standing of a sect, than to mix what these gentlemen denominate common sense into the practice of things which Jesus taught.

It has been said by some that the attempt to establish a sanitarium was a practical evasion of the faith taught by the church in the principle of healing by the laying on of hands and anointing with oil as commanded by the Savior. Whosoever makes such suggestion does not fully understand the intent and purpose of the movement. Many of the ills to which the Saints in common with other dwellers in the flesh are subject, are claimed to be the result of human environments. It is certain that many complaints are seriously aggravated by the surroundings and the habits of those who are afflicted by them. In many cases of this kind where resort is had to the ordinance of the church, the administering and anointing with oil and the laying on of hands, those who are thus administered to and whose troubles have been increased by unfortunate surroundings which have either brought their infirmity upon them or have aggravated and conduced to the continuation of their suffering, are compelled to remain in such conditions to their injury both in body and in faith. One object, and we might almost say the main object of the establishment of the Sanitarium of the Saints, for the Saints, is that it may be made possible to place those who are suffering in conditions where they may receive the continued good nursing provided for in the revelation given to the church, and also to receive the administration of the ordinance of the house of God under such conditions as will add to the proper exercise of their faith, the application of the common sense rule of physical health and comfort necessary to the strengthening of the weak, the encouraging of the fearing, and the uplifting of the doubtful and discouraged. We place nothing beyond the power of God. We are compelled to admit, whether we are willing or not, that all power to heal emanates from God, and that there is no power resident in individuals, official or otherwise, but what is of God, and is exercised by such individuals by permission or the grace of God. We admit, further than this, that the exercise of that power by which they receive cure and health who are administered to, is dependent upon the wisdom of God, whether he will or will not, whether he finds it to be wise or not. If he chooses to send the healing forces from the places where they are lurking to the help of those who are needy in spirit and ill in body, then the power is received and healing follows. If he wills not to exercise the power then the healing forces are not sent and healing does not follow. Those who are administered to must have the association of those surroundings that are indicative of trust and confidence in God. It will not do for men to say that they have faith in God and yet continue unwise living, eating and drinking, or following pernicious practices ordinarily destructive to human health, and expect in every instance to be taken out of their environments, whatever they may be, and placed wholly within the realm of perfect health to be continued therein while they return to habits which brought their sickness upon them. It is to better their condition, if it can be done, that the Sanitarium is to be established.

It is evident that Reverend Myers, Bishop Fal-lows, and others who may take up this modern Emmanuel Movement, are doing so with good motives toward their fellows; we do not deprecate their intention, nor would we unnecessarily find fault with their methods. We may be forgiven, however, if we suggest the common-sense and whole-souled acceptance of the methods of divine healing commanded by Jesus while standing with his followers waiting the moment of their final departure, he in his resurrected body, they in their frail bodies of humanity, his face shining with the ineffable glory of the world to come: "They shall lay hands on the sick and they shall recover," with all that is taught in the New Testament Scriptures in regard to the treatment of the sick.

A REPLY TO HANS P. FREECE.

Recently Hans P. Freece contributed an article to the Register and Leader, Des Moines, Iowa. In the article he took occasion to attack the character of Joseph Smith the Martyr, and also assailed the character of the Iowa Saints, declaring that they were not a credit to the community. The Register and Leader, January 13, contained the following brief and pointed reply from our church representative in Des Moines, Elder J. F. Mintun:

DES MOINES, Iowa.—To the Editor: After reading the unreliable article of Hans P. Freece in the issue of the Register and Leader of the 28th ult., entitled "Joseph Smith a polygamist," I thought at first that intelligent, well-informed people into whose hands your valuable paper comes would need no reply, it being so palpably false, yet fearing that if no reply was made to his bald assertions some one might be deceived into believing them, hence my reason for this brief article.

Mr. Freece could have written nothing more favorable to the claims of the Brighamites, or Utah Mormons than that which asserts that Joseph Smith was a polygamist,—and from that source did he receive all his information upon which he bases the assertions that he makes, and he still shows that he loves the lie manufactured by Brigham Young and his associates relating to the introduction of polygamy in the United States. They manufactured this base lie to make Joseph Smith's character appear as bad as their own was, but Mr. Freece is telling it to gather in the shekels from those whom he concludes are ignorant of the facts, or such as would like to hear a dead man's character defamed without legal proof.

Not a crime has ever been proven against Joseph Smith. When that which the Utah Mormons rely upon as proof was presented before the United States court, it was considered false by the judge, because so self-contradictory and so foreign to facts as gleaned from authentic records.

It will be noticed that there is nothing but assertions in the article of Mr. Freece, and I am in possession of such evidences as have been considered legal by jurists, that give conclusive evidence that Joseph Smith neither instituted polygamy nor believed in it, but every authentic utterance of Joseph Smith condemns polygamy as a crime.

Relating to marriage, he taught that "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and cleave unto her and none else, and he that looketh on a woman to lust after her shall deny the faith and not have the spirit;" that "there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife and concubines he shall have none, for I, the Lord, delighteth in the chastity of woman." All this was accepted by the church as the will of God on this question, and up to the day of his death Joseph Smith thus advocated, denouncing in the most unmeasured terms those who manifested an adulterous or polygamous spirit.

Brigham Young claims that Joseph Smith received what he claims to be a revelation that indorses polygamy, and the document was so written as to make it appear that Joseph Smith received it, but this fraudulent document was not introduced to the church—so Brigham Young admits—till over eight years after the death of Joseph Smith, and it must be remembered that this people had become so notoriously corrupt in the secret transgression of the marriage covenant that they manufactured this document as an excuse for their corruptions, and then charged its origin to one who had been dead, thinking they would be safe from any denial that he introduced it. Emma Smith, the only wife of Joseph Smith, so she testifies, and so her sons testify, as also a host of others who were acquainted with the facts testify, and who need no excuse from transgression, or for their testimony, only that the facts might be known, says that Brigham Young manufactured the statement that Joseph Smith introduced polygamy, or had a revelation sanctioning it, the original of which she had and destroyed, leaving only a copy for Brigham Young, as Brigham Young stated at the time of its introduction; and she was in a position to know whereof she spoke. The women introduced to give evidence that they had been Joseph Smith's wives gave such contradictory testimony before Judge John F. Phillips, that he decided the evidence false and said that if the evidence was true these women were but "sports in nest hiding."

The "Iowa Mormons," as Mr. Freece pleased to call the "Latter Day Saints" located in Iowa, are charged with being "not a credit to the community." We are willing to trust our reputation with the respectable men and women of information in this city and State and to compare their character with that of any other religious people in the city or State for morality, virtue, honesty, temperance, and spiritual devotion. I should certainly dislike to be so questionable in character or have the majority of the Latter Day Saints so to be, that their home paper would say of them what the home paper of Hans P. Freece says of him in its issue of May 28, 1908. It says: "Hans Peter (Freece) is a lulu when it comes to lying about his friends. It is a credit to the Mormon church that such a humbug is not with them."

Doctor Margaret A. Freece, a sister of Hans P. Freece, says in a letter dated at Salina, Utah, May 25, 1908, written by her after her attention was called to an article from the pen of Hans P. Freece, printed in the New York Herald May 17, 1908, in which he makes reference to the treatment accorded to him and his relatives in their home town:

"I can also speak for my brothers and father, and they feel that they owe an apology to the people for the article that appeared in the paper, which was uttered without our knowledge or sanction, and that we are none of us responsible for anything that comes from that quarter."

This is plain that she, her father, or brothers will not be responsible for anything that has come or will come from Hans P. Freece, and proves in what estimation for truth and reliability he is held by those who should know him best. Statements from such a source reflecting upon the character of the Latter Day Saints will have no weight with those who know them and should not have with any others.

Further information desired by any one on the question as to whether Joseph Smith was a polygamist or as to the character of the Latter Day Saints of Iowa or anywhere they live in the world will be given to any one who has interest enough to call on me at 1205 Fillmore Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

There are two brethren to whom we wish to call attention. They are Brn. John Grainger and A. N. Hoxie. Not a week passes but what these brethren forward to the HERALD editors interesting clippings and articles. Of course, we can not use everything sent us, but some of it is usable, and we appreciate such efforts to keep us posted as to current thought and events.

Count Tolstoi has recently been the object of an official anathema in the columns of one of the leading orthodox church papers. It is signed by the Bishop and chapter of Saratoff, who, it is claimed, have not yet been reached by the influence of the new liberty and enlightenment. This curse reminds one of the Dark Ages and if effective most certainly seals up Tolstoi to a terrible fate.

Several clippings concerning a buried city have recently been received. This prehistoric city seems to be at Casa Grande, near Florence, Arizona. It is claimed that the discoveries there are of great archæological importance. We hope to be able to furnish more complete information at a later date.

The record of prophets who "went wrong" on 1908 is lengthy. According to predictions destruction was to come upon New York, the world, and the southwestern part of the United States by earthquake. Death was to come to the Sultan of Turkey, the Emperor of Austria, the Dowager Empress of China, and others. War with Japan, the Czar of Russia assassinated, the Emperor of Germany to die of cancer, were among the many predictions concerning the year just closed.

The name of the Independence Manufacturing and Mercantile Company, Independence, Missouri, has been changed to Independence Sash, Door and Lumber Company. The officers are Ellis Short, president; A. L. Yingling, vice-president; E. C. Harrington, secretary, treasurer, and business manager.

A certain Jewish rabbi gives the five greatest men as Moses, Jesus, Buddha, Confucius, and Plato, and says Moses is the greatest man in history. He doubts the story about the birth of Moses, as it "is hardly likely that seers could have foretold his birth. . . . It is allegoric and poetic and naive."

The Emmanuel Movement has taken root in Des Moines, Iowa. The Daily News reports that Reverend Thomas Cassady of Saint Mark's Episcopal Church is succeeding in the work, having recently healed a paralytic. Mr. Cassady says: "The man believed that he had the disease. By mental suggestion I relieved him of the thought. In due time, of course, paralysis would have developed."

LAMONI ITEMS.

Bishop E. L. Kelley gave the Lamoni Saints an excellent talk on equality at the Sunday evening service, presenting an idea of the fundamentals entering into the conditions necessary to equality.

The morning hour was in charge of newly elected branch officers, Deacon W. J. Mather, Teacher J. A. Lane, and President John Smith giving short talks on different phases of church work.

We have been favored with most enjoyable weather for the past week. A few days of fog and mist were followed by sunshine and warmth most encouraging.

Attendance at Sunday-school shows both a falling off in total numbers, and increased interest among officers and teachers. Local conditions doubtless account for the smaller attendance.

The smallpox situation remains about the same. There are only four light cases, and the moderate weather and vigilance of health authorities warrant the hope of an early release from all fear in regard to the epidemic.

Next to initiative, and enthusiasm is loyalty—to your task, to your employer. It should be inborn.

The Straight Road

LOVE AND GOOD WILL

CHARITY.

"Follow after charity," for "charity never faileth." (1 Corinthians 14: 1; 13: 8.) When we acquire a clear and correct understanding of what charity really is, it will not be hard for a disciple of Christ to decide that it is still beyond him; and may, therefore, be safely followed after. It is still above us, and represents a higher condition of divine love than the most of we poor mortals have yet attained. Is this not one of the things the Lord had in mind when, from time to time, his Spirit has said to the Saints, "Come up higher"? "Charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth for ever."—Moroni 7: 43. When we think of Christ's agony in the "place called Gethsemane"; where he groaned beneath the sins of men, as shown by the following, we know our love and obedience are not equal to his:

And being in agony he prayed more earnestly: and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground.—Luke 22: 44.

For, behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer, if they would repent; but if they would not repent, they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit, and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 2.

After he had endured the cruel scoffs in the presence of the high priest, and before Pilate's court; after they had crowned him with thorns, spat in his face, and smote him with their hands and with a reed; after they had pierced his hands, his feet, and his side; after all the cruel mockings endured at the cross; yet he could say, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." O Son of God! was ever love like thine? Thy love is sublime, thy obedience is perfect!

"And above all things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness."—Colossians 3: 14. Charity is that inward adorning of a "meek and quiet spirit." It is the offering of a living sacrifice: "even that of a broken heart and a contrite spirit." It is like the putting on of the bridal robe and the bridal veil, which covers a body of purity. "And above all things, clothe yourselves with the bonds of charity, as with a mantle, which is the bond of perfectness and peace."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 38.

Charity, "universal benevolence."—Webster.

This definition of charity harmonizes with the Savior's teaching, as follows:

When thou makest a dinner or a supper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen, nor thy rich neighbors; lest they also bid thee again, and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed; for they can not recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just.—Luke 14: 12-14.

When we make a Thanksgiving dinner or a Christmas feast, it would be well to gather in the poor, aged, blind, and decrepit, and seat them at the first table; and then kindly serve them until they are filled. After such benevolence as this you can sit up to the table and eat the sweetest meal of your life. If this can not well be done, those who are able and have complied with the law of Christ, might fill a large basket full of good things, label it, and place it at some poor widow's door; rap, and then get out of sight. After a few acts of that kind you can return home, and you will enjoy the approval of your own conscience, and the approval of God as you never did before. Cornelius was a devout man, and one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always. . . . An angel of God said unto him, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.—Acts 10: 2-4.

But charity includes something greater than alms given, as shown above, and as may be learned from the teaching of Paul:

And though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profiteth me nothing.—1 Corinthians 13: 3.

Charity is a disposition to think favorably upon the words and actions of others, with a desire to do them good. (Webster.) This does not mean that we should compromise truth with error, nor righteousness with sin. It means that we should be impressed with the thought that every man's religion and every woman's religion is just as sacred to them as ours is to us, no matter how absurd their views may seem to us. With such a feeling we will be careful about our words and actions. I sometimes feel, when it seems necessary to touch upon the faith or belief of others, like I think Moses felt when God said, "Draw not nigh hither: put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."—Exodus 3: 5.

We should credit our religious neighbors and our brethren who may differ from us with sincerity and honesty, so far as possible. But it would not be charity to tell them it makes no difference what you believe, or what church you belong to, just so you are sincere, when we know it is not true. But in meekness and with love we should endeavor to point out their errors, as we endeavor to lead those who are in sin, to the Savior, and into the light and truth. This was the course pursued by the Savior, and "He has left us an example, that we should follow his steps." When Aquila and Priscilla found the eloquent and fervent Apollos lacking in spiritual knowledge, they kindly took him to their home and lovingly "expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly." Apollos was charitable enough to receive their instruction, and, if I understand it correctly, afterward became one of the ablest ministers of the church of Christ. Thus we see the fruits of love and good will, the effects of charity, as manifest in words and deeds. When God sent his angel to Cornelius, he did not reprove him for his lack of knowledge or because he was not a member of Christ's church; but approved of all the good he believed and did, thus encouraging and helping though he referred him to his servant who was authorized to teach "the way of God more perfectly." Even with Saul of Tarsus, unchristianlike as was his practice, when persecuting the church, received but a mild reproof from Jesus for his sin, though it was plainly stated, yet the Savior in his love and with true charity, referred him to the city where he might receive the needed instruction, and to his servant who would "teach him the way of God more perfectly." (Acts 9: 6-17.)

Charity, with an earnest desire that the truth might obtain, and the will of God be done, should enable brother ministers, or ministers of all denominations, to sit down together and quietly, lovingly, and patiently interchange their views; that the truth might obtain, the cause of Christ be promoted, and all mankind be blessed.

"Charity suffereth long, and is kind," which is fully and beautifully exemplified by the patience and suffering of Christ. In the case of the prodigal son we find this lesson beautifully taught, in these words:

I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants. And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion, and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. And the son said unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven, and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son. But the father said to his servant, Bring forth the best robe, and put it on him; and put a ring on his hand, and shoes on his feet: and bring hither the fatted calf, and kill it; and let us eat, and be merry: For this my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found.—Luke 15: 18-24.

"Charity envieth not," but can rejoice in the good fortune of others, whether it be in beauty or physical and intellectual development. It will not envy a brother because of his home, its surroundings, his wife or children, his ability, or his wealth. Charity will rejoice to see others prosper, while its possessor will be content with doing all in his power to better his own condition, so far as may be possible in harmony with honesty, purity, and goodness; and all good men and women should encourage and help such an one. Such a person, like Jesus, will "grow in favor with God and man."

"Charity thinketh no evil," "but rejoiceth in the truth." That is, it will not believe every rumor, but will consider every one innocent, until by force of evidence, before a proper tribunal, they are proven guilty. It is a principle in common law, I believe, that every one is to be considered innocent until proven guilty. Much more is this true according to the gospel and the law of Christ. If this rule was carefully observed, it would prevent a great deal of trouble, and would materially assist in establishing us in each other's confidence, while it would enable us to labor harmoniously together in the spirit of love and true fellowship. It would help us to understand that beautiful precept taught by Christ:

But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5: 44, 45.

How beautifully Christ enforced this precept by his example!

Peter was impressed by the same thought when he penned, for the good of the saints, these lines: "And above all things have fervent charity among yourselves: for charity preventeth a multitude of sins."—1 Peter 4: 8, I. T. If husbands would heed this advice, and follow the example of Christ, they would sit down by their wives when they think them in the wrong, and lovingly point out their mistakes; while they by words of love and acts of kindness, make them to feel that they can and will, reduce to practice that precept taught by Paul, when he said, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it."—Ephesians 5: 25. Such a course being wise and proper for husbands, it is good and commendable that wives should pursue the same course toward their husbands. It would save many tears, many heartaches; cruel words and unkind actions would cease; peace and happiness would continue; homes would be so attractive and pleasant that they would be akin to heaven; and that is just what God intended they should be. There would be fewer divorces, and better, wiser, and happier children.

If parents should manifest the same love and good will toward their children as the gospel requires, it would result in much good; and if necessary, it would do no harm to follow the example of the father of the prodigal son.

"Charity never faileth." It is the law governing in heaven.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—1 Corinthians 13: 13.

True charity is practical. It feeds the hungry, cheers the downcast, and houses the homeless.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

EXPERIENCES OF SR. SARAH LANE.

(The following article contains the dying testimony of one of Australia's active workers, as given to Elder J. H. N. Jones, of Adelaide, South Australia.)

I was born in Taunton, England, on September 11, 1832, and first heard of the restoration of the gospel in 1853, through an elder of the Utah church named Dunbar, who was preaching in a private house, and causing some stir among the people of the town. I learned of it through two members of the Baptist Church, who asked me to come and hear a man preaching that none could be saved without baptism. I could not accept that and went, quite ready to criticise and question. About six were present at the first meeting I attended, and I did not feel interested until he said he was sent forth to preach, that the angel spoken of by John (Revelation 14: 6) had appeared to Joseph Smith, and that the Lord had raised him (Joseph Smith) up to be a prophet to declare unto the people the gospel restored. I then received very strong evidence of the truth of the statement, for a strange feeling came over me from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet. I knew then and have never had a doubt of the divinity of Joseph Smith's mission, and always have believed he was a chosen prophet.

I did not then join the church nor continue to attend meetings until an elder named Banell came to my house with tracts, and one Sunday invited me to come and hear an Elder Cox. He stayed at my house to tea, and I afterwards went to the meeting. I was very much interested in the discourse, and, although Elder Cox had spoken for one and one fourth hours, it seemed to me but about half an hour. I was afterwards introduced to the elder, and being much interested I accompanied him to his lodgings, and he gave me proof from scripture upon the gospel restored. I felt determined to thoroughly sift the matter. After a three hours' talk I was satisfied of the truth, but wanted to know concerning the "Golden Bible," as the Book of Mormon was then called. The book was then little known. I left still determined to investigate and know more. Soon I decided they had the truth, and before the end of December I was determined to cast my lot in with them. One night in prayer I felt so impressed that I could scarce await the elder's return to be baptized.

At that time in England it was a very cold and bitter winter, the river being frozen over in many places, but that did not daunt me. I was determined to obey God's command. I informed the elder of my intention and he replied, "You wouldn't think of going such weather as this, would you?" I said, "It's now or never. Take a hammer and break the ice. I mean to be baptized."

The ice was broken and I was baptized and never felt the cold for joy in being admitted into the church and kingdom of God. From that time I assisted the elders upon the streets. I was not ashamed of the gospel I had embraced, and wherever they went I was with them, leading the singing, and telling others of the glad message restored by the angelic means to earth again. I soon was the means in God's hands of bringing eight young people into the church. Being so prominent with the elders, and bringing so many in, my name began to be a by-word amongst the people, so much so that my father forbade me the house, and would pass me unnoticed in the streets. Not only with my parents, but in the street and everywhere, I was very much persecuted. Mobs often followed me through the streets with sticks and clubs, but the Lord, whom I trusted, always protected me. Upon one occasion the president of the mission was preaching in an up-stairs room, approached by a very unsafe stairway. Before the meeting closed I heard my name called by the crowd below, and at the close I said to the president: "They're calling for me. I'll go down and see what they want. If I draw away the mob it will leave a place clear for your escape."

He advised me not to go, but I went, and about half way down the steps there were a number of great fellows with bludgeons as thick as my wrist. I said, "I hear some one calling for me. Who wants me? Here I am." My soul went up to God for protection, and I walked quietly down through them without molestation. It was an evidence to me of angel guardians near to protect me.

About six months after my baptism news came from America to England that Brigham Young had received a revelation that the church had so sinned that they all had to be rebaptized from himself to the humblest member. This was preparing them for the hand-cart journey. I objected, saying that I had lived up to the covenant, and the consequence was I was suspended for three weeks.

The preaching and teaching was very different at that time to what it was in after years and is now. I decided I could not find another people to feel at home with, but from that time on I can safely say the gifts ceased and I did not enjoy the Spirit as before. As regards polygamy, it was not much known among the people at that time; merely rumors of it which were explained away by the elders who said if it were so it was merely following in the footsteps of David and Solomon. I knew some of the members of the hand-cart company who left England in 1856.

Elder Cox's success was not liked by the Saints or outsiders, so the cause flagged, and none being added, the Saints became dissatisfied, and from fifty members the branch in time dwindled down to two families.

In 1858 I married out of the church (disobeying counsel) and was expelled, after which I left Taunton for Bridgewater, and I heard no more of the church for fourteen years, during which time some had left for Utah, and some had left the church, leaving only one sister. During one of my visits I had been rebaptized. After a time I left Taunton again, this time for Bristol, and while there I resided at conference house with the elders, remaining there till I left for Australia. It was while there, after knowing them for twenty years, I first learned of Adam-God and blood-atonement.

The president of mission who was then leaving for Utah, was selling his books, and when I asked him his reason he said, "I'll need them no more, as we have the living oracles and only need obey counsel of those in authority over us. He then told me of Adam-God and blood-atonement. I replied, "That's devilish doctrine and I won't accept it." To which one of the elders replied, "You'll have to accept it and believe polygamy also, or else you'll be damned."

I asked why they had kept that information from me for so long, and they said I had hitherto been fed with "milk," now I was fit for "strong meat."

I said, "I'll neither accept your meat nor your doctrine."

A short time from that I left for Australia, bringing letters of introduction to elders here stating that I was in good standing. I never heard of the two sections of the church till I came to Australia. Was not long in South Australia before I began to inquire for the "Mormons" and was politely told that they "had kicked them out."

I afterwards went to Victoria, where I again inquired for Mormons, and then heard of the Reorganized Church. That was in 1887. I went to live at a place called Drysdale, near Geelong, and often inquired among religious people for the Mormons, and was told of one living about six miles away. A friend of mine in Drysdale knew of him and, one day upon returning from Geelong, told me she had heard a discussion on the train between a Mormon and a Methodist upon the subject of water baptism. I subsequently ascertained that the "Mormon" was Elder J. W. Trembath, of the Reorganized Church, and upon obtaining his address I wrote to him, and two days later he and Elder C. A. Butterworth visited me. I was real glad, but Bro. Butterworth soon shook my faith in Brighamism. He told me I'd been connected with an apostate church. I felt very upset, and after their departure I determined to plead with God until I ascertained whether Josephite or Brighamite was right. I prayed till I got the answer that the Josephite branch of the church was the true one, and I was satisfied. In a few days Bro. Butterworth again visited me and continued to occasionally until I decided to unite with the Reorganization. I was the means of introducing the elders to Mr. and Mrs. Wiffin, who lived opposite me, and they and their son Willie and a Mrs. Matthews soon joined the church. Two (Mr. W. and Mrs. M.) have passed away, and two still live.

Incidentally I desire to mention that after it became known that I had become a Mormon (as we were called), no one wanted to employ me at my usual avocation, which was nursing, and I was so reduced at one time that only twopence and a small portion of bread were in my house. I then lifted up my soul in prayer, pleading not to be forsaken after obeying the commands, and I distinctly heard a voice say, "Fear not, I am with thee; be not dismayed. I will never leave thee, never forsake thee."

I replied, "Lord, I take thee at thy word."

Soon I had work again, and from that time I have never feared or doubted that the Lord would provide, and he never has failed me.

After a time I returned again to South Australia, feeling very reluctant to leave the Saints of Victoria, but I felt the Lord was in it. I had been in South Australia about two years when the first Mormon elder came. They were here some months before I heard of them, through a man peddling from door to door.

On subsequent Sundays I went to the Botanic Park where they held meetings; and told their members that they were being deceived. I continued to visit the park, distributing HERALDS and Ensigns which were sent me by Bro. Butterworth and Victorian Saints, contending with both elders and members. The elders cautioned them and advised them neither to hear nor believe me. I felt like Jonah. The Spirit constrained me and urged me to go and contend with the elders, but the flesh was weak and I felt afraid. I fasted and prayed and still the Spirit said, "Go, and defend the cause."

On one occasion I went in fear and trembling, not knowing what to say, but after one of the elders had spoken, I asked permission to speak. The elders said no, but one gentleman said, "Let us hear her," so I turned to the people and explained these men were not Latter Day Saints, but followers of Brigham Young. I said, "They tell you that Joseph Smith was a prophet, and yet they charge him with the damnable doctrine of polygamy." I continued, "If they can prove it, I'll suffer my right hand to be severed from my body." I asked the elders, "Why don't you tell the people what you really believe—Adam-God, blood-atonement, polygamy, etc.?"

The people flocked around me, questioning, and the Lord gave me words to reply to their questions. Later, a Sr. Vernon, now of the Josephite church, came back to South Australia from Utah (whither she had gone a Mormon convert) and exposed the Utah deception with the result that three of them desired baptism. Elder Jones was sent from Victoria in 1902 to baptize them. We were left for sometime alone and held cottage meetings and often the Lord was with us to bless. Elder Jones returned, after fulfilling his short mission, and Elder Mackie was sent later to continue the work. He remained only six weeks, and Elder Jones again came to our aid. At this time I had a remarkable dream. I was apparently in a large building, and the people were gathering to hear the Mormons, many desiring to hear both sides. I was busy preparing the way for the elder to come and had an old iron pot and in it some pure white mortar. In the building were a lot of broken places, and I was on my knees repairing these places and making them smooth for the elder to stand upon. I had nearly finished when a side door opened and Elder Jones entered with a smile and said, "I've come to stay," and a few people followed him in. I then awoke and wondered what the dream meant until recently I had the interpretation given. I was the old pot and the white mortar the pure gospel, and the broken places the unbelief and prejudice against us as a people through the Brighamites.

I have tried to do what I could do for the Lord. Often when alone I have gone on my knees and pleaded for an elder to come, and I have realized my one great desire in living to see a strong branch of the church established in Adelaide. I always felt the Lord would spare me for that.

About eight years ago I lay in the hospital at death's door, yet I felt certain my work was not yet done, and that the Lord would spare me to see his work prosper in Adelaide, and I have seen that and I thank God I was the first person to tell the story of the gospel restored in Adelaide and in Drysdale, Victoria.

And now I feel my life work is done, and I will soon pass on to that beautiful home where there is no more pain or sorrow. Unto all the dear Saints, old and young, who read this narrative, I would say, Work for the Master; never be afraid to speak for the gospel; ever try to win souls for him, and may God bless you in your endeavors. Amen.

Initiative is that quality in the human kind which impels a man to come indoors before it begins to rain. Commonest sort of a thing and yet it is very much in demand. The young fellow who will do things without being told has initiative, and if he keeps at it he will go up in the world.

THE LAMANITE.

SR. MARY CHAPMAN.

Sr. Chapman is a full blood Cheyenne, wife of the scout, Amos Chapman, who served under General Miles. She was baptized October 18, 1908. Her home is in Western Oklahoma.

But behold, it shall come to pass that they shall be driven and scattered by the Gentiles.

This prophecy was made by the prophet Mormon, about seventeen hundred years ago, and published in the English language in the Book of Mormon nearly eighty years ago. (See page 491, small edition.)

A great part of that scattering has taken place since the prophecy was published, as history of Indian wars and occupancy of their lands by the white man in the United States proves.

Not many years ago, it seemed to be the general belief that the Red Man would soon become extinct, and lose his identity; but the prophecies of the Book of Mormon, brought to light by Joseph Smith, positively said, No. Those prophecies clearly indicated and predicted that this nation should become as a father to them. This has been and is being literally fulfilled, as is shown in the unparalleled nurture which this United States Government has given to the Indians. There is not a known parallel in the history of nations, where the conquering forces have so persistently and materially sought the welfare of the completely vanquished foe. Not one. And why is it so? Simply because that God who rules in the affairs of nations to-day, the same as when King Belshazzar's heart was sickened by the handwriting on the wall of the chamber of revelry, has so decreed. Because that same God has wrought with the governmental forces of this United States of America, has indicated by prophetic diction many of her chief activities, and, true to his manner of doing, has not failed to warn the people of to-day by a handwriting on the wall.

In the year of 1831, month of March, the Lord said to Joseph Smith in revelation:

But before the great day of the Lord shall come, Jacob shall flourish in the wilderness; and the Lamanites shall blossom as the rose.

It takes education and enlightenment in civilization for any people to show forth much of the beauty of the rose, in the sense conveyed in that positive prophecy. At that time the savages of the wilds, west of Missouri, were not showing much indication of such blossoming.

In the year 1877, the Government appropriated $20,000 for the purpose of Indian schools; and (shall we say?) as a fair beginning toward the fulfillment of Joseph Smith's prophecy.

The next year the appropriation was $30,000; next year, $60,000; next two years, $75,000 each year; next year, $135,000; next, $487,000; next, $675,200; next, $992,800. Then as if every lawmaker in the legislative chambers of the nation was determined to make Joseph Smith's prophecy come true, in the year 1886 Congress appropriated $1,100,065 for educational purposes among the Indians. Then followed a steady increase (over a million each year) till 1892, when it was $2,291,650. This amount was increased each year, till, in 1901, the appropriation was $3,080,367. Seemingly still determined to make the numerous Book of Mormon prophecies, and Joseph Smith's revelations fill the measure as faithful predictions, the Government statistics show that this enormous Indian school fund appropriation was increased each year till the figures for the present year are:

Current and contingent expenses	$ 917,800 00
Fulfilling treaty stipulations.....	2,412,278 16
Miscellaneous supports (gratuities).....	565,500 00
Incidental expenses	74,000 00
Support of schools.....	4,039,995 00
Miscellaneous	2,113,614 89
Total	$10,123,188 05

Appropriations were also made by other acts for 1908, amounting to $182,028.58. The excess of 1908 over 1907 is $876,233.28. With our venerable Uncle Sam thus looking after the interests of the education of "the remnant of Jacob," it is easy to see that Joseph Smith's prophecy concerning the Lamanite blossoming as a rose is already well in the bud, and opening rapidly.

Their children have far superior school advantages to the average white. Where is there a parallel, of the conqueror and conquered, among the nations?

Is this because the popular voice of the people of these United States wills it so, particularly? Every able politician knows it is not. If these matters were submitted to the popular vote of the people, there is no guarantee that the interests of the Red Man would be so well conserved. But it is the decree of God and will continue till he chooses to change, despite any movement to the contrary. "Zion shall flourish upon the hills and rejoice upon the mountains and shall be assembled together unto the place which I have appointed," is the statement which follows the preceding quotation from a revelation given to Joseph Smith in 1831. (Doctrine and Covenants 49: 5.) And that will be as literally fulfilled as the former one is being fulfilled at this time.

But behold, it shall come to pass that they shall be driven and scattered by the Gentiles; and after they have been driven and scattered by the Gentiles, behold, then will the Lord remember the covenant which he made unto Abraham, and unto all the house of Israel. And also the Lord will remember the prayers of the righteous, which have been put up unto him for them. And then, O ye Gentiles, how can ye stand before the power of God, except ye shall repent and turn from your evil way! Know ye not that ye are in the hands of God?"—Book of Mormon 2: 6.

SECTION 106, DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

CONDITIONS THAT MADE THE REVELATION NECESSARY.

Was there a necessity for this revelation? When the Saints began to gather to Kirtland, the church bought land to make homes for them, and divided it up into suitable sized lots, and sold it to them for homes. Many of the Saints did not have the money to pay for their homes, and went in debt to the church for them. It seems the church did not give those lands to the Saints, but sold them to them on time payments. Numbers of those men that were in debt to the church were called and ordained to the ministry, and were sent out on missions before they had paid what they owed the church. The law in section 72: 3 says of the elders: they "shall pay for that which they receive, inasmuch as they have wherewith to pay, that this also may be consecrated to the good of the church, to the poor and needy; and he who hath not wherewith to pay, an account shall be taken and handed over to the bishop of Zion, who shall pay the debt out of that which the Lord shall put into his hands; and the labors of the faithful who labor in spiritual things, in administering the gospel and the things of the kingdom unto the church and unto the world, shall answer the debt unto the bishop in Zion; thus it cometh out of the church, for according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the bishop in Zion."

The bishop of Zion or presiding bishop had moved west, to Missouri. The president of the church, when necessity requires it, may act in any office in the church. Hence, the presidency of the church, acting in the absence of the presiding bishop, and in his place, in harmony with the law cited above, assumed the payment of the debts of those elders in 1837, thereby releasing the elders individually from the payment of their former obligations, amounting in the aggregate to $53,600, as shown by the books of the church as kept in 1837. A brother by the name of Bump (as I remember it) was the bookkeeper.

I saw this old account in the book kept that year, and took down the aggregate in my memorandum at Kirtland in the presence of Bro. M. H. Bond. I thought we would get the old book, and authorized Bro. Bond to pay $25.00 for it if he could not get it for a less amount. There might have been more in the book; some of it was defaced by paper being pasted over the writing, and not owning the book, I did not take the liberty to try to get the paper off. The above amount is what I found.

The Saints then were like they are now. Some would not do their duty and comply with the law, as clearly shown in section 102:3, and had to be urged to duty more than once. Now as the presidency had assumed this great debt (in harmony with the law, too,) for the church; and the Saints, many of them, would not comply with the law and go up to Zion,—“There are many who will say, Where is their God? Behold he will deliver in time of trouble; otherwise we will not go up unto Zion, and will keep our moneys.”

They had left Kirtland, and were at Far West in 1838, with this debt hanging over the presidency, and the church in duty bound to pay it; and many members refusing to come up and help lift this obligation, and with the Lord's house to build and the foundation of Zion to be laid, and the priesthood to be supported (those who must give their time to church work altogether), and the helpless to be cared for.

What greater necessity could exist for the Lord to speak than existed at that time? No wonder they cry out, “O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing.” Then the Lord, in the time of their trouble, answers, and emphasizes what he had said in section 42:10: “Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood and for the debts of the presidency of my church.”

The surplus was never required at any time, as far as I have been able to learn, until the people begin to gather and organize stakes or large branches, or gather into colonies; then it was required for the purposes named in sections 42 and 106, and other places in the Doctrine and Covenants. Then full consecration was required to accomplish the object designed of God.

Tithing in its primary meaning was always required when God had a ministry on earth to be supported, and poor, destitute people to be cared for; and also, offerings, as necessity demanded, and as the Saints were willing and able to give. The tenth seemed to be required more especially for the priesthood, and as practiced by Abraham and explained by Paul in Hebrews 7:2, where he gave Melchisedec a tenth part of all. Then Israel, under Moses, as stated in Hebrews 7:5, 6, “And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham; but he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of Abraham, and blessed him that had the promises.”

This taking of tithes was the law to Abraham; and continued in Israel by commandment, as we see.

We can surely see under the conditions existing in 1837 and 1838, at Kirtland and Far West, as the gathering was being effected, and money so badly needed, and many of the Saints refusing to go up and consecrate their means, but saying, “we will keep our money,” and no doubt unwilling to listen to those God had set in the church to teach his law, but would rather see the presidency and church treasury brought into disrepute, that it was absolutely necessary for God to speak.

As it was necessary for the Lord to speak, we are satisfied he did speak, and gave the revelation in controversy. It is in perfect harmony with section 42:5, where we are commanded to teach the principles of the gospel as contained in the Bible and Book of Mormon. One tenth as taught by Melchisedec and complied with by Abraham, and then as the storehouse of the Lord was kept by Melchisedec to supply the poor, he then pays his surplus, or all above that which he has need, as stated in Genesis fourteenth chapter, Inspired Translation. And the Book of Mormon teaches the same thing concerning Abraham. He paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed. Alma 10:1. He lived in that gospel dispensation when that great high priest lived, after whom the holy priesthood was named.

Now listen! The Savior, Jesus Christ, taught it after his resurrection, Book of Nephi, 11:2, 3, and in paragraph 7, same chapter, Jesus says: "These scriptures which ye had not with you, the Father commanded that I should give unto you, for it was wisdom in him that they should be given unto future generations." Why give this to future generations? Because it was part of the great gospel plan, and must continue in all ages when the gospel is preached in its fullness. Jesus in this statement teaches the continuation of both tithes and offerings. This includes consecration. All we give, whether it is one tenth, or our surplus, or all we have above what we need, it is all consecrated to God, for the good of his work; and all come under the one law of tithes and offerings, administered in part or in fullness, as the conditions of the work demand. Also what we keep when we file our inventory with the bishop, as mutually agreed upon between the individual rendering his account in time, and the bishopric before whom we lay all we have, is consecrated, as fully as what we turn over for some one else.

Section 106 therefore is in complete harmony with what is taught in the Bible, and Book of Mormon, and the balance of the Doctrine and Covenants, on this subject, because it includes the whole law.

If we adopt the rule of interpretation the Lord gives in section 126:10, and let each revelation have its appropriate bearing on every other revelation and their relation thereto, we will find perfect harmony in the books as accepted by the church. In the General Conference Resolutions numbers 214, 215, and 216, the three books are indorsed, all of them. Then in section 126:10, the whole book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church, is indorsed by the Lord.

And the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to, unless the liberties of the people are in jeopardy. This has been indorsed by the quorums and the church.

Resolution number 298, paragraph 3, says, "That where radical differences of opinion occur between leading representatives of the body, the discussion of them should take place in quorum capacity, and not through the columns of the HERALD."

If the bishopric, in the administration of the law, disregard the rights of the people, an appeal to the quorums is provided for in section 126:10, and if the books are wrong, let us discuss that in the quorums, as the church has said it should be done. Then use the HERALD to edify, strengthen, instruct, and build up the Saints in the gospel faith, and establish confidence in each other.

May wisdom, peace, and good will abound, and light be given and "more good" be done, is my prayer.

G. H. HILLIARD, of the Bishopric.

WHAT SHALL THE CHILDREN READ?

Valuable Suggestions from Carolyn Wells and W. W. Denslow, Writers of Juvenile Literature, and from Professor John A. MacVannel and E. J. Baldwin, of the Teachers' College of Columbia University.

"The reading a child does in its home has a tremendous influence on its development—an influence hardly surpassed by any other single factor," is the view of Professor John A. MacVannel, professor of the science of education and kindergarten work in Teachers' College, Columbia University, expressed in a recent interview. Since this school is the recognized leader in the new movement of scientific child study, and is wielding a great influence by sending to all parts of the country teachers aroused to the importance of every factor that touches the child, Professor MacVannel's words carry much weight. Continuing along the same lines, he said:

"Even the books and periodical literature intended for the reading of mature people play an important part in molding the child. Immature young people look over and read much of this matter and inevitably are benefitted or injured. It is always a positive influence and one that must be seriously considered by all who have charge of the younger generations, if they are to live up to their obligations.

The Best Juvenile Literature.

"Children and young people will read, and as surely will be strongly influenced by what they read. They should be supplied with the best obtainable juvenile literature. There is an abundance of this which fulfills all the requirements for the wholesome and sane development to which the youth of this modern day is entitled. Twenty years ago there was a different story to tell, for at that time much of the best juvenile literature of the day was stilted, namby-pamby and lacking in that charm, simplicity and wholesomeness which characterizes the better class book of to-day. Modern authors who are at all worth considering, no longer talk down to children and young people, but address them with an unaffected naturalness and sympathy that make a strong appeal. This attraction affords to this type of writing an opportunity to drive home in a subtle but none the less powerful manner, the good taste and high ideals it reflects."

The Visiting Story Teller.

Carolyn Wells, whose merry verses and stories have charmed many thousands of young people, is beyond question an authority on what a child ought to read. Her books for girls and boys have been successful; she is a regular contributor to the magazines for boys and girls, and one of her latest volumes, The Happychaps, ran serially in St. Nicholas through the past year. Commencing on the useful sphere of the modern magazine for young people, Miss Wells said:

"A magazine for young people is a visiting story teller, who goes each month into welcoming houses of youths to spin him yarns, sing him verses, show him pictures and talk over departmental interests. In this manner author and reader become real companions and whatever influence the good literature has acts continuously through the year, and the reader has a never ceasing interest, a constant source of wholesome pleasure and fun.

"A book is often a feast, but its twelve issues make of a magazine a mental diet, and if it is the proper sort, it will build up wholesome idea tissues. Each issue of a modern young people's magazine like St. Nicholas appeases somewhat that insatiable hunger for diversity and change which is ever present in the child and the youth. The various contributions, each one simple, and too brief to tire the immature mind, form a substantial and delicious mental course dinner—with the difference that none of the courses become cold if left till day after to-morrow or next week."

Old and New Fairy Tales Compared.

Few men of our generation have contributed more clean fun and laughter for children and grown-ups than W. W. Denslow, the artist-author. Since Father Goose appeared some ten years ago, with Denslow's inimitable pictures, a long line of his picture books and story books have been published and widely read. Mr. L. Frank Baum's Wizard of Oz, which first appeared as a book with more than a hundred Denslow pictures, has been on the stage continuously for many years. Recently Mr. Denslow has become a contributor to St. Nicholas, and his latest work, a series of pictures and verse, "When I grow up," which set forth day dreams of an American youngster, are to appear throughout the year. Aside from his success as a producer of laughter and wholesome fun, he has performed an important and recognized service for juvenile literature of the day in pointing out the defects of old fairy tales and in keeping his picture books and his work free of such harmful elements. His many imitators point the truth of his ideas. In discussing his views Mr. Denslow said:

"My aim in children's pictures and verse is to furnish good, clean wholesome fun for children, eliminating the deceit, murder and theft that is so rife in the older fairy tales. These elements bore harmful results. A child reading of downright treachery and cruelty does not recognize the wrong of it, but deems it proper and worthy of imitation. Anyhow, keep this spirit out of the stories, verse and pictures that children read and you never contribute injurious ideas.

"Action, children demand, and you can give them plenty of wholesome action, fun and entertainment without ever employing the easier trick of crowding force into your humor by impressions of brutality, cunning, deceit or the shock of horror and gore. You can even invent tales and pictures of pirates abounding in adventure and daring, without even hinting at the blacker side of the once respectable profession practiced under the black flag.

The Modern Fairy Tale.

"The fairy tales of the modern day are gradually following the new standards and the effect on the youngsters who read this better class of juvenile writing, is even now appreciable. They are growing up into wholesome, sane maturity, free from the bugaboos, the horrors and fear inspired by the older type of writing that exulted in piled up impressions of barbarity.

"In teaching a boy arithmetic you drill him continuously day by day and he learns to think and reason properly. Even in his games he must practice continuously to excel. It follows logically, that continued and regular reading of a magazine that interests and absorbs him will instill into him the type of ideas and impressions it conveys. An author who writes for young people and has any serious appreciation for the formative results of juvenile reading, welcomes the opportunity afforded him by the magazine of recognized literary quality."

A Librarian's View.

The work of a librarian offers an excellent chance to study tastes in reading the tendencies of literature. Because of the special work done in the Teachers' College, the views of Miss E. G. Baldwin, its librarian, are of special interest.

"The problem of selecting the right sort of reading for children and young people presents great difficulties," she says. "Few parents, relatives or friends know anything at all about it. They look on juvenile books, magazines and periodicals merely as amusements. Rarely does one of them realize that what the child reads in the home does more than almost any other factor in molding his tastes and character.

"In seeking advice teachers are often consulted, and in the majority of cases this is profitless, because the average teacher has little scientific knowledge of the subject. The opinions, however, of those who have specialized in the science of education in kindergarten work will often be found of value. Perhaps the best advice procurable on what young people should read is to be obtained from the editors of juvenile magazines of repute and acknowledged literary quality. This is about the easiest and cheapest advice to be acquired, for each number of such a magazine presents a collection of the writing of the best authors of current juvenile literature.

"And the best juvenile literature of to-day, with its innate charm and happy, pleasing qualities, meets the requirements of proper child development and inculcates those tastes, ideas and ideals that go to the making of fine, strong characters. This charming and simple literature, with its wholesome influence, is also the most scientific mental food for young people. It is as sanitary and hygienic as the regime science now prescribes for the bodies of children.

The Place of the Periodical.

"Many parents and elders conscientiously attempt to select proper reading for young people, but the knowledge of the subject among even cultured people of broad education is insufficient to save them from error. The educational centers where the Science of Education and kindergarten work are given importance are now actively engaged disseminating new knowledge and instruction along these lines. Columbia University is doing an important work in this direction. It is constantly training large numbers of teachers from all sections of the country. With such widespread influences at work, the next generation or two will realize more fully the importance of the reading a child does in the home, and know how to judiciously select such magazines and books as will benefit and aid their proper development. Unfortunately, even educators who have worked along this line, have lagged somewhat behind the author of the best modern juvenile fiction. During the last two decades a juvenile literature has been in existence, immeasurably superior to the standards that preceded it. This writing is direct and simple; it holds up fine ideals and ideas, and is the embodiment of good taste and culture, yet it has none of that namby-pamby attitude of preachment and condescension found in the old-time 'best books for boys and girls.'

"There are hundreds of volumes of such books, and there are a few good young people's magazines and periodicals. These latter perform a great service by exerting a formative influence which even the finest books can not sometimes achieve."

Only the successful man is in a position to give advice and usually he is the least free with his opinions. This is a thought I have tried to keep in mind both when listening and talking.

If We Knew.

Could we but draw back the curtains
That surround each other's lives,
See their naked heart and spirit,
Know what spur the action gives,
Often we should find it better,
Purer than we judge we should—
We would love each other better,
If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motives,
See the good and bad within,
Often we should love the sinner,
All the while we loathe the sin.
Could we know the powers working
To overthrow integrity,
We should judge each other's errors
With more patient charity.

If we knew the care and trials,
Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
Understood the loss and gain,
Would the grim external roughness
Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Would we help where now we hinder?
Would we pity, where we blame?

Ah! we judge each other harshly,
Knowing not life's hidden force;
Knowing not the fount of action
Is less turbid at its source.
Seeing not amidst the evil
All the golden grains of good;
Oh! we'd love each other better,
If we only understood.

Dear Sisters: While studying the Sunday-school lesson for October 18, how vividly the whole scene seemed to come before me—the scene of our loving Savior, the sinful woman, and the self-righteous Pharisee! Nor is this scene one so far removed from the present time as to excite wonder that she marveled at the kindness shown by the Son of Man, he who had come to seek and save that which was lost, and restore such to the estate from which they had fallen.

Not long since when in conversation with a lady she told me that at one time she had thought seriously of uniting with the church at Lamoni, for she "saw they were so good and kind to each other. When one of them was sick, or one of their members died, they were so nice to the bereft ones, and did such nice things for each other, showing so much love and sympathy." There were also many other things which she heartily approved of. "But," said she, "there are some fallen girls there, and do you know when I found that the sisters of that church would notice them; treat them as nice as other girls, and try to hold them up, I said then and there that I was done for all time to come with such people."

It was then, dear sisters, if never before, that I felt to thank God from the depths of my heart for the noble sisters of Lamoni, and I pray that wherever there are women who have accepted this glorious gospel that the same may be said of them.

I have been a close observer along this line, and I find much to discourage those who have fallen from the path of virtue from seeking to return; for when they look to the so-called Christian women of the day for sympathy, they more often receive a cold stare than a friendly nod of recognition, or a smile and a friendly clasp of the hand. I wish to call to your mind one fact, that it is of those who would turn to the right, those who see the error of their way, and would again tread the better way if they only had friends to encourage and lend a helping hand that I am speaking; for my soul abhors the sin-polluted being who wears the name of woman whom the wise man when speaking of her says, "Her house is the way to hell, going down to the chambers of death." But those who are young and inexperienced, who have perhaps been ill advised, who through ignorance, through adverse surroundings and environments have fallen by the wayside, it is of such I speak. And who is there that will dare to breast the tide of unpopularity, to stand firm against the whisperer, those who nod and wink and draw the robe of self-righteousness about them and say, "I thank God I am not as she is!" And some (I will add) may whisper to their own consciousness, "If I am, not every one knows about it as they do about her." And thus it runs.

If a gentleman friend is actually touched by her grief and shame and offers a true helping hand, and seeks to give a brother's advice and help her rise again from the sodden clay, his motives are often misjudged, and he soon finds his name coupled with much that is also impure and untrue when perchance his motive was the very best.

Then, oh, where are we to find those who can help the fallen sisters? I have for some years past believed women, Christian women of saintly consecrated lives are the ones who can accomplish more along this line than all others. Not those who go to church on Sunday and sing so sweetly, the while looking so pretty and innocent,

"Rescue the perishing, care for the dying;
Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave.
Weep o'er the erring ones, lift up the fallen,
Tell them of Jesus, the mighty to save."

Then while the minister is telling the dear old story of a Savior's love for fallen humanity, sit and cast scornful glances, or wink at some friend, then at some fallen one until the blush of shame and remorse is brought to her cheek, and she feels 'twere better anywhere than there. All these things I have mentioned I have both seen and heard, and my soul cried out against this evil, and for many days have I pondered it within my heart, and at length I took it to the Lord in prayer, and after many days this came in answer to my question, "Lord, how shall we redeem the fallen sisters?" and the answer was, "Love them," and I knew I was not sufficiently strong in the gospel to do that, at least some of them.

And I said, "Lord, give to me charity and wisdom, and I will trust thee, for thou hast said, 'My grace is sufficient.'" And from that day I have lived in humble prayer that he would help me love the fallen women, to think not lightly upon the sorrows of those who perchance spend many nights alone, weeping as the woman in our lesson, for perhaps they also loved much, yet their idol was clay. I have looked for good among such, and many times my search has been amply rewarded, and of the good I have accomplished along this line let those speak who know. Yet I am often confronted with objections like this: "It's no use. You can't do any lasting good. Others have tried to help them up and only got themselves talked about."

I know of myself I can not, but I also realize that when one goes to such a one with words of kindness, in a spirit of love and sympathy, much can be done, many can be persuaded to turn back to the better way who could never be reclaimed by unkindness.

Now as Saints of the Most High God, and mothers in Zion in the last dispensation of time, let us strive to help by precept and example, by words of meekness and charity to wipe out this great sin which abounds upon every hand, which is blighting the lives of fair women and the dear sons of our race; looking unto the Father for wisdom and grace to perform the work about us; for he has said, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Then may he hasten the time when all shall be pure in heart, that Zion may be redeemed.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

You will not find this hymn by John Newton in many of the great hymnals used by congregations in the Northern States, yet it is one we ought to know, for it still is among the most popular of the religious songs sung by the Southern people. To the older people of that region it is rich with memories and one has but to hear it sung in a congregation there to realize the place it holds in their hearts. Its author was the writer of many hymns, some of which are familiar everywhere.—Chicago Tribune.

How tedious and tasteless the hours
When Jesus no longer I see;
Sweet prospects; sweet birds, and sweet flowers
Have all lost their sweetness to me.
The midsummer sun shines but dim,
The fields strive in vain to look gay;
But when I am happy in him,
December's as pleasant as May.

His name yields the richest perfume,
And sweeter than music his voice;
His presence disperses my gloom,
And makes all within me rejoice;
I should, were he always thus nigh,
Have nothing to wish or to fear;
No mortal so happy as I,
My summer would last all the year.

Content with beholding his face,
My all to his pleasure resigned,
No changes of season or place
Would make any change in my mind:
While blest with a sense of his love,
A palace a toy would appear;
And prisons would palaces prove,
If Jesus would dwell with me there.

Dear Lord, if indeed I am thine,
If thou art my sun and my song,
Say, why do I languish and pine?
And why are my winters so long?
O drive these dark clouds from my sky,
Thy soul cheering presence restore;
Or take me to thee up on high,
Where winter and clouds are no more.

KNOBOSTER, Missouri, January 4, 1909.

Dear Herald: It is with pleasure that I read the pages of the dear HERALD and Ensign. The Ensign is sent to us, and we have the privilege of reading the HERALD each week. I am a Latter Day Saint, and I can say that I am thankful that this precious gospel message has been made known to me.

I joined the Baptist Church in May, 1903, when I was thirteen years of age, remaining there for a little more than five years. I was converted, or thought I was, at a meeting held at the Cumberland Church, by an evangelist. We had the privilege of uniting with any church we chose, so I united with the Baptists (thinking they were right) because I had always gone there. My father was a member of that church, and I had been taught that it was the right church. I was honest in my decision and belief, for I knew nothing of this glorious gospel then. I have always been religiously inclined and wanted to do that which I thought to be right.

There are quite a number of Saints in this town and I have often made slighting remarks about them and wished they could be driven out of town, many of them being in our neighborhood. We always found, though, that our best neighbors were the Saints.

In the spring of 1908 it was the Lord's will that this gospel should be made known to me, that I might chose between it and the precepts of men, and thereby, by my decision, gain eternal life or lose it. I went to this church off and on for a while, then went regularly until September, when I could battle against the opposing power no longer, and resist that which I knew would be for my good. I decided to unite with the church and trust God for the blessings. So, on the twenty-seventh day of September, 1908, I was baptized by Bro. O. R. Miller (the good brother through whom the Lord sent this precious message to me), and was confirmed by the hands of Brn. J. E. Bozarth and E. L. Henson. I know I can never regret the day I took the step, and I am anxiously waiting for others to find the narrow way that leads unto life everlasting.

Friends and relatives have forsaken me, in a measure, but what are they, compared to an eternal life of happiness and peace and joy! There are too many that can not or will not say, "I will give up worldly pleasures, relatives, father, mother, brothers and sisters, if necessary, and follow Him." But oh, the joy that would be theirs to enjoy if they only would! I have a mother and three brothers, but I am the only one, as yet, that has accepted this message. Mother has investigated and believes this to be the true work of God, and I hope the day will speedily come when she may see the necessity of obeying it. And my brothers. At His own appointed time may they see the great electric light that will brighten their pathway in this life and the next.

I have been in this work for only a little more than three months now, but I am striving to do all I can for the advancement of this great cause. At our last election of officers I was elected vice-president of the Religio; I am librarian of the Sunday-school and also teach a class in the Sunday-school. It is my desire to perform well the duties that have been assigned me and to do everything and anything else that I can do to help the work.

I hope that I may ever be found a humble and faithful servant of his, faithful to the covenant I have made, and that I may be a help instead of a hindrance to the work. I have my faults, but desire to overcome them. There are some things in this work that are tasks which should be pleasures. I ask an interest in your prayers that I may receive spiritual strength and be able to overcome all that is not becoming to a Latter Day Saint; that I may bring myself in full subjection to God's laws, thereby enabling myself to do his will and keep his commandments to the fullest extent.

This is the beginning of a new year, and I hope that every Latter Day Saint will make it a point to make this year better than the last.

May we all contend for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints.

Your sister in the one cause,
NORINE BRENDEL.

APPLEDORE, Ontario, December 31, 1908.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I have written to the HERALD, but as we scan its pages our hearts are gladdened to see how the work is prospering in other places. When I suggested how Graceland College could be self-sustaining, I had no idea that my plans would be carried out so soon; but I am glad for the youths and maidens that those who have the means are trying to make them so happy and comfortable. I hope to see it still more prosperous.

Since Elder Green has passed away the work seems to move slowly. We just loved to go here and there and visit the Saints. Bro. Green often said, "You will miss me when I am gone," and I think a great many of us do. We tried to make all the elders who came to our place welcome and to do all the good we could, but it seems as if we are in another world. Everything seems so quiet, so still. I am getting old, and the branch here is getting small, for the want of workers, but the brethren from Wabash and Chatham branches come once in a while and make us feel cheered up. We love the gospel and like to see it progress.

With kind wishes to all the Saints,
Your sister in the gospel,
KEZIA GREEN.

SOUTH BOARDMAN, Michigan, January 3, 1909.

Dear Herald: I am glad I am a Saint of God in this the latter day. We often are blessed with the Spirit and have words of cheer and comfort, and while thinking of the good we might do, these words I will write:

Do you know a heart that hungers
For a word of love and cheer?
There are many such about us,
It may be that one is near.

Look around you. If you find it,
Speak the word that's needed so,
And your own heart may be strengthened
By the help that you bestow.

It may be that some one falters
On the brink of sin and wrong;
And a word from you might save him;
Help to make the tempted strong.

Look around you, O my brother,
What a sin is yours and mine,
If we see that help is needed
And we give no friendly sign!

Never think kind words are wasted;
Bread on water cast are they;
And it may be we shall find them
Coming back to us some day.

Coming back when sorely needed,
In a time of sharp distress.
So, my friend, let's give them freely,
Gift and giver, God will bless.

Your brother in the one faith,
WILLARD GREEN.

CONIFER, Colorado, January 1, 1909.

Dear Herald: It is quite a long time since I contributed anything to your valuable columns, which comes to us every week laden with such precious food, good for the soul of man. I do not see how any member of the church can get along without the HERALD. But I am sorry to say that in my travels I find many families of Saints who do not have a copy in their house. And now, dear Saints, this ought not to be; for how can you keep posted without it? You are losing ground.

I wish to say to my many friends that I am still in the faith, and doing all I can to help push it ahead. Although I am on the superannuated list, I have been moving around the past year. In September I attended our district conference at Wray, Colorado, and we had a pleasant time. After the conference was over I went home with our esteemed Sr. Korf, and spent a few days with the family in Yuma County. Held services on Sunday in the schoolhouse; preached to a large congregation. All seemed much pleased. While there I received a letter to return to Jefferson County, as some of my friends wished me to perform a marriage ceremony, and I united the couple in a happy marriage.

While home, one of my grandsons, a bright young boy of fifteen, came twenty miles to be baptized, and I hope he will make a good man and be the means of doing much good.

On October 13 I left home for the western part of Colorado. My daughter-in-law and I took the train at Pine Grove for Ohio City, a little mining town in Gunnison County, in the mountains, where one of my daughters, Mrs. Dork, is now living. I spent three days there with my daughter and two sisters of my daughter-in-law, Mrs. Robert Kemp, and left her there to spend a few weeks with her sisters, while I moved on to Delta. I arrived there on October 17, in time to attend services and Sunday-school at the Saints' church. On the 20th I had the pleasure of uniting another couple in the bonds of matrimony, Bro. Fred Hutchin and Sr. Clara Hubbard.

I stayed around Delta for two months, also Montrose and Mesa Counties, where I found many Latter Day Saints in a scattered condition. It made me feel very sorry to find so many of the Latter Day Saints roaming around like sheep on the mountains, having no one to guide them.

I visited from house to house and found them still in the faith of the gospel of Christ; but they are like sheep without a shepherd, being in an unorganized state because of the trouble that they have had there for the past four or five years. Some of them had not seen an elder for four years and their hearts were made glad and they rejoiced in having me come to see them once more.

Seventeen years ago I made my first visit on what is known as the West Slope, being the first elder of the Reorganization they had ever seen or heard. I baptized many of those Saints and they look to me as a father in the gospel, while I love them as a father would his own children, and I truly want to see them saved in the kingdom of God.

I spent two months with them and held a number of meetings. Started them to work again, and hope they will keep it moving from now on. I feel that there is a good work to be done over on the western slope. If we could only have some good, young, energetic elder, who could walk, and be able to travel around the country and visit the Saints and other people. I baptized two, blessed four children, and married one couple.

I visited Paonid, where I found Bro. Garry Walling and family, who at one time lived in Glenwood, Iowa, and I am happy to say that he is alive in the work, doing all he can to help it along by holding services on Sunday and preaching around at the different schoolhouses in that part of the country. There are two more families of Saints living there.

I visited at Fruita, west of Grand Junction, and found four or five sisters and one brother by the name of Black, and one Sr. Cooper that used to live in Webb City, Missouri. She is still in the faith, although she has been far from a branch for over four years. I held one meeting with them, and left them rejoicing in the truth.

Dear Saints, my heart and soul are in this great latter-day work, and I only wish I was young again, so I could spend another lifetime in preaching the gospel of the Son of God. I have now passed the seventy-fourth milestone, and the greater part of this time has been spent in this latter-day work, and I ever pray that the glorious cause may still roll on and extend from the rivers to the ends of the earth.

Your colaborer,

JAMES KEMP.

DEEPWATER, Missouri, January 5, 1908.

Saints' Herald: You are an esteemed visitor, gladly received each week, and now that I am renewing for you I want to say a few words to your readers.

Brothers and sisters, I have dearly enjoyed reading your letters and articles; I can not tell which I like best. The "leaves" from lives are fine. I wish there could be something of the kind in every HERALD. The Home Column is good, also, and also the news from the islands. The poetry is just fine, as also are the editorials and other articles. I am a great lover of poetry and have at times been greatly cheered when reading the good pieces in the HERALD. I have felt as though they were written for my special benefit.

I was baptized something near nineteen years ago, by Bro. I. N. White, and I can assure you I have never regretted the step. I believe that if I ever knew anything I know this is the only true church. Bro. Walter Lloyd was the first to bring us the gospel. It seemed that he never wearied in bringing us tracts, papers, and books. His honored mother also did her part in trying to show us the truth. The result was we finally believed, but I took it to the Lord in prayer and fasting and I received answer to my satisfaction. The answer came in a way I was not looking for, but I believe the best way. It was one morning while I was in a room alone. I felt that the Spirit was on me in power, and I was caused to speak seemingly without effort or forethought; and the words were: "I know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that the Latter Day Saints are indeed the church of Christ and accepted with him." I felt that I really did know it better than I knew anything else. I was surprised at what was said about Christ being the Son of God, because I had not been praying for that, but always believed that without a doubt. But I soon decided that it was to show to me that it was a true revelation. And now I would like to tell you how it served me in later years.

We had a nice little branch in Douglass County, near Vera Cruz, but we returned to Deepwater to attend to some business and remained a while here; then we went back. Just before returning to Vera Cruz I had a dream. I thought I and my husband were standing in front of our house, or in the door; it seemed to be night, and there were dark clouds passing over, but there were some clear spots, and the full moon was shining brightly. Suddenly the moon fell to the ground, but we could see it lying on the ground and still shining as brightly as ever. About the same time I saw our house up in the sky. It looked like an arm-resembling cloud had come and lapped under the house and took it up and held it there. My interpretation was that though the moon might fall, the house or church we were in would be saved.

Well, when we returned to Vera Cruz, imagine our surprise when we found that the Hedrickites had been there and got several of our members, including the local elder. They soon began trying to get us, and handed me a Doctrine and Covenants, telling me where to read. I opened the book and the first thing to meet my eyes were the words: "No man can say that Jesus Christ is the Son of God but by the Spirit of God" (or as near that as I can remember). It brought to my mind the revelation I had had so long before. Shortly after this one of our elders came and preached, and in his sermon he came over the same words, at the same time looking over the heads of several others and apparently speaking to me. Just a little while later another one of our elders did the very same way. Each time I was reminded that I knew that our church was the right one. Neither of those elders knew about my experience.

And now if there are any that would like to know how we are getting along since my husband's death, I will say, since returning to Deepwater we have done fairly well. The two boys have steady work, and my step-daughter also. She is away all the time except a visit now and then. We still feel that awful loneliness, especially do I when my dinner is set for one. We sometimes read the motto: "What is home without a mother?" But I say, What is home without a father and husband? It is a dreary, dismal place!

The boys and I had a consultation about paying tithing—we had very little to tithe, to be sure, but thought it would be that much. So decided to send it, and in a few days they both secured steady jobs, with higher wages. Saints, it always pays, but we should not do it with a selfish motive.

Wishing the HERALD and readers a prosperous New-year,
MRS. HARRIET C. SEDARIS.

WYANDOTTE, Michigan, December 15, 1908.

Dear Herald: Some years ago I saw in HERALD or Ensign an article entitled, "Washington's vision." I would like to get it again, if it could be reprinted, and there are others that would like it, I think. I thought at the time it was grand.

SARAH A. McDONALD.

WEST DERBY, Vermont, January 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to thank you and the dear Saints for the surprise you gave me on Christmas day. God bless each and every one. I want the dear sisters to know how grateful I am to them. Some did not give name, and some did not give address, but I have answered all that gave their full address. I have nearly enough for my chair now. I should have written before, but do not have the HERALD. Some one sent me a few odd copies, and I sent them to the prison. In my lonely hours I do the prison work, and if any would care to assist with the work I would be glad to furnish names, and would like stamps and stationery, any amount, as the work is needed. Many a poor fellow writes, "Yours is the first I have heard from the outside world for years, and may God bless you." Dear sisters, will you help in this grand work for souls?

Your shut-in sister,

Box 36.

MRS. ROY COWLES.

WINDSOR, Vermont, December 27, 1908.

Mrs. L. E. Cowles,

My Dear Friend: Let me assure you that your letter of the 22d was read with more pleasure than I can well express. So I hasten to answer your questions, and let you know that a continued correspondence with you would do me a world of good. To receive letters from whosoever is kind enough to spare time to write to me while I am confined in here is my chief joy.

I express my heartfelt sorrow for you, because you are not in a condition to enjoy the blessings and good things of this life. But we must live in the hopes that the next life holds something in store for us which is far better than any earthly joy, and which will compensate us for all our sorrows and sufferings in this life.

In regard to your kindness in wanting to know about the allowance of papers in this institution, we are all permitted the pleasure to receive magazines, books, and all kinds of religious papers and circulars, but not state papers; and the inmates are all at liberty to receive letters.

Hoping and trusting that you have had a Merry Christmas, and that you are to have a happy New-year, I wish to assure you once more that your kindness in writing was not only a surprise to me, but it brought me much joy and comfort in my loneliness. Awaiting most anxiously for your reply, I remain,

A friend,

J. B., care of W. S. Lovell.

WINDSOR, Vermont, December 28, 1908.

MRS. LEROY COWLES,

My Dear Teacher: I scarcely know how to answer your letter, and yet I feel that I ought to write to you. I think I fully realize all you mean by getting nearer to our dear Savior every day. You mean that I should constantly become more and more aware of his guiding and controlling power; that I should gradually come more to feel that he is necessary to me every hour of the day; and also that I should learn to thank him more for all he is constantly doing for me. All this I am trying hard to face with the strength and grace I need; and I think I know what your estimate of 'true and worthy' means. You look for far more than simple success in life. You expect far more than a mere negative goodness, which amounts simply to not doing that which is wrong. I know that you are looking forward to a future for me, which is full of hopes and bright expectations, and I often wonder if I am really capable of realizing all you expect of me. You say I must fulfill them all. God grant that I may. No one could possibly have a greater longing to do so than I have. If it could be accomplished by one act, I could succeed; but moral stability, and that growth in Christ likeness which is the essential of your 'hopes' lie within a circle of mysterious powers. Oh, how my heart would rejoice, if I could see and know that all your desires will be fulfilled. How I should hasten to bring you the happiness. Perhaps I shall even reach the position that I shall know I am safe from all temptation. If longing, praying, earnest seeking, constant watchfulness, and a long and severe preparation will accomplish it, it will be done. I know how you will help me; for I believe your help is born of a strong, deep love for my soul's welfare. God bless you abundantly for it, and may all your wishes and hopes and prayers in behalf of prison work be more than answered. It may mean many a heartache and bitter tear for the wrong of the past. God bless you and go with you all the way, and give you a great power over sin and trouble, and amid all the darkness which you daily lighten, I wish to thank you for writing to the boys. And a happy New-year to one and all. "God be with you."

W. F. L.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colorado, January 3, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for about two years, and can say there is much benefit to be derived therefrom. I know of no better paper that can be placed in a Saint's home. Recently I have been trying to get subscribers for the HERALD and other church periodicals, believing that no home should be without at least one of them; but had not a great deal of success. However, you will find inclosed subscriptions to the amount of five dollars and fifty cents, which may help a little to lift the debt on the Herald Office.

This city, which is located at the foothills of the Rockies, in the Pike's Peak region, is visited by tourists from all over the world, and for this reason opportunities to present the gospel are vast, were it not that we are so hampered by our small meeting-place. We have about eighty members in our branch, and out of this number, those who are near enough and able to attend more than comfortably fill our little room of fourteen by thirty feet, without any visitors. Hence the retarding of the missionary work in this place. We are hoping and praying for the time to come when we may be able, in a financial way, to build a larger place, that we may be able to go out and "gather them in from the by-ways and hedges."

The Ladies' Aid society is doing a noble work in this place, both in a financial and in a spiritual way. May their efforts for good ever be blessed! In a financial way they have aided greatly by holding "Larkin" socials and clubs and "home cooked" food sales. For the latter the business men of the city have been very obliging, seldom charging anything for space to hold them.

With the new year new life has seemed to enter our little branch. Trusting that the Spirit of God will continue with all who are striving to do his will and keep his commandments, I remain,
Your brother in Christ,

1002 East Dale Street.

DON A. HARRIS.

JAMESTOWN, North Dakota, January 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: I do not recall when I have been so interested in the discussion of certain topics as I have of late. And I admire a man that will stand out against popular opinion and state his honest conviction. It seems to me that the discussion on tithing is a one-sided affair. At least it seems only a few years since the Lord spoke very plainly on the question.

The question briefly stated is this: The Saints were to take the Bishop's advice in the matter; his teaching was to be based upon the Doctrine and Covenants. In case the liberties of the people were jeopardized the three executive quorums were to be appealed to. Why condemn Brigham for teaching contrary to the law and yet in a sense occupy the same position? Last spring I was made to understand the law of tithing better than I ever had before when I asked Bro. Kelley how much I owed the Lord. He said "one tenth." I replied that I understood I was to make a consecration. He said, in substance, You can not consecrate when you have no surplus, but you can pay tithing—one tenth of your property. Now suppose two men present themselves to the Bishop. One has a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars—just enough to pay for a comfortable home. Desiring to obey the celestial law, he asks, How much do I owe the Lord? The only agent the law provides for, the Bishop, says one tenth. One hundred or more goes into the treasury which would not be the case if consecration is the only law. In case of the other he may have considerable property and may be able to consecrate—turn over his property and take in return what his just needs demand.

One will observe by looking over the Bishop's annual report that it is the comparatively poor—the fives, tens, and twenties, or in other words, the tithing law that makes it possible to prosecute the missionary work. And it is well that we keep that thought in mind.

May the law of God be kept, or in case of transgression, appeal to the proper authority, instead of seeking our own opinion.

The financial law will harmonize and is suited to the needs, wants, and conditions of the Saints. And when properly taught and kept will bring to us the promise: "I will open the windows of heaven," etc.

May the Lord have no more occasion to say, "O that thou hadst kept my commandments! Then thy peace would have been as a river and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."

In bonds,

JOSEPH CARLSON.

Live Right.

If all who talk right-living would or could live right, there would be few left beside me that did not live right, and it would not take long for us to catch on, too. Brethren, can you or will you see how much there is in these two words? Is there not, in these two words, everything that pertains to the kingdom of God on earth? according to the church in Enoch's time? Has not the Bishopric preached over seventy years, "Live right"? How can we live right, until we are real brothers and sisters? Think over and orate on it all you want to, and, at last, when you take everything together, it may be simply couched in these two words, "Live right."

J. CHESTER.

Prophecy Fulfilled.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I thought perhaps some things I had observed in the year past regarding the fulfillment of prophecy would interest some; hence this attempt.

About a year ago, a song of prophecy was sung in an afternoon prayer-meeting by Bro. Luff. It was to the effect that calamities would come upon the earth in form of fire, flood, famine, and plague. I do not remember all. Part of the verse referring to fire is this: "The fires are kindling, beware of the flame, for havoc and ruin 'twill surely proclaim. It will feed on the structures, and laugh at the wall that science defiantly builded," etc. In less than one week we had the news in the Kansas City Star that a building "absolutely fire-proof" had been burned like so much kindling wood; and science stood aghast, not knowing what to do next. Following the papers on, we continue to hear of this being fulfilled, till now this last disaster, where thousands have lost their lives in Italy and surrounding country. Can we ask the question, Was it from God? Testimony given at the close of the song was that angels stood by him as he sang; others heard a voice singing with him, though not a human in the building knew the song. Do we need any more confirmation?

On April 12, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, Bro. J. W. Wight spoke, "Yea, be warned; for the time has come that calamities shall come upon the earth; yea, in the voice of earthquake, of famine, of pestilence," etc., while the end is not yet. Has this not been fulfilled? If God means what he says in this, why not in other things. Continuing from that given through Bro. Wight, "Yea, verily I say unto you, that inasmuch as my people put away the pride of heart and the pride of life, turn from the vanities of the world, cease from the vanities incident to outward adornment and become more humble and faithful, I will pour out my Spirit upon you," etc. Following this, "Concerning pride and vanity and other things, the brother was constrained by the Spirit to speak to us this morning: God is not slack concerning his promises." Quoting from a prophecy given in the same meeting, "Therefore lead my daughters, even the daughters of Zion, into paths of virtue, and truth and holiness before me, and I will still make bare my arm and my people will be redeemed."

I wish I had time and space to give you some of each of the prophecies given along those lines since then. The query comes to me: Why? Is it not because He sees the necessity of us doing those things? Does he not mean what he says in this as much as in the calamities foretold? One we see fulfilled. From our point of view, we may not see that we have missed anything by not complying; on the other hand neither can we know what we might have obtained through obedience to counsel and commandments given.

I hope the day will soon come that we may as readily see the fulfilling of the promise of greater blessings and the power of the Spirit; but it will come only because we do our part. When we do this, His promise is sure. It does seem we are in a position to make rapid advancement if we only would; but as was heard at one of our recent meetings, "any dead fish can go down stream, but it takes a live one to go up, because of the opposition of the current." None of us want to be "dead fish." We have to work for what we get; it means suffering and sacrifice; but He has promised to be with us, and keeping our pattern always in our minds we can succeed. May this be the happy lot of each.

Sincerely, your sister,

THEO WELDEN.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. O. O. McHenry writes from 404 South Fremont Avenue, Los Angeles, California: "As I am stopping here this winter I would like to meet with the Saints if there be any in the city."

William C. Chapman, Higbee, Missouri: "I am home for the holidays, but soon have to leave again. This makes two years since the mines shut down here where I worked, and they have not started to work since. All mines of Randolph County, with the exceptions of a few small ones, are closed down, and the Saints have been badly scattered. Another case of high finance."

News From Branches

NEW PHILADELPHIA, OHIO.

I ask for space in your columns to tell of the good work going on in this part of the Lord's vineyard. We see marked improvement in our branch, yet there is still room for greater improvement. Bro. R. C. Russell, of Toronto, Canada, has been laboring here the past seven weeks. He had fair attendance, and a number were added to our flock. He held a series of ten lectures in the city hall. Some of the Russellite people came out to hear him; but when they found out what church he represented, they put a notice in the daily papers informing their members that he was not the C. F. Russell of the Millennial Dawn Bible Class. Bro. Russell sent in a notice to the daily papers in reply, informing them that he was not the C. F. Russell of Pittsburg, but was glad that he was R. C. Russell of Toronto, Canada. We all feel that we have been awakened to a sense of our duty; and may each one of us, this coming year, be more watchful and prayerful.

A sister in the faith,

MRS. CLARENCE WARNER.

January 4, 1909.

FIRST KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

We are passing through a cold spell here in this city. The thermometer has been at zero, and some below, for a week or more; but that alone would not be so bad. We are burning gas, but because of the cold weather the gas refused to come, and the result was that many of us suffered from the cold.

Our presiding elder is getting acquainted with us, and his preaching is calculated to produce an effect.

Elder T. W. Chatburn was here last Sunday night, and gave us one of his characteristic sermons.

At our sacrament-meeting, the first Sunday of this year, we had a grand time, and God indeed was with us by his Spirit, and the gift of tongues. We received words of encouragement and comfort and instruction. We are making progress nicely, with Bro. W. E. LaRue as our leader. The Sunday-school, with Bro. Arthur Larkey as superintendent, and the Religio, with Bro. Lot Sandy as president, are doing fine. Sr. Warnky is also making a success in the home class work of the Religio in the city.

Our cottage-meetings are started again. Bro. W. Lewis preaches at Eleventh and Lister, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dolerhide, who are favorable to the work, every Thursday night. The writer holds forth at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Whitmyer, 2631 Spruce Avenue, every Tuesday night; that is in the neighborhood where S. W. L. Scott held the debate. Last Thursday evening, the writer preached, by invitation of Reverend Ferguson, at the Unity Mission, with a pressing invitation to come again.

This week we are installing in our church a very much needed new furnace. Brn. Creveston and Winn are doing the work.

F. C. WARNKY.

STEELTON, ONTARIO.

While I am satisfied you have plenty of stirring news to place in your interesting paper, yet I must say, as I look over its pages from time to time, I see but little from the Canadian advocates. And while the sermons and other writings are of a most interesting character, and very instructive, we, on this side, who subscribe would like to see and hear a little oftener from this side of the line. As a missionary of the church, I try to show the Saints on the Canadian side the need of taking some of the papers of the church, that they may grow in knowledge and become useful thereby. And when advocating the same, I am sometimes informed that if there were more Canadian news, we would be more apt to subscribe—and the missionary is up against it as far as the Canadian borders are concerned. So I hope, Bro. Editor, that those whom God has endowed with those blessed talents of writing will not forget that we love to hear of the Lord's work on this side of the line, as on the other, that the papers of the church may have a large circulation in the Canadian field.

While so writing, would say, I am laboring as a missionary for God and the church upon the Manitoulin Islands, and the Algoma. The field is a very large one, and where there is but one missionary to attend to its spiritual work, outside of a very few local priesthood, it is hard work. The calls are many, and as a result of this much writing is required on the part of one in charge, because he can not be there in person.

While upon the Manitoulin Island, letters came to me from the Saints of Steelton, Ontario, informing me that they were building a church. Their funds were low, and most of the work done was by the brethren and sisters and friends in their spare time. And the cry came, "Come over and help us." So, on the 7th of November, 1908, I reached Sault Ste Marie, and Steelton joins the same, where the church stands. I found the building at a standstill, for the want of help, so a fresh start was made; and, while my missionary labors were not neglected, holding five to six meetings each week, visiting and writing and other duties required, yet thirty-five days of hard labor was placed upon the building by the writer, in order to get an opening for the first Lord's day of the year, January 3, 1909. Am pleased to report this was done. Much could be said regarding the building, but do not want to take too much space.

We are holding special meetings, and trust good may come from the same, so that when the missionary goes to other places, he may leave with the hope that good has been done, in aiding to build up the church and kingdom of God. There is a branch here of about thirty-five members. They have bought and paid for their lot. The building, when completed, will be worth about two thousand dollars. There is about six hundred dollars debt upon it. They have an elder, teacher, two deacons, Sunday-school, and Religio; all growing.

One of our new members, J. Thompson, has been made superintendent of the Sunday-school; and a Bro. C. Dempster, president of the Religio local. We have some interested, and some asked for baptism, so we live in hopes of seeing much good come from the pure effort put forth from time to time and from place to place. And while there are the dark experiences (for Satan tries hard to pull down), yet He who is for us is more than those against us. So our motto is: Upward and Onward.

R. B. HOWLETT.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

The beginning of the new year finds me still in the land of living, and as I look over the past year, I can see many ways in which the Lord has been kind to me—unworthy me. One of the many blessings I have enjoyed very much is the reading of our reliable SAINTS' HERALD. I wish you a happy New-year, in all your endeavors in common with all the Saints who are laboring for the advancement of righteousness and the consummation of God's purposes here on earth. We elected the following as our branch officers yesterday: John Hall, president; James Conyers, priest; Heman Walline, teacher; Eric Walline, deacon; C. A. Layton, clerk; Sr. Newton, organist; Sr. Dykes, chorister; Sr. Layton, librarian. We are trying to hold up the work here under very trying conditions; but our trust is that the Lord will finally crown our efforts with success.

Your brother in bonds,

January 4, 1909.

DELEGATE CREDENTIALS TO GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Delegate credentials blanks, provided for by action of General Conference, will soon be sent to presidents or secretaries of the various districts, also to officers of branches not in districts. Said officers are requested to forward credentials of delegates appointed to represent their districts or branches at the General Conference of 1909, to the Church Secretary, as soon as possible, that a complete roll of delegates may be prepared, as provided for by resolution of General Conference, to facilitate prompt organization and work of that body. Credentials of delegates appointed at fall or winter conferences should be forwarded without delay, and those yet to be appointed, immediately after appointment. It is desired that all credentials be in hand as early in the month of March as possible.

One certificate for each delegation, with number of members in district or branch, and names of its delegates, signed by the president and secretary of district or branch appointing, with name of district or branch and place and date of conference or business-meeting, is sufficient. Separate, individual credentials to delegates are not necessary. Please insert "total membership" in all cases; also report if delegates are authorized to cast majority and minority vote.

Any failing to receive blanks will be supplied on application to the undersigned.

The rules governing "representation" and the "restrictions of delegate voting" provide as follows:

"Each district shall be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of said district, and one vote in conference for each delegate to which they may be entitled. Scattered members in districts, including those enrolled on records of disorganized branches, who are not recorded as members of other districts, may be included in the enumeration of membership.

"The delegates present at conference from any one district shall be entitled to cast the full vote of the district of which they are delegates, unless otherwise instructed by their district conference:

"Provided, that in case of a disagreement of views among the members of said delegation (the full delegation not being present), they shall be entitled to cast only their individual votes as said delegates.

"No one delegate shall be entitled to cast, as representative in the same conference, more than twenty votes.

"Each regularly organized branch of the church not included in an organized district, shall be entitled to one delegate, who shall have the same privileges as delegates of districts. But when the membership of such branch exceeds twenty-five it shall be entitled to one delegate for each twenty-five members."

For further information concerning representation, choice, and instruction of delegates, etc., see Book of Rules, chapter 17.

Street or Home.

The best-trained children are in some ways like all other young creatures. They want fun, and will try to get it. Establish that truth in your mind. It is as natural for them to seek an outlet for their overflowing and superabundant animal spirits as it is for the kitten to chase your spool and the puppy to chew everything that comes within reach. As nature abhors a vacuum, so does the healthy, normal child abhor enforced idleness. He will study hard, work hard, and play hard. It is the duty of parents to furnish opportunity for this legitimate instinct.

Is any other work in all the world as important as this God-given occupation of keeping in touch with your children? All too soon they will be men and women, and then you will have time to cultivate other things in which you are interested. Until then, make their interests yours. Do you not see that in doing this you make it impossible for the children to leave you behind, to feel that you are a "back number"? You will broaden and grow as they grow, and you will never lose them.

Meanwhile, keep home bright for them. Lay aside the latest novel you had planned to read to-night, and play the games the children love. If you must mend or darn in the evenings, do this work in the parlor where you can listen to the children's talk, and where you can join in the songs the schoolboys thump out at the piano. Your parlor may look like a "living-room" rather than a "drawing-room," the rugs will not always lie smooth and books and papers will be scattered about, the house may not be as neat as is that of your childless neighbor, but it will be more than a mere house, for it will be the Home where the Heart is.—Virginia Terhune Van de Water in the January Circle Magazine.

Prizes for Good Menus.

The patient housewife who is trying to cater to the needs of her family on a moderate income, has to solve daily the same old problem, "What shall I cook for breakfast, for luncheon, for dinner?" The very monotony of the question gets on one's nerves, and there is a lot of real difficulty in planning a wholesome variety for each day. The Chicago Record-Herald has mercifully come to the aid of puzzled housewives by printing in each issue a set of three menus, with recipes, under the title, "Meals for a day." What is more, it gives four cash prizes every week for the best of these menus, and women all over the country are invited to compete. The terms of award and the names of the latest winners may be found in any Monday issue of the Record-Herald. That is the day, too, when the "Martha's management" column appears, with its helpful hints and advice to cooks and housekeepers. Marion Harland's Sunday page also gives a group of selected recipes, which if cut out each week and kept in a scrap-book will make a most valuable collection. Women not familiar with the prize menu feature of the Record-Herald should investigate it at once. Many have found it a handy means of getting fresh ideas and securing cash for those they already have.

Among the many publications reaching our desk, there is none more appreciated than the Outlook. For a busy man or for one who dislikes the task of doing a great amount of reading in order to keep track of leading events of the day as well as the leading thought of the times, there is not a better magazine than the Outlook. National affairs are boiled down, classified, and put up in right-sized doses for the accurate and busy reader. Doctor Lyman Abbott has surely built up a great paper. It is weekly and therefore reaches the reader while the news is yet fresh and timely. Among the fifty-two issues are twelve illustrated magazine numbers, which make it specially desirable to subscribe for this publication. Subscription price is three dollars per year.

California via Colorado

Ever tried it in Winter?

Every one gives first place to the California via Colorado Route for magnificent scenery but many people think thnt in winter they must avoid this route or be snowbound. A great mistake, for in Colorado there is more sunshine than in Florida and less snow than in any state east of the Missouri River—there is less delay from snow blockades on this route than on the other and less attractive ones. Through Pullman Standard and Tourist Sleepers daily from principal Burlington Route Stations to California via Denver and Salt Lake. Parties under personal escort through to destination several times each week. Please see me for particulars.

A WARNING—"A WORD TO THE WISE."

It will be remembered by those who were present at the conference of April, of 1907, a rather sharp rebuke was offered to the Presidency for not warning the church against what were supposed to be evils existent and that were to come. It may not be amiss at the present juncture to offer a pleasant word of warning against what may be foreseen as a possible result of a too wide range of discussion upon material conditions.

The Saints sing with considerable gusto, animation, and force a song in which the line occurs "be one, saith the Lord, or ye are not mine." From present indications, judging things from human viewpoint, there is not apparent any individual ground on which there can be unity, or a union in its broadest sense, so far as material things are concerned. By what we have seen we are strongly reminded of an incident which it is said occurred in some one of the New England States, where dignity of demeanor was stirred and where conscience ruled with a strong hand. The story is of two excellent deacons between whom had existed a long-time strong union of friendship; but at last a question arose upon which there was a striking and irreconcilable difference of opinion, and they became not only estranged from each other, but each was impressed that the other was a wretched and ungodly man. At length a revival occurred, and through the eloquence of one of the preachers, the latent goodness of these two men was awakened by reflections after they had gone home from the service and retired to bed. Unable to sleep, each conceived that he had been unnecessarily austere and selfish in his treatment of his brother; and so through an awakened conscience and the revival of the oldtime friendship, each rose from his bed, put on his clothes, and, late as it was, set out for the home of the other. Pursuing the common route between the two houses they met in the moonlight and appeared to be very glad to see each other. They referred to their difference until it appeared each thought he had been unjust to the other, that it was a sorrowful and pitiful sight for them, pillars in the church and deacons upon whom the garments of office rested with so much dignity, to be at such variance as had characterized their late intercourse. It seemed that

Any man will lead a disappointing life and himself be barren, narrow and unsuccessful in gaining the best that life has to give, unless he has enthusiasm for some great principle, purpose or idea, that rises above self, that teaches, lifts up and nourishes the world.

the apple of discord was about to be thrown away, when one of them said, "Yes, James, it is too bad that you and I should have fallen into such conditions of mind as to have forgotten our friendship, our long life together, and to treat each other as we have done. We ought to know better and to do better; we have treated each other shamefully and we ought to be reconciled,—but, James, you will have to give in, for I can not."

In the United States form of government it is understood that the voice of the people is the final determination of any national or political question. The will of the people is expressed by chosen representatives, from the arbitrament of the courts of referees all the way to the Supreme Court in the judicial department, and from the town meeting to the state legislatures and Congress through the legislative channels. In the church form of government there is something of a similar disposition of affairs, from the elders' court through the different channels to the highest tribunal to which appeal may be made. The highest in this respect is supposed to be the General Assembly where the final voice of the people through the constituted representative authorities is heard.

It is said in the teachings of the Book of Mormon that the majority, or the rule of the majority, should prevail. And to strengthen this idea, it is stated in connection therewith, that it is seldom that the majority desire that which is wrong. This is equivalent to saying that in any great crisis that may arise, or in the disposition of any question of material importance, the people as a rule will be led to determine such issues correctly. We believe this and are prepared for its application.

It may be said that the church is a theocracy, and that in such a government the law of the Lord is paramount and the word of the Lord the decisive declaration. We believe this also. The difficulty seems to be that there is not a universal and accepted agreement as to what the word of the Lord is, or what is the law of the Lord upon certain given topics; and it is urged that upon these there must be absolutely a union. If under the force of this statement, there absolutely must be unity upon these questions, the serious question remains, How shall that unity be reached? It may be said that it can be reached only by a general comparison of the different views of those who consider the questions at issue, and who choose to talk or write in reference to them. If it be allowed that this is really the only way in which final unity may be reached, then the necessity for the warning which we give.

Whoever speaks or writes upon the topics under consideration or the questions which are in dispute, must not speak or write in such a spirit of positiveness and self-assurance of knowledge and self-assumption of conscience as is suggested in the speech of the deacon referred to in the story, who said, "James, you will have to give in; for I can not."

The member of a body, like the church, who ventures to write upon any topic, spiritual or material, in such a way as to assert, or carry the inference that if any other solution of the difficulty is reached, or any other disposition of the subject at issue is adopted by the church, he can not and will not agree thereto, nor be bound by its action, assumes a position fraught with danger both to himself and the cause which he represents as a member of the body.

More especially is such position dangerous where the declaration is accompanied by the statement that it does not matter who they are who differ from the views expressed or what may be their standing in the church.

The constant dread which seems to possess the minds of some of the teachers and writers in the Reorganized Church that there is, or is to be, an assumption of one man power, seems to darken the horizon of their vision and cause them to see things in the light of such contingency; and this, too, where there is no justifiable reason for such apprehension.

We have great and genuine admiration for the man in any body, religious, political, or national, who throws himself into the breach in case of emergency and is willing to stand or fall by the issue which he raises; but we have neither admiration nor respect for the man who raises a false issue, and under its cover attacks his fellow men for either their opinion or their acts, in a spirit of apparent bravado where no just grounds of attack exist, only in the fear that there may be a possibility of such wrong teaching or doing as he in his zeal attacks.

We warn the writers and speakers on these great topics of interest to be careful in their speaking and their writing that they do not fall into this error, as, should they do so, it will rouse antagonism which will call forth counter discussion based upon their suppositious attack.

We have been charged that in dealing with the material subjects of the church revelations are to be taken as a whole, each in its proper relation with each and every other, and that pending certain conditions the teaching and rendition of the Bishopric in the administration of the financial affairs of the church obtain, or words to this effect. If we as individuals holding membership with every other, assume to say that unless the Bishopric will administer in the affairs of their office according to our understanding of the law, we will neither accept his rendition nor abide its teaching, we are virtually assuming the position that the individual did when he said, "James, you will have to give in, for I can not." It is also to assume that the will of the majority should not obtain, if the church should indorse the work in accordance with such rendition.

Our warning is this: Be careful that in our speaking and in our writing we do not assume the position approaching the exercise of the one man power against which we are so strongly opposed as individuals; for the exercise of this assumption in one individual is just as reprehensible as on the part of any other, no matter who the other may be, whether in the laity, in the lesser official ranks, or in the higher, and we believe it to be quite as possible for individuals in the rank, however humble the position which they may occupy, to be wrong in this sense, as it is for any officer of the highest rank.

We should not allow the fear of a possible assumption of paramount authority upon the part of some one in authority to drive us into the self-assumption of such right to direct and dictate. More especially should we not allow this to be done, when we remember that the final arbitrament, so far as our administration of affairs intrusted to us upon the earth is concerned, is the will of the people expressed by their united voice through constituted representatives as a whole; and that beyond that is the divine arbitrament at the judgment-day, where we all must answer, high or low, rich or poor, prince or peasant, officer or lay member; and that before that tribunal worth only and integrity of purpose in the spheres severally occupied, and not official position or power, will be taken into the personal account.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

A writer for the HERALD sends us the following queries:

1. Can a man receive a remission or pardon of his sins without water baptism under any circumstances or conditions?
2. Can a man receive a remission of his sins and not be born of the Spirit?

The writer attaches considerable importance to these questions. We suppose the chief importance lies in the possible answers that may be given to the questions. As the answers can at best be nothing more than the opinion of the Editor, based upon a possible rendition of certain passages in scripture, we can not attach the same importance to the questions or their answers as it would appear the questioner does.

We think it possible that a man may receive a pardon or forgiveness of his sins without water baptism, or possibly not be born of the Spirit, as we are in the habit of using that term.

Upon one occasion the Savior in healing a man of his infirmity said unto him, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." And when chidden by some standing by in reference to the language which he used, he stated in reproof of their chiding, that it was done that they might know that the Son of Man had power to forgive sins.

We believe that the Lord has the right and the power to forgive or pardon whomsoever he may choose to make the recipients of his mercy and loving-kindness. He said to the thief on the cross, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." We do not question the right and the power of the Lord to do whatever may be his will, or to extend his clemency to whomsoever he may choose, or whom he may think worthy; especially, when such exercise of clemency presents and affirms a principle or an epoch, or emphasizes any important feature. He said to the woman taken in adultery, "Neither do I accuse thee, go thy way and sin no more." He said to Lazarus, "Come forth." He said to the maiden, "Arise." He disposed of the scruples of Peter by showing him a vision, and told him not to call anything which the Lord had cleansed common or unclean. He told the Assyrian leper to dip himself in the waters of Jordan. He broke the bread and divided the fishes. All of these things were in apparent contravention of existing principles governing the things known to man. What right have we to claim that he can not, if his wisdom so dictates, do what his divine mercy may require?

We do not wish our readers to understand by what we have written above that there must be any abatement in the strictness of the enforcement of the law of righteousness which is of faith. The rule for the remission of sins is clear, and water baptism is requisite. The rule concerning being born again is also clear, and no man can enter the kingdom except he be born of the Spirit. This is the rule for the gospel administration, and men have no authority to set it at naught. It is the rule of law enacted by the Deity for the administration of his servants upon the earth, through and by which he extends amnesty and remission of sins upon men upon the earth. We are safe in claiming this and it is unwise for men to expect an intervention in their behalf by which they may receive what has been offered to them through obedience to the law that has been laid down. This is revealed, and we have a right to insist upon its observance, and leave any divergence therefrom to be done by the direct act of the Lord himself in the exercise of his power and wisdom. What he may do we have not authority to say.

PRIESTS AS BRANCH PRESIDENTS.

A teacher should not be chosen to preside over a branch if there is either an elder or priest available. And should there be a high priest available it would be more in harmony with the law if he were chosen to preside over the branch.

An elder should not assume to act in the office of the teacher in a branch if there is already one or more teachers in the branch qualified and willing to act. Neither should a priest assume the office of president in the branch if there is an elder already chosen and acting as such, or if there is an elder in the branch who is available and qualified.

No one should assume to act as either teacher, priest, or elder in a branch who has not previously been called, set apart, and ordained to such office in order that he might act in accordance with law.

MISCELLANEOUS.

We are asked the following questions: Are not the Spirit of God and the Holy Ghost the same? Are not the Spirit of Christ and the Spirit of God the same? Is not that spirit that lighteneth every one that cometh into the world the Spirit of God? "What blood is meant in 1 John 5: 8?"

For the answer to these questions regarding the Spirit we suggest the reading of the twenty-sixth verses of the fourteenth and fifteenth chapters of the gospel of Saint John, or the testimony of Saint John as found in the Inspired Translation: "But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." "But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me." We do not know how to separate the Spirit of Christ from the Spirit of God.

With reference to the light that "lighteth every man that cometh into the world," we suggest the reading of the first chapter of John's gospel from the sixth to the tenth verses inclusive. These read as follows: "There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came into the world for a witness, to bear witness of the light, to bear record of the gospel through the Son, unto all, that through him men might believe. He was not the light, but came to bear witness of that light, which was the true light, which lighteth every man who cometh into the world; even the Son of God. He who was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not." It seems to us that this is a sufficient answer to the question if we are willing to take the word as it is given to us.

We understand that the blood referred to is the blood of Jesus shed upon the cross.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Boston American of January 20 contains an account of the operations of certain "divine healers" a little out of the ordinary. The scene was laid in the Clarendon Street Baptist Church of Boston. The healers were Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Chamberlain, No. 27 Howe Street, Somerville, Massachusetts.

Five patients were present. The method of administration is thus described: "As he prayed he touched lightly the temples and foreheads of the supplicants with fingers which had been dipped in a cruet of oil." It is said of Mr. and Mrs. Chamberlain that they have preached in many parts of the United States, yet they are not ordained ministers of any denomination; they simply pose as evangelists.

Te Orometua, number one, volume one, published at Papeete, Tahiti, has reached our desk; but we have not read it very extensively, though Elder C. H. Lake writes us that we are welcome to any news that we may extract from it. Bro. Lake figures on the last page as "C. H. Lake, Impremeur, Rue des Remparts, Papeete, Tahiti." A friend gleaned from this that Bro. Lake is still "Emperor of the Remparts" in Tahiti, but we can not vouch for the translation. Te Orometua is printed one page at a time on a Pilot hand-press, chase six and one half by ten inches in size. Our readers may form an idea of its contents from the opening words: "Te Haamata Nei matou i te pororaa te vea no te Feia mo'a, ei Orometua no te mau taata i teienei paeau o te ao nei."

LAMONI ITEMS.

It will not be "news" to HERALD readers in this section of country for us to say that we have had a blizzard. It came sometime between Thursday and Friday (28th and 29th), and while the snow ceased to fall on Friday night, the wind continued and we had "bitter cold" weather. Beside the usual features of a northwest blizzard, the strong wind did considerable damage to trees, poles, and roofs. Trains have been delayed and on Monday we received the first eastern mail since Friday morning.

Elders John Smith and D. C. White were the speakers at the Brick Church.

The branch deacons last week, succeeded in raising by cash and subscription over nine hundred dollars for running expenses.

Members of the Auditing Committee are arriving, Bro. Charles Fry reaching Lamoni on Monday morning.

It is fine to be of serene mind and self controlled. But is far finer to have feverish, noble impulses to control, and to find serenity of mind in worthy achievements.

Our grand business in life is not to see what lies dimly at a distance, but to do what lies clearly at hand.—Thomas Carlyle.

Between two evils is the half-way house of virtue; wise is he who points out its exact location.—George Pritchard.

Elders' Note-Book

WHICH ONE WAS HEARD?

Society, in two extremes, went forth one time to pray;
A Pharisee well-robed was one, and one a sinner gray.
The first, with head upraised, expressed acknowledgment to God,
That favors blessed him more than those who daily round him trod;
That righteousness, a garment choice, enfolded all his frame;
"That I am not as other men, I thank Jehovah's name."

The sinner though, with eyes downcast, was bowed before the throne,
Bereft of hope and full of pain for duties left undone.
His cry was one of self-reproach—no adulation there—
Of heaven's bounties, when bestowed, he did not claim a share;
But "God be merciful to me, a sinner," was his word.
Now let the reader of the tale decide WHICH ONE WAS HEARD.

JOHN T. CURRY.

SERMON MAKING.

"No man can speak well, the substance of whose sermons has not been prepared beforehand. Men talk of 'extemporaneous preaching,' but the only part that can properly be extemporaneous is the external form. Sometimes, indeed, one may be called to preach off-hand, ex tempore, and may do it with great success; but all such sermons will really be the results of previous study. The matter must be the outgrowth of research, of experience, and of thought. Most preachers have intuitional moments, are, so to speak, at times inspired; but such moments are not usual, and no true inspiration is based upon ignorance.

"No man can preach well, except out of an abundance of well wrought material. Some sermons seem to start up suddenly, soul and body, but in fact they are the product of years of experience. Sermons may flash upon men who are called in great emergencies to utter testimony, and the word may grow in their hand, and, their hearts kindling, their imagination taking fire, the product may be something that shall create wonder and amazement among all that hear. It is only the form, like the occasion, that is extemporaneous. 'No man preaches except out of the stores that have been gathered in him.'"—Beecher's Yale Lectures.

THREE EXTRACTS FROM THE CHURCH PRESS.

A man in a bucket was being drawn slowly from the bottom of a deep well, when the man at the windlass suddenly stopped and was slow about starting. "Haul me up!" shouted the angry man in the bucket, "or I'll cut the rope!" This story is brought to mind when we hear members of the Religio say they will drop out or will not serve on a committee because of the actions of some officer or member, or because he does not agree exactly with the ideas expressed by the other members. Both expressions are equally sensible; better keep in the bucket and pray over the matter, but don't cut the rope.—Religio Paragraph, Independence, Missouri.

The man who was right down in the dumps, Bro. B. Hind-Times, was sitting down reflecting upon the slow progress of the branch of the church he was associated with, when Bro. Hustler came upon him and told him of the great work he had been doing through the week. "Great work," said the missionary who had called, and Bro. B. Hind-Times grudgingly echoed "great work" too. Later, he buttonholed Bro. Hustler, saying, "How do you get so many people interested in the gospel while I can't seem to get any at all?" "Well," said Bro. Hustler, in an impressive whisper, "I make it a point to wear out the soles of my shoes instead of the seat of my trousers. That's one of the fine distinctions that some people overlook."—Gospel Standard, Australia.

Dear Mirror: I have attended London Church for the past twenty years and more, and can highly recommend the center pews. They are the best in the church, especially the front four. I use them continually, and testify that if you want to get all the sermon and get it right, you should occupy the front center seats.—Sr. Knowing, in London, Ontario, Religio Mirror.

Each bud blossoms but once, and each flower has but its minute of perfect beauty. So, in the garden of the soul, each feeling has, as it were, its flowering moment, its one and only second of expansive grace and royal radiance. Each star passes but once in the night through the meridian over our heads and glitters there but for an instant. So in the heaven of the mind each thought touches its zenith but once, and in that moment all its brilliancy and all its sovereign greatness culminate.—Henri Frederic Amiel.

Somebody printed three little words on pieces of cardboard and distributed them all over the country, teaching the business world a new philosophy—"Do it now." Might have been the words of an office boy, if their simplicity is a judge, but I have seen the sign out at the desks of railroad presidents, bankers, and merchant princes.

Nothing outside of ourselves can entitle us to think we have been successful in life. Life does not consist in having an abundance of the material things. That a man has gathered two or three million dollars does not entitle that man to say he has succeeded in life. It is not what you have; it is what you are.

HISTORY OF THE HYMN "ANGEL MESSAGE."

JAMES L. EDWARDS.

*"I wandered long in darkness, yet sought the narrow way,
And my life was like the surging of the sea;
But now I am rejoicing in this the latter day,
Since the precious angel message came to me."*

It is with some degree of diffidence I write you in regard to a hymn in Zion's Praises called, "The angel message." But having heard from so many, telling of the comfort and blessing received by hearing it, and the Spirit that appears to accompany its singing, and that its use is becoming more general, I thought it might be interesting to my brothers and sisters to know the little history there is attached to it; and likewise in this public manner, to thank my dear heavenly Father for whatever of inspiration I may have received in writing it.

One morning, some years before writing the song, my wife, upon arising from bed, asked me the meaning of the word Eureka.

I replied, "Why do you want to know?"

She said, "Never mind; tell me the meaning of the word."

I answered, "It is a Greek word, and means 'I have found.'"

She then related a dream she had a few hours previously. I will give it in her own words:

"I was in a very large room where there were many Saints sitting on chairs arranged as they would be in a Sunday-school, that is, the scholars on the two center rows of chairs were facing each other, and you were on a chair back of mine. During a pause in the proceedings, you arose, leaned over my shoulder, called me by name, and putting an open hymn-book into my hand, said, "Sing Eureka." I turned to look at you. Your face was beaming with happiness, and I perceived you had the Spirit in great measure."

This is the gist of the dream. My wife recognized many of the Saints present, one of whom remarked to her how happy I appeared to be.

I wrote the dream, as I do nearly all things of a spiritual character, and for a long time I would search through every hymn-book that came within my reach to find a hymn called "Eureka," but failed to find it.

Long after my wife's dream had been forgotten, I wrote the hymn as now found in Zion's Praises (No. 206), with the addition of one stanza which has been left out, which was as follows:

*"My former teachers told me if I only would believe,
That pardoned all my sins would surely be;
But I found they were mistaken, no more can they deceive,
Since the precious Angel Message came to me."*

Before I sent the poetry to the HERALD I noticed that the first three words of the piece were, "I have found," or Eureka. Then the dream came to my mind, but I could not understand it, as I was only sending it to the HERALD as a simple piece of poetry, with no thought of it ever getting into a hymn-book.

In sending an offering to Graceland College through Bishop E. L. Kelley, I inclosed the piece of poetry, asking him to please hand it to the editor, and in acknowledging my letter he said in effect, "I have done as requested, but you never know what these editors will do, what they will publish, or what they will consign to the waste-basket."

In a note sent to the editor with the poetry I had given the piece the name "Eureka," but adding, "You have the privilege to give it any other name you may think more appropriate," not mentioning anything of the circumstances of my wife's dream.

In a short time it was printed in the HERALD under the heading of "Original Poetry," with the title, "The angel message."

I thought little more of it until in a time of peculiar and severe trial some two or three years later, when everything seemed to be covered as with a dark pall, a letter came from a dear brother, named Charles L. Sessions, which I will take the liberty to write extracts from.

"KALKASKA, March 9, 1903.

"MR. JAMES L. EDWARDS,

"Dear Brother: I have thought to write to you for a long time, but did not have your address until lately, when I wrote to the Herald Office for it.

"I became acquainted with your name by your writing 'The angel message.' I put a chorus to it and had it printed twice and it has 'thrilled the multitude' and will yet make the whole world ring. It is grand. Most of the Saints in this part of the vineyard have become familiar with it, and I have rejoiced in spirit many times on account of having it printed and put before the people of our conferences. So I trust you will forgive me for making use of it without first consulting you.

"I have just received two thousand copies of it, with four others from the Glad Tidings office. So if you receive this letter all right I will send you some of the songs.

"I will wait to hear from you before I send the songs, so as to be sure you will get them.

"From your brother in the gospel, (Signed) "CHAS. L. SESSIONS.

"To my heart there comes like an angel song,
A glorious glad refrain,
If you heed it not, like a sweet, lost chord,
We can never hear it again.

"That song might have thrilled the multitude,
Might have made the whole world ring,
But the moment is passed and we weep sad tears,
For the song we did not sing."

"But, brother, we will not weep sad tears because we did not sing this one. "C. L. S."

The letter from the brother was like the oasis in the desert. It cheered, strengthened, and comforted us, and we realized that the Lord was watching over us and had sent us a blessing to tide us over a season of gloom and depression, and if this should ever meet the eye of the brother (whom I have not heard from in some years), I wish to thank him again from the depths of my soul for the great joy brought to us by his thoughtful, loving, Christian act.

I answered the brother's letter and he sent us several hundred copies of the songs. Some time later when I read that the church was about to enlarge the Hymnal, I sent the poetry to Bro. H. R. Mills, together with several choruses, asking him to bring it before the Hymnal committee. He kindly arranged a chorus and made music for it, discarding the music I had written it to be sung to, viz: "I have found a friend in Jesus," for which I thank him in the name of all Saints through all coming time who may be comforted by the elevating and touching music of "Eureka."

My song was too late for the Hymnal and was given a place in the school song-book, Zion's Praises, as was indicated in Sr. Edwards' dream, by the arrangement of the seats as for a class in Sunday-school.

I have found the glorious gospel that was taught in former years,

With its gifts and blessings all so full and free;
And my soul is thrilled with gladness, and banished are my fears,

Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Chorus:

Then praise the Lord, oh, my soul!

Abundant mercy, oh, how free!

In joyful song Thy Spirit doth accord,

Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

I wandered long in darkness, yet sought the narrow way,
And my life was like the surging of the sea;

But now I am rejoicing in this the latter day,

Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Chorus.

My once blind eyes are open, my sins are washed away,
And the kingdom I can very plainly see;

No more do fears and doubtings my trusting soul dismay,

Since the precious Angel Message came to me.

Chorus.

Now for celestial glory, in the presence of the Lord,
I will work and watch and humbly bow the knee;

No longer faith, but knowledge, in true and sweet accord,

With the precious Angel Message bro't to me.

Chorus.

THE NEPHITE TWELVE.

It is quite evident that we are not all equally inspired, nor do we all see alike; so at times some of us form conclusions and assume positions that can only be supported by argument; but, individually, I must have proof as well. I have always believed that there were apostles in the church on this continent, consequently have read the negative side of the question with some interest; and, at the risk of being accused of not being "candid," will say that I am not converted to the other theory.

The idea of the Nephite church being a stake of the church at Jerusalem, is, to my mind, mere assumption, without a word of revelation to support it. Now, let us see what proof there is in favor of apostles: "And I also saw and bear record that the Holy Ghost fell upon twelve others, and they were ordained of God, and chosen."—1 Nephi 3:25. What for? Verse 26: "To minister unto thy seed."

There is a difference in the mission of a stake council and the traveling council, which I wish to show, and also to show that the Nephite twelve and the twelve at Jerusalem were commissioned the same. Let us see how this vision harmonizes with history: "Therefore go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken, unto the ends of the earth."—3 Nephi 5:9. This sounds a little like Matthew: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations."

"And it came to pass that thus they did go forth among all the people of Nephi, and did preach the gospel of Christ unto all people upon the face of the land."—3 Nephi 13: 4. Rather a large mission for a stake council.

"Behold, are not the things that God hath wrought marvelous in our eyes?"—Mormon 4: 7. Did they get their information through revelation, or from the record? And were the marvelous works here referred to done here, or at Jerusalem? "And there were many mighty miracles wrought by the hands of the apostles." The writer here is talking to image-worshippers, and further on he says, that Jesus Christ said unto his twelve disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature; and he that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not, shall be damned. And these signs shall follow them that believe," etc., exactly as Mark gives it. And yet, in the face of all this evidence, we read that their mission was not in all the world, but unto this people. So much for the Book of Mormon. How about the other records? I do not understand that the apostles are the foundation of the church. "Ye are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets," not the foundation of apostles and prophets. Can you see any difference? Ye are built on the same foundation as the apostles. The apostles are workmen on this building, not the foundation. "We are laborers together with God." "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

"Yea, even an hundred years had passed away, and the disciples of Jesus, whom he had chosen, had all gone to the paradise of God, save it were the three who should tarry, and there were other disciples ordained in their stead," (4 Nephi 1: 5,) showing a perpetuation of this discipleship.

"And he called them by name, saying, Ye shall call on the Father in my name, in mighty prayer; and after ye have done this, ye shall have power that on him whom ye shall lay your hands, ye shall give the Holy Ghost; and in my name shall ye give it, for thus do mine apostles."—Moroni 1: 2. This was spoken to the twelve disciples.

Now we have found that the twelve disciples of the Nephites were identical with the Jerusalem apostles in that they were perpetuated, and in their mission. I understand that stake organization is independent, or is limited to its territory, in its jurisdiction, just the same as a branch or district, and is independent just as long as it attends to its own affairs, and does it right, in harmony with the law, otherwise there are those whose duty it is to set it right. Listen: "It is the duty of the twelve [apostles], also, to ordain and set in order all the other officers of the church."—Revelation of 1894.

Also Doctrine and Covenants 120: 7: "In matters of personal importance and conduct arising in branches or districts, the authorities of those branches and districts should be authorized and permitted to settle them. . . . Where cases of difficulty are of long standing, the council may require local authorities to adjust them; and in case of failure to do so, may regulate them as required by their office and duty." Here we find that branches and districts are independent just so long as they are in harmony with the law, and no longer. So it is with stakes.

I notice in the appointment of missions, the stakes are included. If they were independent, would they not be excepted? I noticed in a recent business-meeting of the Independence Branch, Apostle W. H. Kelley presided; and I understand that the church recognizes the independence of a stake just as stated above.

I have found in investigating this subject, that the twelve disciples of the Nephites were to judge the people of this continent in their time, that their mission was the same as that of the Jerusalem apostles, that their quorum was to be perpetuated, that the foundation of the church is not apostles, and that a stake organization is not independent.

THE PLANET SATURN.

A MARVEL OF COMPLEXITY.

Well might Sir Robert Ball, the Astronomer Royal for Ireland, while gazing upon this mighty planet through the great Lord Rosse telescope, at Parsonstown, Ireland, describe it as one of the most beautiful, most elevating, and most inspiring scenes within the entire expanse of the solar system, and the most mysterious. With a body the diameter and circumference of which closely approximates the giant of the solar system, even mighty Jupiter himself, Saturn with his three rings, his "triple crown," as one might express it, of surpassing magnificence and grandeur, and his three times three moons, or satellites, constantly revolving around him in every conceivable aspect of changeful and ever changing revolution and motion, is it any wonder that the ablest, the noblest, and the most accomplished of earth's astronomers and mathematicians have said within themselves, like one of old, "I will turn aside and see this great sight"?

The extreme complexity and the mysterious intricacy of the entire Saturnian system indeed is a sight and a theme worthy of the cogitation of the whole lifetime, nay, a thousand of earth's brief, puny life-spans would utterly fail to afford space and time for a Herschel, a Newcomb, a Proctor, or a Pickering, eminent though he be, to explain or to exhaust the stupendous mystery of the rings, the outer one of which is no less than five hundred and fifty-five thousand miles in circumference, or to unfold by what supernally wonderful system of poise and counterpoise, balance and counterbalance these mighty rings are kept and restrained from falling bodily upon the planet itself, and thus involving dire ruin, destruction, and desolation upon the entire system; with what results, even to our own planet, who can tell?

Again, as that eminent and erudite astronomer and mathematician, Sir William Huggins, pointed out some few years ago, before the Royal Society of Great Britain and Ireland, at Queen's Hall, Langham Place, London, the satellite called Titan (the largest in the whole Saturnian system, and even larger than any of Jupiter's satellites) starts out at the commencement of every twentieth revolution exactly at the same moment as number 5 satellite, a very small object named "Japetus"; and though there is no apparent relation between the two bodies, and number 5 journeys away out more than two and one half millions of miles away from the body of Saturn, while Titan is much nearer, and never goes out further than twenty-nine thousand miles, yet, strange to say, at the end of every twentieth revolution (but at no other time) the two satellites come in together and start forth again (as before said) both at the same instant. This, as Sir S. Newcomb of the great observatory at Chicago has eloquently and truthfully pointed out, is a mathematical mystery that not even the most learned computators, after years of vain and strenuous effort, have ever succeeded in elucidating, or being able to ascertain by what laws of the higher mathematics it is done. Yet the great equatorial and refracting telescopes of every observatory in the civilized world have shown again and again that it is done!

Let me adduce just one more evidence or instance of the marvelously wonderful complexity of Saturn's system, and I lay down my pen. The eminent Professor J. Chant, of the Toronto Observatory, has pointed out in the Transactions of the Toronto Astronomical Society, volume 2, page 167, that a most remarkable and wonderful, yet wholly inexplicable law obtains with regard to three, at least, of Saturn's moons, or satellites. This law was discovered by a certain Mr. C. Brasheart, whose name I do not recollect to have met with before in my studies. It consists of the following strange facts, or sequence of facts: If the mean (or average), diurnal (or daily) motion of the second satellite of Saturn be multiplied by four, and the mean daily motion of the fourth satellite be multiplied by five, and the mean daily motion of the first satellite be added to this total, the result will exactly equal ten times the mean daily motion of the third satellite. I thus present the formula so that any of the mathematicians in the church, or among your numerous readers, can readily verify the facts for themselves; but as the learned editor of the Transactions most impressively remarks, there is no human mind that can explain why this should be the case, or by what supreme and recondite law of the higher mathematics this marvelous result is accomplished.

Thus, though there were no Rigel, no Irocion, no Capella, no mighty Sirius gleaming with the blazing majesty of two thousand suns, no dumb-bell nebulae, no spiral nebulae, no stupendous nebulae in Orion, there is still enough and more than enough of grandeur and glory and of vast complexity in this one mysterious planet, Saturn, to cause our heads to bow and our hearts to beat with throbs of reverent and adoring wonder while we sing with the enraptured and inspired poets,

"His wisdom's vast, and knows no bound,
A deep where all our thoughts are drowned."

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

BIOGRAPHY OF ELDER SAMUEL M'BERNIE.

ELDER SAMUEL M'BERNIE.

Samuel McBernie was born in County of Armagh, Ireland, April 5, 1834. He was one of a family of five boys and two girls, children of David McBernie, who was also born in Ireland. In 1839 David McBernie moved with his family from Ireland to Fifeshire, Scotland, eight miles from Glasgow. The McBernie family were of the Presbyterian faith.

In the mining district of Scotland our subject grew from childhood to manhood. At the age of eight years he went to work in the mines, and thus laboring to assist in caring for himself and his father's family, he was deprived of the privileges of school and of many other necessities of life. In fact his only schooling consisted of an attendance at a night school about six weeks at one time. His father being a member of the church, the children were regular in attendance at the Sunday-school, the work in the Sunday-school being largely memorizing scripture verses.

Here in the Scotch land, so noted in history, so memorable in many ways, Samuel McBernie grew to manhood. On June 30, 1854, he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Miller, and the union made on that day has been long and happy. Miss Miller was a daughter of John Miller, who resided near Edinburgh, Scotland, and who, with his wife, were loyal members of the Presbyterian Church.

At the time of their marriage Mr. and Mrs. McBernie settled at Fifeshire. Here they began life together. Those who know the land of Scotland can best understand the country and cities of those days, and can, in the mind's eye, see Fifeshire, with the twenty-six houses in one row.

It was soon after their marriage that they first became acquainted with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Members of the church were living in Fifeshire, and missionaries of the church made frequent visits there. This was in 1856. The doctrine of the church as preached at that time in Scotland was that which was fair and reasonable to our then future brother and sister in Christ. Accepting the principles of the everlasting gospel, as they understood it, they were baptized by one Elder Cushna. The branch of the church at Fifeshire consisted of about ninety members, and regular meetings were held in a hall in the town. All lived up to the teachings of the church and the rules and regulations thereof. The branch teacher made his weekly visits to collect tithing.

After they had been in the church about two years, one John Brown, who had been a member of the church in Scotland about fifteen years, left his native land and came to Utah, the land of Zion, as he thought. Mark the date—1856, about ten years after the first settlement in Utah, and four years after polygamy had been publicly proclaimed a doctrine of the church. Mr. Brown had not embraced a gospel that would admit such a doctrine as polygamy to be one of the foundation principles, and he could not accept the church as he found it upon his arrival in Utah. Dissatisfied from the first, he soon returned to Scotland and there told the Saints at Fifeshire what condition the church was in in so-called Zion.

Samuel and Margaret McBernie could not continue their fellowship with a church teaching and practicing polygamy and from the time they learned the true condition of the church located at Salt Lake City they disclaimed membership in it. During the first ten years of their married life five children were born to them, four of them dying in early life, and when they came to America in 1865 they had but one son. During this year Brn. McBernie, John Clark, and James Clark, now of Boone, Iowa, came to America, landing in Nova Scotia. The trip across the water in a sailing vessel occupied fifty-one days. Sr. McBernie followed her husband about a year later. From Nova Scotia he came to New York City, the vessel on which he was sailing being dangerously wrecked along the shores of Long Island just before it reached New York. Leaving New York he worked for a short time at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and then located at Pittsburg. Here he engaged in mining.

While living at Saw Mill Run, near Pittsburg, Bro. McBernie was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Robert Wiper, a priest of the church living at that place. Sometime after this Sr. McBernie was received into the Reorganization on her original baptism in Scotland. When they had learned of the Reorganization, and how it was teaching the first principles of the gospel, the same as they had learned them in Scotland, refusing to acknowledge polygamy as a doctrine of the church, and after fully understanding the claims of Young Joseph, they were willing a second time to accept the gospel as they had accepted it in 1856.

At Pittsburg they found in the church many of the early men of the Reorganization in the east. Among them were Josiah Ells, W. H. Garrett, now known to Ensign readers as the editor, George and Edward Hulmes, and others. Soon after his baptism Bro. McBernie was ordained a priest.

Leaving Pittsburg, our subject with his wife and family lived for a few years in Ohio, and came to Boone County, Iowa, in 1875. Here he continued to engage in the mining business, and in this continued for about fifteen years.

Coming to Boonesboro, he with his wife identified themselves with the branch of the church located in Boone County, across the river from Boonesboro. In 1881 our brother was ordained an elder, a branch was organized and known as the Boonesboro Branch, and the organization out from the city dissolved and united with the new organization. Elder McBernie was now chosen president of the branch and the work of the Master continued to grow in Boone County. The church building, which is still the home of the branch in Boonesboro, was built and dedicated in 1882, President Joseph Smith being present at the dedication.

The foundation of the branch thus laid from 1880 to 1885, while Elder McBernie was its first president, had been builded upon until the organization has placed upon its records one hundred and thirty members.

After spending the greater part of his life and the years of his best manhood in bringing the rich treasures from the bowels of the earth, he gave up the mining business about 1884. Since that time he has engaged in other lines of business in Boone, Iowa, and for the past several years in the insurance business. In all the business affairs of life he has ever remembered the church in many ways. As president of the Boonesboro Branch for so many years, he felt the responsibility of the work intrusted to his care and he labored earnestly and faithfully for the advancement of the local church, occupying in every department of his office, preaching, presiding, and officiating among the members.

For fifty years he has been a believer in the restored gospel; for forty years he has been a member of the Reorganization; for twenty-five years he has labored as a local elder. During all these years of service in the Master's cause he has held to the "rod of iron" faithfully. His faith has been unshaken. He has witnessed the manifest power of God in several ways, especially in healing, both under his own hands and under the hands of others. His wife, who has ever been a helpmeet in gospel ties as well as in family ties, bears a strong testimony to the healing power of God.

On June 30, 1904, at their home in Boonesboro, Iowa, Bro. and Sr. McBernie happily reached fifty years of married life. Since in America six children have been born to them, only one of whom is living. Thus only two sons now living of a family of eleven children are with father and mother as they remain to spend the evening of wedded life together.

That home has ever been open to the needy. No one in distress has ever been turned away, and hospitality has been shown even beyond justice. The missionaries and the children of God have often been entertained there.

In their quiet home as they leave the fiftieth milestone of wedded life well in the distance, and he goes about the business affairs in the sunshine of seventy-two years, that home is one to be enjoyed, a true Latter Day Saint home. Here one finds a goodly number of the church books, and all of the church publications. The HERALD, the Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, and though he has long passed his childhood years and no children in the home, yet the Hope comes weekly to him and he reads it. And though he has ceased to be active in Sunday-school work and a student of the lessons, yet the Exponent greets him each month.

A. A. REAMS.

To succeed means a life of toil, of self-denial, but enthusiasm makes even these sweet, and then the reward comes from one's inner consciousness, which is the whisper of God.

Of General Interest

IT IS IN THE BLOOD.

The warden of the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Major McClaughry, has come to the conclusion that Indians are naturally gifted as stone-cutters. His experience with the Indians confined in that institution has led him to that conclusion. As farmers they are not a success. But as workers in stone they become artists.

The Major is reported to have said that some years ago an Indian said he would learn to cut stone. When he was allowed to try, he went ahead with wonderful rapidity. The experiment was so successful that others were allowed to try and almost without exception every one of them succeeded. They did equally well in stone-setting. Their work ranks right up with the white cutter or setter.

Major McClaughry recently said to a reporter:

"Look at the ornamental stone work in those brick walls. Practically every bit was done by Indians under an Indian foreman. That foreman came to us absolutely ignorant of stone-setting, yet in a year or two he had not only mastered the trade, but he was made foreman. It is unusual to have a convict foreman. He is generally a citizen. This same Indian foreman is now free and earning eight dollars a day in the capacity in which he was employed here. I have heard of other Indians who have gone out of here, having learned one of these trades, who are buckling right down to good, hard, honest work.

"It's refreshing to see the pride these Indians take in their work. We have no trouble in getting them to do their tasks. In our stone-cutting shop we employ on an average about thirty-five Indians. When the Jamestown Exposition was under construction the Government ordered us to turn out much of the stone work to be used in the Government building there."

Major McClaughry has come to the conclusion that all our Indians have come down from the Aztecs and that they have inherited the art of stone working. Once in a while, he says, a negro will develop into a stone-cutter. Almost in every case of this kind, however, he has found on inquiry that the negro has Indian blood in him. "It's in the blood." —Deseret Evening News, January 21, 1909.

THE FALSE "GIFT OF TONGUES."

One member of the band who went forth into foreign lands equipped only with the "gift of tongues" has returned to admit the gift was not of God. A year or more ago the movement so named was rife in this part of the country and several accounts of "manifestations" were presented in this paper. Now the Evangelical Messenger (Cleveland) gives the story of Mabel Collins, a pretty girl of eighteen years," who, having succeeded in returning home after wanderings in India and South America, "looks like a woman of fifty." The story in her own words is this:

"We were driven out of New York. We were members of the Holy Ghost sect and we had the gift of tongues and went out to teach the rest of the world the real Christ. We decided to sail to London. We escaped a great shipwreck, but they would not receive us there. Then six of us got the call to go to India. We went from London and reached Calcutta in July. Mr. McElroy, who led us, thought we could do great things in India.

"Besides me, there were three girls from New York and two from Philadelphia. We nearly starved in Calcutta and went to the north. We reached Benares a month later. There two of our girls disappeared. They were very pretty and there were some Indians we met who liked them very much. We were destitute, and the girls—well, they just vanished. We didn't complain to the authorities, because we knew pretty well where they had gone. They are now in harems and I can't blame them much. We did not have the real gift, and life was far more terrible than I can tell you.

"Again we went north to Lucknow. Another girl, Mabel Charles, of New York, was taken from us one night after we had camped for the night. There were some wild hill men who rode down and stopped at our camp. Next morning all were gone. There were only three of us left, Mr. McElroy and Lillie Thomas and I, and we went back to Calcutta. From there we sailed to Buenos Aires to join the others. We had even harder times in Argentina than in India. Then my parents succeeded in getting me home. Our gift of tongues was not from God. It was from some devil."—Literary Digest, January 9, 1909.

No Place Like Home.

I am sitting alone to-night, mother,
Watching the firelight's glow;
Thinking of the days of delight, mother,
At home in the long ago.
And in fancy I see you again, mother,
As you stood in the old cottage door,
Just as lovely as you were then, mother,
And you are queen once more.

Chorus:

Yes, you were our own royal queen, mother,
You ruled our hearts with love;
But the sea rolls between us now, mother,
We shall meet in the home above.

It was you who taught me to pray, mother,
To ask for the Father's care,
As we knelt at the end of the day, mother,
Close to your old armchair.

And you told that sad story to me, mother,
Which caused my tears to fall,
Of Jesus who died on the tree, mother,
A sacrifice for all.

Chorus.

They say you are no longer fair, mother,
Your steps are feeble and slow;
Your eyes are not bright as they were, mother,
And your hair is white as the snow.
And you mourn for your wayward child, mother,
Who from your arms did roam
To cross the great ocean so wide, mother,
But has found no place like home.

Chorus.

I long for the old home nest, mother,
And to kiss your faded cheek,
To sob out on your tender breast, mother,
The love my tongue can not speak.
Though our meeting may no more be, mother,
In this world of sin and care,
Through the gospel you taught to me, mother,
Celestial joys we may share.

Lowell's Thought of God.

'Tis Sorrow builds the shining ladder up,
Whose golden rounds are our calamities.
Whereon our firm feet planting, nearer God
The spirit climbs, and hath its eyes unsealed.
True is it that Death's face seems stern and cold
When he is sent to summon those we love;
But all God's angels come to us disguised;
Sorrow and Sickness, Poverty and Death,
One after other lift their frowning masks,
And we behold the seraph's face beneath,
All radiant with the glory and the calm
Of having looked upon the front of God.

—James Russell Lowell.

Convict Verse.

(Two prisoners in the penitentiary at Fort Madison, Iowa, have gotten out a book entitled Convict Verse. The volume is dedicated in the following lines.)

There be music-makers sitting in the sun,
Writing of their longings, of their love and fun;
But if night comes on them, and the heavens fall,
Could they utter music—would they write at all?
We, the music-makers who have written here,
Know of heavens fallen, and the hopeless tear;
Sit we in the darkness, singing of the light—
Singing as if sunshine glowed in halls of night.

Lots of Time.

Lots of time for lots of things,
Though it's said that time has wings,
There is always time to find Ways of being sweet and kind;
There is always time to share
Smiles and goodness everywhere;
Time to send the frowns away,
Time a gentle word to say,
Time for helpfulness, and time
To assist the weak to climb,
Time to give a little flower,
Time for friendship, any hour.
But there is no time to spare
For unkindness anywhere.

The Unchristian Christmas.

We bespeak from parents and teachers in our Sunday-schools a careful reading of the following article taken from the Outlook, January 9 issue. And if the article of Mr. Fowler does not show with sufficient plainness the present unchristian trend of the observance of Christmas, will not the clipping from the Kansas City Times and the comments of the Ensign editor upon it stir us to the realization of a greatly needed reform?

"THE UNCHRISTIAN CHRISTMAS.

"Does the present American observation of Christmas further the spirit of Christianity and of good will to men? I think not. While thousands of our people feel and practice the Christmas spirit, my observation and investigation appear to present good evidence that the American people would be better off without any Christmas at all than with Christmas as now observed. But I would not abolish Christmas; I would try to make it what it should be.

"Christmas represents the most important event in the history of Christianity, for on that day the greatest gift to man was made. Obviously, Christmas should be observed by man in commemoration of this event, and it is eminently appropriate that he should in his small way do what God did in his great way—that is, observe the heavenly gift by earthly gifts.

"Now, how does it work out in actual practice, ruling out the exceptions, barring out the thousands of people who have the real Christian spirit, and considering only the great majority? If we view it in the light of fact—majority fact—we may find that the real Christmas spirit exists only in the minority, and that the majority of Christmas celebrators, instead of realizing and appreciating the significance of the season, use it for playing a game of grab and graft, or raise it above grab and graft on to the not much higher plane of selfish trading. There can not be the spirit of Christmas or of Christianity in the giving of any gift, however small or large, where there is an expectation of an adequate return, and where intrinsic or moneyed value is considered. From my observation, ninety per cent of both adults and children consider the intrinsic value of the gift as much or more than the spirit which prompted the giving, assuming that such spirit exists in the majority of cases. The great majority of Christmas givers expect to receive as much as they give. In many cases the Christmas gift actually breeds selfishness instead of good will and gratitude. A little girl receives a dollar doll from one aunt and a fifty-cent doll from another aunt, the hundred per cent difference in cost representing the difference in the wealth of the two aunts. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the dollar doll and the giver will be better appreciated than the fifty-cent doll and the one who gave it. A proportion, if not a large proportion, of the Christmas morning action on the part of children and adults consists of criticism of the people who have made them presents; and much of this criticism is cruel and contemptible. More people are slurred on Christmas Day by those who receive their presents than on any other day in the year.

"The mystery of the Christmas present can not do otherwise than instill into the youthful mind the excitement of the lottery. I would not necessarily remove the surprise of giving; but when a child knows that he is to receive a present from a certain person, curiosity encourages the gambling instinct, which is common to most of us. To an extent, what he gets becomes a game of chance and lottery without blanks, but a lottery with disappointments.

"The poor are the greater Christmas buyers, and probably half of their Christmas presents represent extravagance and uselessness. Seventy-five per cent of the fancy articles—those which contribute little to anything worth having—are purchased by those who can not afford to buy them. Christmas, then, to these people—and there are hundreds of thousands of them—stimulates extravagance, and often criminal extravagance, because intrinsic value is considered as much or more than the good will accompanying the gift.

"The theorist, the optimist, who is too lazy to work, and who sleeps while the pessimist labors, may deny this, because it is easier to think well of people and things than to antagonize anybody. But it is, I believe, nevertheless, a fact that the good will back of the Christmas present, and the gratitude of the receiver, are much smaller than intrinsic values.

"The spirit of Christmas can not recognize the moneyed value of a good deed or of a gift of any kind.

"Further, Christmas buying overcrowds the stores. Hundreds of thousands of salesmen and saleswomen and mothers and sisters have been physically injured by the Christmas rush. For several weeks all of those connected with the retail side of the stores are overworked and do not recover their physical or mental balance for several weeks after Christmas Day. The amount of actual physical suffering caused by Christmas buying may be in itself a sufficient reason for the abolishment of the present Christmas action.

"But I would not do away with Christmas. I would try to make our distorted Christmas a real Christian Christmas, to carry out the spirit of gratitude to God and of good will to men. I would not do away with the Christmas gift, but I would try to teach both the adult and the child that swapping and trading are not giving and that the only gift that is a gift is that which comes from the heart of the giver who expects no material return.

"Think of the amount of good which would result if the total of the money expended each year for entirely useless gifts were used in real charity. Think of the immeasurable good which could not help resulting if every child were taught to spend its Christmas money, not in the form of trading or swapping, but in doing good, in genuine charity. I would not condemn Christian remembrances from relative to relative, from friend to friend, but these gifts, if they should be so called, should represent only good will and friendship, the money of Christmas to be expended, not for personal benefit, but for the doing of real good.

"Realize, if you can, the almost tornadic result for the good of the people if every child was taught to make Christmas a real Christmas, and to donate his Christmas money, and to devote his Christmas time, to the doing of good, instead of making Christmas a selfish affair for the giving and receiving of intrinsic values more or less accompanied with a good will and an affection which may not be much better than selfishness.

"Christmas should be conducted along Christmas lines or else it should change its name.

"CHRISTMAS TREES FOR DOGS.

"CINCINNATI, December 20.—Cincinnati's pampered cats and dogs, those that take the place of children in some of the fashionable homes, will have Christmas trees and all the trimmings this year. The society matrons will act as Santa Claus for their pets. Mrs. George M. Extine is the leader in the movement. She already has publicly announced that she will trim up a Christmas tree for her pet poodles. The tree will be loaded with choice morsels to tempt the pups' appetites, motor goggles, fur-trimmed wraps, fur-lined boots, manicure sets and silver back brushes.—Kansas City Times, December 21, 1908.

"With perhaps hundreds of poor little children in that great city, suffering for the things necessary to protect them from the inclemency of winter, illy-clad, half-starved, deprived of that which should make childhood happy and care-free, it is hard to realize that any woman can be so utterly lost to all sense of humanity and compassion as to engage in such senseless and sinful extravagance as outlined in the above clipping. It will be a shamefaced class of women who will stand before the Judge of all the earth accounting for their lives to Him, when this and other circumstances in their lives are reviewed.

"'Depart from me ye cursed,' will be an awful recompense for the poor enjoyment they have had in the misuse of the wealth that came to them. It is sad to think that intelligent beings will sink so low as to supplant God-given children in their homes with brute beasts. But 'like cleaves to like' and the inference is logical that the natures of these women are becoming bestialized, and they live only in the present, without thought or regard for the eternity to come.

"'But as the days of Noah were, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away: so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be.'—Matthew 24: 37-39."

Letter Department

SANTA ANA, California, December 27, 1908.

Editors Herald: We have a branch here just four months old, consisting of about fifty members. While the branch is young many of our members are growing gray in the work, marching steadily on to the front, across the plains of disappointments, discouragements, and hardships, on to the better life that lies beyond, always alive to the best interests of the work, determined to know nothing but spiritual success.

To all of those contemplating coming to Southern California we have this to offer: A beautiful climate, advantages for a livelihood equal to any and surpassing most where climatic conditions are less favorable. While the snow is softly falling around the homes of our brethren and sisters beyond the Rockies, we are enjoying the beautiful sunshine. As we look down the palm-tree avenues on across the great groves of orange-trees hanging heavy with their golden fruit, to the mountain ranges on the north and east clothed with green grass and wild flowers of many colors, we can hear the endless chant of the ocean wave. While we have our pleasant surroundings we have our trials. But we take courage in the thought that we are made perfect through suffering.

Since our branch was organized we have taken in some new members by letter and there are others who have expressed a desire to be baptized. So as we grow in numbers we hope to grow spiritually. As yet we have no church building of our own, but hope to have soon. We meet in the Fraternal Brotherhood Hall for Sunday-school and preaching-services, while we have cottage prayer- and testimony-meetings at the homes of the Saints.

I believe that God's hand is over us, shaping our course, but we must be ever on the alert, for there are things that will come upon us so gradually that we hardly realize it until we suddenly find our Christian interests are gone. Let us remember all those who once felt a joyous budding springtime in the Savior's love and have felt it slipping away from them beyond the hazy horizon of worldly strife. I do not believe that we have many in this condition, but there are some. Let us visit them kindly and entreat them to return unto the Lord; then while their springtime closes with sad scenes of disappointments and discouragements, they may emerge into a summer of glorious experience.

Dear Saints, let us go on in the good work. Only a few more of those carefully prepared stumbling-blocks of Satan and we will have reached the end. Already, with many of us, the noontide of life is past, and our sun is setting. But the joy that will be ours if, after a long and clouded day, we can see our sun setting amid the glittering lights of the holy city! Our work is finished and we have come home for our reward.

For every temptation, for every sorrow, for every duty, the Bible furnishes an appropriate weapon. It was life before it was literature, experience before expression, and we can admit, submit, commit, and transmit the word of God. First admit its truths into our lives, then submit our lives to be ruled by its precepts. Commit its watchwords to memory and transmit them to others.

The saddest thought I have of the past is that twenty years of my life have been spent mingling with all classes of people upon the highways of sin without once stopping to consider the all-important opportunity connected with the better life. Oh, that the youth of our land would come and stand in the doorway of this restored gospel! When I look back over the twenty-five years that have passed since I left my childhood home in the vineclad hills of Laguna I can see twenty-two years of almost wasted life. Only three years out of twenty-five that I have been active in spiritual work.

Saints, let us sharpen up our sickles and keep them bright with service in the great harvest-field of God. Let us go in with a determination to win, then the seemingly hard trials will melt away like the snow in the heat of a summer sun. Children, you are as earth's most beautiful flowers. Let the spirit of God come into your life and be strong men and women for God. Let each day, as it goes by, become a stepping-stone in your lives to a higher and better career. Then the changes that take place will be marvelous. Personal influence and social power will assert itself; impulses will become deeds; actions and thoughts will be crystalizing into a character that should endure to the end. In conclusion, I will add that across the years of action and world-wide service, let us tread the path that leads to victory and crowns of glory, and in the joy of service we shall find the peace that the world can not give or take away.

Your brother in Christ,

L. HEMENWAY,

President of Santa Ana Branch.

BOYNE, Michigan, December 30, 1908.

Dear Herald: I have felt impressed for some time past to write a letter to the HERALD readers. Though feeling my weakness, and that what I may write might not profit any, yet I feel it my duty to send a few words from this part of the Lord's vineyard. Since having my patriarchal blessing given under the hands of Elder J. J. Bailey, I have felt that I have a greater work to do than I ever realized before. I know I have lots to overcome to receive the glory I wish to. I am very easily overcome by the cares and trials of this life; but I know if we try to live right, and ask God to help us, he is ever ready and willing, when we come before him as we should. I have proved this to my own satisfaction.

I might relate an instance of healing which we received one year ago last June, which still remains fresh on my mind. Our little daughter Irene was taken with a severe spasm. We had noticed for a few days previous to this that she had not felt just right. She was taken with this spasm, which lasted between ten and fifteen minutes. We called in a physician. He at once said, "You have a very sick child." He tested her lungs and pronounced it bronchial pneumonia. We became very much alarmed over her, and at once sent and had Elder Burt come and administer to her. She seemed to get relief, but it would not last long, until she would be real bad again. The doctor called every day for six days. We still continued to have the elders come, had them several times. She would seem to get relief every time she was administered to; but would soon grow worse again. We would almost give up in despair. I at last said to my husband and mother, I will not give one more dose of that medicine. The doctor came again that morning and asked if we had given the medicine as directed. I told him I would not give any more of it; and if we wanted him again we would call him. He said, "Well, you may be sorry, if you do not do as I tell you," and so on. He knew our belief, and had been there one day when the elders were. We again had the elders come and administer to her. She began to get better, and continued to gain till perfectly well, and has been well ever since; but not till we gave up the doctor and put our whole trust in God was she healed. This, dear Saints, has strengthened my faith along this line; also that we should not trust in the arm of flesh. My desire is to so live that I may bring our little one up in the right way, after God has been so good as to spare her to us.

I have had evidences in different ways along this line, that God has all power; although with all these things to strengthen me I feel that I come far short of doing as I should do. My desire is for good. Pray for me, dear Saints.

MRS. A. L. WASHBURN.

MANSFIELD, Missouri, January 2, 1909.

Dear Saints: I am one of the isolated Saints, and my heart goes out to those in the same condition. I have not heard a gospel sermon preached since last March.

I do love to read the church papers. When I get them, if I have time, I sit right down and read them. The dear Saints that meet together every Sunday do not know how to sympathize with those that are isolated. As this is New-year night, I pray that we may live a better life in this year, and do our duty. As the saying is, When we have done all we can do, we have only done our duty.

MARY PINKERTON-DEHART.

EDGERTON, Alberta, Canada, January 3, 1909.

Dear Herald: I will endeavor to write and let all know, more especially the Saints in Michigan, how we are getting along. There are between thirty and forty Saints here, and all seem to be living up to the gospel law. Elders U.W. Greene and J. L. Mortimer were here about a month ago. We were all strengthened and comforted by their coming and the good meetings we had. While here Clyde was ordained to the office of elder. We live twelve miles from the Ribstone Branch, so we do not get to meeting very often. We miss the meetings, but hope to have a branch organized here in the spring.

There are six of us here now and we expect some more Saints here next summer. Bro. Fred Rowe and wife have a homestead two and one half miles from us. There are five families here from Michigan, all Saints but one.

We think this is a fine, healthful country. The crops were good last year and there is an abundance of feed for cattle. It is quite cold now, but only about five inches of snow. Cattle are running out on the ranges yet. There is lots of good hay here also, and it has been rightly named the land of "sunshine and flowers." The sun shines very brightly here, nearly every day, and the prairie is covered with flowers from early spring until the frost comes in the fall. We get good water by going down forty feet, and have good buildings up, and like it well so far. We feel that the Lord has blessed us wonderfully.

We miss the dear Saints in Michigan, for we loved them; but we have the same love for those here and feel to thank God we can all say, "We know the work is true." We rejoice in this great work and have a desire to do all we can for it. There are eight of the ministry here and some are moving out to hunt up openings. There are lots of people here from all over, that have never heard the gospel preached.

We are just two and one half miles from Edgerton, on the Grand Trunk Pacific, one hundred and sixty miles east of Edmonton. Elders and Saints are always welcome. Bro. W. J. Levitt and family are well and doing well.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. C. M. WALRATH.

MONROE, Utah, December 28, 1908.

Editors Herald: I have been thinking of writing to the readers of the HERALD for some time, but it is quite a task to express our views on paper so that they will be presentable. We were baptized two years ago, under the hands of Bro. A. M. Chase, that is, two years ago next February 17,—myself, wife, and our two children. I was born in the Utah church, fifty-one years ago; but after being married I became dissatisfied with polygamy, and I could not see a redeeming feature in the filthy doctrine. The more I studied the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants, the more sure I became that the revelation on plurality was a fraud, and was never given to the church by the Prophet and Martyr; and when Bro. A. M. Chase came and preached on the street of Monroe, I felt like my chance for salvation was still here. I began to search the records still more closely. My wife and son found an old Doctrine and Covenants with original marriage custom, and denunciation of polygamy. It seemed to lift the veil of the past, and I could see through the deception and depravity of Brigham Young and his successors in office. When Bro. Chase came back from the southern part of the State, we were ready for baptism. One thing that I found which was very conclusive that Joseph Smith never taught polygamy was in an early publication, where the leading men and women of the church declare that the secret wife system was the creature of John C. Bennett; and the affidavit of the patriarch, Hyrum Smith, to the same effect. From what I have seen and heard, I now know that all the leading men in the apostate church of Utah knew that the Martyr never introduced polygamy; and, to my thinking, they have gone into that relic of barbarism either in ignorance (which is not likely) or in impiety and infidelity. Just look now at their Doctrine and Covenants, with their two infamous revelations side by side, one saying you will be damned if you do not, and the other a plea of mercy from a land of perjurers. It is a sickly mess.

When I asked that I be considered out, or a short time after, my bishop and his counselor asked me if I had not felt bad or downcast for my action. I said no, I felt better every day that I was no longer responsible for the misdeeds of men who confessed they had broken the laws of God and man.

We are very happy, and glad that we were allowed to hear and embrace the gospel of Jesus Christ as taught by the true successor to the martyred Prophet of the latter-day dispensation, and the Saints who believe the way they will win salvation and happiness is to obey the laws of God and man as the written word provides. We feel like asking God to bless the brethren of the Reorganized Church, those whom we know, and we would be glad to hear from them.

My father and mother came to Utah in 1862, from Switzerland. I was five years old at the time, and my father's brother, Jacob Nazer, came at the same time; but soon joined the Reorganization. They stayed in the north part of the State or Territory, and we went south. I would be glad to correspond with any of the family of my uncle. We hope to move closer to Zion some day, or as soon as we can, and help build up the kingdom of God in living as near to the law as our weak natures will permit. We will be glad to be near some of the Saints, to meet with them on Sunday, and to hear the word of God as told by his servants.

Yours for the truth,
EDWARD NAZER.

LAMAR, Indiana, January 3, 1909.

Dear Herald: Perhaps a few words from this place would be appreciated by some. Mine is a very busy life, as I have a husband and four little ones to care for, so my time for writing is scarce; but somehow I felt as if I might do some good by writing, and I am anxious to do good.

I have enjoyed the Spirit quite a good deal at times; but sometimes conditions are such that we are not permitted to enjoy this holy influence as we should. I am very sorry that we sometimes find envy, jealousy, etc., even among Latter Day Saints, which is sure to injure the cause of Christ wherever they are made manifest. I can see my own shortcomings, too; but am trying to improve, and hope to be ready when the Master calls for me.

I gave a part of my experience in the HERALD a few years ago; but if I should repeat some of it, those who have read will please bear with me; for I want to ask for the interpretation of a dream or vision which I had while I was yet in the Baptist Church. For, although I had been a member of that church for some time, and was trying to do right, I was not satisfied, but kept longing and praying for some sure testimony that I was accepted of God. I had done what I could, and tried to think I was all right, and in prayer-meeting and at other times, too, I felt happy. But then that longing would come back and dark doubts with it; for, sometimes, I felt that I had lied in saying my sins had been forgiven (for we had to answer to this effect before we could become a member of the Baptist Church), and so I continued to ask God for light on these doubtful points, and I was given the following dream or vision, which caused me to rejoice and be satisfied, until after I had heard this doctrine; then I could see things plainly, and knew why I had had such an experience as that which I have just described. It was a plain case of the "blind leading the blind." I will give it in the language in which I described it to my husband quite a while before we were married:

"I saw a fiery chariot rise
From out the east, ascend the skies
Until from me, 'twas straight above,
Then, from out it, came a dove;
And descending slowly
It alighted near to me;
And, though, before 'twas very light,
It turned as dark as any night.
And thus my vision came to end.
What doth it all mean, my dear friend?"

I was very happy after this, but never quite understood the darkness at the close; although I have thought it represented the darkness I was then in. I think the dove represented the Holy Spirit, and it came near me; so near I felt its influence and rejoiced; but you notice it had only alighted near me. I had not fully received it then; but it guided me to the Latter Day Saint Church. This is the interpretation I have received. Does any one have any other to offer? I would like to know for sure, about the darkness at the close.

As we have our home nearly paid for, we hope to be able to pay the remainder of our tithes before long. We are anxious for the spread of the gospel, so that others may enjoy the blessings we prize so much.

Have just been reading in Autumn Leaves of Sr. Burton's experience in speaking in tongues, and other very good articles, among which is Bro. Moler's experience.

Grandpa Cummings has just been sending for several church publications—The Two-Story Book—(which I think is just fine for presenting our work) and others which I have not yet read.

It seems to me that prospects here are a little better, as we have some now who will read, but some are very bitter against us, or our faith, or what they suppose to be our faith. They seem to think they know all there is to know about Latter Day Saints; but will not come out to hear them preach or give them a hearing in any way.

Pray for us that we all may be more united, and more worthy the name we bear.
ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

LOWER LAKE, California, January 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: Having just finished reading Bro. W. W. Blair's memoirs to my companion: it awakened memories of the past. Although then a boy, I well remember when living on the old farm near Petaluma, how hard G. P. Dykes tried to sow the seeds of discord among the Saints of the Reorganization. He seemed bent on destroying Bro. Blair's influence for good and branding him as a fraud, and a "wolf in sheep's clothing." In the sixties, or early seventies, I think, Bro. Blair came to Petaluma, California, and the Saints secured a large hall in a brick building on Main Street, and on Sunday Bro. Blair gave out an appointment to preach. The hall was well filled, and Bro. Blair preached with good liberty. During the service my eye was attracted to a glaring notice tacked upon the wall close to the stand, where Bro. Blair stood. Apparently he paid no attention to it; but after he had concluded his sermon, he pointed to the notice, which was headed in large letters, "Mormon Delusion," and said, addressing the congregation, "Friends, do you see that notice? It is a shame and a disgrace to the man that put it there." And, pointing to G. P. Dykes, who was sitting near the door in a chair, he said, "There is the man that did it. Shame on him. He was cut off from the church for his unchristianlike conduct. He has been a partaker of the abominations of Utah, having once had a mother and her daughter for wives at the same time." G. P. Dykes hastily arose to his feet and said, "My friends, if you all will come to the Baptist church to-night, you will hear the other side."

At early candlelight, the church building was crowded, my mother, Bro. Blair, and I being present. Previous to this G. P. Dykes had worn a long beard, which gave him the appearance of what constituted my ideas of an old patriarch. When the hour arrived for the other side, G. P. Dykes arose, minus his patriarchal face covering, and, passing his hand around his face and chin, said, "I have shaved off Mormonism." He then said he had been connected with the church for thirty years, but, "I have come out of her because of her abominations." He then told of the iniquity that abounded in the church in the days of Joseph the Seer; how the Saints would steal cattle, butcher them and secrete the hides, and many other such misrepresentations.

"Now there had been a man by the name of Forbes who had connected himself with the church from sinister motives, who had sometimes visited our home. This man was afterwards accused of stealing cattle, so my father was then and there accused of harboring thieves and robbers, in fact my father's house was their rendezvous."

In relating to his hearers what the law of tithing meant, he said if a man owned ten cows, he was compelled to give one to the church. If a woman had ten plates, or ten knives and forks, she was required to give one to the church; and looking straight at my mother said, "Now you know, sister, that is true."

Well, after he had worked upon the feelings of his hearers until they could scarcely keep their hands off from us, he closed. Bro. Blair arose, having previously obtained permission of the trustees to reply. G. P. Dykes, pointing at him, said in a loud, angry voice, "You sit down; sit down," then giving a sign, the lights were instantly extinguished, and we were in total darkness, and everybody rushed for the door, tumbling over each other in their hurry to get outside. The excitement ran high, and there was strong talk of mob, but while they were considering the matter we made ourselves conspicuous by our absence.

During these troublesome times, we were glad to see dear old Bro. J. C. Clapp, then a young man, come into our neighborhood. He sized up the situation, and resolved to meet the modern Goliath, and show him up in his true light. A few seemed to think Bro. Clapp too young in the cause, and too inexperienced to cope with him; but Bro. Clapp said, "Never fear, we will put our trust in God." We were all assembled in the old Liberty Schoolhouse, to witness the battle. In order to save time, they mutually agreed to confine themselves to one book instead of the three. During the discussion, while G. P. had the floor, he would repeatedly say, "Oh, I was about to quote a passage from the Book of Mormon, or the Doctrine and Covenants, that would settle the matter, and prove my position to be correct; but I am not allowed to use those books. My hands are tied, as it were."

It terminated as expected, truth was victorious. I remember standing under a tree in the schoolhouse yard, after the discussion; G. P. Dykes pointed to a bunch of mistletoe near the top of the tree and said, "The Reorganization puts me in mind of that mistletoe, a parasite; trace it back to its origin and what is it?"

About this time my parents were anxious for me to attend college. Accordingly George Oman, Jr., and I were sent to the Pacific Methodist College. At the expiration of the term we returned home to spend the Christmas holidays. After the usual greeting and handshaking was over, my sister Emma said to me, "Come to the sitting-room, I want to introduce you to Bro. Robinson [elder]." I was at that time under the impression that a Latter Day Saint elder was just about perfect; for I was inexperienced, having been a member but a short time. Now, you can imagine how I felt a few days after meeting Elder Robinson, to see him coming across the field toward the house staggering along under the influence of liquor. My college mate, George Oman, and I were standing on the front porch at the time. We concluded to go and meet him and see for ourselves if he really was intoxicated. George said to him, "Bro. Robinson, you have been drinking." He replied, "Oh, no, George, I have not." "Oh, but you have, there is no use denying it," said George. He saw it was impossible to hide his condition and said, "I was cold and I took a drink, and then I took another or two, and I got too much." We prevailed on him to go to the house and get warm. I well remember how amused I was when seated at the supper table. The dish of butter was passed to him. He took the larger part on his plate, and on lifting it to his mouth, said, "Oh, I thought it was potatoes." Well, he remained over night, and I secured his overcoat and removed his bottle from the pocket, then watched through the keyhole to see him search for it before retiring. The next Sunday we had meeting at Bro. Oman's, Bro. Robinson being present. After the meeting, Bro. Oman said to Bro. Robinson, "I have a charge to prefer against you. I am informed that you have been drinking." He looked confused, and said, "Oh, no, Bro. Oman, it is a mistake." Bro. Oman said, "Don't deny it. I am informed by reliable authority that you were drunk." Seeing George and myself present, he owned up, and said, "Yes, Bro. Oman, I am guilty, but I am sorry; and if you all will forgive me, I will never, never do it again." He was forgiven, but he went right off and became intoxicated again, and was forgiven, but fell again and again. He traveled the downward road, and at last tumbled into a drunkard's grave.

The years rolled on, and many changes took place. My business called me to the city of Healdsburg, where I made my home for a number of years. While residing at the above-mentioned place, Bro. Joseph, the Prophet, visited our city. Well do I remember his last words to me when parting-time came. Taking my hand, he said, "Should you ever chance to visit Lamoni, you will find the latch-string hanging out."

About the year 1898 found me residing in the city of Santa Rosa. Many prayer- and testimony-meetings have I enjoyed there with the Saints. It was there with the Saints in a prayer-meeting in Sr. Page's, now Sr. Case's house, that I first felt the Holy Spirit rest upon me in power. Right here I will say that the Saints in Santa Rosa were a faithful, united little band of Saints. Under the teaching of Bro. William Newton the branch prospered, and the Saints advanced spiritually. Years have passed since then, and I am now living on my old home farm near Lower Lake, Lake County, and we are taking all the church papers; and, oh how we enjoy reading them. When the HERALD arrives, I always look over the letters the first thing to see if I can find anything from the dear Santa Rosa Saints, but I always look in vain.

We once had a thriving branch in Lower Lake, but some have passed away, others removed to other places. Now, we have only a few left, dear old Sr. Caroline Graumlich, an old-time Saint, being the only one for us to lean upon.

We long and pray for an elder to help us to get another start. We have waited in vain for Bro. Terry.

We have just received volume 7, number 1, Religio Quarterly. We (my companion and I,) will have our first lesson on the Book of Mormon, Sunday. Now, while my companion and I believe in the divine authenticity of the book, oh, we would so love to have a special evidence of its divinity. Suppose some inquirer should ask us how we knew it to be of divine origin, what would, or could, we say?

We are now enjoying our long winter evenings, sitting around our fireside, reading Bro. R. C. Evans' Autobiography. May God bless Bro. Evans for the good of the work he is doing. Would that there were more just such books. The two sermons at the end of the book are simply grand. They ought to be published in the Salt Lake Tribune.

In conclusion, I wish to relate the sad fate of my brother, Newton Adamson. Although a member of the church, he did not meet with them in their little meetings, having grown careless, not having lived up to the light he had. Happening to be in Santa Rosa, out of curiosity he attended the Saints' prayer- and testimony-meeting one Sunday. He dropped in a seat a little aloof from the Saints, taking no part in the proceedings. During the meetings, a sister arose, spoke in tongues, directing the message to him, the interpretation being a rebuke for his carelessness and indifference, and informing him to be more zealous and faithful. From that time he was among the zealous, having resolved to turn over a new leaf. Being a priest, he often occupied the pulpit in the absence of an elder. About this time he formed the acquaintance of a lady who was opposed to the church. Shortly afterward, he married her. After his marriage his attendance at the meetings of the Saints became very irregular. Ministers of different denominations often visited his home by his invitation, and hours were spent in talking scripture. My mother, who was sojourning with him temporarily, chided him and warned him. Said she, "Newton, be careful. Don't let those ministers influence you. You know the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints is the only true church." But he assured her there was no danger of his being led astray. The result was that he joined the Baptist Church, attending their meetings regularly, and avoiding the Saints. A year or two had passed, when, one Sunday night, about two o'clock in the morning, he was suddenly called from his earthly home, not even having the opportunity of speaking a word. We all mourn for him as one lost. Meeting Bro. William Newton some months after, I said to him, "Bro. Newton, were you not surprised to hear of my brother's death?" He said, "I was surprised when I heard he had left the church, but I was not surprised when I heard of his death."

Yours in gospel bonds,

E. F. ADAMSON.

CHATHAM, Ontario, January 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: I would like to show my brothers and sisters throughout this north land that the time is here when God's people are being looked to, when good, moral, honest people are required to fill important positions. The municipal election for the city of Chatham was held Monday, January 4, when Elder Stewart Lamont opposed Doctor G. W. Cornell for the position of water commissioner, and defeated him by a majority of three hundred and eighty-five, receiving almost double as many votes as were cast for Doctor Cornell.

Doctor Cornell has held the position for the last five years; and, although influential and professional men have been nominated to oppose him at different times, Elder Lamont, who is a painter, was the first man to stand against this man who thought no one would ever defeat him, and you see the result, three hundred and eighty-five majority.

Elder Lamont has lived in Chatham for over twenty years, during which time he has worked for the Chatham Manufacturing Company. He is a man of thought, always ready to support that which is right, and trample anything not just.

As president of the local branch of Christ's church, he is very highly respected, being reelected for the sixth year. Under his reign as president God has greatly blessed the branch, by adding a large number of good, true lovers of the true church of Christ.

In addition to the duties of the presiding elder of the branch, Bro. Lamont is always ready to give a lift in Sunday-school and Religio work, and is always ready to help those in distress.

Through the true devotion to the work of Bro. Lamont, many true children of God have been added to the branch.

I think, Mr. Editor, the result of the vote will show that the Saints of Chatham are at least looked upon as the very best citizens. Thanking you for your space, I remain,

Your brother,

ART J. CATHER,

Traveling Representative the Planet.

FRANKLIN, Nebraska, January 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have just closed a series of meetings at Oxford, Nebraska, with good interest and attendance, promising to come back soon to continue the services. I left Keokuk, Iowa, September 15, having labored there twenty-two months. On the 14th I baptized a Mr. Brant, who has been convinced of the work for some time, but got to putting off the day of his birth into the kingdom. Also Miss Grace Brown obeyed the call to come out of the world. She has been a faithful worker in the Sunday-school. She has since been married to a young man of Keokuk. I hope their lives may be laid in pleasant places.

As the dampness of the river was damaging to my health, and also on account of the heavy expense of living in a city, we decided to move back to our home in Lamoni, where we would not have to pay rent. It was sad to leave those we had labored with in building up the work; but I always felt I was only a forerunner for some one who would build up the work there. I left Bro. Farr in care till one should be appointed. I intended to resign, because of my poor health; but after getting settled I was transferred, by the missionary in charge, to Nebraska. My first trip was up in the Indian reservation among the Omaha and Winnebago tribes. I found several families of Saints there. At Walthill I found Bro. and Sr. Carter, at which place I made my home for a few days. They were ready to do what they could for an opening; but it was a very busy time getting out the enormous crop of corn. I went from there to Winnebago. Walking out in the interior I found Bro. John Kilmer and several others. I spent a couple of days with them. I returned to Walthill, getting a letter from Bro. J. R. Sutton, requesting me to go to Oxford, as they were wanting meetings there. I had also held some meetings at Decatur, where the Saints helped me, for which I hope the Lord will bless them. I also found some Saints at Rosalie. I promised to come back when they were through gathering their corn and hold some meetings. I hope the Saints will release me from that promise, as I am in the western part of the State, and Bro. Sutton thinks I will find all I can do out here. I was on my way to Oxford, and when I got to Lincoln I became very sick. Not knowing of any Saints near, I went home, thinking my case was a serious one. I remained home a couple of weeks, then took train for Oxford. I was met by Bro. Abram Sandage. I was surprised to find him to be one of my old neighbors. I commenced meetings the following night; fifteen to start with, increasing to thirty-two. On Sunday I baptized three of Bro. Sandage's sons. On Monday night, after meeting, we went to a near-by tank, removed the ice, and buried two more, a young man and a girl. The confirmation-meeting was spiritual, and there were tears shed by those within and without. The weather turned so cold that we discontinued the meetings, hoping to resume the work again, as there are a number very much interested. They were planning to light up the house better, and raise money to pay for the coal. Bro. and Sr. Sandage are strong in the faith, and willing to do all they can for its promotion.

Editors Herald: Since concluding the meeting at Flint, I have held a week's meeting at Scott Center, and to-night expect to conclude an eighteen-day meeting at this place. Good interest shown both on the part of Saints and outsiders.

To-morrow we go to the Sand Hill Schoolhouse to hold meeting over Sunday, the 10th. On the 11th we expect to begin a meeting at South Scott Church. Expect Bro. S. W. L. Scott to join me there. Have been here in Steuben County for about six weeks, and still have work awaiting us for some time yet. The weather has been ideal for meetings until just recently. Just now it is a little rough, and temperature hovering in the neighborhood of zero.

On the 2d inst. Father Morris L. Chandler passed away, at the ripe age of eighty-nine years.

H. E. MOLER.

WEYBURN, Saskatchewan, Canada, Jan. 10, 1909.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I attempted to write you, but this is a very busy country. It keeps us busy all the year. We are having extremely cold weather since the first of the year. Before this, the winter was unusually mild—no snow. Now there is snow, snow, blowing snow everywhere, indoors and out, and fifty-two degrees below zero. Well, you may know we are thankful it is so near spring. Our branch is steadily increasing. Eight were baptized this fall, making seventy-four in all. We have services in four different places, owing to our scattered condition. Have two Religios, which we enjoy very much. We know this will be a great help in the Lord's work.

Elders U. W. Greene and J. L. Mortimer were here a short time ago. We will petition the General Conference for a district to be organized in the Northwest. Several thousand dollars are paid in as tithing, and only one missionary. Surely several could occupy to good advantage. We are pleased to note a growing interest all over the land. Surely we should all be doing all we can. There is a great work and the harvesters are few.

FLORENCE TOOVEY.

BEAR LAKE, Michigan, January 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: The church papers help me so much that I feel to express my thanks to you and the many writers of the church for words that cheer and enlighten the isolated ones. It is indeed good to be a member of the great household of faith, even if we are far from the congregation and unable to attend meetings. How great and merciful is our God, who gives his Spirit to those whom he knows will be overcome by error and sin. What infinite love and compassion he shows toward us when we are chastened and drawn nigh unto him.

I feel to say to any who are striving again to walk the narrow way, Keep on and do not give up; for we truly are being tried, and must not stop, even though we stumble. I received evidence before baptism that the work is of God, and entered the church with knowledge as well as belief in the doctrine.

"If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine," does not intimate the necessity of going so far as baptism and confirmation in order to obtain the evidences of its truthfulness. I have desired often to write on this point that comes under the head of consistency; but something I discovered the other day in a very old HERALD teaches the same thing. If any are curious to know how old the HERALD is that I refer to, I will tell you. It is dated May, 1862. I like to read the old HERALDS as well as the new. I wish the HERALD God-speed.

Your brother,

GEORGE M. HADLEY.

LINEVILLE, Iowa, January 18, 1909.

Dear Herald: As I have never written to your pages, thought I would do so to-day. I do not see how any one can do without any of the church papers. We have not been taking any until in the last year. I do not think we shall be without them any more. I do not see how we could do without them. We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope; and after a while we are going to take the Ensign, so I think we will have something to read that will be good enough for any one, if they want to read them. But no one will want to, except a Latter Day Saint. But I will read them, or my husband either. We have a time, sometimes, to see who will get the HERALD first to read. Sometimes I succeed, and sometimes I do not. But we do not quarrel about it. When the HERALD, Hope, and Autumn Leaves come, husband takes HERALD, I Autumn Leaves, and our boy the Hope, so we each have a paper then to read. Our boy says he could not get along without the Hope. He does not belong to the church, but will soon; and I am so glad to think he sees the true light of God as he does. He has selected Bro. M. M. Turpen to baptize him. We had a day set, but it was so cold, and we are so far from the church at Pleasanton, we did not get to go.

As the song in Hymnal, page 182, says, "'Tis a glorious thing to be in the light." What would we do without this light? I do not think we could do very much. It is hard enough at the very best to do what is right with this glorious light. For my part, I am glad I am a Latter Day Saint. Hope I will do that which is right; so, at the final day I will not be ashamed to see the Son of our heavenly Father face to face, and hope I may live so as to be able to live with him in glory. I want all the Saints to pray for me as I know I am weak, and do not have the patience I ought to have. I will close, wishing all a brighter and more cheerful year than the one just gone. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may be found faithful in this glorious cause of God.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

R. F. D. 3.

MRS. LILLIE BAILEY.

FULTON, Kentucky, January 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: After just reading a number of your articles in borrowed papers, I feel that I want to pen a few thoughts to your letter department. We have been a constant subscriber to the HERALD ever since we came into the church, which is about ten years, until the past two years; and since reading the pages of those excellent papers, I can realize the mistake we made in neglecting to subscribe for it before now. I feel thankful to our great Creator for the good advice and instruction I have gained by what I have just read. I thought when we were taking the paper that it was instructive and good; but if I judge right it seems that it is much better now than in years previous. I feel that I have been losing some of the grand and good reading. Oh, the good advice to mothers is just grand. I am one who has the responsibility of four dear children, two bright boys and two intelligent girls, oldest fourteen, youngest three. Realizing the responsibility of the tender care that a mother should exercise, I desire all good advice possible, as I want to rear my children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. I have more fears about the care of my children than any other thing, except a fear of not complying with God's laws in everything. I want to be a true Latter Day Saint. I have no doubts as to the great latter-day work in the least, but only fear myself. I feel since reading such grand sermons and articles in the HERALD, that I am encouraged so much and have been made to realize our every duty, and the love we should manifest to our heavenly Father, that I surely will press onward and live a life worthy of his acceptance. We ought to live under no condemnation, so that our prayers may be not hindered.

Dear Saints, when I live so as not to feel condemned, my life is so happy, and I do feel so free and good wherever I am. My experience is that when I resist one temptation, the next one presented is easier to resist than the one before; but sometimes I get careless and indifferent, and think I have not time to read good things (which reading and prayer is the life of me), and my mind gets too worldly to enjoy the good, peaceful influence which our dear heavenly Father is able to give. Yet all the time I am careless, I feel and realize very distinctly that I am not so prayerful as I should be, and realize that I am not feeling right, and know why it is, still it seems that I just can not wake up and be doing: sometimes can not even have the sentiment of prayer. But after coming in touch with such good thoughts as I have this morning, and getting my mind to act, I am made to rejoice with joy almost unspeakable in the great latter-day work, which I adore above all earthly treasures or pleasures which this old sinful world can produce.

Dear Saints, some think it is awfully hard to live right; but if we get ourselves in the proper attitude, and will be watchful, we can live to serve Him as we should; for God does not require more of us than we can do, as we all very well know; and let us all strive to be thoughtful of his commandments and keep them. Let us not be as some (and I have been so myself to some extent since I came into the church)—after believing the first principles of the gospel, and after obeying the part for them to perform, they considered their work done, which caused them to become like some who cling to the form of godliness, and often manifest the power of Satan, and do not notice the difference, and no one else can discern any difference in their manner of living since coming into the fold. They seem as stiff-necked and proud as any popular church-member of the great sectarian churches. They have never taken any time to study new things; they just hold so tightly to the old that the power of Satan never loosed its hold upon them. Now, we should all strive to do the will of the Master. As for myself, I feel more encouraged to live more uprightly than in some time; so will close by saying, I hope our mistake for not taking the HERALD will be corrected at once. Dear Saints, let us remember that whatever we sow, that shall we also reap.

Your sister in Christ,

R. F. D. 5, Box 65.

BOBBIE WILLIAMS.

MARION, Michigan, January 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: The work is moving along nicely here in this part of the vineyard. I came here about two weeks ago; held only a few meetings and was called to Bay City, my son-in-law being very sick. Remained there one week, then came back to Marion. Some of the Saints engaged a hall. The first night there were only a few; but they were interested, and the congregation is getting larger every night; so it seems the interest is increasing all the time. This has been a hard place to get a hearing.

In bonds,

News From Branches

HAILEYVILLE, OKLAHOMA.

I thought I would write a few lines to let others know how the gospel work is here. Bro. I. N. White has just left for home. He has been holding meetings here for us in our new church, which is twenty-four by thirty, with a twelve-foot wall.

We as Saints rejoice to have a home in which to meet; the house was full four or five times while Bro. White was holding forth, and a good interest was manifested. The Lord was good to us in moving on the people of the two towns in assisting us financially on our new church. We are looking forth with a bright anticipation for this place in the near future, for an ingathering. The brother that was the instrument in bringing wife and me into the church, had a dream when he was here, in which he saw a tree of fruit, first when it was in blossom, and again when small peaches, and also when ripe, which he said was the church work here, and the fruit was the Saints, which is being fulfilled amongst us now. The Saints are partly gathered into the church, but not as yet ripened. Each day we can see the necessity of more faithful living among the Saints. I fear the trump will sound and find some asleep, and not ready for the bridegroom. The wind blew from the south and blew up another Simmons from Mexico. I heard his note of warning before within a quarter of a mile of the Saints' abode. Oh, how the echo did ring over the hills of Hailey town, Come again, one and all, but make a longer stay next time. Old wagons sound good, when one is anxious to hear their sound. Any elders coming through Haileyville, stop off and see us, and our new church, and preach for us. This means J. F., and all the rest.

JOHN S. WHITE.

Grant this, we pray Thee, that all they who read
Or utter noble thoughts may make them theirs,
And, thank God for them, to the betterment
Of their succeeding life.

—Emerson.

Bullock, of Norfolk, Nebraska, who is present to-day. Sr. Krahl was married August 15, 1865, at Williamson, New York, to Bro. John Krahl, deceased. Three children were born to them, George Lewis, David John, and Jennie Pearl, all of whom remain to mourn her departure. She was baptized into the church by Elder George W. Galley, at Columbus, Nebraska, in 1879, and remained a faithful member, dying firm in the faith and in hope of coming forth in the resurrection of the righteous. She was a devoted mother, earnest and sincere in all her ways, and the work of God was the one theme always paramount in her mind. Services at the Saints' church, T. W. Chatburn in charge, sermon by President Joseph Smith. Interment in Mound Grove Cemetery, December 29, 1908.

She was an innocent soul, unsullied and pure. Funeral-sermon by T. W. Williams. "The night of death is but the dawn of a fuller life. 'Everything is prospective, and man is to live hereafter.'" "I feel my immortality oversweeps all pains, all tears, all fears, and peal like eternal thunders of the deep unto my ears the truth—'thou liveth for ever.'" "For I know my Redeemer is living and that hereafter he will stand upon the dust: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet from my flesh shall I see God, whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold and not a stranger, although my reins be consumed within me." "Lay her in the earth and from her fair and unpolluted flesh may violets spring."

MCLAUGHLIN.—Mrs. Margaret J. McLaughlin passed peacefully away at the home of her son-in-law, Bishop C. A. Parkin, in San Francisco, California, on December 31, 1908, at the age of 79 years, two months, eighteen days, after an illness of about two weeks with pneumonia. Sr. C. A. Parkin was her only child. Was married to Miss Mary E. Snively, November 17, 1861. They had five children; two sons, Aaron and Charles, and one daughter, Sr. Bertha Day, survive. Bro. Brown served in Company I, Twenty-fifth Indiana Infantry in the Civil War, and was chaplain of W. T. Harper, Post No. 79, G. A. R., for many years. He was baptized at Montrose in 1867 by Elder John H. Lake, and confirmed by Elder Frederick Burley. His faith and zeal were phenomenal—liberal with his limited means, never long in a place until there was call for an elder to preach. He died in the triumphs of faith, loved by relatives and brethren, honored by comrades and friends. Funeral-services at his late home, Elder James McKiernan preaching, assisted by Reverend Thorn, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Interment in Oakland Cemetery.

ECKHART.—Cecil Evaline was born at Arlington, Fayette County, Iowa, January 12, 1890, died January 12, 1909, her nineteenth birthday, at Lamoni. She was the daughter of George H. and Mary Eckhart. Her father preceded her to the other side several years ago. She leaves her mother, four brothers, and one sister to mourn her sudden departure, besides many friends. She was to have been married in a short time and the plans for a home and happy life were suddenly blighted by an explosion of gasoline, setting the sister's clothing on fire and burning her so badly that she died in a few hours. This was one of the unavoidable accidents that sometimes occur. Funeral-service from the church in charge of John Smith, assisted by O. B. Thomas, sermon by F. A. Smith.

SIMPSON.—Joseph S., was born June 6, 1853, at Huntsville, Madison County, Arkansas, and was baptized November 11, 1906, at Seneca, Newton County, Missouri, by Elder W. H. Smart. Died January 12, 1909. Funeral-sermon by Elder F. M. Conners.

WHITEHOUSE.—Thomas Whitehouse, Sr., was born October 27, 1827, Staffordshire, England. He settled in America in 1869, making his home in Kewanee, Illinois, with the exception of the last ten months, spent in Lamoni, Iowa, with his daughter, Sr. Tharp, where he died January 4, 1909. He was baptized August 2, 1866, and was ordained an elder. On March 10, 1856, he was married to Miss Martha Charles, who departed this life January 17, 1906. crop of the country—placed at $640,311,538 in 1907, and supplying two thirds of the world's cotton—be materially increased, not by farther outlay on the part of the grower, but by using the rough stalks, till now got rid of at a direct cost of not a little money and an indirect expense in time and labor?

Since 1908 came in these questions have all been answered in the affirmative by W. H. Croll, now of Atlanta, Georgia, but for many years closely identified with the paper industry of Indiana. The gist of the statements which he declares he is now justified in making (for he has busied himself for some time working at the experiments and perfecting the methods which at last have led to his invention) is, that from the cotton stalk may be made wrapping paper, print paper, and book paper of genuine worth.

It has long been known that all woody fiber is essentially alike, and all of it serviceable, in varying degrees, for paper manufacture. One form has been preferred to another only because its reduction and treatment was more convenient or less expensive. In spite of this academic knowledge, however, any such invention as Mr. Croll announces is of real news value to the world of industry if the final tests of it, now about to be made on a large scale, demonstrate that he has proceeded beyond mere laboratory trials into methods of practical commercial value. It would not be easy to magnify the importance of any discovery by which any huge waste is turned into a by-product yearly representing hundreds of thousands of dollars value.—From "Cotton and corn to solve our paper problem," in Technical World Magazine for February.

The Church and Disease.

For the Christian church to found and foster hospitals is unquestionably commendable, writes Doctor James M. Buckley in the February Century in a discussion of the "Dangers of the Emmanuel Movement," and the reasons why it should not be generally adopted; but the diagnosis, treatment, and prognosis should be left to those who have made this their life study and profession; to them belongs psychotherapy as well as medicine and surgery. For the church to provide chaplains for institutions and give them every facility is also rational. To attach hospitals to individual churches under rectoral or pastoral superintendence is of doubtful expediency. To provide physicians or attempt to treat patients personally would invade the sphere of an indispensable profession, and encourage an irregular movement in other departments of medicine.

A large proportion of the best physicians and surgeons of Boston and vicinity sympathize substantially with the view announced by Doctor Putnam. They believe that it places "the medical and clerical professions in a false light," that "it raises false hopes," that "it interferes with the relations between physicians and their patients," and that "it encourages haste and superficiality in the consideration of a serious problem."

LAND PROBLEMS.

A dispatch from London, England, indicates that the Earl of Leicester died at his home, Holkham Hall, Wells, Norfolk, England.

After giving a pedigree of the Earl which gave him his title and peerage, the dispatch states, "He was the owner of about fifty thousand acres"; and that his eldest son would succeed to his estate.

This closing sentence, with respect to the amount of land of which the earl died possessed, is one of the most striking features of the dispatch and the one which challenges our attention. This fifty thousand acres of land is equivalent to seventy-eight square miles of land, each square mile representing six hundred and forty acres, or, in the language of a surveyor, a section of land; this division represents about three hundred and twelve quarter sections, each containing one hundred and sixty acres of land, which subdivided again represents twelve hundred and fifty holdings of forty acres each.

We suppose that this estate of which the Earl of Leicester died possessed, and which descends to his son who succeeds to his title, represents but one of the many enormous landed estates into which England has been divided and subdivided since William the Norman rewarded with vast landed estates the lords and knights who fought with him and helped him to conquer the inhabitants of Britain. It is one of the misfortunes of the people forming the population of what is known as the British Isles, that the land which should be opened to the settlement of those who have been and are willing and worthy to occupy, and by such occupation secure to themselves and those dependent upon them the subsistence and competency which would remove them from poverty, are thus kept from them.

In connection with this item it is significant that the news current with it states that lately some five hundred miners entered in upon the estate of the Marquis of Bute, not far distant from the city of Cardiff, Wales, and took possession of a portion of it, intending to sow wheat upon the land so taken, for the purpose of preparing a supply of food for themselves and families dependent upon them. In the same item it was stated that a contingent of troops would likely be sent to the vicinity to evict these miners from the estate, and thus shut them out from making this provision contemplated by them. Of course, under the ordinary circumstances of the enforcement of the English laws, there can be but one issue to this effort of these miners. No matter how great their poverty, how sore the conditions of life to them and their families may be, how great the ills which they have already suffered and those which may still be in store for them, they will be driven from the land and obliged to herd together in their restricted and possibly poverty-stricken quarters; quarters which they probably occupy at the consent of some factor of the same, or a similar lordly landed estate.

Enthusiasm is the great mover of the world. They who are animated by any great idea and are inspired by any noble thought or exalted motive keep in motion the wheels of progress.

It is conceivable, however, that these five hundred men did not move in the effort which they undertook, without there had been some previous agitation of to them the serious question of living, and the sore straits to which they and their families had been driven by poverty, and under which they have had and now have but a pitiable existence. If this supposition be correct, then follows the fear expressed in the dispatch in which the circumstance was recited as an item of news, that the eviction of these miners from their proposed occupation of a small portion of this vast estate of the Marquis of Bute, possibly might create a national uprising amounting almost to revolt and revolution. Is not this fear justifiable under the conditions?

When in Wales in 1903, at the little town of Nantyglo, from the main street of the place a little straggling hamlet along the rocky side of hills from which the miners had dug and were digging the iron and the coal, and into which hamlet hundreds and thousands were crowded in tenements of almost primitive character and simplicity, we could look across the valley into the confines of an immense estate, upon the soil of which no miner dare step his foot, no matter how pressing his necessity, nor how much might be spared of the wealth of such an estate; but he must be content to live in such quarters as landlords might assign him upon premises held by the same claim of inherited succession, and made sacred to royalty by the gift of the sovereign. The occupation of such premises is made more restricted and unbearable by the fact that the occupying tenant can not erect any sort of small convenience on the premises occupied, without the consent of the factor of the lord of the estate first obtained, and he would be subjected to severe penalty did he assume to exercise any liberty in his holding the premises, except the mere occupation of the same.

The conditions of such existence have not been made bearable, except by long years of repression of the working masses amounting to oppression, imposed upon them by the English law-making powers in behalf of the landed gentry, and those styled the royal families, created so by the sovereign.

It is now pretty generally conceded by the statesmen of the period, that the English Government is facing one of the most serious problems pertaining to continued governmental existence that ever has been presented in the history of the English nation; namely, the economic problem resulting from the lack of remunerative employment for the millions of the population whose daily bread is dependent upon the labor of their hands. We believe that none will charge King Edward with other than the best of intentions for the good of his subjects and the best of desires for their general and personal welfare; and it is possible that there should be accorded to him now credit for being a wiser king than as a prince he gave promise of being. He has shown himself to be a ruler desirous of peace rather than of national aggrandizement; and it is to be hoped that he may be endowed with the greatest possible degree of wisdom commensurate with the needs of his people. For it is within the reach of open probabilities, and out of the realm of occult prophecy to foreshadow, that as the people, pressing upon Parliament, won from King John what is called the Magna Charta of English liberty, by a persistent and enforced demand; so, sooner or later, will the exigencies of the English common people, either by the peaceful means of political suffrage, or by the irresistible demands of the power of might, based on right, always resident in the people when their liberties are so far overborne as to be no longer bearable, win their rights in such restricted lands. The revolt which ended by securing the Magna Charta from King John, may not be compared with that which may result from the existent and pending calamities now pressing upon the English people. There then existed the necessity for restricting the prerogatives of the crown, the exercise of which was a continuing menace to personal and political freedom. The establishment of constitutional government removed the necessity under the provisions of the Magna Charta; and the remedy of wrong exercise of prerogative lies in a vote of want of confidence. The revolt which may result, and which must result if there is not the wisest kind of management upon the part of the sovereign and the Parliament, and the legal breaking down of the walls of reservation safeguarding those immense landed estates created in times past by royal will, segregating the aristocracy from the common people, will be an uprising of the whole people in bloody revolution. Take this estate of the Earl of Leicester as an instance: Twelve hundred and fifty farmers, each having a holding of forty acres are kept from occupying this estate; except as hirelings or tenants at will may do. Subdivided still closer into gardens and small holdings, such as would be made available to industry, in the climate and on the soil of England, and this estate would serve the necessities—not of twelve hundred and fifty merely, but of absolute thousands, could justice and right be made to prevail.

Take the instance of the Marquis of Bute, the extent of whose estate may be ascertained by a little careful inquiry, upon which a bare five hundred have entered, proposing to occupy a few acres each for the purpose of sowing a cereal from the proceeds of which to make a store for their coming necessities. By what right are they excluded from such occupation for such a purpose? By the right of legal enactment protecting the Marquis of Bute, his predecessors, and his successors in the sole possession and occupation for whatever use he or they may choose, and excluding all other persons from occupation for any use whatsoever.

It was possible under the feudal system, and with the smaller population long existing under such system, for the lord of an estate to so provide for his tenantry that there was no special aggravation to existence upon such estate. But in the wide expanding of England as a world power and the development of the British Isles into a manufacturing and commercial center, the conditions existing in feudal times have been changed, not only radically but irrevocably. Is it not time then, facing the problem of national existence and the absolute necessity for disposing of the pressure of the economic conditions of the realm, that consideration be given to the proper and just distribution of these overgrown estates? We believe it to be worthy of the best consideration that can be given it at the hands of the wisest statesmen of the empire, from the ruling monarch to him that may be of the people, and from the people, and for the people, in the ranks of the poorest.

We are moved to these suggestions, in a sense, because we see in our own land and under the laws of our own government, a disposition upon the part of some wealthy men to absorb immense tracts of country and to devote them to similiar uses as those prevailing upon these lordly estates in England. We are thinking of the increase of such a disposition among Americans to build up such large aggregations of landed wealth, to the exclusion of those whose necessities force them to toil and accept the meager occupation of a few square feet of land covered by a home more or less humble and equal to the necessities of a restricted existence only. These reflections are fraught with strong suspicion that there is an increasing necessity for the consideration upon the part of American statesmen to prevent the public domain becoming thus absorbed to private purpose and occupation upon the part of those whose selfishness and wealth have made them careless and indifferent to the welfare of the people.

There should be either a stop put to this excessive absorption of land, or there should be enacted and enforced such just laws regarding the proportion of taxation which these estates should bear, as would make their ostensible owners tired of carrying the burden of such estate. We used to sing, and that but a few years ago, that, "Uncle Sam is rich enough to give us all a farm." The years are so few since that was the burden of a popular song that it seems but a dream of yesterday; and yet the lands which belonged to Uncle Sam have been so restricted in their area by such reckless subsidies to railroad corporations and to grasping moneyed speculators that, "poor Uncle Sam" now has scarcely a garden spot to give a poor man for a cot and a cow stable, and even these where sometimes held are confiscated by the encroachment of some man of wealth who desires the land for the pleasures of his exclusive possession and caprice. It unfortunately happens that these selfish rich men who are seeking to build up these great estates are absorbing some of the finest and most desirable locations in the country; witness, for instance, the wide estate of an oil king in the Adirondacks. We might also notice the late effort to secure some eleven million acres of land in Texas, were it not for the fact that the syndicate trying to secure this land are doing so for colonization purposes; and, though some few individuals may finally secure independent fortunes, and build up wonderful places of residence, either in the regions secured or elsewhere, the purposes of the organization will leave the land open to purchase for a goodly series of years at least.

We do not see such a menace to the common people in the building of palatial residences in cities like London and New York, for the purpose of family occupation, as we do in shutting off the arable lands from the opportunity of the people to occupy as tillers of the soil, and for all agricultural purposes. In the first instance encroachment is made upon the wealthy, so far as the spaces of occupation on soil and in the air are concerned, and such occupation is accompanied by the expenditure of such sums for building and adornment and the care of them, as makes them a source of employment for many who are but accessories to such occupation and profit thereby. But the absorption of cultivatable lands away from centers of wealth and fashion are a menace to the general public. The masses, sooner or later, will feel the restriction thus imposed upon them. This subject is open to agitation at present everywhere; and while we do not agree to the attack made upon the right of individuals to hold title to land we believe there should be wholesome laws enacted and enforced by which the inherent rights of the people, whatever they may be, will be protected and conserved.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A county historical society was recently organized in Hancock County, Illinois. James Bolton, of Sonora, was elected president; J. C. Coulson, of Lahaerpe, Secretary. The society will have a rich historical field in which to work. For a period of years the history of our church was intimately connected with the history of Hancock County. It is to be hoped that we may secure correct representation in the annals of the new society.

Upton Sinclair is quoted in a press dispatch from San Francisco as saying that he is ashamed of the fact that he is married and that marriage is not a fit subject to discuss at the table. He says that while young and foolish he and his wife permitted a minister to mumble a few words over them, but they have since advanced. He is of the opinion that if marriage were abolished dissatisfied connubial partners could rustle around and find more suitable affinities. Upton Sinclair is the author of The Jungle, the book that a few years ago started an investigation of the packing houses. If correctly reported Upton might now be made a subject of investigation. He seems morally to be in some such a state as the packing houses were in at that time.

The bishop's report shows receipts, eight thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars and seventy-eight cents, and cash on hand eight hundred and forty-one dollars and forty-five cents.

Branch reports show a total membership in the stake of two thousand four hundred and seventy-seven.

Speakers during the conference were as follows: On Saturday evening E. B. Morgan; Sunday morning Heman C. Smith, and Sunday night J. M. Stubbart.

The sacrament-service Sunday afternoon was in charge of Patriarchs Alexander H. Smith and Joseph R. Lambert.

Two ordinations provided for by conference were attended to at this meeting. Roy Young, of the Evergreen Branch, and D. J. Williams, of the Hite-man Branch, were ordained to the office of priest.

The high wind of week before last caused a slight damage to the Herald Office roof by blowing off a portion of the gravel roofing. Repairs have been made.

Regular sacrament-services were held at the Homes in the afternoon and in the evening Elder

C. W. Dillon spoke at the Saints' Home and Elder E. B. Morgan at Liberty Home.

But two officers were absent from Sunday-school last Sunday and they were both away from home. Of the teachers only two were absent.

On Thursday and Friday preceding conference were held the stake conventions of the Religio and Sunday-school associations.

Intercession.

Doctor Horatius Bonar has put the prayer of Solomon into a poetic form to be sung to the tune "Intercession," by W. H. Calcott.

When the weary, seeking rest,
To thy goodness flee;
When the heavy laden cast
All their load on thee;
When the troubled, seeking peace,
On thy name shall call;
When the sinner, seeking life,
At thy feet shall fall;
Hear then in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling place on high.
When the worldling, sick at heart,
Lifts his soul above;
When the prodigal looks back
To his Father's love;
When the proud man from his pride
Stoops to seek thy face;
When the burdened brings his guilt
To thy throne of grace;
Hear then in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling place on high.
When the stranger asks a home,
All his toils to end;
When the hungry craveth food
And the poor a friend;
When the sailor on the wave
Bows the fervent knee;
When the soldier on the field
Lifts his heart to thee;
Hear then in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling place on high.
When the man of toil and care
In the city crowd;
When the shepherd on the moor
Names the name of God;
When the learned and the high,
Tired of earthly fame,
Upon higher joys intent,
Name the blessed name;
Hear then in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling place on high.
When the child, with grave, fresh lip,
Youth or maiden fair;
When the aged, weak and gray,
Seek thy face in prayer;
When the widow weeps to thee,
Sad and lone and low;
When the orphan brings to thee
All his orphan woe;
Hear then in love, O Lord, the cry,
In heaven, thy dwelling place on high.

The Straight Road

THREE REVELATIONS OF GOD'S WILL.

When God desired to give the children of Israel a tabernacle in which to worship him, he showed Moses in a vision how it was to be built, and told him to make all things pertaining to it "according to the pattern, which was showed thee in the mount." (Exodus 25:40.) These instructions were repeated to him on three different occasions. The Lord told him how large to make the tabernacle, how many curtains it was to contain, the size of each, and the color of them, also how many loops there should be in each, and that certain curtains should be made of goat hair, and how many, just where they should be put, and how they should hang. He also commanded that it should be covered with certain kinds of skins, dyed certain colors. The walls were to be of boards of certain kinds of wood, the Lord stating the length and width of each board, how many for each side of the building, and how many sockets were to be put in each board—how they were to be coupled together, how many rings, and how many sockets, and what they should be made of. He told how many bars, and of what material. He gave instruction as to what the veil should be made of—the color, and how it should be hung, also the nature of the hooks and sockets, and how many, just where the veil should hang, what was to be before it and what behind.

He ordered a table—an ark—a mercy-seat, a candlestick, and gave instructions of what each should be made, of their size to the very inch, which were to be made of gold, which of silver, and which of brass, even entering into the smallest details as to pins and hooks, and the number of cords and loops, also the length and width of the court. Why all these details? Because God was directing a building to please himself. Man may argue that all this was not necessary. What difference would it make, if there was one less hook? or one less pin? But God knew; and some day we will know.

When the time had arrived for Solomon to build a temple unto the Lord, he was shown the pattern of how it was to be built, and all the works of the pattern were given by revelation from God (see 1 Chronicles, chapter 28), with all the dimensions of the house, the rooms, the porch, the cherubim, and even the length of their wings was specified. The weight of the nails to be used was mentioned, and the material they were to be made of, the number of pillars, their finishings, the chains and ornaments to hang on them, the size of the altar, the color of the veil, the lavers, the candlesticks, and all pertaining thereto. Man might suppose that all this was unnecessary—that something else would answer as well. But God was directing to have it built as it pleased him, and in all the work there was no jar or discord. The stone was all cut, and made ready in the quarry, so perfectly, that when it was brought to its place, there was "neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building." (1 Kings 6:7.) God was directing in all the work, for it was his house.

When Jesus came as the Savior of man, representing God, he said, "I will build my church," and then he proceeded to do so. He chose twelve men and ordained them apostles. Then he called and ordained seventy elders. He said to the apostles, "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you." Here we see God doing the work—not man. That he really established the church is proved by the fact that he told the members that if they could not settle their difficulties otherwise, "tell it to the church." And "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." The church, then, was in existence. Paul, speaking of the organized body, says God set in the church, apostles, prophets, teachers, etc., (see I Corinthians 12:28) and, speaking of Christ, he says that before he ascended on high he gave gifts to men; he gave apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers; and they were given for the work of the ministry, and to continue until everybody was converted who should be saved. These are the officers God set in the church. Man may argue that they are no longer needed, or that others will do just as well; but God knows best. He knew what man must do to enter his church, and he who ordered all things for his tabernacle and temple revealed all that man must do to be saved. He revealed all pertaining to this doctrine. Jesus says, "My doctrine is not mine, but his [God's] that sent me." And Paul tells us that the principles of the doctrine of Christ are faith, repentance, baptisms, laying on of hands, resurrection, and eternal judgment. (See Hebrews 6:1, 2.) These principles form the doctrine of the true church; and, then, that we make no mistake in the matter, we are plainly told that there is one Lord, and one body, one faith, one hope, and one baptism, one fold, and one Shepherd, and by one Spirit we are all baptized into one body—church.

Man may argue that any church will do; but God has only one, and Christ is the head of it. It is his body, and no man can change it; for God hath "set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him." (1 Corinthians 12:18.) After Christ had organized the church, chosen its officers, preached the gospel, introduced its doctrine, he said to God, his Father, "I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do." (John 17:4.) No man has any right to tinker with that finished work.

Christ, realizing that in this church and by these doctrines, only, could man be saved, said, concerning the gospel, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

THE CHURCH; AND DUTIES OF THE SAINTS IN TEMPORAL THINGS.—PART I.

BY THE BISHOPRIC.

[EDITORS' NOTE.—This article is reprinted at the request of the Presiding Bishop. It appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD, March 1, 1884, and was signed by G. A. Blakeslee and E. L. Kelley of the Bishopric at that time.]

To the Saints, the faithful in Christ, and to all everywhere who are devoted to the proclamation of his gospel: The year just closed must be looked back upon by us all, as having been one which afforded as many opportunities for accomplishing good, preaching the gospel and working righteousness, as perhaps any that have come and gone in the history of the church.

What has actually been done by us, individually and as a body, toward the advancement of such good, carrying on the proclamation of the word, and fulfilling the law—will bear its relationship to these opportunities in the time when we shall render a just and true account of our stewardships unto him, who is faithful and true, the Lord of all, and head of the church.

And the opportunities which have been improved, those neglected, and of the number which shall open up during the year of which we are now at the entrance, will bear a relationship to each other, to each of us, to the rewards to be rendered, and the general work of establishing the gospel of peace, in proportion as we shall now enter and occupy as commanded in his word, with all our energies, ability and strength.

Mindful of these things, and of the strictness with which all must render unto the Lord an account of their work, it is with no ordinary feeling of duty and responsibility, that the Bishopric have determined to appeal directly to you in behalf of that department of church work of which they have the more immediate concern and oversight, and which holds so important a place in the building up and establishment of the gospel cause.

The unanswered calls for spiritual laborers; the large number of ministers confining themselves almost wholly to the work of providing for their families; the absence of that spiritual strength among many of the churches that should specially characterize the work; and the difficulty on the part of the church to care for the necessities of the families of active ministers, and for the care and relief of the poor and afflicted, are all tokens bearing evidence of a great lack of duty on the part of the body in some regard; and it shall here be sufficient to simply refer to the fact, without attempting to charge the blame upon any definitive part or portion of the same.

Lest, however, it should prove to be in the line of our own work, and by way of caution and duty, and for the purpose of placing that department known as the "temporal," in such condition that it may fairly aid and support the spiritual, in going forward in strength, and vigorously prosecuting the work of preaching the gospel and building up the kingdom of heaven; herein the assistance of all, the good will of all, the blessings and prayers of all, and the offerings and sacrifices of all are urged and invoked in behalf of the work, and particularly this branch of it; realizing as we do that the temporal department is not now, nor ever has, since the organization of the church in 1830, been placed in that condition, and made that refuge and support to the work of the ministry and church in its general duties, that is clearly designed for it under the law as contained in the scriptures and revelations.

As individuals and all members of the same body, with equal rights and liberties thereunder, we should be equally interested in the welfare and building up of that body; and the first thought on the part of every one should be to ask what particular work and duty is required of him in the way of building. And when the answer is had to this inquiry, the next step should be to go forward and perform that work with a firm determination, an eye single to the glory of God and the good of the body, without stopping to inquire, or without reference to the fact, of whether the brother or sister upon the right, or the left, will perform his or her part or not.

It is the labor thus performed, with full purpose of heart and in wisdom under the law, that truly enters fittingly into the structure of this spiritual house, or as has been most tersely said: "According to the effectual working in the measure of every part"; wrought under the true and fashioning influences of the Holy Spirit, in love working unto him who is the head, even Christ:

From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.—Ephesians 4: 16.

Equal interests ought to make themselves manifest in equal works. Not that one should do just as much as another; for much more may be required of one than another in amount, whether of a spiritual laborer in teaching, or of a temporal, in acquiring and making of offerings: but equal in the sense of each doing all that he can for the success and growth of this spiritual structure, having consecrated himself and all that he has to the service and glory of God. He who has received of goods to the amount of two talents, must employ the two; and he who has received five, must occupy accordingly; for "to every man" is distributed, "according to his several ability." And when the final rewards are made up, the equality is still recognized.

It is said alike to him who had wrought according to his two talents, and to him who had wrought with the five: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

This equality of interest enjoined in the law on the part of every one, is calculated of itself, to dispel and check the jarrings, contentions, envyings, strife, and lustful and covetous desires, which otherwise creep in and corrupt the body. For a man will not readily do that which he perceives to be against the success of that in which his highest interest centers; hence, the urgent necessity of calling the attention of the church to these things, as set forth in the revelations in its earlier days (see Book of Covenants sections 102 and 98), and the plain and specific declaration then made, that, "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself." And the fact stated is evident with very little reflection; for if this law is ignored in the prosecution of the work, if the work was finished and not by right rule, it would be so unlike him, having been fashioned by another law, that it would bear no resemblance or likeness to his will, or heavenly things.

It is not only a question of the building up and growth of the work that we are required to look to, but manner and means as well; and it will be found just as vain and useless, for us as any other people, to do our work, "teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."

The law was given for the purpose of preparing a people to be the Lord's. That part relating to things spiritual and the spirituality of man, for the purpose of directing the growth and development of his spiritual nature; of so guiding and leading him as to bring him into closer communion and more perfect rapport with those things which relate to heaven and the divine being. That relating to temporal things, to so direct and govern him in these, as to bring into subjection the evil and grosser nature, such as covetousness, selfishness, strife and the many unjust desires to which we are subject; and to aid in the development of those qualities closely allied to the spiritual, of morality, virtue and beneficence; and thus bring out the higher qualities of the human heart and character. On the principle that "he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" And this love, as the other, is manifest by the works of the law. "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments and his commandments are not grievous." He will remember Jesus' cause and its interests; care with a more willing heart for the poor and needy, and go forward with kindness to the suffering, relieving the destitute; "visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the vices of the world."

Thus, the law of Christ governing in both spiritual and temporal relations, will certainly accomplish the work whereunto it has been established; for God is true and his covenants are certain. But should his law not be permitted to govern, it can not and will not bring about that peace in which our hope is bound; since it is only under its operations that the building up of the kingdom of righteousness is possible. There is manifestly a higher and more controlling purpose to be seen in the commitment of the law relating to temporal matters, than that of worldly gain, or the bringing of a few coffers into the treasury. If wealth, or means, were all that is lacking in order to the building up and establishing the kingdom of God, he who created the wealth of the world and controls all things, could readily supply the want; but there must be a prepared people as well as means; and he who is unchangeable has established the way of this preparation, the regeneration and development of the children, and this preparation must first be made. "Prepare ye the way of the Lord and make his paths straight," is fairly illustrative of the principle.

This brings us to face fairly the issue of the relationship of the work to, and our respective duties under, the law. And it will become well the purpose of this article, if we shall succeed in clearly pointing out some of those which are termed duties in temporal things, together with some proper reasons for their performance; treating the subject, if possible, as to the parties and their obligations; the intent and purpose of the giver; the amount required under the law; and the method and manner of giving.

I. OF THE PARTIES AND THEIR OBLIGATIONS.

The church in the New Testament is likened to a family; a household; temple; body; and in the body "every one members one of another"; in the temple as "lively stones"; children of the house over which is Christ; a family whose branches extend into heaven: implying clearly in each illustrative symbol, a relationship of duty, of mutual obligations, and dependence on the part of the membership upon each other, and upon Jesus who is the head. Hence, the leading and chief characteristics of this association are and were to be, the unity of the Spirit; of intention; of works; of faith, and hope; for to be a member indeed, one must "put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness," and labor for the full accomplishment of the one purpose of the body, as he would for the success of an undertaking only in his own interest.

Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, in one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.—Ephesians 4: 3, 4, Inspired Translation.

By the discharge of these duties and obligations under the law do we work righteousness, "put on robes of righteousness"; and they who fail to labor in accordance with their abilities, are even in a worse condition than they who build of wood, hay, or stubble. These last do not take heed how they build, and their works will not stand in that day, when "the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." But of the former, it is said, they are "slothful servants"; "have not on the wedding garments"; they had not attempted to do the bidding of the master of the house, and must be expelled therefrom.

So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.—Luke 12: 21.

The rich and the poor are to abide the principles of the law, and each let their works be manifest in the same according to the ability given to perform. (See Book of Covenants, 56: 5.)

The apostle urging these common duties upon the church at Corinth says:

Now concerning the collection for the Saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.—1 Corinthians 16: 1, 2.

The only exceptions possible under this instruction would be to those who have not anything; and of whom it is stated, "ye shall impart of that which you have to give" for their relief.

The revelation of 1831, is also thus general in its application to parties, for the particular blessings which it promises, are not only for a part, but made to, and desirable on the part of all.

Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning: this is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, To-morrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts; and I will not spare any that remaineth in Babylon. Wherefore, if ye believe me, ye will labor while it is called to-day.—Book of Covenants 64: 5.

This again, is in harmony with the general application of the law as it related to Israel under the prophets.

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation.—Malachi 3: 8, 9.

When Jesus refers to these duties on the part of the people he associates them with those matters considered more worthy under the law, and urges the importance of fulfilling this part with all others:

But I say unto you, Woe be unto you, Pharisees! For ye tithe the mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment, and the love of God; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 42, Inspired Translation.

The duty originally, is made as general as the gifts and blessings of God, of life and the means of living, unto the human family; and is one of the agencies that has been ordained by him who is the judge of all, by which to try the human family, as he saith through the prophet:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.—Malachi 3: 10.

The instruction to the Saints, in 1873, should encourage them to vie with each other in works that are good and calculated to benefit mankind.

Behold, if my servants and my handmaidens, of the different organizations for good among my people, shall continue in righteousness, they shall be blessed, even as they bless others of the household of faith.—Book of Covenants 117: 12.

When David celebrated before the Lord the gifts made by the willing hearts of Israel he unfolded the theory upon which man may justly be called upon to aid the work of the kingdom of heaven. He says:

Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee.—1 Chronicles 29: 13, 14.

Clearly, then, if we have part and lot in the kingdom, we are of the parties referred to, as having duties connected therewith; either in being specially engaged in sowing the seed, the good word of the kingdom, or in the position of one who, "ministereth seed to the sower," or possibly both; let us therefore not deceive ourselves as those who have no "oil in their vessels," but labor that our vessels may be found filled, and ready to meet the hour of necessity, when the cry shall go forth, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

II. OF THE INTENT AND PURPOSE OF THE GIVER.

To perform the duties required under the law, it is necessary both for the attainment of the objects for which the law was given, and as a complete compliance with the same, that we do so voluntarily; from pure motives; in faith; and with full intention and desire to fulfill all that our heavenly Father has enjoined. In support of this general principle the following citations are given which are sufficiently explicit without comment.

Jesus says:

Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them: otherwise ye have no reward of your Father which is in heaven. . . . But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth: that thine alms may be in secret: and thy Father which seeth in secret himself shall reward thee openly.—Matthew 6: 1, 3, 4.

He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity.—Paul, Romans 12: 8.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver.—2 Corinthians 9: 7.

And again, Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God.—Book of Mormon, p. 178.

In the scriptures of the Old Testament the same good will is taught as having been required on the part of Israel, and without which there could be no acceptable offering.

Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering.—Exodus 25: 2. Thou shalt not harden thine heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother: but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth.—Deuteronomy 15: 7, 8.

It is not by "close fists," nor with doubtful countenances, that the work must be done; but by "opening the hand wide"—"with the heart willingly."

Indeed, this is the only way we can fully comply with any requirement in the kingdom of God. And because men do not reach this plane of action, moving "by the renewing of the mind" and conversion of the heart in their work, they must fail of the reward promised in this life, and be of the number of whom it is said, they "seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Whether we will or not is optional with ourselves; nevertheless the testimony of God standeth sure; and the promises are made to those who obey him from the heart, fervently. Under such a principle of action as this it is not possible to treat man as a mere machine; neither to force or oppress a people.

There is no room for the "do as ye are told" policy, or the popular church schemes for "fleecing the flock" to take root. For men and women act under the conviction of an enlightened conscience and more from the principles of force entering into the government of beings in the divine life of conviction of duty and desire for good.

(To be concluded.)

One must be in earnest about some good thing, or he remains one of the multitude.

IS AVARICE TRIUMPHANT?

"Seek not for riches, but for wisdom, and behold, the mysteries of God shall be unfolded unto you, and then shall you be made rich; behold he that hath eternal life is rich."

The excessive love of gain seems to predominate in the greater part of this world, and, as the unceasing clamor for wealth is heard day by day, we listen and wonder what the outcome will be. There is a plausible though indirect solution of it as follows: James says, "Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days," and shows clearly that the concentration of wealth in the last days must be the work of Satan, and not of God. That the world, with its corrupt monetary system, can not be reformed, for a complete reorganization is necessary; that the love of money is the root of all evil, or greed for gain is the world's great crime for which destruction is the only remedy.

If our Lord and Savior were allowed to govern men's actions, and the perfect law be adhered to, then this world of ours would certainly undergo a change. Now the Saints of the Most High must be instrumental in bringing about this change; for the love of God must engender humility and honesty. We are exhorted to diligence, but let the love for our brethren, neighbors, and all with whom we come in contact be pure, and unselfish; for, sooner or later, our gains, honest or illgotten, must be left behind. "The foundation of my everlasting kingdom," he saith, "truly shall be laid upon the earth in the hearts of men; but the building is with God, eternal in the heavens. The tomb through which I have passed is the gate, and all who would come after me, and enter in, must follow in my footsteps." So let us, as Saints, thrust in our sickles and reap while the day lasts, that we may treasure up for our souls everlasting salvation in the kingdom of God.

DAISY FAULKNER.

To many of us our world is made of little things. The grasshopper is a burden, and an unkind word will break us. A bit of crepe induces a multitude of memories, and we are ready to weep. A little epigram awakens the lost ideal and sets the tide of a new purpose shoreward. A hand-clasp often makes us love a man and take him into the bosom of our life for weal or woe. Tremendous issues lie in the trifles, and a word has again and again been a fulcrum of incalculable leverage.—Selected.

Of General Interest

A MODERN RESCUE AT SEA.

The Outlook for February 6 contains Captain Ranson's account of the rescue of the passengers from the ill-fated Republic. His story of the long search for the Republic and the methods used in locating her is of surpassing interest, and besides the thrill of adventure it gives one an understanding of the methods and appliances in use on modern sea-going vessels. The editor of the Outlook contrasts the conduct of the passengers and crews of the various ships involved with the conduct of the crew of the vessel that figures in a certain account of shipwreck recorded in the Acts of the Apostles. In the latter case the crew attempted to escape in the one boat at hand leaving the passengers to perish. In two thousand years a change for the better has taken place if the two incidents are representative of their times. We quote Captain Ranson's account:

On the morning of the disaster we had already made the Nantucket lightship by the submarine bell. The Baltic was inward bound for New York from Liverpool, and we were going at a reduced speed in a very heavy fog. We had located the lightship about midnight, and had proceeded about eighty miles to the westward. At seven-fifteen on that Saturday morning the wireless operator came rushing up to me on the bridge,—he did not take time to write the message on the usual printed form, but had put it down on the first slip of paper he could lay his hands on—and handed me this message: "The Republic dangerously. Latitude 40:17 north; longitude 70 west." You can see from the wording of this message, from which some such word as "injured" is apparently omitted after the word "dangerously," in what urgent haste it was sent. It came from the wireless station at Siasconset, on the island of Nantucket. My first move was to throw the helm hard a-starboard and make for the position of the Republic with all possible speed. We knew her latitude and longitude, and our job was to find her in the thickest kind of fog. At that time we were sixty-four miles from the position given us in the first message from the Republic, but of course she was drifting all the time, and during our twelve hours' search I estimate we traveled two hundred miles in our zigzag course before we found her, and all within a sea area of ten square miles.

But before I go on with the story I might explain the three scientific methods which we employed in our hunt for the drifting Republic. These were wireless telegraphy, the submarine bell and telephone system, and Sir William Thompson's apparatus for sounding. Wireless telegraphy you are doubtless familiar with. Almost all passenger vessels, as well as naval ships, are supplied with it, and can communicate with each other or with the stations on land within a radius of two hundred miles. A wireless message can not convey to you the definite position of a moving vessel. The electric waves from a wireless instrument move in a circle. It is like throwing a stone into the water, and the stronger you throw the stone the farther the wavelets go; so, if you get a distress call, the vessel sending it may be anywhere in any direction within a circle of two hundred miles, of which the sending vessel is the center. Of course a vessel in trouble can send her latitude and longitude, and that helps to locate her. But if you are in a fog and have lost your reckoning, wireless will not help you much in regard to the position of the land. But a submarine bell will. The Nantucket lightship, like all modern lightships in this country, Great Britain, and the Continent of Europe, has a submarine bell which is kept constantly ringing—by compressed air I believe. The sound waves go out below the surface of the water and can be heard for a distance of seventeen miles by passing ships with the proper instruments installed. On my ship, for example, there are two apertures on either side of the bow which you might call submarine ears. They are connected by wires with a telephone receiver on the bridge. By listening at this telephone and switching the instrument from the starboard "ear" to the port "ear" and back again, you can hear the faint tones of the lightship's submarine bell when you get in range of it. If the tone is louder through the starboard "ear" than through the port "ear," you know the lightship is on your starboard side. If the tone is exactly the same through both "ears," you know the lightship is dead ahead. This apparatus helped me greatly, as I shall explain later, in finding the Republic.

The third method I employed, in connection with the wireless telegraph and submarine bell, was Sir William Thompson's sounding apparatus. The Baltic was equipped with this appliance, and we could take soundings to the depth of one hundred fathoms while going at full speed. Employing the ordinary method of a sounding lead attached to a rope, you have to stop your ship dead to take a sounding. The modern appliance is attached to a wire like a piano string, and it goes to the bottom, records the depth, and is hoisted to the deck again without the ship's speed being retarded a second. Moreover, the weight at the end of the wire is filled with a substance—often just common brown soap—to which some of the soil or sand or mud of the bottom of the sea sticks. An examination of this material, which is frequently described on the charts or is known from previous experience, helps to locate your position.

This explanation will enable you to understand a little better, perhaps, how we pursued the Republic all day long, like a hound on the scent, and finally found her, at about half-past six in the evening, after steering and zigzagging about all day. The Republic's position, as I have already said, kept constantly changing in the fog, and, as fast as I could get to a point of latitude and longitude noted in the last wireless message received, Captain Sealby on the Republic would have moved, involuntarily of course, to another. I was getting wireless messages thick and fast all the time from Captain Sealby on the Republic, from the Company's office in New York, via Siasconset, and from the other ships which had joined in the search for the Republic in response to the "C. Q. D." distress call, of which we have heard so much during the past few days. This is a general danger signal to all ships equipped with wireless apparatus within range, and warns them to be on the alert to render help if necessary. The initials "C. Q. D." may naturally be supposed to stand for "Come Quick! Danger!" The message I received was as follows:

"Hear general call and message repeated. Republic fifteen miles south of Nantucket light vessel. Requires immediate assistance. Do utmost to reach her. "SIASCONSET."

Among the ships responding to the "C. Q. D." message were the Lucania, La Lorraine, the Furnessia, the New York, and the Gresham and the Seneca, the latter two being United States Government vessels. You can easily imagine that our operator was kept pretty busy receiving these messages and sending them to the bridge, and that on the bridge we were kept busy, not merely responding to them by wireless replies, but changing the course of our ship in response to the directions or instructions which they gave. As a matter of fact, it may literally be said that my ship, the Baltic, was steered some of the time by Captain Sealby on the Republic. For example, read these messages from Captain Sealby:

[Here Captain Ranson selected from a pile of a hundred or more telegrams written on the thin paper blanks of the Marconi Company the following dispatches, apologizing for their somewhat bedraggled appearance, which he explained was due to the fog and rain that enveloped the Baltic's bridge, where they had been received and read.—Editor Outlook.]

"You are getting louder. Keep steering east-southeast. Listen for our ship's bell. "SEALBY."

"Steer southeast now. "SEALBY."

But it was not only these direct instructions that helped me, which were received, of course, after we were near enough to the Republic so that she could hear our whistle and the bombs we were firing. Some of Captain Sealby's telegrams helped me by inference. For example, quite early in the day I received this wireless:

"Have picked up Nantucket by submarine bell bearing north-northeast. Sounding thirty-five fathoms. "SEALBY."

Now this gave me very important and useful information. I knew that the Nantucket lightship's bell could be heard by the submarine telephone not over seventeen miles, and that therefore the Republic must be within a radius of seventeen miles from the lightship. Consequently, when I could not hear the submarine bell myself, I knew that I was outside of the Republic's position. In the second place, I knew the Republic was in thirty-five fathoms of water. So we kept sounding continually, and as soon as we struck forty fathoms we changed our course to strike thirty-five fathoms, for I knew there was no use of our being in forty fathoms when they were in thirty-five; and so it was when we got near enough to the Republic for them to hear our whistle. When I received a message from Captain Sealby saying, "We heard your whistle, but it has gone out of range now," we immediately changed our course to get within range again. Here are some of the messages received during the day that indicate the kind of wireless conversation that was continually going on:

"Lucania says please listen for his four blasts."

"Republic says we can hear a bomb to the west of us. Is it you?"

"La Lorraine says he hears Republic's bell, and is steering straight towards him."

"La Lorraine says tell Captain Ranson we are blowing a whistle, not a horn. Please make as much noise as possible."

"Have not heard Lucania, but she is still around. Am in touch with Lorraine. "SEALBY."

"Lorraine and Baltic ask Republic if he hears bell, bomb, or whistle. He replies he hears steamer's whistle, and thinks we both must be close to him. "BALTIC OPERATOR."

"Republic operator says, 'We are sinking rapidly.' We are keeping everything clear and standing by for Republic's signals. "BALTIC OPERATOR."

"Captain Baltic: Am cruising round trying to locate you. "CAPTAIN LUCANIA."

"Captain Baltic: There is a bomb bearing northwest from me. Keep firing. "SEALBY."

"Siasconset says hear from Republic; says to Baltic to hurry; they are sinking fast. "BALTIC OPERATOR."

"Tell Captain Ranson steer northeast at once. "SEALBY."

"Furnessia [which had turned round to render assistance—The Editors.] now thirty-five miles west Nantucket. Will take three hours to get back. "SIASCONSET."

"Captain Ranson: Can we be of any assistance? If not, will proceed to New York, as we have hardly enough coal to reach port."

"You are very close now. Right a-beam. Come carefully. You are on our port side. Have just seen your rocket. You are very close to us. "SEALBY."

These messages, taken at random from scores of others, may seem somewhat matter-of-fact to you, but I can assure you they meant a good deal to us on the bridge of the Baltic, and they indicate how we had to feel our way. After twelve hours' search zigzagging and circling in the fog, changing our course as each new bit of information came by wireless, we at last found the Republic. We came within a hundred feet of the ship before we could see anything, and then we saw only the faint glare of a green light they were burning—like the illumination you burn on the Fourth of July. The ship's sidelights we could not distinguish, and that was why there was no real use in sending up rockets, although we did so constantly on the chance of their being seen. The passengers had already been taken aboard the Florida, so there was no anxiety about them. The Florida was still well afloat and there was no danger of her going down, so the first thing for us to do was to transfer the crew from the Republic to our ship. Later we steamed to the Florida and took off the passengers of both ships. As far as I could ascertain, the number taken from the Florida was 1,516 people. There was quite a nasty sea running, and a thick fog. We went to leeward; we did not dare to go to windward of the Florida, as we should have been blown on top of her. The process of transfer was simple enough. We started at eleven o'clock on Saturday night, and the crews of the three ships, the Republic, the Florida, and the Baltic, rowed back and forth in the Republic's lifeboats, and finished the next morning about eight o'clock. Both passengers and crews behaved remarkably well, but I am sure it seemed to them a perfectly simple and natural thing to do, although of course somewhat uncomfortable. The unusual thing about it was that the Republic's passengers were transferred twice for reasons of safety within a comparatively few hours, on the open sea and in small boats. This has never occurred before in my experience.

You ask why Captain Sealby felt that he must stick by his ship even at great personal risk. It is true that he and his second officer were the only ones on board when the Republic finally foundered, and were thrown into the sea and rescued with some difficulty on account of the darkness. They ran this risk, not in the least to indulge in pyrotechnics, for Captain Sealby is not that kind of a man, but for two very good reasons. First, it is a tradition of the sea that a captain must stick to his ship until the last hope is gone, and that then he must be the last one to leave her. In the second place, if he should abandon his ship even with the conviction that she was hopelessly lost, and then some other vessel or seaman should come along and save her, his own judgment could very easily be questioned, and his reputation as a resourceful and trustworthy commander would be irretrievably ruined. As to the work involved, it was hard for everybody concerned, but that is a part of the trade. During the time of the search I was where I had to be, of course, on the bridge. I went up about six o'clock Friday morning and stayed there until we docked at one o'clock on Monday afternoon—about eighty hours. Food? My food was brought to me up. Sleep? Why, no, I was there on the bridge walking around. I couldn't have slept even had I gone below. However, that is nothing unusual; we often have two or three days on the bridge without rest in bad weather, and the effect is usually that one can not sleep for some time afterward. For instance, on Monday night, after I got ashore and was free from all responsibility, I could not sleep.

Yes, all these modern appliances which aided us in our search for the Republic add greatly to the safety of passengers. These modern devices for safety in navigation correspond to the block signal system in railroad travel. Of course we have our lookout up on the crow's-nest, who calls out "All's well," just as the lookout did before modern safeguards were thought of. We have had the submarine bell apparatus on all the White Star ships for about five years. It is comparatively recent invention. American? Yes, an American invention—from Boston, I believe.

I see no reason to think that we have reached the climax of invention for safety devices in navigation. There is always something new. Who would have thought ten years ago of wireless messages to be used in saving life at sea? Nobody dreamed of it; and it is quite possible to conceive that other discoveries may be made of equal benefit to navigation. There is no question about it—the passenger on a well-equipped transatlantic liner is safer than he can be anywhere else in the world.

Parental Responsibility.

FLORENCE R. SMITH.

My paper this evening is on parental responsibility, and I feel incapable of presenting to you all its beautiful and characteristic features; I see before me many mothers who will be able to understand the great privilege and greater responsibility which has been bestowed upon them from that divine source whence flows life. There have been times when I have paused in wonder and astonishment in meditating upon the creation of man and how God, the creator of this universe, yes, of worlds upon worlds, chose woman to be a helper with him. And as he presented to her the tiny spirit he also gave her the privilege of giving it physical life, of molding that little soul, body, and spirit. Or we might say he has given us the framework and we are to finish and beautify.

I will agree with you it is a work that causes one almost to shrink, the responsibility is so great and humanity is so human. As we look around us we see mistakes strewn all along our path where others before us have trod, and in sheer weakness we shrink from the path of motherhood.

How often we hear said, "God is love." Do not these little ones come from God? Are they not a part of God, made in his own image? The very breath we breathe emanates from him, and this great gift to woman comes with the purest love the world has ever known.

It has been said and truly so, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." She is a queen in her own home. She is the legislator of the household. She is the judge that sits upon the throne of love and all severity should come from love in a mother's hand. And while anxiety of mind may come at times, causing tears to flow, and sleepless nights, always bear in mind, this work has been given you from God and he wants you to do it cheerfully, thoughtfully, and prayerfully. This kind of a parent need have no fear her prayers will fall to the ground unanswered. God's guiding hand who knows how and when to "temper the wind to the shorn lamb," will remember hers.

The first thing to be considered in the line of duty is, How shall we feed and clothe these little ones? We might hear one say, "Oh, that is easy enough; clothe them as you feel you can afford and make them eat what you have; this catering to children I have no use for."

This is your first mistake. You are tilling the ground now. Be sure that it is cleared of stones, take time to clear it of weeds, that the first strong wind will not snatch your tender plant from you leaving a desolate waste. How often we have seen a little baby, perhaps not more than ten or fifteen months old, munching a hard, greasy doughnut in its chubby hand. And perchance you will hear the mother say, "See how my baby likes doughnuts; it is hard and good for his teeth." Can you imagine anything more disastrous to the life of an infant than that soggy mass lying on that frail stomach to sour and cause colic? The little digestive organs are incapable of doing this unnatural work, consequently the little suffering body becomes impoverished, weakens, and finally drifts away to the unknown shore—strewn with little barks of like conditions.

God in his great wisdom, I believe, has provided every mother with that fountain of sustenance where her offspring might draw and be nourished until the child shows teeth. Then I understand, if the baby is not too young, nature calls for stronger food, such as milk, wheat cereals, and light fruit sparingly.

Some time ago I was in the company of two young girls of Irish parentage and one was the picture of health and strength, her flesh white and firm, cheeks all aglow with color and beauty of youth, so much so that I remarked to the elder one how well her cousin looked.

She made answer, "You would never think she had been subject to fits when she was a child, would you?"

I answered, "I never should; tell me what has caused this great change?"

"Well," she replied, "I hardly know. The doctors did all that science suggested and that did not help, when one said we must now resort to diet. Take meat away entirely, give simple food, such as milk, vegetables, cereals, and fruit plentifully. The result is what you see."

To me it was wonderful. I have not forgotten the lesson, and yet to Latter Day Saints this is nothing new. God has told us what is good for man and he never errs.

Now in regard to clothing, which we all will confess is most necessary. Yet you may not agree with me when I say, Dress your growing children, your youths and maidens, in the costumes of the day. Not conspicuous by its many color and not to create pride, but in sweet simplicity of modern times. When God said he would have a peculiar people, I do not think he meant peculiar in dress. Have we not heard remarks like this, for instance?

"I met Jennie Blank to-day and she looked just lovely."

"Is that so? What did she have on?"

"Well, I do not know what she did have on, but she was very neat. I noticed that, and so wholesome looking that one could not help but feel the budding dignity of approaching womanhood."

Then again, is it not just as easy to dress your children in garments that will fit instead of being a spectacle of ridicule in the eyes of their companions.

Patched pants or darned stockings are no disgrace to any child, but ragged garments are humiliating to the most sensitive child, and jesting remarks from their associates are like north winds, chilling budding inspirations and dwarfing its early bloom.

It has been said, "Appearance goes a long way." "First impressions sway most people's minds." Perchance there are mothers who are poor and do not know how to make over their children's garments, never having the opportunity to learn. But is this hardly an excuse to-day when there are so many sewing-schools you can send your growing girl to once a week or to attend yourself one night a week and there be taught the art of making and making over to the saving of your own pocketbook and the satisfaction of knowing how? Do not lose sight of the old adage: "Where there's a will there's a way."

But we find there is something else to do besides feeding and clothing. How shall we educate them? This subject has been so widely written of by able and more efficient writers that I feel it almost presumptuous to express what I might think of the matter. However, this much can be said: Give great consideration to the education of your children. When I say consideration I mean "be wise." Perchance, while you are sending your fifteen-year-old boy or girl to school, debts are accumulating. There are younger ones to be clothed and fed. Your wife has had a long siege of sickness or perhaps little Johnnie is a cripple and needs constant care, and yet the rent must be paid, fuel and food must be bought, till it becomes a constant fight to keep the wolf from the door.

Did it ever occur to you parents that the son should share the anxieties and aid in lifting the burdens? The boy of fifteen will be made more of a man—the kind the world needs, by giving up school for one or two years to help lift the debt than by remaining at his books, conscious that his parents are troubled and distressed over bills and that he is adding to their expense. A parent who shields him from a knowledge of these difficulties does him a great wrong. However much they desire to give him a happy childhood, they must remember that a sense of personal responsibility is one of the greatest factors in the development of character. Benjamin Franklin and Abraham Lincoln were not pampered darlings of parents who shielded them from all care. Both were doing their share of self-support and aiding others at the age of sixteen. Innumerable other cases could be cited among the greatest men of history. Now, do not think for one moment that I do not favor education by speaking as I have, because I believe education is the greatest problem of civilization the world has ever presented to the human race. It is the means whereby men have attained almost unlimited heights. How many of you that have seen children that had not passed the age of ten or twelve years working in a mill or factory! My heart has turned sick at the very sight. Children battling for life with a millstone hung on their necks. This is what I call crime and a great injustice to our offspring, dwarfing not only mind but also soul and body.

Give your children a fair chance, a common-school education, to say the least, and then if poverty is knocking too hard at the door, place in your boy's hand the staff of self-reliance, faith, honesty, and industry. Knowledge is power; ignorance is inexcusable.

Can we not all thank God for good books? Are they not voices of the distant and the dead and make us heirs of the spiritual life of past ages and in touch with the revealed word of God to-day? Books are true levelers. They will enlarge your thinking faculty, give it quickening impulses, and lead the mind upward to all that is glorious and divine in the world of intellect. Encourage your boy or girl to read the very best. I would suggest that the church literature be scattered plentifully around your home; but not that alone, for are we not admonished to read all good books?

The brain is a harp of many strings and that all might be attuned with all that is beautiful and elevating, strengthen with proper material, and pure and complete harmony will be the result.

Emerson says, "Man is his own star and the soul that can render an honest and a perfect man, commands all light." One need not pine for want of intellectual companionship when they can drink deep from the fountain of knowledge drawn from the pen of so many writers that time will not allow me to mention. Keep your home clear of cheap novels; such literature will ruin the prospects of the brightest child and has done so. As the seed is sown so the fruit will be. And if parents are careful along these lines almost unconsciously they have builded a spiritual foundation for their children to stand upon, and their social environment will be of the very best because their training has made it so.

I believe a parent's most trying time with a son is from the age of fourteen up to manhood; and with a girl, sixteen years up to womanhood. At that time a boy will want to wade out in deeper waters. There is a love of the venture-some naturally there, and if he feels the draw-strings of mother's apron holding him back, he wants to cut loose and show mother he is capable to look out for himself. He thinks he would like to smoke cigarets like the other boys, or have a quiet game of pool, perhaps an occasional vaudeville. This is all innocent pleasure to him. He fails to see the whirlpools. True, they are but small at first, but as he wades out farther he feels the strong suction which gradually drags down to degradation and ruin.

It is at this time his eyes will be open to the danger-signals his mother had planted along the way, like these, for instance: "My son, your moral worth will be graduated by the amount of temptation you overcome. Victory depends upon the nature of the conflict and the odds overcome. Tell the truth at all times and under all circumstances, and you will be as much a hero as one crowned on the battle-field. Dare to stand for the right though you stand alone. Forsake evil companions, for by your associates you will be judged."

As his eyes turn back, he remembers her sayings. How often he had rushed in from school in boyish hurry and found mother praying God to protect her boy. And like bread cast upon the waters it returns after many days. These tender memories, like an anchor to the soul, steady him from a shipwrecked life and after the storm he reaches safety in the harbor of rest secure.

One of the most serious blunders parents frequently make is concerning the occupation or calling of their sons. The world is full of square men in round holes. Many have made shipwrecks of themselves and of their prospects by rushing thoughtlessly into some business or profession for which nature never intended them. Dean Swift says,

"Brutes will find out where their talents lie.

A bear will not attempt to fly.

A foundered horse will not oft debate

Before he tries a five-barred gate;

A dog by instinct turns aside

Who sees the ditch too deep and wide."

Have you not heard parents make remarks like this: "I intend my son shall be a doctor when he gets through school." Or it might be a lawyer, when perhaps the boy's natural adaptability would be as foreign to these professions as the north is to the south. Let every mother teach her boys that life is duty, and if they are taught how to wash dishes and sew on buttons, they will be the better for having known how. Teach your boy to be industrious, to work and to fit himself for some occupation in life; but let him choose what that work will be.

Also, that it is not money or rich, influential parents which make a success of life, but honesty, perseverance, and industry. Some of the greatest men the world has ever known were the sons of poor and obscure parents. Demosthenes was the son of a cutler. Franklin was the son of a tallow candler and soap-boiler. Napoleon was of an obscure family. Daniel Webster was a farm boy. Cornelius Vanderbilt laid the foundation of his vast fortune with fifty dollars given him by his mother. Stephen Girard left his native country at the age of twelve years as a cabin-boy. He was never too proud to work, and when he became a rich man he delighted in telling that he commenced life with a sixpence and he declared a man's best capital was his industry.

Teach your children that in spite of all adverse circumstances they may by hard work, close application, and unconquerable perseverance, rise above the low places of poverty and obscurity, or if they never shine in the galaxy of the great ones of the earth, they may fill their lives and homes with blessings and make the world better that they had lived.

The old adage says, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," and as a little pleasure is like sunshine to the clouded brow, what will the nature of the pleasure be for our children? As I am talking principally to parents of Latter Day Saints, I would advise that this pleasure be found in the company of church associates. For instance, if the young are trying to get up a supper or garden fete for some good cause, let us as parents give them our hearty support and encouragement. Or, perchance, it might be an entertainment and tableaux suggested: let us enter heartily into their pleasure like silent partners, as it were, advising them along proper lines, and grand results will be achieved. And this drifting away from the pale of the church to outside amusements will be less noticeable. Do not expect your children to keep step to a dead march. God has strewn the earth and the heavens with beauty and with gladness. Let us take into our home-circle all innocent pleasure, all brightness, and all good cheer, and ever remember the sweetest type of heaven is home.

Encourage your children in the art of music. Many people say, "O, my children have no musical talent; it won't pay to give them instructions." The joy and pleasure of music at home can not be valued in dollars and cents. Your sons and your daughters may never achieve renown as great musical artists, nor receive the applause of entranced audiences; but they may bring peace and rest to the home gathering. And when they go out into the world to build homes for themselves or to meet the temptations before them, there will be this bond of song to bind them to the old home, and then will gather around them the strongest holiest influence of life.

There are two very important points that I have not yet touched, and one is a command from God to parents found in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4, like this: that parents who fail to teach their children to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands when eight years old, the sin will be upon their heads, that their children shall be baptized when eight years old, and they shall also teach their children to pray and to walk uprightly before God. How will we teach them to pray? How walk uprightly? Is there any better place than the family altar? Gather your little ones around you and teach them to talk to God that they may know him as a father and a friend, one who is interested in them every day. If you would have them grow up good and pure, be good and pure yourself. If you would have them truthful, be truthful yourself, and never let that child look back and say, "My parents deceived me; what they said was not so." Oh, my dear friends, this is a serious subject! We are all children, and God, the loving father of all, has given us a perfect example. May we render unto him a just account.

Letter Department

SANTA MONICA, California, January 6, 1909.

Dear Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are my chief sources of church news. At present the aged have very poor show of obtaining anything to do in any of the public works, as many others besides myself are out of work of any kind. I have not been able to get a job for more than a year, and other thousands are in the same fix, and my children have been the mainstay in supplying my necessities, both food and clothing. And so far a bountiful heavenly Father has made provision for my necessities, for which I try to be thankful, and praise his holy name.

What terrible calamities have recently befallen the inhabitants of Egypt and Sicily! Thousands have perished, of whom there will never be even a simple record. Truly the God of heaven seems to be calling them to repentance through and by the power of the elements. And if these are the beginning of sorrows, where shall the final end be?

In gospel bonds,

FAIRLAND, Oklahoma, January 11, 1909.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I have written a letter to the HERALD, and thought it might not be amiss. Oh, how much help, how much comfort I always find in the columns of our dear church papers! There is so much in the "Mothers' Home Column" to aid, especially us younger mothers! I have only one little girl, but I know I need the counsel of older heads, and I seldom hesitate to accept offered advice.

It has been some time since I have had the privilege of listening to a real good sermon. I love the work as much, or a little more than ever before, and wish to continue onward and upward until I shall finally receive the crown of everlasting life.

Once more the grim messenger of death has entered our home and taken a loved one, this time a dear little brother, but we always try to believe it is all for the best. Each year for three years, now, the angel of death has entered our family and taken one or more from us, until it seems that God is trying us to the utmost. Still, he has said he must have a tried people.

We have been having quite a discussion recently over the pride existing in the church. That is, members of other churches hold it up before us, saying the poorer class of Latter Day Saints, no matter how religious, can not associate with the wealthier element because of their ridicule, their slights, and coldness. A very dear friend of mine, and a Latter Day Saint, is, I fear, going to the Holiness band, though I can not see how it is possible for any one to leave so grand, so glorious a religion as we have for a mere theme, or fad; for I can see little more in it. This person talks so much of our pride, and says there is none of this worldly pride in the Holiness band. Oh, Saints, do let us be more humble, more prayerful for the erring humanity than we ever have before. Let all of us who are haughty and proud abolish this from us, and make our brothers and sisters and outsiders as well, feel at home when they are among us.

It is not impossible for us to follow the meek and lowly Jesus, or he never would have asked us to do so. Let us each and every one strive to set an example worthy of imitation. Ever praying for the upbuilding of Zion, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

FLORENCE I. DUNCAN.

SAVANNAH, Missouri.

Mr. Blair: Have you in stock, or could you secure for me the discussion of Forscutt and Shinn, held several years ago? I had it and loaned it to an infidel, and since that time he has never mentioned infidelity to me; but claimed he lost the book. If you can secure me one, I certainly will appreciate it, and pay you for trouble. I hope some day soon to be a member of the Reorganized Church. This place is full up with churches, seven in all, population, two thousand, and no Latter Day Saints.

I have been reading your literature for some time, and I have the first preacher to show me where the Latter Day Saints are in error. The preacher that carries a D. D. is easy to handle, and this is what has put me to investigating. Your sermons on different subjects, and by different men, will convince any fair and honest seeker, of the truth, which I am glad has come to me; and all the pleasures of this life would not be worth to me what I have learned through reading your books. I hope your success will reach to the highest mark; and whenever a Latter Day Saint preacher comes to this place, he can eat with me, and I will see that he has enough to carry him out of town.

Yours very truly,

E. N. BYERGO, Agent C. G. W. Ry.

ALMORA, Minnesota, January 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I came to Almora, the home of Bro. and Sr. Frank Horn, whom many of the missionaries of Iowa and Minnesota will kindly remember, a few days ago, to engage in holding a few gospel services. Thus far we have had a fair attendance, considering the intensely cold weather, and hope that some good may result from our effort. During my visit home, over Christmas and New-year, I performed the sad rite of preaching two funeral discourses. The one, Mrs. Rebecca Whiting, aged seventy-three years and four months, wife of Sylvester Whiting, for many years associated with the faction of the old church known as the Cutlerites; the other, Mrs. Ellen S. Murdock, aged twenty-five years, eight months and fourteen days, wife of Andrew Murdock.

The writer returned home from mission work in North Dakota, just before Christmas. The past few months have been spent in visiting the following vicinities, Lawton, Loma, Calvin, Dunseith, Bontary, Minot, Harvey, Carrington, and Roosevelt. Some good meetings were held at most of the above-named places on Sundays, though it seemed hard to get an attendance evenings during the week on account of bad weather and other unfavorable conditions. Not the least among the hindering causes was the indifference by the people of the world to all religious work, which seems to increase as the years go by. This, however, can not be said of most of the Saints of North Dakota, as nearly all the scattered Saints of the above-named places did all they could to assist me. I shall long very kindly remember many of them for their kindness to me.

Bro. J. J. Phay, of Roosevelt, was suffering intense pain from an injured eye-ball; received some relief by administration. Sr. Desde Graham was very sick with ulcers of the stomach, and suffered much pain at times; with in a hospital at Minot. The writer, for one, will be very glad when the sanitarium is fitted ready for use, that many who are called to suffer in affliction may go and find favorable opportunity for administration and the exercise of faith in the Lord, which is often not the case in the world's places of caring for the sick. Also hope the Lord may hasten the time when greater spiritual power will be given to the ministry of the church in their labors, that all may learn diligently and wisely to discharge their duties according to their office and calling. How can we expect more to be given until the above conditions are reached, individually or as a whole? Let us press forward.

Some are investigating the truth here in this northern region, and we hope may obey in time.

Reading of the terrible disaster in Southern Italy, one is led to wonder where the next stroke of divine judgment will fall.

The writer is encouraged in the work of the Lord, believing the evidences within and without the church are multiplying to prove the hastening of God's work in the latter days. So may it hasten on.

WESTOVER, South Dakota, January 22, 1909.

Dear Herald: I wish to say that I feel myself one of the isolated ones; that I do not know just how far it is to the nearest branch; but the nearest I know of is three hundred miles—Sioux City. We have been here now nearly five months. My wife and I have not heard a sermon in this time—that is, a sermon of the true vine, but I can say I have got some investigating the truth. I have my Book of Mormon in one family, and have distributed many tracts and papers. We get the HERALD, Ensign, and Journal of History. These give us lots of good reading. Were it not for them we would starve to death, I fear, for spiritual food; but I can say the blessed Master feeds me quite a little, too, more than I deserve. At least I think so. I can not see wherein I deserve anything, as I consider myself an unprofitable servant at the best I can do. I will be pleased to learn where the nearest branch is to me, and I would ask you to remember us to our heavenly Father, and plead with him that he will forgive us of all imperfections, and abundantly feed us with the bread of life, which will enable us to enter his heavenly throne, where we may be in peace with our loved ones who have gone before.

In gospel bonds,

BYRON AND ADA MOORE.

GOODERHAM, Ontario, January 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are still rejoicing in the angel's message, and can truthfully say we know we have obeyed the truth, and that this is the Lord's marvelous work and a wonder. We have had many a spiritual manifestation to establish that fact. To God be all the praise, honor, and glory.

The first to sow the good seed, to melt some of the rocks here, was Uncle J. H. Lake, followed by W. J. Smith, McIntosh, A. E. Mortimer, S. W. Tomlinson, and others. They all worked hard to reach the people with the gospel. Last, but not least, we have had our worthy brethren, J. T. Thompson and David Pycok. We did not have the privilege of hearing David, but we hear David is the man. But J. T. Thompson is a good preacher and a rapid speaker, and just anchors his audience for whatever time he wishes to speak to them. He converted two good people, sister-in-law, and daughter. I feel sure they will be a credit to the church. Made lots of friends to the work, and I am sure his work is not finished here yet. I hope those in authority will take note of this, and use their influence in having him sent back here again. I believe there will be something accomplished here yet.

We have a day and a night shift, and I have bought about three dollars' worth of tracts and Voice of Warning, and we talk, and keep the thinking class reading tracts through the day, and the Lord gets after them at night by his Spirit, and gives them to understand that it is his work they are thinking about. I am proud of our little tracts. They are just the thing to hand to your friends. But every one of them should have on a nice blue or red dress, and the photo of the author. It gives them a nice appearance, and when you see a man's photo, you like to hear what he has to say. Without the neat little cover they look slouchy; like a slouchy-looking preacher, you don't care whether you hear him or not. Another thing that would be a good help to the young Saints in sending out tracts to their friends, would be a nicely printed letter to remove prejudice from the minds of the people, leaving room to insert the name and date, that they could copy from, sent out with each lot of tracts.

Yours in the narrow way,
CHESTER H. LAKE.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, January 17, 1909.

Dear Herald: I always desire to write something that will edify and help some poor, struggling soul to press onward in this good work; and if this letter is found containing something of that kind, be it little or much, I will be amply paid for the effort.

I love this work. It gives me more comfort than anything in this life can give; and I desire to press on in the great battle, although beset with trials, and with the evil always on the alert. Still, I know, by the help of God, and a determination and sacrifice on my part, I will be able to come out victorious in the end.

I have been greatly tried by sickness; but God has been with me through it all, and the many grand testimonies he has given, and some through my children, that I would be permitted to live, have been a great comfort to me, and worth all I have passed through. During my severe sickness last summer, the Lord gave a testimony to my son Alvin, fifteen years old. He came home from his work in the evening. I had taken worse that day, and he felt so bad he did not come in to see me until near bedtime. I knew he would come in before going to bed. So he did. And he came up to my bedside crying, and kissed me, and said, "Mamma, when I came home, I was tired, and I sat down on the plow to rest, and I was wondering if you would live or die; and the Spirit of God rested on me, and said, 'Your mother will live to be an old lady.'" Oh, how I rejoiced, and told him how thankful he should be that God would speak to him, and tell him such good things.

So I grew better and got up, and took worse again, and had a very trying time. I became almost deaf; was so blind I could not tell which my children were, only by feeling them; was so weak I could hardly move. My family gathered around me thinking I was passing away. The Saints came and prayed for me, and Bro. Will Haden administered to me, and I felt the great tears fall from his eyes down on my face. Oh, what a petition he did send up to God in my behalf! The Saints prayed and sang several songs. Dear Saints, it seemed the very heaven was opened to me, and just as soon as the meeting closed my sight came back, and I looked around me and saw the room was full.

That night, my little boy, six years old, went to bed crying, thinking I was going to die. In the morning he came into my room and said he had seen an angel. I asked "Where?" He said in his room. I asked, "Where did it come from?" He took his little hand and showed me how it came, right down through the ceiling, and came up to him. I said, "Maybe you were dreaming." He said, "No, mamma, I had my eyes wide open." I asked what she looked like, and he said, "Oh, so pretty, with a light all around her head, and the room was all shining." I said, "Maybe you had a light in your room." He said, "No, we went to bed in the dark; we had no lamp in our room." I asked, "What kind of a dress did she have on," and he said, "White, like the snow." I asked, "What did she say to you?" He said, "She told me not to be afraid, my mamma would not die; that she would get well and get fat and live to be an old lady," but said I would pass through lots of sickness. "She said, 'I can not tell you any more now; but do not forget about me,' and went away." I said, "Where did she go, out of the door?" He said, "No, she went right back up through the ceiling, and the room got all dark again." I asked him if he was afraid, and he said no. So, dear Saints, these things are worth all we suffer. The Saints had asked for a message, and it surely came. She further told him there had been six angels there that night. Must have been during the prayer-meeting. So I am glad of these things, and very thankful God sent them through my children, for they will be stamped upon their memories for all time; and when they see it being fulfilled it will increase their faith, as well as mine, in God's promises. The work here is still progressing, although some things have occurred to bring us sorrow in our branch; still the work moves on, and some are investigating, and some being added to our number, for which we say, Praise God.

We came here two years ago from Santa Cruz, California. Many of the dear Saints there will remember us. I just received a letter from Sr. Stone, at Dos Palos, California, also a picture of the reunion at Irvington, California, last September, with seventeen of the elders taken, and so many faces I knew, especially Bro. J. B. Carmichael, of San Jose. I thought of the many times he had been at my home and preached in my house, and baptized my little boy Alvin, and it made me shed tears. Oh, how I long for the time to come when all God's children will be gathered in one great reunion where there will be no more parting; but all joy, and harmony with God's will; and rest, oh, sweet rest from all our labors.

Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may ever be found faithful, and always a defender of this good work. My prayer is that God will bless all his children everywhere, and help them to struggle on and come up higher until the end. With love to all,

Your sister in Christ,

NELLIE MARTIN.

ELKHART, Indiana, January 10, 1909.

Dear Saints: I have felt a desire many times to write to my brothers and sisters through the HERALD, but the thought generally comes, What can you write that would be of interest? and I would put it off until that desire would leave me. Now, dear Saints, that desire came to me again this morning while we were having family prayer. I wanted to be alone so I could write. I have hurried with my work, and now that the baby is taking her morning nap, I am trying to fulfill that desire. I hope if there is any other mother or Saint that feels as I have felt, that they may not let such desires slip by for it may be God has a purpose in giving us such desires.

I am a mother of three children, and my daily prayer is that I may present the gospel to them in such a way that they may understand and obey, and do much good for the Master in their time. I feel discouraged at times, when this great responsibility rests upon me, seemingly greater than at other times, and I am led to wonder, Am I correcting them aright? Have I or do I exercise enough patience? Am I living so as to be an example for them? To all this wondering I receive no reply, but I think, Well, I will do the best I can, and pray God to help me to do better. Dear Saints, my heart is full of that great desire to come up higher, and my eyes are filled with tears as I write you these few lines this morning.

I have stepped aside and have no doubt displeased my heavenly Father, but I desire with this new year to start anew, and I beg an interest in your prayers, that I may be a living example to those around me.

We have lived here in Elkhart just two months, and we earnestly hope that God has a people here, and that in the near future we may be able to get things in shape, and that some one may be directed this way to do some preaching.

Our home is always open for any Saint, and would be glad to have them stop off at any time they may be passing through this way. Bro. S. W. L. Scott passed through here on his way home, December 28, and had time to take supper with us; and, to say we were glad to see him would not half express our gladness. I hope we as Saints may come up higher, and be prepared for that great and glorious day.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. A. A. WARD.

TORONTO, Canada, January 18, 1909.

Dear Herald: Your welcome and thrice-blessed pages come freighted with good, wholesome, spiritual, and intellectual food from and to all parts of the civilized world, and wherever the glorious gospel message of "peace on earth and good will towards man" has found or made a quickening entrance into the soul of mortals.

Your many thousands of readers and well-wishers will, I am convinced, bid you "God-speed," in these opening days of the new year; without the remotest fear of incurring the ban once pronounced by an apostle of the Lord to the effect that he who biddeth a certain individual "God-speed is partaker of his evil deeds." Nothing is grander or more ennobling than to read of noble deeds achieved in the vineyard, or (to change the metaphor) the army of the Lord, except, perhaps, an humble and devoted attempt to emulate those deeds.

It is physically impossible to peruse our beloved HERALD'S columns without being made to see how gigantic an amount of real hard, unselfish, and self-sacrificing work is being accomplished in our beloved Leader's cause and kingdom without any ostentation or parade, or "to be seen of men"; for the Master has already declared that "such have their reward" in this life (and consistently can not expect it in the life to come).

The mental pabulum provided in your columns is, as a witty writer once said upon a different subject and occasion, "extensive and peculiar" (like Mr. Samuel Weller's knowledge of London), and if but one tithe of what is now being written concerning tithing is true, then I can only say that tithing must be a tremendously thorny topic, and one that presents almost any and every possibility except that of reasonable agreement as to what tithing really means!

Certainly, if tithing means, as we are most authoritatively assured—a "tenth of all thine increase," and inasmuch as it is certain that we "brought nothing into the world," and equally certain that we can "carry nothing out of it," then I should think that the tithe means neither more nor less than a tenth of all that we now possess; be that possession great or small!

Nor can I see much "equality" in the fact of one man giving (like the widow's mite) all that he has, and another man paying, or rather contributing simply a tenth of what he does not happen to need, and calling that small contribution a tithe of his increase unto the Lord.

However, there is no doubt but what the opponents or disputants will carry on the controversy "to a finish," but whose "finish" it will be I dare not venture to prognosticate (not having either connection with or affinity for "old Moore's Almanac"); but the probabilities of the case are, I think, strongly in favor of the supposition that the "finish" will be that of a number of persons not otherwise concerned in the argument.

I sometimes fear that the disputations inaugurated and sustained in the HERALD'S columns are sustained and carried on with but scant regard to the feelings and susceptibilities of the large proportion of "rank and file" readers of our official organ; and with perhaps a preponderating desire to get the better of one's theological opponent, than to elucidate the subject in dispute; but perhaps I am mistaken, and we will agree to "waive the point," as the lawyers say.

One word in conclusion respecting the claims and methods of the church of Christ, commonly known as "Hedrickites" (or at least the leaders of that body). If they have even a small percentage of proof in support of the absolute veracity of the statements which they are sending out broadcast to this and other countries, respecting the martyred Seer of Nauvoo (proof, I mean which could stand the strain of cross-examination in any court of law, and before any judge of the land), why did they not produce this proof or evidence at the time when (above all else) it would have immeasurably and incontestably elevated their cause upon a pinnacle of fame and solidarity, from which no subsequent efforts or exertions, either of our own or of any other people, could by any known probability have displaced or dislodged it?

Like a celebrated individual of olden times, "I pause for a reply." But as, judging by past experience, the pause threatens to be an extremely prolonged one, I will advance—with the reader's or rather with the Editor's kind permission—to my second inquiry, which is this: Why do they not produce their "strong reasons," if indeed they have any to produce; and by meeting or challenging in the open light of day, and in the limelight of publicity of debate, to which all would have access, either in person or by favor of the ubiquitous reporter, have the advantage of a free and unbiased hearing or perusal of this important issue in all its many bearings and ramifications?

I have not thought it wise to lengthen this letter by alluding to the good work still going on here under President R. C. Evans, as doubtless the branch recorder or reporter will have made your numerous readers acquainted with the progress of affairs long before these hastily scribbled lines appear in print. No doubt the Editor has much pressure of matter upon his valuable space; and no hurt will be felt by your correspondent if, indeed, they never appear at all. I remain,

Yours in bonds,

F. R. TUBB.

OMAHA, Nebraska, January 16, 1909.

Editors Herald: Time passes so rapidly that it seems almost impossible that so much time has elapsed since I have penned a line for the columns of the church paper; but there are so many more capable of writing for these columns that I feel to hesitate; and then the thought presents itself to me, that if all would think as I in regard to this it would be only a matter of time till "our church paper" would be no more, and this we must not suffer to take place, for we must all work while yet it is day. Soon the night cometh when all work is done; so it behooves us not to idle our time away. In the great Book of Life each page is as a day of our lives, and each day those pages are being filled with the works we accomplish and those we neglect. When our Life's race is run we will each leave behind us here on earth a record, and as this record will, page by page, become yellow with age, and its pages will be scanned by some with the purpose of following the precepts, so let us all try to live so our life's record will be worthy of imitation. Our lives will be just what we have in mind to make them, a bright and happy life. Lending a word of comfort and cheer here and there, is as a Godsend to suffering humanity, for we know,

"There are lives that may be brightened by a word of hope and cheer;

There are souls with whom life's blessings we should share.

There are hearts that may be lightened, of the burdens which they bear,

Let us take the blessed hope of the gospel there."

How many in our vast land are carrying burdens seemingly greater than they can bear? How many there are hungering for the gospel truths of which they never have heard! As I look out into this vast city and see and hear of the terrible wickedness and crime that is going on, it makes me feel sad, and I feel if I could only lend a helping hand to some poor sinner, and show him as best I could this glorious gospel, for it is all to me in this life.

"All the pleasures of revelry, pastime, and mirth,

All the joys that the world can afford,

Can not once be compared to the peace and the bliss
Of a day in the house of the Lord."

SR. IDA L. JONES-SNOW.

SAGINAW, Michigan, January 18, 1909.

Dear Saints: We are living in the latter days. We have a work to do. No other can do our work. We must do our own work. God has blessed us in many ways, and at many times. What can we do in our weak way for God and the advancement of this gospel? There is a work for each to do. We can never, to my mind, repay God for all his blessing; but we can do his will. We can obey the plan or commandments he has placed before us.

Sometime, when least expected, we may meet some one who is bitter, very bitter, against our beloved gospel, the pure and true gospel of Jesus Christ. If we have not studied the words of God contained in the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, how can we answer? Can we defend the gospel? If not, would our light be very bright? Sometime we may meet one who will not listen to the truth. Then if we do not let our light shine, through our good works, what will be the result? Will we be able to do our duty for the gospel? But if we let our light shine, may he or she not be apt to think more of the truth than before, and have a reason to listen to the gospel of truth?

And again, if we study the word of God well, and we meet any one who would like to talk on the work, or the gospel, would we not be prepared to tell them all about it, or even to meet an argument on gospel points from either the Bible, the Book of Mormon, or the Doctrine and Covenants?

Ah, dear Saints, let us prepare ourselves to meet any of these things. Let us live before God and man to lend a willing hand in time of need. Let us put on the armor of truth; and, with the help of God, do the work that is before us to the honor and glory of God.

Your sister in the hope of Zion,

NELLIE M. ANGLE.

WAKEENY, Kansas, January 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have just been perusing your columns, and they bring joy to my soul. In reading the letter from Bro. Page, in which he states that necessary finances are not forthcoming, I felt like I would like to assist in making his appeal stronger. While I have not money to send him, having to leave the mission field at times myself to get finances for mission expense, and also to support my family, am made to know the condition Bro. Page is in, and I appeal to you of his district where he labors, and especially you whom he labors among, to see to it that his hands are loosed that he may have opportunity to do what the church sent him out to do. It is a deplorable condition that prevails in some places, where no one thinks to give the missionary the necessary money to travel, and he has to stop spiritual work to work for that which perishes with the using. Dear Saints, let us awake and untie the hands of our missionaries, that more and better work may be done. Do not think the missionary is wanting too much, and is after the money. He will preach whether he has the money given him or not. If not donated he will have to leave off preaching and work for wages until he has his purse replenished, and then he goes at his God-appointed work again, but the church has lost, the missionary has lost, and the layman has lost his opportunity of keeping that preacher in the field.

This last fall the writer and missionary in charge made a trip of about five hundred miles by team, and did not receive one cent donation on the entire trip. Missionaries can not subsist this way.

May God bless each one, and help us do our part. Wife and I are near Wakeeny, with meetings announced for Sunday night. Have done very little work the last two weeks, owing to bad weather and other hindrances. Expect to move eastward from here after our series here. Please say to Bro. W. E. Peak, that there are two ladies, non-members, living at Council Grove, Kansas, who say they do not fully understand our doctrine, and are very anxious for an elder. What can be done?

Bro. Ransom Hoskins is again in our midst, and I understand is ready to put on the missionary harness. May God bless and assist him. God's blessing be upon all his people, is my prayer, in Jesus' name. Amen.

JOHN A. TEETERS.

CALVERT CITY, Kentucky, January 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: In the month of September, 1908, I dreamed I was living on a place my mother owned before her last marriage. I was standing looking out of a window towards the east, and saw a great cluster of bright stars; they would disappear, and return again; continued so for a short time. I was, it seemed, busy with my work, and again looked out at the window, and saw something very bright, nearly square, and in the center of this appeared two very bright objects. One of them appeared to resemble the moon, only golden color (I think the other object was somewhat round), the second object was brighter and seemed more glorious than the one shaped like the moon; and at each corner of the square appeared a real large star, and two angels dressed in white had hold of the square one at each upper corner, bringing it towards me, and it seemed to be so bright its rays glistened upon the earth; and it seemed that my mother and I jumped out of the door, so happy we could not stay on the ground, and there descended a great line of white doves from the square unto us; and my mother said to me, "This is a sign for us to go and meet our Savior"; and I thought we followed the doves and flew around a while in the air, and then came back. I thought the bright square went on to warn other people of the end of the world, and we waited for it to return, and we were intending to go with it; and in the east where this object started from there seemed to rise a very dark cloud, and it began raining, or a mist of rain falling, and in the west where it was going it seemed that the elements were a ball of fire; and after this had all passed over, or rather while passing over, there was quite a large number of children sitting on a wood-pile watching it, and my youngest sister was sitting on a log by herself, and seemed to be crying, crying because I would not let her be baptized at the reunion (she is quite young yet, and has never spoken about being baptized). Mother and I then seemed to be standing in the door and mother said to me, "Poor children, I feel sorry for them." And then I woke up. I would like this published in the HERALD, and I would like to see the interpretation printed, or receive the interpretation individually from some one that can give me the correct interpretation.

I was eighteen in November, 1908, was baptized at Pilot Oak, Kentucky, 1906, by Elder C. L. Snow, confirmed by Elders E. L. Henson and J. R. McClain. I have been greatly impressed with my dream or vision, and would like to hear what others think of it. You will please find inclosed money order for fifty cents, which please send to the proper address as tithing. I am desirous of doing my duty, and know it is a duty we all should be very careful to remember. I am not accustomed to writing for publication; and this is my first attempt. I have received so much spiritual help from reading the HERALD and Autumn Leaves, I feel like I wanted to give the readers a part of my experience, hoping it may be of some light to some one. I have no greater desire than to know that I am acceptable with my heavenly Father, and desire to do my duty as a true, brave, and strong soldier of the cross.

May the blessings of our heavenly Father be with all those of his children that seek to do his bidding, is my prayer, in the name of Jesus Christ, our Savior.

Your sister in the cause of truth,
OTHA COOPER.

GRINNELL, Iowa, January 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: I held a splendid meeting at Colo, Iowa, the first part of this month. Four fine, intelligent persons were baptized, one a married lady. And a letter from Bro. Lhommedieu to-day stated that the lady's husband is also ready for baptism. I will try to get up there soon and attend to the baptism. There are others there who do not know what they are waiting on. The Holy Spirit was present in a very marked degree at the baptism and confirmation of those four. A young lady had an open vision while standing beside the water, which was very comforting to her and her folks. Another one had a fine vision while I was confirming him. The gentleman who is now ready for baptism told me that he had the strangest kind of feeling come over him while I was confirming his wife. The Spirit carried the truth of this work to his innermost soul, so that he is now fully convinced of the truth of the work, and will soon be in the church.

I was called to Eastern Iowa to administer to Sr. E. Thomas, at Center Junction. There our old comrade and fellow laborer, Warren Tournier, president of Eastern Iowa District, met me, and we went to Green Valley church, where the writer had the pleasure of speaking to the Saints. Oh, what a change there within the last ten years! Only a few outsiders at the meeting; our dearly beloved Bro. James Johnson was called to the paradise of rest a short time ago. How strange it seemed not to find him at his post. Others have moved away, which considerably cuts down the number in attendance. A few new ones have been added. There are some others there who know that they ought to join, but are waiting, waiting, but can hardly tell what on.

From there I went to Baldwin, and found our little Bro. J. B. Wildermuth busy with a series of meetings, and he was very glad to get a little help. The house was full to overflowing with very attentive listeners. Some are very near the kingdom, and I think will come in soon. The writer spoke four times while there; had the best of liberty while telling the gospel story, which never gets old. Bro. Wildermuth is doing a good work at Baldwin. They have a fine, energetic branch, a splendid Sunday-school, with Sr. Hale at the helm.

Brn. Hill and Farr have also had a hand in the work there, and have done good work, and are well spoken of. The weather got so bad, and the roads so muddy, and the nights so dark, that we closed the meeting. In all my days I have never seen the fog so thick as it was some days and nights. On the 23d the fog was so thick that we could not see the headlight on the engine more than thirty feet away at nine o'clock in the morning. The trains were all late on account of the dense fog.

May God bless every effort put forth for the good of his people, and for the glory of his name. What a shock it was to us all to hear of the terrible death of Sr. Cecil Eckhart! Her friends have our sympathy. I have known her ever since she was a baby. She was a fine girl. God comfort the bereaved.

In the faith,
J. S. ROTH.

News From Branches

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

In reading the editorial "Concerning 1909," in the first number of the HERALD for this year, I note a request that "live" branch presidents furnish occasional items from their branches. Your correspondent, desiring to be among the "live" ones, and believing that the suggestion is timely, has decided to add this one to other duties pertaining to the great gospel work.

The San Francisco Branch has had to contend against great difficulties since April 18, 1906. The great earthquake and fire on that date not only destroyed the city but practically obliterated our branch as well. Of a once prosperous branch, only a "handful" was left. These few have never once thought of giving up the fight nor of deserting the good ship Zion, even though she had been dismantled by the storm, her "pilot" and many of the "crew" having been swept away by the "gale." The "mate" stood by, and the "laddies" hove to with a will, until the ship was "righted" and placed on an even "keel."

Since that time quite a number of our old members have returned to our ranks, some have been received from other branches, and several have been added by baptism. All these means have contributed to our growth, until now, we are thankful to say, the work here is on a solid footing once more.

For the first time in the history of the branch, we met on Sunday, December 20, in our own church. Though the building was not entirely completed it was good to be in our own home. The sermon on this occasion was by Bro. C. E. Crumley, and was instructive and edifying. The gas fixtures not being in place, we dispensed with the evening services, and a number of our members took advantage of the opportunity to visit our sister branch at Oakland, which is under the able management of Bro. J. M. Terry.

We are now meeting regularly in our new church, and can appreciate a pure atmosphere and clean surroundings, after having for so long a time held services in a hall used for worldly revels, where the very air was impregnated with tobacco smoke and the odor of intoxicants. We now have a suitable place in which to hold our district conference which meets here on February 26. We hope for a large attendance.

The election of branch, Sunday-school, and Religio officers passed off quietly, the Good Spirit dominating at all of the business-sessions. With few exceptions the former officers were sustained in their several positions. Bro. H. D. Simpson, the newly elected Sunday-school superintendent, has taken hold of the work with a will and gives promise of being the right man in the right place.

Two more precious souls have been added to the fold here. On January 3, the writer had the privilege of baptizing Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Root in the font at the new church, being the first troubling of the waters of the font. May many others follow.

SCRANTON, PENNSYLVANIA.

The Saints of Scranton are like Saints in other places: they are not always on the mount, neither are they always in the valley. They have their trials, and they have their times of peace. There are noble souls here, and it does one's heart good to hear the earnest desires expressed.

There is one drawback to the work here, and that is, the Saints have no house of worship. They are compelled to worship in a hall, which seems to be objected to by a great many people; but we hope ere long the Saints will take advantage of a very generous offer made them by a large-hearted brother, one who is always ready to assist in every good work. I understand the Saints here have appointed a building committee to solicit money and spy out a suitable location.

We have a Sunday-school here nicely officered with young Bro. Walter Lewis as superintendent, a worthy young man whose heart and soul appear to be in the work, whose efforts for its advancement, and standing, as a school, are commendable.

Religio work is quite a factor for good here also. At present it has its president, Bro. William Davis, a young man capable of doing much good along this line, providing he is humbly and prayerfully sustained by its members, and the other officers elected to assist him. Quite a lively interest is shown in this department of the work here.

There seems to be a wave of religious excitement passing over Scranton just at present. Reverend Doctor Torrey, with a staff of assistants, is holding forth in a tabernacle built expressly for a three months' crusade against sin. All churches believing as he does, and who are willing to work along the same line with him in saving souls (?) are invited to participate in the great movement. But those who do not believe in the never-ending torment or damnation of the wicked, are not wanted, so of necessity it excludes the "Saints" as well, also the "universalists," because neither of them are willing to believe that the wicked are turned into hell and there, asbestos like, burn in a literal fire all through the countless ages of "eternity," so we feel honored instead of slighted in being excused from participation in such a perversion.

Our appearance at "Old Forge" at the home of Bro. Fallison Jones has stirred the Methodist preacher and he is awfully indignant to think that the "Mormons" have gotten so close to them. Well, poor man, he is afraid some of his sheep have been following the wrong shepherd, and they have heard the call and some of them have turned their ears and eyes toward the fold of Christ, and perhaps he himself is afraid of the divine light of the gospel of Christ. Poor Paul was stricken blind when he saw the great light, and the only means of recovering the same was under the hands of an ordained minister of Christ. Of course this poor soul does not want to subject himself to any such thing.

I visited home folks over the holiday, returning here to complete the conference year with God's help, and shall continue to do what I can for the furtherance of the great work of God intrusted to us.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of Sheffield, England, District: Please take notice that upon recommendation and request of the district conference of Sheffield, held January 9 and 10, 1909, at Claycross, England, Bro. John Austin, of 30 Melbourne Road, Springvale Road, Sheffield, England, has been appointed Bishop's agent of said district. Notice is hereby given of the appointment of Bro. Austin, as such agent, and we recommend him to the Saints of the Sheffield District for his work in this capacity.

Bro. Austin was formerly an agent under Bishop Thomas Taylor and later a solicitor for Bishop's agent C. H. Caton, for this district, and we trust that the Saints will be forward in assisting him in the duties of his office, and that the district of Sheffield in its financial work may be prospered in the present year.

Trusting the Lord may especially bless each one, in behalf of the Bishopric,

Very respectfully submitted,
E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 1, 1909.

Bishop's Notice.

To the Saints of Northern California District; Greeting: I wish to congratulate you on the way you have sustained the fund the year just passed, and trust the Lord will bless you the present year.

Our present need compels us to ask all who can to help us meet the demands.

At Chico you may pay to Sarah Boydston; Sacramento, James Lawn; Oakland, J. M. Terry; Santa Rosa, B. N. Fisher; San Jose, Bishop E. S. Chase; in my absence at San Francisco, John Lawn; or send remittances to me direct by bank draft, post-office money order, or Wells Fargo & Co.'s, money order.

CHARLES A. PARKIN, Bishop Northern California.
SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., 18 Clement St., February 2, 1909.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Southern Indiana Saints: As we are approaching on into the year 1909, we are glad that God has spared us and blessed us with what we have, and all truly should be thankful to him for all blessings at his hand. Therefore, let us all stand fast to the principles of truth, and all, I am sure, can rejoice on account of this glorious gospel of these the latter days. And as we rejoice in the blessings that God has bestowed on us, does it not behoove us to so live that we may enjoy still more of the rich blessings in store for us, by living pure and godly lives, and ever be on the watch lest the tempter betray us?

Now, we are in another year, and before it closes upon us will you not see that you have kept the law of tithing? "We must not rob God," Malachi tells us. (Also read Deuteronomy 14: 22-25; Hebrews 7: 1, 2; Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5; 106: 2.) I am sure that after reading these texts and careful thought and prayer, you will do your best, if ever so little. Remember we must live the whole law of God. We have the missionaries among us preaching the angel message. We have the poor to care for also, and God knows we can help some if only a little. We hope you will send your tithes as soon as possible. May God bless you.

Address all mail to Silver Grove, New Albany, Indiana.
JOHN ZAHND, Bishop's Agent.

Quorum of Twelve.

The members of the Quorum of Twelve are hereby reminded that at the last session of the quorum it adjourned to meet on March 16, 1909, at 2 p. m., in Lamoni, Iowa. It will be expected that as many as conveniently can will attend this meeting. The importance of the work assigned has not lessened and each member should feel to bear his full share of the responsibility imposed and thus give the best service possible to the cause. It is left discretionary with each one to decide as to the necessary preparation to be made for the occasion. Each one can best judge for himself. All should strive to make this a profitable and peaceful session, acceptable to the Lord, and approved by good men and women.

WM. H. KELLEY, President.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 5, 1909.

First Seventy.

To the Members of the First Seventy; Dear Brethren and Collaborers: On December 10, 1908, I sent to each of you a blank on which to report the labor you had done from March 1, 1908, to March 1, 1909. With the report I sent a request, with information why the request was sent. I have received replies from only thirteen, so that I do not know whether the blank report has been received. If any have not received the blank report please notify me at once. Those who have received the request will please comply as soon as practicable. As soon after March 1 as it is possible, please send me your report for the year to my home and mission address, 1205 Filmore Street, Des Moines, Iowa.

February 1, 1909.

J. F. MINTUN, Secretary.

Third Quorum of Elders.

As the time of General Conference is drawing near and the time to report to your quorum will follow, we hope to see many present to take part in our deliberations. Those not expecting to be present will please report in writing by sending your reports to the secretary, Charles P. Paul, Stewartsville, Missouri. Please do not neglect this as the quorum will be compelled to drop names of those who have failed to report in the past two or three years. This does not speak well for elders in Israel. So be prompt by sending in your report before March 25, 1909.

H. J. THURMAN, President.

An Appeal.

We ask the brethren throughout the church to help us start a library for the South Sea Islands Mission.

We are very much in need of early publications of the church, such as Times and Seasons; early editions of the Doctrine and Covenants are very much needed, as the native members of the Brighamite church say they have been taught that all the revelations as published in their Doctrine and Covenants, including the polygamous revelation, were published in the lifetime of the martyrs. We also need Journal of Discourses, as their elders deny every extract we publish from those books. In fact we need all books that will help in the battle with that abomination in these islands. They have from ten to twelve elders circulating about among the islands all the time. They also publish articles in their paper which need to be answered.

We also need good reference books, a good Bible commentary, and anything that would be useful from which to take extracts for our mission paper.

A book from a brother here and there throughout the church will be a light burden on all together and a great help in this difficult mission. Your brother in gospel bonds,

PAPEETE, Tahiti.

Parsons, his lodge brethren of the Masonic order performing their part as pall-bearers and at the grave.

Lincoln and His Soldiers.

Lincoln's life was filled with striking contrasts. For this careless captain of a company of unruly rustics in the Black Hawk War to become the commander-in-chief of a million soldiers, a mightier force of warriors than any conquering monarch of modern times ever assembled, was perhaps the strangest fortune that befell him. In four years he called to his command two and a half millions of men, probably a greater number than followed the eagles of Napoleon in all his twenty years of campaigning from Arcola to Waterloo.

Yet this unparalleled martial power never touched the ambition of Lincoln. He cared nothing for the pomp of arms, the pride of rank, or the glory of war. This man who could say to ten hundred thousand armed troops, go, and they would go, come, and they would come, held himself to be no more than the equal of the least among them. While he stood toward all as a comrade rather than a commander, they looked up to him in perfect trust, and delighted to hail him as Father Abraham.

It was enough for him to touch his hat to a general, but he liked to bare his head to the boys in the ranks. He himself created generals by the hundreds, but in his eyes the private soldier was the handiwork of the Almighty. The reported capture of an officer and twelve army mules in a raid near Washington only moved him to remark, "How unfortunate! I can fill that brigadier's place in five minutes, but those mules cost us two hundred dollars apiece." He never to the end solved the mystery of the uniforms, and could not tell a general from a colonel by his epaulettes. . . .

The sympathy of most men who get to be presidents, governors, or statesmen can be reached only through their heads. It becomes a thing of the mind, filtered and cooled by an intellectual process. Lincoln's sympathies always remained where nature herself placed them, in the heart, and thence they freely flowed, unhindered by reflection and calculation. Kindness with him was an impulse and not a duty. His benevolence was far from scientific, yet he was so shrewd a judge of human nature that he seldom was cheated.

The stone walls of the White House no more shut him in from his fellows, from the hopes and sorrows, the poverty and the pride of the plain people, than did the unhewn logs behind which he shivered and hungered in his boyhood home. A mother's tears, a baby's cry, a father's plea, an empty sleeve, or a crutch never failed to move him. . . .

This interest on his part was no fickle, unsteady freshet of gushing sentimentality which overflowed one day and dried up the next, no alternating current of strength and weakness. Mercy flowed in a constant stream from its fountain in his great heart, nourishing the fragrant flower of charity under the withering blasts of war.

WHY DO THE INNOCENT SUFFER?

Sin is always followed by suffering. The sinner is not the only one who suffers. Others suffer (for a time at least) as much and sometimes more than he. His violation of law involves the innocent in more or less serious difficulty. This is a matter of common observation and has led individuals to doubt the wisdom, justice, and love of God, or to deny his existence.

Yet what we observe is the natural result of laws and principles that if understood we would not change if we could. In the first place, to absolutely interdict the results of sin it would be necessary to prevent individual violations of law. In our present state of development this could only be done by taking away man's free agency. As a result of such a step man would find himself where he could not sin; but his progress toward the state where he will not sin would be for ever barred. We would not surrender our free agency if we could.

Granting man his free agency, the only way to prevent the innocent suffering from the abuse of that agency on the part of the guilty would be to segregate each individual, shut him off by himself where he could neither harm nor benefit others. As man is naturally gregarious, this could be done only by force or by changing human nature so as to imbue each individual with a constitutional dislike for all others. Either course would stop all human progress and prevent the perpetuation of the race.

It is an unavoidable accompaniment of human association that the acts of individuals affect others; and as long as evil persists in the world the innocent will suffer, at least temporarily, for the deeds of the depraved.

Interdependence is constantly increasing; and it is accepted as a scientific fact by writers on sociology and economics that it will increase in proportion as civilization becomes more intensive. We are not intellectually independent. Schools, churches, and periodicals constantly increase the circle of intelligences that touch each other at some point with a consequent increase of intellectual interdependence. We may live in Lamoni; but some thinker in London may lead us to a radical change of opinion.

It is extremely difficult for us to be spiritually in-

I do the very best I know how—the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference.—Abraham Lincoln.

dependent, nor is it desirable for us to be wholly independent in that way. There is to be a spiritual interdependence, and the strong are to help the weak. (Romans 15: 1.) All men are weak at some point and may be helped by association with those who are strong at that point. Yet this interdependence has its serious phases, one of which is that if some particularly intimate friend becomes skeptical or is led into error, we are quite likely to be more or less influenced by him and to assume his attitude. If some leading church representative falls from grace, unless we are very careful we suffer a spiritual shock.

The greatest danger incident to the undeniable fact that we are influenced in our intellectual and spiritual life by our associates is our tendency to associate more exclusively with those who are of our type of thought. We find them congenial; those who are not of our type are held at a distance, perhaps even hated and persecuted, according to the intensity of our intolerance. The result of this restricted association is that we are weakened where we are weak and fortified where we are already strong. We can not wholly escape the spiritual influences of our contemporaries. Safety lies in being broad enough to be brothers with all classes,—those who see as we do and those who see otherwise,—drawing from each such good as we can and trusting to the superior influence of the Holy Spirit to help us resist the evil.

John Locke speaks of a certain class of men who seek truth but fail to make progress, and says:

Error and truth are uncertainly blended in their minds; their decisions are lame and defective, and they are very often mistaken in their judgments: the reason whereof is, they converse with but one sort of men, they read but one sort of books, they will not come in the hearing but one sort of notions; the truth is, they canton out to themselves a little Goshen in the intellectual world, where light shines, and, as they conclude, day blesses them; but the rest of that vast expansum they give up to night and darkness.—Locke on "The understanding."

We are not even physically independent. The food that we eat is assembled from all points of the compass, from the Arctic regions and the Tropics, from the Orient and the Occident,—oranges from California, wheat from Minnesota, canned corn from Maine, bananas from the West Indies, spices from Ceylon. Thousands of men and women in different parts of the world helped to produce the clothing that we wear. Our "wants" are constantly increasing and the ability to supply them is increasing, but it means an increased dependence on others, a closer, world-wide association.

This interdependence has enormously increased as we have perfected our transportation facilities. It brings its blessings and its perils. An industrial war far distant may annoy us or even endanger our lives. A strike in the coal-fields may mean an empty grate at our home. A plague breaking out in the far East may travel straight to our shores by the first fast liner. It is a matter of days as opposed to years in a slower age.

It is no longer a matter of indifference to us that on the other side of the globe there are millions of people who are filthy, famine-ridden, and morally rotten. The pestilence that they breed to-day may be ours to-morrow. Nor is it greatly more or less our concern that our own cities within five, ten, or a hundred miles of us maintain certain quarters as bad as anything found in Singapore or Bombay. Quarantining of disease is ineffectual as a world remedy; segregation of vice is ineffectual. Humanity is too closely knit, the only remedy is the regeneration of all. In fact when we speak of the innocent suffering the results of evils existing in the world the term is not always justified. Are the so-called innocent classes entirely innocent so long as they have not exerted their powers to eradicate evil and reclaim the wicked?

Man cannot now disassociate himself. Such is not the way of God even if it were practical. He never sanctioned the cloister. Man may bury himself in the desert or the monastery far from the sight of fair women, far from the allurements of riches, far from the appeal of strong drinks. But he is buried. He will not harm others; neither will he help others. God does not pay enough attention to him to erect a tombstone. God stands for the race. When he calls men to seclusion he sends them back to the world again, as he did John the Baptist, to spend and be spent in the interest of others. He never hesitates to sacrifice the individual. He never blesses the individual without the solemn charge to pass it on.

The race can not exist and advance without personal association. Association means that the mental, spiritual, and physical conditions of the individual will be modified by the mental, physical, and spiritual conditions of other individuals. And it may happen that one man's act will bring suffering upon another man who was not responsible for the act. One man's act may cause another man unhappiness. A young man commits murder and is hung; his poor old mother is broken-hearted and some one wishes to know where God was that he did not protect the pious and worthy mother from the consequences of her son's folly. He could have prevented the mother's suffering in either of two ways. No other way occurs to us and our judgment does not sanction either of those. He could have taken the young man's free agency away, in common with that of all other men, for it would not do to give free agency to one and deny it to another. Or he could make fathers and mothers so indifferent and callous that they would not suffer even if their children did sin.

Such a condition would be worse than the most grievous unhappiness. If we could examine into all like individual experiences we would find sound philosophical and scientific reasons for the fact that the innocent are permitted to suffer as a result of the guilt of others.

Certain dread diseases are the direct result of long-continued moral depravity. An innocent man or woman may become accidentally inoculated and endure as great suffering as comes to the guilty. The only way to avoid such a contingency under present conditions would be for divinity to make certain classes constitutionally immune to such disease. Such a decree of immunity would immediately convey to them the suggestion that they could indulge in the liaisons hinted at without incurring the penalty that is inflicted upon others,—a suggestion that would be too potent for some to resist. The exemption would immediately convey the idea of privilege. Cicero says, "The greatest inducement to guilt is the hope of sinning with impunity."

In cases where physical disturbances of the earth or its atmosphere destroy communities and such calamity is supposed to be or in fact is an act of Providence sent upon or permitted to come upon the ungodly, it often happens that the innocent suffer, especially when their innocence is negative, with heredity and environment all working to develop positive wickedness in them later on. We mean by this that little children sometimes perish in calamities that come upon the wicked, and we may conceive that such will be more probable when the taint of blood and the deprecation of their surroundings makes it certain that they would soon grow up to share the prevailing wickedness. Where there is positive righteousness present it has been instrumental at times in securing a special dispensation. We are not always safe in saying every time a city is destroyed that God did it as a punishment; but it is certain that he has destroyed cities and nations in times past because of wickedness, and it has been urged that the innocent perished miserably at such times. Perhaps so; but if we could understand all the forces bearing upon the event we would understand how inextricably the lives of the so-called innocents were associated with the lives of the desperately wicked, and we would see that they could have been spared only by instituting conditions less desirable even than those that obtained. Sometimes the cancer must be cut out clear down into the living tissue.

While it is true that by our own works we stand or fall, in our decision as to what those works shall be we are influenced by others and we in turn influence others. We enjoy much good from the labors of others; and at times suffer because of the acts of others. When unrighteousness is entirely purged out our association will bring blessing and blessing only. When the apex of development for the race under earthly conditions is reached those who persistently refuse to reform will be segregated and the race will move on mutually helpful. Until then each must strive to live so that he will draw out the good of his fellows, negative so far as he can their bad influence over him, and conduct himself so that none other shall suffer because of his acts.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Abraham Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, at an anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg, contains less than three hundred words, yet it is given a high place among the great speeches of all times. It is a classic, and with President Lincoln's second inaugural address, makes the two most valued speeches by our great President.

At the time it was given President Lincoln expressed himself as dissatisfied with it. Edward Everett, whom very few equaled as a speaker, and who delivered the oration of the day when Gettysburg was dedicated as a national cemetery, knew and felt that Lincoln's few words would stand long after his able oration would no longer be known.

Lincoln's prophecy that "the world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here," was true of all but what he himself said on that occasion.

The Senior Editor has had the unique distinction of having been called upon by the citizens of his locality to take part in memorial-services to all of our martyred presidents, and recently gave a Lincoln reminiscence in the columns of the Des Moines Capital which we expect to reproduce at an early date.

The Gettysburg speech of President Lincoln is as follows:

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note, nor long remember, what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us; that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
CONCERNING PRIESTS.

Replying to an inquiry addressed to the Editor of the HERALD with reference to the duty or prerogative of a priest as found in paragraph 10, section 17, of the Doctrine and Covenants, with regard to presiding or taking charge of a prayer-service while an elder is present, we have this to state: The law as found in the paragraph named makes it the duty of the priest as well as of the teacher and deacon to assist the elder or elders whenever occasion may require, as see the last sentence in the paragraph. In any unorganized assembly of the church either for prayer, preaching, or business purposes, the one holding the highest office is by prerogative entitled to preside, take charge, and administer according to the design of the meeting. Branch and district organizations, as well as stake, are the creatures of growth and when organized, are independent organizations so far as administration in their own affairs is concerned. The rule as adopted by the church (see Book of Rules on Branch Organization), provides that where a branch organization is perfected, the branch officers, elder or elders, priest or priests, teacher or teachers, deacon or deacons who have been regularly chosen by the organization, are the accredited officers of the branch and are authorized by the voice of the church to take charge of the several services which may be held by the Saints of that branch. It is the prerogative of the elder who may have been chosen, if he be present, to take charge of the meeting. If he be absent, it is the prerogative of the chosen priest, or in his absence the teacher, or if elder, priest, and teacher be absent, it is the deacon's prerogative to take charge. It does not change the rule of the organization if there be other officers of the church, members or not members of the branch, present at the meeting. However, the presiding elder may, if he deems it to be proper, request any officer present to take charge, he himself being present at the meeting; and this same privilege, to so request an officer to take charge, is the right of the priest, teacher, or deacon in the absence of other officers of the branch.

A rigid rendition of the rule, in paragraph 10, would involve the necessity of the meeting being without a qualified officer to preside and take charge, providing that there was an elder or elders present not able to speak the language used in the service, and consequently there could be no meeting, if the rule adopted by the church as published in the Book of Rules did not hold good. The prayer-service is of the same character, so far as those taking charge may be concerned, as any other meeting to be held by the branch.

We have answered this question so much that it seems to us that persons who read the HERALD and who may be acquainted with the law should take notice and not attempt to reiterate the question every time it may come up for discussion or agitation.

In all general assemblies of the members, where an organization has not been perfected, the highest officer present is the recognized one to take charge. If there be two of the same class of officers, then the eldest in years should be chosen, all other things being equal.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In an address to Stanford University students, E. C. Mercer, a former college man, stated that one out of every three men who drift into the rescue stations on the Bowery is a college man gone wrong on account of drink.

Elder T. W. Williams recently addressed the faculty and students of the San Bernardino High School. His subject was the "Commercialism of war." Those who know Bro. Williams as a speaker need not to be told that his address made a favorable impression. The San Bernardino Daily Sun eulogized the address very highly.

LAMONI ITEMS.

The college and schools of Lamoni observed Lincoln day in appropriate manner. The veterans of the Civil War and the Spanish-American War served supper at six o'clock, followed by a interesting program. Elder Heman C. Smith was the principal speaker. Other addresses by veterans of both wars were much enjoyed. Elder John Smith acted as chairman.

Speakers at the Brick Church on Sunday were Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert in the morning and Priest W. R. Dexter in the evening. The weather being quite cold attendance at all meetings was smaller than usual.

"Very positive men have a great need of being very right, otherwise they may be very wrong."

Original Articles

THE CHURCH; AND DUTIES OF THE SAINTS IN TEMPORAL THINGS.

BY THE BISHOPRIC.

[EDITORS' NOTE.—This article is reprinted at the request of the Presiding Bishop. It appeared in the SAINTS' HERALD, March 1, 1884, and was signed by G. A. Blakeslee and E. L. Kelley of the Bishopric at that time. Parts I and II appeared in our last issue.]

III. OF THE AMOUNT REQUIRED UNDER THE LAW.

That with which man is blessed here, he is in some sense under obligations for; he can not at will and independently of himself create or make it; neither the sunshine, the dew, nor the rain is at his command, much less life and all of its attendant blessings. These we may consistently and fairly attribute to the Creator and upholder of all that is good; to him, as we are taught by the apostle, who is not "worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things." Being then so blessed and obligated in our lives, trusted with that which is not our own but another's, it is highly proper that the test of our faithfulness to duty and development of soul herein, be made before the commitment to our trust of "the true riches." And men are expected here, to show by their works, the proper qualities of soul, of honesty, benevolence, and charity; rendering a just and true account as required, in proportion as they have been blessed with the things of life; and this, before admittance to the association of the worthies who have obtained "a good report," and "kept the faith," even with the offering of life itself. The apostle says: "Let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him."

"Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly, he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required." The revelation of February, 1831, reads:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

And the twelve were with him [Jesus], . . . and Joanna the wife of Chuzza Herod's steward, and Susanna, and many others, which ministered unto him of their substance.—Luke 8: 1, 3.

These citations clearly show that men are justly required to remember the treasury of the Lord, and in proportion to their several abilities; to give of their properties according to that which they have; even according, "as God hath prospered him." This rule is certainly founded in the principles of justice; it deals fairly with man, and in its relation one with another, and, therefore is equitable; it is according to that which is acknowledged to be the divine code; and hence right, because according to the law by which we are to be judged when the rewards for right- and wrong-doing are to be meted out to every one.

Just what the proportion is, to a certain extent, is also specified, and definitely settled by the law. The amount so fixed comes under the head of, and is denominated "tithes"; this term being used in the Scriptures so far as pertaining to duties of persons under the gospel economy, or observances with regard to temporal things in the church, to denote:

1. A tenth part.
2. Surplus property consecration.

The first, is that which has been applicable to the church in all dispensations and under all conditions. This was the portion Jacob vowed he would give to the Lord while he journeyed to Padan-aram, if he should be blessed with bread to eat and raiment to put on, saying:

And the place of this stone which I have set for a pillar, shall be the place of God's house; and of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28: 22, Inspired Translation.

This tenth was also of the increase as is more definitely ascertained from the history of the observance of the rule by Abraham, and the further fact, that whatever was required for a full compliance with the law, was of the newly acquired, and not of that upon which the tenth had already been paid. It is said that Abram, who complied with this law—

Gave a tenth part of all.—Hebrews 7: 2.

One tenth part of all that he possessed.—Book of Mormon, p. 241.

And again—

Gave a tenth of the spoils.—Hebrews 7: 4.

These statements particularizing the observance of the law by the "father of the faithful" are guiding illustrations of the duties required of the faithful ones, who, like Abraham, obeyed the gospel. As was his duty he paid to the high priest a tenth of all with which the Lord had blessed him, all of which at the time was increase; for when he started out in life he had only that of which he had need, being yet in his father-in-law's house, and hence when he makes the offering, to "the keeper of the storehouse of God," he faithfully consecrated "one tenth part of all that he possessed." Afterwards when he returned with an increase from the slaughter of the kings, he also renders the just tribute to the high priest, "of the spoils." This view is in harmony with the plain history of the transaction as it is set forth in the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures:

And Abraham gave him tithes of all he had taken.—Genesis 14: 20.

Wherefore, Abram paid unto him [Melchisedec, the high priest and keeper of the storehouse] tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need.—Verse 39.

This was afterwards required of all the children of Abraham, both by promise and the covenant; wherefore it is said:

Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty, and thy presses shall burst out with new wine.—Proverbs 3: 9, 10.

Again:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of Hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightful land, saith the Lord of Hosts.—Malachi 3: 10-12; and Book of Mormon, p. 468.

After delivering these, with other words of the Prophet Malachi, according to the record in the Book of Mormon, the statement is made:

And now it came to pass that when Jesus had told these things, he expounded them unto the multitude, and he did expound all things unto them, both great and small. And he saith, These scriptures which ye had not with you, the Father commanded that I should give unto you, for it was wisdom in him that they should be given unto future generations.—Book of Mormon, p. 469.

In the specific instruction to the church, in our own time, it is written:

Verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming).—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

And again, in the year 1861:

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

Do not overlook the idea; that the law is to be fulfilled. Of all people we should fully appreciate the reason for this. The law then is binding upon the church at the present time, and should be executed; put in force—administered; as any other relating to the body—the church. The Twelve and Bishop, upon whom is laid the duty of execution, are agreed as to what this law is, and also the manner of execution; and whatever differences in opinion may have been said or thought, hitherto, to have existed between these quorums, it will be proper for us in this connection to state, that upon a comparison of views touching the principles generally governing under the law, during the Kirtland Conference, April, 1883, there was found, at that time, to be entire agreement.

Neither ought it to be supposed that where one of these quorums act touching this law the other is at variance; for since members in each must in the day of final account answer as to their acts with reference to the same, due deference to each other and the judgment of each as brethren, must be recognized in order to conform to the common rules of courtesy between man and man, saying nothing of the audacious presumption it must be for one of these parties to act contrary to the wishes of the other in the execution of this law, when the Lord has laid the responsibility of the same upon all.

As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment.—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 2.

We conclude then, that if these quorums are to give an account of their action in this matter in the day of judgment; the members to whom it is to be administered, the church generally, must also give an account in that day in the matter of obedience to the same.

The inquiry is made direct then, since the law is in force and equally binding upon the body as any other, What does it require of each and every member? The answer must of necessity be: Entire, full and complete obedience as any other.

And it may not be amiss, to here remind the brethren of the fact, that when they teach faith, repentance, baptism, a godly walk and conversation, etc., they make no half way work of it; and the Saints would feel horrified generally, should they find any of their number teaching and practicing half repentance, half baptism, or half of the Christian graces only. But it would be just about as consistent to immerse a man's feet or hands, or sprinkle a little water on his head and call it a full and hearty compliance with the ordinance of baptism, as for one to undertake to comply with the law of tithing, by giving the fiftieth, seventy-fifth, or one hundredth part of the increase.

But, it is persisted, what is the increase? The answer is: Whatever a man has been blessed with in the way of means over and above the living: Of all the riches which he possesses, which God has given more than that which he has need.

It may be thought that this would call for a large sum in many instances. Doubtless it will in a few. But it must be remembered that it will be no more of a burden to the giver, if the heart is right, than the poor man's dollar, or the widow's mite. And when the wealthiest shall have done their whole duty, the amount of the consecration, will not it is likely equal an hundredth part of the offering of Abraham, the father of the faithful, which he paid after he had returned from a sojourn of a few years in Egypt; for, he "was very rich in cattle, in silver, and in gold." And he "paid tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." The question also arises: If a person has been making contributions in the shape of free-will offerings for a number of years, is the law still applicable and binding unto him?

If he has been faithful and done simply his duty in making free-will offerings, he has thus far certainly done well; for, as will be seen hereafter, this is a duty required under the gospel covenant; and a person should take such an interest in the cause of Christ and humanity as to scatter these special blessings all along life's pathway; and such will have a recompense therefor in the resurrection of the just, if they are just. God so bestows his especial blessings upon us when we ask him and are in need, and whether we are worthy or not. But such act on the part of a person would not be a compliance with the law of tithing as set forth in the scriptures, unless at the time when it was done the party intended to so comply with that law and distributed the proper amount, and to the proper person as provided therein. There is no doubt but while Abraham sojourned in Egypt and all along his course of life, such bestowal of offerings were received from his hand and which proved to be blessings to the recipients; but notwithstanding this, he complied with the law in all of its requirements and rendered a true account to Melchisedec the keeper of the storehouse for the church.

Specific instruction, secondly, is given as to the amount of the offering, under the head of "surplus property"; which, under the state or condition of the society at the time, was made the first duty of the saints, or the "beginning of tithing." Unlike the general law of tithing referred to herein, it does not seem to have the rule applicable under all conditions of the body; but, that relating under certain circumstances, as it would only be possible under such to carry out the intention and provisions of the same.

Perhaps the most correct and simple explanation that could in a few words be given of this part of the law, would be that, it is the specific rule governing as to the amount of the gift under the law of consecrations, which provides for an exhibit and inventory, or "the laying of all things before the bishop"; and contemplating the mutual transfer of properties, for beneficiary rights and inheritances, and the adjustment of inharmonious relations between the rich and the poor.

To execute this, requires:

1. A place and duly organized body; Zion or a stake.
2. Assisting officers in these stations who are not necessary to the enforcement of the law referred to in the revelation of 1861.
3. Ability on the part of the Bishop to carry out the undertakings on the part of the body.
4. A people who are united in faith, spirit, the truth, sentiment, habits, pursuits, rights and interests and who will willingly conform to the law.

It is not claimed by the Bishopric that this law is binding upon any, except possibly, those claiming to act under the direction of the revelations and settling upon the land of Zion (that specifically so termed in this connection); but as to these, nothing in this article shall be construed as a formal opinion with regard to the obligations of such. Attention is simply called to the fact that it is definitely stated that he who shall go up unto the land of Zion making preparation beforehand, fully realizing the responsibilities and obligations of such a step, shall "be accounted as a wise steward. This is also an ensample."—(Doctrine and Covenants 72: 5; also to W. W. Phelps, September, 1832.)

It may be said that the Saints in Zion are no more circumspect, and no more readily conform to the law of the kingdom of Christ, than those of any other place. But it should be remembered that more is required of such, and that if there is nothing of this nature to be gained by the removal, parties can not be considered wise who go.

Notice is called to the matter for the reason that it is not desired that any shall go there under a misapprehension of the attending obligations and duties; and also to prevent perhaps, as great a stampede from the land hereafter, as there is now a feeling in that direction.

In every age of the church it has been an easy matter to find persons who were willing to go up and inhabit; sit down to the feast; but not so easy to find those who were willing to make the sacrifices required and fully abide the law governing.

It will not be questioned, that the instruction to the church at this time is "to stay," or "settle in the regions round about," as may consistently be done. (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 6, 7; 117: 11.)

The statement is also made, that:

It is not expedient in me that there shall be any stakes appointed until I command my people. When it shall be necessary I will command that they be established.—Doctrine and Covenants 117: 11.

Together, these avoid the conditions named for the successful carrying out of the law set out in section 106, or "surplus property"; a fixed place (and this included certain officers) being requisite in that, to the successful working of the rule. 1. The land of Zion. 2. All the stakes. Perhaps at the time the revelation was given the only places strictly apply so the terms could be properly executed were Far West (where it was given), Kirtland and in what was strictly termed Zion.

Where the rule of surplus properties is carried into effect there is necessarily associated in the execution certain officers with fixed duties (and consequently attaching responsibilities), viz: The First Presidency and High Priests, which are not in terms or by implication, except in so far as the Twelve are under the direction of the Presidency, made parties to the execution of the law spoken of in the revelation of 1861.

The Twelve, whose duties are "to build up the church and regulate all the affairs of the same, in all nations," whatever its condition, are named with the Bishop, (whose duties also are general and resulting, whatever the state or condition of the body,) as the responsible officers in the execution of the law of tithing then referred to; and thus by the terms of the regulation we have a proof that the law therein referred to of "tithing" was that binding upon the church in all conditions and circumstances, and is in agreement with all that is written upon this law as coming through the head, and the fact that the Lord in his instructions is ever in harmony with his own word, and that his ways are not crooked, whatever men may think in regard to the same.

When we take up the revelation of September, 1882, and read: "Nor is it expedient that the elders of the first quorums be sent out of the land of America until the work of the reorganization of my church be more fully established, and a greater unity of understanding between them be obtained," we are again reminded of the unalterable decrees of the "Just One," and the fact that if man would attain to the excellency of things promised, he must observe the directions pointing the way to the same.

There is no specific instruction with regard to the amount required under the law of consecrations so far as it relates to "free-will offerings"; neither is there with regard to just how long a man shall pray or preach; yet, as these other duties, this also is closely enjoined as a proper observance for all of the faithful, not only for an especial work or gift to the Lord through the Bishop, but such offerings or donations should be made for the especial objects also of defraying incidental expenses of meetings, the repairing and building of churches and in aid of such enterprises as a majority of the members of the branch may decide to engage in for the good of the work. Circumstances and ability to perform will govern as to the amount with the wise; and a person should be very careful in his work in this, that he fail not to enter into the measure working heartily for the success, although the decision of the majority may have been contrary to his own judgment and wishes as to the wisdom of the undertaking itself.

It should be remembered that seldom any step is undertaken for the real good of the work without having a minority party in opposition; for all have not alike examined, and perhaps been unprejudiced alike in their examinations, of the step; but after a decision has been reached it is in harmony with the highest principle of government in the kingdom of God, as the Republic, that the minority shall then submit and enter into active support of the measure which is now made the act of the body. A man can not be true to the body, true to the interests of Christ who is over the body, and be, do, or act rebellious in such cases. True he is not bound to change his mind as to the feasibility of the measure; but he is bound to respect the principle, "that the will of the majority is the highest law," and this, in whatever government in which the people have had given to them the privilege and right to decide upon a matter. And the minority must show that respect by conforming to the order until such time as through the instruction and education of the body it may determine otherwise. The true theory and underlying principle touching this is incorporated in the instruction of the wise king Mosiah to his people upon the question of what is the best kind of government:

Now it is not common that the voice of the people desireth anything contrary to that which is right; but it is common for the lesser part of the people to desire that which is not right; therefore this shall ye observe, and make it your law to do your business by the voice of the people. And if the time comes that the voice of the people doth choose iniquity, then is the time that the judgments of God will come upon you; yea, then is the time he will visit you with great destruction, even as he has hitherto visited this land.—Book of Mormon, p. 202.

Whatever may be said of the dealings of God with the human family, he has always honored his own laws respecting them, and among which is that of man's agency; coupled with the rights and privileges which he has recognized as belonging to the church, is found that of action by its members in branch, conference and general assembly capacity upon certain matters belonging respectively to these bodies; and when due action is taken by these upon such matter, good order, good government, and good membership, all demand due respect and good will toward the same until it is rescinded by this same body or reversed on appeal.—Don't fail to get the true position. Must conform until such change is made, not refuse to conform till the change; and he who will not so respectfully conduct himself toward the decision and act of the majority, must cut the ridiculous figure of occupying the self-important and conceited position of not only knowing more than the entire majority that adopted the course, but of also being able to see further into the undeveloped future than he who gave the law permitting the act of the majority to stand as the act of the body; and thus he becomes a law unto himself. The fact of so many complaints being brought to the attention of the Bishop of persons refusing absolutely to do anything toward the help of branch, district and other work of the body because forthwith their policy was not adopted, calls forth specifically an allusion to this matter, and it is hoped that the Saints will readily see that if they can not always have their plans adopted, they can accept of the next best, or the best that can be put in operative force; waiting patiently till the majority can move higher. No doubt all plans and theories which are formulated by man are to a great extent imperfect;—having been instituted by imperfect beings, or as they looked through a darkened glass and saw the light;—nevertheless, it is right and proper that we should go forward and do the best possible, without waiting for what we know to be a perfect rule, or to receive a revelation to do in all things.

In the revelations it is stated:

Verily I say, Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will, and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 6.

In concluding with reference to the amount required under the law in the present condition of the church it may be concisely stated:

1. That it is the duty of each and every one, if they have not already, to at once comply with the law enjoined under the system of tithes which has prevailed where the gospel has been preached and accepted in the different ages.

2. Make such other contributions as may be within their power and as necessity demands, in the way of free-will offerings.

Together they are termed consecrations—offerings set apart in a right spirit and devoted to the work of God and the well being and happiness of man. (See Doctrine and Covenants 82: 2; 42: 8, 9.)

The first, consisting of a tenth of what a man has (for which he has not paid) more than he has need: call it the increase, interest or amount, it makes no difference. This is put into the hands of the Bishop, the head of the treasury, "the keeper of the storehouse."

The second, consisting of such things as a person from the due appreciation of the demands and necessities of the work of God, or wants of his fellow man may from the desires of his heart bring forward and give as a special offering: and hence a free-will offering.

These are also paid into the hands of the Bishop, into the storehouse, but usually kept separate from the tithes. (See 2 Chronicles 31: 11, 12, 14; Nehemiah 13: 13.)

Contributions are also properly made to branch treasurers for incidental expenses; means handed the traveling ministers as their immediate necessities may require and a person wishes to aid and has ability so to do, after having fully complied with the law to the church; and such also to persons not in the ministry if one desire to so use his means;

and all tends to benefit the giver, if done in the right spirit, more than the recipient; and it is thus "more blessed to give than to receive"; but a person can not be his own bishop to distribute the things which are required to be placed in the treasury of the church. This brings up the fourth statement for consideration:

IV. THE METHOD AND MANNER OF GIVING.

Upon the question of just how to give, who to, and in what manner there has been so many suggestions and plans by first one and then another in the past, that it would indeed be wonderful if any had been fully complied with. It is much easier to suggest new ways and not carry them out perhaps, than to put in force and full operation that taught in the books. The gifts of the patriarch were to the proper party, the one duly appointed to receive as has been seen already; to the one authorized and set apart to receive these things and to look after the wants of the poor and care for the church. The Lord through Malachi says: "Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse."

In the time of the Savior's personal oversight and work, it was well understood that whatever was given for these purposes was placed in the hands of the treasurer; the one who "carried the bag"; and the custom was for him to look after the wants of the disciples, together with those of the poor and needy. (See John 12: 6; 13: 29.) The Book of Covenants says: "And they shall be laid before the Bishop of my church and his counselors." And is to be distributed for the preaching of the gospel, the poor and needy, etc., as appointed by the High Council, the Twelve, and the Bishop and his Council (see section 42, paragraphs 8 and 10; and section 114), and as a preparatory fund to be used for the general good of the body as the work shall progress.

To carry out this law and as a means to assist in placing the consecrations in the proper place, the revelation of 1873 directs that the Bishop may also "choose and appoint Bishop's agents, until it shall be wisdom in me," says the Lord, "to ordain other bishops, in the districts and large branches of my church." (Doctrine and Covenants 117: 10.) The Bishop has endeavored to comply with this instruction and agents have been appointed wherever it has been thought necessary to the interests of the work and the execution of the law.

The question is often raised, whether the districts can appoint these agents; and in some districts the discussion of it has been the order of the conferences. This with a few other inquiries may be answered in this connection:

1. As to the appointment of agents. The very term, "agent," ought to determine who should appoint. It is not common for one party to appoint an agent for another without a reason therefor. If he is in some way incapable of doing his own business or has specifically delegated the right to another to act for him then it may be done. It has not yet been questioned but that the Bishop was prepared to act, and he has never delegated the right to others to appoint. These facts are quite sufficient to determine the matter. But it is further plainly settled by the law itself: "The Bishop of my church may also choose and appoint Bishop's agents." He is the one to act in this in all instances. In doing so he often consults with parties both in and outside of the district where the appointment is to be made; the object being to get good and acceptable men; and districts may as in the case of other church officers sustain by vote the appointment; but can not receive the resignation of an agent, appoint an agent, prosecute an agent or in any way interfere with his duties, except through the principal, the Bishop. This rule is essential to the protection of both principal and agent in their work. If the agent is unfaithful, derelict in duty, unjust, or an extortioner, it is proper to quietly report the act wherein, to the Bishop.

2. Agents in their respective districts are required to report to the district conferences all of the receipts and expenditures by them of tithing or offerings of whatever nature, together with the names of the parties so contributing or receiving the same; and the conferences may examine and approve or disapprove of the same and are requested so to do; and should the agent fail or refuse to render such showing the Bishop ought at once to be notified of the fact. This is for the information, satisfaction, and protection of the district, the Bishop and the church.

3. Agents are required to keep separate account of all tithing and free-will offerings coming into their hands and make report of the same to the Bishop. This may be done by them sending in the report when made for the district conferences, or as heretofore annually. The names then together with the amount paid into the treasury are entered to the proper accounts upon the Bishop's books and thus due record is kept for future use as provided in the revelation.

Every member's name in the church should appear upon this record however numerous have been the complaints of negligence in this regard in the past, it is now confidently expected on the part of the Bishopric, that the entire church membership will from this time forward see to it that this part of the law is carried out as any other.

To this end the agents are instructed to make a complete record of all the members in their respective districts leaving spaces opposite the names in which to enter the consecrations of the Saints (tithing and free-will offerings), as they shall be handed in, and thus with the number which the Bishop will enter directly upon his books, he will have the name and amount contributed of every member in the church. The record should be as complete as possible to make it, and especially contain the name and the amount paid as the "tithing" of every member not specially engaged in the ministry and as many of these as may in any way have an increase of funds.

They are also to receive and enter all free-will offerings made in like manner and thus it is hoped the record may be comparatively complete by the first of April next.

This is the manner of carrying out the law as it is set out in the books and we urge that it be fulfilled.

It will not do either, to suppose that it is best to wait for a more convenient time. It is to be a work of sacrifice; done not without an effort; not by giving something you can as well do without, but by earnest, appreciable effort in giving.

We ask the brethren, everywhere, are you ready to come forward and do as is required of those who are to be favored by the Just One; occupy as we have prayed for the way to open and let Zion be seen by the light of your works?

Are there any who do not desire to have their names placed thus with the faithful, or who would for all their earthly gains be willing to have it said to them: "For I was an hungered, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me not in: naked and ye clothed me not: sick, and in prison, and ye visited me not."

But, says one, that language applies to those who were never members, to the goats not the sheep. That argument would not in the least help the matter; for if such strong language as is found in the condemnation was to those who never accepted the gospel of Christ, how much stronger must be that, to those who had become acquainted with the privileges of the brethren and the "good word of God" and then did not these things?

Let us remember that it is not simply the act of coming into the fold that will distinguish the sheep in the day of retribution, but it is also in the work of taking on the clothing of the sheep; performing good works: "In every nation he that . . . worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." And it is plain to be seen that although a person may have been directed into the right fold and mixed all his life long with the sheep, if he has not lived and acted like one during his probation, he is likely to come out a different type in color, disposition, and desires.

The body is in great need; sick, afflicted, hungry, naked, occasionally the members imprisoned, and Jesus in the instruction reminds us of the fact that these conditions would be those of his own people and to them, many would not do what was in their power, and binding upon them as a duty. "Inasmuch as ye did it not to the least of these [my brethren], ye did it not to me." Let us then not be found slothful servants neither undutiful children, but arise and in a oneness of works, move forward as the Master has directed.

The work of enrollment and collections will greatly be accelerated by each member taking upon him or herself the task of seeing the agent if he should be too bashful to attend to his duties in this regard. By placing the name and the amount of the offering upon a slip of paper, or in an envelope and handing it to the agent or the person in the branch selected to receive these consecrations for the purpose of forwarding to the agent or the Bishop, you will greatly aid these officers in their work. They will have sufficient to enable them to enter these items upon the record at their convenience. Do the Saints comply thus with the law the treasury will have plenty to meet all just demands and to spare: to this end was the law given and we believe it equal to all the emergencies. This done, and the incidental expenses of branches are easily met by the little contributions the Saints desire to make from time to time, and thus the "passing of the hat" at our services may, as it ought, fairly be dispensed with without any loss to the treasury.

Be sure that the agent is not permitted to miss you. Would you like to be forgotten in this grand and glorious work? The time will come when it will be found to the welfare and interest of all to have these names in the right place, and to this end with you we shall strive and labor. With the united, earnest and intelligent efforts of all, as sought by the church, and as becomes the spiritual house, the kingdom from above, these calls for spiritual laborers from every part of the land may be fully answered. Ministers of the word will no longer be compelled to cease their labors and look after worldly affairs, the mammon of the life, in order "that the gospel may be free," but with love and confidence in their hearts, that their families shall have protection in their absence and to Jesus the mediator and head of the church, they will "forsake all," the comforts, blessings, cares, joys and happiness of home, family and friends for the love of the Master, and the interests of that kingdom that is "righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." The ebbing life will soon in full return to the branches, and in the reanimation of all through the power of the Holy Spirit, the church may arise and again stand upon its feet.

The wants of the aged and necessitous will then everywhere be met, and peace and plenty return to the barns and presses of the Saints; for God will in the richness of his love bountifully bless them. The gospel of the kingdom will go forth to all the world "for a witness" and then shall the end come. Are we all ready to so live and enjoy? Praying ever for the blessings of the Holy One upon you, we are in bonds of love,

THE THREE BUGS.

Three little bugs in a basket,
And hardly room for two!
And one was yellow, and one was black,
And one like me or you;
The space was small, no doubt, for all;
So what should the three bugs do?

Three little bugs in a basket,
And hardly crumbs for two;
And all were selfish in their hearts,
The same as I or you;
So the strong ones said, "We will eat the bread
And that's what we will do!"

Three little bugs in a basket,
And the beds but two would hold;
And so they fell to quarreling—
The white, the black, and the gold—
And two of the bugs got under the rugs,
And one was out in the cold.

He that was left in the basket
Without a crumb to chew,
Or a shred in which to wrap himself
When the wind across him blew,
Pulled one of the rugs from one of the bugs,
And so the quarrel grew.

So there was war in the basket;
Ah, pity 'tis, 'tis true!
But he that was hungry and cold, at last
A strength from his weakness drew,
And pulled the rugs from both of the bugs,
And killed and ate them too!

Now when bugs live in a basket,
Though more than it well can hold,
It seems to me they would better agree—
The black, the white, and the gold—
And share what comes of beds or crumbs,
And leave no bug in the cold.

SHALL THE BISHOP MAKE ALL DEEDS?

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for that purpose.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

This contemplates giving only that portion you can spare to the poor, hence you deed to the Bishop only a part of your own. Not all! Paragraph 9:

Every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.

The clear meaning in this statement is in harmony with paragraphs 8 and 10. He turns over what he has to impart, or can spare, in paragraph 8; and it refers to either class, those having it of their own, or those reserving it from the Bishop. Paragraph 10:

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer to those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.

The above plainly infers that the man who has more than he needs will keep enough for himself and family, and deed or give his surplus, or what he has above his needs, to the Bishop for the poor and needy. This is in perfect harmony with section 106, where it says, "Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to be put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion." Like section 42 this teaches they keep what they need and turn over the balance. Section 82: 2 teaches clearly that parents may give inheritances to their children; and they go to the Bishop only in cases of necessity:

All children have claim upon their parents for their maintenance until they are of age; and after that, they have claim upon the church; or, in other words, upon the Lord's storehouse, if their parents have not wherewith to give them inheritances.

If their parents have enough for them, they do not go to the Lord's storehouse, or the Bishop, but the parents would deed them an inheritance. Just the same, he who has a sufficiency for himself keeps it, and deeds the Bishop the balance; he would have no need of the Bishop deeding to him what the Lord says he shall keep. But some say, He must lay all things before the Bishop, and therefore he has nothing left. Let us try to understand this. When we lay before the Bishop our inventory, containing a true statement of all we have, and all we owe, with number and condition of family, also our occupation, we then have laid all things before the Bishop; and he only takes (with our consent) what we do not need. The law does not say we shall deed all we have to the Bishop, then the Bishop deed back to us what we need; but it does say we give all above our needs for self and family. The balance we keep under the law of consecration.

But, say some, section 51 says the Bishop shall give every man his portion. Let us see what it does say: After stating to the Bishop that they must be organized according to his laws:

If otherwise, they will be cut off; wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, . . . appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs; and let my servant Edward Partridge, when he shall appoint a man his portion, give unto him a writing that shall secure unto him his portion; . . . and if he shall transgress, and is not accounted worthy to belong to the church, he shall not have power to claim that portion which he has consecrated unto the bishop for the poor and the needy of my church; . . . but shall only have claim on that portion that is deeded unto him. And thus all things shall be made sure according to the laws of the land.

We have already seen that parents can give inheritances, and that no one is required to deed to the Bishop what he needs for his family; and section 51 says he appoints every man equal according to his circumstances, needs and wants. As some already have deeds to more land than they need, the Bishop would require them to turn over that portion only which they had more than they need. The balance they would hold by agreement with the Bishop, under the deed they already had; which is according to the laws of the land, and also according to the law of God, as already cited. This does not say the Bishop shall give every man a deed, but when he shall appoint a man his portion he shall give him a writing which shall secure unto him his portion. If a man's circumstances are such that he needs nothing, he gives to the Bishop a deed to his surplus; and has a deed to what he keeps; just as good as it would be if he deeded it to the Bishop and the Bishop deeded it back to him.

It could not make the title better by paying for two transfers, and going back to the one that made the first transfer. There would be a waste of time and money in those transfers; and it is all to be done and made sure according to the laws of the land. When a man has a good title, and clear abstract, that title can not be made any better, according to the laws of the land.

We are to take all the revelations, and let each have its proper bearing on every other revelation and their relation thereto, and we will find them harmonious everywhere. If a man has twice as much land as he needs and deeds half of it to the Bishop for the poor the Bishopric is satisfied he needs all he keeps or wants to keep. He has a good title according to the law of the land; the Bishop then gives him a certificate, certifying that he has fully complied with the law of the church. Would he be in any better condition if he had made two transfers, wasted the money spent in transferring and recording, and the title no more in harmony with the law of the land than the title he had before? Parents can give inheritances, and this includes making the deeds.

The law in sections 42 and 106 only requires our surplus or what we have above our needs, and the Lord has said, Let nothing go to waste. (See section 119.) Therefore, I do not believe he would command us to waste money in making useless transfers that would be no more in harmony with the law, as given to us, than before those two extra transfers were made. My advice would be to be satisfied when you have a good title to your inheritance or home, and use your extra money to help the poor.

HOW AND WHEN TO GATHER TO ZION.

It is a self-evident fact that mistakes have been made by some of our people in gathering into the "stakes"; but, as God gave command to gather, the mistakes must be in how and when we gather; and to try to point out God's plan is the purpose of this article. The same trouble exists in doing things among God's people of all ages; a seemingly unconscious desire to be contrary. In the early days of the Reorganization the Saints wanted to gather, and the church said, through and by General Conference, that there was no stake appointed to gather to. In 1901 (see Doctrine and Covenants 125: 10), two stakes were organized, and in 1906 (see Doctrine and Covenants 127: 7), the principle of gathering is reaffirmed; yet there seems to be an invisible force whispering in the ears of some of the Saints that it is not time yet. The time is now, if we go according to the law; but it is never time if we do not honor the law.

For the purpose of giving us the best opportunity to best provide for our spiritual, social, and material needs, and to better accomplish the salvation of our fellow men, God has designed Zion. He knew that all men would not be willing to accept the gospel; so, instead of waiting for the accomplishment of the impossible, he proposed from the beginning to gather out from among the wicked those that would be righteous and willing to live according to God's holy law.

Any persons have a right, if they choose, to gather to Zion; but if they want to honor the law and be blessed, and be a blessing to others, they must go according to God's plan.

In a council held by the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric, in 1894, in obedience to a command of God (see Doctrine and Covenants 122: 13), the following was their action: "Resolved that all parties wishing to change their location be recommended to correspond with the bishopric for information."—Doctrine and Covenants 123: 12.

In An Address to the Saints, in May, 1903, by the same class of men above referred to, we have the following, on page 11:

It is right and proper then, that all should file their inventories with the Bishop; make a full and complete showing without reservation, as a solemn and sacred act in their stewardship before the Lord, so that the law may be administered in equity and righteousness. This act is referred to in the law as laying "all things before the Bishop in Zion."

This is in harmony with the law which says (Doctrine and Covenants 72: 3), "For according to the law every man that cometh up to Zion must lay all things before the Bishop in Zion." And in paragraph 5 of the same section we have the following, "Let them carry up to the bishop a certificate from three elders of the church, or a certificate from the bishop, otherwise he who shall go up unto the land of Zion shall not be accounted as a wise steward." We feel safe in saying that the substance of what that certificate contains will be that the individual and his family are good, and loyal Latter Day Saints, industrious and of good repute among their neighbors, and that they have been faithful in observing all the requirements of the temporal law, that they have paid their obligations that they owe the Lord in tithes and offerings, and consecrations, or made provision to do so.

When shall we go? When it will be a benefit to the church, ourselves, and an injury to no one else; and this we shall know when we lay all things before the Bishop, and so honor the law of God and be accounted as wise stewards if we do as the law directs. And when the Bishop says, "Come, I have a place for you," we will be blessed in our work, and be the means of blessing others; and the work of the redemption of Zion will be hastened, and it will not make any difference whether we have a cent in our pocket or a big bank account, the all-important matter is that we go there according to the law, and then there will be less disappointment, and many of the Saints that are now deprived of some of the benefits they could have will have cause to rejoice, and Zion will prosper, and many that now sit in darkness will rejoice in the glorious gospel of the Son of God.

THE REDEMPTION OF ZION.

This was the hope of Israel, the Nephites, and is the hope of Latter Day Saints. I do not wish to say or do anything which would in the least diminish the hope in any one, of the final redemption. But when I read in the revelations of God to the church that the redemption must be by purchase, and when the authorities of the church claim that there is not money sufficient to purchase the land, owing to the high advance in land values, and also understanding the fast concentration of wealth in the hands of a few great capitalists, with the middle class being forced down and out to compete for jobs with the day laborers, who are also failing in the struggle for existence, I ask, Oh, when will Zion be redeemed under this competitive, capitalist system?

I believe that when the law was given the church could have redeemed the land by purchase, the land then being very cheap. But the value of land is beyond our reach, and will remain so as long as a few men have an individual right and title to the earth. But the Bible says, "The meek shall inherit the earth." The meek are the poor and oppressed. Now, is it not plain to any reasonable mind, that as long as this system of individual ownership of the earth exists, it is absolutely impossible for the poor to receive any inheritance on this earth? As this system of individual ownership has robbed the poor of their natural inheritance, will we not have to change the system, and inaugurate a system that will dispossess the robbers? Will this not have to be done before Christ comes, inasmuch as he says, When I come ye shall have no laws but my laws?

If there is not sufficient now to redeem Zion, when can we expect the redemption under this present system? Can we enter commercialism and compete with the trusts, when millionaires are going down in the fierce competitive struggle? Have we slept on our rights, neglected our opportunities, and thereby fulfilled the saying of Christ, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light"? Then, will we not have to wait for the redemption until we have an economic and industrial system which will give us all an equal opportunity? Will some of our wise men arise and explain?

OUR VISIT TO A MENNONITE COLONY.

AN EXPERIMENT IN COMMUNISM.

Not long ago a party of us visited a Mennonite colony of South Dakota, and as we saw many things that interested us, the writer thought an account of our visit would be of interest to the readers of the HERALD.

There are several colonies of this peculiar people in this State, all under one head and governed by the same laws; as near as the writer could find out there is one man the head of this sect and each colony has a leader, all working under the direction of the head man. The idea of this colonizing is to have all things in common as is spoken of in the Bible, each one of the members of the sect to have what he needs and none to have more than another, none to be rich and none to be poor.

These people buy a piece of land and raise stock and grain to buy more land with, this they continue to do till they have as much land in a body as in convenient to work and all live in the same set of buildings. When the colony gets too large for the land, or when there are more men there than are necessary to work the land, they take what they can spare of people, implements, etc., and move to another location which has been purchased in the meantime, and there repeat the operation, "raise hogs to buy more land to raise more hogs on," as the saying is.

The colony that we visited is fourteen miles from Huron and is composed of twelve families, in all eighty-five people. They have two large houses of eight rooms each, and each family has a room to itself; but the cooking, eating, washing, etc., are all done together in separate buildings. The bakery is a large brick oven, so large, in fact, that two or three people could easily sleep in it. The bread is baked twenty-five loaves at a time and the pans that it is baked in are about sixteen by twenty inches. Each pan contains one loaf, and these are placed in the oven and a fire of hay made and the bread is baked in that way; the hay shed is built on the side of the bakery and the firing is done with a pitchfork.

They all eat at long tables, seated on benches, the one at the head of the table taking one of the loaves of bread under his arm and cutting it with a long knife, as it is needed.

The washing is done by horse power. Several baskets of clothes are placed in the washer at a time and the horse started up; the water is heated in large iron caldrons over a brick arch. The rubbing and rinsing are done in a kind of vat, two or three women working at a time.

There are several other buildings devoted to the manufacturing of brooms, shoes, clothing, etc., a carpenter shop, granaries, poultry houses, sheep barns, hog barns, horse barns, cattle barns, and each department has a headman to care for it. The buildings are mostly made of stone with shingled roofs, and as they have among their number masons, carpenters, and painters, and as there is plenty of stone on their land, it is an easy matter for them to build their buildings at a very little expense.

This colony has thirty-two hundred acres of land, and is farmed with eighteen pairs of horses. They raised this year, eight thousand bushels of wheat, six thousand bushels of other grain, two hundred loads of corn. This grain is all handled by horse power and placed in the granaries with elevators through a hole in the roof. The feed bin in the horse barn will hold five hundred bushels of grain and is filled in the same way.

They have at the present time five hundred geese, but have had over six hundred at a time; the poultry yard is indeed a sight to behold. Those large geese, hundreds of hens and chickens, and thousands of pigeons flying around and cooing, make it a very busy place at feeding time.

We neglected to find out how many cattle there are on the ranch, but they are milking forty cows at the present time. They also have two hundred hogs and one thousand sheep.

The people seem to like to have visitors come to see them and they take pains to show them around, explaining all the details. Their dress is very plain; the men all dress alike, and whether at home or in town their clothes are the same, a pair of "jeans," cut after a style of their own, a vest, and a short frock which comes down to the hips. Neither the vest nor the frock have buttons, but are kept together with hooks and eyes such as women use.

The women wear dresses made with tight-fitting waists and very full skirts made of flannelette, and they all wear a kind of shawl over their heads in place of a hat; this shawl is worn continually, day and night, and is only taken off when the head is too warm or to put on a clean one. The little girls wear long dresses made in the same manner as the women, and all wear aprons. The women comb the little girls' hair in a very peculiar manner, two small braids from the top of the head along the forehead to the ear, the hair being caught in as it is braided. The women comb their hair but once a week, usually on Sunday; then it is braided in two braids and done up in the back.

It is said that if one of the members of this sect at any time becomes dissatisfied with his lot, he can go; but he can take nothing with him except what he has on his person; and if he goes, he goes for good; he can not return.

Each one is allowed a little money when he goes to town, but as their needs are small outside of what they get on the ranch, the money is invested by the head ones for the entire body.

One of the strange things about these people is that they are so very filthy; it would be difficult to describe how terribly dirty they are, the women especially, and the children look as if they played with the pigs. It is hard for the writer to understand why they are so lax in this respect, when one sees how industrious and even skilled they are in some things.

Possibly a solution to this is that, like all the rest of the religious world, they hold tenaciously to some things and let the rest of the law go by the board as of no account.

"Master of human destinies am I!
Fame, love and fortune on my footsteps wait.
Cities and fields I walk; I penetrate Deserts and seas remote, and passing by Hovel and mart and palace—soon or late—
I knock unbidden once at every gate!
If sleeping, wake—if feasting, rise before
I turn away—it is the hour of fate,
And those who follow me reach every state
Mortals desire, and conquer every foe
Save death; but those who doubt or hesitate,
Condemned to failure, penury and woe,
Seek me in vain and uselessly implore.
I answer not, and I return no more."—John J. Ingalls.

THE WOES AND JOYS OF THE BACKWARD CHILD.

The minds of grown-up people differ in quickness of perception, ability to remember, amount and quality of information, and power of concentrated thought. Why should there not be as wide a difference in children's minds and why should not we understand this, instead of expecting them to have as great reasoning powers and as much experience and knowledge of the use of words as we have gained in our longer lives?

Because a child is backward at school, we suppose he is idle, stupid, or even half-witted. Sometimes this is true, more often he has only not yet waked up. Some one has said that the only difference between bright and stupid children is their amount of experience; this seems rather too broad a statement. Another writer declares, "Stupid children need to be stimulated, but this can never be done either by applying an irritant like sarcasm or by glossing over their difficulties to spare their feelings." They need to be understood, to have time devoted to interesting them and making matters clear, then luring them on to think and talk.

Sometimes the teacher seems to them to be talking a strange language for they have not grasped the fundamental principles. Many learn very slowly. That which is easy of comprehension to one child at ten years of age may be still beyond the understanding of another at twelve.

Many children are sent to school very young, and not being attracted by anything they find there, unless it is the companionship of other little folks, they tire of the daily routine and cry when their parents insist upon regular attendance. The brain aroused at first, becomes dormant, its development is arrested until something or somebody is found to arouse its activity again.

School life is supposed to furnish the stimulus of competition, but when the child is always at the foot of the ladder of learning, always incapable of getting on faster, the incentive is gone. It is not pleasant for the backward child to be lower than the other; success is sweet even to the young. The child fails in examinations, is forced to repeat the grade, generally with little accession of knowledge, so sometimes fails a second time, then comes discouragement and no desire to try any more. He hates to go to school, and who blames him? He has missed the small victories, and all the enjoyments of the bright, quick youngster, so he either has a good time and annoys his teacher with his mischievous pranks, or frets himself half sick over his failures.

More children than we realize are handicapped by disease or frail constitutions. It is not easy to have a clear brain for mathematics or history when your head or back aches and insidious disease is sapping your vitality; try it and see. Defective hearing, often not marked enough to be distinguished as deafness, causes the child to fail to catch the teacher's words.

Such children do not belong in the public school unless a special place can be made for them. The teacher has only a limited time to devote to each individual, for she has to keep order and bring forty or fifty others up to the standard of promotion. It would not be fair to keep the class back to the rate of the slowest. The dull child needs daily supervision and special instruction. As a blessing to the backward child comes the tutor or private teacher, who, strange as it may seem, prefers the stupid little pupil to the superficially brilliant one who knows to-day and forgets to-morrow, yet who in reciting sails serenely along with an air of condescension. The private teacher explains the difficulties in arithmetic, helps over the obstacles in geography by introducing many bright books of travel, watches the spelling of every word in every lesson, and makes the grammar seem a new study. Progress is made as fast as the pupil learns the work, no waiting for laggards, no hurrying on before a subject is understood. The pupil recites the whole lesson, so no obscure points can remain, for the teacher's whole energy is expended on the one individual. The child ceases to be afraid to express his slow-coming ideas, loses his abnormal sensitiveness when no one laughs at his mistakes, is no longer nervous over his lessons. He has found a playfellow and at the same time an instructor who sympathizes with his failures, and praises his few achievements. This new method of going to school is fascinating. The mother may undertake the home training of the child and succeed, but the novelty of the tutor coming in for a few hours daily, brings better results.

The teacher does not need a wide experience or a special training, she will have both before she finishes with her first pupil. There ought to be found in every community some one to undertake such work. She needs only a fair education, common sense, patience with slow results, ingenuity in using her fingers, fondness for children, and the power to tell what she knows. She must adjust herself to the child's life and surroundings. She needs an abundant supply of materials which are not expensive; string, mucilage, paste or glue, paper, cardboard and cloth; then she and the child will find out what they can make.

The teacher assists in all the youthful plans for the day, always keeping in mind, however, the work she means to accomplish. She goes to the barn to see the rabbits or the white mice, she climbs to the attic to see the new playroom or workshop, she consents to have lessons there or in the tent in the yard, she makes as much noise as the boy, she even endures the mongrel's society when she abhors dogs, because the child loves this beast. Sometimes as her work goes on she will manufacture every conceivable thing from an evenly-wound string-ball to a high-art calendar. She gets mucilage, chalk, and acids on her hands and clothing, but soap is cheap. They are a happy couple, this backward child and the teacher. Yet all the fun is the reward of well-learned lessons. In theory children should get their lessons because they ought, in actual practice they need much incentive and often a visible reward ahead of them.

The average youngster just loves to make things, or to see the teacher do it; if lessons must be prepared first, then he will get those. Some enjoy having stories read aloud. Few children are so dull as not to like this. One little girl who could do arithmetic only by means of beans or toothpicks, dividing and multiplying them, would attempt any lesson, however difficult it seemed to her, in order to hear a chapter from the Flaxie Frizzle books. She had not liked to go to school but would start half an hour early that her teacher might get more time to read to her.

The average backward pupil is a very poor reader, jumbling words in grand confusion, skipping punctuation marks, and dashing over big words. So the reading aloud is prefaced by a page read by the child, with many interruptions from the teacher and frequent repetitions by the reader, until he learns to read well.

Some children like to play games after lessons. These can be made helpful, such as playing store with toy money for currency and imaginary quantities of dry-goods and groceries represented by different kinds of paper, or anything obtainable. . . .

The private teacher also finds many subjects beside the regular lessons to interest the growing mind. First it is weaving paper mats and raffia baskets, or cutting and folding bright colored squares to make a variety of objects. A box of letters for spelling and the spelling-board are two valuable devices; there is also the self-verifying number and word work.

Drawing and coloring are favorite occupations, for everybody likes to daub with paint or rub on crayon. Much neatness and accuracy of eye and fingers can be taught by this coloring work. The Dixon pencil company makes excellent crayons, smooth, strong, beautifully tinted, not waxy like the ordinary ones. With each box comes a neat holder which helps to preserve the crayons when in use.

From simple drawing the work goes to complicated geometrical figures made from paper also, and to the use of the compass, another tool fascinating to all little folks.

If the child expresses a desire to study about birds, animals, flowers or stars, let him do it along with the common school branches. Let him dip into chemistry and geology. One of the dullest boys who ever tormented a school teacher was a brilliant student of natural history. Many a child revels in chemical experiments with their strange odors; forbid only the dangerous things, a small explosion occasionally will do no harm. What is more delightful or healthful than to wander in the fields, tapping stones with a hammer?

The Detroit Home Kindergarten furnishes an excellent system for the teacher or mother to use with the younger children. For a small sum they send each month a supply of material, colored papers, pictures, cards for outlining, everything necessary for the month, with full instructions for their use, as well as songs and stories.

The educational publishing companies can also supply quantities of excellent material and books to supplement the regular school-books. The current magazines are full of suggestions and it does not take the child long to learn to look for these and to get the teacher to help him make the objects described. Dan and Lina Beard have given to the child-world several valuable books of information about doing things and making toys and useful articles from every kind of material. They are practical aids, as any child can do most of the work with a little assistance. There is no end to the things the teacher and the little one can do.

But sometimes all these devices will fail with a stupid child, for it seems to be utterly impossible for some to learn certain things. One girl of sixteen who could work examples in percentage correctly could not spell words of one syllable like "cob, fell, feel." If you have struggled along with the child until he is fourteen or sixteen years old with no apparent results, if every lesson is learned under protest or by compulsion, then if there is anything in the wide world which the child can do and will do willingly, set him at it, if it be blacking boots or scrubbing floors. You may as well decide that he has no aptitude for book-learning and must study in the school of experience. The boy may be able to become a good carpenter, a skillful carriage-maker, a faithful laborer in a shop or factory, even rising to prominence in his position; the girl may become an excellent cook, a good seamstress or a successful clerk, or better still a delightful home maker. It is an open question how far we shall compel our children to learn that for which they have no taste or which they find difficult to attain.—Carrie A. Ritter in American Motherhood.

Questions on March Reading:

What is necessary on the part of those who would give help to the backward child? What may be the effect of sarcasism? How do children vary in their power of comprehension? What is sometimes the effect of sending children to school too early? What incentive is lacking to the dull child in school? What are sometimes the results from discouragement? How may children be handicapped by disease or physical defect? At what disadvantage are such children in the public school? What greater benefit may they receive from private instruction? How may abnormal sensitiveness hinder the progress of the backward child? What relation should the private instructor bear to the child in his charge? Why can this work be better done by a tutor than by a member of the family? Could not the mother or older sister accomplish nearly as much for the child? (It is for the benefit of those in the home who undertake such work either for the children who must be taught entirely at home, or for those who are slow with their school work and need encouragement at home, that these methods employed by the private teacher are given in this reading.) What practical hints can be gained from the suggestions here given? What inducements may be offered the child at home for well-learned lessons? What does the average child love to do? How may a child's love of stories be made the means of improving his own ability to read? What may the school of experience do for the child who does not succeed with book learning?

Program.

Letter Department

Erskine Street, Goodwood Park,
ADELAIDE, South Australia.

Editors Herald: Having a small donation to send to Graceland College, I thought to kill two birds with the one stone by also writing you a few lines concerning spiritual things in this far away land.

Firstly, I may say that our cause has suffered a considerable set-back as a result of the bad conduct and consequent fall of one who for some time had been a prominent figure in our work—a seventy. Many were deceived into believing him an angel of light when at the time he was walking in darkness. Others by the spirit of discernment saw through the veneering of sanctity and were as a consequence not greatly shocked when the denouement came. Those who trusted in him received such a blow that some have lost faith entirely; others are holding on under great difficulties. People outside the church have, naturally, derided and pointed the finger of scorn, and in an endless variety of ways the Devil has raged and raved against the church and its members. I suppose there is not one person in the mission who has the work of God at heart that has not suffered keenly as a result.

The writer was by proper authority called to Melbourne to exchange pulpits with our erstwhile brother, and whilst there had the following spiritual presentation: I saw a huge octopus (devil fish) suspended above the Richmond, Melbourne, Branch, its tentacles hanging and encircling it on every side. The branch seemed quite unconscious of the fact that this monster had it in its grip and parasite-like was sucking out its life bloodspirit. They felt that something was checking the flow of spiritual blessing, but did not seem to know what it was. The more I prayed and pondered upon this presentation the more certain I became that this slimy creature typified certain qualities in the leader, hypocrisy and adultery being the chief. I therefore resolved to do my utmost to break its power. I seized it by the vitals and seemed to be suspended in the air whilst it angrily threw its tentacles around and slimed me from head to foot.

This was spiritual—a mental picture—if you will. The literal part of it was that I discovered irregularities in his conduct and attacked him and instantly discovering the lawless one, I concluded that I would retire from his pulpit and ask for my own to be returned. This was granted by the missionary in charge, but not before this brother had slimed me all over in both missions, and since my return to South Australia, I, with the local ministry, have had a hard task setting things in order.

One month after my resignation from Melbourne and my return to Adelaide, this brother disappeared, it subsequently transpired, with a young lady, deserting his wife and only child. It is a matter of public notoriety that he was arrested on a charge of wife desertion, was convicted, and is now in jail undergoing a sentence of nine months hard labor. He has also been cut off from the church and divorced by his wife.

Such happenings as this show unto us that the power of the Devil to deceive is not diminished, nor the power of God to reveal and punish any less potent. It is also a warning to us all, and especially to the priesthood, to steer clear of the two most fascinating powers—powers that the Devil has ever used against the church and its servants—I mean filthy lucre and lust for women. The eldership must be content with poverty and not try to ape the parsons of Rome or the Reformation, for that leads to a desire for money to maintain worldly pomp and consequently to the adoption of doubtful means of obtaining it.

A man may indulge these and continue to preach, but instead of the Spirit of Christ he will have the spirit of Satan counterfeiting and deceiving.

I am thankful to say that we have greatly overcome adverse conditions thus created in this field, (yet there is nothing to boast of,) and we are now getting our message before hundreds by preaching upon the street. We pray that God for his work's sake will keep us from evil and help us to maintain our integrity as ministers for Christ.

The conflict is severe and trying, but we feel that the sweetness of the overcomer is worth striving for. It is lasting, whilst the pleasures of carnality are brief and closely followed by shame, misery, and lasting degradation.

May we all be enabled for His sake to keep on the straight road and may God grant the inestimable gift of true repentance to those who have been led captive by Satan, is the prayer of your brother in gospel bonds,

December 22, 1908.

J. H. N. JONES.

LLANSAMLET, Wales, January 19, 1909.

Dear Herald: We have started once more on a new year, which brings us one year nearer the great millennium which all the true Saints of God are hoping and praying for. Before we go on very far, let us look back and review the year that has gone, and try to see how many mistakes we have made.

Now in the village where I was born there is a brick tower with a timepiece placed within to tell the people the time of day. This tower was erected to the memory of a certain person who lived and died in that neighborhood. Inscribed upon the front wall of the tower were these words: "Redeem the time." Now whatever was meant by those words I fail to understand, for it is evident that the time that is passed can never be redeemed or brought back again. That time is gone for ever. You and I can lament or bemoan all our mistakes and shortcomings, but we can not go back over the time to rectify anything that may be wrong. Well, what shall we do, some one may ask.

We may start the year 1909 by renewing our covenants with our heavenly Father and live the life we profess, that we may be the children of the light in spirit and in truth, for the name of Latter Day Saint alone will benefit us nothing unless our hearts are clean before the Lord. Now we can not go back over our time again, but we have a privilege open before us in this way. We can make some amends and atonement for the past by being more diligent, more humble, more prayerful, and more active in the service of the Master.

We are not all qualified for the same line of work in this the Lord's vineyard. All are not orators, all are not called to the ministry, but every one has a work to do in some form or another. Now we as Saints have received testimony from the Lord that has fully convinced us of the divinity of the latter-day gospel. Many of us have received wonderful blessings, and yet withal we are selfish, when we should be anxious that our friends and our neighbors should also be partakers of the joys and blessings with us. We are privileged to know beforehand of many things that take place upon the earth. Some things near at home and some things far away, but the Lord is warning his people and calling them up higher. Alas, many heed not the warning voice of God at all, and consequently have to suffer!

Concerning us as a branch of the church, everything is not as well as it should be. I am sorry to say that instead of our numbers increasing, they are decreasing. We have lost four by letter of removal to other branches, but that was foretold by the gift of prophecy. A part of the prophecy I remember was this, that while the Saints were divided and not in full unity, the adversary would cause them to be scattered about, which prophecy is fulfilled, for while many doubt the voice of the Spirit, the word of God is sure and can not fail.

There are others here who are cold and indifferent, who take no interest in their own salvation, neither in the salvation of others. Presumably they forget for the time that the day will come when they will have to give an account before the great Judge of all. He who will judge with righteous judgment. My heart feels sad at times when I think how awful it will be for those who have tasted of the goodness of God and then turn their backs on him. Should this meet the eye of any one who is in such a condition, I pray that it will prove beneficial to them and that they will renew their covenants and get nearer to God.

There are a few here who still hold fast to the "rod of iron" and try to do the will of God. We have had many manifestations of his power here, especially in the healing of the sick. I am glad to be able to say that each time my little children have been unwell, I have always complied with the teachings of the Apostle James. I have called for the elders of the church according to James 5: 14, and it has made no difference whether the administration has taken place in the assembly of the Saints or in the home, they have always received the blessing.

There is one thing that is noticeable among the officers here, as regards the teaching. Recently there was a remark passed in this way: That unless we received the spirit of prophecy we have not received a testimony. Now there are many in this church who have not received the gift of prophecy, although in the church many years, while some only a short time, and that saying naturally has a tendency to hurt their feelings; also it makes them doubt the divinity of the church. While if these statements were more fully explained it would be edifying and comforting. From remarks I have heard, some of the Saints are not so intelligent as others, and do not realize that there are diversities of operations, but it is the same spirit that worketh in all.

I trust that this shall be a prosperous and spiritual year for us all, and let us each one be up and doing faithfully, striving to uplift the church in righteousness and to extend the kingdom among the children of men, that when our life's sun shall set in its western sky, and we leave this world of toil and care and tribulation, we may be accounted worthy to enter into the rest prepared for those that love God and keep his commandments.

I remain your brother in the one faith,
F. SIMMONDS.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Iowa, January 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: The time of holding the next Southwestern Iowa reunion has been set from August 13 to 22, and Council Bluffs is the place selected by the committee.

The branch, at their regular business-meeting January 6, reappointed the local committee that had charge last year and also settled on Walnut Grove as the place of meeting. This is the same place it was held last year. No better place could be selected. There is plenty of room for all and good pasture near by. Keep it in mind, all ye Saints in Southwestern Iowa and Southeastern Nebraska, and come and make this your season's outing and get spiritually fed at the same time.

ELSIE, Nebraska, January 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: Perhaps it will be surprising to some when my name comes before them. My heart has often longed to be where I could attend church and be with my children, but it seems to be the Lord's will that we be among the isolated that there may be another new opening for the gospel to come in. I often think of the good pieces I read in your columns. I wish that I too could write something that might be edifying. While there are times that trials come that make me feel sad and depressed, I feel thankful that I have obeyed the truth, and the everlasting gospel, and often feel that Spirit which causes me to rejoice. I am not ashamed to tell any one what I believe, neither have I made enemies by telling them I am a Latter Day Saint.

Bro. C. W. Prettyman came here on December 21, and preached thirteen grand sermons. We had a fairly good crowd after Christmas was over. Some attended every night. We believe some are very much interested, and some are very nearly ready to obey the gospel.

This is a thinly settled and very desolate looking country to people coming from the East. While the country is subject to hail and drought, crops have been good the past eight years, and a man who has a few cows can make a living, even if crops fail, as there is money in cream the year round. This is a very good climate. The country in this vicinity is a little rolling; no timber, but lots of unimproved prairie, and good water. We live three and one half miles from a railroad town. Elders are always welcome in our home. We have written two letters to Bro. W. M. Self and have received no answer from him. We would like to hear from him.

My prayer is that God may bless those he has called to do his work, and that we may soon have more preaching here, that those who are earnestly seeking the truth may be gathered into the fold.
MARY E. DICKEY.

DES MOINES, Iowa, January 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: Inclosed are articles that have appeared of late in the Register and Leader, which shows the fairness of this valuable paper, entitled "Disloyalty of Utah Mormons," and "Joseph Smith not a polygamist." I believe I previously sent to you the articles to which these are replies. This is not the only good work the Register and Leader has done of late, not the least of which is a refusal to carry any advertisements for the sale of liquors and patent medicines of a questionable character. This is certainly the best evidence of an advanced movement for purer literature, and eliminates that feature of the great papers that has made them somewhat objectionable as family papers, or ones that should be placed in the hands of the rising generation.

In the city of Des Moines there have arisen men of the various churches, laymen, who have started a movement to suppress all Sunday amusements, such as theaters, baseball, and the kinds of amusements that have been previously conducted at Ingersol Park during the summer time. This started with the Men's League of the Central Presbyterian Church, and is indorsed by the Ministerial Association, and there are being appointed laymen from every church to meet and plan the campaign to be conducted in favor of morality and advanced civic righteousness for the city. It is expected that an ordinance will be presented to the city council under the initiative and referendum feature of the Des Moines Plan, associated with the proper number of signatures, asking its adoption, and it is expected to carry this effort to its ultimate. The fathers and men, as well as the mothers and women of the city, have felt the demoralizing influences of these Sunday amusements until they are intensely in earnest, and somewhat decided what their duty is to the coming generation of boys and girls.

At the election of officers of the Des Moines Branch the same officials were reelected: E. O. Clark president, J. R. Epperson priest, C. F. Merrill teacher, and Fred Chandler deacon. The priest and teacher have each chosen two assistants, and the work of purifying the branch of recalcitrant members has begun, the result of which will be the saving of the member in transgression from his sins, or the saving of the church from the barnacles that have been hitherto a clog to the wheel of spiritual progress and the preaching of the word. We are anticipating much good to follow the work of these men of God.

One of the most pleasing features of the work the gospel is doing here is the reclaiming of the erring. One of the erring ones who has felt the severest results of his sins has renewed his covenant with the Lord by a very humble and unreserved confession of his sins, and an acknowledged sorrow therefor, and is taking up his spiritual duties in the church actively, as well as ceasing to do evil, and this is being followed by works meet for repentance, and the Saints are giving the encouragement to the sinner that is so much needed, while they condemn the sins committed. Truly the sons of the leading officers of the church are beginning to feel that there is that in life of vastly more importance than has hitherto been sought for, and that their time and talents are required in staying the progress of sin, and warning others of the sad consequences that follow a participation therein, and that there is nothing done in secret but what will be made manifest; and when sin hath matured and is manifest the most excruciating suffering is felt by those who remember what the Lord has done for them in days past, and what opportunities have been previously neglected. God bless the erring ones, and may they be given strength and righteous fortitude to recover, and may God inspire his Saints with the spirit of trying to convert the sinning Saint from the error of his ways, and while we may condemn the sins being committed in the most unmeasured term, and make no compromise with the world, yet may we show the proper disposition towards the sinner, that is, show mercy to the sinner, but not toward the sin.

The Religio local met and elected as its officials, Joseph G. Carpenter president, Sadie Castings vice-president, Nellie Robinson secretary, Guy F. Mintun treasurer, with the other offices filled by competent officials, and they are beginning with a commendable zeal for their work, and if they endure faithful will be a help to the church, and the work they are now engaged in will be a help to them; the development will fit them for enlarged usefulness, and add to their enjoyment of the work of the gospel.

The Sunday-school has for its officials, Sr. Orpha Emslie superintendent, Ray Chandler assistant superintendent, Alice E. Mintun secretary, Mary Allen treasurer, with the other officials necessary, and their work is commending the wisdom of the choice made, and not the least in the kingdom is the department known as the Sunday-school in the development of a righteous generation, and hastening the redemption of Zion.

The Ladies' Aid Society is seeking to enlarge its sphere of usefulness, and with unity of action considerate with resolutions made, the results accomplished will be a great help to the work of the church as well as the individuals making them.

God is awakening to active service these departments for good, and the individuals composing them as never before, and there seems to be a deeper sense of what the covenant made with God at the waters of baptism and renewed at the Lord's table from time to time, means. The Lord has by the voice of his servants given warning and instruction, and they have cried against the sins that are so easily besetting the Saints in the cities, and especially in these last days, and the Spirit has borne witness of these warnings and instructions in such a prominent way that responses are being made in the lives of the wandering ones by the power of overcoming and in seeking a closer relationship with God. Increased spirituality is very noticeable in the prayer-meetings and in the homes of the Saints, and a joy is expressed on the countenances of several that gives pleasure to all.

While the cottage missionary efforts are not bringing the results desired as yet, still there is one very encouraging feature now appearing, and that is the requests of several non-members of the church to hold cottage meetings at their homes. This is a late feature, and with joy we comply with the requests. There never has been the prospects for saving souls as appear at the present time, and to make these prospects a realization we need means and helpers who have time to carry measures into execution, and the increasing spirituality of the Saints, so that those who are investigating may see good works, and feel the power of God when in their associations. While we can not cite to any particular part of the mission where there is special interest more than another, yet there seems to be a gradual growing demand for the features of the gospel heretofore opposed because of prejudice resulting from false traditions in days past, or that have been thought were no longer needed. There is being felt, and this feeling is clearly manifest on the part of minister and membership, a need for these features of gospel work that heretofore was thought to have been done away, such as, there is but one living and true church upon the face of the whole earth, and the desire that this organic as well as tacit unity may be brought about by an agreement upon one gospel theme; the indwelling of the Holy Spirit, now plead for by Evangelist Scoville, now holding meetings here in the Central Christian Church, but condemned as no part of the Christian economy by the leading representatives of that church (the Disciple Church) so short a time ago, and in so prominent a way as to be the basis of opposition that we have had to meet when in discussion with that people. And it will be remembered that this feature of the gospel was opposed by no less a personage than Alexander Campbell, one of the recognized originators of the Disciple movement; the healing of the sick by the prayer of faith and the anointing of oil; and in the authoritative official recognition by the Almighty, of those who profess to represent Christ as ministers. All this portends that we are approaching the time when of necessity there must be an enduement of the servants of God, and it should inspire every lover of souls to bring themselves in a more fully consecrated condition before God.

One who is at all observing can not but notice the improvement in the literature of the church, the least of which is certainly not in the HOPE, for the improvements made in that paper is by strides, in my opinion; and does the Religio continue its work, there will be developed such literary talent as will fill all the papers of the church with much improved literature, so far as it may be thought advisable to occupy the paper with original articles, and I can not think but what this will be done if what is original is superior to what may be selected.

The movement now being made for the enacting of a constitutional amendment of the State prohibiting the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors as a beverage, is taking very satisfactory shape, and the men selected as officials of the temperance element of the State are men of wisdom, and while not extremely radical, they never will acknowledge defeat or retreat till it becomes a necessity, and they have placed the time of necessity as never.

With an abiding faith and an increasing hope in the glorious ultimate of the gospel, and the final gathering of the people of God, I am,

J. F. MINTUN.

Cure for Smallpox and Scarlet Fever.

Editors Herald: Here is a receipt for smallpox and scarlet fever that appeared in the HERALD some years ago. It has been tried for smallpox and found to be a sure cure. If of use to you, all right; and if not, no harm is done.

Sulphur of zinc, 1 grain; one half teaspoonful sugar mixed with two tablespoonfuls of water. When thoroughly mixed, add 4 ounces water. Dose: One teaspoonful every hour. Children, smaller doses. Either disease will disappear in twelve hours.

Yours truly,

A STUDENT.

A Dream.

Not very long in the past I had the following dream:

I saw Bro. J. W. Wight come to where I was. He and I started together until we came to a large building, and he says, "We will go up in this place." We started to climb the stairs, Bro. Wight keeping one step ahead until we got to the top of the first stairs; then we turned to the left and went up three or four more steps. This brought us into a large room which was of a beautiful red. We walked across to the other side of the room from whence we came and sat down, there being only two chairs in the room. These sat by a large arch door with large red drapery. Directly in front of us was a large stand of fine workmanship, and on this stand lay a large book. I learned this was the judgment room. We had not sat there more than one minute until the Lord came into the room. He walked directly in front of us and passed on into another adjoining room from which he soon returned and walked up to this stand and opened this large book and began to read. I could not understand all he said, but he said this man would be assigned to the place of punishment. Back in another room from whence the Lord first came I could hear groanings and great distress. We sat there for a while and then the Lord closed the book and returned to the room from whence he first came, passing through this arch door, and by our right side, but we had no fear while we were there. Then I awakened. Will some one interpret this dream?

News From Branches

MALAD CITY, IDAHO.

Inasmuch as I have been informed that the Church Recorder thinks that the Malad Branch is dead, I take this method of telling him and others it is a mistake, as we are not all dead. Still we can not boast of very great doings, though we have had Bro. Evan A. Davis and Bro. John Davis of the Utah Mission laboring with us; but it is hard to get the people out to listen to what they have to say. The people here are like those of old, "Why not let us alone? We are quite satisfied with what we have, and you have nothing new to give us, but to tear our work down." They are willing to compromise with us. If we will let them alone they are willing to leave us alone. They do not remember the saying of the prophet of old, that God would send hunters and fishers to hunt them out of the holes of the rocks; and if any one can tell me to what people the Lord had reference, but those people in the Rocky Mountains, I miss my guess.

I feel thankful to God that he is so mindful of his people out here, to send fishers and hunters after them, and my sincere prayer is that he will capture many of them; for I believe there are many good people out here; but the trouble is, the cunning of priestcraft pulling the wool over their eyes. I have attended some of their meetings, and really I did not think it possible for the evil one to have much power over them. We shall treat them with all the kindness that is guaranteed in the gospel of our beloved Father, that per- adventure we may gain some of them.

I would also ask your columns the favor to say the following: Is it not rather late for some of our wise or unwise brethren to find so much fault with section 106, and try to mislocate said revelation, and place it on the shoulders of Brigham Young? It has been a long time in the book, and we as a people have contended and are contending that no one has a right to take from nor add to.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

E. T. RICHARDS.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

On the first Sunday of the new year an active sacramental service was enjoyed. Testimonies of thankfulness and determination of renewed effort were expressed. Saints from Alton, Sr. Bell, of Lamoni, Bro. and Sr. Morris and Sr. Hoover, of Southeastern Illinois, were in attendance. Brn. Mussell and Ruch of Bevier were also with us recently, and Bro. William Sparling, from Dakota.

Edifying and soul-cheering sermons were delivered during the month of January by Brn. Tanner, Archibald, S. A. Burgess, Morris, and Paxton.

Twenty-one names were received on certificate of baptism, the result of good work done by Bro. Paxton at Bourbon, Missouri.

The branch priesthood meeting was held the evening of January 4, when section 105 of the Doctrine and Covenants was considered.

The Cheltenham Branch occupied their new edifice January 3, which is indeed a credit to them. Bro. Tanner preached the opening sermon, and our choir rendered the singing.

Sunday-school and Religio are moving along nicely, endeavoring to do all that is possible to instruct and interest the young, and also the older ones.

Our dear Sr. Bettie Hansaaker passed from this earth-life January 16, leaving a devoted husband, Bro. Charles, and little daughter Ruth. The funeral-sermon was preached by Bro. Tanner. They have our sincere sympathy in their hour of trial.

Our branch officers are diligent in attending to the arduous task of cleansing the branch of all evil, watching over the flock, guiding and feeding them, and assisting them to follow in the path of the Master.

Your sister in Christ,

CHICAGO ITEMS.

The comparatively open winter makes for the better attendance at all services. The general church is prospering, likewise the Sunday-school and Religio. The Religio is taking on new life of late, and making the study of the Book of Mormon all the more interesting.

In previous items we wrote encouragingly of certain enterprises of the South Side people to secure church property; later we were compelled to report their misfortune in being discomfited, for the time, by the property in view being set on fire. The writer has not heard directly, but quite authoritatively, that the branch has purchased a lot, and has almost if not wholly completed negotiations for the purchase of the ruins of the erstwhile prospective church, which consists of the original four walls which are in very good condition, foundation, floor, etc. With some little expense this could be repaired and made as good as new, and the idea that it was a patched-up affair would be generously offset by the consolation that the tabernacle of man-styled righteousness had now been purified by fire.

All Chicago is ablaze with "Old Glory," waving from every archway, corner, flagstaff, and even streamers across the streets, while everywhere is to be seen the portrait of Lincoln, small size, life size, and even some twenty times life size.

Some men gather around the monument of the hero, others do reverence at the martyr's tomb. To the one it is the love of the powerful and successful, the builder of an empire, and the digger of graves. To the other it is sympathy for the man who suffered, and the love for the cause he bore. But in Lincoln, the love of the hero finds its hero; the sympathy for the martyr, its martyr. Gracefully are they both supplied in this great man of perilous times.

Not always is the martyr a fanatic; rather is he the man who sees through a matter, divining the good and the evil, and it is his misfortune to have opened his mouth against the popular throng. He has lived ahead of his times, and has paid for his cause, with his blood.

JOPLIN, ARKANSAS.

It may be that some of the Saints would like to hear from this part of the field, and how the work is moving. I came here about a year ago. The people, at that time, had not heard the angel's message. Last summer I had the pleasure not only of telling the story, but of baptizing seven; and since that time others have been baptized; and now we have a lively little branch, known as the Crystal Spring Branch; and I do hope it will be a channel through which many honest people will receive the waters of salvation; and we have reasons to believe that it will. The work is growing here. I believe in the near future opportunities for preaching will be great. My work is increasing, wherever I preach there is a request to come back. The Lord has helped me when telling the gladsome message. The happiest moments of my life are enjoyed while trying to show people the old Jerusalem gospel, restored. Let me say here, it is the grandest thing in this world. We have one hindrance here, and that is our mode of travel, there being no railroads in this part. We have to make our way through the country on foot. For this reason we can not get in the time that we could if we had public conveyance.

There is very good interest in places. A short time ago, I did some preaching at Dewey. The house was full, and good interest. One lady said, "I will declare that man must be inspired." And at Hot Springs, at what is known as the Garden Schoolhouse, the house was full, and good interest. They have sent me word to come back. I am now at Joplin. Commence a meeting here to-morrow. Will continue as long as interest demands, then will go to Horseshoe Bend. I heard from there to-day, inquiring when I am to come back there. That is a new opening I made not long since. Some are interested.

I would like to see more letters from the folks in Texas. I saw one from Bro. E. W. Nunley, but it was too short to count. Try it again Bro. E. W.

Resolution of Appreciation.

The following preamble and resolution was adopted by unanimous vote at the Far West, Missouri, Sunday-school convention: "Whereas, Sr. Mary Kinnaman has taken interest in our Sunday-school in a moral and financial way, and Whereas, The school deeply appreciates the interest thus manifested, therefore be it, Resolved, That we express our appreciation of Sr. Kinnaman's efforts, and extend to her our sympathy in her affliction. Resolved further, That the secretary be instructed to draft a copy of these resolutions and forward same to Sr. Kinnaman." ANNIE BUSH, Secretary.

"Religio Quarterly."

ORDER EARLY.

Bro. Deam, manager of the Zion's Ensign, where our Religio Quarterly is published, says: "We have orders now that all mail of the second class not sent out on the regular mailing day must be kept till we have an amount on hand or must pay for a pound though it be but one copy. Even though we mailed seven Quarterlies we would have to pay a cent and get a voucher therefor, and a fraction over a pound is counted a pound. So you see it would make a great inconvenience and an extra expense to the society to mail orders as they come in. Now every paper must be paid for as mailed. In fact, the post-master refuses to accept small amounts of second class mail. So people who do not get their Quarterlies right away must not complain. We mail only about one third of the Quarterlies at the regular mailing time. Can you not make a request through the papers for subscribers to have their orders in early?"

It is earnestly hoped that Bro. Deam's request in this matter will be heeded just as far as it is practicable to do so. The Quarterly is being published on a very small margin since the reduction in price last convention, and the expense should be kept as low as is possible. Of course it is impossible to avoid some late orders each month, but much of the ordering late could be avoided. One good way to avoid much of it is to subscribe by the year and thus save money to the subscriber and save much annoyance, some expense and not a little inconvenience to the publishers.

For the work's sake,
J. A. GUNSOLLEY, President.

The "Youth's Companion" as a Gift.

There are three good reasons why the Youth's Companion makes one of the best of gifts for a birthday, for any occasion when a present is in order.

It never fails to give pleasure. There is something in every issue of the Companion for every member of the family. The children never pass it by, and the parents are restless until the children reluctantly put it down to go to bed.

It is easy to order by mail. You need not go through the vexation of Christmas shopping to make a present of the Companion. Sit down in the quiet of your own house, and send the subscription. The Companion will be delivered wherever you say.

It comes every week in the year. Nine out of ten presents quickly lose their novelty. The Companion provides a continual pleasure, for it is renewed fifty-two times, until the year rolls round again. Is there another present equal to it that costs so little—$1.75?

The new subscriber receives Free The Companion Calendar for 1909, "In Grandmother's Garden," lithographed in thirteen colors.

Full illustrated description of the current volume will be sent with sample copies of the paper to any address free.

Lincoln's Colossal Figure.

Lincoln was fifty-two years old when he was inaugurated as president, in March, 1861, and he was fifty-six when assassinated in April, 1865. There are hundreds of people still living who knew him, thousands who at some time heard him speak, and scores of thousands who remember having seen him. Yet so momentous was his period and so great were his qualities that he already stands forth as one of the great figures of history, as certain of immortal fame as any other man who has ever lived. What he might have been able to accomplish if he had lived to complete his second term is beyond any one's power to conjecture. He would probably have become involved in a serious controversy with Congress. His point of view was very different from that of the harsh and implacable leaders who were responsible for the reconstruction policy and who undertook to convict President Andrew Johnson of high crimes and misdemeanors. His death was a great calamity, but doubtless it has helped to give that touch of peculiar dignity, pathos, and heroism to the accepted historical figure of Abraham Lincoln that so tragic an ending of a great career at its moment of climax must have bestowed. If he had fought Congress through four bitter years on its reconstruction policy, and then lived long afterward as an ex-president, the historical portrait would have lacked something of the bold, statuesque outlines that it now possesses.—From "The progress of the world," in the American Review of Reviews for February.

Abraham Lincoln, the Boy and the Man.

To those who are interested in the life of Abraham Lincoln this masterly story of Mr. Morgan's will appeal. There are no digressions to discuss political questions, though the stirring events through which the great war President lived are sketched graphically and truthfully. There is a broad humanity in the author's treatment, a sympathy in his portrayal of the character of the boy Lincoln whose great mind, born in poverty and obscurity, rose above misfortune to the highest office in the gift of the people.

Lincoln's early struggles, the striving for an education which seemed impossible to obtain, his business failures and many wanderings, his defeats and victories as a lawyer, all these are told impartially and vividly. The story should be an education and an inspiration to every one who reads it.

Mr. Morgan draws a dramatic picture of Lincoln in war time when opposition and internal dissension were rife and the black clouds of defeat hung over his armies, through all of which his great spirit rose above the trials of his office, and his plain common sense as well as strength of character guided the nation in its hour of need. The author makes no attempt at philosophy or argument. But there is a power in description that makes the characters and scenes for ever remembered. The pathos and power of that great sad life is constantly emphasized, and the sidelights on character and surroundings have a potent charm.

The book is not written in a fatherly manner to children, but Mr. Morgan has seized on those traits and deeds which appeal to young and old, making a clear, vigorous story of Abraham Lincoln, the best short biography of the martyred President ever written.

The Chicago Tribune, in an editorial January 4, stated that everybody should read one of three books before "Lincoln Week" and after referring to Morgan's Abraham Lincoln, the Boy and the Man as the best of the three named, said: "It tells the life story well. It is interesting. It is well written. It gives the significant facts one wants to know."

The Visit of an Old Friend.

To-day the editor received a copy of that reliable seedsmen's catalogue, Vick's Garden and Floral Guide. It was a look at the face of an old friend, and was hailed with joy. The Guide improves with age; the illustrations are up to date photo-engravings, finely printed, and are direct reproductions from nature. The Vegetables and Flowers in colors on the covers are so attractive that one delays opening the book—but when it is opened the pleasure is only increased. The Corn, Lettuce, Onions, Radish, and Peas are superb, and the Asters, Poppies, Petunias, and Sweet Peas, are—well, just write to James Vick's Sons, 143 Main Street, Rochester, New York, for a copy. It is free, and it is really something for nothing.

A BUSY YEAR.

The business year which closed on February 1 was probably the busiest year ever experienced by the publishing department. An inventory of the stock of the Herald Publishing House by Elder Charles Fry, of the Auditing Committee, showed a stock of merchandise on hand, part of which is finished and part in the process of finishing, amounting to over twenty thousand dollars.

It can be seen that if this merchandise could all be converted into cash, within the near future, the publishing department would be in a position to do far greater good. A catalogue has been sent to subscribers of the HERALD, and we would be pleased to send them to all who will make request. Branch presidents and book agents can lend material assistance by urging the membership to supply themselves and their friends with the books of the church.

The most important work done the past year was the publication of the small edition of the Book of Mormon in short verses. The book is now on sale and we are receiving words of appreciation from many. We have had repeated calls for Joseph Smith and His Progenitors, by Lucy Smith, and this book is once more in print, selling for seventy-five cents in cloth binding. FRED B. BLAIR, Manager.

THE IMPOTENCE OF LYING.

It is said that several distinguished Americans were visiting an English school. The teacher invited them to test his pupils on their knowledge of American history. So the leader of the party asked one little girl to name two remarkable facts regarding George Washington. She replied that he was an American and he never told a lie. The idea that Washington's reputation for veracity is rendered doubly remarkable because of the fact that he was an American furnished the astonished questioners food for thought and the examination was closed.

It is a venerable tradition that the Father of his Country never told a lie. The usual version, based on the cherry-tree incident, has it that he could not tell a lie. This disability has not attached to all Americans; and it is charged abroad that the art of picturesque and varied lying, both extensive and intensive, is perfected in the land of the free and the home of the brave. This may be simply a ruse on the part of other nations to distract attention from themselves.

At least it is of note that one modern nation can point to a chief citizen who is reputed to have adhered strictly to the truth. Boyhood, courtship, business, politics, social functions, all offer such seeming inducements to indulge the habit of prevarication that probably few men would care to assert that they had never, never told an untruth. It is further to the credit of America that a prominent professional man has risen to strike a blow at the most subtle of all untruths, the one that slips out under the guise of humanitarianism.

Doctor Richard C. Cabot, of Boston, whose modern methods of uniting medication and philanthropy were reviewed in the SAINTS' HERALD January 13, has written an article entitled the "Impotence of lying," from which we quote:

I was brought up as most physicians are, to be truthful whenever possible, but to lie when the patient's interest absolutely demanded it, when sympathy, tact, and kindness forbade our telling the apparently wounding or dangerous truth. After practicing medicine seven years on this principle, I gradually became convinced that no man was skillful enough to make a success of lying unless he kept in constant practice. The occasional liar does not always succeed even in fooling his patient, although he often thinks he does.

After these seven years of lying I tried the truth, and for the last eight years that has been my steady practice. Let me explain, first of all, just what I do and do not mean by telling the truth. I do not mean emptying my mind of all its contents before every one or on every occasion. It is no one's duty to buttonhole all his friends on the street and give them a dissertation on their faults and weaknesses. It is no one's business to force truth on people when there is no reason to suppose that it can do them any good. But it is every one's business to be fair and square, to deceive no one, never to be double-faced.

In the field of medicine the temptation to speak the lie of kindness is strongest, perhaps, in regard to the future progress of disease, but it is also powerful in diagnosis and in treatment, as a few examples will show.

Until quite recently it was a common practice among physicians to tell the sufferer from early phthisis [tuberculosis] that his disease was "bronchitis," or that he had "weak lungs." It was thought harmful to "alarm the patient," and unkind to make him face the facts. Of late this pernicious habit has begun to go out of fashion as regards phthisis, because the fresh air and full feeding treatment now generally adopted "gives away" the nature of the malady. Publicity and the wider knowledge of disease by the general public are making it harder and harder for physicians to conceal from themselves the harm that deception works. Here, as in so many other fields, tuberculosis is the entering wedge making for the saner treatment of all disease. We know that to get the best results in treatment we must have the cooperation of the patient; in fact that he, with God to help him, must do most of the work.

But in relation to many other diseases we physicians still try to treat the patient like a dummy who is passively pushed, molded, and manipulated from without according to methods that he does not understand. Take heart-disease, for instance. I recently knew of a case of heart-disease in a prominent Bostonian who consulted a fashionable Boston doctor for severe pain, due in fact to the heart-trouble. The doctor wishing "not to alarm the patient" told him that "neuralgia of the stomach" was his malady. Not long after the patient met at his club another and still more fashionable doctor, an old friend of his. The following conversation ensued:

Patient: "Sam, what is neuralgia of the stomach?"

Doctor: "There's no such disease."

Patient: "What should you think of a doctor who made that diagnosis?"

Doctor: "Either he doesn't know his job, or he is trying not to alarm his patient."

Patient: "I see."

It is nearly impossible to arrange that all the liars shall tell the same lies. Slight divergencies upset the whole plan. Publicity and the increasing intelligence of the public are forcing us to take the patient into our confidence, if only to gain his confidence.

One of the hardest of tasks for those of us who have given up lying is to convince people not to lie to the insane. Almost every one,—clergymen, social workers, college professors, and intimate friends included,—will lie to any one who is, or is suspected of being, insane. He is outside all the pales of morals. Does it work? Not at all.

The superintendent of a large asylum for the insane once wrote me: "Two out of every three of the patients in our asylum suffer from misrepresentation made to them before or after commitment by their friends. Patients are absolutely misled as to where they are going, and find themselves in an asylum without anticipating it. Consequently they are unwilling to believe anything that is said to them inside the asylum. If their friends and pastors can deceive them, surely the asylum doctor will. So our hands are tied."

Of course the lie works long enough for the liar to shift the responsibility. It is in the next chapter that the breakdown comes,—round the next corner of the road, or even on the same straight road, but in the dim distance, where his short-sighted eyes can't follow. . . .

"Oh, of course I never believe what doctors say," a girl of twenty said to me once. "I've helped them lie and fix up the letters to mother too often myself."

Lies work only so long as confidence is firm. But every lie undermines confidence, as in the two examples just given. So-and-so makes it more and more difficult to make either truth or falsehood effective. Finally, as in the story of the boy who cried "Wolf," the truth itself becomes powerless. Lies have undermined both themselves and it. . . .

The short-sightedness of the conscientious liar is nowhere more strikingly shown than in the lies which most doctors tell as a part of treatment,—the lies known as placebos, or bread pills.

A placebo is a medicine given, not for its virtue as a drug, not for its genuine physiological action, but because (though inert) it will make the patient think he is getting something of real value to his tissues. It is given to make him believe that something is being done for him, when this is not the fact. Such a drug works only so long as the patient is deceived. Imagine the doctors saying frankly: "I give you this medicine (quite harmless, I assure you) for its effect on the mind. We must beat Mrs. Eddy in her own game, and by producing faith and hope in you benefit the condition of your stomach and bowels."

Of course such frankness would spoil the whole game. One must carefully and minutely explain the method in which the drug is to be dissolved and taken just so many minutes after breakfast. One must go through all the forms of prescription-writing and elaborate directions, or the whole structure of lies will fall.

But where is the harm of all this?

Look at the patent medicine industry and find the partial answer,—one of the ill-effects of teaching people to believe that most diseases can be cured by medicine in a bottle. The people sum it all up. They find the total result of the doctor's numerous and costly visits in a row of medicine bottles on the shelf. The medicines are cheap. The doctor is expensive. Why not skip the middle-man and get the medicine direct? So the patent medicine industry thrives.

Babies are not born with a desire to swallow a drug every time they have a pain. They learn that lesson later. From whom? Ultimately from the doctors whose wise habits have been handed down through the aunts and grandmothers.

So the bread-pill habit among doctors produces and maintains the patent-medicine habit among patients: robs the patient of his health and the doctor of his living. Suppose the doctor told the truth, refused to give drugs except in the few diseases where they are really of value, and spent his time in discovering and eradicating the bad habits of eating, drinking, smoking, loafing, and sexual vice, which produce most of the diseases for which doctors are called. People wouldn't think they could squeeze out the middle-man and get that sort of advice out of a medicine bottle.

"Well," people say, "that is all very well in theory, but suppose people demand drugs?" They can be taught not to demand them, and to trust their doctor all the more when he does give a drug because he so often doesn't.

"But if telling the truth makes the patient worse, would you still tell it?"

If the diagnosis is really clear and certain, I find that the patient has usually suspected it long before his friends and nurses have come to the point of discussing the propriety of concealing it from him. He looks with a pitying smile on their efforts to deceive him. If the diagnosis is in doubt, as is so often the case, we can truthfully tell the patient that, and go on with our business of cure. I have many times seen friends amazed at the calmness—even relief often—with which the sufferer learns the truth which they, the healthy but faint-hearted friends, could scarcely face. I have never known a patient made worse by learning the nature of his disease. . . .

Publicity—the turning on of the light from all sides, as has happened recently in the political and commercial life of our country—has its beneficent effects in hastening the decay of lying. Where all is known, lying is impossible. When the effects of our lies come swiftly back to us (as they tend to do when publicity educates the public and disseminates truth through a million agencies) we soon learn the shortsightedness of falsehood. The man who robbed Peter to pay Paul would have been less likely to do so if Paul had previously read of the robbery in his morning paper. Anticipating this, the robber nips his own act in the bud,—finding that it is vain to try to buck the universe!

For with reality against him, that is exactly the liar's task. He is trying to cut off the branch on which he sits, to destroy the credit and confidence that makes it possible to deceive any one. Because God is in his world, because goodness is in the very nature of things, we fight against reality, against the universe, when we raise our puny voices to lie. It is sin because it is self-destruction,—the effacing of our own last act by our next act, the attempt to face north and south at once.

Not merely in medicine, but in the social world, the business world, this law holds true. I have described its working in my own profession because there it has come home to me most strongly, but I can not help seeing it everywhere that I have the opportunity to get close to the facts. A house divided against itself can not stand. Such an edifice every liar tries to construct,—and with one hand he tears down what with the other he builds up,—in a murky, dusty light. But the light is growing, and he will soon see his folly and desist.—Sunday School Times, January 23, 1909.

"Thou shalt not lie" (Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7), is the modern, short, concise, English version of the old commandment. It is not modified in any way anywhere in Holy Writ. Yet man has modified this commandment to suit himself and has imagined many exceptions.

In the Book of Mormon we find a remarkable prediction concerning the last days:

And there shall also be many which shall say, Eat, drink, and be merry; nevertheless, fear God, he will justify in committing a little sin: yea, lie a little, take the advantage of one because of his words, dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this.—2 Nephi 12: 10.

The thought that the fear of God and a profession of religion will counteract a little indulgence in falsehood and general iniquity is perhaps not confined to any one denomination and is not a new idea at all; but probably never in the history of the world was it worked harder than during the past fifty years. Men in all walks of life assume that a profession of religion will serve as an ample cloak for irreligion.

The attempt has even been made to make a lie the tool of religion. It has been held and taught, mostly privately, that one is justified in lying a little to advance the cause of Christ and to establish the church or foster her interests. We are not aware that such an idea is held anywhere in the true church of Christ, of which the SAINTS' HERALD is representative; we trust that it never will obtain a foothold therein. The position is utterly false. The cause of truth can be served only by telling the truth. The church needs no man to lie for her. Her worst enemy is misrepresentation, whether without or within.

Covering a broader field is the old doctrine that the end justifies the means. It has long held a place in war, in business, in love, in friendship, even in so-called religion. No worthy end ever justifies any but worthy means; and no lie is worthy of manhood or womanhood.

There is the polite lie, the lie of convenience, the humanitarian lie, and, worst of all,—perhaps rarest of all, the malicious lie. We do not care to enumerate others, not wishing to be accused of having too intimate a knowledge of our subject.

The humanitarian lie appeals with the subtlest force to those of higher sensibilities,—to save a sick man anxiety by lying to him! It seems a justifiable thought; but Doctor Cabot strikes it hard on sound philosophical and scientific principles. And Doctor Cabot is a man of broad experience. At present he holds the position of physician to the out-patients of the Massachusetts General Hospital, physician to the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, to New England Hospital, member of the American Association of Physicians, member of the American Medical Association, counselor of the Harvard Medical Alumni. He is in a position to know.

We believe with him that it is not always necessary to tell the truth, it is best at times to be silent; but if a man speaks at all let him speak the truth.

A TAINTED DOLLAR.

The following is very readable and contains some ideas worthy of consideration:

(A sermon preached by Bob Burdette in the Temple Baptist Church, Los Angeles, California. Text: "The gold of that land is good."—Genesis 2: 12.)

And why shouldn't a metal so pure and precious be good?

What is Tainted Money Anyhow?

Here is a dollar bill that has found its way to church this morning, and presents itself at the altar of worship with the offering. Look at it! Dirty, grimy, smelly, old and wrinkled, and many stains. Where have you been all last week, old dollar bill? "Well, I've been going about doing good, for the most part. I've bought food for the hungry and helped to pay the rent for the poor. I came to town Monday with a poultry rancher and got a smell of live poultry on me. He bought some commercial fertilizer with me, and I took on a new taint of phosphates and acids. That man paid his butcher with me and I got a suggestion of ham rinds added to me.

The Butcher Bought Kerosene with Me, and I enriched my breath with new complications. The oil man bought some tobacco with me. The tobacconist paid his taxes with me, and I got paid out to a street sweeper. He got a drink with me, and that night while you people were at prayer-meeting, I sat in a poker game, changed hands a dozen times, and the bartender got me in the morning. He paid his fare with me. The conductor turned me in to the company and I was paid out to a machinist, who was a good Catholic and bought fish with me on Friday. The fish man paid me to a cobbler for mending his seaboots, and the cobbler paid me to a plumber, who repaired a sewer connection for him. The plumber bought a beautiful little book for a birthday present for his little daughter, and the bookseller brought me here.

Ain't I Welcome?

"Well, old dollar bill, part of your record is rather shady, isn't it?" "Well, yes, I've walked in the dirt and tried to keep clean. Don't you want me?"

Poor old dollar bill,

I've Known Men Just Like You.

Men who stained their names, and shamed their lives and smeared their characters with the dirt of evil ways—men a hundred times dirtier than yourself. And I've known them to find their way to church just as you've done—brought here by some one else. I've seen them down at the altar of grace and mercy on their knees; their eyes blinded with tears, their hearts broken with penitence. And we received them gladly. Only the angels in heaven, sinless and holy, were gladder than I—only Christ, the Savior, and the loving All-father were gladder than the angels. It is the mission of the church not to turn away the defiled, but to gird herself, kneel down and wash the travel-worn and dust-stained feet of the wayfarer. Poor old dollar bill. You have been once or twice or thrice, last week. But it is Sunday morning. You have found your way to the church; you have made your way to the altar—you offer yourself to the service of righteousness, standing right between the offering of one of the best and honestest deacons on earth, and that of a pure, sweet mother in Israel, who is a living saint. What will be your pleasure, brethren? Is this grimy old dollar bill, with all its dirt and smells "tainted money," or is it as good as the "gold of Havilah"? Shall one of the ushers bring a pair of tongs and drop it out of the window, or shall we receive it into the offering in "good standing and full fellowship"?—Baptist World.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The employer's liability bill recently passed the Senate of Iowa by vote of thirty-seven to eight. This bill provides that contributory negligence on the part of an employee shall not necessarily bar him from recovering damages as the result of an accident. His negligence, however, will be taken into consideration by the jury in fixing the amount to which he is entitled. Under the law as it now stands, no matter how negligent the employer may be, if the employee is negligent he can not recover damages in case of accident. At this writing the House has not passed upon the bill.

"The American public has become accustomed to think of the Indians as a 'vanishing race,' and far too many people suppose that the questions comprised in the phrase 'the Indian problem' have already vanished. Such people will be much surprised to learn on as excellent authority as that of the Reverend T. C. Moffett of the Indian Department of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions that the Indians of the whole country are actually increasing in numbers; and this statement is supported so far as the Navajoes are concerned by Mr. W. R. Johnston, of Tolchaco, Arizona, who says that the rate of increase for that one tribe is at the rate of about thirty-three per cent every ten years. Of the twenty-seven thousand Navajoes, Mr. Johnston describes no fewer than twenty-two thousand as at present practically untouched by the gospel, and that means in this case, untouched by Western civilization.—The Indians' Friend, February, 1909.

A press dispatch from Oklahoma, February 17, announced the death of Geronimo, one of the most noted of the Indian warriors of times gone by.

We trust the following is a correct report of the prohibition movement in Utah:

"SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, February 18.—If the action of the house of representatives on the Anti-Saloon League bill providing for state prohibition is any indication of the general sentiment in the legislature, the saloons of Utah will soon be compelled to seek new locations, or suspend operations altogether. After defeating various amendments submitted by the opposition, the most important of which called for the legalizing of county dispensaries, the house passed the prohibition bill by an overwhelming majority, the vote being forty-two to two, with two other members absent and not voting. Two of the forty-two, however, voted with the friends of the bill merely for the purpose of moving a reconsideration later.

"The passage of the measure in the senate will meet with more opposition than in the house, but the public pressure is quite strong, and the success of the bill is not at all unlikely. The church bodies of Utah, including all denominations, are urging the legislature to grant absolute prohibition, and the Mormon church, which has heretofore been a strong factor in shaping legislation, is especially active in the interest of this measure. Action will be taken by the senate in a few days."

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday was a most beautiful day and almost everybody took advantage of the spring-like weather. Attendance at all meetings was larger than usual. Patriarch A. H. Smith spoke in the morning and Elder J. T. Hackett in the evening. Speakers at the Homes were Elders Charles Albertson and J. M. Stubbart.

Since the first of the year we have received more letters than we have been able to publish. Brethren will please be patient. We are using their letters as fast as possible, and hope to slight none.

GATHERING, SURPLUS, TITHING, AND EQUALITY.

To the Saints of the Independence Stake: The duty of administering the law of temporalities in the stake having been imposed upon us, thy brethren, we desire to greet you at the opening of the year, and set forth the law upon the above topics, as we find it in the books of the church.

GATHERING.

Having in our work as special officers to meet conditions which relate to the gathering, it will be well to make some inquiry as to the law appertaining thereunto. It is evident that many of the Saints have reached the conclusion that the time has come to gather in and about Jackson County, Missouri, where they anticipate Zion shall obtain some time in the near future with all her beatitudes.

Our heavenly Father seemingly had a purpose in establishing Zion of the last days, and it seems to have been in his mind from the beginning, for he said unto Enoch:

As I live, even so will I come in the last days, in the days of wickedness and vengeance, to fulfill the oath which I made unto you concerning the children of Noah. . . . And righteousness and truth will I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood, to gather out mine own elect from the four quarters of the earth, unto a place which I shall prepare; an holy city, that my people may gird up their loins, and be looking forth for the time of my coming; for there shall be my tabernacle, and it shall be called Zion; a New Jerusalem. —Genesis 7: 67-70, I. T.

Zion shall be a place of safety, a place of refuge for the pure in heart.

Christ said:

For in that day, before the Son of Man shall come, he shall send forth his angels and messengers of heaven. And they shall gather out of his kingdom all things which offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them out among the wicked; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Matthew 13: 42, 43, Inspired Translation.

With an unalterable decree it has gone forth from the Father that those who gather must gather in his way and keep his commandments or they will not be able to abide in Zion.

“Gather my saints unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.”—Psalm 50: 5.

It is by sacrifice we are to make our covenant with God, that we may be permitted to dwell with his people when the heavens and the earth shall tremble; the wicked shall slay the wicked and the poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel; when great tribulation shall be among the children of men and the pure in heart shall be preserved.

To those who first gathered upon this land of Zion in 1831 the Lord said:

Hearken, O ye elders of my church, and give ear to my word, and learn of me what I will concerning you, and also concerning this land unto which I have sent you; for verily I say unto you, Blessed is he that keepeth my commandments, whether in life or in death; and he that is faithful in tribulation, the reward of the same is greater in the kingdom of heaven. Ye can not behold with your natural eyes, for the present time, the design of your God concerning those things which shall come hereafter, and the glory which shall follow, after much tribulation. For after much tribulation cometh the blessings. Wherefore the day cometh that ye shall be crowned with much glory; the hour is not yet, but is nigh at hand.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 1, 2.

And again he said:

Behold, blessed, saith the Lord, are they who have come up unto this land with an eye single to my glory according to my commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 59: 1.

It is useless for Saints to come to Zion's land with any other motive than to do just what God requires of every man. One of the first and all-important conditions is,

And now I give unto you further directions concerning this land. It is wisdom in me that my servant Martin Harris should be an example unto the church, in laying his moneys before the bishop of the church. And, also, this is a law unto every man that cometh unto this land, to receive an inheritance, and he shall do with his moneys according as the law directs.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 7.

This instruction was given about the time the land of Zion was dedicated: this was to be a pattern to every man that came to this land, and every man that expects to stay must comply.

Who are prepared, and who is preparing to stay?

Each might ask himself, Am I? If not, how long will the Father wait upon me to place myself in harmony with the work I have so many times testified that I loved with all my heart?

We have had some experiences in meeting and corresponding with Saints in reference to Zion and the gathering, and found that it is but a small minority that seems to really sense the conditions and who are willing to comply with the law appertaining to the gathering.

Let not your gathering be in haste, . . . but let all things be prepared before you.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 9.

A certificate from the judge or bishop in this [where you live] part of the vineyard, unto the bishop in Zion, rendereth every man acceptable, and answereth all things, for an inheritance, and to be received as a wise steward and as a faithful laborer; otherwise he shall not be accepted of the bishop in Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 4.

How many have come with certificates, certifying to the fact that they have complied with the law of temporalities?

The gathering, we are informed, should not be in haste; hence, as God makes no difference between the rich and the poor, all should make their arrangements before and if they fail for the lack of knowing, then when they do know, they should adjust themselves in harmony with the law.

And the last thing that Saints who have means should think of is to come to Zion and buy up land to hold for an advance in price to enrich themselves at the expense of their brethren. If we do as Martin Harris was commanded (and this we should), there will be no speculations, as condemned in the last revelation to the church. The direction to come up higher and be pure and clean, should come to us with greater force and we should energize our souls to a closer walk with our covenant and with God. As none but the pure and good are to remain, and since it is to be a place of safety, purity, let us ask ourselves individually, What am I doing to bring about that glorious condition?

SURPLUS.

Surplus is the means of eradicating selfishness, and the step toward equality which must obtain before Zion can be redeemed: "But the laborer in Zion, shall labor for Zion; for if they labor for money, they shall perish."—Book of Mormon, 2 Nephi 11:15. This corroborates the revelation to the church, section 101, paragraph 2:

Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.

But, says one, there are so many ways set forth, whom shall I believe? The question, Who is made responsible for the teaching of the law of temporalities, ought to be inquired into. What is everybody's business, as a rule, is generally nobody's business, and confusion is the result. Hence the Lord said:

The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto, and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to.—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10.

The claim of Latter Day Saints is that the "law of the Lord is perfect"; therefore, a correct rendition of the law governing this department must obtain, that unity may be had, and who is it that is under special obligation to teach and look after this department? "Let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed."—Doctrine and Covenants 104:44.

It is a legal phrase that civil liberty rightly understood consists in protecting the rights of the individuals by the united force of society; society can not be maintained, and of course can exert no protection, without obedience to some sovereign power; and obedience is an empty name if every individual has a right to decide how far he himself should obey.—Blackstone. (See also Doctrine and Covenants 85:8.)

Every man in the church should consecrate his life service, ability, and success to the establishment of God's kingdom, and no man should possess any more in proportion to his needs than another for his individual benefit, for this is forbidden.

The Lord said that "he would not be mocked" in those things that he commanded to be established as an everlasting order for the benefit of the church and the salvation of man, both poor and rich. This principle of the law, "surplus," is in force now; and it would have been better for us not to have been born into this world than to turn a deaf ear to the revelations of God in this regard.

He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, even his prayer shall be abomination.—Proverbs 28:9.

For behold, are we not all beggars? Do we not all depend upon the same being, even God, for all the substance which we have; for both food and raiment, and for gold, and for silver, and for all the riches which we have of every kind? . . . And if ye judge the man who putteth up his petition to you for your substance, that he perish not, and condemn him, how much more just will be your condemnation, for withholding your substance, which doth not belong to you, but to God, to whom also, your life belongeth; and yet ye put up no petition, nor repent of the thing which thou hast done. I say unto you, woe be unto that man, for his substance shall perish with him; and now, I say these things unto those who are rich, as pertaining to the things of this world.—Mosiah 2:4.

Alma commanded that the people of the church should impart of their substance, every one according to that which he had; if he have more abundantly he should impart more abundantly; and he that had but little, but little should be required; and to him that had not should be given. And thus they should impart of their substance, of their own free will and good desires towards God, and to those priests that stood in need, yea, and to every needy, naked soul. And this he said unto them, having been commanded of God; and they did walk uprightly before God, imparting to one another, both temporally and spiritually, according to their needs and their wants.—Mosiah 9:9.

And your minds in times past have been darkened because of unbelief, and because you have treated lightly the things you have received, which vanity and unbelief hath brought the whole church under condemnation. And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written, that they may bring forth fruit meet for their Father's kingdom, otherwise there remaineth a scourge and a judgment to be poured out upon the children of Zion; for, shall the children of the kingdom pollute my holy land? Verily, I say unto you, Nay.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:8.

To this church and people the Lord said in February, 1831:

Behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, . . . And it shall come to pass that after they are laid before the bishop of my church, and after that he has received these testimonies concerning the consecration of the properties of my church, that they can not be taken from the church, agreeably to my commandments; every man shall be made accountable unto me, a steward over his own property, or that which he has received by consecration, inasmuch as is sufficient for himself and family.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:8, 9.

The Saints will notice by this paragraph that the surplus which is turned over to the church is retained by the church, but the amount kept by the individual or consecrated to him can not be taken from him. He is a steward over this and answers to the Lord. (See Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.)

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop, it shall be kept to administer unto those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 10.

And the storehouse shall be kept by the consecration of the church, that widows and orphans shall be provided for, as also the poor.—Section 82: 2.

There is even now already in store a sufficient, yea, even abundance to redeem Zion, and establish her waste places, no more to be thrown down, were the churches, who call themselves after my name, willing to hearken to my voice.—Section 98: 10.

Are the evidences in hand that we, the people of the church now, are any more willing to obey than they were then?

They might have been redeemed even now; but, behold, they have not learned to be obedient to the things which I require at their hands, but are full of all manner of evil, and do not impart of their substance, as becometh Saints, to the poor and afflicted among them, and are not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom; and Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom.—Section 102: 2.

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying the foundation of Zion, . . . and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people.—Section 106: 1.

Those who have come into the stake organization with a certificate certifying that they have complied with the financial law. Those who have failed to do this should see the Bishop and place themselves in harmony with the law.

And after that those who have thus been tithed, shall pay one tenth of their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them forever. . . . It shall come to pass that all those who gather into the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you. And I say unto you, If my people observe not this law, to keep it holy, and by this law sanctify the land of Zion unto me, that my statutes and my judgments may be kept thereon, that it may be most holy, behold, verily I say unto you, It shall not be a land of Zion unto you; and this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion.—Section 106.

This subject of surplus and inventories was discussed by Joseph Smith the Seer, in answer to questions asked by Bishop Partridge:

Brother Edward Partridge; Sir: I proceed to answer your questions, concerning the consecration of property: First, it is not right to condescend to very great particulars in taking inventories. The fact is this, a man is bound by the law of the church to consecrate to the bishop before he can be considered a legal heir to the kingdom of Zion; and this, too, without constraint; and unless he does this he can not be acknowledged before the Lord, on the church book.—Church History, volume 1, page 300.

As early as October 16, 1866, the leading ministers of the Reorganization said, "We do earnestly entreat all the Saints to remember, that all their 'surplus property' is the Lord's."—Church History, volume 3, page 454. We quote this to show that not only the Seer taught, but that the early ministers of the Reorganization also taught the same principle; so that it is no new doctrine, as some have supposed.

Behold, the Lord requireth the heart and a willing mind; and the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land of Zion.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 7.

Jesus said:

If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches? And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give unto you that which is your own?—Luke 16: 11, 12, I. T.

The same thought is expressed in the Book of Mormon: "For withholding your substance, which doth not belong to you, but to God."—Book of Mormon, page 151.

Yet some one may say that the revelation known as section 106 has not been accepted by the church; hence we quote:

That the whole law of the Church of Jesus Christ is contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—Action of the General Conference, June 12, 1852, No. 6.

Whereas, We accept the revelations heretofore given to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, through the present presiding officer thereof, as being the word of the Lord to his church, equally with those published in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.—September 13, 1878, No. 216.

Resolved, that we recognize the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the only standard works of the church.—April 15, 1892, No. 368, General Conference Resolutions.

With these facts before us and the revelation of April 16, 1902:

In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, [or surplus] . . . the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto.—Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10.

Here was the golden opportunity for our loving Father to inform his children of the incorrectness of section 106 and its corresponding texts, if it were man's or Satan's work.

TITHING.

Of this much disputed principle we shall here give an exegesis and see if the spiritual atmosphere in some quarters can not be made more wholesome in the rendition of facts.

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5, given February, 1831.

And now, my brethren, I would that ye should humble yourselves before God, and bring forth fruit meet for repentance, that ye may also enter into that rest; yea, humble yourselves even as the people in the days of Melchisedec, who was also a high priest after this same order which I have spoken, who also took upon him the high priesthood forever. And it was this same Melchisedec to whom Abraham paid tithes; yea, even our father Abraham paid tithes of one tenth part of all that he possessed.—Alma 10: 1.

Jesus commended the Scribes and Pharisees for paying tithes and condemned them for omitting the weightier matters, "judgment [righteous judgment], mercy, and faith, these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."—Matthew 23: 20, I. T.

Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return? Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.—Malachi 3: 7, 8.

And verily they that are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law.—Hebrews 7: 5, I. T.

This principle was recognized by Jacob:

Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee.—Genesis 28: 22, I. T.

And all the tithes of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's. . . . And concerning the tithes of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30-32, I. T.

Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.—Deuteronomy 14: 22, I. T.

In confirmation of Malachi 3: 7, 8, we quote the statement made by Jesus in the Book of Mormon: "Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."—3 Nephi 11: 3.

In proof that the church of God was among the children of Israel we cite the following:

Yea, I have always remembered the captivity of my fathers; and that same God who delivered them out of the hands of the Egyptians, did deliver them out of bondage; yea, and that same God did establish his church among them.—Alma 15: 12.

Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.

"Search the scriptures"; was the beautiful exhortation of the Christ, "for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39.

"Behold, I am the law, and the light; . . . therefore keep my commandments."—Book of Mormon page 451.

With these plain and definite statements from the Bible and Book of Mormon touching tithing, and the amount under the law required, one tenth, can we not venture to inquire as to what the Book of Doctrine and Covenants has to say on this all-important subject?

Behold, now it is called to-day [how long] (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

Notice this was given September, 1831.

In evidence that tithing was understood by the leading elders of the church and members as delegates we quote the following:

That the law of tithing as given in the revelation of 1838 [section 106] and referred to in the revelation of 1861, is applicable to the church in its present condition, and should be observed.—General Conference Resolutions No. 210.

These quotations show that tithing did not originate with B. Young and company. We quote from Millennial Star, October, 1842, as follows:

We here give notice that Bro. Hiram Clark has been specially commissioned by the authorities of the church at Nauvoo to receive and forward the tithes and consecrations.

These facts make it apparent to every one who will stop to think carefully and prayerfully that tithing is and always has been a principle of the gospel; and consecration called a surplus is a principle to be applied especially under stake organization. For the people that asked, "O Lord show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing," were not ignorant that one tenth was the general principle; but now what more under stake organization?

Conditions are essential to proper administration.

Common consent has said that this law should govern this church and we are informed by the Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric, when they met in joint council at Lamoni, Iowa, May 1, 1903, and formulated an address to the Saints:

The word tithe means tenth; and the rendition of a tithe referred to in the Bible, is the turning into the hands of the bishop appointed to receive the same, the tenth part of what a man has, over and above his indebtedness; or "a tenth of the increase."

The exhortation in section 104: 44, "Now let every man learn his duty, and to act in the office in which he is appointed, in all diligence," corresponds and confirms section 126: 10.

Verily I say unto you, that it is my will that an house should be built unto me in the land of Zion, like unto the pattern which I have given you; yea, let it be built speedily by the tithing of my people: behold, this is the tithing and the sacrifice which I, the Lord, require at their hands, that there may be an house built unto me for the salvation of Zion, . . . but if she [the church] observe not to do whatsoever I have commanded her, I will visit her according to all her works, with sore affliction, with pestilence, with plague, with sword, with vengeance, with devouring fire.—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 3-5.

EQUALITY.

This is one of the subjects that is occupying the attention of man in almost every clime, and it is a subject that demands attention from those whose duty it is to speak upon such matters and point out the way that God hath said:

I desire that this inequality should be no more in this land [America], especially among this my people.—Mosiah 13: 4.

There should be an equality among all men; that they should let no pride nor haughtiness disturb their peace; that every man should esteem his neighbor as himself, laboring with their own hands for their support.—Mosiah 11: 18.

The inequality of man is because of sin and transgression.—Alma 15: 10.

And they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly, one with another. And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them.—3 Nephi 12: 2.

And they had all things common among them, therefore, there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—Book of Mormon, page 478.

Jesus said, "If ye are not one ye are not mine"; and "that they may be one" and love one another "as thou hast loved me" were illustrative of the Christ life in gospel work and the apostle of New Testament times observed the law of equality, "all things common," and while the Bible fails to tell us all about this law, we have in the revelations of God to his people in this age sufficient to enable us to understand, with the aid of the Spirit of truth, the system perfectly.

The reason for a departure from all things common in the days of the Book of Mormon time was, they were lifted up in pride, such as the wearing of costly apparel, and all manner of fine pearls, and of the fine things of the world. And from that time forth they did have their goods and their substance no more common among them, and they began to be divided into classes.—4 Nephi 1: 7.

It is apparent to the student that when pride enters the heart of God's children they soon forget the interest they have in one another, and begin to manifest selfishness. But when the Zionistic condition obtains, the blessings of God rest upon the people as the following language indicates:

And the Lord blessed the land, and they were blessed upon the mountains, and upon the high places, and did flourish. And the Lord called his people Zion, because they were of one heart and one mind, and dwelt in righteousness, and there was no poor among them.—Doctrine and Covenants 36: 2.

Wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge, and those whom he has chosen, in whom I am well pleased, appoint unto this people their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs.—Doctrine and Covenants 51: 1.

In your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld.—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

Is it not apparent to you, dear Saints, that we ought to arise and consecrate our lives more fully, and also all that we have, as provided in the word of God? As our Father hath said that "he will not be mocked" and to the salvation of man, and to the glory of your Father who is in heaven, that you may be equal in bands of heavenly things; yea, and earthly things also, for the obtaining of heavenly things; for if ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things; for if you will that I give unto you a place in the celestial world, you must prepare yourselves by doing the things which I have commanded you and required of you.—Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1.

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundred fold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 81: 4.

God has designed that equality should obtain, and has set forth the plan by which we shall work, and said:

It must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my Saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

While it is true that the earth is full and there is enough for all yet man has been made an agent unto himself and it is left with every individual to exercise his agency; but he is answerable to God in the day of judgment. He is left free to act, to comply or not, and the church can not compel him; however, his condition is the same as the man who refuses to obey the gospel in being baptized when the gospel is preached to him. Jesus said he shall be damned. He who refuses to obey the temporal law, which is a part of the gospel, the revelation says "shall with the wicked lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment." The Lord's way is for each member to comply with the gospel in its fullness. Every person is obligated first to pay one tenth (for this was the gospel law from the beginning) of their increase, and all we have is an increase up to the time we pay our tenth or make arrangements with the Bishop to do so; and then if we have anything of our holdings that can be spared even at a sacrifice, this should be cast into the treasury, and this would be our surplus or consecration under sections 42 and 106. When we are all converted to God's plan and do our duty with a willing mind and heart, there will be no poor; equality will be a demonstrated fact, and every worthy man and woman will have a home and an opportunity to make a living, and each will be a contributor, as far as his ability will permit, to the benefit of the whole body; "by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, . . . and let not any man among you say that it is his own."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:12. And this condition can not obtain until we do our duty as members, and deliverance can only come to us from our present condition by your diligence and humility, and prayer of faith. . . . And inasmuch as ye are humble and faithful and call on my name, behold, I will give you the victory.—Doctrine and Covenants 101:13.

Faultfinding and grumbling will never lead us toward the Zion condition; hence the sooner we place ourselves on record as doing our own duty the sooner "all things in common" will obtain, not as some have supposed, but as God hath ordained.

Webster says, "All things in common—belonging equally to more than one, or to many indefinitely, belonging to the public or to all mankind, serving for the use of all general. 'Such actions as the common good requireth.'—Hooker."

The law of the Lord being perfect we can rest our faith in the principle of all things common that it was the same in the Bible, and Book of Mormon times as the Lord has revealed to us.

Some people have strange ideas of the principle of all things common. The revelations given to the church ought to be sufficient on this matter.

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundred fold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.—Doctrine and Covenants 81:4.

This means the common property, treasury, or storehouse, of the church, or that which has been given to it by the consecrations of the people; as also found in section 42, paragraph 8:

Behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties for their support, . . . with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; etc.

This became the common property of the whole church,

And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, or any individuals of it, more than is necessary for their support, . . . it shall be kept to administer to those who have not, from time to time, that every man who has need may be amply supplied, and receive according to his wants. Therefore, the residue shall be kept in my storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy, as shall be appointed by the high council of the church, and the bishop and his council, and for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed, that my covenant people may be gathered in one, in that day when I shall come to my temple. And this I do for the salvation of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:10.

This is common property and should not be sold nor disposed of, nor used in any other way except as indicated in this revelation.

Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; thou shalt not take thy brother's garment; thou shalt pay for that which thou shalt receive of thy brother; and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said.—Doctrine and Covenants 42:14.

This paragraph indicates that the people will have their individuality and carry on their own business or stewardship, and if they obtain more than would be for their support, they are required to give it to the storehouse, and it would then become the common property of the whole church.

The Lord directed that every one who has a stewardship and can improve on his property, or whatever line of business in which he may be employed, is required to cast into the treasury by "hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives," it matters not how much he contributes, it is the common property of the whole church. (Doctrine and Covenants 101:12.)

The law clearly indicates that when the law of Zion is fully carried out, every man shall have his individual stewardship and inheritance, but the treasury or storehouse shall be the common property of the whole church.

Those who want the condition to obtain when there will be no poor and Zion may take on her beauty and equality be the watchword, come and demonstrate your desires by helping as pointed out by the word of God and putting what you have that belongs to God in the hands of the Bishop so he may do his part.

Pure and clean thoughts must be ours and an earnest desire to do our part with cheerfulness.

May the good Father let the light of his power shine into our souls so that we may be able to understand and abide in his truth, is the prayer of your collaborators.

March.

The March-Wind-Elves are jolly sprites! Look out for they are here!

They're wild and boisterous and their pranks are very, very queer;

With little fans they'll toss your curls, they'll give your caps a fling,

And make them mount into the air like kites without a string; And then they'll paint each cheek and ear with red, until it glows,

And, deary me!—they might, perhaps, splash freckles on your nose!

On Daddy's Lap.

When the shades of night have fallen,
When the sun has gone to sleep,
And the stars, like diamonds, brilliant,
From the blue begin to peep,
In my favorite chair I'm seated;
On the door a gentle tap,
And dear voices break the silence
"Want to sit on daddy's lap."

So I lay aside my paper,
Though I'd like to scan it o'er,
And a tad 'gainst either shoulder
Asks a story—"Just one more."
Then I tell them "Orphan Annie,"
"Doodle Bug," "Three Bears," mayhap,
Till the place is filled with laughter,
When they sit on daddy's lap.

Then we drift to Bible stories,
Of the Christ, the spotless One,
Eyes are closed, the lips are silent,
And my gladsome task is done.
To the land of nod they've journeyed,
'Tis no fitful, restless nap;
For the night they're safely anchored—
Fast asleep, on daddy's lap.

And I sit here by the firelight,
Dreaming dreams of future years,
Of my babies—such no longer—
Till my eyes are wet with tears.
And a prayer ascends to heaven:
"Father, bless each little chap;
Keep him pure as at this moment,
Safe at rest on daddy's lap!"

Dear Sisters: It may be of some interest to other local organizations and to mothers who have not the privilege of attending the meetings of the Daughters of Zion to know something of the character of the meetings and the progress of the Independence local.

A few months ago a change was made from the week-day meeting to Sunday afternoon, (third Sunday in the month) immediately following the prayer- and testimony-meeting. This change has resulted in increased attendance and interest, the attendance averaging, we believe, from thirty to forty; and there is no lack of interest from the beginning to the end of the meeting.

While this is not even a fair representation of the mothers of this branch, we feel the interest is deep in the hearts of those who do attend, and the influence must spread and will encircle all sooner or later.

Sr. B. C. Smith, our proficient presiding officer, holds us well to the lesson, at the same time making the discussion of the same entirely informal.

Sr. Abbie Horton, our faithful secretary, has a lively interest in the weal of the Daughters of Zion.

The meeting previous to the last, we consider was one of very great importance as to points of vital interest to parents and children. The subject of the prescribed reading was, "To whom does the child belong—the state?" and was given by Sr. Mabel Briggs.

A very excellent paper was read by Sr. Kate Ward, taking up the line of conduct a child should render to be a good citizen in his manhood. Following this paper a general discussion was had touching upon various points of good citizenship, as follows: the appearance of home premises; the care of our back yards—beautifying them when possible and in every instance having neatness and cleanliness; educating the children in the care of garbage and all refuse—have a place for it that there be no scattering.

School conduct was quite generally discussed as being a factor toward good citizenship. Many innovations were here brought in, such as the defects of the present school system in its requirements; faulty positions at writing; written spelling for punishment—causing poor penmanship; unsanitary conditions;—public drinking-cups. At this point Sr. Emma Kennedy related what she had read in regard to an observation made of children's public drinking-cups: Glasses were placed for the children, instead of the customary tin-cup, for one day. They were then broken up and placed under a microscope where it was found on one square inch two hundred and fifty disease germs: diphtheria, typhoid, bronchitis, etc., and quantities of human decayed skin, all unobservable to the naked eye.

Is this not appalling? Should not parents consider these things? Shall we say we are powerless to correct these conditions? "Agitation purifies," and a little commotion in one's mind upon these subjects may stir us to do something toward a betterment of these conditions. One way to modify the danger of contagion by the use of public drinking-cups, is to educate our children to drink plenty of water at home, or provide their own cup.

We can not recall all the good thoughts that were brought out by those present at this meeting, but a few have been given that may serve for thought and which could be elaborated upon by others to the edification of the readers of this column.

Request for Prayer.

I wish for prayers for my sister who is very sick, that, if it be the Lord's will, she may be restored to health again. She is not a member of the church, but a very good woman, and, I think, would obey the gospel plan if she only had a chance to hear it preached; but she never has had an opportunity. I have talked with her and given her papers to read, and she thinks what I say all right as far as she understands it. So I would kindly ask you to give in her name for prayers, and oblige a sister. Her name is Mrs. Clarissa Harrison. May God bless and heal her.

Your sister in bonds,

To speak in public on the stage;
And if I chance to fall below

Don't view me with a critic's eye,
But pass my imperfections by.

Tall oaks from little acorns grow.

Eternal Punishment.

Many statements in the Scriptures, when taken alone, will not bear a literal interpretation, or application of all that the exact words seem to imply. As for example the following from Saint John 5:24: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that heareth my word and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come unto condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." (Emphasis by the writer.)

And again: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him up from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Romans 10:9. Also verse 13: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."

These statements must be qualified by other gospel readings, getting the bearing of each to get the true meaning of the whole. No argument is needed to prove that point. Now let us study the doctrine of eternal punishment from the same standpoint, as touched upon in the three books, Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants.

The Bible tells us the wicked shall be turned into hell with all the nations that forget God. It also tells of a God-inflicted punishment called eternal punishment, because God is eternal, which punishment has been prepared for the "Devil and his angels," "where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched," and men have added, "and they never come out." Three Hebrews were once cast in a fiery furnace where their worm did not die, nor was the fire quenched; but they came out and the fire burned out. The Bible also tells of sermons being preached in hell and that every one who goes there will come out and all stand before God to be judged. The judgment is to determine how much of reward is due those who have already received punishment, and also to determine what number of the prisoners are classed as "angels to the Devil" that they may return to receive "their part" in the lake of fire whose flames ascend up for ever and ever, which is the second death.

The Bible mentions several very limited things by the term for ever—circumcision for instance. When Jonah was three days in the whale it mentions the waves rolling over him "for ever."

So if the condemned are to be tormented for ever and ever, we might multiply that three-day-for-ever and be perfectly safe in saying that the "for ever and ever" punishment will last at least six days.

The reader need not take that thought seriously, and if he wishes to smile he has my consent, but the fact remains that "for ever" as a Bible term is used in speaking of a limited time. No man has authority to say that the punishment of the damned in the second death state will come to an end, and I fail to find authority even in the Book of Mormon for saying that it will not.

I believe the statement in Doctrine and Covenants, section 18, is right where it says: "It is not written that there shall be no end to this torment; but it is written endless torment. . . . Endless punishment is God's punishment," explaining that he is endless, he is eternal, etc.

A study of the entire subject with that key of divine revelation in hand will flood more light upon the subject than any other one statement in the books, and will harmonize the whole.

The Book of Mormon does not say their torment shall have no end. It teaches in more places than one that "their torment is as a lake of fire whose flames ascend up for ever and ever and has no end." It says, "From whence they can no more return," and brings in the necessary qualification in another place by saying, "because they have no power." The spirits now in prison can not return, for the same reason, but Christ can bring them out and says he will.

Book of Mormon also says the state of punishment is eternal as the life of the soul, and so is the state of happiness. The state of happiness is to be as eternal as the life of the soul, yet it is not impossible for sons of God and angels to fall from that state. (Lucifer's fall for instance.) Why would it be thought then to be impossible for some change to be wrought upon those in the opposite state or condition?

Inquirers were looking into the matter of eternal punishment, and trying to discover whether it would ever come to an end, when the Lord gave information in the following language: "The end thereof . . . no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto any man except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless I show it in vision unto many, but straightway shut it up again, wherefore the end . . . they understand not, neither any man except them who are ordained to this condemnation."—Doctrine and Covenants 76:4, and the inquirers concluded there could be no end.

Inquirers were looking into the mouth of a fearful shaft which had been digged in the earth, and as they could see no bottom were wondering whether there was a bottom, when the superintendent of the diggings stepped up and informed them as follows:

"The awful depth of the shaft is nearly incomprehensible, wherefore the depth is not given to any man except to them who go down, and the bottom is only shown to a few at times by means of a flash-light. But the awful depth and the bottom thereof is never known to any except to them who descend."

And the inquirers decided there was no bottom.

Question: What was the matter with the inquirers?

Very truly your brother,

The Chatburn—Chism Debate.

HOW CHISM WAS MET ON THE 666 GAME.

Dear Herald: As you are the safe depository and trust of important experiences, I transmit for safe keeping the following brief summary of the eight days' discussion with J. W. Chism at Waurika, Oklahoma.

During the summer of the present year, while I was preaching here at Waurika, domiciled with C. J. Craven, the only family of Saints in this part of the State—some of the fighting element of the Campbellites became incensed and sent for J. W. Chism to expose our error. On January 23, he came with much pomp and splendor, "would expose the false doctrine we had been teaching, whether we remained or ran." Regular church propositions signed up, and the debate was on. We affirmed our church, kept close in, gave him no handles of any kind. This angered Chism, and in his frenzy he showed his real colors, jumping onto Joseph Smith with all the vindictive spleen and vituperation he could command. "Old Joe a fraud, liar, scoundrel, sheep-thief, vagabond, polygamist, villain, impostor, scalawag,—Book of Mormon a fraud, balderdash, Spalding story," etc., was the stock in trade. When reminded that Joseph Smith was not on trial, but the church he founded, he retorted, "When Old Joe was disposed of and his angel, who was the Devil transformed into an angel of light, the whole fraud went down together." His effort or negative against the church was absurd, irrational, unreasonable, nonsensical, and foolish—he succeeded only in gaining the ill-will and contempt of the audience. In our retorts and arguments, we were often cheered. Chism would angrily cry out, "Cheer him through, he needs it." Perhaps his overdoing was the best argument against him. His last and "big gun" was his exegesis of Revelation 13. Joseph Smith was the beast spoken of, and the number of his name was 666—he made quite a display on the blackboard in writing the name “Joseph Smith,” and placing under each letter the Greek numeral, adding a letter or two to “Joseph Smith” as he said, to Greekezize it, and made it figure up to 666. In reply we stepped up to the blackboard—wrote his name “Jehu Chism,” placed under each letter the Greek numeral, added two or three letters, and it figured up 666. Then we read it, “Joseph Smith, the beast of the Bible, 666. Jehu Chism, the beast of the Bible and Texas, too, 666, ditto.” Of course the audience roared. Chism’s rejoinder, “It is hard to debate with ignorance,” is all the notice he gave it. Of course we knew no Greek, nor does Chism in our opinion.

His affirmative of his church was as weak as his negative—the same old dodge. We are the old original church, and have all the organization, faith, and doctrine, only the continuation does not need them. They were only for the Christian Age, first century, etc., etc. Such guns are too antiquated and insufficient, nor do they have even bruising power any longer. It was flat failure, and even his own people were disgusted.

The chairman, Mr. Houser, an infidel, says, “Chism was snowed under, and did not make a point; and, in my opinion, his own people will have no more use for him here.” We offered to repeat the debate any time, and any place he would choose, but he did not answer, much in striking contrast to his blow and bluster at first. Suffice it to say, J. W. Chism fills the bill of Isaiah 50:11: He that kindleth a fire and compasseth himself about with his own sparks, will lie down in sorrow.

We must admit he is the best scripturian we ever heard, and in many ways an honorable and fair debater, much better than some others we have met. A few points given in our summary will indicate his position, and some of his arguments made in his affirmation.

Paul said: “We have not followed cunningly devised fables.” Chiasmism is cunningly devised, because

1. It is a flaw of Scripture without meaning or application to “Campbellite Churches.”

2. Fable—because merely to read Bible history of Christ’s church and say we believe it, therefore we have it, is a fable that any child can see.

3. Should I read of a great feast the king made one thousand years ago, and because forsooth I believe the history of it, therefore I am fed on the same feast—is a fable pure and simple.

4. I read of Rockefeller making a hundred millions of dollars and how he made it in the oil business, I believe the history published of it, therefore I have his fortune, is an idiotic conclusion and an indication of a crazed brain.

5. Therefore “Jehu Chiasmism” is a cunningly devised fable—a fraud of the first water.

6. A church built on the Bible, and Bible alone, without any of its realities as promised, viz: Faith, doctrine, practice, or organization, is a myth, a will-o’-the-wisp, without substance in fact.

7. Faith, prophecy, and spiritual manifestations did not originate with the Christian Era, therefore could not terminate then.

8. The Spirit was promised, “If I go away.” Its functions, all the gifts, and to “testify of me” unlimited, to every race and age.

9. Christ did not organize a local church. That was the functional power of the apostles, therefore without apostles there could be no local churches.

10. If revelation, gifts, and signs following believers were limited to Christian Era, then repentance, baptism, life, joys, or punishments, were also limited to the same age. For the above reasons, and many others, Jehu Chiasmism is a myth, nothing in substance or fact. T. W. CHATBURN.

How I Settled the Tithing Question.

When I first became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, I was interested in tithing; and, as I did not understand it myself, I sought for some explanation from others older in the work than myself; but it seemed every one I asked gave me very little or no satisfaction; for none of them seemed to have the same idea about it, which puzzled me greatly, and brought no more light. So I decided to settle the matter as far as I was concerned individually, for I was determined to do my duty to the best of my ability; and if tithing was a command of God’s, I wanted to obey that, too; so I asked the Lord to help me to do his will, and bless me in so doing; and, whether my decision was right or wrong, the Lord knew I was honest in my desire to do my part, and was willing also; and, for lack of a better understanding I would do the best I could. Here is the way I managed: Not having any surplus, when I became a member of this church, I had nothing to turn over. I was sewing at that time, so I gave a tenth of all I took in; not a tenth of what was left after expenses were paid, but a tenth of all I made, and the Lord blessed me.

I kept that rule up, till a few years back, when I was keeping boarders. Then I found if I took a tenth of all I took in, it did not leave enough for expenses. Here was a dilemma sure. I began to investigate again. Just prior to this time, I had heard Bro. Ellis Short preach a sermon at Webb City conference on tithing; the first I had ever heard; and in conversation with him afterward he explained “a tenth of what was left”—when I had asked the question which was giving me so much trouble. So I adopted that plan. (It never seemed exactly right, though.) Then, after all expenses, actual, not unnecessary ones, were paid, I gave a tenth of what remained. [This is in harmony with the position of the church, so far as that part of the financial law is concerned. See “An Address to the Saints.”—EDITOR.] I do not advocate this as the method for the church to follow. Far from me to think of such a thing even; but inasmuch as there was so much confusion on the matter, I adopted this plan for myself alone, which I think was wise for me, as the tithing question does not seem to be understood any better now than then, judging from what we read in the church papers on the subject.

There is one feature about tithing that could be improved on, in my opinion; and that is this: To stop the elders’ families paying tithing on the small pittance they receive from the bishops (if I were a bishop I would refuse to accept it). I can not understand why they should pay a tenth of all the monthly allowance. Why is it not right for them to pay all expenses out of it, then a tenth of what is left, like some others do? [Neither the church nor the Bishop has ever required elders’ families to pay a tenth of their allowance.—EDITORS.]

I have been a member of this church about nine or ten years, and have listened to and read all I have seen written on tithing, and no definite opinion has been reached so far as I can see, and some are even attacking the Doctrine and Covenants. It does not seem right or wise for us to discuss subjects in our church papers to be read by everybody, when the argument becomes so warm that we almost accuse each other of dishonesty,—not that we have anything to hide, or keep secret, but because there may be a weak brother or sister that perhaps has not had evidence by the Spirit that this work is of God, consequently of divine origin, that might stumble over the seeming discourtesy we pay the leaders of the church. The command “to feed my sheep.” and “my lambs," should be remembered when writing to the papers, as well as in the pulpit; and why not, when fundamental principles underlying the church government, or any other matter pertaining to its welfare of great importance, are not understood by those holding the priesthood, get together and thrash the matter out to the satisfaction of all? Then there will be unity of purpose, and unity of teaching. It seems to me when matters of grave importance, like tithing, are not understood by the priesthood, they are the ones who should get together with the heads of the church, with fasting and prayer.

[This is precisely what was done in May, 1903, and as a result the document, "An address to the Saints," was adopted by the Presidency, Twelve, and Bishopric, and later it was adopted by the whole church. Until revised or rescinded it represents the church on the law of tithing. Contrary teachings represent individuals. A reprint of "An address to the Saints" will be found in HERALD for November 25, 1908. Read it.—EDITOR.]

This would settle the matter for ever; [?] and not have so much contention going on in the papers for the weak ones to stumble over. Of course, there may be individual opinions, but I think there should be unity of understanding when there are fundamental principles involved, so the sheep and lambs could be fed on the right kind of doctrine.

It does not seem wise to attack the church government, or the heads of the church. Not that I think men or a set of men infallible; but because when God restored the gospel in this age he certainly knew what he was doing. So I would say, brethren, have a care what you say, for everybody to read. Have a care.

When I was born into the kingdom of God, I was tangled up in a matter which I was very anxious to settle in the right way, and after finding the true church, I reasoned that the members must be a perfect people, so I felt sure I could get the kind of advice I needed in regard to this matter; consequently I decided to ask a certain elder for instruction the first time the opportunity presented itself. However, before that time came, the Lord showed me the elders were not more perfect than any other member, who was trying to live right. While they held the priesthood, and had authority to officiate in the oracles of God's house, and held the key to the mysteries of the kingdom of God, they had been called from a people traditionized, prejudiced, and with individual personality and opinions, as myself, and were to be made perfect by living the gospel law; but were not perfected by the mere act of accepting it, hence just as liable to make mistakes as self, unless led by the Spirit of God.

This knowledge has been a great comfort to me, and we members should fast and pray often for the priesthood, because their responsibility is so much greater.

This discussion on tithing reminds me of a sermon I heard once, and the poor Doctrine and Covenants was taken as the mount, and great emphasis was put on "not by constraint or command," but as the individual saw fit to decide for self.

Well, the first time I saw the man's wife after that sermon, I asked if her husband used tobacco. She said, "Yes. Why do you ask?" I replied, "Because of that sermon he preached."

I would say to those who have a "hobby" to ride, to look well to the stirrups before you mount. Let us do our duty, one and all, asking God for wisdom.

HELEN LOGAN SHERWIN.

That Damaging Contradiction?

Editors Herald: Will you permit me to throw a little light on those passages of scripture which are bothering Bro. Stubbart? We sometimes dodge from shadows, especially when in the heat of debate, with no time to reflect and study. Mr. Barron's three quotations from the Book of Mormon refer to no one but those who "having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4. While the one that he opposed against them (see Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1) refers to another class altogether, even to the "goats" "who are found on my left hand; nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment," etc. (Italics mine.) Compare Matthew 25: 33, also Doctrine and Covenants 76: 7, where we read of those who shall occupy the celestial glory. It is said of them, "These are they who suffer the vengeance of eternal fire; these are they who are cast down to hell and suffer the wrath of Almighty God until the fullness of times, . . . for they shall be judged according to their works; and every man shall receive according to his own works, and his own dominion, in the mansions which are prepared, and they shall be servants of the Most High," etc.

So there is not a shadow of conflict there; and they are doubtless both correct. The first was written of the Devil and his angels, while the latter was written of those who shall enjoy celestial glory after their debts are satisfied.

There are many things on which the books are not sufficiently explicit; many things not yet revealed; and this church is broad-gauge enough to allow its representative men to state what they, as individuals, believe along lines where the church has not spoken. Any statement prefaced with the personal pronoun "I" or "I believe" can neither be made to represent or misrepresent the church on such unrevealed principles: nor is there any danger of it being made a test of fellowship.

It seems to the writer that after a thorough study of the three books, having an understanding of the elastic nature of the English language, we should not be embarrassed by having to meet anything that can be presented along the line of eternal judgment. Few men, if any, have reached perfection in this life. Paul says, "Now we see through a glass darkly." "Now we know in part." Great and good men sometimes err in judgment, and if their candid opinions should not altogether harmonize, relative to the things not revealed, it should by no means detract from what they do know of things that have been revealed. So when Mr. Barron descends to call a book a "fraud" because the writers of the book did not know the things that God had not revealed to them, or to others, he placed himself in no enviable position.

Now, Saints, since the Lord has told us plainly relative to the torment of the Devil and his angels, that "the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof," I think that we should have the same respect for the opinions of men written to-day as for the opinions of men anciently written. So we need not chafe, or fear that men are drifting from the books; for the books do not reveal to us that which God has not revealed to the writers of the books.

The terms endless punishment, and the vengeance of eternal fire, etc. etc., therefore related to the nature and not to the duration of their suffering; and all that we can glean relative to its nature is that it is God's punishment, or that it will be administered in eternity.

We have these things to meet in debate, with whoever wants to pick flaws, therefore we should be acquainted with our books; but really we should be much more deeply concerned with the things that are revealed, with the things that will effectually prevent this ever being revealed to us as individuals.

D. R. B.

The Lord's Prayer in the Book of Mormon.

Dear Herald: In your issue of December 16 one of the missionaries makes the following statement: "Recently, the question was asked the writer, 'Why does the Book of Mormon give the Lord's prayer, "Lead us not into temptation," instead of "Suffer us not to be led into temptation," as the Inspired Translation has it?' Unable to answer it, the matter was made a subject of inquiry of the Lord. . . . while certain other matters were being presented in a dream, I asked the question, 'Why does the Book of Mormon read that way?' Immediately a voice replied: 'It is through the imperfections of men. Many times my servants have quoted me incorrectly. But the sentiment in the main, is good.'"

The brother expressed his satisfaction with the dream, and seemed to believe that it threw light on the matter. If I gather the thought correctly, the statement made in the dream suggested that the reason the King James version and Book of Mormon read alike was because of "the imperfections of men." That is just the point our critics raise. How did it happen that where the prayer is quoted in the Book of Mormon it reads just as it does in the King James version? How could two men, having no acquaintance with each other, make exactly the same mistake? The dream does not explain the matter at all to my mind in the above thought. Yet, I believe, just as in the dream it is stated, that it was an error because of the imperfections of men, and their liability to misquote. I have reasoned the matter out as follows: In the first place the prayer does not read the same in the Book of Mormon as in the King James version. Two requests of Christ, made in King James' version, are omitted in the Book of Mormon.

In July, 1884, a committee who had been appointed by the church examined the original manuscript and compared it with the Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon. They discovered three hundred and twenty-eight errors made in the Palmyra edition. The committee, two of whom were Joseph Smith and W. H. Kelley, made the following statement, published in the HERALD, August 23, 1884:

"The manuscript shows different writers also, in the spelling, as some, particularly Oliver Cowdery, spelled more correctly. The writers evidently spelled as Joseph pronounced the words. There is no evidence that we could gather that the words were kept before the vision of Joseph till correctly spelled, as some imagine, but they were written as pronounced, and when read to Joseph would of course sound as he had pronounced them. [Italics mine.—C. Ed. M.] Proper names, which Joseph could not always pronounce, and which the amanuensis did not know how to spell, were spelled out by Joseph; also any word that he could not pronounce. These are clearly properly spelled. . . . The punctuation is deficient in a large part of the manuscript; yet there are pages where the punctuation is found and made at the time of the writing without doubt. In other parts whole pages are punctuated with a pencil."

It is evident from the above, that the "imperfections of men" entered largely into the manuscript of the Book of Mormon, and I think the Lord's prayer is practically the same in the Book of Mormon as in King James' version, for the following reason: The Lord's prayer was known by heart by "everybody" when the manuscript was written, certainly by Oliver Cowdery or Emma Smith, or whoever was the amanuensis when the particular passage under discussion was written. No doubt Joseph read very slowly from the plates, and when he started the Lord's prayer, the amanuensis, knowing it from memory, wrote ahead of Joseph's reading. The two omissions referred to above bear unmistakable evidence that the prayer was written from memory, and through human imperfections the requests, "Thy kingdom come," and "Give us this day our daily bread," were omitted. If the Book of Mormon prayer was a plagiarism from the Bible, pure and simple, such omission would hardly have taken place.

The two omissions could easily have occurred because the writing being done while another was reading aloud, more or less mental confusion was possible. As an illustration of the reasonableness of the above position, I will relate an occurrence which took place at the Akron reunion several years ago. Bro. Lake was giving some patriarchal blessings; Elder Paul Hanson took them down in shorthand. Bro. Lake quoted part of the twenty-third Psalm, but instead of quoting, "I will fear no evil," he substituted "harm" for "evil."

Bro. Hanson took it in shorthand, as quoted by Bro. Lake, but when he wrote it out in longhand, he ran ahead of his notes and wrote it correctly, but found his mistake later on. I wrote out the blessing on my typewriter, and noticed Bro. Hanson's correction. From this point of view, I accept the statement made in the dream, that it was written in the Book of Mormon as it is because of the "imperfections of man" and "their liability to misquote."

C. EDWARD MILLER.

PITTSBURG, Penn., 72 Miller Street, December 30, 1908.

Is It Heresy?

Editors Herald: Owing to my busy life and other reasons, I have not written to the HERALD for some years, but as the writer of the Tennessee debate has tried to make it appear that I am guilty of teaching false doctrine, and as one of "the leading men of the church" publishing that which is "embarrassing" and "contradictory," placing myself in such condition, by said teaching, that it may be a question with some as to whether I should be "barred of communion," I venture to ask space in the HERALD to defend just what I have written or preached, explain my position, and ask a few questions.

The good brother exposes what he thinks to be my folly, as follows:

"To prove that we teach universalism, he introduced R. C. Evans' tract, "Future punishment," and quoted, "I abhor, despise, denounce, and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment and unconditional election."—Page 15. And, "I believe that Christ was manifest in the world to destroy the work of the Devil, to destroy death, to rescue all from the grave, to enlighten humanity, to save the lost, to redeem the fallen, and finally restore perfect harmony in all God's vast universe."—Pages 16, 17.

I admit that the above expresses my faith, and with your permission I will try to give a few reasons for the hope that is within me.

Bible universalism, as I understand it, means that the divine government will so control that in the end there will be a moral harmony of the universe, God will reign supreme over all his vast creation.

"Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death. For he hath put all things under his feet. But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest that he is excepted, which did put all things under him. And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all."—1 Corinthians 15: 24-28.

That all things in heaven and earth were created to give honor and glory, pleasure and praise to God, that it is his will that all shall be saved, and that his will shall not be overruled by the Devil or any one else, is evident from the following scripture:

"For by him were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him."—Colossians 1: 16.

"Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."—Revelation 4: 11.

"For I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, saying, My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure."—Isaiah 46: 9, 10.

"For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth."—1 Timothy 2: 3, 4.

"For I am not come to judge the world, but to save the world."—John 12: 47.

But before I take up the paper complained of, further, on this question, permit me to take up the passage that makes me an offender. I will be careful to quote it point by point, so the reader can see if I am in conflict with the word of the Lord.

"R. C. 'I believe that Christ was manifest in the world to destroy the works of the Devil.'

"Bible. 'For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the Devil.'—1 John 3: 8.

"R. C. 'To destroy death.'

"'For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet, and the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.'—1 Corinthians 15: 25, 26.

"R. C. 'To rescue all from the grave.'

"Bible. 'For the hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth.'—John 5: 28, 29.

"'As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.'—1 Corinthians 15: 22.

"R. C. 'To enlighten humanity.'

"Bible. 'I am the light of the world.'—John 8: 12.

"'In him was life, and the life was the light of men.'—John 1: 4.

"'That was the true light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.'—John 1: 9.

"R. C. 'To save the lost.'

"Bible. 'For the Son of man is come to save that which was lost.'—Matthew 18: 11.

"'Christ the Savior of the world.'—John 4: 42.

"R. C. 'To redeem the fallen.'

"R. C. 'And finally restore perfect harmony in all God's vast universe.'

"Bible. 'Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule and authority and power . . . that God may be all in all.'—1 Corinthians 15: 24-28."

The reader will see that every word complained of by the brother is in complete harmony with the word of God. If this is heresy make the most of it, or in the words of another and better, "But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets."—Acts 24: 14.

But perhaps it is proper that I give my argument from the tract complained of. After quoting many parsons and church books on the subject of eternal torment, I made the following argument:

"My soul sickens with the most profound disgust and abhorrence as I read this fearful misrepresentation of every principle of justice, law, equity, mercy and love.

"The doctrine of eternal pain, of never-ending torture, of perpetual spite, of deathless agony, represents our heavenly Father to be more devilish than the worst conception of all the mediæval devils that have ever been recorded. It contradicts all scripture, and teaches men to despise God, and lose all faith in the religion of Jesus Christ.

"By the tears, groans and pains of my Lord, by his perfect sacrifice, by his complete atonement, by the omnipotence, benevolence, and never dying love of the All-father and by his expressed will that Christ should be the Savior of all men, especially of them that believe, I abhor, despise, denounce and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment and unconditional election.

"Here are some statistical reports that show clearly the popular doctrine regarding God's dealings with his creature man. Statisticians tell us that 'since the creation of Adam, about one hundred and forty-three billions of human beings have lived upon the earth. Of these, the broadest estimate that could be made would be less than one billion, were saints of God.' Mill. Dawn, vol. 1, page 99. Now if it be true, that this life is only probation, it follows that over one hundred and forty-two billions have gone down to a burning hell for ever.

"There are over one billion heathens in the world now. It is admitted that the life of mankind now, does not exceed thirty-three years and four months. It follows that this whole mass of heathens will have died within the next thirty-three years and four months, and consequently there will die on an average 30,000,000 a year, 2,500,000 every month, 576,923 every week, 82,191 every day, 3,524 every hour, 58.7 every minute, one nearly every second.

"In other words, God creates and damns one pagan soul every second of time, every tick of the clock, every pulsation of the human heart. This making and damning souls has been going on since the creation of man, or death. For more of this kind the reader is invited to read the remarks of Reverend Sawyer, D. D., on the Congregational American Board Report, Springfield.

"'One billion souls are dying in Christless despair at the rate of nearly one hundred thousand a day.'—General Booth.

"'Not one half of the fourteen hundred millions have ever heard the name of Jesus.'—Mill. Dawn, vol. 1, page 92.

"'There are now living 1,000,000,000 heathens; Buddhists 485,000,000, Brahmins 120,000,000, Mohammedans 225,000,000, Parsees 1,000,000, Jews 8,000,000, Pagans 202,000,000. There are 390,000,000 Christians divided into 190,000,000 Roman Catholics, 84,000,000 Greek Catholics, 116,000,000 Protestants.'—See Encyclopedia Britannica and Johnson's Encyclopedia.

"'Mr. Brerewood divided the world into thirty parts, nineteen of them are professed heathens, altogether as ignorant of Christ as if he had never come into the world. Six of the remaining parts are professed Mohammedans, so that only five in thirty are so much as nominally Christians. Since this computation was made, many new nations have been discovered. All heathens, many of them inferior to the beasts of the field, more savage than lions.'—John Wesley, sermon 65, 'General spread of the gospel.' Now let us learn from that great and good man, John Wesley, what he thought of the fifth part of the world that made claim to be Christians. 'Put Papists and Protestants together—and what manner of Christians are they? Are they holy as he that hath called them is holy?—Is there that mind in them which was also in Christ Jesus? and do they walk as Christ also walked? Nay, they are as far from it as hell is from heaven.'—John Wesley, sermon 65.

"Now the great question is: What has become of those now dead, and all the rest that will yet die. The world answers as follows—Atheism answers, they are eternally dead. There is no hereafter. They will never live again. Calvinism—They were not elected to be saved. God fore-ordained and predestined them to be lost, to go to hell, and those that are dead that were not elected to be saved, are now writhing in agony, where they will ever remain, without hope.

"Armenianism answers—We believe that God excuses many of them on account of ignorance. Those who did the best they knew how, will be sure of being a part of the 'church of the first-born,' even though they never heard of Jesus.

"While this last view is perhaps more merciful, yet it makes ignorance ground of salvation. Now the Bible teaches that the gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.—Romans 1:16. Now if ignorance saves one, it will save all, so that we need not Christ or the gospel. Surely this is denying Christ and the gospel, and putting a premium on ignorance.

"Some may say, now that you have proven that the doctrine of a literal, perpetual hell, and unconditional election is false, and you have submitted the statistical reports concerning the awful darkness of the world, what are your views regarding the final destiny of man?

"I will cheerfully present my views on these important matters, in as brief and concise a manner as possible.

"I believe that Christ was manifest in the world to destroy the work of the Devil, to destroy death, to rescue all from the grave, to enlighten humanity, to save the lost, to redeem the fallen, and finally restore perfect harmony in all God's vast universe.

"In support of this I invite the reader to carefully and prayerfully read the following scriptures: Hebrews 2:3-9; Luke 2:10, 11; Romans 5:12-18; John 1:7-9, 23; John 3:16; John 4:42; John 12:32-47; 1 John 3:8; Hebrews 2:14; Revelation 1:18; Revelation 4:11; Isaiah 46:9, 10; 1 Corinthians 15:22-28; Philippians 2:12, 13; 2 Corinthians 5:14, 15; 1 Timothy 2:6; 1 Timothy 4:10; Daniel 7:14.

"That the sinner will be punished is evident from the scriptures and I fully believe that for every idle word, for every unkind deed, man must give an account to God.

"We can conceive but three reasons why God should punish his disobedient children. First from motives of revenge, spite or hatred.

"Now the attributes ascribed to our heavenly Father are: Power, justice, goodness, love, fatherhood. These attributes forbid us to surmise that God will punish from the above stated motives. Why, a good earthly father would not punish his child from motives of spite, hatred or revenge.

"The second reason is: He might punish his disobedient children for the good of other members of his family, who might learn obedience by the suffering of those punished. But this reason must fall, because we read that all will be judged when the books are opened, hence it will be too late to learn by the suffering of another.

"The only true motive of God's punishment is for the best possible development of his disobedient children to eradicate evil, burn out the dross, purify the gold, after they have 'paid the last farthing,' suffered according to their works of evil. They will see that the 'chastening' has been 'for their profit,' and that 'afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness' and they are made 'partakers of his holiness' and yet bow the knee in holy reverence to the love of God. Hebrews 12:5-11; Revelation 3:19; 2 Corinthians 5:10; Colossians 3:25; Matthew 5:25, 26; Matthew 18:23-35.

"That the heathen nations and the sinners of the more enlightened portions of the world may hear the gospel in the intermediate state between death and the resurrection, and that the work of punishment, reformation or salvation will be accomplished is very evident, from the following and other scriptures: Isaiah 14:12-17; 24:7; 61:6; Ezekiel 31:16-18; 32:17-32; Zechariah 9:12; Isaiah 49:8, 9; Psalms 16:10; 88:5; 68:17-20; Ephesians 4:9, 10; 1 Peter 3:18-20; 1 Peter 4:6; Luke 23:42; 16:19-31; Revelation 6:9-11; Revelation 1:18; Revelation 20:13; Jonah 2:2; Philippians 2:10; Revelation 5:3-13; John 5:25-29.

"Thank God, Jesus will win back the world, suffering will end, death be destroyed, and peace will cover the earth. Then God, who is called Father more than two hundred and fifty times in the New Testament, will demonstrate to all, that he has ever loved his children, and that he created them for his pleasure and society.

"Oh, how beautiful the facts in the case are, compared to the cold, cruel, revengeful story as told by the theology of Christianity [so called].

"Surely the creeds misrepresent our Father. Thank God the angel message of salvation, peace, pardon, and redemption has come and we may now see that the goodness of God leadeth man to repentance, and loving service.

"When we see the wisdom, love and power of God, in sending Jesus Christ to restore all things we feel to say: O, thou sun of righteousness, shed thy light o'er the universe till all shall be baptized, 'neath the halo of thy power. Shine on thou bright and morning star, till the darkest corner of the universe shall be illumined with the brightness of thy glory. O, thou Rock of Ages, may all the mariners on humanity's wild, white, crested, foamy sea, find safety in the towering omnipotence. O thou Lily of the Valley, reflect thy purity till the last wandering soul shall learn to love thee and become pure as thou art. Bloom on, thou Rose of Sharon till the atmosphere of the universe shall be freighted with the aroma of thy love. When the universe shall bow before thee and the voice of a great multitude, like the voice of many waters and mighty thunderings, shall cry Alleluia! for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth! When every creature which is in heaven, and on earth and under the earth shall take part in thy coronation service, saying: Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Thee. Reign through eternity thou monarch of all hearts, thou darling of God, thou Redeemer of humanity and Savior of worlds."

But again you will see by the brother's statement that because "I abhor, despise, denounce, and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment and unconditional election," I am not sound in the faith. Please permit me to present the doctrine of unconditional election as taught in the text-books and by the leading ministers of the churches. I quote from the sermon, "Future punishment," complained of:

"Now I desire to call your attention to another doctrine that, in connection with the literal flame theory is a combination that the whole sense of human justice revolts at, I refer to the doctrine of fatalism, unconditional election, and foreordination, as held by the Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregational churches, and some of the leading men of the Church of England. I will let their representative ministers speak for them.

“By the decree of God for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated to everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men predestinated and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite that it can not be either increased or diminished.”—Presbyterian Confession of Faith, third chapter, sections 3, 4.

“Query.—If it be true that God, before the foundation of the world has decided how many to save, how many to damn, that number can not be ‘increased or diminished,’ why preach, pray, hope, or try to do right? The die is cast, the doom is sealed. Obeying the gospel will not save, refusing to obey will not condemn.

“But lest you might think I am making this worse than it really is, I will let their own leading men explain their doctrine.

“Calvin says: ‘Predestination we call the eternal decree of God, by which he hath determined in himself what he would have to become of every individual of mankind, for they are not all created with a similar destiny; but eternal life is foreordained for some and eternal damnation for others.’

“And Calvin again says of God’s design in relation to sinners: ‘He directs his voice to them, but it is that they may become more deaf; he kindles a light, but it is that they may become more blind; he publishes his doctrine, but it is that they may be made more besotted; he applies a remedy, but it is that they may not be healed.’

“Peter Martyr, another confrere, says: ‘God supplies wicked men with opportunities of sinning and inclines their hearts thereto; he blinds, deceives and seduces them; he, by his working on their hearts, bends and stirs them up to evil.’

“Zachius, the Swiss reformer, declares that ‘The reprobates are bound by the ordinance of God under the necessity of sinning.’ And Beza, his countryman, says, ‘that God hath predestinated, not only unto damnation, but also unto the causes of it whomsoever he saw meet,’ and John Knox says, ‘The reprobates are not only left by God’s suffering, but are compelled to sin by his power.’

“Toplady, a Church of England Calvinist, among other awful utterances, says: ‘The sentence of God which rejects the reprobates is so immutable that it is impossible that they should be saved, though they have performed all the work of the saints, and, therefore it is not true that those who perish through their own fault might have been saved through grace if they had not ceased laboring for saving grace.’—Reverend Doctor Lantry, in the Toronto Globe.

“From the above quotations as cited by one of Canada’s most brilliant pulpiteers, it would appear that the great reformers referred to, have represented our heavenly Father as being all that the general people have accused the Devil of being guilty of.

“Query.—Is it true that God ‘compels people to sin,’ ‘tempts’ and ‘inclines men to sin,’ ‘stirs them up to do evil,’ ‘blinds,’ ‘deceives,’ ‘seduces’? That he called millions into existence on purpose to damn, roast and burn them in hell’s flames, making them ‘blaspheme,’ ‘screech’ and ‘writhe’ in excruciating agony, ‘all for his own glory.’ Can all this unspeakable, horrid, devilish, cruel, inhuman conduct be charged against God? Yet the priests and parsons of the sectarian churches have so revealed him to the world.

“I will now submit one more statement from the celebrated Doctor Hopkins, and ask your careful consideration of the most God-dishonoring, soul-discouraging paragraph that was ever preached by mortal man.

“God has revealed it to be his will to punish some of mankind for ever, you know not but what you are one of them, whether you will be saved or damned depends entirely on his will, and supposing he sees it most for his glory, and the general good that you should be damned, it is certainly sure that you will be damned. On this supposition then you ought to be willing to be damned, for not to be willing to be damned, in this case is opposing God’s will.”—Doctor Hopkins’ Works, volume 3, page 145.”

We have heard much regarding the words eternal, everlasting, for ever, yet all are shown to be limited, when referring to duration. Read Psalm 104: 5; Ecclesiastes 1: 4; Isaiah 13: 13; Matthew 24: 35; 2 Peter 3: 10; Revelation 20: 11; Revelation 21: 1; Jonah 2: 3-6; Exodus 21: 6; Leviticus 25: 46; Genesis 17: 8; Genesis 48: 4; Genesis 49: 26; Isaiah 54: 10; Jude 7; Ezekiel 16: 44-63; Matthew 10: 15; Matthew 11: 24. Now read and think.

Time and space forbid that I go more fully into other matters that have been referred to at this moment, but I wish to ask a few questions, and then let the matter rest for the present.

Referring to the vision found in Doctrine and Covenants, section 76, where it speaks of the condition of a certain unfortunate class, it says:

“Thus saith the Lord, concerning all those who know my power, and have been made partakers thereof, and suffered themselves, through the power of the Devil, to be overcome, and to deny the truth, and defy my power; they are they who are the sons of perdition, of whom I say it had been better for them never to have been born; for they are vessels of wrath, doomed to suffer the wrath of God, with the devil and his angels, in eternity, concerning whom I have said there is no forgiveness in this world nor in the world to come; having denied the Holy Spirit, after having received it, and having denied the only begotten Son of the Father; having crucified him unto themselves, and put him to an open shame: these are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; for all the rest shall be brought forth by the resurrection of the dead, through the triumph and the glory of the Lamb who was slain, who was in the bosom of the Father before the worlds were made. And this is the gospel, the glad tidings which the voice out of the heavens bore record unto us, that he came into the world, even Jesus to be crucified for the world, and to bear the sins of the world, and to sanctify the world, and to cleanse it from all unrighteousness; that through him all might be saved, whom the Father had put into his power, and made by him; who glorifies the Father, and saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but straightway shut it up again; wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth and the misery thereof, they understand not, neither any man except them who are ordained unto this condemnation. And we heard the voice saying, Write the vision, for lo, this is the end of the vision of the sufferings of the ungodly!”

Here we are told the persons referred to are those that once were the children of God, born again, saved, redeemed, loved God and followed him; but in a dark and cloudy day, when the trials were hard, they “suffered themselves through the power of the Devil, to be overcome.” Now, if it be true that Christ is to destroy the works of the Devil, destroy death, be the savior of the world, will God’s power be limited just to the extent that he can not save those once obedient children? Or if he has the power to save them, is his mercy, love, pity, and pardoning power limited? If the "end of their torment" is revealed to many by the Lord in vision, as it plainly states, why is it considered heresy to believe there is an end? When the words, endless, eternal, everlasting, loom up before you, with their sectarian meaning, would it not be right for you to look at the word of the Lord on the words and meaning thereof, as found in Doctrine and Covenants, 18: 1, 2.

"And surely every man must repent or suffer, for I God am endless; wherefore, I revoke not the judgments which I shall pass, but woes shall go forth, weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; yea, to those who are found on my left hand; nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment. . . .

"Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men, altogether for my name's glory; wherefore, I will explain unto you this mystery, for it is meet unto you to know even as mine apostles. I speak unto you that are chosen in this thing, even as one, that you may enter into my rest; for, behold, the mystery of godliness, how great is it? For, behold, I am endless, and the punishment which is given from my hand is endless punishment, for endless is my name; wherefore,

"Eternal punishment is God's punishment.

"Endless punishment is God's punishment."

This is the word of the Lord. Why then should one pass this by in a debate as "A quibble"? Is it right to pass the word of the Lord by as a quibble?

Now we will look at Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7. The Lord herein states that "Endless and Eternal is my name." He tells Enoch (that holy man that never tasted death) that there has not been so great wickedness as among his brethren, so great had the brethren of Enoch sinned, that the Lord said, "Satan shall be their father, and misery shall be their doom; and the whole heavens shall weep over them." Surely this is about as bad as you can find anywhere; yet the Lord says later on in the same revelation that he will shut them up in a prison and they will suffer for their sins, and till "his chosen" shall return "unto me," "and until that day they shall be in torment."

You see, notwithstanding all their wickedness and their former high standing as the "brethren of Enoch," they have an end to their torment.

Now just one more from the Doctrine and Covenants, section 43, paragraph 7: "And the wicked shall go away into unquenchable fire; and their end no man knoweth, on earth, nor ever shall know, until they come before me in judgment."

Will you say that at the time of judgment they will not know the end of their torment, or, worse, that there will be no end?

Now a few lines regarding the sin concerning which it is written, "It shall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come."—Matthew 12: 32. Let me ask, Did it ever occur to you that this only shows that the unfortunate that commits this awful sin is not granted pardon in this present world? He dies unpardoned, and not only so, but he is not pardoned in the world to come; that is, he is not permitted to come forth in the first resurrection and to enjoy the glory of the millennial reign. He is not redeemed in "the due time of the Lord," the period promised, no, he loses that, but do you think that the fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of Jesus has lost its power? He that is to destroy death, to destroy the power of the Devil, (and remember, we are told they were overcome by the power of the Devil,) will he refuse to help, or will he acknowledge that he can but will not, will he forget that all his punishments are for the correction of those that have been led astray by the power of the Devil? Oh, think of it when you have spent years in telling the world of God's pardoning love to all mankind, will you say that his love has a limit? When it comes to some of his children that have done wrong when overcome by the power of the Devil, will not this spoil all your story about the fatherhood of God? Let the Lord speak as to his fatherhood:

"Thou shalt also consider in thine heart, that as a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee."—Deuteronomy 8: 5.

"My son, despise not the chastening of the Lord; neither be weary of his correction: for whom the Lord loveth he correcteth; even as a father the son in whom he delighteth."—Proverbs 3: 11, 12.

Now let me present a picture, as painted by one of our brethren and published by the church press: "Let us take a view of a father chastening his son. We shall suppose this boy to be fifteen years old; he has disobeyed his father's command, and the father now proposes to chastise him. The boy is tied to a tree. A red-hot iron is brought forth and applied to his body; again and again this heroic treatment is applied, all the while the boy's screams are rending the air; his pleas for mercy are pouring into his father's ears, and his agony is fearful to behold; but there is no cessation of the punishment. The boy faints in a dead swoon, but the father is determined to show him how much 'he delighteth' (?) in him, so he continues to apply the torture as long as there is a throb of the pulse, a spark of life left in his boy's body—the boy 'in whom he delighteth.' During this time the rest of the family are standing around shouting, 'Glory; Hallelujah,' along with other expressions of gratitude and happiness. Now you would say that man is a brute, and the whole family are worse than heathen cannibals, such a thing would not be tolerated anywhere in all this land."

Now this story is told to show how the sectarian world believed that God will punish those that obey not the gospel in this life, and we have thought it was grand, in that it exposed the awful conception they have of "our Father." Would you have me literalize the passages referred to, and thus make God, our God, "our Father" just as cruel and spiteful toward his own blood-purchased children, those that he has saved, redeemed, those that are born again, as the world thinks he will be to those that are not of his family? We have thought that Father will be more pitiful, more merciful, more lenient, more patient, more forgiving to his own family than to those not of the number.

Granted that they must suffer for every unkind word spoken—for each unkind deed performed, "but he will not keep his wrath for ever." Ah, take a look at the story of God's love and the final redemption of his wandering children as seen in the parables of "our elder brother." Then tell me that some will be everlastingly happy while some will be everlastingly miserable. The prodigal son returned; the shepherd sought for the wandering sheep until he found it; the woman looked for the lost piece of silver till she found it. All, all tell the wonderful story of God's love, and so it seems not heresy to me to think that God will watch for the wandering boy till he returns. Then will he place the best robe on his shoulders, and the ring on his finger, and shoes on his feet, and say in heartfelt joy, "This my son was dead and is alive again." Jesus is the good Shepherd, and as such he will wander over the hills and across the valleys till he finds the lost sheep, and tenderly will he take it into the fold again.

But lest I weary you I will close by quoting some questions propounded by Elder J. S. Roth, in the Ensign for December 28, 1905:

"1. Would endless punishment be for the good of any human being? 2. If God loves his enemies, will he punish them any more than is for their good? 3. If God loves friends, if he loves his enemies also, are not all mankind objects of his love? 4. If God loves only those who love him, what better is he than a sinner? 5. As 'love thinketh no evil,' can God design the ultimate evil of a single soul? 6. If any man does wrong in returning evil for evil, would not God do wrong in doing the same? 7. Would not endless punishment be in return of evil for evil? 8. If God hates the sinner, would it not be natural for the sinner to hate God? 9. If God loves his enemies now, will he not always do the same? 10. Would it be unjust in God to be kind to all men in a future state? 11. If all men deserve endless punishment, will not those who are saved miss divine justice? 12. Does divine justice require the infliction of pain from which mercy recoils? 13. If God would save all men but can not, is he infinite in power? 14. If God can save all men and will not, is he infinite in his goodness? 15. Did God desire universal salvation when he created men? 16. Will God carry his original designs into execution? 17. Can God will anything contrary to his knowledge? 18. Did God, when he created man, intend that a portion of his creatures should be endlessly wretched? 19. If he did not know all at the creation, is he infinite in knowledge?"

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

At our last business-meeting, seventeen were received by letter of removal. It was decided that all the priesthood belonging to the branch report to the branch meeting every three months on blanks to be furnished them by the secretary; and our brethren and sisters who are experts in shorthand writing are to be invited to try to be present at all our prayer-meetings, and write down the beautiful expressions given by the Spirit in tongues and prophecy. Bro. LaRue was instructed to prepare some suitable tracts for distribution.

We omitted, last writing, to report the death of our beloved Bro. John C. Glassell, who died December 19, 1908.

Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Whitmyer were baptized. Their conversion was largely the result of our cottage-meeting. Also Miss Gertrude Howden and Mr. L. F. McDonald from Iowa, Bro. LaRue officiating.

Our cottage-meetings on week evenings are progressing well. We have just opened another new place at the house of Mr. and Sr. F. J. Cox, at Euclid and Michigan Avenues. Opportunities are almost everywhere in this city. All we need is hustlers.

PITTSBURG AND MONONGAHELA, PENNSYLVANIA.

Am writing this in Pittsburg, called the "scandal city." Whether our town needs a moral fumigating any more than other American cities of its size may be questioned and doubted; nevertheless it has been in the limelight for some time because of the Hartje divorce case, the Thaw trial, etc., and now councilmanic unfaithfulness on a large scale has again attracted the eyes of the country this way. A trap was set for a councilman, and he fell into it. He was photographed while in the act of accepting a bribe. The papers call it a "photograft" and the town the "steal city."

It is timely that attention be drawn to the greater side of Pittsburg, where for so many years God's people have proclaimed the gospel message. This is a city of tremendous producing power, whose clouds of smoke is its colossal crown of industrial kingship. Through its gateways passed last year one hundred and twenty-five million tons of freight, or over eight per cent of all the railroad traffic of the United States. It has made possible the extension of railroads, the marvelous development of electricity, the transformation of cities, the building of the sky-scraper, the multiplication of the comforts of life. This city of varied labor pays out one million dollars every day in wages. Here is a city of blazing furnaces, (as Mark Twain, I believe, viewing it at night, said it was "hell with the lid off,") of busy factories of miracle-working processes, the like of which are to be seen nowhere else on earth, of mechanical genius, of splendid creative genius, of great business organization, of culture, and of art. New York is a banking and shipping office; Chicago a grain elevator and stock yards; St. Louis a store, and Washington a law-office, but Pittsburg is the world's forge and anvil and the United States Steel Corporation the blacksmith. Marvelously has Pittsburg overcome many almost unsurmountable difficulties and gained many noble triumphs of commerce, of art, and of culture. This is the larger side of the "scandal city."

Many years have the people of God been meeting in various parts of the city, until about six years ago they obtained a church of their own, located at the corner of Colwell and Miller Streets, near the center of the city on one of the side streets. Here is where the pioneer Sunday-school of the Reorganization was started. Many able servants of the Lord have lifted up their voices calling sinners to repentance and encouraging the faithful. This branch has sent a number of ministers in the field, and others who hold prominent positions in the church once called this their home. It will be thought that such an old branch in such a large city would have quite a large membership, and for convenience, that there would be a number of branches throughout the town. But such is not the case. There is only one organization, of about one hundred and forty members, very much scattered, only about two or three families living in the city proper. It is difficult to reach the outsiders, who apparently are indifferent to our message. Even when the president of the church has been in the city for services, and his presence announced through all the papers, the strangers who came within our gates were few.

We must give more attention to holding what we have and depending upon keeping our children within the fold to increase the membership instead of expecting the increase to come from without, to any large extent.

In the northern part of the town a Congregational church has erected a large structure, the first floor of which has the regulation church architecture, and is used for church purposes, but the floors above are modern flats, and no doubt bring in a nice income, (a suggestion for prospective builders of city churches).

Where the membership is so scattered, car-fare is quite a large item for the whole family. Where it is possible to do so, the church should be built in a locality where the Saints can live within walking distance, so the children can go to Sunday-school and be raised in the church.

A couple of faithful sisters and a brother are doing a good work at Monongahela resulting in the organization of a Sabbath-school of over forty members. On the first Sabbath of December, four fine, intelligent people presented themselves for baptism, the direct result of the labors of these sisters. And another one was baptized by the writer last Sabbath.

On January 4, Ephraim Thomas, who for many years had been a member of this branch, passed away suddenly at Kirtland. The writer accompanied his oldest son, Harry, to Kirtland and conducted the services, laying the remains away in the old Kirtland Cemetery.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Central Michigan District: God said in Malachi 3: 10: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room to receive it."

The storehouse of the Central Michigan District has become empty, none of the elders' families receiving their full allowance for last month. Will we not bring our tithes in the storehouse that we may receive God's blessings?

Dear Saints, let us remember that this work is a work that one man can not do alone, but it will take the united effort of all to advance this great work which we love so dearly. If we would each and every one put our mites together we would have enough and to spare. Do not think because we have not much to spare that we can do nothing; but remember the widow's mite: it was more in the sight of the Lord than all that the rich men had cast in of their abundance.

We have eleven hundred Saints in Central Michigan, and if we would only pay five cents per week, it would bring us in $220 per month. Since our expense is only $133, we would have enough and to spare.

The Lord has said that we were to be collaborators together, and while our brethren have left their home and families and all things that are near and dear to them, can we not spare five cents per week from our earnings that their families may have the necessities of life? We read in Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5: "Behold, now it is called to-day (until the coming of the Son of Man), and verily it is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people; for he that is tithed shall not be burned (at his coming); for after to-day cometh the burning: This is speaking after the manner of the Lord; for verily I say, Tomorrow all the proud and they that do wickedly shall be as stubble; and I will burn them up, for I am the Lord of hosts." Now to do wickedly is to disobey the commands of the Lord. In Doctrine and Covenants 101:1, we read "that inasmuch as those whom I have commanded were faithful, they should be blessed with a multiplicity of blessings; but inasmuch as they were not faithful, they were nigh unto cursing." He furthermore says: "I, the Lord, have decreed in my heart, that inasmuch as any man, belonging to the order [the church], shall be found a transgressor; or, in other words, shall break the covenant with which ye are bound, he shall be cursed in this life, and shall be trodden down by whom I will, for I, the Lord, am not to be mocked in these things."

Now, brethren, let us consider: have we broken the covenant with which we are bound? When we stood at the water's edge we covenanted with God to serve him to the best of our ability as long as life should last. Let us ask ourselves this question: Are we not able to give the Lord at least five cents from each week's earnings? If we are and have not done it, we have broken one covenant and we are transgressors, and this is the reason we have what we call bad luck; but it is only God verifying his words.

Hoping all may keep their covenant with God, I remain,
Your brother and colaborer in the gospel,

GEORGE W. BURT, Bishop's agent.

PHILLIPS.—Lucinda J. Phillips, January 17, 1909. Born January 4, 1838, at Birmingham, Pennsylvania. Baptized March 13, 1898, at Fayette City, Pennsylvania, by Elder L. R. Devore. Funeral-service conducted by Elder C. Ed. Miller, assisted by the local Methodist minister, from the home of her daughter at Bell Vernon, Pennsylvania.

ROBERTSON.—At the home of his youngest daughter, Mrs. Emma Mock, at English, Indiana, January 21, 1909, at 10 p. m., the spirit of Bro. William H. Robertson departed from this mortal house of clay to the realms of rest and bliss. He was born March 14, 1834, in Clark County, Indiana; therefore his pilgrimage here was 74 years, 10 months, and 7 days. He leaves an aged companion, two daughters, four sons, one sister, two half brothers, ten grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren. He was married to Cynthia Ann Baggerly, March 10, 1853. Of this union were born seven children, the eldest daughter dying in infancy. His loving wife was ever at his side to assist in caring for him in the hours of his affliction, and upon her he leaned in the minute of his death, which was due to organic heart trouble. His affliction was due to toils, hardships, and long marches, during the Civil War. He was out three years, in Company G, Sixty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. He received wounds during his service, from which he suffered a great deal during his sickness. Bro. Robinson joined the Christian Church when sixteen years old; lived a faithful member until he heard the angel message proclaimed by W. W. Blair, and was ready to accept and obey the gospel truths. He was baptized June 13, 1870, and was a faithful, consistent member until death. His children are: Norman A., Cleveland, Ohio; John W., Sulphur, Indiana; Charles A., Salem, Indiana; Willie O., Louisville, Kentucky; Emma Mock, English, Indiana; Clarinda Jobe, West Fork, Indiana. Funeral-services by Reverend Eskew, of the United Brethren faith, prayer by Reverend James Bobitt. He was laid to rest in Eckerty Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. To know him was to love him. He was a hard-working, generous-hearted man. His home was a resting-place for the weary elders, and all others who came.

HARGRAVES.—Sr. Martha L. Hargraves was born in Cook County, Texas, on December 15, 1875. Her parents, W. P. and Rebecca J. Hargraves, are residents of Young County, Texas, living six miles west of Graham. She was baptized and confirmed in Young County, Texas, by Elder A. J. Moore, on the 10th of November, 1890. She lived a consistent member until her death, which occurred at Wichita Falls, Texas, on the 15th of October, 1908. She died after an operation and her Christian courage and fortitude was the subject of much discussion among the nurses and others connected with the hospital where she breathed her last.

MANN.—At her home, near Mondamin, Iowa, January 25, 1909, Sr. Martha Mann. Born in St. Charles, Illinois, July 2, 1856. Baptized at Moorhead, Iowa, August 15, 1891. She was the only one of her father's family to accept the gospel. She was a faithful Saint. Her intelligent testimonies, and

Two sons survive him, one in Alberta, Canada, the other in Oklahoma. The family came from Michigan to Lamoni, in 1887. Bro. Clum was baptized in 1890, by Bro. Columbus Scott, confirmed by Brn. She leaves her husband and four children to mourn her departure, also her father, brother, and sister.

BENNETT.—Sr. W. M. J. Bennett was born in Canada, May 1, 1853. Her maiden name was Isabelle Taggart. Married August 13, 1872. Five children blessed their home, all of whom are living, and, with their father, mourn the loss of a loving mother and a faithful companion. She was baptized August 13, 1899; and was always an earnest worker for the gospel of Christ. She was patient in affliction, and ready to depart, and on November 15, 1908, the final call came. Funeral-sermon by Elder M. A. Somerfield, to a house filled with friends and relatives.

BOOTH.—William Nathaniel Booth was born at Kayswood, Utah, May 23, 1859, and died February 4, 1909. His parents early moved to Stockton, California, and in 1871 to Harlan, Iowa, and in 1905, William and family located near Danbury, where the family still reside. He was married to Miss Arvetta Blake March 13, 1881; three sons and five daughters were born to them, one of the daughters having preceded the father. He was baptized while young, and was made an elder May 7, 1894; at times was energetic and active in the gospel. During his illness he expressed firm belief in Christ. He was a true husband, a kind father, an obliging neighbor, and a true Christian. The Modern Woodmen had charge of the procession, and held a short service at the home. The funeral-sermon was preached in the Methodist church at Danbury, by Elder Charles E. Butterworth, assisted by the pastor, Elder J. R. Tombleson. Remains were interred at Harlan, Iowa.

PATTERSON.—Elder John S. Patterson was born January 1, 1826, in Edinburgh, Midlothianshire, Scotland. Baptized July 15, 1866, at Kewanee, Illinois, by James Lord, confirmed by James Hart, and ordained an elder July 15, 1866, by James Hart. Died January 16, 1909, in Kewanee, from a stroke of paralysis. He was buried from the Saints' church in Kewanee two days after his death, Elder J. W. Wight having charge and preaching the sermon. He leaves no blood relatives on this side of the ocean, but by his stepson and other relatives by marriage was cared for as though he were their own.

COX.—J. H. Nephi Cox, born August 13, 1893, at Penygraig, Glamorganshire, Wales; died November 13, 1908, at Gilfach Goch, Glamorganshire. He was a very promising boy and well loved by all who knew him. He leaves a loving father, mother, and two brothers to mourn their loss. Funeral-services conducted by Elder Rees and John G. Jenkins. Interment at Trealaw Cemetery, November 17. Funeral-sermon preached at Gilfach Goch, December 13, by Rees Jenkins.

COX.—William P. Cox, born December 15, 1873, at Tony-pandy, Glamorganshire, Wales. Baptized November 6, 1892, by Elder John H. Edwards. Ordained an elder February 10, 1906. Died December 24, 1908. He was faithful and diligent in church work, a loving and dutiful son, and a kind brother. He laid down the mortal coil with a strong hope of a glorious resurrection. A loving father, mother, and brother are left to mourn their bereavement. Funeral-services December 28, by Rees Jenkins, who also preached the funeral-sermon January 31, 1909, at Gilfach Goch.

PUGHSLEY.—At Abercwmboi, Glamorganshire, Wales, December 27, 1908, Ethelia, daughter of Bro. and Mrs. John Pughsley. Was born October 2, 1908, at Ambergwmboi. Funeral-services by Elder Rees Jenkins, December 30, 1908. Interment at New Cemetery, Aberdare.

JENNINGS.—David J. Jennings, born August 17, 1876, at Lemars, Iowa. Baptized May 24, 1903, at McCook, South Dakota, by Oscar Case. Confirmed by Oscar Case and J. M. Baker. Died January 26, 1909, at Wasta, South Dakota. Funeral from Saints' church, at Sioux City, J. M. Baker in charge and preaching the sermon to a large congregation of relatives and friends.

Resolutions of Condolence.

At the recent Kewanee District conference, held at Rock Island, Illinois, February 6 and 7, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas, In the death of our venerable brother, John S. Patterson, we feel that this district has sustained a loss, and

"Whereas, He has labored so many years in defending the cause we love so well and has been to many of us a father in the gospel, therefore be it

"Resolved, That we this day pay tribute to his memory, for we recognize his labors as having been of benefit to us, and we shall miss him in our homes and in our assemblies. We extend to his near relatives our sympathy. And be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to the church papers and to the Kewanee local paper for publication, that a copy be sent to his family, and that it be incorporated within the minutes of this conference.

Why Working Women do not Marry.

In an article entitled "A substitute for matrimony" in the February Woman's Home Companion, Anna Steese Richardson proves conclusively that the majority of business girls of to-day do not marry because the men they might marry do not earn as much money as they do. Mrs. Richardson speaks with authority—she has a greater experience than perhaps any other woman in America. She concludes her article thus:

"The business woman of to-day is achieving financial success at the sacrifice of domestic content and maternal instinct. Is it worth while?"

A LITTLE LAY SERMON.

Many events within the last year have attracted the attention and consideration of those who are interested in what is going on in the world. Two of these events have been calculated to stir the depth of feeling in those who are lovers of humanity, those who feel for their fellow men and are touched by the ills which they suffer and the calamities which happen to communities.

The most notable event of the year, as well as one of the most striking and far reaching in its effect was the earthquake at Messina, Calabria, and Reggio, Italy, with its accompanying storm and the heaving of the sea beyond its bounds, which resulted in so much loss of life and injury to property.

Out of the dark cloud of terror and grief following this terrible catastrophe in which over two hundred thousand human beings were instantly hurried to death or left to die by reason of grievous injury; there came an outburst of the innate charity of humanity no less great and wondrous than was the calamity which gave rise to it. That terrible blow of horror which swept the country that had stood for a thousand years in apparent security, found the bond of kinship between man and his fellow man still holding sway in the human heart, and millions of the living responded to the claim for sympathy and help which those who survived the storm demanded by their forlorn situation.

The other event, that of the great leviathan steamer Republic foundering at sea and sending out over the wide expanse of waters, by means of one of the latest developments of science, cries of distress and asking for immediate relief, found a wondrous response from others navigating the wide waste of waters who hurried to their rescue and saved thousands from a watery grave. This, too, stirs humanity to its depths and those rescued and their rescuers are in condition to receive congratulation that through divine providence there have been such wise means of communication placed in the wide field of the universe for the discovery and use of man.

Both of these events are sources of thought and consideration upon the part of those who believe that God has ordained all things created for the use and benefit of man during his occupation of the earth; and there can be no room left for doubt that in all this the goodness as well as the wisdom and power of the Creator are manifest. Of the first of these events we give below a little lay sermon taken from the editorial page of the Kansas City Journal for February 21, which we commend to the readers of the HERALD, not only because of its eloquence of portrayal, but for the peculiarity and weirdness of the thought that the stroke bringing so much ruin of life and property might be intended as a rebuke of the Creator against the inequality of caste which had grown up in the thousand years of safety from disaster.

Two common sayings often used are, "One can not bore a square hole with a gimlet," and, "Too many men are, in regard to their vocations, like round plugs in square holes." But a German inventor now brings us a drill which actually bores a square hole, incredible as it seems. Now let some genius perfect a system for making "square" men, and the world will bless him. Another inventor has a device which muffles the report of a rifle. It is called a "deto-nator." We do not recognize its commercial value; but a similar contrivance for taking away the sting of some men's words would be a real blessing.

The recent earthquake in Italy has one curiously elemental result, one which goes back farther than the dawn of written history and reaches as far into the future as the fairest dream of altruism and human solidarity. In the twinkling of an eye, pride of birth and station, wealth and race have been reduced to the beggar's state and the very word ancestor has been, to all intents and purposes, blotted from the lexicon of many Italian children. In thousands of cases children too young to remember their parents' names, or to tell where they once lived, have been thrown prattling in primeval ignorance into the arms of the world, with only their pitiful plight to plead for them. They are too young even for grief. The frightful storm-cloud that blackened the sky of a whole nation and dimmed the sunlight of a whole world is to them but a film of raven fleece that long since disappeared with the returning sun of life and youth. In some cases a few richly embroidered garments of patrician make, testifying with the mute eloquence of gold to the parental love that is the same in all stations, are all that can distinguish between the common clay of the teeming tenements and the rose du Barri of the palace. In most cases even this is lacking.

Thus are family trees uprooted and genealogies worse than confounded. Proud lines that might have extended back to the Cæsars in unbroken flow of blood have their haughty current dried up, and for ever, in an instant. The little survivors of noble families and those of the squalid slums start their young lives as the children of primeval justice might have done—on an equal footing, with no artificial aids or hindrances, with neither wings nor weights save of their own providing to help them to the goal or to keep them from it. Dressed in the universal integument of humanity, there is naught to distinguish them as they stand ready for the race. No man may lay his hand upon one of them and say: "Gold and high born lineage shall make thy running easier than the rest and the goal already won." No man shall lay his hand upon another and say: "Thou art born to run and lose. Thou art of the sad many and it is for the many to toil harder than the others and win few prizes."

Nature is majestic in all she does. She is never small, even in her cruelty. She is either very hard or very tender. She is stupendous in her retributions and magnificent in her mercies. She is superb in her irony and, above all, tremendous in her justice, beyond the grand tragedies of the fine old Greeks. With what contemptuous ease she blots out the busy patterns in the sands on which men have toiled with infinite labor for thousands of years. There by the shores of Homer's "many-sounding sea" the little palaces were built of bits of colored marble and brightly sparkling stuffs, while the cheaper folk reared their huts of straw and mud. The people of the colored marbles wrapped themselves in still brighter cloths and fed on the dainties of the earth and sea, while the mud-men dressed in rags and skins and ate crusts and toiled. Between the two hostile and contending races a wall was built, a wall of caste and "class consciousness" and envy and despising.

Then out of the sea came the Great Horror. Towns crumbled like houses of cards; populations were crushed like insects; stately piles became heaps of debris, bloody with the death of two hundred thousand victims. And like a picture painted by the lightning on the black easel of the storm, there is seen a group of children without name or rank, mark or distinction; just children of men, to whom "plebeian and patrician," "rich and poor," "high and low," can not be applied—back where the world started ten thousand years or more ago, as though it had been traveling in a mighty circle instead of mounting on the great spiral which the optimists have dreamed into being.

May not this be Nature's way of incarnating the equality and freedom of birth of all men; of teaching us that the past is not a weapon, that ancestors are not allies in any fair and equal contest; that the race can not be one in a fair field and with no favor when any advantage is held that is not won by the brawn or brain of the contestant himself? May it not be Nature's rebuke alike to the crude socialism that divides the belongings of the world among the worthy and the undeserving brothers alike and to the lazy cruelty of greed and gold that takes no thought of brotherhood at all? Here are some thousands of young lives, begun without silver spoons and depending for the issue on individual merit alone, not like swimmers of whom a few have life preservers and the many have burdens on their backs. If one sinks, it will not be because he did not have an equal chance with all the rest. If one swims, it will not be because he had undue opportunities, but because he made the most of the common chance. This is a grim, elementary, evolutionary philosophy of life, but it appears to be Nature's in this instance. There is a certain justice in it, at any rate, though the warm heart of the world will improve upon it and temper its inexorable justice with the mercy which Nature herself does not often teach.

CONCERNING BOOKS.

The glory of God being intelligence, it becomes necessary for us to acquire knowledge. In seeking knowledge we must read, and study what we read. We therefore should not read what is unprofitable to study. The question of fiction entering at this point, we will only remark that there is a diversity of opinion in regard to it, there being certain advantages to be gained from the reading of the proper kind, perhaps, and again, as some view it, certain things better to be avoided by shunning all kinds of fiction.

In this search, then, for the best, and to conserve time by reading only what is necessary, we find ourselves dealing with a large question. But there are aids in this eliminating and choosing. One can get a list of books on any subject by a little effort. The writer recently desired a short list of authorities on "political science." A letter of inquiry, with an inclosed stamp for reply, soon brought the desired list from the professor of political science and government in our State university, and with it, also, an offer of assistance whenever it might be required. This is simply suggestive.

One of the methods of knowing, beforehand, somewhat of the character of a book, is the book review.

From the publisher's standpoint, it is intended to create interest; from the viewpoint of the student, it is a medium of knowing if the book answers his requirements. A review, therefore, should be a faithful portrayal of the nature of the book, its treatment of the subject under discussion, and should, by all means, be given without any influence of bias, if possible.

We hold the idea that there are many books on diverse subjects which would interest our readers, and we will not now attempt to enumerate the subjects in mind. In view of this belief, we may give HERALD readers the benefit of an occasional book review.

We believe every Latter Day Saint should be specially interested in the literature pertaining to any and all phases of our work. A great many books have been published on "Mormon" questions; some for, others against, and still others treating their subject without prejudice; the latter, alas, being few indeed.

Recently certain writers of fiction have attempted stories with "Mormon" settings; they have spun their tales of love and romance about the framework of historical facts or what have been accepted as facts.

Psychic, ethical, and moral writers have made their contributions. All of these are interesting, some educative, but most of them are guilty of common ignorance and misunderstanding of the real facts as known to parties in the best position to know them.

We would ask HERALD readers to kindly send us the names of books, authors and publishers, coming under their notice, which have any connection with the history or faith of the Latter Day Saints.

"THE COURAGE OF CAPTAIN PLUM."

We have received from the Bobbs-Merrill Company, and reserve for future notice, James Oliver Curwood's new novel, The Courage of Captain Plum. Its interest to HERALD readers lies in its being a story connected with the sect which followed James Jesse Strang to Beaver Island, Michigan.

A BOOK FOR AMERICANS.

President Nicolas Murray Butler prefaces his interesting little book, The American as He Is, with the statement that "for a genuine understanding of the Government and of the intellectual and moral temper of the people of the United States, one must know thoroughly and well the writings and speeches of three Americans,—Alexander Hamilton, Abraham Lincoln and Ralph Waldo Emerson." He very properly, therefore, introduces each of his three lectures with quotations from these men.

These lectures were given by President Butler at Copenhagen University last summer and are divided into three topics: "The American as a political type"; "The American apart from his government"; and "The American and the intellectual life."

In the first are shown the unity of the political views of the American people; the birth and growth of the Anglo-Saxon impulse; political parties, economic forces and tendencies of our national existence.

The second lecture treats of the self-reliance and the emotional temperament, our religions and religious freedom; business honor; the American as a citizen of the world; and sounds a warning against certain dangers to our citizenship.

In the third lecture, President Butler shows the basis of our culture, art, and architecture; presents various activities of American life along general lines of science, education, and literature.

The whole is a logical presentation and arrangement, and the divisions fundamental. It is a specially interesting criticism, given, as it was, by an eminent American to the student body of a foreign university.

The book is put out by the New York publishers, the Macmillan Company, 66 Fifth Avenue, and the price is one dollar net.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The question of prohibition has been agitating Utah for some weeks past. What is known as the Cannon Prohibition Bill passed the lower house; but it was defeated in the state senate, February 20, by a vote of twelve to six. The dominant church in Utah has posed as fostering the prohibition movement; but so far we have seen no reply to the counter charge that liquors have been and are now freely offered for sale at the church's coöperative store in Salt Lake City.

Doctor Cyrus W. Teed, the self-styled prophet and leader of the Koreshan colony in Florida, has not yet been resurrected, contrary to his prophecy and the belief of his followers. He died on December 22 of last year and was to have come to life in three days after death.

The Independent Religious Society at Chicago recently adopted resolutions defending Thomas Paine, "comrade and counselor of George Washington," etc. These resolutions were aimed at President Roosevelt, who, in a recent article, referred to Paine as a "filthy little atheist."

Turkey has produced a woman reformer in the person of Princess Fatima el Melmed. She is organizing the Turkish women into leagues, the members of which pledge themselves not to marry men who take more than one wife. An exchange suggests the propriety of this lady coming to America and lecturing on the "one-husband" idea.

Sir Oliver Lodge says the boundary between the present and the future is still substantial, but is worn thin at places, and says we are beginning to hear now and then the comrades on the other side. He says: "What we have to announce is the reception of old but developing methods of carefully constructed evidence of identity, more exact and more nearly complete than perhaps ever before. The construction can exist quite as much on the other side of the partition as on our own side—indeed, most, if not all, of the inventive ingenuity has been on that side. There has been distinct coöperation between those on the material side and those on the immaterial side."

Our brethren of the Sandwich Islands will be pleased to learn that it is proposed to connect the various groups of islands in the Pacific Ocean by wireless telegraphy. This will put Tahiti in immediate touch with world affairs. At present their nearest cable station is at Auckland, twenty-five hundred miles away.

An illustration of simple faith is presented in the following story of the Scotch preacher, Doctor Walter C. Smith, the popular Scotch poet-preacher, who on one occasion tried to explain to an old lady the meaning of the scriptural expression, "Take up thy bed and walk," by saying that the bed was simply a mat or rug easily taken up and carried away. "No, no," replied the lady. "I canna believe that. The bed was a regular four-poster. There would be no miracle in walking away wi' a bit o' mat or rug on your back."

Pathetic stories are told of the French priests who have renounced their vows and have cast off their allegiance to the Catholic Church. A bureau established by them has sought the employment of these ex-churchmen, and while successful to a degree, it is said that they encounter much prejudice, and employers risk boycott by employing any of them.

The Washington Times makes the following statement in regard to Unitarianism: "Unitarianism is nothing more nor less than the liberal wing of the great Congregational body, which founded the first colonies in New England and gave the law to church and state. The foundation of the faith is that there is but one God—the doctrine of those who deny the Trinity. Denying the Trinity naturally means that they do not recognize the divinity of Christ." They recognize the divinity of Jesus, but reject the claim that Christ is God,—making a distinction between deity and divinity. Yet they assert the unity of God. An exchange calls this a "hairsplitting religion."

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday was another beautiful day, and usual services were held. Elder R. S. Salyards occupied at the morning hour at the Brick Church and Elder Joseph Roberts preached in the evening.

At the Homes Elders C. E. Harpe and George W. Day were the speakers.

The small pox situation is such that there is no cause whatever to have any fears on account of it. Only two homes are now in quarantine and the warmer weather insures the successful stamping out of the disease.

Psalm 84.

How lovely are thy dwellings, Lord,
From noise and trouble free!
How beautiful the sweet accord
Of souls that pray to thee!

Lord God of hosts that reign'st on high!
They are the truly blest
Who only will on thee rely,
In thee alone will rest.

They pass refreshed the thirsty vale,
The dry and barren ground,
As though a fruitful, watery dale,
Where springs and showery abound.

They journey on from strength to strength,
With joy and gladsome cheer,
Till all before our God at length
In Zion's courts appear.—John Milton.

The German Te Deum.

(Martin Rinkart was pastor of his native town almost all his life. The Thirty Years' war saw him often with the army, and his service made him beloved through all the land. This hymn probably was written about the time of the thanksgiving services for the declaration of peace in 1647. It was translated into the English by Catherine Winkworth. In Germany it ranks next to "Ein' Feste Burg.")

Now thank we all our God
With heart, and hands, and voices,
Who wondrous things hath done,
In whom his world rejoices;
Who, from our mothers' arms,
Hath blessed us on our way
With countless gifts of love,
And still is ours to-day.

O, may this bounteous God,
Through all our life be near us,
With ever joyful hearts
And blessed peace to cheer us;
And keep us in his grace,
And guide us when perplexed,
And free us from all ills
In this world and the next.

TEMPLE PRIVILEGES.

Liahona, The Elders' Journal, a periodical published at Independence, Missouri, under the auspices of the Missions of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the United States, B. F. Cummings, editor, and D. H. Fowler, assistant editor, has a very peculiar editorial, taken in the light of antecedent events.

Many years ago, the church in Utah, in whose interest this publication is published, practiced the ordinance of sealing for eternity, which included the sealing by proxy; that is, a living person could act for the dead one, in sealing a companion for eternity, in which case it was understood to be the privilege of the proxy to represent the husband in all the privileges belonging to him in time, and to turn over the proxy wife and her children to the principal in eternity.

But in 1890, the then president of that organization, Wilford Woodruff, issued an official manifesto setting forth that they had been accused of solemnizing plural marriages, and declaring in the most solemn manner that these charges were false, and declaring that they were not teaching polygamy or plural marriage or permitting any person to enter into its practice, setting forth, further, that when President Woodruff learned that a marriage of this character was solemnized in the Endowment House, and was unable to learn who performed the ceremony, which was done as he declares without his knowledge, he declared that in consequence of this alleged occurrence, he had given instruction to take the Endowment House down without delay. He then makes the following declaration:

Inasmuch as laws have been enacted by Congress forbidding plural marriages, which laws have been pronounced constitutional by the court of last resort, I hereby declare my intention to submit to those laws, and to use my influence with the members of the church over which I preside to have them do likewise.

There is nothing in my teachings to the church or in those of my associates, during the time specified, which can be reasonably construed to inculcate or encourage polygamy, and when any elder of the church has used language which appeared to convey any such teaching, he has been promptly reprovved. And I now publicly declare that my advice to the Latter-day Saints is to refrain from contracting any marriage forbidden by the law of the land.

But this editorial in the Liahona, The Elders' Journal, in its issue of February 6, 1909, gives instruction providing for proxy marriage in the Temple, as well as proxy baptism and other ordinances. The editorial is as follows:

"ADMISSION TO THE TEMPLE.

"A widow who is a subscriber to Liahona, The Elders' Journal but not a member of our church, has asked this question: 'If I obey the gospel by baptism, and conform my life to the rules and requirements of the church, can I go to the Temple and be sealed to my husband, who died without a knowledge of the gospel; and can I have our children adopted to us, although they are not members of the church and do not now wish to join it, yet are willing to go with me to the Temple for that purpose?' I told the lady that it could not be, yet some of our elders have assured her that it is permissible. She seems very anxious to have this work done, and I would be pleased to have you answer this in the Liahona.

"Your brother,

"J. R. Y., Fruitland, N. M."

This widow is considering matters that vitally concern her welfare and happiness in the world to come; and because there are many persons among our readers who desire light relative to those matters, we will try to briefly answer the above inquiry.

This widow may become a member of our church by declaring her faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and his gospel, repenting of her sins, being baptized by immersion in water for the remission of her sins, and receiving the laying on of hands for the bestowal of the Holy Ghost. Thereafter she should become a member of a ward in a stake of Zion, and for a sufficient length of time should so conduct herself as to win the confidence of her presiding officers. She will then be given permission to go to the Temple. There she may arrange with some brother to represent her husband who is in the spirit world, in the necessary ordinances, including baptism and marriage for eternity, commonly called sealing. If her children are under eight years of age she may take them with her and have them united to her and their dead father for eternity by the ordinances of adoption, for little children are citizens of the kingdom of God and are entitled to enter his holy house without baptism.

But if her children are over eight years of age they are accountable for their own acts, and must be baptized before they can be entitled to any of the blessings or privileges of that sacred place; and to be united to one's parents for eternity is one of the greatest privileges that can be obtained in mortal life. One of the reasons why the Saints make the sacrifices involved in baptism is to become worthy to receive their blessings in the house of the Lord. And shall persons who refuse to make those sacrifices be permitted to receive those blessings? Assuredly not. The blessings of the Temple are an important part of salvation, and if they can be obtained without baptism, why not abolish baptism entirely?

But this widow loves her children, and longs to have them united to her and their father by a bond that even death can not break. She longs to see her family circle established on an eternal foundation. It grieves her to think that her children can not go with her to the house of the Lord. What shall she do? She must do as the angels do, as our Father in heaven is doing; she must wait. She yearns to gather her children even as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings, so also does our Father in heaven yearn to gather his children in like manner.

But he waits for the slothful, the unbelieving, the wayward and even the wicked among his offspring to learn that the paths of sin or of skepticism are not the paths of happiness—to learn repentance by what they suffer. So must earthly parents. But as the Lord teaches, reprovves, and encourages his children to repent, so should earthly parents do likewise; and they should understand that they greatly increase their influence over their children by faithfully keeping the commandments of the Lord themselves.

From this we deduct, we think legitimately, that the people of Utah are teaching and practicing this marriage by proxy. It may be that they would disclaim occupying upon the privileges to the extent they used to do in such cases, but this appears to be treading dangerously near forbidden ground; and as President Woodruff's manifesto forbids the contracting of any marriage forbidden by the law of the land, would it not be well to think about this seriously? Does the law of the land forbid proxy marriages? If it does not positively forbid, it certainly does not recognize such marriages.

Our friends in Utah can not blame the public, if they, withdrawing into places sacred to themselves, where others are not permitted to enter, perform the same ordinances that they performed in former years, if the public suspect that the same practices will obtain.

When considering the instruction that has been given by the advocates of the plural wife system, regarding this very subject, suspicion must be aroused; for, according to the teaching of Orson Pratt, who has been called the great apostle of celestial marriage, it was expected that in cases of these proxy marriages they would live together in time as husband and wife, and deliver over their posterity to the principal in the resurrection. The following is his language:

But if, previously to marriage for eternity, a woman lose her husband by death and marry a second, and if her first husband was a good man, then it is the duty of her second husband to be married to her for all eternity, not for himself, but in the name of her deceased husband, while he, himself, can only be married to her for time; and he is obliged to enter into a covenant to deliver her up with all her children to her deceased husband in the morning of the first resurrection. In this case, the second husband would have no wife only for time, neither could he retain his children in the eternal worlds, for they, according to the law of heaven, would be given up to the wife and her first husband. Therefore, it would be the duty of the second husband to marry a second wife for time and eternity; for by marrying her for time, he could raise up an offspring which would bear up his name not only on the earth, but, with their mother, they would be legally his in the resurrection. The husband, in this case, must necessarily have two wives living at the same time, or else be deprived of a wife and family in the eternal state.

If a widower marry a widow, and each desires to have his or her former partner in the next world; then it is necessary that there should be three ceremonies of marriage: first, that which secures the widower to his deceased wife, second, that which secures the widow to her deceased husband, and third, that which constitutes the widower and widow husband and wife for time only. In this case, as in all others, the children in the resurrection go into the same family with the mother, the reason of this is, because the woman can only have a limited number of children here in this life, while the man, not being limited by the law of God to one wife, can have many children; therefore it is not according to the order of heaven, that the few children which a woman can have, should be taken from her, providing that she has a husband for eternity.—The Seer, September, 1853.

According to Brigham Young, there are several ways, or at least three ways, by which marriage could be consummated among that people. And though some of the rites and ceremonies hitherto practiced may have been abandoned on account of the pressure brought upon them by the Government, yet if his exegesis is correct, marriage could take place without any such ceremony, and be recognized as being valid among that people. Brigham Young, in making his last will and testament, makes use of the following explanation:

To avoid any question, the words married, or marriage, in the will shall be taken to have become consummate between man and woman, either by ceremony before a lawful magistrate, or according to the order of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, or by their cohabitation in conformity to our custom.

The third manner of consummating a marriage, according to Brigham Young, is governed only by their custom, and provides for no ceremony whatever.

Upon the whole, it looks rather suspicious to hear men of authority in the church teaching that a woman can choose another man to act as proxy for her husband in being sealed for eternity, and that in secret places where the public can not be permitted to enter, especially so when it is compared with past teachings, granting all the privileges of a real husband to a proxy during their lifetime.

If their marriages were performed according to the declaration concerning marriage in the first years of the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, as published in every edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants until 1876, (when it was removed to give place to the revelation on plural marriage,) which says, "According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies: therefore we believe, that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting, or feast, prepared for that purpose: and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder, or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority," no suspicion could attach that marriages were being consummated as Brigham Young says, without any ceremony, or that there was anything concealed when ceremonies were used.

HEMAN C. SMITH.

MAJESTIC THEATER, TORONTO, ONTARIO.

No doubt many readers of the HERALD, who have heard of the services in the Majestic Theater in past seasons, are anxious to hear how the work is progressing. This is our fifth season and we find the interest continues.

President R. C. Evans still packs the house, and, as in past seasons, many have been turned away. The crowd has now become a regular following. It can not be said they are coming out of curiosity. The curious stage is long since past. They are now seeking truth and knowledge; and as I listen to Bro. Evans' plain, logical arguments and powerful appeals to come back to Christ and the Bible, and then scan the vast audience before us, the awful solemnity of the event floods my mind as I realize no tongue can make clearer the gospel, no better chance can come to mankind, no excuse remains for the thousands who hear. It is salvation or condemnation.

Last season various denominations gave us opposition with preaching services in other theaters; but without effect. This winter preaching services have been abandoned and moving picture shows have been substituted; but still the old Jerusalem gospel wins its way. Still those genuine old Latter Day Saint sermons, which have so often been met with mob violence, now hold thousands of eager listeners.

Possibly I deserve censure for allowing my mind to wander away from the sermon, as I sit on the platform; but knowing Bro. Evans for over twenty years, and in that time being a witness of some of those incidents which make up that interesting book, his autobiography, I can not but compare the present with the past. Present in my memory is the excitement which prevailed around my mother's home, years ago, when Elder Evans and a load of Saints were furiously attacked. Some of the occupants of the rig were shot, the rig itself presenting a battered appearance. How different now, when I hear the hearty applause of thousands, and see the warm handshakes of the crowds as they surge through the wide corridors of the Majestic after having listened over two hours to a sermon on the Book of Mormon or on the subject, "Was Joseph Smith a prophet of God?"

Again, as I sit in our church services, I meditate on our present conditions. A fine, large, comfortable church filled with a lot of young men and women, bright and happy in the gospel, alive to every opportunity to help on the great effort, from the east, west, north, and south have the honest in heart come, until three branches have sprung up and about six hundred people call each other "brother" or "sister"; and the churches in which they meet are worth about twenty thousand dollars, with only a three thousand dollar debt remaining. How rapid has been our growth since Elder Evans commenced his work here some few years ago!

I had handed me, by an outsider, a clipping from the Evening Telegram of nearly thirty years ago giving an account of a reporter's search for "Mormons" in Toronto. After an all-day hunt he came across one, and fortunately it was a "Saint." He met one always willing, always capable of defending the work she loved. It was Sr. Thomas Hattey. Those who knew her, know how she could account for herself in defending the work. The reporter opened out upon her with ridicule and sarcasm; but the Spirit burned too strongly for her to retreat. Soon the reporter was sitting up, receiving information. From the interview we learn a branch had been organized and a small church built; but from one cause and another the work had become smaller until no regular services were being held. When an elder chanced through they had a meeting. But she expressed the splendid hope of better times in the future, which hope is now being realized.

As time passed on, Elder Evans and others came to the city, and did what they could to revive the work; but it was an uphill task. There was not a Saint in the city to give them a meal, Sr. Thomas Hattey having moved away. They had to walk out to the home of Sr. W. W. Ward, Toronto Junction, for meals, or go hungry. Only last night the same Sr. Ward and Bro. Evans were present at a ladies' auxiliary meeting, where they decided to purchase a privilege to run a restaurant at our great National Exhibition, to be held here in August and September, where they hope to feed thousands. Proceeds to apply on church debt.

Finally the field whitened for the harvest. Almost unnoticed the Saints were marshaled. Elder Evans came to the city. Then came the inspiration of a great work. The Majestic services opened upon us with greater proportions than the fondest hope ever anticipated. Almost swallowed up in it, the Saints have worked night and day for five years assisting President Evans, with the results before named. Over thirty thousand printed sermons have been given away and about eight hundred dollars' worth of church books sold.

President Evans preaches in the church every Sunday at eleven in the morning and Tuesday evenings, baptizing at almost every service, and so the work continues to grow in our city.

"EARTHQUAKES IN DIVERS PLACES."

Perhaps one of the most regrettable facts with relation to the above, in our times, is the tendency seen at times to enlarge upon the real facts in an effort to "make good" when arguing with relation to the particular "time" or "day" in which we live. An inflation of truth always lessens its force and in the end will prove a boomerang to the one who pursues such methods. Truth, no difference how small it may appear, yet has within its folds the seeds of right that will, in time, bear fruit.

There is a most interesting article in the February number of Munsey on "The so-called 'tidal waves' which follow great earthquakes," by Professor T. J. J. See. From this article we learn that the whole of the Peloponnesus was shaken by a terrible earthquake as early as 373 B. C. The Professor says:

Helike—"spacious Helike" as Homer described it—was the most important city in Achaia, and its obliteration from the sight of mortals naturally excited great wonder and astonishment among the Greek philosophers. Plato was then fifty-four years old, at the height of his intellectual powers, and at the head of the academy in Athens, while Aristotle was a boy eleven years old. Thoroughly as these wise men must have discussed the disaster, which long remained a subject of speculation among their followers and their successors, the awful fate of Helike continued to bewilder and perplex the wisest of the Athenian sages. Some ascribed the catastrophe to the wrath of the gods, because of the impious conduct of the people of the Achæan city; others assigned it to natural and necessary causes.

What HERALD writer or reader would be willing to-day to ascribe such fact to the gods of Grecian mythology, and yet is it not possible that we may be prone to ascribe to God that of which he is not guilty? Is it not more in harmony with reason and right to feel that when Jesus said that there should be "earthquakes in divers places" he uttered his knowledge of earth conditions? That he knew that as the earth reached nearer to the end of its existence there would be more of a "natural" tendency to belch forth its death-dealing power?

While I am a firm believer in the thought that these things are on the increase, yet I have no desire to reach conclusions relative to such matters that are wholly unwarranted and entirely out of harmony with the facts of history. To stand in the pulpit and declaim as though these things were unknown in ancient times would but subject such an one to ridicule in the minds of such of his auditors as had a knowledge to the contrary. In the times of superstition and its concomitant ignorance, auditors might have been caught with such chaff.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, under the head of earthquakes, informs us that, the most complete of these statistical works is the catalogue raisonne compiled by R. Mallet and his son, Doctor J. W. Mallet. . . This includes notices of all recorded earthquakes from 1606 B. C. to 1842 A. D., and is thence carried on to 1850 from Perrey's annual catalogues. Between six and seven thousand separate earthquakes are recorded as having occurred in almost every part of the world, both on land and at sea.

As to the causes which produce an earthquake Professor See theorizes as follows:

The great depth and the enormous pressure of the sea water, with the aid of capillary forces, drive it through the rocky crust of the earth till it comes to the intensely hot strata some twenty miles below the surface. The earth is everywhere at high temperature inside, and steam is developed under the crust; when the pressure of the steam accumulates, it finally shakes the solid crust till it gets relief through some opening. We know how the lid of a teakettle on a stove becomes agitated and keeps on shaking till the steam escapes at the sides. The same thing happens when the waters of the ocean work down into the hot rock beneath the earth's crust; steam is developed, the rock slowly swells, and, finally, shakes the crust above to get more space—which is usually effected by the expulsion of lava at the edges of the sea.

This theory is here presented upon the basis of theory alone and with the thought that it has no significance beyond theory alone. From a theoretical standpoint it perhaps offers as good a reason for an earthquake as can be given from such standpoint. The great heat of the Comstock lode of course is basis for the theory of the intense heat of the earth's interior, and water percolation is so common that the theory of the professor seems to be a feasible one, after all. That so percolating the friction between the heat and the water would produce steam goes without saying, and the great pressure of steam is too well known to need any manner of argument, so that after all it seems a rational theory.

The following tabulation is from newspaper sources entire and is given as a matter of interest in showing the increase and how measurably it is so with relation to our own time. It is well to consider that there is a wonderful development and there are more scientific methods of determining what we are yet willing to call a phenomenon than has heretofore existed. Yet withal I am in the faith that these phenomena are on the increase and betoken the near approach of the coming of our Lord. The main reason, if a reason need be sought, for so writing, is to seek to allay what to me is the irrational method of proclaiming that such phenomena belong exclusively to our day, for they do not.

In the above I have left out several of the lesser ones from the table from which the copy is made. The Chicago Tribune, in giving a list of the more destructive ones in its issue of December 29, 1908, gives one in Japan as amounting to two hundred thousand and one in India as the same, as I now remember it. These figures may be to an extent estimates and in many instances doubtless are. At any rate it is best to keep a cool head and make only conservative statements concerning such matters, as in all other things. It is a notable trait of an enthusiast to exaggerate, and that we can not afford to do. Stick to the truth even though our assertion of it comes to naught, in the minds of men.

It is only a wild enthusiasm that undertakes to prove its position by wild statement. Truth is safe and can always be relied upon and anything that has to be demonstrated by exaggeration had better be left as being unworthy our notice.

"Only Jim."

"Oh, Aunt Ellen, is it really you? Well, this is a surprise, and you don't know how glad I am to see you," exclaimed Gertrude as she opened the door. "Do come right in. You must excuse the way I look," she continued apologetically as she glanced down at her torn wrapper; "I've been house-cleaning this afternoon, and I thought I wouldn't dress for supper, as long as there'd be only Jim. We'll come right up-stairs, and you can rest while I make myself respectable."

The elder lady followed her up-stairs to a pretty, daintily furnished room.

"There," exclaimed the young wife, as she sat down her guest's umbrella and valise, "this is my guest room. How do you like it?"

Her aunt surveyed the room approvingly.

"Very nice indeed," was her comment. "The pink paper is lovely, and those ruffled curtains are as pretty as can be. That's just what I like, a nice easy chair and footstool, and I'm so tired I'll try it right away."

"I have a number of my wedding presents in here," continued the younger woman. "Jim's grandmother gave me the hemstitched sheets and pillow cases and shams. That Madonna over the bed I guess you remember. Lucy Wheeler gave it to me. Those etchings were presents too, and Uncle John gave me the rocker. Jim bought the chiffonier last spring, and I made the scarf and the pink pin-cushion. His sister embroidered that apple-blossom pillow for me; she does such lovely work. Now I'll go dress, and you rest till supper time, for there's an hour yet."

An hour later they sat at the supper table, at which Gertrude, in a pretty sprigged lawn dress, presided. The beef-steak was done to a turn, the biscuits were delicately browned, the cutglass dish of peaches was flanked by a pitcher of rich cream. In the center of the table stood a low bowl of pink and white sweet peas, harmonizing with the delicate china.

Jim, as he took his place at the head of the table, glanced at his wife with mingled surprise and approbation.

"How pretty you look in that dress, Gertie, with your hair all fluffy. I always liked that blue dress, and what a fine supper you've gotten for us, hasn't she, Aunt Ellen?"

His wife flushed with pleasure at the unwonted praise.

"I thought I would get out all my nice china and best tablecloth in honor of auntie," she explained, "and I found just a few blossoms on the sweet peas for a centerpiece. I haven't had this china out for a good while. You see there's only Jim and the children at supper, so it really isn't worth while."

After the meal was over, the dishes washed, and the two children in bed, the aunt and niece sat together on the porch, while Jim excused himself to go to the post-office for the mail.

"Before I go to bed, Gertie," said her aunt, "I'm going to get you to play something for me. I always liked your playing. Don't you remember how I did?"

Gertrude shook her head. "Oh, I can't play a tune through now," she admitted reluctantly; "I don't really have time for my music. I'm sorry, too, for Jim's real fond of music, but somehow I've gotten my hand out, so I rarely touch the piano now. You see I have so much sewing to do for the children, and the housework, so the time goes."

The week of Aunt Ellen's stay passed rapidly, and the day before her departure she sat upon the piazza assisting her niece in the task of darning stockings.

"Well, Gertrude," observed the elder lady, as she critically examined a well-worn heel, "you seem to be pretty well fixed. Jim is a fine fellow, the children are real good, and you've got a nice, cosy little home."

There was no reply, and she was surprised to see a tear trickle down the young wife's face, and fall upon the blue sock she was mending.

"Why, what's the matter, child? Has anything gone wrong?"

"Oh, nothing," replied the niece hastily, as she wiped her eyes. "It's only, well—I've a good notion to tell you all about it. I never meant to tell a living soul, but I'm not happy, though I suppose I ought to be."

"Why, what's the trouble, little girl?"

Gertrude bent lower over her work.

"Well, auntie, I've always said I hated a jealous wife, and I know Jim loves me better than any one else. But he doesn't seem to care about staying home any more, and lots of times he goes over to the Deanes to spend the evening. I can't go for I can't leave the children alone in the house. But sometimes I sit here, and I hear Mrs. Deane playing the piano, and Jim singing, and it just hurts me terribly. There," she said with a little catch in her voice, "I didn't mean to tell any one, for it doesn't seem loyal to Jim. He's real good to me, and gets me everything he can afford, but I guess I'm getting old and faded." She wiped her eyes, and took up the blue sock again.

"I don't see why you should feel badly about his going out in the evenings," replied her aunt calmly, "as long as it's only Jim."

Gertrude dropped the ball of darning cotton in her surprise.

"Why, what do you mean?" she asked, astonished.

"My dear child," replied her aunt kindly, "during the week I have been here, I don't know how many times I have heard you use the expression, 'Only Jim.' You didn't always trouble to make yourself pretty for supper, because there was only Jim. You didn't take particular pains about setting the table attractively, because it was only for Jim. I noticed that while the guest room was really artistic, yours was plain and unattractive, because it was only for Jim. My dear girl," she continued, "Jim is the dearest one on earth to you, and the most important. I can remember when he used to come and call on you before you were married, how you used to fix yourself up for him, and look so pretty and sweet when he came to call. Now you are just as good looking as you ever were, only you just want to cultivate a little of the care you used to take of your personal appearance. I know it makes a difference when you are doing your own work, but Jim would be delighted if you would always take pains to look fresh and dainty when he came home.

"Don't wear wrappers to do your work in; they are for invalids. A shirt waist and washable skirt are much neater and trimmer. Then about your music. I can remember how you used to play for Jim to sing, and how he enjoyed it. Take up your music again, even if it is only for ten minutes a day, and you'll soon be able to play his accompaniments again. Maybe it seems odd to you to hear an old maid like me giving advice about husbands, but I have lived a good bit longer than you, my dear, and I've used my powers of observation. A great deal of this world's happiness is based on trifles, or what appear to be trifles. Now," she concluded, "I think I've preached enough, but I think if you take my advice, you'll be happier."

Gertrude threaded a needle meditatively.

"Well," she said, after a moment's reflection, "I believe you are right, auntie. I have felt as if as long as I was Jim's wife, and he loved me, it didn't make any particular difference. So I wasn't always particular about fixing myself up when he came home from the store. But I'll try your plan, and I'll take up my music. I love Jim dearly, and I didn't want to feel that he was growing away from me."

As her aunt left on the following morning, Gertrude bade her an affectionate good-bye.

"I'm so glad you came, auntie," she said, "for you don't know how I've enjoyed your visit."

"Yes, indeed," corroborated her husband. "Gertie has looked ten years younger since you've been here. I suppose it is rather dull for her here with just me and the children."

As the stage drove away, Gertrude turned to her husband, and slipped her hand in his.

"Don't say 'only me, dear,'" she said, "for don't you know that you are the one person in the world to me? I know I've gotten careless and haven't taken pains as I should, but I'm going to do better, for 'only Jim' is all the world to me."—New York Observer.

"We should obey the Golden Rule."

Letter Department

BELVIDERE, Illinois, January 7, 1909.

Saints' Herald: Ever since visiting the British Isles last summer I have felt like writing to your valuable paper of things observed while there that might be of interest to your many readers. Bro. William Lewis told you all about our getting over there, so I will begin at Liverpool. After taking leave of the Saints that were not going our way, Brn. James Baillie, J. W. Rushton, and the writer set out for the station to find out about our trains. It being Sunday, there was no train for Scotland till after twelve o'clock. Bro. J. W. Rushton got away in the evening, so Bro. Baillie and I had to wait. On taking a walk down to one of the public squares, in Liverpool, we found seven men and one woman preaching the gospel of Jesus Christ, as they supposed, telling the people what to do to be saved, and asking Jesus Christ to come to their terms, despite the good book telling us all what we must do to gain eternal life. But how can they hear without a preacher? and how can he preach except he be sent? I looked upon the crowds of people as desirous of food, but had nothing to satisfy their hunger. I wondered how many would believe and obey the true gospel plan and get spiritual food for their souls, if they had it preached to them by one in authority.

Leaving Liverpool after midnight, we were in Glasgow next morning, and Hamilton that same day, and found a few scattered Saints, with whom I sorrow, owing to some trouble coming among them, almost breaking up their organization. And, as trade is poor, and all are working people, they have hard work keeping up a meeting-house. But I do pray that the Lord will bless them with the light and knowledge and prosperity that they need to carry out his divine will in that part of his vineyard.

Next day I went to Bathgate and had a very pleasant visit with my friends, and mother eighty years of age, after twenty years in America. We had some very close talks about the Bible and what Jesus Christ taught while on earth. They seemed to be quite well aware of the teaching of that age of the world, but did not suppose they could have that kind of teaching now, and had taken for granted the ways they had were all right; but anyway I believe the little talks made an impression on some minds at least; for I got three homes desirous to read Zion's Ensign, so I sent it to them for one year, fondly hoping it may carry some good tidings to them, and may be the means of opening up the way for better results.

Bro. James Baillie and I were thinking that a tent for Scotland, with two men who liked tent-work, would be a good thing to represent the church in that land. Also, I saw a gospel wagon which looked very convenient for getting it before the people and for the elders getting from place to place. One horse would do very well with a light, covered wagon, for the roads are generally good, only when the frost is coming out in the spring. But as to the expense of purchasing and keeping up, that is another consideration. I would like to hear from some one of more experience than I have, as to expense of either. It looks to me that some means of conveyance, at about the same rate of expense, would enable them to reach more places in the same year, when going through little villages, as in many they could preach from the wagon. Now this is only expressing my views of what could be done, to those who are desirous of getting the restored gospel before the people of that country, until they take hold and carry the work along themselves. I am willing to support whatever the church sets apart for that land, as far as I reasonably can.

Leaving Scotland, I went to England, and Cardiff, Wales, where I met with a fine, lively conference of Saints, who are doing all they can to reach the people and forward this great latter-day gospel, and was much blessed by being there.

Leaving Cardiff, I went to Accrington and stayed a week with a brother and sister-in-law. While there I went to church with them and heard their preacher tell us a great deal about Jesus Christ and his apostles, and the many great blessings that people received at their hands in those days, giving us a good discourse; but about the finish he spoiled the whole thing by telling us we could not have them now. I told my friends that was where he and I differed. I told them we could have the same gifts and blessings, if we would live up to the same conditions they did, and sent them the Ensign to help them come to the truthfulness of that statement. My sister-in-law wishes to investigate this work; and I hope the Lord will give her light and knowledge that she may obey the truth.

Ever praying that the Lord may give each one of us the Comforter to lead and guide us through this life, and, finally, save us in the celestial kingdom.

Your brother in Christ,

R. F. D. 3, Box 52.

SPRINGFIELD, Oregon, February 10, 1909.

Dear Herald: This is a part of the country where the gospel has never been preached. I have been doing all I can to warn my neighbors, and to get the gospel before the people. Some are quite interested. And I think if an elder were to come here and do some preaching in the near future, good could be done; but the enemy is at work doing all he can to destroy the truth the people have learned, and believe. My daily prayer is that he may not be successful in his effort. Oh, why will the preachers of the different creeds try to destroy the teaching of the Scriptures? Are they ignorant of the true gospel, or are they willfully blind to it? Looks to me that some would rather believe an error than the truth. But we are told in 2 Timothy 4: 4, that they turn away their ears from the truth. And so they do. I am alone on this part of God's footstool, with the exception of Sr. Bush, who lives three doors from me, and Sr. Adams, at Eugene; and, dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers that I may ever be steadfast in the faith that was once delivered to the saints; and ever be ready to give an answer for the hope I have.

I have taken the HERALD and Glad Tidings for several years, and Zion's Ensign for a few months; and, what joy and comfort and gladness is mine, when I read the letters from the dear Saints all over the land! And the sermons, what a help they are to me as well as to others who are interested! And the "Mothers' Home Column," what a help it is to me! It helps me to study my little seven-year-old boy's disposition and teach him right. I believe if every Latter Day Saint mother would read and study the "Mothers' Home Column," she would learn how to govern herself as well as teach those little buds of promise the way they should go. This is the first time I have written a letter to the HERALD; so I had best stop as it is quite lengthy. Ever praying for the advancement of this glorious cause, I remain,

Your sister in the one cause,

FLORA CRAWFORD.

MCKENZIE, Alabama, February 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I have written to your columns. I often enjoy reading the letters and sermons from the brethren and sisters. I hardly know how I could get along without it. It is encouraging to me. It makes me feel like the good work is still rolling on. And, dear Saints, I surely do believe that this is the true work of God. And my desire is to live more faithfully every day, and try to live worthy of the blessings the Lord has promised to his people if they would keep his commandments. My patriarchal blessing says that to every one that maketh the covenant to work righteousness, the promise is that the Savior will manifest himself; that he and the Father will come and abide with those that serve him.

Dear Saints, we all know the time is coming when we must lay this earthly body down, and must give an account of our sins, and be judged according to our deeds. Let us all try to live to meet that time when it comes. For we know not when the time shall come. So let us not be like sheep, without a shepherd, scattered here and yonder. Let us have our lamps trimmed and burning; and when Zion shall be redeemed, let us all be prepared to meet with the righteous ones.

I want all the Saints to pray for my husband and myself that we may come near to the Lord.

Oh, may thy Spirit guide our feet,
In ways of righteousness;
Make every path of duty straight,
And plain before our face.

Oh, may we see that glorious day,
And join with all the blest,
To sing aloud the Savior's praise,
And enter into rest.

Dear Saints, let us all try to live near to the Master. I trust that the Saints of Pleasant Hill Branch will have a nice conference, just three weeks from now, and that the Lord will be with us all. May God bless his people everywhere. I send my love to all. Your sister in the one faith,
MRS. KATIE BOOKER.

PILOT KNOB, Indiana, January 27, 1909.

Dear Herald: We came here on the 25th of this month and are going to hold meetings in the union church. We have held one meeting in Bro. Zahnd's house; there was a good crowd out. My father, William Dowker, is with me at present. There is much work to be done, but the laborers are few. My health has been poor and it seems that the climate does not agree with me. I have catarrh very bad. It has hindered me a great deal in my work. There are many noble Saints in this district, and there are some who do not take very much interest in the work. In September we held a series of meetings in New Albany, and at the close baptized three. Since then father baptized two at that place. We held a very successful series of meetings at Byrnsville. There were two baptized while there, and we feel that the Saints are feeling better spiritually, and that the officers are working in unity to care for the flock intrusted to their care. I believe that the greatest need of the work is to have branch officers that are alive to their duty. In order for us to have spiritual life abiding in us, we must be just as diligent in our service and worship to God as we are in the affairs of life. I have felt blessed in standing in defense of the glorious work. We find that many of the Saints in this district are negligent in regard to their duty in a financial way. Some we find do not understand the financial law of the church. We have tried to teach them the best we could. There are some who are trying to obey this part of the law, and some have the idea in their minds that the elders preach without any money, and they put the idea into practice. I wish to say to the Saints in the district that I have not been able to see, that I have tried to get to all the branches, and before the conference year is over that we will meet with them all if possible. We are kindly cared for by Bro. Christian Zahnd and his hospitable companion. Through Bro. Zahnd's efforts we have obtained the use of the union church. He desires to have his neighbors and friends named.

I love to read the good articles and letters in the HERALD and Ensign, and I try to get the people to subscribe for them. Many places that we go they have none of the church papers to read, consequently do not know what is going on in the different parts of the church, and they miss the good instruction that one gets by reading them. The work seems onward in many parts, and the calls for preaching are more than we can fill.

Asking that the Saints remember us in their prayers, I am,

Yours in bonds,

DAVID E. DOWKER.

Editors Herald: In reading the HERALD I noticed an account of a debate held in Tennessee. I fail to find any of the sermons or tracts advocating "false" doctrines. There is enough in "Future punishment," "Faulty creeds," etc., to for ever silence any denomination on earth. The Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Holy Scriptures are very explicit and plain on the subject of man's destiny, and there is no need for us to apologize before any Tom, Dick, or Harry that may pass along spoiling for debate. The subject of baptism and authority will choke most of them without them trying to unveil the mysteries of God on subjects that even the Saints would be hopelessly enmeshed were it not for divine revelation.

Universalism, expressed in brief, is a belief in the final holiness and happiness of the whole human family and the ultimate pardon of the same. I see nothing unlovely, devilish, or heretical in such belief, and am sure that if practiced more among men the bulk of human suffering caused by man's inhumanity to man would cease. It is a million times more godly than Calvinism. There is still too much of that spirit among the Saints. Its horrible fangs are slow to loose from the traditions of men.

This sort of fear toward God never saved men. It is a doctrine of hate, spite, malice, vengeance, and evil. The world in its lost and carnal and devilish state is the result of this very spirit of evil. The queer part of it is that it invents all the tortures imaginable to punish man, still man will strive to be happy even if unholy. The murderer under life sentence will not long pine or fret. He will be happy. All outlaws are happy in a degree. The sinful world is happy in its folly and pleasure. Satan is happy in his sphere, and he rejoices in the high carnival of abandon helped on by Calvinism. God, like his creation, nature, is a constructor, —repairs, builds up, corrects, rectifies, replenishes, reforms, heals, etc. Punishment is the effect of transgression. Nature at once brings the forces into action that heal. I also "abhor, despise, denounce, and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment and unconditional election." I certainly believe that "Christ was manifest in the world to destroy the work of the Devil, to destroy death, to rescue all from the grave, to enlighten humanity, or save the lost, to redeem the fallen, and finally restore perfect harmony in all God's vast universe."

CRESCENT CITY, Iowa, January 27, 1909.

Dear Herald: You are a welcome visitor at our home, as you come every week bringing glad tidings of how the gospel is winning its way, and bringing good news from far and near, with joy and hope, and encouragement for all.

Dear Saints, I rejoice with you in this latter-day work, and every day my faith grows stronger, and I truly have many reasons to feel thankful to my heavenly Father for the blessings he has given me from time to time. He has seen fit to let me pass through great afflictions and sufferings;

but through them my heart has been drawn nearer to God, and I can truly say with Job of old, I know my Redeemer liveth, and that he hears and answers the prayers of his trusting children.

Last summer I was laid on a bed of affliction about three months. I know what it is to come down close to the valley of the shadow of death, and know it was beyond all human power to have saved my life. One day my heart was so bad it seemed like my breath was lost. My husband was alone with me. I asked to be administered to, but thought I would be gone before he could get the elders here, when suddenly in walked Bro. W. M. Self, one of the missionaries. I was filled with joy, and told him surely the Lord must have sent him, as we did not know he was anywhere around, and he came just in the hour of need. He administered at once, but had to repeat it several times before I got relief. I was soon breathing freely again, and was much better; but for some reason the Lord let these spells return several times, and I felt my faith was sorely tried, and my suffering hard to endure. Several elders were finally called to administer, and I requested the branch here to fast and pray, and hold a prayer-meeting in my behalf; and my affliction was finally rebuked, under the administration of the elders, and I can truly say I was raised up by the power of God; and, though very weak, I was permitted to attend the reunion held at Council Bluffs, where I was greatly benefited, both in spirit and in body. And, for these blessings, I truly feel thankful to my heavenly Father.

I was not afraid to meet death, but I did not feel that my work here below was finished; and for my children's sake I desired to live longer, if it was God's will. I trust I may be able to spend the remainder of my days in his service. Hoping these few lines may encourage other suffering ones to have faith in God, and trust in him, in the hour of danger. Dear Saints, let us live near to God, and he will be near to us, and his loving watchcare will be over us at all times. And may the peace and blessing of God be with his people, is the prayer of

Your sister in gospel bonds,

CHRISTINA RASMUSSEN.

FANSHAW, Oklahoma, January 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: Another year has passed and gone, with all its sorrows and pleasures. Yes, dear Saints, we have passed another mile-post on life's road, and that means we are one year nearer the end. And while last year was passing it brought death and sorrow to all countries, which is common to all men; and earthquakes, and famines, and pestilence is the order of the day, and are like the finger on the sign-board pointing to the great day that is so close, the coming of our Savior back to this earth to reign a thousand bright years.

I returned from Tennessee and Kentucky in December to spend the holidays with my dear little family. I found the work moving along very well in my town, Wilburton. The branch is under the management of Bro. J. P. Brannon, who is doing all he can for the upbuilding of the gospel. We have a fine Sunday-school conducted by Bro. A. Z. Rudd. Bro. Rudd is indeed a noble Sunday-school man.

After being introduced to work in Oklahoma this winter, I preached a few times at Haileyville to some noble Saints, who have struggled very hard to build them a church to worship in; and they have got a good house, about completed. I preached some at Wilburton, and then came to Fanshaw, where I baptized the first people ever baptized at this place, about six years ago; and now we have a body of about thirty fine Saints. I have held a week here, had a fine meeting, baptized three fine young men, and a noble daughter of Bro. C. E. Gasses. Two others gave their names for baptism. While at home I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. I. N.

White and his wife. They spent a few days in Wilburton. Bro. White preached six sermons for us, and time only will tell the great good that his preaching did. Saints were built up in the faith of the gospel, and sinners were made to feel the great judgment that awaited them, if they did not repent.

I will go from here to Southeastern Oklahoma, and labor the rest of the winter. I have been anticipating attending General Conference at Lamoni this spring, inasmuch as I never had the pleasure of visiting that place; but learning of the financial condition of the church, I have come to the conclusion it will be best not to go. I think the time is here that we ought to use all the economy we can. Indeed the field is ripe to harvest, and the laborers are few; so, missionary brethren, if fifty of us remain in the field and save twenty-five dollars apiece to the church treasury, that would be twelve hundred and fifty dollars, which would keep three or four men in the field, and I know there never has been in this country, since I have been in the church, such a demand for preaching, I hope and pray that the Lord will bless all of his servants this year abundantly with his Spirit, to do a good work. Every year I labor in this church I receive new evidence of the divinity of this great latter-day work. I know that Jesus Christ is soon to come to the pure in heart, and it is my daily prayer that I may be ready to meet him in peace when he comes. So may the Lord bless the HERALD this year, to go to multiplied thousands, to carry the gospel news.

Your brother in the great work,

E. A. ERWIN.

WALLACE, Alabama, January 31, 1909.

Editor Herald: While sitting this Sabbath evening, studying upon this glorious cause, I thought I would write you a few lines. I have been a member of the true church of Christ twenty-seven years, and do not regret a moment of the time that I have been in this glorious cause. I know that I am engaged in a work calculated to save the human family, if they will keep the commandments of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. My husband is a Latter Day Saint elder. He has been an elder for eleven or twelve years. We have eight children, and five of them are members of the church. I ask the Saints to pray that I may always be ready to do the Lord's work.

I take the HERALD, and enjoy reading it so much. Where I live now there is no church; but husband and I hold family prayer every night; and every Sunday morning, we hold prayer and read a chapter out of the Bible, and I have my four boys give me a verse out of the Bible, trying to lead them along the best I can; and so I desire the prayers of all the Saints, that God may strengthen me in the faith of our Lord Jesus. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your sister in Christ,

ELIZABETH BOOKER.

Dear Herald: I ask a little space in your precious columns, precious I say, because they are full of precious truth. Through the HERALD is the only way the isolated ones have of bearing testimony to one another, although we can bear testimony to the world by our upright, honest lives. We should live worthy the name of saint, whether we are isolated or not. We are all liable to make mistakes. I have made many; but do not think I ever sinned willfully. My mistakes are mostly through lack of wisdom, yet if I never made any mistakes, I might get the so-called swell-head, and that would be a bad mistake. It is a good thing to look for our own mistakes and not for our neighbors' or brothers' and sisters'; for if we get in such a condition that we make mistakes and can not see them, but can see everybody else's, we are in a sad condition.

We may see our brothers' or sisters' faults. Then what should we do? Not go to them like a volcano ready to explode, nor go and tell it to every one else, except the erring one; but if we have charity, which is the pure love of Christ, we will go in the spirit of meekness and love and try to persuade the one in error to turn and do right; and, oh, how often might a lot of trouble be avoided, if we would always do that.

I was alone in the work here; but now there is another; for Elder William Dowker was here last fall and preached to a congregation of two besides ourselves, a man and wife. The wife was baptized, so the effort was not in vain. And I think she will prove to be of the right kind. We are living in our own house now, and if any of the elders have time, they are welcome this way.

Your sister in bonds,

MRS. E. MAXWELL.

VICTOR, Idaho, January 20, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have had many dreams that I felt meant a great deal. I shall relate one I dreamed last night. I dreamed I was at a Brighamite meeting. The house was crowded, and there were some of their biggest guns there, and they all had a say. I listened very attentively, and meeting dismissed, and they were all moving towards the door. They stopped in front of me, and one of them said, "Well, are you ready, now, to be baptized?" I said, "I have been baptized, and by one who had power and authority from on high to perform the sacred ordinance. Your book and ours says, 'One God, one faith, one baptism,' and you are not carrying the banner of Christ; for in that banner is sunken in letters of gold, 'Obey my laws, and keep my commandments.'" He says, "Child's play," and passed on.

My husband, myself, and four of our children were baptized by Brn. J. H. and S. D. Condit. I will close for this time, hoping that we will endure faithful.

Your sister in the covenant of peace,

MRS. R. DRAKE.

LEXINGTON, Tennessee, January 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to inform the many readers of the HERALD that the Saints of the Liberty Hill Branch are still alive. We are not gaining members as fast as some; but the interest among the Saints is better than it has been for some time. We have a splendid Sunday-school, for a country school; also prayer-meeting once a week, preaching from one to three times a month, sacrament-service once a month. While I was at Lexington the other day, I got in conversation with a man who is proprietor of the Henson Springs Hotel, a very wealthy old gentleman, and a fine man. I had never met him before, so he said to me, "I suppose you belong to the Mormon church." I told him we belonged to the Reorganized Church. "Well," he said, "I do too." I asked him who baptized him, and he said, "A fellow by the name of Condon." Well, I could not recognize the name, so we did not have much time to talk, and we parted. I got to studying over the matter, and thought if they were Saints they ought to be members of our branch. So I went over there to-day, and the old gentleman was not at home; but I found his wife to be as fine a woman as he was a man. She asked me into the house, and after a few preliminary remarks I told her my business, and, behold, she told me that they were members of the Utah church. So I was very much disappointed. Nevertheless, she proved to be a perfect lady, and said she did not believe in the doctrine of polygamy, nor the Adam-god doctrine. She said she had never heard of Adam-god before, and seemed to doubt that being a fact. I told her that it was a matter of history, and that from their own publications. She said the doctrine could not be true, for God made Adam in his own image. So she promised me she would investigate our claims. I asked her how they got the idea of anybody being a legal successor to the martyred prophet but his son. She did not seem to understand much about that. When I left, she invited me and my wife to come and stay all day with them, which I promised to do; for I am of the opinion that if the proper efforts are made they may be led into the true light of the gospel. So may the Lord bless his people everywhere, is my humble prayer.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
U. S. GOWER.

BERLIN, North Dakota, January 28, 1909.

Dear Saints: I will send a vision or dream given me, and it may be some one will be able to interpret it; and I will pray that I may receive light upon it. Dear Saints, I have been blessed again by the power of God. A sickness came upon me that struck me blind. I understood that my life was to be taken, but in following God's commands, the elders came, and I was healed. Elder Wildermuth, of Fargo, administered to me. This is not the first time I have seen healing. No, indeed. Always myself and family have received this help. And at another time God spoke to me through prophecy by Elder William Sparling. How precious was that knowledge given. It has been a blessing ever since. I have been shown many things in vision and dreams.

The Methodist revival has been running about eight weeks. Our home is close to the church, so we have attended most of the meetings. I have been troubled to know what position they stand in before God; for some of them seem innocent and earnest. In one sermon the preacher said Paul did not teach baptism, and said he did not know whether Paul was baptized or not. When I quoted to him where, he told me to keep still; that, too, after giving the privilege of correction if he made a mistake. And in taking his text, "Ye must be born again," he said water was mentioned, but had nothing to do with saving one; then he quoted one writer calling water-baptism a heathenish idea. Last night the people who did not go to the mourners' bench were called the old [unprintable term] in several statements, saying it more than once, while the members were in front, moaning, groaning, weeping, and writhing in agony. My eyes seemed to open, and I thought, It is the very picture of the hell they are always preaching about. Certainly it did not represent the Spirit of God. They have been challenged to meet the Latter Day Saints, but they refuse, yet they denounce us from the pulpit. However, God's Spirit is moving here, and a few have been gathered in. Let me state right here, I would rather my children would be in the world than in the Methodist Church. Many here are asking for Brn. William Sparling and Wildermuth. John Young has always given his beautiful hall to us to hold services in. Christ said, when a cup of cold water was given to one of these "my brethren," the giver should not lose his reward. How eagerly I await our dear HERALD each week! I always look at the letters first, hoping to see familiar names. God grant a harvest-time such as has not been known. Ever praying for the progress of the faith, I am,

Your sister in Christ,
MRS. ANNETTIE HEISZLER.

A DREAM.

I seemed to be in a small country dwelling with a few others, but did not recognize any of them. When we went out into the yard, a little girl all in white came to me and said, "I have something to tell you"; but it seemed the presence of others was a hindrance to her privacy. The others appeared dark and in dark clothes. Again the bright child spoke, "I have something to tell you." At that time the dark figures went out on the road, walking away, the child following them. Back of the house was a long pasture, with a few trees and cows in it. I said to myself, I will go out in here and maybe she will run away from them and tell me, when suddenly I seemed to be struggling with a large, red, and angry beast. Putting my strength against his, he seemed unable to hurt me, although putting all his force against mine. I finally seemed to have a rope about him, which wound about a beam of a barn, drawing him with great strength up against it, fastening him there. And in shutting the door it took all my strength, as it seemed that although the beast was fastened his power came against the door.

What did the white and pale child want to tell me? I pray God to give me the interpretation. And what was the meaning of the beast?

ANNETTIE HEISZLER.

BENTONSPORT, Iowa, January 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: As it is raining to-day, I thought I would write a few lines for the HERALD, thinking perhaps some of the Saints would like to take advantage of an opportunity to get a home cheap. There is considerable property for sale very cheap, at Bentonsport, on one side of the Des Moines River, and also at Vernon on the south side of the river. Property can be bought for as many hundred dollars as it cost thousands to build. I bought a good frame house, with four good big rooms down-stairs and two up-stairs, and four lots, for one hundred and fifty dollars. I also bought another brick house two stories high with four rooms sixteen feet square on one lot for fifty dollars. There was another house with two lots with a good frame house in good repair, with five rooms, for two hundred and twenty-five dollars, that must have cost fifteen hundred or two thousand. And there are other properties for sale equally as cheap. Now, the reason for this state of affairs is, these are dead towns because there is no manufacturing of any kind here, on account of the mills and woolen factories burning down a few years ago; and, on account of property being so cheap, old soldiers took advantage of the cheapness of the property to buy them homes, and live on their pensions, and consequently were not interested in enterprise. But if a good blacksmith and wagon-maker would locate here, they would do well, I think. The river will be dammed here before long, and then water-power can be rented for all kinds of purposes. I would like to see the Saints take advantage of this golden opportunity to get cheap homes, and make those towns flourish as of old, and build up a large branch of the church here. There are five members of the church here now, and if there were a branch of the church here, it could be increased to a good-sized branch by converting the residents, as there is quite a good many now who are favorable to the cause by chimney-corner talk.

Will you please insert this in the HERALD, and maybe there may be some who will take advantage of the opportunity.

J. E. SEWARD.

CLITHERALL, Minnesota, January 27, 1909.

Dear Herald: For some time I have been impressed to write a few lines for publication, thinking perhaps it might interest some of the readers of your valuable paper, which has always been freighted with so many good things, as well as keeping one in touch with the moving of the work. I have said that I have derived enough benefit just from one sermon to more than pay for the price of the paper, and I can not see how any one can afford to be without some of the church literature.

As to the advancement our little branch is making, I do not say; but there is one thing certain, I am able to see where a greater interest and awakening would bring better results, although am glad to note that along some lines advancement is discernible. Our branch has a membership of about one hundred and thirty members; but they are badly scattered, so that a small percentage have access to the benefits derived, by having church privileges; and to me it seems a loss spiritually. I have always believed that God requires action on the part of every one who has named the name of Christ, to be earnestly engaged in the work intrusted to all. Last Sunday, the writer had the pleasure of leading two precious souls down into the liquid wave and immerse them in the ice-cold waters, a hole having been cut for the purpose. They are Mr. Dahl Kimber and his faithful and devoted wife. Some years ago Bro. Kimber obeyed the gospel and for a while was a faithful member, but troubles came to him and made things appear to him that he could not live the religion he had embraced, and he requested that he be cut off the church, yet always testified that the work was true. After being out of the church a few years, he began to think seriously of his condition. Finally a stroke of palsy came on him, and he then made a covenant with God that if he would spare his life, he would again renew his covenant; and we rejoice that he has. So these two, and one by the name of Lona Albertson, make three this winter, which I believe will be a great help to our branch here.

Elder A. L. Whiteaker was here some time ago and gave us some very forceful and timely sermons along gospel lines, which did the Saints lots of good. Come again, brother. And also Bro. Leonard Houghton, who is with us since returning from his mission field in Dakota, has preached some excellent discourses, also preached the funeral-sermon of Rebecca Whiting, an aged lady of the Cutlerite faction. Her maiden name was Redfield, before she married Sylvester Whiting. He survives her. He is also a Cutlerite, joining the Cutlerite church at its first organization in Fremont County, Iowa, Alpheus Cutler being its founder. There is but a handful of them left, the main body already being absorbed into the Reorganized Church, with little Joseph its lawful leader, according to the promise of God through the priesthood. We would be glad to see them come into the true church, for they are good old people, and we believe honest in heart.

My being brought into the church has been the best part of my life. God has manifested to me, by the influence of his Holy Spirit, the truthfulness of this work, so my faith has been confirmed, and I can say, like thousands of others, that the work is true. Many have been the times when I have been under its blessed influence, that the tears have flowed from my eyes, being wrought upon by the sweet brooding of the Holy Spirit. Oh, my dearly beloved brethren and sisters, let us try to prove ourselves in such a manner before God, walking in truth and righteousness, until he shall say, It is enough. Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

Our reunion will occur about the 20th of June, at Clitherall; the exact date will be given later. We trust all the Saints that possibly can attend will make suitable arrangement in time to be on hand so that all may receive the full benefits of the reunion. Let all of us prepare ourselves by bringing the good Spirit with us; and if we do this the Lord will do his part, and we will be well paid for our sacrifices.

LURETT WHITING.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I last wrote you. Bro. J. C. Foss is still on the Lord's side, and he many times blesses poor unworthy me; and through myself and my brother elders he blesses others; for in our hands is the hiding of his power. On Tuesday morning, January 5, I was called out of bed by Doctor W. E. Messenger, a good doctor and brother in the faith of a better home to come, to go with him seven miles in the country to visit Bro. S. O. Waddell, whom we found in a very critical condition. A little while longer, as I told him, and he would have been carried away to the boneyard. Bro. Messenger told me to administer to him the first thing we did; for I find the good, spiritual-minded doctor invokes God's blessing on the medicine properties and treatment he gives to the people. The next day Bro. Waddell was able to ride to town seven miles, and for a few days was treated at his daughter's home, and is now back at his home feeling like a new man. I am pleased to know that the physicians of our church trust so largely in God to help them in their practice.

On Sunday, January 17, I attended several services, and preached morning and night to the Second Kansas City Branch. Our social meeting in the afternoon was a feast, for the Spirit was present.

Little Leona, daughter of Bro. and Sr. George O. Sherman, was suffering from spinal meningitis. Her pains caused her to give vent to her feelings, so much so that it disturbed the neighbors. The parents asked the Saints to fast and pray for the little sufferer of eleven years old. They had sent word to the dear Saints at Bevier to fast and pray for the child. They did so. I learned they had employed a specialist; but her father told me last Sunday that the medicine he gave her made her worse. Seven of the elders were called upon to administer to her at the close of the afternoon meeting. The elders were: Abner Lloyd, Francis A. Evans, J. J. Emmett, W. S. Brown, T. C. Lentill, B. Vanbrunt, and J. C. Foss. Elder Evans was called upon to anoint her with oil, and Bro. Foss was asked to be the spokesman. The Spirit of God was present in its heavenly, calm way. After administration I went with Elder Brown for supper, after which Sr. Brown and myself called at the house to see how she was before we went to church; and, to our joy and comfort, little Leona was up and dressed, and had eaten her supper. I saw her last Sunday, after fourteen days had passed away, and she said to me, "I'm all right." I told the Saints not to boast of what had been done; but give God the thanks for what he had done. Let us ever be true to our God, and firm in the faith of the risen Elder Brother, who is our intercessor at the right hand of his Father above.

I am yours for the power of God,

J. C. FOSS.

Trealaw, Rhondda, GLAMORGANSHIRE, Wales,
February 2, 1909.

President Joseph Smith: Having been appointed a missionary to Wales, I arrived here on the 8th of June, 1908. The work is at a very low ebb, yet I am pleased to notice an upward tendency. Several bright and promising young men have come into the church during these last few months, and the work generally speaking seems to assume a better aspect than it has for many years. We have reasons for believing that a brighter day is about to dawn. Avenues that were closed against us in years gone by are opening before us to-day, and in many localities the people are beginning to learn that a vast difference exists between us and the Utah church. This is indeed important, since it is the deadly poison of Brighamism that has killed the work in Wales.

There is, and has been for some time past, quite a religious disturbance throughout the country. Atheism, evolution in its different phases, New Theology, Old Theology, Unitarianism, etc., etc., in religious matters, and socialism, liberalism, toryism, in the political, keep the country in a regular turmoil. Everything seems to be in commotion. Such condition is indeed deplorable. Still it has its advantages; for, in this country, it unfolds a tendency towards free speech. It also creates a desire to investigate the different theories advanced by those who would better conditions of the world. The dissatisfaction that prevails offers us an opportunity to present the truth—the redeeming power revealed in the gospel. My prayer is that the honest in heart may be gathered out, and brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Trusting that you are still enjoying good health and every other beautiful blessing, and that the peace of the Spirit will always be yours to enjoy, and in an especial manner at our coming General Conference, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,
REES JENKINS.

LINEVILLE, Iowa, February 5, 1909.

Dear Herald: In reading your letters from different parts of this world, I thought I would try to write a few lines, as the Saints, in writing of their blessings, bring to mind things of the past. Less than one year ago, I was a slave to the cursed weed called tobacco, and had thought I could not stop the use of it. But in reading an article written by a brother, whose name I do not now remember, I resolved to try to break off the habit. So I made a promise to the Lord, if I could have my fever-sore healed by his help, I would stop the use of tobacco. And so I stopped the use of the weed, and my fever-sore is entirely well, and the craving for tobacco is gone. And I hope and trust that in time the Saints will all quit the habit, as purity and impurity can not abide together, and tobacco is impurity, and, in my estimation, among the worst.

I believe that the Lord has been merciful to his people, as in times of old; and what he requires of us is to strive to keep his commandments, and ask in faith, as his people did of old. And he is ever ready to help the faithful; and I hope and trust that we as a people may be ready and willing to do our duty.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
E. H. BAILEY.

LAMONT, Iowa, February 13, 1909.

Editors Herald: It has been a long time since I wrote to the HERALD. I take the HERALD and Ensign. I think they are real good preachers. I find lots of good truth in both of them. Dear Saints, I do not believe that it is right for any of us to rob God in tithes and offerings. I believe we should pay one tenth of all we have. We do not want any man to rob us of any money or land or anything else. Then why should we rob God, our best friend, who does cause us to rejoice in all kinds of blessings, both temporal and spiritual? Dear Saints, I love to see the good work of God go on. The Lord requires every servant of his to work in his vineyard, to improve on the talents he has given to us. If we do not improve on what he has given us, we can not expect to receive more. Let us be workers together with him.

Editors Herald: A visit to Leavenworth, Kansas, recently called our attention to numerous matters to us of great importance, among which I may mention, it is a large city, old and full of romance, located between two large stakes of Zion. And yet, in a six-week stay we found no Saints with whom to worship. A large percentage of the inhabitants are negroes, many Jews, Irish, Germans, Poles, and Americans; soldiers ready for duty, some three thousand, with a college where officers are taught in all the intricate tactics of modern warfare, as well as the largest riding hall in the United States, having a glass roof, a crematory, and waste water purifier, a sanitary convenience for the safety and welfare of the living. In this great military fort are six thousand acres of fine land, and yet the Government is buying more land to enlarge its domain.

The Federal prison and grounds comprise some three thousand acres more, beautiful land and buildings, where between seven hundred and eight hundred prisoners are confined. A high and solid wall is now built about the prison proper. Here I visited, having obtained a pass and permission of the warden, who, by the way, is very sociable and considerate.

It will pay any visitor to spend a day off, if convenient, to look through this vast and commodious prison, in all its equipments for the needs as well as the comforts of lawless men. This prison is just northwest of the city and southwest of the fort, which is three miles north of the county courthouse. The State prison is some five or six miles south of the city, at Lansing, where some thirteen hundred prisoners are confined, some three hundred of whom now never see daylight, as they go into the coal-mine before day and come forth after dark—all inside confinement. Here, too, is much and various kinds of labor carried on, and some very fine cabinet work, I should judge none better. Attention is paid to flower and plant industry, and you can pay ten cents, procure a pass and see all about, a guide directing, and if you have never seen inside such a place, by all means go.

I also visited the Soldiers' Home of the war of 1861-65, where three thousand four hundred are on roll. This, too, is a magnificent home for these old and tottering boys in blue, many of whom appreciate Uncle Sam's kindly consideration of the needs of these brave and willing soldier boys, who fought and bled and won the victory. But alas! too soon they will all have passed away.

I visited another home in the city, called the "Small Home," built for women only, by an estate of one man, Mr. Small, costing $20,000. This is furnished and supported by benefactions, and is modern and very homelike for some thirty-seven inmates at present. It is furnished with light and heat by natural gas, and has many other conveniences. A large library and reading-room, a chapel, hall, etc. But I was delighted with that Old Soldiers' Home. I must speak one more word concerning it. There is "Old Glory" always in the breeze. She floats high and free and bright and glorious indeed. There the squirrels play gayly about, as tame as kittens, and so many of them, too, and a beautiful lake around which the boys gather in summer and while away the leisure days and hours. Here, too, can be seen cannon whose voice may be heard in early morn to awaken them to prepare for rations. And say, you should see those big sixty-gallon potato pots, and coffee boilers of like dimensions! It is a big affair to pare potatoes or make hash even for one meal, but every boy has his turn once in a while, if able, all furnished free by happy Uncle Sam. Oh, I guess you make your own bed and look after your room, which is kept sweet and clean as a new pin.

Another strange and unique object I wish to mention ere I close this little article is this. I met Eli A. Smith, United States mail carrier, with his wonderful team of seven dogs and wolves, from the long trail of Nome, Alaska, to Washington, D. C., and New York, ten thousand miles distance, leaving that far city November 14, 1905, and arriving at Washington, February 20, 1907. Here is a statement from the President of the United States:

"The White House, WASHINGTON, February 20, 1907.

"Eli A. Smith, of Nome, with his dog team has just arrived here. Good luck to him! "THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Well, I saw Mr. Smith in Leavenworth last month on his way back, having been on a wager that he could drive his team that trip and arrive in New York City on or before May 14, 1908. One feature of the bet was that he should leave Nome entirely broke, take no articles of value on which money could be made, to earn his own way, and receive or accept of no charity, or, forfeit his wager. Mr. Smith is now on his return. I talked with him concerning this wonderful trip, and caressed some of his team. One dog called "Old Wolf" is particularly fond of little children—a fine large fellow, a full-blood. Eskimos say one thing these wolves detest is a man who drinks whisky. They have no use for a toper. They never bark, but make a fearful noise when they howl. Mr. Smith was often alone with his dogs all covered over in the cold snows of the great Northwest, with temperature at fifty and sixty below zero. He would make a hut out of blocks of snow sawed out of the packed, hard snow, then go in, dogs and all. He traveled as high as eighty miles a day, some days. He said he carried no gun, that he needed none, and that guns were dangerous things, and that his dogs would do anything he told them. He would sing to them and they loved his voice. His sled was made from the wreck of a whale-ship, made of tough hickory, some eight feet long by three feet wide, and two and one half feet high, with adjustable wheels for dry roads.

Mr. Smith was free to converse on some subjects, told me he was well acquainted with the Eskimos, said they believe in a Supreme Being and worship,—a pole being their object. They believe in the immortality of the soul, in the resurrection, and in the transmigration, and were very superstitious in many things. He also stated that in the farthest north the white man had yet been able to go, there are yet positive evidences of an open polar sea, and that it was his candid opinion it is inhabited by human beings, and that it would yet be reached and the mystery solved who lives there. One thing struck me forcibly in this peculiar outfit and that was, what men will undertake at the hazard of life for money and the sheer novelty of the thing, and then how little man will do for his soul's salvation, even when the opportunity is extended to him by the Creator himself. Surely man is vain, and the prince of the world presides. It would be better to be a good wolf than a bad man.

G. M. JAMISON.

ARGYLE, Michigan, January 30, 1909.

Dear Saints: We of the Long Branch, though few in number, are striving to let our light shine. We have Sunday-school at the writer's house; prayer-meeting following, and sometimes preaching-service. Then prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening from house to house, also Religio on Friday night, and it has not been stormy enough at any time yet to hinder us from meeting at the appointed time.

There are only three families of Saints here, now, with nine members in all, but a more faithful little band would be hard to find. We have sacrament-service the second Sunday in each month, Bro. Herriman, of Snover, who is a priest, administering to us.

I have met with the Saints at Snover, Shabbona, Sandusky, and McGregor, and fully believe all are trying to do their duty. There are exceptions, of course, but as a whole I believe the work is doing finely in this district. The men appointed to this district are alive to the work, and are producing evidence to the truthfulness of this latter-day work that can not be lightly passed by.

Ever praying for the welfare of God's dear children, I am,

Your brother in the gospel,

HENRY SHEFFER.

DOW CITY, Iowa, February 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: The sun shines and the weather is fine here with us, though the streets and roads are very muddy.

The "Son of Righteousness" shines everywhere in the hearts of his disciples, making them cheerful, happy, pure, and good; as they become his epistle, read and known of all men for good. While thus walking in harmony with the divine will, every disciple becomes a power for good in the hands of Christ, as required by his own teaching, as follows: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matthew 5: 16. The pure gospel of Christ begets faith, inspires hope, quickens every fiber of body and soul, begets a lively interest in the good of others, gives the ability to do as well as to teach the will of God, and makes the religion of Christ both theoretical and practical.

What a beautiful world this would be if every person living were truly a Christian! There would be a condition of love and good will such as never existed before. Think about a condition obtaining when every one will speak the truth to his neighbor; when every one will rejoice in the success, prosperity, and good of others. Truly that is a condition to be desired! It is the condition that will obtain when the Spirit of God is poured out upon all flesh; for then the "will of God will be done in earth, as it is in heaven"; and Christ will reign as "King of kings, and Lord of lords," "for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Until then we can watch, pray, fast, labor, and wait, though in many ways we may and should better our condition, so far as the disciples of Christ are concerned.

The work before us "is of such magnitude" that it requires a deep interest and activity upon the part of all. How pleasant and encouraging it is to meet with a branch where every member is indeed an energetic and working disciple of Christ! How the soul rejoices and the heart overflows with gratitude to God for his goodness, and to Christ for his love, as we feel the enlivening and inspiring touch of the Holy Spirit, as we mingle our voices in praises, prayer, and testimony. Thus the Saints are enabled to let their light shine before others, giving encouragement and inspiring hope in the membership, and making a deep and lasting impression upon those not of our faith, by the deep interest thus manifest in that which is held to be "the work of God."

There may be some room for improvement in places along these lines, but the disciples are still growing, and may reach perfection sometime. Paul has written for the good of the Saints, "Let us go on unto perfection," and Peter has penned these words: "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby"; "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." As the mother shelters, protects, nourishes, and loves her child that it may increase in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man, so does Christ, his officers, ministers, and the Spirit nourish, feed, and protect the church; that her members may be all that the children of God should be, in thought, in word, in love, in zeal, and in good works. This should be good for you and for me; this should be good for ministers and members and instructors and pupils.

"The work of God" is not yours nor mine, but under God it is ours. We are God's heritage; he has placed the truth in our care and he expects us to teach it both by precept and by example. If we are careful to attend the meetings of the branch, regular and special, and do our part to make the services what they should be, we thus encourage others to follow our example; but when we seldom attend our own services a spirit of lethargy creeps over us so that the longer we stay away the less we care for that spiritual meat and drink so necessary to spiritual life and growth, and if we are not careful we will be found seeking worldly pleasure and our influence for good, both with members and those not of the church, will be materially lessened, and our lamps will go out. Paul referred to this condition when writing to Timothy: "But she that liveth in pleasure is dead while she liveth."

Passing down the street yesterday I met the pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church here in town, and he said, "When I was down at Pisgah, not long since, I took as a text, 'Our lamps are gone out,' which about represented our condition." I believe the text used upon that occasion by Elder Curtis would be applicable in more than one congregation in the land. But it should not be true of the Saints who teach that the second and glorious coming of the Lord Jesus Christ is near at hand. Saints who are sleeping should awake, readjust and cleanse their garments, replenish their vessels with oil, fill and trim their lamps and have them burning. "Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints." How beautifully the language quoted above represents the true condition for the church with all her ministers, officers, and members to occupy. While such is our condition, we have nothing to fear, for all things will work together for our good.

Yours in gospel bonds,
CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Editors Herald: In reading the different pages of the HERALD, I see an article from Elder J. H. N. Jones, of Adelaide, South Australia, and wish to inform Bro. Jones through the HERALD, that I have some relatives in Adelaide, South Australia, that I have not heard from for years, and if Bro. Jones will please look them up, I will give their names. They left England many years ago, and my father and mother corresponded with them until a few years ago. But since my father and mother have died I have not heard from them. If Bro. Jones will be so kind as to try to find them, and give them my address, I shall be glad. Their names are William and Thomas Martin, my mother's two brothers. William Martin married my father's sister, Angelina Hooper. Hoping and trusting that he may have success in finding them, they find the gospel, and the gospel make them free.

LAMAR, Nebraska, February 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: I came here early in January. Commenced meetings near here the 14th. Preached one sermon, and received request to come to Minatare, Nebraska, in haste, to administer to a sick lady there, not a member of the church. I had two hundred and fifty miles to go, twenty-eight of that by carriage to reach the railroad, and that over very bad roads. I closed my meetings and went, reaching the place on the 17th. The woman was in a very precarious condition, and the doctor had told them she would have to undergo an operation or she could not live; and she thought that meant death, and so she decided to throw herself on the mercy of the Lord and trust the whole matter to his will. We administered to her, according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, and she was very miraculously healed, and made so happy that it seemed she could almost fly. She says she wants to be baptized when conditions are favorable. She had lately come from England, and she wanted me to write and request our elders there to visit her mother. She lives at 102 Ebnal Cottage, Ebnal, Leominster, Herefordshire, England. Her name is Mrs. G. Pounds. Trust our elders will take notice. She seems quite confident our elders will be kindly received, and hopeful that her mother will accept the angel's message.

This good work was brought about by the faithful, untiring energies of Mrs. Nancy Rutter and Fannie Harshman, who faithfully stood by the poor, suffering woman, doing all they could for her and explaining to her how she could go to God through the gospel ordinance and be healed. I trust that others may be inspired by this to go and do likewise.

There seem to be some in this vicinity who are very much interested, and I think will obey the gospel soon.

We have had more snow and cold weather in Western Nebraska this winter than usual, and it has been against me in my work, so that I have not been able to do the work I had mapped out. And Jack Frost has made me shiver quite a little besides.

I am glad to say that the good Lord has blessed and comforted me in my weak efforts to meet the demands made upon me. May the Lord bless his people and enable them to rise to that high plain of spirit life they should occupy.

In the faith,
C. W. PRETTYMAN.

SEILING, Oklahoma, February 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: I see in your last issue the statement that "the man who never gets time to write a letter is lost." I do not want to be lost, so I respond with a letter. Hope you will let this letter go to the readers of the HERALD!

As this conference year is about to close, I wish to say that I have been greatly encouraged in my efforts. The Lord has blessed me so that I have enjoyed good health. His Spirit has been with me in preaching the word.

This was my first year in Texas in missionary work. I find many good features in that mission, and some not so good. I was kindly cared for, my necessities, expenses, etc., were provided by Saints and friends, so that I lacked for nothing in that line. The state of Texas being large, so are the demands for preaching; but the conditions that exist there—for fourteen years I had labored in Oklahoma—but the eight or more months that I spent in Texas I met more people that had never heard of any Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints—they had heard of the "Mormons," but never knew there were two divisions of the church. This was my first year to do street-preaching. It is like any other habit, once acquired, easy to follow. I rather enjoy street-preaching since getting started at it. My congregations have numbered from twenty-five or fifty to three and four hundred. At times they have listened attentively for an hour to an hour and a half. The Saints are scattered in the Texas mission. So they are not permitted to enjoy church privileges every week or every month. In fact, months at a time they are left to themselves and the perplexing environments of life. These conditions are surely unfavorable for their development in the gospel work. As our beloved Bro. D. S. Crawley often remarked, "They are a good people though." But "how can they hear without a preacher, and how can he preach except he be sent?" That is the matter with Texas—they need more preachers, more than they have been having.

My last work there was in Robertson County, "down in the Sticks, with Johnie Hay." We had held a week's meeting in Bro. Hay's home branch, the Texas Central, near Hearne. Had a very encouraging meeting. I was kindly received by the Saints. We then went east of New Baden, ten miles, to "Oak Grove Schoolhouse." Here we found twenty or more Saints in the thickly-timbered country, struggling as best they could against the tide of life to sustain both body and spirit. We are inclined to believe that no one can or will be likely to advance except under proper influences or environments.

We had our meetings well started at the above place, attendance and interest good, when I received a telegram from home that wife was very sick. The message reached me at the close of meeting Sunday night. The brethren and friends hastened me off to the railroad, ten miles, through timber and sand, with necessary expense for my journey. Our driver urged his steed, dodging trees and stumps (as best he could in the dark), arriving within fifty yards of the depot when the train passed. With several changes, and having to lay over two nights en route, we reached home Wednesday night, about half past twelve. Was glad to find my wife greatly improved. She is now able to be up again.

By consent of those in charge, we expect to spend the remaining part of the conference year in Oklahoma.

I have been interested in reading the good articles in the HERALD, the comforting letters, and spiritual instructions. It is very evident, however, that we have not yet come to the unity of the faith—not all. Perhaps some of us need to become “converted” on some of the questions now being discussed.

There is no question but what it is an easy matter to be wrong on questions pertaining to the church or gospel. The fact that we as a church claim and are entitled to inspiration from God is no evidence to me that all who represent the church, myself included, are in possession of that inspiration at all times, and that all our conclusions are true. We may be educated, graduates from colleges, naturally intelligent, brilliant in mind—our brain may be as fertile and imaginative, prospective and reflective as Webster, our oratorical ability may equal Ingersoll or Bryan, our honesty or conscientiousness may be above suspicion—but yet, we may be wrong, absolutely wrong on questions pertaining to God and his work. Our method of reasoning may be far from right. Our whole system of philosophy, together with all we have as scripture (the three books) is positive evidence of how easy it is to be deceived—deceived pertaining to things of God. Man makes an effort to reason them out in his own mind. When a conclusion is reached, he begins to build on that. When his conclusion or premise is wrong, his whole building is wrong—apt to fall. We think Paul advised well when he said, “Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.”

I have heard it said that “man’s weakness is God’s opportunity.” If that be true, and we think it is, then what opportunity has God with the man or men who raise up in their dignity and strength and virtually challenge the whole church?

We copy the following brief quotation, and ask if the thought conveyed be true or not true, which? “We are called upon to occupy ground as we advance, not before.” Does not this quotation carry the idea that we advance “step by step,” or rather receive, respond, obey God’s commands through the gospel as we learn what they are? How can I obey a law I do not understand? The pupil in the schoolroom learns, or advances, “step by step.” In fact the “step by step” movement is the only movement I have yet learned pertaining to the gospel work. I hope to learn more yet. Neither do I desire to be among those “who are ever learning,” but “never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.” Has not the Lord said that “divisions are unseemly”? Then, if divisions are “unseemly,” what about an effort to cause division? God has appointed certain men over certain departments of his work, and I have confidence in those men, and in the God who appointed them, that he will qualify them for the work, and not permit his church to suffer by their lack of understanding.

This most wonderful of all modern inventions, wireless telegraphy, furnishes the most complete illustration of inspiration that I have yet known. That is, if I am rightly informed, this means of transportation of thought is used both in times of peace and of war. Not every wireless instrument that is open to receive messages can receive them (I am told), for the reason that they are not in tune or in harmony with the instrument that transmits the message. The two instruments, the one that receives and the one that transmits, must be in harmony with each other, or there is no communication.

More especially is it essential for the receiving instrument to be right in order to catch the wave of thought as it is borne through space. So it is with God. He may transmit message after message, inspiration following inspiration; it may roll on and on like the “pebble dropped in the water,” until it reaches and passes by, over, and through all the confines of his kingdoms, and will be caught (as it were) by every instrument whose mind and soul is in touch or in harmony with his. But those not “in tune” will have no power to stop the message or prevent others from receiving who are in proper condition. Our skepticism or unwillingness to believe in wireless telegraphy will not affect the facts in the case. Neither will the unbelief in inspiration prevent the faithful ones from receiving. Yet, notwithstanding the reception of inspiration from God, we learn or advance “step by step”—we “occupy ground as we advance, not before.”

There would not have been divisions in the Christian world if the leaders had remained united. There surely would not be division in politics if the leaders had not divided the people.

Since the gospel has been restored, divisions have ensued; for the simple reason that the leaders or men who choose to lead, were divided; some of one opinion, some another. In our preaching and reasoning with the world, we labor to get them to see that such conditions can not be right—some one is evidently wrong. We advise those same worldly people to take the advice of James: “Ask God for wisdom.” They confess they are perplexed, in fact they are in a “puzzle”—they plead for some one to explain. I have met some of those good folk in my labors, and they have shouted me down, saying, “Hallelujah, praise the Lord, I’m sanctified.” They have folded their cloak of self-righteousness so closely around themselves that you can not reach them.

While I do not, nor can not condemn proper and necessary investigation—in fact we are justified in seeking diligently for the right, the truth, and in condemning wrong; yet there is so much unnecessary contention (in my opinion) that I am inclined to repeat the words of Hamlet when he first beheld his father’s ghost:

“Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health or goblin damned,
Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell,
Be thy intents wicked or charitable,
Thou comest in such a questionable shape?”

It is very evident that inspiration comes to the human mind from two sources; and with me it seems very proper to inquire, as did Hamlet, “Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell?”

We can not deprive any one from expression. They have the god-given right to exercise their own agency. But we have a right also to judge and conclude as to the character of every man’s work. His work stands in mute but positive evidence of his workmanship. I believe the servant of Christ labors for peace, unity, and love, rather than for division.

In bonds,
R. M. MALONEY.

SAREPTA, ———, January 13, 1909.

Editors Herald: With the close of the year’s subscription, it brings to our minds that we have one more peg in the tally-board of life to move, or one less mile-post to pass. I feel thankful for the gospel, for what I am, and if anything grieves me it is when I make a misstep. And my heart’s desire and longing is to live so as to get a peep into the future. I would like to go to General Conference this year. Best wishes for the prosperity of Zion, and good will to all.

ROBERT GRAY.

NORTH DEER ISLE, February 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: I thank God for the gospel that Jesus Christ taught, and for his Twelve and Seventy, with power from God. I should like to speak comforting words to the Saints. Yea, be ye strong in word, and faith fulfilled. Oh, how plain the Bible and prophecies are in these last days. Signs of Christ's second coming. I would say, None but the pure in heart shall stand. Shall I stand? Yea, God's grace will save the doer of the word of God. To Zion I shall go with you. Will you go with me? I am seventy-five, and ask the prayers of the Saints, that I may safely endure to the end, in the love of the truth.

Yours truly,
JOEL H. POWERS.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Hubert Case, writing from Kingfisher, Oklahoma, on Washington's birthday, states: "Oklahoma is an excellent field. I baptized three grown persons yesterday and have some more to lead into the water this evening. Our mission forces are doing good work, without any heat or friction, and we have had a very profitable year."

BRANT, MICHIGAN.

A brother, F. P. Jubb, writing from Brant, Michigan, under date of February 15, makes the following statement: "About a year ago I wrote you asking you for some help in the way of a preacher or of getting some help to get the work started better in this part, so I thought it best to let you know what the result had been. The first preaching was done by Elder Dickhout, of Hamilton, Ontario, in July, three baptisms followed. Then Elder Hawn came and took charge and preached in the same place and eighteen more were baptized and two of the old Saints were reclaimed, making twenty-three, and the five of us that were here, making twenty-eight. Pretty good, I think, and there has been a branch organized here of late, making it better yet. Now, brother, I feel pretty well pleased for the work done here."

This is very encouraging, and we congratulate Bro. Jubb and those with him for that which has been accomplished. We are acquainted with Brn. Dickhout and Hawn and know them to be earnest workers for truth, and we are pleased to hear of their efforts being crowned with success.

HERALD EDITOR.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

A soul-cheering and strengthening sacramental service was experienced the first Sabbath in February, and a large number of Saints were present. Special fasting and prayer was requested in behalf of our sorely afflicted Sr. Billinsky. The prayers offered were indeed humble and sincere, and we felt the blessed influence of the Spirit's presence. A prayer-service was also held the afternoon of the 18th at the home of Sr. Sadie Lewis, where Bro. and Sr. Billinsky are stay-at present. The sisters of the branch held this service, accompanied by Bro. Tanner, who administered to Sr. Billinsky at this service, and we believe much spiritual strength and encouragement was received, if not physical. Sr. Billinsky has thus far received but temporary relief physically, but we know God is all wise, and will grant us that which is for our best good, if we will continue faithful and submissive to his holy will. We would kindly ask all who are acquainted with Sr. Billinsky and also Sr. Mary Voltz, who is also very ill, to assist us with your faith and prayers in their behalf.

The discourses delivered this month by Brn. Tanner, Sparling, Burgess, and Archibald, were instructive and uplifting.

Seven additions to the fold since last report. Six, being baptized by Bro. Carl, are of the Lansdowne Branch, which is rapidly growing, not only in numbers, but spiritual strength as well.

The Cheltenham Branch, with Bro. Tanner as their pastor, is also reported as doing well. The officers of branches in the district do not find time to be idle, Bro. Tanner being president of both St. Louis and Cheltenham.

A special prayer-service was held for the purpose of invoking God's blessing on Sr. Esther Mercer, who was quite ill the past month. She was administered to at this time, and we are pleased to say received the desired blessing, for which all feel thankful to the Giver of all good.

The Sabbath-school and Religio are moving along nicely. The Religio president, in a talk to the Sunday-school recently, urgently requested all the Sunday-school members, especially the little folks, to attend the Religio.

Your sister in Christ,

WASHINGTON ITEMS.

Spokane Branch is alive to the Master's cause, and doing well under the leadership of Bro. I. M. Smith. Minister in charge, Bro. F. A. Smith, made us a short visit, with good results, and on February 2 the writer accompanied him to Ellensburg, Washington, where a new branch was organized with seventeen members (when complete), H. P. Hansen, president. Ellensburg Branch starts out bright with great possibilities.

On February 4, Bro. F. A. Smith departed for Portland, Oregon, to attend district conference. The writer remained over Sunday with Saints, attending Sunday-school. There were thirty-four present. All seemed interested in class work and review. We look for a good record from this school. Sr. Celia W. Lull is doing her best as superintendent. At sacrament-meeting Sunday evening, every member present testified,—not a bad beginning.

Leaving this place, I visited Roslyn, a small branch in the Cascade Mountains, where eight thousand tons of coal was mined in one day. The average daily output for 1908 was seven thousand, one hundred and eighty-two tons. A few of the faithful are holding up the ensign here. A Sunday-school and Religio are held regularly, and sacrament once a month in the Saints' church.

Having an invitation to the Seattle and British Columbia District conference, February 13 and 14, I left Roslyn with Bro. Frank Holmes in time to attend Sunday-school and Religio conventions. The conference was well attended, a number of business matters adjusted to place the district in a better condition.

Apostle F. A. Smith and Bro. E. Keeler came up from Portland conference as boosters for a ten-day reunion in Seattle, to be held in midsummer. The influence of the minister in charge, and oratory of the patriarch, won Bro. William Johnson, the heavyweight from Nanaimo, British Columbia. All negative arguments were promptly sat down on; and, being assured that Bro. George Thorburn would act as chief stake-driver, a tent reunion was decided upon.

Brn. F. A. Smith, E. Keeler, William Johnson, H. Stade, and George Thorburn will remain in Seattle a few days holding cottage-meetings, and perfecting details, ways and means for the occasion. We will likely hear from them later. Keep your eye on the A. Y. P., and the Seattle and northwest reunion.

Your colaborer,
SPOKANE, Washington. W. W. FORDHAM.

W. Rushton.

Bro. Dewnsup is authorized to receive and receipt for church funds in behalf of the Bishopric of said Reorganized Church in and for the district of Manchester and Leeds, and the Bishopric commend him and his work to the Saints and friends of said territory. The Bishopric also extend thanks to Bro. J. W. Rushton for his cooperation and efforts in financial work hitherto. We also specially urge that each member of the territory herein named become acquainted if they are not already, with the new agent, Bro. Dewnsup, and remember his address, and be forward in assisting him in his financial work during the year. By so doing we trust we may be laborers together with the Master in his work of grace and salvation among the people.

In writing the agent please address Joseph Dewnsup, 12 Albemarle Street, Moss Side, Manchester, England.

Trusting that the divine blessing may attend the work of the agent and each helper,

To the Saints and Friends of the Kewanee, Illinois, District: This is to notify you that Bro. C. E. Ball, 4215 Eighth Avenue, Rock Island, Illinois, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent in and for the Kewanee District of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and duly authorized to receive and receipt for funds and perform any and all duties devolving upon a Bishop's agent within the territory herein named.

RAILROAD RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS.

1. From California and North Pacific Coast Points.—Regular nine months tourist fares, approximating two cents per mile in each direction, or about one fare and one third for the round trip, are in effect daily from California and North Pacific Coast common points to Missouri River gateways, such as Kansas City, St. Joseph, Omaha, etc., from which points local rates of two cents per mile are in vogue to Lamoni, Iowa, where the General Conference and conventions will be held about April 1-20, 1909. The fare from California and from North Pacific Coast common points to Missouri River points named and return is $90.00.

The nine months fares do not apply to intermediate or interior points, but only to what are known as the eastern gateways of the Trans-Continental Association, such as those named. Should it happen that delegates apply at a station on Pacific Coast from which the nine months fare is not in effect, which may be the case at very small, unimportant stations, the agent will cheerfully ascertain and advise them the nearest point to his station from which such fare does apply. He will also advise delegates as to the eastern points named above to which it will be most advantageous for them to purchase nine months tickets in rebuying to place of meeting.

Please note that these nine months tourist tickets are sold only from the states of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, and west of and including Mission Junction, British Columbia; also from what are known as Kootenay common points; namely, Nelson, Rossland, Sandon, Kaslo, and Grand Forks, British Columbia.

Careful inquiry should be made of agents of leading lines, as it may be possible, in some local instances, to do better than the general rate named above. Other rates, on later dates, may be obtained on inquiry, should any desire to include points further east than the gateways named above.

Parties in the intermediate northwest, not included in the above-named points, may take the Burlington Route at Billings, Montana; Cheyenne, Wyoming; or Denver, Colorado, etc., and obtain direct route to Lamoni, Iowa, and at lowest regular rate.

2. If anything can be done to secure special rates over the Burlington Route from Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Omaha, and other points, due notice thereof will be given. However, as such rates probably would be conditioned upon parties traveling together and upon special dates, those who can arrange for such parties traveling together, from branches, districts, or sections, should take up the matter and make inquiries of passenger departments of roads over which they will travel—from New England, Canada, and other points east, south, etc. It would not be possible for the undersigned to arrange for the meeting of delegates at particular points with delegates so widely scattered. Whatever can be secured in rates and other features of transportation service will be duly reported, under some general arrangement with the Burlington, if obtainable. Schedule of trains to and from Lamoni, with connections at main line points, will also be published in HERALD and Ensign.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, February 26, 1909.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of Southern Nebraska; Greeting: I find it necessary to address this letter to you that you may know the condition of the treasury in our district. We are out of funds. Only three dollars have been received since January 16, and since that date I have paid out one hundred and seventy-nine ($179.00) dollars. We are now in arrears, and nothing is in sight. I am sure it is not necessary that I call your attention to the financial law of the church. You, as members, are conversant with it, so I write this letter that the situation may be understood. Some have been quite faithful in the support of the Bishop, while many have neglected their plain duty. As agent I have invited, and do now invite, all to contribute of their means for the support of the work in our district. Unless the funds are forthcoming, of course they can not be disbursed. Please consider the condition and needs of our district, and send in your contributions as soon as possible, whether of tithes, offerings, or consecrations, to the writer at Wilber, Nebraska, so that he may be able to discharge the obligations resting upon him, according to the instructions of the Bishop.

Your brother in Christ,

February 23, 1909.

C. H. PORTER, Bishop's Agent.

Presiding Patriarch.

To the Order of Evangelists; Greeting: The time is rolling on and we soon will be expected to meet with our brethren of the priesthood of the Son of God, and it is meet that we should be represented among them, and that I might report favorably the labors of the order, to the First Presidency, I would be pleased if my brethren of the order would report to me at least on, or before, the first day of April, thus giving me a little time to formulate our general report.

I would be glad if so many of my brethren as can conveniently do so would attend the coming conference. There are a number of important matters, which we ought to counsel together upon, and now for several years there has not been a sufficient number of our brethren attending the General Conferences to form a quorum, so of necessity there has been no business done by the order, and no advancement made to a better understanding of our duties, rights, and privileges in the great work of these latter days.

To my brethren of the order upon the British Isles, I send special greeting; I would be glad to receive some communication from them, reporting the nature of their work in that great field.

Come, brethren, let us get nearer together, at least by communication, and in touch with each other in the love of our Lord and Savior.

With hearts full of sadness,
We but wait the glad morn,
When Gabriel shall call thee
With loud trumpet horn.

Oh, then, we will clasp thee,
With joy to our breast,
And sing with the ransomed,
The song of the blest.

As a young man he entered the railway service, in which he met with repeated promotion, but resigning a position of foreman in the Santa Fe shops, he entered the mercantile business about a year and a half prior to his death. In 1884 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Hart, who survives him, an only son having died eighteen years ago. He also leaves an aged mother, two sisters, and three brothers, one of the latter being our faithful missionary, Elder James McKiernan. Reverend A. E. Carhart of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was the morning speaker at the Brick Church, and his sermon was well recieved, it being along general lines, with the foundation on Jesus Christ as the dominant thought. The reverend is from Mitchell, South Dakota.

Elder Elmer E. Long was the speaker at the night service.

Our item of last week in regard to the small-pox was wrong. We should have stated that there were but two patients, as there were about five homes in quarantine.

The regular monthly sacrament-service was held in the afternoon. President John Smith requested the Saints of the branch to pray earnestly and regularly for the benefit of the coming General Conference and Conventions.

Be as careful of the books you read as the company you keep; for your habits and character will be as much influenced by the former as by the latter.—Parson Hood.

Editorial

CONCERNING DISCUSSIONS IN THE "HERALD."

We want you to read all of this editorial.

In this number will be found Bro. Weld's third article regarding section 106. This article has been in hand several weeks, but other matters have prevented its publication. The discussion of the subject having been opened up we have thought it best to give those who criticise the section in question ample opportunity to state their case. The main objections to be urged are now before the people. Probably two or more articles will be published on this subject between now and the General Conference; but we can not give space to all the articles that we have received and are likely to receive, and we ask our contributors to forbear. The discussion of this subject has been running for about five months.

A few thoughts now regarding discussion in general. There seem to be two extreme views held in the church regarding the appearance of discussions in the HERALD; and between the two the editors are in a position to acquire large quantities of valuable experience. One would have our readers given nothing but predigested foods, carefully selected by the editors,—sincere malted milk of the word, shredded whole wheat biscuits of life,—and fear that if the readers get any nuts to crack they will break all their teeth. The other would give them mince pie, pickles, sauerkraut, and nails.

In our opinion the happy medium will be found in a mixed diet somewhere between these extremes; we do not care for predigested foods and we do not like pickles. The perfect editor could always keep the happy medium (providing he had the right kind of material to use) and please everybody(?), but the perfect editor has not yet been born.

Those who hastily condemn certain articles that displease them should remember that there are others; that which displeases one may be heartily enjoyed by another. For one man to ask that the HERALD give space only to the ideas that accord with his ideas would not be right. And it is a fact that the very same day that brings us a complaint that the HERALD pages are opened too widely, brings us another charging that we are overworking the waste-basket.

Now we do not fear men's criticism nor seek their praise, but rather to do our own work in our own way, as God shall give us light, in harmony with the best interests of his cause. Nevertheless, though we believe that the editors are in the best position to know what manuscripts are available and which ones are worthy, we are open to suggestion and any who wish to do so may write the undersigned, or any other member of the editorial staff a personal letter, stating his or her opinion regarding the way in which the church paper should be edited. If you have criticisms send them to us. Do not go behind our backs. Tell us what you would do if you were editor.

So far as we are concerned our editorial utterances in the past regarding the use of the blue pencil were directed almost solely toward that class who abuse the rights of free speech and indulge in personalities. Only that class had cause to take those utterances to heart.

On the other hand, if any have imagined that we stood for the suppression of all dissenting opinions, they are mistaken, that is all. We plead for an exchange of ideas on a higher plane. The present discussion has been rather free from personalities up to date; but it is a fact that the longer any such discussion lasts the harder it is to keep within bounds.

Some questions are timely and may be discussed with profit, providing the discussion is dispassionate. Other questions are not timely and can not be discussed profitably. Some have been agitated at length and may well rest. In the present case section 106 is important and will play an important part in the redemption of Zion. It has been discussed in certain quarters for a long time and we felt that the Saints in general might as well know what there was in the opposition. If the section will not stand investigation it ought to be investigated. If it will stand, it will emerge from the discussion stronger than before, and the fog will clear away. Publicity usually strengthens truth.

Some have expressed a fear that the discussion would injure financial interests. In the Lamoni Stake, where perhaps the interest is keenest, the tithing receipts since it has been in progress are the best in years. The stake bishopric is responsible for that statement. The bishop of the Gallands Grove District has circulated a tract on tithing within the past two months and reports very gratifying returns. The bishop of the Independence Stake says that the discussion has done no serious injury in their field. The bishop of the Southern California District says, "I am not displeased in having the issue raised . . . if this agitation will settle the authenticity of this section we will have gained an important step toward unity." The bishop's agent in the Des Moines District says, "The discussion has done us more good than harm. A few who are looking for an excuse may stop paying tithing; but on the whole the discussion of financial questions that has been carried on will finally do us a world of good." The bishop of the Nauvoo District says, "I have not been able to trace any bad effects due to the discussion of these matters in the HERALD. I have noticed an agitation in the minds of some which I think will result in good. Discussion in the right spirit will educate, and education is what we need." The Presiding Bishop stated to us, when last we saw him, that he was not fearful of the effects of the discussion.

Speaking now in a broader way, and not of section 106 alone, it is said that an expression of so many views on the financial law may tend to confuse the Saints. We admit the full force of that statement. No one is more alive to that fact than we. And if there were space, and all the articles written on the financial law were admitted, the complaint would have even more justification. But let us state this one fact: These varied articles are not alone the cause of confusion, they are also the result of confusion. They reflect conditions that exist. There must come a clarity of thought on the financial law.

The Saints at large do not understand the financial law as they should. We believe that a persistent, harmonious effort on the part of bishops, counselors to bishops, and bishop's agents during the coming year to present the financial law through the HERALD and elsewhere will lead to a better understanding, and will much more than offset any evil effects that have resulted from any confusion of thought previously expressed by others in the HERALD. The spirit of inquiry aroused furnishes as fine an opportunity as could be asked for such a presentation; far better than if no one were asking questions, or writing articles, or thinking.

This part of the law, like many others, requires to be taught and retaught, told and retold. From beginning to end it has to be gone over and over, memorized, demonstrated on the board, worked out in practice.

The HERALD columns are open to those whose duty it is to teach the financial law and they will be given preference, all other considerations being equal. As an example of what may be accomplished we refer the reader to the excellent article by the Independence Stake Bishopric (see HERALD, February 24). Read it again.

Those who have not had the burden of explaining the law placed upon them (neither by the church nor by the Lord) may well hesitate a long time before undertaking the task. Yet in the absence of direct legislation to that effect the editors have no right or inclination to exclude all who are not bishops from expressing opinions or asking questions, or to exclude all opinions that do not harmonize with what the editors think to be the position of the church. Is the church ready to say that they shall do so?

To those who are said to be about to withhold their means because of conflicting opinions on the law that have been published, if such exist, permit us to address a little advice that none will be likely to challenge: Don't do it! Few writers in these columns have ever attacked the institution of tithing itself. The difference is on the meaning of the word tithe, its application, and its relation to consecration of surplus, or on the law of surplus itself. The financial law is a divine law. It is your duty to understand and obey the law. If you withhold your means because you discover that two or more other brethren differ in opinion, you are doing what some do who refuse to be baptized because they discover that others differ concerning the method of baptism. They hesitate, give up the problem, hide behind a futile and foolish excuse, and are lost.

If you do not understand the financial law go to the bishop or bishop's agent in your stake or district, or write to him, and state to him your financial condition and seek his advice. He will advise and counsel you. That is his business. He is the one to whom you should go. If you can not reach him get in touch with the presiding Bishopric. It is to be supposed, of course, that at the same time you will study the scriptures and think and pray over the subject, and pledge yourself not only to learn your duty but to do it.

One brother expresses a fear that discussions in the HERALD will have a bad effect on outsiders. The HERALD is not edited primarily for outsiders. We do not think for a moment that discussion, even when free from passion, will have as good an effect as would be produced by evidences of absolute unity, with truth back of it. But what shall we do when unity does not obtain on certain questions? If we carefully conceal that fact until those outsiders are baptized, what will their feelings be later on, when they discover the true situation? Shall we stop sending our children to school for fear the neighbors will discover that they have not graduated?

No one deplures contention and controversy more than the editors. And no one uses his influence more persistently to hold such in check. But not all discussion is contention. And when opinions differ there is something worse than discussion. It is said that when a member of the dominant church in Utah expresses a protest against the position of the church or its leaders he is instantly nailed,—enter! protest! exit! The "living oracles" express their willingness to be "sustained" and thousands of hands are raised. One man in the rear of the Tabernacle rises to his feet. He thinks he is about to ask a few questions but he finds instead that the choir is singing, "Hallelujah! 'tis done!" and he becomes vaguely aware that he is walking toward the rear door in company with an usher. A member finds the eye of authority resting upon him unexpectedly; he starts perceptibly and wonders if he has been thinking heresy.

Not many of our people have ever left the Reorganization and joined the dominant church in Utah. Why? Evidently they do not favor such methods. But it is quite possible for us to go to the other extreme. We may become intolerant of all authority. We may get into the condition where we will show no proper respect for the law, for the men who are to interpret the law, or for the God who placed those men in their office and gave them their calling.

Protest on occasion is one of the noblest functions of man; protest as a profession is the poorest business in the world.

We should not give undue concern to the fact that there is not absolute unity on all questions, providing we can maintain unity on the fundamentals. It is useless to expect that in a body of people constantly being recruited from every class of society and from all peoples in the world absolute oneness will be found immediately on all matters that may arise.

In this connection let us remember that admirable as logic and reason undoubtedly are, they are not the only means to be used in the discovery of truth and the work of establishing unity. The spirit is given to guide unto all truth. We need more of the Spirit of God. We need its presence everywhere. If that Spirit is guiding us we will all approach truth and consequently will draw nearer together.

In the expression of our convictions let us learn to be careful, deliberate, and considerate of others. It is not always necessary that we should have the last word or resent personal attacks. We can afford to forget such things. It would be interesting to keep a record of those men who have expressed an opinion, together with the facts on which it was based, and have been content to let the matter rest there, refusing to reply in kind to personal attacks, conscious that the position was safe and would stand. Such a record would constitute a roll of honor.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

Either carefulness or carelessness can soon be made a habit. What habit is the better? the habit of making mistakes or the habit of getting things right? The answer is not hard to guess. Neither is the right habit so hard to form. Every repetition of the mental act of choosing the right thing to do and the right way to do it helps to fix the habit and to avoid mistakes. Each triumph leads joyfully and easily on to the next one, just as each mistake of the careless person opens the gate for the next to slip in. —East and West.

Isolated.

How lonely do we feel at times,
So isolated thus,
From those of like and kindred faith,
Its beauties to discuss.

Yet had we not the promise given
If we'd but faithful live,
That he who watches o'er us all,
Would grace and comfort give?

Oh, yes! full well we know 'tis true,
For oft in times gone by,
We've felt His blessed presence near,
When no other help was nigh.

Then may we fret or murmur not—
But trusting Him alone,
Prove worthy objects of his love,
Till we are gathered home.

The Morning Light.

(Samuel Francis Smith, author of our national hymn, "America," always was devoted to the work of Christian missions. He has so wrought his heart into the following song that it has wonderful power to sway congregations into enthusiasm. It is even more popular in other lands, as in India, China, and Africa, where it has been translated into the many native dialects, than here.)

The morning light is breaking;
The darkness disappears;
* The sons of earth are waking
To penitential tears;
Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar,
Of nations in commotion,
Prepared for Zion's war.

See heathen nations bending
Before the God we love,
And thousand hearts ascending
In gratitude above;
While sinners, now confessing,
The gospel call obey,
And seek the Savior's blessing—
A nation in a day.

Blest river of salvation!
Pursue thine onward way;
Flow thou to every nation,
Nor in thy richness stay;
Stay not till all the lowly
Triumphant reach their home:
Stay not till all the holy Proclaim—"The Lord is come!"

Going around hard places make weak men. You can not afford to be weak, for there are too many men of that kind in the world now. You want to be strong, and so you go straight through every hard thing that comes to you.—Selected.

Elders' Note-Book

AN INTERESTING TRACT.

A BRIEF SUMMARY AND HISTORICAL SKETCH OF THE FINANCIAL DEPARTMENT OF THE GALLANDS GROVE, IOWA, DISTRICT, FROM 1874 TO 1909.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—Bishop C. J. Hunt has gotten out some very neat and attractive eight-page pamphlets for distribution in his district. They are illustrated and have a striking cover design that is sure to catch the eye. Through Bro. Hunt's courtesy we are able to reproduce the contents of the pamphlet together with the illustrations.]

HAVE YOU PAID YOUR TITHING?

"Abraham gave a tenth of all."—Hebrews 7: 2.

Jacob promised: "And all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee."—Genesis 28: 22.

To the Saints of the Gallands Grove District; Greeting: The old year of 1908 is past. Its opportunities for doing good, its possibilities for progress and growth are gone for ever, but the new year of 1909 is before us with bright and hopeful prospects for the accomplishment of greater good. The Lord, our Captain and soon coming King, has counseled us as a church to be of good cheer, and every member should do their best to heed the blessed instruction, for the work is onward to the world, and all should labor earnestly to keep the temporal law as well as the spiritual, and not entertain doubts or discouragements until the Master who knows best the condition of his church shall revoke the "good cheer" order. Proper labor lightens, brightens, and helps every Latter Day Saint to "Count that day lost whose low descending sun, Views from thy hand no worthy action done."

The increased growth and magnitude of the financial department of the District prompts us to give some items historically, of the work done which we trust will be of interest and profit.

It was thirty-five years ago that Elder John Pett, the first Bishop's agent of the Gallands Grove, Iowa, District, began the important work of gathering tithes and offerings. The District had been organized but eleven years and the Saints were few in numbers. They were busy building homes, preparing the virgin soil for raising crops, and were not overburdened with "the mammon of unrighteousness." However, the true spirit of the gospel burned in their hearts and they sought earnestly to advance the Master's cause, giving of the fruits of the fields, their herds and their flocks to supply the needs of missionaries' families and the worthy poor. Money was not so plentiful in those early times as now.

The first money paid into the District treasury as tithing was one dollar by Bro. John Chapman, of the Salem Branch, Shelby County, May 24, 1874, and the total receipts for the District for that year were $109.15. The year 1875 may have been a trying one, financially, for the receipts were only $17.30. From ful tithing payer, a regular attendant at the house of worship, being blessed with the "gifts" of the gospel and always faithful in testimony throughout a long and useful life.

Elder John Hawley, one of the pioneers of the District, paid the first $100.00 payment to the District agent September 26, 1878, and Sr. Manly W. Hartsorn, of Marathon, in 1899, was the first to favor the church with $500.00 in one payment.

The smallest tithe ever received in the District (small in value, but great in the power of example), was four pennies paid February 18, 1900, by Louisa Ellen, aged seven, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Frederick N. Shaw. She had earned forty cents and having been taught the law by her parents who were faithful tithing payers, she gave to the church one tenth. Fathers and mothers, have you diligently taught

ELDER JOHN PETT,

First Bishop's Agent of the Gallands Grove District from 1874 to 1897.

CHARLES J. HUNT, BISHOP.

this time progress was made in the gathering of church funds, numbers were being added to the membership, more territory included in the District, the missionaries and the financial agent taught the law of tithes and offerings with increased results for good.

The District records show that in 1876 Sr. Mary A. Jenkins of the Gallands Grove Branch was the first to comply with the law of surplus, favoring the District treasury with $35.00. She was also a faithful tithing payer, a regular attendant at the house of worship, being blessed with the "gifts" of the gospel and always faithful in testimony throughout a long and useful life.

In 1898 Sr. Katherine Butler finished paying her tithing by deeding to the church town property valued at $500.00, it being the first real estate credited in the District as tithing. The receipts of 1902 show the largest tithe offering of real estate which was valued at $1,400, the gift of Bro. and Sr. Ichabod McCord.

There is another means wisely made use of for the use and benefit of the Lord's work, that is in wills. Some who had paid their tithing in full have thoughtfully and liberally remembered the church in that way, while a few have complied with the law of consecration and surplus who are regular tithing payers.

The District records show that Bro. and Sr. David Hall, of the Salem Branch, Shelby County, have paid tithing annually from 1878 to 1909, thirty-one years, favoring the Master's great work with $6,449.37.

How true it is that tithing unpaid here will not be credited to us in the great beyond, hence we would be glad if we could say that every Saint in the District had at some time contributed to the church as the Lord had prospered him. But many whose earth lives have closed, neglected doing their duty in that regard and are certainly experiencing irreparable loss and deep regrets. Are you, dear brother or sister, making the same mistake, and by your example teaching others to disobey God's holy law?

a period of thirty-five years, from 1874 to 1909, the sum of $44,307.30. There has been collected for Graceland College, $1,240.83; Sanitarium, $745.38; Saints' Home, $305.00; children's home, $203.59; and other purposes, $536.17; making a grand total of $47,338.27 contributed by more than a thousand members. The above amount does not represent all the money paid by members of the District, for thousands of dollars have been sent to the general church treasury and receipted for by presiding bishops.

Having been appointed Bishop's agent in June, 1897, as the successor of Elder John Pett, and three years later (1900), ordained to the office of bishop of the District, I chose as counselors Elders David Brewster and James O. Sheldon who were ordained and set apart to assist in the bishop's work in the District. The District is quite large, comprising

DAVID BREWSTER, FIRST COUNSELOR.

JAMES O. SHELDON, SECOND COUNSELOR.

No one can afford to put off the important duty of complying with the temporal law, for it is the "doer of the word that is justified."

All will admit that not one of us can lead farther in the "narrow way" than we ourselves have gone, nor can we instill into the minds of those of our own household or of associates the full meaning of God's law when we ourselves are neglecting to obey it from month to month or year to year.

We are pleased however, to be able to report that there has been paid into the District treasury in tithes, offerings, surplus, and consecration, during twenty-one counties, viz, Shelby, Crawford, Carroll, Green, Guthrie, Audubon, Humboldt, Pocahontas, Buena Vista, Palo Alto, Clay, Cherokee, Dickinson, Webster, Calhoun, Sac, Ida, O'Brien, Emmet, Osceola, and Kossuth.

The following brethren, acting as agents in their respective branches, have done much to make the work successful throughout the District: David Brewster, James O. Sheldon, A. H. Rudd, C. L. Carmichael, John Jordison, Orman Salisbury, W. D. Bullard, J. H. Bullard, T. F. Jones, A. E. McCord, and D. A. Holcomb.

Now, dear Saints, we can with a united effort make the year 1909 the most prosperous one the church has ever witnessed. Will you help? In behalf of the Master's cause we thank you for the substantial support already given and hope we may all merit his divine approval in our labors.

I am your servant for the Christ's sake,

CHARLES J. HUNT.

Bishop of the Gallands Grove District.

DELOTT, Iowa, January 2, 1909.

MERE STATEMENT IS NOT PROOF.

It will not do to reject a revelation simply because it conflicts with our ideas of doctrine.

True! Neither will it do to accept a document as a revelation, simply because it agrees with our ideas of doctrine; nor simply because it purports to be a revelation, but contains no evidence of being such. Let me ask: How many motions to adopt by the church will it take to make a document divine?

We believe it possible for an individual to hold or cling to traditions and arguments that are absolutely without foundation, reason, or logic, to sustain a past position or theory taken by himself, friends, or church. Is this development? Or is it wiser to consider in evidence, conditions and circumstances at the time, and do as Paul says, "Prove all things"?

Now, what are the conditions governing, when, we are told, section 106 was adopted by the church, in 1878? A brother in high standing was up for teaching heresy; and, without any investigation whatever as to the divinity or correctness of the revelations, it looks like some of the most foremost in the opposition thought this kind of a resolution would give them a surer clew on the brother charged, urged the passage of the resolution, establishing, as they desired, a standard to settle their dispute. Now, how many resolutions of this kind would it take to make section 106, or any other document, divine, if it was not of God? No investigation as to where it came from, as to how it came in the book, or what its history was!

There were men living in the not distant past who testified that they knew of section 106 at the time when it was given at Far West, in 1838. Their testimony is not accessible to us, at this writing, but we are personally satisfied that section 106 came from the pen of Joseph Smith.

Why not publish this evidence, as it is just what we, and many others, have been looking for, for the last seven or eight years? We, too, have heard these stories or statements, and have taken the pains to trace a number of them to get at the exact facts of the matter, and every time, without an exception, it was, "Oh, I didn't know it, Bro. So and So told me." And when Bro. So and So was hunted up, he couldn't remember just what it was, but was quite sure there was something given regarding the financial law there, but could not tell just what it was. This is just the position we have taken from the start: that if there was anything given of the Lord it had been tampered with, as he could not conflict with his former law, section 42.

Query: Who is doubting the revelations, or the divine calling of the Prophet of the Lord, the most? First. We accept what he sanctions, section 42, and reject what conflicts. Second. In 1842, Joseph Smith referred Richard Savary to the 1835 edition of Doctrine and Covenants for financial law; section 106 was not in it, and no revelation later than November, 1834, virtually saying that was the only law he knew of to govern in his case. Third. We do not believe God's Prophet could be so careless "in the press of work," as to so forget himself as to mislead or deceive an honest soul seeking the truth, as to make such a careless blunder, if he knew of section 106. Fourth. We can not conceive of such a thing as a prophet of God in line of duty being so derelict to duty as to have received, nearly six years before his death, a revelation from God of such importance to his people that none who failed to comply therewith could abide in Zion, and never give it to them, but leave it to be presented to the people by the Quorum of Twelve, after his death.

Why not believe all the other revelations given at Far West, coming to us through the same hands as section 106? There were a number of them. Read, and if you do not believe them, do not call us the only doubting Thomas, but tell us why.

Now, let us "examine the internal evidences of the section in question." We are a little bit surprised at the views expressed by our brethren on this point. They are as much in opposition to the teachings of the "leading church authorities" they counsel us so strenuously to heed, as we are. We must all agree that whenever the Lord has spoken on his law (financial) to the church, he has always mentioned the poor first, or makes the mention very emphatic. How about section 106? The poor are not mentioned; and this is claimed to be for all time, too.

Again: Section 42 provides that when an individual gets more than he needs for himself and family, he shall turn it into the storehouse from time to time to provide for those who have not, etc. How about section 106? After they have paid their surplus, then they are to pay one tenth of all their interest annually, and this is to be a standing law unto them for ever, which excludes for ever the application of section 42.

"Oh," says one, "this is 'for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.'" Worse still. If that be the case, then section 106 does not apply to the membership at all.

Section 106 claims to be "a standing law unto them for ever." And the Saints "shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide" in Zion. Hence 106 must be obeyed. Thus it puts itself ahead of 42; for if 42 is observed first, more is performed than 106 requires, and it is impossible to comply with 106. Thus we are confronted with this peculiar situation: God gave to those assembled at the Ohio his great law of full and complete consecration. Seven years later it is claimed that he gave "a standing law unto them for ever," which requires less, which must be observed by all who would inhabit Zion. And we are told there is no conflict. Can you add to or take from a complete law, without conflicting with the fundamental truth upon which it is based? Would not the Savior's words indeed apply? "Whatsoever is more or less than this cometh of evil." Remember, that if you comply with 42 first, you can not comply with 106, hence must stay outside of Zion, yet 42 requires more than 106. Is there no conflict? Stop and think a little, and see.

Now, where did the Lord reveal the truth; when he gave 42, or 106? We have the statement in 106 that "this shall be a standing law unto them for ever." In 1831, the people were commanded to gather at the Ohio, and he would give them his law, which was to be strictly heeded by them, and if they did it was to bring about the redemption of Zion; and in May, 1831, section 51, speaking on this same law, says in paragraph 5, "Behold, this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches." Now, please read section 51 carefully, and see if you can work it with 106, which was to be "for ever," too.

In the light of the foregoing, and all that has been written, what can we say regarding: "There is not a particle of evidence that he (Brigham) concocted it"?

Brethren, by what law was the church to gather, before 106 was given? It is rather queer that the Lord would command a people to gather, and not give them the law to govern them in so doing till years after.

Do not let us deceive ourselves with the idea that a statement from us, because of the position we occupy in the church, or by the use of a little arrogance, that we can make the people of God believe what we say, if it be not backed up by the truth. Truth is what stands the test of the closest scrutiny, and we should always be willing to have our works scrutinized to the very limit, in kindness and brotherly love of course, as Saints should never strive for mere mastery.

We believe we are as willing as any person in this church to defend any and every position taken by the church, if we can see and understand such position is taken in harmony with the revelations of God. To try to defend something we can not see is in harmony with the revelations of God, we would be a coward in the sight of God, and be stultifying the intelligence he has given us, besides receiving his disapproval, as we view it.

Our thought, perhaps, can not be better expressed than in the language of a brother holding one of the responsible positions in this church, from whom we received a letter some time ago:

I have but one way of deciding as to the merits of a thought or an idea relating to Christ's doctrine, and that is, it must agree with the fundamental principles of his doctrine: love, justice, equality, etc. Should any thought or idea be presented for my acceptance, it must agree with these principles; and I might add, it makes no difference how many scripture texts or purported words of the Lord may be given in support of it, if it fails to stand in the right relation to these foundation principles it does not go with me.

Another writer says there was a necessity for 106. Why? Because "the Saints then were like they are now. Some would not do their duty and comply with the law, as clearly shown in section 102: 3, and had to be urged to duty more than once. . . . Then the Lord, in the time of their trouble, answers, and emphasizes what he said in section 42: 10,"—and then quotes the first half of paragraph 1, of section 106.

Now let us all turn to 106 and 42:10, and read, and see how 42:10 is emphasized. Section 106 names four purposes, "building of mine house," "laying the foundation of Zion," "for the priesthood," and "debts of the presidency."

Section 42, paragraph 10: Here the Lord, like himself, in all ages, whenever he speaks or has spoken on finances, gives the poor mention first, or a prominent mention. He speaks of the poor twice, first, purchasing of land (for the public benefit of the church), second, to build houses of worship and building up of the New Jerusalem which is hereafter to be revealed. Now, as we said before, section 106 does not mention the poor, and yet it is to be a standing law for ever, if accepted must cut out everything that conflicts, for it surely makes itself paramount to every revelation.

We never could think that the position taken by an individual, which would not stand investigation, or had no real merit in the argument, was ever made any stronger to append a title to the signature, and trust our people will not be deceived by what any man says, but think and study for themselves, and compare the statements of all men with the "law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this," etc. To deny Latter Day Saints this privilege, is to deny them the privileges or promises of the gospel, as the promise is to all, "Knock, and it shall be opened," "Ask, and it shall be given you," etc.

Shall we, oh, shall we heed the beckoning of our Master and return to him as he so plainly invites us in section 83, paragraph 8? How can we doubt or parley any longer? This was given five years and eight months before section 106 is purported to have been given, and eleven years and nine months before section 106 was ever published, or the membership knew a thing about it, and only one year and seven months after the celestial law of God, section 42, the law he told his people he would give them if they would assemble at the Ohio (Kirtland), which was to assist them, thus, "that ye might escape the power of the enemy, and be gathered unto me a righteous people, without spot and blameless." (Doctrine and Covenants 38: 7.) Also see section 39, paragraph 4, "to bring forth Zion," etc. Now if this law, section 42, could make the saints of God righteous, and gather them to him a spotless people, and a blameless people, and bring about Zion conditions, or redeem Zion, please, please be consistent, brethren, and tell us what need have we of 106. Does God cross himself? No, no. May God help us to be consistent.

Now what does he say in section 83: 8:

And this condemnation resteth upon the children of Zion, even all; and they shall remain under this condemnation until they repent and remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon and the former commandments which I have given them, [this does not suggest the necessity of giving different law on the same subject five or six years later, does it?] not only to say, but to do according to that which I have written.

Section 70: 3 says, "Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship, even as I, the Lord, have appointed, or shall hereafter appoint unto any man. [And he makes it stronger if possible.] And, behold, none are exempt from this law who belong to the church of the living God," etc. Now, what was it that the Lord required of every man, even as he had appointed? "Nevertheless, inasmuch as they [in their stewardships] receive more than is needful for their necessities and wants, it shall be given into my storehouse," etc. "Thou shalt stand in the place of thy stewardship; . . . and if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse, that all things may be done according to that which I have said."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 14. No one exempt that has a stewardship, and every man is to be made a steward. (See verse 9.) Now, does it seem reasonable that he would appoint anything different later? And how can you make this agree with 106; this requiring all the increase, 106 but a tenth?

Will any one please tell us where the Book of Mormon teaches the paying of a tenth? True, it records a statement of history that Abraham paid a tenth, but even the same writer does not teach it as a law of God. But what did they teach and practice? "And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them." Is this authentic, brethren? What was it they taught? Note the following extracts, and then turn and read the connections:

For the sake of retaining a remission of your sins from day to day, that ye may walk guiltless before God, I would that ye should impart of your substance to the poor, every man according to that which he hath, such as feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, and administering to their relief, both spiritually and temporally, according to their wants, and see that all these things are done in wisdom and order: for it is not requisite that a man should run faster than he has strength.—Mosiah 2: 22, large edition.

Thus they were all equal, and they did all labor, every man according to his strength; and they did impart of their substance every man according to that which he had, to the poor, and the needy, and the sick, and the afflicted; and they did not wear costly apparel, yet they were neat and comely; and thus they did establish the affairs of the church.—Alma 1: 23, large edition.

And they taught, and did minister one to another; and they had all things common among them, every man dealing justly, one with another. And it came to pass that they did do all things, even as Jesus had commanded them.—3 Nephi 12: 9, 10, large edition.

And they had all things common among them, therefore there were not rich and poor, bond and free, but they were all made free, and partakers of the heavenly gift.—4 Nephi 1: 3, large edition.

They did just what Nephi said they should do:

And after Christ shall have risen from the dead, he shall show himself unto you, . . . and the words which he shall speak unto you, shall be the law which ye shall do.—2 Nephi 11: 30, large edition.

And when he shall manifest himself unto you in the flesh, the things which he shall say unto you, shall ye observe to do.—2 Nephi 14: 8, large edition.

How does this leave the tenth theory? Nephi goes on and tells them God showed him when they failed to keep these they would fall, as history shows they did in about one hundred and sixty-six years after. Does it not seem as if we ought to look around and see what we are doing?

Again, can any one tell us where the Doctrine and Covenants, or the revelations prior to section 83 teach a tenth? "Oh," says one, "that is easy. Section 64: 5." Now, brethren, candidly, how can you make this mean a tenth in the light of sections 18: 5; 42: 8-10, 15; 44: 3; 49: 3; 51: 1; 58: 7; 70: 2, 3; 72: 3; 77 entire; 81: 3-5, etc., etc.? Why, 106 itself does not teach that tithing or tithe means a tenth, and the advocates of the tenth will have to go somewhere else for their definition. Section 106 says the surplus is tithing, or "the beginning of tithing," and the surplus may be any amount. True it says you must pay one tenth annually thereafter, but does not define tithe to be a tenth. But it does designate surplus as tithing three times: "And this [surplus property] shall be the beginning of the tithing," "those who have thus been tithed" [paid their surplus], "all those who gather to the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties." Hence, according to 106 tithing and tithed do not designate a tenth but surplus.

A tenth may be tithing (when it is the amount of the surplus), but tithing can not be defined as a tenth, from the revelations of God. Just the same as a fifth may be tithing (when it is the amount of the surplus), but tithing can not be defined as a fifth from the revelations of God.

The mere fact that men paid a tenth under the Mosaic law, and called it tithes, does not warrant us in limiting the meaning of the word tithe to tenth, from a scriptural standpoint or any other.

Now brethren, I believe I am honest in my views, and know I have been earnestly seeking light in the matter for a long time; and I have no disposition to believe that you who see otherwise are not honest in your views; but we must all admit one thing; that we can not both be guided by the Spirit of truth, as it will not teach me one thing and you another. One of us may be right, and both may be wrong. One thing sure, something is wrong. Now, what is to be the remedy? "To the law and to the testimony," you say. Yes, we have both been trying that, in the honesty and earnestness of our souls, I hope, and where are we? No closer together than at the start. Now, let me suggest a remedy. God loves to have his children come to him in humility and faith. "Knock, and it shall be opened." "Ask, and it shall be given you." "If any lack wisdom," etc. You know the many similar scriptures presented to the outside world. Why not take some of our own medicine? Why not humble ourselves as children of God should, and take this matter to God in fasting and prayer, and ask God to make it plain to all of us, every son and daughter of his kingdom, so the law can be made operative and Zion be redeemed, and we all enjoy the fruits of our labors, and the choicest blessings of our God? To this end shall we labor, trusting you may see fit to do the same, is the earnest prayer of

Your brother in Christ,

F. M. WELD.

At the bottom of every successful performance—whether it be the selling of a ticket or the rounding off of a business career—at the bottom, I am convinced, is enthusiasm. A man must believe in a thing before he can make others believe in it; but more than believing, he must be enthusiastic. Out of enthusiasm comes initiative, the first essential; optimism, courage, and perseverance, and all of those sturdy qualities which count for success. Without enthusiasm a man has neither inclination nor capacity, and he is sure to fail. Get interested in your work, learn to believe in it; convince yourself that it is the very best "proposition" you ever had. Enthusiasm is steam; carry a full head and you can make the grades all right. Lose it and you are liable to "die" on the main line.

Graceland College: While I am not a member of your church, or, in other words, I am not a Saint, (oh, how I wish I was!) my brother sends me the HERALD and the Autumn Leaves, which I enjoy reading a great deal. I shall offer you a dollar. Hope that it will help a little towards Graceland College; for I love to hear the good work of our Lord going on. It seems that you are all such earnest workers. I hope that I may have the earnest prayers of your church. I pray that you may not forget me. Inclosed you will find the dollar. Hope you will accept it from an outsider. It will help a little on the church.

Your friend,

MRS. G. M. WALK.

WADENA, Minnesota, January 26, 1909.

Dear Herald: I feel very weak in trying to write to your valuable pages. But still I think it a duty that each Saint should take part. Were it not for the HERALD, I hardly know what we should do, as it is the only gospel food that we have here in Wadena. There are no Saints living here, and we feel very lonely at times for the want of meeting with the Saints. Dear Saints, when you kneel before God in solemn prayer, do remember us to him who knows all our needs, that we may be found faithful to the end, and be permitted to enter in at the gate of the beautiful city of God.

Yours in the faith,

MRS. WM. J. SPAULDING.

Minnesota Settlement,

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan, Canada, Jan. 25, 1909.

Dear Herald: Perhaps some of you would like to hear from one of your outposts in the Northwest. We are yet alive, in spite of the extreme cold weather, which we have to endure at times this winter. I see a Winnipeg paper gives the coldest day this winter as forty below zero, but we think they forgot to get up in the morning early enough to know just how cold it was, as there were a few mornings when the thermometer registered fifty below in this region. It has been cold enough, to say the least.

I was reading an article by Bro. Lake, from the South Sea Islands, in Autumn Leaves, where he mentions "the cold nights of long ago." It is not so long ago with us; but we try to be prepared for such emergencies, and so have nothing to complain of.

The first Sunday in this year was so cold and stormy that no one ventured out to the schoolhouse, for Sunday-school or meetings. And several evenings, when the Religio members were expecting to meet, weather has not been favorable. So we have held only one session in the last month, I believe, and there were only a few out that night, January 22. There were seven in our sleighload, and we got off the road on our way home, and were pretty well lost on the prairies for a little while. It was snowing so hard, and so thick in the air, we could hardly see the horses' heads; and so much snow on the ground, and the wind drifting the snow so badly, we could not see a sign of the road, though a main-traveled one. Even the horses could not keep the road. So you see it is often unsafe to venture away from home in the evenings; so I am afraid there will be little to report in the Religio line. But the weather has to be very bad indeed, if we do not hold Sunday-school and meetings on Sundays.

There has been very little missionary work done in this region for over two years. Bro. Charles Derry preached a few splendid sermons around here and at Saskatoon, which we were permitted to hear, a year ago last summer. And Brn. G. H. Hilliard and J. L. Mortimer were with our branch two days last August. Also last November, Brn. U. W. Greene and J. L. Mortimer gave us soul-cheering sermons. Truly the harvest is great, and laborers few. But let us all try to keep the faith, wherever we are. Now, if I could write something interesting, as Sr. Emma Burton can, or Bro. Burton, or Bro. and Sr. Lake, or scores of others, I should be glad. I often think if Sr. Burton's life history is ever published in book form, or Bro. Charles Derry's, I shall be very anxious to secure a copy.

Your sister in the one faith,

EMMA L. ANDERSON.

STEWARTSVILLE, Missouri, February 7, 1909.

Dear Herald: We have been living here nearly six months and I must say the Saints of Stewartsville have acted towards us as Saints should toward their brethren who have left all their friends to come to the land of Zion, and I pray God will bless them for so doing. I have often been impressed to bear my testimony through the HERALD, of the great blessings God has bestowed on me. I have been healed several times when the doctors said I would die. I am one of those five children that were healed of diphtheria that you read about in the Synopsis of the Bible. Elder Cornish administered to us and we were all healed at once.

I know that God is in this work, for I have proved it in many ways. I hope the Saints will aid me with their prayers that I may not fall by the way, for at times I feel that the road I travel is very rough and I am afraid to try to walk alone, but I know if I try to do my part God will not leave me alone, for this is a promise he has given that I am thankful for. Again I will ask all to pray God that he will relieve me of the terrible pain I suffer from rheumatism. I know I will be healed if it is for my good, for God has been very merciful to me all my life. My daily prayer is that God will bless his people and hasten the gathering of them to Zion.

NETTIE DIEM.

VAN BUREN, Indiana, February 9, 1909.

Saints' Herald: As I am away from home and the church and am denied church privileges for a while, I thought I would write to the HERALD. Our branch at Knox, Indiana, is about the same as usual. A few faithful ones keep things moving; but we have always noticed that "the few" are the ones to do the work after all. A few weeks ago, while Bro. H. E. Moler was holding services in our branch, a prophecy was given which was very comforting to those present. The statement was made that if the few present would be faithful, and do their duty, they would be blessed. This promise was given at a time when things looked very discouraging to some of us; and did much, I believe, to keep us faithful, and to continue doing our duty.

Our Religio, which was organized a year ago last November, is doing very well. Our numbers are few, but those who attend seem very much interested, and enjoy studying the Book of Mormon lessons as found in the Quarterlies. We believe we can learn more of the Book of Mormon and its teachings by studying these lessons than in any other way. The members of the society are better able now to talk on Book of Mormon subjects, and to defend the book, than they were when the society was first organized.

We have some members belonging who do not belong to the church who take quite an interest. We lost one of our Religio members by death Christmas morning, Ora Pierson, aged about sixteen. She was a sweet girl, and loved by all who knew her. She was our organist when at our Religio meetings. We all miss her very much; but we believe she is better off than we are. She had an experience that gives one faith in the life to come, just before she died. When Ora was about three years old her mother died, and of course all she knew of her mother was what was told her; for she was too young to remember. Ora had been sick for several weeks, and the morning she died the nurse heard the sweetest music, which seemed to come right to the door; and Ora leaned forward as if listening, too; then she looked up and said, "Mamma, I see you. Mamma, I know you," and was gone. The following Sunday, Bro. S. W. L. Scott preached the funeral-sermon to a large number of relatives and friends. This latter-day work is grand, and if we do our part I know we shall be blessed, and when our time comes to leave this world it is possible to leave an evidence to our friends that there is in reality a life beyond. When we think of the gospel and of the good it brings to us, why should we be discouraged? And yet there are times when it seems that life is not worth living; but those are no doubt the times when we look only on the dark side. It seems though that we must have trials, or we will not know how to appreciate the blessings when they come. I have found that many of our dark seasons have been caused by our not doing our duty, and becoming careless. I find, too, that trials make us stronger, and more faithful. I can truly say that my only desire is to live as God wants me to, although we get out of the right path sometimes, but we "try, try again."

I wish to state that our branch president, Bro. J. B. Prettyman, has been trying to place the gospel before his neighbors by having them subscribe for the Ensign, while it was put down to half price. He got between thirty-five and forty non-members to take the paper. We think this one good way to warn our neighbors.

Are there any Saints living near or in Marion or Van Buren, Indiana? If so, my sister, who lives four miles southeast of Van Buren, would be pleased to have them call on her. She often goes to both of these places to trade. She is a member of the church, but her husband is not. He is interested in religion, and says when he finds the church that teaches according to the Bible that he is ready to join it. We would be very glad to have him become acquainted with some of our elders and talk with them.

If any elders happen to pass this way, my sister would be glad to have them call. Her address is, Mrs. Alex. Botkin, Van Buren, Indiana, R. F. D. 27.

A sister in the faith,

MISS B. E. LOHSE.

MANCHESTER, England, January 24, 1909.

Dear Herald: How we love to read your pages, and the many beautiful letters from our brothers and sisters in the different countries. How they all seem to be in harmony with each other in bearing testimony to the beauty and truthfulness of the everlasting gospel, which is so dear to my soul; dear and precious because it has done so much for me and mine.

A few weeks ago we had our Bro. John W. Rushton with us for a week. We did our best to make it known to the people outside the gospel by having posters scattered about the vicinity, informing them of the subjects, which furnished food for thought to every thinking mind. Our brother enjoyed good liberty, and was so entertaining that all were interested to the very last moment. One man, who had been to the meetings, spoke very highly of the ability of our brother.

We have just had our quarterly conference, and again we were favored by two good sermons from Brn. J. Grundy and J. W. Taylor. In the evening Bro. J. W. Rushton was the speaker, taking for his subject, Custom or habit, which referred to the life of our Lord Jesus Christ. Good attention was paid up to the last, and we all feel thankful to God that he has so blessed our brother in this latter-day work. More than that, we have confidence in our brother, that he has the ability to take care of the work in this country. He does, without doubt, prove again and again that he is a servant of God sent of God. May God continue to spare his life, and bless his efforts to the good of humanity.

The gospel has done much for me. It has made me a better wife, mother, and neighbor; also done great things for my husband, also my children. And many times I wonder why we were favored to see the light of the gospel. We hope and pray that our loved ones, also all our neighbors, may see the light, and thus realize that life is sweet and worth living. We desire to pray and labor to this end; for without this ambition we realize we have nothing to live for.

The Lord has heard and answered my prayers many, many times. The Lord has healed me, in the face of the statements of the best doctors in Manchester that I should never walk again. Surely, the Lord has done great things for me; whereof I am glad, and to whom shall I go but to him to spend and be spent to his honor and glory? Again and again has God done according to his word, and opened the windows of heaven, and poured out his blessings, which have made my heart rejoice.

I am sorry to see the work suffer on account of the Saints not paying their tithing and free-will offerings. I bear testimony that we are blessed more in giving than receiving. Now, dear Saints, make an effort to fulfill this command, and thereby prove God to be according to his word. Trusting that God will bless the efforts of his servants everywhere, that his kingdom may soon come, and his will be done on earth as angels do it in heaven, is the sincere prayer of 35 Barlow Street, Bradford.

Your sister,

MRS. SCHOFIELD.

BONSALL, California, February 11, 1909.

Dear Herald: As I have never written to your pages, and as we love to read your many letters and articles that are so entertaining and so instructive, I thought I would try to write a few words. I was baptized November 17, 1907, by Bro. Albert Carmichael, and can truly say that I love the latter-day work, and know of a truth that it is the work of God. My husband is a priest, and we are trying to do what we can for the advancement of the cause. There are a few Saints in a radius of six miles, and we meet together once a month for sacrament and social service, and my husband talks whenever he has a chance; sometimes on the roadside, and other times in family gatherings. We have many things to encourage us in the faith, although we are so far away from any branch that we do not hear an elder more than once or twice in a year; and, oh, how we long to be with the Saints!

In my short experience I have had many inspiring dreams and visions, one of which I will relate, and you may publish it with the interpretation given by my husband, if you think it worthy.

In my dream I thought my husband and I were visiting some friends of his in Escondido, a small town twenty miles away. These people we were visiting, I never knew nor heard of before. We were sitting in a room in which there were three or four besides ourselves. My husband, with his back toward me, was talking to others who were seated around a table.

The gentleman of the house, who had been entertaining me, arose and went to his bookcase, took out a book, the most wonderful book I ever saw, so beautiful! Pure black morocco back, pages gilded with pure gold except where the printing was, which were pure white with pure black type and so plain; and with it coming toward me, I exclaimed with emphasis, "Why, there is that gold Bible"; realizing to myself that it was the Book of Mormon. I supposed my husband would hear me, and surely turn in order to see it; but, to my surprise, he paid no attention, being interested with the others, although I was sure he heard me; and, in my own mind, I knew he should be very much interested in it.

The man sat down beside me, opened the book, read some of it to me. But I was so much interested in looking and trying to read out of it myself, that I did not understand a word he read; and the time was so short that about all I could read was "_____ Church of Jesus Christ." The above dash represents the word, as I remember, being so glimmered by my excitement, to be "Reorganized." However, as soon as he saw that I was reading out of it myself, and not listening to him, he immediately arose, closed the book, and commenced to explain to me the race of people that this book is the history of. He said, Now this race of people do not believe as we do, and are altogether a different people from what we are, and they are nothing for us to go by (putting the book in the case the while). I thought, Well, that may be the way you believe. But from what I had read and learned, I never could believe it. When this man produced the book, I thought, Well, these people must be Mormons; but after he had explained the book to me, I was of the opinion they were not.

My husband's interpretation: The gold Bible is the Book of Mormon. The man is the world who accept the book as a history of the prehistoric race, whom science and research have proven without doubt did exist; but do not accept the divine authenticity of it.

Hold the fort for Jesus is coming,

With Saints on earth to reign;

Wave the banner through the gloaming,

That all may knowledge gain.

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. W. A. JOURNIGAN.

ROSE CITY, Michigan, February 10, 1909.

Dear Herald: We are still rejoicing in the gospel, and although the earth has on her white mantle for the winter and the weather is away below zero, we are as warm as ever in the good work. The cold weather does not stop us from working for our Master. The work in general is progressing up here, and many are our blessings which encourage us from day to day. We are striving to hold up the gospel banner in spite of all opposition, learning by experience that there is no time for the Saints to idle away in order to take the glad tidings of great joy to every creature. Many, many have not heard it yet, and the responsibility rests upon us who have heard it to take it to others. The time is fast approaching when those who will not take up the sword must needs flee to Zion for safety. This world is in distress because of sin and wickedness upon the face thereof. The Prophet Nephi said by inspiration that when it was fully ripe in iniquity it would be destroyed, except those faithful ones who were numbered with Israel. It is our duty to warn our neighbors by a walk of purity before them and our Father. When I think of the condition of the nations I truly feel that we must stand in holy places, as he has commanded, in order to escape destruction.

The angel message came to me two years ago last April; it indeed was a message from heaven, and I can truthfully say I have spent the happiest hours of my young life in working for the Master, more especially in the Religio work. I love to study the ancient record of our country in the Religio. As one who is engaged in district Religio work, and being interested in the work everywhere, will say that it is advancing in our district and many are being added to our number from time to time. We were pleased to note the interest manifested by our Religians in studying and learning the lessons as outlined in the Quarterly. Have we not much to be thankful for? Truly, at the head of the list of all societies stands the Religio, on which God has set his seal; one wherein is taught the beautiful plan of salvation, the commandments of Christ; one which, having divine approval, was brought forth for the protection and schooling of the young people, preparing them for their individual work of life. In working faithfully on those committees, has it not a tendency to make us pure? But we must be in possession of the Holy Spirit in order to make a success of our work. The Spirit cometh through fasting and prayer. This society, as the Lord has said, will help to establish Zion, the pure in heart, if we diligently work therein.

We must attain to a condition of equality if we expect to live in Zion. While some have thought that depends upon the money matters, yet the writer does not understand it that way. Something else before that. Let us refer to the dear old book which we are studying. We read when Alma gave up the judgment-seat and went out to establish the affairs of the church and restore equality among them which had vanished because of transgression, the first thing he did was to rebuke them for their pride. After he had succeeded in putting down this great evil, the record says, they no longer wore costly apparel, but had all things neat and comely. They did humble themselves and imparted of their substance to the poor. I believe, for the church to be in order in this day, that the same condition must exist, the same commandments must be observed. Nothing but the keeping of all of Christ's commands will bring about a condition of equality among Latter Day Saints. One important one is recorded in Doctrine and Covenants 42: 12: "Thou shalt not be proud in thy heart; let all thy garments be plain, and their beauty the beauty of the work of thine own hands." Whosoever is not keeping this commandment is transgressing the celestial law. "They that can not abide a celestial law can not abide a celestial glory." Pride was the overthrow of the Jaredite and Nephite nations, and it is entering into the church of latter days. Shall we let it continue or put it far from us and walk humbly day by day that we may abide the day of his (Christ's) coming? Only by love and unity can such a condition exist. If we love others as ourselves we will not see them want, but will divide what we have with them.

The lessons which we have been studying in the Jaredite record have been interesting and instructive; its history is being repeated in our day. Truly the signs of the times can be easily discerned by those who wish to know them.

Desiring to be humble, obedient, pure in thought, word, and deed, and praying and longing for the redemption of Zion, I remain,

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MISS MARY FLASHMAN.

FAIRFIELD, Illinois, February 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD of March 8, 1884, volume 31, number 10, there is a letter dated Papeete, Tahiti, January 10, 1884, from Thomas Coffin, called Tamu Pasteur.

He wrote that on a night of October, 1878: I dreamed the heavens were illuminated . . . there were thunderings and lightnings, and I beheld the mighty and wonderful works of God, those that show forth his majesty and power. I trembled and feared greatly, I knew not what to do. My reflection was: "Is this that last, that terrible day of the Lord?" But a voice whispered to me; "No, it is not, fear not, for much work is yet to be done, the conversion of the human family." I then saw a large, a very large ship, somewhat similar to men-of-war that we have seen here; and I heard a voice saying to me, "By this shall our word be sent forth, throughout every corner of the habitable globe. By this shall men learn that thou art God, and God alone." A short time after, . . . and then the ship appeared again, light as a cork, with her sails spread, ready as it were, O Lord, to carry thy word to every land. As I looked and beheld, as it were, bright and holy ones appeared, and the whole was overshadowed as with a bright cloud; and a voice said unto me: "By this, and by my messengers shall my word and my doctrine be carried to every land." It appeared . . . that there were angels crying in accents of love; "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth and good will toward men." I then . . . saw a beautiful boat. In it were persons adorned in bright garments and I thought to myself . . . Are not these mentioned in the first chapter of Hebrews, "Who maketh his angels spirits, and his messengers a flame of fire"?

I read yesterday in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of February 9, "that the American battleship fleet of sixteen vessels had just left Gibraltar homeward bound across the Atlantic Ocean that it would be due at Hampton Roads in two weeks' time; no hindering causes preventing." I believe God inspired President Roosevelt, the Secretary of the Navy, and the other officers of the admiralty in their efforts in equipping, furnishing, officering, and manning this battleship fleet, and in sending them forth to circumnavigate our globe. I read, "Their ships are in as good a condition now as when they left Hampton Roads on their long voyage. That they have been able to make all necessary repairs themselves, without outside aid." Such skillful officering and manning the fleet and guiding its movements, and with such complete success, is unparalleled in the history of the human race. "Surely, God is in it."

President Roosevelt was right, that the "voyage has been a promoter of peace amongst the nations." Other nations will not dare to cope with such marvelous skill in the handling of so large a fleet. They will not deem it prudent or advisable to say, "Let slip the dogs of war." God, by the American battleship fleet, is preparing the way for American Latter Day Saint elders to carry the gospel of Jesus Christ unto every land on the habitable globe, under the protection of the American flag and the American navy. "None shall dare to insult them with impunity."

JOHN GORDON SMITH.

BLISSFIELD, Michigan, February 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: On this the anniversary of Lincoln's natal date, we jot you a few "wee dotty dimples" from this new opening. The few Saints here have rented a hall, and we have occupied about eighteen times. The audiences have increased nightly and the town is "stirred to its depths," we are informed. Last evening a fine audience was present, and filled the structure.

Many are believing the work as far as investigated. Prejudice, which predominated to a great extent, is prostrate now. We overheard a few statements last evening expressive of present feelings which show which way the winds blow. One intelligent lady who has been a regular attendant said: "I would dislike to go back to the United Brethren Church now; after living on manna, I would hate to go back to straw." I thought: What would you say if you were in the kingdom? A gentleman of influence said: "I am open to conviction; if there is truth which God wants me to have, I am going to get it." The ministers have sounded the alarm, and the warning is the usual one: "Stay away." One other gentleman said: "They may say what they please, the preachers have no bands on me."

Well, we could baptize more than a dozen here, but do not propose to admit them untaught. The important work of the missionary force of the cross is, "Go teach all nations." And as it is written, "They shall all be taught of God." There are some fine people investigating here, who, I apprehend, will come into the fold understandingly.

Bro. Granger is with us, opening and closing the services, and welcoming the new attendants. The Saints here number seven, and they seem zealous and rejoiced. We organized them into a Sunday-school January 31. The work is new and requires attention. A great work can be accomplished in these parts, if a minister could be placed in this, the eastern part of the district. More anon.

S. W. L. SCOTT.

JOLIET, Illinois, February 13, 1909.

Editors Herald: At this writing we are cared for at the home of Bro. and Sr. Charles Newman, who are glad to have us here. Since we last wrote you we have been busily engaged in the work, both preaching the word and visiting from house to house. We succeeded in stirring the Brighamite camp here, and after a labor of about three months among the people, departed for about a month, to look after the work elsewhere, a part of which was spent at Piper City.

The Saints there were very much in the spirit of this work and did not forget that the elder needed something to wear as well as a little car-fare now and then. Through their kindness we were permitted to spend the holidays with our loved ones at home.

Returning to this place shortly after the New-year, I found that my former labors were bearing fruit, and despite the cold weather we had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the liquid grave, to be raised new creatures in Christ. Two of the number had been misled by the Utah people by their cunning in presenting the principles of the gospel along with the Book of Mormon. The other is a grandson of our aged Sr. Agnes Parks, of this city, a very promising young man.

We have a number of other people interested and it is altogether possible that we will have to trouble the water again ere long. May the good work continue until the honest in heart are redeemed.

In the mind of the writer a little more house to house tracting and talking would accomplish more good, and would result in awakening the people to the fact that we have a message worthy of their notice and consideration.

Let us try to be ready for any question and have an answer for every one that asks us of the hope that is in us. May God hasten the work in its time.

In the one hope of salvation,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

RENTON, Washington, February 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: As I have been requested by so many of this district to let them know what I am doing, and my whereabouts, and as I can not write to them all individually, I take this method of informing them. Since the first of the year, Bro. J. D. Stead and I have labored together. I find in him a congenial companion and an able expounder of the faith.

The first forty-one days of this year, we preached thirty-seven times, and were rained out twice. One of the times we were rained out, only one person came to the schoolhouse. He was the Methodist preacher of the little village. He seemed real anxious to learn our positions, so we explained to him the best we could for about an hour. In those forty-one days we labored in Riverside, Bow, Holmes Harbor, and Langley; had a good interest in all of them, especially the last two places. Holmes Harbor is a new place. There are only three families of Saints living there, Brn. Premo, Plum, and Lovejoy. Mr. Spencer, who owns the hall, gave it to us free of charge, also permitted us to remove his organ from his home to the hall. His kindness we appreciated very much. Sr. Lovejoy presided at the organ for us, so we had some very good singing. We appreciated the kindness of the Saints there also. Here is where Bro. Stead dug his first clams. It would take a "Siwash" (or Washington Indian) gang to beat him. From Holmes Harbor, we came to Langley, on a little launch called Ruby Marie. We held forth in Langley nearly two weeks, closing with a full house. We believe we will soon have an ingathering there. We have some good Saints at Langley.

Our district conference convened last Saturday and Sunday in Seattle. Had a very large delegation in attendance, and all seemed to enjoy themselves.

Not so many have been baptized in this district this year as in other years; but I am sure more people have heard the gospel. There must be a sowing time before a reaping time. So we hope the good seed sown will continue to be watered, and we will wait patiently for God to give the increase.

My love continues to grow stronger for God and this latter-day work, as its beauties continue to unfold to my mental vision. I am anxious to live so I may have a clear conception of my duties to God and my fellow men; and, as they may be made clear to me, my prayer is that God may give me strength to perform them.

Your brother in Christ,

GEORGE W. THORBURN.

AKRON, Iowa, February 17, 1909.

Editors Herald: As I have never before written to your pages, thought I would do so. We are isolated from all church privileges here. It seems good to have the church papers to read. It keeps us in touch with what is going on all around us. There is one more family of Latter Day Saints here, Bro. and Sr. Anway, and children, and one dear old sister, who is ever ready to lend a helping hand to speed this grand and glorious work along.

My husband and I are both young and need the prayers of all the Saints. We are trying to live so as to raise our three little girls, so that they will be ready to obey the gospel when they reach that age. I know this work is true, and want you all to pray for me that I may ever be found faithful.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. PEARL MANN.

EDGERTON, Alberta.

Editors Herald: Just a few words to your columns, which will be of interest to many friends in Michigan and elsewhere. Wife and I, accompanied by our boy, Frank, left McBain, Michigan, on the fifteenth day of April, 1908, to try the realities of a new home in sunny Alberta. Previous to our coming here, we seemed to grow very discontented, and talked of moving to different places, until in the month of March and April our attention was drawn to this place by reading certain letters that were written by Saints located here (the Northwest). We arrived in Loydminster, a town on the Canadian Northern Railroad, on the 20th of April, the weather being fine; and a sixty-mile drive over the rolling prairie to our present location convinced us that there was something to be admired in this great prairie west; and, on arriving, we shook glad hands with quite a number of hospitable Latter Day Saints, who had gathered here from different parts of the United States and Canada, the Saints here having been organized into a branch by J. L. Mortimer, and under the oversight of our estimable brother, Elder Clyde Walrath.

In September last, I filed on a quarter section of land joining the townsite of the above-named place, erected a suitable building for store and restaurant, and am now comfortably located, enjoying (?) Alberta winter at from zero to sixty-five below, doing a nice business.

At present we feel encouraged, knowing that God had a hand in our coming here, as we feel that the harvest is truly great. Brn. U. W. Greene and J. L. Mortimer gave us a visit, delivered some educational discourses, and assured us the Lord had brought us here for a purpose, and that there were some to obey the gospel, which was a confirmation of what had previously been made known to us through one of the handmaidens of the Lord, that there was "one from the hill and another from the valley" to obey the message. Multitudes? No! One here and another there; and in meekness we must seek them out, ever praying that we all, every man, may learn our duty, and wisely perform the duty intrusted to us.

By the way, the writer had the privilege of visiting the city of Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, the battle-ground of our worthy brother, Elder Alvin Knisley, and heard some pleasing comments on how he ably met one of the misrepresentatives of the "faith of our fathers," the Catholic priest. Held some meetings there in the homes of Brn. Louis Gendren and Alexander Portceans, who were still in the faith, and zealous for its advancement.

Hopefully in the conflict,

F. A. ROWE.

RUTH, Michigan, February 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have just been reading the letters of the HERALD, and how it makes my heart rejoice to read of the many manifestations received through our heavenly Father's goodness to his people who will do his will and keep his commandments! It always gives me fresh courage to press on in this grand and noble cause that we are enlisted in, when I hear how the Lord blesses his children; and it is my prayer, and heart's desire, to live in such a way that the Lord may see fit to bestow his blessings on me and my beloved family from day to day, and help us more fully to overcome the evil things of this world that are bound to cross our path each day; and that my companion and I may set an example worthy of imitation to our little family and to those that are around us, the Lord being our helper—for without his great help we can do nothing. I am a mother of three small children, the oldest being nine years old and the youngest three; and I know I am greatly in need of the patience it takes to raise three small children; but it is my desire in my weakness to practice patience more fully, and bring my family up in a way that is pleasing in my Master's sight.

It will be twenty years in April since I came into this work, and I have never regretted the step I took that day; but must say I regret that I have not lived better than I have, especially in my younger days. I was only twelve years old at that time, and the world has so many things to draw a weak struggler aside from the path of righteousness; and many times I fell short of doing that which was right. And, as I grew older sometimes the thought came to me that I would get baptized over again, and lead a different life after that; but my heavenly Father knew that I was trying in my weak way to overcome all evil, and do better from day to day; so in my patriarchal blessing, given in Detroit, by Elder J. H. Lake, October 28, 1907, it was said to me that my past sins are forgiven. Oh, it filled my heart with joy to know that our kind and loving Father looked down in mercy upon me, and was willing to forgive me all my shortcomings.

I have much to be thankful for to my heavenly Father. Ofttimes when sickness and trials of this earth would press heavily upon me, and I would go to him in prayer, he would give sunshine to my soul, and make me feel to rejoice along life's rugged road. I have also had several visions that have been a grand comfort to me; and I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my companion and brother who are young in this work (one was baptized the 4th of July, and the other the 5th, 1908, at McGregor), that the dear One above may see fit to bestow his blessings upon them from day to day, and that they may grow in grace and in knowledge of this great cause, that they may so live that others that are around them in darkness yet may see and say they are trying to do that which is pleasing in his sight, and be the means of doing good for his cause, and bring others into his fold, and walk that straight and narrow way which leads to life everlasting.

I also have four brothers and one sister out of the church. It is my prayer that He will give them a hearing ear and an understanding heart, and a desire to search the scriptures, to learn which is the true church, and that they may be enlightened to know, and have a desire to embrace the same. If Elder Levi Phelps should happen to read this letter, I wish to say that my heart is longing to see his smiling face once more in our midst here. He was the one that brought the gospel's message to our family, that is, my mother, father, myself, and one of my aunts. My maiden name was Laura Bender, so he will know who it is.

I ask an interest in your prayers, that I may prove faithful to the end, and practice patience more fully. My prayers are for all of God's people, and for the advancement of this great cause.

Yours in bonds,

SISTER A. GREUNISER.

OELWEIN, Iowa, February 24, 1909.

Editors Herald: This morning I have felt it a duty to write a few lines and send you. I wish to renew my HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves, as they are a great comfort to me in my lonely hours, as my dear husband and life companion was taken from me one year ago this morning. But the Lord has stood by me, and has comforted me. He has blessed me in body, in mind, and with his Holy Spirit, as he promised me in my blessing, and in many ways, for which I praise him. My heart is sad at times to see those who have once been workers in our branch now cold and caring nothing for the Lord's work. While there are times that trials come that make me feel sad and depressed, I feel thankful that I have obeyed the true gospel, and the Spirit of God is with me and makes me rejoice; for I know that it is only a short time at the most when I shall lay down the burden of life and meet those I long to meet, God helping me to bear with patience to the end.

MRS. M. DEWALD.

RUNNELLS, Iowa, February 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am sending you notice of the death of our esteemed sister, Grandma Smith, of Baxter, Iowa. She has long been a faithful member and supporter of the church. Bro. James Smith, with his family, moved to Jasper County, Iowa, in the dark days of the late Rebellion of 1861 to 1865. They landed in Iowa in the spring of 1862. It was in the winter of 1868 that Elder Gordon E. Deuel came into Jasper County, preaching the angel message, and received for his hire Bro. and Sr. James Smith, and Bro. and Sr. W. C. Nirk, who for more than forty years have been standard-bearers, bringing honor and glory to the church by lives of splendid example. And to-day the most persistent enemies of the gospel restored, without a single exception, acknowledge the superior qualifications of these veteran Saints of God. Bro. C. Scott and myself had arranged for a visit among some of the old friends and Saints of the Des Moines District, who were endeared to us by our associations with them as ministers of the gospel of Christ, many of whom Bro. Scott had not seen for some eight or ten years. Our first stop was at the Concord Branch, where the seed was first sown by our veteran brother, Elder Kephart, followed by Scott and others. As a result of the united efforts of the missionary force there have been gathered out many precious souls, who are now Saints not to be ashamed of. I am told that Bro. Kephart made a request for the use of a church located at what is known as Hamonsburg, four miles from what is now Concord Branch, and, being refused the building, he predicted that the church would yet be surrounded by Saints. Bro. Kephart, God has fulfilled your prediction, and I am sure he will yet more fully make it apparent and literal. By the aid of our energetic Bro. and Sr. F. Wells, myself, and others the missionary force have brought into the fold, until I could point to a good faithful Saint within a radius of ten miles, at any point of the compass from the Hamonsburg church. Brethren, lift up your heads and rejoice.

We were to leave for Milo, February 4, but on the 3d received a message asking us to come to Montour, Iowa, to preach a funeral-sermon; so, instead of going with Bro. Scott to Milo, I took train for Des Moines, on the 3d inst., and landed in Montour the morning of the 4th inst., and found the corpse to be that of Mrs. James F. Mattingly, living near Garwin, not a member of the church, but who has a son, Henry Mattingly, residing at Nevada, Iowa, who was baptized into the church a few years ago, I think, by Elder J. S. Roth.

Through the instrumentality of Sr. Mary Kennell, I secured a new opening for the preaching of the gospel, at a school-house near Garwin, and in the Mattingly neighborhood, where I held a week or ten days' services. These services were attended by the Mattingly family, hence the reason, partially, at least, for holding the body until Friday for a Latter Day Saint minister. I am in hopes the good Lord will lead some of these dear people into the fold. Mrs. Mattingly's maiden name was Currilla Walker. She was born in Flemming County, Kentucky, in 1836, where she was married to J. F. Mattingly, who, in 1872, moved to Farna County, Iowa, where they have resided until the death of Mrs. Mattingly, which occurred February 1, 1909. The funeral was preached in the Methodist Episcopal church, at Montour; interment in the Montour Cemetery. The large attendance at the funeral, with such unfavorable weather, speaks louder than words of the place she held in the esteem and affections of her friends and neighbors. I joined Bro. Scott at Milo Saturday evening, the 6th, where we held forth until the 12th inst.; and, notwithstanding the weather was dreadful, and roads very bad, we had a good hearing, and an enjoyable time.

On the 13th inst. we were taken across country by Bro. and Sr. William Griffin, to the home of Bro. and Sr. F. Wells. The roads were about as rough as roads can get, and it rained and sleeted the major part of the time we were trying to make eight miles over roads that were quite conducive to a splendid appetite, and we had it when we drove into the yard. Well, best of all, you could smell fumes of preachers' delight as soon as we entered the yard. Now it is of no avail for me to tell you what followed; but suffice it to say that when we got our feet under that table groaning with good things, that stomach trouble changed its form, and there was a little more "fowl" in the ministry.

Bro. W. Lettington came after us and took us to Sandyville, and landed us safely over the ruts into the home of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Knox. This is home indeed, and for many years the missionaries have found a glorious welcome with these veterans of the cause, and all members of the family have endeared themselves to the missionaries by their kind and jovial and courteous treatment—eh, Brn. Sorensen and Sheldon? Bro. Knox and wife stood alone in the support of the work in their neighborhood for years, but their efforts were eventually rewarded by the gathering in of some seven or eight noble souls, who are making every effort to warn their neighbors. They have a place of worship, and a good little Sunday-school. Our stay there was pleasant, and our meetings much more largely attended than expected, owing to the condition of roads and weather.

On Tuesday morning, I received the intelligence of the death of Grandma Smith, and left Baxter to perform the sad duties of such occasions, leaving Bro. Scott basking in the sunlight of the association of the little band of hungry (spiritually hungry) Saints at Sandyville, where he remained until the 18th, when he came to Runnells to visit old-time Saints, on the old stamping-ground of earlier days. I joined him Friday morning, and we are holding forth with good interest. May God bless his Saints, is my prayer.

W. CHRISTY.

MONTROSE, Iowa.

Dear Herald: This glorious gospel is not new to me. I embraced it nearly forty years ago. Was baptized by Bro. Burley, who departed this life many years ago. Since I embraced this work, I find our heavenly Father is not slack concerning his promises. He said, if we would do his will we should know for ourselves. He has given me an understanding, that I know this work is true. I have had many evidences of the truth; have been healed by the power of God many times. There is nothing in this life that can give such joy and happiness to one, as the gospel of the Son of God. My desires are to do all the good I can to help this great latter-day work. I feel my weakness many times, and unworthiness; yet I realize my heavenly Father knows the desire of my heart is to live humbly and prayerfully, and do all I can for my Master. As I scan the pages of the HERALD, it makes my heart glad to see the work progressing. As I am getting along in years, I ask the prayers of all Saints that I may endure to the end, faithful.

At the resurrection morning,
May we all appear as one,
Oh, what robes of bright adorning
Will the righteous then put on.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. ELLEN ROSS.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, February 19, 1909.

Editors Saints' Herald: The sixtieth district conference of the Southwestern Texas District was promptly rapped to order, according to previous appointment, at half past seven in the evening, February 5, and after the usual prayer and singing, and a few preliminary remarks from the district president, and a unanimous vote, the conference was placed in the hands of our missionary in charge, Bro. W. M. Aylor, whereupon Bro. Aylor took the chair, presiding throughout the entire conference with satisfaction to all. To say that the conference was a success would be putting it mildly. Peace and harmony prevailed, and the Spirit of God bore witness, and furnished additional evidence of the divinity of the work which we are engaged in. Brn. Aylor, Mannering, and Palmer of the missionary force were with us to do the preaching, God standing by them and enabling them to bring forth thoughts and spiritual food that were truly meat for a hungering soul. Much lasting good was accomplished. One promising young brother was ordained to the office of deacon, the delegates to General Conference were selected, and a unanimous vote carried to have the next conference at Tuff, in the extreme northwestern part of this district, on the 23d of July, 1909. The conference was brought to a close the following Sunday, and was pronounced by one and all to have been one among the most spiritual and profitable conferences ever held in the district. Preaching was continued with both the first and second branches throughout the following week with success. Large and very attentive crowds, with two baptisms, and several others very near the kingdom, are certainly very encouraging to the Saints.

The work is onward here in San Antonio, and Satan is raging, seeking whom he may take advantage of, knowing that his time is short. Surely God is working with his people, and the way is opening up in this part of his vineyard as never before. We have two branches in this city, with about one hundred and fifty members, some of whom are very bright and promising for future usefulness. The second branch of this city was organized a little over one year ago by Bro. I. N. White, with twenty-seven charter members. It has now forty-eight, with bright prospects of others soon.

We have bought a lot, built a church-house twenty-four by thirty-six, with nice pulpit, brick flue, and electric lights, and have only a small debt hanging over us. Surely God has blessed us in all our efforts. We have also a small Mexican mission in the eastern part of this city, Bro. and Sr. Jett looking after that part of the work.

Bro. and Sr. Mannering, who have been laboring among the Mexicans on the border of Texas and Mexico were with Bro. and Sr. Jett last Sunday, Bro. Mannering doing most of the preaching in Spanish; and, according to reports, Bro. and Sr. Mannering's mission to the Mexicans will be a great success, as they have adapted themselves to the Mexican rules and customs. Ever praying for the rebuilding of God's cause and kingdom, and the speedy redemption of Zion, I am,

Sincerely and fraternally your brother in the one faith,
ED. N. MCRAE.

On the Firing Line.

Dear Herald: I wish to voice the sentiments, thoughts, and feelings of several colaborers, and enter our solemn protest against the factious, querulous, forensic battle of words in HERALD, in reference to tithes, offerings, surplus, consecration, etc., also the medley of ideas which are becoming grave and serious upon the Demo-popo-soco-listic, all things common problem—such conflicting ideas, conceptions, interpretations, and opinions, are confusing to the tithe-loving, tithe-paying, average Saint, and is a germ planted in church soil which is rapidly growing, and already is bearing the fruit of indifference, apathy, listlessness, and doubtfulness.

We enter the Saints' home, nearly the first word, "Have you seen the church papers this week? I tell you so and so gave it to so and so, but he will come back at him next week with a stinger. I shall not give my HERALD to my neighbor, so long as there are such conflicts in it. The sermon is good. Would love for my neighbor to read it; but I dare not let him have it."

These are common expressions to be heard most everywhere, together with this one: "I am so confused and disgusted—I'll not pay any more tithing until the head men of the church can agree—nor give my inventory—nor pay any surplus until I have a better understanding."

It occurs to us that if God has chosen men to interpret the law and instruct the church on these most significant and all-important lines—and if such men, so chosen, and set apart by divine hand, through the ordained channels of the church, are in all humility giving and publishing their interpretation, for the benefit and instruction of the church, to bring about the final consummation, and the greatest good to the greatest number, all other men not so ordained and set apart should be still, watch, and pray for those so appointed, until the rights of the church are in "jeopardy," then instead of a battle of words through church publications, seek to call a general assembly and have our differences adjusted as the law implies and provides, and not publish them to the world to the detriment of church interests.

How can the bishops, Bishop's agents, and tithe-gatherers be successful under such conditions of confictions, causing brethren to be confused, uncertain, hesitating, and doubtful, and thus choke, stifle, and smother the onward progress of that which we are striving under the divine hand to accomplish? We know, from personal knowledge, that the Bishop's agents of Oklahoma are handicapped in consequence of said conflicts, and the church interests impeded thereby. It is a very onerous task at best to gather tithes and offerings; yet, we fear brethren, unconsciously so, are making it still more difficult. Conflicts for victory only, should have no place in our work. The church needs the tithes. She needs the surplus and offerings, without which wreckage and destruction will overtake us sooner or later. Can we, as brethren, afford directly or indirectly, who have given a life and sacrificed our all, to contribute to such disaster? Where could we find the soil in which we might plant the seed of hope thereafter? This is a serious matter to the writer, and many others; and instead of serious estrangements it is better to adopt the truisms so often expressed by our venerable and beloved President, "He that is right can afford to wait." And another, "If I err, brethren, let me err on the side of mercy."

These gems, so oft repeated, are becoming more golden as the years go by, and ere long their full meaning and import will be more fully realized and appreciated, we believe. It is easy to become disaffected and to drop from the paying ranks; and those who do, as a rule, talk the loudest and do the greatest harm. For the above reasons and many others, we enter our earnest protest.

T. W. CHATBURN.

News From Branches

SECOND KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

The year 1908 was not a prosperous one for us, either spiritually or financially. In February, 1907, we started to build our new church; and held our first service in it on Christmas Eve of the same year. During that year we raised more than three thousand dollars, besides giving fifty dollars to the Christmas Offering. We were compelled to meet in halls under very unfavorable conditions, but the Lord was with us by his Spirit, the gifts of the gospel were made manifest, and we prospered in every way. We looked forward to the time when we would be able to meet in our church, where we would not be disturbed, and thought of the glorious meetings we would have, and how thankful we would be; but, as the Evil One is always busy, when the children of God came to present themselves before the Lord, Satan also came among them to present himself before the Lord, just as he did in Job's day, consequently we were spiritually sick and did not prosper. But a very little was paid on our church debt, and the gifts of tongues and prophecy were seldom heard. We are thankful that at the present time the outlook is brighter. Since the beginning of this year, our meetings have been better attended, and have been more spiritual. God's Spirit has been made manifest in a wonderful degree. Leona, the nine-year-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. George Sherman, was instantly healed of spinal meningitis through administration, when physicians could do nothing for her.

Just now a series of meetings is in progress here; and we hope good will result.

This branch was organized in 1896, with twenty members. We now have two hundred and fifteen. The Sunday-school and Religio are in a healthy condition. Both are growing. The officers of both these auxiliaries are alive and active. They realize that the success or failure of either one or both depends largely on them, and they are striving to be workers that need not to be ashamed, that they may be laborers together with God for the accomplishment of his work, which has been intrusted to all. The ladies' aid society meets regularly, and are trying to do their part to pay our church debt.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Three weeks ago I was requested by Bro. and Sr. Charles R. Johnson to come to their place in the suburbs of the city and assist to organize a union Sunday-school. The results were that the majority of those composing the school were of the Protestant persuasion and adopted David C. Cook's helps, but it has resulted in two invitations to preach to the people that come there, and I have had liberty in preaching the word. We are hopeful of good results from this organization.

On the following Sunday five were baptized, two Sunday-school children, and a mother and her two sons, both young men. The latter three are practically the result of cottage meetings. The mother is of Israel through the Lamanites, her mother being an Indian. A more complete history of her progenitors, and of her religious experiences will be given later.

The visitations of the brethren among the members of the branch have been fruitful of good results. The meetings now being held each evening in the interests of the missionary work prevent a continuation of this special work for the present. Assisting in the missionary efforts are Brn. H. O. Smith, C. Scott, James McKiernan, and M. H. Cook. Brn. McKiernan and Cook started to-day for Fraser, where meetings will be held for two or three weeks. Brn. Smith and Scott will remain longer. Not large attendances as yet, but those who attend are being fed and instructed.

The funeral of Sr. Mary Emslie occurred last Sunday afternoon during the time of the district conference, and there was the largest attendance at the church that has ever been there. She was highly respected by all who knew her, and those who knew her best thought the most of her.

The conventions and conference passed off peacefully, and with satisfaction.

Much has been said through the papers about the immorality of the theaters of the present, and if the Superintendent of Public Safety can be believed, and his word is corroborated by many who have been in attendance of late, then indeed none too much has been said, but not enough done. The effort to clean up the theaters is progressing, and results will follow. The effort to close all places of amusement where they are carried on for profit, is making friends, and while some are trying to mystify the bill and its nature, yet the facts still remain that it is only to put such places under the same ban that is now placed on other business places in the state of Iowa by a law now existing to which this is intended to be an amendment, and I do not think that any one can say consistently that such an act would not materially amend the present law and make it somewhat consistent. If it is right to close business that is run for profit on Sunday, then it is but consistent to close places of amusements on Sunday,—acknowledge that they are a business proposition.

The district conference at its last session passed the following preambles and resolution unanimously, which speaks well for the temperance attitude of the members of the Des Moines District:

"Whereas, We have noticed with pleasure the efficient work the Anti-Saloon League has done and is doing for the cause of temperance in driving out of existence the saloon traffic, and its influence favoring advanced legislation in the suppression of intemperance; and

"Whereas, We wish it to be known that we are, as we always have been, on the side of every legitimate effort to stamp out of existence the manufacture and sale of all spirituous liquors as a beverage; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we gladly and actively extend our moral support to the work of the Anti-Saloon League in the enforcement of present laws against intemperance, and the effort the league is now making favoring an amendment to the constitution of the state of Iowa prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all spirituous liquors as a beverage.

Some sickness and several deaths among the aged and children of late. The Saints have not entirely escaped, but there have been several cases of God's marvelous love manifested in administrations to the sick. J. F. MINTUN.

MYRTLE POINT, OREGON.

Our little branch here in the far west is still alive, and have their faces set Zionward. We may not be going as fast as some others; but we feel that we are on the right road; and that is some consolation. Our branch numbers a little over half a hundred; but we are somewhat scattered, and at present find it inconvenient to get together. In fact, only those that live in town can get out to the meetings on account of the incessant rain and muddy roads. I think I never saw so much rain in the same length of time as we have had in the last two months; and still it is raining, and no appearance of a clear-up.

I was made president of this branch at the last business-meeting; but it is a dignity that I did not seek; and it imposes a burden that I do not like to bear; but I suppose the Saints are so well acquainted with my weaknesses and infirmities that they will not expect much of me.

We are now discussing the building of a chapel, and we think we can see our way clear to build a decent chapel as soon as there comes weather that we can get out and work. We want to get our house ready for the reunion which takes place in August. We have no one traveling in this district, and we greatly feel the need of an active man, one who is not afraid to get out and rustle a little, and hunt up the lost sheep. We will hope that when the weather gets better, and the roads passable, we will take more rapid steps. Ever praying for the triumph of truth.

NEBO, ILLINOIS.

A very interesting series of meetings was closed at our church near above place last Sunday night, by S. J. Madden, together with what assistance the writer, the brethren, and above all the good Lord could or did give, resulting in ten baptisms, all grown people, two of whom were from the so-called Church of Christ, or Campbellites; one from the Methodists. People are interested as never before. Numbers can be counted, who are near the kingdom, and so express themselves. Bro. Madden was well received here by the brethren and by outsiders.

The people here whom we could get out to hear, have heard preaching enough, seemingly, to have been convinced long, long ago, as several of our able men have been and preached here. This seemed to be the Lord's time to work, and to him be the glory. The people seem now to want to taste the strong meat. Including three sermons during Bro. Madden's meetings, I have preached six sermons of from one hour to an hour and a half on Book of Mormon, and Restoration, very recently. Also, Bro. Madden, throughout his twenty-eight or twenty-nine sermons has dealt out the strong meat as well as the sincere milk of the gospel, and still they come and want to hear more about this latter-day restoration. Many comments and compliments are heard. Some distant groaning in the sectarian circles are heard. One Baptist sister has spent some time with some of her brethren and sisters to "save them from the destruction of this horrible Mormon delusion," has prophesied that "she would yet be instrumental in the Lord's hands to completely tear this branch down; and thus reclaim her wayward brother from the throes of Mormon delusion." The reader may be surprised when I tell them this is my sister in the flesh, a good woman; but "Oh! Oh! Oh! My Brother! My Brother! what a great work he might do if he would come back to the fold [the Baptist Church]." She spent most of one day praying, singing, and preaching to one young man and his wife, warning them, etc., etc.; but last Saturday Bro. Madden led, together with two others, this good wife and mother down into the liquid elements in burial and resurrection; and now a countenance shines with a brightness that nothing but true regeneration can give.

It will be borne in mind that this is the place where Bro. Slover met W. G. Roberts last March in discussion. The Campbellites were very exultant. The smoke had been raised. They hastily drew conclusions; were not slow to prognosticate our organic and spiritual annihilation. But, as that smoke settles to its really proper place, in the low and unproductive grounds of human prejudice and ignorance and unwarranted imaginations, thus leaving the true effect to fair view of one and all, to our joy and to their chagrin, we are standing upon higher and more readily seen planes than ever before. To the Lord be the glory. Our local papers give us favorable notice. Bro. J. A. Tanner made us a short visit the first of December last. One was baptized. He, too, was well received, and well liked. Bro. Paxton was here in November last, preached here a number of times. He and I went down ten miles south, got permission to preach in a Christian church, and were beginning to have an interest, when some of them feared for their flock, and then acted, and we got the G. B.

Jesse, too, is remembered here as a good preacher, a good man, and O. K. Please excuse so many compliments, but I have not overdrawn. There is no need of rusting out here. A call recently came to the writer to come and hold a meeting up in Central Illinois District, in the extreme western part, at a place called Cincinnati Landing, that we have not been able to fill yet. Preached up there three times last August and baptized one. They feel slighted out there; several Saints, a large schoolhouse, and no preacher. I hope Central Illinois missionaries will remember them. Ever interested in the weal of the gospel. I am,

Adams was elected president; Charles Hyde, vice-president; Lou Mann, secretary; Rose Adams, treasurer; W. V. Baker, member of library board; Ethel Barnum, district librarian, and Myrtle Ballantyne, superintendent home class. Thirty-eight delegates were appointed to represent the district Religians at the General Convention. The Sunday-school convention report showed an enrollment of 848, a gain of 20. Forty-three delegates were appointed to the General Conference. Magnolia was selected as the place for next conference, and the time, June 5, 10.30 a. m., for business. President Sidney Pitt asked that the brethren of the priesthood make reports to him covering their labor for the year and have them in his hands by February 15. Yearly report of Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrando: On hand last report, $167.82; receipts, $2,959.05; expended, $1,304.40; remitted to Presiding Bishop, $1,692.80. An additional report covering from October 1, 1908, to February 1, 1909, showing receipts of $1,151.72, and expenditures of $335.68, was also made. Received for Graceland College, $39.70; Sanitarium, $5; children's home, $1; all of which had been remitted to the Bishop. A communication from the Bishop's agent urged all to diligence in their temporal duties toward the church. The report was audited and found correct. By request of the Saints of the Moorhead Branch, Bro. T. O. Strand was ordained to the office of priest. Ordination took place at Sunday morning prayer-service, under the hands of Elders James Crabb and Charles Derry. Statistical reports were read from eleven of the twelve branches of the district, (Evergreen not reporting), showing (with Evergreen as last reported) a total membership of 1,818, a net gain of 5. Delegates to General Conference to the number of seventy-three were appointed. The Sunday morning prayer-service was certainly a spiritual feast; two prophecies, one tongue and interpretation. James D. Stuart, clerk.

An Appeal.

On behalf of the Saints of the North Manchester Branch this appeal for financial help is made, to assist them in the attempt to erect a suitable building for worship in this very thickly populated neighborhood. For many years the Saints have been hiring halls and rooms, which usually are inconvenient by reason of not being easy of access, nor adequate for the services nor the performance of the various rites of the church; and nearly always such buildings with a rental within the reach of our people are located in neighborhoods which are not desirable. During all the years of the church's history in Manchester there must have been paid more than sufficient money in rent than would have erected church-buildings for every branch in the city. It has therefore been decided by the branch to commence accumulating a building fund which shall be known as the "North Manchester Branch Building Fund," and it is hoped that in time the thrift of the Saints will result in a sufficiently large amount of money to justify the building of a church or chapel which will be comfortable and inviting.

But seeing that to begin with the number of Saints is small, and during the time of accumulating the current expenses will need to be provided as usual, the process of accumulating the necessary means will be slow and tedious; we therefore appeal to the church general, asking that all who can will aid us in the efforts herein described. Please send all donations or subscriptions to be applied to this fund to Elder Joseph Dewsnup, the financial clerk of the mission, 12 Albemarle Street, Moss Side, Manchester.

JOHN FODEN, President. THOMAS ADAMS, Secretary.

Conference Notices.

St. Louis District will convene Saturday evening, March 13, at St. Louis, Missouri, and continue over Sunday. Matters of importance will be brought up, among which will be the selection of delegates to the General Conference. Let us have a full and complete report of the membership of the district, and to this end let the secretaries send their reports to me at once. Chas. J. Remington, secretary, 2728 Rutger Street.

Museums of Safety.

Museums of safety and sanitation are becoming the means of saving thousands of lives, and will lessen the economic waste of accident cases brought before the courts. A feature of such a museum will be an experimental laboratory in which safeguards may be perfected for dangers and processes now without any known device; and which may become an educational center for teaching the science and preservation of health, in preventing diseases due to impure food-stuffs, bad ventilation, occupational dusts and poisons, infection, tuberculosis and offensive trades.

There are ten European museums of safety and sanitation, located in Berlin, Munich, Paris, Vienna, Amsterdam, Milan, Stockholm, Zurich, Moscow, and Budapest. The Berlin Museum of Safety covers thirty-four thousand square feet of floor space, where are exhibited devices for the protection of the dangerous parts of machinery or processes in all trades and occupations. Germany realizes that every life saved is a national asset.—From William H. Tollman's "Prosperity-sharing" in the March Century.

Elders J. W. Wight and S. M. Reiste were the speakers at the Brick Church.

The company which has contracted to put in our waterworks system, is distributing pipe, and doubtless will soon begin more active operations.

Miss Bond, piano instructor at Graceland, has resigned, and Miss Hilliard, of Newark, Ohio, has been secured to complete the year. Miss Hilliard comes to Graceland after two and a half years' work in Germany under most capable instructors in the pianoforte.

The work of installing electric lights in the Brick Church is progressing rapidly and will be completed, we are informed, in a couple of weeks.

The branch choir is making a good record these days. On Sunday evening a chorus of male voices was rendered, and was well received. Choral work is in charge of Bro. D. A. Anderson.

The girl who tries to help somebody, is worth more than the one who tries to please somebody.

Editorial

CONCERNING ALBERT AND JENNIE BLAKELY.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 12, 1909.

Editors Saints' Herald: Nearly three years ago, over my signature and at my instigation, there was published simultaneously in the HERALD and Ensign "An epistle to the Saints," including a spiritual communication received by me. About ten months later (writing from memory) there appeared in said papers "A song of admonition" which had been sung a few weeks before by me at one of the social meetings held by the Saints in this city. A copy of both of these was given by me to the publishers of said papers, at the request of their editors, hence I am personally responsible for their publication in the manner and connection stated.

During the past week there have been handed me, by brethren who had received them by mail, envelopes, with "Kingdom of heaven. Church of the First Born" printed on the upper left hand corner. These envelopes each contained a number of documents, some purporting to be revelations from God, and one a "Certificate of free-will offering to the kingdom of heaven," "Church of the First Born," with blanks to be filled out by donors. All these papers are stamped with a seal, containing the words "re-version," and containing references in their main or annexed parts to 773 West Sixty-sixth Street, Chicago, Illinois, as their place of origin, and on one page ("A divine certificate and table of covenant") the names of Albert Blakely, Mrs. Jennie Blakely, Mrs. Della Houtz, Frank Gillespie, J. F. Freemantle, and George E. McClellan appear as "witnesses" to what is set forth therein.

If this were all, there would be nothing in it or what it represents to call for my particular notice; but among said documents appears another, with the "re-version" seal upon its upper left hand corner, and headed, in bold-faced type: "Behold, saith the Lord," followed with my name—"Joseph Luff"—as a signature.

This paper contains a verbatim reprint of the spiritual communication and "Song of admonition" published by me in our church papers as aforesaid at the beginning of this letter. This paper, however, contains no name or reference (except the "re-version" seal referred to) to any address or party, by which its publication or issuance can be identified. The facts, however, of my name appearing upon it and its being inclosed in said envelope with the other papers, as herein set forth, and said seal stamp being on it, as upon the others, may convey the impression (whether so intended or not) to those receiving them, that I am in some way identified or in sympathy with the institution or parties issuing and circulating them; hence this letter.

Be it known, therefore, by this announcement, that I have not now nor ever had any connection in any way with the institution referred to, nor am I aware that I have ever had a personal acquaintance or line of correspondence with any of the parties named on the paper described. They have never asked nor received my consent to publish said communications, and I am in no sense responsible for their publication in such way.

I have no desire to charge wrong motive upon those who are responsible for so publishing and circulating said paper, but believe it to be my duty to protect what little influence my name may carry from abuse or dishonor such as I think would attach under the conditions against which this letter is intended as a protest.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH LUFF.

Minister and member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and of no other society on earth.

We again call the attention of the Saints to the fact that Albert Blakely and wife, of Chicago, are evidently sending out envelopes containing their literature, including the communications referred to in the letter of Bro. Joseph Luff, dated March 12, appearing herewith; and also including the certificate of free-will offering mentioned by Bro. Luff, which asks for money in an indirect way. There is no name stated in the certificate to whom money is to be sent, nor any notification in the documents connected with it showing who is responsible for the receipt and disbursement of the money so collected.

At the close of the certificate and below the blank intended for the signature of the party sending the money there appears this line in finer type than the body of the certificate, "Corporation-affidavit of organization of the 'Kingdom of Heaven' Church of the 'First-Born' was filed in the courts of Chicago, county of Cook, state of Illinois, on August 12, 1908." Following this is the line, "Whoever choose to make sacrifice and free-will offering may fill out the above and return to 773 West Sixty-sixth Street, Chicago, Illinois."

The Saints as a rule are so extremely cautious in reference to the payment of money into the coffers of the church and are so anxious to know by whom it is received and how expended, that one would very naturally suppose that there would be little or no necessity for a warning with reference to such a call as this made by the "Kingdom of Heaven, church of the First-Born." We have no possible right to say that the Saints shall not pay money to whomsoever they choose; but we believe we have the right to say to all that they shall be careful to know to whom they are paying money and understand who may be made responsible for it. We do not pretend to say that Mr. and Mrs. Blakely have not the right to formulate a creed and organize and incorporate a church, and call it by whatever name they choose; neither do we assume the right to say that members of the church may not take cognizance of any church so organized and join it and give support to it, if they so choose to do. But we advise readers of the HERALD before making such change in faith that they give the matter proper investigation and learn all the facts they can in reference to the organization, the faith and the persons engaged in its promotion, and try them by the standard of truth before compromising themselves with such associations.

John Alexander Dowie made a wonderful record of achievement in securing from the people great sums of money for which the people received no substantial return; and when he finally failed in health and strength he left a heritage of contention, disappointment, and disaster for his scattered adherents to be disturbed by great regret.

Is a hint to the wise sufficient?

The Church Secretary requests that district secretaries forward all General Conference credentials at once, that reports may be made up promptly. Do not wait to send by delegates; please forward by mail.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

OUR DELEGATES ARE EXCLUDED BECAUSE THEY BELIEVE IN MODERN REVELATION.

We had the following handed us for publication, and had we not been somewhat conversant with the folly of sectarianism, we could not have believed that a body of church officers could have been found in the United States, so egregiously ignorant as those who formed the tribunal, at which the following excommunicating sentence was passed:

Resolved, That William Seichrist be excluded from the fellowship of this church for embracing and maintaining a heresy, to-wit:—Doctrines peculiar to a late sect called Mormons or Latter Day Saints, that miracles can be wrought through the instrumentality of Faith, that special Revelations from God are now given to men, and that godly men are now endowed with the gift of Prophecy, such as to foretell future events.

WILLIAM BENSON, Ch. Clk.

Sept. 28, 1842.

I do certify the above resolution to be a true copy of the original, excluding my son from the fellowship of the First Regular Baptist Church of the city of Alleghany, Alleghany County, Pennsylvania.

Moderator, Deacon John Beck.

Ch. Clk., Dea. Wm. Benson.

C. SEICHRIST.

—Times and Seasons, volume 4, page 26.

The above is a remarkable case of reversed legislation. Here was an instance of a live branch being cut off from a dead vine. Evidently the only man in that congregation who was in touch with God, and believed in him as a living, present, intelligent being, was excommunicated.

The resolution clearly helps to sustain that which we have often urged, that in 1842 and earlier there was a clear line of demarkation; and Latter Day Saints stood for revelation, divine healing, and spiritual gifts, while other religious sects opposed those doctrines. It shows that at that date such belief was made a test of fellowship.

The churches have since taken up with more advanced ideas, but the conditions at bottom are the same. The test of fellowship still stands and history repeats itself on a larger scale.

During the opening weeks of December, 1908, the Federal Council of Churches met in Philadelphia.

There were representatives present from over thirty protestant churches, representing some eighteen millions of people. This meeting was the result of one held three years previously in New York, at which time a tentative plan of organization was adopted. Of the later meeting the Outlook said that they constituted the Federal Council of the churches of Christ, and expressed the hope that the few denominations not then included would soon find themselves in this great federation.

Application was made for representation on the part of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. Bishop E. L. Kelley had prepared the following statement of the action taken:

Upon the suggestion of President Fred M. Smith, November, 1908, under rule seven of the plan of federation recommended by the Inter-Church Conference of 1905, Brn. E. L. Kelley and W. W. Smith waited upon Doctor William H. Roberts, chairman of the committee, at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and suggested the admission of delegates from the Reorganized Church to the Federal Council, which was to convene in Philadelphia the December following [1908].

Doctor Roberts was presented an epitome of the faith of the Reorganized Church, and after an examination and explanation by the brethren present, stated that he would have to have more definite statement than was contained in the Articles of Faith with reference to the place the Book of Mormon filled in the work of the Reorganized Church, insisting that no church was admitted to the council who claimed that God had ever revealed himself to the human family since the time of the Apostles, or subsequent to the first century. Inquiries were made as to whether this was the attitude of the council and one of the essential features of being admitted. Doctor Roberts insisted that the council would not likely admit any society who claimed in any way revelation or direction of the Lord since the time of the Apostles, but insisted upon a more specific statement as to the attitude of the Reorganized Church upon the relative places of the Bible and the Book of Mormon in our church work.

Subsequently these brethren, in connection with Bishop Zimmermann of Philadelphia, submitted the following:

"WILLIAM H. ROBERTS, LL. D.,
"Chairman, etc.

"Dear Sir and Brother: Complying with your suggestion for a more specific statement of the relative places of the Bible and the Book of Mormon in our church polity, we take pleasure in submitting without argument or proofs, such, with the assurance that we have not hesitated to give the specific uses as expressed in the records themselves."

"The suggestion is answered as follows:

"The Bible the Standard of Faith and Doctrine, with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

"Definitive Statement.

"The Bible is the standard of authority upon all matters of religion, and its teachings indispensable to the highest Christian life.

"The Book of Mormon is a record of revealed religion to the ancient inhabitants of America, and is of worth to the world, and the church, in that it is confirmatory of the teaching of the Bible, and another witness to the goodness and mercy of God, and the fact that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, through whom only there can be salvation.

"As representatives of the Reorganized Church, we may assure you that the request for the admission of delegate representation to the Inter-Church Conference was for the purpose of honoring and magnifying the name of Christ; and that whatever action your council or the body, may take, will in no wise change our attitude of good will to the association.

"Very respectfully,

"E. L. KELLEY,

"Presiding Bishop of the Reorganized "Church, Independence, Missouri.

"WALTER W. SMITH,

"Pastor Philadelphia Church,
"Corner Howard and Ontario Streets.

"JOHN ZIMMERMANN,

"Bishop New York and

"Philadelphia District."

Subsequently reply was received from Doctor Roberts as follows:

"PHILADELPHIA, Pennsylvania, December 16, 1908.

"To E. L. KELLEY,

"Bishop of the Reorganized Church of Jesus

"Christ of Latter Day Saints, "Independence, Missouri.

"Dear Sir: The communication signed by yourself and two other officers of your church has been under due consideration. We can not, however, admit your body to the Federal Council. It is needless to state the reasons.

"Yours respectfully,

"W. H. ROBERTS."

In what a strange position the Federal Council of Churches is placed by the decision of its president (evidently entirely in line with the sentiment of the body) that no church or society is admitted that believes God has revealed himself to them or others since the days of the apostles. It seems almost incredible. Yet their final action in the matter has confirmed their statement. It correctly represents their attitude.

It is another case of reversed legislation. We might well exclude them from fellowship on the grounds that they have lost their hold on God and deny having heard from him for nearly two thousand years; but for them to refuse us fellowship on the ground that we believe that we have heard from him certainly is illogical. They propose to run absolutely no risk of coming in contact with any one who has heard from God.

What a curiosity Brn. E. L. Kelley and Walter W. Smith would have been in that assembly; the only two men in that great body (representing thirty Protestant churches) claiming that they or their associates had ever heard the word of God or learned the will of God direct. But it was not to be. Let us not mourn, however, as those who have no hope. Our work will go on. We will not pine away and die. The latter-day work has often been reported dead. It has received its "death blow" a thousand times. And yet we can say with Mark Twain that "the rumors of our death are greatly exaggerated."

Recently in delivering a charge to a company of young men, Bishop A. W. Wilson (of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South) said: "It is all right to read books of theology; but the light by which we walk does not come from these. It breaks forth out of the heavens. . . . If you want to have your life rightly directed, get into the secret place, where God can take hold upon you and you can take hold upon God."

The Sunday-School Magazine, February, 1909, quotes those words and makes editorial comment:

"There is no heresy in the assumption which these utterances imply. God is not dead nor dumb. If we no longer hear his voice it is because our ears are dull."

This is an unkind cut at the Federal Council of Churches, of which Bishop Wilson's church is a part, for if this be true, the whole aggregation must be hard of hearing. And further, if God should speak to any of these young men whom the good bishop addressed, see what an embarrassing position he would place them in,—they would be excluded from the Federal Council of Churches.

Imagine a modern parable: Twelve sons of a great and good man, all living in one city, decide to hold a family gathering at which the father is supposed to preside. One of the sons is stationed at the door and is instructed to ask certain questions.

As each son essays to enter he is asked, "Has father spoken to you during the last twenty years?"

"No."

"All right, pass in."

Presently one appears who answers, "Yes; father has nothing against me that I am aware of. He often speaks to me."

"You can not be admitted."

When the eleven sons to whom their father has not spoken for twenty years have assembled, if the father is there at all, he must keep silent, for under the rule, if he should address any of those present, they would at once be disqualified and would be obliged to withdraw. In such a case, however, the father will most likely be found walking out with the one who was excluded.

To our mind this portrays in no unjust way the position of the Federal Council of Churches.

When close fellowship with God is made the ground for excluding one from fellowship with the popular churches, the question naturally arises, "Whose churches are they?" "Are they churches of God or of men?"

It is easier to avoid mistakes than to correct them after they are made. It takes less time and energy to stop and think and decide a question or line of action wisely than it does to rush ahead thoughtlessly and carelessly do the wrong thing, and then have to undo it and do it over properly. Worse yet if it is a thing that can not be undone, that must stand as a monument to our lack of care and thought.—Selected.

TRAIN SERVICE TO LAMONI, IOWA.

Lamoni is situated on the Des Moines, Chariton & St. Joseph branch of the Burlington System, running from Des Moines and Chariton, Iowa, to Kansas City. (See No. 35, page 29, of timetable.) Two lines of service reach Lamoni direct—one from Des Moines, one from Chariton, Iowa, the latter situated on the main line running from Chicago to Omaha.

Southbound: No. 110, Des Moines train, leaves that city 12.45 p. m., daily except Sunday, arrives Lamoni 5.05 p. m. (This train connects with the main line at Osceola, Iowa, 3.05 p. m.; with branch lines, at Van Wert, 3.40 p. m.; at Leon, 4.25 p. m.) No. 114, leaves Chariton 4.35 a. m., arrives Lamoni, 6.40 a. m. No. 112, leaves Chariton 10.30 a. m., arrives at Togo—about two miles from Lamoni, 12.34 p. m. (A mixed train from Togo to Lamoni connects with this train; hacks also furnish transportation.)

Northbound: No. 111, leaves Kansas City 7.35 a. m., St. Joseph 10 a. m., arrives Togo 1.58 p. m. No. 113, leaves Kansas City 11.35 a. m., arrives St. Joseph 1.30 p. m., leaves St. Joseph 3.20 p. m., arrives Lamoni 8.20 p. m.

Nos. 111 and 112 are daily; others daily except Sunday. It is probable that Nos. 111 and 112 will be run to Lamoni direct on the 2d, 3d, and 4th; also on three days at the close of the conference. Extra coaches will be supplied on all trains as necessary during the increased travel.

We may not all have the power to sway multitudes by the richness of music; but do we ever stop to consider what kind of voices we really have? Have you ever wondered what an influence your voice may be in your home, among your friends, and even with strangers? A kind hand, though rough in flesh, may have wonderful healing power by softness of touch. But there is nothing in which love so beautifully expresses itself as in a sweet, kind voice. It is not for company use, but an influence that may speak, under all circumstances, the thoughts of a kind heart.—E. Spencer, in East and West.

The increasing oneness of the world is the fact made most prominent in international thought and cooperation. Wireless telegraphy has added one more instrumentality for the advancement of this unity. The interests of the world become more common each day, and, what is more to the purpose, the actions of nations are coming more and more to be a concert. "The federation of the world," if not "the parliament of man," is in sight.—The Epworth Era.

TITHING IS A TENTH AND SECTION 106 SHOULD STAND.

I am somewhat loath to take up this question, for the reason that when an application of our arguments is made, they are more or less personal. I believe, however, that when the accepted doctrine of the church, or the accepted revelations thereof, are made the object of attack, they deserve first consideration. The truth, as we view it, takes first place with us. Men are secondary, though important, and should not be left out of consideration. But we can not afford to leave a revelation in jeopardy, to any extent, in order to avoid personality, or to spare one who attacks from his own logic.

In the first place we hope to make it emphatic enough so that all may consider it, that after a revelation has once been considered, received, and indorsed by the church as law and revelation, (and section 106 was so indorsed by the conference of 1878,) the burden of proof ceases to rest upon those supporting the same. After it has been so received the burden of proof necessarily rests upon those who believe that the document is not revelation and law. This can not be controverted. Have they presented the proof? Let us see.

There are only two ways in which this may be done; firstly, by proving the revelation in question to have come through another source than the one through which the law of the church may come; and, failing in this, they would still have recourse to the remaining plan of showing its doctrines to be contradictory to those of more generally accepted revelations.

There has been an effort to use both these lines of evidence, and they have alike failed. The authorship has been placed upon Brigham Young and his associates, but an examination of what they have written shows that their interpretation of the section does not agree with the interpretation of the present critics, as this extract discloses:

Therefore, as soon as the twelve have proceeded to a full and complete organization of the branches abroad, let every member proceed immediately to tithe himself or herself, a tenth of all their property and money, and pay it into the hands of the twelve; or into the hands of such bishops as have been or shall be appointed by them to receive the same, for the building of the temple or the support of the priesthood according to the scriptures, and the revelations of God; and then let them continue to pay in a tenth of their income from that time forth, for this is a law unto this church as much binding on their conscience as any other law or ordinance.—Times and Seasons, volume 5, page 618, "An epistle of the twelve"; but written and signed by Brigham."

You will perceive that no point of agreement exists upon any point of doctrine questioned by our critic, between this document which he says was written and signed by Brigham, and section 106.

There are several points of disagreement. The two points which make the documents absolutely irreconcilable have been presented by a former writer (HERALD, January 13, 1909, page 28,) and no answer has been attempted. We refer you to them.

It will be remembered that this is the same number of the Times and Seasons in which 106 first appeared in print, according to our opponent.

He can not claim, therefore, that 106 was Brigham Young's mind at one time, and that this quotation is a later theory, or vice versa. The truth is, and no one will attempt to controvert it, that these two ideas which are contradictory to 106 are in force among the Utah Mormons and have been, ever since Brigham Young came into power. He may have changed upon other points, but these he never changed. There is only one proper way to disprove this, and that is by presenting evidence that some other system was in vogue or taught at that time. We venture the assertion, the attempt to do this will not be made.

Now take your HERALDS and find, if you can, any other attempt to locate the authorship of the revelation called in question in this irregular way. Indeed, any other attempt to locate its authorship would necessarily destroy the one we have just demolished in another way.

There being no other attempt made to fasten the authorship of 106, and no denial of the revelation being made by its author or transmitter, the first method of proof to destroy the revelation falls to the ground.

The only remaining method by which there could be found, legally, that section 106 is not authentic, is to find it out of harmony with some more generally accepted and authoritative portion of the law.

The attempt to do this has been made, but sometimes a question that seems to perplex many becomes a simple thing by stripping it of one or more subterfuges. We believe that the method used in the attempt to show contradiction makes a question of this class. Just how such subterfuges as these got attached to 106 we are not prepared to say, and it does not matter; but we will remove them and will then take a look at the questioned revelation. First, it is assumed that the law of tithing is intended of God to produce common equality in temporal things among the Saints, and to retain that equality, and upon this assumption, and one more which we will notice later, is built the theory that it is in contradiction, or out of harmony with section 42, because, it is stated, tithing as a tenth can not make and retain equality.

Is it stated anywhere (except in the writings of those opposing the payment of one tenth, and of section 106,) that the payment of one tenth is for the purpose of making or retaining equality? Most assuredly not. The place in which the purpose of the law is most fully and clearly stated is in section 114: 1. There it says:

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.

The next assumption is that paragraph 10 of section 42 applies exclusively to those who have before consecrated. In order to make this interpretation good we have to admit these things:

1. That the residue or second consecration is the only fund to be used for the purpose of purchasing lands for the public benefit of the church, and building houses of worship, and building up the new Jerusalem which was to be revealed. This must be true if this paragraph applies alone to those who have before consecrated, because the first consecration, set forth in paragraph 8, admits of only one use, and that is the support (not the exaltation) of the poor. The import of the language is clearly that if there be any money in the hands of the church after the poor are relieved, it shall be stored (kept in the storehouse) for their future needs, and for these further purposes, and that the means of those consecrating thereafter shall be used in the same manner. Also that when an estate is settled, although it has been consecrated to the Lord, that the residue goes to the storehouse.

2. That just so soon as a member shall begin to accumulate anything more than is enough for his support, it is to be turned over. This can not be a correct interpretation, because it leaves no room for the plain provision in the law that children are to receive their inheritances from the parents, and are only to receive inheritances from the church when the parents are unable to give them, and would therefore make conflict between sections 42 and 82, and, by the process of elimination sought to be installed, that of rejecting a revelation because there is no room for its workings, would eliminate section 82. If a parent lives up to our critic's interpretation of section 42, how and when will he be able to give his children inheritances, as provided for in section 82? This should be enough to convince our critic that his interpretation of section 42 is incorrect. It also removes his excuse for claiming conflict with 106, on this ground.

But it is thought to show conflict in another way, that is, by showing that section 42 requires more than the questioned revelation. Is it necessary that each succeeding revelation upon the financial law of the church shall be a complete statement of the entire financial system? We are sure you can only answer in the negative. Is section 42 itself a complete statement of that law? If so, where is the room for sections 82, 51, and many others? Thus we are confronted again with the fact that the opponents of tithing and of section 106 are either unwilling to have their logic or arguments applied to anything outside of the revelation in question, or they do reject many other revelations.

Let us now, having examined the ways in which it is claimed section 106 conflicts with that gone before, proceed to notice a conflict in another document:

Ah, yes, Brigham proved in after-years what he had in mind; to have a steady flow into a public treasury for the benefit of the leaders. And this, in our judgment, is the foundation of the tenth being taught in the church.

Has there any one yet told us where there was a command to pay the tenth in any of the books under a gospel dispensation outside of section 106? True there seems to be a few cases where it may have been paid; but what is the preponderance of evidence? The selfishness of man in all ages has caused him to do as little as he possibly could, trying to make himself believe he was doing God's will.

How is this for harmony? Brigham's desire for a steady flow into the treasury the foundation of a tenth being taught in this church. The selfishness of man caused him to accept this teaching of Brigham, for he would have to pay less into the treasury this way than if he obeyed section 42. When our friend who is the author of these two quotations, and who attacks 106 because of stated conflict or inharmony is able to harmonize these two statements, in the same document, he will find it easy to harmonize sections 42 and 106, for the task will have become small by comparison. In these two sections there is plainly basic harmony. In the language just reproduced there is diversity and contradiction. These quotations are diametrically opposed to each other. Brigham gave the law to increase his wealth by giving the people less to do than they had under the then existing law! The people received the revelation as coming from God because it gave them the chance to enrich Brigham, which appealed to their selfishness! First man's selfishness causes him to accept 106, and next there is no room for it when we comply with 42! Do any of us get rich in moneys and lands by cutting off our revenue, or by contributing to the fortune or power of some usurper of authority and breaker of the law of God and man? No, but the Lord has promised prosperity as a result of obedience to his law, and what a host of witnesses we have that testify he has blessed them in the payment of a tenth.

We also want you to notice the question contained in the last quotation, "True there seem to be a few cases where it may have been paid; but what is the preponderance of evidence?" The preponderance of evidence is certainly that the tenth was paid, because there has not been one particle of evidence produced to show that the tenth was not paid, and that is the point sought to be established, while the opposition admits in the question that there are cases on record where the tenth was paid. Therefore, if absence of evidence on one side and the admission of existing evidence on the other side of a question establish the preponderance, then the preponderance of evidence certainly sustains us. One thing more: If a record of the compliance with the law is necessary to establish the law, our friends will find that the law of tithing is easier to establish than is the law of consecration. We know no such thing to be necessary, however, but it must be the basis of the question. If not, what is?

Further objection is raised to the revelation because, it is said, the Lord, in all ages, gives the poor first mention, or at least prominent mention. Let us see. Do you find any mention of the poor in 114? Here it is:

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing; and let them before God see to it, that the temporal means so obtained is truly used for the purposes of the church, and not as a weapon of power in the hands of one man for the oppression of others, or for the purposes of self-aggrandizement by any one, be he whomsoever he may be. As I live, saith the Lord, in the manner ye execute this matter, so shall ye be judged in the day of judgment.

If this is ground for the rejection of 106, it is also ground for the rejection of 114. Now, who is the author of 114? Or did the Reorganization start out with a spurious revelation, receive the Book of Covenants in "a blanket resolution," indorse 106 in order to get "a clew" on a brother, (both of these being charged by the critic of section 106,) receive and indorse another revelation which says we are to accept the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as a whole, each revelation therein contained to have its proper bearing upon each of the others and its relation thereto, when one of the revelations contained therein had been doctored or given by the prince of apostates, and still remain the church of God? How can a man make up for such a want of faith in God and man by statements that he is more firmly grounded in the faith than ever before, and by exhortations to others as to the necessity for prayer and investigation?

Once more let us use our opponent's witness. This time the letter of Richard Savary and the reply by Joseph Smith:

PITTSBURG, Pennsylvania, February 2, 1842.

Mr. Joseph Smith, Sir: Though a stranger to you personally, yet the knowledge of your character (given me by others) makes it unnecessary for me to offer any apology for thus troubling you. And I entreat you to believe me, when I say, that it is with a sincere desire to arrive at the truth of things that to me and all others are of the most vital importance.

I now wish to know through you the laws and regulations of your church—what is required of its members—how much (if a man of property,) must he contribute annually for its support? In short, what is required to constitute good membership?

If you will please answer those questions comprehensively you will confer a favor on one who with pleasure subscribes himself your friend and humble servant.

RICHARD SAVARY.

To this Joseph Smith replied:

In answer to the above I would remark, that it is required of all men to have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; to repent of all their sins and to be baptized (by one in authority) in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and to have hands laid on them for the gift of the Holy Ghost, to constitute them a member in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I would respectfully refer you sir, to our Book of Doctrine and Covenants for information concerning the "laws and regulations" of our church as being given by the revelations of God for our guide and instructions.

Respecting how much a man of property shall give annually we have no special instructions to give; he is to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to provide for the widow, to dry up the tear of the orphan, to comfort the afflicted, whether in this church or in any other, or in no church at all, wherever he finds them, to believe and obey all that God has revealed, does reveal, or will reveal, to do good unto all men, to be a member in good standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

If this reply means that Joseph Smith had no knowledge of 106, or the law contained therein, it also means that he had no knowledge of section 42, "the financial anchor," "the celestial law," and for these reasons: He mentions no part of the financial law contained in this revelation, which, according to the interpretation given us by our critics, directs that whenever a man has a surplus, or residue, he must place it in the hands of the bishop. More than this, he advises Savary "he is to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to provide for the widow, to dry up the tear of the orphan, to comfort the afflicted, whether in this church or in any other, or in no church at all, wherever he finds them," whereas paragraphs 8 to 10 of section 42 direct that all are to put their properties that can be spared in the hands of the bishop, and he is to use them for these and the other purposes therein specified. This advice would, therefore, be out of harmony with 42, because it ignores the bishop, and mentions but part of the purposes for the use of money. If, as some claim, the quoting of a law which tells the proportion a man is to contribute after giving the surplus would answer the question as to how much a man must contribute annually, then the answer would have necessarily pointed out the fact that he is to contribute all his surplus, or consecrate all his property and retain or receive, as his condition warrants, only sufficient for his needs and those of his family. Indeed, he could have answered Savary by quoting 42:8, which would be shorter, more comprehensive, and have the further advantage of containing the Lord's method of doing just what Joseph Smith says is required. The ground taken by a former writer in defense of 106 stands untouched.

There is no such provision in the law as Mr. Savary asked for; and the fact that Joseph Smith's time was fully occupied and he could not comply with the request, "you will please answer these questions comprehensively," is so apparent as to need no confirmation. Who is willing to take the ground that this letter of Joseph Smith's is what he believed to be a comprehensive answer to these questions of "most vital importance"?

Further than this, the letter in question would exclude all the revelations not in the 1835 edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, if it excludes any of them; but it excludes none. The most comprehensive part of the letter is: "to believe and obey all that God has revealed, does reveal, or will reveal, to do good unto all men, to be a member in good standing in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints."

Now it is easy to show that Joseph Smith believed and taught the doctrine of one tenth in 1834, seven years before the Savary letter, and nearly four years after section 42. And unless he broke his vow to the Lord, and we have no reason to believe he did, both he and Oliver Cowdery practiced this law, for which there is no room in the minds of some, and he was practicing it when he wrote the Savary letter. If this can be done, it is most conclusive evidence that he found room for the doctrine contained in section 106 after complying with section 42:

On the evening of the 29th of November, [1834,] I united in prayer with Brother Oliver, for the continuance of blessings. After giving thanks for the relief which the Lord had lately sent us by opening the hearts of the brethren from the east, to loan us four hundred and thirty dollars; after commencing and rejoicing before the Lord on this occasion, we agreed to enter into the following covenant with the Lord; viz:

That if the Lord will prosper us in our business, and open the way before us, that we may obtain means to pay our debts, that we be not troubled nor brought into disrepute before the world, nor his people; after that, of all that he shall give us, we will give a tenth, to be bestowed upon the poor in his church, or as he shall command; and that we will be faithful over that which he has intrusted to our care, that we obtain much; and that our children after us, shall remember to observe this sacred and holy covenant; and that our children, and our children's children, may know of the same, we have subscribed our names with our own hands.

JOSEPH SMITH, JR.

OLIVER COWDERY.

—Church History, vol. 1, p. 529; Millennial Star, vol. 15, pp. 203, 204.

It will not do to say this was just an individual covenant made in addition to the celestial law, because of special obligations they were under, for several reasons, chief among which is the fact that those who would so account have said there is no room for the payment of a tenth when section 42 is complied with. This explanation would therefore carry with it the charge that Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery had disregarded section 42. One more proof that a wrong interpretation is put upon section 42, by the opponents of section 106.

It is now in order to present proof showing this to be a forgery, a misstatement, or that it was the act of mercenary men who had in mind their own advancement, pecuniarily. If this can not be done, then give room for this doctrine of 106, (the payment of a tenth,) and there will be no more occasion to question the section, as the sequel shows this to be the portion that is objectionable. It will not do to claim that these men made this vow as a kind of Mosaic covenant, to bring them to a higher law, or that it was for any other purpose than that claimed by them; and it is just as illegitimate to question a conference resolution, as being for the mean purpose of giving a "clew" on an individual, (the meanest kind of personal advantage,) unless the proof and not surmises or opinions be offered in support of the claim.

In a foot-note on page 559 of volume 2, Church History, taken from Times and Seasons, volume 3, pages 625-627, we have an epistle to the church, dated at Nauvoo, Illinois, December 13, 1841, and signed by nine of the then existing Quorum of Twelve, among the signatures being that of Lyman Wight. All who know anything of church history know that Lyman Wight can not be charged with collusion with Brigham Young: indeed, the perusal of his private journal will convince the most skeptical that his error would more likely be to condemn a truth because Brigham Young indorsed it, than to accept an error that Young had in any way indorsed, or by which he had profited. We produce this extract from the aforesaid foot-note as another refutation to the repeated statement that tithing was not taught in the lifetime of the Seer. It can not be explained that tithing means consecration in this extract, for the words tithings or consecration preclude such a possibility. The use further on of the words tithings and consecrations are an indication that when these words are elsewhere used in those times they meant just what they did in this epistle, evidently the tenth and the surplus. If there is a clearer interpretation, why has it not been given? Here is the extract:

There are individuals who have given nothing as yet, either as tithings or consecration, thinking that they shall be able to do a great deal sometime hence, if they continue their present income to their own use; but this is a mistaken idea. . . . Let every individual remember that their tithings and consecrations are required from what they have, and not from what they expect to have sometime hence, and are wanted for immediate use. All money and other property designed for tithings and consecrations to the building of the temple must hereafter be presented to the trustee in trust, President Joseph Smith. . . . The elders everywhere will instruct the brethren, both in public and in private, in the principles and doctrine set forth in this epistle, so that every individual of the church may have a perfect understanding of his duty and privilege.

We will next turn to volume 3, number 4, page 78, of the Millennial Star, where is found the following: the outer walls are from three to four feet thick, and it is to be accomplished by tithing and consecrations, the Saints bring this in on one day of the week, viz, Saturday; this to prevent confusion, etc. . . . This tithing is not confined to Nauvoo, but all the branches of the church are as much concerned in it as any one.

There are others, but these are sufficient to show that the doctrine was taught by Joseph Smith and the main authorities of the church, and our space forbids the production of others.

Now, it has been demanded time and again that we present personal testimony corroborative of section 106. We have shown that the burden of proof rests elsewhere, and that they have presented no chain of evidence, but from our own curiosity we have, through another, received word from one whose father was present when section 106 was given at Far West in 1838. And for the purpose of showing what the understanding of this aged brother is, we quote the following:

RAVENWOOD, Missouri, February 5, 1909.

Bro. Smith: Your letter of inquiry at hand, concerning revelation 106; and I am pleased to answer. My father was present when that revelation was given. The question was put to the body by Joseph Smith because of the division of the elders that were present. Joseph said, "Let us put the question to the Lord, and let him settle it"; and they agreed to it. Then the revelation was received. . . .

JOHN HAWLEY.

This brother was born March 4, 1826, and was therefore nearly twelve years old when the revelation was given to this body of elders. All who know him know that he is a man of an independent character, reliable in every sense of the word, and while he does not claim to have been present at this gathering of elders, it only adds strength to the testimony given that he does not so claim. He got this understanding from his father, who was present, and he is a consistent believer in the revelation.

This is a signed statement of Bro. Hawley's, and no one is justified in questioning it in any other way than by showing that it does not apply to section 106, unless he can impeach the witness. Any statement by an individual that Bro. Hawley did not make this same statement to him can not have any bearing. This is evidence over Bro. Hawley's signature. Our opponent certainly knows what it takes to impeach a witness, and we ask that he observe the rule.

There are many reasons why the testimony is hard of access, not the least of which is that there is not in existence a single history written at the time by one who was on the ground. The church had a historian, for many years, appointed by the direction of God through revelation, and he was so derelict to duty as not to mention many of the important occurrences and revelations,—the receiving of section 106 is not the only omission,—and afterwards refused to give the history he had written into the hands of those who should have had it in custody. But God protects his truth in unlooked-for ways, and we feel sure that he who has no opinion to bolster up can find plenty, even under the unfavorable circumstances, to justify him in receiving section 106 for what it purports to be, a revelation of God's will concerning his church; and that no one has found any real ground for its rejection is apparent.

Another thing we call attention to here is the fact that all testify that something was given at that time, and our opponent does not deny it. The something is section 106, the only thing that has ever been produced. If it was anything else, why doesn't he produce it? And is it not a little strange something else is not produced, if something else were given? And this also takes the force out of the argument that a prophet of God in line of duty could not fail to publish this revelation. He did not publish whatever was given, and, it is admitted something was given. The true explanation probably lies in the unfavorable conditions that surrounded them at that time.

Mr. Ebenezer Robinson was clerk and recorder of Far West stake at this time; also clerk of the High Council. He is our opponent's witness in some things, and for this and other reasons we here present his testimony on this point.

Some years ago Mr. Robinson lived at Davis City, Iowa. He published what was called The Return at that place, an organ advocating many of the doctrines of the faction now known to us as the Hedrickite faction, but being a Whitmerite organ. His account of the revelation at Far West agrees with the one given by John Hawley, the only point of difference being that Mr. Robinson claims the document then given was a document of Joseph Smith's own concoction. You will find the document reproduced in the October, 1889, number of The Return, being volume 1, number 10, of that periodical, and page 151, an exact reproduction of section 106. This evidence is corroborative of that given by Bro. John Hawley. It will not do to question this testimony of Mr. Robinson, because in the same article is found the source of our opponent's complaint that the Lord does not mention the poor in section 106, also that if the Lord had anything to do with the revelation it was upon the principle set forth in the fourteenth chapter of Ezekiel, both of which have been used by the opponents of 106 in this controversy. His opinion that it was of Joseph Smith's own concoction, even the present critics of 106 will discard. This opinion of course is not evidence; it is mere conjecture. His production of 106 is testimony. Let it now be understood this is our opponent's witness, though he has not introduced his name, and we challenge the production of these objections which he uses from any other source. We think we are not safe in accepting the testimony of Ebenezer Robinson in its entirety, any more than we accept the testimony of David Whitmer in its entirety, yet we publish David Whitmer's testimony in the front pages of our Book of Mormon, and claim for it added strength in this one direction because of the fact that he became disaffected, and in fact rebelled against Joseph Smith in later years. We can therefore accept Robinson's testimony on this point; as corroborative of the testimony of John Hawley, and for the further reason that he is, in fact, our opponent's witness. We have used all he says on this particular point, and have not misrepresented him.

And it must be remembered the opposition has not produced a single iota of evidence to show that it was not given, that it has been doctored, or that it was never practiced, and the burden of proof is upon them. We are compelled to accept this testimony as genuine unless something can be produced to show that the revelation was not given or that it was doctored.

Now, the proper thing for our critics to have done, instead of demanding such testimony, was to take the burden of proof, go to some who were at Far West, obtain proof that this revelation was not given in its present form, and present that proof for our consideration. But they choose to throw discredit, just as the infidel chooses to throw discredit upon religion and Christianity, and to substitute "for our living faith the cold and cheerless doctrine, I do not know."

Next we will notice the statement made that the testimony of C. W. Wandell should be considered in this case. That testimony is as follows:

I notice these interpolations because having been employed (myself) in the Historian's office at Nauvoo by Doctor Richards, and employed too, in 1845, in compiling this very autobiography.

I know that after Joseph's death his memoir was "doctored" to suit the new order of things, and this too by the direct order of Brigham Young to Doctor Richards, and systematically by Richards.

Where does this testimony throw discredit on 106? If Brigham had even doctored it he surely would have made it conform to his ideas of tithing. If the testimony of Wandell proves anything it proves that Brigham Young was not guilty of changing this revelation, whatever else he changed. We accept the testimony of Wandell for what it is worth. Will those who do not believe in section 106 do the same?

It is neither good argument, logical, consistent, nor fair, to quote a number of passages and then ask the question, Do these teach a tenth? Many passages can be produced and then the question asked,

Do these teach the laying on of hands? and it does not affect the validity of the ordinance in the least. The proper question to ask would be, Does the teaching of these passages exclude the tenth in teaching and practice? But this question would destroy the point sought to be made.

As an illustration, and a parallel, let us take the doctrine mentioned. Examine chapters 8, 10, and 15, of the Acts of the Apostles and you will not find therein taught the laying on of hands for the Holy Spirit. According to the logic used, if you do not find laying on of hands in these chapters, you must exclude other scriptures in which the laying on of hands is taught. This shows the fallacy of the reasoning. And what elder who has met the sectarian world has not encountered this method of reasoning on the laying on of hands, and even on baptism?

How much evidence is there in this question? "Can you add to or take from a complete law, without conflicting with the fundamental truth upon which it is based?" There is nothing in 106 to justify the thought that it seeks to take anything from 42. If it adds something to 42 it does no more than sections 51, 82, and many others. In fact, there is no foundation for the idea that the bishop is to make a deed to a man's inheritance in section 42. This is gotten from section 51. And now we ask the question, "Can you add to or take from a complete law, without conflicting with the fundamental truth upon which it is based?" And when this is answered you will have your answer. This is the same argument which W. G. Roberts used against the Latter Day Saints in Independence, Missouri; the same that was used by Clark Braden, (see Braden and Kelley Debate, page 251,) and is used by many others. Let such as these use the argument. As Latter Day Saints, we know it answers itself whenever the light is turned on. If section 42 claimed to be the complete law the question would demand consideration, but, on the contrary, is the doctrine contained in 42: 17, as follows:

If thou shalt ask, thou shalt receive revelation upon revelation, knowledge upon knowledge, that thou mayest know the mysteries, and peaceable things; that which bringeth joy, that which bringeth life eternal.

But this does not exclude as untrue the statement that section 42 contains the celestial law. In fact, further revelation is a part of that law. And this method would also destroy so many other revelations as to leave us all at sea; therefore it is of a piece with the other criticisms; it proves too much, hence nothing. Among those this method would destroy is a revelation cited later by our opponents, 72: 3, which says, "In addition [adding to a perfect law?] to the law which has been given," and 81: 3, 4, which claims to be a new commandment.

Section 106 is condemned because it claims to be “a standing law unto them for ever.” We have this much to say in regard to the matter: Those who accept section 106 are not compelled to and do not reject any other revelation contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants to-day, and we believe each and every one of them may have a bearing, to a greater or less extent, on the others. The same method of reasoning that will destroy any one of them will destroy others with it. And this is wholesome because, in the first place, it causes one to be careful in his interpretation of a revelation; in the second place, it causes us to do the same as we do with the Bible. We accept it, and then we interpret its statements in the light of all others bearing upon them, contained in the book. No one can defend the Bible in any other way. Therefore we would not have any use for section 106 if it were not to apply whenever the conditions existed that obtained when it was given.

Then the ground is taken that the Lord would not command his people to gather and not give them the law to gather by until years after. This assumes that we think section 42 was not the law to gather by, which is not correct. The fact is, we believe in 42 so thoroughly that we do not pretend to say the financial law is all there is in it, or that all the financial law is in it, in specific terms. Turn to paragraph 5 of section 42 and read:

“And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit.”

As has been shown conclusively, the doctrine of 106 regarding one tenth is contained in these books wherein is contained the fullness of the gospel, and the other points of its teaching are in this same section 42 also. We again repeat, It is not necessary to disbelieve section 42 because we believe 106. Those who believe 106 to be spurious are the ones who are compelled by their own rules and reasoning to reject other revelations, and to put inharmonious constructions upon the statements of the law.

And now you will please turn with us to section 42 and read:

“And again, every person who belongeth to this Church of Christ shall observe to keep all the commandments and covenants of the church.”

It so happens that section 106 has for years been accepted as a commandment and covenant of the Reorganization. There is only one recourse, and that is, to reject it as a commandment and covenant, which can only be done by a body of equal or greater authority than the one which accepted it. Until such time the believers in section 42 must comply with 106. They may not believe it to be a rightful commandment, but they are not at liberty to ignore it for this cause; no more than they are at liberty to transgress the law of the land because they can not see where it agrees with the law of God. We are commanded to keep the laws of the church and the laws of the government under which we live, and the same section is responsible for both. There has been no attempt to show that 106 is not a law of the church, therefore you are commanded to obey it until properly repealed.

Again, section 106 is condemned because it is said that it was never presented to the quorums, received by the church, as a body, and is therefore irregular. If you will turn with us to General Conference Resolution No. 298, paragraph 6, you will see that this discussion is irregular upon the part of those questioning the revelation. Paragraph 4 points out the manner in which it may be done. Here is another conference resolution ready for the slaughter! Maybe some one was trying to get a clew on a brother.

The objection is raised that we have been seeking to apply the teachings of section 106, whereas it states in its own text, that it is for Zion and her stakes. You are all familiar with the argument made by those who do not believe children should be baptized at eight years of age, that it is a commandment to parents having children in stakes, but the church teaches and practices the baptism of children at that age, whether in the stakes or out of them, and it is right. Why not treat 106 and its teachings in the same manner? Why not?

We do not understand that any opinion on the law is made stronger because of the signature to the opinion, unless it should be in the case of an officer delegated by the government to give his opinion. We certainly give more weight to an opinion when expressed by the president of the High Council on a matter that has been referred to him for his opinion, than we would to that of a private elder upon the same subject. You can see by Doctrine and Covenants 126:10 who is delegated to express an opinion on the financial law.

Yes; we must heed Doctrine and Covenants 83:8; it is a part of the law! And as stated above, keep the commandments and remember the covenants, in order to escape the scourge; section 106 and the rest of them, also.

Our opponents ask what need we have for 106 and their own argument again gives us the answer:

“Again, can any one tell us where the Doctrine and Covenants, or the revelations prior to section 83 teach a tenth?”

You see we need section 106 to teach some people in terms they can not explain away that the tenth is, and always will be demanded. And while we do not know that it is necessary for each and every one, yet section 106 has the advantage of concise expression, and there are those who need it. It is not necessary to say to some men, Thou shalt not kill; there are others who have needed and do need this instruction, and it is repeated time and again in section 42. It was and is necessary to the well being of some. Section 106 is necessary in the same way. And if the Lord shall choose to express and repeat again either part of the law, though he may do it in entirely different words, who am I to say it is unnecessary?

Section 106 is also an aid in the proper interpretation of section 42. Our opponents have not questioned 82, and they have not told us how it can be complied with when their interpretation of section 42 is complied with. In other words, they have not told us how a Saint can give his children inheritances when they become of age, and at the same time have nothing with which to give them inheritances, having consecrated all outside his living as fast as it accumulates. Now let our opponents take the advice in the forepart of 126:10, interpreting 42 by the aid of 82 and 106 (two witnesses), and they will have a clearer conception of all three of these revelations, and the financial law contained in them. If they refuse to do this, then let them tell us how they harmonize 82 and 42, without removing the objection that there is no room for 106 when 42 has been complied with. Watch for their answer to this.

Objection to 106 has been made because it begins with the question the people propounded to the Lord, "O Lord, show unto thy servants how much thou requirest of the properties of thy people for a tithing?"

The celestial law had already been given, which showed how much the Lord required as a tithing, but these men were not willing to abide that law.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 55, p. 994.

But here is one more of those contradictions by the author of the objection at a later date:

but we must all admit one thing; that we can not both be guided by the Spirit of truth, as it will not teach me one thing and you another. . . . One thing is sure, something is wrong. . . . Now, what is the remedy? . . . Now, let me suggest a remedy. God loves to have his children come to him in humility and faith. "Knock, and it shall be opened." "Ask, and it shall be given you." "If any lack wisdom," etc. You know the many similiar scriptures presented to the outside world. Why not take some of our own medicine? Why not humble ourselves as children of God should, and take this matter to God in fasting and prayer, and ask God to make it plain to all of us, every son and daughter of his kingdom, so the law can be made operative and Zion be redeemed, and we all enjoy the fruits of our labors, and the choicest blessings of our God? To this end shall we labor, trusting you may see fit to do the same.—SAINTS' HERALD, vol. 56, p. 226.

He is getting down to the very position occupied by those "servants" when they asked the Lord the aforesaid question, and received as an answer section 106. Now if he will but follow out their plan, instead of doubting the revelation when given, he will be on safe ground.

Of course the brother will not attempt to explain this by saying he means for the other fellows to do the praying! If he does not explain it this way, then he must mean "all of us," just as he says, and I am interested to know how it proves the Saints of 1838 to be "unwilling to abide that law," hence a positive vice, and yet our brother advises it for the Saints of 1909, and esteems it a necessary virtue. Or is our brother really becoming converted to our explanation that these Saints did not understand their duty alike, and that the query was a proof of their humbling themselves, "as Saints of God should"?

Here is another of those knotty (?) questions: "How many resolutions to adopt by the church would it take to make a human document divine?" Notice the assumption that this is a human document, in face of the action of the church at least two different times and places in General Conference, in adopting 106, and accepting its approval in section 126. Remembering this, let us ask the question: How many questionings by private individuals will it take to make a divine document human? And if this does not answer the question we refer you to 1 Samuel, eighth chapter, and ask you what effect the rejection of the counsel of the Lord had upon the people of Israel?

Section 126, paragraph 10, says the Book of Doctrine and Covenants shall be taken as a whole. After quoting that section and paragraph our opponent makes this remark:

"Taken as a whole." What does this suggest? To our mind it suggests that there might be something wrong, as we can not take any one section, but the whole. And this is our position, that section 42, the law, and all the rest on the same subject down to section 106 agree with section 42, and refer to a complete consecration; and section 106 alone stands for a tenth.

Let us see if this reasoning is good. I go to a physician. He gives me a compound of drugs, which he intends shall meet all the demands of my system at the time. His instructions are, "Take this medicine just as I have prescribed it. Let each drug have its proper place. They are correlated, and each one is to have its proper bearing upon each of the others. Taken as a whole this will accomplish our desire."

Of course this suggests "something is wrong." But it suggests that the wrong lies with the system of the person prescribed for, not with the prescription. If there is something wrong with the prescription, now is the time to alter it; or if an enemy has put some deleterious substance in the medicine, now is the time to remove it.

But I now have received and marked all the physician has given and said. I see there is "something wrong" and jump to the conclusion that the physician has allowed something to creep in there, knowingly, and that the wrong is in the medicine. I discard the part which I think is wrong, without any further word from my physician, and when he renews his instruction to let each part of the prescription have its place, I ignore it, and I remain a sick man. Is it any wonder I remain sick? Why did I not think of the true position and look for an interpretation of the physician's language to the physician, or his former utterances?

Yes, there has been "something wrong," and the wrong is this: We have put a wrong construction upon part of the Lord's word, making it contradict other parts of his word, and it has not entered the minds of those doing so that the "something wrong" lies in themselves. We can not discard consecration, neither can we discard tithing, and our attempts to do either will complicate our maladies.

"Now, brethren, candidly, how can you make this mean a tenth in the light of section 18: 3-5; 42: 8-10, 15; 44: 3; 49: 3; 51: 1; 58: 7; 70: 2, 3; 72: 3; 77 entire; 81: 3-5, etc., etc.?" This entire sentence is answered by the quotation heretofore produced from Church History, page 529. If Joseph Smith found room for a tenth in the light of all these, it proves conclusively that he did not have the same conception of these passages that our critics have. Who is right; he or they? And here is a good place to consider again the argument made that we may no more reject laying on of hands because it is not always mentioned in connection with baptism; and also the wish expressed by him and Oliver Cowdery: "that our children after us, shall remember to observe this sacred and holy covenant; and that our children, and our children's children, may know of the same, we have subscribed our names with our own hands."

Were they so anxious as this shows them to have been, and did they want to bind themselves, their children, and their children's children to a doctrine which is not found in any gospel dispensation outside of a doctored or spurious revelation? Talk about dereliction to duty; dereliction is passive; this is active; and if wrong, or even unnecessary, it is active deception and fraud. We are fortunate in being upon the side of the argument which does not force us to any such conclusions. It will not do to say you believe Joseph Smith to have been a true prophet of God in 1834, and then reject this item of doctrine. They remain together, whether they rise or fall, and no number of assertions that you are firmer in the faith than ever will liberate you from the logic of your own reasoning. You must accept the doctrine of a tenth or reject Joseph Smith in 1834. Which will be done?

We are not so sure the interpretation put upon the law does not jeopardize the liberties of the people, when it is better understood; and as to our neglect of duty or privilege of appealing to the quorums, it is never too late when a reasonable number conclude it is right to do so. But as to the three quorums seeing the law alike, we have not seen the evidence as yet. True they must have come to some kind of an agreement, when it (the address to the Saints) was signed; but their teaching since leads us to think they did not understand the meaning of their own address alike, even then.

This is a sorry compliment to the three leading quorums implicated in the Address to the Saints. They were either guilty of putting their names to something they could not understand alike, were too careless to understand alike, or they have not been faithful to the action of that body. We prefer to believe they are faithful to this action and they do not teach anything out of harmony with each other until the proof is presented. We suppose the proof would have been presented if it existed, but that seems to be the trouble with all this contention against 106. Strip it of its surmisings, its discrediting of authoritative documents outside of 106, and there is nothing left. This we have endeavored to help you to do, and with one more comment we will pass to the final summing up of the evidence in favor of the law of one tenth existing in every gospel dispensation.

It remains for us to touch upon the first words of the paragraph just quoted, "We are not so sure the interpretation put upon the law does not jeopardize the liberties of the people, when it is better understood." Of course this interpretation would not jeopardize the liberties of the people any more when it is better understood than it does now. This is out of the question. But has it been shown that the interpretation in the Address is any different from what the interpretation of the Bishopric was when section 126 was given? No; not even an attempt has been made to show this. Then the proposition stands about this way: We are not so sure but what the rights of the people were in jeopardy when the Lord said: "and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to." This would be charging the Lord with dereliction. Are you ready to say this? No change has been made in the interpretation of the Bishopric, and hence the liberties of the people are not in jeopardy.

What do we gain if we discard section 106? Nothing; absolutely nothing. The law of one tenth, as will be, and as has been shown, still stands. It does not depend upon this revelation. The law of surplus would stand; neither does it so depend. The debts of the Presidency would still be upon the church, if not improperly incurred, for the Presidency would have recourse, as other individuals, upon the treasury of the church, so long as their needs and wants be just. As our gain could only be by loss of one of these, (and not all of these have been attacked in this controversy,) we can therefore gain nothing. What would we lose if the questioned section be thrown out? A great deal. A very good explanation of how the troubles among the elders at Far West were settled; a very terse explanation of the law of tithing, and how it is to be applied under such circumstances as existed at that time,—and an added testimony for the sake of those who seek to explain away other plain enunciations of this law; and the integrity of our Book of Doctrine and Covenants. You can not reject any revelation in the book without questioning the integrity of the book. And if you reject 106 for the reasons that have been assigned, the work of elimination will be just begun, and there will be found no stopping place. Of course if 106 is wrong, it must go, but it entails all these consequences.

In order to properly investigate the question as to whether tithing has been taught in the gospel dispensations, it is necessary to understand that Webster defines the noun tithe as follows:

"1. A tenth; the tenth part of anything; specifically, the tenth part of the increase arising from the profits of land and stock, allotted to the clergy for their support, as in England, or devoted to religious or charitable purposes.

"2. Hence a small part or proportion."

The same authority defines the transitive verb tithe in this manner:

"To levy a tenth part on; to tax to the amount of a tenth; to pay tithes on. 'Ye tithe mint and rue.'—Luke 11: 42."

In agreement with this are all other lexicographers we have examined, and also various gospel authorities, such as the Apostle Paul, our present officers of the three leading quorums of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and others.

We do not argue that these necessarily compel us to believe that the word tithing may not be used in another sense, but, it is incumbent, in the face of these authorities, upon the one believing it to be used in another sense, to support his belief by positive proof. As in the case of the examination of 106, the burden of proof rests upon those believing contrary to the commonly accepted definition, and surmisings and opinions of less authorities fail to establish the point. In each and every case, therefore, wherein it is sought to show tithing does not mean a tenth, it must be established by the proof, and to establish the meaning of tithing as something differential in one case has no bearing upon any other case.

Now let us proceed to the proof that tithing has been taught in all dispensations:

And Abram (Abraham) gave him (Melchisedec) tithes of all he had taken.—Genesis 14: 20, I. T.

Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need.—Genesis 14: 39, I. T.

And here is Paul's interpretation of what Abraham paid as a tithe or tithes, as found in Hebrews 7: 2: "To whom also Abraham gave a tenth part of all."

And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's. . . . And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock . . . the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord.—Leviticus 27: 30, 32, I. T.

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse.—Malachi 3: 10, I. T.

You (the Pharisees) pay tithe of mint, and anise, and cummin; and have omitted the weightier things of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Matthew 23: 20, I. T. (See also Luke 11: 42.)

It is a day of sacrifice, and a day for the tithing of my people.—Doctrine and Covenants 64: 5.

In order to place the church in a position to carry on the promulgation of the gospel, and as a means of fulfilling the law, the Twelve will take measures in connection with the bishop, to execute the law of tithing.—Doctrine and Covenants 114: 1.

You will see that each of our quotations from the Bible is taken from the Inspired Translation. So there is no spoiling of their plain meaning by saying they are from King James' Version.

There is nothing in these quotations, nor in any of the various other quotations supporting tithing as a tenth, which contradicts, does not harmonize with, or seeks to supplant the law of consecration as enunciated in section 42, when they and it are interpreted properly, and so that section 42 agrees with itself and with other parts of the same law given in several other revelations.

They are strictly in harmony with each other, and we ask that our readers examine the contexts and note the promises attached to the majority of them.

Not one of these passages has been successfully controverted, neither by quotation from equally authoritative scripture nor by proper logic or reason, neither can it be shown that they mean anything less than what they say. They therefore establish the fact. Let us hear no more assertions that the tenth is nowhere taught in any gospel dispensation, outside of section 106.

One more strong point, and to our mind one of the strongest of all that have been mentioned in favor of the payment of a tenth, is the fact that thousands upon thousands, a host of witnesses, will testify that when they have yielded to the payment of their tithing they have been blessed, just the same as they have been blessed in yielding to the other ordinances of the gospel. Indeed, you will find among those prominent all during the life of the Reorganization men who testify they were never blessed to a greater extent than in paying their tithing.

I am reminded that the several bishop's agents, and the bishop of Lamoni Stake, for at least twenty years back have advised those with whom they labored that they themselves have had similar experiences. I remember the agent just preceding the present bishop of Lamoni Stake making this statement to me: "You are right in forming this habit [of paying tithing] while you are young. I have been blessed in doing so, and I advise all to do it." There are more men of my age or thereabout that will remember the same advice from this individual. When was he right? Then, or now? And did the Lord bless him in complying with a base fraud and deception?

It has been attempted, time and again, to compel us to condemn consecration; also to carry the idea that we do condemn it, because we believe in section 106, and the doctrine of a tenth. Let us say, once for all, this is not the case. The writer of this communication holds the Presiding Bishop's receipt for a full compliance with the law of consecration, so far as he and his family are concerned. And he found it easier to comply with consecration because he had been in the habit of complying with the other parts of the financial law.

Our excuse for this personal testimony and information lies in the fact that the attempt mentioned above has been made. Section 42 is a part of our "financial anchor" and a part of our spiritual anchor. There are other parts to this anchor, both spiritual and temporal, just as section 42:5 and 17 permit and advise us. Danger lies in not taking the Lord's prescription for his people in its entirety. We are likely to neglect very important parts.

Our position that tithing is a tenth and that section 106 should stand is supported by the evidence as contained in the three books, and by the logic of those who seek to destroy both section 106 and the doctrine of a tenth, when that logic is followed to its conclusion. Logic that will not stand following out should not be introduced to support a contention, because it is not for a man to say: "This is my witness; now you accept his testimony until it establishes my theory, but after that he is not to be used." Therefore, no man can use an argument and reject its use against his own position.

We are sure of these things: That God's work is not to be advanced by rejecting any part of his law; that if we do what God directs, with proper motives, he will not suffer us to be led astray by the documents of deceivers; and that we must try his laws by his methods, not by the methods of the unbeliever. If these propositions are true, let us give heed to the instruction in section 126, paragraph 10, "the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, . . . and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to." Any other course means anarchy, just to the extent that it is introduced.

Our reply is more voluminous than it would have been if another style of attack had been used, but when doubt is thrown upon a point by asking a question that has not been raised before, it necessitates some room in order to show how the same is not applicable, or that it negatively presents a fallacious theory.

ETERNAL JUDGMENT.

Paul places eternal judgment as one of the fundamental principles of the doctrine of Christ, and it determines the final destiny of man, whether it be for good or evil.

"The scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."—Galatians 3:22. When they have believed, and "have obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine which was delivered" unto them, they were "then made free from sin," and "became the servants of righteousness." (Romans 6:17, 18.)

By this wise provision of the loving Father, a part of the human family has, and many more may, escape the consequences of sin, and the punishment in store for the wicked. All might thus be saved, if they would. "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. . . . And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Revelation 22:17.

While "God is love," and "his mercy endureth for ever," and he has offered salvation to whosoever will partake of the water of life—the gospel, yet it is a deplorable fact that many have turned a deaf ear to his pleadings and have died in their sins. God is of "purer eyes than to behold evil, and canst not look on iniquity." (Habakkuk 1:13.) The sinner can not enter his presence, except in judgment; none but the truly righteous can.

THERE IS HOPE FOR THE SINNER.

While we see the greater part of mankind do not obey the gospel, yet we have reason to believe they are not altogether without hope; for the Lord has said, "Turn ye to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope."—Zechariah 9:12. These "prisoners of hope" are the prisoners in the "pit wherein is no water." (Verse 11.) Their hope lies in turning to "the strong hold," Christ, to whom they are commanded to turn, and he will deliver them and send them forth "out of the pit."

Peter said that Christ was to preach to the "spirits in prison." (1 Peter 3:19.) And, the gospel was "preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit." (1 Peter 4:6.)

This will be both a source of hope and comfort to them.

In harmony with this, Isaiah has said, "They shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited."—Isaiah 24: 22.

He who visits them will doubtless be the one who has the "keys of hell and of death" (Revelation 1: 18), "the strong hold," Christ, to whom they are commanded to turn. He gives us to understand that he is the one to deliver the captives. Hear him: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives."—Luke 4: 18. To this Isaiah, from whom Christ quotes, adds, "And the opening of the prison to them that are bound."—Isaiah 61: 1. Christ said, "This day is this scripture fulfilled in your ears."—Luke 4: 2.

THE COMMON SALVATION.

Christ was not only to save the believers, but he "is the Savior of all men, specially of those that believe." (1 Timothy 4: 10.) The special salvation is for true believers, while there is a general or common salvation for all others. Thus all will be saved, but some may not retain their salvation.

Jude speaks of having written "of the common salvation." (Verse 3.) If we had that letter, we doubtless would know more about this subject. Still we are not left altogether in the dark on this, "one of the darkest enigmas of divine justice"; for Paul tells us of three glories. He said, "There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead."—1 Corinthians 15: 41, 42. These glories are different conditions to which the dead are to be resurrected. The glory of the sun is that in which we shall "appear with him in glory." (Colossians 3: 4.) The glory of the moon will be for the better part of unbelievers; while the glory of the stars will embrace all others, except the sons of perdition. In the latter glory they will differ as their works will merit, as the stars differ.

Paul said again: "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."—2 Corinthians 5: 10.

Christ said, "I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."—Revelation 22: 12. Again, "It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city."—Matthew 10: 15.

All these statements show that "in the day of judgment" rewards will differ. It will be more tolerable (agreeable) for some sinners than for others. That this common salvation may reach those who die in their sins, the "prisoners of hope" will turn to the "strong hold," and hear the voice of the "good Shepherd"; "and they that hear shall live." (John 5: 25.) "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth."—Verses 28, 29. The Lord has told us how that will be done: "By the blood" (the blood of Calvary). "By the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water."—Zechariah 9: 11. John said: "Death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man according to their works."—Revelation 20: 13. Thus the prisoners will escape and afterwards receive rewards "according to their works."

Christ said, "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee, Thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."—Matthew 5: 25, 26.

From these scriptures we learn that hell, the pit, or prison, is to deliver up the captives at the time of the judgment. The term of their confinement will have expired. They will have paid their full penalty, and could justice hold them longer? No, their punishment will then be ended, unless they have sinned the unpardonable sin.

PUNISHMENT.

Punishments are not all to be alike; for some they will be more severe than for others. "That servant, which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes."—Luke 12: 47, 48.

How just are the Lord's judgments! "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"—Genesis 18: 25.

The Lord is merciful, and will judge righteous judgment. He will give full reward for all our deserts, and will equally punish us for all our crimes, for which we do not receive pardon through the gospel. When he consigns an individual to imprisonment, the culprit deserves the penalty:

He shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears; but with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.—Isaiah 11: 3, 4. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. . . . The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.—Psalm 9: 16, 17. Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, The Lord shall judge the people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.—Hebrews

10: 30, 31. Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.—Galatians 6: 7, 8.

How much better it will be to sow to the Spirit, by being obedient to the Lord's commandments, and "reap life everlasting," than to be disobedient and "carnally minded," which is death.

THE RESURRECTION.

Death came upon all men, by Adam's fall, as a penalty for sin. Christ came to "abolish death." "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15: 22. Life will come to all in the resurrection. "The dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. . . . All that are in the graves shall hear his voice."—John 5: 25, 28.

Life is the opposite to death. Death signifies: 1. The separation of the soul from the body. (See Genesis 25: 11.) This is temporal death. 2. A separation of soul and body from God's favor in this life, which is the state of all unregenerate and unrenewed persons. (See Luke 1: 79.) This is spiritual death. (See Cruden's Concordance.) It might rightly be said, that spiritual death is separation from God. Life then would mean, temporally, union of soul and body, and spiritually, a return to God. All were separated from God by Adam's transgression; all will be restored to God's presence, "made alive," through Christ, when "small and great shall stand before God" (Revelation 20: 12) in the final judgment.

THE JUDGMENT.

There is a judgment that is passed on people while they live. We are commanded to "examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?" (2 Corinthians 13: 5.) Paul said, "If we would judge ourselves, we should not be judged. But when we are judged, we are chastened of the Lord. That we should not be condemned with the world."—1 Corinthians 11: 31, 32.

This teaches us we should be our own judges, and if our judgment is just, we shall not be judged or "condemned with the world." We should examine ourselves, repent of our sins, ask pardon; and, if pardon be granted, there will be no need for the same sins to appear against us in judgment. They will be "blotted out." If pardon is not granted, they will stand against us at death.

The "Preacher" has said, "Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken. . . . Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."—Ecclesiastes 12: 6, 7. At the time of death, "then . . .

shall the spirit return unto God who gave it." Yes, at that time, all spirits shall appear before their God, whether good or bad, and be assigned to their respective places, in happiness or misery, as they are worthy. (See Book of Mormon, pp. 71, 311.)

Jesus' account of the rich man and Lazarus agrees with this (see Luke 16: 19-31). Both died. Lazarus "was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom," or paradise. "The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." He desired Lazarus to return to his father's house to warn his five brethren who were yet living. "Lest they also come into this place of torment."

This man was dead and buried, and had five brethren yet living. Yet he was conscious, and in torment. He must have been judged guilty to have been placed in that place of torment. That part of his judgment had passed, yet his spirit will need to come from there, and this body from the grave to meet in the resurrection, before the final judgment. Hence "death and hell," or the grave and hell, or hades, must both give up their dead for that event.

The word hell in both Luke 16: 23 and Revelation 20: 13 comes from the Greek word hades, and means "the invisible abode or mansion of the dead; the place of punishment, hell." (W. Greenfield.) Webster says, "An abode is a state or place of residence." Then the residence of wicked spirits from death to the resurrection is hell. Some say that hades means the grave. It may sometimes, but it would not do to say it meant grave in the case of the rich man. If so, there would be consciousness and torment in the grave.

OBJECTION.

Objection is offered to the theory that the wicked will sometime get out of hell, for the scriptures say: "The fearful, and unbelieving," etc., "and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." (Revelation 21: 8.) "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Revelation 20: 15. These citations truly show that all the wicked "shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death"; but a "part" is not the whole. The rich man must have been in "the lake of fire," for he said, "I am tormented in this flame." He was in hell, hades, yet "death and hell," hades, must "deliver up the dead which were in them," in order to a resurrection at the final day of judgment.

THE FINAL JUDGMENT.

We have seen that at death the righteous go to paradise, or Abraham's bosom, which means the same; and the wicked go to hell to suffer their penalty, commensurate to their guilt. Then, eventually, all must come forth in the resurrection to stand before the great judge. But what will his sentence be? Will he then, for the first time, know that Lazarus was righteous and the rich man guilty? Or does he know all things now? Their righteousness or guilt was surely known at death. At the resurrection the righteous will return from paradise to receive their bodies; also the sinner from his prison. Now the righteous Judge will give greater happiness to the saint, for in his body he can enjoy the more. Those who have paid their penalty in prison will now receive what reward they are entitled to for the good they have done in life, while those who have sinned the unpardonable sin will, with their bodies, go back into the second death. Then those who are "righteous" shall "be righteous still," and those who are "filthy" shall "be filthy still." This judgment is final, according to that which is revealed.

THE SECOND DEATH.

We have called attention to the fact that "all that are in the graves shall hear his [Christ's] voice"; "and they that hear shall live"; and that all are to be "made alive" through Christ. This brings all before God in judgment. This ends the present life and its consequent conditions of death, resurrection, and final judgment. Those who receive life pass on to the lesser glories, those who receive life "more abundantly" (John 10:10) enter "celestial glory"; while to those who have committed the unpardonable sin, he will say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels."—Matthew 25:41. This is the second death to them, as they have departed the second time from God and his favor. Their place is "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death." (Revelation 21:8.) Their associates are the "Devil and his angels." They have become willing servants of the Devil. "His servants ye are to whom ye obey."—Romans 6:16. They are those of whom Paul speaks, "If we sin willfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins."—Hebrews 10:26. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, . . . if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance."—Hebrews 6:4, 6. When "we have received the knowledge of the truth," and have tasted of the heavenly gift," and have been "partakers of the Holy Ghost," if we "fall away" and "sin willfully," we can not be renewed "unto repentance." We can not repent. We will be as it was with Esau. "He found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears."—Hebrews 12:17.

MODERN REVELMENTS.

That which the Lord has seen fit to give for our instruction in this age, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Book of Mormon, are more explicit on some of these points than the Bible; so we will give a few brief quotations from them.

The Doctrine and Covenants, 76:4, speaking of those who have committed the unpardonable sin, says:

These are they who shall go away into the lake of fire and brimstone, with the Devil and his angels, and the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power [others are to be liberated from it and not return; but these must return without hope]; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; . . . who [Christ] glorifies the Father, and saves all the work of his hands, except those sons of perdition . . . they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment.

From Book of Mormon, small edition, we quote:

Now behold I say unto you, then cometh a death, even a second death, which is a spiritual death; . . . yea, he shall die as to things pertaining unto righteousness; then is the time when their torment shall be as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; . . . Then I say unto you, they shall be as though there had been no redemption made; for they can not be redeemed according to God's justice; and they can not die, seeing there is no more corruption.—Page 238.

Assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end.—Page 72.

Now, repentance could not come unto men, except there were a punishment, which also was as eternal as the life of the soul should be, affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul.—Page 315.

These citations prove the fixedness of the second death. They can "not be forgiven . . . in this world, neither in the world to come."

Speaking of the lesser glories, the Doctrine and Covenants has this to say relative to the glory of the moon:

These are they who died without law; and also they who are the spirits of men kept in prison, whom the Son visited, and preached the gospel unto them, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, who received not the testimony of Jesus in the flesh, but afterwards received it; . . . these are they who are not valiant in the testimony of Jesus.—Doctrine and Covenants 76:6.

Of the glory of the stars it says:

These are they who received not the gospel of Christ, neither the testimony of Jesus; . . . These all shall bow the knee, and every tongue shall confess to him who sits upon the throne for ever and ever; for they shall be judged according to their works; . . . and they shall be servants of the Most High, but where God and Christ dwell they can not come, worlds without end.—Verse 7.

THE OPENING OF THE BOOKS.

And the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works.—Revelation 20:12. The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12:48.

In the day of judgment, the records God has given us of his word will stand against the disobedient. Then he will know by the records what his failures have been. God always knows man's failures. The sinner will then know that God's judgments are just. Then "every knee should bow, . . . And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the father" (Philippians 2:10, 11.) "Yea, every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess before him, yea, even at the last day, when all men shall stand to be judged of him, then shall they confess that he is God; then shall they confess, who live without God in the world, that the judgment of an everlasting punishment is just upon them; and they shall quake, and tremble, and shrink beneath the glance of his all-searching eye."—Book of Mormon, p. 198.

May the great Master help us to choose the good and avoid disobedience, and thus merit eternal happiness, and escape eternal misery.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A DULL CHILD.

I was not a dull child in the sense that I was slow of speech, or action. As I remember myself, I was prone to babbling, irrepressible speech—the straying, inconsequent emanations from a vacant mind. It seems to me that I must have been as incapable of orderly, consecutive thought as a parrot.

I was frantic for attention, and was possessed of an o'erweening desire to "show off."

I could not have been a sensitive child, yet my first step toward normal mentality came through my understanding and resentment of the fact that I was an object of ridicule, and that the other children thought me different from themselves.

I remember, once, when I was about eight years old, as we were coming home from school; we passed the county poor farm, and one of the inmates, a harmless old imbecile, stood by the fence, making horrible grimaces at us as we loitered on our way.

"Fanny can make just as ugly faces as he can," cried one of my schoolmates. "Make a face at him, Fanny," she urged me; but I hastened on home. I realized, and for the first time, that people laughed at me—not with me, and the thought that the children considered me like the miserable old creature at the poor farm came to me with the force of a cruel blow. I resolved then and there never to make faces again.

Thus it was the keen shaft of ridicule that first severed the fetters that held my brain in leash. It was a cruel, but much-needed lesson; for I had been repeatedly entreated by my parents to cease the objectionable habit, and I had not paid the slightest attention to their requests.

It was through the cruel frankness of another child that I was broken of the deplorable habit of allowing my mouth to hang open. A sharp-tongued little schoolmate once remarked: "If you only knew how silly you look with your mouth hanging open, Fanny Blank, I'll bet a cooky that you'd shut it, and keep it shut." I never forgave the little girl, but I have always kept my mouth closed with the firmness of a steel trap ever since.

In the same manner, through a chance remark, it was brought to my notice that great girls of my age did not go about hanging to their mothers' hands, as I did, and the knowledge that I was too old to be led, destroyed the pleasure I had derived from the feeling of security and companionship which this habit had given me, and by degrees I gave it up.

I have often wondered why my mother did not gently but firmly teach me the lessons of the grimaces, open mouth, and clinging hand; so that I might have been spared these cruel experiences which have seared my childhood memories.

True, she often told me not to make faces, and even punished me for making them; but if she had told me that the habit made people think that I was like poor old Silas Martin at the county farm, I believe that she could have stopped me at once. Such an argument would have instantly appealed to my befogged intellect, for I think at that time vanity was my dominant emotion.

To the mother who tenderly shields her simple child, I know that this course must seem cruel; but we must remember that we often "must be cruel to be kind," and that knowledge gained through the cruel jibes of a stranger leaves a lasting sting.

I think that the desire to be noticed caused me to do many of the things which made me appear to be so feeble minded. I know of a certainty that this is true of many other children. Only the other day, I heard a lady say, "I used to think that oldest Smith boy wasn't quite bright. He was always trying to show off and acted so silly; but since he's been going to school, he seems very intelligent."

I think I know why that boy has changed. The criticisms of his schoolmates have taught him the very lessons which the mistaken indulgence on the part of his parents failed to instill. The boy has been laughed at and has learned his lesson.

When I was six years old my parents sent me to the public school. Partly because of the forlorn hope of my poor mother that I might in some way absorb a little knowledge and partly because they thought I would be happier at school with other children than alone at home.

After I had attended school punctually for four years I had mastered the first two letters of the alphabet, and my education would probably have ceased with these accomplishments, had not at that time a new teacher taken the place of the young lady, who had for four years looked upon me as a poor, dull-witted creature, who must be tolerated, but could not be taught.

My failure to learn was not because of my lack of comprehension, but because I lacked the ability to concentrate my mind. There is no child so dull that it can not learn, save those with some fatal defect of memory. Any child, who can remember any ordinary facts, such as their name and age, can be taught to read and write. I do not make this assertion without due thought. I know whereof I speak.

It is their entire lack of concentration which renders the dull child so difficult to teach. Any teacher will tell you how very difficult it is to gain and hold the attention of a child not "over bright."

And my new teacher! What a fund of courage and patience she expended in my behalf. How untiring her efforts to lead the dull child into the light. She tried, in my case, both praise and reproof. Her devices for setting my roving mind to work were as ingenious as they were simple. It was soon after the beginning of her reign that she and I combined our forces and attacked the third letter of the alphabet. I remember that she brought a piece of newspaper to school, and insisted that I hunt out every "C" on the paper and pick them with a pin, although I would have much preferred watching the other children, or talking to her.

She employed many simple devices. Some of them much the same as those used in kindergarten, yet in so doing she had always a definite object in view—a lesson to teach instead of merely trying to amuse me and keep me quiet and busy. For example, she allowed me to make the paper chains so much favored by small kindergartners, but I learned my first lesson in numbers by so doing. I began by making chains of alternate red and white links. Then chains with two red and two white links alternating, and so on, until I learned to count and paste ten white links together in my chain before I began on ten of the red.

I was allowed to play with blocks, but never in an aimless, childish fashion. She summarily nipped this inclination in the bud by calling my attention to the fact that my baby brother built houses with blocks, but that big girls, like myself and Emma Jones, used them only to make words.

As a matter of fact, Emma Jones did not use the blocks at all, but the point my teacher made, and intended to make, was that a girl of my age was too old to use blocks for childish purposes. True, by so doing she deprived me of one of my harmless amusements, which were few; but she set my wavering feet one round higher on the ladder of progress toward a normal mentality each time she caused me to strive to be like children of my own age.

I also strung an astonishing quantity of beads; but always with a well-defined purpose on the part of the teacher. For instance, I must always string a certain number of one color before I began upon another. When she began later to teach me fractions, it was with the simple device of the beads. I must thread four of the green beads and then half as many white beads.

"One half of four is how many?" she would ask me, and thinking of the two white beads, I would answer correctly. In fact, I think it was many years before the half of four, as an abstract number, ceased to be represented in my mind by two white beads.

The first entire sentence that I learned to read was: "I see the cat." She printed the words in large letters, and allowed me to outline them with red and white peppermint drops, and to this day, there remains in my mind a vivid picture of the sentence as it looked when formed by the bits of candy.

She had a box containing small cardboard squares, on each of which was printed a simple word, and I must perforce search through the box for the words required to form the sentence in view. In this way I learned to distinguish many words besides those in the required sentence. "Is this cat?" I would ask, holding up a square, and she would reply, "Now, Fanny, that word has an O in the middle, and you know that cat has none. Spell that word that you have in your hand and tell me what you think it is." In this way she would concentrate my attention upon the word, and I would finally comprehend that the word was dog, or box, as the case might be.

She enlisted the services of the other children in exercising my mental forces by interesting them in a game called "logomachy," which consists chiefly of forming words by means of letters which are printed on cards. Not more than four can play at this game; but I remember that I was always one of the players, and it was a powerful incentive to me to learn to spell new words.

A narrow, shallow creek ran back of the schoolhouse, and I had always been accustomed to playing alone on its sandy bank, amusing myself by drawing pictures, or making meaningless marks in the soft soil. My teacher prevailed upon me to write letters, words, and figures instead. She would go with me to the creek after school hours, and would herself write in the sand. Then we would fill the outline of the words with pebbles, and in this way she impressed many new words upon my mind.

My teacher never allowed me to forget any of the useful knowledge which she was at so much pains to impart. For example, she taught me the days of the week, and the months, and required me to keep track of them. I finally came to school prepared to give her the date in full; for I could be reasonably sure that she would inquire.

"Write the word as many times as there are days in the week," she would say to me, or, "Make as many capital M's as there are months in the year." Then again, "Write your name as many times as there are days left of this month."

I have noticed that the simple child is always anxious to talk. My parents had never curbed any inclinations in this matter; but my new teacher combated it earnestly. She taught me to listen.

"Fanny," she would say, "I am going to tell you about a bird and you must listen; because pretty soon I am coming back to your desk and I will want you to tell me just what I have told you about the bird."

The first few times that she did this, the facts she told me had gone from my mind in a few moments, and left me waiting eagerly for her return to my desk that I might tell her something else; but because she declined to listen to anything foreign to the subject which she was trying to impress upon my mind, I gradually comprehended that, if I would have the pleasure of her conversation, I must perforce listen to her and remember what she told me, and simple as were these mental efforts, they brought with them mental strength.

Sometimes she would say: "Fanny, there are three hundred and sixty-five days in the year; I want you to think about that all the time the first reader class is reciting so that you can tell me when I come to your desk." And again, "Fanny, I want you to think about the way to spell 'water' all the way home this afternoon, and then I am sure that you will know how to spell it for me when you come to school to-morrow."

Of course I could not pin my vacillating mind to the word, or subject in question, for that length of time, and I do not suppose she thought I could; but I constantly recalled my straying thoughts to it each time that it occurred to me. I tried to think about it, and I gained much with every mental effort.

Sometimes she would suggest that I look at a letter, or word, that she was trying to impress upon my mind, until she returned to my desk—artfully expressing surprise and admiration at my ability to gaze for so long a time.

It was she, who in a measure broke me of my habit of "showing off." "Fanny," she remarked one day, "you know every one thinks Lilly Stevens is such a nice, smart little girl, and do you know, I believe it is because she always listens quietly when grown people are talking. She never, never pulls at their hands or clothing to make them listen to her." And I, then and there, made up my mind to avoid these mistakes. I would be like Lilly Stevens. I would also be thought a nice little girl.

Questions on April Reading.

Is it pleasant to feel that one is different from other people? How was the dull child in this case helped by ridicule? Would it be safe to use it intentionally as a means of correction? What kindness was done for this child by the cruel frankness of her schoolmate? Why is it desirable to break a child of the habit of holding the mouth open? Was it altogether unkind when a visiting relative broke a boy of this habit, which was one of long standing, by addressing him in the words, "Sonny, shut your mouth so I can see what you look like"? What appearance is given a child who continues in babyish ways when they should have been outgrown? Should one be permitted to be placed at this disadvantage? When should the habit of showing off be checked? Is it kind to allow the child to wait for strangers to teach him this lesson by ridicule? Who are the only children who can not learn? What helps do you see for the mother in the devices used by this teacher? Is not the power to listen well one that should be cultivated?

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, February 19, 1909.

Dear Bro. Blair: The subject of our Daughters of Zion reading for February, is "Self-reverence," and it is so given in the HERALD; but on the leaflets it is given as "Self-revenge." Now it seems to me that some explanation or correction of the error should appear in the HERALD. Will you please make such correction as seems to you necessary in the next HERALD.

Yours truly,

MRS. B. C. SMITH.

This error was purely typographical.—EDITORS HERALD.

War and Industry.

The destructive consequences ensuing to all industries and finance upon a modern war of any proportion are vividly pictured by Charles A. Conant in the Chautauquan for March. Mr. Conant, who is widely known as a practical financier and writer upon economic questions, makes clear the great difference between any future war and any great war of the past. This age is absolutely dependent upon machinery, the value of which is many times the savings of a year and much of which would require years of labor to replace. Consequently a disastrous war of the present time would mean a retardation of progress which is quite inconceivable. For these reasons there is a decided opposition to warfare amongst all leaders of industry in all the chief industrial nations of the globe. The success of modern business depends upon financial stability which in turn is dependent upon credit and international peace.

BROMIDE, Oklahoma, February 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are living in Oklahoma, and have no one to preach to us. We are glad when we get your valuable paper. It is all the preacher we have. My wife has been sick for a long time, and we had to call in the doctor. She said if she could have an elder to administer to her, she would get well. Is there one in Oklahoma that could come out this way? Oh, how glad we would be. Sickness has been so severe on us that it has driven us to want. If any of the Saints could help us in our many afflictions, we would be thankful. I could not leave her bedside to work. When we were well we could make a living. A few dollars would help us wonderfully. We have had good neighbors thus far; but it must be getting burdensome. Dear Saints, pray for us, that my wife may get well. Send us an elder, if you possibly can. Address, Bromide, Oklahoma.

E. W. ANWAY.

NORTH DEER ISLE, Maine, February, 1909.

Editors Herald: Eureka! I have found the angel message. I am very glad to see you, and all the Saints, Brn. LaRue, Bond, Pitt, Kelley, Wight, Thomas Kelley, and Alexander Smith. I thank God with all my mind. I do believe in the gospel, the power of God unto salvation. I want to come out of Sodom, to Zion, the city of God, of peace and safety, where the Devil can not reign in the hearts of men.

I would say that while my faith may be strong, my prayer is that I may be inspired with understanding when most needed. My name is sent for prayers. I should very much like to go to the Home. May God bless Zion.

JOEL H. POWERS.

EVANSVILLE, Wisconsin, February 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: The Southern Wisconsin District convened at Evansville, February 6 and 7. A good degree of the Spirit was present and all present were thankful to thus be blessed. There was quite a good turnout. Sunday-school convened February 5, and although the attendance was light, a good spirit prevailed. The necessary business was done and so we hope that the Sunday-school work may prosper. Through the efforts of Miss Julia N. Dutton and others a district Religio was organized. And we hope that this auxiliary may also flourish. Miss Dutton has acted as district home class superintendent the last year, and in the local organization she has the same office. District superintendent, G. J. Brookover; assistant superintendent, B. C. Flint; secretary, Mrs. Audrey B. Dutton; librarian, Mrs. Pearl Carpenter; treasurer, Mrs. Ira Brown.

The weather was mild and thus all were thankful to God for all his goodness. We are now having a bad storm of rain and snow and it is growing much colder.

Well, we feel that the work is onward in Wisconsin, and still there are many hindering things. With hopes of the future,

Your servant in Christ,

JASPER O. DUTTON.

HOLDEN, Missouri.

Editors Herald: Dear Saints, we are living in the latter days. We have a work to do no others can do. We must do our own work. God has blessed us in many ways, and at many times. What can we do in our weak way for God and the advancement of this gospel to repay God all his blessings? Well, we can do his will and obey his commandments, he has given us. Some time when least expected, we may meet some one who is bitter, very bitter against our beloved gospel, the pure and true gospel of Jesus Christ. If we have not studied the words of God contained in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants, how can we answer them? Can we defend the gospel if we do not understand the teaching of the books?

Then, if we do not let our light shine through our good work, what will be the results? If we let our light shine it may be the means of causing those that oppose us to stop and listen to the gospel story as restored by the angel of God.

By studying the gospel, we will be able to teach those that should come to us with a desire to understand the truth. And those who are not willing to accept the truth, and who put up their arguments against it, we can meet them, in argument, from either the Bible, Book of Mormon, or the Doctrine and Covenants. Oh, dear Saints, let us prepare ourselves to meet anything that may be said against the work. Let us live before God and man so we can lend a helping hand in time of need. Let us put on the whole armor of God, and, with the help of God, do the work that is before us to do to the honor and glory of God.

Your sister in hope of the redemption of Zion,
MRS. GEORGE JENKINS.

Heed the One Who is to Teach.

Dear Herald: Our district conference (Little Sioux) closed last night. It was a glorious season. Peace, love, and unity prevailed in all of its sessions. While in the prayer-services, the wonderful manifestations of the Spirit were abundant, comforting, glorious. Brn. Seddon, C. Derry, J. C. Crabb, and P. M. Hanson ministered the word, and all seemed in their element. They say the aged patriarch is growing feeble; but yesterday his voice rang out clarion-like, with something of his old-time vigor.

Referring to the timely word of caution contained in HERALD for February 3, entitled, "A word to the wise," it occurs to me that if the brethren would read carefully Doctrine and Covenants 43:2, it would occur to them that God in his mercy had appointed one to teach, and they would be relieved of a great deal of trouble and anxiety by permitting him to act in his office. In the hope of the gospel,

News From Branches

THEODORE, ALABAMA.

I have been impressed to write a letter to the HERALD for some time, but the thought would come to me like this, There are many others who can write a better letter than I can, and they can express themselves in such a way that it will be encouraging to the dear Saints; and I would neglect to write by excusing myself in this way. But I know we all have duties to perform, and we are not always justified in excusing ourselves in this way.

I love this latter-day work, and feel that there is no effort too great for me to make for the gospel. I am willing to spend my whole life's service in it. But I know I can not do my duty without the help of God. We are trying to so live that our lives will be pleasing in our dear Master's sight. We rejoice in the blessed hope of the gospel; and we have realized God's blessings upon us at many times. He has been near us in times of need, for which we feel thankful. Our little ones have been healed under the administration of the elders. Oh, I am longing and praying for the faith that was once delivered to the Saints, then we can be gathered home to Zion, and serve the Lord with one accord. I am sure this is worth our time and labor.

The Sunday-school and Religio are still moving along at this place, although husband and I have not been able to attend regularly this winter, because of his working away from home. I believe this branch is growing better spiritually, for which we all feel thankful. Seemingly our prayer-meetings are better; and we enjoy ourselves better when we are assembled together. My earnest prayers are that the Saints everywhere will be able to live better and accomplish more good this year than ever before. As my letter is getting too lengthy, I will not write much more.

Dear Saints, remember us in your prayers. We want to raise our two little ones up in the gospel so that they can do a good work for the Master in the years to come. With best wishes and much love to all the Saints, I am,

MRS. HULDA TILLMAN.

CHICAGO ITEMS.

"It is finished!" As the oak comes from an acorn deposited in the earth, a great river from the faraway springs in the mountains, so all things spring from small beginnings.

Five years ago Sr. Mabel Sanderson started a subscription list, securing promises amounting to over two hundred dollars, to be applied on church property. Vigorous efforts were put forth for a season, but all attempts to "land" something proved of no avail. It would be difficult to follow the branch (West Side) through their many attempts to secure property, each proposition being championed by some enthusiastic member, but failing either to meet the wishes of the majority, or of sufficient financial backing to meet the requirements of the object in view.

But now these enthusiastic strides are consigned to the past to roll blankly into oblivion, in the region of unfulfilled dreams. What we have endeavored to do in the past was all in good faith, but it bore no fruit. Fruitless were our efforts, less one, and fruitless shall they ever remain.

For some time past all have been agreed upon the purchase of a certain lot, and then await our ability to build, and a meeting was ordered, at which it seems probable that this action would have been ordered, but just a day or two before time, Bro. Allen received a letter from a party who had the selling of a small church near Fifteenth Street and Homan Avenue, price twenty-five hundred dollars, with half down at time of purchase. This we could easily do, and we did so promptly. "It is finished."

It was an idea passed quite freely about when Bro. Allen's name was heralded to us as our next missionary a year ago, that the Lord had sent him here to carry the matter of church building through. Seeing what he has accomplished for both the South and West Sides, we can have all reasons to believe that our early surmises were not idle conjectures. Bro. Allen has performed his work well; he has worked hard,—too hard. He is on the go from morning till late in the night almost every day in the week, attending almost every service of both branches, their social functions, etc. No missionary has left Chicago, or will likely leave, with more sincere thanks for actual services rendered the interests of the branches, than Bro. Allen. This is not flattery, Bro. Allen; it is some of the flowers along the pathway of life, which you yourself have publicly recommended should be bestowed rather than reserved for adorning the grave of the toil-worn servant. Flowers, Bro. Allen, the sweetest we as a people can bring to you as our earnest offering.

Bro. J. W. Wight has been with us a few days during the past few weeks, delivering several sermons at both branches. The last two nights he spoke on the West Side; twelve of the Utah elders were out to hear him. They were young men, of bright and gentlemanly appearance, and conversed freely with us, in a spirit of brotherly love.

Monday night, March 8, a number of the Saints met at the home of Sr. Howe, to bid her farewell, as she leaves for Texas this week, expecting to locate and remain.

The Safety of Banking by Mail

The best proof of the safety of sending money by mail is the fact that the tremendous exchanges between banks of different cities, amounting to tens of millions of dollars a day, are handled entirely through the mails, without loss.

B. H. ROBERTS' NEW THEORY CONCERNING THE BOOK OF MORMON.

We have read the article of the Reverend Livingston Smith reproduced in the Literary Digest for March 13, 1909, from the Presbyterian, published in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in which the writer states that Brigham H. Roberts, one of the ablest of the elders of the Utah church, has concluded to abandon the prevailing idea among the great mass of believers in Mormonism with regard to the manner of the translation of the Book of Mormon from the golden plates by Joseph Smith the Martyr. We give this article from the Literary Digest that the members of the Reorganized Church may see to what straits the advocates and defenders of the dogma and practice of plural marriage are driven, provided Reverend Smith has properly stated the position assumed by Elder Brigham H. Roberts:

A leader of the Mormon church, Mr. Brigham H. Roberts, is represented by Reverend Livingston Smith in the Presbyterian (Philadelphia) to have uttered a repudiation of the old "mechanical" theory of the translation of their sacred book. Mr. Smith bases his assertions on statements which he represents Mr. Roberts as making in his recent "Defense of the Faith and of the Saints." They are that "it is no use resisting the matter: the old (mechanical) theory must be abandoned," for "to advance it before intelligent and educated people is to unnecessarily invite ridicule, and make of those who advocate it candidates for contempt." No doubt the Mormons themselves will repudiate the extreme assumption of this critic regarding the importance of these concessions. The "mechanical" theory of the translation of the Book of Mormon, Mr. Smith asserts, "has been exclusively and continuously announced and defended by the 'infallibly inspired' priesthood of the Mormon church, from the inception of the church until the recent overwhelming bombardment of the Mormon citadel by the Congressional investigation of 'the Smoot case' in Washington, two years ago." Mr. Roberts will be remembered as the Mormon leader who was elected to Congress, and "excluded" from that body because he had three wives. Mr. Smith thus states briefly the theory that he says has now been definitely abandoned:

"What is popularly known as the 'mechanical theory,' or process, of using the Seer Stone and the Urim and Thummin, is that 'Joseph Smith looked at the golden plates through them, with his face covered so as to exclude the light, and that he beheld two lines of characters; the upper line being those characters upon the golden plates (said to be Reformed Egyptian), and the other, or lower line, being the English translation of the same; that these words of English translation would remain until Joseph Smith had correctly read them and his scribes had correctly recorded them in the manu-

The management have had two hundred volumes of the Journal of History for 1908 neatly bound in cloth and they are offering them to the Sunday-schools for their libraries for $1.50 per volume. It is only a question of a few months, or years at the most, when these volumes will be hard to secure, and any one desiring to preserve the Journal of History should act promptly in order to take advantage of this liberal offer.

F. B. BLAIR, Manager.

"It is singular that the name of God should be spelled with four letters in almost every known language. In Latin it is Deus; Greek, Zeus; Hebrew, Adon; Syrian, Adad; Arabian, Alla; Persian, Syra; Tartarian, Idga; Egyptian, Aumn or Zeut; East Indian, Esgi or Zeul; Japanese, Zain; Turkish, Addi; Scandinavian, Odin; Croatian, Boga; Etruscan, Chur; Magyarian, Oese; Irish, Dich; German, Gott; French, Dieu; Spanish, Dios; Peruvian, Lian."

script from which the Book of Mormon was later printed, "without the changing of a dot or the crossing of an 'i'."

The importance of the "unconditional surrender" of a theory of translation upon which the integrity of the Book of Mormon has been strenuously maintained for more than three fourths of a century, says the writer, "can only be estimated in the light of the fact that the authors of the abandoned theory are the 'three eye-witnesses,' not only of the alleged 'golden plates,' but are the exclusive eye- and ear-witnesses of the fact, and the manner of their alleged translation by Joseph Smith, who is universally conceded to have necessarily been the only living witness to all the facts in the case." The writer adds:

"Furthermore, not only has the Book of Mormon been officially accredited by the sworn affidavits of these three 'eye-witnesses' upon the title-page of every volume, but the system of Mormonism itself has ever been conceded by the Mormon church to stand or fall upon the validity of the testimony of these witnesses to the fact and the mode of its miraculous translation by the mere mechanical use of the Seer Stone, and the Urim and Thummim (or 'Holy Interpreters') hidden with the golden plates, and transmitted for this purpose to Joseph Smith. For seventy-five years or more the civilized world, outside of the Mormon church, has refused to believe in the alleged existence of the golden plates (as well as in the manner and the fact of their translation). So persistent and effective has been this universal unbelief, and so successful has been the arraignment of the 'eye-witnesses' and their testimony, that the Mormon church, by the authority of its first presidency, has at length officially declared the 'mechanical theory' of translation of these original 'eye-witnesses' must not only be abandoned as being all that the civilized world has declared to be ('absurd,' 'ridiculous,' and 'contemptible!'), but that there must be substituted for it a theory which their modern official theologian and apologete, Brigham H. Roberts, has devised and published in the last edition of the text-book for the instruction and guidance of their missionaries, known as the 'Senior Manual.' This theory has been designated as 'the manual theory,' and declared by its author to have been originated 'merely to ascertain the truth respecting the matter, and with a view of finding a basis from which the work (Book of Mormon; its translation, etc.,) may be successfully advocated and defended!'"

The substance of the "manual theory" is given in these words:

"Joseph Smith, by great mental effort, the exercise of faith, and the gifts of power of God, was enabled to see (in the Urim and Thummim, or in the Seer Stone) not the mechanical and infallible translation of the Egyptian hieroglyphics into the English language; but the "conception" or "thought" of the hieroglyphics which he thereupon formulated into the best form and use of the English language, of which he was master; and that, too, the best at his command, in view of his limited opportunities! This is the infallible substitute for the former, inspired, original theory. It scarcely needs be added that so wide-spread and frantic has been the upheaval and commotion produced by this "manual theory" that its author and publisher has been bitterly assailed by both the Mormon priesthood and laity, and so strenuously castigated and exultingly ridiculed by the non-Mormon people in all parts of the land and world, that he has been held in constant demand by the first presidency as the official exponent and apologete of this latest 'revelation' upon the manner of the golden-plate translation. By voice and pen alike, he is vainly endeavoring to still the tempest, and stay the wrath of his offended and bewildered brethren."—Literary Digest, March 13, 1909.

All that appears necessary for us to state in regard to this theory of Elder Roberts is the fact that the coming forth of the Book of Mormon was represented in prophecy to be a strange work, "a marvelous work and a wonder"; that when the book was to come forth it should be found in the hands of an unlearned man by whom it should be presented to the world through the instrumentality of the visitation of an angel; and that all that was known at the time or can be definitely ascertained now as to the manner of its production, the finding of the plates, the circumstances attending their custody, and the manner of the translation, is the result of a statement made by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and the other witnesses whose names appeared appended to the testimonies published in the original Palmyra edition of the Book of Mormon. All other theories are speculative, the result either of strong prejudice against the work or a desire to be found wiser than other defenders of the book have been.

That a great degree of mystery was to surround the discovery and presentation of the Book of Mormon when it first came to light, is evident. It is equally evident that this mystery was to continue to surround the book to a greater or less extent while it should be doing its duty as a co-witness to the gospel of the Son of God with the Bible and the principle and power of present revelation which would bear witness to advocates and devotees of the divine character of that which was shrouded in mystery. We are not prepared to run the risk which Elder Roberts seems to have undertaken to face by this peculiar "change of front."

It is not wonderful that Mr. Roberts should be assailed from all sides by believers in the Book of Mormon. His effort to explain can not be construed in any other light than an endeavor to fall into line in the ranks of those who have so long been endeavoring to overcome the influence of the Book of Mormon as an efficient aid to the propaganda instituted by Joseph Smith and others more than three quarters of a century ago by divine command through the discovery of the Book of Mormon.

It was stated by the Reorganized Church long ago that the officework of the Reorganization was to take into consideration and examine everything which research into the past might bring to light, and every effort was made orally or in writing to defeat the accepted theories of salvation which could by any manner of application affect the foundation or structural character of what has been known as the latter-day work. While it might make no possible difference in the stability or divinity of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ in what manner the translation from the golden plates was made, the establishment of a different theory than that which held the front at the time the Book of Mormon was issued and has held it ever since, would make sadly against the consistency of the claim made for the exercise and devotion to principle which has characterized the great mass of those who accepted the angelic mission and to whom the Book of Mormon has borne testimony.

It has been foretold that there would come a time when everything under heaven which could be shaken would be shaken; and that if it were possible the very elect should be deceived. It would almost seem that that time was upon us; for if there ever was to be a period when all the exasperating arts of the adversary would be arrayed against the advocates of the truth of what is known as the latter-day work, when all the fears of the weak and unstable within the ranks would be stirred up in an effort to destroy the unstable, that time is now.

We defer further comment until we have been permitted to see Mr. Roberts' theory over his own name.

CO-OPERATION AMONG FARMERS.

Our people are interested in sociological and economic questions. In the HERALD columns we have endeavored from time to time to reproduce those articles from other publications that may be instructive to our readers along the lines indicated,—such as prison reform, medical reform, old age pensions, coöperative experiments, etc. Herewith we present an article from the Iowa State Register and Farmer on the subject of coöperation among farmers:

"The farmer usually stands practically alone against organized interests. In the general readjustment of modern life due to the great changes in manufactures and commerce, inequalities and discriminations have arisen and naturally the separate man suffers most. The unattached man has problems the government should understand. The farmer is almost necessarily handicapped in the development of his business because his capital is small and the volume of his transactions limited.

"There must be a vast enlargement of voluntary organized effort among farmers themselves. It is indispensable that farmers shall work together for their common interests and for the national welfare. If they do not do this, no governmental activity, no legislation, not even better schools will greatly avail. Much has been done. There is a multitude of clubs and associations for social educational and business purposes; and great national organizations are effective. But the farmers are nevertheless relatively unorganized. We have only begun to develop business coöperation in America. Farmers do not influence legislation as they should. They need a more fully organized social and recreative life."

Thus does President Roosevelt analyze the need of coöperation among our American farmers. We have only quoted a part of his wonderful resume of the report of the country life commission in regard to the coöperation phase of agricultural problems. But its necessity is deeply impressed upon the mind and judgment of this far-seeing, right-hearted man.

This is the age of coöperation. All of us recognize it. But often our independence and especially our individualism, when we have had to depend for so many years absolutely upon ourselves, lead us from rather than toward coöperation.

But notice what is going on all about us, not alone in industrial lines, but in the educational and in the social realm. Everywhere people banding themselves together to enjoy the advantages of the combined strength of numbers, of capital, of intellect and of the qualities of heart and mind. And President Roosevelt, mind you, did not mean coöperation along industrial or commercial lines alone, but social lines and educational lines also.

He recognizes that too often on the farms we give ourselves over entirely to work, so much so that we have no spirit to enjoy the society of our neighbors in social gatherings which might otherwise be planned. With our big farms and big undertakings and lack of help we set such a tremendous pace for ourselves that we are constantly overdoing trying to keep up with our work and commercial ambitions. "All work and no play make Jack a dull boy," evidently thinks the president, and he would like to have everybody find some time to play.

In the cities almost everything and everybody is organized. The labor unions, in spite of the bad reputations which unworthy and unwise leaders have sometimes given them, have been a blessing to the human race and each year are coming nearer to the principles of true fellowship and the right industrial relations in the commercial world. The manufacturers, the wholesalers, the retailers, in fact all lines of business, have their organizations, and if not on the offensive side, are at least on the defensive, seeing to it that no other interest encroaches upon their rights if it is possible to prevent it. But as the president has said, the farmers as a class are unorganized.

Yet each year sees the farmer making progress along the lines of coöperation, especially in progressive Iowa, where there are some of the strongest coöperative societies in the country. In fact the corn belt states seem to be better organized for the protection of their agricultural interests than the majority of the agricultural states. Yet even here such work is in its infancy.

With respect to coöperation we are far behind the farmers of some of the foreign countries. In Germany and in France especially there are strong coöperative organizations among farmers. In Denmark four fifths of the farming population is associated in coöperative organizations, in the selling of their farm produce, in operating stores and even banks. Ireland also enjoys coöperation among her farming class to a certain degree. It is claimed that the farmers' organizations in Denmark have been the means of quadrupling that country's exports of butter, bacon, and eggs and that the rural civilization has been changed from a peasant to a rich, prosperous, land-owning class. It is pointed out that where once coöperation becomes a part of agricultural life, the improvement in price, in quantity and quality of product is inevitably followed by better homes, better schools, more social life and a larger degree of fellowship.

Much of the coöperation which has come about among grain growers in our section of the country has been inspired by unjust treatment on the part of grain buyers and dealers. Success has crowned the efforts of the associations of grain growers during the past few years as it has never done before. One of the first effective associations was organized in Manito, Illinois, in February, 1896. This association had a hard fight against the line elevator companies, but finally succeeded.

In Iowa the success has been even more marked than in Illinois. The state organization was formed two years later than that of Illinois; but it has outstripped its predecessor in the number of elevator companies formed. The struggle in Iowa was similar to that in Illinois, though a more bitter fight was waged against the little coöperative Iowa organizations.

The first society of the state was at Rockwell, Cerro Gordo County. Their success is largely attributed to the clause incorporated in their by-laws providing that a commission of one half cent per bushel should be paid into the company treasury by their members for every bushel of grain sold either to themselves or to their competitors. When sold to their own company this represented the cost of handling the grain and when sold to a competitor it was paid into the treasury just the same. In this way the farmers' company was provided for, no matter how much the line elevator people raised their prices in the endeavor to force the farmer company out of business.

They first fought the farmers' company at Rockwell and fought it with every trick known to modern political business and to the everlasting credit of the little group of staunch and faithful farmers the trust failed. But, though the trust was beaten at Rockwell, the fight had been so hardly won that other sections of the state hesitated before organizing their own companies for fear of a similar experience.

A called meeting of all coöperative companies in Iowa was held in Rockwell on November 4, 1904, which resulted in uniting twenty companies into the state association, and that number has been increased until at present there are over 200 companies with a membership of more than 30,000.

Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, and South Dakota now have strong coöperative organizations. Here are a few newspaper items concerning the success of coöperative organizations during the year 1907.

Aurelia has one of the best organized companies in Iowa, though they encountered many hardships in perfecting their organization. There are about 160 members, of which 119 are grain raisers, though the company secures business from 201 farmers in the vicinity. The report of business done from July, 1907, to January 31, 1908, shows a net profit for the six months of $1,755.

The third annual meeting of the St. Ansgar Coöperative Elevator Company, held January 29, 1908, shows that this company handles coal, lumber, and grain and has about 200 members drawn not only from the ranks of the farmers but also from the business men and residents of the town. Their annual report shows sales of merchandise for the year, $30,980. Bushels of grain bought 165,829. Amount paid for the same, $58,350.89.

The annual report of the Farmers' Elevator Company at Alford shows the total purchases for the year, $36,960; total sales, $40,130.88; profit, $3,170.88. During the year the company has handled 2,543 tons of coal, 151,000 bushels of corn, 145,370 bushels of oats, and 1,681 bushels of flax. The capitalization was $3,550 and the profit was 100 per cent.

This hurried glimpse at the successful grain coöperative organizations shows that it has been a very hard fight for the original promoters. In fact it has seemed that the promoters of these coöperative organizations have won against great odds. Many have been the failures of similar organizations and it was this hard and trying experience, together with the chance of failure in the end, which kept so many farm neighborhoods from organizing. But with the marked success of farmers' coöperative associations during the past few years much progress in organization is being made.

A wise man once said that no man is a hypocrite in his amusements, and it is equally true that a man's character is revealed by his admirations, his enthusiasms.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

"The character of the Samaritan notion of God may be appreciated from the following passage of a hymn:

"There is nothing like him or as he is;
There is neither likeness nor body.
None knows who he is but he himself.
None is his creator or his fellow.
He fills the whole world.
Yet there is no chancing upon him.
He appears from every side and quarter,
But no place contains him.
Hidden, yet withal manifest, he sees
And knows everything hidden;
Hidden, not appearing to sight,
Nothing is before him, and after him nothing."

LEAVES FROM LIFE.
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ELDER W. J. HAWORTH.

ELDER W. J. HAWORTH.

Editor of the Gospel Standard, Rosella, Australia.

The eldest of a family of six, I was born at Bendigo, Victoria, Australia, February 7, 1873, the very year the first missionaries were sent to this island continent. My parents were at this time enthusiastic adherents of the "New Light" faith. Judging from my father's accounts, I believe the "New Light" was as near to the restored gospel as might be expected of a human effort.

Before I was two years of age, my parents removed to the Newcastle District, in New South Wales, being thoroughly isolated from their church privileges. After settling in Plattsburg, my father heard, one day, of a Latter Day Saint elder holding services in a hall at Wallsend, the adjoining town. He attended, determined to withstand this teacher of heresy, but was surprised to find the "heretic" teaching exactly the doctrine he already believed, with the addition of much that was indeed "new light" to him. He became a regular attendant, and was soon convinced of the divinity of the latter-day movement. My mother was not so easily convinced, the result being that neither of my parents united with the church at that time.

Those meetings are among my earliest recollections. A very small "toddler" indeed, I remember struggling up the steps into that hall! Inside there were plenty of seats; but they were never all filled. The kind, venerable-looking preacher failed to impress me with his words—I was too young to grasp their import—but his kind, loving manner won my baby heart. Elder Glaud Rodger—others may tell of his missionary labors; to me he was, and always will be, a dear, kind old man who loved children and was good to them. Blessed be his memory!

When Elder Gillen came to this mission, we resided 'neath the present parental roof-tree, on the outskirts of Wallsend. He preached on the streets, and in the halls of Wallsend with some success; then he came home to our house to sleep, and preach again—in his sleep. The sleeping sermons were also successful; for my mother has told me that she listened night after night to them, and that through them she finally became convinced of the truth of the message.

At the time mother was a cripple with rheumatism. I can dimly remember her, painful progress about the house, pushing a chair or a perambulator ahead of her, and then dragging herself after it. She was promised healing on condition of obedience. She obeyed, went into the water a cripple, came out whole, and has never been troubled with rheumatism since. Father obeyed at the same time.

Elder Gillen returned home, and, after a period of waiting, Elder J. F. Burton, wife, and daughter, came to the mission. I was now twelve years of age, able to appreciate the missionary's words as well as his kind, loving manner. Soon a desire was kindled in my young heart to serve the Sender of the message brought by the elder. April 26, 1885, in company with a number of others, I was baptized by my father. The confirmation meeting that afternoon I shall never forget. What an outpouring of the Spirit was there! We had tongues; we had prophecy, with the Spirit's assurance to each soul that they were of the Lord. While being confirmed, I was told, prophetically, by Elder Burton, that I should be called to high and responsible positions in the church, and become useful in the dissemination of truth in my native land. Little did I know at that time the influence that prophecy would exert over my future. Boys and men afterward held it up to ridicule; and Satan used it as a weapon against me, but in doing this he overreached himself, and his purpose failed.

Scarcely had I entered the schoolgrounds next morning, before my schoolmates began to ridicule and burlesque the prophecy. That I, the most reticent boy in the school, should ever become a preacher, was too much for their sense of humor. Circles were formed, and I invited into the center to preach. Sometimes they tried to drag me in; but I could run well in those days. During the remainder of my school-days, this prophecy was never allowed to lie quiet.

Shortly after I left school I was ordained a deacon, but before doing much in that office, I am sorry to say that the allurements of the world proved too much for me. I soon got to love pleasure more than God. Six or seven years of my life were wasted in chasing worldly pleasure. During those years I sowed my wild oats. I have been reaping the harvest ever since. I have been told that my contact with the world during that time made a man of me. That may be; but I am confident that it did not make a better man of me.

My mind gradually became darkened, and Satan seized his opportunity. Numerous were his efforts to destroy my faith. With my associates, I visited on Sundays first one church and then another, with no other desire than to "kill time." But most of these visits resulted in efforts being made to cause me to change my belief. An argument would ensue, and I have heard my would-be converters remark to each other at the close, that I could quote scripture by the yard—so much credit to a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school. Though I involuntarily used the Saints' argument against them, my desires at this time were, if possible, to turn my back on the church. Like one of old, I had a great desire to run away from my present and prospective duties. So betimes I would forget these things for a while; but they would be forcibly brought to my remembrance by some one calling my attention in a sneering manner to that prophecy. Looking back on the experiences of those days, I can now see that their sneers were a blessing in disguise. I had a strong desire to be "hail fellow, well met," with my associates, and for that reason I somehow wished to think as little of my church as possible. Their sneers proved spurs to my conscience, and kept my responsibilities ever before me. About this time, I formed the acquaintance of the young lady who afterwards became my wife. Just when my courtship was progressing nicely, a former workmate came to my Alice's relatives with the news that I was one of those hated "Mormons," that I was some day to become one of their preachers, and would have a lot of wives. I had to explain, and in doing so successfully defended myself and the church.

About the same time Alice became converted to the Methodist faith; and, of course, I took an early opportunity of having a quiet talk with her about the gospel, contrasting her faith with Bible teaching. She listened quietly, then naively remarked: "Why don't you live a better life, if your gospel is so much better than mine?" This mild rebuke produced its effect; and, in conjunction with the other influences struggling within me, ere long resulted in my return to the path of safety.

August 21, 1895, we were married, and on the 2d of the following January, my wife was baptized, having long before been convinced of the truth of the message.

Now ensued a struggle as to whether I should take up the duties of the office to which I had previously been ordained. I believed I had sufficient reason to doubt my calling. I prayed long and earnestly for light; and, when I was almost despairing, I dreamed one night that two brethren, who afterwards did ordain me to the office, were ordaining me to the office of elder; and that, with hands upon my head, one of them stooped down and asked had I faithfully discharged my duties in the office I already held. I answered no; whereupon I was informed that I would not be ordained to the higher office until I had labored acceptably in the office of deacon. I took this as sufficient answer, and labored in the office till April 10, 1898, when I was ordained an elder.

Though my appointment to the field dates from January 24, 1899, my first missionary tour was taken with Elder Wells, the previous year. Going and returning, we traveled some seven hundred and fifty miles by bicycle. We had a bad time, owing to accidents to my machine, but a good time spiritually. I was particularly fortunate in having for my first companion such a man as Elder Wells. Many were the lessons learned, and none of them have been forgotten. That tour over, I returned to labor at various secular callings for another year.

May 1, 1899, marked my entry into the field as a General Conference appointee. Keenly did I feel the parting from loved ones; and, as the time has come for each successive parting after a season at home, I think I have felt the separation more intensely. Still I have found that a chastening, purifying influence is exerted in these separations. When one thinks of the noble sacrifice of the missionary's wife, he can not but feel strengthened and ennobled thereby.

The prosecution of my labors as a missionary has caused me to travel a good deal in New South Wales and Victoria. Of the success of my efforts, I leave God to judge. I have not been satisfied with the fruits of my labor at all times; but I recognize that I have not the aptitude to judge these matters correctly.

Ever since taking the field, I have been appreciative of the work required of me, and cognizant of the largeness of the field. When one reads his letter of appointment, "Australian Mission," if he has ever been here, he can not fail to notice that as far as territory is concerned he has been appointed to labor in the largest mission assigned by the church. Australia is larger by one million, three hundred and six thousand, eight hundred and thirty-one square miles, than the whole of Europe, with Russia excepted.

Cognizant of the vastness of the territory to be operated, and the richness of opportunities, I began to feel that, isolated from the great body of the church in America, in order to be thoroughly equipped for the work before us, we should at least own our own paper. Other brethren felt the same way; and, in 1899, a paper was started; but this had only a precarious existence for eight months, when it quietly succumbed. It was run on worldly advertisements. Between 1900 and 1902, Elder Wells and I kept agitating, through the HERALD, for American subscriptions to an Australian paper; and we were at last successful. Elder Kaler, at the same time, had been raising a considerable sum as treasurer of the New South Wales district press fund. However, it was decided not to buy our own plant at this time; but publish the Gospel Standard, leaving the printing to be done by contract. I had always been of the opinion that we could do better with a plant of our own, and felt called of the Lord to offer myself to start such a work. This was finally accomplished in 1904, when for a short while I resided in Victoria and "picked up" sufficient of the printer's craft to be able to print our own paper and tracts. The 1905 conference of the New South Wales District decided to bring the paper back to New South Wales; and to take business premises, purchase a printing-press (we already had the type), and generally have the printing of our own literature in our own hands. We have been established about two years in our present premises, and the church has a fine growing business as a result. During the past year, many thousands of tracts have been printed and distributed, and we are generally feeling the benefit of owning our own printing-plant.

Many have questioned the propriety of my settling down to labor of this description; but I believe I have had the mind of the Lord upon the matter right along, viz: That God would permit me to firmly establish the business of the Standard Office; and that when he required my services to be altogether spiritual, he would provide a man to attend to the temporalities which now fall to my care. God has indicated to me directly that my labor shall not always be in caring for the publishing interests of the church in this land, and so I am prepared for the change which must come, be it soon or late. I have given my life to his service; and I want to labor where he thinks best. If my future occupation affords the contentment and satisfaction I feel in pursuing my present labor, I shall have little more to desire. I am in this work while the Lord permits. I am not perfect. Have many frailties, but feel that I can trust him who long ago erected a bulwark within my soul, which the many assaults of Satan during my dark days have failed to throw down, to see me safely over all difficulties. In him I have put my trust.

BROKEN BAPTIST SUCCESSION.—PART I.

ELDER J. W. PETERSON.

We introduce this subject to the reader by quoting a Baptist statement by Doctor Cook in his story of the Baptists, page 11:

It is a very perverted and corrupt form of Christianity, with a mixture of Jewish ritualism and heathen rites, but also with sufficient gospel truth to give it some semblance to the true religion.

In contrasting Baptist claims with those of others he had just said:

The Papal church is very old, indeed, but so is Judaism, and so are many of the heathen religions. Age alone can not establish her claim to be recognized as the true church of Christ. It must be shown that in doctrine and practice she is the same as the primitive church.

We shall make this the text by which to try Baptist succession. They ought not to object to taking the medicine which they have prescribed for others. The statements above are true. Truth can not be mixed with error and the true church of Christ must be identical with the primitive church of Jesus Christ not only in doctrine and practice, but also in organization, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost.

We desire the reader to keep in view the above statements of the Baptists themselves while we proceed to examine the doctrines and origin of the various sects through which the Baptists must trace succession from John the Baptist to the present time. Baptist authors differ widely as to their pedigree. David Benedict in his history of the Baptists mentions the following sects through which the truth must be traced (page 60):

The opinion to which I have for a long time been inclined, has been strengthened and confirmed by my recent investigation into the history of all the dissenters from the Roman hierarchy and other national establishments.

He then proceeds to give in chronological order the name of the sects which meet his approval in establishing his preconceived opinion, as follows: Euchites, Massalians, Montanists, Novatians, Donists, Paulicians, Paterines, Vaudois, Waldenses and Albigenses, Leonists, Barengarians, Picards, Arnoldists, Petrobrusians, Henricians, Lollards, Wickliffites, Hussites, and German Baptists. Twenty in all, but he proceeds to say:

A multitude of them were but little known; but whatever of goodness there was among the dissenters for the long period now under review was in all probability mostly found in these communities.

Many Baptists, when pressed for the proofs, are not willing to stand by Benedict, but in the rank and file of the Baptists it is generally believed that the Baptist Church has come down from John the Baptist to the present time. Some try to trace it in one way and some in another. While there is a very large majority of their ablest men who admit that the proof of succession is a failure, yet they allow their membership to think it can be established. Every careful observer knows this to be true. The Baptists generally believe in succession and generally the Baptist ministry admit that it can not be proven. This article is written to meet the general view of the laity. The very title of a book sold regularly at their Central Publishing House at Kansas City, Missouri, gives this impression: The Story of the Baptists in all Ages and Countries. On page 11 he says:

Baptists . . . base their claim to being the true church of Christ, not on their age, nor on apostolic succession, traced through the centuries, but mainly on the identity of their doctrines and practices with those of the apostolic churches.

Yet in chapter four he makes a similar attempt to trace succession through the early dissenting sect as does David Benedict, but his list differs from Benedict. The following quotations are from that book:

Page 34. The first of these early Christian sects, were the Montanists. They arose about the year 150 A. D. in Phrygia, and continued for five centuries. . . . The Novations next invite our attention, they derived their origin as well as their name from Novation of Rome 250 A. D. . . . They flourished for about 300 years and then, probably, became absorbed into other sects holding the same principles but bearing different names. . . . The Donists arose about 50 years later than the Novations and continued for many centuries until absorbed into the other churches and lost under other names. . . . Page 37. For a thousand years after the rise of the Donists we find them spread along in all portions of Europe, under different names but recognized by friends and foes as substantially the same people, and in the middle of the seventeenth century, Fuller, the English ecclesiastical historian, says of the English Baptists that they were Donists new Dipped. Before the Donist's name disappears from the pages of history, another large and important sect makes its appearance, called the Paulicans probably because they gave such (page 38) prominence to the writings of Paul. . . . (page 39) . . . For centuries defamed and pursued they held their own course . . . continuing under various names down to quite near our age in Bulgaria.

Page 41. The early history of the Waldenses is very obscure, but it seems to point to the earliest antiquity as the date of their origin. It is probable, the Waldensian churches maintained an unbroken line of succession, apart from the Papacy, from the days of the Apostles.

Page 43. The name (Waldenses) The people of the Valley probably included a number of sects who held different views and practices. . . . The early Waldenses, therefore, held the principles which now distinguish the Baptists. In later times, however, they departed from their primitive simplicity and about the time of the reformation many of them embraced the baptism of infants and other errors. . . . Page 44. It appears certain that the Cathari, the Paterenes, the Beregarians, the Anabaptists, the Petrobusians, and the Henricans, i. e., the earlier Waldenses . . . opposed infant baptism. In church history we read a great deal about the Manichæans. They were an early heretical sect and consequently their name was hurled at others not heretical according to the New Testament, although dissenting from the church of Rome.

The following sects are the most important through which the Baptists trace succession. The six last above named sects by Doctor Cook were most certainly not Waldenses, however, but most of them were Paulicians, as we will presently show.

1. Montanists. A. D. 150.
2. Novatians. A. D. 250.
3. Donists. A. D. 300.
4. Paulicians. A. D. 660.
5. Bulgarians. A. D. 990.
6. Paterini. Eleventh century.
7. Cathari. Eleventh century.
8. Publicani. Eleventh century.
9. Boni Homines. Eleventh century.
10. Begards. Eleventh century.
11. Brethren of the Free Spirit. Eleventh century.
12. Petrobrusians. Twelfth century.
13. Henricans. Twelfth century.
14. Albigenses. Twelfth century.
15. Waldenses. A. D. 1170.
16. Anabaptists, A. D. 1521.
17. Mennonites. A. D. 1525.
18. English Baptists. A. D. 1611.
19. American Baptists. A. D. 1639.

The accompanying chart will illustrate the matter at a glance.

TWENTY CENTURIES OF BROKEN SUCCESSION.

Many doctrines of the above named sects had scarcely a grain of truth in them as we have illustrated by dotted links in their broken chain of succession, many of them, though having some truth, yet have serious breaks in them. It will be noticed that every link of Catholic succession is broken at both sides of the link. One side represents truth, the other morality; for there can be no divine succession unless they go hand in hand, for "He that abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God" and "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity," are two of the most important texts in the Scripture.

We shall show that most of the above sects held to doctrines worse than "Jewish ritualism or heathen rites," and others were very immoral, while none of them abode fully in the doctrine of Christ. We shall show that the Baptist chain of succession is broken at every link. Indeed we shall show that they are not only broken, but miles and years apart. In some instances centuries apart. No wider stretch of one's imagination is needed than when accepting the Baptist idea of succession through the above-named sects or any others. It can not be proven that several of these sects practiced immersion at all. The second link in their chain, the Novatians, was founded by a man who was not himself immersed. The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 17, p. 603, says of him, "He was baptized by sprinkling." Our American Baptists can not trace their succession back of Roger Williams, in fact scarcely to him, for, it is doubtful that he was legally baptized, because the man who did it, (Ezekiel Holliman) was not himself baptized. First he baptized Williams and Williams in turn baptized Holliman and a number of others, and of them, organized the first Baptist church in America. This baptism without a direct command from God was certainly not legal and yet Baptists try to trace succession through that broken link.

The very sects through which the Baptists try to trace true succession would not to-day be considered orthodox at all by the Baptists themselves, and hence their effort in this direction is illogical and inconsistent.

We will now proceed to examine the doctrine as also the beginning and ending of the above sects.

THE MONTANISTS.

As we have seen the first of these were the Montanists, which arose in the year 150 A. D. and was founded by one named Montanus, who pretended to be the "Comforter" promised by the Savior. (See Sketches of Church History by Reverend Wharey, p. 39.) Did this sacrilegious man have authority to found a Christian Church, and if not, how can divine authority be traced through him? Would the Baptists to-day acknowledge such an one as an orthodox Baptist minister? If not, what shall we say of this link in Baptist succession? It is completely broken by this pretender. Much sooner would we try to trace succession through Rome, but even that is an impossibility. If we admit for the sake of argument, that this sect was authorized of God, they soon ceased to exist and succession ceased with them. Doctor Cook said, as we have quoted, "They continued for five centuries." Then ended authority, if they had any.

THE NOVATIANS.

This sect arose in the third century and perished in the fifth and with them perished succession, if indeed they were of the true faith at all. But it can not be proven that they were. Even from a Baptist point of view it can not be proven that they practiced immersion exclusively. Indeed, the founder of this sect was not baptized at all and it is very likely that he permitted others to yield to some substitute for baptism as he had done. Mosheim says of this sect (cen. 3, chap. 5, pars. 17, 18) :

Novation therefore founded a new sect, in which he was the first bishop. This sect had many adherents who were pleased with the severity of its discipline; and it continued to flourish in many parts of Christendom until the fifth century. The principal coadjutor of Novation in this schism was Novatus, a presbyter of Carthage, who fled to Rome during the heat of this controversy, in order to escape the wrath and the condemnation of Cyprian, his bishop, with whom he had a violent quarrel. . . .

. . . All associations of Christians which opened the door for the return of gross offenders were in their view unworthy the name of true churches of Christ. And hence they assumed the name of Cathari, that is the pure; and what was still more, they rebaptized such as came over to them from the Catholics; for, such influence had the error they embraced upon their own minds, that they believed the baptism of those churches which re-admitted the lapsed could not impart to the subjects of it, remission of sins.

It will be observed that the Novatians considered that baptism, as they practiced it, was for the remission of sins. Is that orthodox Baptist doctrine to-day? After all, are not the Baptists compelled to accept the Latter Day Saint doctrine of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins in order to get back to Christ?

The Encyclopedia Britannica has the following to say of this sect:

Novatianus, . . . founder of the sect of the Novatiani or Novations, was born about the beginning of the third century. . . . His conversion is said to have taken place after an intense mental struggle; he was baptized by sprinkling, and without episcopal confirmation, when on a sick-bed in hourly expectation of his death; . . . he and his followers were excommunicated by the synod held at Rome in October [251]. . . . The sect finally disappeared some two centuries after its origin.—Vol. 17, pp. 603, 604.

One point just here that Baptists are compelled by force of logic to notice, is: if the mother church had any authority to impart she also had authority to excommunicate all dissenters and heretics. If she did not have authority to impart, then dissenters could bring none with them, and therefore all their acts were unauthoritative. It is also quite likely this sect did not immerse at all from what we know of their leader and founder.

The Donists arose fifty years later than the Novatians, hence we consider them next.

THE DONISTS.

Mosheim, cen. 4, chap. 5, par. 7, foot-note 4:

When the Donists returned under the permission of Julian, they demanded of the orthodox the restoration of their churches. But as they were not willing to give them up, and as little could be expected from the civil authorities, the Donists felt justified in depending upon their own strength. Most unhappy proceedings ensued, which have brought lasting disgrace upon the Donists. Bloodshed, merciless denial of the necessities of life, violation of females, in a word the worst excesses of an oppressed party, which after long continued sufferings felt itself authorized to take unsparing revenge, attended the restoration of the Donists.

Cen. 6, chap. 5, par. 2:

The Donists were comfortably situated so long as the Vandals reigned in Africa. But they were less favored when the kingdom was overturned in the year 534. Yet they not only kept up their church, but near the close of the century or from the year 591, they ventured to defend and propagate it with more courage. These efforts of theirs were vigorously opposed by Gregory the Great, who as it appears from his epistles endeavored in various ways to depress the sect now raising its head again. And his measures doubtless were successful; for the Donist Church became extinct in this century; at least no mention is made of it after this time.

When this sect became extinct succession became extinct, also, if indeed those who propagated their faith by the sword could even be guessed to be in the line of Christian succession.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 7, p. 360, has the following to say of them:

In 405 an imperial edict was issued commanding the Donists, under the severest penalties, to return to the Catholic Church. . . . The Donists continued to maintain an independent existence until the seventh century, when they disappeared from history, along with the whole Christian church of North Africa.

This sect had no connection with the Novatians, as the Novatians had none with the Montanists. How then is it possible to trace succession from one to the other? This sect, like the others, was excommunicated by Rome. If she had given her any authority she also withdrew it again. They ceased in the seventh century and therefore they had no connection with the "new dipped Donists" of England.

THE PAULICIANS.

Mosheim, cen. 7, chap. 5, par. 1:

The Greeks during this century, and especially in the reigns of Constantine, Constantine Pogonatus, and Justinian II, were engaged in fierce combat with the Paulicians, whom they considered as a branch of the Manichæans, and who lived in Armenia and the adjacent countries.

Mosheim, cen. 9, chap. 5, par. 2:

The Greeks were engaged with various success during nearly this entire century in cruel wars with the Paulicians, a sect allied to the Manichæans and residing principally in Armenia. This sect is said to have been formed in Armenia by two brothers Paul and John.

In the beginning of the fifth paragraph Mosheim shows that they were not Manichæans because they did not have that form of government, but they may have been such for other reasons, and doubtless were such more or less in doctrine, or else they would not, for more than a hundred years, have been connected with them in belief.

Continuing Mosheim says:

They received the whole of the New Testament except the two epistles of Peter. . . . But many parts of the scripture they construed allegorically, abandoning the literal sense lest it should militate against their doctrines; and this construction they undoubtedly put upon the passages relating to the Lord's supper, baptism, the Old Testament, and some other subjects. . . . They denied that this lower and visible world was created by the supreme God, and distinguished the creator of the world and of human bodies from the God whose residence is in heaven, . . . they taught that Christ brought his body with him from heaven. . . . They did not celebrate the Lord's Supper, . . . believing that Christ possessed an ethereal and celestial body, they could not by any means admit that he was actually nailed to a cross and truly died upon it; . . . They rejected as did nearly all the Gnostics, the books composing the Old Testament, and believed that the writers of them were prompted by the creator of the world and not by the supreme God.—Par. 6.

Of the founder of this sect the Encyclopaedia Britannica has this to say:

About 660 A. D., his attention had been drawn to the New Testament, and especially to the epistles of Paul, whence he derived a set of opinions which, in their combinations at least, were quite peculiar to himself, and under their inspiration he forthwith came forward as a reforming preacher. . . . In token of his Pauline discipleship, he called himself Sylvanus and his flock Macedonians. He died about the year 684, but had a succession of like-minded followers. . . . Meanwhile branch societies of Paulicians had established themselves in Italy and France, and reappear in history there under various names, such as Bulgari, Patareni, Cathari, and Albigenses.—Vol. 18, pp. 433, 434.

It will be noticed that the Britannica says these sects "reappeared." In such case, then, there is a serious break in the line of succession. Are the Baptists able to prove that these sects practiced immersion? We should like to see it proven. The doctrines they held were anything but Baptist, and far from being Christian. No divine authority could be transmitted through the great amount of error they taught. None of these sects would be considered Christian to-day by the Baptists. Could they therefore trace their succession through unchristian, unorthodox, heretical sects?

THE BULGARIANS.

Mosheim says of this sect:

Near the close of the ninth century, some of the Paulicians disseminated their doctrines among the Bulgarians; and among that people who were recently converted to Christianity, those doctrines easily took root.—Cen. 9, chap. 5, par. 4.

Of this sect the Britannica says, vol. 4, p. 516:

Though nominally members of the Greek church the Bulgarians are in many respects as pagan as they were centuries ago and their superstitions are almost countless.

Does succession come through paganism and superstition?

THE BULGARIANS, PATERINI, CATHARI, GAZARI, PUBLICANI, BONI HOMINES, AND ALBIGENSES.

At what time the migration of the Paulicians into Europe commenced, it is difficult to ascertain. But it is well attested that as early as the middle of this century, they were numerous in Lombardy and Insubria, and especially in Milan; nor is it less certain that persons of this sect strolled about in France, Germany, and other countries, and by their appearance of great sanctity captivated no small number of the common people. In Italy they were called Paterini and Cathari, or rather Gazari; . . . In France they were called Albigenses. . . . They were also called Bulgarians particularly in France, because they came formerly from Bulgaria where the patriarch of the sect resided; also Publicani, a corruption of Paubliciani, and Boni Homines and by other appellations.—Mosheim, cen. 11, chap., 5, par. 2.

Still further of the Cathari, Mosheim says:

Proceeding from Bulgaria they raised disturbance in nearly all the countries of Europe. . . . They all agreed in the following opinions: That evil originates from matter, that the creator of this world was a different being from the Supreme God, that Christ had not a real body, nor was he truly born or crucified, that all human bodies are the work of an evil demon, and that they perish without a prospect of a resuscitation; they denied that baptism and the holy supper are of any use; they enjoined an austere and rigorous mode of living, abstinence from flesh and all animal substances, from wine, and matrimony; they despised the books of the Old Testament and revered only the New Testament, especially the four Gospels; and to pass over several things, they believed that rational souls by a lamentable misfortune are enclosed in these bodies, and must be liberated from them by continence, fasting, coarse fare, and other mortifications.

These sentiments which they held in common, were explained and defined differently by their teachers, so that they were divided among themselves into sects.—Mosheim, cen. 12, chap. 5, pars. 4, 5.

THE PETROBRUSIANS.

Of far better character than these [Cathari, etc.,] was the presbyter Peter de Bruys, who about the year 1110 attempted a restoration of true religion in Languedoc and Provence, provinces of France; and having drawn many to follow him, after journeying and laboring for twenty years, was burned by the enraged populace of St. Giles A. D., 1130. The whole system of doctrines inculcated by this Peter upon his followers, who from him were called Petrobrusians, is not known; yet there are five of his opinions which have reached us: 1. That persons ought not to be baptized until they come to the use of reason. 2. That it is not proper to build churches, and that such as are built should be pulled down. 3. That the holy crosses ought to be destroyed. 4. That the body and the blood of Christ are not distributed in the sacred supper, but only the signs of them. 5. That the oblations, prayers, and good works of the living, do not profit the dead.—Mosheim, cen. 12, chap. 5, par. 7.

THE HENRICIANS.

He [Peter de Bruis] was followed by one Henry, perhaps an Italian, an eremite monk, the parent of the sect of Henricians. . . . Everywhere he boldly declaimed against the vices of the clergy and the defects of the prevailing religion, with the applause of the multitude, . . . an accurate account of the doctrines of this man has also not come down to us. We only know that he too disapproved of infant baptism, inveighed severely against the corrupt morals of the clergy, despised the festal days, and religious ceremonies, and held clandestine assemblies.—Mosheim, cen. 12, chap. 5, par. 8.

THE BEGHARDS.

So far as I can judge, these Manichæans of Orleans were mystics, who despised the external worship of God, ascribed no efficacy to religious rites, not even to the sacraments, and supposed religion to consist in the internal contemplation of divine things, and the elevation of the soul to God. At the same time they philosophized respecting God, the three persons in the Godhead, and the soul of man, with more subtlety than the capacity of the age could comprehend. Persons of this description proceeded from Italy in the following centuries, spread over nearly all Europe, and were called in Germany, Brethren of the Free Spirit, and in some other countries Begards.—Mosheim, cen. 11, chap. 5, par. 3.

BRETHREN OF THE FREE SPIRIT.

Passing by the more obscene and short-lived among them; one not the least considerable was that of the Brethren and Sisters of the Free Spirit, which at this time secretly spread itself over all Italy, France, and Germany. . . . Clothed in a singular manner they ran about the cities and the country, begging their bread with loud vociferations; for they maintained that labor prevented the elevation of the soul to God and devout contemplation. They were accompanied by women under the appellation of sisters, with whom they lived with the greatest familiarity. . . . They inferred that a person thus raised up to God, and absorbed, as it were, in the divine nature, is himself God, and such a son of God as Christ was, and therefore is raised above all laws human and divine. And they maintained consequently that all external worship of God, prayer, fasting, baptism, the sacred supper, etc., are mere elements for children, which a man no longer needs when converted into God himself and detached from this visible universe.—Mosheim, cen. 13, chap. 5, pars. 9, 10.

Decency forbids that I quote further from this sect which historians denominate Paulicians. The Baptists were very unfortunate in selecting the Paulicians as one of their predecessors.

THE WALDENSES.

The Waldenses can not be connected with either the Montanists, the Novatians, or the Donists. Neither can they be connected with the Paulicians. While Fuller may have called the English Baptists "Donists new dipped," no one will try to trace Donist succession through the Waldenses. One just as well claim that a class of Holiness at Tabor, Iowa, and sometimes called Taborites, are a succession of the Taborites of the fifteenth century mentioned by Mosheim in cen. 15, chap. 3, par. 6.

They are only three hundred years apart and that is not nearly so long a jump as the Baptists are compelled to make, while trying to trace a connection from the old Donists to the "New dipped ones" nine hundred years later.

Just when the Waldenses arose is not known. Doctor Cook, himself a Baptist, has said that their origin is very obscure. Again he says, "It is probable the Waldensian churches maintained an unbroken line of succession, apart from the Papacy, from the days of the Apostles." Why did he write "probable"? If he could have made it any stronger he would have done so. But he admits the probability is "very obscure." Must the great Baptist church tie their life-line to a "probability"? There is no certainty to it. One of their own men has well said:

The idea of an unbroken succession of regular Baptist churches, from the days of the Apostles to our day, is a sheer historical picture. My opinion is that it is altogether impossible to make out an unbroken succession of witnesses for the truth outside of the Roman Catholic Church. I should prefer to attempt any other intellectual achievement conceivable.—Doctor George W. Northrup, president of Chicago Baptist Theological Seminary, quoted in Parsons' Text Book, p. 205.

The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 24, pp. 322-325, has the following on the Waldenses:

A name given to the members of an heretical sect which arose in the south of France about 1170. . . . In the beginning of the thirteenth century there was a tendency to class all bodies of heretics together. . . . Most of these sects were stamped out before the period of the Middle Ages came to a close. The Waldenses under their more modern name of the Vaudois, have survived to the present day in the valleys of Piedmont, . . . As regards their antiquity, the attempts to claim for them an earlier origin than the end of the twelfth century can no longer be sustained. They rest upon the supposed antiquity of a body of Waldensian literature, which modern criticism has shown to have been tampered with. . . . Pope Alexander III, who had approved of the poverty of the Waldensians, prohibited them from preaching without the permission of the bishops (1179). Waldo answered that he must obey God rather than man. The result of this disobedience was excommunication by Lucius III in 1184. Thus a reforming movement became heresy through disobedience to authority. . . . When forbidden to preach without the permission of the bishop, they were driven to assert the right of all to preach, without distinction of age or sex. . . . The Waldenses withdrew altogether from the ministrations of the church, and chose ministers for themselves. . . . Election took the place of ordination, . . . and recognizes only two orders, . . . While the northern body kept the old three orders of bishops, priests, and deacons. . . . Ceremonies disappeared; and a new religious society arose equally unlike medieval church and the Protestantism of the sixteenth century. . . . Before the continued zeal of persecution the Waldenses slowly disappeared from the chief centers of population and took refuge in the retired valleys of the Alps. There, in the recesses of Piedmont, . . . a settlement of Waldensians was made who gave their name to these valleys of the Vaudois. . . . In point of doctrine they acknowledge the seven sacraments, but give to them a symbolical meaning; they prayed to the virgin and saints, and admitted auricular confession, . . . A synod was held in 1532 at Chanforans in the valley of Angrogne where a new confession of faith was adopted, which recognized the doctrine of election, assimilated the practices of the Vaudois to those of the Swiss congregations, renounced for the future all regeneration of the Roman communion, and established their own worship no longer as secret meetings of a faithful few but as public assemblies for the glory of God. Thus the Vaudois ceased to be relics of the past, and became absorbed in the general movement of Protestantism.

No one can connect the Waldenses with any of the preceding sects which the Baptists mention as their predecessors. If they had any authority at all they received it from the Catholics, but the Catholics had departed from the true faith long before there is any mention made of the Waldenses, and therefore had no authority to impart. According to Baptist authority the Waldenses had "departed from their primitive simplicity" and hence they had no authority to impart to the English Baptists several years later. This link of Baptist succession is broken at each end. A new confession of faith was adopted by them in 1532, hence they were apostates from their preceding faith. If they were right before, they were wrong afterward, and if they were right afterward, they were wrong before. Which horn of the dilemma will the Baptists take? It will be remembered that the Waldenses "prayed to the virgin Mary and the saints." They also admitted "auricular confession," and afterward accepted the doctrine of "election." It must be remembered in this connection that a Baptist author has said, "It is a very perverted form of Christianity with a mixture of Jewish ritualism and heathen rites." The earlier Waldenses had a bishop as one of their officers, therefore Baptists can not reach Christ without the Episcopal form of church government which they denounce. Surely the Waldenses were not orthodox Baptists, and at the same time orthodox Episcopalians and orthodox Presbyterians.

Neither doctrinally, authoritatively, nor in any other way can the Baptists get back to the earlier dissenting sects, and much less to Christ. And from what has been said it would not be wonderful if the Calvinists might also claim the Waldenses as their predecessors from what has been stated of their belief in the doctrine of election. Indeed we shall show that such is the case.

Mosheim, cen. 16, chap. 2, par. 25:

The descendants of the Waldenses who lived shut up in the valley of Piedmont, were led by their proximity to the French Genevans to embrace their doctrines and worship. Yet they retained not a few of their ancient rules of discipline so late as the year 1630. But in this year the greatest part of the Waldenses were swept off by pestilence; and their new teachers whom they obtained from France regulated all their affairs according to the pattern of the French Reformed Church.

Sketches of Church History, by Reverend Wharey, page 176:

Some have maintained, however, and probably with truth, that the Waldenses were of much higher date than the time of Peter Waldo, and that they took their name from the valleys in which they dwelt, and some have even deduced their origin from a very early period of the Christian Church. That a people did inhabit those valleys long before this time, who rejected the corruptions of the church of Rome, is generally admitted to be true; and hence the doctrines of Peter Waldo and his associates obtained so ready a reception, and so strong a hold among them. And although their history is involved in much obscurity, there is every probability that the Waldenses were the successors of those pious and faithful witnesses for Christ. The doctrines and order which they maintained, have been much disputed. Yet it is believed that no candid reader of the creeds, confessions, and other public documents which they have left, can hesitate to conclude that their leading opinions were very nearly the same with those which were afterward entertained by Luther, Calvin, and other Reformers, so that they fell in very readily with the church of Geneva, in the sixteenth century. That they taught, substantially, the system of free grace which is now received in orthodox Protestant churches, and that they were also Pedobaptists and Presbyterian, is too evident to admit of reasonable doubt.

Could they have been Baptists and Presbyterians, too?

ENDLESS TORMENT.

NO CONTRADICTIONS BETWEEN THE BOOK OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS.

It seems that of late some opposers to the latter-day work have tried to make it appear that there is a contradiction in the teaching of the two books above referred to regarding the doctrine of endless punishment. It appears that one of our brethren who had to meet this contention was rather of the opinion that his opponent had sustained this point. The writer having made an examination of these two books in relation to this subject, does not believe there is any contradiction in their teachings.

Let us examine two quotations that have been particularly referred to; we quote as used by the opposition:

Nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment; but it is written endless torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1.

Then, as contradictory to the above, the following is offered:

And their torment is . . . for ever and ever; and has no end.—2 Nephi 6: 6, page 72, small edition.

To those who are familiar with the Book of Mormon it is readily seen that the foregoing is a garbled quotation. It is only by using the ellipsis that there is even an apparent contradiction. When the quotation is given entire, no such contradiction can be made to appear. Let us examine this last reference more fully.

And assuredly, as the Lord liveth, for the Lord God hath spoken it, and it is his eternal word, which can not pass away, that they who are righteous, shall be righteous still, and they who are filthy, shall be filthy still; wherefore, they who are filthy, are the devil and his angels; and they shall go away into everlasting fire, prepared for them; and their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, whose flames ascendeth up for ever and ever; and has no end.—2 Nephi 6: 6, page 72. (The italics are mine.)

By looking at the entire quotation it is easily to be understood that the torment here referred to is that of "the devil and his angels," while the quotation from Doctrine and Covenants has reference to mankind, as the phrases, "And surely every man must repent or suffer," and, "to those who are found on my left hand," plainly show.

There may be an end to hell (see Revelation 20: 14), but I find no scripture that indicates that there shall be an end to the lake of fire and brimstone. And I have yet to find in the word of God that there shall be perpetual torment for any of his creatures, save the Devil and his angels, and the sons of perdition, or those who sin against the Holy Ghost.

A place of punishment may be endless, as we may understand the use of that term, but it does not necessarily follow that all those who are subjected to that punishment shall suffer perpetually.

Referring to same chapter of the Book of Mormon, we find that there is a class—those who have not the law, that shall be delivered from endless torment.

And where there is no law given, there is no punishment; and where there is no punishment, there is no condemnation, and where there is no condemnation, the mercies of the Holy One have claim upon them, because of the atonement: for they are delivered by the power of him: for the atonement satisfieth the demands of his justice upon all those who have not the law given unto them, that they are delivered from that awful monster, death and hell, and the devil, and the lake of fire and brimstone, which is endless torment; and they are restored to that God who gave them breath, which is the Holy One of Israel.—2 Nephi 6: 9.

The above needs no comment. We are still of the opinion that when a careful examination and analysis is made of those texts thought to be contradictory, no contradiction will be found; and that it is only by jugglery and garbling that such contradictions may be made even seemingly to appear.

That there are those who shall go into, and remain in endless punishment and misery all the books plainly teach. (See Matthew 12: 32; Hebrews 6: 4-6; Hebrews 10: 26-29; 2 Peter 2: 20-22; Book of Mormon, small edition, pages 73, 146, 147, 309; Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.)

The last reference informs us that those who have partaken of God's power and suffered themselves to be overcome by the Devil, are "the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord." That "their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched." "And the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof." Hence there is nothing to justify our saying that at some time they shall all be redeemed.

I am sure that a further and careful examination will show that the books do not disagree in teaching on this, or any other point of doctrine.

Going around hard things never makes a strong boy. When you are splitting a stick of wood and come to a knot, the true test of strength is to send the blade of the ax straight down through it. When the knot has been riven clear through the heart and the piece of wood lies in twain, there is a satisfaction in saying: "There! I conquered you! You did not beat me, after all!" The boy who goes around never knows this satisfaction.—Selected.

Will surely lead to God.—G. W. Hootman.

A Special Christmas Offering.

We have obtained permission from Bro. Kelley to share with our readers the following letter, and for two reasons we are pleased to publish it.

First, that it calls attention to the fact that little things carefully gathered together make large ones; and second, that it gives us a truthful glimpse of the methods pursued by the hierarchy of an apostate church to fasten upon an innocent people their corrupt doctrines. It is to help spread the gospel of Christ—the angel's message of "Peace on earth good will to men," that the children bring to Christ their offerings at the Christmastide; for it is that gospel which alone has the power to sweep from the fair earth all such corrupt despotism and unholy practices carried on under the cloak of religion. And how great this work is, how much need there is that our little ones be trained from their earliest years to be helpers in it perhaps this letter will help us, at least in a measure, to realize.

MRS. M. WALKER, Lamoni, Iowa.

Dear Sister Walker: A special Christmas Offering has just come into my hands, which likely will interest you sufficiently so that you will wish to make a note of it. It is two dollars and seventy-five cents, contributed by Sr. Anna Clark, of Independence. She gives an offering of five cents each for her fifty-five great-grandchildren. In the list are fifty-four great-grandchildren and one great great-grandchild. Sr. Clark and her husband went to Utah as early as 1856. She was a very devoted Brighamite, but her husband, Joseph Clark, soon after he arrived in Salt Lake made up his mind that that church was not in harmony with what he had been taught, and found in the books as the gospel of Christ. He was then soon spotted, and in the next year, 1857, after having been waited upon by the teachers of the Sugar House ward and placed in the category of apostates, still refusing to pay obedience to some of the demands of the Utah church, the twenty-four teachers of the ward under the president of the Teachers' Quorum came to their house, each having an ax on his shoulder, and knocked the house down where they were living, and sent the household goods to the father of Mrs. Anna Clark; by the way, the father was one of the teachers. Mrs. Clark was very faithful in her zeal for the Utah church, and they offered her and her four children an asylum if she would go to her father, which she refused, unless her husband was permitted to go. This was refused. They were left in the street. Later a neighbor who had known them in England offered Mrs. Clark hospitality at his house, she inquired whether her husband would be permitted to go, and he told her that he could not admit him. She refused to accept. Then finally a girl who had known her in the old country offered the two a place if they would come to her place, whether they pulled her house down or not. So they went and had shelter there. Mrs. Clark continued for thirty-three years after this a resident of Utah and an adherent to the Utah faith for a long time, and only after she had been thrice instructed by the Spirit that the Reorganized Church, which her husband in the meantime had united with, was the proper body, did she throw off her blind zeal and misdirection so that she could see Utahism as it was. Since that time she has been a devoted member of the Reorganized Church; was a special friend of David H. Smith when he was in Utah; and is blessed with good health and hale and hearty at present, being in her eighty-third year. She is interested in the missionary cause, however, and gave this in the Christmas Offering fund for her numerous grandchildren, as a token to them and a help to the Master's cause. Truly she has been cared for and the Lord has shown he is not slack concerning his promises.

Very truly and respectfully,
E. L. KELLEY.

Sparling-Boles Debate.

Editors Herald: The debate took place in the Christian church at Akin, Illinois, commencing January 18, and lasting six days, two sessions each day of two hours each. Bro. Henry is well known as a skilled debater, having had about forty, and Elder Marion Boles makes a similar claim, having been editor of a Christian paper, a lawyer, and a preacher of thirty years' experience.

The resolutions were the same as in the Braden-Kelley debate held at Kirtland, same rules governing. I acted as moderator for Bro. Henry, Mr. Andrew Philips for Elder Boles, and Mr. Carl Smith, a school-teacher and member of the Baptist Church, was chosen chairman. Weather was fine and house crowded, some standing around the doors and windows, which, owing to the exceptionally warm weather, were left open.

Elder Sparling, in the affirmative the first three days, started out by showing the scripturalness of the names "Church of Jesus Christ" composed of "Saints," explaining the meaning of the prefix "Reorganized," bringing to view the apostasy of the Dark Ages and that of the latter days. Elder Boles followed by denying any apostasy, and argued for a continuity of Christ's church as set up on the day of Pentecost.

Second session: The affirmative brought out additional proof, both scriptural and historical, regarding the former-day apostasy; Boles, in a brief negative lasting not to exceed ten minutes, giving as his reasons that the affirmative had given him nothing to answer, left the question and started out like a wild Indian with a scalping-knife in his hand. "Old Joe's" scalp seemed to be his chief object; after that the three witnesses, also the eight.

Then followed a piece of attempted deception utterly unworthy of any honest man: he pretended to read from a book which he held, giving a certain page. In my position as moderator, and being close alongside the platform, I noticed what I took to be torn leaves in the book, but when he began to read it sounded strange and new. It was a pretended "confession" of Oliver Cowdery. Henry arose to his feet, demanding to see and handle the book. The loose leaves were tracts of the Anti-Mormon Society. We appealed to the chair to exclude them, but were overruled on the ground that it was proper evidence and admissible. Henry said, "Let it go," but turning to Boles, he said, "Remember, you will be on the affirmative soon, and I will pay you back in your own coin,"—which he certainly did.

It is needless to detail any more regarding the negative. It was throughout a rehash of Braden, Blalock, and Bays, with a few additional, brand new arguments from R. B. Neal's mint.

Bro. Henry shone the best when, with his face beaming with the light of heaven, he logically portrayed the coming forth of the Book of Mormon and the prophecies relating thereto; the beautiful symmetry of the church of God organized in these last days through the instrumentality of Joseph Smith, comparing it with the New Testament church in detail.

Elder Boles started out on his affirmative the fourth day, defining his understanding of the word church. Christ was the "head." All people of all denominations were Christians. Any man or woman could go out and preach the gospel, baptize believers, start them out with an elder and deacon, and that would be a "church of Christ." He contended for no central organization or general officers. It is perhaps needless to say that out of many Bible witnesses the negative showed that the little two by four building set up by Boles did not begin to measure up with the true "house of God." Next the affirmative tried to define the word gospel, but as he had three of them, viz, a gospel of "type," a gospel of "promise," and a gospel of "fact," the first two he got mixed up so badly that he did not appear to know them apart himself, and I can truthfully say that to me it looked like an effort to kill time.

The second day he started out on what he called the "covenant of sacrifice," which, as far as he went, appeared to me, at least partly, a repetition of the previous day.

At this juncture the negative rose to a point of order, in which the two principals, both moderators, and the chairman took part, the interruption lasting twenty minutes, and relating to the rule: "That the main question and all parts thereof should be discussed in the order in which they were given." The decision of the chair was somewhat mixed. He stated freely that Elder Boles was not defining his position as clearly and openly as Elder Sparling had done in his affirmative, and that it devolved upon him to do so; but as to when he should do it was not in the province of the chair to say. This decision seemed to rattle the affirmative, and from that time on he seemed to be conscious of his weakness and inability. The sympathy of the audience seemed to swing our way. Deprived of his old store of ridicule and vituperation, forced to stick to the main question, set up his church and compare it to the ancient church, his mortification and chagrin were plainly apparent to the audience. They yelled in derision at his weak effort. In sharp contrast there was Henry, pouring ridicule on him, with years of experience, a continual fund of good humor, one hundred and twenty-five dollars' worth of Campbellite literature. Boles' church was shown to be a poor, bedraggled, ragged orphan. Conceived in 1808, born of the "old mother" whose name is "mystery, Babylon," at Washington, Pennsylvania, not "Pentecost," nursed by tradition, fed on the dead letter of the word, devoid of a living Spirit; dead, dead, dead. The Saints rejoiced and sang: "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet."

Mosiah in Brackets.

In the preface of the new edition of the Book of Mormon, we find the following:

"The name Mosiah was inserted in brackets after the words King Benjamin in Book of Ether 1: 95, in harmony with the reading of the Book of Mosiah 9: 170."

The committee has not informed us why it was necessary to make the insertion in order to produce harmony between the two verses referred to. When we examine the verses carefully, we find that complete harmony exists as it was, and the inserted word produces inharmony, and conveys a false idea.

There is a theory extant that the vision of Jared's brother was written on the "twenty-four plates" of Ether. While this theory is becoming hoary with age, there is no evidence in the Book of Mormon that such a theory is based on facts.

If we accept this tradition as being true, it will be necessary to insert the word Mosiah in brackets after the words King Benjamin and make a number of other changes also. But what are the facts? Jared's brother saw a wonderful vision and he wrote this vision and "sealed them up, that no one can interpret them; . . . And behold, these two stones [Urim and Thummin] will I give unto thee, and ye shall seal them up also, with the things which ye shall write." (Ether 1: 87, 88.) The "writings" of Jared's brother could only be read by the aid of the "two stones."

The Book of Mormon says King Benjamin had obtained these writings of Jared's brother. Why should we say he had not? There is no statement in the Book of Mormon that Ether ever saw the writing of Jared's brother. Then why claim that he had obtained them and translated and recorded them as his twenty-four plates? The vision of Jared's brother was written at the beginning of the Jaredite nation, while Ether wrote during the closing days of that nation's existence. Then the claim that Ether copied the vision of Jared's brother, is based simply on assumption that requires a change in the Book of Mormon to support. But if we take the plain, simple statement that King Benjamin kept them, and if we are asked how or when did he obtain them, say, as we should say when a few other questions are asked us, that we do not know, there will be no difficulty.

After we have inserted the word Mosiah in brackets after the words King Benjamin we will have just as much trouble in answering the question, How or when did Mosiah receive the "interpreters" which he possessed before he ever heard tell of the twenty-four plates of Ether? (See Mosiah 5: 72-77.) It is reasonable to believe that the writings of Jared's brother were obtained at the same time that the "interpreters" or "two stones" were. The "two stones" were "sealed" up with the writings of Jared's brother, and as the "two stones" or "interpreters" were had before the "twenty-four plates" were found, where is the inharmony in believing the plain statement that the writings of Jared's brother were had also? If the vision of Jared's brother were copied by Ether on the "twenty-four plates," and it is a mistake about King Benjamin having the "vision," then the original "writings" of Jared's brother have never been obtained that we have any account of. All the Nephites had was simply a copy of his "writings" made by Ether; and this position must be assumed without one word to sustain it. When we make changes in the Book of Mormon, we should have some good reasons for the changes; but as far as "Mosiah" in brackets is concerned, I consider it a mistake that should be removed as soon as possible.

W. E. PEAK.

DETROIT, Texas, R. F. D. 2.

Editors Herald: As I have through force of circumstances financial and other conditions existing around home been compelled to retire from my field of labor as a missionary since October, I thought I would pen a few lines, thinking some might like to hear from this part of the Lord's vineyard. Will say, I regret very much that I had to abandon my field, for it is the uppermost desire of my heart to be wholly engaged in the cause of the Master. No one knows the torture of mind that I have been in since I left my field, unless it be some one who has passed through like experience. But I never like the idea of half or partly doing a thing, especially if appointed by the Lord or his church. If we are disposed to while away time at all in anything just in order to put in the time, I think that we ought not to be so disposed when appointed by the Lord to do a work for him. We read in the word of the Lord that every one will be rewarded according as his work shall be. And again, God will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be bad. It seemed impossible for me to remain in the field longer, and do justice to my family and creditors, having obligations that I could not meet, the folks having made nothing on the farm to pay debts with, neither could I adjust these matters and do justice to the work in the field.

True, the church is supposed to look after the families of the missionaries and their needs while the missionaries are away from home, and I believe the church is doing this the best it can under the circumstances. I am perfectly satisfied with the assistance the church has given my family while I have been away from them, and I thank the Saints and friends where I have labored for their kind treatment and assistance, believing they did all they could, and that is all the Lord requires of any one. But, dear Saints, I want to drop a thought just here without any intention of casting any reflection on any one, by asking some questions: Are we, as Saints of the most high God, doing our whole duty? We all pray for the redemption of Zion. We often speak of the gathering to Zion. We often talk of the conditions that are going to prevail when Zion is redeemed, and of equality, of the time that is looked forward to when there will be no poor among the Lord's people, of the time as we are informed in the revelations that God has given to his people in the different ages of the world, that the gospel is destined to bring about before Jesus Christ will have so accomplished his work as to be ready to deliver up the kingdom to his Father as the finished work of the redemption of the earth and its inhabitants now. Now, we remember that this is a wonderful work, a glorious work, and we remember, too, that we are called to assist in this great work, that we are collaborators, that we are laborers together with the Lord, and the Lord expects us to do our part in this great work, and then he is ready to do his part, and will surely not fail in doing his part. We remember he has said in a revelation years ago, given to his church, and not to individuals, that were it not for the transgression of his people, they, the people, the pure in heart, Zion, might have been redeemed even then; but they had not learned to be obedient to the things which he required at their hands; but they were full of all manner of evil, and were not imparting of their substance as becometh Saints to the poor and the afflicted among them, and were not united according to the union required by the law of the celestial kingdom, and that Zion could not be built up unless it is by the principles of the celestial kingdom, that otherwise he could not receive her unto himself, and that his people must needs be chastened until they learned obedience, if it must needs be by the things which they suffered. Did they suffer? Did they learn obedience by the things which they suffered? Are not many suffering yet? Is not God the same? or is he any respecter of persons? Are we, as Saints, profiting by the examples and suffering of the past? Are we making the advancement along these lines that we should? Are we, his people, imparting of our substance to the poor and afflicted as becometh Saints? And are we united according to that union required by the law of the celestial kingdom? Are we at a unity, as to what the law of the celestial kingdom is? Are we doing all that we can do in a financial way, as well as every other way, for the redemption of Zion? If not, how long will we have to suffer before we learn obedience? before we are united according to that union required by the law of the celestial kingdom? Do we, as Saints, all understand what is required of the Lord's people by the law of the celestial kingdom? It seems not. And, if not, can all be expected to make as great an effort to comply, as if they were at a unity, as to what the law did require, and will they ever be at a unity as long as there are so many different views being advanced? Will the Lord have to speak again before it is settled? The church has held—and it seems to me the sanction of the Lord has been sufficient—the missionaries have gone to the Saints and to the world since the Reorganization, and before, and have taught that the tenth of the increase annually was required by the law of the celestial kingdom as tithing. Is it right? Abraham paid tithes of all, and Paul says that Abraham paid the tenth. Did Paul know what he was talking about? (See Hebrews 7: 2.) Jacob covenanted with the Lord that he would give him the tenth. (See Genesis 28: 22.) Was it right? True, this was Jacob's part of the covenant; but the Lord called his attention to the vow that he had made, and seemed to be a party to the contract. (See Genesis 31: 13.) We read in the Book of Mormon that Abraham paid tithes, yea, even one tenth of all he possessed. What more do we need? "The elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel, and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit."—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

Now, I would like to write more, but this may find its way to the waste-basket. If so, all well and good. May the Lord bless his work and his people, and may the time hasten on when we will see eye to eye, and speak the same thing.

In gospel bonds,

P. B. BUSSELL.

ARLINGTON, February 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been reading a great deal of what has been said about paying tithing, and will say, Let us all be more faithful in paying; for the Lord has said if we are faithful in little things he will make us master over many things. I will tell my experience. Last fall I made final proof on a homestead to come back to my old home, and when I got here had but a few dollars left; but I had one hundred and forty dollars coming to me, and I said to my children (for I am a widow), "I must pay the tithing first, and we will trust in the dear Lord to bring all else to pass." I drew part of the money and paid my back taxes, and some debts, and I had but little left, and I said, "I do not see how I can even buy a cow and pay for her." Well, on the way home, I stopped to see a family where my little boy was at work. The man came in with a pail full of milk. I said, "Have you a cow to sell?" thinking I could pay part down. He said, "Yes, I will sell you one." I looked at her. He sold her to me for sixteen dollars, and his good wife gave my boy a good suit of clothes, and I paid for the cow. I had five dollars left. There has been plenty of work, so we have got along nicely all winter and kept the children in school. Now let us be more faithful, and give of our substance as becometh Saints. Pray for me that I may ever prove faithful in his cause. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and hoping we may be worthy to be gathered soon.

MRS. CELIA MCCALLUM.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, February 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: Cleveland has not been sufficiently represented in your columns of late, and the writer must plead guilty to part of the blame.

Our branch has been struggling for years to make some gains, and we have succeeded in adding a few, but our gains are not, and have never been up to what they should be in a city of this size, five hundred and twenty-five thousand inhabitants.

In the summer-time we hold Sunday afternoon services in one of the prominent parks and generally get a good audience, largely owing to the fact that there is a second union service, of other churches, at the close of ours, so that the latter part of our session gives a large number of listeners who come early to the other. In this way our speakers have been able to reach many who might never have heard any part of the restored gospel by voluntary attendance on our meetings.

Some of our brethren have held street-meetings, with good attention, but the results are, in the main, still under cover.

In the summer of 1907, Bro. O. B. Thomas held forth among us with good force and effect, taking expressions of many of his stranger hearers as criterion. His work was cut short several meetings by premature removal to Virginia, and we were again left to our own resources.

Early in 1908 Bro. W. E. LaRue came among us from the rugged coasts of Maine, and did excellent branch and park preaching for us. His presentations of the latter-day work were of high quality and quite evidently were well received, and commented upon by very many who had thus the opportunity of receiving "this gospel for a witness."

Before the summer was over Bro. LaRue was in turn taken from us, to the gain of Kansas City, and Cleveland Branch was again dependent upon its home talent for the dissemination of the truth to those who came within our doors. But let it not be thought that the brethren were entirely cast down by the reverses that came. We have several of the priesthood who simply are not to be denied in carrying on the work of the Lord, and the reverses only serve to awaken fresh enthusiasm, and, though burdened with their personal cares and problems, their hearts are in the work, and the plow-handles are not deserted.

At the recent business-meeting Bro. F. T. Haynes asked to be relieved from the presidency of the branch, and so Bro. Theodore Smith (formerly of St. Joseph, Missouri,) was again elected to that office, having served creditably in this capacity several terms, at intervals, during the past fourteen years. The other offices of the branch were filled by those who have shown a willingness and aptitude for effective work and earnest application.

About the same time Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths came to us, bringing with him Elder R. Clark Russell, of Toronto, Canada, who is now giving us the benefit of active pushing work; first in regular stated meetings, and in cottage preaching-services in various parts of the city. Some of them are being held in the homes of liberal non-members and each one forms a nucleus for growth of information among those once uninterested. Several of these have already expressed deep interest in and admiration for the work, and say they like the way our brother hits the nail on the head in his efforts.

The meetings are to be continued for some time, and already our membership are evincing a deeper spiritual fervency. Such interests tend to unite some who may have permitted personalities to cool their brotherly love, and it is certain that if we all consecrate our service and put our hearts into the Lord's business, jealousies and misunderstandings will almost unconsciously melt away.

During the past year and a half several have been added to our branch, though we have had to release some to other branches by removal. Among our accessions were Bro. and Sr. Frank Webbe, Bro. and Sr. McKindsie, and Bro. Bert Keck, who surprised us by demanding baptism at the same occasion.

Our worthy deacon, Bro. John McNeil, having captured a comely Manx damsel and returned with her as his wife, from across the seas, also succeeded in adding her name to the list of new members. She also forms a valuable addition to our musical forces.

Sr. Rosa Webbe has just returned from an extended visit to Independence, Missouri, and her glad countenance and earnest work are heartily welcome.

In all we feel that the Lord's work is on the upward trend.
10734 Woodland Avenue. J. J. PHARE.

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa, February 17, 1909.

Dear Brethren: I have been in this hospital and home for over a year; and although it is a good place for the sick, there are some things that make life very disagreeable. To be in a ward with men in every stage of disease and dying under all conditions has a depressing effect on a man. But what has been the sorest trial is the fact that I am shut out from all the Saints, and though only a stone's throw from the assembly hall, I very seldom go to service from the fact that I derive but little good, especially from the preaching. Chaplain Jesse Cole preaches and has charge of the conglomeration called church. I try hard to lay aside all prejudice and to worship with them in spirit. But, oh, how I long to hear the voices of the Saints, in song, testimony, and prayer.

Bro. Mintun wrote me, giving the names of a few Saints living in and near the city; but I have not met any of them, they are so far out.

Some may desire to know of my whereabouts, and so I ask that this may be published. Much of my time I have been unable to read, but my sight is better now. I think I would like to go to the Saints' Home. I will be able to pay a sum, from time to time, or contribute to the Home fund. I would not like to go unless I could pay my way in part at least. Oh, I long to go to God's house again, and join its service, and be laid to rest by the hands of those dear to me in gospel bonds.

Some one is dying all the time. And the saddest thought is, that nearly all are not ready for that great change—death.

This is a beautiful city of about fifteen thousand inhabitants, and saloons galore, and Satan uses them to carry out his evil designs. There are plenty of churches, but they do nothing to drive the accursed traffic from their midst.

It is a wicked little city. The officers of the Home are splendid men, and have a heavy burden to bear, but do all in their power to make our stay here as pleasant as possible. Brethren, if you publish this letter, please send me a copy of the number containing it, and oblige.

Yours in bonds,

J. S. STRAIN.

MURRAY, Kentucky, January 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church for several years, and have never lost confidence in the church as a body. Can say, to my mind, the church is moving along as fast as God intends it to move. I have felt a few times like it was not moving as fast as I thought it should; but in this I guess I was mistaken; for I understand that God works everything after the counsel of his own will. The work of God can not be frustrated nor hindered. It is the work of men that is frustrated and comes to naught. God's work does not come to naught; it stands the test, and surmounts all opposition, and moves right along, as God desires it should.

My experience since coming into the church has taught me more about man than I ever knew. Man is, in one sense of the word, not much above the brute. What befalls one, befalls the other. They both die, and go to the same place. That is, to the dust again, from whence they came. Both have a spirit, and who knows but what their spirits are as much alike as their bodies? Both the spirit of man and the spirit of the beast go to God who gave them. Now we are told the time will come when the Spirit of the Lord will be poured out upon all flesh; so when that is done, the enmity between man and beast will be at an end. The lion and the lamb will lie down together. If the Lord can do so much for all other flesh, why not do the same for the flesh of man? Now, does God require anything of all flesh, except man, and then require man to do certain things to entitle him to the Spirit of the Lord? Now, here is the point. I can not understand, as a church, how we can claim to receive the Spirit of God that is to guide us into all truth, and at the same time there is confusion among us, just the same as there is among other people. Just take the present condition over the law of consecration and tithing. Quite a difference among the brethren, and all claim to have the Spirit that guides into all truth. Something wrong, brethren. Either you do not have the Spirit, or you are not willing to let it guide you into all truth. Some may claim discussion brings out truth. Yes, that it may do. But why did the Lord give his people the Spirit of truth to guide them into all truth; just let them wrangle through the papers a while in debating with each other over the truth, and by and by they will bring it out. Yes, they often settle our minds as to the truth. But it is just about as it was before their wrangling. Those of us who think for ourselves find ourselves taking sides with one or the other, just as we think is right.

Now, I know I have heard elders preach theories, and claim they preached by the Spirit of God; and afterward claim they did not preach that way, or that theory, in other words. Go right back on what they preached; and to my mind they were honest in thinking they never preached as it was claimed they did. Others I have heard contradict each other in their sermons, and both claim to preach by the Spirit of God, and claim to believe the statement in Doctrine and Covenants where it says if they do not receive the Spirit they are not to teach.

Now, I know the above is true as to how some of we elders do, and why should we claim so much and do so little!

Here is another thing I can not understand. Some of our people will claim that polygamy was never taught in the church till after the death of Joseph Smith, and that it was first taught and practiced in Utah about 1852, and they will cite Utah Mormons to prove it was never taught or practiced till they went to Utah. Then probably in their same article, they will prove it was taught and even practiced at Nauvoo, Illinois, before the death of Joseph Smith, and that Joseph Smith claimed it would be the overthrow of the church if it was not put down; and that Joseph and Hyrum had men cut off from the church for teaching it, and practicing it. So I have read so much of such contradiction that I have often thought such brethren did not have the Spirit that was to guide them into truth. Now, if polygamy was never taught till the Mormons went west, then it is not a truth that it was taught before 1844. And if it is true that some men did teach and practice it at Nauvoo, then it is not true when we claim it was never taught till the Mormons went west, and was first taught by Brigham Young. It is claimed he introduced the doctrine first, yet some claim that John C. Bennett and others first preached it up at Lapeer, and all this before poor old Brigham had any knowledge of the doctrine, so far as the proof is concerned.

Again we hear men and see them fight this one-man-power business, and next there are others that claim God works through the one-man-power at times. So it seems to me that if the brethren would stop and think at least twice before they speak once, it would help them out a little. I believe if we would be more careful to heed the teaching of the one man God has chosen to communicate his will to the church through, we would reach a unity of the faith sooner, and so much misunderstanding of the law would be avoided. We would be able to work more in harmony together. Let us pray that we may have the Spirit to teach, and if we are faithful, we can have that; but do not mistake zeal for the Spirit of God. This is often done by the brethren.

Another mistake has crept in among us; and that is,

Who has the right to preside? Some claiming the high priest is above the seventy, or the twelve, and one man told me the high priest was higher in authority than the president of the church. So others claim differently; and yet it seems the Spirit to guide into all truth is lacking here. Some claim there have been times when the gospel was not in the world others claim differently, and say it has been here ever since Adam's day, and quote Genesis 5:45, Inspired Translation, to prove it.

It seems to me that we, as a church, should be more careful about coming out in print, unless we are at more unity than what we are. Let me refer to a statement found in Palmyra to Independence, page 399. Here is where Emma Smith says Joseph told her that the report of polygamy and spiritual wifery grew out of a chat he had. Said, Well, such a system might possibly be, if everybody was agreed to it, and would behave as they should; but they would not, and besides it was contrary to the will of Heaven. Now, here is my point: If it is contrary to the will of Heaven, how could such a thing be if everybody did behave all right about it? Something wrong about the above statement. Joseph shows his weakness, if he made the above statement, and the light of the presence of the Spirit of God was wanting.

I have recently attended a discussion between two of our elders and another man of a different faith. It was plain to be seen the Spirit of truth was not present all of the time, and our victory was due largely on account of the weakness of our opponent. Well does the Lord say, What is man that thou art mindful of him? Man is, in one sense, great. But this can only be attained by a righteous life, and conforming to all God's laws, which will make him great. Otherwise he is but a small thing in this life. Can not say what the life to come will bring such men and women. May the Lord help us all to come up higher, and be more like Christ, is my prayer.

C. L. SNOW.

CHETEK, Wisconsin, February 17, 1909.

Dear Herald: It is with much interest I read and search your dear pages, as they bring to my heart and mind much cheer and comfort; and oftentimes to my eyes many tears of joy when I read of those who are trying to heed the admonition given to the Saints to "Come up higher."

I often think how very important this great work is, and how little it is esteemed by so many. So it is in this place; and at present it is almost impossible to hold meetings. And, as I feel the need of mingling our voices together in song and praise, I take this opportunity of bearing my testimony to the truthfulness of this gospel of Christ. Many times I have thought I would relate part of a dream or vision which the Lord saw fit to bestow upon me, about a year ago, a time never to be forgotten.

In the still and silent watches of the night the Lord showed me that great and last day when God will avenge and consume those who know him not, those whose works are evil? I saw that consuming fire; and, oh, the awfulness of the destruction, and the commotion of the wicked. Dear Saints, my pen can not describe the blackness of those vapors of smoke that arose from the city I saw destroyed. I saw those who in everyday life would refrain from speaking of God in reverence; but when this great destruction came upon them it was easy then to cry, Lord, Lord, even before their associates. I also saw another class of people, those who treasured their goods, rush from their fine homes and buildings, not seeking to save their goods, but their lives. But, oh, it was too late. The night was at hand. The work was over. The great harvest was at hand. And who would be able to stand. As I stood at a distance looking on, I was moved with compassion, and cried, "Lord, who will be saved in that city," and the word "Saints," stood out so bright to me that my soul rejoiced exceedingly. But, lo, through the midst of the darkness I saw a few Saints, so very few, dear Saints, that it makes me tremble lest we fall short of coming up to the standard God has marked out for us to come to.

Let us live faithfully, dear Saints of God, that we may stand that great and notable day. Ever praying that a bountiful harvest may be the result of our labors here below,

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. MAUD MAIR.

News From Branches

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

Our new church is now located on its permanent foundation at Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets, and the carpenters will start to work the first of this week. We hope it will be ready for occupancy in at least six weeks, when many hearts on the South Side will be made happy.

Sunday, the 7th, was appointed as a day of fasting and prayer for Bro. A. R. Frantz, who has been seriously afflicted. Bro. Frantz, with his wife and two little ones, leave on Tuesday to locate at South Haven, Michigan. We regret very much to lose them. Bro. J. J. Oliver was elected to fill the office of deacon, vacated by Bro. Frantz.

Sunday-school was quite well attended, and very few tardy marks. An honor roll was started two weeks ago and it is proving quite an incentive to many to be on time. May its good influence increase. Sermon at fifteen minutes after eleven in the morning, by Elder P. Pement. Sacrament-service at three o'clock drew a large attendance, and we feel that all were benefited thereby. The prayers and testimonies being very much in evidence, from the brethren, and so few from the sisters, caused us to wonder whether some of the sisters believe in heeding the injunction, "Let the women keep silence in the churches." Elder William Strange occupied the pulpit in the evening. Surely a feast of good things to-day.

Apostle J. W. Wight has favored us with some good sermons the last two weeks, but was called to Lamoni on account of the serious illness of his wife last Friday, so did not favor us Sunday as was announced.

Elder Arthur Allen has been preaching some excellent sermons of late on prayer, manifestations of angels, and jealousy, and feel if we all would heed the instructions we would make much better progress in the work.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

We can report some activity from this quarter again; Elder R. C. Russell passing this way was prevailed upon to tarry awhile with us, he agreeing upon condition that our members find him work to do; the local Saints thereupon hustled round and got quite a number of openings for cottage meetings, averaging three a week beside our regular meetings at the church. Five different homes of those not yet in the faith have been offered for meetings of like nature and many good people interested. We feel hopeful of recruiting members for the kingdom in our suburb of Collinwood where Bro. Russell has made good friends for the cause and has invitations to return.

Our church building has been newly decorated inside and a baptistry installed in the basement, its first use being the baptism of Sr. C. R. Ollom, whom we are pleased indeed to number with the Saints.

We are looking forward to our usual summer campaign of preaching in Wade Park. We believe this one of the finest opportunities that exists, East or West, for presenting the restored gospel, and the privilege we enjoy deserves an able and positive representative, the concensus of opinion of our Saints seems to be that Bro. R. C. Russell is the man for the place and the branch has taken action to have missionary in charge locate him here.

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA.

While we have not so glowing a report as some others, think we are growing a little at least. The Sunday-school under the wise superintendency of W. H. Dawson and C. W. Blair is doing very nicely. The Religio with C. J. Milgate and W. H. Dawson as the presiding officers is awakening some interest. With a few more recruits which we expect, now that spring is here, both of "the helps," as also the branch work will take on, we hope, much new life.

C. W. Earle is our worthy president. We anticipate Bro. and Sr. Earle will be with us for sometime, as he has purchased a lot and erected a dwelling thereon. So may the good work move on.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

We can not report any increase in numbers, but spiritually we feel that we are advancing.

Our pastor, Bro. J. M. Baker, and Bro. Hale W. Smith are away on a missionary trip. They expect to visit Sioux City before their return.

The Religio local gave a social at the home of Bro. and Sr. Rannie, 3318 Taylor Street, where an enjoyable time was had. One of the features of the evening was an old-fashioned spelling match, in which old and young participated. Bro. H. T. McCaig was the winner, he standing quite a while after every one else has missed. After the spelling, ice-cream and cake were served.

On the day previous the Sunday-school and Religio conventions held very interesting sessions. Of the traveling ministry there was in attendance J. F. Curtis. Bro. RAILWAY RATES TO GENERAL CONFERENCE AND CONVENTIONS.

With the present rate of two cents per mile in most of the territory of the Western, Southwestern, Central, and other associations, the several associations have declined to make further reduction to the General Conference and Conventions, for the reason that we could not guarantee an attendance of one thousand. However, the prevailing rate of two cents per mile in the major portions of the territory is about the same as the old rate formerly granted on the certificate plan.

TO THOSE COMING FROM EASTERN POINTS BY SPECIAL TRAIN.

The Division Passenger Agent of the Burlington Route advises me as follows: "I am advised by our general office that this rate [referring to rate and special train mentioned in former notice of Bro. U. W. Greene, as published in HERALD and Ensign] can only be secured by parties of ten or more; that these tickets are not good in sleeping cars, either standard or tourist, and that they will be obliged to rebuy and recheck baggage locally from Chariton to Lamoni on these tickets. We are prohibited by a ruling of the court from using a combination ticket and checking the baggage through." (See Bro. Greene's additional notice in this issue.)

TO DELEGATES AND VISITORS FROM MISSOURI.

The local fares in Missouri will be restored to three cents per mile commencing April 10, and some of the interstate fares from that State to Lamoni, Iowa, may be changed during the latter part of April; therefore if those residing in Missouri will purchase round-trip tickets at their starting points, they will be able to secure same at the fares in effect at the present time.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 20, 1909.

High Priests.

There was mailed to every member of the quorum report blanks. The rule and requirement of the quorum: Annual report is to be made out and mailed to the secretary March 1. This notice is for the delinquents, for a number of the brethren have not yet reported—and your delay to report as required by rule retards the secretary's work.

Your fellow servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, March 19, 1909.

Please send reports for one year ending March 1, 1909, so I can make a general report.

J. B. HARP, Secretary.

Marriages.

HINDERKS—DAVIS.—At Stewartville, Missouri, February 21, 1909. Bro. Omer C. Hinderks and Elizabeth R. Davis were joined in wedlock by the bride's father, John Davis. The ceremony was performed in the church. The church was filled to the door, all wishing them a happy journey through life.

Died.

MCDUGAL.—Flora McDougal was born in Scotland in 1822, and died at Sandrun, Ohio, March 11, 1909. She was united in marriage with James Hannah, March 3, 1847; unto this union were born nine children, five sons and four daughters, four of whom, two sons and two daughters, survive, with twenty-two grandchildren and fifteen great-grandchildren. She united with the church about the year 1854; and with the Reorganization in the summer of 1872. She lived a faithful wife, and a loving mother, dying in full assurance of a glorious resurrection. Was buried at Carbon Hill, Ohio, March 13, 1909. Beyond her immediate circle of neighbors and friends she was unknown. Fame will wreath no chapter for her brow, neither did telegrams or funeral tributes invade the saddened home where her cold form rested, but surely rejoicing angels must have been watching there, over both the living and the dead; with those who have taken up the burden which has fallen from her weak and weary hands. A faithful Saint—a tender and loving mother has passed through great tribulations and to-day is standing near the throne of Him who before her "trode the winepress alone." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

So many letters have come to the HERALD that the editors have been compelled to make extracts from numbers of them, as it is impossible to publish them all in full. While it may not be pleasant to a writer to find that only a part of his letter is published or that the appearance of his letter is delayed, we ask our contributors to be patient. Such things can not be avoided when so many happen to be writing at once. For reasons similar to those mentioned above numbers of articles and autobiographies are still waiting publication.

When things seem to have gone wrong generally, and nothing is quite as it should be; when the other man gets the promotion; the other man makes the wisest investment: the other man, in short, annexes to himself the desired things of life, the trouble is that you forget your part in the game while watching him play his. You've sat gaping at his brilliant moves, and stupidly allowed your own men to get cornered.

Editorial

THE LAW ON SLANDER.

No weapon is more deadly than the tongue of slander. It is the more deadly because it smites in secret. The scandal-bearer always says, "Now don't tell any one that I told you."

The scientific world is now interested in the recently invented "Maxim silencer," which may be attached to a rifle or pistol in such a way as to completely silence the report. The Scientific American says, "The menace of the noiseless gun lies in the fact that the man with murder in his heart may now dispatch his victim in silence. It should be made the subject of immediate and stringent legislation."

The devil had the "Maxim silencer" beat six thousand years. And both human and divine legislators have passed laws to restrain the slanderer. The following quotations as to the common law on this subject are from Bigelow on Torts:

"Statements of the duty. A owes to B the duty not to publish of B (1) defamation in its nature actionable per se, (2) defamation in its nature not actionable per se, to the damage of B.

"Defamation is false imputation upon one's self, character, or reputation, in the way of slander or libel.

"Slander is defamation published orally, or in like manner."

"Whenever language is spoken of as defamatory, it is understood to be false."—Page 149.

"The truth of the charge, whether the charge was made orally or by printed or written language, if fully proved, is, in the absence of statute, a defense to an action for damages for the publication of alleged defamation, though malicious and not reasonably believed to be true."—Page 163.

"This rule appears to go to the extent of justifying a party in publishing of another fact that he has suffered the penalty of the law for the commission of crime, even though he may have been pardoned therefor and have since become a good and respectable citizen."—Page 163.

The law recognizes certain conditions under which communications that might otherwise be actionable are privileged as in the case of judges, councils, and witnesses for making statements required of them in the light of duty with a view to securing enforcement of justice.

"Prima facie privilege accordingly rests upon duty or interest. It is then a matter of motive to make the occasion (prima facie) privileged, one must have been led—moved—by duty or interest."—Page 178.

"It follows from what has been said that no privilege is afforded the mere repetition of defamation; and this is true by the weight of authority, though the party repeating it give the name of the person from whom he received it. The repetition of the language is generally deemed actionable to the same extent, and doubtless with the same qualifications, as is the original publication."—Page 180.

Saints, of course, are subject to the common law, modified by the statutory laws of their various states. God has said to us, "Let no man break the laws of the land." It is to be expected, however, that the gospel law will take higher grounds than are occupied by the civil law. While we may do nothing that is prohibited by the civil law, under the gospel law we may be required to exercise care and refrain from doing some things not considered actionable in the courts of the land.

Blackstone lays down the principle that there is no civil court that can judge the heart, consequently an overt thought must take form in an overt act before the individual can be punished. This also is partially (perhaps wholly) true of our church courts. But Christ can judge the heart and sooner or later will call his followers to an account before a court from which they can not appeal. He demands that his followers shall look to the fountain head of words and acts, namely, their thoughts; and in their thoughts shall avoid that which is evil, unkind, uncharitable, and dwell upon that which is virtuous and of good report.

Touching oral expressions of their thought he has given the following commandments:

Thou shalt not speak evil of thy neighbor, nor do him any harm.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 7.

To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto all men.—Titus 3: 2.

Let all bitterness and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice.—Ephesians 4: 31.

All of this instruction, of course, is subsidiary to the great law found recorded in Mark 12: 30, 31, where Christ says:

And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength: this is the first commandment. And the second is like, namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these.

Here we find two great laws named under which all lesser laws governing Saints operate. One of these is, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

Every act, every thought, every word of the individual who professes to be a follower of Christ must be judged in the light of that law:

One is never justified in giving utterance to any expression concerning his brethren that is not prompted by love.

We have seen that the civil law regards truth as an adequate defense in every case of action for slander, in the absence of statute. That is, in the absence of state statutes modifying the common law an individual may say what he pleases of another and escape legal punishment so long as he confines himself to the truth. As a matter of fact this is modified in many states by statutory laws.

We are compelled to believe, however, that under the gospel law the truth is not always an adequate defense. We are not justified in telling the truth at all times and in all places. There are times when we should speak; and there are times when we should remain silent.

The reader is referred to paragraph 22 of section 42 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. We will suppose that you think you have reason to believe that a certain individual is guilty of the grave crime named in that paragraph. You are very confident that you have the truth in the matter; but are you justified in telling it right and left to the members of the church, or to those outside of the church? We believe that you are not so justified under the law as laid down in this section. Your proper course is to place the matter before the officials of the church, and according to the statement made in this section the transgressor shall be tried before two elders of the church or more, and every word shall be established by two witnesses of the church and not of the enemy. When finally the guilt of the party is fully established before a competent court, the case shall be laid before the church. The statement is made that at this juncture "the elders shall lay the case before the church, and the church shall lift up their hands against him or her, that they may be dealt with according to the law of God."

There are two reasons why you should not go about the work in hand by spreading the evil report broadcast among your associates. Though you may be positive that you have the truth of the matter, you have not been appointed a judge; neither have you heard the other side. The other person must be heard before he or she is condemned; and they have the benefit of the doubt, and are to be considered innocent until the matter of their guilt is fully established.

Second, your telling of the story far and wide may defeat the very end and object of justice, which is to secure among other things, if possible, repentance and reformation on the part of the malefactor, and only when failing in that, his condemnation and suitable punishment.

Your attention is also cited to paragraph 23 of section 42. This paragraph deals with the offenses and the estrangements that occur between individuals in the church and kingdom of God. When a brother has offended you, are you justified in telling all your neighbors and friends of the trouble, even though your statement may be true? Not in the light of this revelation, for therein you are commended to go to this brother alone, and seek to effect a reconciliation. Failing in this and other proper steps, you are to deliver him up to the church, "not the members, but to the elders, and it shall be done in a meeting, and that not before the world." Finally when the case is fully decided by a competent court, and it is determined that the brother has sinned openly his case may be made public, and he be rebuked openly, "that he or she may be ashamed."

No officer or member of the church, high or low, is free from the jurisdiction of the church. In every case there is some court before whom he can be tried. Individuals who know, or think that they know, that others are in transgression, are fully justified in making their statements and their charges before the proper officers of the church and before proper courts of the church, but they do not have the right to make their charges to those who are in no way concerned in judging the case or in meting out or deciding the punishment. Those who disregard this principle are themselves law breakers.

It will be noticed that under the common law certain communications are privileged; that is, witnesses, attorneys, members of courts and legislatures, etc., are privileged to make statement of what they believe to be true regarding individuals whose record is under consideration. The same rule holds good in the church. Members are privileged to make such statements of what they believe to be true as necessity may seem to require, providing those statements are made to proper church officials or before courts engaged in the work of ascertaining truth and forwarding the ends of justice. Such communications are privileged and in fact duty often requires individuals to make such statements. Even if it shall ultimately transpire that they were mistaken they are justified if they were moved by duty and stated that which they believe to be true to persons who under the church law should receive the communication. On this point a young brother in the church, a well known student of law now practicing at the bar, writes in a private letter:

The general rule is that the truth is a sufficient defense. But if one church-member talks about another, he may be given the opportunity to prove that the charge is true. Even though twenty people tell him that they think it is true, he may not have any evidence whatever by which to establish it as an actual fact. Yet, if he has reason to believe, even though the reason might not seem sufficient to most of us, and he states what facts he knows to the proper officers of the church, that statement is privileged,—unless he is actuated in the statement by actual malice. Furthermore, he is prima facie privileged in testifying before a court of elders or other proper church tribunal; but is not protected in making the statement in a public meeting or to others than such officers. Furthermore, such officers are no more privileged than an ordinary member, and even the presiding elder has not the right to repeat statements thus made to him, "to his wife, his son, his daughter, his maid-servant, his man-servant, his cow or any other of his animals." (See Leviticus.) I state this because it seems to me a very important part of the subject.

Those who as branch officers or as members of courts, acting in their official capacity, who come in possession of facts regarding individuals, should have a care how they repeat those facts to others. There are few branches that have not suffered because of the tendency of the members to dig into every case that comes up, decide it for themselves, and take sides accordingly, instead of leaving its settlement to proper officers and courts. In too many cases the officers have aggravated the situation by communicating facts that should have been kept strictly within the knowledge of the branch officers, the elders' court, and such witnesses and participants as of necessity figure in the case.

We have noticed, also, that the civil law will permit one to tell that which is to the detriment of another even after he has repented and reformed and is seeking to do the best he can to live down his past. We do not think that the law of God grants any such right. In Ezekiel 33:12-16, we read:

As for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby in the day that he turneth from his wickedness. . . . If the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; he shall surely live, he shall not die. None of his sins that he hath committed shall be mentioned unto him.

Paul, writing under the gospel dispensation, declared that those who embraced the gospel with full purpose of heart, had buried the old man and his deeds, and we submit the thought that when an individual has done this, (and has done his best to rectify past mistakes) no church member has the right to resurrect those old deeds and use them against him. The one who does so is not operating under the law of love.

The truth of the stories that he has peddled is no adequate defense.

There is no weapon more deadly than the tongue of slander. It is the more deadly because it smites in secret. Our people should learn to distinguish between falsehood and truth. They should never repeat or originate a falsehood regarding others; and they should use the truth under the law of love, speaking it when duty requires in such a way as to advance the cause of justice.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

General Booth will celebrate his eightieth birthday April 10. That day will be observed by the Salvation Army all over the world. Several immense meetings will be held in London during the week in which April 10 falls at which the General himself will preside.

Owing to his advanced age, speculation is becoming quite general as to who will be his successor. It is held that the logical successor will be his son, Bramwell Booth. Others hold that while Bramwell is a very able man, he has not the grasp of men and affairs that his father has; and it is proposed in certain quarters that a council of ten shall be established to direct the affairs of the Army after the death of the General.

Mr. W. B. Northrup, writing from London, appears in the Deseret Evening News, in an interesting study of General Booth's character. It would seem from this study that the Army is decidedly a one-man-power organization. General Booth's orders are never questioned, and he is, in fact, supreme dictator. As he grows older his disposition becomes more tyrannical, and it is said that he makes things very interesting for those who surround him and work for him. He has maintained his vigor to a remarkable degree, and declares his intention of living to be one hundred and fifty years old.

The Gospel Standard, published in New South Wales, Australia, announces that Elder G. R. Wells has obtained release from that mission and will leave for America sometime during May. Elder Wells has been in Australia about seven years, and will be missed in his field, as his work has been very successful.

LAMONI ITEMS.

On last Sunday our Sunday-school had an attendance of over five hundred, exclusive of visitors, which is the best attendance of the year thus far.

Elder A. B. Carmichael preached at the eleven o'clock service and Elder F. A. Russell in the evening.

The church is now equipped throughout with electric lights and they were in use Sunday night for the first time. The Saints are pleased with this improvement, the new system excelling the old plant in every particular.

Delegates to the conventions and conference are already coming in quite rapidly.

Some people there are who can never judge without harshness. A mild criticism seems impossible to them. It is a snare to be avoided. Judge righteous judgment. Seek for soft words when you utter your disapprobation of others. It is a skill to be desired and constantly cultivated.—The Epworth Era.

"All the blessings we enjoy have come to us through blood and tears. Socrates taught the immortality of the soul, and a cup of hemlock was the reward of his dream; Paul preached it, and was paid with a dungeon, and death; Christ demonstrated it, and perished on the cross, that we might taste the sweets of eternal life."

The Mission of Love.

One day as they thronged the good Master,
While out on his mission of love,
A woman diseased and despondent,
Was blessed with great faith from above.
And rejoiced in the sweet revelation,
As she felt this truth in her soul,
"If I touch but the hem of his garment
I know I shall then be made whole."

Chorus:

O Sinner, have faith in the Master;
His promise is evermore true;
Just as sure as he healed this poor woman,
Just so sure he will bless and heal you.

O come, for all things are now ready,
The feast is spread freely to-day;
Come eat and nevermore hunger,
There is danger in longer delay;
The way once more has been opened,
By an angelic voice from above,
And though Christ has gone to his Father,
He is still on his mission of love.

(The following lines should have appeared in connection with the obituary of Rachel Mae Haller, which was published in HERALD of March 3, page 215, but which were left out by mistake of the editors.)

To Rachel.

Thou'rt gone, our fair darling,
Thy sweet voice is stilled;
With sadness and weeping
Our hearts are now filled.

O! say, dearest Rachel,
At home in the skies,
Do you see how we miss thee,
How tears fill our eyes?

To know was to love thee,
Thou earth's fairest flower,
Controlling our hearts with Thy love's gentle power.

Thy Sunday-school lesson
Thou're gone to recite
In the bright land of flowers
Where cometh no night.

With hearts full of sadness
We but wait the glad morn,
When Gabriel shall call thee
With loud trumpet horn.

O! then we will clasp thee
With joy to our breast,
And sing with the ransomed
The songs of the blest.

A day in June is rare, perhaps;
But when we get a thaw
In March, the day is not just rare—
It's positively raw!

BROKEN BAPTIST SUCCESSION.—PART II.

ELDER J. W. PETERSON.

THE MENNONITES.

Should any try to trace their succession through the Mennonites I call attention to the following footnote in Mosheim:

Mosheim, cen. 16, chap. 3, foot-note 2:

On the contrary, it is a well-known historical fact that in the sixteenth century the genuine descendants of the old Waldensians, Wickliffites, and Hussites, who were numerous in France, England, Bohemia, Moravia, etc., readily united with the Lutheran and the Reformed communities, and at length became absorbed in them; and that very few, if any of them, ever manifested a preference for the Mennonites or for any of the Anti-paedobaptist sects of that age. The history of the reformation in all the countries where the ancient sects were found fully establishes this fact, which is so adverse to the supposition of the legitimate descent of the Mennonites from the pure Waldensians. The first Mennonites were not persons that had before worn the name of Waldensians, or who were known descendants of Waldensians; nor did they originate either in or near the countries where the Waldensians in that age resided.

Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. 16, p. 12:

The original home of the views afterwards called Mennonite was in Zurich, where, as early as 1525, Grebel and Manz founded a community having for its most distinctive mark baptism upon confession of faith.

This establishes the origin of this sect.

The Britannica says: "Of the introduction of Baptist views into England we have no certain knowledge."—Vol. 3, p. 354. Where will the English Baptists connect with the continental Baptists? Because clans and bands sprang up in England, Germany, Italy, or France who believed more or less in baptism, coupling it with gross error, does not prove succession. The same is true of America. American Baptists can not connect with either of the above. The leader of the sect was baptized by an unbaptized man. The chain of all American Baptists is broken at Roger Williams and Ezekiel Holliman. English Baptists can not trace their succession to the continent of Europe. The Waldenses, Mennonites, and Anabaptists are too short at each end. It is not shown that the Paulicians ever immersed at all and if they did they were too short at one end and fatally divided at the other. Like themselves, the earlier sects were heretical in doctrine and had no connection one with the other.

THE ALBIGENSES.

Were Manichæans and Paulicians.

The Manichæans or the Paulicians whom the Greek emperors had transported from the provinces of the East to Bulgaria and Tharce. . . . From Bulgaria and Tharce some of this sect . . . removed first into Italy and then into other countries of Europe; . . . In France they were called Albigenses.—Mosheim, cen. 11, chap. 5, pars. 1, 2.

The Albigenses were kindred in origin and more or less similar in doctrine to the sects known in Italy as Paterins, in Germany as Catharists, and in France as Bulgarians, but they are not to be entirely identified with any of these. Still less ought they to be confounded, as has frequently been the case, with the Waldenses, who first appear at a later period in history, and are materially different in their doctrinal views. . . . The attempts to discover the precise doctrinal opinions held by the Albigenses is attended with double difficulty. No formal creed or definite doctrinal statement framed by themselves exists, . . . 1229, . . . and a few years later the sect was all but extinct.—Britannica, vol. 1, pp. 454, 455.

The Britannica shows the belief of this sect probably to be the same in many respects to that of the early Manichæans. It will not be necessary to repeat this heresy here.

THE ANABAPTISTS.

The International Dictionary and Cyclopaedia, vol. 1, pp. 197, 198, has the following to say of the Anabaptists:

A well-known fanatical sect which largely figured in the ecclesiastical and civil history of the sixteenth century. It began to attract notice within four years of the ever memorable 31st of October, 1517, on which Luther affixed his "thesis" to the gate of the castle church of Wittenberg. The most eminent of its early leaders were Thomas Munzer, Mark Stubner, and Nicholis Storck. They had been disciples of Luther; but becoming dissatisfied with the moderate character of his reformation, they cast off his authority, and attempted more sweeping changes than he was prepared to sanction. During his absence, they, in 1521, began to preach their doctrines at Wittenberg. Laying claim to supernatural powers, they saw visions, and uttered "prophecies," and made an immense number of proselytes.—Article "Anabaptist."

ENGLISH BAPTISTS.

The International Dictionary and Cyclopaedia, vol. 1, p. 432, has the following on Baptists in England:

Baptist views first attracted attention in England in 1536, and the earliest congregation was formed there in 1611. The first Baptist in the United States was Roger Williams, who seceded from the Puritan communities of New England, was baptized by immersion in Providence, in 1639, and united with others to found there the first Baptist Church in America.—See "Baptist."

AMERICAN BAPTISTS.

Doctor Benedict, a Baptist historian, has the following to say of the founder of the Baptists in America, in his History of the Baptists, p. 450:

This church which is the oldest of the Baptist denomination in America, was formed in March, 1639. Its first members were twelve in number, viz, Roger Williams, Ezekiel Holliman, etc., . . . as the whole company, in their own estimation, were unbaptized and they knew of no administrator in any of the infant settlements to whom they could apply, they with much propriety hit upon the following expedient: Ezekiel Holliman, a man of gifts and piety, by the suffrage of the little company, was appointed to baptize Mr. Williams, who in return baptized Holliman and the other ten.—Parsons' Text-Book, pp. 198, 199.

Notwithstanding there are some apparent differences in the above references, yet in the main I think Mosheim and the Encyclopedia Britannica can be depended upon with respect to European matters more fully than American writers, because of their proximity of time and place.

The various popular churches publish accounts of many of these sects, and each color the narrative more or less to suit their own views of succession, reformation, or evolution. One is not a little surprised to see this attempted with respect to the Albigenses, the Waldenses, and the Mennonites. In reading these different accounts and the criticisms of each other, one can not help but see, that in most regards the Britannica is fairest, although in some regards in it an effort is made to favor the Episcopal idea. One must make proper allowances for all this, but after making all proper and reasonable allowances one must come to the conclusion that Baptist succession is a failure.

To get the matter more closely together and also to refresh the mind on the points hereinbefore mentioned, let us number the points of error (as the Baptists view them), and through which this doctrine of succession must pass; beginning with the Montanists and ending with Ezekiel Holliman and Roger Williams of the American Baptists. 1. Montanus pretended to be the Comforter. 2. Novatian was sprinkled or poured but not baptized. 3. The Novatians had bishops. 4. They rebaptized. 5. They believed baptism was for the remission of sins. 6. Donists propagated their faith by the sword. 7. Revenge. 8. Denial of the necessities of life. 9. Bloodshed. 10. Violation of females. 11. Female preachers. 12. Election of ministers rather than ordination. 13. Three orders of ministers, bishops, priests, and deacons. 14. Symbolical meaning of the seven sacraments including baptism. 15. Worship of the Virgin Mary. 16. Prayers to the dead. 17. Auricular confession. 18. Calvinistic idea of election. 19. Rejection of the two epistles of Peter. 20. Rejection of the literal sense of the Lord's supper. 21. Rejection of the literal sense of baptism. 22. This lower world was not created by the supreme God. 23. Christ brought his body from heaven. 24. Rejection of the Lord's supper. 25. Christ was not nailed to the cross. 26. Christ did not truly die. 27. Rejection of the books of the Old Testament. 28. Paganism. 29. Superstition. 30. Evil originates from matter. 31. Christ did not possess a real body. 32. Christ was not truly born. 33. Christ was not truly crucified. 34. All human bodies are the work of evil demons. 35. No prospect of any resurrection. 36. Baptism of no use. 37. Abstinence from flesh and all animal food. 38. Celibacy. 39. Mortification of the body in order to escape bodily encasement. 40. Improper to build churches. 41. Churches should be pulled down. 42. Religious rites not efficacious. 43. Labor forbids the elevation of the soul to God. 44. Freeloivism. 45. Men may become gods. 46. Above all laws human and divine. 47. Rejection of all external worship, prayers, etc. 48. Baptism performed by unbaptized persons. 49. Visions. 50. Prophecies. 51. Fanaticism. 52. Treason. 53. Infant baptism. 54. Laying on of hands.

What a wonderful pedigree with fifty-four indictments against it. Paul certainly wrote by inspiration when he said, "Grievous wolves shall enter in among you not sparing the flock and of your own selves shall men arise speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." It is a very perverted form of Christianity with a mixture of Jewish ritualism and heathen rites."

We conclude from the foregoing that Baptist succession is an error. Indeed it is scarcely necessary to appeal to history when there are so many passages of scripture referring to the apostasy of the primitive church. We shall see that scripture and all true history agree, and in this case leave the Baptists without father or mother, having neither ancestors nor authority.

The American Baptists, like some of their alleged predecessors have apostatized from what they once held as a truth. Finite man may change with every decade, but the church, being divine in its laws, will have no need to change. Truth is always eternal, but if mixed with error it is ineffectual to save us. God is not the author of confusion. Truth and error are divided, one against the other. Jesus said a house divided against itself will fall.

The early Virginian Baptist Fathers wanting to observe everything that they thought was done in apostolic churches, decided by a majority vote at the General Association of 1775, that this office (apostle) was to be continued, and appointed Samuel Harris for the district lying north of the James River; shortly after which Elijah Craig and John Waller were appointed for that on the south side. At a previous meeting of this body, after two days' debate, they had deferred further consideration for a year . . . and the association then unanimously elected Harris an apostle by ballot.—History of the Baptists, by Armitage, p. 731.

Once the Baptists believed in apostles, but now they do not. If they were right then, they are wrong now, and if right now they were wrong then. So far as the weakness of a chain is concerned it does not matter which end of one of its links is broken.

The American Baptists have changed front not only in their official organization but in doctrine as well. At the Philadelphia Association of September, 1742, the Baptists adopted the following article of faith:

We believe that laying on of hands with prayer, upon baptized believers as such, is an ordinance of Christ and ought to be submitted unto by all such persons as are admitted to partake of the Lord's supper.

Baptists are often very persistent in opposing this doctrine now, but by doing so they attack their own foundation. Baptists can not get back to Christ without the following Latter Day Saint doctrines which once they cherished but now reject: 1. Baptism for the remission of sins. 2. Laying on of hands. 3. Visions. 4. Prophecies. 5. Priests. 6. Bishops. 7. Apostles.

These and many other points of the doctrine of Christ the Baptists now reject, and in doing so clearly break divine succession and divest themselves of divine authority; for the Scriptures have said: "Whosoever transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God."

The Scriptures foretold this apostasy, from the doctrine of Christ, in the following texts: "Yet a little while is the light with you."—Saint John 12: 35. This light was not himself, for Jesus contrasts it with darkness, neither of which are persons. He evidently referred to the light of the gospel.

"From the days of John the Baptist until now, the kingdom suffereth violence, and the violent taketh it by force."—Matthew 11: 12. This kingdom was the work that John the Baptist came to introduce and Jesus came to complete.

Paul has said: "After my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock."—Acts 20: 29. The "flock" here mentioned evidently means the church, and it was to be destroyed. We have proved by history that such was the case.

"The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; . . . they shall turn away their ears from the truth."—2 Timothy 4: 3, 4. Truth is the principle by which men are sanctified, and when they turned away from that, they could no longer be saved although their church organizations might continue. (See Saint John 17: 17.)

"That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first."—2 Thessalonians 2: 3.

There may be some who are unwilling to accept this fact of the rejection of the church, because succession is the only way they see to have a Christian church; but it is not necessary to try to trace Christianity through the corruption of the Dark Ages in order to have a real Christian church. God still lives, and he could easily authorize its restoration. In fact that is what he has done, and what the scriptures foretold that he would do. Succession, reformation, and evolution are alike unnecessary. A restoration will answer better and is the only thing really proved by the Scriptures. Let us briefly refer to those texts which speak of it. The Bible indicates when, where, how, and to whom it was to be established.

WHEN.

1. In a day when there will be swift travel, in connection with horses who shall have wheels like a whirlwind:

And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly: . . . their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind: their roaring shall be like a lion.—Isaiah 5: 26, 28, 29.

This scripture clearly foretold the modern railway locomotive, both as to its wheels and its whistle. It is frequently called the iron horse. The first railroad train in America was in 1829 and in England only two years earlier. The Baptist Church organized in America in 1639 was one hundred and ninety years too soon and it was the last of the Baptist denominations.

2. In the time of swift travel upon the sea:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, . . . see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign.—Isaiah 18: 1, 2.

The first swift vessel crossed the Atlantic Ocean in 1819.

3. In the day of automobiles:

In the day of his preparation, . . . The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall jostle one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.—Nahum 2: 3, 4.

4. John the Baptist to be the preparer before the second coming of the Lord, as well as the first:

Behold, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, . . . But who shall abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap.—Malachi 3: 1, 2. (See also Luke 3: 2-5.)

These texts show that a special work of John the Baptist was to prepare the way for Christ's last coming when the hills shall be made low and the valleys exalted. This is no doubt the preparation in the day of Nahum's chariots.

5. The gospel to be restored in the last days by the hands of an angel, and that angel, John the Baptist, the restorer:

I will send you Elijah the Prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord.—Malachi 4: 5.

Elias shall truly first come, and restore all things. . . . Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist.—Matthew 17: 11, 13.

I saw another angel . . . having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people. Saying with a loud voice, . . . The hour of his judgment is come.—Revelation 14: 6, 7.

6. Immediately before the end of the world, when the Lord shall come to reward his servants:

Go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; . . . lift up a standard for the people. Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him.—Isaiah 62: 10, 11.

7. In the day that the Jews shall return from their second captivity, which event is now taking place:

The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, . . . And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel.—Isaiah 11: 11, 12.

8. Shortly before Palestine recovers from her drought and desolation:

I will proceed to do a marvelous work among this people, even a marvelous work and a wonder: . . . Is it not yet a very little while and Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field.—Isaiah 29: 14, 17.

9. In the eleventh hour of the world:

About the eleventh hour he went out, . . . saith unto them, Go ye also into the vineyard.—Matthew 20: 6, 7.

10. Immediately before the marriage supper of the Lamb. The first ones bidden proved unworthy:

The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the highways, and as many as ye shall find, bid to the marriage.—Matthew 22: 8, 9.

11. The restitution to be immediately before the second coming of Christ:

And he shall send Jesus . . . whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution.—Acts 3: 20, 21.

12. A voice to be heard from heaven in the last days:

And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues.—Revelation 18: 4.

13. Another dispensation after Paul's time:

That in the dispensation of the fullness of times he might gather together in one all things in Christ.—Ephesians 1: 10.

14. A divine church to be established by the Lord in the last days—in the divided state of Roman and Greek Catholicism:

There is a God in heaven that . . . maketh known . . . what shall be in the latter days. . . . And in the days of these kings [ten toes] shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom.—Daniel 2: 28, 44.

In the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established . . . and all nations shall flow unto it.—Isaiah 2: 2.

HOW.

We have already shown in connection with "the time when" the latter-day restoration would occur, that it would be done by angelic and other divine manifestations. Any church not begun as the Bible here describes is not the Bible church, and therefore only a church of men, for God will not honor their ordinances at the judgment-day, although he may reward men in this life and in the next for all the good they do.

TO WHOM.

Begun among the Gentiles:

He will lift up an ensign to the nations.—Isaiah 5: 26.

And he will lift up an ensign for the nations.—Isaiah 11: 12.

I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles.—Isaiah 49: 2.

WHERE.

A land beyond Ethiopia which at that time included all of northern Africa except Egypt. It would be a land shadowing with wings and we believe points out America:

Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia! . . . All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains; and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.—Isaiah 18: 1, 3.

At the end of the earth:

And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth.—Isaiah 5: 26.

We therefore see that the latter-day restoration was to be started among the Gentiles on America by divine authority and that, too, in our day. This proven, it disproves the idea of succession, reformation, or evolution. History completely wrecks the doctrine of succession. The Bible disproves it, and no successionist can show a church that compares in all respects to the New Testament church in doctrine, organization, and gifts of the Holy Spirit.

The same is true of the reformation and of evolution. The churches of men may wonderfully benefit men in this life, but can not save them in the next, for "he that transgresseth and abideth not in the doctrine of Christ hath not God." Governments, temperance, and benevolent societies may benefit men, but we need more, we need salvation which can only be secured in God's appointed way.

Religious Anarchy.

The purpose of this short article is to try to analyze Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10, and, in doing so, will speak for a similar principle in our civil government:

"In regard to the gathering and the work of the bishopric in regard to the law of tithing and consecration, I made inquiry what should be the attitude of the church in regard thereto. To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto; and unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to. In case there should be a flagrant disregard of the rights of the people, the quorums of the church in joint council should be appealed to, and their action and determination should govern. I inquired what quorums of the church were meant, and I was answered, the three quorums the decisions of which are provided for in the law—the presidency, the twelve, and the seventy."

Thomas Jefferson, in the Declaration of Independence, said, "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." And the laws made by Congress are the supreme law of the land, and men chosen by the people to fill the various offices seek to carry into execution that law; and in doing so they are expected to use their best judgment, and in case their fellow citizens believe they are not properly administering the law, they appeal to the judicial body—the courts; they hear and determine the matter under controversy, and there it ends. Let us look for some examples that are practical and come under our observation. For the purpose of obtaining money to meet the current expense of the government, a duty is put on imports coming from foreign countries, and it is collected at the port of entry by the officers of the treasury department. A merchant receives an invoice of goods, and when he goes to pay the duty he is not satisfied with the rate charged, or with the classification of the merchandise made by the revenue officer. Who shall settle the dispute? Will the merchant have the right to decide his own case, or will the revenue officer have the right? Would it be fair to let either one have the power to decide against the other? Most certainly not. The revenue officer has the initial right; but not the final one. A third party must be appealed to, and that is a court of competent jurisdiction; and it hears the case and determines the matter, and there it ends. Suppose a citizen had a right to decide these matters. There would be as many different decisions as there were persons involved in the controversy, and the result would be anarchy, no government at all. It would be a step lower than savagery; for savages do recognize some one among them as having authority.

How shall we administer the temporal law of the church? Shall each member, or agent, or bishop, decide what the law is and how it shall be carried into effect? If so, what would be the result? No two persons or places in the country or the world, would have the same kind of a law. A member keeping the law in one community would be a transgressor in another. Who, then, shall have the initial right to decide the law, and how it shall be administered? God has said the Bishopric shall. Shall we be anarchists, and run the church without law and order? The Bishopric have given their interpretation of what they believe the books teach, in an address to the Saints, in 1901, entitled "Duties, responsibilities, and faith of the Saints," also "An Address to the Saints," in 1903. The Lord has said we should accede to the application of the law as taught by them. They have made their rendition of the law plain. They have put themselves on record. Who shall decide if they are wrong? Shall every one be his own administrator of the law? That would create confusion. It would be religious anarchy. If the liberties of the people are in jeopardy the way is pointed out. The quorums should be appealed to. Which ones? The Presidency, Twelve, and Seventy. None of us should foster or uphold one-man rule; and while we should be jealous of our own rights, we should not rob our brother of his. What, then, is the lawful, orderly way to proceed, if any one believes the law is not properly administered? Prepare charges against the Bishopric, stating the points of maladministration, and present them to the Presidency, and let the matter go properly before the three quorums named in the law. Let it be done without delay. It is wrong to the whole church and the Bishopric, to keep things in a constant turmoil, impairing confidence, and delaying the progress of the work.

Equality and the Order of Enoch.

"Nevertheless, in your temporal things you shall be equal, and this not grudgingly, otherwise the abundance of the manifestations of the Spirit shall be withheld."—Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.

This quotation shows clearly there is an equality that the Lord desires his people to enjoy. We can see the beauty of the system and realize the necessity of such a condition prevailing. The Lord has given a perfect plan, and when it is properly observed this condition of equality will be the natural result. When this condition is attained, great blessings will be enjoyed, both temporally and spiritually.

We may be members of the church and enjoy many spiritual manifestations; but we can not enjoy the Spirit to the same degree that will be enjoyed when this equality prevails. We understand how to proceed to become a member of the church. The first principles of the gospel must be observed. Then when a number of Saints are prepared, they are organized into a branch, and when still further developed they are organized into a stake. These organized conditions come as we are prepared for them. It would be a mistake to bring about a premature organization, but it is a blessing to organize when the Saints are prepared for it.

There is an organization provided for in the law that is calculated to bring about equality in "temporal things." This organization has never been effected in the Reorganized Church, but it was completed or partially completed in Kirtland in the early days of the first organization. It seems strange that we have no more written in our histories of this organization than we have. If we have an account of this organization outside of the Doctrine and Covenants I have never seen it. If this organization is ever effected among us, it will be necessary for us to follow the provisions as made for it in the law, instead of the history, yet the history of the first organization would be a help to us in studying the revelations that provide for it.

The requirements of those in this organization are referred to in section 42: 9, 10-14, yet we have no directions given to bring this organization into existence till we come to section 51: 1: "Hearken unto me, saith the Lord your God, and I will speak unto my servant Edward Partridge, and give unto him directions; for it must needs be that he receive directions how to organize this people, for it must needs be that they are organized according to my laws, if otherwise, they will be cut off." Then follow the directions that the Lord saw fit to give. The object of this organization that was to be effected by the bishop was to bring about equality in temporal things. It is expressed in these words: "Wherefore let my servant Edward Partridge . . . appoint unto this people [when organized] their portion, every man equal according to their families, according to their circumstances, and their wants and needs."—51: 1.

This organization was of a local character and did not include the whole church. This is shown by the statement, "this people," in the first verse, simply referring to the Saints in Kirtland. It is further shown by the following from the second and third verses: "And let that which belongs to this people be appointed unto this people," and "Let that which belongeth to this people not be taken and given unto that of another church [branch]; wherefore, if another church [branch] would receive money of this church [branch when organized], let them pay unto this church again, according as they shall agree."

After Bishop Edward Partridge had received directions how to organize "this people" in Kirtland, the Lord says in verse 5: "Behold, this shall be an example unto my servant Edward Partridge, in other places, in all churches [branches]."

This clearly shows that this organization "for the poor of my people," which is usually called the Order of Enoch, is a local affair, and may be organized in "all churches" where there are a sufficient number of Saints prepared to live according to this system of equality.

This is further explained by section 101: 9 where we find directions from the Lord for an "order" to be organized in Kirtland and one in Zion in the following language: "After you are organized, you shall be called the United Order of the Stake of Zion, the city of Shinehah [Kirtland]. And your brethren, after they are organized, shall be called the united order of the City of Zion."

Here are directions for two orders to be organized. Each "order" is independent and can do its own business "in their own name." The "order" in Kirtland that is "organized in their own names, and in their own name," is directed to "loan" money to the "order" in Zion "as shall be agreed by the order."

These organizations stand out as examples to us and it will be profitable for us to study them carefully. All that is written by inspiration on the subject of equality "in temporal things," agrees with these fundamental principles presented in these two revelations directing the organization of these orders. In these organized orders we find provisions made for "inheritances," "stewardships," and equality "in temporal things." When we are prepared for this advanced condition the Lord will direct for these orders to be organized, just as he did for the organization of the stakes.

All the officers of this organization are not named, or we may not know the extent of the authority of those mentioned, but a brief examination of them may be beneficial. In section 101: 12 we find, "and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward"; etc. This presents the fact that there is a "council of the order" that has certain prerogatives. Besides the "council" here referred to the whole order meets in council or conference and expresses itself on important subjects as is shown by the following: "And let all things be done according to counsel of the order."—Section 101: 3. Again, "As it shall be made known to him by the voice of the Spirit, and according to the counsel of the order; and by the voice of the order."—Section 101: 6.

Again, "If another church would receive money of this church (after it is organized into a new order), let them pay into this church again, according as they shall agree."—Section 51: 3.

The fact is here presented that it is the "order" doing its own business "by the voice of the order," instead of the general church doing it. When the order decides to transact business with another "order" or church organized into an order it can do this business "through the bishop or the agent, which shall be appointed by the voice of the church." The church here refers to a branch organized into an order by the command of God "for the poor of my people." The church appoints the one to do their business for him "by the voice of the church."—Section 51: 3.

When the order is organized, they then appoint the members of the order their stewardship. This is expressed as follows: "Ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship."—Section 101: 2. Again, "Let all things be done according to counsel of the order, and united consent, or voice of the order."—Section 101: 3. Again, "Let my servant Pelagoram [Sidney Rigdon] have appointed unto him," etc.—Section 101: 3.

"And again, let my servant Mahemson [Martin Harris] have appointed unto him, for his stewardship," etc.—Section 101: 4. (See also sections 70: 1; 101: 5-8.)

These quotations give us to understand that the stewardships are designated by revelation and are sanctioned by the order. The one who "appoints unto this people their portion" must do it by inspiration. The bishop is the one to do the appointing or "to divide the lands of heritage of God unto his children," by the Spirit of God. Yet he is not the sole arbiter. His word or appointment is not final. He can only appoint by "the united consent, or voice of the order."

This will insure the order against tyranny or fraud. But when the Spirit directs the bishop and the order, all will move properly, and the order will be appointing stewardships through the directions of the bishop as the law directs. It is no more of a reflection on the bishop for his appointments to be sanctioned by the order before they are effectual, than it is for the revelations of the president to be passed upon.

Besides the "council" of the order there was to "be an agent appointed unto this people to take the money, to provide food and raiment, according to the wants of this people."—Section 51: 2.

This was not a bishop's agent, but "an agent" "unto this people." He was to transact certain business for them, not for the bishop. There was to be "a storehouse" or "treasury" also for this organized order.

"Let the bishop appoint a storehouse unto this church [Kirtland], and let all things, both in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people, be kept in the hands of the bishop."—Section 51: 4. "This church" in Kirtland that was to be organized by the bishop, so "every man" would be "equal," was to have "a storehouse." The money that belongs to this church or order was to be in the hands of "an agent," who was to provide for their "wants." The "agent" is the one to keep the storehouse. But if there is "money" or "meat" in the storehouse of "this church" or "order" that "is more than is needful for the want of this people," it is to "be kept in the hands of the bishop." The order will consecrate to the bishop all of its "surplus property," just as individuals should do out of this order. (See section 42:10.)

"This shall be an example . . . in other places, in all churches."—Section 51:5.

This is further explained by section 101:12:

"And again, there shall be another treasury [storehouse] prepared and a treasurer [agent] appointed to keep the treasury [storehouse], and a seal shall be placed upon it." This "treasury" and "treasurer," are in the organized order and have no reference to the bishop of the church or the general church treasury. Now we have the "order" organized with a treasury or storehouse, and a treasurer or agent to keep the treasury or storehouse of the order, men belonging to the order with their stewardships appointed to them, "And all moneys that you receive in your stewardships, by improving upon the properties which I have appointed unto you, in houses or in lands, or in cattle, or in all things save it be the holy and sacred writings, which I have reserved unto myself for holy and sacred purposes, shall be cast into the treasury as fast as you receive moneys, by hundreds or by fifties, or by twenties, or by tens, or by fives, or in other words, if any man among you obtain five talents let him cast them into the treasury; or if he obtain ten, or twenty, or fifty, or an hundred, let him do likewise; and let not any man among you say that it is his own, for it shall not be called his, nor any part of it; and there shall not any part of it be used, or taken out of the treasury, only by the voice and common consent of the order. And this shall be the voice and common consent of the order: that any man among you, say unto the treasurer, I have need of this to help me in my stewardship; . . . the treasurer shall give unto him the sum which he requires, to help him in his stewardship, until he be found a transgressor, and it is manifest before the council of the order plainly, that he is an unfaithful and an unwise steward."

This is clear, that after we join this order and have our "portion" or "stewardship" appointed to us, we are to "cast" all we make above our expenses into the treasury. This harmonizes with and explains section 42:14, "And if thou obtainest more than that which would be for thy support, thou shalt give it unto my storehouse [treasury of the order you belong to], that all things may be done according to that which I have said." Again, "Inasmuch as they receive more than is needful for their necessities, and their wants, it shall be given into my storehouse, and the benefits shall be consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion, and unto their generations, inasmuch as they become heirs according to the laws of the kingdom. Behold, this is what the Lord requires of every man in his stewardship."—Section 70:2, 3.

The surplus of each steward referred to in this quotation was to be "consecrated unto the inhabitants of Zion." "The inhabitants of Zion"—not the whole church are referred to here, because these men mentioned belonged or were to belong to the order of Zion when organized.

Those in an "order" pay into this treasury or storehouse of their orders all above their needs or if necessary draw from the treasury of their order the amount they need to help them in their "stewardship." The order, not the church decides if he is a wise or an "unfaithful" steward. If unfaithful, his claims are not granted and he is expelled from the order. But as long as he is considered faithful he has "equal claims on the properties [of the order, not of the church; see section 101:1, 10-12], for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."—Section 81:4.

This refers to a condition after the order is organized, and the members of the order have their stewardships appointed to them. Each one in the order has equal claim on the treasury to help him manage his stewardship not that the stewardships are to be equal, for they will differ as the steward's ability to manage them will differ. But if you need help to enable you to make a success in your stewardship you should have it, so you "may gain other talents" [dollars] "to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, . . . This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order," etc.—Section 81:4, 5.

"This order" has its treasury or storehouse and all the surplus of its members go into it and when there is more either "in money and in meat, which is more than is needful for the want of this people," it is to "be kept in the hands of the bishop," (sections 51:4; 42:10) "to become the common property of the whole church." It will go from the storehouse or treasury by the "consent of the order" to the bishop of the church as "tithing" which is "a standing law unto them for ever" (section 106:1), and by special consecration.

When a church or branch is thus organized and has paid its tithing out of its treasury or storehouse, then it should do as directed in section 42:10 which says: "And again, if there shall be properties in the hands of the church, . . . after this first consecration, which is a residue, to be consecrated unto the bishop," etc. This is the way the money or property comes into the bishop's hands and becomes "the property of the whole church."

When a church (branch) is thus organized it may include all or only a part of its members. It is the members of these orders that the Lord demands that in "your temporal things you shall be equal." Equality in temporal things is no more expected outside of these organized orders than the gifts of the Spirit are to be expected outside of the church. The order is organized with all the property of the charter members, then these members have their "stewardships" given to them out of "the properties which belong to the order."—Section 101:1. Then they "cast" all they make over a living "into the treasury" of the order, and the money that goes into the treasury can be taken out "only by the voice and common consent of the order."—Section 101:12.

The stewardships differ in values as the following shows: "Let my servant Ahashdah [N. K. Whitney] have appointed unto him, the houses and lot where he now resides, and the lot and building on which the Ozondah [store] stands; and also the lot which is on the corner south of the Ozondah [store]; and also the lot on which the Shule [ashery] is situated; . . . verily this is the stewardship which I have appointed unto my servant Ahashdah [N. K. Whitney]; even this whole Ozondah [store] establishment, him and his agent, and his seed after him."—Section 101:7.

Again, "Let my servant Shederlaomach [F. G. Williams] and Olihah [O. Cowdery] have the Lane-shine-house [printing-office] and all things that pertain unto it; and this shall be their stewardship which shall be appointed unto them; . . . and this is the beginning of the stewardship which I have appointed them, for them and their seed after them."—Section 101:5. Each is to have a deed to the property given as a stewardship (section 51:1). In the printing establishment would be many men employed; yet the whole establishment belonged to Williams and Cowdery. They would surely employ or hire—dare I say it?—Saints. These Saints that work for wages (?) will have "a writing [not a deed] that shall secure unto him his portion, . . . until he transgresses" (section 51: 1), and then he loses his position. That which is secured by the "writing" given by the bishop only holds good "till he transgresses," but the "deed" given is good after he transgresses. The "writing" simply appoints him to a position for wages in some man's stewardship that employs help. When he transgresses he loses his job, while a "deed" secures the property for life. Are we ready for such a system?

W. E. PEAK.

The Mission of the Latter Day Saints.

Revolution impregnates everything to-day. In method, plan, and purpose, revolution everywhere. The manufacturer scarcely knows when he retires to bed at night but the morning papers will announce a new piece of machinery which will revolutionize his whole industry. The discoveries of science are so specific and startling that the entire bent of a certain department is almost revolutionized. The revolution in literature in the last two decades eclipses every past precedent. The revolution in all the ramifications of business is equally marked. It is but natural. Everything evolves and revolves. The whole solar system: earth with all its appurtenances; the individual unit and the collective state. God alone is infinite and eternal.

The ominous signs portend a world-wide social revolution. What will be its character? Shall it come with an enlightened and well conducted transition, or by a bloody conflict? It all depends upon the intelligence of the mass. Bloody carnage is the ascendancy of the brute, the suspension of the intellect. It is an appeal to the animal. If nations knew more they would fight less. The clash between entrenched greed and exploited toil is world-wide. The conflict is inevitable. It may be bloody. The prophets so indicate. It must be said of us, if our skirts are cleared, that we did our utmost to prevent it. Where do we stand? There are millions of collectivists in the world to-day who, in some form or another, are clamoring for equality and justice; what is the message of our church to them? There are millions of hungry, ill-fed, impoverished children in America to-day; what is the message of this, the church of Christ, to them? There are nearly three million children under sixteen years of age who are working in factory, mill, and mine in America to-day; what is our message to them? What is our message to the denizens of the sweat shop and the slum? God's message to them is not complete, if we but tell them to get their hearts right. The Master wishes us to do more than simply to tell them of their duty to God and the life to be. We are going to do our whole duty to them. We are to offer an asylum to all the oppressed of earth on terms laid down by the Father of us all.

Churchianity of Rome and Protestantism is inanimate. The only religious hope of the world is lodged in the message of Palmyra. Moroni's "rent," which proclaimed liberty in all the land, is not impotent to-day. We must lead or not march. We can not in the nature of our claims be followers.

It is my purpose in this article to show what our attitude as a church should be towards the great and ever increasing mass of human beings who are dissatisfied with the present order of society and determined to effect a change. They want coöperation. They want equality. They clamor for justice; they want social and economic freedom. We can direct many of these people, if we will. In doing so, we can save many and likewise perpetuate the church. Brethren, we must not ally ourselves with the old order. Our program is not reform. We are restitutionists. The enforcement of the message of the Master will revolutionize the working program of humanity. We are collectivists. The leaven of the gospel will produce brotherhood and eradicate the baneful injustice of the present individualistic methods now obtaining in the world. We have been preaching a peaceable revolution for nearly a hundred years. The revolution is here. What is our relationship thereto? Is our beacon light aloft? Is our banner unfurled to the breeze and our light shining out directing shipwrecked mariners to land and safety?

The Lord through Joseph Smith revealed the true science of economics. Other religious leaders have made no pretense to enter the domain of toil. Neither have the churches. We have. God told us to.

Church and state should never be united, but religion and patriotism must necessarily blend; they are, or should be one in purpose. The state is simply the social and material functioning of human society. When society functions properly the present state will pass away: administration will displace government. Religion has the same object in view as the state, with the addition of preparation for another life added. The ostensible purpose of religion and society is to bring the human race to its highest point of excellence. There is, therefore, an identity of interests. Each may pursue its particular methods, but there should be no conflict. We are here to help the nation to a solution of its difficulties. We can not do it by displacing government. In the establishment of Zion and the enforcement of the Zion schedule we will give such a practical demonstration of the advantages of "the government of God" that the lovers of justice all over the land will flock to our standard.

In the early days of the church equality was the dynamic force which gave it vitality and power. It was alike the inspiration of the young and the solace of the aged. The entire church machinery was centered on this object: "The fatherhood of God; the brotherhood of man; equality."

The first principles of the gospel, the entire scope of service focused in this. Social regeneration was the fruitage of individual consecration. I do not say this is not true to-day. It is, with every consecrated Latter Day Saint, but, I fear, far too frequently "equality" is but an opiate to put confiding ones to sleep, a lullaby to quell their rising fears, and when one more restless than the others cries out against the existing injustice, others sing that time-worn song, "This world will be blessed bye and bye," and he becomes pacific. Too frequently the interpretation and application of that hymn is a libel on the religion of Jesus. Jesus Christ did not come just to bless this world "bye and bye," but here and now. It becomes us to so labor and live that we can transpose that melody to read, "This world, it is blessed here and now." This is the mission of every Latter Day Saint.

This hope of a glorified earth was as near and dear to the early disciples of Jesus as it is to us, but thus far it has only existed in dreams or inspired fancy.

The old cry, "We must wait until Jesus comes," is the opiate which kills. When other stratagem is unavailing we are told by the obstructionist, "Wait. The thing is all right, but wait, we can not have it now." This is the shibboleth of those of no faith and its inspiration comes from the enemy of light. It seems to me this old threadbare illusion has spent itself. I hardly think it possible that any Latter Day Saint can be hoodwinked by this any more. God does not act prematurely. It has been his will and purpose that the principle of equality should be in force now as all through the past. Every day of its deferment is a concession to the enemy, and any man who professes to believe in Jesus who claims we can not enforce God's law, plan and purpose, is a traitor to the cause and a menace to the work of God.

I fear some of us fail to sense what the kingdom of God means. Many of us confine its material expression to organization rather than service; to administration minus results. We may possess every functionary of the kingdom, yet if we are not functioning as God would have us, our kingdom is reactionary. The kingdom of God, the living, inspiring power working in and of us is vital, indissoluble, indispensable.

Joseph Smith the Prophet, in his "Views on government," in the revelations which he gave by inspiration to the church, anticipated the students of the world. He laid down a working basis which, if the people had only executed, would have enabled the church ere this to mold the destiny of nations and of men. Indeed, we note many, very many of the astute political and economic students have by research and close investigation come to the same conclusions which this obscure, illiterate boy by divine help outlined.

We should not be apologists; we can not compromise. It is our province to lead and direct a world movement towards equality and justice.

The church of Christ to-day, as ever, is opposed to selfishness, to greed, private manipulation of God's bounties, and the unjust conditions which make for inequality.

Saint Augustine said, "It is because of private property that lawsuits, hatreds, brawls, war among men, rising factions, feuds, scandals, sins, crimes and manquellings arise. . . . If any one truly and heartily desires his society in this pilgrimage, he will always prefer things to be held collectively rather than privately."

Saint Ambrose: "The soil was given to rich and poor in common: Wherefore, O ye rich, do not unjustly claim it for yourself alone: Nature gave all things in common for the use of all, usurpation creates private right."

Saint Chrysostom: "When we offer the means of living to the indigent we do not give them anything of ours, but that which of right belongs to them."

Tertullian wrote: "All is common with us except women."

Saint Justin: "We carry with us all that we possess, and share everything with the poor."

Saint Gregory, the Great, declared "that to accumulate for one's self the wealth God meant for all and refuse to divide with others is murder."

Saint Augustine denied "that private ownership of property is a natural right."

Saint Basil said, "If each one took only what is necessary for his subsistence and gave the rest to the indigent, there would be neither rich or poor."

Saint Jerome: "Opulence is always the result of theft, if not by the actual possessor then by his predecessors."

"It was not until the thirteenth century," says Professor Nitti, "that ecclesiastical writers appeared openly maintaining the rights of property."

When the ministry of the Latter Day Saint Church talk of "All things common, equality, inheritances, Lord's storehouse," etc., it causes hysterics among worldly-minded people who do not grasp the "brotherhood of Christ." It reminds me of an incident at the Lowell Institute in Boston when Professor Drummond was lecturing on the ascent of man. He overheard two women talking. One said, "Mary, if what he says is not true we can stand it. But, if it is true, we must hush it up."

"What Christ came here for," says Henry Drummond, "was to make a better world." This is the mission of the Latter Day Saints. We are here to benefit the race. Our mission is an inclusive rather than an exclusive one. "Good for all, injury to none," is our motto.

We must not leave it all for God to do, however. The Doctrine and Covenants says: "Men should be anxiously engaged in a good cause, and do many things of their own free will and bring to pass much righteousness; for the power is in them, wherein they are agents unto themselves, and, inasmuch as men do good, they shall in nowise lose their reward. But he that doeth not anything until he is commanded, and receiveth a commandment with doubtful heart and keepeth it with slothfulness, the same is damned."

"God's way of making worlds is to make them make themselves. When he made the earth he made a rough ball of matter and supplied it with a multitude of tools to mold it into form, the raindrops to carve it; the glaciers to smooth it. God works always with agents, and this is our way when we want any great thing done; this was Christ's way when he undertook the finishing of humanity. He will supply the material, we must do the work."

The mission of the Latter Day Saints is world wide. It knows no clime, no nationality, no color. It recognizes all men as "of one blood"; all are brothers. They have no imaginary boundary lines of religious or patriotic service. The Bible says, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men to dwell on all the face of the earth." Jesus taught the brotherhood of man: "Except ye are one ye are not mine"; "Love all men." The Book of Mormon teaches the same doctrine. So do the revelations through Joseph Smith.

The religion of Jesus is the antithesis of individualism, the present existing order. It stands for the individual, but is opposed to individualism. Individualism regards humanity as made up of disconnected or warring atoms. Jesus regards it as an organic whole; the aim of the church is the fulfillment of service; the aim of individualism is the attainment of some personal advantage, riches, place, or fame.

The religion of Jesus seeks such an organization of life "as shall secure for every one the most complete development of his powers. Individualism seeks primarily the satisfaction of the particular wants of each one, in the hope that the pursuit of private interests will, in the end, secure public welfare."

The religion of Jesus and the working regime of the church of Christ is the abolition of private property and selfish manipulation of the great material instruments of production and the substitution of the collective interests in property. It also stands for "the collective management of production together with the distribution of social income by society and private property in the larger proportion of this social income." It does not propose the abolishment of private property in wealth: "While private property in the means of production would be eliminated, private property in the product of individual and collective production would be multiplied." It declares that no one should be permitted to live in idleness by levying a tax or tribute upon the labor of others. It proposes to abolish the idler at both ends of the social scale. As all are consumers, so all who are physically and mentally able should be producers. "If any would not work neither should he eat." "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." "Every man rewarded according to his works." "All things common." "Every man esteem his brother as himself." "The idler shall not eat the bread nor wear the garment of the laborer." This applies to the rich who toil not, as well as to the poor.

The church does not believe the rich should "divide up" with the poor, nor the poor with the rich. This is continuously going on now. We wish to put a stop to it. The men who object to the plan of gathering as taught by the Lord on this ground display their ignorance.

One of the strong postulates of our philosophy is that of cause and effect. God does not work in a haphazard way; every effect follows a legitimate cause and every cause invariably produces, when applied, a corresponding effect. This position does violence to the old exploded idea that "God made the world out of nothing." I know it does violence to the thought that God violates law and reverses nature and natural law at his own option. It simply repudiates the thought that God is an anarchist in the realm of his own government. Viewing life in this way the Latter Day Saints necessarily conclude that in order to correct the social diseases which infect society we must understand the cause before we can effect a cure. They have discovered that private property and manipulation in that which all men need is the cause; that the dependence of one man upon another eventuates in some form of slavery; that the chain which shackles the slave binds the hand of the slave-holder; that the things which a people need and must have for subsistence and comfort must be controlled by all of the people. The total eclipse of "mine" and "thine" with the glorious sun of "ours." God led Joseph to proclaim against slavery when the churches of America were upholding it. He showed that one man "should not be beholding to another."

We believe in economic determinism to a large extent. This doctrine is defined by Edwin R. A. Seligman as follows:

"We understand then, by the economic determinism of history, not that all history is to be explained in economic terms alone, but that the chief considerations in human progress are the social considerations, and that the important factor in the social change is the economic factor. The economic interpretation of history means, not that the economic relations exert an exclusive influence, but that they exert a preponderant influence in shaping the progress of society."

How well this coincides with the revelation given through Joseph Smith, "If ye are not equal in earthly things, ye can not be equal in obtaining heavenly things." "In your temporal things you shall be equal." The entire history of the Jews, in the Bible; of the Nephites in Book of Mormon times, and of all people in all climes, confirm this position that the economic or temporal conditions of a people largely influence and shape their religious attitude, their moral and mental achievements. The Almighty repudiates the thought that a man can do good wherever he is.

This brings us to the doctrine of environment. If we would develop character we must reckon with environment. If there is a mud-puddle in the children's playground there is much more propriety and moralizing influence in filling up the mud-puddle than in simply punishing the child. Fill up the mud-puddle; the child does not necessarily love the mud better than green grass. It gets in the mud because the mud is there. Whether you turn to the Bible, Book of Mormon, or modern revelation, you will discover that the burden of God's message is social; the general call to labor is collective rather than individual. Remember, I do not minimize the individual service. It is but preparation for work; men individually must desire the good and fit themselves therefor, but they can never get it individually; they must work collectively for its accomplishment. The Lord knew that environment affects character. This is his reason for now calling, "Come out of her my people that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues"; "Gather together to Zion."

The interests of men must be identical if they are to work together for good. When Moses went into Egypt to save Israel he did not go among them saying, You, the Israelites and Egyptians, must love one another; your interests are identical. God has blessed the Egyptians with more "business ability" than you Israelites. God has given them more talents. They have a different stewardship from you. You Israelites get your hearts right and everything will be all right." I imagine how badly the Egyptians felt at the ingratitude of the Israelites. They had built brick kilns; they invested their money and gave the poor Israelites a chance to work, and yet they were unappreciative! The poor are always unappreciative!

God recognized that these people had been exploited and robbed and the only way he could establish the kingdom of Israel was to gather them together in another land and under another system of economics. He gave them the land of Canaan in common. They had their stewardship. He taught them interdependence, and that only by mutual helpfulness could they prosper. This is his message to the church now.

Private ownership and manipulation of nature in any of its forms, land, sunlight, air, is untenable and unjust. According to the plan of inheritances as portrayed in the authorized books of the church, all these things belong to God. We simply hold them as a trust and, though an inheritance may be allotted to me, I can neither barter nor sell it in the way land is bought and sold in the profit system of to-day. I can not take advantage of another's necessity and by barter secure his inheritance. I can neither own nor control any natural commodity and profit thereby as a result of said ownership. The church says a man should have his inheritance, that is, what he needs for himself and family; but he can neither own nor control what another man needs. There will be no employers and employees as they exist in the world to-day. Private control of public industries will not obtain in Zion.

The gospel says, "Every man shall be rewarded according to his works," and "No man shall be beholding to another." When this is enforced the wage system will pass away.

It is equally true with the profit system, selling for profit, manufacturing for profit. It is all an appeal to selfishness. We will manufacture for use in Zion, not for profit. Money among the Saints will not have the power it does in the world to-day. It will be the servant of the people. To-day men are slaves under our present monetary system. It will be reversed in Zion.

All through the Bible the Lord proclaims against "usury" or interest on money, which means the same thing. In all the customs of all nations up to the days of Calvin, interest and usury were synonymous. Calvin was the first man to define usury as "excessive" interest. He was as far wrong on this as he was on predestination. When brotherhood obtains and the collectivity of the gospel is enunciated among God's people, there will be no need for interest, profit, or wages, with all their baneful results as found in the world to-day.

Brethren, to us is delegated the greatest work of all the ages. Let us improve our opportunity. Let us have faith in God, confidence in his divine plan, and unitedly set to with our might and main to give a practical demonstration to the world of the inherent worth of this latter-day work.

The consecration of ourselves, body, soul, and spirit, will fit us for service. The consecration of all our possessions "above needs" will give inheritances. Inheritances will eliminate rents, private ownership by one man of what another needs or uses.

Consecration, stewardship, and storehouse will preclude interest in all its forms.

"Supplied according to needs"; "one man shall not be beholding to another," will blot out the wage system.

The Order of Enoch will take care of industry, manufacturing, etc., and the general utilities conducted for service to society, and not profit for one as against the public, will bring the right kind of equality. Are we ready to begin to establish Zion? May God bless, guide, and direct each one.

Your brother in Christ,

Thoughts on Equality.

1. Perfection for the body or church, in the sense of completeness, can never be secured without equality, for God has so ordained. (See John 17: 20-23; Doctrine and Covenants 70: 3.) Through obedience to the gospel we become

"heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ" (Romans 8:16-18), and the apostle says of such, "Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."—1 Corinthians 3:21-23.

2. Equality and perfection can never obtain, except through an intelligent and willing obedience to the divine law, known as the gospel. This is the law of equality and perfection, representing God in his love, wisdom, impartiality, and power, and man in his needs; hence it is the law of salvation. (See James 1:25; 2:12; Romans 1:16; John 8:31, 32.) Some claim that unless we keep this law in its completeness, our efforts are vain. We know of no valid grounds for such a position, hence do not so believe. Our position is this: Those who render a partial obedience, because of limited understanding, or because of weakness, with a desire to do good, will receive reward therefor; but the complete reward can only be secured by complete obedience.

It is far better that men should have faith in God, and repent of their sins (so far as they know how), than to go through life without faith or reformation of character. It will be better for them and the people with whom they mingle, in this life, and better for them in the day of judgment, though they should never be baptized or receive the laying on of hands. And so it is, we believe, with reference to the financial law of the church, "the word of wisdom," and other parts of the divine law. This position holds good both as to the injunctions and prohibitions of the law of God.

3. Equality in temporalities, which is important, can never be secured without obedience to the financial law of the church. This financial law is an important part of the gospel plan, hence should not be ignored in any sense whatever. (See Doctrine and Covenants 64:5.)

"I, the Lord, stretched out the heavens, and builded the earth as a very handy work; and all things therein are mine; and it is my purpose to provide for my saints, for all things are mine; but it must needs be done in mine own way; and, behold, this is the way, that I, the Lord, have decreed to provide for my saints: that the poor shall be exalted, in that the rich are made low; for the earth is full, and there is enough and to spare; yea, I prepared all things, and have given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves. Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel [italics mine], unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment."—Doctrine and Covenants 101:2.

Notice, first, that it is the law of the gospel which requires us to impart our "portion" of what God has given to us, for the support of the Saints. Other parts of the same law require us to have faith in God, repent of our sins, and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, etc. Why is all this required? That we may be saved in the kingdom of God. Second, God has "given unto the children of men to be agents unto themselves." Therefore we must not, even if we should have the power to do so, coerce them into obedience to the law. Men must be willing and desire to obey the celestial law, because of the love of God shed abroad in their hearts, else their obedience is vain.

4. What is the financial law of the church? and where shall we go to learn what it is?

Giving attention to the second question first, we should go to the sacred and authoritative text-books of the church, so far as documentary evidence is concerned; but collateral evidence may be gathered from other quarters. The Bible, Book of Mormon, and Book of Doctrine and Covenants contain a record of the law, speaking of them collectively. Doctrine and Covenants, section 42, it is true, contains the whole law of Christ for the government of his church; but this does not mean that the law, in part or altogether, may not have been expressed prior and subsequent to the time when section 42 was given. It simply means that nothing which conflicts with this law, or contravenes any of its rules, can be accepted by the church. There is nothing in this section, nor in the other revelations, to prohibit a later and additional expression of law and doctrine, as might be needed for the benefit of the Saints and their safe establishment in Zion. In fact, such an expression is *demand*ed rather than prohibited. Surely Latter Day Saints do not need to be told that additional revelation, on any subject, is not necessarily false.

"Ye shall observe the laws which ye have received, and be faithful. And ye shall hereafter receive church covenants, such as shall be sufficient to establish you, both here, and in the New Jerusalem. Therefore, he that lacketh wisdom, let him ask of me, and I will give him liberally, and upbraid him not."—Doctrine and Covenants 42:18, near the close of the paragraph.

In harmony with this instruction and promise, it was right for them to ask, and unless it can be shown that they "asked amiss," that they might "consume it" upon their lusts, they should not be blamed.

"And then ye shall begin to be gathered with your families, every man according to his family, according to his circumstances, and as appointed unto him by the presidency and the bishop of the church, according to the laws and commandments, which ye have received, and which ye shall hereafter receive. Even so. Amen."—Doctrine and Covenants 48:2, closing portion of the paragraph. The italics are mine.

These passages plainly prove that it would be necessary for "church covenants," "laws and commandments" to be given and obeyed before the Saints could be safely located in Zion. It is frankly conceded, however, that these "church covenants," "laws and commandments," must be in harmony with the law given on February 9, 1831, as recorded in Doctrine and Covenants, section 42.

We know of no revelation contained in our Doctrine and Covenants which, in any way, attempts to contravene, ignore, or substitute the law contained in section 42.

Therefore, we properly have access to the three sacred books of the church for definitions and explanations of the financial law of the church; for, as is well known, section 42 indorses the Bible and Book of Mormon, and provides for and promises additional revelation.

It should be borne in mind that the whole financial system is sometimes called tithing, and sometimes consecration. In section 42, it is called consecration; in section 64:5, and elsewhere, it is called tithing. It makes no difference which term is used, for either one, when used comprehensively, refers to the entire financial law. It is also true that both terms may be and are used in a limited sense, that is, they are sometimes applied to different parts of the financial law. Tithe means a tenth, but the use and application of the term, like many others, have been enlarged. In our opinion, a liberal and just interpretation of the different revelations bearing on the same subject, will remove all seeming contradiction.

As before stated, we believe that a partial compliance with the demands of the law is much better than no compliance at all. To pay into the coffers of the church one tenth of what we are worth, and after that, one tenth of our increase or net gains, is an important step in the right direction. Is it not true that such a step tends towards equality? My neighbor is worth ten thousand dollars, while I am worth but one thousand; therefore he begins by paying one thousand dollars, while I begin by paying one hundred. Suppose that his net annual increase is one thousand dollars and mine one hundred. Then he pays annually one hundred dollars, while I pay ten dollars.

It may be contended that this will not make us any more equal than we were when we commenced paying. Granted, but does it not, to a certain extent, check the increase of inequality which exists between us, in that he having more is required to pay more, and I having less am required to pay less? Thus it tends towards equality.

It is highly necessary that the financial law should contain some provision, which if carried into effect, will supply the church treasury, every year, with means by which to support "the poor and needy," "carry on the promulgation of the gospel," and "for the purposes of the church," as stated in sections 42, 114, and elsewhere. By the way, there is nothing in section 42, nor in any preceding revelation, which informs us just when or how often our surplus shall be paid. Why not regard the tenth and all other donations required, as surplus, the tenth being surplus systematized, and, therefore, a part of the law of consecration.

It was fitting that, in the great restoration, the people of the church should be made to know that the law which was observed by Abraham, "the father of the faithful" (and unto whom the gospel was preached), more than nineteen hundred years before Christ, in the days of Melchisedec, that "great high priest," was still in force and would remain in force till the end. The Inspired Translation informs us that Melchisedec was "the keeper of the storehouse of God," and that he had been appointed of God "to receive tithes for the poor. Wherefore, Abram paid unto him tithes of all that he had, of all the riches which he possessed, which God had given him more than that which he had need." (Genesis 14: 37-40.) Paul, referring to this notable transaction, tells us that Abraham paid to Melchisedec "a tenth part of all." (Hebrews 7: 2.)

The supposed conflict between any two or more of the revelations, results from the strained interpretation put upon the word surplus. The conflict, we believe, is the result of misunderstanding this part of the law, rather than any conflict between any of the revelations. More careful and thorough investigation compels us to believe that it was not designed of God, in the collection of the surplus, to take all that we have, except the tools with which we work, enough land or other capital with which to make a mere living, the clothes we wear and the food we eat. We can not accept this view for the following reasons:

First, it would not permit the latitude of agency which we understand to be the purpose of God concerning man, in general, and in discharging the duties and responsibilities of stewardship, in particular. For this stewardship, as a disciple of the Lord Jesus, he becomes accountable to the church and to God. That this agency and stewardship are taught in the word, we presume none will care to deny. Indeed it is the wise design of a loving Father that we should have ample opportunity to choose right or wrong, good or evil, that we may, if we will, accomplish the greater good and attain a better development in the divine life. The interpretation referred to above, is certainly in conflict with these well-established positions. God has another and better way of bringing about equality.

Second, it is God's way to leave men in a position to do all they can and will for the benefit of the church, every one according to the ability with which he has been endowed. Those who are able and willing to conduct a large and prosperous business, honestly and wisely, for the glory of God and the benefit of his cause, should be permitted to do so, in trust, holding all their surplus at the disposal of the church, when it shall be asked for by action of the body, or by request of the Bishopric, who, under the body, have leading control of the finances of the church.

Third, a number of statements in the word, concerning those who are presumed to have complied with the law, show the interpretation referred to above to be erroneous. Some word has to be chosen, and the word surplus furnishes us with another illustration of the weakness and imperfection of all language, more or less. However, God has made ample provision for all these things, for an intelligent and proper obedience to his law, and for the carrying on of his work.

The Bishop, like every other minister of the church, is entitled to the wisdom and spirit which belong to his calling. I am confirmed in the belief that the request of the Bishop that each member of the church furnish him with a written inventory of his financial standing, is both important and eminently proper. Our varied conditions and desires can then be gone over in a careful and prayerful manner, between us and the Bishop. Both parties desiring to do the will of God, and the presence of the Holy Spirit being there, there will be but little difficulty in reaching correct and satisfactory conclusions concerning the surplus, or any other part of the financial law.

5. We readily admit the difficulties which lie in the way of bringing about equality; but shall we, because of these difficulties, spend our time and effort in shoving them to the front? It is proper to consider them, but not as an objection to a proper administration of the law. Our view is that the difficulties are not with the revelations treating on this subject, but with the people. When we are willing and anxious that the equality which God has enjoined, and for which he has made proper provision, should obtain,—willing and anxious because of the love we have for God, his truth, and his people, the difficulties will gradually melt away like frost before a summer's sun.

The questions are: Are we willing and anxious to work for God? Are we willing that every man should work just where God wants him to work, according to the gifts and callings of God unto him? Irrespective of what capital we control, are we willing that others should fare as well as we do? Do we hold that which we have as belonging to God? Are we willing to give it up whenever it shall become necessary? Are we all willing that the poor and needy, who are worthy, should have as much to live upon as we have, conditions and number in family being considered? Are all, among the poor and needy, willing to be as careful, frugal, and industrious as some of those who possess more of this world's goods, and who, we think, are in duty bound to support us?

If these questions can all be answered in the affirmative, then we have already taken a long stride towards the equality which is taught in the law. Men who have the means and the ability to use them wisely and successfully, should be as willing to labor for the benefit of the cause as those who have been called and ordained to preach "the gospel of our salvation." The word says, Thou shalt love "thy neighbor as thyself." (Bible.) "Let every man esteem his neighbor as himself." (Doctrine and Covenants.) Are we all striving to reach this high standard of gospel conduct?

The business of the preacher is not to preach to the men and women who are not at church, but to preach to those who are there. Some texts are only pretexts. They are too apt to be the "point of departure" for a sermon. It is better to begin back of the text and work up to it, than to begin with the text and work away from it. Sermons should never be measured, they should be weighed. Not length but strength is the true test of a sermon.—W. H. Branigan.

Of General Interest

Prohibition in Utah.

The prohibition question in Utah has been agitating the minds of the people very much during the past year; and especially during the political campaign last fall, it was made a very prominent feature by the Mormon church, which is at the head of the Republican party here.

That the leaders were not sincere in their work, but only trying to defeat the American party in the fall election, was very evident to all but devout Mormons. The Inter-Mountain Republican, which was the leading Republican paper of the State, began the fight for prohibition, and for months continued the fight very vigorously; but all at once it turned on the other side and is now fighting against it.

At the Mormon conference last fall, Joseph F. Smith, president of the Mormon church, made a long speech in favor of prohibition and almost every speaker of the conference took up the question, and a strong plea was made in favor of temperance. As a body they insisted that the state officers to be elected should favor temperance. Senator Reed Smoot was one of the leading speakers, and in referring to the speech of President Joseph F. Smith in favor of temperance, he said that "every word that President Smith said, sounded good to me, way down in my soul."

After the conference closed a good Mormon who had heard Bro. John Davis and me preaching on the street, said to me, "How did you like the conference?" I answered that I had no objection to what was said in favor of temperance, but that I did not think them sincere. He seemed very much surprised at this and I gave him my reasons: That President Joseph F. Smith was president of the Zion's Coöperative Mercantile Institution which is wholesaling and retailing liquors, notwithstanding the sign over the door, "Holiness to the Lord."

The following from President Joseph F. Smith is interesting—but disgusting when we consider that he claims to be prophet, seer, and revelator, and that at the same time he is president of the Mormon church he is also president of the Z. C. M. I. "Have I made myself a sot because liquor was kept for sale by Z. C. M. I.? I am not the worse for it, thank the Lord. And who else is? No one, except the pious Mormons (?) who in open day or under the cover of night would go into the drugstore and buy liquor to drink. . . . If he could not get it there, he would not patronize Z. C. M. I. at all but would go somewhere else to deal."—From sermon of Joseph F. Smith in Salt Lake Tabernacle, April 6, 1898; official report of conference, page 11.

In regard to Senator Reed Smoot, I said that he was the principal stockholder in the Smoot Drugstore, at Provo, Utah, where I lived, and that there was a sign out in front reading, "Family wines and liquors for sale." He said he did not believe it. I told him that it was so, whether he believed it or not. No doubt it was hard for him to believe it after he had listened to Senator Smoot speak in favor of temperance. Jesus said, "by their fruits ye shall know them."

Just before Christmas the following notice was published in the Enquirer, a Provo paper: "Wines and liquors for Xmas; Smoot Drug Company." Think of a man that claims to be an apostle of Jesus Christ, advertising "wines and liquors" for sale to celebrate the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem.

The election is over and the church Republican party was victorious, but a change is at hand. Men who were elected on a prohibition platform now turn against prohibition. After the Cannon Prohibition Bill had passed the lower house by a vote of forty-two to two, it was killed in the Senate by a vote of twelve to six, and this in the face of a petition of over seventy-five thousand people of the State.

Following this action, fifty persons of the Republican party held a meeting in Salt Lake City to protest against the action of the State legislature, and from what was said, it is clear as to why the legislature had failed to carry out the wishes of many of the people. It seems that after the election, the Republican leaders entered into an agreement with the liquor men to see that the liquor business was not interfered with. I will give a few extracts from the speech of Nephi L. Morris, who was the chairman of this special meeting: "We are now confronted with a great moral issue, upon which the people of Utah have declared themselves in a manner which we can not mistake nor ignore. Stronger than any platform declaration, stronger even than the ordinary vote of the people on election day, because it is made over their personal signatures, over seventy-five thousand people of this State have demanded of the legislature now in session the abolition of the liquor traffic. . . .

"We therefore declare the enactment of a prohibition law by the present legislature to be necessary to the welfare of the Republican party in Utah, and pledge ourselves to the perpetuation of prohibition as a future policy of the party in the state of Utah.

"We heartily indorse the action of the house of representatives in passing by an almost unanimous vote the bill introduced by Representative Cannon on this subject, thus responding to the wishes of the people and promoting the best interests of the Republican party. We deplore the action of the State senate in defeating this worthy measure without permitting the friends of the bill a chance to be heard before the senate committee having it under consideration. We regret the departure of the senate from its established rules of procedure and the violation of parliamentary practice by the president of the senate in stifling the debate upon the issue involved in an open discussion of the measure.

"We are unalterably opposed to any compromise on this issue, as the people of Utah are tired of high license and regulation, and do not need the intermediary process of county local option, and anything short of state-wide prohibition will be looked upon as a concession to the liquor interests, which the Republican party is under no obligations to make, and will utterly fail in satisfying the matured judgment and intelligent demand of the people as represented by their petitions.

"We oppose and denounce the policy of the Inter-Mountain Republican upon this question, as misrepresenting the attitude of the Republican party of the State, and call upon the State Republican Committee to insist upon the abandonment of the present line of conduct of that paper or to announce its repudiation as the official organ of the party.

"No sooner had the legislature gotten down to business than this question of prohibition became very generally agitated, and one of the first things we heard was that there was a deal on; that the Republican leaders had made a bargain with the liquor interests and they were so obligated to them that they could not pass a prohibition bill in this legislature, or that they would not permit such a bill to be passed. Now, I say these were rumors which were current from the very beginning, from almost the first session of the legislature down to the present, and I am free to admit that I found some very prominent Republicans, some who have been regarded as leaders, with powerfully strong convictions along that line, men who stand in the very front of the party, most desperately fighting prohibition, very much to my surprise, for I had known these gentlemen all my life, and I had known their lives to be absolutely clean, absolutely straightforward and upright, and I could not understand for the life of me how men of their stamp and standing could so desperately fight a measure that their whole lives have been in harmony with. I tell you candidly I can not understand it yet. When your representatives came from their various districts, to Salt Lake County, to sit as members of the legislature, many of them came here with strong convictions for prohibition, and they left you with assurance that they would support such a measure. You know they did. Some of them, in spite of the statement to the contrary by the Inter-Mountain Republican, some of them were absolutely elected on prohibition county platforms. In prohibition conventions they were instructed to support a prohibition measure. After they had been in Salt Lake a few days and came in contact with political leaders, and been in two or three caucuses, they changed their front entirely in some cases, and some of those representatives have voted against prohibition, though they were elected on a prohibition platform. Now, you know whether I am telling the truth or not. Now, what made these gentlemen change front? Did we prohibitionists make them change? There is only one other party that could. They stated to us, when certain gentlemen who were working in favor of prohibition came to them and asked their support for a prohibition bill, they became more or less conservative in their expressions, and finally said: 'We can't support such a measure, because we are under obligations to look after the liquor interests.' . . . Now, I have not said there was a deal. [Laughter.] That there was a bargain. I have stated what these gentlemen discovered when they undertook to promise the passage of a prohibition bill. The members told them they were under obligations to a certain element, and I want to tell you in perfect candor, too, as citizens who have a right to know the truth as members of the Republican party, who ought to know what the party does and what its leaders do, that the chief obstacle in the way of the passing of a prohibition bill was the leaders of the Republican party. [Cries of 'You are right.']

"Now, I remember talking with one member of the legislature upon this question, and he said: 'You know I believe in prohibition; you know I would like to have prohibition, but I want it two years hence.' [Laughter.] And he said to me: 'We were in a tight place; we were in a desperate fix. [Laughter.] We had to do something. We had to do something to win Salt Lake County.' Now, he did not say exactly what they did do. But this he did say: 'I would rather put up with the evils of liquor for two years if I could break the American party.' Now, I don't say this was a deal. [Laughter.] I don't say there has been a bargain made. In fact, it isn't easy to establish such a thing, and for the life of me I can't see or find another name that fits it quite so well in political parlance.

"Now, I firmly believe, and I will not attempt to prove it, but nevertheless I do firmly believe there has been and there is in Utah a political 'speak-easy kitchen.' Now, upon what do I base this assertion? The deal has been denied, but three members of the house practically admitted the existence of the obligation—three men who voted against the Cannon Bill. One of them stood up and said: 'I indorse the action of my leaders, the leaders of the Republican party. I will stand by them, and, contrary to my convictions and the principles of my life, I will vote against prohibition.'"—The Semi-Weekly Tribune, Friday, February 26, 1909, page 2.

The statement was made at the Mormon conference last fall that "the Mormon people used enough whisky and tobacco to build and equip two new sugar factories each year." Yes, and he might have added that many who claim to hold the priesthood, such as high priests, seventies, and elders, were setting the examples for the members. Truly the Word of Wisdom is trampled in the dust by many in Utah.

Reaching Out.

BY M. J. PHIPPS.

I thirst and hunger after knowledge
 More to learn of righteous ways:
 And by Spirit's power be given
 Wisdom that with me will stay;
 So my life will be worth living,
 And to others influence brought;
 Be to them a benediction
 Leading up to higher thought.
 Oh! the joy that comes with reading
 Promises of word divine—
 Stimulates to greater study,
 Reaching to a life like thine.
 Knowledge! O, how sweet the thought is,
 Permeating life and brain—
 That I year by year may seek it
 And eternal life may gain.

Through an oversight on the part of the editor this letter has been delayed. We ask Sr. Propst's pardon for the same.—EDITOR.

Dear Daughters of Zion: I enjoy reading your departments in HERALD and Autumn Leaves, and have often thought I would write and express my appreciation.

This morning, while putting baby to sleep and working buttonholes, my thoughts were on Sr. Cramer's article in last Autumn Leaves, "Toilers," and while I with her agree that we should appreciate the work that is done for us, and "take off our hats" to those that toil, yet I do not think we should allow ourselves to become worked up over it to the extent that we lose our needed rest. In Doctrine and Covenants we are told to take sleep in the hours set apart for that purpose, and when we allow ourselves to become so nervous thinking on those things that it drives sleep from our pillows, we are lacking in faith. God's hand is over the city as well as the country, and he is able to care for the children and women that work in the factory as well as for the mother that toils at home. Yet there is one thing we are all able to do, large or small, to relieve the toilers. We can contribute our mite towards sending out missionaries to carry them the gospel, for that is the greatest gift God has given to mankind. Therein is contentment, even on bread and water, if need be. But God in his goodness is abundantly able to provide bountifully for those that serve him, although he sometimes puts them to the test to see if they will "in everything give thanks."

Let us do with our might what our hands find to do and leave the rest in God's hands. He is able to do his work without our aid, but he gives us the privilege and pleasure of helping. I sometimes think our helping him is like the child helping the mother. Has to be done over again.

My chance of observation is rather limited, yet there has come under my notice two parties from the large cities. One a lady with a little boy, and to hear her describe life in the city and factories would almost drive sleep from one's eyes; but she left a good position in the country where she could have her little boy with her and work not nearly as hard as she did in the city, and more money saved at the end of the week than she could hope to save in the city, and better food. Yet she left it all to go back to the horrid city where she had endured such suffering. For days without food, or perhaps living on beans straight. No, she was not working for me. The other party would simply rather starve in the city than have plenty to eat in the country. These are the only two incidents that have come directly under my notice, but of course I am apt to judge the rest of the world by the part I have seen.

God has established a plan to bless and redeem mankind, so I say let us use our might to proclaim the gospel to all mankind and redeem Zion and thereby assist the weary toilers.

A good plan, it seems to me, would be for some of our young Religio workers living in the cities to go near the factories at the hour the toilers go to or from work and hand them out some little message of cheer as they go by. It must necessarily be short or they will not have time to read it. If you can not get just what you want at our publishing houses, write out something. Get the approval of your branch president, and get it published by sacrificing a few of your luxuries, then follow later with another truth briefly stated. If the young do not feel disposed to take it up, where are the middle-aged or aged that have the welfare of mankind at heart, and intense love for the gospel?

SOLDIERS GROVE, Wisconsin, February 16, 1909.

Dear Herald: Many times while reading your columns, I have had a desire to write and tell how I appreciate your dear pages; and then again, feeling that there were so many that could do more good than I might do, have been just putting it off, until to-day, while reading the "Mothers' Home Column," that desire has again come to me, and I feel I must write my thanks to those noble souls who, I believe, are inspired from on high to write such cheering words to us young mothers; for no one but young mothers, who are trying to teach and raise the little buds of promise, can fully appreciate the good advice therein.

And may God bless and reward them for so doing. I am the mother of three dear little ones; and am trying to raise them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

And also the "Leaves from Life," how much we who are young in the work can appreciate the experiences of those who have fought the great battle with the tempter, and have overcome; and also the letters and experiences of others are noble and uplifting.

I would like space to relate a dream or vision which came to me but a short time after I came into the church. It was amid great opposition from relatives and those who professed to be my friends while I had belonged to the United Brethren Church.

One afternoon while visiting a neighbor, a weekly paper was handed to me which contained this news: "The Mormons are in this part of the country trying to convert all who will believe on their doctrines, and then will take them to Utah."

Of course I did not believe this, and being asked what I thought about it, answered accordingly, and going home I prayed to God to give me the actual knowledge that this work was his; and before retiring I prayed as I never prayed before, and all at once I felt satisfied. And after lying upon my bed, thinking for some time, all at once I seemed to be standing alone in a strange place, when a stranger stepped up to me and asked me if I were willing to confess that I had done wrong, and I answered, No, I am not. He said for me to follow him, and I went, and was led through a long hall into a large room, and in it were four men sitting at a table, who seemed to be writing. When I appeared (for it seemed the stranger had disappeared) one of the men arose and asked me if I were willing to admit that I had joined the wrong church, and I answered with a loud voice, "No, I never shall." Just then the door opened, and those who had just been baptized at this place into the church came in one by one, led by Bro. Leonard Houghton, the one who had baptized us, and all were smiling (and many times when in our meeting I have seen them wearing that same smile); and as they entered the men all arose and told us they were going to make us confess that we were wrong, when all at once the room was filled with light, and a voice loud and clear said, "I the Lord God will protect my people," and those men sank out of sight, and nothing but a smoke or vapor seemed to fill this place, which disappeared before the light of God.

From that time forth, which has been nine years, neither doubt nor foreboding has entered my mind in regard to this work. And many times while contending for the truth, with those not of our faith, have I been aided by the divine Spirit in showing up the side of right. But many times my heart is made to ache when I see those who are made dear by the ties of nature, even father and mother, fighting against and opposing the work. But I ask you, dear Saints, to pray for them, that God may yet open their blind eyes and unstop their deaf ears as he has done for poor unworthy me.

Would say as a branch a few of us are trying to hold up the gospel banner of God so that all that will may be guided to the narrow way; but some have moved away and some have grown indifferent; but let us as a church unite our prayers for the weak ones, that they may be led back into actual service.

Bro. McDowell and Bro. Robinson have been here and have preached some grand and uplifting sermons. And some are interested in the work. One has been lately added to the fold, a father with six motherless children.

Pray for me, dear Saints, and also my family, that we may live nearer to the gospel of the Son of God in the future than in the past.

In the only true faith,

MRS. CARRIE HARWOOD.

DES MOINES, Iowa, February 18, 1909.

Editor Herald: The writer has just returned from the Gallands Grove district conference at Dow City, Iowa, which passed off very pleasantly, and the Lord has especially remembered his people with the gift of tongues, in the way of encouragement and reproof.

We were pleased to once more see Bro. Romanan Wight, though not restored to health entirely, yet able to attend some of the services.

Bro. Joseph Booth, formerly of Council Bluffs, having recently moved to Denison, Iowa, was stricken with paralysis last week and was in a very critical condition, but the last information the writer had he was much better.

As we have always been in the Gallands Grove District until recently, when we moved to this city, in bidding the Saints farewell we were made to realize that there was that brotherly love that has bound us together. We have appreciated the kindness of the people of the Gallands Grove District, and have enjoyed the blessings of God while associated with them.

At present I am located in the city of Des Moines at 1442 East Grand Avenue, and any of the Saints passing through the city will be welcome at our home. Our business office is 130 West Fourth Street.

We are still desirous to assist in the carrying on of the great work, and having full confidence in the final triumph of the cause, I am,

Your colaborer,

O. SALISBURY.

MINT, Missouri, February 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: I feel that it is the duty of all true Saints to encourage the weak and weary Saints to come up higher and try to do all the good they can, to show the world that there is a reality in serving a true and living God; for I know this is a true work, and I truly love this latter-day work. We thank God for sending our good little Bro. A. M. Baker in our midst. Bro. Baker is loved by all the Saints in this little Grove Spring Branch. He preached a few times at our branch here, then came to our neighborhood and preached twice, and baptized my two boys, Charley and Millard. Bro. Baker went from our place to Bro. T. J. Jordan's and Sr. Ella Burrows', and preached once at each place to small crowds, but all seemed interested. When Bro. Baker can not interest a crowd, there is no use for any one else to try.

I wish all the dear Saints would take the church papers. We take four of the papers, HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and Hope. I am so thankful that my dear children have accepted the true gospel. I ask the Saints to pray for me and my little family, that we may endure to the end.

Your sister in the true faith,

MRS. REBECCA C. ATKINSON.

Editors Herald: Brn. Briggs and W. H. Kelley are meeting with us at the present time, and we are made to rejoice in the word, and pray that the work done may prosper, and that the love of the Saints may increase until it shall reach that state of perfection required by the Master of all.

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY BRANCH.

At our last business-meeting we received into our branch by letters of removal ten members. The best of all is, that, with very little exception, perfect love and harmony reigns supremely with all the members, and it is indeed an opportune time for the event we are looking forward to with bright anticipations, the protracted meeting by Bro. R. C. Evans. We are making good efforts to have all things prepared beforehand.

Our conference of the Independence Stake convened last Saturday and Sunday, a good, harmonious spirit prevailed, so that all business transacted was very harmonious, besides some very important matter was presented before the conference and discussed, which no doubt will need further consideration. The attendance was large, and all who took part in the discussion manifested their love and esteem for those who differed from them in opinion. The preaching was by Elders E. C. Briggs, George Jenkins, and E. L. Kelley. The prayer-meeting at six o'clock in the evening was a profitable session.

Day, secretary; Sr. J. Richmond, treasurer; Sr. Day, home class superintendent. Delegates to General Convention: C. C. Joehnk, Bro. and Sr. Terry, Sr. Morrison, Bro. Morrison, W. P. Bush, Sr. Bush, Sr. Miller, F. A. Smith, Bro. Crumley, Bro. Parkin. Empowered to cast the majority and minority vote. It was moved and carried that the retiring treasurer be requested to report to the executive officers of the convention, before turning books over to her successor. An interesting paper on "Library work" prepared and read by Sr. Vira Lawn, and a paper on "Books," prepared by Sr. Helen Saxe, read by Sr. Luella Hawley, were ordered forwarded to the Exponent for publication. Adjourned to meet in conjunction with the next district conference. Lizzie Day, secretary, 3031 Sixteenth Street, San Francisco, California.

Died.

CORLESS.—Phebe A. Curtis, born July 3, 1831, in the town of Pompey, Onondaga County, New York. Died February 11, 1909. She came to Michigan seventy-two years ago, with her parents, and was united in marriage to George Corless, May 18, 1851. Five children were born of them, two dying in infancy. She lived on the same farm during her sojourn in Michigan, from the date of her marriage until death claimed the temporary victory. Espousing the faith of the Latter Day Saints, was buried with Christ by baptism, January 31, 1864. Elder O. J. Bailey administered the ordinance. With a rich experience of forty-five years in the vineyard, she was gathered into the garner of the Lord as a sheaf fully ripe. With the desire and determination to do right, she stood as a beacon light in the midst of life's stormy sea, and, passing bravely behind the dark cloud to the beautiful dawn, finds rest in the paradise of the blessed. Established in the faith of the restored gospel, she bore testimony unflinching to grandchildren and friends in the midst of physical decline, meeting the reaper with sickle keen, in the most philosophic manner. The funeral was conducted Sunday, February 14, from the home of her son, Bro. H. J. Corless. Elder S. W. L. Scott spoke in tribute to her memory. A large procession attended the remains to Quincy Cemetery, where she was laid beside her husband, 'neath a wilderness of flowers. The pall-bearers were six grandsons, Don, Jesse, David, and Frank Dexter, Erwin and Elvin Corless. Three children, thirteen grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren, two sisters, and a large circle of friends and relatives remain to mourn the departure of a "mother in Israel."

First Quorum of Seventy.

The First Seventy will meet in the basement of the church at Lamoni, Iowa, March 31, at 7.30 p. m. Future place of meeting will then be determined.

the courtesies of the floor were extended visitors, by motion and vote.

At this meeting reports were heard from President J. A. Gunsolley; Vice-president Walter W. Smith; Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, secretary; R. B. Trowbridge, treasurer; Sr. W. H. Deam, superintendent of the home class department; Sr. Louise Palfrey, editor of the Religio Quarterly; and Walter W. Smith, superintendent of normal work.

Some interesting facts may be gleaned from the reports of the officers. President Gunsolley says "substantial growth has characterized the work of the year. The work in foreign fields has advanced." Bro. Leggott has pushed the home class work in England. Bro. Waller reports conditions good in Hawaii. Sr. Lake writes that the home class work in the Society Islands is prospering and it is hoped that locals may soon be organized. In Australia conditions are about as last year. President Gunsolley has spent three months in field work. During that time he traveled about forty-five hundred miles. His traveling and family expenses are divided between the Religio and Sunday-school associations,—the expense for the Religio for the year being less than ninety dollars.

Commenting on her statistical report the secretary said, "Independence Stake leads in enrollment, average attendance, home class membership, and net gain over last year; and ties with Kirtland District for second place in point of new locals organized. London District is first in number of locals, second in enrollment, and third in home class members. Their average attendance, compared with enrollment, is much better than either Lamoni or Independence Stakes. Lamoni Stake comes third in locals, third in enrollment, third in average attendance, second in home department and net gain. The statistical report shows a total enrollment in locals of 8,659, a net gain over last year of 1,135. There are a total of 242 locals, a net gain of 26 for the year. Forty-four charters have been issued during the year. There are 1,136 home class members, a gain of 300 for the year. The total Religio membership, including locals and home classes is 9,795. The secretary has done two months field-work without expense to the association.

The General Conventions

APRIL 2.

The General Convention of Zion's Religio-Literary Society met in Lamoni, Iowa, April 2. The first meeting was a prayer-service; Brn. C. Ed. Miller and J. L. Butterworth in charge. This service was held at nine o'clock in the forenoon, and like the other services of the day, excepting the evening service, was held in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church. The central thought of the testimonies offered at this meeting was that Religians should live their religion.

The business-meeting convened at ten o'clock, with the executive officers in the stand; Bro. J. A. Gunsolley acting as chairman. The congregation sang the familiar hymn, Angel Message, and prayer was offered by Bro. Walter W. Smith. A motion prevailed that the several officers of the association be the officers of the convention.

Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, general secretary, was assisted in her work by Srs. Walter W. Smith and Estella Wight. Bro. Mark Siegfried acted as chorister.

Following the report of the credential committee

The report of the home class superintendent, Sr. Altha Deam, says, "The home department is a feeder to the Religio." Through the efforts of this department one new district and nine locals were organized last year. Special mention is given North Dakota which leads with 80 new members in home classes, due to the work of Sr. Birdie Graham.

The report of the treasurer shows receipts for the year, $1,744.62; expenditures, $756.65; cash on hand, $987.97.

The normal work has grown under the zealous care of Bro. Walter W. Smith. He states that there is a total enrollment (including both Religio and Sunday-school workers) of 1,019. The list includes 2 apostles, 1 patriarch, 2 bishops, and numbers of other church officials and missionaries. Seventy-four students have finished the course this year, making in all 112 graduates of the first standard course. Fifteen of these graduates have taken post-graduate courses. A few have completed the Book of Mormon and Religio course, but most of the graduates have taken the Bible and Sunday-school course.

Business-meeting again convened at two o'clock. At this session financial reports were presented by the various officers and superintendents, and also by the standing auditing committee. A motion was adopted authorizing the executive committee to arrange to have all business transactions kept in one general account. The executive committee reported on the question of a junior quarterly; they did not consider it wise to publish such a quarterly at this time.

Considerable time was devoted to a discussion of the German translation of the Book of Mormon. Some eight hundred dollars have been collected on the translation fund and are in the hands of the Bishop. For various reasons the translation has not yet been published. A recommendation from the executive committee that collections for the translation fund be discontinued and that a committee be appointed to investigate and push the translation forward, was referred back to them for further consideration. A petition from missionaries in Sweden was read, asking assistance to get the Book of Mormon translated for use in that field. The general sentiment seemed to be that the work of pushing the book into foreign fields should not stop or be abated in any way.

A communication from Sr. Lake was read. She asked permission to modify or suspend certain general rules to meet the needs of the work in the islands. She states that committee work must be abandoned there because the natives get Religio work confused with regular church work, and in some instances lookout committees have attempted to excommunicate members. Also she advises that officers, teachers, and voting powers should be confinied to church members, as in some instances Catholics have crowded in and run things to suit themselves. The request was granted, subject to advice and counsel of the executives.

The Library Commission reported, and an appropriation of one hundred dollars was made for library work.

The evening was devoted to a session of regular Religio work under the management of the officers of the Lamoni local. The lesson study was followed by a very instructive program.

APRIL 3.

The Religio Convention again met for business at nine o'clock, Saturday forenoon, April 3. The meeting was in the upper auditorium.

At this session several important appropriations were made. The sum of fifty dollars was set aside to help build up the library of Graceland College. The sum of one hundred dollars was placed at the disposal of the executives to be used in helping to forward work among the Lamanites and in explorations in the interests of archæology. It is hoped that this will be the beginning of an important work. The Religio especially should be interested in establishing a splendid museum of archæological relics that may support the story of the Book of Mormon. The sum of two hundred and fifty dollars was placed at the disposal of the executives to be used in the general work of the association.

The Constitution and By-laws were amended so as to make the First Presidency of the church and members of the Quorum of Twelve ex officio members of the General Association; also to allow presidents of stakes and districts ex officio rights in stake and district conventions. Five proposed amendments found in January Autumn Leaves were referred to a committee of three who are to report at the next General Convention.

Acting on a further report from the executives a committee of three was appointed by the body to inquire into the delay in the publication of the Book of Mormon in the German language and to urge its early publication; they are Rudolph Etzenhouser, S. A. Burgess, and C. C. Joehnk. The financing of the normal work was left with the executives.

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the sustaining of all the former officers, the vote in each case being unanimous. The officers are: J. A. Gunsolley, president; Walter W. Smith, vice-president; Sr. M. A. Etzenhouser, secretary; R. B. Trowbridge, treasurer; S. A. Burgess, librarian; Sr. W. H. Deam, superintendent of home class department.

The first session of the General Convention of the Sunday-school Association was held in the upper auditorium of the Brick Church, Lamoni, April 3, beginning at half past two in the afternoon. The general superintendent, Elder T. A. Hougas, presided. The secretary, D. J. Krahl, was assisted by J. F. Mintun and Annie Allen; Elder F. G. Pitt was chosen chorister.

The time of the meeting was largely taken up with the report of the credential committee and reports from the officers of the association and from schools.

In his report the general superintendent stated that the work in general is in good condition. But some districts and schools have gone backward or are dormant. The need is for leaders and for aggressive work. The Quarterly is still issued in the four grades; the EXPONENT subscription list is growing slowly, but the publication is not self-supporting. He cautioned the convention to avoid hasty and unwise appropriations of the association funds.

In his report the second assistant superintendent called especial attention to Bro. Walter W. Smith's work in the normal department.

The statistical report of the secretary shows a present total membership of twenty-four thousand nine hundred and fifty-three; number of schools five hundred and thirty. This is a net gain of ten schools, and a net gain in membership of two thousand and fourteen. In his comments on the statistical report he said, "London, Ontario, District has increased its membership four hundred and twenty-two the past year; now leading Independence Stake by four. The ranking as to membership now is: London, first; Independence, second; Lamoni, third."

The report of the treasurer, Elder John Smith, shows expenditures for the year amounting to five thousand one hundred and seventy-one dollars and thirty one cents; balance on hand nineteen hundred and eighty-two dollars and two cents.

An interesting report from Hawaii Territory shows four active schools, including one Chinese school of sixty members with an average attendance of forty.

The evening service was devoted to graduating exercises of graduates from the normal department.

The editors regret that they can not bring their report of the conventions up to a later date. Owing to the extra work necessary in getting out and mailing the Bishop's annual report it was deemed necessary to go to press Saturday evening or early Monday morning.

Long years ago the wise old bard told us that "Life is a game of chess"; but it remains for the disappointed man of to-day to find out for himself that the trouble with the particular game is that it is "his move," while he sits waiting for some one else to make a play.

JUDGE C. B. WAITE.

Charles B. Waite, a pioneer of Chicago and a judge of Utah Territory under the administration of Abraham Lincoln, died early yesterday morning after an illness of three months at his home, 479 Jackson Boulevard. He was eighty-five years old and had resided in Chicago sixty years.

The body will be cremated in compliance with a request made by Mr. Waite before his death. The date of the ceremony has not been definitely decided upon.

During the last twenty-five years Mr. Waite, who practiced law with Abraham Lincoln, had devoted his time to research work and the writing of books, one of which, The Christian Religion the First Two Centuries ran through six editions, and Herbert Spencer and His Critics attracted considerable attention. He was renowned as a linguist.

Mr. Waite is survived by a wife and five children, Doctor Lucy Waite, Mrs. Jesse Wright, of Washington, D. C., Joseph Waite, Mrs. Margaret Thornton, and C. L. Waite of Denver. Memorial services will be held some time in the near future.

We clip from the Chicago Tribune, of March 26, the foregoing notice of the death of Judge Charles B. Waite. To few of the many thousands who may have read this notice of the passing on of this aged man, would it have the same meaning that it must have to the readers of the SAINTS' HERALD. Perhaps there may be not many of those who read it in the HERALD who will remember why it should mean anything to them; but we take a pleasure, shaded with regret, in calling to the attention of those few who may have a memory of the man the fact that an honorable one among the men of the earth has been taken to await his reward when the judgment shall sit. To those of our readers who may not know who Charles B. Waite was, or why we of the Reorganized Church should take any more note of his death than of any others of the host daily passing "to the silent bourne, whence no traveler returns," we state who he was, and why we note his death.

When the church sent Elders Edmund C. Briggs and Alexander McCord to Utah, in 1863, Judge Charles B. Waite was one of the first men to meet them, and to give them encouragement, moral support, and an asylum. Bro. Briggs has a lively recollection of it and says, "This man, Judge C. B. Waite, was the first man to give me his hand, and bid me welcome in Salt Lake City; and to offer words of cheer and moral encouragement in regard to the mission upon which the church had sent me."

Not only did the judge do this, but he and his estimable wife invited the missionary to their home, offering common hospitality; but when all other doors were closed to them into which to bid inquirers enter that they might hear the message they were sent to deliver, the judge put his home at Bro. Briggs' disposal, and in that hospitable home, and under the watchcare of a fearless judge of a United States territorial court, did Elders Briggs and McCord present the claims of the gospel message as held by "the remnant that was left from the dispersion," the first missionaries of the Reorganized Church to Utah.

We of the HERALD have excellent reasons to remember Judge Waite. He was a lover of fair treatment, a fitting pioneer judge and advocate of "the square deal" and while General P. E. Connor, in charge of Camp Douglas, with the United States troops stationed there, gave the missionaries the military protection they might need, the judge gave them the moral strength which his recognition must needs carry. He was a friend to our cause, and will be remembered in the great settling day with the other "honorable men of the world" who have extended the helping hand to the messengers of the cross in the time of their distress.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

INDIVIDUAL GLASSES.

Query: Are individual glasses necessary in the administration of the sacrament?

At the institution of the sacrament, or the Lord's supper, it is clear that the Master used but one cup, so far as the history is concerned. So far as the commandment in the Book of Mormon is concerned there is nothing to warrant the idea that individual cups are necessary. The peculiar objections presented as against the idea of using a cup in common, are founded upon the idea of personal uncleanness upon the part of some who partake; bad teeth, bad breath, tobacco stained lips and mustaches, and unwashed face and hands, resulting in imparting real or imaginary repulsiveness to the cup as it passes from one to another in the congregation. These objections are unnecessary, for the reason that the things complained of are unnecessary. Cleanliness is said to be next to godliness, and no person against whom these objections would lie should partake of the sacrament, even from an individual cup among his fellows. Using tobacco in any form is an unnecessary, useless, and filthy habit, no matter by whom it is used. Nothing can be said in defense of the habit, and it should be eliminated from the practices of the Lord's people; and hence would not stand in the way as an objection to the partaking of the sacrament together with others in open fellowship in congregation with the Saints.

We are asked if the use of individual cups would be unlawful among the Saints in the partaking of the sacrament. We know of no law specifically stating the number of cups necessary to the administration of the sacrament. Paul wrote that all things were lawful, but all things were not expedient. An array of individual cups where the membership of the branch did not exceed the number meant by the word few might be expedient; and, possibly for that reason, be lawful; but in branches like those at St. Louis, Lamoni, and Independence, such an array would simply be preposterous, and for that reason inexpedient and unlawful.

The existence of these objections upon the part of many persons who meet with the Saints at the sacramental services is to be regretted. It is better, far better, to get rid of the objections by removing the cause than to recognize the validity of the objections by providing for their continuance.

It is true that many persons in partaking of the sacrament take but a small portion of the wine from the glass, and by far the greater number of persons in any congregation of the Saints take particular pains to partake of both bread and wine in a manner as cleanly and as little objectionable as is possible. It is very seldom indeed that the person using tobacco goes to sacramental service with either lips or mustache or breath stained by the use of tobacco; they usually prepare themselves for the service by making themselves as clean as possible. In the administration of the bread and wine among that class of Saints where the use of tobacco is prevalent, if there be such Saints, the practice can not be so obnoxious to the majority as to make individual cups essential.

If we are asked to express an opinion, we do not hesitate to say that we believe individual cups are not necessary, and are not provided for in either the law or in the customs of the church. There may be fashionable congregations, or rather congregations of fashionable people, where by vote of the people the use of individual cups has been instituted and is being continued. It is but the way of the ultra-fastidious people of wealthy congregations, a conforming to the personal exclusiveness of those who have but little in common with the common people who in the ancient world and also in the modern world heard the gospel gladly.

TO WHOM SHALL HE REPORT?

An elder who is not an officer of the branch where he resides, and who preaches outside of the precincts of the branch of which he is a member, should report to the president of the district where such labor is done, and should consult with the president of the district as to such labor, when and where it is to be done; and in doing such labor he should not interfere with the local branch authorities of the branch of which he is a member, whether in the city or the country.

A priest who is not an officer of the branch, but who preaches outside of the branch jurisdiction, should be subject to the same rule as the elder as noted above, and be subject to the direction of the district president, and report his labors to the president of the district.

TITHES, OFFERINGS, AND ORDER OF CONSECRATIONS. OBJECT, USE, CHARACTER, AND APPLICATION OF THE SAME AS SET FORTH IN THE LAW OF CHRIST.

(An address during the meetings of the Independence special services, by Bishop E. L. Kelley, February 25, 1909. Reported by Mrs. Marie Morgan.)

The divine law given to man, is for his highest development and best good, and not simply an unnecessary thing that may be waived or disregarded at his will or pleasure.

It is general in its character and provisions, without partiality in its application, and when obeyed with full purpose of heart to fulfill the same according to its provisions, and thus magnify the name of Christ who gave the law, the results are spiritual life and light, and an exercise and development of the nobler faculties of the soul as well as the special blessing of God in the temporal things of life, which are to be added in his wisdom and not our own.

To make a successful warfare in life it is necessary for every one to occupy according to the law, not as he may prefer to do, or as he may misjudge the law, for if he could make a triumph in this way without being a "doer of the word" then he could be judged by conscience, perverted or otherwise, and not the law, and error would be as valuable as truth. Such a theory is wholly unlike God and at variance with every thought upon the question, found in God's word.

Jesus in illustrating the necessity of each one performing his work with faithfulness and diligence uses this language:

For I say unto you, That unto every one who occupieth, shall be given; and from him who occupieth not, even that he hath received shall be taken away from him.—Luke 19: 25, I. T.

All then must wake up and be anxiously engaged. Hesitation, slothfulness to duty, indifference, or waiting for the time to come for all "to divide up," will bring no reward, except the reward of the idler, and none should seek or wish for this.

Due labor and diligence in their respective stewardships were made significantly prominent in the teaching of Christ to the people, when he personally instructed in the principles of the higher and holier life. The performance of duty and a rendition of a strict account was enjoined upon "every soul of man," irrespective of ability or circumstances, each being held responsible under the law for what he is and what he has, and not for what he is, or has, not.

In this sense, Jesus instructing touching obligation and duty says:

He who is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much; and he who is unjust in the least, is also unjust in much.—Luke 16: 10.

Whatever we may have then, whether much or little, or whatever we are, minister or layman, will not cut much figure in the judgment and rewards of the future; but the question, how we have occupied in the places, or with the things of our stewardships, will form a wonderful issue when the books are opened.

In our own age the instruction to the church is in strict harmony with this counsel and laid down as follows:

For verily thus saith the Lord, It is expedient in me for a bishop to be appointed unto you, or of you unto the church, in this part of the Lord's vineyard; and verily in this thing ye have done wisely, for it is required of the Lord, at the hand of every steward, to render an account of his stewardship, both in time and in eternity. For he who is faithful and wise in time is accounted worthy to inherit the mansions prepared for them of my Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 72: 1.

Whoever we are then, and wherever we are, the law is applicable to and binding upon all and should be honored and fulfilled in the order of its requirements and the opportunities afforded.

From the beginning of Christ's ministry, duty on the part of the people in temporal matters, performed in a spirit of faith, and "with a full purpose of heart," was enjoined. He instructed how to do and the proper way to fulfill the law, never intimating that it was proper to quit doing, or that the people would be justified in withholding their help.

But if ye would rather give alms of such things as ye have; and observe to do all things which I have commanded you, then would your inward parts be clean also. But I say unto you, Woe be unto you, Pharisees! For ye tithe mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and pass over judgment, and the love of God; these ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone.—Luke 11: 42, 43, I. T.

Note how careful the Savior is that no excuse under any pretext shall be had by any one for a failure to perform by any instruction of his to them.

"These ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone."

Too many are ready to try to justify themselves in leaving undone some things under the thought that they have performed some others; but this will not answer with God. The perfection urged in the law is attained by its observance, not by excusing ourselves for a failure to observe.

It should not be overlooked in this connection that Jesus refers to the giving of "alms," and the observance of the law of tithes as being the same. The giving of "alms of such things as ye have," as he expresses it, was equal to, or the same as, the tithing of "mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs." This is as he taught in the sermon on the mount: "Take heed that ye do not your alms before men to be seen of them." The word alms refers to a "work of righteousness," or the fulfillment of the law as it is written: "He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor; his righteousness remaineth for ever."—2 Corinthians 9: 9.

This is attained not by indifferent or spasmodic handing out to the poor from time to time as many often interpret it, but by carrying out and conforming to the law, which regulates and makes provision for these things.

"And it shall be our righteousness, if we shall observe to do all these commandments before the Lord our God, as he hath commanded us."—Deuteronomy 6: 25.

Not that men can do as they please and attain to this righteousness; but they must observe faithfully the gospel rule, the law of Christ, "for therein is the righteousness of God revealed"; not of works, (of our own choosing,) lest we boast, but those good works, "Which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them."—Ephesians 2: 10.

This divine order touching duty in temporalities was for the development of a true and holy character, hence adapted to all, rich and poor alike, and all must comply in order to attain the perfection demanded. The rich and poor are often referred to in the law as being "greedy," "lustful," and "covetous"; or "miserly," "selfish," "unthankful," and without "brotherly love." The Lord has given in his law of righteousness, the gospel, ample means of working a change and attaining true development, but this law must be obeyed in order to be effective. Like the principles of repentance and baptism, it is to be observed by rich and poor, hence it is well written: "He that is tithed shall not be burned"; not burned just because they have not put the money into the treasury; far from this; but not having complied with and fulfilled the law they have not attained that perfection necessary to receive him, when he shall come, therefore they are destroyed with the wicked. "He that is faithful in that which is least will be faithful in that which is much"; all are tried and tested under an equal order, and none are exempt, not one.

But, Jesus taught the law in its fullness, "not preferring one thing before another,"—every part in its own order. He urged the consecration of the tithe, or tenth, as observed by the patriarchs and enjoined in the instructions of the prophets according to the command:

Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it.

This was given to a people who only knew the tenth as the definitive tithe. Jesus subsequently revealed this in its order to his disciples on the Western Continent with instruction in other gospel principles so that it could well be said, as it was by divine sanction, that the gospel was taught in its fullness to those to whom he ministered personally in the Western Hemisphere.

He also taught his disciples to consecrate of their surplus:
