
This he spake unto his disciples, saying, Sell that ye have and give alms; provide not for yourselves bags which wax old, but rather provide a treasure in the heavens, that faileth not; where no thief approacheth, neither moth nor rust corrupteth.—Luke 12: 36, I. T.

This command was not to sell all that they had, as many erroneously assume, for then the disciples themselves would have been deprived of the means of a living. Jesus taught in wisdom, and wisdom is justified of his children.

The statement, "Sell that ye have and give alms," carries clearly with it the thought that they were to dispose of such things as they could spare, and turn into the treasury to assist the poor and the needy. The alms giving was provided for under the law as has already been shown and was indeed a work of righteousness.

This instruction was sufficiently important to be again given to the church in our own time. It reads:

If thou lovest me, thou shalt serve me and keep all of my commandments. And, behold, thou wilt remember the poor, and consecrate of thy properties, for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them, with a covenant and a deed which can not be broken; and inasmuch as ye impart of your substance unto the poor, ye will do it unto me, and they shall be laid before the bishop of my church and his counselors, two of the elders, or high priests, such as he shall or has appointed and set apart for this purpose.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 8.

The direction is fairly specific: "Consecrate of thy properties for their support, that which thou hast to impart unto them"; not all a person has, but again: "inasmuch as ye impart of your substance"; not all your substance, but, "that which thou hast to impart." Whatever they could spare of the holdings, even though at a sacrifice; and that which they could spare would be more definitely, also correctly, set out as "surplus." The instruction is also definite as to where this consecration, or alms, should be placed.

Subsequently to this instruction given February, 1831, further direction and explanation was given to the church in this language:

Verily, thus saith the Lord, I require all their surplus property to put into the hands of the bishop of my church of Zion, for the building of mine house, and for the laying of the foundation of Zion, and for the priesthood, and for the debts of the presidency of my church; and this shall be the beginning of the tithing of my people; and after that, those who have thus been tithed shall pay one tenth of all their interest annually; and this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 106: 1.

Now, I hope none will stumble over this paragraph and read it, that the surplus is the beginning of the law of tithing. This would be incorrect. The law as we have seen begins with the tithe, the tenth, and is applicable whether a person has a surplus or not, and any time and place.

Paragraph 2 reads:

Verily I say unto you, It shall come to pass that all those who gather unto the land of Zion shall be tithed of their surplus properties, and shall observe this law, or they shall not be found worthy to abide among you.

And in paragraph 2 it says: "And this shall be an ensample unto all the stakes of Zion."

But are none under the law of tithes and offerings except in Zion and her stakes? Such an idea was held to by a few in the Reorganization of the church prior to the year 1882. The theory was put forth as follows:

Surplus is the beginning of tithing; the execution of the law of surplus is limited to Zion and her stakes; now, there is no Zion nor stakes; see revelation of date 1873; therefore, no law of tithing applicable.

It is fair to presume that had this idea continued to guide the church, we never would have reached the development and preparation necessary to the organization of stakes.

At a meeting between the Quorum of Twelve and the Bishopric at Kirtland, Ohio, during the conference of 1883, entire harmony of agreement was attained and this is definitely referred to in the article of the Bishopric of January, 1884, and published in SAINTS' HERALD in March of that same year.

Subsequently a question of difference was raised by the president of the Twelve, Jason W. Briggs, who was not present at the meeting in Kirtland. And at the April session of the conference of 1884, at Stewartsville, Missouri, at a meeting presided over by President Jason W. Briggs, and the Bishopric, on the eleventh day of April, the matters were presented and discussed publicly, and Bro. Briggs stated before the meeting that if we took the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures, the law as held by the Bishopric was correct. Since this time the Bishopric have, as witness the "Address to the Saints" (issued by the First Presidency, the Twelve, and the Bishopric), worked in harmony and unity of understanding with the other quorums. And subsequently to the time of sending out the "Address to the Saints," the various quorums of the church and conference ratified and adopted the address. Now, what other important part of church work has more unity of sentiment and authority in the church and in the books back of it than the work of the Bishopric?

But, it is said, Some are writing against the positions of the Bishopric all the time. The Bishopric is not averse to fair and honorable criticism of its work, and has never tried to hinder the same, and is confident the law will remain the same and its work stand approved by the Lord, whatever the contest, while somebody may get a little education along the line of church finances. We agree it would be better for the work and the Saints if we could all see more clearly, and sooner measure up to the gospel line; but if we can not, let us move in faith, a step at a time, notwithstanding that which may be termed hindrances.

The correct rule for the interpretation of scripture is: "Bring all scripture touching any given subject together and if in so doing you form no contradiction then you are right."

Our heavenly Father does not contradict himself; his instruction is eternal and ever the same. And if in our interpretation or exposition of his law, we find that our special solution is not in harmony with a part of it, let us not try to throw distrust upon the law; it is far wiser to climb down from our self-constituted perches, and humbly review our work, and drop the theory, rather than the law of Christ.

The harmony of the law as set forth herein is also in strict harmony with the principles and work of "all things common" contained in the books. It may not agree with the ideas of some as to what the statement, "all things in common," consists of, for there are erroneous views as to the condition of things, under the revealed order of, all things common, as there are touching the law of consecration, of tithes and offerings, and of surplus.

No rule that interferes with man's agency, or the charge of a stewardship by each member of the community and for which the individual is held responsible to God for a final rendition of the account of his doings therein, and to the Bishop in a proper way here, is permissible under the law of Christ anywhere, nor was such had under Enoch, or in the time of the apostles, either on the Eastern or Western Continent.

Such a law would interfere with the law of growth, development, perfection, and final rewards of the Saints. It would be antichrist, not after Christ. As before referred to, Jesus taught the underlying principles governing the church in the illustration:

"For I say unto you, That unto every one who occupieth, shall be given; and from him who occupieth not, even that he hath received shall be taken from him." It is Christlike to place men under laws of duty and responsibility here, not to deprive them of these, for if so they can never approve themselves to God, or be rewarded for faithfulness to duty to Him.

The direct steps toward equality are:

First: To attain a true standard of honesty, uprightness, truthfulness, and fair-dealing between each other and all others, and to the church.

Second: That each have or receive a stewardship in which he will have opportunity by due diligence and labor to develop his talents, thereby providing for himself and family under the rules of upright, honorable, and fair dealing.

The first demands men and women who will absolutely follow the rule: "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them."

Whatever the course, or misdoings of others, the true disciple must stand in his place unmoved and abide the rule of a holy life. With Saints of this character we may approach at once the second condition, and adjust and reward stewardships according to the provisions of the law sustaining these, and the order of equality is entered upon.

It may not be according to the understanding of some of what equality consists, but it will be the equality provided for in the law of Christ, and this furnishes the only just and consistent rule of equality that is to be found anywhere; viz: a rule under which every person shall have equal rights and opportunities with every other person, duly honoring the agency of each, and yet each to be duly rewarded according to his faithfulness to duty, good works, and uprightness of life. Jesus defines it as follows:

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory of God.

Under this righteous rule the individuality and worth of the disciple is maintained and recognized, and the stewardship of each duly provided for according to his talents, that he might gain other talents; and as Jesus gives the illustration as found in Matthew 25: 15, "To every man according to his several ability"; these render their accounts duly, but not by turning everything over, as has been shown, but by "imparting" what they do not need, or the surplus, after having paid the tithe, or tenth, of the increase; the surplus and tithe being turned into the storehouse "to become the common property of the whole church."

The stewardships are left intact, however, and may be amended, increased, or diminished, according to the necessity, diligence, and faithfulness of the steward. All have equal claims on this common property turned into the storehouse for the benefit of managing the concerns of their stewardships, but no one has any claim upon another's stewardship; these are individual holdings provided for in the law of Christ, not only as a proper policy for the membership of the church now, but in all time.

This is the rule laid down in the Order of Enoch in his time for the benefit of the poor:

It is wisdom in me; therefore, a commandment I give unto you, that ye shall organize yourselves, and appoint every man his stewardship, that every man may give an account unto me of the stewardship which is appointed unto him; for it is expedient that I, the Lord, should make every man accountable, as stewards over earthly blessings, which I have made and prepared for my creatures. . . . Therefore, if any man shall take of the abundance which I have made, and impart not his portion, according to the law of my gospel, unto the poor, and the needy, he shall, with the wicked, lift up his eyes in hell, being in torment.—Doctrine and Covenants 101: 2.

This is in direct harmony with the law of "stewardships," and the rule directing the imparting of properties, "that which thou hast to impart"; to "consecrate of thy properties"; or the giving "all their surplus property," these expressions in these instances being equal to each other and referring in fact to the same thing and directed in each instance to the same end, viz, to be "put into the hands of the bishop," for use, according to the order of the Lord's storehouse.

This was the order of the church referred to in the Book of Mormon, page 471: "And they had all things common among them," dealing justly, "one with another." To deal justly "one with another" every one necessarily had his own stewardship and agency, and was under responsibility for his acts and must be held accountable for the same, both here and hereafter, and for the managing the concerns of their stewardships they had the assistance of the "common property" in the storehouse "according to their wants and needs inasmuch as their wants were just."

Further proof that this was the order is shown in the manner of the change of the conditions, see page 479, under the development and accumulations of stewardships; they became proud and lifted up, and failed to recognize as they should the law of Christ and impart of their portions, the tithe and surplus, to the Lord's storehouse, and began to claim these things their own, instead of recognizing the fact that all things belong to the Lord, and that they were simply stewards of him.

No system can be adopted that destroys the agency of man. To do this would help Satan. Free agency is a God given principle and must be preserved.

The fact should not be overlooked that the law given to bring about equality and arrange the stewardships of the Saints, is that which sustains and makes effective the conditions of "all things common," and when the Lord's rule of conditions in any of its bearings is lost sight of or disregarded, the conditions sought for fail. The order, however, is an everlasting one, Doctrine and Covenants 77: 1, and no other can be substituted, neither can this be changed. It is God's order, whatever man may think of it.

This is the order that was in force in the time of the apostles, as referred to in Acts 2:44 and 45: "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men, as every man had need.

This is the same order referred to in section 81:4 as we have before seen under the revelation: "Every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just." The same thought is contained in Acts 4:32:

And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common.

We must not overlook the fact that while these people did not claim the goods as their own, each "possessed goods," or had his stewardship, and regarded himself as a steward of God instead of being the owner. He was, however, responsible under the stewardship and had to answer, as we have seen, to God; this is the rule and condition of "all things common," according to the "all things common," as it is held out in the scriptures, and it agrees with the teaching of the apostles in the epistles to the churches in their time:

Now concerning the collection for the Saints, as I have given order to the church at Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

This shows that the saints lived under the law of stewardships which is provided for in the revelations given to the church. God has not given two laws and his instruction is in harmony, wherever to be found. The selling of possessions and goods, and parting to all men, as every man had need, was a consecration, that which a person could impart, the surplus, in addition to the tithe or tenth, which is also designated under the law as being the Lord's.

The instruction a few years later to Timothy upon temporal matters, touching the arrangement for widows, shows the full recognition of the agency and stewardship of the Saints and that each was required to perform the good works referred to under the law. It reads:

Let not a widow be taken into the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' clothes, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.—1 Timothy 5:9, 10.

Again verses 16 and 17:

If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed. Let the elders that rule well be counted worthy of double honor, especially they who labor in the word and doctrine. For the scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn. And, the laborer is worthy of his reward.

We should not forget the admonition of the apostle in this connection, verse 21:

I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels, that thou observe these things without preferring one before another, doing nothing by partiality.

The law as set forth in the three books then is equal, and if carried out, administered, as it really is when comprehended in either record, will bring the results sought, viz: the equality of the Saints, a stewardship to every one, supply amply, by the tithing and surplus consecrations, the storehouse by which the "wants and needs" of any who may justly claim shall be furnished, making the full condition of "all things common" spoken of in the law.

It is true that in order to understand fully the principles, we must gather instruction from the three books; but this only furnishes a sufficient reason for the later revelations; but when the law is once comprehended it may be developed from either of the books and when so developed is maintainable by each and without contradiction.

The wisdom shown forth in the instruction given by the Lord as to the correct manner of interpreting the law of tithing and consecration is sufficient to stamp section 126 as emanating from the divine mind whatever may be queried of other things:

To this question I was answered, that the Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church was to guide the advice and action of the bishopric, taken as a whole, each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto. (See section 126:10.)

This direction is complete in itself; and Christlike, shows the necessity of regarding "every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God."

"The Book of Doctrine and Covenants as accepted by the church," includes all the revelations therein. But the direction is still more specific, "taken as a whole." To honor them as a whole, we can not leave out a part of them, whether it be a tenth, fiftieth, or hundredth part; to take them as a whole in the interpretation is to harmonize with each and every one. But again: "Each revelation contained therein having its appropriate bearing upon each of the others and their relation thereto." We open the book and read:

"Section 42, revelation given February, 1831." It means that then. We read again: "Section 51, revelation given May, 1831." It means that then.

Again we open and read: "Section 72, revelation given December, 1831." It means that then.

Again: "Section 81, revelation given April, 1832, showing the order given to Enoch and the church in his day." It means this then.

We turn again: "Section 98, revelation given December, 1833." It means this then.

Again: "Section 101, revelation given to Enoch, concerning the order of the church for the benefit of the poor." It means this then.

Again: "Section 102, revelation given on Fishing River, Missouri, June 22, 1834." It means this then.

Again we turn and read: "Section 106, revelation given at Far West, Missouri, July 8, 1838." It means this then.

Again turn and read: "Section 114, revelation given October 7, 1861." It means this then.

Well, what one is it then that Christ does not direct us to observe when he says, "each revelation contained therein"? Answer: Not one. Then let us take "them as a whole," not a part.

But the inquiry is made, "Does not section 106 make the law that is continuous for ever, to be the tenth only?" Oh, no! It is only a mistaken interpretation that does that. Turn and read paragraph 1: "And this shall be a standing law unto them for ever, for my holy priesthood, saith the Lord." What is the standing law, "one tenth of the interest annually?"

No; that would be only a part of the law referred to in the same paragraph. It is the law of "surplus," or consecration of what the steward has to impart, and the one tenth of all their interest annually, "that continues for ever." It requires all to comprise the law as given. This interpretation is in harmony with section 81: 4:

And you are to be equal, or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties, for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just; and all this for the benefit of the church of the living God, that every man may improve upon his talent, that every man may gain other talents; yea, even an hundredfold, to be cast into the Lord's storehouse, to become the common property of the whole church, every man seeking the interest of his neighbor, and doing all things with an eye single to the glory to God.

Now read the next sentence of paragraph 5, same section:

This order I have appointed to be an everlasting order unto you and unto your successors, inasmuch as you sin not.

This in terms continues the rule of imparting that which can be spared, the surplus, as an everlasting order and associating the rule with that which refers to the continuous order in section 106, there is harmony. The law governing the "imparting of properties," "surplus," and a "tenth of the increase," is an everlasting one—it is God's law.

Interpret the revelations by the rule, "each having its proper bearing," and there are no differences nor contradictions; no, not one.

You will notice, then, that I place the important work of the law relating to temporalities as the basis of the formation of character in the developing of the minds and hearts of the Saints. For that purpose the law was given, and it would be just as impossible for our heavenly Father to gather his people and to distribute the goods that are spoken of in the law where they are not prepared for it, as it would to distribute to any other people of the world, and expect that they would return and "honor him with their substance." The question confronting us is, are we cheerfully honoring him with the substance that he has placed in our hands? It is upon this thought that the Bishopric has urged the inquiry touching equality and stewardships: Are we ready? The books will show, but simply the profession of "Lord, Lord," never can.

Have all complied so far as we can, with that which has already been placed in our hands? If not, suppose that distribution should be made, and more placed in our hands, would it be any better? Do we not have to rise to that perfection of grace that makes us willing and anxious doers of the whole law? No difference how little or how much we may presume, or assume, that the law relates to us, the-keeping of it must be in every particular, not in a part only, nor in such as we may choose to keep; but the keeping of the law must be in its entirety, and it is upon this theory that the law is urged upon the Saints, as having an individual application; not as it may be convenient from time to time, but as definitely, as purposely, as conscientiously, as devotedly, and as faithfully as we comply with the law of baptism for the remission of sins or the laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Spirit. That we will not only do this in theory of recognition, but that we shall also attain such standard as to more fully appreciate the church in its proper place and position in the world.

There should not be found on the part of the Saints a disposition to hold lightly the things that God has given to them. Not only this but also a disposition to speak lightly of the church and its work. Christ so loved the church that he gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the "washing of water by the word." Who would speak so lightly, then, of the church and the work it is doing? People must draw nearer to Christ so that they will appreciate it more than they now do, the good of the church and its work, or our heavenly Father can never say, "Come, I can trust you; you are fitted to enter and occupy." Are we fitted for heaven to-day? There are hardly any who would say, I feel that I am fitted for it; and if not, what is the reason? Is it not because we have not been sufficiently faithful in the things that we have received? and if not for this, how do we know that we have been sufficiently faithful to receive and live the order of equality and all things common spoken of in the law?

I have stated before this audience a couple of times at least, and before many other audiences, that it was not our heavenly Father who was waiting to perform his work because he was not ready, but that he is waiting for the preparation of the people, and when that preparation comes, is made, then it will be time enough for us to inquire how long will the Lord wait. So we are still urging and trying to teach the principles governing in the law relating to temporalities, for the reason that the principles themselves, when lived, are calculated to develop and ennoble the soul.

Take a person who is too stingy to do anything for his family, or the church, or anybody else in this world, almost, but who is wrapped up in a few dollars, or the thought of how much he can make in this world, can not you see how great his development must be in order to enter the abode of the just and true saints? He must grow out of this condition, and unless we have a law that will reach the case he can not, for development comes by the devoted application of law, not by excitement, not by wishing, not by slothfulness, not by idleness, but by zealously fulfilling the law of liberty. In the language of the Apostle James, we are to be "doers of the word and not hearers only."

In our work, then, we must not overlook the fact that it is necessary for us to keep the law relating to temporalities. I know it is very common for the eldership to preach to the people on the outside "that unless we are doers of the law there is no salvation for us"; but when we come to apply it to ourselves the thought arises, Can we not be excused from this? Can't we be excused from conforming to the law relating to tithes if we pay our surplus? If the law excuses us, we may be excused, but if it does not, why do we wish to be excused? Why not willingly move up and comply with the law without trying to climb up some other way than that which God has laid down in the books?

In our work as individuals, then, I hope we will keep in mind this truth; that it is possible for the Saints to make a triumph, but that they can not outside of the fulfilling of the law of Christ. In our work in keeping the law we should attain the state of perfection that Jesus spoke of, as recorded in the sermon upon the mount, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." How become thus perfect? By fulfilling the law, every whit. That's the way to be perfect, as our Father who is in heaven is perfect. Now, are we doing this? If so, we are in a happy condition to-night; and let us not have our lights go out, then. Let them shine forth to those everywhere who may see and hear us, and soon we shall see the light of Zion reflected so the world may see her rising.

In our work and efforts as individuals we are permitted to press forward to the time when there shall be absolute unity and oneness among God's people. This is the law; but the unity must come under a higher state of perfection. In the first place, we must get away from the feeling that we want everything that we see in this world. Men and women are in the habit of looking out upon the things of life and yearning, or coveting, as the saying is, everything that they see. God could never satisfy us as long as we are in that state of mind and heart. It wouldn't make any difference if in our present state Christ should give us everything about us, unless we develop and change, should we see Satan on the outside with a few useless ornaments or engaging in some worldly pleasures, we could not contain ourselves, but would feel like rushing right over to him and seeing if we could not get that too. The duty of man is to learn to be content with the things God has given him, and if we see anything on the outside not to go after that, too, as did Eve in the Garden.

Those in this world who are seeking after pleasure, and are willing to run here and there, spend their money seeking the pleasures of this life, are not the ones who will be accepted by our heavenly Father when the time comes for the distribution of the wealth of Zion among his children. Neither will they be the ones who will be welcomed on the other side when we shall stand before the pearly gates. All must learn to deny ourselves. Learn to cultivate a spirit that when we see something that attracts the eye and soul for a moment in a worldly way, that will say to us, Stop and think, should we let our hearts and minds go out after such. Learn to deny ourselves as well as to wish and long for the things of pleasure in this life. This is the development that is required and if we fulfill the law as it is, we will gain the development; but if we fail to fulfill the law, instead of getting better as a people, so that we are more ready to receive that which our heavenly Father would place in our hands, we will move backward and lose the prize.

Another thing that I thought to call attention to was in the further work that the church has to do, with reference to arranging and preparing for God's people. At the present time, we have already provision made for the old people of the church, who can not make homes for themselves, and they are satisfied. It is a place that any of us might be grateful for if we were there, and any of us might be proud of if we simply visited it to see how our brothers and sisters are cared for.

There has also been fitted and prepared a school of learning for the young people in the church and it seems to me if there has been anything that has been a benefit to the church it has been this school of discipline and training. There may be some exceptions—but in almost every school in the country you will find that infidelity and disbelief are the results of the special training instead of fidelity to God and to Christ, our Lord; so that it would be impossible for me to-day to feel satisfied with sending a boy to an institution of higher learning away from home, if we did not have an institution to patronize that is watchful to train so as to confirm a belief in the scriptures instead of casting a doubt. I could not be satisfied, because I would not know what he was doing; whether he was being trained away from God or towards him. It is one of the most important works of the church ever entered upon, although we had to battle in order to maintain and sustain it.

Then we entered upon the work of the building the Sanitarium. That is now finished, and we have partially the means of supplying and furnishing it. Not sufficient as yet for furnishing, but the building is finished, and this done the work of providing for the sick and afflicted who need such a place is complete. It is for the sick and afflicted, not a home that people can go to and remain, as are our Saints' Homes. It is an institution for the special object for which God directed in his law. We have also sufficient means for locating and furnishing the children's home. There will be no necessity for gathering funds for that the present year. If anybody wishes to donate for the children's home, it will be thankfully received, but it is not necessary to urge this, is the idea.

But this is not the only work that the church has to do; it has been, however, a necessary preparatory work. The work pressing upon the church now is the purchasing of tracts of land for the settlement of Saints who can not make provision for themselves.

This should be the business and work of the church the present year, if the Bishopric is right in its conclusions. Provision should be made for Saints in this way in due time, and doubtless as fast as they are prepared for the work. The law provides that time shall be had for preparation. The preparation to be made is both on the part of individuals and the body, the church. Not simply that a person may say, Well, I guess I am ready to go now, because I have got rid of my stock and my implements and my wife is ready now, and the children are well, and I am prepared to go. This is not all. The church must arrange too for the wife and children, or disappointments will follow. Let due preparation be made beforehand, and let us all be helpers to make it, is the divine plan. When we gather we ought to be ready to carry on such work as we are fitted or prepared for, whether it is farming or cattle raising, or dairying, a mechanic, or the work of a storehouse; a stewardship of some kind in the world's battle. For illustration, we can not arrange to bring together all the elders, who are in the mission fields, with their families. When the elders go away what will their families be doing? Do you think the Lord would be pleased with the families of elders being idle on the streets or at home, no matter how well the missionary was discharging his duty? If he has a family that can cultivate a farm, let him have a farm; and if it is an elder, let his family be placed where it will be a helper, that coöperation may be coöperation in fact in the church, and not simply in theory. True coöperation is to place men and women so that they may be able to help with diligence themselves, and not simply the starting of a business with the view that the business will make a living for all of us and we may depend upon the returns from that. One will bring the people together and develop them in character in which usefulness on their part will be the leading thought of their minds. The other will bring a people together and develop them in the thought that the amount they are to gain will be the chief anxiety of their minds, and they will be depending upon something else for success instead of the labor and industry of their own hands. We want a people educated out of such an idea as this. It is far below the plane that God placed man in and offered to him opportunity. We should be fitting ourselves to do and prove ourselves, and have no other wish than a fair opportunity and the blessing of God with which to win success.

There is no higher plane for man to move in in this world than to work out with fear and trembling his salvation both in spiritual and temporal matters. Then there will be a reward attaching; but what about the man who simply wants a living and not the opportunity to make one for himself and family? Now, if we can but fit ourselves for this, it isn't going to be a very long time until we can begin to talk about the gathering and light of the people of Zion, but before it reaches very high we must arrange so that when we have a poor family we can place them where they will have the means of making a living. I am thoroughly convinced that the idea is a correct one, that no person in this world ought to be contented to stand up and say, I want something given to me, that I may be enriched; but it is right and honorable for them to ask for an opportunity; and to say, that if you will give me an opportunity, I will show you what I can do. I will be as faithful and industrious in my sphere as any other member of the community. That's the kind of principle that we ought to find on the part of the Saints, and if we can have such, there is fair sailing ahead.

God has not forgotten his people. He is willing and ready and anxious with reference to them. His church is sacred to him. It was sanctified by his Son. Let us hold it sacred, and let us not permit it to be spoken of disadvantageously in our presence without a rebuke from us and let us be children of God indeed attached to him; attached to his service; to the redemption of Zion; and bye and bye, all will be well.

Letter Department

SEATTLE, Washington.

The following is a statement given by way of an unknown tongue through Elder P. P. Premo, February 14, at Seattle, Washington, during the semiannual conference.

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, my children, be not discouraged. Yea, I say unto you, live ye near and close unto me and do my will, for verily the time is not far spent before destruction shall come throughout this land; and verily I say unto you, if ye keep my commandments they will not hurt you, but I will protect you, and if ye live according to my law, my servants shall go forth and do much more good in this country, for there are thousands in this land I shall gather into my kingdom. Be faithful, and I shall bless you with my holy Spirit, more than you have received before."

FANSHAW, Oklahoma, March 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: I wish to inform the many readers of the HERALD concerning the work in this part of the Lord's vineyard. As a rule we are moving on in the work. A few of the Saints from this place, with the writer, attended district conference at Wilburton, Oklahoma, thirty miles away. I am glad to say it was my first conference attended, also it was the happiest meeting I ever attended. The Saints were made to rejoice in the Spirit of the living God. After conference adjourned, we met on Sunday, enjoyed the Sunday-school very much. Preaching at eleven o'clock, thence to the waters of baptism, where Bro. Jesse M. Simmons led four precious souls to the liquid grave, thence to the church-house for prayer- and testimony-meeting, which in my opinion was the best of all the meetings.

Returning home, after such a spiritual feast, in company with five of God's servants, elders, we met in the depot and organized what is now known as the Fanshawe Branch, about thirty in number.

Dear Saints, pray for us, that we may be able to do much and lasting good in this new branch. My prayer is that we, as believing children, may hold on to the rod of iron just a little while longer; for the battle will soon be over. The reason I say this is because of a dream or night vision which I will try to give.

A DREAM.

I saw a great number of the Saints, seemingly a few hundred; all seemed to be asleep. They were all lying down in a long row, each family to itself, I being the first in the row. Then the Savior came and stood by me with his right hand uplifted, and he talked and warned us to do wake up. He plead and exhorted, as do the elders, in these words: "Wake up, dear children. The time is so short. You know not how short the time is when I will come, as you have been taught in the scriptures, in clouds and great glory, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and obey not my gospel. I warn you again, as I have warned you before, Wake up to the sense of your duty. Be workers while it is called to-day."

These, with many other testimonies concerning this restored gospel, enable me to say that I know that God is in this work.

Dear Herald: I feel it is my duty to say that I have enjoyed life since I have been in the Latter Day Saint Church better than I ever did before, and hope I will live to understand all of the work. I have been a member of this church about four years, and I trust to God that he will give us strength to go through this life.

Editors Herald: I was very interested in reading the remark "concerning discussions in the HERALD," by Elbert A. Smith. When I was reading it, I thought, How plain, and he with such a kind feeling and good counsel to us and "to those who are said to be about to withhold their means because of conflicting opinions on the law that have been published, if such exist, permit us to address a little advice that none will be likely to challenge: Don't do it." I say, Amen, because if any of us withhold we will miss our reward. Let us do our duty, and if those in higher office do not theirs, it has nothing to do with us. It is with them and God. A poor man came to me and asked me for money to get something to eat. I felt sorry for him, and I gave him a little change, and he went into a beer saloon instead of getting something to eat. Well, I did my duty, and I will not lose anything by it. I believe in tithing, and if anything comes through the HERALD on financial law, and I do not understand it, I think that if it comes from men in high office and men of God, I am willing to give way to their teachings. I believe if we had the Spirit of God, we would not have much contention. I think we ought to be submissive to their teachings as men of God. I hold with discussion in its place, and by the Spirit of God, because it does a great deal of good in showing both sides, and then we learn.

Editors Herald: I will just write a few lines in regard to the work here, so that the Saints can see that we are still alive on this side of the great water. I am glad to say that some noticed my appeal in the Ensign some time ago. I was greatly in need of help, and am so all the time. The first one who responded was a Bro. Tucker, of Kansas City, and his help came in good time, as Bro. Hanson, from Gothenburg, arrived a few days later, so I took all that money with the addition of a little more and rented halls for three weeks, and during that time had twenty-five meetings, Hanson doing nearly all the preaching, and by that help we were able to get the gospel before hundreds of people. Also had a Sunday-school organized and have had about thirty children every Sunday.

A short time ago I received some help from a Bro. Johnson, of Chicago, and by that help have been able to keep the hall where we hold our Sunday-school, up to the present, but do not know how long I will be able to keep it. The Baptists are working hard to get us off the ground, and they might succeed if we can not keep the hall. So if there is any one willing to help us keep the work going, just send it along, and you will get the same credit as if you send it to the Bishop, and at the same time save us a good deal of writing and expense connected therewith.

The outlook for the work seems to be better now than before, if we are only able to keep the camp-fire blazing.

Hope and pray the Lord will grant a good time in conference, and that the work may prosper in all parts of the world. I remain,

Your brother in the conflict,

OSCAR WM. OKERLIND.

FULTON, Iowa, March 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: Our district conference held at Fulton is past, and in the minds of many it was a good conference. Friends were made to the cause, and the Saints strengthened and encouraged. We have a nice Sunday-school at this place; about seventy enrolled. Bro. Benjamin Frank, a young brother, is doing nicely as superintendent.

We lost by death on the 6th of this month Bro. William Clayton, a firm and true member of the church. He was loved by all who knew him. He has gone to his reward. May we each and all so live that the world may see and know we are children of God. Our influence is going out to those around us either for good or for evil. If for good, then we may see our friends and loved ones gathered into the fold. If for evil, then the condemnation rests partly with us.

According to the parable of the ten virgins, only half that are called to be Saints will enter into the celestial kingdom. Will it be I? will it be you that is cast out? Eternity alone will tell! Let us so strive, dear Saints, that our influence may go out for good. By our own works we stand or fall, and one unjust man, though a member of the church, may and will cause more harm than ten righteous persons can counterbalance in the same length of time.

Are we heeding the oft repeated admonition of God to come up higher? If not, can we blame God for not doing his part? Is it not promised that if we do our part first, according to instructions, he is in duty bound to bless us? Let us one and all unitedly uphold the gospel banner of King Immanuel. Let us all do our duty, for the field is ripe for the harvest. We each have a work to do, so let us all do our part, then this glorious gospel will roll along smoothly and harmoniously until the consummation of all things. Hoping and praying for the welfare of God's children, I remain,

Your brother in Christ,

CLARENCE HEIDE.

BERKELEY, California.

Editors Herald: Section 17:1: "The rise of the Church of Christ in these last days, being one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh, it being regularly organized and established agreeably to the laws of our country, by the will and commandments of God in the fourth month, and on the sixth day of the month which is called April." "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord," as the angel said to the shepherds.

This day—not a December Santa Claus coming down the chimney covered with snow; but this day, 6th of April, in plain words to the church, the very day he came in the flesh. We need not look for another. If a man is engaged to a girl to be married, and he tells her his birthday, she will observe it, if she loves him. He would not command her. It is not compulsory. We have got so much revelation that it will take a long time before we understand it all; and if we are not willing to obey, we never will understand. Only those that love (and obey) the celestial law will have (as written) a good understanding. We need not (any of us) think to get anything for nothing; though he may be high priest or lesser. If any one is simply to take and hoard up money, and take usury, how shall he be able to preach to build up Zion? We are so often told to "examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith."

Jesus did what his father did, and learned from him; and our children (mostly so) will do as they see us do, and will urge as an excuse, "My father did so, and he was in high standing." If he was not such they would dare to keep still (and the best for them to do would be to do better).

However, I will not occupy too much space in the columns, for I myself like to read from others. But, this day, the 6th of April, being Christ's birthday, ought to be encouraged in the church. He who will not do anything until he is commanded is a slothful servant. Within this, therefore, find my 6th of April birthday present [three dollars to Bishop Kelley] instead of 25th of December.

Yours for truth,

JOS. CHESTER.

Editors Herald: We are not all dead yet, neither temporally nor spiritually, though it seems to require a far greater exertion to keep alive spiritually than it does to sustain temporal life. However, we are thankful for temporal blessings, as well as spiritual. The health of the Saints is good, considering the number of aged ones among our number. Our experience in spiritual things I presume is about the same everywhere among the Saints. When we are worthy God never withholds; when we find ourselves unworthy we had better hasten to place ourselves in a condition where we are sure he will not withhold needful blessings. Owing to the scattered condition of the Saints in these parts, and bad weather and bad roads, rendering it impossible at times for the Saints to come together, our meetings have not been so largely attended as we could have wished at times; but we have at times enjoyed to a large degree the peaceful influence of the Spirit, and have felt lifted up and encouraged in a way that we feel to press on and try to keep the camp-fire blazing until the dawning of a better day.

Bro. J. S. Roth, one of the grand old veterans in the gospel warfare, passed through here a few days ago en route for Trenton, Missouri, where he goes to hold a series of meetings. He was in splendid health and spirits. He told me he had not lost a day this winter. Success, and God's blessings be unto him.

We expect quite an addition to this branch by reason of some of the Saints buying land and moving into the jurisdiction of this branch. We were very much interested in the deluge of articles in the HERALD on surplus, consecration, tithing, increase, etc. They were ably written, with good thoughts interposed through them; but after all I think that if the Lord made no mistake in choosing those who should have the general oversight of the temporal things of the church that he made no mistake in choosing those who are competent to rightly interpret the law governing those things. The Lord, who is a God of law and order, and is not the author of confusion, would not leave it in a confused condition with diverse opinions, all seeming to be quite ably sustained. I am willing to abide by the instructions of those whom God has chosen; and if they mislead it will be theirs to answer to that God who has called them.

C. B. BROWN.

Dear Herald: I will write and let you know we are not asleep, although some are more wideawake than others; still we plod along as best we can, according to our understanding. I have had many testimonies of this glorious work, having been healed several times myself, and also our family. I have seen my little ones brought back, as it were, from the brink of the grave through administration, and also through prayer, for which I am always thankful. At times I get discouraged and careless; but when I get my dear HERALD, there is always something encouraging, and it seems for my especial benefit; and I get renewed strength.

Dear Saints, we should always try to take the church papers, if we have to sacrifice in other things. We are having preaching every night. Bro. George Jenkins, John Davis, and Warren E. Peak are holding services in a building on Main Street. They have good crowds out every night. Bro. J. M. Robinson, our branch president, is always alive to the work, and makes a wise shepherd over the flock.

Dear Saints, pray for me that I may hold out faithful.

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. JENNIE BUTLER.

LITTLE SIOUX, Iowa, March 7, 1909.

Editors Herald: I sometimes think of writing a letter to you and asking for a little of your valuable space; but I give up the task, thinking that others can do better than I can. And then I think I might drop some word that might aid some poor struggling one in the effort to gain eternal life; so I will venture, and if you see best you can give it space in your valuable HERALD.

One of my greatest desires has been to so bring myself in harmony with God's law that I may gain eternal life in his kingdom; and I have had some very hard struggles at times to overcome, and I have not made the advancement I have desired; but I am not in the least discouraged in the battle, but am still determined to press onward in the struggle to victory. God has been very loving and kind to me; as said to me in my patriarchal blessing, he has given me many blessings and evidences of his work; and I have watched the progress of his great work, and often, while under the influence of his Spirit, I have seen his work steadily advancing victoriously; also at times, while under the Spirit, I have seen that which has made me sick at heart. One thing, has been the downfall of some who could have been of great use to the church. On the other hand I have seen others that were humble and faithful advance and occupy in the leading quorums of the church, some in the Quorum of Twelve; and I have watched and seen them called to the positions of high standing. Within the year just past, while at Woodbine at a conference, I saw one brother advance and occupy in the Quorum of Twelve. So I feel encouraged to press onward in this great work until I gain the victory. The branch here at Little Sioux is still struggling. The branch at Mondamin is on the advance. I will close, asking an interest in your prayers, to the end that I may come out victorious.

Your brother in bonds,

CRABTREE, Ohio, March 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: The writer preached at this place on Saturday night, the 6th, and last night, with good interest, and enjoyed good liberty, for which we are thankful, and desire to continue to labor for the upbuilding of the church or kingdom of Christ in the world. We have a branch organized at the above-named place. It was one month old last Saturday, the 6th of this month. There were fifty-two members enrolled on the church record. Officers ordained, one priest, one teacher, and a deacon; and after the organization, one more teacher. Elders present, G. T. Griffiths, S. J. Jeffers, E. E. Long, and Bro. Becker. The name of the branch is Pleasant Valley.

We have a fine Sunday-school at this place; good attendance, good interest, and a good work being done. As I have been here since Saturday, and want to go home this morning,

I will close for this time. With best wishes to all Saints, I remain your brother in the one faith, desiring to be faithful until the end; as it is only those who endure unto the end who will be saved in the celestial kingdom.

WAMSLEY, Ohio.

STAPLES, Minnesota, February 24, 1909.

Dear Saints: I have felt a desire many times to write a few lines to my brothers and sisters, as my wife and three daughters are members of the Latter Day Saint Church, and have been for three years; and I think I shall belong to the Saints when Bro. Whiteaker comes back to Staples. He has been here for two weeks preaching to the people just what they ought to hear. He held meetings in the Baptist church, and had good attendance, and they speak well of the sermons they heard. This is a town that has never heard the truth of the gospel preached before. There are a number of churches here. My father and my brothers belong to the church, and I am glad there is a chance left for me yet. Should any of the elders come to Staples, I would be glad to have them stop with us, as they are always welcome guests, and I will do all I can for them. Although the people here are against the Latter Day Saints, yet while Bro. Whiteaker was here some of them got quite interested, and were reading their Bibles a good deal. Numbers have told me that they never heard the Scriptures preached before; so I think it will help them to search the Scriptures more. I ask you to pray for me.

W. C. BUTRICK.

YELLVILLE, Arkansas, March 2, 1909.

Dear Herald: Here are a few lines from this "rollicking, frolicking, rockaby land." I came into these parts the fore part of February, and found Bro. E. Randall living in Yellville. Bro. Randall was baptized years ago in the waters of the Great River, and he takes a special delight in recounting those "high times" in days of yore. One is made to "smile at Satan's rage" in this country. And I may say that a man is forced to "face a frowning world," too. And, as to reading your "title clear to mansions in the sky," that seems a small thing for some of the natives here. They can sing, "Jesus paid it all" with a full understanding that he did "pay it all." Hence the gospel leaves them just where it found them.

Bro. Randall and I made our way to Pyatt, Arkansas, and there gave out meetings. Fine crowds came out. But the Christian Disciple Campbellite Saints became agitated and wrote out challenges for debate, and presented them to us. In their proposition they were to affirm "that the New Testament was the word of God." I asked him (the preacher) if he wanted me to deny that proposition. "Yes, sir," was his brisk reply. I gave him to understand that his Campbellite trap had not been set carefully enough, and that his bait was of that sort that a man who had a taste for fairness would not even smell of it. Well, now they must do something quick; so they send runners after two or three "big" preachers, and the next night at my meeting I am introduced to a "Reverend Jim Rose." Well, Jim is a great big fat fellow, which adds much to his appearance as a preacher.

Bro. Randall got up at the close of my sermon and asked "Bro. Jim" if he "wished to say anything." "Well, yes, I will say a few words." And so he did; just leveled his big gun right on me and "pulled the trigger." Well, to be sure, the "bum" shell "busted." But it was like Mike's owl: "All fur and feathers."

He took the position that the laying on of hands was for the healing of sin-sickness. Now, ye elders, take note, and do not forget that this "Reverend Jim Rose" Christian preacher, has at this late day solved the problem of the laying on of hands. You see this position, together with water baptism for the remission of sins, gives them a "double-header" on the subject of remission of sins. Well, he was like the little boy sawing wood with the cross-cut saw—he "moun'te near got his feet tangled up in it."

Sunday, eleven o'clock, Jim was at my meeting again. "The office-work of the Holy Ghost," was our subject, and Bro. Rose took the "jim-jams." But Bro. Randall is such a good old soul, and he and Jim had been acquainted for a long time; so he again asked Bro. Rose if he had anything to say.

"Well, yes, I will say a few words."

"Now," said he, "you all know me; and you know that I am a common sort of a fellow; and you have been hearing this man preach; and I don't know—he looks like he eats plenty and all that—but he has preached something that he could not prove if his salvation hinged upon it. Now that is all I have to say."

Well, he did say that his brethren had sent after him to come and debate with Davis, etc.; but at the close of the meeting it so happened that I recognized "Jim," and I said to him, "Jim, give me your hand. Why, I have heard you preach when I was a boy, at Old Uncle Bill Dupew's, on Bear Creek, in Boone County, Arkansas."

"What, are you a son of John Davis?"

"Yes, sir, I am; and a half brother to Reverend G. G. Davis of the Hard Shell Baptist Church."

At this juncture, Jim told the people that they did not need a debater. Then he asked me to come to his place, and he would take me on the train to see "Bro. George Davis." He said that George Davis was a personal friend of his, and that he would enjoy going on a visit with me to see him. Well, the Christian Disciple Campbellite Saints seemed to be put out at this, so they sent to Springfield, Missouri, and to other points for some one to come and throw mud at the "Mormons." But, up to date, no reinforcements have arrived.

Closing my meeting at Pyatt, I go to Omaha, and there find a number of my schoolmates of "twenty years ago." But few of the boys can remember me, only as I give them my name. While in the little village of Cricket, I saw a man drive in with a load of railroad ties, in whom I recognized a schoolmate of twenty years ago, which brought to my mind the song:

"I wandered to the village, Tom,
I sat beneath the tree."

The chorus is significant: "Just twenty years ago since you and I together met, dear Tom," etc. This man's name was Tom Wilson, hence the significance of the song. I was unable to find a place in which to preach in Omaha, and could only visit with Mr. and Sr. Brosius. Coming back to Pyatt, I am again in the front of battle with the Campbellites. Fine interest; and that is what hurts the "tin horns."

Hope to be able to report some baptisms ere long. Have some more new openings to work as soon as I can leave this place. I am now having to beg the Campbellites to take care of their preacher, if they do not want to have to pay a fine for him for disturbing my meetings. Still facing the enemy with the "sword of truth,"

Your brother in gospel bonds,

J. T. DAVIS.

LLANSAMLET, Wales, March 6, 1909.

Editors Herald: Bro. Rushton has visited us this week and stayed one night, returning to Cardiff on Thursday the 4th. Western Wales District conference convened with Aberaman Branch on the 27th and 28th of February, where a good time was enjoyed by all present, and a better understanding seemed to prevail in regard to some departments of the work. Bro. Silas Evans was recommended as Bishop's agent for Western Wales, and a vote of thanks tendered the writer for past seven years' services.

By advice from Llanelly this morning, I learn that Sr. Eleanor Treharne is rapidly sinking, and I fear ere this reaches you her spirit will have united with the spirits of those who have kept the faith of Jesus to the end. I hope this finds Bro. Joseph well, and that the richest blessings of heaven will be his to enjoy in his declining years. In conclusion, I may say I am satisfied God is rapidly hastening his purposes in the earth, as the day of his power is at hand, and verily it is written by a divine pen, My purposes shall stand and not be annulled, and I will do all my pleasure.

Yours in the one hope,
HENRY ELLIS.

SHERIDAN, Nevada, February 18, 1909.

Saints' Herald: Maybe some of the missionaries that came to Nevada in the early days would be pleased to hear some news about those that gave them shelter and welcomed them and comforted them in their labor in the vineyard of the Lord.

We came here in 1853, and have lived here ever since. Crossed the plains that year from St. Louis, was married in 1857, and in 1868 Bro. W. W. Blair came to Nevada on his first mission, and on the eighteenth day of September wife and daughter and self were baptized into the Reorganized Church, and according to the record we were the first Josephites, as we were called then. The first settlers in Nevada were Brighamite Mormons, but when the Josephite missionaries came there was a division made. Several Brighamites had united with the Josephites previous to our baptism, but still they were called Brighamites, and as we were members in the church we were considered as being deluded and were pitied, and the minister came and tried to show us our mistake, and we would stay up till midnight to discuss the principles of the gospel according to the pattern in the New Testament, and had the Bible on the table close by, but they would never take it and read it to contradict our argument; for then we were well posted in the Bible and they knew it. I challenged them, but they left us without making any answer either pro or con. They proved themselves to be without the truth, and could not bring anything to overthrow the truth of the latter-day work but some old yarns that they heard by others.

We have stood our ground for forty years, and have carried our cross and been blessed in a wonderful way many times in sickness and in health. In all of our trials and afflictions the Lord has supported and stood by us in dreams and visions. When any of our children were sick, and we were sometimes fearful of the consequence, the Lord came by visions and comforted us, and knowledge was given. We had eleven children, seven are living, four are gone to the paradise of God, and are waiting there. Their dear mother, my dear companion for fifty years, met them on the 15th of last month. She died in the faith. A choir of angels sang songs above the house the night before her death—the hymn 711 in the Saints' Harp. The choir were singing outside about four in the morning. They woke me up. It was a grand testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ. They were singing,

"Home, home, sweet, sweet home;

Conduct me, dear Savior, to glory my home."

Her mother died when she was five years old, in St. Louis, Missouri. Her foster parents came to Nevada, and she and another sister and one brother with them. Her name was Frances Evangeline Williams. Previous to her death she told the dream she had a few days before the baptism by Bro.

W. W. Blair. As we lived by the river, she with others, was fishing, and she saw three fishes, two large and one small one. The interpretation came in a few days. Bro. W. W. Blair came and Bro. E. C. Brand was preaching in our neighborhood, and came to our house, and we soon made ready for baptism. How plainly was the dream fulfilled. This covenant by baptism was shown to her before death and that it was on record in heaven, the Spirit bearing witness. This is a consoling witness and a great comfort to us, knowing that all is well with our dear companion. Though we know we have not been as faithful as we might have been, we are glad that we may have a mansion as prepared in his Father's house.

To our associates in and out of the church, we plead in Jesus' name to consider what is necessary for preparing to meet God that we may hear his approval of our good work.

D. R. JONES.

EAST DENNIS, Mass., Cape Cod, March 16, 1909.

Dear Saints: Some of my brethren and sisters may be glad to hear of old Cape Cod. There are a few of the elders that have visited Dennisport and East Dennis. There is but one sister living on the north side of the Cape, and she lives some four miles at Dennis Taby Farm. Our nearest branch is Dennisport, eight miles away. We can not meet with them as often as we desire. Our husbands are not in the church, and we have no one Sunday morning to help us. Often my sister walks four miles to meet me at a waymark in the woods known as Run Station.

My dear brothers and sisters, we are striving to live faithfully, knowing the angel message is true. As I read the letters in the HERALD, I find so many that are longing for the company of the Saints, just as we are. As I read the letters of my sisters in the HERALD of March 10, I ask which was the best. I could not make a choice. I felt filled with the Spirit, one after the other, as each one bore testimony that this latter-day work was grand, that it was true, and I felt so comforted. If we can only be faithful, we shall be satisfied, when we awake in his likeness.

Bro. H. J. Davison has been holding meetings at Dennisport. By consent of our household we drove over and had him stop a few days with us. We so enjoyed his company, and feel encouraged to still plod our way along, to keep the faith, and win the prize of eternal life, and to meet our loved ones who have gone on before us.

Your sister in the gospel,

ABBIE W. CHASE.

MACEDONIA, Iowa, March 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: We feel that at our late conference, held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, peace and harmony prevailed throughout all the sessions; and the spirit of meekness was in a marked degree with us; and where the Spirit is there is peace. We feel free to say that the work is onward in this field of labor, and we feel thankful for the friendly spirit of the Saints throughout the district, and hope that it may continue to grow till we all come to the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. When we consider the truth as it is found in Christ, how grand it is, and what meekness was manifest in his works and actions, while he was with his disciples! And what grand lessons were taught by his every word and act; and what peace and nobility of character it brings to all those who follow in his steps, and walk as he walked. And when he said, Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest, what a lesson for us; and again, when he said, Come and learn of me, I am meek and lowly. How careful we ought to be when we think of the suffering he endured for us, and what a sacrifice he has made for us in coming to this sin-cursed world, enduring the cross and despising the shame that was heaped upon him and his disciples. So we may look for some of the same treatment, for the servant is not greater than his Lord; for if they said all manner of evil of him, they will say the same of you, will they not?

We are looking forward to the coming General Conference. I hope for that peace that characterizes the nature of Christ to be there in all of the sessions that may convene; and then the Lord will be pleased with his people, and pour out his choicest blessings upon them. So now, my brothers and sisters, let us pray for the Spirit of Christ to meet with us, and that the Lord's will may be done. Let us carry the Spirit with us to the conference, and then it will be there when we get there, to cheer and comfort us; and that we may have it to guide us in all of our deliberations; and that what we may do will be done right; and then the Lord will smile on our work, and the blessings that we may need in the future will be ours to enjoy; and then we will prove a blessing to ourselves and to others; and thus we will be fulfilling the Lord's command, Bear ye one another's burdens, be workers with me in this great work of the latter days that I have intrusted to your care, and have placed in your hands, for the last time on earth, that all the designs sent forth, before the foundations of the earth were laid, for the salvation of my people, may be accomplished. Therefore, let us work while it is called day; for the night cometh when no man can work.

Your brother in Christ,

HOAG, Nebraska, March 7, 1909.

Dear Herald: There are only a few families of Saints here. Bro. N. C. Enge has just left after preaching two weeks. My father, mother, two sisters, one brother, and I belong to the church; my two little brothers are not old enough yet to be baptized. None of us have regretted the step we took.

I would like to live where there is a branch. I am only sixteen, but enjoy the sermons and church papers. I have been pretty sick, but I am better now. Any of the elders who happen to come this way are certainly welcome to stop and visit us. I hope all the Saints will pray for my dear mother, who has heart trouble.

Your sister,
JESSIE DIBBLE.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 1, 1909.

Dear Herald: Time speeds upon its wings so rapidly that it seems almost impossible that so much time has elapsed since I last penned a few lines to our beloved HERALD; and, as the present conference year is about to draw to a close, oh, how we regret that we have been enabled to do so little. My work this past year, as also the two previous ones, has been to some extent retarded by the repeated calls to come home, because of the continued nervous condition of my wife. And now I am under the necessity of leaving the mission field entirely, at least for some time to come, on that account. I had done what appeared to me best, in seeking counsel from those in authority, especially the First Presidency and Apostles H. C. Smith and W. H. Kelley, those in charge. While we much regret having to take this step, we feel we are justified under existing conditions; but we shall seek to labor as we can locally. Allow me here to express my appreciation to those who have so kindly written us, sympathizing with us. Be assured, however, that my heart and soul are in this glorious work, to do my part if I could at all with consistency. I wish to thank the dear Saints of the Pottawattamie and Fremont Districts for the loyalty and kindness to me. I could never ask to be treated with greater hospitality than that I have received at your hands. And to the Sunday-school workers of the Fremont District, permit me to say I shall ever cherish in memory the kind association with you, which I trust will live on until we meet on the other side, when sickness and death itself will be known no more. I shall do what I can for the good of the work until you appoint another in my stead; but that will necessarily have to be done by correspondence. It was my privilege to be in attendance at our late convention and conference held in Shenandoah, when a splendid time was enjoyed by all. With an abiding faith and an increasing hope in the glorious triumph of all things promised the people of God,

Your brother in gospel bonds,

SACRAMENTO, California, March 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: Inclosed please find a clipping from the Sacramento Star, March 15. I am well pleased with it, and think it would be well for the brethren in Washington to look this young man up.

I had the pleasure of attending our district conference which convened at San Francisco, February 27 and 28. Had the pleasure of meeting Missionary F. A. Smith, and others of the force. Quite an enjoyable time was had.

Am very desirous to aid more in the progress of this "marvelous work and a wonder." Brethren and Saints, let us reflect "the light," that souls be drawn into the "fold."

Your brother in Christ,
2518 Q Street. R. J. LAWN.

[The clipping referred to follows:]

"SEATTLE, Washington, March 13.—'We need the religion and the Bible of the white man. We need his help to elevate our race.'

"In these words the daily Quileute Independent, published by a native boy of the Quileute tribe, on the Quileute Indian reservation, makes its initial bow to the world.

The paper is set, printed and distributed, and every word of the news columns is written by native Indians. The editor is W. H. Hudson, a boy twenty years of age, who was educated in the Chemawa Indian School, Oregon.

"The boy editor says his sole object in publishing the paper is to elevate his race. And viewing the fast decimating ranks of his tribe on their lonely coast reservation, there is a world of pathos in the ambition of this lad.

"Hudson has no fear of any failure. 'Why should the paper fail?' he remarked. 'The Indians need a paper of their own. I only hope my efforts will go to ameliorate the condition of our people.'"

LOUISVILLE, Kentucky, March 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I have written you, so venture a few lines. We have had a great deal of rain and bad weather in old Kentucky for the last two months, so not much missionary work has been done; but I have been busy helping to build a church-house in which to worship. We built it in Highland Park for the Louisville Branch. I managed the building, so we got the house built at a very little expense. There remains only about one hundred and four dollars to be paid on the house, and one hundred and twenty on the lot. We have the house finished, and held our first meeting in it Sunday, February 28, at half past two. I continued every night the rest of the week. We had a nice attendance at our opening services. The New Albany Saints were over with us; and Bro. Zahnd assisted in the opening services. We truly hope to be able now to build up the work here, as we have our own house to preach in. We want to be able to have the Bishop come and dedicate it, by this time next year.

Lamoni. I expect to go in a few days up into Rockcastle County, by order of our beloved minister in charge, G. T. Griffiths, to look after the organizing of a branch up there. If we should organize, we would be glad to have a district organized here in Kentucky to begin with this spring.

In my labor in Ohio last fall I met some real jewel Saints. At Crabtree are some fine people; and in Highland County; also at Vales Mills and other places. I have a good home with Bro. Jasper Bowman, at Vales Mills. He is a faithful janitor, and nobody can beat him to the end of a certain bench on which he disposes himself to listen to the sermon. His dear wife is just as congenial as he can be. While with them last September he had plenty of watermelons, but they became very scarce before I left. You may know why. It was because Bro. G. T. Griffiths joined me in the struggle for the mastery; and, of course, I would rather submit than to contend.

May peace and harmony ever remain among us, and with us. I am, 1381 Seventh Street. Your colaborer for the right,
J. W. METCALF.

DES MOINES, Iowa, March 1, 1909.

Dear Herald: The conference of the district met with the Des Moines Saints on last Saturday and Sunday. The Sunday-school and Religio conventions were held on Friday.

The Sunday-school convention was of the usual interest, and the reports showed an increase in numerical strength over the district, notwithstanding the fact that several of the schools of the district are held in the country, and some of them make no effort to continue during the winter months. Sunday-school officers elected for the coming year are, superintendent, Elder Orman Salisbury, lately moved to Des Moines from the Gallands Grove District; assistant superintendent, Sr. Hattie Clark, of Des Moines; secretary, Sr. Pearle Shannon, now residing at Rockwell City; treasurer, Sr. Mae C. Huffaker, of Collins. Delegates to the General Convention were chosen, and the evening session was devoted to Sunday-school work, with short talks, and one paper.

The Religio convention was held on Friday afternoon, the business session being brief, the reports being received from several of the locals of the district. The district work in this society is not in as good condition as it should be,—reasons for it, perhaps. Delegates to the General Convention were chosen, and officers for the coming year elected as follows: President, Sr. Hattie Clark; vice-president, Elder Ray Chandler; secretary, Sr. Blanche Cushatt; treasurer, Sr. Mae Huffaker; home department superintendent, Sr. Susie Llommedieu.

The conference session convened on Saturday morning, with a very large attendance. Among the ministry present was Elder Columbus Scott, who at one time was well acquainted with the entire district, being here for several years as a missionary. It is eight years since he left the district, but all who knew him in previous years were especially glad to see him again. Elder H. O. Smith, of the Minnesota field, was on his way home for General Conference, stopped in the city to visit a son living here, and attended the conference. Bro. Smith was a stranger in the district, but all were glad to meet him and make his acquaintance. Elder James McKiernan, assistant minister in charge in the district, was present. We have all known Bro. McKiernan for many years, and he has more warm friends in the district now than he had at any previous time. The district missionaries, Elders Cook, Christy, and Mintun, were present.

The conference session passed with the transaction of the usual routine business, no special work being taken up, the conference adjourning to meet with the branch at Boone on June 5 and 6. Elder H. O. Smith was the speaker on Saturday evening. On Sunday morning Sunday-school, and there was a large attendance. At eleven o'clock Elder Columbus Scott was the speaker. At two o'clock in the afternoon the funeral discourse of Sr. Mary Emslie was delivered at the church by Elder E. O. Clark, the branch president, and the interment followed the service. Sr. Emslie had been a member of the church here since 1880, and with her husband, Bro. George Emslie, who died two years ago, were known to every member of the Des Moines Branch, and to many in the district.

The Religio session was held at six o'clock, and Elder James McKiernan was the speaker for the evening. Thus closed one of the interesting sessions of the conference, and the association of the Saints of the district at this time was pleasant and profitable in every way.

Dear Herald: For some time I have been impressed to write just a line to testify to the healing power of God, thinking that some afflicted Saint might be encouraged. This last summer I was in a very serious condition; my life was despaired of. So my people sent for Elder E. J. Goodenough. He came and administered, rebuked the disease, and I was healed instantly. I arose from my bed, dressed myself, and was sick no more. Two weeks later I attended the Plano reunion. My health is very poor at present, but that is one of the blessings that shall be stamped upon my memory for all time, and I can truly testify that had it not been for the healing power of God I would not have been permitted to live as long as I have. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may live worthy of God's choice blessings. Your sister,

DAISY BELL FAULKNER.

PEORIA, Illinois, March 5, 1909.

Dear Saints: Do you not think it would be much better if, when we have met together in any place, for the express purpose of worshipping God, we would keep that thought uppermost in our minds? Do you not believe that we could do this better, much better, by being quiet, silently engaged in prayer or meditation rather than in having a good social visit together. For what purpose did we come, to see and talk with our brothers and sisters, or to receive instruction from God by the operation of his Holy Spirit? Let us give the most important purpose precedent anyway, and if we came to worship, let us do that, first, at least.

Does it not seem that a quiet hush pervading the room is more in harmony with the divine mind that has said to us to let even the organ be silent in our prayer-meetings, than is such a buzz of conversation and laughter that the presiding elder must call again, and yet again, "Let us come to order."

I have been in a sacrament-meeting where it almost seemed necessary to use the gavel to obtain this order, and I can not feel the same degree of solemnity nor make the preparation needful for the partaking of the emblems under such conditions.

Whether others are equally disturbed or not, I can not say; but why do we not give more consideration to this subject of deportment in the house of God, or other places which may be used as such, temporarily?

Why are not our children and our young people so thoroughly taught at home and in the Sunday-school, that the true purpose of all church-going should be to praise and worship God, and to receive instruction and edification from communion with his Spirit directly or through the medium of others' testimony.

If this were done, and if we older Saints would set the example, I verily believe our meetings would be more spiritual, more strengthening to us. I believe, too, (I do not know,) that the elder who preaches after a short season spent either in a song-service or a prayer-service by the waiting congregation, is more likely to have what we term "good liberty." Will some others write on this subject, till we become able to do the will of God in the matter? MARY E. GILLIN.

Dear Editor: After the death of my wife, I was quite sick a few days, and in much mourning and sadness, and this vision was given me in the night: My wife appeared to me as she was in the prime of her life, pleasant and happy, and made known to me that all was right with her, that we should be happy again when we soon shall meet again.

The next night came, and this vision: Bro. W. W. Blair appeared to me as he was forty years ago, when he baptized us, and consoled me, that all would be well with us, that the covenant of baptism was confirmed in heaven. And, dear Saints, this is a great consolation to me.

D. R. JONES.

CAMERON, Ontario.

Dear Herald: Just got your welcome issue to-day and indeed it is a pleasure to read the various articles from far and near.

The work was started here twenty-four years ago, so I am told by my grandma, for I am but fifteen. Uncle John Lake was the first elder to preach here, at which time many were baptized and a branch organized which has been held together by some of the Saints who at first took good foothold and hung on and are hanging on still. The branch was, however, nearly dead when Elders A. E. Mortimer and James Pycoc came here three years ago last summer. Dear old Uncle Mort and Jimmy did a good work inside the branch, stirring the Saints and arousing some outside thinkers. They also organized a Religio, but that fell through on account of the little interest the most of the members took in making it a grand success.

But in 1908, Cameron got a good shaking up and some were made to read their Bibles with more care, when our capable Bro. J. T. Thompson came, and with his grand way in presenting the true word of God brought fourteen into the kingdom. These were nearly all under twenty-seven, just when their lives were blossoming out; but I am sorry to say some are very neglectful and have stayed away, coming only as often as once in this new year.

We have quite a nice choir formed, but on account of irregular attendance that, too, has been abolished. It makes me sad when I go into the church Sunday morning and see so many vacant seats and six brand new chairs on the platform deserted. I, myself, have missed two recent Sundays: I have been sick, so could not attend; but I seldom miss a Sunday unless it is for some such reason.

I was baptized on the 12th of July last. It was a lovely Sunday and my cousin, my brother, and I were immersed beneath the waves. We, or I, did not think many knew that such was to take place, but when we arrived on the spot the shore of the beautiful Lake Sturgeon was lined with black, white, blue, and numerous other colors and people, eagerly waiting to see such an inordinary event take place. We were baptized by Elder Thompson and confirmed by that gentleman, Uncle Felix Northey, and papa.

Before the summer ended eleven more were gathered in. In November Elder David Pycoc arrived and he delivered some excellent sermons and it was with sad hearts we bade farewell to our two brothers on December 13. And many a time will we think of the pleasant though busy summer we had in 1908. And now before I close I must relate a dream I had quite recently. It ran thus:

I was in a foreign land, walking along a dry, dusty road, when I came to a small hut with an oval roof. As I was about to pass it a boy, about my own age, come out and, taking me by the hand, said, "Come! We want you in here." I asked, "What for? I can do nothing there." But he still urged me to go, and following him in I saw another white boy and a white girl in there. They were talking to some dark-skinned people in a language I knew not. I looked about with this remark, "Did not Joseph and Emma Burton teach these people?" Whereupon the girl answered, "Yes. But we are to teach them, too, and you are to help us." At that I began to talk to them in the same language that the girl and the boys did, but I did not understand myself, and when they would answer me the girl would have to interpret.

Your sister in Jesus,
FLORENCE BRADEN.

Extracts from Letters.

Miss Effaye McLaughlin, R. F. D. 2, Box 77, Carpenter, Ohio: "We take the HERALD, and I enjoy reading the letters from the brothers and sisters very much, and I thought this would be of some interest to some who have moved away. I was baptized about five years ago this coming spring by Elder R. Etzenhouser, and confirmed by Elders S. J. Jeffers and Kelley. Our little branch, known as the Vales Mills Branch, has almost played out. There are church services only when some elder comes in, and occasionally a prayer-meeting. If any of the brethren or sisters wish to correspond with me, if they will write to the address given, I will be much pleased to hear from them; for I would like to have an acquaintance with all the Saints."

Mary Bankester, Bay Minette, Alabama: "This branch is not in very good working order at present. We desire the prayers of all the Saints that we may soon arouse to a sense of our duty, and all may pay their tithing and give of their surplus also. The Saints have not been as prompt to pay their tithes as they ought, and a good many have become confused after reading the controversies concerning tithes and offerings, and I hope the brethren will be careful in printing anything in our church papers that will cause any confusion, but that everything in them may be to encourage and strengthen and help them to do their whole duty toward God and man. I hope to live to see the gathering to Zion fulfilled, and to be one among those that are pure in heart."

Evan B. Morgan, Hiteman, Iowa: "I have labored to the best of my ability, and have been blessed with greater liberty in dispensing the word this conference year than ever before. I attended the last three stake conferences at Hiteman, Pleasanton, and Lamoni respectively. At the last place I surely felt encouraged at seeing the little army of promising young men and women engaged in the Religio and Sunday-school work. I also attended the Sunday-school at Lamoni, on February 7, and if my memory serves me right, there was but one teacher absent, and no absentees among the officers. I went to Centerville on February 20, and preached eight discourses. February 27 Brn. Garver and Holloway came in from Lamoni. On my way hitherward I called at Albia, Iowa. There are several of our people residing there, but no branch organization. I went down to Hynes, eight miles east of Albia, to see some that are investigating our work, and of whom we have hope that they will yet obey the gospel. Came to this place the 5th inst. Preached twice on Sunday and have been holding meetings every night since. Bro. J. F. Garver came on the 10th, and we have been preaching alternately ever since. So poor John had to defer the pleasure of seeing his dear little baby, the object and subject of his daily and nightly meditations and well-spring of his happiness. Yesterday morning, about nine o'clock, three were baptized, Bro. Garver officiating. There are others believing and we hope will obey soon. There is a good branch here of one hundred and sixty-five members, Brn. W. E. Williams president, William Wilson priest, E. J. Giles teacher, and D. J. Williams deacon. Bro. John L. Morgan is in charge of the singing and music. He has an orchestra and they furnish music for the church services. Bro. John has had opportunities to make money if he would only divert his talents to worldly amusements. Bro. Garver and the writer are domiciled at the hospitable home of Bro. and Sr. Dave Miller."

Amy Arvada Kennicutt, Elsie, Nebraska: "I am sixteen years old and belong to the church. I was baptized March 7, 1909, by Bro. C. W. Prettyman, and confirmed by Elders C. W. Prettyman and J. E. Kelley. My father, mother, and one sister belong to the church. I have two brothers and two sisters younger than I. Bro. Prettyman and Bro. Kelley were here last week and preached several grand sermons. Several people are getting really interested, and, I think, need only a few more good sermons to get them to take the right step. We live three miles from Elsie. It seems good to be among the Saints. There are a few families of Saints here and we hope to organize a branch soon. We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Hope, and could not get along without them. We enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD and always look for familiar names. If any of the elders come this way, they are always welcome in our home. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be found faithful to the end."

Delmont Torrey, North Deer Isle, Maine: "The time swiftly passes away—we know not where—and yet so precious to us all. If we could only comprehend the vast meaning of the whole creation! There is only one way given to us whereby we may be able to understand these things that are taking place daily among us. If we had no hopes we, of all men, would be most miserable. May all the people of God hold fast to that which is able to deliver them in times of trouble."

D. E. Tucker, Puryear, Tennessee: "I would like very much to attend General Conference this spring, but financial circumstances forbid. There are one or two things I would like to see adopted, or at least set on foot: I would like to see all our missionaries, together with all our local force, members and all, use the Inspired Translation of the Scriptures. Why? Because it is the best translation in the world—the most truthful, accurate, and correct of any. Is not that a good reason? What better could any one ask? How do I know this? I know it by revelation. When I accepted the gospel I was a member of the oldest secret order in the world; I had been praying to know whether I should retain my membership in that order, and if the Lord really had anything to do with it. One night about midnight, whether asleep or awake I can not tell, (but one thing I do know—there was no artificial light in the room,) I saw the Inspired Translation open just above my face, near enough and in the right position to read, and a halo of light surrounding it so I could see to read as plainly as I could in bright daylight. I heard a voice say, 'By this book all people shall be judged.' I read several verses but did not remember what I read, but it was impressed upon my mind very distinctly that it was the fifth chapter of Genesis. Up to this time I had not seen a copy of the Inspired Translation. Next morning I wrote Bro. I. N. White to bring a copy to Taberville, Missouri, and I would meet him there to receive it. Taberville was fifteen miles from where I lived. I walked there and back and gladly received the book, but did not open it till I returned home. I opened the book and read the fifth chapter of Genesis and received satisfactory answer to my prayer. From that day to this I have advised Saints to live close to the gospel and join no secret society. The church of the true and living God is sufficient. I held one public discussion with a linguist, who was educated in nine different languages. I bound him to the King James' translation as the standard of evidence, but would not do so again. Let them take their choice of translations, and I would do the same, but that the Holy Scriptures should be the standard of evidence, and if they would not agree to the word Holy I would leave that off and say Scriptures. In presenting this translation we can reason with the people. Let them compare it with others and then pass judgment for themselves."

Caroline Sandidge, Royholm Post-office, Canada: "As I am sending in my offering, though a little late for Christmas, I am thinking it will help the Sanitarium. Every HERALD I get, I look to see if our hospital is open, and as I have seen nothing about it of late, I have come to the conclusion that it is because of a lack of money to open its doors to the Lord's afflicted children; and for this reason I contribute my mite. Dear brothers and sisters, one and all, if we only knew how necessary it was to have our sanitarium open to care for the Lord's afflicted children, we would not withhold our means. I never realized the necessity for a place for our people to be cared for, until the accident happened to one of my sons. Then I was made to see the wisdom in having a place where our sick could be properly cared for. So come, brothers and sisters, and do not be afraid to send in your offering to help the work along, so we can have a place for our sick to be cared for by those of like precious faith. I know the Lord will bless us; and when our sanitarium is ready for occupancy, then we can look to see the children's home to be built. Every one is pleased with the Graceland Receipt Book. Sr. Toovey sold about fifteen. She sold to many of her neighbors not Latter Day Saints. Just let some live sister in the different branches send for some of Graceland Receipt Books and try to sell them, and they will be surprised to see how fast they go. There are many ways in which we can help the Lord's work along. I would like to know what it will cost to furnish one of the rooms of our sanitarium. If I can not raise all, I can some, if needed."

C. L. Snow, Murray, Kentucky: "I have just finished reading Bro. Lambert's article, 'Tithing is a tenth, and section 106 should stand.' For one I have been interested in the discussion going on in the HERALD over consecration and tithing. While it is plain, as one brother puts it, that all have not had the Spirit of truth to guide them into truth, to my mind Bro. Lambert in the above article has completely demolished every objection that has been brought against section 106. It seems to me the light is turned on at last, and all should see the light. For one, I am glad the discussion has been permitted to go on in the HERALD by our worthy Editor, notwithstanding the 'Jots' man entered his protest from the firing line. I think his gun snapped, and did not shoot that time; and I am glad of it, for if the Editor had cut off the discussion at the time this supposed shot was fired, I would have been left on the fence as to section 106. But now the smoke and dust have cleared away, and section 106 is to me all right in its place; and now I am convinced that discussion in the church papers is productive of good, when it is carried on in the right spirit, as the above discussion has been by the brethren. If the 'Jots' man had been successful with his protest, and got the Editor to cut off the discussion, probably many would have been left on the fence like myself in regard to section 106. I am willing to confess I was just a little bit tangled up on section 106; but now it is different with me, so now I will enter my appeal for all the brethren to let the Editors run their part of the great latter-day work without being snapped at from the firing lines with protests. Let us pray for them that they may have the Spirit of the Master to help them in their labors, and ask in return their prayers that we may have the same, that we may be successful in our work. I remember a few years ago there were some forty or fifty of the Saints where I was laboring talking of sending to the Ensign their protest against the publishing of the 'Jots by the Wayside,' and talked of having their paper stopped if their protest was not heeded. I was one of the number that thought the above protest should be heeded. But after some reflection we decided not to send in our protest for fear that there might be a few of the Saints that might like to read the 'Jots.' And so now I am glad we reconsidered our protest, and did not trouble the Ensign editor with it. For we have all learned now that what would suit one might not suit another, and the work is still moving along notwithstanding the 'Jots' appear once in a while. I see our Tennessee debater is now teaching doctrine he once opposed. Good for the Tennessee debater. There has been quite a lot said in the church papers about that debate. Let me give some of my views, as I see them. I was at that debate four days; and I would suggest to the brethren, hereafter, when they hold debates, let some one else write the debate up for publication. The debate to my mind was a peculiar one. There was an exciting spirit present most all the time. Our brethren, representing our claims, reminded me of a boy that was armed with a Gatlin gun hunting for bear, and nothing but lambs in sight. Mr. Barron, the Advent, was a nice, clean, honest man. It seemed he only wanted the truth to prevail. He was very mild in his manner of debating. He never once threw mud. He is to be complimented for the Christian spirit he manifested during the four days I was present. I saw nothing about the man to make me think he was a serpent, or monster, either. Our people have been, as a rule, meeting men of a low type, mud-slingers you might call them; and so our elders as a rule prepare to meet such; and when they do meet a nice man, one that is honorable and honest in his manners, they are loaded for bear, and like the young lawyer, 'it is in their speech, Judge,' and so they are compelled to proceed with their speech, regardless of what their opponent presents. One thing at that debate I certainly disliked, and that was, one of our elders would talk out during Mr. Barron's speech. He disturbed the crowd, and in spite of all I and the other two moderators could do he continued to talk out in a loud voice, even calling Mr. Barron down, telling him his time was up, when he had spoken but ten minutes. This was done several times, but even this should be overlooked, when we consider some men would rather be made fun of than not noticed. All I regret about it is, that we did not call in the officers of the law to assist us as moderators to keep order; and this I will surely do if I ever have to contend with such any more. Let this be a warning to such as want to misbehave at another debate where C. L. is moderator. I am a firm believer in the doctrine of fair play. 'Whatever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them.' When shall we, as Saints, adopt the advice given by the Master?"

Lulu VanCleave, Venus, Texas: "Not long since I was permitted to behold the glorious sight of the Lord's coming, and it is so encouraging to me to think that my feeble prayers are answered. In my childhood I was taught to worship God, and to accept all truths; consequently at the age of thirteen I was ready to accept the gospel. I had been a member of the Baptist Church before, but did not feel satisfied with my statement that Christ had forgiven my sins. Though I was young I knew what I was doing when I united with the Church of Christ, and have ever since thanked the Lord for the privilege granted me. A short time after I became a Saint I was taken with a dreadful burning in my eyes. I could not bear a ray of light to my eyes in five minutes after it began. Bro. Renfroe administered to me and I escaped the blind woman's fate. Now my sight is as good as anybody's. I have witnessed wonderful things among God's people—healing, prophecy, gift of tongues."

E. W. Nunley, Cookes Point, Texas: "About a year ago, one Mr. Wake, of New Mexico, a Strangite, came all the way from his home to Texas to baptize and ordain Mr. Samuel Sherrill, who once belonged to the Reorganized Church but was expelled for cause, and a Mr. T. L. Veale, a disaffected elder of the Reorganized Church. Mr. Wake called on us at our home and branch in order to try to convince us that they were the true church, but it soon appeared that he was a very weak man, representing a very clumsy fraud, and he soon left us saying he intended to read up so that he could do something else besides listen to his opponents. He has not returned yet; but Mr. Samuel Sherrill, referred to, thought he was posted well enough to give us a tilt and establish the claims of J. J. Strang, so he notified me to be ready for he was coming, and to be ready to fight. He came and we arranged to hold a debate for an indefinite length of time. He affirmed that Strang was the legal successor of Joseph Smith, the Seer, as prophet, seer, translator, restorer, and president of the church. So the letter of appointment, as it is called, was introduced as the main proof, and following it the so-called ordination by the angel (or, in other words, the ordination of Strang by the angel). We soon exploded these claims by showing first that if said letter was a genuine letter from Joseph, it was only at best a reply to Strang as to the organization of a stake of the church in Wisconsin, and not even an appointment as president of the stake, much less president of the church. We exploded the claim of ordination by the angel by showing that it was Strang's unsupported statement as to what the angel said to him when he said that the angel ordained him. I called attention to the fact that said angel failed to tell Strang what he was ordaining him to, or that Joseph Smith was at that very time dying in Illinois. Then I called attention to the fact that Strang had to wait from the 27th of June until the 9th of July before he learned that he was appointed successor to Joseph, just twelve days after he claims he had been ordained by the angel as his (Joseph's) successor. I asked Mr. Sherrill to tell me how Strang ever learned that he was appointed Joseph's successor, as the angel did not tell him, nor is it referred to in the letter of appointment, as it is called. Sherrill was as silent on that as the grave."

Mrs. A. V. Davis, Woodburn, Indiana: "I did not speak in my other letter about Bro. Moler being here and holding services in the Methodist Episcopal hall because we did not know at that time why he did not get a crowd. I did not think we ever would know, but I believe I do know now for sure. The other evening I attended the Methodist Episcopal protracted effort. The preacher's talk was on heathenism, and at the close he said: 'They are the Utah Mormons. They get all the wives they can, and the wives get to quarreling, and they grind each other's feet and hands as flat as a ten-cent piece, and are left cripples for life.' And he looked right at me. It did not hit very hard, for I knew he did not know what he was talking about, but perhaps there were a good many that believed what he said. Then he gave out a song, and invited all the believers in Christ to come up in front. I, with a few others, did not. He raised his hands towards heaven and yelled at the top of his voice, 'All you that stand back, deny Christ.' What effect it had on the congregation I know not; for I have been sick and have not been there since. So we are sure the minds of the people were persuaded against coming; but I do believe if some good talker would come this summer and preach on the streets, he would be heard. I would like the people here to know different than that we belong to the Utah Mormons. I ask an interest in your prayers, for we surely need them."

Request for Prayer.

I ask through your pages for the prayers of the church that if it be God's will I may be relieved of pain. I have been suffering intense pain in my whole right side since the end of October last. It has never entirely stopped in all that time. It is very hard to endure. My patriarchal blessing says, "The Lord shall be with thee and give thee strength in the hour of trial, and relieve thee from pain, and thy body shall be blessed." My hope is in God. I am writing this walking the floor with pain.

SR. M. M. BROOKS NANTAIS.

ST. THOMAS, Ontario, Box 67, March 19, 1909.

Mrs. E. A. Folck desires the prayers of the Saints for her son, James Flock, that the Lord may heal him of his sickness, also comfort him in his bereavement, and, if it is the Lord's will, that he may gain his health. He is not a member of the church, but he is a good man. She also asks prayers for his mother.

News From Branches

BRUSH CREEK BRANCH.

As some of the readers of the HERALD no doubt will be interested in the work at this place, I will write a few lines. We feel very much encouraged now in the work here. For a while it seemed that it was at a standstill; neither the Saints (some of them) nor outsiders seemed to take much interest. But now we are glad to say they have aroused to some extent to their duty.

Bro. Sparling came here in February and held meetings a week. Just as he left Brn. Plumb and Moore came and stayed from Friday night till Sunday night, then Bro. Plumb had to go home on account of sickness in his family. Bro. Lloyd Moore went to Hazel Dell, a schoolhouse, held meeting there a little over two weeks, and baptized fourteen; then he came back here to the church and held meetings seven nights and baptized seven, six young ladies and one married lady. There are many more here that are very near the kingdom. Bro. Moore is a humble young man, and has a great influence for good over the young people as well as the old. The Spirit was with him in great power in his discourses. He left here to go home. He wants to convert his mother, who is very dear to him, as she is yet out of the church. He is very desirous of being sent to this Southeastern Illinois District to labor this year.

Our prayer-meetings are well attended now, and we have a good Sunday-school. Our Religio has been stopped for nearly a year; but we will commence the Religio again, now, and take new courage. Your sister,
March 20, 1909. MRS. I. A. MORRIS.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Our sacramental-service, the first Sunday of the month, was a service that will long be remembered by those present. The meeting was set apart by request as a special fasting and prayer-service for Sr. Billinsky, and Sr. Mary Voltz and Sr. Swain's little granddaughter were remembered also. The blessed influence of the Spirit was felt throughout the service, which was wholly occupied in prayer. A calm and solemn quiet reigned, which was the result of the seriousness and sincerity of the prayers offered. A number of the young people occupied to their credit. Sr. Billinsky felt somewhat improved, though she is still very poorly, but we feel assured she is in the Father's hands. Sr. Mary Voltz is reported as doing remarkably well; and the little girl who is in charge of physicians, we trust will receive God's mercy in her affliction, which is curvature of the spine.

We received edification and instruction the past month through Brn. Tanner, Archibald, S. A. Burgess, William Sparling, of North Dakota, and R. Etzenhouser, who lectured March 17, 18, and 21. The instruction received was such as to cause us to rejoice in this great latter-day work, and desire to glorify so great and loving a Father.

Branch priesthood meeting was held the evening of March 1, and section 105 of the Doctrine and Covenants was considered.

Branch business-meeting was held March 2, and district conference convened in St. Louis, March 13 and 14. The district was well represented, a very large attendance being present. About seventy baptisms and three new buildings reported.

The district Sunday-school and Religio held a convention the evening of the 20th, and afternoon of the 21st.

Our pastor, Bro. J. A. Tanner, left March 23, for Lamoni, preparatory for General Conference, and the large majority of the St. Louis Branch and district sincerely trust it will be the will of our heavenly Father to permit him to be returned to labor with us again the coming year, as we believe his every effort and desire has been for the advancement of this great and glorious work.

Your sister in Christ,

DEPOSITS.

We solicit deposits from parties living in any part of the United States or Canada, and will pay interest on funds deposited for a period of six months or longer. This makes a very desirable way of depositing surplus funds, for the reason that the money is always available at the end of any six months period, and at the same time is earning a fair rate of interest. Write for booklet "Banking by Mail" giving full particulars.

INVESTMENTS.

We are also prepared to supply FIRST MORTGAGES in various amounts secured on IMPROVED FARM LANDS, we consider these the cream of all security, and will net the investor a fair rate of interest, time running as a rule from three to five years.

General Conference

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1909.

MORNING SESSION.

The Fifty-sixth General Conference of the church was called to order by President Joseph Smith at ten o'clock. Permanent organization was at once effected by the election of President Joseph Smith and his counselors, Frederick M. Smith and Richard C. Evans, as the presiding officers of the assembly.

The chair announced the credential committee, and officers as follows: Committee on credentials, W. E. Peak, J. W. Peterson, and A. Knisley. Secretaries, R. S. Salyards, F. A. Russell, Charles Fry, and R. S. Salyards, Jr. Stenographer, Leon A. Gould, to choose his assistants. Chorister, F. G. Pitt; F. A. Russell, Miss Wellemeyer, and D. A. Anderson, assistants. Press committee, E. A. Smith, to choose assistants. Care of building was left to local deacons, with suggestion that assistants be chosen from visiting deacons.

Hymn No. 35 was sung, Sr. Belle Robinson James at the organ, and prayer was offered by Patriarch Alexander H. Smith.

The chair then made a few remarks in regard to the work of the conference which will be found in another column.

Reports were read from the following: The Seventh Quorum of Elders, First and Seventh Quorums of Priests, First Quorum of Teachers, and the Sixth Quorum of Deacons.

The Church Secretary's report was read.

A petition from the Northern California District was referred to a committee consisting of F. A. Smith, A. Carmichael, and C. C. Joehnk. A petition from the Central California District on boundary lines was also referred to the same committee.

A petition from northwestern Nebraska Saints asking for organization of district was read and referred to William H. Kelley and H. C. Smith, ministers in charge.

Request from the Portland, Oregon, District in regard to boundary lines was read and referred to the same committee.

F. G. Pitt, chorister, announced Mrs. D. A. Anderson as organist, with power to choose assistants.

E. A. Smith announced as his assistant on press committee, W. W. Smith and T. W. Williams.

The seating arrangements were then made.

The presiding officers were given charge of time and nature of all meetings during the conference.

The doxology was sung and President Smith gave the benediction. Adjourned till two o'clock in the afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

At two o'clock business was resumed by singing hymn, "Redeemer of Israel," President Evans in charge. Prayer was offered by President Joseph Smith.

Minutes of morning session read and approved.

L. A. Gould, stenographer, announced Mrs. Belle James and H. H. Gold as his assistants.

President F. M. Smith took the chair.

An additional report from the credential committee was read and approved along with the original report.

A resolution coming from the Massachusetts District in regard to statistical reports was read and referred to a committee: E. H. Fisher, R. C. Russell, and T. J. Sheldon.

The Seven Presidents of Seventy reported and announced the resignation of Romanan Wight as one of their number.

Members of the Quorum of Twelve then reported in the following order: W. H. Kelley, H. C. Smith, I. N. White, J. W. Wight, U. W. Greene, G. T. Griffiths, F. A. Smith, F. M. Sheehy, Peter Anderson.

An invitation from the Independence, Missouri, Branch for the General Conference of 1910 was considered as a nomination, but there being no other place named, Independence became the unanimous choice as the place for the next annual meeting.

The report of the Seven Presidents of Seventy was then taken up and considered. Statements were made by Columbus Scott and Hyrum O. Smith, and the report was then adopted.

The chair announced the order for meetings as follows: At nine in the morning prayer-meeting; at ten forty-five, preaching; at two in the afternoon, business-meeting; and at seven forty-five, preaching.

Various announcements were made; the chair made appointments for meetings; song No. 160 was sung; and the closing prayer was by President Evans.

William H. Kelley was the evening speaker, assisted by J. B. Wildermuth.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7.

The morning prayer-meeting at nine o'clock was in charge of M. H. Cook and A. V. Closson. At eleven o'clock Arthur Leverton of Canada was the speaker, assisted by W. E. LaRue.

At the afternoon meeting business was resumed with President Evans in charge. Song No. 1 was used; prayer by Patriarch J. R. Lambert.

The minutes of previous session were read and approved.

President F. M. Smith taking the chair, a petition was read from the Oklahoma District in regard to boundary lines.

A protest from the Spring River District was read and the two petitions were referred to a committee of three: I. N. White, Ellis Short, T. W. Chatburn.

A recommendation from the Florida, Mobile, and Alabama districts in regard to changing boundary lines was read and adopted.

The committee to which was referred the petition from the Portland, Oregon, District made report and their recommendation to grant change in boundary line was approved.

A report was also read from the committee on petitions from the Northern and Central California districts. Report of the committee was approved.

A report was then read from the Second Quorum of Deacons.

A document was read from U. W. Greene, of the Twelve, in regard to the organization of districts in Canada to be known as the Saskatoon and Winnipeg districts. A motion was made to concur in the recommendation, but a substitute prevailed which referred the matter to the following committee: U. W. Greene, E. A. Blakeslee, R. C. Evans.

The committee on reversionification of the Book of Mormon then made report, which was adopted.

Motion was then made that a committee be appointed to compile a concordance of the new Book of Mormon. Moved that the chair be made chairman of that committee. A substitute was offered that this committee be appointed and consist of Frederick M. Smith, Heman C. Smith, and R. S. Salyards. A motion to refer to the Board of Publication was made and lost, and the substitute carried, leaving the work of preparing this concordance in the hands of the committee named.

A petition from the Shenandoah, Iowa, Branch was read, and referred to a committee as to the advisability of considering the same. This committee was T. W. Williams, E. A. Blakeslee, and R. Baldwin.

The committee to which had been referred the matter of loose leaf records for the Recorder's office, made report which was adopted.

A report was read from F. M. Smith, for the First Presidency, and Heman C. Smith, minister in charge, to whom had been referred the question in regard to Church Secretary, to the effect that the present duties of said office would require about five months of the year, leaving seven months during which the secretary could be engaged in other work. The report was adopted.

Joseph Luff, physician to the church, reported.

Upon motion certain changes were made in the Rules of Order and Debate. This change was proposed by the First Presidency and due notice was made in issue of HERALD for January 27, 1909, and makes provision for changes in Book of Rules, which did not before exist.

Reports were then read from the First Presidency and the Board of Publication.

The ordination of J. W. Smith to office of seventy was taken up and after statements by Hyrum O. Smith, Heman C. Smith, and the brother, the ordination was ordered by the body. The ordination was referred to the Quorum of Twelve.

The Bishop's report was then read, including names of Bishop's agents, but the time having arrived for dismissal, the summary of his accounts was left until to-morrow's session.

President Evans resumed the chair. Announcements were made; Hymn No. 31 was sung; benediction by William H. Kelley.

U. W. Greene was the speaker for the evening hour, assisted by G. C. Tomlinson.

THURSDAY, APRIL 8.

The regular prayer-service in the morning was in charge of D. A. Hutchings and J. C. Crabb, and the eleven o'clock preaching was by Paul M. Hanson, assisted by John Shields.

President Joseph Smith called the assembly to order at two in the afternoon. Song No. 179 was used in opening, and prayer was offered by J. W. Wight.

Minutes of yesterday's meeting read and approved.

The secretary asked for a list of elders attending who are not enrolled in quorums. Wm. H. Kelley announced that the Twelve had attended to the ordination of J. W. Smith to office of seventy.

President F. M. Smith took the chair.

U. W. Greene by unanimous consent was allowed to make addition to his report in regard to labors of S. F. Cushman.

The special order of the day was taken up. This was the resolution offered by the Quorum of High Priests at last General Conference which had been deferred from April 14, 1908. In substance it was as follows: That a former resolution, No. 279, adopted by General Conference of 1884, be modified by rescinding a clause therein which provides that members of the Twelve may have discretionary power in regard to presiding at district conferences or branch meetings.

By previous ruling speeches were to be limited to ten minutes, but none taking the floor the question came at once to a vote and the resolution was lost.

The summary of the Bishop's report was then read, and was followed by the report from the Board of Auditors.

Bishop Kelley then rose to a question of privilege and made an answer to certain features of the auditors' report. A motion was made to take up the recommendations in the report from the auditors and act on each separately. Moved to make this matter a special order for next Saturday afternoon and that the auditors' report and Bishop Kelley's report be printed in convenient form for distribution among ex officios and the delegates of the conference.

A. Carmichael, as one of the auditors, rose to a question of privilege, making explanation of their report.

The question coming to a vote it was made the special order for April 10, and the printing ordered.

The Church Recorder made report, a summary of which will be found in another column.

The Daughters of Zion reported.

Heman C. Smith, as executor of the estate of Martha Woods, presented a document in regard to the propriety of the church relinquishing a part interest in said estate because of the expressed and known intention of the decedent to include in her will certain poor relatives in Scotland, but which change was not made because of negligence. Vote resulted in authorizing the executor to pay these heirs the sum of four hundred dollars.

Announcements were made for meetings; song No. 51 sung; benediction by U. W. Greene.

The evening was in charge of the Daughters of Zion, a mixed program being given, the musical numbers being under the direction of Miss Welle-meyer, instructor in Graceland College. Miss Gaines, of the college faculty, gave a reading.

FRIDAY, APRIL 9.

At nine o'clock prayer-meeting was in charge of Louis A. Fowler and J. A. Kaler. At the same hour a mass meeting of the Melchisedec priesthood was held in the basement of the church to be addressed by the Bishopric.

Eleven o'clock preaching was by S. F. Cushman, assisted by Edward Rannie.

President Joseph Smith called the assembly to order at two o'clock. Song No. 185 was sung, and prayer was offered by Patriarch C. E. Butterworth.

The minutes of previous session read, and after some minor corrections, were approved.

President F. M. Smith took the chair by request.

Reports were read from the Fifth Quorum of Elders and First Quorum of Seventy. Actions of the latter quorum in regard to William Mackie, William M. Rumell, and Gomer Reese, were approved.

The Fourth Quorum of Priests reported; also the Eighth and First Quorums of Elders.

Committee on organization of stakes reported and asked for more time. Request was granted. Committee on church history revision reported. More time was granted.

Report from the Committee on Memorial to the Martyrs was read. Further time was allowed.

The committee on the Massachusetts District resolution reported and recommended that the word county be placed on all report blanks. A motion was made to that effect, but a substitute to place the county on all blanks and records, after some discussion, prevailed.

C. I. Carpenter, Church Recorder, rose to a question of privilege and presented phases of his work. A motion followed to instruct the Bishop to purchase an atlas for the Recorder's office and the matter was referred to the Recorder and the Bishopric.

The committee on compilation of General Conference resolutions reported, also the committee to which had been referred the petition from the Oklahoma District. The latter not being clear to the delegates, the matter was resubmitted to the committee.

The committee on the organization of districts in Canada reported, recommending the organization of two districts to be known as the Saskatchewan and Winnipeg districts. The recommendation was concurred in by motion, which prevailed.

The committee to confer with the Hedrickites reported that they had done nothing during the year.

The Library Commission and treasurer reported. A motion to appropriate one hundred dollars for their use during the year was carried.

A resolution that reports from general officers, credential committee, and standing committees be printed and issued as a supplement to the HERALD prior to the convening of conference was discussed and laid on the table. A motion to adopt the suggestion of the Church Secretary in regard to printing the report of the credential committee prior to conference was also laid on the table.

A motion authorizing the First Presidency to appoint a credential committee before the convening of conferences prevailed.

The list of ex officio members of conference was then read.

Announcements were then made; song No. 120 was sung; benediction by Patriarch Alexander H. Smith.

The speaker for the evening hour was Richard Baldwin, assisted by John Davis.

SATURDAY, APRIL 10.

The morning prayer service was in charge of J. E. Vanderwood and C. G. Dykes; the eleven o'clock preaching was by S. S. Smith, assisted by W. P. Robinson.

At two o'clock the meeting was called to order with President Joseph Smith in the chair. Song No. 163 was used in opening, and prayer was made by E. A. Blakeslee.

Minutes read and approved.

President Joseph Smith requested F. M. Smith to take the chair.

The special order for the day was taken up, it being the consideration of the report of the Board of Auditors in regard to the accounts of the Presiding Bishop. The first clause of the auditors' report is as follows:

The item in the report of $5,828.64 following the statement of liabilities under the title "Old accounts charged off," has no proper place in the report. It represents the amount of accounts hitherto reckoned among the assets but now carried to loss and gain in harmony with our recommendation of last year. This item then being eliminated, the summary will show a gain for the year of $8,654.90. A little farther along in the report will be noticed the item, "Assets reserved." This amount represents the values placed upon the Book of Mormon manuscript and Temple lot fence which were also carried to loss and gain. Hence this item has no proper place in the summary.

To this the Bishop had filed his answer as follows:

The item of $5,828.64 following the statement of liabilities and marked, "Old accounts charged off," is not included in the assets, and set out to advise the Saints or the disposition of these accounts and to show the actual gain for the year. The item "Assets reserved," is necessary to show the disposition of this fund.

After various motions had been entertained the vote was taken and resulted in allowing the Bishop's report to stand as it is in regard to the items in question.

Clause No. 2 was taken up and discussed, as also the Bishop's answer to the same. Its adoption was moved; a substitute was offered to accept the answer; it was lost and the motion to adopt prevailed, after which the answer to the Bishop was accepted.

Announcements were made for Sunday's services; song No. 214 was sung, and benediction was pronounced by President Joseph Smith.

The evening hour was occupied by J. W. Wight, with H. E. Moler presiding.

SUNDAY, APRIL 11.

The prayer-meeting was held at eight o'clock and was in charge of Duncan Campbell and V. M. Goodrich.

At nine fifteen the regular session of the Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school was held.

At eleven forty-five President Joseph Smith preached in the main auditorium, assisted by Patriarch A. H. Smith, and in the lower room an overflow meeting was held, Lee Quick being the speaker, being assisted by W. A. McDowell.

At two thirty in the afternoon F. M. Sheehy spoke in the main room, assisted by R. C. Russell, and William Davis spoke in the basement, assisted by J. W. Davis.

The evening hour was occupied by Gomer Griffiths, assisted by G. C. Tomlinson, and T. W. Williams preached in the lower room, assisted by G. E. Harrington.

Evening preaching services were also held at the homes as follows: At Liberty Home, T. W. Chatburn, assisted by F. C. Keck; at the Saints' Home by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by David Smith.

All meetings of the day were largely attended, but a high wind prevailed throughout, making it extremely disagreeable to be out of doors.

MONDAY, APRIL 12.

Morning prayer-meeting was in charge of C. E. and J. L. Butterworth, and the forenoon preaching was by W. M. Aylor, assisted by J. T. Riley.

At two o'clock the conference again met for business, with President Joseph Smith in the chair. Song No. 1 was used in opening; and prayer was offered by Roderick May.

Minutes of Saturday's and Sunday's proceedings

Sunday, April 4, was divided between Sunday-school and Religio interests. Sunday-school convened at a quarter past nine under the care of the local Sunday-school officers. The local force made a good showing, there being but two absentees from the total force of officers and teachers. There were one hundred and nine visitors, many of whom visited the various departments, while others took part in class work.

At ten forty-five Elder T. A. Hougas addressed the assembly on the subject of Sunday-school work. His plea was for better methods in teaching and incidentally for a better opportunity for Sunday-school workers to present their work at reunions and district gatherings. Social services were held at two-thirty in the afternoon under the joint auspices of the Sunday-school and Religio. The stake officers administered the sacrament at this service. In the evening Elder Walter W. Smith spoke in the interests of the Religio. His sermon was a fitting close to a very profitable and enjoyable day. Attendance at all the services was excellent.

APRIL 5.

The General Sunday-school Association held an institute session Monday morning commencing at eight o'clock. This session was in charge of Brn. W. N. Robinson and T. A. Hougas and was an interesting one throughout, much enthusiasm being shown by the delegates present in the work presented. After the opening exercises one hour and fifteen minutes were devoted to normal work, Bro. Walter W. Smith taking charge of this department, assisted by Bro. W. N. Robinson in blackboard work and in the explaining and answering questions relative to the various phases of that department.

The home department work was then discussed in round-table manner, under the direction of Bro. Hougas, Sr. Hougas being unable to be present. Much interest was manifested.

The business-session convened at ten o'clock. A report from Sr. Burton was read. An appropriation of five hundred dollars was made for the contingent expenses of the association. A resolution to the effect that the credential committee's report be prepared and printed and in the hands of the secretary before the 25th of March, this report to include also the list of the ex officios, was passed.

A motion to appropriate fifty dollars for literature, to be used by the missionaries in Germany in the organization of Sunday-schools, was referred to the executive with power to act. An appropriation was also made for the library extension work of the sum of one hundred dollars, and the treasurer of the library commission was requested to file an annual report with the General Association.

The Sunday-school Association met again in business-session Monday afternoon at two o'clock. Reports of superintendent of normal department, lessons committee, and additional report of credential committee, financial report of normal superintendent, and report of J. A. Gunsolley as field worker, read.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are T. A. Hougas, superintendent; E. H. Fisher, first assistant; Daniel McGregor, second assistant; D. J. Krahl, secretary; John Smith, treasurer; Sr. T. A. Hougas, home department superintendent. E. H. Fisher was elected to succeed himself on the library commission, Bro. J. A. Gunsolley on the lessons committee. Revising committee, consisting of R. S. Salyards, Duncan Campbell, and John Smith, sustained. Sr. Annie E. Allen elected as a member of the auditing committee.

A recommendation of the revising committee that hereafter the Inspired Translation be made the basis of the Sunday-school lessons was taken up and the matter discussed at some length, and was finally laid upon the table.

The Standard of Excellence for districts and local Sunday-schools as published in Exponent of the April number, after considerable discussion was adopted.

A recommendation of the lessons committee regarding an advanced and supplementary course of lessons was deferred for one year, schools to be advised concerning the matter during the year and the delegates to the next General Convention to be instructed to cast yea and nay vote.

General Conference Notes

THE SPIRIT OF THE CONFERENCE.

Some one writes the editors, "We would like to have you several thousand miles from the General Conference and let you see how much of the spirit of the conference you could get from the reports contained in the HERALD."

Well, we would like to have that writer here and let him see how much of the spirit of the conference he could get into a printed report.

Our general conferences have their own peculiar atmosphere that may be felt but can not be described; and while in the general it is the same, there are subtle changes from year to year, forcing the barometer up or down, indicating fair or foul weather. To get the spirit of the conference one must be on the ground, familiar with impending questions,—questions that are not always well enough defined to reduce to words. He must get the feeling of the quorum meetings, and talk with the groups of men who gather here and there to discuss the situation. Then he can begin to determine whether the feeling is one of apprehension, of hope, of menacing portent, or of calm serenity.

There is a subdued but dominant note under the bustle and murmur occasioned by the rallying of so many mutually interested church representatives from all over the world. What is the dominant note of this conference? We believe the feeling is that grave and important questions confront the church, but that we are competent, with the aid of God, to solve them.

THE OPENING SESSION.

The Fifty-sixth General Conference of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints convened in Lamoni, Iowa, April 6, at ten o'clock. Our aged and honored president, Joseph Smith, occupied the chair, a place he has so often filled with credit to himself and profit to the church. It is no small task to preside over the sessions of a General Conference, if for no other reason than because the assembly is pretty sure to be well peppered with skillful parliamentary critics. Yet it is probably true that the church rolls have never contained the name of a man who could excel our "Brother Joseph" in dignity, fairness, and ability as a presiding officer.

The congregation sang hymn number thirty-five:

The morning breaks, the shadows flee;
Lo! Zion's standard is unfurled!
The dawning of a brighter day
Majestic rises on the world.

A feeling of solemnity settled over the assembly. Is it true that when we cease to bandy rumors and come together with faith, hope, and charity, to face our difficulties in the right way, there comes a clearing up? The morning breaks, the shadows flee! No other people face problems just as we face them. Our leaders wrestle with them, it is true; but we are also democratic, and sooner or later the people bring their combined intelligences to the consideration of the matters in hand. Still more important is the fact that we invite God to quicken our intelligence, and if the matter is sufficiently important, to settle it by direct revelation. On such grounds we were excluded from the Federal Council of Churches less than six months ago. Well, we can dispense with the Federal Council of Churches better than we can dispense with God.

Following the song our beloved Patriarch and Father to the Church, Alexander H. Smith, offered the following prayer:

O God, our heavenly Father, we, thy children, have assembled here from the various fields of labor of thy ministry in the world, coming together for the purpose of transacting business relative to the upbuilding and establishment of thy church and kingdom in all the world. O, how far-reaching is that world! How stupendous is the work of God thou knowest.

Thou art acquainted with the momentous questions that may arise during this conference, and O we pray thee to give us wisdom, and love, and charity, that we may labor together as brethren in the Lord, and that we may do those things that are necessary and essential, and have wisdom and power to overcome evil in life. O, we pray thee, to let the influence of thy Spirit come to us in this our assemblings.

In the year past our hearts have trembled sometimes with fear because of the surroundings—the threatenings against this thy work; but we pray thee to verify the promise—the statement—that the work is thine, and that thou wilt see that what is said and done may be agreeable to thy divine will. And as we desire thy divine favor, and to remain in the engagement of thy work, O grant that we may be kept firm and steadfast in the faith; that whatever may arise, whatever may be sprung as questions of importance, our faith may fail not, but that our faith may still be in thee and in thy Son, Jesus Christ, in the truth of thy work, its upbuilding, and the final accomplishment of thy divine will, the redemption of the human family, and the upbuilding of Zion.

Father, thou art acquainted with our necessities this morning. We are assembling for the business sessions of this conference. O, I pray thee to grant that thy Spirit may permeate the hearts of thy children and servants, that they may feel its influences directing them in their work, whether in quorums, or whether in the body assembled. Grant that thy Spirit may be with them to warm their hearts and give them wisdom and strength to perform their duty before thee with an eye single to thy glory.

We plead with thee to be with the weak, with the aged and infirm, and with those that need physical strength; stretch forth thine hand, enlighten their minds. And speak to us that we may be assured, ere the close of this conference, that we are thy people, and that thou art ruling and governing for the establishment of thy work and its fulfillment, though we, in our short-sightedness, may not see those wonderful things that are transpiring. Move upon thy people to the accomplishment of thy divine will, that we may stand in thy presence freed from condemnation, recognized as thy children, gathered to thee from all the world. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

President Joseph Smith then addressed the people briefly:

This afternoon Frederick Smith will have charge and arrange the business formation so that we will know where we are. We will omit, unless it shall be otherwise ordered by the body, the usual short speeches that have been our habit at some sessions in the past, and get to our business at once, and, if we can, expedite it so far that we do not have to stay too long. I do not know whether it is altogether true of our deliberative bodies or not, but I sometimes fancy that we stay together too long until we become idle for want of business—you know the old proverb, "The Devil finds still some work for idle hands to do." It may be the same with idle hearts and idle minds.

If ever there was a time in the world—if ever there was a time in the history of the Reorganization, which, from the prospects before it, those engaged in it, and from the things which are within and without, demanded a surrender of what we may call "mental reservation," and engaging in the work with the spirit of self-abnegation fully resident in our hearts, that time is now; that period is present. I trust that each of us will remember that. I shall strive to do that, and it has been impressed upon me since I left home.

I have professed to be consecrated to God's work, and under the influence of his Spirit, and if, under trying circumstances, I retake to myself that which belongs to me otherwise, as a man, and engage in the work, without the presence of the Spirit, or am disregarding of it, I am not in the line of my duty as I understand it.

I have sometimes thought that it is a great mistake to pray that we should be directed by the Spirit of God, and then give way to what may be within us—in short—the spirit of man that is within us, and understands only the things of man.

Thus was launched the General Conference of 1909. Those who have attended such a gathering can picture the army of the Lord thus assembled, officers and men in their various places. Here is a living model of the church of Christ. Mention any office named in the New Testament, apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor, or teacher, and its representative will be pointed out to you in this congregation. In what one of the popular churches can such a situation be duplicated?

The attendance at the opening of the conference was noticeably smaller than usual, due to a variety of causes; yet the church was comfortably filled.

REPORTS OF MINISTERS IN CHARGE.

Reports from various committees and quorums presented from day to day are full of interesting matter, yet we can only notice a few of them, as all will appear at a later date in the Conference Minutes as compiled by the Church Secretary and issued in connection with the HERALD. Among all the reports sent in perhaps none is of more interest than those presented by members of the Quorum of Twelve. Their reports not only give us a glimpse of the character of the men filling an important position in the church, but they also give us an understanding of conditions in various parts of the world. We will quote more or less briefly from some of these:

W. H. Kelley and Heman C. Smith, ministers in charge of Central Mission, report, sermons 6,452, baptisms 794, number of men in the field, 68. They say, Conditions are favorable. No serious trouble exists. The missionaries have done well as a rule, and have proven themselves worthy of the trust and confidence of the church.

TOUCH OF THE CHILLS AND FEVER.

I. N. White, minister in charge of Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas and Louisiana, reported sermons preached 3,324, baptisms 184, number of men in field, 24. He says:

I had the same number of ministers this year that I had last, but have an excess of 286 sermons, 14 baptisms, 8 new openings, 2 debates, and 3 new branches over last year; though I am short two Sunday-school organizations.

I can readily believe the mission in better condition, than the former year. This year we organized one branch in Louisiana, consisting of 28 charter members, the first and only branch, I believe, ever organized in that state by the Reorganization. Organized one branch in Arkansas, and 3 in Oklahoma.

I note one good feature of the work, and that is, the ministers are much better satisfied with the field, and in a large measure willing to remain with it, and make the sacrifice needed to establish the work in it; though much of the field is a hard one on account of its swampy condition, subject to chills and fevers, and malaria. In a large degree it is easier for the elders to capture—catch if you please—the chills and malaria, than it is to catch the people in the gospel net. The elder is often tempted to carry in his pocket a bottle of quinine, instead of a bottle of olive-oil; certainly it is used by the gallon, while the olive-oil by the pint goes a begging with the people that are so unlucky to settle on these swampy lands. Some of ye elders may smile at this remark, but while you are smiling, do not forget to send in your name to the appointing powers, and ask to be sent to one of these southern fields, and have your smiles turned into a real "southern shake."

We are not finding fault with God's creation, as we believe he created all things for some good purpose; and we believe these swamps are better adapted to the raising of mosquitoes, frogs, and alligators, rather than of giving happy homes to the lovers of truth who should occupy what we call "God's country." We are, however, encouraged to know that God has many good, loving people even in this kind of places, and when obeying the angel's message will be cheered to know that there is a contemplated Zion in sight.

We have run without friction in all parts of my field, so far as I know. The work is slowly getting on better footing, in most places. Yet, there is a lack of energy with branch officers, and members too, in some localities, which we deplore, but with the small force of field workers we do not see our way clear to correct very soon; unless the branch officers themselves take on more life and make it possible. We hope the very mentioning of this here, may be read by them and stir them up to diligence.

FEARS A DEBT-BURDENED MINISTRY.

J. W. Wight, minister in charge of Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Northern Illinois reported 34 men in the field, sermons preached 4,615, baptisms 267. He says:

Condition of field good so far as known to the contrary. In saying this it is not to be understood that it might not be better, but taken as a whole it is safe to say that it is "good" in all that term implies. For five years it has been the writer's lot to have the same field, and for it he has no complaint to offer. All seem willing and glad to learn and observe duty, and it is understood by the ones composing the field. Not only so with relation to the ministry but the local work as well. All seem to be willing to be learners, and this is regarded as an excellent evidence of true development. In the entire field there is no evidence of any serious friction, anywhere that is known, at least, to the minister in general charge. The men in assistant charge have faithfully performed their duty without any apparent desire to "lord it over" any one, and this is regarded as the right spirit to be made manifest by any one in charge, let the charge be what it may. To be "great" is to be the servant of all, and so feeling and acting there is no reason as to why any one in charge of a field should not get on all right with those whom he has set apart to advise and counsel.

I called attention last year to the fact of being in debt, yet no notice was taken of it, and in calling attention to it this year it is for the further purpose to impress upon the minds of those concerned the fact that under present prices it is impossible to keep out of debt with present allowance. With no change it will mean a debt-burdened ministry in a few years which will have no credit and but few friends. It appears to me to be anything but the correct policy to pursue if we would hold a repute above reproach. Some may get along all right, but it must be remembered that some are financiers and others are not. Can the church afford to continue to drift in this matter? It does not so appear to me. I still have faith in God but very little in man, myself especially.

GOOD REPORTS FROM CANADA.

Ulysses W. Greene, minister in charge of the Eastern States and Canada, reported 25 men in field, 3,456 sermons preached, 216 baptisms. He said:

The uniting of the Canadian Mission to that of the Eastern States has necessitated my traveling to a greater extent than ever before. I find the Canadian Northwest one of the most promising fields for missionary work I have ever visited. The Canadians as a rule are excellent people, more inclined to listen to the gospel than the citizens of the States. The outlook in Ontario is very promising and missionary work there needs to be prosecuted more extensively, if it be possible to secure men. The number of missionaries in the Eastern States has been so small that the numerical increase had not been what we had anticipated, but we are glad to say that the spiritual condition in many of the branches and several of the districts is better than we have ever witnessed before. The brethren associated with me in the field have labored faithfully, and I can cheerfully recommend them as faithful servants of the Lord. I am sorry that this vast field does not have ten times the number of missionaries that we are enabled to support there, but our trust is in God, we are hopeful for the future, and prepared to move forward and do the best that we can.

WHERE ARE THE YOUNG MEN?

G. T. Griffiths, minister in charge of Mission No. 5, reported 24 men in the field, 2,798 sermons preached, 228 baptisms. He says:

The mission is in fair condition; has made some advancement in spirituality. One branch—Dayton, Ohio,—disorganized. One branch organized at Crabtree, Ohio. No serious difficulties pending. Many calls for preaching that we are unable to supply, showing necessity of more laborers in the field. Sorry to report that but few young men seem to have inclination to devote their time and talent to missionary work. Quite a number of local baptisms have been reported, in addition to the above. Bro. James Craig, of the superannuated ministers, has rendered acceptable labor; also, Bro. Hollibaugh, of Youngstown, Ohio. Bro. T. J. Sheldon has been stationed at Kirtland during the summer months, having charge of the Temple. In that time he escorted about 1,500 visitors through the building; some of them being among the most prominent people of the country. They included the German ambassador and his suite, John D. Rockefeller, and many ministers. One of the most capable of the ministry should be stationed at that point.

THE GOLD CURE.

Frederick A. Smith, minister in charge of the Pacific Mission, reported 27 men in the field, 2,955 sermons preached, 140 baptisms. He says:

The work in this field has been prosecuted with as much vigor as the very limited force and the peculiar conditions that they were compelled to labor under would permit. Sickness has had a good share of the blame for some of the men not doing more than they would have done otherwise: the stringent financial conditions, largely as a result of the recent panic, comes in for a share of the responsibility for some not doing more than they did, but the most difficult thing to meet that works against doing what we would like to, is the growing indifference of the people toward religion of any kind. This condition is the hardest thing we have to contend with. It is well illustrated by a statement made to one of our ministers in charge several years ago while talking to a drinking man, with a view to reach him and get him to stop the habit; after a good argument on the part of the minister the other man looked at him and said: "Well, I will tell you, Mr. W., the gold cure, the Keeley cure, nor any other cure, won't cure you if you don't want to be cured." The people are not pleased with conditions in all cases, but in the majority of cases they are inclined to be content, and prefer that we let them alone as they are, in other words, they don't want to be cured.

A number of new openings have been made where splendid success has attended the efforts of the missionaries. In some of these places the local brethren have given splendid help, which has been appreciated very much.

Taking the field as a whole I consider that I am safe in saying that the field is in good condition with a few exceptions; the opportunity for missionary work for the coming year is very good.

PROSPECTIVE WORK IN MEXICO AND SOUTH AMERICA.

F. M. Sheehy, minister in charge of Rocky Mountain Mission, reported 10 men in the field, 1,006 sermons, 49 baptisms. He says:

The work in Utah is much retarded by the exhibition of priestcraft on the part of the Mormon church, which through its head has issued special orders to prohibit us the use of their church buildings.

During the summer one of our men (E. C. Briggs) was arrested for handing tracts to the people on the public streets, is another evidence of the animus and intolerance that moves the Mormon people when we are involved. . . . I made a trip into Mexico, entering at Nogales and went through the state of Sonora to the port of Guaymas on the Magdalena Bay for the purpose of seeing conditions relative to our opening the work of the gospel among the Spanish people in the republic. An immense field is open for us among people speaking Spanish, as it includes all of Central and South America, West Indies Islands, the Philippines, as well as Spain. The need of some of our young men and women to become proficient in the Spanish language is now apparent. It is hoped that the church may soon be able to attend to the work above referred to.

DENMARK, NORWAY, SWEDEN, AND GERMANY.

Peter Anderson, minister in charge of Scandinavia and Germany, reported 7 men in the field, 606 sermons preached, 14 baptisms.

Some progress has been made in all four countries the last year, and prospects for the success of our work in that field seem brighter. In Germany the authorities distinguished between us and the Utah church, and no objections are raised to our laboring there. In some places in Norway the authorities objected to our holding public meetings, but Bro. Muceus succeeded in getting our cause before the judiciary department at Christiania and permission was granted us to hold public services throughout that country. Several new openings have been made in Denmark, Norway, and Sweden the last year. With few exceptions the spiritual condition of the Saints is good, and all seem anxious for the advancement of the work.

FROM THE "PHYSICIAN TO THE CHURCH."

While God has order and system in his work he is not bound by precedent. He may at any time make an appointment that is not anticipated by the people.

The calling of the "elect lady" in 1830 was a case in point; and the appointing of Bro. Joseph Luff as a medical director in the Sanitarium and "physician to the church" in 1906 was another of like kind. At the time some were inclined to challenge the idea that proper nursing and medical care have any place in a church that believes in divine healing. Such, however, have probably modified their opinions. From the report of Bro. Luff to the conference we quote:

My work as physician has engaged, practically, my entire time, and in that service I have tried to be faithful. Have treated (by mail) patients all over the United States and several parts of Canada, also a few in other foreign countries. Of course, all these are chronic cases, and the number of applicants for my aid in this line has been steadily increasing.

In the performance of my work I have met with experiences that are common to men in nearly all stations of trust—some very gratifying, others not so much so, and some discouraging.

Quite a few of the Saints abroad who write for treatment indicate in their letters that they expect me to take their cases directly to God, and obtain for each a special revelation as to medicine and advice. Of course this is impracticable; but I am happy to be able to state that I have not been without mental illumination and spiritual help, and my experience in this line has been quite up to the average of my experience in former lines of church service.

Everywhere I have sought to impress upon those sending for me, that I was first a minister and second a physician, and have labored to keep the duties of the first magnified, and as far as possible to make the second unnecessary. Am pleased to be able to report truthfully, that my work as a physician, though constant, has never yet disturbed or lessened my confidence in the all-sufficiency of the power and wisdom of the Great Physician, or the right to first place of his ordinance for the sick. In some instances he has answered my earnest prayer offered at the bedside that he would interpose and make unnecessary the taking of the medicine I had prepared. In this I rejoice much more than in the success of my purely medical efforts, and I again announce myself his servant, ready to do any work, or to go or occupy anywhere, asking only for the unmistakable assurance that his hand is doing the directing.

CONDITION OF HERALD PUBLISHING HOUSE.

January 5, 1907, the Herald Office was entirely destroyed by fire. It has been rebuilt on a finer and larger scale, and the manager says:

The assets of the Board of Publication now exceed one hundred thousand dollars, and while we are carrying a heavy indebtedness, if we can maintain the ratio of gain made the last three years, it will only be a matter of four or five years when the publishing department will be free from debt.

We take this means of thanking those who have so materially assisted in getting the books of the church into the hands of the people. It will be noticed from the statement that we have enough merchandise, finished and in process of finishing, to more than half pay our indebtedness, and we know of no greater work that members can do than to scatter the word of God as we are told "My word shall not return unto me void."

FIRST PRESIDENCY ON SUBJECT OF FREE DISCUSSION.

The report of the First Presidency is an interesting document, outlining the work accomplished during the year. The work of reorganizing the quorums of elders, priests, teachers, and deacons has been pushed forward under the direction of President F. M. Smith. The report says:

The work of reorganizing will be carried on apace, with the probabilities that eventually there will be many times the number of quorums of priests, teachers, and deacons that have previously existed in the church. In fact it is apparent that there will be so many that the question of reporting becomes a question of some importance. That is, to what conference shall the various quorums report? The secretary of the Presidency has been free to advise most of the quorums to report to the conference of immediate jurisdiction, whether it be stake, district, or mission; quorums more general in organization than those in stakes, district, or missions to report to the General Conference.

The report closes with an interesting comment on the matter of discussion:

We can not say all is peace in Zion, for frequently development brings agitation, and agitation is sometimes a good sign of alertness. We are alert, and it is apparent from the free and general discussion prevailing that the spirit of democracy is abroad in the land. But in our exercise of free speech, free discussion, let us remember that we are brethren and should be working together with God. Let brotherly love abound.

SOME ITEMS CONCERNING OUR NUMERICAL STRENGTH.

Usually statistics are dry reading; yet sometimes they tell an interesting story if they are read aright and the circumstances connected therewith are understood. In his annual report the Church Recorder, C. I. Carpenter, says:

During the last year there have been placed upon the church records 2,281 new baptisms, with a loss of 77 by expulsion and 426 by death which represents a positive loss of 503, which, when taken from the positive gain of 2,281 leaves a real net gain of 1,778, although when the transfers are taken into account the result in the totals is slightly different, there having been 1,466 received by letter of removal, while only 1,353 letters of removal were granted, making a total net gain of 1,941 and a total net loss of 50, or an actual net gain of 1,891, the total for last year being 57,365, and the total for the present year 59,256.

The reports so far as recorded show 200 ordinations and 326 marriages, and approximately 3,276 ministers of the various orders of the priesthood, and 19,579 members isolated from the privilege of meeting with organized branches.

Especial attention is called to the number of members who are isolated or absent from the organized branches. Lists of these members should be furnished to the authorities in charge of the various fields, together with information which would lead to the locating of many of them, and through them in all probability effecting many new openings for the preaching of the word, as well as effecting the reclamation of many who by reason of isolation are drifting back to the world, and the relieving of the church of many names of those who have already apostatized but whose names are now carried and counted because they have passed from notice and are not under the jurisdiction of any particular branch.

We notice that in point of net gain Missouri leads with 433; Canada comes next with 252; Michigan has 183; and Iowa 132. In point of total membership Iowa has 9,114; Missouri 9,083; Canada 4,850;

England 1,290; Australia 1,049. The smallest membership reported from any foreign field is seven, in Germany. More complete statistics will be available to those who wish them when the Conference Minutes are published in full.

DUPLICITY OF BRIGHAMISM, BECAUSE OF NECESSITY; RELATIVE TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF 1835.

HALE W. SMITH.

On the sixth day of April, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints came into existence, being restored to the earth for the last time. For five years and four months it struggled gradually onward, when an important event occurred on August 17, 1835.

The church met together on this day to consider the reports of a committee previously appointed on September 24, 1834. That committee was composed of Joseph Smith, Jr., Oliver Cowdery, Sidney Rigdon, and Frederick G. Williams. The duty assigned was to compile and arrange the items of the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ. We are informed that the committee labored prayerfully and diligently, for they knew the responsibility which rested upon them as a committee.

When their work was finished a General Assembly was called to consider the report of that committee. They assembled at Kirtland, Ohio, and among the important business transacted upon that occasion was the adopting of the section on marriage found in the 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants and every subsequent edition published by the church to date. However, the Utah Mormon church has torn from the Doctrine and Covenants this section on marriage so adopted on that August day, and in 1876 published instead the plural marriage section that has been so shocking and repulsive to all Christian people.

Why this deception, this trickery?

It might be answered by them, "of necessity" to meet contingencies that have arisen relative to polygamy.

We believe that committee had a good reason why they desired the section on marriage adopted as stated by them in the preface of the first edition of that work, which we quote here in part:

The church, viewing this subject to be of importance, appointed, through their servants and delegates the High Council, your servants to select and compile this work. Several reasons might be adduced in favor of this move of the council, but we only add a few words. They knew the church was evil spoken of in many places, its faith and belief misrepresented, and the way of truth thus subverted.—Preface to first edition to Doctrine and Covenants. (Italics mine.)

The Lord commanded the church to "go to the Ohio; and there I will give unto you my law." (See Doctrine and Covenants 38:7; Utah 38:32.) The church did go there and a revelation was received through the Prophet, March, 1831, in which the Lord says, "Wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation." (Section 49:3; Utah 49.) Notwithstanding this the church in Utah produces a revelation which is contradictory to the above quotation. There is one contradiction I wish to call attention to before I pass on to the main subject: The alleged revelation on plural marriage tells Joseph, "Therefore prepare thy heart to receive and obey the instructions which God is about to give unto you for behold! I reveal unto you a new and everlasting covenant."—Utah Doctrine and Covenants 132. We understand God is unchangeable, and if God gave the above revelation in 1843, he never gave the following in 1830, as found in section 20, (Utah edition 22):

Behold, I say unto you, that all covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing and this is a new and everlasting covenant . . . for it is because of your dead works, that I have caused this last covenant and this church to be built up unto me; even as in days of old.

We understand that the gospel of Jesus Christ, not the carnal law of plural marriage, is the everlasting covenant.

We have reason to believe the Prophet Joseph Smith, told the truth, and we expect to hold him up to the world as such until it can be proven otherwise. As the old saying is, "Truth crushed to earth will arise again," so also in this case: There are evidences coming day by day to confirm our belief in the truthfulness of Joseph Smith's statements. As evidences are coming to light constantly to prove the Book of Mormon to be divine, so also facts are coming to light to prove the correctness of Joseph Smith's own history. We wish to examine that history as published by the Utah church and show their rank duplicity by comparing the account as given in the Millennial Star, volume 15, 1853, with that given in the Utah History of the Church, volumes 1 and 2, pages 243 to 251, edition of 1904.

We want the readers of this article to bear in mind all the time that the purported plural marriage revelation was not made public in Utah until August, 1852, and that in a subsequent issue of the Millennial Star, in England, for Saturday, January 1, 1853, is printed the revelation made public in Salt Lake the August before. We wish you to bear in mind also that the history of Joseph Smith written by himself was being published from time to time in the Times and Seasons before his death and was continued in the Millennial Star, Liverpool, England, until it was all published. It ran through several numbers of the latter periodical.

Especial attention is called to that part of Joseph Smith's history where he writes of the General Assembly of August, 1835, which was not published in the Millennial Star until May 7, 1853, being four months and six days after the printing of the revelation on plural marriage in the same periodical January 1, 1853, and also nine months after the public introduction of the plural marriage revelation in Salt Lake, Utah.

We wish you to take special notice that the history of Joseph Smith as published in the Millennial Star was tampered with and changed; Brigham Young's blue pencil was freely used, as the church in Utah acknowledges in the preface of the first volume of their recent history published in 1904. The compilers of the history in the Millennial Star said the following concerning their own work and the blue pencil work of Brigham Young:

The history of Joseph Smith is now before the world, and we are satisfied that a history more correct in its details than this was never published. To have it strictly correct, the greatest possible pains have been taken by the historians and clerks engaged in the work. . . . Moreover, since the death of the Prophet Joseph, the history has been carefully revised under the strict inspection of President Brigham Young and approved by him.

We wish now to call your attention to the fact that the Utah church has revised again the History of the Church and, according to their own statement, "the work has been brought to a still higher state of perfection." They also acknowledge that they will use "the narrative of the Prophet Joseph Smith as found in the manuscript history of the church . . . now in the archives of the historian's office." (See preface to volume 1, History of the Church.)

The reader's attention is called to the statement made by the recent historians:

Their statement assuredly is true; and yet by a careful revision of the work they did and the correction of a few errors in dates and other details, the work has been brought to a still higher state of perfection. Where grammatical accuracy was violated in the original record it has been corrected, so far as observed; but no historical or doctrinal statement has been changed. (See preface volume 1, History of the Church.)

Please notice: no "doctrinal statement" of the original record, the narrative of the Prophet Joseph Smith, has been changed. Either the compilers of the history of Joseph Smith as published in the Millennial Star, volume 15, May, 1853, or the compilers of their recent History of the Church have prevaricated, and we simply ask you to read both accounts, each credited to the authorship of Joseph Smith, where he records the General Assembly of August 17, 1835.

It will be unnecessary for us to quote the paralleled accounts; however, we will give the reader the benefit of that part of the minutes of the General Assembly, published by the Utah church in their recent history, which was suppressed by their historians in 1853. It is as follows:

President W. W. Phelps then read the following article on marriage, . . .

ARTICLE ON MARRIAGE.

"According to the custom of all civilized nations, marriage is regulated by laws and ceremonies; therefore we believe that all marriages in this Church of Christ of Latter-Day Saints should be solemnized in a public meeting or feast prepared for that purpose, and that the solemnization should be performed by a presiding high priest, high priest, bishop, elder or priest, not even prohibiting those persons who are desirous to get married, of being married by other authority. We believe that it is not right to prohibit members of this church from marrying out of the church, if it be their determination so to do; but such persons will be considered weak in the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

"Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving, and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right and the woman on the left, shall be addressed by the person officiating as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit, and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by name; 'You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives?' And when they have both answered 'Yes,' he shall pronounce them 'husband and wife,' in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him. 'May God add his blessings and keep you to fulfill your covenants from henceforth and for ever. Amen.'

"The clerk of every church should keep a record of all the marriages solemnized in his branch. All legal contracts of marriage made before the person is baptized into this church should be held sacred and fulfilled. Inasmuch as this Church of Christ has been reproached with the crime of fornication and polygamy, we declare that we believe that one man should have one wife, and one woman but one husband, except in case of death, when either is at liberty to marry again. It is not right to persuade a woman to be baptized contrary to the will of her husband; neither is it lawful to influence her to leave her husband. All children are bound by law to obey their parents, and to influence them to embrace any religious faith, or be baptized, or leave their parents without their consent, is unlawful and unjust. We believe that husbands, parents, and masters, who exercise control over their wives, children and servants, and prevent them from embracing the truth, will have to answer for that sin."—History of the Church, pp. 246, 247.

We wish the reader to observe that the account in the Millennial Star, volume 15, published nine months after the introduction of the plural marriage revelation in Salt Lake City and four months after the publication of the revelation in the Star of January 1, 1853, is lacking that part of the minutes quoted above, regarding the introduction and adoption of the section on marriage by W. W. Phelps. We ask, Who had the right to suppress these minutes, and by what right does anybody publish the history of Joseph Smith "as he wrote it" and leave out certain parts to keep the people in the dark relative to his true teaching on the marriage covenant? We can only say that it must have been "because of necessity," as we often hear members of that fraternity declare.

We direct the reader's attention to the fact that the minutes of the General Assembly of August 17, 1835, was given in its entirety, in the back part of the first edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, published in 1835, by F. G. Williams & Company, printers, Kirtland, Ohio, for the proprietors, and also in the Messenger and Advocate of August, 1835, at Kirtland, Ohio, by W. W. Phelps. These accounts agree.

As stated elsewhere the history of Joseph Smith was published in the Millennial Star, having been revised and corrected by Brigham Young to suit his carnal tastes, before its publication, 1853, and at that time Brigham Young was living in polygamy. Can you not see his object in suppressing the article on marriage when he revised the history of Joseph Smith before its publication in the Millennial Star, May, 1853?

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave
When first we practice to deceive!"

At this late date, 1904, or fifty-one years later, the church in Utah prepares a History of the Church and uses "the narrative of the Prophet Joseph Smith as found in the manuscript history of the church found in the archives of the historian's office," and publishes to the world a history "which has been brought to a still higher state of perfection," in which "no historical or doctrinal statement has been changed," when compared with the "original record." "Original record," we infer, means Joseph Smith's own manuscript.

As seen by the above you will note that they are honest enough now to publish the minutes of that General Assembly complete, giving that part which refers to the introduction of the section on marriage by W. W. Phelps, but formerly they shamefully evaded it.

I, as one of the true followers of Joseph Smith and his teachings, thank these later Utah historians for their honesty in that matter, even if it has come at this late date.

Now, since the Wilford Woodruff Manifesto, the church in Utah could publish the history of Joseph Smith regarding the General Assembly complete, with no fear of being questioned or contradicted by the younger members of their church.

There is another peculiar fact connected with the Doctrine and Covenants as published from time to time by the Utah church. The minutes of the General Assembly were published in the 1835 edition by order, as also the section on marriage. In the 1844 edition, published by John Taylor in Nauvoo after the martyrdom of the prophets, the minutes of the General Assembly were suppressed and the section on marriage retained. Every edition of the Doctrine and Covenants issued by the Utah church subsequent to 1844 until the year 1876, contains the section on marriage; but never since 1835 has the Utah church published the minutes of the General Assembly in their Doctrine and Covenants. However, they published the minutes of the General Assembly in 1853 in part. As stated elsewhere they suppressed that part in reference to the adoption of the section on marriage. Now, fifty-one years later, they are honest enough to publish the minutes of the General Assembly complete, which includes that part which refers to the adoption, by a unanimous vote, of the section on marriage.

The true Church of Christ has always contended for honesty and has tried to live by every word that comes from God, but Brighamism has not.

Ever praying for the right, I am, and hope to remain,

The New Year.

A flower unblown; a book unread;
A tree with fruit unharvested;
A path untrod; a house whose rooms
Lack yet the heart's divine perfumes.
A landscape whose wide border lies
In silent shade, 'neath silent skies;
A wondrous fountain yet unsealed;
A casket with its gifts concealed—
This is the year that for you waits
Beyond To-morrow's mystic gates.

For Jesus' Sake.

BY MEG.

Through the struggles, through the strife,
Through the doubts and fears of life,
Through the desert lone and drear,
Father, draw thy weak child near,
For Jesus' sake.

Through the daily hours of toil,
Wearied by the world's turmoil,
And its restlessness and sin,
Let thy love abide within,
For Jesus' sake.

Through the night of pain and sorrow,
With no sunlight in the morrow,
When hopes lie crushed and faith is dead,
Thou loving One, sustain my head,
For Jesus' sake.

Through shade and sunshine, storm and calm;
O'er treeless wastes, 'neath shady palm;
Lead thou my steps all dangers past,
And bring me to my home at last,
For Jesus' sake.

One Day at a Time.

What a blessing for all that the wise Father so ordered our lives that we can not see or know our future here on earth; for surely if some of us (and perhaps a good many of us) could see and know what was in store for us in the coming years, when we first take up life's burdens, our insane asylum (and suicide graves) would be filled to overflowing. But one day at a time is all that God intends us to bear our burdens, and so he kindly veils our eyes to our future.

"One day at a time" to bear our burdens, to carry our heartaches, and fight life's temptations is all life really means to us; for we can not know what the future has in store for us—added heartaches or pleasure, and we would not understand them if we did.

God gives us the night to shut down on our days (and we can not see beyond) to give us strength for to-morrow's battles. One day at a time he will give us strength to bear them, though I know sometimes when life's trial and bitter sorrow closes around us, when friends have failed us, and the dearly loved and trusted have proved untrue and false, all seem so dark and gloomy; faith in all humanity is dead (perhaps slain by the one who should have shielded us from all sorrow). God pity the man or woman who loses faith and confidence in humanity, for then the tempter steps in and says: "If those you have loved and trusted so long can prove so false, surely there is nothing true on earth or in heaven, and God himself is only a myth." And to this sorrowing heart there seems no place to go in this great sorrow; no one on earth or in heaven. God pity this poor heart at this time, but no comfort can be found, and then your poor heart cries:

"Sometimes in the quiet gloaming
When I watch the stars arise,
My tears like terrible tempests
Brim over my aching eyes.
And out of my broken bosom
Old dreams come crowding up,
Till I fling myself face downward
And cry, 'Oh, not this cup!'"

"And I sob in the lonely darkness
With grief, un comforted,
There is nothing on earth but falseness,
And my heart is broken and dead.
I have neither star nor anchor,
And my heart is like a stone;
For it's bitter, bitter sorrow,
This learning to live alone."

But as true as the sun shines and the glad flowers bloom, God, even amid it all, is trying to comfort your heart, and bring you nearer to him. And when the warm sunshine of his love, gradually at first, creeps into the cold heart and sends a thrill of warmth through it, then you know that ever amid these overwhelming days of grief he has been helping you to bear it all, "one day at a time." Oh, that we might have the faith at all times to "trust him where we can not see," even if there be a "darker day when through great trial we must go" on belief!

"Dear heart that is growing weary,
Let not your faith decay;
Some days of the year are dreary,
But the fogs will pass away.
Ever the sun shines somewhere
Over the land and sea;
Be strong in thy faith and courage,
There are summers yet for thee."

The Second Death.

My letter in the HERALD of January 6, 1909, has been referred to by several, so I will answer, in a general way, the arguments offered against my position relative to the second death.

When I wrote I had no desire to antagonize any one. It was the theory that salvation would eventually come to all—the Devil, his angels, and the sons of perdition, who sin against the Holy Ghost, that I was contending against, and not against any individual who held to the theory.

That there is such a condition spoken of in the Scriptures as the second death, no one will deny. It is spoken of as "the lake of fire," and "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone." (Revelation 20: 14; 21: 8.)

In the Doctrine and Covenants 28: 11 we are told that when Adam fell "he became spiritually dead; which is the first death, even that same death, which is the last death, which is spiritual, which shall be pronounced upon the wicked when I shall say, Depart ye cursed."

The first death ends when all come to life in the resurrection: "And then shall all the dead awake, for their graves shall be opened, and they shall come forth; yea, even all; and the righteous shall be gathered on my right hand unto eternal life; and the wicked on my left hand will I be ashamed to own before the Father; wherefore I will say unto them, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 7.

This banishment from God is after the resurrection when all, "yea, even all," are awakened from their graves. He will then say to the wicked, "Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his angels." This is the second death or "last death" spoken of above.

The sons of perdition who sin against the Holy Ghost are among the "all" who are to be resurrected, and hence will not be "made alive." To these the Master will say, "Depart ye cursed." They are "the only ones on whom the second death shall have any power; yea, verily, the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; . . . he saves all the works of his hands, except those sons of perdition, who deny the Son after the Father hath revealed him; wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity."—Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4.

We see their punishment is endless and it is to be "in eternity," and is not to end at the final resurrection, as one brother argued, but is to come after it. All the rest of God's handiwork will be redeemed some time except these, and I understand the language, quoted above, teaches that these sons of perdition, with the Devil and his angels, will never be redeemed.

They are the "only ones on whom the second death shall have any power." That is, others who have had to pay their penalty in prison, "have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death" (Revelation 21: 8), will come out to stay out, they having paid the "utmost farthing"; their penalty will be ended; they will receive some glory; but these will have no glory; they will have to "return again to their own place [hell, from whence they came], to enjoy that which they are willing to receive, because they were not willing to enjoy that which they might have received." (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6.)

We notice their punishment is to be "everlasting, endless, and eternal." Two brethren, in replying to my letter before mentioned, say, "I abhor, despise, denounce, and condemn the doctrine of eternal torment." That, of course, is their privilege; but is it right to speak so if the doctrine is taught in the books we profess to believe?

To sustain the theory that "endless" does not mean endless, the following is cited: And "surely every man must repent or suffer, for I God am endless; wherefore, I revoke not the judgments which I shall pass, but woes shall go forth, weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; yea, to those who are found on my left hand; nevertheless, it is not written that there shall be no end to this torment; but it is written endless torment. Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men, altogether for my name's glory; wherefore, I will explain unto you this mystery."—Doctrine and Covenants 18: 1, 2.

On careful examination, and by the help of the brethren, since I wrote the above-mentioned letter, I have concluded that the torment here referred to means the punishment that follows ordinary sin; for it says, "surely every man must repent or suffer." This suffering will come to an end when "death and hell shall deliver up the dead which were in them" (Revelation 20: 13), that they may come forth to the resurrection. Their punishment will end, but the place of punishment, "the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death," will never end. The place will still stand, "and they who remain [who receive no glory] shall also be quickened [resurrected]; nevertheless, they shall return again to their own place [hell]."—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 6. They came from hell and will "return again."

"Again, it is written eternal damnation; wherefore it is more express than other scriptures, that it might work upon the hearts of the children of men." "Eternal damnation" is the doctrine the brethren object to. It is here taught, and hence is a doctrine of the book. Webster says doctrine is "that which is taught."

Why should any one object so strongly to the doctrine so plainly taught? And the Lord says he has used these strong terms "that it might work on the hearts of the children of men" to bring them to repentance. The main object for giving this revelation is to bring about repentance. Should we rob this doctrine of its strength and destroy the purpose the Lord had in using it?

But what was the mystery he was going to explain? Here it is: "Behold, I am endless, and the punishment which is given from my hand is endless punishment, for Endless is my name; wherefore—eternal punishment is God's punishment. Endless punishment is God's punishment." That, to my mind, teaches very clearly that punishment—the state of punishment in which they go to the second death—is as eternal and endless as God himself.

Another argument used to prove that the punishment of the second death will have an end, is a statement in Doctrine and Covenants 76: 4, that speaks of the same punishment in this language:

"Wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many."

Their argument is, the end has been shown by vision to many. This, to my mind, is a mistake. It is the torment, not the end, that is especially referred to as being revealed. The principal thing considered in the above language is "their torment." "Their torment, no man knows," only those to whom it is revealed. This has been revealed. See paragraph 3 of the same section: "And we saw a vision of the suffering of those with whom he made war and overcame," but we have no record that the end of this torment has ever been revealed to any one.

The end here referred to is their final state or destiny. This no one knows except those to whom it is revealed. Opposite to this is the end of the righteous, which is eternal life. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."—Romans 6: 22.

The Book of Mormon in speaking of the second death says: "Their torment is as a lake of fire and brimstone, . . . and has no end." (See page 72.) "Therefore the wicked remain as though there had been no redemption made, except it be the loosing of the bands of death."—Page 235.

"They shall be as though there had been no redemption made."—Page 238.

"The penalty thereof being a second death, which was an eternal death, as to things pertaining unto righteousness; for on such the plan of redemption [the gospel] could have no power."—Page 239.

From these statements we learn that those in the second death can not be redeemed, for Christ's atonement can not reach them, and for them the gospel will have no power; and they can not be saved without the gospel.

"And now there was no means to reclaim men from this fallen state [if the gospel is set aside] which man had brought upon himself, because of his own disobedience; therefore, according to justice, the plan of redemption could not be brought about, only, on condition of repentance of men in this probationary state; yea, this preparatory state; for except it were for these conditions, mercy could not take effect except it should destroy the work of justice. Now the work of justice could not be destroyed; if so God would cease to be God."—Pages 314, 315.

From this, repentance can take effect only in "this probationary state; yea, this preparatory state." We are preparing now for the judgment and our final destiny; which will be determined at the judgment by our works. "This preparatory state" will surely not reach beyond the judgment. Then our repentance must be before that time.

We are asked, "Can not God save those sons of perdition?" I would say, no; not according to the foregoing. "Do ye suppose that mercy can rob justice? I say unto you, Nay; not one whit. If so, God would cease to be God."—Page 315.

"They can not be redeemed from their spiritual fall, because they repent not, for they will love darkness rather than light."—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 12.

This states the reason why "they can not be redeemed" is "because they repent not." They have gone beyond the reach of repentance. They have sold their inheritance, and will be like Esau who, "when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected; for he found no place of repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears." (Hebrews 12: 17.)

Again, Paul says, "It is impossible . . . to renew them again unto repentance."—Hebrews 6: 4, 6. They had once repented and enjoyed the Holy Ghost and fallen away—sinned against the Holy Ghost. They had once been in a saved condition, but after they have sinned against the Holy Ghost, "it is impossible to renew them again unto repentance."

Our attention is called by one brother to Doctrine and Covenants 36: 7, where it speaks of the "great wickedness among" Enoch's brethren, and he says, "They had an end to their torment." God is speaking here of "all the workmanship" of his hands, and Enoch's brethren here spoken of are the "workmanship" of his hands on this planet. They are the prisoners that Christ preached the gospel to. (See 1 Peter 3: 19, 20.) There is no evidence they had sinned against the Holy Ghost.

Another argument used is that ever, for ever and ever, endless, eternal, and everlasting are used to refer to limited time. That is true, at times; at other times they refer to eternal things. When reference is made to earthly things the statement is true, for all earthly conditions will come to an end some time; but not so when reference is made to eternal things and conditions, or conditions in eternity, and after the final judgment. Notice the following:

"The eternal God is thy refuge." (Deuteronomy 33: 27.) Christ a "priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec." (Psalm 110: 4.) "We have a house eternal in the heavens." (2 Corinthians 5: 1.) "According to the eternal purpose of Christ." (Ephesians 3: 11.) "Eternal glory," "eternal salvation," "everlasting gospel," "eternal punishment is God's punishment," "punishment which was as eternal as the life of the soul, affixed opposite to the plan of happiness, which was as eternal also as the life of the soul."—Book of Mormon, p. 315.

These statements relate to eternal things and conditions, and have no end. They all carry the thought of duration, and are as eternal when relating to the bad as when relating to the good.

I wish to call attention again to a quotation from Church History that I cited in my letter. It is directly in line on the subject under consideration:

"The Lord never authorized them [the Hulets and others] to say that the Devil, nor his angels, nor the son of perdition should ever be restored [italics mine], for their state of destiny was not revealed to man, is not revealed, nor ever shall be revealed, save to those who are made partakers thereof; consequently those who teach this doctrine have not received it of the Spirit of the Lord. Truly Bro. Oliver declared it to be the doctrine of devils. We therefore, command that this doctrine be taught no more in Zion. We sanction the decision of the bishop and his council, in relation to this doctrine's being a bar of communion. . . . Joseph Smith, Jr., Sidney Rigdon, F. G. Williams."—Church History, vol. 1, p. 301.

The brethren here use pretty strong language on the subject, but they must have considered the occasion demanded strong language. If it deserved such strong condemnation then, should the same doctrine be fostered now? What has wrought the change? Has God revealed to man what these men said, "is not revealed, nor ever shall be revealed"?

The law gave the three presidents a right to decide points of doctrine, and their decision should be final, unless it can be proved it was given in unrighteousness. This is their decision.

They commanded that this doctrine should "be taught no more in Zion." Has "no more" come to an end? Or is it like "for ever and ever," only six days, as one brother argued?

These brethren say, "the state of their destiny was not revealed to man, is not revealed, nor ever shall be revealed, save to those who are made partakers thereof." The "state of their destiny" means the end for them: destiny is the end. Even this, they say, has not been revealed to any man here. They, Joseph and Sidney, as I have noted, saw only their "sufferings," "their torment."

Now I find myself fully in harmony with the decision of the prophet and his two counselors and the standard books of the church as they understood them; so I think I am in good company. No difference how many reply adversely to what I have said, it is still "written" just that way. A long list of questions that are calculated, apparently, to befog the mind of the reader, will never offset "it is written." There are many mysteries we may never know, but what "is written" is for our instruction. It will be well for us to go as far as a theory is revealed, and leave what is not revealed to the Great Teacher.

I can not tell just why the Lord did not "destroy the Devil" in the beginning, instead of at the end. Why does the Lord permit some of the righteous to suffer so much and the wicked go free of pain? Why do infants suffer such intense distress? Why does God not spare them from pain, seeing they have not sinned? I might extend such a list of questions ad libitum, but that would solve no problem. "It is written," or what is written is all that will solve problems relating to eternity, unless God sees fit to reveal more, and then he will not contradict himself.

Yours for the truth "and nothing but the truth,"

J. M. STUBBART.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri.

Editors Herald: I have been nearly twenty years a subscriber to your paper and this is the first time I have attempted to address your readers.

It is twenty years last September since I became a member of the church, and during that time I have found the HERALD a means of education and a source of help and comfort under the varying circumstances of life; and often now read to Sr. Rushton the columns of your paper which has for so long been a personal friend; it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that I would rather miss my breakfast than the pleasure of your company.

Well, it is now fifteen years since I left Leeds, England, in company with Bro. G. T. Griffiths and Bro. and Sr. Edwards, of Wales, whom Bro. Griffiths and I met in Liverpool. We were not feeling very cheerful, as we were parting with loved ones and home. In a few hours we were soon losing sight of the dear old land with its hills and dales and happy memories and deep sea was rolling wider and wider between us. In the course of a week the White Star Liner, Teutonic, had made the journey and we were safely landed in New York to begin our experience in the new world of America, of which we had heard and read such wonderful accounts.

Time has passed along very rapidly and very many changes have taken place, some sorrowful and some pleasant; but I feel thankful that I have been privileged to live and see the manifestation of God's power among the nations, and above all, for the enjoyment of the many blessings which have resulted from the restoration of the everlasting gospel.

Of course there have been trying and disappointing experiences to contend with, and what at one time caused me consternation and heartache was that most of the trials came through those in the church. But to-day I realize that these experiences have been beneficial, and through the things suffered, I turn to my own heart and ask of it: Is the fault mine? Have I done anything to those whom I have known so long and respected always?

It is hard to see the friends of long standing grow cold, and instead of the warm greeting as of yore there is the cold greeting of the stranger. I should like to ask if this is right and why anything like this should exist among us as God's children, whose spiritual standing is secured only by our covenanting to follow and serve him through good and evil report. Let us suppose that one shall speak evil of another and thereby cause another brother or sister to treat that one of whom evil has been spoken with dislike and the cause of the grievance is not divulged, until death shall close the experience of this life; then the one speaking the evil in the first instance has been guilty of a serious wrong which might result in eternal loss to one or more of the parties concerned. It is a serious matter to interfere with the reputation of our brothers and sisters, and we ought to be exceedingly careful that no word of ours shall be like virus injected into the body of Christ to cause corruption or injury to any member or members. For surely in the day of accounts we shall have to answer for the use of time and opportunities of which we have had control.

The preacher said that as a tree falls so shall it lie; and as a man lives he will accordingly produce his eternal destiny, honorable or dishonorable; and in that day shall the secret fault be proclaimed openly and the good motive which had been hidden by the things seen will stand naked and clear.

Some say that there will be a thousand years in which to perfect ourselves and this is the work that the one thousand years will accomplish. I do not so understand it, but have seen that in the millennial reign that the Saints are to live and reign with him as their King and Lord with the redeemed, while those who are living will be changed in the twinkling of an eye and be caught up to meet him and so be for ever with the Lord, while those who are not worthy will not be caught up, but will be left among the foolish virgins to bewail their wasted opportunities. Let us not overlook the principle of divine judgment in which every one will be rewarded according to his works, whether good or ill. God grant we may be among those who shall be worthy to associate with our Lord.

It seems to me already the separating process is going on and those who love the Lord will gather together, while those who love self more than him will gather together, and it may be the final Armageddon will be but the arraying of the forces of righteousness against the forces of evil, and the ultimate triumph of right and justice and love will prove to be the millennium for which we hope and pray. Read John 17, also Matthew 5: 20-26.

To any of friends in England who may like to know what I think of Independence after my residence here for two or three years, I would like to say that the land of Zion is a beautiful country, very much in appearance like some parts of England, as in the counties of Nottingham and Derbyshire. So far as church matters are concerned, there is a splendid Sunday-school, and some excellent young people whose various societies are very fine. It is encouraging to see these young people devoting all their time and ability to the work and making sacrifices repeatedly on its behalf. The school has about eight hundred scholars and teachers. We have some very talented singers in both school and church services who, following the injunction of the apostle and latter-day prophet, "make melody to the Lord with spiritual songs and hymns."

It would be a great pleasure for the Saints in the old country to have the privilege of spending one Sunday here and taking part in all the services and meetings. There are noble brethren who with Bro. Joseph Smith, Bishop Kelley, and R. May are doing all they can for the advancement of the cause and with the great responsibilities upon them need and deserve the faith and prayers of all the faithful people everywhere.

I inclose a dream which I had some time ago, and thinking that the import is of benefit to the young people of the church everywhere I thought perhaps you would publish it. Early on Tuesday morning, August 23, 1908, at the close of the Independence reunion, I had the following dream:

I went up to the church and when going in at the door of a large building, I heard some voices saying quite loudly, "The Savior has come to redeem Zion." This startled me and caused me to say, "Then where are all the people?" As I could see no one I went into the building, and as I did so, I beheld at the other end of the building, right opposite to me, two personages. One was seated on a chair and the other stood over him with his hands upon his head as in the act of ordaining. I could not see the face of either one of the persons, as I only had a side view of the one who stood up, and he appeared to be of Jewish descent, having a large, black beard.

I stopped about the center of the room, for I felt that it would not be decorous of me to intrude, so I stood where I was and watched the ceremony. As I watched I beheld a shaft of light intensely white and beautiful, which appeared to come down immediately above the head of the one in the act of ordaining and was wide enough to encircle the two of them. I noticed that as the speaker would emphasize each sentence the light appeared to increase in brilliancy. It was a most impressive sight to me.

As I stood watching the ceremony, another personage appeared, a beautiful woman, about the average height of women, but very graceful and noble in appearance, and who was wearing a garment similar to a lady's wrapper, which fastened around her neck and fell in folds to her feet, being fastened around the waist by a girdle. I can not describe her appearance, but suffice it to say she was very beautiful to look upon, and as she moved very cautiously towards the two persons she was apparently paying great attention to what was said and finally stopped when about three feet away from them. She was carrying upon her left arm a very fine baby boy quite naked. The child was very intelligent and seemed to understand what was going on; it was also very fair and had beautiful light hair. Over both of these latter figures was a halo of light though smaller than the light over the heads of the men.

After having remained for what appeared in my dream to be a period of five minutes, I was moved to leave and go up-stairs for some purpose, and on going up there I saw several of the brethren and stopped to talk with them for a while. I then said, I am going down-stairs again, and at once proceeded down.

On arriving there I looked for the personages who had attracted my attention before; the woman and the baby had disappeared and another vision was presented. In another part of the room was a large gathering of Saints, brethren and sisters, who were looking upon a large gathering of the priesthood, all of whom were standing up in a large circle of about thirty or more.

I went up to see what was going on, and on my arrival I could not see for the crowd. There being a stand in front of them standing about six feet high, having steps to the top, I went up these steps into the stand, from which I could look down upon the whole circle, and they were noble, good, and princely young men to look upon.

As I looked down upon them there was perfect silence for about three minutes; then they began to speak in tongues, first one and then another, until about six of them had spoken; then some of the brethren and sisters began to speak. After three of them had spoken, then I spoke in tongues very clearly, and to myself very plainly. (I have never spoken in tongues since I came into the church; so I was very much astonished to hear myself speaking in an unknown tongue.) Presently, after having spoken, I felt myself lifted up and carried off the stand and placed down in the midst of the circle, but my feet did not touch the ground by about three feet. As I was suspended there I began to speak to these brethren one by one, and as I moved around, I can not now remember what was said, but after speaking to them I was carried back to the stand and stood looking down again upon the assembly, expecting some one would give the interpretation of the tongues that had been spoken. All seemed to be waiting for this. Presently the voice of the Spirit spoke to us very clearly, and said unto us, "Behold, it is not needful there shall be any interpretation of the tongues which have been given as that will be the language that each will have to go out to the nations with in the isles of the sea and in which the gospel shall be preached."

Now when we heard that some of them wanted to go right away; but the same voice said, "No, you can not go yet; you will have to wait a little while until you are endowed with this power from on high."

When they who were in the circle heard this they all lifted up their heads and with one voice they shouted, "Surely this is the great power of God come down unto his church in these latter days."

After greeting each other they dispersed, each going his way, rejoicing and praising God.

This is my dream and it is presented for what it is worth; but I would like to suggest a careful reading of Matthew 24: 14, also Doctrine and Covenants 108: 3, 4. The endowment is what we are looking for. May we prepare ourselves.

Editors Herald: We truly welcome your pages in our home, as we very rarely hear a sermon outside of them, for we are numbered among the isolated ones. We held a two-day meeting here at Ithaca last August, conducted by Bro. S. W. L. Scott. It was a spiritual feast to us. Bro. Moler gave us a series of sermons a week or two following and we have not heard a sermon since. There are five Saints here, two in one family and three in another, all alive to the work, anxious to do something for the Master's cause, and we thought we would like to help some elder or priest to take care of his family, if there is any one that would move here and take up the work at this place. It is a new place for the gospel, but some have expressed a desire to hear more of the word of God as taught by our people, and I think it is a good place for one of our local elders to do a good work, as there are two large towns near here,—St. Louis and Alma,—and no gospel preached in any of them. Now if there is an elder that will come here and take up the work, we will see he does not starve—physically, at least, as we are farmers, and that means that we have the privilege of raising enough to eat and some to spare, and we would be very glad to share with a brother and family, for are we not all laborers together for God? I know of places where two or three elders live in one town, and see how much more good could be done if they would scatter out more, and so many more people hear the blessed gospel—"good news." Now we live near Ithaca, and go there to meeting, but as we are on a rural delivery route, our address is St. Louis, R. F. D. 6. So if any elder will write to me in regard to moving here, I will gladly answer and give him all the information in my power, as this letter is written in behalf of all the Saints here.

Ever your sister in the one faith,

MRS. CORA SCOTT.

WAKEFIELD, Nebraska, February 19, 1909.

Dear Saints: I know I like to read about the work of our Father in the world. So, perhaps, a few words, as to how his work is prospering in this district will be of interest to some.

Our conference of this Northern Nebraska District is over. It was held at Omaha, February 6 and 7. A good spirit present. Our only lack was in the number of delegates present. So few attend our winter sessions.

Bro. Baker was elected district president, and we hope to see an improvement, as he makes things move—a man of God. And God wants us to be diligent. We are trying to push the home class work in the district, for the Sunday-school. As home class superintendent for the district, I have appointed Sr. Nellie Preston visitor at Springfield; and in Wayne County I have appointed Sr. Bessie Smith, of Wakefield, and have helped her get started. Yesterday we drove to Wisner, Nebraska, and got ten scholars for her class. This will be a good-sized class. I will not be able to reach all the scattered members, and will take this means of asking them to take up the home class work. Our district covers the following counties: Sarpy, Saunders, Butler, Douglas, Washington, Dodge, Colfax, Stanton, Cuming, Burt, Thurston, Wayne, Cedar, Dixon, and Dakota; and takes in one row of townships on the east side of Platte County.

I hope you will all keep this list, as you will then know what district you live in, so you will know who to look to for help along the line of Sunday-school work. Bro. Baker, of Omaha, is superintendent.

I am laboring in Wayne County. Have held some seventeen meetings at one schoolhouse, and the sound of it has spread over the whole county. It is a new opening, and our work has been well received; for which we praise our Father. I expect to do some more preaching here before I leave. The weather has stopped our work, but we expect to make another start. And then to Concord, where Bro. S. C. Hagan lives, and thinks we might do some good. It is a bad time of year to do much. We have had some bad storms lately. Great piles of snow drifted as much as fifteen feet deep in some places. Bro. and Sr. Smith, with whom we are staying, are earnestly trying to get their neighbors acquainted with that saving power which they have felt, as found in the gospel. Such power it does have at times, when people will sit for an hour or more at times under its influence, seeming not to dare to move for fear it will cease. It does our hearts good to see its effect, and we pray that God will bless the people with its light. If any one knows of scattered sheep in this district, we would be glad to hear from you as to where they are, so we might visit them. I feel the glow of a brighter day for this district. This field has never been worked to any great extent; and we hope to see some good live workers sent into this district. We are paying tithes enough to justify the church in giving us some good help.

I wish to say, before I close, that I want to put your name down as tithe-payer, on my book this year. It is not asked that you have dollars. I will give you a receipt for five cents if that is your tithing, and God will bless you for the small amount as well as the larger. The main question is duty, and if I only owe ten cents tithing, and pay it, I have done my duty, just as well as the one that owes ten hundred dollars and pays it. God does not judge people by the amount they are able to pay into the church, but by their willingness to do what he wants them to do. It is said, He requires the heart, and a willing mind. And it is promised that the willing and obedient shall eat the good of the land, while the disobedient shall be cut off. So take your choice. I have heard some say that they did not have anything to pay tithing on. I do not know who could be that way, except those who have complied, or those who are wholly dependent on some one else; and I know some of the latter who pay into the church as the widow's mite. The word says a tenth of our increase; and, as a brother said in the paper, We came into this world with nothing, and all we have above that is increase. So, Saints of God, those of you who love to bear the name, Do your duty, and thereby make the church able to send out many more laborers into the field. The grain is ripe for the harvest. I will receipt you for all tithes and offerings sent to my address: Blair, Nebraska. So will Bro. Schafer, of Omaha. May the grace of God be with you, Amen.

HERBERT S. LYTLE, Bishop's Agent.

FLOMATON, Alabama, March 10, 1909.

Dear Herald: I feel it my duty to try to write you a few words. I can not express my enjoyment in reading letters from all the dear brothers and sisters. There are a few Saints here in this part of the vineyard, but they live a long distance apart. Bro. Booker comes to see us once in a while, and preaches for us. He is about all the elder that comes through here; and we would surely be glad if he would come now. He and Sr. Booker came a few months ago, and we certainly enjoyed their visit.

I ask the prayers of all the Saints that I may live near God every day, and do his blessed will.

Your sister in the one faith,

THENA WADKINS.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. G. A. Hacker, Big Cabin, Oklahoma: "Tuesday, March 9, Brn. Mackey and Smart reached our place after a long drive overland from near Needmore, Bro. Mackey's home. The weather being stormy they rested until next day. Commencing March 10, they preached ten sermons, baptizing two, myself and a neighbor, Bro. Jeffries by name, closing on Thursday night. After meeting Mrs. Jeffries demanded baptism, to be attended to the following Sunday. Resting Friday night, Bro. Smart spoke Saturday night, Sunday, and Sunday night, Bro. Mackey being called home on Saturday before. After the last sermon Bro. Smart organized a Latter Day Saint Sunday-school, to convene April 3, leaving March 22, with many earnest requests to stay longer, or come again. Any elder coming through will find a welcome at our house, southwest of Big Cabin. Those of like faith, having church privilege, please remember us to our God."

Sr. Eunice Shepard, Woodlake, Nebraska: "I was baptized the 8th of August, 1875, by Phineas Cadwell, at Mag-nolia, Iowa. I can say that I have never regretted the step taken, but I do regret that I have not been more faithful. There is no branch here. I have not heard a sermon for ten years. I do not belong to any branch as the one I belonged to broke up and I have not had an opportunity of joining any since. I wish to bear testimony through the HERALD of the many blessings God has bestowed upon me. I have been healed in answer to prayer, and so have my children. My oldest child was taken with brain fever when two months old. The doctor said she would die; that she was so young he could do nothing for her. She was administered to and was healed without one drop of medicine. Dear Saints, pray for me that I may be more faithful. I have taken the Ensign the last two years. It has been a great help to me. I feel that I could not do without it. It is all the preacher we have. I believe that if some of the elders that pass through here would stop, they would do some good here. I do not think any of our elders have ever spoken at this place. They can get the church to hold meetings in. My daughter also wishes to be baptized. I wish to ask all the Saints to pray for me that if it be God's will I may be healed of the rheumatism."

Bro. F. M. Arnold, Texline, Texas: "As the thought of gathering is so common with our people, perhaps an idea of how to get the means to go with would be of interest to some. I have had a great desire to be with a branch, but land is so high in Missouri that I could not think of taking up a big debt, so I came here. This place is in the northeast corner of New Mexico. The town is a good place, and a railroad division, and is on the Texas side. Land on the Texas side is selling at fifteen to twenty dollars per acre. On this side I paid two hundred and fifty dollars for a relinquishment to one hundred and sixty acres of fine land five miles from town. This land in a few years will sell for enough to buy a good little home in Missouri. I saw land in Oklahoma that brought four thousand dollars after six years' settlement, and this land appears to be as good. There is some land to be entered yet, but there are choice quarter sections to be had for two to three hundred dollars. If there are any of our people here I would be glad to have them call on me. If any one comes here I would be glad to give them any information I can."

Bro. W. H. Smart, Fairland, Oklahoma: "I just returned home from where I have been preaching. I left Fairland just one month ago and have preached twenty-four times, baptized five, confirmed five, blessed three children, administered to the sick eight times, opened one new place, and organized a Sunday-school with forty-four scholars. Bro. J. R. Hacker is living here. He takes the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, and the Hope, and he sends them out to do a good work, and he has lived it, too, so his wife and Mr. Jeffries and wife were baptized. So you see he is a great deal to blame for my hard month's labor. Now I see there is much good to be done here. They are all outside of the church but the officers, and have gladly accepted our literature, so I shall make out our order and send it in with this letter. There is no use in telling you just how I feel in this great work, because it is impossible. I surely feel hopeful of the final triumph of the great work of the Lord."

Miss Edna B. Damon, Deer Isle, Maine: "I am a little girl ten years old. I do not belong to the church, but hope to some day. I live with my grandmother and I like to read the HERALD and Hope. My grandmother has been sick ever since last June, and she has not sat up all day at a time since she was in the hospital last October. One night she was dreadfully sick when I went to bed. I saw an angel. I was not awake when she came down. But she woke me up and she said, 'I suppose you think your grandmother is going to die, don't you?' I said, 'I don't know.' But she said, 'She isn't. She is going to get well and live.' And she stayed a little while and then I asked her if she meant grandma and she said yes, and then she put both hands together and disappeared from my sight. I wasn't afraid of her a mite. She was very pretty. She was all dressed in white. I could see all around the room, it was so light. I never saw such a bright light before. She was on the side of my bed. My older sister was in bed with me, but she did not see her. She was asleep. I never went to sleep again after she went away. It was about morning then. My grandmother's name is Mrs. Ellen Billings. I hope she will get well. She is better now."

Mrs. A. V. Davis, Woodburn, Indiana: "Last fall I attended conference at Clear Lake. For about thirty-five years I have had trouble with my ears. They would gather and break. Before I went to conference my right ear gathered and broke, and left me deaf with an awful roaring in my head. I spoke to Bro. S. W. L. Scott, and three of the elders administered to me. It was the first time I had ever been administered to. By the time the afternoon service was over the roaring had ceased, but I was deaf. I spoke to my son and said I was afraid I was going to be left deaf. He said, 'Mamma, have faith.' And I did exercise faith, and my deafness was all gone by the time I got home. It made me think of the scripture, 'A little child shall lead them.' Surely one led me to have more faith. We have another Saint added to our number, a girl of fifteen years, baptized by Bro. Hill. She never heard a sermon, but read the literature."

George Drazy, Volmer, Idaho: "I do not belong to any church, but I am trying to be a good fellow. I have quit drinking and gambling, and think I will soon be good enough for a church member. I have only attended church a time or to, and that was to hear a Latter Day Saint preacher. I think I will investigate, and find out more about it. I did not know the Lord has a church on earth until lately. Several of the boys have quit gambling with me, and the prospect is that we will soon have a pretty well civilized locality."

Mamie Worlund, Tylertown, Mississippi: "We are isolated here. Two Brighamites came here and spent the night some time ago. They argued with papa for some time, and the point they put the most emphasis on was Daniel 2: 44, saying we should not use the word reorganized, because God said the kingdom should never be destroyed; could not be 'reorganized,' if it had never been 'disorganized.' I have been a member of the church two years, and have been healed twice, and know this work to be the true work of God. I am fifteen years old, in the ninth grade, want to finish high school next year and then go to Graceland if I can. I attend Baptist Sunday-school, besides getting my lessons for our Sunday-school. One day in Baptist Sunday-school the superintendent said, 'If you believe you are saved.' Next Sunday I asked him if the Bible did not say the devils believed. He did not seem to know what to do. Would like very much for some of our people to write to me."

O. O. Tillman, Theodore, Alabama: "I am glad that I live in the day and age when the light of the gospel is present to enlighten the minds of God's believing children. Since being ordained an elder I have labored to the best of my ability. Like many others I have my trials and temptations to meet. My motto is to try to do all the good I can for the upbuilding of the great angel message. I know in so doing I will lay up treasures in heaven. The work is getting along nicely in this part, especially in this branch."

G. W. Clements, Cane Island, Arkansas: "The HERALD and Ensign bring news that are a source of strength and happiness to me. We are isolated, only three of us having embraced the glorious message. We extend a warm invitation to the ministry who have visited us to come again, and to any others of the elders who bring this glad message; for we are in the midst of the most bitter opposition. A debate between Bro. D. R. Baldwin and a Reverend Lorange of the Missionary Baptist Church has reflected much credit to the position of the Saints."

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHURCH, KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI.

Our special series of mission services, conducted by President R. C. Evans from March 21 to April 4 inclusive, were completely successful from point of interest and attendance. Only one or two were baptized, but as Bro. Evans remarked, "We do not expect to sow the seed and reap the harvest the same week." Before the meetings began we had carefully planned the details of procedure and advertised as far as means would permit. We had large signs announcing the meetings placed on two sides of the church, also large cardboard signs containing announcement of the meetings and a good picture of Bro. Evans which we placed in store windows and tacked up on posts and elsewhere. All the people of Central Church were invited to submit lists of their relatives and friends residing in the city, to whom we sent a neat invitation, which we had arranged for the purpose, to attend the services. More than five hundred of these invitations were sent out. We had three thousand five hundred handbills containing a list of the subjects and announcement of the meetings and they were nearly all distributed.

I called upon the young people to meet at the church on Tuesday evening before the meetings began and about forty responded and went forth two by two and on that evening visited about one thousand homes and left tracts and gave personal invitations to the special services. About this time I was unfortunate in suffering a case of ptomaine poisoning from eating sardines, which came very near ending my earthly life and hindered my work for a time. Although I was incapacitated for work, others rallied to my support. The Ladies' Aid Society dismissed their meeting and went forth two by two and visited every family in the immediate vicinity of the church and gave them tracts and invitations to the meetings. Elder F. C. Warnky offered to distribute one thousand handbills and he succeeded by giving them out on the street-cars and elsewhere.

The meetings began with a well-filled house. I was painfully disappointed that I could not be present at the beginning of these services for which I had worked and prayed. I called upon President Frederick M. Smith, who, by the way, is "pastor emeritus" of Central Church, to take charge of the services for the day, which he did very acceptably.

The meetings continued through the week with increasing interest. Bro. Evans worked one miraculous innovation in that he made long sermons popular. No one murmured at a sermon nearly one hour and a half long, and personally, I must say I never witnessed an audience giving better attention to a speaker than I observed night after night while our brother was speaking. After the sermon opportunity was given to submit written questions to be answered publicly. Some nights we had as many as fifteen, and it was marvelous how readily the answer came to every query. Strange and new faces might be seen in the audience every night, and many of the strangers were very outspoken in their approval of what they heard. Many of the Saints who have been inactive were stirred up and revived. One brother remarked, "I work hard all day and I think I will not go to meeting to-night, but when meeting-time comes I just can't stay away."

The meeting closed on Sunday evening, April 4, with a crowded house. Every face was beaming with delight and one brother remarked, "LaRue felt as good as Paul did when he was caught up to the third heaven." Some said Bro. Evans gave his best sermon in closing, but to me they were all so good it is difficult to judge which was the best. God has blessed our brother with wonderful ability and to him be all the glory!

On Saturday evening, April 3, about one hundred and fifty Saints and friends met by invitation at the home of Bro. and Sr. W. R. Pickering and held a reception in honor of President Evans. An address of affection and appreciation was made, also a purse of money was given him with instructions to be sent to his wife. To this he responded feelingly, being deeply touched as surrounded by the warm and tender hearts of devoted friends. He related several incidents of his eventful and busy life, all of which were intensely interesting. Light refreshments were served, and altogether the occasion was of the kind which lingers pleasantly in memory.

The work at Central Church is as yet practically new, and I believe that because of the impetus given by these splendid meetings we may reasonably look for increased interest and activity.

Our Religio, Sunday-school, and branch membership is steadily on the increase and we trust it may continue.

In closing I wish to say that the above series of meetings were the most lively and interesting of any that I have ever participated in and some of us are wondering what we could do with a big meeting in Convention Hall, Kansas City, about one year hence with R. C. in the limelight. I would like to see it tried and perhaps we shall. I must not fail to mention that during the meetings I gave out several hundred tracts and pamphlets and sold several of our books to strangers. From whom we hope to reap some tangible results in time. The people of the Central Church deserve commendation for their manifest unselfishness, and hearty cooperation and earnest work, which contribute to the success of the effort, with which I am perfectly satisfied.

Convention Minutes.

MOBILE.—Sunday-school association of the Mobile District met in convention with the Bluff Creek Branch March 5, 1909, at 3.30 p. m., N. L. Booker chosen to preside. Reports from Theodore and Three Rivers read and approved. Officers for the year elected: Oscar Tillman superintendent, A. G. Miller assistant superintendent, Edna Cochran secretary, Frank Stiner treasurer, Oscar Tillman librarian. N. L. Booker, T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, and Sr. Frances Booker were elected delegates to the General Convention and were authorized to cast majority and minority vote. Motions prevailed "that we hold Sunday-school entertainments on Friday evenings before the convening of conferences, provided the Religio convention will meet in joint session with the Sunday-school convention on Friday afternoon." "That we communicate with the Religio convention asking them to meet in joint session with the Sunday-school convention." "That each local be requested to take a collection once each month for the district association." "That each local hold a business-meeting at the end of each quarter." Convention adjourned to meet on Friday afternoon prior to the convening of the next district conference. Edna Cochran, secretary, Vancleave, Mississippi.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA.—District Religio met in semiannual convention at San Francisco, February 26, 1909, at 10 a. m. The district officers were chosen to preside over the convention. Opening address by Bro. F. A. Smith. Treasurer reported $17.97 on hand. The different locals reporting were Sacramento, Oakland, San Francisco, Chico, Stockton, and San Jose. No report from Santa Rosa. The reports show a total membership of 264 for the district. Delegates to the General Convention: F. A. Smith, Bro. and Sr. J. M. Terry, C. A. Parkin, C. E. Crumley, C. C. Joehnk, Sr. Napier, Bro. and Sr. W. W. Morrison. Next convention to be held at the same time and place as next district conference. An entertainment was given by the Sunday-school and Religio in the evening. Pauline Napier, secretary, 2130 Jay Street, Sacramento, California.

PITTSBURG.—Sunday-school convention convened at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, with Superintendent C. E. Miller in charge. Schools reporting, five. Delegates to General Convention: G. T. Griffiths, C. Ed. Miller, R. Baldwin, J. A. Becker, J. W. Davis, and R. C. Russell. Officers for the ensuing term: C. Ed. Miller, superintendent; J. A. Jacques, assistant superintendent; Louis A. Serig, secretary and treasurer; L. P. Curry, librarian. Time and place for next convention was left to the officers. Due notice will be given. Louis A. Serig, secretary.

NORTHEASTERN TEXAS AND CHOCTAW.—District Sunday-school met with the Wilburton, Oklahoma, Sunday-school, February 25, 1909, with A. Z. Rudd in the chair. Bro. Rudd gave a short talk on Sunday-school work. Reports from the following schools were read: Holdenville, Haileyville, Wilburton, and Fanshawe. Reports from superintendent and N. A. Goss, superintendent of Fanshawe Sunday-school, were read. Bro. John Harp gave a short talk on Sunday-school work. Election of officers was then taken up, resulting in the reelection of the former officers, as follows: Superintendent, A. Z. Rudd; assistant superintendent, J. S. White; assistant secretary, Lula Perkins; and treasurer, Mrs. J. S. White. Sr. Laura Harder was elected to district library commission. Treasurer reported: On hand last report $1.66, collected at Holdenville convention $1.27, collected at Haileyville, 31 cents; total $3.24. Adjourned to meet at same place and day previous to next conference. Lula Perkins, secretary.

Died.

HARTZ.—Elvin, the son of Bro. and Sr. Joseph Hartz, Akron, Ohio, died March 9, 1909, aged 5 years, 4 months, and 13 days. Took sick the last day of February with scarlet fever, and a very sore throat, which it is believed terminated in diphtheria, causing death. About the last words he said were that he was going to see his little brother Clarence who died about fourteen months previous. A very hard blow to his parents. May God be with them in the hour of trouble. Sermon by James M. Connaughy.

O'CONNOR.—Near Twin Creek, Kansas, Laurence David, son of Bro. and Sr. J. C. O'Connor. Born January 21, 1900; died March 13, 1909, aged 9 years, 1 month, and 20 days. Little Laurence was a great sufferer from appendicitis. Surgical operation and administration proved of no avail. Parents, six brothers, and two sisters mourn their loss. Services conducted by Elder L. F. Johnson, at the home. A large gathering of relatives and friends attested their deep sympathy.

FLETCHER.—Sr. Huldah Fletcher was born November 29, 1866, in Trempealeau County, Wisconsin, and died March 3, 1909. She was baptized at Clitherall, Minnesota, two years ago, after our reunion, by J. W. Smith. She leaves husband and six children, also her aged parents to mourn their loss. We earnestly pray that memories of the one gone before may serve yet more and more to center their desires on that heavenly home, where she awaits their coming. She was a good Saint, and a faithful Sunday-school worker. The services were held from the union church, Elder Lurett Whiting officiating.

KINNEY.—Walter, was born August 25, 1831, in Cayuga County, New York; died March 14, 1909, at the age of 77 years, 6 months, and 17 days. Was baptized October 7, 1857, at Zarahemla, Wisconsin, by Z. H. Gurley; ordained an elder April 7, 1858, by Z. H. Gurley, in which office he labored faithfully until almost the day of his death. Was married to Miss Edith I. Stone January 1, 1869, whose death preceded his by only a few months. Eight children graced this union, seven remaining to mourn. Funeral was held at the Delaney church, March 15, 1909. Sermon by Elder Fred B. Farr. Bro. Kinney has lived over twenty-eight years near Cameron, Missouri, and was well respected and loved by all that knew him. Another Saint is at rest.

FISK.—John Bell Fisk was born in Montgomery, Hamilton County, Ohio, February 26, 1825. Died at Guide Rock, Nebraska, August 27, 1908: On June 19, 1851, he was married to Miss Lucretia E. Hunter, who died in October, 1870. Of this union were born four sons and three daughters. On October 25, 1874, he was married to Miss Mary S. Rogers, who survives him at the age of seventy-five years. In March, 1865, he enlisted in Company I of the Ninety-second Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, and served until the close of the war. In early life he chose the medical profession as his life's work. During his residence in Illinois he united with the Christian Church. Later in life he changed his religious views, and in 1878 united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, at Gallands Grove, Iowa, and was a firm believer until death.

MANION.—Sr. Elizabeth J. Manion passed peacefully away, at the home of her daughter, near Santa Rosa, California, on March 13, 1909, at 2 a. m. She had reached the ripe age of four-score years and five. She died with her heart heavenward and her face Zionward—at peace with God. Four children remain to mourn the separation from them of a good mother. A profusion of flowers and the presence of a large number of bereaved and sympathizing friends at the funeral-service testified of the high esteem in which she was held. Funeral-service held in undertaking chapel, Santa Rosa, March 15, in charge of Elder B. N. Fisher; sermon by J. M. Terry.

JONES.—Susan F., at Omaha, Nebraska, March 17, 1909. Our sister was born at Burtontown, New Jersey, April 10, 1827, and joined the church in an early day. Her body was laid to rest in Forest Lawn Cemetery, March 21. Funeral-service in charge of Elder Edward Rannie.

were read and after slight corrections were approved.

The special order for Saturday having been uncompleted at that session it was again taken up.

President F. M. Smith was called to the chair.

Clause No. 3 of the auditors' report was read, as also the Bishop's answer to the same. Clause No. 3 was in regard to elders' overdue allowances being shown as a liability. A motion to adopt the recommendation contained in the auditors' report was made. A substitute was offered that the recommendation be not concurred in. This substitute after considerable discussion was lost and the original motion prevailed. A motion then carried to adopt the Bishop's answer to Clause No. 3.

A motion prevailed to limit speeches in the further consideration of the matter to five minutes.

Clause No. 4 was taken up and read, as also the Bishop's answer. Clause No. 4 was in regard to liability on account of debt of the First Kansas City Church. A motion was made to adopt the auditors' recommendation. A substitute was offered to adopt the Bishop's answer.

The matter coming to a vote the substitute to adopt the Bishop's answer was carried.

Clause No. 5 in regard to Sanitarium account was considered, and a motion to adopt the auditors' report was carried.

Announcements were then made; song No. 216 was sung; and President Joseph Smith made the closing prayer.

TUESDAY, APRIL 13.

The nine o'clock prayer service was in charge of R. Bullard and J. A. Becker.

The eleven o'clock preaching was by T. W. Chatburn, assisted by F. J. Chatburn.

A MASS MEETING OF THE ELDERSHIP.

At the call of the Bishopric a mass meeting of the Melchisedec priesthood was held in the lower auditorium Friday forenoon, April 9. Important matters connected with the redemption of Zion and the onward progress of the work were discussed. The large room was well filled with ministers from the various quorums. A splendid spirit was present.

Those individuals who with a very limited knowledge of affairs are preaching the gospel of retrogression and hold that the church is not progressing simply do not know what they are talking about. They do not understand conditions; neither do they understand the obstacles in the way nor the efforts that are being made to remove them. Unfortunately we have a few who will neither march nor get out of the ranks; but the great main body is moving forward as fast as they can see the way clear.

SOME AMUSING INCIDENTS.

No matter how seriously business may be jogging along in its accustomed routine some little incident may happen unexpectedly to relieve the tedium and amuse the legislators. Our people catch a humorous point quickly and are not afraid to smile. Such incidents usually have a temporary or local coloring and in another setting might not be observed; but just as they happen they appeal to the risibilities of some one or many and so the ripples of merriment spread.

One such incident occurred when the presiding officer unrolled a narrow strip of paper fully two yards long and it was discovered to be a petition asking for the return of a certain elder to a particular branch or district. Visions of what the conference would look like if our legislative halls were festooned with like petitions from all branches and districts flashed before the mind's eye.

A certain question touching the right of presidency in district conferences was deferred from last year and made the special business of the third day of conference. The time arrived. The matter was called up. Speeches were limited to ten minutes. The presiding officer, Bro. F. M. Smith, had his watch in hand to time speakers. The psychological moment was at hand. But no one arose to speak. Presently some one began to smile. It spread. The resolution was put without a speech,—and lost.

The assembly had listened patiently to the reading of the financial report of the Bishop; this had been followed by the reading of the auditors' report,—dollars, dollars, dollars. Then the secretary took up the report of the Church Recorder and read,

"There have been placed on record — dollars," instead of, "There have been placed on the record — names." Are they worth a dollar a head? Anyway the tension was broken and the people enjoyed a hearty and prolonged laugh.

SUNDAY AT THE CONFERENCE.

Probably Sunday was the "biggest day" of the conference. Six preaching-services were held at the church, besides the prayer-meeting, the Sunday-school, and two sermons at the Saints' Homes.

The attendance at these meetings was good and the interest excellent; but one could not have heard the proverbial pin drop because it happened that one of the most severe of our customary spring winds was roaring around the church, rattling the windows, and blowing dust and leaves in upon the congregation.

Visitors from California, Massachusetts, Alabama, and Canada united in condemning our Iowa weather. Travelers to various sections of the world report that each has its own peculiar brand of bad weather. Some of them have noticed that when they call the attention of old residents to the weather conditions they are assured that it is "something unusual,"—it was never so hot or so cold or so dry or so wet. Mindful of this and of the illustrious example set by George Washington we assured our friends that it often blows in Lamoni during March and April; in fact marked atmospheric disturbances often occur during the General Conferences.

None of those who took part Sunday will resent special mention of our venerable President, who occupied the morning hour in the upper auditorium, assisted by his brother, Alexander H. Smith. He spoke with his old-time clearness and vigor of thought and his sermon was much appreciated.

THE PREACHING-SERVICES.

The sermons during the conference have been highly inspirational. One thing is noticeable—not a matter of unusual observation, however,—and that is that the Saints still love the old themes. Perhaps no two sermons up to this writing have been received with more marked favor than those by Elder Arthur Leverton of Canada, and Elder J. W. Wight. The first was on the subject of continued revelation; the second dealt with the subject of restoration.

To call attention to one sermon as better than all others, when all are good, would be useless and at best would represent only individual taste,—it might be that some other sermon would carry a majority vote of preference.

It was remarked by the Presidency at the first session that the Twelve were not holding night sessions and consequently would be available as preachers at evening services. While the Twelve did not receive the announcement with shouts of approval they have taken their turn and the Saints have appreciated their counsel and advice.

One thing can be truthfully said about our ministers: They are individualists. They bear the trade-mark of no theological school. Each one follows his own process of thought and states his conclusions in his own way. If there are imitators they do not wear long, and they are few in number.

IN THE HEAT OF DEBATE.

Our people have never indorsed the idea held by John Alexander Dowie, who defended his regime by saying that the shepherd never asked the sheep to vote on any subject. Every man who holds delegate or ex officio right of voice and vote cherishes his right to originate legislation if he chooses to do so and can win a majority of the voters to his way of thinking, and to express himself by voice and vote on pending legislation originated by others.

As a natural result such a democratic assembly may witness some very earnest expressions of reasons or fancied reasons for voting in certain ways. Headend collisions of thought are not infrequent. Sometimes the results are distressing to the sensitive. But more and more we are learning to defend our own rights without trampling on the rights of others; to respect the opinions of others without surrendering our own.

The discussion at this conference, up to this writing, (April 11,) has been very earnest, but has been noticeably free from animosity and from personal attacks. In fact it is a matter of policy for speakers to avoid personalities, because one who indulges in them always injures his own cause. Policy, however, will not restrain one when his processes of thought and his spiritual conditions are not right. We are not sorry for that, as we would not wish policy to be equal to Christianity as a restraining influence.

When interests clash the great body of the delegates usually keep cool and endeavor impartially to judge matters and settle the question in a way that will be just to all. Our safety lies in a majority that can not be swayed by passion or sentiment; who re alert and intelligent,—men of brain and of courage.

A REVELATION TO THE ELDERSHIP.

In compliance with a request made by Bishop E. L. Kelley a mass meeting of those holding the Melchisedec priesthood was held in the lower auditorium of the Brick Church, April 9, at nine o'clock in the forenoon. The Bishop presented certain matters to the assembly pertaining to the purchasing of land and the settling of Saints thereon, the holding of property in trust for the church, and other matters connected with the temporal affairs of the church. After some discussion the entire matter was referred to the First Presidency with the request that it be presented to the Lord and an effort be made to ascertain his will. This assembly of the eldership was called together again Saturday afternoon and again Monday morning (April 19) at eight o'clock in the forenoon. At the latter meeting President Joseph Smith presented the following document which was by vote of the assembly referred to the several quorums of the Melchisedec priesthood. At another mass meeting in the afternoon the quorums reported favorably upon the document and it was referred to the conference. The Conference adopted it at the afternoon session, April 20:

To the Eldership; Brethren: So far as the burden of the conference and its peculiar conditions have enabled me to do I have steadfastly presented the matter stated by the bishop for our consideration to the Lord for instruction. Whether that which has come to me will bring relief to the situation, I know not; but such as it is, I hereby present it.

1. The conditions surrounding the work, the increase of the membership of the church, the increasing desire for gathering together, and the necessity existing for the obtaining places for settlement in the regions round about, under the existing laws of the United States, and especially the state of Missouri, requires that the bishopric be authorized to take such measures as will bring to pass the organization of those who are desirous and willing to form parts in colonization under terms of association in different localities where settlements may be made and may lawfully secure and hold property for the benefit of themselves and their fellow church members and the whole body of the church when organized.

2. The work to be done belongs to those who are by command of God made the custodians of the properties of the church; and these by their appointment are empowered to prosecute the work of caring for and using such properties as are confided to their care to accomplish the end designed.

3. The bishop and his counselors, together with the other bishops of the church, and such other officers as the bishop may call together, with whom he may confer in council, are authorized to devise the methods of procedure; and they will be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care.

4. Counsel has already been given to those gathering into the regions round about to consult with the elders and the bishops before removing into those regions, that such removal may be accomplished through the having of all things prepared before them who seek to remove and become resident in the regions round about.

5. It is well to understand that the term "regions round about" must mean more than a small area of country round about the central spot, and that the necessities of the great majority of the church in gathering together can only be provided for by settling carefully together as many in one region as may be practicable and profitable and in accordance with the feelings of the people under the laws existing in the places where such settlements are to be made.

The great variety of callings, avocations, and professions will present difficulties precluding the practicability of all settling and living in near proximity to each other. It is therefore within the province of those upon whom the burden of organization may rest to provide for other organizations or associations than those simply pastoral or agricultural. Under this head there may be placed industrial associations of such sorts as the varied qualifications existing among workmen may demand.

7. It has been prophesied that the Gentiles shall assist in rebuilding the waste places of Zion. This can not refer to the inhabitants of Zion who are the pure in heart, but must refer to the places which have been occupied or which it may be contemplated to occupy in the regions round about. The saints can not occupy in any place on the land of Zion which is not under the domination of civil law, and as citizens of the state, holding their liberties under the law, there must be a proper recognition and observance of these laws. The Lord has said that this condition of obedience to law must continue until He comes whose right it is to come and assumes to reign over his people. Under the provisions of the laws these organizations or associations must be instituted and carried to completion if they shall be of benefit to those who shall be engaged in them.

8. The Spirit saith further: That these organizations contemplated in the law may be effected and the benefits to be derived therefrom be enjoyed by the saints, in such enjoyment they can not withdraw themselves so completely from a qualified dependence upon their Gentile neighbors surrounding them as to be entirely free from intercommunication with them; yet it is incumbent upon the Saints while reaping the benefits of these organizations to so conduct themselves in the carrying into operation the details of their organizations as to be in the world but not of it, living and acting honestly and honorably before God and in the sight of all men, using the things of this world in the manner designed of God, that the places where they occupy may shine as Zion, the redeemed of the Lord.

9. The bishop should be directed and authorized to proceed as soon as it shall be found practicable by consultation with the general authorities of the church who are made the proper counselors in spiritual and temporal things to carry out the provisions of the law of organization which are by the law made the duty of the bishop.

JOSEPH SMITH.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 18, 1909.

A REVELATION TO THE CHURCH.

At the afternoon session, Monday, April 19, President Joseph Smith presented to the assembly a document containing a revelation of God's will concerning certain matters affecting the church. The document was referred to the quorums, and the business-meeting adjourned. At the afternoon session of the twentieth it was again presented to the conference, reports of the quorums were heard, and it was adopted:

To the Church: After constant meditation and prayer, both before and after coming to conference and during the sessions, so far as the peculiar conditions obtaining in our sittings had permitted, I was in the Spirit during the nights of the 15th and 16th of the month and the day passing between at such times during the calm that occasionally ensued and the quiet of the night when the burden of my care forbade sleep. My dreams also have been enlightening and encouraging.

1. The voice of the Spirit to me is: Under conditions which have occurred it is no longer wise that my servant R. C. Evans be continued as counselor in the presidency; therefore it is expedient that he be released from this responsibility and another be chosen to the office. He has been earnest and faithful in service and his reward is sure.

2. My servant Joseph Luff can not fulfill the duties of a member of the Quorum of Twelve in actively looking after and caring for the missionary work in the field and discharge the duties of his calling as a physician ministering to the many seeking his advice and aid with safety to himself and others. It is wise therefore that the church release him from the responsibilities of the active apostleship as a member of the quorum, that he may act unreservedly in his calling. Another may be chosen to the office in the quorum. He has been faithful, and his record and reward are in my hand.

3. That the historian of the church, my servant Heman C. Smith, may more freely and efficiently pursue his duties and privileges as historian, the church may release him from the burden attendant upon him as an apostle in the quorum and choose another to occupy therein. He has been long in the service, has done his duties well in the spirit of self-sacrifice, and his reward is with me. He will be blessed in diligent service in his calling as historian when relieved of the double responsibility.

4. These my servants who are relieved from their responsibilities of the quorum work have wrought well in their service with their fellow servants, and must retain their right to labor in the ministry, holding the high priesthood and entitled to all that appertains to that calling when need requires or wisdom directs.

5. The Spirit saith further to me: To fill the vacancy caused by the releasing of Counselor R. C. Evans, present the name of my servant Elbert A. Smith, the son of my servant David H. Smith, who was taken and who awaits his reward, to be chosen, appointed, and ordained as counselor to my servant Joseph Smith and to be one of the presidency.

6. The Spirit saith further: In order that the places of those taken from the twelve may be supplied and the quorum filled that it may act as a whole, my servants J. F. Curtis and Robert C. Russell may be chosen and set apart to the office of apostles and be enrolled and sustained in the quorum. Other servants there are who will be called and appointed ere long, but not now.

7. Those who are holding the office of patriarchs are to be enrolled with the high priests, the same as the bishops, who are acting in their office by virtue of their being high priests. These men in their office are an order in the priesthood, the same as the high councils of the church and the stakes and as the bishops who hold as high priests, as the quorum of the twelve, and as the presidency are but orders in the priesthood, there being but two priesthoods; and these are orders in the Melchisedec priesthood. There is no difference in the priesthood, though there may be and is in the office in which the several orders may occupy and act.

8. The Spirit saith further: The attention of the church is called to the consideration of the revelation, given in answer to earnest supplication, with regard to temporal things. The word has been already given in agreement with revelations long since delivered to the church, that the temporalities of the church were to be under the charge and care of the bishopric, men holding the office of bishop under a presiding head acting for the church in the gathering, caring for, and disbursing the contributions gathered from the saints of moneys and properties under the terms of tithing, surplus, free-will offerings, and consecrations. The word which has been given at a late period should not have been so soon forgotten and disregarded by the church or any of its members. "I am God; I change not;" has been known to the church and the eldership since the coming of the angel with the message of restoration. Under it the church has sought the Lord and received from time to time that which was deemed sufficient for the time to govern the church and its ministers, both of the spiritual and the temporal divisions of the work. The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed. Therefore, hearken once again unto the voice of inspiration, in warning and instruction, and conform to that which is given and receive what is awaiting the upright and the pure in heart.

9. The Spirit saith further unto the church: The Lord is well pleased with the advancement which has been made in approaching unity during the conference year; and though there may have been differences of opinion, these differences have been held in unity of purpose and desire for the good of my people, and will result in helping to bring to pass a unity of understanding. So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory. Amen.

General Conference Notes

THE HISTORIC GAVEL.

During the business-session of Wednesday, April 14, President Joseph Smith presented the church with the gavel that he has used for over thirty years. His statement that he did not expect to use the gavel again caused a feeling of melancholy to pervade the audience. Of course this act did not signify in any sense that he thereby relinquished his place as president of the church; it simply meant that failing sight and hearing render it impracticable for him to preside at business-sessions. Believing that his speech of presentation will be of interest to our readers who were not present we quote it for their benefit:

Some thirty years ago this gavel was presented to me by the Saints in Texas at the hand of Bro. Davis H. Bays. I have had it in my possession ever since and used it at succeeding conferences, missing only one spring conference, and I think possibly two fall conferences. I return the gavel to the body. I may never wield it again. It belongs to the body and it has been suggested by my colleagues that it be presented to you, and that if you see fit to order it into the archives of the church where it will be kept as a relic, why, I should be pleased to have you do so.

In making this surrender I hope I may be able to meet with you for years and years to come, but we know not what is in the dispensation of the Almighty altogether. But in doing it I feel to thank you, as a representative of the body over which I have presided, from time to time, by the good will of the people, and to thank you and them for the reverence that they have always shown for this emblem of authority derived from God and the people, not only on my own behalf, but on behalf of those who have temporarily been invested with the right to preside over your body by courtesy or by your call, realizing that this reverence and respect for rule has been the voluntary service of men engaged in a common cause, divested from the idea of personality. I surrender it upon the hypothesis that those who are coming after must partake of those who are passing away. All old things must pass and other things take their places, or the old become new. I have tried to grow old gracefully. I am trying to let go of the things of this life gracefully. I hope to be able to do so by God's permission.

A vote of special thanks for his long and faithful services was extended; after which the congregation stood, and those who could sufficiently control their feelings sang:

We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet
To guide us in these latter days;
We thank thee for sending the gospel
To lighten our minds with its rays;
We thank thee for every blessing
Bestowed by thy bounteous hand;
We feel it a pleasure to serve thee,
And love to obey thy commands.

When dark clouds of trouble hang o'er us,
And threaten our peace to destroy,
There is hope smiling brightly before us,
And we know that deliv'rance is nigh;
We doubt not the Lord nor his goodness,
We've proved him in days that are past;
The wicked who fight against Zion
Will surely be smitten at last.

We'll sing of his goodness and mercy;
We'll praise him by day and by night;
Rejoice in his glorious gospel,
And bask in its life-giving light;
Thus on to eternal perfection
The honest and faithful will go;
While they who reject this glad message,
Shall never such happiness know.

THE PERSONNEL OF THE PRESIDENCY.

The passing of the gavel from the hands of President Joseph Smith naturally attracts attention to the members of the First Presidency, especially as presiding officers at the business-meetings of the General Conference.

Although he is a capable chairman, President R. C. Evans, is preëminently the preacher, and appears at the best advantage in the pulpit. At this writing he has not occupied the chair during the regular business part of a single session of the conference. This is probably in harmony with his own wish.

President Joseph Smith's qualities as a presiding officer are too well known to need extended comment. One of the elders, indulging in a reminiscent mood, recently remarked, "When he was a young man he was the most remarkable man that I ever knew, without exception. With some other one in the chair the business of the conference might get into an apparently hopeless tangle. Motion on motion might be piled up and the chairman be in helpless confusion. President Smith would take the chair and in five minutes he would bring order out of chaos and everything would be running smoothly. He never forgot anything or overlooked anything that should be attended to, and kept the entire business of the conference in his mind."

President Frederick M. Smith, to whose lot it has fallen to wield the gavel, is in every way a worthy successor and present support to his father. It is not too much to say that he is blessed with a special gift of presidency. Each year sees his popularity and strength as a chairman increase. To native qualities of firmness, clearness of thought, and justice, he has added a thorough knowledge of parliamentary usages. As a result he is simply master of each situation as it arises.

All this is apparent to those who attend the conference. They know that there are no favored individuals in the audience, and further that when he says, "The vote has been ordered and it will be taken," that it will be taken,—that is all there is to it. But they are perhaps not so conscious of the amount of hard work and thorough study quietly performed during the year in order to "make good" where the Lord has placed him. That which is not seen may be understood by that which is seen.

TWO BY TWO.

Some of our people from time to time raise the question of the ministry going out two by two. The church has endeavored to carry out that rule within the bounds of reason and under the conditions wherein it is applicable. At this conference a petition from the Central California District conference again brought the matter before the church. The resolution was referred to the Twelve and they reported as follows:

To the General Conference Assembled; Greeting: I am authorized by the Quorum of Twelve to report to you as follows; on the petition from the Central California District asking that we send out missionaries two and two.

We respectfully call your attention to the following from the First Presidency, which was adopted by the Twelve:

"Brethren: In the matter of question touching the revelation of 1863, in which it is stated that in sending the gospel to the nations it is expedient that the elders be sent 'two by two,' it is our understanding that refers to missions taken into foreign lands, or into fields not previously occupied, or organized into districts or missionary fields; and that it does not necessarily apply to the mission fields as now organized in the United States and Territories, except it might be in entirely new and large districts.

Signed,

"JOSEPH SMITH.

"W. W. BLAIR."

"April, 1891.

The following resolution was adopted later on:

"Whereas, The Lord has on different occasions directed that we should send our missionaries forth two by two, therefore be it

"Resolved, That henceforth we comply with said requirement so far as practicable." April, 1891.

Again in April, 1907, the following was passed by the quorum:

"Resolved, That we agree to send our men (doing missionary labor) two by two."

The quorum has adhered to these rules so far as practicable under the circumstances and conditions governing.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Secretary of the Twelve.

THE Z. R.-L. S.; ITS GROWTH AND FUTURE PLANS.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society reports to the conference through its president, J. A. Gunsolley, indicating a healthy growth and plans for active work in the coming year:

The reports of the officers showed a very satisfactory increase in membership, there being a total membership of 9,795, a gain over last year of 1,435; a gain in locals of 26, the present number being 242.

The following appropriations were made for work next year: $250 for general work, subject to the order of the executive committee, this amount being outside of the family allowance of the president while doing field work; $100 for the use of the general library commission; $100 for gospel and research work among the Lamanites; $50 for the building up of the library of Graceland College; and the work of the normal department was referred to the executive committee to provide for the financial support, which committee pledged $50.

The executive committee have decided upon the following: To continue the Thanksgiving offering for the translation of the Book of Mormon into foreign languages; to continue activity in field work, endeavoring to reach as many points as consistent and possible; to supply free Quarterlies to the missionaries and general church officers engaged in general work.

VISITORS DISCOVER THAT THE CHURCH HAS A COLLEGE.

The board of trustees of Graceland College sends in a report showing an increased attendance at the college and indicating improvement in the working forces of the institution.

Graceland students have taken an interest in the deliberations of the conference, many of them being present at business-sessions as delegates from their home districts. In various ways visitors are made aware that this is a college town.

For instance, incoming delegates to the conventions and conference the evening of April 2 were greeted by an immense crowd, a brass band, and volleys of college yells. They learned then that the reception was not for them. The train bore the college debating team returning from their victorious conflict with Amity College. The debaters, A. M. Carmichael, of California, J. L. Wheeler, of Kansas, and F. M. McDowell, of Wisconsin, were seized and lifted to the shoulders of their fellow students and borne in triumph to an awaiting vehicle. Conference visitors who had arrived on the same train slipped away unnoticed and feeling unimportant. Anyway they knew that there was a college somewhere in the neighborhood,—one that trains debaters. If any had felt grave apprehensions that future years would see a dearth of orators to occupy the time at our annual conferences this fact brought them solace.

Returning to the trustees we note their report:

LAMONI, Iowa, April 13, 1909.

To the Conference: The Board of Trustees of Graceland College herewith submit their annual report. The work during the present school year has been under the immediate direction of President D. A. Anderson. We find encouragement in his report of a net enrollment of 191, of whom 145 are taking academic work. This is a very substantial increase over the enrollment of any previous year, and we trust that by wise management the increase may not only be maintained, but that future years may multiply the number many times.

The library and museum have been placed in charge of Professor Fitzpatrick, who is in every way competent to oversee this important department of our work and which in the past has been neglected. We believe that we are in a position to solicit contributions to both the library and museum and can give assurance that whatever is contributed will be properly cared for.

The increased attendance at Graceland made the building of a dormitory for girls absolutely necessary in the minds of the trustees, and in the past year Patroness' Hall has been erected and furnished and is now occupied as a girls' dormitory, and gives room for a dining-room for the accommodation of both the girls and boys. This building cost about seventy-five hundred dollars, for a statement of which we refer you to the treasurer's report.

The industrial department continues about the same as last year; those in charge are learning lessons by experience that seemingly could not be learned in any other way. Changes will be made to overcome the obstacles that appear and we still hope to maintain our purpose announced a few years ago, that the young people of the church should have an equal opportunity for an education if they were willing to put forth the necessary effort. We need hardly inform you that to make this possible, those who are able to contribute for the maintenance of the college should do so as liberally as possible.

The terms of office of R. M. Elvin and F. W. Newcomb expire with this conference, and we request that the conference provide for their successors.

Respectfully, in bonds,
F. B. BLAIR, Secretary.

AN ORATORICAL CONTEST.

We do not refer to the numerous oratorical contests that have enlivened the business-sessions. We have in mind the annual oratorical contest of Grace-land College held at the Brick Church Friday evening, April 16. It was a very pleasant variation from the regular order of the conference, and visitors and delegates availed themselves of the opportunity to be present and get points on oratory.

The judges were F. G. Pitt, T. W. Williams, and E. L. Kelley; the contestants were Leslie S. Wight, J. Lawrence Wheeler, Ira D. M. Stubbart, and Floyd M. McDowell; the prize was a year's scholarship in Graceland. Leslie S. Wight was the successful contestant; J. Lawrence Wheeler won second place. Leslie is the oldest son of Elder J. W. Wight.

The four students above mentioned did credit to their college. They are alert, clean, enterprising young fellows. The church is making no mistake in helping such young men to an education. The morning following the contest the winner was handling a spade in connection with the gang that is now laying mains for the new water system of the town; in fact, he was at the head of the ditch as he had been at the head of the oratorical contest.

THE SALT LAKE "TRIBUNE" ON THE BISHOP'S REPORT.

There has always been a mutual understanding between the church and her financial agents that an exact and detailed report of all money received and expended under the head of tithing or otherwise shall be made public. Not only that but the church has an auditing committee that scrutinizes the report and the accounts on which it is based. This committee, unlike the one in Utah, is not nominated by the trustee-in-trust whose accounts they are to audit.

The Bishop's report for the past year was published in the HERALD of April 7. The auditor's report was presented to conference and its recommendations were discussed at length. Their report with all resolutions bearing thereon, will appear in full in the official conference minutes that will be published in connection with the HERALD at a little later date. All this has impressed the "Gentile" organ in Utah and is made the basis of an editorial that has appeared during this conference. We do not join with the Tribune in charging fraud at the door of the church leaders in Utah, because we do not know whether or not fraud exists; and that is the point that we have urged before,—no one outside of the elect few can know. We quote from the Salt Lake Tribune, April 14:

The other day the Deseret News arrogantly asked what church in this country made report to its members concerning receipts and expenditures of moneys; and the Tribune replied that for one, the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints did that very thing.

To-day we are in receipt of a copy of the SAINTS' HERALD, the official organ of that organization, dated Lamoni, Iowa, April 7, 1909. In that issue we find a "bishop's (the Presiding Bishop's) annual report of receipts and expenditures of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints from January 10, 1908, to January 10, 1909." This report consists of over thirty-six pages of closely printed figures, giving in detail the items of money received and the several funds in which the given amounts were expended. It is a comprehensive and enlightening document, and doubtless proves to be a source of contentment and satisfaction to contributors of tithes to that branch of the Mormon religious organization. It is fair to the people, and relieves the officers of the church of any suspicion of dishonest dealing. It is also fair to the community in which the Reorganized Church has its headquarters, for the reason that they know precisely what disposition is made of such product of the common wealth as is contributed to the church.

Now, why is it that the rulers of the Utah church do not come out as honestly as do their despised brethren of Lamoni, Iowa? Are they afraid to expose something of evil in their doings—is there some rascality that they desire to keep hidden from their followers? It looks very much like it, indeed. And the course pursued by these men may have for its foundation a desire similar to that expressed by Elder J. Golden Kimball in the Assembly Hall of Sunday, April 4, 1909, (last conference,) when he said: "There are some things in my life that I am going to keep quiet if I can."

STICKS IN THE NEST.

One of the speakers during the conference (Elder T. W. Chatburn) took for his text, "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: So the Lord alone did lead him."

On this, in connection with the idea that the eagle stirs up her nest, filling it with sticks and inequalities, that her young may climb upon them and surmount them, thus gaining strength, he built a unique discourse.

In a characteristic way he said, "If you are of Israel and have never had a stick in your nest you will have one before you die. I have had many a stick in my nest. . . . Some men argue that we ought to leave the gospel principles and push out into the probabilities. I can't do that; but I am glad that some can. They put a stick in our nest and set us to thinking."

The comparison is rather striking and we pass it on. Perhaps there were a few sticks in the nest during conference, both individually and collectively. If so, the lesson is to surmount them and gain strength thereby.

Elders' Note-Book

CONCERNING REVIVAL MEETINGS.

The "Gipsy Smith" meetings, which attracted such widespread attention in this city during the month of February of the present year represented the greatest spectacle of modern evangelism that has been my privilege to witness. The meetings were held in Convention Hall, which seats fifteen thousand people. At many of the services hundreds of people were turned away for lack of room. The method of work is somewhat different than is ordinarily adopted by evangelists; the sermon is only of about twenty minutes duration, after which strong appeals are made to the prospective convert aided by the mighty influence of carefully selected songs sung by a choir of one thousand voices. Should any yield to the appeal they are directed to go to what is called the "inquiry room" where they meet the pastors and workers of churches in the city, who are supposed to be able to diagnose their case and prescribe the remedy needed in each case other than is offered by the evangelist. I witnessed scores of people responding to the appeal going to this room and now after the meeting is a thing of the past we have lately heard that the result of the work is the conversion of four hundred souls who have united with some one of the one hundred and fifty churches which participated in this meeting. Mr. Smith said that he daily received a large number of inquiries, some of which he eulogized and others he condemned publicly. I thought that I would write him a brief letter and place the matter before him as I viewed it. My letter was as follows:

February 19, 1909.

REVEREND GIPSY SMITH, Kansas City, Missouri.

Dear Brother: I have attended several of your meetings and have read several of your addresses from your book. Permit me to say that I admire your terse, plain, direct way of speaking; much of what you say I heartily indorse. One statement which you frequently make appeals to me, viz, "Let us be honest." That is a most worthy sentence.

Now what confuses me with regard to your work is this, and I assume that you will be glad to know what difficulties may be in the way of those who hear you; I believe in Christ as my Savior and in the plan of salvation revealed through him to the world. I do not believe in any one of the churches that are represented by the various clergymen to whom you send the ones who are moved by your appeal. How can I believe them? No two of them teach alike. For instance: if when I go to the inquiry room I am met by a Baptist he will teach me to be baptized by immersion because my sins are pardoned; if I meet a Disciple preacher he will tell me to be baptized for the remission of my sins; if I meet a Presbyterian preacher he will tell me that baptism is rightly administered by sprinkling or pouring; if I meet a Methodist he will tell me baptism may be performed as I may wish, by sprinkling, pouring, or immersion. Now, as you send your converts to these parties you are responsible for the teaching they will receive from them. Your Master said, "In vain do ye worship me teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," and are not the creeds which these several men represent the doctrines of men? When sinners came to Paul, did he send them to an inquiry room to be met by men of many minds? This is one feature of your work which I feel is open to question, and I would like you to throw some light on it at some time during your mission here or by personal letter.

Yours truly,

W. E. LARUE.

No reply has ever been received to this letter, and so far as I know no answer has ever been made in public or otherwise. It was a vital issue upon which he was asked to express himself and his success depended upon an indifferent silence,—so he kept still. Such incidents as this serve to remind one more and more of the stability of the gospel message as restored in latter days. Our work to-day must be carried on in the spirit of former times, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good;" "Come now and let us reason together" reveals the true idea. I just received a letter from a young man in Cuba with whom I was formerly acquainted. He was warned to have nothing to do with our church, it was much misrepresented to him in every way, but he had the good sense and good judgment to take the direction of the scripture and he has been giving this work a most searching investigation for a few years, reading works written against as well as for the church, and he tells me as a result of his deliberate and careful investigation that he intends soon to unite with us. Jesus said, "Every one that is of the truth heareth my voice." Not only is this work capable of enduring a rigid and searching investigation and examination theoretically, but its practical utility as applied to every-day life is confirmed by the united testimony of its many adherents.

Soon after the meetings closed as above referred to we began to plan for a special series of mission services at Central Church to be conducted by President R. C. Evans. Among other advertising matter sent out I addressed a letter to the ministers of the city inclosing a suitable tract and announcement of our meetings with printed list of subjects. The letter was as follows:

March 10, 1909.

To the Ministers and Pastors of Churches in Kansas City;

Greeting:

Dear Sirs: I herewith inclose a pamphlet which we have recently published on behalf of our central church, in this city. No doubt you would rather understand than misunderstand us as a church and as a people. Of all men, you should be correctly informed concerning comparative religions. Rumor, falsehood, and prejudice have put us in the same position of the original church, viz, "As concerning this sect we know that everywhere it is spoken against." This is not an enviable position from a worldly standpoint; however, we are encouraged by the fact that those who know us and our views best, know us favorably.

As an organization we are here to stay, and whatever unfortunate stigma, whatever charges of immorality or unchristian practice that may justly be held against the reputation of the Mormons of Utah, can not by any rule of justice or consistency be charged upon us. The Mormons of Utah recognize us as opponents to their system; how vain and futile, in the face of this fact, are the efforts on the part of many to class and associate the two distinct churches together as one, and thus keep the public mind prejudiced against us. This prejudice is fast giving way before the light of facts and ere long only the ignorant and evil-disposed will delight to cherish such views. We are here to maintain an honorable and respectable place in the estimation of good men and women, and also to assist in promoting that righteousness among the people which exalteth a nation.

Sincerely yours,

W. E. LARUE.

Copies of the above letter were sent to one hundred and sixty-four ministers in this city; only one replied, and I exchanged two or three letters with him and he attended several of the meetings. A few men wearing the garb of priests were seen in the audience on different occasions during the meetings and we have no means of knowing how many may have attended the services. Suffice it to say that if they did attend, R. C. gave them the message straight. If no other good was done we have the satisfaction of letting them know that we are in the city. When we are sowing gospel seed we have no right to doubt that it will bear something of a harvest in time. We are told, "Withhold not thine hand, for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that." It is not the immediate results so much as the lasting results that we are working for; not a temporary foundation upon which to build our hopes for the future but a sure foundation upon which our building will stand, let come what will. We had far better convert one man and convert him right than four hundred who afterward, when reflecting upon the foundation upon which they stand, can not be satisfied that it is safe. This work in which we are engaged represents the work of Christ in complete detail as no other religious movement in the world does and we have only to congratulate ourselves that our eyes have indeed been opened to see the truth as it is in Christ. Our work at Central Church is gradually enlarging in each department; we still have lessons to learn, improvements to make, difficulties to overcome, and we are happy at work.

KANSAS CITY, Missouri.

REVEREND SUNDAY AT SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS.

In connection with Elder LaRue's delineation of Gipsy Smith's revival methods the following item regarding "Billy Sunday's" latest revival effort will be of interest. Sunday is one of the most daring, original, and successful of the meteoric revivalists that have flamed out on the religious horizon of late years. The item is from the Burlington Hawk-Eye, April 13:

SPRINGFIELD, Illinois, April 12.—Amid a shower of gold, and with a popular demonstration such as has never been accorded any man in Springfield on any occasion, ten thousand people crowded into the tabernacle—ten thousand faces aglow with religious fervor; radiant with friendship and admiration for the evangelist—twenty thousand eyes at times afire with zeal, and then dimmed by tears of regret that the marvelous campaign has ended—seven hundred men and women of the colossal chorus choir singing with inspiring melody and great volume—men, women, children paying a tribute of respect to one man such as this great city has never witnessed, such was the scene at the final meeting conducted by "Billy" Sunday last night, and at which three hundred and fourteen persons responded to the invitation in the last triumphant answer to Mr. Sunday's magnetic call to people of all kinds and classes to turn their backs upon sin and enter the kingdom of God.

As a result of his meetings Mr. Sunday has to his credit 4,729 conversions; a free will offering of $10,734.79, and a record of a total attendance at his meetings of 707,475 people. He has also to his credit a record day's total of conversions, the number who pressed forward yesterday at his closing meetings being 774.

Evangelist Sunday expressed great satisfaction with the results of his meetings here. He said they were the most satisfactory he had ever held. The opposition to him was practically nil. He was given a great ovation this afternoon when he and his party left on the Chicago, Peoria & St. Louis train for his home in Chicago, where he will rest for a week before beginning his meetings in Marshalltown. At the close of his meetings there he will take a protracted rest on the Pacific Coast.

The Straight Road

THE CHURCH A FACTOR OF MAN'S SALVATION.

The question is often asked, "Why need I join a church?" "Can I not live as well outside as inside the church?" inquires another.

These questions are reasonable, and should be intelligently answered. To do so, we should consider, first, that man's aim is, or should be, perfection of character, by which perfect and unending life may be secured. Reasoning by the principle that "a fountain can not rise higher than its source," man can not raise himself higher than his own power. Perfection is higher than humanity. Perfection is divine. Therefore, that which is divine must enter our lives if we ever reach a divine condition. In other words, we must have divine help.

The term, salvation, which we often hear applied to man's possibilities, implies the necessity of one who can save; or, to express it differently, God's power to raise humanity to a divine condition. He does this, among other reasons, because of his perfect wisdom and power; hence, to attempt it by any means other than that planned by him is to trust our wisdom in preference to his.

Salvation is coöperative. The Almighty's desire to elevate man to the higher condition must be responded to by man's desire to be elevated by him. This causes man to accept God's plan, by which the desired condition may be reached. The process by which the condition is reached is called conversion—a change.

Salvation, then, is conditional on something more than mere quiescent belief; otherwise, the devils, who believe and tremble, may all be saved without being changed. But salvation, being a condition, would be hell if this were true. The place where eternal life is to be enjoyed is a perfect place only because the conditions there are perfect. To reach this, the perfect process must be applied. Paul says that Jesus "became the author of eternal salvation unto all who obey him."—Hebrews 5:9. He is referred to as "the author and finisher of our faith"—rule of action; hence, to accept Christ is to conform to his instructions. These instructions—this divine plan—shall be presented and perpetuated to all human kind. The means appointed by him for this purpose is that over which he presides. Paul says God gave Christ "to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness of him."—Ephesians 1:22, 23. The same apostle says the church is "the pillar and ground of the truth"—the word of Christ. The "pillar and ground" is the support and foundation. Take it away, and what have we left? Paul says again, "Of whom [Christ] the whole family in heaven and earth is named."—Ephesians 3:15. For this reason it is named "The Church of Christ." Therefore, to be adopted into his family is to be a member of his body—his church.

What is his church? It is a body of people governed and directed by him—a body that has been authorized by him, and over which he presides. Paul speaks of "one body, and one Spirit, . . . one Lord, one faith, one baptism."—Ephesians 4:4, 5. And he says, of both Jew and Gentile, that it was Christ's object "that he might reconcile both unto God in one body" (Ephesians 2:16).

By baptism man is adopted into the family. We read in Acts 2:47, that "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Paul says they are of "the general assembly and church of the first-born [Christ], which are written [enrolled] in heaven" (Hebrews 12:23), a thought that is in beautiful harmony with the words of Christ to his church, " whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven."—Matthew 18:18. This shows that if the church acts in harmony with his instructions, such acts shall be bound in heaven as well as on earth. The power to bind on earth proves authority from God, on earth. Shall man be submissive to such authority? or shall he hold God's plan in contempt? To remain outside the body of Christ—who can afford to do this? to select his own in preference to God's way? He who does so becomes a law unto himself, which—pardon me—is anarchy in principle.

The material advantages of the church are too many to be separately analyzed in this examination. Through the church, as Christ's body, flows the divine Spirit that is promised to "guide you into all truth," to unfold the glories of the celestial world, to reveal futurity, to transform the life by its marvelous power, to place each individual in harmony with God, and with each other, to develop, ennoble, and purify, until the resplendent glory of the Christ character is blended in the individual life, and, by the power of harmonious contact, with the collective life of the body of the Son of God. Who can afford to lose this? Paul says man is not to be crowned "except he strive lawfully." By the uncertain paths of man, come confusion, doubt, darkness, despair, and final loss to each who walks therein. By the heavenly path come certainty, hope, peace, and attainment of the full possibilities of life in the presence of God. Permit your minds to dwell on these closing words. They mean much: "Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end."—Ephesians 3:21.

General Booth's Appeal to America.

NEW YORK, April 12.—A message from General William Booth, founder and commander of the Salvation Army, was read to-night by Miss Eva Booth, commander of the American Salvation Army, at a remarkable celebration in Carnegie Hall, in honor of the General's eightieth birthday anniversary. It follows:

"LONDON, April 10, 1909.

"To the American People: Oh, America, how vast is your opportunity for making a lasting mark for good on the entire human race. Endowed with measureless material resources, enjoying the unbounded confidence of your own people, favored with the concentrated light of earth and heaven, possessed of an influence covering like a shadow all the world beside; what a power you must be destined to become.

WHAT WILL BE THE END.

"What will you do with this mighty magic force? If you are permitted to realize your ambition to lead the world, whither will you lead it? To utter abandonment of faith in the eternal and the neglect of every duty flowing out of it, to senseless worship of Mammon to useless frivolities? No, I am sure you won't, and I blush at the very mention of such things and denounce them with all my soul.

"Where else can you lead this poor, blind, stumbling world of ours out to the mighty, just, holy God and obedience to his commands; the practice of righteousness, purity, honor, kindness and simplicity, to self-sacrificing service of mankind?

"America, I invite you to the actual realization of the Christian principles you profess and to practical imitation of Jesus Christ, who came out of his heaven to seek and to save.

APPEAL FOR ACTION.

"Come along then, let us gird up our loins and go out of our heaven and put our arms around perishing multitudes and bring them to Christ, purity, peace in paradise.

"I invite you to make our common Christianity an ungainly reality and thus wipe out the reproach fast gathering over us that it is nothing more than an exploded tradition, a fashionable association or a lifeless ceremony. Then when the wondering world asks: 'In what country can I find the thing described by the letter of the Bible and set forth in the life of Jesus Christ?' the answer shall be 'America.' "GENERAL WILLIAM BOOTH."

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A DULL CHILD.

It is mistaken tenderness, or often cruel thoughtlessness that causes parents to allow their children to form personal habits which in themselves serve to mark the child as one mentally lacking. I remember that, because I preferred to do so, I was allowed to use a spoon instead of a fork at the table. I did this unreproved until one day I heard my aunt chiding my little six-year-old cousin for eating potatoes with a spoon. The child said, "Cousin Fanny is eating hers with a spoon."

My aunt immediately dropped the subject, but afterward, I overheard her reproving the little girl, when she thought no one was near. She said: "You must eat with your fork because it is the right and proper thing to do. Fanny eats with her spoon because she is not like other people. Do you want to be like poor Fanny?"

In tears I went to my mother. "Mother, I would have always eaten with my fork if you had only told me that I must." I cried reproachfully, "Oh, mother, why haven't you never told me that I should?"

It seems to me that if I had been told that I must use my fork and spoon as did other people, while I might occasionally have fallen from grace, I would, in the main, have eaten properly, and it seems to me that each time you allow a dull child to fall below any part of the standard of morals and manners established for and by normal people—that is, any part that is within its capacity—you erect one more barrier between that child and normal mentality.

My teacher was certainly an iconoclast and destroyed my pitiful idols with a ruthless, though kindly hand. It was she, who, when I was in my twelfth year, destroyed my belief in Santa Claus. My mother has since told me that she remonstrated with her for doing so; but my teacher at once silenced her remonstrances. "Hattie has known that there is no Santa Claus for two years," she said. (Hattie was my little eight-year-old sister.) "You are perfectly willing for Hattie to know the truth. Do you think it right to make that difference between them?"

She also broke up my habit of playing with children much younger than myself. She compelled me to associate with the children of my own age, and she must have employed strenuous measures, which I did not at the time realize, in order to induce them to accept me as a playmate. I sometimes think, that unknown to herself, she employed a species of hypnotism, so absolute was her rule of her little kingdom.

She influenced the older children to allow me to join in their games; but she never permitted them to favor me, or allow me to escape my part. I was made take my turn as "Black-man," or "Blindman," as the case might be. She was ever at hand to see that I "played fair."

I remember once of refusing to take my turn at turning the long skipping-rope. "I don't have to turn the rope, do I, Teacher?" I appealed to her.

"Of course you do," she replied briskly.

"But I don't want to," I whined.

"That doesn't make a bit of difference," she said. "We must all do our share, whether we want to or not. The others would rather jump all the time, too; but they do their share of turning the rope when they do not want to, and you must do the same. You must do as the others do."

I tell of this trivial incident because it seems to me that it marked, as with a white stone, my first dawning realization of the fact that we must not allow our inclinations to interfere with our "taking our turn at the rope."

Painfully and slowly I learned to know my limitations and deficiencies; learned that I must study an hour on a lesson that would not require more than one fourth of that time on the part of a normal child; learned that the scraps of knowledge, which they acquired with apparent ease, could be gained by me only through prolonged, earnest effort and constant repetition.

When I was fourteen years of age I had acquired the education of the average child of ten. I was equally slow to learn to perform the most simple domestic task, and to this day I master any new manual task with great difficulty; for my hands are slow as my brain.

With my mental growth and the consequent comprehension of my many deficiencies came sensitiveness and painful self-consciousness which caused me much mental distress, but this painful self-consciousness goaded me along the path of progress.

To my awakening mind the knowledge that I was, or had been considered "not quite bright," was a source of constant mortification to me. I realized that these people would never forget that I had been poor foolish Fanny. I did not feel that the persons who had known me all my life could realize that I had in a measure outgrown my mental weakness. They were prone to remind me of the simple, witless acts of my earlier years.

At last, it seemed to me that I could bear it no longer, and I begged my parents to take me to some place where people would not know of my past. Finally they saw the justice of my demand, and when I was in my fifteenth year we moved into an adjoining State, and among total strangers. Thus I began my poor scarred life anew.

How I gloated over the thought that I was among people who did not know that I had ever been foolish and dull! How firmly I resolved that no word or act of mine should ever reveal to them that I had once been different from themselves!

This change of place also marked an era in the growth of my confidence in myself. Now no one laughed at me when I timidly ventured to express an opinion. Hitherto I had stooped slightly, but now the knowledge that I was at last like others straightened my bent shoulders. My gaze ceased to be roving and irresolute. I learned to meet the stranger's eye frankly and steadily. I was no longer furtive and ashamed. Oh, the healing magic of self-respect!

My moral sense developed slowly. Up to the time that I went among strangers my only restraint from wrong-doing was my fear of being found out and of the punishment which would follow; but now I began to do right for the sake of right. I learned to value my own good opinion of myself.

I had not sufficient imagination to be very untruthful. My commonest offense in that form of dishonesty was to deny any act of mine which might cause me to be punished, and I think these denials were merely matters of instinct, not of reason.

I remember well my first act of moral rectitude not instigated by the fear of punishment. On my way to school I found the list of questions the teacher had prepared for our next monthly examination. I had looked forward with great anxiety and dread to the examination and had speculated longingly as to the nature of the questions. For a moment my find seemed fairly providential; but very much to my own surprise, I returned the list to the teacher without examining it. I had shaken off my moral lethargy.

Even with the advantages given me by change of locality I developed slowly. However, I think that by the time I was twenty-five I averaged with the normal individual of that age, reared with same opportunities and surrounded by the same environments.

At the age of twenty-seven I began teaching in the public schools of the Middle West. Among my pupils there have been many mentally weak children, and the memory of my own groping struggle toward the light has made me very tender and pitiful toward them.

I have never faltered, or grown weary of my efforts to lighten their mental gloom, and if I have given some poor mother a ray of hope for the future of her dull child, if I have inspired one teacher to greater efforts in behalf of a dull pupil, this story of my dwarfed, shadowed childhood has not been written in vain.—A. R. O., in American Motherhood.

Questions on May Reading.

How can the dull child be helped by holding it to the standard required of other children? Why is it mistaken kindness not to do this? To what extent should the dull child be treated the same as other children? Why is it better for the dull child to associate with children of his own age or with those older? How may a child be influenced by the will-power of the one in charge of him? How may the habit of playing fair assist in the development of a child? Of what benefit is it that he learn to bear his share as others do? What should be avoided by reason of sympathy with the dull child? What is the effect of self-confidence to the sensitive person? What may it do for the dull child? What should children be taught in regard to our motive for doing right? What encouragement is given by the experience of the dull child of whom we are reading? Is there any school or any community without some children who need special help by reason of mental dullness? What evidence of this is manifest in Sunday-school? In whatever way we are associated with such children, what should be our attitude toward them? How may we profit by the example of this dull child who became the helpful teacher? What may be said of the greatness of her triumph?

The fairy folk of Elfland, why they laugh this whole month through

At comic pranks they played last month; they laugh so hard, they do,

The tears stream down their cheeks; and boys and girls shout, "See it rain!"

While at that very moment, lo! the landscape's bright again. O merry April-Elfins, that laugh and cry together, You're just the cause of all this jolly mixup in the weather!

Letter Department

Preparation and Achievement.

(An address written by President Joseph Smith and read by Frederick M. Smith before the graduating class of 1909, Sunday-school and Religio Normal Department, Lamoni, Iowa, April 3, 1909.)

Brother Chairman, and Members of the Graduating Class: No person is properly prepared to accomplish any end of importance or benefit to himself or his fellows, or mankind as a whole, who has not within himself the inner consciousness of intense desire to reach the end sought for. Nor can he undertake to perform the labor requisite to the accomplishment of the purpose designed until he has formed within his mind not only the object to be obtained, but a fairly comprehensive understanding of the necessary steps to be taken in order to secure success.

No person is so well fitted to engage in an arduous undertaking as the one who sincerely enjoys the pleasure of achievement, loves the object to be obtained, and is willing to take pains and endure the hardships of labor in order to secure to himself an understanding of the best means to be employed for securing the end desired. All this requires thought, and there is no successful thinking without it is systematized either from natural qualifications or by purposeful bending of one's energies of mind to the successive stages through which the mind must go to reach just conclusions. No one can do this who has not the faculty, native or acquired, to pursue a train of successive thought from cause to effect, with a proper understanding between the two. Many mistakes are made by assuming results for causes, and reasoning from these, assuming that other results must follow; which, when it occurs, confusion in the train of thought ensues which can not be removed until the successive steps are retraced and the mistake rectified. This can not be done unless the mind has been properly trained to recognize the bases from which thought must take its course.

The word normal signifies, according to rule or principle. That which is in conformity with certain type or standard. Every avocation or profession, and, it might be said, labor, must have its typical style, and if done acceptably must conform as nearly as is possible with its respective rule or type. From this the conclusion is easily reached that each and every avocation, profession, or labor must have its class or classes, in which those desirous of engaging in such avocation, profession, or labor may be arranged; and in which they may make a proper and sufficient study of the object desired to be accomplished and the means to be employed by which it may be done.

Thus we have the different normal schools existing throughout the country in which many students are engaged fitting themselves for the pursuit of chosen avocations, or professions, or different forms of labor, in order that the requisite qualifications may be secured fitting them for success. For instance, we have the cadet system in our high schools in the cities in which military instruction is imparted in a normal way, by which aspiring young men may be prepared by educational acquirement to enter into the great military school of the nation to follow the military profession.

We have only to look back along the history of the United States to the inception of the Civil War to discover what should be a lesson to be observed in the examination of every normal institution held for the purpose of preparing for any particular walk in life. Numbers of officers were necessary for the disciplining and preparing the soldiers on both sides of the great conflict between the national government and the secessionists. We have only to look at the failures made by certain generals upon both sides to discover that while they may have had a great desire to accomplish standing among military heroes they failed, either from inherent disqualification of temperament or misjudgment as to proceeding and policy from not understanding the proper methods to be employed to accomplish the military movements which were necessary to meet the emergencies in which these generals were placed by the fortunes of war. Of those on the Union side may be mentioned General Fremont, who in his department, from an excessive desire to pose as an emancipator of the slaves, issued an emancipation proclamation which if carried out would have been an unlawful confiscation, not only of slaves but of other properties held by the citizens of Missouri. To retrieve Fremont's mistake it was necessary for President Lincoln to relieve him of his command. This mistake of General Fremont was a mistake in political failing instead of the result of his military schooling. Mention may also be made of the failure of General George B. McClellan, who, notwithstanding he was a graduate from a military school and was a well educated and brilliant man, signally failed when placed in supreme command of the forces in the field and lost his military prestige in less than one year, making the great mistake of his life through an over-estimate of his own powers and self-importance; which led him to disregard the orders of the veteran general, Winfield Scott, esteemed to be at that time the greatest military genius since Washington, and to ignore the advice and suggestions of the commander-in-chief, the President of the United States. While he had a trained mind in the military teaching of the school he lacked the necessary discipline which would give him the proper understanding of the importance of other men in their respective stations. He failed to do when he had an opportunity to perform and realize the object of his ambition.

In striking contrast to the history of the men before mentioned was that of General U. S. Grant, who served well in the Mexican War, who as a graduate of the Military Academy at West Point combined with his military training a knowledge of the arts of war and the value of men in their different places, a man trained to perform, who ventured success, employing the means at his disposal in accordance with the results of his military training and thought. He knew from the time that he took command of the army what the final results must be. This was the result first of his love for his country, second from his ability to reason from cause to effect, and third from his faculty of using the means placed at his disposal for the accomplishment of a desired end.

Another shining example of the result of mental training was that of Abraham Lincoln: this man was born in lowly station, but fortunately had within him the innate consciousness of a great design and an intense desire to be of use among his fellow men. While not a graduate of the school he subjected himself to such severe discipline that he improved upon the native quality of his mind and by intense application proved himself to be an adept in finding the root and cause, and consequent processes of the things which engaged his attention. He profited by what he met among his fellow men to challenge his attention, whether from casual interest or from humiliation resulting from a careless or supercilious treatment of others. An instance or two will illustrate this: One time he was associated with Edwin M. Stanton and another counsel in the prosecution of an important suit at Cincinnati, Ohio. Only two of the counsel were permitted to argue on a side and the choice fell upon Stanton. Lincoln felt very much humiliated; Stanton absolutely ignored him in what was done before the court, but when Lincoln listened to the masterly presentation of the case by the cultivated lawyer from the East, he forgot his humiliation and admired the lawyer. This resulted in his returning to his home determined to fit himself to cope with the educated lawyers from the East, who, to use his own expression, "began to invade the West." The acts of Mr. Lincoln during the trying years of his administration as now traced by the historians, show the result of the training which qualified him to reach the height of human greatness and accomplish the great good which was the object of his intensest desire.

Without entering further into the consideration of the examples that might be presented, it will be sufficient for me to commend the value of this Sunday-school normal teaching. It is but putting forth an endeavor to secure desirable results by the aid of previous training through an understanding of the design of the Sunday-school work and the proper and best means for the accomplishment of that design. None of you will succeed, no matter how you try, unless there is the prevailing inner consciousness of the worth of the object sought for. Nor will desire alone fit and qualify any one of you for performing the work which must precede the reaching the height of your ambition in this regard. You must couple with this desire complete willingness to submit yourselves to the discipline by which you will be able to think coherently and continuously; following the right lines of thought, through processes of deduction unto conclusion which will bear the light of investigation. Conscious of the desire for accomplishment, willingness to labor and learning to think in right directions to proper conclusions, each of you may be useful to every other member of the class, and in widened spheres may rise to the increase of opportunities, be useful to your comrades in labor and through them to those among whom your lives of teaching may be passed. It only remains for me to congratulate you on the progress already made by you and to enforce, if I may, necessity for a persistent continuation of the exercise of the faculties of thought which have been cultivated in your normal studies from primitive methods through successive stages to the highest and best and most improved methods which may have been discovered and employed in the Sunday-school work. Wishing you the best of success in the work in which you are proposing separately to engage, I can but suggest that with a patient trust in God, an unswerving confidence in truth, and the necessity to labor in a spirit of self-abnegation for the purpose of benefiting others, you will be sure to succeed. To this end I bid you God-speed.

STOCKPORT, England, March 12, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been very much troubled of late regarding three dreams that I have had, and I should like to have some one interpret them if possible. I feel sure there is some deep meaning in them, and hope that without detailing the state of things as they exist in the Manchester District at this moment, that either you or some member, through the HERALD, may be given the power from our heavenly Father to give us some light on them.

I.

I dreamed that I was walking down one of the streets in Stockport at night, my companion being my daughter, aged about fourteen. When we came to a bridge that crosses a river (Mersy) I saw two women following us. They were but poorly clad, and had shawls on their heads. They seemed to be talking about me, and were judging me of dishonesty, for I had a roll of stair carpeting under my arm. I told them I had not stolen the carpet, but had paid so much per yard for it. The women did not believe me, and continued to follow us and annoy me. Upon seeing a gateway, I endeavored to hide behind it. Hearing nothing from the women, I ventured to look out, and to my surprise I saw a most beautiful angel, more beautiful than I ever saw depicted on canvas, standing between us and the women. Seeing the protection we had, the women went away, and were seen no more. I looked to see the angel, and saw scores of angels in the sky, and what seemed like a field, which was covered with rich, green grass. On terraces sat twelve old men with long, gray beards. Each man had a class of children round him. My attention was then drawn to a personage who was none other than the Christ, who walked up and down behind the old men, stopping occasionally to listen to what they were teaching the children. He (Christ) seemed pleased with what he heard from each man, for he nodded approval, smiled, and passed on, after which I awoke.

II.

I dreamed I stood in the midst of a great concourse of people. It seemed that all classes of people were present. I was standing on a mound and was speaking to the people regarding the restored gospel, but no one seemed to listen to me. I repeated psalm after psalm, but all to no purpose. To the left I saw long troughs similar to those used for swine. At this moment a stream of light came from the sky, and by its light I saw hundreds of people eating food from the troughs. They even had no time to use their hands, but wallowed like animals. When I saw this I spoke louder and louder, using the Bible very freely; but I did not get any one to listen. The light seemed to grow brighter, and as I looked from whence the light came, which by the way was brighter than a battleship's searchlight, I saw a large eye which looked all over the people, and I felt that could I have seen the face at the back of the cloud I should have seen a look of displeasure; for the eye flashed right and left over the people. I felt convinced that the eye was God's eye. I then heard a voice from the crowd which said, "This light is the work of the scientist." I answered, "No, this is God's work; for his eye is in the light, and his anger is kindled against these people for the way in which they are living." Then I awoke.

III.

I dreamed, or in reality, I heard a voice say to me, "Read the third chapter of Ezekiel." I could see no one, but I answered, "I know I am only dreaming and shall not remember anything in the morning," and made all sorts of excuses about reading the chapter. Then again the voice said, "Ezekiel, Ezekiel, Ezekiel," slow and deliberate. I answered, "I do not know how to spell it." Right across the wall in large letters like silver came the word EZEKIEL three times, and the voice repeated, "Third chapter of Ezekiel," three times over. I turned then to my husband to see whether he had spoken, but he was fast asleep. It was eleven o'clock the next day when I thought of the dream, or whatever it was. And since then I have read and reread the chapter till I have nearly learned it by heart, but still am practically in the dark concerning it.

I shall be pleased and thankful for any light you can give me, and hope that I am not asking too much. I will leave them in your hands. Should we get any light from any brother or sister, I will write you and let you know how it harmonizes or disagrees with any matter we may have, or have had to do with. My one desire is to further this work for the Master. May his peace abide with all his Saints, is the prayer of your sister in the fight for truth,

MRS. H. W. PRESTON.

Dear Saints: I could not go to meeting to-day, and will write to you. I live two miles north and about a half mile west of Lamoni. Our house is in a nice grove of trees. We have a nice little apple- and peach-orchard, but there is not so much fruit on this place as on the one we traded for this. The land here is very high in price. I often wonder how the Saints are to gather here. There are Saints in North Dakota, my former home, who have a desire to come here. There are Saints in many places that I am acquainted with, who want to come here. Quite a number have written to me about it. I do hope God will open up the way that they may come, and if I am living when you get here, I will give you a welcome of which you will not complain. I have not forgotten any of you.

The time is at hand when we expect the Saints from all over the world to attend the conference, and I hope, my brothers and sisters, the Spirit of the Master will be with you that we may have the very best conference we have had. Bro. John Smith requested the Lamoni Saints to pray especially for God's Spirit to be with each one, and I think the request was timely.

Let me tell you a little story that happened in the seventies, about the time I commenced to investigate this work: I had a very dear friend, Catherine Whitaker by name; she was in bed sick; had been for over a year. I heard God's healing power was with this people they called Latter Day Saints, and I wanted to know if it was true. How do you think I found out? I sat down and wrote to President Joseph Smith, for I thought if it was true that God had called him, he could tell me what I wanted to know. My friend and I waited so anxiously for an answer, and he wrote me that the church did believe in God's healing power, and some other things. Among the rest, he had sent for James M. Wait to visit Osseo, Wisconsin, the place where I was living at that time. I was so rejoiced at the good news in the letter that I started home. I was visiting at my mother's, and forgot my baby boy, Frank, until I had gone quite a distance, then I said, "Oh, John, I have forgotten Frank!" He was outside playing with my little brothers at the time. We turned our ox-team and went and got him. How glad I was to think God's healing power was on earth.

I have that letter yet among my keepsakes. It would take twenty sheets to tell all about how that dear sister was healed, but we gave God all the glory.

There are so many things I would like to tell you and I may sometime, if this does not find the waste-basket. Dear Saints, I never forgot to pray for you all.

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. MARTHA E. HOWERY.

BRANT, Michigan, March 6, 1909.

Dear Herald: You are a very welcome weekly visitor to me, bringing me cheering articles from all over God's great universe, written by God's dear Saints, intended to cheer and comfort one another. So I thought perhaps a letter from one so humble as I might be of interest to some. So I choose for a subject the SCIENCE OF BEING.

It is indeed a deep thought, Being. That which you profess to be, that which you want to be, or that which your conscience tells you that you ought to be; that which God designed you should be. Perhaps we do not stop to consider that our position, our duties are different from our neighbors' and must be judged likewise. Some of us may be placed here more capable both in mind and in body, of gaining certain points than others; therefore, we should judge not from our own standpoint the lives of others. Leave those things to our higher Being, whose mind is infinite. We see people around whom we think ought to be happy; for they are surrounded with every comfort and luxury. We say, "Oh, how little it would take to make me happy. If I only had that certain thing, I would be perfectly satisfied." Look around, and you will see some one else who has those certain things, and yet they are not contented. They want more. Then, again, we think that our burdens are the heaviest to bear. Why? Because, we know not of others, nor their sorrows.

We can see only their pleasures. While if we were to exchange places with them it would be only a little while before we would be murmuring the same as ever. Let us envy not the happiness of others, nor dwell on our own sorrows; but profit by our own misfortunes, lay plans to better our condition instead of meditating on our hardships. Bring into our own lives the sunlight of hope and glory of God, and strengthen the hope and happiness of others. It is all a condition of mind; therefore, we must strive to obtain health in mind as well as body. Then, and not until then, will we be satisfied. God is love, and eternal substance must be absolutely good. Brighten our thoughts, bring love into our souls, and thereby enjoy the blessedness of peace. Love is everywhere. There is no point in space where it can not be found. It is the unchanging good, and it is the source of everything real and substantial. It is also the rule of all, because it emanated with and came forth from the Creator of all. It is wisdom and intelligence, and does all things well; and everything which it creates is good. It is the first cause of all good things. Our character is formed by our thoughts. If we let our minds dwell on love, goodness, purity, and health, would we not find ourselves developing into a grander, nobler, truer, purer, and more kind class of people? Let us meditate on the truth that God is love, and the organ of creation. The kingdom of heaven has come unto us, and the way to look within is to see what is contained within our own ideal nature; we are commanded to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto us. (See Matthew 6: 33.) So when we have the righteousness of God in our nature, we will be dwelling in his kingdom. God is our only power. If we seek him, he will add unto our lives all things necessary to our joy and comfort. Then where does evil come from? We simply allow the Evil One to control our minds to do that which is displeasing to God. The evil comes from our own errors and wrong-doings. We reap evil, if we allow it to grow in our minds; and if we are not possessed with good thoughts, we can show ourselves that God is the only power for good. Pure reason is divine. Some may think that these things are only the idle prattlings of those whose happiness has always been secure. But this has not been the lot of the writer. The writer knows what grief and sorrow and disappointment of this life are. But every day of our lives we meet those people who are practicing these very thoughts. They greet us with a loving countenance and smiles, never allowing us to think for a moment that they have been the victims of terrible sadness or discontent. They bring peace to themselves, as well as to us, by throwing a mantle of sunshine over their burning souls; for the more they dwell on their condition the greater pangs of grief they realize.

Forget and forgive, and we will find a new life; soon happiness will be stealing its way to our souls; and we will be walking in the path of light. The clouds that have darkened our minds will float away, leaving us surrounded by eternal sunshine; darkness will be ours no more, and we will bless the day that mirth found the door by which to enter our souls and for ever clasp us in its magical embrace. Written from real life for the SAINTS' HERALD, by F. P. JUBB.

KNOBNOSTER, Missouri, April 10, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have just received your welcome pages and have been reading some of the letters, when I found one from Sr. I. A. Morris. I certainly enjoyed reading it. I will remember her, as we attended the reunion at Brush Creek Branch two different times, when she and Bro. Morris came down to our branch at Parish, Illinois, now called Johnson Grove.

As I have been reading of the healing power of our Father in heaven, I will tell just what has happened in our home. We made a trip to Illinois, our old home, and on our way home, about the middle of March, our baby boy, Inman Davis, was taken very sick. We thought at first it was the motion of the train that made him sick, but he kept getting worse, and finally was thrown into a high fever. We did all we could do for him; called for the elders several days before we called for a doctor. We finally called for the doctor, and the first and second trips he said there was no hope for him, that he would surely die. We continued to call for the elders, who called a meeting of the priests, and our branch president, Bro. John Bozarth, called for the Saints to fast and pray for him on Sunday, March 21. On the third and fourth trips the doctor saw a great change, and decided that our darling boy would live. He certainly was near death's door, as all the Saints and most of the people of Knobnoster can testify. It was reported at two different times that he was dead, but by the power of God he was healed.

Dear Saints, we can not tell our heartfelt thankfulness for this blessing we have just received. This is only one of the many blessings we have received. Our hearts rejoice in this work. We feel thankful to the dear Saints for their kindness to our baby; our whole branch was in sympathy for him. We want to live so we will be ready to meet those trials. We do not desire God to take them away from us, we only want to live so we will be worthy of God's Spirit and power to help us to bear up and hold out faithful to the end. We desire the prayers of the Saints that we may live such lives that they will be worthy of patronizing.

Your sister in Christ,

HETTIE E. DAVIS.

OGDEN, Utah, March 29, 1909.

Saints' Herald: I became a member of the church about twenty years ago, but there were several years that I could not live my religion, as my husband was born in the Utah church, and being born a polygamous child, he was very much opposed to the Josephites. I could not read any of our church papers in his presence or they would be taken from my hand, nor could I read to my children, but he has never hindered me from going to my meetings. He has never influenced my children to go to Sunday-school. I have hoped that he would change. He has visited my people in St. Joseph, Missouri, four different times, but to-day he does not seem to have any use for religion.

I have lived among the Mormons for twenty years, and have always tried to do unto my neighbors as I would have them do unto me, and I have passed through many trials. I had been married only two months when I looked upon my husband dead for the time, being under the influence of drink. He became an habitual drunkard for fifteen years, but within the last two years I have only seen him the worse for drink twice.

I often think the cause of my troubles has been because of my being disobedient to my mother in not leaving the country at the time she left here, about a year ago. We were afflicted with scarlet fever, having five cases, one of diphtheria, two of measles, and one little boy in bed four weeks with heart trouble, from the effect of scarlet fever. When the doctor came to see the little boy I asked him if he was very dangerous. He said, "Yes, this boy with the diphtheria will be well a long time first," but he said he may get over it. I sat down at the foot of the bed where the boy with the diphtheria lay and sobbed and cried with no one to give me an encouraging word; but I soon arose, saying I would do the best I could for him and trust to the Lord. The Lord heard my prayers and restored them all to health, but now, dear Saints, I am going to tell of the worst affliction that has come to me, that of losing two of my children. About two years ago my son, nearly twenty-one years of age, was killed in the Ogden canyon, stabbed by one under the influence of drink, and I was just getting strong again, when on the 10th of last February, my youngest child, a little boy of seven years, was taken away without a moment's warning, by a piece of meat getting into his windpipe, from which he died in five minutes.

Dear Saints, will you pray for me that I may be able to stand this affliction? It is so hard for me to see why God has taken him, but may I be able to say he knows best. My heart is sad, and lonely are the days since my darling has left me. I think sometimes I must be very wicked, and yet, like Job, I can not see where I have done very wickedly; but there is one mistake I have made: About three years ago my husband was willing to go to St. Joseph, but he wanted to mortgage the home. I was not willing to do that. I wanted him to buy a home there, which he was not willing to do. I have been sorry many times that I did not go, but, dear Saints, pray for me that God may look in mercy upon me and open up the way that I, with the rest of my children, may leave this country. I have two sons that care for nothing but having a good time.

I have been reading my last HERALD where a sister says trials make us stronger and more faithful. I hope it will be so with me, and I can say with her that I desire to live as God wants me to. The dear little boy was often singing,

"Away in a manger, no crib for his bed,
The little Lord Jesus laid down his weary head."

Your sister in Christ,

AMELIA STONE.

MT. CARMEL, Illinois.

Dear Herald: Your pages have encouraged me many times. How I love this glorious latter-day work, and believe it to be true. I was reading in the HERALD where a sister was about to leave our people and go with the Holiness people. I have had some experience with them. I live just one block from their church, and not having my own church here, I have been attending the meetings. I heard them teach such a close life I began to wonder if I was right. I began to search myself to see if I was like the Saints should be, but I found I was far from it. I began to fast and pray, to see if I was in error. I began to see I had failed in reading the word of God and also the church books. I did not know that to be a Saint, I had to live a pure life, and the blood of my friends and neighbors was resting upon me.

Dear sisters, let us lay aside every weight of sin which will take away pride, and every evil work. Remember God hates a proud look. Why will we go on in this life and please the world and Satan, when Jesus has prepared a place for a prepared people? If the Saints will read the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, they will find that the Saints are a holiness band. If you are not living this life you are a professor only, and not a Saint, and when Jesus comes to select his jewels we will be cast out with the chaff.

While I am one among the isolated Saints and do not hear a preacher often, I know this work is true. The Lord has promised if we do the will of God we shall know of the doctrine, if it is of God. Dear ones, if you have any doubt about the truth of this work, as John 14:14 says, ask anything in his name and he will do it. Trust God and he will give you the witness. The closer we walk with God, the more he can bless us.

I have three dear little children. I long to bring them up in the fear of God, that they may prove a blessing. Any elder passing will find a welcome at our home. How I long for the gospel to be planted in this place. Pray for us, dear Saints, that all the honest in heart may be gathered home.

Hoping this may encourage some one, I remain,

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. LEORA GRIESS.

CODY'S BLUFF, Oklahoma, April 2, 1909.

To the Herald: As it has been some time since I wrote to your columns I thought it would not be amiss to write a few lines, as there are some, perhaps, that would like to hear from me and know how I like my new home here in the West. We moved to this State last September, and would say I like it here very well, although I can not say I like it any better than old Pennsylvania.

We have had quite a hard winter for this State, and the spring is very cold and backward, so the people here say, but I suppose we will get hot weather soon enough to suit us comfortably, for they tell me it gets pretty hot here sometimes.

I wish to say there are no elders in this part of the field that I have heard of yet, and no Saints but daughter and myself; but there are lots of people who ought to hear the restored gospel. There are the Advents, Holiness, Catholics, and Baptists around here, but they are blind trying to lead the blind. I hope some of the elders can come out this way this summer. Any who will come are welcome to make their home with us, while laboring in this field. We live about seven miles from the station. Nowata is the nearest. If any of the elders will drop us word that they are coming, we will meet them any time.

Will some one kindly tell me who is Bishop's agent in this field, as I wish to pay my tithing.

Hoping God's blessings and Spirit will be with all his servants at conference to guide and direct in the affairs of the church, I am, Box 13.

As ever in the faith,

SR. FLORA REED.

REPUBLIC, Washington, March 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: Will you please say through the HERALD that if any elders are wanting a new opening they can find a place in this neighborhood. There has never been any of our people here and the people have never heard the gospel as our folks teach it. There are two men here preaching and stirring up the people and they are misrepresenting our work and all other churches. They are evangelists and are very abusive. They challenge any and all ministers to meet them in debate or argument. If some elder will come out here at once from Spokane or some near-by branch, we will help him all we can. Would like to have them in three or four weeks at most.

In the faith,

R. WORTHINGTON.

PARIS, Tennessee, April 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: In looking over the conference minutes of Kentucky and Tennessee District, I notice the secretary has reported me as an elder, which is a mistake, as I am a priest and would like to be reported as such. I was secretary pro tem but did not report to the HERALD, as that was done by the secretary.

As ever your brother in Christ,

S. E. DICKSON.

Editors Herald: I am going to make the attempt again to express myself through the columns of the HERALD. I have just read an article in the HERALD of March 31, by Bro. T. W. Williams, that was comparatively laden with golden truth, and by reading this epistle of inspiration naturally my enthusiasm has run up to a very high degree. I would to God every member of the church would glorify God by imbibing of that same spirit of intelligence, and act accordingly, for the glory of God is intelligence. God has no pleasure in ignorance or deception, nor does he delight in that poor, meaningless, deluded being, who is so dead easy that he will sit down in a world of plenty and be content to eat scraps, dress in rags, and allow his children to grow up as ignorant as his pigs or dogs when the world is overflowing with all the good things of life, which he has hope to create but which have been filched from him simply because of his rank ignorance, since God has in mercy given mankind so many great labor-saving means.

We should think and try to have all of his children privileged to enjoy them equally, according to their works. All should have an equal opportunity through life and if they do not, the fault is not with God, the merciful giver. No, but it is because of that "great deceiver of the nations" and God's creation catering to his influence, living in the rankest of ignorance, when light, true light is in the reach of all. But ye would not; yea, true light upon every subject man has to do with. I believe since man has followed deception and formed such miserable conditions as now exist among the working class (several million of them and the number is increasing daily) that it is left with them to look and live, or remain in ignorance and be severely damned. This foolish, abominable sectarian reply, "Oh, just get your heart right and God will bring about justice by and by"; "Do nothing; let God do it all." As Bro. Williams said, God has been giving light time after time, line upon line, but old tradition, political party prejudice is much dearer to many a poor deceived object, than the glorious light of liberty. This is a fact both religiously and politically.

Why will the people not profit by the many sad experiences of past generations? Every Saint in Christ's kingdom should be intensely interested about this earth. God gave it to man to dress and subdue, to make beautiful a habitation of loveliness, not an abode of strife, exploitation, and robbery. We should all step out from under that criminal tradition that "competition is the life of trade." That lie was instituted by the father of lies and the poor unfortunates of this planet think they have God's Spirit who believe a falsehood to be a truth. Do we expect to go blindly on and make no effort to adjust the evils of society, by establishing a more perfect system of government, while our probationary time is on earth; die in ignorance of this very essential need and wake up when Jesus shall call for his elect to come up from their graves and enjoy this beautiful earth after it has been cleansed and sanctified from all the crime, murder, prostitution, sweat-shops, child labor, and like evils, which now continue, simply because of an ignorant competition among political parties and ignorance among the voting creatures?

How long, our Father, will such conditions continue at the consent of the creatures of thy handiwork, simply because they love darkness, deception, and servitude rather than light, truth, and freedom? That poor consciousnessless soul who will go out under any name and pretend to represent Christ, and beg from the poor man and woman their last mite, who at the same time is in fair circumstances, need not expect a very early call to splurge around on this earth, when it will be as Eden. No, Mr. Preacher, don't lose any sleep over your expected early rise.

Now Saints, I love this beautiful world, and I want it to be blessed to its full extent and I am sure that it remains with the people of God to establish the proper order here, to begin the work of cleansing it. Shall we sit still and let some political party lay a plan. Think, and may the inspiration of God quicken all of us to our full duty and our privilege, and then may we heed its quickening power.

Yours for all that God will,

FULTON, Kentucky, Route 5. J. W. WILLIAMS.

KENDALL, Kansas, March 30, 1909.

Editors Herald: I visited Spokane, Washington, last summer and found the dear Saints in their neat little church at worship. I thought as I got off the car at Spokane, that I would fail to find any one that I had ever seen before, but to my surprise I met dear Sr. Veal, who was a neighbor to me in the part of Oklahoma that was the Cherokee Nation. I was told there that after so long a silence, my name might have been dropped, or taken off the books, but I hope this has not been done, because where I lived all knew me as a member of the Latter Day Saint Church.

Time and age have strengthened my faith and love of this blessed doctrine. My brother's wife, Mrs. Norah Clayton, and I were baptized by Bro. Clark, who has now gone to receive his reward. We were then living in Caney, Kansas. Bro. Wilmer Gilbert and my daughter were also baptized by Bro. Clark. Bro. Richard Davis assisted Bro. Clark in the baptism. We moved here January 28, 1908, from Hillside, Oklahoma, seven miles west of Vera, Oklahoma. I have many friends living there and trust that many of them will take up the cross and help with the work that has been started there, as was told of in Sr. Shoemaker's letter to the HERALD.

Wishing health and success to all, and greater success to the one great faith, I am,

Sincerely,
MRS. ANNA HELMICH.

GULFORD, Missouri, April 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: Not long ago I saw a letter in the HERALD. I will not call any names, but they complained of not hearing a good sermon for so long. I learn they live in town, close to the church, and hardly ever go. I believe we should not complain; if we do not go, we can not expect to hear. I believe we should always go to church, when it is so we can, and always strive to do the Master's will at home and abroad.

I do not desire to be a stumbling-block in anybody's way, and while I feel as one of the weakest of God's children, I want to be found trying to do that which is right before our heavenly Father. I sometimes think we ask the Father to bless us and we forget to do things that would help his work along here in earth, financially. Let us all strive together to do what we can for the gospel work, and if we see a weakness in some one that goes to church, let us not stay at home and think that we can be as good as they are. Let us all work together and ask God to help us to overcome our imperfections, as we are none of us perfect.

Your sister in the hope of the gospel,
M. A. NELSON.

ARMOUR, South Dakota, April 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: On the fly-leaf of a little book I have it reads thus: "Book of Doctrine and Covenants carefully selected from the revelations of God," and as Saints we accept them as revelations. Why should we argue about section 106 or 45. If we must obey them why not do so without so much talk about it. We have read them carefully, but could not find a word to suit our case in reference to tithing. Bro. Hunt told us once that a wife is entitled to half and she could pay a tenth of her half, but if a husband is not always willing, what should we do then? We would like to live up to the law, but can not make our wage earners think as we do, if they haven't the light and can not see it.

Question: Could it be possible for a person to be baptized and confirmed by a Latter Day Saint elder, and at the same time unite with the Christian Church?

I would like Bro. Rannie to know that Sr. Zirkelbaugh is here with me. She is Bro. Kaestner's daughter. They will go on a farm nine miles northwest of Armour.

Have tried to get one of the churches for an elder to preach in, but have failed. Sometime we shall succeed and we hope to be among the Saints again.

Respectfully,
MRS. MARY KNIGHT, and MRS. EMMA ZIRKELBAUGH.

Extracts from Letters.

A. G. Miller, Escatawpa, Mississippi: "We have been having a series of meetings of late, conducted by Bro. N. L. Booker. He preached his first sermon here two years ago last fall, and to hear him now one would think he was an old hand at the trade. He is liked by everybody. We hope the heavenly Father will see fit, through his apostles, to send Bro. Booker back here this year. Our district conference at Bluff Creek, March 6, was one long to be remembered, the best ever held in the Mobile District, to my notion. While singing No. 153 in Zion's Praises, Saturday evening, the door opened, and a good-looking man came walking up the aisle and gave his hand for baptism. The choir seemingly was so overjoyed that the singing ceased for a moment. He and wife were led into the waters of baptism, Sunday morning, the 7th. This is where Reverend Bogard held a debate with our people last fall and this spring, and at the close of the debate he said there would never be another one join the church outside of the families. Our reunion will be held in August. Any who feel like helping financially in getting ready for it may send to me."

C. J. Spurlock, Knobnoster, Missouri: "I have not lost hope of complete recovery from my old affliction, though very weak in body. My faith in the gospel is strong. In the ultimate triumph of the latter-day work I have no doubt. I am not troubled in the least by reason of the recent discussion in the HERALD over the tithing question, but believe it will result in good. Just why I am permitted to suffer I do not know. I trust, however, I shall bear patiently, be it long or short, and that great good shall result, either to myself or others, or both, as the Lord will."

Bertie M. Shaffbower: "For the past two years the Saints of the Lebland Branch have been working with all power to erect a building in which to worship, and we have it done, all but painting inside; and, with God's help, we have it paid for. Bro. C. K. Green is our president, a faithful worker for the advancement of the gospel. I would like to give a few words of advice on reading the church books. I was, for years, a great novel reader, and had no desire for church books. Our president, when at our place, was always talking on ideal reading, knowing my desire for novels; and one day said, Sr. Bertie, give up those idols and start at the church books. The following Thursday, at prayer-meeting, I was shown by the Spirit that it was not right, and on my way home told my husband I should never read another idle book, so came home and picked up the Book of Mormon. I read, but with no Spirit. I prayed that God would give me his Spirit, and faith, for I felt that it was faith I needed; and, Saints, I shall never forget the knowledge. I was reading the second book of Nephi, 14th chapter, when God gave me his confirming Spirit that made my soul rejoice that I was living in the latter days, and had ever heard this gospel. Dear Saints, who do not read God's books, ask in faith, and God will give you a knowledge that you will never forget; and for paying tithing God will give us one and all the same spirit of knowledge to know that these things are right, if we ask in faith. We have never paid our tithing, and were just awakened to the thought; but from this on the tenth of all we possess the Lord will get as soon as we can get an elder to help us value what we have."

Samuel Brown, Route 1, Liverpool, West Virginia: "I came to this place two weeks ago. There are a number of Saints here, and I presume a branch of the church, though inactive. I am informed that two Mormon elders are here and have been for about four weeks and preached one sermon during that time. They made their first appearance here last fall, were entertained by the people and permitted to preach in the schoolhouse. They made it appear that there was but little difference between them and the Reorganization, 'authority' being the most vital difference; that because we reorganized we lost our authority and would eventually have to come to them, etc. As many as six of them have been here at a time, and succeeded in getting five adults to join the Mormon church during the winter. Three of them had joined the Reorganization seven or eight years ago. It caused some to wonder. I have done all in my power to show the difference between the two churches, and have been blessed by the Spirit of the Master. I have used their own works, and Honorable Julius C. Burrows, of Michigan, in the United States Senate, and it is deadly shot to Mormonism, it being sworn evidence of their own from its rise to the present. Joseph F. Smith, their prophet, seer, and revelator, is living in adultery, cohabiting with his five wives, and eleven children born to him since the Manifesto was issued by them. Joseph F. was counselor at that time and is now president of said church. It surely is the abomination of the earth, and corrupt from start to finish. It appears to me that the Mormon church was conceived in lust, born in adultery, lived in whoredom, and will eventually die in formality and pride."

William N. Hanner, 1479 Seventh Street, Louisville, Kentucky: "General Conference will soon be here, and may the blessed Holy Spirit of God come down in mighty power upon the Saints of God, throughout the entire conference, and may it have full sway, more than it has ever had in the history of the church. I do not see why they do not get more of the church publications. I have skimmed myself so I can help my church in every way I can. Nothing seems of greater importance to me than my church books, Autumn Leaves, Exponent, HERALD, etc. It will be ten years the 26th of March since I obeyed this blessed gospel, and I thank my heavenly Father for having sent it to me."

E. R. Davis, Denholm, Saskatchewan: "Bro. J. L. Mortimer, who has been with us during our recent bereavement (our baby girl), left this morning, and we feel as though we have lost two from our family, instead of one. He has been with us since the 12th of March, and has been of great comfort and help to us, and is truly a servant of the most high God. He has baptized two and the outlook is good for more in the future. We expect him back again during the coming summer. We hope he will get some help after General Conference, as he has altogether too much ground to cover. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few. Bro. Mortimer is trying to raise money to purchase a gospel tent and fit it out with organ, seats, etc., in order to better prosecute the work, during the summer months. We Saints should strive to do our part in this. We can not all be preachers, but we can help to spread the light of the gospel. Each one has a part to do in this great work and the gospel should be our first and foremost thought at all times. I ask the prayers of the Saints in my behalf that I may be able to overcome the weakness of my nature."

"Constantly affirm in order to confirm. A nail is not driven in by one blow but by constantly hammering its head. A truth is not possessed until by constant practice it becomes a part of us. Christian character is fixed by repetition of Christian conduct. Men are not won to Christ by a few remarks—but their stubbornness may be moved by constant effort. A fact in physics is in point. A five hundred pound bar of steel can be made to swing like the pendulum of a clock by the blows from a piece of cork. At the first stroke nothing happens, but after some hundreds the huge bar begins to tremble and then will swing in correspondence with the cork. We stop too soon."

Convention Minutes.

IDAHO.—District Sunday-school convened at the home of Elder J. H. Condit near Hagerman, on March 19, 1909. Report of superintendent: Organized one school since last convention, at Gooding. Later members had moved away and it had been discontinued. Hagerman school reported 47 members; Swan Lake 8, Badger 30. Elder Layland reported for Boise 30 members. Assistant superintendent reported some work done. Treasurer reported on hand $8.69. Elder Bruner reported attendance at Boise school when he was there about fifteen. Present officers sustained for another year. Bro. Layland chosen as delegate to General Convention. Adjourned to meet at same place as, and one day previous to next quarterly conference. Mrs. Millie Gilmore, secretary.

Died.

DUNSDON.—At Tabor, Iowa, April 2, 1909, in his seventy-first year, Bro. James Dunsdon passed peacefully away after only a few hours illness. He was born at Woolwich, England, November 5, 1838, and went to Utah in 1864, but left the following year, not being able to indorse the doctrines and practices of the church there. He settled near Tabor, in which community he lived an honorable and upright life. He was baptized into the Reorganized Church by Elder Henry Kemp in 1884, and remained steadfast to the end. He leaves a wife, four daughters, and two sons to mourn his loss. Funeral-services at the Saints' chapel, conducted by Charles Fry.

SHOEMAKER.—Barbara Ellen, the infant daughter of Bro. and Sr. S. F. Shoemaker, was born December 18, 1908. She was bit by an insect on the night of December 24, and died Sunday, December 27.

RAINEY.—Elder James S. Rainey was born in Antrim County, Ireland, May 22, 1871, and died March 29, 1909. His parents moved to Canada during his infancy. He leaves a widow, three children, father, two sisters, and a host of friends to mourn his loss. He was baptized October 29, 1886, by R. C. Evans, at St. Marys, Ontario. He was ordained to the office of deacon October 20, 1890, teacher March 14, 1897, and elder October 21, 1904. Was married to Sr. Nellie Butterfield at San Jose, California, May 27, 1897, by Elder Hiram L. Holt. Death was brought about by an accident while in pursuit of his work as conductor on interurban electric line between Vancouver and Westminster, British Columbia. Funeral-service from home, conducted by William Johnson, assisted by Brn. William Hartnell and Isaac McMullen.

BROWN.—February 20, 1909, Bro. P. V. Brown, aged 86 years, 5 months, and 18 days. Leaves wife and six children, five of them boys, to mourn for a loved husband and father. The deceased was born September 2, 1822. Joined the Reorganized Church in 1886, at Valley, Nebraska; baptized by Bro. Nelson Brown.

HOVENGA.—Sr. Emke Hovenga peacefully fell asleep in Jesus March 28, 1909, at the home of Sr. Foster, in Stewartsville, Missouri, in whose care she had been for over three and one half years. Sr. Hovenga, better known as Sr. Luppe, was born June 26, 1826, at Tichelwarp, Germany. Baptized November 24, 1872, by Elder J. Bauer, at Burlington, Iowa. A member of the German Stewartsville Branch, she lived and died strong in the faith. Funeral in charge of T. T. Hinderks, assisted by A. Nisser. Sermon by Elder John Davis. Laid to rest in German cemetery.

BUTTS.—Sr. Amelie A., was born August 14, 1879. Departed this life January 7, 1909. She was baptized July 26, 1908, by Lee Quick. Her funeral-sermon was preached by Lee Quick at the schoolhouse to a large audience of relatives, and many friends. She leaves a husband and five small children, two boys and three girls, mother and two brothers to mourn their sad loss. She shook hands and bade good-bye to all, and asked them all to meet her; she was going home and requested her children to be raised in the gospel. She was a Saint in deed and in truth.

OSBORN.—Sr. Gracia was born September 21, 1891. Departed this life January 24, 1909. She was married to Frank Osborn March 14, 1906. Her funeral-sermon was preached by Bro. Lee Quick in the Friends' church, to a large audience of relatives and friends. She leaves to mourn husband, little daughter, father, mother, brother, sister, and friends. She was patient in all her suffering. She lived and died strong in the gospel. It is hard to part with our loved ones, but we look forward to the time when we can meet again to part no more.

LOVELAND.—Bellville's oldest resident, Mrs. Hannah Loveland, died at her home Sunday night, March 7, after eighteen years of suffering from rheumatism. Hanna Peas was born in Ohio, March 23, 1814; married to Mr. Levi Loveland at Madison, Ohio, in 1836. Three children were born to this union: One died in infancy, Mrs. Oaks, who died in 1896, and Nancy, who alone survives her mother. Mr. and Mrs. Loveland moved to Western Iowa in 1845, where Mr. Loveland died. Mrs. Loveland returned to Ohio, and in 1853 to Wisconsin where they have since resided. She was baptized in the church nearly seventy-one years ago, and has maintained her faith in that doctrine. Her mind and memory were good until but a few days before her death. Funeral at the home Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Elder W. P. Robinson, of Madison, at her request. Interment was in Belleville Cemetery.

TREHARNE.—Eleanor, born June 18, 1874; died Sunday afternoon, March 7, 1909, after a long illness which was endured with quiet and patient resignation. Sr. Eleanor was baptized into the church October 25, 1895, by Elder G. T. Griffiths, and confirmed by Elders J. R. Gibbs and G. T. Griffiths. For many years she has faithfully stood by the work in Llanelly, where she lived and cared for her aged mother, who died just about a year ago. She is mourned by many, and her loss to the church is acutely felt by all who were associated with her. Funeral-service in charge of Brn. Rushton and Lewis, the memorial-sermon being preached in the Llanelly church, Sunday, March 14, 1909.

EMSLIE.—Sr. Mary Emslie, at the age of 72 years, 2 months, and 21 days, died at her home, 1000 East Sixth Street, Des Moines, Iowa, as a result of pneumonia, after an illness of one week. All the missionaries who have labored in Des Moines will remember the hospitable home where she so cheerfully ministered to them. She had been a consistent, devoted member of the church since May 23, 1880. Her husband preceded her to the paradise of God, November 9, 1906. She leaves two sons, William M., David F. A., of Seattle, Washington, and five daughters, Mary Pahre, of Oakland, California, Mrs. Agnes Williams, of Seattle, Washington, Mrs. Jane Cook, of Grimes, Iowa, Mrs. Anna Holmes, and Miss Orpha Emslie, of Des Moines, to follow after, all of whom are members of the church to which she had been so devoted. Funeral-services at Saints' chapel in Des Moines, in charge of Elder J. F. Mintun; sermon by Elder E. O. Clark. Her body was laid by the side of her husband's in Woodland Cemetery to await the resurrection of the just.

BAGNELL.—Adeline, beloved wife of A. B. Bagnell, youngest daughter of Bro. and Sr. Robert Brown, now deceased, of Blenheim, Ontario, passed peacefully away at her home, 639 Queen's Avenue, London, Ontario, January 27, 1909, at 7 p. m., after a lingering illness of about eight months' duration, her death being due to paralysis, the result of anæmia. Sr. Bagnell was born at Carlingford, Perth County, Ontario, April 8, 1873. She was baptized at St. Marys, Ontario, by Elder R. C. Evans, October 31, 1886, and married to Bro. A. B. Bagnell, at Blenheim, Ontario, February 16, 1898, by Elder Samuel Brown. Funeral-service was conducted by Elders William Fligg and John Shields, in the Saints' church, London, the remains being taken to Blenheim for interment in the family burying-ground, where already lie father, mother, two sisters and one brother. Sr. Bagnell was patient during her affliction. She was confined to her bed for about four months. As the days passed by her faith continued to grow stronger in the restored gospel, and in the glorious hope of the resurrection of the righteous. She leaves a husband, four sisters, three brothers, and a number of friends to mourn their loss.

LUSH.—Sr. Hanna J. Lush, aged 65 years, at Kansas City, Missouri, April 3, 1909. At the age of eighteen she married Mr. C. P. Cole, and in 1866 they united with the church. To them were born three daughters. He died in 1872. In 1874 she married Elder G. W. Lush, and to this union were born one son and two daughters. Since the death of her husband, about five years ago, she has lived with her children, who have tenderly cared for her. She was a devoted member, and the gospel was the joy of her life. Funeral-sermon by Elder F. C. Warnky, assisted by Elder W. O. Hands. Interment in Union Cemetery.

CROSSER.—Mrs. Julia Crosser was born in Orange County, New York, April 24, 1851, and died March 27, 1909. She came to Nebraska about the year 1872, and shortly after was married to Charles Crosser, of Willow Creek, Saunders County, Nebraska, who, with three children, Elmer, Hattie, and Morgan, survive her, Harry, the youngest, having died about five years ago. They moved to Holt County in the spring of 1883. Mrs. Crosser united with the church April 15, 1896, and remained a faithful member to the end. Funeral-services at the Saints' church, Inman, Nebraska. Sermon by Levi Gamet.

Resolutions of Sympathy, Respect, and Condolence.

By reason of the respect of which the mother of our Sunday-school superintendent is held for her faithful devotion to the work of God, and our sympathy for our superintendent, Sr. Orpha Emslie, and those bereaved because of the death of Mother Mary Emslie, we express in a humble way our sympathy and respect and condolence, which we trust may be accompanied by the spirit of peace and comfort to the bereaved ones, and thus in a meager way assist in bearing the heavy burden that rests upon our sister at this time.

In behalf of the Des Moines Sunday-school.

RAY CHANDLER,
HATTIE CLARK,
ETHEL BANTA,

Committee.

We, the members of the Des Moines local of the Zion's Religio-Literary Society, indorse the sentiments of condolence and sympathy expressed by the committee appointed by the Sunday-school, and extend our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved ones because of the death of our dearly beloved sister in Christ, Mother Mary Emslie.

The above was adopted unanimously at a regular meeting of the Des Moines local, Sunday, February 21, 1909.

NELLIE ROBINSON, Secretary.

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove by death from our midst to rest from her labors in his glorious paradise our beloved sister, Mary Emslie; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Des Moines Branch, do hereby tender to the bereaved ones of her household our heartfelt sympathy in the loss of her gracious bodily presence and association, which we share with them. While we gratefully acknowledge the heritage of holy memories and saintly graces of mind and soul, we are privileged to share with them in remembrance of her beautiful life among us in the household of faith which remains to pervade as an holy incense the sanctuary in which she was wont to worship with us, and we pray the God she served so humbly and faithfully to temper the blow by the grace of his peace unto their sorrowing hearts.

E. O. CLARK,
W. T. MAITLAND,
J. R. EPPERSON,

Committee.

The above was unanimously approved by the Des Moines Branch, March 14, 1909.

RAY CHANDLER, Secretary.

Tutoring the Lawmakers.

How the State University of Wisconsin has established a working alliance with the legislature is told by Charles Johnston in the issue of Harper's Weekly for March 27. The recent rebuilding of the State government, finances, and administration, says the author, was due directly to the service of the men of the State University at Madison. "The university gained a permanent footing in the capitol, establishing a Legislative Reference Library there, which puts skilled advice and counsel within reach of the legislators, while their work is going on day by day. A practical working alliance has thus grown up, which appears to work admirably in both directions."

A New Chance for the Birds.

High above the marshy wastes which border the Klamath Lakes in Southern Oregon a lone white heron winged his desolate flight a month ago, his beaded telescopic eyes turned now right, now left, while from his needle-pointed beak dismal and discordant cries sounded a requiem for the departed members of his kind, for he was alone in the world—the sole survivor of a once proud family.

On broad pinions the snowy survivor of a former legion floated to the east and then to the west; the far-seeing eyes searching vainly each stretch of lake, land, or sedgy waste for a familiar patch of white which would betoken the presence of father, mother, mate, chick, or friend, but he saw none, for President Roosevelt had been too late in setting aside the Klamath district as a National bird reserve and the delay had sealed the fate of the white heron family.

But one is left, according to the officials of the United States Land Office and of the National Association of Audubon Societies; just one white sample remaining of myriad thousands of one of the most beautiful of all native birds; the cruel decree of fashion having brought about so savage a butchery and so persistent a hunt for white plumage that biological historians will, in future works, record the melancholy fact that in the year A. D. 1908 the white heron followed the great auk over the dismal trail that stretches backwards to the Ages that are gone.

If President Roosevelt had only signed that executive order one year ago—or even six months—the heron would have been saved, but he signed it in September and that was a bit too late.—From "To give the birds a refuge," in Technical World Magazine for April.

A Small Thrift Club.

According to James H. Collins in the March number of the Circle magazine, one of the readers sends particulars of a building and loan association that has less than a dozen members, and is managed on lines that make it adaptable to salaried men in even a small office.

The by-laws require each member to pay five dollars a week to the secretary. As soon as there is enough money on hand to make a small investment the loan committee lends it on mortgage. None but the best-improved real estate is taken as security, and loans are made in small amounts for short periods. Usually an association like this lends to its own members for home-building purposes, but in this case the object is merely to put the money out at interest, so mortgages are taken outside the association. There is a lawyer on the loan committee, and he carefully investigates the transactions, scrutinizing the security, and sees that all papers are properly drawn. As fast as a loan is paid off the capital is lent again, interest being added to the fund. Thus money is kept working constantly, and its earnings swell the capital. On the average eleven per cent interest has been earned for several years, with not a penny lost—this association operates in Colorado, where legal interest is eight per cent and higher rates may be arranged by contract.

Very respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,
 Secretary Quorum of Twelve.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 21, 1909.

We are very much pleased to be able to furnish our readers in this issue with the two revelations and also the list of conference appointments. We do this, however, at the expense of postponing quite a portion of our conference minutes until next issue.

The releases suggested in the revelation to the church were so ordered by the body and the ordinations of E. A. Smith to the First Presidency, and of J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell to the Twelve were ordered, and at Tuesday's session these ordinations were attended to, as also were the ordinations of C. Ed. Miller and J. A. Gillen to the office of high priest, J. W. Davis as president of a seventy, J. E. Vanderwood to the office of seventy, and C. B. Woodstock as counselor to the president of the Fifth Quorum of Elders. At Wednesday's session the ordination of R. C. Evans to the office of bishop was ordered and he was so ordained under the hands of Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley.

TUESDAY, APRIL 13.

President Evans called the assembly to order at two o'clock; song No. 96 was sung, and prayer was offered by Patriarch E. C. Briggs.

Minutes of the preceding session were read and after ordering a slight change, the conference proceeded to business, with President F. M. Smith in the chair.

Upon the suggestion of assistant secretaries, F. A. Russell and Charles Fry, the chair appointed W. W. Smith and J. A. Gillen to act as tellers during the consideration of the auditors' report.

A petition in regard to the case of Samuel Woods was referred to a committee of three.

The regular order was then taken up. Clause No. 5 of the auditors' report was read, as also the Bishop's answer to the same. This clause was in regard to the Sanitarium account. A motion to accept the Bishop's answer was carried.

Section No. 6, in regard to the manner in which the various funds were shown on the books, was read. The Bishop's answer was also read and final action resulted in the adoption of the Bishop's statement.

Clause No. 7 was then read and considered in connection with the Bishop's answer. After some discussion a motion prevailed requesting the Bishop to correct his accounts to show liability to individuals instead of to a third party, as is shown at present. The Bishop's answer was accepted.

Clause No. 8 was considered, after a reading of the same in connection with the answer of the Bishop. The Bishop's answer to this clause was accepted.

A motion to expunge from the record the major portion of the report of the auditors was discussed and lost.

Announcements followed; song No. 51 was used, benediction was given by President Joseph Smith.

Rudolph Etzenhouser spoke in the evening, and was assisted by Arthur Allen.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 14.

The early prayer-meeting was in charge of G. E. Harrington and George Thorburn, and a spiritual time was reported, several prophecies being given.

At eleven o'clock Alvin Knisley was the speaker, and he was assisted by James E. Kelley.

The afternoon meeting was called to order by President Joseph Smith; hymn No. 134 was sung; prayer was offered by William H. Kelley.

Minutes were read and approved.

President Joseph Smith then presented to the body the gavel which had been presented to him thirty-one years ago and which he had used in every conference, with two or three exceptions, when he was not present, since that time. His remarks will be found in another column of this issue. A motion was made to accept and to extend to President Smith the thanks of the body for the gift, and intrusting the care of the gavel to the First Presidency of the church.

A motion then was made and prevailed to the effect that the Presidency, Historian, and the Bishopric start the work of collecting relics and souvenirs of Joseph Smith the Martyr.

Upon motion song No. 353, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," was sung by the assembly.

J. D. Briggs then spoke to a question of privilege, making a statement in regard to the status of the Jackson County Bank in certain transactions which had been presented to the body. A motion followed to incorporate the statement in the minutes of the conference.

M. H. Bond requested the privilege of addressing the body, which request was granted, and the brother did so.

The motion to spread the motion of J. D. Briggs upon the minutes was then voted upon and lost.

Proceeding then to regular order, the auditors' report in regard to the Herald Office and Ensign accounts was read. F. B. Blair, manager, made statement in answer. Speeches were limited to five minutes. The matter coming to a vote after considerable discussion, the third paragraph in regard to the invoice of merchandise, was stricken from the report and a statement was inserted to the effect that the Board of Auditors and the Board of Publication would, as soon as practicable, take a complete inventory on the basis of cost and this inventory would hereafter serve as the basis for reports as to invoice of merchandise.

The remainder of the auditors' report on Herald and Ensign office accounts was then referred to the auditors and the Board of Publication.

The report of the auditors on Graceland College account was deferred until after the report of the College Board of Trustees would be presented.

The committee on petition from Oklahoma on boundary lines reported and the report was adopted.

The committee to which had been referred the petition from Northwestern Nebraska Saints reported and recommended that the matter of organizing districts there be deferred. This report was adopted.

A protest from a medicine company concerning advertising in the columns of the HERALD was referred to a committee of three appointed by the chair.

A report was read from Zion's Religio-Literary Society.

A report from the Committee on Archæology was read.

The Third Quorum of Seventy reported.

The chair then made a statement concerning the gavel which President Smith had presented to the church, reading the inscriptions which were upon the same.

Reports were then read from the Second Quorum of Elders, Second Quorum of Teachers, and the Presidents of Seventy. Their recommendation in regard to dropping names from records was referred to the First Presidency for examination and report to the conference.

Upon motion Thursday, April 15, was set apart as a day of fasting and prayer for direction and light.

The Lamoni Stake Quorum of Priests reported; also the Second Quorum of Seventy.

The report of the committee on the petition from Shenandoah was read, and their recommendation that it be not entertained was discussed, but the matter was deferred until the next session.

The usual announcements were made; the doxology was sung, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

F. M. Slover preached at the night service, being assisted by J. E. Wildermuth.

THURSDAY, APRIL 15.

Prayer-service at nine o'clock was in charge of William Newton and C. P. Faul; and at eleven o'clock H. E. Moler was the speaker, assisted by John Buschlen.

At two o'clock the assembly came to order by call of President Evans; song No. 104 was sung, and G. H. Hilliard made the opening prayer.

The minutes of Wednesday's session were read and approved.

President F. M. Smith took the chair by request.

The matter deferred from the previous session was taken up and after some discussion the recommendation of the committee on the petition from the Shenandoah, Iowa, Branch was concurred in.

The report of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College was read.

The committee which had been considering the Samuel Woods petition reported. The matter was referred to the High Council.

The Fourth Quorum of Elders reported.

The Quorum of High Priests reported.

A motion followed that it be the sense of this conference that evangelists should not be enrolled among the High Priests. A motion to refer to the Presidency prevailed.

The Quorum of Twelve reported in regard to the petition of the Southern California District concerning the elders going out two by two. Their report was adopted.

A resolution from the High Priests' Quorum was presented in regard to section twenty-two of the Doctrine and Covenants, and after different motions had been made and voted upon the matter was referred to the First Presidency and the Board of Publication.

A report from the Sanitarium committee was read. The opening of the Sanitarium was left to the First Presidency, the Quorum of Twelve, and the Sanitarium committee (the Bishopric).

Announcements were made, Friday evening being given over to Graceland College for the purpose of holding an oratorical debate.

Song No. 116 was used in closing, and President Joseph Smith pronounced the benediction.

The evening hour was occupied by J. F. Curtis, assisted by David Smith.

(General Conference minutes will be continued next week.)

DEPOSITS.

We solicit deposits from parties living in any part of the United States or Canada, and will pay interest on funds deposited for a period of six months or longer. This makes a very desirable way of depositing surplus funds, for the reason that the money is always available at the end of any six months period, and at the same time is earning a fair rate of interest. Write for booklet "Banking by Mail" giving full particulars.

INVESTMENTS.

We are also prepared to supply FIRST MORTGAGES in various amounts secured on IMPROVED FARM LANDS, we consider these the cream of all security, and will net the investor a fair rate of interest, time running as a rule from three to five years.

Write to us if you have funds to invest or deposit. Direct all correspondence to STATE SAVINGS BANK OF LAMONI LAMONI, IOWA

Government Land Open to Settlement

Some of the richest and most productive farm lands in the world lies in the "Big Horn Basin" of Wyoming. THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT is spending seven million dollars in building great concrete dams and ditches in order to lead an inexhaustible supply of water to irrigate some of the best of these lands and make them independent of rainfall. A great portion of this work is completed and

The Government Now Offers the Land to You

You have the opportunity to get from the Government a wonderfully productive farm, with water whenever you want it, regardless of rainfall; in a country where a single crop can be made to pay for the land; where 50 bushels of wheat or barley and 75 bushels of oats are commonly grown to the acre; where fruits grow luxuriantly and where the glorious air and sunshine, Summer and Winter, makes life a joyous thing.

This wonderful country is developing fast. Churches and schools abound. The population is intelligent, God fearing and law abiding, and any man out there who is half a man has the opportunity to quickly make himself independent.

Land in this great country is going fast. If you have any thought for the welfare of yourself or children, find out all about this offer of the U. S. Government.

GENERAL CONFERENCE NOTES.

THE PASSING OF THE VETERANS.

In a sense the annual conferences are mile-posts on the way to eternity. Each year one notices changes in the personnel of the ministry. New men appear and old men pass out. Youth grows stalwart and manly; those in the zenith of their power begin to show the effects of age; the aged evidence in a pathetic manner that their race is nearly run.

Early in the conference the Presidents of Seventies reported that Bro. Romanan Wight had resigned from their number on account of age and prolonged sickness. He has been a faithful and efficient member of his quorum.

On Saturday, April 17, the ranks were again depleted by one when Uncle John Hawley passed to his rest. He was in attendance at the conference and died at the home of his son. Bro. Hawley was eighty-three years of age and has long been a familiar figure at our gatherings. As a boy he was with the church at Far West and he followed her fortunes until his death.

At the mass-meeting of elders Saturday afternoon, following the regular business session, President Joseph Smith predicted that the coming year will be one of increased activity, but that the pale reaper will invade our forces and carry away some that apparently we can ill afford to lose.

Our aged veterans have fought a good fight. They have helped to make the name of the church honorable. They go to a bright reward. Let those who follow them fill up the ranks and press onward. We know not on whom the shadow of the sable wing may rest even now; but whether we are to die or to live may it be honorably and to the glory of God.

THE MASS-MEETINGS OF THE ELDERSHIP.

The four mass-meetings of the eldership held during the conference formed an absolutely unique incident in the history of the Reorganization. As before stated the first meeting was held April 9. The spirit of unity and devotion that characterized the meeting gave promise of better things and encouraged those who felt apprehensive over existing conditions. Questions presented to the assembly by Bishop Kelley were referred to the First Presidency with an understanding that the will of God should be sought. Subsequently a day of fasting and prayer was observed.

The mass-meeting was again assembled at the call of the Presidency, Saturday, April 17. The following day was observed as a day of fasting and prayer. The eldership came together again early Monday morning, at which time one of the revelations published in the last issue of the HERALD was presented to them. The condition was peculiar in that the eldership en masse had called for light and the revelation that came was presented to them first instead of to the conference or to the quorums. The mass-meeting did not pass upon it in a body, however; it was referred to the quorums to report back to the meeting. The assembly then broke up to meet in quorum capacity.

Then was witnessed a peculiar spectacle, when so many of the elders took up their march to their places of meeting, down-town, or at the Herald Office. The procession of ministers marching in rather good order, two by two. The procession was of considerable length and had something the appearance of an army marching in similar formation.

The mass-meeting again assembled in the afternoon, following a brief session of the conference, and the reports of the quorums were presented and the entire matter was referred to the conference. The meeting again disbanded and the members proceeded to their various quorums to listen to the reading of the second revelation, which document had been presented to the conference. The marching of the elders was again witnessed. Probably few of them had ever taken part in so many varied and important meetings in one day.

THE REVELATION PRESENTED TO CONFERENCE.

At the regular session, Tuesday, April 20, both revelations were presented to the conference and were unanimously approved. President Joseph Smith declared that in forty-nine years he had not seen greater unanimity of spirit on such an occasion. The words of one brother were recalled, who had said: "I felt before coming here that some things would happen to militate against our peace, temporarily, but that we would close this conference in the sunlight."

At this meeting the ordinations provided for in the second revelation were attended to. Statements were made by the brethren to be ordained and are quoted below.

Elbert A. Smith said:

I do not know that I can express my feelings on this occasion. You can readily understand that it is one of the most serious moments that I have ever confronted; and I can assure you that if there were any honorable way to avoid the responsibility that confronts me I would avail myself of it. I have prayed the Lord that he would, at least, postpone this calling, but my prayer has not been answered, and the calling is here. All I can do is to move forward and trust to God to help me. I feel that I am unqualified for this position, and yet I know that it is the will of God that I should accept the calling. And I want to state that God's hand has been directing me all through my life, and to bear my testimony to this guidance and this direction.

When my father was taken from his family by the affliction that came upon him, my mother was left to face the world and make a way for herself and me; and she did it until I was old enough to make my way and hers, and she did it without financial aid from the church. She taught me the principles of the gospel when we were so far separated from the church that it seemed to me that neither God nor man knew that we were connected with it. I feel that God has watched over me; he has shown me what my work was to be, from time to time, until the present moment.

Since this revelation has been given some have congratulated me. I have felt to appreciate the feeling that prompted their expression; but I want to say that it seems to me that no one in this church is to be congratulated excepting those who are laying their armor down after a successful warfare, —and then nine tenths of the glory belongs to God.

I want to say regarding the men with whom I am to be associated, that in the past they have had my unreserved love, confidence, and support; and in the future they will have the same. In the line of their duty I am willing to stand with them whether the fight goes against them or for them.

I want to say before closing that I have received some remarkable confirmations of this calling that have shown me that the spirit of prophecy still exists in this church. During the past winter I was troubled and perplexed over my work as one of the editors of the HERALD, and Sr. Emma McCallum was moved upon by the Spirit to write me from New Mexico, and the word of the Lord came to me with the advice and instruction that I needed in that very hour. She stated further that I must prepare myself for higher duties, and cease to shrink from them. I have not kept that commandment altogether, because I have felt to shrink from the responsibility.

Last Friday afternoon while I was sitting here one of the brethren handed me a note, and he told me that I should not open it until he gave me permission. When I saw that he was serious in the matter I gave him my promise; and I kept it. After the revelation was read in my quorum yesterday, the brother came to me and told me that I might read the note, and I did so. I will read it to you:

"LAMONI, Iowa, April 16, 1909.

"My Dear Brother Elbert: I had a singular experience this a. m. While in conversation with another your name coming up I was given to realize that the time was near at hand when you would be called to fill the same position in the church which your father occupied. It may come this conference. If it does, and I am not to say now whether it will or not, it will give you comfort to know I have received this.

"With confidence,

"Your brother in Christ,
"T. W. WILLIAMS."

I feel that I am ready to do whatever God wants me to do, and I ask your prayers.

Elder J. F. Curtis made the following statement:

Brethren and Sisters in the Conference: I presume that no one has been more surprised in regard to this than myself. Some ten years ago I was ordained an elder; about six months later I entered upon the general missionary work. For three years I labored as an elder, then I was ordained to the office of seventy, first quorum, and for six years past I have sought to do the Master's will as I understood it. I never have had any aspirations to occupy in the Quorum of Apostles, in fact, it has been the thing farthest from my thoughts. I have enjoyed the work of a seventy in the missionary field. I have felt that my labors were accepted of the Master.

When we came to this conference I had no idea of any change in position, but I believed that we needed instruction from the Lord. In connection with others I entered upon the fast and prayer that has been entered into at the conference, and so far all through the conference I have enjoyed a marked degree of the Spirit. I did not anticipate that that which the Lord had to say would affect me in this manner at all. Having confidence in that which has come from the Master, I see no way of shirking what to me seems a duty. I realize the grave responsibility, to some extent, possibly only to some extent, that will rest upon me, and I know—have known in the past that in the offices that I have occupied I never could have accomplished the work without divine aid.

After I was ordained an elder it seemed to me that the responsibility was greater than I could undertake. It seemed that it was impossible to stand before an audience to present the truth. While in this state of mind I was visited one night in a dream by a messenger and told that the Lord said that inasmuch as I would lift up my voice and proclaim the gospel, he would stand by me and with me.

When it was finished I awoke under the influence of the Spirit. Since then I have tried to do what I could in the service of the Master, and with the help of God and the prayers of my brethren and sisters I am willing to abide by that which has come to us in the way of instruction, if you so provide.

Bro. R. C. Russell made the following statement:

Bro. President, Brothers and Sisters: I am satisfied, from the many manifestations of the Spirit of God to me, that this is a revelation from God. Fourteen years ago I was baptized into the church and soon called to the office of teacher, and at that time I was told that I would occupy as an apostle, if faithful. Many times to me, since then, like manifestations have been presented; not only to myself, but to several others who have written to me and spoken to me of the matter. I have not coveted office. I have often said I would rather occupy in the office of deacon, if God would so accept, but if it is his will and your desire, with your support and confidence and prayers, I will accept the office.

THE CLOSING SESSION:

The closing session was held Wednesday forenoon. At that time the mission appointments were read. There is always a moment of tense anxiety at such a time. Some know, or think they know, where they are going. Others have no knowledge of what awaits them. Into what unexplored fields the year will thrust them they do not know. What partings and heartaches await them they can not tell.

It is no wonder that all are glad when the moment of suspense is ended. Some hear their appointments announced with an appearance of affected unconcern or abstraction. Others can not conceal, or do not care to conceal, the fact that a pang has struck the heart. Yet all sang bravely and steadily the old song:

Brethren, breathe one fervent prayer,
Ere from hence our footsteps tend,
To the Prince upon whose care,
All our hopes and joys depend.
Look beneath, around, above,
All is filled with blessed peace;
'Tis the gift of God's best love,—
Pray that love may still increase.

Go with rev'rent purpose hence,
Strengthened, helped by Spirit's pow'r;
Christ is Helper, Strength, Defense;
Bless him for this peaceful hour.
Look with chastened heart before;
See! the clouds are silver lined!
What assurance need we more?
"God is ever true and kind."

THE MEN WHO ARE RELEASED.

Three men mentioned in the revelation were given honorable release from certain positions. Other and equally responsible positions awaited them. Of Bro. R. C. Evans it was said, "He has been earnest and faithful in service and his reward is sure." He is now filling an important place in work that appeals to him and to which he feels that he is divinely called.

Bro. Heman C. Smith and Bro. Joseph Luff were released from the Quorum of Twelve and the quorum thereby lost two strong men. To be sure their place is filled with younger men whom we feel sure will be wise in counsel and active in service; yet it was inevitable that a feeling of sadness should prevail in the quorum when ties of long standing were severed.

Of Brethren Smith and Luff it was said that they had "wrought well in their service with their fellow servants." Bro. Luff was released that he might devote his time fully to his calling as physician to the members of the church; and Bro. Heman that he might carry on his important work as church historian.

THE ORDINATION OF BISHOP R. C. EVANS.

At the closing session President Joseph Smith recommended that R. C. Evans be ordained to the office of bishop. The recommendation was unanimously approved by the conference and he was so ordained. At this time he made the following statement:

Mr. President: This is the first time that I have spoken during this conference, and I ask your indulgence for a moment or two. When I was called to occupy a position in the First Presidency I soon after purchased property in Independence with a view to moving there and locating, and had pretty nearly all arrangements made—plans and specifications for the erection of a house as per counsel. Soon after that, however, to my great surprise, I was visited by a personage who presented me with a wreath made of maple leaves. In the center of the wreath was a little white flower about the size of a dime that went right around in the center of the wreath, and then across the wreath was the word Canada in the same flower.

When I could compose myself in the presence of the messenger I asked what it meant, and among other things the statement was made:

"You have purchased property in Independence, Missouri?"
"I have."
"You purpose locating there?"
"I do."

I was informed that it was the will of the Lord for me to remain in Canada. Without giving you the full text of the presentment, I thought it over, I conferred with others, and the interpretation seemed to be at that time that it meant just for two or three years, until some one was raised up to take my place there; but I went on under the instruction of the Presidency and my work seemed to increase in Canada, often preaching to thousands of people and sometimes thousands turned away unable to gain admission in the largest opera house in the dominion. My work as a bishop's agent continued to increase, and finally there was presented to me this work as stated by the bishop; [Bishop Kelley had made a statement,] it need not be referred to more by me.

From that time I have gone steadily onward, and last year, February 14, I received a commandment while walking on the streets in the midst of a howling snowstorm, saying, "Go in and purchase this property."

I walked about twenty-five feet and again the voice repeated, "Go in and purchase this property." This was in the city of Toronto.

To make the story short, I went and purchased the property, and in the language of another "immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood," but went to work and built a home and moved to Toronto.

From that time I have tried to do my work, but my interest in my presidential work seemed to wane. I felt that I was not in my place. During this convention a number of days the Presidency have requested me to preside over the session, and you know that this is the first time I have spoken, only just to open the meeting. I felt that I could not do it.

My associations in the Presidency and with my brethren of the Presidency have been all that I could desire. I admit that I was glad, very glad to be released; in fact, I would have tendered my resignation two years ago, but I was afraid to do it and so I have retained it until the Lord in his mercy and wisdom has released me. I am perfectly satisfied to occupy in the position of a bishop, and shall do all that I can for the work that I love dearer than life.

THE SCATTERING.

Thus closed one of the most eventful conferences that we have held in years. The ministry and delegates scattered abroad to their fields of work or to their homes. The crowd melted away as rapidly as it had gathered. Of the parting scenes Sr. Vida E. Smith has written:

What is that comes with a saint's good-bye
That wakens a hope and stifles a sigh;
That brings the assuring, unfaltering word,
Though you part, you shall meet, beloved of the Lord!
The depths of the earth may lie darkly between;
The winters grow white, the summers be green;
A tumult of nature, a world of event
Be crowded in weeks and in days as we went.
But the rise of the sun or the shine of the star,
The wind o'er the prairie, or wave on the bar
Speaks ever and gladly of time to be known
When the beloved of the Lord meet with joy round his throne.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The recommendations of the committee on Canadian districts, in addition to providing for the Saskatchewan and Winnipeg districts, also included the following: "We also approve of the recommendation for the division of the London District in Ontario. We recommend that the new district be formed of the counties east of a line running from Kincardine, on Lake Huron, to the city of Hamilton, on Lake Ontario, and from there to Dunnville, on Mohawk Bay, Lake Erie, this district to be known as the Toronto District. This will leave the boundaries of the London District on the west as they have always been, extending from Grand Bend on Lake Huron to Port Stanley on Lake Erie, and from Kincardine on the west to Dunnville on Mohawk Bay." This feature of the committee's report was not noticed in the conference minutes in the HERALD.

Among other things for which the state of Missouri is distinguished, it is the only state (supposed to be) in which the marriage law requires that the person officiating must be native born, or naturalized as a citizen of the United States.

We call the attention of the readers of the HERALD to this fact for the reason that we have a number of brethren who are citizens of the Dominion of Canada, subjects of King Edward the Seventh, who are traveling and preaching outside the Dominion. Should any of these happen to be in Missouri and be requested to perform a marriage ceremony it would be well enough to take notice of a statutory restriction and avoid coming in conflict with the law:

LAMONI ITEMS.

Conference delegates and visitors took early trains out of Lamoni after the close of conference. The last session adjourned about a quarter of twelve at noon on Wednesday, and those leaving on the one o'clock train could have filled two coaches. Many left at two o'clock, but most of those going east left at eight twenty in the evening, as this train had a special car to Chicago for the use of our delegates.

Sunday preaching was by Elders Heman C. Smith and J. W. Peterson. The day was warmer than usual and very enjoyable after the somewhat cool and wet weather we have had for a couple of weeks.

Associate Editor Elbert A. Smith left for Independence on Sunday noon train to attend the sessions of the High Council. President Fred M. Smith and family returned to Independence at the same time.

The construction work for the local waterworks system is going on rapidly. The greater part of the mains are already under ground, and the tank seems almost completed.

Manager F. B. Blair expects to leave at once for Colorado for a month's rest and recreation.

HEARD DURING THE CONFERENCE.

"There are things instrumental, things ornamental, and things detrimental. The ladies will please remove their hats."

"Do not jump at the top rung of the ladder first or you will fall through and never get to the top."

"Some of us consider the glories that are to be without patiently finding the road between here and there."

"If we do not live in harmony with the basic principles of Christianity, all the ordinances that we may have observed will be of no avail."

"If I am at fault in my labor and administration, I prefer to be called to account by a friend, and not by an enemy."

We acknowledge the receipt of a book of poems, entitled Uncle Charley's Poems, by Charles Noel Douglas. This has been presented to us by the author, and the volume will be passed on to the General Church Library.

Two other volumes recently forwarded to us are The Great Crisis in the Life of Christ, by Laurence W. Scott, and Uncooked Foods, by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Christian, New York, which will also be placed in the Church Library.

General Conference

FRIDAY, APRIL 16.

Morning prayer-service was in charge of Asa S. Cochran and George P. Lambert, and at eleven o'clock R. C. Russell was the speaker, assisted by J. D. Stead.

The assembly came to order at two o'clock with President Joseph Smith presiding; song No. 12 was used in opening the meeting and President Evans made the opening prayer.

Minutes of previous meetings read and approved.

President F. M. Smith was requested to take the chair.

Joseph Luff rose to a question of privilege and made a statement in regard to a former speech by himself. A motion to have the brother make a more complete statement was laid on the table.

A time limit for the introduction of new business was then placed. Three o'clock of the same day was chosen.

Bishop Kelley gave notice that a resolution would be made to create an Order of Enoch for the purpose of holding properties for the benefit of the poor.

The committee to which had been referred the matter of petition from a brother effected by conference resolution of 1905, made report and recommended that the matter be referred to the Board of Publication with power to act. This report was approved.

A motion was then made to authorize the First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, and the Board of Publication to reverse, revise, and proof read a new edition of the Doctrine and Covenants. This was carried.

A recommendation from the First Presidency was then read that C. Ed. Miller, O. J. Tary, John Shields, and Thomas Jones of Wales, be ordained to the office of high priests. This was acted on and on separate motions the recommendation was concurred in on each name and ordinations were ordered.

A motion was made to appoint a committee of three to draft a certificate of blessing of children. This prevailed.

The election of college trustees was taken up and resulted in the selection of F. W. Newcomb to succeed himself, and R. J. Lambert to succeed R. M. Elvin. A vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. Elvin for his long service on the Board of Trustees.

The report of the auditors on Graceland College accounts was then taken up, having been deferred until after the treasurer's report had been presented. The portion pertaining to the college was approved, and the auditors were authorized to audit the treasurer's report.

Election of a member of the library commission resulted in the choice of Heman Hale Smith.

A. Carmichael was chosen to succeed himself on the Board of Auditors.

A recommendation from the First Quorum of Priests was taken up and the question of reporting of the Aaronic priesthood was referred to the First Presidency and the Bishopric.

A recommendation contained in the report of the Board of Publication was considered and the Board of Publication was empowered to take the initial steps toward getting out a teacher's edition of the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures.

A motion authorizing the auditing committee to audit the Sanitarium account prevailed.

A motion was then made that the auditing committee should hereafter confer with those whose accounts they are working on. This prevailed.

Announcements followed; song No. 98, and benediction was pronounced by President Joseph Smith.

The evening hour was occupied by the Graceland Oratorical League, an account of which appeared in our last issue.

SATURDAY, APRIL 17.

The morning prayer-meeting was in charge of William Lewis and I. N. Roberts. The eleven o'clock preaching was by J. A. Tanner, assisted by S. F. Cushman.

President called the meeting to order at two o'clock; song No. 107 was sung, and opening prayer was offered by Bishop R. Bullard.

Minutes of previous meeting read and approved.

By request President F. M. Smith took the chair.

Report from Third Quorum of Elders was read.

Report was also read from the Sunday-school Association.

The auditors made report on the accounts of Graceland College treasurer, and they recommended referring back for further and more complete report. This recommendation was adopted.

The First Presidency recommended the ordination of J. A. Gillen to office of high priest. The brother was present and requested until Monday afternoon for consideration. The request was granted.

A motion to make certificates of blessing in duplicate was referred to the committee already appointed to draft form for the same.

The committee to which had been referred the matter of inventory of merchandise in auditors' report on Herald and Ensign accounts made report, and suggested a basis for these inventories. The report was adopted.

The Presidents of Seventy recommended the ordination of John F. Wiles, Oscar Okerlind, and J. C. McConnaughy to the office of seventy. The names were considered separately and the recommendations were concurred in and the ordinations ordered.

The table being cleared of business, adjournment was decided upon by the chair; announcements were made, song No. 52 was sung, and President Evans pronounced the benediction.

Immediately after adjournment the eldership met in the basement for further consideration of matters under their consideration.

At the evening service Daniel Macgregor spoke on the restoration, using his chart for illustration.

SUNDAY, APRIL 18.

Overflow meeting had been provided for preaching-services, but on account of the rain, which lasted almost all day, only one overflow meeting was necessary.

Prayer-meeting was held at eight o'clock in charge of William France and Charles May.

At fifteen minutes after nine the regular session of Star of Bethlehem Sunday-school was held.

At eleven o'clock, President Joseph Smith occupied in the upper auditorium, assisted by Patriarch Alexander H. Smith. Elder E. A. Smith spoke in the basement, assisted by Elder F. A. Russell.

At half past two in the afternoon, President R. C. Evans was the speaker of the hour, being assisted by Elder R. C. Russell.

The evening hour was occupied by Bishop E. L. Kelley, assisted by Bishop R. Bullard.

MONDAY, APRIL 19.

Early prayer-meeting was in charge of W. A. McDowell and J. C. Crabb.

At the same hour a mass meeting of the eldership was again held, presided over by the First Presidency.

At eleven o'clock O. H. Bailey was the speaker, and he was assisted by W. P. Robinson.

The afternoon meeting was called to order by President Evans; song No. 135 was sung, and prayer was offered by W. H. Garrett.

Meetings of previous session were read and approved.

President F. M. Smith was requested to take the chair.

A statement by J. A. Gillen was read, expressing his willingness to be ordained to the office of high priest, subject to the decision of the body. The motion providing for his ordination having been deferred from a previous meeting, the question was voted upon, and his ordination was provided for.

Bishop E. L. Kelley made an oral report for the committee on incorporation in Canada, and recommended that the committee be discharged. After some discussion this recommendation was adopted.

The chair stated that President Joseph Smith had presented a document in nature of a communication to the church, which he requested to be referred to the various quorums for their consideration before being brought before the body. This request was granted.

In order to give time for the quorums to consider this document and for the mass meeting of the eldership the assembly was adjourned, the members of the eldership repairing to the basement. The delegates and visitors remained in the auditorium where they were addressed by President Joseph Smith. This address will appear later.

The doxology was sung and closing prayer by R. S. Salyards.

At the evening preaching-service President F. M. Smith occupied, assisted by President Evans.

TUESDAY, APRIL 20.

The nine o'clock prayer-service was in charge of Ellis Short and E. A. Blakeslee.

At eleven o'clock Daniel Macgregor continued his lecture on the restoration, not having been able to finish on Saturday evening. He was assisted by S. A. Burgess.

The afternoon meeting came to order at two o'clock with President Joseph Smith in charge; song No. 142 was sung and Patriarch A. H. Smith offered prayer.

Minutes of preceding sessions were read and approved.

By request President F. M. Smith took the chair.

A report was read from the Second Quorum of Seventy.

A report was read from the council of seventy, making selection of J. Arthur Davis as one of the presidents of seventy. The ordination of John E. Vanderwood and James M. Smith to office of seventy in the first quorum, was also recommended. These recommendations were concurred in.

A report was read from the council of the eldership, reporting that they had adopted the document which had been presented to them by President Joseph Smith. This communication was in regard to the organization of an order of Enoch for the holding of properties, and was given in full in last issue of the HERALD.

After the reading of this communication, it was adopted by the body as a rule to guide us in our work. Its publication in the next issue of the Doctrine and Covenants and as a supplement to HERALD and Ensign was authorized.

President F. M. Smith reported that the First Presidency, President Joseph Smith being absent, had considered and accepted the revelation presented by President Smith at yesterday's session. The Quorum of Twelve reported acceptance of the same, as also did the Bishopric, the Seventies, High Priests, and the Elders in joint session.

This document was then read. (This also was published in full in issue of April 21.) After the reading this revelation was accepted as from God to become a rule to govern us in the future. Publication of the same in the next issue of the Doctrine and Covenants and as a supplement to the HERALD and Ensign was authorized.

By request the assembly arose and sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

In the consideration of the items in this revelation, the releases of R. C. Evans from the First Presidency, and Joseph Luff and Heman C. Smith from the Twelve were made, in harmony with the divine instruction.

It was then moved that the recommendation of the ordination of Elbert A. Smith as counselor to the President be approved and ordination provided for. After a statement from the brother, it was so ordered. The recommendations of ordination of J. F. Curtis and R. C. Russell to the Quorum of Twelve were then considered, and after statements from each of the brethren, they were concurred in and the ordinations provided for.

President Joseph Smith then made a statement in regard to the communication which they had accepted as a revelation. This will be found in the minutes of the conference.

Joseph Luff then made a statement in regard to his office and calling as Physician to the Church, and Heman C. Smith made a few remarks in regard to his work as Historian.

The chair announced that the ordinations would then be attended to. Elbert A. Smith was ordained a counselor in the First Presidency under the hands of President Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley. J. F. Curtis was ordained an apostle by F. M. Sheehy and F. A. Smith; and R. C. Russell was ordained to the Twelve by President Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley. J. A. Gillen was then ordained high priest, as also C. Ed. Miller. J. A. Davis was ordained a president of seventy. J. E. Vanderwood was ordained a seventy and C. B. Woodstock was ordained a counselor to the president of the Fifth Quorum of Elders.

A motion was then made by Bishop Kelley that conference authorize the execution of deeds for property which the church was selling at Stockton, California. This prevailed.

Announcements were made, song No. 190 was sung, and benediction was pronounced by President Joseph Smith.

The evening preaching was by W. W. Smith, assisted by V. M. Goodrich.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21.

The early morning prayer-service was in charge of George P. Lambert and J. A. Tanner.

The assembly met for business session at ten o'clock in the forenoon, with President E. A. Smith in the chair. Song No. 211 was sung and Patriarch A. H. Smith offered prayer.

Minutes of the previous session were read and approved.

By request President F. M. Smith took charge.

Reports were read from the First Quorum of Seventy and the committee on location of the children's home. The latter reported that they had accepted Sr. Anna Dancer's gift of eighteen acres of land lying a few blocks west of the church, in Lamoni. The report was adopted.

The Third Quorum of Seventy reported.

The clause in the document addressed to the eldership pertaining to the Bishop and the carrying out of the law was taken up, and the Bishop was authorized to proceed according to the instructions therein contained.

Upon the request of President Joseph Smith the Presidency was authorized to make temporary appointments to the High Council to do the work that will come before that body at Independence.

President Joseph Smith made a statement that he had before suggested that R. C. Evans should be made a Bishop and he now recommended such action to the conference. The body adopted the recommendation and ordered the ordination.

Bishop E. L. Kelley made a statement that on account of his poor health F. B. Blair would have to be released as manager of the Herald Publishing House, and he nominated A. Carmichael as a member of the Board of Publication. The conference approved the selection.

As this caused a vacancy in the Board of Auditors, J. A. Gillen was elected to act on that board.

The ordination of R. C. Evans to the office of Bishop was then attended to by President Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley, president of the Twelve.

The body proceeded then to sustain the various quorums and officers of the church in the following order: First Presidency, Quorum of Twelve, Quorums of Seventies, Quorum of High Priests, the Bishopric, Presidents of Seventy, Evangelists, High Council, Quorums of Elders, The Aaronic Priesthood, Church Secretary, Church Historian, Board of Publication, Church Recorder, Physician to the Church, Board of Auditors, all auxiliary societies, the church in general, college board of trustees, all standing committees, Assistant Historian, and the Library Commission.

Appointments were then read by the First Presidency, which were approved.

Appointments by the First Presidency and Twelve were then read, as also the appointments by the Twelve. These appointments were approved by the body, after a few slight changes had been made. Minutes were read and approved, and adjournment taken to meet, according to our custom and resolution, at Independence, Missouri, April 6, 1910. Song No. 217 was sung and benediction was pronounced by President Joseph Smith.

The Straight Road

LAYING ON OF HANDS.

We learn by the New Testament that the laying on of hands as a rite in the early Christian church was performed for no less than four specific purposes: 1. For the gift of the Holy Ghost. 2. For ordination. 3. For healing the sick. 4. For the blessing of children. First, then, in this treatise, we will consider the evidences the Scriptures afford for the doctrine of laying on of hands.

FOR THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

The first historical instance coming under our observation is found in Acts 8, where we have an account of one Philip going down to Samaria and preaching and making converts of quite a number of the men and women of Samaria. He baptized them, but for a reason that is very manifest they received not the Holy Ghost. We are told that:

Now when the apostles which were at Jerusalem heard that Samaria had received the word of God, they sent unto them Peter and John: who, when they were come down, prayed for them, that they might receive the Holy Ghost: (for as yet he was fallen upon none of them: only they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.) Then laid they their hands on them, and they received the Holy Ghost.

Why did not Philip lay hands on them?

It is not stated. Whether it was due to the fact that he did not have authority, that the laying on of hands did not appertain to his office, or the importance of the occasion, of the opening, and its close proximity to Jerusalem where the apostles, leading ministers of the church, were, is not made plain. One thing can not be denied, however: that the Holy Ghost was withheld till they had received the laying on of hands.

In Acts 19: 1-6, we have an account of Paul's visit to Ephesus, and his finding twelve disciples there who had been without the Holy Ghost by reason of not having had proper instruction. Paul taught them, baptized them, "and when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."

Here we find again that the reception of the Holy Ghost had to be preceded by laying on of hands, as in the case of the Samaritans. In Hebrews 6: 1, 2 we are told that laying on of hands is one of the "principles" of the doctrine of Christ.

If laying on of hands regularly followed baptism, why is it not recorded? Why so many omissions?

Easily accounted for. Do you not regard faith and repentance as essential to salvation? Why are they not always recorded? Why did the writers sometimes fail to include that faith was exercised or taught, or that the people repented? Take Acts 2: 38: they are commanded to repent and be baptized, but nothing is said about faith. Take Acts 16, the jailer's case: it is recorded they had faith and baptism, but nothing is said about repentance. The evident reason why we encounter these omissions, then, is because everything is not told in one verse—the narrative is very brief.

FOR ORDINATION.

The setting apart of men for ministerial duties in Bible times was observed by laying on of hands. Instances of this are found in Acts, chapters 6 and 18, and in 1 Timothy 4: 14, where we read of the laying of the apostles' hands on the seven. Second, the laying on of hands on Paul and Barnabas. Third, that Timothy received the laying on of hands of the presbytery. Each case was in ordination, to confer power to act in some office as a servant of Christ.

Christ says, "I have chosen you, and ordained you."—John 15. He called his apostles and ordained them; and in turn they ordained others when they were called by the Spirit.

We read Numbers 27 and learn that ordination by laying on of hands was also observed in the old dispensation. Moses laid hands on Joshua to constitute him his successor, and to confer upon him the leadership of Israel.

FOR BLESSING CHILDREN.

Instead of baptizing infants—which is without example in the New Testament—we take them in our arms and bless them as Jesus did. (See Matthew 19 and 10.) It says first, that he laid his hands on them: and, second, that he took them in his arms and put his hands on them.

If they die without being blessed, what becomes of them?

They are saved. Jesus says, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

We bless children from the time they are born till they are eight years of age. After they arrive at that age, we baptize them if they are fit for it; but we will not baptize any under eight.

FOR HEALING THE SICK.

How were the sick healed among the ancient Christians?

James says:

Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick.

The mention of the laying on of hands is not included in this particular passage; but by examining other texts we easily discover that it was a part of the process. Jesus said his servants should "lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." (Mark 16: 18.) Jesus "laid his hands on every one of them." (Luke 4: 40.) "And he laid his hands on her." (Luke 13.) "Laid his hands upon a few sick folk." (Mark 6: 5.) Paul laid hands on the father of Publius. (See Acts 28.) Special miracles were wrought by the "hands" of Paul. (See Acts 19.) Signs and wonders were done by the "hands" of Paul and Barnabas. (See Acts 14.) Signs were wrought by the "hands" of the apostles. (See Acts 5.)

Mr. Faithless.—But these things were done away!

Answer.—Yes, but not by the Lord. Not one passage can be produced to the effect that the Lord ever did away with them, or intended they should cease. 1 Corinthians 12: 27, 28 teaches us that they formed a component part of the body of Christ, the church; that God set them therein, and hence when they ceased the church ceased to exist. Why should laying on of hands for the healing of the sick, for blessing of children, and for confirmation, be abandoned, and be retained for ordination? Why not throw it overboard for every purpose, if for any? Where is there any evidence of its being repealed for three purposes and retained for one? James says, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church." If that does not apply to us, no part of the epistle does. It will not do to say that we have medicines now to take its place, and institutions of learning to take the place of inspiration. It is easy to make the worn-out expression, "These things were done away, and the day of miracles is past," but it is impossible to reconcile such statement with the Scriptures. We allow that the laying on of hands for the healing of the sick ceased—for the reason that through apostasy and the loss of the Spirit it ceased to be efficient in results. If the church is on earth to-day, the "signs will follow." The spiritual gifts of 1 Corinthians 12 will be there; not merely divine healing, but all the others.

Then, do you altogether object to the use of medicines?

No. They did not in Bible times, even when you admit divine healing was on earth. We believe God is the creator of the herbs, the minerals, etc., from which the medicines are extracted; but we also believe that he has designed a special salvation for those who believe on him.

If the sick were always healed, they would never die!

So in Bible times. Yet we find they did die. They had the gift of healing among them, yet they are gone, they are not here to-day. Because God does not act in healing every case, does not argue that he does not in any. ALVIN KNISLEY.

THE TWENTY-THREE HUNDRED DAYS.

The twenty-three hundred days of Daniel will ever prove an interesting problem: "And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed."—Daniel 8: 14.

"Sanctuary" in its larger sense means a place of protection, a sacred asylum. (See Webster.)

It was applied firstly to the sacred furniture and apartments of the tabernacle and temple. (Hebrews 9: 1, 2.) Later the term came to designate the entire structure, (2 Chronicles 20: 8,) all of which typified the spiritual temple or church of Christ wherein, as well as in the tabernacle, a priesthood officiated at the altar of the ordinances.

In the latter sense must it be applied in the language of our text, since it can not be that God will revive the service of the tabernacle upon the expiration of such a far-reaching prophetic period, long since nailed to the cross:

This sanctuary is the spiritual sanctuary of the Christian Church, not the literal sanctuary of the Jewish temple. . . . The Jewish temple can not be the sanctuary which the little horn was to pollute: but if it be not the literal Jewish temple it can be nothing else but the Christian spiritual temple.—Reverend G. S. Faber, Dissertation on the Prophecies, vol. 1, pp. 320, 322.

"Cleansing of the sanctuary" would suggest that evil would previously enter this sacred institution to such an extent that a cleansing would be necessary. Hence a cleansing of the sanctuary necessarily succeeds a pollution of the sanctuary. (See 2 Chronicles 28: 29.)

In the pollution of the sanctuary above referred to it appears that the true worship of God had ceased in the land, for the king had "cut in pieces the vessels of the house of God and shut up the doors of the house of the Lord."—2 Chronicles 28: 24. There was a departure from the faith.

A pollution of the sanctuary, therefore, representing an apostasy, a cleansing of the sanctuary, will naturally signify a return to the true worship, a restoration of the true faith and practice of religion.

In the previous chapter Daniel had a vision which "much troubled him." (Daniel 7: 28.) It was concerning the people of the Lord. He foresaw their coming calamities.

He saw that a power would develop out of the "fourth kingdom," the pagan Roman Empire, that would "wear out the saints of the Most High and think to change times and laws, and they shall be given into his hands until a time, times, and the dividing of time."—Daniel 7: 25.

He was not advised as to when this period of apostasy would commence, hence could not determine the time of its termination.

Had he been shown when the "time, times, and a dividing of time," or twelve hundred and sixty years, would begin, he could easily ascertain when it would end. This had not been revealed, consequently he cheerlessly commented in the closing verse of the chapter, "my cogitations much troubled me."

The Lord, however, does not partially perform his work; it is always thorough. To what purpose would he reveal to Israel such terrible trials of such immense magnitude unless he also indicated the time of their termination. Too much of shade spoils the picture, and surely there's a ray of enlightenment somewhere to soothe the sorrows of the prophet.

The Lord did not leave him long to worry.

In the succeeding chapter the same matter is taken up, only in different symbols and so we are again informed that "it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them. Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down. . . . And it cast down the truth to the ground; . . . and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people."—Daniel 8:10-12, 24.

Thus it is apparent that the same calamitous apostasy, viewed in the former chapter, is considered in this also.

In the 7th chapter the Lord said that the saints shall be worn out; in the 8th he speaks of them as the holy people being destroyed. Again in the 7th chapter he says, "He . . . shall think to change times and laws;" and in the 8th he states that they shall "cast down the truth to the ground."

It is all the same work and the same workers, consequently it is the one and the same approaching apostasy referred to.

Now since there is this relationship between the works and the workers of these two chapters, this relationship will also extend to the prophetic periods of said chapters.

True "time and times and the dividing of time," amounting to twelve hundred and sixty years, can by no adjustment of mathematics be made to equal twenty-three hundred years. But their relationship lies in the fact that they terminate together. They may begin where they will but they will expire synchronously. This is evident from the fact that each prophetic period is fulfilled upon the accomplishment of the same event. That is, that the deliverance of the Saints from the bondage of apostasy, and the cleansing of the sanctuary of the church, events of a kindred nature and inseparably connected, will each transpire at the end of their respective periods—the one at the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years and the other at the end of the twenty-three hundred years. Hence, as we have said, these two prophetic periods are related, expiring at the same time.

This synchronous termination is recognized by leading prophetic students, among them the Reverend G. S. Faber in his Sacred Calendar, vol. 1, p. 238, and Reverend William Cunningham in the Investigator, vol. 3, p. 168.

It appears, therefore, that the saints, the holy people of the Lord, will be delivered from the thralldom of their twelve hundred and sixty years apostasy upon the expiration of the twenty-three hundred years.

It will be our purpose to find out the date of commencing the twenty-three hundred years, since, upon learning that, we may ascertain not only its terminus but the terminus of the twelve hundred and sixty years also.

That these prophetic periods had not expired previous to 1830 A. D. is evident from the following admissions proffered by the foremost prophetic students of their time:

These twenty-three hundred days denote the whole time from the beginning of the vision to the cleansing of the sanctuary. The sanctuary is not yet cleansed and consequently these years are not yet expired.—Bishop Newton on the Prophecies, p. 294. (He wrote in 1754 A. D., and the edition quoted from was published in 1823.)

How or when did the woman return from her long stay in the wilderness? To which it must be answered that as her stay in the wilderness is not yet completed, the method of her return being future, can not be pointed out.—Reverends Rivington, of St. Paul's Church Yard, and Hatchard, of Piccadilly, in Daniel's Metallic Image, p. 333, published in 1810 A. D.

We can not be very far removed from the end of the 1,260 days; whatever be the precise year from which they ought to be computed.—Reverend G. S. Faber's Dissertations on the Prophecies, vol. 2, p. 491, published in 1814 A. D.

But there has yet been no cleansing of the sanctuary.—Reverend William Girdlestone, A. B., Visions of Daniel, p. 222, published in 1820, A. D.

In view of these sincere acknowledgments we ought not to credit the reformers with what neither they nor their accomplices ever claimed to effect, viz, the cleansing of the sanctuary. Up to A. D. 1820 they humbly confessed that it had not been accomplished.

When was it, then, that the twenty-three hundred years expired? Answer: That depends on when it began. If we can establish the date of its commencement we may with certainty determine the time of its termination.

We are not in favor, however, of the peculiar methods of computation indulged in by some who, straining to bolster a local event of selfish importance, count back twenty-three hundred years. Landing upon some date for a beginning, they immediately spread themselves to brood over the ordinary events of that year, eventually hatching a crippled chick of bantam breed which they ingloriously designate the parent year of the twenty-three hundred prophetic period.

A better way would be to commence from some important era of the past, then count forward the allotted number of years, let it terminate where it may.

In this we commend the scholarly researches of the Reverend William Ward A. M., who in six volumes of Prophetic History published from 1810 to 1820, goes into the matter thoroughly and dispassionately. He says:

The twenty-three hundred years, besides the date from B. C. 480 to 1820 A. D., which I have noticed, may be dated from B. C. 470 when the Greeks in return under Cimon the Athenian attacked the Persian empire and prevailed, till the final overthrow of 1830 A. D.—Vol. 6, p. 282.

The Reverend Alexander Keith, D. D., seems to share this view, for in Signs of the Times, volume 2, page 450, he submits, "1821-1831" A. D. as the "commencement as supposed of the cleansing of the sanctuary."

It will be observed that these eminent theologians, instead of trying to make a date by loading down an isolated year of antiquity with unimportant events, as many commentators do, chose rather a period of years such as were suggested by events within the vision, and therefrom computed the twenty-three hundred years.

Doing this, their united verdict is that the utmost limits of this grand prophetic period reaches into A. D. 1830, 1831, but no further.

The period selected was that of the conflict between Grecia and Persia when at the height of its fury 480-470 B. C. With equal propriety they might have enlarged this period to the utmost limits of this long protracted war, which commenced with the battle of Marathon 491 B. C. and ended with a treaty of peace 449 B. C.—the bisecting date of which was 470 B. C.

Reckoning thus from periods of years in the method pursued by the leading prophetic students, such as Reverend G. S. Faber, William Cunningham, and Grattan Guinness.

This is done because, as Mr. Guinness observes, "historical movements like the birth and death of nations cover many years, or decades, or centuries, in proportion to their greatness and duration."

Whatever may be said concerning this historic period submitted by our learned historians, one thing is prominently apparent and that is that it confines its limits within the historic scenes pictured in the vision. We suggest, however, the selection of a larger period, one that covers every event from which we may with propriety commence the twenty-three hundred years. Doing this we can not be accused of narrowness.

We submit the period of the vision itself; the entire era covering all the historic events therein presented. Of these there are five.

The first is the Babylonish captivity as suggested in the opening of the vision,—“And it came to pass when I saw that I was at Shushan in the palace which is in the province of Elam and I saw in a vision and I was by the river Ulai.”—Daniel 8: 2.

This pictures the prophet, who is the representative of his race, in a foreign country, in the province of Elam. Elam was a province of Babylon to which country Daniel and the whole Jewish nation had been brought many years before. This grievous captivity was the one and all-absorbing subject among the exiled Jews. It was on their mind day and night. Hence it was only natural that it should occupy a foremost place in the vision.

It is well said by the Reverend Doctor Auberler, “That the exile forms the historical basis of Daniel’s prophecies.”—Prophecies of Daniel, etc., page 15.

Judah’s trouble with Babylon began in 607 B. C., when Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem. (See Chronology to Oxford Bible, Daniel 1: 1; 2 Chronicles 36: 6.) In the next year Jerusalem fell and a part of the vessels of the house of the Lord were carried into Babylon together with Daniel and his fellows. (Daniel 1: 1-6.)

The second historical event presented was that of the rise of the ram or Medo-Persian empire. It developed into national greatness about 539 B. C.

The third event was that of the conflict waged between the ram and the he-goat which terminated in the victory of the Macedonians (he-goat) over the Persians in 330 B. C.

The fourth scene represents the great horn being broken and for it four notable ones arising towards the four winds of heaven. This was fulfilled in the sudden death of Alexander and the division of his kingdom between four of his generals in 323 B. C.

The fifth and last act presents the coming forth of “the little horn” which “waxed exceeding great,” eventually casting “down the truth to the ground” and destroying “the mighty and the holy people.”—Verses 12, 24.

This was Rome, firstly in its pagan state, later in its papal. Whatever pagan Rome omitted to fulfill papal Rome thoroughly accomplished.

Rome arose to prominence in the year 197 B. C., when at the battle of Cynoscephalæ she overthrew Philip, king of Macedon, one of the four dominions of the original Macedonian Empire. And thus it was that “Out of one of them came forth a little horn which waxed exceeding great.”

Philip being terribly defeated, sued for peace, for “he was taught that another and not he must rule in Greece.”

In the same year war commenced between the Romans and Antiochus the Great, of Syria, another of the four horns. Antiochus was beaten, being obliged to surrender all his possessions in Europe and Asia Minor, all his elephants and ships, and to pay three million, six hundred and sixty thousand pounds sterling. Ever after Rome maintained her ascendancy. (See Encyclopedia Britannica, and Chambers', article "Rome"; Prideaux Connection, vol. 2, pp. 88, 89.)

Thus it will be seen that the extreme dates covering the era of the vision range from 607 B. C. to 197 B. C., a period of four hundred and ten years.

Now for us to single out any one of these historic scenes and use it for a basis of computation is, to say the least, strikingly partial and wholly assumptive. There is nothing in the vision to say that we should commence the twenty-three hundred years from the establishment of the Medo-Persian Empire, the Roman Empire, nor yet from any other isolated point. Yet this is what certain commentators have done.

Some have imagined that the rise of the ram was the point at which to commence their calculations. Others suppose that the he-goat ought to be considered, while others again think it permissible to measure from the little horn.

We see nothing, however, in these assumptions. There is nothing in nor out of the vision to warrant a commencement at any of these points. Nothing is said favoring the captivity, the ram, the he-goat, the four horns, nor the little horn. All events are treated alike and impartially.

If, as some suppose, the he-goat is the commencing-point of the twenty-three hundred years, then there was little use of the prophet presenting the other historic scenes. They do not help to determine the point of commencement. On the contrary they add confusion.

The same objection may be urged against the selection of the ram as the starting-point. All the other historic events presented become valueless so far as affording a clew to the commencement of this prophetic period is concerned.

The fact, however, that all five historic scenes are presented side by side and in chronological order, with preference shown to none, suggests that our computations must commence at some point favorable to all and from all.

If it be assumed that the twenty-three hundred years ought to commence at either end of the vision, we have but to try it on and see how it works.

Dating from 607 B. C. in solar years it will expire in A. D. 1694; or if computed in lunar years will expire in 1625.

The very mention of these dates exhibits their absurdity, so far as effecting a cleansing of the sanctuary is concerned. Nothing of the kind has ever been attributed to them. They are unknown quantities in history.

Or if, measuring from the other end of the vision, 197 B. C., in both solar and lunar forms, it would lead us to A. D. 2104 and 2034 respectively. Distant dates, surely and entirely unsatisfactory to the requirements of this generation. It would place the sanctuary of the church a long way off, greatly to the distress of the churches now in existence strenuously claiming to be the sanctuaries of the Lord.

Measuring thus from either extremity is found to be unsatisfactory, terminating too late or else on uneventful, unimportant years.

Rather than measure from either extreme, a course which is always dangerous, we must find a fairer and more equitable commencing point, one which will do justice to either end and yet measure from the whole vision.

There is one point that will do this and one only. It is the midway point, the bisecting date of the entire vision, 607 — 197. It is the year 402 B. C.

In our interpretation of prophetic periods we ought not to overlook the lunar system of time measurement. It prevailed quite generally in ancient days. The Jewish calendar was strictly lunar.

Lunar time is that system of time measured by the moon, the solar being measured by the sun. During the deliverance of the prophecies of Daniel, Israel was under the administration of the Mosaic law—a law of types and shadows which borrowed its strength from the coming kingdom and church of Christ, even as the moon borrows her light from the sun. It is but eminently fitting, therefore, that lunar time measurement should enter into the interpretation of these prophecies as well as that of the solar:

It is evident that lunar as well as solar measurements of time are employed in the chronological predictions of scripture . . . the question now arises, where does this long period (twenty-three hundred years) run out? and to what events does its termination lead? We may reply, first generally, it runs out like the "seven times" both on the lunar and solar scales.—Light for the Last Days, pp. 83, 298.

The seventy years' captivity was more accurately fulfilled on the lunar basis than the solar.

Now a lunar year is nearly eleven days shorter than a solar year, and this difference running up into twenty-three hundred years amounts to considerable. In twenty-three hundred lunar years there are but twenty-two hundred and thirty-one solar years.

Having already applied the solar form of twenty-three hundred years to the era as submitted by Reverends Ward and Keith, and finding it to terminate at 1830, nothing remains now but to apply the lunar form. Commencing then from the era of the entire vision centered in 402 B. C., the twenty-three hundred lunar years will expire in A. D. 1830.

Thus whether we compute in solar years from the shorter period as prescribed by the historians, or in lunar years from the longer period prescribed by the historic scenes of the entire vision, we are brought to the inevitable 1830.

Nor are these prophetic forecasts to perish without hope. The events of 1830 are as large as the prophecy requires. For then it was that the church emerged from the imprisonment of her apostasy, where for twelve hundred and sixty years she lay in silent seclusion.

Freed from false teachings, divested of evil doctrines, and unincumbered with unauthorized hirings, she was ushered from the wilderness of her retreat clear as the sun and fair as the moon, cleansed, purified, and empowered for her Master's service.

In name she is known as the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, organized after the apostolic model, and untainted with the contaminating creeds of polluted man. It is the sanctuary of the Lord.

Ignore the claims of this church, if we will, we are still under obligation to seek for the sanctuary of the Lord as restored in 1830. It is the year of jubilee and no other year will do.

The prophecies must be fulfilled and they irrevocably require that this work commence in 1830. It must commence! It has commenced!!

What other church, then, organized in that year claims to be such? There is none.

The Latter Day Saint Church is the only organization responding to the call and appointment of prophecy. It must be the CHURCH.

COLONIZING THE TRAMP.

The tramp question has been for fifty years an apparently unsolvable one in America. It need hardly be said that the administration of law has not been able to cope with it. Workhouses, jails, and prisons have not diminished the number of tramps. Charitable societies long ago gave up in despair all idea of attempting to settle the question either by the ordinary or extraordinary methods of charity. To the railroads the tramp problem has been an ever-present and a very serious one. It is estimated that the railroad corporations of the United States suffer an annual loss of $25,000,000 by reason of the depredations, intentional or unintentional, of the army of tramps. This, at any rate, was the estimate made by Major Pangborn, representing President Murray, of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, at the National Conference of Charities and Corrections at Minneapolis in June, 1907.

This $25,000,000 yearly loss represents property destroyed or taken in one form or another. The losses are continuous from explosions or flames due to careless lighting of fires by tramps. Robberies, obstruction of tracks, interference with signals, stopping of trains, injuring and frequent killing of employees, and wrecks which entail large immediate loss and heavy suits for damages,—these are some of the disastrous results of the doings of tramps. The immense number of tramps trespassing upon railroads, and the fatalities which overtake many of them, may be judged from the fact that in a period of five years recently 23,964 trespassers were killed and 25,236 injured while stealing rides on railroads. Most of them were tramps.

MORE THAN HALF A MILLION VAGRANTS.

It is conservatively estimated that there is an army of at least 500,000 tramps in the United States. This figure is calculated by taking as a basis the number of tramps killed on the railroads every year and multiplying it by the proportion of train men killed in the year compared to the total number of train men employed. But it is entirely probable that the number at present reaches nearer a million than 500,000. The recent industrial depression added large accessions. Reports from railway agents throughout the country show that never in the history of the railroads was so large a number of tramps met with.

A large proportion are youths ranging from sixteen to twenty-one years of age. Beginning with a yearning for adventure, about one half quit the nomadic life and return home, or settle down, while the remaining half become inveterate tramps and gradually trend from vagrancy into a career of crime or semi-crime. A very large percentage of tramps, however, are adults and comprise every species from men who will not work or who have become chronically unfitted for work, to those who are innocent victims of downright adversity.

Both the charitable societies and the railroad corporations have long desired some practicable method of dealing effectively with all aspects of the tramp problem. If it could be done the charitable societies would be relieved of a burdensome drain upon their time and resources, and railroads would benefit by the stoppage of the great losses and annoyances to which they have been subjected, while from a humanitarian standpoint the tramp would be given an opportunity to regain his standing in society. Hitherto all experiments have failed. The committing of the tramp as a vagrant to the workhouse or jail is, of course, an old method. More recent expedients are the municipal lodging-houses and work-yards run by charitable societies. These, while of some effect, have been utterly impotent, considering the problem as a whole.

The charitable societies and the railroads believe that they have at last come upon a plan which is quite certain to prove efficacious. This plan is a transplanting, with certain modifications suitable to American conditions, of the tramp colony idea already in force in Holland, Belgium, and Switzerland. Since the instituting of these colonies vagrancy has been unknown in those countries, and although they have certain features which can not well be adopted in this country, the general plan of these European experiments will be followed.

NEW YORK'S PROPOSED COLONIES.

The first step toward the establishment of tramp colonies in America has been taken in New York. Such public-spirited men as Edmond Kelley, R. Fulton Cutting, Robert W. de Forest, Samuel J. Barrows, and others have joined with all of the charitable societies and the railroad lines in drawing up a bill which has been introduced in the Legislature. That this bill will become a law, if not at this session of the Legislature, eventually, is regarded as certain. Railroad corporations which have so powerful an influence at Albany have enthusiastically pledged their support. In fact, their attorneys assisted in drawing up the bill and in suggesting some of its most important features. The New York Central, the Erie, the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and other railroads have definitely and specifically given assurance that they will do their utmost to have the colony system established. It is more than likely that it will be introduced throughout the United States.

What are the provisions of this bill? The measure appropriates $750,000 to establish three tramp colonies, one near New York City, the second in the neighborhood of Albany, and the third in the vicinity of Buffalo. Part of this fund, it is proposed, will be used in buying sufficient areas of waste land for the colonies, and the remainder for the erection of necessary buildings. The Governor is to appoint five men who shall constitute a Board of Trustees of Labor Colonies, and who are to serve without pay. This provision is intended to obviate purely political appointments and to secure competent officials. These colonies, the bill sets forth, are to be devoted to the detention, reformation, and instruction of persons convicted of vagrancy, habitual drunkenness, and violation of section 426 of the Penal Code. This section, it may be noted, is the particular one covering offenses against railroads, such as trespassing, theft, and other crimes. All three colonies are to be places of compulsory detention. Magistrates are to have the full power of fixing the duration of sentence, although no sentence is to exceed two years. Any inmate will be able to get a parole upon giving proofs of good behavior and if the trustees are convinced that he will not violate the law. But if any tramp attempts to escape from the colony in which he is confined, he is to be subject to a term in State prison for a period of from one to three years.

The colonies are to be more agricultural than industrial. The aim will be to subordinate the industrial features to the agricultural. Competition with free labor will be strictly avoided. Waste land will be reclaimed and cultivated as truck gardens. It is believed that the large cities are able to absorb so much produce that these gardens will not interfere with the trade of small farmers. Probably the entire product of the colonies may be supplied to State institutions. Every inmate is to be paid for his labor, and the cumulative amount given to him when he is released. This compensation, it is provided, shall be based upon the pecuniary value of the work performed and "also on the willingness, industry, and good conduct" of the inmate. In place of other penalties and punishments the superintendent of each colony is empowered to maintain a system of fines to be imposed at his discretion. Any tramp who violates the terms of his conditional release is to forfeit all that he has earned.—Gustavus Myers in the American Review of Reviews, March, 1909.

LIFE.

The world is not a playground; it is a schoolroom. Life is not a holiday, but an education. And the one eternal lesson for us all is how better we can love. What makes a man a good cricketer? Practice. What makes a man a good artist, a good sculptor, a good musician? Practice. What makes a man a good linguist, a good stenographer? Practice. What makes a man a good man? Practice. Nothing else. There is nothing capricious about religion. We do not get the soul in different ways, under different laws, from those in which we get the body and the mind. If a man does not exercise his arm he develops no biceps muscle; and if a man does not exercise his soul, he acquires no muscle in his soul, no strength of character, no vigor of moral fiber, nor beauty of spiritual growth. Love is not a thing of enthusiastic emotion. It is a rich, strong, manly, vigorous expression of the whole round Christian character—the Christlike nature in its fullest development. And the constituents of this great character are only to be built up by ceaseless practice.

What was Christ doing in the carpenter's shop? Practicing. Though perfect, we read that he learned obedience, and grew in wisdom and in favor with God. Do not quarrel therefore with your lot in life. Do not complain of its never ceasing cares, its petty environment, the vexations you have to stand, the small and sordid souls you have to live and work with. Above all, do not resent temptation; do not be perplexed because it seems to thicken round you more and more, and ceases neither for effort nor for agony nor prayer. That is your practice. That is the practice which God appoints you; and it is having its work in making you patient, and humble, and generous, and unselfish, and kind, and courteous. Do not grudge the hand that is molding the still too shapeless image within you. It is growing more beautiful, though you see it not and every touch of temptation may add to its perfection. Therefore keep in the midst of life. Do not isolate yourself. Be among men, and among things, and among troubles, and difficulties, and obstacles. You remember Goethe's words: "Es bildet ein talent sich in der stille, doch ein charakter in dem strom der welt."

"Talent develops itself in solitude; character in the stream of life." Talent develops itself in solitude—the talent of prayer, of faith, of meditation, of seeing the unseen; character grows in the stream of the world's life. That chiefly is where men are to learn love.—Henry Drummond.

GENEROSITY.

"Love envieth not." This is love in competition with others. Whenever you attempt a good work you will find other men doing the same kind of work, and probably doing it better. Envy them not. Envy is a feeling of ill will to those who are in the same line as ourselves, a spirit of covetousness and detraction. How little Christian work even is a protection against unchristian feeling. That most despicable of all the unworthy moods which cloud a Christian's soul assuredly waits for us on the threshold of every work, unless we are fortified with this grace of magnanimity. Only one thing truly need the Christian envy, the large, rich, generous soul which "envieth not."—Henry Drummond.

Going to School.

BY SR. MINNIE ANDERSON WARNOCK.

My Johnnie has started to school to-day,
Oh, my, how my baby has grown!
The years have gone so very fast;
Oh where, oh where have they flown?

As his dear little form went out the door,
His shadow still lingered with me;
And follows me round from room to room,
But is silent as silent can be.

So different is he from the real live John
That I feel quite lonesome and sad;
And I anxiously wait till school is out
To again hear his voice so glad.

February 8, 1909.

Dear Sisters: I have been asked to write, and I ask myself the question, What shall I write? What will be of most interest and benefit to all? And I have presented to my mind a prophecy delivered at our General Conference of 1908, wherein it says concerning the Daughters of Zion:

"Oh, ye handmaidens, keep yourselves pure and holy, for you are taking a grand and glorious part in this work of the redemption of my people. Therefore lead my daughters, even the daughters of Zion, into paths of virtue, truth and holiness before me, and I will still make bare my arm, and my people will be redeemed."

And so I am impressed with the thought of what manner of persons we ought to be to be able to carry on so important a work, does it not behoove us to better qualify for so great a task, so that our efforts may produce better results? Our work is surely an uplifting one, and it seems to me we should strive to come up higher, to come nearer to the fountain-head of all good.

It has been said, "I can do nothing of myself," and this is surely true, for the closer we walk to the Savior the more like him we become, and the better fitted to do the work we are called upon to do, and so the first thing for us to do is to come in touch with that divine force that gives us the desire to become better.

Our work is an important one, and all should give it their careful consideration and try to apply the teaching to their lives; for our work is far-reaching; it reaches the foundation of society which is the home; for just so soon as we learn how to purify the home by applying to our lives the principles of virtue, truth, and holiness, we can preserve the sanctity of the home, and thus raise up a pure and righteous people who can be of great assistance in the redemption of Zion. If we ourselves learn these principles, we can in turn teach others. We can not only teach those within our home, but those outside of our home. We can instill these beautiful principles into the lives of our children; for they will play an important part in the great work of redemption.

The first principle is virtue, which is purity of heart and purpose and deed. The next is truth. The Christ has said, "Sanctify them by my truth; my word is truth"; therefore it means an application of the word of the Lord to our lives whether found in Bible, or Book of Mormon, or Doctrine and Covenants, or from those in the last days that the Spirit speaks through by way of prophecy, tongues, or revelation; the next is holiness which comes as a result of our practice of virtue and truth.

SHARON, Pennsylvania, April 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: We, as a people, have been blessed in many ways, too numerous to mention. Glad indeed to find the same spirit made manifest in this place as in other places. The Lord is good and kind to us, and he will never leave us alone if we continue to serve him. God works in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. I have seen the workings of God in miraculous ways. He has, through T. U. Thomas, raised my brother from a death-bed, as it was afterwards told him. My little girl was scalded and was healed, and my sister's little girl was severely scalded and is rapidly improving. God in his tender mercy has seen fit to spare her thus far; I pray that he will continue to spare her to her parents that she may yet grow into womanhood and be an instrument in his hands, for winning souls into his kingdom.

This Bro. T. U. Thomas, who is our branch president, is loved by all who know him, but will be leaving us soon to go to a foreign mission. We will miss our brother, but may we always say, Thy will be done at all times, and not our will be done, knowing he will in his tender mercy raise up another to lead his sheep, for nothing is impossible with God. This brother and his humble companion work hand in hand, doing all the good they can for the advancement of this great and glorious work.

I love to read the letters as they bring joy, peace, and comfort to my heart and strengthen and encourage me along the way. By receiving blessings from the Lord, we keep alive spiritually in the work. We have good preaching by the brother before mentioned. He has preached in much power, knowing that the angels of God have stood by him and words were put in his mouth. Through Bro. Richard Baldwin were powerful sermons also preached, insomuch that it seemed as though the whole building would shake. Through his preaching, he has been the means of bringing many precious souls into the great latter-day work.

Bro. G. A. Smith has been in this place different times and certainly has preached by the power of God. Who could help but love this brother for he is such a humble man. When the brother has preached and been in Saints service, the tears would trickle down over his cheeks.

I hope, as I am trying to write this letter in my weak way, that it may encourage some one along the way. We have had so many evidences that this work is true, why should we not want to continue faithful to the end? I have had dreams, and there are many more blessings in store for me, if I will but come to where the Lord desires me.

We have a fine Religio Society and we know God does smile upon it, for we have been greatly blessed in the same. As soon as we enter the door the sweet influence of the Holy Spirit thrills our whole being, and everything seems solemn and sweet. Although trying to hold back from showing that everything is sweet, in spite of us the tears come to our eyes. May we always strive to learn of this precious book, which is the Book of Mormon. Even when each one takes part in the program, the same feeling is felt. That the Lord will raise up stalwart young men and women from this society is true, for from this society different young men have been called and indeed the women are not behind on being blessed of the Lord. I could never get tired talking of this society. Hope and pray that I, with others, will be a faithful worker, ever trying to see it progress.

We also have a fine Sunday-school. We won the banner this time. May the good work roll on and may we each and every one strive to make it a progressive work, and that God may bless us all in our efforts in doing so, is my prayer.

INDEPENDENCE, Oregon, March 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: The inclosed card and contribution of M. E. Harkness, Caldwell, Idaho, means that this lady called upon Bro. Jasperson and myself to-day, in his undertaking parlors, soliciting contributions for a home in Oregon. I told her I and the church I represented are also interested in an orphans' home, and if she favored reciprocity we would exchange contributions, such as she might name. She suggested one dollar, which we forward you, not knowing just how to reach the proper custodian at this writing.

We have desired to meet with the conference, but the expense seemed too great; so while other missionaries are gathering in to their homes, greeting loved ones and enjoying home association for a little season, we are trying to be reconciled to continuing where duty seems to call for a little longer, with a vague hope that the way will open a little later for a visit with the family.

Calls from Springfield and elsewhere seem to press upon us and we will try and attend to some of them while awaiting word from conference as to disposition of us, if we are again assigned to field duty. Sr. Crawford, of Springfield, has aroused interest among some of her neighbors and they with herself are anxiously awaiting a visit from an elder. Oregon, as many other fields, undoubtedly needs many more missionaries.

Editors Herald: The writing of incidents of the ministry and others so often and constantly appearing in the church papers from time to time may appear irksome to some, but to me there is always a charm and blessedness thereto that revives my sometimes despondent nature. To me it begets an abiding conviction that the brotherhood is slowly becoming more to understand one another in working towards the grand ideal. It seems poor judgment to me to embarrass one who writes often by insinuating he only writes for notoriety. I have not as yet persuaded myself to believe my brethren are so void that ennobling quality of manhood to think this purpose is the incentive. I like to think of those engaged in the same grand work as possessing an equal love and desire for its progress as myself. In my judgment this is only one form of good-will that is sometimes misunderstood to some extent, and the censure and hostility should be discontinued. So many times important occurrences of interest are withheld for the fear of this kind of judgment.

The old year has gone. The Messina earthquake made this year noted at its close in the great destruction of property and life in Southern Italy. Such noted cataclysms only serve as a severe reminder that we are living in an age when God's judgments are abroad in the land. In this way God teaches us the importance of his word. Its appalling magnitude causes the world to stagger, and some have doubted God and refused to believe in him for it. The questions are asked: "Where was God in all this? Did God do it? Did not he care? Could not he prevent it? If he could and did not, is he good?" We answer, We can not deny God. We can not ignore the truth of his word. Such evidences to support it are too extensive and profound. It is evident God does not look upon death as we do; if so, such would be murder. Every death would be murder. Death with God is only a transition,—a transportation from one life to the great beyond.

As God has warned before the flood so has he done again in latter days. While its culmination is sad and appalling to us, yet with God it is for a grand and wise purpose. All this course of nature is good, and we are ready to admit that even death is good when we view it as God does. It is a sad and heart-rending picture, but does it not teach humanity a great lesson? Does it not teach us the lesson of giving? Does it not impress the fact God does not lie? Does it not show us God is angry with the world for wickedness and seeks to teach them repentance? Has it not declared the beneficent purposes of our God through the ages? The Christian world now is prepared to admit as much, that it was a wise providence that sent the flood in Noah's day. What would man have degenerated into, for even then his wickedness was great! He would likely have been a wandering savage of the forest. It seems terrible to some when their finite minds can not grasp God's great forces in their mighty sweep through the centuries. We will admit we do not know the why of many things. The afterthoughts caused by this disaster have presented antinomies, some phases of which are beyond our reach. But even then we will not cease to pray, "Our Father who art in heaven." While distresses of this character have come, and no doubt still more of greater magnitude are yet to follow, yet we will constantly affirm, God is good, and "doeth all things well."

I wish to express my honest appreciation of some editorials of recent date that have appeared in the HERALD and Ensign.

The one, "Some modern reforms," strikes me with peculiar emphasis. My observations along the lines of lawlessness, their causes and cures, have forced me to the conclusion that there is need of radical change in many respects in our moral, social, and political strata if we as a nation expect to make advancement towards the realization of a universal brotherhood. What real consistency attaches to the methods of intemperance in the formation of statutory laws by legislators and the divers ways of putting the saloon business before the people as a legalized, legitimate traffic, when they know in the operation of such business they lead and drive many otherwise simple-hearted men to madness, poverty, murder, and rapine, and then imprison and hang them because they thus follow in this channel of inevitable consequences. They legalize liquor selling which makes brutes of men, and then the law in turn unrelentingly punishes them for being brutes. We do not say such should go unpunished, but we do say the consistency of the procedure is questionable. The instruction of Christ in the beatitudes strikes home with force, "the ax is laid at the root of the tree." At least the "root" is the essential factor to life, and as long as the root is grounded, the growth and the consequences of that growth will be apparent. To be obliged to imprison and hang a man because of the consequences of the evil of a legalized business which he is little prepared to resist, and thus make him by legal procedure a vicious law-breaker, ought to be a very chastening obligation to those responsible for it, to say the least.

My recent visit to the State penitentiary of Montana, located at Deer Lodge, where six hundred convicts are held, has confirmed me more of the grave necessity of reform and total abolishment of the saloon business altogether, which has been one of the fruitful sources of degradation. They induce men to be criminals by law and then punish them for being such by law. Is this indeed the mark of a high civilization? At least to the mind of the writer it is only one way our government lacks in efficiency. I was informed by the warden of this penitentiary that about two thirds of those there were imprisoned because of drink and were not criminals at heart. They were there because at sometime in their past life they had been inflamed by the curse of drink and the Government to some extent was responsible for being the agent that has administered this maddening intoxicant to them. I would not dare say the law is responsible for all wrong-doing by any means, for such would be a foolish assertion. Neither do I wish to say robbery and murder do not indicate moral degradation and should not be punished, but we should remember there are even degrees of degradation.

My change of field from the extreme South to the "great Northwest" has brought many scenes pleasant and otherwise that I hope I have not failed to profit by. There are friends and associations of the South I know I shall never forget. The new scenes and associations are no less cherished. The broad cotton fields and the negro population that largely tills them do not greet the eye here. The southern hospitality and sociability are not surpassed by the western type. In the South biscuits take the place of light-bread, but here is a painful reverse. In Dixie biscuits have a permanence of fixture unequalled in the quality of its production as a viand staff of any people; in fact its permanency, to some of the North, is the only source of criticism. To me such has been a pleasing memory and never have they been equaled elsewhere. One does not see so much rash invasion of the rules of syntax (in sometimes using two negatives in the same sentence) here as there; but one does see other innovations to the maiden English as equally tempting. This convinces me that manners of speech, and peculiarities of life and dress, are only a question of geography anyway; and it is only one point of honor in the missionary's favor to proclaim his identity, and show his adaptation to the locality where he labors. Such is the inevitable consequence, anyway, if he stays there long enough, and the sooner it comes the more influence we have. This only applies to local conditions and peculiarities, not to their sins, however, neither should it alter or transform the truth we bear.

My objective point in coming here was Spokane, Washington. Spokane is a very modern city in every way. The writer found everything, nearly, in an active state of industry. Saw-mills, planing-mills, flour-mills, manufactories, foundries, mining, and farming are going on at a rate surprising indeed. The constant activity of the people is a source of hindrance to one laboring in the ministry. They have no time for such trifles. (?)

The itch of our opponents for notoriety in the religious field is not so pronounced here as it is in the South. Possibly only two efforts to ridicule the faith have been made of any consequence in my field the past year. These were mostly noise and fury, which signified nothing in the category of judgment of honest men. Some ministers are beginning to learn it does not pay. Elder Paul Iverson, of the Seventh-day Advent Church, made a spleenish howl against the Saints at their state encampment last summer in the Bitter Root Valley, in Montana. Since then he has remained remarkably quiet towards the Saints, and could not be induced to sign honest propositions for a canvass of the two positions which were offered him by Bro. Hale W. Smith.

We can but watch the antics of R. B. Neal and his class, these would-be keepers of the faith, with grim amusement. Of such religious hysteria of their writers and preachers we have found, have many times resulted in a peculiar symptomatic development of contagion among themselves which they seem not to have discerned as yet. We only wish to pay a respectful compliment to them when we say they belong to the well known firm of Boastem, Allurem, and Deceivem.

Let me say right here, the old Ship of State sails grandly on, and such petty puffs of adverse winds do not disturb the serenity of anything. If the change of figures is permissible let me again say, their buzzing verbosity shows the hive of their breeding, and we know their school of theology has put up the very worst job imaginable in propagating such an ungrateful species. Their carefully "conned" vanity seems to have become chronic. They wax bold when they gain a little prestige and get their heads above the crowd. They blatter anything against the church with no restrictions whatever. Anything is graciously received that is unfavorable to the church. That which is favorable need not apply. Many an alluring lie is dressed in gaudy attire to be presented to the public by this preacher class whose real family name is Legion. Thus their concoctions are spread which brings business, money, and notoriety for their church, fame (?) for themselves, buncombe for the public, and damnation to their souls. They unthinkingly invest Joseph Smith with the dignity of a king, by the hard and earnest efforts to criticise and overcome the great work he brought forth. At the same time they use his name "Joe" and "Old Joe" so slurringly, as though he was a kind of coarse hostler or cowhand, which strikes us with peculiarity. Why make such an ado, and unceasing and extensive efforts to overthrow his work, if it was but the result of a fanatical ignoramus? Their extended efforts show their plight, and that they are up against a hard proposition. Forgive us if we think this is unmanly and cowardly, and when they can not meet the issue squarely they ought to abide without murmur the result. If rooting is persistently their policy, who is to blame if the clean, respectable people refuse to root with them in this filth of their own creation? Of course their action is ridiculous, but is it not strange they do not see it?

An exhibition of transparent egotism and high sounding boom-boom, that in some respects was about as smooth as any I have recently run across was made by Bishop F. L. Hoskins (one of the big four) of the United Brethren Church at Juliaetta, Idaho. I have held two meetings since last August in neighborhoods where the U. B.'s were organized and it has raised their zeal because I did not represent it as they did. They urged their bishop to offset my work. To date he has delivered three sermons against the Latter Day Saints on general principles, and especially the Book of Mormon. I gave him propositions for discussion, but he has not signed them. He politely refused to meet the issue at present for want of time. A large crowd of his own members witnessed this expose of Mormonism and the Book of Mormon. The bishop, being one of the four presiding bishops of their church, was hailed as a kind of crowning blessing, endowed with all the greater and less beatitudes of one holding such a high position. Thus his very presence added zest to the expectation, and when he advanced to butcher what he termed Mormonism the breasts of many heaved with pious satisfaction and delight. They eyed him with the hunger of a childless woman. Of course he brought forth nothing new. He could not do that. It was simply a perfectly unoriginal performance; but in which he succeeded quite well in making them believe it was just from the factory. In this lecture he wore the Campbellite toga, and especially did he poise with the scepter of "I, Clark Braden." In some minor details of course he differentiated it, or seasoned it up to give it the smack of originality; but in the main it was the same old hash, this time dished out with a U. B. spoon. They gobbled it down and wanted more. They got more, but not the same stuff. To those who came out I gave them what they were not looking for, which acted as a kind of purgative, I think, at least with some. The stand-patters for the U. B.'s looked upon me as the shameless apostate of higher Christian life. "A Mormon is all." "He should not be allowed to preach his stuff here." "He must be the son of Old Joe, for he had a lot of them." "He preaches from the Book of Mormon, Old Joe's bible." This vulgar trait has acquired a sharp edge with some, but thank the Lord some are honest, and they see the folly of such a deceitful work. I proved immune to their bombast and slander. If my pride was stung I do not think I showed it. I did not feel crushed. I did not resign and slink out discredited and beclouded. I did not move off the reservation. I simply stood my ground and answered his argument in as straightforward and candid a way as I could. His diabolical deceit I believe was exposed. At both nights of my reply it was clearly evident Mr. Hoskins did not care to be present, for he was conspicuous by his absence. In placing the Book of Mormon on an equality with the Bible we were ridiculed and belittled by this giant, and not until their discipline was showed to be equally binding and in force and must be received by their churches, did they get their eyes open to the situation that they also had that which to some extent was an equivalent. Strange is it not, they will reason from 1 Corinthians 13: 8-13, 2 Peter 1: 3, and Revelation 22: 18, 19, that an addition (Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants) to that which the Lord has already given is deserving severe denunciation, yet they are guilty of having that very thing themselves and man-made at that, in the form of a church discipline which is an addition to the word and is equally binding with the Bible, yet the Lord has not authorized or sanctioned it. In their case it has been "man" that has added, but in our case it is the Lord. This is the distinct difference. Why do they slur the character of Joseph Smith and refer to him as "old Joe" when that same church discipline says, "They should believe evil of no one without good evidence. They should put the best construction on everything. They should speak evil of no one?"

My visit to the state of Montana during January was quite pleasant indeed. There I formed the acquaintance of a number I shall never forget. At Avon I preached the funeral-sermon of Mr. Dan Davis, an old time resident of Montana, and a staunch friend to the cause. The large attendance of friends at his funeral exercises held at the Methodist church, attested the high esteem in which he was held. My short stay at Race Track was pleasant. While there I took occasion to visit the Morrisite church and attended services once. Mr. Hendrickson is the leading mind of this faction. The writer was informed there were only about fifty members left of this once flourishing community that came out of the Utah church under the leadership of Joseph Morris.

The district conference at Bozeman passed off quite pleasantly and profitably.

The work in Spokane District seems to be gaining ground slowly,—at least in some respects. We are hopeful in the cause.

In bonds of Christian fellowship,
S. S. SMITH.

Word from Wales.

Dear Herald: It has been some months since I have sent a word to your letter department. The work is making some progress. There have been some added by baptism; in the last eight months about eighteen, some of whom in coming days, and not far distant, will be able representatives of the cause. We have lost by death Elder W. P. Cox, president of Pennygraig Branch. He was cut down in the prime of life by that dreaded disease, consumption, at the age of thirty-three, and was a man of faith and works. At present writing our highly respected Sr. Eleanor Treharne, lies still in death. She, too, was cut down by the same disease as our late Bro. Cox. It can truthfully be said of her that she lived and died a Saint; age thirty-four. Two days prior to her death she repeated her former wish, that her organ, a valuable instrument, be taken to the chapel, as it was her desire to give it to the church. She was told that the house was too damp; that it would soon get mildewed and be ruined, beside there were not many Saints here (Llanelly) now. "No," she said, "Don't take it now. Wait until the chapel is repaired, for there will be use for it as there will be Saints meet there often to worship. It is not always going to be like it is now." This dying statement of our sister is encouraging, when we call to mind predictions made some years past, that, notwithstanding the branch would go down so that only a few would be left, that yet the work would grow. This is one of the old standing grounds, and this little stone chapel was built in the 40's, before wickedness came in like a flood by Brighamism. Later the Reorganized Church went to law for the property, and got possession. At present the building needs repairing very much, and, I understand, the missionary in charge, Bro. J. W. Rushton, has the matter in hand, and will take steps to collect means to place this old and highly respected house in good condition.

I came to this place last week, and shall remain for some time to try and get the work on its feet. There has been some contention and friction in the Eastern and Western district of Wales, but I am pleased to say that since the convening of the Eastern District conference at Lidney, February 13 and 14, and the Western District conference at Aberaman, 27 and 28, unity and peace prevail and the prospect for the work is very encouraging. There were three ordained to the eldership; in Eastern District, Brn. B. Green, T. B. Trapp, and Alf Jones; and two in the Western District, Thomas Picton and David Collins, and Bro. J. Mann to the office of priest, and Thomas Kear, deacon. All these are young men of above the average in ability and strong in the faith. I take much pleasure in the thought that not very far distant some of these brethren will be strong pillars in the work. They are men of good, clean records, such as are worthy of the respect of the church. Bro. Kear came into the church last June. He was a young man that had been brought up in a society that was not of the best. He put forth a strong effort to lead a new life and he had a good support in his wife (Ruth). Some three months ago he was thinking of the progress he had made and still wished to make, and he dreamed he was standing on a platform at a railway station. There were present a large body of people, and he saw two men pointing at a good-looking, well-dressed person and remarked, "He is a Latter Day Saint." The brother was pleased to hear the men speak so highly of his brother Saint. So he said, "I am a Latter Day Saint." They looked at him and said, "You are not a true Saint or you would not smoke that cigarette," which he was smoking. This left a lasting impression upon him, and in his dream he cast the cigarette aside and thus far he has been true to the lesson taught.

I came to Wales last spring with the intention of stopping for a term of years, wife and daughter Ruth accompanying me. November 18, 1908, wife and daughter returned home, owing to Ruth's poor health, this climate being too damp for her. That was a hard trial for me. I could have left them at home and come on my mission much easier. I did not like to see them go alone, for if anything should happen to the sick one, some would say, "He did not think much of his wife and daughter," and had I accompanied them, it might be said, "He did not care much for the needs of the work in Wales, or he would have stopped. He did not take into consideration the expense the church was put to, to bring him to his mission." I confess it was a very trying position to be placed in. The morning they left for Southampton to take the ship, I was sick and wondered if I was not in the wrong in letting them go alone, especially with a sick daughter, knowing that both always were seasick. Well, I was discouraged. I went into the bedroom, when I was spoken to kindly. The question was asked, "Do you not love me?" I cried out, "Lord, you know I do." With that came strength and the burden was gone, and in place of being despondent, I sang some of the songs of Zion, and on the train I felt like singing, but the thought that my wife would have reason to believe that I was glad they were going kept me from giving much expression to my feeling; notwithstanding I did all I could to keep from showing that under the conditions I was happy, my wife noticed that a great change had come over me and remarked that she wondered how it was I was so cheerful. When I told her my pleasant experience, she too was cheered, and took comfort in the thought that what we were about to do was in the interest of truth and kindred, and that the Lord was pleased and loved a cheerful giver. So while in our parting we could not keep back the tears, we rejoiced that we were worthy or had the privilege to do something for the Lord. In this experience I learned the lesson that the nearer we live to the Lord and strive to do his will, the more we love our loved ones. While I am not a poet, I penned the following, which expressed my feelings:

I stood upon the landing stage, a very lonesome man,
Watching the Adriatic sail, as far as I could scan.
Upon her deck there was to me a treasure more than gold,
Who was the sunshine of my home in darkness, heat, or cold.
Forty years have come and gone since we sailed upon the matrimonial sea,
And this was the hardest task that ever came to me.
It was for the sake of truth and kin we took the parting hand,
We hope and pray not ere long we shall together stand.
I do not wish to murmur nor faint by the way,
As the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, let me be such I pray,

Take courage then my loved ones, though thousands of miles apart,
The Master will accept of the offering when done with an honest heart.

To me it is an honor that I do highly prize,
To be a representative of the message from the skies,
Sent forth by an angel in these the latter days,
To commission men to teach and preach the Lord's appointed ways.

In conclusion I wish to say that it is my honest opinion that it would be for the good of the work in this country to form north and south Wales into a mission, as it was at one time, under the former Joseph, and for years in this church. Again I believe that Wales should have a bishop. The past trying ordeal the families of the missionaries in this land has passed through in the last five months, confirms my opinion in the above, when for four and five months they have been without support. I believe that if we had a bishop here, he would call the attention of the Presiding Bishop to the needs, and help would come. This last year, after the loss by death of the bishopric of this mission (British Isles), we have not got along as well as we would had the loss not occurred. I am glad that things are looking better, the general bishopric having gotten things into shape, and we are understanding each other better. I hope that the coming General Conference will have time to consider the above, and that that which is for the best will prevail. At a conference held at Porth, October 10, a motion prevailed that if Wales was set apart as a mission a president be appointed that was conversant with Welsh and English language. To this there is some objection, reasons assigned that it has the appearance of bringing in nationality, which in my judgment is not the case. Seventy-five per cent of the inhabitants in Wales, in and out of the church, are Welsh, and it seems to me that no just fault can be found against this motion. The first missionary in Wales and in charge was William Enshaw. He was an Englishman. The next was Captain Dan Jones, Welshman, and from that on, all that have been appointed by General Conference when Wales was a mission, were men that could speak both languages. If I were to go to Germany, and found that seventy-five per cent of the Saints were Germans I certainly would find no fault if they asked that the one in charge should be conversant with both English and German. I predict if Wales is properly supported that within five years she will be more than self-supporting. What I mean by supporting, keep at least three or four missionaries in this field, and by the way, Bro. E. B. Morgan and wife would find a warm reception in this land of Leeds, and would be able to do more good the next three years than the three he was here before. I hope he can be appointed and that he will come.

For nearly two weeks I have been in the company of Bro. J. W. Rushton, missionary in charge, and I find that he has a warm place in the hearts of the Saints of Wales, and I am glad that I found in him the spirit of this great work, and a very able representative of the same; my colaborers, Rees Jenkins and Thomas Jones, are doing what they can under the circumstances to present the faith and they are safe men, have good understanding of the work. They, with many of the local men, are getting anxious for pleasant weather so as to be able to hold open-air meetings. The various branches are enjoying good meetings, as a whole the prospect is encouraging for the good cause.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

LLANELLY, South Wales, England.

COFFEYVILLE, Kansas, Route 4, April 19, 1909.

Saints' Herald: I am one of the isolated ones. Have never heard but one sermon of the Saints and have been a member of the Saints' Church over four years. I haven't had the pleasure of associating with the Saints. My mother, who is a lady seventy-five years old, lives with me. She joined the church the same time I did, but my husband has been utterly opposed all the time. We have six children, and while they believe in the church they are not members. Now dear brothers and sisters, I ask an interest in your prayers that I and my family may be as one, that we may all be members of the one true church, and that my mother and myself may enjoy better health, if it is the Lord's will. My oldest child is a girl of sixteen years and my youngest a girl of seventeen months.

Now I will tell a dream I had in November: I dreamed it was getting dark and I was looking for the moon. In place of the moon coming up a big bright man appeared in the heavens, with one foot raised as if to step and the right arm was raised as if to reap. In the other arm he held a large basket against his breast, and heaped up on that basket were all kinds of choice fruits. I called my folks to look (we were not afraid). I then told them that Christ was soon to come and gather the good to himself.

Well, I have written enough to tire you, so I ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may all live nearer God than we ever have.

MRS. ALICE WRIGHT.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, March 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: Sunday, March 28, was an unusually happy day for many in Warrensburg, Missouri, for the reason that ten of God's blessed children entered into the waters of baptism, seven adults and three children, Bro. G. Buschlen administering the rite.

Several months ago, Bro. J. W. A. Bailey, a young man and priest of the church, of good reputation among the citizens of Warrensburg, engaged in a series of meetings on the street of what is known as "Old town." Many were attracted to his services. So much interest was manifested that when the weather became unfavorable some of his listeners made up enough money to hire a place for him to preach in, and told him to continue with his work, which he did, creating very much interest; but being young and full of earnestness, and feeling he had reached his limitations having preached about sixty sermons, he sent to the stake officers for help. Bro. J. A. Gillen responded to the call and preached about five discourses, the people treating him very kindly and manifesting a great desire to hear more of the latter-day work. He was greatly blessed in the work that he did there, receiving many invitations to the houses of those not members. For a short time the work ceased; then Bro. Bailey started it again, going on for a short time, again requesting assistance. This time our venerable and kindly disposed Bro. W. W. Whiting went to his aid and preached several sermons, coming back with an excellent report of the people of that place.

Later the writer visited them and preached once, feeling that there were many who were being drawn close to the fold.

Later Bro. Parsons contributed to their stores of information, also W. H. Garrett, each feeling good was to be done there.

Services were dropped for a time with some little disappointment. But our energetic and faithful young Bro. Bailey decided to open up again, notified me of his intentions, requesting further assistance. This time Bro. G. Buschlen was in Independence looking around to see what might be done to settle himself and family among us. He had expressed himself regarding his intention of remaining in this locality for some time, so I thought it well to offer to him the privilege of assisting Bro. Bailey, which he did after conferring with the missionary in charge. Going there he remained and faithfully labored among the people, visiting them and making many friends, friends who will gladly welcome him back. It was with reluctance they parted with him. We feel we shall be fortunate to receive the assistance of our brother if he is permitted to remain among us.

Of our Sunday service in particular we have this to say: Bro. Bailey had informed us of several whose intentions were to be baptized and asked our presence there, so the writer and Bro. W. H. Garrett left Independence at a quarter past seven Sunday morning, and arrived in Warrensburg about half past nine o'clock; were met by Bro. Bailey, and drove over to the meeting-house. Bro. W. H. Garrett spoke at the morning service, telling of those enduring qualities necessary to the development of character, submitting some excellent thoughts. A fair-sized audience was present, all seemed pleased with the service. Arrangements were made for a baptismal service to be held at the home of Bro. Bailey. A small stream was dammed for the purpose. When the service began I should judge there were about one hundred to one hundred and fifty present, mostly non-members, who gave respectful attention to the speakers who addressed for about thirty minutes in all, before baptism: the writer, G. Buschlen, and W. H. Garrett. The baptism went on without anything to mar the solemn feelings of the Saints present. Afterwards at the home of Bro. Bailey, confirmation and administration of the sacrament were had, instructions being given relative to the sacrament and advice to secure the church books and papers and organize Sunday-school, Religio, and Daughters of Zion, to proceed to be active in all classes of spiritual service, etc. A quiet and holy feeling existed throughout the confirmations.

In the evening the writer spoke at the regular meeting-house to a fair sized audience; at the conclusion we found some who were almost persuaded who in time we believe will enter the fold.

We are of the opinion that a good work can yet be done and a splendid branch organization of the church be built up there. Bro. Bailey is assisted by a willing, helpful companion, and others of the Saints in that locality.

Feeling well in the work, I am yours, working,

G. E. HARRINGTON.

BENTON, Illinois, R. F. D. 2, April 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: Some of the brethren and sisters may be glad to hear from this part of the vineyard. There are a few families of the Saints living here. Our branch is about five miles away and we don't get to go as often as we would like to. My husband, myself, our two sons and their wives belong to the church. Dear Saints, may we all live faithful so that when Jesus comes he will find us with our lamps all trimmed and burning, ready to meet him. Bro. David Smith baptized us. We praise the Lord for sending him here to preach the gospel. He was the first one to preach it in this neighborhood. There have been others through here since and they always find a welcome at our house.

Your brother and sister in the gospel,
MR. AND MRS. MET ROBERSON.

TAMMS, Illinois, April 13, 1909.

Saints' Herald: I have been deprived of attending church and Sunday-school for about three years, and how glad I would be if I could attend. If one does not watch himself very closely when he is isolated from church privileges, he will take up with the worldly pleasures and let Satan lead him astray. I feel that it has been that way with me to some extent, but now I remember the covenant I made with our blessed Savior and am trying to do better. The evil one places many temptations in the way, but we read if we will resist the Devil he will flee from us, and I know if we will try to do good the Lord will be with us.

There is no church here, of any kind, but the Baptists hold Sunday-school in the schoolhouse and also have preaching every two weeks, but as I have to work Sundays the same as other days, I can not attend. It has now been six or seven years since I accepted this grand work and I have read and investigated thoroughly and I know it must be the Lord's work. I don't see how any one could stay out of this grand work if they would only lay down prejudice.

I talk to the boys who work with me and try in my weak way to explain our belief and have got our agent reading the Book of Mormon. He says it is fine and also says he finds nothing in it that is contrary to the teaching of the Bible; and he seemed surprised when I told him it didn't teach polygamy.

To the dear Saints of the Tunnel Hill Branch, I should be glad to hear from any of you. And to the elders or any of the Saints who chance to pass this way, you will find a welcome stop over with me, and will find me at the C. & E. I. passenger station any time from eight o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon.

Your brother,

B. F. GRACE.

Dear Brethren in Christ: You can confer a lasting favor on me. I am in need of a permanent home for self and little girl. Prefer one with Saints, if possible. It is not the question of dollars and cents so much as a permanent home. Our health is generally good and I am capable of caring for a home. Will have no ties to consider. Can say I am in the faith and harmony with all the Saints. Love this work and want my last days to be spent with the people of God. I am at 554 Keer Street, Columbus, Ohio, and will be grateful to any one who will kindly answer this. My former address was Wellston, Ohio.

MRS. J. L. GOODRICH.

BELDING, Michigan.

Editors Herald: Some time ago while at Chicago, I had the privilege of visiting the Historical Library of Chicago, located not far from Lincoln Park, and among the many sacred relics of various kinds I saw a book about the size of the Book of Mormon, carved from wood claimed to have come from the Mansion House of Joseph Smith, at Nauvoo, Illinois. It was presented to this library by Emil Prosch. Beside this lay a piece of the Nauvoo Temple, about four inches long by two inches wide. I had the pleasure of telling my friend how Joseph came by the Book of Mormon, and of the angel's visit to him, which gave me great comfort.

I have been led to rejoice many times in expounding the gospel to others, but this afforded me more. Though he is dead, yet his works and memory still live. May this latter-day work still go on and may we all live for that noble cause. My prayers are for the cause of Christ.

ELDER N. HILL.

PAPEETE, Tahiti, March 25, 1909.

Editors Herald: We received an 1835 edition of the Doctrine and Covenants, from Elder John G. Smith, Fairfield, Illinois, in response to my appeal for books for a mission library. It is in good condition and is indeed a valuable book. We now need an 1845 edition, or if we can not obtain that, any early edition of the Brighamite Doctrine and Covenants that was published before 1876, that we may be able to refute the claim of their elders in this mission that their Doctrine and Covenants now is exactly the same as in the early days, polygamy revelation and all. We also need volumes 1 and 2 of the Journal of Discourses, Times and Seasons, etc.; also Bible Commentary, a condensed encyclopedia, and any other book that would be good to make extracts from for our monthly paper.

We are not expecting many of the natives to be at the coming conference. One reason is that the diving season opens the 1st of May, and the vessels will begin carrying the divers to the respective islands about the 1st of April, and another cause is, that most of the vessels are now in Papeete Harbor, so that there is no chance for them to come, except in small boats. Papeete Harbor presents a very busy scene to-day, there being the Mariposa and two New Zealand steamers at the docks, and a majority of the trading schooners at anchor. When the phosphate companies get to work, Papeete bids fair to become a commercial center of importance.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
C. H. LAKE.

News From Branches

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.

Some time has elapsed since our last budget of news from the Golden Gate. In the interim the good work has been moving on in a satisfactory manner. The district convened here on February 26. The sessions were interesting and profitable throughout. The capacity of our new church was taxed to its utmost at the Sunday morning service, when Bro. F. A. Smith preached an instructive sermon.

On the 28th of March I had the pleasure of opening the door of baptism for two more precious souls, both adults, one of them a woman who was a member of the Methodist Church. When she heard the restored gospel she immediately began to ply her minister and church people with questions. When they began to realize that there was grave danger of losing her from their flock, they at once started a campaign to prevent her from being "led astray." Special prayers were held for her at their church. The minister, deaconesses, and members visited and pleaded with her, and warned her that she was being led by false prophets. But she had seen the "greater light" and their warnings were futile. The Good Shepherd has said, "My sheep know my voice and a stranger will they not follow." So she was led into the sheepfold and is now enjoying a peace and comfort never before known. It was a great victory for the truth. To God be all the praise!

Four weeks ago we began a series of preaching meetings at 502 Eighth Avenue, at the home of Bro. and Sr. Richmond. These meetings will continue throughout the summer, or as long as the interest seems to justify. Bro. George Daley preached the opening sermon at this place, and has been followed by Brn. G. S. Lincoln and C. A. Parkin. The interest and attendance are fair.

Our regular church services, both on Sunday and on Wednesday night, continue to be well attended. The Spirit of unity and peace continues to prevail in our midst, and we have every reason to be hopeful for the future of the work in this city. It is for us to sow the seed, and water the plant, and the Lord will give the increase.

JOHN A. LAWN.

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Since last report, Brn. S. A. Burgess, Archibald, and Masten have given words of instruction which have edified and strengthened. The resurrection of our blessed Lord and Savior was celebrated on the morning of April 11, by our Sunday-school in the upper auditorium, to the credit of all the participants; and the choir in charge of Bro. E. C. Bell, with Sr. Florence Burgess as organist, rendered the beautiful cantata, "The first Easter," the evening of the same day. Their effort evidenced thorough attention and practice and many were the complimentary remarks expressed in appreciation of the same. Bro. Archibald's remarks at the opening of the song service on the death and resurrection of our Lord are especially worthy of mention.

Our dear Sr. Billinsky is still awaiting God's blessing of health to be given her, and we sincerely trust it will soon be hers to enjoy. Sr. Robert DeJong has been sorely afflicted the past month and thanks the loving Saints who have remembered her in their prayers. We know the prayers of the righteous avail much, and trust that she will soon be restored. We can not express in words our thankfulness to our heavenly Father, in restoring to health our Sr. Mary Volz, who was so very seriously afflicted recently. She is again able to meet with God's people.

May God's blessing attend his servants as they go forth this coming year, that they may have wisdom and faith in their work that much good will result.

Your sister in Christ,
2739 DeJong Street,
E. M. PATTERSON.

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

If, as has been said, the prayer-service is the pulse of the church, it is evident that the Seattle Branch still retains a fair degree of vitality, though sadly handicapped in various ways. Attendance is usually good and there is a promptness of action in prayer and testimony accompanied by the Spirit that indicates a proper circulation of the divine protoplasm from the true vine.

Easter was a bright, beautiful day in the "Queen City" and the Saints who met in the Labor Temple listened to an instructive and timely sermon on personal purity by presiding elder, W. R. Davis. The discourse was well sustained by the scriptures and also by the natural instincts of those who are in touch with the Spotless One, and in perfect harmony with the spirit of Easter tide, whose symbol is the pure, fragrant lily. No attempt was made to observe the day by church or Sunday-school, in the way of special music, lessons or decoration. In the mind of your correspondent an opportunity is thus lost for impressing on the minds of the children and adults as well, the glory of the resurrection at a time when Nature furnishes such striking object-lessons of the resurrecting power of God. Nor need we feel surprised when our children express a desire to attend other churches where their love for the beautiful and soul-inspiring may be gratified. We should be a "peculiar people" it is true, but because of being purified and zealous of good works and not because of neglected opportunities.

There has been some severe illness among the Saints and their families, a few having walked very nearly through the "dark valley and the shadow"; but the Lord has been merciful and heeded the prayers of his people to such an extent that all are convalescing.

Elder F. Holman is absent from the city the greater part of the time. His business is traveling salesman, making it necessary. He is greatly missed in the Sunday-school and Religio and his absence weakens our ministerial force considerably.

Work on the exposition grounds is progressing rapidly and will soon be ready for the nations to bring their honor and glory into it. What of the latter-day glory? When we read of the activity displayed by the various churches, orders, and organizations for vigorous work and also for the entertainment of their visiting members, we wonder who will display the ensign of truth that all who run may read. The prayer of our hearts is aptly voiced in the words of the poet:

"God give us men;
A time like this demands
Strong minds, brave hearts,
True faith, and ready hands."

Yes, and hands that are not tied and brains that are not wearied six days out of every week with secular employment.

At the risk of making this communication too long, I must mention the good work being done by our Sr. Benedict. By her zeal for the cause and her godly walk and conversation she had won the good will of her neighbors to such an extent that several are interested and are investigating our claims and have become regular attendants at our services and are bringing others with them. She has organized a class among them and they meet one evening out of each week for a systematic study of the Book of Mormon. Sr. Benedict is physically disabled. Pray for her that she may be able to continue the good work.

CORRESPONDENT.

836 East Sixty-seventh Street.

DENVER, COLORADO.

There has been more snow in Colorado this winter than since the establishment of the United States signal service.

A great deal of sickness among those in the church this winter, and two deaths.

The prospects for a new church building for Denver Saints are quite flattering just now. We hope to have it ready for the September conference.

Eight were baptized last Sunday, Priest I. C. Edwards officiating.

The writer was called to Trinidad a few days ago to perform the marriage ceremony for Sr. May Young, daughter of Bro. J. I. Young.

The writer has been holding services at Boulder lately, the first in that place. We have not had large crowds, but a few interested listeners. We organized a home-class for the study of the Religio lessons. Hope good may come from the effort though a small beginning.

Conference Minutes.

MOBILE.—District met in conference with the Bluff Creek Branch near Vancleave, Mississippi, March 6, 1909, at 10 a. m. W. L. and N. L. Booker were chosen to preside, John Rogers chosen janitor, Sr. Gladys Ruhle organist, Sr. Edna Sherman chorister, Robert McMillan and Simon Rogers ushers. Two branches reported: Three Rivers 124, Theodore 79. Official reports, Elders W. L. Booker, N. L. Booker, and Oscar Tillman; Priests T. W. Smith and C. R. Mizell; Teacher James Powell; Deacon Frank Stiner. Bishop's agent's report read and given to an auditing committee consisting of N. L. Booker, Henry Scarcliff, and A. G. Miller. Committee reported that they audited books and found them correct, but found a slight mistake in report. Report as corrected and accepted: On hand last report 22 cents, collected $41.10, paid out $40.94, balance on hand 38 cents. Treasurer's report: Collected $4.25, paid out $5.45. N. L. Booker, T. C. Kelley, F. M. Slover, and Sr. Frances Booker elected delegates to the General Conference and authorized to cast minority and majority vote in case of division. John Sherman, Wiley Mizell, and Henry Scarcliff were chosen to appoint speakers and determine nature of meetings during the conference. Conference adjourned to meet with the Three Rivers Branch, June 5, 1909, at 10 a. m. Edna Cochran, clerk.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Saints of the Seattle and British Columbia District; Greeting: I wish to congratulate you on the way you have contributed of your means in the past year and trust the Lord may bless you for so doing, but necessity compels me to ask that you continue to contribute as liberally as possible, as the needs of the district are increasing and our missionaries families must be taken care of, also the poor must be looked after, so let each one of us strive to keep the whole law and pay in our tithes and offerings. As the Lord has said, prove him and see if he will not "open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing that we will not have room enough to receive it," and more than this, we are promised that he will rebuke the devourer for our sakes, that he shall not destroy the fruit of our ground and that the vine shall not cast her fruit before the time in the field, (Malachi 3: 10, 11.) These are indeed grand promises and if we will but fulfill our part we need not fear, but the Lord will do his part.

Our district comprises Whatcomb, Skagit, Snohomish, King Island, Kitsap, San Juan, Pierce, Lewis, Cowlitz, Clallam, Jefferson, Mason, Chehalis, Pacific, and Wahkikum Counties in Washington, and all of British Columbia. Address all orders and remittances to Frank Holmes, Lock Box 78, Roslyn, Washington.

Thanking all for past contributions and trusting that all will be able and willing to do what lies in our power for the advancement of the temporal part of this great work, and that we may all be worthy of an inheritance in Zion.

FRANK HOLMES, Bishop's Agent.

To the Saints of South Dakota; Greeting: We are now commencing a new conference year, and it is our purpose in this message to convey to you such information and instruction as we believe will be helpful in carrying on the work God has entrusted to all.

First, it is our desire to express to you our thanks for your faithful support of the general church with your tithes and offerings during the past year. If any have failed in this important duty, the loss must be theirs. Our heavenly Father does not want our money because he can not get along without it; the mountains have abundance of the precious metals, the whereabouts could be easily made known, but that would cause a failure in our life work. It is needful that we develop within us the Christ character. A life of service must be our aim if we would be like our Master. He always did those things that pleased his Father. We must do likewise. Paul wrote to the Philippians (4:17) commending them for their faithfulness in aiding him in his work and said, "I desire that fruit may abound to your account." In Doctrine and Covenants 119:8 we are informed that all are called to assist in this great work, the business man, the mechanic and farmer have their part to perform, and it is just as acceptable as the one engaged in ministerial work. The work before us the coming year is great, and we need your assistance and cooperation in the financial matters, and we most earnestly appeal to you to not let an opportunity to do good pass by. There is no place for us to halt. We can not have any furlough in "the army of the Lord."

The church has sent men into your State that they have confidence in and they and their families need your assistance, the wife and little ones at home must be cared for, and your tithes and offerings are used for this noble purpose. Do not forget the missionaries. Because they are sent out without purse or scrip it does not mean that they are to be deprived of their just needs; their incidental expenses must be met. In paragraph 16, section 83 of Doctrine and Covenants, is found the following: "And he who feeds you, or clothes you, or gives you money, shall in no wise lose his reward; and he that doeth not these things is not my disciple: by this you may know my disciples."

Do not send them from your door without a gift or offering. You know not how greatly they may need it. Do not wait until you can do something big. Do the little things first and it will be much easier to do the larger ones. We will be engaged in the tent work the coming season and we need your help; and remember we use it where we can not have other public places for service and where there are not enough Saints to bear all the expense. We are hopeful there will be a reunion held in the northern part of the State; if so, you will be informed of time and place in the church papers. Come, dear Saints, to the help of God's work, and peace, happiness, and joy in the sweet communion of God's Holy Spirit will be your reward.

The Education of Mothers.

In discussing the "Older and newer ideals of marriage" in the April American Magazine, Professor W. I. Thomas claims that to handle the child wisely, the mother should be as wise as society can make her. He says:
"The mother should be educated both in life and in the schools, and the solicitude and provision for her education should certainly not be less than for that of the scientific specialist. At the age of perhaps eight the child's brain is practically all in; he is short only in experience and practice. He can understand any abstract principle and any piece of literature, from the theory of evolution to the Hamlet of Shakespeare, but when he spends his time with an uneducated nurse or an unideaed mother he goes to school and even to college with a mind so barren that one of our great colleges has actually introduced a tutorial system by which an intelligent instructor practically lives with the boy and attempts the reparation of a misspent childhood.

"It is also true that there never was a time in the history of the family when it stood so much in need of an intelligent mother. Formerly life as a whole was largely comprehended within the family. The industries and arts, education and religion were carried on there. But these interests have now been abstracted from the home to such a degree that the family situation is left rather empty. Business pursuits keep the father away from home most of the time, and even set very narrow limits to his intelligence, and it is therefore peculiarly important that the mother should be fit to represent the interests of life during that prolonged period before the child makes his connections with the outer world.

"Morality is with reference to the welfare of society, not the appetites of the individual, and a theory or practice which restricts the interests of the mother and thereby stunts the life of the child is, in the profoundest sense of the word, immoral."

Kind thoughts imply a contact with God. Like the love of beauty they can spring from no baser source. They are not dictated by self-interest nor stimulated by passion. They have nothing in them which is insidious, and they are almost always the preludes to some sacrifice of self. It must be from God's touch that such waters spring.—F. W. Faber, D. D.

land, it came to those who were seeking light by the voice of revelation and reinstated among men the fact that God, having a people upon the earth, spoke to them, as in olden times holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. As in the meridian of time God spoke to men through his Son, he again revealed himself unto man, and in that revelation he told those to whom the revelation came, that they were to take the things which were written in his scripture to be his law to govern his church, and the belief in the principles of present and direct revelation was fully instituted at the organization of the church in 1830 on the sixth day of April, the organization taking place with but few members and in accordance with the laws of the country.

Having committed this message, having directed that the gospel as found in the New Testament Scripture was his gospel, a revelation came to us in a strange way, a marvelous work and a wonder, it is true. To me, who has for nearly fifty years been engaged in preaching this philosophy, it is as strange to-day as it was at the earliest time that I became acquainted with it, and it is a fact established beyond controversy that no tenable explanation of the origin of the Book of Mormon has yet been presented except the one by Joseph Smith, Oliver Cowdery, David Whitmer, and others, who were witnesses to the things concerning its coming forth, the possession of the plates and their translation, as it exists to-day, as unique in its origin in the facts which it teaches, in the history in which it brings to pass, as it was the very hour that these men testified that they had seen the plates, which witness is still continued on record.

Is it not remarkable—I appeal to you, you who may have thought of it in the past, (men like myself who have been engaged in preaching to the people and defending the work where we have presented it have had their attention drawn to it constantly,) that God did, in his revelation to us, place before us that we must believe in the Bible as the record of God's will to men? Therefore, I say that we are under obligation more than many of our neighbors are who distinctly deny the operation of the Spirit in revelation of this character to the devotees of the gospel of Christ, and who say that the canon of scripture, having been filled, it has continued to be full, and that God no more revealed himself after the apostles fell asleep, and would not again reveal himself, the Bible being all that was essential, all that was necessary unto man's salvation. Yet, we have been under obligation to accept it, and we have told the people so; by virtue of our belief in present, direct revelation we were commanded to take it and obey it.

In connection with that, another remarkable fact was stated, simply because it was stated, not that it was any new truth, but connected with our citizenship: that he who kept the law of God need not break the law of the land, and we were to be subject to these laws until He came to reign, whose right it was to reign, and placed all enemies under his feet, according to the understanding we have in the scripture. He told us something more than that: Wise men have been raised up

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

One of the most enjoyable occasions of the General Conference, at the same time a rather unusual one, came about on Monday afternoon, April 19, when the eldership retired from the audience room to consider the communication to the church. President Joseph Smith remained and talked to the delegates and visitors. The church had been crowded and even after the eldership had gone the room was comfortably filled. There was a keen interest in what our President was going to present, and the closest attention was given throughout. Srs. Belle James and Estella Wight reported and jointly transcribed the speech as follows:

I have promised to talk to you—how long I may do so, I do not know. We are all of us not only strangely interested, but intensely so, in what we understand to be the gospel of the Son of God, and we are under obligations to a greater extent than many of our neighbors are who hold the teachings of the Master sacred. And for the simplest of reasons. When the angelic message reached the time of its deliverance on this for the purpose of drafting the Constitution and the laws under it, and have been under the direct institution of heaven, wise men for the care and preservation of our religious rights.

Having consented unto this idea of present and direct revelation, it has opened a wide view, it has opened a broad expanse of inquiry, and we are permitted to go where we will; but as those who are devotees and believing in the presence of the Master to save, we have felt at liberty to make inquiry everywhere and examine everything bearing the name of religion or making claim to any pretension of this nature, to discover whether or not it bears relation to the revealed word of God. And are you not happy to-day, as I feel that I am, that this message of life and salvation coming through that angelic minister, that brought to light the truth that had lain buried for hundreds of years, put us in such shape that you and I, those who preceded us, and those who will come after us, can discover what these truths are? One of the most remarkable is that it bears continued testimony unto the fact that Jesus is the Christ. But the ministration of the Spirit which was spoken of and which was promised to continue in the gospel unto every one that would believe it, was that there should be a spirit that should make manifest to these devotees, every one that honestly from the heart obeyed the teaching which these men brought, who were authorized to go abroad and to teach it; that it would bear testimony that Jesus was the Christ and the doctrine was true; that it would be a spirit given direct to the individual and bear a tangible witness unto those facts, arming the disciple with the surest and safest guard against imposition or false doctrine or evil from any source, and furnish them with the ability to gather truth wherever it might be, recognize it and use it, as all truth emanates from God and only from him. It has made us a peculiar people, this confession of belief in direct revelation.

In 1892, I stood in Farwell Hall, before a mass-meeting, in Chicago, during the excitement that went over the United States, and to my surprise I was invited to be one of the speakers. When I reached the hall and found upon the platform an array of talent, political, religious, and civil, I supposed I would have but little to say; but I found that I was to be the principal speaker. I presented to that people some of the propositions that characterized the faith, and recited something of the history of it and showed in my dissertation what had brought distress and disgrace upon the name of Mormonism, and showed them how strongly we were under obligation to believe the scriptures as they were in their purity and in the strength of their teaching, and the revelation coming to us through the Book of Mormon which discredited and discarded and disavowed the dogma of plural marriage or anything like it,—the persecution that followed. The Reverend H. W. Thomas was present, and when I ceased he was called to the stand. He arose and said, "I do believe God spoke to men in ancient times as holy men were moved upon by the Holy Ghost. I do believe that God spoke to men in the meridian of time through his Son, revealing himself unto them and his will. I do believe that now God does speak to men; and," turning to me, he said, before that congregation, "I am not the first man that has suffered in this generation for his belief in direct revelation." I repeated his words at the opening of my discourse just now. It has pledged us unto the reception of all truth. It has given us to know from first to last that nothing but truth, that which is royally noble and true before God, will be permitted to continue; and that good will continue, that evil must be overcome, and we have been given as individuals by virtue of this giving of the Spirit, the power to overcome evil, the evil powers from beneath by the good powers with which God has purposed to surround the human race through the mission of Jesus Christ. And in the arena afforded to us by the church which he established in his own time and which he has been pleased to reestablish in our day, fight out the conflict of good against evil, of right against wrong, spiritual truth against unspiritual error, and win a victory that shall bring us a crown if we endure unto the end.

We have been permitted in many respects to win a victory. When I began preaching in 1860 there were not many doors open to us, and from one end of the country, where we were, to the other we were met and the positions that we assumed were strongly combatted; doctrines that were principles of our faith were denied, were fiercely attacked, and in every way derided. But we have pursued the even tenor of our way; we have constantly advanced as the way opened before us, and we have been made to realize the fulfillment of the promise made away back yonder that the time would come when the faces of the sons of Jacob would no longer wax pale.

I am pleased at the progress we have made, but I am more pleased to know and to feel surely that we have been realizing, so far as it is possible for us in our limited understanding, that "the wages of sin is death; the gift of God is eternal life"; to realize what the Book of Mormon has stated, that eternal life is the greatest gift of God to men, and realize the fulfillment of that statement that "to know God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent" is in the line of being worthy of eternal life and salvation. We have been made to realize more and more, from day to day, the wide-reaching influence of that Spirit of information that was to go forth in the earth, and to feel that it was the fulfillment of that prophecy made in the Book of Mormon, where the prophet looked out upon the masses of the people everywhere and saw that the Spirit of the Lord was moving upon them, and they were gathering together here and there and talking together about the work of the Lord.

How long has it been since the doctrine of healing by the laying on of hands, or the exercise of faith in the healing of the sick—how long has it been since derision ceased to be hurled at us because we believed it? More than twenty-five years of my ministry I met it most everywhere, "The laying on of hands, why, what folly!"

A gentleman came from Newark, New Jersey, to the town of Sandwich, four miles from Plano, Illinois, where I was then living, and preached, by request, expressly to overcome the influence of our teaching, on the twelfth chapter of 1 Corinthians that the gifts of the gospel should be found among believers. That gentleman, in the course of his sermon, endeavoring to offset the influence of our teaching there, was pleased to make this kind of remark: that when Jesus came he came to his own; he found them sick and instituted the only means that was in his power—the best means in his power to heal their sicknesses, both temporal and spiritual, and he laid his hands upon them for that purpose. I have never ceased to feel grateful to this gentleman from Newark, New Jersey. He conceded in his statement all that we claimed for it, that Jesus instituted in his doctrine the laying on of hands, this healing through faith, and authorized his disciples everywhere to practice it under the New Testament Scriptures. Are there any people now believing in it? What means this movement among the churches where the ministers are instituting clinics in their churches and exercising their powers of faith for the healing of those who may be healed? Why is it that Kansas City, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, perhaps every large city in the United States, has its representatives who endeavor to heal the sicknesses of the people through the exercise of faith? Forty years ago it was not so; twenty years ago it was not so. Now it is creeping along in this way, and there is not so much opposition against it as there used to be, and I am thankful for it. Please God I hope that the New Testament Scriptures' description of the building of the church and the doctrines attending upon it may sweep from the rivers to the ends of the earth, and men receiving the truths therein stated under spiritual ministration band themselves together as holy devotees, worshiping God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Ought we not to be content as a people? Ought we not to be content as individuals with these things for which we have prayed, for which we have suffered, these things that we have longed for—are preaching, as God in his own due time is permitting an increase of knowledge and understanding among the people? I have lived through three fourths of a century of perhaps the most eventful three fourths of a century for many centuries in the history of the world. The greatest developments of science have been accomplished; the rivers have been spanned with bridges innumerable; the lands have been gridironed with the iron rails. We have come from the tallow dip into the blazing lights furnished us by electricity. We have harnessed the powers of the earth and the powers of the air through discoveries which have been made, and are making these elements to serve and benefit mankind: cruel masters if they get the sway, but useful servants under proper control. So are the principles of truth. The letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life—"the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life."

Witness what meant the apostle when he said, "I have lived in all good conscience before God up to the present time, then, when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." What did he die to? He died to the law; he died to sin, was made alive in the law of righteousness to serve in peace.

One thing that so earnestly commends the character of the Apostle Paul to me—among other things, and I might almost say the most striking one—is his persistent faithfulness from the time of his conversion until his death. You peruse his epistles, and not one word, not one word of regret for the step he took; not a single thing that causes us to understand or suppose or mistrust that he ever looked backward with regret upon the course he had pursued. A gentle minister, and so kindly of heart that he was able to say, and say it faithfully, "I would to God that all Israel might be saved though I become a castaway." In his heart was the reflex of that beautiful, tender spirit of self-effacement that enables the Savior upon the cross to say of those cruel men at whose hands he had suffered persecution and finally death, as he looked out upon them in his pity, "Father, forgive them; they know not what they do."

The character of Christ as a man commends itself to me. As a boy hearing the preaching of Christ and his doctrines in the churches I attended, I could not understand it. I could not bring my boyish brain to consider him only as a God; but when I reached maturer years and began to preach him from the pulpit for myself, I learned to regard him as a man, suffering like other men, overcoming like other men, tried as a man, and in his humanity suffering and winning a triumph, and pointing backward and pointing forward, say of the past, "I was with thee in the burning bush"; saying of the future, "My Father and I will take up our abode with you"; and looking out upon that that was to come, saying, "Come, follow me." He made himself the friend of all, in his human nature suffering, winning a victory, and then asking those who came after him to follow him, and he would enable them to accomplish just what he had accomplished, a victory over death, hell, and the grave, by virtue of the Spirit that enabled him to win the same kind of a victory, commending his humanity unto us; a Savior that could feel for us, that could feel our infirmities, to realize the smart of the stripes that were laid upon us, know something about the struggles that we have to make in our lives and against the environment by which we are surrounded, and furnish us with inward strength that we may continue.

How many a young man I have seen in the struggle looking around, charging upon the cohorts of unbelief, failing to comprehend how it could be that God could suffer certain things to take place by which humanity was injured and hurt, failing to recognize the power of faith, and yet in the time when this extremity came and the word could be given to him by the minister who was following Christ, encouraging him, taking new courage and new thought, and by and by be found among the ranks of the stalwart, fighting for the cause of Christ, believing, yes, feeling so assured that he was strong. I myself have been privileged to help many of these young men in the fifty years of my ministry soon to close, and I am talking to people who have done similar things.

There is one portion of the gifts of the gospel mentioned by the Apostle Paul I want to call your attention to this afternoon. I promised to talk to you—not to preach. We are apt, sometimes, to overestimate some of the most prominent gifts mentioned in the twelfth chapter of first Corinthians and the fourth of Ephesians. For instance, it is a nice thing for us to speak of the spirit of prophecy, of the gift of prophecy, of the gift of discerning of spirits, of the gift of faith, and the laying on of hands; but as I look at the reading of it and take up the book, the first gift mentioned by the Apostle Paul is the gift of wisdom, the word of wisdom. I will have to tell you a little story, I think, to illustrate the force of it.

Down South one time before slavery was abolished there was an eloquent colored man preaching. He was a remarkable raiser of money. He had a tact for placing things before his congregations that warmed their hearts. There was an effort made to build a church in a certain place, and they sent for him to come and preach and gather the moneys by which the church might be erected. He went there and he preached his discourse, but there seemed to be a lack of earnestness in the people, and so, in his quaint negro dialect which I will not attempt to imitate, he said: Brethren, have you ever seen a church that died because it gave too much? Are you afraid that the church that you represent will die by giving too much? If I knew of a church that has died by giving too much, if you will take me where it is, I will go there, and I will climb up on its moss-covered roof and lifting my hands to God I will say, 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord.'

His effort was successful. He won the means to build the church. And if you will show me the church that has died because it has received too much wisdom, tell me where it is that I may go there and kneeling down before its altar I may ask the blessing upon such a death as that, before I die.

No, no church has too much of wisdom. Our own has not too much. The word of knowledge, the word of faith, and the fact to which I desire to call your attention more particularly, is these helps and governments little taken notice of, even by ourselves or those who preach to us. Helps. Who is there among us that does not need this kindly influence of the government of God in his gifts to men? Is there a mother present that does not need help? Is there a father present that does not need help? A maiden that does not need help? A man that does not need help? Our children need help when they go out into the world to win something from the world for their support. Is it not essential that they should be surrounded with governing, quieting, controlling influences that will help them to keep from the evil attractions by which they are surrounded? We have looked for helps, we must pray for them. Many receive them unconsciously to themselves. If they will only wake up to the conditions they may be prepared to acknowledge that they have been helped. How frequently do we hear them rise in prayer-service with that remark and say that they have been indebted to God for so much. They have been helped. The Lord has been merciful to them, both aged, middle-aged, and young, and still the avenue lies open for our approach. The Lord is willing to give us as we go to him in earnestness of spirit and fervency of devotion, and he will turn no one empty-handed away.

I think that I have said perhaps all that is necessary for me to say for the hour and the occasion, and may the blessing of our Lord be upon us, is my prayer.

HEARD DURING THE CONFERENCE.

"If I do not love this church enough to risk every dollar I have to help, I do not love it enough."

"I do not want to have my way unless my way is right."

"If you want to improve the church it is up to you to improve yourself."

"Why do we stand here sleeping?"

"Zion is simply the headquarters for service."

"The whole world is surcharged with the question, 'What will tomorrow be?'"

"God gave the truth to Joseph Smith, and if we would only lift that banner up, the whole world would have to pay it homage."

"Thirty-three years ago to-day I was baptized. I can but contrast conditions now with then,—the multitudes we see to-day with the few we had then. I helped to organize the Independence District when there were only a few Saints in Independence, and helped do the first preaching done in Kansas City when there were no Saints there. They say the church is not advancing. That we are making no progress. It isn't true."

REGARDING THE SACRAMENT.

A sense of propriety should restrain any officer of the church, whether priest or elder, from officiating in either blessing or passing the emblems of the sacrament if for any reason known to himself he does not or can not partake of the emblems with the membership. While we know of no specific rule regarding the matter we do know that the general rule requires that no one should partake unworthily, and it would seem strange for members to partake of the passing emblems under the administration of an officer who would not himself partake of the sacrament. We believe under such conditions that members who feel themselves worthy to partake of the sacrament would be justified in declining to partake of the sacrament under such conditions; and also would be justified in making inquiry in a proper manner as to why such officer did not himself partake of the sacrament with them.

There might be conditions which would absolve an officer from blame in such circumstances; but we think it a very doubtful propriety.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Patriarch E. C. Briggs occupied at the morning hour in the Brick Church and Elder George Thornburn in the evening. The speakers at the Homes were Elders John Harp and J. D. Stead. The afternoon sacrament was in charge of President John Smith, and Elders R. M. Elvin and Moroni Traxler.

May Day found extremely cool weather. The cold is general and followed the storms of last week, some of which were destructive to life and property. We have reason for being thankful for our seeming immunity from injury.

Our waterworks system is nearing completion, but as yet no work has been started on the new dam at the reservoir.

Let the readers of the HERALD please take notice that the special offer in issue of January 20, on Church Histories, has been canceled.

Easter Praises.

Darkness depart.
Clouds and mists give way;
Sun burst forth in gladness;
Hearts dispel all sadness;
Christ is risen to-day.

Mortals rejoice.
Death hath lost its sting;
Redemption is for all;
We are raised from Adam's fall,
Through Christ our king.

Timorous souls,
Dread not the silent tomb.
Our gracious Lord laid there—
Our punishment to bear—
Scattering for ever death's gloom.

Hail Redeemer!
Who died on Calvary's tree.
The bars of death to break—
He suffered for our sake—
Our guilty souls to free.

Shout praises,
On this glad Easter Morn.
He hath paid the debt for sin;
New hope he ushered in;
And saves a world forlorn.

The Straight Road

BOOK OF MORMON; ITS ORIGIN; WHAT IT IS.

There are many questions that arise in the mind of man when this book is introduced. Some of these we will try to answer as our limited ability will permit. This book is composed of sacred and historical writings of two civilizations, founded at different epochs on this American Continent.

The first book, properly speaking, although near the last in the above record, is called the Book of Ether; and the last writer of the Book of Mormon gives us only an abridgment of the record of this people called the Jaredites, which contains six chapters composed of exhortations, prophecies, doctrine, and history of this people. As strange as it may seem, their record tells us that they left the tower of Babel, soon after the confusion of tongues, and were led by the hand of Providence to this continent.

This corresponds with Genesis 11:7, 8: "Go to, let us go down, and there confound their language, that they might not understand one another's speech. So the Lord scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth." From what we can learn, this land was a part of the face of the earth, then; hence, we conclude that their statement is worthy of consideration. And especially, when we take into consideration statements of the antiquarians, as follows: "The confusion of tongues naturally occasioned the dispersion of the people, who formed themselves into distinct colonies, and occupied those parts of the earth to which they were providentially conducted."—Antiquity of the Jews, book 1, chapter 5. H. H. Bancroft says, quoting Vatan: "After the confusion of tongues he led a portion of the dispersed people to America."—Native Races of Pacific States, volume 5, page 27. Josiah Priest says: "A colony very soon after the confusion of the language of mankind found their way to what is now called America."—American Antiquities, page 199.

This migration took place about the year 2100 B. C., and about sixteen hundred years before the second colony came. This second people left Jerusalem about the year 596 B. C., landing on the west coast of South America, on the coast of what we call Chili, about thirty degrees south latitude. Here, properly speaking, begins the history of America. Their record is composed of fifteen books, divided into ninety-seven chapters. Twelve scribes occupied the sacred desk in its composition. Their departure occurred only a few years prior to the siege Nebuchadnezzar raised against Jerusalem, which fittingly corresponds with Jeremiah's prophetic utterances: "Flee, get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor [Jerusalem], saith the Lord; for Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you."—Jeremiah 49:30.

Peculiar as it may seem to a stranger, the antiquarians say that this second peopling were Israelitish, and came from Jerusalem. Donnelly says: "There is scarcely a prominent fact in the opening chapters of the book of Genesis that can not be duplicated from the legends of the American natives, and scarcely a custom known to the Jews that does not find its counterpart among the people of the new world."—Atlantis, page 198. Bancroft says: "Many traces of their old laws and ceremonies are to be found among them at the present day. For instance, both Jews and Americans gave their temples into the charge of priests, burned incense, anointed the body, practiced circumcision, kept perpetual fires on their altars."—Native Races, volume 5, page 82.

These statements lead us to consider one made by Jesus Christ: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold."—John 10:16. "Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."—Matthew 10:5. This last citation helps us to know who were his sheep, hence we will have to look for another fold or country where Israel is to be found.

This Book of Mormon tells us that the people came here from Jerusalem, and were of the posterity of Joseph who was sold into Egypt, and this is confirmed by Genesis 49:22: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, . . . by a well; whose branches run over the wall." And again: "The blessings of the father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitors unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills."—Genesis 49:26. "Let my name [Israel] be named on them."—Genesis 48:16.

From these statements we locate Israel on this continent. In the midst of the earth from where Israel stood when he blessed the two sons of Joseph, would be this continent of America. And it is the only continent that has a chain of "everlasting hills," as said of Joseph's land; hence, the only logical conclusion that we can come to, is that, if the Bible be true and the antiquarians tell us the facts relative to the peopling of this country, the Book of Mormon demands recognition as the history of America and Americans, and God's will revealed to them.

Many people object to the name, Book of Mormon, when if they understood the meaning of the word Mormon they could not find so much fault with it, the latest definition being, "Great good." The record took its name from the man that transcribed and prepared the copy for depositing in the earth, and left it with his son Moroni to hide up until the Lord should come to "maintain his own cause and set up his kingdom over all the earth" (John Wesley, sermon 71), when "truth shall spring out of the earth." "Thy word is truth."—Jesus—John 17: 17. Truth—God's word hid in the earth, having been committed to man, for its preservation—would of necessity have to be inscribed upon some kind of material that dampness and time would not destroy. Hence we read of the plates from which the Book of Mormon was taken, "which have the appearance of gold," (title-page, said book.) In the year 1491 B. C., we read: "And they made the plates of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD."—Exodus 39: 30. "Metals were in common use among the Greeks and Romans."—Encyclopedia Britannica, page 37.

These statements meet one of the objections to the book. If they used gold plates in the year 1491 B. C., why not before or after that period? It is said that different nations, in olden times, prior to entering into war, would hide away their records in the earth, such as they desired to preserve. Why should it seem so strange that the Book of Mormon was written on plates and hid in the earth?

Reader, condemn not till thou hast carefully perused its pages. May God bless this brief recitation to all that shall read it.

Respectfully,

A. H. PARSONS.

WHERE ARE THE HEROES?

[The following article by President Joseph Smith was read before the "Lamoni Literary Society" in January, 1888, and is reproduced from Autumn Leaves. We are sure that many of our readers will enjoy the article and that many of President Smith's old friends will appreciate the accompanying cut that represents him as he appeared some thirty years ago. —ASSOCIATE EDITOR.]

This question can not be answered unless it first be determined what heroism is. Godfrey de Bouillon, of the crusaders, was a hero. So was William Tell, of Switzerland, and William Wallace, of Scotland, and Gustavus Adolphus, of Sweden. Each was a warrior; lived in different ages, one from the other; each was of a different class, and each was developed under different conditions, and represented a type. Godfrey was not above reproach, but his compatriot in arms, Chevalier Bayard, was, being "without fear and without reproach." They labored in a cause, the serving of which strewed the roads of Europe, converging at Jerusalem, with dead, from the host led by Peter the Hermit, to the last phalanx of Christian Knights that wrested the Holy Land from the Infidel. Both held physical cowardice in detestation. Each was gallant toward womankind, and one was of such chivalrous manhood, that, rude as were the times in which they lived, he was never known to betray a friend or foe, speak ill of any, or speak disrespectfully of woman, in public or in private. He was brave in battle, dauntless in disaster, and generous in victory.

William Tell loved his home. To him the mountains of Switzerland were dear, and her valleys beloved. From his love of country arose his detestation of tyranny; and, though he might hold no enmity against the person of Gesler, he hated the despotism that he represented; hence refused to bow to the cap, the token of an Austrian tyrant. He represented a class; was but the type of many.

William Wallace was content to bide as a small landed proprietor in his native land, after the unhappy ending of Bruce's struggle against England, until a chance broil in the streets awakened his prowess to defend those hardly beset by numbers. The representative of Edward, in blind anger, slew the wife of the quiet Scottish chief, and he became a warrior—to be finally beaten in the fight, and die, betrayed to death.

Gustavus Adolphus rose to an exigency. The dominant church of the south of Europe hoped to secure the dominion of the continent. To the youthful Swedish king, success of the effort thus to be made meant the suppression of freedom of religious thought and worship. Armed with this belief he led the fair-haired warriors to the North unto successful warfare against the threatening danger.

All yield to these men the meed of heroism; we, democratic as we are, bow to the sentiment of worship for the heroes.

Socrates was a hero; so was Cincinnatus, Galileo, and Count Coligny.

Socrates was a philosopher. In his philosophy the state did not share. He drank the fatal hemlock at the command of men less noble than himself; and by the last act of his life proved his philosophy and his title to heroism.

Cincinnatus was a citizen. The good of the state was to him of prime importance. In his mind the cares of the sphere in which his home duties lay were fitting scenes in which true happiness was found. At the call of the state when in peril, he left his farm and his fireside, and assumed the command of armies, without being dazzled by the trappings of the general, or allured from his integrity by the honors possible to his success. Many of his countrymen won distinction as soldiers, but none better deserve praise for heroism than he.

Galileo was a hero in that he dared to assert the convictions of his researches into the conditions of material things, against the assumption of the possession of universal knowledge by the priesthood. All the machinery of the ecclesiastical courts could not control nor stop the march of sturdy thought through the convolutions of Galileo's brain; and, when compelled to abandon for a time the assertion of his discoveries, his low-spoken, "It does move," was the heraldic token of his title to heroism.

Count Coligny was a gentleman, born unto wealth and position; but the spirit that was in him was in harmony with his fellow men, and solicitous for their best and noblest good. He bore the title of an aristocrat, but loved, and labored for, those who despised nobility. He was large-brained, and could see the error that mad holders of power, both in the state and in the populace, were making; and large enough at heart, not only to tolerate, but to forgive, the sin both committed against him. His was a different claim to heroism from that of Socrates, Cincinnatus, and Galileo; but complete in its kind; and every reader of the history of the Dark Ages when he lived, does not hesitate to give him the title that his life demands.

Wilberforce, of England, Cotton Mather, Patrick Henry, Wendell Phillips, and William Lloyd Garrison were all heroes.

Upon different planes, in different lands; moved to heroism by different motives from those which actuated heroes of the chivalrous times, these men all have an equal claim to be called heroes with warlike general, plumed knight, and belted squire.

Wilberforce waged unequal warfare against great odds, in the moral field, in favor of the African slave; and, during the long contest that finally resulted in making England the champion nation in the abolition of the slave trade, he did not quail, or abate the fervor of his attack on the institution of human slavery, hoary with age and usage as it was. Were he living now, he could, with satisfaction no one should deny him, contemplate the work accomplished from the inauspicious beginning, as a personal triumph.

Cotton Mather's crusade against sin, as a preacher, and against the liquor traffic, as a man, undertaken and urged in the face of a popular sentiment in favor of dram-drinking, of which the White and Blue and Red Ribbon clubs have but faint conception, mark him as a hero; although he couched no lance, drew no sword, nor won a star or garter for bravery in the field; led no armies, nor swung a battle-ax, he won the esteem of many and the blessings of the few.

Patrick Henry was, in his youth and early manhood, a shiftless "ne'er do weel." The elements of the hero were strangely commingled in him. A student dreamer, a careless trader, with a love for the freedom of the forest and the field which ripened into fruit, when, with the farmers of Virginia for his clients in a suit for tithes in kind, he dared to defend against the clergy, their exactions as the church of the state, in Virginia courts. Not until then did he find the arena where he could stand. But when once his soul was roused he knew no fear; and who of America's freemen will choose to forget the scene when this untried, unknown man, from an obscure borough, stood in the House of Burgesses representing a sturdy constituency, dared to utter words which set a price upon his head as a seditious and dangerous man? He was one of the few political prophets of his time who saw the portents of the inevitable conflict, in which heroes were found wherever the forces of a king dare set their feet.

Patrick Henry was but a type, but what a triumph was his! He was in the forum what Jefferson was in the council, what Washington was in the field.

Wendell Phillips and William Lloyd Garrison—what of these? These were the self-appointed leaders in an agitation in America such as Wilberforce waged in England; and which lasted until the latter had seen the "irrepressible conflict" terminate, and this nation, which Abraham Lincoln said could not continue to exist "half slave and half free," became free. These men were heroes. Of such stuff were they that once, when Phillips was to speak in a crowded hall and an effort was made to prevent his being heard, with placid manner and calm speech, neither exultant nor defiant, he first won silence and then attention. It was impossible to resist the incisive persuasiveness of that "silver-tongued orator." Both waged a warfare in the moral arena where their victory meant the emancipation of a race from servitude, and the removal from the escutcheon of the nation a stain so dark, so damning in its nature, that even now American sons wonder that their fathers ever suffered it to remain so long.

It is useless to discuss the many who have borne the title of hero, justly won and deservedly worn, unless from the record we thus make some lessons of benefit to ourselves may be derived.

A host of warriors sprang into being at the tap of the drum and the call of the bugle, when the long-pending struggle began by Wilberforce and urged by Phillips and Garrison reached its greatest intensity on American soil. Five hundred thousand heroes laid down their lives, as thousands upon thousands had done before them, to maintain principle. Five hundred thousand heroes who survived the storm of iron hail and leaden rain, have been passing over the dark river in peace since the defenders of the right of men to hold their fellow men in involuntary servitude laid down their weapons in defeat. The nations have hardly yet put off the tokens of their mourning for the "silent man," whose genius fitted him for the nation's extremity. The feet of those who bore a Hancock and a Seymour to their burial have scarcely paused at their own doors as we speak; yet the habiliments of the warrior, the pomp and circumstance of war, are nowhere seen in our land. The pruning-hook instead of the spear, the plowshare instead of the sword, the arts of peace instead of the arts of war, engage the powers of the citizen; and as we look back, we almost dread to look around us and before us lest we shall read the unwelcome tokens that will signify that heroes are no more, that the age of heroism is past.

But when we shall take courage to look up, and take faithful cognizance of the fields of necessity and opportunity, we will find room and place for him who dares to do.

There may be no lists of chivalry like those where Godfrey and Bayard won their spurs; there may be no armies like those Cincinnatus led; there may not be again an effort to evangelize the world like that which Adolphus met and overcame; there may not again arise an emergency like that into which a Henry stepped; there may never again come the fierce conflict of freedom against slavery, like that in which we recognize Wilberforce, Phillips, and Garrison; never again will there come an opportunity like that that found a Grant; but there are still the fields of opportunity that lay before a Socrates, a Galileo, a Coligny, a Mather.

Nor need we go so far back in the history of our times, nor so far from our own doors, to find the arena where battles are to be fought, and opportunities offered to him who seeks the bays of a hero. Nor need he who seeks, wait for great things to come to him, for these occur but seldom; for time shows but few; and no two alike, of them who have thus been made great; but to him who in that which is to be done, seizes the opportunity offered by time and place to do it well, will, by sacrifice and self-abnegation, create a title to heroism that will not be denied him. No man ever won and worthily wore the title of hero, who was selfishly ambitious. The truest and most worthy heroes whose names are found in the galaxy of fame, were self-denying, self-forgetful men.

We may not emulate Chevalier Bayard as an armored knight doing battle against the Saracen, but we can emulate him in that our minds shall not conceive, nor our tongues speak, that which is derogatory to womankind. We may not emulate the strength and warlike achievements of William Wallace; but we can and may emulate his action in taking the part of the weaker when assailed, and his generosity to those who did him personal injury. We may not imitate General Grant in commanding armies; but we can imitate his cheerful commendation of compatriots, his absolute, unselfish wish for their success and promotion. We can imitate the sturdy courage that knew no diminution while life's pulses beat for him. We can, as he did, refuse to hear the ribald jest, the coarse and vulgar joke, the rude disparagement of woman's virtue. We can, as did he, refuse to believe evil, and by so much be the hero that he was.

The times are rife with opportunities for hero-making. These opportunities lie in every avocation in life. There is no profession where they are not to be found. There is no city so grand, no hamlet so obscure, but what in them they will appear. No man moves in a circle so high but what he can find them if he desires. No walk of life is so humble, no circle so narrow, but what he who moves therein shall see them. In king's houses, where those who wear soft raiment dwell, they will be. In the dwelling of the wealthy, the affluent, and of those who have but a competency, they will abound. In the toiler's lonely cottage, there they will be; so wide is their extent, so thickly are they strewn by divine providence in the pathway of every life.

POPERY VERSUS AMERICAN CONSTITUTION AND LAWS.

That popery is an enemy to the United States Government, has been noticed already; but I should feel somewhat condemned should I conceal further evidences along this line, since it is so plainly manifest what the aim and object of popery is, namely, to gain control of this country; therefore, a further investigation of this all-important subject is necessary, that those who enlist under the banner of the pope may know that they will not always enjoy a free government, based on the Constitution and Declaration of Independence which says:

When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that, whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

No grander truth was ever evolved from the human mind or given expression to by human tongue. It is the essence of justice, the height of inspiration, and good news to oppressed and downtrodden humanity. These documents, the pride of every true American, were the lights of the eighteenth century, which dawned upon the world in an age of mediæval darkness brought about by Roman intolerance, injustice, persecution, ignorance, superstition, and slavery; and this same power which brought such conditions into existence, is now and has been determined upon the destruction of that light which has been and now is the light of all nations. That power is adverse to anything that savors of progress, liberty, and pursuit of happiness. The most distinguished statesman of Spain, Casteler, said in 1869, to the Spanish Cortes:

There is not a single progressive principle which has not been cursed by the Catholic Church. This is true of England and Germany, as well as of Catholic countries. The church cursed the French revolution, the Belgium Constitution, and the Italian Independence. Nevertheless all these principles have unrolled themselves in spite of it. Not a single constitution has been born, not a single progress made, not a solitary reform effected which has not been under the terrible anathemas of the church.—Romanism and the Republic, p. 122.

This, of course, will be denied by Romanists in order to keep the people in ignorance of the "faith of their fathers," as such teaching is detrimental to the growth and progress of an institution of intolerance and tyranny in a free country. But to such I desire to call their attention to the first paragraph of the Cannon Law, which says, "All human power is from evil, and must therefore be standing under the pope."

Inasmuch as the Constitution is of human origin and enacted through human authority and power, according to popery it is therefore of evil and therefore must be under the pope, subject to his approval or disapproval, and inasmuch as the Constitution provides for both civil and religious liberty, therefore it is adverse to popery, which says:

The state has not the right to leave every man free to profess and embrace whatever religion he shall deem true.—Syllabus of Pius IX, December 8, 1864.

Therefore a constitution which provides for liberty, either civil or religious, which is of human origin, must be done away with; therefore, also, the pope makes the following claim:

The pope has the right to annul state laws, treaties, constitutions, etc.; to absolve from obedience thereto, as soon as they seem detrimental to the rights of the church, or those of the clergy.—Cannon Law, paragraph 8. [Emphasis mine.—S. K. S.]

It will at once be clear to the mind of the reader that a constitution which provides for liberty is detrimental to a power which says:

I acknowledge no civil power, I am subject to no prince, and I claim more than this; I claim to be the supreme judge and director of the conscience of men of the peasant that till the fields, and of the prince that sits upon his throne, of the household that lives in the shades of privacy, and the legislator that makes laws for kingdoms; I am the sole, last, supreme judge of what is right and wrong.

It will be equally clear that when the time comes that Romanism will have gained control here, that the United States Constitution will be annulled by this power who claims the right to annul constitutions which may be adverse to Roman policies. It is likewise plain that at present no Romanist is bound by the law of his church to abide by a constitution which conflicts with popery, as the pope claims the power to absolve from all obedience thereto. Now these are the natural conclusions which any logical reasoner must come to. And you can see at once that no absolute dependence can be placed in the apparent recognition, by Catholics, of laws and constitutions not agreeable to popery; therefore the object and aim of popery is to use their utmost endeavors to enter the political arena in order to wield their influence in the legislative assemblies that the laws and constitutions may be framed in harmony with the principles of popery, which the following extract from the Encyclical of Pope Leo XIII, given November 1, 1885, will show:

Every Catholic should rigidly adhere to the teachings of the Roman Pontiffs, especially in the matter of modern liberty, which already under the semblance of honesty of purpose, leads to harm and destruction. We exhort all Catholics who would devote careful attention to public matters, to take an active part in all municipal affairs and elections, and to favor the principles of the church in all public services, meetings and gatherings. All Catholics must make themselves felt as active elements in daily political life in the countries where they live. They must penetrate wherever possible, in the administration of civil affairs: must constantly exert the utmost vigilance and energy to prevent the usages of liberty from going beyond the limits fixed by God's law. All Catholics should do all in their power to cause the constitution of states and legislation to be modeled in the principles of the true church. All Catholic writers and journalists should never lose for an instant from view the above prescriptions.—Romanism and the Republic, p. 130. [Emphasis mine.—S. K. S.]

According to the laws of popery no man or woman can be a loyal citizen of any Protestant country, if he or she strictly adheres to and follows the teaching of Rome. Now, I do not mean to say that they can not be, but it must be done by ignoring the laws of popery which they may or may not be acquainted with, and be governed by their higher sense of honor and loyalty. Every Catholic is virtually bound to oppose any measure which is in opposition to the dogmas of popery, and to conserve the interest of the church, and no representative Catholic dares deny it; but if true to his church he may deny it for policy's sake; that is a part of his work. But if he does, it is done with a consciousness that he is lying to conceal the truth. That the oaths, obligations, and allegiance which Catholics owe to their respective governments where they reside are of very little worth or very little dependence can be attached to, can readily be seen from the foregoing pages; but to still further confirm what has been written and quoted from standard authorities, I again quote from Reverend Lansing's work, who has thoroughly studied Romanism and quotes from Roman authorities. He says:

The oaths of Roman Catholics are no guarantee of their loyalty to the Constitution. They are specifically sworn to obey the pope in preference to any ruler, his law above every other law. The Bishop's oath, which I have already given you in detail, unhesitatingly affirms this. The Jesuit's oath is even stronger in its utter renunciation of all other rule or government than the papal; while the priests and laymen are bound by the same control. As a matter of fact, they profess first a supreme allegiance to the pope.

Shortly after the decree of infallibility was announced [which was in 1870], and profession of primary fidelity to the pope was made in New York, the New York Herald, which has always been controlled by a moderate Roman Catholic, said:

"There are thousands of Roman Catholics in this land who do not place Rome above the United States, and whose patriotism can not be subverted by fealty to religious dogmas and creeds."

To this patriotic utterance, which we would fain believe to be true, the New York Tablet, Roman Catholic, of November, 1872, replied:

"The Herald is behind the times, and appears not yet to have learned that the thousands of Catholics it speaks of are simply no Catholics at all, if it does not misrepresent them. Gallicanism, which denies the temporal power of the pope, is heresy; and he who denies the papal supremacy in the government of the universal church, is as far from being a Catholic, as he who denies the incarnation, or the real presence.

"The church is more than country, and fealty to the creed God teaches and enjoins through her is more than patriotism. We must obey God rather than man. Our church is God's, and not accountable either to state or to country."—Romanism and the Republic, p. 133.

Thus it will be seen that even if Catholics want to be loyal to their country they are denounced by popery as heretics, and they know too well the results which follow. Rome has not changed her policy of pursuing heretics.

To further confirm the Catholic opposition to the United States, let me here insert the language of our beloved president, Abraham Lincoln, spoken in 1861. He said:

Unfortunately, I feel more and more, every day, that it is not against the Americans of the South, alone, I am fighting, it is more against the pope of Rome, his perfidious Jesuits and their blind and blood-thirsty slaves, than against the real American Protestants, that we have to defend ourselves, here is the real danger of our position. So long as they hope to conquer the North they will spare me; but the day we will route their armies, (and the day will surely come, with the help of God,) take their cities and force them to submit; then, it is my impression that the Jesuits, who are the principal rulers of the South, will do what they have almost invariably done in the past. The dagger, the pistol of one of their adepts, will do what the strong hands of the warrior could not achieve. This Civil War seems to be nothing but a political affair to those who do not see, as I do, the secret springs of that terrible drama. But it is more a religious than a civil war. It is Rome who wants to rule and degrade the North, as she has ruled and degraded the South, from the very day of its discovery. There are only very few of the southern leaders who are not more or less under the influence of the Jesuits, through their wives, family relations and their friends. Several members of the family of Jeff Davis belong to the church of Rome. Even the Protestant ministers are under the influence of the Jesuits without suspecting it. To keep her ascendancy in the North, as she does in the South, Rome is doing here what she has done in Mexico, and in all the South American republics; she is paralyzing by a civil war, the arms of the soldiers of liberty. She divides our nation, in order to weaken, subdue and rule it.—Chiniquy's Work, p. 696.

The reader knows too well the realization of this awful suspicion by our beloved president; how that his murderer, John Wilkes Booth, and those associated with him were Catholics, and how Mrs. Surratt and her son were Catholics who were also associated in this diabolical plot and whose house was the headquarters of the Roman Catholics and for the Jesuit priests. The hearts of the loyal and true to their country must bleed at such atrocities, brought about and instigated by a foreigner to destroy the liberties of men, and to keep men in ignorance, bondage, and superstition. That such an infamous act as just referred to is only one instance out of many which both ancient and modern history bears abundant evidence of, and that such is only the natural fruits of depravity and corruption.

In order that the readers may take a view of the expressed thoughts of the heart of one who styles himself as the "Vicar of Christ," and who assumes unto himself, among other titles, the "Prince of God," "The Oracle of Religion," "Our Lord God the Pope," "The Most Holy Father," "Priest of the World," "The Divine Majesty," in order that you may see his love, mercy, and compassion (?) upon the erring ones, and like his (?) Master, pray for his enemies and love them, I feel that the picture would not be complete without placing before you the curse pronounced by the pope of Rome on Victor Emanuel, king of United Italy, and is vouched for by A. P. Grover, Esq., in his book entitled Romanism the Danger Ahead. And when you read this, then try to picture before you the millions of slaves who stand ready to carry out the will and curses of the pope at any moment, surrounded by enemies on every side, nowhere to look to for safety, and you will not wonder at the terrors and dread of those who came under such curses. You will not wonder at the submission and obedience which is rendered the pope by the "faithful," in countries where he holds control. If we are to judge the contents of the heart by what a man says, here is a most excellent opportunity to study the spirit of the man who claims to be Lord and God on earth. This most frightful of curses and of epithets used therein is one of the strongest evidences against constitutional liberties, both civil and religious:

By authority of Almighty God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and of the holy Canons, and of the undefiled Virgin Mary, mother and nurse of our Savior; and of the celestial virtues, angels, archangels, thrones, dominions, powers, cherubims, and seraphims; and of all the holy patriarchs and prophets; and of the apostles and evangelists; and of the holy innocents, who, in the seat of the Holy Lamb, are found worthy to sing the new song; and of the holy martyrs and holy confessors, and of the holy virgins and of the saints, together with all the holy and elect of God: we excommunicate and anathematize him, and from the threshold of the holy church of God Almighty we sequester him, that he may be tormented in eternal excruciating sufferings, together with Dathan and Abiram, and those who say to the Lord God, "Depart from us; we desire none of thy ways." And as fire is quenched by water, so let the light of him be put out for ever more. May the Son who suffered for us, curse him. May the Father who created man, curse him. May the Holy Ghost which was given to us in our baptism, curse him. May the Holy Cross which Christ, for our salvation, triumphing over his enemies, ascended, cursed him. May the holy and eternal Virgin Mary, mother of God, curse him. May Saint Michael the advocate of holy souls, curse him. May all the angels and archangels, principalities and powers, and all the heavenly armies, curse him. May Saint John the precursor, and Saint Peter, and Saint Paul, and Saint John the Baptist, and Saint Andrew, and all other Christ's apostles, together, curse him, and may the rest of his disciples and four Evangelists, who by their preaching converted the universal world,—and may the holy and wonderful company of martyrs and confessors, who by their holy work was found pleading to God Almighty,—curse him. May the choir of the Holy Virgins, who for the honor of Christ have despised the things of this world, damn him. May all the saints who from the beginning of the world, and everlasting ages are found to be beloved of God, damn him. May the heavens and the earth, and all things remaining therein, damn him. May he be damned wherever he may be; whether in the house or in the fields, whether in the highway or in the byway, whether in the wood or water, or whether in the church. May he be cursed in living and dying, in eating and drinking, in fasting and thirsting, in slumbering and sleeping, in watching or walking, in standing or sitting, in lying down or walking mingendo canendo and in all blood-letting. May he be cursed in all the faculties of his body. May he be cursed inwardly and outwardly. May he be cursed in his hair. May he be cursed in his brain. May he be cursed in the crown of his head and in his temples. In his forehead and in his ears. In his eyebrows and in his cheeks. In his jawbones and his nostrils. In his foreteeth and in his grinders. In his lips and in his throat. In his shoulders and in his wrists. In his arms, hands, and in his fingers. May he be damned in his mouth, in his breast, in his heart, and in all the viscera of his body. May he be damned in his veins and in his groin; in his thighs, in his hips and in his knees; in his legs, feet, and toe-nails.

May he be cursed in all the joints and articulations of his body. From the top of his head to the sole of his foot may there be no soundness in him. May the Son of the living God, with all the glory of his Majesty, curse him; and may heaven with all the powers that move therein, rise up against him—curse him and damn him! Amen. So let it be! Amen.—Romanism and the Republic, pp. 116-118.

The reader may wonder what the king of Italy had done to merit such a curse. He had emancipated Italy from under popish rule and domination, taken the temporal power out of the hands of the pope, and dethroned him and made Rome its capital, for which he was cursed by the pope, and also denounced by Catholics in the United States for interfering with the pope's temporal government, and who pledged themselves to restore the pontiff to his rightful throne.

If Romanists in the United States would do this, to restore the lost power in Italy, what would they not do in the United States, if they had the power? In reference to this, Reverend Lansing, author of Romanism and the Republic, says:

After Victor Emanuel occupied Rome, numerous great public indignation meetings were held by the Roman Catholics throughout the United States, in many of which, together with their protests against Italian interference with the pope's temporal government, they pledged themselves to restore the pontiff to his rightful throne; and in denouncing the course of Italy, its constitution and its purposes, they denounce almost every principle of the American Constitution. This was particularly the case in a great Roman Catholic meeting in Philadelphia, on the 25th of March, 1873, in which, among the terrible persecutions which they recounted as having been visited upon their fellow Catholics in Germany, they stated the following: "First, the expulsion of the Jesuits; second, the encroachment upon the constitutional rights of the German Catholic hierarchy, by retaining in their positions and dignities the Old Catholics; third, the encroachment upon the right of conscience by keeping others than Romanists in charge of the public schools; fourth, the unchristianizing of the schools." These they call arbitrary and tyrannical measures, and yet these are the common law in the United States, to which they are equally antagonistic.—Page 131.

In closing this chapter, I can not refrain from calling the attention of the Protestant American people to the dangers awaiting us as a nation, both from internal and external sources. It is an evident fact that many of our office-holders in this country, in civil as well as in military positions, are Catholics, whose oaths and obligations to our country are not worth the time it takes to administer them, if they should militate against the interests of the church, provided they are faithful Catholics. This I have already proved. From external sources, we have a Catholic immigration constantly pouring into our country, whose oath of allegiance to uphold, sustain, and defend the Constitution is worthless and is not worth the paper it is written upon, because popery and our Constitution are diametrically opposed to each other, as I have proved; and every faithful Catholic is in duty bound to obey the church in everything. The following is the form of oath taken by bishops and others at their ordination, but for brevity's sake will only quote in part:

I, N. Elect of the church of N. will, from this hour forth, be faithful and obedient to the blessed Apostle Peter, to the holy Roman Church, and to our Lord, Lord N. Pope N. and to his successors canonically entering. . . . The Roman Papedom and the royalties of Saint Peter, I shall help them to retain and defend, saving my own order, against every man. The legate of the Apostolic See, in passing and re-passing, I shall honorably entertain and assist in his necessities. The rights, honors, privileges, and authority of the holy Roman Church, of our Lord the Pope, and his successors, aforesaid, I shall give all diligence to preserve, defend, advance, and promote. [The reader will remember from the Canon Law and the Syllabus what the pope claims as his rights, honors, and privileges. Those who take this oath obligate themselves to use all diligence to "preserve, defend, advance, and promote" the same.] . . . The rules of the Holy Fathers, the apostolic decrees and ordinances or appointments, reservations, provisions, and mandates, I will observe with all my might, and cause to be observed by others. Heretics, schismatics, and rebels against the same our Lord, and his successors, I will persecute and impugn (i. e., fight against) to the utmost of my power. . . . And I will humbly receive and execute, with the utmost diligence, the apostolic mandates given in reply to the same. . . . And if I shall be guilty of any alienation, I willingly incur, on this very account, the penalties contained in a certain statute enacted on the same. So help me God, and these his holy gospels.—Romish Rites, Offices and Legends, pp. 56-59.

In view of the foregoing oath and the contents of this chapter, how is it possible for a Romish bishop to be a loyal and faithful subject of a Protestant sovereign, or of any government whose interests clash with the interests of the pope? Can a man that is bound by his oath honestly take the oath of allegiance? or having taken the latter, can he conscientiously take the former also? Can he serve two masters? two whose interests are so opposite?

Fellow citizens of the Republic, I appeal to you in behalf of humanity, the Constitution, and liberty; I appeal to you in the name of all that is righteous, just, and true; I appeal to you in behalf of unborn generations, look out for the dangers ahead, preserve your independence, uphold, sustain, and defend the Constitution, dispel every power which is adverse thereto, and remain true and loyal citizens of the Republic of the United States of America.

THE SELF-DESTROYING POWER OF SIN.

We find that sin is contrary to God's law, as it is recorded in the Bible. In Genesis, chapter 2, is found recorded that sin was the cause of the fall of Adam and Eve from enjoying the presence of God and his richest blessings; and we also find recorded in Genesis that Cain, through his disobedience, was cursed for slaying his brother. The penalty for his disobedience was banishment from his kinfolks, and being turned to a negro. So we find that sin will destroy people's welfare, soul and body.

In Noah's time the people did not listen to the prophets' warnings, so we find that through their disobedience all were destroyed by the flood except Noah and his family. So we find that where people are righteous in God's sight, they are protected; but if they disobey God's law, accept disobedience, or cleave unto sin, they must be condemned of God, and reap a reward for their sins, which is a destroying power to banish the evil of sin from the earth; and we also find recorded in the Bible where the people again were sinning against God's law, and tried to build the tower of Babel; and in so doing their language was confounded, and they were scattered over the face of the earth; and the righteous were favored of God, and were brought by his command to this land of ours, to raise up a righteous people to himself. But in time, iniquity, pride, and prosperity got among them. They were overtaken by Satan, and again this self-destroying power had them in its grasp. So we find, again and again, that sin is a self-destroying agency.

And next in view, we find that in Nephi's time, page 8, paragraph 35, Book of Mormon, the inhabitants fell into iniquity, and waged war against one another, and so they fell, through disobedience to God's law, through this same agency, the self-destroying power of sin. And it is the same in our day. We must obey all the laws of God, that we may have God's Spirit to help us to ward off this self-destroying agency that was caused by the first fall, which was caused when one of the angels rebelled and was banished from God's presence, and cast to the earth, where he has tormented us poor pilgrims here below. But through God's love for us he sent his only begotten Son that we may have redemption, and be able to overcome this destroying agency, which is sin.

Now, for one more evidence. We will view one more incident of our own organization. When our beloved Prophet Joseph, and Hyrum his brother, were martyred, what a great and defiled state of affairs entered the church, with this awful horror in the sight of God, and undertook to carry on the church and establish ungodly things in it! Now, I, claiming to be a Latter Day Saint, can say that I know we can not serve two masters; but must choose for ourselves, God, or Satan the destroying agency, sin.

THE SONG-SERVICE.

Would like to say a few words in the interest of the song-service. Singing is an important part of the service in the worship of God; and should enlist the best efforts of all; and when well conducted, it is a source of delight to both singer and hearer. The churches all over the land have made this a very important and interesting part of their service; they engage the best talent, both in singing and in instrumental music; consequently this part of the service has become the main attraction of their services; while ours depend mostly, if not entirely, on volunteer and amateur musicians. Still it could be much improved if proper care and wisdom were exercised in this department.

The people of God are enjoined, both in the Bible and Doctrine and Covenants, to improve this department in the worship of God. "Come, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms."—Psalm 95: 1. "Sing unto the Lord a new song: . . . Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praises."—Psalm 96: 1; 98: 4. "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord."—Ephesians 5: 19. Colossians 4: 16 teaches in the same strain, while 1 Corinthians 14: 15, says: "I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and I will sing with the understanding also." "Is any among you afflicted? let him pray. Is any merry? let him sing psalms."—James 5: 13.

It is a mistake to think that the singing must be low, dragging, or mournful, to be devotional or religious; and both Bible and Doctrine and Covenants are unanimous in teaching cheerful, joyful, spiritual music. "The service of song in the house of the Lord with humility and unity of spirit in them that sing and them that hear, is blessed, and acceptable with God; but song with grievous sadness in them that sing and bitterness of spirit in them that hear is not pleasing to God," etc.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 6. Read this whole paragraph. It is all good and profitable; but too long to quote entire.

We, as a people, have every cause to be glad, joyful, and cheerful; still in nearly every branch I have visited, this department of the service has been completely ruined by the slow, dragging way in which it was sung. The voices were generally good, and the songs often of exceptional merit; but the time miserably slow, really causing "bitterness of spirit in those who heard" at least. This is true, especially in the smaller branches where the singing is mostly congregational, and seems to be the fault of the chorister, or sometimes in having no chorister.

In selecting officers, we should select the best available material, the one best qualified to fill the office acceptably. Do not elect a brother or sister just because he or she might feel hurt if not elected. Office-seekers very rarely make desirable officers. Then again, the welfare of the branch is of more importance than the feelings of an office-seeker.

Ofttimes the chorister does not seem to realize that all hymns or songs are not to be sung in the same time. We sometimes select a chorister who has but little knowledge of music, but has a good voice. For the benefit of such, I will try to explain very briefly the general rule concerning time. It is as important to sing in time as to sing in tune, and some very fine songs are spoiled by mistaking the time. The figures at the beginning of a piece always inform you what time it is to be sung in, whether fast or slow. To judge the time correctly, one beat is one second of time according to your watch or clock, and the crochet or quarter note corresponds to one beat or one second of time. No matter what the signature, this rule holds good; 3-4, 4-2, 6-8, etc. The first figure tells you the number of notes, and the second the kind (or length) of notes filling each measure. The measure is not always filled with the notes indicated, but must be their equivalent; as 3-4, three quarter notes or their equivalent, must fill each measure, and each measure should occupy three seconds of time; or 4-2, four minims or half note, or their equivalent must fill each measure, giving each half note two seconds of time, or eight seconds of time to each measure; or 6-8 means six eighth notes or quavers fill each measure, giving each note one half of a second of time, or singing two notes to one second of time, or one beat. This will give you some idea as to the time a piece ought to be sung in, though in singing this rule is not as strictly observed as in instrumental music (and more freedom is allowed in solo singing than in chorus singing) owing to the sentiment of the words, which sometimes makes it advisable to retard or accelerate the time somewhat. Always notice the words, and try to catch the spirit or sentiment of the song. Sometimes this variation from the general rule is indicated by the words at the beginning, andante, allegro, or in plain words, "not too fast," "not too slow," or "very slow." Musicians generally time their music by a small instrument called "metrinome," which fixes the exact time; but pieces not marked with metrinome figures generally come under the rule given above.

This is not written in a fault-finding spirit, but with a sincere desire for the improvement of our song-service, and trust it will be read and accepted in like spirit.

THE MORMON BATALLION.

WEBSTER CITY, Iowa, April 29.—(Special.)—Seven full companies of Iowans enlisted for the war with Mexico and served throughout the war, marching from Iowa south into Mexico and westward to Los Angeles, California.

Records showing that Iowa's military record began in the same year in which it was admitted to statehood have been uncovered for the first time in the War department at Washington and are now in the possession of Colonel G. W. Crosley, of this city, who is in charge of the work of compiling the roster of Iowa soldiers and sailors soon to be published by the Iowa National Guard.

Historians knew that Iowa had furnished troops for the Mexican War, but how many or who they were was never known until Colonel Crosley received the complete record of the Iowa Mormon battalion of six companies and of company K, Tenth United States infantry, which was recruited entirely from among the residents of Southeastern Iowa.

Company K of the Tenth regular infantry was recruited from Keosauqua, Fort Madison, Muscatine, (then Bloomington) and other towns in Southeastern Iowa, and was commanded by Captain Edwin Guthrie, who was wounded with others of his command at Pa La Noga and died a few weeks later in Mexico. The records show that many other members of the Iowa company fell in battle or died in hospitals in the City of Mexico.

SIX COMPANIES OF MORMONS.

The other six companies which represented Iowa in the war were recruited from Mormons who had reached Council Bluffs, on their westward journey, in search of land, where they would be free from persecution. They were called the Iowa Mormon battalion, and comprised about six hundred young men.

The record shows that none of the Mormon battalion was killed in action, but they marched the entire distance from Council Bluffs, where the battalion was mustered in July, 1846, to Los Angeles, California, where it was mustered out just a year later. Records show that one member of the battalion died on the Rio Grande River, indicating that they marched south into Texas and what is now New Mexico and thence westward to Los Angeles, then a small Mexican pueblo.

After being mustered out the record shows that many drew traveling allowance from Los Angeles over the old Mormon trail to Salt Lake City, then just laid out by Brigham Young. Others settled in California and few found their way back to Iowa.

The records received will add materially to the completeness of the roster, which is to include the names and records of all Iowans who saw service from the earliest Indian combat to the close of the Philippine campaign.—Omaha Bee, April 30, 1909.

SUMMING UP AT MESSINA.

In casting the balance sheet of Messina, the chief loss, speaking merely in terms of economics, is that of human life. How many are dead we shall never know exactly, but the materials for a tolerable estimate are already at hand—in the condition of the ruins, the rough statistics of the escaped, and the impressions of the cooler observers in the first hours and days of the catastrophe. One who, like Captain de Angelis, counted the dead and living in the villages toward the Faro, visiting also the ruins of the city, is in a position to make a pretty close estimate. In the commune of Messina he believes 80,000 souls have perished, or considerable more than half the population, which was roughly 150,000. My reckoning was made on the conviction that two thirds of the inhabitants of the city proper, containing 92,400 people, had perished, and of these three quarters instantaneously or through slow exhaustion deep in the ruins. The first shock of the earthquake, I believe, either killed or trapped no less than 60,000 people in the city. In the outlying district, where the houses are lower, the deaths from subsequent exposure and famine perhaps exceeded those caused immediately by the shock.

Reggio, across the straits, had an urban population of 31,000. The whole commune, a large one, had 44,400 inhabitants. Here help came slowly; there were no unshaken prosperous towns near by to give aid and asylum, and the tidal wave drowned many. The dead at Reggio (the commune) will hardly be less than 30,000. We must add the dead in Sicily outside the commune of Messina, and in Calabria those who perished outside of Reggio. How many these were is a mere guess. But I think 10,000 is not an excessive estimate. In these outlying districts, with dearth of food, water, and surgical aid, the death rate among the refugees was appalling. If we say that in the entire field of destruction 120,000 men, women, and children perished, we shall not be very far from the facts, and, I think, well within them.

The Mattino, of Naples, which is uncommonly well-informed in this case, writes: "We may reckon as destroyed the houses of 300,000 inhabitants in the province of Reggio, and of 250,000 in that of Messina." It proceeds to qualify these figures in a favorable sense, but roughly they give the measure of the work that must be done. Nearly 500,000 people must be housed in this region. The Mattino, basing its figures on official valuations, estimates the value of the destroyed houses on the tax-roll at $16,000,000. Including the little houses not taxed, and the cost of rebuilding the public structures, the construction bill in sight can not be less than $24,000,000. Evidently this is a wide guess. Public building is notoriously expensive in Italy, while it is doubtful if private owners will be in haste to rebuild. But something like $20,000,000 may represent the loss in real estate. But recent emigration from these regions makes me suspect that the figures are based on a census of eight years ago. The true figures must be somewhat smaller.—Frank J. Mather, Jr., in New York Post.

RENEWAL.

The sea is a molten pearl,
And pearl the fleckless sky,
The firstling leaves unfurl,
And the air is a fragrant sigh.
A bird's soft madrigal
In the pear-tree's blossoming;
High on the church-spire tall
A white dove preens her wing.
The elemental strife
Lost in a peace profound,
In sound of quickening life
That yet is scarcely sound.
One with the starry chime
Earth keeps her rhythmic beat—
Our mother, old as time,
With heart still young and sweet.
—Ina Coolbrith in the May Century.

Lean Hard.

"Child of my love, 'Lean Hard,'
And let me feel the presence of thy care.
I know thy burden, child—I shaped it,
Poised it in my own hand, made no proportion
In its weight to thine unaided strength.
Before ever I laid it on I said,
'I shall be ever near, and while she leans on me
This burden shall be mine, not hers,
So shall I keep my child within the circling arms
Of mine own love,'—Here lay it down, nor fear
To impose it on a Shoulder which upholds
The governments of worlds—yet closer come,
Thou art near enough; I would embrace thy care,
So I might feel my child reposing on my heart;
Thou lovest me? I doubt it not,
Then loving me, 'Lean Hard.'"—Selected.

A Still Small Voice.

I am sure God speaks to us just as much to-day as he did to the apostles. It may not be in the loud voice he called Samuel, but just as surely and truly he is speaking to us in the "still small voice," when he prompts our hearts to do a kind act, though we may not know what comfort it may bring.

Surely he prompted the brother who took the sick elder and his invalid wife a sack of flour, meal, and potatoes, though he did not even know of the illness, or that the flour-barrel was empty and the cupboard bare, only that he was prompted to. If we would pay more heed to these promptings there would be less suffering, more happiness, and I believe we would enjoy more of God's Spirit. I am sure if the husband had heeded the pleading of the loving wife the fatal morning when, for some reason she knew not why, it seemed she could not let him go to his work, he laughingly kissed her good-bye and went out, he would not have been brought home a few short hours later still and cold in death. The still small voice had spoken to her to save her loved one, but he heeded not her pleadings. Too often we heed not the warning, to our own and others' sorrow.

One of my own personal experiences proves to me that God speaks to some one that he has chosen to do us the most good in our peculiar trial.

Amid one of my bitterest trials, when for days, weeks, months, and years of bitter physical suffering with no relief, but with the desire (as is natural) to leave nothing undone, again the hospital and operating-table (for the third time) were decided on. The poor weak body and shattered nerves could endure no more, and the aching heart was torn with anguish at the parting with loved ones which seemed would be the long farewell, and in the anguish of the heart cried out, "Oh, God, not this cup! Have I not suffered enough? Spare me."

But the day drew near for the parting, and on the eve before the day a letter came from our dearly loved Sr. Walker, and the dear comforting words could never have reached the despairing heart of the sufferer as they did had not God inspired the dear sister to have written them. And in closing her tender, loving letter, (which I have before me now) she wrote: "I'm sending you a copy of a little poem. May it comfort you as I long to." And while the little poem seemed to fill just the place needed in my life at that time, I have applied it to my every-day life since, for I surely have then, as now, needed to "Lean hard." But the dear little poem of itself never could have brought the comfort it did had not the sympathy and tender love of the sister inspired by God been behind it all, and may God bless all that listen to the "still small voice" promptings. PRISCILLA.

Letter Department

BENTONSPORT, Iowa, April 3, 1909.

MR. H. L. SIMPSON, San Francisco, California.

Dear Brother: Yours of the 25th just received. You seemed to think there is something wrong with the country because town property was so cheap. Now don't understand that land adjacent to these towns is cheap, for land is selling every few days here for from forty-five to one hundred dollars per acre, but when I explain to you why town property is so cheap, you will readily see why such is the case. These towns used to have large grist-mills, oil-mills, and a big woolen-mill on each side of the river, and a two-story saw-mill run by water power; the lower story for sawing and the upper story with turning lathe for wood and iron, and a large plow and wagon factory. Of course under such circumstances the towns were growing fast, but fate was doing its work also. First, the woolen factory in Bentonsport burned down, and after a while the grist-mill burned down and was rebuilt. In a few years it also burned and was not rebuilt, but continued their business in Vernon for a few years. Then the woolen-mill burned too, and after awhile the grist-mill burned and in a few more years the dam in the river went out, and as a result they were not rebuilt, the parties going elsewhere. If this is not enough to kill any town, what would be?

These buildings or homes were all well built by the residents here when the towns were thriving, and of course were substantially built; and as I said in the HERALD, on account of there being no manufacturing industries in these towns, people who used to be employed had to go elsewhere, and values, as a consequence, went down to little or nothing. Now these are the reasons for the state of affairs. But there is a good prospect for these becoming manufacturing towns again and that is why I wanted the Saints to take advantage of these prices and procure them homes, which can not help but sell for three times, at least, the present prices.

Now for my reasons. In the first place the United States Congress has appropriated seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to survey the Des Moines, Cedar, and Iowa rivers, with a view to damming these streams and making them navigable for boats. When this is done, these towns will again be manufacturing towns, and as a consequence property will sell for what it is worth. I am not a real estate agent and there is no financial emolument for me in the sale of property. It is for others' benefit.

Bentonsport is situated on the north side of the Des Moines River. Is built mostly on bottom land and is rich; has two hundred and fifty population, has good schools, good living water, and I think is the healthiest town I ever saw, from the fact that the bed of the river is rock and there is not a stagnant swamp or bayou within twenty miles of either town.

Vernon is on the south side of the river, and is built on upland, and has good living water, most of which is in veins which come from the hills south. There are some good springs right in the town. It has a population of two hundred and fifty, with good schools. The land is mostly rolling south, and all is tilled or pastured; no land lying vacant. Is a good grain and stock country; raise all kinds of grain and grasses. North from the river the land is rolling for one and one half miles and from there is level prairie farms.

If you and another brother who is a wagon maker and repairer, will come here and be industrious, you could each make from five hundred to one thousand dollars a year clear. There was a blacksmith here that did that for two or three years, but he got to drinking and was so dishonest his customers left him and he had to move away. There is no shop in either town, but if any man will be honest and upright in his dealings, he can do well here.

My letter is getting long and I will have to close.

Your brother in the cause,

J. E. SEWARD.

NEW ALBANY, Indiana, April 20, 1909.

Saints' Herald: On Sunday, April 11, I baptized two more, a young man and wife, and on last Sunday, April 18, I baptized another young man, aged twenty-three. This now makes nine that have been added to the New Albany force in the past few months and others are on the way. We promised you that there would be something doing in New Albany before the roses bloomed again. We have added eleven more to our Sunday-school in the past week, and will soon add more. The Saints are all working to build up the work, and it makes it very pleasant when all get busy and do something. May God have all the praise.

In bonds,

JOHN ZAHND.

MANCHESTER, England.

Dear Herald: I am only a girl of thirteen. This is my first letter, but on reading the HERALD and seeing the beautiful letters, I thought I would like to write.

We all belong to the church and my father is a missionary trying to do the work of the Lord. Although my father has been very ill, he is now getting along nicely. When he was so ill that he could not get out of bed, we all thought the time had come when we should lose our father, but the prayers of the Saints and administration saved him, and he turned from the point of death unto life again. Things like these make us love the Lord more than we have ever done before. It makes me think many times how thankful I should be that God has given me good parents to put me in the way I should go.

I was born in the church of this latter-day work, and I hope I shall die in it, rather than stray away. I always have loved the work and always will. I am the youngest in the family, my brother is sixteen, and my sister is twenty. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday and received a Zion's Praises for my prize. I am learning the organ so that I can play out of the church books.

My parents do not believe in going to theaters, and I have no desire to go to such worldly places. I always think we can get on better in life without going to worldly amusements. Every year I send my Christmas Offerings to the Orphans' Home. I save my pennies that I receive from friends, relatives, or parents, and all go for the little children. I think sometimes that if I were an orphan and had to be kept by the church, I know I would like some one to help me so I could be kept by the offerings that are sent; so I send my offerings to them.

I would like some Saints to write to me to encourage me and I would be glad to write to them. I ask you to pray for me that I may be kept firm and faithful in this latter-day work for Jesus' sake.

Your sister in Christ,

MAUD GREENWOOD.

TORONTO, Ontario, April 15, 1909.

Dear Herald: The HERALD of March 20, 1906, contained the following request of mine while I was lame, helpless, and nigh unto death at Grace Hospital, Toronto. (It was sent by my daughter, Sr. Lilly Freeman.)

"Dear Saints: Bro. Freeman of Toronto Branch has been suffering under the hand of affliction since November last. He is now in the hospital and has undergone two serious operations, and the doctors all say he must undergo another before he can be well. He has always taken a great interest in the HERALD, and as he is in a very critical condition he asks that the Saints hold him up in prayer that he may bear patiently the affliction and be able to do God's will, whether it be to take him from us or spare him a little while, that he may be a help to the church, and to his family."

Just after the letter was sent my wife and children (seven in number) were sent for at three in the morning to hurry if they wished to see the last of me. My wife and daughters, Amy and Lilly, were soon there, and wife and Amy were admitted into my room, but poor Lilly was not allowed to see me because she shed tears, and no one was permitted to see me that showed any signs of grief, lest it should finish me. My Amy came to my bedside and said, "Father, do you know me?" I smiled and nodded, then tried to speak. Just a slight sound came from my throat. She nodded and went back, then I saw Sr. Freeman stand in the room. She was not bigger than my hand, and getting smaller. I was fully conscious all the time, then I fell asleep. After keeping me there three weeks longer, I was sent home, as they all expected me to die.

You will all rejoice with me and praise God our heavenly Father, who, when medical skill had done its best and given me up to die, raised me up again. After two years and about six months in full work, I am doing ten hours a night at the Toronto Street Railway. I was in the service over six years before I went down. If it is the wish of the Saints and wise on my part to occupy space according to the opinion of the editors I will send a full account of my three years' past experience.

I would very much like the supplement to the paper containing the conference news, as I have them for several years past, if you have one to spare.

I wish to remain your brother in Christ,

496 Givens Street.

F. M. FREEMAN.

[Send us your experience, Bro. Freeman, being brief as possible without hurting your story. Complete conference minutes are not yet published.—EDITORS.]

REHOBOTH, Massachusetts, April 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: The HERALD and Ensign are a great comfort to me in my lonely hours. I have taken them so many years I could not feel contented to do without them now, as I am isolated from the church. I was baptized January 11, 1885. I lost my husband in September, 1883, and that winter I heard the latter-day gospel for the first time. I was very much interested and it came to me so powerfully that it seemed to say to me in a calm and convincing voice, This is the same old gospel that was taught by Christ and the apostles at Jerusalem in days of old. It has come to earth again, and as the convincing Spirit came to me I burst into tears and said, This is the truth which I have been seeking since I was a child, when I had a dream and was looking up to the northwest and saw a large white cloud coming towards me. As it came nearer the Savior stepped out of it and came to me as I stood on a platform. He looked so beautiful and said such comforting words to me that I did not want him to go, but he went as he came and did not touch the earth.

I can not say whether I shall be spared another year or not; my health is poor and my age is against me, so you can do as you see fit with this letter. I belong to the Providence Branch, but do not get to meeting but once a year, and they hardly ever get to visit me. This is not very encouraging when our dear Savior told them to visit the Saints, but my daily prayer is that he will be with me and bless me and bear me up through all my trials and temptations of life, and at last save me with an everlasting salvation in his kingdom with all the blest.

From your sister in the one faith,
MRS. ARDELIA M. CLARK.

PIEDMONT, Oklahoma, April 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: The past year has been a season of fervent, earnest work and many are the blessings which we have received. Oklahoma has been a battle-field, and some wrecks have been left along the way, also quite a good showing for Oklahoma in gathering sheaves.

Now that the reapers are resting a few days ere we begin another year's work, I realize that only he that called us to labor knows what the harvest will be. I was not able to go to the conference this year and regret very much that I was not there. I had a fine report of the proceedings daily by the genial "Jots" man, and if ye editor think that a man can not put the spirit of the conference into a letter, you should read a few of the jots I have in hand. I feel the Lord has moved Zion a pace forward at the conference just closing, but I am astonished that we didn't get as many men for Oklahoma as we had last year; for we didn't have half enough and now we have less. Well, I suppose we should be content, for they may be needed more some other place.

My last meeting was at Kingfisher, where I baptized eight and left a fine interest. I think we can soon build up a branch there. Brn. Chatburn and Yates assisted in the meetings a part of the time and both rendered valuable assistance. I fear Oklahoma will get lonesome this year without the "Jots" man.

Piedmont has a fine little band of good workers; the branch is in good condition. We have a fine Sunday-school, and have lately begun the Religio work. The good Spirit is moving among this earnest band of people and we are rejoicing in the angel's message. I feel that most of the branches in the State are in the best condition they have ever been. I trust we may have the united prayers and help of all our working force, both general and local, that this year may bring us more sheaves than last, and that we may enjoy more of the Spirit's guidance.

Ever your brother and coworker,
HUBERT CASE, Bishop's Agent.

STAPLES, Minnesota, April 25, 1909.

Dear Herald: I want to tell all my brothers and sisters that I am a sister in the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. I was baptized by Bro. McCoy about three years ago. There are a few members here, but there is no branch near enough so we can attend church.

I am sick in bed and have been for a long time. I am trying to keep the other commandments just as close as I can, as I know there is no other way to get to the home where parting will be no more. I want all my brothers and sisters to pray for me, that I may be one to gain that glory. I want to attend the conference at Clitherall, if I am able.

I love to read the letters in the HERALD and could not do without it. It gives me more courage every week.

Your sister in Christ,
MARY BUTRICK.

COMINS, Michigan, April 19, 1909.

Dear Editors: The Saints here are in a good condition spiritually, with bright prospects for the future. G. W. Burt and J. A. Grant were with us a few days this winter, delivering some excellent lessons which indeed were a strength to us. The church papers are indeed welcome visitors in our home, bringing glad tidings from the different parts of the world. It is truly a day of sacrifice and I think if there ever was a time that we should put our shoulders together and push onward in the unity of the Spirit, it is at the present time. I look earnestly for the day when we will be gathered home.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
G. F. ALBERTSON.

CARPENTER, Ohio, April 20, 1909.

Dear Herald: Our little Vales Mill Branch has revived. We started our Sunday-school with about seven enrolled and now we have about thirty. I hope and earnestly pray that we will grow, that others may see that this is the straight and narrow way. Bro S. J. Jeffers has been preaching for us as often as he can. The first Sunday in April he administered the sacrament and the Spirit came to him and he told us if we would be faithful we yet had the promise. In the afternoon there was one more added to our number, Sr. L. P. Vale.

I thank the brothers and sisters for their kind letters they have written me. I will be as prompt in answering as I can. If they will inclose postage I will answer immediately.

We would be glad to have some of the elders come and visit our little branch. Now, dear Saints, pray for us that we may hold out faithful and that our church may revive and grow higher and higher and that we may be faithful and at last gain a resting-place that is prepared for the faithful. Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your sister in Christ,
MISS EFFAYE McLAUGHLIN.

ARTHUR, Ontario.

Dear Herald: It is over a year since we wrote a letter for your pages and we believe a line will be of interest to some of our acquaintances after our trip this winter to the land of Zion. Our intention was to move to Independence, provided we could secure suitable positions for the entire family, as well as to be sure I was in my right place in the church work. After carefully sizing up the situation I thought best to return home for a time at least, until experience teaches us our proper place and work. The experience of this trip cost money, but what we learned doubly paid for it all. It really seems as if the only way I can learn is by suffering.

I went to Independence the first week in February, but was so lonesome that, had it been heaven I should have wanted to be away; so I got permission from the Independence Stake authorities and the missionary in charge to answer a call to fill an appointment at Warrensburg for a while, until the spring conference. Bro. Bailey, who resides at Warrensburg, is a faithful, zealous, and earnest pusher, and with his help a number of excellent people were converted.

From there I went to Lamoni, to General Conference, our first opportunity to attend a general assembly of the church. We went to listen and learn, and the experience was a great education. One thing that I mention is that I saw no collection plate passed around. If there is any duty I want to shirk, it is when some one tells me to take up a collection. I like much better "a treasury box" in one corner of the church entrance and let the offerings be free will.

From the reports shown, I notice the church is hard up at present. I was expecting to be dropped from the missionary force as one of its poorest preachers, and willing at any time to return to the anvil and do local work and help the financial arm along. I look for still harder times right along and believe it will be hard indeed to endure what we are called upon to pass through; so many warnings in prophecy have been given of late years, which should inspire us all to economize.

GEORGE BUSCHLEN.

BAY CITY, Michigan, April 27, 1909.

Dear Brethren: There is a sister in Bay City, named Harretta Roberts, that is sorely afflicted. She has been paralyzed for fourteen years, but since obeying the gospel and trying to live it, is now getting better, but the voice of the Spirit spoke to her and said she had an evil spirit and was to make confession to the Saints before partaking of the sacrament, and was then to be administered to by two elders, and if faithful would receive the blessing. She desires the prayers of the Saints that she may be able to carry out the command of the Spirit, and receive the blessing.

WALLACE, Alabama, April 26, 1909.

Dear Herald: While sitting thinking of this great work that I have been in for five years, I decided it would be wise to write. Since I have been in this wonderful work I am satisfied that I could be in no better, and I know the Lord has blessed me and believe he will continue to bless me. I feel like I have a light that shines and by the Lord's help I will try to hold my light so high that I may help others to follow, and never look back, but go on through evil as well as good. I ask the Lord every day of my life that I may become better; for he has said, "Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled."

I ask the prayers of all the Saints.

Your sister in Christ,

SAN LUIS OBISPO, California.

Editors Herald: About four weeks after I had joined the church I went to San Luis Obispo to visit my sister, and while I was there I went to the Methodist church with a friend. The minister took his text from John 14: 26, 27, and in his sermon he misquoted some of the verses and while he did so I felt somewhat disappointed, so went home. During the night I had a dream. I dreamed that the minister misquoted some of the Bible and I arose and called him down. He invited me up on the pulpit and when he got through he asked me to explain myself, and I arose and tried to speak, but it seemed I could not. I looked at the people and it seemed that they were wondering why I did not speak. All at once the lights went out and left all in the dark. The Spirit then spoke to me and said, Look towards the entrance; I did as I was commanded and the whole room was lit up with the brightest light I ever saw. I saw Christ standing at the entrance. He walked toward me and I went to meet him. I kissed him and said, This is my Lord and Savior. Then he and I walked down to the pulpit, he on my right side. He sat down at my right, I was at the stand, opened the Bible and began to preach, and preached one of the grandest sermons you ever heard, if it could have been heard openly. When I had finished Christ vanished out of our sight and I awoke.

JAMES M. SLOAN.

WALLACE, Alamaba, April 26, 1909.

Dear Herald: I am very glad to have the HERALD. It makes me feel better to hear of the good work. I was out in Mississippi in November and baptized three and administered to one, and Bro. Sherman and myself confirmed the three baptized. I also blessed one child.

We have quite a number of members at Pine Barren, Florida, ready to be organized and have been for some time.

Experiences of a Sister of Frederick Maryland, as a Tithe-payer, by Letter to the Bishop.

Please find order for two dollars tithing. They may all write what they please about paying tithing, but I will send the widow's mite whenever I have it to send, for the Lord blesses me when I send it, for I always get something in return, plenty of quilting to do if nothing else. I have made four dollars since Christmas and I'll send half to the good Lord for his goodness to me. It will be a little help to some one I hope. Wish I could send four times as much. My father was an elder in the Martyr's time and he always taught me it was right to pay tithing, but he is gone and I am left here alone. Have been in the church about eighteen years.

I was born in Quincy, Illinois, in 1842, so I am going down the ladder now, but thank the Lord I am trying to live a humble life that I may live with the Saints by and by. I am alone so far as any Saints are concerned, for there are none here but myself, but I am not alone for God's Spirit is with me. Although I am unworthy at times, yet he forgives me when I trust him. I ask you to pray for me that I may be kept faithful to the end.

LAURA I. COOK.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. Magnus Leask writes from Emo, Ontario: "Would like to have an elder come here. Will find a home and will help all we can while here. Are located in the third house north from the station."

Ella Hawkins, McKenzie, Alabama: "I have never written to your columns, but I often enjoy reading the letters and sermons from the brothers and sisters. I hardly know how I could get along without the HERALD as it encourages me and makes me feel like the good work is still rolling on; and, dear Saints, I do know this is the true work of God and my desire is to live more faithfully every day and try to live worthy of the blessings the Lord has promised to his people, if they will keep his commandments. Let us all try to live near to the Master. I desire the prayers of all the Saints that I may hold out faithful to the end."

From Bro. F. A. Smith we learn of the recent illness of Bro. J. M. Terry of Oakland, California. He has been confined to his bed since April 13 with typhoid fever; is some better, but it may be some time before he is convalescent. Sr. Terry is well but nervous from the anxiety.

G. J. Waller, Honolulu, writes: "This week I expect to baptize three members of a Portuguese family, whom I have been instructing for some time back. They are nice people and I hope through them it may be possible for us to make an opening amongst the Portuguese, of whom there are many here."

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, April 18, we were very much pleased to worship in our new church, although not yet completed. Sunday-school was very well attended, a number of visitors from the West Side, and also from Hammond, Indiana. Elders E. Lang and P. Pement occupied in the morning, so we were favored with two sermons. About seventy in attendance, which is more than our average. No evening services in the church, as the gas connection is not yet completed.

Bro. Henry Keir and family now reside at 6421 Hermitage Avenue, about four blocks from the church. The location is fine and some of the other members are planning to move to that locality in the near future. There are a number of vacant lots, so trust as the dwellings are erected that many of the Saints may occupy them, as the nearness to the church home should be an inducement for a better attendance.

No prayer-meeting or Religio held this week, due to a dark church, but hope the enthusiasm will grow instead of dying out, so when we do meet, we can partially make up for the lost time. If we have all kept up our secret prayers by night as well as by day, and have striven to do the Master's will at all times, we should be walking the narrow way.

Sr. A. Sherman was very badly burned Tuesday of this week by an explosion of E-Z polish, which she was using on the stove.

Elder Daniel Macgregor and wife stopped in Chicago between trains, as they passed through Thursday en route to their home in Stratford, Ontario. They brought the first news of the most interesting days of conference, which was very joyfully received.

Sunday, April 26, Elder William Anderson occupied to our edification in the morning. As no services were held at our church in the evening, a number of the members visited the West Side, where they were again permitted to hear Elder Anderson. Sr. Fred Johnson, who has been in Lamoni for some months, visited with us a few days. Trust that she will be able to be one of our workers again soon. The Saints have been requested to fast and pray for Sr. Sherman next Sunday, that she may speedily recover and be relieved of severe pain. "Let us pray for one another."

Many Saints are rejoicing over the news that Elder Arthur Allen will be returned to Chicago. He surely should be privileged to occupy the churches which he worked so strenuously to obtain for the Saints. Prayer-meeting held this week at Bro. Henry Keir's home, choir practice at Sr. McGann's. 6421 Hermitage Avenue. ALICE CARY SCHWARTZ.

We say in glib familiar phrase that the basis of Christianity is the brotherhood of humanity. Which of us gives the recognition of imitation to the astonishing example of Jesus in this regard? Christ was the consistent democrat. Social rank simply did not exist for him. Caste he scorned. A fisherman was his most intimate friend. He accepted the hospitality of an ostracized man. He conversed fearlessly and naturally with abandoned women. He did not refuse to penitently outcasts the preciousness of his personal friendship. Vulgar natures he treated with the patience of high refinement. The common people loved him.—Elizabeth S. Phelps.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Eastern States and Canadian Mission; Greeting: One of the most important conferences in the history of the Reorganization is brought to a close. It pleased the Lord to communicate to his people that which we believe will make this year one of the most important in the history of the church. A change has been made in the presidency of the mission, Elder R. C. Russell, who was ordained an apostle, being associated with U. W. Greene. After consultation we have decided upon the following arrangements and distribution of men for the conference year:

Maine and the Maritime Provinces will be in charge of Elder G. W. Robley. Elders S. F. Cushman and J. P. Buschlen will be associated with him. Bro. Cushman will make Jonesport an objective point.

The Massachusetts District will be under the direction of Elder A. B. Phillips, and Elders R. W. Farrell and H. A. Koehler will labor therein. We greatly regret that Bro. J. D. Suttell, who labored so efficiently the past year, could not see his way clear to take a mission this year. Wherever his new duties may take him we trust the divine blessing may attend and that he will do what he can to upbuild the work.

In the New York and Philadelphia District Elder W. W. Smith will be in charge, making the city of Philadelphia his objective point. Elder Alma Booker will labor in Western New York as heretofore. Elder A. E. Stone will make Scranton his objective point. Elders E. B. Hull and William Anderson will labor in Maryland and Delaware.

Elder H. O. Smith will be in charge of the work in Buffalo and the Niagara peninsula, including Hamilton and Dunville.

Elder G. M. Shipley will be in charge of the work in the Chatham District. Elders R. B. Howlett and Arthur Leverton will be associated with him.

By action of the General Conference the original London District has been divided into four districts to be known as, first, the London District, extending from the eastern line of the Chatham District to Kincardine on the north to Hamilton, thence to Dunville on Lake Erie; second, the Toronto District, extending from the north and eastern line of the London District comprising the remainder of Ontario and Quebec; third, the Winnipeg District, including the province of Manitoba; fourth, the Saskatchewan District, including the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

The London District in charge of Frederick Gregory associated with Elders John Shields and J. C. Farnfield.

The Toronto District in charge of J. T. Thompson associated with Elders James Pycock and Grant St. John. That part of the Toronto District known as the Manitoulin and North Shore in charge of G. C. Tomlinson.

The Winnipeg and Saskatchewan districts, Elder J. L. Mortimore in charge, associated in Winnipeg District with Elders George Buschlen and J. E. Kelley. In Saskatchewan District with Elder H. J. Davison.

Elder R. C. Longhurst, president of the original London District, retains his former appointment until the June conference, when further arrangements will be made as to location of field.

The brethren laboring in Canada will report to Elder R. C. Russell, Arthur, Ontario. Those laboring in the Eastern States will report to Elder U. W. Greene, Willoughby, Ohio, Route No. 2.

We trust the brethren will enter the fields assigned at the earliest possible moment and remain diligently at work, heeding the admonition of the Lord to leave the care and burden of the branches and districts to the men appointed over them while they "push the preaching of the word into the new fields now widening before them." We invite all the local workers to assist us in caring for the branches and extending the work into new fields.

We also admonish the brethren not to arrange for or to enter into public discussion without first consulting with those in general charge.

The magnitude of the work now lying before us as outlined in the recent revelation to the church makes it necessary for every child of God to do his or her part. We trust you will at once bring your tithes and consecrations to the bishops and agents in the various districts in which you reside.

Brethren, as men of God be careful in your deportment and see to it that no word of reproach can be spoken against the church by any act on your part. Praying that God may abundantly pour out his Spirit upon you and richly bless your efforts, we remain your brethren and collaborators.

U. W. GREENE.
R. C. RUSSELL.

To the Officers and Saints of Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, and South Atlantic States Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed in charge of said field, I herewith request the following ministers to labor in the places herein named: E. R. McLain, T. U. Thomas, C. Ed. Miller, S. J. Jeffers, of the high priests, will take the oversight of the districts over which they have been placed in charge, by the Saints in those respective localities, subject, however, to the ministers in charge; Bishop J. A. Becker will labor as hitherto in the three districts, viz, Kirtland, Pittsburg, and Ohio districts, respectively; R. Baldwin, Pittsburg and Kirtland districts; Samuel Brown is hereby placed in subcharge of West Virginia District and Old Virginia; T. C. Kelley is also appointed in charge of the southeastern wing of the mission; the following brethren are associated with him, and will be subject to his direction: M. F. Gowell, E. R. McLain, John Harp, C. L. Snow, L. Booker, F. M. Slover. By arrangement with Bishop Kelley, Bro. Dowker is appointed to labor in Southeastern Mission, in connection with the above brethren. Brn. E. E. Long and William H. Kelley will labor for the present in the Ohio District; O. B. Thomas, I. N. Roberts, in the Virginias; J. M. Stubbart and James McConaughy in the Pittsburg District; D. E. Tucker, Kirtland District, Kirtland objective point until further notice. J. W. Metcalf, northeastern Kentucky and Ohio District.

All the brethren of the missionary force are requested to report to me directly and promptly, quarterly. Please be punctual in this respect. All matters requiring immediate attention in the localities where Brn. T. C. Kelley and S. Brown are in charge will report to them.

It is to be hoped that the brethren will enter upon their mission soon, as many have been at home weeks previous to the convening of General Conference. We want to make the coming year the banner year of the mission. We also request the local officers to cooperate with the traveling missionary in our endeavors to bring success to the cause. The prospects for an ingathering in different parts of the mission are very flattering.

If there are difficulties in any of the branches of the districts that can not be adjusted satisfactorily by the local officers, please acquaint those in charge, and we will try and render assistance with a view to adjust the same. The General Conference just adjourned was a great success and one that will be long remembered by those in attendance, as educational and spiritual. The harvest is great, but sorry to say that the laborers are few, and if there be any young men who hold office in the priesthood, and who feel desirous in their hearts to labor for the Master and the salvation of men, we hereby give them an invitation to join the ministerial forces, and would be pleased to have such as feel willing to place themselves on the altar of sacrifice and to serve the Lord in the ministerial field, report to the undersigned, and we will find room for them to labor in some part of the mission. Who will be the first to respond to this call? This invitation is to the unmarried young men, who have no home responsibilities resting upon them, and who feel that they are willing to thrust in their sickles and reap. Praying that the Spirit of the Master will abundantly attend our labors in the interest of his cause, I remain, your well-wisher and coworker. My address is 185 Eleventh Street, Columbus, Ohio.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS,

General Minister in Charge.

St. JOSEPH, Missouri, April 26, 1909.

To the Saints and Ministry of Mission No. 1, comprising the States of Iowa, Nebraska, the Dakotas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, and Northern Illinois; Greeting: Having been appointed in charge of said field we take this means to offer the following statements and suggestions.

LOCAL APPOINTEES.

That the work of the promulgation of the gospel and missionary conditions may be more successful within local bounds we have concluded to appoint as assistant ministers in charge, the following: Fremont and Pottawattamie districts, Iowa, Eli Hayer, Lamoni, Iowa; Nebraska, J. R. Sutton, Selden, Kansas; Little Sioux and Gallands Grove districts, Iowa, P. M. Hanson, who will later publish his mission address; the Dakotas and Minnesota, Warren E. Peak, Pittsburg, Kansas; Des Moines, Eastern Iowa, and Nauvoo districts, Iowa and Illinois, James McKiernan, Box 225, Farmington, Iowa; Northern Wisconsin District, W. P. Robinson, Lyons, Wisconsin; Southern Wisconsin District, Jasper O. Dutton, Evansville, Wisconsin; Northern, Western, and Central districts, Michigan, J. J. Cornish, Chippewa Station, Michigan; Eastern Michigan District, John A. Grant, R. F. D. No. 1, Bentley, Michigan; Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District, S. W. L. Scott, 75 Daugherty Street, Coldwater, Michigan; Southern Indiana District, D. E. Dowker, 113 Shelby Street, Silver Grove, New Albany, Indiana; North-eastern Illinois District, F. M. Cooper, Plano, Illinois; Ke-wanee, Illinois, District, O. H. Bailey, Media, Illinois; the Lamoni Stake, John Smith, Lamoni, Iowa.

CONFER WITH ASSISTANT MINISTERS.

Those desiring to communicate with regard to matters pertaining to localities, will please confer with the assistant minister in charge of the field in which they reside.

REPORT DIRECT.

By agreement between the ministers in general charge, the ministry will please report direct to J. W. Wight, Lamoni, Iowa, on the first day of July, October, January, and March.

BLANKS.

To obtain blanks for such reporting, send direct to Herald Publishing House, Lamoni, Iowa, where they may be secured for eight cents per dozen. This method of reporting being direct, and attended to immediately on the days noted, will not only obviate the more roundabout method of reporting to the assistant minister in charge, but will permit the entire report to reach the Presidency on or about the tenth of the above months. Your promptness in this matter insures our promptness in making up our report to the Presidency.

FINANCES.

The present financial strain on the general church demands on the part of all strict economy. Thus adhering to an obedience of this law by all concerned will go a long way in relieving present conditions. Obedience also to the law of tithes and offerings and strict adherence to all our duties should be the watchword of all.

REUNIONS AND CONFERENCES.

If all especially concerned will notify both or either of us as to the time and place of holding reunions or conferences it will be of material benefit to us in arranging our plans to be in attendance personally or the securing of other ministers to be in attendance at such gatherings.

REPORTING OF DISTRICT AND BRANCH PRESIDENTS.

Blanks for this purpose may be had at the Herald Office at eight cents per dozen, and we trust that every district and branch president throughout the mission will avail himself of such blanks and make the required reports to J. W. Wight direct, that in turn such reports may be filed with the Presidency. Other correspondence may be had with either of us, Lamoni, Iowa.

CONCLUSION.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say more at this time other than to offer the hope that all will be diligent in their own place and calling, and work earnestly, not for self alone, but for the betterment of self and all concerned, and especially for the great work intrusted to the care of all. To this end may all have the Master's blessings, be earnest in their warfare, and diligent unto complete unselfishness. In bonds,

Your brethren,
W. H. KELLEY.
J. W. WIGHT.

To All Whom it May Concern throughout Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Kansas, Missouri, Central and Southern Illinois; Greeting: We are now merging into another conference year—ready to make a record for ourselves, God, and the church. What will it be? While this is an individual affair, yet it must be a "pull all together," "workers together in Christ Jesus," in order to make a record that will be acceptable to him that giveth the reward at the end, to the diligent, faithful, and true. The field is a large one, but special in its importance; and therefore, that we may be able to carry out its importance more thoroughly, we make choice of the following brethren as our assistants in the field:

Bro. W. M. Aylor in charge of Texas. His associates are: Johnie Hay, R. M. Maloney, W. H. Mannering, D. S. Palmer, B. F. Renfro, and W. R. Standefer part of the time.

Arkansas and Louisiana in charge of J. T. Riley. His associates: James T. Davis, Jesse M. Simmons, James M. Smith, and W. R. Standefer part of the time.

Western and Central Oklahoma districts, Hubert Case in charge, associated with A. M. Chase, J. W. Jackson, J. E. Yates, Edgar H. Smith, and J. H. Baker.

Eastern Oklahoma District, and that part of Spring River District in Oklahoma, in charge of Lee Quick. His associates: E. A. Erwin and W. R. Smith.

St. Louis District, and Southeastern Illinois District, Henry Sparling in charge; associates: Joseph A. Tanner, S. J. Madden, Jesse W. Paxton, S. H. Fields, P. T. Plumb, F. L. Sawley, and Lloyd Moore.

Clinton, Missouri, District, and that part of Spring River District not in Oklahoma, George Jenkins; associates: E. A. Davis, F. C. Keck, W. H. Smart, L. R. Devore, and A. C. Silvers.

Far West and Nodaway districts in charge of Charles E. Harpe, with associates: V. M. Goodrich, William Lewis, E. L. Henson, W. P. Pickering, and Gomer R. Wells.

Northeastern Missouri District, W. S. Macrae in charge, with associates: T. J. Sheldon and O. R. Miller.

Southeastern Missouri District and the unorganized territory adjoining, A. M. Baker, with associates: W. P. Bootman, Henry Braun, and Charles Hargrove.

Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas districts, in charge of H. E. Moler; associates: W. N. Potter, John W. Teeters, and F. E. Taylor.

All that part of Kansas not found in organized districts, in charge of J. Arthur Davis, who will have for associates those brethren appointed to Southern Kansas, when laboring in that part of the field.

The Independence Stake has for workers, F. G. Pitt, John Kaler, R. O. Self, and F. J. Pierce. The ministers in general charge will take supervision of the missionary work in the stake.

Ammon White, of the Evangelical Order, is appointed to the state of Kansas. Evangelists are not strictly "missionaries," but in the law are revivalists, and should visit branches and districts as wisdom may direct, to comfort the Saints, to be a father to the church—giving counsel and advice to individuals who may seek for such. They are not wont to "butt in" to find work; but should be kindly invited by officers of branches and districts to "come." Thus their office will be honored and the churches revived.

We hope the superannuated ministers will feel free to do what they can, in wisdom, to forward the great work, and report their labors to us in regular order.

Reports of all assistant ministers should be sent promptly on dates provided by rule: July, October, January, and March. Send reports to the address of I. N. White, Independence, Missouri, 1006 West Maple Street.

We advise the ministers to be very economical in expenditure, traveling only as the needs of the work may require. We trust the Saints will not turn the worthy minister from their doors empty handed. He has enough to meet in the cold world that is discouraging, without meeting cold shoulders in the "house of his friends." It is enjoined that all presidents of branches make full reports to the presidents of their respective districts, on the first day of the months before named, and the presidents of districts immediately afterwards report the same to our assistants, who will report to us. Should there arise needed changes in the above arrangements, we will feel at liberty to make them when they come.

Stake officers are left without general appointment, with the understanding that their office carries with it an appointment to labor in their respective office with the same consideration as those under general appointment. Brethren, we advise, so far as practicable, Leave the care of the branches and districts to those officers who are in charge of the same.

Let any, or all, feel free to write us when you feel a word from our pens will be of comfort to you. We are collaborators together with you, and feel that your trials are our trials, and your triumphs our triumphs. Ever your collaborators in gospel bonds,

I. N. WHITE.
J. F. CURTIS.

Addresses.

James L. Edwards, Sewall Mansion, Sewall Woods Road, Melrose, Massachusetts.

Quorum of High Priests.

Herewith I request all those of the Quorum of High Priests whose post-office addresses have changed since their last report, as also those who, by instruction from the Lord in the lately received revelation are to be enrolled with the Quorum of High Priests, to send me at their earliest convenience their present and permanent addresses. It is quite essential that I should be informed of every change, so that I may keep the quorum work up to date.

Your fellow servant,

ROBT. M. ELVIN, Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, April 30, 1909.

Conference Notices.

The Lamoni Stake conference will meet at Hiteman, Iowa, Saturday, June 5, 1909, at 10 a. m.

Southern Indiana District will convene at Derby, Indiana, with Hope Branch, May 22 and 23, 1909. Secretaries and officers, send all reports to Secretary Ed. O. Byrn, Derby, Indiana. Saints earnestly requested to attend. David E. Dowker, president.

Clinton District conference will convene May 29 and 30, 1909, at Coal Hill chapel. Those going by rail will be met at Eldorado Springs, Missouri, on Thursday, May 27, only. Reports sent by mail should reach the undersigned before May 27. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

Died.

TORDOFF.—Alma Hobson Tordoff was born in Lamoni, Iowa, May 17, 1901, and passed away on the night of April 9, 1909, of diphtheria. He was the youngest son of E. H. Tordoff, of England. Interred at Evergreen Cemetery, Fruitvale, California, April 10, 1909. We cared for and tended him through life inasmuch he enjoyed the best of health, but alas,

"Half blind amidst the stir of things,
But safe in following out the law,
We know not what a moment brings,
Nor which way blows the burning straw."

The above verse was allotted to his birth-date in our family birthday text-book.

Resignation.

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there!
There is no fireside howso'er defended,
But has one vacant chair.

BRENNAN.—William Thomas Brennan was born in the county of Cork, Ireland, March 7, 1834, and emigrated to the United States in 1881. He leaves two children, Mrs. William Wood, of Ward, Iowa, and Bro. John Brennan, of Swink, Colorado, and several grandchildren. Five children preceded him in death. After a few hours' affliction from a paralytic stroke he died, March 26, 1909. Body was brought to Lucas, Iowa, and interred on the 28th. Services held at the latter place in Saints' church. Elder E. B. Morgan preached the sermon, assisted by Elder Parley Batten.

FERGUSON.—Caroline, the beloved wife of Thomas Ferguson, was born at Kincardine, Bruce County, Ontario, December 3, 1871, and died February 25, 1909, at Knobnoster, Missouri. She was married to Bro. Ferguson October 2, 1889, and became a member of the church May 19, 1901, at Kincardine, being baptized by G. C. Tomlinson. She leaves to mourn a husband, eight children, an aged father, two sisters, two brothers, besides a host of friends and relatives. Her baby boy, fourteen days old, died March 1, 1909. Funeral was held at her home February 26, sermon by J. E. Bozarth. Memorial sermon by Elder J. R. Sutton, Sunday, February 28, 1909.

GRAYHAM.—Mary Emma, was born at Clearwater, Nebraska, November 20, 1893, and died at Bonesteel, South Dakota, April 1, 1909. She was a kind hearted girl and a favorite among her associates. She had whooping-cough, then pneumonia, and seemed to be getting well, when suddenly heart failure developed and she passed away. Tokens of her departure were believed to have been had a week before her death. Many sympathizing friends attended the funeral and expressed their regret at her early demise. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

KILTS.—Mae Mary, was born near Magnolia, Iowa, March 22, 1888; died April 8, 1909, as result of pulmonary tuberculosis. The only daughter of Mr. and Sr. J. W. Kilts. She was baptized July 26, 1903. She had sought to fit herself for a useful life, as teacher and nurse; in the former she succeeded, but ill health cut short her work. The funeral service was from the Saints' chapel, Magnolia, April 9, 2.30 p. m., D. R. Chambers in charge, Alma M. Fyrando preaching the sermon, in fulfillment of a dream she had a long time before. The Woman's Relief Corps had part in the service. The church building was insufficient for the large gathering of friends. Six uncles bore her remains to the tomb. Father, mother, brother, and a large circle of relatives remain.

HELM.—Louisa, at Mulberry, Kansas, April 12, aged 37. Her maiden name was Gilky. She was baptized by Bro. D. S. Crawley, November 23, 1890. Married to Lea Helm in 1891. Two children, both dying in infancy, were born to them. Elder J. M. Richards conducted the funeral-services. Finding a turned down leaf in the well-worn family Bible at the 15th verse of the 116th Psalm, he used it for a text.

HEYWOOD.—Gardner A. Heywood, aged 73 years, oldest son of Jonathan D. and Christiana M. Heywood, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. B. Dix, of Gordon. With his parents he moved to Nauvoo, Illinois, in 1845, and to Council Bluffs, Iowa, where he lived thirty-six years. He was married to Miss Martha Allen, in Crescent, Iowa, in 1857, to which union were born twelve children, all of whom except two, died in their infancy. Bro. Heywood came to Nebraska in 1885 and settled in Sheridan County, where he lived continuously until the time of his death.

GATES.—Mrs. Nellie A., was born at Little Sioux, Iowa, September 22, 1867; died January 6, 1909, at Canadian, Texas, and was buried January 13, 1909, in the Fairview Cemetery, Durham, Oklahoma. She leaves mother, three brothers, two sisters, husband, two sons, and five daughters to mourn her loss. She joined the church when she was a child in Western Iowa. Miss Nellie A. Lytle was married to Mr. A. M. Gates, May 6, 1890. Funeral from the home; sermon by a Baptist minister.

MERCHANT.—William Franklin Merchant, March 24, 1909, at Stewartsville, Missouri, from a complication of diseases. Born July 12, 1893, at Kempton, Illinois, the son of William and Josephine Merchant, who died leaving him an orphan when about six years old, together with one sister, Elva May, who survives to mourn. Since the death of his parents, he made his home with Bro. and Sr. Lars Lewis, near Stewartsville, who kindly cared for him and taught him the beautiful latter-day gospel, which found root in his heart. He united with the church June 14, 1903. It is said of him, that he loved the Sunday-school, and was a faithful attendant when in health, always living a consistent Christian life. When affliction became serious, he called for the elders and the church ordinance of anointing with oil in the name of the Lord, which gave him great relief, and confirmed him in the gospel, causing him to repeat the request until he peacefully fell asleep in the arms of everlasting love. Funeral-sermon by V. M. Goodrich assisted by T. T. Hinderks, from the church, March 26.

HATCHER.—Josiah, born December 3, 1838, and died April 13, 1909, at Bethesda, Ohio. He was born in Wheeling, West Virginia, and was baptized in 1877 by Josiah Ells, at Lampinsville, Ohio. He served four years in the Civil War and then enlisted in the Lord's work and fought gently but faithfully until death. He leaves a wife, three daughters, two sons, brothers, sisters, and friends to mourn the loss of a kind husband, loving father, and respected neighbor. Funeral-sermon by Elder James Craig.

BALDWIN.—Goldie Ellen, infant daughter of Mr. Wm. J. and Sr. Susan Baldwin. Was born in South Omaha, July 23, 1908; died April 18, 1909, at South Omaha. Funeral from the house. Services conducted by Ed. R. Ahlstrand. Interment at Laurel Hill.

LETHWITH.—Sr. Christina, was born April 26, 1892, in Romely, Canada, and died April 6, 1909, after suffering for some time from a complication of diseases. She was baptized at the June conference in 1907. Was buried in the Forest Lawn Cemetery. Funeral-sermon by Elder M. A. Sommerfield, to a number of friends and relatives, in their home in Saginaw, E. S.

BROGDEN.—Rebecca A. Zea was born August 25, 1846. Married Bro. Newton H. Brogden July 1, 1866. To this union ten children were born; three had preceded her to the other side. The sister was baptized in 1876, by Elder C. Derry, and lived a consistent, exemplary life, passing to her reward March 21, 1909. Funeral-sermon at the Saints' church, Deloit, Iowa, by C. J. Hunt.

SCHOFF.—At Stewartsville, Missouri, Wilhelmina Schoff died April 1, 1909. She was born August 17, 1841, at Gerswolda, Germany. Married to Frederick Schoff March 28, 1865. To this union were born five children, three boys, and two girls, one boy and girl having preceded her to the other shore. She was baptized June 5, 1892, at Sash, Michigan, by Elder J. L. Bear. She leaves a loving husband, two sons, one daughter, and eleven grandchildren to mourn. Sermon by I. N. Roberts, service in charge of T. T. Hinderks.

GILL.—Rosa L. Gill died February 24, 1909, at Loveland, Colorado, aged 46 years, 5 months, and 2 days. She leaves a husband, two sons, and one daughter to mourn their loss. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church March 13, 1904. The remains were brought to Denver for interment in Fairmount Cemetery. The funeral-sermon was preached by Elder E. F. Shupe, at the Saints' church.

DOUGHMAN.—At Denver, March 16, 1909, Augusta K. Doughman, of cancer, aged 54 years, 9 months, and 21 days. She was born in Hermanagen, Germany. Baptized by Elder M. H. Forscutt, February 8, 1891. Funeral from the residence. Sermon by Elder C. E. Everett.

STOWERS.—At Liberty Home, Lamoni, Iowa, April 1, 1909, Bro. Isaac J. Stowers, aged 89 years, 1 month, and 10 days. He was born in Essex County, England, in 1820; came to the United States in 1858, first to Beardstown, Illinois, then to Nebraska, where he was baptized in 1876 by Bro. F. W. Curtis. His wife died in 1868. Two daughters survive him, both at Hiawatha, Kansas. One of them, Sr. Joseph Gibbs, attended the funeral. Service was in charge of Bro. John Smith, Bro. A. L. Whitaker preaching the sermon, Bro. H. A. Stebbins assisting.

WOODRUM.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 2, 1909, Mr. George R. Woodrum, son of Sr. George Fowler, aged 27 years and 7 months. He was not a member of the church, but both within and without he was highly respected for his upright and honorable life. His wife and little daughter are bereft, as well as his mother, by his going while so young. Funeral-service was held at the house on Sunday, April 4, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins. Bro. A. S. Cochran assisted. There was a large attendance, including about forty of the order of Modern Woodmen.

OLSEN.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 8, 1909, Bro. Ole A. Olsen, at the age of 70 years and 6 days. He was born in Norway, in 1839. In 1842 his parents removed to America, first to Wisconsin, and in 1845 to LaSalle County, Illinois. In 1860 he married Malinda Danielson. Of three sons born, Thomas died in 1906, but Austin and Amos survive. After forty-nine years of union Sr. Olsen is left alone. Also three sisters of his remain, namely, Srs. Ellen Johnson, Ann Lewis, and Mary Weld. He was baptized in 1862, in Illinois. Moved to Lamoni in 1888. Funeral-service in charge of Bishop William Anderson, sermon by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, benediction by Bro. C. H. Jones.

REED.—Arminta Josephene Hayden was born in Clarion County, Pennsylvania, February 27, 1850, and died April 10, 1909, at her home in Lynden, Washington. She was married October 30, 1865, to J. M. Reed, in Delaware County, Iowa. She was a member of the church, and was baptized May 19, 1880, by Elder E. T. Dobson, in Pocahontas County, Iowa. She leaves to mourn her death, husband, two daughters, and one son; besides three sisters in the state of Iowa and one brother living near Cle Elm, Washington. She lived a good Christian and was a devoted wife and mother. Funeral-services were held at the home, Reverend Case officiating. Burial was in the Lynden Cemetery.

SCOTT.—Sr. Barbara Ann, was born June 5, 1823. She was married to James G. Scott in 1842. Four children were born to this union, who with her husband have passed to their reward. She leaves seven grandchildren, fourteen great-grandchildren, one brother, and two sisters to mourn their loss. She was baptized into the Reorganized Church May 22, 1870, by W. W. Blair. Died April 24, 1909. Funeral from her home by J. W. Metcalf, and interment in the Pleasant Ridge Cemetery.

MONSON.—Bro. Knut was born at Christianstadt, Sweden, March 6, 1848. He was united in marriage to Miss Charlotte Peterson, afterwards coming to America and finally locating at Clinton, Iowa. To them were born eight children, two of whom died in infancy. His wife passed away in 1893, and he was afterward united in marriage to Miss Ida Johnson. To this union was born one child. His second wife passed away in 1905. He was a member of the Reorganization, being baptized October 21, 1893. Was ordained deacon March 15, 1894. He died at the age of 61 years and 26 days. Funeral from his residence. Sermon by Elder E. W. Voelpel.

MILLS.—Annie was born February 28, 1857, at Greensborough, Yorkshire, England, and died at Columbus, Ohio, April 2, 1909. She was baptized May 30, 1889, at Manchester, England, by Elder Joseph Dewsnap, Sr. United in marriage to Elder Thomas Mills on December 26, 1888, at Manchester, England. Elder Thomas Mills emigrated to Westville, Nova Scotia, on August 4, 1904, and was joined by Sr. Mills and family on November 19, 1904. Removed from Nova Scotia to Columbus, Ohio, October 27, 1907. Sr. Mills had long been afflicted with a cancerous growth, and as a last resort to relieve her intense suffering she submitted to a surgical operation at the Protestant Hospital on March 5, 1909. She rallied nicely from the operation, but the disease had made such vast inroads on her vitality that she succumbed to its ravages on April 2, 1909. Her faith in Christ and the latter-day work never wavered, but she passed into the great beyond in the firm hope of a glorious resurrection. The funeral-services were held on Sunday, April 4, and a large concourse of Saints and friends were present, who greatly mourn and deplore their loss. The funeral-discourse was by Elder Harry E. French, assisted by Elder J. E. Matthews. Interment in Union Cemetery. Sr. Mills is survived by her husband, two sons, and two daughters.

RAVEILL.—Isaac W., was born November 22, 1867, at Trowbridge, Ontario, Canada, and died April 18, 1909. He was baptized September 20, 1903. Leaves wife of two months and other relatives to mourn their loss. Our loss is his gain. Services at the church at Park Oak, Missouri, conducted by Bro. Hutchinson; sermon by C. E. Hand.

"Woman's Home Companion" for May.

The burden of our changing social order falls upon our daughters, claims the Woman's Home Companion for May, and this magazine shows by striking examples and figures how topsyturvy is our way of training girls.

In this same issue is a charming article by Margaret Sangster, showing that the millionaire mother is by no means as black as she is painted. Mary Heaton Vorse, in her own inimitable style proves that if we are fat it is our own fault.

In more serious mood is a trip through the Metropolitan Museum of Art with Sir Casper Purdon Clark as guide. This valuable article is illustrated by exquisite reproductions of famous paintings. Other articles of interest are "The art of economy," by Mrs. John Van Vorst, and "The commuters of New York," by Albert Bigelow Paine. "An imperial wraith," by Clara Morris, contains charming reminiscences of the Empress Eugénie. "Lucy Green," a friendless seventeen-year-old girl, tells how she went to Boston penniless, in search of a job, and how she got one.

"Afraid," is a story in Zona Gale's exquisite style, "Hearts and the highway" has Cyrus Townsend Brady's usual swing and dash, and "The four adventuresses" is another story by Hulbert Footner, whose freshness and humor have established his reputation.

This issue of the Woman's Home Companion is distinguished by two features—a poem entitled "The grandmother," by James Oppenheim, and a full-page drawing by Harrison Fisher, showing Margaret and Gerard, from "The cloister and the hearth."

An Earthquake Miracle.

Many curious and improbable stories were told in Messina after its disaster, according to Robert Hichens, who has written vividly and picturesquely for the April Century of his experiences and observations "After the earthquake." One of the strangest of the stories he heard he tells as follows:

"A woman, after the shock, was buried alone in her room. The door was blocked by fallen masonry. There was no means of ingress or egress, and the rest of the house had fallen in ruins. She was uninjured, but she was imprisoned. In this room she remained for eight days. It was a bedroom and contained no food. During the eight days she gave birth to twins. When searchers with picks and spades dug down to where she was, they found her and the twins strong and well. They took them out, and questioned her as to how she had managed to live, why she had not starved.

"Every day a woman came and brought me food," she answered.

"They pointed out that this was impossible, as there was no means of getting into or out of the room, and the rest of the house had fallen.

"I know," she said. "Nevertheless, it is true. I do not know how she came or went. She never spoke to me or looked at me. She was there each day, put food for me on the table, and disappeared. I had never seen her before and do not know who she was."

"They asked for some description of the visitor, but could obtain no details.

"This woman was not raving. She was in good health, well nourished, and had nursed the twins, who are thriving. She persists in her story.

"I told it to a Sicilian.

"It was the Madonna who brought her food," he said. "She often does such things."

Government Land Open to Settlement

Some of the richest and most productive farm lands in the world lies in the "Big Horn Basin" of Wyoming. THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT is spending seven million dollars in building great concrete dams and ditches in order to lead an inexhaustible supply of water to irrigate some of the best of these lands and make them independent of rainfall. A great portion of this work is completed and

The Government Now Offers the Land to You

You have the opportunity to get from the Government a wonderfully productive farm, with water whenever you want it, regardless of rainfall; in a country where a single crop can be made to pay for the land; where 50 bushels of wheat or barley and 75 bushels of oats are commonly grown to the acre; where fruits grow luxuriantly and where the glorious air and sunshine, Summer and Winter, makes life a joyous thing.

This wonderful country is developing fast. Churches and schools abound. The population is intelligent, God fearing and law abiding, and any man out there who is half a man has the opportunity to quickly make himself independent.

Land in this great country is going fast. If you have any thought for the well fare of yourself or children, find out all about this offer of the U. S. Government.

They have given something to society; society must give something to them. The poorhouse does not solve the problem. Their appeal is to justice, not to pity or charity.

The patriarchs were loved, honored, obeyed, and cared for by a multitude of children, grandchildren, servants, and retainers. Patriarchal conditions are passed away. Family ties are not what they once were; they rest lightly upon brothers, sisters, cousins, and grandchildren, and even on children. The Spanish proverb has it that one father can support nine sons easier than nine sons can support one father. There is another consideration: in the days of the patriarchs the products of a man's toil went into the family estate of flocks or lands and were all conserved; now they largely go into society and are diffused and the man himself finally comes back upon society.

An effort is now being made to meet the situation. Governments, corporations, associations, and individuals are endeavoring to make provision for the old man who is down and out. The methods adopted are not perfect, it may be charged that they are but makeshifts. What they will lead up to we do not pretend to say. But they are worth studying and claim the attention of students of sociology.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Nothing is more distressing than to see an old man picking his living from the gutter. That any aged person, either man or woman, who has contributed brain and muscle to the world's work should be permitted to suffer privation, eking out a miserable existence, toiling beyond their failing strength, until the end, is a disgrace to society.

One revolts at the thought that even those who have been improvident should starve or freeze in old age. A young and able-bodied person can be told to work or not eat, because he still has the choice; but pity restrains society from giving such an ultimatum to the aged who can not work, even if they have wasted the heyday of life.

But there is another class, those who have been industrious and frugal, who owing to sickness, misfortune, or injustices experienced in the business world of to-day, find themselves facing an old age for which they have not been able to make provision.

GOVERNMENT OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Great Britain has an old age pension system that went into effect January 1 of the present year. At this point we insert a brief description of scenes connected with the introduction of the system:

Although the small allowance of five shillings a week had been the subject of a great deal of ridicule and contemptuous criticism on the part of the opposition to the government's plans, it was accepted with great joy by the aged recipients, to many of whom it represented a larger sum than they had been able to earn during their lives. In Ireland especially the pensions brought more relief and happiness than in any part of the United Kingdom, five shillings a week being a small fortune to the incredibly destitute people of that country. With the cheap cost of nearly all articles of consumption used in Ireland, this pitiful sum of about one dollar and twenty-nve cents weekly assures comfort and comparative prosperity. The total amount that will be distributed in Ireland will go far to relieve the conditions of privation and hardship which prevail to a degree that would seem incredible to easy-going, lavish-spending Americans. In the county of Mayo alone over five hundred thousand dollars yearly will be distributed from the national treasury's pension fund, and in many other counties the amount will be almost as large. This is the happiest New-year the Irish people have experienced in a generation.

In England, too, the pensions brought much happiness to the poor. Some of the old people danced for joy and others dropped dead from the excess of their emotions as they received their first week's allowance. In a number of places the distribution was made the occasion of festivities, the mayor of Richmond taking the lead in this regard by giving a tea and a cinematograph entertainment to two hundred and seventy-five state pensioners in his borough.

The pension-for-old-age law has given much satisfaction to the leaders of the workingmen in England, not so much on account of the actual amount of relief it will bring, but as an earnest of further activities along the same line on the part of the English government.

According to the latest reports nearly or quite six hundred thousand men and women over seventy years old, living in England, Scotland, and Ireland, are in receipt of weekly payments under the pension act. It is estimated that during the year seven million four hundred and fifty thousand pounds sterling will be paid out.

Four conditions govern the granting of pensions: The applicant must be at least seventy years of age; he must be a British subject; he must have lived in the United Kingdom not less than twenty years; and his income must not exceed a certain fixed maximum amount.

The fact that nine tenths of those who have applied for pensions were unable to sign their names attracts attention to another phase of the problem that is not solved by paying a certain sum to a man when he is old. These persons who could not read or write never were in a position to contribute their best to society or to make adequate provision for themselves.

New Zealand has an old age pension which has been in operation since 1898. The maximum pension is twenty-six pounds per year, paid in twelve monthly installments. Each pension is granted for one year and a fresh application must be made at the expiration of each year. The applicant must be sixty-five years of age. He must have resided continuously in the colony for twenty-five years; though occasional absences of not to exceed two years are permitted. His character must be up to a certain standard, the specifications of which are too numerous to outline here. The net value of his accumulated property must not be over two hundred and sixty pounds. According to the Official New Zealand Year Book there were seven thousand four hundred and forty-three pensioners in 1899 receiving a total yearly payment of three thousand one hundred and twenty-four pounds. There was a steady increase, until in 1907 there were thirteen thousand two hundred and fifty-seven pensioners drawing a total of three hundred and fourteen thousand one hundred and eighty-four pounds for the year.

France has a pension law, passed in 1905, under which every Frenchman sixty-five years old and incapable of supporting himself may receive a certain sum of money each month, "ranging from five to twenty francs, and in exceptional cases more." At the beginning of the present year four hundred and ninety-five thousand persons were on the French pension list, nearly four times as many as in 1905.

Germany has an old age pension system that has been in operation for twenty years. The system compels all laborers whose income is under a certain amount to provide for old age. Certain amounts are collected on pay-day, be it weekly, monthly, or quarterly. The government collects these sums in the form of stamps affixed to cards issued to the individual by the police. One half the premium is paid by the employer, the other half is paid by the employee, unless there is some contract or agreement arranging otherwise. In some large institutions the employer keeps up the dues of all his employees.

At the age of sixty, or when so disabled that a living can not be earned, the one insured is permitted to draw four per cent interest on the amount standing to his credit on the government books, and at death the amount is divided among his heirs. When out of employment the payment of premiums is omitted, providing the police are notified. There is also a system of accident benefits, and under the two, up to the year 1902, one hundred million, five hundred thousand dollars had been paid to pensioners.

CORPORATION PENSIONS.

In the United States there is no general system of government pensions for the aged. Individuals have had recourse to benevolent societies, insurance associations, church organizations, or private charities.

During the past ten years, however, the pension idea has been developed to a remarkable degree among corporations. In 1898 only one railroad, the Baltimore & Ohio, systematically granted pensions to retired employees. Since that date eighteen lines have adopted the pension system, and others, like the Rock Island, are arranging to adopt the system. Many street railway systems have followed suit.

In September, 1908, the International Harvester Company adopted a plan for pensioning its superannuated employees. One writer says, "A simple vote of the directors suddenly changed the outlook on life of more than twenty-eight thousand industrious American workingmen." More than seventy other like great corporations have adopted similar plans during the past ten years. Evidently they have recognized the fact that the employee has put into the business more than he has taken out, and his pension is given not as charity but as the continuation of lawful earnings.

In the McClure's Magazine, December, 1908, Burton J. Hendrick makes some interesting comment on the class of men who come under the provision of the corporation pension systems and the spirit which moves them. It will be seen that a relatively higher class are benefited than is the case with Government pensions. Many of the employees are well educated and all have labored for many years at their chosen work:

The calling in of old employees upon the adoption of a pension system sometimes discloses many interesting facts. When the Pennsylvania Railroad began paying pensions, it found two men ninety-six years old regularly reporting for work. One spent his time with a dust-pan and a brush in one of its large stations; the other filled a minor position in one of its machine-shops. On the Baltimore & Ohio were found two shipping-clerks who were rapidly approaching their ninetieth year, and who had sat side by side for fifty-four years on the same stools in the same office. The Baltimore & Ohio now has a crossing watchman on its pay-rolls who has been sixty-one years in its service. One of this railroad's most distinguished pensioners is "Pat" Higgins, seventy-six years old, who was bridge watchman at Harper's Ferry the night John Brown and his associates seized the Arsenal. The International Harvester Company has one workman whose two sons are college professors; and another veteran maker of pitmans, now approaching his eightieth year, who is a graduate of Yale. The Pennsylvania has on its pension list a man, now ninety years old, who started his railroad career as a mule driver on the Delaware and Raritan Canal in 1839. The United States Government has only forty-one men who have been fifty years in its employ; the Pennsylvania has three hundred and sixteen. Many of these old-timers do not regard the pension system as an unmixed blessing. They prefer to keep at work, not only because in that case they will receive higher wages, but because they have no inclination toward a life of idleness.

They particularly dislike the word pensioner; it smacks, to their thinking, too much of being laid upon the shelf; "retired list" is considerably more to their liking. This sentiment is not limited to mechanics; when the Carnegie Foundation for pensioning college professors became operative in 1906, two hundred and fifty-seven men were found eligible for retirement, and only forty-six retired. This inborn human tendency to retain one's grip is what has led the Pennsylvania and other corporations to fix arbitrarily an age, usually seventy, at which all their employees must drop work. Even then the men resort to many subterfuges; there is much deception about ages, for the sake, not of getting on the pension roll, but of keeping off. A loss of strength and of interest in life noticeably follows when one is placed upon the list. The sudden loosening of the hold tells upon one's mental and physical vigor.

According to a statement made in 1903 by Mr. Max Riebenack, comptroller of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, the aggregate annual appropriations for pensions by sixteen railway companies operating in the United States was one million three hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The number on the pension rolls was three thousand two hundred. Probably the annual amount has increased considerably since that date. Massachusetts has an old age pension commission that reported recently and was continued. They report an aggregate of three million nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand eight hundred and eighty-six dollars and seven cents paid out by fourteen railroad companies up to 1906.

The March (1909) Lend a Hand Record comments on the fact that many corporations have increased their pension funds after giving the system a short trial, while none has as yet abandoned the plan or reduced the expenditures for pension purposes.

PENSIONS FOR TEACHERS.

The average college professor's salary is considerably less than twelve hundred dollars per year. The expenses of living in that calling are necessarily high and leave little to be saved for a rainy day, especially as the years of earning are comparatively few.

In 1900 only five American institutions provided retiring allowances for their professors. Now, under the Carnegie fund, at least sixty-three such institutions retire their professors with a comfortable living.

In 1900, New York City, then including Brooklyn, was the only American city whose school system provided for the retiring of worn-out teachers with an allowance; now practically all of our large cities, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, San Francisco, and many others, have such a provision. In New York City alone sixteen thousand teachers feel more secure and happy, and consequently are more able teachers, because they know that they will not be cast adrift when their days of teaching are ended.

During the last three years, New Jersey, Indiana, Connecticut, and Rhode Island have established state funds for similar purposes.

On the facts herein presented we base no extended argument. Any movement so widespread is significant of changing conditions and sentiments and should be studied carefully before conclusions are reached. It is evident, however, that side by side with the sins, follies, and abuses of the age there are movements that are supported by men who honestly have the good of humanity at heart. While we are pledged to the thought that these are the last days, we should remember that not all of the conditions portrayed in the divine word as being typical of the last days are evil in their nature.

HEARD DURING THE GENERAL CONFERENCE.

"The highest place that a man will ever reach in this church is that of a member in good standing."

"When we get a community and a people who really love one another and put the law into force in all its details, there are plenty of men who will flock to our standard from cities and hamlets and villages and country places, all over the broad earth."

"When the body decides a question we ought all to be at peace and support the decision, and we ought to trust Christ to direct the body."

"The mind of man may become automatic. At the end of a series of repeated acts the danger line is past, a habit is formed, and the mind can not go back to its former freedom."

"God does not always speak through orthodox channels. He once spoke through a beast of burden, and I find in no place in the Bible a statement that such an animal should be a prophet or hold the priesthood. God can speak through any channel he may choose, and no church can tell him no."

"It is the mission of the Devil to make a man think that he is as good as any one else, or a little bit better. I am sorry to say that he is too often successful in the world. We ought to put the bars up and keep him out of the church."

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday preaching at the Brick Church was by President E. A. Smith and Elder Eli Hayer.

A spiritual time was had at the afternoon prayer-meeting. The following prophecy was given: "Verily I say unto you, my children, as you obey, and inasmuch as you are striving to keep my commandments, I will pour out my Holy Spirit upon you and cause your hearts to rejoice. Obey the words that I gave to my servant whom I have placed at the head of my church and kingdom upon the earth. Obey my laws, carry them out, and the time shall be hastened that Zion shall be redeemed."

Assistant Manager Fred B. Blair has returned to Lamoni for a few days and is celebrating the birth of a second son. Bro. Fred is considerably improved in health and appearance.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We are in receipt of three clippings from a leading paper of Cleveland, Ohio, the Cleveland Press, which constitute three interesting chapters. In the first is found a report of Bro. R. C. Russell's work in Cleveland, Ohio. It seems that Bro. Russell took occasion to make a comparison between the work of the churches and the benevolent societies that aroused some indignation on the part of the churches of the city. He said, "Fraternal societies have taken the place of the church. The members meet once a week. Each pays so much a year. They talk together on helpful topics. One of the members is taken sick, two members call to see him. If he needs some one to sit up with him at night, they do so. He receives a sick benefit. If he is in want they carry him food. If he dies they pay his insurance to his wife. They act as a father to the widow and the children. In the churches who gets the benefit of the money? The minister. When you are sick the church members come around with a basket and it becomes cold charity. When the churches get right these organizations will not be needed."

Chapter two contains a reply by Reverend F. W. Luce, M. E. Church, who says, "I do not think the accusations from this man worthy of notice." The statement is made that the ministers of the denominations express similar views. But chapter three mentions the work of Reverend Gabriel McGuire, pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church, who is organizing a club or society among his own church members, the object of which will be to furnish watchers for those who are sick, and to furnish financial aid to the sick and the widows and children. The dues are to be one dollar a year. Mr. McGuire says, "The church is the natural place for man to turn for aid, but too often his call is unheeded." Evidently the doctors disagree.

Bro. Charles Fry was given space in the Burlington, Iowa, Evening Gazette of April 24, and presented some of the features of our belief and the differences between our church and the church of Utah.

The Mallard, Iowa, Leader of April 23 contains a short account of the church and the branch at Mallard, by Bro. C. E. Butterworth. In the same issue is a short sketch of Bro. Joseph Fish, president of the Mallard Branch, and also a picture of the brother.

The Brooklyn, (New York,) Eagle of November 22, last year, is sent to us. It contains a two-column write-up of the Mormon faith. It gives our church a very fair representation and first mention in the article, and then takes up the Utah faction. Bro. B. R. McGuire is evidently doing some good work in getting our position before the people of Brooklyn.

A Philadelphia student of theology who applied for license to preach was examined by the Presbytery. In his answers he said the idea of eternal damnation was inconsistent with the mercy of God. His license was withheld until he made the following statement: "I accept absolutely the teachings of Jesus Christ about future punishment. As far as the fate of the finally impenitent is concerned, I find in the Scriptures no hope whatever for such."

Elders' Note-Book

FINANCIAL HISTORY AND APPEAL FOR LITTLE SIOUX DISTRICT.

Having enjoyed the historical sketch of Bishop Hunt for Gallands Grove District, we give a few items of interest from Little Sioux District. The word of the Reorganization was first preached in this locality in 1860, by Elders W. W. Blair and E. C. Briggs, who at times made the kitchen table their couch to escape the irresistible "flea," as some later elders have hung their shoes on the wall to escape "rats."

The earliest record book we have is one kept by Bishop D. M. Gamet (the first entry being October 6, 1865,) who seems to have been collector for a large part of church in the then western branches, as we find record of individual donations from Gallands Grove, Union, Manti, North Star, Keokuk, Montrose, String Prairie, Little River, Glenwood, Plum Creek, Plum Hollow, Pleasant Grove, Mason's Grove, Wheeler's Grove, Boomer, Raglan, Preparation, and Council Bluffs branches in Iowa; Nebraska City, Columbus, Desoto, and Decatur, Nebraska; and not until 1876 do we find Bishop Gamet's jurisdiction defined as Little Sioux District. (See page 130, vol. 4, Church History.)

One of the first entries made, November 17, 1865, is, Paid for one pair of ponies $150 for use in Utah Mission. The Western Mission was largely sustained through goodly donations from the foregoing branches. We find that Bro. J. C. Crabb gave cash and molasses to the value of $5.25, while Brn. Andrew Ballantyne and John Lytle gave flour, hence our missionaries, A. H. Smith, William Anderson, and J. W. Gillen must have had "bread and molasses."

It does the heart good to look over this old record and find the steadfast faith of good and dear Saints who showed their faith by their works, by steady payments of tithes and offerings from 1865 until their labor in life ceased. Sr. Ann Johnson was constant from 1866 to 1906 when death came to her. Bro. Jarius M. Putney and members of his family appear often and for goodly sums, until removal to California. David and Emaline Hall, of whom Bro. Hunt makes favorable mention, paid tithes and offerings from North Star Branch in the later sixties.

The "New Translation" fund received large support here in 1866. The idea of surplus tithing is not new, as we find that Andrew Ballantyne, Andres Hall, and John Conyers paid surplus in 1867. "Inventories" are not new, for we find that Asa Walden's property was "prized" or appraised at $400 and he paid $1 thereon as a beginning. The first auditing of Bishop Gamet's accounts was made in September, 1875, by appointment of a committee, being J. C. Crabb, Hugh Lytle, and J. M. Harvey. The total receipts for almost nine years in all the funds before named were $1,992.27. We find Alfred Beebe turned in as surplus tithing in 1874: 3½ yards cloth at $5.00 per yard, 3¼ yards cloth at $3.00 per yard, 1 dress pattern at $12.00, 1 dress pattern at $10.75.

We wish we might mention the many Saints of sainted memory who in that early day were found "doers of the word" and subscribers to the cause. What noble sentiments must have impelled them! The joys of a Reorganization, their scattered and waiting hopes on one hand, and the zeal against the apostasy on the other.

Phineas Cadwell succeeded Bishop Gamet in 1884.

In 1889 David Chambers was appointed; upon his death in January, 1897, A. M. Fyrando was appointed and is the present incumbent. From $225 per year in 1872, we find receipts in 1897 to be $1,600; the receipts for 1907, $3,250. We are rejoiced to find this growth, but distressed to know that not more than one tenth of our district membership is represented at the present time on our books. Where are the nine tenths? If we are to be rewarded for good deeds and works, all other things being equal, will not the payers of tithes for gospel extension and care of the poor receive a greater reward than those who do not pay? We think they will. When we have been sorely tried, like Peter, we say, "To whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life." When dissensions are found within, or troubles threaten the church, we confide in the hope that the work is true though man may fail, and we are as sure of the fact, that though attacks are and may be made on the financial departments and revelations given, yet tithing, offerings, consecrations are a part of the perfect plan and law, as pertaining to temporal things, as much as is obedience to ordinances in spiritual things. We believe that those who seek excuse may find it, (?) but the word that we believe will judge the world at the last day will also judge us; and more, we are also to be judged by the law to which we subscribe, in all its revealments and requirements.

To pray God to care for the poor and to speed the work, and not assist with our means, is at least inconsistent, and hence we conclude our little sketch with an appeal to all Saints of the Little Sioux District, within its borders, as well as those who are scattered members, who love the Lord and his work, to send us their tithes and offerings. Our sub-agents in branches are, Woodbine, S. B. Kibler; Logan, Doctor C. S. Kennedy; Persia, Joseph Seddon; Biglers Grove, B. E. Fry; Mondamin, J. P. LEAVES FROM LIFE.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF APOSTLE JAMES FRANKLIN CURTIS.

ELDER JAMES FRANKLIN CURTIS.

(EDITORS' NOTE.—This autobiography has been in our hands for nearly a year. It will be of especial interest to our readers at this time, owing to events that have transpired since it was written. By a revelation received at the late General Conference, Elder Curtis was called to occupy as an apostle in the Quorum of Twelve, and was so ordained, April 20, under the hands of Apostles F. M. Sheehy and F. A. Smith. He is now associated with Apostle I. N. White in charge of Mission No. 2,—Oklahoma, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Kansas, Missouri, and Central and Southern Illinois.)

I was born near Proctorville, in Livingston County, Missouri, on the land of Zion, January 26, 1875. My parents, Emsley and Martha Curtis, had twelve children born to them, of which nine were boys. Three boys and one girl died when quite young. Those living are members of the church. Of these, Joseph, of Lees Summit, Missouri, is a priest, and J. D., of Falcon, Colorado, is a member of the Second Quorum of Seventy, and I am a member of the First Quorum of Seventy.

It was my good fortune to be born into a family of Saints; my parents having obeyed the gospel some two years or more before I was born. It was not long after father heard the gospel until he gave his name for baptism. My mother, however, thought that he was too hasty. Finally, through prayer, an open vision was given to her. On returning from a union prayer-meeting in charge of a Methodist minister in which some present had stated their determination to unite with the Saints, but were told by this minister that the Saints were a bad class of people, mother prayed very earnestly to God to show her whether the Saints were the true church or not. On driving home as she and father approached the gate a glorious vision was shown to her. Above the brightness of the moonlight appeared a light on the top of the house in the midst of which stood the Savior. He raised his right hand and said, "This is my church and my people; inasmuch as you will obey, you and your house shall be blessed."

She had asked in the sincerity of her heart and her eyes had seen, her ears had heard. The following Sunday mother and father and others were baptized.

When I was only two years of age, upon two different occasions my mother was spoken to by different persons in prophecy and told that if she lived faithful she should live to hear her third son preach the gospel. I am the fourth child but the third son, as I have one sister older than myself. Twenty-two years later these prophecies were fulfilled at the Kennedy Schoolhouse, twenty miles east of Colorado Springs, Colorado. I had been ordained an elder and had been preaching in different schoolhouses when upon this occasion I had an appointment on Sunday at eleven o'clock. My father and mother having returned from a trip to the eastern part of the State, accompanied me to the schoolhouse where several had gathered for service. Father opened the meeting, and I preached. At the close father arose and related the prophecies that had been spoken to mother concerning me and that now they had witnessed their fulfillment.

When eight years of age I accompanied the family to Independence, Missouri, where we lived for five years.

On the 10th of June, 1883, my sister Mary and I, with several others, were baptized by Elder J. C. Foss, and were confirmed in the old brick church on the east side of town. Those confirming me were Elders J. W. Brackenbury, A. H. Smith, and Alfred White.

I have heard persons in and out of the church urge their objections to children being baptized at so early an age as eight years. They seem to think that a child should know as much as a grown person before being baptized. I confess that I knew but very little about the church at that early age, but I wanted to do right and be saved when I died; and as Jesus had commanded baptism, I was willing to obey.

As time passed on I sought to have a good time with other boys and did many things not becoming to a Christian. I learned to use bad language, chew tobacco, and at times would smoke cigarettes, and a few times my lips were tainted with beer and wine. I soon found out that it was very unpopular to be a Latter Day Saint, or a Mormon, as we were commonly called. I was pushed off the sidewalk and kicked around and generally mistreated while the word "Mormon" was sounded in my ears until I began to think that the greatest misfortune of my life was that I had been born into a family of Saints.

I was taught that by baptism my former sins were forgiven, but those committed after baptism I would have to answer for. It may be asked, What good did it do you to be baptized as you afterwards did many things that were wrong? I answer that after baptism I often wished I had not been baptized, so that I could do as I pleased, for I felt that I had made a covenant with God and would have to answer for all the sins I committed. Often I refrained from doing things, being a member of the church, that otherwise I would have done. The boy or girl that obeys the gospel in youth will have more of the Spirit of God, to shield him or her from evil, than otherwise would be granted. In other words, by our obedience to the gospel of Christ, the Spirit has a better claim upon us than it would have otherwise.

At the age of thirteen my father exchanged our home at Independence, Missouri, for a farm of two hundred and forty acres, five miles west of Harrisonville, Missouri. This was a good change for me, as it took me away from evil companions and gave me steady employment. There was no chance for me to get tobacco as before, without letting my parents know about it, and as I had kept it from them up to this time, I preferred to quit its use than to be found out. How thankful I have been since that I was free from the habit! My swearing continued until I began to realize that it was doing me no good and that I could just as well get along without it, and besides, I would have to answer for my sins. So I ceased taking the name of the Lord in vain.

I had a desire to be religious when I became a man, but thought that there was plenty of time for religion later. Father was generally away from home in the missionary field, but mother would always have family prayer night and morning and ask the blessing upon the food we ate. At times her prayers seemed to make me realize my condition. She would pray for God to bless her boys, and then I would think that I ought to do better.

One night I dreamed that I was crossing the pasture, returning to the house, when I suddenly found myself in the center of a large circle of light in company with my aunt, Sr. Jennie Crum, and a little child. Almost instantly a heavenly messenger appeared, and taking the child in his arms said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." I realized that this was for my special benefit, and for days it seemed to be constantly before me. It is still vivid in my mind.

I often felt a desire to do right and as I look back over my boyhood days I can see how the Spirit of God was striving to turn me from my evil ways. Quite often I was told of the prophecies that had been made, that I should preach the gospel. It seemed to me then that I would rather do anything else than be a minister. Many times did I realize the necessity of being religious, and then, like a flash, the Devil would suggest the thought that if I did, I would have to preach the gospel, and it was so repulsive to my feelings then that it seemed the only way to keep from being a minister was to continue in sin. Had I been a member of the Utah church I might have been sent on a mission to be reformed.

How cunning is the Evil One! When I would do good, evil was present. I was now in my eighteenth year. After hearing the different creeds and attending revival services I would sometimes think, as I saw the religious confusion, that possibly the whole thing was a deception, the Bible untrue, that there was no God, and that death was the final end. I could plainly see that if the Bible were true, the Latter Day Saints had the best of the argument.

We were farming on a large scale; it was work, work, work. There was to be a reunion of the church at Clinton, Missouri, in the fall of 1892, but that was fifty miles from where we lived. Imagine my surprise when father asked me if I wished to attend. I was glad of the chance, and with father, mother, and others of the family we were soon on our way, in a covered wagon.

Those meetings were food to my soul. I listened to the prayers and testimonies of the Saints. They said they knew the work was true. I wanted a testimony for myself. Jesus had said, "He that will do the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine." I had been baptized, but had not lived for a testimony. I was believing more and more, but longed for more light.

My father had offered to send me to Independence to attend school. I resolved to lead a different life as soon as I could have the association of Saints. I would endeavor to live worthy of a testimony; if then there came no confirmation of the work I would not feel under obligation to continue.

Soon after returning from the reunion I went to Independence and started to school. I put my resolution into practice to serve God if he would give me evidence of his truth. And this he did, and has done more than I have been worthy to receive. No sooner did I begin to pray earnestly than I felt the comforting influence of his Holy Spirit.

A year or more passed by. I had returned home. No church, no Saints to associate with, father and mother gone from home, no one to lean on for strength. Here my associates were of the world. I could not go with them and still live my religion. It seemed to me as the darkness gathered around me, that the cross was greater than the crown. To give up was to relinquish my hope of eternal life. To continue was to deny myself of my former associates and the pleasures of the world. What should I do?

Reader, did you ever feel the tempter's power seeking to turn you from the way of righteousness? Truly we must learn that in the trying hour we must lean upon God who "is more willing to give than we are to receive."

I retired to bed without prayer, determined never to pray again. Oh, how miserable I felt! The darkness was great indeed, when almost instantly I felt a change. The darkness turned to light and the Spirit of God came to my rescue. Instantly I saw my mistake: I was exchanging my hope of life eternal for a few momentary pleasures of the world. I prayed and wept under the influence of the divine Spirit, and never again have I given up the fight.

In the spring of 1896 I completed the high school course at Independence and in the fall went to Colorado, twenty miles east of Colorado Springs. I worked at farming, freighting, carpenter work, and teaming.

The seventh day of May, 1898, I was united in marriage to Miss Maggie Hall, formerly of Wichita, Kansas, whose acquaintance I had previously formed. To us have been born five children,—two boys and three girls. Laura, at the age of two years, after a short illness of four days of bronchial pneumonia, breathed her last and we laid her to rest in Provo, Utah, Bro. J. D. Stead preaching the funeral-sermon.

After I was married I taught school for two years, during which time, on the 31st of July, 1899, I was ordained an elder by J. W. Gillen. My wife, who had formerly been a Methodist, united with the church at that time.

The branch which was afterward moved to Colorado Springs was then organized and I was chosen president.

After being ordained, it seemed impossible for me to make the effort to preach. One night, after retiring to rest, an angel appeared at my bedside, and although I was asleep, yet I realized where everything was in the room and that I was in bed. He said to me, "The Lord says that inasmuch as you will lift up your voice to proclaim the gospel, he will stand by you and bless you."

In the vision I was taken to the Flinn Schoolhouse, five miles away, and there I saw an audience and I preached to them for about an hour with good liberty. When I was through, the angel again said to me, "Don't you see, the Lord said he would bless you and he has."

I answered, "Yes, I see he has," and instantly I was awake and filled with the Spirit of God.

I preached on Sundays and taught school during the week until the April conference of 1900, when I entered the general missionary field. Prior to entering the field, I was spoken to in prophecy through Bro. James Kemp, of Conifer, Colorado, and the Spirit said that the Lord required all of my time in the ministry.

On the 14th of April, 1903, at Independence, Missouri, I was ordained into the First Quorum of Seventy by W. H. Kelley and Gomer T. Griffiths.

The first six years of my missionary work were in Colorado and New Mexico. The last three years I have labored in Utah.

During my missionary work I have baptized over one hundred into the church.

Many blessings have I received during my labors in the church, but have also had my shortcomings. My hope in God grows stronger and I can truthfully say I know the work is true.

My companion has been willing to sacrifice, in order that my time should be spent in the ministry.

Hoping that finally my labors may be approved of the Master. I remain, In gospel bonds,

J. F. CURTIS.

IS THE DOCTRINE OF UNIVERSALISM TRUE?

At different times in the church papers I have seen arguments presented in favor of the ultimate salvation of all mankind; so much has been presented in favor of universalism that I can not but believe quite a number in the church think the doctrine rests on a philosophical basis and is true. If one human soul will be lost the doctrine of universalism is false.

Arguments have been put forth, some in interrogatory form, indicating that endless punishment would be a manifestation of hate on the part of God; a return of "evil for evil." God has been represented as so full of love that he would permit no one to be lost. Wonderful love that, that takes away the agency of man. Did not God possess as much love, when the Devil became the Devil, as he possesses now in all his infinitude? Man is to be judged by his works, and the love of God together with his other attributes will provide for him a just judgment. It takes more than the love of God to save man: it takes character. The issue is, Is it certain that all men will want to be saved?

At death the righteous go to paradise, the wicked to hell. In accepting this no one has made a mistake. Where hosts of religionists have made a mistake, however, has been in importing into the state which the wicked enter into shortly after death, the state that the Devil and his angels and the sons of perdition shall be cast into, after the judgment,—the "second judgment"; and the prisons where the wicked remain between their death and resurrection have been confounded, or made synonymous. A line of distinction should be drawn between the state known as the "second death" into which some will go after the judgment, and the state the wicked enter into at death known as hell. Man does not enter upon his final destiny immediately subsequent to death. We read that hell shall deliver up its captives, and they shall come forth and be judged. There is nothing to indicate that those who suffer the "second death" will ever come forth and be judged of God or be saved. We read that Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison, or hell; but we do not read he will ever preach to the Devil, his angels, or to those suffering the second death.

In the twentieth chapter of Revelation we read that the sea and death and hell are to deliver up the dead which are in them, and every man is to be judged according to his works. "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."

Where is the scripture showing that these, lost to God, will ever be saved? Proving and arguing are two different things. No one has a right to advocate universalism unless he can prove those cast into the "lake of fire" with the Devil and his angels will come forth and be in a kingdom of glory. I do not look upon punishment as an arbitrary decree of God; but as a condition beyond the power of God to avert and he still be God.

In considering the destiny of man it should not be forgotten that man has the power of choice. There are different glories awaiting man, viz, celestial, terrestrial, telestial; and those who can not abide any of these glories "must abide a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory." (Doctrine and Covenants, page 216.) There is a gradation from the celestial or highest glory to a place where there is no glory at all. Will some universalist show me how any one can be saved and yet be in a kingdom which is not a kingdom of glory? Man's agency seems to consist in the power of choice: wherever there is the power of choice there must be the possibility of darkness being preferred to light. Since some find enjoyment in works of darkness in this life, what is there to prevent them loving such things henceforth and, if they desire, for ever?

We have in those mentioned by John the Revelator whose names were not written in the book of life an example of some who were not disposed to live according to any law from heaven; since in earth life, and through the intermediate state on up to the judgment day, they rejected the overtures of God, how does any one know that sometime in their reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity their choice will be for God? I think those who stand for universalism should throw some light on that.

To me the mission of Christ is not a failure, as all are given a chance to be saved, and all are judged according to their works. It would not be creditable to any one to be saved by force:

For what doth it profit a man if a gift is bestowed upon him, and he receives not the gift? Behold, he rejoices not in that which is given unto him, neither rejoices in him who is the giver of the gift.—Doctrine and Covenants, p. 217.

The Book of Mormon, page 174, says that mankind would have been "endlessly lost," were it not for the redemption through Christ.

But remember, that he that persists in his own carnal nature, and goes on in the ways of sin and rebellion against God, remaineth in his fallen state, and the devil hath all power over him. Therefore he is as though there was no redemption made; being an enemy to God; and also is the devil an enemy to God.

Again we read:

That which breaketh a law, and abideth not by law, but seeketh to become a law unto itself, and willeth to abide in sin, and altogether abideth in sin, can not be sanctified by law, neither by mercy, justice, nor judgment; therefore, they must remain filthy still.—Doctrine and Covenants, p. 217.

The plan of redemption is not a failure unless it fails to save men who live by its principle.

In the Doctrine and Covenants we learn of the "sons of perdition," of whom it is said it had been "better for them never to have been born." We are informed they are the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath; . . . wherefore he saves all except them; they shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is endless punishment, which is eternal punishment, to reign with the devil and his angels in eternity, where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, which is their torment, and the end thereof, neither the place thereof, nor their torment, no man knows; neither was it revealed, neither is, neither will be revealed unto man, except to them who are made partakers thereof: nevertheless, I, the Lord, show it by vision unto many; but straightway shut it up again; wherefore the end, the width, the height, the depth, and the misery thereof, they understand not, neither any man except them who are ordained unto this condemnation. And we heard the voice saying, Write the vision, for lo, this is the end of the vision of the sufferings of the ungodly.—Pp. 188, 189.

Since no man knows the "end" of their torment, by what authority can any man say all men shall finally be saved? Do the words, "It had been better for them never to have been born"; "the only ones who shall not be redeemed in the due time of the Lord, after the sufferings of his wrath"; "He saves all except them";—do those words prove this class will finally be saved? Strange proof! If universalism be true, revelation does not make it known. The teaching of what God has not revealed can have no salutary effect upon the world. About the last word we have about the "sons of perdition" is that they go away to "reign with the Devil and his angels in eternity." How long they will thus reign "no man knows."

Therefore, in the hands of no man can the doctrine of universalism be defended successfully. If God did not provide such a place as the "second death" for the deliberately incorrigible, philosophy would. Even in the present state of society we have to have some separated from society. The more a man loves his child the more he wishes to have it separated from what is vile. The pure and true should not be classed with the vile, the hateful, and hellish in disposition. This does not make light of God's infinite attributes of power, justice, love, and mercy. He is no tyrant because there may be some who do not care to abide by the laws governing in heaven. Universalism carries with it the idea of certainty respecting the agency of man being exercised for godly things; if such certainty does not exist, there is no assurance that all men will be saved. The agency of men in this life does not reveal a certainty of choice for the things of God. Some choose to be in a state of rebellion against God. Some may exercise such a choice in the world to come. We are told of just such a class. They are finally cast out with the Devil and his angels, and there is where the record leaves them.

Christ said: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The preaching of the gospel will be followed by a verifying of those words. There will be some who will accept the gospel and receive celestial glory; others will have so lived that they shall receive the terrestrial glory; others the telestial; and some will receive no glory. The "sons of perdition" will have so completely rejected the overtures of God that they shall be cast out to "reign" with the "Devil and his angels." This is in harmony with the Lord's statement: "He that believeth not shall be damned."

Is universalism true? I have faith in the far-reaching influence of Christ's mission, that all will have an opportunity to be saved, and all will be saved who care to be saved; but I am not an advocate of universalism.

* Luxury is the father of disease.

OPPORTUNITY.

There is much misunderstanding, confusion, and deception over what is termed opportunity. Men long for "opportunities" to break away from present conditions, to be stronger, wiser, richer, more useful members of society. They would do thus and so to brighten the future of those who love them if they only had the "opportunity," and they often go down life's pathway to the end vainly looking to the right and left for the chance which is sought, yet never catching a glimpse of it.

Opportunity is a door leading up to another plane of life. But that door is not plainly marked like the exits at a theater. "Enter here" is not written over the portal. Nevertheless, it is fairly easy to find the door to any chosen place; for all around all of us are plenty of opportunities. Look not afar for the opening. Look close at hand for it, whatever direction your ambition may take. Look intently, think long and deeply about your virtues and vices and circumstances. Perhaps in the very work which is in your hands is the knob which swings open the door of the opportunity for which you long. If you can not find the opportunity, then you are unworthy of the better place to which that opportunity would lead you. Water seeks its level. In the long run, every man is where he belongs; because even if he be fitted for a better place than that which he is now filling, the very fact that he has not at last broken out of his shell and won that better place, shows that there is a little something lacking, maybe very little, in his equipment for the larger sphere. Perhaps you are in a shop where you feel that you should be an executive officer of a concern. You might perhaps do even better than those now over you; but the very fact that you have not developed sufficiently in wisdom to perceive the door of opportunity and move out and on, shows that there is something lacking within you. Is it lack of initiative, courage, confidence, resourcefulness, moral character which inspires confidence in others? Without these you might fail as an executive. Supply these, and the opportunity is visible.

A man advances as the powers of his mind unfold, and men and conditions are generally powerless to hold him down. To eliminate one's weaknesses is to add to the source of power not only for a day or an hour, but throughout life. A business-like, systematic, persistent self-examination of character and habit will reveal to each one his very many weak points under the various headings to which they belong, such as impatience—waste of energy in condemning persons or things when the fault is perhaps with self; profligacy—letting slip through the fingers priceless hours, useful little coins which might be saved for a rainy day, opportunities to do acts of kindness or helpfulness which would give needed aid to others less fortunate and which would broaden self in the doing; procrastination—lack of decision, putting off until some other time the performance of those things which might with a little effort be done now; cowardice—avoiding the attacking of those tasks or duties which one sees or admits to be part of his mission in life, keeping out of politics, churches, charitable works; drifting along—going through life without any great plan or object, living from hand to mouth, and learning only what is easy, convenient, or absolutely necessary. These are only suggestions; books, companions, personal and mental habits are other headings. But each individual makes his own list, and as he proceeds in the self-examination he will at last come to know himself. Having thus learned self from within, he will be able to detect in his conversation, address, and general deportment, his various exterior evidences of weakness, and may in time eliminate all and substitute in their places qualities of mind and heart which will mark him to be a man.

Each weakness that is eliminated from within means a growing, strengthening, and broadening of character. It is an uncovering of a new source of power.

THE DISCIPLE OR CHRISTIAN CHURCH. IS IT GAINING OR LOSING?

In the Christian Evangelist, of St. Louis, Missouri, a leading weekly paper of the Disciple or Christian Church (often called Campbellite), in its issues for July 23 and 30, 1908, is an article written by Reverend G. B. VanArsdall and read before the Congress of Disciples at Bloomington, Illinois, entitled "The unshepherded church and ministerial supply." Believing a few extracts from the paper would be of interest and profit to our people, especially those who have that boastful and aggressive church to contend with, I submit the following:

Let us consider first the care of our existing churches by our present ministry. What is the situation?

Our statistician reports that one fourth of our churches are without preaching, and an additional fourth have preaching only once a month, and that both of these classes are without pastoral care. . . .

Some months ago A. W. Taylor, of Eureka, made a careful canvass of the state of our churches, gathering his information directly from the several States. His report shows that 22 per cent of our churches have no preaching, 50 per cent have preaching part of the time, and 28 per cent have preaching all the time. This report agrees essentially with that of Brother Hoffman. . . .

Laying aside all denominational pride and candidly recognizing conditions as they exist, we must confess that the state of more than half our churches is distressing. . . .

The most characteristic feature of our present system is the utter lack of any system. A minister finds it necessary or expedient to change his field of work. He can proceed to hunt until he finds. . . .

But even after he has successfully and modestly brought his availability before the church he must suffer the embarrassment of knowing that others are probably in the same state of expectancy for the place of service. He is conscious that he is on trial, and the minutest detail, from the cut of his coat to his loyalty to the plea, is under inspection.

THE SMOOTH SPEAKER'S CHANCE.

Under our present system the congregation is at the mercy of the smooth speaker who may chance to happen along, just passing that way over Sunday to visit his wife's relatives. It is surprising to know how many of our churches, and some of them among our best, too, have been enamored of these wandering stars and taken up with them, or rather been taken in by them, to the retarding, and sometimes even wrecking, of an otherwise prosperous work. . . .

Time would not permit me to even name the list of evils that accrue to the account of the church in our present haphazard method of selecting ministers. . . .

The competition between ministers for places, on the one hand, and on the other, the local disaffections, due to our present system, are an open shame to the name of Christ. . . .

As a brotherhood we have 10,000 churches and 5,000 or 6,000 ministers, with no plan whatever for relating these to each other.

FEAR OF ECCLESIASTICISM.

There are some among us who aver that we have no scriptural authority for missionary societies, but this body is not of that number. At least we are not bound to be limited at this point by the silence of the Scriptures. . . .

The New Testament provision for the care of churches was for the conditions existing in New Testament times. Present day conditions were not hinted at or even necessarily anticipated.

It may not be argued that our present system does in some measure at least care for the churches. The responsibility for any care of them at all is a responsibility for their care according to the most efficient plan, and this I think has been shown that we do not possess. . . .

If it be true that doctrinally we hold the first position in Protestantism, that very fact is a challenge from God that we should be first in our system of organization. It is our preaching and not our organization that commands the attention of the world. Why not bring our organization up to the high standard of our faith? Surely God does not intend that our high doctrinal position should be an excuse for inefficiency of organization. It is a demand for the most perfect system. The doctrine is of God—the plan for its teaching and the development of life through it are of man. . . .

I can not but feel that the establishment of such boards as I have spoken of, [state boards to secure, train, and locate ministers, etc., C. J. H.,] and more especially the great need as these men would see it in the discharge of their duty, would in the very nature of things stir them up to a like sense of responsibility for our future ministry.

Hundreds of young men, yes, and thousands, are but waiting to have this line of high service pointed out to them and for counsel in the beginning and prosecution of their studies. In all this the board of ministerial supply could and would naturally and easily render the most valuable service. I can also see that this responsibility would call to positions on the board only men of highest fitness, and its discharge would develop in them qualities like unto those possessed by him who sent out the little company of twelve from whose ministry has grown the church of the Redeemer. My brethren, both of these problems of which I have spoken are such as we can not longer neglect and be true to our Master. May his passion for the world's redemption inspire us to action, and may his Spirit direct all our planning.

In the above will be found several plain acknowledgments of the growing weakness of the so-called Christian Church. It is stated positively that their organization is a failure and needs the New Testament plan. Their old plea, "where the Bible speaks we speak, and where the Bible is silent we are silent," is now declared obsolete, as they claim to have need of plans, organizations, etc., even that the Scriptures are silent upon.

Lastly, however, they have advocated the use of "twelve" men to do a special work in their church. Will they also ask for a living prophet soon? We will wait and see.

As to imperfect men having been called of God to do a special work, the following from their Sunday-school lesson in the Christian Evangelist, July 16, 1908, is certainly in point:

The divine choice and favor do not preclude the possibility of human folly and failure. . . .

God uses many imperfect instruments, and the discovery of a weakness or a sin in a man does not prove that God is not using him.

Surely the Disciple or Christian Church organized by Alexander Campbell is changing.

"THE COURAGE OF CAPTAIN PLUM."

This is a story written by James Oliver Curwood and published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. It is presumably a historical novel, that is, it is based on what are supposed to be facts and conditions at Beaver Island, Michigan, at the time when James Jesse Strang was at the zenith of his power.

Captain Plum is a lake captain, and having had his property confiscated or seized unlawfully by some of Strang's followers, he returns to Beaver Island for revenge.

The story is filled with thrilling situations and begins right at the start. Captain Plum is met by a rather mysterious individual who seems to divine all the captain's plans and to know somewhat of his history. This old man, Obadiah Price, is one of Strang's counselors and he prevails on Plum to accompany him. In Price's dooryard, in the moonlight, Captain Plum gets a glimpse of a fair face, catches the delicate perfume of lilacs, and is in love from that moment. The girl seems to be in danger and Plum decides to stay and save her.

The entire situation is cleared up at the end when Obadiah gives his own history. Obadiah Price is in the employ of President Franklin Pierce and combines revenge and duty. It is a "Mormon" story and its interest to our readers lies in this fact. The names of Joseph Smith and Brigham Young are introduced, and judging from the way the first of these, Joseph Smith, is treated, if it may be a means of determining, the author has likely made a sorry mess of the whole attempt at making it a historical novel.

Whatever our opinion of James J. Strang may be, we have never thought of him as having been half as bad as he is pictured by Mr. Curwood. But Mr. Curwood was "writing a story; that's all," as a party here remarked, after reading the volume. It is too bad a man must play shuttle-cock with a man's reputation, already good, bad or indifferent, in an attempt to give his book an historical setting.

Mr. Curwood's reference to Joseph Smith comes near the close of the story, where the old man, Obadiah Price, is telling of his life which had been blasted by his sweetheart having been married, in his absence, to a Mormon elder, who, being a fairly good man, attempted to take his wife and escape from the Mormon fold in Missouri. But the Danites killed him and she killed herself, the story goes, to save her honor, because Joseph Smith wanted to marry her. A miserable mixture of anachronism and popular error!

The writer of this is a grandson of Joseph Smith and has strong reasons for believing that his grandfather was never guilty of polygamy. When eminent and honorable judges before whom attempts to prove Joseph Smith a polygamist have been made, say there is no real evidence to show that he was, and plenty of evidence to prove he was not,—I say, when such are the findings of courts of the land, courts eminently qualified to weigh evidence, it seems a pity that Curwood, Wilson, and others do not make it their business to know whereof they write before they drag men's names in in such an unsavory way. Why not let their imagination keep them among the purely fictitious?

What would the descendants of some of our well known men think if some money-mad writer would play upon evil reports concerning their history and by a lively exercise of imagination so weave in such rumors as to lend them the presumption of truth?

A daughter of James Jesse Strang lives in Lamoni. She has not read Mr. Curwood's story, but a few years ago when the Ladies' Home Journal published a story about her father she branded it as very unfair; and so we presume, from our knowledge of certain errors in Mr. Curwood's story, that he is as far from truth in all as in part, so far as history goes. For instance, he has Strang killed on board the ship Michigan, but as a matter of fact, Strang was shot as he was approaching the landing, and was taken into a house close by, where he died. His murderers, however, escaped into the boat, where they were protected by Government officers.

Withal, The Courage of Captain Plum is interesting, with plenty of action and enough of romance to demand a reading without interruption.

FIGURES AND FACTS.

Editors Herald: Being much interested in the fulfillment of prophecy, and much more interested in knowing exactly how to tell the truth and nothing but the truth to the people, I am naturally attracted by information from any and all sources; but I notice that if we make a computation from any of the lists published, we will be guilty of wild exaggeration; for they leave out the more destructive earthquakes that occurred before 1832 A. D., which is the date of two remarkable prophetic statements; one in Doctrine and Covenants 85:25, and the other from the revelation on the rebellion. From these statements, we expect to find that destructive earthquakes will have been on the increase; and that they will continue to become more grievous as time passes. To show that they are becoming more disastrous, I have formulated the following table, which is a handy blackboard illustration. Thinking that it may be of interest to others, I herewith present it. In making this computation, I have used different published statements, being careful to use maximum figures for those occurring before 1832 A. D., and minimum estimates of those occurring since that date,

Respectfully,

LAWYER'S STUDY OF JESUS' TRIAL.

The legal questions bound up in the trial and crucifixion of Jesus open up matters of much interest and moment to both the lay and the professional mind. Of late years these questions have been attracting the attention of legal talent in several countries. The eminent Scotch author and advocate, Alexander Taylor Innes, has written a volume upon the trial of Christ, and the same subject has been discussed by the Italian, Giovanni Rosadi. And now comes a member of the New York bar, Walter A. Chandler, with a two-volume work on The Trial of Jesus from a Lawyer's Standpoint, (the Empire Publishing Company, New York,) in which he considers exhaustively all the questions of law and of fact which throw any light upon Christ's trial and conviction. For some years Mr. Chandler has been lecturing upon this subject throughout the United States and Canada, and these two volumes are an amplification of his lectures.

In the first volume the author takes up the facts bearing upon the case and discusses their value as evidence. These facts are all furnished by the narratives of the four Gospels, and therefore his discussion must concern itself mainly with the credibility of the Scriptures. Mr. Chandler examines and analyzes the four narratives separately and in comparison, and subjects the witnesses and their statements to the tests of the laws of evidence with the utmost thoroughness. When the reader reaches the end of these seventy pages he feels that this portion of the subject has been pretty well thrashed out. The author's standpoint is frankly that of the Christian believer, although his intention is evidently to be impartial.

Having treated the element of fact, he next takes up the element of law, and discusses rather fully the subject of Hebrew criminal jurisprudence, insofar as it bears upon the trial of Christ. The third section is a review of the legal aspects of the trial. In the form of a "brief" the author discusses all the points of the case, considering, among other questions, whether or not there was a regular legal trial of Jesus before the Great Sanhedrin, and showing the illegality of much of the procedure.

The second volume takes up the Roman trial, discusses the powers and duties of Pilate, and the Roman law that was applicable. One chapter is devoted to a history of Pontius Pilate and an analysis of his character. The account of the taking of Jesus before Pilate, then before Herod, and again before Pilate, is an interesting narrative in which fact, research, and imagination are all made to contribute to its completeness and its vividness. It is also an example of a well-reasoned and cogently stated lawyer's plea for his client. Another section of this volume treats of Græco-Roman paganism, and has been added, the author explains, in order to give a background of Roman social and religious life necessary for the understanding of the character of Pilate. An appendix contains short biographical sketches of the members of the Sanhedrin, with a descriptive account of that body. In another appendix are given the apocryphal Acts of Pilate, with a brief prefatory account of their history and extracts from the works of Tischendorf and Lardner discussing their authenticity. Several pages of bibliography list the works that have been quoted by the author.

The author's aim has been not only to discuss the legal aspects of the trial of Jesus, but also to make a lawyer's study of the case help prove the divinity of the prisoner. The result is a production closely and clearly reasoned, which those readers who are in sympathy with his belief will hold to be an unanswerable argument, but which those who are not will doubtless feel could be demolished by a lawyer holding a brief for the opposite side. The volumes are substantially bound in half morocco, and are illustrated by a number of reproductions from the works of Munkacsy, Durer, Michael Angelo, Alma-Tadema, and other artists.—New York World.

THE INSPIRATION OF PURPOSE.

Purpose gives new meaning to life; it shows the only real reason for living is living for something. It is the assertion of our kingship over conditions, our mastery over self, our glory in fighting for the right at close range and fighting to the end. Purpose makes man a crusader, glorying in his effort to attain the cross of some high ideal where the inspiration and glow of the struggle are greater than the mere crown of victory.

Purpose makes man his own second creator and by it he can make himself what he will. He can choose his own realm; he can live contentedly in the mud of low desires like a lizard or sweep boldly high in the pure bracing air of noble ideals like an eagle rightfully claiming the mountain tops as its own. Purpose transforms the commonplaces of life; it strengthens the mind to meet obstacles and to be undaunted by them as a hardy swimmer glories in the battle with waves and opposing currents. Purpose gives man ever new progressive relations of his possibilities. It means consecration, living at our best for the sake of what is best; it means dedicating self to something higher than self. All true purpose must in the ultimate analysis be unselfish. It can never find its finality in mere acquisition for self. This may be ambition but not high purpose.

Purpose at its best must be above and beyond us like the polar star that guides and inspires the compass of the mariner. The world needs, more than talent, genius, wealth, or power, men of mighty purpose, men consecrated to daily living in the inspiring illumination of an ideal; men who make each day count directly for something real, who face each day's sunset with new harvests of good for those around them and for the world.

The great thing in life is not in realizing a purpose, but in fighting for it. If we feel the possibilities of a great work looming up large before us and impelling us to action it is our duty to consecrate ourselves to it. Failure in a great work is nobler than success in a petty one that is beneath our maximum of possibility. We have nothing to do with results; they do not belong to us anyway. It is our duty to do our best bravely and rest in the sweet comfort of this fact alone.—Circle Magazine for April.

Her Gladness.

My darling went
Unto the seaside long ago. Content
I stayed at home, for, oh, I was so glad
Of all the little outings that she had.
I knew she needed the rest. I loved to stay
At home a while that she might go away.
"How beautiful the sea! How she enjoys
The music of the waves! No care annoys
Her pleasures," thought I. "Oh, it is so good
That she can rest a while. I wish she could Stay till the autumn leaves are turning red."
"Stay longer, daughter," all my letters said;
"If you are growing stronger every day,
I am so very glad to have you stay."

My darling went
To heaven long ago. Am I content
To stay at home? Why can I not be glad
Of all the glories that she there has had?
She needed change. Why am I loath to stay
And do her work, and let her go away?
The land is lovely where her feet have been;
Why do I not rejoice that she has seen
Its beauties first? That she will show to me
The City Beautiful? Is it so hard to be Happy that she is happy? Hard to know
She learns so much each day that helps her so?
Why can I not each night and morning say:
"I am so glad that she is glad to-day?"

My Wish for My Baby.

I desire for my baby neither great beauty nor great wealth nor fame, nor anything to mar her happiness. But give her a contented spirit, ministering hands, and willing feet, that her presence may radiate joy wherever she may be. May she care nothing for society, but may she love her neighbor as herself. Let her motto through life be, Noblesse oblige. May she never know ambition, nor seek to explore life's mountain tops or steeps, either through curiosity or great yearning, but may her little feet tread tranquilly life's common way. May she be cursed with neither brilliance nor wit, but give her a sense of humor, a tender tact, a gracious presence, and only sufficient beauty to make her face lovely to her friends. May the public pass her by in utter ignorance and never know of the existence of my little maid. May she never seek her own, but let her always minister to others without thought of reward. Thus give her happiness in great measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over, and as her crowning glory may she know the supreme joy of a great and selfless love.—Lilian Bell in The Scrap Book.

Are We Thinking?

When I enter the homes of Saints I am always looking at the church papers and there are always so many things to interest one in them. But many, many homes are sadly lacking those church papers, unless a borrowed one. But now we see albums full of post-cards. We are following the fad. But do we ever think it is a foolish waste of money? In a short time those same albums will be sent to the garret or burned with the other trash. We all love the beautiful and can not help admire some of those lovely cards, but it seems we go too far sometimes. We had better not buy too many, for our Christmas Offering money may be small. The money spent for a few cards would pay for the Autumn Leaves, a magazine every Saint should read. Let us not neglect our church papers for the sake of a few pretty cards. Some are already tiring of the cards and destroy them. Nothing can take the place of a good long letter from a loved one, and this card craze is spoiling our young folks, for they often say, I'll send home a card to the parents. But the lonely ones at home would appreciate a letter telling of their joys and cares more than the prettiest card. AUNTIE.

Letter Department

PANA, Illinois.

Dear Herald: I have thought many times since starting in this grand work that I would like to make the attempt to express myself through the columns of the HERALD, but next would come the thought there are so many others that are more capable of sending in letters than I, that I had better keep still; but that did not make me think any less of the work, neither did it show the great love that I have for the work, so I will send in a few lines, then leave it to better judgment as to whether it goes in print or not.

Dear Saints, I can say now and at all times that I am glad my life has been spared to ever hear and obey the angel's message. When this gospel found me I was in the Methodist Church, where I had gone because I felt the responsibility of a parent and wanted to raise my children in the fear of the Lord. This I felt I could not do, for neither I nor my husband belonged to a church. Again I had been taught strictly against the anxious seat, but as I did not believe in anything much I became curious to know what there was for me; so I was anxious to go and went in earnest and with a broken heart. I went for all that was in it for me, and felt better, because I felt humble; felt like I had gone to the last place I was called to go, and thought when I had done my part the Lord had done his part, and in this way I consoled myself for sometime. But, dear Saints, I did not receive that great, miraculous power that I had heard others say they had received. I soon became dissatisfied and have asked the ministers of the Baptist and Methodist churches questions which they did not answer to my satisfaction. As time passed, our oldest daughter professed religion and went to the Baptist Church. It made a great impression on me, but I just cautioned her to live right and she would be right. A few years went by and our two youngest girls professed. The youngest came to me and said, "Mamma, I will go with you to the Methodist Church." I said no, go ahead here with the rest of your schoolmates. Here is where you will feel the best. Imagine my feelings when I was not strong enough to encourage her; then I thought, some in the Baptist Church and some in the Methodist Church. I was all torn up and praying God to turn the light on me so I could not help but see and know which was the right way, but to no avail. Then I would think of what others claimed. I would think the Lord is surely a respecter of persons. I would also think of where the Bible says, he that hungers and thirsts after righteousness shall be filled.

I got so the more I read the less I believed the Bible, but I would not tell this, but kept on praying for light. About this time Elder David Smith came preaching in our neighborhood. We went for the fun there was in it and to have it said we had both seen and heard a Mormon elder preach, not once thinking that we were going to hear the true gospel preached in its fullness. To our surprise, we had never heard the Bible preached from and explained until that night, and it was easy to see that it was done under the influence of a spirit that we were not acquainted with. We kindly and respectfully invited him to come over to our schoolhouse, where he stayed and preached to a crowded house for about five weeks. I had bragged that I never would be baptized again, but under his preaching I, with others, changed my notion and became very anxious to obey this gospel. My husband, three daughters, myself, and about twenty-three of our neighbors came into the church during that meeting, and since, which has been three years last February—was a time never to be forgotten by the Saints. We got rocked out of our schoolhouse and learned all about what persecutions meant, but by our suffering we got the work before the people in a way that it is still growing, and it will not be long until there will be a branch there to stay. We are all in the church but our boy. Dear Saints, I beg your prayers in his behalf, as the angel's message did not find me until I was thirty-nine years old. I believe I'm safe in saying that the greater part of my life has been spent in darkness. I have had many dark years, but where once I was blind now I can see, but since receiving this great light I feel that there is a great responsibility resting on me, about how I walk before my heavenly Father. My great desire is to watch my footsteps and keep in the straight and narrow path; watch my conversation to keep it pure and holy before God, and ever be ready to do what my hands find to do, that would help to advance this great work. I want to set my mark high and then reach it.

If this is not too long and goes in print, there will be dear Saints read this that will know what I have said in regard to this to be true, which happened in Southeastern District, near Macedonia, Illinois. I can further say I never got what my soul was hungering and thirsting for until I started in this work. Dear Saints, remember me in your prayers, and you will receive mine in return. My prayers are for God's people all over this broad land, and for the world that they may be led out of darkness like I have been and enjoy the beauty of this gospel as I do to-day.

Your sister in the true gospel,

ELIZA E. MOSS.

P. S. This I speak of is where Elder David Smith broke the ground and got it ready for cultivation, and now Bro. Sparling, Brn. Sawley, Fields, Plum, and Lloyd Moore are in the field tending the crops, and they are yielding their increase.

SPRINGFIELD, Oregon, April 30, 1909.

Dear Herald: I will relate my experience, as I have been one of the isolated Saints since leaving Michigan last June, as it may be of some use to other isolated members. I have been here in Springfield since the 19th of last June. When I came I was very lonely, for I had been living most of the time since I became a member in neighborhoods where I was surrounded by those of my faith. I was baptized December 17, 1893, in the waters of Lake Ann, Michigan, by Francis C. Smith, a step I have never regretted, and how glad I am that I have found this glorious gospel!

When I arrived here in Springfield, I was lonely. I went to work to see if I could find any Saints here, but was not successful. I wrote to the Herald Office for the names of any of my brothers or sisters living in Oregon taking the HERALD, and for the address of an elder, as I had been very sick. Well, they sent me a list of names of quite a number of Saints in Oregon, and told me where five branches of the church were, and they also sent me Elder S. D. Condit's address, and here I wish to thank the Herald Office manager for his kindness in sending me those names and for address of Bro. Condit. The result is, Elder Condit has been here the last three or four weeks and has baptized two, Bro. and Sr. Hite. They were of the Campbellite faith and I believe they will make noble workers in this cause. There are others very near the kingdom and one woman sent word to me yesterday forenoon that she wanted to be baptized if Bro. Condit had not gone away. Bro. Condit had left for Lebanon, but we hope another elder will soon be sent here. We have been insulted and false statements have been made in regard to our true position. Bro. Condit had been promised some stale eggs, but the rabble failed to keep their word and he stayed until he got ready to go, without being molested.

We have a good opening here, and Bro. Condit organized a home class Sunday-school with six adult names to start with. I trust the time is not far distant when we will have a branch here where a few months ago I stood alone. There are nine members of the church in and near Springfield, and the outlook good for others in the near future. Dear brothers and sisters that are isolated, go work with the means at your hand with that determination to help build up the kingdom of God by warning your neighbor, and I do not think you will be long isolated from the society of Saints. May God help us to do our part, is my prayer.

Your sister in the one faith,

FLORA CRAWFORD.

SPRINGFIELD, Oregon, April 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: I inclose a clipping from the Springfield News, which has been fired at us and indicates that some one was stirred up. The editors have kindly allowed us a little space, so we will endeavor in a couple of issues to get our position more clearly before the people. The man Emmons, who is said, in the locals, to stand "for God, home, and native land," attacked us in the first effort I made here upon the street, and before a hundred people who crowded around us, and he declared our elders would not defend their position; that he had made them "run like curs"; but when given a chance to present an object-lesson to the people of Springfield, he refused, saying, "Yes, you are willing to debate where you have everything to gain but nothing to lose; but you will not debate where you have members." I told them we had just closed a debate recently with their church in Kansas City, repeating it in Independence, Missouri, where we had hundreds of members in each place, so that, with other charges he made which I branded as false from start to finish, did not help his cause any; but when he withdrew, the rabble set up a yell and we reserved for other nights the effort to set forth other facts.

They practically drove us off one night later, and threatened stale eggs, etc., but the mayor stood by us when appealed to and declared himself in favor of free speech, telling us to occupy where we desired on the streets. After various other efforts, which the cunning of the adversary had devised, had failed, and the last objection made by Bro. and Sr. Hite of the Christian Church had been answered and baptism settled on by them immediately following Sunday-school work, we hurried over to the home of Sr. Crawford to prepare for that and found her prostrated with a raging pain in her head. Through administration she was up and ready to take her place in a half hour at the head of Sabbath-school, walk a mile to the Willamette, where baptism was performed, leading in the singing there and in the night meeting. We trust the start made under such difficulties will be but the beginning of greater work done there.

Being appointed to the eastern part of the State and to Idaho, we leave the opening for others to look after. If the six zealous members there now will continue a united effort, success will crown their effort, as it did the single-handed labor of Sr. Crawford, before her husband and others came to her assistance. If we can but learn to labor together and with God, how much may be accomplished! May the Master help us to do so.

Saints in our field may address us for a little time at Logan, Utah. Field address will be given later.

In bonds,
S. D. CONDIT.

SOLDIER, Iowa, May 2, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am striving in my weak way to do what I can, although I do not have the privilege of attending church and Sunday-school nearly as much as I would like. We live about seven miles away from the nearest church and when the busy work of the summer is on, it is too hard for the horses to travel so far. Oh, how many times have I wished that we lived closer to some branch of the church so that I could go every Sunday. We used to have Sunday-school in Soldier regularly every Sunday, for about eleven years, but some of the members moved away, and there were not enough left to keep it up, so we had to give it up. We have had some of the elders up there preaching several times, but I think they did not stay long enough to get the people thoroughly convinced.

Bro. Carl Ballantyne gave us a beautiful sermon at Moorhead this morning. He is a lively young man in the work. It was my full intention to attend General Conference this spring, but difficulties arose, so that I could not. I have tried to get much of it though by reading the sketches in the HERALD. I don't know what I would do without the church papers. I believe I would starve. It seems to me that this life would not be worth living if it were not for the grand hope of being permitted to live and reign with our Savior. Dear Saints, let us all be more humble and more prayerful that we may be worthy of the crown that he has laid up for us.

Your sister in the one faith,
MISS EDNA AMUNDSON.

BAY CITY, Michigan, May 3, 1909.

Editors Herald: I thought it would be well, perhaps, to tell the readers of the HERALD that we are still here and laboring for the Master. Yesterday, in the face of a snow-storm, we led six precious souls into the waters of baptism, and there are others near the kingdom who would have been in the class yesterday but for sickness. We hope to have another class soon.

While the work in Bay City has been at a low ebb, and has passed through some hardships, we hope the time will soon come when the work will thrive, and some of the eldership will feel to come and help in Bay City, as there is a population of sixty-four thousand, and with a fifteen-cent ride to the city of Saginaw, with a population of sixty-four thousand more, and not an elder in sight. I trust some of the eldership will come and see what can be done. Better try and fail than never to try. We are rather expecting to see Elder William Davis in our city, as he will doubtless want a large territory to work in, and there are some honest souls in all this people.

We are living in hope that the time will soon come when the gifts of the gospel will again be ours to enjoy. The writer desires the prayers of the Saints that the good work may go on.

Route 6, Station A. E. S. WHITE.

TORONTO, Ontario, April 29, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have never seen the Saints of Toronto more moved or more enthusiastic than on the past Sunday morning when they listened to the very able and masterly discourse of President (now Bishop) R. C. Evans, upon the events, transactions, and above all, the revelations of the conference at Lamoni, brought recently to its conclusion.

An unerring and unmistakable wisdom had evidently inaugurated and instituted the important changes and alterations then instituted, and our esteemed and respected brother, Elder R. C. Evans, is now at liberty to devote his whole heart, mind, soul, and strength to the prosecuting and building up of that important work in this country which an angel of God assured him several years since was to be his chosen field and his appointed field or mission; and the Saints here seem fully to acquiesce in the wisdom and suitability of the appointment. Canada, too, rejoiced in the appointment of a very worthy and very able man to the vacant seat of the Presidency in the person of Elbert A. Smith, and as evincing the truth of what Dean French used to say, "We do not really know any man until we have seen him face to face." Although I have been twenty-nine years in this God-given and God-originated work, I did not know until last week that President Elbert A. Smith is the only son of that erstwhile "sweet singer of Israel" who has long since entered into his rest, viz, the poet-prophet David H. Smith. So the three presidents have fallen into their appointed places as peacefully, as quietly, and as naturally as the three times three satellites of the mighty planet Saturn. It can now more truthfully be said that "the seed of the Martyr reigns over the church"; and long may it be so, is our sincere and earnest aspiration.

We were all truly interested in Bishop Evans' able and vivid description of the glorious appearance and dimensions of Zion as portrayed in that grand and glorious volume the Apocalypse of Saint John. Many of your ever-widening and growing circle of readers are interested in oriental facts and figures, and (like myself) enjoy seeing everything worked out, or reduced to its "lowest common denominator." Accordingly taking as a basis the facts and figures given in the apocalyptic vision of the Holy City, I commenced calculations. The Revelator says: "And the city lieth four square and the length is as large as the breadth, and he [the angel] measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it are equal. . . . And he measured the wall thereof an hundred and forty and four cubits, according to the measure of a man, that is, of the angel."—Revelation 21: 16, 17.

Therefore, if the city, being four square, is 12,000 furlongs in length and 12,000 furlongs in breadth, it must needs be 144,000 furlongs in extent, or superficial area. Reduced to English miles we have the startling fact that the city is, or rather will be, no less than 1,500 English miles in length and 1,500 in breadth, therefore, 1,500 times 1,500 gives us a total superficial area of no less extent than 22,500 miles square. Elder R. C. Evans adduced the interesting fact in his able lecture that 1,500 English miles from Zion, i. e., Independence, Missouri, would just include the city of Toronto, and would extend, I think he said, just about one half mile east of the River Don, which forms the eastern boundary of the city limits of Toronto.

As to the height of the wall, 144 cubits (see Revelation 21: 17), this, reduced to English measurements, gives us 88 yards or 264 feet as the height of the wall (the scriptural cubit being 22 inches). Some further idea of this immense height may be gathered from the fact that the monument on Fish Street Hill, London, England, (erected to commemorate the burning of London by emissaries of the pope of Rome, in the year 1666,) is only 202 feet high, while the height of the golden cross on Saint Paul's Cathedral is 365 feet. Thus your many readers can see that "Zion's walls, are to be 60 feet higher than the monument of London.

"All built of jasper, Framed with workmanship divine,"

One further and even more significant fact remains to be alluded to, and that is in proof of how even the science of geography as well as astronomy confirms this latter-day work: the map of the world shows that the Zion of Jerusalem in Palestine and the Zion of these latter days at Independence, Missouri, are both on precisely the same parallel of latitude, thirty-two and one half degrees north latitude. The result of this singular coincidence is that when the "former and the hinder sea," or the North and South Atlantic, shall have passed away, and the "land shall be married, the twin cities of Zion will come close together and be one nation or one country in the Lord's hand,"—like the two sticks of Joseph and Israel (or Judah) as mentioned in Isaiah 29 and in Ezekiel 37: 19.

I believe also that the election of Elder Clark Russell to the Quorum of Twelve is highly appreciated in this country of his birth and labors for the Master. I remain,

Yours in bonds,
F. R. TUBB.

WEST DERBY, Vermont, May 2, 1909.

Dear Herald: I am once more looking for admittance into the dear circle. Many have written to me and wished to brighten my life by correspondence and little tokens of cheer, and to those I beg leave to say that I would be grateful for any little token of love, such as bits of fancy work, saxony yarn to make booties, or large print pieces, as since last January I have been obliged to work when unable to even sit up. My husband was sent to the hospital for an operation for a dislocated kidney or a tumor, but was sent back for medical treatment, as his nerves were too bad to operate on.

I can not keep up much longer, as I am worn out. I suffer so much pain in my back and chest. Have at last sent for my chair. I wish to say to the dear sister in Idaho, I have written three times, and do not know why my letters do not reach her; and to a sister whose address I have lost, that canned goods would be a God-send, as we can not get much cooking done. Above all, please pray for me that we may receive our health, and if an elder should call at our town, we should be glad to see him.

Your sister in Christ,
LEROY COWLES.

Prophets.

This subject concerning prophets; the general supposition is they ceased when the apostles were put to death. Where the true church exists there will be apostles in the church, and prophets also. The prophets spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, see Exodus 15: 20. There are many that work for the Lord, but in their own way. There must be a called minister in the living church of God. The societies of the latter-day gospel have departed from what the prophets taught in their day and time. They taught as they were ordered by the Spirit of God. The Spirit never makes any mistakes, but speaks the truth in all lands.

We will turn to the Bible and see what it says about this subject: 1 Timothy 4: 14; 2 Peter 1: 19, 20, 21. The church must have some prophets to look after the vineyard; to instruct the servants in his church here on the earth. What would we know in these last days about the past or future without seers in the church. Are they essential to the salvation of men? Yes, sir, they have their place in the body which is the church of Christ. Revelation 1: 3; 11: 6; 19: 10; Isaiah 30: 10; Joel 2: 28; Amos 2: 12. There is too much red tape in the religious systems of to-day. My brother, if there is no revelation, how can you have the Spirit of God? It must be given you. God gives the Holy Ghost to those who are worthy. This work is divine, that is the reason it is pure. The love of God finds its way into houses that have been washed and made clean, so the prophets did their work under the law; the first covenant that was given to Israel. The law must be kept if the church does prosper and shine as a city set on a hill, that can not be hid. Prophets are subject to like passions as we are, in the world and among wicked people composed of men and women who were their enemies and put them to death, and like Paul, thought they were doing God service to get those prophets out of the vineyard of the Lord.

ELDER P. A. FLINN.

Extracts from Letters.

D. A. Hutchings writes from Little Sioux, Iowa: "I was at the first half of conference and it was grand. Since coming home I baptized nine at Mondamin and there are still more to follow. The work there is moving along finely and the Lord is blessing them with his Spirit and the gifts are still with them. I am still trying to do all I can for this glorious work."

L. H. Carter, Esterhazy, Saskatchewan: "We are holding a small Sunday-school here, though not organized. Two were added to our number a few weeks ago by baptism, making us four members and our little families. Bro. J. L. Mortimer was here lately and did good work. We meet also on Friday night and have a little prayer-meeting and feel that God is blessing us in our humble efforts. We enjoy both the HERALD and Ensign each week and would not like to be without them."

"What a man intends to be is what he really is. He may, indeed, realize that he ought not to be that, but to be something better. He may, perhaps, wish, at times, to rise above his chosen course, but this amounts to little while he really, in his heart of hearts, intends to pursue the other path. God knows what we intend to be, and he judges us accordingly. This is the idea of the inspired declaration: "As he thinketh within himself [as a man purposeth in his inner self] so is he." To make a success in life we must have high ideals and live up to them. This is the only way."

There is a deep lesson in the circumstance that James should, meekly and silently, in utter self-renouncement, with no visible consolation, with no elaborate eulogy, and no pomp of circumstance, with not even a recorded burial, perish first of the faithful few who had forsaken all to follow Christ, and so be the first to fulfill the warning prophecy that he should drink of his bitter cup, and be baptized with his fiery baptism. —Farrar.

Moved and carried that when this conference adjourns it does so to meet at Clearwater in August, date to be fixed by the president. Saturday evening Bro. Gamet was the speaker, assisted by J. H. Jackson; Sunday at 11 a. m., Bro. Kester, assisted by Bro. Gamet; prayer-service at 2.30, Bro. Gamet in charge. Preaching at 7.30 by Bro. Gamet, assisted by J. H. Jackson. The sessions were characterized by a marked degree of the Spirit and were a source of much spiritual strength and encouragement to those present. W. E. Kester, secretary.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.—Annual conference was held in Longsight, Manchester, April 10, 11, and 12. The opening business-session was held in the East Manchester Branch meeting-room, Mundy Street, Longsight, on Saturday, April 11, at 6 p. m. President H. Greenwood was in charge. Apostle J. W. Rushton, president of the British Isles Mission, was given charge of all sessions of conference. Deacons of East Manchester were appointed deacons; Elder J. W. Green chorister; and Sr. Green organist. Delegates' credentials were read from South, North, Northeast, East Manchester, Warrington, and Stockport branches. Joseph Dewsnup, George Towers, and W. H. Greenwood were a committee on credentials. Bro. Maloney was made assistant secretary pro tem. Minutes of the January conference read, corrected, and passed. A petition that the Northeast Manchester Branch reconsider the withholding of the license of Deacon John Schofield was read, and the matter was deferred till Monday. Report of the president was read. (He also reported the death of Bro. Morgan Price of Farnworth Branch, whose funeral would take place on Monday, the 12th, which would necessitate his absence from conference for a few hours to preside at the interment.) Resolved that Bro. Sykes, president of the Wortley Branch, Leeds, and all other visiting brethren who may arrive, have voice and vote. Elders reporting: Apostle J. W. Rushton; W. H. Greenwood, seventy; Elders Thomas Brien, James Spargo, William Spargo, W. R. Armstrong, Joseph Dewsnup, S. F. Mathers, Joseph Harper, David Hope, S. W. Leggott, John Schofield, William Worth, John Ioden, F. I. Elliot, George Towers, E. Niscow, I. W. Taylor, F. Bruton, John Bailey, N. I. Weate, J. W. Green; Priests H. L. Griffiths, William Maddock, Thomas Adams, Ed Maloney. Patriarch James Baty, Sr., reported verbally. Branch reports were read from South, North, Northeast, East Manchester, South Salford, Farnworth, Warrington, Stockport, and Eccles. Committee on credentials presented report, but it was referred back for correction. Secretary's report read. This showed a gain of 17 by baptism, 5 by letter; loss, by letter 9, by death 7; a net gain of 6. Membership December, 1907, 459; membership December, 1908, 465. One point in secretary's report was objected to and discussed. The Sunday services were held in the Longsight Public Hall. All three services were highly spiritual. The morning speaker was W. H. Greenwood, of the Seventy. In the evening Apostle J. W. Rushton discoursed ably on the atonement. The afternoon testimony-meeting was conducted by James Baty, Sr., F. Brien, and G. W. Leggott. Joseph Dewsnup occupied a small portion of the time telling of his appointment to the Bishop's agency for this district and instructing the Saints along financial lines. Business was resumed at 9.30 Monday morning in the East Manchester Branch meeting-room, J. W. Rushton in charge. The corrected report of committee on credentials was read, accepted, and committee discharged. Bro. Mathers presented Sunday-school report. Of the seven Sunday-schools reporting there were 295 scholars on the books at the end of 1907, 339 at the end of 1908, net gain 44. There has been an average attendance of 265, or 80 per cent. The report spoke well of the efforts and the results in almost all the schools.

Resolved that a committee be formed by a delegate from each Sunday-school along with the district superintendent of Sunday-schools to make arrangements for a Sunday-school procession to be held in August in connection with the annual mission conference.

The petition from the Northeast Manchester Branch was read. (This is a case where the brother has been silenced because of his inability to overcome the habit of smoking, which is contrary to district rules. He is a model Saint in every regard, a faithful old brother, but being late in life when he joined the latter-day work, old habits are not easily lost.) But seeing the district rules forbade one of the ministry to smoke it was resolved that the petition of the Northeast Manchester Branch be referred back, it not being in harmony with the district rules. At 2 p. m., business was resumed. Report of Elder H. Chandler read.

Resolved that the secretary's report be re-read and discussed. (The matter objected to was the altering of the statistical report of the Northeast Manchester Branch. The 1907 report of that branch had shown two teachers, two deacons; the 1908 report showed one teacher, one deacon, yet no removals or deaths or expulsions to account for the decrease. Up to the present it has been the understanding that men be reported in their official capacity whether they are acting or not. So, following this precedent the secretary altered the said report, and had to be corrected, for Bro. J. W. Rushton showed that understanding to be wrong and pointed to an old conference resolution which states that inactive ministry shall be reported as lay members.) So it was resolved that this conference do not indorse the action of the secretary in altering the statistical report of the Northeast Manchester Branch. Financial secretary's report here called for. Bro. Weate having been called away on family business and failing to be back in time as he had expected, no report was in the hands of the secretary. Auditors' report was read and accepted. Resolved that we regret the absence of our district financial secretary in not providing a balance sheet and report as asked for in district rules and that a committee be appointed to draw up and present a balance sheet to this conference. Resolved that letters of condolence be drawn up and forwarded to the relatives of our late Bro. Joseph Bennett. A notice of motion was here presented signed by T. Brien and Joseph Schofield to the effect that we consider the amending of rule No. 2 of the district rules. Election of officers: High priest H. Greenwood was reelected president, Elder Thomas Brien vice-president, Elder W. Worth secretary, Priest H. Preston assistant secretary.

The catering for the conference (Monday's session) was taken over by Sr. Ada Green, who provided an excellent cold lunch and tea free of cost to the district, for which kindness one and all of the brethren were grateful, and showed their appreciation by their heartiness in partaking of the bounty and a resolution at close of conference. Business resumed at 6 p. m. The recommendation of Elder W. R. Armstrong, president of the East Manchester Branch, to be elected as vice-president of district instead of J. W. Taylor, who has left us to take up his residence in Birmingham, was unanimously approved. Report of committee for preparing balance sheet and reports from financial secretary's accounts received and approved. N. I. Weate was reelected financial secretary; and S. F. Mather was chosen superintendent of Sunday-schools. Election of an assistant superintendent was deferred until the October conference. Resolved that W. R. Armstrong be reelected auditor of district for the ensuing two years, and Bro. Waugh for one year.

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup was asked to present to the conference the particulars of his appointment to the Bishop's agency. He read his letter of appointment after which it was resolved that we approve of the appointment of our Bro. Joseph Dewsnup as the Bishop's agent for this district.

Resolved that the best thanks of conference be awarded to Sr. Green for the generous way she has catered to our requirements.

Resolved that best thanks be awarded to all workers at conference, also to the East Manchester Branch for the use of this room for business-sessions of conference.

Recommendation of ordination, deferred from an earlier stage of conference was taken up and discussed. Bro. Greenwood presented priests James Schofield and James Baty, Jr., for ordination to the office of elder. Bro. Leggott, president of the branch with which James Schofield was connected, opposed the recommendation, not because the brother was in any way unworthy of the call, for he spoke in highest terms of labors of the brother in conjunction with the branch priest; but he contended that the call ought to have come through him, and as he had received no instruction personally, he would oppose the recommendation. Therefore it was resolved that the recommendation of Priest James Schofield lie on the table until October conference.

The name of James Baty, Jr., was next considered. Resolved the recommendation of Priest James Baty be acceded to.

Resolved that the formulation of the rota plan be left in the hands of the district presidency.

Resolved that we sustain Bro. I. Ioden and Sr. A. Green as chorister and organist for conferences of Manchester District respectively.

Resolved that we sustain the general, district, and local officers of the church.

Bro. Joseph Dewsnup was then allowed a short time to present the financial aspect of the work.

Closed by prayer by J. W. Rushton. All the services were very well attended and a good spiritual time pervaded the meetings. W. Worth, secretary.

The Presidency.

APPOINTMENT OF DISTRICT PRESIDENT.

To the Saints of the Spring River District: By mutual agreement between the First Presidency and the ministers in charge of that field, Bro. Evan A. Davis has been asked to take the presidency of the Spring River District vice Andrew V. Closson, who has been assigned to the Spokane District. We commend Bro. Davis to the Saints of the Spring River District.

To the Saints of Utah District: Owing to change of field and change of work, Elder J. F. Curtis has been compelled to resign as president of the Utah District, his resignation having been handed to the First Presidency and accepted. This is to notify the Saints of the Utah District that Elder T. W. Chatburn has been temporarily appointed president of the Utah District, vice Bro. J. F. Curtis, resigned. This appointment will hold good until the convening of the next conference of the Utah District, when the district will have a chance to elect Bro. Curtis' successor.

This action is had by concurrence with the minister in charge of Utah. We commend Bro. Chatburn to the Saints of the Utah District.

APPOINTMENT OF PASTOR.

To Whom it May Concern: This is to notify those who may be concerned therein that the First Presidency and Independence Stake Presidency have asked Elder W. E. LaRue to continue in charge of the work at Central Church. We commend him to the Saints of Central Kansas City Church and Kansas City, and feel sure that he will have the hearty support of those interested in the work at Central Kansas City Church.

FRED'K M. SMITH,
Secretary of the Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 1, 1909.

Bishop's Agents' Notices.

To the Faithful Saints of the Des Moines District; Greeting: The conference of 1909 is past, and there is before us another year in which we are called to labor. Shall we begin at once? If not, why not? Surely we have no time to waste. What can I do? comes from all quarters. Well, let me tell you what to do: First examine yourself and see if you think you have done all you could in the year that is past, and if you are not able to see that you have done very much, resolve that this year shall produce a better record. Second, we are out of money and it is necessary that some one respond promptly. Have you made any sacrifice for the spread of the gospel? Ask yourself the question, Am I interested in the salvation of my fellow men, and am I willing to sacrifice something that the messengers may go forth? Every year brings its reduction of the missionary force, and this year two hundred and sixty-three men were sent out by conference appointment to carry the "angel's message" to the nations of the earth. As the Prophet Nehemiah asked Israel of old, so we ask modern Israel, "Why is the house of God forsaken?" And I perceive (as did he of old) that the portion of the Levites (priesthood) had not been given them. For the Levites and the Singers, that did the work (gospel work) were fled every one to his field. Gone to tilling the soil that they might support their families. And how long, at the present rate, until all field laborers will be at work and the house of God forsaken? The Lord spoke through his prophet then and the people heard and "All Judah brought the tithe of the corn, and the new wine and the oil unto the treasuries." The prophet has given the word of the Lord to us: will we respond as faithfully as did Israel of old? We ought to have three hundred Saints in the Des Moines District that have hitherto felt unable or for other reasons have failed to support the work and are not found on the tithing record, who will pledge themselves to contribute one dollar each month of this year to help in this great work. Saints, think, and think seriously. Where and when will we hold the reunion, and who will contribute ahead so that we may not be cramped, and may know how well to provide for your pleasure? Who wants the tent first, and who will be first to send in a contribution to start the tent-work? You can not all have it at once. Do not forget that. "Oh, my," say some; "money for everything!" Yes, it takes money. We are your servants, and the better we are equipped the better service you will secure, and I hope we have your confidence that you will not be afraid to trust us with the equipage and feel that we are not asking other than that which is necessary, and will use it with discretion and wisdom. Send all moneys to me by bank draft at Lamoni, Iowa. Address reunion matters to myself as above. I am your servant, LAMONI, Iowa, May 1, 1909.

W. CHRISTY.

To the Saints of Southern Nebraska; Greeting: Once again I find it necessary to address you through the medium of the HERALD. Receipts are coming in very slowly, and from but few of those that seemingly are best able to contribute.

We have received but twenty-four contributions this year. Fifteen of these are credited to sisters, six to brethren, and three to husbands and wives together.

Strange as it may appear, but one priesthood-bearing member has made a contribution this year.

It can not be said that they who have failed to contribute are unable to do so, or that they have not been solicited to do so, for by voice and pen I have sought to have all contribute according as God has prospered them.

Last year the sisters contributed much more liberally than did the brethren. While it is commendable on the part of the sisters to be zealously engaged in a good cause, it does not seem right that the brethren should neglect their part of this duty and continue to let the burden of caring for the financial work of the district rest heavily upon those who seemingly are least able to bear it.

What is the matter with the priesthood-bearing members of the district that but one has contributed by way of tithe or offering this year? Is the Lord withholding temporal blessings from them, or are they negligent, or have they concluded that they have no responsibility in the matter? The invitation of God to his people anciently was, "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

If the priesthood fail to honor God by keeping the law, how can we expect the members not of the priesthood to honor it?

If every officer in the church were living in harmony with the temporal law there would be but little, if any, difficulty in teaching it to the entire membership, but so long as the teachers of the law are careless in regard to their own conduct concerning it, we must not expect too much of others. It is time there was an awakening in this field. We are now entering upon a new conference year, and if we hope to be successful we can not afford to be negligent in any particular, for the old adage is still of force: "No chain is stronger than its weakest link." Let us, therefore, see that every link is sound.

Let every one in this district examine himself and find if he is doing his duty in this matter, and when a fair examination has been made, then let him act honorably between God and himself.

If the Lord has blessed us with the material things of this life let us not withhold his portion. If we have received but little, but little will be required of us; but if we have received much let us contribute accordingly.

Remember, if we have any property interests we are stewards of that which we hold. If our holdings are increasing let us not forget the advice of the preacher: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase."

As the agent of the Bishop I earnestly invite your attention to this matter and trust that a ready response will be made immediately as we are in pressing need of assistance on this line, and as district president and missionary in this field I ask your hearty coöperation on all lines pertaining to church work.

Let me hear from all parts of the field. Tell me what you need and in what way I can be of service to you. Send all contributions, and all communications, addressed to me at Box 41, Wilber, Nebraska.

Your brother in Christ,
C. H. PORTER.
May 5, 1909.

Appointments.

To All Whom it May Concern: By the concurrence of the First Presidency, the following appointments are made: Amos M. Chase, of Alva, Oklahoma, president of the Western Oklahoma District; Edgar H. Smith (missionary to Oklahoma), president of the Central Oklahoma District; John S. White, of Haileyville, Oklahoma, president of Eastern Oklahoma District; E. A. Davis, of Pittsburg, Kansas, president of Spring River District.

Let these brethren feel at liberty to take up the work assigned them, and prosecute their work with faithfulness and diligence—approving themselves to the membership of their respective districts as workers, and we trust all will receive them in kindness, and assist to make their appointments a success, since all four districts were without presidents by reason of the General Conference forming new districts, and the appointing powers sending some of the district presidents to other fields. These brethren who are appointed to preside will please confer with the presidents of their respective branches, and the submissionaries in charge, and call or appoint a first conference at such time and place as will be most convenient to all concerned. Send at once to the Herald Publishing House for blanks for presidents of branches, and districts, and see that these reports get into our hands early in July, October, January, and March.

We subscribe ourselves,
Your brethren and colaborers in Christ,
I. N. WHITE,
J. F. CURTIS,

Ministers in General Charge of Mission No. 2.
INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 3, 1909.

Change of Appointment.

To Whom it May Concern: By agreement between the ministers in charge of Missions Nos. 1 and 5, and concurred in by the First Presidency, the following changes in appointment have been made, to fill vacancies made since the conference adjourned: Fred B. Farr, from Eastern Iowa District to California. L. E. Hills from Montana to Eastern Iowa District, and M. H. Cook from Des Moines District to Portland District, Oregon.

J. W. WIGHT,
Minister in charge of Mission No. 1.
FREDERICK A. SMITH,
Minister in charge of Mission No. 5.
W. H. KELLEY,
Minister in charge of Mission No. 1.

JOSEPH SMITH,
President of the Church.
LAMONI, Iowa, April 30, 1909.

Pastoral.

To the Church in the Rocky Mountain Mission, comprising Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and the Republic of Mexico: Invigorated as a result of the effects of the late General Conference we start labors for the current year.

The evidence that a supervising wisdom is directing the affairs of what we endearingly call the "latter-day work" is clearly manifest. As lines are drawn thereby for us to follow, may we be valiant and loyal to the trust confided in us.

The following general arrangements may be complied with: Utah, John Davis to continue, as nearly as feasible, the work of the last year; T. W. Chatburn will be assigned to Salt Lake City principally. The resignation of J. F. Curtis as district president, caused by a change of field and labor, leaves the presidency of that district vacant. By concurrence with the First Presidency we appoint Bro. Chatburn to act in charge of the district until the convening of the district conference. L. G. Holloway will succeed to the work of Bro. Curtis at Provo and vicinity. H. N. Hansen is to take charge of the work in Utah. Reports may be sent to him. In Colorado E. F. Shupe as president of the district will continue as usual. When opportunity affords may associate with F. A. Russell and open their tent-work as heretofore. Brn. S. M. Reiste and J. H. Petre can labor together on the Western Slope, making the region around Delta the base of operation. C. Scott can continue his work as begun last year in Eastern Colorado. S. W. Simmons to labor in New Mexico for present. W. S. Pender, as per previous agreement, to attend to affairs in and around Phoenix, Arizona. J. W. Peterson will locate at Bisbee for that part of Arizona. Bishop Bullard has been appointed to Colorado and will locate headquarters later.

Sincerely and hopefully yours,
CUSTER CITY, Oklahoma, May 1, 1909. F. M. SHEEHY.

Notice.

The address and present location of the following members of the First Kansas City, Missouri, Branch is desired. Many of these members have not been heard from for a long time past and it is desired to obtain information concerning them from the parties themselves or from any who may be acquainted with them. Reunion Notices.

A reunion will be held at Clitherall, Minnesota, commencing June 19, 1909, to last over two Sundays. It is earnestly hoped that as many of the Saints as possible will attend and help make the reunion a success. All missionaries appointed to labor in this mission are cordially invited to be at the reunion. W. W. Gould, secretary committee.

Marriages.

STOFF—RUMEL.—At the residence of the bride's parents, Bro. and Sr. Nicholas M. Rumel, 3064 Miami Street, Omaha, Nebraska, Bro. William E. Stoff to Sr. Mabel L. Rumel, April 21, 1909, at 8.30 p. m., in the presence of about fifty relatives and friends, Elder F. R. Schafer officiating. These young people are well and favorably known, which was attested by the giving of numerous gifts and hearty good wishes.

Notices.

Branch clerks and presidents will please observe the dates June 12 and 13 for the Nauvoo District conference and see that all reports are sent to the secretary ten days previous to the convening of conference. The meeting place will be Montrose and a large attendance is desired as it is the last session preceding the Bluff Park reunion to be held July 30 to August 8 inclusive, and some action concerning this will likely be called for. M. H. Seigfried, secretary, Nauvoo, Illinois.

Died.

KIM.—Sylvia M., after years of patient suffering passed from earthly life April 10, 1909, at Santa Ana, California. She was in her eighty-third year and leaves four children, a number of grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. Sr. Kim was a woman of more than ordinary intelligence and a stern Christian. She was married to a Mr. Brooks in Texas, when quite young. They moved to Utah in 1858, but soon returned east, where he died, leaving her with a family of children. Later she removed to California, where she was baptized into the Reorganization by Elder J. C. Clapp, and was afterward married to Mr. Kim, who also preceded her to the other shore.

COOPER.—Callie Edith, the four-months-old daughter of Bro. and Sr. B. F. Cooper, of Fort Madison. She was apparently quite well when placed in bed. The parents got up in the morning, ate breakfast, and while Sr. Cooper was about her work she heard a voice say, "Go and see the baby." She went in and took it up and it was dead. Funeral from the house April 12, Elder F. M. McDonald, of Montrose, in charge.

MILLER.—Ebenezer Miller died March 3, 1909. He was born at Fifeshire, Dumfriesline, Scotland, January 8, 1838. In 1865 he and wife united with the Utah church, and the following year emigrated to Utah, traveling eleven hundred miles over the plains. Their eyes were opened to conditions there and they finally escaped in 1874, returning to England. In 1885 he and wife united with the Reorganization. Bro. Miller had been in declining health for some years. During the last night of his life he asked his companion to sing some of the loved hymns. He held her by the hand and said: "We started our married life together and have traveled over many obstacles. Let us be alone and finish our journey together." The spirit took its departure as he still held her hand. He leaves a widow, five children, and fifteen grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by Elder U. W. Greene.

SPENCE.—Elizabeth, born April 7, 1829, at Noble County, Ohio; died April 24, 1909, aged 80 years and 17 days. She married Robert C. Crooks, in April, 1852; moved to Iowa in 1873, and made their permanent home in Lucas County. This union was blessed with eight children, all living. The father died May 3, 1908. There remain beside the children, two sisters, three brothers, thirty-four grandchildren, twenty-five great-grandchildren, other relatives, and a host of friends. In early life she was a member of the Baptist Church. On June 14, 1896, she joined the Reorganized Church, remaining a firm child of our Lord until called from the trials and cares of this life. Funeral-services were held near Lacona, Iowa, April 27, 1909, at the Graceland Church, sermon by Elder D. C. White; interment at Graceland Cemetery.

DOBSON.—Sarah K. B., was born August 24, 1823, near Bowling Green, Kentucky, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ellen Horr, Deloit, Iowa, April 27, 1909, with whom she has made her home for the past twelve years. She was married to Thomas Dobson October 29, 1843, who preceded her thirty years ago. To them were born ten children, five daughters of whom survive. She was baptized May, 1862, by Elder John A. McIntosh. In her patriarchal blessing she was told, "Thy posterity shall be very numerous and they shall rise up and call thee blessed." At her death the posterity numbered ten children, fifty-four grandchildren, eighty-eight great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. Funeral-sermon was preached by Elder Charles Derry, of Woodbine, Iowa.

HAWLEY.—Elder John Hawley was born in Hancock County, Illinois, March 4, 1826, and died at Lamoni, Iowa, April 17, 1909, at the home of his son Eber. He had gone there to attend General Conference and contracted pneumonia, from which he died. He was baptized in 1868. He was married to Miss Sylvia Johnson October 22, 1848. To this union were born twelve children, four of whom have preceded him to the great beyond. He has been in active missionary work for more than fifty years, and during his declining years has been an active worker in the branch. He leaves thirty grandchildren, one great-grandchild, his aged wife, and hosts of friends. Funeral-services at Christian Church, Ravenwood, Missouri, April 20, in charge of E. S. Fannon. Burial in Oak Lawn Cemetery.

Rest in peace, thou gentle spirit,
Throned above,—
Souls like thine with God inherit
Life and love.

STEFFE.—Bro. Frank Steffe was born October 11, 1839, in Mertzhausen Baden, Germany. Died in St. Joseph, Missouri, April 9, 1909. He came to America in 1866; was married to Mrs. Rosina C. Beiler, June 10, 1867. Was baptized in Boston, Massachusetts, by Elder G. C. Smith, April 11, 1875; ordained an elder by W. H. Kelley and John H. Lake in May, 1894. He lived at Kirtland, Ohio, for several years, and was highly respected. Came to the home of his step-daughter, Sr. C. H. Isleib, of St. Joseph, Missouri, in company with his wife in 1908. Was laid to rest in Ashland Cemetery. Services in charge of William Lewis, C. Archibald, aided by H. D. Ennis, at the Brick Church.

NESSER.—George Nesser, at his home in St. Joseph, Missouri, April 27, 1909, of typhoid-pneumonia after an illness of more than two weeks. Born July 28, 1880, in DeKalb County, Missouri; married to Josephine Chylinski, November 17, 1901. To this union were born three children, two boys and one girl, who, with his companion, survive; besides these there remain of his father's house, mother, five brothers, and three sisters. He was baptized into the church by Elder William Lewis, November 26, 1906. He enjoyed the love, confidence, and respect of all who knew him; he was faithful to his church covenant to the end, having faith in the ordinance which God has established in his church for his people, calling many times during his sickness for the elders to pray for and anoint him in the name of the Lord, in which he received much comfort and consolation. Funeral-sermon by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by Elder William Lewis, at the home, April 29, 2.30 p. m.

LONGFELLOW.—Richard Longfellow, April 24, 1909, from blood-poisoning superinduced by a fractured limb in a runaway accident. He was the husband of Sr. Ida Longfellow, nee Whitely, who united with the church a little less than two years ago, and who, with four children, ages from about six to fourteen, remain to mourn the loss of a good and kind husband and father. While the deceased made no profession of religion, he lived a good, moral life, stood well in the estimation of his associates and fellow craftsmen, kind and affable in his nature, respected and honored as a good citizen; he was friendly to the church and often attended services. Two days before his departure, he asked the writer to anoint and pray for him and was heard repeating the Lord's prayer before the end came. Surely his soul was crying out for God. Funeral-sermon by V. M. Goodrich, assisted by Roy Sly, from the home at 2.30 p. m., April 26.

Prohibition Year Book Out.

American Prohibition Year Book for 1909: This book is of unusual breadth in its sources of information. It is all new. Its statistics are recent and valuable for reference. While its numerous departments give a quite complete view of this broad subject, our space permits only a few references, almost at random. It shows how the people spend over two billions of dollars annually for alcoholic drinks. It vigorously meets the attack upon the temperance instruction law. It treats the three notable articles by Doctor William in McClure's Magazine. Liquor revenues in the states are shown to be about five per cent. Judge Blair's strong showing of liquor conditions in Ohio is given. Farmers and workingmen, manufacturers and merchants are all advised of liquor's injuries to them. The liquor interests and their record are vividly shown. The dispensary, municipal ownership, local option, "squatter sovereignty," "saloon substitutes," the "saloon's social functions" are each carefully treated. An exhaustive showing of legal decisions occupies thirteen valuable pages. National aspects include interstate nullification, canteen, child races, and "comity." The book treats the problem of "government revenue" with vigor. Introducing all this are thirty-four pages of latest scientific facts on abstinence. The work is made doubly helpful by a very complete index.

This book which is in its tenth year has a wide sale throughout the world and is by many considered the highest authority on this subject in America. Ministers, lecturers, temperance workers, Sunday-school teachers, Young People's Societies, Y. M. C. A., W. C. T. U., workingmen and legislators will be interested in this compact and careful treatment of the latest phases of the temperance movement.

In the year 1896, a young man from Pittsburg roamed over the Rocky Mountains in company with an expedition which had been sent out by the Government. Forest investigation was the task set for the expedition. This work was accomplished and the young man from Pittsburg, Walter McClintock by name, returned home.

His thoughts, however, kept recurring to all that he had seen and experienced during the western expedition. He had been granted the freedom of the wigwams of the Blackfeet, he had made long tours on horseback through the prairies with his red companions, and hunted with them on the mountain tops, and that was all quite different, much freer and nobler than the sport as it is cultivated in the cities. Summer came and the young man from Pittsburg was again in his cowboy clothes, and living with the Blackfeet Indians, this time independent of any expedition and Government commission. And the more he learned of the freedom of the life, the more it appealed to him.

He went back to the city—and then returned to the prairie. This was his second "Montana year" and it happened that a chief called "Mad Wolf" rode toward him and said, "The snow has melted twice since you came to us; I have seen you and your work, and you please me. The Great Chief of the Sun overhead has not granted me a son. My hair will grow white with the snow of many winters. I shall die and have no son who will care for my people. You are young and will become a chief among the white men and you can look after the people of my tribe. I wish you to become my son." And so it happened that Mr. McClintock of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, became the adopted son of the chief, "Mad Wolf," among the Blackfeet Indians; far, far away from the noise of the city and from all culture—there where the prairie stretches out like a sea at the foot of a wild beauty of the primeval mountains.

For ten years McClintock made his home among the Algonquin tribe. He grew accustomed to the customs and thoughts of the Indians and to-day is of all men living best equipped to tell of their manners and customs. He has of recent years been telling his experiences mainly before limited and expert audiences, but has consented next August to lecture on the Public Program at Chautauqua, New York.

Many people are so confused by the flotsam and jetsam on the surface of the great political and economic movement which now absorbs the interest of the country that they fail to discern its fundamental and intensely ethical spirit. When the incidents and accidents, the foam and froth, the invective of the demagogue and the anathemas of those who are defending what they believe to be their private interests, are put out of the way, it grows more clear every month that we are in the heart of a great moral movement as significant as any that has taken place in the history of the country. This movement has not come in a day. It is not a mere revolt against the oppressive economic conditions, nor is it simply an insurrection against political bosses and robbery. It is a quickening of the conscience of the people, and an attempt, sometimes instinctive, often blind, but with a great wisdom at the bottom of it, to bring the business and social life of the country into harmony with moral ideals. The churches have had much to do with this movement, but not nearly as much as they ought to have had. They have not led it. At the first glance it appears to have grown up very largely outside their walls. Many of its most ardent leaders, who are filled with ethical enthusiasm, are, if not unfriendly, at least indifferent to organized religion. The churches are now in the position of seeing a great moral tide rising around them which they can not claim to have set in motion, and of which they certainly have not the definite leadership.—The Outlook.

The Pope's View of Women.

A vague report came from Rome on April 21 to the effect that the pope, addressing a delegation representing the Union of Italian Catholic Ladies, had uttered a pronouncement against equal suffrage upon the ground that woman was designed by the Creator to be the inferior of man. The precise words of the declaration were not given, but so much interest was manifested that on April 24 the following statement was obtained by representatives of the press from the Vatican:

"ROME, April 24.—The following is exactly what His Holiness Pius X said on Wednesday, April 21, to a delegation of the Union of Italian Catholic Ladies:

"After creating man, God created woman and determined her mission, namely, that of being a man's companion, helpmeet, and consolation.

"It is a mistake, therefore, to maintain that woman's rights are the same as man's.

"Women in war or parliament are outside their proper sphere, and their position there would be the desperation and ruin of society. Woman, created as man's companion, must so remain—under the power of love and affection, but always under his power.

"How mistaken, therefore, is that misguided femism which seeks to correct God's work. It is like a mechanic trying to correct the signs and movements of the universe. Scripture, and especially the three epistles of Saint Paul, emphasize woman's dependence on man, her love and assistance, but not her slavery to him.

"Woman's duties, however, are not confined within the household's walls. She has a great social mission; a place in every charitable cause; work to perform on behalf of the sick, the suffering, and the criminal; the protection of women and children. In this great and common action women should unite and should strive to secure the means necessary to exercise the apostolic injunction of social charity."—Harper's Weekly.

Any utterance by the head of the Catholic Church receives, in the nature of things, a maximum of publicity, and the adherents of the church of Rome, as a general thing, attach a maximum of importance to those utterances. His holiness has recently contributed to the literature of the equal suffrage movement several declarations which are notable in many respects. The first draft of these statements placed the pope in a rather unfavorable light on the question of the relative superiority of men and women. He was made to say that woman was obviously foreordained and predestined man's inferior; but the later and fuller reports considerably modified these manifestly unjust strictures. The self-evident meaning of the views expressed is that woman goes outside her sphere when she indulges in the struggle for political powers.

There is nothing specially new in this view, but Pope Pius adds some curiously anachronistic quotations from the Bible to govern the status of modern women. Ultraconservative views are to be expected from the head of the Catholic Church, and yet there will be few, even among the English-speaking members of the church, who will accept Saint Paul as the arbiter of the position to be occupied by the women of a time 1,900 years later than Saint Paul and in countries whose viewpoint is so far from being that of oriental lands even of to-day. The up-to-date thought of the Twentieth Century insists that the statute of limitations has run against Saint Paul in the matter of the subjection of women.

Enlightened critics do not charge it to the Bible as a fault that its attitude toward woman is not consonant with that of the present day and in occidental countries. That would be unfair and illogical, but for all that the modern woman will not accept even Saint Paul as an infallible guide in the designation of women's status. The argument is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, as the lawyer says, based on hearsay, calling for a conclusion, the opinion of an individual who has not even qualified as an expert and subject to other exceptions hereby saved but not specifically enumerated.—Kansas City Journal.

Count Tolstoi on the Three Stages of Life.

I feel very clearly the beginning of a loss of interest not only in my own personality, my joys, and sorrows—all that happily lies far behind me and is long ago buried—but in the welfare of humanity and the happiness of the world.

No longer with my former keenness can I stand forward to defend such things as self-education, temperance, and thrift. I find that I have even become indifferent to human welfare, to the great question, will the Kingdom of Heaven come or not?

Having experienced this change and reflected its cause, I have come to the following conclusion: Every man lives through three stages of development, and at present I am in the last of these stages.

In the first stage a man lives only for himself, for his passions and impulses; for eating and drinking; for passing the time merrily; for hunting and for female society; for ambition and for vanity. His life is rich and full. So it was with me up to my thirtieth year, until my first gray hair. Other men part with this period of their lives much more rapidly.

When I had traversed this stage, I began to think of the welfare of others, of all men, of all humanity. This stage was marked by energetic work in founding elementary schools, although I should say that the wish to do that showed itself in me earlier. These interests vanished with the first years of my married life, and were reborn with terrible force when I first began to realize the vanity and emptiness of our earthly life. All my religious sentiments became concentrated on the happiness of others and on the accomplishment of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. This aspiration was as strong as, and filled my life as completely as my first aspiration to personal happiness.

But now I feel that this last aspiration is, in turn, dead. It has ceased to fill my life, it no longer carries me away; and I have been obliged to pose to myself the question: Was there really anything good in work directed toward helping men in their struggle against drunkenness and against superstition?

I felt that within me was being born yet a new phase of life, a new foundation of life, which must replace the others, because it contains an aspiration to the happiness of humanity, which, in turn contains an aspiration to personal happiness. This new foundation is work in the service of God, and the fulfillment of his commandments and his will. This is not the perfecting of one's self. No, it is something else. It is an aspiration to divine purity.

This new foundation of life consists in keeping clean the good intrusted to us by God, in the beginning of a new life, in the aspiration to a better, higher life, and in being ready always for this better life. This aspiration begins to seize me more and more strongly. I feel that it fills me entirely, supplants all other desires, and makes life as rich as it was in the former periods.—Collier's Weekly.

He who looks back upon the way in which God had led him, will, with wonder and adoring gratitude, see many divine purposes, which he did not understand before he reached the end.—Quesnel.

While the flax is only smoking He will not permit a blast to blow on it, lest the feeble life should be quenched, but when the fire has gained some head, He allows the blast to come, that it may be fanned into a greater flame.—Arnot.

SPECULATION CONCERNING THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

Considerable speculation has been had in the past as to the location of the Garden of Eden; and from what is developing lately it would appear that the days of this speculation are not ended.

It has not been a great while since a gentleman in the middle South was quite confident that he had found this celebrated garden approximately near one of the leading cities along the Mississippi Valley. He seemed to have great confidence that he had not only discovered the spot, but that researches would enable him to identify it. We have been anxiously waiting for him to make the discoveries which he felt confident he would make to finish his work of identification. We have so far waited in vain.

It has not been long, either, since an item of news was passing among the newspapers to the effect that the grave of Adam had been found, or at least the place where he had been interred had been found somewhere in middle Missouri on one of the high bluffs overlooking the Missouri River, but no marks of identification have yet been made public.

An item of news appeared in one of the Missouri papers a day or two since to the effect that one of the brethren in a sermon preached by him had located the Garden of Eden at Independence, Missouri. The report of this sermon states that the elder sought to prove by the Bible, the Book of Mormon, profane history, and his reasoning from what he held to be logical conclusions, that he could locate the place where the Garden of Eden was situated. The Kansas City Journal for May 11 takes the elder's effort up in a kind of playfully sarcastic way, making a few deductions from the elder's statement, such as that if the present city of Independence was the site of the Garden of Eden, then as a consequence Eve was a Missouri girl and Adam was made of Missouri soil. The editor suggests that if this were true it is not wonderful that Adam should have eaten the apple, as no local Missouri gentleman would refuse to take a rousing, red Missouri apple from the hand of one of Missouri's fair daughters.

The editor then strikes a happy vein and suggests that any one examining the landscape now along the Blue River, would not be apt to wonder much if the site for the Garden had been located eastward from Kansas City, as the wonderfully beautiful landscape and its possibilities strike the beholder as being almost beyond compare.

Laying all this aside, we are led to inquire, Of what benefit is it or can it be for the eldership to spend their time on themes of such a speculative character? Suppose it were possible for a man with a strong imagination and an ingenious mind to put some prophecies of the old scripture together with some historic statements found both in the Bible and in profane history, and, by ingeniously weaving quotations and citations together, make it appear that some specific locality was that in which the body of father Adam had been laid to rest, and that some other specific spot was the place where the Garden of Eden was located at the beginning of creation. Of what benefit would that be to help the elders preach life and salvation in Christ from the New Testament Scripture and present revelations?

We are aware that there has been some legendary teaching amounting to little more than mystical hints and references with regard to the location of the Garden of Eden and the place of Adam's burial. These have been but shadowy, and so far as we have seen the evidences, impossible of proof; and we believe it a matter not only unsafe for speculation but one calculated to bring the public mind into such condition as to produce an impression that the teaching of the eldership in regard to the gospel of peace and the principles of revelation in these last days are of the same mystical, mythical, and superstitious character as is the speculation as to the burial place of Adam and the location of the Garden of Eden. Of this character of speculative teaching has come the statement that has appeared in the press from time to time that the Saints were expecting a material temple made of beautiful stone and other material, all from foundation stone to an angel perched upon the highest tower, to spring into being in a single night; as baseless a fabric of dreams as ever passed the brain of man under any condition of hallucination.

Of the same nature are a multitude of the stories which have been told of Joseph Smith the Martyr and the expectations of those who followed him, including those of the Reorganized Church. We can not help thinking that some of these outrageous stories which have been told about the expectations of the people known as the Latter Day Saints have been suggested to the minds of those outside of the ranks of the believers by unwise pulpit speculations on the part of certain elders.

Brethren, would it not be wiser for us to confine ourselves to the legitimate teaching of the gospel as confided to us, and leave such questions as the grave of Adam and the location of the Garden of Eden to others outside the pale of the church; and not pander to the love of the marvelous by indulging in unfounded speculations, thus incurring ridicule of those whom we are trying to meet? We think so.

THE PASSING OF THE VETERANS.

Under the above heading in the HERALD, April 28, we noticed changes taking place in the personnel of the ministry, cited the attention of our readers to President Smith's statement that death would make serious inroads in our ranks during the year, and closed with the words, "We know not on whom the shadow of the sable wing may rest even now."

Since that writing Elder D. S. Crawley, of honored memory, has passed to his reward. Particulars of his death will appear in another column. And now comes word of the death of Elder A. E. Mortimer, of Canada. Concerning his departure Elder Daniel Macgregor writes:

Editors Herald: "Uncle Mort" is dead! In more conventional terms we might say that Elder A. E. Mortimer has passed away, but this does not so feelingly express the universal sorrow that will be felt upon learning of this calamity to Canada. Calamity, do we say? Ah, yes! for who now will feel for another's woe and hasten to express in deepest sympathy the great love which his great heart bore toward suffering humanity? Whether that suffering was of the physical, the mental, or the spiritual he was ever at the side of the sorrowing by the far-reaching power of his pen and the earnest pleading of his prayer.

Our brother departed this life Saturday, May 8, as the clock struck eleven. He was within two months of sixty-eight years of age, almost reaching the allotted space of threescore and ten. His ailment was acute inflammation of the kidneys, which developed into dropsy. His suffering was not severe, nor yet was it long, stricken down, as he was, only at the late General Conference. Reviving from the first attack he managed to reach home, and from then on weakened until the hour of his decease.

Elder Mortimer was a veteran in the cause, having for over twenty years ministered in the missionary ranks. Of his many excellent attributes it is unnecessary that we pen them on perishing paper. They are recorded already; they are engraven on the hearts of assisted humanity. No one has ever been ushered into the presence of that man of God but what has felt the influence of his chastity, the geniality of his soul, and the encouragement of his counsel. He was an adviser to the aged, and a companion to the child. Old or young, learned or otherwise, he was ever at home with that wonderful adaptability of manner by which he excited the admiration of the educated and enlisted the affection of the uninformed.

His was not a demonstrative, meteoric life, but rather of that patient, plodding kind. Never on the magnifying heights of a good time coming, and rarely in the valley of despond. He occupied the middle ground and whether sick or well there was sunshine in his soul. We shall miss him from the fire-side where he was always welcomed in all parts of this Dominion first, last, and all-time. We shall miss him from the branch, where, by his kindly counsel he ever strove to be the peace-maker. We shall miss him from the conferences where his wondrous storehouse of useful information was ever valuable in shedding light upon perplexing problems. Yes, and we shall miss him at the post-office from whence we received many a well-filled letter freighted and overflowing with loyalty and love. We shall miss him at—yes, God only knows where we shall not miss him.

His closing days were filled with calm and resignation. Death was not an unwelcome intruder. He prayed for it subject to the Lord's will, and several times during recent months he predicted his early departure. Of him it may be said, "He died in the harness." Up to within a few moments of his death he occupied himself dictating farewell messages to those he nevermore would reach by word of mouth.

With great difficulty he exerted himself to this task. Slowly and serenely he spoke his last lingering words, while the pens of his attendants wrote the exhortations of the dying man. From these words addressed to Saints in his field of labor I am permitted to excerpt the following:

"I charge them that inasmuch as eternal life is at stake with each one, I trust that they will not forget the lessons I so earnestly tried to inculcate within them while laboring in their midst."

"I send her and her husband a message of love, not of this world, but of the world to come. I have started off on my journey and expect to cross the river some little time before they do, but we'll all meet on that great day when the redeemed in Christ shall enjoy the fruition of their hopes; and through her I send a message to ——— Branch, asking them not to be too critical of each other's faults, but ever to show that sweet spirit of charity that is a broad mantle, and will cover all our faults."

"The physician in whose hands my case is supposed to be, has told me it is a hopeless one. That means that shortly I must stand with my Redeemer. The spirit of joy pervades my soul at the thought of this. The past years of my life have been wrought for this purpose."

"THE JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES."

To Whom it May Concern: In the controversies which arise between the eldership of the Reorganized Church and the polygamous church in Utah when the missionaries of their respective churches meet in dispute, we of the Reorganized Church are charged by these Utah elders with manufacturing quotations from the books published in the past to suit our notions and sustain our own contention.

One of the sources from which we of the Reorganized Church quote the saying of the leading authorities of the church of Utah, is a work entitled The Journal of Discourses, originally compiled and published by George D. Watt, an elder of the Utah church and a trained reporter, a man whom we personally knew in Nauvoo and before the exodus from there to the valley.

It has been stated that this Journal of Discourses was not an authoritative work and ought not to be quoted in the existing controversy. In order to show the readers of the HERALD and the eldership of both churches the authoritative character of this work, The Journal of Discourses, we print the following indorsement of the work, which, so far as we are concerned, puts the burden of repudiation upon the present authorities of the church of Utah, which repudiation has not yet been made, either by these leading authorities or by the church in conference assembled, so far as we have heard:

"The Journal of Discourses."—On the first of November was published the first number of a new semi-monthly periodical, entitled Journal of Discourses. This periodical will contain sermons delivered by President Brigham Young, and other of the apostles and elders, principally in Great Salt Lake City. Reported by Elder G. D. Watt. The matter runs from one number to another continuously, so that, at the end of the year, the volume can be bound, and appear as a complete work, undivided by headings and imprints. The Journal is similar in size and type to the Seer, consequently aged people will be able to read with facility. Price 2d.

As regards the merits of this work, we are at a loss to express ourselves. The Saints in the Eastern Hemisphere most ardently desire to be gathered to Zion, that they may have the privilege of being taught the things of the kingdom of God, by living apostles and prophets, who hold the keys of the eternal priesthood of the Son of God, with power to unfold, from time to time, the mysteries of Godliness—the deep and secret things which have been kept hid for many generations, yea since the foundation of the world. In the valleys of the mountains these principles are taught, and practiced as circumstances justify, for there the Saints are free to believe and act according to the dictates of their consciences—free to teach and free to learn the laws of the Most High, and the intelligence which constitutes the exaltation and glory of the celestial worlds. In Zion the words of life flow, without let or hindrance, from the mouths of the Lord's chosen ones—flow unfettered and unopposed by the narrow notions of an apostate world, and make glad the honest and the poor amongst men, who go up to the mountains of the Lord in obedience to the great commandment.

As many of the Saints can not appear in Zion as soon as they wish, how desirable it must be to them to have the teachings of the holy priesthood in type before them; to have the words of life brought to their very houses, so that such Saints can become acquainted with many of the things taught in Zion. We know that this privilege will be appreciated by the Saints, when they understand how great it is. And we would recommend each Saint to obtain a copy of this Journal, and to peruse it carefully, that they may come to a perfect understanding of principle, and be ready to develop the same as wisdom may dictate.—Editorial in Milennial Star, November 5, 1853.

LETTER FROM THE FIRST PRESIDENCY—"JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES."

DELIVERED BY BRIGHAM YOUNG, PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, THE TWELVE APOSTLES, AND OTHERS.

Reported by G. D. Watt.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, Utah Territory, June 1, 1853.

Elder Samuel W. Richards, and the Saints abroad.

Dear Brethren: It is well known to many of you, that Elder George D. Watt, by our counsel, spent much time in the midst of poverty and hardships to acquire the art of reporting in phonography, which he has faithfully and fully accomplished; and he has been reporting the public sermons, discourses, lectures, etc., delivered by the Presidency, the Twelve, and others in this city, for nearly two years, almost without fee or reward. Elder Watt now proposes to publish a Journal of these reports, in England, for the benefit of the Saints at large, and to obtain means to enable him to sustain his highly useful position of reporter. You will perceive at once that this will be a work of mutual benefit, and we cheerfully and warmly request your coöperation in the purchase and sale of the above-named Journal, and wish all the profits arising therefrom to be under the control of Elder Watt.

BRIGHAM YOUNG,
HEBER C. KIMBALL,
WILLIARD RICHARDS,

First Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

INTRODUCTION TO THE SAINTS.

Brethren and Sisters.—This "Journal of Discourses" will appear in a semi-monthly pamphlet of sixteen pages, upon good paper, and in a plain round type that aged persons can read with ease, and which will form a volume of nearly four hundred pages at the end of the year.

It affords me great pleasure in being able to put in your possession the words of the apostles and prophets, as they were spoken in the assemblies of the Saints in Zion, the value of which can not be estimated by man, not so much for any great display of worldly learning and eloquence, as for the purity of doctrine, simplicity of style, and extensive amount of theological truth which they develope.

Realizing the moral and intellectual benefit the Saints at home derive from them, I have earnestly desired the time when you also would be enriched by the same incalculable treasure.

To those who are unacquainted with the Doctrines of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who are mantled in the darkness of ages, whose minds are sunk in the almost impenetrable shades of error, uncertainty, and doubt, but who sincerely desire to know the truth, these sermons will prove a source of light, information, and joy. And, accordingly to the vocation which belongs to the Eternal Priesthood, all authorized ministers of God will hail their publication with gladness, for such an embodiment of doctrine will greatly accelerate the grand object they have in view—the salvation of souls, the instruction of Saints, and the building up of Zion in the last days.

Particularly to the elders who are scattered abroad upon the face of the earth, far from those who alone can instruct them in the more exalted branches of the everlasting gospel, these sermons will be most valuable, as a gauge of doctrine, a rule of rectitude, and a square to life, furnishing at the same time an extensive repository of historical information.

May the Lord prosper every department of his work, and every laudable effort of his servants to instruct the ignorant, build up and establish the faithful, and gather the honest in heart from among all nations home to Zion.

In the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant, I remain, your brother and fellow-labourer,

G. D. WATT.

BISHOP METUAORE [DEAD.]

BISHOP METUAORE.

Under date of April 29 Elder C. H. Lake writes from Papeete conveying the sad news of the death of Bishop Metuaore. Bro. Metuaroe was born in 1847 at Otetou, Fakarava. He was baptized April 5, 1885, by Elder T. W. Smith, and was ordained an elder at the same time. He was ordained bishop under the hands of Patriarch Alexander H. Smith, November 26, 1901. Elder Lake writes as follows:

Bishop Metuaore died, April 18, at 7 a. m. He had been sick but ten days. The "grip" had taken the majority of us at conference, but he was able to preside the last day, the 8th.

He was taken to Tiona, where he died and was buried.

The whole mission is in mourning. We had asked him to write his life's history, but he only had it half completed when he was taken sick.

He was a grand, good man, always the same temperament.

C. H. Lake, Tetaku, Alfred Sanford, and Varoa spoke at the funeral.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Emmanuel Movement does not find favor everywhere. Reverend I. M. Haldeman of the First Baptist Church at Seventy-ninth Street and Broadway, New York, has dissected the movement and has denounced it as the most dangerous belief that has ever entered the creed of a church. It is a twin sister of Christian Science, he says, and he would not even discuss the latter if it did not come in the name of Jesus Christ. He compares the two systems to show a similarity. "Christian Science is a pestilence and a poison and an open sore. The Emmanuel Movement is an ulcer, a cancer, and a canker." The object of the movement, he says, is to bring the miracles of healing of Jesus Christ down to the level of mental suggestion. Modern criticism laughs at the splendid procession of fulfilled prophecies of Daniel. Reverend Haldeman also denied that Christ was a Socialist and said "Christian socialism is a damnable treason."

At a recent meeting of the Baptist ministers of St. Louis, Missouri, the subject of Christ's coming was discussed, and afterward a vote was taken. Not quite half of them were "pre-millennialists," and a few did not know what they were. One minister reported that by request he had prepared the subject of Christ's second coming, and before he had finished the subject he had preached eleven discourses, and he claimed that from the beginning there was increased spiritual interest in his church.

The Right Reverend Charles D. Williams, Detroit, Michigan, recently assailed the hymn, "Rock of Ages," as an illustration of a religion so effeminate that a virile man should pay no attention to it. He ridicules the idea of a passive salvation. "Pick up a sinner in the gutter. Teach him to sing, 'Jesus paid it all,' and send him on his way, glorying in the fact that he has been saved for ever. That sort of thing has made religion effeminate, cut the sinews of action, and destroyed all healthy interest in it. That kind of cross has made reverence of God softness and indulgence."

The Christian Register says: "We need a church to help us to live, and not to help us to die. We need a church that shall teach us to love our neighbors as ourselves, in the violent struggle of modern life."

The speakers at the Brick Church on Sunday were F. A. Smith, of the twelve, and L. G. Holloway, of the seventy. Regular services were held at the Homes.

The Straight Road

THE PRINCIPLE OF REWARD ACCORDING TO WORKS MAKES DEGREES OF GLORY.

The human race seems to be endued with a worshipful instinct that leads them to believe in a supreme power upon whom all mankind are dependent; that death does not end all, but that there is a life to come beyond the grave. Thus the heathen believed, before they heard of the Bible and its teachings, that life upon earth was in some way to prepare for a higher and better life to come. If we believe this to be true, how earnestly one should seek to know the requirements and preparation for that life! A person going to a foreign country would want to know all about the conditions and the preparations necessary to make, to obtain the best results. So all should seek to know how to regulate their lives and conduct to the will of the Supreme Ruler of the universe, who is the giver of eternal life. And we can not believe that he who is greater than nature, the creator of all, could be a respecter of persons, or that he would require more or less of one generation than of another.

This life is but a means unto an end. Each child born comes into this earth life by design, and with great possibilities before it, and one of the possibilities, I believe, is the redemption of its body in a glorified condition. (See Romans 8:23 and Philippians 3:20, 21.) But we will note that Paul was writing to the saints in Christ Jesus. (Chronicles 1:1.) Those who had laid the foundation in Christ, and only those who have obeyed the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, may have this hope. (Matthew 7:14.) "Because strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life" with Christ, "and few there be that find it."

So many phases of religious thought have become epidemic these days that an antitoxin of common sense is badly needed to save those infected by the mania; but if one points to the danger, we hear that ancient slogan, "Let us alone." It is written in Acts 17:31 that "He"—God—"hath appointed a day, in the which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained; whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead." Christ is to judge the world in righteousness, and he said,

He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day.—John 12:48.

For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.—Matthew 16:27.

Again:

For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad.—2 Corinthians 5:10.

How important it is that we understand the words of Christ, the covenant of salvation; for he came instructed in what he should say, and what he should speak, and obedience to his commandments is life everlasting. (John 12:49, 50; Hebrews 5:9; Deuteronomy 18:18, 19.) "For there is no respect of persons with God."—Romans 2:11. With this scripture before us we should see that there are more than just two classes, the good and the bad, and two conditions for them, heaven and hell. In Matthew 25:37-40 we read of two classes of righteous, the brethren, and those who had administered to the needs of the brethren; and yet do not receive the same reward. Also in 1 Corinthians 3:13-15, two classes saved, yet rewarded according to their works, one class saved and given a reward, the other class saved but suffer loss. Why do they suffer loss? Because their works were not in accord with the teachings and commandments of Jesus Christ. It is a dangerous doctrine that accepts one truth as taught in the Bible and rejects other truths just as clearly taught, or that adds unto or diminishes aught from his words.

Every one rewarded according to his works, compels us to believe in different degrees of glory. Thus Paul in writing to the church at Corinth (1 Corinthians 15:41, 42) tells them of the different degrees of glory:

There is one glory of the sun, and another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars: for one star differeth from another star in glory. So also is the resurrection of the dead.

People believing in an unreasonable religion show little gratitude to their Creator for giving them a mind. That some will receive the reward without works that others must undergo a life of self-denial, persecution, and earnest effort to obtain. That would not be rewarding all according to their works. What are the works that will separate the people into the different degrees of glory?

Them . . . that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power.—2 Thessalonians 1:8, 9.

And this glory is that of which the sun is typical. Sanctified by the blood of the covenant which they had obeyed (Hebrews 10:29). This is the inheritance of the Saints. (Colossians 1:12, 13; and Daniel 7:27; 1 Thessalonians 4:16, 17; John 14:1-3.) Another class is those who follow blind leaders: "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men."—Matthew 15:9. If they live good lives they will be saved, but suffer loss. Jesus said, "Take heed that no man deceive you."—Matthew 24:4. Paul wrote the saints at Ephesus, "Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobeence." And again we read in 2 Corinthians 11: 14, 15:

And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works.

Paul writes of a third heaven, in 2 Corinthians 12: 2, and there can not be a third except there be a first and a second—the glory of the sun, the glory of the moon, and the glory of the stars. The gospel of Christ, when obeyed, is to fit us to dwell with him in his kingdom, like the stones for the temple which were trued and polished in the quarry,—“so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building.”—1 Kings 6: 7. So our characters should be trued and polished here, as there can be no discord, contention, or evil in the kingdom of God.

FAITHFUL IN TESTIMONY.

SERMON BY ELDER F. A. RUSSELL, AT LAMONI, IOWA,
MARCH 28, 1909.

(Reported by Leon A. Gould.)

In the twenty-sixth chapter of the book of Acts, beginning with the fifteenth verse, I read:

And I said, Who art thou, Lord? And he said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest. But rise, and stand upon thy feet: for I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness both of these things which thou hast seen, and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee; delivering thee from the people, and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee, to open their eyes, and to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and inheritance among them which are sanctified by faith that is in me.

Also in the first and second chapters, second letter of Paul to Timothy, I note a couple of verses as follows: “Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord.” Also, “If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he can not deny himself.”

Our purpose, to-night, if we have any definite purpose in view so far as any particular line of thought to follow out, will be to call attention to some things in connection with the life of the one whom we regard as above all others able to tell the gospel of our salvation.

We might ask this question: Of what church are you a member, and why? Perhaps some of us would answer the question like this, I am a member of the Church of Jesus Christ, and my reason is that I believe it to be that which sets forth the principles of life and salvation. And that is what I desire, salvation; and so I am identified with this body of people.

Have you ever been put upon the stand and asked what your belief is in any particular way? I guess you call that “catechise,” or something like that. Has your faith ever been tested as to the things which you believe, which things would or would not, as the case might be, permit you to remain with, or be excommunicated from this body? Have you ever been tested, I say, in this way? And are we sure that to-night we are sound in the faith—those of us who are in the church? Take, for instance, regarding the Christ. Would you think, if it should be stated that there are some who do not indorse the record of this One as given here in the Bible, so far as his coming among men is concerned, will you say to the person who is somewhat liberally inclined along this matter, that he is not sound in the faith? And, if so, have you ever expressed yourself definitely regarding the Christ? Do you know that this One of whom we often speak, Jesus Christ, is in fact the Son of God, and that the peculiar circumstances mentioned in the scripture regarding his birth are true? Have you ever been questioned regarding this matter, giving your answer regarding it? We state our belief or our unbelief, and who will pass sentence upon this expression of ours, whatever it may be, and say, You may remain with us, or, Unsound; you are not one of our number. However that may be, I want to talk to you regarding some things that seem to me to be especially important, that we should agree upon.

We regard Jesus Christ as the one spoken of, for instance, by Isaiah, when it was said of him, He is to be a witness and a leader and a commander. And John in the book of Revelation makes the statement regarding Christ, He is the faithful and true witness.

A faithful witness is one who is bound by his own testimony. And not only bound by his own testimony, but, in the case of Christ, we regard him as one who, in his testimony, made certain promises which he is abundantly able to fulfill.

So, we then regard Christ as being one who bears testimony, and is able to fulfill whatever is necessary as a part of his declaration. And in the verse that we read to you here, “Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord,” I think I can state that I see a reason for me occupying where I am, one among this people, having had presented to me, at least in part, by the brother who is with me here in the stand, the principles of the gospel, and I was invited to believe them and to put them into practice in my life. I accepted that invitation, and in responding thereto I was baptized.

Now, whose words am I following? Did this brother, or those who may have been associated with him, did they formulate that plan? did they devise the scheme, if we may properly call it such, that they declared would bring to me a release from the consequences of sin—no, I’ll make a different statement than that—bring to me a release from sin itself, from the inclination, largely, to do that which is evil, and to put me in a condition where I might be a recipient at last of some power that would enable me to live apart from the evil with which I might be surrounded? Is not that your idea of the gospel?

You remember the statement made by the writer here, John, I guess it is, "To as many as received him, to them gave he the power to become the Sons of God," or something to that effect. And through obedience to the principles set forth I—justly, I think—expected to receive something that would enable me to live separate and apart from these wrong-doings. These men did not arrange that matter. They did not plan the order of things whereby I was to receive this wonderful blessing,—for such, I think, it must be called. But it was from some one else that they received the message that they were bearing. I will tell you, though I never have told either the brother here or any of the others that were there—there is another brother up there to the left that came into our community at the time—I never for a moment thought of regarding the message they were bringing to us other than one that was simply committed to their care by some other.

So, as we glance back, or try to determine from whence cometh this message originally, so far as our faith goes, we go back to Christ. Of course we regard that in the council that was held somewhere, in heaven it is termed, it was arranged there by the Father and the Son and whoever may have been parties in that council, that such things should be presented to the people; and upon condition that they should be received by the people, salvation should be theirs, and all that salvation means.

The thing that confronts me, then, in the work of the Christ, particularly, is the message that he delivered to the people. I read here in the sixth chapter of John, I guess it is; yes, thirty-eighth verse: "For I came down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me." That is what the statement is I read there. And I note that as being a statement of the Christ, so declared. "I came down from heaven." That is as far as I can go, isn't it? Can any of the rest of you go any farther than that? That statement conveys as much to me as some other statements regarding the advent of the Christ. To me the appearance of Christ among men is a complete mystery; but no greater than some other things that from time to time engage our attention. And, while I am rather inquisitive along some lines, I will admit to-night, I express to you that I have faith regarding the matter of Jesus Christ. I believe just as is stated there, "I came down from heaven." I believe that. So mark that down in my favor, if you are going to check me up on these matters.

It is not material to me, just now, at least, in the consideration of these matters, how he came. The fact that he was here, the fact that he came with something for me, is the thing that interests me directly. And I am to demonstrate my faith in this Christ, my belief in the Christ, as indicated by the testimony in the prayer-service this afternoon, if I love him, I will keep the commandments which he gave. And he came for the express purpose of delivering to the world a message. And just the same as if some message-bearer should come to my door, and after obtaining audience he should say, Here is a message for you, I would be bent especially upon knowing the contents of that message. If it required action upon my part, I might make special inquiry regarding it. But the first thing that would demand my attention, is not the message-bearer, but the message that is delivered to me.

And if there is one little difference—you may call it a big one if you want to—if there is one difference between some of the people and ourselves regarding the preaching of the gospel—I will say person anyway—it has been that we have made an effort to call their attention to the message that was delivered by the individual, Christ.

The world to-day is asked continually to believe that such a being lived, and that he came with a purpose to the world, but it really seems to us that in so many instances the particular message brought by him is made so much secondary that it is too largely lost sight of. And so, taking it for granted to-night that we all have at least a nominal belief in the Christ, let us deal with his work particularly. Note in the twelfth chapter of the writings of Saint John, where he quotes Christ something along this line, and I think it to the point so I will read it:

I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness. And if any man hear my words, and believe not, I judge him not: for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day: For I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting.

So, then, this personage brings to us this message. He says, I bring to you a message from the Father. Why don't I stop to query, for instance, of the person who comes to my door with any ordinary message, What is your name? How did you come? afoot? on the cars? and how did you reach this place? Would that be the first question I would ask before I would investigate the contents of that message? I think you agreed with me a while ago that I would want to know the thought which was contained in that which he might have in his hand, then there may be inquiry regarding the individual according as the contents of the message may be.

And to-night, I believe the thought that should be paramount in our minds is, What were the terms offered by this great message-bearer to a dying world?

There are many people who do not see any place in the religious world for the Christ. They say, We can acknowledge the idea of God all right enough. We believe that everything about us declares unmistakably the existence of a creator that we believe to be God. But why this mediator known as the Christ? Why the necessity of this one?

In Pueblo some few weeks ago, we had the opportunity to listen to a rabbi who had announced for his subject, "Why I am not a Christian." He made this statement, that Christianity places between God and man a mediator. Judaism removes that mediator, and presents the individual direct to God. That is the idea of that rabbi. And I do not know but what that criticism is a proper one, when his criticism is based upon the popular religion of to-day. Because, it does seem to us, as we have observed the worship of some people, that there is an effort to place Jesus Christ in God's stead. Now I believe each one has his proper place. I believe that Jesus Christ came to this world for the especial purpose of telling man how to approach God. That is the purpose, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." "But when ye pray, say, Our Father which art in heaven," praying unto the Father in the name of the Son, by the authority of the Son, by virtue of the authority couched in the message delivered by the Son we can approach God, and say, Our Father, your Son tells us to come to you in this way.

I can not get just straight in my mind the idea that we should pray unto Christ, but that rabbi had heard it so many times that he criticised the Christian religion, using as a basis that which he doubtless had many times observed.

Then he made another statement like this: Christianity declares that all children are born in sin. Judaism says, No. I wanted to say amen to Judaism there; but of course I could not very well under the circumstances. Can you not see that his criticism of Christianity was based upon the popular idea? We may not be so very far apart after all from our Jewish brethren along some lines, when they do properly and fully express themselves, and we have the opportunity of doing so.

But now, in what sense is Jesus the mediator, and how is he to stand between God and man? I have heard many times efforts made by our brethren and others; I have read various statements as they have been written by parties on the subject in a special effort to explain what they declared to be the mystery of the atonement. I am not prepared to say that there is no mystery in connection with the work of Christ. I would not say that for a moment. But I do say this, that so far as I am personally concerned, it seems to me that the work of Jesus Christ in his effort to save man was one that is altogether reasonable, altogether reasonable. What is it? Man in a condition whereby he is unable to reach another condition has extended to him by the Father, as it were, an opportunity through the work of Christ. And so we have said to our fellow men sometimes, that if it should be that the work and the mission of Jesus Christ seems to be surrounded with such a veil of mystery in your mind, can you not see the necessity of God doing something at least for mankind? Why, there is not one of us in the room, perhaps, but would be willing to admit that we are in some way the object of God's creation. Will we argue that it would be improper for us to anticipate some means whereby we can approach the origin of our creation, and from the Father of the universe obtain some help, some light, some wisdom, perhaps some knowledge? Could not we do that? A little boy looks to the father. The father is the ideal man. The mother is the ideal woman. Where are you to-night upon that question, you who have grown old? who may now have looking to you little ones, and you are their ideal? Where is your ideal? Have you stopped learning? We do not want to say that. This brother who stood before you this afternoon, at the age of life he is, made the statement that "I am constantly learning." So we all make acknowledgment of that kind. Can we not then expect to learn something of the Father of the universe, the creator of all?

All right. Acknowledging, then, that we might reasonably expect that, will we say to the Father that we will repudiate or beat back, as it were, whatever may be the plan that you will select for the purpose of bringing to me the things that you would have me to know? Will I say to the Father, I wish you had not sent the Son. I wish you had not sent Jesus Christ. I wish you had done something different. Well, if there be such a one in the audience to-night, who has felt to criticise the work of Jesus Christ, will you name a way that you wish God had sent the terms of reconciliation to this world? Will you name a way that you will be willing to receive the communication from God? Will you name it? And when you have done so, is it not possible that you yourself will be just as skeptical of the very plan that you select as even regarding the Christ?

What matters it to me that God should have dispatched an angel from the courts of glory to come to the world and tell the people the things that they must do in order to obtain eternal life? What matters it that he should have sent that angel, and instead of him delivering that message verbally, say, You shall write that upon certain plates; you shall lay it beneath the surface of the earth. After a while I shall send another one of my angels to have them unearthed, and then the people shall know of the gospel story? Does it make any difference to you how it should come? Does it matter to you the means employed of the Lord to let you know what is in the mind of God, in order that you might be reconciled to him and be known as one of his children? Personally, it does not to me. It is immaterial. And we are a people, you know, who believe that God has not only spoken by his Son, but that he has spoken by angels, and that by the means of his Spirit he moves upon the minds of men to-day, delivers to the people who may be present the revelation of his mind and will that he desires them to know then. I want to talk to you, whatever your faith, a little along this line. Do you believe there is any difference so far as the result to you and to me? Take into consideration, Is there any difference between the messages delivered by Christ, those which were delivered by those who preceded him, making known the revealments of God, and those which have since that time been delivered? Are they not all equally important? And where are we justified in making of special importance the expression of the Christ among the people, and in any sense slight that which may have been given either before or subsequently?

It is immaterial to me what may be the means employed by the Lord to convey unto me the things that he would have me to know. But having received them, then my responsibility begins. And realizing my responsibility, now, to what extent shall I feel myself responsible before God? We have been taught for lo these many years that the message is a personal one, comes to me, and comes to you. Jesus died for you, died for me, so we believe. The message then, being a personal one, I am responsible before God for my action, and that action must be dependent upon my understanding of that which is presented. I may move in a certain direction without understanding all about it. There, of course, is where the element of faith and hope enter and operate. I am responsible for my actions so far as I am able to understand the needs of the message that is brought by the Savior. And whatever may be the means that God shall employ to bring these things to me, that far I am responsible.

Suppose this brother here, for instance, should say to me, now, that such and such a thing should be done by me. How do you know? I have been told by the Lord that such is the case. What is your attitude and mine upon that matter? I spoke to a brother in the church not a great while ago, one who is very well known to all of you, and asked him this question, at least in substance; it may not have been worded just like this, but it was in substance:

Do you believe that you are susceptible to being spoken to by the Spirit through another individual? He answered me, Yes, sir, I am; but I want you to understand that I am the one to determine whether or not that Spirit is from God. I said, That is my belief. So, if this brother should say to me that the Lord has declared a certain thing to him, it becomes my privilege at once to determine for myself whether or not that spirit cometh from God. And I will tell you now, so far as I am personally concerned, that here is one that if it demanded action upon my part, I guess I would find out before I acted.

I heard a little comment some time back regarding our young people, that sometimes they feel rather backward about attending the prayer-service and bearing their testimony, for instance, saying that if I would go there and bear my testimony in prayer-meeting, and be real faithful, the first thing I know some one would deliver a prophecy to have me ordained an elder. And some feel just a little bad along that line, and for that reason they just prefer to remain in silence. I do not feel that our young people should have any fear along that line. Why? Because to every individual where there comes a message demanding action, there comes also to you—but, no, it is yours before that takes place; there is with you now, always will be, the responsibility to determine by the help of God whether or not that came from God. There is a safeguard. There is safety for this whole work as I understand it. That puts me in a position to obtain from God at least some information; and if I could obtain that much, and if God requires of me action along a certain line, could I feel that God would be so unjust as to withhold from me that information, if I humbly seek him? And so if there are any of our young folks who feel a degree of diffidence along that line, just keep these thoughts in mind, for I believe that they will stand the test. At least we offer them as such, and trust that they will, anyway.

So that, in connection with this message that is borne to us, I have a right to receive some light upon it, some information, when I endeavor to put into practice in my life the things that are couched therein, as the things requiring action. I am entitled to have light. You are entitled to that light. Every one of us who has been taught along these lines, has been taught that he can approach God directly and receive from him light upon these matters which are for us to understand, and which are essential to us to perform, in order that we not be left in darkness.

I am thankful that I worship a God of that character. I am thankful that I was ever taught to believe in such a God, to be associated with a people who indorse such an idea as that. And in view of that fact, then, I am not ashamed of the testimony of the Lord. No reason why I should be. He declares that if any man will do his will he shall know of the doctrine. So that puts me in the place where I may be able to say that I have conformed to the things that God requires at my hands, in order that I may be known as a child of his. And having received these things, this message, it now becomes my duty to put them into practice. I would like to use a different term there, and I will at the risk of being criticised. It becomes me to "make good" to my friends and to the people with whom I associate, the power of the gospel to save from sin, and from its consequences,—sin, anyway. We have got to do that. I heard a brother the other day read a statement from a certain magazine which was right along that line, That the world to-day is demanding of the people religiously to make good some of the things that have been declared for such a long period of time. And if there ever was a people who for years have been asking audience from other people regarding things that were to better the condition of mankind, that stands bound to at least begin to "make good," it seems to me it is our own selves. It is us. We are the ones that certainly should be demonstrating the things that we have been teaching for a considerable length of time.

I was criticised (friendly, though, I understand it) some time back, I guess preaching here, right in this pulpit, too. I made the statement that I believed we should be able to demonstrate the things we were teaching; and perhaps I did not qualify that. Some things of course we teach that pertain especially to the life beyond. But the things that pertain to this life, in my judgment, must be demonstrated by the people that preach them. That is the way I view it. In other words, I do not see how I can, with any effect, teach to my fellow men a principle, until I myself have a realizing sense of the force and power and virtue of that principle. Can I? What do you think about a teacher that would stand before some scholars here, and say two and two are four, four and four are eight, and eight make sixteen? Teacher says, Don't you know that is just a simple solution? That is not teaching, as I view it. The brother back there behind the post may controvert that matter with me later on. We have trouble sometimes like that. That will be all right.

It seems to me, as I said before, in order to teach our fellow men it is essential that we must have a realizing sense of the thing we are trying to teach. I heard a brother, and the brother is here to-night and will remember it,—I heard the brother stand before some people when they were in a Sunday-school gathering, and he asked them this question:

How many of you teachers know the object of the editor of the Quarterly during this past quarter? How many know what is the object the editor had in mind, or what was the purpose she was following out and trying to teach to the children? Not a reply came. And then there was at last the criticism of the brother. A fine lot of teachers, aren't you? or something to that effect. I think the brother will remember it. What was it? The teachers themselves did not have an idea of the thing they were trying to teach. So it is with the person who goes to another and attempts to teach him something regarding the gospel. If they present it only as a theory, what does it amount to? He can not always be successful even in injecting that theory into the mind of some other person; can not always do that; but if he would say to them, this theory, though it was so classed, is now a fact, and we know whereof we speak, it is different. Quite different.

For about seventy odd years we have been proclaiming to people salvation here and hereafter. Let us see. I guess I will not use those terms that way, because it rather indicates that there is such a sort of an imaginary line between the here and the hereafter. But isn't it a fact that the here is but the beginning of the hereafter; and the now is but the beginning of that which is to continue from now on? Talk about salvation here and hereafter. God Almighty has given the terms that men shall yield unto; and salvation shall begin—I wonder when. Way over there, the time when we sing about? is that when it shall begin? Oh, we say, oh, I am going to be saved after I shall have passed through all of these trials, have passed through death, then been resurrected, a thousand years of schooling through the millennium, and then I am going to be saved. That is not my idea of it. I regard the gospel of Jesus Christ as something that has in it the element of present salvation. And if you have been inclined to criticise our fellow men sometimes because they have said, I am saved, and I know I am saved, put me down as being unorthodox. I believe in present, future, and continual salvation, not a future salvation alone; a present, a now salvation, and continuous to the future. Salvation comes when the terms of salvation are complied with; and when we have received those conditions, put them into practice in our lives, does not God stand bound from that moment on? If not, pray tell me why. Pray tell me why.

It is said that this matter of salvation is a matter of evolution. Granted. And in some cases it may be possible even to-day the principle of evolution is working. And I was thinking to-day over that matter. For instance, he tells us in there something about the washing of regeneration, the washing away of sin, and such as that. Now, a little bit of experience has taught me that a garment may become so very soiled that it is almost impossible to get that garment clean and white. It will require continual washing over and over again. And it seems that some men are about like that garment. And so there may be some process of evolution along that line; I do not know. Then there are garments that I have noticed, that were very badly soiled, but it seemed like the very moment they touched the water there was a separation, and that which soiled the garment left it, and the garment was then almost clean. You tell me that it is impossible for a person to be cleansed from sin and its consequences quickly? I do not know, I may be deviating from the path that some of us have walked in for quite a while; but still, I believe that it is the case that in some instances, perhaps in many,—I would not object if you would not, to the majority of cases—that these garments of ours have become so stained with sin that it requires days, weeks, and months of evolution, if you want to call it so, before they shall be altogether clean again. God will give us sufficient time to get them that way. And if it only requires ten days for you to get yours in that condition, I am not going to say that you are not in that condition.

I asked a brother one time, "Can you live above sin for one minute?"

"Oh, yes."

"Can you for two?"

"Yes."

"Can you behave yourself for three minutes?"

"Yes."

"Can you make yourself as you ought to be for an hour?"

"Oh, yes."

"Two hours?"

"Yes."

"I don't know where to stop, do you?"

I don't know where to stop. I do not. I can not find the line. I never found a person yet that will say, I can only live right about so many hours, and then I've got to do something wrong. You would not admit, not a person that will admit that, that we must do wrong after a certain length of time. Why then this continued apology, that it is going to take a long time to get myself in the condition that God Almighty intends I shall be in, professing before the world all the time to be in harmony with God through the gospel? I do not know how you look at it; but to me it does not seem just right. It does not seem just like I am properly representing the Christ, when I say, Oh, I am going to be all right after a while; I am going to be so after a while that I will not do anything wrong. Going to be that way, when? Well, after a while. In this life? No, I never expect it in this life. Well, bless—I was going to say it that way. It seems a pity that any one of us should allow himself to be flattered into believing a thing of that kind. It is flattery from the source—well, the source from which flattery most always comes. We do not want it. It comes from a source that we can well refuse—well, just repel. That spirit or that particular thing which says to you, just put off. Do not even profess before the people that you have lived all right to-day, wait until to-morrow. Then to-morrow you have some difficulty. Tell the people to-day that you know you have done a lot of things that are wrong; and next Sunday get up and tell the same thing over again. Does that seem exactly consistent? If I bear my testimony before the people here to-day and say I know that I have done many things that are wrong, there is no power on earth or in heaven, as I understand it, that can gain me forgiveness of that sin. If I know that I have done the wrong I have got to suffer for that.

If I know I have done a thing that is wrong, I must suffer for that. And you know I question, seriously question whether Jesus Christ,—as I said before, I seriously question whether he or any other power upon earth or in heaven can gain for me a remission of that evil doing. For Paul was sent by the Lord Jesus Christ to tell the people that which was to bring forgiveness of sins; and he said to them, if ye sin willfully, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin. Must take the consequences. That is all there is to it. For that which I may do wrong in an unguarded moment—admitting if you please, certainly you would not do other than admit the weakness of man and the possibility of a person doing a thing that is wrong in an unguarded moment unwillingly. Those are the things for which we can ask forgiveness before the Father, as I understand it. But if I go and deliberately do this wrong, I must take the consequences of it. If I do an injury to my neighbor, do that which is not right before God, and knowingly do that, I have simply got to abide the consequences of that wrong-doing. So, then, let us guard ourselves along that line, and not say, I know I have done a lot of things that were wrong, but my desire before God is to do right. It is a general case that we follow our desires pretty closely. Fact, is it not? Is not that just about the fact of the case, that we follow our desires after all? Most of us do, I am inclined to think. You are hungry, you desire to eat, do you not do that? Take a man that has any particular habit, whatever it might be, does not he follow his own desire? Yes. Suppose he is trying to overcome that. He comes up for instance and says, My desire is to overcome a certain thing. And it is also true that he is following out another desire that he has. And our desires are not single. We have double standards to many desires. I desire this, and I desire the other, too; and for that reason we find ourselves perhaps not gaining as rapidly in the spiritual life as we might wish to, for our own benefit and the benefit of those about us.

One other thought. I heard a person make a statement, and it is not an uncommon one. It was not made here, so that you will know I am not referring to any who are present. I heard the statement made like this in prayer-meeting, I am always so backward about bearing my testimony, because it just seems like there is a kind of feeling comes over me that I am here before God, and God's people, and it is so hard for me to say anything. You know I wonder when I hear a statement like that, Does that person think for one moment that God sees only what takes place in prayer-meeting? Does he hear only what you say when you are up here where these few people may be gathered together? Are you so fearful when you are with the people in prayer-meeting, but not so fearful when you are going down the street here to work with a neighbor in the morning? But we would not like to come up here to prayer-meeting, of course, and give Bro. and Sr. So and So a pretty clear going over for something. I guess, as I said a while ago, you would not feel like doing that before God and his people; but walking down the street with him to-morrow morning, you would tell him about it then. Do you not suppose you will have to give an account for what you do then as well as in prayer-meeting? God is bound, certainly, to look to our sayings just as much between the meetings as when you stand up to bear testimony.

I have heard it said by one of the brethren that the angels take down all the testimonies borne, when in prayer-meeting. Brethren, some of us poor fellows that do not have very many prayer-meetings to attend, when we are out in our missionary fields, I suppose our other testimonies would not be recognized. I believe the testimony your bear when your neighbor comes in and sits by your fireside, for instance, the effort to tell him and others the gospel story, is recognized of God. Let us not lose sight of this fact, and if we do not I am inclined to think perhaps it may serve to illustrate things one might otherwise say or do.

I trust that our life in the church, as a result of our profession of belief in the gospel, may be one that will be so thoroughly consistent, that those who are asking and even demanding of the religious professor to-day, that they shall be able to demonstrate, at least in part, that which they declare to be such a wonderful benefit to mankind, that that demand shall be met by us. What we want to do, as you would teach the child to observe a certain rule of conduct, observe it yourself. I am a believer in all things common—we heard something about that this morning—do not get a wrong idea about that. I am a believer in all things common—some things common, in this, and all things common to this extent, that all the things that God has declared should be for your sanctification and mine are common to all of us; all things common there. Whatever is essential to your spirituality, is to mine. That is the reason then, we must demonstrate to those to whom we go with the gospel, the power of the gospel.

“The husbandman that laboreth must first be partaker of the fruit,” says this book. And pray tell me, how can the fruit appear until there has been a growth of that which has been planted? Do not see how it can.

So, then, I think that it is about time there should be manifest, if it has not already been so manifested in our lives, the fruit, the fruit of the gospel, and you know what Paul says that is: The fruit of the Spirit is love. And so I trust that as we testify, as we converse with our fellow men, that this testimony may be just as God would have it to be; and that we may so live that our life may be a living testimony, a living example of the power of the gospel that we profess. And if you do not remember anything else about this service, remember that one thing for which we plead is that, as we have professed to come in obedience to the gospel of the Son of God, it demands such action upon our part as will reveal to those about us the virtue of the principles that we have espoused—that one thing, if you remember nothing else, seek to remember and to put forth in the doing.

THE GLASS OF LIFE.

Did you ever slowly fill a glass with water and then, just as it seemed full to overflowing add drop after drop until the level of the water was above the level of the glass? And then there came a time when by adding one drop there flowed over the edge a little rivulet that formed a pool on the table? Of course you have done this, have seen it done, or learned of its being done by some one else. It seems to me that our lives are like glasses. We add a little to our strength day by day, just a little, apparently insignificant bit of strength. To us it seems that this addition will not produce anything of importance. But if we compared our lives with the glass to which water is being added drop by drop, we would see in a moment by the addition of a little strength, added day by day to our lives and forming a stream of spiritual progress, that the little things amount in life.

Daily is the truth of Michael Angelo's saying, “Trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle,” made apparent in the lives of men and women in the church who are doing so much to promote the gospel work. The acorn is a small thing, yet from that small thing the great oak grows. The tree adds but one ring a year, yet there are trees so great that men, the lords of creation, travel thousands of miles to stare at them in wonder. The greatest work in the church is accomplished only after years of patience. There is such a thing as inspiration, but inspiration is to a man what the final drop of water is to the glass that is ready to overflow, it comes only as the final touch. To be worthy of great inspiration we must live each day to the best of our ability, even when the road which we daily journey seems to lead into the desert. Because we are not great is no reason we should ever be despondent. The desert we may see, was seen by others before us; some lost heart and died; a few traveled hopefully onward and saw the promised land ahead. We can not see how yielding to a negative for a moment's pleasure will interfere with our success, but think of the glass; the negative takes away the drops which help to fill. We may be chosen to fill some office in the great gospel work. If so, we should endeavor to so fill the place that it would do honor to the work. Those that are constantly seeking higher places without adding water, drop by drop to the glass, will never accomplish the desire they hope for. In the advancement of his work God can only use men willing to humble themselves to the little things, to the simple things of life. You want happiness; then fill, do not spill, the glass of life.

Have Faith in God.

Zion's ship is on her way,
See her sails are wide unfurled,
The Captain's hand is on the wheel;
We will anchor by and by.
Hear the words of His command,
Oh, ye sailors, true and bold,
Give the signals in his name,
We will anchor by and by.

Tho' the storm-king loudly roar,
And the boisterous sea rolls high,
The Master's voice will calm the wave,
And we'll anchor by and by.
Rugged rocks appear, Fear not,
See the Pilot's watchful eye,
The gate is ope', to glide her in;
We will anchor by and by.

The Touch Divine.

It was the last day of the General Convention. It had seemed good to meet many faces grown dear by association of years, and make the acquaintance of new workers. There was a little tumult of joy in the heart as we entered the home door.

"Here's a letter, mother, that Uncle Joseph brought up from Independence."

A little absent-mindedly I opened the envelope, addressed to me at Independence in care of my uncle. "Certainly from a stranger," I commented, and then read the sweet and pathetic little story of a "heart-broken mother." Such a little story, but it reached so far away, and away through the long years; away from the buried hopes, swallowed up in three little graves, to the wonders and mysteries and glories of eternity.

Such a little story, but as the sheets of penciled paper passed to the other members of the family, the tears started, and soon a family of strangers in a far-off land wept for the lonely mother who had had three little sons carried from her home, two at one time, while she could not even see them laid in the grave.

There is something soothing and comforting in the ministering of friends at such times, and when the protection of a community necessitates isolated burial, the heart feels its loneliness.

Once I saw a church door open and people passing softly, some weeping as they came, and I entered and there stood almost transfixed. In front of the altar on what seemed a bank of white satin, surrounded by beautiful flowers, lay a lovely young girl—dead. Her face was turned to the audience, her hand held a long spray of roses, and she seemed just ready to open her eyes and greet the friends thronging the quiet church. For three hours she lay there in unattended state in the little church where she had so often met these same friends in worship. It was beautiful. I recall it often. That quiet church scene where the colored lights fell in soft, shimmering beams about the wonderfully sweet sleeper, and it brings a restful, peaceful feeling.

And then in a few months another dainty, girlish form lay still and cold in another church not far from that little chapel in the river town. But the loved of this one were denied the sweet picture that had comforted Vera's friends. Not that she was less fair, ah, no—but death was a little more cruel and his flames had scarred and browned the white skin and charred the beautiful flesh, and she could scarcely be robed with the dainty and beautiful things that she had loved to fashion with her own deft fingers. Not less loving the friends that covered with trembling fingers the burned and tortured little hands of Cecile, but there was not the comfort of their beauty to linger as fell to the lot of the other maiden's friends. I could but think on it and thank God for the beautiful and comforting things that come to the mourning. The ministration of friends, the songs, the flowers, the prayers, the promise of the gospel, the stories of Christ's love and miraculous power, and the Comforter. I thought life would be hard without these, but how could death to our loved be borne by us without their sustaining influence.

Since the little story came of the stranger mother's loss, I have been saluted by family voices, "Did you write for the little boys' mother?" and half ashamed of my weakness I tried. The "little story" was more beautiful, but that is mine. I know that every mother's heart will give full measure of sympathy to the mourning, and strangers are not as strangers when the chords of love are touched. So I send my little offering by way of the Mothers' Home Column, where the sympathies and longings of our mothers ought to find expression.

In Scripture I read how a rich father came
To the Master with pleading half wild;
His daughter was dead, a maiden fair,
His beautiful, sweet woman child.
All kindness the Master went.

And taking the maid by her slender hand
Said softly, "Maiden, arise,"
And the father received his loved again,
'Neath the blue of those Syrian skies,
Given back by the Master's touch.

Was that wonderful miracle wrought and preserved
That one father's life to cheer?
If so, why prize as a loved, sacred thing,
And hug to our hearts as most dear
The touch of the Master that day?

The widow of Nain, heart-broken and poor,
Walked close by her dead boy's bier,
Close, close to the form that had sprang from her side,
And unheralded, Jesus drew near.
All sympathy, tenderly near.

The bearers stood still, His sad eyes looked down
On the young in that sleep for the grave.
He bade him awaken, and lo, it was done,
And her boy to the mother He gave.
Then the man of compassion passed on.

That Syrian mother's heart could not bleed
That noon, by the gates of old Nain;
But He knew, though pressed by the hurrying throng,
Her anguish and longing and pain,
By the magic of love all divine.

Nay, the touch of His hand on the widow's dead son,
And the maid in the chamber of death,
Was to reach to the hearts of the mourning to-day
With the sweep of Eternity's breath,
And grant them a comfort divine.

The dear little lads in our beautiful land,
Who were borne from your kisses away,
Think how gladly He'll touch them with newness of life,
As he did on that long-ago day,—
That Syrian maiden and boy.

With a life far more perfect, and bodies as fair
As the faces now laid 'neath earth's soil,
They will meet you some day, untainted by sin,
Sweet and pure from all conflict and toil;
Restored by the touch of His hand.

And the Saints' thousand years will be happier to you,
Who now in deep loneliness pray;
Then your three little lads you will lead up to men,
Untempted and sinless for aye,
In the presence of Christ, the Divine.

POND CREEK, Oklahoma.

Dear Saints: While reading the HERALD of March 31, 1909, I have been much impressed by the many beautiful articles in recent HERALDS on equality, the Order of Enoch, mission of the Latter Day Saints, and thoughts on equality. They have made things so plain that there seems no necessity for any more controversy in regard to those things. But we know that Satan goes forth as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. He is trying to defeat God's holy plan. That is the reason so many of the Saints as well as many other honest people are being deceived and led away by false christs and false prophets, where, if God's commands had been fully obeyed, there would have been a true standard of the gospel built upon the rock, Christ Jesus, and an asylum for the poor and oppressed of God's people to gather to. Satan, I believe, has never been accused of laziness and he is a wise servant and will inspire persons with such a discernment of the scriptures and a power to pervert them, and through a false premise or foundation and through types and shadows to wrest the scriptures to their own destruction and the destruction of many others.

As Bro. T. W. Williams says, the ominous signs portend a world-wide social revolution. Yes, what will be its character? The clash between entrenched greed and exploited toil is world wide. The conflict is inevitable. It will be bloody, for the prophecies so indicate. There are millions of hungry, impoverished, ill-fed people in America to-day, as well as all over the world. They are calling for help, work, liberty. God has said that the time is not far distant that he that will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee to Zion for safety. If God's word had been obeyed, there would now be an asylum for all the oppressed on terms laid down in the gospel. The Socialists are gaining in numbers rapidly, on account of the oppression of the times. To know this, it is only necessary to read the Appeal to Reason, by A. J. Wayland, Gerard, Kansas; the National Rip Saw, 305 Olive Street, St. Louis, Missouri, Seth McCallen (Colonel Dick Maple) editor, and many others. They do not beat about the bush, but come out boldly. They are true to their name. They may do some good in agitating, but true socialism can never be obtained save by the plan God has ordained under the gospel. When God's plan is carried out the honest in heart will see the truth and rally to the standard. He says this hope of a glorified earth was as near and dear to early disciples of Jesus as it is to us, but thus far it has only existed in dreams and inspired fancy. Why is it thus? There is a reason: Failure to comply with the full law of God.

It seems that the two priesthoods being restored in these last days, if they are lived up to perfectly, as the law demands, they will become sanctified to the renewing of their bodies, and all they that receive that priesthood receive the Father and the Father's kingdom; so by this I infer that it has not been lived up to fully save by Enoch and his city. (See record of Enoch; Eliza Edras' Apochryphal Old Testament; John the Beloved, and the three Nephites; Book of Mormon.)

I note what the brother says in regard to environments. If we would develop character we must reckon with environment. Fill up the mud puddles; study to meet the craftiness of Satan, for his false christs are now making false interpretations of the Scriptures from Genesis to the end of Revelation, the deep things of God to deceive the scattered sheep and some who are not scattered, to draw them into their net. The thief cometh not but to kill and destroy. Therefore, prepare to feed the sheep. All this may sound strange, especially as it comes from a woman, but I have been impressed to write thus to pave the way for an explanation of some things that have transpired in our family the last three years and to warn the Saints, that they may profit by our mistakes. I feel it my duty to God and the church and mankind in general. We were honest and open then, we are the same now, only our opinions have changed somewhat. I can see now that there is a deep designed plan laid out by Satan in a chain of false prophets, it must be, from Johanna Southcott, in 1792, on down.

Benjamin Purnell, of Benton Harbor, Michigan, of the Israelitish House of David, claims to now reveal the mysteries of death and life in the Star of Bethlehem, the living Roll of Life, or the so-called Record of John. He claims to be (as all their literature will show) the second coming of the Son of Man, spoken of in the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew by Jesus; also the second child that shall stand up in Christ's stead; the Man Branch; the Messenger of the covenant of life; the everlasting Father; the Prince of Peace; and that the Angel Gabriel has now taken a body in him. That is, his spirit was Gabriel in that great war in heaven and Jesus was Michael, and that Gabriel has now come to sound the second trumpet to awake the dead to the knowledge of the truth, to put on immortality. Mary is his wife, as God made man in his likeness and image, male and female. They teach that the one hundred and forty-four thousand spoken of in the seventh and fourteenth chapters of Revelation are the elect; twelve thousand out of each of the twelve tribes of Israel that will never die, but be redeemed from the earth, and that they are the ones who fought in heaven with Michael and were not deceived and God promised them life before the world was. They quote all the scriptures, show it in types and shadows, to prove their theory, and it is so cunningly devised that it seems it would deceive the very elect if possible.

They follow to some extent along the same line as the Latter Day Saints. Both James White and Benjamin teach the atonement through the blood of Jesus Christ for the dead, but for the life of the body immortality, a different law to walk as he (Jesus) walked.

The Israelites came to Pond Creek three years ago last September and preached the life of the body, the end of the world, and that the record of John was revealed. I got some of their literature and it seemed scriptural and beautiful and we became interested and wanted to investigate their doctrine, as the Latter Day Saints are looking for the record of John to be revealed, the gathering of Israel, etc. I wrote to the HERALD giving an outline of their teaching, thinking it would be investigated and some one would write on the subject, but nothing was given to explain it. Several of the elders have been to visit us and I gave them the literature, asked for explanations, and I explained some of their teaching, hoping to receive an explanation. I asked one elder what it meant in Revelation where it says there would be one hundred and forty-four thousand redeemed from the earth. He said it meant the ministry. Another elder said it was virgins and men were not called virgins. It is a figure, perhaps, and could be explained if it had been studied, as Revelation is much in figure and perhaps will not all be known until the Record of John is revealed. (See Doctrine and Covenants 90.) It bothered me then, as they did not agree. I tried to get an explanation of the Record of John from several, even read some from section 90 hoping they could give me some consolation, for our faith had begun to waver in the Israelites the last time they were here, a year ago last September, from some things they said.

One brother told me since that the Lord sent the ministry out to teach and not to be taught. That is true. He seems to infer because I read Doctrine and Covenants, longing for an explanation, more light, that I was trying to teach him; but I was not. I recognized in him a man of God and when he did not explain it my last hope was gone. I gave him literature hoping he would explain later, but he did not. Note Doctrine and Covenants 90:3.

Well, it is humiliating to me to confess that we went to the House of David, but the promise is that he that humbleth himself shall be exalted, so I take courage and trust in God and am willing to do all I can to atone for our mistake. Angels can do no more. Sometimes I think this has been permitted for a wise purpose, that I might be able to warn and save others, and where we escaped without injury, thousands would not have escaped. We do not take all the credit to ourselves, for we prayed to God for help and deliverance and he opened the way.

We found a number of Latter Day Saints there and one Elder Reed, of Kentucky or Tennessee. His brother's wife and five nice children from Colorado came a short time after we did. He had sold his farm in Colorado for five thousand dollars. He had lots of stock and he paid in to the "House of Israel" nearly seven thousand dollars. We visited each other and I learned quite a good deal. They are well read and intelligent people, and no doubt their eyes are opened by this time. He has three sons in Colorado who ought to help their parents out. Many go in that are quite wealthy, good, honest, smart people, and sign away all they have to "Israel," and when they get their money the Danites begin to pinch them in every way. They go cold and hungry and sick without attention many times. They try to make a good impression before the public. The girls that are in the bands in prominent places look like they were better fed, but many a pinched face and broken heart is there. Some are crazy; some are going out all the time destitute, or nearly so. Some sue them. They have been beaten in lawsuits a number of times and had to pay money. They were beaten last fall, but they say they will never pay it, for "Israel" is going to England soon, then to Jerusalem. When they get the people's money, they call a fast of bread and water to run them out. They were talking of calling a forty-day fast of bread and water when we left.

The people of Benton Harbor are trying to get hold of them so they can drive them out. Purnell prophesied that they would be persecuted so that they would be scattered and he would have to flee so they would not know where he was. I will not be surprised if, when he finds they can stay there no longer, he will flee with all the wealth. He knows the value of advertising and proselyting. He sends out preachers all the time and distributes literature all over the United States, Canada, England, Australia, and other foreign countries. They have a colony in England and one in Australia.

We began to have our eyes opened soon after we went. We did not have as much money as they thought we had. In a few evenings before preaching they called me into a private office to ask me about it and their business manager talked so cruel that my eyes were opened. He asked me if there were any more at Pond Creek interested in Israel's faith that had lots of money. I told my husband and children about it. We had two rooms in the third story of a summer hotel that they run to fleece the Gentiles when they come in there by the thousands. They own many mineral springs and make many things to sell. We got there the 21st of October last. There was no stove and no place for one, and when the weather turned cold I took cold and was quite sick, with no doctor but an old woman. When our furniture came they stored it away as we had no room for it. I took notice that they tried to get everything out of a person's hands, as that is their game, for if a person leaves they are not expected to take anything they have ever given out.

They sent Mr. McCullough's tool-box two hundred miles north to a timber camp where they are getting out timber for building purposes. He asked and wrote for it several times before he got it back. They tried to get my sewing-machine, organ, suitcases, and a number of other things, but I would not let them go, as several of the women there told me privately not to let them go out of my rooms, for they would get the things, then would be my enemies.

I bearded the lion in his den and caught him with guile. He pretends that as his blood is cleansed he knows everything, but he did not know my mind. Every one is expected to make confession of everything they know or do every month; that is how he finds out so much (they write it usually). They offered us nearly all the money we took there if we would go back to Pond Creek. They feared we would see the Bar Harbor people, so we came as soon as we could pack up, for we feared we would be turned out destitute in winter. Mr. McCullough intended to take his tool-box and go out and carpenter to get us out just as soon as spring opened, but the Lord opened a better way.

I feel so sorry for all those poor honest people there. I think Purnell has a great hypnotic power over many people, yet he quotes the Bible and many sectarian preachers go there and can not meet him. I heard that he said the hardest man he ever tried to meet in his travels was an infidel. A great many worship him as they would Jesus Christ. He and Mary are not educated, but have studied the Bible for years through John Uroes and James White's writings. I held up for the Latter Day Saints and gave out the Book of Mormon and other literature, and they did not like me for that. They say everything, even the Bible, is a dead letter now to all but Benjamin, as he is the interpreter and the Record of John is the Star of Bethlehem, the living roll of life.

We should prepare to meet these false christs and their deceptive doctrines. Feed the sheep. The thief cometh not but to kill and destroy. If any one wishes to know more, if they will send a self-addressed stamped envelope, I will give them more particulars. I wish to say we never once doubted the angel's message, the gospel of Jesus Christ, but Satan deceived us in believing the Record of John had been revealed and of course all could not receive it, only the one hundred and forty-four thousand. As they say, if you see the life of the body without death you are elect Israel.

We ask God and all his Saints to forgive us for our great mistake and ask for prayers that we may be faithful and have the Holy Spirit continually to guide us aright, and that all our family may be brought into the fold of God and that we may be permitted to gather to Zion and be ready to meet our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I feel his coming is not far off. It may be the best for ourselves and others that we went, as we have gained knowledge and wisdom that we never would have gained otherwise. Our faith is stronger in the blessed gospel than before, for we see how the scripture is being fulfilled. We would be glad to have the elders visit us when they can so we can talk of the hope of the Saints.

With love, we are as ever in the faith and hope of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

MR. J. E. AND MRS. E. J. MCCULLOUGH...

SHELBURNE, Ontario.

Editors Herald: Are modern religionists perfectly joined together in the same mind and in the same judgment? Do they all speak the same thing? No, they are far from it. They declare doctrines diametrically opposite to one another, yet they have the presumption to acknowledge each other as Christians enjoying the Holy Spirit. But it is an insult to the Holy Spirit to say of two churches who are divided in doctrine that both enjoy his teachings. Where the Holy Spirit is he guides into all truth, and where two churches believe in doctrines directly opposite, one, if not both, must be destitute of the Spirit. The Holy Ghost must be a very uncertain guide if it would teach one church to sprinkle infants, another to immerse none but adults, give the privilege to another to immerse, pour, or sprinkle the candidates, just as they choose, tell a fourth to baptize for the remission of sins, and forbid a fifth to baptize any until they gave evidence that their sins were remitted, and teach a sixth that it is not necessary to be baptized at all. If all these churches who teach and practice doctrines so very different are in possession of the Holy Spirit, then the Holy Spirit must be divided against itself, and must come to naught. But the Holy Spirit is the Spirit of truth and teaches the same doctrine in all places, and whenever we find differences of opinion in doctrine we may know most assuredly that the Spirit guide is not there, at least all churches must be destitute of the Spirit but one, and even that one does not enjoy it unless she receives immediate revelation for her instruction and edification.

JOHN WILSON.

COOKES POINT, Texas.

Editors Herald: "After it was truly manifested unto this first elder that he had received a remission of his sins, he was entangled again in the vanities of the world; but after repenting, and humbling himself, sincerely, through faith, God ministered unto him by an holy angel whose countenance was as lightning, and whose garments were pure and white above all other whiteness, and gave unto him commandments which inspired him, and gave him power from on high, by the means which were before prepared, to translate the Book of Mormon, which contains a record of a fallen people, and the fullness of the gospel of Jesus Christ to the Gentiles, and to the Jews also."—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 2.

From the above we learn that Joseph Smith the Seer had received a remission of his sins, after which he was again entangled with sins, the vanities of the world, and that he afterwards repented; then God sent an holy angel who gave him commandments and power to translate the Book of Mormon.

We learn from Church History, volume 1, page 34, that he did after this translate a portion of the Book of Mormon, and after this time, we see on page 36, same book, an account of Oliver Cowdery baptizing the said first elder of the church. It might be asked, Why was he baptized after it had been truly manifested that he had already received a remission of his sins. We will answer, because the angel told Oliver Cowdery and him to baptize each other to fulfill God's righteousness, as Jesus told this same John when Christ came to him to be baptized. We see it is God's will that a man be baptized, whether he has any sins to remit or not. It is evidently so, inasmuch as God pardoned Joseph Smith's sins, and also many others we read of in Book of Mormon on page 131, small edition, also pages 149 and 177. We might cite many other passages where it is recorded that God remitted the people's sins before they were baptized. It is revealed that God has and will pardon sins of those who would have been baptized, but were not because they had not an opportunity while they lived. (See revelation given to Joseph the Seer at Kirtland, Ohio, in the year 1836.) Yes, and such will be saved in the celestial kingdom of God. (See Church History.) It is God's prerogative to forgive sins without water baptism. He requires all men who have an opportunity to be baptized, whether their sins have been pardoned or not, to be baptized to fulfill God's will and law, as Jesus did who had no sins to be pardoned. We are now commanded as preachers of the fullness of the gospel to teach the people and baptize them, and teach them to observe all things that the Master has commanded, and when there are exceptions to the above rule let God attend to that matter when it pleaseth him.

E. W. NUNLEY.

DOANVILLE, Ohio, May 5, 1909.

Dear Herald: Will now attempt to write you a line or two. There has been a great deal of suffering in this mining-camp on account of slack work. We have fared a little above the average, God be praised for such favors. We are almost what you would call isolated here. Bro. W. H. Kelley was with us after holidays and got up good interest, and the people are waiting patiently for his return.

I earnestly request interest in the prayers of the church for my husband and daughter. They have been very sick and do not seem to improve as they might. Bro. Kirkendall administered to them and they got better immediately, but are not well yet. He baptized two, blessed four children, and confirmed the two he baptized, Sr. Coon and Bro. Wilson, the latter a very promising young man of twenty-one years.

The traveling elders always stop with us and how thankful we are to have them come! Any Latter Day Saint has a welcome at our home.

With many dear wishes for the dear HERALD and the Saints, I am,

MRS. NATHAN STERN.

PORT HURON, Michigan.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: At times I feel as though my portion of the cross is too heavy. I feel as though I had not a friend on earth, but as I write this letter, the thought comes to me that God does not give any one a burden but that he gives them strength to carry it, so I ask of you to pray for me that I may grow stronger in the faith and lean upon God's arm for strength and henceforth carry my burden without a murmur or complaint, and become more and more each day like him who carried his cross up the side of the mount, and even gave his precious life for the redemption of all our sins.

Dear Saints, I hereby express a desire to converse with any of the Saints who wish to do so, especially with the young, as I am only eighteen years old myself, and it may be we could help one another through the many trials of life.

Your humble servant,

ROBERT J. HAWKINS.

CORBIN, Montana, April 23, 1909.

Dear Herald Readers: I would like to bear my testimony to the divinity of the work of the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints. I feel that I have been in a manner directed by the hand of God many times, and especially in bringing me to an understanding of the plan of salvation or enough thereof to enable me to act in compliance with the first principles of the doctrine of my Savior Jesus Christ.

I was born and raised to manhood where there were several families of the Saints, but I was not of them; in fact, was taught by my people to shun their society as they were very bad people and would lead their followers to hell. Both father and grandfather were what were then known as Campbellites. They taught that the Saints drew their inspiration from the Devil and I was taught to believe the same, and when I came to be a man I was very wicked. Could curse and swear with the worst, drink whisky, fight, and do most anything a follower of Jesus Christ would not do. This was my condition then, and I say right here to my shame that the Saints came in for a good round cursing every time I had opportunity to show my ability in this direction.

While in this condition Elders J. C. Crabb and Phineas Cadwell came and preached several times in our schoolhouse. I knew they were Latter Day Saint preachers and went to hear them so I could have more to curse about, and I got it. Elder Crabb in his last sermon preached about laying on of hands and produced as evidence Acts 19:1-6. Having been raised a Campbellite I was not familiar with the word and was positive that what Elder Crabb said was not in the Bible, so I went about cursing him to the best of my ability.

So much for the good of one who will chose Satan for a leader. Immediately after this I was chopping wood in the grove about three miles from home and as I worked I was still cursing him, when something happened: I struck a blow, the ax rebounded, striking me fairly in the forehead and knocking me backward. When I regained consciousness I did not feel like swearing and no one has heard me swear since. Some one says there was nothing miraculous about all this. Granted; but I have since learned that God sometimes protects his servants and for the good of their enemies, as I hope it proved in my case. After much trouble I reached home very much used up, washed and went to bed, but could not rest, so asked wife to hand me my Bible, opened it at random and read: "And it came to pass, that, while Apollos was at Corinth, . . . Paul had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came on them and they spake with tongues and prophesied."

It is putting it mildly to say I was knocked out again. I called wife and said, "Here, read this for me; I sure can't read"; but of course I had read correctly and began to feel a bit queer. I turned to the references to see if there were any more scriptures like that, and found that Christ and his disciples practiced laying on of hands for the reception of the Holy Ghost through their ministry; then the thought came, if I have been so badly mistaken in this I may be off on everything else, and I began to study the Bible as never before.

There was another thing that bothered me and that was that up to that time I had never heard grandfather or father pray. Father later obeyed the latter-day message, when he prayed; but it bothered me to think that the Latter Day Saints all prayed, while my people never did, at least not openly. Then I began to search the Scriptures on the subject of prayer, and was amazed at the amount of confidence the ancient disciples seemed to place in the act of prayer to God, and again, as in the case of laying on hands, I found the Latter Day Saints were in harmony with the Bible. I had been taught that since the canon of scripture was filled God does not work with men as anciently, and that which was perfect (1 Corinthians 13:10) was the New Testament and that this was the Spirit of Christ, being a holy narrative concerning God's love and all things pertaining to the salvation of man. It was of necessity the Holy Spirit promised to all who would love and obey him.

Dear Saints, imagine if you can, God's servants laying hands on one to enable him to purchase a New Testament that it might lead him into all truth and show him all that is necessary for man to know. Oh, the darkness I was in, the misery and trouble of mind, the shame of having abused my good neighbors when I saw they were right concerning the Scriptures! But I still had one on them: they were polygamists; yes, sir, it was true they were polygamists. Why? Because everybody (but themselves) said so, and they refrained from practicing it for fear of the law. I found later that they did indeed refrain from polygamy and almost every other evil practiced by ordinary individuals. About this time I began to attend prayer-meetings at the home of Alma Ellison. At first I was at sea, as the saying goes, to understand much that I heard. Later on Bro. Lehi Ellison arose and I shall never forget some of his teachings that seemed spoken entirely for my benefit. He told how God did nothing without first revealing it to his prophets (Amos 3: 7), that if he did not have any prophets it was because men were disobedient, without faith, and did not believe in God as he was in days of old, and that men had a form of godliness but denied the power thereof. He affirmed God to be the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever; that God is no respecter of persons (Acts 10: 34, 35); that the promise is unto us, to our children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call (Acts 2: 39); that the word of God came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved upon by the Holy Ghost, and that the Scriptures were not of any private interpretation. (See 2 Peter 1: 19-21.)

Here was another knockout for me. I reasoned something after this fashion: If the Scriptures were the Holy Ghost, then as soon as we received them we did not need God or Jesus Christ any more, but could go on unto perfection by following the instructions there given; and in studying the matter I made a discovery: that there was a power which gave Christ and his apostles a knowledge of what to speak and write before they could give them to the world, and that the word spoken or written was but the product or evidence of power which would reveal to man things then in the distant future and that the word did not become scripture until they were written and could see that the prophecies of the ancient prophets had of necessity to be impressed upon their consciousness before they could speak or write them. This was then to me a new item for faith, and I was more than ever constrained to concede to the Saints the ability to understand the Scriptures.

I continued to attend those prayer-meetings and learned something surprisingly new each time. Finally I expressed a desire to know all about the doctrine of the church. I could see the Campbellites only had a shadow of what the real church of Jesus Christ ought to be, according to the Bible as I was learning it. Elder Lehi Ellison then gave another of his godly talks and presented me a copy of the Book of Mormon, and Sr. Alma Ellison gave me a Voice of Warfing, and Father Ellison gave a Doctrine and Covenants, and Sr. Strauss gave me Joseph Smith and His Progenitors. I at once began to read them, and it began to seem as though I was in a new world, although I was still doubtful about their position on the polygamy question. However, I continued to read and soon discovered that all the books of the church which I had in hand condemned polygamy as well as all kinds of unrighteousness. That all men must become pure in the sight of God through faith in God and Jesus Christ, believing all things possible with God when necessary for the good of man; repenting (turning away from) all their sins; being baptized for the remission of their sins; receiving the laying on of hands as evidence that they were willing to receive of that portion of the God power, as God should see fit to give them; and that they who joined themselves with his church must refrain themselves from every kind of evil; and that polygamy was an evil not to be tolerated in this church.

When I read the Book of Mormon (Jacob 2: 6), there shall not any man among you have save one wife and concubines none, also Doctrine and Covenants (section 111), I say when I saw that all these were in strict accord with the Bible, which I had been taught to reverence, I was ready for baptism, and I was in such a hurry that I went down into the water through two feet of ice, and was baptized by Bro. Phineas Cadwell, and confirmed under the hands of Brn. Crabb, Cadwell, and Ellison. I wish to say that every promise, save one, has been fulfilled which was made me that day, and I confidently expect the fulfillment of that one. Further, I have never regretted the step taken, for I realize that the One whom we serve is able to redeem every promise which he has made; that he has given us a system so perfect that there is no need of revision either of doctrines or commandments, and that every member should see to it that every appointee of this kingdom be upheld and sustained; and if any are dissatisfied, take the matter up with the proper authorities.

I like to hear of discussions with outsiders, but I dread to see divisions in our house, especially when they are published to the world. I like to have my reading-matter where any who come in my home can read without fear of their seeing something which will cause them to say the Saints are divided. I believe all questions of policy and government should be settled in the conferences and in privacy and the decisions in each matter given to the membership afterward. Now, if wife and I can not agree, should we publish our differences to the world, so that others may be edified by our discussions, or thrash the matter out between ourselves. I believe in keeping my troubles at home. Can we say to the world, Come to us, we have a perfect system, as to faith and practice we are a unit? Some will say meat to the strong, etc.—that is the point exactly: the strong are in the church, if anywhere, and please let us keep the meat where it belongs and give the milk, both of the word and of kindness, to those outside.

Say, Bro. Editor, would it not be a great scheme to appoint an expert commission for the investigation of all matters brought up by the dissatisfied and disgruntled ones, said commission to have authority to settle all differences of whatever nature, so that all differences may be settled at home? I do not think they would have much work to do if it did not go before the world.

Since last writing we have had some preaching at Jefferson City, two miles east of here, in the Methodist Episcopal Church. Bro. Hale W. Smith preached once or twice and then had to leave us, but Bro. S. S. Smith preached nine or ten times to audiences ranging from twenty to thirty, with good interest from start to finish, working up a fine interest, and I would like to have the work followed up, if possible.

Whoever is sent to this district, if they shall see this, I hope they will understand we are interested and will do all in our power to assist them. However, there is one hardship which I can not help, that is, a four-mile walk to each service, as the church is two miles away.

Hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion and her people, will close by asking an interest in the prayers of all God's people.

ISAIAH M. DUNGAN.

DUNSMORE, South Dakota, May 3, 1909.

Editors Herald: I would gladly render any assistance possible if any old friends coming this way would call on us.

Since seeing by conference minutes that Bro. W. E. Peak, who has spent twenty-two years in the ministry to my knowledge, and who, when we were young and weak in the work, did sustain and forbear and encourage and teach us more fully in the Lord's work, also Bro. Alvin Knisley, (though not having seen him, have read so much from his pen that I feel well acquainted with him,) and Bro. Edward Rannie, whom we also met many years ago, before there were wrinkles in the corners of his eyes, but who wanted a few hairs on the top of his head for it to part well, whom we have long esteemed for his steadfastness and single heartedness,—as we noticed they were appointed to this field, I could not resist the temptation of taking a little of your space to announce to them that I would be glad to see them. Not forgetting Bro. Swenson, who is also appointed to this place, and any other elder that may chance to come this way.

Myself and Bro. J. A. Donaldson, who contemplates coming to South Dakota in the near future, have been corresponding for some time and have been discussing the possibility and propriety of asking for a reunion at some convenient point in South Dakota, as there are some few Saints scattered over the State and who seem anxiously awaiting some opportunity to take some part in the work. And as such efficient workers and so many of them, I hope that it may be possible to arrange for a conference or reunion for the benefit of us scattered members, as well as afford an opportunity for others to hear and accept the work.

While we feel that South Dakota is the busiest place on earth, unless it be the "Canal Zone" or "Turkey," I find many humble, kind-hearted people who, if they could find time, would consider the work. But there are such unbounded opportunities for making money by farming—in fact in various ways, that while there are many humble people it is hard for them to find time to go to church. Just as soon as the frost is out of the ground sufficiently all hands fall to work, with from two horses up, and seldom break the trot until the ground is frozen and the weather so cold that they can not keep up steam in their engines.

By what appears from the present indications the church is entering an era of great importance. Never before have I seen such an interest of such intensity manifest in the law relating to temporal things. Many and varied have been the views expressed and the comments are many. As I feel deeply interested in the issue I wish to say that I can not see that any evil can come from the airing the subject has undoubtedly received. Surely sections 42, 106, 126, and others in the Doctrine and Covenants have been read and reread by every member of the church that takes the HERALD. I can not see that any one should wish to hinder the discussion of such an important matter, so long as there is any one that feels that he should speak upon the matter. It occurs to my mind that it is like all other matters: while well understood by the Lord it must be studied and taught to and by his people, and like the sifting of the grain upon the threshing-floor, the chaff will be blown not out of the Master's word, but out of the minds of his children; and those who seek for the purpose of complying with the law will find, and those are the only kind that will be permitted to remain in the Holy City at last. So my advice, or opinion, or any other word that can express it to the most sensitive mind without offense, would be not to be discouraged or over-exercised because of the temporal question, as is being brought to the front with such directness. To me, it means that the time has arrived when the Lord is demanding that his people shall prove him and that they must recognize the all-important feature of his work; that they must be one; and how can it be better manifest that I love my brother and feel for him as I feel for myself, than by placing all at the feet of the Lord with the intent and desire that those that have not the comforts of life might have them, or receive them through and in the channel provided by our Master. Such a beautiful arrangement, such a wonderful and blessed method of compensation in the distribution of the bounties of nature! What a saving of time, energy, and cost of transfer to have such an office as the bishop in the house of the Lord where any of his children that are in need may apply and feel sure that they will not be turned away! What better way could there be? How appropriate that our father should have a storehouse from whence his needy children might draw the needs of this life. We must come to the front and occupy the hitherto partially occupied position, or suffer a reaction and spiritual distress hitherto unknown to this generation. This is not a weird or pessimistic view, I hardly think; the Lord has been leading us for many years up to this one point and in so doing, to my mind, we will be occupying the "higher" plain the Master has so repeatedly mentioned.

The tithing, consecration, and Order of Enoch must be put into practice, or the Lord has spoken to us in vain. I do not pose as a forecaster, but what is a most prominent thing those with but ordinary foresight can not be to blame for seeing. I feel that I have been as backward and blind and slow to see as any one that has a desire to see, and I confess many weaknesses, and when the light is turned by the Spirit I feel very much ashamed, sorry and penitent, and forthwith call upon the Lord for power to repent and confess.

So hoping that all may succeed in their efforts to build a character that may be like our Master, is my prayer.

In bonds,

C. F. PRATT.

KANSAS CITY, Kansas, April 28, 1909.

To the Herald: When I was a child I was taught that to drink tea and coffee was wrong, so I drank only two or three cups of tea at neighbors' in about the first twenty-three years of my life, but I liked it very much. When I was twenty-three I kept house for my father-in-law for a few weeks and had to make tea for him. I liked it, so I began to sip a little and then to take a cupful sometimes; then when I went to my own house I made some once a day for several months, then I quit for one year, then drank it once a day for months and so on, always quitting and failing in a few months. I argued some of the best of the church used it. I had heard it was not a sin; the Word of Wisdom did not forbid it; and you may know I wanted to drink it bad enough to rake up every argument in favor of it. I was on a street-car once and saw an advertisement of tea on a bill-board and a wild frenzy came over me and I wanted to go home and get some quick. Sometimes I have heard a conversation and some one would say, and we had a cup of tea. Instantly a passionate appetite would come over me like a devouring fire; my throat would parch; my breath become hot, my head swim, and I have had to grip something to steady myself. This may sound silly to cool-headed, practical people, but I believe I have had more than a human appetite for tea, that I might know what some suffer over drink.

One night last fall I dreamed I was in a room that represented the work of my life. It looked like a grocery store, that is, the walls were lined with shelves full of small articles; the tables were full. The work in here was finished and I went to the door and back again trying to keep busy and yet I knew the work in that room was finished and I ought to go in the next room. I went through the door and stood there, putting the last piece of the casing on. I would lay the board on and it would be crooked only a hair breadth, and I would argue with my conscience, "I have seen lots of professionals not put it as straight." I did not drive any nails, then I would fix it again, but still not perfect. Then a voice commanded me to stop trifling and work. "You must be mistress; you must sanction no weakness; you must yield to no temptation; you must overcome your love for tea; you must quit it for ever."

I thought to myself, I have been so tempted and I have tried to overcome. The voice said, "As long as you live you will be in the midst of temptation, you must rise above it. You must rule yourself before you can do the work I want you to do." Then I heard the voice of Bro. John Rushton saying, "That which is born of the flesh is fleshy, that which is born of the Spirit is spiritual. In proportion as you are born of the Spirit you can know no temptation or trial. You will be above them." Then I saw in the air in front of me, in letters of fire, about six words, interwoven. They were the names of my weaknesses. The first was tea. The voice said, "If you triumph over the first the others will be gone; they have grown out of your allowing your will power to weaken by taking tea." A hand stretched forth to show me and removed the word tea and the others fell to the floor and disappeared.

I then turned to this second room, my new work. The room was very large, I did not see how large. There was nothing done, but the material to furnish the room with was all in it, only in crates or bundles. I stepped to the nearest crate, which was as large as a piano. I leaned against it, bowed my head and waited for tools to work with. I have not touched tea since, God alone knows the effort.

I had made up my mind a little while before this that I would leave spiritual things alone for ever. I would attend the meetings, do my duty, pay my tithing, work in the Sunday-school, Religio, aid society, visit the sick, help where I can, break no law, and when the end comes God can not turn me down, but I thought I will not dabble in spiritual things. When that voice said, "That which is of the flesh is fleshy," I saw where I stood. I was willing to work with my hands, mouth, and pocketbook, and I thought, I will do more than my share, so God can not condemn me; but I can not tell you the disgust with which I viewed all my fleshly resolutions. Does our Father talk foolishness when he says, "Come up higher"? If I can not take my pet weaknesses to heaven with me, can you? If I must strain every nerve to get there, can others be wafted on flowery beds of ease?

May we by God's help come up higher.

PINE BARREN, Florida, May 6, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been in this glorious work for two years and am not yet weary. I am so glad to know that I am engaged in the true work of Jesus Christ. I am only ten years old. I have six sisters and three brothers. All except three belong to the church. My mother and father are both living.

I pray that the time will come when the people will obey God. I want all the Saints to pray for me.

Home Again.

It is an old and true saying, "Be it ever so humble, there is no place like home." On December 6, 1875, I located near Stewartville, Missouri, in the Far West District, one third of a century ago. At that time there were not to exceed seventy-five Saints in the district, and not one house of worship owned by our people. To-day there are fifteen churches with about two thousand members.

Many that were near and dear to us by the ties of the gospel (the strongest of all ties), with whom we labored in the interest of the angel's message, and sat in heavenly places, have been called to the other shore, and others whose voices were heard in the interest of Zion's cause are in other fields from the Atlantic to the Pacific, still laboring faithfully for the cause that is so dear to us all.

During the last few years I have labored in Scranton, Pennsylvania, and in the land of my birth, Wales, and there, as well as here, I met with some that have a warm place in my heart, and whose names I shall always cherish.

Now, dear Saints, I appreciate very much to have the privilege to labor in my home district (Far West) in the interest of the pearl of great price, the kingdom of God, and I am ready and willing to occupy where I can do the most good, not forgetting the needs of the work in the neighborhood of the isolated ones and of the necessity of presenting the word to those that never have heard. In order that I may labor where good can be done, I hope to hear from any that are interested and willing to assist in getting a place to hold services.

My home address is 517 North Twentieth Street, St. Joseph, Missouri.

WILLIAM LEWIS.

A Cry from Macedonia.—North Manchester Branch (England) Appeals for a Church.

The Saints of Macedonia were in want of help; God by his power, through vision in the night, caused a man to appear before Paul. This man stood in front of the apostle and prayed him to go over to Macedonia and help them. Paul was not slow to understand the manifestation; he gave heed unto the heavenly vision, went preaching the gospel, and winning souls for Christ. The Macedonian cry was not in vain, for it resulted in the establishment of many churches in the regions round about. The gospel ensign was lifted up and the honest in heart were gathered into the fold.

We have scriptural evidence to prove that God heard the cry of the honest in heart in Macedonia and gave unto them the gospel which they so much desired. Surely then he has the power to-day to impress the cry of the Saints of North Manchester, England, upon the hearts of his people throughout the church in all the world.

To the Saints in the British Isles particularly, and to the Saints throughout the world in common, I therefore take this opportunity of drawing your attention to the appeal of the above-named branch, which appears in the SAINTS' HERALD for March 10, 1909, for financial aid to erect a suitable place of worship to the honor and glory of God and Christ.

The Saints of the North Manchester Branch have been laboring for years to spread the truth of the gospel, paying rent for a mission-room which they designated their church, within which they erected their altar of prayer to the known God of latter-day Israel. Many happy seasons of prayer and communion with God and the Saints have been held in this little Bethel.

The efforts of the Saints and ministry have met with fair success in winning souls for Christ in the neighborhood of this branch, but they are all poor, so far as this world counts riches, and now necessity has compelled them to give up the tenancy of their Bethel. They have rented another room for the time being, and are paying rent for the same as they have done in the past, but they are anxious to have a place that they can call their home and which shall ultimately become the property of the church.

The Saints are full of faith and although they can not see when they will be able to raise sufficient to enable them to build a place of their own, they are going forward, trusting in the God of Israel, whose Spirit inspires them, with the hope that their cry will be heard. On their part they are making sacrifices out of the little that they possess, but that little is so small that it will take them (by their own effort) years to attain the object they have in view.

I do not claim to have had a vision or a dream, but I sincerely believe that God has inspired my mind to use my pen in behalf of his children in this particular part of his vineyard, so that possibly I might awaken to activity the pure minds of the honest-hearted Saints throughout the world, thereby causing them individually to feel that they can and will at this time succor those who cry for help.

Come, ye sons and daughters of latter-day Israel, shall the "Macedonian cry" of the North Manchester Saints be in vain? I trow not, for Jesus said, " whatsoever ye ask in faith believing, it shall be granted unto you."

Knowing that the officers and members of this branch are assiduous in their efforts in promulgating the gospel and being convinced that this appeal is a just one, I ask one and all to heed the admonition of the Spirit if it should impress them to favor this appeal; those that have and to spare, to give of their abundance; those that have enough but none to spare, will be blessed of God if they make a little sacrifice should they be so impressed; those that have not enough, therefore none to spare, and can not even sacrifice, to be just to their own, can pray the Father to cause the ears of his people to hear this "Macedonian cry" from North Manchester, and to cause a sympathetic chord to respond with determination to help, and "our Father" will accept it as a desire to help, if they had the means to help with.

A church fully equipped, suitable for the purpose required, would cost, including land, about five hundred pounds, or about two thousand five hundred dollars. Donations for the purpose named will be thankfully received and acknowledged on behalf of the North Manchester Branch.

Checks, post-office orders, and postal orders should be crossed and made payable at the post-office, Great Western Street, Moss Side.

JOSEPH DEWSNUP.

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, May 2, very cold and windy. Small attendance at Sunday-school at the beginning. Latter Day Saints should set an example to the world for promptness. If some of us would take the same interest in our worldly positions as we do in the Lord's work, I think we would not give very good satisfaction, but would be changing positions most of the time. "The children of this world are wiser than the children of light."

Excellent sermon by Elder J. M. Stubbart on the "judgment." We will have no excuse to offer at that time, and if we are dilatory and careless here we will reap a poor reward.

The sacrament-service at three o'clock in the afternoon in charge of Elders J. T. Hackett and P. Pement, was well attended, and every one was greatly blessed. Elder Hackett uttered a prophecy containing much encouragement to the Saints, that they would be able to meet their obligations of the church, others would be gathered into the fold, and they would be blessed in their services, but all depending upon conditions, they must be prayerful and humble and obedient children. How loving and kind the Lord is if we will only do our duty! Sometimes we may feel we do not receive great blessings, but if we look over our lives I feel that we must confess that the Lord has done as much as possible for us, considering the conditions, using a worldly phrase. No services in the evening.

Prayer-meeting Wednesday evening, May 5, held at Bro. Henry Keir's. As the gas was put in before Friday the Religio was held at the church Friday evening, and choir practice following.

Sunday, May 9. Rainy and cold, very small attendance at Sunday-school and services. Interesting sermon by F. G. Pitt. The home we will occupy in the eternal world will be determined by the materials we are using now in the building, whether hay, stubble, or precious stones; will our works be burned? Good instruction given in the evening by Elder P. Pement.

Sr. Arthur Sherman, who was so badly burned, is gradually improving, but two of the children now have the scarlet fever, which increases her burden. May our prayers ascend daily for this family, and also for others of our number who are sick, besides those outside of the fold. Little Harold Cochran has the measles, but we hope for the speedy recovery of all the dear ones.

The Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

The Saints and friends of the district of London, England, of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, please take notice that Bro. Richard Clift, address 87 Broke Road, Queens Road, Dalston, London, N. E. England, has been duly appointed Bishop's agent for said church in and for the district named.

Bro. Clift has been duly authorized to act in behalf of the Presiding Bishopric in financial work in said district, and we bespeak for him the assistance and help, faith and prayers of the Saints. Trusting that all may remember that it is right and proper to fulfill their respective obligations as Saints in temporal matters as well as those more directly relating to the spiritual, and honor the law of Christ in thus honoring his agents duly appointed and commissioned to receive according to the order of his work, and trusting the Lord will remember and bless each one, and that every one may be a helper, I am, in behalf of the Bishopric of said church,

Very Respectfully,

E. L. KELLEY, Presiding Bishop.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 7, 1909.

Pastoral.

To the Members of the Original London, Ontario, District; Greeting: By General Conference resolutions of April 7 and 9, 1909, the London, Ontario, District was divided into four new ones, viz, the Saskatchewan, Winnipeg, London, and Toronto, described as per minutes of General Conference on above dates.

It being necessary to organize the new districts as soon as practical, personal letters have been mailed to the presidents of the branches within said original district, giving notice of time and object of the same.

The union conference of the Toronto and London districts will convene with the Saints in the city of St. Thomas at ten a. m., June 12, at which time the necessary business will be transacted. The Saints and friends of that city have courteously offered to provide lodging free of charge to all parties, and free board for the missionaries; but those not of the mission staff will be expected to pay fifteen cents per meal; arrangements having been thus made at a restaurant.

The railroads having agreed to supply delegate certificates, you are therefore requested not to purchase a return ticket, but rather a single, getting the required certificate.

The Winnipeg District will be organized at the Rosendale reunion, the Saskatchewan at the Saskatoon reunion, further notice of which will be sent to the HERALD and Ensign at a later date, by Elder J. L. Mortimer, who is arranging time, etc., of the said reunions.

The many calls for more missionaries impel us to invite you to come prepared to pay of your tithes and offerings into the Lord's storehouse as he has prospered you.

In gospel bonds, your collaborators,

R. C. RUSSELL,
U. W. GREENE,

Ministers in charge of the Eastern States and Canada.
ARTHUR, Ontario, May 10, 1909.

To the Saints of Maine and Nova Scotia; Greeting: I have been appointed by the ministers in charge of the Eastern Mission to look after the needs of the work in the state of Maine and the province of Nova Scotia, and in order that I may understand the situation and the particular needs of the different localities, I would like to hear from Saints and friends living in the above places. I shall do all I can for the work, trying to keep in mind the greatest good to the greatest number, but will need the help and coöperation of all the brethren, those laboring locally as well as those laboring in the missionary field. If possible I shall leave home by the 15th of May. Letters sent to my home address, Thornton, Rhode Island, will reach me. Please let me hear from you.

Yours as ever,

GEORGE W. ROBLEY.

PROVIDENCE, Rhode Island, May 5, 1909.

Having been appointed submissionary in charge of the Virginias, the Saints and friends wishing preaching done in their respective places will confer a favor by writing me either at my home address, which is Stevenson, Ontario, Conference Notices.

Southeastern Illinois District will convene with the branch at Tunnel Hill on Saturday, June 5, 1909, at 10 a. m. I hope to get a complete report from each branch in the district, with the usual assessment of one dollar or more to create a fund in district treasury for district expenses. Send reports to me at Xenia, Illinois, so I will get them three or four days before conference or bring them to conference. I hope all the officers in each branch will send in a report of their labors. A. H. Burroughs, secretary.

Central Illinois District will convene at Taylorville, Illinois, June 12 and 13, 1909. All are invited to attend. Charles C. Simpson, secretary.

Spring River district conference will be held at Fairland, Oklahoma, June 5 and 6, Sunday-school and Religio conventions will be held June 4. Mollie Davis, secretary.

Conference of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District will be held with the Saints at Coldwater, Michigan, on June 12, 1909, at 10 a. m., and continue over the 13th. We trust to see a good representation from all over the district. Please do not wait until Saturday afternoon to get to conference, but come so as to attend the Sunday-school convention, of which you will see the notice. Francis Granger, secretary.

Northwestern Kansas District will convene at Alexander, Kansas, June 5, at 2 p. m., in the district tent. Branches of the district, please take notice and send their reports in on time. Branches wishing the reunion this fall send in request to this conference for same. John A. Teeters, president.

The conference of the Little Sioux District will be held at Magnolia, June 5 and 6. Prayer-service begins at 9 a. m., and business-session opens at 10.30 a. m. James D. Stuart, clerk.

Northern Nebraska District convenes at Omaha, June 5, 9 a. m., for prayer-service and 10 for business. Branches need not send delegates, as the delegate system has been abolished. Branch presidents and clerks are requested to see that their reports are in on time. All invited. Anna Hicks, secretary, 3019 Pinkney Street, Omaha, Nebraska.

Kewanee District will convene at Kewanee, June 5 and 6. All reports should reach the secretary not later than June 2. Mary E. Gillin, 1317 Main Street, Peoria, Illinois.

The Spokane District will convene with the Spokane Branch, corner Third and Smith Streets, June 12 and 13, 1909, at 10 a. m. Margaret Fordham, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Religio of the Des Moines District will convene at Boone, Iowa, June 5, 1909, at Saints' chapel. Secretaries of locals please send in their reports and credentials at once. It is hoped a good attendance will be present. Blanche Cushatt, secretary, Baxter, Iowa.

Sunday-schools of the Clinton District will meet in convention May 28, 1909, at 9 a. m., at Coal Hill chapel; also the Religio will meet in the forenoon at the same place and date. Please send in credentials. Zora Lowe, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

We are pleased to announce that the Nauvoo District will again hold a reunion at Park Bluff, Montrose, Iowa, just across the Mississippi from Nauvoo, beginning July 30 and closing August 8. The ground is a beautiful park overlooking the river and many miles of the surrounding country with its towns and villages. Summer cottages, to a limited number, may be rented, (or tents if preferred,) at reasonable rates. Board may be had upon the ground, excellent train service, artesian mineral water upon the ground, and the place is altogether one of beauty, health, and enjoyment. No better place for the summer vacation. With the ministry who will be present a spiritual feast is assured. Further particulars will be announced later, or special information may be had of Bro. M. H. Siegfried, Nauvoo, Illinois, or of the undersigned.

For the committee,

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN.

The title of the "Great Physician" is accorded to our Master. He himself recognized it, in a way, as we find recorded in Matthew 9: 12. He had been rebuked for mingling with publicans and sinners. He met the rebuke in his characteristic, straightforward manner with the statement: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick."

The character of Christ is many-sided. It is like a diamond that presents many facets, and each facet is perfect. At each new angle we catch a ray of light that seems to us to be brighter than any that we have before seen. Isaiah loved to regard him as a "leader and a commander." To John he was the "light of the world." Paul regarded him as an "elder brother." The world has loved to think of him as a martyr, and to dwell upon the scenes of the crucifixion, the virtue of the cross, and the blood that was shed upon Calvary.

A martyr is great only when he is martyred because of some great conviction or principle. In a way the witches at Salem were martyrs, but we do not love to dwell upon their martyrdom, because neither they nor their murderers stood for anything great or good. Socrates was a martyr in a higher sense. When convicted by an authoritative court of his own land he refused to flee (although escape was offered him and he felt that he was innocent of the charges preferred against him), because he had always taught that a man should be subject to the laws of the land and the decisions of the courts. Therefore he drank the hemlock rather than violate his lifelong conviction. His death stood for something.

Above all martyrs stands Christ who was martyred in the interest of the salvation of all men. But we do not care to dwell on his death, or the idea of his crucifixion, but rather upon those principles for which he died, an observance of which will bring health, happiness, and eternal life to all who are obedient. We prefer to write of him as a "Great Physician."

The physician gets close to humanity. No other man, unless it is the minister, gets closer to human nature. He knows the follies and vices of men and women. He sees the consequences of their iniquities and secret sins. He studies and observes the handiwork of the great Creator. He knows more about the anatomy of the human form than any other professional man knows, (unless perhaps it is the sculptor or the artist.) And he sees more of the abnormal than is seen by either the sculptor or the artist. He sees the human form on the dissecting table. He sees it bloated with dropsy, and wasted with consumption. If any man in the world is in a position to become contemptuous of the "human form divine" it would seem to be the physician. But on the other hand, he sees the heights to which humanity can rise. He knows the marvelously intricate construction of the human body, and the mysterious processes of life that are of such common occurrence that other men do not notice them. If he finds degenerates and cowards in his practice, he also finds brave men and noble women. He knows, for instance, that every time a life comes into the world some woman goes down into the valley of the shadow of death. He stands by many bedsides which are surrounded by men and women who love life yet pray with intensest emotion, "Lord, take me! Let me die and let this other one recover!" From it all, if he is a man of sense, there will be born into his heart compassion and love for man and affection and reverence toward the Creator.

Christ as the "Great Physician" got close to humanity. He saw man's degradation and shame; his sins, follies, and vices; but he also saw the capabilities that were wrapped up in human nature, and he never lost faith in man. He appealed to the best in human nature, and always maintained his faith in man and in man's ability to respond to the divine appeal. He considered man worth the supreme sacrifice.

The physician holds a peculiar place in the community, mediating as he does between life and death. Often he is loved or hated in proportion to his success or failure in the treatment of those who come under his care. When the doctor has watched all night at the bedside of some child whose life is hanging in the balance, enlisting his skill, experience, and care in the service of the forces of life, and finally the child is saved, the parents of that child naturally feel a great sense of gratitude and love for their physician. The family doctor easily becomes the confidant and adviser in spiritual as well as temporal things.

Those who have read "Beside the Bonny Briar Bush" recall the fact that some of the most touching scenes in that wonderful book of human nature are connected with the work of old Doctor William Maclure who never found the day too hot or too cold or the journey too long and wearisome to respond when any of his highland brethren were in sore straits. His crowning achievement was in the case of the wife of Tammas Mitchell. Anna's sickness was beyond his skill, but he was touched by the sorrow of the husband who could not express his feelings, excepting in the dumb misery of his eyes, and so the old doctor at his own expense brought the queen's own physician all the way from London, through storm and flood, and the life of Anna Mitchell was saved.

The next Sunday when homely old William Maclure passed the kirkyard on his white pony, bound for some distant home where he was needed, the men assembled in the kirkyard for once forgot their Scotch reserve and removed their hats, and as he passed out of sight they gave him three cheers.

But on the other hand, when a physician has prescribed a certain course or undertaken a difficult operation and the fates are against him, it is sometimes thought that he has sacrificed the loved one,—that he has bungled or been indiscreet, or has experimented, and the former affection turns to dislike, distrust, or even the most intense hatred.

Christ came to his people at a critical time. They, as well as the balance of the world, were in a serious spiritual condition. Jeremiah had cried out, "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"—Jeremiah 8:22.

Christ came in answer to that appeal. No people were ever granted a greater opportunity than came to his people at that time. He was a man of their own race. Jewish blood coursed in his veins. One of their own women was his mother. He came to them speaking their own tongue, yet bringing wisdom from above, and the very plan and power needed to purify, cleanse, and heal them. At first they accepted him and loved him, cast their palm branches in his path, and welcomed him to the temple; but the course he prescribed did not please them and they turned against him and heaped upon him the most bitter persecution, scourged him, spat in his face, and crucified him. Having been rejected of them he turned to the world, and Paul presents him to us as a prototype of the serpent that was lifted up in the wilderness, that whosoever would look thereon might live.

There are two kinds of sickness in the world, or possibly it is more correct to say there are two manifestations of one kind of sickness. There is physical sickness and spiritual sickness. It is probable, however, that they are both centered in one common root—spiritual sickness—which is the result of broken law.

The physicians of the day recognize the fact that in order to remove physical disease there must be a purification of the physical system. All manner of corruption must be cast out. That is the line on which Christ works, and those who study this gospel will find that it strikes at the root of all disease, and that from beginning to end, from the first principle to the last, it is intended to cast out corruption and restore human nature to a condition of purity. It is a work of regeneration.

Those who will examine the gospel principles as named by Paul in Hebrews, 6th chapter, will discover the force of the preceding argument. The first thing that is required is faith. No physician can be of any service to a patient who does not have faith in him. If the patient refuses to take the doctor's medicine, or persists in eating ham and eggs when he has been instructed to be careful in his diet, will not forsake the bad habits that are the cause of his sickness, nails the window down when he has been told to get fresh air, the physician may as well abandon the case. If he collects a fee at all it should be regarded as a fine and not as a fee. There must be a coöperation between the physician and the patient, a coöperation that is based on mutual confidence. God seems to have faith in man and in his ability to respond to the gospel requirements, but it is a standing marvel that man has so little faith in God.

Repentance comes in its proper place, and in obedience to this principle the patient abandons former evil habits and takes up a new line of life that is calculated to restore him to a condition of health and peace. His sins are washed away in the waters of baptism. The evil of his nature is purged away by the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost. All the way through he is coöperating with God toward the regeneration and the purification of his entire being.

It used to be the idea, not so many years ago, that when a man was sick the proper thing to do was to take something. But now physicians lay more stress on the idea of doing something. Some of the leading physicians now tell us that doctors know very little regarding the effects that many of the drugs commonly used will produce upon the human system. They were given because of the general tendency to take something; and even when physicians themselves had little faith in the virtues of the drugs given or demanded, they were forced to pander to the demand of their patients for something to take, and at times supplied that demand with powdered sugar or bread pills (What Doctor Cabot calls a placebo), something to put the patient's mind at ease while the forces of his own being worked out a cure. But now the physician makes inquiry into the habits of the individual, his work and his diet, and instructs him regarding the methods of his life, how he shall nourish his body, what exercise he shall take, how he shall obtain fresh air.

Christ aims to heal people more by giving them something to do than by giving them something to take. His doctrine is squarely opposed to the idea often presented that there is nothing for the repentant sinner to do,—that Christ has done it all. There are many things that he can do and must do; for while it is true that no man can save himself, Christ will save no man who is not willing to do his part of the work.

The cure that the Great Physician brought to the world is briefly stated in John, the third chapter, "Ye must be born again." This is the only adequate cure for the various moral, spiritual, and economic disorders of the world. Nothing else will ever reach the diseases that are now preying upon society; and those who have studied conditions in our great cities, as well as in the rural districts, have noticed the record of life contained in our daily papers, and have caught the undercurrent of gossip in every community, need not be told that the world is sin-cursed and needs the help of the Great Physician.

It is one thing to cure an individual and quite another to keep him well. Every physician knows that when an individual has been restored to health the permanency of his cure can not be guaranteed if he returns to the habits that were responsible for his sickness.

In Philippians 4:8, we find one of the methods outlined by which man can maintain spiritual health after having been born again, as follows:

Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

It is absolutely true that thoughts are the seeds from which our actions spring. If we permit our thoughts to dwell upon things that engage the attention of worldly people, our conduct will be precisely like the conduct of worldly people. We should give heed to this advice and permit our minds to dwell upon the things of virtue and truth, upon that which is of good report.

We should not permit our minds to be the channels through which the vile and filthy scandal of our neighborhood shall flow. If there is anything of good report in the conduct or lives of our neighbors we may think upon it. If they are absolutely devoid of good they are neither worth thinking about nor talking about.

We should not permit our minds to get into such condition that they would cast a dark shadow if brought into contact with the rays of divine light. If we do, we must suffer the penalty, because it is absolutely unavoidable. We may as well take note that every man who falls from grace has paved the way for his own fall by a train of thought that has led up to it. We read or hear of individuals who have fallen from grace, and have become immoral or dishonest, and all the time they have been credited with being pillars in the church, a strength to the community. It comes upon us suddenly and we think that their fall has been sudden. Possibly we are correct, in some instances, but the chances are that they have been thinking a long time about the particular temptation which overthrew them. It found place in their minds and finally shaped their conduct.

Christ is the Great Physician and like all other physicians he presents his bill to those who enlist his services. His charges are above all others. He makes the same demand that Abraham Lincoln made of the young man who was about to be shot for sleeping at his post,—he was pardoned, and then the demand was made that he should give his entire life to the Union cause and never sleep while on duty or finch when in the face of danger. His methods are similar to those employed by the surgeons who followed the Union army. As soon as the sick or wounded soldiers began to recover and gain a little strength they were set to waiting on others. It is not a matter of record that many of them refused to carry cold water or share a scanty ration. How is it with us?

IMMORTALITY.

We think the following from the pen of John James Ingalls worthy of space and a careful reading:

Many years ago I heard a distinguished American orator deliver a lecture upon the evidence of immortality outside the Bible. In the stress and pressure he held the rapt and breathless attention of an immense audience, comprising all that was most cultured, brilliant, and renowned in the social and official life of the capital.

He dwelt with remarkable effectiveness and power upon the fact that nowhere in nature, from the highest to the lowest, was an instinct, an impulse, a desire implanted, but that ultimately were found the conditions and the opportunities for its fullest realization. He instanced the wild fowl that, moved by some mysterious impulse, start on their prodigious migrations from the frozen fens of the pole and reach at last the shining South and the summer seas; the fish that from tropic gulfs seek their spawning grounds in the cool, bright rivers of the North; the bees that find in the garniture of fields and forests the treasure with which they store cells, and even the wolf, the lion and the tiger, that are provided with their prey.

Turning to humanity, he alluded to the brevity of life! its incompleteness, its aimless, random and fragmentary careers; its tragedies, its injustices, its sorrow and separations. Then he referred to the insatiable hunger for knowledge, the efforts of the unconquerable mind to penetrate the mysteries of the future; its capacity to comprehend infinity and eternity, its desire for the companionship of the departed; its unquenchable aspirations for immortality; and he asked, "Why should God keep faith with the beast, the bee, the fish, and the fowl, and cheat man?"

"JOURNAL OF HISTORY" FREE.

The editors desire to call the attention of HERALD readers to a very generous offer made by the business manager, to be found in the advertising columns of this issue. By the arrangement there outlined our readers can not only secure the Church History at very reasonable rates, on easy payments, but they can also obtain the Journal of History absolutely free. Read the advertisement. You can not afford to let this chance slip.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday morning was devoted to the Lamoni High School. Elder E. A. Smith delivered the baccalaureate address for the graduating class. This class consists of thirteen members and for the first time in the history of the high school the boys outnumber the girls.

Elder J. A. Gunsolley occupied in the evening.

The first field meet of the schools of this section occurred Saturday. The schools entering were Grace-land College, Leon, Lamoni, Mt. Ayr, Humeston, Van Wert and Davis City high schools. There was a good attendance, and also a good feeling. Graceland carried off the honors.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

"The story of the Evanelia," by Sr. Emma Burton, increases in interest as it develops. The June number of Autumn Leaves will contain the third installment of this story. In this number Sr. Burton tells how the French government officials threw obstacles in the way of the missionaries with a view to force the recall of the Evanelia and how they were finally outwitted by Bro. Burton who made Metuaore (a French citizen) captain and half owner of the vessel to comply with their rules. The June number also contains another installment of Elder Stebbins' interesting study of the Jaredite lands in ancient and modern times. This article is finely illustrated with views of scenes in Mexico and Central America.

The First Congregational Church of Jersey City has decided that because of lack of interest in Bible study in their Sunday-school, they will take up economics and government instead. There was considerable discussion, but almost all members thought something must be done to maintain interest in the church. The Christian Standard comments that this is a foretaste of what may be expected if the Chicago University type of Christian doctrine is given a footing among us. It is the legitimate fruit of the old skepticism, which passes as "New Thought."

In Philadelphia there has been held a convention of the Federation of Religious Liberals. At one of its sessions, a deacon in one of the Germantown Baptist churches entered a single-handed protest against the stand of this federation that Christ was not the son of God, throwing down the gauntlet to such a belief. But there came no answer to his challenge and the body resumed its business.

Professor Lowell, of Harvard University, says that destruction to inhabitants of the world will come in one of four ways: By a collision with a tramp star; or with the sun or some other planet; by paralysis through force of tidal friction from the sun and moon; or by heart failure resulting by which the earth will lose its water and air by their escape into space.

The Straight Road

THE OLD PATHS.

(Synopsis of a sermon by Elder S. M. Reiste.)

ELDER S. M. REISTE.

Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.—Jeremiah 6:16-20.

I believe that there is no one here this evening but that will agree with me that the prophet here refers to the various spiritual paths on which the people were traveling, and that it did make a difference as to what path they were on without regard to their sincerity. "Stand in the ways and see." Consider where you are going, and the end of the path you are traveling.

Not long ago while traveling, I got into conversation with a gentleman to whom I made known my business, and in outlining the faith, I took occasion to say, "We aim to appeal more largely to a man's reason, and not so much to his emotions."

He said, "But the fact of the matter is that people do not think; they simply follow their file leaders and let other people do their thinking for them."

"But," said I, "If man is a reasoning animal, as has been said, and you take away from him the fact that he reasons, then are you not degrading him to the level of the brute creation?"

He answered, "Well, do you not find many people who do not reason on religious subjects?"

I was forced to admit that I did; that many did not know the first thing that was in their creed or confession of faith, leaving that matter entirely to the judgment of others.

I have heard that a flock of sheep crossing a railroad track will follow on one after another regardless of the fact that those who went before were ground beneath the wheels; and I have sometimes thought that humanity was very much the same. We well know the results, or end, of the paths of vice, of sin, of selfishness, of inharmony with the word of God, and yet we blindly follow on, and on, and on, till eternity dawns on our vision.

It is said that one of the principal streets of Boston is very crooked and that it was first laid out by a calf in its daily going to the water, that this calf path was widened out into a road, and finally became a street. And it seems to me that no matter how crooked a path may be, or how out of harmony with reason or the word of God a system of religion may be, if it is preached with proper eloquence, and continuously, by educated men, it will soon have numerous followers, and the more crooked the path the more numerous the followers will be. But my text tells us to seek for the old paths wherein dwelleth righteousness.

It is foolish to follow the crowd without an understanding of where you are going. Yet the tendency of the age is to go with the masses, or as a young man in Maquoketa said, "I joined the —church because the most pretty girls went there." That may have been the extent of his religion. I do not know.

"But," the people of whom the prophet spoke said, "we will not walk therein; we will not hearken." "Therefore," says God, "I will bring evil upon this people, even the product of their own thoughts."

I do not know where hell is and I do not care, but this tells me, and reason, my conception of God, —all tell me that it will be the fruit, a natural result of our thoughts, the logical result of our actions. A great many people think of God as being pitiless and hard-hearted because the sinner is punished, but this puts the evil that comes to him as a natural result, and the hell in which he suffers to a large extent is of his own creation; that is, he makes the condition of his environment. He will simply at death come to a realization of his true condition, and although he may have formerly enjoyed that condition, it now becomes hateful to him, but without being able to save himself, he goes on and on.

The path to glory has been thought by some to be a hard road, but is not nearly so hard as the way of the transgressor.

The old path is good at the beginning, along the journey, and at the end. Words fail to express the joy of the new awakening when the soul turns to God and springs into new existence by the power of the Spirit. The birds seem to sing more sweetly, flowers take on a brighter hue, and even the prosier things of life and toil seem to have a halo of golden glory thrown over them so that one feels to be indeed born again. He is as a traveler starting out in the morning, to some extent dreading the difficulties of the day, yet the rosy tints of the sun and the dewy fragrance of the flowers all seem to lend inspiration to him as he moves along the way. This inspiration, however, does not come to the laggard, either in natural or spiritual matters.

Again it is good along the way. Though beset with dangers, yet it is sweet indeed to experience the companionship when the Father and the Son take up their abode with us.

Some one has said that "man is a social animal," and we agree with him. We form various societies, as the Free Masons, the Odd Fellows, Woodmen, Eastern Stars, Rebeccas, etc., mainly for the purpose of fellowship. We languish without it, yet the sweetest of fellowship is with the Father and the Son, and the Household of Faith. (1 John 1: 3-7.)

This bond of union, this fellowship of the Saints, becomes at last a stronger tie than that of kindred and friends. The Savior seemed to give expression to this sentiment when he said, "He that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my mother, my sister, and my brother." This strong bond of Christian fellowship fills human need and desire, and makes all other societies simply superfluous to the Christian.

Again, it is sweet because of the joy of service. The world is long in learning the lesson that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Yet it is a fact that our chief joys always come second-handed,—a reflection of other's joy by our acts of kindness. He who is truly great is a public benefactor. Andrew Carnegie is not great because he succeeded in amassing a huge fortune, but he may be great because he is spending that fortune in establishing libraries all through the land to the great advantage of the youth of our country.

To demonstrate the possibility of the Christ-life in all conditions, and thus guide our fellow men in the "straight and narrow way," is truly a mark of greatness, for "He that ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

Again, this path is good at the end. As the sunset of life draws on, the memory of kind acts and loving words, of lives made brighter, and sad hearts cheered, will cast a halo of glory all around the memory of our earth-life; and though there may be clouds still upon our sky, yet even they will be tinged with the roseate hues of the setting sun. Then we can say with the Apostle of old, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith, and hence there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Righteousness is a crown of greater luster than any earthly diadem.

The path at times may be rugged. It leads up the mountain side. We will need to cast away some of our encumbrances, for the climbing will be steep in places, and we will need every advantage possible. But, ah! when we get away from the clouds and mists of the valley, out in the pure sunshine of the love of God, we will feel that it has been worth all the sacrifice, all the labor and toil to get one glimpse of the fair Canaan through the rarified atmosphere of God's eternal presence.

May God help us to choose to-night the good old paths wherein dwelleth righteousness. I thank you.

THE ST. LOUIS GHETTO.

The census shows there are approximately sixty thousand Jews in St. Louis, Missouri. This number is something more than that of the nominal membership of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

I have visited some of the synagogues in St. Louis during the times of their public service or worship of God, and was impressed with the sincerity and tenacity of the race. Both the orthodox and reformed Jews have an individuality that is strikingly in contrast with the pliable conformity of the popular modern churches.

The prophet who turns the Jews must indeed have a distinct message of power to them. A writer in the St. Louis Christian Advocate gives an intensely interesting account of a visit to the St. Louis Ghetto. I have been in the place described by the visitor. It is located at the corner of Thirteenth and Carr streets and is the oldest synagogue in the city. It is not far from the St. Louis Branch of our church.

A visitor to the Jewish quarter of this city some time ago, called at the rooms of a building devoted partly to the services of the Jewish religion and partly to the education of the children of the Ghetto. Opening the door of one of the rooms, he found himself in a small hall, provided with rough benches and evidently used for assembly or religious devotion. On one side of the hall there was a small platform, elevated a single step above the floor and on this platform stood a rude, flat-topped table-desk, battered, scratched and worn, until only here and there in spots remained signs of paint and varnish.

On the desk lay a very large open volume bound with parchment, like one of the old folios sometimes seen on the lowest shelves of great libraries. Behind the desk on a wooden seat without a back, sat a very old man. His black gown was threadbare, almost in tatters, his long white beard swept the pages of the great volume before him, his hair fell down over his shoulders, a velvet skull cap of black, contrasted strongly with the whiteness of his locks and a huge pair of old-time spectacles rested on his nose. He did not look up from the Hebrew characters before him as the visitor entered the room, nor even when he was addressed did he raise his eyes, or give the slightest sign that he knew of the presence of another in the room.

The visitor withdrew with a feeling of reverence that amounted almost to awe, for he recognized in this solitary old man a professional descendant of the long and honored line of men, whose sole end and aim in life was to keep alive the religion and traditions of a race to which the modern world owes more than it has yet been able or willing to pay.

For he was a Jewish rabbi, the leader of a little congregation of Jews from Southern Russia. Only a few years before, he and most of his people had fled from the bitter persecution of a savage race, to find in the land of the free, a refuge, far from the bloody empire where the name of Jew is hateful. His people found such humble employment as they could; work for them was not easy to obtain, for they understood little of the language spoken in the great city and knew less of the habits and customs of its people.

But he, their spiritual adviser, sought no employment. His life was consecrated to one purpose. The great book which lay before him was the volume of the law, and on that he meditated day and night. It was his delight. During a long life it had been his sole study and only employment. The words of that book, he had taught diligently to his children, and to those of his people. He spoke of them as he sat in his house, and when he walked by the way; he thought of them when he lay down and when he rose and thousands of miles from the land of his fathers, in a continent which was not known when that law was written, it was still the pleasure of his life to con the venerable characters set down by the hand of Moses and to teach his people how the words of the greatest law-giver should be understood and his commands obeyed.

A street-car rumbled past the building, and the old walls trembled. From the sidewalks came the babble of city noises, the tones of the buyer and seller, the rattle of passing traffic, the shouts of drivers. Far away, rising above even the hubbub of the street, came the notes of a band, and as the musicians approached, the shrieks of the cornet and the thunder of the drums drowned for the moment every other noise, but the old man heard nothing, not even when the musical tumult was at its height did he lift his eyes or raise his head.

To the mind of the visitor there came a vision. The panorama of history passed before his eyes. It began with a spectacle of an Oriental caravan, a great train of camels and horses, a body of armed retainers, the points of their long lances flashing in the sun, and behind them a motley crowd of slaves and servants, bondmen and bondwomen walking and riding; droves of sheep and goats and oxen and a rear guard of swarthy horsemen, driving before them the stragglers, for a great prince of the East was leaving the home of his fathers, the famous Ur of the Chaldees, and was going north to a land which he believed his children would inherit for ever. Then came mingled pictures of famine and suffering, the removal of the patriarchal family to the country of the "Great River," four centuries under the rod of the taskmaster and a great nation marched forth to its deliverance. Hundreds of years of prosperity and adversity, of civil and foreign war, then the nation suddenly rose in its might and became an empire. More adversity, more foreign war, a great part of the people carried off into captivity from which they never returned, the remnant restored to a semblance of its former greatness. The city of the temple rose again from its ruins, Alexander the Great came and went through the land like a shadow, and after him the Roman. On the beautiful Mount of the Olive Tree, Cæsar's Terrible Tenth pitched its tents and began the siege which changed the course of Oriental history. The dreadful sketches of the pen of Josephus have never been excelled in the history of savage warfare, still they are not more horrible than the massacres during the last days of the stricken people in the land which had been promised to them as their heritage for ever. The dispersion was complete. Ages earlier it had begun. It is not yet ended.

But what wonderful personal memories have been left to the world and to the race to which this old man belonged.

Abraham the faithful, Isaac the tender-hearted, Jacob the supplanter, Moses the lawgiver, Joshua the judge, blind old Eli, stern Samuel, David the soldier, Solomon the wise, the great company of the prophets, Nehemiah the builder, Judas the deliverer, and, greatest of all, the long-promised Messiah, with the goodly company of the Apostles, Paul, Peter, John, and their successors, whose influence, in part, arose from their love of the law transformed into the Gospel. And through the eighteen hundred years, from the coming of the Messiah to the present day, there has not been an hour when some rabbi, learned in the law, has not been teaching to his children and to those of his spiritual household.

The Jewish population of St. Louis is conspicuous by reason of its dirt, overcrowding, industry, and sobriety. The exceptions (the rich "reformed" Jews) do not live in the Ghetto, but live in the more aristocratic districts of the West Side. I have found no manifest anti-Jewish feeling amongst the citizens with whom I have conversed about the Jews here. They have their own charitable institutions and some private schools, where the children are taught their native language and religion. They are called Chedder schools. Yiddish is largely in use among the older Jews. Against the Jews as a Jew there seems to be no sort of hostile feeling.

Their standard of living is low. They can work for low wages and live cheaply. The Jew keeps his eye open for profit rather than for wages. This is a matter of common observation; and the combination of this spirit with a strongly individualistic type of character, and a keen competitive instinct is placing him in an independent position with regard to his Gentile neighbor.

The Jews have organized systems of relief and mutual help which give the less competent among them a considerable advantage against Gentiles. It is in virtue of their religion, with its rigid system of observances and its jealously tribal and exclusive character that the Jews have been, and still remain, a peculiar people.

The orthodox Jew is continually kept in remembrance of his Jewishness by the observance of a unique code of prescribed and forbidden actions; and throughout the year he celebrates a series of fast and holy days, designed to celebrate and symbolize various episodes in the history of his race. The future of Judaism as a religion, is, of course, an immense problem.

The reformed or West End Jews are not so strict in the observance of the dietary laws and customs of the Mosaic economy. In the orthodox meetings the men wear their hats during the service and the women are bareheaded. The men occupy the main portion of the synagogue and the women occupy a balcony behind a thin curtain. In the "reformed" worship the men remove their hats on entering the temple and the women leave theirs on. The men and women occupy seats together as in ordinary Christian churches. They eat swine's flesh and everything else that is used for the food of man. They do not insist on "Kosher" meat. The orthodox service is in Hebrew and the reformed is in Hebrew and English. The reformed Jews preach in English.

Zionist councils are popular among the Jews and they have dances, socials, and picnics to which all the family goes. Zionism will not undertake anything which would be contrary to orthodox Jewish religious law.

That the "national idea" is prevalent among the Jews is evident from the fact that the Jews do not assimilate with the people of other races. A professor in the Central High School in St. Louis told me that the Jewish children as a class were far in advance of all others in the degree of intelligence manifested by the examinations in the public schools of the city.

God speed the day when the things promised to this people may be accomplished so that the Saints may enjoy the promises that have been made to them.

"THE NEPHITE TWELVE" AGAIN.

I have read with much interest all that has appeared in the HERALD on this subject, but so far I have not seen anything to indicate to my mind that the Nephite twelve were apostles.

Now for the reasons: The twelve apostles at Jerusalem are to judge the twelve tribes of Israel. (See Matthew 19: 28; Luke 22: 29, 30.) Here we see that the twelve apostles are to judge the twelve tribes of Israel, and that included the tribe of Manasseh, or the Nephites, as the Book of Mormon teaches. If the Nephite twelve were apostles, then that would make thirteen apostles to judge one tribe, and eleven apostles to judge the other eleven tribes.

And if it was necessary to have two churches, one on this continent, now called America, and one at Jerusalem, each with twelve apostles, at the same time, then why not have them now, one here and one in England. God and Jesus Christ have not changed. To say that the inventions of man (i. e. rapid transit, telegraph, mail service,) have made it unnecessary, is bad logic. I think the argument for two sets of apostles at one time is the greatest and the best argument for polygamy that I ever heard,—two brides or churches. It should be pleasing to our opponents in Utah. If the Nephite twelve were apostles why did not Jesus say (in Moroni 2) "For thus did mine other apostles." That would make it plain; but he only said, "For thus did mine apostles," the same as he would have said to the seventy.

Philip did mighty miracles, but was he an apostle? (See Acts 8: 5-15.) Therefore, because the Nephite twelve did mighty miracles, and had the commission as the twelve apostles, does that make them apostles? Do not the seventy have the same commission as the twelve apostles?

Now let me quote a settler: "And the angel spake unto me, saying, Behold the twelve disciples of the Lamb, who are chosen to minister unto thy seed. And he said unto me, Thou rememberest the twelve apostles of the Lamb? Behold they are they who shall judge the twelve tribes of Israel: Wherefore, the twelve ministers of thy seed shall be judged of them: for ye are of the house of Israel; and these twelve ministers whom thou beholdest, shall judge thy seed."—1 Nephi 3: 26. Now if the Nephite twelve were apostles, then the angel would have said so. But instead he calls the Nephite twelve "disciples" and "ministers" and says they shall be judged by the twelve apostles. Surely this is plain enough to show that the Nephite twelve did not hold the same office as the apostles at Jerusalem did.

With the best of feeling for all, I am,

A VISION.

I beheld a vision of the age to be. I saw the world grow better day by day. Slowly but surely mankind advanced. Though there was recurrent ebb and flow, the tide was higher. There was less and less of brutality and inhumanity, more of justice and love and service. In the continued uplift the savage in man disappeared; the divine triumphed over the carnal. Jails, almshouses, penitentiaries, and asylums no more cursed the world. The gallows and the dungeons no longer cast their darkened shadow o'er the land. The palsied and trembling hand of penury and want was no longer extended for alms. War, cruel, inhuman, ruthless war, whether on the battlefield or in the congested marts of commerce and industry had passed away. Patriotism had a new meaning. The spirit of brotherhood pervaded the entire earth. Intelligence and wisdom had displaced dollars and debauchery in the legislative halls. Justice had driven the bribed and the briber from her courts. Reason and love occupied the pulpit.

The whole world was changed. Service had displaced selfishness. "To give rather than to get," "to be rather than to have" had become the impelling purpose of the world. To possess more than one's fellows was a mark of dishonor, a condition men studiously endeavored to avoid. Men vied with men in doing for others; service was the determining qualification for greatness, and selection for office came only to those who had best served their fellows. Honor was the watchword, and service, the secret spring of action. Woman was free, economically free; the curse of ages was gone! She was no longer "the weaker vessel"; "a necessary evil." Man had cast out his "beam"; woman her "mote." Prostitution and infanticide had perished with the old order. Missionaries no longer called men to individual righteousness. Regeneration was social rather than individual. The knowledge of God covered the earth; to know was to do; society was a living, harmonious organism. The sweatshop and the slum were no longer the necessary adjuncts of the palace. The terms "master" and "servant" had become obsolete. Each esteemed his fellow as himself.

Individuality had blossomed and fruited under the rule of right and a collective state. Bars and locks were no longer requisite. Men were honest from choice. No other intelligent action suggested itself. Incentive to sin had largely passed away. The Devil no longer swayed the mass. Men had willed him out of their lives. He was relegated to oblivion. Men's interests were identical. To advance one's cause it was imperative that the interests of all others be conserved. The fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man was no longer Utopian. These had been transferred from the realm of fancy to the domain of fact.

Religion was no longer separate and distinct from government. It was the reign of the government of God! A continent called Zion! A people worthy to abide!

The vision vanished. A peace indescribable filled my entire being. The world as it is to be! To accomplish this is our purpose; to realize it, our aim.

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Then shall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wise, and five were foolish.—Matthew 25: 1, 2.

The word then which is used as the opening word of the first verse refers to the time when the prediction that follows shall take place, which time is clearly stated in the preceding chapter by the Savior, and refers to his second and glorious coming.

The word virgins may be understood as representing all the disciples of Christ, or the local churches which comprise the general church, known as the "kingdom of God." Concerning this relationship Paul writes: "For I am jealous over you with godly jealousy: for I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ."—2 Corinthians 11: 2.

This Corinthian church was addressed as one of the virgins that were preparing to meet the coming bridegroom. The language employed beautifully represents that pure and holy condition which should be attained by members, branches, and the general church. Every disciple should labor to bring about this desired condition.

The "beloved disciple" in addressing the church universal, writes as follows:

Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints.—Revelation 19: 7, 8.

The Lord designates the apparel to be worn, the material is furnished and made ready, and she is advised to put on her beautiful garments:

Awake, awake; put on thy strength, O Zion, put on thy beautiful garments, O Jerusalem, the holy city.—Isaiah 52: 1.

Zion is the city of our God; for this is Zion, the pure in heart.—Doctrine and Covenants 94: 5.

"The wise took oil in their vessels with their lamps." These vessels that were filled with oil, from which the lamps were replenished, are the disciples of Christ, as may be seen from the following: Speaking of Saul the Lord says, "He is a chosen vessel unto me." Paul states "that every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honor."—1 Thessalonians 4: 4. In writing to Timothy Paul penned the following:

But in a great house there are not only vessels of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honor, and some to dishonor. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work.—2 Timothy 2: 20, 21. (See also Romans 9: 21-24; 1 Peter 3: 7.)

The oil represents the Spirit of God which is given to the disciples as an abiding Comforter, as may be seen by the following: "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance.—Acts 1: 4. (See also Acts 4: 8; 7: 55; 9: 17.)

Jesus Christ received a fullness of the Spirit:

For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him. And I, John, saw that he received not of the fullness at the first, but received grace for grace; and he received not of the fullness at first, but continued from grace to grace, until he received a fullness; and thus he was called the Son of God, because he received not of the fullness at the first. And I, John, bear record, and lo, the heavens were opened and the Holy Ghost descended upon him in the form of a dove, and it sat upon him, and there came a voice out of heaven saying, This is my beloved Son. And I, John, bear record that he received a fullness of the glory of the Father; and he received all power, both in heaven and on earth; and the glory of the Father was with him, for he dwelt in him.—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 2.

The disciples of Christ receive the Spirit by measure, according to their righteousness, and the work required at their hands, as may be seen by the citations given below:

But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.—Hebrews 1: 8, 9.

The lamps represent the word of God:

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path.—Psalm 119: 105. (See Proverbs 4: 18; 13: 9; 24: 20.)

Christ is the light of the world. The Spirit gave him a full knowledge of the word, and a complete understanding of the will of God; and the Spirit inspired him to render implicit obedience to the Father's will. His obedience was in direct fulfillment of the word of God, and his light was manifest in the clearness and fullness and simplicity of his teaching; for he let his light so shine before men, that they did and still glorify God. Peter says that God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power and he went about doing good, for God was with him (Acts 10: 38). He preached the gospel to the poor, as well as to the rich. He healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, caused the lame to walk, cleansed the lepers, made the deaf to hear, raised the dead, and fed the poor. His sacrifice was perfect; his obedience complete.

Being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.—Philippians 2: 8-11.

Christ is the bridegroom, preparing to meet his bride. Is she ready?

Christ called and ordained his ministers. He put the word of truth in their possession and authorized them to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances, and said:

Ye are the light of the world. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.—Matthew 5: 14, 16.

The light of the Holy Spirit which is in Christ's disciples is to shine out to a dying world through the word, as it is preached by precept and by example.

Our sufficiency is of God; who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament; not of the letter, but of the spirit: for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.—2 Corinthians 3: 5, 6.

Peter says:

Which [things] are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into.—1 Peter 1: 12.

To his disciples in this dispensation, after he had restored the gospel, and recommitted the gospel commission, he said:

Again I say, Hearken ye elders of my church whom I have appointed: ye are not sent forth to be taught, but to teach the children of men the things which I have put into your hands by the power of my Spirit; and ye are to be taught from on high.—Doctrine and Covenants 43: 4.

Wherefore, he that preacheth and he that receiveth, understandeth one another, and both are edified and rejoice together; and that which doth not edify, is not of God, and is darkness: that which is of God is light, and he that receiveth light and continueth in God, receiveth more light, and that light groweth brighter and brighter, until the perfect day.—Doctrine and Covenants 50: 6.

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continues.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 16.

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel; and they shall observe the covenants and church articles to do them, and these shall be their teachings, as they shall be directed by the Spirit; and the Spirit shall be given unto you by the prayer of faith, and if ye receive not the Spirit ye shall not teach.—Doctrine and Covenants 42: 5.

The minister who teaches the truths contained in the word in meekness and love, carefully, fully, and correctly under the influence of the Holy Spirit, will let his light shine; and give evidence that he is among the wise virgins, with lamps trimmed and burning. He will be ready when He comes.

Yet we may view it from another standpoint: Every member, every family, and every branch should be meek, humble, faithful, truthful, honest, pure, and good; they should be energetic, persevering, industrious, frugal, and charitable. They should be given to hospitality, and known by their good works. They should be "partakers of the divine nature," and in harmony with true religion, as follows:

If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain. Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.—James 1: 26, 27.

Those who thus follow Christ, though he should delay his coming, and they should sleep the sleep of death, "And at midnight" the cry is "made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," will arise, or be changed, and their lamps will be trimmed and burning.

Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world: for I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick, and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me.

These will be ready when he comes, and for their benefit it is written, "Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."

The foolish virgins are those who have grieved the Spirit by a failure to do that which is required; from them it is withdrawn, and they wander in darkness, without its light, direction, and power. They may have the word but fail to understand it, or heed its warnings; they neglect the widows and the fatherless, they care not for the poor or the sick; for their lamps are gone out. And, therefore, whether they sleep the sleep of lethargy or the sleep of death, when the bridegroom comes they will be without oil, and their lamps will have gone out. What good will it do them to come with the sacred books under their arms and say: "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?"—Matthew 7: 21, 22.

The writer is of the opinion that no one will make such a claim before Christ, at that time, unless they believe such a work has been done by them.

They were once virgins, disciples of Christ, who have been so inactive as to lose the Spirit, and their lamps have gone out; they will expect to enter in and shall not be able. Some will weep the tears of disappointment, and others will be angry; for, "there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

The wise could not divide their oil with the foolish, any more than you or I can divide our righteousness with those who have none. We may pray for, encourage, and help sinners in many ways. We may teach them the gospel, and the law of Christ; we may do all in our power to save them; yet they must believe, obey, and live the religion of Christ for themselves, or fail.

Under God and Christ and the church salvation is an individual work.

Let us be wise virgins, with our vessels filled with oil, and our lamps trimmed and burning,

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

Of General Interest

AN APOSTATE?

George T. Sledge, pastor of the Beulah Methodist Church, has resigned his charge and has formally withdrawn from the Methodist Church. Reverend Mr. Sledge will continue his work as an independent minister, but says that he can not remain connected with the church as its teachings are not in accordance with his beliefs. He epitomizes his feelings in the matter in the statement, "I can not feed my congregation on thoughts that do not feed my own soul."

Reverend Mr. Sledge made formal announcement of his intentions at a conference of Methodist ministers at Colorado Springs last Tuesday. His resignation was accepted.

The young minister came to Colorado last September from Southern California and was given a charge almost at once.

In an open letter to the public, Reverend Mr. Sledge explains his reasons for leaving the Methodist ministry. He says that the letter is an attack on no one nor on the church. The letter follows:

"To the public:

"For the following reasons I have withdrawn from the Methodist ministry and the Methodist Church:

"I can not follow the course of study prescribed by the bishops.

"I can not feed my congregation on thoughts that do not feed my own soul. The Methodist doctrine as well as others teaches that our preaching and our religion must conform to the age in which we live: there is nothing in scripture to justify or support such conclusions. The gospel and the religion of Christ are applicable to all classes of people and adjusted to all ages but not conformed to any. My experience in preaching is that those who receive the Word more readily are the poor and the unlearned who know nothing about the doctrines and traditions of Methodism. My mission is to the unwise as well as to the wise. God is no respecter of persons. I find that very few can endure sound doctrine. The faith of the people is standing in the wisdom of men and not in the power of God.

"The doctrines of the Bible and the teachings of Christ have been butchered and grossly misconstrued by mixing and mingling them with the doctrines and traditions of men.

"John Wesley is the founder of Methodism. Jesus Christ is the head and founder of the church, 'other foundation can no man lay.' We can have Methodism without Wesley but we can not have Christianity without Christ. Methodism will soon die but Christianity will live. When I want the water of life I go to the Fountain Head and not a million miles below. The doctrines and traditions of men will go down with those who teach them.

"I don't care to know anything about atheism, deism, or pantheism. I want my heart and life so full of the Lord Jesus Christ and his teachings that there will be no room for anything else.

"I am determined not to know anything else. When Jesus was teaching his disciples he did not give them lessons in skepticism and infidelity, but told them to give not that which was holy to dogs nor cast pearls before swine. Some of the books that the bishops send out for ministers to study would corrupt the morals of an angel. I do not want to know anything about metaphysics; my religion is in my heart as well as in my head. Metaphysics will act upon a man's brain but will not generate love in his heart. In preaching the gospel I do not depend on my understanding, I have no right to try to fathom the mystery of divine things, but I do know that some mysterious power has touched my heart and revolutionized my whole life. The bishops are a great deal wiser than I am, but I would like to find one that is half as happy as I am in my religious experience. 'I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I but Christ liveth in me, and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by faith in the Son of God who loved me and gave himself for me.'

"There is also envy, strife and divisions between the different churches which is not the Christian spirit. 'For while one saith, I am of Wesley, another saith I am of Calvin, another saith I am of Luther, or some one else, are they not carnal and walk as men? The carnal mind is enmity against God, it is not subject to God's law neither indeed can be.' There are also envy, strife, and divisions between the two Methodist bodies. If they will not come together in this life they can not do so in the life which is to come.

"These have not the Christian spirit. 'If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.'

"If the tree is corrupt the fruit thereof will be evil.

"'No fountain can send forth both sweet water and bitter.'

"The religion of Jesus Christ is love, self-denial, cross-bearing, and prayerful searching of the scriptures, but it is not thus construed or manifested by the present-day believers. They are trying to follow Christ in letter but not in spirit and practice. The true ideals of the Christian religion are sadly misrepresented by nearly all churches, if not all. This is due to the fact that they are following the doctrines of men instead of the scripture. We have no command to follow Wesley, but we are told to take up our cross and follow Christ. We can not have Wesley with us any time but we can have Christ with us all the time if we want him. We are also commanded that our alms be done in secret, but to-day we see the churches boasting and boosting.

"The ministers are striving to reach places of distinction. If I exalt myself in this life my presence in heaven would be repulsive. The dollar is another conspicuous item with the present-day minister. Many of the preachers are trying to work through the law, trying to 'purify politics.' I love pure and wholesome laws, clean politics, and civic righteousness, but I am convinced that we can never legislate the people into the kingdom of heaven. God is going to judge this world not by John Wesley, not by Gipsy Smith, not by any action of the State legislature, nor the Senate or Congress, but 'he is going to judge the world by that man whom he hath ordained, inasmuch as he has given all men assurance that he has raised him from the dead.'

"The gospel is a million times more powerful than the law. The gospel came to do that which the law is incapable and powerless to do. How long will they continue to pervert the right way of the Lord by the commandments of men? I shall no longer 'wrestle against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, and against spiritual wickedness and spiritual blindness in high places.'"—Pueblo Chieftain (Colorado).

A CELEBRATED INDIAN.

STANDING BEAR, THE GREAT PONCA.

Last September, on the banks of the Niobrara River, Nebraska, died Standing Bear, (Mon-chu-non-zhi), the Ponca, who is, in the opinion of the editor of The Southern Workman, the chieftain whom the young Indians, of to-day should most delight to honor, for he had more to do than any other tribesman with gaining for the Indian recognition as a citizen and as a man.

The forced removal of the Poncas from their homes in Nebraska to Indian Territory, thirty-three years ago, is one of the sad chapters in the history of our dealings with the Indians. The Poncas detested their new abiding-place and pined for the homes and burial grounds of their fathers. Many fell ill and died of malaria and fever. Indeed, they had for Indian Territory the same word in their language which they use for hell—"the land of fire." Finally a small band of them escaped and by secret movements and marches returned to Nebraska. Among these, as their leader, was Standing Bear. When they reached Nebraska the whole company was arrested by General Crook, and brought to Fort Omaha where they were held prisoners until they could be returned to Indian Territory. Meantime a strong wave of popular feeling in their favor was aroused among the white people whom the Poncas had often defended against the raids of the Sioux, and a young lawyer of that country suggested bringing habeas corpus proceedings under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution which declares, in effect, that "all persons born in the United States . . . shall not be deprived of their liberty without due process of law." The case was brought before the late Judge Dundy in the Federal Court and was one of the most important cases ever brought before any court in the land, for up to that time the Indian had never been considered a "person" in the eyes of the law. Standing Bear, then a splendid specimen of manhood, tall, straight as an arrow, and with piercing eyes, addressed the court and made, through an interpreter, a plea for himself and his people that moved his hearers to tears. Some days later the judge handed down the decision of the court, setting Standing Bear and the others free, thus making the Indian a man in the eyes of the law. He is reported to have said afterwards that Standing Bear's address had secured the decision.—The Indian's Friend, May, 1909.

MONKS' MOUND.

Monks' Mound, one of the most interesting points of historical interest on the East Side, is to be disposed of at auction. The Ramey family, of Edwardsville, owners of the mound and the ground surrounding it, announced yesterday they had decided to dispose of it, and would sell it next October.

The act will be one of the legal formalities to the settling of an estate. The mound, with two hundred and sixty acres of land about it, belonged to the late Thomas Turner Ramey and his wife, Margaret. Mr. Ramey died ten years ago and his wife died last December. There are eight children and they have decided that the country place shall be sold and the funds realized therefrom equitably divided.

This means the mound will pass into other hands. The members of the family, while willing to dispose of it, are loath to see it converted into a resort, but prefer that it should be taken in charge by the Federal or State Government or by some historical society or association.

Monks' Mound is supposed to antedate any authentic history in this country. There is evidence it was constructed by a race of people who lived long before the American Indian. Their habits and customs are fairly well known from the implements and household articles that have been dug from the mound.

The mound itself is believed to have been brought to the lower portion of Madison County from a great distance, basketful by basketful, as there is no earth like it in the vicinity. Many years' work by many thousand people must have been required to rear its huge bulk.

It is located due east and west, and on a plateau at the eastern end, where the first rays of the rising sun would encounter it. There were until recently the remains of a sacrificial altar. This has led to the belief that the mound-builders were sun-worshippers. While there are many tools, vessels and implements in the mound, there are no bodies there.

The fields around, however, teem with bones of human skeletons, showing that the neighborhood was at one time the scene of a great battle, or that the mound was erected in the center of an ancient burial ground.

This mound, with the famous Snake Mound in Ohio and one in Wisconsin, is regarded as the most interesting in the United States. Surrounding Monks' Mound are a score of smaller ones, but none that in any way approaches it in magnitude, or historical and mystical value.

Thomas Turner Ramey, owner of Monk's Mound, the origin of which is not recorded by the writings of any period, exacted a promise at his deathbed from the members of his family at Edwardsville, near where the mound is situated, that the property would never be sold except to the State or Federal Governments. This, however, will not be followed to the letter, according to a recent announcement, but in case the government will not buy the mound it will soon be sold at public auction.

Mr. Ramey, who died several years ago, grew to be a student of archæology from his association with the ancient burial ground, and toward the latter part of his life became convinced that the secrets locked within the tomb will reveal evidences of a race that lived prior to the American Indian. Many curious relics have been found and lately parts of a shrine were dug up, leading to the belief that the strange people were sun-worshippers.

It forms the center of a large burial ground and is thought to contain, in its deepest interior, treasures of copper and gold. The mound and surrounding land comprise two hundred and sixty acres.—St. Louis Globe Democrat, April 18, 1909.

PURE OLIVE OIL.

It will be a matter of much satisfaction to people who use olive oil to any extent to learn from a pure food expert that the commodity now sold in Iowa and the country generally is practically pure. The time was, not long since, when it was a popular supposition that there was no such thing as pure olive oil in the American market except at a high price and under guarantees that could be trusted. The discovery that the lowly cotton seed produced an oil so much like the fluid from the olive that it could pass the inspection of even the most expert judge, led to the marketing of that oil disguised in foreign packages and falsely labeled "pure olive oil." While the fraud was not a dangerous one to the health, the cotton seed oil, like oleomargarine, being wholesome, the purchaser was not sure he was getting what he was paying for.

The introduction of the pure food laws have changed all this, and made it possible for the consumer to purchase olive oil in any store with the assurance that he is getting the real article.

State Food and Dairy Commissioner H. R. Wright gives assurance of this. He says in an interview:

"Imported oil is almost sure to be pure, because the Federal Government has perfected its inspection service to the last degree and an article that is passed by the inspectors is pure beyond any doubt. Oil bottled in California is inspected almost as closely, and it is safe to say that almost no cotton seed oil is mixed with the real article now, unless its presence is shown on the label. Getting good olive oil is another matter, and one in which the pure food laws can give little assistance. There is just as much difference between pure olive oil as there is between different kinds of butter."

This case of olive oil is alone a triumph for the pure food movement. And there are others, all of which testify to the value of the new legislation.—Hawk-Eye.

DO PROTESTANTS BELIEVE THEIR OWN CREEDS?

In discussing "The Godlessness of New York" in the June American Magazine, Ray Stannard Baker raises the question as to whether the members of New York's Protestant churches believe their own creeds and says:

"The Protestant churches, as churches, may be said, indeed, to have no longer any very positive convictions or any very definite program. They no longer believe their own creeds, and the old fervor of hostility with which they becuadged one another (a sign of life at least) has departed. No longer fighting one another, neither do they unite: there is no fire to fuse them. Scarcely two ministers, let alone two denominations, agree either on doctrine or on methods of work. A 'Federation of Churches' exists in New York, but it is hardly more than the activity of one energetic man whose valuable statistical studies of church conditions have been financed by contributions from various denominations. It has almost no significance as a directing or centralizing power.

"I have said that the Protestant churches, having been withdrawing from the common people for a hundred years, are now trying to get back. To this end they have given much money: it has not availed. Neither has charity reestablished them, nor mission chapels, nor even carpenter shops, clubs, classes, gymnasiums, socialist discussions, nor revivals."

AN ABSTEMIOUS WRESTLER.

The wrestling match that took place Saturday night between Farmer Burns and "Chicago Jack" Miller, and was won by Burns in two straight throws, brought out one of the largest crowds that ever attended an athletic contest in the city.

The crowd insisted that Burns should give them a talk and he told how he took Gotch from the plow and made a great man of him. He also condemned cigarette smoking, and said he would rather see one of his boys in the penitentiary than to have him turn out a cigarette fiend. "There are five things I abstain from," he said, "smoking, chewing, profane language, and the use of tea and coffee."—Evening World-Herald, Omaha, May 17, 1909.

THERE IS TROUBLE IN THE DISCIPLE CAMP.

A pastor of distinction in Chicago has proved to be a believer in the higher criticism, and he does not believe that every word in the Bible is historically true. He is not sure of Jonah or the flood, so there are those who want to turn him out. But how can it be done? The Disciples have grown to be over a million and a quarter communicants, with no machinery of ecclesiastical courts and no creed. They have no standard but the Bible, and no articles by which to interpret it. Their very principles of conglomeration which brought many Ismaelite fragments of other bodies together was liberty of interpretation. It is a courageous principle, which allows truth and error to wrestle, with no fear that truth will be worsted in the struggle. We presume that room will be kept for historical criticism and those who accept it.—The Independent, May 6, 1909.

Answer to Where is God.

A little rhyme written when I was feeling very despondent and disconsolate.

In the darkness of the night,
In storms that beat on mountain height,
When Nature stands aghast with fright,
God is there.

When storms are raging o'er the deep,
And mighty winds its bosom sweep,
And waves like living mountains leap,
He is there.

When volcanoes belch their fires forth,
And earthquakes heave and toss the earth,
And hushed be every voice of mirth,
He is there.

When heavy falls the chastening rod,
And war with crimson stains the sod,
Don't doubt and wonder, Where is God?
For he is there.

If driven from our own abode,
And walking o'er life's stony road,
We're bowed to earth with sorrow's load,
He is there.

J. C. CLAPP.

Words of Gratitude for the Late Revelations.

"God hath remembered his chosen again,"

And sent us the light from above
In answer to prayer that we might obtain
A knowledge of duty both clear and plain
And walk in the light of his love.

He has borne with our weakness year after year,
And blest us beyond our desert,
And e'en as the verge of doubt we draw near
In love he dispelled our darkness and fear,
And thus did our downfall avert.

Thus day after day fresh proofs of his love
Are given to cheer us along,
How gently with us his Spirit oft strove
How kindly but firmly his truth he inwove
In our hearts to save us from wrong.

And shall we not love and render him praise,
For bounties so richly bestowed,
The gospel restored in these latter days,
Its blessings and gifts our souls to upraise,
And fit us for his blest abode?

Oh, help us dear Lord to praise thy great name,
By honoring thy righteous will,
And thus, by our lives thy goodness proclaim
And publish abroad thy glorious fame
And all of thy precepts fulfill.

CHARLES DERRY.

Close to Thee.

(Tune: "Sweet Marie.")

I've a yearning in my heart, Lord, for thee,
For all thy mercies shown here to me,
'Neath the shadow of thy wing
I will trust and rest and sing,
All my treasures I will bring, Lord, to thee.

Chorus:

Close to thee I would be;
I would be close to thee;
Thy pure and gentle face I long to see.
All the world I count but dross,
All its friendships are but loss,
I will gladly bear the cross, Lord, for thee.

Oh, what joy was brought to earth, Lord, by thee,
A babe upon thy Virgin Mother's knee;
When the shepherds on the plain
Heard the angel hosts proclaim,
What great glory to thy name there would be.

Chorus.

Oh, I think of all thou'st done, Lord, for me,
Thy bitter night in Gethsemane,
Deserted by thine own,
None to hear thy plaintive moan,
Thou didst watch and pray alone, Lord, for me.

Chorus.

Oh, give me a greater love, Lord, for thee,
Like thee a love for all humanity;
Now since thou didst condescend
To be teacher, guide and friend,
All my life I'll freely spend, Lord, for thee.

Chorus.

June Reading for Daughters of Zion.CURIOSITY AND UNTRUTHFULNESS.

Do not expect too much. That is generally the great fault with us before we have had a wide experience with children. We must neither condone nor overlook faults, but we must not be shocked or discouraged at the appearance of them. Children are faulty by nature—by natural law, the laws of heredity and environment. As I have often said before, they are not immoral, they are unmoral. They know nothing about morals, nothing about right or wrong until they have learned by teaching, by experience, and by the development of the "still small voice." It is our business in life as mothers and teachers, to watch out for these faults and eradicate them, or, rather, supplant them by better things. Curiosity is a common trait in children. It is not a fault until it becomes disagreeable by lack of control. It is unpleasant to have a child betray curiosity in what his elders are saying and to refuse to go about his legitimate business because he wants to "hear." I should not tolerate it. When you have grown guests, I would advise setting the little girl some task, or giving her some plaything or amusement, within your sight if need be, but out of direct hearing, and insist on her staying there. I do not mean that grown people ought to talk about anything a child might not hear, but there are often confidential affairs to be discussed that one does not care to discuss before a third. A child who edges in or stands about among grown people just for mere curiosity is disagreeable and will be disliked, and one of the ends to strive for in child training is to make him agreeable so every one will like him.

Regarding eating slowly, masticating thoroughly, etc., you will have to have great patience. Children have to be told these things over and over. They seldom learn by one telling or two, but oftener by example.

Untruthfulness, for some reason, is a common fault with little children. Both school-teachers and parents have it to contend with. Often it is because of fear of punishment and oftener a result of the law of suggestion. The questioner, by his mental attitude, suggests to the child the answer he wants or ought to have, and the unreasoning child immediately gives it. When a stern-faced parent, with reproof in her eye and the possibility of severe punishment in her strong hands, says, "Johnny Jones, did you eat that piece of pie?" She suggests by her manner, "No." Johnny knows that she wants him to be able to say "No" and he says "No." Then he is threatened dire things if he has been falsifying and his poor little soul is in confusion. Suggest the truth to a child. If you are pretty sure that Johnny ate the pie, it would be better to say, "Johnny, you ate that piece of pie didn't you, son?" Then if there is any reason why he shouldn't have eaten the pie, give it, and tell him next time you'll trust him not to. Try always to suggest the right thing to the child. Punishment will not cure untruthfulness or dishonesty. It is more liable to intensify it. Give the child courage to be free. Teach from nature how nature never deceives us; God never deceives us; brave men and women do not deceive each other or tell untruths. Make him feel that it takes courage to be true and brave and that only cowards lie. Make him feel your love and sympathy and win his confidence. Do not antagonize him. There is a big thought in the biblical admonition, "Parents, provoke not your children to wrath."

Never make much of the fault itself. Make more of the virtue which is its opposite. Encourage truth in every act.—Extract from Parents' Problems in American Motherhood.

Questions on June Reading.

Is it common to expect too much of children? What effect may this fault have upon them? What may be the effect of condoning or overlooking a fault? Why should one avoid being either too shocked or discouraged with the faults of children? What is the difference between "immoral" and "unmoral"? Why is it the business of parents and teachers to watch for the faults of their children? What is the best method of eradicating a fault? When is curiosity a fault in a child? Up to this point, what virtue is there in it? How should it be controlled? Is it for the convenience of elder people, alone, that children should not always be permitted to overhear their conversation? How is the child benefited by insisting at times that he shall not listen to matters not intended for his ears? How are meddling children regarded? What is one of the ends to strive for in child-training? Is it worth while to exercise great care over children in regard to eating slowly and masticating thoroughly? Why is it necessary to exercise great patience concerning these things? What are some causes of untruthfulness in little children? How may the law of suggestion help in overcoming the habit of untruthfulness? How do parents provoke their children to untruthfulness? How may we help them to have courage to be truthful? Why should we emphasize the opposite virtue rather than the fault? How may truthfulness in action be encouraged?

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Sylvia Nash asks for the prayers of the Saints in behalf of her mother, Mrs. Minta Johnson, that she may be raised from a bed of affliction.

Letter Department

Dear Saints: As I am so lonely, sad, and downhearted since losing my dear companion, I have no earthly friends to whom I can go for a kind word of sympathy or consolation; no one to stand by me when trials and troubles and disappointments come; no earthly friends to lean upon, but how many times have I called on my heavenly Father for aid and assistance. Saints, were it not for my heavenly Father, what could I do, or where could I go for help? But Saints, I want all aid and assistance through the prayer of God's people, that can be obtained through faith in prayers. No one knows what a hard life it is for one after losing their only friend in the world until they themselves have passed through the sorrowful trial. Never for one moment do I remember feeling light-hearted or cheerful since being left alone. I am willing to stand the trials of this life the very best I can, but it's an awful hard battle to fight alone with the whole world, it seems, against you; but I still desire God's blessings.

I try to live as a Saint of God, so I may be worthy of being owned and blessed of him, the Giver of all. I desire to live so God will not be ashamed to own me as his child. Saints, do fast and pray for me that I may have the desire of my heart; then I know I can and will feel free again, unless it is God's will that I must pass through this trial. How I wish I might tell you plainly all about my disappointments, but the Lord knows all and if it is his will for things to be as they are, I will be more ready and willing to face the storms of life.

Perhaps my letter is already too lengthy, but this is not half I could say. May God bless each and every one of us in our trials and struggles, is the prayer of

A DOWNHEARTED AND LONELY SAINT.

DENVER, Colorado, May 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are moving along about after the usual sort. I did not get to attend the conference, but was busy, and think did more good than if I had met with the brethren in conference. While I enjoy those meetings very much, I could not see my way clear to attend this spring on account of financial stringency, so I did some manual labor at home for myself and others, thus getting things in better shape for a prolonged absence, if it is necessary. I have been visiting Boulder every two weeks, preaching two sermons each Sunday, and have also made an opening at Louisville. These are places where we have not had any preaching before. The congregations are not large, but there are some who seem very much interested.

I expect to start on a trip south to-morrow, visiting places in the Arkansas Valley, and maybe as far south as the south line of the State.

There has been more sickness in Denver Branch the past few months than ever before. We hope to have our new church ready for the district conference in September.

There are several openings for preaching, and we hope to make a better record the coming year than the one past.

Yours truly,
E. F. SHUPE.

SHABBONA, Michigan, March 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: Although one of the weak ones of the fold, my heart goes out to God in gratitude for his loving-kindness to me. I have been in this grand work for only a little over five years. I truly thank God that he ever called me, as I had become very skeptical in regard to the Bible and the teaching I had heard of the same until the true gospel of Jesus Christ was preached in our part of the vineyard. I heard the second sermon preached by Elder William Davis in our neighborhood. It was through curiosity that I went to hear, but when he gave the privilege of taking quotations I started out taking quotations to show that he did not quote Scripture correctly; but I failed in my undertaking, and after the first sermon I asked the elder home with me, intending to corner him on the Scriptures, as I had several other elders of various faiths. After spending a few hours with Elder Davis, talking on the Bible, I said, "Sir, you are simply a whirlwind on the Scriptures." He only smiled and said I had not asked him any hard questions.

Well, I continued to take quotations, not only of the Saints but of the Believers, also of the Disciples, but could not find proof in the Scriptures for the last two names, while it was several years before I could believe the Scriptures were true. The time came by seeing a baptism of one, with his arm all smashed, baptized in the cold waters in February, when the ice was about eighteen inches thick. As I stood there I thought the man was going to his grave, but, thank God, as I stepped up to help him out of the water there was the conviction at that time that I should do the same, while yet I did not believe the Bible. As I was going to the place of confirmation the thought came to me, Lord, if this work is right and the Bible is true, take the desire for tobacco away from me and I will obey the gospel. I threw a chew out of my mouth then and there. Thank God, it was the last one I have ever taken. Let me say right here that I used one pound of chewing and one or two packages of smoking tobacco a week. Dear readers, to think that even when the desire was taken away I would not yield, but for seven long months was at war with myself! Thanks to the One who rules supreme, he helped me to conquer Satan and obey the gospel. I now rejoice in the plan of salvation that is laid down whereby we may be saved, and while I am trying to do my duty that is placed upon me I have many obstacles placed in my way, but ask the prayers of the Saints that I may ever prove true, as I have been nearly overcome at times, but have always received strength, through prayer to God, to come out victorious. I can say, with many more, I know the work is true.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

B. F. PHETTEPLACE.

NEBO, Illinois, May 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: On March 2 we were greeted with a packed house, and one of my brothers, a Baptist preacher. At our little church it had been said, "Oscar is too much for Will." Well, of course they thought "he had the truth"; so with his buoyant encouragement, and self-prognostication of certain victory, he was quite willing to resolve that Daniel 2:44 had a complete fulfillment in days of Christ: "I will build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail," positive witness sure to testify in favor of Baptist position. We held just one session of two hours and a half. There was lots of twisting, as usual, and the usual ways of pounding on these two citations were indulged in.

When history and commentaries were presented there was complaint that history and commentaries were not scripture. Then Luke 2:1 was cited in corroboration of the real facts revealed by Daniel and that there was but one king in the days of Christ and not ten. I never enjoyed preaching better than I did this discussion. Everything went off peaceably. Saints were well satisfied; comments from outside which were heard were sufficient. On the 6th of April, in response to invitation from one of my old school-teachers, I made a speech at a neighborhood gathering at last day of his school. On several occasions I have been permitted, invited at this place (Sideview Schoolhouse) several times, and at other places on like occasions. On April 11, after preaching, a young married lady living near New Canton asked for baptism at once. She had come prepared, as she was from a distance; had before announced her intentions, and as usual on occasions of baptism the crowd was swelled. By procuring a number of lanterns we had quite plenty of light and a nice baptism, with others expressing themselves as feeling they ought to put it off no longer. Confirmation was also attended to at the "self-same" hour. On the 18th of April, by invitation of secretary of Calhoun County, Illinois, I was invited to occupy the place of a Methodist minister (who was sick) at a Sunday-school convention, at a little place called Bellevue.

Well, it was a little amusing to us that some other ministers on the program had got scared out on account of a little rain, so I had it all to myself, except one solo. Sometimes when our elders have like experiences, why do they not write them up for HERALD or Ensign, telling of the opportunities the Lord is opening for them. Some Latter Day

Saint turns up his nose and says, "He's blowing his horn." Some other elder, brother, or sister hears the statement, they have some experience that if known would unburden many a poor, downcast soul, but they're timid, they're bluffed, and we never hear what the good Lord has done for them.

When I look back a few years when even the schoolhouses were closed here, the church doors all or almost all barred, and think of my bitter, bitter trial when I stepped down and out from a popular church, threats of mob, "he's insane," "they ought not to be allowed here," and now, in verification of spiritual promise, to view such wonderful changes and have their invitations and expressions of appreciation, I feel thankful for the work.

I trust I have not worried you, Mr. Editor, with too much zeal to acquaint those who may be interested with the moving of God's hand here. To him be all the glory, with hope for brighter days for "the bride, the Lamb's wife."

W. A. GUTHRIE.

EAST INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 9, 1909.

Editor Herald: I would like to write a few lines to tell how I have been blessed in the last two years. My health was so poor that I could not work one quarter of a day; now I can work all day and I have not taken five cents worth of medicine in a year and I used to have to take it every day. Where I used to be so embarrassed because I was deaf, I do not mind it now only when I go to church, and then I feel like one that was hungry and went where the tables were loaded with what they wanted, and all they could get would be the smell. But I feel happy that the Lord has blessed me with such good health after twenty-five years, that I may be able to get faith and my hearing; but if it is the Lord's will that I must be deaf, his will be done, not mine. If any one does me wrong I will leave it with them and the Lord, for I feel thankful for what he has done for me.

We have meeting here every Sunday and Wednesday night. We do not have very many, but we have good meetings. This is where the new coal-mine is to start.

F. T. DOBIE.

CENTRALIA, Illinois, May 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: It is a long time since I have written to the HERALD. As we scan its pages, our hearts are gladdened to see how the work is prospering in other places. I know that Jesus Christ is the son of God and that the Latter Day Saints are indeed the church of Christ and accepted of him. I feel that I really do know it better than I know anything else. I was surprised at what was said about Christ being the Son of God, because I had not been praying for that, but always believed that without a doubt. But I soon decided that it was to show to me that it was a true revelation and that in all it showed me things to come and I know that God has blessed me in many ways. There are only a few Saints in this place. I never get to go to church without going twenty miles, and that has been some time. I trust I will be some day where I can go to the church of Christ every Sunday.

I am going to try this summer to get the preacher over with a tent and hold a two- or three-week meeting. I know that good can be done here. I believe this will be mother's last summer on earth with my sister and myself and I would like to see a good meeting here this summer. I wish to be found faithful in trying and striving to do his will and keep his commandments.

Bro. Goostree was over this week and had the pleasure of adding two more to the church and kingdom of God. This leaves all well.

BAYARD, Nebraska, May 8, 1909.

Herald Publishing House: I ask for the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my little girl who is afflicted with spasms. She is eight years old and had spasms when a little babe and was so bad that we did not think she could live a day. We sent for the elders and she was healed, but when she was three years old she commenced having them again and I feel that the Lord will again heal her. She wants to be baptized as soon as an elder comes.

Asking a special prayer for her, I remain,
Your sister in the faith,

RIVERTON, Iowa.

Editor Saints' Herald: I thought I would write a dream I had a few nights ago. I was studying about the condition of the branch at this place and I dreamed that the branch turned into a mound of earth that was frozen very solid. I was trying to make a wedge to drive in, to try to slab off some of the mound in order to break the front, but I could find no material solid enough to make the wedge, for when I went to drive the wedge in it would bend and was too soft to penetrate the frost. I want to do all I can to get the mound in working order, but I hope the time will come when some one will come to visit us that is able to break the frost and get us united.

L. C. DONALDSON.

TULARE, California, May 13, 1909.

Dear Herald: I see I have been appointed to labor in Northern and Central California this year and take this means to ask all the isolated Saints who would like to honor God's command to warn their neighbors, if you would like to have meetings in your neighborhood and can get a schoolhouse or hall, private house, or any place where you can get your neighbors together, and will drop me a card, I will try and get around to help you out. I have baptized one since my report went to General Conference, and more have given their names for Sunday. Saints, let us arise and shake off the coals from our garments and get busy. We know the work is true and if we put it to the front it will win. Let the watchword be onward and upward, and never let the banner trail in the dust; but keep it in the breeze until the world is warned.

JOHN F. WILES.

OTTAWA, Kentucky, May 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: I think the readers of the HERALD would like to hear from the new branch organized in Northeastern Kentucky.

Bro. J. W. Metcalf came out from Louisville and preached ten days for us, and while here organized a branch. He was assisted by Elder W. H. Forbes, of Mt. Vernon, Kentucky. We have a Sunday-school every Sunday, prayer-meeting every Wednesday night, also preaching every first Sunday by our presiding elder, W. H. Forbes.

We are trying to serve the Lord in deed and in truth, and we ask the prayers of the Saints everywhere that we may continue to the end and that there may be much good accomplished in this community, for we believe there are some honest-hearted people here, and we are trying in our weak way to show them the true way, for we know we have the truth. We realize there is no other way given under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful in this work which we represent.

Your sister in Christ,

GRACE OLIVER.

SIoux CITY, Iowa, May 17, 1909.

Editors Herald: In my article "Is the doctrine of universalism true?" published in last week's HERALD, in the twelfth line of the first column, page 443, the semicolon should be omitted, and the word prisons should read place. With such correction the statement will read: "The 'second judgment' and the place where the wicked remain between their death and resurrection have been confounded, or made synonymous."

My mission address is 705 West Sixth Street. Those desiring to communicate with me respecting work under my charge will please take notice.

PAUL M. HANSON.

ADELAIDE, Australia.

Editors Herald: Just a few lines from Adelaide. We are always pleased to receive the HERALD, to see how the work is going along in America and elsewhere; and though we are so far away, and it takes so long to get news (about six weeks), yet very often the HERALD contains something that we need to help us. We are wondering how the conference is getting on, and if we shall have any men sent here. We need help, but we know that the same need exists everywhere, and that means are limited. So we must just do the best we can, with what we have, and pray that God will send forth more laborers into his vineyard.

We have had some trying experiences in our branch, and we are not through with them yet; but in it all we realize what a glorious work it is, and we know that if we only remain humble and faithful, we shall come out more than conquerors in the end. We thank our loving, heavenly Father for the help and encouragement he gives us from time to time, and we pray that the trials and tribulations we have to pass through may purify us, so that he may be able to use us as humble instruments in extending his kingdom and in blessing his children.

We are collecting towards the Church History for our library, and are hoping soon to be able to send for the four volumes. Money seems to be a scarce article with the Saints in Adelaide at present, but we are doing the best we can, and are thankful that it is not the amount we give but the sacrifice that it entails that God looks at. The poor widow cast in more than they all.

Your brother in the gospel,

WALTER DYKE.

Foster Street, Parkside, April 7, 1909.

KANSAS CITY, Kansas.

To the Herald: Several years ago, I do not know when, I dreamed the Saints were gathered, or the community was all Saints. Early in the morning at the break of day they all gathered in a building. Was it the temple? The building was round (inside, I did not see the outside) with two or three galleries, or so it seemed to me. The morning service was closed; there was no visiting or jarring, each person kept his place and all filed out to the time of music, as people do at funerals, only each knew when to go. There was not a whisper; all was solemnity; it was the house of God. The visiting was done out-doors. The music continued until the last one left the building. As I went out I was handed three loaves of what I afterwards found to be angel's food. I suppose the others got some too. I went toward my home; the dew was still on the grass. I had not walked long when I saw a man, and the Spirit told me he had just arrived in Zion, had come a long way, and was hungry. I went to break off about one third of one loaf, the three loaves were to last me and mine until the next morning, so I must be careful; but over half the loaf broke off and I handed it to him. He took it and passed on eating. I then tasted it. It was good.

Man's language always fails to describe anything pertaining to God. The food was sweet, but not like cake, it had fat substance in it; was moist and spongy, but like nothing earthly, as it did not sog when squeezed, but sprung back when released. When I got home I looked at the house and thought, "Why have I so large a house? I do not need it." Then I knew I was to give a home to any newcomers until they were located (each one for a few days). As I went up the stairs two families had arrived in my absence and were at home on the porch. I reached the top step and begun to break chunks off the broken loaf. I thought, "What will I do? we will eat the three loaves for breakfast." So I went around the crowd again and again and gave each a piece as large as my fist or larger, but still the smallest half of that first loaf was not gone. At last two of the children ran to me for more. Every one else had had enough and I broke the last piece in two and all had enough, and the two loaves were untouched. There were twelve or more besides my own.

There was no ceremony, no elaborate display, no unnecessary work.

If we are to spend our time in doing good, and praise and prayer, when Zion is redeemed, would it not be well to bring our work down, cut out unnecessary labor. I wash, iron, bake, mend, and sew, for five of us. I think our homes should be clean and orderly, but we must not spend all our time doing this. L. H.

PUEBLO, Colorado, May 15, 1909.

Dear Editors: Yesterday while looking over the pages of the Pueblo Christian, May 14, I saw in large letters, "Methodist minister leaves church and gives reasons why." He is George T. Sledge, of Beulah, Colorado.

Of course I was interested in the statement, as I always am in anything religiously inclined; so I decided to read it. I was astonished to learn how much in conformity his belief is, with the belief and teachings of our people. I will inclose the clipping for publication, that is, if you think best to publish it. Nevertheless I earnestly request one of our elders, who can best do so, to have an interview with him. Let us remember, "The field is ripe, the laborers few." And even the angels in heaven rejoice over one soul who is brought into the fold. D. D. SHIRK.

BRADFORD, Manchester, England, April 25, 1909.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: After laboring for about five years in Scotland, I can look back with pleasure knowing that our labor there has not been in vain. I came to Lancashire on New-Year Day to better myself in regard to work, as coal-mining for sometime has been very dull in Scotland. I must say I received a very warm welcome from the Saints in this part, and take this opportunity of thanking them for their kindness to my wife, daughter and myself, and I trust that our heavenly Father will bless our efforts to establish the gospel of the kingdom in this part. I believe there is no standing still in this work. We are either pressing forward or backward. I think it is good to examine ourselves to know what foundation we are building upon, whether it is on a rock or sinking sand.

I was surprised to see a statement in the HERALD some time ago that the money and the time that was spent in Scotland on the work had been spent in vain, according to the writer's idea, but I do not think that that statement was correct. When I entered the church in Hamilton, Scotland, five years ago, there were twelve members in the branch.

During that time there have been added to the membership fourteen, and although they are scattered I believe that all are striving to the best of their ability to do the will of their heavenly Father, and if elders sent to different parts of God's vineyard would do their duty and have a proper conception of their work whereunto God has called them, they would not devote their time running from one place to another enjoying themselves, instead of performing their duty. We should not pay children to do the work God has called us to do, as I believe that our heavenly Father desires that we should serve him with a true purpose of heart. There have been some true servants of God sent to Scotland who have done their duty; while there have been others who have been inclined to throw cold water on the good that has been done. We forget sometimes that we ought to be of one mind and all speak the same thing and have no division amongst us, and love one another, for in this lies the whole duty of a servant of God. If we love God and keep his commandments, we will find it is easy to love each other. I believe as servants of God that we can not afford to trifle with the truth concerning the kingdom of God. I fail to see how priests and elders in the church of Jesus Christ can afford to waste time in going to a theater or a football match or a dancing saloon. Can they honestly, before God, go on their knees and ask God's blessing on those worldly games, or do they compel Christ to stop outside while they go and enjoy themselves inside? This has been held up by other creeds, too, as a stumbling-block to them. My prayer is that those that read this letter and are guilty of the habits will in God's name give them up. Paul said if food or drink was a stumbling-block to others he would abstain from them. Let us raise the gospel banner higher in the future than in the past. ROBERT MURRAY.

Two Spirits, or Superstition.

Superstition is one proof of ignorance, and we find it mostly in the colored race of people, and uneducated. I have always looked for intelligence among the Latter Day Saints. A lady once said to me after me telling her that a mad dog bit my baby, "Kill the dog at once, and he'll not go mad." Now, what good would it do to kill the dog after he had done the biting? It would keep him from biting others, but would have no effect on that which he had done, no more than a criminal that was put to death in Springfield some months ago. They killed him, but did not kill what he had done. At other times on the 4th of July and carnivals I see the Christians gathered around the fortune-tellers or soothsayers, and I can not help but think of Saul when he was commanded to drive all such out of the country, which he did, and it meant death to many of them, and finally when he had lost all communication with God, he went to one himself, and she told him truths, and he could not bear to meet his fate, so he killed himself. The things came true that she told him, but here he departed from the faith. That shows there are two different spirits. God has his own way to show his children what is to befall them, if it is fit for them to know. The Lord has shown his people and strictly commanded them all along to go not after witches, soothsayers, spiritualists, old women's fables, laughing, and old women's sayings.

I once knew a woman to go right past the elder's house and go about two miles to a brother to get him to blow in the baby's mouth to cure the thrush, and he said—Well, it cured it, anyway. So did the Lord suffer the wise men to do miracles like unto Moses, but I understand that they were of a different spirit. Another man was ordained an elder, and I have often heard him say that he had worked in churches all his life and he was a discerner of spirits. He held meeting in his house, and had an old spiritualist lady seated at the front every night, and he did not know but it was the Spirit of the Lord she worked with till a brother (G. H. Hilliard) gave him a talk in my presence, explaining the difference.

"Don't thank me for a flower or it won't grow." "Don't give a friend anything sharp or you will be angry with each other." "Cover up the looking-glass when any one is dead." And "to hear a hen crow is a bad sign," and a hundred other sayings. We do not find the Savior teaching such and they must be old women's sayings. My friends get very angry with me because I will not believe such things.

Another lady said she feared her mother or sister was going to die; she had a token. Something hit the side of the house or chimney. As though the Lord was going to bang away and knock the side of the house out or a chimney down in order to show his children what was to come.

The Lord is a wise parent. He does not come to any one in a way to frighten, no more than we would scare our little babies. God says to use knowledge and wisdom, and there is neither in such things as these. We find people of this class always fearing they may be deceived by prophecy or tongues or dreams. They do not need to fear for Satan will not have to go that far to deceive them. He can just send them around to a fortune-teller and get them to think it is the Spirit of the Lord. Neither is Satan always going to lie us into everything. He will seek to deceive. He will be flowered up with lots of truth in order to deceive us. The first elder that I heard preach here in warning the Saints told them the Devil was the nicest and slickest man in town, and if we follow after the ways of the evil spirit, we will surely sometime go wrong. I have heard some say there is no good in Satan. He does not know enough. But remember, he was once an angel of light and knows a good deal more about heaven than we do.

Blind Fannie.

When a child of seventeen years, I remember a little circumstance that took place in 1870. I was to attend conference at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and was to go with my aunt. We stopped at her son-in-law's, her daughter having died, to see the little children. He had his brother and his wife staying with them and his brother's wife heard the gospel story through my aunt. As the lady was blind, she wished to go and hear the good word preached. On the way to conference she would have me and my cousin George pick wild prairie flowers, and she would cry and say she had not seen anything for seven years. Her husband said it had been seven years since she had seen to read. As we journeyed on our way I became quite well acquainted with the blind lady, and after she heard the gospel preached, she thought she ought to obey, and if my memory serves me right, it was Bro. Brand that baptized her.

I expect many of you have read the leaflets of Blind Fannie. She is the same lady, but no longer blind; for when they had written her baptism and given it to her and we had started for home, she said, "I can see," and took the baptism certificate and read it; and while she rejoiced, her husband seemed very sad, for he could not give up the faith to which he belonged. One would think it was enough to convert any one; but tradition is very strong, and he died out of the kingdom of God.

I continued to be acquainted with Blind Fannie some thirty years. A few hours before her death I was standing by her and she said to me, "Oh, such loving-kindness!" And then she was almost through her earthly journey.

BLIND FANNIE'S FRIEND.

News From Branches

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

We have quite a large membership on our book, but the members who attend are only about one fourth. The officers are making an effort to find out where the stray sheep are. Quite a number have moved away without taking letters of removal. All branches ought to encourage members who come to abide to get their letters; this would be a great help to reduce the number of scattered members.

Bro. R. Givens, while shingling a two-story house, slid down on the roof about six feet and fell twenty feet to the ground. He was picked up unconscious and carried into the house, where it was found no bones were broken, but he was hurt internally, about the breast. The elders were called and through administration he is recovering nicely.

Many of the members of the branch attended the Religio convention last Saturday and Sunday at the Fourth Kansas City Branch. A very spiritual session was had from first to last. The number of members are sixteen locals composed of eleven hundred members, and in the home class there are four hundred and forty members. Our Religios are becoming a large missionary force here in the city.

Our Sunday-school is preparing for a children's day for next month. Quite a number of the children desire to be baptized and a joyful time is looked forward to by the school.

CHICAGO ITEMS.

Several of the eastern Saints stopped over with us on their way from General Conference. We had some sermons from those of the eldership, and enjoyable visits from all. To the best of that which is ours, we entertained and provided for those of the visitors who stopped over for a few days. Nothing administers so much to the comfort of the traveler as a pleasant host, and it should be the first thought of the Saints to see that visitors are made comfortable and welcome. I once heard an elder say that he could tell the moment he entered the home of any of the Saints, or even strangers, whether the spirit to make one abundantly welcome was present with the household or not, and that if he discerned a "pinched up" air about the place, the only pleasant incident of the affair was the departure.

It is easy for any of us to open our home to what we call the leading men of the church, but if we notice an ordinary visitor in the congregation seldom we think to go to him and inquire as to whether he is provided for, and if we can in any way help him. Little do we think that in this way we can not only discharge a duty, but make a lasting impression for good on the individual. The writer and wife had the pleasure of entertaining Elders Anderson, of Canada, and S. F. Cushman, of Boston. Bro. Cushman is known as the man who can not sleep unless his head is turned to the north. This theory we have later tried out to our satisfaction. Brethren, heads to the north!

The South Side Branch, one and all, feel renewed in spirit at their successful taking over of so handsome a church proposition, with but a few dollars to begin with. The West Side have nothing particular to be elated over, as they had considerable funds to their advantage.

It is with sadness that we report the death of the three weeks' old babe of Bro. and Sr. Fred C. Peslin. Sr. Peslin is stricken with grief, as the death of the child seems a cruel mystery to the tender heart of the young mother.

Pohemiti secretary, and M. Turatahi assistant. Afai as teacher, and Tautu deacon. Minutes of last conference were read, and after some corrections, were approved. Adjourned to meet again at 1 p. m. Minutes of morning session were read and approved, after which reports were read from Elders C. H. Lake, Metuaore, Joseph F. Burton, D. M. Pohemiti. Bishop's report, Turatahi, Tane, Tetaku, Roo, Tepoaitu, Tarua, Tapuni, Peretei, Varoa, Mauritera, Tuahiva, Parepare, Puhiri, Temaunu, Rua, Tehu, Tetai, Tupakake, Hotu, Teuraivea, and Tefau Tuata; Priests Titi, Mahinui, Hiti, Tenati, Tuamea, Tehautupu. Very incomplete reports were read from the branches at Manihi, Takapoto, Tupuai, and Niau.

Met again at 7 p. m. when Metuaore preached a good discourse. Conference convened at 8 a. m. on the 7th, C. H. Lake in the chair. Minutes of previous meeting were read and approved. Report of Elder Tai was read, also the report of the committee appointed to consider the ordination of Varo to the office of elder. His ordination was approved.

After much discussion, it was moved and seconded, that when this conference adjourns, it does so to meet with the branch in Manihi, April 6, 1910. Motion carried. Report of Sixth Quorum of Elders was read: 360 sermons; 12 baptized; 23 confirmed; administered sacrament to 41; 258 sick administered to; 8 ordinations; 10 children blessed; 1 chapel dedicated; 2 elders' courts; 10 ringing of bell; 6 funerals; 16 teachings of the gospel to individuals. Cast out of quorum 20; died 30; new members received 8; total membership of quorum at present 83; Kehauri presiding, Turatahi secretary.

At one o'clock, minutes of morning session were read and approved. Moved and seconded that Fakarava District be disorganized, Fakarava and Anaa to be included in the Takaraoa District, and Hereheretue in the Raroia District. Motion carried. Moved and seconded that a contribution box be placed in each branch, for the assistance of different missionaries that may reach these branches. Motion carried. Report of auditing committee on Bishop Metuaore's report was read. Reported correct. Motion of Varoa was considered, regarding officers who send their reports to the conference, but do not attend themselves. Moved and seconded that presidents of districts be requested to urge the Saints to attend the different conferences. Met again at 8 a. m., April 8, Metuaore in chair. Petition of branch in Niau asking that Hiti be ordained to the office of elder was granted. Bishop's agents were appointed by Bishop Metuaore as follows: Tetai, district of Kaukura; Tahua, branches in Rairoa; Rua, in Tikahau; Teopa, in Makatea; Hotu for the upper division of the mission. Missionaries were appointed as follows: William president of upper division, Tetaku his assistant; Turatahi president of lower division, Tai his assistant; Varoa president of district in Tahiti; Tarua president Rairoa District; Tetai president Kaukura District; Taufua president Tupuai District; Elia president Hao District; Temarei president Raroia District; Teiho president Takaraoa District; Tane and Tefau, missionaries in upper division; Temakehu in Hereheretue; Hiti and Tepoaitu in the Kaukura District. The committee to direct the work of building the wall around Taronā was continued, also empowered to portion off the land among the different districts. Adjourned to meet April 6, 1910, in Manihi. (Translated by C. H. Lake.)

Convention Minutes.

SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.—The Sunday-schools of this mission met in convention April 5, in Taronā. The superintendent, Sr. Burton, being absent, the meeting was opened by Sr. Lake, assistant. After the opening exercises, Sr. Lake was sustained in charge and Tetaku appointed to assist and Tarutahi as secretary. A part only of last session's minutes was present, which was read and accepted. Reports were then read. Sr. Lake had done Sunday-school work in Niau, Hikuera, Takume, and the two Sunday-schools in Tahiti, also in other islands through correspondence. She informed them that the new books for the children were ready for distribution. Reports were read from seven Sunday-schools with a membership as follows: Tiona 34, Taronā 22, Tiki hau 30, Mataura Tubuae 31, Mahu Tubuae 26, Manihi 79, Takaraoa 27. Officers were elected as follows: Sr. Lake superintendent, Tetaku first assistant, Tane second assistant, Temaunu a Pohemiti secretary, Tetai superintendent of the district of Tahiti, and Viriamu of the Fakarava District. The matter of again having a banner for the Sunday-school who learned the lessons the best was taken up and discussed at some length but the motion was lost. Sr. Lake, Tetaku and Turatahi were appointed a committee to conduct the concert to begin at 1 p. m. It was then moved and carried to adjourn to meet again on April 5, 1910, in the place that the conference should appoint for their gathering. Closed by singing and prayer. In the concert which followed there were twelve scripture recitations by classes, 8 hymns, and 8 short talks by elders. Offerings $7.50, Chili money, or $3.12 American. Alberta Lake, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints in Utah; Greeting: Being appointed to labor in your midst this conference year, and by the minister in charge assigned to take the oversight of the work, I improve this opportunity to address you. I trust we may be able to put forth an earnest and united effort in the Master's cause, and that under the divine blessings and directions good may accrue to the cause we love. It is a great and wonderful privilege afforded us all, to be laborers together with God; may we always be mindful of the responsibility attaching.

I will be detained at home for a few weeks, but hope to be with you sometime in June. In the meantime I will be pleased to hear from you, and be informed as to the needs and condition of the work. The missionary force and also the local brethren are requested to write, that we may thus confer together, and enter upon our duties understandingly. I will also be glad to hear from the Saints and friends who may be able to give information that shall be helpful in the prosecution of the work.

For the present address me at Weston, Iowa, R. F. D. No. 1. I will select a mission address later,

May 16, 1909.

Your coworker,
H. N. HANSEN.

Dear Brethren of the Salt Lake District; Greeting: No doubt you have ere this noticed that the wheel of fate has recorded me in Salt Lake City for the ensuing year, also the appointment of president of your district, to fill vacancy occasioned by the resignation of J. F. Curtis, in consequence of his higher calling. It will go without saying that I can not serve you as well. "Young men for war and old men for counsel." We may be able to serve you along the lines of the latter. However, we hope to always be ready for the battle when necessary. This statement may in a measure define my policy; it will be my desire to make friends without compromise, and as few enemies as possible. Let us carry a light instead of a club. By so doing we may reclaim some of the erring ones and lead others to the light, and in pointing them to it, we may get nearer to the light ourselves. I ask the coöperation of all in the district, and let every man from elder to deacon push out into the fields presenting the gospel of peace wherever opportunity may offer. We shall want to hear from every minister in the district to know your necessities and demands. We shall do our best to be your servant under all circumstances.

Our headquarters will be at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. D. Wilson, 343 South Sixth East Street, Salt Lake City, Utah, where all communications may be addressed, and woe be to the man or woman of our faith passing through the city that does not seek and find our sanctum sanctorum. We will try to interest you while you may interest us. Yours in gospel bonds,
T. W. CHATBURN.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 12, 1909.

To Saints of Southern Missouri District, and Southeastern Missouri; Greeting; Having been placed in charge of this territory I address these lines to you, that we all may be aroused to a keener sense of duty. Let the Saints write me at my mission address below (my address is no longer at Springfield, Missouri,) concerning opportunities for preaching this angel's message. Remember I am acting as agent for the Bishop, and want you all to come to the rescue of the work financially, thus proving we are the disciples of our Savior. Send all money to me at Willow Springs, Missouri, R. F. D. No. 2, Box 63.

Yours for the truth,

A. M. BAKER.

May, 17, 1909.

Notice of Appointment.

To whom it may concern, this is to certify that Elder A. J. Moore has been appointed to labor as a missionary in the Montana District, for the conference year, self-sustaining. We ask for him your confidence and support.

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in charge of Montana.

We concur in the above appointment.

FRED'K M. SMITH,

Secretary the First Presidency.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 19, 1909.

Information Wanted.

Information is wanted concerning the whereabouts of the following members of the West Plains Branch: Sarah Crider, Martha Freeze Smith, Marion Bogart, Esther Grant, Walter Mauzer, Milo Mauzer, Orman W. Mauzer, Walter E. Mauzer, Peter E. Mauzer, Sarah Fullerlove, Lulu Fullerlove, Mary J. Walker, Drusilla Williams, Henry Herinton, Edna E. Herinton, Polly Nipps, Andrew Nipps, Thomas J. Pate, James F. Taylor, Elizabeth Harrison, Sarah N. Glasener, Nancy M. Sheffield, Alva F. Harvey. Any one knowing of the whereabouts of these members will confer a favor on the branch by communicating with Esther Bootman, secretary.

Notice to Branch Secretaries.

As the result of a resolution passed by the Eastern Michigan district conference held at St. Clair, October, 1908, it becomes your duty to supply the priesthood of your respective branches with ministerial report blanks. Hitherto they have been furnished by the district secretary. These blanks may be secured of the Herald Publishing House. Do not neglect.

F. O. BENEDICT, Secretary, Deckerville, Michigan.

Sanitarium Notice.

To All Whom it May Concern: Please address all your letters concerning the Sanitarium, and send all your packages for that institution to Bishop E. L. Kelley and not to me. By doing this direct, you will save me the trouble of doing it after they get here. My time is fully occupied and I have no clerks to attend to correspondence in that line.

If, after this notice, you proceed contrary to this instruction, please do not blame me if you receive no answers to your communications or if loss occurs.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH LUFF.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 17, 1909.

Two-day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting held with the Saints at Savanna, Illinois, June 12 and 13. Those expecting to attend please notify Sr. Emily Sartwell in advance. E. W. Voelpel, president.

Conference Notices.

Northeastern Illinois District will meet at Mission Branch June 5 and 6, 1909. Those coming by rail will be met at Sheridan or Seneca up to Saturday noon. Please notify Bro. Thomas Hougas, Route 58, Marseilles, Illinois, or the undersigned, Route 57, Marseilles, of the time and the place you are coming. W. E. Williamson, secretary.

Spring River District will convene with the Fairland Branch June 5 and 6, and we want you all to come to the conference and conventions. All are cordially invited. Visitors from the north come to Afton in the morning, then you can come to Fairland at 2.20 or 7.41 p. m. Those coming from the east are due here at 9.27 a. m. George M. Rhonemus, clerk.

Gallands Grove District quarterly conference will be held at Deloit, Iowa, on June 12 and 13, 1909. Will be glad to have all those who can attend do so, to help make this conference one to be remembered. Please send all ministerial, committee, and branch reports one week before the convening of conference to the undersigned. Edith C. Dobson, secretary, Deloit, Iowa.

Eastern Maine District will convene at Jonesport, June 26 and 27 at 2 p. m. Apostle U. W. Greene, missionary in charge, will be in attendance. E. M. Walker, secretary.

Florida District will convene with the Santa Rosa Branch near Berryville, Florida, June 5 and 6. We hope to have a good attendance, with some of the missionary force. All branch officers will please remember the ruling, and have reports approved by branch and signed by president and secretary. Please do not let this slip. We are very anxious to have reports from every branch in district in order that we may get the record as complete as possible. Also the conference would be gratified to have every one of the priesthood report, all elders, priests teachers, and deacons. Let us hear from you. If you can not come you can report. But come if you can. Reports will reach conference if mailed to the undersigned at Dixonville, Alabama, in time to reach me. E. N. McCall, secretary.

Portland District will convene at the Saints' church, East Seventy-sixth and Irving Streets, Portland, Oregon, June 12, 1909. District officers to be elected at this conference. To reach place of meeting, take Montavilla car at Third and Yamhill Streets. A. E. Lasley, clerk, Montavilla, Oregon.

The Eastern Michigan District will convene with the Evergreen Branch at Detroit, Michigan, June 19 and 20. Branch secretaries will please have all reports sent to me at Applegate, Sanilac County, Michigan, not later than June 15. All ministerial reports should be in the hands of district president William Davis, before conference, in order that a complete summary may be made. F. O. Benedict, secretary.

Conference of the Kentucky and Tennessee District will convene at Bethel, Tennessee, June 5 and 6, 1909. Let all come who can and bring the good Spirit with them. We hope to have several of the missionaries with us, and would like to have a full report from all the local force, either in person or by letter. Send all reports to B. F. Webb, secretary, R. F. D. No. 11, Cottage Grove, Tennessee. J. R. McLain, president.

Convention Notices.

Died.

GLOVER.—At Denver, Colorado, April 13, of cancer, William G. Glover, aged 42 years, 3 months, and 6 days. Bro. Glover was born and raised in the state of Kentucky, and had been a sufferer for several years. He came to Colorado seeking health and became acquainted with some of the Saints through his suffering, and united with the church February 21, 1909, being baptized and confirmed by Elder C. E. Everett. He was administered to many times, but only received temporary relief. Funeral-sermon by Elder E. F. Shupe from the undertaking parlors. Interment at Sedalia, Missouri.

OLIVER.—At Denver, April 16, 1909, of cancer, Sr. Amy M. Oliver, aged 43 years, 1 month, and 10 days. Sr. Oliver had been a trained nurse for years, and it was while thus engaged in caring for others that she met with an accident that bruised her breast from which developed the dread disease which caused her death. She was baptized and confirmed by Elder G. T. Griffiths, at Oak Hill, Pennsylvania, July 25, 1886. Funeral from the residence, in charge of Elder C. E. Everett; sermon by Priest J. N. Duncan, by her request. Interment at Fairmont.

KENTY.—At Denver, Colorado, May 8, 1909, from being struck by a railroad train, Stanley E. Kenty, son of Alexander and Elmira M. Kenty, aged 16 years and 29 days. He had left the home of his employer but a short time before he met his death, with a herd of cows, and had only just reached the herding grounds, and was walking along the track, when the train came upon him from behind and he was killed instantly, his skull being crushed. It was gross carelessness upon the part of the train crew, as they were exceeding their speed limit by many miles per hour. Funeral from the Saints' church in charge of Elder C. E. Everett; sermon by Elder E. F. Shupe; interment at Fairmont.

BURROWS.—Sr. Mary (Nuttall) Burrows passed from earth's life May 2, 1909, at her son's home in Holden, Missouri. Her husband, Edward Burrows, preceded her twelve months and twelve days. She longed to join him on the other side. She was born in Tottington, England, November 24, 1841. Heard the elders from Utah and obeyed what she supposed the gospel of Christ, and emigrated to Utah in 1878. Three years later she was married to Edward Burrows, July 4, 1876, at Logan, Utah. During the year of 1882 they moved to Montana. In 1893 they became members of the Reorganization, and moved to Holden in 1903, where she lived till the messenger called her home. She was a faithful Saint and loved by all who knew her. Two sons, George W. and Levi C., reside in Holden, and one daughter, Alice A. Dildine, live in Montana. Funeral May 3, in charge of James Moler, sermon by A. H. Parsons.

CRAWLEY.—At Independence, Missouri, May 5, 1909, Elder Daniel S. Crawley departed this life. Bro. Crawley was born at Winchester, Scott County, Ill., Dec. 20, 1833. He was married in early manhood to Sarah Freshour, in California. To this union were born twelve children, eight of whom survive. His wife, Sarah, departed this life at Independence in 1885. He was remarried in DeKalb County to Mrs. Hattie A. Yates, who, with four sons, are left to honor his memory, one child having been lost. His living sons are E. E. Crawley, of Weir City, Kansas; D. W. Crawley, of Minden, Missouri; his daughters are Mary E. Allison, of Colorado Springs, Colorado; Hattie A. Chase, of Warrensburg, Missouri; Sarah E. Cadmus, of Parsons, Kansas; Lilly M. Yates, of Ripley, Oklahoma; Pearl N. Snider, and Blanche M. Atwood, of Independence, Missouri. Bro. Crawley was baptized in 1868 by Elder E. C. Brand, was ordained the same year, and has continued in the active ministry until death. Interment from the Saints church at Independence. President Joseph Smith preaching the funeral-sermon; Brn. John C. Foss and E. C. Guinand in charge. Body laid to rest at Mound Grove Cemetery. So passes a noble worker for the gospel of the Son of God.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday was a day of special services. At eleven o'clock in the forenoon Elder W. H. Kelley addressed the G. A. R. and in the evening Bishop E. L. Kelley delivered the baccalaureate sermon for the graduates of Graceland College. Special music was also furnished by the Lamoni choir, soloists, and Graceland Choral Society.

On Saturday night the Alumni Association of Graceland College gave a banquet and reception at Patroness Hall, and afterward Mr. Howard Tedford, of Mt. Ayr, Iowa, addressed the alumni and visitors. His subject was "Alexander Hamilton," and it was handled in a manner decidedly pleasing and satisfactory.

Chancellor Strong, of the University of Kansas, will give the Graceland commencement address at the Brick Church this morning.

Memorial services were held Monday (31st) forenoon, and the public schools took part in a body. The services were exceptionally good and well attended.

On Monday afternoon the Board of Trustees of Graceland College gave a reception to the faculty and students at Patroness Hall.

PURPOSE AND POWER.

(Baccalaureate sermon by Elbert A. Smith, before the graduating class of the Lamoni High School, May 23, 1909. Reported by Estella Wight.)

Text: I have purposed it, I will also do it.—Isaiah 46: 11.
 Scripture lesson: For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man.—Ephesians 3: 14 to 16.

The subject that I have selected for the morning's discourse is purpose and power. The brief lesson that I have read calls our attention to the fact that there is an inner man that can be strengthened in might by contact with the Man of Galilee.

My text is found in Isaiah 46: 11. "I have purposed it, I will also do it." This expression, of course, comes from the Diety, with whom there is all power, and whose will is never thwarted. While we realize the full force of the argument that man is lower than God, and that his will should always be subservient to the will of God, nevertheless we believe that he also must exercise volition. He must seek to augment his own power; and so long as he operates in harmony with the will of God in any line of work that engages his attention, he can say, "I have purposed it, I will also do it."

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

The secret of success lies in the proper uniting of purpose with power, and every success is simply an opportunity met with resolute purpose and adequate power. Christ himself was no exception to this. While he was yet a young man, with almost no human backing, with all the forces of evil arrayed against him, he took his stand on a great principle of truth and resolutely declared: "Upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it."

And so he progressed with his work, little by little, gaining spiritual strength and vigor day by day and year by year, until finally he declared on a certain occasion, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth."

We want, first of all, to impress the importance of a resolute purpose, a strong will in life, when it is enlisted on the side of right.

Victor Hugo said, "People do not lack power so much as they lack will." We know that it is written, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." But too often we hide behind that text as an excuse. Too often we see men whose spirit is not aroused to its own strength. They do not use half the strength and vigor and the power with which they are by nature endowed. Why, you meet great big men and you will hear them say, "I would like to quit drinking, or quit chewing tobacco, but I can not do it." Strong men, six feet high and a yard wide, will back down before a glass of beer or a plug of tobacco, and say they would like to resist it, but they can not seem to do so. I tell you, the flesh is able, but the spirit is not willing.

What we want is resolute purpose and strength of character. When the spirit is willing it will carry a fainting body a long way. Some of you were out to the athletic tournament yesterday. You noticed one of our Graceland students who seemed about to collapse in the last race in which he took part. When about two thirds of the distance had been covered he nearly fell. But he rallied his forces in one supreme effort, straightened up, and went like an arrow from a bow over the line a long way ahead of all the others. It was sheer grit and adherence to a fixed purpose.

THE INNER MAN.

Now I want to call attention to that which Paul calls the "inner man," the self, the ego. Power and purpose are characteristic properties of the inner man, and not necessarily of the outer man.

Picture the inner man if you can. If I were in need of an illustration to bring before your minds his varied capabilities, his almost unlimited resources, I might take you to one of the larger cities, almost any of the larger cities, such as Chicago or New York, and call your attention to the network of telegraph wires that come from other cities, from San Francisco, from Boston, from the north and the south, from foreign countries, a great network of them centering in that city. If I were to say to you that one man in that city takes every message that comes over those wires, and sends out every message that goes out, and in addition sits in judgment in that city, passes laws and enforces them, directing all the affairs of the city, you would say, "It is impossible." And yet, Professor Halleck, in his work on psychology, is authority for the statement that there are more vibrant nerves centering in the human brain than there are telegraph wires leading into any city in the world; and one intelligence receives every message that comes in, and sends every message that goes out.

But the inner man has a higher work than that. He sits like a king on his throne, under the arched dome of the cranium. He listens to the appeal of the passions that come up from the heart and answers yes or no, or temporizes, according to the manner of man he is. He listens to the arguments of other men. Why, there are thousands of appeals coming to the average intelligent citizen to-day from great men, from philosophers, from religious and secular teachers; they come in, and the inner man sitting on his throne meets them and passes upon them and makes decisions. But more than that, the great God of heaven sends an accredited ambassador to his court and says, "Come now, and let us reason together!" (Isaiah 1:18.) Why, it would seem to me that only a fool or a coward would ever abdicate the place that he holds and let some other man reason for him, or think for him, or deaden his faculties with alcohol or drugs, when God himself has come knocking at his door, saying, "Let us reason together."

Volition belongs to the inner man. It is his right to weigh and decide and determine the course that he will pursue, and having determined it to say, "I have purposed it, I will also do it."

Nobility is a trait of the inner man as well, and I would like to impress that thought upon the members of this graduating class, as well as on all those assembled here to-day. When they go out into the world they will discover, situated as they are in this free land of America, that aristocracy and inherited titles in this age meet with nothing but contempt, among thinking men, when not backed up by individual merit. I recall two little anecdotes that illustrate modern contempt for artificial aristocracy and inherited titles. One of the scions of the Old World was talking with one of our rough frontiersmen, and as he was boasting of his descent from titled individuals, he took from his pocket a shilling and said: "My great-great-grandfather was made an earl by the king whose picture is engraved on that coin." Quick as a flash the irreverent one drew from his pocket a copper cent and said: "What a coincident! My great-great-grandfather was made an angel by the Indian whose picture you see on that coin."

The other anecdote illustrates the character of some of our effete society members. Two young men were talking about a third. One of them said: "What is the matter with Percival of late? He seems so despondent." The other individual said: "Why, don't you know, he has been to a great deal of bother, and has traced his lineage back five hundred years through earls and dukes, and now he discovers that he is only an adopted child."

When a man does not "amount to a hill of beans" himself, and is depending upon the merit of his fathers, it is a terrible blow to discover that they did not amount to anything either. But with the average man it is enough to know that his father was an honest man and his mother a virtuous woman; and let me tell you that the highest title ever conferred upon an American citizen was conferred upon Abraham Lincoln by the people of France. The ambassador from France, M. Jusserand, in speaking at the graveside of Lincoln, on the twelfth day of last February, said that at the death of the great president the French people felt that they wanted to express their feeling in some way, so they set about collecting money, and in order that all might contribute, no one was permitted to give more than two cents, and from the sum raised they paid the expenses of having a medal designed, struck in gold, and presented to Mrs. Lincoln. The medal bore this inscription: "Dedicated by French democracy to Lincoln, honest man, who abolished slavery, reestablished the Union, and saved the Republic, without veiling the statue of Liberty." To Abraham Lincoln, honest man! That is as high a title as any man ever earned; and there is not a man here who can not earn that title if he will.

But while we are contemptuous of inherited titles, it is alleged that we have an aristocracy of wealth, and that he who can command money enough will stand high in the opinion of the people,—or at least he can command homage that otherwise he would not get. I trust that the members of this class as they go out into the world will never truckle to such an aristocracy; that they will despise a hypocrite and abhor a sneak, no matter what his station in life may be.

They must learn to distinguish between that which is genuine and that which is merely called great. If I were to hold in one hand a slightly tarnished five-dollar gold piece, and in the other a bright new penny, and offer a little child his choice between the two, the chances are about ten to one that he would take the bright new penny. But if I were to offer the same choice to you older people the chances are that I would lose the gold piece,—I would not dare to risk it for a moment. Why? Because you know that under the tarnish there is genuine gold, and that it is worth one hundred cents on the dollar. I trust that as these young men and young women go out into life they will learn to discriminate in values and to choose those individuals who are genuine gold to be their associates,—men and women who are worth one hundred cents on the dollar.

INTELLIGENCE AND A DETERMINED PURPOSE.

Wendell Phillips at one time said, "The age of bullets is over. The age of armed men in mail is over. The age of thrones is over. The age of thinking men has come. The age of the masses has come."

While it is not absolutely true that the age of bullest is fully spent and the day of thinking men fully come, we trust that each day brings that period nearer to us. And it is a fact that the thinking man has always been the man of consequence, no matter in what age he may have lived,—even in the age of battle.

Goliath was a big man,—no, he wasn't,—he was a little bit of a man in a big hulk of a body. He was six cubits and a span high, and his spear's shaft was like a weaver's beam. But about all that we know concerning him is that he made a big noise and a lot of bluster and was killed by a shepherd lad.

General Grant, by way of contrast, was a big man in a little body. He went around with his hat pulled down over his eyes and made one word do the work that two had always done before. But in the hour of his country's need he swung two great armies of eight hundred thousand men into battle and forced his terrible antagonist southward inch by inch, and pounded him to pieces. He was as great in victory as he had been relentless in attack, for he refused to take from his brave adversary the sword that he was about to surrender.

I will tell you something about the secret of this man's success, something that bears directly on the subject in hand. It is said by one of his historians that he was of Scotch descent, and that the motto of his clan in Aberdeenshire was, "Stand fast, stand firm, stand sure." (General U. S. Grant; His Life and Public Services, by Remlap, p. 17.) I do not know whether that statement is true or not, but I do find significant words in one of the first chapters of his Memoirs. He is recounting an incident that occurred in his boyhood days, and says, "One of my superstitions had always been, when I started to go anywhere or do anything not to turn back or stop until the thing intended was accomplished."

Not to turn back or stop until the thing intended was accomplished! When he graduated from West Point there were twenty-nine members in his class. He occupied twenty-first place. There were twenty young men above him who had abilities in one way or another superior to his, and who gave greater promise than he of being of service to their country. But he was the one who never stopped and never turned back. There were many generals in the civil war, and you may hear people arguing yet to-day that Sherman was a greater general, or McClellan was a greater general; but while they may have been greater in some regards, Grant was the one who never stopped and never turned back. Before I close I will tell you something more about the secret of his success.

We turn from the life of a warrior to the life of the Apostle Paul, possibly the greatest missionary that ever lived. His motto also was, "Stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." As a result of his high courage, resolute spirit, and trust in God he was a powerful man and in some ways a terrible man. He was cast into jail at Philippi, and as a result of the stand he took his persecutors were compelled to ensue him to come out and depart in peace and forbear to prosecute them under the Roman law. He was tried before Felix,—or Felix was tried before Paul,—and Paul reasoned of judgment and righteousness until Felix, who was accustomed to bribes and soft pleadings, trembled on his judgment-seat and implored him to desist. He was tried before Agrippa,—or rather Agrippa was tried before Paul. Paul's defense at that time is one of the masterpieces of the world's literature. At its close Agrippa cried out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian."

With an invincible purpose he pressed on in the great gospel work that God had intrusted to his care, and power was added to him day by day, until these rulers trembled under their kingly vestments at his presence, although we are given to understand that his ordinary personal appearance was considered by certain ones to have been contemptible.

THREE KEYS TO POWER.

We now come to the question of power. Life is an up grade. The moment we begin to go down hill, either physically or mentally, we are going toward death. Only as we go up hill are we moving toward fuller life. It requires power as well as purpose to go up grade. We must develop our powers and add to them.

There are three keys to power,—three keys of iron aspect. I will name them. You can not dispense with any one of them. They are work and study and prayer.

Some people think that genius or inspiration is all-sufficient and try to dispense with work and study. They are fatally in error. Others think that they can work and study and dispense with inspiration; but when we look into the lives of the truly great, whether well-known or obscure, we discover that they were touched with a ray of light from on high that was not granted to other men,—or other men did not choose to avail themselves of it.

THE KEY OF WORK.

We hear the statement made that work is a curse. We hear it called the primal curse. Work is not a curse and never was a curse. Work is a blessing. Emerson truly said, "Every man's task is his life preserver." It is a curse when men can not get work. It is a curse when they are not able to work. It is a curse when they do not wish to work.

The curse that was pronounced upon our father in the Garden of Eden was excessive work. It was intended that he should work. He was told to tend the garden and to dress it, a pleasant and healthful task. But after his sin the curse of excessive labor was placed upon him and he was told that he should eat bread in the sweat of his brow.

A great many people are under the curse of excessive toil to-day. I heard Booker T. Washington telling the experiences of his people while under slavery and also after freedom was granted them. He said the difference was simply that which exists between working and being worked.

It is profitable and a joy to work when we can plan and direct our own affairs in loving coöperation with others; it is a curse when we are being worked and some one higher up forces us to an unwelcome task. Too many people are being worked. They are slaves to the factory whistle and must run at its command, leaving their homes ere the dawn of day, coming back after dark, scarcely seeing their little ones. They are driven by taskmasters and must keep pace with machines; steam and steel wear them out all the day long.

It is God's design that all men should work for what they get. Those who labor on farms and in factories and stores know that what they get they must work for. It is true that some men go upon the stock exchange or into the wheat pit or the real estate market and secure a princely living for a time speculating in the values created by the labor of others; but in one way or another they must pay the price sooner or later.

THE KEY OF STUDY.

The next key to which I call your attention is that of study. There is a commandment on record like this: "Study and learn, and become acquainted with all good books." Become acquainted with all good books! That means a personal acquaintance. We must have them in our homes. We must study them if we are to become acquainted with them.

I recall visiting two homes and I will tell you about them; possibly in your experiences you have noticed a similar contrast. The first of these homes,—or rather I will call it a house; there is a difference between a home and a house,—was not in Lamoni nor in the immediate vicinity. On the center-table I found two books. Number one was the life of P. T. Barnum. Number two was one of those sentimental stories after the old English style,—perhaps you have read similar stories. It dealt with the love of two individuals. One was Lady Geraldine; the other Lord Emptyattic, or some such name. Lord Emptyattic occupied one side of the stage and was all the time straining every nerve to get to his love. She occupied the other side of the stage and was just as willing as he was anxious. But between the two stood an irate father, a foolish mother, a false sister, and a hated rival, and so they were kept apart chapter after chapter. It was as interesting as a football game. He constantly "bucked the line," but something always intervened, until after ages of suspense and buckets of tears, the situation suddenly cleared up and they came together with a sickening sound and the book ended, just as it was sure to end from the beginning. What is the advantage of reading such a book? The interest is simply narrowed down to one thing and that an important thing, to discover if a certain fictitious young man succeeds in "getting" a certain fictitious young woman. The perusal of a good book opens up a thousand avenues of investigation and interest. What sort of young men and women will come from the house just described?

I went from this house to the home of another family. On their table I found such magazines as the Review of Reviews and the Outlook, also books on religious questions, and the church papers. In their library I found the great poets, the writings of the philosophers, and scientific works. This home has demonstrated itself. It has answered the question before propounded. Two young men went out from that home and graduated with honor from one of our institutions of higher learning in Iowa; the third son is now in Graceland College.

It is designed that men should study; that they should push out and investigate. Let me caution these young men and young women not to be balked, not to permit their field of investigation to be circumscribed by what geographers term "imaginary lines." In one of the opening chapters of Plutarch's Lives we find this statement: "Geographers thrust into the extremities of their maps those countries that are unknown to them, remarking at the same time, that all beyond is hills of sand, and haunts of wild beasts, frozen seas, marshes and mountains that are inaccessible to human courage and industry."

We sometimes adopt similar tactics in the intellectual world. We use similar language regarding fields that we have never explored, and draw an imaginary line between orthodoxy and heterodoxy. We are simply seeking to cover up our ignorance in some instances. But we should not forget either that there are fields of thought where real dangers lurk, where courage, caution, and faith are needed.

Christ himself proposed to force no man's mind, but sent the Holy Spirit as a "guide," to guide unto all truth. The very language of his promise presupposes investigation and research on the part of the individual.

THE KEY OF PRAYER.

The third key that we have named is prayer. Some of my hearers may think that they can dispense with prayer; but permit me to exhort them not to do so. You are surrounded by laws and forces that are in constant operation. You are studying those laws and forces. Then get in touch with the one intelligence under which they all operate. By his help you can understand that which otherwise you could not understand.

The truly great men of the world have never ignored divine aid. When General Grant, of whom mention has been made, was appointed General-in-chief of the armies of the United States, he uttered these words, in his reply to President Lincoln: "I feel the full weight of the responsibilities now devolving on me, and I know that if they are met, it will be due to those armies, and, above all, to the favor of that Providence which leads both nations and men." (General U. S. Grant; His Life and Public Services, by Remlap, p. 125.)

In the Outlook, February 2, 1909, Jesse W. Week, a personal friend of Abraham Lincoln, used these words: "The world has never been able to account for Mr. Lincoln's amazing ability. . . . Whence came his marvelous sublimity of thought. . . . The question has never been answered." He was mistaken. The question has been answered. Lincoln answered it when he said good-bye to the citizens at Springfield and went to assume the awful task that awaited him. It was further answered (as related by Simeon W. King in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, February 10, 1909,) when Lincoln in an address in Chicago before D. L. Moody's Bible class, said, "Trusting in myself I can hope to do nothing, but I rely on divine providence for guidance and strength."

While reading a book the other day, entitled, How to Develop Power and Personality as a Preacher, by Grenville Kleiser, formerly an instructor in Yale, I found this sentiment: "No one thing will add so much to a man's power in speaking as the conscious possession of truth. . . . The speaker knows he stands upon the solid rock, and this assurance produces the highest type of self-confidence."

If it is necessary for the preacher to have truth back of him in order to have self-confidence and power in telling people how to live, it is just as necessary that men shall have the truth, and know that they have it, in order that they may have power in the more difficult task of living.

The Man of Galilee, to whom Pilate, as the representative of Rome, and through Rome the world, put the question, "What is truth?" is the one to answer that question for you. Through him find the truth. Take your stand upon it; and never change the stand that you have taken.

THE COMMON AFFAIRS OF LIFE.

The question now arises, How shall we use our purpose and power in every-day life, in the common affairs of the world? The chances are that not one of these boys and girls will ever be famous. They may become famous, we do not know; it is immaterial. The great men of whom we read, in addition to being great had this advantage, their work was public and was widely known; but thousands of men and women work at tasks requiring equal fortitude, who work in obscurity. We need men of force and conviction and women of a similar type in a multitude of avocations in the affairs of life.

If these boys become merchants, let us hope that they will be alive and up to date, and above all that they will be honest. If they go upon the farm, let them till the soil according to scientific methods, and thus engage in the great work of feeding the world. And let me tell you that there is a brighter era coming for farmers. Our secretary of agriculture has repeatedly called our attention to it. For instance, the demand for wheat the world over is increasing much more rapidly than the supply. The farmer of to-morrow will reap a larger share of the profits of the world. Some of our boys are making a mistake in leaving the farm to chain themselves for life to a ledger or a typewriter.

If these girls engage themselves in the work of the household let us hope that they will do that work well, if it is nothing more than baking a pie or a biscuit, and not inflict on their families the kind of pie that the lady gave to the longsuffering tramp. He declined to eat it and she told him he might give it to his friends. He replied that he would not do that,—he would give it to his enemies.

HEROISM AND OPPORTUNITY.

Some people say that there are no opportunities in this age. Why, the world is just as full of opportunities as it ever was. The trouble is that we sometimes make a mistake and when fate calls for a man we offer a substitute. A well-known actor was declaiming the famous line, "My kingdom for a horse!" Some one in the gallery sang out, "Will a donkey do?" Instantly the actor replied, "Yes, come around to the back door." When opportunity calls for a man don't let us make the mistake that was made by the man in the gallery and offer that kind of a substitute.

People tell us that the age of heroes is past. It is true that when a young man falls in love to-day he does not clothe himself in stovepipe and cast iron and go out to slay some fellow knight who will not admit that his lady is the fairest in the world. Instead he puts on a business suit and goes out to earn an honest living and get money to pay off the mortgage on the little vine covered cottage.

There are heroes in the world to-day. Watch the papers. Here are a few incidents noted during the past few months: On the twenty-fifth day of last January the schooner Sequel was wrecked off the shore of Vancouver Island. In launching the lifeboat the boat was upset on the deck and the captain's wife and little girl were killed. The crew and captain afterward escaped to a pinnacle of rock. Four members of the crew, touched by the grief of the captain, left the rock and swam back to the schooner and rescued the bodies of the woman and little girl. An inch of space was devoted to this story. In the same paper columns were given to murder cases and divorce scandals.

During last March, St. Patrick's Mine, in Utah, caved in, and some of the miners were imprisoned. A little group of weeping women and children soon surrounded the shaft. Other miners went to work and worked desperately, but not intelligently. Their efforts were thwarted by constantly recurring falls of rock and dirt. Finally Maurice Johnson, a mining expert, arrived. He soon brought order out of chaos. He went into the tunnel himself and saw that every foot of roof was timbered as fast as they cleared away the earth and rock, and finally, after fifty hours of work, the miners were rescued. A hero is a man who is not afraid; in addition he is the man who knows how,—the one who can meet the situation.

Down in Kansas City the other day a foreman in one of the factories was oiling some machinery and his sleeve became entangled in some way and he was about to be mangled to death. A girl working near by threw her arms around him and, exerting herself, helped him to tear himself from the machinery. That was rather a nice way to be rescued. I hope none of these young men will go out and cast themselves into complicated and rapidly moving machinery, taking their chances on being rescued in that way.

About a year ago Governor Hughes of New York was making his fight on the race tracks. When the bills that he favored came up the vote in the State senate stood twenty-five for and twenty-five against. There was one vacancy in the senate. A special election was held and the vacant seat filled with a man favorable to the reform. When the bills came up Senator Otto G. Foelker was sick at his home in Staatsburg. At the risk of his life he caused himself to be carried to the train. From the train he was carried on a stretcher into the senate chamber and there cast the deciding vote in favor of the reform measures. He received many letters threatening his life; but he also received many others, some from England and France, commending him. Afterward he was elected to the United States House of Representatives.

You see there is such a thing as moral heroism. Senator Foelker was as much a hero as any knight that ever sat at King Arthur's table and gorged himself with beef and wine.

One of the clerks in our town was told by his employer that he should misrepresent goods that were on sale. He replied, "I will not. If the goods are not all right I will not tell my customers that they are." He will be an honest man; but it is a shame that a boy must meet such temptations. Remember, no one can afford to lie for a living. More such young men would soon banish such practices from our commercial world.

There was another young man who defrauded one of our citizens. The man never discovered the fraud. But later on the boy began to develop force of character and to think along religious lines, and he went to the merchant and confessed the fault and made restitution. I was present some months ago when that merchant was one among several who recommended that boy to a position of trust. Sometimes it requires heroism to confess a wrong and make it right, but no one will ever regret such an act.

The individual who is starting out in life and will study and work and pray can say regarding the course that he has planned, "I have purposed it, I will also do it." God is with that man, and if God is for him who can be against him.

IN CONCLUSION.

Our friend Webster defines a baccalaureate sermon as a discourse before a graduating class. I do not know whether I am to represent the community and bid farewell to the class, or to represent the class and bid farewell to the community. In a sense the class must soon bid farewell to the community. As individuals the members may continue with us; but the class as a class must cease to exist.

As a community we say to the class, Farewell,—or, as they used to express it, "Fare you well." May it be well with you. May the community give you a square deal. May it give you what you earn. May it make you earn what you get. God's blessing be with you.

In behalf of the class we say farewell to the community, and we trust that the community will fare better than in the past, to an extent, for the reason that certain young men and women of strength and integrity have engaged themselves in the affairs of life, adding their strength to our strength in the work of the community.

THE FIRST WORK OF THE YEAR.

The Saints may move out accepting the increased responsibilities of the present conference year with a confirmed faith, renewed encouragements, and a reassurance of victory, if faithful and diligent to duty in the service and counsel of God. And is it to be expected that any one can even wish, or ask, for success, if in its culmination, he is likely to be found unfaithful to the trust imposed to help bring about the triumph of gospel light and life, over sin and darkness?

This is a special time for work, and we should take to ourselves the admonition of Jesus and "work while it is day." Prompt, courageous, and united action on the part of all, to carry forward the work of the proclamation of the gospel and establishment of its interests, will bring the especial favor of our heavenly Father, and such blessings of peace and strength as the church has not hitherto attained. Each and every one then should be engaged in his own work and calling, and no one be found a drone, or laggard, in the warfare.

The elders are already off to their fields of labor, or are anxiously arranging the home affairs so that they may confidently say the good-bye to loved ones, when entering upon the duties of the year.

The general officers have as yet hardly felt such relief from busy cares, so they might realize there has been a conference vacation and rest; and doubtless every member of the church, of whatever station or place, is prompted by an admonition of divine inquiry similar to the utterance of Saul of Tarsus, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

Our work should begin with the opening of the year's labors, not after one half of the time has passed, or till near the time to close the books. To do this, entails loss to the body at the beginning of the year, for we must have means to defray expenses of the conference and to assist elders and families and make the changes incidental to arranging the work of the year, and if we do not have this in hand it must be borrowed, and this brings a great loss to the body in interest and other expenses that would be avoidable if we had the capital at hand to better transact the business.

The conditions then are such that all must "labor together" for the success of the work, according to the divine direction given at Kirtland, April 11, 1887, Doctrine and Covenants 119: 8:

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.

Or as stated by the Apostle in 1 Corinthians 3: 9, "For we are laborers together with God." Not a few, but all are, or should be. The minister who is called and sent forth must at once move out and labor, or not stand approved in his place; and it is equally true that ministers and laymen who are called to other duties than that of work in the missionary field, must at once undertake to discharge these, or they will not meet the approval of the Lord. Now is the time when every one should bring his, or her, special offering and help perform the work, "sowing in the springtime" when we may reasonably expect, by faithfulness to duty, an abundant harvest.

The contribution of "a freewill offering," "a tithe," the "first consecration," or "the surplus," much or little, as each can spare, will at once set the wheels in motion without the loading up of an incumbrance that will prove a burden the entire year, and at the end we still have to lift it by the same earnest effort that is required at the present time.

If it is suggested, that we will be better prepared then to do the work, the reply comes back that by reason of the delay and conditions, there will be much more to do, so that we gain little or nothing by waiting, and lose thereby the favor and blessing of heaven.

The language of Jesus, "Wherefore, seek not the things of this world: but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God, and to establish his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you," is especially applicable to the eldership and membership of the church to-day. The person who is not willing to give his first and best thought to the building up of the work, and establishing of righteousness to-day, when there are so many possibilities for gathering and "establishing," which must result in everlasting honor, can hardly appreciate his power for good or the great loss to himself by his inattention and failure of action.

The past year, ten thousand Saints aided by their contributions under the various funds to the preaching of the gospel, the aid of the poor and needy, and building up of the church work, and it was a great and effective gift to the work of Christ and much was accomplished of good.

But with a conservative estimate the number of contributors should have been as many again as this. It should be remembered that children under eight years of age are not counted in reckoning our membership, and the majority of those who have accepted the covenant of grace, should be active helpers in its great work. Where is the one, boy or girl, youth or aged person, who is not a helper? None will want to have to hold up his hands and confess to a lack of duty on the other side and before the angels; then let us all be up and doing here. If it is only to the amount of the "widow's mite," let each perform his part; Jesus commended and promised a great reward for the devoted work, although manifested in the very small gift of the widow. This example, with the great, generous, unbounded commendation, should be enough, in and of itself, to move to action every one who has found the Christ.

But those who have plenty and to spare should perform their work with like loving and devoted impulses and energy of soul. Great will be the movement forward of the Lord's work, when we shall have clearly manifested on the part of every member of the body, their supreme love of Christ and their supreme interests in him, by the sacrifice they make of personal interests here, to the help of his unselfish, uplifting work. We speak for the advance movement of to-day, by asking such a universal effort on the part of every member of the body.

What will be the reply, will be of the greatest concern to every member of the body!

The members everywhere should seek out the bishop, or the bishop's agent, of their respective stakes, or districts, and help what they can at once, all making a diligent effort, and success will be assured. Can we not have a record of twenty-five thousand names the present year of those who are "faithful in that which is least," and "those who are faithful in much"? Remember that those who are within any stake, or district, who can not get in communication with the bishop or agent of such, may send directly to the Presiding Bishop, the undersigned, and at the address set out, at any time.

Brothers and sisters of the household of God, let us have no idler, or laggard, among us the present year; but come up as one to the help of the Lord and his work, and then we shall universally receive of his commendation and blessing, to the great good of each and the glory and triumph of Christ and his great work.

For the truth and its triumph,

E. L. KELLEY.

THOSE NEPHITE APOSTLES ONCE MORE.

After a thorough and critical examination of this subject from every standpoint that the writer's limited abilities would permit, he has reached the conclusion that those Nephite disciples, or ministers, did not hold the apostolic office; and he wishes to give the HERALD readers his reason for so concluding; and, in doing this, he believes he can throw quite a glimmer of light upon this much discussed subject.

1. We can consistently divide the officers in Christ's church into two distinct classes, which, for the sake of being plain, we will term the limited and the unlimited offices. By a limited office we mean one whose occupants are confined to a certain, specified number; the unlimited one whose members are not thus confined.

The office of the first presidency, the apostolic office, that of the seventy, and presiding bishop belong to the first class; while that of the high priest, the elder, priest, teacher, and deacon, belong to the latter class.

The first presidency's office is limited to three members—the prophet, seer, and revelator, with two high priests as his counselors; the apostolic office to twelve members, with one of their number as president; that of the seventy to seven quorums, or four hundred and ninety members in all; that of the leading bishopric to three, himself and two counselors.

In the other division there can be just as many high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, as necessity or the magnitude of the work demands; or, in other words, just as many as the number of stakes, districts, and branches call for. And this fact abundantly refutes the assertion that if the apostolic office could not be duplicated, that of the high priest and elder could not; for there is provision made for an extension of the latter, but none for the former.

In all the many revelations given to the church, either in ancient or modern times, there is not one word, hint, or intimation that there could or would be a duplication of these four limited offices. Of course we do not mean this assertion to apply to a restoration of the church after an apostasy, or a falling away. It only applies when these offices are already occupied.

Now, strange, but nevertheless true, and damaging to the opposition, these are the very offices that are so conspicuous by their absence in the organization of the church here in America. We do not read of any first presidency, any apostles, any quorum of seventy, and any presiding bishop. The objector may claim that these officers might all have been in the church here and not mentioned; but "any proposition that has assumption as its foundation and main support is certainly illogical."

2. That the apostolic office could not be duplicated is evident from the fact that the quorums of seventy were placed in the church as assistants or substitutes for the twelve apostles. If the twelve apostles could have been increased in number, it would have been done, and there would have been no need for the seventy.

3. The twelve apostles are to labor under the direction and supervision of the first presidency. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104:12; 105:12.) There was no such office in the church here as a first presidency, and consequently if these disciples were apostles they were out of harmony with the church organization; and would have no check or restraining power upon them in their work.

4. These Nephite disciples were inferior or subordinate to the twelve apostles at Jerusalem, and were to be judged by them. (See 1 Nephi 3:26; Mormon 1:9.) Query: Can a man or a party of men sit in judgment upon others without the party judging having superior power or authority over the ones judged? We think not.

5. In the Book of Mormon there are at least a dozen references to the twelve at Jerusalem, and almost invariably they are called apostles. Christ when he chose them called them apostles. The writers of the New Testament called them apostles. The apostles themselves often called themselves by that name. The twelve chosen in 1835 in the latter-day church are called apostles. And the twelve chosen in the Reorganization are called apostles. Now the Nephite disciples are mentioned scores of times in the Book of Mormon, but never called apostles. When the original twelve (disciples) passed away, successors for four hundred years were chosen to them, and they were never called apostles.

Now why were the twelve at Jerusalem almost invariably called apostles, and these Nephites never? Can there be a good, sound, sensible, consistent answer to the question, only on the ground that they did not hold the apostolic office? We will now place side by side short sentences found in 1 Nephi 3:26, which were spoken by an angel to Nephi. One sentence comes immediately after the other, and we might say both spoken in the same breath. "Behold the twelve disciples of the Lamb." "Thou remembereth the twelve apostles of the Lamb."

Why, now, should an angel call the one disciples and the other apostles, if they both were apostles alike? Who can answer?

The apostles referred to in Mormon 4:7 were undoubtedly those at Jerusalem. This will be seen by the third and fourth paragraphs of the same chapter. Mormon was writing to the Gentiles who would be living at the time the Book of Mormon was to come forth, on the subject of the continuation of miracles. It is not reasonable that he would refer to the apostles here working miracles as proof of their continuation, when those to whom he was writing knew nothing about there being apostles here, and would not believe in them if they had heard of them. We will notice Moroni 2:1 further along.

6. The Apostle Paul compares the different offices in the church to the different members of the human body. The higher offices in the church being represented by the more important members of the body, while the lower offices were represented by the less important ones. To carry this comparison out and make the application of it, we will say the first presidency would represent the head, the apostles the mouth, the prophets the eyes, the seventy the ears, the bishopric the arms, the high priests, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons being represented by the trunk and lower limbs of the body. As we have before shown, provision having been made in the church organization for an unlimited number to occupy in these lower offices, there would be no necessity for their duplication, as they are a part of the original body. If we duplicate the head, the mouth, the eyes, the ears, and the arms, and graft them on the original body, what have we but a monstrosity? If we duplicate the whole body, then we have two separate and distinct bodies, or in other words, two separate and distinct churches. As the church is to be the Lamb's bride, he (the Lamb) may have trouble in selecting her when he comes. He will either have to take the monstrosity, one of the waiting damsels, to the rejection of the other, or take both of them. If he takes both, then the charge that it would make him a polygamist would have a tinge of truth in it, and those of our elders who have been so ready to charge other denominations with making him a polygamist in accepting all their churches, would have the tables turned on them, and they would be compelled to swallow a good-sized dose of their own medicine.

7. There is no necessity for a duplication of these limited offices, as there is, in the organization of the church, ample provision made for any emergency that might arise. That provision consists in the right or power of any officer in the church to act in any other office, either above or below the one he himself holds, in case of emergency. This fact is plainly seen in a branch organization, or rather the workings of a branch organization. If the presiding elder is absent, the priest acts in his stead. Should both these be away, the teacher acts. If all above the deacon are absent, he presides. Here we find the priest, teacher, and deacon doing the work of an elder, but it must be remembered that, although they do the work of an elder, they do not hold the office of an elder. This same method of meeting emergencies applies to all other offices in the church. (See Doctrine and Covenants 104: 6, 7.)

The reader by this time no doubt, is ready to ask, "If these Nephite disciples were not apostles, who and what were they?" The Book of Mormon says they were elders. (See Moroni 3: 1; 4: 1.)

"But," says the objector, "an apostle is an elder." This is true only in his holding the Melchisedec priesthood; but as to his office in that priesthood, he is not an elder, he is an apostle, and speaking of him in his official capacity as an elder is not true and is very misleading.

Let us now look the situation full in the face. Here was an emergency, and a big one at that. It was just as necessary that the work of an apostle be done over here in America as it was in Jerusalem, or anywhere else for that matter. But as the apostolic office was nearly full, and as we have already shown, no provision in the law for a duplication, the only remedy was to apply the emergency rule, and select from a lower office substitutes for the apostolic. This was done by selecting twelve elders and setting them apart to do the work of apostles by giving them an apostolic commission.

We want to take notice, however, that, while they did the work of apostles, they did not hold the apostolic office. We can now see why Christ used the language he did in Moroni 20: 1. He had chosen them to do the work of apostles by empowering them to confer the Holy Ghost, and ended by saying, "for thus do mine apostles."

As to there being a stake organization over here in America, we do not know; there is nothing written as to the matter. But we believe it is more likely that there was, than that there was a full church organization here; for the authority for stake organization was here, while it was not for the other. If we repudiate stake organization here, because there is no history to that effect, must we not on the same grounds repudiate all the upper organization of the church? Sure.

PLAGIARISM OR INSPIRATION—WHICH?

Recently there came into my house a paper entitled The Household of God. It is published at Dayton, Ohio; editor, William F. Manley; office editor, John J. Scruby. The copy I have bears date of August, 1908. It purports to be number 8 of volume 4. The paper represents a class of independent religionists, perhaps a company of so-called "come-outers." There is not enough in the issue in question to clearly indicate what particular people the paper represents. They, whoever they are, evidently believe in the spiritual gifts. On page four the following article occurs:

A Very Important Message. Dear Brother: You will be glad to hear that the work is growing here. We now have seven baptized with the Holy Ghost and others seeking. One of the baptized brothers had a wonderful message in tongues, with the interpretation. I send you a copy of it. The brother who wrote this has very little education, reads with great difficulty and spells badly, but the Lord gave him the message and told him how to spell the words. I know he could not have done it himself.

Yours sincerely,

BARBARA JOHNSTON.

SARNIA, Ontario, Canada, July 14, 1908.

We give below the message referred to:

Thus saith the Spirit unto my people now assembled. There are many, many things done by you that are pleasing in my sight; many, many things done by you are not pleasing in my sight and against which my people need to be warned.

Become more humble. Yes, verily I say unto you, that inasmuch as my people will put away pride of heart and pride of life, turn from the vanities of the world, cease from the vanities incident to outward adornment, and become more humble and faithful, I will pour out my Spirit upon you, giving you wisdom and knowledge, enabling you to walk in humility and in faith. Yes, be warned, for the time has come that calamities shall come upon the earth, yea, the voice of the earthquake, of famine, of pestilence, of thunder and lightning, with calamities stalk abroad, and the time is near at hand when you must needs stand in holy places, and standing so my Spirit will keep you from harm and danger. Yea, my people need to take warning and become more humble; and inasmuch as they will do so, I will pour out my Spirit upon you. The time is not far distant, when from various parts of the earth I will call my people together and the Gentile nations need to be warned, for soon will I turn from them, lo, unto my people, that have been my people in time past. From the Gentiles will I turn, and then my people, sanctified unto me through the father Abraham, will come from the four parts of the earth, gather together and be prepared to meet my Son when he shall come to the earth. Yea, thus saith the Spirit, unto you in warning voice this day.

Amen.

IRVE FREELAND.

SARNIA, Ontario.

I look upon the above message as one of the most important and significant utterances we have received from the Holy Spirit since the commencement of the present outpouring of the Spirit, and it is one that agrees exactly with the word of God, by which we are to be guided in all things.

Truly we are living in wonderful days. And as the Jewish church knew not the time of her visitation, so the present Gentile churches, as dead branches cut off, and blinded by the gods of this world, know not the time of their visitation, nor the voice of the Spirit among them. God pity the Gentile churches.—EDITOR.

In reproducing the foregoing I have copied verbatim Barbara Johnston's letter, Irve Freeland's revelation, and the editor's comments. I now request the reader to compare the whole with the following:

Thus saith the Spirit unto you, my people now assembled: There are many, many things done by you pleasing in my sight; many, many things done that are not pleasing in my sight, and for which my people need to be warned. Yea, verily, I say unto you, that inasmuch as my people will put away the pride of heart and pride of life, turn from the vanities of the world, cease from the vanities incident to outward adornment; and become more humble and faithful, I will pour out my Spirit upon you, giving unto you wisdom and knowledge, enabling you to walk in humility and in faith. Yea, be warned; for the time has come that calamities shall come upon the earth; yea, in the voice of earthquake, of famine, of pestilence, of thunder, and of lightning, will calamities stalk abroad, and the time is near at hand when you must needs stand in holy places; and standing so, my Spirit will keep you from harm and danger.

Yea, my people need to take warning and become more humble; and inasmuch as they will so do I will pour out of my Spirit upon them. The time is not far distant when from the various parts of the earth will I call my people together; and the Gentile nations need to be warned. For soon will I turn from them, lo, unto my people that have been my people in times past. From the Gentiles will I turn, and then my people, sanctified unto me through their father Abraham, will come from the four parts of the earth, center together, and be prepared to meet my Son when he shall come upon the earth. Yea, thus saith the Spirit in warning voice to you this morning. Amen.—The interpretation of a tongue given through Apostle J. W. Wight, at the General Conference of 1908; copied from Autumn Leaves of June, 1908.

It will be noticed that this message was received before that of Irve Freeland. Further; it was published to the world before Mr. F.'s purports to have been received. Question: Was Mr. F.'s revelation given by divine or Satanic agency? If the former, this question naturally arises: Does God recognize some other society of worshipers as "my people" as well as us? If given by the latter, then I must say to the Saints and all others who read this: "Beware, take care." The similarity is too marked to be accounted for by coincidence. But let us take the following view of it, which I believe is the most reasonable one: Was not Mr. F. shining in "borrowed plumes"? In other words, was not his miraculous (?) orthography that of one of our church papers?

Will some of the brethren who are near enough to Sarnia please investigate the matter and see how the case stands? The nearest I can come to the name of this sect is that of "the Apostolic Faith people." The Saints of Australia as well as the writer await developments with much interest. In the meantime let the church in general comfort itself with the reflection that this world "do move" and, in many respects, is coming nearer to this latter-day work. We may also solace ourselves with the editor's remarks: "I look upon the above message as one of the most important and significant utterances we have received;—it is one that agrees exactly with the word of God."

HEALTH AND WEALTH IN THE WORD OF WISDOM —PART I.

We present a few practical hints, that as the warm weather is upon us, we may be better prepared to observe the counsel the Lord has given us, that we may enjoy health and comfort of body by a careful and economical selection of our foods. We hope this article may lighten the burden of many a latter-day "Martha" by showing that the housewife's devotion to the kitchen cook-stove may be modified and a more simple but equally nourishing fare be provided without so great a call upon her time and temperament.

Cook-books abound in meat dishes, but when it comes to omitting this costly food element from the daily cuisine we find them as a rule lacking instruction as to those articles which easily displace them; the reason, we suppose, is that cook-books generally are written to appeal to the palate instead of to reason.

It is estimated that the American housewife can select her bill of fare from a thousand different articles of food. Wisdom should suggest that many supposedly indispensable dishes may well be avoided because of the "fixing" usually required with them, adding to the cost, the labor involved and their after-effects on the system. Condiments, such as mustard, vinegar, and piquant sauces are liable to cause fermentation of foods and irritation of the linings of the stomach, often creating a desire for a counter-irritant such as tobacco, liquor, coffee, etc.

An excellent point to carry in mind by those who lack faith to carry into effect the Word of Wisdom but who otherwise "accept" it is this: that meat belongs to the "goading" or stimulative order of foods is evidenced by the "faintness" one feels in missing it from a meal when used to having it always, whereas those who have so diminished its use that it seldom comes upon the table can miss several meals and still feel "fit," owing to the "enduring" element of their fare. We recognize this factor in nature: the flesheating animal's strength is spasmodic; the horse, ox, elephant, camel, reindeer, etc., are most enduring in strength and fortitude. Thus the Lord has said to man in this respect: "You shall run and not be weary."

The main reason for the popularity of meat aside from its seductive savor, is that it furnishes an abundance of the proteids. But the point is overlooked that its use often introduces a surplus of uric acid into the system, because we have our own and that of the animal both to combat with, a task which the organs of elimination are not equal to and the poison accumulates in the system; hence the reason doctors forbid rheumatics the pleasure of meat when they dare. Of vegetable proteids dried peas and beans contain about twenty-five per cent, which explains their importance in the army and navy ration. Oatmeal contains more proteid than the other flours and meals, a fact long known to the "braw" and thrifty Scot.

Of the nuts, almonds, peanuts, and pecans furnish a large percentage of porteids. It is a mistake to regard all nuts as an equivalent for meat. They have a better food ratio, because many of them are rich in fat, rather than in porteid; for example, English walnuts, butternuts, and Brazil nuts. Peanuts are not nuts at all, but are true legumes or beans.

Proteid is said to constitute about one fifth of the weight of the human body. It furnishes a little fuel and some energy, but it is chiefly valuable as a tissue builder or muscle maker; seek the fuel energy in fats and sugars.

Every human body must be supplied with proteid daily. It has been estimated that the average man at work requires about three and a half ounces of proteids each day to keep in normal condition. This amount may or may not be apportioned to different meals, but an excess should not be indulged in by people not called upon for physical labor.

Among animal foods lean meat, fish, eggs, milk, and the casein of cheese supply proteids, while peas, beans, lentils, the leguminous vegetables, oatmeal, and the gluten of wheat and graham flour furnish an equivalent in vegetables. Lentils, which are more easily digested than any other vegetable of this class, are an excellent substitute for meat, and as such are used in many countries. It is strange they are not better known and appreciated by the thrifty American housewife. A soup of them takes the place of meat soup for flavor, strength, and in appeal to the appetite. Rice and lentils, or dried peas and rice make good substitutes for baked pork and beans.

Here are some rules for cooking vegetables containing proteids:

All dried beans and peas must be soaked over night in cold water. Hard water retards the cooking of beans, so it is well to add a bit of soda when it is used.

Beans must be cooked in unsalted water for about two hours. Hard boiling breaks the skins, but does not shorten the cooking process.

Though beans have many names their nutritive value is much the same. Black beans are used for soup, limas and red kidneys for stewing, and common or army beans for baking. The French use flageolets for salads, and the Chinese make a kind of cheese from the soy bean, the richest bean known.

Use chopped nuts instead of pork with baked beans, and serve with tomato sauce.

THE BUSYBODY.

I want to point out faintly, a fault not very saintly,
Most prolific of disturbance and regret;
'Tis that some are prone to chatter about each trifling matter
With those who are ever eager news to get.

They are sure to come together, however bad the weather,
And talk about the absent in an uncharitable way;
This precious pair of blabbits will follow out their habits,
And swap the latest gossip of the day.

You can guess that Mrs. Meddle, who loves the news to peddle,
Will tell some tale of you soon as you turn your back;
Her feet will seldom tarry, she will both fetch and carry,
Scatter moral blight and mildew in her track.

Shakespeare has wisely stated, in the story he related,
That the one who took his money stole but trash;
But in stealing a good name, there's a thousand times more blame,
They bring down a reputation with a crash.

Let me give you some advice that will always work quite nice,
When a busybody brings a tale to you;
Tell her, write it out, quite plain, and be sure to sign her name,
And you'll read it when you've nothing else to do.

The tongue is most unruly, it is full of poison, truly,
The whole body it defileth, and is set on fire of hell;
So let us never tattle, but against this evil battle,
And use the little member wise and well.

MUSINGS OF A MISSIONARY.

The foxes have their holes,
And the birds have their nests,
But the poor missionary,
Has little time for rest.

He travels to and fro,
The gospel to declare;
He leaves wife and home
To the Father's watchful care.

But the race is quickly run,
And his labors soon are o'er;
And then the summons home,
To the bright and better shore.

Oh, may we faithful be,
Each labor to perform;
That when we reach the crystal sea,
We leave behind the storm.

PLANO, Illinois.

A FEW THOUGHTS FOR THE COMING CONFERENCE YEAR.

In our zeal to promote the interests of the work, we spend good precious time developing our imaginary qualities into plans after our own ideas of what should be done, severely criticising those who have the work in charge and repeatedly charging a neglect of duty, bad management, incapability, and many other things equally bad, if not worse, and go on in this spell of worry and fret because things do not go just as we think they should, until we become a grouch. Yes, a grouch in the fullest sense.

What is a grouch? A grouch is a peculiar variety of individual who hates himself, toils not for his master, and spins but tales of woe. He works himself with a frenzy over nothing and wastes his talents on the sea of prejudice. He froths, fumes, barks, growls, and bites himself. He has everything condemned and the universe on the toboggan. He puts the "kobosh" on the good intentions of others and lets his own present slip into a very slimy past. His disease is contagious and those who catch it find the only antidote is in knocking somebody's head off. Supreme conceit lies within the grouch, and his principal effort in life is to make himself unnecessary to others. He rates cheerfulness as nonsense and a smile as insincerity. In fact he is all out of focus, short-circuited, punctured, and his fan strap is slipped. If I could think of other things I would write them, but I can't.

Now, who wants to become a grouch? If things do not come your way, do not start to growl and bark, but work on. It may just be possible that you will be able to see that you did not have the only and best solution of the problem.

One of the most susceptible persons to grouchology is he or she who is given to worry and fret. Don't worry. Worry is an imaginary devil who afflicts the lives of too many hard-working, conscientious men and women. It does no good and never has. It eats the very heart out of a fellow when it gets hold of him, and yet we go on worrying and fretting day in and day out, until there's little good productive stuff left in us.

I don't mean to imply there are not plenty of things to worry about. What I do claim, however, is that it doesn't pay to worry. More than half the things we worry about never happen, and those that do happen aren't as serious as we thought they were going to be. Get this thought well fixed in your mind. There is no better stimulant under the face of God's sun. The belief once annexed will carry you easily over obstacles which otherwise would seem to you insurmountable. To have the electrical effect of hope is only a question of getting a connection with this belief. Don't worry. There's nothing in it,—now, or ever.

Don't say, "I will turn over a new leaf." The trouble with most people who turn over a new leaf is that they use the loose leaf system. Just stop.

This sprig of thought I tender all of you, confident that if transplanted in your minds it will thrive and bring you bounteous returns in spiritual happiness and earthly possessions. Remember those at the head of this work have been chosen by the "Master Builder" and it is just as easy for him to remove them as it was for him to place them in the position they now occupy. It therefore is very unbecoming for us to assume to urge our policies in preference to the policies of those who are in charge, becoming frightfully worried and vexed if our counsel is not heeded.

These remarks are general and will apply in district and branch work as well as our attitude towards the general officers. Let us see if we have not "so soon forgotten something." Take down your books from the shelf and read the whole law, and for the coming year do not worry, for fear you may become a grouch, and do not become a grouch, for fear you make a failure of the entire work. A failurist is a man who bursts his supporters pulling on a door which bears a sign of saying "push."

"Angel Message."

Oh! this precious "Angel Message,"
How it fills our souls with peace!
How it cheers our onward progress,
Tells us of our soul's release:
Let us then, my comrades loyal,
Battle valiantly for truth,
'Gainst the hidden powers of darkness,
'Gainst the errors of our youth.

'Gainst the sin that doth so easy,
Oft our cherished hopes o'erthrow
'Gainst the onward march of evil,
And the power of the foe.
Let us never cease the conflict
Till the victory we gain;
And the Lord of heaven, our Captain,
O'er the earth in peace shall reign.

Then upon God's holy mountain,
Naught shall come to make afraid,
And our hearts be filled with music,
Glad we have his truth obeyed.
Worthy is the prize we strive for,
And the victory sure at last,
And we'll dwell with Christ, our Master,
In that grand, eternal rest.

The Service of Grief.

Christ's heart was wrung for me, if mine is sore;
 And if my feet are weary, his have bled;
 He had no place wherein to lay his head;
 If I am burdened, he was burdened more;
 The cup I drink, he drank of long before;
 He felt the unuttered anguish which I dread;
 He hungered, who the hungry thousands fed,
 And thirsted, who the world's refreshment bore.
 If grief be such a looking-glass as shows
 Christ's face and man's in some sort made alike,
 Then grief is pleasure with a subtle taste;
 Wherefore should any fret, or faint, or haste?
 Grief is not grievous to a soul that knows
 Christ comes—and listens for that hour to strike.
 —Christina G. Rossetti.

CHICAGO, Illinois, May 1, 1909.

Dear Daughters of Zion: It has been a long time since I have added my mite to your columns, but my silence has not been because I have not derived much help from the readings contained therein; on the contrary, after a perusal of such grand reading I feel my weakness, and how I long and desire to be able to write something that will help others. I dare say we shall never know to what great extent the reading matter of our Daughters of Zion department reaches both in the fold and out. I know from my own experience that our reading-matter is not surpassed by any in the land, and whenever read by those out of our own church they say, Well, that is grand reading, whatever the source. I, with many another mother, have my source of patience tested to the end, and the helpful thoughts and suggestions in our books have been a source of great comfort to me.

I could not keep back the tears as I read the last Ensign about the birthday anniversary of dear Sr. Walker, better known to us all as Frances. Surely hers has been a life of service to her Master, and we who have been born and brought up in the church can look back ever so far and remember her work. May God bless her and still prolong her life that her work may bless others, as surely it does.

I recently had the pleasure of attending an afternoon meeting of the W. C. T. U., topic, White Slave Traffic. How I wished for more of our daughters to be present. To have been there would have impressed some things on our minds that we would never forget and have spurred us on in the work which we have taken up, that of purity. Prosecuting Attorney Mullvihill of the Law and Order League was the speaker, and he gave some statistics that were appalling to mothers of girls as well as boys, and during his talk he made the statement that he believed the only way to battle this evil would be to begin in the homes and teach our boys and girls the simple fact of life, of its origin, of the great responsibility that rests on the young men and young women of the coming generation. Liquor figures strongly in the destruction of our girls, as well as our boys, so that problem should be dealt with. In talking to the lady with whom I went, she said she was glad that our church had a society which aims for the betterment of homes and social purity, and said she would be pleased to read some of our reading-matter, and by the way, she has an uncle who is an elder in our church. When she invited me to attend the talk she did not know to what church I belonged as I had met her at a Bible study being held at the Christian church on Wednesday evening. She promised to give a talk on temperance before our young people on Tuesday evening at Religio.

I hope my letter has not been made too long and I hope God will bless every effort put forth by his children to this end.

Dear Herald: My heart has been made to rejoice this evening that I am a Latter Day Saint, and to know that God has accepted me as one of his dear children. Without this comfort and consolation my soul would not be at rest. Christ says, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrines, whether it be of God or whether I speak of myself." This have I proved to my satisfaction. God's promises are binding; if we only will do our part, live humble, meek, and lowly, ever keeping the commandments of God, then we are entitled to the great blessings which God has in store for the true and the faithful. How necessary then that we should obey the gospel of Christ, and become new creatures, that we shall be like him, when he appears, and reign with him; where there will be no more death, pain, or sorrow; nothing to harm or molest in all that holy city.

What struggles we have, what opposition we meet. But in the midst of all we feel a dear hand supporting us, and how comforting it is to know that that divine arm is a shelter in every storm! Could we more fully realize this, how much greater trials would we willingly face to do good. But alas, human nature, how weak and prone to fall from a high situation! The world is cruel; therefore we need to be sympathetic and kind to one another; ever remembering that one hand rules us all, whose eyes see all we do, and who has so fatherly said, "I will be their God and they shall be my people."

I ask the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my husband who does not belong to the church, but is a believer, that he may see the true way and enter therein.

"We thank thee for thy blessings,
 These tokens of thy love,
 These words of peace and comfort;
 Sent from thy throne above."

Your sister in the one faith,

MRS. SARAH GREISS.

LLANSAMLET, South Wales, May 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: Under heading of an article (undated), "A word from Wales," in your issue of April 28, I note Bro. William Lewis writes from Llanelly where he states he intends to remain for some time to get the work on its feet. He refers in this article to the demise of Sr. Treharne and as this occurred on March 7, it is clear Bro. Lewis wrote after that date; and I also note in minutes of General Conference of April 17 that Bro. Lewis was in charge of the morning prayer-meeting.

The article is most inconsistent, as your many readers can judge from the fact already referred to and also from the statements in regard to forming North and South Wales into a mission and having a president conversant with Welsh and English languages. If it is at all necessary to have such a president, and Welsh language is essential, I am interested to know whether such a person would be required to speak North or South Wales language; or if conversant with the latter only, the former would not understand, and vice versa, as there is nearly as much variation between the two as between Scotch and Dutch. Bro. Lewis adduces argument from events of upwards of fifty years ago in support of his suggestion and makes reference to Captain Dan Jones (a Welshman) in his article; as if that had any bearing on present conditions.

He also states a motion prevailed at a conference held at Porth on October 10, that if Wales should be appointed as a mission a president be put in charge who was conversant with both languages; (but I have already shown he would have to know both North and South Wales languages besides English, and scores of dialects which prevail in every separate county in Wales) and I most emphatically state the motion was out of order and also that it was not the vote or voice of the district as the subject was not mentioned to the missionary in charge for his consideration and approval. It was brought up by Bro. Lewis himself and was contrary to district by-laws and only two out of five branches were represented at the said conference; or, out of a total of nearly one hundred members, only fourteen were present when the subject was discussed. And further, the matter of business referring to the Bishop's agents for Wales, done at said conference, has since been annulled, which shows clearly that whatever business was done there at Porth was not in order.

In regard to Bro. Lewis' remarks that seventy-five per cent in and out of the church are Welsh, I have no hesitation in saying this is an exaggeration, and also that it would be nearer the truth if five per cent had been named. I am safe in saying as far as Eastern Wales District is concerned, we do not have three per cent of Welsh speaking people in the church. Coming to Western Wales, we do not have more than twenty-five per cent who can speak the South Wales language, and of these not five per cent can write Welsh. Further, I would refer Bro. Lewis to Welsh service held at the recent Aberdare conference, to which he refers, and says unity and peace prevailed. We are all agreed, Bro. Lewis, so far as the Welsh service referred to is concerned, peace did prevail, as not more than three could sing Welsh (or did not try to) and I do not believe one third understood or had any interest in that service, which was very far from being a success, although the speaker made a fair effort.

I can assure you the contention and friction referred to are the outcome only of men's mistakes and I am interested to know what right has a representative of the general church to come here and spend so little time with us, returning without bidding us even a good-bye, and then publicly proclaim contention and friction had existed.

Before closing my letter I should like to inform your readers that there would be no use for a Welsh-speaking preacher in Cardiff, Swansea, Aberdare, or any other of our large Welsh towns, as in these are to be found thousands from every country under the blue canopy of heaven, many of them neither understand Welsh nor English. I might also say no business transactions of any kind are done in Welsh, neither is any trial conducted in Welsh. English is taught in all our schools in Wales, and no business or professional man would be of any use in Wales to-day if unable to speak or write the English language. In my own experience and observations for past eight years I can truthfully state I have not come in contact with more than an average of one per cent who could not speak good English and even when giving out Bro. Lewis' own tracts in our out-door preaching work last summer, it was clearly to be seen that even in Llansamlet, which is considered one of the most Welshy villages there is now existing, seventy-five per cent of the people all wanted English tracts.

I have not written this letter in the spirit of animosity to any one, but for the interests of all the household of faith outside of nationality, as I believe all men are one in Christ Jesus. I have numbers of Welshmen here in Wales who can testify no one had done more than myself under adverse circumstances for the interests of church work in Wales for some years past and I mean to try to continue, by God's help. Three of our children are members of the church, but there is not much encouragement for young people in this country yet, as popular influence is against us.

I note Bro. Thomas Jones of Nantyglo has been blessed in his work and that he is to be ordained a high priest. This is a move ahead for Wales in the right direction, and while some of your readers may not agree with me, I must say the church would and could do better by appointing men we already have here than sending appointees from the United States. In the language of President Smith, throw them into the stream and try them,—give the men a chance. It has cost the church more for traveling expenses last year for missionaries than would keep a good man here and maintain his family for six months. The men here are familiar with the ways and customs of the people, whereas it takes an American appointee usually about two or three months to get over here after being appointed; then a few months to go over the field and make the acquaintance of the Saints, and something frequently happens which causes them to return again without having done more than made a few acquaintances.

I pray for the spread of truth everywhere and intend to labor in its advancement.

Your brother in hope,

HENRY ELLIS.

NEBRASKA CITY, Nebraska, May 17, 1909.

Dear Herald: My heart reëchoes the sentiment so often expressed by so many of your readers, your precious pages are indeed very dear to me. Each Thursday afternoon on return home from Daughters of Zion meeting, my first thought is to look in the mail box for the HERALD, and if it is not there, I am disappointed; then I watch each time the mail carrier passes my home. If I have to wait until Saturday it seems a long time to me. I know there are a number of Saints who think they are unable to take the church papers, but I am sure if they could be made to realize what a comfort and help, what strength and encouragement they could derive from the precious columns of the church papers, they would find that they were able to take them and would wonder how they had ever been able to get along without them. My heart is filled with gratitude, and tears of joy spring to my eyes, many times while reading, as I seemingly do, in the same spirit of the writer, some of the soul-cheering and uplifting letters contributed to the HERALD.

A few words in regard to tithing. I noted a letter in the HERALD a short time ago from a sister in Maryland, who states that her father was an elder in the Martyr's time and that he taught her that it was right to pay tithing. While my dear parents were Christians, they were members of the Baptist Church, and were opposed to the latter-day gospel, and so I received no instruction from them along these lines; but my heavenly Father has ever been mindful of me, and he has given me to know through the operation of his Holy Spirit that it is right to pay tithing and I do not think there could be anything written on the subject that would change my mind. O Saints, I truly believe that if we would all strictly obey the law of tithing, that God would pour out his blessings upon us in a way that he has never done before. I can truly say that there is no duty I render to the church which affords me so much pleasure as to pay tithing. I am sure that God will bless us for giving freely to the support of his cause, and that we will never need nor never miss what we have given. I feel that time and opportunities are rapidly passing, and that all who can render assistance in any way in the Master's work, are called upon to do so.

The gospel is a source of great joy and satisfaction to me. Of course we all meet trials in our pathway, but these are blessings in disguise; for if we did not meet trials we would forget our dependence upon our heavenly Father, and so our trials keep us in closer communion with God. I trust we may all be enabled to put aside everything that is displeasing to him, and strive to do the duties required of us, in order that we may receive the blessings promised through obedience. The Lord has blessed me many times and in many ways, for which I am truly thankful.

In Nebraska City we have a good little branch presided over by Bro. H. A. Higgins. We have a good Sunday-school and Religio. We expect to hold a reunion here sometime during the summer. The work in this part of the Lord's vineyard is moving along. We have not had a visit from our missionaries for some time, and would be pleased to see them any time. Trust they are well and are kept busy working for the Master and that his Holy Spirit will direct them to the honest in heart, who are seeking the truth. Dear Saints, let us do our part toward helping the missionaries gather in the sheaves. Selfishness often destroys our noblest impulse. Let us try to overcome and receive the blessings promised the faithful.

In gospel bonds,
MRS. C. S. DUNDAY.

COLTON, California, May 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: From letters received from the island mission of Tahiti I received the sorrowful news of the death of Metuaore, the bishop of that mission.

From letters from Bro. Lake, Varoa a Moo, and others I learn that Metuaore died on April 18, Sunday. He was taken with the grip, which was the cause of his death, on April 8 and was later taken to Tiona where he died peacefully. "I had been out the day before he died, and we were on our way again when we were met by a messenger who told us he was dead. We thought he was not so very sick, but he just simply passed away. The whole mission is in mourning for him.—C. H. Lake."

They say Metuaore was a strong pillar to all the church in this mission. He died at seven in the morning of the 18th of April and was buried at four o'clock on the evening of the 19th. On the 6th of April he was chosen as the assistant president of the conference, and on the 14th, after conference, he went to Tiona where his household were. The elders often visited him and administered to him and comforted him. And he spoke of a revelation through the mouth of the Apostle T. W. Smith and of others, and he often said that his work on earth was ended. He was very weak in body at the last. And then he received a vision in which he saw the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost who said to him, "Come here, my servant of the Father, come into Paradise, and do the work of that place"; therefore he said often, "I have finished my work on earth, I will go to Paradise and do the work there."

He also said he had often told the branches of Tiona, Tarona and Makatea about Zion as the place that God had set apart as the gathering place of the bodies of the Saints, and "if the true Zion is like the Zion in America we had better all try to gather there. I am going there."

And Varoa says, "I can not finish writing all that he said, but he spoke nicely until the end."

Otare and his wife are also dead, he was formerly of Kaukura, and his house was always a home for the missionaries. They died in Rairoa.

Rere and his wife, Tapea, were both baptized by Bro. Lake the day Metuaore was buried; they were among the people who were cut off in the conference of April, 1907, and I do most sincerely hope that they are but a beginning of the return of those people.

Your brother in Christ,
JOSEPH F. BURTON.

NOTE.—Bro. Burton's permanent address is as given above, Colton, California. His correspondents will please take note.—EDITORS.

ALVA, Oklahoma, May 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: We are (though like the prodigal, a long time absent) coming to your columns once more. Since our last letter, we are not able to say how long that since is, we have been neither dead nor sleeping, but busy in the work.

Last March we moved from our farm to this city and are opening up a ten-acre farm here about a half mile west of the city limits. This gives us better facilities for both school and church work, both of which we are trying to improve upon. The children in the school and the whole family in the church work.

There is opportunity for us to put in all our time in this city in the church work, but can not altogether ignore the calls from the country, so we preach here two Sundays of each month and the other Sundays we take "pleasure excursions," wife and I, of from thirteen to forty miles in the country and back again, (of course this takes Saturday, Sunday, and Monday,) preaching, teaching in Sunday-schools and holding social- and sacrament-services with the Saints. And while we are away on these trips our young people are busy here with the Sunday-school that meets each Sunday in the hall we have hired.

Our attendance at the late General Conference was thoroughly enjoyed by us, and especially as the privilege came as a surprise, and through the generosity of our wife's brother, Charles. We had given up the idea of attending this spring, but a letter and check from him made a change in those ideas and we certainly enjoyed meeting our quorum once more, as well as the rest of the Saints. However, our stay there was shortened by a promise previously given, and so we left Lamoni on the 15th, arriving home the next day. On the 17th wife and I took our bronchos and hied us away to the vicinity of Freedom and Lookout, where we were billed for two sermons, one social- and sacrament-service, two Sunday-schools, and one wedding ceremony.

The last was performed at the close of the evening sermon and by it Sr. Edna Oglevie became Sr. Edna Moody. Mr. Vernon Moody, though not a Latter Day Saint, is an excellent young man and one of our Sunday-school workers in the neighborhood where we spent the last two years. We hope and trust that he will soon see and walk in the light.

The 13th of this month we were called to preach the funeral-sermon of a grandchild of Bro. and Sr. J. B. Ross, the first child of their oldest son, Guy. It was only permitted to live about eleven hours after birth and the young parents mourn keenly, yet we are glad we could say to them that "for such Christ died."

This call, with our other appointments, gave us a drive of about one hundred miles for that week, in all of which our wife accompanied us. It is a way she has of doing and we are thankful she is so willed and that God gives her the strength to go with and assist us.

Well, we have lately been notified that the "powers that be" have appointed us district president of Western Oklahoma. As we are laboring self-supporting this year, we fear that we shall not be able to put in as much time as should be given to that work, our other church work taking all the time we can possibly spare from our business; however, we would be glad to hear from our local brethren of their work and its needs and will render such help as we may be able.

Our address is Box 411, Alva, Oklahoma. Our home is one and one fourth miles west of the Alva post-office. "While on others thou art calling, do not pass us by."

Your brother in Christ,
A. M. CHASE.

MYRTLE POINT, Oregon, May 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: In the HERALD for May 12 is a little obituary that has been changed so much from the way I wrote it that I hardly recognized it when I saw it; but I do not know but the changes were all for the best; so will only ask that one correction be made, that is in the name—it is Reim, instead of Kim.

All is going well out here. I am the principal grunter. The work on our new chapel is going forward. We are anxious to get it ready for use by the time of our reunion, July 23. I see that the old reaper death has already begun his work as was predicted by Bro. Joseph. Everybody is pleased with the work done and revelation given at the late conference. May the Lord bless our good, old, and true president.

J. C. CLAPP.

EUFAULA, Oklahoma, May 22, 1909.

Editor Herald: I have been a reader of the HERALD for the past twenty-five years, and nearly all my relatives belong to the Latter Day Saints Church, and I am a believer. I now have a question to ask: In last HERALD, No. 20, on page 469, sermon by F. A. Russell, all reads good to me until I come to these statements: "If I know I have done a thing that is wrong, I must suffer for that and no forgiveness, or in other words, no power on earth or in heaven can gain for me a remission of that evil-doing." Now is this correct? I am sure I have sinned and committed many a wrong knowingly; hence there is no forgiveness. I had thought though I committed all manner of sin there was yet forgiveness, except against light and knowledge. Why preach baptism for remission? This is my busy day, but I could not put this question off.

All Latter Day Saints welcome here.

Yours,
T. S. MARTIN.

CHEROKEE, Iowa, May 23, 1909.

Editors Herald: The sun's golden rays seemed clearer, richer, and more enjoyable to the Saints at Cherokee this morning than ever before. For years the faithful little band had worshiped in hired halls, etc.; but to-day, for the first time, they met for worship in their own church-building. The Sunday-school was superintended by Bro. W. W. Leonard at ten in the forenoon, and at eleven o'clock the faithful veteran Saint, Nathan Hayes, announced hymn No. 109, and the new sweet toned organ, played by Sr. Inez Crippen, led the singers as they feelingly and appreciatingly sang, "The morning light is breaking, the darkness disappears." In a happy mood, Elder A. R. Crippen, the pastor, prefaced a spiritual, instructive, doctrinal sermon with fitting words of appreciation for a church home. At seven o'clock the Religio was conducted by Sr. A. R. Crippen, superintendent of the district home class Religio work. The evening sermon was by the writer on fulfillment of prophecy.

The church-building is thirty-four by fifty-four, with vestibule, and was bought of the Christian Church at a great bargain, about three months ago. The Saints bought a vacant lot in the northeast part of town and appointed Brn. Nathan Hayes, Frank M. Sheldon, and William W. Reeder as building committee. The house has been moved onto the lot, newly painted, papered, furnished with linoleum, carpets, electric lights, and chairs at a total cost of about one thousand dollars. Bro. Hayes, a charter member of the branch, has been untiring in soliciting means for and helping to complete the work, and I hear words of praise and commendation from many for his faithful service.

Sunday, June 20, has been set for dedication day and there will be services in the forenoon, afternoon, and evening. The dedicatory sermon will be at half past two in the afternoon. Elders J. W. Wight, P. M. Hanson, C. E. Butterworth, and C. J. Hunt, of the missionaries, are expected to attend and take part in the exercises of the day.

Cherokee is a progressive town of about five thousand people and has thirteen church-buildings. The Catholic Church has the largest place of worship. If you have friends living here and would like to have them attend our meetings, just write Bro. A. R. Crippen and he will gladly make them a person call and invitation to worship with our people.

In my travels in this the Gallands Grove District, I am pleased to find general satisfaction expressed by the members with the work and results of the last General Conference, and I hope a deeper interest will be shown in the educational, spiritual, and financial part of the Lord's great work than ever before.

Listen ye missionaries: I just heard that a Presbyterian minister in a near-by town is about to lose his charge, not because he fails to please his congregation as a preacher, orator, or revivalist, but because he is setting a bad (?) example in table etiquette. He will persist in the practice of eating food from his knife and drinking tea from his saucer. Their Church Discipline will certainly need revising or a new chapter added on table etiquette, so the Presbyterians may all eat and drink alike.

Very truly yours,

C. J. HUNT.

VALLEY CENTER, Michigan, May 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: I quite frequently receive spiritual strength by reading the letters in the HERALD from the Saints, telling of the blessings they have received from God, and I know God is no respecter of persons.

We Saints have a Sunday-school here; same was organized May 10, 1908, by Elder G. M. Shippy, the writer of this letter being the superintendent. We have a very well attended school, all members are greatly interested. We also have a Religio organized which is fairly well attended. We Saints are all striving to live as will be pleasing to our heavenly Father, and can say he blesses us greatly for it.

We as Saints of God will have many disappointments to meet, tempting us to stray, but let us hold on to the rod of iron, let us bear with patience whatever the trials of the present may be. In our times of trials God may not remove them from us, but strength will be administered to us to bear them and to accomplish that which the Lord would work through us, if we are satisfied with that which the Father wills, as was Jesus when he drank of the cup that was so surpassingly bitter. "For it is better, if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than evil doing."—1 Peter 3: 17. Paul tells us in Romans 8: 28, "that all things work together for good to them that love God." When I think of the promise we Saints have, I feel very thankful to God through his son Jesus Christ that he ever influenced my mind toward obeying this true latter-day message. I realize we are watched from all sides by the sectarian churches, they know what our claims are, and are trying to find errors with our ways of living that they may accuse us.

Take notice to what we find recorded in James 1:22: "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Let us be up and doing, we may have many persecutions to withstand in this short journey of life. If we lift up our eyes to God and ask him for strength to withstand all such, we will find him always ready to answer our call. Notice the following passage: "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers."—1 Peter 3:12. I have proven this to be true. Many times have I called upon the Lord in my weak way and always found him ready to verify his promise. When reading of the various gifts and blessings bestowed upon the righteous people in Book of Mormon times, it makes me rejoice to know God is no respecter of persons and with him is no variable-ness, neither shadow of turning, and I truly know, if we live as becometh Saints, we shall surely procure the many rich blessings God has in store for all that love him and keep his commandments. Paul says, "Let us not be weary in well doing."—Galatians 6:9. We should be going ahead in this grand cause every day. If not, we must fall backward. Saints should live in such manner that they are receiving more light every day. If we live as our heavenly Father would have us, the light will grow brighter for us as each day passes. Let us ask ourselves the question, Is the light growing brighter for us, as we step out from one day into the other? If it is not, there must be something wrong on our part. Question: Are we doing the things the gospel of Jesus says we ought to do, and are we refraining from the things it says we ought not to do? To be a Latter Day Saint in earnest is something more than being baptized and confirmed by one of authority, and having our name on the church books. We must live up to every commandment that Jesus taught and be ready to sacrifice for the Lord's work.

Paul says in Philippians 2:14, and 15: "Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Let us so live that we will be a bright and shining light in the world wherever we may chance to be.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

H. E. C. MUIR.

MINDEN CITY, Michigan, May 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: There never seemed more opportunities lying around us for doing good than now. So many ways for being active in the service of the Master, if we are desirous of working. But how necessary that in all our activities we keep in mind to work with an eye single to the glory of God, and this to be so in temporal lines as well as spiritual.

The great importance of this requirement we were made to realize more fully during an experience we passed through in the early part of our afflictions when in our lowest physical condition. We were permitted to see many things as they really are and as they should be. We saw, as never before or since, the nothingness of pure earthly ambitions, and beheld the nature of the work that only will benefit us eternally, even the truly spiritual and sound, and the requirement of soundness was far greater than we had thought before. The experience was so real that it made a deep impression.

We have tried in our weak way to profit by the lessons taught us and have found it true that the more whole hearted is our service to the Master, the greater the spiritual strength gained and the deeper the joy. And we have also found the words true: "Without me ye can do nothing." Without the spiritual sustenance we can not build soundly. The life-giving sap must circulate within our beings and this it can only do as we coöperate with it, which enables it to do its office work, helping to bring about the necessary transformation, more of the human giving way to the divine.

We are beginning to see that it takes many an experience to bring about this necessary change in each of us, but after tasting of the real benefits gained, we rejoice therein and have no desire to be free from the necessary discipline, but ask for strength to endure all that will work for our eternal good, and all concerned, that will purge away the dross and bring into use every power within our being capable of developing and doing good.

Our health in the past year has been slowly improving. The suffering with the old chronic trouble occurs less frequently and is not so severe as in past years. We feel thankful for all blessings and indeed thankful for the additional degree of the Spirit that is present in all our times of affliction, encircling us with heavenly peace, filling the mind with higher thoughts, thus drawing us nearer to God. What a cheering and uplifting influence the Spirit of God is and how far-reaching it is! What a change it can work in a moment of time. The troubled mind can be filled with inexpressible peace and happiness when from a human standpoint we can not see our way out of trouble. But, having done all we can, and laying the matter bare before God, the inner man feels that God has a way, and this not only in physical distress, but in mental and spiritual also. At such a moment, what joy and blessedness to hear the still small voice speak words of comfort and instruction! How strengthening to the soul as every fiber of our being feels and knows that it is God's voice that spoke the words! This is spiritual food indeed, in the strength of which we can go for many days!

During the first part of last month we again had occasion to prove the infinite goodness of God, when the year-old babe of Bro. and Sr. T. Summers (the latter being my sister) was very low with pneumonia. From a human standpoint he was beyond help, but God saw fit to spare him, for which we feel very grateful. Even though administered to several times in the earlier stages of the disease, not until it pleased God did the blessing come. He grew very low, so that death seemed very near, for a time, but, no doubt, all was for a purpose, and we sincerely hope that the lesson it was to teach may be learned.

How good and kind the Father is, how willing to draw near to us when we are willing to do our part and draw near to him! And how necessary that we always keep near so that we have his Spirit with us and thus be ready for every emergency!

We realize that in passing through our trying experiences consciously and prayerfully we gain the more benefits, trying to learn all that is possible to learn. We can plainly see that unless we thus try to profit by the experiences we are not prepared for the greater tests to come.

In January of the past winter, Bro. R. Etzenhouser conducted a series of meetings in our church. Some interest was manifested by nonmembers; a few more heard the gospel in its fullness, and the Saints were spiritually benefited by the services. A local Religio of twenty-one members was also organized while the brother was here. Previous to this time we formed the Home Class Religio, known as the "Pioneer Home Class of Eastern Michigan," organized eight years ago. Since that time we have enjoyed the study of the lessons and have realized benefits from the same.

We now hope to gain every benefit that may be ours as a local. Though few in number we desire to be diligent and improve the privileges offered a small local for development. As in all other departments of the work, no doubt, discouraging seasons may come, but we hope and pray that we may through clouds and sunshine move "Onward and Upward."

We read with pleasure the report of the General Conventions, and the good news of conference; rejoiced to hear of the divine instruction received. How good it does seem to be thus recognized of the Lord, and to have the present needs supplied by his wise counsel!

The time for our district conference will soon be here. I hope it may be a success in every way. In attending the conference at St. Clair last fall we were greatly strengthened spiritually. We went with a deep longing to receive whatever blessing God had in store, and are glad to say that we were not disappointed. Our greatest spiritual strength was received during a sermon preached by Bro. Etzenhouser, on practical lines. To us the room seemed filled to overflowing with the calm, strengthening influence, such as we feel whenever truth is made manifest. We realize more than we can express. For days after, we felt the strength of it, both spiritually and physically.

Another source from which we derived great benefit was the personal visits with those who are striving to apply the purifying principles of the gospel in daily life.

We meet with individuals now and then from whose very presence purity and light seem to emanate. Such lives make an impression on us that can not soon be forgotten. How true that real soul-growth can not be hid!

Then how necessary that we give more earnest and constant attention to the cultivation of those inner graces, that by our presence and the influence we shed it may be felt and known that we have been with God and have partaken of his pure and refined nature. Such lives are in great demand in this work. O that the beauty and magnitude of the work of God be comprehended more by each of us; that all may realize the great importance of serving God with heart, mind, and strength, which service brings peace and power that no other source can give!

Your sister in Christ,

EMMA VOLZ.

News From Branches

LONDON, ONTARIO.

Bro. G. C. Tomlinson and Anderson, missionaries, were in the city last week attending the funeral of Elder A. E. Mortimer.

Elder T. R. Seaton is at present working in Brandon, Manitoba. The family intend moving there in the near future. The elder was choir master, and we will miss him from our branch services.

Grandma Johnson and her daughter, Sr. Libby, of St. Thomas, attended the funeral of Elder Mortimer.

Elder R. B. Howlett, missionary, is home for a couple of weeks' rest.

HONOLULU, HAWAII.

The church papers recently to hand have brought news of the General Conference proceedings, and the hearts of the Saints here were made glad when upon reading the same it was found that the Lord had blessed the church with more of his word.

The instructions given in the revelations received are of great importance to God's people, and it is hoped that inasmuch as the Lord has spoken there may be greater unity of purpose manifested by the church as a body in the carrying out of the requirements of the law revealed for Zion's redemption.

The work is progressing fairly well in Honolulu, and I have been encouraged of late through an opening that has been made among the Portuguese, of whom there is quite a colony in Honolulu. For some months past I have been instructing a Portuguese family of the name of Souza in the gospel, and last month three of its members were baptized. Other members of the family (numbering seven altogether) are interested, and I believe will soon come into the church. They are the first Portuguese that have accepted the work here; and as they are people of good standing I trust that through them the work may extend amongst others of their people. Elder A. B. Purfurst met some of the members of this family when he was living in Hilo, on the Island of Hawaii, and he was the one who first introduced our work to their notice.

I have also quite recently baptized an estimable couple, Americans, named Felter, who I feel sure will be a good help to the work eventually. Sr. Felter is already taking hold, and has organized a choir. She is an instructor of music, and I look forward therefore to good results from her work.

There are in our branch people of several nationalities, Americans, Hawaiians, Portuguese, Chinese, and Japanese, so that each Sunday I have an opportunity of presenting the gospel right here in Honolulu to people of a good many different nations.

Hoping that the good cause may continue to prosper here and elsewhere, I remain,

Yours truly, and fraternally,

G. J. WALLER.

Miscellaneous Department

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the British Isles Mission; Greeting: Having been appointed by the late General Conference to take charge of this mission again, I desire to thank all for their support and hospitality which in the past has been unvaryingly shown towards me.

The year we have passed through has been very trying to all in many ways, beginning, as it did, with the death of two of our most capable, valiant brethren; and then further inroads by death have been made so that in almost every part of the mission the church has been stricken with sorrow by its intrusion. We have observed with thankfulness that those who have been so sorely tried have very courageously taken hold of the work and striven to fill the breach.

There have been some trials in other ways, and at present the way is not at all as clear as we would like it, but we trust that all things will work together for the good of the work we love. Above all things, let us cultivate a love of principle and truth, remembering that "he who loves his church better than he does the truth will end by loving himself better than he does the church."

You will have observed in the church publications that our missionary staff is not so large as it was last year. It was my business to report the condition of the mission with its prospects and demands to the Presidency at the late conference, and then if they felt that the church could bear the financial responsibility the policy suggested could be put into operation. In a personal letter from the President, I am informed that this was not possible, so the church has allowed us to try and prosecute the work with the staff at our disposal with the provision, that if the financial burden is still too heavy we may reduce the number of missionaries until our expenses shall be within the income; we can rely upon the mission producing itself.

I feel sure that you will agree with this course as being the wisest and most business-like. Personally, I have an antipathy to debt, and I also realize the hardship of a missionary life when means are scarce and are forwarded intermittently. Humanism, as well as wisdom, would insist that as far as possible we do not incur more expense than is necessary, and especially when such a course will inflict hardship upon others.

Will you all, therefore, make a special effort to pay what you can in tithing and offering, "as the Lord shall prosper you," to the various agents which have been appointed, so that we shall not have to reduce the staff any more and so make the work as easy as possible.

At present we will ask that the missionaries labor as follows:

Rees Jenkins, of the seventies, will labor in Western Wales. Thomas Jones will labor in the Eastern District. When circumstances may demand these two brethren will cooperate and labor together as directed in the law.

W. H. Greenwood, of the seventies, will labor in Leeds and district, and for the rest of the year will act as president of the Leeds Branch, owing to the peculiar conditions which have existed.

Thomas Taylor, high priest, will labor in the Sheffield District, particularly paying attention to the city of Sheffield.

Bro. Leggott will continue for the present to act as missionary in the Manchester District.

It will be understood that any of these appointments will be canceled if occasion or circumstances demand.

Will all the missionaries and also the local officers kindly report as promptly as possible on the following dates: July 1, October 1, January 1, and February 20. It has been very difficult to secure the regard for this reporting that is desired by the church. I feel sure that it is just as easy to get into the habit of doing this regularly and promptly as it is to get into the habit of doing it irregularly and indifferently.

We solicit the cooperation of all the Saints and ministry for the present year's work and by your sympathy and help in our work in the spirit of solidarity we shall succeed in getting better results. To secure solidarity all that is needed is for "every man to find his work" and then do it. Carlyle says, "Blessed is that man."

Yours sincerely,

JOHN W. RUSHTON.

Committee on Archaeology.

The Committee on Archaeology aim to revise and republish the printed report which has been issued by the church. They earnestly request any criticisms or suggestions that may be helpful towards making the new edition a better one, as the Herald Office is anxious to supply the demand for the book. The committee will begin their work at once.

Send communications to F. M. Sheehy, 100 Sycamore Street, Winter Hill Station, Boston, Massachusetts.

F. M. SHEEHY.

To Whom it May Concern: Should this come under the notice of the following brethren and sisters: Joseph Zastera, Ole Christopher Olsen, William C. Campbell, Aimanias C. Sperry, William Baker, Sarah C. Baker, Sarah E. Roe, Samuel Brown, Nancy J. Alexander, William J. Ball, John F. Ball, Electa J. Ball, Clarence E. D. Ball, and William Marckmann, or of any of the Saints who know the whereabouts of any of the above-named members, will they kindly address Mrs. Mary E. Lawn, 554 Spencer Avenue, San Jose, California.

Conference Notices.

Northern Michigan will meet at Alpena, Michigan, June 19 and 20. Social-service at 8.30 Saturday morning, conference opening at 10 a. m. Meals will be served at ten cents to all excepting General Conference appointees. All are invited to attend. Charles N. Burtch, secretary.

Convention Notices.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society and Sunday-school will meet at Alpena, Friday, June 18; prayer-service in the morning at 8; Religio convention at 9.30; Sunday-school convention at 1.30 p. m.; entertainment in the evening. Would like all locals to help us in the entertainment. Secretaries, please see that credentials are properly filled out and sent. A. E. Starks, president of Religio; C. N. Burtch, superintendent of schools.

Sunday-school convention of the Nauvoo District will meet at Montrose, Iowa, June 11, at 10 a. m. Send reports to Miss Clara Ortleb in care of F. M. McDonald, Montrose, Iowa. Clara Ortleb, secretary.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society of Little Sioux District convenes at Magnolia, Iowa, June 3, 8 p. m. Lou Mann, secretary.

The Sunday-school convention of the Little Sioux District will be held at Magnolia, Iowa, June 3, 8 p. m. Let us all strive to have a profitable time. Annie Stuart, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

Annual reunion of the Independence Stake will be held August 25 to September 5, inclusive, near Fairland Heights, in a beautiful grove about three hundred yards southwest of the Fairland Heights station, on the Independence Electric Line. Elder A. H. Parsons, of the Stake Bishopric, has been placed in charge as the manager by the reunion committee, and he will visit the branches of the stake for the purpose of raising funds to pay the running expenses of the reunion. You will hear from him later. We expect the tents up ready for occupancy Wednesday morning, August 25. Our first meeting will commence at 3 p. m. the same day, when organization will be effected. Tents will be put up and taken down by the company furnishing them. The program will be out in good time, also other announcements concerning price of tents, meals, provisions, etc. We expect to have with us several of the general church officials. Elder Evan A. Davis, of the missionary force, will be the principal speaker in the evening services. Yours for the committee, G. E. Harrington.

At the February conference of the Seattle and British Columbia District, it was decided to hold a ten-day meeting, or reunion, to be held at Seattle, Washington, commencing August 12. The Spokane and Portland districts are expected to cooperate in making it a success. All Saints who expect to visit the exposition will do well to make the visit in August. It is generally conceded that August and September will be the choice months of the exposition. Tents will be available for rent; prices for tents will be advertised later in HERALD and Ensign. William Johnson, George Strong, F. W. Holman, sub-committee.

Died.

HOFFMAN.—Jonathan Ray, son of Jonathan and Mary Hoffman, of Layerville, West Virginia, was born February 21, 1882, at Washburn, Ritchie County, West Virginia. He was baptized August 29, 1900, by Elder G. H. Godbey and confirmed by G. H. Godbey and T. K. Terrel. He was extremely patient in his suffering and but two days prior to his death told the writer he was willing that God's will be done, meaning that if the time of his departure had come, he was satisfied. Funeral at the home of his parents, conducted by Elder A. Edwards. The following morning the remains were taken to Ritchie County for interment. May God sustain our aged brother and sister in their sad bereavement.

BARNEY.—Sr. Angeline A., was born January 1, 1823, and died May 5, 1909. She was baptized into the church September 1, 1889, by Elder Delong. She leaves to mourn an aged husband and grandchildren, with a host of friends. Funeral sermon by E. S. White, and interment in Elmlawn cemetery, where she awaits the final call.

SPAKE.—A. C. Spake was born January 14, 1845, in Wane County, Ohio, and died April 25, 1909, at Knobnoster, Missouri. He enlisted as a soldier in the Civil War and served the entire time. After the close of the war, he moved to Knobnoster, Missouri, and lived there from 1866 until his death. He was one of God's exemplary children and was well spoken of by every one. In 1889 he joined the Latter Day Saint Church and remained faithful and true, though he was the only one of his family that ever accepted the gospel. Funeral sermon by E. L. Henson; W. S. Macrae in charge.

KEIM.—At Logana Beach, California, April 10, 1909, Sr. Sylva Keim, aged 82 years, 10 months, and 8 days. She united with the church under the leadership of Brigham Young and was baptized by Benjamin Clapp in Texas in 1856 and in 1857 went to Utah. Stayed there one winter and became disgusted, and in the spring with husband and family went back to Illinois. In 1875 came to Los Angeles, California, and has spent most of the last twenty years at Logana Beach. She united with the church in 1876, baptized by Joseph Clapp. She was laid beside her three grandchildren in the Santaard cemetery. Four children survive her. She remained faithful to the end and passing bravely behind the dark cloud to the beautiful dawn, finds rest in the paradise of the blessed. Established in the faith of the restored gospel she bore testimony unflinching to children and friends in the midst of physical decline. Funeral sermon by W. R. Thornton, pastor of Methodist Episcopal Church.

WALSH.—Ethel Mae Walsh, was born December 12, 1893 in Lancashire, England; died May 30, 1904, aged 10 years, 5 months and 18 days. Was baptized into the church by A. J. Rudd in 1903. Funeral-service was held in the Saints' church at Coalgate, Oklahoma, by Elder T. J. Sheppard; interment in Coalgate Cemetery. She was a kind, affectionate child, beloved by all. She leaves a mother, stepfather, two stepbrothers, and two stepsisters, and many friends to mourn her loss.

McCLAIN.—Henry C. McClain was born May 17, 1886, in Drew County, Arkansas; died February 28, 1908, in Oklahoma City in a hospital. He had been ill for several months, and his death was expected by relatives and friends. He had been confined in the hospital for the past eight months with abscesses in the head. He was 21 years of age and was baptized into the church several years ago by Elder George Montague at his home in Coalgate, Oklahoma. The remains were brought to Coalgate and laid to rest in Coalgate Cemetery. He leaves a wife who was Miss Ruby Stemms of this city, as well as father, mother, brother, and sisters to mourn his untimely demise. The bereaved ones have the sympathy and condolence of numerous friends in their sad hour of affliction.

McCLAIN.—Henry T. McClain was born in Decalb County, Mississippi, December 3, 1851; died in Coalgate, Oklahoma, March 12, 1909. He had suffered many months with a complication of incurable diseases. He was baptized into the church several years ago in Dew County, Arkansas, by Elder J. D. Erwin, and died in hope of a glorious resurrection. Funeral-service at the home Saturday afternoon, March 13, in charge of Reverend W. B. Toney of the Baptist Church. His remains were laid to rest in Coalgate Cemetery. He leaves a widow, son, two daughters, and many friends to mourn his departure.

KENT.—Sister Anna, wife of Elder Alma Kent, was born October 11, 1842, and baptized March 25, 1872. She was faithful to the end. A devoted wife, a kind and loving mother has passed away, leaving husband, two sons, and five daughters to mourn her loss. Services conducted by Elder Scarcliff; sermon by C. E. Hand.

Why should we mourn for dying friends,

Or shake at death's alarms?

'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,

To call them to his arms.

The graves of all his Saints he blest,

And softened every bed;—

Where should the dying member rest,

But with their dying head?

Pastoral.

To the Ministry and Saints of the Pacific Mission (No. 5), comprising the following: British Columbia, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, California, Nevada, and Hawaii Territory; Greeting: The General Conference has returned me to this mission for another year, and I hope that our association may be as pleasant as the past year, and more profitable to all concerned.

We were told by the President of the church this spring that this would be an active year. I think it would be an excellent thing for us to fulfill the prediction so far as the Pacific Mission can do so! What say you, one and all, are you willing? If so, put away all contention, lay aside the hindering excuses, and let us concentrate our thought, energy, and powers on the one purpose (establishing the glorious work of God). Let us determine in our hearts and carry it into effect in our lives, that we will make every sacrifice of means, time, pleasure, or anything else that may be necessary in order to advance the interests of the cause we so dearly love.

We are short of missionaries, for which I am very sorry; but the shortage in the finance would not allow any more men put in the field this year. This will necessitate more diligence and greater effort on the part of the ministry, both traveling and local. Greater sacrifice will no doubt be called for, but should we shrink from it in this the hour of the church's need? I appeal to the Saints to sustain the brethren, do not compel them to go to the Bishop, or his agents, for the means to meet the necessary expense; but make a little greater effort even if it is a sacrifice. Then indeed will you be a coworker with those in the field.

You know the Lord has said, "By this you may know my disciples, they will feed you, and clothe you, and give you money." In some places if we were to go by this rule we would be forced to the conclusion that the Lord did not have many disciples there, even if they did claim it.

To the missionaries I wish to say: I hope that you will enter the field this year with a determination to stay in the field and work hard, allowing nothing to keep you out but sickness or some very serious reason. The Lord's work is not a light thing that we can enter, assuming the great responsibility that comes to us in the ordination to office in his priesthood, and then lay it down at every whim that may take us, or to serve our own selfish notions or pleasures. Unless some serious sickness or other serious necessity demands it, we should remain in the field assigned us.

The ministry should set the example in faithfulness and diligence, if they wish their teaching and influence to be what it should be.

The members become discouraged if they see a disposition on the part of the ministry to shirk their duties, or fail to be as faithful as they should be in their labors. I hope that no such complaints can be truthfully brought against any of the missionaries in this field this year. See to it, brethren, that no such chance is given.

In regard to reporting, I desire that all the ministers will report to me direct, as I believe it will save some time in getting the reports to the Presidency. Be prompt and remember the dates. It is as easy for you to remember them as for the minister in charge; July 1, October 1, January 1, and March 1. The report for March 1 should be an annual report. Blank reports have been published by the Herald Office and can be had at eight cents a dozen. Send and get them at once.

Blanks have been published also for the branch presidents to report to the district presidents and for the district presidents to report to the minister in charge. These can be had at the Herald Office at the same price; please get some and see to it that your report is in on time. Will the district presidents please see to this and remember the date is the same as for the missionary.

Bro. S. S. Smith will act as assistant minister in charge of Montana and Spokane districts.

Bro. G. J. Waller will be in charge of Hawaii Territory.

We may appoint others as assistants in charge if thought advisable later on.

Bro. I. M. Smith, D. R. Baldwin, and A. J. Moore will labor in Montana and Northern and Eastern Wyoming.

A. V. Closson, Hale W. Smith, and N. C. Engle will labor in the Spokane District; Bro. Closson will make the city of Spokane the objective point.

William Johnson, George W. Thorburn, and J. D. Stead will labor in the Seattle and British Columbia District.

Bro. M. H. Cook and W. A. Brooner will be associated in the Portland District; Bro. Cook will make Portland the objective point.

Bro. S. D. Condit and A. J. Layland will labor in Eastern Oregon, Idaho, and Western and Southern Wyoming.

Bro. F. J. Chatburn will labor in the Southwestern Oregon District.

Bro. J. M. Terry, F. B. Farr, C. W. Earle, and John F. Wiles will be associated in the Northern California District and Nevada.

Bro. T. W. Williams and C. E. Crumley will labor in the Southern California District; Bro. Crumley will make San Bernardino the objective point.

We expect Bro. N. V. Sheldon to take the field as soon as proper arrangements can be made.

Bro. E. Keeler will labor as an evangelical minister in Oregon and Washington.

Bro. Joseph F. Burton will labor as an evangelical minister in California, so far as his health will permit.

In case the necessity for a debate should arise, consult the minister in charge, unless the emergency demands immediate action; under such conditions humbly and prayerfully do the best you can, reporting to me the conditions at your earliest convenience.

I desire that all shall feel free to write to me at any time, and I will do all that I can to help you. Address me at Lamoni, Iowa, if you do not know where I am in the field, and it will reach me in due time.

If any of the local brethren can volunteer some labor during the year it would be gladly received and appreciated.

Any assistance that can be given by the Saints in their scattered condition to the missionaries, or information that will help them get the glad news into new places, will be appreciated also.

May the grace of our Lord and Savior be with you, and may he bless you in all your efforts for the cause of Christ.

Your brother and colaborer,

FREDERICK A. SMITH,

Minister in Charge.

National Purity Congress.

BURLINGTON, IOWA, OCTOBER 18-22, 1909.

This Congress is called by and will be held under the auspices of the National Purity Federation, an association formed by the leaders in purity reform throughout America for the purpose of securing the coöperation in a national sense of all societies, national, state and local, that are striving to promote purity in the life of the individual and in social relations, and of inaugurating such an aggressive, united, forward movement as shall arouse the conscience of our people to the awful facts relative to organized vice and the operations of its promoters, and assure to all a high standard of morality and a right knowledge of the pure life.

Burlington is one of the most beautiful and enterprising of the smaller cities of the Middle West located on the Mississippi. It is a railroad center and is reached without change of cars from all of the larger cities including Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minneapolis, and Chicago. The Ministerial Union, assisted by other Christian, temperance and reform organizations of the city have in charge the local arrangements; we can therefore confidently expect to be as comfortably cared for as at any of our past delightful national gatherings.

Many of our most eminent reformers and religious workers will address the Congress. A program of the highest merit will be carried out, including discussions by recognized authorities on the White Slave Traffic, Educational and religious methods, Rescue work, Recent and needed Legislative enactments, Law enforcement, Sanitary measures, and the Suppression of Vice. A number of musical and entertaining selections will be given. Every moment will be of real and practical worth to reformers, religious workers, educators, parents, and all who are endeavoring to promote true morality. Leaders in these movements in foreign lands who are unable to attend, will be invited to contribute papers which will appear in the record of the Congress.

A general invitation is most heartily extended to all organizations that are laboring to promote purity or eradicate vice and are in sympathy with the purpose of this Congress, to send delegates and to unite with the Federation in its work.

All religious institutions and churches, reform societies, temperance organizations and other societies whose principles accord with the purpose of the Congress are urged to accept this invitation. All individuals who are actively interested in the work will be welcome.

All possible information will be cheerfully furnished concerning the Congress or the Federation by addressing the National Purity Federation, B. S. Steadwell, President, La Crosse, Wisconsin, or Miss Julia E. Morrow, Secretary, 104 Ralph Street, Spokane, Washington.

A Thrilling Experience.

It would be hopeless to attempt to put into writing those impressions which go to make the entering of a great Egyptian sepulchre so thrilling an experience; one can not describe the silence, the echoing steps, the dark shadows, the hot, breathless air; nor tell of the sense of vast Time and the penetrating of it which stirs one so deeply.

As we scrambled out into the brilliant sunlight and the bracing north wind, the gloomy wreck was brought before the imagination with renewed force. In some of the tombs which have been opened the freshness of the objects has caused one to exclaim at the inaction of the years; but here where vivid and well-preserved wall paintings looked down on a jumbled collection of smashed fragments of wood and bones, one felt how hardly the Powers deal with the dead.

In the fourth year of the reign of Horemheb a certain harper named Neferhotep partly composed a song which was peculiarly appropriate to the tune which ran in one's head at the opening of the tomb of this Pharaoh whom the harper served:

"Behold the dwellings of the dead. Their walls fall down; their place is no more; they are as though they had never existed. That which hath come into being must pass away again. The young men and maidens go to their places; the sun riseth at dawn, and setteth again in the hills of the west. Men beget and women conceive. The children, too, go to the places which are appointed for them. Oh, then, be happy! Come, scents and perfumes are set before them; mahu-flowers and lilies for the arms and neck of thy beloved. Come, songs and music are before thee. Set behind thee all cares; think only upon gladness, until that day cometh whereon thou shalt go down to the land which loveth silence."

Horemheb must often have heard this song sung in his palace at Thebes by its composer; but did he think, one wonders, that it would be the walls of his own tomb which would fall down, and his own bones which would be almost as though they had never existed.—From Arthur E. P. Weigall's "A new Egyptian discovery" in the June Century.

THE AMERICAN ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

SOME ITEMS REGARDING ITS HISTORY AND PRESENT WORK.

At the first alcohol was hailed as a blessing from the gods,—the great restorer, the elixir of life. For a long time the delusion continued, and still holds its own in certain quarters.

King Alcohol has long wished to associate himself with good company, to be one of a trio, "wine, women, and song." The association, however, has never been to the advantage of his two associates, when they have voluntarily submitted to his company. He vulgarizes song and debauches woman.

He has put up a good front, pointing with pride to his heavy contributions to the treasury in the way of taxes, to the employment that he furnishes men, to the hearts that he has enlivened and the jests he has inspired. It took society a long time to discover that the old fellow always furnishes paupers and jailbirds and imbeciles enough to eat up the taxes and more; that every time he gives a man a job in a distillery or on a beer wagon he works two others out of a job and onto the inefficient list, that he gladdens a few hearts and saddens many, that the maudlin hilarity of a thousand toppers will never pay for the heartbreak of one mother whose boy has gone to hell.

But there is an awakening. Periodically society or a portion of society rouses itself and makes a more or less concerted attack on the liquor business. Success follows in proportion as they are well organized and in earnest. The century recently closed saw numbers of such movements. Usually the interest died down in a little time and the movement went to pieces; laws then became inoperative and John Doe opened up a saloon in the hall recently vacated by the temperance people. The hard tipplers always returned after the Good Templars had worn themselves out.

Results, however, were cumulative. Each time a little of the ground gained was held. Each wave beat higher. Within the memory of men now living almost every one drank. There was no public sentiment against it. Statesmen scrutinized grave problems through inverted tumblers. Poets and orators sought inspiration at the decanter. Even the parson kept liquor on his sideboard and considered that a nip at the spirits just before entering the pulpit would help the Holy Spirit vastly in giving him utterance. Physicians recommended stimulants for all sorts of diseases, and bled most of their patients until something of the kind was needed. Liquor was mixed with the milk that was given to little babes; whisky was the last draught administered to old men ere they boarded the through sleeper.

Lincoln, in his temperance address before the Washington Temperance Society at Springfield, Illinois, February 22, 1842, described the great gain that had been made in temperance sentiment in twenty years preceding that date, and probably the sentiment is much stronger now than then. The line is more distinctly drawn between the abstainer and the tippler. The moderate drinker has less ground to stand on and claims less respect than formerly.

Many people have come to see things as Governor Hanley, of Indiana, sees them. He gives these reasons for hating the liquor traffic:

I hate it for its domination in politics. I hate it for its corrupting influence in civic affairs. I hate it for its incessant effort to debauch the suffrage of the country, for the cowards it makes of public men. I hate it for its utter disregard of law. I hate it for its ruthless tramping of the solid compacts of state constitutions.

I hate it for the load it straps to labor's back, for the palsied hands it gives to toil, for its wounds to genius, for the tragedies of its might-have-beens. I hate it for the human wrecks it has caused. I hate it for the almshouses it peoples, for the prisons it fills, for the insanity it begets, for its countless graves in potter's fields.

I hate it for the mental ruin it imposes upon its victims, for its spiritual blight, for its moral degradation. I hate it for the crimes it has committed. I hate it for the homes it has destroyed. I hate it for the hearts it has broken. I hate seem to see the end of this unholy traffic, the coming of the time, when, if it does not wholly cease to be, it shall find no safe habitation anywhere beneath "Old Glory's stainless stars."

Perhaps the most active and powerful foe of the liquor business in America to-day is the American Anti-Saloon League. A few statements regarding the history of this league and its present work may be of interest and value to our readers.

It is said that the league grew out of a meeting in the college library building at Oberlin College, Ohio, it for the malice it has planted in the hearts of men—for its poison, for its bitterness—for the Dead Sea fruit with which it starves their souls.

THE SITUATION AT THE BEGINNING OF 1909.

I hate it for the grief it causes womanhood—the scalding tears, the hopes deferred, the strangled aspirations, its burden of want and care.

I hate it for its heartless cruelty to the aged, the infirm and the helpless, for the shadow it throws on the lives of children, for its monstrous injustice to blameless little ones.

I hate it as virtue hates vice, as truth hates error, as righteousness hates sin, as justice hates wrong, as liberty hates tyranny, as freedom hates oppression.

I hate it as Abraham Lincoln hated slavery. And as he sometimes saw in prophetic vision the end of slavery and the coming of the time when the sun should shine and the rain should fall upon no slave in all the republic, so I sometimes

May 24, 1893, at which time it was advocated by Howard H. Russell. On Sunday, June 4, a union meeting was held in the First Congregational Church, of Oberlin, and a league was formally launched. About three weeks later, without any knowledge of this movement, a similar organization was effected in Washington, D. C.; several others sprang up about the same time. In 1895 the league at Washington, for the District of Columbia, took the initiative in calling a national convention for the purpose of uniting on a general plan of action. This convention met in the Calvary Baptist Sunday-school house at the national capital December 17, 1895. The following day the American Anti-Saloon League was formed by the coalition of forty-seven national, state, and local temperance organizations, and a nation-wide crusade against the saloons was begun.

During the years since that date the temperance movement has been crescendo. Some remarkable victories have been won. The world has been surprised to see such States as Kentucky (the classical home of whisky-loving majors) go dry. Gradually the enemy has been forced westward, as will be seen by the accompanying map. In nearly all of the many big and little fights since its organization the league has had a part; when it could not swing a State it went after a county or town.

It is not a political party and affiliates with no particular church. Of its work P. A. Baker, general superintendent, writes:

The Anti-Saloon League is not, strictly speaking, an organization. It is what its name indicates—a league. It is a league of organizations. It is the federated church in action against the saloon. Its agents are of the church, and under all circumstances loyal to the church. It has no interest apart from the church. It goes just as fast and just as far as the public sentiment of the church will permit. It has not come to the kingdom simply to build a little local sentiment, or to secure the passage of a few laws, nor yet to vote the saloons from a few hundred towns. These are mere incidents in its progress. It has come to solve the liquor problem.

Although a reaction has been confidently predicted, and probably will come in time, there are no signs of such an event at present. The year of 1908 is described as a banner year for temperance work. The American Issue is the official organ of the league, published at Chicago, Illinois, and in the May number, Ernest H. Cherrington says of the year recently closed:

Despite the oft repeated predictions of reaction, the anti-saloon wave continued to sweep the country with increasing force. The year 1908, in spite of all that had been done in the past, was without question the banner year for best results up to that time. On January 1, the Georgia prohibition law went into effect, and from that time forward scarcely a day passed without some significant victory for the temperance reform being recorded. Illinois in a single day voted 1,053 townships dry, abolishing thereby 1,500 saloons. Wisconsin added 100 new communities to the no-license column and abolished 400 saloons. In Minnesota thirty-two new towns were gained by the anti-saloon forces. Thirty additional municipalities in Nebraska voted dry. Ten new counties in Michigan voted dry, abolishing 305 saloons. County after county in South Carolina outlawed the saloons under the county law, until twenty-two of the forty-two counties were dry, and Governor Ansel was reelected on an anti-saloon platform. Mississippi passed a state prohibition law, thereby excluding the liquor traffic from the seven remaining wet counties of the State. North Carolina, by a majority of 44,000, adopted state-wide prohibition. Under the county law of Oregon twenty-one of the thirty-three counties voted no-license on June 1. In Colorado forty-two municipalities voted dry. Arkansas, in the local option elections, registered a total majority against license in the State of 22,934, and elected an anti-saloon governor by 80,000. Kansas saw the last liquor stronghold (Leavenworth) fall, and an anti-saloon governor elected to continue the splendid temperance policy of Governor Hoch. South Dakota drove the saloons from Mitchell and several other important towns, and elected an anti-saloon governor to fill the place of the former splendid temperance governor who was sent to the United States Senate. Texas added several dry counties to the list, making 154 in the State, and reelected Governor Campbell on a straight anti-saloon issue. The Louisiana anti-saloon map was whitened by the addition of three new dry parishes. In Virginia over 400 drinking places of all sorts were closed. Rhode Island abolished 429 saloons, and passed a law limiting the number of licenses to one for every 500 population and prohibiting the saloon within 200 feet of a public or parochial school. Tennessee elected a legislature pledged to enact state prohibition, and the wanton murder of ex-Senator Carmack by the leader of the political faction controlled by the liquor interests stirred the State from end to end, as never before, on the temperance question. In Maine and North Dakota, governors pledged to the strict enforcement of prohibition were elected. Two additional counties in California voted dry. Washington elected a governor, lieutenant-governor, and a majority of the members of the legislature either favorable to or pledged to vote for local option. The Idaho political party which incorporated a local option plank in its platform swept the State by a large majority. Baltimore, Maryland, lost 393 saloons during the year and one dry county was added in the State. Massachusetts outlawed 215 saloons and Worcester, with a population of 150,000, voted dry a second time. In Iowa 461 saloons were outlawed. Seven hundred and twenty saloons were remonstrated out of business in Indiana, and the county local option law was passed by a special session of the legislature. The Ohio legislature enacted a county option bill which went into effect September 1. From that time to the end of the year, fifty-seven of the sixty-six counties voting went dry, abolishing 1,910 saloons. Taking the United States as a whole, more than 11,000 saloons were abolished in the campaigns of 1908.

The campaign for 1909 has opened up in deadly earnest, and already temperance workers have scored repeatedly. During the first four months of the year the following gains have been made:

On the 1st of January, 1909, the doors of the last saloon in Alabama, Mississippi, and North Carolina were closed, the prohibition laws passed in those States going into effect on that day. That day was truly "Bad Friday" for the liquor interests of the country, if events which have transpired since that time are to be considered in determining the quality of the day. Tennessee passed laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor in the State. South Carolina adopted prohibition with a referendum by counties. In Arkansas several prohibition bills have been passed by both houses of the legislature, but as yet the senate and house have failed to agree on any particular measure. The lower house of Missouri has passed a resolution calling for a vote on a prohibition amendment. Iowa passed five anti-liquor laws limiting the liquor traffic in various ways. Maine and New Hampshire both wrote new restrictive and law enforcement measures on the statute books. Washington passed a municipal and rural county and local option law. Idaho enacted a straight county option measure. The Delaware legislature resubmitted the liquor question to the only wet county in the State. Arizona enacted county option. Montana extended the provisions of the local option law in that State. Wyoming abolished all saloons outside of incorporated towns. Kansas passed a stringent measure prohibiting the sale of liquors for all purposes except for sacramental use. Nebraska limited the open saloon to the hours between seven a. m. and eight p. m. Utah passed a county option measure, which was vetoed by the governor after the legislature adjourned. Congress passed the interstate liquor measure for the protection of dry territory from fictitious C. O. D. interstate liquor shipments. Colorado added twelve towns to the no-license column. One additional county was carried for no-license in Illinois. Nineteen Michigan counties voted dry. Forty-three of the forty-five Indiana counties voting went no-license, abolishing thereby 700 saloons, while one county each in Texas, South Carolina, Kentucky and Pennsylvania voted no-license. From all present indications, the results of the liquor conquest for 1909 will not fall below the record of any previous year.

Sixteen years have demonstrated the ability of the Anti-Saloon League to solve the liquor problem. Sixteen years more, at the present rate, will see the saloon, as an institution, driven into its last entrenchments in a few of the largest cities of the nation. The courage, faith, and sacrifice of the men who, through these years of conflict, have stood on the firing line, have not been in vain. The results of this Christian conquest, thus far, have been worth the price.

We may not indorse all of the methods used by the Anti-Saloon League, but in a broad sense their fight is ours. We admire them for the enemies they have made. Low-grade politicians, speckled patrons of the tenderloin, saloon-keepers, sports with majenta colored morals, and one-day-in-seven Christians are against them.

Their men are men of courage and they go up against a foe that never fights fair. The saloon element is constitutionally opposed to law and order. In every city or town it seeks to annul or evade all laws intended to regulate the business in the interests of decency. It constantly resorts to fraud, and uses violence whenever it is sure of the police and the courts. The recent plea of the saloon men and associations of brewers that they intend to reform, abide by the law, and make the saloon business respectable is hypocritical to the last degree. The saloon business can not be made respectable; and we hope that the Anti-Saloon League will continue to shoot it full of sixteen-inch holes until it looks as bad as it really is.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

LAMONI ITEMS.

Sunday was children's day. A program was given at eleven o'clock by the children, and a short address made by Elder E. A. Smith. Three were baptized at one o'clock and confirmed at the afternoon sacrament meeting. In the evening Elder R. M. Elvin addressed the audience and special music was rendered by choir and soloists.

Last week was Lamoni's "intellectual week," if any one week should be so called. Commencement exercises by Graceland College and High School bring the educational interests sharply before the public, renewing interest in both institutions.

Marshall Choate Crouch, of Chicago, was the speaker at the High School commencement exercises on Thursday evening. His address was highly entertaining. On Friday evening the High School graduates were banqueted by the Alumni Association at Patroness Hall, and a most enjoyable time was had.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Saints of Independence will please take notice that Bro. J. J. Luff has been appointed to represent the publishing department in that branch with authority to collect for old subscriptions and receive new ones. We trust that he may be given the confidence and support of the members of the branch.

The Industrial Department of Graceland College is under obligation to Ernest B. Blett, of Farwell, Michigan, the publisher of Poultry Pointers, for an annual donation of two hundred subscriptions to his paper, the proceeds to be used in the developing of the poultry department at the College. This publication sells for fifteen cents and any who desire to subscribe will please send the subscription price to the Herald Office to take up the donation of two hundred subscriptions. This is a very practical way of assisting in the development of one department of the College. There are other departments that need the same kind of help. If some one would make an annual donation for the development of the library, the museum, the laboratory, or some other part of the Industrial Department, it would be very much appreciated and would be a very practical way of assisting the young people of the church to better facilities for qualifying themselves in an educational way. The secretary, Mr. R. J. Lambert, will be glad to give information to any who desire it on any of these subjects.

Bro. R. C. Evans wishes us to announce that he is out of copies of his autobiography, and no one should order from him, as he must return all money sent to him for books. Those wishing this book should order from the Herald Publishing House, as a new edition of Bro. Evans' autobiography will be issued soon.

The following was written in the eighteenth century and is called the "Prophecy of 1769":

Soon shall thy arm, unconquered, steam afar,
 Drag the slow barge, or drive the rapid car,
 Or on wide-waving wing expanded bear
 The flying chariot through the fields of air,
 Fair crews, triumphant, leaning from above,
 Shall wave their fluttering kerchiefs as they move;
 Or warrior bands alarm the gaping crowd,
 And armies shrink beneath the shadowy cloud;
 So, mighty Hercules, o'er many a clime
 Waved his huge mace in virtue's cause sublime;
 Unmeasured strength with earthly art combined,
 Awed, served, protected and amazed mankind.

The Straight Road

THE BOOK OF MORMON. ITS PURPOSE.

In view of the fact that the Book of Mormon has not met with ready acceptance, but has more often been rejected and even scorned by the great majority, and that too without knowing what its contents or purpose was, it will perhaps bring surprise to the minds of some to learn the real purpose of this book.

Its purpose is not at all difficult to find, for on the very first page of the book it is stated in plain words to be "to show unto the remnant of the house of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off for ever; and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

The "remnant of the house of Israel" is understood to have reference to those natives of America, commonly called Indians, whom the Book of Mormon shows are of Israelitish origin and of the tribe of Manasseh. The Book of Mormon states that these were the "other sheep" which Jesus referred to in John 10:16. It relates God's dealings with these people and gives the commandments they received from him. It also states that Jesus appeared among them and gives his teachings, which are the same in substance as those recorded in the New Testament.

It will be readily seen that this history is of great importance, especially to those "remnants," as also are the promises of God relating to them, upon their acceptance of the gospel of Christ. But the greatest of all in importance is the evidence which it furnishes to all, both Jew and Gentile, that Jesus is the Christ.

This important truth is doubted now by many eminent men. All are willing to admit that Jesus was a good man, perhaps the very best that ever lived, but they will not admit his divine conception upon the statement of the New Testament Scriptures. Now, right in the midst of all this doubt and skepticism, comes another witness, one that has been separated from the first witness for centuries, and it comes forward with the same testimony that Jesus is the Christ. He is not a Christ or a Savior; but the Christ, the Savior of the world. Surely this purpose is a worthy one. No one who accepts the Bible and the Book of Mormon can question the divinity of Jesus Christ.

Another important purpose of the Book of Mormon is that which comes under the heading, "That they may know the covenants of the Lord," chief among which is the gospel covenant. The principles of the gospel are made very plain in this book, plainer, in fact, than in the New Testament. In fact, the entire book is written in such plainness that it is hardly possible for one with ordinary intelligence to misunderstand its meaning. For example: There are statements in the Bible which some people take as justifying the practise of polygamy, and will point to David and Solomon. The Book of Mormon says in answer to this, "Behold, David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me saith the Lord. . . . For there shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none; for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me: thus saith the Lord of hosts." No one who believes in the Book of Mormon can accept the doctrine of polygamy.

It is also made very clear that all are required to worship God in the name of Jesus Christ and that they must repent and be baptized by immersion in water for the remission of sins, after which the Holy Ghost is given. The question of baptizing infants is settled in the following language: "Little children need no repentance, neither baptism. Behold baptism is unto repentance to the fulfilling of the commandments unto the remission of sins. But little children are alive in Christ, even from the foundation of the world." With this question settled, a lot of argument and misunderstanding is ended.

The question of the resurrection is settled in the same clear language, showing that the body shall rise again. The doctrine of "soul-sleeping" is shown to be false, by an explanation of the state of the spirit between death and the resurrection. In brief, the Book of Mormon may be said to be God's commentary of the Bible, as it bears testimony to the truth of the Bible, and makes plain many of its precious truths. It does not in any sense take the place of the Bible, but is intended to go with it, both books teaching the word of God. The ministry are instructed by the Lord himself to "teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and Book of Mormon in the which is the fullness of the gospel." The great purpose of the Book of Mormon is to do away with false doctrine, to lead souls to Christ and to a knowledge of the truth.

DUTY, AND THE VALUE AND CERTAINTY OF THE LAW OF LIFE.

(Baccalaureate sermon by Bishop E. L. Kelley at the Graceland College commencement exercises, Lamoni, Iowa, May 30, 1909.)

"Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit, so shall ye be my disciples."—John 15:8. The instruction given in the text is by the greatest teacher of the ages and not only great in and of himself, but he taught by supreme authority; his counsel embodies, upon the thought advanced, the wisdom of all time, and it is fittingly applicable, in an advisory sense, to every student, or learner, of the world's treasures.

Jesus when making use of the language, stood in what might with propriety at the time have been termed the seat of advancement and learning of the world; and he addressed a school of learners, or disciples, which for six years had been under instruction and direction of this great expounder of the true way of life himself, or his immediate and wonderful predecessor, John the Baptist.

It was eminently an occasion to call forth the highest thought, bearing upon the guidance of men's lives in this present world, such as would accentuate the faithful adherents before him to efforts of good, in the highest possible sphere of living. There were no circumscribed limits to the industries and work to be selected as a fitting type of the highest professional duty. Every avenue of life was before this student body which had so devotedly followed its great instructors, through Galilee and Jordan, on the mountains and through the cities of the plain. Whether the highest success in life is to be attained by a spirit of inaction and ease, or in a life of activity and duty to others, it is proper here for the Master to state, for the disciples had proven themselves both loyal followers and friends,—devoted and zealous in the acquirement of a discipline that would benefit them in the truest service to be rendered to themselves and to the world.

With the great variety of callings and pursuits open wide before them, the great teacher at once outlines a sphere of usefulness and duty to others, as the way of victory and honor, and with wonderful force and clearness directs these followers to move away from the lines of self and selfishness, and act upon a nobler and more worthy plain; meeting the issues of life upon lines of justice and right, and not upon abnormal and perverted policies of action.

Possibly for the first time these disciples began to fully realize that the highest duty in life was not in quietly sitting and day-dreaming of the enjoyment and the pleasures foretold, when he should "bring again the kingdom of Israel," but in proving themselves unselfish factors in transforming the unhallowed conditions of the world to such a state, that it might with propriety and satisfaction become the habitation of the holy and just.

From the beginning, in the instruction of this divine teacher, there is found a line of thought which sets forth the life and work of the disciple, to be the foremost factor entering into his acceptance here and final triumph; and the instruction is of such general application that it may with propriety indicate the highest plane of life and work of the student of the age: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, I give unto you to be the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill can not be hid." "Therefore let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father, who is in heaven." Having given to his faithful school the highest principles of life that could be communicated to the world, they were indeed as a city in a high place, for success, they need only reflect the superior light which they had received.

Treating further, upon another occasion, of the importance of living and pursuing a course in life to help and bless others, instead of for what one may get out of the world in the way of selfish pleasures, or riches, he said: "For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" To make proper use of what we receive is far more excellent than to gather an abundance of the things of life, and fail of duty in its use.

It may be said that these disciples of Jesus were students of theology, and their object was to attain the facts respecting religion. But why should we make any difference, so far as the application of the training and preparation for life's duties which we receive is concerned, whether it is by the study of the sciences of philosophy and mathematics, or by the science of religion? It may be said, "that there are so many false religions in the world that the study of this could hardly be called a science." But are there not as many false philosophies, erroneous theories of astronomy, physiology, geology, anthropology, and other branches of learning which are taught in our public schools and colleges, as there are false religions in the world? The centuries of the past are strewn with the wrecks of false ideas and theories, which in their time and day were taught and forced upon the attention of the student, as facts, in every branch and phase of what is termed the natural sciences; insomuch that we to-day not only look out upon a new heaven, to that of the student and philosopher of the past, but a new earth also; and yet we have not reached that place of definite knowledge in these things, where it is possible for us to say that much of the instruction of our own time, which is claimed to have a basis in the facts of science, will not be unmasked and overturned, as has been that of past centuries.

In the science of religion a system was marked out from the beginning and gradually unfolded to man as he was willing to receive, "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little," and this instruction, in part at least, preserved and compiled into a system of facts, forms a standard by which to test the true and false in the science of theology, and much that is included under the physical sciences.

It is true that all do not see or comprehend alike the science of theology; and that the ideas touching it may be said to be as diversified as upon the varied branches of natural science; but there is this wonderful difference between the systems: the standard erected in the system of theology by which to test the actions and faith of men, has stood unmoved against the combined attacks of men of every age, and to-day there is no place to which we may look for a citadel of unfailling principles and imperishable waymarks of truth, as the revealed law of life contained in the Bible. The student of language, of history, of mathematics, and of nature, then, can ill afford to leave untouched that branch of science which treats of the Deity and the highest principles governing in human life, and devote his time and attention wholly to the natural.

What we know in fact of the antiquity and character of man is by history. Through archæology and geology we gather some things from the order and succession of events, but this serves the investigator only as knowledge in a relative sense, not absolute; and the conclusions arrived at by the various searchers after light therefrom, differ so widely that the man or woman who demands facts instead of conjecture and speculation, must receive an answer through other channels.

History is the only means by which we may gather absolute knowledge of the antiquity of the human race, and its transitions and developments, and even this, whether in the realm of sacred, or profane, has in the recital of leading events been attacked in the most vehement manner by many writers in the later ages. It is right and proper, too, for men to inquire and examine. This accords with one of the prime declarations of the standard given.

When the author of our text appeared in the world with an object purporting to be in the interest of "all people," it may well be expected that the mission work subsequently performed would be in keeping with the angelic announcement; and it is but proper to pass upon his life, in the light of the declarations offered, and the supreme accomplishments. Of this great event in the history of the race, Jesus, himself bears the following testimony: "For this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." Could there have been named a higher and more needed work and calling? The world was in ignorance and error, not only with reference to spiritual life, but this physical life and its duties as well.

The value of truth to men and women in this life had previous to this been taught and impressed upon the minds of his followers. He said to them: "If ye abide in me and let my words abide in you, ye shall be my disciples indeed, and you shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."

Of all men, the true devotee of religion should prize the value of a truth, and hold himself ready to receive this and abandon error, not only because it is the road to advancement and right, but for the value of the truth itself to the possessor. The truth makes men free; not error, not ignorance, not superstition, not dogmatism.

No premium, in the instruction of the Savior, is placed upon ignorance and error. The teacher who taught as never man before had spoken, placed his pupils in the attitude of investigators; they were to be watchful and diligent, make use of the gifts and faculties with which they were endowed, "proving all things and holding fast that which is good"; not using the instruction received as a cloak beneath which to screen themselves from further investigation and learning, and thereby imbibe the unholy feeling of intolerance and prejudice when meeting the doctrines and theories of the age, but men of light, reflecting the wisdom of the law of life as the city set upon a hill.

Jesus came into the world to bear witness to the truth. It was a necessary mission to man not only of divine things, but of the history, life, ways, antiquity, and destiny of man. No higher mission could have been unfolded, no more important a study can be placed before any pupil to-day, than the testimony offered.

A witness must be in possession of knowledge in order to testify, and when we find the greatest character in all history, taking the witness stand to give testimony, we should be willing to stop and listen, and it is affirmed in the sacred writings, that upon such an event the decree was applicable: "Hear! O ye Heavens; and give ear, O Earth." And yet as learners of life and its purposes and ways, we often forget to correct what is handed out to us as knowledge, by comparing it with the testimony of the only witness, (to the world given,) who stood in a position to know. We inquire of the beginning of man, and he testifies:

"For the hardness of your hearts Moses wrote you this precept; but from the beginning of the creation, God made them male and female." Did the witness stand in a position to know? The evangelist says: "All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made which was made." The witness was competent to testify then, and could properly speak of what occurred in the beginning.

When we read in the Hebrew, "And God said, Let us make man," the plural form was not simply used in the first person, as has been claimed by writers, for "impressiveness," only, but because of the fact contained in the utterance, for our witness was there; and he could state as he did of his existence; "Before Abraham was I am."

It has been claimed that man is the result of development from a common ancestry, and not a new order in creation, and this assumption casts suspicion upon the origin of the race as testified of in the history.

We reply that there are no facts produced upon the question outside the domain of history. All else is admitted to be simply relative knowledge.

Scientists declare that: "The founding of new forms by the union of different species, even when standing in close relation to each other, is absolutely forbidden by the sentence of sterility which nature pronounces, and enforces upon all hybrid offspring."

In their observations, then, they testify to the correctness of the record found in history, and that far corroborate the account of creation, for it is said: "And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature, after his kind; cattle and creeping things, and beasts of the earth, after their kind; and it was so." Here is the revelation of the edict that enforces sterility.

The law was clearly announced before any discovery of science, and the law is corroborated, not improved upon, nor annulled by the developments of science.

What have been dominated facts of the development theory, turn out to be fancies, where faithfully compared with the full discoveries, until we have the confession of such an eminent observer as Professor Phillips, when examining for definite evidence: "Everywhere we are required by the hypothesis to look somewhere else; which may fairly be interpreted to signify that the hypothesis everywhere fails in the first and most important step. How is it conceivable that the second stage should be everywhere preserved, but the first nowhere?"

Actual developments in archæology corroborate rather than contradict the historical account of man's origin. Among the most ancient of all known human skulls found in Europe a cranial capacity is shown which is stated to be equal to that of modern Europeans. It is said to be, "so ample in its dimensions that it might have contained the brain of a philosopher.

Commenting upon this Professor Huxley declared: "The first traces of the primordial stock whence man has proceeded need no longer be sought by those who entertain any form of the doctrine of progressive development, in the newest tertiaries; but they may be looked for in an epoch more distant from the age of these tertiaries than that is from us." It is found safer for his theories for the evolutionist to get a few thousand years further away. The point from which to begin the ascension to the zenith, man, or the descension to the nadir, the lowest animal, is not yet ascertained.

This leaves the evidence clear. The origin of man, so far as determinable by any facts of science, or otherwise, was in a species and a class by himself; and separated widely from all other creatures which are or that are known ever to have been, contemporary with him. The evidence in the light of discovered truth, then, is confirmatory of the Bible history of the event, and makes science contribute to the truth of revelation, instead of the reverse.

I have not referred to this with the object of dissuading any of you from the study and mastery of either, or any of the sciences, while in the pursuit of knowledge; but rather to caution you, that when in the pursuit of wisdom and knowledge, you do not accept theories and conjecture for facts; and thereby be led away from important truths, which contain a merit within themselves, and which are calculated to enrich you in knowledge and goodness in this present life, and also that to which men are deflected when their departure is made from this world.

But the testimony of the witness, Jesus, does not stop with the creation. He assures us of such an event in the history of the race as the flood: "For it shall be with them as it was in the days which were before the flood; for until the day that Noah entered into the ark, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Was there a flood then?

The witness can not be sustained if we accept the doubt and distrust cast upon the Bible narrative by the would-be wise in "the wisdom of the world," for the small reason that they have not been witnesses.

Upon this question, for years, the geologist interpreted the drifts and deposits formed in Central Asia to be deposits of icebergs, which it was claimed had swept over the Continent; but in the later examinations of these deposits made by Professor Wright and his company, science again reverses its theories and the conclusion is reached that they are in fact tracings of a great flood. The later and better view confirms history and revelation. Is it proper then that we discard any recorded event in biblical history because not comprehended by the philosopher of any past, or the present age? We commend to you the following advice given by the Apostle who was well learned, according to the systems of the world, himself: "Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." The true position to occupy in life is to both watch and pray.

But Jesus, the true witness, is heard upon other features of the record. It may be that the would-be Bible reformers in order to relieve the faith of some in the historical events undertake to exclude the story of Jonah. But the witness who knew, referring to this, makes it a great sign and figure of a part of his own great work; a lesson to the people, had they been honestly watching; hence, "the sign of the prophet Jonas": "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly; so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."

Will it help the skeptic in the belief of the Bible to eliminate the story of the creation, the narrative of the flood, and the history of Jonah, if in so doing we overturn the testimony of Jesus, who was born into the world that he might "testify to the truth"? Is this the wisdom displayed in the so-called higher criticisms of the Bible?

Let us not deceive ourselves; the foundations of the faith in a Redeemer are much more securely laid than this. It is an ill day for students or scholars when they permit the transitory theories of the world to move them away from the testimony and hope of Christ. This last is to stand, when all things else "shall be shaken, that can be shaken."

The world lost much in truth and goodness in the centuries just following that in which Christ and his apostles taught, because of the "falling away" which occurred; men mistaking "a profession of faith," regardless of what the principles were, and the necessity of demonstrating these principles by a godly life in order to attain "pure and undefiled religion," for the truth; when in fact, this departure was but the formulation of the "heresies" which the apostle foretold should be brought in by "grievous wolves, not sparing the flock."

The bringing in of these tares was made possible because of the failure of the disciple to reflect in his life the religious truths he had been placed in possession of; it was not enough that they be made the possessors of the principles of the way of holiness; these things must be reflected in their lives: "Herein is my Father glorified, that you bring forth much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples."

The preparation for duty did not give the learner under this incomparable teacher acceptance; but it was the manner in which he occupied that brought due honor to him, "to whom all honor is due"; and "so," in this way, says Jesus: "Ye shall be my disciples." Do not overlook the fact that without the reflection of the principles of the law of life which they had received, the relationship of a true disciple ceased, and they were as salt that loses "its savor, thenceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and trodden under foot of men."

The members of the class present, giving honor to this occasion, have been by education and training better prepared for the work of life in whatever department they may choose to enter; but the success of each depends upon his accomplishments as he moves out in the busy world to perform his part; and in proportion to the reflection of honest and faithful service in whatever avocation, will be measured the triumph and final success, and which it is hoped may be of such a character as to find a reward of merit, both now and in the time of the final rendition of accounts.

In estimating the importance of the work to be done we must not overlook in the comparison the law of life given to the world by the great witness. Referring to the worth of this, Jesus declares: "I am come that ye may have life and have it more abundantly."

For me to overlook, or reject this, is to lose all; but to gain this and then move out into the conflict of life's battles is to gain all; or as stated by the witness who knew: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you."

But a thought as to how we may manifest in our lives the works of the Lord so that the world may see and glorify God. The world can not well judge, or see, from manifestations in a spiritual way. It takes a person with a mind that is spiritual to discern that which is spiritual. "Except a man be born again he can not see the kingdom."

But the world may see and perceive, from our actions, as we carry out the law of life as it relates to our work and ways in temporal things, and duties and obligations to each other. Hence the necessity of the rule laid down.

"In all things, therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye likewise unto them." "This is the law and the prophets."

Carrying out the principles herein incorporated by dealing with others according to the direction in the law will be reflecting its light. The world may see this and be led to glorify God by reason of the same. This embraces those works known as duty to man. Necessary and essential to his highest interest and good; but it does not embrace or take the place of that parallel work enjoined under the same law, under the appellation of duty to God. The truest and highest success is attained by fulfilling the law in both. May it be that each may so attain and meet with a final approval.

HEALTH AND WEALTH IN THE WORD OF WISDOM.
—PART II.

In the World's Work for May a young widow relates her experience in keeping house for herself and young son on her salary of $600 per year, as a public librarian. As the food bill is of interest to us we quote from it for it purports to show careful management of limited means by an intelligent person. The items are the year's expenditures in their relative order, governed of course by fashion's standard:

Meat $28.75, milk $23.50, eggs $18.00, coffee $13.00, sugar $11.00, vegetables $10.50, bread $8.75, butter $8.50, flour and cereals $7.70, fruit $6.00. The point to note is that the meat bill takes the lead and the grains and fruit trail off at the bottom, while the coffee cost takes fourth place when it has no food value whatever. Do you not see how the Word of Wisdom rule would have benefited brain and bank-book of this struggling young woman? And how many of you are letting the customs of the world dominate your affairs in like manner?

Let us compare the items above with the comparative food values as determined by Uncle Sam in the experimental station, Department of Agriculture, and then note our own Doctrine and Covenants published years before. The figures given represent the energy available in each ten cents' worth of the articles already mentioned but now put in their nutritive order, measured in calories:

Cereals 4.249, sugar 2.920, bread 2.440, vegetables 1.765, butter 1.044, milk .958, meat .820, fruit .776, eggs .471, coffee 0. In connection with this we should notice that the fruit item includes oranges, bananas, and strawberries, but if we include the dried fruits, such as raisins, figs, dates, we strike a ratio of 1.226, or a higher food value than butter. Then nuts have even a higher value; 1.383 calories. Cereal coffee shows only .030 as against cocoa 2.160; coffee and tea score nothing; sugar is fuel only, containing no tissue builder as do the foods proper.

Now how does this compare with the revelation given sometime prior to March, 1833? The Lord counsels us against hot drinks, liquors, and tobacco; flesh-food is permitted, but it pleases him that we use it only in times of winter, cold, or famine, and then "sparingly." All grain is to be the staff of life,—to be depended upon, also the fruit of the vine and that which yieldeth fruit whether above or beneath the ground; also wholesome herbs are for our constitution and nature.

We are told it is a principle with promise for the temporal salvation of even the weakest Saints: if we remember to keep them we shall not only find health, but great treasures of knowledge and the destroying angel who is sweeping off the careless and selfish will pass us by. "One fourth of what we eat keeps us. The rest we keep at the risk of our lives," said crusty old Abernathy, London's most famous doctor. And in this day, as in that, we all eat too much. It is the prevalent sin against the body.

Well, as a broad, general rule, it may be said that the following represents the approximate quantity of food needed by the average person. For breakfast: An apple, raw or baked, or an equal quantity of some other fruit; a saucerful of some good cereal, such as boiled rice with cream; a glass of milk; and two slices of brown bread (graham or rye).

For luncheon: A simple salad, dressed with good olive oil, sugar, and lemon juice; two or three slices of brown bread.

For supper: Soup, a small quantity of fresh meat if necessary, or beans or peas; one or two cooked vegetables; fruit; brown bread.

Any one who tries this plan of diet is likely to find after a few weeks that he needs still less food. In most cases it is advisable to gradually reduce the midday meal until it consists of fruit only, or with a desert of cereal or a few good nuts.

To many people it will seem that the dietary given is too light and that it does not contain enough to sustain the body. Frequently on changing to such a dietary the novice will complain of a sensation of weakness. So does a toper who suddenly stops drinking whisky—and for the same reason. They miss the usual stimulation of heavy foods, but are storing energy nevertheless.

In the above I have quoted liberally from Doctor Patson's worthy articles in the Cleveland Press, which seeks to give its readers timely hints for the general health of the city. If the world is waking up to these principles of welfare, surely our Saints may well pay greater heed to what the Lord revealed to them long ago by way of the high priests assembled in Kirtland. We predict more encouragement for our bishops when our high priests study to present these things in their proper light to our people.

EARNEST WEBER.

COLLINWOOD, Ohio.

(To be continued.)

The secret of a successful sermon, as of Sam Weller's valentine, is in making one "wish there was more." Some preachers are like boys swimming under water. You see them when they dive off the text, and you see them again when they bob up at the "Amen"; but all through the sermon you lose sight of them because they have gone in over their heads. Do not serve your sermons up a second time, cold and stale. Warm them over in the glowing fervor of the imagination and emotions in which they were created. Where there is no (re)vision the people perish.—W. H. Branigan.

Of General Interest

WHAT CHURCH WOULD JESUS JOIN?

How many people have ever stopped to inquire what church Jesus would affiliate with were he on earth? Each separate denomination affects to believe that its creed alone points the true way to salvation, but all claim authority from Jesus. The claim of the Roman Catholics that Jesus founded a church with Saint Peter at its head is denied by all Protestant denominations save the Church of England, which styles itself Catholic but which has been wittily described as neither Protestant nor Catholic; moreover, the claim rests rather upon the fact that the apostles organized the Christian Church after the crucifixion than authentic record of any organization formed by the Savior. Certainly creeds and dogmas were evolved after the martyrdom of Jesus.

But underlying the question of what church Jesus would join if he were on earth is a query of deeper and more vital moment. Do the churches of to-day stand for the spirit and purpose of the founder of Christianity? What denomination would receive and welcome him if he came preaching in the fields and denouncing the pride, selfishness, and injustice of mankind, saying: "Blessed are the poor in spirit for they shall inherit the kingdom of heaven." Instead of being received as a messenger of glad tidings would he not more likely be regarded as a disturber of the congregation, a teacher of heresy, and a stirrer up of wrath and sedition? That evidently is the view of Reverend Charles A. Eaton, of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York City. In a recent sermon Doctor Eaton asked: "What church would Jesus join if he were in New York?" This is the way he answered himself:

"If Jesus came here to New York, which church would he join? I'm afraid some of the churches wouldn't let him in. He wouldn't be orthodox, and he would be sure to be too broad. He might prefer going out on a street-corner and talking to a newsboy or a bartender or a pickpocket to speaking from the pulpit of one of our fine edifices. He'd be a most difficult member to get along with in any church, for he'd be too unconventional.

"We have elevated our rituals to a place of first importance. Even in the Baptist Church, which is supposed to be the freest, a hymn misplaced creates quite a flutter. I do not believe, if Jesus came to New York, that he would care to join any of our churches. He would say, 'My church consists of all.'"

Christ comforted the poor and turned not from the publican and the Magdalen. He denounced sin but preached charity and forgiveness for the sinner. To the scarlet woman he said: "Go and sin no more." He dispersed the mob who came to stone the woman caught in adultery by saying: "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone." He rebuked the pride of the Pharisees and told the rich man that he could earn eternal life by selling all his possessions and giving the proceeds to the poor. He lifted his voice against sectarian strife. No sectary found in him a partisan or advocate. He preached the simple philosophy of the Golden Rule. To believe in him, he baptized and observe that rule and the ten commandments was all the creed he ever enunciated. All the vast theological edifices erected since he was nailed to the cross have been the handiwork of men, who have made fashions and patterns of piety unknown to those who heard him speak and were charged to deliver his message to all the world.

Is his message being delivered, either in the letter or the spirit in which it was uttered, by the churches to-day? The success or failure of Christianity is not the issue involved. The question is, do the churches of the present conform either in practice or precept to the teaching of the Master whose name they bear and whose work they profess to be performing?

Apparently the New York clergyman is more than doubtful on the point. He is doubtful even if Jesus could find a seat in some of the edifices dedicated to his worship. He thinks it quite likely that if Christ were on earth he would be found preaching on street-corners that salvation is free, and that the key to heaven is not in either ecclesiastical or sectarian hands. "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's," "Be just and fear not," said he. Has not Cæsar been installed in the pulpit and the self-righteousness of the Pharisee exalted above brotherly love, charity, and true piety? Do the multitude of jarring sects of to-day represent the unity of faith and fraternal spirit the Savior taught? What authority for them is there in the Sermon on the Mount and the Parable of the Prodigal Son? Has the rule of conduct prescribed by Jesus been amended till it has lost vitality and ceased to command respect and obedience?—Oakland Tribune, May 23, 1909.

THE "THREE NEPHITES."

Members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are always on the lookout for evidence of the divine origin of the Book of Mormon. This interest led me to mark many passages in Irving's Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus, some of which seem to be worthy of more than a mere passing notice.

Columbus, though steeped in the superstitions of his day, was a very humble man. Often, while sailing abroad, he would spend a whole night in prayer and supplication. He felt that he was doing God's will in making these voyages of discovery; and no doubt, it was this feeling which caused him to say to his officers and men, when implored to return, and even threatened with death, "Sail on—sail on!" Irving says—(page 17).¹ "He attributes his early and irresistible inclination for the sea, and his passion for geographical studies, to an impulse from deity, preparing him for the high decrees he was chosen to accomplish." And when he came before the king of Spain asking for royal and financial support; "he unfolded his plan with eloquence and zeal; for he felt himself, as he afterwards declared, kindled as with a fire from on high, and considered himself the chosen agent by heaven to accomplish its grand designs" (page 64). This is very significant when compared with the following: "And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God that it came down and wrought upon the man, and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren who were in the promised land" (1 Nephi 13: 12).

By far the most interesting paragraph in the whole volume is found beginning on page 329, which I will give after quoting a few passages from the Book of Mormon. I have always been deeply interested in the account of the "Three Nephites," and have often wondered if there were not on record somewhere an account of their having been seen by some one outside of the church. I am almost convinced that Irving has made just such a record.

Turning now to 3 Nephi, 28th chapter, we read:

"And it came to pass when Jesus had said these words, he spake unto his disciples, one by one, saying unto them, What is it that ye desire of me, after that I am gone to the Father?"

¹All quotations from Irving in this article will be from the works of Washington Irving, vol. 6. The Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus, published in New York, by Peter Fenlon Collier, 1897.

"And they all spake, save it were three, We desire that after we have lived unto the age of man, that our ministry, wherein thou hast called us, may have an end, that we may speedily come unto thee in thy kingdom.

"And he said unto them, Blessed are ye because ye desired this thing of me: therefore after ye are seventy and two years old, ye shall come unto me in my kingdom, and with me ye shall find rest.

"And when he had spoken unto them, he turned himself unto the three, and said unto them, What will ye that I should do unto you, when I am gone unto the Father?

"And they sorrowed in their hearts, for they durst not speak unto him the things which they desired.

"And he said unto them, Behold, I know your thoughts, and ye have desired the thing which John, my beloved, who was with me in my ministry before that I was lifted up by the Jews, desired of me.

"Therefore more blessed are ye, for ye shall never taste of death, but ye shall live to behold all the doings of the Father unto the children of men, even until all things shall be fulfilled according to the will of the Father, when I shall come again in my glory with the powers of heaven.

". . . For ye have desired that ye might bring souls unto me while the world shall stand. . . .

"Behold I was about to write the names of those who were never to taste of death; but the Lord forbade; therefore I write them not, for they are hidden from the world.

"But behold I have seen them, and they have ministered unto me. And behold they will be among the Gentiles, and the Gentiles knoweth them not."

The Three Disciples are mentioned in several other places by Mormon, and Moroni says, (Mormon 8:10, 11) that he saw them, and they ministered unto him. Here we have evidence that they lived and labored among the people several hundred years after the great promise was made to them; and we believe they are still living and performing the mission given them by Jesus Christ.

I will now give the above mentioned paragraph from Irving. It is in the account of Columbus' second voyage of discovery to America. He was cruising along the coast of Cuba, when one day he anchored near a beautiful palm grove:

"Here a party was sent on shore for wood and water; and they found two living springs in the midst of the grove. While they were employed in cutting wood and filling their water casks, an archer strayed into the forest with his cross-bow in search of game, but soon returned, flying with great terror, and calling loudly upon his companions for aid. He declared that he had not proceeded far, when he suddenly espied through an opening glade, a man in a long white dress so like a friar of the order of Saint Mary of mercy, that at first sight he took him for the chaplain of the admiral. Two others followed in white tunics reaching to their knees, and the three were of as fair complexions as Europeans. Behind these appeared many more, to the number of thirty, armed with clubs and lances. They made no signs of hostility, but remained quiet; the man in the long white dress alone advancing to accost him. But he was so alarmed by their number that he had fled instantly to seek the aid of his companions. The latter, however, were so daunted by the reported number of armed natives, that they had not courage to seek them nor await their coming, but hurried with all speed to the ships."

It is stated that Columbus sent two different expeditions in search of the three white men and their followers, but both returned unsuccessful. Irving apologizes for the appearance of this item in his record, and states that, since no tribe of Indians was ever discovered in Cuba who wore clothing, the matter probably arose in either error or falsehood.

No apology is needed, however, by the Latter Day Saints. The account given by the archer portrays conditions just as they would naturally be with the "Three Disciples." They lived among the people when the vision recorded in 1 Nephi was taught. They were, of course, looking forward to its fulfillment. They were to bring souls to Christ till he should come again, and had probably been busy gathering bands of followers all over the country. They, of course, taught their followers to wear clothing and to live as much of the gospel as they could. They naturally would have to arm themselves against their savage neighbors.

Columbus and his sailors were looked upon by the natives as visitors from heaven, and their appearance among them was heralded all over the country. Their movements were watched closely from the shores, since whenever they landed they found themselves not unexpected. It does not take much imagination to see the "disciples" and one of their bands following the movements of the ships from the trees or mountains, awaiting a favorable opportunity to make themselves known. In fact, there is nothing in the report of the archer which is in the least at variance with what might be expected from our knowledge of the Book of Mormon. As I said before, I am almost convinced that this is the record I have been looking for.—E. D. Partridge in Improvement Era, June, 1909.

Memories.

In a bright and sunny land, where my heart doth love to roam,
In a merry, wooded country, is a place that we called home;
There we played and dwelt together, through the happy,
thoughtless day,
And our hearts were free from trouble, as we wandered on our way.
Fair hopes were beaming brightly, in those days of early childhood,
As we gayly played about, o'er the fields and through the wild-wood;
Joys were sweet, but youth is fleeting, so our school-days swept along,
And when youth just seemed the brightest, came a turning in the song.
It was in the early springtime, on a chill and bleak March morning,
And the March winds sad were sighing, but they brought to us no warning;
'Twas before the break of day, and our baby girl aged four,
(All were sleeping) when she wakened, and her voice called o'er and o'er,
And her words were sounding strangely, "Mother, bring to me a light";
But no mother-voice responded, through the shades of dreary night.
Then our father rose up quickly, fearing all was not quite right,
Struck a match, but, oh, how dreadful! was that it brought to light.

Mother's hands were folded gently, for her work on earth was done,
 And her cheek turned pale as marble; for her spirit now had gone.
 Could it be that she was lying, motionless, upon her bed?
 It was so, while we were sleeping, mother dear was lying dead.
 We were wakened from our slumbers, from our dreams of pleasure bright, Saw our father standing by us, and his face so pale and white.
 "Now, be brave, be good, brave daughters," were the words our father said;
 'though he never finished telling, yet we knew that she was dead.
 Close we gathered round her bedside, each with heavily-stricken hearts,
 Pressed her chilly hands in ours, ah! we knew we must now part.
 Kind friends entered, drew us from her, spoke in sympathetic tone,
 Laid her in a narrow coffin, while the sorrow filled our home.
 It was sad, I'll not continue, but the days dragged into years;
 Now more humble our condition, now more bitter are our tears.
 Birds to-night are singing round me, and the forests clothed with green,
 Summer smiles, and wild flowers bloom, but I can not hide the scene.
 For another looms before me; it is of a shattered home;
 Brothers, sisters, widely scattered, some in distant lands to roam.
 Earthly hopes may fade and wither, earthly joys grow less and less;
 Savior, leave us hope of heaven, grant the weary ones to bless.
 Care we naught for earthly grandeur, such as many seem to prize,
 But we look beyond the present, raise our hopes to Paradise;
 There we want to meet our mother, and the dear ones gone before;
 Oh! God, guide us safely onward, to that happy, radiant shore.

Letter Department

LOWER LAKE, May 26, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have just read with much attention and profit the letter of Bro. and Sr. McCullough in issue of May 19. It impressed me with the thought that this experience was a timely warning to the Saints, and to those who may be honestly seeking the truth. Just such experiences have been predicted in Holy Scriptures for these latter days! So it behooves us all to be constantly on our guard. It is now nearly three years since I had the great happiness to enter the fold of the Lord, and am still very verdant, but I should never accept any doctrine or teaching, no matter how well clothed in the guise of truth, until I had written to our venerable prophet, and received his opinion and advice. He has been placed at the head of the church—he is the eye of the great body of Saints; then should he err, the members will not be accountable if they should be in error. The only safe road is to follow where the prophet, revelator, and seer shall lead.

I am truly sorry for those who honestly and trustingly became the dupes of a Satanic band of deceivers. I hope that they may profit by their bitter experience, and,—not like many, abandon all hope, but seek until they find the true fold of Christ, is my prayer.

Yours in the true faith,
 (MRS. EDWARD F.) MARIE JULIE T. ADAMSON.

Concerning Individual Communion Cups.

Are individual glasses necessary in the administration of the sacrament? In regard to this I should like to say a few words. I see nothing to warrant the assertion that all the disciples drank out of the same cup. Mark 14: 22, 23: "And as they did eat, Jesus took bread, and blessed, and break it, and gave it to them, and said, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it."

Luke 22: 17: "And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among yourselves." Can any one truthfully say this division was simply that each one took a drink of the contents of the cup, or that it was divided into individual cups as they sat at meat? Book of Mormon, book of Nephi (large edition), chapter 8, verse 29: "And it came to pass that when he had said these words, he commanded his disciples that they should take of the wine of the cup [not the cup but the wine of the cup], and drink of it, and that they should also give unto the multitude, that they might drink of it, [the wine]. And it came to pass that they did so, and did drink of it [the wine], and were filled [seemingly more than a sip]; and they gave unto the multitude [the wine, not the cup], and they did drink, and they were filled."

Chapter 9, verse 40: "And when they had given unto the multitude, he also gave them wine to drink, and commanded them that they should give unto the multitude." No mention made here whether it was with one or a dozen cups. Moroni, chapter 5, verse 2: "Behold, they took the cup, and said," etc. This instance only verifies the idea that they took the receptacle, which held the wine and prayed over it for God's blessing, not necessarily that there was only one serving cup.

One writer says, "So far as the commandment in the Book of Mormon is concerned there is nothing to warrant the idea that individual cups are necessary." Probably so, but on the other hand we also state that there is nothing that can be construed to mean that there was only one cup used in the serving of the disciples or the multitude, but that the story as given would indicate more than one cup. The writer also states that "cleanliness is said to be next to godliness, and no person against whom these objections would lie (i. e., bad teeth, bad breath, tobacco stained lips and mustaches, and unwashed face and hands, resulting in imparting real or imaginary repulsiveness to the cup as it passes from one to another in the congregation) should partake of the sacrament, even from an individual cup among his fellows." I can hardly believe that this would be just; for if a man had a bad tooth he would be excluded from church privileges. If he had a bad breath from catarrhal conditions of the mucous membrane of the respiratory or alimentary tracts, he must be excluded from partaking of the sacrament.

If he, through circumstances in nature, contract a cancer of the stomach or any other portion of his anatomy resulting in a bad breath, he must be excluded, however innocent or good he may be. Concerning the "using of tobacco," which is a dirty, filthy habit, however, there is no law that I know of by which the authorities have the right to withhold the sacrament from a person, simply because he uses tobacco. If there is such a law, I would like to know where it is to be found. Hair on the face, and especially on the upper lip, ought to be enough to exclude one person from drinking after another. Hair is the greatest source of contamination that we know of at the present time. Personally, I have taken cultures from the beard of what was supposed and had every appearance of being a most scrupulously clean young man, and found that appearances counted for nothing, as I found the bacillus pyocyaneus, or microbe of blue pus, a most contagious bacillus, in his beard.

We should not jump at conclusions simply because we have preconceived ideas of what should be. Nor should we harshly criticize people, when, for the sake of cleanliness, individual communion service is used; nor impugn their motives by such language as the following: "It is but the way of ultra fastidious people of wealthy congregations, a conforming to the personal exclusiveness of those who have but little in common with the common people who in the ancient world and also in the modern world heard the gospel gladly." There are times when we give expression to thoughts which comprehend more than we intended. I consider the above such. Some see nothing but the clean healthy mouths of individuals partaking of the sacrament. I have not been so fortunate in my associations with the church. Let the individual who wants but one glass place himself in some of the places that I have occupied, and he would have a reversal of opinion. One instance comes to mind of an individual who was an inveterate smoker. He had an epithelioma (contagious, smoker's cancer) which took in the greater portion of the lower lip. It was undressed and showed excoriations from which the blood and serum oozed. Imagine this man sitting next to or in front of you, and sipping out of the glass before it reached you. Would you feel like partaking? The thought is sufficient to cause a reversal of your stomach contents, without the actual experience. And yet he was a good Saint morally, and probably spiritually; so far as external observance and examination could determine the sacrament could not be withheld from him.

Again, a sister has actinomyces of the jaw (ray fungus); infectious. She being a good sister, sacrament could not be withheld from her, yet danger lurked in the cup for others. Again, a sister has salivation (excessive secretion of saliva). She could not take a drink from a cup without spitting in it, but, a good sister, nothing to exclude her from partaking of the sacrament; and, too, she always occupied the front seat, hence contaminating the cup from the start. True the officers tried to turn the cup so that the next participants would not have their mouths come in direct contact with that particular portion of the glass, but its particular location was lost sight of before many Saints had partaken.

A brother has tuberculosis of the throat (highly contagious); good brother otherwise. You could not forbid him the sacrament. Bad breaths are as multitudinous as the people, and unless a person's olfactory apparatus is horribly inactive you can get a whiff of the decayed ingredients of meals untold from the edge of the cup as you partake from the common mouthpiece.

Why do we forbid spitting in public places, on sidewalks, in street-cars, etc.? Simply because it is one of the richest sources of disease inoculation that is known. The same applies to the common communion glass. Much more might be said along this line, but I think sufficient has been said.

One reason why I consider the argument of some who oppose the use of individual cups to be ambiguous is the fact, that they say it means one glass or cup, and yet will sanction at least half a dozen cups, for such branches as St. Louis, Lamoni, and Independence.

Individual communion service can be obtained with eighty glasses to the tray, of one teaspoonful each, (or more if required,) which simply means that the priest serving eighty members will carry ten ounces of wine at a time, and in such branches as St. Louis, Lamoni, and Independence, few such trays would serve every member. Possibly no priest serves more than that number (eighty) at the present time.

"Cleanliness is said to be next to godliness." Is this an advance in cleanliness? If so the individual sacrament service makes us more godly, less liable to diseases such as can be contracted in this way,—tuberculosis, cancer, syphilis, smallpox, scabies, and myriads of like ills, and aside from the disease contracting element, the mind is easier, and a more concentrated service can be rendered by having an undivided mind. Let us be clean at all costs.

LAMONI, Iowa, May 29, 1909.

Dear Herald: I make the following extracts from a letter written May 1 by Bro. Peter Muceus, missionary in Norway. They should be interesting to all: "The work is moving onward in the city of Kragero, where I am now laboring. There has been an average attendance of nearly two hundred people, also a fine interest manifested. I have enjoyed a great degree of the Holy Spirit, and have felt happy in thus being favored by our heavenly Father. I have baptized only three here, but others are near the kingdom. There being no one to do ministry work at other points, therefore little is being accomplished. The local force can not do much toward advancement among outsiders. However, we are striving to do the best we can. . . . My wife would like very much to have our children educated in Joseph's land. To this I have no objections, but am afraid the church will keep me here. Some one must take my place if I go, because I would not leave the work to care for itself. My only wish is to do the Lord's will, for I have dedicated my life to his service and I leave the future to him and his direction. . . . Can you give me information as to when the work was first introduced into Norway, in the time before the Reorganized Church began? I am to write an article for the Journal of this city and yet have no Times and Seasons or Millennial Stars to consult their history of the past."

Bro. Muceus has been in Norway eight or nine years. He married an American girl and their four children were born in Norway. Bro. Muceus established a paper called Sandhedens Banner (Truth's Banner), and a number of Scandinavian Saints in America subscribed for it. Many others can do so if they are mindful to help the cause of truth along. Several years ago Bro. Muceus was able to publish the Book of Mormon in the Norwegian language, because of large gifts from Sr. Sarah Hayer and Bro. O. A. Olsen, of Lamoni, and other smaller amounts, and it has been a great help to the cause. During several years the writer of this letter has collected annual subscriptions and gifts to help sustain the Banner, this last February sending $41.50, and probably some others in America have sent subscriptions and gifts. Old Saints who can read Norwegian like to have it, and the younger generation can well afford (many of them) to send a subscription and let the paper go to some one in Norway who would like to have it to read regularly. Anything you can do will not only be a help financially, but also an encouragement to the lone workers in that far-away land. I have recently sent American newspapers. Bro. Muceus says that no other has sent such; therefore if any will send magazines or papers they will be welcomed by Bro. and Sr. Muceus, and letters also. Address is Porsgrund, Norway, no street number necessary.

From interest in the cause I write the foregoing, also give the quotations from Bro. Muceus' letter.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. STEBBINS.

WOODWARD, Oklahoma, May 31, 1909.

Dear Herald: I feel it my duty, and I have been advised by an officer of the church to warn the Saints against one John Sutherland whose present address is Pawnee Station, Bourbon County, Kansas. He claims to be a Latter Day saint, but he has left a very bad record here in Oklahoma, where he formerly resided for some years. I first met him about eighteen months ago, and supposing him to be a brother, I allowed him to get in debt to me several dollars; he agreed to pay in a short time. The full amount has been due for over a year. Since he left here I have written to him four times, asking him to make a payment upon the amount due, but he has ignored each letter. Two of these letters were registered, and the return of the register receipts proved that he received them. He has avoided paying his obligations to others also, notwithstanding he has disposed of his farm of one hundred and sixty acres, and several head of stock. He is known here to be shiftless, indolent, and unreliable.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

LUTHER, Montana, May 22, 1909.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I last wrote to your columns, but I feel we ought to try and do a little, if no more. Being isolated makes so much difference, especially with us weak ones. I know the Lord has a work for all of us, whether small or great.

We would like to sell what little we have here and go where we could be with the Saints. I know it would strengthen us, but I do not know if it would be the Lord's will for us to leave this part, for he may have a work for us to do here.

Will some of you please tell us where to send money for the church; to Bro. Kelley or to Thomas Reese? We want to send a little. I wish we had a lot to help the Master's work along with, but it seems like we can not now. You know the Lord recognized the widow's mite. It seems like every little we do pay in is never missed. We have had a pretty bad winter here. The people have about got their crops out, but nothing seems to grow to do any good. I do hope we will not have a dry season this year, like last. That is about all the people have to depend on in this country. We have a little out, but I trust to a higher power than man for what we get.

True Saints, one and all please pray for us that we may continue firm to the end.

Your sister in bonds,

GRACE FULLERTON.

(Bro. Thomas Reese is Bishop's agent and offerings may be sent to him.—EDITORS.)

CENTRAL, Illinois, May 30, 1909.

Editors Herald: I think the readers of the HERALD would like to hear how this place is getting along. Brn. Plumb and Moore came here last week, 18th of May, and left on the 26th. They had the pleasure of adding two more to the church and kingdom of God. They would have added more if they had stayed another week with us. I will look for them back in July to stay two weeks with us. I will look for Brn. Daly and Fields soon, with their tent.

I am glad we are having prayer-meetings every Saturday night and I ask the prayers of the Saints for all. We realize there is no other way given under heaven or among men whereby we may be saved. We ask the prayers of the Saints that we may be faithful in this work which we represent. I think there can be great good accomplished in this community.

I am your brother in the one faith,

L. L. GOTT.

POLLOCK, Missouri, May 24, 1909.

Dear Herald: Enjoying the many letters you contain from week to week I will try to send my mite. I have been from home the most of the time since February 11 until recently. Was in Montana on business, spending most of the time in Bozeman. While there I visited the Reese Creek Saints, worshiped with them one Sunday, Bro. Hills being the speaker. He preached a discourse that was uplifting and educational and well received by both Saint and sinner.

I visited at the homes of Brn. Zahn Reese, Wells, also Thomas Reese. Had some enjoyable chats with those brethren, that lessened the homesickness to a degree, but the welcome day came at last for me to start home, where I arrived in time to fill my appointment the second Sunday in May. It was at the union church west of my home where Bro. Macrae held a meeting last winter and organized a union Sunday-school, which uses our quarterlies. I pray the Father will bless it to be a help to bring some to a knowledge of the truth.

A few days ago I had a dream, and as I seldom dream I will relate it, hoping some one will tell me the meaning of it: I dreamed I was in a place I had never seen before, an old-fashioned house. There was a company of soldiers coming, I understood, to persecute me. Some one wanted me to run, but I did not, and was presently surrounded by a crowd. Two women had books pretending to read the bad things the church had done, but did not open the books, which looked like the Book of Mormon. I told them it was not fair to read that way, to open the books and read from them. They then took me to another room where they had fishhooks fixed on short lines all running to one main line. There were a dozen or more of the hooks which they would fasten in my head, pull the main line, which would tear my head, causing blood to flow. The soldiers left (or rather they seemed like home guards) and I preached to the other people with such grand liberty, when some one said the soldiers were coming. I had gained the sympathy of the ones I was preaching to and they wanted me to run for safety. I knew they were going to torture me, but I told them I would not run; that Joseph and Hyrum and others had died for the faith and I would if necessary. I then awoke, filled with the Spirit.

If any one can tell me what it means I would like to hear from them.

F. M. BURCH.

HULL, Nebraska, May 16, 1909.

Editors Herald: My wife and I are among the many isolated ones. I was baptized February 28, 1907, having never belonged to any church, but for two or three years had been thinking that I had ought to do better and belong to some church, there being no church denomination here but the Methodist. I thought I would rather take my chances out of the church than join them; so I prayed that God might spare my life until I might have a chance to unite with a church that would be accepted of him.

When Elder Morgan came and preached a sermon or two, I believed he represented the church which I had been praying for, so I united with it. My wife, being a Baptist, thought her church was all right, so would not be baptized when I was, but eight days later went to the water and was baptized. We have only had the privilege of hearing three sermons since Elder Morgan left. C. W. Prettyman visited us and stayed a few days, preaching three times; but we only heard two of them. Bro. and Sr. William Campbell live about four miles from us, but we seldom see each other.

We live in Wyoming, Laramie County, half a mile from the Nebraska line. A new law came into effect the first of May that a person can take a homestead of three hundred and twenty acres of land. There is lots of good land here that can be taken yet, that is level enough to farm and is a good, productive soil. I think a great many that are living on rented farms can better their condition by taking advantage of this new law.

My wife has been suffering from tuberculosis for the last year. She is in bed at present and has been for almost four months; not because she could not be up, but we thought that fresh air and sunshine, egg and milk diet were the best for her. She gained fast for two months, and some the third month, but the last few days she is on the standstill. She thinks if she was administered to she would get well. She requests the prayers of the Saints that she might have faith in God that if it be his will she might be restored to health.

Your brother in Christian bonds,
CHARLIE A. CRATON.

SYKESTON, North Dakota, May 16, 1909.

Editors Herald: As we do not see many letters in the HERALD from North Dakota, you may think the Lord has forsaken us. There are some good Saints in Dakota, only we are scattered like sheep on the mountains. Most of us are isolated, but through the noble efforts of the missionaries we are able to keep the campfires blazing. If it had not been for the church papers and missionaries visiting me, I would have given up the fight. Still I knew the gospel was true because I had seen the gifts manifested on my own behalf and other, and by healing, dreams, and visions.

I rejoice in the gospel, knowing it is the power of God unto salvation. I sometimes feel sad to hear apparently good honest Christians tell of their belief in God and the Bible; to say God is unchangeable and then say he has not spoken to man for nineteen hundred years; and that they enjoy the Holy Spirit, but deny the power of it.

Last August my wife died, leaving an infant one day old, whose spirit took its flight five days later. I have five children left. I did not know what real trouble was till then, being parted with earth's best friend and left with five motherless children. Only those who have passed through like experience know what I suffered. My wife not being a member of the church troubled me more, but God comforted me through a dream. I was traveling with my little boy two years old on my arm, and saw several small buildings filled with filth of all descriptions. We came to another house of fair size, went in, and everything was neat and clean. I saw wife at work, dressed like a servant girl, and she appeared to be contented. I said, this is not a good place to be, and she answered that it was not so bad. Same question was asked by my boy and she made the same reply. This comforted me to know she was not getting the worst punishment. The small filthy houses I understood were for the more wicked people. Her being at work represented she was not enjoying the rest of the pure in heart.

Pray for me that I may overcome my weakness and raise my children in the right way and receive a crown of righteousness.

Your brother in Christ,
M. RASMUSSEN.

JACKSON COUNTY, West Virginia.

Dear Herald: We take the HERALD, and it does me good to read the letters from the dear Saints. We have no elder to preach for us.

I am the mother of four boys, the oldest being twelve years of age. Dear Saints, pray for them that they may grow up and be useful in the work. My husband and I are in the Saints' church. I have belonged for about sixteen years and am not tired.

I will close, asking the prayers of God's people.

MRS. BELZORA BARR.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, May 9, 1909.

Dear Herald: I wish to renew my subscription for the dear old HERALD, as my time is out. It is a source of great pleasure to me to read its columns and also affords me comfort and strength.

I am glad to know that God still continues to reveal himself to his people; if ever there was a time it was needed, it is now.

We were glad to learn of Bro. J. F. Curtis' advancement to the apostleship. He labored hard in this district against very great obstacles. I believe we are living in the most eventful period of the world's history. I can see by things occurring around us the hand of prophecy being fulfilled continually. Commercialism is rampant and is growing each year to such an extent that every avenue of society seems to be affected; our schools of every kind, our great mass of manual laborers, our secret orders and our churches.

I hope and pray this year may be an epoch in the history of our church noted for its growth numerically and spiritually. I feel very unworthy when I stop and think of how far short I often fall in doing my duty, but am still determined to struggle on, trusting in the Lord for a final reward in his kingdom.

May the Lord hasten his work and give us grace to the end.

Your brother in bonds,
C. A. LAYTON.

225 I Street.

MANCHESTER, England, May 19, 1909.

Dear Herald: I am just writing a few lines for my first letter, and I hope it may not be the last that I shall write. I am a young brother, sixteen years of age, wishing to do my share in working for the Master. I feel proud to be able to say that I am a member of his church and hope to be able to obey the teachings of the same.

I have recently gone through an operation which I am thankful to say was successful. My parents have always taught me to go to God with our troubles, so I put the matter in the hands of the Lord (who never fails his people if they go to him in faith believing), trusting that he would guide the doctor's hands. I did not feel at all afraid as they administered the chloroform to me. I knew I was in the Lord's hands. During the time that I remained in the hospital I learned how much I loved my church and Sunday-school. I gradually got better and stronger and it is now nine weeks since I went under my operation and I am almost restored to full health and strength.

This proves all the more to me that God is very good and merciful and gives me a greater desire to serve him. I am hoping to serve him better in the future than in the past. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I might grow up a credit to the work and a worker for the Master. I should be very glad to hear from any of the Saints.

Your brother in Christ,
HENRY GREENWOOD.

LUTHER, Montana, May 17, 1909.

Editors Herald: I will write a few lines to your columns. I am one of the isolated Saints, but I feel that if we strive to live right that we will not be isolated from the Lord's Spirit. The Lord is merciful and kind to all. I am glad that I accepted the gospel, as it reads in the scripture that Satan is ever on the alert seeking whom he may devour. I desire the prayers of the Saints that I may not fall by the wayside. I would be pleased to hear the gospel preached again. May God help us to do our part is my prayer.

Your sister in the one faith,
ROSA SCHUYLER.

DEAN, Iowa, May 23, 1909.

Dear Editors: I am so glad that I accepted this blessed faith. I joined the church when a boy, but I left the work and listened to Satan and his temptations for a period of years, but I have got back to stay, and I ask the prayers of all the Saints. May God bless you all is my prayer.

I want to say a few words more; a while back the influence of God's Spirit rested on me to give a neighbor of mine a warning and it was this, "Don't fight My word any longer." I had a dream a few nights ago and I saw the great feast, also Jesus Christ, and these were the words that were spoken, "I am about to step on my ark of safety." Dear Saints, I was filled with the Spirit and felt to thank my God for the blessings I had received. It was so grand and glorious to look upon. In the feast I saw a great gathering and oh, they were so happy.

May God bless all the Saints all over this land, and I ask the prayers of all the Saints for my wife. She is not yet a member of this glorious faith. Pray for her that she will soon become one of us and be saved with the blest.

In gospel bonds,

ETHAN IRA MULLIN.

SASKATOON, Saskatchewan, Canada, May 22, 1909.

Dear Herald: I seem to be a long way from home. The surroundings and conditions are quite different. Still I am upon the earth and am glad that while here there may still be an opportunity afforded me for doing something toward the establishing of the kingdom of God on the earth. If there is plenty of work of that kind that will bring results I will try and forget the mountains, orchards, and the ocean of the East, and love the almost boundless plains with the wind and dust of the great two hundred and seventy-five thousand miles of the Saskatchewan District.

Two or three days in a new country is not sufficient time to enable one to give a correct estimate of its greatness or goodness. The Saints are the same here as elsewhere, that is, the few whom I have met, and that saying means a good deal. Nevertheless, it is quite natural that my thoughts go back toward the rising of the sun, to the spots in Nova Scotia, Maine, and the Massachusetts districts, where within the last year I have enjoyed much that comes into the life of a traveling missionary. This last winter and spring I have been blessed by the Spirit as well as the communion of Saints at Haverhill, Little Compton, Fall River, Dennisport, Attleboro, Brockton, Providence, and my home in the Boston Branch, and later at Arthur and Toronto in Ontario. I could write a letter of some length concerning each place, which, if giving justice to conditions, would prove interesting and encouraging. There is a lot of sterling worth in all those places, and I wish here to acknowledge the kind and fraternal welcome that I received among those who of many years acquaintance have sealed with ties of tenderness and strength the bonds of Christian friendship. Among which, if I may have any preference, I may be forgiven if I should say that it is for the people who know me best, the Boston Branch.

However, I expect before long to know the Saints of this section and to feel the same toward them when I leave, especially if my stay with them shall cover any great length of time. Here I might say that the names J. L. Mortimer and Alvin Knisley and others stand for that which is worthy of imitation.

The general event looked forward to now is the reunion at Saskatoon beginning July 14, at which time a district organization is to be effected. Apostle R. C. Russell and others of the ministry will be in attendance. Let the membership throughout the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan make a strenuous effort to be present. There is no greater cause than this to make sacrifices for in the world. Indeed, it will be a cause of much joy in the future to feel that in this life we did all we could for its advancement.

This is a growing country. May the church keep pace with its development. Who knows what the result will be? We will be glad to hear from isolated Saints as well as from others in this matter. We may be able to help you in some way.

My address for a month or two will be Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada. Just a word to all the Saints, don't let your subscriptions for church publications run out, and to those who are trying to live without them, do not do it. There is too much in them from week to week that is too good to miss.

Hoping this indeed may be the year of especial activity, I remain,

Yours in the gospel bonds,

H. J. DAVISON.

Editors Herald: Soon after I became connected with the Reorganization my parents sent me to the Pacific Methodist College, in Solano County, about sixty miles from home. It soon became known that I was a Latter Day Saint, but by daily walk and conversation I gained the respect of teachers and pupils.

Soon afterward Elder E. C. Brand honored me with a call. We prevailed on the president of the college, Doctor Lucky, to allow Elder Brand to occupy the college hall. He reluctantly promised to be present. The hall was fairly well filled. About the time for the opening of the meeting Doctor Lucky softly stepped inside and took a seat near the door; at the conclusion of the sermon he quietly glided out and disappeared. One young man was convinced of the truth of the restored gospel.

I applied myself so closely to my studies, the strain was too great for me. I requested Doctor Lucky to allow me a couple of weeks' absence that I might recuperate. I resolved to go to Sacramento City, about twenty-five miles from the college. There I would spend the time with Bro. and Sr. John Neal, at that time good, faithful Saints; but during the Dykes' trouble, they followed off and finally drifted into spiritualism.

As there was no conveyance the alternative was to walk, but that did not deter me. I was young and a good walker. Early one morning I started. I was fresh and walked at a rapid pace, but before I had gone one third the distance my feet became badly blistered. I removed my shoes and bathed my blistered feet in a small stream. Replacing my shoes I slowly plodded on. I repeatedly glanced behind hoping to see a conveyance, but for miles I could see only the dreary road. I began to despair, as I tried to hobble along. At last I was rewarded by seeing dust in the distance, which proved to be a man in a buggy coming at a rapid pace. My heart throbbed with joy. I begged him to let me ride. "Jump right in," he said, and I rode all the way to Sacramento City. I soon found my way to Bro. and Sr. Neal's home where I was made thrice welcome.

Two or three days after I was taken dangerously ill. A high fever set in, and quantities of bloody matter passed from me. Although death was near, Bro. Neal came to my room and said, "Brother, you must have help immediately. What shall we do, go for a doctor or get an elder?" I said, "I want an elder." He went at once and soon after old Father Fales was at my bedside. He felt of my head, arms, and chest, and said, "You have a very high fever, but never mind, you will soon be well." He then administered to me. He then placed his hands on my head and chest and said, "The fever is all gone." It was true. I was healed instantly. I arose from my bed and in a few days was able to return to the college and resume my studies.

The male students organized a debating club, known as the Ulatus Literary Society. Every Friday night we assembled in a hall for the purpose of discussing questions. Dues were collected and expended for books. We soon accumulated quite a library. Our little debates were private. Once every quarter the president selected two members as chief disputants; each of these selected a colleague to debate in public, and on such occasions invitations were extended to all. In order to accommodate the large crowds we were allowed to occupy the college hall. Imagine my consternation once when the president announced my name as one of the chief disputants in a public debate. I felt like sinking through the floor and remaining there. If I refused I was heavily fined, and my finances were too low for that, and I could not bear the thought of facing an audience only to make a laughing stock of myself; and to render the situation still more grievous, W. W. Moreland, an experienced debater, was my opponent. Mr. Moreland afterwards served as State senator. Mr. Moreland chose Tom Dalton, a young man whose oratorical attainments were of a superior order, for his helper. I selected a young man by the name of Tommy Howell, as my helper. He was a bright fellow enough, but timid and, like me, unable to express himself before an audience; but it was "Hobson's choice," so I had to be contented.

The subject we were to discuss was, "Resolved, That the warriors, orators, and statesmen of America were equal to those that were produced by other nations." Tommy and I met and held a consultation and decided to spend all our spare time in preparing for the event. We had three weeks; we got down to work, ransacking the library for books treating on the subject. Our opponents, on the other hand, thinking they would have an easy victory, made very little preparation.

At length the eventful night arrived. It was rather late when I came to the hall. I glanced over the large assembly. I felt very weak in the knees. Notwithstanding their shaky condition I managed to take my seat on the platform. The president arose from his chair, rapped for order, and called for the secretary to read the question. The president introduced me to the audience as the affirmative. I made a start, but the usual "frog" was in my throat. I could not swallow it, nor could I cough it up. The perspiration started, the room felt too warm. After struggling for a few minutes I recovered from my embarrassment, then I straightened up, faced the audience, brought forth my strong reasoning, and at the expiration of one half hour, finished without a bobble, and resumed my seat. My opponent was next introduced. He stepped out on the platform and said, "Mr. President and fellow citizens, I have been listening very attentively to the heterogeneous and conglomerated mass of rubbish of my opponent," etc. At the conclusion the president said, "This debate has been very interesting and very closely contested; good sound arguments have been produced on both sides, but after summing them all up I feel constrained to decide in favor of the affirmative." Thus I scored my first victory. After adjournment Doctor Lucky complimented me on my speech.

Early one morning the college building burned down. In a few months the walls of a new college were nearing completion on a beautiful elevation; but one stormy night the walls slid down, a mass of ruins, having been constructed of concrete, which had not had time to dry. In the course of a few months the debris was removed and another college building arose, this time constructed of brick which stood in all its grandeur, towering above all the buildings for many years, when it was wrecked by an earthquake.

While at college I became acquainted with a poor boy student in whom I recognized the making of a noble man. I found him to be truthful, honorable, industrious, in fact he was a fine character although yet a boy. On one occasion I heard him rebuking Willie Cary, a college student, for some wrong act. Well do I remember seeing that poor boy carrying washing for the students of "Mosquito Bar," our boarding place, for his poor widowed mother. That poor boy is now an elder in the Reorganization, presiding over the San Jose Branch, Charles Hawkins by name.

After three years of close application I bade farewell to the college halls and returned home. After spending many long weary years in the schoolroom in the capacity of a teacher, I took up my residence in the pleasant little city of Healdsburg. While there, the Saints were honored with a visit from Elder Albert Haws. He favored us with many grand sermons. Our hearts were made glad and our faith strengthened. I will mention the following incident to the honor of our departed brother.

At that time I had two near neighbors who were very bitter against the Reorganization. They could not bear the word Mormon. I said to them something like the following: "Why are you so prejudiced? You ought to investigate, then you will be able to judge." The reply was, "I can't go old Joe Smith. I don't believe he was a prophet." "Well," I said, "if you will attend the meeting to-night I will ask Elder Haws to preach on the divine calling of Joseph Smith."

After attending the meetings about a week and having everything explained to their entire satisfaction, they said, "Our props are all knocked from under us; we are ready for the water." They have long since passed away and are reaping their reward. Both died in the hope of a glorious resurrection.

Several years have elapsed since the foregoing. I have in the meantime taken up my residence near the town of Lower Lake, where the following incident occurred. One day we were agreeably surprised to receive a visit from Thomas Daley. The town hall was secured and Elder Daley delivered a series of sermons. He made such a good impression that a would-be great man by the name of Taylor, a Baptist preacher, came down from Lakeport, the county-seat about twenty-five miles from Lower Lake, for the purpose of driving the "wolf out of the town before he scattered or destroyed the flock." While Elder Daley was quietly passing along the street Mr. Taylor suddenly emerged from his temporary rendezvous followed by his excited clique, rudely intercepted him, and challenged him for a debate. Elder Daley said, "Yes, I will accommodate you, I will debate with you any time it please you to meet me." The time for the debate was agreed upon; the Saints of Lower Lake held a consultation and the majority of them thought that Elder Daley was too young in the cause to cope with so formidable an adversary, and Elder H. P. Brown, from Oakland, was sent for. . . . the day before the debate; the hall was secured and Elder Brown preached one of his invincible sermons on the organization of the church. Just before the meeting opened Mr. Taylor strutted in with his head up. He seated himself near the entrance and was an attentive listener. After Elder Brown had concluded his sermon Mr. Taylor glided out and was seen no more until the next day.

The appointed time for the debate arrived, but Mr. Taylor had thought the matter over and concluded the better way would be to drive the wolf out of town by showing him up through the columns of the press. His friends and adherents tried in vain to get him to meet Elder Brown. He argued that he did not like the way the question was drawn up. Elder Brown told him to draw it up to suit himself, but it was no use. He had heard Elder Brown's sermon. He knew Elder Brown would sweep the Baptist Church from her sandy foundation.

My brother Will, who was at the time teaching in the public school, became convinced of the truth of the latter-day work, and as he was a thorough scholar and good historian Elder Daley prevailed on him to deliver a historical lecture to the citizens of Lower Lake. A large chart, about twenty-five feet in length, was stretched upon the wall, where it could be seen by all present. He went back prior to Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the image, which was pictured on the chart, and he then followed on down the stream of time touching on the most important events till the year 1830, when there lay the Book of Mormon open with the letters "Book of Mormon" across the top of the page, proving the prophecy had been literally fulfilled. Having concluded his lecture he said, "I am now thoroughly convinced that this church (kingdom) which was set up in 1830 is the only true church on earth, and I for one am ready for the water." The next Sunday he repaired to the water and was baptized, Elder Daley officiating.

Shortly after he united with the church, in a little prayer- and testimony-meeting, word came through one of the members of the church with a "thus saith the Lord" that William Adamson be ordained an elder. Bro. Will hesitated; he wanted some evidence that the call was from God, but Elder Brown, I think it was, told him that he should obey the call without further evidence. He reluctantly consented, was ordained, but afterward repudiated his calling, because the call came through one who was afterward excommunicated from the church. He has been standing aloof ever since, but is still held in high esteem by the citizens of Lower Lake and remained as principal of the school until he resigned for a better position. We all think he should be in the field working for the Master.

Every life has its lights and shades. I have related the lights, I will now relate the shades of my life. After removing to Lake County I purchased a nice little farm of one hundred and fifty acres, and have spent the best part of my life beautifying it that I might spend the remainder in comfort. How happy and proud I felt when I had paid the last dollar on the mortgage and moved into my new house! I could now call the farm all my own; but my happiness was of short duration, for on returning home from school one Friday night, rather late (for I was teaching twenty-five miles from home), I found my once happy fireside cold and silent, the house riddled of everything, my companion gone, and a little note left explaining her absence. A few words told the sad story, "forsaken for another." I felt dazed, paralyzed; all the brightness had suddenly gone out of my life. Objects did not have the same appearance as before; the sun did not seem to shine so brightly; the twitter of the birds seemed to have a vein of sadness running through their strains; the days and nights seemed to have no end. When Bro. Joseph Smith was apprised of the situation he wrote me the following, "If Sister Mattie has listened and yielded to the wiles of a stranger, sad will be her reckoning, for sooner or later he will forsake her, despising her for the fact of her having yielded to him." His words proved true. For years she has been battling to keep the wolf from the door, while he is in another part of the State, sitting around the card-table. Strange to relate, after being a Latter Day Saint for twenty years, she became connected with the Methodist Church, was excommunicated, and united with the Baptist Church.

After wandering aimlessly around for many years, I formed the acquaintance of a cultured lady, a teacher, Catholic in belief. As our tastes were congenial we mutually agreed, hand in hand, to travel the road of life together. One beautiful morning in April, 1903, we called upon Elder C. A. Parkin, in San Francisco, and were made one. Three years after our marriage, my companion investigated the claims of the Reorganized Church, was convinced of the truth of this latter-day work, and desired to unite with the church. Bro. William Newton was sent for and baptized her on August 19, 1906, and she has not regretted the step. We are now living on the dear old farm in Lake County. During my wanderings the old house was sadly neglected, but six years have passed and the place has undergone a wonderful transformation. It teems with several kinds of poultry, cattle, hogs, and horses, with fair fields of grain. Around the house are lovely flowers. Much pleasure has been enjoyed during these years of restoration, while peace and happiness are perched upon our banner. Over our front entrance, in large letters are the words, "Royal Rest," and over the sitting-room door, "God bless our home." Our daily prayer to our heavenly Father is that he may protect our home from those who covet and would deprive us of our home, from the Satanic spirit of graft.

Since the above was written I have had the following most vivid dream: I thought I was alone in our sitting-room. I happened to glance toward the fireplace, and between it and the woodbox was a large rattlesnake coiled up. I saw the serpent looking at me very wickedly. I raised a club and struck at it, knocked it to the other side of a seemingly large room, but it seemed I had not disabled it. It turned and came towards me. Again I raised my club just as it sprang at my face. Luckily I dealt it a forceful blow upon its head and again knocked it across the room. Suddenly it disappeared and was not seen any more. When I awoke the thought came to me, What does it mean? The interpretation came instantly: the rattlesnake represents the one who would rob us of our home.

E. F. ADAMSON.

Extracts from Letters.

In a letter to Bro. Fred. A. Smith, (from Portland, Oregon, May 19, 1909,) Bro. Keeler writes the following: "I have just returned from Springfield and Eugene, where I was called by telegram to administer to Sr. Crawford. She was instantly healed, which caused quite a stir among the people. I stayed there a week and preached every night, and baptized three, two women and one man, and blessed five children, and administered to several others. There are fifteen members at Springfield now, one deacon. I promised to return there soon. I will go to Lebanon this week, and to Sweet Home, and then to Springfield again, and get back here for conference."

Bro. J. F. Curtis recently returned from the Clinton, Missouri, District conference at Coal Hill. A good time was reported.

A Butterfly's "Umbrella."

He was only a butterfly, one of those beautiful, large, bluish-black ones that we so often see about the garden, but he knew enough to get in out of the wet.

It was during one of the heavy showers that so frequently, in the hot days of midsummer, come suddenly upon us, driving every one to the nearest cover. To escape the downpour, which meant great injury, if not destruction, to so delicate a creature, he quickly flew to a near-by Balm of Gilead tree, where, alighting on the under side of a large leaf, he clung with wings closely drawn together and hanging straight downward, using the big leaf as an umbrella to shield him from the great drops falling all round. High and dry, here he remained until the shower had passed, and the blue sky and warm sun called him once again to his favorite haunts.—From "Nature and science" in June St. Nicholas.

News From Branches

ST. LOUIS, MISSOURI.

The calm, sweet influence of the Spirit was present at our sacrament-service the first of the month. Reminiscences of the General Conference by those privileged to attend, brought joy to our souls.

We were strengthened and edified during the past month, through the preached word as delivered by Brn. S. A. Burgess, R. Archibald, C. J. Remington, J. A. Tanner; also W. W. Smith, who was en route to his field in Philadelphia. The officers also occupied in various parts of this district during the month.

Our Sunday-school and Religio are moving along nicely. The Sunday-school is laying plans for our annual picnic the 4th of July and a nice program is promised for children's day on June 20.

We are very sorry indeed to report the death of the husband of Sr. Sipple who met with a fatal accident the second week of the month, at his work. He leaves to mourn his sudden demise his wife, and two grown children, Sr. Alice and Bro. Charles Sipple. Sr. Sipple had just recovered from a severe attack of pneumonia and the shock was very severe, owing to her weak condition.

Sr. Billinsky, who recently passed through a very critical operation, is getting along quite nicely. Others on the sick list were Srs. Robert DeLong, Gladys Gall, Brn. S. A. Burgess, and George Kendall. Bro. George is still in a very serious condition and needs our prayers.

Your sister and coworker,
E. M. PATTERSON.

CENTRAL CHICAGO ITEMS.

Sunday, May 23. Over sixty at Sunday-school and a few more at the preaching-service. Elder F. G. Pitt occupied in the morning to our edification, mentioning among many other good things, that temperance means that we should avoid the use or practice of everything harmful, and be moderate in our use of all things good and beneficial. How many of us are temperate in our conduct day by day, as we appear in our homes, before the world, and among our brothers and sisters? Elders Strange and Lang assisted in the morning service.

Evening service in charge of Bro. Charles Shaw, Elder Allen discoursing the word of the Lord. The life and mission of the Savior was brought out in marked contrast to the teachers of the Jews, the position he took being entirely antagonistic to their views, as he always did that which pleased the Father. What an army to be feared would be the Latter Day Saints, if they would always do that which pleased the Father. What would Jesus do if he were in our position? If we would keep this question before us each day, and then take an inventory of the work done in the evening, the Recording Angel might be able to make a better record for many of us.

We are glad to report that the sick ones are gradually improving at the homes of Bro. A. F. Sherman and Bro. Cochran. May we all continue to remember them in our devotions, and also those who have been bearing the burden of waiting on the sick ones. How weary they must grow sometimes in many ways! The health of Sr. F. G. Pitt is much better since coming to Chicago, and she was a visitor at our Sunday morning service. Sr. Evanson's health is also much improved of late.

Wednesday prayer-service in charge of Bro. Wainright. A very good spirit prevailed, although the attendance was not large. What a comfort in the promise, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there I will be and that to bless."

Your correspondent will leave for Omaha on a two-week vacation Saturday evening, the 29th inst., so unless some one else will write the items there may be a short respite.

Sr. George Warlick has gone to Independence, and may go to Oregon later, accompanied by her mother.

The weather is very much warmer now, and I trust we may have a few days of summer.

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA.

As another month has gone we still find progression in our city as far as the gospel is concerned. One more was added to our force by baptism, Bro. Dougherty, who is the head of a large family. He was baptized by Elder D. E. Dowker.

A branch was organized on May 2 by D. E. Dowker and J. W. Metcalf with twenty-nine members. G. B. Miller was ordained to the office of teacher and Charles V. Ferguson to the office of deacon.

We were pleased to have Bro. William H. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, with us yesterday, who formerly lived here. He spoke both morning and evening.

On the 22d and 23d we had a very profitable district conference at Derby, Indiana, of our district. Our beloved missionaries, Brn. William Dowker and D. E. Dowker, are at present in Michigan on an extended visit. We have not heard as to when they will return.

Plans have been made to organize a district Sunday-school association on July 4 at Byrneville Branch. We are in hopes that Bro. Hougas, our General Superintendent, will be present.

May God help us all to move on to progression.

Treasurer reported balance on hand last report 10 cents, paid out 22 cents, balance due treasurer 12 cents. The auditing committee on the Bishop's agent's books reported as follows: Balance on hand last report $3.73, receipts $98.85, expenditures $110.97, balance due agent $8.39. Election of officers resulted as follows: For president, James Moler; secretary and treasurer, A. C. Silvers; recorder, Lucy Silvers; library committeeman, J. W. Noyes. Local Historian, Lucy Silvers, was sustained. Bishop's agent, G. W. Beebe, and Elder L. R. Devore, were sustained. The next conference will be held at Nevada, Missouri, October 9 and 10, 1909. A. C. Silvers, secretary, Walker, Missouri.

Convention Minutes.

MASSACHUSETTS.—Religio convention was held in joint session with the Sunday-school, at Haverhill, Massachusetts, on May 8 and 9, 1909. The entertainment by the small band of Saints in Haverhill was splendid. There was a large delegation present, and the good Spirit prevailed throughout. Business for the Religio was transacted Saturday evening. The Religio and Sunday-school on Sunday held alternate sessions, after the joint prayer-meeting at 9 o'clock in the morning, which was one long to be remembered by those present. Papers on the following topics were read: "Reports and their significance," by Doctor W. A. Sinclair; "Importance of junior work," by Charlotte Brown; "The Religio as a school for the ministry," by Mary O. Lewis; "Requirements of the coming Saint," by Holmes J. Davison; "Utility of a parliamentary education," by J. A. Gunsolley; "Social features for Religio," Susanne Jordan; "Religio as an educator in history and prophecy relating to the future of the church," by George H. A. Gates. Mary O. Lewis, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Northern Kansas: The general missionaries in charge, Brn. I. N. White and J. F. Curtis, having designated the undersigned to assist in looking after the missionary work in Northeastern and Northwestern Kansas, I ask for the cooperation of all the Saints.

Our ministerial force is small indeed for so large a field, there being only four appointees from General Conference for this territory. Therefore we feel that we should utilize all the time and opportunities that we can command. Kindly assist in making new openings and arrangements to keep the missionaries busy. The cooperation of the local ministry will be greatly appreciated. Let us know what the needs and demands are in your respective neighborhoods.

Address the undersigned at Holden, Missouri, Box 396. Mail will be promptly forwarded to me in my field.

H. E. MOLER.

TOPEKA, Kansas, May 25, 1909.

"By working for the good of all we work for the good of ourselves. We only succeed as we work for the good of the whole."

Church Secretary.

GENERAL CONFERENCE MINUTES.

Press of work in the publishing department has delayed issue of the General Conference Minutes. They will be issued just as soon as it is possible to set up and print the matter—probably some time during the present month.

R. S. SALYARDS, Church Secretary.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 3, 1909.

Notice of Silence.

To All Whom it May Concern: We are credibly informed that Elder J. D. Erwin is traveling in our mission and persisting in preaching and administering in the ordinances of the church, while under silence imposed upon him by the Quorum of Seventy. We therefore take this method to inform the Saints throughout our mission that he can not legally represent the church; nor will his administrations in the ordinances of the church be legalized by us, so long as he is under silence from his quorum.

When this silence is lifted, the brother will be legally notified of it, and the same be published in the church papers, so none may be led by any false reports.

I. N. WHITE,
J. F. CURTIS,
Ministers in Charge.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, May 29, 1909.

BENJAMIN PEARSON.

Secretary Southern Missouri District.
BEAVER, Missouri, May 27, 1909.

Conference Notices.

Montana District conference will meet at Deer Lodge the last Saturday and Sunday in June (26 and 27), 1909. J. P. Wyckoff, secretary.

The Minnesota District conference will be held at Clitherall, Minnesota, on the last Saturday and Sunday of the reunion, June 26 and 27, 1909, beginning Saturday at 2 p. m. Hallie M. Gould, secretary, Clitherall, Minnesota.

Far West District will convene with the Second St. Joseph Branch, corner Ohio and Pryor Streets, South St. Joseph, Missouri, on Saturday, June 26, 10 a. m. Do not forget to send in your reports. Branch credentials to the secretary before conference convenes. Charles P. Faul, secretary.

Southern Missouri District will convene at 10 a. m., Saturday, June 26, 1909, at the Saints' church, five miles east of Ava, Douglas County, Missouri. Please send all ministerial, statistical, and other reports to the undersigned, at Beaver, Missouri, before the 24th. Benjamin Pearson, secretary.

Quarterly conference of Far West District and Sunday-school convention will be held at the Second St. Joseph Branch, corner Pryor and Ohio Streets, June 25 to 27 inclusive. We are looking for all officers and ministers and are making preparation to take care of you in the good old fashioned way. Take first car going south from union depot. J. L. Bear, Jr., president.

St. Louis District will convene at East Lansdowne, Illinois, Saturday and Sunday, June 12 and 13, 1909. A full representation of the priesthood and membership is desired, as several matters of interest will come up; also a full and complete report from each branch secretary. C. J. Remington, secretary.

Reunion Notices.

The Lamoni Stake reunion will be held on the Stake Reunion Grounds, one mile south and adjoining the city of Lamoni, beginning Friday, August 27, and closing Sunday, September 5. These dates are selected that the young people may, without interference, attend to school work. Meals and refreshments will be served on the grounds, as heretofore; all comforts necessary to the welfare of campers and visitors will be provided. Good speakers, good programs, and other features usual to such occasions will be supplied. Saints and friends at home and in other localities are invited to attend. This annual outing has become known as a season of special spiritual and social enjoyment. Come, bring your family, and have an enjoyable time. Additional notice later. John Smith, chairman; R. S. Salyards, secretary.

The Kentucky and Tennessee District reunion will begin July 24, 1909, at Foundry Hill Branch near Puryear, Tennessee. Will begin on Saturday and continue over two Sundays. Thursday of reunion week will be devoted to children's day. Sr. Nellie Overcast and Dora Gore will have charge of this exercise. We have the promise of Bishop E. L. Kelley being with us, and possibly Bro. Joseph Smith. We invite our missionary in charge and his force to meet with us. M. H. Gore, secretary.

Agreeable to items of greeting from Apostles R. C. Russell and U. W. Greene, as per Ensign and HERALD of May 20, 1909, the Saints and friends please take notice that the Saskatchewan District will be organized and officers elected at the Saskatoon reunion to be held in Saskatoon from July 14 to 18. It has been arranged that the Religians hold election of officers on Wednesday, July 14; the Sunday-school on Thursday, July 15; and on Saturday (17th) organization of Saskatchewan District and election of officers will take place. The C. P. R. and C. N. R. and G. T. P. R. run into Saskatoon. The G. T. P. R. station is about two miles out of town. We are going to have a large tent to accommodate all who may come. Dear Saints and friends, come all who can and let us have a good spiritual time; and that good may be done. J. L. Mortimer, missionary in charge, Tyvan, Saskatchewan.

Agreeable to items of greeting from Apostles R. C. Russell and U. W. Greene, as per Ensign and HERALD of May 20, 1909, the Saints and friends will please take notice that the Winnipeg District will be organized and officers elected at the Rossendale Branch reunion to be held at the McCreary church from July 8 to 11. It has been arranged that the Religians hold election of officers on Thursday, July 8, and the Sunday-school hold their election of officers on Friday, July 9; and on Saturday, the 10th, organization of Winnipeg District and election of officers will take place. All those coming by Canadian Northern will be met at Rossendale Station. Those coming to Rossendale please write to Mr. William Henry, Jr., Rossendale, Manitoba, stating what time they will be there, so they can be met at station and taken to the reunion. And those coming by Canadian Pacific will be met at Treherne Station, and they are requested to write to Elder Nelson Wilson, Treherne, Manitoba. Saints and friends, come all who can and let us have a good spiritual time and that good may be done. J. L. Mortimer, missionary in charge, Tyvan, Saskatchewan.

Marriages.

ROBERTS—MIDGORDEN.—Bro. James A. Roberts and Sr. Caroline J. Midgorden were united in marriage, at the home of the bride's parents, in West Lamoni, Iowa, Sunday, May 30, 1909, at four o'clock in the afternoon, Elder William Anderson being the officiating minister. Relatives and a few intimate friends were present, and after earnest congratulations and best wishes for the success of the young couple, the pleasant gathering sat down to an early and much appreciated supper. Their home will be in Lamoni.

Died.

DELONG.—At Lamoni, Iowa, April 24, 1909, Leonard E. Delong, aged 15 years, 5 months, and 6 days. He was hurt in a baseball game that day. Although not a member of the church, yet his life and character were of a high order. His father, Bro. I. N. Delong, died nearly seven years ago. His mother, Sr. Editha, lives in Lamoni. The family lived in Southern Missouri for many years. The sermon was preached by Bro. H. A. Stebbins, services in charge of Bro. John Smith.

COOPER.—At Des Moines, Iowa, May 1, 1909, Sr. Eleanor (Nellie) M. Cooper, wife of Bro. John Cooper, and daughter of Sr. Emira Walker-Yarrington of Leon, Iowa. Her age was 49 years, and she suffered much from 1896, when she had a partial stroke of paralysis, until her death. She was baptized in 1879, by Bro. A. W. Moffet, near Pleasanton. Her body was brought to Leon for burial, Bro. H. A. Stebbins being called to preach the sermon, and Brn. Duncan Campbell and Ward Christy assisted in the services.

COY.—John Coy, at Ogden, Utah, April 25, 1909, of general debility. He was born November 17, 1830, at Leicester, England. In the fall of 1860 he immigrated to Utah as a member of the Utah church, but joined the Reorganization on the 17th of February, 1879, at Plain City, Utah, where he was baptized by Elder T. A. Robson. He has been a consistent and faithful adherent of the true faith ever since. The funeral-services were held at the Saints' chapel at Ogden, Utah; sermon by Elder Gerard J. S. Abels. He leaves surviving him his brother Robert and family.

WEITLICH.—Eisine Weitlich was born April 15, 1870, at Wymer, Germany. Was married to Frank Weitlich March 27, 1890. To this union were born ten children, five having preceded her. She was baptized at Stewartville, Missouri, October 2, 1892; died May 10, 1909, at her home near Clarksdale, Missouri. She leaves mother, husband, three sons, and two daughters to mourn their loss. Funeral-services at the German church, of which she was a faithful member. Sermon by D. E. Powell, assisted by T. T. Hinderks.

JEMISON.—Sr. Evaline, wife of Elder Jacob F. Jemison, died April 25, at Sunset, Missoula County, Montana, of pneumonia. Buried at Victor, Montana. Funeral-service by Reverend George Blair, of the Presbyterian Church. Deceased was born at Cumberland, Illinois, November 23, 1838.

BRADSHAW.—Rebecca Minnie, wife of Bro. L. J. Bradshaw, died January 25, 1909, at Ladore, Colorado, of cancer. She suffered dreadfully, but was true to her Savior to the last. She was a true Saint, a loving wife and mother, and a good neighbor. She leaves a husband, one son, and five daughters; two sons and one daughter having preceded her in death. She was 61 years, 2 months, and 6 days old. Blessed are they who die in the Lord; their works do follow them.

Our Manly Training of Girls.

Our training of girls approaches close to the idiotic, claims Katherine Eggleston in Woman's Home Companion for June. The average girl, from the minute she leaves her dolls to go to kindergarten, till she matriculates at college, is told about men and men's work—never about women. The kindergarten songs and tales are about Lincoln and Washington—and even the pictures of animals show the lion and forget the lioness. In older childhood she is taught to build sand forts instead of good, old-fashioned mud pies, and even the sums in arithmetic dwell on "Billy's" marbles and "John's" apples, to the total neglect of his sister.

Later still she goes to high school and learns history with all its ideals of brave men—and here again the woman's share of quiet courage is completely overshadowed. She learns carpentering, although she can not cook an egg or sew a seam. And finally, her education finished, she knows all about the higher mathematics and is short-changed by the butcher. She learns political economy, but does not know who are the members of her own school board. Miss Eggleston's bright article concludes:

"If your boy wanted to be a lawyer, and a neighbor told you to put him to work in a carpenter's shop by way of preparation, you would think your neighbor crazy. But you do not consider yourself crazy when you train your daughter, who is to be a wife and mother (and nothing can get away from the grim statistics that women do marry, despite economic independence, the higher education and all other arguments in favor of coeducation), precisely as you train your son, who will enter some profession or trade, there to first earn his own living, and then to provide for a family yet unborn. The one to bear the family and to rear it, the other to provide shelter and comfort for the mother of that family, and yet both trained precisely in the same way."

So long as we love, we serve. So long as we are loved by others I would almost say we are indispensable; and no man is useless while he has a friend.—Stevenson.

Rowing an Excellent Exercise.

Rowing is a splendid exercise for either sex. In a man it helps to develop the vigor, and robust health that he so much desires. It will add to his muscular and vital strength, and to his manhood, from every standpoint. One of the especial advantages of rowing is that it takes you in the open air. It is not a hot-house exercise. You are not forced to confine the exercise to any one particular point. Wherever sufficient water may be found, one can indulge in this superior sport. --From June Physical Culture.

What a Man May Do.

I know of one conspicuous example of what may be done by men of inherited fortune. A young man of ample means who did not wish to engage in any business pursuit thoroughly educated himself here and abroad at the universities. He then made himself master of a technical pursuit by the study of forestry abroad. After a year or two of professional work he relinquished it to accept a responsible position in the government, where he is now rendering great and highly appreciated service in working out the best policy for conserving our forests and other natural resources. --From A. Barton Hepburn's "The American Business Man" in the June Century.

PREACH THE GOSPEL.

"Say nothing but repentance to this generation."
"Talk not of judgment, boast not of mighty faith."

The church has frequently been admonished with reference to preaching the gospel, both in the early days of the institution of the church and during its formative period, and in the later revelations which have come to the Reorganization. It seems, however, that the innate restlessness of our people causes them in the exuberance of their spiritual and physical energy to have a great disposition to hurry matters and forget the primal duty under the spirit of these commands.

One of the difficulties lying in the way of the administration of the church in its missionary affairs is the unfortunate tendency of some of the ministry to devote their time and talent to the following of abstract questions,—sometimes amounting to the riding of hobbies,—some of these hobbies being directed at lines of personal conduct supposed to be more or less obnoxious to the peace and welfare and spiritual contentment of the body of Saints. We are charged with the mission of preaching the gospel of the Son of Peace to the world, making declaration that there would accompany the gospel a spirit known as the Holy Ghost, which would be a personal monitor to the followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene, given for the purpose of governing, directing, and controlling through its elevating power the personal views and conduct of the devotees; and that sooner or later a unity would be established among those obeying the gospel like that unto which exists between the Father and the Son, the disciples being one with Christ, in like manner as the Son is one with the Father.

Under the impression that has long prevailed with us, we have been strongly averse to the formation and publication by the church of restrictive rules formed and adopted to govern personal conduct of the members of the church. Perhaps our strongest and most serious reason for thus objecting to the adoption of these rules governing personal conduct, is that it has a tendency to make these rules take the place of and detract from the power and office work of this the Holy Spirit. We have likewise taught (and taught because we believe it) that every man is to be judged at the final termination of human affairs before the Great Judge and answer for himself for that which he has done, evidently on his own volition and not because he has been compelled by the restrictive policy adopted by the law making powers. It has been the cause of this teaching and the impressions which have followed the holding of such teachings as a basis of thought, that we have been so strongly opposed to the adoption of these restrictive rules, the introduction of which has been made from time to time at our conferences.

The commandments of the Lord were few at the start and were made still fewer at the coming of our Lord; but Moses in his wisdom gave a long list of laws to the people under his presidency, many of which became irksome at the start, and the longer they continued the more irksome they became. It would seem that in our own day instead of being content with the wisdom of the Savior and the operation of the divine law given by him which superseded and took the place of the long list of restrictive rules known as the Mosaic economy, we are constantly striving to pile up additional restrictive laws hedging ourselves about by declarations of lawfulness and unlawfulness in regard to personal conduct, which almost, if not quite makes nugatory and void the office work of the Holy Spirit in the heart of the Christian followers. Why should we do this?

We have always been opposed to the policy of making men and women constructive criminals. We are no less opposed to it now than we have always been. As we have grown older and our experience has broadened our views, we believe that we can see and understand more clearly the possible motives which move mankind in their pursuit of affairs of everyday life, and their seeking for happiness and contentment. As we look out upon those surrounding us we may see some things which in their nature seem to us to be deplorable and hurtful to the general growth of the whole body. We sometimes feel that these should be eliminated from our midst. However, it is possible that the things which we thus deplore, the result of which we believe to be injurious to the life of the great body, upon research will be found to have been not the result of an evil intention, nor of an intentional disregard for right motives of living, but of an ignorance of the results which may be construed as evil by those with whom we are associated, who see only the result, real or imaginary, and do not see clearly the underlying motives. Persons who do these things may not be criminal in intent or purpose, but are only made criminal by the restrictive judgment passed upon the act by those in authority. We regard such condition and possible evil results seen by many to be the effect of our narrow judgment. The result of our policy of adopting restrictive measures is shortening and almost absolutely rendering the office work of the Holy Spirit ineffective in our lives. We repeat the question, "Why should we do these things?"

It is better, we think, and more conducive to the development of grand spiritual character that we live under fewer enactments of our own forming and adoption and become more and more subject to "the spirit of the law of life in Christ Jesus." In order that we may not be too far misunderstood we suggest that as an instance in which it is possible for the Saints to adopt strong and restrictive measures among themselves, the result of the carrying into effect of which would be to make constructive wrong-doers of individuals, the Word of Wisdom may be taken. The introduction to the Word of Wisdom signifies that it is "not by commandment or by constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom." Under the possible restrictions named in this Word of Wisdom there has been a strong tendency to draw conclusions therefrom which would make individuals failing to comply with the construction put upon these clauses constructive wrong-doers; the influence of which would be condemnatory proceedings against such wrong-doers, or the adoption of rules harshly condemning certain courses of conduct supposedly not in harmony with the word as construed. The evident intention of this word is to leave the forming of it to the will of those to whom it comes, they taking their chances for the fulfillment of the promises therein contained and the final judgment to be passed upon them by the Lord and the Great Judge at the end of time. If the word is to be enforced by the legislative enactment of forbidding rules, with penalties attached, of what value in a spiritual sense will attach to the observance of the word thus enforced? And what discredit will those failing to keep the word receive at the great judgment if they are judged and condemned here, suffering the penalty imposed by such judgment here? Would not the payment of the penalty here be held as a sufficient punishment without imposing further spiritual loss at the judgment which is to come?

Again, we are commanded to contend against no church except the church of the Devil. Would not enactment of the General Conference pointing out and specifying any particular organization among men as being "the church of the Devil," place every other association within the category of those organizations against which there should be no contention? We think so. We early formed a resolution to live out this life without becoming subject to any other organization, secret, or otherwise, except the gospel covenant made in the waters of baptism, consummated by the reception of the Holy Spirit informing our consciousness that Jesus was the Christ and his gospel was true. Of course, this does not apply to our enforced obedience to the laws of the land and our voluntary submission to the institutions of the country, the blessings and disabilities which pertain to us as a citizen of the state and union. We have hitherto believed that if the axiom that "actions speak louder than words" was true, we have no reason to join a crusade against existing organizations among men of which we know nothing, of which we formed no part, and which in no way interfered with our personal liberty or hampered the exercise of every faculty for good with which we had been endowed. We have ever believed that we were not called to join issue with the organizations among men, secret or beneficiary, as a necessary adjunct to our preaching the gospel of the Son of God for the saving of the souls of the sons of men. We have also believed that our ordination to the ministry and the issuing of our certificate and license from the church, did not authorize us to preach our private opinions on political or on economic questions as the doctrine of the church. We have also believed that as an officer of the church we were not authorized to compromise the church or any of its general authorities by doing what is called "the riding of hobbies" in our ministrations to the world. Believing this in regard to our own position, we have believed it in regard to every other minister in the church, no matter what his calling or position which he may hold in the church and in society.

As the church does not presume to dictate the private opinion of its members, including the ministry of course, we have not assumed either as a person or as an officer to dictate as to the private opinion of our co-workers, as we have no desire to infringe upon their liberties or in any wise to interfere with the principle that each and every one must answer to God personally for his own conduct, which conduct must result from thought and the conclusions of private judgment. Unity can not be produced by dogmatic rule of human authorities; but can only result from an intelligent submission to the spiritual rule of Christ and the ethics of the gospel announced by him, both ancient and modern, as shown to us by revelation.

Believing as we have heretofore stated what is herein enumerated, we conclude that the less we hamper ourselves with restrictive enactments and the freer we leave ourselves to follow the spiritual institutions of the Holy Ghost given unto the disciples of the Lord, the better will be our spiritual lives and the nearer will we come to living in accordance with what the apostle has named "the spirit of the law of life in Christ Jesus," which the same apostle said had "made him free" from the law of sin and death.

THE USE OF TOBACCO.

Query: Is the use of tobacco unlawful?

If the question is to the effect of whether there has been any action of the church in its deliberative assemblies by which a member who uses tobacco may be expelled from the church because of such use, we answer that it is not unlawful; that is to say, that there is no rule of the church which forbids its use, or which imposes the penalty of expulsion for its use. The Twelve, with whom rests the appointing of missionaries, decided, by resolution, that they would not appoint, nor indorse for appointing, any officer who used tobacco or strong drink. The church, by resolution, approved of their action, the principle being that no person who used tobacco or strong drink, as a habit, was a proper person to represent the church in its active ministry.

Some few branches have so far followed the spirit of this resolution that they have by resolution refused to appoint or sustain any one who uses tobacco or strong drink as a presiding officer of the branch. All branches have not done this. None that we know of has made either the using of tobacco or strong drink a test of fellowship.

It is clear that the church has the right to prescribe some of the personal qualifications which should characterize the ministry sent out to represent the church, and to refuse to sustain those who show a lack of regard for the rules of cleanliness both in body and spirit. Branches may, so far as right is concerned, refuse to choose or sustain men given to certain habits as officers of the branch. They may do this upon the hypothesis that the persons so guilty are not proper ones to represent the church, as they set a bad example before the membership, including the children of the Saints.

We are not prepared to say that persons who use tobacco should be disfellowshipped, or such use be made a cause for disfellowshipping where this exists as the only cause for complaint. One of the reasons why we are not prepared is that we have known some instances where individuals who were elders in the church have been quite useful men in their places, and were very much blessed in administering in the laying on of hands and anointing with oil of the sick; they appearing by this circumstance to be blessed of God in the honoring of the ceremony of laying on of hands, notwithstanding their weakness in being subject to this habit. We can not say that all those whom we have known as officers who have been addicted to the use of tobacco, and strong drink occasionally, have so been blessed, for they have not. Whether in these cases in which those who have been addicted to such habit have been restricted in the exercise of their faith by the consciousness of their own shortcoming, and thus have been precluded from receiving the blessings which the sick have asked for by the administration of the ordinance, we can not say; but we think it quite possible that self-condemnation in such cases has prevented the proper exercise of faith and conscious acceptance at the hands of the Lord. Why those few whom we knew used tobacco were blessed in administering to the sick, we do not know. But, if the word of wisdom be taken as the basis for judgment, then, those who fail to keep it in any of its provisions, or presumably all of them, or any one of them, are equally guilty whether it be in the use of tobacco, strong drink, the eating of meat, the drinking of hot drinks, or the use of grain in any way except for the purposes stated in the word itself; hence we can not state that an officer of the church not a traveling missionary should be held under stricture of rule so far as the exercising of his right in the priesthood may be concerned, or ignored by presiding officers who might be inclined to refuse to call such persons to their aid in the rites of the church and its ceremonies.

The word of wisdom itself is preceded by the statement that its provisions are "not by commandment or by constraint, but by revelation and the word of wisdom." It would appear then that the observance of these different provisions and the loss to the individual for a failure to keep its provisions, singly or as a whole, or the approval of the Lord and the benefits to be derived from a due observance of its provisions, singly or as a whole, is a matter of personal character resting between the individual member and the Lord; this being clearly provided for in the principle of its being given to the church; whether it is a province of the church to make the observance of the provisions of the word of wisdom so restrictive as to make the failure to keep them a cause for disfellowshipping a member, by passing drastic measures upon which this disfellowshipping is done, is a question that we are not prepared to decide.

It should be clear in the minds of the Saints that men and women having to answer to God personally for their conduct as individuals and as members of the church, there must be a certain latitude accorded to them as individuals for the exercise of their personal judgment in regard to personal conduct. If the entire measure of personal conduct is to be based on mandatory enactments of church rules reading "thou shalt" or "thou shalt not," there will be little ground left for the initiative service of the Holy Spirit, which is promised to the faithful devotee as a monitor to direct, encourage, approve, restrict, or condemn, when conditions arise requiring the exercise of personal decision as to what one's personal conduct shall be; and thus it would appear that the design of basing the judgment of individuals upon their personal responsibility to God would be a failure.

As a comparative instance: There is a general commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Taking this as a general direction of conduct, men are restrained from killing under any condition, if such killing is done from any motive originating with the individual; and any one so killing would be held responsible and punished by the enforcement of a penalty commensurate with the manifest degree of turpitude of the killing when done. But if a citizen, in the army, or in any responsible office in the service of the Government, required by duty or by direct command of superior officer in charge, kills one or more, then his personal responsibility is merged in the greater power which dictates the act of killing, and he is not subject to condemnation or the penalty affixed were it a personal act only.

This appears to us to be the just ground to be observed in this particular controversy; and we believe it to be the absolute personal duty of every one to be clean in personal habits. If all were so then such a question as we have been considering would not arise.

AN APPRECIATION OF "AUTUMN LEAVES."

Do you take Autumn Leaves? Those who subscribe regularly for Autumn Leaves find it a source of pleasure and information and a means in their hands with which to reach others not of the faith. One sister writes:

Editors Herald: Received the twenty-first volume of Autumn Leaves, the 21st instant, which I had sent previously to the Herald Office to be bound. How pleased I am with the work! It is done so neatly. It is a "book of books" to be proud of. 'Tis my first year's subscription to the Autumn Leaves and the first volume I have seen bound, and God helping me I mean to have them all bound in the future. Now, I can pass the book to my friends without any fear of losing a copy and I shall advise all my Autumn Leaves readers to have their copies bound, and the best binding, to my notion, is the cheapest.

Yours in the faith,
MILLIE J. KILMER.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It is stated in the press, that at a late representation of a certain play at the theater in Washington which President Taft and other officers of the national Government attended, the President and a number of these officers arose and left the building after the first act of the play in apparent open displeasure at the coarseness or lack of refinement which the play exhibited. If the doings of polite society are to follow the pattern set by the leading gentlemen of the nation, the President and his cabinet officers, it is right for the President to set a good example in setting his seal upon the character of the plays which may be offered to the public in the theaters of the time. It is fortunate for the people in this instance that President Taft is a citizen of not only acknowledged ability but of an excellent and refined taste in literary affairs.

LAMONI ITEMS.

At the late conference of the Lamoni Stake R. S. Salyards was ordained counselor to President John Smith and member of the stake presidency. At the same conference the ordination of Joseph Roberts as counselor to Bishop William Anderson and member of the stake bishopric was ordered. He will be ordained Sunday, June 20. Professor Hopkins, Graceland College, was ordained to the office of priest.

Reverend A. C. Barber of the Anti-Saloon League of Iowa spoke during the morning hour on last Sunday and Elder John Harp in the evening.

Elder Wandless, of the Utah faction, is with us and will be joined this week by some ten or twelve other missionaries. They have been given the use of the church during the week.

Elders' Note-Book

AN AMUSING INCIDENT; A PRAYER THAT WAS A SERMON.

In the year 1866; in company with J. W. Gillen and William Anderson, I was camped on a bend on the east bank of Sweet Water River, just opposite what is called Devil's Gate, the cut through the mountains, through which the Sweet Water River runs.

We were traveling with an emigrant train, composed of two hundred and fifty Mormon converts on their way to Utah. The church at Salt Lake City had sent down some forty teams to bring them to their Utah Zion. The train was commanded by one Thomas Rix, assisted by Appie Wolf, elders sent down to the Missouri River in charge. The emigrants were English, Welsh, and Norwegian; the teamsters were church members who had volunteered to bring the people to Salt Lake City. These teamsters were expected to bring the poor emigrants who had paid or were expected to pay their expenses through the church emigration bureau. Their baggage was to be transported thus, and the people supposed they were entitled also to transportation, but soon found out after they left the Missouri River that they had to walk. There were wagons and teams enough to have conveyed all comfortably if no other purpose had been served, but it soon developed that influential men of the church had sent for merchandise and the wagons received from a thousand to sixteen hundred pounds of merchandise each, ere the effects and seating of the expectant passengers, of whom many had paid their money for their conveyance from Liverpool to Salt Lake City, at least so they informed us. They had reached this camp ground with much suffering, comforting each other, when murmuring and complaint was heard, as we oftentimes heard, "Oh, well, be of good cheer, it will all be right when we get to Zion. We will have all we want when we get to the chambers of the Lord, in the valleys of the mountains."

We had complied with the rules of the train so far as camp duty was concerned, but had taken care of our own team.

Every night one of us took the mules and pony away from the wagon road to find feed and watched with them till morning. We were in the habit of hobbling the pony and turning them loose near the camp till after supper and prayer, then the one on duty would go out for the night. This evening it chanced to be my watch, and after supper I strolled out to locate the stock, but could not find them. It will be remembered we were as strangers in the camp of our enemies, and closely watched. I came back to the tent, but found the brethren had got tired waiting for me and had engaged in prayer. I did not wish to disturb them by opening the tent and entering, so just knelt down at the front.

Bro. James Gillen was praying, and as we had been forbidden to talk religion to the emigrants, he was praying for them, and he prayed long and loud. He thanked God for the glorious gospel and the organization of the church in these last days. He deplored the apostasy; rejoiced in the Reorganization and the call of young Joseph to his father's place, etc., etc., and for an hour and a quarter was eloquent in prayer. His voice could be heard nearly all over that camp. Some of the people came to see what the matter was, and two of them seeing me kneeling at the tent on the outside supposed that I was of their party, and crept up close behind me, and when Bro. James said, Amen, I sprung up and turned around quickly to see who they were. I was not quick enough to see who they were, for they turned and ran, but failed to see the doubletrees and harness of the wagon behind them and both went down, receiving a heavy fall. I was so amused at the prayer and the fall of those men, that I allowed them to get up and get away without learning who they were.

THE VISITING PASTOR.

By this is meant the pastor who delights in visiting the members of his flock. The visiting pastor is usually a pastor who commands the regard of the masses. Fields petition for him. His fame goes before him and he is cordially welcomed wherever he may be sent.

One may not always guess correctly whether his visit did the more good in one place than in another. Some to whom a visit is made may appear cold, when in fact they feel only awkward, having been visited by ministers only seldom, possibly with years measuring the intervals. But these after the minister departs often tell their neighbors in language that exhibits their appreciation of the pastor's attention.

Perhaps none appreciate more the pastor's visit than the chronic invalid. In acute illness the patient may be under so much of pain that but little else can occupy the mind, but in long continued affliction, with near friends worn out in care, and no one at liberty to enter into conversation, the pastor's visit gives relief and unspeakable cheer, and accomplishes good for both soul and body. The aged, too, whose friends in the days of their strength have mostly gone beyond this world, now in their loneliness enjoy ever so much a call from their pastor. Who knows? This man may preach when they are to be hid from the sight of earth. They gladly receive the pastor's visit.

Can the shepherd call his sheep by name? There! He misses one from the service. A little coolness made an excuse for remaining away easy. The visiting pastor will not delay. The coolness may grow. Delay confirms neglect. When Satanic wolves are pursuing the wounded, lame lamb, the shepherd should stand in between with a visit. That offended brother, or the one who thought he was, will have his misapprehension removed by the pastor's visit. Neglect may result only in the loss of the man and his family, which is serious, but prompt visiting may save not only the individual but hinder a neighborhood brawl, and preserve intact a whole society. Economy saves as well as accumulates. Now and then a pastor is found who will waste more by his teaspoonful of neglect than others can gather with scoops of whole duty.

The younger people appreciate a pastor who evinces a high estimate of the youth, and who freely bestows such attention upon them that they find in his attitude a quality that accords with the gospel standard of worth, whether applied to the aged or young. They wish to be treated as immortal souls. The poor feel the depressing influence of poverty. They scarcely dare ask the pastor to come, but when he comes, unhindered by their scantiness, they welcome him, and no more cordial reception will he have than among the poor, and the pastor is often the greater gainer, for the poor of this world are often rich in faith and they enrich the soul of the one who came to bless.

By visiting the members of his congregation the pastor acquaints himself with the inclinations, attainments, fortifications and dangers of every one. His warning in time saves much. It is easier and more economical to guard the lamb from falling over the rocks down the chasm, than to cure him if he has fallen. A word at the right time from the pastor parries the false word of the heretic. But how can a pastor who knows not the condition of his flock know how to feed them?

The unsaved should be visited. The most gratifying revivals that occur are those whose successes spring from the pastor's visiting the unsaved. Unserved fathers and mothers esteem highly the pastor's attention for their families' sakes. What may seem lost time to the pastor in such visits will be seen in after days as a powerful agency in lifting whole families out of sin and bringing them into the church of the living God.

Of what use is it that the pastor visit if he have nothing to say? Paul "taught from house to house." Even with a small stock of knowledge the pastor should engage in visiting for the advantage of reciprocating acquaintances, but by study the stock of truth should increase every day. Visiting will make the knowledge concrete, practicable, and a minister will be much more able to make his sermons applicable, weighty and appreciable by visiting much and studying much. An aged minister of great success advised, "Study books in the forenoon, door-plates in the afternoon." Study gives material which make visits profitable.—The Preacher's Helper.

THE COMING COMET OF 1910.

Halley's Comet (known as the "Great Comet") whose last appearance was in the year 1835, and whose next perihelion passage is on April 16 next, is the subject of our present sketch.

This magnificent object will doubtless be the cynosure of all eyes during the earlier portion of 1910, and particularly during the month of May, for although as stated, the date of its expected perihelion (or passage around the sun) is April 16, the fact is known to all astronomers and astro-physicists that a comet's period of maximum splendor or brightness is not really at or before perihelion, but generally from twenty-one days to one month after its perihelion passage. Thus your many readers may hope for a magnificent display of this grand comet's brilliancy on or about May 17 next; for from some hitherto unknown but suspected cause, the tail of a comet is always violently agitated and greatly extended by the action of our solar luminary but your readers must remember that at this period the comet, though traveling at a speed greatly exceeding three millions of miles an hour, is in reality going backwards; as after perihelion, the tail travels in advance and the head or nucleus after; whereas before perihelion the nucleus travels always in advance, the tail of course following. The reason for this remarkable circumstance is in the fact that the positive electricity in the sun acts repulsively upon the negative electricity of the comet's tail, or appendage, thus no matter what may be the angular direction or velocity of any comet of our solar system, the tail is always turned from (not towards) the sun.

Yet strange to relate, notwithstanding the terrific force thus exerted upon the comet by the sun, the comet is compelled, if traveling in either a circular or an elliptical orbit, to travel round the sun by the power of gravitation "whether it wants to or no," as the saying goes. But comets, especially of long periods, like Halley's, are subjected to so many known as well as unknown causes and obstructions throughout their enormous flight, extending in many instances over billions of miles, that something may happen or may yet happen to our expected visitor, to upset and turn aside the most elaborate and careful computations of the astronomers and mathematicians of all Europe and America; nor would it be the first time that such a celestial visitant, after performing eight or nine periodic revolutions about our sun, departed into stellar space, to be seen or heard no more.

Lexell's Comet of 1770 became entangled for six months amidst the satellites of Jupiter and became known thenceforward as "Lexell's Lost Comet"; for although it started again on its way with undiminished velocity after the expiration of its six months' entanglement, instead of being a solar comet as heretofore, it was turned into a Jovian comet, having Jupiter instead of the sun as its focus (or one of its foci) and Neptune as the other. The comet of 1826 became divided, and on its return to perihelion after nine years appeared as two comets instead of one; and wonderful to relate, there appeared in 1833, and again in 1866, a brilliant display of meteoric aerolites (or meteoric "stones," as they are popularly but erroneously called), a very singular confirmation of Luke 21:25: "There shall be signs in the sun, moon and stars"; and no Latter Day Saint (especially of the Reorganization) can fail to be impressed with the very significant juxtaposition of two such vastly important years as 1833 and 1866, not simply because they are exactly divisible (like 1830 and 1860) by the sacred number three, but also because of the potent and powerful events occurring in these two fateful and eventful years.

Holmes' Comet of 1899 (so called on account of its discovery by Mr. Holmes, of the Parish of Islington in London, England,) met with an untoward fate somewhere between the two planets Mars and Jupiter, for on one night it maintained its accustomed aspect and appearance, while upon the telescope being directed towards it on the following evening, it presented such a disrupted and battered appearance as to indicate that it must have come into violent or direct collision with some dark (or opaque) foreign body in those vast regions of interplanetary space and have come off (like a certain Marathon athlete of whom we used to hear so often) greatly and decidedly "the worse for the encounter." A study of not less than twenty-nine years' duration in this marvelous science of astronomy has taught me not to be surprised at anything; for in astronomy (as in baseball or badminton) nothing is so certain as the uncertain: nothing so likely to happen as the wholly and entirely unexpected.

So whether or not Halley's Comet, in its enormous orbital sweep of over twelve billion of miles (far beyond the outermost known planet of the solar system), "comes to grief," nothing but time and the future can tell.

So that all vicissitudes being considered, I sincerely trust that if the comet should appear in August or September (months before its time), or not till June or July, (as many months after its time), or even become deflected from its course altogether and not appear at all, your readers will blame not the bard, or in other words, cast no stream of scorn or indignation upon the humble correspondent who is telling them not what might happen but only what is expected to happen.

But perhaps, after all, I ought to have commenced my article, after a very eminent and exalted precedent, not with a mass of statements and facts, but with a solitary question.

It is recorded that the late Marquis of Salisbury in one of his half-humorous, half-bantering moods, upon one occasion completely staggered his political opponents in the House of Commons by asking them the simple and apparently harmless question, What is a pound? But had he inquired, What is a comet? he might have staggered not only the whole House of Commons, but the whole house of Israel and Judah combined; for a comet, though partaking of stellar characteristics, is not a star, and though containing planetary properties, is not a planet, nor, though closely resembling the nebulae, is it a nebulae.

The late Earl of Stanhope, on his elevation in 1904 to the office of secretary of state for war, in the cabinet of Great Britain or Ireland, created a brand-new official at the head of the war department, and called him by the title of "judge-advocate-general," concerning whom a witty member on the opposition benches once said, "This wonderful brand-new judge-advocate-general is de facto neither a judge, nor an advocate, nor a general," and in like manner, a comet is neither a star, nor a planet, nor a nebulae. Of all the celestial bodies known to man or the science of astronomy there is surely no more sorely abused and misunderstood member of all the celestial system than a comet.

Even the splendid Halley's Comet, the subject of our sketch, has been anathematized by papal encyclical and solemnly cursed by "bell, book, and candle." Thus we read in Rollins' History of the World, page 916, that "In the year 1456, during the appearance of the great comet, (known as Halley's Comet, from being discovered by an English astronomer of that name) a papal bull was fulminated by Pope Calixtus against the "Turk, the plague, and the comet," and that all church bells were ordered to be rung during the reading of this papal anathema." No more strikingly suggestive commentary in the whole universe could possibly have been adduced than the barest supposition (for even the fractional part of an instant) of the colossal vanity of mere earth-worms (Job 25:5, 6) to imagine that this enormous and brilliant celestial body, equaling, if not even surpassing, the angular diameter and circumference of the sun in yonder skies, followed by an immense train of 111,000,000 miles in length, and careering along in space at the vast velocity of 50,000 miles a minute and 3,000,000 miles an hour, could have been arrested in its fiery orbit, or deflected in its flight, by all the papal bulls that ever fulminated since the first pope sat on the papal sedilia (or papal chair).

Well and truly has the ancient patriarch soliloquized in those pregnant and profound words: "Surely man at his best estate is altogether nothing and vanity."—Psalm 39:5. And in no single instance has man demonstrated his transcendent and stupendous vanity more egregiously than in boasting that he has "harnessed the lightning, chained the thunder, and subdued the mighty forces of nature."

Just one glance at the "Registrar General's annual report of deaths by violent causes," and one glance at the column headed, "Deaths from lightning," is surely sufficient to dissipate and dispel, once for all, any such empty vaunt or idle boast. Indeed it is a very debatable point among meteorologists whether the deaths from lightning in the large cities where man has, as he imagines, "chained the lightning," by harnessing it to his electric cars and his multitudinous telephone and telegraph wires, are not many times more numerous than seen in the vast miles of open and arable country surrounding his great cities. Certainly statistics, if they prove anything at all, prove that damage and loss to property from this cause, and from this cause alone, has amounted to tens and even hundreds of millions of dollars; yet many have, we are bombastically told, not only harnessed the thunder, but chained the lightning.

Comets, and indeed every other of the vast physical powers of nature, such as earthquakes and volcanic eruptions, have ever since the primordial ages, in the long-forgotten past, not only defied the vaunted prowess of mankind, but have added, in letters of glaring and gleaming fire, their awful confirmation of the sacred dictum that despite his boasted supremacy, man is "crushed before the moth" (Job 4:19); and that, "like grass in the morning," he "groweth up, but in the evening he is cut down and withered" (Psalm 90:6), and thus solemnly does God's prophetic word seem to clinch and close up the one sad, dreadful scene in an awful sentence. "Surely the people is grass" (Isaiah 40:7). But oh, what mountains of peace, what oceans of comfort, not only to the Latter Day Saints, but to all them, who in every church and nation "call upon the name of the Lord" and try, however feebly and dimly, to "follow him." There resides in the concluding stanza of this sublime song of inspiration: "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of the Lord shall stand for ever" (Isaiah 40:8)!

And again he has said, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Matthew 24:35. And again, blessed the thought: "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father."—John 14:21.

And he that loveth Christ will not only seek and strive to "keep his commandments"; but will "love his brother also"; "for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"—1 John 4:20, 21.

I must crave the pardon of my readers for this unintended digression, and am sure that all those who know the writer will kindly pardon his digressions, as the Master has mercifully promised, and not only promised, but has done.

Comets are of two kinds, though this fact is perhaps known and recognized, only by those who have made the science of astronomy a study. There are comets and comets, just as there are planets and planets, or planetoids, or meteors and meteors. The moment the word comet is mentioned the hearer (or reader) pictures the fiery globe followed by an immense and glowing or coruscating tail, sweeping away like a huge sword or scimeter, with a mighty sweep that seems to cover perhaps a third of the heavens.

By the by, I was one time illustrating the passage and phenomena of cometary nebulae to an audience in the church in Toronto and totally forgot for the time being, that at least seven tenths of the audience had never seen a comet in their lives, the simple fact being that they were too young. The last great comet (as it was called) appeared in April of the year 1882, and consequently all of my readers who are below twenty-seven years of age, or even below thirty, can have no accurate or distinct recollection of the phenomenon which then appeared in the southern heavens like an immense globe of white fire, followed by a tail subtending and arc of over fifty-nine degrees, and two hundred million miles in length and appearing like an immense drawn sword or extended scimeter. Just such a fiery and magnificent appearance must have been presented by the coming comet of 1910, upon its appearance in 1456, when solemnly and vehemently anathematized by "bell, book, and candle," as related in an earlier part of the present article; but I have no doubt that as in the curse alluded to in the poem of the "Jackdaw of Rheims," when the Jackdaw stole the Cardinal's ring, and they cursed him in eating,

"They cursed him in eating,
They cursed him in drinking,
They cursed him in sleeping,
They cursed him in winking,
They cursed him in walking,
They cursed him in lying,
They cursed him in living,
They cursed him in dying.

Yet strange to relate of this terrible curse,
That no one was ever a penny the worse."

The comet is now probably some twenty-six millions of miles to the earthward side of Jupiter, and rushing along toward the orbit of Mars.

Returning for just one minute to my recent remark as to the youth of probably thousands of my readers, and to the consequent fact that they could not have seen a comet, I do not wish to be understood as saying that since the year 1882 no comets whatever have visited our solar system; for as a matter of fact there have really been hundreds during that period; but these were only telescopic comets, for the most part; namely, comets which are only visible in a telescope or an opera glass; not because they are necessarily very small objects, for this is far from being the case, but simply because they are either situated at so great a distance from our system as to be invisible to the naked eye, or at such an angle of inclination as to render their approach or recession so apparently similar as to remain for the most part unobserved.

A great comet, on the other hand, such as Bida's, Encke's, Perrine's, Temple's, Coggia's, Donati's, or the comet of Halley is usually quite visible to the naked eye for at least six or eight weeks, some even for six months; and more than one of the above named messengers from the far distance of interstellar space has been distinctly visible even at broad daylight.

The comet of 1882 was visible for nine months (an extraordinarily long interval) and Professor W. H. Pickering records that at that time it traversed 340 celestial degrees. Its period is one thousand years and its tail reaches the vast and enormous expanse of not less than 200,000,000 miles. A little judicious "patience and calculation combined" (as Mr. Arnold Foster used to say, has brought home to my mind the very surprising fact that the tail of this comet would go around our earth 5,714 times; with a nice little hanging fringe or boah of 10,000 miles to spare. The "period" of a cometary body means the time (or period) elapsing between the perihelion passage during which it is first observed, and its next return to our solar system. Thus some idea may be gained of the incalculably vast ellipse in space which is traversed by this mighty celestial object, when notwithstanding a comet's extreme velocity of motion, an entire millennium is required ere the eyes of the inhabitants of any member of the solar system can possibly behold it again; for its next perihelion will be in November of the year 2882.

It has been remarked by Argelander, I think, that it is only the comets with the greatest diameter of nucleus and the longest appendage of tail which approach nearest the sun. Comets were at one time supposed to be erratic and wild celestial bodies, which portended war, earthquake, pestilence, and disaster; and were subject to neither the law of gravitation, nor centrifugal force, nor, in fact, to any of the known laws of the celestial worlds. The steady and persistent march of scientific research and achievement has, however, long since shattered this, along with many other delusions of mediævalism and the Dark Ages. Comets are now known to move (in obedience to the laws of gravitation) in either one of four courses or orbits: First, circles; second, ellipses (or ovals); third, parabolas, or hyperbolas, (the last two being sections of a cone). Of course of these four classes or divisions the comets moving in either of the first two orbits are bound to return to this system (or to our sun) in a period governed by the number of millions of miles of the diameter of the circular or elliptical orbit in which they are moving, as the case may be. But a comet moving in a parabolic orbit, would not return, unless, as in the case of Vigo's Comet, or the comet of 1861, the influence of Jupiter or of some other great planet of our solar system, converted by its superior gravitational attraction, the parabolic into a circular or elliptical orbit; while a comet moving in the last of the four classes of orbits, viz, the hyperbolic orbit, could never under any known possibility, return to our solar system, a hyperbola being a geometrical conic section in which the angle made by the base and one side, is greater than the angle made by the two sides.

I must now verify my promise to inform my readers as to the probable effects of cometary juxtaposition (or the near approach of a large comet to our earthly planet) and then draw my entire essay to a conclusion. To do this, dear brethren and sisters, I must revert to a remark I made earlier in this article, to the effect that there are comets and comets. By this I mean that not all comets are of the brilliantly imposing and resplendent variety with which we are most familiar. Some comets there are which instead of being brilliantly luminous are opaque or dark bodies, and, strange as it may at first sight appear, the latter class are by far the more dangerous bodies of the two, if ever a collision should take place (which God forbid) between a comet and our earth.

An opaque or dark comet is a large, ponderous, and solid body, which, until it came sufficiently near to be illumined by the sun's rays, and thus to be visible at night time, would remain wholly unsuspected, because unseen, by the entire mass of the earth's inhabitants, or of Mars, or Venus, or indeed any other planet with which it might chance to come into proximity, until the actual impact of its dark and unseen body told the sad and direful tale of the comet's actual presence in the vicinity. Providentially this class of comets is far from numerous, like the other kind.

But in the case of a luminous comet the danger is greatly minimized from two principal causes, viz, first, the much greater tenuity (or lightness) of this class of comet; and, secondly, from the direction of the comet's tail which of course marks the actual direction of the comet's flight. I remember, for instance, while yet in London, England, in 1882, the alarm which was created all over England by the portentous dimensions of the great comet of that year, and in particular from the imposing and alarming sweep of the enormous tail; but in an astronomical lecture which I delivered at a large meeting-hall, I attempted to allay the fears of the people by telling them that the very fact of the tail being thus visible at right angles to the head of the comet, was in reality the greatest evidence and guarantee of our earth's safety, for it showed that the comet, so far from coming in a direct line towards the earth, is in reality moving away at an angle of between forty and fifty degrees to the south and southeast of our planet. I endeavored to enforce this idea the more vividly and convincingly by alluding to a very well known fact of common observation, on the line of our various railroads, etc. I inquired of my audience what danger would they be in from being crushed or killed by a railway train, no matter how great its velocity, so long as they were able to see not only the engine, but the long line of coaches or carriages behind it as well. Would not that very fact prove that the entire train was moving away, either to the right or to the left of them; and that thus their position was one of absolute safety? Whereas to a person standing on or walking directly in the track of the oncoming train and whose position was really one of imminent peril and immediate danger, would not be able to see the long line of carriages following the engine. All he could see would be the one startling and blazing headlight of the engine itself (or if in the day time, only the front of the engine). "Now do you not see the point?" I inquired. "The engine represents the blazing head (or nucleus) of the comet while the long train of coaches represents the tail." Thus, as long as we can see the immense train (or tail) of yon fiery, flying object, we must be sideways, or at right angles to the comet itself; but were our earth in a direct line of the comet's path, we should only see the comet's head with no tail visible, just as the man on the railway track and in danger of instant death, could see nothing more than the headlight of the swiftly approaching engine." I must confess a feeling of gladness when I saw the look of alarm vanish from the faces of the assembled audience and a look of relief take its place, and at the close of the lecture many of them stepped forward to shake hands and thank me for having (as they said) made the point so plain. Thus, a tailless comet (or at least a comet which appears to have none) is really in a more dangerous position with reference to our earth, than either Donati's or the great comet of 1881 or 1882, or Halley's, or indeed any known comet with the most stupendous and propentious tail that ever affrighted poor trembling humanity in all the dark ages of fear, priestcraft, and superstition that ever betokened or accompanied the spiritual and intellectual bondage of Rome.

Repeated and continued spectroscopic analyses and examinations of comets have long since established as a fact what Sir William Herschel long ago suspected, viz, the electrical nature and character of cometary nuclei or head, and also possibly of the tails of these wondrous and mysterious visitants from the far distant regions of space. The spectroscope applied to the light received from the head of a comet has revealed, beyond cavil or contradiction, the combined meteoric and electric character and nature of their light; and thus, also, of their physical composition.

Speaking upon this important and significant fact, Professor E. I. Pickering, of Harvard University Observatory, remarks that "It has been shown by Professor J. J. Thomson, (Proceedings of the Royal Society,) that if hydrogen gas is charged positively (that is, electrified positively) the green line in its spectrum will be brighter than the red; and on the other hand, if negatively charged, the red will be brighter than the green. In the case of our sun the red is the brighter line; so that we now know a fact of supreme importance in all our future investigations, viz, "That the solar surface is charged negatively." This sublime fact accounts, not only for the violent electrical solar storms, which our earth so frequently receives during the prevalence of the maximum of sun spots, or Aurora Borealis, or large cometary bodies, and incidentally explains why a solar electrical thunderstorm is invariably so intensely more destructive of life and property than a merely terrestrial thunderstorm, as Sir William Maunder has again and again conclusively demonstrated and pointed out in his many valuable contributions to scientific knowledge. Professor Pickering concludes by remarking that "while there is little danger to our earth from comets which are known to be moving at an angle diverse or oblique to the place of our ecliptic, yet if a comet were to be moving at or in the plane of our orbit, (thus accompanying the earth on its journey, so to speak,) the electricity and cometary matter of gas thus received from the comet, would be so great as to virtually destroy all life, whether animal or vegetable, before the comet had come within the distance of one hundred thousand miles from our planet."

The Saints, however, I need scarcely add, need not fear any catastrophe such as that, "With such a prop and such a hope as our eternal God, who bears the earth's huge pillars up, and spreads the skies abroad."

HEALTH AND WEALTH IN THE WORD OF WISDOM. —PART III.

To further quote from the Government bulletin:

In our actual practice of eating we are apt to be too much influenced by taste or rather to let an acquired appetite overrule natural instinct and teachings of experience. We need to observe diet and its effects and regulate appetite by reason; we may be greatly aided in this by knowing what our food contains and how it serves its purpose of nutrition.

Three principal elements are found in food: 1. Protein, whose office is to build and repair the structure of the body tissues. 2. Carbohydrates to be burned up in the body and generate its energy and develop warmth. 3. Fat, which is a concentrated form of the carbohydrates to act as a reserve fuel should the supply diminish.

Protein is found in lean meat, beans, and peas, the cereals and nuts; carbohydrates in the cereals, pulses, fruits, vegetables, and nuts; fats in nuts, meats, cereals. Thus you see that cereals and nuts possess all three of these essential elements in quantities to make a good food balance in themselves while meat entirely lacks the energy-forming carbohydrates and we have to add nutriment from the vegetable kingdom to get a balance.

The relative cost of protein from our foods is about, meat $1.00, cereals 65 cents, beans 29 cents, potatoes 75 cents per pound of protein (of which the average man needs a quarter-pound each day). It is interesting to note that the humble peanut ranks as high as any of the expensive meats (at a far less cost) besides carrying additional value in its store of carbohydrates and oils.

This helps us to understand why it is said in the Word of Wisdom "nevertheless, wheat for man," because wheat is even more a properly balanced food in itself; it contains protein for the repair of his body, carbohydrates in abundance that he may run energetically, and fat to store away for time of need: and all this at less than one eighth the cost of the same from a meat diet.

Another remarkable note in the bulletin:

We have been considering food as a source of heat and muscular power. There is no doubt that intellectual activity, also, is somehow dependent upon the consumption of material which the brain has obtained from the food, but just what substances are consumed to produce brain and nerve force, are questions which the physiological chemist has not yet answered.

How does this compare with statement that those who observe the Word of Wisdom, shall find great treasures of knowledge, even hidden wisdom? How does it harmonize with the account of the three Hebrew lads we read of in the first chapter of Daniel, him who afterward saw and interpreted the king's vision of the kingdoms of the earth, their rise and fall and the setting up of this latter-day work? Is it not an answer in itself of the spiritual value of the counsel given?

Those "last" of "latter days" are upon us; Christ said of them, "They [men] shall be eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage." Has not man always been doing so since his earliest time? Then this points to an abnormal state of these things to mark the time; you easily discern it in the divorce problem, you may recognize it also in the carelessness of man in his diet; he applies even less reason to its importance than he does to that of his stable, stock, or pets. Note again from the Government bulletin:

How much harm is done by injurious compounds formed from ordinary wholesome foods is seldom realized; some combinations affect the brain and nerves, and some forms of insanity are caused by products formed by the abnormal transformations of food and body material.

Thus, while we may acquire wisdom by observance we also may avoid disaster or discomfiture such as the world is rushing into headlong in this "time of surfeiting."

As we have seen, meats and the coarser vegetables may form a balance of diet with bread stuffs; grains and fruits form a natural combination, also fruit and nuts, which possess the additional advantage of eliminating cooking, for nature has already performed that office; in fact all dried fruits and nuts have a higher nutritive ratio than the ordinary table affords, and may take the place of higher-priced and more troublesome viands with profit to all. Fruits and vegetables, as a rule, should not be eaten closely together,—use one or the other at different meals.

The habit of chewing should be cultivated,—remember that half-as-much, chewed twice-as-long, will furnish three-times as much good. Liquids should be used sparingly at meal times, also all those "soft" dishes which induce a habit of quick-swallowing.

All liquids much hotter or colder than the natural warmth of the body should be subject to suspicion. Why? The extremes of heat and cold play havoc with the formative structure of the teeth, which become impaired; chewing is neglected, thereby the food is swallowed too soon, and there is trouble "all along the line." Train your children not to desire ice-drinks and hot coffee, and to steer clear of eating ice from the wagon and "red hots" from any one's table. Let them use their teeth and keep them. A few nuts every day, well chewed, form a good lubricant for the body internally and keep the teeth in order by exercise.

LEAVES FROM LIFE.

A TRIBUTE TO ROBERT PERRIE.

On the hot sultry evening of September 4, 1903, I met amongst the hills—those everlasting hills of West Virginia, at the pleasant home of Henry Dobbs, a few miles south of Glen Easton, Marshall County, the subject of this short life-sketch, Robert Perrie.

Subsequent to this meeting, upon an exchange of thought, we discovered that both possessed like feelings for each other, namely, as if we were long-parted friends, and but renewing our old acquaintance. Who can give light and knowledge upon this peculiar sensation that by times almost amounts to a certainty of a former association? Perhaps this is that which comes under the denomination of affinity of spirit.

Our brother was born May 14, 1845, at Muirkirk, Ayrshire, Scotland, and eight years later the family came to America, and for a while made their home at Cameron, Pennsylvania. Sometime later they moved over into Canada, and after a sojourn of a few years there came back to Pennsylvania, locating at Mingo. At this place he made a profession of religion in the Methodist Church when about eighteen years old, and was licensed a local preacher. It was in this locality that he made the acquaintance of Miss Emeline A. Brown, a daughter of Elder James and Mary Brown. Many of the old-time Saints will remember Bro. Brown as an early pioneer and successful missionary of the Reorganization in Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Ohio, and the Pan-handle of West Virginia.

November 8, 1864, these young people were married at Mingo by the pastor of the Methodist Church. Of this union were born thirteen children; two sons and five daughters still live, all married except the youngest son. The other six are with the silent majority.

For awhile they were at Elkhorn, and Bro. Perrie was superintendent of the mine. Thence to Rankin, where he and his father were in partnership with the mine owner. While thus engaged one of those widespread and disastrous strikes took place, and all the savings of years were swept away. He and others made a trip to the Pacific coast in quest of a fortune. Exposure while along the Columbia River brought on a severe illness, from which he never fully recovered; the whole nervous system was wrecked and shattered. He returned and made Fayette City his home till the time of his demise.

He served as a burgess for three years, and as janitor of the public school for four years. To me both merchants, bankers, and editor spoke well of him as an honest man and upright of character.

The principles of the restored gospel were taught to him by his father-in-law and Elder W. W. Blair, and after a prolonged illness and a covenant made with God that if life were spared he would obey the truth and unite with the church, so in due time he and his wife repaired to Pittsburg, and were baptized by the late deceased elder, George H. Hulmes, June 26, 1895, and were confirmed by Elders George H. Hulmes, Jacob Reese, and Frank Criley. This was the initial in starting the Fayette City Branch, and these parties took letters of removal from the Pittsburg Branch and were charter members in this new organization. He was ordained to the office of elder at Banning, May 24, 1896, under the hands of Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths. In this office he labored locally and was also under appointment to do missionary service in the district.

After we became better acquainted and I had the watchcare of the work in the Pittsburg District, it was my painful duty to labor with him for using tobacco, and I found not a stubborn, self-willed victim of the evil habit, but a conscientious struggling man, anxious to escape the thralldom of this vice-like grip upon the flesh against the will of the spirit. And what a happy man, with such thankfulness of soul, did he rejoice when freed from those chains of bondage that bind its millions.

He was a man of natural judicial ability, and but needed the finished polish of education and law-training, and he would have made a most excellent and impartial judge. I was with him through a trial. He was chairman of the elders' court, and he was suffering with an attack of pneumonia, and the last day of the trial was pillowed up in bed, nevertheless, he was all attention, and alert to the evidence and the argument.

Not without fault, by any means, was this our brother, and by times did those things that brought sorrow and mortification to his family and the Saints, all of which let us think of as written upon the sand and washed away by the ebb and flow of the tide of time. Those of the world may ape after the evil-hearted son of Noah, and take pleasure in being Hamish; but the children of the light as revealed in the restored gospel will find much pleasure of mind in this present life, and profit of priceless worth in the world and life to come, by seeking to emulate the charitable act of Noah's eldest son, and thus become Shemish to all their fellow associates in the conflict for the crown of glory with eternal life. Man's inhumanity to his fellow man still causes countless thousands to mourn, and because he is misunderstood, is too frequently misrepresented, and that is why their faults should be as snow in the August sun, and their virtues as the beautiful granite of Stirling, Scotland.

Our brother was chairman of the committee that built the neat little Saints' chapel of Fayette City. He took considerable pride in its erection, and worked thereon all that his physical strength would permit, was anxious to see it freed from debt, but this pleasure was denied him; for the pale reaper called, and he fell peacefully asleep in the Lord with a lively hope of a part in the first resurrection, June 25, 1906.

My task is completed, and there will ever hang upon memory's wall a pleasant remembrance of this departed brother.

Hopeful in Christ,
ROBERT M. ELVIN.

HAPPINESS.

A critical observer, as he passes along the crowded streets of some of our large cities, sees many types and expressions of face, which convey many and varied thoughts with them. He sees many countenances which plainly tell the tales of anxious cares, worry, business perplexities, degradation, etc., but how very, very few on which are imprinted as a condition of the heart, body and mind, real, true, lasting happiness. True, in his walk he meets face to face those who are occupying the highest ranks of life and society and have for the mere asking all that education, rank, and wealth can supply, but strange to say, it is on these faces we see the least signs of real happiness. I do not say that such is always the case, but such is indeed the rule rather than the exception. True happiness is seldom found, when most generally expected, because of the fact that so few—so very few—understand the conditions necessary to produce really happy lives. The things the world expects to make happiness often, alas, produce but the opposite effect, while those individuals, whom they may deem miserable and unhappy, because of the lack of certain qualities and conditions, are the ones generally who are happiest.

As this is a question which concerns all classes and conditions everywhere and at all times, it may be profitable for us to inquire into the causes and conditions productive of real happiness. Let us then begin by learning that real, lasting, and ennobling happiness is a condition of the human mind, rather than of our surroundings, our outward environments, and we have taken one long step toward a solution. And to prove the truthfulness of this assertion we have but to look into some of the most beautiful and wealthy homes to see the least true happiness—oftentimes positive misery—and then into the most humble surroundings of some country fireside to see those who are enjoying the most that life affords. I have known of instances of those behind prison walls, who have carried into those dreary cells hearts and minds so disciplined and educated along these lines that those places have been transformed into places of glory and sacred beauty because of their presence therein. True happiness consists, not in our surroundings or associations, though truly these may and often do have a tendency to modify our condition in a degree, but more truly it consists in a mind and heart contented, patient, true, and one that is at peace with itself, the world, and its God. It is a body held in subjection, by discipline and education of the self, so that while it excludes the darkness, evil and undesirable, it is readily open to all truth, all good, all charity and Christian love. Happiness is the rare art of seeing good in the seeming evil, the bright side instead of the dark side of life. It is determined mind and purpose of the heart to learn and believe that all things work for good to those who love God, and who, while they may be surrounded by poverty and distress, yet look and hope for a better and more satisfactory future. And such ones are those whose hopes are most speedily realized. That individual who has accepted the gospel, who tries to live for others as well as self, whose aim is to make the world better by his presence and to glorify in his life and body his Creator, is the one most happy here, and surely in the hereafter.

I have spoken of true happiness. There is a false happiness, as well. The pleasures of the world, the dance, the ball-room, cards, Sunday sinfulness in all that the word implies, living for self and self interest, all these and many more are false pleasures and happiness, because they are transitory and brief and are sure to be followed sooner or later by the opposite effect, sadness and misery. "The wages of sin is death." How true the words of the poet, Gray,

"The boast of heraldry; the pomp of power;
And all that beauty, all that wealth ere gave,
Await, alike the inevitable hour,
The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Then if we draw the correct conclusions from this, we may sum up by saying that to be truly happy one must first of all leave false happiness—sin; and by striving to live the Christ life, by learning to content ourselves with our conditions and environments such as can not be improved, by living for others and for the good of God's creation and to his honor and glory, we shall become more and more perfected in the art of true happiness and finally arrive in that blessed condition when it will be difficult to be unhappy, if we were so disposed. And if we do this others will be happier by our daily presence; the gloom and sadness of earth dispelled as far as our little lamp shines out into its darkness and the very angels in heaven will have cause to rejoice because of our influence in turning some from the ways of sin to the paths of righteousness and peace.

Of General Interest

CONCERNING INDIANS.

It is reported that Oklahoma proposes to place a statue of Sequoia, the great Cherokee, in the capitol at Washington. There is in the capitol a hall devoted to statuary, where each State is entitled to be represented by two of its public men. The collection grows but slowly, says the Southern Workman, and if report be true Oklahoma will honor the inventor of the Cherokee alphabet with a place in it.

The mere mention of Sequoia in this connection shows a keen appreciation, by the white man, of the efforts of this Indian for the elevation of his people through the art of writing.

Sequoia could neither read nor write in any language, and could speak but a few words of any tongue other than his native Cherokee. But he saw that the white man had a system of communicating thoughts by means of written characters other than picture-writing. While living in Georgia in the first decade of the nineteenth century, and with an old English spelling-book, it is said, for his guide, he devised the Cherokee alphabet of eighty-five letters. Analyzing the sounds of the Cherokee tongue, he used many of the letters that he found in the spelling-book, applying them, however, to uses entirely different from their English use, and for additional sounds he used modifications of the English characters or new ones which he invented. He is said to have been eleven years in working out his plan, and he suffered meantime constant ridicule. On its completion he had a very complete and perfect system. An alphabet of eighty-five letters seems somewhat formidable, but so easily was it acquired that in a few months many of the tribe had learned to read and write. Meantime the Cherokees had removed to what is now Oklahoma, and Sequoia, then probably fifty or sixty years old, spent the remainder of his life in teaching his system.

Arrangements have been completed for the dedication, on June 27, on a farm one mile from Mobridge, in Walworth County, South Dakota, of a granite monument to the "Fool Soldier" band of Indians who, in 1862, rescued two white women and four children who had been stolen from Lake Chetek by a band of Sioux.

The rescue by a little band of Indians, young men who were friendly to the whites, was heroic in the extreme, and has become part of the history of Indian warfare of the Northwest. The monument will be erected under the auspices of the Walworth County Pioneer Association and the South Dakota State Historical Society, and Doane Robinson, secretary of the Historical Society, will deliver the address.

As an evidence of the attitude of Congress towards the Indians and their affairs, we note that at the last session one thousand dollars was appropriated to build a monument to Cynthia Ann Parker, mother of Quanah Parker, the popular chief of the Comanches. The significant action thus taken is unique, and affords another proof of the generosity shown by our Government in its dealings with the Indians during later years.

Blonde Indians are as rare as Indian blondes. Yet there are such. Witness Mrs. B. H. Colbert of Oklahoma. She is an Indian—not a full-blood, but with enough aboriginal blood in her veins to preserve many of the traits of the prairie race. And she is a blonde of an extreme type. Her complexion is that of a babe, her eyes are the brightest of blue, her hair is the real golden shade. She is proud of her Indian ancestry, much prouder than of her white descent. In fact, despite her peaches and cream coloring, she is none too fond of palefaces. Mrs. Colbert lives in Tishomingo. She is a Chickasaw and is accredited with exceptional ability.—The Indian's Friend, (New York City), June, 1909.

Hymns and Poems

Selected and Original

Passed from Death unto Life.

"He asked life of Thee, and thou gavest him a long life, even for ever and ever."—Psalm 21: 4.

He is not dead, but only lieth sleeping
In the sweet refuge of his Master's breast,
And far away from sorrow, toil, and weeping
He is not dead, but only taking rest.

What though the highest hopes he dearly cherished
All faded gently as the setting sun:
What though our own fond expectations perished
Ere yet life's noblest labors seemed begun.

What though he standeth at no earthly altar,
Yet in white raiment, on the golden floor,
Where love is perfect, and no step can falter,
He serveth as a priest for evermore!

O glorious end of life's short day of sadness,
O blessed course so well and nobly run!
O home of true and everlasting gladness,
O crown unfading! and so early won!

Though tears will fall we bless thee, O our Father,
For the dear one for ever with the blest,
And wait the Easter dawn when thou shalt gather Thine own, long parted, to their endless rest.

—Reverend R. H. Baynes.

Supplication.

In thee our God we place our trust,
We hope to do thy will;
We pray that thou wilt give us light
And lead us onward still.

May peace attend us day by day,
And may we will to do
The things that thou hast taught us, Lord,
And evermore be true.

Direct us by thy Spirit, Lord,
And make us firm and strong;
With courage may we do the right
And thus refrain from wrong.

'Tis life to serve thee, gracious Lord,
Incline our hearts to thee
In love, in truth, and righteousness,
And thus, Lord, make us free.

Could we but do thy blessed will,
These hearts would beat as one,
And with the christlike love possessed
We'd say, Thy will be done.
But through the weakness of the flesh
And blindness of our eyes,
We seek to gratify our-lusts,
The weak ones we despise.

But, Lord, we know that thou art true,
Our hope is in thy love,
We pray that thou wilt lead us through
To brighter realms above;

O hear us, then, we humbly plead,
We need thine aid to-day,
Forgive wherein we're lacking, Lord,
And turn our sins away.

In thee alone we place our trust,
None other can suffice;
Yea, Lord, we are thine heritage,
We're purchased with a price.
We therefore plead that thou wilt hear
And answer from thy throne,
Yea, give instructions that we need
And make thy presence known.

That we may see and feel and know
That thou are ever God,
And learn to follow in the steps
And paths that Jesus trod,
We thus beseech of thee, oh Lord,
As here we humbly pray,
That thou wilt give us purer thoughts
And change our night to day.

Increase our trust, increase our hope,
And give us faith as well,
That we may labor, Lord, each day
The gospel news to tell.
Thus trusting thee our strength, our all,
Our hopes on thee depend;
We pray that thou wilt comfort us
And keep us to the end.

Kelley, 916 West Electric Street, Independence, Missouri.

COLTON, California, May 31, 1909.

Dear Sr. Walker: I am aware that it has been some time since I wrote anything for the "Column." I have allowed my time to be taken up with home pursuits; unsettled for a few months, then getting settled in our new home in Colton, Southern California. We are now quite well settled, but a home is never finished, especially a new home. Almost every day bespeaks something that needs to be added. I have thought of a little instance when we were getting our first outfit for keeping house. I said to mother, "When I get a dust pan (and some other trifle I now forget what) I will have all I want." To which she replied: "My girl, you will find that your wants have just commenced." But the life that then lay before us is well nigh spent, and our wants are not so many now.

Amid the joy of home-making there has come, at times, the sad thought that we were not to enjoy it long together. Mr. Burton has been very poorly. About conference time I thought the end was near—nervous prostration and heart trouble. But he has so far recovered again as to be able to visit the Saints of Los Angeles, though not yet able for church work. This visit was with a view to mutual benefit. He knew that to mingle with the Saints so dear to his heart would do him good, and hope the same for those with whom he visits. I look for his return to-morrow.

All, I believe, are interested in the work in the Islands, and I am pleased to have this to say of our young missionaries out there alone. The last Island mail brought, besides the long letters from Alberta and Charlie, giving an account of the sad loss of Metuaore and state of things in the Islands, the Orametua, their monthly periodical, and also two neatly gotten up yearly lesson books, one for the Religio and one for the children's Sunday-school lesson book, in both of which were good-sized colored maps. The preparation of these books, together with the translating and printing, means work, a feature in the missionary line of which neither of those two are afraid or shrink from in the least, and both Joseph and I, with our long experience among that peculiar but kind-hearted people, are well pleased with their method of carrying on the mission work. They themselves will be rewarded for their untiring diligence. But whether it will be of any more lasting benefit to the Islanders than an interesting entertainment, eternity only will reveal; for so far, time has not bespoken the results of the labor bestowed. The Book of Mormon will be new and interesting to them a long time yet, and since they are a portion of the people to whom it was written, it may have power to convert them from the error of their old customs. God grant that it may. If only the missionaries were allowed to teach them the English language, then indeed would the labor be worth while. But it is not allowed, so they can but be faithful to their mission and leave the results to the Master. I am glad help is being sent to them, especially since they are deprived of Metuaore to consult with, and Hotu and William stay away at distant islands. If there is a mission in the church that needs to be upheld before God in prayer, it is the island mission, cut off as they are from help of the rest of the church because of the different language.

Since writing the above I have read Sr. Alberta's letter in the newly arrived Ensign. How plainly with my mind's eye I could see the place and the people, and entered into their feeling of sorrow and wept! I felt ashamed, too, of my lack of faith in the result of labor bestowed. Metuaore was an exception in life as well as in death. He received the true spirit of the gospel which many have not, but we hope there are better days in store for them. We rejoice greatly in Rere's return to the church with his wife also. We always thought they were good people. They were deceived, but their return shows that at heart they were good. I remember how his son wept the first time he led the prayer-meeting in Tarena after his parents were cut off from the church. He said it seemed hard that after his father had been so careful to teach him the gospel and get him into the church that he should now leave it himself.

Facts About the Fly Which Every One Should Know.

The common house-fly is a carrier of disease. Typhoid fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, and tuberculosis are carried by flies.

Flies feed on food and also on filth. They go from the one to the other. In this way they carry disease germs to the table. One fly may convey six million bacteria.

Flies breed in manure heaps, outhouses, refuse, ash-pits, and all decomposing animal or vegetable matter, and unclean places. Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. If such exist, cover with lime or kerosine oil, and remove as early as possible.

See that your sewerage system is in good order.

Screen all food; cover food after a meal; burn all scraps and refuse.

Screen all windows and doors.

Burn pyrethrum powder in the house if flies should gain entrance.

If there is no filth there will be no flies.—Harper's Weekly.

Letter Department

TORONTO, Canada, May 18, 1909.

Dear Herald: A correspondent having written to me, pointed out, in a most kind and brotherly manner, a discrepancy in my last letter. My statement was to the effect that Zion (or Jerusalem) in Palestine, and Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, were both on the same parallel of thirty-two and one half degrees north latitude; while as my correspondent points out, Jackson County (Independence, I mean) is really thirty-nine degrees or a little north of thirty-nine degrees, and Jerusalem thirty-two degrees or a quarter of a degree south of the thirty-second parallel. Thus, while virtually correct as to the latitude of Jerusalem, I am seven or eight degrees in error as to Independence, Missouri.

My correspondent thinks that the discrepancy probably arises from a printer's or compositor's error, but I am writing with the express purpose of stating that this is not the case; no one but myself is to blame for the mistake, the HERALD compositors having set the communication just as I penned it, and I think that I can truthfully yet humbly remark that in all my twenty-seven years experience of writing for the HERALD readers, I have always so carefully and so closely verified by testing in every method known to myself, the figures I have given your readers, that any astronomer conversant with the practical as well as the theoretical side of astronomy, will aver that I have understated, rather than overstated my facts, or the scientific facts I have endeavored to present and portray.

In the present instance I was misled by a large map of the world on Mercator's projection, which hung (and I believe still hangs) upon the walls of a government building, having, as it distinctly states, the "Sanction of Her Majesty's Government, and the Minister of the Department of Education," in which Zion, Mount Moriah, Bezetha and Acra, in the Holy City, Jerusalem, are on precisely the same parallel of north latitude as Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, for I myself traced the parallel of latitude from the Eastern to the Western Hemisphere. Whether that map was in error (for it was printed in the lifetime of our late lamented Queen Victoria), or whether the new maps from which the brother quotes in his letter are correct or not, I can not say.

I am also in receipt of another communication; this time from the wilds of Minnesota, in which a brother tells me that my calculations as to the area of the Holy City are all wrong, because I have said "1,500x1,500 square miles," instead of "miles square." Will any one kindly tell me the difference between a square mile and a mile square?

This reminds me of a story I read about a Scottish gentleman who went one summer to Norway for the fishing and was greatly disgusted to find that day after day his menu (or bill of fare) remained the same; viz, salmon and mustard, salmon and mustard, day after day. So he sent for the landlord and asked whether he could not have some variation from this perpetual salmon and mustard. "Certainly you can," said mine host, rubbing his hands. "What can I have, then?" said the guest, "instead of salmon and mustard?" "Why, mustard and salmon, to be sure!"

Well, hairsplitting as a fine art, is not confined to Minnesota, as I find by a good story from Bombay. The British Government can also split hairs on occasion; for in the present instance, as the story goes, an infantry officer was appointed to an outlying district in which his two stations were at least forty miles apart. So he wrote over for the government to send him a charger on which to ride from one station to the other. In due course came a reply from a war office clerk to the effect that, having consulted an ordnance map, he found that the distance from one station to the other was not forty, but only thirty-one miles, as the crow flies." This for a time nonplussed the officer; but presently a bright idea struck him. So he seized his pen and wrote as follows: "Dear Sir: There must be some misunderstanding regarding my recent letter of application. I did not ask for any crows, as I do not ride them. I asked for a horse." And he got it.

Yours truly,

F. R. TUBB.

CALABASAS, Los Angeles County, California.

Dear Herald: I have been reading your pages having so many good letters from the dear brothers and sisters, and I do so love to read them, and especially from some one I know. I thought perhaps some of them would like to hear a word from me. We live about twenty-eight miles from Los Angeles, and have not heard a Latter Day Saint sermon for about five years, and we did enjoy that very much. Of course, there are good sermons in the church papers, but that is not like hearing it from the mouth. I take the HERALD, Ensign, and Autumn Leaves. We have a fine home, with nearly all kinds of fruit and nuts, and raise lots of other crops. There are no other Latter Day Saints here and those who are isolated know what that means. I feel very sad at times to think that we can not be mingled with the Saints. Pray for us that we may not lose hold of the rod of iron that leads us to life eternal. May we not see others' faults so much, but look at our own. It is my earnest desire to be a true Saint of God, but the evil one seems to overpower us many times.

Hoping this will be of some interest to some of the Saints, I remain,

Your sister,

MRS. ANNIE BROOKS.

SNOHOMISH, Washington, June 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: Since parting with you at the close of our memorable General Conference, I have been about our Father's business. Left home April 29 in order to take advantage of reduced rates, thereby saving eleven dollars traveling expenses, and getting in my field of labor May 1. I stopped over and preached at Spokane, Ellensburg, Roslyn, Cle Elum, Washington. I also called at our former home, Liberty, where I presented the gospel eleven years ago; arriving at Seattle May 22, preaching to the Saints there in their very commodious hall, Labor Temple. All the Saints at the places named seemed glad to see Bro. Enge again. We are always glad to return where we are welcome; but of course very sorry to return where we are not wanted. Scant looks and slights are common experiences among the missionaries, so we console ourselves that we are not alone, and when we as a recompense feel the presence and guidings of "the Good Spirit" (notwithstanding our weakness and failings in the hour of temptation), then our seeming difficulties become molehills and we struggle onward again, hoping to find favor in other places.

In leaving Seattle, not yet having been informed who my immediate superior was, I concluded to go to Sedro Valley, where I was told some were interested; but when I arrived at the Union Station in Seattle, last Friday (28th) I seemed to be directed to this place, and when I arrived there and found Sr. Scott who told me the gospel had never been presented in this place, I was satisfied I had been directed aright. Sr. Addie Harris, of Presque Isle, Maine, (Bro. U. W. Greene will remember her; Bro. Sheehy likewise,) has been living the life of a true Saint here and is letting her light shine wherever she is. Her husband is favorable and we hope to see him one with us soon. I also found Bro. H. B. Fay, who is an elder. He presided some years ago over the Holt County Branch at Freiburg, Minnesota. He has been estranged somewhat, while isolated, but is now rallying to the standard. Then we also found our aged and devout Sr. Harriet Kennery from Michigan, who remembers well the martyred prophet. Then Bro. and Sr. Scoor, of Seattle Branch, are living near town. We met at Sr. Scott's last Saturday and decided to make an effort to get the truth before the people in the city. Oddfellows Hall was hired cheap and the writer called on Mr. Brown, editor of the Snohomish Tribune, published here. He gave us a few announcements and also upon request inserted a boiled down extract of our belief and organization, written by the writer; and though there were some omissions and errors, we are thankful as it is. I inclose it so you may see.

We have tried to be noticed, hoping to see good result some time in the future. I petitioned through Bro. Fay to have our Sunday evening service announced at the close of Memorial address at Congregational Church, but a Baptist minister present told the "comrade" in charge not to give it out, so I stepped on the street near the post-office yesterday evening, spoke twenty minutes and advertised our future intended meetings.

The Saints here feel encouraged; will organize a Sunday-school and do their best to establish the work. Hoping the Lord will speed the day when all seekers for truth may find it, and all the Saints assist with their talents and their mites, the missionaries in their labor, and the Lord's will will be done.

Say, Bro. Appleman, send your address to me at 902 Howard Avenue, North Seattle, and I will write you a letter. Hoping to accomplish my part of the Master's design, I will close,

Remaining as ever, your brother,

N. C. ENGE.

CAMERON, Missouri, June 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: We missionaries appreciate your letter department, are often encouraged by its cheering news and testimonies, and although we may have to brave the suspicion of having a desire to "toot our own horn," we sometimes feel a desire to reciprocate and tell of some of the good things we have found and the blessings received while trying to advance the Master's cause.

The writer returned from the General Conference strengthened and invigorated, and with renewed hope we take up the duties of another conference year, the Lord's promises of a bountiful harvest and added spiritual power still ringing in our ears, and inspiring us with courage for the conflict. The unity, sweet peace, and heart-warming love that characterized this conference can be naught but an omen of good. We are now getting into condition where the Lord can use us.

The thunder of the conference had rolled away, leaving the writer, as he thought, securely and safely settled for Eastern Iowa, when an afterclap sent him clear into California. Only figuratively, however, for he is not there yet, nor can he get there until the Saints remember the Bishop and respond to his call for funds with which to carry on the work.

We are trying to make use of the opportunities that we find and manage to keep busy. Held a series of meetings here and have since baptized nine precious souls into the kingdom of God. Our branch has grown until we have one hundred and eighteen members, the church is well filled at each preaching-service, and the number of "outsiders" is increasing, some of the elite have been attending of late.

Bro. Peter Anderson and family have just moved in from Stanberry, Missouri, and are getting settled in their new home on Fifth Street. Brn. Lute Crosby and Roy Hartshorn have opened a skirt factory and expect to employ a number of girls. They will use electric power, and have leased the largest room in town, the opera house.

Last Thursday evening the writer and wife came home wondering why no one seemed to care to have us call on them for the evening, and why so many hints to go home were given. We were discussing the matter, and were somewhat dishabile, when, hearing a noise, we looked out and lo and behold, Bro. Elvert, our worthy branch president, appeared, followed by about sixty of his flock, and each carrying a heavy basket. It was a surprise! All had a good time, and we were still further surprised when Bro. Stone, after getting us to pose for our picture, as spokesman presented us with a soap box, and a nice speech on soap. The writer responded, extolling the virtues of soap and promising to keep clean, and opened it to find—well, that box did feel heavy for soap anyway. Verily it is good not to run out of soap. We have never found a warmer hearted lot of Saints than at Cameron, and that is not all; when we came here we were told by the business men of the town that if we belonged to the Latter Day Saints church, our credit was good for anything at their store. Considering that sixty years ago the Saints were driven out of these parts (Cameron is only about seven miles from Far West), can we not realize the power of the gospel and a good life? What we need is a practical application of the "angel message" to men's lives.

Praying for the welfare of Zion and the spread of the gospel, I am,

Your brother,

FRED B. FARR.

ELKHORN, Wisconsin, June 6, 1909.

Editor Herald: Seeing the article on immortality in HERALD, May 27, I thought it might be of interest to our readers to have the views of the Honorable William J. Bryan on immortality. I take it from my phonograph and while it is but a two-minute speech it contains food for thought for hours.

Your brother in the gospel,

F. M. BALL.

"IMMORTALITY.

"If the Father deigns to touch with divine power the cold and pulseless hearts of the buried acorn, and to make it to burst forth from its prison walls, will he leave neglected in the earth the soul of man; made in the image of his creator? If he stoops to give to the rosebush, whose withered blossoms float upon the autumn breeze, the sweet assurance of another springtime, will he refuse the words of hope to the sons of men when the frosts of winter come?

"If matter mute and inanimate though changed by the forces of nature into a multitude of forms, can never die, will the spirit of man suffer annihilation when it has paid a brief visit like a royal guest to this tenement of clay? No, I am assured that there is another life as I am that I live to-day. In Cairo I secured a few grains of wheat that had slumbered in an Egyptian tomb for more than three thousand years. As I looked upon them this thought came into my mind: If one of these grains had been planted on the banks of the Nile the year after it grew, and if all of its lineal descendants had been planted and replanted from that time until now, its progeny would be sufficiently numerous to-day to feed the teeming thousands of the world.

"There is in the grain of wheat an invisible something, that has power to discard the body that we now see; and from earth and air, fashion a new body so much like the old one that we can not tell the one from the other; and if this invisible germ of life in the grain of wheat can thus pass unimpaired, through three thousand resurrections, I shall not doubt that my soul will have power to clothe itself with a body suited to its new existence, when this earthly frame has crumbled into dust."

Joseph Cook once said: "Attention is the mother of memory, and interest is the mother of attention. To secure memory, secure both her mother and grandmother."

BEVIER, Missouri, June 2, 1909.

To the Saints of the Northeastern Missouri District; Greeting: At the February conference held at Bevier, Missouri, the conference appointed a committee to solicit funds to purchase a new tent, as the old one is in a bad condition and may give out at any time.

The tent is much needed in this district, as the Saints are scattered, and in many cases can not furnish a house to accommodate the crowds that desire to attend.

We have a good missionary force and much good should be done during the coming year, if they receive the support that they are in need of.

We take this means of bringing the matter before you, and ask that you give such assistance as you are able. The cost of the tent will be about one hundred dollars and the Saints at the conference raised more than one third of the amount. The little we give may be the means of doing much good.

Mail all remittances to Elder W. B. Richards, Bevier, Missouri, who is the Bishop's agent for this district.

Your coworkers,

W. B. RICHARDS,
F. PALFREY,
F. O. DELONG,
Committee.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: The district conference session held at Boone on June 5 and 6 was one of the interesting seasons of the year for our district. The attendance was good considering the scattered condition of the membership of the district. Elder James McKiernan, of the missionary force, was present, and is ever gladly welcomed among us. Elder M. H. Cook, district president, had gone to his far away field of labor on the Pacific coast, and was not present at the conference. Elder Cook has been a resident of the district since he came into the church; served as president of the Des Moines Branch for several years, and as district president the past three years. Being thus so well known he was missed during the conference.

The Sunday-school and Religio joint conventions were held on Friday, the day previous to the conference session. The district superintendent, Elder Orman Slaisbury, of Des Moines, and the secretary, Mrs. Pearle Shannon, of Rockwell City, as also the president of the Religio, Mrs. Hattie Clark, of Des Moines, and the secretary, Miss Blanche Cushatt, of Baxter, were present. The vice-president of the Religio, Elder Ray Chandler, resigned, on account of absence from the district, and Henry Castings, of Runnells, was chosen to fill the vacancy.

The reunion will likely be held the first week in September, two places, Rhodes and Des Moines, being under consideration by the committee as the place of meeting.

Bro. J. A. Gunsolley, unexpectedly to us, arrived at the conference about four o'clock on Saturday, and being called to the stand gave us a talk about Graceland and its future plans. This brother evidently believes in obtaining knowledge and wisdom from the work of others, even those of the world. He had been attending three conventions in the capital city, the State International Sunday-school Association, the Central Commercial Teachers' Association, and the Western School Managers' Association. In all these organizations Bro. Gunsolley holds membership, and was on the program at the Commercial Teachers' Association. Occupying the position of acting president of Graceland, and principal of the commercial school, as we understand, we think it commendable in him to be taking advantage of such opportunities for improvement.

Bro. Gunsolley told the conference that a new course had been provided for in Bible study and religious pedagogy, under the charge of Sr. Salyards, editor of the Gospel Quarterly. This fact should be of especial interest to the Religio and Sunday-school people as supplying to some extent better qualified teachers for those institutions. Saturday evening he was asked to occupy the pulpit and gave us a very edifying sermon on the necessity of work upon the part of every one who would inherit celestial glory. On Sunday, after teaching a class in the Sunday-school, and conducting a practical review of the lesson, he took the interurban car for Des Moines, reaching here in time for the regular Religio class, occupying part of the hour, and occupied the pulpit at the regular evening service.

It is understood that Elder M. M. Turpen has been assigned to labor in the district during the year, and he was expected to be present at the conference, but did not reach the district in time. Elder Turpen was a former missionary here, and the district will extend to him a very hearty welcome.

The district president elect, Elder Orman Slaisbury, engaged in business in Des Moines, came to the district the past year from the Gallands Grove District, having been district president there at the time of his removal. He is a young man of promise and takes hold of the work with a desire to see it advance. The Sunday-school and Religio officers are active and we hope to see the work carried on during the year in a successful manner.

Editors Herald: As I sit thinking over this glorious work, I thought I would write to the HERALD, being my first time. I have been a member of the church ever since I was fourteen years old, and I am no ways discouraged yet, for it is a true work of God. I am the mother of nine children and they all belong to the church, except three small ones. My husband is a member too, and my mother died a Saint, so I ask the prayers of all the Saints that we may hold out and prove faithful to the end.

Ever your sister in Christ,

SALLIE BOOKER.

RIPLEY, Oklahoma, June 7, 1909.

Dear Herald: In reply to a question by Bro. T. S. Martin in HERALD for June 2. The sum of the question was: Is there no forgiveness and remission of sins for the person who knowingly sins after having been enlightened, having known the truth, and been made partaker of the Comforter, the Holy Ghost?

Ancient inspired men who wrote have in numerous instances left statements upon record pertaining to points of doctrine or articles of faith which, though complete in themselves as a sentence or sentences, still do not amplify so as to cover every phase of the subject dealt with, hence in our study of them we discover that in order to harmonize with all truth, it becomes necessary to qualify many such statements. As for example: "That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved."—Romans 10: 9. "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved."—Romans 10: 13. Also 1 John 4: 7: "Every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God."

These must be qualified, and while this is true of inspired writers, it is doubly true of inspired men who speak, and it is possible that this may apply to statements made in the sermons mentioned by our brother-in-law, Mr. T. S. Martin, in his letter to the HERALD. In one sense, "It is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance"; but the qualifying clause must answer the question, How far shall they fall away, or in what degree of sinfulness after having remission, does this impossibility to renew unto repentance occur? If any sinner has not become so hardened as to prevent him from becoming penitent over his wrongs, and he does become truly penitent is he not then already renewed unto repentance? If so, then it is demonstrated that the impossible clause was not framed for such as he (and willful violation of law constitutes sin). And if he has willfully sinned and now is repentant the question comes, Can there be forgiveness for him?

The angel of pleading mercy says yes. Stern justice itself says yes. Our best impulses of the soul say yes. God says yes, and the books say yes. Who then is that wretched man behind the rigid, relentless bar named "impossible"? It is the callous heart so deep in the unpardonable sin of putting the Holy Ghost to an open shame that it is impossible for him to renew that evil stony thing in place of a heart unto repentance. What sins will the Lord allow the possibility of repentance for? "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men, but the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost."—Matthew 12: 31.

Paul in Hebrews 10 speaks of Christ as the great "offering" for sin, the great and last of the living sacrifices to be offered upon the altar with his life, and says: "Now where remission of these is there is no more offering for sin"—showing to the Hebrews that there was no necessity for further sacrifice of slain offering, and he continues in verse 26 to say: "For if we sin willfully, after that we have received the knowledge of the truth there remaineth no more sacrifice [not repentance, nor forgiveness] for sins."

He has shown in verse 18 that there may be forgiveness or remission of sins without further offering or sacrifice, which of course must be on condition of repentance, etc. If there is no remission for them who have been taken in sin and folly after having been cleansed, then all of the exhortation from the Lord, in the books to his at times sinful people to repent, is uncalled for, superfluous, and absolutely purposeless.

But we all know that these exhortations from the Lord to his wayward people are not meaningless, that through grace the door of mercy stands ajar until by altogether willing it to remain, and abide in sin (Doctrine and Covenants 85: 8) the determined evil-doer at the last bars, by his own hand, the door against himself.

"The Spirit and the Bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

Yours in the admiration of the beautiful plan of life, the gospel,
JAMES E. YATES.

LEES SUMMIT, Missouri, June 6, 1909.

Dear Readers of the Herald: I feel it a duty and privilege to converse with you for a short time. If I live until fall I will have been associated with this church twenty-five years. It was at the reunion at Garners Grove, in Harrison County, Iowa, that I was baptized by Elder J. S. Roth, as also some forty-eight others. A few days later I was ordained an elder.

Those were days of great anxiety to me, for I wished to be in the right and that only, fully realizing that the truth only can be of lasting benefit to me; and it is here that my faith and hope are resting, and my reasoning faculties teach me that the work is true, or in other words God himself is author, originator, and sustainer of what we designate as the latter-day work, or the gospel restored. I may say that those who have received it have set to their seal that God is true or that he grants evidence in various ways, that the faith that we have embraced is not of men, neither by men, but of him, through angels and then by men.

It took no small courage or small sacrifice to disconnect or disassociate myself from my former brethren, the Dunkards, German Baptists, and this I feel I did not do by my own will or voition, so to speak, but rather by that divine persuasive power of God, known as the Holy Spirit, for through my soul rang this thrilling testimony: This is the church of God indeed that you have found, and when proper liberty was granted I so expressed myself and when I had thus become obedient to the Spirit's teaching, it rested upon others who by the Spirit bore witness that I was called of God to minister the gospel to others. From that day to this I have in my humble way occupied, laboring through heat and cold, shadow and sunshine, joy and sorrow. I have sought in my weak way to have the anointed of God as my great exemplar, but I am sure that I have often failed in the dark and foggy night of life's great ocean, to keep my ceaseless watch for the fog-horn and the unerring pointers of the gospel compass.

I, with many of my colaborers or fellow voyagers, realize that the fair haven lies just a little way beyond. I can not say that I fear to leave this world to meet a just God, but I am greatly interested in watching the things that are coming on the earth, the dealings of God with all nations, especially with respect to the Jews. Surely the times indicate that deliverance is near, or the time at hand when they shall reinhabit their own loved Zion, the Jerusalem of Palestine, and then what shall be the condition of the Gentile world, when by proper legislation the Jews are recognized as a nation, and they begin to draw the wealth of the nations to themselves. With what great expectancy men and angels wait for these events I do not know, but the great climax or culmination is that the Son of God, even the redeemer of men, is soon to come after these great events are coming to pass. We are advised to look up. Will we, or will we permit all our attention to be engaged here below?

I think it has been well said, "For here have we no abiding city, but we seek one to come whose maker and builder is God." Well, what am I going to do? The time and space seem too short. I am thinking this beautiful Sunday afternoon of my many acquaintances and associates, especially of those in Western Nebraska, where I with my family lived some twenty years. Some have gone to the spirit world, some are scattered, some remain, while we found our way to Zion. Soon it will be two years since we landed in Lees Summit, Missouri. Many have been our religious privileges in preaching, prayer- and sacramental-service, as also the Religio and Sunday-school services. We find time for but little else on Sunday. I believe I have really attended but one service outside of our church in two years.

But I must hasten along. We have lately enjoyed the labor of Brn. Etzenhouser and McDonald (the latter became identified with our branch to-day), and Patriarch Henry Kemp was here on last Sunday and blessed five young people. For next Sunday we have the promise of having some of the bishopric of Independence with us. We now have three elders and three priests in the branch with prospects for more, as we understand the Spirit. Sunday-schools are being organized around the outside which we feel are curtains to the branch.

I feel that we are gaining ground. We have a number of willing workers. I feel that the young are doing well. If the Lord will continue to add to the fold our house of worship will soon be too small; indeed if we felt more able I think we would soon erect a more commodious building, but we think it wise to go slow. When you are about this country come and see us? We are only about fifteen miles south of Independence, Missouri, with trains running every few hours. Don't get scared out of Zion because land here is worth from one hundred and twenty-five to three hundred dollars per acre, for this all depends on the improvements, and the distance from town. Good land can be had for sixty-five to seventy-five dollars but a few miles away. You must also remember that this place is a good-sized town and only some twenty-four or twenty-six miles from Kansas City.

Wishing you all both spiritual and temporal blessings not a few, I must close and must request you that in writing pertaining to this country, please send self-addressed and stamped envelope.

We enjoyed three excellent sermons from Apostle Frank Curtis on last Sunday. These were good not because he is of the Twelve, but because they were good. I believe I am above the idea that anything is good because it just come out of a stone. We trust God may bless him in his high calling, and keep him from the power of the tempter.

In bonds,
D. W. SHIRK.

Editors Herald: In Zion's Ensign November 28, 1907, there is a sermon on "The great apostasy," preached by Elder J. S. Roth, at Lamoni, April 9, 1907. In explaining Revelation 12 he says: "But the objector claims that the man child was Christ, well I have but one objection to that and it is this: If the man child was Christ, then he was just about thirty years older than his mother."

Please explain the above quotation, for it looks to me, if the child was Jesus, his mother was over an hundred years old at the date of his birth. I often read my papers to other people and loan them to them to read and am often asked to explain things to them; so I want to be ready at all times to explain anything asked.

Also I would like explanation on 1 Peter 3:21: "Not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answering of a good conscience toward God." And what is the teaching of the Baptist Church? None of their members around here seem to know only that they must be baptized. Their minister has forbade them talking scripture with us. Says he explains it to them in his sermons and to have nothing to do with the Mormons, or they will tear their church all to pieces; but I can talk to them, and do.

Your sister in the one faith,
EFFIE C. GROVES.

MARION, Iowa, June 6, 1909.

Dear Saints: I am writing to ask your prayers in behalf of my dear husband, Elder L. E. Hills, who has been sorely afflicted for over three months. For the past month he has suffered intensely with pains in his head; so that he has not been able to lie down, and has been unable to sleep, till his nerves seemed almost shattered.

It is hard to see him suffer so, and not be able to relieve him. We feel so thankful to the dear Saints of Montana, who were so kind in caring for him in the beginning of his sickness; and pray the dear Father to reward them for their kindness. We are hoping he will not have to have an operation, but it may become necessary, as it almost seems that he can not endure the pain for long, unless our dear Father sends him relief.

With confidence in the love and mercy of God, and the prayers of his Saints, I am,

Your sister in gospel bonds,
MRS. L. E. HILLS.

I know what pleasure is, for I have done good work.—

Bro. W. D. McKnight, Logan, Oklahoma; "Bro. James Baker passed by here June 2 on his way to May, Oklahoma, (fifty miles east,) with the church tent, to do missionary work in that end of the district until the reunion and conference which will be held this year in Woodward (population 3,000), about August 1. Prospects are good for missionary work in Oklahoma. Big rains since May 20."

News From Branches

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON.

The Saints of this city have been enjoying a rare treat recently, as Elder William Johnson has been with us breaking the "bread of life" in his masterful way, supplying a great, soul need and further instructing several outsiders who are investigating our claims.

Bro. Enge also paid us a visit, speaking twice at the hall and holding two services at the home of Sr. Stillman. We were glad to welcome him back and hope to see him again soon. We look forward with pleasant anticipations to the return of the other missionaries of this field.

Yesterday (June 1) more than ninety thousand people witnessed the opening of the great Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition. The day was perfect and the ceremonies beautiful and impressive, harmonizing with the surpassing loveliness of the grounds and surrounding landscape and eminently fitted to awaken within the mind thoughts that lie too deep for words. It would take an abler pen than mine and more space than our editor would spare to attempt to describe that which is indescribable, the masterpiece of art and nature, the combined work of God and man. It must be seen and felt before it can be appreciated. We invite you to visit the Queen City of the Pacific, the exposition and the Saints' reunion.

Conference Minutes.

VICTORIA.—District conference was held in Saints' church Swan Street, Richmond, Saturday and Sunday, April 10 and 11, 1909. Meeting was called to order by District President D. McIntosh. Moved and carried that Bro. Butterworth be president of conference; D. McIntosh second president; J. McIntosh secretary. Credentials were presented by Richmond and Hastings and Brn. Rowse and Walker were appointed credential committee. While credentials were being examined Bro. Rutherford made a short speech. Visiting Saints were allowed voice and vote. Statistical reports from Richmond and Hastings showed the following changes. Richmond, number at last report 110, present 113, including 1 seventy, 2 elders, 6 priests, 1 teacher, 1 deacon; received by baptism 4, by letters from other branches 2, gain 6; loss by letters of removal 2, expulsion 1, loss 3; total gain 3, marriages 1, deaths none. Hastings last report 70, present 69, including 3 elders, 1 priest, 1 teacher, 2 deacons; lost by letter of removal 1, total loss 1. Queensferry statistical report arrived too late. President reports no change. Reports of officers were read, and accepted, including Brn. Butterworth, McIntosh, Jenkin, Kippe, and Barmore. Verbal reports were received from Brn. Rowse, Hailey, and Rutherford. The Bishop's agent reported 84 pounds, 9 shillings, 4 pence received; expended 79 pounds, 13 shillings, 4½ pence; balance on hand 4 pounds, 15 shillings, 11½ pence. Report found to be correct. Moved and carried that this conference protest against the utilization of any one of the missionaries in the Standard Office, and that a committee be appointed to draw up a protest to be forwarded to the authorities of the church by missionary in charge. Moved and carried as follows: Whereas local needs require local measures, therefore be it resolved that we, as a conference, hereby instruct the district president to appoint elders and priests as self-sustaining missionaries, either for trips or periods, such appointments to be made by consultation and agreement with the missionary in charge and the persons so appointed. Moved and carried that we indorse D. McIntosh's request to increase the number of missionaries for Australia to the number of twelve. D. McIntosh was sustained as president, F. W. Kippe vice-president, J. McIntosh secretary. Organist for conference was Sr. Barmore, with assistant Sr. F. Kimball. Moved and carried that all collections during conference be handed to the Richmond Branch to help pay off the debt. Next conference to be at Richmond First Saturday and Sunday in September, 1909, or at call of district president. Speakers during conference were Bro. Butterworth 7.30 p. m., Saturday, Bro. Barmore, 11 a. m., Sunday, and Bro. Butterworth again at 7 p. m. Sunday. Sacramento 3 p. m. Sunday. J. McIntosh, secretary, 136 Lennox Street, Richmond, Victoria, Australia.

DES MOINES.—District convened at Boone, Iowa, June 5. Elder James McKiernan, assistant minister in charge, presided, assisted by the vice-presidents, W. Christy and E. O. Clark. District president, M. H. Cook, was absent, having gone to his new field of labor in Oregon. Reports from the Des Moines, Rhodes, and Des Moines Valley Branches were received. The Bishop's agent, W. Christy, reported $886.84 received, expenditures $733.80, balance $153.04. Ministerial reports were received from James McKiernan, J. F. Mintun, W. Christy, M. H. Cook, E. O. Clark, J. E. Laughlin, O. Salisbury, Frank Walters, J. R. Epperson, Fred Chandler, Henry Pratt, and John Clark. The library work of the district was reported, as also reports from the Sunday-school and Religio conventions held the day previous. Officers elected: Orman Salisbury president, W. Christy and E. O. Clark vice-presidents, A. A. Reams, secretary, Orpha Emslie member of the library board. A standing auditing committee, Hattie Clark, W. G. Rodgers, and Henry Pratt, were named. The Bishop's agent was sustained and his use of the funds in the district fully approved by the conference. A motion tending toward the abolishing the delegate system in the district was deferred for future action. Preaching during the conference by J. A. Gunsolley, W. Christy, and O. Salisbury. The matter of preparing for the district reunion was placed in the hands of the district presidency. The conference adjourned to meet at Runnells, at the call of the district presidency. A. A. Reams, secretary.

ALABAMA.—District met with the Lone Star Branch, May 28, 1909, President J. R. Harper in chair, G. O. Sellers was elected secretary pro tem. Affirmative, Stephen Jacobson, Charles Wright; followed by verbal discussion in negative. Report of General Convention by Sr. Floy Wind. Moved and carried that the action of officers in regard to having programs printed for the day, be approved and hereafter all expense to be met by assessment from each school. At 8 p. m. evening program rendered by Underwood Sunday-school. Adjourned to meet on day previous to and at same place as next district conference, at 10.30 a. m. C. E. Scott, secretary.

Pastoral.

To the Saints in Montana: My address is Deer Lodge, Montana, and I am now in my field ready for work. Shall hope to see a good representation at our conference in Deer Lodge, June 26 and 27, and get a better understanding of the needs of the work in different parts of the district. Shall be glad too, to hear from Saints in Montana who may know of good opportunities for preaching the word. Let us all work and work unitedly for the Master, during the coming year. In gospel bonds, June 3, 1909. ISAAC M. SMITH.

Church Recorder.

NOTICE TO QUORUM SECRETARIES.

Will the secretaries of all quorums, including seventies, elders, priests, teachers, and deacons, send me at once their names and addresses, and names and numbers of their quorums, and the whole number of names on their records, as I have matter I wish to submit to them relative to the quorum records.

The keeping of the general quorum records has been referred to my department, and the material for making out the record is not in hand. I desire to begin the work at once, so a prompt response to the above request will greatly facilitate the work.

C. I. CARPENTER, Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 7, 1909.

TO THE MELCHISEDEC PRIESTHOOD, AND BRANCH CLERKS.

In harmony with the order of General Conference, certificates for the blessing of children have been issued and are now on sale at the Herald Publishing House, at ten cents per dozen or twenty-five cents for the book. They are put up in book form in uniform size and style with the certificates of baptism.

All elders and branch clerks should be provided with these blanks so that a certificate can be furnished for every blessing conferred.

You will notice that they consist of three parts, one marked "original" to be given to the parents of the child after being recorded by the branch clerk, one marked "Duplicate" to be sent at once to the Church Recorder, no matter whether in a branch or not, and the last a stub to be retained by the officer giving the certificate.

Supply yourselves promptly with these blanks and make your services popular by being up to date.

C. I. CARPENTER, Church Recorder.

LAMONI, Iowa, June 7, 1909.

Hull, 2726 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. O. T. Christy, superintendent.

Reunion Notices.

The Eastern Reunion Association will convene July 31 at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. Further announcements will be made in the near future regarding arrangements of committee work and further plans. Everything seems to indicate a very large gathering this year. Plan your vacation to be with us. M. C. Fisher, for the committee.

Notice of Forgiveness.

The Little Sioux district conference held at Magnolia, Iowa, June 5 and 6, 1909, passed the following resolution unanimously:

"Inasmuch as Bro. J. F. McDowell made confession of guilt to the elders' court and was, in harmony with church procedure, duly forgiven, we are of the opinion, as a conference, that there is no bar to the exercise of his priesthood rights."

JAMES D. STUART, Clerk.

Two-Day Meetings.

There will be a two-day meeting held with the branch at Byrneville, Indiana, on July 3 and 4, 1909. The Sunday-schools of the Southern Indiana District are requested to send delegates at the ratio of one for every ten members or fraction thereof to consider the propriety of organizing a district. D. E. Dowker, president.

Arrangements have been made to have a two-day meeting in Chatham, Ontario, June 19 and 20. It is expected that Bishop R. C. Evans, Apostle R. C. Russell, and the members of the missionary force of Chatham District will be present. Meals may be obtained at the Maple Leaf Restaurant at 12½ cents each. The Saints will supply lodging. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may be in a position to come. A. Leverton, president.

Died.

TOWERS.—Sr. Elizabeth, was born July 1, 1830, at Bolton, Lancashire, England, and passed peacefully from "death to life" on Sunday evening, May 25, 1909. Her end was most serene. She was baptized on May 22, 1886, by Elder Joseph Dewsnup, Sen., at Manchester, England. She was a devoted wife and mother and a most faithful Saint. She will be greatly missed by her children and all the Saints with whom she has been associated in her earthly pilgrimage. Her remains were interred in the Southern Cemetery, Manchester, by High Priest Henry Greenwood and Elder Samuel F. Mather, president of the late sister's branch. The funeral discourse was by High Priest Henry Greenwood, president Manchester District.

BROCK.—Sr. Mary Brock passed from this life May 14, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. E. Farber, in Madison, South Dakota. Sr. Brock was born in Delaware, May 20, 1842, and moved to Wisconsin in 1847, where she lived until a year ago. She united with the church April 30, 1908, being baptized by Elder J. O. Dutton at Madison, Wisconsin, and she lived a faithful, consistent life. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for fifty years. Funeral-sermon at the house by Elder Rannie. Interment at her old home in Wisconsin, and sermon by Elder J. O. Dutton.

HUNT.—Sr. Louise Hunt was born in London, England, May 5, 1838, and later came to Canada where she heard and obeyed the latter-day gospel. Elder J. J. Cornish buried her beneath the liquid wave April 8, 1876. Her husband, Bro. William Hunt, died about twenty-three years ago. One daughter, Sr. Everett, and one niece, Sr. Nellie Reeder, survive her. Her most precious treasure in this world was this "beautiful gospel"; her life, her ambition, many sacrifices, and her care for God's servants won favor in the sight of her heavenly Father. Just before she died she gave one of the most beautiful prayers mortal lips could offer, and after calling her loved ones by name, she quietly passed away to await the time when the trump of God shall sound, and the Saints shall come forth to reign with Christ a thousand years.

Advice to Correspondents.

If you've got a thing that's happy,
Boil it down;
Make it short and crisp and snappy,
Boil it down;
When your brain its coin has minted,
Down the page your pen has sprinted,
If you want your effort printed,
Boil it down.
Take out every surplus letter,
Boil it down;
Fewer syllables the better,
Boil it down;
Make your meaning plain—express it
So we'll know, not merely guess it;
Then, my friend, ere you address it,
Boil it down.
Cut out all the extra trimmings,
Boil it down;
Skim it well, then skim the skimmings,
Boil it down;
When you're sure 'twould be a sin to Cut another sentence in two,
Send it on and we'll begin to Boil it down.

Turkey's Future.

The chief result of the campaign carried on by the Young Turks since 1878 to Europeanize Turkey has been the gradual conscious growth of an Ottoman people irrespective of original race or difference of creed. That army that took Constantinople in April presented the unusual spectacle of Moslem and Christian, Greek, Albanian, Bulgarian, and Turk marching side by side in a common cause and camping in the same tents without quarreling. Such leaders as Chevket Pasha, Enver Bey, Ahmed Riza, and others are performing wonders in reconciling the Sheriat, or religious law of Moslem, with the modern European codes and raising economic and social interests to a level with Moslem religious zeal and Oriental military caste. They have already admitted a Greek and an Armenian, both Christians, to the cabinet, for the first time in the history of Turkey. In the parliament party lines freely cut across the lines of race and religious cleavage, and the utterances of the Young Turk leaders all repudiate any intention of exalting the Moslem at the expense of any of the various "Giaour" peoples under Turkish rule. The new empire, we are promised, will take stock of social, economic, and political forces as well as of religious and racial ones in its national life.

With the accession of Sultan Mehmed V, Turkey stands on the threshold of a new era. Whether or not the Young Turks will be able to organize and consolidate the entire Ottoman Empire on a constitutional basis will depend not only on the way they have met the test of an effective self-restrained military organization, but upon whether they will successfully meet the more difficult test of statesmanship required by the new order of things.—From "The progress of the world," in the American Review of Reviews for June.

"The first duty of every man is to himself—self protection is the first law of life. Earn your living—take care of yourself, and then out of the surplus of your earnings or your power, you can care for others."

Suggestions for Summer.

KEEP OUT THE FLIES. PROTECT THE FOOD.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 15.—In the combat against tuberculosis it is necessary to take into account every factor which may in any way directly or indirectly spread the disease. As summer draws near it will bring as usual its swarms of flies and other insect life and there is no greater nuisance than the house-flies which infest the homes of our people. However, if proper sanitation was observed about the premises which people call their homes the common house-fly would be much less prevalent than it is.

All garbage, manure, cesspools, open drains, and other unsanitary conditions existing about the house or barn will produce an incredible number of flies as in decaying matter of all kinds the fly breeds. The first measure to be carried out therefore is to remove all kinds of garbage and manure and to close all open drains which may lead from cesspools or out-closets. The next measure of protection is to screen the house and to diligently exclude from the kitchen, the dining-room and the living room apartments these little pests. We have become so accustomed to the fly that while we look upon it as an unmitigated nuisance, yet tolerate its familiarity, and for this reason many a tragic story has been written full of the most heart-breaking sorrow.

Flies are great germ carriers. Their feet are so constructed that they are little cups. This enables them to walk on ceilings. These vacuumed feet become splendid agents in the transmission of germs of typhoid fever and tuberculosis. Recent investigations made by the Merchants' Association of New York reveal the fly as being responsible for a vast amount of contagious sickness.

It is urged that the people shall with one accord protect themselves against germs of disease which may readily be carried into the home by the fly. The food supply should be thoroughly protected against flies; a rigid rule should be established in every home which should be enforced in every instance, and no fly should be permitted to crawl over the food which is to be set on the table for human consumption.

Milk should be especially particularly cared for. It should not only be protected from the fly but from dirt as well. Many a little babe will be killed this year in Iowa by carelessness. Flies will carry germs of various diseases to the nipples on the bottles of artificially fed infants, and bacteria will be introduced into the child's body. Milk from diseased cows suffering with tuberculosis, milk which has been produced under unsanitary conditions in the barn or yard, will be given to these infants whose lives will be terminated by various disorders, commonly summer complaint, occasionally tuberculosis of the bowels.

Two important things are here considered: One is to so far as possible prevent the breeding of flies by removing garbage and waste and pouring kerosene oil on stagnant pools. The other is to protect the food supply against insects of all kinds, particularly the fly, and see to it that little children are given wholesome food free from disease germs or dirt.

"All beauty is but a symbol of spirit."

"A duty is a pleasure which we try to make ourselves believe is a hardship."

"One great, strong, unselfish soul in every community would actually redeem the world."

"Let us not flout the ability that is beyond us, nor take flings at men who can do things we can not."

"Do not stop to think about who are with you, or who are against you. It matters little at the last—both the ability to harm and the ability to help are overestimated. Be yourself!"

"The teaching half hour is sacred. Fetter the superintendent with brass, tie up the librarian, and chain the secretary. Let nothing distract the attention of teacher or class during this precious half hour. Attention is the most volatile of all things."

"The death knell of the droning, perpetually talking teacher is rung. Watch yourself. Is your class a passive bucket or is it a bubbling cauldron, bubbling along its whole surface? 'Everybody in every play' is the motto of modern football, and it is good psychology."

"The world bestows its big prizes, both in money and honors, for but one thing. And that is initiative. What is initiative? I'll tell you: it is doing the right thing without being told. But next to doing the thing without being told is to do it when you are told once."

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces, and took the changes and chances of this mortal life like men, facing rough and smooth alike as it came.—Charles Kingsley.

"Heroes of principle are the demand of the hour, as a contemporary well observes. Men who believe something and who will not swerve from what they believe, and who will not be weather-cocks—fickle and variable. These are the characters most necessary to-day for the stability and progress of society."

"Principles, it is said, have no modesty. It is their nature to rule, and they steadily assert their privilege. Do they encounter other principles in their paths that would dispute their empire, they give battle immediately. A principle never rests until it has gained the victory; and it can not be otherwise; with it, to reign is to live. If it does not reign supreme, it dies and gives way for another ruler."

lines, upon doctrines of vital importance, doctrines that stand like an adamant barrier between us so that we can never see alike until they abandon them for ever or we radically change our ideas of godliness, honesty, and morality.

In this clash our Utah friends were the aggressors, both in public and in private, although they stated in the beginning, as usual, that they came not for purposes of controversy, did not believe in it, and deplored our custom of attacking their doctrines and especially their leaders. This statement seemed inconsistent in view of the fact that they immediately began a canvass of the town, from house to house, distributing tracts of a controversial nature, especially aimed at the Reorganization, in one of which (by Joseph F. Smith, Jr.) our work is branded a fraud and our officers as impostors. (See The Reorganized Church vs. Salvation for the Dead, page 5.)

Elder Ellsworth led out during a part of both Monday and Tuesday evenings with a plea for sympathy. It is his idea that we can never understand each other until a bond of love is established. He presented a plea for polygamy, but felt hampered because we were not in a condition of mind to understand its beauties even if they were explained to us. He brushed blood-atonement aside with the statement that he believed in the atonement made by the blood of Jesus and that a murderer should have his blood shed. Remarks made by Brigham Young about shedding the blood of apostates were dismissed as humorous. Brigham was a very dry joker, and possibly some poor fellows, among the Morrisites and others who were "sent to hell across lots" thought that he carried his humor a little too far.

Elder Ellsworth declared that he would not be bound by the utterances of those men who spoke in times of stress and excitement. He qualified this repudiation by stating that when the sermon was quoted entire he would stand by every word of it. He thought that we should not quote extracts from the sermons of Brigham Young and others but should give the entire sermon; however he did not follow that rule with any of the ancient or modern writers from whose works he quoted, and evidently for the same reason that we do not quote an eighty-minute

SEVENTEEN BRIGHAMITE ELDERS VISIT LAMONI.

As stated in the HERALD last week, Elder W. L. Wanless of the Utah faction appeared in our midst as a representative of the mission president and elders of their Northern States Mission and desired the privilege of being heard in our community. Monday last, sixteen of his associates arrived. Among them was Elder German E. Ellsworth, president of the mission, whose headquarters are at 149 Paulina Street, Chicago, Illinois. The church was freely placed at their disposal for evening preaching services and for council or priesthood meetings during the day.

They occupied Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. The Saints turned out in goodly numbers and gave them a respectful and attentive hearing without discourteous interruptions of any kind. They expressed themselves as highly pleased with the treatment accorded them. We in turn were pleased to greet such a number of representatives of the church of Utah, and were interested in giving them as favorable an opportunity as possible to present their own side of the questions that have been controverted for over half a century.

As was inevitable a clash came along doctrinal sermon by Brigham Young in the course of a forty-minute sermon or an eight-page tract by ourselves. Elder Ellsworth was the most polished, and in some ways, the most capable speaker in the company, but failed to make as favorable an impression as was made by some others of the elders.

Wednesday evening Elder Willard Homer launched out on baptism for the dead and temple building, attacking what they evidently conceive to be the weakest point in our defense. We will say for him that his speech was the most frank, open, and manly speech made up to that time. He did not plead for sympathy or beat around the bush, but took his stand on a principle that he believed to be true and struck out from the shoulder in its defense. Perhaps he was at an advantage over his brethren who had apologized for polygamy and dodged around blood-atonement, an ungrateful and trying task.

Striking a prophetic strain he declared, "The time will come to you people when the wool will be clawed from your eyes." This uncouth figure of speech rather jarred the cord of sympathy that Elder Ellsworth had nursed so sedulously. It suggested primitive methods or reasoning and reminded us of the experiences of Brn. John Davis and J. F. Curtis who on the nineteenth day of last September were jostled, spat upon, and called liars and sons of b—s, on the streets of Ogden, Utah, until they were forced to abandon their street meetings, and of the experience of Elder E. C. Briggs who was arrested for distributing tracts on the public streets in Salt Lake City.

We submit the thought that love and sympathy should not be matters of latitude and longitude. In 1905 President F. M. Smith visited Utah and under date of August 21 addressed a letter to Joseph F. Smith asking the privilege of using houses of worship belonging to the dominant church in the State in which to deliver his message. Joseph F. Smith replied to this request by way of an open letter circulated in pamphlet form, which lies upon our desk as we write, and from which we quote: "We have extended no general welcome to those whose profession it is continually to misrepresent, abuse, insult, and malign our people and the church. Our pulpits and platforms have not been made for the use and convenience of such as come amongst us to defame and falsify." This letter was circulated in the State and had the effect that evidently it was intended to have on bishops, stake presidents, etc.

Of course the young men who preached in Lamoni were not directly responsible for that reply. Yet, the leaders of their church ought not to place them in the position of asking privileges that are not to be returned in kind, or of occupying the churches of a people to whom their own doors are closed. If we are "brothers, sisters, and friends," and pretty good people in Lamoni, we are not enemies, outcasts, and falsifiers in Utah.

Elder Heman C. Smith replied to the efforts of the elders, Thursday, Staurday, and Sunday evenings. Elder Ellsworth departed from the city Wednesday, leaving his compatriots to carry on the work, so that Bro. Heman found himself in a literal affair of sixteen to one. The ratio might have been higher (on the other side) without any loss to the cause that we represent. His effort Thursday night was to outline the apostasy under Brigham Young, and his holding of wholesale rebaptism, reconfirmation, and reordination, resulting in a new church in the valleys of the mountains with a plan of salvation and exaltation not dreamed of in the days of Joseph. On Friday night our Utah friends made no attempt to reply or defend their position, but led out in an attack on the early history of the Reorganization, the burden of their argument being that those taking part therein had lost their priesthood owing to their previous connection with other factions. Saturday night Bro. Heman continued the line of thought pursued Thursday night; and Sunday night he took up the position and history of the Reorganization, defending both in a masterly manner.

We wish now to pass some criticisms on the men from Utah. We do not wish, however, to criticise them in any harsh, unfair, or captious spirit. First, we will say that their deportment (with possibly one exception) was such as to be creditable to them as men and to their church. So far as we observed they conducted themselves in a gentlemanly manner and in their attack upon us as a people, they were for the most part open and frank and evinced a care for our personal feelings that was commendable. Our elders may, and we trust do, profitably pursue a similar course toward all antagonists.

Concerning their ability as speakers we make this comment, and it will apply largely, we believe, to the rank and file of their men. They spoke often of the power of the priesthood that they claim to hold, the inspiration that goes with them, vigor of the testimony burning in their bosoms. Little of this, however, was to be observed in their work as preachers. We admire preachers of personality and power and believe we can recognize them when we watch their work, but if there was among these men one with any extraordinary power to thrill, move, or convince an audience, or even hold their interest for long under ordinary circumstances, we did not discover him. The old time spirit that made men terrible in controversy and a moving force in the pulpit was not with them. We are sure that we could select as many boys from Graceland College, holding no priesthood, who could take the stand and do as well. Probably they could do the same in the University of Utah. There was no more spiritual power with them than might be found among an equal number of graduates from some Wesleyan University,—young Methodist ministers.

It may be urged that these are young and inexperienced men. But the dearth of spiritual power noted is not confined to these young men. Joseph F. Smith, who is supposed to be a "prophet, seer, and revelator," when before the Senate Committee was asked by Senator Dubois, "Have you received any individual revelations yourself, since you became president of the church under your own definition, even, of a revelation?"

To this he replied, "I can not say that I have."

A moment later he added, "Well, I can say this: That if I live as I should in the line of my duties, I am susceptible, I think, of the impressions of the Spirit of the Lord upon my mind at any time, just as any good Methodist or any other church member might be." (See Proceedings before the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate, Reed Smoot Case, pp. 483, 484.)

This seems to be in line with the experiences of his predecessors, Snow, Woodruff, Taylor, and Young, who also posed as "revelators," for during a period of over sixty years they have received nothing professing to be a revelation that was thought worthy of a place in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. It is true that Wilford Woodruff presented a manifesto in 1890, and at the time George Q. Cannon said that it was a revelation from God; but it told them that they should cease to practice polygamy, and we had been telling them that for about forty years before it dawned upon Woodruff, and to date it has been too distasteful to them to be granted a place in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

We will pass only one other criticism. As a body of ministers it seems to be their custom to use several speakers on most occasions, and it is their rule to close all speeches with a personal testimony that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God. Thus they bear this testimony far and wide in all lands and climes. We believe that this testimony fails of its object because invariably when questioned they will testify further that he was a polygamist, and if pressed still further with the fact that he condemned polygamy only a few weeks before his death, publicly denouncing it in the official organ of the church (Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 423) and classing it with "false and corrupt doctrines," they will leave the impression, if they do not say as much, that the time was not ripe to announce the doctrine and its denial was only a ruse. Thus in effect their testimony to the world that he was a prophet; second that he was a polygamist; third, that he was deceptive. Inasmuch as the world regards polygamy as an abomination and a gross crime, (and the world is right, for God calls it both; see Book of Jacob, chapter two,) the result of this widespread campaign of personal testimony is to confirm the world in its previous belief that Joseph Smith was a criminal and not a prophet at all. So, much as we regret the situation, in all honesty and in all chairity, we can only look upon their work as a menace and a hindrance to the spread of truth and the increase of knowledge regarding the restored gospel.

At the close of the Sunday night service Elder VanDyke presented the following paper which was read from the stand:

LAMONI, Iowa, June 20, 1909.

To Presiding Officer; Dear Brother: On Thursday evening the presiding officer and Elder Heman C. Smith broached the subject of a discussion to some of our elders. While we needed the nights allowed us last week to deliver our message and did not wish to depart from our plan, we wish it understood that we are prepared to name a committee to arrange preliminaries for a discussion if the authorities here desire one.

W. D. VANDYKE, behalf of elders.

To this the reply was made that the standing offer made to the representatives of the Utah faction when they were here some years ago, is still in force: We will meet a properly indorsed representative of the Utah church at any time in debate in Lamoni, providing the debate shall be repeated in Salt Lake City, Utah, (in the Tabernacle.) The statement was made further that we are not averse to meeting them elsewhere, where both churches have a following; but if such a debate is held in Lamoni, it is only fair to both sides that it should also be held in Salt Lake City. Surely the president of the Northern States Mission can so arrange with his general church officials in Salt Lake City, unless they are timid regarding the matter. So far as we are concerned we have shown our confidence in our position by repeatedly opening our church in Lamoni to their men and have repeatedly given them a careful and courteous hearing.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

TWO PRIESTHOODS.

According to the teaching of the books there are but two priesthoods, the Melchisedec and the Aaronic. All the official members of the church hold either one or the other of these priesthoods. The position to which a man is called to act in service for the church is designated by the name of the office to which he may have been ordained; but the name does not carry with it the idea that there is any difference in the priesthood, by virtue of which he acts in his office. As for instance, in the statement, "an apostle is an elder," it should be understood that he bears the general appellation of elder in common with every other officer in the church holding the Melchisedec priesthood, but as an apostle belonging to the Quorum of Twelve he holds a specific office, is charged with specific duties, and exercises specific privileges and prerogatives not belonging to any other officer in the church and yet holding no other or no higher priesthood than his associates acting in different offices in the same priesthood. This is true of every other officer from the presiding elder of the church to the local elder, all holding the same priesthood but acting in separate and different offices in the priesthood.

This principle is also true of the Aaronic priesthood, from a presiding bishop, who may by virtue of his being a descendant of Aaron act in his own right for that reason, to the priest, teacher, and deacon who all hold the same priesthood as himself, though acting in different calling and office. For the reason or absence of revelation designating a bishop as a descendant of Aaron, the service in this office of bishop is rendered by one holding the high priesthood in the Melchisedec priesthood; because, by reason of this holding the office of high priest, he is authorized to act in the other offices of the church, being set apart thereto by the action of the body.

A serious mistake has been made by some who have assumed that a different priesthood attaches to different offices in the church. The seriousness of this mistake may easily be seen when the fact is specifically stated in the revelations to the church coming through this restoration by the angel's message, that there are but two priesthoods. Thus, for instance, it is held by these who make this mistake referred to, that there is a difference between the priesthood of an elder, an apostle, a patriarch, an high priest; as if a different priesthood attached to these several offices.

Let us study the word and understand priesthood and the different callings in the priesthood, being careful to make the proper distinction, which we think to be easy, if we allow the Lord to make a statement for himself.

AN APOLOGY TO ELDER TUBB.

The SAINTS' HERALD of June 16 contained an excellent original article entitled, "The coming comet of 1910," by Elder F. R. Tubb. By mistake his name was omitted from the article. We desire to correct this error and express our regret to Elder Tubb and our readers in general.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Elder C. B. Woodstock, director of the industrial department at Graceland College, left last week for the conference at Montrose, Iowa, to begin his summer's campaign in behalf of the college work in general and the industrial department in particular. From Montrose Bro. Woodstock will visit the Kewanee District and the Northeastern Illinois District, on his way into Wisconsin. After July 4, he will likely visit the branches in Michigan and perhaps return to Iowa and Missouri for the last month of his campaign. Elder Woodstock is heart and soul in this work which means so much for the development of the worthy young men and young women who are of limited means. He is well qualified to speak for the college and we feel sure that he will receive a hearty welcome wherever he goes. It has just been discovered that sixty-two students were given the opportunity of working for a part or all of their expenses during the last college year. It is earnestly hoped that the department may speedily be put upon a safe financial footing and be able to accomplish the good that Bro. Woodstock hopes for.

According to the Chicago Record-Herald, June 8, Bishop Fallows has recently made certain statements regarding faith healing and the use of oil in administrations that can not fail to be of interest to Latter Day Saints. We quote:

"In about three years, perhaps, the ministers will be given authority and orders to anoint with oil."

This prediction was made yesterday by Bishop Fallows in a talk which he made before the Methodist ministers of the city on "Health and happiness." The bishop was not certain that all clergymen would be as successful as hoped, but he said their treatments would probably be of varying degrees of efficacy.

"It is true that some ministers would probably not be as efficient as others," he added, "but we see this difference in skill in the men who follow all the arts and professions. The time is coming, however, when you will graduate no more young men until they are thoroughly instructed in the principles of psycho-therapy, and when no physician will be graduated until he has been thoroughly grounded in the study of the soul and of applied psychology.

"Give God the glory for these cures. It is true that a cure might be due in part to medicine and in part to prayers. The cures which have been affected by anointing with oil have been marvelous."

A sister sends us a clipping which gives us a very simple, and it claims, a sure remedy for cancer and other blood diseases. We are reproducing it in our column of General Interest.

Patriarch Joseph R. Lambert gave us a timely and powerful sermon on last Sunday morning. His subject was suggested by the recent local effort by Utah elders, and dealt with God's unchangability, and the brother showed the glaring inconsistencies in the doctrine of plural marriage as advocated by the faction in Utah.

The Straight Road

STARVATION.

The story is told of a ship being wrecked on a small, but very fertile island. The crew escaped and also succeeded in saving some stores of provisions. In a few days in one of the small mountain gulches, they found a rich placer mine. Immediately, in fever haste, they all began to wash out gold, by aid of the stream, which ran down the gulch. Day after day they washed out heaps of gold-dust. Planting, sowing, and gathering of food was forgotten in the greed for gold. Winter suddenly came down on them. They were far out of the zone of navigation. Their food was gone; no provision had been made. They had heaps of gold. It was useless. They had invited starvation. No ship came, fishing failed, the rigors of cold winter shut off natural vegetation; miserably they died. Their whitened skeletons found beside their bags of gold and their empty sea-biscuit chests told the story.

Be it fact or fiction, the same story is told over and over in our spiritual work. We are constantly busy on things pertaining to this life, always after the dollar; no time for the church work. Thousands of poor souls are starving after the spiritual bread of life, and do not know it; finally the last call will come; we will look about eagerly for the bread of life, but alas, too late. We say we have not time to even read the church papers; our minds are constantly set on other things. Little do we realize that we are in a starving condition. Let us then arise to a sense of duty. We are needed in the Sunday-school, Religio work, and at all the church services. We are needed to buy tracts and church literature, so as to warn our neighbors, and above all, the missionaries' families are at our mercy. Many, many poor need our help. "Hear this cry." Remember, we owe God a tenth of all. We owe God our ever sacrifices; then we will no longer starve for the bread of life.

TAKING A STAND.

If a man takes a stand it is easier than if he does not know where he stands. There is this about the gospel which the servants of God and members of the church defend,—we need not ask one to maintain anything that is not written or does not harmonize with God's revealed word. If we represent Christ we must make our avowal to stand there, and it must not be a half way profession nor a vascillating obedience which is rendered.

A soldier enlisting in the army of Christ pledges himself to bring no disgrace to God's work; he wants to do as his superior officers order, to give all there is in him to the service in Christ, to be one of a militant host. He must be wholly Christ's and not a hesitating and lukewarm follower. When you begin to think about what you are to be by and by, first of all decide that you will be true,—a Christian.

I take it for granted that you will choose some way, right or wrong, there being two ways to travel through this life. Whatever you will be, first of all be a Christian. What says the Bible? "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven and all things shall be added unto you." First get your relation right with the Master, Christ.

There are those who know the Lord Jesus for their Master and friend; know him so intimately that they never start out in the morning or lay their heads on the pillow at night without their little talk with him. If they get to a hard place they tell him and he helps them over. Jesus, being their guide, goes before them and they follow. I think his is the dearest name. We should hasten to obey. Begin now and have the more time for enjoyment and for service, then all the days will be days of pleasure to you, if you have made up your mind that you will belong to Christ.

Do not be of those who try to serve him in secret. A man who is ashamed to declare himself might become a deserter to himself. How many could we, without difficulty, make to see very plainly the way of truth, and that we belong to Christ, perhaps in no way so readily as in confessing him before men. They who join the church take their stand publicly, where all who know them are aware of their belief. By the single step of enrollment among the disciples we signify to our companions and friends that we are endeavoring to serve Jesus, justly and truthfully. It is by obedience to its laws that we consider its interests.

We enter or join the church, and by that act declare that we have aims and hopes different from those of the world. Pleasure and worldly ideas keep many a person from obeying Christ. It is very commonly said, "I'll wait till a more convenient time; two or three years from now will be time." We have no guarantee that two or three years hence we will be here. The present is our only hour, and we are paying no real homage to Christ when we bid him stand aside and wait our leisure.

Would you keep a king, with his royal retinue, out in the cold while you spent a year in the enjoyment of your barred fortress? Yet there are those who thus shut out our King. Our King, who says, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." Occasionally a young person pleads that he is not good enough to join the church, but remember the lesson of the hymn, if you tarry till you're better you will never come at all. Christ's promise is to cleanse the heart and make it a fit room for him. Self-humility pleases him, but lack of faith is not humility.

Take your stand on his side; trust him and he will day by day enable you to grow in faith in many ways. Those who have taken their stand may show their love for Christ; the most needful thing about it is not to search for occasions where they may fight for Christ, but to take pains every day and hour to live with him, never to neglect prayer, never to forget the question, What would Jesus do; always to help those whom he loves; always to shine for him in the dusty ways and the dark corners; taking pains to show the genuine character of a Christian life in little things. Few of us ever have an opportunity to serve Christ on a conspicuous stage. Our own town, our own household, our office where we do as we are bidden, our desk, our little place of labor is the sphere in which we are to shine for him; you in your small corner and I in mine.

One excellent way is by being where we ought to be, and on time in the Sunday-school, as scholar or teacher, always in the class; never late in church, at the second service as well as the first; ready to work overtime without complaint; always cheery; always brave; living as you pray; and praying to live close, very close to the dear Master.

Blessed Christ, thus may we take our stand in the world and love and serve thee, O Lord.

Your brother,
W. R. RUSH.

Elders' Note-Book

A MINISTERIAL EXPERIENCE; ARRESTED FOR DISTRIBUTING TRACTS.

(A communication from Elder E. C. Briggs, being a copy of this report to the district conference at Ogden, Utah.)

To the President and Elders in Conference Assembled: I have the pleasure to report my mission work since our last conference. I have preached but few public sermons in the pulpit since our last assembly, but have done the best I could in the mission field. Have visited Provo, Springfield, Spanish Fork, Murray, and Ogden, but had my headquarters in Salt Lake City. In these places and cities I preached about five hundred sermons around the family altars, in their offices, stores, hotels, carriages, public thoroughfares, and railroad trains, to strangers and tourists from all parts of the globe, including many of the principal cities of the United States, such as Chicago, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Detroit, Baltimore, New York, Buffalo, Washington, D. C., Richmond, New Orleans, Louisville, besides all the chief cities of the west, and islands of the sea, Cuba, Honolulu, Japan, Africa, Egypt, England and Wales, Germany, Holland, Switzerland, France, Russia, and Italy. To all of these lands I have sent our literature and tracts, all of them devoted to religious subjects and theological questions, much of it written by President Joseph Smith and his brothers, Alexander H. and David H. Smith, sons of the choice seer, and others of the prominent elders of the Reorganized Church, also the letters and correspondence between Joseph F. Smith, Jr., of the Mormon Church, and myself, entitled, "Who's afraid to have the light turned on?"

For handing out this literature to citizens and tourists in the street south of the block of the ten-acre Temple Lot, in the heart of Salt Lake City, I was forbidden to continue by Mormon Elder Charles H. Wilcken (an attache of the Information Bureau), who often daily conducts strangers and tourists through the tabernacle. He had previous to this requested me not to give my literature or booklets to any one in the ten-acre block, and of course I acquiesced, but when the intolerant Mormon elder went so far as to forbid me handing them out on the street to innocent seekers after truth on the subject called "Mormonism," I protested in a very quiet way, and told him I knew my rights and proposed to exercise them. But on the 1st of September, Elder Wilcken called me to one side, while I was in conversation with the tourists, in company with Elder Davis, and said, "I wish in a friendly way to tell you I have forbidden you to hand out your tracts on this street, and now wish to say I have had counsel over the matter with men of authority and I know what I am doing, and if you hand out any more of your literature here I will have you arrested, and you may depend on it, for I know what I am doing."

In the meantime, during his many threats to have me arrested, I had consulted the city attorney, three lawyers, and two judges, and they all informed me that the city ordinance did not conflict with, or have any prohibitory law against my work, and advised me to pay no attention to the bigotted, intolerant Mormon elders who were constantly passing out their literature and some of it in support of the criminal practice of polygamy.

I therefore continued my canvass of the city with my associate missionary, Elder John Davis, who is from Stewartville, Missouri. We continued to hand out our literature to citizens and tourists, when on the tenth of this month I was arrested by order of Elder Wilcken, while I was on the street twenty-one feet east of the gate that leads into the Temple Lot near to the Information Bureau. There were at the time of my arrest only ten or twelve persons present.

A little coincident in connection with my arrest is worth mentioning as a matter of record. I had just been conversing with two ladies and I asked them, "Are you strangers in the city?"

One of them replied, "No, we reside in the city."
"Then you are good Mormons I presume?"

"We try to be."

I continued, "Are you brave enough to read anything you are not in the habit of getting in the Bureau of Information, for the Mormons will not allow me to hand out my tracts inside of the walls that surround this Temple Lot?"

The lady replied, "We are brave enough to read anything."

I then handed her two of my tracts, one entitled, "Was Joseph Smith a polygamist?" and my letters to Joseph F. Smith, Jr., "Who's afraid to have the light turned on?" remarking as I handed them to her, "See if I have not treated Joseph F. fairly."

As she read aloud, "Who's afraid to have the light turned on?" she quickly remarked, "A Josephite won't treat any one fair; perhaps you do not know who I am."

I quickly replied, "Oh! what is the matter now, I suppose you are a good Mormon," and you may imagine my surprise when she said, "I am Joseph F. Smith's wife," and again I exclaimed, "God bless your dear heart, I am glad to meet you. Let me shake hands with you." We shook hands, and she turned from me and walked away reading, "Who is afraid."

In about three minutes later, Elder Wilcken pointed me out to the police officer, who invited me to go with him. I was not aware of his intention, and remarked, "Why should I go with you, I am very busy just now," and he replied, "You are under arrest."

I said, "Is that so, bless your heart, I will accompany you with pleasure," and I turned around to those strangers, who had just taken some of my literature and said, "Please remember the injunction: 'I was in prison and ye visited me.' Come and see me."

Bless their hearts, some of them replied, "We will visit you," and I was led off to the police court accompanied by Elder Davis, who forsook me not, bless his good soul, as he cheerfully spoke comforting words to me with smiles all over his face.

But, my brethren, do not think I was cast down or discouraged, though this was my first arrest in all my life, and I am seventy-three years of age and been actively engaged in the ministry fifty-six years. Just think of it. Here I was led off into captivity by a policeman, at the instance of a so-called Saint (otherwise Mormon), and in that "land of Zion" so aptly described by the ancient brother Jeremiah 17: 5-7: "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord, for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land, and not inhabited. Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord [not in Adam—remember, my dear people] and whose hope the Lord is."

While in company with my associate missionaries, (Elders J. F. Curtis, John Davis, and E. A. Davis,) we are daily subject to insulting language against us by the elders of the Mormon church, and if what they say is true, our missionaries in foreign lands, Elders John W. Rushton, now in Great Britain, Peter Anderson, of Denmark, and Cornelius Butterworth, of Australia, are not gentlemen—much less Christians. But, thank God, from my personal acquaintance with these honored missionaries of foreign lands, I know they are greatly misrepresented by the Mormon elders, "returned missionaries" of Utah.

And here in Utah the elders of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints are forbidden the use of all the Mormon public houses of worship to hold meetings in, by the edicts of President Brigham Young down to President Joseph F. Smith, the pretender, in the Mormon church.

I submit the above report as a truthful narrative of my experiences and mission work in Utah.

I desire to add, by way of recording history and information to the honest, innocent, inquirer after truth, that on the 11th day of August, 1863, in company with Elder Alexander McCord, when on my first mission here, President Brigham Young said to me, "I do not want any of your doctrine here, and wherever I have any influence, not a door shall be open to you or your doctrine, for I do not want any of your preaching here, here, here! and you shall not have a meal of victuals only as a beggar in the territory."

With this report I wish also to say, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that I believe there are many honest, sincere people of the Mormon church, who have been induced to come to Utah through the glorious, sublime principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, which is "the power of God unto salvation to them that believe," as declared by the ancient Apostle Saint Paul. But these beautiful principles have been used by the crafty Mormon apostate leaders as a decoy, or stool pigeon, to teach their followers the chief heresies that Adam is the only God with which we have to do; a plurality of gods; the denial of the conception of Jesus the Christ by the Holy Ghost; blood atonement (that is, a man may have his own sins forgiven by having his own blood shed by his brethren), and the grosser crime of polygamy which is emphatically denounced in the law of God as whoredom.

These abominable doctrines were introduced and taught by President Brigham Young, but to their credit, I know that many of the dear ones, and rising generation, revolt at the corrupt teaching and priest-craft of their leader as soon as they sense the fact that these horrible doctrines have been taught in the sermons of their leaders, as are recorded in their Journal of Discourses, Millennial Star, Deseret News, and the Seer, the organs of their church; and many of them are horrified and denounce these corrupt teachings in disgust.

God bless their souls, may they find mercy in the patience of our heavenly Master, is my constant prayer daily.

With much love for these dear people and for their sake in the gospel of Jesus Christ our Lord,
I am,

Your fellow servant,

E. C. BRIGGS.

CHRIST OUR EXEMPLAR.

On entering the church we, as Latter Day Saints, usually lay aside all of our major faults, but some minute faults cling to us that prove a detriment to our spiritual progress, and our efforts to overcome them are weak indeed. We are told we are what we make ourselves, but usually our environments govern us to a great extent. Our professions have something to do with our manner and even looks. We are informed that the philosopher and skeptic possesses an habitual sneer; the student and thinker, a wrinkled brow; the soldier and statesman, firm, compressed lips, and thus the features follow the profession; therefore, if we profess to be followers of Christ and are not hypocrites, there will evidently be at least some identity and we will be seen striving to overcome, thus becoming more like him.

It is our duty to not only try to place ourselves in subjection to the law, but to assist others. Christ came to save the lowest wretch that ever was born; we are to become assimilated to him. His Father's will must now be accomplished through his servants, then we, claiming to be his servants, are commended to teach all nations, black or white, rich or poor; and if by misfortune they have fallen, our hand should be extended unto them, not inquiring first about their past life, but ready and willing to forgive whatever they have done, God to be the judge.

Right here, I wish to call your attention to Matthew 7: 2, 3, according to the Inspired Translation of the Holy Scriptures: "Judge not unrighteously, that ye be not judged; but judge righteous judgment, for with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." While the King James Version does not permit the judgment of man, reason prompts us to believe that it is consistent to judge if our judgment is a righteous one; but I fear there are more hasty, unwise, and unjust judgments passed by men, than conservative, wise, and just ones. Lack of wisdom, jealousy, and selfconceit, dwelling within the one who pleases to judge, will cause man many times to pass unrighteous judgment, thus inflicting wounds that will require years to heal; and I believe it will be consistent to say more hearts have been pierced, more tears caused to flow, more people discouraged, and more noble lives ruined by unwise, unjust judgments than by any other one unwise act. The ones passing judgment many times are pronounced firm and plain, when they are only blunt and boorish. O, God, help us to look down deep into the hearts of all humanity and not on the outward appearance.

In my travels, before I entered the ministry, and also the short time I have been in the ministry, I have come in contact with people whom I first thought giddy and proud, but when remaining long enough to become more acquainted, I found them tender-hearted and kind; the laughter displayed, the smile advanced was the covering of an almost broken heart and crushed soul. I read in my Bible that Christ's mission was and is to rescue the perishing and lift up the fallen, and when he says "fallen" I understand him to mean man or woman, and it mattereth not how low they have been degraded.

I once knew a young man who was falsely accused, misunderstood and misjudged, and his supposed friends shunning him caused him to enter company that was degraded. He was soon persuaded, against his will, into the ball-room and saloons. There was the start of his downfall. He went to the gutter.

Now the question, "What would Christ have done if he had come in contact with such a case?"

Answer, No doubt he would have given him encouragement, but instead, here is a sample of the conversation carried on between two so-called followers of Christ: "I would not dirty my hands trying to reform such a person."

Backbiter No. 2, "I'll never speak to him again."

The Bible informs us the one who backbites shall not be permitted to live in Zion. Webster informs us that backbiting is speaking evil of the one absent, and it mattereth not whether the evil be true or false, it is backbiting just the same. Now, compare the poor, fallen soul, and the backbiter, and answer in your mind who you think stands the best chance before a just God. Yet, while I abhor and condemn intoxicants and all evil in connection, I do not believe any one but God and those who have had the experience are qualified to judge such a character as mentioned above.

Our earthly father will usually give good instructions; our mother be the last one on earth to forsake us, but Jesus has promised to come to our rescue after all on earth has forsaken us. We are to become assimilated to him in thought, word, and action. The admonition is, "Be ye perfect as our Father in heaven is perfect." Now, I don't want to leave the impression that I claim sanctification yet, but we have had a splendid opportunity to partake of the jumping, (so-called sanctification, for we have landed in a hot-bed of those people a few times during the past year, and O, how they gag at what they are pleased to term Mormonism! They also made a few attempts to expose it and how profound was the logic used! But that is wandering from the line of thought. The idea is to overcome a little each day; pattern after the meek and lowly one who suffered and died for the fallen race. O, God, may we be to all humanity as Christ is to us! Then how soon the gathering would be a Zion indeed; our judgments would be righteous and it would be a step toward true charity, loving our neighbor as ourselves, also our enemies as we are commanded.

No one but God and an erring soul knows the real good of a kind word, and I will here insert a few lines from the pen of a poet:

"Drop a word of cheer and kindness
Just a flash and it is gone,
But there's half a hundred ripples
Circling on, and on, and on,
Bearing hope and joy and comfort,
On each splashing, dashing wave,
Till you don't believe the volume
Of the one kind word you gave.

"Drop a word of cheer and kindness—
In a minute you forget,
But there's gladness still a-swelling,
And there's joy a-circling yet;
And you've rolled a wave of comfort,
Whose sweet music can be heard,
Over miles and miles of waters,
Just by dropping a kind word."

Now let us note the language of Paul in Galatians 6: 1: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself lest thou be tempted." In practical life, no doubt, the majority of us have noticed when we have passed extreme judgments, we will be tempted and it will be measured to us again. We are told, God is love. He came to the earth in the personage of Jesus Christ, who came and set up his kingdom for the purpose of restoring Israel. The restoration is to be brought about by the love of God, through his servants. The question is, Are we doing our duty?

Most every prophecy given to latter-day Israel has been an admonition to be aware of pride; arise from lethargy and be united. While meditating and praying over the welfare of Zion from the depth of my soul, I have been compelled to cry out, O Star of Bethlehem, how long wilt thou be a guide to wandering Israel? O Weeping-willow of Gethsemane, how long wilt thy pleading cries ascend in behalf of thy erring children? O Son of God, shine forth till our souls are illuminated with thy love that we may reflect it to the world and be a blessing to all humanity!

I am not so forbearing and kind as I should be, but I hope to be able, by the help of the Master, to bridle my passions and smother my jealous and selfish desires, for we can not serve two masters, and I believe every element of hell is charged with undiluted, concentrated selfishness and jealousy. Satan has prepared radical language for the jealous, self-conceited person. He can do more harm, discourage and eradicate the tottering faith of more weak saints than ten conservative ministers can heal in years of labor. May God forbid us judging at all, if we haven't wisdom to pass righteous judgment. Would it not be better to seek out the good in the lives of human beings and if we can not find any good, keep silent?

Christ preached and practiced his religion, and while he did all he could for the sin-sick world, he never missed an opportunity to fire a shot at the Pharisees, Sadducees, hypocrites. If we only love those who love us, we are no better than they, and if there is anything that provokes me it is a willful sinner, a pretended saint, a backbiter, a talebearer, a hypocrite. Job tells us the hypocrite's hope shall perish. We claim more than most modern worshippers, so may our righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees and thus we be permitted to enter into the kingdom of heaven.

We often offer different excuses why we do not do as we should and I'm sure our environments assist in forming our character. Environments reduce at times to degradation and I admire a member who can be a Saint even though in an isolated condition, with unpleasant environments. On the other hand, environments correct and uplift, especially the young, even though their ancestors have been of a low class, and they should be commended for that. If we can intelligently say to the wayward one, your mother was a pure, noble woman; your father a good Christian man, it will touch his heart when all efforts have seemed in vain.

I have written some of this from experience and will have to be classed with the prodigal sons, and while Christ is ready to receive the prodigal and we are told the angels of heaven rejoice at his return, it is still better to be the one who has remained at home, for the Father says, "All of mine is thine;" while the one who has gone astray will have sometime, somewhere to reap what he has sown.

In conclusion for the benefit of all, permit me to insert another poem:

"Look ahead,
 No matter what your troubles,
 Look ahead.
 Never mind how trials double,
 Look ahead.
 Past mistakes are sure to find you
 If you let their memory bind you,
 And so never gaze behind you,
 Look ahead.
 "Don't stop in the way you're going,
 Look ahead,
 Don't waste time upon past showing,
 Look ahead,
 If the past has gone in failing,
 Spend no precious moments railing,
 With fresh energy prevailing,
 Look ahead.
 "Turn your back on life's disaster,
 Look ahead,
 If the past has failed, then faster
 Look ahead.
 Let the future wrest successes
 From the past mistakes and guesses,
 While the present this impresses,
 Look ahead.
 "Looking backward on past glory,
 Not ahead,
 Told of Lot's wife the sad story,
 While ahead
 Lay her land of woe-forsaking,
 So, if fortune you'd be making,
 And if ill your leave be taking,
 Look ahead."

May God help us each to strive to become more nearly perfect each day of our life; thus preparing ourselves to meet the Master when he makes his second advent, is the prayer of your humble servant.

HEALTH AND WEALTH IN THE WORD OF WISDOM. —PART IV.

In a former article we examined the value and detriments of some household drinks, and now with the thought in mind that even buttermilk may well take the place of coffee, for it contains all the protein while the excess of carbohydrates has been removed, we shall better understand the advice of a city health officer in the following:

A quart of milk equals in nutritious qualities one pound of meat; it equals one and three quarters pounds of fish. We should drink more milk. With a dish of fish, a dish of meat, and three quart bottles of milk he demonstrated the inferiority of meat and fish when compared to milk.

"Drink more milk," he advises. "You'll save more money and be better fed. We must cultivate a taste for milk and milk products. Holland is the greatest milk-drinking and milk-producing country in the world. The peasants eat meat only once a week. There is no more muscular and hardy race than the Dutch. The muscle comes from the cheese they eat and the milk they drink. We are eating too much meat. It produces most of our Bright's disease cases."

Over sixty per cent of the weight of the normal human body is water and must be continually replenished. A wise Creator has abundantly supplied our need in this respect in the gushing springs of the earth and the wonderfully distilled liquids of fresh fruits and herbs. Another essential is also supplied in the minerals they contain to repair and build up our bones, teeth, etc.

"And again, verily I say unto you, all wholesome herbs God hath ordained for the constitution, nature and use of man, every herb in the season thereof." Besides the proteins and the fats and starches, every daily ration must contain a small but important amount of mineral matter.

Bodily tissues, bones, teeth, and hair are built up in the young and kept in repair in the old by mineral substances, which also act as a tonic to the whole system. They may be acquired and assimilated most easily when taken in the form of fruits and vegetables.

Therefore some of the strongest vegetables, such as onions, greens, and carrots, which are especially rich in mineral matter, have a legitimate place in a menu, although they are often neglected as articles of food.

Lettuce, celery, cucumbers, and the plants which make good salads, are considered valuable by those who study the subject of diet from a scientific standpoint.

As the minerals found in vegetables are soluble in water, a portion is lost in the process of cooking and is most often thrown away with the "waste" when strained. Some of them, especially those which are young and tender, should be prepared in as little water as possible, to retain the salts.

Old vegetables, too tough to be served whole, make nutritious and appetizing purees or thick soups, from which the indigestible vegetable tissue has been removed. The water left from cooking asparagus and celery is also used in the soup pot by economical housekeepers, because of the valuable natural salts it contains.

The onion contains mucilage and a combination of salts which have a mild seductive effect. Physicians often order onions cooked in a simple fashion to be given to delicate children four or five times a week. They act as a blood tonic.

It is estimated that ten per cent of the materials brought into a house as the food supply are put into the garbage can in the form of waste. This includes bones, skins, and parings as well as the portions left over on individual plates after meals. The ten per cent may well be saved by a little more "wisdom" regarding our food supply and its real value to us; together with the medicine bill saved in a year it will go well toward paying that tenth or tithe which should go into the Lord's storehouse. Who will make a practical application of the Word of Wisdom from now on?

BAPTISTS ON THE LAYING ON OF HANDS.

In writing this article the writer has no desire to pose as a great debater, nor to become conspicuous in that line through the church papers, for the sake of popularity, but for the sake of truth. He feels he should be heard in regard to the matter herein stated, by reason of the fact that it has been his duty to defend the great latter-day work in public debate against some of the great champions (so called) who are continually on the warpath to destroy what they are pleased to call Mormonism, which they believe emanated from the Devil.

Mr. Bogard, who is now editor of the Arkansas Baptist, published at Little Rock, Arkansas, has just completed a series of articles in that paper in which he makes the claim that Satan is the father of our system of work. These articles seem to be greatly commended by some of the writers to that paper. Some of Bogard's people are continually pushing him to the front as a champion debater, prepared to vanquish any preacher in debate or any society on earth. They now have him boosted to the skies, so to speak, in the imagination of himself and some of his own people, and I thought it proper to write this article in order to knock the props from under him, so that those who read it can see him in his true light.

While in a debate with him at Vancleave, Miss., September, 1908, he flatly denied the fact that the Baptists ever practiced the laying on of hands. In order to refute this bold denial and assertion, I read a quotation in Parsons' Text Book, pages 117 and 118, which purported to have been taken from David Benedict's History of the Baptists, volume 1, page 487. The quotation was a plain and positive statement that the Baptists in this country about one hundred years ago did practice the laying on of hands. Here was a controverted point established in the hearts of the people by Baptist authority, so firmly that it could not be overthrown or extricated by truth (which is always more precious than gold or all the praise and popularity of the world). Here Mr. Bogard saw that a point had been fully established as a monument against his folly and that something must be done in order to cover it up from the minds of the audience, or he was ruined on that point. So he took from his satchel a very old history which contains about nine hundred and seventy-five pages, a copy of which was purchased by me a few days ago in a second hand book store in Kansas City, Missouri. The title-page is as follows: A General History of the Baptist Denomination in America and other parts of the World, by David Benedict, New York; Lewis Colby & Company 122 Nassau Street, 1848. With this book open at page 487 he tried to make it appear to the audience with a loud cry of deception and fraud that here is volume one of Benedict's History and the same volume and page referred to in Parsons' Text Book and not one word about laying on of hands. With this old book open in his hand he made a great flourish of trumpets, so to speak, in denouncing the so-called deception and trickery which he claimed was being practiced by our elders, and then invited any of the audience to come and examine the book, in order to be convinced that the laying on of hands could not be found there.

This was a very heated controversy and no doubt the reader is made to wonder how the writer met such a bold and daring charge of fraud and falsehood, which was hurled in our faces before an interested people. At the close of the speech in which we were accused of such glaring misrepresentations, I arose with the Philadelphia Confession of Faith in hand, which was adopted by the Baptists in London in 1689 and adopted again in this country in 1742 and proved by that that the Baptists did hold to the laying on of hands, according to an earlier edition of this document, and that they had left it out of their confession of faith according to a statement on the front cover of their Confession, as now published by the Baptist Book Concern, Louisville, Kentucky. A copy of this Confession can be had for ten cents.

I also denied that the book which Bogard held out to the audience was volume one of Benedict's History. The one he held in hand was a general history by Benedict published in 1848. The history quoted from by Parsons was published in 1813 and styled volume one; then challenged him to produce the volume one edition and if the laying on of hands could not be found there he would have some ground for saying that the author of the Text Book had lied. Here, dear reader, it was plainly manifested that a so-called doctor of divinity, preacher, and champion debater, who claims to be trying to lift up fallen humanity from earth to heaven through preaching, writing, praying, and debating, was trying to palm off on the people a history of the Baptist Denomination by Benedict, published in 1848, for the one by the same author which was published in 1813.

Now I would not try to impress the thought upon your mind for one second that I succeeded in convincing every person in that audience of the downright trickery and deception which was being practiced in their presence by this great leader in the Baptist ranks, neither would I have you think that I carried all the audience to my side like a cyclone and got them all converted. The unprejudiced and honest in heart, however, could see who was turning on the light. Bro. T. C. Kelley, my moderator, and myself, in order to get the proof beyond any question of doubt whatever that this was a case of deception and falsehood on the part of Elder Bogard, while in Mobile, Alabama, began to search for Benedict's History of the Baptists and the result of our efforts was written by Bro. Kelley and published in the Ensign of October 29, 1908. From this article I extract the following: "No sooner was the quotation read than Mr. Bogard jumped to his feet, with a great flourish of words, and presented what he claimed was the history from which the quotation is made, and proposed to 'quit the debate and go home if any such quotation could be found.' He branded the quotation as a 'lie' gotten up to deceive; offered to let any of us read the book he presented, and if the quotation in the Text Book could be found he would give up the debate and go home. I took the book and detected at a glance that he was trying to deceive the audience by pretending to have the edition of Benedict from which the excerpt in the Text Book is taken when in fact it was another edition altogether, and in one volume only, whereas the quotation is credited to volume 1, page 487.

"Mr. Bogard claimed his copy was one of the first that was ever published, and sought to make the audience believe, and probably succeeded in making some of them believe that it was 'volume one,' thus confounding the first edition with the volume. He admitted that there were other editions published afterward, and among them a two-volume edition some ten years after his, so his was first. I was satisfied Elder Bogard was practicing to deceive, and am now fully confirmed in the thought. Having made up my mind to find out the facts regarding the matter, in company with Bro. Slover and Bro. N. L. Booker, I came to Mobile yesterday to make such search as we might be able for Benedict's History of the Baptists. . . . We repaired to the home of the Reverend W. J. E. Cox, D. D., pastor of St. Francis Street Baptist Church, and (as the sanctified folks would say, 'bless the Lord,') we found the very book we wanted. It is entitled 'A General History of the Baptist Denomination in America and Other Parts of the World, by David Benedict, A. M.' It was published in Boston (55 Cornhill Street), by Lincoln & Edmonds in 1813. The copy shown us by the genial Doctor Cox bore also the stamp, volume 1, and on page 487 the quotation which Mr. Bogard denounced as a 'lie,' is found, and while the quotation in the 'Text Book' is not verbatim in one or two particulars, and one ellipsis is not indicated, it will be seen that no violence is done to the real meaning of Mr. Benedict, as touching the ceremony of laying on of hands. I give the full quotation which Doctor Cox very kindly helped us to prepare, and suggest that those who wish to use it might copy it, being careful to have it correct, or clip it from Ensign, and paste in Text Book at the proper place. It is as follows: 'The doctrine of laying on of hands was, at the beginning of this church, [First Baptist Church, Providence,] held in a lax manner; but it became afterward a term of communion, and continued so until after Doctor Manning came among them; he prevailed with the church to admit to occasional communion, those brethren who were not convinced of the duty of coming under hands; but very few such were received as members till after his death. But on August 4, 1791, the church had a full meeting, when this point was distinctly considered, and a clear vote was gained to admit members who did not hold that doctrine. . . . But, notwithstanding this vote, the laying on of hands, not as an ordinance, but as a form of receiving new members, was generally practiced until 1808, when the pastor of the church, who had been educated in the belief of this ceremony, as his father was an advocate for it, and who had hitherto practiced it, not however, without troublesome scruples of its propriety, found his mind brought to a stand on the subject, and after duly weighing the matter informed the church that he could no longer continue the practice, and unless they could excuse him, he must ask a dismission from his pastoral care. After a full discussion of the subject, the church, with but one dissenting voice, voted not to dismiss him and laying on of hands of course fell into neglect. Some few worthy members were desirous of retaining both their pastor and this ancient ceremony, but not being disposed to act against the voice of the church, no division and but little controversy ensued.' From the above it appears that it was the First Baptist Church in Providence, not the Pawtucket Church that was referred to by Benedict. . . . The title-page of Elder Bogard's copy . . . has not the words 'volume one,' and shows that it was published in New York, by Colby & Co., in 1848. This shows that the one we examined, was published thirty-five years earlier than Mr. Bogard's 'first volume' although he claimed his was the first publication of the work. . . . Yours in the conflict for truth and right, T. C. Kelley."

"P. S. I should have stated that the words 'First Baptist Church; Providence,' in parentheses [brackets] are not in the book, but are supplied to indicate what church is referred to."

The above by Bro. Kelley settles the matter as to whether volume one of Benedict's History quoted in Text Book shows that the Baptists practiced the laying on of hands. It also proves that we were correct in our conclusion in regard to Bogard trying to practice deception. I now proceed to examine a copy of the very book with which he tried to deceive the audience and palm it off on the people, as volume one, already examined. As stated already, I purchased a copy of this book a few days ago and I make extracts from it as follows, in regard to the practice of laying on of hands among the Baptists. In referring to the "First Church in Providence," the oldest of the Baptist denomination in America, formed in March, 1639, it says: "Laying on of hands was held in a lax manner, so that some persons were received without it. But this practice, in the course of time, was more rigidly enforced, and became the subject of no little altercation and trouble, as their subsequent history will show. But at this early period, according to Governor Jenkes, the lax system prevailed throughout the colony. It appears that many in that day regarded the declaration of Paul in Hebrews 1:2 as containing a summary of essential principles, among which it was contended that the imposition of hands on every baptized Christian held a distinct place. Although it is now very generally admitted that 'the laying on of hands,' mentioned in that passage is an allusion to the appointed sign, by which the apostles conferred the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit; a knowledge of which was, of course, received by their converts among the first elements, or lessons of Christianity; yet then, many excellent men supposed that the phrase referred to a perpetual ordinance, designed to succeed baptism, the reception of both, which was as necessary to constitute a true profession of Christianity, as repentance and faith were necessary to constitute a spiritual Christian. With this view of the case, they felt justified in urging the laying on of hands after baptism, as a term of church communion."—Pages 450 and 451.

Again I find this: "When Mr. Vaughan visited Providence, in 1652, in order to procure the aid of Mr. Wickenden in forming a church which would hold the laying on of hands as a divine ordinance, Mr. Dexter accompanied them to Newport, and seems to have taken part in that service. The breach which then arose out of the controversy about laying on of hands as a divine rite, was afterwards healed, as the practice was adopted by the church, although it was not an indispensable term of communion or membership. In succeeding years, however, it is not probable that any entered the church without it, and the doctrine of the imposition of hands was universally received for more than a century.—Ibid., p. 452.

I could make other quotations from the same work in support of the above, but this is sufficient.

"Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, Who seeth us? and who knoweth us?"—Isaiah 29:15.

"Woe unto them that turn aside the just for a thing of naught, and revile against that which is good, and say that it is of no worth; for the day shall come that the Lord God will speedily visit the inhabitants of the earth; and in that day that they are fully ripe in iniquity, they shall perish."—2 Nephi, 12:3.

Of General Interest

Here is a local that is better than a whole sermon on the booze question. It is from a western paper and is said to have actually happened. A western miner was in the habit of buying fifteen cents' worth of liver on Saturday night after he had spent most of his money for liquor. One night while buying his customary liver, he saw the saloon-keeper stalk in, throw down an identical five dollar bill spent with him by the miner and order a roast and trimmings. That set the miner to thinking, so he put up a job with his fellow miners. They all agreed not to buy liquor for a whole week and to buy a roast each, next Saturday night. When Saturday night came forty miners went to the butcher shop and cleaned the butcher out by ordering forty roasts for Sunday. While the butcher was doing up the last roast the saloon-keeper came in and said: "Well, John, I'll have to take liver this time. Trade is awfully dull. I don't understand it." So the butcher sold him the liver. Then the butcher fell to thinking. "I guess, after all," he said to himself, "there is some sense in the prohibition argument, for it is a whole lot more profitable to sell forty roasts and one order for liver, than it is to sell one roast and forty orders for liver."—Knoxville Journal.

HONEY A CURE FOR CANCER.

It is passing strange so many of nature's valuable secrets should be before us every day yet we remain unconscious of their existence until some one discovers them. It has been accidentally discovered that honey is a safe, certain and sure cure for cancer, and all other blood diseases. A farmer had contracted blood poison from helping to lay out a friend, and after two years' treatment had been given up to die by doctors and friends and had made his will. The honey harvest had been unusually heavy that year and he noticed that as soon as he began eating it he began to improve and in a few weeks the symptoms disappeared and have never returned. Since then he has cured three very bad cases of cancer, two of blood poisoning, one extremely bad case resulting from vaccination, one of eczema and one of eruptions on the face. The honey should be strained, as the virtue is in the nectar and taken very moderately at first, taking a tablespoonful only three times a day, gradually increasing until as much as a gill can be taken at a meal with impunity. Every one afflicted with cancer, or blood disease of any kind, should give the remedy a fair trial, as it is cheap, safe and sure. For many years they have been trying to find a remedy for cancer. Here it is, give it a trial, and be convinced. A certain doctor to whom I gave the remedy free, asking only that he make public the discovery, has been planning to coin millions out of afflicted people's pockets. I want every one to know and use it free. It is nature's medicine.

FOOD AND FATIGUE.

The recent experiments to discover the effect of diet on physical endurance are regarded by a writer in the Revue Scientifique as clearly indicating that entire or partial abstinence from meat greatly improves one's resistance to fatigue. He remarks that there is always a lively contest on between meat eaters and vegetarians; but all question of theory or of self-appreciation apart, he believes it is interesting to inquire whether flesh eaters resist fatigue better than abstainers. He notes first a series of experiments made by our own Professor Irving Fisher on healthy subjects chosen from among both flesh-eaters and vegetarians, showing that the latter resist fatigue much longer than the others. "This fact having been duly established," he says, "it remains to investigate the cause." He continues:

"Doctor A. Haig thinks that this resistance is acquired by all those who give up foods that are able to form uric acid; for according to him it is this that causes fatigue. His theories have found both adherents and opponents.

"According to Haig, the action of uric acid is due to the fact that it makes the blood viscous, and that therefore the heart finds difficulty in forcing it through capillaries, so that there is an increase of blood-pressure. Observations show, in fact, that persons who have great endurance often have a low blood-pressure.

"Another theory than Haig's has it that flesh food contains 'fatigue-poisons' which accentuate the effects of those produced by the muscular activity of the organism.

"Finally, according to a third theory, that of Professor Chittenden, as noted by Professor Irving Fisher, the fatty substances and carbohydrates are burned entirely in the organism, being reduced to carbonic acid and water, which are easily eliminated; while the albumen leaves crystallizable residues, among which is uric acid. Now, theoretically, these products are the cause of fatigue.

"To sum up, the problem of alimentation remains still to be solved; but it is at any rate proved that when the food is poor in albumen, as in the case with abstinence from flesh, the endurance is more considerable.

"Physicians are tending to diminish the quantity of meat in prescribed diets, and they are thus in accord with the theories of partisans of a non-flesh alimentation.

"A large number of persons, without being subjected to any special obligatory diet, have cut out meat from their evening meal, without inconvenience and even with benefit. Abstinence from animal food would be observed much more generally if the adoption of this new regimen were brought about progressively and not suddenly as often happens; it is necessary to habituate the stomach to it, and this habit is quickly acquired.

"It may be added that experience shows that when meat has been dropped from one's diet one feels better and never desires to return to it."—Translation made for the Literary Digest, April 24, 1909.

EAT MORE RICE.

IT IS BEST OF FOODS.

The economical housewife keeps posted as to the rise and fall of market prices of food; or rather as to the rise in prices, for it is a long time since there has been any fall.

And when flour jumps suddenly in price, as happened recently, the judicious cook suddenly remembers that she has not cooked any rice for a long time.

Which is a pity; for rice is one of the most palatable, most easily digested, most nutritious and least expensive of the foods used by man.

To estimate its value, one has only to recall that rice is the staple food of one third of humanity. This does not mean that it is the exclusive diet of the people who use it in tropical countries, as is sometimes stated, for eastern races use rice as western races use potatoes and bread. In combination with flesh-forming foods, such as milk, eggs, cheese, oil and bacon.

To give variety to the breakfast table, rice may be served in griddle cakes, or as a cereal with sugar and cream.

Since rice contains little tough fiber or waste, it is a valuable food for invalids and children at any meal.

At luncheon, rice may be the main dish, either prepared with eggs in omelet form, or served with cream and strawberries or with stewed prunes. The cost is much less than that of a meat luncheon.

Rice may appear at dinner used to thicken the soup, or molded into croquettes, or combined with eggs and milk in pudding form.—Cleveland Press.

THE JEW IN AMERICA.

A series of tracts under the above title is being issued by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, at Cincinnati. The present tract is No. 2 of the series. It points out the instrumentality of the Jew in making the voyage of Columbus possible; notes that the first European (aside from the Northmen discoverers) who set foot on American soil was the Jew; traces the early Jewish settlers; summarizes their prominent and honorable part in the Revolution; their services in the War of 1812 and the Mexican War, in the great Civil War, and in the Spanish-American War—all excellent patriotic service, honorable alike to the Jews and to the country. In the Spanish war there was a special reason why the Jews should be zealous, and they did not fail to make good use of their opportunity to show to Spain that her brutal oppression and cruel banishment of the Jewish race had not been forgotten.

It is recited herein, also, that Jewish congregations addressed letters of congratulation to Washington as the first President of the United States; that Presidents Jefferson, Adams, and Madison wrote appreciative replies to Jewish congregations; and that the respect shown to the Jews by other presidents is well transcribed. A considerable number of historical data are given in brief form, noting the enterprise and good service of Jews in various works, private and public.

It is a good showing, well compiled. It is made, we are sure, not in any boastful spirit, but only to counteract prejudice and depreciation. As such it is welcome, and will do good service. And all will welcome the day when it will no longer be thought either advisable or necessary to issue defenses or pleas for any class of persons in this country; when all shall be accepted without prejudice or antagonism, on the broad, ample platform of patriotic Americanism in the national sense, every man standing before the public on his own merits, neither to be frowned upon nor smiled upon from any other basis, than that of the worth and upright, staunch manhood that is in him.—The Salt Lake Tribune, June 6, 1909.

Thou must be true thyself,
 If thou the truth would'st teach;
 Thy soul must overthrow, if thou
 Another's soul would'st reach.
 It needs the overflow of heart
 To give the lips full speech.
 Think truly, and thy thoughts
 Shall the world's famine feed;
 Speak truly, and each word of thine
 Shall be a fruitful seed;
 Live truly, and thy life shall be
 A great and noble creed.

He Leadeth Me.

In pastures green? Not always; sometimes
He who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me
In weary ways where heavy shadows be.

Out of the sunshine warm, and soft and bright,
Out of the sunshine into darkest night,
I oft would faint with sorrow and affright,

Only for this—I know he holds my hand,
So whether in green or desert land
I trust, although I may not understand.

And by still waters? No, not always so;
Ofttimes the heavy tempests round me blow
And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storms beat loudest and I cry Aloud for help, the Master standeth by
And whispers to my soul, "Lo it is I."

Above the tempest wild I hear him say,
"Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day;
In every path of thine I lead the way."

So, whether on the hilltops high and fair
I dwell, or in the sunless valley where
The shadows lie, what matter? He is there.

And more than this: where'er the pathway leads
He gives to me no helpless, broken reed,
But his own hand, sufficient for my need.

Lo, where he leads me I can safely go;
And in the blest hereafter I shall know
Why in his wisdom he hath led me so.

To the Mothers who read the Home Column: It is with a great feeling of pleasure I write to tell you that the HERALD is a welcome visitor at our home, and how much I appreciate all the good things it contains, and especially the Home Column. As a mother I can appreciate the good advice that is given in the Column from time to time. In the HERALD of May 12, is a good article written by "Auntie," and I agree with her that lots of money is spent or wasted in buying post-cards. All the pennies it takes to get post-cards would mean, if saved and given to the children's home or Graceland, several dollars, yes a good many dollars. Would not that be lots nicer to have a children's home of our own, as post-cards will soon be destroyed, and the home would mean home to hundreds of poor orphan children. In our day and age of the world folks do not realize what good money is, or if they do, they do not put it into very good use. The Bishop would have less need to call for money if the Saints all responded to the Lord's command to pay their tithing, and a good many could without any injury to themselves give fifty or one hundred dollars free-will offering. The gathering of the Saints at various places will need our work and all the assistance that is possible to give. If each Saint would do his part it would not be long till the Saints would be rejoicing together. It is our hope to be among the gathered some day.

As the Lord blesses and prospers us, do we always thank him and give his share, a tenth, to him? Let us teach our children the law of tithing while they are young, then they will have formed the habit, and it will be easier for them when they are grown to pay their tithes and to consecrate to the church. I was taught the law of tithing when but ten years old, and it has always been a very easy matter for me to pay when I have had anything to pay. I have a sweet little girl eighteen months old, and I intend to teach her to the best of my knowledge and understanding. Children are great imitators, and we should be very careful in our every-day walk; for as they see their parents do, they like to do likewise. A very small child will try to imitate, (this I know by experience) so do not think our little ones too small to remember, for what they once learn is hard to break. I would like to see more letters than there have been lately in the Column, as some of the older sisters are good writers and can give us younger ones some good advice. I ask the faith and prayers of the sisters that I may live faithful and accomplish some good in this earth life.

Love to all the sisters,

MRS. P. H. S.

Request for Prayer.

SCRANTON, Pennsylvania, June 14, 1909.

Dear Saints: I desire your prayers so that I may be healed of my affliction. I have undergone two operations within the last nine months and there is a possibility of having to undergo the third, unless the Lord comes to my rescue. I wish the Saints to pray for me, that if it be the will of God, I may be restored to health.

Your sister in the faith,

Editors Herald: I earnestly request the prayers of all God's people in behalf of my sister Mrs. Nettie Roatcap, who is helpless from rheumatism, that if it be God's will she may be healed. Her only hope is in God, and though not a member of the church she is a strong believer. She desires that the way may be opened up that she may be baptized, as her husband is very much opposed. She has a large family of mostly small children and desires to be spared to raise them.

COMSTOCK, Nebraska, June 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: The debate between Bro. W. E. Peak and C. A. Beason, of the Seventh Day Adventists, closed here on the evening of the 8th, Beason refusing to meet Bro. Peak the next evening as per agreement. They debated four propositions and were to devote ten evenings to them, but Beason fell down the ninth evening and the debate closed. Our victory was complete; much good was done. Two of the best women in Comstock were baptized. (They were my daughters, you know.) The Saints were encouraged and rejoiced to see their position so ably defended.

Bro. Peak acquitted himself well and showed great familiarity with the subjects dealt with. His fairness with his opponent was noticed by the people.

On the wind-up Bro. Peak pleasantly notified our Adventist friends that if they should have any questions to settle with us his address was Pittsburg, Kansas. "Please let me know." May the blessings of God abide with his people.

In the faith,

Dear Saints: For some time I have felt impressed to write something for the HERALD. I think it is the duty of all to do what we can for the upbuilding of the cause and by writing this I hope to be able to say something that is helpful and edifying. A great many of us slumber too much, I believe, when we should be up and doing. I realize that I am very negligent, many times duty lies in my pathway and I pass it by and then how I regret that I did so. For every time I neglect my duty I realize that just so many blessings I must lose and I feel God is just in dealing with me so. God deals righteously with all. Speaking of God's mercy in Psalms it reads, "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: How excellent is thy loving-kindness." And it is indeed so. There is no reason why we should not all be blessed abundantly, for if we but keep his commandments he will strengthen us, watch over us, and be near us at all times of need. Trust in him at all times for "blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust. And great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness." Let us go to God for refuge when we see danger near, for is he not our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble? Must we be counted among them that go down into the pit? Why should we be when so much lies before us in reach if we will but reach forth and grasp it? I know that this is not always an easy thing to do, but has not God promised us strength if we will make the effort to do that which is pleasing and acceptable before him? The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man and his efforts to do right. The Lord is "merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy. But he will not always chide: neither will he keep his anger for ever." We can not expect to continue in the crooked way and then at the eleventh hour repent for our wrong doings, but put forth our greatest efforts to do good and he will bless us. Let us fear God and keep his commandments. "For the mercy of the Lord is everlasting upon them that fear him. For such as keep his covenants and to those that remember and obey his commandments he hath blessings in store for them."

I ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may grow in wisdom and understanding, be strengthened that I may be able to overcome the weaknesses of my nature and come out conqueror in the end and gain a crown of righteousness. This is the prayer of your sister in the faith,

OLLIE DERRY.

PHILBROOK, Montana, June 7, 1909.

Dear Herald: It has been some time since I wrote to your columns. We are among the isolated ones and have no preaching, but the HERALD and Ensign. I was in Lewiston, Montana, a few nights ago, and I found four Utah elders preaching on the street. After they got through I went up to them and shook hands with them and told them who I was. I asked them a few questions in regard to their evil doctrine. They said in the presence of three hundred people that they believed in polygamy, but did not practice it or teach it. Said Joseph Smith taught and practiced polygamy before his death and said they could prove it. I challenged them for discussion, and they said they would meet any of our elders. I told them I would get one in two weeks and tried to get them to sign up propositions. This they refused to do; said they would meet me in private and discuss any subject I wanted to discuss. I told them if they had the truth it would stand anywhere. They said our people were trying to tear down instead of build up. Said our people persecuted them everywhere they went. I told them I wanted the people of Lewiston to know that there were two churches by the name of Latter Day Saint, and the one I belonged to did not believe in the evils of Utah. I told them Joseph F. Smith was now living with five wives, which they denied and said he was just supporting them, and not living with them. One of them said he was a son of the seventh wife of one of the twelve; said he was born eight months after Joseph's death, so you see it don't hurt them to lie, if they do claim to preach the gospel.

If any of our elders would like to do street preaching, they might do some good in Lewiston. Those Utah elders said they were going to stay four months.

Sr. S. C. Weaver lives there. She is the daughter of William H. Duncan who passed away a year ago or more.

Ever praying for the truth, I remain,

OMAHA, Nebraska, June 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: The Religio and Sunday-school conventions and conference convened at Omaha, June 4 to 6. Very peaceful sessions throughout and we believe good was done, but the attendance was small. It seemed especially so to me, having been accustomed to a large attendance. The church work in the district does not seem to be advancing very fast. I believe it is conceded that Omaha now represents one half of the membership, if not more, that lives in reach of the branches; but there seems to be members scattered all over the district, which comprises from fifteen to seventeen counties. There are only four branches, five Sunday-schools, two Religios, and two of the branches very weak. I understand at one time there were ten or twelve branches, but because of Saints moving away and others losing interest, the branches became disorganized. What a pitiful condition! I do hope we will not in the future make such mistakes as to be moving so much.

I have heard of comparatively few that have done as the Lord has commanded; that is, to seek counsel from those that God has said should give counsel, and also ask God to direct in the matter. But I have known of many who have become discouraged and almost given up this glorious work because they have been so disappointed in their moving. I feel to thank God that he has again revealed his will on this very thing, and has given us to understand that Zion is not all to be in one small place. I hope all may profit by this, as well as by our experiences and observations.

We are trying to keep the scattered members alive by getting them to take up the home department work of both Sunday-school and Religio. There has been a number already who have taken up the Sunday-school. At our last convention our home department superintendent, Bro. H. S. Lytle, reported that he had home class members outside of branch jurisdiction in six different counties. Who can tell what the result of this will be if it is faithfully carried on by those now enlisted? May God bless them, and ere long may we have this district as it was, and more, with branches where there are members, so they and their children may have the blessed privilege of attending church services. Who will rise up in their place and tell us what the number of the membership of this church would have been to-day, if all the children that have been born to members of this church had been saved to the church? Oh, had we not ought to put all our energy to work and save what we have and those dear ones that God gives us? Well, we are hopefully pressing on towards the prize.

Since General Conference we have had in the city of the missionary force and preached for us C. E. Butterworth, C. Derry, J. R. Sutton, and T. W. Chatburn. All gave us words of cheer and hope. I must mention one thought given by one. He said he met a little boy as he, the elder, was on his way to Sunday-school one morning, and asked the boy about the Sunday-school. The little fellow finally, with tears in his eyes, said, "Our Sunday-school is ruined, ruined!" He finally got the boy to tell how this had been done, and the little fellow said "a man came and took away my teacher." Sunday-school teachers, did you ever think how easy it is for you to ruin your class, by just staying away and only being present when it is convenient for you to be there?

May God bless his children everywhere is our prayer. Our next conference meets at Decatur, Nebraska, October 2, at nine o'clock in the morning for prayer, and at ten o'clock for business. We do hope a better attendance will be there.

Still in the conflict,

J. M. BAKER.

DETROIT, Texas, June 5, 1909.

Editors Herald: I thought to pen you a few lines to let you know where we are. We have changed our place of abode again. It seems the Lord has us on the move all the time. Well, that is a good idea if we are wise and move aright, and I feel sure I see the wisdom in the all wise Father in winning our way through this world of sin and sorrow; but when we stop and think of the past blessings we have received at our bountiful Father's hands, our hearts leap for joy and praise to his holy name for the gospel and the knowledge we have of the same; to see his hand over us and to realize it is he that is pointing out our way, and to see such victory over the evil one in so many ways, it strengthens our faith and increases our joy in this great latter-day work.

There have been a great many things that have transpired that I would like to mention, but will refrain for want of space and fear of the waste-basket. We attended a birthday supper last evening of our young brother, Lee Russell, whom, if he walks upright and just, I think the Lord will call him to the work. I wish to relate a little conversation I heard while there by a non-member. While the ice-cream was being prepared, this lady, who is a neighbor and who has heard the gospel as preached by the Utah people, said she fully believes the angel's message, but can not believe the marriage question like they do, and said she wants to learn more about what our people are doing. Said also there are several points that she would like cleared up; the authority is the main point. It is very clear to me that Joseph Smith is his father's successor, but she looks at it from the Utah people's view, and does not know what to do with Brigham Young. Surely it takes both sides of the question before one can see clearly, and one has to prepare his heart for this message before it can ever abide in his heart. The heart must be rid of all the world's pleasures and seek pleasure in the gospel before the Lord will come to the rescue. It takes all one can do and all the Lord will do for us to complete our salvation.

I enjoy reading the HERALD. I have heard but few sermons since I came into the church, but I am still holding on to the rod of iron. While at Caton, Texas, I made many friends for the work. I hope we had the gospel put before the people, at any rate, and some spoke of being pleased. Also at Blossom we had the gospel preached in power and much assurance. Opposition is everywhere among some classes and will continue to be, until the King reigns, whose right it is to reign.

Elder Bussell is improving very rapidly now, and we hope he will soon be able to be in the field again. I am looking forward to, and praying for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, that we few Saints here will see the work in a more prosperous condition.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, I am,

Your sister in the gospel,

MRS. M. M. AARONS.

EAST INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, June 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: If you will give me a little space in your columns I want to make a few remarks on a letter of a down-hearted Latter Day Saint. I do it to cheer such for I have been one for many years. Some would rebuke me when I would tell these things, and I bore the burden alone; so deaf that I could not hear preaching or any conversation that was directed to me, and could read but a short time. I began to look for the loose bur, or lost bolt. At first I did not attend church, for I could not hear, but it finally occurred to me that I should go, so as not to be a transgressor of the law, and I went for that purpose. I did not take the church papers as I could read but very little; not because I did not have time, but on account of my head. It seemed I ought to take them so I did, but I did not pay any tithing. So many said the bishop did not spend the money right, but it came to me, "Won't God hold you to account for your duty and the bishop for his?" I had neglected my prayers because I was so poor. When I attended to these things as they were shown me, things began to change, until now the light shines instead of darkness.

What this will do for one it will do for another; but you must not hold up your hands and let the enemy take the treasures, but stand as valiant soldiers and not be afraid to die in a good cause. We must die to sin if we would have salvation. Try this, not for a year, but for always. I am realizing blessings now that I have prayed for twenty years.

Your brother in the gospel,

F. T. DOBIE.

WALTER, Oklahoma, June 2, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been thinking for some time of writing, but something always hinders. I am a Latter Day Saint, and sometimes I think a very weak one, but I pray daily for more faith and knowledge of the gospel. I joined the church about eleven years ago, at the age of fifteen. The first elders I heard preach were Brn. J. D. and E. A. Erwin. My father, stepmother, and myself went about twenty-five miles to hear them preach, and father got very much interested in the work. He insisted on them coming to our neighborhood to hold meetings, and Bro. J. D. did so. He preached about ten times, and at the end of the meeting, father, my stepmother, and myself were baptized. At the age of seventeen I left my father's home, and I guess I did wrong in so doing. Until I was about nineteen I lived among the Saints and tried to live the gospel, and was made to feel the Spirit of the Lord many times. After that I wandered off and took up with bad company and went to the bad, as many of the Saints who know me know, and for three or more years I was a wild and reckless boy. But during this time I was made to feel the Spirit several times and had some wonderful dreams, warning me I was doing wrong, and that I ought to turn back to the right way. But by the prayers and advice of my dear father and other friends and Saints I was made to see and realize that I was on my downward road.

I went to the Lord in prayer, asking forgiveness for the wrong and sin I had committed and the way I had lived, and I felt that the Lord did forgive me. Then we had a business-meeting at Bro. F. Thompson's, at Manchester, Texas, the church where my name was enrolled, and there I made my confession and asked the church to forgive me and to pray for me that I might live a better life. Since that time I have tried to live better, but many times I have done wrong, and about four years ago I was taken with disease that broke my health down. I left Eastern Texas where I was raised and went west, and haven't had any health since. I have traveled through Western Texas and New Mexico and back into South-western Oklahoma, where I have been for the last three years.

I have had very bad health and have suffered untold misery, and the last year I have been unable to do anything at all.

I want to ask the Saints to pray for me, and especially those who know me, that I may be restored to my health again, and that I may do all that I can to help carry the good work on. It has been said several different times by some of the Saints that the Lord had a work for me to do, and I am sure of that. We all have a work to do, and I believe if I had only done right I would now be a different man, and would not have had to suffer as I have. But that is all past now and we can not call back the past, but only hope for a brighter future and try to live a better life.

I again ask the Saints, and especially the elders whom I am acquainted with, to remember me daily in their prayers, that I may receive my health again. I would be glad to see some of the elders come to this country and preach the gospel to the people here; for I believe there are good honest-hearted people in our community, and believe they would accept the truth. Some few have heard the gospel, but there are no Saints here except my brother and two sisters and their families, myself, and one lady by the name of Stanton, from Dallas County, Texas.

Hoping the work may have greater success, and that the gospel may be carried to different parts of the world, I close.

As ever, your brother,

JAMES BUSSELL.

GREENWOOD, Missouri, June 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: Once more I ask you a favor in regard to our missionaries that have been appointed to labor in the foreign lands. I call them our missionaries; they are sent there by authority of this church and faith.

We know we have the everlasting gospel to offer to a sinful world; that gospel is the means which opens up the communication with high heaven, where God and Christ dwell. No higher authority exists in the whole universe. This gospel is the plan of salvation, established before the foundation of this earth was laid. We want to let all people, not only in this country, but in the old countries as well, know the angel's message which has been brought to earth in the latter days. In order that this might be done we should not neglect our duties to help in whatever way we can.

We have heard that some have responded to the call, and have done what they could. This means has been used in hiring halls to preach in. Let us do more along this line that we may be blessed.

Bro. Okerlind is at Eskilstuna, Sweden, and others are located in different parts of the country, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark; all of those brethren need your help, not only with money, but with your faith and prayers. Who will respond with a little help? It can be sent direct to Bro. Oscar Okerlind, Osgatan 88, Eskilstuna, Sweden. I am asking this of the Swedish brethren and sisters. Do not forget this—our duty that we owe to our countrymen. Do what you can and God will bless you.

Your humble brother in Christ,

C. J. CARLSON.

CHURCHELL, Michigan, May 30, 1909.

Dear Herald: I write to let you know how the work is moving along here. I have been holding meetings in a school-house about six miles from the Prescott church and baptized sixteen, besides held some meetings at other places. The work is moving along nicely in this part of the vineyard.

My health is not as good as before I had the fever about a year and a half ago, but am in hopes I will be able to do my duty in the gospel work.

In bonds,

A. E. BARR.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Iowa, June 11, 1909.

Brother Editor: I am trying to hold forth the banner of King Immanuel in Mount Pleasant at present. Had two meetings in the park in the center of the square by permission of the mayor of the town; also in a private house. Will continue over Sunday. Some seem to be interested in the meetings. One man said such doctrine was of the Devil. "Well," I said, "I can't help that. They called Jesus Christ Beelzebub, but it was too plain that we must be born of water and of the Spirit, or we can not enter into the kingdom of God." He couldn't stand the argument and turned away and the crowd laughed at him, and said, "Don't run away." I said, "No, don't be rushed off." He came back again and has been attending the meeting, so I hope some good may be done.

Yours in gospel bonds,

NEPHI LOVELL.

MADISON, South Dakota, June 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: This letter will be a medley; it will contain news of interest to the general reader, some observations of the writer, and requests to those interested in this mission.

Before leaving home on May 7 for my mission field, I determined to call at as many homes as possible along the route leading to my destination. My first stopping place was Sioux City, where I had a five-hour wait between trains and the time was utilized by calling on Bro. and Sr. Delos R. Lytle and I found them hopeful in gospel work, but somewhat disappointed, because of recent changes and contemplated ones their branch would be left with only a teacher and no permanent missionary. This condition of things led me to reflect on the statement so often made that our branches were being broken up because so many of our members were moving to the stakes. I can only speak from knowledge in regard to my own district, Northern Nebraska, where I have been a member for nearly thirty-two years. In that time five branches have disappeared, and two prior to that time. Of the number moving to the stakes, four families went to Lamoni, and three to Independence, and one to the Far West, Missouri, District, and the remainder are scattered from Alaska to Canada. We have no knowledge of any branches being raised up where they went. So far as the statement referred to applies to that particular district, it is an error, and the depletion of the branches is not the result of gathering in harmony with the command given in 1873, but a disregard of it.

I stopped long enough at Akron to tell the few Saints there that Zion was prospering and our Father's work was onward. My next stop was at Fairview, and I tarried over Sunday, May 9, at the home of Bro. E. C. Dougherty. Had service and also met with them in their Sunday-school home class, which has a record of three and one half years without missing a session; grandmother, father, and five boys make up the number. Sr. Hughes, near Harrisburg, keeps up a home class with her three children, and with a genial husband, who always welcomes the missionary, makes it a pleasant task. At Sioux Falls a four-hour wait for a train going north gave me an opportunity to call on Sr. A. D. Tinsley, sister of "Ye jots man," and though isolated for nearly twenty years the gospel fire has not gone out. It may appear to slumber, but it is not dead. The gospel goes too deep into the hearts of so many of his people for it ever to lose its life force. It was a short but very enjoyable visit.

When I arrived at Madison, at the home of Bro. and Sr. J. E. Farber, it was to find a careworn family. Sr. Brock, Sr. Farber's mother, had been sick for nearly twelve weeks, and on the 14th of May passed peacefully away to meet the reward of a faithful life. She bore her afflictions patiently, showing that when our life is one devoted to God's service, physical suffering is not nearly so hard to bear. My companion, Alvin Knisley, had joined me there and we did what we could to soften the grief of the household, and in our presentation of the hope of the righteous, made friends to the gospel. The many acts of kindness shown by their neighbors were strong evidence that there is a great bond of sympathy among mankind, and religious differences can not suppress it. In time of suffering it is bound to show itself. Her body was sent to Platville, Wisconsin, to be laid beside that of her husband, who had preceded her several years.

Before departing we visited the other Saints in the city and surrounding country. During our sojourn we visited the officers of the public library and obtained permission to put therein the Church History and the Book of Mormon. It is our intention to continue the line of work until all or most of the public libraries are supplied with our standard works, and as the greater number of them are located in cities, where we have no membership, it is my wish that Saints in other parts of the State would help. It will take several years to accomplish the work, but with patience and persistency it will finally be done. The public is misinformed of our people because of the kind of literature they have read, and the best way to turn the tide in our favor is to give them an opportunity to read our own, and to be negligent of such an opportunity is to fail in our duty.

It might be a favorable time to ask the question, What has become of the resolution passed by the Religio-Convention in 1905, asking for an abridged history of the church? Is it dead, or does it only need a little pricking to make it show signs of life, or are we so slow that we are leaving the golden opportunities to enlighten the public pass us by? Will we fulfill the words of Christ that "the children of this generation are wiser than the children of light." The present four volumes are all right for those who have plenty of money and leisure time, but if we want our own people and the public to know the history of the church, it must be one that will come within the means and time of the general reader; one about the size of "With the church in an early day," that could be sold for fifty cents. An edition of five thousand could easily be disposed of if the right kind of business methods were used and some energy pumped into our missionaries and local agents. I will agree to take fifty of the first edition, with such an edition and price that I can go among the public with confidence of success. Something that they will have time to read and money to buy. If we are afraid that it will prevent the sale of the one we now have, that is the best evidence that it is not suitable to supply the public demand. It would be better to have them mildew on the shelves than to keep the public in ignorance. Let us all work and pray to that end that we will have one before Christmas. Perhaps if those who know the great need of such a book would write to the Church Historian and tell him their opinions in regard to the matter and at the same time pledge to help sell it, it would encourage him to go ahead. Let us all join the Sunshine Band and carry out their motto, "Do something for somebody quick." We should not keep the public in ignorance when a little bit of energy and twentieth century vim will be the means of enlightening them.

On the 21st we went to the Saints near Arlington and commenced meetings in the schoolhouse where there is a Sunday-school, in which our people are interested, and our Quarterlies are used. A goodly degree of interest is being manifested and we had the pleasure of baptizing two on Sunday, the 30th, Maria Stone and Mayme Farby, both of whom bid fair to be a credit to the cause and workers for the Master; not in a spectacular way, but by a patient, modest, up-right life, always seeking for the good and trying to do it.

Here I bade my companion farewell for a short time, as duty called me elsewhere, but we hope to meet at Huron by the first week in July to commence tent work. On the 3d instant I went to Brookings to the home of Bro. and Sr. L. L. DeLapp. On the 5th Bro. J. W. Perrin came in for us and with part of DeLapp's family we were all made welcome at their hospitable home. On Sunday, the 6th, we all went to the Sioux River, and after preaching a short sermon on the importance of baptism, to a fair-sized crowd, baptized Winnifred DeLapp, aged fifteen, and Leslie, her brother, aged thirteen. Of twenty-three that I have baptized in this mission in recent years sixteen were young people, which speaks well for the faithfulness of the parents. No time better to commence to serve the Lord than in youth, before the vices of the world have polluted their pure and innocent lives.

At five o'clock we had confirmation and sacrament-services, and in the evening in the schoolhouse, I was greeted with a larger audience than it is usual to find in this mission, and continued the meetings during the week.

To the Saints of the northern part of the State that may have hoped for a reunion I will say that I did not receive a favorable reply to my personal letters or my published requests, so did not deem it wise to go ahead; perhaps we can do better next year.

It is my wish that the Saints will pay especial attention to what the Bishop has said in his article entitled, "The first work of the year," as found in HERALD of June 2, page 513, and the Ensign of May 27.

My address is Huron, South Dakota, Box 13, and will be the entire year, unless special reasons make it necessary to change it. The prospects for successful work the present year are very encouraging. Let us work together and with God and our year's work will be crowned with many sheaves.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
EDWARD RANNIE.

MONTEBELLO, California, June 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: I will write a few lines as I am sending my tithing. Now I am going to tell you how I have been paying tithing for the last two years. All the money that I can accumulate of my own I pay one tenth of it as tithing. I know that is not the way the Lord commanded us to do, but I don't think he will object to any one doing that way, if we feel so inclined. I know there is many a good sister that is like myself, alone as it were, with husband out of the church, and can not do just as she would like in regard to paying tithing; but if we make up our minds to do something for this great and good work we can do it, if it is only a small thing.

I have twenty-five or thirty dollars and I need just so many things! I do not see how I can spare two dollars and fifty cents or three dollars out of that; it takes it all to meet my demands. Well, right here we must say, I am going to make a sacrifice. I will get a hat that will cost two dollars instead of four and shoes that cost one dollar and fifty cents instead of three dollars, and so on, and we can see we can spare three or four dollars to send in as free will offering, or tithing. This is the day of sacrifice, saith the Lord. So let us one and all be up and doing something for this great latter-day work, which we all claim to love so well. How much do we love this work? Enough to lay down our lives for it if necessary? That was how much the dear Lord and Savior did for us.

Now just a word in regard to pride in our church. Sometimes I fear with all my heart that it is getting in the church too much. I have been reading in the Book of Mormon a great deal of late and I see that it was one of the main things that got in the church in that day and age of the world. They would get puffed up and begin to class themselves off, and think they were just a little bit better than that sister, because she did not fix up and wear jewels, and so on; so I think it is well for us all to just keep a close watch on ourselves to see that we do not let our pride get in on us just a little. I am sometimes accused of not being proud enough; I do not fix up enough and so on. Well, there is one thing I can say, and I am proud of it, that is, I am a child of the living God and I am going to try and serve him better from now on than I ever have before in my life.

Hoping this may help some to make an effort to try to help some more to roll on this grand work, and with best wishes to all, I am,

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. M. C. HANNAH.

News From Branches

A UNIQUE DEBATE IN LOS ANGELES.

I have just had the pleasure of listening to a two-hour discussion had in this city last night in the Mammoth Hall, between Bro. T. W. Williams and Mr. Contrall, the latter a Liberalist, subject: Christ, is it possible to follow him? Is there any one in Los Angeles who is following him, and is it convenient to do so?

Bro. Williams led on the affirmative in a twenty-minute speech, followed by Mr. Contrall in a thirty-minute speech, also largely in the affirmative, which gave him a great advantage, as it enabled him to get in his oft-repeated and carefully prepared witticisms that always puts the speaker at ease with his audience, making him the popular man with the many. But T. W. was not slow in returning that kind of fire, time and again turning his opponent's witticisms on himself, bringing the house down with a roar of applause. I never saw Bro. T. W. do better. I felt proud of him and I believe the Master did, for he nobly defended his word. He had a hard place, for his hearers were mostly infidels and admirers of Mr. Contrall, who is certainly a very able man, well acquainted with the Bible, and a fair historian, which made him a foeman worthy of any man. He was very much of a gentleman throughout the entire discussion, the only departure being when he spoke disrespectfully of Christ, and it is needless to say T. W. treated him kindly. It certainly was a discussion well worth hearing. I shall not attempt to outline their arguments, as it is too hard for me to write, and doubtless this is all the Editor will want to read. Christ's cause lost nothing.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

At our last business-meeting nearly all the members of the Third Kansas City Branch (which is disorganized) were received by letters, which makes quite an addition to our branch. The same officers were elected for the next six months, except for clerk. Sr. Rachel LaRue was chosen. Five letters of removal were granted, Bro. William Watson and Sr. Mabel Warnky-Erickson to Independence Branch; Bro. Albert Johnson to St. Joseph Branch, Bro. and Sr. J. J. Post to Second Kansas City Branch. On the 6th, Walter Kolleschnig was baptized, and on the 9th Mrs. L. Burden, the writer officiating. Sr. Burden was a devoted member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She became interested and convinced of the restoration of the gospel by the preaching of Bro. R. C. Evans.

Yesterday was about the greatest day we have had since we have been in our new church. It was Children's Day. A large attendance was present at the Sunday-school at eleven o'clock when a very nice short program was rendered by the children; at a quarter past twelve Bro. LaRue baptized ten precious souls into the kingdom of God, mostly the result of the Sunday-school. At one o'clock Bro. W. S. Brown, president of the Second Kansas City Branch, and Bro. T. Lentell, superintendent of their Sunday-school, came with eight little buds of promise and Bro. Lentel baptized them in our font. At six o'clock at the prayer-meeting the ten baptized in the morning were confirmed; a good spirit prevailed and the confirmations were very impressive; Brn. LaRue, Heide, Sandy, and the writer officiated.

At eight o'clock the program by the children was like the wine in the marriage feast at Cana of Galilee; it was one of the most instructive and enjoyable entertainments we ever witnessed. At times the large audience was so interested that there was not a sound in the church to disturb the child or children in performing their parts; it was just grand. The brothers and sisters who trained the children and prepared the program are entitled to praise and credit for their effort; all went home blessed, edified, and instructed.

Bro. and Sr. Rewaldt are worshiping with us and expect to locate here.

Sr. F. C. Warnky has gone to St. Louis to visit her daughter, Mary Barrett.

Sr. Slocum has gone to visit her daughter, Anna Warnky, in Brooklyn, New York.

Sr. D. H. Blair is visiting in Oklahoma.

Our speakers have been Brn. LaRue, J. F. Curtis, T. C. Kelley, H. O. Smith, and F. G. Pitt.

ENFIELD, ENGLAND.

At a small town in the north of London (the greatest city in the world) a few Saints who had been scattered were gathered together in a small room at 56 Churchbury Road, Enfield. Together with the little company were Apostles Gomer T. Griffiths and John W. Rushton, also Thomas J. Sheldon, of the seventy, on January 20, 1903, over six years ago. The apostles organized the members into a branch with officers as follows: President, Elder T. J. Sheldon (then laboring here as missionary); priest, Joseph A. Kemp; teacher, William Judd; and John A. Judd as janitor. After a few months we moved from the house of Bro. Joseph A. Kemp to a small hall (upper room) at the corner of Churchbury Road. The rent paid for this hall was eighteen pounds per year.

The Enfield Branch has, since its organization, passed through severe trials, but God has stood by us and helped us to stand faithful; also we have received kindly help from the London Branch under the presidency of Elder John W. Worth. One of the greatest trials came when it became necessary to expel two of our members, one being the priest of the branch. This heavy loss, together with the loss of our president, Elder T. J. Sheldon, through his return to the States, proved a trial. Our heavenly Father proved indeed a friend in raising up the writer, John A. Judd, to the office of priest in whose care the work was left by its retiring president, T. J. Sneldon.

Our aged and beloved Bro. Newton proved very helpful to the work while laboring here, also great encouragement and strength were derived from the occasional visits of our beloved mission president, John W. Rushton. On Bro. Newton's returning again to England he was used as an instrument by God to ordain John A. Judd to the office of elder. Soon again sorrow clouded our minds in the form of death which overtook one of our brightest young men, one that I had set my heart on to assist me in the duties I had to perform, but the Lord saw fit to take him in the bud of youth, just as he, with all the beauty of manhood, beloved by all, was unfolding his life in this glorious work; a faithful brother and a true friend, is the life which we remember of one, by name Edward Kemp.

This sorrow was fresh to our hearts when yet again this branch was called to mourn the loss of another humble member. Priest William Judd, my father, has been a man respected by all who knew him; yea, two prominent men of our town spoke, the first, his earthly master, "I would to God I had lived as good a life as he." The other, a physician, said he was the hardest working British workman he ever met. His longings and prayers for the prosperity of this work were made manifest. He continued to help financially, also by his presence. He was rarely lacking in his place.

Beneath all these trying scenes there has been a number of diligent workers pleading the cause of Zion in Enfield, prominent among them is the sister's sewing class, inaugurated to help build a hall to worship God in; one we could call our own. Our organization is not decreased, nor our members because of the trials we have passed through.

The writer presides at present over the branch. In the office or priest is Joseph A. Smith, recently from our members; teacher, Dover E. Judd, also recently ordained. Besides this our branch is growing. Five were baptized by myself on Sunday, May 30, 1909, and there are increased prospects for more in the near future.

This branch has had very heavy expenses, and up to the present in its short career we have paid in rent alone nearly one hundred and twenty pounds. This is, the readers will see, dead to us and not one brick of the church belongs to us. We do not lament this expenditure, but what can be done, is the question, so this wealth can be paid into the church. Something ought to be done. Last year was another prosperous year, when our financial secretary, Sr. Sarah Kemp, reported that the total collection together with needle work done by the Enfield sister's sewing class amounted to over thirty-one pounds. As to the surplus money of past years, this together with the kind help of our treasurer, has been invested in a piece of freehold land, now in possession of the saints. We in Enfield believe in the principle of giving to the Lord all that is possible under our circumstances, and at this time I send forth an appeal for help. If any are desirous of giving help freely, we will be most grateful for the same.

Again to any who have money to invest, we would be most grateful to hear from them. Our desire is to borrow between three and four hundred pounds payable back in rent quarterly. This is a noble cause and those who can see their way clear could be of great assistance by loaning their own brethren and sisters sufficient to build a house of prayer, with a pledge from them of full payment and interest if required. We have set out with a determination, by God's help, to succeed in our object to build a house of worship. Are there any who will lend a helping hand?

In this small town, ten miles from the great city of London, there is every prospect of making a good stand. We have been abundantly blessed and here we send a hearty invitation to any brother or sister traveling in, through, or near this great city, to come into our humble midst, where they will always find a welcome. I have presided over this branch for five years, and therefore can, from experience, answer for the good faith of the Saints here in being willing to repay some brother or sister who could help them by advancing sufficient to obtain the object before the Saints here. I should be most pleased to reply to any who can answer this, either by a gift or a loan, having been elected to so act, together with Sr. Sarah Kemp, branch treasurer.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

JOHN A. JUDD.

The Bird with a Broken Pinion.

I walked through the woodland meadows,
Where sweet the thrushes sing;
And I found on a bed of mosses
A bird with a broken wing.
I healed its wound, and each morning
It sang its old sweet strain,
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soared as high again.

I found a young life broken
By sin's seductive art;
And touched with a Christlike pity
I took him to my heart.
He lived with a noble purpose,
And struggled not in vain;
But the life that sin had stricken
Never soared as high again.

But the bird with a broken pinion
Kept another from the snare;
And the life that sin had stricken
Raised another from despair.
Each loss has its compensation,
There is healing for every pain;
But the bird with a broken pinion
Never soars as high again.

The Choir Invisible.

BY GEORGE ELLIOT.

O, may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's minds
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven;
To make undying music in the world,
Breathing a beautiful order, that controls,
With growing sway, the growing life of man.
So we inherit that sweet purity
For which we struggled, failed, and agonized
With widening retrospect that bred despair,
Rebellious flesh that would not be subdued,
A vicious parent shaming still its child,
Poor anxious penitence, is quick dissolved;
Its discords quenched by meeting harmonies,
Die in the large and charitable air.
And all our rarer, better, truer self,
That sobbed religiously in yearning song,
That watched to ease the burden of the world,
Laboriously tracing what must be,
And what may yet be better—saw within
A worthier image for the sanctuary.
And shaped it forth before the multitude,
Divinely human, raising worship so
To higher reverence more mixed with love—
That better self shall live till human Time
Shall fold its eyelets, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb,
Unread for ever.

This is life to come,
Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us, who strive to follow.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of the Clinton, Missouri, and Spring River districts: Being appointed to assist the ministers in charge of the above field, I take this opportunity of addressing you to get your cooperation in the gospel work, that the work in this part of God's vineyard may meet with success this conference year. Wherever we can be of assistance to you we will gladly do so. If any of the Saints know of any place where we could open up the work we shall be glad to come to your help. Let us push out together that those that have not had the opportunity to hear may, and thus extend the gospel privileges to all. Missionaries in this field that are to report to me will send their reports to me to Holden, Missouri, lock box No. 306. Be sure and mail your reports to me on first day of July, October, January, and March. The last or March report is to be for the year. Let us do all we can to push the work forward. We kindly ask the Saints to help the elders with your means so they will not have to call on the Bishop for aid; for if the Bishop has to send aid to the missionaries that are out in the field, it will take away from the families that are left at home, and their needs will not then be so readily supplied. I am not complaining, for you did well in the past year; but let us keep the good work rolling on, not only by prayers but by every available means. Your brother in the hope of the speedy redemption of Zion.

GEO. JENKINS.

The Presidency.

NOTICE OF MISSIONARY APPOINTMENT.

By concurrence of the missionary and financial authorities concerned, Elder Francis J. Ebeling has been appointed to labor as a missionary in the Ohio District. We cheerfully commend him to the Saints of that district.

F. M. SMITH,

Secretary of the Presidency.

INDEPENDENCE, Missouri, June 12, 1909.

Notice.

To the Ministry of Mission No. 3: Send July 1 reports to me at Dunseith, North Dakota. Please be certain to get them away promptly that I may be certain to get them before leaving that place. Please write this address down when you read it so as not to forget.

Sincerely,

J. W. WIGHT.

Reunion Notices.

To the Saints and Friends in Eastern Iowa and Kewanee districts: The reunion committee want you to know that a successful reunion can not be held at Moline, Illinois, without you are there. We have secured the grounds with a written contract and now we want to secure your aid to help make the reunion. Your presence is all we want. If you want anything in the way of comforts of life, if you want tents, meals, or feed for horses, let us know. We must know how many tents you want at least by the 1st of August. Send your address to O. H. Bailey, Media, Illinois, if you are a branch president or presiding officer. I have something to tell you. Do not forget the date. The 13th to the 22d of August, 1909. The space in the HERALD will not let us tell you how many pleasant things await you at the reunion. Come one and all and bring a friend that they may hear the gospel. O. H. Bailey, secretary.

The Eastern Reunion Association will convene July 31, at Highland Lake, Massachusetts. This is a beautiful grove located on the Midland division of the N. Y., N. H. & H. Railroad, about twenty-two miles out of Boston, and about the same distance from Providence. The commissary department and grocery store will be in operation the same as in previous years and everything will be done within reason for the convenience of the campers. Board will be the same as last year or a little cheaper if possible. Tents 10x12 will be $3—12x15 will be $3.50. Single cots 50 cents each. Orders should be sent to M. C. Fisher, Winter Hill, Massachusetts, Box 10, and should be placed not later than the 10th of July, as it is necessary to get our orders in early in order to insure getting tents. Let us hear from you. M. C. Fisher, for committee.

The Northeastern Illinois District will convene at Steward Brothers' Park, Plano, Illinois, August 20 to 29, 1909. This is the old camp-ground which is given free. Hope the Saints will take an interest in these services and come and help make them a success. We are trying to get Bro. Joseph Smith to meet with us. Watch later announcements for prices on tents, etc. J. M. Blakely, secretary committee.

The Southeastern Illinois reunion will be held near Springerton, in White County, beginning July 30 and closing August 8, 1909. Those desiring to rent tents write to G. E. Ellis, Springerton, Illinois, at once, so he will know how many to order. We expect some good Sunday-school and Religio workers present. We earnestly invite members from other districts to attend. Come and bring the Spirit of the Lord with you; then we will have a time long to be remembered. F. L. Sawley, for the committee.

The North Dakota reunion will be held at Dunseith, North Dakota, July 3 to 12. Let all that can come prepared to camp. Hay and fuel will be furnished free. Dunseith is on a branch of the Great Northern Railroad that leaves the main line at York. C. J. Spaulding, secretary of committee.

Convention Notices.

New York and Philadelphia District association of the Religio society will convene in regular business session on Saturday, July 3, 1909, at Saints' church, Elk Mills, Maryland, at 7.30 p. m. A joint Religio-Sunday-school institute is being prepared to be rendered on Sunday, July 4, 1909. An invitation is extended to officers of the several associations and members in general to assist in making this a profitable time. We hear of the visit of Bro. F. M. Sheehy to the East and would be pleased to have him attend this convention. On Monday, July 5, an outing will be had in a grove at which a general social time is expected, as also sports, etc. Locals will elect delegates and submit reports and credentials to the undersigned not later than July 1, 1909. Orrin K. Fry, secretary of Religio, 3147 North Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Died.

DOCKSTADER.—Bro. Ezra, died at his home in Des Moines, Iowa, May 24, 1909, at the age of 79 years, 5 months, and 10 days. He was ill just eleven days, during which time he suffered intensely, yet he endured it patiently. He became a member of the church about twelve years ago and remained faithful till death. From the first he expressed himself as ready to depart. He leaves an aged wife and two sons to prepare for their change. Funeral-services at the Saints' chapel in Des Moines, in charge of J. F. Mintun, sermon by W. T. Maitland.

CLAPPER.—Sr. Floy E., died after about five years of suffering, more or less intense, with dropsy, June 1, 1909, at the age of 30 years, 11 months, and 12 days, while being cared for at the Methodist Episcopal Hospital. She sought and found peace with God, and passed to the spirit realm without a struggle, although conscious till within a short time of her death. Funeral-services at Carlisle, Iowa, in the Methodist Episcopal church conducted by J. F. Mintun, assisted by the Methodist pastor.

ANDERSON.—George W., was born April 14, 1847; died March 24, 1909, at Osborne, Kansas, after a short illness, of pneumonia. Was a member of the church about five years. Held the office of teacher for several years. He leaves to mourn wife, two daughters, and three sons. Funeral-sermon by Elder L. F. Johnson, assisted by Bro. D. J. Jameson, June 6, 1909, at the Baker Schoolhouse.

In educational, as well as in eleemosynary and ecclesiastical matters, endowments would seem to be a very doubtful benefit.—Bryce, American Commonwealth, page 615.

The American people, if sometimes bold in their experiments, have a fund of good sense which makes them watchful of results, and not unwilling to reconsider their former decisions.—Bryce's American Commonwealth, page 511.

To choose the right word and to discard all others, this is the chief factor in good writing. To learn good poetry by heart is to acquire help toward doing this, instinctively, automatically as other habits are acquired. In the affairs of life, then, is no form of good manners, no habit of usage more valuable than the habit of good English.—David Starr Jordan.

"Jesus taught individually, one by one, by name, at their work, in the highway, at the well-curb, in the field, in the boat, on the porch, as well as in large congregations and in familiar companies. To single hearers he delivered some of his most remarkable and fruitful sermons. Modern Christian teachers and preachers, if they would be successful, must follow his example."

"When physicians visit a sick man they ask to look at his tongue, and the appearance of that organ furnishes an indication, a sure one, of the state of health. Ah, if we could prove, from a moral point of view, the sanitary state of the tongue, what an insight would it not afford us into the interior of souls. The color of the tongue and the style of the conversation would be an indication of the tone of the mind."

COAL and WOOD.

We are offering for sale in Lamoni, Iowa, a good coal and wood yard fully equipped and doing a good business. The reason for offering for sale is on account of the ill health of the owner. The property consists of 5 lots 25 by 120, each located within one half block of the center of town with the following buildings and fixtures:

One brick veneered two-story building 24 by 40 feet.

One good barn 20 by 30 feet with corn-crib attached 10 by 30 feet.

One set Fairbanks wagon scales. Frame office building 20 by 24 feet, furnished with fire-proof safe, type-writer, desks, chairs, etc.

Coal sheds with capacity of 300 tons, located on R. R. right-of-way. Sheds in sight from office door.

Opportunities

BIG HORN BASIN, WYO. Land seekers should investigate the splendid opportunities to homestead Government irrigated lands or to buy deeded irrigated lands, with perpetual water rights, located in the Big Horn Basin, Wyoming, where present prices are sure to increase at least 100 per cent during the next five years. Our new Big Horn Basin folder and Government bulletin, with map and charts showing exact location of irrigated lands, sent free upon request.

THE YELLOWSTONE VALLEY, MONT. offers similar opportunities for land settlement, where irrigated lands with perpetual water rights may be purchased or obtained from the Government on very easy terms and long time payments.

320 ACRE FREE HOMESTEADS. The Government is now offering 3,000,000 acres of free homestead land in Eastern Wyoming along the Burlington Route, in the vicinity of Moorcroft, Upton, and Newcastle, under the new Mondell 320 acre free homestead law. These lands are ideal for Scientific or Dry Farming. The Government has established a Dry Farming Experiment farm near Newcastle, where splendid results are being obtained.

PERSONALLY CONDUCTED EXCURSIONS. On the first and third Tuesdays of each month I personally conduct land seekers' excursions to the above named localities to assist purchasers and homesteaders to make good selections. Our literature describing these lands more in detail, gladly sent free upon request, address, LOCAL LABORERS.

There are a number of officers of the church, high priests, elders, and priests, who come under the head of local ministers, who can and do a great deal of ministerial work at home and in the districts and missions in which they reside. Most of these are self-supporting and labor at different times in the year when their own business affairs will permit them to do so. Indeed, there are some who are qualified to do a great deal of good in the field, and are entirely self-supporting; and, evidently, are willing to labor for the good of the cause.

It seems to us to be wise that wherever these laborers are they should be aided and assisted in their efforts to do such local labor by those having charge of the missions and by the district presidents. These officers can do a great deal to encourage such laborers in their work. They can also do a great deal to hinder, to disparage, and to prevent. It is not saying too much when we point out that where a man in branch or district is in good standing, and is qualified to do good gospel labor, and is willing to do it, he should not be restricted for any trivial cause. Ministers in charge, while requesting and indeed, requiring proper recognition of the authority of the church represented in themselves, should give these willing laborers all the countenance and encouragement they can; and if practicable, should give these laborers the opportunity of their fields, requiring only that if these men hold series of services at different places, they should duly notify the ministers in charge as to where these labors are being performed.

It would hardly seem to be necessary or wise to restrict local elders in good standing from responding to requests from presiding elders of branches and districts to visit their branches and fill appointments from time to time. It would be almost entirely impracticable for an elder so invited to write the missionary in charge or even the district president, unless he lived very near, to secure permission to so respond to said call. It should be understood, we think, that this right of interchange of ministerial labor is not only justifiable but will essentially increase the value of local church and ministerial association. We think it will hardly be wise for ministers in charge to be too strict in dealing with the local ministers who are doing the kind of labor suggested above. It is the commandment of the revelation to every one that is called to warn his neighbor. This enjoins diligence upon the part of the local eldership as well as the traveling ministry.

The leading ministers of the church hold themselves at liberty to visit branches, districts, reunions, in response to invitations to do so. And, while it may be said that there is more necessity for these being at liberty to so respond, the principle of courtesy and right in this case is and should be the same as in the case of every other officer in good standing in the church. The liberty to respond to the call, "Come over into Macedonia and help us," should be accorded to all the workers alike, governed only by conditions of propriety and feasibility.

EXPERIENCES OF CLARA D. TRUE, INDIAN AGENT.

Clara D. True occupies the unique position of Indian Agent. She has charge of the Morongo Agency, near Banning, in Southern California. The noble red man who formerly carried death and terror far and wide is now under the dominion of a woman. When he is unruly, at her command his red compatriots of the police force lock him in the local jail. If he continues obstreperous his trousers are taken away during the period of incarceration in order to discourage attempts to escape.

This state of affairs may be abhorrent to the Indian mind, and contrary to his traditions regarding the position of woman, but it is altogether to his advantage in this case. Miss True, as we shall call her, for if there is a Mr. True he does not figure in affairs at Morongo, has instituted several much needed reforms. In the first place she has made a determined campaign against the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians. She holds that most of the evils existing among them in her agency are traceable to the use of firewater.

In this she has met with opposition but has been successful to a great degree. Some organized attempts at revolt against the reign of temperance have occurred. The last of these was at a fiesta where the whisky peddlers were working up an old time carousal and were prepared to tie Miss True to a tree if she interfered. At the witching hour of midnight she appeared on the scene with nine Indian police in uniform. The ringleader of the carousal was the first man encountered. In writing of the experience Miss True says, "He ran. We got him. He is serving time."

The Indians themselves help her in the work of reform. One of them who was formerly very dissipated is now special deputy for the Interior Department and goes to various parts of the State in his work of ferreting out bootleggers. New houses are being built on the reservation and up to date agricultural implements, including three of the latest pattern disc plows are in operation. The Indians are becoming industrious, law abiding, and are learning to aspire to comfortable homes and a cleanly and intelligent mode of life.

The foregoing facts are gleaned from an article by Clara D. True, in the Outlook for June 5. From this article we now quote a few paragraphs, italicizing certain portions that seem to us especially striking:

The Indians have a religious life all their own, of which few white people are aware. I think the majority of Indians have not departed very far from the old beliefs, even though most of the people are members of Christian churches. There is much that is beautiful in the so-called pagan religion. In fact, among some of the more highly developed tribes there appears to be little difference between the teachings of the Indian divinity and those of Christ. One is tempted, upon intimate knowledge of some of the old people, to wonder whether the Son of Man appeared to the Indian also, or whether the gospel preached to them by some unrecorded Paul generations ago was forgotten. The more one knows of the Indian as he really is, not as he appears to the tourist, the teacher, or the preacher, the more one wonders. The remnant of knowledge that the Red Brother has is an inheritance from a people of higher thought than we have usually based our speculation upon. It is to be regretted that in dealing with the Indian we have not regarded him worth while until it is too late to enrich our literature and traditions with the contribution he could so easily have made. We have regarded him as a thing to be robbed and converted rather than a being with intellect, sensibilities, and will, all highly developed, the development being on different lines from our own only as necessity dictated. The continent was his college. The slothful student was expelled from it by President Nature. Physically, mentally, and morally, the North American Indian before his degradation at our hands was a man whom his descendants need not despise.

The destiny of the Indian is no longer what Mr. Dooley facetiously described as "a diving-bell in the Pacific Ocean." More abundant wealth and leisure than our grim, hunger-ridden ancestors knew have made us more able to be just. A spirit of brotherhood which is felt in all the ends of the earth is stirring the heart of the nation. The Government is bending its energy toward lifting the Indian to his feet, so that he as well as we may walk in integrity before God, following the footsteps of the Man of Galilee.

This article is a remarkable confirmation of the Book of Mormon. That book, as is well known, declares that Christ visited the ancestors of the American Indian on this continent and taught them his gospel. A detailed account of that visit is found in chapter five of the Book of Nephi. Now after the lapse of so many centuries this agent of the Indians (ignorant of the record mentioned) discovers traces of gospel teaching so marked that she is led to wonder if indeed Christ may not have visited them at some time.

In full harmony with the Book of Mormon she goes on to declare that the remnant of knowledge now had among the Indians is an inheritance from a people of higher thought. In her work, too, we see a step in the fulfillment of the prophecy that in time the Indians shall again become a "white and a delightful people" (Second Book of Nephi 12:84, new edition).

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

With the issue of last week Bro. William H. Garrett resigned editorial management of the Ensign and Bro. Heman Hale Smith, of Lamoni, assumed charge. Bro. Garrett lays down his burden after a long period of labor for the Ensign. Bro. Smith has just graduated from the State University of Iowa. The HERALD editors wish Bro. Smith much success.

Patriarch A. H. Smith was the morning speaker at the Brick Church and Elder D. C. White preached in the evening.

The following is a quotation from the Weekly Star Farmer, St. Louis, Missouri, describing conditions obtaining in Motherwell, Scotland. One of our missionaries writes that he was laboring in this town some time ago, and was persecuted there until he was impressed to depart from the town, shaking off the dust of his feet as a testimony against the inhabitants:

"GLASGOW, June 10.—Trouble that has been brewing between the Catholics and Protestants of Lanarkshire for months is at fever heat as a result of a clash between the two in the town of Motherwell, twelve miles southeast of here.

"It is not clearly known yet just what started the trouble, but a large open-air Protestant meeting was suddenly converted into a anti-Catholic demonstration.

"The Catholics barricaded themselves in their homes, but the Protestants with a big numerical advantage broke into many of the houses and assaulted the occupants. A detail of police was called into action and succeeded after an hour's clubbing of the belligerents in restoring order for the time. Twenty of the rioters were dangerously injured and a hundred or more slightly hurt.

"A renewal of the trouble is imminent not only in Motherwell but throughout the country, as the ill-feeling between the sects is general."

The editors of the HERALD have received a printed copy of a strange document that claims to be a letter written by our Lord and Savior, found eighteen miles from Iconium sixty-three years after the crucifixion, transmitted from the Holy City by a converted Jew, translated from the original Hebrew copy which is now in possession of one Lady Cuba of Mesopotamia. The story is that it was found under a large round stone at the foot of a cross. On the stone these words were engraved: "Blessed is the one who shall turn me over."

While the people who found the stone were hesitating about turning it over, a little child came up and turned it over without exertion. The document is a fraud on the face of it as it comes without any creditable witnesses, and is put forth by parties who do not attach their names or give their place of residence; but it contains an appeal to superstition and because of that probably will gain a certain circulation. The letter contains the statement that the one who keeps a copy in his possession without publishing it to others will be cursed, while he who publishes it to others will be blessed. And the statement is further made, "Whosoever shall have a copy of this letter, written with my hand, and keepeth it in their houses nothing shall hurt them, neither lightning, pestilence, nor thunder shall do them any hurt."

The document is quite foreign to anything that our Savior might put forth because it opens with a curse, as follows: "Whosoever worketh on the Sabbath day shall be accursed." And it closes with this remarkable statement, "You shall not have any tidings of me but by the Holy Scriptures until the day of judgment." This is evidently orthodox and ought to appeal to sectarian denominations, but there is nothing in it for Latter Day Saints, because they have received tidings of him, and expect to receive other tidings ere the day of judgment.

Some time ago the HERALD editors called attention to a menace found in moving picture shows. Almost every program rendered at these shows gives a very lifelike representation of some crime, a murder, robbery, or something of the kind, often perpetrated by children. Thousands of children watch these pictures, and children are preëminently open to suggestion. The Ladies' Home Journal, July, notes some of the actual results of such suggestion, in line with our prediction. We quote:

"A seventeen-year-old boy sent a threatening letter to a wealthy man demanding that he leave ten thousand dollars in a certain place at a specified time on pain of having his home blown up and his life and that of his fiancée taken. The boy was arrested, and in court acknowledged his guilt and explained that the idea of sending the 'hold-up' letter first occurred to him while seeing some 'Black Hand' pictures in a moving-picture show. The same week a fifteen-year-old nurse girl in Chicago stole some costly clothes from her mistress, ran away from home, and set out to seek 'the knight of her heart in armor,' as she explained she had seen a girl do in a moving-picture show. 'Silly girl,' we say. True. But it so happens that there are thousands of such, not silly girls nor boys, but impressionable children in our homes who are allowed by their parents to go to these five and ten cent moving-picture shows and who accept what they see there as chapters from real life, because the actors in them are made real and have a being. Parents do not seem to realize the vicious influence of the pictures shown in the average 'moving-picture show,' but it is high time that they did not permit their children to attend these shows."

"High speed and careful control make the best schedule."

"Indolence is the bacillus of poverty and the germ of corruption and crime."

"It's not the snow on your head, but that in your heart which gives you age."

"Lack of force can never be mistaken for self-control. Most men need to blow the fire rather than shut the throttle."

Prayer of Humility.

Search me, O thou great Creator,
As I onward come to thee,
So at last the heavenly door
May open wide to welcome me.

Search me, lest the angels holy
See me burdened down with sin;
Lest they tell in words so coldly,
"Child, you can not enter in."

Search me, lest the blessed Jesus
View my awful look of shame,
Say in deepest tones of sadness,
"Child, you have not kept my name."

Search me, O thou kind Jehovah,
As young and strong I start the race;
When this earthly life is over,
May I view thy wondrous face.

Search me, O thou King of heaven,
If my life is sweet and pure,
Keep me always thus before thee
From the evils which would lure.

If within me I do carry
That which I should leave behind;
Lord of glory, with me tarry,
Banish all thou dost find;

For I wish to come before thee
As a flower sweet and pure,
With the Christ-life stamped within me,
Then thy gaze I can endure.

Ever nearer each day brings me,
When my bark shall leave the sand;
Take me then, Lord, safely to thee—
To the happier, better land.

JOSEPH FERRIS.

Hour by Hour.

One single day
Is not so much to look upon. There is some way
Of passing hours of such a limit. We can face
A single day; but place
Too many days before sad eyes—
Too many days for smothered sighs
And we lose heart,
Just at the start.
Years really are not long, nor lives—
The longest that survives—
And yet to look across
A future we must tread, bowed by a sense of loss
Bearing some burden weighing down so low
That we can scarcely go
One step ahead, this is so hard,
A view so stern to face; unstarred,
Untouched by light, so masked with dread,
If we should take a step ahead,
Be brave and keep
The feet quite steady, feel the breath of life sweep
Ever on your face again,

We must not look across, looking in vain,
But downward, to the next close step,
And up. Eyes which have wept
Must look a little way, not far.
God broke our years to hours and days, that hour by hour
And day by day
Just going on a little way,
We might be able all along
To keep quite strong.
Should all the weight of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and the future, rife
With woe and struggle, meet us face to face
At just one place,
We could not go;
Our feet would stop; and so
God lays a little on us every day,
And never, I believe, on all the way
Will burden bear so deep,
Or pathways lie so threatening and so steep,
But we can go, if by God's power
We only bear the burden of the hour.

—George Klingle.

The Choir Invisible.

O, may I join the choir invisible
Of those immortal dead who live again
In minds made better by their presence; live
In pulses stirred to generosity,
In deeds of daring rectitude, in scorn
Of miserable aims that end with self,
In thoughts sublime that pierce the night like stars,
And with their mild persistence urge men's minds
To vaster issues.

So to live is heaven;
To make undying music in the world,
Breathing a beautiful order, that controls,
With growing sway, the growing life of man.
So we inherit that sweet purity
For which we struggled, failed, and agonized
With widening retrospect that bred despair.
Rebellious flesh that would not be subdued,
A vicious parent shaming still its child,
Poor anxious penitence, is quick dissolved;
Its discords quenched by meeting harmonies,
Die in the large and charitable air.
And all our rarer, better, truer self,
That sobbed religiously in yearning song,
That watched to ease the burden of the world,
Laboriously tracing what must be,
And what may yet be better—saw within
A worthier image for the sanctuary,
And shaped it forth before the multitude,
Divinely human, raising worship so
To higher reverence more mixed with love—
That better self shall live till human Time
Shall fold its eyelids, and the human sky
Be gathered like a scroll within the tomb,
Unread for ever.

This is life to come,
Which martyred men have made more glorious
For us, who strive to follow.

—George Eliot.

[George Eliot's true name was Marion Cross Evans. Born in Warwickshire in 1820; she died in London; December 23, 1880. Her whole life was almost as interesting as her wonderful novels themselves.]

Elders' Note-Book

MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD.

Tune.—“Will there be any stars in my crown?”

I'm rejoicing to-day in the glorious light
Of the gospel so pure and so true,
Shall I lead any souls to this pathway so bright,
Or leave it for others to do?

REFRAIN.

I will thrust in my sickle and reap while it's day;
Night approaches, I must not delay.
I will work with a will the Lord's garner to fill,
Jesus calls and I gladly obey.

Shall I leave my poor brother in darkness and sin,
While I have been cleansed and made whole?
I will take up my cross and his soul strive to win;
In God's sight 'tis more precious than gold.

When the last closing hour of life comes apace
And my journey I calmly review,
What joy will be mine at the end of the race,
To know that I've tried to be true.

JAMES L. EDWARDS.

MINISTERIAL ANECDOTES.

A Scotch minister had been away on a vacation, and on his return asked the sexton how all had gone in his absence. “Very well, indeed,” was the cheering response. “They do say that most meenisters leave some one worse than themselves to fill the pulpit when they go away—but you never do that, sir.”—Punch.

In Doctor Edward Everett Hale's younger days he was about to leave a parish, and a good old lady was bewailing the fact and insisting that the church would be ruined thereby. Doctor Hale, flattered by her words and manner, and wishing to console her, said,

“But sister, the man who will succeed me is a fine preacher and a splendid fellow. You'll soon see that everything is all right and get used to it.”

“No, no; I won't!” she answered tearfully. “I don't get used to this changing. I've seen six changes in preachers now, and it's got worse and worse all the time.”—Judge.

• * * * *

BREVITY AND BIBLICAL PREACHING.

It must be admitted by all, who are in any way familiar with the facts, that in the matter of time allotted to the delivery of the sermon now and fifty years ago great changes have taken place. The people to-day are demanding that the preacher be brief. The introductory services in our churches are, as a rule, now much longer than they were fifty years ago. In the church of which the writer is the minister the introductory services last from forty to fifty minutes. After these introductory services are held, the “time is short” for the minister. A short sermon is expected, and the wish is gratified. Where the Sunday-school is held before the preaching service, it is still more incumbent on the minister to be brief in his sermon, than where the Sunday-school is held at another time of the day.

The simple truth is that people to-day demand brevity. The time spirit compels us to yield to this demand. In the face of such a tendency, what shall we do to meet this demand for brevity, and at the same time give to our people a full portion of the bread of life? The solution of the situation is to be found in the course that will set forth the truth that must be preached in brief and terse forms of expression. This, and this alone, is the way out. Now, if this is the way out, and I think there is no other, then the one thing for us to do is to make our preaching intensely biblical, not only in thought, but in word also. No man can abridge the brevity of form in which truth is stated in Holy Writ. The great sermons of Peter and Paul are all brief. The great sayings of the Master are all terse. The Sermon on the Mount by Jesus abounds in epigrams. It is a model of perfection, when it comes to the matter of concise statement. In it we have the truth in epitome. Brevity itself is abridged in this wonderful sermon.

Here, then, is our way of escape from the great demand for brevity in our preaching. We must make our preaching intensely biblical. We must set forth the bread of life in words that the Holy Spirit itself teacheth. Brevity in our preaching that is secured by the free use of biblical speech will add clearness and force to our preaching. Such a course will not only enable us to meet the imperative demand for brevity, but it will result in great good. The result will be that the simple word of God will be given to the people as formulas of life. These formulas will not be elaborately worked out by the preacher in the pulpit, but they will serve as simple rules of life to be worked out in actual life by the people. The very simplicity in which biblical speech presents truth will result in great gains for Christian living. If in the end this demand for brevity shall result in more simple biblical preaching, then “Blessed be the demand for brevity.”—William Oeschger, in Christian Standard.

AN ISLAND CONFERENCE.

Extract from Elder Charles H. Lake's Experiences in Southern Seas.

This was to be our first conference in the South Sea Island Mission, and we were speculating as to what it would be like. The Saints had been gathering for a month or more, for the reason that in this part of the world when you wish to go about from island to island it is necessary to go when the boats go, and sometimes that may be a month or two earlier or later than would best suit your wishes. Not many came from distant islands, because of scarcity of boats, and another reason was the destitution of the people after the great storm. The delegate system is not in vogue here; therefore any member in good standing is privileged to take part in the deliberations, and to vote.

As in America, the Sunday-school convention preceded the conference, and at eight o'clock on the morning of the fifth we assembled in the little chapel, with General Superintendent Tapu in the chair. There was not a great deal of new business to come before the convention, but among other things was to be the selecting of two division superintendents, and it was thought best to elect the same ones chosen by the conference, which was to follow, as presidents of the divisions. It was thought to be necessary to call together the convention at the close of the conference, and attend to that work, but some one wards, each one being so much in earnest that a newcomer among them would think they were all ready to come to blows. We have the "talking negation" with us, as well as in America. In fact, we have all the peculiar freaks of a general conference.

The afternoon was devoted to the "Oaoa," and the house was filled to overflowing, many outsiders being present. The time was occupied with citations from the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; whole chapters being recited in a singsong voice, and so fast that any one not a native would not catch a word. There were many hymns, purely native, and some that were quite well rendered. There is always a rivalry between the companies moved that the choice of the conference be the choice of the convention as superintendents of the two divisions, but the motion was lost by a large majority.

"How can we elect them now, and not know their names?"

"Who will you elect at the close of conference?"

"The ones chosen by the conference."

"Then why not say so now, and save calling the convention together again?"

"How can we, we don't know who they will be?"

At the next session after the conference, those two were selected without a dissenting voice.

Questions are always discussed before the motion is made, and many times, for quite a while after-from different islands, and on these occasions it is especially manifest. There was one company from Amanu that kept us continually laughing. Their leader was a natural clown, and although you might not understand a word he said, it was laughable to see him, with his long black coat buttoned tight, his hand between two buttons over his breast, as great orators are often pictured; and to see him turn round and round, like a peacock, was mirth-provoking indeed.

"Friends, I want you to take a good look at this little company of mine, see how small they are, just little things; but they can sing; just listen to them. This one, especially, see how small he is [a six-footer], listen for his voice." All this, in a strong, well-modulated voice that was befitting the star performer of the day.

I will give you an idea of the introductory remarks of most speakers. The following is the rule, and not the exception:

"Eho'ma, te mau taeae e te mau tuahine, tae noa 'tu to tatou huacai tamarii, tamarii tamaroa, tamarii tamahine, tae noa 'tu to tatou mau taata tupu, te tane e te vahine, ia ora na tatou atoa mai te ioa o Iesu Mesia, te tumu o to tatou ora; amene."

"Friends, brethren and sisters, reaching unto our children, children boys, children girls, reaching unto our neighbors, the man and the woman, may we all have life in the name of Jesus Christ, the source of our life. Amen."—Autumn Leaves.

DEFENSE OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS AND REPLY TO JOSEPH F. SMITH, JR.

BY ALVIN KNISLEY.
INTRODUCTORY.

(The following was written in reply to a book written by Joseph F. Smith, Jr., and published in 1897, in Salt Lake City, entitled, Origin of the "Reorganized" church; The Question of Succession. If anything in Mr. Smith's book has escaped our notice in reviewing him it has either been because we considered it unworthy of notice or because it is dealt with in answer to other publications they have published against us. The Mormon church has hitherto issued its Succession in the Presidency of the Church, and its Priesthood and Presidency, written respectively by Messrs. Roberts and Penrose, and both anent our organization and our claims. These two books have been replied to by men of our ministry, said replies being headed True Succession in the Presidency of the Church, and The Legal Successor in the Presidency of the Church.)

The first ten or eleven pages of Mr. Smith's production consists of an effort to prove: that Senator Burrows made misstatements in the United States Senate; that the majority of the original church followed Brigham Young; that those who would not follow Brigham Young forsook the church; that few joined the Reorganization.

We will not discuss the statistical aspect of the case, for whether one twentieth or nineteen twentieths of the original membership followed Brigham Young does not to any material extent affect the real issue, which is: Who should succeed Joseph Smith, his son or Brigham Young? The proving of either proposition puts the matter at rest. If more had followed young Joseph than Brigham Young, the most that we, on that account, could be justified in saying is, that more believed he was right. If more followed Brigham Young than young Joseph, it would not follow by any means that he was right, but it would follow that more believed he was right. But what we could say on this could be but repetitional in view of the extent to which it has been controverted and the many available and authoritative documents thereon, in our Church History and Elder Heman C. Smith's True Succession; in view of the decisiveness of which, anent our opponent's statements, we must acknowledge some surprise that he has thus put himself on record.

DATE OF THE REORGANIZATION.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., (p. 11).—Properly it [Reorganization] did not come into existence until 1860—sixteen years after the martyrdom.

Response: If by coming into existence he means reorganization, it more properly came into existence in 1853 when it was actually reorganized and when a majority of the Quorum of Twelve were chosen and ordained. The ordination of Joseph Smith to the presidency of the high priesthood and his appointment to the presidency of the church—which event marks 1860—was but a step, a single step, in the chain of events that perfected the organization of the church. Joseph the Martyr was not ordained to the presidency of the high priesthood—equivalent to presidency of the church—till 1832, yet all who believe the mission of Joseph Smith speak of the event of 1830 as an organization of the church. If, then, the church could be organized in 1830 without that office that came to its first elder in 1832, it is too apparent to be denied that upon the event of its disorganization it could be reorganized in 1853 without that which was conferred in 1860. Indeed, it is but a matter, in round numbers, of two years against seven. For the first seven years of the Reorganized Church it was without a president in the sense that it had one in 1860, but it had a temporary president chosen to represent the legal heir. For the first two years, approximately, following the organization of the original church, it was without a president in the sense that it had one in 1832. There was priesthood previous to 1830; so was there previous to 1853. There was this difference, however, that previous to 1830 there was no organized branch, whereas previous to and up to 1853 there was. The organization of the church was progressive in both stages.

JASON W. BRIGGS.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—It is said he [Jason W. Briggs] joined the church at Potasi, Wisconsin, about 1842, but we have no history of this man except as we get it through the records of the "Reorganization."

Response: His only authority, the records of the Reorganization, (Church History, vol. 3, pp. 196, 737,) declare that he joined in 1841.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., (p. 12).—About this same time [1849] he [Jason W. Briggs] also organized the Beloit Branch of the same organization. [Reorganization.]

Response: On the very same page of our Church History referred to, along with this statement, and also on page 204 it most distinctly states that he organized the Beloit Branch in "1842 or 1843."

CONFOUNDS THE GURLEYS.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—In 1886, together with the family of Zenos H. Gurley, Mr. Briggs withdrew from the "Reorganization," which he had begotten.

Response: What Zenos H. Gurley is referred to?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Zenos H. Gurley was more active in the church previous to the martyrdom.

Response: The Zenos H. Gurley who withdrew with Mr. Briggs was not in the church previous to the martyrdom. He was born in Illinois in 1842, only two years preceding the Carthage tragedy. He was the son of Zenos H. Gurley, Sr., who was connected with the rise of the Reorganization and died in its faith in 1871. The son apostatized, the father did not. The maker of the blunder can not protect himself under the reply that in these two references to Zenos H. Gurley quoted, reference is had to the two men; for on page 62 it is plainly represented that the Zenos H. Gurley who was in the early church apostatized. Considering the prominence that is given to the distinctness of these two men in our history, it is clear that little research was made by Joseph F. Smith, Jr., before he thrust his work on the public. While pointing out these errors is not much to our account, it is not a little to his discount. We hesitate to impugn his motive, but will be justified in questioning his reliability as we proceed.

"Which he had begotten." The statement that Jason W. Briggs begat the Reorganized Church is not true. He was but one instrument among others.

MR. GURLEY AFTER THE MARTYRDOM.

The next two or three pages contain quotations from the minutes of the meetings of the Seventy in Nauvoo, of what Zenos H. Gurley is purported to have said in 1845 and 1846, and of what was said concerning him; how he condoned some of the movements and performances of church officials which he afterward looked upon as steps in the downward march of apostasy. All this proves is that Mr. Gurley at one time believed to be right what he afterward believed to be wrong, a very common experience and one from which no man on earth can claim exemption. That is, if Elder Gurley said what is ascribed to him.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr. (p. 14).—Here is the testimony of Zenos H. Gurley in relation to the temple ceremonies when he was in full fellowship in the church and was in possession of the spirit of his calling.

Response: But his fullness of fellowship was in a church that was at that time instituting proceedings the lawfulness of which is in question, and which was questioned by Mr. Gurley himself in after years. The intactness of the church at that time, that it was in lawful continuity, is not to be assumed, but to be proved, for it is a direct issue between us.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—At that time he declared most emphatically that on that occasion the Spirit of the Lord was unusual in its outpouring.

Response: Undoubtedly he believed they had the Spirit; and like honest Methodists, Dowieites, and others in the dark, according to the integrity of their hearts, inasmuch as they were honest, maybe they did receive it. We notice that Mr. Smith quotes Gurley in the third person.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—What became of him?

Response.—He remained faithful to the last, a member of the church, until his death.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Because he had not root he withered away.

Response.—Because he had root he refused to follow Brigham Young.

ORIGIN OF THE REORGANIZATION.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—We have already seen that Jason W. Briggs raised up the Waukesha Branch of the Strangite Church in 1849.

Response.—This affirmation is not borne out by our Church History which is confessedly the source of information. It says (on p. 204) that the Waukesha Branch was organized by Jason W. Briggs in 1842 or 1843, and on pages 736, 737 it says that he and Elder Wright organized "a branch at Waukesha"; but the historian is uncertain whether the second was a separate branch or a reorganization of the former one.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Also that he raised up the Beloit Branch for the same organization.

Response.—Which we have already seen is a misrepresentation of facts, as Beloit Branch was organized and presided over by Mr. Briggs in the Martyr's time.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—And now we have the admission, fatal to their organization, that the Yellowstone Branch was also raised up to Mr. James J. Strang.

Response.—The fatality, of course, consisting in said branch being organized by men or by a man who was for the time being in honest darkness, in the twilight of uncertainty, hoping for developments, but who held the priesthood from the Martyr's day. Yes, we acknowledge that Yellowstone Branch was organized by Mr. Gurley while he was a follower of Strang. Like Briggs and Marks, his connection with the church had never been severed, he had never even been cited to any trial. There had never been an attempt to take from him the priesthood which had been conferred upon him, as admitted. He held the priesthood, he had not been silenced. If his administrations were valid the objection is at once removed. If they were not valid, it must be either because he had not the priesthood, or having it, had not the right of its exercise. The loss of the power of the priesthood is invariably due to transgression. The loss of the power of its exercise is generally due to transgression; the exception being in the event where one is silenced or suspended from officiating, who, though not in transgression, is supposed to be in transgression by his superior or fellow officer who thus restrains him, pending inquiry. I presume that is a rule with the Utah church as well as with us, as also with other ecclesiastical judicatories. The ministrations of him who persists in administering while in this condition are void.

Now, our opponent will scarcely urge on the invalidity of Mr. Gurley's administration from the latter standpoint. He knows that Mr. Gurley was the subject of no such suspension by coordinate or superior, for transgression either real or supposed. He knows that if Mr. Gurley experienced the loss that the hypothesis imputes to him that it was attributable to no such an agency. The matter therefore resolves itself into the question of the forfeiture of his priesthood by persistency in personal transgression. This is his only alternative. Let me ask, Of what did his transgression consist? Will he venture to point to one single immorality of the man? What have the Utah people laid to his charge in the catalogue of crime? Of what is he accusable? Here is the answer our opponent doubtless will make: He went with Strang. In other words, he for a little while believed that to be true which was not true. That is the last little string to hang on. Why does not Mr. Smith instead of using such specious sophistry, always come right back home when he gets this far and say? He lost the priesthood because he did not follow Brigham Young. But he attempted to reason it from the other standpoint, and from the other standpoint we meet him.

The organization of Yellowstone Branch was not by virtue of authority derived from Mr. Strang, but by virtue of authority invested in Mr. Gurley in the days of the Prophet Joseph. If to be in error for a time will deprive a man of the priesthood, then we could wish to know to what extent he must be in error ere he becomes liable to such deprivation. Are we to understand that a man loses the power of the priesthood every time he gives temporary lodgment to a wrong theory? If so, what are we to say of the many men in the Utah church among whom doctrinal divergences have arisen?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—They never were connected with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, according to their own admission, but were organized for the church of James J. Strang.

Response.—“According to their own admission.” We will read from our Church History (3: 204) from which Mr. Smith professes to get his information, what our own admission is:

Some of these [branches] were organized before Joseph's death, and presided over by men holding authority under him, including the one at Beloit, Wisconsin, organized in 1843, over which Jason W. Briggs presided; one at Waukesha, Wisconsin, also organized in 1842 or 1843; and one organized later at Yellowstone, Wisconsin, of which Elder Zenos H. Gurley, Sr., and Hiram P. Brown were the organizers, and Elder Gurley president; and finally one near Jeffersonville, Illinois; which was organized several years before the death of the Martyrs, and continued in an organized condition until united with the Reorganization; presided over through all the dark days by Elder Thomas P. Green.

Comment is needless. We merely invite the reader's comparison of the above quotation with the assertions of Mr. Smith who professes the treatment of these facts according to their relation in our own records, and who says (p. 16): “I prefer to read to you the account from the History of the ‘Reorganized’ Church, for you know then we will have it correct.”

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Yet mark you, these Strangite branches were admitted into what was called the “New Organization,” or the “Reorganization,” on their original baptisms.

Response.—Those were received whose original baptisms had been performed either previous to 1844 or by men who held authority previous to 1844.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—It is quite evident that the Reorganization is the offspring of the church of this man, James J. Strang.

Response.—And yet the priesthood of not one of its members originated with Strang, and every one of its branches were either organized before the inception of Strang's church or by virtue of priesthood bestowed before the inception of Strang's church. The last is the first use made by Mr. Smith of Reorganization without quotation marks. Has he not committed himself here?

THE APOSTASY OF JASON W. BRIGGS.

On pages 17-20, Mr. Smith lays much stress on the apostasy of Jason W. Briggs and his repudiation of some of the principles which had formerly had his acquiescence. But, let us ask, Is it any more remarkable that the Reorganized Church should have its apostates than the original church, or the Utah church, or the primitive Christian church, or any other church, for that matter?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Thus he [Briggs] repudiates his “revelation,” denies the divine mission of the Prophet Joseph Smith, and repudiates the standard works of the church.

Response.—Too sweeping, too sweeping. Our critic proceeds as a man who sees but one side of the question, and with an impetuosity, whether affected or real, that he certainly does not control. It is not the chivalry of an honorable disputant to ascribe motives; but I will not be wanting in the amenities of a truth-loving polemic when I say that he is anything but a dispassionate investigator. If he will read again the several articles he quotes from Mr. Briggs, he will not find one to bear out either the second or third assertion in his sentence, unqualified as they are. Mr. Briggs denies certain things that were believed by the church—like many Mormons we meet here in Utah and Idaho, which I say not reflectively. He specified one or more portions of the Doctrine and Covenants that he did not believe in. Instead of attempting to throw it out of the Doctrine and Covenants he simply said he did not believe in it. The very fact that he specified something in the Doctrine and Covenants that he did not believe in, is evidence that there is something there that he did believe in, else where the propriety of the specification? If he believed even one section out of what was in excess of one hundred, both as to its genuineness and authenticity, it would necessarily follow that he believed to an extent in the mission of Joseph Smith through whom it was given, and in that case Joseph F. Smith, Jr., could not truthfully use the language he did in describing Briggs' attitude toward the standard works of the church. The Hedrickites disbelieve in some things that he disbelieved in, they regard Joseph as a fallen prophet, yet we could not in full conformity with truth, put ourselves on record as declaring that they deny the divine mission of Joseph Smith and repudiate the standard works of the church. Mr. Briggs denied the plenary inspiration of the sacred books; but that is neither a denial of the authenticity, or of the partiality of their inspiration.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Unstable to the last this man would not rest content in the organization which he was such a potent instrument in bringing into existence.

Response.—Let us see. He became an apostle of the Reorganized Church in 1853, with which inceptive movement he was connected a year or two earlier. He did not withdraw from the church till 1886. There were thus about thirty-four years, nearly all of which were spent in the active ministry, at home and abroad, in America and in foreign fields, baptizing Gentiles and many Mormons, defending the church with pen and voice. He was an apostle in the church for thirty-three years. I think that is a pretty good example of stability. The average age that humanity attains to is just the period of time or little in excess of that in which Jason W. Briggs was singly devoted to the interests of the Reorganized Church. If unstable and discontented to the last, he could not have been stable and contented for a generation preceding the "last." If stable and contented for upwards of thirty years preceding the last (1886), then Mr. Smith uttered an untruth, then he reflected a falsehood, when he said Briggs was "unstable" and discontent "to the last." Why not tell the truth about him even though an "apostate"? I see no excuse for reflecting on his stability any part of his life. If he stepped momentarily aside from his path in the early part of his life it was because his north star was obscured by a cloud he could not avoid; but as soon as the cloud disappeared and his guiding star was again visible, he resumed his pathway. No lack of stability there. It was his stability, if it may become my turn to indulge an assertion, that kept him from Utah, that placed him in the Reorganization, and made him an effective worker in the same for a length of time that is creditable to any man. Joseph Smith, Jr., should tell the truth, even about the dead.

QUESTION OF REJECTION.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., (p. 19).—We now come to the question of the rejection of the church.

Response.—A very important question to come to.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Our friends tell us that the church was rejected for the reason that they failed to complete the Nauvoo Temple "in the sufficient time granted by the Lord."

Response.—Yes; and for other failures as well.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—They say that the temple was not finished.

Response.—Correct. And the confessions of many Mormon authorities contribute to prove it.

He makes a quotation from the President of the Reorganization and then says:

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—In reply to this it is only necessary to say that it made no difference whether the temple was finished or not.

Response.—Which is equivalent to saying that it made no difference whether they obeyed the command to build it or not. The Twelve understood it quite differently when they published their epistle in the Times and Seasons, December 15, 1841, wherein they said:

If this building is not completed speedily "we shall be rejected as a church with our dead," for the Lord our God has spoken it.

It had not only to be completed, but "speedily," according to their idea. Where had "the Lord our God spoken it"? Why, in the revelation, of course, which had been given but the month previous to this epistle, (section 107 in our book and 124 in Utah edition,) the only revelation which speaks of the possibility of the rejection of the church with its dead. And the Martyr himself said if there was any one thing more than another that the Saints were interested in, "it is in the completion of that edifice"; and,

The word of the Lord is build my house, and until that command is fulfilled we stand responsible to the great Jehovah for the fulfillment of it, and if not done in due time we may have to share the same fate that we have heretofore done in Missouri.

These quotations are found in Times and Seasons, 3: 937, 939. Although the Utah church and the Reorganized Church are diametrically opposed to each other I can without hesitancy grant unto Mr. Smith this: that whether the Twelve and the Martyr were right or wrong, or whether he is right or wrong, he has the ability to see that he is at variance with them, that the position he takes is the very antithesis to the one they take. But, it is not so much a question of what they say as to what the revelation says. The revelation (in section referred to) commands them to build a temple, gives them a sufficient length of time to do it; and declares that if they did not the work assigned to them in the sufficient time they should be rejected as a church.

But Mr. Joseph F. Smith, Jr., continues.

DILIGENCE ON NAUVOO TEMPLE.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The revelation of January 19, 1841, provided, "That when I [the Lord] give a commandment to any of the sons of men, to do a work unto my name, and those sons of men go with all their might, and with all they have, to perform that work, and cease not their diligence, and their enemies come upon them, and hinder them from performing that work; behold, it behooveth me to require that work no more at the hands of those sons of men, but to accept of their offering." No sane man will dare say that the Saints were not hindered by their enemies from the building of the Nauvoo Temple, both before and after the martyrdom.

Response.—No; and no sane man will read the revelation of January 19, in which they were commanded to build it without seeing that their hindrance could only result from their transgression, in which case they could not claim immunity from the consequences determined. The portion of the revelation quoted by Mr. Smith declares that immunity from the consequences of not obeying a command only obtains when the "sons of men go with all their might, and with all they have, to perform that work, and cease not their diligence." In order then that they might be exempt, they must proceed with that degree of assiduity the Lord had prescribed. The questions immediately arise, Did they do this? Did they begin with it at the right time and were they properly persistent throughout?

But it is not merely a question of diligence, i. e., in the temple work; in which rejection was to follow their neglect of diligence. For it is conceivable how they might have been ever so diligent in that particular work and yet sinned in some other respect so as to merit the disapprobation of God, even to their rejection.

I hold that in view of certain provisions in the same revelation, their being hindered from the completion of the task assigned is inconsiderable. Notwithstanding the fact that he said to them that there was immunity for his people if hindered from a work to which they were faithfully applied, if it can be proved that in this particular instance he promised them if faithful they would not be hindered, or words to that effect, then we know assuredly that inasmuch as the work was not duly executed, they were not as faithful as he required, in whatever their unfaithfulness consisted. Now, did the Lord make any such a promise? Indeed, he did. He said, I give you a sufficient length of time to do this work.

Also, we wish Mr. Smith to note, that the Lord in the same connection says, "If my people will hearken to my voice" they shall not be moved out of their place. Were they moved? Yes, they were cannonaded from Nauvoo, their enemies scattered them, some of them went to Utah. Now, was it because they had "hearkened," or because they had not hearkened?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Nevertheless, I maintain that they were diligent in their labors as the following references will show, furthermore that the temple was completed.

Response.—We have pointed out that their diligence in the temple work alone would not save them. The Lord did not say if they were diligent therein they would not be rejected: he said if they were not diligent therein they would be rejected. To have made their rejection contingent exclusively on temple work would have screened them in whatever other misconduct they might have become guilty of. However, we wait the promised references.

"Temple was completed." There is little object in proving that the temple was completed if it "makes no difference."

Mr. Smith now makes a quotation from Joseph Smith in Times and Seasons, 3:775, "written in May, 1842," in which he speaks of the rapid progress of the edifice at that time and the strenuous exertions being made by the Saints, and then Mr. Smith comments:

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—We have seen that the Saints were diligent up to May, 1842.

Response.—Not by any means, no such an indication. We have seen that they were diligent in May, 1842—not up to. The corner-stone of that edifice had been laid April 6, 1841, over a year from the date of the quotation. Room for a great deal of lagging between those two periods of time.

The next quotation is from Hyrum Smith (no reference) at the April conference, 1844, who speaks of, as Joseph F. Smith puts it, the "willingness of the Saints to do the work as late as 1844." Yes, but he does not say they had been willing up to 1844. From May, 1842, to April, 1844, (nearly two years,) afforded time to be guilty of lethargy and to falter enough to incur the penalty the fiat of the Lord had fixed.

Let us quote from Doctrine and Covenants (109 in ours, 127 in Utah edition,) dated September, 1842, between the dates of the two quotations, which proves that they were not sufficiently diligent at that time: "Let your diligence and your perseverance, and your patience, and your works be redoubled. Although their efforts at this time might have been sufficient in the eyes of finite man they were not in the all-seeing eye of God, who, if they were, would rather have been silent or have praised them, than to command that they be redoubled. That, at least, makes one positive break in Mr. Smith's chain of diligence.

His next quotation is from some one signing himself "C" in Times and Seasons for October 13, 1844, the very month that Brigham Young was sustained as "President of the Quorum of Twelve, and First Presidency of the church," (ibid., 5: 692,) who says the temple was rising fast and had an imposing appearance. Questionable authority; not necessarily proper diligence; no completion.

His next quotation is concerning the progress of the temple two months after what we regard as an apostate step in October. Then the quotations following all relate to events pertaining to the temple, its progress, the laying of the capstone, the conference therein of October 5, 1845, which took place after the disputable action of the conference in April, 1845, in accepting by vote, "the Twelve as the First Presidency and leaders of this church." (Ibid., 6: 869.)

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—There are other passages, but these ought to suffice on this point of the diligence of the Saints.

Response.—Suffice nothing. It is believable that our opponent used his strongest. He only produced two, from two authors, touching not the diligence, but the exertions or willingness of the Saints at two particular periods of time before the Prophet's death, those periods being nearly two years apart; but I have shown where, between those periods, the Lord impliedly said they were not diligent. Diligence and desultoriness are in opposition.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—But some one will say, all this testimony is from those who are interested—from your friends.

Response.—Not all from your friends, for a portion of it is from Joseph and Hyrum Smith. The remainder is from your friends at a time when we believe the spirit of apostasy had taken deep root; as long as they were unrepentant of and persistent in which, their diligence in temple work, even with the completion of the temple, would not save them. Under the guilt of the action of April, 1845, and the preceding October, it would, indeed, so far as the consequences of completing or not completing the temple were concerned, make no difference whether they completed it or not.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Should we take the testimony of our enemies, those who are interested in our downfall, and who are not acquainted with the facts?

Response.—No; but if he expects his deductions to have any force with "Josephites" he must cite authorities that are acknowledged by them as well as himself. Or, he must by some process of reasoning establish the reliability of the criterion they call in question. To appeal to the authorities he does, after (at the latest) April, 1845, is to appeal to himself—virtually appealing to himself, to his own authorities; and this he persistently does on matters that, as to their lawfulness, are in controversy between us. It therefore devolves upon him to defend, to prove the lawfulness of the procedure of April, 1845. That is the issue, one of the first main issues.

He quotes from "the Messenger and Advocate for June, 1846," some remarks of Sidney Rigdon's, to the effect that the Saints "were told that they would not finish that temple which they were building"; that they labored hard to finish it, but did not. On the next page he observes that Mr. Rigdon "spoke too soon"; that "at that time the temple was not quite finished, but it was finished before all the Saints left Nauvoo." Reader, bear this in mind, for we want to refer to it again in a few minutes to show that it is contradicted by a gentleman by the name of Joseph F. Smith, Jr.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

To the comfort of the widow and the orphan and to remind them of God's loving, especial care, the following passages of scripture are tenderly submitted.

MARTHA PROCTOR.

Ye shall not afflict any widow or fatherless child.

Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger nor of the fatherless nor take a widow's raiment to pledge.

Relieve the oppressed; judge the fatherless; plead for the widow. If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless and the widow, I will cause ye to dwell in the place. Honor widows who are widows indeed.

For the Lord your God is God of gods and Lord of lords, a great God, mighty and terrible, who regardeth not persons nor taketh rewards, who doth execute the judgments of the fatherless and widows.

A father of the fatherless and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation. The Lord preserveth the stranger; he relieveth the fatherless and widow.

The Lord will destroy the house of the proud, but he will establish the border of the widow. Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger, fatherless or widow.

They stay the widow and the stranger and murder the fatherless, yet they say, The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it. He that planteth the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye shall he not see?

The princes are rebellious. . . . They judge not the fatherless, neither does the cause of the widow come unto them, therefore I will ease me of mine adversaries and avenge me of mine enemies. Wilt thou judge the bloody city? Yea, thou shalt show her all her abominations. . . . In thee they have vexed the fatherless and the widow. I will come near to you to judgment, and I will be a swift witness against those that oppress the widow and the fatherless.

Ye overwhelm the fatherless and ye dig a pit for your friend. Thou hast sent widows away empty and the arms of the fatherless have been broken, therefore sorrows are around about thee and sudden fear troubleth thee.

They judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper, and the needy do they not judge; shall I not visit for these things saith the Lord?

Defend the poor and fatherless. Do justice to the afflicted and needy. Execute true judgment and show mercy and compassion every man to his brother, and oppress not the widow nor the fatherless.

I cause the widow's heart to sing for joy. Leave thy fatherless children. I will preserve them alive and let thy widows trust in me.

Pure religion and undefiled before God the father is this, to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction, and to keep thyself unspotted from the vices of the world.

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widow's houses and for a pretense make long prayers.

IS THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION PRACTICAL?

A PLEA FOR CO-OPERATION.

This very important question is one that we, as followers of Christ, may well ask yourselves, for the reason that as a people and as a church it so nearly concerns our spiritual and temporal welfare. For, to the mind of the writer, it is not so much a question to the world whether or not religion is a saving ordinance, but if after all is it really and truly a practical, every-day help that the common laborer as well as the minister of the gospel can take with him in his every-day work life and have it prove of practical value to him? If indeed it is something that will be of such a helpful nature that it will help to provide for himself and family and not only return a reward in the great, long-away future of which he has heard and read so much, but if it will give some recompense now in a truly every-day way. And I think if this one idea, this one truth, could be brought forcibly home to the common people, the great problem which has so long confronted the church of God would be solved and removed, and instead of an effort on our part to draw others in, they would be ready and anxious to enter. Is it not a universal law of truth that mankind everywhere and in all ages, naturally reaches out for that which will prove a present benefit to himself? And if religion will benefit in such a way, would he not give it place as quickly as any other useful and needful thing?

It is true there are some who love religion and religious services for what they are—the songs, the prayers, the word, the testimonies and true fellowship with one another and God, but to others—and I think the larger class—these are of but secondary consideration, or at least such in their spiritual infancy. In this day and age and condition in which the majority of men live and work, it is not sentiment or songs or fine preaching that counts, but rather are these truths which lay beneath this indeed truth, and of a helpful, practical nature. And until man is thoroughly convinced of this I think that we as a church need not expect success in the fullest sense of the word.

With these thoughts in mind I take the position that the Christian religion is practical; and if not practical it is not a religion of the Christ. For can you point me to one instance in all the life and work of the Master that did not hold in it the keystone of practicability? By that I mean that his teachings were of such a character that they were common, every-day teachings, that common, every-day men and women could use in a truly practical sense. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ," "Do unto others as ye would others should do unto you," "Love thy neighbor as thyself," and many more such teachings, if not practical, are nothing. Hebrews 13, 1 Peter 3, Philippians 6, and others, all show too plainly that the teachings of Christ and the apostles were a teaching of plain, practical truth. Take for instance this command: "Love thy neighbor as thyself." If we do so, what is the result? We will strive to help to bear his burdens and out of an interested love for his every welfare we will see to it that so long as we enjoy the blessings of earth and the joys of the Spirit, he too will share and enjoy them. We will not slander him to others; we will see all his good qualities and not emphasize the bad. We will assist him in preference to outsiders, and those not our neighbors.

Then to be practical in the true sense of Christian practicability means that as Christians, if we have a certain job of work, we will employ those of the Christian religion in preference to nonbelievers: if we desire a suit of clothes made, or a bill of goods purchased, and some commercial transaction performed, if possible, we will give preference to those of our religion and our faith; while they in turn should do likewise; and by such a means of coöperation each would help the others, in fact be a burden-bearer and helper in every transaction, great or small. How often in the life of the writer has he seen those of his own faith giving their trade and encouragement to those outside, when they could with equal advantage help those of their own faith and thus help complete the great, unbroken chain of practicality which should run from heart to heart and pocket to pocket of every true, real Saint of the Master of the religion of practicability! And do not you think that if this was the case others would believe more fully on and in us, and gladly accept our faith for what it is and not what they are told or read it should be? Would not it be so near and dear to every common heart that they could not afford not to be without it? Would not our religion in this way appeal successfully to a large class that could be reached in no other way? And would not the increase to our churches be such that no estimate can be made of the grand result? Then, if all this be true, can we as active intelligent Saints, who desire the best welfare of our church, afford to pass such a serious, weighty matter without careful and prayerful consideration?

O, you who call yourself a Saint of the Most High; think well, I pray you, upon this matter, and let us one and all see to it that henceforth we put into practice the theory we have believed and preached, and thus prove to the satisfaction of the world that we have a system of Christian coöperation of such a practical nature that they can not longer afford to live without it, and in this way help ourselves, our brothers and sisters, the world, and the great kingdom of God.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

In the HERALD of April 14, there appeared an article from my pen. Since its publication I have received a letter from a party, William A. Lund, writing from Salt Lake City, Utah, in which the writer asks several questions relative to the article; and so with your permission I shall answer the questions to the best of my ability. I shall give the question in full and then follow with the answer.

The article was entitled, "Duplicity of Brighamism, because of necessity; relative to the General Assembly of 1835."

1. Why is it that the Prophet Joseph Smith's and Frederick G. Williams' names are not signed to the minutes of the conference held in August 17, 1835, with the other members of the presidency? The inference given from reading your article is that the prophet was present at that conference. Was he present? If so, why did he have no voice in its deliberations? (See Minutes.)

They were supposed to have been absent.

2. Was this article on marriage in dispute, among the recommendations made by the committee chosen September 24, 1834, to this General Assembly, or was it not? If you answer yes, please cite proof.

We have no evidence of any dispute.

3. Was this article on marriage considered in connection with the "items of the doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ," as part and parcel of those items, or was it considered after the adoption of the committee's report?

It was adopted after the committee reported, but was no less an action of the General Assembly than it would have been if acted upon in the committee's report. Joseph Smith lived nearly nine years after the holding of the General Assembly and never was known to object to any action of the assembly.

4. Was Joseph Smith the prophet author of the article on marriage? If you answer in the affirmative, kindly give the evidence.

We do not know.

5. How many editions of the Doctrine and Covenants published by the "Reorganized" Church have contained the minutes of the conference held August 17, 1835, and what are the dates of publication? Have any editions of the Doctrine and Covenants published by the "Reorganized" Church not contained the minutes of said conference?

If you mean by "conference" the General Assembly, the publishing department may be able to answer that question all right. I refer you to them. Bishop E. L. Kelley, of Independence, Missouri, is the chairman of that board.

6. Were the lectures on faith that appear in the Doctrine and Covenants, first edition, and every edition since published by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, passed upon by the committee appointed September 24, 1834, or were they not?

They were supposed to have been included in the committee report.

7. Were these lectures on faith judiciously arranged and profitable for doctrine or not?

The expressed opinion of Elder John Smith was as follows, as you will find recorded in the minutes of that General Assembly: "Elder John Smith, taking the lead of the High Council in Kirtland, bore record that the revelations in said book were true, and that the lectures were judiciously arranged and compiled, and were profitable for doctrine."

8. Why did the "Reorganized" Church eliminate these lectures on faith from their late editions of the Doctrine and Covenants?

For convenience in size of book; and because they were not "items of doctrine," but were simply argument in support of doctrine. If the brother will write to the publishing department (Herald Publishing House), Lamoni, Iowa, and ask them to furnish him with a late copy of the Doctrine and Covenants with the lectures on faith in, they will furnish the same for him. I wonder if the Deseret Publishing Company would furnish me with a copy of their Doctrine and Covenants with the section on marriage in which was adopted by the church in 1835 and issued by the Utah church since the year 1876.

If eliminating the lectures on faith from an edition of the Doctrine and Covenants is wrong, we are not the first offenders. Erastus Snow published an edition of the Doctrine and Covenants in the Danish language at Copenhagen, Denmark, in 1852, from which he omitted the lectures on faith.

9. In doing so are they any better prepared in defense of such action than the Latter Day Saints in Utah in eliminating the article on marriage? In taking them out haven't you tampered with history?

It would not be so difficult to defend the action of the Reorganized Church in eliminating the articles on faith as to defend the Utah church in eliminating the article on marriage, for the reason that in eliminating the articles on faith they substituted nothing therefor, while the Utah church in eliminating the article on marriage substituted another article contradictory to the first. I do not see that eliminating these lectures on faith has in any way tampered with history; as the book of Doctrine and Covenants does not purport to be a history of the church.

10. In the second column you state that God is unchangeable and infer, that, therefore, his laws are unchangeable? Is this the meaning you wish to convey?

I am not responsible for what people may infer. I suppose if I should say that a horse has color, that therefore one might infer that the horse is black.

I will answer the question this way in explanation. In affirming the unchangeability of God we mean to affirm that he does not walk in crooked paths; and that whatever changes he may make one part of his law will not conflict with another.

11. Is there but one everlasting covenant? You infer that there is, is this correct?

We know of but one new and everlasting covenant as set forth in the books of the church.

As questions number 12 and 13 relate to questions not raised in the article referred to, I will ask that the writer seek the knowledge from our Church Historian to whom he is referred.

Very truly,
HALE W. SMITH.

Of General Interest

A SUCCESSFUL CO-OPERATIVE COAL-MINING COMPANY.

Coöperation has in it the promise of a solution. An experiment was lately inaugurated in a mine near Terre Haute, Indiana, which has some features that are unique. The plant with which the experiment was made consists of 1,260 acres of coal land, coal vein seven and one half feet thick, a mine capable of producing five hundred tons in a day of eight hours, and capable of being easily developed in a few months to double that capacity. The mine is thoroughly equipped with the best modern machinery. It is near a good market, coal good, and conditions of roof and bottom of the mine such that miners can produce an unusually large amount of coal per day. The miners are mostly native Americans, more than ordinarily intelligent, many of them owners of real estate.

These miners entered into negotiations with the owners of the mine for a lease for a year, with privilege of renewal. The officers of the mining company believe in the possibilities of coöperation, and agreed to a lease on terms most liberal to the miners in order that they might be encouraged to make the experiment. Looking to the safeguarding of the property, the following provisions were embodied in the lease:

First. The miners shall form a corporation with legal responsibility.

Second. All supplies for repairs about the mine and all labor must be paid in cash. This was necessary so that no labor or material liens could be entered against the property.

Third. The mine must be operated in accordance with the plan already adopted for its development, and in accordance with best engineering practice. The mine must be kept in good physical condition.

The compensation to the mine-owners was to be determined as follows:

First. Rails, props, and other necessary supplies shall be bought out of the gross receipts for coal sold.

Second. For three months miners and all laborers employed in producing coal shall be paid in full in accordance with the scale governing the Miners' Union in the Terre Haute district, before any profits shall be distributed.

Third. For the first three months the lessor company shall receive one fourth of the net profits after deducting wages and expenses. If there are no profits, the owners of the mine receive nothing for the coal taken out or the use of their machinery.

Fourth. After three months, the lessor company shall receive five cents a ton and one fourth of the net profits, after deducting wages and expenses.

A charter was obtained from the state of Indiana, incorporating the "Union Mining Association." A company was formed. It adopted by-laws containing the usual provisions and the following distinctive ones:

"1. All stockholders must sign these by-laws.

"2. No debts shall be incurred by this company, and no director or body of directors shall have authority to contract any debts or obligations. Purchases must be made only for cash.

"3. The association and members of this association shall be governed by the Terre Haute agreement concerning scale of wages and mine conditions.

"4. Every person working in or around the mine shall be a stockholder in the Union Mining Association.

"5. Every stockholder agrees to divide losses accruing by reason of the operation of this mine, and hereby instructs the bookkeeper of the company to check off his wages any losses which accrue to said company by reason of the operation of the mine.

"6. Every stockholder hereby agrees to have the said bookkeeper check off his wages the sum of five dollars to pay for one share of stock in the United Mining Association.

"7. Any member shall have the right to give up his membership by signing his certificate of stock back to the treasurer of this company. The United Mining Association, however, shall be in no wise liable for the return of the five dollars paid for such stock. Only one share of stock shall be issued to one member, and each member shall have only one vote.

"8. Each member hereby agrees to hold no other member, or the association as a body, responsible for his death or any accident which may befall him during his work in or around the mine."

They started out with a membership of eighty-five. The capital stock at first subscribed was therefore only $425. A large capital is not necessary for such an association, as the principal outlay of money in coal-mining is for miners' wages, and in the matter of wages the men were both creditors and debtors. They elected seven of their number as directors. The directors elected president, secretary-manager, treasurer, and sales agent. The only salaried officer besides those in or about the mine was secretary-manager, who received one hundred dollars a month, with his salary subject to assessment in case of loss, as miners' wages were.

The company commenced to mine coal. The rates for pick mining in that district are sixty cents mine run, ninety cents steam lump. The following schedule of wages earned during the second half month will show the earning power of the miners in the conditions under which they were working. There were thirteen working days of eight hours. All the stockholders had a chance to work full time. I give only the wages of a few of those who worked as many as eleven days, taking them as they come on the pay-roll:

Days worked	Total wages	Wages day	Days	Total	Per day	Days	Total	Per day
12	$ 51 67	$4 31	13	$55 24	$4 25	13	$34 17	$2 50
11	70 47	6 41	13	62 89	4 84	13	53 76	4 14
13	49 62	3 82	12	58 71	4 90	13	56 16	4 32
11	44 50	4 04	11	49 88	4 54	11	49 62	4 52
12	45 04	3 76	12	50 24	4 20	12	74 09	6 18
13	50 00	3 85	11	51 25	4 66	13	53 03	4 10
13	105 52	8 12	13	75 53	6 81	11	57 09	5 18
11	57 75	5 25	11	79 83	7 26	12	59 18	4 96
13	58 03	4 50	11	62 09	5 47	13	65 58	5 05
12	47 39	4 00	12	52 89	4 41	13	57 33	4 41

One just learning.

By examining the above figures it will be seen that if coöperation gives the miner a "full month's work" and a "full month's pay" it will give him a "full dinner-pail." Practically every man received as much as a hundred dollars a month; one as much as two hundred and ten dollars a month.

During the same time the writer had two teams plowing by the day. He paid the owners their own price. For the two men and four horses he paid eight dollars a day, or less than was earned by the best one of these miners. The miners always got a full month's work. The mine ran steadily while other mines in the locality were running three or four days in the week. The first half month, or first "pay," the receipts for coal just paid expenses, wages in full, and no royalty to owners of the mine. The second half-month the receipts paid expenses, miners' wages, and sixty-six dollars for repairs. The next three half-months, owing to the extreme depression in business and low prices and the plan of always selling for cash, the receipts were not enough to pay full wages. One "pay" the assessment ran as high as twenty-five per cent. But even at that, the monthly wages ranged from eighty to one hundred and fifty dollars a month—twice as much as the miners in other neighboring mines were earning. Many other mines were not running at all.

Coöperation along the lines of this experiment will solve some of the problems and remove the causes of complaint which I mentioned at the outset.

First. It makes a liberal sharing of profits between mine-owner and mine-worker. It gives the mine-owner, in a low market, a minimum price for the depletion of his coal land. It gives the miner, for his wages, all that the product of his labor brings in the market. In a good market it gives the mine-owner a share in the good times, and gives the miner compensation for lower wages in hard times, and automatically increases his wages without waiting for the often tardy advance by his employer.

Second. It settles all labor disputes. The hard and fast scale of the Union which keeps its men idle, rather than accept wages which the market can stand, no longer hampers free action, for the miner can not be expected to pay himself more than he gets for the product of his labor.—D. J. McAdam in the Outlook, June 12, 1909.

A petition was filed in the circuit court yesterday asking that the Temple Lot trustees be increased from one to three. Richard Hill has been trustee of the famous property for the last thirty years and still holds it in trust for the Hedrickite branch of the Mormon church. The court is asked to appoint James Hendricks and George P. Frisbey as co-trustees. The Temple Lot was dedicated by Joseph Smith the founder of the Mormon church, as a place where a temple should be erected. Several years ago suit was instituted by the Reorganized Church asking that the property be restored to them. The suit failed in its purpose, the title still resting in the name of Richard Hill. The property is very valuable to the sect and is kept in good order.—Kansas City Journal, Sunday, June 20.

STONES FOR BREAD.

I have often noticed that when my attention is drawn to any given subject however little said subject may have occupied my mind previously, it is sure to be resuggested in various phases by trifles, in themselves unimportant. It is as if—once used as food for thought—it will not down till due consideration has been given it.

Lately the subject of truthfulness has occupied my mind. And the matter has been presented to me in some new aspects until I have come to believe we need our eyes opened to unsuspected dangers.

I have been a busy woman and while my children were growing up I had little time to pay much attention to what went on outside my own four walls. But when the last went away, I began to look about for occupation for my two unoccupied hands. I find that times have changed since the days when I withdrew from the world to rear my nestlings in the privacy of home; and, perhaps, in nothing is the change more apparent than in the carelessness of good people about telling the truth and nothing but the truth.

My solemn meditations began the day I went to Mrs. Murray's to sew. The "Aid Society Poor Basket" met there, and we ladies were expected to go in as we had time, and work on the little aprons and petticoats. I chose a roll of baby clothes for Mrs. Bump's latest addition to an already superabundant family, and was busily hemming a flannel skirt when little Fannie Murray came in. The mother-instinct—born in every woman-child—awoke at sight of the tiny garments and she began to admire and question, "Aren't they cute? Whose are they?"

"They're for Mrs. Bump's new baby. Now run away, Fannie, and don't bother. Little girls shouldn't ask questions about such things." This from her mother.

"Why shouldn't little girls ask questions? Where did Mrs. Bump get her new baby? Could we get one too? We need one worse than she does."

The childish face was earnest. But Mrs. Murray only laughed as she said, "Mrs. Bump got hers out of the cabbage-bed, and we have no cabbage-bed you know."

Fannie's eyes were round and wide. "Didn't it get cold out there before they found it? Oh, poor little new baby! Did God put it there, mamma? And did he take care of it, out in the night? Would he put one there for us if we had the cabbage?"

"Such a child!" sighed the mother. "Of course God put the baby there, little heathen, and took care of it. No. He has none for us."

"Did I come out of a cabbage? Was it in our own garden, mamma? Because if it wasn't how did you know I was yours? Did I, mamma?"

"To be sure, Fannie. Yes, it was in our very own back lot, so there was no chance of mistake. Do go and play, child. Didn't mamma tell you it wasn't nice for little girls to ask questions about such things? I am surprised at you."

"About what things, mamma?"

"About babies."

"Why isn't it? I thought babies were the nicest things of all, and if we had a cabbage-bed I'd just stay in it for fear our little baby'd come and somebody else would get it. Or perhaps it might be afraid—though of course it couldn't if God was taking care of it, because it would be acquainted with him, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, yes, child. Now do go on, or you'll drive these ladies distracted. They don't love naughty, inquisitive girls."

The shy, half-deprecating glance of the blue eyes in my direction hurt me, so I beckoned with a smile, took the dear girlie in my arms and kissed her—once for love of her innocent, trusting babyhood, once for pity of the worse than careless seed-sowing in the wondering, unfolding mind.

After she had gone out her mother laughed again. "Did you ever see such a child? She keeps me busy concocting plausible tales to satisfy her insatiable questioning. What would you do with her, Mrs. Weston?"

"Tell her the truth," I remarked dryly. Mrs. Murray shrugged her shoulders. "Oh, so you are one of the new idea women, are you? I don't agree with you at all, if you'll pardon my saying so. I think they'll learn badness fast enough,

I felt too helpless to continue the futile argument. Badness! Words failed me. But Mrs. Wilson, the only other occupant of the room, and who had sat quietly by during the foregoing scene, spoke now for the first time.

"The things that are necessary for every intelligent child to know sooner or later, are neither bad or impure," she said. "They only assume such an aspect by false constructions. Therefore my children shall learn the mysteries of life, from first to last, from their mother. I'd rather entrust their education along any other line to chance teachers or none, than this peculiarly sacred part of it. Especially would I avoid the possibility of encouraging them to be careless of truth, by setting them the smallest example of untruthfulness."

Mrs. Murray smiled a little sarcastically. "As you like," she responded. "Each mother must use her own judgment. I believe I am a truthful woman, but where I find it necessary to dissemble to my children I do so, knowing they will forget it in a few hours."

Mrs. Wilson shook her head. "I wish they might, my friend," she said gently. "But childish memories are wonderfully retentive, and the mother is her child's ideal of all that is good and true. It is a pitiful thing to let that ideal be shattered."

The conversation ended there, but my heart thrilled with satisfaction at Mrs. Wilson's words. Here at least was a mother in whom her children could trust.

On my way home I stopped to leave a roll of work with Mrs. Brownell. She called me into the sitting-room where she was making buttonholes. "Nurse is out and I am taking her place," she explained, waving her hand toward the group close by. "I am half distracted, as I always am when nurse leaves them to me. Four rollicking boys, all spring and go, are enough to give any woman chronic nervous prostration. Elmer, don't touch mamma's machine.

"That's my Aid work is it? Do you suppose Mrs. Bump needs help worse than I do? Elmer, if you don't come away from that machine I shall punish you severely.

"They don't pretend to obey me, Mrs. Weston. I don't seem to be able to control them at all, and I'm sure I don't see why, for I threaten them enough. Bobby, mamma'll put you in the closet and shut the door if you meddle with the flowers. Elmer, you shall be spanked and put to bed if you injure that machine in any way—naughty boy. Aren't you relieved that your children are grown up and out of your way? I declare I sometimes feel—there that bad child has broken my last machine needle. Elmer, I have a great mind to spank you! Now go over to your building blocks, and play quietly while poor mamma has one minute's peace.

"Bobby, there's a big black dog in the closet that bites little boys who don't mind. Oh, how exasperating! He has upset that vase of flowers—water and all. Elmer, run ask Bridget for a floor cloth and a clean blouse for bad Bobby. Now, Master Bobby, you go into the bay window and play Noah's Ark. That's a good boy."

It isn't worth while to recount any more. The rest of my brief call was spent in the same manner, and though threats galore hurled round the childish ears, not one promise was kept. It was just as I was leaving that Conrad was detected in an untruth, having denied some act of which he was unmistakably guilty. His mother's shocked look and tone—her solemn declaration that God didn't love people who told what wasn't true, and never, never let them go to heaven, would—in the light of the previous happenings—have been comical if they hadn't been tragic. The small culprit was not at all impressed, and slipped back to his play with the cheering assurance that "God didn't care. He did too let story-tellers in heaven or there wouldn't be no angels at all." His faith in human veracity was already destroyed, young as he was.

Last week I went to Cynthia Wilde's to tea. Cynthia used to be in my Bible class years ago, and I've always been fond of her though we live in different sections of the city and seldom meet. When I received her invitation to spend the afternoon with her, I accepted promptly and anticipated a pleasant visit. Cynthia's only daughter is a girl of about twelve years, and seems a very sweet and lady-like child. She has perfect manners and shows the care that has been given to her training. I am very fond of children, and am always glad to be with them, so looked forward with special pleasure to Mabel, whose sweet ways had quite won my heart when she brought her mother's invitation.

"After all, can it be that there are arguments in favor of a small family?" I asked myself as I mentally contrasted Cynthia's one, with Mrs. Brownell's four, and Mrs. Bump's seven.

Mabel met me at the door with the ease and grace of a young lady, made me welcome and ushered me into her mother's presence.

We had been chatting enjoyably for awhile, when the gate was heard to click and Mabel flew to the window.

"Mother, it's that horrid old Mrs. Graves!" she exclaimed, frowning.

"Is it possible?" and Cynthia threw up her hands with an annoyed gesture. "She is tiresome enough at the best, but when there is some one else of whom we are particularly fond it is almost too trying. Oh, dear, what shall I do?"

"I'll go to the door and tell her you are not at home," said Mabel, pausing on the threshold.

"Yes, do, child," and Cynthia looked relieved, then added quickly, "Wait, Mabel, that won't do. She'll be certain to go to Mrs. Dewey's next door, and as their sitting-room windows are opposite these she'd see me and be offended of course. I don't want to make her angry for she's a good customer of my husband's, Mrs. Weston, so we must keep on the right side of her. We wives of business men have to yield to unnecessary motives at times—our bread and butter depends on it to a certain extent. You'll just have to admit her, Mabel. Mrs. Weston will excuse me, and I'll get rid of her as soon as possible."

"I'll tell her you're ill with headache. How will that do?" the girl still waited.

"No—she'd find us out. Mrs. Dewey knows I was all right an hour ago. There she's rung again. Let her in, daughter."

"Old nuisance," scolded Mabel. An instant later I heard her sweet, girlish voice float through the hall. "How are you, Mrs. Graves? Do come in. Mother will be so glad to see you—it seems an age since you were here." Then Cynthia's lady-like, well modulated voice, bidding her welcome, urging her to remove her wraps, and playfully chiding her for her long absence.

Of course my heart went down and the pleasure of my visit was gone. How could I know that my own invitation was not prompted by "mercenary" motives—my welcome not a cloak for insincerity?

After Cynthia's caller departed and she returned to me, she related a recent experience with a servant whom she pronounced a treasure in every respect, only that she was not truthful. "And that, dear Mrs. Weston, is a habit I excuse in no one. I can not have such an atmosphere about Mabel, so I had to let Lena go after expostulating to no purpose."

Undoubtedly I am ignorant, evidently I am behind the times, and more than all I am bewildered and perplexed. I find myself unable to make the nice distinctions between truth and falsehood drawn by these friends I have described—all Christian women, church members in good and regular standing, and all bound by solemn vows to rear their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. How can this be done if truth be disregarded?

Only last week a friend told me of her own wee daughter, who upon learning that the story of her cherished friend Santa Claus was a myth, asked between her sobs, "Mamma, is Jesus made up too?"

That mother's eyes were opened and her children will reap the benefit. But what of the rest? Because these are neither imaginary or unusual. Our precepts count for less than nothing unless our practice bears them out, and God, who desires "truth in the inward parts" is surely not satisfied with less than that.

And so my full heart pleads for the little ones about us. That instead of being cruelly dwarfed and misshapen in spiritual growth, they may be given the chance to develop truth and honesty as they develop lung and brain—healthily, naturally, and vigorously.—Elizabeth Price in American Motherhood.

Mr. Darwin had often expressed to me his conviction that it was utterly useless to send missionaries to such a set of savages as the Fuegians. I had always replied that I did not believe any human beings too low to comprehend the simple message of the gospel of Christ. After many years he wrote to me that the recent account of the mission showed that he had been wrong and I right, and he requested me to forward to the society an inclosed check for five pounds as a testimony of his interest in their good work.—Admiral Sir James Sullivan.

PARIS, Texas, June 11, 1909.

Editors Herald: First, let me say that we are still in the faith, though isolated from the church and the association of the Saints. We realize that they as a whole are continually asking God to remember all the Saints throughout every land and country, and wherever we may be, at home, in our family altar, at the church, or alone in the forest, or locked in the prison cell, let us be humble and ask God in faith to bless and to own; for we know we are his people, if we do his will, and we know he will answer our prayers if we ask in faith. Not in some other way, as some people say, but the thing we ask for he has said he would speedily answer. In this he has proved himself true to me.

At Sylvan, near where I live, and on the last night of last year, a notice was posted up ordering the farmers to dispose of the negroes in ten days. A few days later the sheriff and deputy of this county came down and subpoenaed some four or five men of this place, me with the rest, to appear before the county attorney the next day. I told him I would be there, which I was. When I arrived I found all the officers and five of my neighbors there waiting for me. They had beat me there and had everything cut and dried as they thought, and after a few words had passed they placed me under arrest and began to arrange for an examination trial.

Now comes the first thought, What must I do? for I knew nothing about law, and seeing I had no friend present and no money, the thought came again, Lord, what must I do? and I thought of the words of the Savior: "For it shall be given you in that same hour what you shall speak." The question was asked, "Can you give a one thousand dollar bond?" I said, "Not now." Again, "Do you want a trial?" I said, "No," so they led me away, leaving my boy in the court-house and the great steel door was opened and locked behind me; I was carried up-stairs and another door was opened and locked behind me. I was shut in from the world and my company was with criminals of different crimes. Taken from home and my dear wife and little children who anxiously waited for my return at sundown. With a howling Norther sweeping the land sundown came and Ray returned alone. The first words were, "Where is papa?" The answer was, "They put him in jail." You may know their grief and tears that night.

A long talk followed between me and the other prisoners. I asked them about their troubles and in return they asked me. I told them of what I was accused and how I had tried to live and what my faith was and they were all surprised, notwithstanding their weaker hearts and crimes, their eyes were filled with tears. One spoke up and said "Brother, you will never be condemned." I again remembered the word of of the Lord which says, "In the last days I will pour out my Spirit on all flesh and they shall prophesy." This man's words have been fulfilled, but was this all? No. I retired to my cot and tried to sleep, but could not and in a few moments it seemed it was day.

The prisoners were surprised at their breakfast, which they said was the best they had had in eighteen months, but I could not eat. The day passed and no news from home; night came on and I remembered the hour for family prayer. It seemed like my heart would break; so I retired to my cell and fell upon my face with streaming eyes, and said, "O Lord, remember me in thy mercies and put it into the hearts of men to take me out of this place, and once more permit me to go home."

I fell asleep with these words in my mouth and dreamed that I was in the court-house and in the judgment-hall. A man stood before me with a new suit of clothes in his hand which he pitched over to me; they fell at my feet and he said, "If you want them you had better take them." I took them up and looking at them found they were solid brown with a darker brown stripe; then I awoke. It was day. I stayed there eight days, owing to the bad weather and other things. They made all efforts to stop a bond, but in spite a bond was made. It took several good men to keep down mob violence against the pretended prosecutors.

Being committed home, I was very uneasy, as the negroes were in an uproar and I was afraid they might do me violence. I dreamed again and I was on my housetop watching the negroes. I caught five white ducks and had them all head down, in my left hand and a stick in my right hand. A curious looking beast with four legs and a hull like a turtle and foreparts like a spider approached me; and striking one blow I scattered him into atoms. So the grand jury met; my case was brought up and examined thoroughly. No proof could be had; the case was thrown out and the prisoner's words came true. My first dream and the clothing meant freedom; a convict, when he is freed, is given a suit of solid brown. The white ducks, are the five neighbors that prosecuted me; the beast is the spirit that led them and now they are in my hand. If I will to I can sue for both slander and damage. Shall I proceed or let them go free?

This trouble has proved a great blessing to me. When I left the jail I told all the prisoners good-bye and told them to be good boys. They promised to do so, with tears running down their cheeks. I gave the jailer and sheriff my hand and bade them farewell. A power was present that made them blush. The jailer said, "I had to do my duty to you all and I expect to do so." Still I thanked him for his kindness to me and departed home, to meet again with loved ones.

I will close, asking the prayers of all the Saints that I may continue more faithful.

Your brother in Christ,
G. M. Cox.

DES MOINES, Iowa, June 19, 1909.

Dear Herald: We know that you are a welcome weekly visitor into many homes of the Saints, and we hope the time will come when you reach every home of members of the church. You grow better every year, and the carefully selected reading-matter you bear each week is of value to every one. It is not flattery to tell you that your editorials are strong and strikingly to the point, the several departments are each of interest, the letter department brings the membership of the church together according to their own views, and the news from branches department is of interest, though this column is very brief at times.

Allow us to mention some things of special interest to us. The editorial in last week's HERALD, "Appreciation of Autumn Leaves," was well deserved. How we wish that every family of the church had our magazine in their homes! Certainly Autumn Leaves grows better with every issue. The June number is grand, the cover lovely, and the reading of the highest class.

We noted the fact that the church at Lamoni was open to the superintendent of the Iowa Anti-Saloon League, Reverend A. C. Barber, of this city. He has occupied the pulpit at our church here, and is a strong man in his work. And in a recent issue of the HERALD, the editorial article on the work of the Anti-Saloon League quoted the address of Ex-governor Hanley of Indiana on, "Why I hate the liquor traffic." The Ex-governor spoke at the auditorium in this city recently, and he is one of the strongest temperance men in the country.

There are some things outside of the pales of the church which are of more than passing interest to us as a people. The general conference of the Norwegian Lutheran Church held its annual session in the city during the month. One of the solemn, impressive services of the session was the ordination of twenty young men to the ministry at a Sunday morning service. Another point of interest is the effort which is being made to unite the three branches of the Lutheran Church into one body. Committees from each of the three bodies have been conferring, and while the union has not been effected this year it is fully believed it will take place during the sessions of the conference held next year. The membership of the Norwegian branch holding its session here is sixty thousand, just the number of the Reorganization, and the body at this session pledged itself to raise one million dollars for church extension by 1914. This amount to be pledged by individuals in small sums to be paid each year.

The HERALD is always interested in any mention of the Lamanite people. It should be remembered that here in our Des Moines District we have an Indian Reservation, located near Tama. This small remnant of the Lamanites which at one time numbered about four hundred people, is dwindling rather than increasing. The reservation was established right here in central Iowa nearly fifty years ago. Soon after it was established the Presbyterian Church opened a mission on the reservation, and labored constantly to bring the Indians to a knowledge of Christianity. The first mission opened continued several years, its work being a total failure so far as visible results were concerned, not a single one of the Indians accepting Christianity as offered by our Presbyterian brethren. The first mission finally closed, and then again the mission was opened and the ones assigned there labored on, and a ray of success finally came. Just recently three young men of the tribe made a Christian profession, and being taken in charge by the church were sent away to school. We hope that the young men may be led to a higher life. Another event of importance is the government school which has been maintained on the reservation for many years, and the continual opposition the Indians have made to the white man's education. The leading families refused to patronize the school, and it was a failure. The Indians have received their quarterly annuity from the Government, so much for each member of the tribe. The Government officials recently said that, No Indians go to school, no pay. This brought on trouble, and during the month of May the chief on the reservation, accompanied by several of his officers, made a trip to Washington to present their case to the President of the United States. The Government was firm, still saying, No Indians at school, no pay, and the red men returned to their homes. We hope they will finally conclude to accept the offer of education which the Government makes to them in the school on the reservation.

There is activity in the district along the lines of church work. Our district president, Elder Orman Salisbury, who is also superintendent of the Sunday-school association, is active. Last week he went to Boone to attend a special business-session of the branch in connection with local matters, and then attended the picnic of the Fresher Sunday-school on June 15. This week he was at Enterprise in the interest of church and Sunday-school work. The district tent is located at Fraser, and Elder M. M. Turpen is with it, assisted by the local men in that part of the district. Elder Turpen was so well and kindly known in the district when he was with us before, that he will be a very busy man during the year here in an endeavor to reach all the localities which will call for him.

The time and place for the reunion is not yet decided upon. There has been dissatisfaction in the district in the past when the reunion was held during State Fair Week. It is definitely understood that the reunion will not be held on that date this year, and will convene either before, or after the date on which the fair is held.

The children's day services were held at the church June 20, the Sunday-school hour being given to the children's program.

Elder Jacob Curtis was in the city during the week attending a wedding in the family, and occupied at the church during his visit.

WILBURTON, Oklahoma, June 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have just finished reading some letters and grand articles that appeared in the HERALD, and I find much food for thought and consideration. I long for the day when we get the HERALD and Ensign; two better papers were never printed. The Lord commanded us to study to show ourselves approved workmen that need not be ashamed, and I know of no better way to do this than by reading the church papers and books.

I look back with delight to the day when I embraced this beautiful gospel which has ever been a comfort to me. Being quite young when I entered the work I have had my dark and cloudy days to pass through.

The work here is growing, there being a baptism last Sunday. Our Sunday-school is growing fast and the Religio is not to be forgotten. It is the source of my ambition. No one loves this part of God's work better than I do. We have only been engaged in the Religio work some six or eight months, but I can say the interest is rapidly growing.

My grandfather and grandmother are visiting, that his health might improve, and we are glad to note he is improving. We feel that the Lord is answering our prayers.

Each day the warfare grows brighter to me, as I can see the time is growing near when Christ will come to make up his jewels. The great question that bothers me is, Will I be one of his jewels? I know that it is within my reach to be one, but will I try hard enough to obtain the crown? Dear Saints, I desire an interest in your prayers that I may hold out faithful.

Yours in the conflict for truth,

EVERT RESER.

IUKA, Illinois, June 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: I was baptized about three weeks ago. I am glad that I have accepted the gospel of Christ.

I attended a series of meetings held by Brn. Moore and Plumb at Central City and was baptized there. They went from Central City to Greene. I did not attend the church there, as I was going to school at Centralia. I have just graduated from the graded schools.

I had the pleasure of seeing four dear souls added to Christ's church at the chapel, near Xenia, Illinois, last Sunday. I was very glad to see them accept the Savior, one of them being my brother.

We are looking for Bro. Sawley here soon, and I hope he will have as much success in getting the people to see the straight and narrow way as Brn. Moore and Plumb have.

I ask all the Saints to pray for me that I may remain faithful until I have finished my life on earth and am called home.

Your sister in Christ,

ESTA WESNER.

PAONIA, Colorado, June 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: As it has been some time since I have written to you, thought I would drop a few lines to let you know I am still alive in the work and trust in the faith.

I commenced holding meetings two weeks ago in one of the schoolhouses where I had held meetings before. There were sixty-five out the first night,—quite a difference from one year ago. There are just two families of Saints, but we have friends that stand by us and see that we get fair play.

The Christian preacher has had a great deal to say about us. He gave us a hit on the Book of Mormon the first night I came here. His members say he is a smart man, and wanted to know if we would meet him. We told him we would, and that the doors would never be closed until he had time to tell all he knew.

I attended a debate between him and a Baptist preacher. While the Christian preacher was speaking, he asked if there were any in the room that had ever witnessed the Holy Ghost as it was on the Day of Pentecost; if there were to raise their hand. Mine went up and he asked me a few questions, and took the liberty to tell the people I was a Latter Day Saint. I guess he thinks that the sidewalk is wide enough for both of us to walk on. They were very friendly to me when they found I would not leave town. I tell the people I am like Paul, that I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ.

I rejoice in this great latter-day work; yet, I feel my weakness at times. God has blessed me in defending his work. May we as Saints of God live our faith, and this work will roll on through coming years as never before. May God speed the right is my humble prayer. With love to all the dear Saints,

Your brother in the one faith,

GARRET WALLING.

MCKENZIE, Alabama, June 20, 1909.

Dear Herald: I love to read the good letters and articles in the HERALD. I always look for the letters first to see if there is one from any that I know.

It has been raining so much this morning that I could not go to church, and I have been reading Autumn Leaves. I enjoy reading them very much. I rejoice to know that God is and has been so kind and merciful to his children here on earth. I fear that we as Saints are not as humble as we should be to our heavenly Father. He has been kind and good to all his people. I realize his kindness to me in many ways and at many times, for which I am very thankful. My desire is to live better in the future.

I do not go to church or Sunday-school as often as I would like to, on account of distance. We have our prayer-meeting every Thursday night at our schoolhouse and I attend as often as I can. I enjoy the meetings very much. We have small crowds, but all seem to enjoy themselves.

If there are any of the Saints that live in Hidalgo County, Texas, at Donna, Texas, who see this letter, I would be glad to hear from and correspond with them in regard to the country out there. I am not satisfied here and I want to go somewhere to a better country, or where I can have a better chance to go to church and Sunday-school, also where I can have good school to send my children to. Our school here is not what it could be, and if any of the Saints living at the above-named places or anywhere else, that could give me information of a good place to go, I will be very thankful to them.

Hoping and trusting that I may be able to live worthy of the guidance of the Spirit of the Lord, and that I may be able to raise up my children in a way that would be pleasing to the Lord, I remain,

Your brother in the true faith,

J. E. WIGGINS.

TORONTO, Ontario, June 21, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am pleased at the prompt and well-set-up appearance of my article on "The coming comet of 1910." There is but one material correction to be made; viz, on page 560, lines twenty-one and twenty-two, where "The positive electricity in the sun acts repulsively upon the negative electricity of the comet's tail," should be read; "The negative electricity of the sun acts repulsively upon positive electricity of the comet's tail." This arises from no error either of my own or of your compositors, but is simply due to the marvelously rapid march of scientific discovery and research, for after penning those lines, and before completing my article, I found out that the most recent electro-spectroscopic research proves the sun to be electrified negatively, not positively. Also, on page 561, line twenty-six from the end, "A comet is neither a star, nor a planet, nor a nebulæ," should read, "A comet is neither a star, nor a planet, nor a nebula," as nebula is the singular form of the word, and nebulæ the plural form; similarly throughout the entire article.

Considering the abstruse nature of the subject, however, it is highly creditable to your entire staff, that there should be nothing else in the nature of error to remark upon.

Alluding to my letter on page 570 it is only just to the brother in the "wilds of Minnesota," (if I may be pardoned that expression,) for me to admit that in a second and subsequent letter the brother explained his point, and I have written him, admitting freely the accuracy and correctness of his conclusions in the matter.

I beg to remain, dear brother,

Yours sincerely and respectfully,
F. R. TUBB.

Bro. Arch E. McCord, of Clyde, Missouri, sends us notice of Bro. Knudson's death, and calls attention to the fact that three old time Saints have died in the Nodaway District since the convening of conference.

News From Branches

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

Our place of worship is on the corner of Sixth and Morgan Avenue North. We have Sunday-school at ten o'clock, preaching at eleven o'clock in the morning, prayer-meeting at half past six in the evening, preaching at eight o'clock; also prayer-meeting at eight o'clock Thursday night, and Religio Friday night at eight o'clock. At our last annual business-meeting Bro. Charles Lundeen was elected president; Bro. Frederick Green priest; Bro. H. T. Hawkes teacher, and Bro. Charles Johnson deacon.

With the different offices filled we hope to see our branch grow in spirituality and numbers.

Our former president, Bro. Hilton, who has served as presiding officer of the branch for a number of years, resigned on account of old age. He has passed his three score and ten years. He is a good, faithful brother. Until the last two or three years, he has been a regular and punctual attendant.

Bro. Swen Swenson has been with us for a few weeks. He has preached several times and done lots of fireside preaching, which has helped to build up and strengthen the Saints. Bro. Swenson is never idle. He is well liked here.

Last Sunday we had the pleasure of listening to two fine sermons by Bro. Peak, who stopped here on his way to Clitherall. Bro. Peak has promised to labor here some this fall. We wish we could have both Brn. Swenson and Peak to labor here in the Twin Cities. We need some one here all the time.

Bro. Gunsolley is here also. Spoke to us last eve and will speak again to-night. He is one of the field workers for the Sunday-school and Religio. We need help along these lines and welcome Bro. Gunsolley's good talks.

Our last sacrament-meeting was one not soon to be forgotten. The Spirit was with us to a marked degree. Our branch is in good condition now and the officers are working hard to bring everything up to standard. A few are being received by baptism; children of Saints.

MAE EDSON.

LONDON, ONTARIO.

The election of branch officers for the ensuing term was held at the last regular business-meeting. Elder Fligg was elected president.

Bishop Evans and wife paid us a visit on their way to district conference.

Elder Howlett, who has been home for a visit the past few weeks, left for his field of labor in the Chatham District. Prior to his leaving the Young Men's Club presented him with a hand satchel, the address being read by Bro. F. Gray.

Quite a large number of the Saints attended the district conference last week at St. Thomas. The district being divided called for more active workers, several of our branch members being appointed to assist in the work. Elder Fligg was chosen counselor to the bishop, Bro. Philippin secretary of district, Bro. Frank Gray secretary of Sunday-school, Bro. J. Judkins president of Religio, Bro. R. J. Farthing first vice-president of Religio, Sr. Ruth Greer treasurer of Religio, Bro. O. W. Cambridge assistant superintendent of Sunday-school. The next district conference meets with our branch in October.

At the close of last Wednesday night's prayer-meeting a social hour was spent with Elder U. W. Greene, the occasion being his birthday. A very enjoyable evening was spent. Short speeches were given by Elders John Shields, Russell, Bishop Evans, and Elder Greene. Refreshments were served by the sisters.

W. A. HARDY.

EDGERTON, ALBERTA, CANADA.

I write you a few lines to say that the work here in the Ribstone Branch is progressing nicely. Three years ago a few Saints gathered here and now we have a branch of over forty members; also some who have not got their letters yet, making in all over fifty. There were ten baptized yesterday.

I would like to ask a question; first I will explain. At the baptism yesterday a brother presented his boy for baptism and said the boy was under eight years of age. I, as president of the branch, objected to his being baptized. Was I right or was I wrong? Of course, I think I was right, but some of the brethren say I was wrong and that the church, or at least some of the elders, baptize before that age. [The age when baptism may be administered is given in Doctrine and Covenants 68:4. EDITORS.] Please tell us through your worthy paper what the church law is on that; and if children are holy to God until that age and therefore need no baptism. [The condition of little children is stated in Moroni 8.]

Wishing you ever success and ever praying for the advancement of God's kingdom, I am,

Your brother in Christ,

W. J. LEVITT.

WIRT, INDIANA.

No doubt it will be of interest to many to learn that the writer was at Union Branch (Wirt, Indiana,) and baptized eight precious souls into the church of Christ. I was there on the sixth day of June and held meetings over Sunday for the Saints, and seven made request for baptism. I appointed Sunday, June 20, as the day to baptize. Elder J. W. Metcalf, of Louisville, went with me, and after we arrived another came forward, making eight in all. I have others to report in a few weeks. I am sure that many will be glad, as this is the branch that Elder Marshall and Elder Scott apostatized from and where others were cut off. God will never let his work suffer if we do our work well. I hope that Southern Indiana Saints will continue to be faithful and support the work with tithes and offerings, so we can keep up the good work.

JOHN ZAHND.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

You will learn with regret that our dear Bro. Rushton and his wife have been ill, the latter being near the point of death. I am thankful to say that both have recovered and sincerely hope they may be long spared to us.

I worshipped with the London Saints a fortnight ago when the president, Elder J. A. Judd, a godly young man, baptized four young men and one young woman into the church. They are promising members, too.

I hear that North Manchester added five members on the 8th instant, by baptism.

I sincerely hope that the Senior Editor and staff are well. Kindest regards to all.

Your brother in Christ,

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

After a long delay I greet you with a few items from this part of the Lord's vineyard.

The missionary has been prevented from entering as actively upon the work in the city as was desired, and there have been several reasons for it; yet it has been busy, but not in as public a way as desired. One of the reasons for this is means to secure effective places to hold services, another the condition of the weather such that outdoor meetings could not be held, another on account of being delayed in improving home property because of strike among plumbers and other causes. There are several prospects for public openings in the near future, and we are making an effort to make the prospects a reality. The city has been much favored by the visitation of missionaries and local ministers dropping in and rendering help over the Lord's day. This has been appreciated.

The visits of Brn. Christy and Gunsolley to the city have been much appreciated.

Bro. M. H. Cook departed for his field of labor in Oregon last Tuesday week, Sr. Cook going as far as Lincoln and Fairbury, Nebraska, with him, she to visit relatives a few weeks. We shall miss Bro. Cook. The Saints gave him a farewell party the Friday previous to his departure, and made him feel that they wished to be remembered by him.

Last Monday Bro. O. Salisbury went to Boone and reorganized the branch, and next Sunday he goes to Enterprise to organize a Sunday-school.

The conventions and conference of the district were profitable. The correspondent was called away on Saturday to preach the funeral-sermon of Sr. Floy Clapper, formerly Brooks, at Carlisle. The M. E. minister kindly proffered the use of the church, and assisted in the services. The church was well filled, showing the respect the people there had for the family.

Children's day will be held next Sunday. Last Sunday Sr. M. L. Skinner was baptized by the missionary; and others are seeking the kingdom. The branch officials are doing some very commendable work to eliminate wrong-doing, and save the wrong-doers, but because of mercy shown some have taken advantage, and have not shown the proper appreciation of the efforts made.

Several very marked cases of God's favor have been shown toward the sick through the ordinance of the laying on of hands of late. To God be all the praise.

The article in the last HERALD, entitled "The visiting pastor," contains much of thought and of value, especially that showing the benefits of such work to the church. In this kind of work does the city pastor accomplish the greatest good, although it is not always appreciated in its real and true sense, and because results are not seen many become discouraged, and some criticisms have to be borne that do not encourage, but add to the pastor's burdens.

The Norwegian Lutheran conference has just closed, the city donating about five hundred dollars to assist in the expenses. There was a move towards the uniting of three divisions of that church, thus giving a greater working strength. The conference also decided to do some aggressive evangelical work.

An effort is being made to secure the Des Moines District reunion in the city this year. There is a possibility of securing one of the parks for that purpose.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Wednesday, June 16, there was a good attendance at prayer-meeting in the new church, a good spirit prevailed, and I am sure all departed feeling it was good to come to the house of the Lord.

Owing to death in the family of Mr. Parkhurst, invitations to the wedding of Mr. Paul Parkhurst and Miss Frances Laing, which was to take place Wednesday evening, June 23, were recalled, and the marriage ceremony was performed Saturday evening, June 19, in the presence of a few intimate friends, Elder W. A. McDowell officiating, assisted by Elder Arthur Allen. Mr. and Mrs. Parkhurst took their departure Sunday for a point near Cleveland, Ohio, where they will attend the funeral of the brother who died.

On Sunday, June 20, Sunday-school not well attended, although we are quite sure the weather was not at fault, as it was so warm and bright. Sermon by Elder Arthur Allen, theme: We should be refreshed and strengthened every morning by the spiritual manna, through prayer and complete consecration, as the Israelites received manna every morning from heaven to sustain their physical bodies. A solo by Mrs. White was very much appreciated. Sr. White, of Galien, Michigan, the mother of Sr. Vanderhoof, was a visitor at the morning service.

Possibly some do not know that our church is located at Sixty-sixth and Honore Streets, five blocks west of the Ashland car line, which can be reached on State Street in the main part of the city, and will not need to transfer. It is three blocks south of the Sixty-third Street line, to which one can transfer from any of the south-bound cars in the city, Cottage Grove, State, Center, Halstead, and Ashland, also Wentworth.

Elder Arthur Allen took his departure for St. Thomas, Canada, Sunday evening, for a short visit among Saints and friends, and will return with his wife who preceded him a few days ago. They will also visit at Detroit.

Elder W. A. McDowell was the speaker Sunday evening, and all felt benefited who attended. A number of the members from the West Side were over, and the best attendance of our own members we have had on Sunday evening.

Exceedingly warm weather since Sunday, instead of warm wraps this week, electric fans are in demand, and even some have been overcome with heat in this city. It is said that excessive heat causes more insanity and suicides than cooler weather, so let us beware and stand on a firm foundation, also keep our tempers within bounds. "He that controlleth his spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

CHICAGO ITEMS.

"God wills it! God wills it!" said the Crusaders, when they started on their long, perilous journey to reclaim and purify the Holy Land. Whether this thought stirred the minds of a number of our faithful members who of late have moved away from Chicago, or are preparing to do so, we can not say.

Those known among us and always pleasantly referred to as the Fairbanks family have returned to their old home in Sandwich, Illinois. This takes from us our present branch deacon and some of our best workers. But what is our loss will be the happy gain of the Sandwich Branch, which has for the past few years been in a state of dilapidation since their church was burned.

The branch, and especially the Religio, will greatly miss Bro. C. W. Camp, who has recently left us for Spokane, Washington, where he expects to locate for a season, in the meantime registering in the three reservations now opening up in that country. We can say to the Saints in Spokane, that Bro. C. W. is an earnest, true, and faithful worker. It was with sad hearts that many of us bade him good-bye, for he has been a faithful servant and of much value to the branch.

Bro. McDowell, our former missionary, visited a few days with us lately, speaking to both branches. There were no flowers strewn in his way as we know of, but that is about as close as we dare shear his hearty, enthusiastic reception of devotional attentions by the Chicago Saints.

We are having plenty of rain at this time.

Presiding Bishopric.

APPOINTMENT OF BISHOP'S AGENT.

To the Saints and Friends of the Eastern Michigan District: Please take notice that upon the resignation of Bro. Andrew Barr, who has acted as Bishop's agent in and for said district for a number of years, Bro. William F. Smith, of Howlett P. O., Wayne County, Michigan, has been recommended for appointment of agent by the district conference of said district and duly appointed to act as agent in and for said Eastern Michigan District. We commend Bro. Smith to the Saints of the district and trust that each one interested in the cause of Christ in and for said territory will duly aid and assist him in his work and see that each perform his or her duty in moving along and assisting him to supply the treasury and aid the missionary work and the poor and the needy in and for the territory named.

The Bishopric in taking leave of the agent, Bro. Andrew Barr, especially commend him and his work which has been done in the interest of this department, and express special thanks to him in this way for his faithfulness and integrity as manifested in all the work of his office. We trust the Lord may specially bless and care for him in the remaining years allotted, as also his family, and ever prosper the work in the Eastern Michigan District.

Reunion Notices.

Those attending the Bluff Park Reunion at Montrose, Iowa, July 30 to August 8, may rent tents or cottages at the following rates: Tents 10x12 $2.50; 12x14 $3.00; 14x16 $3.75; family compartment tents, 10x14 $4; 12x14 $4.25; canvas cots 60 cents. Orders for tents should be in by July 20. The cottages belong to the park management, but may be rented through committee. Thirteen cottages are listed for rent with from two to seven rooms each, the rent being from $5 to $10 per week. These cottages are unfurnished except that bedsteads or cots are supplied and in some instances a table or other article of plain furniture. The rent is approximately at the rate of $1 per week for each person, so that if a $10 cottage is rented it will accommodate ten persons, a $5 cottage five persons, and so on. However, extra persons can be accommodated if necessary and cots supplied at the regular rate, $1 per week. Cottages should be ordered early and orders must be accompanied by a cash remittance, as these are available only so long as they remain unengaged. A boarding house is maintained by the park management where board may be had for $4.50 per week, children under seven years $2.50, seven to twelve years $3. If it be possible for the committee to make other provision at cheaper rates it will be done. Further information may be had of M. H. Siegfried, chairman of committee, Nauvoo, Illinois, or of Charles Fry, secretary, 1604 Louisa Street, Burlington, Iowa.

The Saints of Northern Wisconsin District are going to hold a reunion at Chetek, Barron County, Wisconsin, beginning July 13, and continuing for ten days. We set this date, so as to have the benefit of the paraphernalia used by the Lake Chetek Chautauqua Assembly, as we have their grounds and fixtures. This is to be the first reunion held in Northern Wisconsin. The Saints and friends at Chetek are trying to do all they can, to make it a success. There will be free transportation to and from the grounds, by boat and bus. Branch presidents, please take notice of your conference resolution, to take up your voluntary offering for reunion expenses and send to Leroy Colbert, Chetek, Wisconsin, in order that all who expect to attend the reunion may have their wants attended to. Regarding tents, board, etc., please write to Leroy Colbert in time so your wants may be looked after. This is a beautiful place to hold a reunion. Come one and all who can, and pray that the Lord may abundantly bless his people in this gathering. W. P. Robinson, chairman committee.

Reunion dates for Mission No. 2 are as follows:

Western Oklahoma, Alva, July 23 to August 2.

Southeastern Illinois, Springerton, July 30 to August 10.

Spring River, Joplin, August 6 to 16.

Far West, Stewartville, August 20 to 29.

Central Oklahoma, Terlton, August 20 to 29.

Independence Stake, at the grove southwest of Fairland Heights on the electric line, August 27 to September 5.

If there are other reunions in the mission, they have not been reported to us—hence can not advertise them.

MISCELLANEOUS DEPARTMENT	646

Such a state of affairs in any part of the church is pleasing to the Devil and his associates and to no one else. It may obtain in a Sunday-school, in a choir of singers, in a branch or district organization, in a quorum of the priesthood, in the general church organization, or even between two missionaries when one harbors the thought that the other is given preference in the field.

A small, obscure, and lonely branch, where all ought to stand together because of the very odds against them, may be torn and convulsed by internal disorders, men striving for position and mastery, jealous of and unfair to each other, using the ungodly methods of politicians to advance themselves, apparently utterly unaware that their conduct is entirely unbecoming to their profession. Don't do it, brethren. It is a mistake. Make the welfare of the work in your locality preëminent. Help those who are in office, or at work in any department. Do not envy them. Stay out of office yourself for ever, unless God and a majority of the people want you in office.

However, such troubles are not confined by any means to the small branches. They may occur in the general church organization among what are sometimes termed the "higher" officials, the "leading" or "prominent" men of the church. A man never gets too big to be assailed by little thoughts, or too high to be overthrown by low motives if he permits such to dwell in him. Wherever such a condition may obtain it is absolutely sure to work injury to the one who is jealous; it is quite likely to hinder the work of God; and it may injure the one who is envied and assailed, though he is comparatively safe from permanent harm if he remains humble and does his duty. It is a shame, though, that any man in addition to the arduous work of fighting the world, the flesh, and the Devil, must contend against the hostility (uttered or unexpressed) of his associates.

To envy the ability or success of another is a very serious and stupid blunder. We are all in this church work together. Every strong and true man that the church develops is so much gain to us all. Instead of envying such a man his prowess we should hail him as a fighting comrade. He helps us to hold our own defenses against a hostile world. By him

SOME MISTAKES.

I. JEALOUSY OF OUR BRETHERN.

Away down in the human heart there burns a little, mean fire of envy and hatred toward the successful brother. It is the work of the gospel to put that fire out. The gospel will do it, too, if we do not fan the flames. If we do, then let us look to our own spiritual safety.

Sometimes when one is doing especially good work or is called or elected to some position of trust or power, another will show by unmistakable signs that he is jealous. He craves the personal attention that seems likely to be given to his fellow servant, perhaps, as he imagines, to his own exclusion. The natural course indicated by such a condition of mind and heart will be an attempt to defeat the work of the one whom he envies, an effort to oust him from his position, or bring about a partial eclipse of his power or popularity.

Heman C. Smith

we are all made more secure. His strength adds so much to the sum total of the strength of the church. We fight forward a little to the spot where he has planted the colors. We gain a little ground. Thank God. Send more such men. Cursed be the hand that would pull the colors down because the color-bearer is disliked.

That the church has not always been free from the evil of which we write is very evident. Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "Ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?"—1 Corinthians 3: 3. The Lord himself has said of the church in our age, "Behold, I say unto you, there were jarrings, and contentions, and envyings and strifes, and lustful and covetous desires among them; therefore by these things they polluted their inheritances."—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 3.

Wherever we find envyings among the people of God we will find strife and contention, for such are the natural expressions of envy. The divine rebuke and chastisement follow in the stead of blessing and favor.

We draw two pictures by way of contrast. First, watch the course of envy. The story of Saul and his conduct toward David is one of the blackest pictures in Holy Writ:

And David went out whithersoever Saul sent him, and behaved himself wisely: and Saul set him over the men of war, and he was accepted in the sight of all the people, and also in the sight of Saul's servants. And it came to pass as they came, when David was returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, that the women came out of all cities of Israel, singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music. And the women answered one another as they played, and said, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands. And Saul was very wroth, and the saying displeased him; and he said, They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands: and what can he have more but the kingdom? And Saul eyed David from that day and forward. And it came to pass on the morrow, that the evil spirit from [which was not of God. I. T.] God came upon Saul, and he prophesied in the midst of the house: and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand. And Saul cast the javelin, for he said, I will smite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his presence twice.—1 Samuel 18: 5-12.

Notice the sequence. David did only that which Saul commanded him to do, and he did it wisely and well. Saul should have loved him therefor. But as the triumphal host of the Israelites was entering the city Saul noted that he was not receiving all of the popular acclaim. Some were praising David. David's name was on the lips of the singing women.

He received only his due; but Saul was not so great in soul as his high position required that he should be, and instantly he took note and "eyed David from that day and forward."

And the next day the evil spirit came upon him.

And then he sought to kill David.

Unrestrained envy leads straight to murder, either actual or in the heart, and God draws no line between the two. "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer." "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death."

We turn now to a brighter picture, that of John the Baptist and his attitude toward Christ. John had gained a wonderful following in Jerusalem and Judea and in the regions round about Jordan. He was hailed as a prophet and many were even ready to receive him as the Messiah. He had but to say the word. By comparison Jesus had been for a time almost unknown. Yet John faced a certain fact, faced it and stated it without reservation, "He must increase, but I must decrease."

After these things came Jesus and his disciples into the land of Judea; and there he tarried with them, and baptized. And John also was baptizing in Ænon near to Salim, because there was much water there: and they came, and were baptized. For John was not yet cast into prison. Then there arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. And they came unto John, and said unto him, Rabbi, he that was with thee beyond Jordan, to whom thou bearest witness, behold, the same baptizeth, and all men come to him. John answered and said, A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven. Ye yourselves bear me witness, that I said, I am not the Christ, but that I am sent before him. He that hath the bride is the bridegroom: but the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled. He must increase but I must decrease.—John 3: 22-36.

Think of that. Here is one of the hardest sentences to utter that the mind of man ever framed. Many the lips that have been twisted and distorted in a vain attempt to utter it. "He must increase, but I must decrease."

John was a true man, a man of God with an inspired and high courage, and he declared a true philosophy, "A man can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." So without a spark of jealousy he saw the sun set on his own career and rise on that of another the latchet of whose shoes he felt unworthy to touch.

John won a true victory, the greatest victory, the victory over self, and as a result he could say, "But the friend of the bridegroom, which standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice: this my joy therefore is fulfilled."

John did not envy Christ, because he felt that in the gospel work a man "can receive nothing, except it be given him from heaven." If God commands me to stand here and my brother to stand yonder what is that to me? It is his work and he is all wise. Or why should I envy another the abilities that God has given him; by them is our work magnified and honor and good repute are increased to us all as one body.

John did not envy Christ, because he loved him.

Paul made no mistake when he said, "Charity [the pure love of God] envieth not."

If we have more love we shall have less envy, and consequently more fellowship, unity, and power. Let us avoid the mistakes of the past, learning to respect and sustain each man in his office and calling, in true humility preferring our brethren to ourselves.

GRACELAND COLLEGE FACULTY.

At the monthly meeting, for June, of the Board of Trustees of Graceland College, the following important additions were made to the faculty:

The position as instructor in psychology, education, English, and history was filled by the election of Miss Rogers, a young woman from the University of Missouri. This lady has had nine years' experience in teaching and holds the degrees of Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science. She will also fill the position of dean of Patroness Hall, the girl's dormitory.

Miss Edith Burlingim, of Lincoln, Nebraska, was elected to fill the vacancy in the piano department. Miss Burlingim is a graduate and post-graduate from the University School of Music of Lincoln, and also a post-graduate from the Chicago Musical College. She has had three years of experience in teaching, two of which were in the University School of Music. She comes highly recommended as a teacher and we feel confident that the high standard of the piano department will be maintained.

The position as instructor in the voice department was filled by the election of Miss Lola Buckingham, a graduate of the music department of the University of Chicago, and for the past six years a pupil of Frederick Bruegger, a leading instructor of voice culture of Chicago. Her education is of a very broad character, but her specialty is voice building and musical interpretation. Her recommendations are of a very high order and we look for a most successful year in the voice department under Miss Buckingham's administration.

The outlook for a successful year's work is very encouraging and we feel confident that the high order of work hitherto given at Graceland will be maintained and in some departments considerable development will be had.

"SAINTS' HERALD" HISTORICAL SERIES.

IMPORTANT EVENTS IN THE GREAT LATTER-DAY WORK.

Beginning with the first issue in August the SAINTS' HERALD will publish an important series of articles. If you are not a subscriber to the HERALD you must get in now in time to get the benefit of this series. We give below a list of subjects and authors.

1. "Parentage and birth of Joseph Smith," by Vida E. Smith.

2. "Joseph Smith's first vision," by Elder T. W. Williams.

3. "The visions of September, 1823; first view of the plates," by Sr. M. Walker.

4. "Obtaining the plates; work of translation; publication of the Book of Mormon," by Walter W. Smith.

5. "The three witnesses; an examination of their testimony," by S. A. Burgess.

6. "Organization of the church; restoration of the priesthood," by Anna Salyards.

7. "The church in Ohio," by Richard Bullard.

8. "The church in Missouri," by Frederick M. Smith.

9. "The church in Nauvoo," by U. W. Greene.

10. "The tragedy at Carthage," by W. E. LaRue.

It will be noticed that each one of these articles deals with a subject that in itself is of striking interest. Each subject is handled by a competent writer. The articles are illustrated with suitable half-tones and etchings.

In addition to the mere statement of historical fact the reader gets the benefit of a philosophical discussion of its meaning by a student of personality and mature thought.

The entire series covers the history of the church quite comprehensively up to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. A second series of articles to appear at a later date will take up the history of the Reorganization, and events between the years 1844 and 1851.

The editors feel that they are prepared to offer the Saints something of unusual interest in this series and ask your coöperation in the way of securing new subscribers so that we may reach a larger audience with these facts regarding the latter-day work.

LAMONI ITEMS.

This section is suffering because of so much rain. There have been only about ten days in the last month when crops could be tended. Hundreds of acres of corn have been drowned out or so much retarded that they can not be redeemed from the weeds. Heavy rains on Sunday and Monday (4th and 5th) have flooded rivers and creeks, washed out culverts and bridges, and caused some damage to railroads.

A heavy shower Sunday forenoon reduced the attendance at Sunday-school and church to a point where both services were almost abandoned.

Elder John Garver, of the stake presidency, was the morning speaker, and Elder John Smith, stake president, occupied in the evening.

On next Sunday the stake bishopric will occupy both morning and evening.

The sacrament-service in the afternoon was well attended and was a very successful meeting, a spiritual time being enjoyed by all.

"My Father's at the Helm."

An incident in my life in the year 1862.

"My Father's at the helm!" These words burst from my lips
As the deep thunders roll'd, and vivid lightnings flash'd,
And the wild tempest rag'd and hurl'd its piercing blasts
Against our humble cot, and my sweet wife and children lay
Cover'd, to avoid the lightnings blinding flame.
And my poor heart sent up to heaven its earnest prayer
That they might be preserved; for self I had no fear;
But they were dearer far to me than life; they were my all
On earth. For God and them I had tried to live and in His service I had spent my strength, my talent, and my life,
Since he had shown me duty's path, and led me in the same;
And now I felt I had a claim upon his tender loving care.

My Father heard, acknowledged me as his humble child—
Open'd my eyes, and then I saw in the lurid heavens
The grandest, noblest form, too glorious for the human heart
To conceive; cloth'd in matchless majesty, and dignity divine,
With outstretched hand, and dexter finger with unerring aim—
Pointing the way the burning arrows must take their flight.
And then my heart felt ease and calm, that comes alone to those

Who put their trust in God, and humbly seek his care divine,
And then these words burst from my lips, as if impelled by Him:

"All is right, My Father's at the helm," and then I knew
My lov'd ones were the subjects of his gracious love and care.
I was content to know that God was to his promise true,
And all was well; help me, my God, to trust thee to the end,
That I and mine may in thy presence dwell for evermore.

CHARLES DERRY.

The Watered Lilies.

The Master stood in his garden
Among the lilies fair,
Which his own right hand had planted
And trained with tenderest care.

He looked at their snowy blossoms,
And marked with observant eye
That his flowers were sadly drooping,
For their leaves were parched and dry.

"My lilies need to be watered,"
The heavenly Master said.
"Wherein shall I draw it for them,
And raise each drooping head?"

Close to his feet on the pathway,
Empty and frail and small,
An earthen vessel was lying,
Which seemed of no use at all.

But the Master saw and raised it
From the dust in which it lay,
And smiled as he gently whispered,
"This shall do my work to-day.

"It is but an earthen vessel,
But it lay so close to me.
It is small, but it is empty,
Which is all it needs to be."

So to the fountain he took it,
And filled it to the brim,
How glad was the earthen vessel
To be of some use to him!

He poured forth the living water
Over the lilies fair,
Until the vessel was empty,
And again He filled it there.

He watered the drooping lilies
Until they revived again,
And the Master saw with pleasure
That his labor had not been vain.

His own hand had drawn the water
That refreshed the thirsty flowers,
But he used the earthen vessel
To carry the living showers.

And to itself it whispered
As he laid it aside once more,
"Still will I lie in his pathway
Just where I did before.

"Close would I keep to the Master,
Empty would I remain,
And perhaps some day he may use me
To water his flowers again."

The Echo.

Selected by Sr. Harriet C. Sedaris; Author unknown.

True faith produces love to God and man,
Say echo, is not this in the gospel plan?
Answer: The gospel plan.

Must I my faith and love to Jesus show,
By doing good to all, both friend and foe?
Answer: Both friend and foe.

But if my brother hates and treats me ill,
Must I return him good and love him still?
Answer: And love him still.

If he my failings watch to reveal,
Must I his faults as carefully conceal?
Answer: As carefully conceal.

But if my name and character he blast,
And cruel malice to a long time last,
And if I sorrow and affliction know,
And he loves to add unto my cup of woe,
In this uncommon, this particular case,
Sweet echo say must I still love and bless?
Answer: Still love and bless.

Whatever usage ill I may receive,
Must I be patient still and still forgive?
Answer: Be patient still and still forgive.

Why echo how is this, art thou a dove?
Thy voice doth teach me nothing else but love.
Answer: Nothing else but love.

Amen with all my heart, then be it so,
'Tis all delightful just and good I know,
And to practice I'll directly go.
Answer: Directly go.

Things being so, whoever me reject,
My gracious God, me surely will protect.
Answer: Surely will protect.

DEFENSE OF THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS AND REPLY TO JOSEPH F. SMITH, JR.—PART II.

BY ALVIN KNISLEY.

FAILS TO PROVE TEMPLE COMPLETION.

Mr. Smith's effort on the next two or three pages is to prove that the temple was completed. To that end he makes a quotation from the Times and Seasons, vol. 5, p. 1017, (October, 1845,) which admits that it had at that time "temporary floors, pulpits, and seats." Not completed yet.

His next quotation is from the next page (ibid.) to the effect that certain parts of the temple "will be in readiness in a few days." Not completed yet.

On page 25 he quotes from the same publication for January 20, 1846, which quotation, again, makes the confession that it was then "an excellent time to finish the temple." Yes, but not finished yet.

Further on he continues his quotation which still allows that, "If the Lord continues to favor us, the first story above the basement will be completed" in February (1846). Not completed yet. We anxiously await the past tense. The same quotation says, the font "is about ready."

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Elder John Taylor, in an address to the Saints in England, published in the Millennial Star of November, 1846, (8: 97,) has this to say: "Time alone can unfold this to many, but to us it has been manifested long ago, years before the temple was completed, and long before the martyrdom of our Prophet and Patriarch." Here he declares that the temple was completed. [Italics mine.—A. K.]

Response.—Yes, but he does not say what temple, whether the Kirtland Temple or the one at Nauvoo, and if there is anything in the connection (of the quotation) to indicate, it is in favor of the former. The Kirtland Temple was completed in 1836. John Taylor had been made an apostle in 1835. Relatively, he would not say long ago, years before—something which had happened but a few weeks earlier—in describing something so remote. But I care little which temple he referred to, for at this time John Taylor was not an authority in the case. He was not a competent witness, nor is the Millennial Star of that date. A charge is laid against him for something done in 1845 and he must be exonerated before we can be consistently asked to accept his testimony in 1846. He was practically a member of the same church as Joseph F. Smith to-day, who might be called on with equal propriety to testify to the same thing.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—But what does his [President of Reorganized Church] testimony amount to as evidence when confronted with the statement of the Times and Seasons?

Response.—The statement of the Times and Seasons at that time was the statement of the leaders of what is now the Utah church. The Times and Sea- sons was no more federal; it was factional, partisan.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Simply nothing, more than to prove that he knew nothing about it at all.

Response.—The president of the Reorganized Church was fourteen years old in 1846 and capable of taking cognizance of the facts of which he testified. In 1848, before the temple was burned, he was about sixteen years of age and was still more capable of correct observation.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Now which shall we believe?

Response.—We believe Joseph Smith, whose life is a refutation of any reflection on his veracity. Others believe John Taylor, who denied polygamy in France when he was practicing it in Utah.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The Times and Seasons published at the time, or the president of the "Reorganization," who made his statement some forty years later?

Response.—The statement of "some forty years later"—which has been the testimony of his lifetime—was of that which he saw in person when his competency to witness was beyond question. It takes but eyes to see, language to describe.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Remember if he admits that the temple was finished his whole structure crumbles to the ground—it's bound to crumble anyway sooner or later, for it is built upon the sand.

Response.—Whole structure crumbles. Not by any means. The history of the Utah church as told by themselves has relieved us of a dependence on the temple, for the conviction of Joseph F. Smith, Jr. Does he mean to tell us that if the temple was completed, then polygamy is right, blood-atonement is a true doctrine, the Adam-God theory is true, and that the Twelve did right in assuming the presidency, and that Brigham did right in assuming the presidential chair—which was already occupied by the Twelve?

Bound to crumble. That is prophetic; we will wait.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Now our friends quote from the remarks of President Brigham Young delivered at the dedication of the St. George Temple to the effect that up to that time the Saints had never had the privilege of completing and enjoying a temple.

Response.—We plead guilty. I can see a susceptibility of his language being construed to mean, that while a temple had been completed, it had not been both completed and enjoyed. I notice Mr. Smith takes advantage of this susceptibility and credits him with correctness in his remark, which of itself is of some importance in this controversy—that the Nauvoo Temple, though completed, had not served the purpose of its completion. And then he quotes from the News where Brigham Young said in 1863: "We performed the work and performed it within the time which the Lord gave us to do it." Very well. The former remark of Brigham Young was made at one of the several dedications of the different portions of the St. George Temple, all of which occurred in 1877, the year he died. In the dedicatory service of January 1, he said:

It is true we left brethren there with instructions to finish it, and they got it nearly completed before it was burned; but the Saints did not enjoy it.—Journal of Discourses, 18: 304.

If his statement that it was not completed and enjoyed is to be explained in conformity with this, we are to understand that he meant that it had neither been completed nor enjoyed. His statement in the News either contradicts the third quotation or else it is to be understood when he said, "We performed it within the time," that he had reference to the kind of completion that had been wrought on the St. George Temple when in connection with the third quotation he said, "there is enough completed to commence work therein"—which was no completion at all.

CONTRADICTS HIMSELF.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The Nauvoo Temple was publicly dedicated May 1, 1846. . . . It is not reasonable to suppose that this building was dedicated until it was finished, for each part had been dedicated as it was finished, and the dedication on the 1st of May, 1846, was of the entire structure.

Response.—On page 23 he quotes from Sidney Rigdon, "In the Messenger and Advocate for June, 1846"; and on next page (24) he says: "At that time (June, 1846) the temple was not quite finished." On page 24, not finished in June, and on page 27, finished on May 1! On which page is he correct? He can not extricate himself by saying that the dedication on May 1 was of some part of the building, because he concedes that it is "not reasonable to suppose that this building was dedicated until it was finished," and "that the dedication on the 1st of May, 1846, was of the entire structure."

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—I have now shown that the temple was completed, that the Saints were diligent in their labors, and they were hindered by their enemies.

Response.—Temple completed. When? May 1? He has shown nothing of the kind. Two witnesses: John Taylor and Brigham Young; the latter their president when he testified; the former their apostle when he testified, who afterwards became their president. The latter denying on another occasion that the temple was completed; and the statements quoted from the two of them for proof are both questionable and ambiguous as to their meaning. But what is the use of multiplying pages on this when a number of their own leaders have put themselves on record, very explicitly in some cases, as conceding all that we claim? See Journal of Discourses 4: 42; 14: 124; 19: 220, which extracts I will not reproduce as they will be in a forthcoming work.

Hindered by their enemies. We must remind him that if they kept the commandments of the Lord they were not to be hindered by their enemies, at least they were not to be driven from Nauvoo. The Lord said in section 107 (Utah edition, 124): "Let no man go from this place who has come here essaying to keep my commandments"; and, as we have already quoted, "If my people will hearken to my voice, they shall not be moved out of their place." In the same connection the Lord said: "If you build a temple unto my name, and do not do the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promises which you expect at my hands." In other words: I will not accept from corrupt hands a temple of the offerings therein, even though built in due time. The "promises" that he would not fulfill are those contained in preceding sentences: first, that he would accept of baptisms for the dead and washings done in a house duly constructed; second, that he would reveal many things to them in that house; third, and finally, that if they hearkened to his voice they should not be moved out of their place. Is it not very evident, now, that when they were removed from Nauvoo the promise of the Lord to prevent their removal was not kept? It follows also that the reason that promise was not kept was because they did "not do the things" that he said. And it follows most logically that that which they did by which they forfeited their title to remain at Nauvoo, forfeited also their title to the fulfillment of the preceding promises—to accept of their temple service. This conclusion follows as literally as night follows day. There is no escape. I maintain, therefore, that in view of certain special features of said revelation their expulsion from Nauvoo could only be upon the penalty of rejection—rejection precedent, pursuant, or upon.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Some of the embellishments, the ornamentations and fixtures, may not have been placed in the building according to the original intention, and in that technical sense, the building may not have been "finished completely."

Response.—An unfortunate admission. We wondered if he would commit himself before he got through.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—But if so, what difference would it make?

Response.—Just that much difference, that inasmuch as the "original intention" was the divine intention, then it was not acceptably complete until all those embellishments, ornamentations, and fixtures—call them technical or what you may—were a part of the structure. The Lord said: "I will show unto my servant Joseph all things pertaining to this house, and the priesthood thereof; and the place whereon it shall be built."

CONTRACTOR AND EMPLOYER.

To the point: a man hires a contractor to build him a house, to whom he makes known the particulars, "all things," as to the location, its general dimensions, and its interior. In three months' time the contractor presents his employer with the key, demanding his pay. The employer goes to the house, and seeing no flaw, no fault with its outward appearance, in height, length, breadth, etc., it perfectly fulfills the design. But when he has unlocked the door and enters to ascertain as to the interior, he finds doors without knobs or locks, now and then a cotton factory partition (as was the case in the temple), the wall not all plastered, the stair lacking its railing, the floor laid with different lumber from what the contract called for! How would he be moved at these deficiencies? Would the contractor get his pay? Would the employer accept of this edifice? If not, why? For the simple reason that the parts omitted were in the "original intention," the contract.

It is conceivable how the contractor might go to work and build a house for the employer gratis, who receives it as a gift out and out. In such a case he could not complain whether it came up to his ideal or not. On similar conditions God's people sometimes build houses to him which he with much delight and commendation accepts from the donors; the place, size and plan, materials, etc., having been at their option. But God's houses are not all builded on that system. He does not accept of all his houses after that manner. He once in a while has one that is built by command, by contract. His church is the contractor; he is the employer. Such buildings are called temples. It is a special building and he promises special rewards to his people for its erection. But, unlike those buildings which are built at their own choice and option,—of which they are the designers, of those which are built by contract between him and them, he is the designer. Those constructed by them after their designs are mostly for them to dwell in; those constructed by them for him by contract, after his design, are more particularly for him to dwell in. He has the unquestionable and infinite right to say where he shall dwell, and when his people are worthy of his dwelling with them. Moreover, he has the supreme right to dictate what kind of a house he will dwell in. Any effort on the part of his people to erect such an edifice for such a special purpose without his immediate and specific direction as to all its details, is bold and wicked presumption; yea, sacrilege. And any attempt on their part to insinuate on him the acceptance of such a building which they know, and which they know he knows, is lacking in some or any essentials of the contract—and anything mentioned is essential—is equally presumptuous and sacrilegious. It matters not how minute or how unimportant from the standpoint of his contracting people the nature of that is which they have left out; inasmuch as it is a part of the model he gave, the building is not complete without it; without it the contract is not complied with. And this species of wickedness is the very thing Joseph F. Smith, Jr's, religious ancestors were guilty of in Nauvoo.

It is conceivable how the people of Canada or South Africa might go to work and build in their country a house to be presented to King Edward VII for him to reside in, without his advice or consultation, but in doing so they would only be displaying their folly and nonsense. They may construct houses for themselves in which to keep the laws that emanate from him; they may construct houses for the execution of those laws; or they may construct houses in which he may dwell by representation, in which his authority may dwell; but if a house is to be constructed in which King Edward himself is to dwell, he will have something to say as to its manner of construction and its location.

If a contractor for some cause beyond his power to avert, has been unable to complete the house of his employer beyond the stages that we previously mentioned, it may be that his employer, in his consciousness of said circumstances, would have the leniency to pay him for what he had done. But it is not to be supposed that he would accept the house in such an unfinished condition as answerable to the contract, or that he would compensate his contractor in full on account of these deficiencies, for that which he had not done. But if the employer knew that it was the contractor's own fault that the house was not finished, he might both refuse to accept the house and refuse to pay him anything.

If the employer and contractor have agreed upon a set time at the expiration of which the job is to be completed, and if that time arrives and the job is not completed for the reason, directly, that the contractor has been hindered by causes over which he has no direct control or power to repel, and yet the employer knows that those causes are founded on other ulterior causes behind and back of them, which originated with the contractor, which were attributable to him—then in such a case the employer might, again, justly refuse the work of his contractor.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The Lord, thank heaven, is not as technical and peevish as men are, or woe be unto all of us.

Response.—We must not count too much on the Lord's leniency. Duty is ours; leniency is his. I grant that without a great deal of his leniency, woe would be unto the Utah organization.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The revelation does not say that the church would be rejected with its dead if every identical board and plank or fixture was not in the building according to the original design.

Response.—The revelation does say that the church would be rejected if they did not build a house in sufficient time, in which baptism for the dead could be attended to. Without every board and plank or fixture that formed a part of the "original design" the house was not built. Of course, if the Nauvoo Temple had been completed and remained, it is not inconceivable how they might have been decorating it, putting pictures on the wall, etc., even up to this time; but that is not what we are discussing. I never was in Kirtland Temple. I have heard that there is a picture of Joseph the Martyr on the wall there. But I have never thought that it formed a part of the temple; that the completeness of the temple was increased with it, or diminished without it. I never understood that it formed a part of the "original design."

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—The thing the revelation does require is that a place be prepared, or built, where the Lord could reveal the priesthood and its ordinances that had been taken away or that had not been restored.

Response.—Will Mr. Smith please point to such revelations of the priesthood and its ordinances that were revealed in the temple?

OFFERING AND THE THING OFFERED.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—And, too, if the temporary floors had not been replaced by the permanent floors, the Lord could and would have revealed himself to the Saints and would have accepted of their offering.

Response.—He revealed himself to them before they had a temple. He would not reveal himself to them by virtue of a temple that had not been built (and built means completion); neither would he have accepted an offering that had not been made. So far as the thing offered is concerned, he could not accept it for what it was not. Mr. Smith hitherto quoted from the section under consideration where the Lord says, "I accepted the offerings of those whom I commanded to build up a city and a house unto my name, in Jackson County, Missouri, and were hindered by their enemies." Yes, but he did not accept the house, which had not been built, neither a city, the building of which had not been consummated. Accepting their offering in this case, then, was but accepting a condition that obtained on the part of his people. It was but an acceptance of their effort which was unsuccessful in accomplishing that to which it was put forth. Mr. Smith's mistake is in using offering in the same sense relative to the carrying out of that which was ordained in the revelation of January, 1841, ordaining that a temple be built in Nauvoo, etc. The nature of this revelation is such as to preclude the acceptance of any offering save the realization of effort, energy, endeavor, in a completed temple presented by pure hands. The status of affairs had become such, had become so strained, that the only offering he would accept would be, not endeavor, but the object of endeavor; in accepting which object, of course, he would at the same time be accepting the effort, energy, endeavor, put forth to that end.

IN THE TEMPLE.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—At the time this revelation [of 1841] was given the Saints were baptizing in the Mississippi River for their dead, this was a special privilege that the Lord granted them in their poverty and while they could prepare a place in the temple for that ordinance.

Response.—In order that the statement be not misleading, instead of saying, "prepare a place in the temple," he should say, prepare the temple.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—He declares that while that place was being built He would accept their baptisms in the river, but just as soon as a place could be prepared in the temple baptisms for the dead in the river should cease.

Response.—Again he misrepresents the revelation, which seems strange, with the document right before him. The strangeness of his procedure, however, is somewhat diminished when we come to consider his failure to prove that the temple was completed. A completed temple and a completed thing in an incompleting temple are two distinct things. What does the revelation say: "But I command you, all ye my Saints, to build a house [not a font, but a house, a temple] unto me; and I grant unto you a sufficient time to build a house [temple] unto me, and during this time [of its building] your baptisms [without it, in the river, in a pool, pond, or temporary font] shall be acceptable unto me. But behold, at the end of this appointment [the time allowed to build the house], your baptisms for your dead [without the house] shall not be acceptable unto me; for if you do not these things [build the house] at the end of the appointment [time allowed], ye shall be rejected as a church [cease to be acceptable as a church, not as individuals], with your dead, saith the Lord your God. For verily I say unto you, that after you have had a sufficient time to build [complete, of course] a house to me, wherein [in the house] the ordinance of baptizing for the dead belongeth, and for which [temples] the same [ordinance] was instituted from before the foundation of the world, your baptisms for your dead [without such a house] can not be acceptable unto me." The brackets are mine. A font may exist without a temple, but a temple, such as the revelation calls for, could not exist without a font. But as our opponent says more further on, akin to this, we will proceed to follow him. Suffice to say, however, that the repeated phrase, "in the temple," is not borne out in the quotation.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—I take it that this means that the Lord would accept of their baptisms in the river until they could prepare a place where the ordinance could be attended to properly, and that he would not discontinue river baptisms until they had had sufficient time to build such a place.

Response.—If by "such a place," he means a temporary or an improvised font, irrespective of the structure inclosing it, why then there was no excuse for them not to have in readiness such a place in one or two days' time, from the time that provisions were made for such a place in the revelation.

PRESIDENT OF THE REORGANIZATION.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—I want to read what the President of the "Reorganized" Church has to say on this point. Said he: "Baptisms for the dead was a permissive rite." Of course I do not agree with him that it was a permissive rite.

Response.—But has he not virtually agreed with him when he said, as we have quoted, that it was "a special privilege that the Lord granted them in their poverty"?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—But to continue the quotation: "Baptism for the dead was a permissive rite; or to write more plainly (?) the church was permitted by the Lord to baptize for the dead under certain rules." Here is the rule: "By the terms stated in the revelation this permissive rite could be performed and would be acceptable if performed in the river while the time given the church in which the temple should be built was passing. After the completion of the temple, baptisms for the dead were to be performed in it."—SAINTS' HERALD, February 17, 1904.

Response.—His quoting from the President of the Reorganization is fatal to the point he hoped to gain by the quotation, which was evidently to make it appear to his readers that the President of the Reorganized Church, by referring to baptism for the dead as a "permissive rite," does not view it at any time as mandatory, as obligatory. But the President of the Reorganized Church says nothing of the kind. Indeed he refers to baptism for the dead as a permissive rite, but he very carefully rescues himself from any unintended distortion of his statement, by defining in the same sentence the respect in which its permissiveness consisted. He says the church was permitted [without a temple] to baptize for the dead [in the river] under certain rules. He next explains that the rules ["terms stated in the revelation"] were, that the church might baptize for the dead in the river while the time the Lord allowed for building the temple was passing. He does not say that baptism for the dead is a permissive rite, but, "was a permissive rite." It is evident from the language of the President of the Reorganized Church that he believes that previous to the building of the temple, they were permitted to baptize for the dead; that after the building of the temple they would be obliged to baptize for the dead; in the first instance in the river or some suitable place; in the second instance, of necessity in the temple. He does not say, was to be performed in the river, but, "could be performed in the river"; and he does not say that "after the completion of the temple, baptisms for the dead were" permitted to be, or could be, performed in it, but "were to be performed in it." Will Mr. Smith please retract?

DISCONTINUANCE OF RIVER BAPTISMS.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr., (p. 30).—We are certainly safe in saying that the Lord would not break his promise, therefore if we can discover a time when baptisms were discontinued in the river it will be a sign that the sufficient time had expired, so far as baptisms for the dead were concerned.

Response.—Not necessarily. As we have hitherto observed, the revelation did not confine vicarious baptisms to the river in the absence of the temple. If not, their transference to another place, a font in an ordinary chapel, a pond, or a temporary font in an incompleting temple, would not be significant of any such consequences. However, if it can be proved that the discontinuance of river baptisms was by command of the Lord, it is probable that it was because the sufficient time (to build the temple) had expired.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—I turn to the minutes of the October conference, 1841, and read from the remarks on baptism for the dead delivered by the Prophet on the third day as follows: "There shall be no more baptisms for the dead until the ordinance can be attended to in the font of the Lord's house; and the church shall not hold another general conference, until they can meet in said house. For thus saith the Lord." (Times and Seasons, 2: 578.) Was the temple finished? No. Was the church then rejected with its dead?

Response.—If the Lord declared that baptisms without the temple were no longer acceptable to him, in the light of the revelation they must have been rejected.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Verily no! for this was in 1841, and I have already referred you to the editorial of the Prophet's of May, 1842, wherein he says that never since the formation, or foundation of the church was laid, have the Saints been so willing to comply with the requisitions of Jehovah, and manifested a more ardent desire to do the will of God, than in the building of that temple.

Response.—But the willingness of the Saints, to which the Prophet certifies in May, 1842, was about six months after the period when the Lord ordered the discontinuance of vicarious baptisms; and if they were rejected at that time their willingness six months later would not prove that they had not been rejected.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Therefore they could not have been rejected.

Response.—Could not have been rejected in 1841 because they were said to be willing to do their duty in 1842! Their guiltlessness in 1842 would no more prove their innocence in 1841 than my guiltlessness to-day would prove that I had not sinned yesterday.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Yet the sufficient time was up.

Response.—Quite an admission—that the "sufficient time" of the revelation of January, 1841, was up in October following. If the sufficient time was up in October, 1841, then in October, 1841, the church stood rejected. Bear in mind that I am not here taking the position that the church was or was not rejected at that time, or that the sufficient time was then up. I am merely following him, contenting myself for the time being with exploding his deductions without respect to the correctness or incorrectness of the premises.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—What must we then conclude? That the temple had progressed so far that baptisms could be performed in it for the dead in accordance with the revelation, and it did not depend altogether, you will see, on the complete finishing of the building.

Response.—He proposes two positions, and then consulting conveniences instead of logic, makes his choice. The two positions or propositions are: either that the church was rejected in 1841, or else that the temple was advanced sufficiently at that time that baptisms for the dead would be acceptable in it. He takes the latter. And why? Because that on the following year, 1842, the Saints were said to be willing to do their duty! But if their willingness in May, 1842, would exonerate them in 1841, then their unwillingness in September, 1842, would convict them in May. And we have shown that they were lacking diligence in September.

Again: Section 128 (110 in our book) provides for a book containing the records of the dead to be kept, which was to be presented "in his holy temple, when it is finished."

He says that a temporary font was built, "that answered the requirements of the revelation" (but which the revelation says nothing about) and that it "was used by command of the Lord." Yet he has neither cited the "command," nor given any reference to where the document might be found, one the importance of which is equal to any and superior to most of the quotations he has made in his brochure. After taking the pains to quote where the Lord discontinued river baptisms, why not quote where he commanded their resumption in the unfinished temple, if such a document is available. And if not available, if no such document exists, he has no right to assume that baptisms in a temporary font were commanded simply because they were performed. We notice that the revelation wherein vicarious baptisms are discontinued, commands that they should not be resumed "until" they could be attended to in the font of the Lord's house. From the fact that he says until, it is evident that there was no font at that time, or that things were not in a condition to proceed with that work in the temple which, it seems, ceased to be acceptable to him outside the temple. If a place existed where vicarious baptisms could be performed acceptably to him, he would not declare the baptisms then in progress were to cease until such a place be prepared; inasmuch as he would not say, "until the ordinance can be attended to," in a place which was then awaiting its attendance. We see, therefore, that if there was a temporary font at that time it was not acceptable; that the Lord ignores it and awaits a proper place. If there was no temporary font, no place in readiness even from Mr. Smith's standpoint, when the revelation was given, then there must have been a lapse of some time, however great or small, before such a place was prepared. Yet, according to his own admission, the sufficient time was up then. He will recall that if there was not a suitable place to which they could repair with the baptisms when the sufficient time was up, the consequence was to be rejection. When the sufficient time was up, it was to be either of two things: baptizing for the dead in the temple, or rejection.

But he says they resumed the baptisms in the following November, in the font. But are we to understand that the condition of things in November would palliate the condition of things in October preceding? No, verily; for the church was not to be saved from rejection on a prospective font or a prospective temple. According to the revelation the ordinance outside the temple was to be acceptable right up to the time that a proper place was prepared, if prepared within the time limit.

In the revelation he quotes from the Times and Seasons it says that the ordinance was to be "attended to in the font of the Lord's house." At that time both the font and the Lord's house were but in prospect. Neither had an existence in the following November save that there was a temporary font. Would that answer? The font was to be in the Lord's house. He had no house in November. The walls were far from completion, let alone the interior.

Furthermore, it says the church was not to hold another general conference until they could meet in said house. Was this general conference to meet in said house before it was finished? No. Hyrum Smith said (Times and Seasons, November 1, 1841): "there shall not be a General Assembly for a general conference assembled together until the house of the Lord shall be finished, and the baptismal font," "thus saith the Lord." Was this complied with? Decidedly not, for before he even claims the house was finished, after the deaths of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, they held a general conference therein in April, 1845. See Times and Seasons, volume 6. Interpreting Hyrum Smith's revelation harmoniously with Joseph's, it is to be understood that when Joseph said that another general conference was not to meet until they could meet in the Lord's house, he meant in the Lord's house in its completed condition. If they could file in the temple with an assembly before the arrival of the condition to render it permissible, does it not greatly throw into suspicion their action in carrying the baptisms into a temporary font in an unfinished temple?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—"But behold, at the end of this appointment, your baptisms for your dead shall not be acceptable unto me." That means, of course, the baptisms in the river shall not be acceptable after the font is built.

Response.—Yes, after the font is built in a built (finished) temple.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—“And if you do not these things at the end of the appointment ye shall be rejected as a church, with your dead, saith the Lord your God.” If you do not what things?

Response.—Build the temple, probably.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—Does it mean if you do not build the temple at the end of the appointment?

Response.—Probably.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—That could not be the meaning.

Response.—Why?

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—It means, if you do not perform your baptisms for your dead and the ordinances for the dead at the end—not the beginning, but the end—of the appointment, you will be rejected with your dead.

Response.—If it be arbitrary in any degree as to whether the antecedent of “these things” is “baptisms,” or, “build a house,” it is altogether unimportant, as the baptisms were to be done in the house after it was built. For, if, as he insists “these things” denotes the baptisms in the temple, preferably to the building of the temple, since the “end of the appointment” (at which “these things” were to be done) refers to the end of the time appointed or granted to build the temple, his suggested interpretation, if accepted, helps him none. Here are the two renditions: first, “if you do not these things [baptize for the dead in the temple] at the end of the appointment” [time granted to build the temple]; second, “if you do not these things [build the temple] at the end of the appointment” [time granted to build the temple]. The baptisms had to take place at the end of the time appointed to build the temple.

On page 34 he quotes from our conference minutes of 1836:

“Baptism for the dead” referred to belongs to those local questions of which the body has said by resolution: “that the commandments of a local character, given to the first organization of the church, are binding on the Reorganization only so far as they are reiterated or referred to as binding by commandment to this church.” And that principle has neither been reiterated nor referred to as a commandment.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—They declared that we were rejected because we failed to build a house where these ordinances were to be performed and yet they actually have the audacity so say that the work of salvation for the dead is not binding on them because they have not reiterated or referred to this commandment as binding on them.

Response.—“They have not reiterated.” By they, he denotes the church instead of God. We do not believe, nor does the resolution say, that it is because we have not reiterated or referred to the commandment that it is not binding; but because God has not so reiterated or referred to it. If Mr. Smith is not only argumentatively or deductively wrong, but he is frequently wrong in fact. In making so many outlandish misstatements and errors with the documents right before him, I can not avoid many reflections in my mind on the matter of his sincerity in treating this sacred subject, as I pass along.

Joseph F. Smith, Jr.—They call it a local commandment, yet we have seen that this commandment was the burden of the Scriptures and the greatest responsibility that God has placed upon us and we are obliged to save them if we would ourselves be saved.

Response.—A local commandment. In objecting to our reference to it as a local commandment, we are to understand that he believes that it is a universal, a general, commandment. If it is not a local commandment, then it is not applicable to one place any more than another. So long as there is priesthood to administer it, according to his objection, it is neither a question of when or where. If, unlike baptism for the remission of sins, which may be performed whenever the priesthood is on the earth, or wherever the priesthood is, it has certain limitations as to time and place or either, then it is local; therein the resolution would have its defense. Now are there any such limitations? Indeed there are, for, in the first place, while they were baptizing for the remission of sins from 1829 up to 1841, they did not baptize for the dead till 1841. And whereas they baptized for the remission of sins in various nations and continents in the original church, the only place where they baptized for the dead was in the city of Nauvoo. I do not see how the word local in the resolution could be wanting of more support.

ROOM IN ZION.

“And he measured the city with the reed, 12,000 furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height of it were equal.”—Revelation 21:16. Twelve thousand furlongs are 7,920,000 feet; being cubed are 496,793,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Reserving half of this for the throne of God, and half the balance for streets, leaves a remainder of 124,198,272,000,000,000 cubic feet. Divide this by 4,096 the cubic feet in a room sixteen feet square and there will be 30,321,843,750,000 rooms.

Suppose then there were 207,000,000,000,000 persons to inhabit Zion, which would mean 100,000 centuries. At the earth's rate of population, 990,000,000 inhabitants for every generation, that would last thirty-three and one third years, there would be more than one hundred rooms square per each person.

In Revelation 21:3 we read that the “tabernacle of God is with men and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.” This is certainly evidence that God will dwell here on earth, and that the idea of a heaven beyond the bounds of time and space is out of harmony, likewise the notion of an ever endless burning hell; because he refers to hell as the second death, as a banishment from the sight of God.

Saints can then certainly realize that Zion as the gathering place will be a little larger than some suppose,—a small spot right at Independence, Missouri. I feel that we should strive to build up Zion everywhere, and not constantly press into one small place, where we are likely to become burdensome to ourselves and others, but rather when we are doing well, stay where we are, until God directs us to move. Let us build up pure hearts, (the pure in heart is Zion,) and clean and noble lives, and I am safe in saying God will take care of his own in due time. We should remember we are all called to witness for him, and we need have no fear of gaining too many converts, as there will be room for all.

Of General Interest

To Keep the Peace.

There is a growing sentiment throughout the world in favor of arbitration with its concomitant disarmament. The enthusiastic promoters of the peace movement call for the immediate institution of an international tribunal and the immediate reduction, if not entire abolition, of armaments and military forces. These good people, however, lose sight of the fact that an international tribunal, if its findings are to be of any value, must have behind it some strong physical force wherewith to back up its decisions; put down with a strong hand any opposition thereto, and permanently preserve the world's peace. The mere reduction of naval and military forces until each nation maintains only what is judged to be sufficient for the support of its own government in the administration of its internal affairs, would not meet the case; for the several armies would be relatively as strong as they are in their present overgrown condition. Moreover, should any nation disagree with a decision of the international tribunal, it would be in a position to repudiate the findings of the court; and it is conceivable, nay, even probable, that the parties in dispute would resort to the final arbitrament of war. The possession of their several armies, even in a depleted condition, would breed distrust, and would constitute a standing menace to the peace of the world.

The institution of an international court of arbitration carries with it, then, as an inseparable corollary, the abolition of independent national armies and navies, and the substitution therefor of an international army, subject to the international court of arbitration, and maintained solely for the purpose of enforcing its decrees. It is undeniable that in the recent discussion of disarmament and arbitration, recognition of the necessity for the maintenance of an international force of some such character as this has become increasingly evident. In a discussion of the problem by Arthur H. Dutton, late of the United States navy, in a contemporary journal, the writer outlines the character of the force which would be necessary for this purpose. He proposes that an international army be formed; a "compact, thoroughly trained, well-equipped and mobile force, to the personnel of which each civilized nation would contribute its quota in proportion to the population." It would be the international police force, and would stand in the same relation to the nations of the world that the United States Army does to the States of the American Union. Among the civilized nations to-day there are taken from industrial pursuits, during peace times, no less than 4,250,000 able-bodied men, whose maintenance costs nearly $2,000,000,000 annually. These many millions would be returned to peaceful occupations, and their place would be taken by an international army of arbitration of 500,000 men, costing annually about $150,000,000. To cooperate with this army there would be an international navy, in which there would be no battleships, consisting only of cruisers, gunboats, and transports for the moving of the troops. The international army would be concentrated in three divisions of 100,000 each, one in Europe, one in North America, and one in the Orient, with the remaining 200,000 scattered in smaller detachments. The decree of concentration of the three great armies would be a matter for decision of the strategists. All the permanent fortifications would be abandoned, and the nations, having disbanded their national armies, would depend upon their civil police for the execution of their own local laws. Each nation would agree to maintain no individual military force whatever; and the intelligence bureau of the international army would see that this obligation was fully lived up to. Military training would be restricted to international schools, the manufacture of arms and munitions of war to international factories. Although the time may not be fully ripe for the sweeping change advocated by Lieutenant Dutton, it can not be denied that the alarming growth of the cost of our present methods of maintaining the world's peace, is driving the nations into an impasse, the readiest escape from which would seem to be by the broad and honorable road of disarmament and armed arbitration.—Scientific American.

Mrs. Dawson's Awakening.

BY MON TANA.

Johnny Dawson sat on the lower step of the side porch with his chin propped up by two little brown hands. His eyes were half full of tears, but he fought them back manfully and blinked hard at the toe of his shoes, and every once in a while he gave a little snuffle. There never was a boy so heart-sick and lonely. He had no little brothers and sisters and his mother was very strict about his playing with other children. She wouldn't let him play with the boy who lived next door because he was so "common"—went barefooted and wore overalls, and had a dog which barked and yelped with the mere joy of being alive. Johnny had always wanted a dog, but had never dared ask his mother to let him have one; for he knew she didn't like dogs, and the dogs seemed to know it, too, for one hardly had the boldness to stick his nose inside the Dawson gate. The boy's dog next door was the cutest little shaggy rascal you ever saw—had a little stump tail which he nearly wagged off every time you spoke to him, and his honest brown eyes looked so tenderly into your own you couldn't help loving him. Johnny had made his acquaintance coming home from school and he was thinking of him this very minute, and he had to blink extra hard to make the tears stay back, and swallow two or three times to get the lump out of his throat. He could hear the boy and dog next door laughing and yelping and he knew they were having the best fun, romping all over the yard, something he wasn't allowed to do as his mother didn't want the grass trampled down. There was very little he could do, he thought. He couldn't have boys in the yard to play, as the noise annoyed his mother, and he couldn't play out in the street for fear he would get into bad company. He had a top, but he had to spin it in the driveway, and not on the porch or stone walk; he had marbles, but no boy can have any fun playing marbles alone.

The boy next door climbed up to the top of the stone wall that divided the two yards and looked down at the dejected little figure sitting on the step with a queer little twinkle in his blue eyes. He was bareheaded, barefooted, and had faded blue overalls on, but he was a nice looking boy, and he had a cheerful grin on his freckled face that won your heart immediately.

"Hello," he called, and as Johnny didn't answer he sent a little pebble at the toe of his shoe. "What's your name, and what are you so grumpish about?" he asked as he seated himself comfortably on the wall and let his brown legs dangle over.

"Say, you little boy, why don't you answer me, huh?" he asked again with the grin not so broad. "What's the matter? Did your mamma set you out there to have your picture took? I guess you haven't got any tongue," and another little pebble hit Johnny's toe.

Johnny looked up, but with no welcome light in his eyes. He had always wanted to play with the boy next door, but he didn't like to make his acquaintance this way, for the door was open and he could hear his mother talking to Nora. He was afraid she would come out and scold the boy on the wall and then he knew he would never have the chance of being his friend.

"You better get right down from there for I hear my mamma coming and she will be awfully mad if she catches you up there. She doesn't want me to play with you anyhow," Johnny said with a snuffle.

"Ho, she don't, don't she? Well, I'm not going to hurt her little precious and I will get down when I get ready, and as for you—," but he disappeared over the wall like magic before he finished, for Mrs. Dawson appeared in the doorway just then.

"Johnny, were you talking to some one? I thought I heard loud voices. I am going out to a lecture this afternoon and while I am gone I don't want you to get into anything. Don't go outside the yard, and don't tear your waist or your stockings, and don't get in the sun. I hope you won't get your shoes soiled, and don't get your new cap dirty. I won't be home very early and you can have Nora give you a glass of milk and some crackers. Don't have any children in the yard. You can go in and read 'Pilgrim's Progress' if you get tired of playing."

She was gone. Johnny heaved a sigh of relief and rose to his feet. My, how well he knew all those "don'ts." His mother never left him that she didn't go over the same ones every time, it seemed. He felt the rebellious tears start to his eyes again, but they were tears of an aching little heart and were really to be regarded with pity; for he was longing for a mother's love this time, and his heart yearned to be taken up and held close to a mother's warm cheek. She didn't show much affection for him, although she may have loved him very much, but her time was so taken up writing papers for the Mothers' Meetings, etc., that she had little time to give her only little boy. He watched her out of sight, and then became aware of the grinning face peering over the top of the wall at him.

"Has she gone?" the boy from next door whispered. "And did you get all those don'ts down? My mamma, she says your mamma isn't the right kind. She knows all about the papers she writes for those lecture places, and she says she better stay at home and teach her own boy something instead of running around telling other mothers how to bring their boys up. She says your mamma ought to have somebody tell her her duty is at home. My mamma never leaves us alone, and she says her children are as good as most anybody's and she bets a sight better than some. She said if your mamma let you be like other boys and didn't make you wear curls and didn't make you walk so straight you'd be healthier. I wouldn't wear curls for anything. Boys are like girls when they have 'em and my mamma says if a boy's going to be a boy let him look as much like one as possible. Do you play with dolls?"

The long speech was over and it left him breathless, but it sank deep into Johnny's mind. He had never had any one talk like that to him, and he could hardly believe his ears. That any one should say things about his mother seemed incredulous, and he resented it very much. He looked up at the boy on the wall and said, with his hands clenched tightly at his side, "Don't you tell me anything what your mamma says about my mamma, and don't you dare speak of her so. She has to write things, else people wouldn't know how to bring their children up and she is awful smart. I guess your mamma can't write or she wouldn't say such things. I ain't like no girl, neither," he finished up lamely, for his curls had been the bane of his existence for six years, and he had even asked the Lord in his "Now I lay me" to make his mother cut them off, but his prayers had remained unanswered so far. The boy next door had touched a tender spot and he laughed with glee as Johnny tried to rub the curly hair up under his cap.

"Well, you needn't get mad about your mamma. I guess other people have a right to think what they please, and as for your curls, Willie, I hope you will have beautiful ones time you're a man. You look like a little sissy."

"Don't call me a sissy," Johnny said. "I can't help having the old things. My mamma likes them and she won't cut them off. Wish I could have short hair like yours," and he looked at the boy with such appeal in his eyes the other dropped his bantering tone and said with great condescension:

"Come up here and we'll be friends. I like you if you didn't have curls, but as you don't like them either maybe you can get them cut off. I have got a sister and two brothers and a dog and a whole lots of things. If your mamma would let you play with me I bet we would have a good time. My mamma lets us play anywhere we want to in the yard, and we have got a billy-goat and a wagon, and Jim, that's my oldest brother, he's got a bicycle. Jim broke the window the other day with his ball, but he didn't do it on purpose and my papa didn't scold him either; but Jim he took the money he was saving to buy a new ball and bought a pane of glass. My papa plays ball with us too, sometimes, and my mamma reads stories to us when it rains and we can't play out doors. Does your mamma read to you?"

Johnny shook his head. His mother never had time to read to him, and as for his papa, he was never at home long enough to play ball. He was a minister, and when he was at home he was always writing, too, so paid little attention to his boy, but he loved him and often wished he had more time to notice him.

"I have climbed up here lots of times," the boy said as Johnny clambered up beside him. "I kinder felt lonesome for you but my mamma said to let you alone for your mamma didn't want you to play with us children. We have so much fun together I thought maybe if your mamma only knew us she wouldn't care; but how is she going to know us if she won't let us speak to you? I think we have lots of fun, and my papa says if you don't make friends of your children there is no use in having any. I know where there is a dandy hole in the fence you could come to and we could play through it and then maybe your mamma would let you come over sometime."

"I am afraid she wouldn't," Johnny replied with a sigh, "but I wish I could see your billy-goat."

"Just you come down to the end of your yard and I'll show you the hole and then you can see the billy-goat. I've got a playhouse down in the back lot, and I'll show you lots of my things. I've got Indian things, too, and if you'll play, we can have lots of fun and I'll be a big Indian and scalp you."

Johnny's eyes were round with wonderment and his face was flushed as he listened to it all. He had never played Indian, and to be scalped must be delightful. He squirmed around like a little worm, and as the other boy began climbing down he followed his example and was soon racing towards the stable lot and down to the corner where the hole was. He got there nearly as soon as the other boy and by squeezing tight he managed to crawl through and found himself in a delightful place to play. There was a little tent, and in it was a chair and a box, covered with some kind of bright stuff, and a pillow on it. A little trunk was in one corner and a piece of rag carpet was on the floor. A round table with a pile of picture-books stood in the middle, and a wagon with red wheels was outside by the door. A playhouse had never been Johnny's, and his eyes roamed around taking in everything and dancing with joy. He did love wagons with red wheels, and as he stood by it admiring it he couldn't help wishing he had one like it.
