THE VALUE OF TIME.

We have received a letter of kindly criticism from one whose identity we may not reveal. In part it is as follows:

Dear Brother: I have become puzzled over the following statement as purported to have been made by you in an address given at Graceland College, November 30, 1909; and therefore write hoping to get a more definite understanding of your view of the value of life:

"It is worth fifty dollars a minute of any man's money simply to be young, to be in the dawning of your young manhood and womanhood, full of vigor and life and hope, and with all the great future before you. I am sure that Rockefeller would be willing to pay that much (fifty dollars a minute) if he could be young again, and he would raise the price of oil until he could be young for ever."

I have read the above several times. I have tried to understand it; but though it looks good in print, and probably sounds well in an address, still there constantly comes into my mind the question, Is it true? and if so, In what sense?

Fifty dollars per minute equals $3,000 per hour, or $30,000 for ten hours. Counting ten hours for a working day, and 313 working days in a year, would make time, at this rate worth "of any man's money," $9,390,000 a year.

I am quite sure that you are not counting that a young man or a young woman can turn their time to account and make it bring them a return in dollars that accumulate at this rate, therefore, I am asking for a solution of the problem.

Of course you do not mean that if an aged man was worth $50,000, and if he could purchase time, and be as he was when young, that the time so purchased would be worth $50 dollars per minute to him; for if he should so spend the $50,000 it would purchase for him less than two working days of life.

You can not mean that if a man has come to the last hour of his earthly existence the short space of one hour as he lived when young, would be worth to him $3,000, for I opine that it makes but little difference in what hour we draw our last breath of mortal life.

You say it is worth this amount of any man's money simply to be young, but why? Every life has its periods, and they are ordained in infinite wisdom, and therefore must be what is best.

Do you mean that the young man or woman enjoys more abundant life than the aged? if so, again I ask, Why do you think so? I am on the verge of old age (fifty-nine). I have dreamed dreams and have seen visions, in life, as peradventure all men and women do. I still dream dreams and see visions, and if you were to ask what I would give to be placed back again where I was, and as I was, when young, I should have to answer, I do not care to go back. I prefer to look forward. My faith is that God knows what is best. I have lived my life thus far, and as a pilgrim I have traveled, and as a pilgrim I expect to travel until the King shall say, "Thy journey is ended. The sum of life is sealed. Thou shalt receive the reward that is fitting." With that verdict I hope to be satisfied. I would not, if I could, buy time,—not even that of youth.

The statement referred to was made in an address to young people and was merely intended as a figure of speech or hyperbole calculated to impress the students with the value of life and the opportunities before them in their particular period of life. At first on reading the above mentioned criticism we were inclined to think that we had been guilty of gross exaggeration, as one sometimes is while under the enthusiasm of "speechmaking"; but after sober second thought we are convinced that we were right.

We will suppose that such a thing as we are about to picture were possible: Some one approaches one of those young college students and says, "If you will calculate your time until you are sixty years old I will pay you at the rate of fifty dollars a minute, and I will take your life and youth and you will immediately become an old man." Would the young man make a good bargain to accept the offer? Hardly. The experiences and opportunities of life can not be valued in dollars and cents. The boy suddenly turned old could not buy love, or devotion, or character with his accumulated earning of nine million dollars per year.

That which gives time its value, and more particularly perhaps during the formative period of life is that the moments, the hours, the days, the years, may be exchanged for character; they may be spent in establishing those ties of friendship and love that make the later periods of life pleasant; in securing those stores of intelligence that shall constitute one's glory; in tasting those lawful sweet pleasures that are worth more than all the dividends of Standard Oil from now until the last lamp burns dry.

When the factory system was first introduced in England they herded little children from six to twelve years of age into the factories and compelled them to work thirteen or more hours each day the year around. Even in New England, "the land of the free and the home of the brave," children were driven to work at half past four o'clock in the morning, and with the aid of the cowhide they were kept at the looms for thirteen hours. These children were old and broken down ere they were sixteen years of age. No amount of money could ever repay them for their lost youth. That fact is in no way altered by the further fact that there are individuals who have lived a full, rich, and varied life, and approach old age with serenity, not caring to be young again, even if such a thing were possible.

Our language was qualified, being made to apply to those who are not only young but full of "vigor, life, and hope," with "all the great future before them." That is the normal condition of youth. It may be that there are those who because of evil surroundings, inherited poverty, disease, or sin, lack vigor and hope and have no great future before them and consequently were better dead than alive. Such have been robbed in some way by some one and can have no proper understanding of the value of life.

It is true that no man can sell his time for fifty dollars a minute. But the man who is really living finds that the pay envelope contains only a fraction of his "value received" in exchange for life. What was Jacob's time worth while he watched the angels ascending and descending? What was Mary's time worth while she listened to Jesus? What was Martin Luther's time worth while he nailed his ninety-five propositions to the church door in Wittenberg? What was John Alden's time worth while he heard Priscilla say, "Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" What is John Doe's time worth to-day while he fights against the strong tides of commerce and trade, earning the money to keep his boys in the high school? Why, dollars and cents represent only a small part of the things that a man gives his life for.

If we erred it was not in placing the value of life too high as compared with the value of money. If we erred it was in unintentionally conveying the idea that youth is the all important period of life. Another might argue that the closing moments of the race, with the goal in sight, contain the crowning experiences of life. With such we will not quarrel. The sunrise has its glory; so has the sunset, and the noon-tide.

Each period of life brings its distinct joys and opportunities as well as its burdens and sorrows. Our calendar for the year 1910 has this motto in large letters intended to confront one every day in the year:

To-day begins a new year. The date on the calendar does not matter. The earth starts every morning on its year-long journey round the sun as truly as on the first day of January, and each new dawn is therefore a fresh opportunity to begin right. It is for us to determine what the year shall be. The demand upon us is not that we succeed, but only that we try; and to try manfully every day and all day long, is inevitably to attain in the end to a supreme success.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. A. A. Reams writes from Des Moines as follows: "The industrial department of Graceland College was well represented at the eighteenth annual exhibition of the Iowa State Poultry Association, held in Des Moines, December 28, 1909, to January 1, 1910. Poultry Pointers, the journal now published by the Herald Publishing House in the interests of the industrial department of the College, occupied a booth in the Coliseum, and was represented by the editor, Bro. E. B. Blett, and advertising solicitor, Bro. W. H. Blair. Brother Blett has been attending a number of poultry exhibitions in different parts of the State the past few weeks, and is thus getting acquainted with Iowa as rapidly as he could expect. He impresses one as being deeply in earnest in connection with his work as superintendent of the farm in connection with the college; he is proud of the journal of which he is editor, and so he is successful in his work among the poultry people of the State, and those of other States whom he meets. The four-day stay of the brethren in Des Moines were days of successful work and business for the journal, and they did much to advertise the college, especially the industrial department. This department, as presented by Editor Blett, appeals to all classes, and met with substantial favors at the hands of many. Some donations of poultry and poultry fixtures were made by business men becoming acquainted with the plans of work at Graceland, some liberal clubbing offers were made with State papers. The poultry department of the State Agricultural College at Ames, made a fine exhibit at the poultry show, and after being made acquainted with the work of Graceland gave it an unqualified approval.

At the Amboy Conference, April 6, 1860, Joseph Smith was accepted as President of the Reorganization. It was an affecting and memorable occasion in the history of the church. Only two of the ministry who were then present are now living. One is President Joseph Smith; the other Patriarch E. C. Briggs. Brother Briggs will tell of his recollections of that conference in the Jubilee HERALD.

The Associate Editor was called to Burlington, Iowa, the scene of his former pastorate of three and a half years, to solemnize the marriage of Bro. George Edward Schweers and Sr. Sena C. Bierman, December 29.

Elder Charles Fry, pastor of the branch at Burlington, Iowa, has arranged an informal debate with the Utah elders now laboring at that place. We understand that Elder O. H. Bailey will represent the Reorganization; and Elder Pace the Utah faction. It is proposed to secure a hall in some prominent place in the business section. Brother Bailey has also arranged a debate to be held between himself and Reverend Roberts, who met Elder S. W. L. Scott in Independence some time ago.

There never was a day when the call for prophets of the living God was so widespread, appealing, and insistent as it is at present.—Prof. Charles S. Nash, D. D., Pacific Theological Seminary, Berkeley, California, in Homiletic Review, January, 1910.

"No man KNOWS about the other world. But many have faith, and to millions that have lived and will live that faith alone makes life worth while."

Hymns and Poems

Christian Love.

A Paraphrase (1 Corinthians 13).

Though I had all the gifts of speech
That tongues of men and angels reach,
If Love be not within me found
I am but brass or tinkling sound;
Though I could future things reveal,
The depths of knowledge could unseal,
And though my Faith could mountains move,
Yet I am nothing without Love.
Though all my goods to alms I turned,
Or gave my body to be burned,
If Love did not the loss inspire,
Vain hunger fed, or martyr's fire.

Love suffers long—is patient, kind;
Nurses not envy in its mind;
Vaunts not itself—not puffed with pride;
Looks for its neighbors' brightest side;
Unselfish; to compassion prone;
Seeks others' welfare, not its own.
Rejoices most in doing good,
Delights in truth and rectitude,
Takes all things well, both great and small,
Bears, hopes, believes, endures them all.

A prophecy may false become—
The tongue of orator grow dumb—
And knowledge pass, a vanished tale,
But Love alone can never fail.
We see in part, in part foresee—
In perfect light all doubts shall flee.
When as a child, as child I thought—
A man, I treat child's things as naught.
Now through a glass dim forms we trace,
Then shall we see them face to face;
Now a small part is all I own,
Then shall I know as I am known.

Faith, Hope, and Love; blest triad ye!
But Love is greatest of the three.—P. B. P.

The Sweet Story.

(Tune, "O that will be glory," in revival hymns.)

Sweet was the message that came to my soul,
Christ by his mercy and love made me whole,
Joys most entrancing around me now roll,
And I know there's waiting a glory for me.

CHORUS:

O tell the sweet story to me
Of that loved place I long to see,
Those realms of light, where all faith's lost in sight;
Tell the sweet story so precious to me.

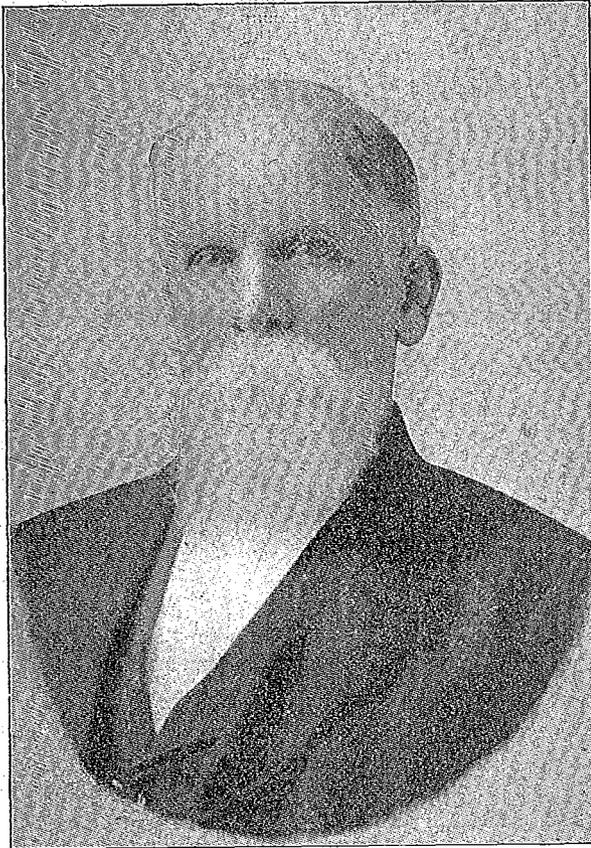

The fields are all white but laborers are few,
Reaping or gleaning for each one to do,
The Lord of the harvest is calling for you,
To tell that story so precious to me.

When trials are o'er and earth fades away
And I reach those mansions of heavenly day,
When all their splendor with joy I survey,
There will be waiting a glory for me.

The Straight Road

IS THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST NECESSARY TO-DAY?

CHARLES DERRY.

When John the Baptist came preaching in the wilderness, he told the converts, "I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear, he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire."—Matthew 3: 11. There are two classes of professed followers of Christ. One class claims to believe in the baptism of water, but denies the baptism of the Holy Spirit as being necessary to-day. Another class claims to believe in the baptism of the Holy Ghost, but denies that the baptism of water is essential now. There is a third class, not nearly so numerous or so popular, that believes that it is necessary to be baptized in water, and also by the Holy Spirit. Let us try these classes by the word of God: "It is written that man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." It was the Christ who declared, "Ye must be born again," and when questioned, "How can a man be born again?" he emphatically declared, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he can not enter the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5.

God has joined these two ordinances in the new birth. Has man a right to separate them? Could either one alone constitute the new birth? Not if Christ gave the right answer, and we believe in him. Then if being born again is necessary to make us fit subjects for the kingdom of God, we must be born according to the pattern, for Christ spake the word of God. (John 3: 34.) Hence, we must be born of the water and of the Spirit.

Can these two classes who dispense with one of these ordinances and clamor for the other, be in harmony with Christ? Do they not reflect upon the veracity of the great Teacher sent from God? We are forbidden to add or to take from the sacred word of God. (Deuteronomy 4: 2; Proverbs 30: 5, 6.) Therefore, so sure as Christ gave utterance to these words, we must undergo this two-fold birth of the water and of the Spirit or we can not enter into the kingdom of God. Men authorized of God baptize with water, but the prerogative to baptize with the Holy Spirit belongs to Christ, as declared by John; and not until we put ourselves in a condition to receive the latter by obedience to the former, are we entitled to receive the baptism from above. Christ works according to the pattern given him by the Father, and we must submit to be molded according to the pattern or the potter will cast us away, as unworthy clay. This latter is the teaching of the third class mentioned. Judge for yourselves which of the three classes is right.

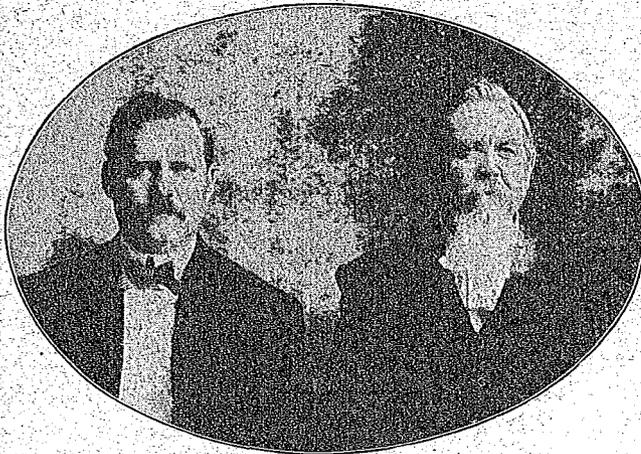

The baptism of the Holy Ghost is the seal of adoption. (Ephraim 1: 13, 14; Romans 8: 14, 17.) He saved us by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost. (Titus 3: 5.) If we are not renewed by the Holy Ghost, we are not saved. Christ promised the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost. (John 14: 16, 26; 15: 26; 16: 7, 15.) Peter says, "The promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord, our God, shall call."—Acts 2: 38, 39. So we see the Holy Ghost was not to be given to the apostles alone, and Peter declares that God has given the Holy Ghost to them that obey him. (Acts 5: 32.) The Samaritans received the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Acts 8: 5, 17). Paul received it (Acts 9: 17; 22: 16). The centurion received it (Acts 10: 11). The Ephesians received it (Acts 19). The Roman Saints enjoyed it and were enabled to cry Abba Father. All that were born of God were made partakers of that divine Spirit. Those who reject the baptism of the Holy Spirit, reject the salvation that God has prepared through his son, Jesus Christ.

Reader, where do you stand? On the side of God's word? Or do you choose to follow the theories and vain traditions of men? "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit he can not enter into the kingdom of God."

CHARLES DERRY.

BENEFITS TO BE DERIVED BY READING THE AUTUMN LEAVES.

I have looked back over numbers of copies of the Autumn Leaves and find much to commend the magazine to its readers; indeed I have jotted down a whole page of things which seemed of immense benefit to me.

"We are given autobiographies of our own people."

THE CHURCH FIRST.

The church should ever be of first importance to us, and in the pages of the Autumn Leaves the church is kept continually before us—its origin, its organization, its mission; and we can see the great benefit it is to us and to our children. There have been given, from time to time, articles which give us a very clear idea of the history of the church from its beginning, which show its growth, its progress. And we are able to see in the stanch, faithful followers of Jesus, who have been believers in his gospel these many years, and in the bright young people who are beginning so to value the gospel and its blessings, a mighty army which will eventually move a portion of the world to believe in goodness, in purity, in righteousness.

STORIES OF LIFE.

We are given, in these pages, life. We have biographies and autobiographies of our own people. We see the dealings of God with one and another; this way with one person, another way with another person, but always can we come back to the same thought: God cares for us as individuals and he will lead us if we will be led by him.

We are often advised to give to young people the biographies of great men to read. I have had the biographies of some great men in our own magazine, and the lessons that may be drawn, the influences that may be felt, are legion. We have had many sketches of the life of Joseph Smith, and there is always something to touch the heart, always something to admire in the character of him, who, by the power of God, founded our church. We have had the lives and experiences of many of the old Saints, whose marvelous faith in God is an influence to strengthen ours.

TRAVEL.

I read with interest the travels of Burton Holmes, or other distinguished travelers, but how much more is my interest aroused when those of our own church give us "Scenes in foreign lands," or "Travels in the Holy Land," or "Experiences in the South Sea Islands."

Jack London had a story in McClure's, the scene laid in the South Sea Islands at the time of the great disaster, when the tidal wave swept over the islands. He spoke of the dire need of fresh water. He said, "The missionary made a still," to furnish fresh water for the people. Instantly my mind said, "Brother Gilbert," and my interest in the story increased and the narrative became more real to me.

THE TRUTH.

We were at dinner one night and an elder was with us. They had all been telling funny stories and when the last laugh subsided I said, "Now I'll tell you a true story." Then they laughed at me. I meant I would tell them something I had seen and knew to be true. Jokes are not always vouched for as truth. True things always appeal to us. When we read something written by one we know, we are interested in the writer as well as the article. In our magazine the name of one may be familiar but not the person of the writer. Our bond is such that we are sure we shall know him as soon as we have shaken his hand. Does he not believe in the whole glorious gospel, and has he not given out to us some of his soul from the printed page? And are we not more closely bound together with the cords of everlasting love as we thus view those who are members of our church?

ARCHÆOLOGY.

From first to last we are given a wonderful amount of the Bible and the Doctrine and Covenants, of Christ and his teachings, of the Book of Mormon and its systematic study, of archæology, that most fascinating topic, which interests and enlightens and confirms our faith. We learn of the American Indian, the "remnants" in North and South America, Mexico, and Central America; the remnant of that old people, the mention of which never fails to stir our hearts into life. For did they not believe as we believe? And was not Christ among them? Blest people! And they have made it so clear, so real to us by their writings, preserved so carefully and given to us by the hand of God.

A DAUGHTER OF ZION.

To tell of the Sunday school work falls to the lot of other publications, but the Religio work has for many years been very closely followed in the Autumn Leaves; helps and governments are worked out by competent people and given to us in completed form.

HOME DEPARTMENT.

The Daughters of Zion department is akin to the Mothers' Home Column in value to the home. It keeps us in touch with the work of the society as well as to give to many a hungry mother thoughts satisfying, beautiful, pure, helpful. Take this along, from under the heading, "Truer parenthood, better children, happier homes, purer society." And this:

"A partnership with God is motherhood;
What strength, what purity, what self-control,
What love, what wisdom, should belong to her,
Who helps God fashion an immortal soul."

These explain the object of the department, and it is high, worthy. We have had some teaching for mothers in this department, some food for mothers which is second to none found elsewhere.

If you could look over a complete file of the magazine you would realize that a love for good poetry is engendered. We have had some gems, selected and original.

SOLID READING.

A taste for solid reading may be cultivated by perusing the articles furnished as well as the editorials. Scarcely a theme that is not touched upon in condensed form,—patriotism, literature, art, music, education. Love for the beautiful, the artistic, is taught by the illustrations and decorations. The cover designs are often very simple indeed, but always beautiful. The sprays of leaves, so suggestive, are always pleasing to the eye.

Spirituality is never lost sight of; the gospel, that grandest of all themes, is never left out of these pages I have been trying to describe to you. Surely, love for the church is fostered by reading this magazine, a God-given instinct worked out by those who were qualified to do God's work in this regard. The trend of it is broadening, uplifting.

And if it shall mean as much to you as I have said, go, dear listener, read!

HORTENSE SELLON CRAMER.

DENVER, COLORADO, October 17, 1909.

"Everything takes ten years," wrote Jacob Riis. What he meant was that in any undertaking of magnitude, at least that much time must be allowed before you can expect to show results. How many of us have faithfully worked for ten years to accomplish some desired end or to acquire some admired virtue before giving up in discouragement? Things that are obtained quickly and easily are rarely of permanent value. Weeds grow faster than useful plants.—Selected.

"To go about doing good is the surest way to find Christ in modern life, just as it would have been in Galilee while he was alive. The Beatitudes are the path in which he walks; and as George Herbert says: "Who goeth in the way which Christ has gone is much more sure to meet him than one who travels byways."

The faith that is neglected leaves the soul.—Doctor Thomas.

Original Articles

WHY NOT NOW?

Not long since, as a church we were commanded to come up higher. We have been taught that the whole duty of man is to keep the commandments of God. When we keep all the commandments then we can come no higher without new commandments. So we must conclude that when we are to come up higher, we have not been keeping all of the commandments. According to Matthew Christ has said, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Do we not sometimes forget our duty in this regard? The missionary can take the gospel to the world, but it is the duty of the Saints to show what it has done for them. If we are no better than the members of other churches (and this has been said of us), how can we expect the world to see our light. Let us live our religion at home and abroad and we will never be found among the virgins that were foolish. Let us take off this bushel that throws us in the shadow, obscurity. It has been said, that if a popular church had what we have in religion, they would advertise it in every way possible. When the time comes that we as a people will live as we have been commanded, I am confident that our church buildings will not hold the incoming members, and the redemption of Zion will be at hand, if not achieved. Why can we not leave off jealousies, backbiting, faultfinding, gossiping, light talking, and many other things of like kind? It seems to me that if we believe the gospel, no sacrifice, even to laying down our lives, would be too great for us.

I have heard sisters returning from a conference, talk about the church one moment and some light, foolish thing the next. Again, I have heard of some complaining that when they were visited by the Saints, all they talked of was dress. These may be exceptions, but they illustrate conditions to be avoided. Jesus has said that if a man loved him he would keep his words and that he did only the things that pleased the Father. So if we continue in our own way and do not make the effort to come higher, it is conclusive that we love neither the Father nor the Son. Being in this condition we could expect no blessing at their hand. The statement that straight is the gate and narrow is the way, and few there be that find it, has been applied to the world, but it applies equally as well to us. We have entered the straight gate (the church) and we have found the narrow way (full obedience), but we are like a camel of olden times. In those days cities were surrounded by walls, with low, narrow gates which could be hastily closed when the city was attacked by the enemy. A camel with a large burden upon his back found it difficult to pass through these gates and if his burden was very great some of it would have to be unloaded before he could pass into the city. Imagine now a heavily loaded camel returning from a trip across the desert. He is hot and weary. Distress hurries him on that he might be eased of his burden. The gate is reached; he bends down to enter, but lo, his pack is too bulky for the gate. Stretching forth his neck he beholds green grass within which would satisfy his hunger; a clear, running stream which would quench his thirst, shade trees stirred by gentle breezes beckoning him to lie down and rest. But these are not for him to enjoy until he has had his burden reduced. He may get angry and jerk and twist, but those walls of stone will not be moved out of their place. However, when his master saw the difficulty he reduced his pack and he entered into the city.

Our condition is about the same. We have taken upon us the name of Jesus. We are in a desert of sin. We have reached a city, Zion. We behold the blessings within where all men are equal indeed, where there are no rich and no poor, where there is no place for the idler, where he who will not take up his sword against his neighbor must needs flee for safety, and where the glory and power of God is the fear of the nations that would come against Zion. Christ has said that we might have entered long ago, and why have we not? For the same reason that the camel had. Let us examine our burden. Since we took upon us the name of Christ we have picked up by the wayside divers sins. We have forgotten that our journey tended toward a city to the extent that we loitered by the wayside. Instead of telling those we met and passed whither we were bound, and try to induce them to come along with us, we stopped to play with them. These garments were nice and the costly treasures we were taking with us we used to buy equally as fine if not better wearing apparel. While we were thus loitering our children were becoming scattered and some of them thought they would go some other way. Their new leader didn't know that they were going to any place in particular, but that they were on their way and had been for a long time. He said his was not the original theory or road to reach that for which they were seeking, but that he had branched off from another party that was still the branch of another. This party claimed, however, that all the different branches would finally reach the place for which they had started, although they were journeying in different directions. And thus we wander.

Saints, let us throw off this pack of sins and thus be in a condition to enter into and occupy that condition which shall be Zion. Let us dress decently, but not possess enough clothes to start a small store and rival a kind of paradise in attractiveness. We have been instructed to let our garments be plain. On the other hand, we should not be noticeable for our rags and uncouthness. Let us raise up our children in the faith and not drive them from it by our harshness and unjust ways of dealing. Be firm but kind. Our intentions were good when we joined the faith, but we failed to go on to perfection. The time is now at hand. If we do not lay hold of the things of God and cast off the things of the world, we will lose what light we have. Will we, like the children of Israel, wander in the world for years, seeking to reach Zion and leave it for another generation to enter into and occupy? "Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, but ye would not." GEORGE E. DAVIS.

PARABLE OF THE GREAT KING.

BISHOP RICHARD BULLARD.

Long, long ago, a great King sought to establish a system of laws and government that would place his subjects upon a basis of equality, where each could enjoy the fruits of his own labor, placed within the reach of all, by the King himself.

Some of the prominent principles upon which the perfecting of this plan was to be accomplished, was the unchangeability of the King, true loyalty to the King himself, an absolute surrender of every principle antagonistic to his plans, the hearty willingness to comply with every request of the King, as expressed in his laws or constitution, an unalterable pledge to assist in establishing the true brotherhood of man throughout his realm.

A perfectly organized system was issued by the King, which if adhered to would bring perfection to the project. The King himself made choice of those who were to be his servants, to whom he intrusted the carrying out of his plans as revealed through the message given to them, which they were to faithfully teach to their fellow-men.

The King was very kind to his subjects, and placed before them every inducement to cooperate with him in the carrying out of his purposes, which were purely for the blessing of his subjects. Industry, frugality, and honesty were enjoined upon all. His servants sought diligently to learn their duty from the constitution placed in their hands. One of the first decrees issued to these subjects was they should subscribe to the support of the families of these servants who surrendered the comforts and associations of home in the interests of their fellows.

The King levied a tax upon the surplus of each subject, or citizen, of ten per cent. This was declared by the King to be due him, hence became a debt until paid; this debt was called tithing. There was a common treasury provided, from which all the needs of the poor and the expense of carrying on the work were supplied.

Great prosperity was promised by the King to his subjects, provided they would willingly and faithfully comply with his plans, and cooperate with him in the carrying out of his purposes.

In process of time the kingdom grew and waxed strong, and although there was much persecution and hardship endured by the subjects of this great King, they prospered and were greatly favored, inasmuch that the land yielded bountifully for them and they began to get rich. Now when this prosperity came to them, many began to get careless of their payments to the King when they became due, that which was his by right of contract and covenant, and instead of paying the King his dues, some bought fine and rich clothing and adorned themselves with costly rings and jewels, laying up the residue of their riches after the manner of the subjects of the kingdom of darkness.

Now the King had promised that a city should be built, which was to be the habitation of his subjects: the city would be called Zion, the New Jerusalem. This city was to be builded and beautified through the cooperation of the citizens; they returning to the King that which he had permitted them to accumulate, from that which he had created. Those who had accumulated little were to hand over to the treasurer the little they had stored away above their needs. Those who had accumulated much, handed over the abundance in their hands, above that which they had need. From those who had accumulated nothing above their needs, nothing was demanded; so that all things were established upon a righteous basis. But ere the foundation of the city of Zion was laid, there began to be murmurings and disputations among the subjects of the King, and the servants of the King were ignored and their pleadings for help and cooperation were disregarded. Therefore the kingdom was rent and weakened, and their enemies came upon them and ill-treated them, and spoiled their goods, and drove them from their lands, and much suffering and bloodshed was endured.

Their leader was slain, and many turned traitors to their King, and made covenant with the kingdom of darkness, and walked no more after the ordinances of the great King. The love of the King was so great that he again sent his servants out to gather together the remnant that was left from the spoiler, and to urge upon them again the need of cooperation and the gathering together upon the land from whence they had been driven; and again prepare for the building up of the city of Zion. The King placed at the head of his work the son of his servant who was slain, and great was the joy of those who had remained loyal to the King.

The King manifested his approval of the return of his subjects, and blessed them abundantly, and they were permitted to return to the place where the city of Zion was to be builded, and here they dwelt in peace. A decree was issued through his servants that the King wished his work to be hastened, and all should remember his commands to do them. Therefore they were to be faithful in supplying the demands of the work, by paying their debts which were long overdue in many instances. Special provisions were to be made for the enlightening and educating of his subjects. Homes were to be provided for the aged and infirm, among his faithful subjects. The sick and afflicted were to have a place where comfort and help could be extended to them; and the orphans and destitute children were to have a home where loving hands and hearts could tend them.

The servant to whom had been intrusted the carrying out of these orders of the King, sought earnestly the assistance and cooperation of all the citizens, but many were slow to respond to the righteous laws of the King. Many robbed the King of the small portion he had asked of them, i. e., the tenth of their increase. The King reaffirmed to his subjects the demands he had made in the beginning to their fathers, that his work must be built up on the principles of righteousness as delivered to them in his laws. They were therefore commanded to bring all their tithes and offerings into his storehouse, for the carrying on of his work and for the redemption and building up of Zion. But many sought to excuse themselves in various ways from performing their duty, and a form of embezzlement became common among them, insomuch that they took the King's money and used it in ways unbecoming subjects of the King.

Some in extravagance of dress, in the wearing of gold, silver, and precious stones, and indulging in the foolish pleasures and vices of the kingdom of darkness; others in the dance pavilion, pleasure trips upon the Lord's day, etc., and many became so entangled in the vanities of the kingdom of darkness that they failed to support the work intrusted to them. Many were slow to receive the law as administered by the servant of the King; and often disputed his right to urge upon them the prompt payment of their dues.

All these disputations retarded the work, and hindered the King's purpose to bring about equality throughout his kingdom. To end this jarring and strife, the King would again and again speak to his subjects, calling their attention to the fact that the law as expounded by his servant whom he had placed over his treasury, was as he had given it to them; but many were slow to heed these messages, and in consequence the poor were not considered, the work was retarded because of these conditions, and a wanton disregard of duty and prevailing dishonesty so retarded the work that the city is not yet built up under the King.

Nevertheless, there are many of these citizens who are true and loyal to their King, and are making great sacrifice that the righteous designs and purposes of their King may be carried out; and these are receiving great favors and blessings, so much so that they are often found in communication with their head, and great joy fills their hearts. The purpose of the King is to procure for all his subjects an inheritance upon this most choice and beautiful spot of land whereon the city, the New Jerusalem, shall be built. But this must needs be brought about through a strict observation of his laws; none others can receive an inheritance there. Think you the dishonest subjects who have robbed their King, and have acted so disloyally to him, will repent and bring their tithes and offerings into the King's storehouse? Let all the King's loyal subjects work to that end, and answer, "We will do even as the Lord hath commanded us, and hand to him all that he hath commanded us to consecrate to his service."

DID YOU GET ONE?

Last week several hundred copies of the December number of Autumn Leaves were mailed to those who are not now subscribers. The object was to increase the circulation of the magazine and its field of usefulness. Some of these sample copies may have reached those who are receiving the Leaves in their family and we extend a request that in such cases they hand the copy to some one who should be interested. The Leaves is a powerful factor for good and the greater number it reaches the more good it will do. We will appreciate your help to accomplish the greater results.

Through our oversight there was omitted from the catalogue just issued by the Herald Publishing House, the valuable booklet, 'A Marvelous Work and a Wonder, from the pen of Elder Daniel Macgregor. It is well worth a careful reading. No. 280, paper cover, 10c; or 3 for 25c.

Afterwards.

He received the telegram in a garden when he was gazing on a vision of blue, set in the fronds of a palm, and listening to the song of the fishers as it floated across the bay.

"You look so utterly satisfied," said his hostess, in the high, clear voice of English women, "that I know you are tasting the luxury of a contrast. The Riviera is charming in December; imagine London, and Cannes is paradise."

As he smiled assent in the grateful laziness of a hard-worked man, his mind was stung with the remembrance of a young wife swathed in the dreary fog, who, above all things, loved the open air and the shining of the sun.

Her plea was that Bertie would weary alone, and that she hated traveling; but it came to him quite suddenly that this was always the program of their holidays—some Mediterranean villa full of clever people for him, and the awful dullness of that Bloomsbury street for her; or he went north to a shooting lodge, where he told his best stories in the smoking room, after a long day on the purple heather; and she did her best for Bertie at some watering-place, much frequented on account of its railway facilities and economical lodgings. Letters of invitation had generally a polite reference to his wife—"If Mrs. Trevor can accompany you, I shall be still more delighted"; but it was understood that she would not accept.

"We have quite a grudge against Mrs. Trevor, because she will never come with her husband; there is some beautiful child who monopolizes her," his hostess would explain on his arrival; and Trevor allowed it to be understood that his wife was quite devoted to Bertie, and would be miserable without him.

When he left the room it was explained, "Mrs. Trevor is a hopelessly quiet person, what is called a 'good wife,' you know."

"The only time she dined with us, Tottie Fribby!—he was a Theosophist then, it's two years ago—was too amusing for words, and told us what incarnation he was going through.

"Mrs. Trevor, I believe, had never heard of Theosophy, and looked quite horrified at the idea of poor Tottie's incarnation.

"Isn't it profane to use such words?" she said to me. So I changed to skirt dancing, and would you believe me, she had never seen it?

"What can you do with a woman like that? Nothing remains but religion and the nursery. Why do clever men marry those impossible women?"

Trevor was gradually given to understand, as by an atmosphere, that he was a brilliant man wedded to a dull wife, and there were hours—his worst hours—when he agreed.

"Cara mia, cara mia," sang the sailors; and his wife's face, in its perfect refinement and sweet beauty, suddenly replaced the Mediterranean.

Had he belittled his wife, with her wealth of sacrifice and delicate nature, beside women in spectacles who wrote on the bondage of marriage, and leaders of fashion who could talk of everything, from horse-racing to palmistry?

He had only glanced at her last letter; now he read it carefully:

"The flowers were lovely, and it was so mindful of you to send them, just like my husband. Bertie and I amused ourselves arranging and rearranging them in glasses, till we had made our tea table lovely. But I was just one little bit disappointed not to get a letter—you see how exacting I am, sir. I waited for every post, and Bertie said, 'Has father's letter come yet?' When one is on holiday, writing letters is an awful bore; but just a line to Bertie and me. We have a map of the Riviera, and found out all the places you had been at in the yacht; and we tried to imagine you sailing on that azure sea, and landing among those silver olives. I am so grateful to everyone for being kind to you, and I hope you will enjoy yourself to the full. Bertie is a little stronger, I'm sure; his cheeks are quite rosy to-day for him. It was his birthday on Wednesday, and I gave him a little treat. The sun was shining brightly in the forenoon, and we had a walk in the gardens, and made believe that it was Italy! Then we went to Oxford street, and Bertie chose a regiment of soldiers for his birthday present. He wished some guns so much that I allowed him to have them as a present from you. They only cost one-and-sixpence, and I thought you would like him to have something. Jane and he had a splendid game of hide-and-seek in the evening, and my couch was the den, so you see we have our own gayety in Bloomsbury.

"Don't look sulky at this long scribble and say, 'What nonsense women write!' for it is almost the same as speaking to you and I shall imagine the letter all the way till you open it in the sunshine."

"So smile and kiss my name, for this comes with my heart's love from

"Your devoted wife,

"MAUD TREVOR.

"P. S.—Don't be alarmed because I have to rest; the doctor does not think that there is any danger, and I'll take great care."

"A telegram." It was the shattering of a dream. "How wicked of some horrid person! Business ought not to be allowed to enter paradise. Let's hope its pleasure; perhaps some one has won a lot of money at Monte Carlo, and wishes us to celebrate the affair."

"Whom's it for? Oh! Mr. Edward Trevor; then it's a brief by telegraph, I suppose. Some millionaire's will case, and the Attorney-General can't manage it alone. What a man he is; to have briefs in holiday time.

"There it is, but remember before you open it that you are bound to remain here over Christmas at any rate, and help us with our theatricals. My husband declares that a successful barrister must be a born actor."

An hour later Trevor was in the Paris express, and for thirty hours he prayed one petition, that she might live till he arrived. He used to have a berth in the Wagon Lit as a matter of course, and had begun to complain about the champagne in the dining car; but the thought of comfort made him wince on this journey, and he twice changed his carriage, once when an English party would not cease from badinage that mocked his ears, and again because a woman had brown eyes with her expression of dog-like faithfulness. The darkness of the night after that sun-lit garden, and the monotonous roar of the train, and the face of smiling France covered with snow, and the yeasty waters of the Channel, and the moaning of the wind, filled his heart with dread.

Will that procession of luggage at Dover never come to an end? A French seaman—a fellow with earrings and a merry face—appears and reappears with maddening regularity, each time with a larger trunk. One had X. Y. on it in big white letters. Why not Z also? Who could have such a name? That is a lady's box, black and brown, plastered with hotel labels. Some bride, perhaps . . . they are carrying the luggage over his heart. Have they no mercy?

The last piece is in, and the sailors make a merry group at the top of the gangway. They look like Bretons, and that fellow is laughing again—some story about a little child; he can just hear "Ma petite." . . .

"Guard, is this train never to start? We're half an hour late already."

"Italian mail very heavy, sir; still bringing up bags; so many people at Riviera in winter, writing home to their friends." . . .

How cruel everyone is! He had not written for ten days. Something always happened, an engagement of pleasure. There was a half-finished letter; he had left it to join a Monte Carlo party.

"Writing letters—home, of course, to that idolized wife. It's beautiful, and you are an example to us all; but Mrs. Trevor will excuse descriptions of scenery; she knows you are enjoying yourself."

Had she been expecting that letter from post to post, calculating the hour of each delivery, identifying the postman's feet in that quiet street, holding her breath when he rang, stretching her hand for a letter, to let it drop unopened, and bury her face in the pillow? Had she . . . waiting for a letter that never came? Those letters that he wrote from the Northern Circuit in that first sweet year, a letter a day, and one day two—it had given him a day's advantage. Careful letters, too, though written between cases, with bits of description and amusing scenes. Some little sameness towards the end, but she never complained of that, and even said those words were the best. And that trick he played—the thought of the postman must have brought it up—how pleasant it was, and what a success! He would be his own letter one day and take her by surprise. "A letter, ma'am," the girl said—quite a homely girl, who shared their little joys and anxieties—and then he showed his face with apologies for intrusion. The flush of love in her face, will it be like that to-night, or . . . What can be keeping the train now? Is this a conspiracy to torment a miserable man?

He thrusts his head out of the window in despair, and sees the guard trying to find a compartment for a family that had mistaken their train.

The husband is explaining, with English garrulity, all the station hearing, what an inconvenience it would have been, had they gone in the Holborn Viaduct carriages.

"Half an hour's longer drive, you know, and it's very important we should get home in time; we are expected . . ."

For what? Dinner, most likely. What did it matter when they got home, to-day or next year? Yet he used to be angry if he were made late for dinner. They come into his compartment and explain the situation at great length, while he pretends to listen.

A husband and wife returning from a month in Italy, full of their experiences: the Corniche Road, the palaces of Genoa, the pictures in the Pitti, Saint Peter's at Rome. Her first visit to the Continent, evidently; it reminded him of a certain tour round the Lakes in '80, and she withdrew her hand from her husband's as the train came out from the tunnel. They were not smart people—very pronounced middle-class—but they were lovers, after fifteen years.

They forgot him, who was staring on the bleak landscape with white, pinched face.

"How kind to take me this trip. I know how much you denied yourself, but it has made me young again"; and she said "Edward." Were all these coincidences arranged? Had his purgatorial begun already?

"Have you seen the 'Globe,' sir? Bosworth, M. P. for Pedlington, has been made a judge, and there's to be a keen contest.

"Trevor, I see, is named as the Tory candidate—a clever fellow, I've heard. Do you know about him? He's got on quicker than any man of his years.

"Some say that it's his manner; he's such a good sort, the juries can not resist him, a man told me—a kind heart goes for something even in a lawyer. Would you like to look. . . ."

"Very sorry; would you take a drop of brandy? No? The passage was a little rough, and you don't look quite up to the mark."

Then they left him in peace and he drank his cup to the dregs.

It was for Pedlington he had been working and saving, for a seat meant society and the bench, perhaps. . . . What did it matter now?

She was to come and sit within the cage when he made his first speech, and hear all the remarks.

"Of course it will be a success, for you do everything well, and your wife will be the proudest woman in London.

"Sir Edward Trevor, M. P. I know it's foolish, but it's the foolishness of love, dear, so don't look cross; you are everything to me, and no one loves you as I do."

What are they slowing for now? There's no station. Did ever train drag like this one?

Off again, thank God. . . . If she only were conscious, and he could ask her to forgive his selfishness.

At last, and the train glides into Victoria. No, he had nothing to declare; would they let him go, or they might keep his luggage altogether.

Some vision was ever coming up; and now he saw her, kneeling on the floor and packing that portmanteau, the droop of her figure, her thin white hands.

He was so busy that she did these offices for him—tried to buckle the straps even; but he insisted on doing that. It gave him half an hour longer at the Club. What a brute he had been. . . .

"Do anything you like with my things. I'll come to-morrow . . . as fast as you can drive."

Huddled in a corner of the hansom so that you might have thought he slept, this man was calculating every foot of the way, gloating over a long stretch of open, glistening asphalt, hating unto murder the immovable drivers whose huge vans blocked his passage. If they had known, there was no living man but would have made room for him . . . but he had not known himself. . . . Only one word to tell her he knew now.

As the hansom turned into the street he bent forward, straining his eyes to catch the first glimpse of home. Had it been daytime the blinds would have told their tale; now it was the light he watched.

Dark on the upper floors; no sick light burning . . . have mercy . . . then the blood came back to his heart with a rush. How could he have forgotten?

The room was at the back for quietness, and it might still be well. Some one had been watching, for the door was instantly opened, but he could not see the servant's face.

A doctor came forward and beckoned him to go into the study. . . .

It seemed as if his whole nature had been smitten with insensibility, for he knew everything without words, and yet he heard the driver demanding his fare, and noticed that the doctor had been reading the evening paper while he waited; he saw the paragraph about that seat.

What work those doctors have to do. . . .

"An hour ago . . . we were amazed that she lived so long; with any other woman it would have been this morning; but she was determined to live till you came home.

"It was not exactly will power, for she was the gentlest patient I ever had; it was"—the doctor hesitated—a peremptory Scotchman hiding a heart of fire beneath a coating of ice—"it was simply love."

When the doctor had folded up the evening paper, and laid it on a side table, which took some time, he sat down opposite that fixed, haggard face, which had not yet been softened by a tear.

"Yes, I'll tell you everything; perhaps it will relieve your mind; and Mrs. Trevor said you would wish to know, and I must be here to receive you. Her patience and thoughtfulness were marvelous.

"I attend many very clever and charming women, but I tell you, Mr. Trevor, not one has so impressed me as your wife. Her self-forgetfulness passed words. She thought of everyone except herself. Why, one of the last things she did was to give directions about your room; she was afraid you might feel the change from the Riviera. But that is by the way, and these things are not my business.

"From the beginning I was alarmed, and urged that you be sent for; but she pledged me not to write; you needed your holiday, she said, and it must not be darkened with anxiety.

"She spoke every day about your devotion and unselfishness; how you wished her to go with you, but she had to stay with the boy. . . .

"The turn for the worse? It was yesterday morning, and I had, Sir Reginald at once. We agreed that recovery was hopeless, and I telegraphed to you without delay.

"We also consulted whether she ought to be told, and Sir Reginald said, 'Certainly; that woman has no fear, for she never thinks of herself, and she will want to leave messages.'

"If we can only keep her alive till to-morrow afternoon," he said; and you will like to remember that everything known to the best man in London was done. Sir Reginald came back himself unasked to-day, because he remembered a restorative that might sustain the failing strength. She thanked him so sweetly that he was quite shaken; the fact is, that both of us would soon have played the fool. But I ought not to trouble you with these trifles at this time, only as you wanted to know all. . . .

"Yes, she understood what we thought before I spoke; and only asked when you would arrive. 'I want to say "Good-bye," and then I will be ready'; but perhaps . . .

"Tell you everything?" That is what I am trying to do, and I was here nearly all day, for I had hoped to fulfill her wish.

"No, she did not speak much, for we enjoined silence and rest as the only chance; but she had your photograph on her pillow, and some flowers you had sent.

"They were withered, and the nurse removed them when she was sleeping; but she missed them, and we had to put them in her hands. 'My husband was so thoughtful.'

"This is too much for you, I see; it is simply torture. Wait till to-morrow. . . .

"Well, if you insist. Expecting a letter . . . yes . . . let me recollect. . . . No, I am not hiding anything, but you must not let this get upon your mind.

"We would have deceived her, but she knew the hour of the Continental mails, and could detect the postman's ring. Once a letter came, and she insisted on seeing it in case of any mistake. But it was only an invitation for you, I think, to some country house.

"It can't be helped now, and you ought not to vex yourself; but I believe a letter would have done more for her than . . . What am I saying now?

"As she grew weaker she counted the hours, and I left her at four full of hope. 'Two hours more and he'll be here,' and by that time she had your telegram in her hand.

"When I came back the change had come, and she said, 'It's not God's will; bring Bertie.'

"So she kissed him, and said something to him, but we did not listen. After the nurse had carried him out—for he was weeping bitterly, poor little chap—she whispered to me to get a sheet of paper and sit down by the bedside. . . . I think it would be better . . . very well, I will tell you all.

"I wrote what she dictated with her last breath, and I promised you would receive it from her own hand, and so you will. She turned her face to the door and lay quite still till about six, when I heard her say your name very softly, and a minute afterwards she was gone, without pain or struggle. . . .

She lay as she had died, waiting for his coming, and the smile with which she had said his name was still on her face. It was the first time she did not color with joy at his coming; that her hand was cold to his touch. He kissed her, but his heart was numbed, and he could not weep.

Then he took her letter and read it beside that silence.

"Dearest: They tell me now that I shall not live to see you come in and to cast my arms once more round your neck before we part. Be kind to Bertie, and remember that he is delicate and shy. He will miss me, and you will be patient with him for my sake. Give him my watch, and do not let him forget me. My locket with your likeness I would like left on my heart. You will never know how much I have loved you, for I could never speak. You have been very good to me, and I want you to know that I am grateful; but it is better perhaps that I should die, for I might hinder you in your future life. Forgive me because I came short of what your wife should have been. None can ever love you better. You will take these poor words from a dead hand, but I shall see you, and I shall never cease to love you, to follow your life, to pray for you—my first, my only love."

The fountains within him were broken, and he flung himself down by the bedside in an agony of repentance.

"Oh, if I had known before; but now it is too late, too late!"

For we sin against our dearest not because we do not love, but because we do not imagine.—Ian Maclaren in McClure's Magazine, April, 1895.

Many suppose those against whom they are prejudiced to be very unlovely, because they have never come near enough to know them. William Jay tells that, walking one day in an English fog, he saw a huge and terrible monster approaching him. Coming nearer, it was a gigantic and frightful man; nearer still, and it was his brother John.—John A. Broadus, LL. D.

Man reaches the better, brighter and nobler life that the gospel requires, not through what he has, nor through what his parents have, but through what he does for God and man. Every man can make his life a blessing if he sets before him as his aim righteousness toward God and helpfulness toward his fellow-men.

Letter Department

HUNDLUND, DENMARK, November 26, 1909.

Editors Herald: Perhaps a few lines from this side of the ocean might interest your readers. I left my home in Cameron, Missouri, for this field the last day of September. Next day I arrived in Saint Louis, where I spent the day very pleasantly in company with Brother and Sister Barracough, Sister Landbery and Brother Burgess, attending the Religio services at Lansdowne at night. Next morning I started for Washington, D. C., where I visited with Bro. and Sr. Willie Froyd two days, seeing the sights, etc., and had a very pleasant visit. October 5, I reached New York and next morning went on board the Cunard steamer Mauritania. At 10 a. m. we pulled out and an hour later put on full speed to cross to Queenstown in a little over four days and a half. This is the quickest trip I have ever made across the Atlantic.

The Mauritania is a fine steamer and the accommodations all that could be expected, but the powerful propellers required to force the large boat through the water with such speed, make it shake tremendously at times, especially where the second cabin is located, aft in the boat. At times the sensation was almost similar to that caused in crossing a number of tracks in a street car. In the first cabin and steerage as well, I was informed that this unpleasant sensation was rarely felt. The great advantage of these new large boats, however, is getting there quickly. Passengers may breakfast in New York, for instance, on Wednesday morning, and breakfast in Queenstown the next Monday morning, and take supper in London the same evening—a landing place having been established on the west coast of Wales for the accommodation of passengers to London and the south of England.

We did not reach Liverpool till Tuesday morning, making it in just six days from the time we left New York. It will be understood that the record making is between Sandy Hook and Queenstown, the average speed in that distance being about five hundred and eighty-six miles every twenty-four hours. At Liverpool I had to lay over two days, which suited me first rate, knowing that I had a rough voyage ahead of me across the North Sea. I reached here October 16. I have preached a few times in this neighborhood, and made a trip to Copenhagen, conversing with people on the gospel and distributing tracts according to opportunities. We will need a good supply of tracts this winter as our present supply is nearly exhausted, and I wish that those interested in this mission would lend us a helping hand by sending us contributions, large or small, for this purpose. All such contributions will be greatly appreciated. Generally the best means of getting our claims and work before the people of these countries is by private conversation and tract distribution, hence a large supply of tracts is needed. I hope all who are willing and able to help us in this good work will send such assistance at once, to the undersigned or to Bro. Peter Muceus, Porsgrund, Norway. We have the satisfaction of knowing that as a rule our literature is being read. Thus the light of the restored gospel may reach them and no doubt will leave its effect upon their minds. Most of the people with whom I have had conversation freely express their dissatisfaction and disapproval of the established form of worship which we may call the "image of the beast." They will admit that the sprinkling of infants and the so-called confirmation is mere humbug, but it is the custom, and old, established customs are hard to get rid of. However, there is a powerful agitation in favor of the separation of church and state, and a desire for such separation is growing rapidly among all classes; even some of the priests are in favor of it—providing the state still pays them their wages. See? If I read the signs of the times correctly, Revelation 17: 16-18 is being fulfilled in the European countries. Already there is a much less demand for the merchandise of Babylon, as dispensed by her merchants, the priests. (Revelation 18: 11, 12.) In nearly all countries there is a growing sentiment in favor of using properties of the church for the purposes of the state, and the old-time reverence for the church, religion, and the priesthood is rapidly giving way.

I notice in Brother Hansen's letter from Utah that President Joseph F. Smith has ordered all their houses of worship closed against all of our elders. The same authority is being exercised in Europe, as the following incident will show: Along about February 1, 1903, I attended a Brighamite meeting at Christiania one Sunday afternoon. One young man referred to the fact that houses of worship were closed against them everywhere, and as a contrast, made the sweeping statement that their houses of worship all over Utah were open to ministers of all denominations. I knew that the young man was either misinformed or was telling a deliberate falsehood, and to prove this, I decided to immediately put him to the test. So at the close of their meeting I asked permission to speak in their hall. He referred me to the president and stated that he thought permission would be granted. Later, I saw the president, a young man from near Salt Lake City. He gave his consent and a meeting was appointed. But as soon as the president of the Scandinavian mission heard of it, he wrote F. M. Lyman, at Liverpool, who at once telegraphed him to order that young man at Christiania to cancel the appointment and not allow me to speak in their houses. This was done and I was not permitted to occupy.

But while I have the acts of President Joseph F. Smith in mind I want to make a statement in justice to Bro. R. C. Evans. In the controversy between the latter and Joseph F. Smith, jr., President Smith makes a statement which is to the effect that Brother Evans had told a falsehood relative to the subject of their conversation during a visit to Salt Lake City. I was surprised to find this statement in his son's book, but during my visit to Salt Lake City a few years ago, I spoke to Joseph F. Smith, jr., about it, and I sought to meet President Smith with a view of talking it over, as I did not wish to take advantage of him. His son spoke to him about it, but returned the answer to me that his father did not know when he could see me, but preferred that I make a written statement. I accordingly wrote him the following letter after I returned home.

"STANBERRY, MISSOURI, March 14, 1907.

"PRESIDENT JOSEPH F. SMITH,

"Dear Sir: On my last visit to Salt Lake City, I sought through your son Joseph F. Smith, jr., to obtain an interview with you relative to the statement to your son in his controversy with Elder R. C. Evans. Your son informed me that he had spoken to you about it, but that you had told him that you did not know of any time when you could see me. The matter I wished to refer to is, I think, of more concern to you than to me, and before I make any public statement about it I wish to give you an opportunity to explain. This in fairness to you.

"Perhaps you remember that I accompanied Brother Evans on his visit to your house. This was on the 29th of October, 1900. I spent the evening with you and Elder Evans, taking but little part, however, in the conversation.

"On page 68 of your son's work you state that, 'He and I did not discuss the doctrine of polygamy at all.' Now let me say that I was present during the entire conversation the above-mentioned evening, and that the main subject of the conversation was polygamy. I distinctly remember your telling Brother Evans that the principle of polygamy had been revealed to the Prophet Joseph along about 1831; that he had informed one Johnson about this, and that Johnson in turn had told Orson Pratt. Brother Evans asked you the question, 'Do you not marry into polygamy?' to which you replied, 'No, not in the United States.' In speaking of the laws of Utah you remarked, 'It is our understanding that there is no law in this State against a man living with a plurality of wives.'

"In a letter to the SAINTS' HERALD shortly afterwards, I referred to this matter, as you will find in the issue of March 6, 1901. In my letter to the HERALD I did not mention your name, because I thought you spoke in a confidential manner and would not like it. During the conversation that evening you also spoke of the revelation on polygamy being presented to the high council at Nauvoo, and that we (your church) have the minutes of that meeting. Brother Evans at once asked to see those minutes, to which you replied that he would have to see President Snow. You are aware that we visited President Snow next morning. You and George Q. Cannon were present. During the conversation at the office Brother Evans referred to those minutes and asked President Snow if he could see them. President Snow answered that it would take too long to produce them. This and other matters, as the interview with Lucy Kimball, grew out of the conversation of the evening before. I admit that you may have forgotten, and in fairness to you write so that you may have an opportunity to explain before I mention the matter.

"I hope to hear from you at your earliest convenience. I write with feelings of kindness and respect. Please give my kindest regards to your son, Joseph F., whom I met several times while in your city.

"Very truly yours,

"PETER ANDERSON."

After so long a time no word has been received from President Smith. The reason, I do not know. But I do know that I was present that evening and heard the above-mentioned conversation, and that President Joseph F. Smith, and not R. C. Evans, is the one who falsifies in this instance. He may not have done so wittingly, but that does not change the facts.

In the HERALD of October 27, I notice the following statement from the National Tribune attributed to Sr. Emeline J. Davidson: "She understands through Brigham Young and other Mormons that it was only after they were at what is known as 'winter quarters,' that they decided to go into the Salt Lake Valley. They were going to California, as they supposed." This statement is corroborated by Brigham Young in a speech published in the Deseret News, October 14, 1863. He says: "Before we left Nauvoo, members of Congress made a treaty with the Latter Day Saints and we agreed to leave the United States entirely. We did so and came to these mountains, which were then Mexican Territory. When we were ready to start on our pilgrimage west, a certain gentleman who signed himself 'Backwoodsman' wished to know on what conditions we would overcome and settle California. He gave us to understand that he had his authority from headquarters to treat with us on this matter. I thought that President Polk was our friend at that time; we have thought so since and we think so now. We agreed to survey and settle California, we drawing the odd numbers and the Government the even numbers; and I think the president was precipitated into the Mexican War, and our prospective calculations fell through, otherwise we should have gone to California and settled it. Many of you were not aware of this."

I am not aware that this statement has ever been published in our papers, perhaps but few know of its existence, and I thought it might be of some use and interest to the elders. Several of the Utah church historians have referred to the fact that there was such a scene on foot at the time, "for the purpose of swindling the Latter Day Saints out of millions," but "needless to say that the leaders did not agree to this gigantic, swindling scheme." But the above tells a different story. The leaders, that is, Brigham Young and his sympathizers among the leaders of the church, did agree to this swindling scheme. The scheme failed and they found it necessary to settle in the mountains. Perhaps this is the real excuse for their claim of fulfilling the Prophet Joseph's plans and prophecy so-called. They claim that the prophet organized a company for the purpose of exploring the mountain regions with a view of settling the Saints there, and prophesied that they would go there and become a mighty people. A very nice story to fall back on after the gigantic swindling scheme agreed to by members of Congress and a few members of the church, unbeknown to the Saints in general, had failed.

In conclusion let me say that I am glad to be a representative of a cause that does not need to adopt the shut-door policy as a means of self-protection or to make excuses for its mode of procedure. As was the first organization, so is the church as reorganized, based upon the word of God, and its policy is outlined and directed by his revelations to us. Every time his word to us is based upon the foundation laid for the work in an early day and leads us step by step towards the fulfillment of that which has been outlined for the church in former years. As witness, for instance, the grand instructions given us by the Lord at our last conference, and I sincerely hope that we may go to work with full purpose of heart, unitedly, and carry them out, that Zion may put on her beautiful garments (character) and shine. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee."—Isaiah 60: 1. And that she may do so even to the fulfillment of verse 3: "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising." For then will our work in the world be a greater success, truth triumph, and the honest in heart come to and rejoice in the light. May God speed the day.

Yours in the faith,

PETER ANDERSON.

WABASH, ONTARIO, November 28, 1909.

Dear Herald: I have been in the church eight years last August. I was baptized and confirmed by Elder Alvin Knisley. I was so young then that I did not realize what I was doing, and have often wished that I had waited till I was older. I have been isolated and away from any meetings, and have mingled with the world so long that I find it hard to humble myself for God's work, but I trust that the Saints will pray for me, that I may become more faithful and endure to the end.

The Saints here have a lovely church and a few earnest workers. They have Sunday school and prayer meeting Sunday morning, preaching Sunday evening and Religio Friday night. I enjoy the meetings very much.

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MINNIE DUNLAP.

WAMSLEY, OHIO, November 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: Our branch at Crabtree, known as the Pleasant Valley Branch, is in good condition. It was organized last February, by Elder G. T. Griffiths, and there are at this time nearly seventy-five members. The writer held sacrament meeting there the first Sunday in this month and the Saints took an active part in the services. We have a live Sunday school, a good Religio, one deacon, two teachers, one elder, and a priest. Samuel W. Henry was ordained an elder last August at the conference at Crabtree.

It is surely slow work to get the gospel before the people. There is a Union church near Friendship, Ohio, and I think

I will get Brother Henry, of Lucasville, Ohio, and hold some meetings there sometime this winter. I do not think the gospel was ever preached there. Brother Henry and myself are young in the work, but the command is to be doers of the word and not hearers only.

Yours in the conflict,

I. T. MITCHELL.

Editors Herald: The Columbia Encyclopedia of Useful Knowledge, by Marshall Everett, contains a description of the construction of lifeboats which are being propelled by the use of gasoline, under the head of "Life saving by gasoline." The description is as follows, on pages 143, 144:

"Nearly a dozen of these boats are now in use in this country, and every one has had a chance, and successfully demonstrated its superiority for the work it does, over any previous type of craft used for the same purpose. So successful are these boats that others are being built and installed—old boats not too weatherworn are being changed to motor boats, and as soon as appropriations allow, the work will be extended until the coasts are all supplied with these craft, wherever it is possible to use them. It seems odd when one thinks of it, that little cockle shell thirty-four feet long should live and ride out seas and wind which are too much for the huge bulk which wrecks and needs assistance. But these little boats are built with one idea—safety—and all the skill and inventive ability of the builders are designed to this one end. The boats are built of the most expensive materials which can be obtained—mahogany. Two layers are used, crossing each other on the slant, with fine canvas and waterproof paint between. They have a false bottom, through which run eight-inch tubes, closed with valves, which keeps the water out. But let a wave fill the boat, and in less than half a minute, the water all runs out of these tubes, back into the sea. The boats can not stay upset, and turn over with difficulty; on the bottom is a heavy keel of metal—gun metal—because that does not rust easily. . . . This eighteen hundred pounds of keel flops a boat right side up as often and as fast as a wave upsets the boat, and it must be a mighty wave indeed that accomplishes this feat.

"The boat can not sink, for there are eight watertight compartments in it; any one of which is sufficient to hold the boat on the surface full of men and women."

I copy this from the book and send it for publication, thinking it might be advantageous to those who have to meet the criticism that is so often brought against the barges which the Brother of Jared was commanded to build with a hole in the top and a hole in the bottom, as spoken of in the Book of Mormon, page 504. In the construction of these modern boats which are built for the express purpose of saving life in case of the wreckage of large vessels upon the sea, and we are told that they can not sink, there is a false bottom, through which run eight-inch tubes closed with valves, which keeps the water out: but let a wave fill the boat and in half a minute the water all runs out through these tubes back into the sea. The brother of Jared was commanded to build a boat with a hole in the bottom, but this safety vessel built in modern times has eight holes in the bottom, through which the water escapes back into the sea.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 22, 1909.

Dear Herald Readers: For several months I have not written a letter to our marvelously efficient literary exponent of the progress of God's work in these latter days, although I have sent some items of incidental happenings, and I felt that it was due from me that I answer the request of my conscience, and the demands of my many sons and daughters, brothers and sisters, in the gospel, that I present some thoughts that I believe will be of mutual interest to one and all.

My labor for the summer and fall has not been very encouraging, yet the work of gathering in young and old continues quite regularly in the city, and there are others who are waiting till pleasanter weather to obey. Several have accepted the privilege of the baptismal covenant within the last few weeks, and others have been more deeply considering the advantages and obligations of the covenant previously made. While all this is true I see evidences that the parable of the ten virgins will most likely be fulfilled, and this part of God's moral heritage will furnish the necessary quota to its fulfillment. It seems that all have not the necessary spiritual power within to keep the peace of godliness and brotherly kindness continually burning. We pray for such, lest they lose those things which they have already wrought, and receive not a full reward.

The regular Christmas cheer is being shown in the entertainments preparing, but I have thought how much more lasting would be that cheer, and how much more of the Christ-life would be represented if a large portion of the amounts that are used in present preparations were spent to establish the children's home, and care for the children of the missionary who can not more extensively take the field of usefulness till such care is rendered. The Christmas cheer should be seasoned by the sacrifice of that thought to be the most precious for the gospel's sake, as was so fully represented in the sacrifices of Joseph and Mary, and as represented by the precious gifts of the wise men. Oh, how distorted is the world's views of the Christ-gift, yet in many ways God's children pattern thereafter, and pure religion is not correctly represented. In the name of Christ institutions are being builded for the avowed purpose of saving the young, especially the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., and as it was with the apostate conditions of the church in all ages, they rose up to play. In the Y. M. C. A. the pool table is made prominent, and in the Y. W. C. A. the bowling alley is being introduced, and in the name of Christ men are standing in the pulpits and announcing that we should not be too restrictive on the dance halls or the Sunday theaters, and even some of the prominent club women (I don't know whether they are mothers or not) are favoring the Sunday theater and some other things equally as bad. It occurs to me that gradually the church and her people are being converted by the world, and the things of the world are finding their way into the lives and fortunes of those who have professed to give their all for the sake of the Christ. May God's people not be drawn into this whirlpool of Christianized worldliness, so far that the present preparation for the coming of the Christ and the gathering together of his people, may not be delayed.

Last Monday, at the Ministerial Association, Mr. J. B. Weaver, jr., the illustrious son of Hon. J. B. Weaver, sr., spoke of the church from a layman's viewpoint. The church, said he, fills up that which science, as at present understood, may lack. Science represents that there are two disharmonies in nature that it should and will correct. 1. There is no desire in the physical man for death, but something of a dread therefor. 2. There should be no pain at birth. It is also explained that the universal desire in the human heart for worship is but the aspiration that dwells there to answer the unknown in nature, or those things that lie beyond the physical. This the church answers when she, through the Holy Spirit, illuminates the physical, and thus goes beyond science and fills up where she is lacking, because science is only dealing with the material. He claims that the cause of the removal of denominationalism is the growth of uncertainty as to the limitations of the divine mind. While the churches, sectarian, had nearly become disrupted by opposition to future probation, now the people being more uncertain as to that point make them less contentious, and the layman's view is that God had in some way provided for future probation. In speaking of the "Mormons" and the evidences of a working faith as shown by them in the deep ruts that still exist along the trail made in their crossing the State of Iowa, he said, explanatorily, "the Book of Mormon does not teach polygamy; it condemns it. That was a feature added to what was called 'Mormonism' by Brigham Young after they left Nauvoo." I said within my heart, "Thank God, for such men of honor and truth. I am glad that I am here." Some one of the ministers with whom I had a controversy over this very point some years ago, found a convenient excuse not to remain longer to hear what was said. Others of the ministers, and I wish to say the more prominent ones, the more influential ones, indorsed the statement.

He thought that the church of to-day should spend less time in representing their denominationalism, and more time in teaching the people how to live godly in this present world, and teach more about the present world and this world's Creator. While he was inclined to the gradual growth of the world toward a better condition, and toward this condition through the principle of evolution through the spiritual, yet in the main his thought showed a mind beyond the creeds of the churches. His explanation of the cause of pain at birth was the overlooking of the curse pronounced upon woman. He claimed pain was always the result of stress, and stress was the legitimate result of growth, and in this way he claimed all pain had been brought in birth. This last thought showed a mind tintured by the "higher critics."

The last report of the State Anti-Saloon League, as given at their regular meeting last Friday night, was the most encouraging in its history. Out of debt in every department, and a small fund on hand, and the spread of its influence in eliminating the saloon, and the passage of such laws as would make the existence of the saloon harder, and the observance of temperate practices easier; yet not a pleasing prospect for the adoption of a constitutional amendment favoring prohibition. The aim this year will be to get rid of the mulct law, thus leaving statutory prohibition, and work through the coming constitutional convention for a prohibitory amendment, and see that men favorable to prohibition were elected this year and all the years to follow.

The same headquarters committee was selected, and only one change in the officers of the league, so that the present officers are the same as last year, with the exception of the selection of Henry Wallace, of the Wallace Farmer, as vice-president. The trustees of the league are resolute and zealous men for the temperance cause. So far we can afford to indorse their work.

Some weeks ago there were placed in my hands all the papers of Mr. Aaron W. Harlan, uncle of the present curator of the Historical Department of the State of Iowa. He was born November 15, 1811, and still living near where he settled in Iowa in 1834, a more complete sketch of whom will no doubt be given later on; but a few items only in relation to his acquaintance with Joseph Smith and Brigham Young will be noted at the present. He was a skeptic along religious lines and looked upon the Latter Day Saints and their faith as merely an investigator of facts. Of Joseph Smith he wrote August 25, 1903, "I tried to understand him, but to me he was incomprehensible." On the same date he wrote of Brigham Young, "I had but little acquaintance with him, but he must have had a strong hypnotic influence besides faith, patience, and perseverance." On March 20, 1891, he wrote to me in reply to inquiries about Joseph Smith and the faith he advocated as follows, from Croton, Iowa:

"Sir: . . . I will try to answer your questions. The Mormons commenced settling at Nauvoo in the spring of 1838. Their teachings were similar to the Campbellites and Baptists, but in addition they believed the Book of Mormon, and was as exemplary as other Christians, and seemed more willing to assist one another. It was in 1840 that I made the acquaintance of Joseph Smith, the so-called Mormon prophet. I visited him at his own residence in Nauvoo, ate with him at his own table. The meal was prepared by his own wife, Emma. I ate with him at his own table and continued to visit him about every six months thereafter as long as he lived.

"The so-called spiritual wife doctrine was not talked of until 1842, and it immediately produced a schism in the church, Joseph and Hyrum Smith opposed to it, whilst William Smith, another brother, was said to favor it.

"Joseph Smith always spoke against it as a heresy that would prove the downfall of many. The names of Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon in those days were inseparable.

"And on the day that the polygamous portion of the church chose Brigham Young as chief ruler, Sidney Rigdon with his anti-polygamous friends were at the old stone house with doors barred, reorganizing the church on its original principles of purity.

"I was there on that day, but was not permitted to enter the house. There was quite a number of persons on the outside that understood that Rigdon was reorganizing the church. The name of Sidney Rigdon seems almost forgotten. He lived a pure Christian life, and died full in the faith.

I was born in 1811, and of course am now well along in my eightieth year, and have always been known as a skeptic since I was eighteen, but have always been lenient towards all kinds of fanatics, and have at all times insisted that the Mormons should have their constitutional privileges.

"A. W. HARLAN.

"P. S. I herewith make some suggestions of the people that followed Brigham Young to Salt Lake. Most of them were driven from Illinois, and did not at any time believe in polygamy. . . ."

Weather has been adverse to night meetings the last two months. November was a rainy month, and December has been a cold month. The roads were so muddy during November that the people could not attend conveniently, and unless much interested would not attend, and since it has frozen up it is so rough and icy that travel is done with difficulty and danger. Cottage meetings were tried last week, but on account of the cold and slippery walks but few attended. Indifference had something to do with a small attendance, and this condition seems to be on the increase. People that I visit seem to be more fully wedded to their idols. The churches are becoming so liberal that people can be members and live about as they did before. But to accept the gospel as it is in Christ requires too much of a sacrifice for them to make. But the witness of the gospel is thus being proclaimed to individuals and families, preparatory to the withdrawal of the Spirit from the Gentiles, which is rapidly occurring as I view it. To meet with conditions as they now exist among the people is at times discouraging, yet when we consider it properly it is but another evidence that the hastening time is upon us, and the gathering time is here. May God hasten his work in its time, and give me wisdom to occupy till he comes, in the most efficient way. A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all the readers of the HERALD.

In Christ,

J. F. MINTUN.

OMAHA, NEBRASKA, December 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: The weather has been zero now for about a week, but the services have been quite well attended, and the interest seems to be increasing. The Sunday school has been having a contest for a month or more. The school is divided into two parts and each side is trying to bring the most new attendants. It is creating quite an interest and increasing the attendance some. The Sunday school will give an entertainment the eve of the 28th, entitled, "The waif's Christmas." The Religio and normal classes are holding their interest quite well.

We have a good offer coming from the citizens of Florence, Nebraska, to hold the next reunion there, but the locating committee has not yet decided on the place to hold it.

A better place of worship is still a subject of interest, but the thing that is of more interest than all else is our special meetings to be held in the heart of the city in a public building known as the Lyric Theater, commencing February 13, and lasting through February 20, 1910, with the exception of Wednesday evening. The building costs one hundred dollars, fifty of which are already paid. We expect to use one hundred dollars or more in advertising. If nothing prevents, Bro. J. W. Wight, missionary in charge, and Bro. Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, will be the speakers, with a possibility of others to help. We are very anxious to make this a success. So far as we know this is the first effort of the kind in the State. I want to correct a mistake that has gotten started, about the character of this building. It is a commercial college building and there are no cheap shows of any kind held in it. In fact, we were informed by the man with whom we did the business that there were no shows held there except once in a while one of home talent.

They have just closed a series of meetings there by an evangelist from Kansas City by the name of Doctor Woods. It was said that at times there was not room to accommodate the people. This building is located on Nineteenth and Farnum streets, and in fact we have not seen a better place in the city to hold our meetings. We hope to have the prayers of all that these meetings may be a success.

J. W. Wight was with us yesterday at eleven, and spoke to a very good audience. He gave us one of his earnest efforts, to, we believe, the satisfaction of all.

3015 FRANKLIN STREET.

J. M. BAKER.

WATERFORD, ONTARIO, December 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am still interested in the progress of the angel's message and anxiously await the arrival of each issue.

At this writing I wish to chronicle the death of Bro. Lorenzo Smith, youngest son of Bro. Amos and Sr. Elizabeth Smith, of Trowbridge.

The Reverend Mr. Salton and some of the choir members of the Methodist Church assisted the writer conduct the funeral services. Our association was very agreeable, Mr. Salton opening and closing the service, while I preached the sermon. At the conclusion of our remarks, which I felt were inspired to some degree, Mr. Salton commented very favorably upon the sermon, stating that he was very much interested and that he felt the consciences of all had been touched. He unhesitatingly stated that I had been "inspired" and that I had presented the gospel in "power and demonstration." We were pleased for the work's sake to hear this acknowledgment and trust the good Spirit our friend then felt and recognized may continue with him, revealing the strength and beauty of our doctrine, together with the many rich experiences of the Spirit's presence and power that have come into the life of every true Saint.

Brother and Sister Smith sustain a great loss in their home by the death of their young son. They are Saints always alive to the interests of the church and we feel sure they will be comforted by the hope of the gospel. They have the sympathy of all in their bereavement.

In bonds,

FREDERICK GREGORY.

PORTLAND, MAINE, December 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: Brother Macgregor is doing a good work at Stonington, Maine. May the good work spread and in due time come to this place. Portland is a city of about fifty thousand inhabitants. I am alone, so far as I know. Bro. J. C. Foss' letter in the HERALD of November 24 reminds me of a little incident that happened a few years ago. I was building a house at Little Deer Isle, Maine. Brother Foss came by and asked me if I belonged to the church. I replied, No. "Well, you ought to," he replied, and went his way. I do belong now, and am trying to live as a Saint should, but I do not claim to have reached perfection yet.

All the preaching I have is the church papers and books. Every Saint should take the HERALD and Ensign at least. I have just finished reading the Braden-Kelley Debate, and I can not help feeling glad that I have accepted the angel's message. The true gospel shows up fine when compared with anything that men can get up in their own strength.

If anyone of our elders should happen to come to Portland, they will find me at work at Nathan Wood & Sons, 428 Fore street. Do not forget to call and see me.

W. S. POWERS.

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 3, 1909.

Dear Herald: The holiday season is again with us. We have had our season of national Thanksgiving, and yet, with the children of God, every season and every day is a day of thanksgiving. And what of the holiday season—Christ, the Son of God, the great gift of the Father to all his children? All of us will give gifts of some kind to some one at this holiday season, because the Father has given the great gift of his Son to us.

What are we going to give to some one else, and what are we going to give to ourselves? Does every family in the church have the HERALD, and if not we ought to give it to ourselves, and if we do have it no more valuable gift could be made to some one who does not have it. Yes, our dear HERALD; it ought to be in the home of every member of the church. It comes to us weekly. Its dress is neat and clean. In outward appearance it makes a fine showing, will stand out with any religious publication that we know of. And then, what do its pages contain? Food, the richest and most nutritious for the spiritual man. Our editors and publishing house spare no pains to do their part in giving us a valuable publication. It is but the duty of every reader of the HERALD to do all he can to show to the editors and publishers that he appreciates our church paper.

Then there is Autumn Leaves, a magazine for the youth of the church. It ought to be in every home, and it ought to be in every public library and reading room in the United States. The current numbers of the Leaves as a magazine are almost perfect. Those of us who read it and know of its almost perfect character, ought to place it in the hands of those who do not have it. Solicit a subscription for it, and donate one if you possibly can.

Zion's Hope is the paper for the children. It is our Sunday school paper. Its pages contain only wholesome food for the children of the church. The editor, good Sister Walker, has long held the editorial pen for the Hope, and only that which is good is sent out through its columns. Let Sunday schools increase the number of their copies for the coming year, and by having a few more copies extend the influence which the Hope will have. Place the Hope in the isolated families of the church where there are children. It will do them good. Let the readers of the Hope do all they can to extend the influence of their paper.

The Journal of History. When it was started two years ago there were some who thought there was no place for it. On the contrary, it ought to be in the home of every branch officer in the church. Leading men in the church long felt the need of such a journal. In the publication of this quarterly the church is building for the future more than in any other one thing. The good that the Journal is doing, and certainly must do, can not be estimated. Its influence is far-reaching. Every member of the church could read it with profit; they ought to read it. And now that the subscription price is reduced to one dollar we hope to see many names added to the list. Every library in the church ought to have it on file. Every library in the land ought to have it on file with all the other magazines and periodicals that are found in the reading rooms. Every historical society in the United States ought to have our Journal of History. The press of the United States for many years has had much to say of the work of the unlettered boy and his work since 1830. Historical facts and data published by those who know him best should be sent out as far and as wide as have been sent the errors concerning him. We do not believe that there is any work the church can do along some lines in the way of extending a true knowledge of the faith than can be done by extending the circulation of The Journal of History. Its value to the church is not yet known and realized only to a very small number.

There is still another of the church publications that has its own individual field—The Sunday School Exponent. It is perfect so far as typographical appearance is concerned. It has its several departments, all well suited for the several members and grades of the Sunday schools. It is a fact that Sunday school officers and teachers are not modern, up-to-date, and first-class, unless they have the Exponent. At the close of each volume the twelve numbers should be bound and added to the library of every branch.

Zion's Ensign, the "missionary paper" of the church. It has many readers, and many of these readers enjoy it so much that they are willing solicitors for it, and they could do no better at this holiday season than to still further extend its circulation.

Can we all name all the publications of the church? Have we completed the list? Well, there is the Quarterly yet, senior, intermediate, primary, and first primary, and the Religio Quarterly. All of these text-books, small as they are, ought to be in the home of every member of the church where there are members of the family who can use the several grades.

Then there is the catalogue of the church books. If you do not have a copy of the last one issued by the Herald Publishing House, send and get one. There is such a list of holiday presents to be selected from it that all can find what they want. The church, since the building of the new office of publication, has facilities for printing any number of papers, and they have a large stock of the books on hand. Let us all buy one book, at least, and see what a swelling the bank account with which the publishing house would have to begin the year 1910; see how they would clear off the debt that has been incurred in the building, and when that was cleared away how they would use the surplus to further extend the work of the publishing department.

We can not close without a mention of Graceland. Poultry Pointers is published for the benefit of Graceland. Almost every family in the church has poultry, and Poultry Pointers is a modern, first-class, up-to-date poultry journal. We ought to order it, and thus contribute that much to Graceland.

Anxious for a greater extension of the printed matter of the church, and wishing the HERALD a Happy Christmas and a joyful New Year, I am,

Kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

EROS, LOUISIANA, December 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: It is a pleasure to me to read the many kind letters from the people of God in the HERALD. As this is the only branch in the State of Louisiana, I thought I would let you hear a word from us in the sunny South. The work here is slowly moving onward. I rejoice to see the shadow lifted that was thrown on it last year through debate. It seemed that many preferred the dark side and they joined with Utahism against us. When Brn. James M. and Edgar H. Smith left here last year our branch was in a downcast condition. However, we battled on as best we could. We have no place of worship, but we held Sunday school and prayer service, and I preached all that I could in my weak way under an arbor. As I had just been ordained, my work was not very successful, although I baptized three.

We looked for our appointed elders through the summer, but on account of their work elsewhere, they did not reach us till late fall. At last, Brn. J. T. Riley, Jesse M. Simmons, and James M. Smith reached us and found us in a rugged condition. Bro. James Smith was bothered with a tooth for a few days, but Brother Riley began meetings immediately and Brother Simmons assisted him for a week. It looked as though they could not raise any interest and that there was no use to try.

Brother Riley had calls to leave and left the other brethren with us, and I am thankful to say that he could have left no more faithful ones. They labored day and night for three long weeks, and with the power of God helping them, they revived interest, and removed the dark vale to a great extent. They broke into Mormonism and baptized one of their brightest members. The dust was brushed from Bibles that had been there for years. Other preachers said that if they didn't stop their preaching they would break up their churches. They baptized eight souls and left others ready. A number expressed the wish that they could stay longer. It took two large rooms and all outdoors to hold the crowds. I trust that they will be with us again before conference and again next summer, and I think they can accomplish a great deal. I rejoice to see this angel message spreading, and to know that it shall stand for ever.

Ever praying for the day when the laborer shall obtain his reward,

W. H. FULLER.

NEBRASKA CITY, NEBRASKA, December 8, 1909.

Editors Herald: This writing finds me in action in my field to which I was transferred from South Dakota, where we spent the joyful summer months. Here we have been assigned the three cities, Wilber, Auburn, and Nebraska City, to work between now and General Conference. District conference convenes in this city, I believe, in January, but whether we will be permitted to attend or not depends on the proximity and the depth of interest in this point of labor; for I think our single devotion to the work should beget in us an incentive to forego sometimes that which amounts to little more than advertisement and personal gratification.

It is cold and snowy, more so than I have witnessed since my winter in Idaho. What a contrast is a winter even this far north with where we spent one year ago, sunny Arizona. And even there we were at an altitude of over five thousand feet.

I can not remember when I had the last Christmas home. This one will not be an exception, though but one hundred and fifty miles away, save that in a sense I have home with me. You can not all say that, and I won't always. I went home in the fall, a rather novel proceeding in the case of the writer, at the instance of sickness, and partly to prepare for winter. As soon as such preparations were made and I could leave home and be humane, I left all and came thither and am laboring the nearest I have for years.

This branch is officered by Brethren Higgins and Myers, both students, both young men, and indeed we have had a fine time colaboring. My permanent address remains 1037 West Maple avenue, Independence, Missouri. While not in the papers so frequently as formerly, I endeavor to be as active as ever and to keep right with the Great Master.

ALVARADO, TEXAS, December 4, 1909.

Editors Herald: There are only a small number of Saints here, but they seem very dear to me, and most of them are trying to live up to the commandments the best they know how. We have had some good meetings here, but the people are so prejudiced that only a few would come out to hear us. I hope some day they will turn and see the light which was delivered to the Saints. It is my prayer that I may let my light shine, that I may be an instrument in bringing others into the fold. He that doeth the will of the Father shall know of the doctrine. I have so many trials that it seems that I can hardly overcome them; I feel this morning that I might be the weakest of God's children. As I scan the letters in the HERALD I find many interesting ones. I enjoyed Sister Long's letter. It was certainly fine. I have seen the sick healed many times instantly. There is nothing impossible with God. When I look back and see what good times we have had, it makes me rejoice in my soul to think how we enjoy the many blessings of God. And then to think that some of us are separated by death and some have moved away; it makes me feel sad.

My prayer is that when I shall be called over the chilly tide from this world of sorrow I will be prepared to go and be permitted to reign with Christ a thousand years. We ought to live humble and prayerful lives, for the end of time is not far distant.

Ever praying for the upbuilding of God's cause,

Your sister in Christ,

MISS LILLIE MCALISTER.

CRABTREE, OHIO, December 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: I have been in this work about a year, and have been receiving the HERALD about four months, and often when reading its columns, I have had a desire to bear a word of testimony and thanksgiving for this grand work. I am truly glad that in these the last days I have had an opportunity to hear the gospel in its fullness, and I feel glad indeed that I have obeyed the message. I can not help in this work as much as others, but remember, dear brothers and sisters, that the more we help in this work and the more we do, the better it is for us in this life and in the life to come. May God bless us all and help us to see our whole duty, and seeing it to obey. I often think we should strive to do more and more, for we are not our own. Jesus bought us with his precious blood. How he has suffered and died that you and I might be redeemed through him if we only believe in the plan he has left sufficiently to be doers of the word and not hearers only. Then he commanded the disciples to pray earnestly that they enter not into temptation. You remember how those wicked ones took him, put a crown of thorns on his head, blindfolded him, and smote him, and spat in his face; and he bore it all in patience and murmured not. So we should try to cultivate that spirit within us, that if anyone trespass against us, we shall be like Him and willing to forgive.

Then, too, they nailed him to the cross, and left him there to die in the most cruel way in which it was possible for him to die. This was all according to the Scriptures, and he suffered it all for you and me. Oh, that we could stand trials and tribulations as he has stood them!

I wish to inform the readers of the HERALD that the members of the Pleasant Valley Branch of the Ohio District at Crabtree, Ohio, have decided to build a house of worship, said house, when not in use by the Saints, to be open to any denomination, and that I have been appointed one of a committee to solicit for said building, and anything you can donate will be received with many thanks. The Lord loves a cheerful giver, and anything you give he will repay you abundantly. Anything you wish to donate send to

DAVID E. ALTMAN.

DECEMBER 2, 1909. °

Editors Herald: After reading an article over the name of "An observer" in the HERALD of November 17; I decided to send my own experience in the matter of asking God for guidance in marrying. If it will help anyone I shall be thankful that I did not put the thought aside.

I came into the church October 23, 1892, being baptized and confirmed by Elder H. J. Davison. The marriage question was something I did not care to discuss, as I was happy in my school work and now thrice happy in the church. In the early part of the summer of 1894, I had a very peculiar dream. I will give a brief outline of it: A young man came after me to go with him. His horse was headed toward the west and when I turned to look in that direction, I could see, as it were, a tunnel through the wilderness, so thick were the trees on either side and meeting overhead. He asked me three times to go with him, and each time a voice said, "Stay."

He drove into the tunnel, after saying to me that the forest to the east was full of peril. After he had gone out of hearing I started east and as I advanced the woods receded until it disappeared and the golden glow of the rising sun appeared. Presently I saw a person coming toward me, and as I attempted to pass by him, he stepped beside me and, taking my hand, said, "Come with me, I will protect you." I hesitated, and a voice over my head said, "Go with him." I thought he must have heard; but seeing he did not, I said nothing, but walked willingly on. How beautiful the landscape looked in the clear light. We walked on until a slight turn in the road brought us in front of a little white church. We went up the steps and went inside the door as it swung open for us. Then I awoke to find that I had overslept.

I told the dream to the sisters at Prayer Union a short time after that, and then it left me. Of course when that first young man came I said no very decidedly. In the fall of 1896 there came a young man to our town from a place directly east of home. This young man after a time asked me to be his wife. I hesitated, and he asked me why I did so. I made reply, "I am trying to think what Jesus would say." A voice above me said, "Say, Yes." I obeyed the voice, and not until all arrangements had been made for our marriage to be solemnized in the little white church around the corner, and our invitations had been out a week, did I think of the dream I had had three years before. After I had given my promise I felt a doubt and began to pray over the matter. It was not because I did not love the young man sufficiently; far from it. I wanted to do God's will. I asked God in the humblest way to put distance between us if he did not wish us to marry; I was willing to part with life even to do right.

Do you think, dear brother or sister, that when Mr. S. came nearer by several miles, to work in a different place, that it was by chance? I have never had cause to believe that God did not intend that I should marry the man I did, and with whom a happy home is enjoyed.

I could give more and stronger evidences that our heavenly Father will guide, but my letter is long now. Dear Saints, a happy home is not a thing to be ashamed of. Surely the Saints, above all others, should have such a reverence for the marriage vow that they would be very careful and ask God to guide. He is just as willing to point out our life companion to-day as he was in Isaac's time. He is the same loving Father and does not wish his children to have false modesty. Surely God's commands are holy and should not be treated in a way that will bring reproach from the world upon them. We were commanded to multiply and replenish the earth. Then why not ask God to guide in a matter, at once so important to ourselves and to the redemption of Zion?

Your sister,

A. I. SCOTT.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA, December 8, 1909.

Dear Herald: We do not have preaching here very often, but we have just closed a series of about six days in all, Brn. L. E. Hills and Fred B. Farr being the speakers. The meetings were held at our house and we had quite a good turnout.

My son's mother-in-law was very anxious that he be converted at Billy Sunday's meetings while he was there, but he did not approve of Sunday and only went once or twice to please them. She felt pretty bad about it, but I didn't. One day he asked me when we were going to have meetings again and I told him just as soon as Sunday left, and he requested that I ask Mrs. Miller, as he said she didn't know anything but that. Well, we had the meetings and the Spirit was there and some who were out of the church felt it also. This Mrs. Miller rather spoke in favor of Sunday at the second meeting, and one lady spoke up and said: "This man [Brother Hills] has preached more Bible than I have ever heard," and after that there was never a word heard.

Mrs. Miller said she didn't care what church my son belonged to, so it was a church, so she rather helped things along by her presence and was even willing that he should come to her house to hold meetings. I felt rather amused, but I thought it was helping us all, even bringing us to where she can hear. May the good work go on and may more souls be brought in. We are in need of some helpers, and if we had some we could start a Sunday school. We will live in hopes that the Lord will raise up some one in our midst.

Mrs. L. DULIN.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN, December 1, 1909.

Editors Herald: In a recent number of the Ensign, a sister writes that she is isolated from the Saints, and being lonesome, she sometimes mingles with Free Methodists, who, she says, endeavor to persuade her that she is deceived. She says they lay great stress on holiness, and also claim that they reach a condition in which it is impossible to commit sin. She also expressed a desire that some one would write, giving their views on holiness. While I do not feel qualified to dissect it, yet I desire to give my views on the subject.

It is understood by all religious bodies that it is impossible for any manner of sin to enter the kingdom of heaven. If this is true, then those who claim that it is impossible for them to sin are correct in theory, but not having accepted the true gospel, are necessarily wrong in practice. If we say we keep the law, not having it or knowing it, we speak falsely; and no amount of argument aside from obedience to the law can justify anyone or right the wrong. There are, however, certain conditions under which it is as impossible for man to sin as it is for God to lie, as is recorded in Hebrews 6: 18. Jesus said there was a great gulf fixed between the righteous and unrighteous, and so there is a line drawn between right and wrong. How is it possible for one to be wholly on both sides of the gulf, or live at one and the same time?

The individual who keeps the entire gospel law is wholly on one side of the line and so long as he keeps the law perfectly, it is impossible for him to commit sin; though such condition is no guarantee that the individual will not fail in keeping the law. "For whosoever keepeth the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."—James 2: 10. Notice that James says "whosoever keepeth the whole law." It is unlikely that anyone would be expected to keep the whole law, if such a thing were impossible. It is impossible for God to lie or commit any manner of sin for the sole and simple reason that he never gets on the wrong side of the line. Why, then, not as impossible for any individual who keeps the whole law continually? I said that the people making such claim were correct in theory, but wish to withdraw the statement, because of the fact that to be correct in theory requires a correct knowledge of the law. It is readily seen that persons making such claim and not knowing the law, do not understand the theory, nor can they. Hoping this first effort at writing will be acceptable and some one will be benefited,

Yours for truth,

J. F. GRIMM.

WILBURTON, OKLAHOMA, December 6, 1909.

Editors Herald: We can not help but tell of the good things we have been feasting on for the past two weeks. Brn. Lee Quick and Smith have been preaching here to good audiences and we are loath to part with them after feeling the Spirit of the Master so abundantly. Three were baptized after the meetings, Sr. Wylie Wooter and M. O. Harder and wife. It does our souls good to see so many of the young men that we have associated with in the past coming to the front and pushing this latter-day work along to victory.

This is a growing little town of twenty-five hundred people, with a branch of two hundred Saints, many of whom are trying to live and advance to that higher life beyond.

Yours for the spreading of truth and the final triumph of the Saints,

DAVID O. HARDER.

News From Branches

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Since last report we have received excellent counsel through God's servants, which if heeded will yield good fruit for the Master. Patriarch Butterworth has been laboring in the district, preaching and giving blessings which have given strength and caused many to rejoice in the love of God.

We are pleased to note that God's mercy and power have been manifested among God's afflicted children. Some who have been seriously ill have been raised to testify of their Father's love in answer to the prayers of his servants. Priesthood meetings were held November 15 and December 20, and regular branch business meeting December 7. All officers were sustained except the presiding teacher, that office now being filled by Brother Rhoades.

District conference convened here December 18 and 19, and we received two gospel sermons from one of our missionary force, Brother Sparling. By request of the Lamoni Branch, special fasting and prayer were engaged in Sunday, December 19, in behalf of our beloved President, Bro. Joseph Smith, who we trust has received the benefit desired therefrom.

At the afternoon session of conference four of our young men were ordained to offices in the priesthood, Bro. G. F. Barraclough, of Landsdown, to the office of elder; L. Joerndt, of Landsdown, priest; George Reeves, of Saint Louis, priest; and H. C. Burgess, of Saint Louis, teacher. Much good counsel was given them through the influence of the Spirit.

A committee was appointed by the conference to solicit funds and purchase a tent for the use of the district. Letters of removal were granted Sister Roberts and family and Bro. and Sr. J. M. Lloyd to the Independence Branch.

A pretty marriage ceremony took place the evening of December 22, when Brother Tanner pronounced the words that united Bro. Rob Lloyd and Sr. Myrtle Peters, who will walk the journey of life together. These young people are esteemed very highly and we extend to them best wishes for a long and prosperous life.

As another year is opening before us we enter upon it with renewed desires for growth and diligent service and in behalf of our district we extend to all best wishes of a happy and prosperous new year.

Your sister in Christ,
E. M. PATTERSON.

Conference Minutes.

LITTLE SIOUX.—The district convened at Bigler's Grove at 10.30 a. m., fortified by a spiritual prayer meeting held at 9 a. m. District President Sidney Pitt was chosen to preside and chose as his assistants Mark Jensen and W. A. Smith. T. O. Strand, assisted by Nellie Seelye, acted as clerk, and Bert E. Fry chorister, assisted by Miriam Coffman, organist. The president reported visiting all of the branches except three, and found the work in good condition with some marks of improvement. The Bishop's agent, A. M. Fyrand, reported $98.08 on hand at last reporting, received since in tithes and offerings, $1,450.55; expended, $386; remitted to Bishop E. L. Kelley, $1,050; balance on hand October 1, $112.63. Statistical reports from all branches excepting Evergreen were read. The totals, counting Evergreen as last reporting, are: Number at last reporting, 1,834; present number, 1,888; which includes 1 patriarch, 1 high counselor, 4 high priests; 3 seventy, 44 elders, 32 priests, 32 teachers, and 20 deacons; gained by baptism, 40; by letter, 11; by certificate, 12; total gain, 63; lost by letter, 8; by death, 1; total loss, 9; net gain, 54. Forty-eight ministerial reports were made, showing much labor done in a general way; 385 sermons, 545 times assisted, 61 priesthood meetings attended, 31 official visits made, and 1,685 other services attended. Also reported 61 baptisms, 80 confirmations, 2 ordinations, 6 marriages, 19 children blessed, and 256 sick administered to. The spiritual condition of the branches was encouraging. J. E. Gunsolley was recommended to the conference by the Mondamin Branch for ordination to the office of elder, and the recommendation was approved. At the Sunday morning service the brother was ordained under the hands of Sidney Pitt, sr., and Joseph W. Lane. A vote gave Logan 25 and Moorhead 20 for next conference. A vote prevailed to make Logan the choice. The time was left to the presidency of the district. The reports of the Sunday school and Religio conventions showed advancement. A committee consisting of W. W. Baker, W. A. Smith, and J. W. Lane, were appointed to visit with the Persia Saints, with a view to increasing the interest in the work. James D. Stuart, clerk.

EASTERN MICHIGAN.—The district convened with the McGregor, Michigan, Branch at 8 a. m., October 9, for social service in charge of O. J. Hawn and W. F. Smith. At 10.30 the Saints met in business session with William Grice, president, assisted by William F. Smith and William Davis; F. O. Benedict, secretary, assisted by R. Weaver, Sr. L. A. Terry, organist; and William Davis, chorister. The chair appointed William Campbell, Henry Campbell, and Fred McCullough, ushers; Henry Sheffer, William Volz, and Joseph Carpenter committee on credentials. The remainder of the session was occupied by William Davis, J. J. Bailey, R. Etzenhouser, and William Grice in short addresses. At 2 p. m. credential committee reported the following branches represented: Lebanon, Applegate, Minden City, Maple Valley, Pigeon River, Flint, Saint Gideon, Second Detroit, Belle River, Saint Clair, McGregor, Cass River, East Fremont, Laing, Huron Center, Saint Thomas, Black River, Cash, Port Huron, and Evergreen, and while some of the credentials were not properly filled, yet it recommended that the delegates named be given voice and vote. The report was received and adopted. Elders, priests, teachers, and deacons were given voice and vote. Statistical reports from the foregoing branches were read and approved. The district president reported a summary of the ministerial labors performed in the district: Total services attended, 1,441; fellowship services conducted, 175; sacraments administered, 40; sermons preached, 194; number baptized, 20; times administered to sick, 92. The Bishop's agent's report: Total receipts, $923.28; total expended, $590.39; balance due, $332.89. James Mead, E. Wyman, and G. R. McCoucha, auditors, reported favorably and both reports were adopted. A second resolution was adopted: "Whereas, the conferences of the Eastern Michigan District are becoming considerably of a burden to branches sustaining them, and whereas, it is the opinion of a number that the interests of the work in said district can best be conserved by a change, therefore be it Resolved, That we institute reunion work in the Eastern Michigan District. Resolved further that the district officers be constituted a committee to consider the advisability, location, etc., and report to June conference. Be it further resolved that the fall conference be held during reunion time. Resolved further that either by this committee or another appointed at the next conference, the matter be perfected if then found practicable." Sixty delegates were elected to the General Conference, and instructed to cast the vote for the district, also to cast majority and minority vote in case of division. The conference voted to pay district president's expenses to and from General Conference. At 7.30 p. m. Elder W. J. Smith, of Detroit, Michigan, preached, assisted by James Mead. At the close of the sermon the following items of business were transacted: Fred Simkiss was appointed a standing committee to audit the Bishop's agent's books, he to choose his assistant. The manner of raising the money to defray the expenses of the district president to and from General Conference was discussed and a vote was taken authorizing the district secretary to confer with the various branches throughout the district as regards thereto. At 6.30 a. m. on Sunday a young people's meeting was conducted by James Mead and R. Weaver. At the close of this meeting and at the beginning of the regular social services the sacrament was administered. This part of the service was in charge of R. Etzenhouser and O. J. Hawn. The remainder of this service was given over to the Saints and occupied in prayer, song, and testimony. The gift of tongues and interpretation was given through Elder Hawn, in which words of cheer, counsel, and encouragement were given the Saints, and to R. Etzenhouser was given the blessed assurance that God had and would be with him in the work to which he had been assigned, and also spoke in confirmation of the genuineness of the recent finds in Michigan by urging him on to a continued diligence, as many more things would be brought forth, and that his name would be had in honorable remembrance by future generations. At 10.30 preaching in charge of William Davis, assisted by F. O. Benedict. At 2.30 p. m. preaching by Elder O. J. Hawn, assisted by James E. Harriman. At 7 preaching by R. Etzenhouser, assisted by William Grice. A vote of thanks was tendered the Saints and friends at McGregor for having so royally entertained the conference. A report from the Bishop's agent, Elder A. Barr, that he had been unable to do any work since the last conference on account of sickness of himself and companion, and asking the Saints to remember them in prayer, was read and ordered spread upon the minutes of the conference. A collection was taken and the conference adjourned. Time and place of the next conference were left to the district president and missionary in charge. F. O. Benedict, secretary, Applegate, Michigan.

LONDON, ONTARIO.—The district convened at the Saints church, London, Saturday at 10 a. m., October 16, 1909, being called to order by the president, Elder R. C. Longhurst, of Vanessa, Ontario. A motion that the presidency of the district preside over this conference, with the privilege of choosing associates, prevailed. Brn. R. C. Russell and R. C. Evans were chosen to assist. The usual routine of the conference business was carried on without friction, a good spirit prevailing throughout. The speakers appointed for the preaching services were Elders F. B. Blair, Saturday at 8 p. m.; P. Gregory, Sunday, 11 a. m.; R. C. Russell, Sunday, 2.30 p. m.; Bishop R. C. Evans, Sunday, 7 p. m. The preaching was exceptionally good throughout. We do not single out either of the above-named brethren, and say his sermon was the best; this would be difficult. Suffice it to say, these are among the pulpit giants of latter-day Israel, and if the Saints would live as well as the elders preach and teach the gospel, the millennium would be here in a short time. Elder R. C. Longhurst was sustained as president of the New London District with Elder Samuel Pearson, of Saint Thomas, Ontario, and Elder John McKenzie vice-presidents. There was some discussion as to the propriety of naming the two assistants as first and second counselors, or as vice-presidents.

It was decided that the proper and the only term given in the law was vice-president—one or two. The secretary and treasurer were sustained, and so also the Bishop's agents. The Bishop's agent's report showed total receipts, $452.91; expenditures, $265.41; balance, $187.50. Delegates to General Conference: Brn. R. C. Russell, R. C. Evans, Elders Farnfield, H. O. Smith, and Elder and Sister Overholt. H. O. Smith declined being appointed. The president suggested the discussion of the question, "Shall we have a spring conference as usual or a few two-day meetings where the presidency decide the most good would be obtained?" Considerable discussion followed, after which a motion prevailed that when we adjourn, we do so to meet again in conference capacity on the second Saturday and Sunday in October, 1910. Following this motion, another one prevailed that the presidency be requested to arrange for several two-day meetings during the months of June, July, and August, in the several branches where they might deem it wise to hold them. Place for meeting in conference in 1910 was left to the missionary in charge and the presidency. The conference was the smallest ever witnessed in London, due, doubtless, to the fact that it was the first conference of the new district; but the greatest profit is not always derived where the largest audiences obtain. We had an enjoyable and profitable time, and trust that the same good Spirit will characterize the next session of the London District conference. P. H. Philippin, secretary.

Marriages.

SMITH—SHUMATE.—Mr. Cyrus H. Smith and Sr. Sarah Jane Shumate were united in marriage at the home of the groom's brother, Mr. Reuben B. Smith, in Union Township, Crawford County, near Dow City, Iowa, December 15, 1909, at 10.30 a. m., Elder Charles E. Butterworth officiating. The number of guests present was limited, though the evidence that all were happy was ample. The young people enter upon a united journey through life with the best wishes of all present, and we believe by all who know them.

BUTTERWORTH—PETERSEN.—At the home of Elder J. L. Butterworth, Dow City, Crawford County, Iowa, Wednesday, December 22, at 7.30 p. m., Elder James Leonard Butterworth and Sister Christina Petersen, of Gallands Grove, Iowa, were united in marriage, Patriarch Charles E. Butterworth officiating. Bro. J. L. Butterworth is the highly respected president of the Gallands Grove District, and the Saints will be glad to know that he has secured an excellent and worthy sister as a wife. There were but a few of the very near relatives present. A very nice supper was served after the ceremony. The congratulations were pleasant and heartfelt.

Died.

KIDDER.—Lovell Kidder was born April, 1828, at Weatherfield, Vermont; died at Fergus Falls, Minnesota, September 30, 1909. Married Jerntia Ann Brotherton, March 26, 1849. This union was blessed with eleven children, five of whom survive him. He was baptized by James J. Strang on Beaver Island, 1853, and clung to the faith till death. He passed through the dark and cloudy day and endured many trials for the gospel's sake. Services were conducted by Elders A. and L. Whiting at Clitherall, Minnesota, and the remains were buried in the cemetery there.

KIDDER.—Jerntia Ann, wife of Lovell Kidder, was born at Ellbridge, New York, May 10, 1830; died October 22, 1909, at Fergus Falls, Minnesota. Baptized July, 1844, by Elder Patton. Came in the Reorganization sixteen years ago. She was a faithful worker and it may well be said of her, "She hath done what she could." Her last request was for administration. She was a member of the Willing Workers at Clitherall, Minnesota, and the services were held there by Elders A. and L. Whiting.

GRAY.—Mary Ann, beloved wife of William H. Gray, died at her home in Hilbert, September 12, 1909. She was born at Carlingford, July 11, 1848, and was married March 2, 1874. She was the mother of eight children, two having died in infancy; four girls and two boys survive her, three of the girls being married. She was baptized at Carlingford by Elder Samuel Brown, December 9, 1879. Funeral was conducted by Bishop R. C. Evans. Burial in Mitchell Cemetery. She leaves her husband, children, three brothers, three sisters, and a host of friends to mourn.

SMITH.—Bro. Lorenzo, son of Bro. Amos and Sr. Elizabeth Smith, of Trowbridge, Ontario, November 30, after an illness of three weeks, aged 13 years, 9 months, and 23 days. La-grippe, followed by rheumatic fever and other complications, was cause of death. Funeral service in charge of Elder Frederick Gregory, assisted by Reverend Mr. Salton and choir members of the M. E. Church. Deceased was of a quiet nature and was well liked by all the community. On the Sunday before he died he told his father that he felt he must soon leave them and said he was prepared to go, and asked to meet his father on the other shore. Intment in Molesworth cemetery.

Do Americans Hurry—or Merely Concentrate?

Henry Van Dyke recently delivered a series of notable and widely discussed lectures on "The spirit of America," at the Sorbonne, in Paris. The January American Magazine publishes the fourth one of these in the form of an article. Its subject is, "Will power, work and wealth," in the course of which Professor Van Dyke has to say the following in regard to the prevailing impression in Europe that Americans are always in a rush:

"The high stimulation of will power in America has had the effect of quickening the general pace of life to a rate that always astonishes and sometimes annoys the European visitor. The movement of things and people is rapid, incessant, bewildering. There is a rushing tide in the streets, a nervous tension in the air. Business is transacted with swift despatch and close attention. The preliminary compliments and courtesies are eliminated. Whether you want to buy a paper of pins or a thousand shares of stock, it is done quickly. I remember waiting an hour in the Ottoman Bank at Damascus, once, to get a thousand francs on my letter of credit. The polite director gave me coffee and delightful talk. In New York the transaction would not have taken five minutes, but there would have been no coffee nor conversation. . . .

"The American moves rapidly, but if you should infer from this that he is always in a hurry, you would make a mistake. His fundamental philosophy is that you must be quick sometimes, if you do not wish to be hurried always. You must Mantelpieces.

"It has long been a question," says John D. Adams in Woman's Home Companion for January, "for those of good taste, as to where the average landlord obtained the ugly mantelpieces which are used in so many rented houses and apartments. What horrors of machine carving, scrollwork, meaningless curves, complicated shelves and brackets which were apparently meant only to catch dust, together with an absolute lack of fitness to the proportions of the room in which it was located—how many people have groaned before such a mantelpiece and realized that it was impossible through reasons of economy to replace it?"

"A mantelpiece ought to serve as a frame for the grate; it ought to be one of the most attractive furnishings of the room; it ought to be built on lines of simplicity and sound proportion, and have an air of strength and stability about it; it should have space to hold a chosen piece of pottery or two and a copper jug, a few books, perhaps a flower-holder and a small picture. Most important of all, it should be an integral part of the room in which it is located, and not a big, misplaced, bad-style ornament."

condense, you must eliminate, you must save time on the little things in order that you may have more time for the larger things. He systematizes his correspondence, his office work, all the details of his business, not for the sake of system, but for the sake of getting through with his work. In his office hangs a printed motto, "This is my busy day." He does not arrive at the railway station fifteen minutes before the departure of his train, because he has something else that he would rather do with those fifteen minutes. He does not like to spend an hour in the barber shop, because he wishes to get out to his country club in good time for a game of golf and a shower bath afterward. He likes to have a full life, in which one thing connects with another promptly and neatly, without unnecessary intervals. His characteristic attitude is not that of a man in a hurry, but that of a man concentrated on the thing in hand to save time."

THE GREAT MAN AND THE COMMON HERD.

There is an impression in the minds of some that to be great one must be entirely different from that which is sometimes contemptuously termed, "the common herd"; that he must have qualities that others do not have. But, in our opinion, to the contrary, the really great man is the man who has developed to the fullest extent the good qualities that are common to humanity in general. The great poet is the man who can adequately express the finer emotions that other men feel but can not express. The great statesman is the man who can formulate laws and measures that the common man recognizes to be right and is willing to support and obey.

It is one of the easiest things in the world, and one of the subtlest forms of pride, to consider one's self different from and superior to all others. The man who can amass wealth finally gets it into his head that he is made of different clay from the common herd; that he has faculties that others have not; that he is a man of destiny, set apart to enjoy all the good things of life; that it is his divine right to have yachts and temples and palaces, while his slow and blundering fellow men, made of coarser clay, different creatures, in fact, must content themselves with leeks and onions and cottages. This is the pride of material things.

The student who has read a little biology, physiology, psychology, theology, and other "ologies," knows something about the history of nations, can name the geological ages, and call the stars by their names, feels an intellectual pride that is just as absurd as that entertained by the other man.

The "reformer" who delves into principles and imagines that he has the secret of human welfare begins to feel the same feeling,—that he is the only man who thinks, the only man who "dares to think," the only one not bound by convention.

We may as well face the truth, that we, all of us, are of the common herd. The genius is of the common herd just the same as the degenerate,—only in one instance the good and great man has developed the good qualities common to the people, and repressed the evil qualities; while the degenerate has developed the evil qualities that are common to all men, and has permitted the good qualities to die out of his nature.

It is asked, How do you reconcile this with the fact that in many instances where great men have advanced new ideas, the common people have rejected the idea for a time and have even murdered the advocate? It is urged that the masses of the people have always been against the geniuses who would lift them up. This appearance is only on the surface. In fact, men have obtained recognition for greatness because they have proclaimed new ideas, when, in fact, those ideas were not original with them at all. The ideas were in the air; in the subconscious mind of the people everywhere. The men in question were the first to sense great ideas that were stirring and taking shape in the popular mind. In many instances great scientific discoveries have been made simultaneously by individuals who were far apart, and in the same way new political or religious ideas have been propounded simultaneously in many different parts of the world. Certain men who have developed their powers of discernment and expression are the first to detect and announce the dawn of a new era, the advent of new ideas. Later on they become renowned as men of great minds, entirely different from the "common herd," when in fact, they were simply promulgating that which was gradually beginning to dawn upon the mind of humanity.

One writer has said:

A thought, like the tide, is confined to no shore. That we are all part of the one restless energy moving toward the same goal is made clear in the way truth emerges simultaneously in various parts of the world. When Newton discovered the principles of calculus, which linked his name with Euclid's, it was found that Leibnitz was deciphering the same mystery. . . .

Clearly, thought knows no frontiers. In 1901 De Vries published his discovery of laws transforming the vegetable kingdom and recreating the earth. The wonderment of this scientist and his colleagues was profound when they learned that an Austrian monk, Gregor Mendel, had had revealed to him the same revolutionary laws while studying obscurely in his cloistered garden.

The advent of every invention discloses throughout the world men of genius working in their several ways upon the same idea or principle, and the most fortunate must needs defend his rights and emoluments in the courts. But no man can patent, copyright, or monopolize thought, which is universal and the common property of mankind.

We can imprison a sunbeam, but we can not monopolize the source of light.

Aerial flight, communication without wires, and all electrical advance are the achievement of many minds quickened by the interrelation of contemporary thought.

Immediately upon the announcement of new ideas, the ultraconservative element in society, which usually also has vested interests that are threatened by new ideas, makes an attack upon the man or men advocating them and stirs up the popular mind against them, thus obscuring the real issue for a time. In the days of Christ, we are told that at the first the common people received him gladly; they recognized in his teaching that which was in harmony with their best ideas; they saw in his character their own best qualities fully developed. He was not a different creature. He was a man like themselves, with characteristics such as they had, one of the "common herd." But the priests, who represented the ultraconservative element, and whose vested interests were at stake, began to stir up the popular mind against him, and were at the back of his persecution.

But in all cases, when the misrepresentation and agitation has passed, and the common people have had time to formulate their opinion carefully, they have immediately decided in favor of the man who had promulgated the new truth. This explains the phenomenon so often noticed, that at first the masses seem to be against the reformer, later on they are with him, and reconciles that phenomenon with the idea advocated in the Book of Mormon that when the facts are fully set forth it is not common that the majority of the people will decide in favor of that which is wrong.

"WE THANK THEE, O GOD, FOR A PROPHET, TO GUIDE US IN THESE LATTER DAYS."

The hymn, of which the above quotation is the opening line, was written a good many years ago. It was one of the earliest hymns we remember of hearing sung. At the time at which it was written it undoubtedly expressed a sentiment of praise and thanksgiving of the grateful people for the restoration of the gospel by means of instituting among men the prophetic principle, by which men were to be guided, and restored through the means of a prophet, the glad news of the salvation which the Lord had prepared, "A light, to lighten the Gentiles and the glory of thy people, Israel." As stated by good old Simeon, while gazing upon the child in the far off temple of Jerusalem, it was then a swelling peon of exultation and triumph, uttered from the souls of redeemed people.

We have heard this hymn during the last half century under conditions very materially different than those under which it was written and sung at the first. When first uniting with the Reorganization movement, it used to be sung in something like the pathos and spirit of inspiration which accompanied its use when sung in earlier days, and at times from that period until now, we have heard it when its pealing cadences carried the same exalting influence that used to characterize it in those early days; but we confess that we have heard it under circumstances and in conditions when it seemed to be an inconsistent and absurd travesty, almost bordering upon blasphemy.

We have made several tours in the West, beginning with 1876, especially in 1885 and in 1889, when we traversed in connection with Brn. Joseph Luff and R. J. Anthony some of the settlements in Utah from Beaver on the south to Richmond on the north of Salt Lake City, and from there up into Montana as far as Bozeman. In every instance where we were permitted the use of the ward houses of the dominant church in Utah, where we were privileged to present our views to the people, and the singers of the local congregation were invited to sing for us, we were greeted with this hymn. It was too apparent to be misunderstood for a single moment that the motive which prompted the singing of this hymn, under the circumstances of the occasion, was to exhibit a reverence for the father and deprecate the son. While we clearly saw the motive, and recognized the implied reproof, we were always able to sing the hymn with those who led the singing, without being oppressed in any sense by shame for the part we were taking in presenting what we understood to be the teaching of the prophet, in whose laudation the hymn was first sung. To us the incongruity of singing the hymn, under the existing conditions and in the presence of the son of the prophet, was singularly noticeable; and the inconsistency of the people who sung it with the apparent intention to disparage the efforts of the son, and to bemean his character by implication of comparison, was singular and very striking.

The fact that the people who thus sung this hymn were notoriously believing and practicing directly contrary to the teaching of the prophet, in whose laudation they were professedly singing it, and the knowledge that this fact was known to the son of the prophet, distinctly marked this incongruity and inconsistency.

It was but a recurrence of the prophetic utterance of the Savior, "With their lips they do honor me, but their hearts are far from me." For instance, take the direct commandment to the church, "Thou shalt love thy wife, and cling unto her and none else," came through the prophet of whom they sung, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and was deliberately ignored in belief and practice, and the memory of the prophet was outraged by the hollow expression, uttered from the lips of those who sung it. It was a travesty upon sacred things, indelicate and not justifiable.

Again: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and contrast it with the professions of this people through their leaders, "Adam is our God, the only god with whom we have to deal"; the one being the utterance of God through his prophets of long ages ago, and the other by him who succeeded the prophet in modern days, in whose honor they professed to sing, "We thank thee, O God, for a prophet," and who boastingly said, "I am neither a prophet, nor the son of a prophet." Could we as the son of the prophet, in whose laudation the hymn was written, fail to see the hollow inconsistency of the utterance of the sentiment falling from the lips of those who avowed their belief and their practice distinctly contrary to the words of God, received through that prophet?

ANOTHER SORT OF SMITH.

The Kansas City Star of December 21, 1909, contains an illustrated interview with President Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. We take from this interview the following sentiment as expressed by the venerable president:

"All of us must answer for our lives according to our enlightenment. The more we are educated the farther we are removed from harmful influences. But the balance is even until the end. I, Joseph Smith, must answer for my deeds."

Mr. Smith is over seventy-six years old. Reports from his home have been to the effect that he is fast failing, and the surmise is that his days are not many. As is evidenced in the sentiment expressed, he has learned well the lesson of life; and now that he is approaching the horizon of his career he calmly overlooks the earth and the past, and expresses his abiding faith in the eternal law of compensation.

The thought is a beautiful one, and as reason for its being it has abundant proof in all nature. Men and things live and die, but there is no annihilation of either. That which droops and dies to-day is again in life to-morrow. Nothing is destroyed, but merely undergoes its inevitable changes. Were it not so, even the elements themselves would perish and dissolve into nothingness, until finally the almighty and incomprehensible universe would become one vast and frightful void.

It is good to believe in the law of compensation—that for the thing taken another is returned. In it is eternal safety for humanity and comfort for the soul. Wrong shall be atoned in right and evil replaced with good; and man shall answer according to his own deeds and in the measure fixed by his enlightened attainments. It has been thus in the æons gone, and it shall be so in the eternities to come.

We trust that President Joseph Smith shall live to further benefit mankind with exalted sentiment.

DEBATE WITH UTAH ELDERS.

Elder Charles Fry writes from Burlington, Iowa, regarding the debate recently held at that place, as follows:

BURLINGTON, IOWA, January 8, 1910.

Editors Herald: Our debate with the Utah elders closed last night and all the Saints are rejoicing in the strength and purity of the principles of truth held by the Reorganized Church. Instead of being an "informal" discussion we succeeded in having signed propositions in which each church was given an equal showing. The propositions are as follows:

"Resolved, That the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, with headquarters at Salt Lake City, is in fact the church of Jesus Christ, and the legal succession of the church organized April 6, 1830, and presided over by Joseph Smith, jr., until his death in 1844." Elder Ira A. Pace, of the Utah church, affirmed. Elder O. H. Bailey, of the Reorganized Church, denied.

"Resolved, That the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints with headquarters at Lamoni, Iowa, is in fact the Church of Jesus Christ, and the legal succession of the church organized April 6, 1830, and presided over by Joseph Smith, jr., until his death in 1844." Elder O. H. Bailey, of the Reorganized Church, affirmed. Elder Ira A. Pace, of the Utah church, denied.

The discussion lasted four nights, January 4 to 7 inclusive, two nights being devoted to each proposition, and each speaker having one speech of forty-five minutes each evening. Elder Bailey was assisted by the writer and Elder Pace was assisted by Elders Newel Call and Thomas B. Child, jr.

Quite a number of strangers have been to our church and some are interested as the result of the discussion. The truth has not suffered and the Saints have been confirmed in their position, while the fact that there is an extreme difference between the two organizations has been advertised all over town. One school teacher has been three nights, and last night there were two of the city teachers present in company with our Sister Wooding. Without going into details we will say there was a grand victory for our cause. The Holy Spirit and the truth, with a little help from the writer, sustained Brother Bailey. We rejoice not for mere victory, but for the truth and virtue which shine out in the pure gospel of Christ, and many within and without rejoice with us.

Your brother in the gospel,
CHARLES FRY.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

It is said that the people of New York City pay over ten thousand dollars each day as a tribute to a thousand fortune tellers, palmists, clairvoyants, astrologists, soothsayers, etc. This speaks volumes for the gullibility of the American people and we believe Barnum was right when he said the Americans liked to be humbugged.

Services at the Brick church in Lamoni, January 9, were in charge of the stake Religio officers.

There was never a dishonest thought without corresponding ill, and there was never a wrong act without a corresponding sting. Stinging words are as biting frosts, and they suppress the possibilities for good and in time they cause the fruit on the life tree to fall, unripened, to wither and decay in the scorching sands of disappointment. A man's thoughts about himself should be free of the trivial and the impure. First of all he must have a healthy body in order to have a healthy mind. His body may be healthy, however, and his mind deceased. About the most important matter after all in the many duties a man owes himself, the most potent is a healthy mind. The most pitiable creature is the moral cripple, he can not stand alone, neither does he desire that others should stand.—Selected.

Hymns and Poems

THE FAIR TO-MORROW.

Slowly the shades of night are fading,
 Changing from darkness to twilight dim;
 But out in the east the sky is glowing,
 As sun rays touch the horizon's brim.

And as I gaze on the glowing splendor,
 The growing splendor so fair to see,
 My soul is wrapped in a dream of wonder,
 With a dawn so fair what the day may be.

The day? Already the light is fading;
 The Storm King marshals his army grim;
 And the sable plumes of his troops parading
 Keep time to the Wind's hoarse battle hymn.

I looked toward the west when the day was dying,
 That wearisome day of storm cloud and rain;
 When an unseen hand drew aside the dark curtains,
 And, lo, the splendor of morning again.

"A sea of glass mingled with fire,"
 Mountain tops gleaming with rose-tinted snow;
 Luminous now in each hilltop and spire,
 As into the ocean the sun dippeth low.

I feast my eyes on its changing glory
 Till the lingering halo fades from view;
 And I say, the day will be fair to-morrow,
 For the promise was written in love's own hue.

And thus I ponder in life's glad morning,
 When pulses are bounding with youth's red wine,
 The glow in the east is a signal warning,
 Lit by a spark from pleasure's shine.

For youthful pleasures at best are fleeting,
 Though we clasp them closely they may not stay;
 And we know that the ruddy glow of morning
 No promise brings of a sun-lit day.

But, if, when the day of life is closing
 And into death's sea the sun dips low,
 The unseen hand shall lift the dark curtains,
 And the sky with a heavenly light shall glow,

If the golden sheaves that were gleaned by the wayside,

The rich, red wine of life's sacrifice,
 And the glowing coals from love's holy altar
 Shall spread their glory o'er earth and skies,

Ah, then, we may say, "Twill be fair to-morrow,"
 Aye, fairer than grief-saddened eyes can behold;
 Where the Lamb is the light, and no cloud of sorrow
 Can veil the crimson or tarnish the gold.

GLORIOUS LIGHT.

Tune—"Beulah Land."

I've found the truth, O bless the Lord,
 Which with the Bible doth accord,
 No longer doubts will cause me fear,
 The precious light of heaven is here.

CHORUS:

O truth sublime, O glorious light,
 That bursts upon my raptured sight,
 All doubts have fled, my soul's at peace,
 My love for God now doth increase,
 And all my powers with one accord
 Doth praise and magnify the Lord.

O may our lives so brightly shine
 To be a reflex, Lord, of thine,
 That all we think, and do, or say,
 May bear the searching light of day.

When I resign this fleeting breath
 God's Saints shall never taste of death;
 But fall asleep and sweetly be
 For evermore, dear Lord, with thee.

JAMES L. EDWARDS.

THE MISSION OF LIFE.

The following poem was written by Sr. Emma Whitford to the memory of Elder E. H. Durand, of Detroit, Michigan, recently deceased:

Look not mournfully back to the past,
 The present is the hour of duty;
 And life, be it ever so dark,
 Has moments of sunshine and beauty.

Look up for the sun is still shining,
 Although a dark cloud may be there;
 Remember a bright silvery lining
 From under the cloud will appear.

Sit not with thy hands idly folded,
 Each one has a duty to do;
 And if life has its struggle for others,
 Why have only pleasures for you?

Seek out some cool spring in the desert
 And give to the lips that are dry.
 Speak a kind word of hope or of comfort,
 To each sorrowing one who goes by.

Look around on the highways and gather
 Not only the flowers so sweet,
 But take up the stones that are bruising
 Some weary, worn traveler's feet.

THE SOCIALISTIC CHURCH—PART I.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—In this article Elder Rushton attempts to show wherein the aims and ideals of socialism and Christianity may be considered identical. In part two he will define what he calls "the parting of the ways" as regards the methods proposed by socialism and those proposed by Christianity, and show wherein one must fail and the other succeed. It must not be supposed that we intend to give the HERALD over to a long continued discussion of socialism that will result in weariness and perhaps ill feeling. But the question is one on which the Saints should be informed. Articles may appear from time to time as the importance of the subject and the merit of the articles may determine.]

APOSTLE JOHN W. RUSHTON.

THE "RAISON D'ETRE."

The words socialism, socialistic, and other cognates have bad reputations with many people. By the use of any one of these expressions it is easy to create nightmares and evil dreams in which the blood-red flag of revolution waves threateningly, and the fierce glare of the destroying fire lights up with lurid glow the frenzied mob and the grim wreckage which takes up the foreground of the terrifying spectacle.

As is usual, the majority of the public regulate their attitude towards any thing or person by the reputation rather than by the actual value represented in principle and character. There is not any cause which has aimed at the uplifting of humanity, either politically, socially, or religiously, which, daring to ignore tradition and convention, has boldly proclaimed its message, that has not at once been assailed as revolutionary and wicked. This was so with the gentle Christ and with the early apostles and every leader in religious reformation down to the days of Joseph Smith and General Booth. Every great reform which has made for emancipation and freedom has been born in pain and anguish. "The kingdom has been entered through great tribulation." The usual spectacle of bigotry gathering up the forces of ignorance and superstition and charging down upon the little nuclei wherever they have taken their stand, to annihilate or at least impede the progress of moral, social, and spiritual illumination, presents in every case the same characteristics. First, to resolutely refuse a hearing, then to assiduously misrepresent; and then deluge with slander every pinnacle of truth that dares to raise its golden point to heaven. Should these methods fail, then brutality is summoned to reinforce the beaten battalions of ignorance and slander; and from the summit of a frowning Calvary the world's Savior is ignominiously ejected and the clouds of death's dark night close out the light of a foolish world's new day.

The pages of the world's history are filled with these incidents and martyrdom is the only punctuation which appears in the triumphant march of the race from the slavery of ignorance to the liberty of the truth.

What is called socialism is to-day suffering very largely this peculiar treatment and if there was no other symptom to suggest the possible truth which is enshrined, it is sufficient that the usual methods herein alluded to are strongly in evidence.

The purpose of this article is to find out if there is or is not any ground for believing that the church of Jesus Christ has a socialistic foundation, a socialistic message, and a socialistic ideal. Or in other words, are there just and accurate reasons for believing that the cause of Christ is essentially inimical to the economic and social welfare of the people, as many so-called socialists profess; or on the other hand, is socialism in principle opposed to the interests of Christianity, and, the impediment to the establishment of the kingdom of God, as professed by many so-called Christians? Is there any reason for believing that there exists a common ground of agreement; a common inspiration to service, and a common ideal to actualize, so far as the great forces of labor on the one hand, and the great forces of religion on the other hand are concerned?

To answer these questions we must begin with definitions, tedious, it is true, but necessary to our task.

We shall inquire, first, What is socialism? Let us allow those who claim to represent socialism to have the privilege of stating their own case, as we should like to do if we were being examined.

Second, Is there any essential relationship between socialism and Christianity?

Third, Is there any essential difference between the objects and ideals of socialism and Christianity?

Fourth, Wherein lies the difference between socialism and Christianity?

WHAT IS SOCIALISM?

To begin with, regarding the nature of socialism, let us dispose of some of the foolish notions which are commonly held by those who do not know or, who would misrepresent the case. Socialism does not mean pooling all the riches in the world and then sharing out to each individual his portion based upon a mathematical calculation. It does not mean coercing every man to do the same kind of work for a given time regardless of adaptability or necessity. It does not include the breaking up of the home and the severing of domestic relationships in a universal orgy of free love. These are travesties and caricatures, which are used as bogies to affright the timid and divert the attention of the multitude.

It may be that there are some who claim to be socialists who have held ideas which may be represented in the above grotesque description, but it is no more just to say that such represents the "principle" of socialism, than to say that Henry VIII represented the Christianity of the Episcopal Church, or that Brigham Young represented the real message and mission of the Latter Day Saints or Joseph Smith.

The following quotations taken from the recognized leaders in the socialistic movement are what justly claim our attention and should be accepted as authoritative definitions of the term.

Mr. Philip Snowden, M. B., says, "Socialism in moral aspect is the development of the want of equality." This is singularly familiar to Latter Day Saints. "All social and economic reform is included in the propaganda of socialism." "Landlordism and capitalism must be removed by socialism," and "socialism proposes to regulate wealth by the moral law." Again from Mr. Snowden, "Socialism, I define as the organization of industry by society; the social ownership of the land and the means of production; those instruments of production to be controlled by society for the purpose of producing things socially needed for social use."

Robert Blachford, the editor of The Clarion, and author of many works on social and economic questions and one of the recognized leaders of the socialistic movement in Britain, says: "Here in plain words is the 'principle' or root idea on which all socialists agree: That the country, and everything in the country, shall belong to the whole of the people (nation), and shall be used by the people and for the people. That principle or root idea of socialism means two things:

"1. That the land and all the machines, tools, and buildings used in making needful things together with all the canals, rivers, roads, railways, ships, and trains used in moving, sharing (distributing) needful things, and all the shops, markets, scales, weights, and money used in selling or dividing needful things, shall be the property of (belong to), the whole people (the nation).

"2. That the land, tools, machines, trains, rivers, shops, scales, money, and all other things belonging to the people shall be worked, managed, divided, and used by the whole in such way as the greater number of the whole people shall deem best."

Belfort Bax defines socialism to mean: "The direct aim of socialism to-day is the transformation of private ownership by individuals or syndicates of the means of production and exchange into their public ownership and control by the community at large."

Mr. John Morley (now Lord Morley), than whom there is not a finer master of the English language in the world, says of socialism: "In general it has for its ends the destruction of inequalities in social conditions by economic transformation."

This then is the socialistic conception of socialism and it may all be put in a nutshell. The transmutation of the present state of living, in which the "survival of the fittest" still insists that the weaker shall inevitably go to the wall, into that state of living in which the love and intelligence of the race will strike out that law of nature, "red in tooth and claw," and conduct its social and economic affairs upon the law of universal brotherhood, in which will be taken "from each according to his ability, to be given to each according to his necessity."

When this is applied practically we at once discover why socialism is regarded as an enemy by so many whose vested interests, are menaced by the growth of the democratic intelligence and the development of the socialistic propaganda.

It means that there shall be taken out of the control of the private trader, company, syndicate, or trust the means by which all the wealth of the world is produced; and they shall be controlled by the community at large, similarly to the civic control of tramways, gas and water, plants, which is in vogue to-day in many towns or municipalities in Britain; or the postal, telegraph, telephone, railways, and other public utilities, under the control and management of the state, as in Britain and other countries; so that instead of the riches produced by these means by the labor of the masses for the enrichment of the few, there shall be a more just distribution of the produce to the benefit of the whole and not a few.

Socialism alleges that in the comparatively small class of people known as landlords and capitalists monopolizing all the means of production, as at the present, there is both a grave injustice and also a grave danger, for it insures the already dangerously rich becoming richer every day and at the same time the poverty of the large mass of people becoming more intense and severe. That this is not a baseless fabrication it may be well to examine the following figures and analyze the meaning: "The royal commission which inquired into the conditions of our aged poor reported that of the working classes nearly one half of those who reach the age of sixty-five have no means of support. The average wage of the manual workers to-day, according to government returns, and excluding the lowest paid workers, such as agricultural laborers, does not amount to 24 pence per week. In relation to the housing accommodation of the people, in spite of our enormous power to produce the things we need, one third of the populations are living in overcrowded conditions where it is impossible for them to maintain the standard of health or efficiency."

Regarding the other end of the social scale, last census the returns disclosed the fact that there were 538,000 men who returned themselves as being of no occupation and living upon their incomes.

The returns dealing with inland revenue show a continuous increase in the wealth of a very small section of the community, and during the last ten years, according to this authority, the income of about one million people assessed to income tax has risen by more than £200,000,000 per year. (That means only one forty-fourth of the population has enjoyed this increase of wealth and the rate is fabulous; and confessedly over one half do nothing for it.) Look, now, on the other side of the picture:

Yet, during that time, 1900-1905, according to the statement made by the president of the board of trade in the House of Commons last December and since confirmed by the official return of the labor Department of the board of trade, in all of these years of unparalleled trade prosperity, at a time when the income of a small section of the population was increasing at the rate mentioned in these five years, the wages of the working people were going down.

This means that those who were producing the wealth were gradually getting less and less as their share of the produce for which they were responsible, and the small section of nonproducers were getting more and more.

This unequal balance of power (riches are power and become wealth when applied to the wellbeing of the community) is produced by the present system under which we live. Socialism therefore aims at the abolition of the landlord and the capitalist as unnecessary middlemen, and proposes that this power represented in riches shall not be appropriated by these parasites, but shall go to the people to be used by them in state and municipal organization, so that by benefiting the whole community the riches shall become a power of "wealth"—for the well-being of the people and not "illth" of, or the ill-being of the people.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

Is there anything contrary to "sound doctrine" or to the communistic teaching of the New Testament in this hungering cry of the multitude?

Would Christ if he were with us to-day reject the masses and their cause to ally himself with Mr. Rockefeller, for instance, and those represented by such as he?

Is there anything in this which is opposed to the modern revelations of the divine will as contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants?

What is so amazingly conspicuous, in my judgment, is the marvelous accuracy with which the illiterate man of the past generation has provided for the very needs that are being voiced with tragedy and bitterness throughout the world and the provision which has been made to meet the demand of the present generation, a generation instinct with powers and influences that were not guessed at but thirty years ago.

CHRISTIANITY DEFINED.

It will be seen from what we have said so far, that the vital principles of socialism are selflessness, justice, righteousness, and coöperation. Please observe I am speaking of "socialism as an essential principle," and not the socialistic propaganda. The socialist may fail, nay must fail; but socialism will abide for ever. It will abide because it is composed of and exists only because of these principles which are named. When these principles are applied to the state or community, as a whole, then the ideal of socialism will be realized and we shall have the collectivism of the socialist swallowed up in the communism of the Christ.

Is Christianity anything different to this? Can a man be a Christian who refuses to live selflessly, justly, righteously, and unitedly?

Will the kingdom of God, which means the organization of humanity under the rule of God be anything different to this? That in the whole realm of that "golden age" will there be anything different to selflessness, justice, righteousness, and coöperation? If our Lord shall be any guide to the answer of this question then we may safely say, No! All he did, all he asks you to do is, "To seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all things are yours."

Christianity itself can not exist unless the crisis is reached, when the individual life as being lived for its own sake and benefit is abandoned; and in the spirit of an all-consuming love the individual interests are of value only so far as they will conserve the interests of the whole. It is difficult to make a selection of scriptures by which this is illustrated, but the following will suffice:

"For none of us liveth unto himself and none of us dieth unto himself." The living and dying of the individual life is of no count only so far as that living and dying shall make for the benefit of others.

"Look every man not upon his own things but on the things of others." It would be interesting to hear Mr. Rockefeller preach a sermon from this text. There certainly is a spirit abroad in the world which looks upon the things of others and so magnetic is that look that it draws into the possession of the looker whatever he fixes his eye upon. But that is not the "looking" the apostle is speaking of. In the next verse he reveals the principle in his mind: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, counted it not a prize to be on an equality with God, but emptied himself, for ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that through his poverty ye might become rich."

This is the ideal life he puts before the Corinthians for their emulation.

The highest reaches of spiritual ecstasy were attained by the apostle when in his testimony he could say, "I live! Not I, but Christ which liveth in me."

See how he strains language to the utmost in his description of the work he is doing for his Lord and the people whom he serves.

"I now rejoice in my sufferings, and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for his body's sake, which is the church."

The resistless dynamic of the Christian life is "love" and we are told, "Love seeketh not her own."

The only language which can articulate love is "self-sacrifice."

If we shall put first things first, then beyond all question the first essential of a Christian life individually or collectively is selflessness.

JUSTICE.

Justice was regarded even in the days of stern Judaism, as one of the essentials of a life which God would recognize as being "good."

Ages ago the prophet Micah declared the standard of right to the almost derelict race of Jews as follows: "He hath showed thee what is good, O man; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, to love mercy and to humble thyself to walk with God."

The unjust steward was made by our Lord the standing example of the fate which will overtake the man who is without justice, whether as the "oppressor of the hireling in his wages" or of the poor; and, also of the guilty laborer who unjustly took what he had not earned.

The principle of eternal judgment, as revealed by Jesus Christ, shows how inseparably justice is connected with Christianity; and, he was careful to emphasize that, "every man shall be judged and rewarded according to his works."

Our eternal destiny is the result of the way we treat the truth in this life and none must expect to reap what they have not sown, nor to escape the harvest of that sowing whether good or ill.

There never was a more flagrant misrepresentation of the Christianity of Christ than to allege it simply proposes to compensate the injustice of fate by a system of rewards hereafter. As Bax says of socialism so we say of Christianity: "Almsgiving (charity), whether good or bad, right or wrong, under existing conditions not only is not Christianity but has nothing to do with Christianity."

RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Surely there can be no question as the place of righteousness as one of the essential principles in the gospel revealed by Christ. It was to vindicate the righteousness of God that he devoted his life and to which all his powers were applied. His triumph over death and evil is directly the result of his fidelity to the divine rule of right. He began his teaching with the message, "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added."

The Pauline conception of the value of the message of Christ, as revealed in the letter to the Romans, is very significant.

"I am not ashamed of the gospel of God; it is God's power which is at work for the salvation of everyone who believes—the Jew first and then the Gentile. For in the good news a righteousness which comes from God is being revealed, depending on faith and tending to produce faith, as the scripture has it, the righteous man shall live by faith. For God's anger is being revealed from heaven against all impiety and against the iniquity of men who through iniquity suppress the truth."—Romans 1: 16-18, Weymouth's Modern Translation.

If this language has meaning at all, it certainly shows that the message of the Christ reveals the divine standard of right. And further; that salvation, individually and collectively, is predicted upon our sincere adoption of that standard of righteousness and faithful application of it to the individual and collective life of the race. The whole duty of man according to Christ is therefore to seek the organization of human society according to the rule of God in right-doing; and then these inherit all things needful to a complete and happy life here, as well as hereafter. Surely this will be the kingdom of God, for God will reign when men will do right.

CO-OPERATION.

Generally speaking, this means that state of collective life in which all are laboring together for the accomplishment of the common ends to the common welfare. Or to quote an aphorism: "From each according to his ability for the good of all, to all according to their needs." Again it means the repudiation of the "law of the struggle for existence," in which the "survival of the fittest" is guaranteed as surely as the crowding out of the unfit is assured by this law of nature, "red in tooth and claw." That this is the peculiar attraction of Christianity is too well known to need stating. Nietzsche, the gifted writer of a German philosophy, which urges the rejection of Christianity for the reason that Christianity holds out hope for those whom nature has condemned; and therefore Christianity, he argued, is unnatural. This despairing pessimism pressed so heavily upon Nietzsche himself that his sensitive framework broke down and he died in an asylum but a few years ago. When you get the principles underlying the outstanding doctrines of the Christian religion of atonement, regeneration, and salvation, it is discovered that in atonement the strongest sacrificially identifies himself with the poorest and the weakest and from under burden "he makes intercession." By this process of a divine love he lifts them in regeneration up to a new life, and so, the baptism of repentance is a turning away from the old life; and, the baptism in the Spirit is the introduction of the nature-condemned individual into a new life of power and victory; in which the whole man of body, soul, and spirit is adjusted to proper relations and producing according to the divinely appointed intent. This is the coöperation that Christianity calls for: "The Son of Man came to save that which is lost"; "Ye that are strong bear the burdens of the weak"; and, "We are laborers together with God."

The entire range of Christ's mission and the sublime heights of the ideal set before his followers, is gathered up in the word altruism. And the altruistic principle can only find expression in coöperation; in which, once again we say it, each is for all and all for each.

SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

It is clear, then, that socialism pure and simple embraces the same root principles as Christianity pure and simple. It is apparent, therefore, that to speak of socialism and Christianity, by which is suggested disparity, if not opposition, is a mistake; as much so as to speak of science and Christianity. Science is the measure of man's ability to discover the laws of being by his own intelligence; religion is the measure of God's revelation to humanity; and Christianity or socialism therefore represents that state of life collectively under the laws of truth discovered and revealed in faithful obedience and application thereto.

WHAT ARE THE IDEALS OF SOCIALISM AND CHRISTIANITY; AND ARE THEY IDENTICAL?

Socialism says, First of all develop the democratic intelligence and cultivate the collective conscience. While some of the noisy and blatant methods by which these ends are being sought by the more militant section of the so-called socialists are very distasteful; yet it is not improbable that such methods may serve a good purpose in awakening the multitude; for it has been said with more pungency than elegance, "It is no use trying to tickle an elephant with a straw, you must use a scaffolding pole."

That this is precisely what our Lord made his first business, no serious Bible student will deny. The revelation of the divine through Jesus Christ was to awaken the conscience of a man and then to educate him. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest to your souls." The Pauline understanding of the method of proselyting was certainly this as expressed in Collosians, for instance, "Christ in you, the hope of glory: whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." One mistake many Christian people make is that they read into the Christian philosophy another life and another world, abandoning this life and world to the selfishness of man and the power of evil in the expectation of something beyond the bounds of time and space.

IGNORANCE AND LEGISLATION.

Ignorance is always a danger, a man without conscience not only purchasable by the highest bidder, but a professional traitor to every cause; and thus his unscrupulosity is a menace to the public weal everywhere.

Socialism and Christianity are therefore agreed that man's future destiny depends upon his first being awakened to a sense of his responsibility; and then he shall be taught that all true government, whether of moral, political, commercial, or social forces, must be by the people for the good of the people. Legislation is not the cause of morality but the reflection of the moral, social; and commercial intelligence crystalized into a code of laws enforced by the weight of public opinion, expressed by the majority vote. We shall see then that in proportion as mankind shall rise in the scale of intelligence and righteousness, the "voice of the people shall be the voice of God."

EQUALITY.

Another ideal in the attempt to realize which socialism and Christianity find themselves at one is, a day that shall come when all men shall be equal. Not equal in stature, weight, color, same contour of nose or face, nor equal in ability, taste, or character. Not equal in that all shall live in the same kind of houses, have the same kind and amount of furniture, and the same amount of garden, and produce the same kind of produce. No, no, but the spirit of equality in which there shall be recognized, universally, individual rights, but in conjunction with equal opportunity for every man to develop to perfection the latent power of his personality and so make the world the richer in the accumulation of genius, intelligence, and labor. Then every man shall have his just privilege of enjoying an equal share in the produce of either genius, brain, or muscle, according to his needs.

That no longer shall it be possible for the outrageous piracy so characteristic of modern commerce, to appropriate another's invention; or to victimize the poor man of genius; or to exploit the gift and intelligence of a man to increase the riches of the capitalist without just recompense to both the individual and the community, from whom and to whom the individual genius is exercised. That no longer will the poor man be cursed for his poverty only, but that each and all using the power of mind or strength of muscle in the production of his best for the benefit of the whole, shall also themselves be guaranteed ample sufficiency to supply every reasonable need. But the day shall dawn when every man shall "live"; and the world to-day with its superabundance of supplies minister to every man's necessity and delight; when pain, sorrow, poverty, and tragedy shall no more defile the earth, but as the habitation of the divine the whole earth shall burst out into spontaneous doxologies of peace and joy expressed in holy and brotherly activities. Then shall the dream of the poet be crystalized in actuality, "Out of Zion the beauty of the Lord our God hath shined." Then shall the socialistic prayer of the Christ which he taught his disciples to pray be fully answered: "Thy kingdom come!" And be the day far or near, come when it will and how it will, at once and for ever it will be the realization of the dream of socialism and the complete fulfillment of the glowing prophecies and visions of our Christian philosophy.

We conclude, then, that the ideal of socialism for all practical purposes is identical with the ideal of Christ for humanity. The terms of expression may not be the same, but the heart and soul throbbing at the center is unmistakably one. Whether men shall accept the formula of Jesus and "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," or whether they shall adopt the code of socialistic humanism, and love justice, righteousness, and in the spirit of selflessness each with each cooperate in labor, so shall all "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our God and his Christ."

Afterwards.

It was a tale of scarcely more than four pages. It appeared in the columns of a magazine which the editorial taste may prefer me to identify under the gauze veil of a footnote.*

Who has measured the invisible edition which multiplies the "estimated circulation" of a great thing? I believe that the subtle power of an ethical value whose importance few of us understand will already have taken the little story, and will have begun to express through it, silently, the evangel which I may make a mistake in trying to put into words. It was but a few months ago that Ian Maclaren published "Afterwards." I am not afraid to prophesy that it will be read and loved for a generation of years.

I do not always "follow" the new writers, and know nothing of the author of Beside the Bonny Briar Bush; but it happened, as it often does in such matters, that the mere motive of personal curiosity led me to notice the story. Upon the pages of my own note-book, Afterwards had long stood in the limbo of titles waiting for their stories. It so happened, indeed, that I had planned to treat a situation not altogether apart from the events of this. What noble uses we servants of the pen may make of "the stories which I did not write!"

The long breath of relief that one did not attempt a fine thing so much more poorly than another has achieved it; the grateful glow which appreciates how much better some one else has done it; even the gentle, human sigh that wishes one had done it—all melt into the fervor of admiration for a beautiful thing unapproachably done.

I have called "Afterwards" a great story, and have no fear that I shall be called upon to retract the adjective.

The plot—but there is no plot. The description—but we do not remember any. The fine writing—where is it? But the characterization is a mirror of dazzling veracity and intensity. And the motif is a chariot of holy fire.

The story is elemental, not complex; it deals with one of the great situations too common in human life, and touches this with the simplicity and pathos that sometimes give immortality to an unconscious stroke of the pen.

Do we not all remember some remote sketch, some intaglio carved by a delicate hand a quarter or a half a century ago, forgotten by the many, but remembered by the few who knew the less obtrusive precious stories building into the walls of the literature that formed our youth? Among such I recall a little book—a very little book—entitled, Be Kind to Your Sister. Fancy it! That was the fashion of the day. What a title for a real piece of good work, a vivid and strong appeal to the deepest force in human society—family tenderness! I think the little sister was struck by an accident, in a fit of temper. I know there was a stone or a push, and a brook, and death, and remorse enough to break the heart of a child reader, and to haunt the conscience and warn the impulses of a woman for the rest of her days. And I know that I was but one of thousands of people to whom that tiny tale became immortal, for no other reason in this world than because it took hold with literary quality and dignity of one of the pure and tender and everlasting elements of human life; because it touched the sacredness of common ties, and the possibilities of their blasphemy among people who loved each other.

"Afterwards," as everybody remembers who has read it, is the story of an English barrister with the inevitable seat in the House irritating his ambition, and a family of two in his home.

Trevor is a busy man with a quiet wife. The frequent fate of busy men and quiet wives falls upon the twain. They drift apart—for his sake. There are charming vacations (he is overworked)—all for him. He goes; she stays—for his sake. He is the petted guest of fashionable ladies, who feed him with honeyed phrases that men confidently roll under their tongues, with no more suspicion that they are being duped than a lap-dog has that he is taking homeopathic medicine in the form of sac lac tablets.

"Writing letters—home, of course, to that idolized wife. It is beautiful, and you are an example to us all; but Mrs. Trevor will excuse descriptions of scenery; she knows you are enjoying yourself."

"We have quite a grudge against Mrs. Trevor, because she never will come with her husband; there is some beautiful child who monopolizes her."

(Aside) "Mrs. Trevor is a hopelessly quiet person, what is called 'a good wife,' you know."

"He received the telegram in a garden when he was gazing on a vision of blue, set in the fronds of a palm. . . ."

"You look so utterly satisfied," said his hostess, in the high, clear voice of English women, "that I know you are tasting the luxury of a contrast. . . . imagine London, and Cannes is paradise."

"As he smiled assent in the grateful laziness of a hard-worked man, his mind was stung with the remembrance of a young wife swathed in the dreary fog, who, above all things, loved the open air and the shining of the sun."

"Had he belittled his wife, with her wealth of sacrifice and delicate nature, beside women in spectacles who wrote on the bondage of marriage, and leaders of fashion who could talk of everything, from horse-racing to palmistry?"

"A telegram." It was the shattering of a dream."

"An hour later Trevor was in the Paris express, and for thirty hours he prayed one petition, that she might live till he arrived."

"Tell you everything? That is what I am trying to do. . . . No, she did not speak much, for we enjoined silence and rest as the only chance; but she had your photograph on her pillow, and some flowers you had sent. They were withered, and the nurse removed them when she was sleeping; but she missed them, and we had to put them in her hands. "My husband was so thoughtful.""

"Well, if you insist. Expecting a letter. . . . yes. . . . let me recollect. . . . It can't be helped now, and you ought not to vex yourself; but I believe a letter would have done more for her than—"

Did I call the story a mirror? Rather, a Claude Lorraine. All its beautiful outlines and soft tints are reflected in black.

It is a tragedy unmitigated; but tragedy with which no easy optimist can quarrel. The shallowest dancer through life would not even pirouette to protest against this terribly probable, piteous, man tale.

We read all our heart-strings snap, and then we read again. In this delicate etching of home and love and simple wifely tenderness and celestial wifely trust, of too natural masculine neglect and selfishness such as break the hearts of thousands of women who never open their dumb lips to say so, we find a verisimilitude so scathingly of nature that we forget it to be art. The story reads more like biography than fiction, or like the diary of some remorseful man, or as if it were made of pages cut from family records, and, by accident, cast under a stranger's eye. We read and sigh, our consciences meanwhile excusing, or else accusing, one another. The mind leaps inevitably to that personal paraphrase of the tale which is the surest criterion of its plausibility and moral mission.

Suppose that one of these terrible possibilities which await all human separations should befall us? Could any of the woeful chances of life expose her who is dearest to me to anguish and to solitude like that? Alas! could I leave in the soul of him who is nearest to me so sweet, so uncomplaining, so divine a wraith as that?

I call the story an evangel, and the more I study it the surer I grow that I have the name for it. It is a gospel, pure and simple—a gospel of marriage and of home.

Nor do I hesitate at the words because of the tragedy. I am so sure that the reading of "Afterwards" will prevent tragedy in hundreds of the homes which it will enter that I regard its mission as wholly beneficent.

It will be impossible for a sensitive man to read this story and ever again inflict upon his wife the miseries so common in women's lives; impossible to offer neglect when he might give devotion; to forget when he should remember; to be cold when he could be tender. He never can say, "I did not know how women feel about such things. I have never thought or understood." He has had his lesson and his warning.

It will be impossible for any once loving woman, in whom self-indulgence has got the better of her tenderness, after hearing this tale, to take her too dearly bought ease at the expense of one of those unrecognized angels who walk this earth under the name of "kind husbands"—one of those plain, patient, self-effacing men who make of themselves galley-slaves at the oars of life to provide some little creatures, some butterfly nature, with luxurious separation from home and its demands. One such woman I knew, who received three telegrams from a sick husband, overcome at his office work by the midsummer heat in Philadelphia, before she could be induced to leave her hotel piazzà chair, where she lolled in the sea-breeze, and go to him.

This English story has peculiar meanings of its own for American readers. What is called the annual divorce of our watering-place life has taken grave hold upon American families, and the end of its consequences is not yet. Our wives are learning to be happy without their husbands, and our husbands are exposed to the discomforts and temptations of homeless summers without their wives. We all know cases where the head of the family seems to be abandoned in the summer as heartlessly as the family cat.

Our clubs are mowing heavy swaths among neglected or deserted homes. Our hysteria for traveling is breaking up the home habit, which is the essence of domestic happiness. Doctor Parkhurst, when asked what he thought the chief danger now threatening American life, replied, "The decadence of the home idea." The expert philanthropists who are engaged in the crusades against divorce give us some alarming facts and figures. We need nothing so much as invigoration of the tie between husband and wife, between parent and child, between home and heart. Ian Maclaren's story is an apotheosis of all that is sacred and sweet in the marriage obligation. The beauty and benediction of the home relations thrill before us for a moment, only to tremble into the blackness of remorse which their violation involves. For, as the farewell words of "Afterwards" have exquisitely told us, "we neglect our dearest, not because we do not love, but because we do not imagine."

I like to call this little tale an evangel for this still further reason: that I believe it to be the promise of things good and delicate to come in the writing of our day.

What is called decadent writing has tainted the air in the process of its dissolution long enough. It is not too much to believe that its grave is ready. Decent genius or cleanly talent, too long accustomed to see its work out of the fashion, if not out of the markets, may take heart and believe that tainted meat is not the only food which the palate of our day demands. It has too long been a fact perfectly understood in "the trade" that a story must nowadays be a little wicked to have the largest sale. I read last week the statement, made on what ought to be unimpeachable authority, that one firm of New York publishers has been in the habit of paying a reader ten thousand dollars a year for the express purpose of seeing to it that manuscripts accepted by that house should come just within—never, imprudently, just without—the line of legalized indecency; but that the proportion of foulness should be mixed as the early Arabians made their first experiments in coffee, "as strong as they might suffer."

A reputable publisher, fully in position to know whereof he speaks, told me, within a month, that a moral earthquake had recently happened in the world of letters. I replied that I had heard no roar and seen no cataclysm.

"The upheaval has been entirely silent," he answered; "it is not discussed. But it has absolutely occurred. Publishers and editors understand it perfectly. The day of bad books has gone by."

If this be true—and what more likely?—we do not even need to pray, God speed the day! Moral goodness, in its very essence, is swifter and more able than evil, and, once given a fair start, will win the race. Whatsoever things are pure are dearer than the deadly or the doubtful to the English and American nature.

One may venture to prophesy a time quite near at hand in which the sacredness and the love of home and "all that is therein" shall be the gate of pearl through which our new literary art shall be entered. "And the gates of it shall not be shut."

Ian Maclaren may have been one of the unconscious fore-runners of a noble moral revolution. And there may be an Afterwards when he will be permitted to look back upon this strong, pure little story as one of the delicate honors which fate sometimes reserves for those who are greater than the fashion of their day, and privileged to see their moral independence recognized in literary form at the time when the world had need of it and them.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps in McClure's Magazine, September, 1895.

All You Can.

Do all the good you can,
By all the means you can,
In all the ways you can,
In all the places you can,
At all the times you can,
To all the people you can,
As long as ever you can.

SOUTH AUBURN, NEBRASKA, December 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: After the close of our district conference which convened September 26, at Wilber, Nebraska, I came to DeWitt, and visited with loved ones near that place for a few days. Leaving home on October 7, I hied away to Swanton, where I had effected a new opening and baptized some five people. Upon reaching there, however, I found that prejudice was very strong, and that it was not on the part of wisdom to hold any services there at the present time, so after instructing the few Saints along the line of their duty, I left Swanton on the 12th for Stoddard, Nebraska.

My oldest sister resided near that place and during my stay there I baptized her little girl. While there I received a letter from our missionary in charge, Elder J. R. Sutton, asking me to meet Elder C. W. Prettyman and himself at Franklin. Upon arriving at the last named place, I was met by the brethren above mentioned, who were boarding the train for the West, and after a short consultation it was decided that I should go with Brother Prettyman to Imperial. We arrived at the latter place on the day following about noon, and were met at the depot by Bro. Ira Goddard, and after a ride of about twelve miles we found ourselves seated in his genial home. Here we found Elder J. F. Grimes holding the gospel banner aloft, preaching to good sized audiences. We had continued but a short time when Brother Prettyman was called away. Brother Grimes and I continued our efforts at that place, and on the 27th the writer baptized a fine young lady, Miss Arie Goddard, who we trust will prove a credit to the work. We left Brother Goddard's on the 29th and drove to O. D. Pierce's, a distance of thirteen miles. After holding meetings a short time at Lamar, I started for home, and on arriving there found some things that needed my immediate attention.

I feel indebted to Brethren Grimes and Prettyman, who seemed willing and ready to help at all times, and to encourage the young missionary. May the good Father of all reward them is my prayer. I organized a Sunday school at that place about a month ago and it seems to be prospering at present under the skillful management of Sr. Etta Ellsworth, at whose genial home I am at present located. I expect to join Brother Prettyman in the western part of the State in the near future. I will close by asking your prayers that I may prove faithful.

Your brother in gospel bonds,
ROBERT E. BURGESS.

EASTERN MAINE, December 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I felt compelled to break the silence and write to those who are interested in the Eastern Maine District that we are alive and that God is remembering us. During the past three years there have been about forty additions to the Jonesport Branch, most of them at Jonesport. The human agents used are Brn. R. Bullard, J. C. Foss, S. F. Cushman, and U. W. Greene. Supplementing the missionary force, we have a squad of local workers who are reliable and faithful. When I came here about two and a half years ago, the work was being carried on practically by a few faithful sisters, and Bro. Lemman Woodward, who was branch president, priest, teacher, deacon, etc. We needed men to carry on the work, so we commenced to ask the Lord for men. We kept up the cry for men. They began shortly afterwards to drop into the ranks by baptism till we have fourteen new, full-grown fellows, who mean business. They are all very much alive.

Brother Greene came to us November 14 and stayed four weeks, preached thirty times, baptized twenty, ordained a teacher and a deacon, and left us with a fully organized branch. Our congregations were large, the interest fine, the conviction deep. Notice the addition of twenty in thirty days. The end is not yet. Others are at the door waiting to make proper adjustments. The truth and Spirit and preacher have each done their work.

Brother Greene had great advantage over others in being so well acquainted with everybody. He got into the homes and hearts of the people without an introduction. He has practically grown up among them.

After Brother Greene was gone, a birthday gathering was suddenly hatched, and it, as did one a year ago, resulted in so many cakes and dollars to me, that I am studying up a plan to get more birthdays. Who knows how to do it? I'll pay postage, yes, and a bonus too. I mean for the one best plan.

I'll venture the assertion that if all the branches are sending for church publications as this one has for the past year, our publishing house will soon be paid for.

We have a thriving Religio and Sunday school under the efficient management of Sr. E. M. Walker. Both have grown so that readjustment to present demands must soon be made. A church history class will soon be organized.

As Bishop's agent I want to say to the Saints of this district, send in your tithing quick, for this year is nearly up.

S. F. CUSHMAN.

MOSLEYS JUNCTION, VIRGINIA, December 16, 1909.

Editors Herald: My sister and I are the only members of the church within twenty-five miles of here, at Richmond, Virginia. I was baptized by Elder Goodrich twelve years ago. I know the work is true and I am doing all I can to help the work along in this place. I think there could be good done here if an elder would come oftener. It is rather discouraging for one person to try to do much alone in a place like this, but I hope I will be able to do more in the future. I believe there is a work here for me to do, and I know that I have been blessed in the past and I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may be strengthened in the work.

Your brother in the faith,

WILLIAM TOPMAN.

PORUM, OKLAHOMA, December 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: We have just left the quiet little town of Grannis, Arkansas, the scene of the recent conflict between Elder J. F. Curtis, of the Reorganized Church, and Ben M. Bogard, the champion debater of the Missionary Baptist Church, of Arkansas. To say the people were stirred would be putting it mildly. There was intense interest manifested from the beginning. The propositions were the usual church propositions, each affirming his church to be in harmony with the New Testament scriptures, in origin, organization, doctrine, and practice.

Our proposition came first. Brother Curtis showed in an able way how the church or kingdom had its beginning with John the Baptist, and was organized by Christ. How the different officers were set in the church for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ, until we all come into the unity of the faith; and wherever the church is to-day it must agree with the one set up by Jesus Christ in organic structure, faith, and practice; and if there was a succession of one officer, there must of a necessity be a succession of all.

Bogard took the position that the apostolic office ceased with the last witnesses of the resurrection; that one must be a witness of the resurrection before he could be an apostle, using Acts 1:22: "Must one be ordained to be a witness with us of his resurrection?" His position was that in order for one to be ordained, he must first be in possession of this knowledge.

Brother Curtis showed that they were ordained to be a witness, not because they were a witness, and challenged him to show where Judas ever saw Christ after the resurrection, showing clearly that Judas was an apostle without this knowledge. (Matthew 10:2-4.) Also no record of where Barnabas was a witness of the resurrection (Acts 13:2, 3) prior to his being ordained an apostle. Brother Curtis also showed that there was to be a great apostasy or falling away, a complete abrogation of authority for a period of twelve hundred and sixty years prior to the second coming of Christ. (Revelation 12:1-6; 2 Thessalonians 2:3; Daniel 7:25.) That the Saints would be worn out and overcome (Daniel 7:21; 8:24; Revelation 13:7-15), that "as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed."

Bogard's main play was on Ephesians 3:21 and Matthew 28:19, 20. Be glory in the church throughout all ages, "and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Brother Curtis showed conclusively that this is true where they "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded," but that they ceased to observe all things, hence the falling away, as Paul predicted in 2 Timothy 4:1-4: "For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth."

Bogard made a savage attack upon the martyr's character and used the Utah witnesses to show that he practiced polygamy. Every witness he introduced was impeached and the women which testified to being sealed to him were shown to be "sports in nest hiding," according to Judge Phillips' decision of the United States Court in the Temple Lot Suit. His next attack was on the Book of Mormon. He gave garbled statements from seven different editions, but did not prove anything out of harmony with the Bible. Having met defeat here he next paid his respects to the war revelation. He first read it and left out thirteen words, changed six, and added one, and this was the way he had it in his printed article against us. When this was shown up it killed the force of his argument largely. The people could see him in his true light. Brother Curtis showed the prophecy to have been literally fulfilled by history and subsequent events.

In the first speech of his affirmation he continued his attack on the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, showing that he was not satisfied in his efforts to refute our position. His efforts were very weak indeed in trying to establish his church. In fact he did all he could to evade the question and to keep Brother Curtis off of his doctrine, but his efforts were futile. He was shown up in good style by the discipline or manual by Hiscox, designed for use in all Baptist churches, and accepted by them. Also a chart was used which showed their defects in organization, doctrine and practice, and spiritual gifts. His most stubborn fight was made to prove salvation by grace without works; and once in grace, always in grace; and an unbroken line of succession from the days of Christ to the present time. He introduced a new line that he had used in several debates with the Campbellites and others, but none had as yet broken it. But it, too, fell before the light of true investigation, and was traced back to the reorganized church. So his cherished bubble burst before the light of truth and facts of history. The debate ended with a good feeling and many friends were made for the truth. There were frequent outbursts of applause during Brother Curtis' closing speech. Many outsiders complimented him on his manly deportment and his defense of the truth.

The Saints at Grannis did their part nobly in caring for the visiting Saints. No sacrifice seemed too great for them to make in order that all might be cared for comfortably, and we believe the work at that place will receive new life if the Saints will do their work faithfully. May the Lord strengthen and bless his covenant children everywhere is my prayer.

JESSE M. SIMMONS.

FAYETTE CITY, PENNSYLVANIA, December 13, 1909.

Dear Herald: The Pittsburg District embraces the branches of Fayette City and Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Steubenville, Ohio; Wheeling and Glen Easton, West Virginia. I will give a condensed sketch of late happenings in the district.

Fayette City.—The president of the branch, James Raisbeck, has moved his family to Pittsburg, leaving the branch without a presiding officer, and Bro. Samuel Winship's name will be presented Tuesday evening for ordination to the office of elder. Brother Samuel is a man who can be relied on and will steady the work here. Brother Raisbeck and family are missed by the Saints here, but we are pleased to have them in Pittsburg. The branch has suffered another loss in the departure for the better world of Sister Ashton, who died November 8 of consumption. She had been failing for a year. She leaves a husband and six children, four of whom are married. Sister Ashton was a consistent Latter Day Saint, had a bright mind and a good heart. She has earned a rest in God's paradise. Her husband, affectionately known as Teddy, while not a member of the church, is in sympathy with it, and had the services conducted by the Saints. Bro. Richard Baldwin officiated before a large gathering of friends.

Monongahela City, Pennsylvania.—This place is located a few miles from Fayette City. A branch will be organized there on Wednesday evening with a membership of about twenty-five. Bro. Ebenezer Curry, lately ordained to the office of elder, will act as president, and the Saints can congratulate themselves on having him for their pastor.

Pittsburg.—This branch is the mother of some of the other congregations in the district, and on the first of the year we are going to celebrate our forty-eighth anniversary as a branch. We are gathering all the photos of old timers we can get and will have them for the occasion. We have the minutes of the meeting when the branch was organized, April 7, 1861. Several baptisms have taken place lately and the work is in good condition. The church building is up for sale, as we desire to build in the suburbs where the Saints can gather around the church. We had a rally day the first of the month, Bro. G. T. Griffiths being with us, and it was an event that will not soon be forgotten. A number who had not been with us for some time were there and a beautiful spirit of brotherhood was over the meeting when we sang, "Blest be the tie that binds."

Steubenville.—This is the home branch of our very able missionary in Wales, Rees T. Jenkins. The meetings are held in the home of Bro. George Pace, where a room is fitted up for church purposes. The branch numbers about thirty, but for the size of it they have been more able in the priesthood than any place I know of.

Wheeling.—Eight or ten have been baptized lately among the young people. The Sunday school is doing a fine work under the able superintendency of Bro. Q. L. Martin and his associates. Brother Martin is the president of the branch. He was lately attacked with a stroke of paralysis, but is recovering. His many friends are much concerned regarding his future, as he is an earnest worker, and we hope for the good of the work that he will recover. A supper given for the purpose of raising funds to make some improvements around the church netted over one hundred dollars, which gives evidence of the energy of the Saints in a good cause and a good supper. Some months ago the writer had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Bro. Myron E. Thomas and Sr. Althea Hulmes. Brother Myron was known as the boy preacher and has labored as a missionary. He later was a student of Graceland College, and is now one of the officers of the branch. He is an able young man and will be encouraged and aided by his wife, who has talents which make her useful in God's service. Bro. William Liston has moved his family on a farm near Steubenville. Past hospitality is not soon forgotten and while not as convenient as when in Wheeling, the elders will soon find the home, where the latchstring is always out, and a hearty welcome always in.

Glen Easton.—They say down in Arkansas they have such steep hills that the hogs are trained. Every hog has a slit cut in his ear, and when he is at the top of the hill and wants to go down, he slips his hind leg in the hole in his ear and rough locks himself. The Glen Easton Saints have the West Virginia ridges to overcome, but they have steadily subjugated them and year after year they have compelled them to bring forth the good things of Joseph's land, that which is on top, and that which coucheth beneath, for the Lord hid away in those everlasting hills precious oil, and some of the Saints are receiving the benefit of God's goodness and care. Bro. Joseph Dobbs has lately taken unto himself a wife. He is one of the young men who are standing by the church, and the Lord has a work for him to do, as he is progressive and teachable.

C. ED MILLER.

72 Miller Street, PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA.

MITCHELL, SOUTH DAKOTA, December 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: Elder R. C. Longhurst has been laboring in the Mitchell Branch for some time, and preached some doctrinal sermons that made an impression on the people insomuch that they ask for our books and tracts to read, and if they keep on investigating he may have the pleasure of baptizing some in the near future. We also ordained Bro. George Levy to the office of priest. George is a man of much promise and will be instrumental for good if he lives for it. Our branch is pretty well officered now, as we have an elder, priest, and teacher, and we hope soon to have a deacon.

Brother Longhurst also presided at our business meeting and he conducted it in such a way that every officer ought to understand his duty. He also held a priesthood meeting at the home of W. H. Gray, teaching them along the lines of duty and exhorting them to be faithful to their calling. I might say for the benefit of the missionaries passing through that there will be public preaching every Sunday at 3 o'clock at the home of Brother Blarry in Mitchell, except the first Sunday in the month. So come and occupy. There ought to be some honest minded people in Mitchell and surrounding country, so come and lend a helping hand in gathering them in.

WILLIAM H. GRAY.

SPERRY, OKLAHOMA, November 18, 1909.

Editors Herald: I am glad that I have heard the gospel preached in its purity in these last days. I came into the work in 1893, when I was thirteen years old, and I am glad of the step that I have taken. It fills my eyes with tears when I read how the Saints were treated, but nevertheless, we will gain the victory. Dear Saints, I ask an interest in your prayers for this Rock Creek Branch. We live on Brother Bailey's ranch, twelve miles northeast of Tulsa. I also ask you to pray for me, that if it be the Lord's will I may be healed, as I am afflicted.

MRS. DELLA WATSON.

MEADOW GROVE, NEBRASKA, December 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: While at Ainsworth, Nebraska, a sister gave to me the following as a possible solution for the difference in the Lord's Prayer as appearing in the Book of Mormon, and the Inspired Translation of the Bible. It is at least feasible. The translator reaching the prayer and discovering that it started out the same as in the Authorized Version, simply laid aside the Urim and Thummim and quoted from memory.

This sister had gone to Sunday school to ask why the difference and after asking the question, answered it herself, on the instant, with no previous thought of such a solution. I feel that it is at least worth passing on.

A solid week of below zero weather now, reaching as low as eighteen degrees, the coldest ever known at this time of the year, and yet these Nebraska people came to meeting nightly. We have held meetings every night except four since leaving home in October. Two nights we were rained out and two were lost in travel. One can't afford to be slothful in the Lord's work.

J. W. WIGHT.

PINE GROVE, MICHIGAN, December 13, 1909.

Dear Herald: In October Bro. Ernest Burt, of Comins, came to visit friends at Hubbard Lake, and held a meeting at the home of a Saint. Several from our vicinity attended and were so interested that he was invited to preach the gospel in our schoolhouse. About the middle of the week he baptized three, one of whom was the leader of the M. E. class of this place, and the next Sunday he baptized three more. Nearly all were anxious to have the good work continued, so Elders J. J. Bailey and G. W. Burt held a series of meetings. Both were able to defend and present the gospel and with the aid of Bro. Ernest Burt, eleven more were baptized. Elder J. J. Bailey bestowed eighteen patriarchal blessings and six children were blessed.

I with many others fought the gospel as long as I could, but had to give up to the true light. During my confirmation evidence came to me that this was the true church. A branch of about twenty-five members was organized and was named The Earnest Working Branch of Pine Grove, and it is our prayer that all will strive to be true to the cause and thus prove our name. Pray for the branch, as we are weak and need the prayers of the faithful Saints.

Yours in His service,

MRS. H. E. FARRAR.

SPRUCE, MICHIGAN.

SPY HILL, SASKATCHEWAN, December 14, 1909.

Dear Herald: Our branch is progressing slowly, as some are moving out while others are investigating. I would be pleased to know the addresses of some of the Saints west of Weyburn; also around Edgerton. Any letters they write will be promptly answered. I would like to know particularly about the land around where they live.

Our Religio is progressing slowly, due to the cold weather and bad trails. It was the first to be organized in the Northwest. Was organized as a home class in 1903 and as a local in 1904.

Your brother in the gospel,

JAMES EDWARD DORSETT.

COLFAX, WASHINGTON, December 17, 1909.

Editor Herald: We are not lost, if we are isolated from all the Saints. It will soon be two years since we came to Washington. We live in Colfax. There are no Saints living here. All the comforts we get are the sermons and letters through the papers. We take the Ensign, HERALD, and Autumn Leaves, and we feel we could not do without them; and words can not express our thankfulness to you all for your letters and sermons. But we could read more if we had them, and we are going to send for more soon. I have tried to live a Christian for over fifty years, but never was satisfied, for I never heard the gospel preached before I heard the Latter-Day Saints. I have rejoiced ever since that the Lord had led us to the truth at last, and I know I am in the true church, for when our preachers speak they speak the words of God.

We love to read the experiences of the old pioneer preachers. I never get tired of reading them. We would be glad to hear more letters and sermons from Brother Roth. We have a sermon he preached on the resurrection that we have read to so many. We have had it over three years. Hoping and praying for victory everywhere,

Your sister in gospel bonds,

MRS. JENNIE PATRICK.

MERNA, NEBRASKA.

Editors Herald: I noticed in your issue of October 27, page 1029, a letter from Edward Rannie, taking exception to another brother because he had given Paul as his authority for the quotation, "The love of money is the root of all evil." Paul truly is dead, but I do not think he would care to have Brother Rannie classed as his friend and defender, when he seems to be so ignorant of the words that Paul has written. If you can not find those words in your Bible, Brother Ed., the accusation is true, you have another Bible. I take up my Bible, which is the King James Translation, and turn to 1 Timothy 6:10. There I read, "For the love of money is the root of all evil." There seems to be tendency on the part of some to have a little fun out of some weaker brother. Now this should not be, brethren, we all need help spiritually and I feel that there are none weaker than your humble servant. Let us work to sustain our reputation of having more scripture "at our finger ends," as the old Scotch saying goes, than our sectarian friends. Brother Ed., come out to western Nebraska and we will study the Bible together. I know you can help me a great deal and I believe I can help you a "wee mite." Let's join hands and sing, "A man's a man for a' that."

While I am writing I will give you report of the Lord's work in this part of the vineyard. This is a new opening, the work having been opened by Bro. James E. Kelley, who came here last January in response to an invitation by your servant. He held meetings here for over a week with the finest of interest. He came back in February and baptized the wife of the writer. Elder C. W. Prettyman came here from General Conference and held a week's meetings and would have baptized another, but sickness prevented, so had to come back in May and attend to it. We had Elder Gamet here in October, who gave us meat in due season, for which we are truly thankful. Bro. James Kelley has promised to visit us soon and I hope and pray that he may be instrumental in bringing others to a knowledge of the light.

Now, brother editors, if you will kindly overlook the few Scotch phrases that I have quoted, I will close. It is drawing near to Christmas and my fancy seems to see the hills of Scotland under their mantle of snow as I saw them last, sixteen years ago. It makes my heart ache when I think of the demoralized condition of the church in my native land, but let us pray for "bonnie Scotland" that she may awake from her slumber and listen to the angel's message in the near future.

Yours for truth,

WILLIAM KEILL.

Dear Herald: We are still in the faith and doing what little we can by talking, writing, and handing out church literature. I have written several pieces for the newspaper, and am preparing one now for the Burlington Gazette, which makes the third one for them. The subject is, "The two resurrections." We do not see or hear from any of the elders except Brother Roth, except through the church papers. We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Ensign, and Hope. Sunday is a great feast day for us. Our souls are filled to overflowing by reading the sermons and letters from the dear brothers and sisters. How any true Latter Day Saint can get along without the church papers is more than we can conceive.

In a dream not long ago, I thought I was in a long, narrow building, a row of seats on either side and facing the center extended from one end to the other. Preachers of all denominations were seated on them. I walked to the center of the room, being filled with the Spirit, and uttered these words with a loud voice: "Hear ye, hear ye, ye inhabitants of the earth, I warn you. Repent ye, repent ye, for the hour of God's judgments is upon you."

Ever praying that we may live more faithfully, clinging to the rod of iron, I am,
I. M. LANE.

DOWN, KANSAS, December 10, 1909.

Editors Herald: This date finds us at the above named point, having arrived last night. We have been making a tour of the Northwestern Kansas District, but owing to the severe storm that has been prevailing, the prevalence of small-pox in one locality, an indifference on the part of some Saints and many outsiders, have been unable to do much. Held a series of meetings near Edmund, then attended a conference of the district at Selden on the 4th and 5th of the month. The attendance was the smallest I ever saw at a district conference. The severe storm raging at that time, together with other hindrances, were responsible.

There are plenty of places where work should be done, but when we begin to make inquiry there are excuses, or, as is sometimes the case, no response at all. I have been trying for the last three weeks to find some place where work could be done to advantage, but have been unsuccessful. Could have plenty to do in the Northeastern District, but the laborers are so few, and no work having been done in the northern part of the Northeastern District for nearly one year, we thought to offer a helping hand, sacrificing a preference, feeling this was our duty. It seems that many of our brethren and sisters, including many that hold the priesthood, have settled down to an unconcerned inactivity, while the Evil One rejoices and steadfastly continues his work. Is it not time to awake?

We thought to hold some meetings here till over Sunday, the 12th, but, as yet have received no encouragement. Do not know what we shall do in the event of failure here, unless we go on back into the other district. This letter is not the result of the "blues," but mildly describes conditions that exist. And we trust that when these lines are read by the dear Saints of northwestern Kansas, that it may cause some to ask, "Am I doing my duty?" We can not afford to give up; the effort and the conflict must be continuous until the end. True, at this time, we have had hindrances, but we notice that when we have grown indifferent we seize readily on most any excuse as a hindrance. We are still anxious to assist in forwarding this work wherever our lot may be cast.

Bro. F. E. Taylor started with me on this tour, but after our meetings near Cuba, he was detained at home on account of the sickness of one of his children. But after we encountered such conditions as we did, we did not encourage him to join us. We remember with gratitude the kindness shown by Brother Carl and Sr. Dora Frank, Bro. and Sr. T. D. Greer, Bro. and Sr. J. J. Teeters, and Sr. J. R. Sutton and family, all of whom have administered to our necessities. May God bless them all.

We were glad to meet the family of our Brother Sutton, who were former denizens of Holden. Of course there were many reminiscences of the past brought to mind to engage our conversation. Was sorry that we did not see J. R. there too, but he was "about his Father's business." We were also privileged to meet with Bro. John A. Teeters and family, of Alexander, whom we first met last May. May God bless and encourage all of his children is our prayer.

BLOOMSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, December 15, 1909.

Editors Herald: I desire to thank you for sending me the bundle of tracts. I am making good use of them, leaving one kind at houses, then calling in a few days, collecting them and leaving another kind. By this means I often receive an invitation to come in and talk over our work. So far I have been kindly received, having assisted the pastor of the Evangelical Church, also the pastor of the Pentecostal Church. I am preaching at a private house at the present time, but hope to secure a building in which I can reach more of the people. I have labored since June 1, in Scranton, Archibald, New Park, Philadelphia, and Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, and Elk Mills and Girdletree, Maryland. Three months of the summer was spent at Scranton and Archibald in tent work, Elder A. E. Stone being my companion. We were privileged to talk to many good and honest souls in that locality. I believe the fruits of our labors will be realized soon, as Brother Stone is following up our tent work, being assisted by the Saints in that place. A number were baptized by Brother Stone while the tent work was in progress.

We assisted in special meetings at Elk Mills for about ten days, Elder William Anderson remaining there. I believe he has caused an awakening in that place, as he has baptized a number of precious souls. At Girdletree, a small place, one hundred and sixty-three miles south of Philadelphia, we labored for two weeks, Bro. W. W. Smith and William Anderson having just opened up the work there, baptizing eight adults. Many more are near the kingdom. New Park is a country place composed of Saints made through the efforts of Bro. M. O. Matthews. Most of his flock are members of his own household, although most of them have married and have homes of their own. What a satisfaction it is to see our children come into the work. If Saints save only their own families they have done a wonderful work, and if they let their light shine so that others see, understand and accept, how much greater will be their reward at the end of the race. Two weeks were spent encouraging the Saints and friends here, then I came on to Philadelphia, stopping for a short time, and then took a one-hundred and forty-five mile ride and landed in Bloomsburg, where I am now lodged at the home of Bro. H. A. Cunningham, the only member in this place. I find he and his wife have been letting their light shine, for they are well spoken of by all the people that know them. This makes it easier for an elder coming to a new place, as people look at a person's religion by the life he lives—actions speak louder than words. I wish the Saints could understand this; people will forget sometimes what we say, but our life's actions never. May the Lord bless his work in all places, is the prayer of your humble servant,

Two Marvelous Manifestations.

On September 17, I began a series of meetings in the Lagonda Christian church, some fifteen miles south of Beaver, Missouri. I continued two weeks. Having had good attention, and learning that some were deeply interested, I returned, but to learn that their synagogue was closed against us; some branded us as heretics, and deceivers of the blackest dye. Not feeling satisfied to give up the work in that part, we went to a school building near by and continued for ten days, speaking to an overflowing house each evening. As usual, some opposition, lies circulated against us too numerous to mention, but amid the darkness burst forth a light—hear ye the encouraging part.

Sunday evening, November 21, four came forth and gave their hands for baptism, but the strangest part is that the audience says there were only three—one surely came spiritually. Some five or six of the Saints said they never saw but three. I told them who the fourth one was, so it was phoned that there would be four baptized. The time for the baptism came and the lady I saw came—I knew she would, for I saw her come direct to me and give me her hand, her face shining with the glory of heaven, and to satisfy myself in regard to her coming forward and giving me her hand, on the following day I drove over to her house and asked her regarding it. She replied that she did not come forth on that evening, but believed, and said it was strange. Yes, it is strange, indeed. In one sense God's work is a strange work and miracles have not ceased.

Here is the second one: A gentleman and wife, members of the Christian Church, had been investigating. On the Sunday evening spoken of, the lady gave her hand for baptism. The gentleman testifies that he had been praying regarding the work for several days, and as he drove home with his wife, children, and others, he realizing that his companion would be baptized the following day, began to plead with God for an evidence of the angel's message, and it came. A light shone above their heads, and illuminated their vehicle till, as one testified, a pin could easily have been picked up. All in the vehicle saw it; those in the other vehicles did not. Some exclaimed, What could it have been? The gentleman continued to pray if that was an evidence that it might appear again, and it came the second and third time before they arrived home. He was baptized.

I visited the family and questioned them regarding the light, and with eyes filled with tears, he related it declaring he knew it was from God, and while listening to it the Spirit rested upon me in much power, testifying to the truthfulness of it. I have read of late in our church papers that angels had appeared to some and many are obeying the gospel. Oh, Saints, how thankful we should be that we are born again and can see the kingdom. My soul overflows with joy to learn that God is pouring out his Spirit in abundance upon his servants this year, and indeed it seems the hastening time has come; and how diligent we should be; for the signs of the time surely indicate the near approach of the Master. My soul's desire is to be prepared to meet him. Hopefully,

Confidence.

During the Civil War, in one of the very popular songs of that time, occurred these words: "Many are the hearts that are weary to-night, waiting for the dawn of peace." I quote from memory and I may not have the exact words, but the sentiment is not lost. So often we have thought concerning the redemption of Zion. Many of the Saints have struggled under conditions hard to bear, and while they worked and prayed and sang, the heart was often weary waiting for the clouds to drift away, so they could see the silver lining to the clouds that would bring them showers of blessings. Now that the star of our hope has arisen in the form of the Order of Enoch, what will we do? Will we follow it like the wise men did and be led to where we can realize the hope of latter-day Israel, or, like the Jews, reject the light that comes to lead us out of darkness? There are three very important things for the Saints to do, and unless they are faithfully done our work will fail and God will have to call some one else to do it.

1. Have faith in God. Be not a doubter in his power to fulfill his promises.

2. Have faith in his promises. "Search these commandments, for they are true and faithful and the prophecies and promises that are in them shall all be fulfilled."—Doctrine and Covenants 1:7. If we are willing to pin our faith to that promise, there are others of great importance that it will be natural for us to add. In Doctrine and Covenants 87:8, in reference to Zion, we find, "She shall not be removed out of her place. I, the Lord, have spoken it." And another promise full of good cheer in Doctrine and Covenants 98:4, "They that remain and are pure in heart shall return and come to their inheritance; they and their children, with songs of everlasting joy; to build up the waste places of Zion." In Doctrine and Covenants 100:3, the promise of God to be with his people is made, and even the angels are to comfort and strengthen the Saints and be their leaders in their work.

3. We must have confidence in our leaders; we must be willing to follow their lead; we must trust them and help and encourage them in their arduous work; not as the ignorant, blind fanatics, but as honest, intelligent, loyal, and God-loving men and women, upholding them by our confidence, prayers, and means, because God has selected them.

They do not want the Saints to think that they are infallible; that would increase their burden and lessen their chances of success. What does the law say in the matter? Let us see. "And unless the liberties of the people of the church should be in jeopardy, the application of the law as stated by the bishopric should be acceded to."—Doctrine and Covenants 126:10. If anyone believes that the liberties of the people are at stake now or in the future, the proper thing to do is to lodge a complaint with the First Presidency, and the matter can be heard in an orderly way. In the most recent revelation we have this: "The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which have been given before, the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed."

When we turn back to 128:3, we learn who is to have charge of this work, and the Bishopric is named as the chief ones, "and they will be guided by the spirit of wisdom and revelation to do the work intrusted to their care." In view of these facts why can not we have faith in the law and in those whom God has called to administer it? Let us not seek the wisdom of worldly men, for however earnest and honest they may be, the light of God's truth has not permeated to the inner recess of their hearts; it is struggling for an entrance. If we heed God's word and give a faithful report to God's servants and officers, the long night of darkness will be dispelled, and happy and peaceful homes will be ours to enjoy, and they will be a goodly heritage to transmit to our children.

The United Order of Enoch is instituted by God for the purpose set forth in article 3: "The purpose of this corporation shall be to aid the worthy needy and poor in obtaining employment and homes, help the sick and afflicted and unfortunate in times of need, promote temperance, morality and equality, and provide against the evils of selfishness, covetousness, anarchy and crime of every description."

In article 7 we are informed who shall be members of the order: "Those who make a full compliance with the law of Christ, both as relates to duties known as spiritual and those referred to as temporal."

Every Latter Day Saint should read the document with great care, get its truths firmly fixed in their minds, and practice its precepts, and it will be the dawning of a glorious time for our people and the giving of light to the world. Heretofore our people have looked to insurance companies and fraternal societies for aid in distress, and to provide for the widow and children in case of premature death. What shall we do now that God's plan is put into operation? Will we be as faithful to our new responsibilities as we were to the lodge? If we do the widow's and orphan's tears will be dried up and the helpless will not appeal in vain, and happy homes will be the common heritage of all our people.

The Declaration of Independence proclaimed the rights of men when it said that "all men are created equal; endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The Constitution of our country was ordained that we might be protected in those rights, if need be by force. The United Order of Enoch comes to us to secure those blessings in a lawful and orderly manner. All three were inspired of God; they are the trinity of liberty, wisdom, and power, to emancipate us from the lust for power, the cause of selfishness and the misery of poverty. There is nothing like it to be found among the literature of the past. It is as unique as a proclamation of liberty to the present generation, as was the great Magna Charta to the English people in the time of King John.

EDWARD RANNIE.

Chronicles by Saint Andrews.

In the first year of the reign of Taft, over the united countries shadowed with wings, in the fifth month and the fifteenth day of the month, it came to pass that Saint Andrew, whose whose surname was Layland, having been sent by the apostles at Lamoni, a stake of Zion, to labor in the country of Idaho and the country round about which lieth to the west of the Rocky Mountains as thou goest from Zion toward the sea on the west, he having first visited his family in the western border of that country called Wyoming for the space of two weeks, went to the village of Hagerman, stopping by the way to visit Saints and friends at Pocatello, Minidoka, Caney, and Haley. At Hagerman he abode certain days preaching the gospel of Christ and baptizing five precious souls. When he had ended his labors at Hagerman, he departed and went unto the city of Boise, the same being the seat of government for the State of Idaho. Finding certain disciples there, he abode with them for the space of a full month, preaching the gospel, counseling and encouraging the Saints along the lines of duty, also baptizing two at that place. And it came to pass that when he had ended his labors in the beautiful city of Boise, he departed to go unto the Lamanites who dwell in the clear water country as thou goest to the north, stopping by the way to preach to the inhabitants of the cities of Caldwell and Weiser, in the Great Snake River Valley.

Now it came to pass that when Andrew arrived in the country of the Lamanites, and upon his going upon the mountains where the Lamanites usually congregate in the eighth month to gather the wild huckleberries that grow there in abundance, he found them not, and after tarrying there for the space of a week, visiting and instructing the Saints who reside there, he departed and went into the region of country bordering on the Clearwater River, where he visited Saints and friends and preached the glad tidings of the restored gospel.

At a meeting held under some large trees at the junction of the Cottonwood Creek with the Clearwater River, he preached two sermons to a mixed audience of Lamanites and others. Learning that his former labors in the Upper Clearwater country had resulted in the conversion of a man living near Harpster, Idaho, he departed from Myrtle and went to Harpster, where he preached the word and baptized one precious soul. He also preached in the town of Stites. Here he learned more of the conditions among the Lamanites, of the knowledge of which he determined to make good use in the future. From there he went to the city of Spokane, Washington, stopping to visit Saints at Lewiston, Idaho. On arriving at the city of Spokane he found all the elders, except one, absent from the city, and being invited he tarried certain days and preached the word and did such other work as seemed necessary. Departing thence, he went to the Hood Valley in northern Idaho, where he tarried for a while, preaching the gospel of salvation and baptizing four precious souls. Learning that the Saints at Sagle desired him to visit them he departed thence, and preached to them on the Lord's day, ready to depart on the morrow to go south into the country called Washington, to the little city of Pomeroy, where he tarried several days, preaching to those who desired to learn more of the doctrine of Christ.

And it came to pass while Andrew abode at Pomeroy, Silas (Condit) having passed through the upper western coasts, came to Freewater (Oregon) and finding certain disciples there, he decided to tarry and preach the gospel of Christ to the inhabitants of that city, and try more firmly to establish the Saints in the gospel of Christ. Learning that Andrew would soon pass that way, he wrote him, requesting him to stop at Freewater that they might consult together regarding their mission. Now when Andrew was come he and Silas labored together for some days in the cities of Milton and Freewater. But the demands for the work of the ministry elsewhere being so great, Andrew decided to go to Enterprise, Oregon, where he preached the word of God in the courthouse while he tarried in that city. And learning that certain Saints dwelt in the regions about Troy, he visited them also and preached the word of God. Departing thence, he came to Leap, where dwelt a few who had taken upon them the name of Christ, and calling them together he spoke to them the word of eternal life. Here he met Levi whose surname was Wilson, who had been engaged for lo these many days in hunting men and women out from the canyons and lonely wilderness places, preaching to them the unsearchable riches of the kingdom of God.

And it came to pass after Andrew had finished his labors in that region of country, he departed thence and returned to Caldwell, and entering into the house of Anderson, whose surname was Cox, he presented the words of eternal life to those who assembled to hear. And being not far from the cities of Boise and Weiser he again visited those places and preached the glad tidings of salvation to those who desired to know the truth regarding the restored gospel of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. And so endeth these chronicles on this 24th day of the eleventh month of the year A. D. 1909.

A. J. LAYLAND.

DANVILLE, ALABAMA, November 22, 1909.

Editors Herald: I do not feel like I could do without the HERALD. The many good letters from the Saints all over the world are very encouraging to all who read them. The conference at Pleasant View November 13 and 14 was a good one. The preaching by F. M. Slover and T. C. Kelley brought the people out. The attendance on Sunday was the largest that we have ever had at this place. The work in the Florida District is progressing nicely and all are well, with very few exceptions. Many people are trying to learn more about the doctrine of Christ. Bro. T. C. Kelley preached at Jay, Florida, on the 21st, but do not know how the attendance was. I am pleased to state that the Sunday schools in the Florida District are all alive and progressing nicely, and many are taking an interest that have not heretofore. Brother Kelley is teaching a singing school for ten days in the Santa Rosa Branch, and many of the progressive young people are taking a live interest.

I notice that many of our people stand to pray. I wonder if this is justifiable in worship to the Lord. I as one think when we enter our churches to worship the Lord we should kneel down in as humble a manner as possible. Jesus said to follow him. I think this means that we should be like him in all things and take pattern after him in all things.

In Luke's writing we find that the Savior kneeled to pray. "When thou prayest thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, for they love to pray, standing in the synagogues and on the street corners that they may be seen of men." I understand that the synagogue is a Jewish church. If these are the Savior's instructions do they not hold good to-day? If they don't and we are not commanded to kneel to pray in worshipping God, then I am in the dark and would like some light on the subject of standing to pray in worship.

I believe that the Prophet Daniel was one of the best men that ever lived. We find that when he prayed to his heavenly Father he kneeled down upon his knees. (Daniel 6: 10.)

Then let us examine ourselves and search the Scriptures and see if standing to pray is not in violation of the law, and is not one of the evils that doth so sorely beset us, and if it is, let us try to overcome it as well as the larger sins. If we can arrive at the conclusion that the Lord will grant us a better opportunity to serve him than he did to the Pharisees, or scribes and publicans, then we can stand in our worship to pray to him, but we can not come to the conclusion and be correct in it. Then we should be careful to worship God aright.

Ever hoping for the welfare of Zion,
Your brother in Christ,
SAM DIXON.

HARTBURG, TEXAS, December 13, 1909.

Dear Herald: I left home on December 8, for this place to hold a series of meetings. I commenced last Saturday night in a schoolhouse, but the weather has been unfavorable on account of rain; yet we had fair turnouts and good interest all the time. Last night a very large crowd and interest better, and I am hopeful of results. Some kicking has already commenced; a leading Baptist family are doing what they can to keep people from attending our meetings, which is always a good sign, as where the Lord commences, there is where Satan rallies his forces to enter a protest.

I am domiciled with Bro. Ellis Ford, who is a fine man and has a nice family, although none of them except himself belongs to the church. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church and is very conservative and kind. I am sorry she can not attend the meetings; as we are making friends to the cause, it seems. There are many preachers in this part of the world. Mostly titled creatures, representing any kind of religion and creed. More anon.

Yours in the conflict,
E. W. NUNLEY.

BELOIT, KANSAS, December 14, 1909.

Editors Herald: The HERALD is a great comfort to me, as we live out here where there are no Saints. If there are any Saints living around Beloit or Osborne, I would be glad if they would write me, as I know of only two living anywhere near here. The people that we have met do not seem so prejudiced, but we just came here about six months ago and I feel like a lost sheep. I ask the Saints to pray for me that I may live faithfully and near to God.

Your sister in Christ,
CORA B. WHEATON.

HOUSTON, MISSOURI, December 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: Four years ago I began to see visions and saw them for three months, both night and day. I saw two lights every night by the side of the road for three months. Then there were three more would form where the corners of four farms join, one of which was mine. As I was looking at those lights one night, wondering what they meant, it seemed as if something spoke and said on the 28th of November the observations would cease. On November 28 they went away and I never saw them again. Now I would like so well to know what it meant, and what the lights were for, if anyone can interpret it. I am all alone now. My husband died January 15, 1907. I am far away from any Latter Day Saints, and don't hear any preaching. But I enjoy the church papers so much.

I am seventy-six years old, and have a small farm, a cow, some chickens, and hogs.

Your sister in bonds,
MRS. H. M. STEEL.

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland has had a geunine Christmastide so far as weather conditions are considered. Also we have had a time for rejoicing in church matters. We have good, large crowds at nearly all the different meetings during the holiday time. Sunday school entertainment comes first in order and in number attending.

Bro. J. C. Farnfield is home with us for the holidays and gave us two real fine sermons on Sunday. The Religio gave a watch night service from 9 to 12. Opening with a lecture by Bro. J. W. Topping, entitled, "Joseph's land," with a large selection of illustrations with lantern slides.

Sunday school started the new year with a larger number than usual present, also some new faces. Sacrament service followed with Apostle U. W. Greene and Elder J. C. Farnfield in charge and a good attendance. The same two brethren had charge in the evening also, and Brother Greene occupying the hour to the interest and benefit of all present. Sister McNeil furnished a solo at the close.

Sunday school business meeting is a thing of the past, but the work has just commenced anew and we are going to make progress in the near future. Bro. E. A. Webbe was sustained as superintendent.

FRANK C. WEBBE.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, December 26. Cold and the snow quite deep, as Christmas day we had quite a snowstorm. The Sunday school attendance so small that a motion prevailed to postpone election of officers until the following Sunday. Elder Pement occupied in the morning to the edification of all present, the principal theme being that we should live the life we profess, to obey the commandments and admonitions of the Lord hour by hour and day by day. Many have died for their faith; the Lord may not require that of us, but we are surely expected to practice what we profess day by day.

Bro. Henry Kier gave us some good instruction in the evening. We are glad that all the brave members have not left Chicago. Our Sister Robie, baptized a week ago, came through the snow and cold at night with her three-months old baby without an escort to hear a sermon, and the Lord surely looks with love and compassion on such efforts. We feel that if all the Saints manifested such an earnest desire to comply with the law, our churches would be overflowing instead of so few at the services when there is disagreeable weather. The visitors at the morning service were Bro. Horace Bradbrook, Bro. James Keir and his son Clarence, Brother and Sister Keown with their two little sons, and James Schwartz, the youngest brother of the writer. Brother West, from Pittsburg, Kansas, worshiped with us in the evening.

Some of our people still have the idea that our location is on Cottage Grove, but this is a mistake, as our new church is located on Sixty-sixth and Honore streets, south side.

Bro. and Sr. J. J. Oliver and son are visiting in Saint Thomas, Canada. Elder Arthur Allen is expected in Chicago on New Year's Day.

The last day in the year, how few if any will feel satisfied with our record, how many duties left undone, and have we always lived as a fit example for others? We feel that the recording angel would not need much assistance in taking note of the members present at the last preaching service and prayer meeting of the year, held at Sixty-sixth and Honore streets. Our prayer is that we may overcome by putting our mistakes under our feet, and be better and braver soldiers the coming year. "Happy New Year" to all.

Secretary's report was then referred to a committee of three, A. F. McLean, James Pycoc, and F. Gray, they to report on disposition of money to this body. Librarian reported that a greater interest is manifested throughout the district than at any other time. Elder H. O. Smith reported: Since last conference I have preached 13 sermons in Niagara Falls, Ontario; 1 in Niagara Falls, New York; and 10 at Low Banks, Ontario; this with such other duties as I was called upon to perform, including one marriage. It was moved that Elder J. Shields be president of district; unanimously carried. Elders J. H. Taylor and E. Leader were chosen vice-presidents. Miss Hannah Leader was elected secretary; J. T. Whitehead treasurer; and Floralice Miller librarian. Delegates to General Conference: R. C. Russell, R. C. Evans, J. T. Thompson, James Pycoc, G. C. Tomlinson, J. Osborne, R. G. Laidlaw, and Mrs. R. G. Laidlaw. Delegates are empowered to cast majority and minority vote. It was suggested that no June conference be held, but that a series of two-day meetings be held in charge of the missionary in charge and district presidency. This suggestion was adopted. It was resolved that the time and place for the fall conference be subject to the call of the district presidency and missionary in charge. Resolved that a collection be taken after each preaching service, and that after bills were paid the remainder go to the district treasury. Saturday at 8 a. m. the service was in charge of Elder J. T. Thompson, Elder Blair being the speaker. At the prayer and testimony service at 8 a. m., Sunday, Bishop Evans addressed the Saints. The emblems were passed by Priests Gillett, Whitehead, Whitworth, and Cooper. At 11 a. m. the service was in charge of Elder G. C. Tomlinson, and Elder H. O. Smith was the speaker. At 2.30 p. m. Elder J. L. Mortimer was in charge, and Apostle Russell occupied. Sister Liddard's infant, Earl Reginald, was blessed, under the hands of R. C. Evans, R. C. Russell, and J. L. Mortimer. The evening service in charge of E. F. McLean, and Bishop Evans was the speaker. The total collection amounted to $63.01. Monday morning a business session was held, Elder Shields in the chair. The report of committee on secretary's financial statement was read and is as follows: To Toronto District conference: We your committee to whom was referred the question of the proportion of division of money among the different districts, purchasing of records, etc., beg leave to report as follows: 1. According to the minutes of last conference, both London and Toronto made provision to purchase their own supplies. 2. As this district's officers have been acting as agents in the purchasing of records, etc., for other districts (but, we believe, without authority), and as books have been purchased for the other districts we would recommend that the other districts be requested to take the records that have been purchased for them and that they be notified at once. 3. Whereas Toronto District's money has and is being used to purchase these records, etc., we recommend that you authorize its continued use until the purchasing is completed, and that those districts who take the books purchased for them pay money to Toronto district treasurer. 4. We recommend that the money in the treasury of the old London district at its disorganization be paid over to the new districts in per cent to their membership at the time of the last reports prior to the disorganization of the district. 5. We recommend that the former treasurer of the old London District be requested to hand over the books and money, if any on hand at the present, to the Toronto district treasurer. The report was adopted. A recommendation from the priesthood that the district go back to the plan of having meals free at conferences was adopted. Resolved that the bishopric of Canada be sustained. Resolved to reconsider the election of secretary. The original nominations were F. Miller and H. Leader. F. Miller was elected. Resolved that we adopt the Canadian Mirror as the organ of the Canadian Mission according to the rules under which it was published. Resolved that the name of Bishop R. C. Evans be incorporated with those in charge of the two-day meetings for the summer of 1910. Resolved that the secretary be given $10 for salary as secretary and also that the retiring secretary be given $5 for salary for past term. Resolved that hereafter the district officers be permitted to draw on the district treasury for legitimate expenses. Floralice Miller, secretary. P. S.—The resolution that is referred to which has not yet been published in the HERALD and was omitted from the conference minutes is: "Saint Thomas, Ontario, June 12, 1909. Whereas, we the Saints of the original London District have assembled in this the last conference of said district prior to its being subdivided and, whereas, we have with us to-day the one whom we can with a goodly degree of pride look up to, as we may say the father of the Canadian Mission, who has risen step by step from a newsboy on the streets of London in 1867, to office of priest in 1882, elder in 1884, seventy in 1886, and in 1887 to apostle in charge of Canada, while in 1902 he was honored with the highest possible honors conferable by the Lord upon any man by the Lord, aside from the prophet of the church, even that of counselor to the President, Joseph Smith, which position he has continued to hold until the recent General Conference in 1909, when the seed of the martyr came to his rightful place in the Presidency and President Evans was ordained to the office of Bishop and placed as such in charge of the finances of Canada. Therefore be it Resolved, That we, the above-named assembly, herewith tender to our beloved and most highly esteemed brother this an expression of our continued confidence and esteem of the integrity of his heart in his past administration spoken of in the recent revelation from the Lord through the prophet as, "He has been earnest and faithful in service and his reward is sure," and to further assure Bishop Evans that he will not only remain highly esteemed for his services of the past, but to express an unswerving fidelity and confidence of our anticipation of his continued integrity and fidelity."

NORTHWESTERN KANSAS.—District conference met at J. J. Teeters' residence near Seldon, December 5, at 2.30 p. m., President J. J. Teeters presiding. Mrs. J. R. Sutton was chosen secretary. Minutes of the previous conference were read and the president and secretary were ordered to correct the errors therein. Elder H. E. Moler reported verbally, his time having been mostly spent out of the district; preached nine times in district. Elder J. A. Teeters preached five times, attended forty services, acted as district and branch president and Sunday school superintendent; had done what local labor he could, but had been much hindered on account of sickness in family and also in providing the necessaries of life for the family. Elder Jake Jemison preached seven times, assisted in some other meetings, but he also had been prevented from laboring much on account of sickness. Elder James J. Teeters preached several times as occasion permitted, acted as Sunday school superintendent, married one couple, administered to the sick and labored as circumstances allowed. Elder John A. Teeters reported the condition of the branches throughout as being very poor spiritually. Bishop's Agent J. A. Teeters' report was read and received and ordered to be held over till next conference so as to be audited with the books. Standing committee reported on the J. F. McClure case. Motion prevailed that the district president notify J. F. McClure that thirty days be given him to make restitution and manifest true repentance to the satisfaction of district authorities. Upon failure so to do, he shall be expelled from the church. Moved as a substitute to adopt the findings of elders' court in case of J. F. McClure relative to his guilt. Carried. Elder J. A. Teeters reported as having done nothing in regard to Brother Scott's case, regarding his ordination. No action was taken by conference. Motion prevailed to leave time and place of next conference to district president. Delegates to General Conference: H. E. Moler, J. A. Teeters, J. R. Sutton, J. J. Teeters, F. E. Taylor, and Sr. J. R. Sutton. Mrs. J. R. Sutton, secretary.

Convention Minutes.

LONDON.—District Sunday school met in convention at London, Ontario, on Friday, October 15. Assistant Superintendent O. W. Cambridge was chosen to preside and requested that Bishop Evans and F. B. Blair assist him; this was granted. Frank Gray was chosen secretary and J. L. Burger assistant. At the afternoon session the presidency announced the committees appointed as follows: Credential, N. Overholt, G. Tomlinson, and T. B. Richardson; auditors, Apostle Russell, Elder Shields; press, R. J. Farthing, Frank Gray; chorister, Sister Ethel Gray; organist, Ethel Cambridge; ushers, R. Tomlinson and J. Winegarden. District Superintendent Maggie Macgregor, who is at present at Stonington, Maine, with Elder Macgregor, sent her report, and reported visiting one school. Assistant Superintendent O. W. Cambridge was the most active and gave in the most complete report of the convention; organized 1 school, visited about 10 different towns and villages, secured about 30 home class members, driving about 300 miles altogether. Secretary reported that it is hard work to get schools to report at end of quarter and had only received seven reports for June quarter and after an extra effort was successful in getting all but one in for September quarter, 12 schools reporting. Treasurer's report showed a small balance on hand. Home class superintendent, Sr. Lucy Yerks, reported gain of 33 members since June and everything seemed to be prospering. All financial reports were referred to auditors after which they were ordered to be paid. Communications were read regarding organization of West London school, and also regarding death of Alexander Moore, secretary of Ellice Sabbath School. Bishop Evans spoke concerning records of old district, stating that he forwarded them to General Secretary to avoid any further trouble or confusion. Credential and auditors' reports were received and adopted. Moved and seconded that we discontinue to pay per capita tax to General Association. Carried. Resolution regarding proposed home class quarterly read and approved and carried. Moved and seconded that we ask for Sunday afternoon for a Sabbath school to be in charge of district officers. Carried. Bro. F. B. Blair was requested to speak on Sunday school work and gave a soul-stirring address, which was encouraging to all Sunday school workers, to continue to press onward and upward. The following were elected delegates to General Conference: Bishop Evans, Apostle R. C. Russell, H. O. Smith, Elder Farnfield, Brother and Sister Overholt. The following are the district officers for ensuing term: Superintendent, John L. Burger, Saint Thomas; assistant superintendent, O. W. Cambridge, London; secretary, Frank Gray, London; treasurer, Mamie Constable, London; librarian, R. J. Farthing, London; home class superintendent, Charlotte Pearson, Saint Thomas. The evening program was interesting and consisted of speeches, recitations, songs, duets, blackboard, and model talk, paper on, "Who are the weeds?" All went off fine and a good feeling existed all through each session. Special mention is made of the model Sabbath school held on Sunday afternoon in charge of district officers. This is a new feature and certainly was beneficial to all concerned, and no doubt will be a special feature of the conventions in the future. The idea was to give instruction to all the different Sunday school workers present, showing them how to conduct a session properly. The school was divided into classes as usual, and though there was a large crowd to handle, everything went smoothly and in order. The secretary was assisted by all visiting secretaries and gave all information possible on that work, showing how the proper records should be kept, and a good scheme to make the reports interesting, impressing thoroughly the importance of sending in their quarterly reports on time and regularly. The attention of different features of session were explained by Superintendent J. L. Burger. Assistant Superintendent O. W. Cambridge reviewed school on the lesson, "True bread," having a loaf of bread and model. We can say that all were pleased with the first session of the district Sunday school and recommend that all other districts take it up. Frank Gray, secretary.

AGENTS' NOTICES.

To the Saints of Northern California District: As the time of our district conference draws near (which is in February) and the committee on tent for the district is to report, I am wondering what kind of a report we are going to make. Are we to confess that we have failed? It may be that most people think it is so far off, but the sooner we are ready the better. Some responded at once, and we have on hand $39.47, about one third what we ought to have. When Stockton, where there are only about three who are able to pay, gave twenty dollars I thought we would have no trouble to get the rest easily. We are to buy a tent, how are we to buy without money? Wake up!

Yours in the work,
CHAS. A. PARKIN, Bishop.

The Telescope that Floats in Water.

At the Harvard University Observatory a gigantic telescope floats in a tank of water. It is one of the largest in the world, the reflecting mirror being five feet wide. Mounted on a water-tight cylindrical steel float, the telescope swings in a concrete tank full of water, only slightly larger than the cylinder, which is designed to fit it closely and serve as a pivot for the telescope, instead of having it mounted on a solid base. Machinery at each side holds and guides it. The water bears the weight, and the movements of the telescope are regulated by tiny electric motors; the gigantic mirror can be easily removed and reversed, when it grows dim, although two tons are indicated when it is placed on the scales. Through this telescope stars of the sixteenth and eighteenth magnitude are revealed, and it seems to penetrate into the very abysses of the heavens. While the instrument is mounted in the open air, the image is reflected to an eye-piece, in an adjoining building, where the astronomer sits and makes calculations in which millions of miles are dealt with as indifferently as the simplest sums in ordinary bookkeeping.

The first look through a great telescope is disappointing, but the novice soon sees that the flat appearance which the heavens present to the naked eye is replaced by a curious concavity; the moon and stars seem to be hung in space rather than spread out on a flat surface. For a moment one feels at the telescope like a child watching the swift-moving balls kept in the air by a juggler, and expecting to see one of those great, bright bodies fall. Then comes the thought—"What keeps them there, apparently suspended in space with absolutely nothing to hold them firm?" The explanation of the learned astronomer causes the brain of the layman to whirl, and he sees himself, perhaps for the first time, as a child gathering pebbles on the great shores of the sea of knowledge, or as "an infant crying in the night; an infant crying for the light—and with no language but a cry."—January National Magazine.

WHAT DO JEWS BELIEVE?

From the Christian standpoint the Jew is in a peculiar position. Whether peculiar or otherwise he maintains it with characteristic persistency and has suffered enough in many lands at the hands of many people to acquire a certain dignity and claim a measure of respect.

For many years he was the light of the world in a religious and intellectual sense. Yet when the full culmination of his glory came in the form of his own Messiah he turned from it. Because of this, himself rejected, he has been scattered and smitten.

Yet if we are to believe the prophets he has before him another glorious period when the scales shall fall from his eyes and he shall at last receive the gospel from those to whom it has been committed. In view of this fact it is of interest to discover his present attitude of mind, to learn directly from him concerning his present belief. Herewith in this connection we present an article written by Rabbi H. G. Enelow, and issued as a tract by the Central Conference of Rabbis, Cincinnati, Ohio. The article shows a shifting of opinion among "reformed Jews" from the idea of a personal Messiah, while "orthodox" Jews still cherish the old ideal.

What do Jews believe? Both Jews and non-Jews are often heard to put this question; the former to make sure where they stand, to render to themselves what the old rabbis called an "account of the soul"; the latter because they are eager to know just why we remain Jews in the religious sense and at all cost keep from merging with any other religious body. Are there any beliefs at all that Jews are agreed upon and that may be said to form the groundwork of universal and perennial Judaism? Such beliefs I think there are, and the purpose of this paper is to describe them briefly.

The first belief of Judaism relates to God. It is as clear as daylight that no matter how broad or liberal or advanced one may be, one can not consider oneself a true Jew if one does not believe in God. Religion without God is a self-contradiction, and altogether out of the question. In fact, belief in God with us has not only been a matter of reason, but also of intuition, of that side of our soul which the old rabbis regarded as a phase of reason, and which after all plays a very important part in the life of all. This is not to say that Judaism had undervalued reason. Quite the contrary is true. Reason is invoked by both the Bible and the Jewish thinkers of later times as confirming the truth of God's existence. But primarily the Jew has always felt the existence of God as a basic truth in life. Not experience but his own soul first taught him to exclaim: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God, the Lord is One," those stirring words which from time immemorial have comprised the foremost motto and epitome of the Jewish faith.

This, then, is our first belief. Without it Judaism is impossible. Without it one may be descended of Jews, associate with Jews, belong to a Jewish club or lodge, marry a Jewish husband or wife—one may be Jewish in racial or social relations—but one is not a Jew in the true historic sense of the term.

But, in relation to God, Judaism has always held another characteristic belief, namely, as to his attributes, or qualities. Judaism lays stress on the oneness of God, and, if I may say so, the uniqueness of God. Oneness, in the sense that true Judaism has admitted the possibility of more than one God, or of the division of the deity into different parts, powers, or forms. But God also is unique. "One, and there is no unity like unto his unity," as the old Hebrew hymn has it. The meaning of this assertion is that Judaism has invariably considered that God is perfect, and in this respect different from all other gods. To put it in other words, the Jews believe that God is not only one, but also free from those infirmities and limitations which have been associated with the gods of other peoples. Such accounts of the contests, ambitions, rivalries, and moral imperfections of the deities as may be found, for example, in the mythology of the Babylonians, of the Greeks, or of the Teutons, are unthinkable in connection with the Jewish God idea. From earliest times we have been taught that God is holy, allwise, allpowerful, and that his sole plan in the universe is to cause within it the triumph of holiness and righteousness. "Holy, holy, holy," as we read in Isaiah, "is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory." (6: 3.)

This leads us to another Jewish belief, and that is with regard to the world. "The whole earth is full of his glory." It is well known that some people believe that the world as such is tainted with sin, that, being matter, it is inherently corrupt, that it is in reality but a place in which one is to prepare for another life, and that those are the most pious men and women who withdraw from it as much as possible. This belief has given rise to morbid views of the world, as well as to the various orders of monks and nuns. What do Jews believe on this point? It may be said that the common belief of the Jews of all ages has been the contrary of the idea just alluded to. We do not believe in a Devil, in the corruption of the world, nor that to be in the center of the world's activities and enjoyments means necessarily to subject oneself to the taint of sin. We believe in God as the Creator of the world, which, of course, need not mean a literal belief in the old accounts that he created the world in six days. Whatever process he may have used for bringing it into being, we ascribe the origin of him. Without God—chaos. Having created the world, however, he has not sent it forth to run its course in haphazard fashion. He is not an absentee God, contemplating creation from a distance and caring not how the world wags. On the contrary, he is everywhere and in everything. No other power interferes with his presence. "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?" says the Psalmist, "or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." (Psalm 139:7-12.) Moreover, God governs the world according to his law of righteousness and goodness. "He loveth righteousness and judgment," says the Psalmist, "the earth is full of the goodness of the Lord." (33:5.) And as to its inhabitants, their chief duty is not to turn their backs upon the world in fear of pollution, but rather to cling to it and work in such manner as to help fulfill the divine plan of beauty, order, and goodness, and thus become what the rabbis have called "fellow laborers with the Holy One."¹⁹ "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens," says Isaiah, "God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not as a waste, he formed it to be inhabited. I am the Lord; and there is none else." (45:18.)

Indeed, this is what gives man his place in the world. But that leads us to another of our important beliefs, namely, with respect to man and human life. What do we believe about man? To put it negatively first, we do not believe in a great many of the doctrines that are current among other people, as the doctrine of original sin, the fall of man, the need of vicarious atonement, and such like. On the contrary it has been pointed out that the idea of original virtue, or the virtue of the fathers, has played a more important part in Judaism than that of original sin. As a matter of fact, we believe that man, as the Bible tells us, was created by God in his own image, and amid all varieties of trend, desire, and power preserves the stamp of divinity. Hence the Jewish idea of the brotherhood of all men, of the sanctity of even the humblest life, and of the embracement of all in the divine plan, howsoever they may differ in outward things. All bear the impress of the divine image in their soul. Furthermore, to realize this divine nature and enact it in his life, is man's paramount duty and purpose. In so far as he does this, his life is what it is meant to be; otherwise, it falls short. Nothing, according to the great teachers of Israel, can take the place of this individual responsibility, of this personal duty, of this consecration of life; neither ritualism, nor sacrifices, nor fasts, nor feasts, nor material charity; neither the merit of the fathers, nor the mediation of another person. Holiness, righteousness, morality—not morality in the narrow conventional sense, but in the widest sense—this is the fundamental duty. Other things may follow, and add grace and glory to life; but first there must be the true striving after holiness, not with an eye on reward of any kind, but rather because holiness ought to be the chief pursuit of man. Said Antigonus of Soko, a Jewish teacher of the third century B. C.: "Be not like slaves who serve their master with a view to receive recompense; but as servants that serve their master without a view to receive recompense." Or, as once for all this principle is summed up in Leviticus 19:2: "Ye shall be holy, for I the Lord your God am holy."

THE WAILING PLACE OF THE JEWS.

John L. Stoddard, the traveler and lecturer, says that he found in Jerusalem a fragment of the old wall of Solomon's Temple to which the Jews gather every Friday to wail and lament. He quotes the words of a prayer that he heard uttered, at that place: "We are become a scorn and a derision to our neighbors. Oh, Lord! behold we are thy people. Remember not our iniquities for ever. We are brought very low. Oh, let thy tender mercy redeem us."

But, it is asked, has God really said so? Do we know anything about his will? In other words, do we believe in revelation? Religion, it has been said very truly, is not merely the belief in the existence of God, but rather in the possibility of man's approach of, and communion with God. That God has communicated, revealed his nature and laws to men, has always been one of our basic beliefs. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets." (Amos 3:7.) This is not to say that all Jewish thinkers have been at one in their idea of the method or the process of revelation. Discussion of the latter, however, belongs to the realm of metaphysics. Suffice it to say, that we believe that the Bible furnishes a faithful record of the great laws of life, of the laws of morality and religion, which God revealed to Israel, and more especially to the prophets of Israel. Technical disputes as to how the revelation occurred do not affect the general belief; nor is it affected by whether or no we hold that every letter of the Bible was inspired. Though we may suppose that the actual writing and editing of the Bible took place in the usual human fashion, we do not waver in our conviction that it contains the highest revelation of God possessed by mankind. Moreover, our belief in the choice of Israel for the divine revelation, does not preclude the view that God has spoken to other peoples as well. On the contrary, we believe in the universality of revelation. "The whole Tora was spoken in every tongue," we read in the Talmud. "Every word that went forth from the mouth of the Holy One was divided into seventy tongues." Other utterances of similar nature might be cited from Jewish teachers of all ages, testifying to the Jewish belief that, though God may have revealed himself particularly to Israel, he did not withhold his light and his truth from the other peoples. "For from the rising of the sun unto the going down of the same my name is great among the nations; and in every place incense is offered unto me, and a pure offering: for my name is great among the nations, saith the Lord of hosts." (Malachi 1: 11.)

As to what becomes of man after he has "shuffled off this mortal coil," Judaism has never speculated very much. Yet we must admit that this is one of the main questions that men are apt to ask religion to answer. What becomes of our soul? Do we believe in a hereafter? Briefly speaking, we certainly believe that the soul survives the dissolution of the body, but just what occurs after death, and what the state of the soul is, the purest teaching of Judaism has never attempted to define. Our attitude has found expression in the biblical verse forming the opening words of the traditional burial service: "The Rock, his work is perfect, for all his ways are judgment: a God of faithfulness and without iniquity, just and right is he." (Deuteronomy 32: 4.) We are sure that the soul of man which, in biblical phrase, is a light of God, is not put out altogether, and that our life, with its struggles and sufferings and failures, will be rightly dealt with by the Lord of righteousness. More than this we can not say. In this respect, the good Jew, rather than engage in idle fancies and theories, is content to walk in faith, and, in the words of the beautiful old hymn, he says:

"Into His hand I commend my spirit
When I sleep and when I wake;
And with my spirit, my body also:
The Lord is with me, and I will not fear."

But what do we believe about the Messiah? It is well known that the Messiah idea has been closely connected with Jewish thought and experience. Christianity, which is built on this idea, sprang from Judaism. Jesus, the Messiah, or the Christ, of the Christian world, was a Jew, and it was the question or his messiahship that created the cleft between the two religions. No wonder it is oftentimes asked what belief we hold on the subject. Now, on this point there is now, as there always has been, difference of opinion. Doubtless some Jews still entertain the hope of a personal Messiah. Reform Jews, however, do not. They do not believe in the miraculous Messiah. All Jews, however, agree in the hope for the advent of a messianic age—an age when humanity will enjoy the reign of righteousness, unity, and peace, and all hearts shall be united in the pure worship of the one and only God. "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." (Zechariah 14: 9.) This messianic ideal, toward which it is the duty of all men to work and aspire, we regard as one of the most beneficent gifts Israel has made to the spiritual riches of the race.

Moreover, Israel as a people, as a religious community, as a spiritual brotherhood, is in duty bound to work unremittingly for the realization of this lofty ideal. To him this ideal was revealed of yore, to him the laws of its fulfillment were communicated by the mouth of the prophets, and upon him was the inviolable task laid of spreading and furthering it with all his heart and all his soul and all his might, at the price of no matter how much trial and suffering. This, the call, the election, the mission of Israel. This makes Israel what the prophets have called him, the servant of God. This is why Israel has been "the man of sorrows" among the nations, despised and rejected of men, stricken and afflicted and acquainted with grief, wounded and bruised, persecuted and outlawed, humbled and maimed, in order that he might witness to the supreme ideal, to God and righteousness, and cure mankind of superstition and iniquity, and bring nigh the age of justice, of knowledge, and of peace. Well may humanity say: "The chastisement of our peace is upon him; and in his wounds there is healing for us!" (Isaiah 53: 5.)

We believe that the Jews will have to continue to stand together, and toil, and suffer until the final fulfillment of their noble ideal. That is our faith as to our future. Nor has our work thus far been in vain. "The righteous flourishes like the palm tree!" we are told by the Psalmist, to which the old rabbis add by way of comment: "When you plant any other tree, it grows for itself; but plant a palm, and it will put forth roots on all sides: so the righteous." May we not apply this figure to Israel? Judaism has not only flourished for itself, but has put forth roots for other creeds. Israel's influence is felt in the religious life of the whole civilized world. It is felt not only in the old forms of faith, but also in the new liberal spirit which is abroad in the land, and which in so far as it is a departure from certain old dogmas, marks a return to the pure faith of Judaism. But even where we have as yet failed of tangible proofs of success, has our work been in vain, though seem so it may? Such work is never done in vain. It sleeps in the very bosom of things, of the universe, and only abides its time. Come forth it shall. It is there. 'Tis much faith the great prophet puts into the mouth of Israel: "Listen, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye peoples from afar; the Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword: in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me; he made me a polished shaft,—in his quiver hath he hid me; and said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. Then I said, I have labored in vain, I have spent my strength for naught and in vain: yet surely my judgment is with the Lord and my work with my God." (Isaiah 59: 1-4.)

Such, in brief, are the Jewish beliefs. The unity and the holiness of God, the goodness of the world, the divine nature and the immortality of the human soul, and the possibility of its communion with God, and the consecration of human life: these ideas are the foundation on which Judaism has builded. Moreover, we believe in the election of Israel as a means to an end, the end being the diffusion of those ideas among all men and the ultimate reform of human life in accord with them. Whenever this has come true, it shall mean the kingdom of God on earth, the messianic age, the fulfillment of Israel's highest ideal.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Fifty years ago man power turned our presses. Tallow candles lighted editorial sanctums. The old fireplace gave heat. To-day the Herald Office burns three tons of coal daily to furnish steam heat and electric light and power. Elders' Note-Book

DEPORT IN THE HOUSE OF WORSHIP.

At a meeting of the priesthood during a late reunion, the above subject was brought up for discussion with a view to investigating some much needed reform along these lines. It has become a recognized fact that Latter Day Saints have become sadly lacking in house of worship courtesy, and far behind most any other body of worshipers in the land, while they should be, in this, as in everything else, a pattern.

To emphasize the subject and bring it before the whole church generally, one of the body was requested to write up an article for publication, setting forth conditions as they exist, and making an appeal to every member of the church, male and female, the priesthood and otherwise, for coöperation in a reform movement. It is to be regretted that it should become the duty of anybody to write upon such a disagreeable subject. The redeeming feature is that the offense is so general there is no danger of the writer being charged with personality. It is to be hoped that this is the beginning of a reform that will reach every branch and mission in the church.

It has been asked by those who have been brought up to better things, "Why should it be necessary at the opening of a regular religious service in a civilized land, to say, 'The time has arrived and if the congregation will please come to order we will open the meeting'?" In answer, I might say that one of the leading members has said: "There is no legitimate reason and it is a reflection upon the raising of Saints, to say nothing about our religion, that such a condition should exist." Then, Saints, how long will it be before the time dishonored phrase will be relegated to archives of the dim, dusty, forgotten past?

We often hear of sectarian seclusiveness and religious formality. No doubt there may be an extreme in that regard, but let us draw a picture. A congregation is assembling for worship; they enter the building in a quiet, orderly manner, with a smile, a nod of recognition, and perhaps a handshake for those that are nearest, and take their places. Presently a minister arrives, a stranger; the minister meets him at the door, takes his coat and hat, and conducts him to his place on the platform. The minister observes that the floor is clean, the furniture is free from dust, and the pulpit is beautiful with flowers. He smiles his appreciation and the audience becomes perfectly quiet. At the appointed moment the one who assists picks up the list of hymns previously prepared and gives out the opening song. We will leave them to go on with their service and call your attention to another minister who has been invited to preach in a hall or schoolhouse.

He observes a number of men and boys in groups around the door and horse shed talking, laughing, and some smoking. He says, "Good morning," to a few and passes on into the house where he finds men, women, and young people are talking and laughing, the children running up and down the aisles, and some trying to play the organ. The floor is dirty and littered up and all is confusion. The minister finds a seat for himself and waits until ten or fifteen minutes after the appointed hour; then he speaks to the officer in charge and calls his attention to the lateness of the hour.

"Oh, yes," he replies, "I wonder what we will sing." Then he hunts up the chorister or organist and he finally hunts up a list of tunes, and opens the service by telling a partial untruth, stating that the time had arrived, as though it had not arrived and departed a half hour ago. Then the old "come to order" is rung and the hymn is announced. By this time the minister, unless he is an old war horse, is so nervous that he is wondering whether he can preach at all or not. However, he begins, when soon babies begin to fret and cry and two or three little tots are running around attracting attention. Nobody seems to own them, and yet the minister is expected to preach a good sermon.

I have painted two pictures: which is the better, and which applies most accurately to Latter Day Saints? Alas, it is too well known and the fact too often leads people to other churches to wonder who is to blame for it and why it obtains.

The baby-at-church problem is a very delicate subject to touch upon and withal very hard to adjust. No one loves to see the mother enjoy religious services more than the minister himself, but let me mention a case: I once listened, or at least tried to listen, to a minister trying to preach. His face was red, and he was sweating and striving to keep tab on his subject, while two babies were making a great deal more noise than he was and attracting more attention. One mother was trying her best to regulate her child, the other did not seem to notice. During the week I took occasion to ask the first mentioned mother how she enjoyed the discourse. "Well, I guess it was alright, but I did not hear more than ten words, baby was so cross. I would have taken him out but I wanted to hear the sermon so bad." Yet she did not; neither did she realize that all the rest were deprived of the same privilege, beside driving the preacher to the point of desperation.

It is not the intention to be arbitrary or in any measure use drastic measures, but it is the intention to redeem the name of Latter Day Saint in the above mentioned matter, knowing full well that it can not be done without a hearty coöperation on the part of all the members. What do you think about it, Saints? Will you all try?

Don't think that mothers are going to be deprived of going to church or even of taking their children, but let me relate something else. The writer once saw a Methodist lady with three little children, visit our services in a schoolhouse. She took them into a seat and sat with them. Their deportment was perfect. That evening I heard an elder ask the question, "Why can not Latter Day Saint mothers train their children to be as respectful and quiet in church as do Methodist mothers?" Does this mean anything? We want the day to soon come when such a question will be entirely out of order.

Here are some points which, if considered, would help matters wonderfully: It is due the Lord to put on our good behavior in his worship. Let the officers open the service on time and close likewise; let them not pray back to the audience; let them not say, "The time has arrived," especially when it has passed; and let everyone help to make it unnecessary to think of saying, "Let us come to order." Let us remember that it is written, "Let everything be done decently and in order." By order,

THE SOCIALISTIC CHURCH.—PART II.

THE PARTING OF THE WAYS.

By what methods or means shall the realization of the ideal be effected?

It is here where the socialistic propaganda presents its weak joint in the armor. It is at this point that sooner or later it will be humiliated by failure and experience the need of the very thing which gives to Christianity its strength. That after all the sacrificing sarcasm and supercilious contempt of what they conceive to be worn-out superstition, Christianity still has the only practical solution of the problem.

At the present men have seen a vision, they have heard a voice; and they are trying to locate the vision and interpret the voice. But how to give incarnation to the vision and to make music out of the multitudinous sounds which have fallen upon the ear is the difficulty of to-day. The eye is not properly able to focus, to get rectilinear definition: and the ear as yet unaccustomed to the strange medley of cryings surging within humanity's heart; it is only to be expected therefore that men should go to extremes in their ideas. Under the exuberance of this delirious sense of power and freedom which has dawned upon the economic horizon, by which the drooping soul of the toiling masses has been thrilled, almost intoxicated as though under the influence of a powerful stimulant, they have not the right perspective and "see men as trees walking."

But this chaotic stage will soon pass and adjustment based upon intelligent conceptions, will soon take place between the new society and the new range of ideas and once again with marvelous adaptability men will fall into line. Let us not be either severe in our criticisms of mistaken methods nor foolishly ignore the truth which is at our feet because as yet its power has not been properly harnessed nor its legitimate place in our experience allocated. Let us remember that with the discovery of new power and new truth reactionary influences begin to operate.

THE SOCIALISTIC METHOD.

The method which is favored by the socialist, generally speaking, is the violent alteration of conditions by which we are surrounded, and readjustment of the circumstances in which we are conditioned. I do not say that they favor, generally speaking, a revolution of blood or physical violence, but, I mean they are eager to take hold of the ponderous machinery out of which have emerged laws and constitutions and ruthlessly abolish some, amend others, and engraft upon these a new code, and enforce obedience thereto. This, I believe, is the aim of all socialists both in America and Europe. To deal with things and externals and by acts of parliament bring into existence a new order of society, so that every individual will be forced into communistic relationship. The change is to be brought about by dealing with things and not with men.

A SELF-DESTRUCTIVE METHOD.

That such a method contains the elements of suicide scarcely needs arguing. Seeing that laws are but the crystallization of popular opinions precipitated in the form of resolutions enacted by majorities, it is clear that before such laws could be enacted the work of education must precede every other effort. This method is tediously slow and painful, yet in the course of our evolutionary progress we can not take short cuts to our desired goal.

To do anything which will force men into submission to any regime against their will is slavery; and slavery, whether physical or moral, is a turning backward of the finger of life upon the dial of time.

In addition to the enormous expenditure in sustaining a force of men to keep the unwilling ones in line, there would always be the danger of treachery, and when the opportunity presented itself that bribery could effect an evasion, reversion to the old method would be inevitable.

In the language of Henry George, "At the back of the social problem you have the problem of the individual." And as Herbert Spencer puts it, "There is no political alchemy by means of which you can get golden conduct out of leaden instincts."

We can not make men just and honorable by the science of economics, (and that is what socialists are aiming at,) any more than by force of law. Such a course applied to the drink problem has been a dismal failure, and no man can be made sober by act of parliament, nor a sinner into a saint by fear of hell. The real source of all reformation is within and not without. We may cage beasts and discipline animals by the whip and we control machinery by the throttle, but men will not be dealt with in that way. It would be exactly the same principle which has been operative in the age of the survival of the fittest and reign of individualism; the only difference would be in the channel or medium of operation, and for my part I prefer to be ruled by an intelligent aristocracy rather than by an ignorant democracy.

SALVATION BY ENVIRONMENT IMPOSSIBLE.

To put the burden of saving the individual upon the environment is not in its real effect complimentary to the individual, nor can it therefore be productive of the best results to him in the long run. Surely we can not consider with seriousness the splendid record of human achievement and realize that man has scaled the heavens; and delved into the recesses of the earth; and wrested from the heart of Nature some of her profoundest secrets, and employed these forces for commercial purposes, the very powers which at no distant date were the dread ministers of deities or devils before which all were prostrate in fear and awe. This all but God (for he must be almost God who can use the powers which it takes God to create) is the poor invertebrate creature who whines for an environment in which to exist! Out upon such a miserable insult to the best traditions of our race and the monumental testimonies of man's inherent greatness. All history is the record of man's power to make his environment and manufacture his circumstances. The socialistic clamor for better hours, better houses, better education, is alright in its way, but the socialists are not employing these things in the right way. Is there any evidence that better houses will produce better character? That better hours will increase the efficiency of the laborer? That education will minimize crime?

Mrs. Besant in her autobiography says, "Educate the people and then sin and crime will disappear." In a speech made in Leeds recently the same lady said, "Sin and crime are the fruits of ignorance."

Is it true that we find all our virtue, honor and saintliness in universities, colleges, and seminaries? Has there been a diminution of sin and crime commensurate with the increase of education?

In a modern play upon the London stage called, "The Devil," his Satanic majesty is made to say, "For my purpose give me a man with brains."

Is it consonant with our experience that only criminals and sinners are to be found among the illiterate and ungrammatical?

Have we encouragement to believe that by placing the unfortunate inhabitants of the East-end slums in the gilded mansions of Mayfair and Piccadilly, this change would produce better character in these slummers?

It is worse than useless to have the environment unless you have the organism adapted to the environment, so that the environment can be used by the intelligence of the man. It is interesting to remember at this point, according to the story of the fall in Genesis, when man fell he was not in a slum but in Paradise. As John Burns graphically put it in the House of Commons recently, "If Parliament gives the working man better hours and better houses who is going to give him a pair of legs to carry him by the first public house?"

MORAL LAWS.

If, as Mr. Philip Snowden says, "Socialism proposes to regulate wealth by the moral law," then we may ask, Who is going to apply the law? To what is it going to be applied? Moral law can not be applied to irrational creatures, who are victimized by circumstances, because they are incapable of volition, and this is precisely what is claimed for humanity by some of the foremost leaders in the socialistic propaganda. Kier Hardie, M. P., asks if a man can be Christian on a pound a week, and decides to answer the question in the negative. R. Blatchford concludes the vicious, the criminal, the libertine, and the sinner are not to be blamed or punished for their wrongs, because they were made such by their environment. Karl Marx and Kautsky demand a recognition of the thesis that the economic and social conditions are responsible for the morality and intelligence of the people.

If these things are true of what use is the moral law?

Will not this despairing doctrine of determinism be equally as applicable to the capitalist, to the landlord, and to the aristocrat, as to the laborer, the pauper, the harlot, and the criminal?

How, then, can such a thing as "moral law," which implies "moral responsibility," be of service if "moral responsibility" is denied?

That these very leaders of the socialistic movement are completely inadequate to deal with this matter, so far as method is concerned, is amply proven by the fact that while, as already pointed out, they seek to place the responsibility for the misery and crime and poverty which abound upon environment and circumstances and write with turgid eloquence about determinism, they, nevertheless, have to appeal to what Blatchford himself calls the "altruistic sentiment" in man. And what is this altruistic sentiment in man upon which the modern apostle of the dismal doctrine of determinism depends for the realization of the socialistic dream? Hear him: "Sever the socialistic movement from the altruistic sentiment and it is a lost cause." "No, from the first, I have felt that without the altruistic sentiment socialism could never prevail." "In the growth of love lies the hope of socialism; in the prevalence of selfishness lies its menace and danger." "The true basis of socialism, it seems to me, should be an ethical one." "We should be equally resolved to do the thing which is right, and to do it because it is right, whether it be economically sound or not." "We are to give, not to take; to serve, not to be served." Finally, hear this question: "What are we to do? Our duty it seems to me is to fan the divine embers of love into a flame, to aid by every means in our power to spread the altruistic sentiment amongst the people. Next to that it is our duty, by fair, honest, and gentle means to make clear to all men the truth, the justice and the wisdom of socialism." And this same "Numquam," this same Blatchford, the same editor of the Clarion, this author of one of the most destructive books written in recent years, to religion and morality, defines only in 1902 this basic principle of socialism "altruism" as follows, "Christ's glorious gospel of love against man's dismal science of greed." (See tract, "Altruism.")

Much could be quoted to show that while the socialist desires with all his power to place the responsibility of the evil, misery, and crime upon the back of environment, yet the stern fact of human nature every time will force these modern "Balaams" to bless the thing (moral responsibility) that they would curse.

Then, if as Belfort Bax says, "Socialism teaches that there is not salvation for the individual save in and through society," and the individual is not to be credited with the power of moral responsibility, we shall never see the day when, to quote Blatchford once again, "If we could stand firm and fast together in our millions, and declare that we would have God's kingdom now, that we would have hope and life for God's children here and to-day, who then should stay us from our purpose or deny our right?" —The Clarion, April 30, 1909.

How are we to stand fast in our millions unless we get the ones, the units, to love right and stand fast in fidelity? How is society, which is but the aggregation of individuals living together with all the results of individual endeavor producing its harvest, to ever aid in the salvability of the human race unless the philosophy of Christ, which these socialistic leaders would spurn, is put into personal operation?

We can not forget the weighty and portentous message of the Hebrew prophet: "I will bring evil upon this people; even the fruit of their own thought."

Our troubles and miseries and tragedies to-day are but the devastating harvest of wrong thinking and wrong desiring. Shall we sow and then expect to dodge the reaping? That is precisely what the socialistic propaganda holds out to the great army of dupes.

We speak plainly because our socialistic writers love to talk to others in what they call very distastefully, "a flat-footed manner."

THE REAL METHOD.

First of all, may we say that though with straight and plain language we have thus pronounced adverse judgment upon the thoughtless and inconsistent scheme favored by modern socialists, we yet see in the entire movement a glorious evidence of divine working. We see in this restless state of humanity, that a condition has been attained in which at least the aim of man and the purpose of God in man are gradually blending and becoming one. We can not interpret the hungering cry of humanity, voiced discordantly it may be, other than an inarticulate longing for God and the realization of the divine purpose. And as Carlyle in that wonderful work on the French Revolution says, "In the great mass of evil as it rolls, good is ever working to the top"; so in this apparent hour when the great and sacred traditions of the past are being ruthlessly shattered by the iconoclasm of the new power of humanism, it is still true that "God is working everything together for good." But now, as then, this divine event is seen only to "them who love him."

First then, we declare that the only way by which the transmutation of the present economic state with its concomitant evils, which have been already briefly noticed, into the condition which is desired by all right thinking men, is to be effected, is to begin with the individual primarily. Instead of being more concerned with what I do for what I can get, which is the dominant law of present endeavor in social, political, commercial, and even religious life, I must seek to give the best work and express the reality within, for that is the only duty any man can perform, and this duty, but nothing less, is owed to himself, to society, and to God. It must not be performed for "what I can get" in the spirit of commercialism, but as Ruskin puts it, "The honor of the thing shall be first and the pay secondary."

REGENERATION.

No matter what may be done and no matter how much the socialistic worker tries to ignore or evade this truth, it will always, with unerring regularity, wreck every attempt to reach "the promised land" of social reform; for, to quote a well known aphorism, "The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul." The individual must learn first of all the power of self-restraint, self limitation; this is the very thing that men do not want to-day; any movement which is directed to the limiting of his personal wants or desires is resented as an interference with his liberty. But this disciplining of the soul is the first thing to be accomplished; and without this all else is simply impossible. The man who says, "I have a right to my glass of beer; I shall not allow anyone to interfere with my rights," is the real hindrance to progression. The first thing to be learned is this lesson: "That I have not any right to do anything which can in any way prevent the development of my best for the good of the whole." If therefore I will persist in doing those things which hinder my best being produced, I am working injustice to others in so working injustice to myself. Therefore, for the sake of the whole, I have only the right to do what is right and I have not any right to do what is wrong. Take for illustration the commonest source of the evils and poverty in Great Britain to-day,—drink.

THE DRINK PROBLEM.

The last annual drink bill totaled one hundred and sixty-five million pounds [nearly eight hundred and twenty-five million dollars]. Out of this it is calculated that one hundred million pounds [five hundred million dollars] is subscribed by the working classes. To begin with, if economic conditions are to blame for the moral and intellectual state of the people, then here is an interesting problem: Who is responsible for the economic conditions? Economy can only be defined as (a) the proper application of labor; (b) the careful preserving of the results of labor; (c) the reasonable distribution of the produce.

Is labor wisely applied or rationally applied in the production of harmful commodities? Is the produce of that labor being preserved carefully when spent in drink? Is drink a reasonable or just distribution of the produce of labor?

The present Lord Chief Justice says, "After thirty years at the bar and ten years on the Circuit bench, I have concluded that ninety per cent of crime is directly traceable to drink."

In addition to wasting labor, think of the amount of money this ninety per cent of crime requires to protect the victims of this wastage of labor from the evil thus brought into existence. There are the asylums, the workhouses, the prisons, and the hospitals, and by no means the smallest item, the world of officialism, or to use Dickens' phrase, "Barnacleism," which is required to operate this machinery to save people from themselves.

THE HEART OF THINGS.

Then all our success depends upon, first, having right aspirations, right motives, and right methods of employing the motives and directing them to the reaching of our aspirations. Regeneration is the only word which expresses with anything like accuracy the method by which this ideal can be attained to. Just as surely as the man who serves God in a church for mere expectation of "saving his soul," will end "by losing it," so the man who seeks to serve socialism for what he can get will end by becoming the slave of his uncurbed selfishness. In social reform the effective law is the selfless dynamic expressed in the formula: "He that would save his life, shall lose it; and he that would lose his life for my sake shall find it."

The spiritual principle of the atonement is necessary; not the effete, theological caricature of this central truth of Christianity, as understood by the evangelical schools, in which the son of God becomes the "substitute" of man to receive the punishment that man deserves; but the atonement in which the "strong" becomes identified with the "weak"; the "good man" with the "bad man"; the rich with the poor; the guiltless with the guilty; the god with the man, in order that the strong, the good, the rich, the guiltless, the divine shall make, in the prophetic language of Isaiah, "intercession for the transgressors." Or as Paul states the case, "Him who knew no sin he made to be sin that we may be made the righteousness of God." And again, "For your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich."

To abandon the selfish purpose of life and all self-seeking and give up in the spirit of love myself for the good of all. Not to be seeking either a better state for myself here, or a heaven hereafter. This is not the spirit of the Christ nor is it associated with his religion.

But it is asked, "Is there nothing to be done but wait for the tedious and painful evolution of the individual character?"

Assuredly there is, but you can do nothing effectually until the first thing is done first.

But the way the Master expresses the case to the teacher of law is very illuminative: "Except a man is born again he can not see the kingdom of God." For, "That which is born of flesh is flesh, that which is born of the spirit is spirit." Here we have the witness of science in addition to experience. Evolution of any organism is circumscribed by the law of involution.

Out of a fleshly life you can not get more than corruption.

To develop the spiritual or divine life, then, you must have the spiritual power to begin with. And life lived in degradation to fleshly purposes can not escape the corruption that will be the inevitable harvest. The life devoted to spiritual purposes can not fail to reap the god-life.

THE PURPOSE OF ENVIRONMENT.

As the soul progresses in its better and holier development the environment must either change or be changed in order that the budding life will find congenial surrounding favorable to its growth; and that perfection may at least be encouraged. And, it is at this point where we may profitably contrast the relative weakness of the evangelical, Christian, and socialistic method.

The environment, it will be obvious, can not be changed only in proportion to the desire and then the fidelity of the collective whole. The socialist therefore is confronted with an impossible task who is agitating for "an environment." The so-called Christian who would spend all his energy in "saving men" without attending to the conditioning of the new "creation," is inviting disaster also.

The terrible problem which has concerned many religious bodies of "backsliding" is one of the most glaring and discouraging testimonies to the ineffectiveness of that course. First of all there can not be "the environment" until the "collective conscience" and "sense of honor" have been developed, by which agencies only can this be brought about. Then, on the other hand, when the work of individual regeneration begins to operate there must be expected, as the first practical fruitage, the gradual development of the conditions favorable to the growth of this new life.

To apply the language of Saint Paul will illuminate this part of the subject: "He died for all in order that the living may no longer live unto themselves. So that if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old state of things has passed away, a new state of things has come into existence."—2 Corinthians 5: 15-17, Weymouth's.

The method therefore of the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants is being daily sustained by evidences of history and of modern experience. Indeed, it is very significant, that with the restoration of the gospel to the earth there synchronizes the dawning of a new light and hope upon men for social and economic redemption in the philosophy of Fourier, Saint Simon, Auguste Comte, and others, together with the practical expression of such philosophy in the great coöperative movements which have developed both in the retail and wholesale departments of modern commercial life to the extent that the following table will show:

Statistical position of the coöperative societies in the United Kingdom, December 31, 1904: Number of members, 2,320,116; share capital, £29,337,392; loan capital, £14,255,546; sales for 1901, £96,263,322; net profits, £9,791,740; devoted to education, 1904, £79,693.

Statistical position of the Coöperative Wholesale Society, December 28, 1907: Number of societies holding shares, 1,139; representing 1,768,935 members; share capital paid up, £1,476,021; loans and deposits, £2,857,013; reserve and insurance, £1,074,086; sales for year 1907, £24,786,568; net profit for 1907, £488,571.

Here is remarkable evidence of the underlying unanimity of the purpose of God and man. The growing union and solidarity of all labor, the growing disfavor to individual competition, trust, and syndicates in which organizations and combinations are effected for selfish ends. The development of the great agitations regarding the unrightful holding of land, and the guilty absorption of the fabulous profits which the landlords acquire as the result of individual and collective enterprise and effort, are all uniting to show that the entrance of Joseph Smith and his philosophy, for which he claimed revelation, so far from being either folly or anachronism is indeed and in truth the divine anticipation of the world's most urgent needs.

THE UNITY OF THE WHOLE.

It will be common knowledge to even the most casual of Bible students that in the Old Testament, the various prophets who gave the revelation of the truth committed to them gradually began to develop the national ideal of a coming Zion, which after all is but a poetic term for the very condition of affairs which we now call "Utopian." These economic ideas which are so conspicuous in Isaiah, Micah, Hosea, and other prophets, and which largely were ever in the minds of the Jewish people, as the destiny of their race, were taken up by Jesus Christ and charged with a spiritual value and instead of being the ideal based upon a military supremacy, became the ideal based upon moral and spiritual revolution.

It is extremely interesting to study the very brief account of the immediate practical developments which followed the dissemination of this teaching by Christ and his apostles, contained in the Acts of the Apostles and the several epistles. No sooner were the moral and spiritual conceptions of the people clarified and adjusted than economic conditions immediately began to assume a new shape altogether; and an attempt was made to realize the Zion of the prophets in what we now call communism.

The same features of economic evolution are observed in the accounts we have of the people on the Western Continent. These are also sustained by the ruins and discoveries of the various archæologists. The coming of Christian influence into the political and economic life of this people at once found expression in the same way as that noted in the New Testament.

It is therefore not surprising to find that when God in this age sought to bring man into a nearness with himself and fill him with a sense of his own power and potentialities, the same results are at once noticeable.

The modern revelations are filled with directions, which for their saneness and general applicability are amazing when it is remembered that they emanated, according to the best explanation the world can give, from the mind of an illiterate youth whose moral concepts were aberrated and whose impulses were perverse.

Is it not one of the subjects for lamentation by most of the ministers who have studied the history of the church, that the people were so stupid and blind to their own interest, that all the benefits which might have been enjoyed by a prosperous community as a standing monument of the practicability of the Christian ideal in social and economic life, were let slip, and to-day we are discovering more and more how hard it is to recover that which ignorance and selfishness lost to us?

What is even still more striking is the fact that the tendency of modern thought and all the expression of the most progressive aspirations is in the exact pathway that is so plainly defined in this aggregation of inspiration. And, furthermore, that in recent revelations we are all the time turned backward to this ideal and to these methods for the realization of that ideal.

THINGS THAT WE OUGHT TO HAVE DONE.

The first thing that should have been done of course was to prepare a people who would be the right and proper organization to properly express these purposes and put them into practical operation. To give power to people not prepared to use them would be suicidal and disastrous. So the church was commanded to prepare, educate, and discipline, and then in process of time the Lord's way of realizing his purposes was gradually unfolded.

BACK TO THE LAND!

The first thing that was commanded thereafter was that the church authorities should purchase the land. (See pages 122, 140, 146, 150, 260, 261, Doctrine and Covenants.)

These quotations justify the conclusion that the way to solve the economic difficulty, after the preparation of the people, is to begin to counteract the divorcement of the people from the land. The reason is obvious: the land is the only source of wealth. So that if there is no land or the people are kept from the land and not permitted to use it then there is nothing upon which their strength may be used, and so wealth is impossible. The modern cry of the people, "Back to land," is here anticipated and provided for.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE LAND.

Explicit instructions regarding the acquisition of the land by purchase were given, the locality and time to purchase to the best advantage were also given, and so singularly accurate were these instructions that subsequent developments show incontrovertibly that this was indeed "the psychic moment." I need scarcely say that had the church been obedient to the command, it is not possible to compute the wealth that the church could have been controlling to-day.

The Saints then were commanded to send in their subscriptions, and wise men were to be appointed to supervise the purchasing of land; and then the Bishop was commanded to apportion the land as inheritances to the faithful people according to their necessities and abilities.

Page 147, paragraph 12, Doctrine and Covenants, clearly shows that after these preliminaries had been arranged, the land purchased and the people brought back to their natural heritage, all kinds of workmen were then commanded to employ their crafts to supply the needs of the church, and thus give the church the privilege of employing its own labor and resources, thereby saving the workers from being exploited and victimized by the unscrupulous Grandgrinds and Bounderbys of the competitive commercialism characteristic of the world.

SOLIDARITY AND CO-OPERATION.

As the mind of the Lord unfolds itself to the student who carefully reads the history of this "marvelous work and a wonder," we see provision being made for a storehouse being built and managed by the church through properly appointed officials for the receiving of the produce from those who produced more than they needed to those who had produced less than they needed; and what profits accrued were to be employed in the acquiring of land and the development of this good news of the kingdom. This storehouse was to be the supply stores of the church, and the Bishop was instructed to provide for the needs of the people both by purchase as well as by gift. (See pages 102, 103, 130, and 176, Doctrine and Covenants.)

The storehouse, it is quite obvious, was therefore intended by the divine mind to be a public mart for the receipt and disbursement of the various goods and commodities needed by and produced by the church, and also by the sale and purchase in order that the needs of the people should be provided for by the church.

The only two words which can be used to adequately describe the principles upon which this economic and social salvation of the people would be worked out are "solidarity" and "coöperation."

By solidarity we mean that from each is being produced the very best of which individually he is capable and that all of these individual contributions of genius, mentality, and strength are gathered into a complete whole and utilized for the forward movement of the entire community.

Coöperation is a similar word in some respects, but while solidarity provides for the work of the great and powerful being united with the work of the small and weak, coöperation rather describes the method of application in which all this united effort shall be utilized for the common good of the whole.

The statistics which have already been quoted are a monumental testimony to the possibility of such principles being applied to the social and economic needs of the multitude, and form a splendid and glowing tribute to the common sense and thrift and honor of manhood when properly developed and applied.

If any will carefully read the history of the coöperative movement they will see quite easily that this movement was called into existence by the prevailing difficulty, first of all, the consumer had to contend with, in getting honest, unadulterated goods, the very reason of which the revelations of the church make special mention. In the next place, it was realized that much of the profit that was accumulated out of the manufacture and distribution of the goods was exorbitant and ought to be saved, so the next thing was that besides aiming at producing honest goods, "they should be produced at honest prices, and also that the consumers should have a share in the profits which were accumulated by this commercial solidarity. To-day, as already pointed out, in this United Kingdom of Great Britain twenty-five million pounds worth of manufactured goods have been supplied in the year 1907 to meet the demands of the coöperators of this country; by which endeavor, the best quality of goods have been served to the consumers at the best of prices and in addition a profit of half a million pounds acquired; the consumers have employed themselves in the producing, and so solved the vexing problem of capital and labor to a very large extent.

Surely if this is the result of honesty and common sense, what could be done if men and women, inspired by a love of God and a love of man, if they were only directed wisely and firmly to these splendid ideals, it is not possible to conceive. Do not say it is impossible; the world human society organized apart from God have proven to a demonstration that it is possible. Do not say that the church and the gospel have nothing to do with these matters; but shall concern itself only with the spiritual needs of the people and prepare men for a coming heaven. Such a position is inexcusable ignorance or cowardice and is a general surrender of the whole raison d'etre we as a church have. If we can not do anything with humanity here, what evidence have you that you can do anything for him elsewhere? If the church has to surrender this beautiful earth to the Devil and human selfishness, what proof have you that you can capture heaven? If the church has nothing to do with the present of human experience then as sure as the fruit is produced from the seed, and as the harvest is the outcome of the sowing of the grain, and as every effect is the child of adequate causes, and as sure as character is the parent of eternal destiny, just as sure will it be that the church can never have anything to do with the future of mankind. The proof that the church can send men and women to heaven in the future is the power of the church to demonstrate the salvability of the race by utilizing present powers, means, and opportunities.

It does seem singular that as a church we have been so lax in these affairs from a practical point of view, when we have a book of instructions which for completeness and effectiveness has never been approached; and, what is more, if we will keep our eyes and ears open, the very thing the heart of humanity is longing for we have the means of providing. If it is argued that the people are not prepared for this, then how comes it that the world once again is proving itself wiser in this generation than the "Children of the Light"? Is it the fault of God? Or is it the selfishness of the people?

It cannot be the fault of God; if it is the fault of the people then shame on us for such unforgivable stupidity and infidelity to the great ideal and magnificent destiny to which our profession calls us and to which our great Commander leads us.

Consider this and answer who can!

What is there to hinder the church from adopting the very principles we say we believe and applying them to our every-day life? If the coöperative movement with the dynamic of love was inaugurated and the storehouse established into which the produce of the church was brought and out of which the demands of the people supplied, what is there to prevent such being successful immediately and resulting in the transferring of the energies of the church from the worldly channels of money making for the increasing of the riches of the already dangerously rich, which furthermore is resulting in the inevitable impoverishment of those who are dangerously poor already; to the betterment of the church and the conserving of this wealth-producing power in proper harness and so provide for the happiness of the community which as Ruskin points out is the evidence of righteousness in the people.

THE PRESENT NEED.

Then we state the needs categorically:

First of all we need a new creation so far as the individual is concerned. A man who loves the right better than he loves evil; who loves purity better than he loves vice; who loves the truth better than he loves a lie; who loves principle better than he loves dividend; who loves the national or collective honor better than he loves his own prosperity; a man who loves his brother to the extent that he can not allow that brother to be laboring in such conditions that he dare not think of for himself or his son; in other words, we want first of all the man born again not of flesh but of God; with God-ward tendencies, and therefore able to value all things only in proportion to their ability to "avail for life and to avail in life."

Secondly, we need the man who is willing, obedient, and faithful; whose living will therefore be expressed in selfless utilization of the forces and means at his command.

Thirdly, there would then follow as a natural result this desirable state of things in our experience, as a democratic community. All who work for the interest of that community would voluntarily place themselves upon a basis of equality and be satisfied if their needs were supplied. But this condition we have proved is only possible with men of honor. To have the rule with men who are dishonorable is as injurious as to have no rule at all.

Fourthly, let the community purchase the land and put the people upon their natural heritage.

Fifthly, let the community employ itself in supplying its own needs so far as possible.

Sixthly, to do this let coöperation be at once established by opening the "storehouse" in the community and then the law of consecration, tithing, and offering would begin to produce equality and the results of this accumulation of riches could be utilized for the production of wealth by being used by the people, for the people.

CONCLUSION.

There is no need to wait for favorable opportunities and something big to commence with. Take what means you have now and prove your ability to handle great things because you can deal faithfully with small things. That is the law of God and therefore of nature.

The large coöperative movement of my native city, Leeds, began in a small way and was content to produce flour for the consumption of its members. When it proved that it could do that faithfully, then its power was increased and to-day anything that is needed to the building and furnishing of a house can be done. The pioneer society of Rochdale began in a small slum building, but to-day is the world's object lesson in coöperative enterprise.

It is not where we begin, but where we get to; it is not pedigree but destiny, which proves the ultimate value of men and principles.

Let us begin to adjust ourselves to the law of God and he will do for such what in nature he has done for the faithful student of the forces which have now become the slaves of man and the ministers to his needs. God has promised that he will give us the desire of our hearts, if in all our ways we consider him.

UTAH ELDERS MISREPRESENT.

CONCERNING ISAAC SHEEN'S STATEMENT IN FIRST NUMBER OF HERALD.

I have had reports from several localities since the elders from Utah visited Lamoni last summer, all pointing to the fact that these men are misrepresenting what they found in volume 1, number 1, of the SAINTS' HERALD.

Though there are some variations in the story as told in different places, the one related in the following letter from Bro. C. B. Brown, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, is a fair sample. I offer it with my answer for publication in order to correct these misrepresentations in other places. Respectfully, HEMAN C. SMITH.

OSKALOOSA, IOWA, December 23, 1909.

MR. HEMAN C. SMITH,

Dear Sir and Brother: Some of the elders of the Utah church are telling here that the Reorganized Church in the beginning of its existence admitted that Joseph the Seer gave the revelation on polygamy and that the revelation was published in number one, volume one, of the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, and a statement was made in that number that Joseph the Seer burned the revelation. They claim that their elders read the revelation and statement in the paper before mentioned which they found in the office of our Church Librarian at Lamoni, hence I have taken the liberty of writing you. The Saints here would like to know how much truth, if any, there is in the statement.

In bonds,

816 SOUTH D STREET.

C. B. BROWN.

C. B. BROWN.

OSKALOOSA, IOWA.

Dear Brother: Replying to yours of the 23d instant I will say the Reorganized Church, as a church, has never said that Joseph Smith did or did not give the revelation on polygamy. It will be readily seen that it is not the province of the body to determine what Joseph Smith or any other man did. It is the province of the church to take a position on questions of right and wrong, and the church is emphatically upon record, and has been from the beginning, that polygamy, without reference to where it came from, is a false and corrupt doctrine.

So far as Joseph Smith being connected with the doctrine or its practice is concerned the representatives of the church have generally been content with demanding proof, and in examining such evidence as has been presented. The general verdict upon the part of those giving the evidence consideration has been not guilty.

It is not true that the purported revelation on polygamy is published in the TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD, volume 1, number 1. The statement that anyone read it there is false, absolutely. There is not so much as a quotation from the document in said paper.

The statement referred to which these elders read is doubtless the following:

The Salt Lake apostles also excuse themselves by saying that Joseph Smith taught the spiritual wife doctrine, but this excuse is as weak as their excuse concerning the ancient kings and patriarchs. Joseph Smith repented of his connection with this doctrine, and said that it was of the Devil. He caused the revelations on the subject to be burned, and when he voluntarily came to Nauvoo and resigned himself into the arms of his enemies, he said that he was going to Carthage to die. At that time he also said, that if it had not been for that accursed spiritual wife doctrine, he would not have come to that. By his conduct at that time he proved the sincerity of his repentance, and of his profession as a prophet.

This article was not written for the HERALD, but was copied from the Saturday Evening Post of October 9, 1852. You will notice that the writer, Isaac Sheen, does not here say that Joseph Smith gave the revelation, or practiced polygamy. He says he repented of his connection with this doctrine without being specific as to what his connection was.

You will also observe that the word polygamy does not occur in the passage. Why do those Utah men interpret the term, "spiritual wife doctrine," as used here, to mean polygamy when if used in regard to their own practice since the manifesto they make a distinction and say the spiritual wife doctrine means marrying for eternity and applies to monogamic marriages as well as others; while polygamy means plurality of wives?

It may be true though that Mr. Sheen at the time of writing this held the opinion that Joseph Smith received the revelation on polygamy, though he does not say so.

Mr. Sheen however knew nothing about it. He was not in a position to testify and made no attempt to do so. It was less than two months after Brigham Young made that revelation, so-called, public in Salt Lake City, Utah, August 29, 1852.

Mr. Sheen wrote this statement about the time the news from the salt land reached him, and probably accepted the statement of Brigham Young and upon it, without taking time for investigation, made his statement. The statement of Young is as follows:

You heard Brother Pratt state, this morning, that a revelation would be read this afternoon which was given previous to Joseph's death. It contains a doctrine a small portion of the world is opposed to; but I can deliver a prophecy upon it. Though that doctrine has not been preached by the elders, this people have believed in it for many years.

The original copy of this revelation was burnt up. William Clayton was the man who wrote it from the mouth of the prophet. In the meantime it was in Bishop Whitney's possession. He wished the privilege to copy it, which Brother Joseph granted. Sister Emma burnt the original. The reason why I mention this is because that the people who did know of the revelation supposed it was not now in existence.

Upon the strength of this Elder Sheen may have, in his own mind, connected Joseph Smith with the revelation, but at that time the perfidy of Young was not so well known as it was subsequently.

Isaac Sheen was not at the time even a member of the Reorganized Church.

A part of this statement has been discredited by the statement of Emma Smith, the widow of Joseph Smith, whom Young says burned the original.

In April, 1867, Elder Jason W. Briggs sought and obtained an interview with Mrs. Emma Smith Bidamon. The part of the interview touching the point in question is as follows:

J. W. Briggs.—Mrs. Bidamon, have you seen the revelation on polygamy, published by Orson Pratt, in the Seer, in 1852?
Mrs. B.—I have.

J. W. B.—Have you read it?

Mrs. B.—I have read it, and heard it read.

J. W. B.—Did you ever see that document in manuscript, previous to its publication, by Pratt?

Mrs. B.—I never did.

J. W. B.—Did you ever see any document of that kind, purporting to be a revelation to authorize polygamy?

Mrs. B.—No; I never did.

J. W. B.—Did Joseph Smith ever teach you the doctrines of polygamy, as being revealed to him, or as a correct and righteous principle?

Mrs. B.—He never did.

J. W. B.—What about the statement of Brigham Young, that you burnt the original manuscript of that revelation?

Mrs. B.—It is false in all its parts, made out of whole cloth, without any foundation in truth.

The most that can be said about this statement is that Isaac Sheen was led to a wrong conclusion by the false statement of Brigham Young. And to reach this conclusion we have to suppose that Elder Sheen referred to something he failed to mention. Your informants misrepresented in the following essential points:

1. In representing that the church acknowledged that Joseph Smith gave the revelation on polygamy.

2. In representing that the said revelation was published in HERALD, volume 1, number 1.

3. In representing that the statement in said HERALD had reference to "the" revelation on polygamy, when polygamy is not mentioned therein.

4. In representing the term, "spiritual wife doctrine," to mean polygamy contrary to their own definition of the term. The supposition upon which this last is based may be correct as in those early days those nice distinctions had not been introduced, but these Utah elders have cut themselves off from the benefit of this by introducing their present definitions.

If these definitions were not known to Mr. Sheen then he was evidently misled by Brigham Young.

If these champions of lust had really wanted to know what Joseph Smith's attitude toward polygamy was just before his death they should have read the words of William Marks who at the time of Joseph's death was the president of the High Council in Nauvoo. These words are in the HERALD, volume 1, number 1, on the page next preceding the statement of Sheen to which they have referred you, and reads as follows:

A few days after this occurrence, I met with Brother Joseph. He said that he wanted to converse with me on the affairs of the church, and we retired by ourselves. I will give his words verbatim, for they are indelibly stamped upon my mind. He said he had desired for a long time to have a talk with me on the subject of polygamy. He said it would eventually prove the overthrow of the church, and we should soon be obliged to leave the United States, unless it could speedily be put down. He was satisfied that it was a cursed doctrine, and that there must be every exertion made to put it down. He said that he would go before the congregation and proclaim against it, and I must go into the High Council, and he would prefer charges against those in transgression, and I must sever them from the church, unless they made ample satisfaction. There was much more said, but this was the substance. The mob commenced to gather about Carthage in a few days after, therefore there was nothing done concerning it. After the Prophet's death, I made mention of this conversation to several, hoping and believing that it would have a good effect, but to my great disappointment, it was rumored about that Brother Marks was about to apostatize, and that all he said about the conversation with the Prophet was a tissue of lies. From that time I was satisfied that the church would be disorganized, and the death of the Prophet and Patriarch tended to confirm me in that opinion. From that time I was looking for a reorganization of the church and kingdom of God. I feel thankful that I have lived to again behold the day, when the basis of the church is the revelation of Jesus Christ, which is the only sure foundation to build upon. I feel to invite all my brethren to become identified with us, for the Lord is truly in our midst.

DON'T LET FAILURE DISCOURAGE YOU.

"Almost all the brilliantly successful characters of history have known early trials and reverses. The great philosopher, Epictetus, was a slave. Alfred the Great wandered through the swamps as a fugitive and got cuffed on the ears for letting the cakes burn. Columbus went from court to court like a beggar to try to raise money for the discovery of the New World, and when he finally won the favor of the Spanish Queen he was so poor that he could not go to court until Isabella had advanced him money enough to buy decent clothes."

CARE OF THE TEETH.

As it is true that nothing adds so much to the beauty of the face as nice teeth, so it is equally true that nothing so much detracts from the beauty as bad teeth.

When should the care of the teeth begin?

With the appearance of the first tooth, we would say; nay, we will go farther and declare that even before the baby's advent into this world, the prospective mother should make use of such articles of food as contain properties necessary for tooth formation. Then the infant may be given, from time to time; small doses of limewater during the period of dentation which usually begins at from four to seven months and continues during the third year.

During all this time the little one's mouth should be rinsed out daily with clean water in which a bit of boracic acid has been put.

It is just as necessary that a child have good, sound, sweet teeth as that an adult should. It needs them for the purpose of eating; and, unless they are able to masticate well, the health of the child suffers.

At the age of three, the little one may be given a soft brush and taught its use.

Teeth should not only be kept sweet and clean for their own sake, but, if allowed to collect particles of food, they will become breeding ground for disease germs or bacteria which in turn will be carried into the stomach and intestines and there be absorbed and carried into the entire system.

Decayed teeth are teeth attacked by these living organisms or bacteria.

We advise the use of salt in small quantities because of its antiseptic properties. Many dentifrices are also antiseptic and hence germ destroying.

But not antiseptic can restore a decayed tooth. It is time for the dentist to get in his work and by cleaning and filling such an one, preserve it for the possessor as long as possible.

It is often a question with mothers whether the temporary teeth should be given dental care. We should say, yes, by all means, have the little one's temporary teeth not only cleaned but filled by a dentist and kept as long as possible.

It will keep the mouth in good shape until the permanent teeth are ready to come through.

And when they are ready to come they will absorb the entire roots of the first teeth, if they are not in a diseased condition, and then the taking out of the crown or shell will be quite painless. Thus, it will be seen that the retention of good temporary teeth not only gives the child the use of them and thus benefits its health, but it makes the second teeth stronger from the absorption of their sound roots.

The tooth consists of three parts—the outside coating, called the enamel, the interior filling of porous bone and the nerve. The enamel is quite hard and does not easily decay unless cracked or injured. Metallic toothpicks and the use of very hot or cold drinks should be avoided on this account.

Dental floss, drawn between the teeth, will remove particles of food.

The interior soft filling once exposed, decays very rapidly, and when the air reaches the nerve, toothache is the result. There are many remedies, such as clove oil, creosote, etc., resorted to when this painful affliction sets in; but we would advise a visit to the dentist at once so that he may do what he can to save the tooth.

As we said before, all the milk teeth will have appeared by the time the child is about four years old. Then the permanent teeth begin to come on at the age of about six, and continue to come in pairs until the seventeenth year; except the four wisdom teeth, which often come as late as the thirtieth year.

In some instances where the jaws have become shrunken by the early loss of the milk teeth, the wisdom teeth do not appear at all. These wisdom teeth, although they come so late, are often, strange to say, the first ones to decay and should be given special attention.

There are thirty-two teeth in the permanent set, sixteen in each jaw.

The health and good looks of an adult are as much hurt by bad teeth as are those of a child. What we said about the care of the temporary teeth is equally applicable to the permanent teeth.

Good mastication depends on good teeth, and good health depends on good mastication. Where, for any reason, the food is swallowed without chewing well and permitting the free action of the saliva, it is found that the stomach and intestines, by the excessive labor which thus falls to their share, become enfeebled.

Is it any wonder that all sorts of gastric and bowel troubles result? This condition of affairs again reacts upon the teeth.

Eating sweets and acids, the taking of certain medicines, cracking nuts and picking the teeth with pins, all tend to hurt the enamel. Crooked teeth, teeth too far apart, projecting teeth as well as decayed and discolored teeth, will be much benefited by a dentist's care.

A cream-white tooth shows a better state of health than a pearl-white; but there is no excuse for the yellow, discolored one. If the cause is internal, consult a physician; if local in the mouth, use a good antiseptic wash or tooth powder.

A little powdered pumice and oris root, once a month, will remove tartar. Rinsing the mouth daily, or, better, three or four times a day, in tepid water, and using the brush as well, will do wonders in keeping teeth nice.

Foods which contain limy deposits and bone material should form an important part of the diet, in order that the teeth be properly nourished. The act of chewing bulky and coarse foods is also good exercise for the teeth. The constant use of liquid and soft foods gives the teeth so little to do, that from the inexorable law of disuse they will crumble away and become gradually less and less.

No one who values health and good looks can afford to neglect the teeth.—Josephine Weatherly in American Motherhood.

Questions on February Reading.

How does the condition of one's teeth affect his appearance? When should the care of the teeth begin? What may be done for the teeth of the child before birth? What care should be given them during the period of dentation? What is dependent on the ability to masticate well? How early should the child begin the use of a toothbrush? When the teeth are not kept clean, what evil effects follow? What causes the decay of teeth? What is the effect of salt upon the teeth? When does a tooth require the service of a dentist? Should the temporary teeth be given dental care? Why? What benefit do the temporary teeth afford the permanent ones? Of what do the teeth consist? What may injure the enamel? What is better than a toothpick for removing food particles from the teeth? What is the cause of toothache? When do the last of the temporary teeth appear? At what time do the permanent set begin to come through? What is said of the wisdom teeth? In case the other teeth are crowded by the wisdom teeth, what is best to do? What is the number of the permanent teeth? Why is it important to preserve the permanent teeth? What results from lack of thorough mastication? What things are injurious to the enamel? What will remove tartar? What constitutes good exercise for the teeth? Who can afford to neglect the teeth?

Special Request for Prayer.

Bro. Frank Thomas, of Standish, Michigan, request prayers that he may be restored to health. He is beyond medical assistance and can not withstand long. He is at 1804 Wheeler street, Saginaw, Michigan, and would like to have any of the Saints come and pray with him. This request came too late for insertion in last week's issue, but was placed before the Saints of Lamoni at their mid-week prayer service.

CENTERVILLE, IOWA, December 9, 1909.

Editors Herald: Utah Mormonism is not dead. Elders Edward V. Bunderson, of Mayfield, Utah, and Ira A. Pace, of Parley's Park, Utah, visited Hiteman, Iowa, lately, and of course felt some special interest in the members of the Reorganized Church. They attended our meetings and asked the privilege of holding meetings in our church building. The president of the branch granted the privilege of them occupying when not occupied by our people. I was in the meeting and I asked that they be granted the privilege of occupying provided I be permitted to reply and review their remarks, and that we preach or discuss every alternate evening. Elder Bunderson had been there accompanied by another of their missionaries last September, and told the writer that they were going to be there about two weeks and were going to visit our members. I told them to go right ahead. I suggested that possibly the branch would give them the use of our church building if they would ask for it and that I would reply to them. Elder Bunderson stated that he would be glad to do so. However, he did not ask for the church but preached upon the streets. Our brethren, Elders Rowley and Hall, got after them and discussed with them after their sermons. So they made two efforts and quitted the field. They visited several of the homes of our people and distributed their literature freely. They spent one evening in the home of one of our members, discussing differences, and several of our brethren met them by agreement. They admitted that they were not so well versed on church history as our people were, and left the locality without any further effort on their part.

However, Elder Bunderson came back, and Elder Pace, missionary in charge for this field, came with him as kind of a specialist in the line of questions that make the chasm between their church and ours. They asked for the church right away and got it upon the conditions previously stated. So Elder Pace commenced his effort November 4, and occupied an hour and a half to show us that there is no intimation in any place that God would reject the church. He commenced by referring to the martyrdom of the prophet and his brother Hyrum, and of how many things the two organizations have in common, and how strange it is that we show such a bitter feeling toward each other. I don't want to burden your columns with a rehearsal of all he said, but in his first speech he tried to make his case that the Twelve were equal to the First Presidency and that they held every key that President Joseph held at the time of his death, and further they held keys that the books never mentioned. Of course, this is very interesting, and let me say right here that the books never will mention them except to condemn the practice that results from those secret keys that are held to bind the souls of men and women to a covenant with death and hell.

He dwelt largely on baptism for the dead and tried to make Brother Joseph's and Alexander's statements regarding the incompleteness of the Nauvoo Temple as of no avail. That seeing the revelation was given January, 1841, and the baptismal font was dedicated November 8, 1841, and that baptisms were performed in the font November 21, 1841, would attest that the church had not been rejected. The fact that this is the dispensation of the fullness of times would preclude any possibility of a rejection of the church. He seemed to carry the idea that the baptismal font having been dedicated carried with it the evidence of God's approval of the work, and that the goal of their security had been reached. He thought God would not reject the church because there were some staircases and window blinds that were not finished or placed there. He would not count it of sufficient importance to reject the church.

He compared Joseph Smith to King David and said that Joseph Smith had his privileges like David had, and that we know what the Prophet Nathan told David. Near the close of his speech he would ask repeatedly, Where did young Joseph get his authority? claiming that neither William Marks nor Gurley had any authority to ordain him. Says he, "You've got nothing, not even a pretense, but we have." He tried to push his claims quite forcibly for Brother Brigham. He had used Apostle Wight's statement as found in True Succession, by Apostle Heman C. Smith, and tried to fasten me by it to a date in which the apostasy or the rejection of the church took place.

I refused to place any date as to the time of their rejection as a church. The statement referred to was simply Lyman Wight's opinion. The fact that the baptismal font had been dedicated and baptisms performed in it three years and a half before the Prophet Joseph's death and his continued effort to get the temple finished show plainly that he did not regard the church as rejected, not even up to the time of his death, for the work of the temple continued unabated and Apostle Wight himself continued working in getting material toward completing the temple. What I regard as a better solution of their rejection is found in Doctrine and Covenants 107: 13, commencing with the latter part of the paragraph: "If ye labor with all your mights, I will consecrate that spot that it shall be made holy; and if my people will hearken unto my voice, and unto the voice of my servants whom I have appointed to lead my people, behold, verily I say unto you, they shall not be moved out of their place. But if they will not hearken unto my voice, nor unto the voice of these men whom I have appointed, they shall not be blessed, because they pollute mine holy grounds, and mine holy ordinances and charters, and my holy words, which I give unto them."

The elders seemed to think, as nearly all Utah Mormons do, that if the temple was completed sufficiently so as to permit of the performance of the ordinance of baptism for the dead that would be sufficient to prove their approval of the Lord, and that a rejection of the church later than that time did not take place.

We see by paragraph 12 of the same section that there were quite a number of other blessings to be obtained in the temple besides baptism for the dead. We read: "And again, verily I say unto you, how shall your washings be acceptable unto me, except ye perform them in an house which you have built unto my name? For, for this cause I commanded Moses that he build a tabernacle, that they should bear it with them in the wilderness, and to build an home in the land of promise, that those ordinances might be revealed, which had been hid from before the world was; therefore, verily I say unto you, that your anointings and washings and your baptisms for the dead, and your solemn assemblies, and your memorials for your sacrifice, by the sons of Levi, and for your oracles in your most holy places, wherein you receive conversations and your statutes and judgments, for, the beginning of the revelations and foundation of Zion, and for the glory, honor and endowment of all her municipalities, are ordained by the ordinance of my holy house, which my people are always commanded to build unto my holy name."

The above would indicate then that those that built the temple would needs be a holy people, wholly consecrated unto God; that the mere putting of stone, wood, and mortar together would be a small matter in comparison to the consecration necessary to the receiving of such extraordinary conferment of such an endowment as here promised. If we turn to paragraph 14 of this same section we read as follows: "And it shall come to pass that if ye build an house unto my name, and do not the things that I say, I will not perform the oath which I make unto you, neither fulfill the promise which ye expect at my hands, saith the Lord; for instead of blessings, ye, by your own works, bring cursings, wrath, indignations and judgments upon your own heads, by your follies, and by all your abominations, which you practice before me, saith the Lord."

The elders of the Reorganization are accused of saying hard things against the dominant church in Utah in proving their apostasy, but we have never said anything harder than the accusations made against the church in the above quoted revelation. In paragraph 13, as quoted, if the church would hearken unto the voice of the Lord and of his servants whom he had appointed to lead them, the promise was that they should not be moved out of their place. Were they moved out of their place? What took place makes an answer unnecessary.

If space would permit I would like to deal more fully with the differences that exist between us and the Mormon church. Elder Pace in his second speech became a little more forceful, admitted that the people of Utah persecute our missionaries, because if the things read the evening before by Elder Morgan had been read in Utah the people could not stand for it, but would rise in their indignation, because they are flesh and blood. He said there were doctrines and things that the leaders in Utah did not want the people to hear, and that is why their people will not come to hear our elders preach.

I must close this communication. Elder Pace read statements that he alleges Brother Joseph made in Chicago, Illinois, in 1882; also statements made by Elder R. C. Evans. I had no means of denying what he said was Brother Joseph's statement, but confessed that if he had been correctly quoted it was rather a hard statement. Since that time I have written Brother Joseph regarding it, and he claims that he was misquoted, and that he tried his best to get the Tribune to correct the statement, but had failed to get them to do so. As President Smith's letter was private, I do not feel at liberty to give it verbatim. For the good of all elders that have to meet this statement, it would be well if he would tell us through the columns of the HERALD just what he did say.

Elder Pace preached blood atonement and said Paul preached it before Brigham Young did, and quoted: "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." He preached polygamy, stating that it was a doctrine of their church and that they are proud of it. That Jacob was a polygamist, and that he will be in the kingdom of heaven and the celestial glory. Admitted what Elder Morgan had said that Brigham Young had lifted his bowie knife swearing vengeance on the Gentiles; also that there are many in Utah living in polygamy at the present time. He boasted that they had resisted the law as long as they could. Although many had gone to the penitentiary for practicing polygamy, they had never deserted one woman or child. He tried to blacken Elder William Marks' and Zenos H. Gurley's testimony.

They are distributing two tracts entitled, "Baptism for the dead vs. the Reorganization," and "The corner stone of the Reorganization." Elder Pace is a pleasant talker and was not given to misrepresenting the true condition that exists in Utah, as some of their missionaries are wont to do. I have been in Utah several times and know something of the true situation, and this may have had some effect in preventing a miscoloring. They were treated kindly and respectfully by our people.

A few words of advice to close: I would say that we should treat their ministry as kindly and as considerately as we would have the Utah people treat our elders who labor there. I have known our people to give their elders what I considered unkind treatment. Secondly, I would advise letting them have the use of our churches with the understanding that we be permitted to reply and review their statements. They maraud among our members with a view to getting some of the disaffected ones, those who are weak and unacquainted with church history, and especially with the question of authority. My experience has taught me that those questions had better be treated in public to the edification of all: Thirdly, I would advise all who undertake to discuss these questions to get Bro. Charles Derry's Manual of the Priesthood, also Bro. Heman C. Smith's True Succession in Church Presidency, twenty-five cents and fifty cents respectively. The Instructor and Parson's Note Book, are all helpful in a way. If you have those books and read them you may be able to tell why our President should not go out to Utah to be ordained under the unhallowed hands of their leaders; and why a Moses man was promised to the church; and why the successor of the martyred prophet should come in at the gate, and be ordained, etc.

Yours fraternally,

E. B. MORGAN.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, December 18, 1909.

Dear Sirs: I have read the HERALD for a year with much interest and profit. I am not a Latter Day Saint, but I believe I am one of the Lord's saints. I was converted in 1868 in a mission in New York. Soon after my conversion my attention was called to the prophetic text of the scripture, and by a vision I had in which I saw the Lord himself in 1872. He made known to me at that time that the Gentile time would be up soon, and by standing on that line for many years, I can tell you we stand on the threshold of a new dispensation. The day of the Lord as spoken of by Luke in the 17th chapter, is at hand and kingdoms, principalities, and ecclesiastical systems will tumble down and there will be nothing left of them.

I believe the Lord's people are in all the sects, mixed up with the tares, and soon the Lord will call on them to come out of Babylon. That includes the Latter Day Saints with other churches. I know there are some of the Lord's people among you, as there are in other churches, and some that have the gift of prophecy; indeed your papers are full of it, but I do not believe that you know what is coming for sure. The Lord has not made that clear to you yet. Of course, you will think, another crank, but be on the lookout. A few years more and heaven and earth shall shake. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I took the HERALD a year to find out what you stood for.

JOHN RASMUSSEN.

STUART, NEBRASKA.

Dear Sirs: In the HERALD of December 8, I saw the notice of a home wanted for a boy of thirteen years of age, handy on farm and around horses.

I am a member of the church and of the Inman, Nebraska, Branch. My wife is also a member. Our district president and Bishop's agent is Bro. Levi Gamet, of Inman. I am twenty-five years of age, and a ranchman.

On what terms is the boy to be taken? Are his parents dead? Is he unrulable, sickly, or just a common boy.

I should like a boy to be a companion to my wife and do light chores, etc. I would treat him as a brother and educate him. We live one mile from a good rural school and eight miles from our railway station. We have one child, a girl of fifteen months. My wife and I are fond of children. She was formerly a teacher.

Please write all particulars.

MR. WALTER K. SMITH.

ALT DOBERN, PROV. BRANDENBERG, GERMANY,

November 24, 1909.

Dear Brother Stebbins: Pardon me for delaying so long in answering yours of July 31. I had mislaid your letter for some time, and I have been very busy since coming back to Germany. The good Lord has directed us to those who were seeking the truth, and by his help we were able to conduct eleven precious souls into his kingdom. We have twenty-two members now. There were twenty-three baptized altogether, but one died last week. He was an old brother about seventy years old. I had baptized him about three weeks before. We also had difficulties to meet. We were expelled from the province Silesia in August, by the authorities there. They thought I was a Utah elder. They are not permitted to labor as missionaries in Germany. I have appealed to the American ambassador and he has taken up my case, but up to this time no decision has been made; but we are confident that the matter will be adjusted favorably to us. The Lord has blessed us with friends and places to stay. We have good health and a goodly portion of his Spirit for which we are thankful to him.

I hope this will find you all well. Give my regards to Sister Stebbins and Saints.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

C. C. JOEHNK.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

Editors Herald: It has been some time since I contributed anything to your valuable and interesting pages. I had a desire to write, but was really unable to put in anything of much interest on account of sickness and disability. I have not been able to do much, consequently have but little to report. I wish to say that I am still in the faith of the gospel, and rejoicing daily in the enjoyment of the blessing that comes to those who earnestly strive to keep the commandments.

My heart swells within me with joy and gratitude to God the Father for his matchless power and wondrous love manifested to me, from the days of childhood to the present in all the labors of my ministerial work. His arm of power has been over me for good, helping me, and my life has been preserved through all the peculiar conditions of life through which I have passed, and I still feel to praise his holy name.

I wish to say to those with whom I have labored and toiled so many years in my past ministry, I am still hopeful, and have within me the hope of immortality and eternal life, which has cheered my heart and enabled me to endure this far. I greatly rejoice to know that Jesus is the Christ. Bless his holy name for ever!

Dear brothers and sisters, let us hold onto the rod of iron, the word of God, closely, until we get to the end and gain the prize—eternal life, with all of its environments. How I love to read the letters and inspiring remarks, and sound doctrine, penned by those old veterans of the cross; those I have known for over forty years, ever since the first elders came to Utah, and twenty years of experience before that in the old church. I rejoice to live in this wonderful dispensation of God's eternal truth revealed to mortals on earth, and to bear testimony with others that Jesus is the Christ fills my heart with unspeakable joy.

Your colaborer with God and his people,

HENRY KEMP.

COLTON, CALIFORNIA, December, 1909.

Editors Herald: I feel an impulse to express the great interests I felt in Bro. Charles May's letter from Papeete. I read it with a lump in my throat and tears in my eyes, for it recalled the scenes that are past, and brought a yearning to see again those beautiful islands, that for years were more like home to me than any place on earth, and to see that people from whom I can never feel entirely separated, and to see again the dear one whose helper I was.

My sympathies are with them in joy or in sorrow and all that comes to us to America from that field is of interest to me, both concerning the people and the missionaries, their labor and their progress, or even their discouragements.

My precious husband laid down his life, willingly so; for that people, and can I ever be indifferent towards them? It is the sentiment of some that if he had not gone out to the islands the last time, he would have been, in all probability, alive and well to-day. I, too, have thought so. I could not fathom the mystery, and dared not question the overruling providence of the Almighty. I knew that he knew the circumstances of his going, and knowing the end from the beginning, knew also that it would end in his death; knew, too, how he tried with all his powers to do right. Therefore a "why" would sometimes rise to the surface, try as I would to be silent and submissive. Faith seemed to desert me; I was as one stunned by a heavy blow. There were circumstances that made me feel to be adrift. Nothing seemed pleasingly secure as heretofore. After a while, I would say in my heart, "The Lord will make it plain sometime," for without my saying so I saw things altogether different from what others did, and I comforted myself with the thought, "Surely the Judge of all the earth will do right." But thanks be to the giver of all good gifts, there has been a rift in the clouds within the past twenty-four hours, through which I have seen that there are some things better, more noble than to live, and can say more firmly than before that he laid down his life for that people, and I also believe that in his last hours of suffering, he tasted death for others besides himself.

For days he was unconscious of things about him, but alive to the work in the islands, talked in the native tongue to the brethren there. He sorrowed and moaned because he had to do what he called "that dreadful thing." I have heard him say more than once, that he would lay down his life, if by so doing he could restore those who had departed from the church, so that that people would be united again as they were a few years ago. It may be that he can do more for them in his death than in his life, though it leaves our little home so empty and silent, and her who shared the joys and sorrows of that mission so lonely.

I did not realize at first that it was a final separation. How could I? He had been going away more or less for fifty-eight years, but had always come back, and during his life the things that would be impossibilities to some would be only obstacles to him. Therefore, I instinctively felt that he would come back. But as the dull days pass one by one and he does not come back, I begin to realize that I am alone in this world without ears to hear, and with no one in the house to speak to. But I must rise above this dull feeling and be cheerful, for if I can not bear my part of the sacrifice belonging to his great work, I am not worthy of him.

Since there was nothing said in Brother May's or Brother Lake's letter about how the natives felt when they heard of the death of their "Oromathea" I will copy some from Alberta's letter to me:

"When I opened your letter, our worst fears were realized. We had said among ourselves in the morning, that we must not be surprised if we heard that Uncle Joe had passed away. And how we dreaded to tell the natives. They, too, had their fears, and the mail had not been in the house long, when Tenā and Roo Vahina went to Turatahi's house and got him to come over to see while they waited. He came almost over, but Mauna from Tiona had been ahead, and so met him on the way, and together they went back to the waiting sisters. Then Mauna went on to Tiona to tell them there.

"At the evening prayer service it was the theme, of course. There were no dry eyes there, and all were united in saying that though he was gone, his words would always live in their hearts and that his last words to them were fulfilled, which were, that if he never met them again here on earth, he wanted to meet them all in paradise. They said he had gone on and met Metuaore and Alexander, and they were rejoicing together, and it remained for them here to be faithful and they, too, would meet them bye and bye.

"Matahira spoke of her last baptism, and said that Uncle was her true father in the gospel. . . . She also testified that it was through his ceaseless efforts with her that she got disentangled from sin. Roo was crying all the evening. Alfred did not speak. Turantahi spoke very nicely, bearing testimony to his (Uncle Joe's) righteous life and worthy example while he was in this mission. Next Sunday is set apart for a memorial service. Tiona and Taronā branches are to meet together. Alfred advised the Saints to put on black for the day, and if they felt like it, to keep wearing it. The chapels are already draped; had not been removed since placed there for Metuaore."

SOUTH SCOTT, INDIANA.

Editors Herald: I wish to call the attention of the Saints of the Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana District to the fact that this has been a prosperous year and a bountiful harvest with many, prices also being high on what they had to sell. It has helped them to cancel many debts, all of which we should be thankful for. But how many have failed to realize that the oldest debt we owe is to our heavenly Father, the giver of all good, which debt has neither been canceled nor a payment made thereon this year. Let us wake up to our duty and have our names placed on the agent's books with as much to our credit as we can spare. To those whose names are already on the books, let us not look back and say that we have done our full duty, but let us look forward with a desire to do more in the future.

The church, the Sanitarium, the college, and the homes need our support and need it now, and most of all, we need to do our duty now, for we have no promise of to-morrow.

I also wish to call attention to a statement found in the HERALD of November 10, with reference to the reunion held at Howell, Michigan. We believe it to be misleading. The writer said he could imagine Apostle William H. Kelley arising to a point of order, and asking for the law when he was elected to assist the district president. As I was present at every session from the first to the closing of the reunion, I believe I know what took place as well as those who came near the close. At the first session Brn. J. J. Bailey and the district president were in charge and as the subject of organizing was brought up the president made the suggestion to wait till more would be present. The suggestion was accepted and the organization was not effected till Monday, when it was thought best to organize. A motion was made and supported that the district president preside over the meeting. At this point the district president arose and said that according to the handbills, Brethren W. H. Kelley and S. W. L. Scott were looked for and asked the mover and supporter to add to the motion that if those brethren made their appearance they should be associated with the president. Brother Kelley was not elected to assist the president, but was included in the motion to be associated with him, and had Brother Kelley been present he would have had no cause to arise to a point of order as those there knew his authority, and he being a senior to us all in the great work would have no doubt been selected to preside over the reunion. I think there is a difference between being elected to assist and being chosen in a motion to be associated with. Now if my views are not correct, I beg pardon, but if they are, I think it is an injustice to that body of people to say what they did was not in harmony with law and order.

I have been here and at other points trying to encourage the Saints, and interest those who have not as yet accepted the gospel. The weather has been against us, so much rain, but the Saints have done well in coming out through the storms, and sometimes there was a good attendance of outsiders, while at other times not so good. I expected to make other points before reaching home which will be about Christmas, in time to see Santa if he comes our way.

As one who desires to learn the law and do my duty,

However, it was stated from the Tabernacle yesterday that one tenth was not sufficient, neither was it complying with the law, and the time was near at hand when a total consecration of all would be demanded. We believe the limit of endurance will be reached ere long, the honest, hard working man will not submit to such intolerance much longer, some broad-minded man who is uncompromised will rise up in rebellion and demand that priestly fetters be severed and agency be established as the only factor in determining the destiny of men.

B. H. Roberts, at the present time, is the logical leader of the rebellious, but he is too old and too much compromised (having three wives) to lead the hosts to victory. His recent sermon, however, gives color to his opposition. He said in part: "Truth compels me to say that we as a people have not always been wholly blameless in the manner in which some things were met in the past. There was somewhat of fanaticism, intolerance, and even impudence on the part of some of our people. It is a dangerous thing for a people to feel that they are the favored of heaven and that he has made them his depositories. They thus think themselves all powerful and become fanatical. While in Missouri overzeal and fanatical remarks helped to stir up our enemies against us, the Lord was not bound to give us victory over our enemies, because we had not always done what he would have us do. A little introspection and self-analysis is a good thing for all of us." After speaking of Joseph giving up one hundred and sixteen pages and that he made mistakes like other men, he said, "God does not walk in crooked paths, and when men represent him as varying from the truth they blaspheme his name. Therefore, know ye that God and his truth are anchored to the truth, God is not going to win his victories by chicanery and fraud or falsehood, so that if any man comes to tell us that God is varying from his law and that he has spoken one word to the ear to break it to the hope, or that he has announced his law and after that men may practice falsehood, then we may surely know that man is surely mistaken. Moses said, Swear your oaths and covenants to God, but Christ says, Swear not at all. God might displace a law, but we can not violate a law while it is in force. We should do that which is the best for the church and the people, and whatever might be erratic or sporadically wrong should certainly be corrected." In conclusion Roberts said, "What I have said may not be within the purview of the occasion, but I must speak of those things that are within me."

Joseph F. evidently was not pleased with this signal of danger raised by Roberts; so he arose and with much warmth and animation declared, "I believe if our brethren would devote their time and minds in the foundation which Joseph established, that they will please the Lord and they will better satisfy the Saints and satisfy the object of their mission. There never was a time that there were no foolish men amongst us, there are many that are foolish through overzeal and many more who are foolish in saying things that should not be said. It is not wise or prudent for men to proclaim the weakness of the church or its defects, or to parade its faults. I do not think it the right, or prerogative, or mission of any man to point out the defects of Joseph Smith; let the great God Almighty judge and speak for or against them; it should not be our brethren, for our enemies take advantage of foolish things said and give the world a chance to use them against us, and they should not have been spoken at all. I think it my duty to say this much. When the Lord wants to reveal anything to us he knows the channel through which to reveal it, and he will do it and don't you forget it."

The foregoing will indicate that the danger flag is in the breeze and the thumb screws will be applied, if not the fagots, to all those who oppose the priesthood.

The play of this people in Independence, Missouri, is merely a bluff, a tithe gatherer, so far as the leading men are concerned. Many of the rank and file, however, are looking Zionward, and would welcome the day of their exodus from the "mountain of the Lord's house in the tops of the mountains." Millions of dollars' worth of buildings are now under construction by the church, the old adobe ward churches are giving way to the modern, and the two-story business blocks are assuming the sky scraper type. A two million dollar hotel is going up on the old tithing house block, built by a syndicate of which Joseph F. is president. The gymnasium building, young folks' building, theaters, dance halls, and the hundreds of costly residences now under construction, all testify that a move is the farthest thought in the mind of the church. Judge King in a sermon recently declared, "We are here to stay anchored till the end of time."

The Salt Lake Tribune has hitherto made an excellent fight against the hierarchs, showing the bad practices and incon-

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

This branch has held its business meeting. Bro. F. T. Haynes was sustained as president, and Bro. Alma Thomas was reelected clerk; J. W. Topping priest; E. A. Webbe teacher; and J. McNeil deacon. I might also say that the branch correspondent was sustained because of the number of letters written. He wishes he had more to say in regard to progress made in this city and desires to be informed by the members.

The Sunday school is in receipt of a letter from Bishop Kelley thanking them for their Christmas Offering which was about three times larger than the year previous. This is an example of system. We used the same method last year, viz, penny banks; but this time they were labeled "missionary banks" and were passed every session regularly. I am longing to see the brethren all over adopt this system and cooperate in the work that we may by unity of purpose, even in small things, accomplish a great deal.

Our Sunday school is forward and our home department has been sorely neglected, but it will now boom under the care of Sr. Julia Webbe. She will be glad to hear from any in Cleveland who will interest themselves in this department. Address 10529 Kimberly avenue. F. C. WEBBE.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

For the first month we have had very severe weather. Sleighing has been the best we have had for thirty years, but the weather is moderating. Our meetings have been interrupted somewhat by the weather, but the young people seem to enjoy the cold by their prompt attendance at Sunday school. Our attendance has reached one hundred and more, and the interest is fine. Our Christmas Offering was two hundred dollars, and we feel a little proud of it.

Our preachers of late have been Elders LaRue, Gillen, and Allen, and Bishops Kelley and Hilliard. We had a very enjoyable time at Christmas entertainment.

We are now making preparation for a big revival meeting to begin about the first Sunday in March, something after the order of those held last year when Bro. R. C. Evans was here. They resulted in good and we will put forth efforts to make these better.

We are sorry to chronicle the sad news in regard to Sister Young. While washing her hair with gasoline it caught on fire and she was seriously burned about the head and hands. It was believed at first that she would lose the sight of both eyes. We called on her at 1424 Holmes street, at Dr. McCall's hospital, and felt that God would hear our prayers, and that she will recover. Our meeting at Centropolis mission continues regularly at private houses.

Conference Minutes.

IDAHO.—Conference convened at Boise, Idaho, November 27, 1909, Bro. Fred A. Smith chosen to preside, assisted by Bro. A. J. Layland. J. E. Condit was chosen secretary, Sister Curtis chorister. Reports were read from missionary in charge, Fred A. Smith; vice-president, A. J. Layland; Bishop's agent, Elias E. Richards; Elders reports from A. Hendrickson, Wm. Glauner, S. D. Condit baptized 4, John Allen baptized 3, A. J. Layland baptized 10, and William Brooner; Priests L. P. Larson, Jasper Jennings, E. T. Richards. Statistical report of Teton Branch read, reported 25 members. Report of Hagerman Branch read and referred sistencies of Brighamism, justly holding up to ridicule temple work, polygamous practices and their baneful effects. Emboldened by its success in breaking down confidence in the system here and seeing hundreds disturbed and disaffected, and turning infidel to Brighamism, it now essays to destroy "Mormonism," root and branch; Joseph and Hyrum Smith were frauds of the deepest die, the very inception of their work was born in hypocrisy and lust, and in defense of its contention publishes statements of every apostate and all the pseudoes that have departed from and become enemies to the church. Gibbs, Maxwell, Williams, Stevenson, and others are of the same cloth as Beedle, Stenhouse, Hyde, and others, and the revamped stories of the Tribune are merely old straw that has been thrashed out successfully years and years ago, building on the statements of Brighamites and Brighamite women and all that Young, Kimball, Grant, and others could and have woven together as evidence that Joseph and Hyrum were polygamists, as against the positive statements of all the boys up to 1844, that they were not.

Thus the Tribune, after its almost victorious fight, like the fated cow, kicks over the bucket of milk, turning into and becoming a real Brighamite in the ranks of Joseph F., trying to prove by lying statements of lying men and women that Joseph and Hyrum were bad, hypocritically falsifying their oft-repeated testimony to the contrary. If all liars were imprisoned like thieves the dust of martyrs could rest in peace, but the flimsy gauze of the Spalding story, water walking, money digger, the whole Smith family low down, disreputable, unintelligent, visionary scoundrels, is too silly for a great journal to permit, especially the Tribune, which is well acquainted with the facts. All such idiotic, rabid ravings are eternally squelched by the principal that no stream can rise higher than its source. We point the Tribune to the posterity of the Smith family, such brainy men as Joseph and Hyrum Smith, testified to by the most eminent men; Joseph Smith, of Independence, Mo., and his posterity; the late Alexander H. Smith and his sons and daughters; the much lamented David Smith and his only issue, E. A. Smith, and the Smiths of Salt Lake City, through the loins of Hyrum Smith,—all condemn and disprove the claim that the senior Smiths were a low down family.

Lies published in the Tribune are no better than lies published in the Deseret News or in The Improvement Era. The attempt of the Tribune to destroy, indirectly, the Reorganized Church throttles its own cause. Where is the church or the soil in which disaffected Brighamites, made so by the efforts of the Tribune, may plant a seed of hope. Let the Tribune answer! Why this onslaught upon the Reorganization? If no God in it, it is at least as good as any other, and who else can proselyte this people? The church we represent is law-abiding and God-fearing, and not a legal objection can be urged against its faith or practice. If the Tribune could destroy it, which is as absurd as it is impossible, where is the open door through which the Tribune may drive its hosts? While we like the Tribune in many respects, we fear its periscope sight is dimmed by prejudice.

Hide not thy talent in the earth;
 However small it be,
 Its faithful use, its utmost worth,
 God will require of thee.
 Go, then, and strive to do thy part,

 Are all heaven asks of thee.

WALTER W. SMITH.

PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA, December 24, 1909.

Died.

BULLER.—Joshua H. Buller was born in West Chester County, New York, May 26, 1848. He was married to Mary C. McMullin, June 2, 1870. To this union was born sixteen children, five sons and thirteen daughters. Thirteen of them are now living. He united with the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ, June 24, 1900, being baptized by D. R. Chambers. He died December 26, 1909, being 61 years, 9 months old. He leaves to mourn his wife and thirteen children and a host of friends. Sermon by Joshua Carile.

SCOTT.—George, born at Lancashire, England, May 6, 1839, died at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, December 28, 1909. He was baptized February 18, 1906, at Pittsburg by David A. Anderson. He was an unusually faithful member and was loved by his large circle of friends in and out of the church. The Lord permitted him to pass away without pain or distress, and peacefully left this earth for the paradise of the faithful. Services were conducted by C. Edward Miller and E. Harry Thomas.

SHAW.—Henry Shaw was born in Hollingworth, Cheshire,

England, January 19, 1833, and died near Council, Idaho, December 18, 1909. He came with his parents to America in 1844 and landed in Nauvoo in time to witness the appointment of Joseph's successor and the tragic events connected with the death of the Martyrs. He was married to Mary Pack in 1856. Four of the thirteen children born to them survive him and were present at the funeral. Their mother died at Weiser in 1888, soon after their coming to Idaho. His last months were blessed in the companionship of Mrs. Nora Duree, to whom he was married two years previous to his death, and who survives him. He was eight months in the Civil War and a life-time adherent to the faith. About two hundred people attended the obsequies, conspicuous among them being seven old soldiers. Funeral conducted by S. D. Condit.

Advertising and the Post-Office.

Mr. Taft is of opinion that the magazines carry more advertising in proportion to reading matter than the newspapers. This, as it happens, is an entire mistake. But the suggestion gives opportunity to explain that of all the business done by the Post-office Department the most profitable is the carrying of advertising. Rather than force magazine advertising out of the mails, the Government could better afford to carry it for nothing. The chief object of the reputable business people who patronize the advertising pages of the periodicals is to provoke correspondence. A single advertisement on one page of a periodical has brought to the advertiser seventeen thousand letters. Each one of these letters starts a return patronage of the mails. The actual carrying of that advertisement has cost the Government an infinitesimal sum. The return received by the Government has been the large profit upon the sale of many thousands of 2-cent stamps. It is impossible properly to consider the rate of postage to be charged by the Government on one class of matter without studying the relation of the rates on different classes to one another. Mr. Taft is actuated by a commendable desire to lighten the burdens of the Government and to introduce economies. But as a matter of fact the carrying of newspapers and periodicals is not a burden to the Post-office Department, and it is a great boon to the intelligent public of America.—From "The progress of the world," in the American Review of Reviews for January.

Ten Dollars Per Day.

Did you ever figure out the commercial value of an education? These figures are given to show in a graphic way the great advantage of a few years spent in school.

The average educated man receives a salary of $1,000 per year. In 40 years he earns $40,000. The average uneducated day laborer earns $1.50 per day, $450 per year, or $18,000 in 40 years. The difference between the two, or $22,000, equals the value of an education. To acquire this earning capacity requires, say, 12 years of school of 180 days each, or 2,160 days. Each day's schooling, therefore, is worth $22,000 divided by 2,160, or about $10.

There are features and stories in the next Everybody's so big that they need room even to be talked about; but the forthcoming installment of "The beast and the jungle" sweeps everything else before it—a great, fine human thing that will make you rage, gnash your teeth, laugh, cry, howl for vengeance, shout for joy. It's going to tear you all to pieces, this next installment of Judge Lindsey's autobiography—make up your mind to that. And in the end it will fill you with a new, profound sense of responsibility that you can not escape.

There is nothing in romance or on the stage that equals it in moving power and excitement. Before your eyes the sore of rotten municipal politics eats into the heart of the community. Before your eyes an honest fighting man lays bare his soul—in triumph and in defeat. You will sympathize in Judge Lindsey's innocent joy when honors come to him, and in his humiliation when he finds them only a bribe. You will realize with a thrill what quick, sure intelligence, what lightning-like action, along with devotion and courage, it takes to make a successful reformer. Above all, you will cheer for the victories snatched from defeat by the women and the children, that the "little judge" might continue his work.

After you have finished this part of Judge Lindsey's autobiography, it will be many hours before you will want to read another line of anything. But you'll come back to the magazine, of course, for you know it will be very much worth while even without the Titanic feature.

first, because it is a necessity—that is the rule in magazine buying of America's intellectual aristocracy. It is indispensable to the busy business man, who must keep abreast of the times, because it gives him the real news of the day in concise, readable form; it is invaluable to the thinking man, who demands only the truth and then draws his own conclusions, because it gives him just plain, straight facts.
 It is helpful to the whole family. In it you will find a monthly picture of men and affairs by Dr. Albert Shaw, in his comprehensive editorial, "Progress of the World;" a clever cartoon history of the month; book reviews; the gist of the best which has appeared in the other magazines and newspapers of the world; pithy character sketches; and interesting articles on the all-important topics of the day. Authoritative, non-partisan, timely and very much to the point, "it's a liberal education," is the way subscribers express it.

Every one gives first place to the California via Colorado Route for magnificent scenery but many people think that in winter they must avoid this route or be snowbound. A great mistake, for in Colorado there is more sunshine than in Florida and less snow than in any State east of the Missouri River—there is less delay from snow blockades on this route than on the other and less attractive ones. FIFTY YEARS OF LABOR ON THE SAINTS' HERALD.

REMINISCENCES OF PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—We feel that we are justified in using the title, "Fifty years of labor on the SAINTS' HERALD," because President Smith has been connected with the HERALD practically from its beginning; and as early as 1861, as will be discovered by reading the minutes of the fall conference of that year, he was given oversight of doctrinal matters intended for publication. The associate editors are responsible for the appearance of so many of his pictures in connection with his article. These photographs cover a period of about sixty-two years. They are in a way typical of the extent of his labors, as one was taken in Boston and another in San Francisco. Only one of these pictures has ever appeared in the HERALD. Three of the five have never to our knowledge been published in any periodical.—E. A. S.]

JOSEPH SMITH AS A BOY.
Taken about the year 1848.

At a conference held near Sandwich, Illinois, in the fall of 1859, it was decided to publish a periodical, for the purposes of conserving the interest of the Reorganization of the church; and William Marks, Zenos H. Gurley, sr., and William W. Blair were appointed a Publishing Committee, and Elder Isaac Sheen, at that time residing at Cincinnati, Ohio, was appointed as editor.

The result of the foregoing action was that the first number of the periodical appeared, dated at Cincinnati, Ohio, January, 1860. No specific change was made in the periodical or those in charge of it until October 9, 1861, when it was ordered by the church that doctrinal communications or articles should be sent to me at Nauvoo, Illinois, a kind of provisional appointment as supervising editor. In the meantime, Bro. Israel L. Rogers had been ordained Bishop to the church, and it was determined to purchase a press and remove the publication of the HERALD from Cincinnati to some point in the West. By the effort of the Committee of Publication, and the influence of Bishop Rogers, the plant of a country newspaper, called the DeKalb County News, was purchased with the intention that it should be set up at Sandwich, in the same county, which point was the nearest available one to Bishop Rogers' residence, and on the line of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railway. The committee failed to find a suitable place for location in Sandwich, owing to the prejudice or fear on the part of the business men of the village; but at the little town of Plano, Kendall County, four miles further east on the railway, a more liberal sentiment was found, and through the kindness and influence of a non-religionist, whose name was Lewis Steward, a room some eighteen feet square in the second story of a brick building known as the Henning Block, was secured, and a plant installed, and HERALD quarters established there in 1863.

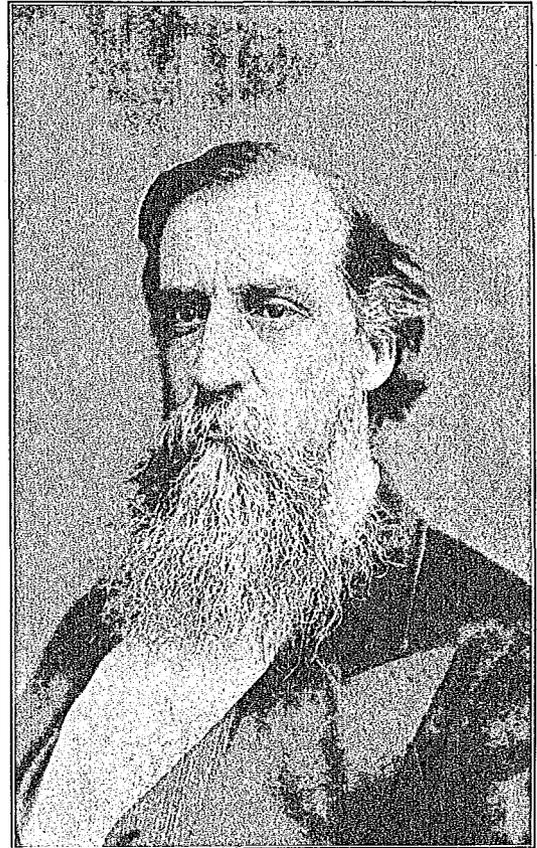

Isaac Sheen was still editor, and William D. Morton, a practical printer, who had been employed in the office of The Times and Seasons at Nauvoo at the time of the exodus from the State in 1846, was installed in charge of the printing of the periodical.

This plant consisted of a number four Franklin Medallion hand press with a meager outfit of office furniture, but sufficient for the opening necessities of the young periodical of the church, and the first issue of the HERALD emanating from the new quarters was dated April, 1863.

The intention and purpose of the periodical were primarily to set forth the principles of the gospel, and secondarily to combat the damaging heresy and doctrine of plural marriage and their accessories, which had crept into the church established in 1830, and to win back to their allegiance to the faith those who had been misled by these errors. It was thought, by making me the supervising editor in 1861, to have me assume the responsibility of what might be published in the periodical by any of those contributing to its columns. To this I strongly demurred, and when in 1865 it was appointed by the church that I should move to Plano and assume the editorial control of the HERALD, I agreed to abide the order of the church, but still declined to become responsible for all that might appear in its columns over the signature of others. The reasons for this objection made by me may be briefly stated: I had no actual spiritual intercourse with the church since the dispersion from Illinois, and so far as contact with religious controversy was concerned, this had been confined to the usual denominational privileges, offered by the Catholic and Protestant churches of the time. I had been baptized into the church by my father, having received and given credence to the faith as it was then taught and published to the world prior to his death. I was not an illiterate man, but I had not had the advantages of the higher schools, and as to scholastic ability, I was a self-made man. Elder Isaac Sheen was a student, well versed in the Scriptures, had obeyed the gospel in Philadelphia before the Martyr's death, but had not become acquainted with the church by actual contact in Illinois until after that event. He was a prolific writer and a lover of forensic disputation, a man of decided opinions, and an independent thinker. He was the nominal editor of the HERALD, and matter going into its columns must pass under his scrutiny. The Committee of Publication, Elders William Marks, W. W. Blair, and Zenos H. Gurley, sr., were stanch supporters of the faith, and had considerable experience in the church, Marks having been president of the stake at Nauvoo and being well acquainted with the church from the settlement at Kirtland, and Elder Gurley, one of the seventy under the regime of the prophet and patriarch, Joseph and Hyrum Smith. Elder Blair was a man of fine attainment, had become acquainted with the work of the church under the regime of William Smith, and had read extensively the works of the church, and was firm in his devotion to the truth. It hardly seemed fair to me then, that I should be made responsible for whatever might appear in the HERALD over the signature of any other person than myself. Assuming something from the office which I was called to hold, I was willing to answer for the spirit of the communication submitted to me, and to act upon the decisions of my judgment in regard to their availability for the work of the HERALD, as I understood them, and the work designed to be accomplished by the HERALD. This did not seem to be sufficient to satisfy the opinions of many of the eldership, so that in 1865, when under direction of the church and the care of the Bishop and his counselors, I accepted further responsibility in connection with the HERALD, I did so under the same conditions of thought, and on my removal to Plano in January, 1866, to take active personal editorial charge of the HERALD, I still felt unwilling to assume the larger responsibility for all that might be put into the columns of our periodical, which were open to the writings of an increasing host of ready and willing writers.

About 1872.

The spirit of the movement by which I moved to Plano and took charge of the HERALD is found in the expression made by one of the leading elders to the effect that he hoped that I would not only take up the active editorial work and assume the responsibility of what appeared in its columns, but also that I would not in this respect make the authors a sinecure. I moved to Plano in January, 1866, and went into the office under these conditions.

It was then understood, as it is now, that the preaching of the gospel was the primary work of the eldership, that the attention and effort of the whole body composing the Reorganization of the church, should be directed to the presentation and maintenance of "the faith once delivered to the Saints"; that under the broad shield of the word of God, as promulgated by his Son in his charge to the disciples, "Preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; he that believeth not shall be damned," every individual was to exercise his own powers under his own judgment, directed by his own convictions, and the evidence of the Spirit to himself, and was to be judged to stand or fall for himself at the final judgment. As I looked at the matter then, and as I look at it now, no man is authorized to assume the responsibility of dictating the opinions and actions of those with whom he may be associated, or make those who may differ from him conform to his standard. As every man is to be rewarded or condemned upon the result of his own deliberate speech and action, no man is authorized to interfere with the expression of those convictions, or assume the finality of those actions. He can not reap the reward for the merits of others, and he justly can not be made to suffer the loss or punishment for others' demerits, wrong speech, or wrong action. The Spirit of a man's writing, his speech, or his actions may be measured to some extent, but not so far as to make the act of the dictator the act of the one dictated to. With this understanding I undertook the editorial conduct of the HERALD, having spent a portion of the year of 1865 at Plano before my removal there.

By 1866 the corps of contributors to the columns of the HERALD had grown to quite an extent, and the conclusions touching various points of doctrine held by different factions of the church, and the arguments used to sustain these conclusions, and to force similar convictions upon others, were more or less radical, showing a great divergence of opinion among the eldership. The spirit of unification had not as yet brought the differing partisans together, and assimilation seemed to be difficult if not entirely impracticable. Some of the conclusions reached, and the arguments presented to sustain these conclusions seemed to me to be neither just nor tenable. This was what I largely feared, and helped to confirm me in my disposition not to accept in the fullest compliance to the desire of quite a number, for me to assume the responsibility for whatever appeared in the columns of the HERALD, contributed by others. I was willing that each one should assume his own responsibility and be heard for his cause.

In the realm of efforts to present the gospel and to win converts to the faith there was remarkable unanimity from the first among writers for the HERALD, so far as the essential features of the faith were concerned; but in the accounting for the things which had transpired in the history of the church, and fixing of the date and the data of what brought about the apostasy and the different degree of criminality attached to those who might have been movers in and responsible for the things which had transpired, there was too great a variety of opinion to secure at that time an understanding which should be common to all. For instance, had I been in control of the HERALD in its incipency, I could not have subscribed to some of the views expressed and maintained in its opening issues. It seemed to me that they were based upon insufficient foundation. They were advanced by men older than myself and were held to tenaciously, and it seemed to them that the stability of the fabric which we were building depended upon these theories, and that a divergence from them would result disastrously. Under these conditions all I could do was to wait, watch, and pray, which I did, until better conditions prevailed.

The growth of the church from 1866 was rapid, and the increase in the circulation of the HERALD and the demand for church literature increased accordingly, and it was not many months until we were compelled to seek larger quarters, which we found in the same building where the plant was first established. Through the beneficence and the love for the work held by Brn. Israel Rogers and David Dancer, a Taylor power press and two smaller auxiliary presses were purchased, and for a while the HERALD was printed on the power press turned by hand. It was not long until this was superceded by a little engine, built by Bro. Cyril Brown, of Providence, Rhode Island, and the press was run by steam. Later still, a book perfecting press was added, and a bindery established, a building purchased, and the increased plant established on our own premises where it continued during the stay of the plant in Plano. From 1866 to 1872, I was practically in charge of the plant for the most of the time, and notwithstanding I was not recognized or acknowledged as a business man, during my administration of the affairs of the office, the business rating in Chicago, our principal place of business, was A 1, gradually increasing in the amount of business value, commensurate with the increase of our business.

In 1872 the Board of Publication took charge, but there was one day in which I was the sole occupant, business manager, superintendent, foreman, and all-hand. The next day the Board of Publication came into possession, and a reorganization of the force took place, new officers were instituted, and from that time on I shared with others the responsibilities of the business portion of the work. Not a great while after this, the board purchased a building on the north side, almost opposite from where the plant was first put in, and reestablished the plant, as it might be said, under our own vine and fig tree. Bro. Henry A. Stebbins was business manager at the time the transfer was made.

In 1881, a building was built at Lamoni, Iowa, under the auspices of the board, Brn. Israel L. Rogers, David Dancer, and myself having been appointed building committee; and in October of that year, under the superintendency of Bro. John Scott, who had been with the office work for a number of years, the entire plant was moved, with its working forces, to Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, where it still remains.

From the time of my taking active charge of the editorial department of the HERALD, I have had as associates and assistant editors, Brn. Mark H. Forscutt, D. H. Smith, M. B. Oliver, Henry A. Stebbins, W. W. Blair, Daniel F. Lambert, R. S. Salyards, F. M. Smith, R. C. Kelley, Leon A. Gould, Elbert A. Smith, and Israel A. Smith. Besides these there have been at times others who have served as helpers in preparation of copy and proof, which comes more particularly under the mechanical part of the work. It is due to all these who have been associated with me, that I should state that they performed the duties of their office with faithfulness and a conscientious view to the advancement and welfare of the work intended to be accomplished by the establishment of the HERALD. There was always the utmost cordiality existing between the coworkers, with now and then a ripple disturbing the surface of the current of events, none of which, perhaps, could be traced to any malicious intent, but was attributable to differences of opinion as to fact or procedure. I was always strongly supported by Bishop Rogers, Bishop George Blakeslee, Bishop E. L. Kelley, with their associates in the Bishopric.

It will not do for me, after these long years of service, with a retrospect of the events which have occurred during the passage of the fifty years since the HERALD was established, during which men have come and gone, have borne the burden of the fight for a period of time and have laid down the weapons of their warfare in death, or are now pursuing other courses in life, to say that that which was done was always done in wisdom; nor will it do for me to write that difficulties were not encountered, that differences of opinion were not contested sharply, and that no bitterness resulted from what was said and done. The time passing has been too long; the events too numerous; the association too varied; and the subjects passing under consideration too many; and opinions too conflicting, as I now contemplate them, for me to assume that no mistakes were made by either myself or others. Under the circumstances which existed from time to time, it was inevitable that mistakes would be made.

The object to be served by the establishment of the HERALD, that is, for the dissemination of gospel truth and general information on all topics having either direct or remote relation to the work of salvation for fallen humanity, and the overcoming and eradication of the evils in teaching and practice which had grown up among those who had heard and heeded the angel's message, but who had wandered away from ways of right thinking and right doing, gave rise to the consideration of a great variety of speculation, opinion, and conviction, and every man, in some degree, felt himself more or less responsible that the work being done should be well done, as he understood, felt, and believed. This resulted in making the HERALD columns an arena for debate, which sometimes drifted into controversy more or less sharp and sometimes personal. The HERALD, as an institution, was the property of the whole body. Every man's ownership was apparent. It was held, rightly enough to be sure, that the editors had no other and no greater ownership than any other member of the church, and that consequently every man had the right to appear in the arena for the purpose of presenting his cause and maintaining it.

The Board of Publication was intrusted with the management of the HERALD affairs, including the selection and appointment of the editorial staff, after it took over the direction of affairs as a board.

The editors appointed by the board were primarily subject to the direction of the board and secondarily to the church. While open to criticism from any and every source for the manner in which they executed the duties of their calling, they could not be reached for alleged mismanagement or disregard of the rights of others to occupy the arena of controversy until the matters of objection had been heard and determined by the board, upon complaint of anyone aggrieved. The HERALD was too small to accommodate and hold all that was written and offered for its columns. As a consequence there was an opportunity for trouble between the editors and contributors of matter for the HERALD. The editors from necessity were obliged to discriminate upon their judgment as to the merits of what was presented for publication. Into this entered such a variety of things to be considered by which the availability and necessity of what was offered should be determined, that it was inevitable that offenses should occur. It had been written years before, that in case offenses did come, "Woe to him by whom they come," so in cases where offenses did come who was to suffer the woe must be inquired after. Cases of this kind did occur. Controversies between contributors and the editors did arise. Complaints were made. The editors were held to account, both as to the right and justice of their discrimination; and it was necessary in some cases that the Board of Publication should assume the responsibility of making the final decision upon these complaints, and this was done.

In the discharge of the duty of editor in chief I have always stood responsible for the acts of my associates and assistants in the exercise of selecting and using such matter presented for publication as was offered for the HERALD, and I have always been willing to answer to those who might complain of the treatment which they received, and where no satisfactory settlement could be reached with those complaining, have been willing to submit to the decision of the Board of Publication. I have also been willing in a larger degree to answer to the church and its rules and regulations for the government of members in regard to their conduct toward the membership and the general work, both as to motive, manner, and fact.

The conditions referred to above and the fact that controversy more or less personal and reflective had found place in the columns of the HERALD gave rise at length to an effort to secure action from conference, looking to the restricting of the editorial prerogative. This was met by a counter sentiment to hold him more directly responsible for permitting controversy of the kind room in the HERALD, the one effort, calculated to make the HERALD a wider field for the dissemination of personal use and the other to make it a narrower arena. Neither view was accepted by conference, and the matter was referred to the Board of Publication. The board took the middle ground, and directed the editorial force to keep out of the HERALD, so far as it was possible to do so, whatever had pernicious tendency to attack the generally received matters of doctrine and those things relating thereto, and authorized the rejection of the discussion of adverse personal views, calculated to originate or continue controversy which in their opinion ought not to be encouraged.

It must be seen from the foregoing by those who are willing to place themselves in contemplation in the places of others of their fellows called to the responsibility of duties connected with the liberties and welfare of those with whom they are associated, that the editor of the church organ has a most difficult and onerous burden to carry. He must necessarily conserve the object for which the church organ was instituted, and in doing this he must not only hold himself to answer to the Board of Publication by whom he is selected, but he must also hold himself subject to the general oversight of the church conference, the people as a whole, with a recognition of his liability to be called in question and to answer for his conduct to the various members of the church in his personal relation thereto. He must not only discharge his duty to the general church, but he must have a view of his duty to individuals. He must conserve the interests of all, and interfere with the interests of none. He must represent the consensus of opinion of the majority, and at the same time be very careful not to misrepresent the opinion of the minority. He must not permit extreme personal views and repress the expression of others. He must not ride hobbies himself, and must not seek to unhorse others who may choose to ride their own. He may have political opinion, but under the existent condition of things in his writings he must keep out of politics. If he has views on economical questions, he must be careful in the statement of them that he does not himself overstep the limit of controversy prescribed to others. He must in a sense "be all things to all men." If the church organ was his own and published for selfish consideration, his field of occupation, though narrower, could be occupied by him with a larger degree of personal liberty, and he accept success or failure of the wisdom of his methods as the case might be. He must be the servant of all and the master of none but himself.

With this understanding, I have striven to conserve the interests of all, being fully committed to a belief in the unchanging providences of God, in the never failing prevalence of truth in the final triumph of the faith once delivered to the Saints. Having remembered the pledge I made that I would teach no doctrine that should not be approved by the people and a code of good morals, I believe now, as I believed then, with all the significance that years of added experience have wrought in the development of human events, that the code of good morals is to be found in the teachings of the Redeemer of man in the New Testament, Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church, in the restoration of the gospel dispensation. I believe that the enactments of this code have not been changed nor abrogated, and will not be until the final consummation to be wrought under the rule of Him who is coming and whose right it is to rule and reign.

Under the influence of this belief, I have wrought, both as a church officer and as editor of the HERALD. I have no apology to make for my motive. That is with the Master. If in the discharge of my duties as I understand them, I have made mistakes which have brought me in contact with others of my brethren, and this has resulted in offense, I regret it. I have tried to act without undue admiration or favor to any, and without being moved by a sense of fear to offend others.

The period of service has been long. I may have chafed under its repressions. The influence of its discipline has been good, and I now find pleasure in contemplating my past association with those who have labored with me, and feel grateful that so far as those who have been called out of the service, either by death or by other duties, may be concerned, there remains only the good will and esteem which coworkers together in the common cause of humanity should feel one towards another; and so far as I know our relations of mutual good will remain unbroken and undisturbed.

I further acknowledge, with gratitude to God, the favoring kindness and courtesy of the coworkers in the publishing department, and the patrons of the HERALD, for whom and with whom my labors have been wrought.

JOSEPH SMITH.

FORERUNNERS OF THE SAINTS' HERALD.

Periodicals Published by the Church prior to and including 1844.

"EVENING AND MORNING STAR."

The church early realized the power that there is in the printed word, and during the early years of its existence published several periodicals that were intended to serve the double purpose of educating the Saints and conveying the gospel to those who were outside of the church. One of the most interesting of these periodicals, as it was the pioneer—the first to be published by the church, is the Evening and Morning Star. At a conference held in September, 1831, Elder W. W. Phelps was instructed to stop at Cincinnati on his way from Kirtland to Missouri and purchase a press and type to be used in publishing a paper at Independence, Jackson County, Missouri. The first number of this paper, entitled, Evening and Morning Star, was published in June, 1832, and opened with these words:

As the forerunner of the night of the end, and the messenger of the day of redemption, the Star will borrow its light from sacred sources, and be devoted to the revelations of God as made known to his servants by the Holy Ghost, at sundry times since the creation of man, but more especially in these last days, for the restoration of the house of Israel.

The Saints received the new publication with joy. Joseph Smith, writing concerning it, says:

In July we received the first number of the Evening and Morning Star, which was a joyous treat to the Saints. Delightful, indeed, was it to contemplate that the little band of brethren had become so large and grown so strong in so short a space as to issue a paper of their own, which contained not only some of the revelations, but other information also, which would gratify and enlighten the humble inquirer after truth.

The last number of the Evening and Morning Star to be printed was issued in September, 1834, at which time it ceased its appearance and was succeeded by the Messenger and Advocate.

The Evening and Morning Star as it made its appearance was a monthly periodical of sixteen pages, with a subscription price of one dollar per year. There is a significant break in the appearance of the magazine as we look through the bound volume. The July number, 1833, was published at Independence, Missouri, as usual; the next number appeared in December of the same year, being printed at Kirtland, Ohio. During the interval stirring times were experienced in Independence, as this little journal was destined to encounter mob violence. The conditions of persecution and trouble that came upon the Saints in Missouri, are well known to the church, and we will not enter into the details at this time, only to quote from the Church History a description of the events that led directly to the temporary suspension of the publication of the Evening and Morning Star. We quote from pages 315 and 316 of Church History, volume 1:

On Saturday, the 20th of July last, according to the foregoing document, there assembled suddenly in the town of Independence at the court-house between four and five hundred persons who sent Robert Johnson, James Campbell, Moses Wilson, Joel F. Childs, Richard Bristoe, Abner F. Staples, Gan Johnson, Lewis Franklin, Russell Hicks, S. D. Lucas, Thomas Wilson, James M. Hunter, and Richard Simpson, to some of your petitioners; namely, Edward Partridge, A. S. Gilbert, John Corrill, Isaac Morley, John Whitmer, and W. W. Phelps, and demanded that we should immediately stop the publication of the Evening and Morning Star, and close printing in Jackson County, and that we as elders of said church should agree to move out of the county forthwith. We asked for three months, for consideration. They would not grant it. We asked for ten days. They would not grant it but said fifteen minutes was the longest, and refused to hear any reasons. Of course the conversation broke up.

The four or five hundred persons, as a mob, then proceeded to demolish or raze to the ground the printing office and dwelling house of W. W. Phelps & Co. Mrs. Phelps, with a sick infant child and the rest of her children, together with the furniture in the house, were thrown outdoors, the press was broken, the type pied, the book work, furniture, apparatus, property, etc., of the office were principally destroyed and the office thrown down, whereby seven hands were thrown out of employment and three families left destitute of the means of subsistence.

The loss of the whole office, including the stoppage of the Evening and Morning Star, a monthly paper, and the Upper Missouri Advertiser, a weekly paper, was about six thousand dollars, without the damages, which must result in consequence of their suspension.

Elder W. W. Phelps was the editor and publisher of the paper during the time of its publication in Independence. An interesting criticism passed upon him by President Joseph Smith appears in a letter addressed to him under date of January 14, 1833, wherein Joseph Smith says:

We wish you to render the Star as interesting as possible, by setting forth the rise, progress, and faith of the church, as well as the doctrine; for if you do not render it more interesting, than at present, it will fall, and the church suffer a great loss thereby.

Phelps seems to have heeded the admonition, or perhaps having gained more experience he was more successful as an editor, for under date of June 25, 1833, the Presidency wrote him a letter, the postscript of which says:

We feel gratified with the way which Bro. William W. Phelps is conducting the Star at present; we hope he will render it more and more interesting.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 301.

After the removal of the Evening and Morning Star to Kirtland, following the expulsion of the Saints from Jackson County, the paper was printed by Frederick G. Williams and Company with Oliver Cowdery as editor, and Oliver Cowdery continued as editor as long as the paper was published.

We find also that in 1834, April 18, Elder Rigdon was set apart to perform certain labors among which was to assist Elder Cowdery in conducting the Star and in arranging the covenants.

At a council held in Kirtland September 11, 1833, consisting of members of the church in Kirtland and others delegated to represent the church in Independence, Missouri, it was resolved that the firm of F. G. Williams and Company should publish a paper entitled the Latter Day Saints' Messenger and Advocate, and also that the Star, formerly published in Independence by the firm of W. W. Phelps and Company, be printed in Kirtland by F. G. Williams, to be conducted by Oliver Cowdery, one of the members of the firm until it (the last named publication) should be transferred to its former location. It will be seen by this resolution that the publication of the periodicals of the church prior to its removal to Nauvoo, were carried on by private enterprise; but they were authorized and sanctioned by the church, and the church selected the editors. This will help us to understand why under the revelation (section 101) the printing establishment at Kirtland was designated as a private stewardship. The establishment was not church property. The two publications named in this resolution were never published simultaneously. The Evening and Morning Star was moved to Kirtland, Ohio, from Independence, and continued until September, 1834. Oliver Cowdery was editor during the time of its publication in Ohio.

“MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE.”

After the suspension of the Evening and Morning Star the Messenger and Advocate made its appearance, the first number appearing in October, 1834. It was published by Frederick G. Williams and Company, edited by Oliver Cowdery, subscription price one dollar per year.

In his diary, under date of May 11, 1835, Joseph Smith says that about the middle of May of that year, John Whitmer was appointed to take the place of Oliver Cowdery in conducting the Messenger and Advocate, while Frederick G. Williams was appointed to edit the Northern Times, a weekly newspaper which they had commenced in February of that year.

John Whitmer began his work as editor in the June number. This arrangement continued until the March number, 1836, when John Whitmer severed his connection with the paper and Oliver Cowdery reappeared as its editor. June 7, 1836, the publishing firm of F. G. Williams and Company was dissolved by mutual consent, and the whole establishment was purchased by Oliver Cowdery, who became sole proprietor, editor, and publisher.

In February, 1837, the firm of Oliver Cowdery and Company was dissolved and the establishment was transferred to Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, and Warren A. Cowdery became editor of the Messenger and Advocate. The publication continued until September, 1837. It came to an end during the troublesome times in Ohio during that year, and the printing establishment was burned to the ground in November.

“TIMES AND SEASONS.”

The Times and Seasons was published during the sojourn of the church in Nauvoo, Illinois. It was founded by Ebenezer Robinson and Don Carlos Smith, apparently on their own initiative, though from the beginning it contained official notices from the Presidency and Twelve. Like the Evening and Morning Star it was destined to see troublesome times. In its pages, in course of time, there was to appear the news of the awful assassination of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and it was destined to come to an end at the expulsion of the Saints from the city of Nauvoo. Of its founding Ebenezer Robinson wrote in 1841 as follows:

In the summer of 1839, having a few months previous emerged from the confines of a Missouri prison, where I had been thrust together with about sixty of my brethren, solely because we would not renounce the religion of heaven, Bro. D. C. Smith and myself purchased the remains of a printing establishment, had by the church in Missouri, which had been saved from the ruins by being buried in the earth, and after having carefully extracted the polluted soil of Missouri from the press and type, which, by the by, like ourselves, were none the better for having passed through the scrutinizing ordeal of an ungodly mob, we issued a prospectus for publishing this paper, under circumstances the most adverse possible.

[It is said that the type used in publishing the Elders' Journal at Far West, Missouri, was buried on the premises of the home owned by a church member named Dawson on the night when General Lucas' "mob militia" surrounded Far West. It was dug up in the spring of 1839, and removed to Nauvoo to be used on the Times and Seasons.—E. A. S.]

The only place we could obtain wherein to put our press was an underground room to an old warehouse, without any floor, and almost destitute of light. Here we succeeded in issuing a few copies of the paper, when disease (which we had contracted while laboring in a damp room) brought us upon our sick beds, and we were compelled to suspend business for several months. However, in the month of November we were permitted, through the blessings of a kind providence, again to issue the paper, which has been published until the present time without interruption, notwithstanding two good and mighty men have fallen while acting as its editor.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 557, 558.

The number for May, 1841, contained news that R. B. Thompson would be associated with Don Carlos Smith as editor. The two continued for some time, until by a strange and peculiar coincident their work was ended by the death of both within twenty days of each other. Don Carlos Smith died August 7, 1841; Thompson died August 27. However, it seems that following the death of Don Carlos, Ebenezer Robinson was associated with R. B. Thompson during the few remaining days of the life of the latter, as appears from notes in the Millennial Star, volume 18, page 630.

There seems to have been some dissatisfaction with the work of Ebenezer Robinson as editor, and apparently there was a growing sentiment that the paper should be more under the control of the church, and that it should become the official church organ. At a meeting of the Twelve, held November 30, 1841, it was voted that Ebenezer Robinson be solicited to give up the department of printing the Times and Seasons to Elder Willard Richards. As a result of this action and the revelation received about that time Robinson withdrew from the editorship, and February 4, 1842, Elder Woodruff took the superintendency of the printing office, and Elder

Taylor the editorial department. It was soon arranged, however, that Joseph Smith should be chief editor, with John Taylor assistant editor. Elder Robinson, being properly remunerated, cheerfully yielded to the wishes of the church, and in his valedictory (February 15, 1842,) expressed pleasure that the editorial chair would be filled with such competent men as President Joseph Smith and Elder John Taylor, and said, "Under whose able and talented guidance this will become the most interesting and useful religious journal of the day."

November 15, 1842, Joseph Smith withdrew from the editorship and John Taylor became editor in chief, a position which he held until the suspension of publication during the troublesome days just prior to the expulsion of the Saints from the city.

At the General Conference that convened October 6, 1845, a resolution obtained to discontinue the Nauvoo Neighbor after one more number, and to continue the Times and Seasons to the end of that volume. In harmony with this resolution the Times and Seasons made its last appearance under date of February 15, 1846.

"MILLENNIAL STAR."

The first number of the Millennial Star was published in May, 1840, at Manchester, England. It was issued monthly with Parley P. Pratt as editor. It continued to be published in Manchester, until April, 1842, at which time it was removed to Liverpool.

In June, 1842, Elder Thomas Ward became associated with Parley P. Pratt on the editorial staff. October 10, 1842, Pratt withdrew from the editorial chair and returned to America. In his farewell editorial he stated that since the beginning of the publication of the Star the church membership in Europe had increased from two thousand to about ten thousand, not including thousands of emigrants who had come to America. Pratt was succeeded by Elder Thomas Ward, who seems also to have succeeded him as president of the European Mission.

Thomas Ward continued editor until October, 1846, at which time he gave way to Orson Hyde, who announced that the arrangement was but temporary as Orson Spencer had been appointed by the Twelve to become editor. Orson Spencer took up the work in February, 1847. In the interval there occurred a rather peculiar misunderstanding. One number of the Star came out with black borders, announcing the death of Orson Spencer, the prospective editor (who had not yet reached England). Two numbers later he appears on the scene well and happy and takes up the editorial work. He had the privilege that few editors have, of reading his own obituary, and finding out just how high he stood in the estimation of the people. Like Mark Twain he could say the report of his death had been "greatly exaggerated," or like Uncle Johnny McIntosh, who at one time was reported dead and the report was published in one of the papers at Logan, Iowa, he could say he "knew it was a lie the moment he saw it."

The Utah church still continues the publication of the Millennial Star in Liverpool, England. Charles W. Penrose is the present editor.

OTHER PUBLICATIONS.

There were a number of other publications, among them we mention the Elders' Journal, edited by Joseph Smith, two numbers being published in Kirtland, October and November, 1837, just prior to the burning of the establishment. Two subsequent numbers were published in Far West, Missouri, July and August, 1838. The Northern Times was a weekly newspaper, as before noted, published in Kirtland, Ohio, and edited at its beginning by Frederick G. Williams. The Upper Missouri Advertiser, a weekly paper, was published at Independence in connection with the Evening and Morning Star. The Olive Leaf, a religious journal, was published in Kirtland in 1841, edited by Thomas Burdick, bishop of Kirtland. (At least the publication was ordered by a conference, though we have no further record of it.) The Nauvoo Neighbor was a weekly newspaper in Nauvoo contemporary with the Times and Seasons. The Gospel Reflector was a twenty-four page semimonthly paper edited and published by Elder B. Winchester, in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Elder Winchester being presiding elder of the church in Philadelphia at that time. The first number was issued January 1, 1841, and it continued, we believe, one year. In the first number the editor stated that it was not designed to be a "standard" (official) publication of the church. The Wasps was edited in Nauvoo by William Smith, 1842.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

HISTORY OF THE HERALD.

The first issue of the HERALD was under date of January, 1860, and was the result of an action taken at a conference of the church at Sandwich, Illinois, October, 1859, as follows:

On motion, Resolved, That this church publish a monthly paper, to be issued as soon as convenient.

A Publishing Committee was appointed, consisting at first of William Marks, Zenos H. Gurley, and W. W. Blair, and this committee was continued in charge of the church's publishing interests for a number of years until the creation of the Board of Publication in 1872. The personnel of this Publishing Committee changed from time to time.

The name of the paper appeared as THE TRUE LATTER-DAY SAINTS' HERALD and such it continued to be for a number of years until in 1877 this was shortened to the SAINTS' HERALD.

The purpose of its publication was to call together those scattered members of the church who had refused to follow the various factions into their different schisms, and to be a warning to the latter, and it has been well established and was well known at the time that the greater number of the original church remained in this scattered condition. A great many copies of the paper during the first two or three years were sent to these Saints, and this must have meant a considerable sacrifice of money and labor in those early months of the Civil War when prices were rapidly advancing, and especially on paper. Note the following taken from an appeal for help in the August, 1860, number:

Near one thousand copies of each number have been sent to the scattered members in the United States, Utah, Canada, and Europe.

The first notice of the HERALD in conference action after its appearance, is found in the minutes of a special conference at Council Bluffs, beginning in the issue for June, 1860, when Calvin Beebe was appointed agent for the HERALD and a treasurer of funds for publishing purposes.

That the struggle for continuance was a hard one the following laconic appeal fully shows:

Our services are gratuitous, but printers work for money.—August, 1860.

To Isaac Sheen belongs the credit of the greatest sacrifice and labor during the first few years of its publication. He was both editor and manager and his efforts must have been unceasing to keep the HERALD going at that time.

In October, 1860, the HERALD was continued by conference action and a vote of thanks was given Elder Sheen for his labors, which must have been arduous indeed. However, the first year shows that the paper appeared for each month, the work of printing and publishing having been under contract by L. Americus Warden, 168 Vine street, Cincinnati, Ohio, and the HERALD appeared as being issued at that place.

While the year was finished without a break, there was a hiatus following, for, after the December, 1860, number, there was no issue until March, 1861. And there was another interval from August of that year until January, 1862, the latter being number 7 of volume 2. Something of the determination of those in charge may be gleaned from the following:

No person need infer from these remarks that the continuation of the HERALD is in jeopardy, for if we can not publish it regularly we can publish it irregularly, and from the adoption of the following business principle:

We intend, therefore, to discontinue sending the HERALD to all subscribers who neglect to pay for it in advance.

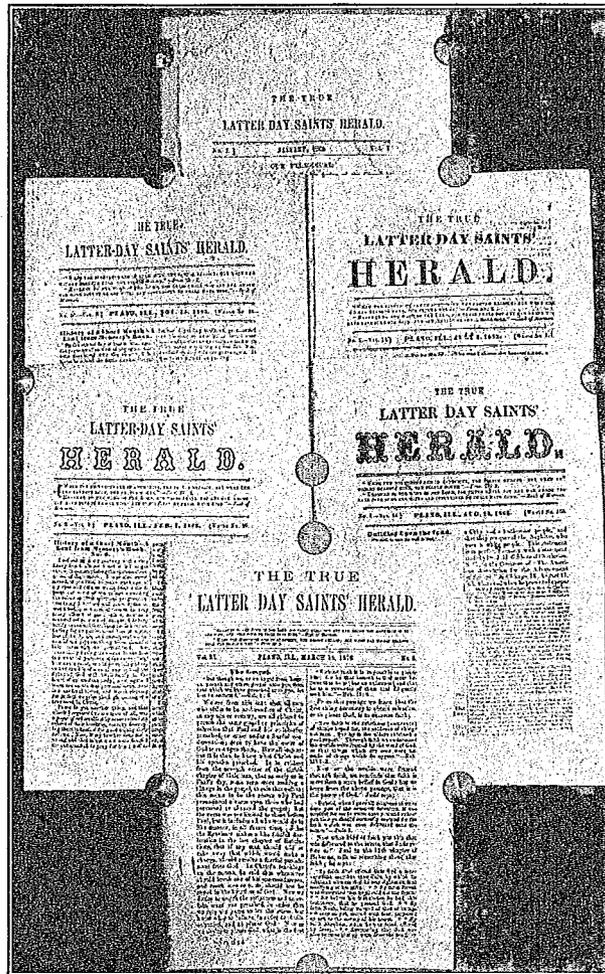

Isaac Sheen continued as editor and manager during those early years, and the first action by the church in regard to the editorial conduct was taken at a semiannual conference held at Sandwich, Illinois, October 6 to 9, 1861, as follows:

It was stated that the Quorum of the Twelve had resolved that President Joseph Smith, with others whom he may call to his aid, have the examination and supervision of the matter going into the HERALD.

For a more comprehensive and interesting review of events during this period and, largely, of the long years since, during which President Joseph Smith has served as editor of the HERALD, the reader is referred to his article in reminiscence which leads in this number.

After the conference action already noted and as long as the paper was issued at Cincinnati, all communications on doctrine were passed on by Joseph Smith, his home address being Nauvoo, Illinois.

The first notice of a movement toward establishing a press appears over the signature of Joseph Smith in the issue of November, 1862, and the question was discussed at the fall conference of that year at Gallands Grove.

The March, 1863, number notified subscribers of a removal to Plano and there the next issue, that of April, was printed and mailed out to the Saints under conditions very crude compared with those found afterward at the Herald Office.

As formerly, a large number of papers were being sent without charge to scattered members.

In April, 1865, the following action prevailed:

The old building as it appeared soon after the addition was completed. Built in 1881 and 1892.

Resolved, That Pres. Joseph Smith be appointed to take charge of the publishing and editorial departments of the HERALD.

Resolved, That a vote of thanks be tendered to Bro. Sheen for his unceasing efforts in the editorial department of the HERALD.

Characteristic, as we believe, of what the church has ever stood for, and especially as represented through the columns of the HERALD, we find the first editorial under the new management was entitled, "Education." Not long after there appeared a regular department of the editorial matter of the HERALD called, "Pleasant chat," where may be found some of the most significant editorials to be found in its files. Perhaps a few extracts from them may be of interest and also show as concisely as any other way the trend of events:

It is very tedious work to bore auger holes with gimlets; and the press and fixtures in the Herald Office bear this comparison to the press and fixtures of many an office engaged in a far less laudable undertaking.—May 15, 1868.

We are now running a new Taylor Power Press. We must be content to abide the eternal fitness of things and with that which is brought to our door.

The "power," however, as perhaps the Senior Editor can testify from personal experience, was "man" power.

The Herald Office is now fast merging into one of the most useful auxiliaries the church can possibly have.—November 1, 1868.

The next month, February, 1869, the purchase of a four-horse power engine from Bro. Cyril E. Brown, of Fall River, Massachusetts, for $700, was announced, and the issue for May 1 was "run off" with steam, and the news was given as follows:

When we thought of the power press, a cut of which accompanies this article, we feared, to some extent, to disturb the sleeping prejudices of some non-progressive minds.

If some of the Saints were perturbed by the introduction of steam power into our work, what would have been their misgivings if they could have been shown our present equipment whereby we have harnessed the lightnings of heaven and God's own thunderbolts drive our swift "power" presses in their work of sending out the glad tidings?

In that same issue appeared the HERALD's first illustration, that of the "Taylor Cylinder Power Press." It has been a long road from the hand press, as mentioned by the Senior Editor, to the two big Miehles we keep running at top speed by electricity. Equally as long has it been from that first crude cut of the power press to the three-color work recently appearing in Autumn Leaves.

But continuing:

It has been by no means an easy or a pleasant task for us to perform, that of conducting the HERALD; and nothing save the answering upon our head the faithful prayers, and the unwavering kindness and confidence of the Saints, would have kept us in heart to labor during the time we have remained in Plano.—December 15, 1869.

Somewhat earlier a short history of the HERALD was given which it may be well to quote:

It was first published at Cincinnati, Ohio, . . . and was then under the care of Brethren William Marks, sr., Zenos H. Gurley and William W. Blair, Publishing Committee, each of whom contributed more or less to its columns, the chief care of arrangement, compilation and publication devolving however upon Bro. Isaac Sheen, to whom more than to any other belongs the credit of its usefulness for the first three years of its existence. The publication was continued at Cincinnati for about three years when, by the church, it was considered advisable to purchase and locate a press, and Brethren Israel L. Rogers, William Aldrich, Philo Howard, George A. Blakeslee, and Johnathan D. Heywood, were appointed by the conference of October, 1862, a committee for that purpose, and in pursuance of that object did purchase a press and located the same at Plano, Illinois, from which place the April number of 1863 was issued, and where the publication has been continued ever since. . . . The original design of the church in publishing the HERALD, was to oppose the doctrine of polygamy and its various kin-viable privilege of supervision over the communications sent to the office for publication.

It has been supposed by some, that whoever may have been, or is in charge of the editorial department of the HERALD, must reflect the united wisdom of the whole church and be personally responsible for the doctrine and assertions of every correspondent and contributor whose articles may be given a place. This may seem perfectly just to them, but if placed in the position they would at once see that, in an organ which belongs to the whole church, and which is expected to be accessible to all in the church who may desire to write for it, there must frequently occur articles that possess intrinsic merit although covered with some objectionable features to somebody beside the writer, or editor.

This picture includes a few of the HERALDS as they have appeared since 1877 when it was changed to quarto size, and shows pretty well its general make-up during the period. The first one issued after the fire is shown in this, as also one during the time when it was sent out with cover, and the first number of 1910 which marks the end of fifty years' history.

dred evils; to be a voice of warning to the scattered Saints; and to be the means of setting the various doctrines of the church before the world and more especially those, who were of the opinion, fairly deducible from general rumors, that there could be no good in the religion of the Church of Latter Day Saints.

The HERALD has preserved the first of these characteristics throughout; and how far it has met the needs of the church in the latter respect is for them to judge who read it. That it is not all it ought to be, many, ourself included, are aware, but where room for improvement exists and will- ingness join hand there is reason to hope.

In the beginning the HERALD was under the editorial control of Bro. Isaac Sheen, who continued in charge until the present incumbent of the chair editorial, was appointed by the church, to the sole control of the publishing department; prior to such appointment however, we exercised the unen-

Again, it is quite possible that the editor himself may hold some views quite out of favor with a large number of the patrons of the HERALD; and, if insisting upon excluding all matter not in complete harmony with his views, the paper ceases to be a church organ and becomes the exponent of one man's ideas alone. Upon this idea we have tried to act; and while trying to prevent the insertion of that which was, to our limited view, manifestly untrue and injurious, we have expected each and every contributor whose effort was accepted and published, to defend his or her peculiar views and have not intended to answer for the defense of what was published over another's signature. Whenever this course shall, by the church whose servant we are, be found reprehensible, we shall bow to the desire that will remove us and place another in the editorial charge. Until then, we can not conscientiously do differently than we have been doing.—January 1, 1867.

A part of the foregoing is of special interest along lines of editorial policy and in connection therewith we add the following:

We take this opportunity of saying to the readers of the HERALD as well as to the contributors to its pages, that communicated articles must be carefully written, as they will if published, stand or fall upon their own merit, and not upon the fictitious value that may be attached to them by our reception and publication of them. That which we publish over our own signature we expect to be held responsible for; but as we are far from wishing to receive the credit due to another, we feel it to be only just that we shall not be made responsible for the failings or mistakes of others.

We will use all diligence to prevent obnoxious, and openly erroneous articles from appearing in the columns of the HERALD, but should any appear which seem to be open to these objections, there is by far a better method of rectifying the wrong and preventing untoward mischief, than denouncing the writer as a fool, a madman or a wicked heretic.

We shall use our endeavor to prevent the HERALD becoming a mere vehicle for the exhibition of partisan fury, or personal spleen; as we look upon either as disgracing the true Christian. We therefore hereby caution all our contributors to weigh principles and not men, a caution by the way that the elders might profit by.

—August 1, 1865.

We have not knowingly transcended the bounds prescribed us as the representative of the Saints, in the literary conduct of the HERALD or Hope. Whenever the people have spoken we have listened, and as their representative, tried to so represent them; but we confess to having been pertinently obstinate in not listening to the voices of individuals among the people, and we now briefly state our reasons, etc.—September 15, 1871.

The editors do not assume the dictatorship nor the censorship of the Herald, and will not be responsible for any doctrine or theory presented.—November 1, 1871.

The editor is quite willing to be held accountable for what he writes; and he thinks this responsibility great enough, without being held to answer, morally or mentally, for a corps of writers gathered from so many classes of thinkers as is the one contributing to the HERALD.

So far as contradictions between writers of articles are concerned, we have this to say, some of them are only apparent conflicts; while others are honestly held views upon points in regard to which the church has not spoken. And it has been thought by the editor in charge, that, until the church does decisively declare upon these points, the public examination of them might result in good, while no possible permanent injury could accrue to any one. Until convinced otherwise, or positively instructed to the contrary, such will continue to be the policy of "ye editor."—October 15, 1875.

It has been the constant aim of those in charge, from Bro. Isaac Sheen who first had editorial and business control, under the first Publishing Committee, to the present incumbent of the sanctum chair, under the management of the Board of Publication, to make the HERALD acceptable to the Saints as readers, without compromising the dignity of individual responsibility, or becoming rightfully subject to the charge of being "men pleasers."—Nov. 15, 1875.

No one need flatter himself that so far as the HERALD may do, anything will be left undone to keep its patrons advised of the onward sweep of favoring events; nor need any suppose that those having charge will be deterred from doing and saying what they believe duty demands, through fear; or that they will be unduly moved by favor.—January 6, 1883.

It is expected that we shall maintain the faith of the Reorganization, including the positions taken by it upon subjects incident to the institution of the church, its history and all other things connected, or in any wise related therewith. If in doing this we have been harsh, or have exhibited a spirit of one determined to have his own will and way despite the truth, we shall deplore it when discovered and will make the proper amends. We are not conscious of having done so.—July 20, 1887.

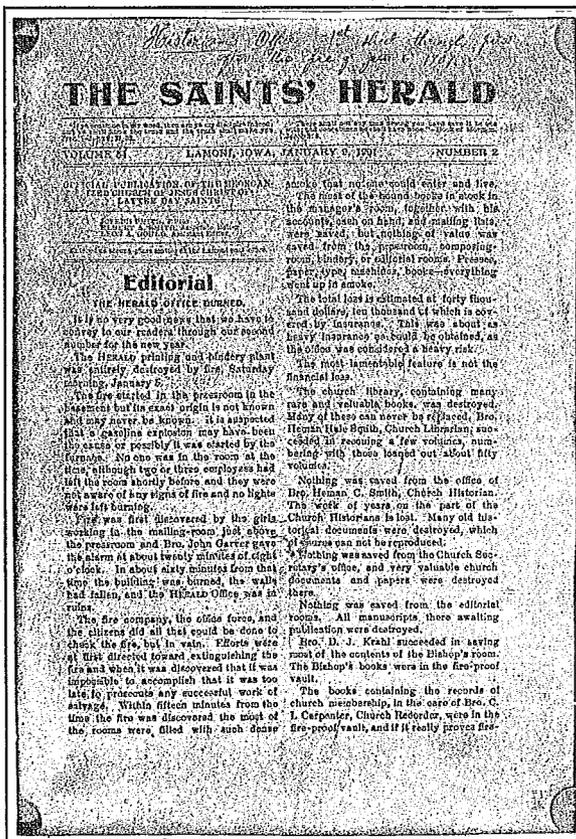

We have on hand a number of articles, some of which by reason of a lack of even ordinary care in their preparation, contain but the merest hints of the author's meaning. To arrange them for publication would simply amount to re-writing them entire, which we have not time to do.—November 10, 1888.

Our intention has been to keep the HERALD true to its mission, and to bring it up to a mental and moral standard of which no defender of the faith need be ashamed. If we have failed in this intent, it is the fault of our judgment, not of our heart or will.—Joint address by Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair in issue of June 13, 1891.

Some of the foregoing, in a sense, because of their dates, has taken us ahead of our story.

The HERALD continued at Plano throughout a very important and eventful period of church history. In 1874, at a time when an enlargement of the paper was being considered, the following appeared, speaking much for the labors of those in charge during that period:

This shows the first HERALD issued after the fire January 5, 1907, and was the first sheet from the press, as is shown in the handwriting of Heman C. Smith, Church Historian, to whom this copy belongs.

We have been climbing the hills of difficulty so long—they have risen so grandly one above another as successively we have surmounted their steep—that we, if we do not enjoy climbing, have become somewhat reconciled to that mode of progression, and do not now mind the sudden elevation we see before us in the putting down the HERALD price.

About 1876 a "committee on removal" was appointed and the work done by them resulted in the HERALD being established at Lamoni, Iowa, in 1881.

This issue closes the stay of the HERALD in Plano, Kendall County, Illinois. It came here in 1863, and was kindly cared for by the leading citizens of the place. It began its career here with a list of three hundred subscribers, many of them free; and some of them taking several copies. It had a press and fixtures costing about two hundred and seventy-five dollars; and occupied one room about eighteen by twenty feet square. It had Bro. Isaac Sheen for its editorial force and Bro. Wm. D. Morton, sr., as its foreman, compositor, and pressman; with a Washington Medallion No. 4, hand press, as its machinery. It will reach Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, and begin a new departure (on the old way) with an eight-horse power engine, two cylinder power presses, and a jobber press, with type and other fixtures to match, and office two stories high, thirty by sixty-five feet in size, (engine room attached), an editor, bookkeeper, superintendent, and five compositors.—October 15, 1881.

The first issue at Lamoni, therefore, was dated November 1, 1881, and here the HERALD has since continued without interruption.

EDITORS.

As related in another part of this history President Joseph Smith was given editorial charge in 1865, and was also made business manager. He followed Isaac Sheen in this dual capacity after the latter had served faithfully and well during the precarious four years and a half preceding.

The present Senior Editor took charge May 1, 1865, and we believe his salutatory may be given with profit, and it was as follows:

SALUTATORY.

In taking charge of the editorial department of the HERALD, I am acting in accordance with the expressed wish of the Saints, and in doing so am entitled to their faith, their prayers, and their upholding in righteousness, in love and in peace.

I am by no means unaware of my want of ability, of my lack of qualifications, nor yet of the arduousness of the undertaking; but feeling a desire to do that which seems to be for the best, I place myself in the hands of Him who hath been good to me in time past, and who has promised to hear even the young ravens when they cry.

Frequently solicited, and as urgently pressed to take the responsibility, I have as uniformly refused to do so, having my eyes open to the requirements of the position, and to my almost utter destitution of them.

I feel the necessity for an extended, united and strenuous effort being made for advancement of the work of the last days; and am assured that the HERALD should be made to answer the ends of its establishment for the perpetuation of our unity.

I can make no promises other than this, to study the nature of the wants of the church, and to minister unto them according to the best of my ability. I hope for cordial support of every one in the church who can use a pen for the cause of truth, and hereby ask for contributions for the columns of the HERALD, upon the various subjects connected with our faith.

We must awaken from our lethargy; we must put on our armor for the good fight; we must march out manfully, letting those who will be sluggards, lag behind; and those who will be mockers, stand upon the wayside, marking our onward progress by the bitterness and activity of their vituperation.

If our range of thought and vision has been too limited for the want of culture in the things which make for peace, it is attributable (to a degree at least) to the want of some of the things which ought to be and abound in us, that we may be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Son of God.

With this short salutation, I greet you, one and all in the bonds of peace, committing myself with all the things entrusted to my care, to the protecting providence of that God who receiveth our prayers, and answereth them according to his wisdom, for our good.

JOSEPH SMITH.

We refer our readers for further history of his connection with the HERALD to his article in this issue. A biography of Elder Isaac Sheen will also be found in this number.

ASSOCIATED AND ASSISTANT EDITORS.

During the almost forty-five years the Senior Editor has been in charge, quite a number of assistants have come and gone. The first of these was Elder Mark H. Forscutt in April, 1870, when by conference action he was made assistant editor of both the HERALD and Hope. As such he served until he went on a mission to England in 1873, his valedictory appearing in the issue of June 12 of that year.

During a part of this year, after the departure of Elder Forscutt, Elder David H. Smith acted as assistant editor.

Milton B. Oliver was the next assistant and his service dates from August 15, 1874, to April 15, 1876, when Elder Henry A. Stebbins took up the work. The latter continued until November 1, 1880, his farewell appearing in HERALD of November 15, following.

For a short time, from September 1 to November 19, 1883, Elder D. F. Lambert had charge of the work as assistant, but from then until W. W. Blair was made associate editor, April 25, 1885, the Senior Editor was alone in the management of the HERALD. Brother Blair remained in editorial capacity until April, 1893.

Elder Richard S. Salyards had taken up work with the Herald Office in May, 1888, and in June, 1891, he was made assistant to the editors. In 1893, when Elder Blair retired, a new feature was added: The Senior Editor was actively assisted by Elder Salyards, and Elder Joseph Luff was appointed corresponding editor. This arrangement continued until April, 1895, when Elder Heman C. Smith was made corresponding editor, Brother Luff retiring. Still later, June 16, 1897, the names of both Heman C. Smith and Joseph Luff were shown as corresponding editors.

In May, 1900, Fred. M. Smith became assistant editor, valedictories of R. S. Salyards and Heman C. Smith appearing on May 30, and Elder David W. Wight was appointed corresponding editor, as also was Joseph Luff. This force continued until October 3, 1901, when Elder Wight was overtaken by death, the only person who has gone to his rest while holding a position on the editorial staff of the HERALD.

editor and is still serving as such. In May, 1908, I. A. Smith was appointed assistant in the department and is still occupying.

It will thus be seen that sixteen men have been associated with the Senior Editor in editorial capacity at different times. However, for many years he was alone in the work, and for many years, in addition to these labors, he was also in charge of the business interests.

EDITORIAL POLICY.

Of the editorial policy of the HERALD there is much we would like to present, but because a great deal

The Herald Office was destroyed by fire on the morning of January 5, 1907. Before the day was done steps were taken looking toward rebuilding. At a citizens' meeting in Lamoni, the Sunday following, over seventeen thousand dollars was subscribed toward rebuilding.

In the spring of 1902 the vacancy was filled by the appointment of Elder F. M. Sheehy and he and Elder Luff served as corresponding editors until May, 1903.

Frederick M. Smith continued as assistant until May, 1904, when he was made corresponding editor, and as such he remained until 1906.

In 1903 Joseph Smith and Frederick M. Smith are shown as editors and Richard C. Kelley as assistant, the latter serving from June 24 to October 14 of that year. I. A. Smith was appointed in May, 1904, and served till September, same year. He was followed by Leon A. Gould, who remained as assistant until May, 1908.

In May, 1906, Elbert A. Smith was made associate editor and what we have had in mind is given and interwoven with matter already presented we leave it with the reader without further division.

SIZE AND PRICE.

The first HERALD contained twenty-eight pages, but thereafter for a time was issued with twenty-four. But the price seems to have been an uncertainty, that is, at the start. In the July issue of the first year the statement was made that the first volume of the paper would have twelve numbers instead of six, as formerly intended, and the price would therefore be one dollar for the volume.

In July, 1863, the Publishing Committee announced a change to a semimonthly at the old price of one dollar per volume, and two volumes per year, and because of the high prices of paper during the war, in December, 1863, the HERALD was reduced to sixteen pages, but by using considerably smaller type about the same amount of matter appeared as before the change. March 15, 1864, notice was given that volumes thereafter would contain twenty-four numbers at a price of two dollars.

The next change took place January 1, 1869, when the paper was doubled in size and the price raised to three dollars. Still another change was made January 1, 1874, when the subscription was reduced to two dollars and the paper slightly enlarged.

In January, 1877, a marked change was made, the paper appearing in quarto size and sixteen pages, instead of thirty-two, as it had been issued for some time, and the price fixed at two dollars and fifteen cents.

For a number of years there continued to be considerable agitation of the question of making the HERALD a weekly, but the step was not taken until January 1, 1883, and thus it has continued.

The price at this time was two dollars and fifty cents, and this rate continued until July, 1888, when it was reduced to two dollars and twenty-five cents.

In 1893 a new feature was added in putting out the HERALD with a cover and it continued to appear with covers until 1901.

A still further reduction to one dollar and a half was made in July, 1897, and this is the present subscription price of the HERALD, the regular issue being twenty-four pages, with an occasional departure from the rule as exigency or convenience demands.

The number of subscribers has varied greatly from year to year, with a gradual growth from a few hundred in the first years of its history until at the present our issue is approaching seven thousand.

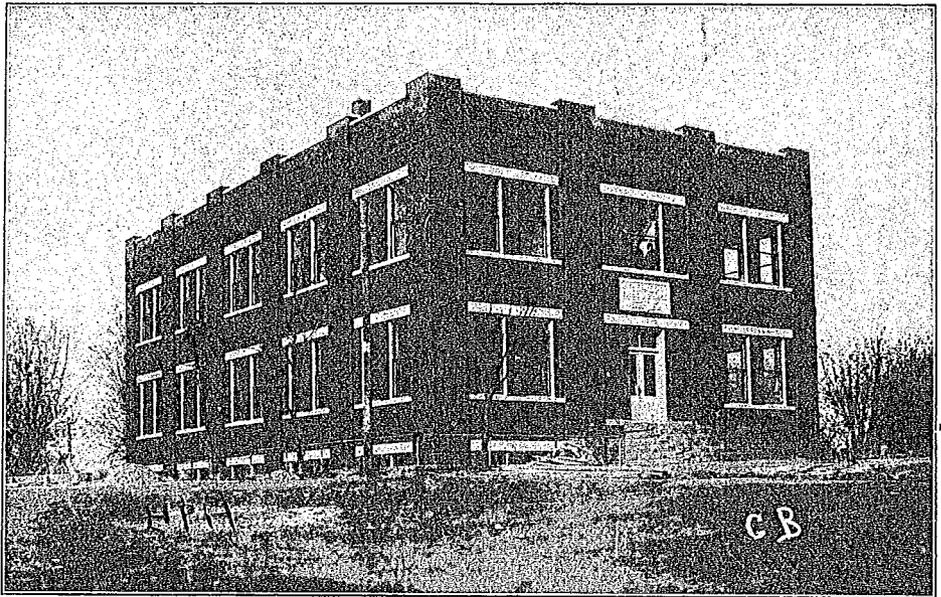

APPEARANCE.

From a technical standpoint we might inflict a lengthy and uninteresting treatise on the make-up and appearance of the HERALD during its career; but we have secured some half-tone cuts showing its general appearance at different stages which will answer better than any word picture, and we present them with explanatory notes for your inspection. These have been made from pictures taken for the Jubilee HERALD by Bro. C. I. Carpenter.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The Board of Publication and its predecessor, the Publishing Committee, have of course been the great power behind the HERALD and, back of them, of course, the general body of the church. Much could be written about the men who have served on the board and about the many actions taken by them affecting the publishing interests, but even in a jubilee number there are limitations. It is sufficient, we believe, to say that the history of the HERALD has been made by the board and it has been supreme in its authority as a created body representing and acting for the church.

Various resolutions have been presented at conferences concerning the management and editorial conduct of the HERALD, but upon a somewhat lengthy research into conference actions, we find little smacking of censure and much of commendation in the numerous references of actions to the board and editors for their judgment and action.

In 1855 Joseph Smith retired as business manager, in which capacity he had long served in addition to his editorial labors. He has been followed, in managerial work, by Elders David Dancer, Frank Criley, John Smith, F. B. Blair, and A. Carmichael.

BUILDINGS AND EQUIPMENT.

During the publication at Cincinnati the paper was printed by other parties on contract, and was not issued from presses owned by the church until it was transferred to Plano. There the HERALD force held forth in a rented room for a time, but later secured larger quarters belonging to the church. In 1881 the fine large building was erected in Lamoni. This building was enlarged in 1891 to give more room for the HERALD force and also to supply offices for some of the general church officers.

This entire structure with almost all contents was destroyed by fire on January 5, 1907, and only by concerted action and almost heroic effort of all parties were the first few issues following this date gotten out. But it was done—and more: Only a few months from that time bindery employees were being overworked, linotypes were clicking, presses were purring, the HERALD editors were in possession of a suite of splendid rooms, and the business manager was wearing a broad smile in spite of all the worry, work, and debt,—all this in the new building represented on our jubilee cover.

I. A. SMITH.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

We have secured the following list of names of those now living who were readers of the HERALD in 1860: Joseph Smith, Independence, Missouri; Elder E. C. Briggs and wife, Lamoni, Iowa; Sr. W. W. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa; Thomas Hougas, Marseilles, Illinois; A. W. Head, Stewartsville, Missouri; Helen Pomeroy, Red Oak, Iowa; Caroline F. Dickinson, Independence, Missouri; John Molyneaux, Saint Louis, Missouri; John K. Sheen, Lushton, Nebraska; Harriet Matilda Whitcomb, York, Nebraska; Henry Green, Netawaka, Nebraska; John Hougas, Lamoni, Iowa; Mrs. W. E. Summerfield, Stewartsville, Missouri.

John K. Sheen writes: "There are only two persons living who assisted in the publication of HERALD Number 1: Harriet Matilda Whitcomb, of York, Nebraska, and the writer. 'Tillie' assisted in folding, and yours truly carried the mail to the post-office."

Henry Green says: "In January, 1860, many missionaries from Utah passed through Cincinnati to Europe. Bro. Isaac Sheen gave them many numbers of the first issue of the HERALD. Several of the elders visited Syracuse, Ohio, where the Brighamites were numerous. For the reason that I had withdrawn from them in 1856 they agreed among themselves that I should not know anything about the HERALDS handed them by Isaac Sheen. But in February my wife brought home a package of dry goods that was wrapped up in a Cincinnati commercial newspaper containing Brother Sheen's advertisement. I sent for several copies of the HERALD. The result was that many converts were made and a branch was organized in October, 1860."

A. W. Head says: "I have taken the HERALD since the first issue and I want to continue it as long as I stay in this lump of clay."

Thomas Hougas says: "I was a subscriber from the first issue. I have the first twenty volumes bound."

John Molyneaux says: "Have been a reader and subscriber from the first, watching your growth from a small monthly to a vigorous weekly, with pride and pleasure."

In the editorial, "We thank thee, O God, for a Prophet," SAINTS' HERALD, page 26, closing sentence of first paragraph, the word peon should be pean.

Some party has sent us a dollar bill to apply, as shown by the accompanying expiration notice, on his subscription for Autumn Leaves, but with nothing to show his name or address. Will the party send us his name at once, that we may give him credit on his subscription?

Tenderly Lead Thou Me On.

Tenderly, tenderly, lead Thou me on,
On o'er the way where my Savior hath gone;
Bright on his pathway the sunlight hath shone,

Tenderly, tenderly, lead Thou me on.
Close to his hand I so tremblingly clung,
Faint were the songs I so doubtingly sung,
Brokenly falling from faltering tongue,
Tenderly, tenderly, lead Thou me on.

Trustingly, trustingly, forward I go,
Waiting instruction the pathway to know;
Watching the promise that beams from the bow,

Tenderly, tenderly, leading me on.
Angels have trodden the thorn-planted way;
Guide thou me, Lord, that I go not astray;
Strengthen me, Lord, that like them I may stay,
Tenderly, tenderly, led by thee on.

Faithfully, faithfully, holding thy hand,
On the rough, slipp'ry heights safely I stand;
Looking away to the heavenly strand,

Tenderly, tenderly, leads he me on.
Now has my weak heart grown trustingly strong,
Ways have grown short that seemed once to be long,
Gladly I join in the triumphant song,
Tenderly, tenderly leading me on.

THE AMBOY CONFERENCE, APRIL 6, 1860.

REMINISCENCES BY PATRIARCH E. C. BRIGGS.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—At the Amboy conference, Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, the church was assembled in a prayerful and expectant mood. For years they had looked forward to the coming of "Young Joseph" to take his father's place, in harmony with their many cherished prophecies. The appointed time had arrived. The conference was organized with Elders Zenos H. Gurley, sr., and William Marks as presidents, A. G. Jackson and Isaac Sheen clerks. At the afternoon session Joseph Smith was introduced to the conference and delivered his memorable address outlining his plans and position. Deep emotion swayed the audience during this address and many wept with joy. Following his address he was accepted by the church as its president, and as a prophet, seer, and revelator. He was then ordained as president of the high priesthood of the church. At the same session his mother, the "elect lady," was received in fellowship by unanimous vote. Elder E. C. Briggs is now the only living member of the ministry who was present at the Amboy Conference and witnessed the ordination of President Joseph Smith. Because of that fact and the important part that Elder Briggs took in the stirring events of those early days his article will be read with interest.]

W. W. BLAIR AND JOSEPH SMITH.

This picture of President Joseph Smith and Elder W. W. Blair was taken at the Amboy conference. It has never before been published. We are indebted to Sr. W. W. Blair for the use of the photograph.

the faith as foreseen by the ancient apostles.

Jeremiah said: "Thus saith the Lord, Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord: for he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited."—Jeremiah 17: 5, 6.

Isaiah says: "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him."—Isaiah 59: 19.

These quotations show the condition of the church in 1851, November 18, when the Lord again raised up his standard against all false doctrine.

Conference was called and convened June 12 and 13, 1852, at Beloit, and I am the only living witness of that historic event. Resolutions were passed calling all Saints once more to renew their energies in the blessed gospel work for in fulfillment of the promises of God the blessings of the choice seer should be realized in his posterity.

At that time many aspirants to leadership had arisen, and distraction, doubt, and fear filled the minds of the Saints to a more or less extent, because of the false shepherds who like wolves were destroying the flock.

But now, thank God, soon came the conference of April 6, 1860; when was witnessed the coming of the rightfully appointed heir to the presidency of the high priesthood, who was ordained in harmony with the law of God which says, "Every president of the high priesthood, . . . is to be ordained by the direction of a high council, or General Conference" (Doctrine and Covenants 17:17). Thus following the precedent established by his father who was ordained at Amherst, Ohio, January 25, 1832.

Humbly and without arrogance he said, "I do not wish to assume the position except by the ordinances of the church." Solemnity characterized the entire audience. The Saints were all happy, knowing indeed that the Holy Spirit attested his divine call, as he said under the Spirit of inspiration, "I come here in obedience to a power not my own. . . . I pledge myself to promulgate no doctrine that shall not be approved by you or the code of good morals."

This man of God knew at that time that the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints had declared its belief in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants as the rule of their faith. What could he do more than declare his allegiance to the law of God founded in his word, to be loyal to God and his people?

Up to this time, since the conference of 1852, the Saints had experienced many trials of their faith. They were thoroughly established in the principles of the gospel; but not a word came from the young man, the son of the chosen seer, that he was even interested in that gospel.

All they had was the law of God on the matter and their own revelations. To illustrate, I once heard Bro. Samuel Gurley prophesy in 1856, "Verily, thus saith the Holy Ghost, I will soon call my servant Joseph to succeed his father in the presidency of the church." His face was lighted up in the joy of the Holy Spirit. After sitting down he abruptly took his hat and left the audience, and was gone a half hour or more. When he returned his countenance was changed and he looked distressed and crestfallen.

The next day I met him and he said, "We had a good meeting yesterday. I believe Joseph Smith will come to the church, don't you? Do you know why I went out doors yesterday, during the meeting? Well, I was so certain Joseph was coming while I was speaking that I took my hat and went out to meet him. Oh, if I ever doubt his coming again I ought to be damned."

At another conference, at Amboy, June 10 to 14, 1859, Sr. Helen Pomeroy, while speaking, under the Spirit of prophecy, turned to Brother Marks, who united with the Reorganization at that time, and said, "Thus saith the Lord, O thou man of God, in times past thou hast sat in council with my servant Joseph the Seer, and the time is near when thou shalt sit in council with his son. When I called my servant Joseph he was a lone tree; but when I call his son he shall be as one of a mighty forest."

Those prophecies serve to show how the Lord revealed to us many times the coming of the successor to the presidency of the church. And yet while I write these lines I can see how little many of the Saints can realize what we had to contend with. It seemed often that immediately after such blessed manifestations Satan, the enemy of our souls, would sow his tares among the wheat and doubts would arise in the minds of many. They were not tempted on the principles of the gospel, but only on that one important fact.

But Joseph has now come. Our joy is full! The law is honored in that matter, to our intense satisfaction; and we wonder why all could not see that all the leaders of the many factions were violating the law of God, not only in teaching doctrines of men, but in regard to assuming the presidency without a shadow of appointment according to the law or a semblance of ordination.

I do not want the children of the church to read this Jubilee number without some leading thoughts concerning what it cost in trial as well as what it meant in joy to the church at that time. I am now the only elder left who witnessed the joys of the Amboy Conference, excepting President Joseph Smith; and I know of only three sisters now living who attended that conference; Srs. Elizabeth Blair, Helen Pomeroy, (of Red Oak, Iowa,) and my wife, Emma Briggs. They have always enjoyed reading the HERALD now for a half a century. And I assure you never in my life was I more interested in the welfare of the church than now.

In order that I may impress my readers with the glorious fulfillment of prophecy at the Amboy Conference, I will turn to my memoirs as published in the HERALD, July 1, 1903:

Friday, March 30. It is beautiful weather and we [Elder Calvin Beebe and myself] are feeling nicely after a good night's rest. Galesburg is a beautiful inland city.

At ten o'clock in the forenoon we again are on the cars of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad for Mendota, eighty miles from Galesburg, and then changed cars to the Illinois Central, eighteen miles to Amboy, arriving at our destination at three o'clock in the afternoon, and walked one mile and a half to Bro. Royal Stone's.

Here we met Bro. W. W. Blair and wife, and after usual greetings of fraternal expressions of kindness he said, "Did you come by way of Nauvoo?" I replied in the negative. He then said, "Joseph is to be with us at conference, or at least he said he would; but as all things human are uncertain we will not say anything about it to make talk in the world, until he comes."

He then informed me that Elder William Marks, of Shabbona Grove, had received a letter from Joseph in which he said he had determined to take his father's place at the head of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and desired Brother Marks and such others as he might select would call on him immediately at Nauvoo in order that he might obtain their counsel on church matters.

Agreeably to his request, Elder Marks, Israel L. Rogers, and W. W. Blair visited him on the 20th and 21st of March, and after this interview, Joseph informed the brethren that he would be at the General Conference at Amboy, on the 6th of April. . . .

Sunday, April 1, 1860, the Saints observed in fasting and prayer to our heavenly Father for his special blessings to attend our General Conference. Social service at Brother Stone's residence and in the evening at the same place Elder Blair spoke a short time on the principles of the gospel, and the meeting turned into a general social service. All are in good spirits; weather is beautiful and roads are good.

Tuesday, April 3, Elder Samuel Powers of the Twelve, Elders John Gaylord and William Aldredge of [Burlington] Wisconsin, George Morey [of Pleasanton, Iowa,] and Oliver Dunham [of Burlington, Iowa,] have arrived in good health and spirits.

Wednesday, April 4. Quite a number of the brethren [from the States of Michigan, Ohio, Calvin Beebe from western Iowa, and Andrew Jackson, a delegate from Gallands Grove, are here] and meeting was held in the Cadwell Schoolhouse, Elders Z. H. Gurley [of the Twelve] and William Marks presiding. General council, nominating of quite a number of the elders for officers in the several quorums of the church and general preparatory work and business for the conference.

The elders are in good spirits and hope, gladdened by the news that the expected Joseph will be soon with us. But few of them had learned that he had said he would attend the conference or of the visit of the brethren to see him.

Amboy, Lee County, Illinois, April 5, 1860. I accompanied several of the brethren who were anticipating friends to arrive on the next train which is now due. While we were waiting at the depot Bro. Joseph Smith came up the street to meet us. I happened to be the only one who knew him. I soon introduced him to the Saints, and he informed me that he came upon the night train before, that his mother was with him, and was at her sister's, Mrs. Wasson's, who was an old resident of the place. I then invited him to attend our social prayer meeting to be held at Brother Stone's this evening. He replied, "I would like to attend, but also would like to have my mother go if I had any conveyance so she could." I informed him I would see that he was provided with conveyance for himself and mother. This evening Brother Stone's son, Lardner, took his open double-seated spring carriage and we went after them. They were cheerful, unassuming, and social in conversation, yet reserved in manner, casually referred to the stormy time crossing the river on their way [from Nauvoo to Montrose], but made no expression in relation to the church.

Just as we reached the door of Brother Stone's residence (the house is a very neat one-story and a half cottage in L form), the congregation knelt in prayer, the parlor was closely seated and packed, but the front room had no seats and the audience was standing, and two alcoves or bedrooms, veiled in front by curtains which were drawn to one side, were where hats and caps had been placed.

Brother Joseph and his mother sat on the edge of one of the beds while Elder Gurley offered the invocation to our heavenly Father for his blessing, and as the audience rose to their feet, a hymn was sung, and just as the closing lines of praise were sung, the Holy Spirit said to me, "Introduce Brother Joseph as the son of the Prophet Joseph, and Sister Emma as the wife of the deceased." I instantly said to Joseph, "Allow me to introduce you to this audience," and took him by the hand and led him to the door of the sitting room and introduced him in the form of words as above commanded of God, and in the same manner introduced Sister Emma.

Our hope as based upon the prophecy is now being realized. A joyous influence of the Holy Spirit solemnized every heart in divine presence, and Elder Gurley said, "Welcome, welcome." Brother Joseph said, "I am pleased to meet with you, and in coming I propose to say to-morrow to you, if the same Spirit that prompts my coming prompts my reception, I am with you." He did say other words but I do not remember them so I can repeat them. I do not think Sister Emma made any response to the glad voice of Elder Gurley to her, "Welcome, welcome, to the elect lady."

I am truly glad to record the above events, as they will ever serve as a link in the history of the great latter-day work, and they are true, as God can not lie.

The meeting was a spiritual feast. Many of the Saints spoke and rejoiced in the Holy Ghost. Several spoke in the spirit of prophecy, which must have been very comforting to Joseph and Sister Emma, and all the Saints were lit up with great hope, comfort, and peace of the Holy Ghost.

As the hour of service advanced I was impressed to offer prayer and thanksgiving to our heavenly Father and was led in supplication to ask almighty God to bless the church in its effort to gather into his sheepfold the honest in heart everywhere in all the earth, and that Israel might be gathered from its long dispersion and that Joseph, the son of the Martyr, may be kept from the besetting sin of the ancient kings and prophets of Israel. I had the assurance by the Holy Spirit that my prayer would be answered and that Joseph would never be led into the gross crime of polygamy.

The meeting was a happy one, long to be remembered, and will be handed down in church history as an epoch never to be forgotten.

As it was getting late, Joseph said to me, "I wish you would excuse us and allow us to return." As we took them back to Mrs. Wasson's they expressed themselves pleased with the spirit of the meeting and appreciative of the Saints, but they did not shake hands with any of them, as we retired before the close of the services.

I have been quite particular in the record of events as I believe it will be of interest to the rising generation that will follow us; also because it is a fulfillment of prophecy that I would come to the church with the Prophet Joseph. Before I took my mission in 1856 it was revealed to me that I should not return to Zarahemla, Wisconsin, until Joseph would be called to take his father's place and that I was directed in western Iowa to attend this conference, and means would be supplied to bear my expenses, all shows unmistakable evidence that a divine power had been guiding in all these matters.

It was not a studied plan of mine to even meet Joseph at Amboy, but it seemed to come about as a natural happening so far as I was concerned. But now as it has come about, as current events in history, I can see how an overruling Providence has been in it all.

With much love for the Jubilee TRUE LATTER DAY SAINTS' HERALD and to all the Saints in every land, I feel to bid you a happy New Year, knowing that great and startling events in the providence of our heavenly Father are near us as a church, and in the world great distress and woe.

ISAAC SHEEN, FIRST EDITOR OF THE "HERALD."

A BRIEF BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH WRITTEN BY HIS SON, JOHN KIRK SHEEN.

The family record of Isaac Sheen begins in the reign of George the Second when the son of the old Pretender descended like an avalanche into England. At this time lived John and Robert Sheen. John espoused the cause of the Pretender and with the battle of Colloden his estate in Northamptonshire and further record of him were lost. Robert, the younger brother, was the great-grandfather of Isaac. Thomas, son of Robert, married Elizabeth Warren, and William, their son, married Jane Kirk. To the latter couple were born Isaac, Frederick, Charles, James, Amy, and Martha.

Isaac received only six months' schooling, yet it was the boast of the compositors in the Herald Office in Plano, Illinois, in 1864, that they never knew him to misspell a word, and his penmanship reminds me of that plain type known to printers as "Scotch-face." He was born at Littlethorpe, Leicestershire, England, December 22, 1810; and January, 1910, marks the semicentennial of the HERALD and also the beginning of the centennial year of its first editor.

In 1830 he sailed for and arrived in America. In Chester County, Pennsylvania, he worked among Quakers at his trade as a stocking weaver and through them imbibed the doctrine that "all men are created free and equal," and going down into "My Maryland" he preached that doctrine to a darkey and bade him if he would be free to "hike" in the direction of the North Star. The darkey "hiked" while his benefactor also "hiked" to save himself.

While in Philadelphia he carried newspapers; invented a shorthand system and sold it to the Harpers of New York City for one hundred dollars, and learned the daguerreotype art. One day in 1840 Isaac was attracted by a crowd entering a hallway, and following along he found himself in a Saints' meeting,—he had come to his destiny, was converted, baptized, and confirmed by Erastus Snow.

With Almon W. Babbitt he went to Kirtland in 1841, where he was ordained an elder by Elder Zebedee Coltrin and married a sister of Babbitt, who performed the marriage ceremony in a house formerly owned by Joseph Smith, jr. In 1842 he walked from Kirtland to Nauvoo, and the following year settled with his family at Macedonia, near by, and for a time taught school.

When the excitement raged in Nauvoo and vicinity Isaac stood in line with the Nauvoo Legion awaiting the call of the bugle to charge the Philistines, but the call never came and this ended his military career.

Joseph and Hyrum dead and the Twelve Apostles sitting upon the throne, the exodus came and Isaac Sheen said, "Brigham, go thy way and I will go mine." Placing his wife, daughter, and baby boy in Almon Babbitt's carriage, in February, 1846, he crossed the frozen Mississippi and headed for Booneville, Missouri. Leaving his family here with relatives he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and engaged again in newspaper carrying and shortly was enabled to send for his family and located them in Covington, Kentucky, in 1847.

Here he discovered the lineal priesthood doctrine and made a synopsis along that line from the Book of Mormon, and that synopsis is now before me. He wrote to William Smith along that line and William and himself got together, first by letter, then personally. Isaac published a small paper for several months while William preached in Lee County, Illinois, and Cincinnati. Lyman Wight was also in sympathy with them. A conference was held in Covington in June, 1847, and although I was only about four and one half years of age I have a distinct memory of the hall and gathering and it was there resolved that it was "young Joseph's right by lineage," etc., and that William should stand in his stead until Joseph should come of age. (See Aaronic and Melchisedeck Herald, now in or should be in Schroeder's collection, in University of Wisconsin.)

In 1850 Isaac Sheen broke away from William Smith. W. W. Blair was with a branch of William's organization in Lee County, Illinois, but he cut loose in 1852. In 1857 Zenos H. Gurley and Jason W. Briggs were with the Strangites. But Zenos began to receive divine direction and Jason received a revelation November 18, 1851. The Covington doctrine of lineal rights was indorsed by the Newark Branch, June 13, 1852, (see HERALD, No. 2, page 51,) three years after the Covington conference had declared the doctrine and Isaac had set it forth in his paper.

Ebenezer Robinson and Isaac were united on lineal priesthood in 1856, for I heard them converse on the subject in Cincinnati. Adna C. Halderman informed father in Cincinnati in 1859 that there were people in Illinois who believed as he did, and they would hold a conference near Sandwich, Illinois, [at the home of I. L. Rogers, October 6 to 10]. He attended that conference and was appointed to edit a paper; and Zenos H. Gurley, William Marks, and W. W. Blair were made the Publishing Committee.

He came to Cincinnati and reported through the Commercial a "new organization" and issued the HERALD, No. 1, January, 1860, and continued as its editor until the April conference of 1865. He died April 3, 1874, and was buried on Easter Sunday.

THE PRESENT OUTLOOK FOR CHURCH WORK.

BY R. S. SALYARDS, CHURCH SECRETARY.

The writer believes the outlook for the church work to be good, the general conditions favorable to its progress.

The work is the Lord's—that fact alone is sufficient guaranty of its success. He has declared it to be his purpose to extend and establish it never more to be thrown down; he has said that it shall "increase the more opposed"; that it shall triumph until finally Zion shall be built up and command the attention and respect of the nations universally.

There is much of evil in the world, there are many opposing forces to be prevailed against, many discouraging conditions to be overcome; but we should believe and know that "all things work together for good" to the accomplishment of God's designs, no matter how slow, apparently, seems the progress being made. There are periods of preparation and degrees of progress, some seemingly slow, others quite rapid, in the development of any great movement, religious, social, political, etc. The church is not exempt from the philosophical laws of growth and decay.

The Lord ordained the constitution and government of the United States, but it required time and conditions to complete the establishment and growth of the new nation—the land and government of liberty for all men; and the end is not yet. When the people began their career in the New World, it required many years of political tutelage under the colonial system before they were prepared for the period of "independence." This established, the system of government under the Articles of Confederation was followed by the constitutional period and the growth under the new order. European politics and general conditions also affected the new Government.

Slavery was recognized under the Government, notwithstanding the efforts of the fathers to eliminate it, until finally it brought the nation to the furnace heat of civil strife. That crisis passed, new questions of social and political economy continually appear in the evolution of the body politic.

The church has passed through similar experiences and will continue to meet various trying conditions, through the operation of spiritual and social forces within and without, until the people of God are prepared by trial of their faith—by discipline and education of all their powers—to abide in the truth, "to be not moved," and to "bring forth fruit meet for the Father's kingdom." We have passed through the early period of the church's development, have survived the "flood" of iniquity brought in by the enemy, and now are approaching a period of greater activity and development, made possible through experience and preparation under the grace of God, with the greater endowment of the Holy Spirit to follow. When the church was organized in 1830, the fact of latter-day inspiration, the raising up of a prophet, the organization of the church with apostles, prophets, with the great events to follow in due time, were too much, with the possibilities to be reached, for the people of that generation, who had just emerged from sectarianism. The people were dazed and expected too much in their time, without realizing the changes necessary to be wrought in them and in the world about them. They could have reached greater results, but, like Israel of old, it required several generations to qualify the people to enter in and occupy the promised land. This brief paper permits but mere passing mention of these points or features. But now, the Reorganization, profiting by the experiences of the past, with clearer view and with freer opportunities, is in position to build more securely, to make itself heir of the dearly purchased lessons of the past, with the advantages of the present age.

When the church was organized the religious, political, and social conditions of the world were largely quiescent—fixed, conservative, established. The declarations of latter-day revelation concerning the great changes to be wrought and the "commotion" to follow were not, from a human point of view, so probable as they appear to-day. Since that time a wonderful transformation has taken place; and now, the religious, social, and political problems stated in the revelations, to be brought to the front in connection with the purposes of God, are in the very air. Something has been permeating and leavening the forces of human life internationally, until we discern more clearly the self-evident and farseeing inspiration which indited the revelations concerning the signs of the times, the building up of the kingdom of God, with the numerous changes and great events to occur among the nations. God has been at work, in the world and in the church, reconciling the world unto himself in many things, also punishing its disobedience. Other forces have also been at work with a view to defeat or retard the progress of truth and liberty. But the trend is upward, toward the light. What God hath wrought in verification of his word inspires faith that all declarations will be verified, all his purposes brought to completion. "There is a power in history that makes for righteousness." We believe we have reasons for a hopeful view of the outlook.

It is true—notably true, that there is an appalling dearth of spirituality; that many in the church and in the world are indifferent to the high considerations of spiritual things. But these conditions are abnormal and may be overcome to a large extent; they may retard to a degree, but can not prevent final success. It is an age of great material development; the negative condition of spiritual inactivity is the result; the pendulum has swung too far in one direction. This condition, and the more aggressive evils of the world, are, after all, but manifestations of temporary obstacles which will be prevailed against, more and more with the passing of time. Truth is permanent, constructive. It abides and endures and is always strong; it lives and conquers for evermore. It will prevail and continue to prevail as an eternal, creative force, until it triumphs over all opposition. Evil, in all its manifestations, mingled with the weaknesses and peculiarities of imperfect humanity, is but temporary. It must finally succumb to the steadily constructing forces of truth. Behind or within it is

God, the embodiment of truth, with all the powers at his command. "Whomsoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder."

The gospel is "sent forth" "for obedience to the faith among all nations"; it is "the power of God unto salvation" for "all the world." We should be optimistic, cheerful, sane in our point of view, knowing from repeated declarations of the word and manifestations of the Spirit that God has not changed concerning his purpose. Speaking to the Reorganization in its early day the Lord said: "This remnant shall put on strength." Referring to wrong conditions then existing among the factions he said, "Who is he that shall turn me from my purpose?" The Lord has been with the Reorganized Church, overruling its development in the midst of its severe and trying ordeals. From its beginning it has been progressive, refusing to be governed by the old leaven and tradition of the factions. Notwithstanding the monumental evils of the great apostasy of the West, it has continued to grow and spread until, under God, it has made the name and the faith of the church honorable. It has learned much from the past and is still disposed to learn in the present, receiving, while doing its work, the further preparation necessary to its success.

The early church seemingly indulged the hope of a speedy consummation of the work. It had to "be chastened," to "learn obedience," to "have experience." All these vicissitudes were essential to prepare the church for its great mission. Any great mission requires extended experience, consecration of personnel, time, and development. The Reorganized Church has been obliged to pass through a variety of experiences. Its inner developments, its contact with the world abroad, have had for it great educational and disciplinary value. We have learned breadth, liberality, toleration, independence; that while not of the world, we are yet part of it; that while we have our distinctive work to do as the kingdom of God, God is in all his world, working in various channels, upon different planes, through a great variety of instrumentalities, leavening the world and the church, with a view to bringing to pass his strange act—to pour out his Spirit of truth upon all flesh; to institute the reign of law, equity, international justice, and brotherhood in Christ. We take the optimistic, the hopeful and trustful view, that all things work together for good; that God is at the helm, directing the course of all events to that great consummation toward which the whole creation moves.

Great evils exist; appalling wickedness, monumental selfishness, and sin in its varied phases prevail. This untoward condition is to be duly recognized, its hindering, corrupting powers to be measured and wisely contended against; but as stated, it is not permanent. It is a perversion which will in due time be healed and overcome. We believe God will conserve all the good in men and their institutions; that while there will be "great destructions among the wicked," there will also be great recognition of and good to those who in every nation are seeking God and working righteousness. Their name is legion, and God recognizes, loves, and will preserve them. Many of them in due time will come to the church of God. They are moved in their course of action by the inspiration that is moving the church, laboring not because of themselves, but because impelled by a divine influence which appeals to their love of justice. It is the work of the church to give them evidence of its divine mission, that it may call them to her light and enlist them in her service.

There is always more of good than of evil, more to rejoice in than to mourn over. Many who read of and witness the "evil" and "calamity" and "fearful sights," lose sight of the permanent, constructive, optimistic side of the picture. We should be hopeful, "cheerful in our warfare, that we may be joyous in our triumph." We should believe that truth does now triumph; hope should have its place in our effectual service. The evil and calamity are destined to give way to the day of better things. While we deplore them, we are bidden to rejoice in the near approach of a better order. Evil defeats itself. Immediately upon its appearance, opposite and contending forces set themselves in motion to annul and destroy the wrong. Only those who march in harmony with the movements of the stars can ever finally succeed and gain the real victory. Evil men are waxing worse and worse; but good men and women and organizations for good are everywhere growing stronger and stronger, cooperating with God and man. Manifestations of wrong conditions emphasize and make clear the necessity for right in all lines of life. There is, after all, a great majority among all mankind who love the truth and who will be saved because of their integrity. Much of wrong condition is the result of present environment; if the race were really taught, as they should be taught, to see the actual situation, there would be more of right and less of wrong. It is our work to believe and to go forward with confidence in teaching "all nations" the gospel of power to save. If we teach it as it ought to be taught, giving an exposition of the truth in theory and in practice, the light of Zion will be acknowledged more and more. Zion is to become very great and "very glorious" because of her rightness. It is written that, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined."

Never before has there been such manifestation of intelligence, good will, charity, such desire for light and progress, as now. Political, social, religious evolution is at work preparing the way for the new order under Christ. What men are studying and striving for is the result of that light which has come into the world in this dispensation of truth. "Better a cycle in Europe than a century in Cathay"; better ten years of life in the progressing, throbbing, living present, than treble the time in a stagnant past. This is, after all, the greatest age the world has ever seen. Never was there a greater demand for, never a better time to extend, our work. Narrow religious and social prejudices are passing away, too small for the prevailing spirit of the age. "Grace and favor" promised the church is being realized. What we need first, primarily, is complete consecration of ourselves, as the people of God. If we are consecrated in spirit, our all will in due time be brought under the spirit of the law. Love will then be the ruling principle, and without love—genuine, outflowing, heartfelt love, we can never be qualified for the work, even though we have the eloquence of angels and give our bodies to be burned. Love—"the love of the Father"—must be the indwelling force that shall work this great miracle of change. Love works miracles and melts away obstacles like dew before the sun. Force seeks to compel, but not convert the will; love leads, teaches, frees, and evolves the entire being. With the consecration of self throughout the body we shall be able to realize a "great endowment" of power and thus "compel" men and women "to come in" to the "great supper." The Lord is ready and will cause the faithful to be ready for this advance movement in due time, and at no distant day. His army is to become "very great" before that work is to be accomplished.

It requires time for a people to reach the condition of development necessary for so great a work. We have been preparing for it. Our young people, thousands of them, have been receiving a tutelage in the church, also by means of the Sunday school work, the Religio, and in the home. The Daughters of Zion have taken up and continued a great work of preparation among the mothers and daughters in Israel, involving the important features and interests of the family life and home circle, a department of important work that is yet in its infancy, and destined to widen its field of labor.

The church, including the several auxiliary organizations, is developing an intelligent spirituality based upon knowledge and experience. The college is furnishing an opportunity to quite a number of our young people to obtain an education. The Saints' Homes supply many otherwise homeless aged with a home among the people of the Lord. The Sanitarium, under the direction of the Physician to the church and other officers, provides spiritual, helpful, sanitary conditions for the afflicted, and we trust that in due time, under those in charge, it will disseminate knowledge concerning health, hygiene, etc., and also be a means of qualifying those who as physicians and trained nurses will do much good in ministering to and teaching the people. In all these necessary and legitimate lines of endeavor the church is entitled to the enlightenment and grace of the Holy Spirit. If spirituality is developed and maintained by the people of God, in all their callings, as all are under obligation to seek God, "doing all things by much prayer and faith," as commanded in the law, a power and grace will attend all those who labor in the various departments that will cause the spiritual life of the body to be recognized by the people among whom we labor; hence there will be knowledge, light, wisdom, purity, and other attendant fruits of the Spirit of truth, which are the greatest and most attracting forces in the world. We have much material that is largely quiescent, unawakened, undeveloped. The striking force and power of the church will be equivalent to its spiritual development, to its "preparedness." No church movement has ever grown without inner growth and missionary effort; but the missionary influence abroad is measured by its inner power to reach out and influence the world.

What the world has of good in letters, arts, science, etc., we may have and use, and doubtless may extend or further develop. The light of the world diffused among men is ours to accept and profit by. The progressive spirit of the age, moving in proper lines, has affected and will continue to leaven the church.

But—and it should be emphasized and remembered always and be the guiding star of our endeavors in all things—spirituality, intelligent spiritual discernment, based upon actual knowledge of God and maintained communion with him—"a closer walk with God," a constant realizing and inner consciousness of the divine presence in the heart, is the vital necessity of the hour and the key to our success. This will insure what the outlook promises. "No one is wise enough after the flesh"; no one has ever been sufficient in himself or by the wisdom of the world alone; nor can he be. The Lord has summed up the situation in this declaration: "Zion can not be built up unless it is by the principles of the celestial kingdom, otherwise I can not receive her unto myself; and my people must needs be chastened until they learn obedience, if it must needs be, by the things which they suffer." It is consecration of self, of heart, that the church needs. If we can attain unto it—ministry and laity—to the extent that God will be sought for and the mind and the endowment of his Spirit be with his servants and people, the outlook is sure and steadfast for success. This we understand the Lord is seeking to prepare his people for.

What we have realized of the import of the Spirit, especially during the opening year, has led us to this hopeful, optimistic view of the outlook. Concerning it the Lord has said to the church: "So be ye encouraged and press on to the consummation designed of God for his people—unity, honor, sanctification, and glory. Amen."

FIFTY YEARS OF CHURCH GROWTH.

BY H. A. STEBBINS, FOR THIRTY-TWO YEARS GENERAL CHURCH RECORDER.

ELDER H. A. STEBBINS.
Church Recorder, 1874-1906.

The work of reorganizing the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints had its beginning in the coming together of a little band of patriots in special conference on June 12 and 13, 1852. These men were weary and heartsick over the sad results and experiences of following self-appointed leaders. Also in answer to fasting and prayer for instruction from on high, some of these men had received revelations which they were satisfied were from the Lord, and by these they were assured that he would shortly raise up a man of his own choice to again take charge of his church on earth.

The meeting place of these earnest seekers for light and divine guidance, was a small grove situated in Newark Township, Rock County, Wisconsin, about six miles northwest of Beloit. The writer of this well remembers as a young boy visiting the grove soon after the conference, and in mental vision he can still see the room cut out among the saplings where those men met. (However, his immediate family was not included with any Latter Day Saints.) At that place those brethren from various factions affirmed and promulgated their views as expressed in a series of eight resolutions, especially as to the sacred books, and as to church government, and God's authority to man.

Also appeared their hope of a reorganization, and their trust in the divine purpose to so accomplish by bringing forth a son of Joseph Smith as the legal and proper one to preside over the church, and to help direct its affairs. There appears to have been entire unanimity in this idea as well as in the others.

In April of the following year, 1853, an organization was effected, and from that time proselytes increased, particularly in southern Wisconsin and northern Illinois. However, the converts were only one or two members in a place, or a family or so, and but one branch was immediately organized, that called the Yellowstone or Zarahemla Branch, in Lafayette County, Wisconsin. On its record were enrolled by Samuel Blair, the first General Recorder, the names and birth and baptismal dates of nearly all adherents living in Wisconsin. Also at Zarahemla was held the October conference of 1852, and the April and October sessions of 1853, 1854, 1855, 1856, 1857, and 1858. That branch included the family names of the Gurleys, Deams, Briggses, Wildermuths, Clines, Newkirks, Newberrys, Raseys, Harts-horns, Butterfields, Godfreys, Griffithses, Harlows, etc. And the writer of this has the last sheet of the record of that branch. It shows the last name entered is No. 137, no other names following it.

The conference of April, 1859, met with the Saints in Boone County, Illinois, and on April 9, a branch was organized there. Also during 1859 branches were organized at Amboy, Batavia, and Fox River in Illinois, and those named Little River, Franklin, Farm Creek, Boomer, Belvidere, Union Grove, and Gallands Grove in Iowa. All these and possibly one or two others were in existence in April, 1860, when Joseph, the son of Joseph, came in charge of the church. But there does not appear in the conference minutes between 1853 and 1860 any statistical report of the Church Recorder, nor any idea as to how many members they knew of or estimated as composing the body, counting those in branches and the scattering ones. And it is quite certain that Samuel Blair's successors in office, Z. H. Gurley and W. W. Blair, made no general record of names and items. I began branch and district record work in February, 1868, and from what I learned then I doubt if the eleven branches previously named here had such records themselves, probably only had lists of names and the items of when born and when baptized, even if all had that much.

But I find by Book A that in 1859-1860, nine of the eleven branches mentioned gave to the Church Recorder either a list of names or stated having a certain number each, and that the nine aggregated one hundred and seventy-three members, Batavia and Belvidere (Iowa) not giving either the number or the names. The Yellowstone (or Zarahemla) Branch had become disorganized before those years, by reason of removals, or because so many members lived too far away to meet there. The eleven branches probably aggregated about two hundred members in April, 1860, and with scattering ones likely there were four hundred members, or possibly nearly five hundred, at the time of the Amboy Conference, April, 1860, when Joseph came.

In 1860 and 1861 there were large accessions, and in those years thriving branches were organized at Mission, Sandwich, Marengo, Henderson Grove, Nauvoo, and Pittsfield, in Illinois; Montrose, String Prairie, Nashville, Glenwood, Nephi, Boyer, North Star, Council Bluffs, Raglan, Crescent City, and Little Sioux, Iowa; Galien, Michigan; Burlington, Wisconsin; Whitestown, Indiana; Syracuse, Ohio; Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; and Buckhorn, Canada. Perhaps a few others were organized but not reported until later, and I do not know which ones if any were. An excellent growth also continued through 1862 and onward.

The first attempt to estimate the numerical strength of the whole church was made in April, 1868, when Bro. M. H. Forscutt, as clerk of the conference, compiled the figures from branch and district reports then sent in. His list included seventy-one branches which counted up 2,385 members. But from my knowledge of the church at that time, I doubt if over two thirds of the branches reported then. Probably there were 3,600 and it may be 3,800 members in 1868. At least in the eight years since 1860 the church had grown about eight hundred per cent, or from 400 to 3,600 members.

In 1871 better success in his estimates was had by Brother Forscutt, then Church Secretary. He did not base his reports on the church records, to any great extent, nor did Brother Sheen, the Recorder from 1860 to 1874, make any statistical reports to the conferences. Brother Forscutt compiled his reports in part from the Church Record, and in part from district conference minutes in the HERALD, which told of the number that many branches reported as their membership. And branches not reported at all he simply computed as having so many members, hence the totals were very uncertain. Even the branch reports were very deficient, so that Brother Sheen could not make a complete record of names and items without a large correspondence. Yet from 1868 to 1874 the Books A and B show an advance in reporting and recording names and items of birth, baptism, ordination, and loss and gain more than they had previously.

In 1872 Brother Forscutt again made estimates along with the records, and counting out errors and duplicates, and the disorganized branches, there were then about two hundred and fifty branches and nearly 8,000 members. After that no more reports until 1876. And in the trouble about the records that followed the death of the Recorder in 1874, many branch reports could not be found and from that time on a large correspondence was necessary to find the deficiencies by sending full lists to be revised and corrected, and by obtaining complete copies of many branch books before reliable records could be had for a complete report. But after partial reports in 1876, 1877, 1878, and 1879, the Recorder, who was chosen in 1874, had so far succeeded by April, 1880, that he could report three hundred and seventy-five branches actually existing, and all but thirteen of them on the record, and all fairly correct in names and items, though lacking completeness. The footings showed a total of 12,827 membership, being a net gain of at least 4,800 in the nine years since 1871, and probably more, because the reports of 1871 and 1872 were largely by conjecture.

In the decade from 1880 to 1890 the church almost doubled in its membership, in the 1890 report only lacking 49 of being 24,000 to its credit. Again in the next decade, 1890 to 1900, it came well toward another doubling period, the 1900 report showing 43,824 membership, or nearly 20,000 net gain in the ten years. The largest increase in one year was 3,556 in 1897, and the smallest was 1,319 in 1899; but the average gain in that period was close to 2,000 per year over all losses, making a total of 43,824 membership.

The Recorder's report for April, 1909, gave 59,256 as the number then, and likely 1910 will show well toward 61,000. Looking at this goodly number we can well say that if there had been since 1860 an equal or parallel growth in righteousness, in devotion, in zeal, and in walking in the path of "pure and undefiled religion," all along since the 400 of 1860 grew to the 60,000 of 1910, there would have been no stopping at 60,000, but instead there would be now an almost unnumbered host to answer to roll call as true Latter Day Saints, and all the reproach because of past evil doers would long since have disappeared. But that is impossible until the great day of immortality comes, and in the millennium the children shall "grow up without sin unto salvation," as the Lord has promised. (Doctrine and Covenants 45: 10.)

As for our missionary work in foreign lands, we can not say that we have done as much abroad as we have at home. But the time to do that is before us, and the day will come in God's providence when men will preach the gospel to the nations in their own languages, by his power, as never before.

However, in January, 1863, Bro. Charles Derry sailed for England, the first foreign missionary from the Reorganized Church. In May, 1863, Brn. J. W. Briggs and Jeremiah Jeremiah also arrived in the British Isles, and in both England and Wales the three engaged in gospel work. In 1864, Brn. T. E. Jenkins, J. T. Phillips, and Thomas Revel went to those countries. In 1865, Bro. John W. Lewis went, and in 1866, Brn. George Hatt, Thomas Standeven, Joseph Boswell, and J. D. Jones arrived there, also Bro. G. M. Rush began in Scotland. In the same year Bro. J. W. Briggs again went to England, accompanied by Bro. Josiah Ells. In 1880 the Church Recorder's report showed over 600 members in the British Isles, besides many who had emigrated to America. And after many years of continued emigration there are over 1,500 names reported as members in England, Wales, and Scotland.

In 1873, mission work was begun in Switzerland by Brn. J. L. Bear and John Avondet, and they also labored to a small degree in Germany and Italy. Brother Bear went again in 1880, but the most of the converts came to America, few remaining in Europe. Other ministers have labored briefly since then, and now Brn. C. C. Joehnke and A. Kippe are doing a steady work in Germany, with prospects of an abiding membership.

The first missionaries to Denmark, Sweden, and Norway were Brn. Magnus Fyrando and H. N. Hansen, who went in 1875, and Bro. P. N. Brix, who joined them in 1876. The last named died there in 1886. The majority of those they baptized came soon to America. More now remain because of the continuance there of Missionaries Peter Muceus and J. H. Hansen. Recorder's report for 1907 shows 102 members in those countries.

The Society Islands work was begun in 1873, 1874 by Brn. Glauod Rodger and C. W. Wandell, and continued in 1884 by Bro. T. W. Smith, and by many others since then. Result in 1886 was 715 names on record. In 1890 the Recorder had 1,176, and in 1900 the net enrollment was 1,957 members. The 1909 report had 1,785 net membership.

In 1890 began the work in Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, by Brn. Albert Haws and G. J. Waller. In 1909 the Recorder had 179 names net.

Canada has been the most fruitful of all foreign fields. Bro. John Shippy was appointed in charge there early in the sixties, and Brn. J. H. Lake and G. E. Deuel went in 1866. Many laborers have done faithful work in Canada, and now over 5,000 members are on record there, besides many hundreds who have removed to the United States and the hundreds who have died in the forty-five years since the first baptisms by us.

FOUNDING OF LAMONI AND REMOVAL OF HERALD OFFICE TO THAT PLACE.

BY ELDER A. S. COCHRAN, WHO FOR FIFTEEN YEARS WAS SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION.

The removal of the Herald Office plant from Plano, Illinois, was an event of much importance to the church and its publishing interests, as well as to the new town. Prior to the fall of 1879 the terminus of the railroad was at Leon, the county seat of Decatur County, which is fifteen miles from Lamoni, so that in the summer and early fall of that year a crop of corn stood on the land where the depot and that portion of the town south of the main street now stands. The increase in the numerical strength of the church and the future presaged for it and the desire for the welfare of its members had led to the organization of what it known as the "First United Order of Enoch," an account of which will be found in HERALD for January 22, 1908, page 78.

The sweet singer of the church, Bro. David H. Smith, in one of his sweet, inspirational hymns, shows this feeling which was prevalent among the Saints. The opening verse is as follows:

"Give us room that we may dwell!
Zion's children cry aloud,
See their numbers how they swell,
How they gather like a cloud."

As stated in the article above referred to, said association at its first meeting held at Council Bluffs, Iowa, September 19, 1870, appointed a board of directors who were authorized to appoint a committee to seek a location where they could purchase land and to carry into effect the purposes of that organization. Said committee, consisting of Elijah

Banta, David Dancer, Israel L. Rogers, and Phineas Cadwell, visited various places in the States of Missouri, Nebraska, Kansas, and Iowa. Light was given them from time to time in their research and others not of their number received manifestations in regard to their labors, one of which I will insert as given by Bro. A. W. Moffet, as found in Autumn Leaves, volume 2, page 19, entitled, "Vision of Lamoni."

I write a dream or vision I once had, for I do not know whether I was asleep or awake. . . . I saw in the night, myself and three other men on a high rolling prairie. We had a team with us. One of us had a spade, and with it were spading in the ground. It seemed that a question was asked by some one (not of our number, for there was no one present but the four of us): "What are you doing?" The answer was, "We are preparing to lay the foundation for the redemption of Zion." . . . I often thought of the dream or vision, whichever it was, and wondered what it meant, until it passed from my mind. I thought no more about it until some time after the Committee on Location came here, and I took my team and a spade, and drove them over on the prairie in Fayette Township. We took the spade to try the depth and fertility of the soil; with what results has already been developed.

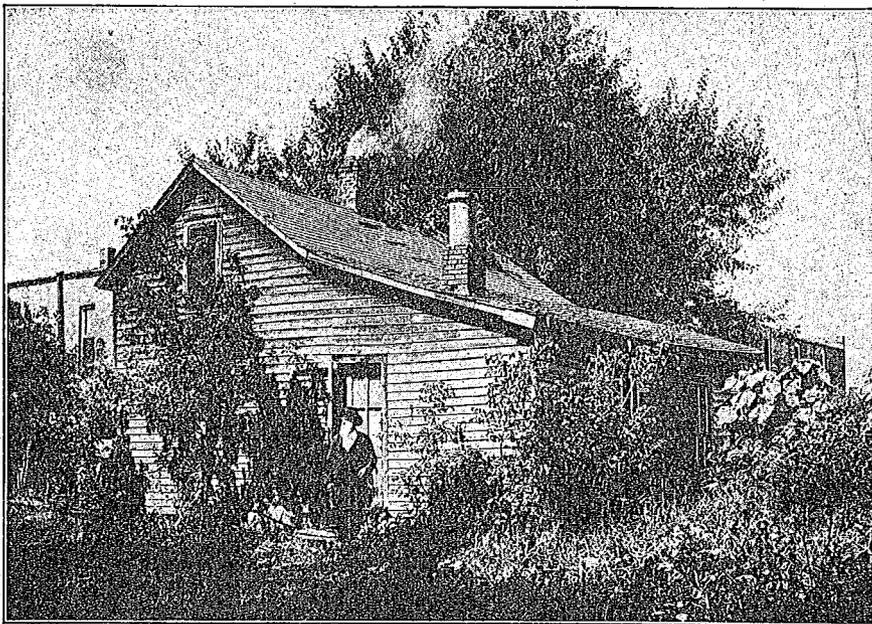

As stated in the article referred to above, over thirty-three hundred acres of land were purchased, the greater part in the township mentioned by Brother Moffet.

It is evident that the leading men of the church early in the seventies contemplated a removal from Plano, for Article 5 of the Articles of Incorporation of the Church, which were adopted September 14, 1872, provided that a committee on location of the business center of the church, consisting of the First Presidency, Bishopric, and Board of Publication, should constitute a Board of Removal.

The General Conference, on April 10, 1876, by resolution, requested this board to take active steps to remove the business center from Plano, Illinois. On May 11, 1876, that board held a meeting, consisting of Brn. Joseph Smith and W. W. Blair, of the Presidency, I. L. Rogers, Bishop, and David Dancer and H. A. Stebbins, his counselors, and John Scott, who with some of the others composed the Board of Publication. The unanimous opinion expressed at this meeting was, "That a re-location of the business headquarters of the church will be needful in the near future."

A committee of observation and inquiry was appointed, whose duty it should be to make inquiry respecting the facilities offered by certain localities, hereinafter named, and such other points as they may select, for the best interest of the church, and such as said business center may demand, including the centralizing of the chief offices; and annual assembling of the ministerial and business authorities and the membership of the church for conference and fellowship; the business of the Bishopric and the publishing department. Brn. W. W. Blair, Israel L. Rogers, and David Dancer were appointed said committee.

At a meeting of the Presidency, Bishopric, and Board of Publication held at Plano, Illinois, June 6, 1876, W. W. Blair, chairman of the committee of inquiry, read letters from various persons representing the various localities indicated as follows: Robert M. Elvin, Nebraska City, Nebraska; Phineas Cadwell, Logan, Iowa; Z. H. Gurley, George Adams, and W. Hudson, Sedgwick, Iowa; W. D. Morton, W. R. Sellon, and Sister Holstein, Burlington, Iowa; John Burlington, Saint Joseph, Missouri; James Calfall, Council Bluffs, Iowa; William T. Kyte, Saint Louis, Missouri; J. R. Badham and William Redfield, Shenandoah, Iowa; William Leeka, Plum Hollow, Iowa; Thomas W. Smith, Stewartville, Missouri; and Richard Lambert, of Hancock County, Illinois. After considering the above communications, the following was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the business center of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints be changed from Plano, Illinois, to the southwest corner of Decatur County, Iowa, or vicinity, as soon as it shall be practicable, and that all the leading officers of the church with the press and publishing department, be removed to said location when a suitable site is determined upon.

An executive committee, consisting of W. W. Blair, David Dancer, and John Scott, was appointed, whose

Quoting from editorial in the HERALD for October 15, 1881, we present the following:

This issue closes the stay of the HERALD in Plano, Kendall County, Illinois. It came here in 1863, and was kindly received by the leading citizens of the place. It began its career here with a list of three hundred subscribers, many of them free; and some of them taking several copies. It had a press and fixtures costing about two hundred and seventy-five dollars; and occupied one room about eighteen by twenty feet square. . . . It will reach Lamoni, Decatur County, Iowa, and begin a new departure (on the old way) with an eight-horse power engine, two cylinder power presses, and a jobber press, with type and other fixtures to match, and office two stories high, thirty by sixty-five feet in size (engine room attached), an editor, bookkeeper, superintendent, and five compositors.

The editor was President Joseph Smith, the bookkeeper Bro. Lawrence Conover, the superintendent Bro. John Scott, the compositors Brn. William H. Deam and William Crick, now of Independence, Missouri, and Sr. Carrie L. Smith, now wife of Bro. F. M. Weld, of Lamoni, Sr. Zadie V. Smith, first wife of Bro. R. S. Salyards, and Sr. M. Annie Scott, now wife of Daniel Anderson, postmaster of Lamoni. The brethren mentioned and their families, and Srs. Mary J. Cazaly, Janet Black, Julia Marks, Martha E. Kearney, and her son, Willis W. Kearney, made a very important addition to the population of the town then but two years old; as well as the Herald Office building adding materially to the improvement of the town. As commodious as the new building was at the outset, the additional growth made it necessary in the summer of 1892 to erect the addition to the building, the two floors of which, with the basement, made the same amount of floor space as the original building. The addition of a bookbindery to the plant necessitated the removal of the press department to the basement of the new part, and suitable offices for the Presidency, Bishop, and Church Recorder were located in the addition.

THE HERALD OFFICE.

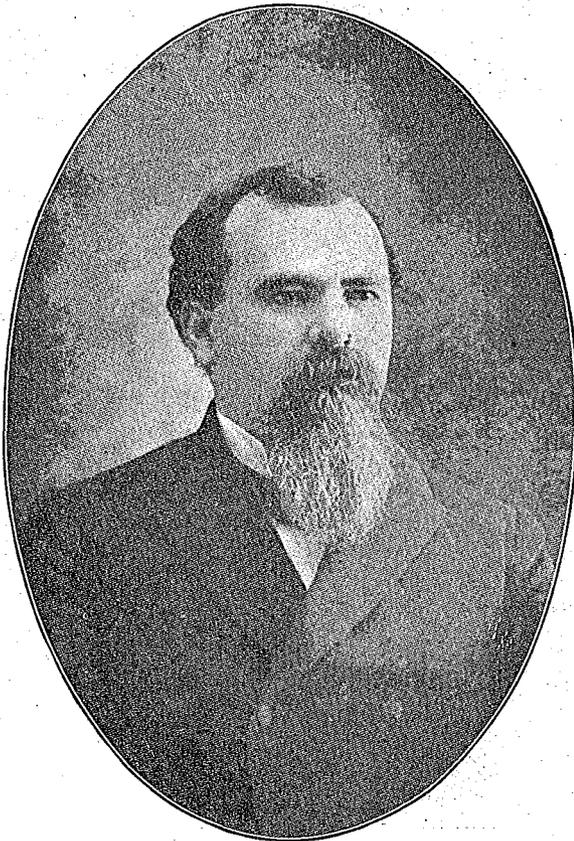

Erected at Lamoni in 1881. A wing containing rooms for the general church officers was added at a later date. President Smith, John Scott, William Crick, Asa Cochran, William Deam, and other old-time members of the office force are seen in the foreground.

duty was to solicit means, purchase lands, and locate a business center.

In the spring of 1873, a quarter section of land was purchased in New Buda Township from Mr. Isaac Swygart. This was afterwards sold to Bro. Thomas France, in the summer of 1879. The railroad was extended from Leon by the Leon, Mt. Ayr, and Southwestern Railroad Company, the town of Lamoni laid out, a survey for a line of railroad to Saint Joseph, Missouri, by the way of Eagleville, Loraine, and Bethany. The company afterward changed the survey, making the junction at what is now known as Togo, instead of Lamoni, laying out the towns of Andover, Blythedale, and Ridgeway, avoiding towns already established and getting much better ground for a roadbed than they would have had by the other proposed route, although the first route perhaps would have been much more convenient for Lamoni.

Not much was accomplished in the matter of the proposed re-location until the summer of 1881.

MY EARLIEST RECOLLECTION OF PRESIDENT
JOSEPH SMITH.

GOMER T. GRIFFITHS.

My father and mother, David and Martha Griffiths, became identified with the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in South Wales, during the year in which Joseph the Martyr was assassinated, 1844. They left Wales and eventually located in Syracuse, Ohio.

Soon after moving there Apostles W. W. Blair and James Blakeslee appeared and my parents united with the Reorganization in 1864 under the administration of these brethren, by whom also I was blessed at the same time.

My object in giving the above brief sketch is to show how I became interested in the work, as my early training and home environment instilled in me great confidence in the church and its officials. (It should be remembered that it is characteristic of the Welsh nation to reverence those in authority.)

At the close of the Civil War my parents moved to Saint David, Illinois, a small hamlet where there was quite a branch; in fact it was almost a Latter Day Saints' town. Soon after our arrival word was received that young Joseph, the prophet, was going to pay the branch a visit. This was about forty-three years ago, at which time I was about ten years of age.

I well remember what a sensation the news created; his proposed visit was the subject of conversation on the streets and in the homes of the Saints. I had great ideas as to the appearance of a prophet of God; to my boyish mind he was a being very different from others on this mundane sphere, and I clothed him with personal attributes and characteristics almost divine; so I considered myself very fortunate to have the privilege of looking upon the face of a prophet of God and to hear him speak.

The eventful day finally arrived. The church in which the Saints met seated only about a hundred persons. To be sure of getting a seat I was one of the first at the meeting house where I sat up in the front where I could get a good view of the prophet. At last the long expected personage appeared, in company with Jeremiah Jeremiah, president of the branch, and Edwin Stafford, all occupying seats on the old-fashioned half-moon platform.

Childhood impressions are vivid and lasting and I now see him distinctly in memory as I looked upon him then. Truth compels me to state that I was greatly disappointed with his appearance, as I had in mind all the time a being of abnormal physical appearance, while before me sat a seemingly very humble man, wearing ordinary clothes, with no adornment whatever, and having quiet and unassuming manners. He was slight in build, with black hair and whiskers—a decided contrast to our venerable President of to-day at the age of seventy-seven years. I was favorably impressed with his dark, piercing eyes which seemed to penetrate one's very soul, but at the same time his intense gaze was modified by a kindly, sympathetic expression, making his thin face not unattractive. He had a large amount of personal magnetism about him which drew even little children.

He impressed me as being only an ordinary speaker, not having had over six or seven years of pulpit experience at this time. Of late years I have sat listening to his wise counsel, able arguments, and marked ability as an interesting pulpiter, and I have compared him with the Joseph of forty-three years ago.

The comparison fills me with amazement at the wonderful change which God made in the man and in the preacher.

As I sat there, a ten-year-old boy, little did I think that I should be so closely associated with the speaker before me in carrying on the angel's message and in helping him build up the kingdom in the last days. The reverence and love instilled by my parents in my youthful mind have grown with larger acquaintance and more mature years.

After a lapse of thirteen years (in the meantime having been ordained an elder and placed under General Conference appointment) I again met him in the early fall of 1879, at the home of Elijah Banta, Lamoni, Iowa. At this time Lamoni was not much of a town, as there were only a few houses around the depot, a store run by Samuel Gurley, and, I think, a small church building.

I distinctly remember the kindly advice received from Brother Joseph during our sojourn there, which proved to be a source of great strength and encouragement to me. From here I went to Gallands Grove, Iowa, to attend the General Conference which was then held twice a year. This grove was large and beautiful and there seemed to be several hundred tents pitched on the grounds, which gave much the same appearance as one of our modern reunions.

On the afternoon of the day of my arrival President Smith announced that I would be the speaker at eleven o'clock on the following day and would be assisted by W. T. Bozarth.

This being my first introduction to General Conference, and having never met with an apostle before, I felt very much depressed at the thought of having to face such a large audience and to preach before so many of the high dignitaries of the church. Brother Bozarth and I slept together that night, or rather we went to bed together, but the spirit of deep sleep wasn't troubling me, but the thought of having to preach the next day was! Finally I thought I had a brilliant idea, which was to have Brother Bozarth occupy the pulpit in my place; this he finally consented to do. I was very much relieved and did not give the next day's service and sermon much thought. However, at the close of the prayer meeting the next morning, Brother Joseph came to me and said, "I understand you are not going to be the speaker this morning." I then told him of the arrangement Brother Bozarth and I had made, but my plan did not meet with his approval, for in an authoritative manner he said, "You are going to be the speaker as announced."

You can imagine my feelings as I walked up toward the stand. I really felt like a lamb being led to the slaughter. Just then Brother Joseph took me by the hand and said in a kindly, sympathetic voice, "Be not afraid, for the Lord will bless you with his Spirit and you will have good liberty." As I arose to begin the sermon and looked over that large audience I saw Brother Joseph only a few feet away, with those piercing, black eyes looking right through me.

Conditions were now reversed! I was no longer the ten-year-old boy looking at him; but the prophet, comfortably seated with his back against a tree, was now looking at me, ready to hear what I had to say. I felt very much embarrassed at first, but soon learned that I had his prayers and sympathy, and when I had finished my sermon he was the first to come forward to clasp me by the hand, bidding me godspeed. I was surely blessed by the Lord on this occasion as Brother Joseph said I would be. This incident, and many of like character could be related, if space permitted, greatly increased my confidence in God and his prophet.

Now, after thirty-three years' constant service in the ministry and nearly twenty-three years' in the Quorum of the Twelve, laboring under his immediate direction, listening to his counsel and receiving many divine instructions through letters from him relating to my family and my ministry, prophetic warning, etc., considering all these my confidence in our gray-haired brother has constantly grown that he is a prophet of the most high God, called to lead the Church of Jesus Christ in this day.

A marked characteristic of President Smith, one which I together with many others of the ministry have criticised in the past, is his leniency towards erring ones. As I have grown in age and experience I have arrived at the conclusion that the course he has pursued in this respect was in harmony with the divine mind and was Christ-like. The rising generation of leaders can well follow in his footsteps in this regard.

When young Joseph assumed the leadership of the church he faced an apostasy and its terrible dregs; factional leaders antagonized his every move; confidence was destroyed, and the Israel of the last days was in a wilderness. It required a Moses to get divine order out of this satanic chaos. Time and the present condition of the church have demonstrated that the Lord selected the right man for the herculean task.

He has now been the leader of the church for fifty years; he started that leadership right on assuming the presidency of the church at Amboy, Illinois, April 6, 1860, when he outlined his policy in his memorable speech on that occasion.

The confidence in which he is held by the ministry and the Saints in general; the approval of the divine mind as manifested by his still being used as the mouthpiece of the Lord, all bear unmistakable evidence that he is closing his half century of leadership right before God and acceptably to the Saints.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY OF THE REORGANIZATION.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—President Smith's work as Editor has been contemporaneous with his work as President of the church. So we feel that this brief history of the First Presidency, written by the Church Historian, will be of interest in the Jubilee number. With it will be found pictures of every member (with one exception) of the Presidency from 1860 until now.]

PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH.

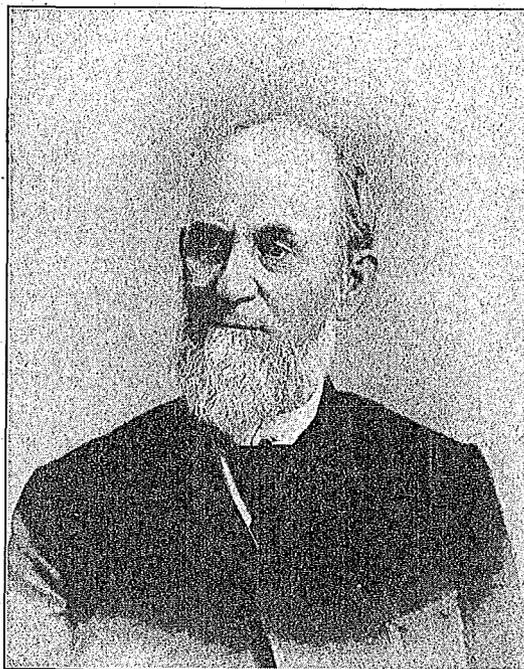

April 6, 1910, he will have occupied the Presidency fifty years.

On April 6, 1860, at a General Conference held at Amboy, Illinois, Joseph Smith, the oldest son of the first President of the church, presented himself to the Reorganization and was accepted, and his position as President of the church was acknowledged. He was accordingly ordained under the hands of Z. H. Gurley, Samuel Powers, and William W. Blair, apostles; and William Marks, high priest. In accepting the position he stated that he had for some time past received manifestations pointing to the position which he was about to assume, and added: "I have come in obedience to a power not my own, and shall be dictated by the power that sent me."

President Smith presided without counselors until the April conference of 1863, when by revelation William Marks was designated as a counselor and was accordingly ordained by Joseph Smith, J. W. Briggs, and E. C. Briggs.

The First Presidency continued with but two members until May 22, 1872, when William Marks died. President Smith then acted without counselors until the April conference of 1873, when by revelation William W. Blair and David H. Smith, WILLIAM W. BLAIR.

Counselor 1873-1896.

the youngest brother of the President, were chosen as his counselors, and ordained under the hands of J. W. Briggs, E. C. Briggs, and Josiah Ells, apostles;

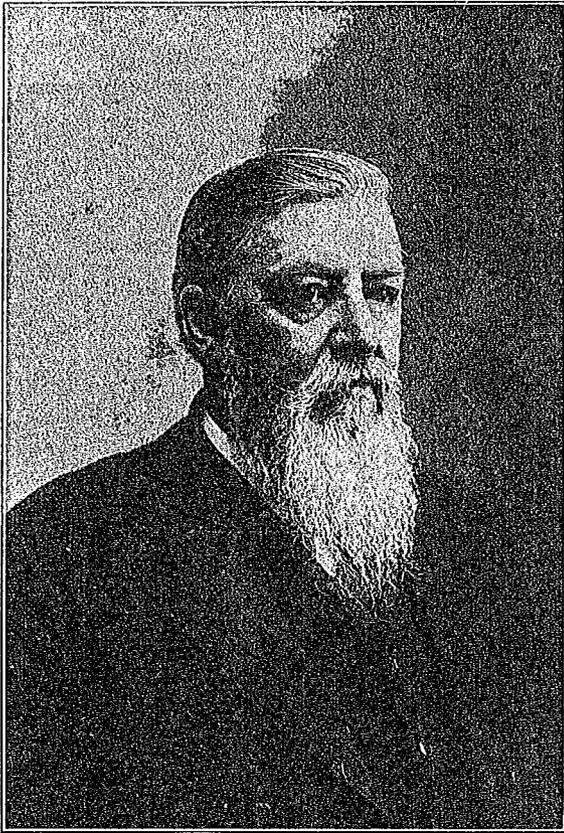

DAVID HYRUM SMITH.

Counselor 1873-1885.

Isaac Sheen, president of the Quorum of High Priests, and I. L. Rogers, Bishop of the church and president of the Aaronic priesthood, it having been specially provided by the revelation that these parties should be ordained by the apostles; and that the president of the Quorum of High Priests, and president of the lesser priesthood should assist.

PATRIARCH ALEXANDER H. SMITH.

Counselor 1897-1902.

A short time subsequent to these ordinations David H. Smith became incapacitated for service, but continued to be acknowledged in that position by the church until April conference of 1885, when he was by command of the Spirit released. This left but two members of the quorum, and in this condition it continued until April 18, 1896, when Elder Blair died suddenly while on his return to Lamoni from the Kirtland, Ohio, conference.

At the April conference of 1897, at Lamoni, Iowa, Elder Alexander H. Smith, who had been temporarily acting by consent after the death of Elder Blair, was by revelation called and set apart as counselor to his brother, and was ordained under the hands of President Joseph Smith and others. Elder Edmund L. Kelley, Presiding Bishop of the church, was also called by revelation to act temporarily as a counselor and was blessed to so act under the hands of Edmund C. Briggs and others.

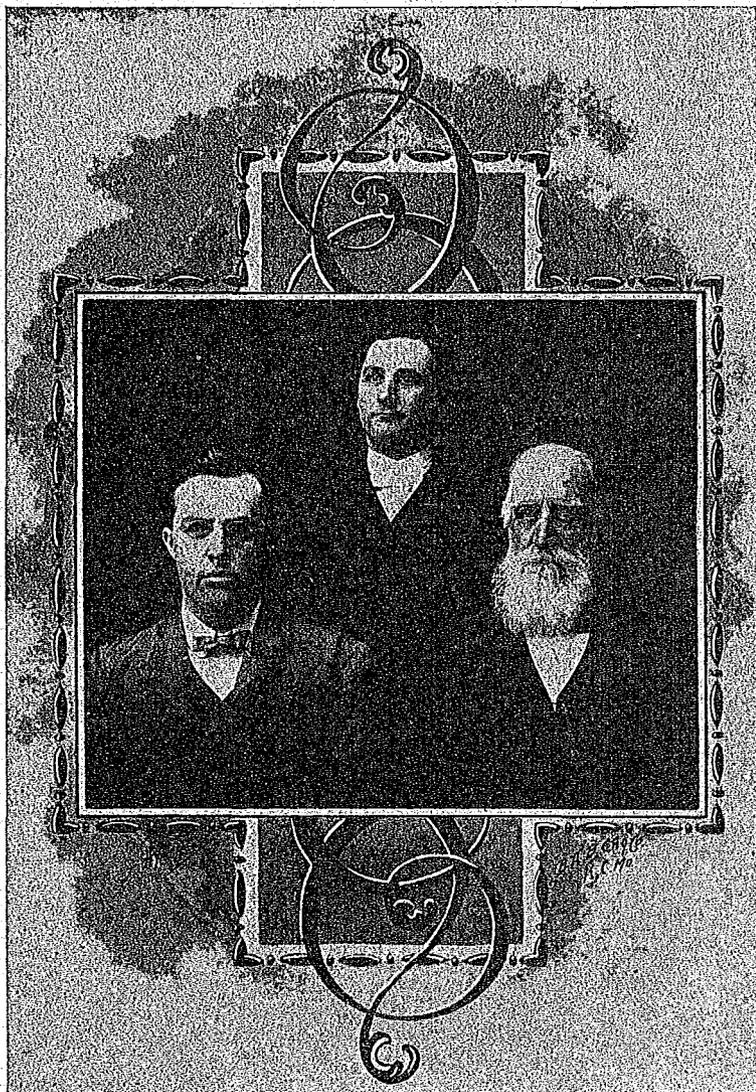

BISHOP E. L. KELLEY.

Counselor 1897-1902.

FREDERICK M. SMITH.

Counselor 1902 until the present time.

JOSEPH SMITH, F. M. SMITH, R. C. EVANS.

The Presidency 1902-1909.

The quorum thus continued until the General Conference of 1902, when President Joseph Smith presented to the conference a vision in which he saw seated with himself in the assembly his eldest son, Frederick M. Smith, and R. C. Evans, of the Quorum of Twelve. The conference, after indorsement by the several quorums, recognized this as sufficient authority for ordaining them as counselors to the President of the church. They were accordingly ordained on April 20, 1902, Frederick M. Smith under the hands of J. W. Wight and President Joseph Smith; Richard C. Evans under the hands of President Joseph Smith and J. W. Wight.

The First Presidency thus formed was sustained and continued to act as such until April, 1909, when by the authority of a revelation a change was effected by the release of Richard C. Evans, and the selection and ordination of Elbert A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, the only son of David H. Smith. He was ordained April 20, 1909, under the hands of President Joseph Smith and William H. Kelley. The First Presidency at the present time is therefore composed of Joseph Smith, of Independence, Missouri, President; Frederick M. Smith, of Independence, Missouri, and Elbert A. Smith, of Lamoni, Iowa, counselors.

The members of this quorum are designated in revelation as apostles and high priests, presidents of the high priesthood, and the First Presidency over the entire church.

THE ADVANCE GUARD OF THE ARMY OF THE LORD
IN 1873.

The cut that accompanies this article is reproduced from a photograph taken at Park's Mills near Council Bluffs, Iowa, during the semiannual conference, September, 1873. It shows a section of the "army of the Lord" as it appeared at that time. It is a silent witness of the great changes that have taken place in the personnel of the church. Of the six men standing in the front row, prominent leaders of the church at that time, only one remains. Five out. Through it William W. Blair and David H. Smith were called to the Presidency; William H. Kelley, Thomas W. Smith, James Caffall, John H. Lake, Alexander H. Smith, Zenas H. Gurley, and Joseph R. Lambert were called to be especial witnesses in the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, to be associated with Jason W. Briggs, Josiah Ells, and Edmund C. Briggs who were already members of that quorum. Certain other members were dropped from the quorum and placed among the elders. Archibald M. Wilsey, William D. Morton, and George Rarick were called to be high priests; E. C. Brand, have gone over on the other side. Many others represented in this picture have died. Some abandoned the faith ere they passed away. Others stood firm and proved themselves strong and wise servants.

The year 1873 was one of the most important years in the history of the Reorganization. During that year the First Presidency was filled for the first time, the Presiding Bishopric was filled for the first time, seven new members were added to the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, and important additions were made to the Quorum of High Priests and the Seventies. March 3 of that year President Smith received a revelation, now known as section 117 of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants. This was the fourth revelation received by him to find place in the Book of Covenants, and in many ways was the most important given to the church up to that date. It was presented at the April conference of that year and its provisions were duly carried out. Charles W. Wandell, Duncan Campbell, Joseph Lakeman, Glaud Rodger, John T. Davies, and John S. Patterson were called to be seventies. The Presiding Bishop was instructed to select two counselors; and in harmony with the revelation, the Presiding Bishop, Israel Rogers, selected Elijah Banta and David Dancer. Two counselors had been selected prior to this, but for some reason had never been ordained, and Bishop Rogers had acted alone.

It was said of the men thus selected for various offices: "If these my servants will henceforth magnify their calling in honor before me, they shall become men of power and excellent wisdom in the assemblies of my people." This promise was fulfilled to a remarkable degree. That year was remarkable because of the number of high positions that were filled during the year, and the very high character of the men who were called to fill those positions, as it developed in the light of subsequent events.

In the front ranks of the ministry, as shown in this picture, designated by the figures 1, 2, and 3, appears the First Presidency as it was then constituted, President Joseph Smith with his counselors, William W. Blair and David H. Smith. President Joseph Smith is seen standing in the middle of this trio. He had then been in the Presidency thirteen years, a period longer than the time that his father occupied in the Presidency of the church, but, of course, not so long as the time that he occupied as leader of the church. He had already proved himself a faithful, honorable, and wise servant. He was known as a man of extraordinary vitality and strength of body and mind, yet it could not have been foreseen that his ministry would continue thirty-seven years longer, rounding out fifty years in the Presidency.

At his left is seen his first counselor, William W. Blair. Elder Blair had been with the Reorganization from 1857. Strong, self-reliant, and aggressive, he was an excellent leader. He was well equipped for frontier missionary work, or as a defender of measures in the church that might meet with a degree of opposition. He could smile genially all day long, or when necessary he could set his lips in a straight, determined line.

At the right of President Smith is seen his youngest brother and second counselor, David H. Smith. He was a man of brilliant and original thought, but his temperament was that of the artist and poet, and he was not well fitted to meet the rough experiences of missionary work among hostile people, such work as was forced upon the majority of the elders in that early day. He could write inspired hymns and preach sermons that moved the multitude, but he was not by nature what is known as a fighter, and in the ordinary course of missionary work he suffered keener joy and deeper sorrow than came to the lot of many of his collaborators. It could not be seen at that time that his life's work was so very nearly at a close.

To the left of the Presidency is seen the Presiding Bishopric, with Bishop Israel Rogers in the center. Bishop Rogers was the first bishop of the Reorganization, having been ordained April 7, 1860. He continued in this office for twenty-two years. In his time he was a pillar of strength to the church, and came to its rescue in times of need. A typical instance is thus recorded on page 782, volume 3, of Church History:

In 1866 the General Conference ordered the preparation and publication of the Inspired Version of the Holy Scriptures. Special contributions and subscriptions were called for, but these did not equal the expenditures. However, Brother Rogers continued to meet all demands, and when the conference of 1870 came around, it was found that the account was overdrawn about four thousand dollars. Then he arose in the assembly and said that he would balance the debt by giving it to the church. In that day this seemed a large gift; and, indeed, it was a very important matter, a very valuable gift at that time. He carried the church through in the day it needed financial help, not only then, but also at other times.

At the left of Bishop Rogers stands David Dancer, prominent in financial circles, especially in the early history of Lamoni, and at the right of Bishop Rogers stands Elijah Banta, who also took a prominent part in the history of Lamoni. Back of the Presidency and to their right, as indicated by the figure 7, is seen Elder W. H. Kelley, now president of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, then only beginning his work in that quorum. At his left, indicated by the figure 8, is Elder John H. Lake, now patriarch, and residing at Kirtland, Ohio. At his left, as indicated by the figure 9, stands Jason W. Briggs. Jason Briggs was at that time president of the Quorum of Twelve and exerted a strong influence in the church. He was credited with being a logical and profound reasoner. At his left stands his brother, Edmund C. Briggs, who had taken such a prominent part in the early history of the church. It could not then be foreseen that he would be one of the few in that body who would continue as a minister for thirty-seven years longer, like his associate, President Smith, rounding out fifty years of service.

To the left of Elder E. C. Briggs stands Joseph R. Lambert, then one of the new members of the Quorum of Twelve, now patriarch, and since the death of Alexander H. Smith, acting as Presiding Patriarch. Then as now his watchwords were "truth" and "law," words that he has thundered at many a congregation, words with which he has sincerely endeavored to shape his life. To his left may be seen James Caffall, whom the record shows was ordained an apostle at that conference, in harmony with the revelation of the previous April. He was a humble and faithful laborer and has gone to his reward. E. C. Brand, Zenas H. Gurley, H. A. Stebbins, James McKiernan and others may be identified by those who know them.

Great changes may be observed in all those who are still living. Then in the dawning of their power and usefulness, many of them are now far advanced in years, while many others would not answer if the roll of the autumn conference of 1873 were called again. They are numbered with a larger assembly in a brighter and better land.

Faith is a belief in testimony. It is not a leap in the dark, as some tell us. That would be no faith at all. God does not ask any man to believe without giving him something to believe. You might as well ask a man to see without eyes, to hear without ears, and to walk without feet, as to bid him believe without giving him something to believe.—D. L. Moody.

THE SAINTS' HERALD HISTORICAL SERIES.

X. THE CHURCH IN NAUVOO.

BY ELDER MARK H. SIEGFRIED, HISTORIAN OF THE NAUVOO DISTRICT, AND PASTOR OF THE CHURCH IN NAUVOO.

JOSEPH SMITH THE MARTYR.

Copied from a daguerreotype taken in Nauvoo in 1843.

'Tis a peculiar circumstance that Nauvoo is. Peculiar circumstances led to its founding. A band of religious people driven from their homes in western Missouri, at the instance of a cruel, heartless bandit,—Boggs, under oath as governor, wandered across the prairies as best they could, often leaving their footprints of blood upon the frozen ground and in the snow. They landed at Quincy, Illinois, in Adams County, just below Hancock, in which is Nauvoo, during the winter of 1838-39, cold, hungry, without shelter, robbed of homes, property, and many of their loved ones.

To depend upon the charities of the hospitable people of Quincy and vicinity would not always answer. They had to make some permanent arrangements for their sustenance; and this they did by appointing a committee to investigate a proposition that had been made to them for the purchase of twenty thousand acres of land lying in the Territory of Iowa (not a State till 1846) at two dollars per acre, to be paid in twenty annual installments without interest. This committee reported favorably to a conference held in Quincy in February, 1839. (It will be remembered that Joseph Smith and other leading men were in Liberty Jail during this time, not being liberated till April 16, 1839, reaching Quincy on the 22d of that month.) This land, however, was not purchased till June 24, 1839, after the Saints had located at Commerce, afterward Nauvoo. Soon after, Joseph Smith advised the building of a city across from Commerce to be called Zarahemla. This tract of land included the village of Nashville, now Galland.

At the time this proposition was first being considered, William Marks, Bishop Partridge, and Judge Elias Higbee were among a number who disapproved the idea of settling in one locality; but favored individually locating. Whether or not they exercised superior judgment in this is not a matter of history; and each is left to decide from events that followed whether he thinks they did or not. For us to say now what might have been under different circumstances, at the most is not saying very much; for any change would, to that degree, have brought a different end, and whether it would have been better or worse, the judgment day alone may reveal.

VENUS AND COMMERCE.

There was a post-office, called by Uncle Sam, Venus, at a point a little north of what is called Young Street and within about one block of the river, in what was afterward called Commerce. This post-office was established March 13, 1830, and was the first in the county. So far as the records go, there was no town plotted. There were two residences and one store. Commerce was laid out in 1834, and Commerce City in 1837, by Horace Hotchkiss and John Gillett. This latter is the village the Saints found when they came in 1839, and was afterwards the northwestern part of the city of Nauvoo. Its streets were parallel and at right angles with the river, not having been laid out with the compass.

At this village, or, technically, just south of it, lived Dr. Isaac Galland, who seemed to be interested in the Saints and to feel for them in their troubles. He submitted a proposition to them as early as March, 1839. It seems that Sidney Rigdon opposed the acceptance of it; and, because of this, together with other reasons, perhaps, it was not accepted during that month nor the one that followed. But on May 1, a farm was purchased from Doctor Galland, and one lying just east of it from one Hugh White, the former costing nine thousand dollars and the latter five thousand dollars.

Joseph Smith was instrumental in the purchase of this land, just a month and twenty-four days before the purchase on the other side of the river. He himself occupied one of the log houses on the Hugh White farm. It is still standing (with additions) and is known as the "Smith Homestead." So also is the stone house of Doctor Galland, near the river, now the oldest house in Nauvoo. At the northeast corner of the block on which the Prophet lived is the "Corner stone of Nauvoo" from which the city of Nauvoo was surveyed and laid out.

On July 3, Joseph Smith baptized Doctor Galland. A son of Doctor Galland now lives in Fort Madison, Iowa, not a member of the church, however. On two occasions he has promised to give the writer a written opinion of the character of the Saints, as he knew them, but so far he has failed, notwithstanding he speaks with regard concerning Joseph the Seer and the dealings his father had with them. He was eighty-two years old last July.

SEEK REDRESS, BUT FAIL.

As has appeared in a preceding article of this series, the Saints suffered many wrongs of a nature and character for which it was impossible for any earthly power to give compensation or for which to recompense; therefore, useless to seek redress. Who can repay a wife and mother for having her husband torn from her in the hour of greatest need, to be lodged in a dungeon cell, while her child is being born at the point of a bayonet or the muzzle of a gun! Who can repay the father! Who can make restitution for such atrocious acts! None of earth's occupants can do it! God alone, through his never-failing mercy and infinite love, can fill the void in a bosom thus torn asunder. But along with these there were inestimable losses of a financial nature, both to the church and to individuals. It was only an expression of confidence and faith in the Federal Government to offer prayer to it through its legislative and executive bodies. No more than an expression of belief in the constitutional rights of citizens to believe that Missouri, having violated the Federal Constitution, could be made to answer for it by the body which that Constitution held intact.

And so, seeking restitution of lost properties by reason of the laws having been violated, the High Council, (the church willing to take the consequences if it could be proven that it had violated the law,) indorsed the resolution of Joseph Smith, to go to Washington to present the grievances of the church to the Federal Government, October 21, 1839. He and Hyrum, his brother, had on June 4 previously prepared a statement to present before the General Government, of damages amounting to one hundred thousand dollars each, including damages for illegal imprisonments. On October 28, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, and Judge Elias Higbee were indorsed by the High Council as delegates to Washington, District of Columbia, to ask the President and Congress for a redress of grievances suffered in Missouri. The delegates left the next day for the East, accompanied by a man, O. P. Rockwell, whose after conduct was far from what it ought to have been.

Elder Rigdon took sick, on account of which they were much delayed. Shortly following they fell in company with one Dr. R. D. Foster, who accompanied them to care for Elder Rigdon. When they reached Columbus, Ohio, it was decided that Joseph Smith and Judge Higbee should go on, leaving Elder Rigdon with Dr. Foster and O. P. Rockwell to come on in the carriage, in which they had started, as soon as Sidney Rigdon was able.

The former two arrived at Washington, November 28, 1839, and presented a lengthy petition to Congress. This petition is too long to use in this article, but can be found in

vol. 2, pp. 378 to 396 of the Church History. This petition covers the settlement in western Missouri, and all the trouble, quite detailed, together with the orders of the military officers, and finally the exterminating order of Governor Boggs, and an account of the accompanying horrors. Elder Rigdon arrived some time later, presumably the fore part of December. He stayed but a short time, arriving in Philadelphia, January 14, 1840. Judge Higbee and Joseph Smith presented the matter to the President and Congress, receiving favor from Judge Young of Quincy. They stayed and maintained their cause before the judiciary committee, appointed to consider their case for quite a while. Joseph Smith had personal interviews with President Van Buren and John C. Calhoun. He became satisfied that nothing would be done for them, and started home, preaching on the way, arriving March 4, 1840. Judge Higbee remained to look after the interests of the petition until the committee reported to Congress that they could do nothing, when he withdrew the papers they had presented, and started shortly for Nauvoo and his family.

PUBLICATIONS.

There were four papers issued during the days of the church in Nauvoo: The Times and Seasons, The Wasp, The Nauvoo Neighbor, The Expositor.

The Times and Seasons was issued first in November, 1839, by Don Carlos Smith and Ebenezer Robinson, under the firm name of Robinson and Smith, from an office on the corner of Water and Bane streets, two blocks west of the home of Joseph Smith. It was a monthly, devoted to church interests. D. C. Smith acted as one of the editors till his death, August 7, 1841, at the age of twenty-five. Ebenezer Robinson acted as editor until February 15, 1842 [excepting during an interval in 1840 to 1841], when his valedictory was published in the Times and Seasons.

The Twelve had for some time been dissatisfied with the manner in which he had been conducting the paper, and had endeavored to have him removed. Under date of January 28, 1842, Joseph Smith stated he had received a revelation directing the Twelve to take charge of it. On February 4, Wilford Woodruff took charge of the printing office and John Taylor of the editorial rooms. It was later arranged for Joseph Smith to act as editor in chief with John Taylor to act as assistant. This management continued till November 15, 1842, when Joseph Smith resigned to John Taylor, stating in his valedictory that he could no longer perform this arduous task, on account of the press of other matters. Taylor continued as editor until the paper was discontinued February 15, 1846, after one more issue.

April 13, 1842, the first number of The Wasp appeared under the editorship of William Smith. It was a weekly devoted to literature, agriculture, art, science, commerce, trade, manufacture, and news in general. How long it continued we are not aware.

We do not know when The Nauvoo Neighbor was first issued. The only mention we know of is of its being discontinued by order of a conference which convened October 6 to 8, 1845.

The Expositor itself has a very short history. Only one issue, June 7, 1844, ever met the public. It contained very much that was of a slanderous nature, not only against Joseph Smith, but others of the church. The city council, three days later, declared it a nuisance and ordered the mayor to have it removed in his own way. Joseph Smith was mayor, and he ordered John T. Green, marshal, to destroy it. These were perilous times. Publishers and contributors for The Expositor had been recently cut off from the church and this was the way they proceeded to take revenge.

So far as the law was concerned, the council perhaps had the right to destroy The Expositor; but to us it was one of the great mistakes that occurred. It was an effort to destroy the freedom of the press. Be that as it may, F. M. Higbee obtained a writ for Joseph Smith and seventeen others. They were all acquitted by the Nauvoo municipal court; and, being tried again, before a justice, Daniel H. Wells, a nonmember of the church, were acquitted. Joseph Smith wrote a detailed account to Governor Ford, and stated that all who were implicated would go to the state capital and submit to an examination before any legal tribunal there without warrant for arrest.

MISSIONARY WORK.

Notwithstanding the unsettled condition of the church, on coming to Nauvoo, it did not lose sight of the mission it bore to the world, that of preaching the gospel. Preaching was being done wherever possible in the regions around Nauvoo, as well as throughout the various States. During the time that the church was settling here, the Twelve were making arrangements to go on a mission to Europe. During August and September, 1839, five of them started for this field. Next month marked the organization of the Nauvoo Stake, with William Marks president. This position he faithfully held until the disintegration of the church. The stake was divided into three wards, having a bishop for each ward. These bishops were Whitney, Partridge, and Knight.

In the next May, the first issue of The Millennial Star appeared from Manchester, England, Parley Pratt, editor. The first company of Saints from England came to America, June 6, 1840. This was followed by many other expeditions of Saints, and many remained in the British Isles.

At the conference in the spring of 1840, Orson Hyde and John E. Page were given a mission to Palestine. Hyde prosecuted this mission unaccompanied by Page, who remained in America doing missionary work. These, however, are not the first foreign missions of the church. About June 1, 1837, O. Hyde and Heber C. Kimball went to England, accompanied by Willard Richards and Priest Joseph Fielding. This was the first foreign mission the church undertook. The labors of these men bore much fruit when the Twelve took the mission in 1839 to 1840. At a conference held in England on April 15, 1840, there were reported one thousand six hundred and eighty-one members, thirty-four elders, fifty-two priests, thirty-eight teachers, and eight deacons. In less than three months there was a gain of over six hundred and fifty; and in three months more there was a gain of over one thousand three hundred. This is evidence that these men were diligent in their work; notwithstanding all the members of the Twelve who were there afterward went into polygamy, and Brigham Young said that he had intimations of it while in England, but never mentioned it to Joseph Smith.

RAPID GROWTH.

It is certainly an evidence of sterling faith in the truth that these people under the trying circumstances under which they came to Nauvoo, were able in so short a time to accomplish so much. The land, much of it, which they purchased was swampy and unhealthy; overgrown, with an entanglement through which man could scarcely penetrate. Yet in a few months it was drained, surveyed, and platted; buildings were going up at a wonderfully rapid rate, over two hundred houses being built by May 1, 1840.

During this strained effort to replace lost treasures, there was much sickness, much of it fatal. James Mulholland, Joseph's clerk, died Nov. 3, 1839, while Joseph was at Washington. He has a niece now living in Farmington, Iowa, and a nephew at Independence, Missouri. Joseph Smith, sr., Presiding Patriarch of the church, died at Nauvoo, September 14, 1840, just sixty-eight years, ten months and twenty-eight days before his grandson, Alexander Hale Smith, Presiding Patriarch of the Reorganization, died at the same place. Just before his death he blessed his family; Joseph's posterity were promised blessings and lives of usefulness, but none were promised to Hyrum's children. Hyrum was received as Patriarch to succeed his father, January 24, 1841. William Law had been appointed a member of the Presidency by revelation to succeed Hyrum Smith. George Miller had been appointed by revelation to succeed Edward Partridge. Two days later Joseph Smith was made sole trustee in trust for the church.

Notwithstanding these losses and reverses, harassing mobs, traitors within and enemies without, the church grew and prospered so long as they put their trust in God, who told them that if they should hearken to his voice they should not be moved. (Doctrine and Covenants 107:13.) While he was living in Nauvoo, Joseph Smith answered before court charges many times, and was acquitted each and every time, except the last, being killed two days before the trial. With all these trying circumstances to face, the city was the largest in Illinois, and was said to have between twenty thousand and twenty-five people. It grew as by magic.

NAUVOO.

This picture is from a painting made about the year 1863 by David H. Smith, youngest son of the prophet Joseph Smith. The large, square building in the foreground is the Nauvoo House, mentioned in revelation. A part of this structure was torn down at a later date and the rest remodeled. To the right and in the distance may be seen the roof of the Mansion House, indicated by a white signboard in front of building.

A special charter had been granted the city and the first election under it was held Feb. 1, 1841, John C. Bennett being elected mayor. The council met two days later, and in harmony with the provisions of the charter, authorized the organization of the University of Nauvoo and the Nauvoo Legion. The militia met the next day and organized by electing Joseph Smith lieutenant-general. It seems that the military company received more attention than the university, though it was soon in operation in a limited way. The peculiar trials under which the church passed prevented it ever being conducted except on a limited scale. The intentions seemed to have been for the instructors, those belonging to the church, to work for the love of doing right, the same as the ministry in spreading the gospel. If this thought were emulated now it would be the means of more rapid growth in our own ranks. They did no more in this military work than was their right and privilege under the law, but had all this time and effort been spent in building the two houses they were divinely commanded to build, who can believe but that it would have been better? So of to-day.

On March 24, 1842, the Ladies' Relief Society of the city of Nauvoo was organized for the purpose of "aiding the poor, the destitute, the widow and the orphan; and for the exercise of all benevolent purposes." In March of the next year The Young Gentlemen's and Ladies' Relief Society of Nauvoo was organized for the purpose of "correcting the errors of youth, guarding against the temptations to which they were exposed, and to aid in the enterprises of charity." Both these societies were certhe revelation. Another important section of this article was that the sale of spirituous liquors was for ever prohibited, and never to be introduced into common use. No person was allowed to hold more than three hundred nor less than one share. Each share was to be valued at fifty dollars and the house was to cost one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

George Miller, Lyman Wight, John Snider and Peter Haws were the incorporating trustees. It was on the river bank, just at foot of Main street, occupying a commanding view from the river, as well as from Iowa from the south, and would have certainly been a place where the "weary traveler might find rest" and be taught. But history reveals the sad, sad story that it was only fairly started when the death of the Prophet and Patriarch came. Not more than about one fifth of it so far as area is standing—the southwest corner, one and one half stories above the basement story, which is several feet above high water mark.

See Doctrine and Covenants 107: 13, 14.

The corner stone was laid April 6, 1841, under the direction of the First Presidency. An article appeared in Times and Seasons, for July 1, 1841, concerning the progress of the work on the temple. It speaks well for the zeal and energy with which the people went to work to build the "house unto the Lord."

A temporary font was dedicated on November 8, of that year, as appears from the Millennial Star, volume 18, pages 743, 744. On the 21st the first baptisms were administered for the dead, Brigham Young, H. C. Kimball, and John Taylor officiating. On Deember 13 of the same year appeared an article signed by nine of the Quorum of the Twelve, from which it would appear that the zeal and energy that was first manifested had waned. In it they said: "The building of the temple of the Lord in the city of Nauvoo, is occupying the first place in the exertions and prayers of the Saints at the present time, knowing as they do, that if this building is not completed speedily, we shall be rejected as a church with our dead, for the Lord our God hath spoken it. . . . There are many, many more, who do not thus come up to their privilege and their duty in this thing."

It continued to progress about at this rate, articles, epistles, and editorials appearing in Times and tainly commendable and their purposes good, and their efforts worthy of emulation, not only among us but among any people. Much better those organizations than those for society's sake alone.

THE NAUVOO HOUSE.

By reading Doctrine and Covenants 107: 9, 10, the cause for need of this house will be seen. In harmony with the revelation steps were soon taken to incorporate the joint stock company for the Nauvoo House, and an act was passed by the legislature and signed by the governor February 24, 1841. It provided that Joseph Smith and his posterity should have a suite of rooms in the home perpetually. This was making legal the will of the Lord expressed in Seasons from various sources, principally Joseph Smith and the Twelve, on the importance of speedily finishing it, all indicating that work on it was one of the most important objects then before them.

The same sad story must be chronicled concerning the temple that was said concerning the Nauvoo House—it was not completed. An old brother living at Mormon Springs, north of Nauvoo about five miles, Brother Gifford, has repeatedly told me of his being through a short time before it burned, with his father-in-law, who was a carpenter working on it, and knew that it was not then finished, and that his father-in-law's workbench stood in the temple and was burned with it.

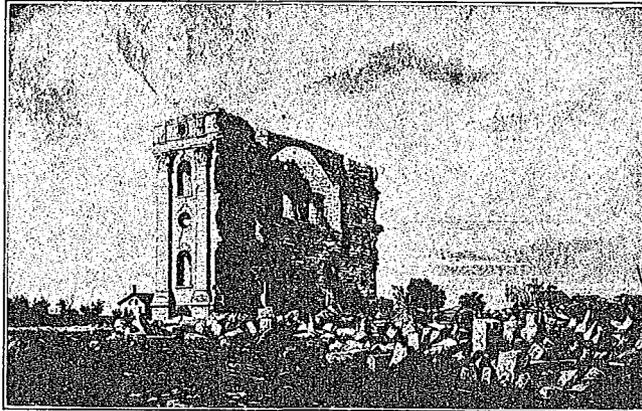

A. W. Head, of Stewartsville, Missouri, whose signed statement lies before me, says: "I am positive the temple was not finished. I have been in it a number of times when the man was left to take care of the temple. After the Mormons left Nauvoo, many came to see the temple. They charged twenty-five cents for going through it. I lived in the city at that time, and was at the temple often, and at different times the keeper would say to me, 'Walter, can't you go with these people and show them through the temple?' This was in '47 and '48. It burned in '48. I was present and saw it burn." Mr. Head was born in 1835, and was certainly qualified to speak on the subject. His father lived on and worked the farm in 1847 and 1848 on which the battle at the expulsion had taken place.

MASONRY.

Little need be said on this subject, but a brief statement will be of interest to the reader of this article. Bishop George Miller seems to have been a prominent member of the Masonic order before coming here, as he was the first master of the lodge in Nauvoo, according to the "Report of Lodges," now before me. George Miller, master; J. D. Parker, S. W.; and L. N. Scoville, J. W.; were the ones to whom the dispensation was granted some time during the year preceding October, 1842. The following is a summary of the report to Grand Lodge of Illinois, October, 1842: George Miller, master; Hyrum Smith, S. W.; Lucius N. Scoville, J. W.; William Clayton, secretary pro tem; Newel K. Whitney, treasurer; Charles Allen, S. D.; Heber C. Kimball, J. D.; William Felshaw, steward; Hyrum Clark, steward; Samuel Rolfe, Tyler. Master Masons 243, Fellow Crafts 4, Entered Apprentices 9. Died Vinson Wight; rejected Daniel Avery, Hyrum Dayton, Nathan A. West, and Samuel Brown. Expelled John C. Bennett. Initiated 285.

Joseph Smith's name does not appear in any connection. Criticism was called out by this first report of Nauvoo lodge. The principal reason seemed to have been that the lodge received members without proper preparation. The lodge asked for a charter, but they were refused one at the time, awaiting an examination of the charges. To investigate these charges, a committee was appointed by the Grand Lodge. But when this committee, among which was Grand Master Helm of Illinois, came to Nauvoo to investigate, the lodge refused to permit an examination, and this resulted in the lodge being declared clandestine. This, however, did not stop them, as they continued along the same lines, it seems, taking in new members and practicing their craft in general, until the expulsion in 1846. A large hall was built on Main street, in 1843, three stories high. It is enough to say that all this was done during the time when every one was supposed to be bending every effort to complete the "temple of the Lord" (so as to escape church rejection) and the Nauvoo House. The Masonic temple was completed.

POLITICS.

Politics occupies attention for a brief space. As we have stated with reference to the trip to Washington, the church was brought into touch with political parties, but Joseph Smith stated that he would in no sense try to persuade the Saints to vote one way or the other, but would have them act as they saw fit. Of course, as they were becoming very numerous, it would be no more than could be expected that office seekers would try courting their favor; and this was certainly done. Many of the old settlers think that mixing in politics is what caused trouble with the Gentile neighbors; their version being that the Saints were trying to obtain favors that the other people could not enjoy. But that they ever did obtain political power sufficient to secure such, granted they had such motive, seems to be short of proof.

The manly, becoming letter of Joseph Smith resenting the letter of James A. Bennett to move to Illinois and try to become governor through the influence of the Saints, is worthy of mention, and we wish we had space to present it. It may be found on pages 654, 655 of volume 2 of the Church History. It shows that the author of it had far higher ideals than would allow him to sell his honor as a man of God for the promise of a political aspirant's protection. This was in November, 1843. William B. Smith, brother of the Prophet, had been in the lower house of the legislature during the previous winter, successfully opposing the repeal of the Nauvoo charter, twice attempted.

On January 29, 1844, at a political meeting in Nauvoo, Joseph Smith was nominated for President of the United States. He soon afterward wrote an article on the policy this Government should pursue. This was March 1, 1844. "For President—General Joseph Smith of Nauvoo" was placed at the head of the editorial columns of Times and Seasons. On May 17, 1844, a state convention met in Nauvoo and nominated Joseph Smith for President and Sidney Rigdon for Vice-President, and the Twelve and others prominent in the church took up the canvass. It will be seen by reading Joseph Smith's views on "State rights" (sovereignty) that he agreed with President Lincoln, who so humbly and truly steadied the Federal Ark in the bloody sixties. Thus the situation stood when the 27th of June ended it for all time, cruel and dastardly as it was.

THE RULE OF MARRIAGE.

Contemporary with the last subject was another, which more seriously affected the welfare of the church. They had a right to indulge in their political proclivities, since they were within the laws. (Of the wisdom of it, we are not so sure.) But the danger of the practice to be considered under this last heading lies in that they sought to change the former policy of the church and to set at naught the commandments of God, by which the church had claimed to be guided since 1830. The Times and Seasons for February 1, 1844, contained a notice over the signature of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, declaring the doctrine of polygamy to be false and corrupt, and notifying Hyrum Brown that he was cut off from the church for teaching it. On March 15, 1844, Hyrum Smith wrote a letter explaining his views on marriage in which he condemned polygamy, calling it false doctrine. This was also published in Times and Seasons.

In the issue of April 1, 1844, there appears from the pen of the editor, John Taylor, a member of the Twelve, an article strongly denouncing anything contrary to the accepted laws of the church, understood to be the three sacred books, the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants, all three of which were expressly opposed to polygamy. These, taken with the notices published in volume 3 of Times and Seasons, over the signature of twelve leading men and nineteen leading ladies of the church, "to show that John C. Bennett's secret wife system was a creation of his own make, as we know of no such society in this place, nor never did," go to show plainly what was the real doctrine of the church on this subject of marriage up to the time of Joseph's death, and that he felt the presence of the influence of the corruption of polygamy, declaring that unless it could be put down it would be the cause of the overthrow of the church.

In closing, we can safely say, "they died innocently," speaking of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, but for those who afterwards sought to change the ordinances of the church, break the covenant with God, their views and the State, and to fasten it upon the innocent man, we can not say so much.

A WAR TIME LETTER.

LETTER FROM BRO. WILLIAM H. KELLEY.

BEAUFORT, SOUTH CAROLINA, April 13, 1865.

Brother Sheen: After the expiration of five months of absence from home, friends of early experience, and brethren, I find myself without a line from home, or from any person in the North, either friend or foe.

Although I am moving in the grand arena of war, amid the exigencies that are fraught with such universal destruction upon every hand, accompanied with hardships and cruelties, the most trying and galling; yet it has pleased the Supreme Ruler that communication should be cut off thus far from all friends, relatives, and brethren, from whom we would expect words most cheering, and exhortations most ardent; as a means of confirmation and support, while traveling the dangerous path of life, and the HERALD, the glorious circular of gospel light, that is read with such intense interest, by every Latter Day Saint as a means of intellectual development, and moral support, has failed to penetrate the military lines, hence ignorance of church progress at present is ours to share. But still we are not without hope and faith, neither is it necessary that a Latter Day Saint residing in the belligerent camp, governed by military power, and sternly opposed by a vicious enemy; in obedience to the power that rules, acting in the sustenance of his country's laws, that he should lose his first love, or for a moment fail to have implicit confidence in the truth of the gospel of Christ. And the reasons are various and obvious, and reflect upon the observant and reflective mind, the astounding truth, that the God of the Latter Day Saints is not assigned any special place of action, that he is not confined to the Shenandoah

Valley only, nor the Army of the Potomac, neither is he confined to the narrow limits of a speaking or prayer meeting capacity, where those who adhere to the teachings of his law, are enriched by the copious abundance of his grace, and are forwarded onward, and confirmed in the great plan of redemption. But in every part of the universal world, where there is one whose heart is filled with thankfulness, and who knows his laws and statutes, and does them, he is also equally with him, and that to confirm, bless, and forward in the principles of renewed life. Again, can one be so unthoughtful and lay claim to a rational mind, and title of Latter Day Saint, and accompany the military raids of our armies, and behold the unrelenting hand of destruction, as it prowls its way through States, towns, and cities; view the flaming torch as it is applied to splendid edifices of the most opulent cities, while every habitable dwelling is made an ocean of flame, and razed to its foundation, and not be compelled to revolve in his mind, these sublime lines of the inspired poet:

"Towns and cities shall be burned
And smoke becloud the day;
No human pity will be found
In North America."

Who can scan the cruelties perpetrated by the barbarous clans of guerrillas, and mobs that have infested the land, during the last four years, from the west coast of Missouri, to South Florida, without seeing the truth demonstrated, of the heaven-born words, uttered by God's chosen prophet, as follows:

"Yet remember, if the Latter Day Saints are not restored to all their rights, and paid for all their losses, according to the known rules of justice and judgment, reciprocation and common honesty among men, that God will come out of his hiding place and vex this nation with a sore vexation. Yea, the consuming wrath of an offended God shall smoke through the nations with as much distress and woe as independence has blazed through with pleasure and delight."

As I every day behold the hundreds of negroes, disciplined in war tactics, I am led to experience what the prophet of this dispensation said by the spirit of inspiration over thirty years ago, when he said in language most positive: "Slaves shall rise up against their masters, who shall be marshaled and disciplined for war." Here, then, is the theater of war, every ruined temple and demolished city, every unmerciful cruelty performed, every town beheld with nothing but half rent chimneys and scattered ruins, to tell that peace and plenty, art and science, prosperity and wealth, once were her happy companions. They are waymarks to point the Latter Day Saints to the prophetic history of the past, as a source of confirmation of faith, buoyancy of hope, and a cheering and firm determination to stem the drift of popular opposition, and to more firmly unite to dispel the dark cloud that has draped the horizon for years past, and with firm and fixed grasp cling to the rod of iron and step forward into the blaze and sunshine of gospel light, and enjoy its sacred and promised blessings; and while we see exhibited before our eyes every day, that which we have known and read for thirty years, and been waiting anxiously for its fulfillment, and trembling in our hearts (at some periods) lest they should fail, and prove our faith in vain, and our prophet whom we learned to love, a deceiver; where, I ask, is the Saint that can not live, grow, and strengthen, by feasting upon the loaf given years ago? It has not lost its strength, its weight, neither its leaven, but has proven to be the true bread of life.

Again we mark the language of the poet while the veil of the future is lifted, and the impress of revelation swells in his bosom, and imprints upon his mind the destiny of the then peaceful and quiet homes, in the following language:

"When the Union is severed, and liberty's blessings,
Withheld from the sons of Columbia, once free;
When bloodshed, and war, and famine distress them,
Remember the warning, and think upon me."

No member of the body of Christ need falter or lose confidence because his fate is the military school, but on the contrary, in his transit from one station to the other, there is ever something manifest to confirm and prove the truth of the doctrine which was revealed and established through Joseph Smith. May the Lord help us to walk and not faint.

While I was in New York, the chaplain being sick one evening, I introduced myself in my soldier's garb, as a preacher, and was invited into the pulpit, to the utter astonishment of all the house. The janitor, supposing it would be a total failure, took his seat in front of the pulpit, but I proceeded, and thanks be to the good Lord, I had great liberty. When I was through I had plenty of friends. The next evening the house and every aisle was crowded to hear the young preacher, but the old minister came, and very reverentially asked what I was. I told him. He said, "They believe in twelve apostles, don't they?" Yes. He was not sick any more while I stayed there, but it proved a blessing to me.—Saints' Herald, May 1, 1865.

"The earthly life of Jesus Christ was constantly at a high tension, but was one of mighty prayer and regular devotion. We can not teach our congregations to pray by lectures on the subject, by exhortations or by reading prayers, but if they would learn how to pray successfully, they must be led to engage in the act of praying. Prayer is a means to an end."

DOUGLAS, ALASKA, December 12, 1909.

Editors Herald: It may be that some of our friends among the readers of the HERALD with whom we do not correspond would like to know how we are getting along up here, in this north country, both spiritually and temporally.

Since our arrival here last June my wife and I have felt very keenly the separation from church association, and long for the time of reunion. We have since our marriage, last April, worshiped each evening at the family altar, having decided to start at once to establish an altar of our own. So far, we have read the Book of Mormon through, the Doctrine and Covenants through, and HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Church History, Bible, and other church publications, also; so you see we have read oftener than once a day. Might say, though there are only we two, we pray aloud, training so to speak for public meetings.

Our journey from Omaha to Alaska took about nine days, counting stopovers, one day at Hanna, Wyoming, and another at Seattle, where we took ship. Yet we did not neglect our reading nor prayer one night. We carried the Book of Mormon with us. Not to boast, but merely to encourage others, we write this, and who can estimate the joy and soul-peace that we have enjoyed because of our simply doing a very small part, perhaps, of our duty?

I would that this might give some other young couples courage to start out as we have, not that we consider ourselves to be better than others, God forbid, but having tasted of the fruit gathered therefrom, desire others to taste of the same. Our desire to be of service to our fellow-man; or in other words, to be charitable in the true sense, is daily increasing. Therefore we feel we can not afford to disregard any of the teachings of God wherever we may find them, so that we may be the better prepared to fulfill our life-mission here below and help to redeem Zion. Even the errand boy is useful and necessary in the gospel work, so there is a work for us all. May we be what the Lord "wants us to be."

We have had fairly good health since we have been here and thank the Lord for it. The people, though not so wicked as one would suppose, are as a class woefully devoid of true Christianity. Yet there are some among the Friends who have a mission here as well as a few among the Congregationalists who try hard to live right, but dances and card parties being the main source of worldly pleasure, we feel rather out of our element as we can not join in any of these things. We attend and teach in the Congregational Sunday school and attend church there in the evening or else go to the Friend's church. It is on Sunday when we miss our own church most.

Anyone reading this and desiring to correspond with us will find us willing to do what we can to write in return.

May the Lord prosper his work is the prayer constantly of
Yours for the truth,

DR. AND MRS. W. E. STOFF.

COOKES POINT, TEXAS, December 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: Here I come to tell your many readers that I have just returned home from Hartburg, in Newton County, near the Louisiana line. I preached there seven times to a splendid turnout and interest from start to finish. I do not think that I ever preached to as many preachers at any time or place,—five and six at a time; they all said that I preached the Bible. This is a place where our elders have never preached. Yet I met one man who had heard Brother Jackson in Arkansas. He seemed to think that Brother Jackson was a great preacher.

There is only one of our members here, Bro. Ellis Ford, he is a team. He it was that wrote me to come and preach at Hartburg and paid my expenses. He has a fine family, who treated me very nicely all the time I was there. Not one of his family belongs to the church but himself; but they are favorable.

I was compelled to close my meetings on account of appointments of other preachers that were ahead of me. When I closed a number of the people urged me to come back and preach. Some said that they had always believed somewhat the way I preached. I never labored at a place where the people behaved better; they seemed to be very anxious to hear what I had to say. Some said they were profited by the preaching.

There was some kicking; one of the sawmill owners, who is a Baptist, did what he could to keep the people from attending my meetings; he kept but a few away. There is a good opening here for the preaching of the gospel. I aim to visit that place again as soon as I think it is wisdom to do so.

I have another engagement to visit and preach at or near the A. M. College near Bryan, in Brazos County. There is a brother at the college who has written me to come, and I expect to go after the holidays. The brother is the only member of the church there. His wife is a member of the Baptist Church, so he informs me. This is another new place. You see that I am breaking new ground right along. I like it. I would be glad to spend all my time in the mission field; but I can not under present conditions. I must provide for my little wife and self. I have no other means but my labor to support my family. There is a large field in Texas unoccupied by our preachers, and very few laborers.

I am still in the conflict and expect to be until the end.

E. W. NUNLEY.

GRANNIS, ARKANSAS, December 21, 1909.

Dear Herald: The Curtis-Bogard debate was arranged to commence on the morning of December 1. Reverend Bogard came in on an evening train. Elder Curtis was awaiting his arrival. On Wednesday Brother Quick came in from the north, and Brn. Jesse Simmons and James Smith came in from the south, all anxious to attend the debate and hear the famed Baptist debater of Arkansas. Brother Riley came in Monday night, and after quite an effort, succeeded in arousing the writer from the slumbers of midnight, who sleepily opened the door, and let the weary traveler in. A deep interest was manifested in the discussion all the way through, and as a result many heard the gospel whom we could not have reached otherwise. The writer believes that many hearts were warmed with rays of gospel light who hitherto had been strangers to its benign influence.

Elder Bogard made an able defense of the Baptist faith, but he went down hard under the incessant fire of truth that Brother Curtis hammered him with, and though he was game to the last, defeat was plainly written on his face. He never rallied after Brother Curtis so completely snowed him under on their cherished doctrine of "once in grace, always in grace." One by one, Brother Curtis drove him from every position taken on the Baptist proposition, while he failed to move Brother Curtis from a single position taken. Indeed it was a glorious victory for the truth. Elder Bogard made the usual attempt to prove Joseph Smith a polygamist, demanded proof of any modern miracles, attacked Joseph Smith's war prophecies, Jared's barges, and the Inspired Translation, in all of which he was signally defeated. He tried very hard to prove succession, but Brother Curtis broke his chain all to pieces and landed him in the Roman Catholic Church, which aroused his ire considerably. He made frantic efforts to escape, but only got deeper entangled. Brother Curtis had fine liberty and, under God, made an able defense of the truth, winning the audience and making many friends to the cause. Many are anxious to have him come back and hold a series of meetings, which would be highly appreciated by all the Saints. We hope to have the new church house ready soon for services. The building is thirty by fifty feet, with an alcove at the back. It is a house of which the Saints feel justly proud.

The Grannis Branch has had a hard struggle for its life, but a brighter day seems to be dawning. We have had many hindrances to contend with here, but even in the darkest hours God has been with us, and we feel that we will yet be comforted. The debate has left the Saints rejoicing and seemingly very much encouraged. We have a nice Sunday school, meeting for the present at the home of the writer until the new church is ready, and into which the children are anxious to move. The Saints loyally supported the debate, and all are rejoicing in the glorious victory that God has given us.

Yours in bonds,

E. YOUMANS.

RIBSTONE, ALBERTA, CANADA, January 7, 1910.

Dear Herald: Again I crave indulgence for a little space in which to let the Saints know a little bit of what is going on over in the good land, Canada. And by the way, don't let any of the over-patriotic persuade the Saints against coming into this country if they want to.

I have been hearing testimonies at prayer meeting and otherwise, ever since I came here last May, of how the Lord had led them into this country and how he has blessed them, both temporally and spiritually, since they came,—good, loyal citizens of the United States, too. I have learned to love both countries in such a way that now there is very little if any difference in my sentiments regarding them. At present I think western Canada is offering the greatest inducements for permanent success along agricultural lines of any country in the world. But don't write to me concerning a farm, for I am not in the land business and would not care for the responsibility of taking the matter up.

The cause of the church is growing in this country in an encouraging manner. Still, very few of the outside world are being gathered in. There are some, however, and the children of the Saints are coming along.

We expect to see two Religios and one Sunday school organized here and at Edgerton, as the result largely of the conventions and district conference being held here a few days ago.

And this is not all the good that has been done, by any means. Some of the afflicted in body are rejoicing because of the healing power in the church. And the souls of all have been blessed. The spirit of education and brotherly love prevailed in all the sessions, and I think that if any of the Saints were asked what they would be if they were not Latter Day Saints, they would answer that they would be ashamed of themselves.

There was quite a strong stand taken against the use of tobacco at the conference as per resolution which will appear in the secretary's report. Also a preliminary movement for the future organization of Alberta into a separate district. The distance now is two and three hundred miles for the delegates to attend the conference—too far to expect a proper representation.

The next gathering of the kind is expected to convene at Regina in June or July, according to the discretion of the presidency of the district and missionary in charge, that matter having been referred to them.

To the Saints in the district: Let us begin to arrange right now to go and make it a grand success. There are features proposed which will be announced later by those who have the matter under advisement.

Remember "Regina" is the watchword for the Saints of the district—until we get there. My address for some time will be Edgerton, Alberta.

One of the press committee,
H. J. DAVISON.

DEER ISLE, MAINE, December 20, 1909.

Editors Herald: I do not believe in being a sponge in God's work any more than in anything else, ever ready to take in all the good things of others, but never willing to contribute my mite, small and roughhewn though it may be. I think if God's children would be ready and willing at all times to use the little talent he has given them, that little will be improved upon both by ourselves and God, for it is only by doing so that we are advanced, either in this life or in the world to come.

Dear Saints, perhaps we with our limited educations, facilities, abilities, and environments, feel that we can not do much in a sin-darkened, and a sin-cursed world, in sending the beautiful gospel light that it may shine out into the hearts of mankind. And while this may be true of us, individually, yet if every Saint alive to-day would truly do his part, we as the united church of the living God, would send such a flood of light out into the world that it would not only be a power for good in saving souls, but God's kingdom would be so far advanced that in a short time the affairs which now perplex us, concerning the coming of Zion and her King, would be for ever solved, and the church of Christ placed on a surer foundation, spiritually and temporally, than ever before. That is why the Lord has admonished us to be of one heart and mind and to be united, that we may work as a whole and without division, that as a natural result our work and labors may be more productive of good results than if working singly along our own lines and ideas. There is no one in the church to-day who has not some talent, small though it may be, which if used in combination with thousands of similar talents of others, would accomplish wonders for the work, which we profess to love.

I wish to say that personally I am daily striving to overcome the snares of Satan. I am trying by God's help to overcome environments that surround me; and intend to so live that I shall have a part in Zion with the pure in heart. I shall never be satisfied to attain any glory but the highest, and I realize that in order to so attain I must keep the celestial law—the highest law. To this end, I am watching and praying, and I ask the prayers of God's dear children.

Your brother,
WALLACE A. SMALL.

HARRISBURG, ILLINOIS, December 23, 1909.

Dear Herald: I promised the Lord in prayer that if he would make my poultry prosperous this year, I would pay tithing on the profits. I believe we should always ask his blessing on all our undertakings, and then act as we have promised. I am sorry to say that I have never before paid any tithing. My daughter lives in Johnson County, Illinois, and there is a Latter Day Saints' church there. I received a letter from her saying that the church building there was up for sale. I was sorry to hear it, as I wanted to go down there sometime when there was preaching, and I thought maybe I could get some of the elders to come up here. We have not heard a true sermon for nine years. I ask the prayers of all the Saints in behalf of all my family, and that I may receive knowledge and a portion of his Spirit. Let us each and everyone try to do our best this new year and pay our tenth as we are required to do in the good books. I am waiting patiently for the arrival of the Autumn Leaves.

Your sister in the hope of the first resurrection,
MRS. MALINDA JANE HYDE.

WEST DERBY, VERMONT.

Dear Herald Editors: New Year greetings to all the dear Saints. I am unable to answer the letters of inquiry, as I can not sit up, and suffer all the time. I have been slowly failing for two years. My husband is no better and is becoming feeble-minded. I want all the dear ones to pray for us that we may be blessed with health, and that a way may be provided for us to get a living.

We have a little boy, seven years old, who has no home, his father having died three years ago. We care for him part of the time, as we can get food and clothes. He was forgotten this year. Will some one send him books and post cards? He can write a little and read in any book or paper. He is sadly abused by his stepfather. He has a weak back, but is a bright little fellow. His father was my baby brother, who died at twenty-eight. I want all to write me as letters relieve the monotony of the four walls.

God bless you all,
MRS. ROY COWLES.

Why I Became a Saint.

Because I firmly believe they teach the true gospel as the apostles did at Christ's command. What they teach is in strict harmony with the Bible teaching, and they stay by the teaching of God's word as laid down by Christ and his apostles.

As I believe, the other denominations have added to their church, and the Latter Day Saints have adhered as strictly to the rules laid down by Christ and his apostles as it is possible for them to do. There are many reasons I could bring forth to substantiate what I say, but it is enough for me to say that I feel and know that they are God's people. "Blessed are they that are persecuted for righteousness' sake." This seems to be their lot on every hand. "But," says one, "I would not be seen among them—a lot of Mormons." Dear friends; I would admonish you to consider well your words before you speak them. I myself have used the same words to the Latter Day Saints, and I am very sorry and apologize and ask forgiveness from all the Saints. Thank God, I feel it an honor to belong to them, and trust that I may be faithful to them, God helping me.

As Saints, and having entered into a new work, if I understand it rightly the weakest can do something for Christ; for instance, we will take our politicians: They look over the roll and find who is entitled to vote, and the candidate makes a special effort to see them personally. You may be sure he rings the bell mildly. If the voter is at home, all well and good; but if not his good wife appears at the door, and of course he is kindly invited to take a chair. If a baby is sitting around it will be complimented; if a puppy, there is something fine about it; if it is a flock of chickens, how beautiful; and oh, such kindnesses as are shown; but they never say, Are you converted? My opinion is that each one should try to bring some one out to meeting with him, but the majority I have noticed do nothing but pull a rope, ring a bell.

Brothers and sisters, let each one of us take the matter to heart; let us show as much interest as the politicians to bring souls out to church. We would be astonished at the results of one year's united efforts.

I was brought up a Presbyterian. You are aware they are very strict in bringing up their children. It was no exception in my case. Until twenty-one years of age I was completely under my father's control. At that age, I got an idea in my head that to be a member of the Presbyterian Church, it mattered not what I did, if I was born to be saved I would, if not I would be lost. Hence, I never joined the church. When I stated my views I was counted an unbeliever. I have been a Latter Day Saint in belief all the time, but did not know it until one year ago. I thank God with all my heart for the dear sister who was the instrument in God's hands of teaching me the doctrine of the Latter Day Saints. May God's richest blessings rest upon her. The gospel has so richly blessed me. Now I can forgive anyone who has injured me, and love my enemies.

After about four months of investigation of the gospel I could not find anything against it. On January 30, 1909, I wrote a resolution in my book to the effect that if God would show me that smoking is a sin, I would stop it, with his help. I had been a heavy smoker for forty years, but I went to my room and knelt down on my knees and asked if the latter-day gospel was true to take away all desire for tobacco, and I would join the church. The Lord took me at my word and I have not had any desire for tobacco since. This is a direct evidence to me.

OWEN SOUND, ONTARIO.

A. S. A. WHITE.

Extracts from Letters.

J. W. Davis writes from Argent's Hill, Nambucca River, New South Wales, Australia, November 25, 1909: "I am glad to say that I am being blessed in my labors in this mission."

E. E. Long, at Brodhead, Kentucky, writes: "Debate moving along nicely. Big hall packed. Roberts is laboring hard to prejudice the people. Said we were infidels, and had kicked the Bible out of existence."

News From Branches

LONDON, ONTARIO.

At the last regular meeting of the branch the following officers were elected for the coming year: President, Elder William Fligg; priest, Bro. Charles Insell; teacher, Bro. W. A. Hardey; deacon, Bro. R. Martin. Our branch is progressing favorably. Sr. Lorne Swain was baptized the beginning of the year.

Sr. Likins is home after spending the holidays with her son, Edward, at Paris.

Quite a number of the Saints met at the home of Brother and Sister Everitt to bid farewell to Sister Reader, who was leaving for British Columbia, to become the wife of Mr. Will Harrison. During the evening Sister Reader was made the recipient of a beautiful cut glass water pitcher as a parting gift.

Zion's Religio-Literary Society elected the following officers for the next term: President, Bro. J. Winegarden; vice-presidents, Bro. J. Judkins and Bro. W. A. Hardey; secretary, Bro. R. J. Farthing; treasurer, Sr. Lily Winegarden; organist, Sr. Lily Roberts; assistant organist, Sr. May Constable; janitor, Roy Moore; representative on Library Commission, Sr. Clara Hardy. The social committee entertained the Religians in a very pleasing manner the other evening with an informal program, followed by a cocoa lunch.

Much gloom has been cast over our branch by the death of Sister Moore, which occurred on Friday morning, the 14th inst. The sister was beloved by many, being a willing worker in church, Sunday school, and Religio, also a member of the choir. Brother Moore and family have the sympathy of all in their hour of sad bereavement. The funeral will be held from the church and will be in charge of Elder W. Fligg.

A general good feeling seems to be existing between the teacher and members of the young men's class of the Sunday school. At Christmas the teacher, Bro. Charles Insell, received a handsome, pearl-handled umbrella from the boys, and last Monday evening the class, together with the branch officers, were treated to an oyster supper by their teacher, at the home of Bro. Leslie O'Dell. All expressed themselves pleased with the good time had.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Branch is of good report. We are progressing; but there is room for still further improvement. Last Sunday Bishop Becker was with us all day,—four services. He occupied the morning hour. Bro. Gomer T. Griffiths arrived from Kirtland in time for the Religio. These two brethren spoke a few words to the Religians, by invitation from Bro. J. W. Topping, who has just been elected president of that society. Brother Griffiths spoke in the evening service, which was very much enjoyed by a large congregation. All services during the day were unusually well attended, despite the weather we have had lately, and the fact that the Saints' homes are somewhat scattered.

Sunday school last Sunday had the largest number of scholars present for a long while.

Midweek prayer meeting was enjoyable and in charge of Bro. G. T. Griffiths, who brought news that the Kirtland District is going to advance in the near future.

KIMBERLY AVENUE.

CHICO, CALIFORNIA.

The HERALD is an ever welcome visitor, and I am pleased to note a constant improvement in its make up.

The Chico Branch is prospering. We have a nice new church and our Sunday school is our especial pride. We have a nice attendance by those outside the faith. Bro. E. Keeler is here for a few days, and Brother Holt is with us also, which affords a splendid opportunity for the people of this place to learn the noble truths contained in the gospel of Christ.

Yours in the faith,

H. A. HINTZ.

BURLINGTON, IOWA.

We have been enjoying for the past two weeks a series of meetings conducted by Elder O. H. Bailey, of the Kewanee District. The first week was, as reported by Brother Fry, used in a debate with the Utah elders, Elder Ira A. Pace being their representative, and Brother Bailey representing the Reorganization. Opinions expressed by a number who attended were very favorable to our position, and we were all glad for the assurance with which this position was explained. The sermons following this discussion were strong and convincing doctrinal sermons, helpful to those within as well as those without. Brother Bailey has made a warm welcome for himself in Burlington, and we are quite willing to make an effort to meet his qualifications for hospitality; namely, "feed him well and have fun with him."

Our cradle roll is growing. Brother Fry told us Sunday that he had the honor to report another member for the cradle roll,—Charles, jr., who arrived January 15, about 1.30 a. m. Bro. and Sr. Moroni Duke also have a little son, and a daughter arrived in the home of Bro. and Sr. Andrew Hoverson, shortly before Christmas.

On December 29, Bro. G. E. Schweers and Sr. Sena Bierman were married at the home of Sister Bierman. Bro. Elbert A. Smith performed the ceremony. He was kept busy during his short stay of about three days, making "pastoral calls" among his former flock. We hope his next visit may be a longer one.

Bro. August Peterson came to Burlington recently, from Gladstone, Illinois, by previous arrangement with Brother Fry, and was baptized in the font here.

FALL RIVER, MASSACHUSETTS.

Fall River is a town of Massachusetts with an area of about eight square miles and an approximate population of one hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants. It is situated on the banks of the Taunton River and on the shores of a large bay.

Its principal industry is the manufacturing of cotton and woolen goods. I believe I am correct when I say that it is the largest cotton goods manufacturing city in either North or South America. Perhaps the reader of this communication may think I am somewhat proud of the town in which I live. Well, I am. "Breathes there a man with soul so dead? who never to himself hath said," etc. Undoubtedly you know the rest of the poem; so, I will not burden you with its repetition. I think a person who is ashamed of the place in which he dwells should move at the first opportunity.

We have quite a large branch of Saints here. I believe we have the third largest membership in the Massachusetts District and an average attendance that ranks second. The Massachusetts District comprises Boston, Providence, Fall River, Haverhill, Brockton, Attleboro, and Dennisport, on Cape Cod. Our primary department is the largest in the district and has at its head a very efficient superintendent, Mrs. A. H. Fielding, to whom much of the success of the department is due, not forgetting, of course, its founder and former superintendent, Mrs. W. A. Sinclair, now residing in Somerville.

We have a pastor who has the love and esteem of all who know him. One good trait in his character is his refusal to permit his position as our pastor to act as a sort of a barrier between him and us. The class of young men that he teaches, of which the writer is a member, all love him, because, as we sing at our little socials, "He's a jolly good fellow." He's all of that and more.

This letter was written for the benefit of those who are interested in what is being done by the Saints in this part of the Lord's vineyard, in fact for the benefit of every true Latter Day Saint, for every honest Saint is interested in what is being done by his brother. It makes no difference where his brother may live on this, the Lord's footstool, he will be interested in what he is doing. The superintendent of our Sunday school is but twenty-one years of age, and the president of the Religio is not that old; and one of our priests is not twenty-one years of age, as yet. It is upon the young that the success of this great latter-day work depends, and, personally, I believe that they will rise to the occasion and, profiting by the experiences of their parents and all who have preceded them, finally push this work to its completion.

With apologies for having occupied so much of your time and space and assuring you that Fall River and the branch of Saints there are still in existence and continually progressing, I have the honor to be your brother and coworker for our Lord,

ALMA M. COOMBS.

LO, THE POOR INDIAN.

A great many sentimental drops of brine have been shed in behalf of the American Indian, who is usually pictured as standing alone on a western hill, gazing into the sunset where ghostly herds of buffalo recall the good old days of the terrestrial hunting grounds that were hardly less happy than those to which the devout redskin believed the Great Spirit would conduct him in due time. The Indian is regarded by sentimental Easterners as the fast disappearing representative of a vanishing race, despoiled of his land and wasting away under the malign evils of the white man's cruel civilization. In a few more years, in the belief of the sentimentalists, the last redskin will skulk into the last forest and make his eternal exit from the stage of American life, with only the ethnological museums to show him as he was and the pages of J. Fennimore Cooper to show him as he never was.

It must come as a matter of surprise to these good people, therefore, when the commissioner of Indian affairs, in an official report, shows that there are now 300,000 Indians in the United States—40,000 more than there were twenty years ago. There are 30,000 children in the various Indian schools of the country, being taught to earn their own living. There are 25,000 Indians who are citizens of the United States and from 1,000 to 1,200 acquire citizenship every year. The Government spends $3,000,000 a year, or $100 per capita, educating the 30,000 boys and girls who are learning how to become self-sustaining.

So far from the ultimate destiny of the red man being the sadder tragedy of the sentimentalist, it will undoubtedly be that of all the other races that are being fused in this great "melting pot" of America, where the best is deposited as the residuum of American composite citizenship and all the dross is "purged away with fire," the Indian will disappear, but he will not be the unhappy victim of the white man's greed. He will add his contribution, small though it may be, to that mighty amalgam known as Americanism. Copper is a valuable alloy in more respects than one.

The readers of the HERALD, who because of their love for humanity in general and of the descendants of Manasseh in particular (if the Indians be of Manasseh, as some suppose), will be pleased with the foregoing presentation which appears in the editorial column of the Kansas City Journal of January 20. It seems to us that it is somewhere stated that the remnant will become a delightful people. If the red man loses his warlike disposition, learns the arts of peace, becomes a citizen of the United States, as other nationalities may do, living in peace, and becoming part of the great American Republic, he will become a delightful people, using the term red man in a generic sense.

There is work going on among some of the descendants of the red men in what used to be known as the Indian Territory, which work can be easily extended when the church is in condition to do so. It is difficult to reach the wards of the Government, because of the impediments thrown in the way by the denominational prejudice against the faith of the church. These denominations, while mourning church decadence and poorness of the spirit felt among the membership, are very much afraid to allow real gospel to be taught to those who they seem to claim are lying in their just field of occupation.

THE WORK IN TORONTO.

By letter from Bro. R. C. Evans under date of January 18, 1910, we learn that his opening in the Majestic Theater in Toronto was defeated. The syndicate controlling the Majestic, resident in New York, were not satisfied with the action of their agent at Toronto in renting the theater to the Saints for their campaign, and on Brother Evans' return from Saint Thomas, where he went to preach a funeral sermon, he found a message awaiting him, to call up the Majestic. There he learned that they had turned down his appointment for the 16th. Of course he waited upon the agent, and the outcome was that they returned the money which had been taken for the rent of the Majestic, paid for the expenses of advertising for the 16th, and the deal was off. A lawyer friend advised Brother Evans that he could probably collect damages, but that it would be a tedious process and would not pay in the long run, and advised him to secure another place. Pursuing this advice Brother Evans secured the Princess Theater, located on King street, at a point where the cars stop and conductors call the name of the theater, and pushing his advertisements and invitation to the public he had the theater crowded to the doors, except the upper gallery, which for some reason was not open, so that many who sought an entrance could not be accommodated.

Brother Evans expresses his gratitude that the interest is good, and is very hopeful that the audiences as heretofore will meet the expense, though this will be larger at the Princess than at the Majestic. Every reader who is interested in the spread of the gospel ought to be thankful that the zeal and energy of Bro. R. C. Evans are still equal to the emergency of preaching the gospel in so large a city.

It is a difficult thing to secure a suitable place in a large city, and to bear the continued expense of keeping up such an opening, and Brother Evans is entitled to considerable credit for having secured so good an interest in so large a city as Toronto. We trust that his health will not fail, and the attendance of the Holy Spirit may be with the congregation, that this new effort with the Saints there may accomplish great additional results.

CONVICT NO. 6861.

On a little iron cot in a cell in the Federal Prison here, (Leavenworth), John R. Walsh, who to-day began serving a five-year sentence for misapplying the funds of the Chicago National Bank, spent his first night in the penitentiary. He has accepted the situation with smiling good grace. . . .

His number was already waiting for him. It is 6861. When he was measured and photographed in the Bertillon room later in the day, that number, on a tag, was attached to the collar of his gray coat. Afterward it was stamped in figures three inches tall on the back of that garment, across the shoulders. The figures are no brighter, the cloth they are stamped upon is no finer; they tell no more of the man's past nor of his future, than the figures on the back of the meanest felon in the great, somber prison house.

The case of Convict No. 6861 suggests many thoughts. It is a melancholy spectacle to see a man seventy-two years old sentenced to the penitentiary for five years. His age and his former high station in life make his present degradation all the more appalling.

And yet it is encouraging to note that justice has made no exception of the man because of wealth, position, or influence.

"The man on the street" (of whom we hear so much) frequently charges that it is impossible to reach the rich malefactor; that he is able to hire the best legal talent, and fighting from court to court, finally escape on a technicality or by way of a fixed judge or jury.

On the other hand the man at the mahogany desk retorts that there is a stubborn prejudice in the public mind against corporations and individuals of wealth; that the average jury is eager to condemn them on general principles.

We do not undertake to say who is right in this matter. Perhaps both are right in some cases; we hope that both are wrong in most cases.

Be that as it may, Convict No. 6861, formerly a power in financial circles, is now serving his term, despite money and influence, just as any other criminal might. And we note that there are now in the one prison (the Federal Prison at Leavenworth) where he is confined, twenty-nine other ex-bankers and bank clerks serving time, their sentences ranging from three to fifteen years.

A degraded and almost friendless criminal by old-time orthodox methods breaks into a bank, cracks the safe, and makes away with its contents. Another man, a rich and influential director, with the aid of modern, obscure, and devious methods, wrecks another big financial concern and emerges from the ruins with a large sum of the people's money concealed upon his person.

No invidious distinction should be made. Both are thieves. The consequences of the last named transaction are surely as serious and widespread as the consequences of the first named can be.

Paul O. Stensland, president of the Milwaukee Avenue State Bank of Chicago, with the help of the cashier, wrecked the bank, making away with one million, three hundred thousand dollars. He has just completed a term in the Joliet prison. Stensland did not rob one man,—he robbed twenty-two thousand men, women, and children, many of them very poor people who had, by strict economy, saved a little money for a rainy day. As a result of his crime, the bank paying teller and three of the defrauded depositors committed suicide, another died from worry, and four were adjudged insane.

When a strong and influential man, standing high in the community, trusted by all, goes wrong, he possesses terrible possibilities for evil. His punishment should at least be as severe as that meted out to an ordinary criminal. No influence should be permitted to shield him from justice. On the other hand he should not be hated or persecuted merely because he has been rich. The same pity and charity should be extended toward him that should be extended toward any unfortunate man who has erred and fallen.

A MIGHTY PROJECT.

By an item of news published a few days since in the Kansas City Journal, we learn that a syndicate of New York and Boston capitalists has been formed to finance the building of a dam across the Mississippi River at Keokuk, Iowa, at the foot of the Des Moines Rapids. The news item stated that plans for the dam contemplated a length of five thousand, eight hundred feet, something over a mile, a height of thirty-seven feet, with an embedment in the solid rock of seven feet at the bottom of the Mississippi, and that it would form a lake some thirty miles in length, which would make it reach from Keokuk to within a short distance of Burlington, Iowa.

Bishop Kelley informed us a day or two ago that he had received from the managing authorities papers covering a request for signature of consent and release from damage to the property held by the church at Nauvoo from the building of this dam. The property held by the church and members thereof lies on the river bank at the foot of Main street, and at that point the waters of the dam are not likely to reach the property to do it any material damage.

It will be remembered that these lower rapids, called the Des Moines Rapids, are the last in the Mississippi River between Saint Paul and Saint Louis, that they have formed the one formidable impediment to the navigation of the Mississippi River. The others, situated somewhere about Rock Island, are called the "upper rapids." The fall from the first rapids, or what is sometimes called the upper chain to Keokuk, is some twenty-four or twenty-five feet. The banks on either side of the river, with the exception of a creek or two which may be affected by backwater, are high and rocky in formation, and for the greater part of the way on the Illinois side, the bluffs extend from the water side up to the table land. There is a portion on the Iowa side, however, between Montrose and Fort Madison, where the Skunk River enters the river, where considerable land is likely to be overflowed.

It is stated that this dam will be the second largest dam in the world, the first being the one across the Nile at Assouan, Egypt, built by the British Government for the purpose of irrigation, and reclaiming a great tract of arable land which has been turned over to the native fellahs for occupation for agricultural purposes. The backwaters of this dam have infringed upon some of the monuments of the past erected along the banks of the Nile, but the good which has accrued to the present occupants far outweighs those relics of the ancient past.

The dam at Keokuk, however, is to be built not for irrigation purposes but for the purpose of creating a great water power, to be used by the cities along the Mississippi River as their necessities may require for electric lighting and for mechanical purposes. It is said that already there are in sight as available contracts for two hundred thousand horsepower at Saint Louis.

It may have passed out of memory, but it is a fact that just before and at the time the Saints were driven from Illinois, a movement was on foot to create a water power just below Nauvoo, by the cutting of a canal across the eastern edge of the flat of the point which extended into the bend of the Mississippi River to the west, and throwing out of a wing dam from some little distance below the city, and thus bringing the water into a sluiceway where the power could be used to great advantage. Had the people been left there unmolested, this would undoubtedly have been done many years ago. We certainly wish the present enterprise great success.

"All things to all men' is a good motto, but it needs guardings."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

During the past week appalling floods have devastated Paris. The river Seine is higher than at any time since 1615. Sewers and subways are flooded causing streets to cave in so that great sections of the city are rendered uninhabitable while other sections are submerged. Bursting gas mains leave people without light or heat. Food supplies are cut off and rich and poor suffered alike from cold and hunger. The gay, wicked, and frivolous city is in a pitiable condition. The disaster bids fair to take its place in the annals of latter-day history with other terrible catastrophies, such as the destruction of San Francisco.

No doubt many are wondering why they have not received their Jubilee HERALD. The manager and editors deplore the delayed appearance of this special number, but the situation can not be helped. The delay in receiving a special consignment of paper of a better grade than that ordinarily used in the HERALD is responsible for the nonappearance of the issue on time. The number will be printed on a good grade of paper with enameled cover. It will contain fifty-two pages instead of forty-eight as advertised. Lack of space compelled the editors to omit one article that was advertised. It will appear later. We are sure that our readers will enjoy the Jubilee Number and will feel repaid for their waiting.

The Woodbine Chronicle, of Woodbine, Iowa, in its issue of January 20, contained a refutation of the Banditti of the Prairies by Elder Heman C. Smith. This story, by Captain Bonney, is being reprinted serially in many of the country papers throughout the Middle West. We sincerely wish every reader of this book or story could read the Church Historian's article in refutation of the misrepresentations of Mr. Bonney.

A copy of the Sunday Standard, New Bedford, Massachusetts, reaches us. It contains a three and a half column write-up of our work in that city, and shows a picture of Bro. John F. Rogerson, pastor, and the church which the Saints expect soon to dedicate. Such recognition speaks much for the brethren and sisters at that place.

We believe HERALD readers should be broad-minded enough not to think that something appearing in our paper is of no value simply because they see nothing of worth therein. We are in receipt of many communications from our friends from Maine to California and we believe that on the whole our conduct and management are approved. But there are a few who have made complaints in regard to certain things which we have published. Now we believe these parties should bear in mind that quite likely the very thing they most object to is the source of the most comfort and satisfaction to others. We also want to remind some of them that it is an unwarranted and false supposition that we are promoting, advancing, or giving credence to every belief or theory which may appear from time to time by way of personal contribution or of reprint in our department of General Interest. We believe a little reflection sometimes will present to our readers the reason for an article's appearance.

Bro. F. R. Tubb writes: "Editors Herald: Latter Day Saints of every school of thought throughout the civilized world will be interested to learn that according to the most elaborate and recent computations (based upon the comet's present R. A. or Right Ascension), Halley's comet will reach its perihelion exactly on Wednesday, April 6, 1910, a conclusion which more than once flashed across my mind while penning my essay upon that comet for your columns, but which I did not then consider possible. I may add that on May 10 the comet will be just one thousand, one hundred and seventy-two times as large and as brilliant as it will appear on February 3."

"It is true that there are scores of millions of Asiatics who believe that happiness is to be found in the extinction of consciousness, or Nirvana, the end of separate existence and of struggle. This belief, very appropriately is confined to races that have fallen behind in the race, sunk into servitude and domination by foreigners. Such a belief is not fit even for life on this planet. Certainly, it can not be considered worthy of universal, eternal life."

"No one has really good manners who does not practice courtesy habitually."

Hymns and Poems

THE SHADOW OF THE CROSS.

(Elizabeth Clephane has written only two well known hymns, the one here given and the celebrated "Ninety and nine," and to both of them Mr. Ira D. Sankey composed the tunes, which have had much to do with their popularity and general use. Miss Clephane lived at Melrose, Scotland. She was born in 1830 and died in 1869.)

Beneath the cross of Jesus
I fain would take my stand,
The shadow of a mighty rock
Within a weary land;
A home within a wilderness,
A rest upon the way,
From the burning of the noontide heat,
And the burden of the day.
Upon that cross of Jesus
Mine eye at times can see
The very dying form of one
Who suffered there for me;

And from my smitten heart with tears
Two wonders I confess—
The wonders of his glorious love
And my own worthlessness.

I take, O cross, thy shadow
For my abiding place;
I ask no other sunshine than
The sunshine of his face;
Content to let the world go by
To know no gain nor loss,
My sinful self my only shame,
My glory all the cross.

WRITE THEM A LETTER TO-NIGHT.

Don't go to the theater, concert or ball,
But stay in your room to-night,
Deny yourself to the friends that call,
And a good long letter write.
Write to the sad old folks at home
Who sit when the day is done
With folded hands and downcast eyes
And think of the absent one.

Don't selfishly scribble, "Excuse my haste,
I have scarcely time to write,"
Lest their drooping thoughts go wandering back
To many a by-gone night—
When they lost their needed sleep and rest
And every breath was a prayer,
That God would leave their darling babe
To their tender love and care.

Don't let them feel you have no more heed
Of their love or their counsel wise;
For hearts grow strangely sensitive,
When age has dimmed the eyes.
It might be well to make them feel
That you never forget them quite,—
That you deem it a pleasure, when far away,
A good letter home to write.

Don't think that the young and giddy friends
Who make your pastime gay,
Have half the anxious thought for you
That the old folks have to-day,
Postpone not the duty of writing home,
Let sleep or pleasure wait,
Lest the letter for which they looked and longed
Be a day or an hour too late.

The sad old folks back there at home,
With locks fast turning white,
Are longing to hear from the absent one—
Write them a letter to-night.

(A heart throb to young folks away from home. Contributed by Bro. John Grainger.)

BECAUSE.

Because of thy flower, O bush with thorn,
Thou hast a place in my garden fair;
Because of thy blessings, O trial, O storm,
Doth most mortals of thee richly share.

JOSEPH A. FERRIS.

The Straight Road

THE OLD PATHS.

ELDER S. M. REISTE.

(Jeremiah 6: 16-20.)

Oh, stand ye in the ways and see
The paths of pleasantness;
The good old ways that used to be,—
The paths the Lord doth bless.

The thorny path thy feet hath trod
Doth fill thy soul with pain;
Oh! why not turn and seek thy God,
His grace and love obtain?

Are pleasures found in paths of sin?
There's more in ways of truth;
When Jesus Christ doth dwell within,
Be thou in age or youth.

Sweet comfort thou shalt always find,
For Jesus loves to bless
The soul that comes with cheerful mind
Their sins to him confess.

But, O! the sadness of their words,
"We will not walk therein," We'd rather have our own sweet will,
And walk in paths of sin.

And though we know result of sin
Is banishment from God,
We'd rather with the foolish walk,
Than where the Saints have trod.

For we do crave the world's esteem
More than the praise of God;
We'll wait till just the week before
We pass beneath the sod.

'Tis time enough to get real good
To tread the narrow way;
The broad way lures enticingly,
It makes us want to stay.

"Therefore," saith God, "I'll bring the fruit
Of evil on thy head;
With stumbling-blocks thy path I'll fill,
For now thy soul is dead.

"For thou hast rather chosen death
Than life eternally,
And evil rather than the good,
Ne'er can thy soul be free."

O! come ye to the Lord, thy God,
And leave the paths of sin;
Believe his word, his prophets, too,
Then peace shall reign within.

His law to thee is just the same
As 'twas in days of old;
He revelations gives to bring Thee back unto the fold.

"For line on line, and line on line,
Precept on precept be;
When thou art weary, sick of sin,
O! then, come unto me.

"I'll give thee rest, and joy, and peace,
I'll fill thy soul with food;
I'll make thee heir to thrones above,
I'll fill thy life with good."

IS BAPTISM IN WATER A SAVING ORDINANCE?

The safest way of examining this question is to do it in the light of God's word. It is written, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8: 20. No believer in the Scriptures doubts the divine mission of Christ. He was God's messenger. It was written of him, "He whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him."—John 3: 34. He said, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel."—Luke 4: 18. And Paul says, "The gospel is the power of God unto salvation."—Romans 1: 16. Hence, whatever is found to be a part of Christ's teachings must have in it the tendency to salvation. For he says, "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me."—John 7: 16. Again, "I have not spoken of myself; but the Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak. And I know that his commandment is life everlasting."—John 12: 49, 50. Paul speaks of baptism as one of the doctrines of Christ (Hebrews 6). Christ set us the pattern by obeying it (Matthew 3). He administered it (John 3: 22, 26). He commanded his apostles to baptize (Matthew 28: 19). He promised salvation as a result of obedience: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."—Mark 16: 15, 16.

The gospel of Christ may be compared to a chain intended for a special purpose, and must be of a certain length. If one of the links is missing the chain is imperfect, and unsuited for the purpose intended. James calls the gospel the perfect law of liberty (James 1:25). Take away one link or principle of the law and the chain is imperfect. If it is to be the power of God unto salvation, every principle must be there, and in order to bring the desired results, every principle must be obeyed. It is written, "Whosoever shall, save in one point, keep the whole law, is guilty of all."—James 2: 10, Inspired Translation. Jesus said, "It becometh us to fulfill all righteousness" (Matthew 3), and after he was baptized of water he was baptized of the Holy Ghost, thus receiving the divine approval for his willing obedience. Christ taught that man must be born again. Nicodemus could not understand the great mystery of the new birth. Jesus explained it to him, saying, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of God."—John 3: 5. If we are not in the kingdom of God we are in the kingdom of Satan, hence unsaved.

Baptism is the form of divine covenant to be made between God and man. God covenants to give eternal life to all who serve him. Man, in the act of being buried with Christ in baptism, covenants to yield all the powers of his being, body and spirit, to the service of God, and in that act manifests that he believes in him with his whole heart, and repents, forsakes his sins, and looks unto God through Christ, for the forgiveness of his sins. Hence, if we keep our part of the covenant, we shall be saved in the kingdom of God. "For he is faithful that promised."—Hebrews 10: 23. But as John taught the Sadducees and Pharisees to "bring forth fruits meet for repentance," so we must show by forsaking our sins that we are fit subjects for baptism, or God will not acknowledge us, "For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him."—Hebrews 11: 6. Christ said, "I say unto you, That except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven."—Matthew 5: 20. "But the Pharisees and lawyers rejected the counsel of God against themselves, being not baptized of him."—John.

Reader, beware lest you should reject the counsel of God and thereby be shut out of the kingdom of God. In harmony with Christ's teaching to Nicodemus, Paul says, "He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 5. Again, speaking of the church, he "gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word."—Ephesians 5: 25, 26. From the above Scripture we learn that baptism in water is a divine ordinance, and when we yield loyal obedience to it, we are purged from our old sins and become the children of God, but without obedience we have no claim upon his mercies, for Christ "became the author of salvation unto all them that obey him."—Hebrews 5: 9. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16. "If a man love me, he will keep my words."—John 14. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not my commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him."—1 John 2: 4. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."—Revelation 22: 14.

"DON'T BE DISCOURAGED IF YOUR FORTUNES ARE IN TEMPORARY ECLIPSE. The savage is in despair when the sun goes into the moon's shadow, for he thinks that some monster has swallowed it, and that there will never be any daylight again. But to the astronomer an eclipse is merely an interesting opportunity to make scientific observations. Be as sure of the coming of daylight as the astronomer is, and your moments of darkness will trouble you no more than his trouble him."

Original Articles

THE VISIONS OF MRS. WHITE.

HAVE THEY BEEN CHANGED?

The writer is aware of the fact that some statements of the Seventh-day Adventists, especially those of Mrs. White, are so fanatical and childish they are not worth a reply. But since they make the claim that the Adventists are the only right church (here in fulfillment of prophecy to present the third angel's message of Revelation 13 and that all Protestantism is Babylon), I deem it right and proper to examine some of their written works that have been given to the world by Mrs. White, their high priestess or prophetess, whom they acknowledge as the "feeble instrument" through which God speaks to the Adventists. It is evident their doctrine is not clearly deducible from the Holy Scriptures, hence wholly negative and contradictory, as we have to depend on the visions of Mrs. White, the prophetess, for its confirmation. Perhaps a statement from her in the commencement of this article will be in order, so that we will have a better understanding of her position regarding the revelations she has given to the world:

In ancient times God spoke to men by the mouth of prophets and apostles. In these days he speaks to them by the Testimonies [of Mrs. White and no one else.—J. D. S.] of his Spirit.—Testimonies, vol. 4, p. 148.

If you lose confidence in the Testimonies, you will drift away from Bible truth.—Testimonies, vol. 5, p. 98.

So it is of paramount importance then that we be careful in the consideration of these Testimonies given to the Seventh-day Adventists, but we urge the reader to turn to Malachi 3:6 and Hebrews 1:1, 2 and see if Mrs. White's inspiration is from the right source. We do not deny the truth taught in the Bible, that God placed prophets in the church—and they are there yet; but we do deny the genuineness of the so-called revelations of Mrs. White, and that God has anything to do with this false system.

For the benefit of those who believe the Adventists did not set the time for Christ to come in 1844, or taught "set time," we ask a careful consideration of this article, for there is indubitable evidence on record that they predicted their faith on the shut-door theory—no salvation after 1844. Their disappointment on the above date was indeed a great and bitter one, and finally resulted in a great many giving up their faith and hope, believing that they had been imposed upon.

EARLY WRITINGS CHANGED.

"Prove all things," is a divine injunction, and we commence by an examination of the Early Writings of Mrs. White, published by the Seventh-day Adventists at Battle Creek, Michigan, in 1882. It is this book that we compare with the 1847 edition.

Let the reader keep in mind these two volumes as we investigate her claims as a prophetess of God. In the publisher's preface of this book we find the following:

For still another reason we take peculiar pleasure in its republication. Our opponents have been wont to make loud claims that there was a desire and an attempt to suppress these views, because the work has been so long out of print. The presence of this book will be a sufficient refutation of this charge.

The last sentence of this preface reads: "The verbal changes have been made under the author's eye and with her full approval."

In the Advent Review of December 26, 1882, we find an article from the pen of Elder G. I. Butler, under the caption, "A book long desired." The importance of purchasing this book is urged in this article, and from it we take the following quotation:

These were the very first of the published writings of Sister White. . . . Many have greatly desired to have in their possession all she has written for publication. . . . So strong was the interest to have these early writings reproduced that several years ago the General Conference recommended by vote that they be republished. The volume under consideration is the result of this interest. It meets a want long felt. . . . There is another interesting feature connected with this matter. The enemies of this cause, who have spared no pains to break down the faith of our people in the testimonies of God's Spirit, and the interest felt in the writings of Sister White, have made all the capital possible from the fact that her early writings were not attainable. They have said many things about our "suppressing" these writings, as if we were ashamed of them. They have tried to make it appear that there was something objectionable about them, that we feared would come to the light of day, and that we carefully kept them in the background. These lying insinuations have answered their purpose in deceiving some unwary souls. They now appear in their real character by the publication of several thousand copies of this "suppressed" book, which our enemies pretended we were very anxious to conceal. They have claimed to be very anxious to obtain these writings to show up their supposed errors. They now have the opportunity. [Italics Elder Butler's.]

From the above quotation the following points are clear:

First. The Early Writings of Mrs. White were republished under her eye and with her full approval.

Second. They contain all her early visions.

Third. That those who have made the claim her early visions were "suppressed" are not liars, not all of them having been republished.

We now have their claims before the reader in as clear a light as we are able to put them. But right here we desire to call the attention of the reader to what Elder Uriah Smith says about suppressing her visions:

If anything was really suppressed, it was only things which "related to particular and local circumstances," and which had long ago "accomplished their object."—Visions of Mrs. White, by Uriah Smith, 1868, pp. 122-127; Seventh-day Adventism, by Rev. E. P. Woodward, p. 69.

We now call attention to these suppressed revelations (?) of Mrs. White. This book under consideration does not contain all her early visions. That some portions of these early visions have been suppressed can be proven beyond a doubt, and any statement to the contrary is absolutely false, and the publishers and Mrs. White themselves come under the heading of these "lying insinuations" and no one else.

On page 9 of this book we find this heading, "My first vision," and from a footnote we learn this vision was published in 1846. Now, perhaps the publishers of this book, and Mrs. White, did not know that there are still a few copies left of a little tract entitled, "A word to the little flock," by Elder James White, published in 1847, which contains this same vision in which they claim it was first published in the Day Star about the year 1846, "by the request of friends." We commence reading this first vision and as we read down thirty-three lines we find that the late work agrees with the one published in 1847, with only a few slight changes. But lo, there is something wrong. The new book does not read like the one of 1847, for at the end of the thirty-third line there are four lines suppressed or omitted that read as follows:

It was just as impossible for them (those that gave up their faith in the 1844 movement) to get on the path again and go to the city, as all the wicked world which God had rejected. They fell all along the path, one after another. [Italics mine.]

Now this teaches the shut-door error, "for it was just as impossible" to reclaim these apostates as it was to save the wicked world which God had rejected. How does this harmonize with the Holy Scriptures that teach the universal love and fatherhood of God? Mrs. White may have been "shown" this in vision, but it is antagonistic to the teachings of Holy Writ. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life," says the Crown of Writings in John 3:16. God said to the Israelites, "Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die?" But since then Mrs. White has changed her mind on this doctrine, for in a late work entitled, Christ our Savior, she says to all those out of Christ, "To doubt the possibility of your salvation, is to doubt the saving power of Him who purchased you at an infinite cost."

Grand thought, isn't it? If at that period "God had rejected the wicked world," why their strenuous efforts now to convert sinners after the Methodist and Baptist fashion? Seems as though the publishers and Mrs. White were afraid this vision "would come to the light of day" and carefully "kept it in the background." But Mrs. White was young then; now she is older and knows better.

In another vision she says, "The time for their salvation is past." Mark you, reader, they expected the Lord to come in 1844, for it is evident they not only believed it but taught it. That this was the belief of the Adventists then is evident from an extract from the Review and Herald, dated June 11, 1861, and signed by nine of their ministers:

Our views of the work before us were then mostly vague and indefinite, some still retaining the idea adopted by the body of Advent believers in 1844, with William Miller at their head, that our work for the world was finished, and that the message was confined to those of the original Advent faith. So firmly was this believed that one of our number was nearly refused the message, the individual presenting it having doubts of the possibility of his salvation, because he was not in the 1844 movement.

This needs no comment, as it is plain to every intelligent reader that the doctrine of the shut-door error is herein set forth, but since then she and her followers have renounced that doctrine, hence its suppression and denial.

Again, we turn to this book "with verbal changes" made with Mrs. White's "full approval," and we read down seventy-two lines, finding same correct; but here is an omission or suppression which reads as follows:

And as we were gazing at the glories of the place our eyes were attracted upward to something that had the appearance of silver. I asked Jesus to let me see what was within there. In a moment we were winging our way upwards; and entering in, here we saw good old father Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Noah, Daniel, and many like them. And I saw a veil with a heavy fringe of silver and gold, as a border; it was very beautiful. I asked Jesus what was within the veil. He raised it with his own right arm, and bade me take heed. I saw there a glorious ark overlaid with pure gold; and it had a glorious border, resembling Jesus' crowns, and on it were two bright angels; their wings were spread over the ark, as they sat on each end with their faces turned toward each other and looking downward. In the ark beneath, where the angels' wings were spread, was a golden pot of manna of a yellowish cast, and I saw a rod which Jesus said was Aaron's. I saw it bud, blossom, and bear fruit. And I saw two long golden rods on which hung silver wires, and on the wires was glorious grapes; one cluster was more than a man here could carry. And I saw Jesus step up and take the manna, almonds, grapes, and pomegranates, and bear them down to the city, and place them on the supper table. I stepped up to see how much was taken away, and there was just as much left, and we shouted hallelujah, Amen. We all descended from this place down into the city.

Surely this wonderful revelation has no "special application to circumstances," because it is just as universal or general in its application as any of her "I was shown" revelations. Grapes growing on silver stems attached to golden rods(?)

Seventh-day Adventists know that if a part of this vision is from the Lord, all of it is, and she or no one else has any right to suppress any portion of it. The Adventists teach that "Death is a condition of total unconsciousness," yet in this vision she sees "good old father Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Noah, Daniel, and many like them." God would not reveal to Mrs. White something that was untrue, and he either made a mistake or Mrs. White at that time believed in the immortality of the spirit.

In Testimonies, volume 5, page 61, she says:

The instructions I have given by pen or voice have been expressions of the light God has given me.

I do not write one article in the paper expressing merely my own ideas. They are what God has opened before me in vision—the precious rays of light shining from the throne.—Ibid., vol. 31, p. 63.

You see, dear reader, this vision of father Abraham and others in heaven is from the Lord, notwithstanding that childish and silly expression, "on the wires were glorious grapes." As we peruse this tangled web of Adventism we call to mind a verse of poetry:

"He [she] wired in and wired out,
Leaving the people still in doubt;
Whether the snake that made the track,
Was going south or coming back."

Jeremiah says: "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran. I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied."—23: 16, 21.

Of William Miller she writes: "Angels of God repeatedly visited that chosen one [Miller], to guide his mind and open to his understanding prophecies which had ever been dark to God's people" [dark to the Adventist people and to no one else].—Spiritual Gifts, vol. 1, p. 93. September 9, 1846, in Life of Miller, page 381, two and one half years after the set time, Miller says: "I readily confess that I was misled in my calculations." "I am much sorely disappointed."—Page 383. Miller was then mistaken. The angels of God did not "repeatedly visit him" to guide his mind in the false doctrine of the shut-door theory. Shades of William Miller and Mrs. White! Is this doctrine deducible from the wonderful revelations of God? Nay, verily, "no man knoweth the day nor the hour of his coming."

Again, we turn to page 26 of this same book, and we find another vision given to her followers in 1847, at Topsham, Maine. This is a very lengthy one. The first two pages are a verbatim report of the old copy published by Elder James White, in 1847, entitled, "A word to the little flock." (See page 19, "Word to the little flock.")

On the third page of the Early Writings there are two suppressions—four lines near the top of the page and eight lines at the bottom. The first one reads.

And if one believed and kept the Sabbath and received the blessing attending it, and then gave up and broke the holy commandment they would shut the gates of the Holy City against themselves as sure as there was a God that rules in the heaven above.

The second one reads:

I saw all that would not receive the mark of the beast, and of his image, in their foreheads, or in their hands, could not buy or sell. I saw that the number (666) of the image beast was made up; and that it was the beast that changed the Sabbath, and the image beast had followed on after, and kept the Pope's, and not God's sabbath, and all we have to do, was to give up God's Sabbath, and keep the pope's and then we should have the mark of the beast, and of his image.

This is another omission from their late work. She here teaches, if anything, the beast that was numbered is the two-horned beast, or the image, as she terms it. But her apologist, Uriah Smith, in "Thoughts on the revelation," says that the ten-horned beast is the beast that is numbered and applies it to the papacy. The above passage teaches a doctrine contrary to their present views on the subject. Therefore they repudiate this portion of the vision by not copying it in full from the 1847 edition.

On page 29 there is another vision entitled, "The sealing." She had this vision January 5, 1849. It bears her own signature and is headed: "To those who are receiving the seal of the living God." This vision in the 1847 edition consisted of one hundred and six lines, but in the publication of the Early Writings there are nineteen lines omitted, which read as follows:

I saw the state of some who stood on present truth, but disregarded the visions, the way God had chosen to teach in some cases those who erred from Bible truth. I saw that in striking against the visions they did not strike against the worm, the feeble instrument that God spake through, but against the Holy Ghost. I saw that it was a small thing to speak against the instrument, but it was dangerous to slight the words of God. I saw that if they were in error and God chose to show them their errors through visions, and they disregarded the teachings of God through visions they would be left to take their own way, and run in the way of error and think they were right until they would find it out too late; then in the time of trouble I heard them cry to God in agony—Why didst thou not show us our wrongs that we might have got right and been ready for this time? Then an angel pointed to them and said, My Father taught, but you would not be taught—he spake through visions, but you disregarded his voice and he gave you up to your own ways to be filled with your own doings.

Here is a fearful warning against those who disregard her visions. Now, if opposing them is to "strike against the Holy Ghost," all of her writings should have been prefaced with this message. But have not the publishers "struck against the Holy Ghost" since they have omitted the above portion of the vision we have referred to? Mrs. White herself has "struck against the Holy Ghost," since it was done under "her eye and with her full approval" in making the suppression of the vision. This makes fifty-nine lines that have been omitted from the Early Writings of Mrs. White. They are omitted in Experience and Views, of 1851, Spiritual Gifts, of 1859, and Early Writings of Mrs. White, 1882, hence not all the early writings of Mrs. White are in this volume. How does this fact compare with the statement of Elder G. I. Butler that the late work "contains all the early writings of Mrs. White"?

We wish to call the attention of the reader to another vision she had at Camden, New York, June 29, 1851, bearing her own signature. This vision is quite lengthy, and I only quote a part as follows:

Then I saw that Jesus prayed for his enemies, but that should not cause us or lead us to pray for the wicked world whom God had rejected— . . . but now his Spirit and sympathy were withdrawn from the world, and our sympathy must be with Jesus and must be withdrawn from the ungodly.

How does this compare with their present attitude toward the "ungodly"? Have the Seventh-day Adventists ministers withdrawn their sympathy from the "ungodly" in teaching them that unless they repent and keep the fourth commandment of the decalogue, annihilation will be their doom? Looks as though a few more of the "ungodly" would have to be converted to the doctrine of the Sabbath and mortal soulism to make up that one hundred and forty-four thousand that the Adventists will finally have to number, according to their doctrine. Whether it is deducible or not makes no difference with the Seventh-day Adventists. Ad nauseam. She neither speaks apropos nor ex cathedra.

"Oh, what a tangled web they weave,
Who practice solely to deceive!"

Dear reader, we are to try all things by the law. "To the law and the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isaiah 8:20. "By their fruits ye shall know them."—Jesus. "Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you, . . . let him be accursed."—Galatians 1:8.

There is not a line in all the writings of Mrs. White that would indicate that she is a prophetess of God. Her work has not been confirmed by the signs following the believer. She has not given to the world any prophecies that have had an intelligent application and fulfillment. All her visions are prefaced with the doubtful language, "I was shown," not, "Thus saith the Lord," or, "Thus saith the Spirit." True, at one time an attempt was made to gain some credit for her by publishing a vision of the battle of Bull Run after it was fought and the result well known. But it was so absurd the Adventists never repeat it. Oh, yes, she could describe and tell all about this battle after the struggle was over, but could not tell beforehand of Lee's surrender to Grant, or of President Lincoln's assassination. (See Mrs. White's Claims to Divine Inspiration Examined, by H. E. Carver, who was all through the Advent delusion in 1844 when they taught the shut-door error, pages 7, 23, 24, second edition, 1877.) But it makes no difference how many suppressions and contradictions we show in these so-called visions and testimonies to the church—contradictory and of human origin—her followers are so drunken on the wine of her sorceries they fail to see in her teachings the many contradictions and absurdities which show she is not inspired of God.

In Testimony 31, page 62, Sister White says:

If you lessen the confidence of God's people He has sent them, you are rebelling against God as certainly as were Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

"As Christ's ambassador," she warns her people to "be careful what positions they take" in regard to her visions.

Yet now when I send you a testimony of warning and reproof, many of you declare it to be merely the opinion of Sister White. You have thereby insulted the Spirit of God. [Sin against the Holy Ghost.—J. D. S.] You know how the Lord has manifested himself through the Spirit of prophecy. [Italics mine.]

But why should prophecy be confined to her alone? It was not so in the ancient church of God, as one can see by reading the Pauline epistles, and she predicts the end of prophesying to her people in the following:

It may be that ere long all prophesyings among us will be at an end, and the voice which has stirred the people may no longer disturb their carnal slumbers.—Testimony 31, p. 73.

The Seventh-day Adventists often put out the challenge to debate the Sabbath question, but the prophetess; oh, no, you never heard of them defending her as the prophetess of the Lord. They have doctored her mental visions for several years now, so as to make them presentable, and if the reader will compare the 1847 and the 1882 editions of the Early Writings it will be seen that some portions of her visions have been altered and changed, as proved in the foregoing pages.

Oh, limited reader of God's holy word, try these latter-day delusions. Compare these teachings with those given to the Palmyra Seer. See how the Book of Mormon and the Doctrine and Covenants harmonize with the Bible, also the indisputable fact that the Latter Day Saints have never been guilty of making changes under the Seer's "own eye and with his full approval." Nay, verily, we teach the same fundamental principles now that were taught in the incipency of the church. On the other hand, see the discord, revising their formulated system by suppressing certain portions of her Mental Visions for fear they would "come to the light of day." Truly we are in the time of the end. Ye ministers of God, called by revelation, turn on the gospel light, that it may throw light around those who are blinded over the doctrine of the shut-door theory, the fourth commandment, the third angel's message, the two-horned beast, is the humble and sincere prayer of the writer.

JAMES D. SCHOFIELD.

THE CONSTITUTION OF GOD'S GOVERNMENT.

The constitution is a law or enactment of God himself, to which all other laws or enactments, to be of force, must agree. It is the foundation law of God's universal kingdom, and of his church. It is the foundation law of the church militant and the church triumphant. Every law or enactment that does not harmonize therewith should be declared unconstitutional. Such a law or rule can be of no force whatever in the church of God, either on earth or in heaven.

Then one of them, which was a lawyer, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying, Master, which is the great commandment in the law? Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.—Matthew 22: 35-40.

The word hang as used by the Savior may be understood as "supporting all others; to be self-consistent; to rest for support, depend; connection; the manner in which one part hangs upon another."

Love to God and love to mankind is the highest, deepest, widest, and the greatest law in existence, and is the constitution of God's government.

The patriarchs, prophets, and apostles builded upon the same foundation; which evidently was the pure love of God. "Charity is the pure love of Christ, and abideth for ever." "Charity never faileth. And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." God loved the world, and gave his Son to save it (John 3: 16, 17). Christ loved God and was obedient unto death, even the death of the cross (Philippians 2: 8). Christ loved the world and gave himself for it (John 12: 32).

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you.—John 15: 13, 14.

The housewife hangs her clothes on the line until they are ready to be taken down, when the line is ready to be used again. So, when the law was fulfilled the old covenant was abrogated; Christ took it out of the way, nailing it to the cross. (See Colossians 2: 14-17.) Yet the great commandment, love to God and man, was in full force, which is the foundation of the "new covenant," the gospel of Christ, which is "the power of God unto salvation."

Those who are not the children of the new covenant are all aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world.—Ephesians 2: 12.

For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all.—Romans 11: 32.

What then? Are we better than they? No, in no wise: for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles, that they are all under sin; as it is written, There is none righteous, no, not one.—Romans 3: 9, 10.

But the scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith [religion] of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe.—Galatians 3: 22.

When the gospel of Christ is believed and obeyed it changes the condition of those who accept it from sinners to saints; from strangers and foreigners, to fellow-citizens with the saints, and of the household of God (Ephesians 2: 19).

The gospel then is not the constitution, but the law of naturalization. To become a naturalized citizen of God's kingdom it is necessary for one to renounce his allegiance to the Devil and his works, and every phase of sin and corruption.

Therefore seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not, but have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God.—2 Corinthians 4: 1, 2.

For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places.—Ephesians 6: 12.

One must file his intentions to become a citizen:

All those who humble themselves before God and desire to be baptized, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of all their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him to the end, and truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins, shall be received by baptism into his church.—Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.

One must produce proper witnesses, as follows:

For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word [Son], and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the spirit, and the water, and the blood: and these three agree in one.—1 John 5: 7, 8.

The spirit referred to is evidently the Spirit of God, that bears witness to the individual of the truth, of sins remitted, and of his acceptance as a citizen of the kingdom, or as a child of God. (See Romans 8: 16, 17.)

The water is that of regeneration, or the water of baptism, an element peculiar to both God and man, and bears witness to God that the sinner has obeyed the holy commandment. (See Matthew 28: 18-20; Mark 16: 15, 16; Acts 2: 38.)

The blood is the blood of Christ that was shed on Calvary for the remission of sins; it is the blood of the Lamb of God, the blood of the "new and everlasting covenant," (see Hebrews 9: 13-27; 12: 24; 13: 20.) By faith, repentance, and baptism the one seeking admission into the kingdom of God becomes a partaker of the efficacy of the blood of Christ. "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death?"—Romans

6:3. "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus." (These distinctions which existed under the old law, or while strangers and foreigners, have been melted down by Christ for those who accept the conditions of salvation, and one is as good in the sight of God as the other.) "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."—Galatians 3: 27-29.

The children of the "new covenant" are counted for the seed, that is, they are spiritual Israel, and to them pertaineth the adoption into the kingdom, and the glory that follows that adoption, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the directing of the services of God, that they who obey may receive a fulfillment of the promises made. That is the reason the Moses man stands at the head of the church or kingdom of God, that through him the children of the covenant might receive the law. (See Romans 9: 1-8.)

The great commission was given to the apostles and the church. This contains the law of naturalization; it is the law by which the sinner becomes reconciled to God, as may be seen by the following:

And all things are of God, who hath reconciled us to himself by Jesus Christ, and hath given to us the ministry of reconciliation; to wit, that God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them; and hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God.—2 Corinthians 5: 18-20.

The writer believes the positions assumed in this article to be correct, but perhaps some one else can throw more light upon the subject.

In gospel bonds,

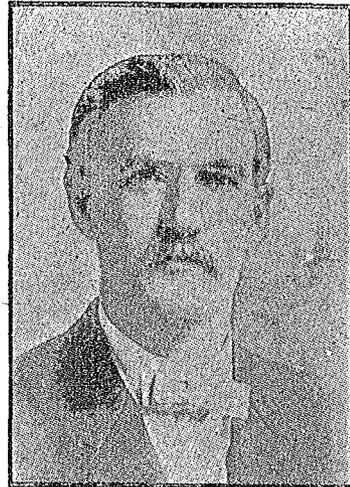

CHARLES E. BUTTERWORTH.

SIoux CITY, IOWA.

"If you are longing for some conspicuous work to do, and craving for some of the loftiest honors, remember that it 'is the common virtues that make uncommon saints.' And the lowly service greatly performed is nobler than the greatest service poorly done. It is not position that makes greatness, but the possession of great qualities."

The chief duty of a Christian lies in the quiet, unseen life of his own home, and if he does not learn there to practice that noble virtue of unselfishness—that highest type of charity which consists in daily and hourly considerateness for the feelings of others—he will have lost one of the strongest resources and one of the most healing memories for all his future life.—F. W. Farrar.

GOVERNOR CARROLL.

The accompanying portrait is that of Governor B. F. Carroll, of Iowa, one of the most businesslike and homelike men who has ever occupied the executive chair in Iowa. He is an active member and worker in the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Des Moines, and the congregation of which he is a member recently placed themselves on record as refusing to support, politically, any candidate who would not favor absolute prohibition in the State. At the recent election of Sunday school officers in Wesley Church Governor Carroll was chosen as assistant superintendent of the school. We have every reason to believe that he will give the Sunday school work its share of his time and attention, and his example in occupying in this work is one well worthy of imitation to many other people in the State, and especially to members of our schools, so many of whom claim they do not have the time to give to Sunday school work. If Governor Carroll can attend to the affairs of the great State of Iowa, look after the home life of his family, and take up Sunday school work, certainly all others could do as much when they are called upon to do so. The Iowa Official Register gives the following brief biography of the Iowa governor, and it is of interest to us:

"Beryl F. Carroll, the eighteenth governor of Iowa, is the first native-born Iowan to hold that office. He was born on a farm in Davis County, March 15, 1860, where his parents had located in 1854, having removed from Ohio to Iowa in 1853. The present governor is the twelfth in a family of thirteen children, nine of whom are living. He attended country school in the White Elm district, Davis County, and later attended college at Bloomfield. In 1884 he graduated from the Missouri State Normal at Kirksville, Missouri, after which he taught for five years in the graded schools of Missouri. Governor Carroll was married to Miss Jennie Dodson, June 15, 1886. Their family consists of two sons. The governor located at Bloomfield, his present home, in 1889, and for two years was engaged in business with his brother. In 1891 he became editor of the Davis County Republican, which paper he continued to publish until 1902. He was district elector for the sixth congressional district of Iowa in the electoral college in 1892, and in 1895 was elected state senator from the third senatorial district, composed of the counties of Appanoose and Davis. As state Senator he served as a Republican member of the twenty-sixth, and extra session of the twenty-sixth, and the twenty-seventh general assemblies. In 1902 he received the Republican nomination for Auditor of State and was elected at the November election following. He held this office three terms. At the June primary, 1908, he received the Republican nomination for governor of Iowa, and was elected at the following November election. He was inaugurated January 14, 1909. A Republican in politics."

THE TEST OF THE REAL BOOK.

Written by Temple Scott, in the preface to his work, The Pleasure of Reading.

The test of a real book is that it enables you to find yourself; it sends your mind adventuring and delights your heart in that you have found another who has felt as you feel and who has delivered himself. . . . The real books are very particular as to whom they will know. If they do not like you, you may clothe them in purple and gold, they will always hide themselves from you. If your spirit is attuned to them they will be welcome in homespun or common cloth. It is the nature of great books to be silent and uncommunicative if you do not come to them with your mind dressed in its best and fit to enter the presence of a king of thought. They will then not question your dress, your wealth, or your social standing. They will but ask of your spirit: "Are you ready?" If it is, they will come to you as friends, with outstretched arms; they will give you of the riches of their inexhaustible treasure-houses; they will charm you with the magic of their music; they will endow you with the gifts of knowledge, and they will bless you with the strength of their wisdom.

A new danger has arisen to attack children. It certainly does seem as though from the cradle to the grave the stomach is the seat of greatest danger. We are now almost afraid to put cream in coffee because of the bacteria that is liable to make a raid on our interior department at most any old time. It has long been known that cocoanut candy, cocoanut pies, cocoanut pudding or anything else that has prepared cocoanut in it, is mighty nearly rank poison to the stomach, but it perhaps is not known that cocoanut when taken from the shell deteriorates more rapidly than fish, if that is possible, and that in hot weather cocoanut will be rankly poison within a few hours after the opening of the cocoanut shell. There is not any doubt at all that a great many children suffer with bowel trouble as the result of being permitted to eat not only the nasty, cheap cocoanut candy, but often the better kind of candy, and all because their parents either do not know or don't exercise supervision over the kind of stuff their children are permitted to gobble up. Not only is the cocoanut poison, but all the other nuts deteriorate very rapidly after being taken from the shell, and a great many of them are rank poison before the shell is broken. The peanut is the most common dainty for the children of the city, and it is cheap. Only a penny's worth of peanuts will give any child an hour of solid satisfaction, but the peanut also deteriorates rapidly when once started, and cheap candy makers use it in making peanut candy.

Little Edyth Fox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus F. Fox, of this city, died in terrible agony last week from eating peanut brittle which was filled with ptomaine poisoning from rotten peanuts which the confectioners had used in making the candy. Her little sister, who also ate of the candy, was also made very ill, but is recovering. It would be a very wise thing for mothers to pay a little attention to the stuff that their children spend their spare pennies on.—National Tribune.

Notice.

We give notice to all locals of Daughters of Zion, and friends of the cause everywhere, that we are in need of money for the general fund of the society; and as our constitution provides that we issue a call for money when the fund is low, we now make our wants known, trusting that we shall receive a liberal response.

ADVISORY BOARD OF DAUGHTERS OF ZION.

Daughters of Zion Reading for February.

NURTURED BY EXERCISE.

To life belongs the privilege of initiative, the right to make advances to whatever is presented from without. This is a matter of activity, of movement, of self-effort or exercise. No one has adequately defined life, but this much we can say,—it is characterized at least by the power of self-movement, and this is a power that grows by its own exercise.

Exercise, then, is the very fundamental essential of growth, of development—say, of life. The processes of nurture find their validity in it. And exercise means far more than we generally think. It means the interdependent activity of the organs as well as the muscular movement of the limbs and the body. Food, sunshine, and air will not make an athlete of one who lies prostrate all day. Is this a commonplace? So commonplace that we do not live up to the truth in it—especially when we carry it over into the realm of the soul. To regard the child's initiative, to concede to him the right to his own powers through their self-exercise—this is the thing without which he can not develop, and the very thing with which we are quickest to interfere.

Self-activity is the great central fact of nurture or education.

"Self-activity is freedom," says Doctor Harris. "The so-called 'freedom of the will' belongs to the highest degree of self-activity." "The will of the most direct and immediate form of self-activity. . . . If there is no such thing as self-activity or self-determination there is no such thing as will power."

Vitally important as the will is to the formation of character, we still hear good men, in the pulpit and out, urging the "surrender" of the will. Thus a distinguished preacher says: "We urge the duty of presenting the entire nature to the Son of God. We lay stress on the will. This must be entirely surrendered." Does he not mean conformed or better, consecrated, to the divine will? The man who "surrenders" his will has none left and is less than a man. Doctor Ludlow goes on:

"Whatever the occasion which makes it apparent, the most common weakness in character is an unassertive will, a lack of volitional initiative."

And yet, with what pious intent are parents often advised to break the child's will! Even a self-willed person is weak-willed—wanting in the power to control himself. At one time when the Sunday school lesson was on Absalom, a well-meaning but misguided writer in a religious paper said: "There should be no peace nor rest in the family, and there will be none, so long as the child is habitually disobedient. If children do not obey their parents, they will not obey God. Parents, see in the fate of Absalom a warning lest you spoil your children. Better break the will of a child than have the child break the heart of the parent." Think of that, reader, as a statement of educational values! If alternative must be made, preserve the will power of the child.

But a proper nurture demands neither. The law of exercise calls for the right of choice. Only through choice is the will strengthened. "What is character but a completely fashioned will?" asks Miss Blow. "How shall we be fashioned save by free choices? And how shall free choices be made unless the mind is confronted by varying—yes, even antagonistic—possibilities of conduct?"

Character may be defined as the sum of our choices. It is a system of self-controls, self-directing energizings. If there is anything sure in Scripture, from Eden to Jesus, it is the right of choice. The trouble is we are too anxious to be obeyed. We enjoy authority, and we would rather exercise it than have the child exercise his will through conceding him a choice. "The state," says Doctor Harris, "presupposes freedom and responsibility, or else it could not punish." It says to the criminal: "Your deed is your own; take its consequences upon yourself." A little child is too ignorant of causes and consequences to be thus met in fact; but it is through his choices that he becomes a moral, because a willing, creature. "Moral life begins," says Miss Blow, "when conscious motives take the place of blind impulsion. Where those are lacking, there is self-determination in the forms of impulse and desire. Where they are present, there is self-determination in its highest potency as free will."

If we understand ourselves, we are more anxious to be obeyed than to have the child obedient. We are ourselves disobedient to the heavenly vision of child nature. All nature, human or other, is commanded by obeying it. Children suffer more deterioration through adult disobedience towards them than through their own disobedience (real or supposed) towards their adult guardians.

A willing obedience is the only true obedience. Mere compulsory compliance is not in a spiritual sense obedience at all. This willing or true obedience rests, as Miss Blow shows, on faith. "From the ninety degraded children whom he mothered at Stanz, the gentle Pestalozzi learned that not in force and not in appeals to reason, but in quickening faith must be sought the point of contact between the nurturing and the nurtured life." Faith presupposes experience. The baby trusts his mother's arm because he finds it strong. In like manner he must learn to trust her wisdom and her love. He can only half believe them if they are inconsistent, and vascillating. Hence Froebel's insistence upon a mother's being all she would have her children believe her to be. If your child "trusts you he will obey you; he will hide nothing from you; he will not resent your punishments, and when he asks you questions whose answers are beyond his comprehension, he will humbly accept your simple statement that they can not be explained to him until he is older. . . . All individual relationships and all corporate life rest upon pillars of faith."

Faith grows by exercise. We can not impart it even though we give the opportunity for its growth by showing ourselves deserving of it. It works from within voluntarily. In a sense it may be induced, but it can not be compelled. Hence obedience, as resting on faith, must be a voluntary course. The writer on Absalom already quoted says, "Absalom was never made to do right as a boy, and hence he would not choose to go right" when he grew to manhood. Perhaps he was made to do too much. His choosing power may never have been rightly exercised. His will was weak, for a self-willed man is a weak-willed man. . . .

The one power above all others, then, in which we should encourage development through its own judicious exercise is the power of judgment, of choice, of acting by free volition. Obedience is often a necessary act, but says that marvelous interpreter, Dr. George Matheson, "Obedience is in itself neither good nor bad—may be either good or bad; it depends upon whom we obey. Nor is the quality which you desire for your child that of absolute obedience. There is not a mother in the land who does not long for the day when the actions of her child shall cease to be dictated by her own will. The dearest moment to the heart of a parent is the moment of a child's spontaneity—the day when it anticipates the ordinary command and does the deed of its own accord. What is the joy of that moment to the parental heart? It is the recognition that the reign of absolute obedience is passed and that the reign of volition has begun. It is the perception that the child has ceased to be subordinate and has become an equal—animated by the same motive, inspired by the same will. . . . The sweetest music to any parent is the voice of the child's cooperation, and the summer of a father's love is perfect in the hour when the relation of authority is superseded by the sympathy of communion."

But the obedience that rests on perfect trust and faith and love, is an act of choice, a voluntary act of compliance or conformity of will to will.

Obedience is necessary because a child is too weak and inexperienced to be thrown entirely on his own resources. He must be given choices to exercise his will upon. He must be forbidden to do some things, but he must be given an alternative. The parent has great responsibility in his selection of opportunities for the child's exercise of choice. The problem is to enlighten the child's judgment and strengthen his will by exercise. This is the primal thing; the mere obedience is secondary and will follow in the wake of that faith in the parent which the parent's faithfulness merits. "To understand how to modify the child's action by such processes as shall keep it still his own, to alter his act by first altering his feelings and thought, and so keeping the healthy sequence unbroken"—that is the subtle and difficult task.

"A pretty state of things it would be if children were to be allowed to think they knew as much as their parents," says a mother, "there is no way except to break their wills at the beginning." And Helen Hunt Jackson replies, "But you have just said that it is not to your will as will that he is to yield, but to your superior knowledge and experience. That surely is not 'breaking his will.' It is of all things furthest removed from it. It is educating his will. It is teaching him how to will."—Patterson DuBois, in American Motherhood, February, 1907.

Questions on March Reading.

What is the meaning of "initiative"? By what is life characterized? What is the essential element of development, or of life? What part has exercise in the process of nurture? What does "exercise" include, more than the muscular movement of the limbs and the body? What would be the effect of the lack of exercise upon the would-be athlete? What is the central fact of nurture or education? To what does the freedom of the will belong? What is will power? Why is it a mistake to advocate the surrender of the will to God? What is it that should be done? Why is a self-willed person weak-willed? Why should a child's will not be broken? For what does the law of exercise call? By what is the will made strong? What has the will to do with character? What do the scriptures accord to man regarding the exercise of the will? What is, too often, the parent's motive in requiring obedience? What alone will make the child a moral creature? When does moral life begin? Where the conscious motive is lacking, how is self-determining power exercised? What is the effect when present? From what do children suffer in addition to their own disobedience? In what ways do they suffer from the disobedience of their guardians? What is the only true obedience? Upon what does this rest? What depends upon the parent's being consistent and reliable? Can we compel a child to have faith in his parents? How may faith be induced? Why should the choosing power of a child be exercised? What power above all others should be encouraged? Is obedience necessarily good or bad? On what does it depend? What surpasses absolute obedience? Why is obedience necessary? When a child is forbidden to do a certain thing what should also be set before him? What is the great problem in child training? For what should the parent seek? To what should the child yield in giving obedience? Would this be breaking his will? In the giving willing obedience, what will the child be learning to do?

Letter Department

Editors Herald: I desire the prayers of the Saints in behalf of my boy, the same one that was sick last winter and received so much benefit through the prayers of God's children. He is very low with catarrhal pneumonia. My husband, who is bitterly opposed to the church, finally consented to let me have Brother Baldwin come and administer to him, after which the fever left him and he seemed to be getting along nicely, being up and around the house; but he took worse again and now has a high fever during the day. The doctor thinks it is consumption, the same as it left him last winter. My husband did not come in when he was administered to, and as soon as Brother Baldwin had gone, he came in the room and said a great many things that would have been better unsaid, and now he has forbidden me to have him come again.

I am thankful for the blessings received. How good it seems to have one of God's true servants come into our homes and to feel the blessed, peaceful influence that they leave behind them when they go. Pray for my husband that he may yet see his mistake, and that he may yet give his consent for Brother Baldwin to come back and administer to my boy, that if it is God's will he may be fully restored to health. Still hoping and trusting in God, I am

JEFFERSONVILLE, INDIANA, December 20, 1909.

Dear Herald: I was born in Jefferson County, Indiana, in 1870. When a small boy, Brn. Scott, Kelley, and Baggerly came preaching the everlasting gospel in our locality. I did not get to attend the meetings that were held in the schoolhouse. We were so poor in this world's goods that we did not get to attend the services, though most of the neighborhood did. I am sure that the great crowds that went there did not go for any good purpose, as but few heard and met the gospel requirements. A few days ago I was back to my old home; the work which the Saints established there has been disrupted and gone down. A former elder of the church is preaching in that locality. I heard some muttering about preaching for money while I was among them. I feel that the work might yet be revived on Hall Ridge. I found a spirit of inquiry and investigation, and for weighing things in the balance, present, and I believe that if an efficient elder would visit that community, a great good for the enlightenment and salvation of the people could be done.

CAMERON, ONTARIO, December 19, 1909.

Dear Herald: The letters in the HERALD give comfort and cheer, and contain beautiful advice which we should ponder in our hearts.

Elder J. T. Thompson is here now. He has just called on his way from the East. He preached a very interesting sermon here this morning and he and papa blessed a babe, Mildred Irene, daughter of Bro. and Sr. Ethelbert Hooley, who were baptized a year ago last summer. Elder Thompson will preach again this evening, and in the morning will leave for his home in Toronto.

We had a two-day meeting here on July 10 and 11, and had Elder Evans, of Toronto, here. On the evening of the 10th we had a great electric storm, and of course there was a small crowd out, but those who stayed away missed a treat in the way of a sermon by Brother Evans. The next day was one of the finest we had all summer and we took our dinner and supper and stayed for four services.

My grandmother, James Bate, and I were delegates to the conference. I had never attended a conference before and everything was new to me. I enjoyed myself very much and live in hopes of attending another conference.

We had our annual branch business meeting Friday afternoon. Everything went smoothly and peace reigned throughout both Sunday school and branch meetings. We have a very good home class here. We are trying to get up a Christmas tree.

We are disappointed at not having Bro. James Pycock of Humber Bay with us again this year.

Your sister in the one faith,
FLORENCE BRADEN.

TERRE HAUTE, INDIANA, December 22, 1909.

Dear Herald: On October 8, I left home and loved ones in the city of Flint, Michigan, and came to Clay City, Indiana, where I found Bro. C. F. Davis, and Sister Davis and family of four boys. Next morning, Sunday, Bro. D. L. Boyer came with horse and rig and took me to Woodside, where I held meetings for five nights and baptized three.

On October 15, I went to Union Branch to attend district conference. We had a very nice time, but a small attendance. Met Bro. Jacob Halb, and since then we have been traveling together, and it is a comfort to have an agreeable companion. After holding meetings for one week at Union, (and by the way that is the land of apostates, as it was the home of L. F. Daniels, R. Scott, William Marshall, and James Potter, who have hurt the work very much there,) we went to New Albany. We called on a few of the Saints there, but as Brother Halb had been there before conference we did not stay long, and went to Bro. J. M. Wynn's near Corydon, held one week's meetings, administered sacrament to the few Saints. The Spirit was with us to a marked degree, and it seemed hard to part.

Then Brethren Wynn and Hannel took us over rocks and hills to Bro. Elijah Knowland's, a distance of about twelve miles, and dropped us down among the hills. We had to go to work, so we did the best we could by the help of the Master, to get the brethren together and bury the hatchet, and we didn't leave the handle sticking out either. Well, we left them feeling better, and hope it will continue. Brother Halb baptized two sisters, and then Bro. Christian Zahnd took us over to Pilot Knob. Here we had a few good meetings, and then back to the Leavenworth Branch, where we had three more meetings, and left October 16, in the morning before daylight, walking two miles through the mud to the river. Here we washed the mud off of our feet and boarded a gasoline boat with a lot of drummers.

We arrived at Brother Davis's, in Derby, about three o'clock in the afternoon in a pouring rain, stayed all night, then out to Bro. D. H. Baggerly's on the hill where, in one place, he has a forty-foot ladder to climb. We held a few meetings here and felt blessed in our efforts, and can say that this is the only branch I ever visited where there were no complaints, so we did not need to stay long.

October 22, we went to Millstone Branch, where we found the Saints in poor condition. We got them together, got them to confess their faults, and arranged for them to hold meetings with Bro. Henry Huff to lead. On November 2, we went to the home of Sr. and Mr. Lamance Groves, at Bamar. Held a few meetings and were well blessed. On November 6, took train for Clay City, and reached there next day, and on November 12 organized a branch with eleven members, Bro. C. F. Davis presiding. If the Saints live right there are more that will obey soon.

Came here to see Bro. J. L. Tempest's and found them in the faith. Sister Tempest is feeling quite poorly. I will go to Danville to-day to spend holidays with my son, W. H. Dowker, and also to meet my wife. In all our labors among the Saints they have been very kind to us, and have done well by us financially, for which we are very thankful. Sr. Jane Price, of Clay City, Indiana, has a son, Henry Graves, at Fisk, Missouri, Box 125, and she would like if the elders in that field would go to that place, as she desires her son to hear the gospel, and also send him some tracts.

WILLIAM DOWKER.

OLATHE, MISSOURI, December 18, 1909.

Dear Herald: I love to read your sacred pages. It is the best paper in the world. It has within it a message of peace, joy, and consolation. The sermons from our dear brethren who have consecrated their lives to God, which appear in the HERALD, are wholesome, full of nourishment and strength. When I looked upon the picture of our dear Bro. U. W. Greene and read his sermon delivered at the General Conference at Lamoni, I was greatly edified and strengthened. I read it more than once. May God's blessing rest upon him and upon all the other brethren of his quorum, upon whom is laid such a great responsibility. God bless the editors of the HERALD. Ah, how wisely it is arranged. I have been a subscriber for thirty years. When I first subscribed for it I could not read one line. I came to this country for the gospel's sake, and I was anxious to learn. I believed there was good in it, and I kept on looking over it, till I could begin to read a little in it, and it was not long till I could read the whole of it.

Brother Wells, from Australia, has been with us and has done much good. I hope the Reorganization has many men like Brother Wells. May God bless him and all the brethren who are thrusting in their sickles to reap the great harvest.

God bless all the Saints. May we all be willing to work together for the accomplishment of the great work intrusted to us. Let us remember our beloved President and pray for him that he might be spared for some time yet.

A. JENSON.

TROY, OREGON, December 13, 1909.

Editors Herald: There are a few Saints scattered on the mountains and in the canyons of this Wallowa County, but we do not have any meetings this winter. How we miss church privileges only those who are deprived of them, yet desire them so much, can realize. I hope all the Saints in branches may improve upon their opportunities. We have lived here twelve years and we pray that the days of our isolation may soon be over, and that the way may be opened that we may go to the land of Zion and buy a home. I think most of the Saints in this country are striving to live faithfully, but Satan works hard against the cause, and some of the Saints have experienced a great deal of sorrow. Yet we hope to endure with patience to the end. I feel that it is worth every effort that we can put forth. We realize the Lord has been very merciful to us here, and blesses us in many ways, for which we are thankful. We derive so much comfort and instruction from the HERALD that we would dislike to be without it.

Trusting that you will remember us in your prayers.

WILLIAM WILSON.

WEISER, IDAHO, December 28, 1909.

Editors Herald: We conducted a two-week service near Council, Idaho, closing December 22, after baptizing eight souls in the chilly waters of Middle Fork, and partly organizing a Sabbath school. Returning we have been detained to administer baptism to Mrs. W. T. Ferguson, the wife of Weiser's bicycle man, and the agent here for church books, etc. Reverend Gowen, of the Baptist Church, accorded us the use of their font, exacting only the cost of heating, etc.

I go now to Malheur and Unity, Oregon, the latter place from which a call comes for some awaiting baptism. The work seems onward, but the laborers too few. May the Spirit arouse the sleeping Saints, as well as to move upon the honest in heart among the world.

MCGREGOR, MINNESOTA, December 29, 1909.

Dear Herald: The HERALD is dear to us because of the much help and encouragement we receive in reading it. We are of the isolated ones, and do not get to hear many sermons. My husband attended the reunion at Audubon and brought back two of the elders with him in November. We had about ten days' preaching, and it did us all good. They were Brn. Swen Swenson and H. A. McCoy. We had good interest, but we do not know whether it will cause any to obey. We hope our labors have not been in vain. We have been here six years and have had the elders visit us twice, and preach here four different times.

This is a cold country, and it is hard to get a crowd out in the winter, but some will go anyway to hear our preachers. Pray for us, dear Saints, that God may send us some encouragement to give us strength and hope and faith in this glorious work. We have been wanting to come back to the land of Zion, but it takes nearly everything we can make to live on account of everything being so high. We hope that God will open the way soon so we can go back and be with God's people. Our children are getting old enough to want to go out in company, and of course we would like them to go to the Sunday school and other gatherings of the Saints. Our three oldest children belong to the church.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion and her people,

LILLY A. PEEK.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, December 27, 1909.

Dear Herald: As time goes on I look back at the failures I have made with sorrow, and see where a little more patience might have helped me, but the past has gone and I have asked God to forgive me, and everyone else, and if anyone has any ill will toward me, and will let me know what I can do to gain their favor, I will gladly comply, if it be in keeping with God's law. My suffering has been great since 1884, but in the last two years the most of it has gone away. My deafness is bad. I have always thought that I would regain my hearing, but have not yet. I will pray with all the faith I have. I am glad that when I read the HERALD and Ensign I can understand what I read better than I did. I ask the Saints to pray for me, and will say that trials will make patience, and patience will give us favor with God.

DAHINDA, ILLINOIS, December 28, 1909.

Dear Herald Readers: It is with much pleasure that I try for the first time to send a letter to you. I have a family of three boys, two girls, and a husband, and I am the only one that belongs to the church. I hope that God will soon bless them with the light that I have received, before it is too late. I have been in the church almost five years and can say that I know this is the true church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and feel proud that I can stand up in my weakness as a witness for our Master. I am trying to do what I can for the Master each day, and to bring others into the faith, and ask the prayers of all God's people in my behalf, and also for my ten-year-old son, who is afflicted. My prayers are with the Saints at all times.

We have a little band here; one elder, Brother Monroe, one priest, one teacher. I know the Lord will be with us if we are true to him. The HERALD is the only paper I take at present, but hope soon to do more. I love to read the letters and am glad to hear from so many in the work. May God bless each and every one.

MRS. IDA DORSETT.

DOW CITY, IOWA, January 18, 1910.

Dear Herald Readers: I take this means of answering the many postal cards and letters sent me for my birthday. Considering the number, one hundred and seventeen, you can readily see why I can not answer them all personally; but I assure you, one and all, that they were a pleasant surprise and brought many a happy recollection of the many friends of years gone by, who were so kind to remember me in this way.

Wishing you the blessing of health and happiness, I am,
ROMANAN WIGHT.

Tragic Death of Bro. Joseph Ross.

About 7 o'clock on the night of January 4, 1910, Bro. Joseph Ross' residence caught fire, in some way, up stairs. He went up in the attic to try to discover the fire and to put it out. He was overcome by the smoke. A neighbor went to his rescue and got him to the second story near the stairs, when the smoke and flames broke in from an adjoining room. The neighbor fell, nearly overcome, but managed to escape down stairs. After the building burned to the ground and it became possible to reach him, his charred and limbless body was taken from the fire, and on the 7th was buried at the Pine Grove Cemetery, near Goos Creek, Richie County, West Virginia. The writer preached the funeral sermon.

Brother Ross was highly esteemed by all his neighbors. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, and a son. The latter is the youngest, and but ten years old. The house was a fine building, worth about twenty-five hundred dollars. It will be replaced, most likely, by a cottage, built by his relatives and friends.

News From Branches

LONDON, ENGLAND.

I have for a long time had a desire of sending a line through the HERALD to let all the Saints know how we are getting on in London, England. There are about one hundred and eight members here, but I am sorry to say there are only about twelve real, live Saints. I feel sorry for those that stay away from their meetings. Some are very old and can not attend very often, but there are others that stay away, some for one thing and some for another, forgetting the promise they made at the water's edge; but we know they are in God's hands and that in a day to come they will have to give an account of their stewardship. I do sincerely hope that those that are indifferent now will wake up to their responsibility before it is too late, for we are told that the Spirit of God will not always strive with man.

We are very thankful to our blessed Master for the way he has blessed us and for the Spirit which is made manifest from time to time, although it is discouraging as to the few which attend our meetings; yet we know that it is for us to see that we do our duty and that the talent which has been intrusted to our care is not wasted, for we know that just as much as the church is suffering through our neglect, whether it be not attending our meetings or not paying our tithing, just as much will it be to our condemnation.

I am very thankful to my heavenly Father for the way he has blessed me, both in health and strength, food and raiment. I had occasion the other day to speak to a London city missionary, and try and present some gospel truths to him, but he said he could not preach that gospel, as the London City Mission would not allow it; and so we go on dropping a few words by the way, leaving the result with God.

I must say in conclusion that I am thankful, at this the beginning of another year, that I still have that great desire to go forward with more determination than ever to do the Master's will.

Ever praying for the triumph of this glorious gospel,

Your brother in Christ,

J. T. NEWTON.

Died.

GUBSER.—Robert Gubser, of Lees Summit, Missouri, departed this life January 12. He was confined to his bed some three weeks, but had been ailing six or seven years. He was born in Switzerland, but came to America with his parents when about six years of age. Was raised in the Roman Catholic faith. For some years he seemed to be dissatisfied and was an earnest seeker after the true gospel. He united with the Zionist movement at Chicago, but soon lost faith in it. After a time he heard of the restored gospel and was baptized in Lamoni, Iowa, at conference two years ago. He died in the faith. He leaves a wife and two sons, besides a number of Saints and friends to mourn his loss.

BOWMAN.—At the Saints' Home, Lamoni, Iowa, January 19, 1910, Bro. John S. Bowman, at the age of 74 years and 4 days. He was born near Cincinnati, Ohio, January 15, 1836. He and his wife came from Brush Creek, Wayne County, Illinois, in 1899, to the Home. She died in September, 1905. He was baptized in 1889 by Bro. Isaac A. Morris and died without fear, saying he was submissive to God's will. One son survives him, in Illinois. Funeral sermon by Bro. John Smith, assisted by Brn. William Anderson and H. A. Stebbins.

MCGUIRE.—Mary A. McGuire was born December 5, 1838, at Chittenham, Gloucestershire, England. Became a member of the Reorganized Church, March 16, 1879, at Fall River, Massachusetts. Died November 13, 1909. For the last twelve years of her life she was confined in the hospital, a helpless invalid. Her continuous example of patient endurance will long be remembered by those who knew her. Funeral services were held at the home of her son, Bro. Thomas McGuire. Sermon by Elder H. W. Howlett. Interment at Oak Grove Cemetery, Fall River, Massachusetts.

SNIDER.—Jacob Snider was born in Bartholomew County, Indiana, January 13, 1835. Died December 30, 1909, at his home four miles south of Hamilton, Missouri. Located in this county (Caldwell) 1851. He was second lieutenant of Company H, 44th regiment, Missouri Volunteers; participated in several hard fought battles in the civil war. Married Miss Juliet Gillett, November 16, 1869. To this union were born two children, Mrs. Alice J. Craven and Coleman Snider, who, with their mother and seven grandchildren, are left to mourn the loss of a faithful husband and affectionate father. He was baptized by Elder W. P. Bozarth, June, 1873. He held the office of elder for thirty years. Was laid to rest at Kingston on New Year's Day, in the presence of a large gathering of friends, among whom he was esteemed very highly. Funeral sermon by William Lewis, assisted by W. P. Pickering.

FRASER.—Sr. Millie Morgan Fraser, beloved wife of James Fraser, whose tender care left nothing undone through the weary hours of pain following a surgical operation, and later a paralytic stroke. Calm and implicit faith in God and the gospel, with unwavering patience and deepest appreciation of all done for her, failed her not. She had won a host of friends. The Methodist church was tendered for the funeral, the pastor, Rev. S. D. Williams, feelingly assisted in the services, and showed every other possible courtesy, as also did the choir, the Order of the Eastern Star, and Ladies' Advance Club, in which Sister Fraser held membership. The schools closed, as also did the business places of the town. The floral offerings were beautiful and profuse, the business men presenting a large floral anchor, the Eastern Star as elegant a piece, and others beautiful pieces. Though two near by funerals drew from the town, the spacious church was packed. The community was sadly but fondly in deepest sympathy. Mr. Fraser's son Earl (by his former marriage), Ada, Millie Belle, and Viva, darling daughters, two sisters, and six brothers, with other relatives, mourn. Prayer was held at the home by Elder B. St. John; at the church by Reverend Williams; sermon was delivered by R. Etzenhouser, followed by the service of the Eastern Star.

DAVIS.—Priscilla Davis was born at Bath, England, March 16, 1832. Died December 22, 1909, at Mound Valley, Kansas. Funeral was conducted by Brn. E. A. Davis and Masters. Sister Davis was married to Bro. Rice Williams in Utah in 1851. To them were given eight children, four of them dying while infants, the other four of them still living: Sisters Mary, Pearl, and Sr. Ralph Hendra at Mound Valley, Kansas; Bro. T. W. Williams, at Los Angeles, California. Bro. Rice Williams died in 1881 at Syracuse, Ohio. In 1888 she became the wife of Bro. R. H. Davis who died in 1908 at Mound Valley, Kansas. Sister Davis went to Utah in 1848 or 1850; underwent much hardship for what she believed to be the work of God. She soon became dissatisfied with conditions, but had faith in God and the gospel. She received the message from Bro. James Gillen, at Goshen, Utah, and became an active worker, making many converts within a few days. By her the message was carried to R. H. Davis, John T. Davis, Brn. John and J. A. Davis, and to many others at Goshen and other places in Utah. Her life was devoted to the work of God.

HARBOTTLE.—Alice Scott Harbottle was born at Labanon, Yorkshire County, England, August 24, 1844, and departed this life December 31, 1909. On July 24, 1861, she was united in marriage to John Harbottle. The ensuing six years they lived in England. In May of the year 1867, Mr. and Mrs. Harbottle came to America and made their home in Pennsylvania. In 1871 they came west and finally settled in Nebraska, where they have resided until the present time. Thirteen children blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Harbottle, eight of whom, with the husband, survive her.

GIVENS.—At Independence, Missouri, January 13, 1910, Daniel Givens. Born in Munro County, Ohio, May 24, 1845, and was married to Miss Nancy King, June 8, 1865. He was a member of the Baptist Church, but a firm believer in the latter-day work. Was laid to rest in Mound Grove Cemetery. He leaves a saintly wife, two brothers, and three sisters. Funeral services at the Saints' church by Elder J. C. Foss, assisted by George Harrington.

HOFFMAN.—George A. Hoffman, who has lived in the vicinity of Mountain Home for twenty-one years, died at his only daughter's, Mrs. T. R. Wilson's, Boise, Idaho, Christmas night, of dropsy. Was born in Bandera City, Texas, June 21, 1858. He leaves a wife, one daughter, and four sons: Mrs. T. R. Wilson, of Boise, Henry, John, Orton, and Corda, of Mountain Home, to mourn his loss. Funeral at Baptist church, Wednesday, 29th, conducted by Pastor Dean Hamilton. Was a member of the Reorganized Church.

GODFREY.—Mary Elizabeth Godfrey was born in the State of Pennsylvania on March 20, 1840, and died December 9, 1909, at the home of her son, William T. Godfrey, near Tryon, Nebraska, after being paralyzed for eight years. Her husband, Bro. George W. Godfrey, preceded her to the other side about three and one half years ago. She was baptized June 1, 1893, by Elder James Caffall. She leaves ten children (all members of the church but two) and thirty-six grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. She was laid to rest in the Ellis Cemetery. There was no elder here at the time, so the funeral sermon will be preached as soon as practicable.

RUBY.—Sarah Pauline Ruby was born March 24, 1840, in Meggs County, Ohio. Her maiden name was Page, and at the age of thirteen she removed with her parents to Illinois, and in 1858 she was united in marriage to Elder Jerome Ruby, at Buffalo, Iowa. To this union were born two sons, both of whom died at an early age. She resided with her husband at Buffalo, Iowa, until his death in 1896, when she removed to Angus, Iowa. Three weeks before her death she went to Colfax, Iowa, to visit at the home of her nephew. On Thursday, April 23, she was stricken with apoplexy, a second stroke soon following. She sank rapidly until death came to her relief on Friday, April 24, 1908. She and her husband had for many years been members of the Latter Day Saints' Church, and were known to have lived consistent Christian lives. She is survived by two nieces, Mrs. George Dalby, of Angus, Iowa; three nephews, William Bell of Pilot Mound, Iowa, Arthur Bell of Colfax, Iowa, James Bell of Angus, Iowa, and other relatives. The funeral services were conducted by Elder J. W. Davis, and interment in the Buffalo cemetery, at Buffalo, Iowa.

PRESTON.—Sr. Minnie S. Preston, Jan. 22, 1910; at her home in Springfield, Nebraska, of dropsy, from which she had been a constant sufferer for more than a year; but through it all her faith in God and the gospel was unwavering, calling many times for administration, and always receiving temporary relief. She was baptized and confirmed July 6, 1879, at Plattford, Nebraska, by Nelson Brown. Was born at Monmouthshire, England, May 3, 1848; was married to C. K. Preston July 18, 1869. There were born to them five children. One son and two daughters were present at the funeral, two sons having preceded her in death. Funeral was held in the Methodist church at Springfield; sermon by J. M. Baker, assisted by the Congregational minister of that place. Was laid to rest in the city cemetery.

POWELL.—Catherine Powell was born January 1, 1822, at Nerivan, Glamorganshire, Wales. Died in Lucas, Iowa, December 28, 1909, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. D. Williams. Her husband died in 1869, leaving her with six children, five of whom survive her. She united with the old church at the age of sixteen, joining the Reorganization in 1866, becoming a member of the Lucas Branch in 1879. She passed peacefully away with the hope that the gospel brings to the faithful. Funeral sermon preached by Elder J. R. Evans.

GRAY.—Bro. Robert S. Gray, born April, 1835, at Durham, England, died at his home in Lucas, Iowa, December 15, 1909. He was baptized by Elder James McDiffitt, August 16, 1876, at Chariton, Iowa. Funeral sermon December 19, at the Saints' church by Elder John R. Evans, assisted by Priest Thomas Hopkins.

The Size of Raindrops.

Raindrops do not always have the same size or weight, and this is primarily due to the fact that they are not formed like the drops of water that fall from a wet cloth or the spout of a pitcher, or the drops that rush out of the small holes in a garden sprinkler. In all these latter cases a solid stream of water is broken up into drops; but the raindrops are formed in the cloud by the accumulation of minute atoms of water drawn together into one drop, and sometimes by the melting of a large snowflake or a solid little icy hailstone. When a drop is thus formed in the clouds, it begins to fall, no matter whether it be large or small, and observers in balloons state that all sizes of drops are to be found within the clouds themselves, from the finest fog and drizzling mist up to the heavy rain. It is commonly said that the bigger drops fall faster than the smaller ones and overtake them and grow bigger. This sounds reasonable, but no one has really proven it.—From "Nature and Science" in February St. Nicholas.

Ancient Thebes.

In the January Chautauquan, Prof. James H. Breasted in the fifth installment of his fascinating series entitled, "A reading journey through Egypt," writes of the wonders of ancient Thebes. This famous city long the capital of ancient Egypt contains to-day remarkable evidences of its former greatness. Situated far to the south Thebes was not subject to the repeated attacks of conquering races although at one time it was thoroughly laid waste by the Assyrians. Of its tremendous temples much still remains which makes possible a reconstruction in imagination of the city as it was in the days of the great Pharaohs.

The vast site of Thebes is now occupied only with the ruins of these ancient architectural wonders and by the two small cities of Karnak and Luxor. In each of these is a temple famous the world over and Mr. Breasted in his article tells as only a scholar can the significance of these temples which are interesting both historically and architecturally. Some idea of the wonders of the Temple of Karnak may be obtained from the simple statement that one of the many rooms is sufficiently large to include within it the whole of the Cathedral of Notre Dame of Paris. The columns which survive from one of the unfinished halls are sixty-five feet in height and of such bulk that one hundred men can stand on the top of each. These and other wonders are vividly described by Professor Breasted in his article and a large number of excellent halftones makes vivid what can not be described in words.

Some Causes of Failure.

Long years of experience have demonstrated to the seekers after the underlying causes of business failure the fact that, generally speaking, four fifths of all failures are due to faults inherent in the person, while about one fifth are due to causes outside and beyond his own control. This proportion varies slightly in some years of stress, but on the whole the percentages are so constant that in themselves they constitute a virtual guarantee of statistical accuracy. Under the head of faults due to the subject himself the following causes are grouped by Bradstreet's:

- Incompetence (irrespective of other causes).
 - Inexperience (without other incompetence).
 - Lack of capital.
 - Unwise granting of credits.
 - Speculation (outside regular business).
 - Neglect of business (due to doubtful habits).
 - Personal extravagance.
 - Fraudulent disposition of property.
- On the other hand, the following causes are classed as not proceeding from the faults of those failing:
- Specific conditions (disaster, panic, etc.)
 - Failures of others (of apparently solvent debtors).
 - Competition.—From Frank Greene's "Business success and failure" in the Midwinter Century.

Perpetuation of the Coal Supply.

Until recently there has been little thought of economy in coal production or utilization. For every ton mined another ton or more has been wasted either in the shape of coal dust or slack, or coal left in the ground. Mining methods have, however, improved, and the loss now amounts to 40 per cent, as against 60 per cent, a short time ago. In many mines as high as 75 per cent of the coal is recovered. Likewise much higher efficiency is being secured in the utilization of the coal. A single example will serve to show the possibilities in this line.

In extensive experiments made by the Technologic branch of the United States Geological Survey it has been found that by first converting the coal into gas and then using it in a gas engine double and in some instances over three times the efficiency can be secured that is achieved under the ordinary steam boiler. For industrial purposes, therefore, we at one step practically double, if not treble, the coal area of the country. Moreover, the sensational discovery was made by the Survey tests that the low-grade lignite of the Northwest and Texas, underlying an area of some 100,000,000 acres, when used in gas engines, developed more power than the best Pocahontas coal under ordinary steaming methods. From the Pocahontas coal the Geological Survey steam plant produced .28 horse-power per pound, while the gas-producer generated .96 horse-power per pound, or 3.34 times the efficiency for the gas-producer plant over the steam plant. These lignitic coals have been looked upon as of little if any commercial value; now the regions where they are found are considered as possible great industrial centers.—From "Our coal supply to-day," by Guy Elliott Mitchell, in the American Review of Reviews for February.

Money in the Vegetable Garden.

The 61st issue of Vick's Garden and Floral Guide has just been received, and the first thing which attracted our attention was the $1,040 in Premiums offered by James Vick's Sons for the best vegetables and Asters to be exhibited at the New York State Fair next September. Everybody is invited to enter this contest; there is no entrance fee, and the only condition is that both vegetables and flowers be grown from Vick Quality Seeds. This issue of the Guide contains an instructive article by Prof. L. B. Judson, of Cornell University, on "Seeds and Seed-sowing," as well as simple directions for planting all vegetable and flower seeds. It seems to us that it is better and more comprehensive than any previous issue. Our readers may secure a copy by sending their name and address on a postal to James Vick's Sons, 143 Main street, Rochester, New York, and thus learn about the Premiums as well as securing much valuable information on gardening. The Guide is free to all who ask for it.

HE THAT ENDURETH TO THE END.

In the sixteenth verse of the sixteenth chapter of Mark one may read the great promise of the gospel to the penitent sinner, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"; in the twenty-second verse of the tenth chapter of Matthew is found the gospel promise to the baptized believers, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

Looked at from the other side of the waters of baptism, it may seem to the candidate that the matter is fully stated in the promise first quoted; but viewed from this side, it is gradually borne in upon the Saint of God that the first promise finds its complement in the second.

The individual who accepts the first promise and acts upon it soon finds that he is placed in a position where his endurance is being tested. This test is designed not alone with a view to determine his endurance but rather to strengthen and develop it.

There are few who are too weak to acquire a degree of fortitude and usefulness if they will but patiently submit to the processes of Christian development; there are none so strong that they can resist the soul-destroying blight that settles upon those who persistently rebel after having enlisted to obey. Following these divers courses, the strong and mighty perish, while the weak and poor grow and flourish as the palm-tree or as the cedar in Lebanon. Proud but rebellious Saul was a child in the hand of the aged Prophet Samuel.

It might seem strange to some that the process of Christian development should include anything calculated to test endurance; why not the "flow'ry beds of ease"? Because neither mental, physical, nor spiritual vigor comes from resting upon flow'ry beds of ease. The muscle that feels the twist and strain of the oar is strengthened; the brain that studies and solves problems becomes active and powerful; the Christian character that is put to the test, that endures, resists, and achieves, becomes great, and is saved at the end of the struggle. Such a character is worth saving; and it is saved, because it has, with God's help, overcome all that would destroy it and has become in a measure like Christ, who said that all power was given into his hand.

Saints are not promised that they shall escape all the cares or even afflictions of life; the promise is that all these (with all other experiences) shall work together for their good. They are not promised that they shall escape all the burdens of life; the promise is that they shall be given a yoke that is easy. If there is an implement that is typical of labor that implement is the yoke. If the Master did not intend his disciples to labor after they had taken his yoke upon them he made a mistake in his choice of illustrations that was quite foreign to his judgment and to his method of discourse.

His call is to those who are weary and heavy laden and they are promised rest, often best found in congenial activity. The unprofitable burdens of sin and ignorance, of the world, the flesh, and the Devil, are to be cast aside, and in their stead is given a line of work that will bring a glorious reward.

There are many experiences that come to an individual, even in the course of a short life, that test the powers of endurance. These are of such a severe character that in the world thousands who have no hope, other than the world offers, seek relief in suicide. The new recruit to the army of the living little realizes the character of the warfare upon which he enters, almost at birth; soon, though, he finds himself fighting against temptations and sorrow and pain.

Often as an individual advances in years the tendency to become discouraged increases; how then shall one endure to the end? The answer is found in that gospel through which he first received the promise conditioned upon endurance.

James names the gospel law as the Perfect Law of Liberty. This law sets men free. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

No man could ever be free if he were constantly threatened by evil forces that were stronger than he; and the excellency of the perfect law of liberty is seen in the fact that it makes men sufficiently strong to overcome these forces of evil, and so they are "free indeed." This desired end is accomplished by virtue of that increased spiritual energy bestowed upon those who accept Christ,—who came that we might "have life and have it more abundantly," to whom the promise is that the Spirit also shall help their infirmities, and by virtue of that process of education, the scope of which is indicated by the declaration that the individual shall be guided into all truth. God never attempts to give liberty without knowledge, for such a condition could not be maintained; nor does he propose to bestow zeal, enthusiasm, and riotous energy without bestowing the proper wisdom to guide and control.

Thus is revealed the only way in which one can hope to endure to the end. An otherwise hopeless conflict, though severe and long continued, may become more joyful as it progresses, until at last the Christian shall cheerfully face the last enemy that shall be conquered—death. ELBERT A. SMITH.

ENGLAND IN EVOLUTION.

It is somewhat difficult for the average citizen of the United States, who is scarcely up to the standard as to the relative claims of the different political parties at home, to judge of the status of political affairs in England. The following statement evidently from a correspondent of the Kansas City Journal in London seems to be clear upon one of the main points at issue in the controversy between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. We take this from the Journal for January 31. It appears from this that the aggressiveness of the people of the United Kingdom as manifested in the House of Commons, the representative body elected by the people, is on the increase; and that as the House of Lords many years ago curbed some of the prerogatives and privileges enjoyed by the king when they wrested from King John the Magna Charta, so now the people, by their representatives, are endeavoring to curtail the House of Lords from the exercise of privileges and prerogatives which that body may have exercised heretofore, to conserve the interests of the hereditary members of that body.

It is within the prerogative of the king to create from the people peers, making them dukes and lords, and thus in a sense ennobling them because of the innate worth which it may have been proved that they possess; but it is certainly a grave mistake to continue a House of Lords in which body the only claim to membership is the right of birth, by individuals in whom there may be lacking every possible qualification fitting them to enact laws to conserve the interests of the whole people.

Without doubt there are members of the House of Lords whose right to sit in that august body has come down to them by descent by those who swelled the camp of William the Norman, and in whom may be found all the noble qualities of manliness which qualify them to watch over the interests of the people and make provisions to conserve the best interests of all. But while this is true, it is not possible that all who bear the name of Lord, though they may be members of that body, are entirely worthy of the confidence of the people. The selfish interests conferred upon their progenitors by that military chieftain, known as the conqueror, however worthily these may have been bestowed upon those who followed his fortunes and shared in the triumph which he won, and received the royal bequests which parceled the conquered kingdom among his adherents, have come down with the estates with which he endowed them, and necessarily have conspired to increase the selfishness of those who may have degenerated in the succession of those vast estates.

The picture presented is an unfortunate one, looking at it from the viewpoint of those who have, by force of these ancient bequests, been shut out from the just occupation of the soil which should have been their inheritance but for the continuance of the prerogatives of the crown and of the House of Lords. We commend the reading of the extract from the Journal to the readers of the HERALD.

LONDON, January 30.—With Premier Asquith on the continent and Chancellor Lloyd-George closely following him, the politicians are all resting on their arms, discussing what lines of battle will be taken up in the new parliament. The moral generally drawn from the elections is that the country does not want radical changes in the House of Lords or in the government policies. The spirit of conciliation, therefore, is abroad, and schemes for a compromise are being debated.

The conservative papers propose the most interesting plan:

That a joint cabinet be chosen from the most moderate men of both parties to carry on the government for about two years, and that a truce be declared on party questions in the meantime. A royal commission to investigate the country's fiscal policy and to make recommendations regarding tariff reform is proposed.

The newspaper scheme of coalition government is not taken seriously by the Liberals, who, having won a victory, even if it is a narrow one, object to having their opponents dictate the program. Lord Roseberry's name is put forward for the premiership in the compromise cabinet, but Roseberry has for a long time refused office, and his popularity now is at a low mark, because of his course on the budget issues.

HOUSE OF LORDS REFORM.

The reform of the House of Lords seems to be the one thing assured. Both parties support it now. The conservatives and the lords themselves are willing to adopt moderate changes immediately, lest reforms which would knock the foundations from the upper house be carried.

The result is likely to be the abolition of the hereditary principles, and no longer shall the second and succeeding generations be given a vote, except those who shall prove their fitness to legislate, by service in the House of Commons, in civil office, or in the army or navy.

The conservatives are willing that the lords shall be deprived of the power to hold up taxation bills, if the plan be adopted, whereby nothing which could be considered new legislation shall be included in those bills. The Liberals want to deprive the House of Lords of the power to veto any bill whatsoever.

THE BAILEY-ROBERTS DEBATE.

Elder C. E. Willey writes from Fort Madison, Iowa, under date of February 6, as follows:

As the Bailey and Roberts debate, held at New London, Iowa, has passed into history, we thought a word in regard to it would be in order. It commenced the 18th of January and continued twelve nights, and if we were to say that (from commencement to finish) it was a victory of truth over error, we feel that it would be no exaggeration.

It was evident to all in the commencement that there was much prejudice in the minds of the people, but from the start to the close of the debate Brother Bailey, by his logical and clear-cut arguments, and by the fairness with which he treated his opponent, and his gentlemanly demeanor toward all, was gaining friends to our cause, and by the time the debate was half over Brother Bailey would be cheered every time he came into the hall. The debate was held in the opera house which will seat about four hundred people, and we had a full house throughout the entire discussion. We think Brother Bailey fully sustained his points in the affirmative propositions, clearly defining our position as a church and its object and mission in the world, also clearly setting forth the teaching of the Book of Mormon. We believe that he established all that the book claims for itself in the minds of all fair-minded people.

Mr. Roberts' stock in trade throughout consisted in charging the Saints with every misdemeanor that was ever thought of, from burning a town to jugglery of the lowest character, continually seeking to blacken the character of Joseph Smith. He garbled the statements of our books, quoted from other's statements and called them our own works. His most strenuous efforts were made on section 113 of Book of Covenants, trying to make it appear (and so asserted) that we put Joseph Smith ahead of Jesus Christ. He branded the Book of Mormon a fraud and proved it by the boat with a hole in the bottom, but tight like unto a dish-sh-sh-sh-sh, the rent that was waved from the top of a pole, and with contumely he heaped abuse of every kind upon us until it liked to have caused a division among their own members, some of them quitting the debate and declaring he was no representative of their church. One thing I desire to mention which worked against them. Some of their members placed two beautiful bouquets upon their table one evening, and one could hear from all quarters, "If they are Christian why did they not divide them?" Next evening there was a nice bouquet on our table, placed there by the citizens of the town. At the close of the debate the citizens gave Brother Bailey a purse of twenty-five dollars and fifteen cents with this statement, "For the defender of a worthy cause." They also asked Brother Bailey to preach on Sunday evening, which he did to a full house, the citizens paying the hall rent and giving Brother Bailey and the writer one dollar and fifty cents each.

I want to say that I consider Brother Bailey just the man to meet men like Roberts, for he rapidly disposed of Roberts' assertions, and under the influence of the Spirit set our work before the people in such a light that all could see that desired to see.

Just a word about the worthy chairman, Mr. Walters, who so ably presided and helped to make the debate a success. It certainly is a pleasure to know such men as he. His rulings were fair to all concerned. A Mr. Foreman acted as moderator for Mr. Roberts. The writer acted in like capacity for Brother Bailey. We believe this debate has done good, that the Saints are encouraged and rejoice in the truth. Many heard who never heard before, and we believe will sometime obey.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Our readers will notice that we are still behind in the publication of letters. We have a large number on hand and will try to have them appear as soon as possible, without doing injustice to any. Will correspondents let us know what they prefer, to have their letters published late, at once or not at all, or boiled down to an extract?

From the many notices of conferences and conventions we think it wise to caution district secretaries and clerks to send in their minutes in as concise a form as possible. Cut out the nonessential features, for we will likely be swamped with minutes from all directions, and you will probably prefer to boil down your minutes than have the editors do it. We make the following suggestions. Do not give opening and closing hymns nor names of those who make prayers. Do not mention items so purely routine as, "minutes of last session read and approved." Unless some glaring mistake has been recorded and corrected, there is no need of such appearing in the published minutes, and even in that case, secretaries should remember that the true minutes of conference sessions are only those which have been approved by the body, and therefore the correction of something which has not yet been approved need not appear. This matter could be better handled by secretaries having minutes approved at the last session. The speakers during the conference can be shown, if desired, as also a summary of financial reports, although when accounts have been audited and found correct, we see little advantage in showing figures. It seems to us to be sufficient to say that books have been audited and reported correct. In the organization of a conference it is well enough to show the presiding officers and secretary, but we question the advisability of showing who were appointed chorister, organist, ushers, etc., though we have no suggestion in regard to the minutes as kept by the secretary. We speak only of the minutes as they are to appear in the HERALD. There are good reasons for publishing conference minutes, of course, but we believe secretaries should keep in mind those things which make it necessary to publish them. It will be well to be careful in showing the names of those chosen to represent their districts at General Conference, for in the absence of other information, the published report will serve to show who are entitled to voice and vote. We think it quite useless to record motions made and amendments offered, etc., unless they are passed and become an action of the body, when said motions are not specially important. Discussions of important questions when no action results, can be mentioned in a brief manner.

"William H. Spry, governor of Utah, and his party, who have been to the christening of the battleship Utah, stopped yesterday at Independence and were the guests at luncheon of S. O. Benion of the Central States' Mission of the Mormon Church. In the party were Mrs. Spry and daughter, who had the honor of christening the Utah; Mr. and Mrs. John C. Sharp, Judge and Mrs. Stewart, Mr. O. Gardner, president of the state senate of Utah, and Mrs. Bonnemort, who is known through the West as the 'Sheep Queen.'

"Governor Spry was at one time president of the Southern States' Mission of the Mormon Church, the post now being held by S. O. Benion. During the afternoon the party made a call on Joseph Smith of the Reorganized Church and were well pleased with their visit with the venerable prophet. The party left for Kansas City to take a fast train to the West."—Kansas City Journal.

We note by a recent press dispatch that the Chicago Federation of Labor has adopted resolutions demanding that the National Pure Food Commission investigate charges that peanut shells are used in the manufacturing of breakfast foods. The president of the federation declared that as a result of a railroad wreck occurring recently in Michigan, it was discovered that several freight cars were loaded with peanut shells consigned to the manufacturers of a certain well-known brand of breakfast food. There seems to be no safety in having recourse to any food that is put upon the market. The man who flees from the dangerous pork chop and begins to live upon fancy breakfast foods, discovers that he is simply eating peanut shells and sawdust.

On account of the delay in issuing our Jubilee HERALD, a number of conference and convention notices were used in the issue for February 2, which appeared rather late. Under the circumstances we did the best we could.

We are indebted to the kindness of Bro. E. F. Hall for the three-color work on the Jubilee HERALD cover. The plates used in this work belong personally to him and represent considerable outlay of expense and labor. We wish to acknowledge his special assistance in getting out the Jubilee number.

F. M. Arnold, Texline, Texas, writes as follows: "A large schoolhouse is ready for any passing elder, and we hope it may be soon."

TO EVERY MAN HIS WORK.

Let me but do my work from day to day,
In field or forest, at the desk or loom,
In roaring market-place or tranquil room.

Let me but find it in my heart to say,
When vagrant wishes beckon me astray
"This is my work; my blessing, not my doom;
Of all who live, I am the one by whom
This work can best be done in the right way."

—Henry Van Dyke.

"It is unthinkable that this world should be the end. Human beings from the beginning have believed in another world, and, with progress in education and civilization, their beliefs have grown more and more beautiful and worthy."

Hymns and Poems

OLD HUNDRED.

(It is not certain that Kethe was the author of this stately version of the 100th psalm. But soon after its first appearance in the psalms of Sternhold and Hopkins, in 1605, it generally was credited to him. He belonged to that group of reformers and spiritual leaders of which Knox was the chief, being exiled with him in 1555—the year by the way, in which the Bible first was divided into verses. The hymn always has been sung to the same tune, which has therefore come to be generally known as "old hundred.")

All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice;
Him serve with fear, his praise forth tell,
Come ye before him, and rejoice.

The Lord, ye know, is God indeed,
Without our aid he did us make;
We are his flock, he doth us feed,
And for his sheep he doth us take.

O, enter then his gates with praise,
Approach with joy his courts unto;
Praise, laud, and bless his name always,
For it is seemly so to do.

For why? the Lord our God is good,
His mercy is for ever sure;
His truth at all times firmly stood,
And shall from age to age endure.

—William Kethe.

Elders' Note-Book

THE FINANCIAL LAW.

I have often wondered how persons can profess to be doing the will of God as members of the kingdom of heaven, and ignore a part of the law to govern in the church on earth. How strange it is that we can see the other one's fault or error or lack and not see our own. We certainly ought to know that what is required of one is required of all. "For there is no respect of persons with God." This is one of the conditions that ought to be appreciated greatly by all, and no doubt is by many, to get the benefit of any law, it must be kept, observed, complied with. How clear that is with respect to persons entering the church. Why, all will agree that to enter there is but one door, and those who try to do so by any other way are treated as "thieves and robbers." How absolute the demand is upon all here. Why not in our maintaining our good standing? Can we do it and leave off part? No, no. "Be not deceived." You must be a doer of the law. "Desire the sincere milk of the word that you may grow thereby." You should not let the sound of the word strike your ear with the effect "water has on a duck's back." No, get the nutriment of it so the growth designed may, can follow.

The law is that all shall be tithed, pay a tenth of their net gain, living according to the law of economy. Some people say, "I have no tithing." But how do you live? It seems to me the Saint who assumes that attitude is not a real Saint; he has not a true conception of divine law, and how can he grow? Thy will be done on earth in me, should be our earnest effort. We have no excuse because we have little. Give the little, and until you do, you can not expect the Father's special blessing. "Oh, but," say some, "God's blessings follow people of the world." There are exceptions to all rules, and besides these people may be following all the light they have. Some one else's failure is no excuse for me. Can a person, a Saint, ignore the law and be in good standing? Think about it. And if not in good standing, and you continue that way, where will you be when the Lord sends his angels to take the offenders out of his kingdom? Better think now, and not only think but do as it is written. No wonder the Master said five of the ten virgins were foolish virgins, as we look at conditions in the church to-day. Just think, fifty-five thousand members, and only about ten thousand who honor the Lord with the tithe. In Northern California only one hundred and twenty-eight paid tithes, offerings, and consecrations, when we have over seven times that number of members. What are the rest of these people thinking about? They certainly are not doing much on this line. To those who do not pay their tithing this appeal is made. What excuse can you give the Master for not honoring his law? If the gospel is worth anything, it is worth the best effort we can make.

Do the best you can. No more is expected of you, but you are not free until you do that. "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." What is the antithesis of that? Why, if ye do not continue you are not my disciples. What are you then? Of the class who say, Lord, Lord, and do not. Oh, let us be "wise servants" that the future shall bring us no regrets, is my earnest desire.

CHARLES A. PARKIN, Bishop.

"POSSIBLE AND PROBABLE EXPLANATIONS."

We note in HERALD of January 12 a letter of Bro. J. W. Wight, relative to "a possible solution for the difference in the Lord's prayer as appearing in the Book of Mormon, and the Inspired Translation." The solution as it came to the sister mentioned, was given us some years ago. We had thought the matter over often; had heard criticism passed by members and outsiders upon the difference, as both books claimed inspiration and we accepted the Inspired rendering as superior. We strongly desired "a reason," as it came to us forcibly, and with us it was original then, that the error was humanly natural as "the seer" was dependent wholly thereon, until coming to the Lord's prayer familiar to him, he naturally dictated it from his mind or memory and gave it as he had previously learned it. The assumption is clear, when if you have had experience in making a true and careful copy of unknown matter you adhere closely to the original in hand, but when you come to familiar passages, verse, or poem, you write from your own mind, or memory.

The fact, too, that the Book of Mormon was produced before the Holy Scriptures gives support to this solution. It came as satisfaction to us, we might say inspiration. We have used it effectively and think it "good ground." We might add too, that as we were about to enter the pulpit on one occasion an "agnostic" friend said, "I wish you would explain to-night, how Moses, if he wrote the books attributed to him, could tell of his burial and events that transpired after his decease." For a moment we hesitated in thought, opened the grip, took out the "Holy Scriptures" without knowing why, and read therefrom a revelation given to Joseph the Seer, June, A. D., 1830. We then said to everyone who believes in God and that he can show things past, the admission must be made that he (God) can reveal the future as well; and in this revelation it is stated that God said to Moses, Behold, and "he [Moses] looked and beheld the world upon which he was created, and as Moses beheld the world and the ends thereof, and all the children of men which are, and which were created, . . . behold not with mine natural, but my spiritual eyes. . . . And he also beheld the earth, and the inhabitants thereof, . . . numberless as the sands upon the sea shore," which must have shown future generations, etc. I read it all. I preached from this, and at the close, the friend took me by the hand and said, "You have made me see much more than you intended in your reply." Might it not be wisdom to make future editions of Book of Mormon conform to the better rendering of the Inspired Version and defend the change, than as now defend the difference in the Lord's prayer as found in the two?

Very truly your brother,

ALMA M. FYRANDO.

THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE.

I do not presume to present thoughts herewith presented because the subject is new, for it is one that has often been written upon, especially by those who do and have called the Bible in question, have doubted its divine origin. The relations of Holy Writ to the teachings of astronomy; the seeming contrariety of the one to the other have often been discussed by doubters of the Bible and others.

Of late our attention has been called to this matter by those opposing the Book of Mormon, because of what Helaman and Mosiah say regarding the earth moving while the sun does not rise and set, as it was believed to have done in olden days. (See Helaman 4: 61, 62; Alma 16: 54, 55.) The expressions, "the sun rises, sets," or the sun "arose and went down," are quite ancient, and these forms of expression accord with what seemed to be the case. A round earth moving around the sun is now fully susceptible of demonstration. The sun and earth and all the planets that constitute the universe is our earth and heaven. (Inspired Translation, Genesis 1: 1.) It has been charged that the Book of Mormon is a modern composition because of these references to modern ideas of sidereal heavens found in it. It seems not to occur to the objectors that the relation of the Israelites to the Egyptians of early times would beget just such ideas as were expressed by the ancient Americans; would be just what we would expect to find, it being what it claims to be. The ancient Egyptians taught the earth's rotundity, the difference in time between places of different longitude, knew the causes and laws of eclipses, and constructed tables which gave the motions of sun, moon, and planets. The annual motion of the earth around the sun produces an apparent annual revolution of the sun among the planets, and their apparent revolution was perfectly understood in the earliest historical times. The annual course of the sun was mapped out on the heavens, and divided into twelve signs, known as the signs of the Zodiac.

Johnson's Encyclopedia, volume 1, pages 308 and 1150, says:

The year was known to consist of three hundred and sixty-five and one fourth days and the connection of the seasons with the position of the sun in the Zodiac was thoroughly understood and described.

Again in A Miracle in Stone, by Joseph A. Seiss, page 75, we find:

Modern science ascribes the discovery of the sphericity of the earth to Thales, 600 B. C., but here in Egyptian Pyramids it is more perfectly represented than Thales ever knew, more than one thousand five hundred years before Thales was born. A fixed axis would imply motion, and the making of the sides of the pyramid to record an even fraction of the earth's axis of rotation just as many times as there are days in the year, proves that the builders had the idea of both motions of the earth, and a knowledge of the number of times it revolves on its axis in making its annual revolution around the sun.

I am informed by Elder S. W. L. Scott that the dates here given would carry us back to thirty-five hundred years before Copernicus or Galileo flourished. He also reminds me that Mr. Alexander Campbell states: "Pythagoras obtained his knowledge of Ennphis from an Egyptian priest of Heliopolis, the city of the sun."

In People's Encyclopedia, volume 1, page 68: "Pythagoras taught 500 B. C., the theory, the truth of which has since been established, that the sun is the center of the planetary world and the earth circulates around it."

We might remark that astronomy of to-day in its calculations of the distance of the earth from the sun, is approximately the distance as indicated in the pyramids of Egypt. See Defense of the Pearl of Great Price, by S. Reynolds. Any of the dates of the authorities here cited antedate the times of either Mosiah or Helaman. Some knowledge of these things was possessed by the writers of the Bible, we believe.

David affirms:

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. . . . In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, . . . his going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof.—Psalm 19: 1-6.

The sun, then, goes forth on his circuit, but while this is going on the earth in its orbit moves around the sun, as indicated by Helaman.

In Job 26: 7, he tells us, "He stretcheth out the north over the empty place and hangeth the earth upon nothing." This writer noted that the earth hangs in space upon nothing tangible, so far as the eye even aided by scientific glasses of the greatest power can discern. But does the Bible refer to it as a globe or sphere? Let us see.

Christ, in Proverbs, chapter 8, says:

Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth: while as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he set a compass [or circle, marginal reading] upon the face of the depth: when he established the clouds above: when he strengthened the fountains of the deep: when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundation of the earth: then I was by him, as one brought up with him: and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him; rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth; and my delights were with the sons of men.

"When he set a compass [circle] upon the face of the deep." How grand this language! We can almost see the outline of the processes of creation. A compass or circle, what is that? To inclose on all sides; to surround on all sides; to surround, to encircle. To encircle—to form a circle about; to inclose in a ring. Webster: To make the circuit of. Orbitat motion is implied in the above language of Proverbs. God ordained the spherity of the earth, as of all other orbs, their circles or revolutions around their centers, concentric planes, his mechanical instrument, compass. The moving of these bodies revolved them into orbs, as shot are formed by revolving in space. Force is invisible to the natural eye, is silent to the ear, but by noting its results in motion, formation and sound production, we know that force of power is there; and it is the force of wisdom of infinite intelligence,—order. But intelligence is not manifest in operation or in effect to us independently of personality, or if you please, an organized brain, personal mind.

The law of motion is involved in the moving of these mighty orbs, but neither does the law of motion or any other law enact or execute itself. So, neither does a watch, engine, airship, telegraph, or telephone enact or execute itself. Independently of the continued application of intelligence to them, they dissolve, cease to be, and by analogy the same would be true of the vast universe that shines and exists in harmony throughout infinite space.

It would hardly seem reasonable that Adam, Enoch, the Egyptians, Noah, and Joshua should have been ignorant of these things. But did these ancient worthies understand regarding the orbital movement of these orbs? A peculiar statement stands recorded in the triumphant song of Deborah, when the Lord delivered Israel out of the hand of their Gentile enemies; when Jaban, king of Hazor, sent General Sisera to subdue Israel. But Sisera fell before the God of Israel:

The kings came and fought, then fought the kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo; they took no gain of money. They fought from heaven; the stars in their courses fought against Sisera.—Judges 5: 19, 20.

What were these courses of the stars but the paths or orbits in which they moved around their centers? Since the intelligent Jewish women of the eleventh or twelfth century B. C. knew of the moving of the stars or planets in their courses, orbits, or paths, need it form an objection to the Book of Mormon that some of its writers knew and spoke of the revolution of the earth around the sun? This objection is, therefore, by the foregoing considerations, entirely nullified. It vanishes as the mist before the orb of day.

We submit another testimony from the Bible along an additional line. Not only is the spherity of the heavenly bodies taught in Holy Writ, but their orbital revolution also. We invite attention to Isaiah 40: 21-23:

Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth? It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers; that stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in; that bringeth princes to nothing: he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

The word circle, as a noun, means a round body, a sphere, an orb; as a verb, to move around, to revolve around. Before the earth was created, it "was without form and void." Void of form, light, production, or regulated motion, was no part of an organized system; nor was it a world or an indispensable part of the universe as now.

At this late date we need not argue the spherity or the revolution of the earth around the sun. But the Prophet Isaiah seems to wonder why the people did not understand, since it had been declared since creation that the earth revolved in its path, orbit, or "circle" by the creative power of God. Sitting enthroned in space infinite or boundless, as the universe is, displaying a light supernatural to man, and glory and a systematic motion on which man is dependent for his very existence. Is it any wonder that Isaiah wondered why man from the beginning of his existence had not seen it, demonstrating God's infinite power controlling it, and his light reflected by and through it? Is it any wonder that Paul could declare:

For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead.—Romans 1: 22.

We therefore see no reason why Mosiah and Helaman might not have understood that the earth and heavenly bodies revolved around the sun. We men have not been forced to depend upon comparatively modern scientists to give us all the scientific truths to be known. Some discredit the ancient past as to astronomy altogether. Some, in some respects, venerate the olden ages to the extreme. People of the older ages knew some truth, yet in many things they were superstitious. So the people of the present age are both ignorant and superstitious in regard to some things, especially as to religion and the revelations of God. Intelligence and wisdom are not born of ignorance and superstition. Light, either natural or spiritual, is not begotten and born of darkness. Both do not occupy the same mind or the same space at the same time. This is a mental and spiritual impossibility, as demonstrated in all experience. Nor can the mind or eye of man discern or see light or truth so long as they choose to remain full of darkness. Light and darkness are opposites. Light has power to banish or overcome darkness. Light saves and delivers and redeems, but darkness leaves decay and destruction, physical, mental, and spiritual. The light of the physical universe did not originate with the finite or what man knows as the natural, therefore, it must have originated with the infinite and the supernatural. Physical light is neither self-originating nor self-existing. It was not originally created by man, the finite; and hence originated with the infinite. We know that light by man is his creation, therefore light was created by the infinite. Man has discovered to a degree the use or design of light, and hence is forced to admit an original designer.

It is asserted by astronomers that the sun and all the solar system is moving, some say towards the constellation Leyra, at the rate of hundreds of millions of miles annually. Some say towards the star marked "Pi" in the constellation Hercules, with the enormous velocity of over twenty-three millions of miles per year. Now the Bible says that in what we may recognize as the last days the earth shall be "moved exceedingly," and shall be removed like a cottage." (Isaiah 24: 20.) Since the sun, attended by all its planets, comets, and satellites, is sailing through space, the earth, maintaining its structure, as when a wrecker moves a house, is being moved also as a cottage.

Some eyes do not see light, but light is just the same. Some ears do not hear sound, but sound is. But sound, light, and heat are the effects of things, principles in operation, and go back to cause or causes. Effects can not exist without causes. This experiences demonstrate. Anarchy may temporarily interfere with effects, but it can not remove causes. Being based on principle causes are indestructible; principles in their nature are eternal. The infinite application of principles will, if not interfered with, in operation and effect, result eternally in identical effects or results. No law is suspended in working what we call a miracle. A sick man may be instantly healed of disease. It is only placing him back instantly into harmony with laws of health from which he fell, the result of which was his illness. When we grow into a knowledge of the laws we are unacquainted with as yet, they will be what will then be called natural. Immortality is the result of the natural laws of the celestial world. All law is supernatural that relates to intelligent existence; and yet all are divinely natural in their sphere. A natural law is one that works out its design in the sphere to which it belongs and applies. Get up to where law now supernatural (above natural) to us is in operation, and there it is the natural law of that place, condition, or sphere. Until we rise up to and receive the benefits to be derived from the operation of such law, to us it is supernatural. Not long ago to have held that we could have conversed with persons beyond the Atlantic from New York without some visible means, would have been to believe in the supernatural. But not so with wireless telegraphy. Laws do not always operate as they appear to us. Otherwise it would have been quite natural to see the earth move around the sun, as did Mosiah and Helaman. The sun would not apparently arise and set.

When selfishness has been sufficiently driven out of the hearts of Saints, so that they can love their Father in heaven "with all their soul, might, mind, and strength, and their brother as themselves," the questions of coöperation and equality will have been solved, and it will not be thought that we will have to await the next generation to see the redemption of Zion. Those who attain to the fullness of these two commandments can live Zionic conditions, can redeem Zion. But questions may arise: "Can those who fail to attain to that condition to observe aright the two great commandments (including all the other commandments) attain to celestial glory? Who can attain to the state of heart contained in the two commands? To all laws there are bounds and conditions, said the martyred prophet, and those who can not abide the celestial law can not abide a celestial glory. This is as logical as life's course. Nor can Zion be built up unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom. A generation, therefore, who can not redeem Zion, because not regenerated sufficiently to carry out the principles by which Zion is to be redeemed, can not attain to celestial glory. Principle and law based thereon, are the bases of eternal things.

Those who get low enough down in the valley of humility to rise to such eminence as to realize what these principles are, will, like Isaiah, behold the planets borne aloft along in their courses, paths, or orbits by the power of God.

As also he is in the sun, and the light of the sun, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also he is in the moon, and is the light of the moon, and the power thereof by which it was made. As also the light of the stars, and the power thereof by which they were made. And the earth also, and the power thereof, even the earth upon which you stand. And the light which now shineth, which giveth you light, is through him who enlighteneth your eyes, which is the same light that quickeneth your understanding; which light proceedeth forth from the presence of God, to fill the immensity of space. The light which is in all things; which giveth life to all things; which is the law by which all things are governed; even the power of God who sitteth upon his throne, who is in the bosom of eternity, who is in the midst of all things.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 2, 3.

And again, verily I say unto you, He hath given a law unto all things by which they move in their times, and their seasons; and their courses are fixed; even the courses of the heavens and the earth; which comprehendeth the earth and all the planets; and they give light to each other in their times, and in their seasons, in their minutes, in their hours, in their days, and in their weeks, in their months, in their years: all these are one year with God, but not with man.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 11.

All these kingdoms, worlds, planets move "in the midst of the power of God. . . and any man who hath seen"—seen, mark you—"any or the least of these, hath seen God moving in his majesty and power." (Section 85: 12.)

He that hath seen these things moving and noted their design, purpose and accomplishments by that same light by which the worlds are lighted, and their movements, hath seen that by the power of the infinite God, supernatural, they exist and consist.

But it is true to experience that "the natural man received not the things of the Spirit of God, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." It is just as true concerning the natural heavens as the spiritual, for the law governing both are of the same source, "the one God." He ordained both worlds and the code of law governing each. Is it any wonder David said: "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork"? They daily and to all ages speak forth and reflect to all who truly seek to see, his eternal power, glory, wisdom and Godhead. "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge." Who will darken this counsel of God, plainly revealed from day to day, ages on ages, by words with knowledge?

THE MEAT STRIKE AND THE WORD OF WISDOM.

In view of the fact that Cleveland has gained some notoriety of late by inciting a rebellion against the meat trust, and high prices of foods in general, it seems reasonable to send a few lines to your columns from the storm center where twenty-five thousand people have signed the beef trust boycott, and the movement has raced like wildfire across the country. It is worthy of note, remarkably so, that this is the same locality from whence the Lord sent out counsel to his church many years ago (section 86), warning and forewarning his people against the combinations of mercenary men who would enslave the people, taking advantage of their lack of wisdom in providing the necessities of life. This, to me, is one of the brightest gems in the diadem of revelation that crowns this latter day work, because it is positive, because it is practical, because it is verifiable within the purview of the weakest of Saints.

The "meat strike" is born of the worldly wisdom of man, and will prove futile, as all movements of a selfish origin must. It lacks the principle and the philosophy and the reason propounded in the Word of Wisdom, and so must work into the very hands of the enemy, and what is rejected and spurned now will be paid for dearly and eaten greedily from "cold storage" some months hence. Those who fast against their convictions are not apt to exercise moderation when the reins are loosed. One paper calls this movement "betting on the stomach against cold storage!" And a Socialist paper calls it a "hunger strike" in which "thirty thousand people, depriving themselves of the necessities of life, is a sight pathetic as it is absurd."

Amongst the columns of utter nonsense on this subject—vain squirmings of the victims, one note is refreshing indeed, advocating "a more sparing and economical use of meat, intensive cultivation of land, making every acre produce more than under the present careless way."

Otto Carque, the economist and socialist, in Foundation of All Reform, draws attention to the fact that man instead of taking from the soil at first hand the bounty of God and nature, "diverts one hundred million bushels of grain, potatoes, etc., into alcohol, in the United States alone every year, and feeds the offal of the distilleries to the hogs which he takes back in the form of scrofulous pork." He proclaims that enough cereals are thus transformed as would "feed three such cities as New York, and nourish every pauper on the face of the earth." Here we are getting down to "bed rock"; reform must begin at home, in the individual. Our personal appetites and desires must be reclaimed, naturalized, reborn, not remain so dependent upon the old ideas and the false standards of the world we forsook for Christ's kingdom. Let us look forward to those conditions we shall love to experience with Him, and train ourselves and desires toward that end. "Seek first the kingdom." Let us read again and honor the preparatory counsel he has given us in the Word of Wisdom, and turn but to the world to see it verified.

Those who complain most in this "strike" are those who have most voluntarily sold themselves into the bondage they deplore. They have desired flesh and liquor first, but rebel at the monetary cost thereof; we can not afford for cattle the land which will produce ten times the food stuffs of other kinds, in view of the increasing millions of humanity. Bradstreet's commentary says of the wheat crop, "Last year's crop was the second largest ever grown, while in Canada it was the largest, but in spite of these facts the visible supply of grain in stock is the smallest for six years back," or thirty million bushels smaller than a year ago!

It is interesting to read the opinions of farmers and commission merchants in Cleveland papers as to the reason of high prices: "It does not pay us to fatten hogs or cattle for market with corn retailing at ninety cents a bushel."

"Little pigs we sold for one dollar and fifty cents last year, sell for six dollars a pair. The reason is the corn of the country goes into paper boxes instead of hogs and cattle."

"Meat has been going up for the last ten years; the reason, fewer animals raised for consumption and a growing demand for meat. The remedy, stop eating so much meat."

"The demand for certain parts of the carcass are far in excess of the supply, hence the price is raised to offset the effect, but the poor take it to signify the worth."

Meats will continue to grow dearer in spite of strikes and boycotts, but a gleam of light strikes through the angry clouds, for surely some one will be brought in touch with the fact that a vacation from the usual heavy meat meal for some time does not mean physical weakness to ensue; but Saints (of all people) should experience a healthy reaction in increased spirituality first, a better comprehension of "the more abundant life" physically and mentally, and certainly some financial recompense from reduced butcher and drug store bills. I speak from observation.

[The following letter was not intended for publication, but upon solicitation we have been permitted to use it. Let us say in advance that as "to the pure all things are pure," so to the truly modest no violation of modesty will be found, but such gems of truth and wisdom as should prove beacon lights to all who have assumed the marriage relation. Had all sons such a father, and they willing to follow his example, the question of divorce, which is now exciting both church and state, would, we believe, soon find a happy solution.—EDITOR.]

A Father's Letter to His Newly Married Son and Wife.

My Dear Children: I had hoped to have an opportunity to have a talk with you by ourselves while you were here with us; but there did not seem to be any time for it; and I am going to put down on paper some of the things I should have said if it had been practicable. You have both, probably, heard most of it, and perhaps know all of it; but I want you both to carefully consider it together, as a message from me; and I hope that you will not take it as "preaching" in any way but in the spirit in which it is given—as coming from one who has only your best interests at heart, and who wishes you to get all the happiness possible out of your new relations to each other. There is no other earthly happiness that can compare with what can be attained in the perfect marriage; and when marriage begins with the perfect love for and trust in each other, which you have, they ought to continue and increase all through life, and they surely will unless something is done to interfere with their growth.

Ever since our marriage, we have always tried to do the very best we could for our children, not only because it was our duty, but because we loved them; and we never did anything for them grudgingly, but were glad to do what we could, and did our best to learn how best to do it. At that time, there were not many opportunities for obtaining information upon the subject, and we were in a large measure obliged to work on general principles. But we loved each other devotedly and we loved our children; and when anything came up about which we were not very sure, we talked the matter over together and tried to put ourselves in the place of the other, and then did what seemed to be the thing most likely to secure the desired results. And, in the main, I think that we were fairly successful; for we both had a reasonable amount of common sense, and when that was mixed with unselfish love, we were not very likely to go far astray.

From the time I first knew your mother well enough to be considered even an acquaintance, she began to influence my life for good, and her influence continues with me now. I felt at once a desire to be worthy of her friendship long before I dared to think of winning her love; and when I found that both had been given to me, I was more than ever desirous that nothing that I might do, or fail to do, should ever lessen her respect and love for me. She filled the measure of my ideal from the first, and she still does, although that ideal has always been a high one, she is still my own dear, pretty, little sweetheart. We never outlived the honeymoon; and each new day that dawned brought more love and happiness to each of us. . . . We have had trials and sorrows, as all have; but they served only to draw us more closely together. We never allowed anything to come between us, and never had a misunderstanding that was not cleared up the day it came; in fact it is almost an exaggeration to say that we ever did have a real misunderstanding of any kind. We have both always felt that we were wonderfully blessed in our love for each other and the love of our children, and that such great happiness as we have had was not given to many. And yet we have never been able to see why it should not come to all those who begin as we began, and as you are beginning; and it is with the hope of helping you to have all that we have that I am writing this.

It goes without saying that the highest type of love can not exist without respect; when that is lessened or ceases to be, love can not thrive. Neither can it thrive without unselfishness, for that is the essence of true love. But it is true of this, as it is of other spiritual mysteries, that, the more you give, the more you receive; and if young people could only realize how much more comes to them out of such a life than from one where self comes first, we should not hear of so many unhappy marriages. When the husband's first thought is for his wife's happiness and comfort, she receives the things she prizes in the sweetest way imaginable, and vice versa; what each gives is returned many fold, and in no other way can their mutual happiness be so increased.

I do not think that, without the religious feeling, the reverence for and trust in the Lord, there can be the sure foundation for deep and abiding happiness together. We thought at first that we were as happy as was possible; but after I came to understand things more clearly and felt that I could put my trust in Him, there came a peace and a certainty that were not there before, that helped us with each other and with others; and we were never before as happy as we have been since that time.

When we entered upon the marriage relation we felt that it was incumbent upon us, for our own sake as well as for the sake of the children that might come to us, to give our children as good a start as possible, and then do all that we could to have them continue in the right way. Your mother had never used tea or coffee, and, although I had used both quite freely up to the age of eighteen (doing simply as I had been taught), at that time, through the example and advice of a boy friend, I discontinued their use, and very rarely thereafter even tasted either for many years, not until after all our children were born, and then rarely except when used to keep me awake when I had night work to do. I have never used tobacco or alcohol. We were both of the same temperament; and, ordinarily, the children of such parents would be physically and perhaps mentally inferior to the parents. But I think that our children have been, as children should be, an advance over the parents; and I think that I can say truthfully that they are all above the average. I am, however, quite certain that if we had lived as many people do, our children would have been below the average, physically, mentally, and morally. When we were married, my wife's health was poor, in fact, her father told me, some years afterward, that he did not expect that she would live two years; and, if I had failed to love her and cherish her, as is sometimes the case, it is very doubtful if she would have outlived that period. She was a confirmed dyspeptic at the time of our marriage, and I didn't myself know much about taking care of anyone. My mother was the daughter of a doctor, and was a good practical doctor, and a good nurse; and while, as a small boy, I had pretty much everything in the way of disease that came along, they bothered mother a great deal more than they bothered me; and after I was nine years old, I had only one serious illness (typhoid fever, the second year after our marriage), although I have had a good deal of nervous trouble all my life until a few years ago; but since I cut out breakfast that has almost disappeared. Our doctor told us that my wife could not expect to get over her dyspepsia unless she would discontinue drinking anything at her meals, and within half an hour before and an hour and a half after. As we were anxious that she should get well, and as it would make it easier for her to follow the doctor's advice, for a year and a half we never had any liquid on the table, except when we had company, and even then we of course did not drink anything ourselves. The result of this course was that she outgrew her dyspepsia and improved in health, although I always had to take care of her.

My wife wore a corset up to the time of our marriage, and wore it tight, although she thought she did not. But after I had persuaded her to try leaving it off for a week, or two, she found that she could not wear it as she had done before, and admitted that it must have been tight. She wore that as I had used tea and coffee—because her mother had taught her to. She derived much benefit from leaving it off, and gave her daughters the benefit of her own experience. The corset question is a difficult one to solve, on account of the styles of feminine apparel, and the natural dislike of a woman to appear differently dressed from those about her; but I do not think that any well informed person will deny that, the less of it there is the better. The compression of the delicate pelvic organs in a woman leads to untold weakness, misery, and suffering; and, for my part, I do not understand how they can endure such things as they do. A man has nothing inside to be hurt in that way by constricted clothing; but it would make life miserable for me in a little while if I had to dress as most women do.

Neither my mother nor my wife's mother, apparently, had any proper idea of how a bridegroom should treat his bride in the sexual relation—perhaps I wrong them—it may have been that they thought that they knew (that their experience and that of other women had taught them) that it was idle to expect that any man would show any consideration whatever for his wife at the one time in her life when it was most needed. However that may be, their advice to her was simply shocking to us both—to my wife at the time, and to me when she told me later; and it has been an unceasing cause for thankfulness on my part ever since that my little wife found that her husband was as respectful and considerate as her lover had been, and that we can both look back to our wedding night as the happiest night of our lives.

We made it our first business, after we were married, to get the best books we could find treating on the marriage relation, and the care that the wife required then and during pregnancy; and when we found that the latter condition existed, she was given all the care and attention that love could devise. She dressed loosely, was careful as to her diet, and took all the sleep she could get. I used to let her sleep as long as she could, and managed, after some coaching, to get a simple breakfast ready for her, so that she got through that part fairly well. Then I gave her a sitz bath every night, and gave all the abdominal region a thorough rubbing with glycerin; and, as a result of it all, not forgetting a large quantity of love thoroughly incorporated with the rest, she slept well, had a good appetite, improved in health, had a most beautiful pink and white complexion, and was at her happiest and prettiest in every way during the period that with many women is quite the reverse, and after the first birth, had scarcely any trouble at confinement.

Of course all this took considerable time and work, and there are many men who could not if they would give as much time to it as we did; but in my case it was altogether practicable; and there has never been anything that gave better returns on the investment to us both. There is an old saying that "Love lightens labor," which is true; but when a man is doing something for the wife he loves, it is not labor, it is pleasure. So I received double pay as I went along, the pleasure of taking care of my wife, and her increased love because I showed her that I loved her.

After the children were born, we took the best care of them we knew how, dressed them sensibly, gave them plain, wholesome food, read to them, played with them, got them plenty of good books suited to their years, and, in a word, treated them as one should his own flesh and blood, and always loved them and let them know that we did.

There was a good deal of hard work in all this, and some self denial; but there has been nothing that we have done that paid us better in every way. If our parents had known more than they did, and had taught us as we have tried to teach our children, our children would be better than they are; but we did the best we knew how; and we want you to profit by our experience and have still greater happiness than came to us. However, if you have as much, you ought to be satisfied.

We have always taught our children that there is only one standard of morals, and that our daughters (and other people's daughters) have the right to expect equal purity, uprightness, consideration, etc., in the men who become their husbands, as our boys have to expect those qualities in the girls whom they marry; and that all through their lives it is incumbent upon the husband to show the same deference to and consideration for his wife that he has shown to his sweetheart. Incumbent is really not the proper word to use in that connection; when there is the real, true love, nothing is done from a sense of duty; it is a privilege to be permitted to express one's affection for one's wife in all these various ways.

One thing I wish to impress upon you is the importance of confiding fully and unreservedly each in the other. Of course you will understand that this does not apply to other people's affairs that may be intrusted to one—such things are not his, any more than their money would be. But as to all of your own affairs, everything should be plain to both. And never let anything that anyone else may say come between you—find out at first hand about everything. If there should ever come a time when, through overwork or worry or illness, one's nerves get raw, remember what causes it, and let the well one clasp the other still closer and remember that love is the best doctor that can be found.

Another thing: there may come times when it seems as if a little more money than one has must be found, and there may be temptations to overlook in a degree the methods by which it can be obtained. But there are many things that are worse than to go shabby or live in narrow quarters or to forego even necessities, or to go hungry. Do not ever allow anything to tempt you to do anything that even leans toward unfairness or dishonor, or that would tend to cause you to be less considerate for those around you. Anything that you would gain in that way would be as apples of Sodom; self-respect is a thing that, once lost, is hard to regain, and no fleeting temporal benefit could possibly recompense one for its loss.

Don't be chary about letting each other know of your love, at the proper times of course. Love thrives wonderfully when cultivated, but withers under neglect; and whoever neglects it is throwing away his most precious possession.

There are a great many things for you both to learn in regard to your relations with each other and with those around you, and it will be your privilege and happiness to do this together. One may be superior to the other in certain kinds of knowledge; but they are all to be shared and assimilated and used for the common benefit.

I have had some talk with C—— lately about the things he should know; and we have counseled with our children at all times as much as seemed practicable. With the knowledge you both have and can acquire, and with the love and respect which you have for each other, there will be no difficulty in your knowing what is the right thing to do in any case and in doing it.

There is one thing more that I am going to say, and I am going to speak plainly. C—— has used tobacco for the last two or three years, perhaps longer. It is a very offensive habit to those who do not use it; as he knows himself, if he will think back to the time he was out in Wyoming. I have his letters, and can quote his own testimony on the subject. The least of the objections to its use (but which alone is sufficient to condemn it) is that it takes off the edge of one's susceptibilities. No man can be a real gentleman who is not considerate of the rights and feelings of others; and no man can use tobacco without lack of consideration for those around him. In addition to that, everyone knows that the physical effects of tobacco are injurious, often even when used in moderation, and certainly when used immoderately. As a matter of fact, C—— has been using tobacco to excess for some time past, as I know personally; and he has been drinking too much strong tea and coffee, both of which are injurious. Coffee is a strong sexual excitant, as is also tobacco, the latter perhaps more so than coffee.

One of the most imperative requirements for a truly happy marriage is that the husband shall be considerate of his wife in their sexual relations. There is nothing that will bind a woman who loves her husband more strongly to him than consideration in this regard; and there is no other way in which the husband can get as great happiness out of that relation as he can by treating his wife as he would wish her to treat him, if he were the wife and she the husband. It is generally acknowledged by the medical profession, I believe, that it is harder for a man to control his sexual desires than it is for a woman—throughout the animal creation the male is the wooer and the female is to be wooed; and most men will admit that it is harder to control themselves in this way than to yield. But a man should be his own master, and should control his desires; if he can not control himself, he is the slave of his passions, and under such circumstances he has no right to take the happiness of a pure, sweet, lovely woman into his keeping only to wreck her life. The wife has more at stake in the marriage relation than has the husband. In a way, it is an incident in his life; to her, it is life itself. She leaves her home and her family, and her life is merged in that of her husband, that is, of course, speaking generally; and it must be so in the very nature of things, and in a true marriage it is all right and as it should be. If there are mutual respect and love and consideration, there is no other earthly happiness that can for a moment be compared with it; and it is a very small price to pay for all this that a man should simply be decent and act fairly to his wife. If the situations were reverse, there is not a man but what would demand all that is required of the husband, and would dissolve the relation forthwith if it were not granted.

Now, there is no question but that in a majority of cases where two young people marry for love, the husband is really desirous of doing all that he should, as a husband, because he loves his wife and because he wants to act as a gentleman should; and this is an instance of the truth of the statement that the people perish through lack of knowledge. Many men do not know how they should act. But it is also true that some men who know how they should act, and wish to do so, are unable to control themselves because habits of life and conduct have weakened their mastery of themselves, and the result is that what would have been an ideal life for both is wrecked.

It is often said, somewhat flippantly, that if coffee or tobacco or alcohol is a poison, it must be a very slow one, because people have attained a great age who have indulged in one or more or all of them. It is true that they have indulged in them, perhaps to excess, for many years, and are still alive, and apparently in fair or good physical health. But is that the proper test? Are their wives happy and fresh and fair, as they should be; and is there nothing in their lives that could have been bettered? Have they received the care and love that was their due? Are their children healthy and happy and pure-minded and intellectually bright, as we all want our children to be; or are they, as is so often the case, weakened physically and morally, and often mentally, bringing their fathers' gray hairs in sorrow to the grave? I have seen many cases, right here at home, where these results have followed, in their worst aspect; and it is only fair to assume that lesser evils follow in other cases, that would not have resulted if the parents had been as careful as they should have been in their own preparation for the marriage relation.

Now, when two people enter the marriage relation, and assume the responsibility of bringing children into the world, they owe it to these children to do the very best they can to give them a good start, and then to train them carefully until they are able to take their own places in the world in turn. The best is none too good for us, in ordinary matters of life, then why should we not all do everything we can to fit ourselves for this most important duty that can come to parents?

If we had neglected these things with our own children, to their detriment, they could rightfully censure us; and, if they neglect them as to their children, they will be censured. And believe me when I tell you, as the result of our own experience, that there is nothing else in life that can come to a man or woman that can compare with the respect and love of his wife or her husband and children; with them, he is richer than Croesus; without them he is poor, though he has the heaped-up wealth of the world at his command.

It is _____ years and _____ months to-day since C_____s mother left us; and if that great sorrow should come to him, he will find his greatest consolation in the thought that nothing he ever said or did to his wife lessened her love for him.

And now may the Lord keep you both, each for the other, and give you the happiness that comes to those who truly love each other and seek to serve Him.

Your loving FATHER.

Requests for Prayer.

An aged sister, Mrs. Harriet Kennedy, wishes the prayers of the Saints in her behalf that she may be given strength, that while her life is spared she may not suffer, as she is alone a good part of the time. Her great faith in the prayers of the Saints will surely be rewarded.

Brother and Sister Middleton, of Fort Collins, Colorado, desire the earnest prayers of the Saints for their daughter, Emma, who is sorely afflicted. Request sent us by Elder Columbus Scott.

Letter Department

Editors Herald: As I am renewing my subscription for the church papers, will write of the work in these parts. It is improving, meetings have been better than usual lately. Our branch is scattered, but they are faithful members here. My prayer is that the Saints may lay aside the pride and sins which do so easily beset us, and come up higher.

Your brother,
W. C. ROTH.

CHARLES CITY, IOWA, January 3, 1910.

Editors Herald: There are only five members here but we have a Sunday school of ten members. We are trying in our weak way to keep up Sunday school and prayer meeting. We have not had any preaching here since last summer, when Elder McKiernan was here and held meetings for a week, but with little interest. We can not help but think that there must be some honest hearted souls here searching for the light.

We can not get a hall or building of any kind to hold meetings in, but our homes are always open.

We are willing to bear all the expenses of an elder and help pay his way to the next place he wishes to go. Hoping that some one in the Des Moines District will see this and try to do something for us, we remain,

Your brother and sister in the glorious gospel,
MRS. H. S. OTT.

311 BLAIR STREET.

BANDERA, TEXAS, January 1, 1910.

Dear Herald: On this New Year night I take my pen in hand to drop you a few lines, as I am lonely, being alone with my two little boys, and they are asleep. The HERALD is our only preacher now. So it is indeed very dear to us.

Our branch meetings are fifteen miles away. It is impossible for us to attend often. When I wrote before we were having meetings once a month six miles from here, but that is a thing of the past. We seldom see any Saints. Myself and husband are the only ones here in our community.

We long to be with the Saints, but we are not discouraged, for we have plenty to be thankful for, though we are alone. We do not feel altogether alone for our heavenly Father is ever near us.

Sorry we did not get our HERALD in time to join with the rest of the Saints in fasting and prayer for our beloved prophet. We hope and pray the Lord may see fit to spare him, but His will must be done in all things. Let us prepare for whatever might come. Life is uncertain, but death is sure.

I want to say right here, that we get lots of encouragement and spiritual strength by reading our church papers. We can not do without some of them at least. Would like to be able to take them all. We certainly enjoy the letters, Historical Series, and all the rest. It could not be beat, in our estimation.

All Saints will do well to consider the prophecy by Bro. John Smith in last HERALD (December 22). How I long to be in such a meeting as that was. Saints with such privileges do not know how to appreciate them. I hope our next move will be to Zion, if we are permitted to move any more. I ask the prayers of all the Saints for myself and family. My prayer is for you all and that Zion may soon be redeemed. A happy New Year to one and all.

Your sister in the gospel,
RENA SECREST.

COALVILLE, IOWA, January 16, 1910.

Dear Editors: I will try to inform your readers as to the work of the Lord here. I am thankful to be in this work and hope by the grace of God to continue in it, for it is the only place to find true joy and peace. When we are trying to do right we have this comfort in our homes, and when we are performing our daily labor, as well as at church, in fact, every good deed shows that we have the peace of God with us, and it is true worship to him. People can talk about having a good time in going to worldly pleasures, but it is no comparison to the pleasure and comfort in this work. The true light is not to be found in worldly amusements. I am speaking from experience.

The condition in the branch here is like that in many others. Some are advancing and preparing themselves for greater usefulness, while some are not. The Saints last year in our branch have honored the tithing law to the amount of eighty-six dollars and seventy-five cents, and we truly believe the good Lord has blessed and encouraged us in doing so. We have had some very spiritual meetings the past year, which is very encouraging to those interested in the Master's cause. I hope to see the work move on until all the honest hearted ones are gathered in to this church.

In looking at the college question all I can see against it is the argument that it is not a good thing for the church and the country, because it gives the young as well as the old a better chance to get learning. Some tell us that the best men are those who never went to college, but who remained at home and taught themselves. This I do not believe. They may be as good, that is, as smart; but would it not be better for anyone to go to college for a year or two where they could get an education with less hard work and get it sooner? I think it would be foolish to labor so hard for a thing that could be gotten with less work. Suppose I wanted to get to a certain town ten miles away, would it not be better to take the most direct route than to go so far around, making it so hard for me to get there? And by a little help on the part of all members of the church the college can be made to give an education to every boy or girl, no matter how poor he or she may be. The more I grow in the light of this glorious gospel the more beautiful the college is to me. Zion will flourish and show forth its colors in splendor, yes, beautiful to behold, through the college as in other ways. Yes, it will do its part if we will give it a chance. I look for the time when a great many things will be worked out and brought to light through the college. Breathe a prayer in its behalf; the prayer of a righteous man availeth much. The college will bring learning to thousands.

I hope that those who go to places of learning will stop and think for a moment that we can be selfish in this line as well as in other lines, for, to get an education just to command a big salary for our aggrandizement, is evil; but let us seek knowledge to bless others as well as ourselves, and this I believe is the desire of those running the college, as also the desire of the church.

Some seem to think that a man does not need learning to be a coal miner or to work in a brickyard or any other public works; but this is not so. To make life more pleasant it is better to cultivate the mind, so that we can do our work with much greater skill and much easier. Brute strength does not always accomplish the most, but a good, clear mind can do a great deal towards making our burdens lighter, and a good education is a comfort to anyone. Sensible working men are needed everywhere. What would the world do without the miner or the street cleaner? We expect to have all these in Zion, and their time and labor should be paid for as much as any man's. We want to see everyone have a good education.

In bonds,

JOHN JORDISON.

Editors Herald: In reading the HERALD I find it filled with such a lot of good reading from members situated in different parts of the world, particularly from brethren and sisters in America, and so little coming from the British Isles, that I thought I would try to fill up the breach by a letter or short article occasionally. The following which I write is the result of an expression made by a brother: "I would not have a trade union workman in the place," which place signifies the factory or workshops of which he has the management.

At one time this brother did belong to a trade union, and now as an employer he ignores such, refusing to have anything to do with either it or its members. Now my contention is this: That if my brother is right now, he must have been wrong before; or if he was right before (which I assert that he was) he certainly must be wrong now. As a fundamental principle I have cultivated (as my duty to my fellows) the desire to try to elevate those who are unduly oppressed and prevented from obtaining even the bare necessities of a miserable existence, and to assist such in a manner which will enable them to become free from those who "oppress the hireling in his wages," and that they may receive a just recompense of reward, instead of a miserable pittance. This state of things is quite bad enough even where adults alone are concerned; but when thousands of helpless children are involved, the case becomes appalling. First of all, I ask my brother these questions: Does he believe in himself? Does he believe that he is a separate entity? And as such is he composed of one or of many members? If many, we are occupying then respective positions fulfilling their various necessary functions. If such is his present condition of outward form, then I maintain, and I believe that it will generally be conceded, that he is in possession of one of the finest organizations (or collected organisms) extant, which same is governed and controlled by "the head" (mind). Such being the case he also as a Latter Day Saint is a member of the most up-to-date and complete organization to be found upon this planet. In view of this fact, will my brother still refuse to recognize organized society, union (trade), or whatever he may be pleased to call it. But perhaps he may argue that the one is carnal or worldly, while the other is spiritual or heavenly. Granting that the first is, to some extent, carnal, I venture to state that attached to a very large percentage of trade unions lies fundamentally a principle which, (I am referring now to the care and provision made for widows and orphans by trade unions,) while it seemingly does not occupy a position of paramount importance to some people, yet to attempt to live an otherwise devoted life in Christ's service and to ignore this principle, make not only life a farce, but religion a mockery, especially seeing that we have it recorded in the Scriptures that "pure religion and undefiled before God is to visit the fatherless and the widows," etc.

Again my brother may argue that trade unions are chiefly selfish. Granted, but in so doing we take into consideration not merely one union or a thousand or every union in existence, but the whole of humanity is brought under the minute gaze of a searching microscope. Then what do we find? We find that selfishness has ever been the stimulating force which has caused man in every age to seek out a maximum of reward for a minimum of labor. We can see this demonstrated every time we see those who after their day's work is finished hurry off to some night school. What for? That they may become more proficient in their respective callings, that they may eventually better their positions, that they may obtain a maximum of reward for a minimum of labor. Selfish? Aye. Why, selfishness has been the cause of the production of the latest up-to-date machinery, ever improving, thus making it easier for others to obtain a living.

Thus we find upon examination that throughout the whole of the universe there exists a voluntary, yet natural, unconscious coöperation. Now what are trade unions but organized societies of men, voluntarily and also consciously (in this case) coöperating with each other in order to obtain the best results for themselves and others by their unity, each member interesting himself in the labor problems of the day, and by so doing trying to obtain more tolerable conditions. If (and it is plainly manifest) untold blessings have been acquired through unconscious coöperation, what must be the result of conscious coöperation through the aid of organized society? I venture to say that the blessings obtained thereby must of necessity be of greater advantage.

From a Latter Day Saint's standpoint I fail to understand another's position who already acknowledges that the church to which he belongs is in advance of all other organizations, yet at the same time refuses to acknowledge members of other organizations which, while they may fall below our brother's ideal, have at least one "religious phase," if not more, which we as members can well afford to emulate. Then again our ministers everywhere declare from stand, rostrum, pulpit, and street corner, that "unity is strength," exhorting sinners to repent and unite their efforts with us as a church to bring about that altogether perfect union of unions in which every unionist will "live and reign a thousand years," who has voluntarily coöperated and obeyed the necessary principles.

Experience has taught me this fact, that there are groups of individuals who, while they have it in their power, still refuse to share with others the immense benefits they are continually reaping and heaping unto themselves. This unjust method is only relaxed, a just reward is only parted with, when the oppressed, smarting under the yoke of tyranny, unite their efforts and by organizing make bold to lay their too often just claims before their oppressors, and in many cases enlist public sympathy. Then again there are those who constantly refuse to join a union. Thus we are confronted by two separate bodies; those who are organized and those who are not. Now my contention is this, that just so long as workmen remain unorganized, just so long will tyranny and oppression hold sway. Now comes the question of equality. I believe that as a church we teach that principle. Such being the case, if as members we do not attempt to carry such principle into our daily lives, such nonpractice will totally unfit us for the carrying of it out in the millennium. Then again we see where an elder, located in a strange town, by dint of persistent effort obtains members and finally a branch is organized by reason of their unity (union), each member cooperating with each other, thus making the organization a success. Now let such elder or president refuse to recognize such organization, or try to hinder cooperation in any way. How long will he have a branch to preside over? We also find that to have a healthy body we must have healthy members, and without such maintained progress is impossible. This healthy condition is typical of what must exist in the millennium. The strength of any society depends upon the weakest unit. Strong, healthy units produce strong, healthy branches, which in turn produce strong, healthy combinations, and if such are stimulated by the pure desire of unity (union) and unselfish conscious cooperation, they will not only produce a standard of perfection, of intense love and purity, but a solid organization, forming an impenetrable barrier against outside selfish influence, which, like a cork, will float on top until impregnated by some weightier substance, then sinks.

The following is an extract taken from a daily paper called The Daily Dispatch. It expresses my idea exactly:

"APATHETIC SHOP ASSISTANTS.

"A very small attendance of shop assistants at a meeting held in Harpurhey, New Manchester, last night [September 23, 1909], in support of the shop hours act, led Counselor W. L. Jackson to say that the spareness of numbers showed the assistants' lack of power to organize. It appeared they had not the ordinary animal instinct to look after their own interests."

In conclusion let me say that to my mind the man who ignores organized society in the form of trade unions, not only puts sprags in the wheels of progression, not only retards the amelioration of thousands of little children who suffer daily ("Whose angels do always behold the face of their Father"), but stands in his own light by forgetting that the first law of nature is self-preservation.

Of course I don't expect to convert everyone to my way of thinking, still I do not see any harm in trying. There may be some who are quite able to prove that I am wrong. If such proof is forthcoming, I will bow in recognition of the superior ability, but until such is produced, I shall endeavor to retain my position with the utmost, yet respectful tenacity.

I am your prother for liberty's sake,

WALTER BYEFIELD.

2 GORSEY LANE, WARRINGTON, ENGLAND.

NORTH BEND, OREGON, January 14, 1910.

Dear Herald: We isolated Saints glean much spiritual food from your bright pages from week to week, and we would be lost without your weekly visit. You often have articles on subjects that our mind has been occupied with, things which we could not understand until you have enlightened us. There have been many things that did not instruct us, and it seems they could have been left out with advantage, to us at least. There are so many Saints situated as we are, isolated from church privileges, and we have to depend on the church papers for our spiritual food. We feel as though we should have the pages of the HERALD and Ensign filled with food from the Master's table rather than husks from some learned (?) M. D. or young student.

For instance, there was a lengthy article in the HERALD some time ago about the lost tribes—where they were supposed to be, etc. The idea was advanced that this old earth was hollow at the ends and the tribes were supposed to be there, and a whole lot of wind about the climate there, etc.—husks, every bit of it. Jesus said in Doctrine and Covenants to preach repentance to this generation, and while I do not hold that the elders should preach nothing but repentance in the strictest sense of the word, yet I do hold that they should "feed the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," and that with "the full corn in the ear," not husks.

I do not wish to pose as a crank, but my heart hungers and thirsts after the food that satisfies. I believe with Bro. J. C. Clapp, that some of the tracts are a little too strong meat for the children of this world and are dangerous doctrines to preach other than to the Saints. Doctrine and Covenants says that the mysteries of the kingdom we should keep within ourselves and not give that which is holy to dogs.

I believe Jesus spake the truth when he said that he that will not hear you and obey the gospel by being baptized in water, that he might be baptized with the Spirit, shall be damned, and where he and his Father are they can not come. Dear Saints, this comes from one whose whole heart, mind, and spirit are in this latter-day work, who loves the truth above all other things.

We live near the Myrtle Point Branch, but do not get to go very often. We plan to go in the summer to reunion if the Lord wills. My mother, brother and wife, and sister are in the fold. I would like to ask the Saints to pray for my mother (Sr. Sardinia Murray) who is afflicted with a bad stomach trouble and dizzy head, especially those Saints who know her personally. Glad to hear of the blessing that Maine is having. We hope to have Bro. A. A. Baker labor with us soon. With love to the household of faith,

Yours in bonds,

MRS. OLIVE A. M. SYKES.

STEWARTSVILLE, MISSOURI, January 13, 1910.

Editors Herald: I take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Ensign, and feel I can not do without either one. I love to read the letters and articles in the church papers; it seems to strengthen my weak faith, and it is my heart's desire to overcome self and be prepared to meet the Lord when he comes in his glory. I had a dream last night: An unseen hand had placed around my neck a string of beautiful white pearls; was put around twice. Can anyone interpret this dream?

Your sister in Christ,

MRS. MARY HAWKINS.

GIRDLETREE, MARYLAND, January 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: I came here on the 6th from Elk Mills, where I have been laboring for some time, eleven having been baptized while there, the interest being still good. We expect to return to that place and continue labors there. Bro. Ira W. Humes, one of our young missionaries, is with me. We have a small company of Saints here struggling against great odds. Opposition rages strong. Some threats have been made since we have come, but we place the matter before the Lord, and he has so ruled that we have been able to make friends where we once had enemies. One who was once opposed has opened his house to us and we have preached there several nights with good hearing and good liberty, and we were hopeful of a good work being done here. The people here are, in the main, very poor but hospitable. Bro. Walter Smith opened up the work here in March of last year, preaching a few sermons, baptizing two in George Morris' family, formerly of Michigan. He having wandered down here and marrying paved the way for the opening up of the work in this place. So we find that the Saints in their scattered condition can be of great assistance to the missionaries in getting the gospel before the people in their several communities. If all would do what they could the work would move on with greater strides than it does now. As the Lord has said the time has come when the church (the people, of course,) must rise and occupy where he would have them.

Much remains to be done. We as Saints are called to do it. Are we occupying and doing what we can? Ever praying for the welfare of Zion,

Your cōworker,
WM. ANDERSON.

WARRENSBURG, MISSOURI, January 5, 1910.

Dear Editors: I have been a constant reader of your valuable paper for over twenty-eight years. The good I am satisfied it is doing in its mission work, can not very well be estimated. Many are the times when I have been discouraged and things looked gloomy, I have taken up the HERALD and the clouds have passed away, and I have received renewed strength by reason of the encouragement from some good brother or sister or from the editors.

I moved here last June from Knobnoster. Warrensburg is a lively little town of about four thousand inhabitants, the county seat of Johnson County, Missouri. Many new buildings went up this last summer, and from what I can learn the same will take place next summer, and it seems some can not wait till spring opens, for I am now putting up a foundation for a good-sized house. The church has a branch organized here. Number of charter members thirty-two. Present number is about forty, and I would judge there are about ten or fifteen more in the town that have not as yet joined. This doesn't speak very well for the teacher, but I will not give him away. I will leave that for some one else to do. We have a good little branch, made up of very good material with the exception of the teacher. He, I am afraid sometimes, is not of much force, but I believe he is trying to do the best he can. I seem to have it in for him, but I will not say who he is. If I have to tell I will not be afraid to do it. What he lacks the president, priest, and deacon makes up, so I feel safe in regard to the welfare of the branch.

Since the branch has started we have had some good spiritual meetings. The Lord has given us to understand by his Spirit that he will be with us in building up his work here, if we are faithful, and we feel quite confident along that line, as we have a good presiding officer, Bro. John Bailey, who is alive to the work, and has the push in him to keep us awake, stirring us up to our duty. Thanks to the Lord for so much. Do not think I think he has no faults, but the beauty of it is he tries to keep in a penitent condition, and I feel confident the Lord is blessing him; so let us members of the branch uphold him by our faith and prayers.

Yours for the truth,
J. W. WILSON.

MARSHALL, OHIO.

Dear Herald: A few days ago the writer closed a three-week series of meetings held in a vacant Methodist church, situated in the northwestern part of Vinton County, where Bro. James Lacy and family settled last spring. Having held the banner of Prince Emanuel aloft in a conversational way with the neighbors, supplemented by an example of good works during the summer, Elder A. B. Kirkendall, probate judge of Vinton County, was called to strengthen the work by holding a few meetings in said church, creating such an interest as prepared well the way for a series of gospel sermons, for which we were called by Bro. G. T. Griffiths and the request of Brother Kirkendall.

The meetings were well attended and the interest was indeed all that could be desired. More profound attention was never given, and such cordiality is not often met in a new place. By invitation we visited twelve homes, not including Brother Lacy's. At each place the day was spent in earnest Bible talks. For the greater part we went with those inviting us from the meeting each night. Right here we pause to say that we have never been able to strictly observe the command of the Savior given the Seventy as recorded in Luke 10:7, last clause: "Go not from house to house." If we shall be called to account in the judgment day for disobedience in this respect, we must take the consequences. I can not turn down that cordial invitation, "Come, go home with us to-night." Returning to the account we add, that a few of the younger people were ready for baptism, but waited for older ones to "take the lead." The older ones, who were very near the door, are halting till the house can be purchased by the interested people to be placed in the hands of Latter Day Saints with this condition, that it shall be open for funeral occasions of all denominations. Earnest solicitation by the friends secured from the writer a promise to ask for southern Ohio for next year. The kindness of these good people did not stop with making us welcome while with them, but was extended to providing for our further necessities. I must not forget like hospitality by the Saints in West Virginia where our summer's work was done, neither of Creola Saints, where a few days, including Sunday, were passed very pleasantly.

Here we are comfortably domiciled (this wintry weather) among the Saints of the Highland Branch, near Sinking Springs, holding meetings in their commodious, rural church, with fairly good and very attentive audiences. Three evenings, however, the weather has been against us, but we are hoping for the best. Neither is cordiality wanting here.

More anon,
O. B. THOMAS.

WINTERSSET, IOWA, January 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: As I sat thinking of the HERALD, what a good paper it is, I thought that the readers of the HERALD would like to see a letter from this part of the vineyard to let you know that we enjoy reading the papers. We enjoy reading the sermons and letters, as the Ensign is our silent preacher. We have Sunday school ourselves here at home. I can say that I know this church is right. I was baptized when I was thirteen, and have always tried to live right. I think we all ought to live right. We are some of the isolated Saints, and so far away from the Saints we can not meet with them. I would like to correspond with some young industrious Latter Day Saint. I am twenty-four years old. The Doctrine and Covenants says if we marry out of the church we are weak in the faith. There are no young Latter Day Saints around here, and it is so hard for me to mingle with the world.

Editors Herald: After writing last time Brother Farr returned home a real sick man. Hope he will be returned to us in the spring. Later Elder H. L. Holt came and preached good sermons for us. It was a real good time I had talking over the experiences we have had in the gospel since we were boys together, and of the hope we have of a part in bright glory when the Master comes.

A man came to where I was working sometime ago and asked me for the two strongest proofs that I had that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God. He insisted that I give it at the earliest possible moment. He said he wanted to investigate the proofs. I had no books or tracts with me. I said, "Well, there are so many strong proofs, that I hardly know which is the strongest." Then, quick as a flash there came to my mind the words of James, and I said, "The first one I will give you is found in James. 'If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him.'—James 1: 5." He had just told me he "belonged to the Church of Christ," (a branch of the Campbellites). I said, "You believe what James, the Lord's brother according to the flesh, said? Now if you want to know whether Joseph Smith was a true prophet, you ask the Lord for that wisdom, and don't stop asking. He will answer you just according to your faith; for James tells us so in the next verse. And the second proof I refer you to is the prophecy on the Rebellion, where it should start, the cause, and magnitude, and the particulars in detail, and was given years before the war took place, as you can see in the histories published by our enemies."

It is good to be engaged in so glorious a work. I used to say I would like to send word to all who did not know that I was a Latter Day Saint. Says one, "Then everybody would be watching you." Yes, and that is just what I would like to have everyone do who sees me. What a proof that would be that the gospel does make one better! Not that I think I am perfect, by any means, but I hope to be perfect sometime, and if everybody was watching me, I think that would help me to be more careful to do just as I think the Lord Jesus would do were he in my place.

Last Sunday we had our district president, Elder J. M. Terry, with us. He preached two very good sermons for us. On the evening of the 23d we had our Christmas tree and entertainment which was quite a success, I thought.

Ever praying for God's people that we all may come up on a higher plane of spirituality the coming year, I am,

Editors Herald: I will add a testimony concerning Cook and Peary of the North Pole explorers. I have said in my heart that neither parties have found it as yet. They can not reach it as long as the hand of the Lord is not in it.

I will relate a dream that I had: It seems that I was carried in the clouds of heaven very far north (my spiritual body). I was let down in the midst of a people very comely, clad very common, and sociable. It seemed that I had two books with me. I was there a very short time with them. I can not say anything of the country or climate of that land, but it was very far north. I knew then it was the lost tribes, for I am pretty sure that the two books were the Book of Mormon and the Inspired Translation. I have often wondered why the Lord does not open the way, that we can assuredly know of a truth of the matter. As in a dream I saw the mansions, as the Lord has spoken of in the Scriptures, in the beyond as was open to my view. I wanted to be there rather than here. I saw the people and the Holy City, also that this world that we are living in was shown to me. It was a black or dark picture, I assure you. I hope and trust in my day I will have a knowledge of that people literally as openly.

In the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,

Editors Herald: I love to read the encouraging letters in the HERALD. They are indeed a great blessing in giving spiritual strength and encouragement. But if we all read and none wrote, the letter department would be void of good things. I am willing to do my part.

I rejoice greatly and praise my heavenly Father that I have been worthy to hear and heed the latter-day angel message. For eleven years I was a member of the anti-society, anti-organization of the Campbellite Church. I preached that doctrine, believing I belonged to the church. But I could see that the saints of old had something that we did not have. For years I tried to understand the teaching of the Scriptures concerning the Holy Spirit. I could not; I did not have the ability, the brain capacity to reconcile the doctrine of that so-called "loyal church of Christ" with the Scriptures on that subject. "Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law," had been my constant prayer for months when I heard the first angel message sermon. "That is false," was my verdict at first. "Those people have the truth or 'tis a gigantic fraud," was my sober conclusion, so I went to investigating with the determination to fight it hard if I found it to be false and accept it if I found it to be true. Within sixty days, after asking questions, reading debates, and studying the Scriptures almost day and night, I accepted the latter-day message from heaven.

"He is losing his mind," "He is crazy," "He has been deceived," "He has joined the Mormons; he will have five wives," such were the comments of former friends. The Devil said, "I'll drive him to infidelity." The sorrow, distress, doubt, and gloom that came at times because of these things can not be told. But praise the Lord, for the blessed light of the Spirit that has kept us from falling! My companion has shared these trials and blessings with me.

I have been greatly blessed of late in preaching, and angels of God have assisted in confirming the gospel to the hearers. Many are rejoicing because the gospel has reached them, and we look forward with pleasure to the visits of the missionaries; for they bring the Spirit of God with them to bless their labors. How great is the light now in contrast with the darkness we were formerly in! We ask an interest in the prayers of the faithful.

SPRINGFIELD, NEBRASKA, January 18, 1910.

Editors Herald: Some one has made a mistake. A letter appeared in HERALD of January 12, page 38, dated Mitchell, South Dakota, with the names of several brethren who are in Canada. There is no branch in Mitchell, South Dakota, and there is no "preaching every Sunday at three o'clock," and while I am making corrections I will note that one of our "bonnie" Scotchmen, William Keill, on page 39, the brother whom I corrected, quoted Paul as saying: "Money is the root of all evil." My correction consisted in adding "the love of," and if I was mistaken in reading my brother's letter and learn of that fact, I will make due apology, both public and private.

From a half "bonnie" Scotchman,

DES MOINES, IOWA, January 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: The Register and Leader, of this city, in its issue of Sunday, January 16, gives nearly a full page to Graceland College, of Lamoni. The article is illustrated with the following pictures: one of Graceland, one of the college farm house, the Marietta and the Patroness Hall dormitories, the Brick Church, the Home for the aged, the faculty and students of Graceland, and fine portraits of Mrs. M. Walker, President Gunsolley, and his honor, Mayor Elvin.

The article says: "Among the institutions of learning of which southern Iowa is justly proud, is Graceland College at Lamoni, Iowa, founded and supported by the Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints, a religious organization as little understood, and as often unjustly criticised and misrepresented, as any in the entire country."

"The college was organized in order to provide an institution of higher learning for the members of the church. But the church has charitably thrown open the doors of its college to all denominations and does not teach sectarianism."

"The church of the Latter Day Saints now has organizations in thirty-four counties in Iowa. In southern and western Iowa church organizations have been maintained for over half a century.

"Frequently this church has been unjustly confounded with the Mormon church in Utah, but polygamy is denounced by it as a sin, and the church has actually sent at its own cost, missionaries to Utah to fight polygamy in the courts of justice. . . .

"Although the Latter Day Saints have lived exemplary lives in Iowa; although their elders have been preaching the gospel for half a century, denouncing polygamy in open violation of the Bible, as against the belief and authority of the founder of the church in 1830, and the Reorganized Church of 1853; although they have been fighting against polygamy in the courts of justice for years, yet occasionally, ignorant scoffers unjustly accuse the members of the Reorganized Church of advocating the sin of polygamy, a sin of which they are no more guilty than any other church organization in Iowa. No people contend more earnestly for the purity of the home. The revelations which they claim to have received as a church, teach them to obey and respect the laws of the state, to live soberly, labor industriously, to walk uprightly, and to be honest in their business transactions with all men."

The article gives the facts in regard to the founding and the building up of Graceland, and the names of those who have occupied as presidents of the college from the first.

The article will do much to bring to the people of the State the facts concerning Graceland and the work which the church is doing, mentioning as it does Liberty Home, and the Saints' Home, at Lamoni, the Home at Kirtland, Ohio, and the Sanitarium at Independence. The Register and Leader under sworn statement, claims an average daily circulation for the month of December of thirty-six thousand sixty-nine copies, and to see this fine, well-written, and illustrated article concerning Graceland and the church go to that many people is something which will have its influence for good.

The press is a mighty power for good, and slowly and surely is the press of to-day presenting the facts concerning the latter-day work

Kindly,

A. A. REAMS.

Editors Herald: My heart has been made to rejoice in reading the many good things in the HERALD, to see how God is working with his people; and my eyes melt to tears thinking of his care and love for his children. He has comforted me so many times and I do so much want to please him. I am impressed, and I believe by the Spirit, to write these words of encouragement to Bro. Elmer Moler, a dream I wish to relate.

I saw his book, it seemed to be a large, very large tablet; the pages were very white and clean. At the top was writing; just a few lines neatly written. I was not permitted to read, but to see, and as I turned over in the book the pages were full of writing and the most beautiful drawings of flowers. Oh, that I knew my life was so beautiful.

If this will encourage Brother Moler this letter will not have been in vain.

A SISTER.

OHIO.

Editors Herald: In reading over the many and beautiful letters and articles I was impressed to write a few lines. How greatly I appreciate the HERALD. I look for its coming as a welcome visitor. Please try and write through the HERALD that should there be any elders near Buckley, Washington, if they will call on Mrs. Ella Masters they will find a warm welcome. She is an isolated Saint, having had church privileges only a few short months. Her heart is honest and true and would gladly give a welcome to an elder and help make an opening. I think they live a short way in the country.

It makes our heart rejoice to read of the many coming into the church. God grant the time will soon come when we can dispose of our property here and move to Zion. We have a hotel of twenty-one rooms which we would like to trade for land around Lamoni or Independence. It is the only hotel in town and has on an average of twenty steady boarders at four and a half and five dollars a week.

The Methodists have steadily lost ground here. I would so like to see an article on Methodism in the HERALD. I want to understand it more thoroughly. Will not some of our brethren please write it up?

Ever hoping and praying for the welfare of Zion, and hoping to be able to stand at the great coming of our King, I am,

Your sister,

NETTIE HEISZLER.

(The address of this sister is not shown on the letter, and the envelope being lost, we must ask her to write us, and we will use this letter again with address.)

LEEDS, ENGLAND, January 11, 1910.

Dear Editors: I will pen a few lines to let our friends over on your shores know how their Leeds brethren are progressing. We have a small branch in Leeds, kept up by a few consistent Saints? There are a number who have left and wandered into devious paths, but we are ever praying for their return. The world is full of snares and pitfalls for the unwary and many are the Saints who go and find their pleasure there and forget about the duty towards God and the church. But we are hoping for the redemption of Zion and looking forward to a glorious reunion in Christ when the day comes.

If this should meet the eye of Bro. F. J. Pierce, Brother and Sister Howden, Sister Barrett, and Brother and Sister Booker, they will perhaps think about their old friends in England. We have here at present Bro. John W. Rushton, who sometimes comes up and delights us with his beautiful sermons. We have also had Bro. W. H. Greenwood, of Manchester, a brother of whom we are proud. We have also a young president of the branch, H. Lykes by name, who shows great promise of being a pillar to the church.

Life is full of trials and tribulations, but we must look above the mean things of earth and look up to Christ who is our example.

"From strength to strength go on,

Wrestle and fight and pray;

Tread all the powers of darkness down

Till yours a perfect sway."

CALABASAS, CALIFORNIA, January 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been reading the HERALD and seeing so many good letters from the brothers and sisters, but not many from anyone I know. I should like to see some from Bro. Thomas McKee's folks. I don't know where they live; also Sister Goff, of Kansas, who is an aunt of my husband; and many other Saints that I would be glad to know that they are alive in the work. If I am not, I am glad to see others that are. I want to be, but it is so hard to be isolated from any church and live as one should, but I long to be among the Saints where we could go to meeting. We do not know what we are missing.

We have a good home and everything we need and plenty of work to keep us busy, but that does not satisfy our longing to be with the Saints. Pray for us that we may be more faithful and strive harder to live our religion. A letter from Brother Starkey, Chico, California, would be read with interest by us.

News From Branches

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

As we start forth in the work of the new year we trust it is with an earnest and sincere desire to improve upon the work of the past and that its close will find us far ahead and more worthy of God's blessings than in the past.

On the first Sunday of the year our sacrament service was held. It was our rally day and a goodly number were present, many of whom gave thanks to God in prayer and testimony for many blessings received, and expressions of desires for renewals of effort were uttered.

God's arm has not been shortened, for he has ever been ready to reach out after his children in their every need.

The past month much good instruction has been given through God's servants which, if we will but heed, will indeed be of great benefit to us, as well as to those with whom we associate.

Brother Dowker, of Independence, en route to his field in the South, stopped off in Saint Louis and gave us two good sermons.

The Sunday school and Religio are doing nicely. They have recently had their election of officers and the result is agreed to be for the best good of all.

Two of our promising young men received diplomas this week, graduating from the grammar school. They are Brn. David Archibald and Leroy Remington. They are young in years and we trust they will be blessed in all their efforts in attaining that knowledge that will fit them to occupy wherever necessity demands. They have our hearty congratulations.

Yours for Christ,

E. M. PATTERSON.

PLANO, ILLINOIS.

Having recently been appointed as branch correspondent at Plano, Illinois, and as this was once the largest branch of the Reorganized Church and the seat of the First Presidency and the publishing house of said church, we believe that a brief statement of the spiritual and temporal status of the present condition of the Plano Branch would be of much interest to your many readers.

Our people are migratory. So many have moved to other places, besides the grim reaper—death—has not passed us by, but has taken his share to the silent tomb, so that only the skeleton of the branch is left. The city resident Saints are represented in twenty-three families and eight families outside of town, consisting of fifty-five members. Most of the members are middle-aged or quite old people. Not very many young people. Consequently it is hard to organize and maintain a Religio class. Quite a few of the members are careless and indifferent to the true duties and privileges of Saints and the consequence is that the average attendance at our church services is not as large as it ought to be. But I am pleased to state that a majority of the Saints of this branch are an honest, earnest, gospel-fearing people; so much so that they are considered by the business people of the town as composing a part of the best citizens of Plano. There is scarcely any prejudice existing towards us on account of our religious belief. The name of our beloved President Joseph Smith is held in reverence by those who knew him when he lived here. The priesthood is yet pretty well represented here, as it is the home of F. M. Cooper, C. H. Burr, Henry Southwick, H. W. Pomeroy, L. O. Wildermuth, and Eli M. Wildermuth, besides some of the lesser priesthood.

At the annual business meeting of the branch which was held last night the following named persons were chosen to constitute the retinue of officers for the ensuing year: L.

O. Wildermuth president; Silas Cook presiding priest; Eli M. Wildermuth associate priest, branch correspondent, and book agent for church publications; Joseph Blakely deacon; George Blakely chorister; Charles Blakely organist; Nellie Blakely assistant; C. A. Blakely clerk.

The Plano Branch furnishes preachers for Aurora and Sandwich part of the time. Besides our Sunday school we have a large class that has taken up the home study department. Elder Southwick has been confined to his house for six weeks or more with heart trouble and other complications.

Ever contending for the triumph of the precious gospel faith,

In gospel bonds,

ELI M. WILDERMUTH.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

As a diversion, we recently attended a two-week series of meetings at the Boyle Height's Christian Church in this city. Rev. Harvey Hazel, a one time associate of Bro. Rudolph Etzenhouser, pastor.

Mr. Hazel spent the first six evenings in giving an historical resume of the Latter Day Saints and their work. He vilified the memory of the dead and impugned the motive of the living. The last four nights were devoted to a defense of "the church of which I, Harvey Hazel, am a member." Bro. Arthur W. Ballard and the writer were given seats on the platform. A large crowd of our local church membership attended each evening, a happy, joyous band of people. We have reason to appreciate their loyalty. They gave Mr. Hazel respectful attention and thereby won friends for the cause.

Our two-day meetings in the district are a success, the one at Los Angeles particularly profitable. Harmony and union were the keynote to service. Good will and fellowship in evidence all around.

Our late district Sunday school institute held during the holidays is bearing fruit. The Los Angeles Sunday school is thoroughly organized and fully graded from beginners to adults. Eleven classes; attendance nearly a hundred. We are working the "double up" stimulus; attendance climbing each Sunday. The pastor is superintendent; Charles Warren assistant; Edna Budworth secretary.

The Los Angeles Religio is taking on new life, with bright prospects for 1910. Frank Gregg is president. May Belle Jackson vice-president.

Branch election was held January 5. Pastor reelected; S. H. Garner priest; B. F. Ordway teacher; Niels Paulson deacon; Charles Warren clerk; R. T. Cooper chorister.

Conditions have been shaping favorably to our work at San Diego for the past year. Sister Pickles has been the "lone star" in the spiritual firmament for many years. The last year has witnessed several accessions. First Brother Ward and family; then Brother Rulin and family; then came Evan Davis, the photographer who made Independence, Missouri, famous. Shortly afterwards one of the fair daughters of Zion was irresistibly drawn to the coast and, in the presence of the Los Angeles pastor, she and Brother Evan mutually agreed to be each other's companions "till death doth us part," and erected their altar in the "city by the sea."

Bro. F. G. Pitt has been in San Diego for several weeks assisting and directing the work. They have rented a hall, organized a Sunday school, and Bro. F. A. Smith goes there on Monday to effect the organization of a branch.

Bro. F. A. Smith reached Los Angeles Monday, January 25, and will remain in Southern California until February 20. He will be in San Bernardino next Saturday and Sunday, thence to San Diego, Garden Grove, Cucamonga, Los Angeles, and Santa Ana.

Bro. C. E. Crumley is doing good work in San Bernardino. Sister Crumley is proving an efficient aid in Sunday school, Religio, and choir work.

Bro. George Wixom, our genial California "Job," has been confined to his bed with another accident; this time a bicycle. He is convalescent.

Our aged Bro. William Gibson has been very sick—an operation—improving slowly. His long consistent stand for the truth is surely an inspiration.

Bro. F. G. Pitt has been elected president of the Santa Ana Branch. Bro. Levi Hemmingway and the brethren have done efficient work in the past. The sisters have been behind in no good work.

The Newport Branch, under the presidency of Nathaniel Carmichael, and Cucumonga, under the presidency of F. B. Vanfleet, report growth and increased interest.

We have a foothold at Hemet. Bro. Thomas Brown, Frank Burton and families reside there. They have a small meeting house and are holding the fort. We hope to see a branch organized before long.

"Comet 1910 A" has been very brilliant in the heavens for over a week now. No sign of Halley's as yet.

SCRIBBLER.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

At the election of Sunday school officers Sr. Hattie Clark was elected superintendent, and Bro. Clarence Skinner assistant superintendent.

The Religio elected Joseph G. Carpenter president.

The branch held a business meeting January 10, selecting of branch officers as follows: Emsley Curtis president; J. R. Epperson priest; George E. Davis teacher; and Fred Chandler deacon. The attendance has been good at all the services of late, considering the slippery walks.

Mr. James H. Mather and son Russell, of Chicago, were at the morning services January 23. His presence at our services sends a ray of cheer to the hearts of all those who know him best.

The conditions of the health of Sister Christy and of the city missionary's companion are but little changed, the latter being quite poorly during the last week, but now improving again.

Bro. James McKiernan, assistant minister in charge, was here, and is now holding interesting meetings in association with Bro. W. Christy near Garwin.

Mr. and Sister Dawes and daughter, of Shenandoah, Iowa, worshiped at the Saints' chapel last Sunday.

We learn that Bro. E. O. Clark does not anticipate returning home till the spring. His wife is with him on a visit among his relatives in western Illinois.

Late reports are that the Ladies' Aid Society is more active, several new members being added.

Several contemplate attending the coming conventions and conference at Runnells, Iowa, February 4 to 6.

Cottage meetings are being held by the city missionary, assisted by others. A few are being reached in that way more effectively than could be otherwise. Indifference and other hindrances prevent the many from attending. There is more room in the "broad way" for these "many."

Some remarkable cases of God's power in relieving and healing the sick have been experienced of late, for which our gratitude to God for his wonderful kindness has been increased.

Elder O. Salisbury has visited Fraser and Boone in the capacity of district president, to give encouragement and help to the churches in these places.

A convention of "divine healers" has been called for the near future to be held in Des Moines, and at a meeting held last Tuesday the committee of arrangements was enlarged, and the time agreed upon, to continue for three days, with speakers from many parts of the world to express their ideas and give testimony of God's healing power in answer to prayer. More definite information of this convention will be given later.

The secretary of the First Seventy is being reminded by letters of another General Conference nearing, and deep interest is being expressed in renewed devotion for God's gracious work, and some of the matters of business that may be considered.

The marriage of Sr. Minnie Harvey and Bro. Frank Brundage has made grandfather's home lonely. The young couple are enjoying home life in Mason City, where Brother Brundage is employed.

The anti-meat disease is quite contagious, and it is making several of the retail butchers sick. If the Saints have been practicing the instruction of the Word of Wisdom it will not be hard for them to endure the conditions of this disease. The price of foodstuffs of all kinds has been almost prohibitive, and the missionaries' families have been especially made to feel the pinching effects as a result of trying to keep within sight of pay day. However, those who have lived strictly in harmony with God's wise instruction will find they have more with which to meet the necessary requirements than those who have treated lightly the wisdom of God.

J. F. MINTUN.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

That the city of Toronto is rapidly rising in importance and population is not only evidenced by the most recent census of population and the custom-house returns, but from the strenuous efforts of railways and large business enterprises to gain admission into the city, with the statutory powers to run their lines into the heart of the city, or to erect large building plants as the case may be.

The Lord's work in Toronto is also attracting more and more attention from the thinking people, despite the most strenuous and persistent efforts of the "enemy of all righteousness"; and I feel sure that a brief resume of the changes and developments of recent months will prove interesting material for your columns, and will give pleasure to many among your widely extended circle of readers.

To begin with and as a most conclusive proof of the virility and the vitality of Bishop R. C. Evans' popular lectures during the five past years at the Majestic Opera House, and of their intense hold upon the population of this city, a movement having for its object the frustration of our respected brother's labors in that building has so far culminated and gained in strength, that the manager has now (after making various promises to Brother Evans) been compelled to close the doors of that theater against the lectures on Sunday evenings, on pain of the ban of his church being placed upon him. This applies also to a neighboring theater, the Grand, which is under the same management. At this critical juncture, a gentleman, Mr. Smith, owner of the largest, most commodious, and best appointed skating rink in the city, most kindly came forward and offered Bishop Evans the use of this large auditorium, with incandescent lights, and heated throughout; also containing a twenty-five thousand dollar organ, absolutely free of charge.

Immense audiences gathered here to the lectures until the frost drove them away; for it was found that owing to the height and lateral expanse of the building, it was next to a physical impossibility to heat so large a structure in time for the opening hour of the meetings, three p. m. The Saints of Toronto will not, however, forget Mr. Smith's kindness in thus coming forward with an offer so creditable to himself and so acceptable to the Saints and numerous friends in Toronto.

It is likewise no small compliment to Bishop R. C. Evans that no less than one thousand people would thus risk taking cold rather than miss the chance of hearing our brother. An agreement has now, we understand, been made, whereby another theater, the Princess, a very handsome structure, though not of so great a seating capacity as the Majestic, has been obtained and for the first time was opened to Brother Evans on last Sunday evening, to listen to his very able lecture on the nature and destiny of man, the exact subject being, "Man; his past, present, and future." The large audiences, many hundreds having been refused admittance at the doors, showed most palpably and plainly their appreciation of the lecture and their respect for the lecturer, and sympathy in his treatment by the Majestic folk, after giving Brother Evans every reason to believe, down to the almost final moment, that he could have their opera house as in former years. The audiences, too, seem to comprise many of the best and most cultured people of Toronto, among them being Mr. Coatsworth, ex-mayor of the city, Mr. J. T. Davies, an ex-alderman, besides a number of prominent lawyers and king's counselmen. It is no exaggeration, in fact, to state that our bishop's hearers comprise an audience the intellectual equal of which could probably not be found in any other church in Toronto.

While from motives of delicacy, which all thinking readers will appreciate and understand, Elder Evans' pen has been silent in the HERALD columns regarding his work here, the fact is simply irrefragable that a work is going forward, the extent and value of which eternity alone will reveal. The lecture of last Sunday night was practically in refutation of the argument of one of the most eloquent and expert advocates of the soul-sleeping theory that ever labored or lectured in this city or in any other city of the civilized world. I allude to the world renowned Pastor Russell, of Millennial Dawn fame, who had been giving one of his able and truly characteristic presentations in Massey Hall during the afternoon of Sunday last. The result was that many of that vast audience came primed and prepared to give added attention to Elder Evans' reply, and the intense, even breathless, interest with which every point made was instantly recognized and approved by the audience, was a scene eminently worth witnessing.

When question time came at the lecture's close, the excitement visibly deepened and culminated, many of the listeners having come primed with interrogations, and it seemed as though the writers thought Bishop Evans to be a sort of a walking compendium or encyclopedia of all the physical sciences, and of all the "ologies" that ever were, or are or ever will be, worlds without end! That the people were evidently quite satisfied with the medicine contained in our brother's replies, was abundantly evident to everybody, for again and again the speaker was accorded a truly hearty ovation. The branch president, High Priest A. F. McLean, also his partner, and Sister Evans, and the other ladies of the church, who have so well and faithfully assisted by their talents and their means, to aid the well-begun work, deserve high and honorable mention.

We humbly trust and pray that the Lord of the harvest will continue to set his seal upon the work that is being done for his name's honor and glory here in Toronto.

F. R. TUBB.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The snow lies in little patches here and there, the sun and balmy air woo our spirits into thoughts of springtime, and all save a few things conspire to bring to us cheer and comfort. There seem always to be a few sick and afflicted ones among us, just now Brother Spurlock and Sisters Kaler and Davis and others who are at the Sanitarium, beside several of those who have long been afflicted at their homes. We regret to note Brother Hilliard's sudden attack of illness, but we hear he is a "little better" to-day.

Our beloved Brother Joseph, with his snowy locks and careful footsteps, yesterday was seen wending his way toward home from "town," making us all feel grateful that he has so far recovered toward his wonted health.

Our meetings are all as well attended as usual, and our numbers are still increasing. Good sermons and good interest are also encouraging.

Quorum of Twelve.

NOTICE OF MEETING.

This notice is to remind the members of the Quorum of Twelve that they elected at their last session to meet again on March 16, 1910, at Independence, Missouri. The Stone Church will be the place, at 10 o'clock a. m.

We know of no special urgency requiring, at much sacrifice of time and means, a full attendance of the quorum at this session, desirable as it is to have all present. So each member is left to decide for himself as to the wisdom of his attending, considering his circumstances, inclination, and present distance from the place of meeting. All should have in mind, however, the character and importance of the work engaging our attention and remember those who do meet, and the conference, in petition before the Lord, that divine wisdom and guidance may be given in our councils. Human wisdom alone, as all are aware, is not adequate, to guide to success in so great a cause, hence the need of seeking God for light and wisdom and guidance.

We should strive to be in accord with one another in order that there may be no hindrance to the free direction of the Holy Spirit.

A Distinguished American Essayist.

Louise Collier Willcox, author of The Human Way, the recent volume of essays which London, always so critical of the essay, has praised without dissent since its recent publication, is another writer who comes from the Middle West. Mrs. Willcox was educated, however, elsewhere; in Paris, in New York, in the Black Forest, in the English Midland Counties, in Virginia. "Neither a German boarding-school, nor the seat of a university, nor her father's charge of a Unitarian Church in the great provincial town of Birmingham," said Royall Convers, writing a personal sketch for Harper's Weekly of this author who has contributed so valuably to its editorial page, nor her own going to balls and dinners in American society for a little while under the charge of a relative who was also a woman of fashion, could quench in her the passion for books, for study and thought. Therefore, when she married and accepted as home a small seaport town with few people who cared for books, and no books for those people, she only studied and thought the more. She lined her sunny working room with bookcases that grew up to the ceiling and ran out along the halls and passageways, and even crept down the stairs and up into the attic. And all the time, too, she was writing." Mrs. Willcox is said to have a happy faculty of being interested in the ideas of many sorts of people. It is easy to see how such a book as The Human Way should grow out of this broad fellowship.

The Importance of Hebrew Architecture.

We do not ordinarily think of the Hebrew as important in the art history of the world. For the reason that they were many times subject to other peoples, much of their art was imitative. Yet they did have a decided influence upon architecture and the study of the most beautiful of Greek temples takes us back for their origin to the Mosaic tabernacle.

Mr. Lewis F. Pilcher, writing in The Chautauquan for Feb-

A Successful Woman Architect.

Among the many features of special interest to women readers in the February Human Life is Ada Patterson's story of Fay Kellogg, one of the best known women architects in America.

While not the first woman to enter this profession, Miss Kellogg has been one of the most successful, and her pluck, her determination and cleverness have brought their reward, as they do to every good climber on life's long ladder.

To every woman who has her own way to make in the world, and no less to those who look on at the arena of business life from the sheltering bars of the home, the story of this plucky girl's fight to gain recognition in her beloved calling is one of absorbing interest.

And these are some of her achievements: The splendid Hall of Records in New York City bears the stamp of her genius, skill and infinite patience. The grand staircase, one of the largest and handsomest in the world, is exclusively her design. A sixteen-story building in San Francisco, a great office hive in New York City, a railroad station and innumerable lesser works stand to her credit.

Every step in her upward climb is full of encouragement to other ambitious women, from the start grudgingly given her in an architect's office at $5 per, to an office of her own, where she makes her own contracts and is her own master.

Her views on the eternal question—marriage or a career for a woman, are decidedly interesting, if somewhat unique and oddly phrased.

"To be always intending to live a new life, but never find time to set about it," says Tillotson, "is as if a man should put off eating and drinking until he is starved to death."

ruary, points out that the Parthenon and the other beautiful Greek temples owe their general shape to the tent-like structure used by the Jews to protect the Ark of the Covenant. The Jews in their forty years' wandering were obliged to carry with them their religious outfit and this fact necessitated a very light temple structure. The Mosaic tabernacle was therefore little more than a richly embroidered tent with a ridge-pole and pitched cover. In this the tabernacle differed greatly from the temples of surrounding civilizations. These were almost invariably flat roofed.

The Greeks derived from the Jews this idea of pitched roof and incorporated it in stone in their most beautiful temples such as the Parthenon. Also they raised their temples upon a slight foundation, an idea which was derived from the Hebrews who placed their tabernacle upon a slight elevation so that the surface water might not flow in.

Many preachers seem to think that folks are only scum to be washed up to the heavenly shore on tides of emotion.

CONCERNING THE JEWS.

Herewith we reproduce two short articles on the Jewish question. The first, taken from the Literary Digest, January 22, deals with the Jewish attitude toward Christianity. It seems by this article that Jews are becoming a little more tolerant. Some of them even go so far as to accept Jesus as a prophet. It is not likely that these advanced thinkers represent any large portion of the race; but they show the present tendency of Jewish thought. If presently he becomes generally accepted as a prophet among them a little later it will dawn upon them that he must be accepted at the full value of his claims or not at all. He confessed to Peter that he was the Son of God. He told the truth or else he was a deceiver. There can be no permanent stand on half-way ground:

The Jews within recent years have changed their attitude toward Jesus. While not acknowledging him as Christ (the Messiah) they recognize him as a prophet, and a successor to the prophets of the old dispensation. Many of them would tear out the blank leaf that separates the Old from the New Testament. Such is the opinion of an eminent Jewish scholar, Dr. Isador Singer, who writes as follows in The North American Review (New York):

"In view of the well-known fact that the overwhelming majority of so-called Jewish converts in Austria and Germany—there are very few of these pseudo neo-Christians in Russia, and almost none in other parts of Europe or on this continent—enter the church for merely selfish reasons, a Jewish wit offered the following definition of them: 'A Jewish convert is one who pretends to believe in dogmas and to follow traditions which the educated Christian himself is gradually abandoning.' I know this statement will be a hard blow to those pious Christian souls who contribute to the Jewish missions; but there is consolation for the millions of genuine followers of Christ in the other fact that thousands, yea, tens of thousands, of educated and noble-minded Jews in our day, while firmly standing upon the monotheistic platform of the synagogue, are gradually giving up the attitude of their forefathers toward the central figure of Christianity—which was a pathetic mingling of ignorance, antipathy, and fear.

"I can bear witness to this momentous change from my own personal experience. When I was a boy—that is, between thirty-five and forty years ago—in my little native town in Moravia, had my father or any other member of the congregation heard the name of Jesus uttered from the pulpit of our synagogue, he would have immediately left the building in indignation, and the rabbi would have been summarily dismissed. To-day, however, it is not strange in many synagogues, especially in this country, to hear sermons preached eulogizing this same Jesus."

This change in Jewish opinion with regard to the Founder of Christianity has been confirmed in a very striking manner as related by Doctor Singer in the following words:

"In 1899, at the suggestion of Dr. I. K. Funk, a number of the most eminent Jewish theologians, historians, and philosophers in Europe and the United States were circularized with a view to ascertaining what some of the representative contemporary Jews have to say about Jesus and his teachings. Twenty-six gentlemen participated in the symposium: twelve theologians (six American, six European); seven students of religion, historians, philosophers (one American, six European); and seven prominent laymen (four American, three European). The chairman of this little Sanhedrin was Dr. K. Kohler, the leading Jewish theologian of the American continent and president of the Hebrew Union College at Cincinnati, Ohio."

Doctor Kohler himself, in answer to the question, replied that "Jesus, the living man, a paragon of piety, humility, and self-surrender," presents to "the Jew of to-day" "an inspiring ideal of matchless beauty." "The long-hoped-for reconciliation between Judaism and Christianity," says Professor Jastrow, of Pennsylvania University, will come when once the teachings of Jesus shall have become the axioms of human conduct." "Jesus is soul of our soul and flesh of our flesh," declares Max Nordau, the famous author of the pessimistic "Degeneration." "Putting aside the Messianic mission, this man is ours." "He was the heir and continuator of the old prophets of Israel," says Dr. Theodore Reinach, formerly president of the Societe des Etudes Juives. Jacob H. Schiff observes: "We Jews honor and revere Jesus of Nazareth as we do our own prophets that preceded him."

Commenting on these statements Doctor Singer speaks as follows:

"A new theology is knocking at the pulpits of priest, pastor, and rabbi. Everyone of them feels the old theological platform giving away under his feet. The hour seems to be at hand when Roman Catholic, Protestant, and Jew, and whoever believes in one personal God and the moral order of the universe, shall be able and willing to gather about the same monotheistic banner. Are we Jews ready to claim the New Testament, which was written in an Aramaic idiom, written almost entirely upon the soil of Palestine by Hebrew writers, for a mainly Hebrew audience—are we ready to claim this work as a continuance of the Old Testament, tearing out the white leaf which separates Malachi from Saint Matthew?"

This work of union can best be begun here, for several reasons thus stated:

"No other Jewish community on earth is so well qualified to start on this work of salvation for the house of Israel and for humanity at large, as that of the United States, which is a kaleidoscopic composition of the Jewries of the entire globe. In order to inaugurate its great spiritual world-mission, it will only have to modify its central religious dogma so as to read: 'Hear not only O Israel, but all humanity, the Lord our God is one God.'

The second article quotation is from an editorial in the Burlington Hawk-Eye, February 6:

Travelers report marvelous activity in Palestine since the New Turks sent the old wicked ruler into banishment and took the Government of Turkey into their own hands. The Jews have been moving into their old home from all directions. They are turning to farming, and the old slipshod farming that was practiced under the old rule by Mohammedans, has given way to modern intensive, scientific farming. Trade and banking is almost entirely in the hands of the Jews and they are filling up the surrounding country as well as their ancient capital, and they are de facto, if not de jure, again in possession of the home from which they were expelled some nineteen hundred years ago. They have been a long time on the road, and it is one of the grandest things in history, this people coming into their old home again long after the empire crumbled into the dust, that drove them forth. It was the dream of this home-coming that kept the Jew and strengthened him through his nineteen centuries of wandering upon the earth.

As to whether full and absolute independence and sovereignty will be achieved immediately for the new Zion, that seems doubtful. But the Young Turks found an empty treasury and a country without regular sources of revenue, and they will need money, much money, and that the Zionites have, and the Zionites can get more and ever more. And while the near future may not see the new state established and recognized among the nations of earth, for all practical purposes, Palestine will soon be as Jewish as it was when Emperor Titus destroyed their city and drove the people forth to wander over the face of the earth, to a fate such as no other people has ever survived.

It will be seen by this that the movement involving the return of the Jews to Palestine and the possible establishing of a national government is gathering momentum. This is in fulfillment of prophecy and is something that Saints watch with great interest. Contemporaneous with the return is the changing sentiment among Jews that will prepare them to receive the gospel. E. A. S.

TO CELEBRATE APRIL 6.

The first day of the next General Conference, April 6, will be the fiftieth anniversary of the date on which President Smith was received and ordained as President of the church. The junior members of the First Presidency, feeling that this important day should be properly celebrated, have appointed a committee to arrange a suitable program for the event. This committee consists of R. S. Salyards, Heman C. Smith, John W. Rushton, R. C. Evans, E. L. Kelley, G. E. Harrington, and Ralph G. Smith.

R. S. Salyards, chairman of the committee, by appointment, will communicate with other members of the committee, and with those who may be placed upon the program, so that a suitable program may be arranged at the convening of conference. If the conference when it assembles shall approve of this action, the entire day will be devoted to the celebration.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

In the article entitled, "Isaac Sheen, first editor of the HERALD," Jubilee number, page 95, it is stated that in 1857 Zenos H. Gurley and Jason W. Briggs were with the Strangites. The date should be 1851. In the statement that a conference was held in Covington in June, 1847, the date should be 1849.

Elder Mark H. Siegfried, of this city, historian of the Nauvoo District for the Latter Day Saint church, has an interesting historical article about the church as it concerns Nauvoo in the last issue of the SAINTS' HERALD. The article is nicely illustrated with pictures. In fact the whole issue is a sort of historical number, is embellished with half tones, and is an artistic typographical work of merit.—Nauvoo Independent.

The Business Manager gives notice that no more orders for extra copies of the Jubilee HERALD can be filled. About twenty-five hundred extra copies were printed, but the number was soon exhausted.

A couple of representatives of the Brighamites, of Utah, have been doing missionary work in Chariton, for sometime past, and have challenged M. C. Lorimor to a joint debate, they to present their peculiar doctrines and he to present his peculiar doctrines, but later they notified Mr. Lorimor that they would first have to get consent of the elders. We suppose there would be no danger of their converting each other.—Chariton Leader.

Hymns and Poems

(A recent HERALD contained a poem written by Emma Whitford, in memory of Elder E. H. Durand. Two stanzas of the poem were omitted as follows):

Pluck a thorn from some poor, bleeding bosom,
Make strong some faint heart for the strife,
Rouse up the weak ones who are fallen,
Ah, this is the mission of life.

Ask not if this world will applaud you,
No matter since duty is done,
There is one who will better reward you,
With a crown you have faithfully won.

"It can not be denied that the desire most intense and most nearly universal among human beings is the desire for future life, for immortality. It can not be conceived or believed that the kind and just Power which rules this universe would put in man that fixed, most powerful wish, only to thwart it and mock it with extinction."

The Straight Road

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES.

The narrow way leadeth to life and immortal bliss; baptism by immersion in water being the gate in the way. It is apparent to every thinking mind that no way could exist unless there were some peculiar characters or principles designating it from other ways. Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," and Paul said, "He was the head of the church which is his body," which would indicate that the church on earth stands as his bodily representative, or the way into which men and women must walk to find salvation.

Not that everyone that joins the church will be saved, but he that "doeth the will of my Father" and perfects his character by the discipline of said way.

"I am the door," said the Savior, the only entrance through which glory can be reached; "except a man is born of the water and the Spirit, he can not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Yet men will quibble and try so many methods of evading the real act of a birth in water.

As we noted in our former article, the "Door or gate," now we will take up principles on the inside of the church or way, that designated it from all of those nineteen different churches, bodies or ways, when Christ was manifested in the flesh.

The first principle we encounter in that way after entering the door, is the "laying on of hands" for a specific purpose, as we read, "And they prayed for them and laid their hands upon them and they received the Holy Ghost."

But, says one, that principle was done away with.

When? We want to know! Isaiah speaking for God says:

As the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.—Isaiah 55: 10, 11.

"I speak not of myself, but he that sent me gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak"; and "except a man is born of the water and of the Spirit" was the Christ's proclamation to man, and if he needs salvation, if the purpose whereunto he sent his word has not been accomplished, then the ordinance of "laying on of hands" is essential and one of those definite articles designating the narrow way. The Holy Spirit was promised by Jesus to his followers in the following words, "I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth." He will "guide you into all truth," and "bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have said unto you" and will "show you things to come."

And Peter, the noted apostle, said, "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." That settles this question: while we are off several centuries and the Lord is calling, the promise is to us, hence observe the means of "laying on of hands," as this was God's word and must accomplish the purpose whereunto it was sent. The professed Christian is barren of the fruit of the Holy Spirit. And why? Because he fails to do His commandments. "Fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith," and then there are the gifts of the Spirit: wisdom, knowledge, faith, healing, miracles, prophecy, tongues, interpretation of tongues.

Here are nine different gifts and with the nine different kinds of fruit gives us a clear and concise presentation of the operation of the Holy Spirit conferred by the laying on of hands.

Another cardinal feature of this way is the sacrament of the bread and wine in remembrance of our Lord, and through it spiritual strength comes, providing we eat worthily,—if not, death. No one can be a proper participant of this sacred sacrament unless he lives and walks in all the commandments of our God.

If we can truly and understandingly say, "Forgive us, as we forgive those who trespass against us," and love our neighbors as ourselves, then we are in proper condition for eating.

Bro. John Wesley befittingly illustrates the condition of his age, and are we any better now than they?

The gifts of the Holy Spirit were no longer to be found in the Christian Church, because the Christians had turned heathens again, and had only a dead form left.—Ninety-fourth Sermon.

Again he says:

I doubt whether you ever knew a Christian in your life. I believe that you never did, and perhaps you never will; for you will not find them in the great and gay world, and none are Christians but they that walked as Christ walked; though they are called Christians. Yet they are as far from it as hell is from heaven.—Sixty-sixth Sermon.

Volumes of evidence can be produced to prove that the church apostatized from the New Testament order.

Tithing, one tenth, is another cardinal principle and causes a great deal of confusion, because it strikes right at and uproots (if we comply) our selfish desires. To equalize condition and place the church in a financial position to care for her poor and the families of the ministers who are called to give their time to ministering the word, the Lord said to this church,

All are called according to the gifts of God unto them; and to the intent that all may labor together, let him that laboreth in the ministry and him that toileth in the affairs of the men of business and of work labor together with God for the accomplishment of the work intrusted to all.—Section 119: 8.

Each line of work is necessary and those thus engaged should be equal, each having their legitimate wants supplied, the minister supplying and looking after the spiritual needs and the man of business and work imparting their portion according to the law, by which equality is made practical as well as profitable.

Out of those cardinal principles, when properly applied to our lives, are manifested the graces of proficiency of the Christ life. This law of tithe, one tenth, was no new principle in New Testament times or in latter day revelation, for Abraham gave "one tenth of all he had" and Jacob said "he would give one tenth of all that the Lord would give him."

Again, and not the least in this way, stands God's ministers having authority to make effective the word in the name of Jesus the Christ.

Paul said, "Our gospel came not unto you in word [the Bible] only, but also in power [authority] and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance."

This is corroborated by Jesus in the following language, "As my Father hath sent me, so I send you." "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you and ordained you." Here is authority bestowed: "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature," for God gave unto Christ "authority," so he sent his ministry.

There are three major principles which compose the gospel system and each has its minor characteristics. First, is the word of God, which is the life of men, spiritually, when it is properly administered. Second, power or authority to administer it. Third, Holy Spirit accompanying the administration by the laying on of hands, and these elements constitute a living power, as Paul said, "unto salvation," which leads up to "much assurance."

Many souls are hungering for such experiences, but tradition and self-called ministers throw so much dust in their eyes they can not "find it," just as Amos said.

May the God of glory help the honest in heart to shake loose from such environments and embrace the golden opportunity of hearing the angelic message of latter days, of which the prophets, Jesus, and the apostles spoke and wrote so much.

In bonds,
A. H. PARSONS.

"Solon said it was never safe to call any man happy until he was dead. Unhappiness is equally uncertain. If you are poor now you may be rich to-morrow. If you are unknown now you may be famous to-morrow. If you are even in the penitentiary now you may be running a street car system to-morrow."

Original Articles

THE LAW OF MOSES WAS NOT A PLAN OF SALVATION, EITHER BEFORE CHRIST OR SINCE.

THE GOSPEL THE ONLY CELESTIAL LAW EVER GIVEN TO MAN.

In July, 1909, there appeared in the Sunday School Quarterly the doctrine of salvation before Christ, through obedience to the law of Moses. In the same paper for a number of years, the law of Moses has been exalted out of the place intended by its author, to the place of the gospel. More has been made of that law than the facts will warrant, according to our understanding of the Scripture. I am sure the standard books of the church and the writings of Joseph Smith the Seer will not support such a position. If the error is allowed to pass without a protest, future generations will appeal to it, some for support of their error and others for material against us. For one I refuse to be bound by the position assumed by the Quarterly. Already if the Quarterly should fall into the hands of the Adventists or the Brighamites, our effort to prove God unchangeable, would be met with our own publications as against that position.

I believe I shall be able to prove that the gospel was the only plan ever established for man's salvation, either before Christ or since. This position is the only one that will harmonize with the unchangeable nature of the Creator, as revealed either in nature or religion. Our natural senses teach us, that God is the same in all ages of the world, and that the conditions and positions of men do not change God's laws either in nature or the gospel, since the fall of Adam. True, there may be different laws to accomplish different results, but only one law to accomplish the same result. Man may rise to one set of laws or he may descend to another, but the laws are immutable. The lesser law will not accomplish for man what the higher will. Only the celestial law of the gospel will save anyone in the celestial kingdom. God's laws in nature have never changed since they were first set in operation. We see these laws as our fathers saw them. The law of growth is the same as at the beginning of man's probation, and nature will produce the same crops, and as abundantly for the black man as the white. The law of gravitation is the same now as before Christ, and a pound in weight has never varied to suit man's fallen or exalted position. The law of heat and cold is the same in a civilized age as in the times of barbarity. The coming of Christ did not change these laws. Then why should we think his coming changed other laws of this same Creator, although applying to the soul? The laws that govern our physical natures are the same that all our ancestors, "for a thousand generations," have experienced, and these laws were the same before Christ as since. Why should we suppose that the laws that govern the other part of man—the spiritual part, be changed? The laws of the spiritual realm must be as immutable as those in the physical, and each show the imprint of his hand who “changes not,” as they are administered by the “Prince of Peace” who is the “same yesterday, to-day and for ever.” (Hebrews 13: 8.)

Christ but restored that plan which man received from God at first, but which the children of Israel had no faith in. (Hebrews 4: 2.) They descended from the higher plane of the celestial law to the lower level of the law of Moses, and needed to be trained to obedience by that schoolmaster which would finally bring them up to the higher level again. The gospel being the “power of God unto salvation” (Romans 1: 16), the law of Moses was only a help to aid them to keep the celestial law. It was not intended as a plan of salvation. The principles of the gospel were twenty-two hundred years older than the law of Moses and have continued nearly that long since. It is the “old way” (Jeremiah 6: 16); “The everlasting covenant” (Isaiah 24: 5); “The everlasting gospel” (Revelation 14: 6). And being revealed again from heaven since the Dark Ages, is properly called, “The new and everlasting covenant” (Doctrine and Covenants 20: 1). Moses and the prophets often referred to parts of the gospel, but only as remnants of the “perfect law.” The statement of the Psalmist, “The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul” (Psalm 19: 7), is a statement in point; for, as we shall repeatedly prove, the law of Moses did not bring conversion. It pertained to the overt act as Jesus so plainly showed in the sermon on the mount: “Ye have heard that it was said by them of olden time,” etc.

When the Lord brought the children of Israel out of Egypt, he promised to make of them a great nation, and he was in duty bound to give them a national constitution. That constitution when given was the law of Moses, and was to them what our Constitution is to us. Both these documents were inspired and both given for a similar purpose. To hold men in check and bring them to a point where the gospel might reach them more easily. Both were in force alongside of the gospel as a help. Parts of each may be similar, but each had its own specific work and formed no part of the other. While neither the law of Moses nor the Constitution of the United States is a plan of salvation, it is readily admitted that one may receive a lesser glory for living faithful to either one. To obtain the celestial kingdom, however, one must keep the celestial law, and the strongest apologists of the law of Moses will hardly claim that it was a celestial law.

To claim that salvation could have been secured by keeping the law of Moses, is to rob the cross of Christ of its glory, “For if righteousness came by the law, then Christ is dead in vain” (Galatians 2: 21).

The latter day Seer understood this matter differently than the editor of the Quarterly. In the Times and Seasons, vol. 2, pp. 243 to 247, we read the following:

There is one thing necessary to know in order to have a correct knowledge of the gospel; it is that it was, is, and ever will be the same; that it is as immutable as God himself, or Jesus the Savior, and that the gospel is the scheme of life and salvation; and there was not nor will not be any other, it is the scheme of things by which all that are saved, will be saved, and all who are now saved were saved by it. . . . It originated in eternity, before the world was.

No language need be plainer than this, that is, that God, before he framed the world, had laid the scheme of life and salvation, and before he formed Adam's dust into man, he had predestined that the human family should be made children to himself, through Jesus Christ, and all this was fixed before the foundation of the world.

Having the testimony which we have on this subject, . . . that God had at any period of the world any other way of making sons and daughters but the one.

“At no period of the world,” said Joseph, “had God any other way but the gospel way.” It originated in the beginning, but the law of Moses originated many hundred years later. If the seer taught Latter Day Saint doctrine, then the doctrine contained in the Quarterly, that salvation could have been secured by the law of Moses before Christ, is an innovation.

Lesson for July 18, 1909, page 11, column 2, has the following:

It is plainly stated here that while the law of Moses was in force, salvation could be attained by those who kept its commandments, and it is also plainly stated that while this law was in force no one could be saved who did not keep its commandments.

We hold this statement is unscriptural, for reasons that we have given, and others that shall follow.

The basis for the idea that salvation could be attained by keeping the law of Moses before it was fulfilled, is founded on a wrong interpretation, we believe, of Matthew 5: 21 of the Inspired Translation:

Whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.

The words, “these commandments of the law,” as we shall presently prove, by quoting the words of Jesus to the Nephites in this same sermon, do not refer to the law of Moses, but to the commandments which he had just been giving them in his sermon on the mount. (Much of that sermon may not have come down to us.) The expression; “the law,” may either refer to the law of liberty, in the gospel; or to the law of bondage, in the law of Moses. To which did he refer in this scripture? He does not say, "these commandments of the law of Moses." Why may he not have referred to the gospel law? We will let him explain his own meaning in his sermon to the Nephites. For easy comparison we will set the two texts in parallel columns:

INSPIRED TRANSLATION.

Therefore, let your light so shine before this world, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven. Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, heaven and earth must pass away, but one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, until all be fulfilled. Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven, but whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.—Matthew 5: 18-21.

BOOK OF MORMON.

Therefore let your light so shine before this people, that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven. Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfill; for verily I say unto you, One jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled. And behold I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Behold, ye have the commandments before you, and the law is fulfilled; therefore come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.—3 Nephi 5, 63-68, authorized edition.

Where one account says, "these commandments," the other says, "my commandment which I have commanded you at this time." This explains very clearly what commandments Jesus meant in the Inspired Translation. This statement in the Book of Mormon harmonizes nearly every passage of scripture bearing on this subject. That book also states that "God speaks the same words unto one nation like unto another." In that case we can surely tell what he meant in his sermon to the Jews. He meant the commandments which he had just been announcing to them when he says, "These commandments of the law," and had no reference at all to the law of Moses. I am aware that those who will seek to make the law of Moses a plan of salvation will try to tie to the expression, "till it be fulfilled." If such should be attempted, it will fall to them to prove that the gospel will not at some time be fulfilled. Paul while living under the gospel law wrote: "When that which is perfect shall come then that which is in part shall pass away."—1 Corinthians 13: 10. In the above parallel columns is a complete refutation of the position assumed in the Quarterly.

In Mosiah 1:109-113, the Book of Mormon (authorized version) further explains the use of the law of Moses:

And the Lord God hath sent his holy prophets among all the children of men to declare these things to every kindred, nation, and tongue, that thereby whosoever should believe that Christ should come, the same might receive remission of their sins, and rejoice with exceeding great joy, even as though he had already come among them. Yet the Lord God saw that his people were a stiff-necked people and he appointed unto them a law, even the law of Moses. And many signs, and wonders, and types, and shadows showed he unto them, concerning his coming: . . . And yet they hardened their hearts, and understood not that the law of Moses availeth nothing. . . . There shall be no other name given, nor any other way nor means whereby salvation can come unto the children of men, only in and through the name of Christ.

After quoting the ten commandments this same writer continues:

And now ye have said that salvation cometh by the law of Moses. I say unto you that it is expedient that ye should keep the law of Moses as yet; but I say unto you, that the time shall come when it shall no more be expedient to keep the law of Moses. And moreover, I say unto you, that salvation doth not come by the law alone; and were it not for the atonement which God himself shall make for the sins and iniquities of his people, that they must unavoidably perish, notwithstanding the law of Moses.—Mosiah 8: 3-5.

In verse 90 of this same chapter, Abinadi concludes his sermon on the law of Moses as follows:

Therefore, if ye teach the law of Moses, also teach that it is a shadow of those things which are to come; teach them that redemption cometh through Christ.

Let the Book of Mormon further explain:

For it was expedient that they should keep the law of Moses as yet, for it was not all fulfilled. But notwithstanding the law of Moses, they did look forward to the coming of Christ, considering that the law of Moses was a type of his coming, and believing that they must keep those outward performances, until the time that he should be revealed unto them. Now they did not suppose that salvation came by the law of Moses.—Alma 14: 74-76.

Another quotation from the Book of Mormon will show the difference between what the Nephites taught their children and what the children are being taught among Latter Day Saints to-day.

And notwithstanding we believe in Christ, we keep the law of Moses, and look forward with steadfastness unto Christ, until the law shall be fulfilled; for, for this end was the law given; wherefore, the law hath become dead unto us, and we are made alive in Christ, because of our faith; yet we keep the law because of the commandments; and we talk of Christ; we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins. Wherefore, we speak concerning the law, that our children may know the deadness of the law.—2 Nephi 11: 45-49.

The main thought in the above is that salvation and the forgiveness of sins were sought by the Nephites before Christ, through Christ and not through the operation of the law of Moses. This is further explained in Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4:

Now, this Moses plainly taught to the children of Israel in the wilderness, and sought diligently to sanctify his people that they might behold the face of God; but they hardened their hearts, and could not endure his presence, therefore, the Lord, in his wrath (for his anger was kindled against them), swore that they should not enter into his rest, while in the wilderness, which rest is the fullness of his glory. Therefore, he took Moses out of their midst and the holy priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins.

This shows that baptism was a part of the preparatory gospel and not a part of the law of Moses, as indicated in the Quarterly. This was also true of repentance and the forgiveness of sins as we have shown by the Book of Mormon. All these principles were known to Adam several hundred years before Moses. (See Inspired Translation.)

If it still be asserted that men could have been saved by the law of Moses before Christ but not since, my further reply, in addition to what has already been written, is, that truth is always truth and can not be changed. One can not be saved except by the truth. (Saint John 17: 17.) God's definition of truth, in the latter days, is: "A knowledge of things as they were, as they are, and as they are to come"; also, "truth abideth for ever." (Doctrine and Covenants 1: 8.) Are the apologists for the law of Moses ready to admit that the law of Moses abideth for ever? If not, could men be saved by that which was not abiding? The gospel is the only everlasting plan ever given to man, and it was the truth referred to by the Savior, which was to sanctify his people.

There seems to be a golden thread running throughout all of Paul's writings where one may trace an effort to show the superiority of the gospel over the law of Moses, in that salvation could be obtained through the former, but not through the latter, and that, too, without respect to time. If the law could have saved men before Christ, it could do so since, for "God is no respecter of persons," and is "without a shadow of turning."

Before taking a more detailed view of this matter let us remark, and justly too, that our "Gospel Quarterly" of late seems to be a misnomer. It should have been "The Law Quarterly." The word gospel seems to be strangely out of place on the July Quarterly.

Another fact with regard to the law of Moses, and one we have hinted at before, is, it was not spiritual but carnal. It pertained to the carnal part of man and not to the spirit. Paul was carnal while living under the law, but spiritual under the commandment of Christ. (Romans 7: 14.)

One can keep the law of Moses and be a murderer at heart.

One can keep the law of Moses and be an adulterer at heart.

One can keep the law of Moses and not repent.

One can keep the law of Moses and not forgive.

One can keep the law of Moses and show no mercy whatever, for those who broke that law died without mercy. (Hebrews 10: 28.)

One can keep the law of Moses and not observe baptism.

One can keep the law of Moses and not receive the Holy Ghost.

One can keep the law of Moses and not observe the laying on of hands.

One can keep the law of Moses and not believe in the resurrection.

One can keep the law of Moses and put away his wife for almost any cause.

One can keep the law of Moses and practice human slavery.

One can keep the law of Moses and take most any kind of an oath, and swear as much as he pleases, just so he does not take the name of the Lord God in vain.

One can keep the law of Moses and think as much evil as he pleases, so long as he does not commit the overt act.

After all these, just conclusions, we think, from the law of Moses, we can not believe that Jesus meant to say that one could be saved by it any time.

The law without the gospel is dead, as our bodies without our spirits are dead. The spirit is no part of the body and the body is no part of the spirit, though they may be alike or similar in appearance. It is not true, then, that a part of the gospel was transferred to the law of Moses, in Moses' day. Neither is it true that a part of the ten commandments or any other part of the law of Moses was reenacted or transferred to the gospel in Jesus' day. I have no sympathy with the thought that Jesus reenacted each of the ten commandments except the fourth, which pertained to the Saturday Sabbath. It was not necessary. All the good in the ten commandments did not equal the good in the gospel. It continued alongside of the law and has continued since Moses' law vanished away; the law is the carnal part and the gospel is the spiritual part. The law became dead to those who kept the gospel perfect. This is so plainly taught in the Book of Mormon, we quote it again and put it in parallel column with the extract quoted in the July Quarterly.

BOOK OF MORMON.

Notwithstanding we believe in Christ, we keep the law of Moses, and look forward with steadfastness unto Christ, until the law shall be fulfilled; for, for this end

"QUARTERLY."

Notwithstanding we believe in Christ, we keep the law of Moses, and we look forward with steadfastness unto Christ, until the law of Moses shall be fulfilled; for, was the law given; wherefore, the law hath become dead unto us, and we are made alive in Christ, because of our faith; yet we keep the law because of the commandments; and we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies, that our children may know to what source they may look for a remission of their sins. Wherefore, we speak concerning the law, that our children may know the deadness of the law.—1 Nephi 11: 45-49.

The parts so conveniently omitted in the Quarterly put a reverse meaning on the quotation than appears in the Quarterly. The one shows that salvation and the forgiveness of sins were obtained through Christ, and that the law was dead to them. The other seeks to establish the fact that salvation and the forgiveness of sins were attained through keeping the law of Moses, from Moses to Christ. A position that requires omissions of plain passages of scripture, is not safe to teach anywhere, and especially to the young who do not easily unlearn what is impressed on their minds in childhood.

It does not follow that while certain men received the Holy Ghost while living partly under the gospel and also under the law of Moses, they received that gift by obedience to the law of Moses, as stated in the Quarterly and in the July Exponent, page 162. On the contrary, it was received by living the gospel. Listen to Paul:

This only would I learn of you, Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith? . . . But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident: for, The just shall live by faith, and the law is not of faith.—Galatians 3: 2, 11, 12.

God took away a part of the gospel and added the law of Moses as a schoolmaster. By observing both, they could in a measure please God, receive a forgiveness of their sins, and obtain the Holy Ghost in a measure, but not as an abiding comforter, which is only bestowed by the laying on of hands. As they did not have the Melchisedec priesthood, they had no one to perform that ordinance. By keeping the law alone, which was about all they had left when Christ came, and even that wrongly interpreted and made void by their traditions, there was no salvation, neither forgiveness of sins, nor spiritual life.

Paul tried to make this matter plain, as we have quoted: "The law was not of faith"; the Spirit was not received by the law, and no man is justified by the law of Moses.

Against the law being a plan of salvation we introduce the following texts:

for this end was the law given. . . . We keep the law because of the commandments; and we talk of Christ, we rejoice in Christ, we preach of Christ, we prophesy of Christ, and we write according to our prophecies that our children may know to what source they may look for the remission of their sins.—Lesson for July 18, 1909, p. 12.

And by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.—Acts 13: 39.

Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight.—Romans 3: 20.

But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, . . . Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law.—Romans 3: 21, 28.

Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, . . . for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.—Galatians 2: 16.

But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God, it is evident.—Galatians 3: 11.

Not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ.—Philippians 3: 9.

For the law was administered without an oath, and made nothing perfect.—Hebrews 7: 19, Inspired Version.

For what the law could not do, in that it was weak.—Romans 8: 3.

For if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain.—Galatians 2: 21.

To redeem them that were under the law.—Galatians 4: 5.

For if they which are of the law be heirs, faith is made void.—Romans 4: 14.

For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before, for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.—Hebrews 7: 18.

Wherefore they stumble at that stumbling-stone, not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law.—Romans 9: 32.

The law of Moses was weak and unprofitable all the way along; both before and since Christ. As weak before as after. Christ's coming could not effect it, for it was weak in itself. The expressions, no man, no flesh, all, etc., does not limit the weakness of the law this side of Christ. God himself found fault with it when he said, "Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live."—Ezekiel 20: 25.

Paul recognized this text as applying to the whole law. As we said before, there is a golden thread that may be easily traced through Paul's writings, showing the efficiency of the law of faith and the inefficiency of the law of Moses, as applied in any age of the world. That seems to have been the cause and foundation of Paul's writings.

Let us show that fact a little more clearly under separate headings.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants, the one from Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage.—Galatians 4: 24.

Moses, who was ordained by the hand of angels to be a mediator of this first covenant, (the law.) Now this mediator was not a mediator of the new covenant; but there is one mediator of the new covenant, who is Christ.—Galatians 3: 19, 20.

For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second.—Hebrews 8: 7.

Moses was the mediator of the one covenant, and Christ of the other. The first, which was from Sinai, was a covenant of "fault" and "bondage." The ten commandments especially were from Sinai, and the judgments and statutes were also from there. The contract and the specifications all came in together, all were ineffectual together, and all passed away together, i. e., they were all nailed to the cross. (Colossians 2: 14.)

THE TWO LAWS.

For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death.—Romans 8: 2.

How much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?—Hebrews 9: 14.

Could a law of "sin" and "dead works" save a man at any time?

THE TWO WOMEN.

Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid and the other by a free woman . . . which things . . . are the two covenants.—Galatians 4: 21-24.

The Reorganization is very positive in asserting that Hagar, the bondmaid, was not the wife of Abraham, but was living with him in open adultery. Shall we now hold that this illicit covenant was a means of salvation? Hagar was all right as a help, but not as a wife, so also the law of Moses which Hagar represents, according to the Scripture, was all right as a help—a "schoolmaster," but not as a plan of salvation.

THE TWO SONS.

Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son; for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman.—Galatians 4: 28-30.

If the children of God through the gospel are heirs of eternal life, then those who kept the law of Moses will not be heirs with them. This certainly is plain enough so that a child can understand it.

THE TWO TESTAMENTS.

Who also hath made us able ministers of the new testament, not of the letter, but of the Spirit; for the letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life. But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance; which glory was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the Spirit be rather glorious?—2 Corinthians 3: 6, 8.

There is no escaping the conclusion that it was the covenant written on stones that was the carnal law—the law of death—the letter law. This position is the strongest position I know of against the Seventh-day Sabbath, but the Quarterly and the Exponent introduce many arguments in favor of it.

Compare the following errors in the Quarterly and in the Exponent, and answer which is really scriptural:

THE "QUARTERLY."

I.

It is necessary to remember that the law given by Moses enjoined faith, repentance, baptism, and a life of love toward God and man.

We have proven repeatedly that faith, repentance, and baptism were principles of the gospel and not principles of the law of Moses. We have also proven that the law of Moses did not require a holy life, that one could do many unholy things and still keep the law of Moses, both in spirit and in fact.

II.

The law of carnal commandments was a great series of object lessons. The Lord sought to teach spiritual things through material means.—Page 12.

As we have proven the law was not spiritual, but was itself the law of carnal commandments. The object lessons were the types and shadows and not the commandments.

III.

This law of carnal commandments prescribed the ritual of the temple service.—Page 12.

Paul shows the ten commandments to be the carnal commandments and not those lesser laws which pertained to the temple service. In verse 11 on this same page of the Quarterly the reader is referred to Exodus 34: 2 of the Inspired Translation. That says: "But I will give unto them the law as at first, but it shall be after the law of a carnal commandment." This reference given by the editor completely answers her own assertion and we leave the matter there.

IV.

The mistake of many of Israel seems to have been that they fixed their attention upon these ceremonies, failing to discern by faith what their meaning was and thus failing to receive in their hearts, the principles of God's law.—Page 12.

The law of Moses was not the law of the heart. It was a carnal law and pertained to this life only. The gospel was the heart law.

V.

Those people [the Nephites] kept the law intelligently.—Page 12.

Certainly. And in doing so "they did not suppose that salvation came by the law of Moses" (Alma 14: 76).

VI.

They kept the law of Moses as it was given to Israel on the mount.—Page 12.

And in doing so it is nowhere shown that they expected salvation for doing so.

VII.

There is abundance of evidence in the Scriptures that God sent the Holy Ghost upon those who kept this law in faithfulness and holiness of life.—Page 12.

There is no evidence at all on this point; on the contrary Paul shows, as we have proven, that they did not receive it by the law of Moses, but by the law of faith—the gospel. (Galatians 3: 2, 11, 12.)

THE "EXPONENT."

VIII.

Was the law of Moses a failure?—Page 162.

No, but the people were, or else the law would never have been added. Is the gospel to-day a failure because it does not accomplish all that God intended? The law was not a failure, in that it was given as a hedge—as a schoolmaster, but not as a plan of salvation.

IX.

From the beginning, his work has widened and deepened, enlarging its circle.—Page 163.

Where are we drifting? Nothing could be further from the facts of history than this. In every dispensation when the truth has been established, it has soon dwindled away, and there was soon need of another restoration. In Noah's day he and family alone were found in favor with God, though there had been thousands previous to that who were acceptable with God. A whole city was taken to God at one time. In Abraham's day he alone was found in favor with God. In Jesus' day none of the sects were in favor with God, and what shall we say of the dark ages since Christ?

What means the great restoration of the latter days, if the work of God continued to widen and deepen and enlarge its circle since Christ? That is a first-rate Catholic doctrine. What of the Book of Mormon and what of the Indian to-day? When the Son of Man cometh will he find faith on the earth?" —Luke 18: 8.

X.

The knowledge of God shall cover the earth as the waters cover the great deep.—Page 163.

Jeremiah has said:

They shall say no more, the ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more.—Jeremiah 3: 16.

The Lord desired the Jews to forget the old covenant completely, so that the knowledge through the gospel and not the law might cover the earth. But if the Jew be convinced that the law of Moses was a plan of salvation one time, it will be a difficult task to convince him that it is not that now. In such case the prophecy of Jeremiah will never be fulfilled. Let us teach the Jews to forget that covenant, for it was only a law of bondage, and never a plan of salvation.

Let us get at this matter from another standpoint.

Those who kept the law of redemption through the gospel. (Galatians 4: 5; 3: 13; Colossians 1: 14.)

The law was for those who had fallen from grace. (Galatians 5: 4; 3: 19.)

The holy covenant which pertained to the conscience was not made fully known while the carnal commandments were in force. (Hebrews 8: 8-10.)

The law of Moses was a curse. (Galatians 3: 13.)

The law could not justify. (Acts 13: 39.)

The law was a yoke of bondage. (Galatians 5: 1.)

Grace and truth came through the gospel, and not through the law of Moses. (Saint John 1: 17.)

The new covenant was unlike the first, and was a heart covenant. (Jeremiah 31: 32.)

The first covenant was faulty. (Hebrews 8: 7.)

The first covenant was weak and unprofitable. (Hebrews 7: 18.)

The law of Moses was the first covenant. (Galatians 3: 19, 20, Inspired Translation.)

The blood of bulls and goats could not take away sin. (Hebrews 10: 4.)

God gave the law of carnal commandments in his wrath as a punishment. (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 4.)

The gospel was a better law based on better promises. (Hebrews 8: 6.)

The law was only a shadow. (Hebrews 10: 1; Colossians 2: 17.)

I am more and more convinced that the gospel is the only plan of salvation ever given to man, and only by obedience to it could salvation be obtained either before Christ or since. The law of Moses was a carnal, weak, unprofitable, law of bondage that made nothing perfect, yet was an aid to bring them to the gospel plane. The Nephites who kept the law "intelligently" did not "suppose that salvation came through the law of Moses." We will do well to emulate their example. Let us return to the "former commandment, even the Book of Mormon" (Doctrine and Covenants 83: 8), which agrees with the Inspired Translation and the Doctrine and Covenants in this as in all other points. They all agree that the great salvation could not be secured through keeping the law of Moses, either before Christ or since.

It grieves me that I am compelled to oppose one of my best friends in the discussion of this question, and one who has few equals as a Sunday school editor, but principle must always remain above persons. The fault, if fault it shall prove, may not be justly and wholly laid at her door. It is the result of certain policies in our Sunday school organization that do not properly guard our doctrinal interests. The leading and most experienced quorums of the church should be represented on the examining board,—those who are constantly in touch with the peculiar and erroneous doctrines of both Protestantism and Catholicism, and I might also add, Judaism. Not a Sunday school periodical in the country can produce the equal to our editor, and this fact has been acknowledged by some of the best workers of other churches. But there is no one, not even the President of the church or the Bishop, that does not need counselors. Why should not our editor? Not a board, for they are bothersome things, but helps, and aids, and counselors. As the church should be greatly interested in what is taught its children it occurs to me that the General Conference should have something to say as to what doctrine is taught, and aid the editor to get it right, and teach it properly. I am sure that she ought not to object to such aid, and doubtless will not.

Very kindly,
J. W. PETERSON.

The Husband's Awakening.

I saw a wife with a well-to-do husband, not unkind, but in many ways thoughtless of her comfort, and she allowed it to be so. He never dreamed of ill-using her, would not for a moment have admitted it. They had three children, two little girls and a baby boy eighteen months old.

So she had been tied at home for years. He always expected to see his children nicely dressed, and Sunday morning she must fix them up nicely to go walking with him before church time. But the wife had no time for walking or for church. The morning's work was to be done, baby to care for, and something nice prepared for husband's dinner. And so while he went to church then read the news and rested, she toiled and worked and usually found the day that should be devoted largely to rest, to be the most tiresome day of the week. And even if she did have a little time to sit down, was too tired to even read.

Seven days work each week, month in and month out, was telling on both mind and body, for on no day must he come home from work and find his children with soiled garments. He so loved to see them neat and clean, never thinking of the extra steps and hours of work for her. So she worked and toiled without complaint. True, in later years, when weary with care and loss of sleep, when sickness came to the little ones, she sometimes felt that a little more thoughtfulness on his part would be greatly appreciated, but she never complained, and he never realized how she felt.

About this time a much loved aunt came to visit them, staying several weeks. She noted the pale cheeks and careworn look and pitied the tired mother, who was so changed from the happy, joyous maiden of eight years ago. She missed the ringing laugh that helped to make her father's house a pleasant place to visit, and she was grieved to note the change, feeling that it ought not to be, that there was a remedy, while her niece accepted it as a duty incumbent upon her as matron of her home, never realizing that it could be bettered till her aunt came, who, before leaving, had some very plain talk with her. When told that her life was not what it should be she looked up with surprise, checking her with, "Why, aunt, I am trying to do the best I can. My strength will not admit of more."

"You do not understand me. You are doing far more than you ought. You have mistaken views about your duties as wife and mother, and I wish to give a little advice that may help you, if carried out."

A quiet talk ensued, which gave the young wife new ideas that seemed practical, and she resolved to carry them out, both for her own sake as well as her husband's, whom she began to realize was becoming very selfish, and that it was largely her own fault.

Soon after her aunt left quite a change took place. First her children were made some plain, dark calico dresses. She selected goods, visited a dressmaker, and had herself a nice suit made. When he came from work one evening he was surprised to see a load of nice, clean sand dumped in one corner of the back yard.

"Who brought that sand here?"

"Mr. Loust brought it by my order."

"And pray what use have you for that sand?"

"Wait and see," was the short reply.

Next day while they were at dinner a man unloaded a pile of lumber by the sand.

"What does that mean?" said Mr. Leslie. "I had supposed I was running things, but from appearances it seems not. I think this is going a little too far."

She made no reply, and he went to his business in no very amiable humor, too angry to ask any more questions. On his return at night a box twelve feet square and six high, with open top stood around the sand pile, and his little girls with dark aprons and—what, could it be possible?—yes, actually barefooted, were playing in that sand pile, and baby brother in their midst digging his toes in this, to them, precious dirt, and laughing in happy glee with his sisters. Truly they were happy, but to say that he was at first shocked would be a mild name for it.

"Oh, papa," cried out both girls, "see our nice sand house, and mamma says we may go barefooted and play here all we want to!"

"I duss you'll want to go barefoot and play with us, won't you?" said the youngest girl. That idea not only brought a smile but a laugh that his wife heard from the kitchen door, as she was watching to see how her liege lord would be affected by it. He soon saw the wisdom of it all, turned and walked in with a broad smile on his face, threw an arm around his wife and kissed her, bringing the moisture to her eyes.

"Well, wife, you have beat me this time, sure. I went away vexed to-day, but it's all right."

In the meantime she had made a clothes bag for the soiled linen, hanging it in the press adjoining their bedroom, telling him that was to put his dirty clothes in as he took them off. But he didn't think, and when a week after she was taken suddenly very ill, and he phoned for a doctor he discovered that the floor looked very untidy with cuffs, collars, shirts, etc., thrown down where he had taken them off during the week.

"This is a pretty looking room to bring a doctor into."

"The clothes bag is swinging in the press. I showed you where to find it a week ago."

The next Sunday morn he wanted the children dressed for church, but she had made other arrangements. A girl came to take care of the children at home, and as she came from her room dressed to accompany him to church, he looked at her in surprise. Was this the woman he had left at home so long? What a transformation! Where had that tired, careworn look gone. He had thought her very pretty when a girl, and as he looked at her now in her becoming attire, with the same smile of old, it made him think of his girl bride, and the lovelight of former days came to him as he conducted her to the church they both loved so well, but from which she had so long been absent.

Mr. Leslie did some tall thinking during that walk. His wife was really looking young again. What had caused the change? Then he remembered the sand pile; his children coming in with rosy cheeks and happy looks, and thought how it had improved both her and the little ones. It had given her more leisure, more freedom from worry and care, and gave the rest he now saw she had needed. And so the more he thought about it, the clearer it came that he had been an exacting, selfish husband. She had done her part, done it well and patiently, without any complaint, while he—yes, he must acknowledge it—had settled down into a humdrum sort of life, receiving her attention as his right, but giving nothing in return but the food and clothes she wore. That revealed more to him than ever before, and while it was humiliating to acknowledge to himself, he decided manfully to meet the issue, turn over a new leaf, and be the thoughtful, careful lover of his first married life.

Much of the sermon was lost on him that day, but conscience was giving him a far better one, one he could not forget. So, on their return, instead of taking up the paper and letting his wife do everything, it came so easy for him to build the fire, put on the kettle and brush up, talking so cheerfully all the while he was helping her, with a kiss thrown in. It almost made her feel like a girl once more, and her ringing laugh reminded him of old times.

"I wonder if I have forgotten how to set the table," as he was putting the toothpicks in the salt cellar.

"No, no, not in there. And have you forgotten where I keep the knives and forks?"

"But where are the spoons? I thought they were in this drawer."

"If you look in the spoonholder, I guess you will see them." And so with many a laugh dinner was on the table.

"Now I must get the youngsters in."

They were tired of play and hungry and as he washed them and put clean aprons on them it did him good to look at his wife. He helped her with the dishes, then insisted that she lie on the couch while he read to her, afterward their voices blending together at the organ, which for a few years had almost gone out of use, and he felt when night came that he had spent the happiest day in years, and thought, "God helping me, there shall be many more such in the future."

And what of the wife? She thought, "The past has been partly my own fault, and I thank Aunt Lucy for her visit and timely advice."

MOUND CITY, MISSOURI, January 10, 1910.

Editors Herald: Brethren, we thought to write a line to your valuable paper. We call it valuable because it carries so much precious news to its readers. I have been a reader of its pages since about the year 1870. I took upon me the name of Latter Day Saint in August, 1876, and I have been made to rejoice in this work ever since. We, of course, have had our dark hours, but that was the fault of this weak mortal body of ours. But, dear Saints, there is nothing that can take the place of this latter day work. There are many things mortal that are enticing to the eye and the taste. Yes, the pleasures of this world draw so many away from the truth, but oh, how weak is mortal man. These pleasures are only for a short time, then cometh the bitter. But when we just let ourselves think for a moment of the great promises God has made to those that love, serve, and obey him, not only the future but in this life, what great blessings we have received by being obedient children! Everything is for us if faithful. When we see men so careless in church duties, in their family circle, saying things, using words unbecoming, it is hard to bear. This is the weakness of man. The Evil One is continually sowing tares, but finally there will be a separation, then will be the blessed time for the faithful; so let us live for that time when the righteous shall inherit the earth.

Now I want to say to those that want to get homes in Zion and her borders, that there is the time just now for some to buy some good homes here in the Ross Grove Branch, as there is seemingly a spirit moving with the people of moving out from here. It is one of the best farming parts of the country. Land is high, from one hundred to one hundred and thirty-five dollars per acre, and so on.

There is one farm, and a good one, for sale just west of me one half mile, three eighties, two hundred and forty acres. Some man wanting a good farm would do well to see after it soon. Then one cornering me, of one hundred and sixty acres, I believe can be bought for one hundred dollars per acre. Owner wants one hundred and twenty-five dollars. This farm is practically new, fairly good house, large, new barn, cistern, good well. Any inquirer may write me at Mound City.

Your brother,

A. B. ROSS.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 5, 1910.

Editors Herald: Believing that your many readers would like to know something about the Interstate Institute, held in Independence, Missouri, on December 28 and 29, I have thought that I might wisely employ a few hours of my time by telling you my observations and conclusions concerning it. I was merely a spectator, having no official connection with it. The innovation of having members of other churches take part caused considerable comment, both favorable and unfavorable. To attempt to tell what all the speakers said would be a task greater than I am capable of and more space would be required than you can spare in your columns. I can only notice a few points from some of the speakers, but in so doing it is not my intention to convey the idea that the others did not express good ideas, but simply that the ones I noticed attracted my attention more than others, or else I feel my inability to express the thoughts of others.

Mr. H. F. Branstetter, of the Christian Church, spoke of "Special work of committees of organized classes." The idea that he sought to impress was the importance of having something for everyone in the class to do beside the regular lessons, to keep them busy in doing something good.

Mr. S. G. A. Copley, a specialist in temperance work, gave us some excellent ideas on map drawing while he talked to the school, and having traveled in Palestine he told us some interesting things of the customs and habits of the people in that country. He made a strong appeal in the cause of temperance, and spoke in words of great commendation concerning our people because of their strong anti-saloon sentiment.

Mr. J. H. Bryan spoke with special reference to the study of the Bible, and of attempting to get men and women interested in Sunday school work, and then it would be a much easier task to get the children. He was favorable to large Bible classes, from fifty to one hundred or even larger. A story was told of forty members of the Bible class calling during one week on one man whom they were anxious to have come to Sunday school, each one giving him a personal invitation to attend. He preferred the lecture method of teaching such a class. There may be some drawbacks to such a course or method, but it helps one class that otherwise would be very difficult to get into a class. I have reference to those who are not furnished with the Bible, and do not want to expose their ignorance, which will surely be done if they are asked questions. They are willing to learn in silence.

The work done by our own members was of an excellent quality. Their names are household words and long after my hand is too feeble to write of them their work will live on. The names of those taking part were Srs. Altha Deam, Anna Salyards, M. A. Etzenhouser; and of the brethren, E. L. Kelley, D. J. Krähl, A. H. Parsons, and J. A. Gunsolley. They were two very pleasant and profitable days while enjoying a short vacation from my mission field among friends and home folks. It seemed strange to hear unfamiliar names, people not of our faith, taking an active part. I know not and care less as to what others think, but to me it is the foreshadowing of a better and a brighter day for the church. The spirit of toleration is becoming stronger. We are all learning the lesson that because we can not understand things alike, largely as the result of our education and environment, we need not be enemies. We are not living in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries when people who could not agree as to the meaning of what was in the Bible, when the stronger cast the weaker into prison or burned them at the stake. If any should present errors there ought to be enough light in us to detect it. We have to do that with our own people, and if we have been observing we can recall times when we wished some of our talkative people only had sense enough to stop before they misrepresented the gospel in its entirety. One of our great needs in the past, and now, and will continue in the future, is friends. Not such as come to us from sacrificing the truth, or compromising with sin, but as a result of an honorable and honest life and a spirit of toleration and kindness for those who differ with us. The missionary knows how valuable such a friend is. One who is a newspaper man, an educator, or a business man, can in public or private write or speak a word in defense of our good citizenship and honorable lives in contrast with those who went astray in the "dark and cloudy day." It helps us to a church, a hall or schoolhouse, and admits us into the homes of people when otherwise we would be barred out. At present the cry is ringing throughout the earth, "Read your Bible." Visible and invisible forces are urging people to read it, and by and by they will begin to ask, "Where can I find a people that believes and practices the teachings of the Bible?" Will we be wise enough to make good use of what God has brought to our very doors, and teach them "the way of God more perfectly"? Or will we do like the Pharisees, wrap our garments (of unrighteousness) close to us, turn our heads away and say, "We are holier than thou. We have no room for you in our conventions and much less in our hearts"? I have no room in my heart for the spirit of intolerance, but I have for the honorable men and women in other churches and those in no church at all. My best friends in my youth were honorable men and women of other churches, and when I became a Latter Day Saint they did not turn from me. I have no plea or apology to make for the hypocrite in ours, or in any other church. It is the good and upright in our church, in other churches and in no church at all, that will make this world better because they have lived in it.

Yours hopefully,

Editors Herald: Will some of the Saints in Eastern Oklahoma write us. We would like to get information in regard to that country.

M. HEMENWAY.

KEOKUK, IOWA, January 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: Perhaps some of you will be glad to know that we are still struggling, trying to keep the work going on in this place. We are few in number, but we are whole hearted in the work. There is a happy band of Saints here striving to be worthy the name they bear, and press on to the goal, hoping and praying for the reward that is awaiting the faithful. Oh, that we may all hold out faithful till the last; what a joy it will be. We are all here to begin the new year. May God spare our lives that we may put forth a greater effort this coming year than we have in the year that has just passed.

Bro. Albert N. Hoxie passed through Keokuk on his way to East Saint Louis, and while here presented the church with a picture of our dear Savior when a boy. We greatly appreciate the gift. All the Saints join in thanking the brother who remembered us so kindly. Elder James McKiernan was in Keokuk the first Sunday of the new year and gave us one of his excellent sermons. We were all delighted to see Brother McKiernan again and hope we may see him in our midst every now and then during the coming year. We are always glad to see any of the elders. We would be glad to see Bro. A. C. Anderson walk in sometime. We miss him and his family. The Saints often speak of him and wonder if he will ever be with us again. May the Lord bless him and his for he is surely deserving of a blessing. He was always faithful and long suffering to the cause, and never shirked a duty.

We had a fairly good Christmas entertainment. The children did exceedingly well, and enjoyed their treat which was rightly merited. I was pleased to read a letter in the HERALD from dear Aunt Lizzie Smith. May God help and comfort her, is my prayer. It does not seem possible that dear Uncle Alexander is no more. He has gone to a well-earned reward, and is at rest, sweet rest. He was a good husband and father. Oh, that we might all be as well deserving. He never was called but the call he obeyed. He surely did what he could, and will be among the ones that will hear the Master say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

May we all meet in the great beyond, where there will be no more sorrow or death, but life eternal.

Your sister,

ALICE PETERS.

CANAL DOVER, OHIO, January 2, 1910.

My Dear Editors and Readers: I was prompted by the good Spirit to write and tell the great goodness God has blessed me with. I am surely an amateur in writing, which is easy to be seen. The fact of the matter is we are all amateurs in some way or other. Daily do we come in contact with new things.

I am of German descent and of a very determined nature. When I first heard of this church I was wrongly informed, and I remarked that it was a pity that some one did not blow the little church up. Some of the Saints talked good and kind and invited me to investigate this work. The elder stated that I could earn a thousand dollars very nicely if I showed them wherein the church taught anything contrary to the Bible. I always loved justice. I loved God and his Son as best I knew how, and the thought struck me, I am going to investigate and then condemn, which I thought would require but a short time, never thinking I would accept the blessed message of the angel brought to man. God, in showing his wonderful love in sending this message with his selected angel, recalls to us the same love he showed nineteen hundred years ago when the blessed babe was born in the manger, and the angel spoke to the shepherds glad tidings, joy to the world. Why should we not repeat these same words when the truth came in the latter days.

I left no stones for almost three years. What a battle! Stubbornness, worldliness, false conception, battling with whom? Good Spirit; thanks to God daily, yearly, yes; I hope to thank God and his Son through the countless ages of eternity. I finally was thoroughly convinced that this was the true church, but I was too cowardly to go into the water. I thought, What will the people say and how will I look?

Sunday morning, June 28, 1896, while crossing the river, the still small voice came to my ear and spoke these words: "He that is ashamed of me, of him will I be ashamed in the hereafter." I could see myself before the great loyal King on his throne, Jesus Christ at his side, and when I confronted God Almighty, Jesus turned and would not plead for me. Oh, what a feeling! My Savior was ashamed of me. Can I afford to do this? No, never. The voice came to me three times, so I was thoroughly convinced that every day was the day to act. God had his servant ready to do the burying, that good-hearted Apostle Griffiths.

What a wonderful impression such a servant of the Lord made on me. Well, the Lord came to me as men do with the poor camels and relieved me of part of my burden so I could get through the gate (baptism). How the tears came, and my heart burned within my bosom when the elders laid their hands on me for the bestowing of the Holy Ghost, and the blotting out or the remission of my sins. I surely was a new creature, a babe in the kingdom of God, engrafted into the true vine. The grafting has made some growth, as I can testify to this by some of the fruit.

I have had visions, dreams, etc., which I would gladly relate, if I thought the editors would want to waste the time in publishing them. I do not want to waste too much time as I am just a little afraid that the wastebasket will receive the message before the typesetter gets it. I could not blame anyone but myself. This grand paper is conducted by brainy men, spiritually blessed, and they can not use all kinds of material. The result will be justice.

Just one more thought or event I must speak of, and that is this: I prayed that God would show me the exact and precise dividing line between good and evil. Especially outside of our church one minister will say, You can drink moderately and it is all right. Another says, Not so. Again, Playing cards in sociable, homelike ways is all right. Another will say, Not so. Again, Chewing and smoking moderately is not wrong. Again, If you dance with nice people in a parlor or a select crowd, no evil in that. Another objects, and many more such problems. I could not master the situation satisfactorily, but the Lord answered my prayer. Now listen, reader, what he said and see how you like it:

"All that is good or leads to good comes from God. All that is evil or leads to evil comes from Satan." The Lord spoke this to me and words can not express the great comfort it is to settle disputes of this nature. See how beautiful! Does drinking, card playing, smoking, and chewing, dancing, etc., lead to evil? Yes, a thousand times yes. From what source do they come? Satan. Write this in your pocket memorandum, upon your blackboard of memory. Think of it daily, use this test daily; test your harsh words, in fact, everything.

My helpmeet and I were isolated for years. By the help of God I have made a few souls happy that are linked into the great chain of truth, and thank God, there are a lot of links that are formed now that must be welded in before long in the chain of truth. My aim is to do good, serve the Master, follow his footsteps as close as I can. My desire is to so live that when mortality takes on immortality I may reach the feet of Jesus Christ, and praise him, honor him, and serve him for ever and ever. All honor, power, and glory be to the Father and the Son and the Holy Ghost. May the goodness of the HERALD increase in a two-fold way every issue, so that the brightness of its light will reach the end of the earth, is my prayer.

A. B. KLAR.

JUNIATA, NEBRASKA, January 16, 1910.

Dear Herald: You are a welcome visitor to our home every week, and we would miss you should you fail to come, for we love to read your columns. We are among the isolated members, having only heard one sermon in about five years, that being by Elder Porter, of Wilber, Nebraska. We had him come and stay over Sunday on his way from Grand Island to Fairfield, Nebraska, and bless our three dear little children, Llye, aged seven; Walter, five; and Helen, three years. My wife and her sister, Mrs. Bay, and myself are the only Saints here that we know of, or near here, although there are some Saints at or near Shelton, about twenty miles from us; but we are not acquainted with them. By a little effort I managed to secure the country Methodist church Sunday evening for him to preach, but it was a stormy night and there were not many out to hear, and he offered to preach the next evening and took a vote, but there were no hands raised in favor and I was told afterwards that they were afraid of our doctrine, but they have never heard it. We expected to have him come again this winter, but the weather and roads have been so very bad all winter we gave it up. I have distributed some pamphlets and am saving some HERALDS to hand out, and have talked with some, but they seem prejudiced more or less and do not treat us as before.

We expect to move out about eight miles northeast of Big Springs, Deuel County, Nebraska, in the edge of Keith County, the first of March, and would like to know if there is a branch near there, also from Saints at North Platte, Nebraska, if there are any living there. We are trying to live so that we may be worthy of a place in the first resurrection when our Lord comes to reign on earth, and hope that we may be able to bring some precious sheaves.

Ever praying for the welfare of Zion, and that we may be able before Christ comes to be located in the bounds of Zion, which is our aim.

Your brother and sister in the faith,
J. B. AND JENNIE E. SCUDDER.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, January 26, 1910.

Editors Herald: Please note the following mistakes in the article, "The socialistic church": Page 30, instead of Philip Snowden, M. B., read "M. P.," meaning Member of Parliament. Page 31, instead of twenty-four pence a week, read, "Twenty-four shillings per week."

Yours sincerely,
JOHN W. RUSHTON.

TORONTO, ONTARIO, January 14, 1910.

Dear Herald: How wonderfully true are the lines of that well-known hymn, "We must not wait, for now the time is ours, and while I wait another waits for me."

Nothing whatever having appeared in your valuable columns during the present year, anent the somewhat changeful and remarkable developments which have taken place both spiritually and politically in this city, though I have waited, apparently in vain, for other pens to assume the initiative, and take up the story of Bishop R. C. Evans' labors and experiences of late in the work committed to his hands.

One of the most intensely interesting writers of recent fiction has remarked, with not less truth than emphasis, that at times events seem to move along with such regularity (not to say with such even monotony) that the historian is positively at a loss for readable matter. By and by a slight change comes, when presto! the entire current of the smooth and babbling brook is forthwith turned into a raging torrent and a veritable maelstrom of whirling and infuriated motion.

The even and gentle tenor of happenings in Toronto has now been broken in upon by forces which, though only of recent origin and development, bid fair to rival Alladin's quick changing experiences and adventures. It may not be known by all your readers, but is nevertheless very interesting to record that Toronto (formerly called York) is in reality a portion of the ancient territory of the Mississauga Indians (a branch of the once mighty and powerful Ojibways) and the word Toronto means "place of meeting." The old fort which formerly stood upon the site of the exhibition park was the old time meeting place of the French traders and trappers on the one hand and the Indians who came from incredible distances to meet those merchants, and to trade their bear skins, furs, fox, martin, mink, buffalo, otter, and beaver skins, for the common necessities and commodities of commerce and civilization.

The HERALD continues to be the welcome and looked-for visitor it has ever been during the writer's somewhat lengthy experience. May its shadow never grow less. To this end let us all fervently trust and hope that its next editorial removal will not be to the North Pole! For in that case as our beloved senior Editor pointed out in his able article concerning Doctor Cook, it would have no shadow at all. Bye the bye, I have strong reasons to believe that Doctor Cook is not the impostor that some persons and some periodicals, too, would have us believe. The mere fact that a scientific man of highstrung and nervous temperament can not stand the enormous and perpetual strain of public lectures, or of newspaper reporters who will not allow him either peace or privacy and has gone away to secure a much needed rest, is in my humble opinion no reason at all that he is a fraud, a charlatan, or an impostor. It is, however, a proof of the truth of the old English saying, that "When a man's down, every dog barks at him."

Any of your readers who have taken or who will take the trouble to read that magnificent article by that celebrated arctic explorer, Professor Whitney, in the December number of the Outing magazine, and particularly the elaborately reasoned and minute proofs there detailed of the absolutely undoubted veracity of Doctor Cook's statements and calculations, will arise from a close perusal of that article with a more just (not to say generous) estimation of the able and intrepid Doctor Cook and of his circumpolar achievements.

So frequently, indeed, do the HERALD columns blaze and coruscate with sudden and unexpected rays of scintillated thought that one forgets for the time being that it is only the church official organ, and imagines himself perusing the Astronomical Society's Journal, or the transactions of some other learned society, or a magazine for the advancement and dissemination of the physical sciences. Recently some such bright gem dropped from the editorial pen of Bro. Elbert A. Smith, in which he tersely alluded to one of the most profound and sublime mysteries of our mundane existence as mortals, viz, the fact of certain pregnant beams of thought or certain wonderful and epoch making discoveries seeming to, as it were, float in the intellectual atmosphere or ether, and to simultaneously communicate themselves to widely differing points on this mundane planet to the intense surprise of not only the two or it may be three immediately interested parties themselves, but to the entire civilized and cultivated world of science or art. Emanuel Karl, Schiller, Taine, and Heine, four of perhaps the deepest thinkers of the entire German nation, wrote and spoke in strange and startling, eloquent terms of this singular phenomenon known to them as the Leiligist, apparently a subtle but sublime link between our inferior sphere and those higher, nobler, and loftier spheres of the great lights beyond.

La Montaigne, the great French philosopher, said that "the world is the weaker and the poorer for the isolation of any truth, however feeble, or of any discovery, however seemingly irrelevant: for the gathering threads of a tangled and purblind humanity, need to be religiously and devoutly gathered up into that vast web, whose center is called time, but whose circumference is nothing less than eternity."

In the sublime and magnificent science of astronomy how often has it been found that the loss of just one small and seemingly meaningless fact has led the most able and astute observers and mathematicians millions of miles away, into almost endless and fathomless calculations and hypotheses, while all the time the solution of the entire gigantic problem was contained in this one simple fact, which had apparently not the least bearing on the case. Thus the loss of a twentieth part of a second in closing a shutter at the Greenwich Observatory, near London, England, during a total eclipse of the sun many years ago, led to the belief that the sun is distant from the earth many millions of miles farther than it really is.

One more interesting historical fact upon this sublimest of sciences and I will draw my letter to a conclusion. I read in the pages of the Astronomical Journal for January, 1909, upon the authority of no less an astronomer than the late lamented Sir S. Newcomb, of the great Chicago Observatory, that since 1820, a year greatly engraven upon the minds of Latter Day Saints as the period of the angel's first visit to the boy prophet, the moon's motion has been marked by rapid fluctuations, which can be so well traced upon the plate of the micromometer that no description is necessary. Previously the moon's vibrations in longitude could be and had been ascertained and predicted with the utmost accuracy, but the learned observer goes on to say, "I regard these fluctuations as the most enigmatical phenomena presented by the celestial motions, being so difficult to account for by the action of any known causes, that we can not but suspect them to arise from some action in nature hitherto unknown."

The year 1830 was a year (as recorded by the Royal Astronomical Society's Transactions) of such terrible and unprecedented solar activity, as evinced by an outburst of sun spots, almost any one of which could have engulfed a globe nine hundred and seventy-six times the diameter of our earth, while one in particular could have absorbed not only the earth, but Venus, Jupiter, Mercury, Saturn, Uranus, Neptune, and in fact, all the planets of the solar system. This was followed in the year 1833 by such an erratic and awful display of shooting stars that thousands of people, we are told, encamped on Richmond Hill, Regents' Park, Hyde Park, Winchmore Hill, and scores of other open parks in the environs of London, England, firmly and finally convinced that the great day of doom had come. Surely such evidences as these should quench for ever all doubt as to the authority and veracity of Joseph the Seer, as the chosen mouth-piece and representative of Him who hath said: "Before that great and notable day of the Lord come, there shall be signs in the sun, moon and stars"; and I am heartily rejoiced that tens of thousands, nay, tens upon tens of thousands of Latter Day Saints can glory in these great accompanying signs of both the Restorer himself and the restored gospel, and can set to their everlasting seal that, "God is true."

Prayer has been earnestly made for our beloved and respected President, and we look forward to hearing a better account of his physical condition, that all may rejoice together in the prolongation of a life that could be so ill spared, and around whose head cluster so many fragrant and fertile memories of the days of thrice blessed past and days never, never to be forgotten.

I must close wishing my many readers of the HERALD a happy and prosperous New Year. My next letter will deal with some very interesting and remarkable changes and developments in the Lord's work in Toronto, under the firm and able leadership of our beloved and esteemed Bishop R. C. Evans. In bonds of hope, I remain,

Yours in Christ,
F. R. TUBB.

WATERLOO, NEVADA, December 27, 1909.

Editors Herald: Please find clippings from the Carson City paper of the marvelous healing, as reported by Doctor Youkam, the great healer in Los Angeles, California. I attended four of his last meetings and saw the performance, and hundreds of men and women going mad, as it seemed, for some curiosity, and the lame and the blind and the crippled were healed. Some could walk better, some could walk off without any crutches at all; some drunkards said they afterwards had no desire for liquor at all, and tobacco users no desire for tobacco. Some of the blind, however, said they were worse after being administered to. One of my neighbors went for pain and defect in his hearing, but says he is no better. He said he felt the shock when the hand was laid on his head and was better for a short time.

It is a strange thing to me to see some of my neighbors that heard the gospel preached and explained and the gift of the gospel preached to them, who would not repent and be baptized according to the command of Jesus Christ, now go to this healer and be hypnotized and, of course, pay money for it, and not receive forgiveness as the word of God teaches.

I stayed in the city until it was all over, to see the extent of the excitement. His first meeting was in the Methodist church, and the minister assisted him by putting his hands on the shoulders of the sick. There were two men and two women. After his preaching and exhorting, he would call for a contribution for the institution in Los Angeles which they have for the fallen men and women, and the people that wished to contribute would march around in a row. I think there were three to four thousand people. Then the sick would be called to come one at a time, and perhaps two or three hundred would come and be healed. He would touch them on the forehead and say, "Brother, what is your sickness?" They would inform him, and then he would pray, "Oh, God heal the brother [or sister] in Jesus' name." Then he would say, "Go, and be healed." But the cripple he would have to kneel, and the others that were with him, and in all his administering he would have the three that were with him take the sick by the arm and put their hand on their shoulder.

It looked like mockery to me to see so many going in a row like a drove of cattle. They would say they had some simple ailment as rheumatism or a headache, and he would command them to be healed in the name of Jesus Christ. They held the meetings till midnight till hundreds would go and receive the blessing, as they say.

I stayed in the city for some time after his departure on Monday and we must admit that some good was done as some were healed, whether permanently or not, time will tell. On the following evening, Wednesday, I attended the prayer meeting at the Methodist church where the first healing meeting was held, and I thought the church would be crowded and we would have a glorious time of rejoicing, but to my disappointment only a few, say ten or twelve, were there. Oh, where are the converts? I thought. I was at the station to see some of the cripples lifted into the cars, and when I asked some of them about it, they shook their heads and said nothing either good or bad.

D. R. JONES.

PROVO, UTAH, January 16, 1910.

Dear Herald: After a silence of a few months I will endeavor to jot down a few items that might be of interest to your many readers.

I am more than pleased to note in some of the recent letters in the columns of the HERALD that several of the brethren are succeeding in getting a goodly number to accept the gospel. This, perhaps, will help balance the deficit caused by our being able to get but a few to come into the fold of Christ here in the West.

In looking back over our work for the past year it seems as if our mission has been almost devoid of any good here among the people of back-slidden Israel. During the five or six years of missionary work for me it seems that this has so far been of the least value of any during that time. I often wonder if it really pays either in a financial or spiritual way to keep a General Conference appointee here for months and years and accomplish seemingly so little. Had not the Lord said that it was essential to keep proper representatives here, I would be forced from our experience to say withdraw and allow the people to get in that condition of mind when they will want to hear the pure gospel of Christ. I would not have you think that there are not some good-hearted people here, but the majority care little for pure, undefiled religion. We have some among the membership of the Reorganized Church that are lost in the whirlpool of business and pleasure, and take no interest in the church or the work of its officers; but when I think of others that are making a sacrifice and are always found at their post of duty, it spurs me on and I think, No, we can not afford to leave such to starve for spiritual food.

In conversation with one of the leading Gentile physicians of this city, he told me of many cases of immoralities that existed here among those who claim priesthood authority, which, if only half is true as related to me, would be surprising to know how steeped in sin some are.

We spent a week or two with our assistant minister in charge, Brother Hansen, and accompanied him into the southern part of the State, going as far south as Elsinore. At this place I called on Bishop Jensen and asked for the use of the meeting house, but was informed that the Methodist, Baptist, or any denomination except Josephites, were welcomed to the use of their house, and wanted me to understand we could not have it. I asked why discriminate against us when we had many times opened our places of worship and allowed their representatives to occupy, while upon the other hand the people whom they welcome into their homes here are the ones who will not allow them the use of their house outside of Utah. We mentioned the fact that in Lamoni we allowed sixteen of their men to hold conference and also to speak to our people on several occasions, and now we were refused the use of theirs. This seems to me to be returning evil for good. We were told, however, that we "would be allowed to remain in town without being harmed," which, according to the good bishop's estimation, was granting us all the favor which a Josephite deserved. However, we applied for the Methodist chapel and obtained permission to hold forth in it. A good hearing, compared to former efforts, was had and we trust good was effected. Bro. Hans Lorenson and family reside there, also a few other Saints. Brother Lorenson has the respect of all because of his good living, although he is called an apostate. Sometimes it's an honor to be called such and this is one of them.

We were also refused the Mormon meeting house in Monroe and again obtained the use of the Methodist chapel. For some cause our meetings were not as successful as we hoped, judging from former efforts, so we only occupied four nights.

Conditions were such in Provo that we decided to return home to care for the work there, so left Brother Hansen to prosecute the work alone. While we have no reason to believe but what the work would not suffer under his hands, yet we felt like staying and helping what we could. Circumstances made it such that we thought best not to do so.

At our election of officers here in the branch, the old officers were all retained. There are times when the clouds break away and reveal the sunlight, but many times everything seems dark and drear with scarcely a glimmer of hope, and during those gloomy times it takes all the perseverance of our soul to keep the very life from oozing out of us. If our people would rally to our rescue and all put a shoulder to the wheel, either in prayer or by their presence at the house of worship, it would remove a load that no one but those upon whom great responsibility rests can realize. Surrounded by those that are full of the spirit of darkness, those outside of Utah can hardly realize what the Saints here are called upon to endure. When we see all about us large houses of worship and then go to our little chapel with only a handful to carry on the work, in many cases the Sunday school depending on five or six to carry the burden of all, it can not help but bring depression of spirit. If every member was at his post of duty, how light the work would seem to each of us.

May the future reveal brighter prospects and bring many to the knowledge of the truth here in Utah, is our prayer.

In the conflict,

L. G. HOLLOWAY.

LUDLEY, OKLAHOMA, January 19, 1910.

Editors Herald: We are busy trying to find the scattered sheep and are succeeding in a measure. Since last writing we have participated in the organization of a branch at Seiling, also at Alva. Besides this we have kept busy trying to visit and help the scattered ones, visiting and preaching in or near Cherokee, Helena, Fairview (a new opening), Richmond, Seiling, Alva, Canadian Center, Taloga, Aledo (a new opening), Ray, Texmo, and Ludley. At each of these points we have found and tried to feed hungry ones, and the Master has blessed us in the effort.

One of the causes for the dearth of gospel preaching through this State, is that where there has been a member of our local ministry, priest, teacher, deacon, or sometimes an elder, often he has become so busy looking after the affairs of his farm that he has failed to try to meet the obligation put upon him in his ordination and has not lifted up the warning voice. Why should we forget that we are under the responsibility of preaching the word? Even the deacons are to "warn, expound, exhort, and teach, and invite all to come to Christ." (See Doctrine and Covenants 17: 11.)

If these men would all faithfully do this, what a harvest there would be when the elders came along, and some would be gathered by the local brethren. But not the least of the benefits accruing from their efforts would be the development of these brethren. The church would soon have a force of local men who would be laborers who need "not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Our conference of the Western Oklahoma District meets at Davidson, February 19 and 20. Let all the Saints of this district take notice, and the branches as well as the local priesthood send their reports to Sr. E. T. McKnight, Alva, Oklahoma, so that she, as our secretary, may be able to have them in time to make up her report for the conference. Also do not forget that at this conference our delegates to the General Conference should be appointed. And one more item: Shall we have organizations of our Sunday school and Religio work corresponding to the missionary district of western Oklahoma? If so, let us come prepared to take such measures as are necessary to effect them.

Hoping to see many of the Saints at the Davidson conference, also that we may hear good reports from the brethren and the branches,

Yours for the spread of the truth,

A. M. CHASE, President.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

Editors Herald: We have received some special encouragement in our missionary work during this conference year. In May I went to Comstock, Nebraska, to hold a discussion with a Seventh-day Adventist. We arranged to hold six sessions on the day question, and four on the nature of man. I was shown in a dream that he would lose prestige and courage from the beginning, till he would finally quit the debate before it was finished. I saw the fulfillment of this from the first session, till the close of the ninth. When I arose to begin my speech on the ninth session a sister saw a personage dressed in the garb of the ancients walk up the aisle toward the stand and when he got within five or six feet of me, he disappeared from view. I made an effectual speech. My opponent wearied through his reply and sat down when the time was called. He then arose and said he would not continue the debate any longer, saying, "My opponent is muddling the Scriptures in such a way that he is confusing the people, and I will not be a party to it any longer."

We made many friends and the Saints were encouraged. I baptized two married daughters of Bro. C. W. Prettyman. They are excellent young ladies and have entered into the work with a zeal that is commendable. The prospects in Minneapolis are fair and I feel encouraged in the work.

Yours for Zion's triumph,

GLEN EASTON, WEST VIRGINIA, Jan. 19, 1910.

Dear Herald: In looking over your columns we notice in HERALD of January 12, 1910, the address to Glen Easton Saints, which calls our attention to the steep hills in West Virginia and informs us that the hogs in Arkansas are trained; every hog has a slit cut in his ear and when he is on top of the hill he slips his hind leg in the hole in his ear and down he comes rough locked. We were very sad that this was put in the HERALD. We hand our HERALDS to those not members and they say we claim our paper teaches sound doctrine and ask if the Holy Spirit dictated to the brother to write this to the Glen Easton people. Then we feel very flat, for we know we are stung, and we just tell them to ask the one that wrote it, Bro. C. Ed. Miller, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. A little sport for the Glen Easton people, not members of the church, at our expense; that suits them. They say they want him to come and train the Glen Easton people how to do this rough locking. Bro. James Craig says he has been traveling over the West Virginia hills for twenty-five years and got up and down all right, and he will not have his ear slit.

Bro. James Craig preached at the branch last Sunday. Will preach next Sunday at a new schoolhouse, new opening. We ask a place in your paper for publication.

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—The writer of the communication mentioned in the foregoing letter requested us to make absolutely no corrections and to omit nothing from his communications on the ground that he had had experience as an editor and would not send in anything that ought not to go. But it seems again what is one man's meat is another man's poison. How about it, Brother Ed.? It occurs to us that the appearance of Brother Miller's little joke in the HERALD will not cause anyone to apostatize; on the other hand, if the editors had omitted it no one would have suffered. Why not give editors a little leeway? Why, on the other hand, be hypercritical of our brethren who appear in print?]

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Dear Saints' Herald: Entering the mission field again in the summer my first stop on my way to the Pottawattamie District was at Cameron, but failing to meet the one on whom I promised to call, I walked down to our church in town and found the Sunday school in session. At the preaching hour I was asked to preach for them, which I tried to do, being assisted that morning by Bro. Peter Anderson, who has made his home now in Cameron, I understand. I was happy to meet him again. I left on the noon train, and went on to Stewartville where I learned that the Far West reunion was in session, and, of course, the temptation to go on without stopping was too great, and to my surprise when I reached the beautiful camp grounds who should be the speaker but Myron H. Bond. Well, I did feel like saying that the Independence people are to be seen almost everywhere. It certainly was a treat to me to meet so many old acquaintances, and to make new ones. My stay was short, but was one long to be remembered. I preached for them twice, and at the request of the Sunday school workers took up institute work. You certainly have some noble people in Far West. Notable amongst the missionary and local forces present were Bro. H. C. Smith, Charles Harpe, E. L. Hensen, W. Pickering, O. R. Miller, Thomas Howard, D. Powell, D. A. Lewis, E. Corthell, and last but by no means least, Charley Faul, and others I do not remember; but withal a splendid good time was had. I left on Thursday morning for Council Bluffs, where our reunion was in full blast. I enjoyed about three days of it, and that also, like every good thing, came to a close all too soon. Since then I have spent most of my time in the city of Council Bluffs, doing city work. I have done so little, in fact, none to speak of since 1902 and 1903, where we did the last in the city of Glasgow, Scotland. However, we are always willing to adapt ourselves as far as possible to the conditions, whatever they may be. Besides we have preached in McCillard, or near there in the Parker Schoolhouse, and at Underwood, Persia, Hazel Dell, and Weston, where we had the largest attendance I have ever seen at that place, where also we baptized four precious souls as the result of our efforts. I was ably assisted by our estimable Bro. John A. Hansen, son of H. N. Hansen, of the missionary force. On the 11th of September I spoke the words that made Bro. W. M. Self and Sr. Rachel E. Kuykendall companions for life. While Crescent City is the loser, Nebraska City Branch is the gainer.

The Christmas and New Year tide has come and gone, but not without leaving sweet memories of the pleasant time spent with home folks. About the middle of December a number of the good Saints of the branch here thought I ought to go home to spend the holidays, and you may be fully assured I acquiesced in such a movement, they furnishing the means, besides remembering loved ones at home in a substantial way. Many thanks to kind hearts, for withal it helps to lighten the burden and leave behind light spots along the journey of life.

While in Independence it was my privilege to attend the Interstate Institute given by the auxiliaries of the Independence Stake. To say I enjoyed it does not do it justice, for to me it was both profitable and educational, and I hope it will not be the last of such gatherings by our people. Much credit is due the brethren and sisters that so nobly assisted in the work, as well as those not of our faith, especially Miss Mabel L. Bailey and Mr. L. G. A. Copley, of Kansas City. In fact, they were all just fine.

The weather has been zero much of the time this winter, and snow is in evidence everywhere, and now we are hoping to do some work in the west part of the city in a hall that we had considerable trouble in obtaining, but at last all being well we will commence a series of meetings at Twenty-fourth street and avenue B. I also understand our brothers and sisters in Omaha are making a special effort to reach the people by hiring the Lyric Theater for a series of meetings, beginning February 13. Bro. J. W. Wight and Heman C. Smith are advertised as the speakers. Our district convention and conference convene on February 11, 12, and 13. We look for a spiritual time together. Bro. J. W. Wight was here in December and preached for us on Sunday evening, and what liberty he did enjoy in presenting the bread of life! We all need more of it, to enable us to perform our duty to both God and man.

May our heavenly Father hasten his work in his own time, and give me wisdom to do the right, to become a more proficient servant. With best wishes to all the Israel of God.

ROSLYN, WASHINGTON, January 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: I see no letters from this place, and feeling to express my gratitude for your weekly visits and good instruction, I pen these few lines. I hope the Lord will continue to bless the writers and contributors to the HERALD, Ensign, Autumn Leaves, Zion's Hope and all the publications, that cheer the soul and give comfort. We can not keep pace with the progress of the work without them. We have some soul-cheering contributions from the pens of such writers as J. W. Rushton, E. A. Smith, T. W. Williams, C. Derry, and many others, too numerous to mention, and we feel to say to the brethren and sisters, go on in the good work, for your reward is sure if you continue to the end.

I am glad that Zion is beginning to put on her beautiful garments and the time is near at hand when she will be redeemed and glorified if her subjects are faithful to their covenant and trustful to her God-appointed agents. Let all our faces be turned Zionward so we can return with songs of everlasting joy.

"How will the Saints rejoice to tell!
And count their sufferings o'er;
When they upon Mount Zion dwell,
And view the landscape o'er."

I came from Iowa to Washington to see a brother that I had not seen for about twenty years. I had stomach trouble and I thought I should die soon and prayed to that end, but by strict dieting, change of climate, and a free use of olive oil, I got better, commenced to work, and sent for my family. They came and prospects looked bright, but lo! my cup of bitterness was not yet full and I had to drink it, for on the 21st of October, 1908, I lost one of my eyes by accident. The other eye had been damaged before, so it left me in darkness to that extent that I could not follow my trade; but notwithstanding all these ills, we have paid for a little home here, but would much rather it was in one of Zion's stakes.

The Saints here have a neat little church, although their numbers are small, because of iniquity. Nevertheless we hold Sunday school at 10 o'clock Sundays and social meetings at 11; Religio Monday evenings, and I think it would improve our spiritual condition if we could have midweek prayer meetings and preaching Sunday evenings. There is room here and a good location for a lively and energetic elder. We have two, but they think they can not preach, so do not try. My eyesight is so bad that I can not take the lead, but am willing to help all I can.

I desire to see this latter day work roll on and am willing to spend all my time and means to that end, if it is only the widow's mite, and when we serve God with all our might, mind, and strength, and subtract all that from our worldliness, there will be nothing left but the genuine article. I am living in hope that God will remove the scales from my eyes and that I shall see clearly again to perform my duty as a father and teacher in Israel, and ask all the Saints that read this, to pray that I may exercise faith and that God may heal me. Letters of encouragement from others solicited. As ever, yours for the conflict and Zion's redemption,

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI, January 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: I read the letter with pleasure in the last HERALD from Bro. S. F. Cushman. My mind went back some years ago when I held forth at Jonesport, some times with a full house. The tidal wave of opposition was against us and I would think some times that my efforts at that place were only valuable time thrown away, but the mind of the good Spirit to me was, Be still and murmur not. The Spirit said to me to tell Bro. Joseph Lakeman, from Grandmanan, N. B., to stay there a few days and he would baptize some and organize a branch. I did so and left the city for Rockland, one hundred miles away. In a few days I got a letter from him stating that he had baptized several and organized the branch. Most of those fourteen were full-grown fellows who meant business. Brother Cushman, these are some of the little boys that I then preached to, and how glad I am to learn of their willingness to fall in line and work for the Master. I verily hope they will be a great help to you while you are there. Drill them as good obedient soldiers for the battlefield.

Glad they were so thoughtful of the preacher's birthday, and as you want to know how to get more birthdays, I may help you on that line a little. Bro. J. C. Foss has two birthdays in this year. The 8th day of January I had a birthday. Sixty-six years ago I came to this earth and I haven't left it yet. Next March, the 11th day, I have another birthday. J. C. will then be forty-one years in the kingdom of God. See if your "born again" day comes in the same year; if so, set the dollars to jingling and eat the cake.

While I was at Kennebec last summer I sent for about twenty dollars' worth of books. I hope you'll beat that at Jonesport. I feel very thankful to the Master on high that you are still holding the Sabbath school, so efficiently carried on by Sr. E. M. Walker nearly forty years ago. I impressed upon the mind of Sister Walker to organize a Sabbath school. Some were opposed to it because they had a union school in full blast then, but by organizing Eliza broke up the so-called "union" and established a Sunday school upon the true gospel foundation, which has nobly stood the test, ever since. God bless the right.

GLADSTONE, ILLINOIS, January 22, 1910.

Dear Herald and Beloved Saints Throughout the World; Greeting: I am interested in the latter day work, though somewhat isolated. In reading the publications of the church I get so full that I think I must write occasionally, but if you see after examining the tenor of my letters that it will not, in your judgment, strengthen or edify the Saints, cast it into the waste basket. I hope to be able to do more for the church both temporally and spiritually than I have hitherto done. I wish to communicate through your columns to the readers of your columns that which I have been shown, and through my weakness in writing will make a declaration as correctly as I can. In Matthew 24: 30 the Savior said, And then the sign of the Son of Man shall appear in heaven, and all the tribes of the earth shall mourn. Now the query, What is the sign, and what its significance to the man of God. It is not Halley's comet, but it is the sign of the Son of Man." I understand that every eye shall see it, even the seven thousand men of Israel that God hath reserved unto himself.

The Prophet Micah says in Micah 5: 7, 8, And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, and so on, and the Apostle Paul says in Romans 11, After the fullness of the Gentiles be come in, so all Israel shall be saved, for as it is written out of Zion shall come the Deliverer and shall turn ungodliness away from Jacob. Now the Lord foresaw that Jacob would need delivering or he would not have said so, "for this is my covenant unto them when I will take away their sins. As concerning the gospel they were made enemies for your sakes, but as touching the election they are the beloved for the Father's sake; for the gifts and callings of God are without repentance." Who are the elect but those whom God hath reserved unto himself; who has never been bound to the wing of Baal or the god of this world. The Prophet Nephi foresaw by the spirit of prophecy this very thing that I am writing about and speaks of the time when the work of the Father would commence among the remnant of his people, and also the Patriarch Jacob in Genesis 49th chapter.

Brethren, let us condescend to men of low estate, for the Lord alone shall be exalted; no flesh shall glory in his presence. Pray for me that I may be able to stand. Love to all the Israel of God.

J. L. RUST.

EAST JORDAN, MICHIGAN, January 21, 1910.

Editors Herald: Many times in the past I have been led by the Spirit to write to the HERALD, but have neglected it. While studying my Religio lesson I was led to pray for my brothers and sisters in this part of the vineyard, and also for the Saints in general, that we may be on the watchtower. Jesus said in his word, "Watch and pray," and, dear Saints, if we would do this, we would not follow after so many Nehors as did the Nephites of old, but we would be ever found at the post of duty and would be more like Alma who left the judgment seat to devote his entire time to the spiritual interests of the people. I have a desire to come up higher and be found doing those things that will be pleasing to my heavenly Father and receive the crown laid up for his faithful Saints. May God's Spirit be ours to enjoy, is my earnest prayer in Jesus' name.

MRS. DORA MCKINNON.

MAPLETON, KANSAS, January 24, 1910.

Dear Editors Herald: I will write a few lines this morning. I commenced meetings here at our home schoolhouse the 2d of this month, and have been preaching ever since. Brother Jenkins came and helped us for ten days and gave us some fine sermons, but his work called him to move on, so I continued alone for another week, and yesterday (Sunday) we led five into the water, all adults but one, our closest neighbor for ten years. They are some of the best people of the neighborhood. There are ten or eleven more near the kingdom, so the meeting goes on. This is the fourth week; do not know when it will stop; will continue as long as people want to be baptized.

LEE QUICK.

First Kansas City Branch.

Arrangements have just been made with Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, Ontario, to conduct our annual two-week series of mission services which are to be held from March 13 to 27, inclusive.

A publicity committee consisting of Mrs. W. R. Pickering, Mrs. O. H. Riggs, Mr. D. H. Blair, F. P. Hitchcock, and myself have been appointed, whose duty shall be to see that the meetings are thoroughly advertised. Last year we expended about one hundred dollars in advertising and this year we will do just a little better and extend the work at a cost of perhaps one hundred and twenty-five dollars. One of our methods is to get a list of the relatives and friends from all members and friends of the church and to send them advertising matter concerning the meetings, and we keep account of those who come and follow them up through the year with invitations to our Sunday school and special occasions. A few evenings before the meetings begin we rally the hosts of Religians and go out two by two to the homes around the church with one suitable tract and an announcement of the coming services, a list of subjects to be spoken upon, and a hearty invitation to attend. Last year we visited over one thousand homes in one evening and such work brings some results.

My name was presented to the Ministers' Alliance of Kansas City, for membership by Doctor Small, of the Christian Church, and was referred to the executive committee for consideration and report one month hence.

Comments on John W. Rushton's Article, "The Socialistic Church."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

Thomas A. Crowley, Toronto, Ontario: Since becoming a subscriber to the HERALD I have felt it a duty which I owe to you to say that I have been more than pleased with its contents, and each week look forward with eagerness to its arrival, and heartily recommend it to all Latter Day Saints who are not already subscribers.

Indeed I feel to say that the knowledge and information gained from reading one well-written article entitled, "The socialistic church," by John W. Rushton, which has appeared in the last two issues, is well worth the subscription price for the whole year. I gave my copies to an acquaintance of strong socialistic views, who said they were the best he had ever read on the subject, and who sent them to a member of our Dominion legislature for his perusal.

T. E. Harmon, Beardstown, Illinois: The writer begins by saying: "By what method or means shall the ideal be effected? Christianity has the only practical solution of the problem."

I ask has the ideal been effected? Has the problem been solved? If not, why not? Christianity says, We propose to change your character and that will change your conditions; socialists say, We propose to change your condition and that will change your character. The gospel is of two-fold purpose; it must deal with man's present life as well as the future. If he will not change for the blessings of this life, how can he change for a future life that he can not see? The gospel appeals to one man's brain. He receives it with one object in view. He wants to preach to man and tell him what God is going to do for him in the next world. It appeals to another's heart, and prompts him to help his fellow-man and show him like opportunities and possibilities, that are in his reach to change his present condition. Here we have two converts both springing from the same place, a socialist and a preacher.

The socialist, like Israel of old, has become subjected to blindness in part and can not see his way clear. The preacher in trying to solve the problem, has received an impediment in his speech; men can not understand him, he wonders why the people do not come to hear him the second time. The statesman reels and staggers like a drunken man, not with strong drink, but with the spirit of the times. The politician has exhausted his lungs and bankrupted his brain. The college professor has splattered a volume of paper with ink and worn out his pen. And yet the problem remains unsolved. Justice and mercy are two important factors to be considered in dealing with man. God never deals out judgment to man without mercy. Judgment comes from the brain and mercy from the heart. If a man is constituted properly he is a Christian socialist.

Saint Peter stood in the midst of a little band when they said let us have all things common, put our wealth in one common treasury; but Peter and his little band went down under the anti-socialist spirit. The church can not hope for better conditions within until conditions are better without. There must be a change externally as well as internally. God's plan is all right, but he has put it in man's hands to deal with external things and make conditions better, that the church may be more perfect, but the unsocial Christian refuses to act his part because an unChristian socialist is on the stage, and he proposes to put the whole job on the unfair list.

The writer says: "The method that is favored by the socialist is the violent change of conditions." I say no socialist says that man must adjust himself to the new conditions as they exist at present. The entire civilized world is knit together by telephone, telegraph, cable, railroad, steamship, and printing press; all nations have been brought close together; individualism is no more. Let us turn right face about and look forward and not backward, a self-destructive method.

The writer further says: "It is clear that before such laws could be enacted the work of education must precede every other effort." He would have us believe that man must be educated to stand above the law, before the enactment of the law. A law is for transgressors, only it must be binding and compulsory to be of any effect. Again he says: "In addition to the enormous expenditure in sustaining a force of men to keep the unwilling ones in line, there would be danger of treachery." What does your history show in the expense bill of maintaining a standing army to keep the unwilling ones in line with the old laws that emerged from the ponderous machinery that you spoke of? You say: "The laws applied to the drink problem have been a dismal failure. No man can be made sober by an act of parliament." The law applied to the drink problem is not intended to make sober men out of drunkards, but to keep sober men, sober and practical women and children.

Again, "All history is the record of man's power to make his environment and manufacture his circumstances." It may be so with an intelligent aristocracy, but the reverse with an ignorant democracy. Still further: "The socialist is clamoring for better hours, better education. It is all right, but the socialist is not going at it in the right way." All right, sir, you show us how. We are from Missouri. Just such people have been telling us how for eighteen hundred years and the problem is yet unsolved.

Again: "Is there any evidence that better hours will produce better character, that better hours will increase the efficiency of the laborer, that education will minimize crime." There are volumes of evidence if one wishes to look for it.

During the former administration of Lord Salisbury as premier for England, it was once charged that the tendency of the government was socialistic, that there was a tendency for the government to do things which always had and should be done by the individuals. He was reported as saying in answer to this that it was not a question of socialism, but a question of business. A question whether a community acting collectively has a right to do all things necessary for the welfare of its members that an individual has. I will refer you to Glasgow before and after the municipal and governmental ownership for all the evidence you want. It is so plain you can see it with your eyes shut. Yet we can not compare socialism to a city like Glasgow, as it must get all its crude material from outside.

According to the standard authorities, socialism is an ideal state founded on justice, and in which the benefits of modern inventions and of monopoly shall be enjoyed by all instead of being controlled by a few, and used to make themselves masters of the many. What right has an individual to deny a community of a right that he would claim for himself? The term socialism is used as a division only by the ignorant or servile. The thorn in socialism is found by the intelligent aristocracy just where he wants to sit down, and it makes him stand up and take notice.

Again the writer says: "Have we encouragement to believe that by placing the unfortunate inhabitants of the East End slums in the gilded mansions of Mayfair and Picadilly, that this change would produce better characters in these slums?" It is not the aim of socialism to make Saints out of slummers. We leave that for the preacher to do. Socialists propose to take care of a class of people that is more useful to society. We are not so much concerned about the slummers as the aristocracy from which you make your comparison.

W. E. Peak, Minneapolis, Minnesota: The manifestations of intellectual and spiritual growth are encouraging. The completion of the Sanitarium and the progress made in the organization of the Order of Enoch strengthen our faith in the final triumph of Zion.

The Lord works with mankind to bring about conditions for the accomplishment of his purposes. He inaugurates certain movements among the nations to prepare the people for the gospel. Satan works to oppose. Both have their emissaries. Can we always tell them apart?

If we had lived during the formation of our Government, how many of us would have recognized the hand of God in its organization and development? How many of us would have discerned the inspiration of the Almighty in the Constitution? It is possible that some of us would have seen some wonderful mistakes in that document, and would have felt that it was our duty to oppose it with all our strength. If God "raised up wise men" to "establish the Constitution" (Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10), who raised up powerful men to oppose it? I am too far removed from sectarianism to believe that God used to rule among the nations, but that he has entirely ceased working among them now.

In a late HERALD the editor gives us to understand that the columns of this valuable paper will be open to a limited number of articles for the discussion of one of these worldly movements, known as socialism. This seems to be wise, as the movement has affected some of our members in a few localities. The infusion of socialistic ideas among us filled pages of the HERALD with articles on "all things common," and led to the attack on section 106.

While the old ship of Zion was somewhat jostled by it, the overwhelming power of Jehovah brought the truth clearer to his people, and good was accomplished by the Lord restating the fact, that "the application of the law as stated by the Bishopric should be acceded to" in the following manner:

"The church has been directed to accede to the rendition of the Bishopric with respect to the temporal law; and until such heed is paid to the word which has been given, and which is in accordance with other revelations given to the church, which had been before given, the church can not receive and enjoy the blessings which have been looked for when Zion should be fully redeemed."—Section 129: 8.

This indicates that the "great economic truths" that some have tried to fasten on the church are calculated to prevent the progress of the work instead of advancing it.

In the lengthy articles on socialism in the late HERALDS we have the object of socialism thus defined: "In general it has for its ends the destruction of inequalities in social conditions by economic transformation."

No one should object to this. It is as near our position as the Holiness preacher's definition of "perfection." We believe, "Be ye therefore perfect," as much as our Holiness brethren, and possibly we could find definitions given by them that would define our belief as clearly as the above definition does on the question of inequality; but who would claim that the Holiness preacher was helping to spread the gospel?

This equality or glorified condition is to be brought about in the following way: "Here in plain words is the 'principle' or root idea on which all socialists agree: that the country and everything in the country shall belong to the whole of the people (nation), and shall be used by the people and for the people."

This eliminates all personal ownership. No one shall have any private property. Everything belongs to the whole of the people (nation). This is as far from "Christianity" as the East is from the West. As opposite to the gospel as night is to day. It banishes for ever the hope of prophets and the teachings of inspiration that "they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree; and none shall make him afraid."—Micah 4: 4.

Is it any wonder that when Saints are imbued with this socialistic idea that they should teach that the church ought to own all the property?

This socialistic plan to remove "inequality," or to bring about what they call "equality" is as far from "Christianity" or the gospel plan, as the Holiness method is to reach perfection. It would for ever remove the possibility of the Lord giving inheritances, which has been the hope of the Saints ever since the gospel was restored by angelic ministrations. Inheritances made "secure" by being "deeded unto him." (Section 51: 1.) An inheritance that he can retain even if he is expelled from the church; and he can sell it or trade it if he so desires. (Section 101: 4.)

Individual ownership of inheritances and stewardships, giving individual responsibility, is Christianity. (Section 101: 1-12.) What should we call the opposite? This equality does not mean that all will be equal by all being poor, that is, by all having everything they own taken from them and given to the church or nation, but, "you are to be equal or in other words, you are to have equal claims on the properties for the benefit of managing the concerns of your stewardships, every man according to his wants and his needs, inasmuch as his wants are just."—Section 81: 4.

No thought of all being so poor that none will own anything, nor that all will own an equal amount of property. But each will have a "stewardship," and he will have an "equal" claim on the "treasury" of the Order of Enoch for help in times of need to enable him to manage his stewardship. (Section 101: 12, 13.)

There has been considerable advice given as to how the financial affairs of the church should be managed, but the revelation given last spring gives us to understand that we can trust the Lord to work through his properly ordained officers in the temporal department, as well as in other departments of the church.

"The making of friends who are real friends is the best token we have of a man's success in life."

"Keep a good watch over your own conscience, and you will not be likely to judge others rashly."

News From Branches

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

We are having steady winter weather; good sleighing. This town became famous on account of starting the meat strike. It may interest some to know that many of our most active members are confirmed meat strikers. About one third of the average attendance at Sunday school is showing signs of increased activity and vigor since the new year. There is an effort being put forth for a first grade school. We have just commenced regular meetings of officers and teachers and a normal class. If the school keeps up its present effort it will get the banner again. What is needed most is a class or two of young people, such as have not been attending. Let us all unite in this work and build up such a class as this city ought to have. The Religio has shown a larger attendance lately. We have placed in the entry a board to put notices on and a rack to hold tracts, so that nonmembers can help themselves. Our place of meeting is centrally located and is on Wade Park avenue and Seventy-first street. Wade Park avenue cars stop at the door. Visitors tell us we have a nice meeting place.

RAILROAD RATES—GENERAL CONFERENCE.

Because of larger attendance being required under reduced passenger tariffs, which we are unable to guarantee, the passenger associations decline to grant reduced rates to the April Conventions and General Conference.

An effort is being made to obtain rates covering several States in the Central West. If able to secure anything will give due notice.

Because of the difficulty in getting delegations together traveling en route to conference, the undersigned has not attempted to provide special arrangements for delegations to travel together from given meeting points en route east or west, leaving such arrangements to delegations themselves.

VOLUME 57

LAMONI, IOWA, FEBRUARY 23, 1910

NUMBER 8

Editorial

"THE GOSPEL UNCHANGEABLE."

The leader in the Liahona, the Elders' Journal, the organ of the Utah Mormon Church at Independence, Missouri, of February 12, 1910, is from the pen of Elder Lewis W. Larsen, president of the Vermont conference of the Utah Church. It appears under the caption, "The gospel unchangeable."

From it we take the following excerpts:

The cardinal principles of the primitive Church of Christ were, Faith, Repentance, Baptism by Immersion, and the Laying on of Hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, by those "called of God as was Aaron." . . .

We are told that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and to-day and for ever. Then the principles of eternal life which are his principles must be unalterable. We have no account of him or his apostles ever sanctioning the least deviation from the original plan, but the New Testament is replete with denunciation of gospel perverters. . . .

A gospel that could save souls nineteen hundred years ago can—unaltered—save souls to-day. All other creeds have empty forms of Godliness, and deny the power thereof.

The principles of pure Christianity are truth, and truth is eternal. Any attempt on the part of man to change or omit a single principle or ordinance that Christ revealed is subversive to the spiritual interests of humanity.

The gospel plan is an infinite revelation. At present we know but the fundamentals. It will for ever unfold to our view as we acquire greater spiritual insight and a fuller comprehension of truth. We will go on unto perfection throughout the countless agés, but the rudiments or first principles will retain their validity and their saving virtue for ever. . . . But true Christianity, the great institution of the Savior of men, was perfected from before the foundation of the world. Do we not have here an infallible test for genuineness? Any church that bears the slightest evidence of departure from the scriptural standard is a spurious counterfeit of the original and any man who advocates any such thing as evolution of the primitive gospel proclaims himself an impostor. . . .

As there is "one Lord, one faith, one baptism," so there is one authorized Church of Christ, and only one. If you aspire to salvation in the kingdom of God, you must be duly admitted into his church.

But to find his church is the problem. There are hundreds of claimants, but only one that he would recognize and call his own. If you are a sincere searcher after truth give the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints a fair consideration. Test its claims by comparing it with the Church of Jesus Christ of former day saints. If they are identical in organization, doctrine, and authority, be assured you have found the one divinely appointed religious institution.

In the light of these statements made in this leader, it is really interesting to read some things which the Lord has said to the church in these last days, beginning as early as July, 1828:

Behold, this is my doctrine: Whosoever repenteth and cometh unto me, the same is my church; whosoever declareth more or less than this, the same is not of me, but is against me; therefore, he is not of my church.—Doctrine and Covenants 3: 16, Lamoni edition, 1905; Utah edition, sec. 10.

Again in April, 1830:

Behold, I say unto you, that all old covenants have I caused to be done away in this thing, and this is a new and an everlasting covenant; even that which was from the beginning. Wherefore, although a man should be baptized an hundred times, it availeth him nothing; for you can not enter in at the straight gate by the law of Moses, neither by your dead works; for it is because of your dead works, that I have caused this last covenant, and this church to be built up unto me; even as in days of old. Wherefore, enter ye in at the gate, as I have commanded, and seek not to counsel your God. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenants, Lamoni edition, sec. 20; Utah edition, sec. 22.

Again the Lord said, in October, 1830:

Repent, repent and prepare ye the way of the Lord, and make his paths straight; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand; yea, repent and be baptized every one of you, for the remission of your sins; yea, be baptized even by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost. Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, This is my gospel, and remember that they shall have faith in me, or they can in no wise be saved; and upon this Rock I will build my church; yea, upon this rock ye are built, and if ye continue, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; and ye shall remember the church articles and covenants to keep them; and whoso having faith you shall confirm in my church, by the laying on of the hands, and I will bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost upon them. And the Book of Mormon, and the Holy Scriptures, are given of me for your instruction.—Doctrine and Covenants 32: 2, 3, Lamoni edition; sec. 33, Utah edition.

Again the Lord said, in 1831:

And this is my gospel: repentance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth the peaceable things of the kingdom.—Doctrine and Covenants 39: 2, Lamoni edition; sec. 39, Utah edition.

He commanded the church to go from New York to Ohio in 1831, and promised that he would give them his law to govern his church; and when they had gathered at the Ohio, in February, 1831, he gave them his law, and from that we quote as follows, which is strikingly remarkable under the caption of this leading article in the Liahona, from which we have quoted. Let everybody open their ears and hear:

And again, the elders, priests, and teachers of this church shall teach the principles of my gospel which are in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, in the which is the fullness of the gospel.—Sec. 42, par. 5; same in Utah edition.

One item of the law referred to is as follows: "Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shalt cleave unto her and none else."—Section 42; paragraph 7; same section in Utah edition.

In order to show that the Lord has made no mistake in what we have already quoted from the revelation, we quote again from the same law, clearly and unmistakably establishing the governing influence of the Scriptures upon the people to be known as the church:

Thou shalt take the things which thou hast received, which have been given unto thee in my Scriptures for a law, to be my law, to govern my church; and he that doth according to these things, shall be saved, and he that doeth them not shall be damned, if he continue.—Sec. 42, par. 16; same section in Utah edition.

In the same year, 1831, a commandment was given unto the church at Kirtland, Ohio, in which a certain rule of conduct was prescribed for the members of the church; and in which the eternal and unchangeable character of the gospel and all its adjuncts were clearly pointed out. As before, let every one open his ears that he may hear:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.—Sec. 49, par. 3; same section in Utah edition.

In 1831, the church was commanded to observe the church covenants and church articles to do them, and it is fair and reasonable to believe that when the Lord gave the commandment respecting the gospel and signified its unchangeable character, as the leader in the Liahona asserts, he intended the rules prescribed in the church articles and covenants to be of the same immutable and unchangeable character.

Let no man think that he is ruler, but let God rule him that judgeth, according to the counsel of his own will; or, in other words, him that counseleth or sitteth upon the judgment seat. Let no man break the laws of the land, for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet. Behold, the laws which ye have received from my hand are the laws of the church, and in this light ye shall hold them forth. Behold, here is wisdom.—Sec. 58, par. 5; sec. 58 in Utah edition.

The Lord Jesus Christ, in the sublime hour in which he laid his soul bare before his Father in the memorable prayer which shows the complete unity between the Father and the Son, invested his words to the disciples with all the significance and power possible for him, and every disciple, from that time until time should be no more, should hearken and pay heed to what the man Christ Jesus then bore witness: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth."—John 17: 17. We have here the key to the solution to the question which the writer in the Liahona has stated with regard to the eternal character of truth. Let us now find what the divine one said, with respect to what he had been proclaiming unto his disciples:

Now they have known that all things whatsoever thou hast given me are of thee. For I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me. . . . I have given them thy word; and the world hath hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world.—John 17: 7, 8, 14.

As a corollary of testimony concerning the doctrine, we quote from the Book of Nephi in reference to the visit which Jesus made to this land, and the institution of the gospel at the time of that visit:

Behold, verily, verily I say unto you, I will declare unto you my doctrine. And this is my doctrine, and it is the doctrine which the Father hath given unto me; and I bear record of the Father, and the Father beareth record of me, and the Holy Ghost beareth record of the Father and me, and I bear record that the Father commandeth all men, everywhere, to repent and to believe in me; and whoso believeth in me, and is baptized, the same shall be saved; and they are they who shall inherit the kingdom of God. And whoso believeth not in me, and is not baptized, shall be damned. . . . Verily, verily I say unto you, that this is my doctrine; and whoso buildeth upon this, buildeth upon my rock; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against them. And whoso shall declare more or less than this, and establish it for my doctrine, the same cometh of evil, and is not built upon my rock, but he buildeth upon a sandy foundation, and the gates of hell standeth open to receive such, when the floods come, and the winds beat upon them. (These quotations are from the fifth chapter of the book of Nephi, Lamoni edition of the Book of Mormon of 1908, verses 32 to 36 inclusive; also verses 41 and 42.)

A quotation from the second Book of Nephi, referring to the doctrine of Christ, is given to show uniformity of the testimony of the Spirit to the Nephite brethren, and that of Jesus borne by himself in person:

And now behold, my beloved brethren, this is the way; and there is none other way nor name given under heaven, whereby man can be saved in the Kingdom of God. And now behold, this is the doctrine of Christ, and the only and true doctrine of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, which is one God, without end. Amen.—2 Nephi 13: 31, 32.

We have here an array of testimony which, taken together, proves conclusively that when, through the ministration of an angel, the gospel was reinstated upon this land, it was intended that it should be understood as reestablishing the doctrine of Christ as it was in the beginning, according to the testimony of section 20, in which it was called the everlasting covenant, even that which was from the beginning; and it is also called the last covenant. The continued quotations from the Book of Covenants show what that doctrine was in effect. The commandments are clear, that the united officers of the church were to preach and teach and administer the gospel as the same had been given in the Bible and the Book of Mormon, and this should constitute their authoritative teaching; and that upon this gospel, as upon the rock, the church was to be built.

The writer in the Liahona has stated four of the principles of the doctrine of Christ, leaving out the closing two as enumerated by the Apostle Paul in the sixth chapter of Hebrews, namely, the resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment; and he calls these four the fundamentals, meaning foundation principles. Now, it so happens that the Apostle Paul, whom this writer quotes in giving his version of what the principles of the doctrine of Christ were, enumerates six of them, as found in the opening of the sixth chapter of Hebrews. Notwithstanding the writer in the Liahona is striving to show that the positions assumed by the churches (which he styles sectarian) are faulty, in their attempt to excuse themselves for changing of the ordinances, he has fallen into the same error as they, in claiming that the apostle authorized the leaving of the principles of the gospel of Christ, in order to go on unto perfection; for, this writer uses the same statement they use, as follows: "The same apostle who charged the people not to change the gospel, admonished them to leave the first principles and go on unto perfection." It is strikingly inconsistent for this writer in the Liahona, advocating the unchangeable character of the gospel of Christ, to adopt this faulty construction of the sectarian churches of the apostle's teaching. The prophet Joseph Smith, whose authority should be recognized by this writer in the Liahona as paramount to the teaching of the Apostle Paul, has written this passage of scripture as follows:

Therefore not leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, of laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment. And we will go on unto perfection if God permit.—Hebrews 6: 1-3, the Holy Scriptures as translated and corrected by the Spirit of revelation.

Both this version and the King James agree in the matter which follows in the context, in which it is provided that those who have once been made acquainted with the power of the gospel and have tasted of the fruits of the gospel by obedience thereto, and have fallen away by transgression or by willful perversion of the gospel, either by taking from or adding to, can not be made partakers again of the heavenly gift. This position taken by Joseph Smith the prophet in this rendition of the opening portion of the sixth chapter of Hebrews, is amply supported by the texts which have been quoted from the revelations of God to the church in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants and in the Book of Mormon. The question of how long the validity and the force of these principles of the gospel and the articles and covenants commanded of God to the church are to continue, is clearly set forth in the terms given: Thou shalt teach the things which are written in the Scriptures to be my law to govern the church until he comes to reign whose right it is to reign. And the Lord has borne the strongest testimony that he could bear to the divine character of this commandment, by the closing sentence, "Behold, here is wisdom." The eternal character of the gospel and the features of the law which we have quoted are clearly enunciated and emphasized by the statement that the covenant was restored as being from the beginning, and the one respecting the marriage covenant as given in section 49, was, according to the creation of man, before the world was made.

The writer in the Liahona concludes by asking the readers to make a test of claim advanced. The position taken by him is clear, that the gospel instituted by Jesus Christ nineteen hundred years ago would save men then, and he assumes that it will save men now; and as we have shown, the salvation is a salvation in the kingdom of God. Hence, any claim made for any other requirement than obedience to that gospel, as being essential unto conferring that salvation, can not be maintained, and he who makes such claim is an impostor.

From April 6, 1830, to June 27, 1844, is a little over fourteen years of time. During that period, under the preaching of the restored gospel by Joseph Smith and his compeers, something like two hundred thousand conversions had been made and communicants added to the church. Up to the time of the death of Joseph Smith no additional doctrine or theory of salvation had been added to the faith of the church, and none had been preached, and none advocated in the accredited journals of the church, or circulated by sermon or tract. Soon after the death of Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, Brigham Young assumed leadership, not long after which a dogma and practice were adopted completely at variance with that which was declared by the Lord to have been instituted at the beginning and intended for the government of man before the world was made. It was privily taught, whispered in secret corridors, and was fed and fostered by secret practice, covered by deception and openly denied. Few were initiated, and these were President Young and his leading supporters. Under the fostering care of this secret regime, a large number of those who had accepted the gospel prior to the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith were forced to leave the State of Illinois, leaving the homes which they had built and the city which they had founded, their temple unfinished.

A little over three years from the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, Brigham Young was chosen as president of the fleeing hosts, and continuing with that host he journeyed into the depths of the wilderness of the West. They were taking with them, under the rule of President Young, a dogma and practice contrary to the laws of the States of Illinois, Ohio, and New York—the States where the church was organized, the first temple having been built at Kirtland where they had found refuge after the expulsion from Missouri.

Five years after reaching Great Salt Lake Valley, Pres. Brigham Young caused a public declaration of the dogma and the practice of plural marriage, afterwards bearing the title of polygamy. This declaration was made August 29, 1852, and Orson Pratt, the first speaker in the church, openly declared that it was the first time he had ever spoken in favor of the dogma. This was eight years and two months after the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith. This dogma was claimed to be a new covenant, requiring obedience as a prerequisite to salvation, and proclaiming provisions for the conduct of members of the church contrary to the saving provisions of the gospel of the New Testament as enumerated by the Apostle Paul, and materially adding to the words of the Lord the Savior himself as uttered by him in the prayer found in John, seventeenth chapter, and which would not have been permitted under the law of the State where the church was organized in 1830, nor in Ohio, where the first temple was built, nor in the State of Illinois, whence President Young and followers took their departure.

Another feature which originated with President Young, and which must enter into the examination of the claim made, is that upon arriving at the Salt Lake Valley it was required of those who came to the valley that they should be rebaptized, under the apparent plea that the covenants in baptism which they had made in obeying the gospel when they first heard it and believed, were not sufficient or had been vitiated by the experiences through which they had passed in crossing the plains.

We have made diligent inquiry among many hundreds of those who crossed the plains in regard to this requirement of baptism upon reaching the valley. The only reason they were able to give, was that President Young had declared that everyone who crossed the rim of the mountains must be baptized.

Among those of whom we made inquiry, was a most excellent man in heart and disposition, by the name of David Garner. We met him at the house of his brother, John Garner, in San Bernardino, California. He repeatedly tried to evade giving the reason why he and others had been rebaptized acknowledging that he could see no reason why he should have been baptized; but finally he said that he knew of none, only that President Young had required it.

Another man whom we met at Provo, who with his wife were nominal members of the Utah church, stated that he had been baptized five times, and that he told the elders after his last baptism that they had baptized more devils into him than they had ever baptized out.

Another, a most excellent woman from Scotland, whom we met at Beaver, Utah, was greatly exercised in mind by the constant demands made by the elders of the church that she should submit to rebaptism. From conversation with her and from evidence of the Spirit to us, we were satisfied that she had received the gospel in good faith in her native land, had obeyed it from the heart, had been accepted of the Lord, and had received his Spirit, signifying her acceptance with the Lord. She feared that if she yielded to rebaptism, it would amount to an admission that her original obedience was not sufficient, and that by such submission she would forfeit her right to that acceptance of which she had received an assurance.

From these and similar experiences from hundreds with whom we have conversed, it would appear that this act or requiring a submission to baptism under such condition, was a departure from the gospel rule, and was an addition to the gospel once delivered to the Saints, and renewed by divine command in these last days.

Another seeming addition is that made by President Young, disparaging the history of the birth of Jesus as given by Matthew, in which the immaculate conception of Jesus is virtually discredited. This is in direct contravention with the teaching of the three books of the church, Bible, Book of Mormon, and the revelations given in the Doctrine and Covenants. It is an addition to the gospel, as proclaimed by Paul, as subjecting the person so adding to divine anathema. It is alike in contravention with quotations we have given, establishing the doctrine of Christ, from the Book of Mormon and the revelations of God to the church.

As we have shown, the law of the Lord required that the church membership should live in obedience to the law of the land. What Brigham Young taught and has passed into a doctrine and practice, can not be observed without breaking the law of the land, which the Lord declared should be kept until he comes to reign whose right it is to reign. We conclude, therefore, that the application of the text, "The gospel is unchangeable," defeats the argument of the writer in the Liahona, and the test applied is fatal to the claims he makes for the Utah Church.

God is unchangeable, and the rule by which men will be judged will be that uttered by the Savior; "There is one that judgeth you. The words which I have spoken; they shall judge you at the last day."

REFLECTIONS AND PROSPECTS.

I have heard it said, "Our life is what we make it." I believe it. I believe in the gospel of choice; also in the choice gospel. We have a right to choose; God fixed that as a law in the beginning of creation; and since he can not lie, nor contradict himself, it is quite impossible for him now to change that law. Hence man's salvation, his opportunities, and all that pertains to his entrance into the kingdom of God will surely depend upon the choice man makes in life.

This consideration of choice, however, is not confined to the choice we make in first accepting the gospel or joining the church. That is where so many make a mistake. They having been wandering in darkness of mind, doubt, and uncertainty, have now found the pearl of great price—the restored gospel—the angel's message—the church of the First-born, and in this they rejoice. They have good reasons, too. They have hitherto been homeless, as it were, wandering alone, depressed in mind and spirit. They are like the blind man: "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." They are so elated at the sight of land and the glorious truth now unfolded to them, that they begin to cast anchor and go ashore, thinking their voyage is at an end. But there are many leagues of travel yet ahead of us "over life's tempestuous sea." We have not yet reached the haven of rest; we have not finished our journey. While I am not a sailor, yet I opine that it takes skill to rig a ship and manage it safely over the waves. There is need of vigilance, much need in knowing the waters ahead, where the shoals and reefs may lie, where the unseen rocks would wreck our craft and leave us lifeless there.

There are so many times and places in life when nearly all we have dear to us depends upon the choice we make. If our choosing be right, happiness is the result; if it be wrong, we can not avoid the result, the loss. We have read and known when people have made the wrong choice in selecting a companion for life. It has often resulted in distressing, dismal loss, loss that can not be retrieved, a loss that can hardly be described by words or pen. We furnish the following lines as coming from one who made this wrong choice.

"In vain thy glories bid me rise to hail the newborn day,
When all my morning sacrifice is but to weep and pray.
What are all nature's charms combined to one whose weary breast
Can neither peace nor comfort find, nor friend whereon to rest.

"Oh, never, never, while I live, shall my heart's anguish cease.
Come, friendly death, thy mandates give and let me be at peace."

This is a sad picture, but it represents thousands in the world to-day. The wrong choice has brought them into the whirling avalanche of sorrow; their powers of escape are gone; it was their choice.

As a bricklayer I was one time working on a seven-story building. Below us was an alley paved with vitrified brick; nothing to prevent a fall to the pavement should one start. The derrick swung out of balance and fell across the joist near us. By quick action one man saved another from falling over the wall, and no one was hurt, no damage done. But the occurrence had a very peculiar effect on several of us who were near by. Something got the matter with our nerves, or our muscles, or our blood, bones, or brain. We were not hurt, we were not cold, but we shook, shivered, and trembled. This reference does not involve the idea of choice, altogether, but the occurrence was impressive; it was an opportunity for danger: It was avoided; we rejoiced because we escaped. So in like manner have many of us while engaged in the building of life's characters often stood near the heavy derricks of temptation and they have fallen near us. Many times we have quickly thrown out our arm and kept a fellow-laborer from falling over the wall into the depths of sin below. Many times when we have reflected over these escapes we have trembled with fear. And I here venture the statement that that fear is godly fear and should not be obliterated from our considerations.

We hope to impress our readers with the sublime necessity of choosing right. The opportunity for choosing is always before us; it is like the good and the bad, it is always present. To-day is ours; yesterday is gone; to-morrow many never come. We can profit, however, by the experiences of yesterday. We do not lose our memory because the day is gone. There seem to be two distinct worlds, one visible, the other invisible; one material, the other not material; one human, the other divine; one physical, the other spiritual. We live in both now. We are compelled to consider the things of this material, physical world by reason of our being here. We are invited to consider two things belonging to the spiritual world because of the fact that we sometime expect to dwell there. It is man's nature and disposition to take the things which are in sight. He often does so without questioning the result or consequences. Man is naturally bold and defiant; he really does not intend to be so, however. He desires to be independent and somewhat important, yet he will preach humility. He refuses to be led; he sees the crowd run, then he runs. Some one asks him, "Why do you run?" "Oh, I don't know; just because others are." This man has chosen to run because others are running. So we find ourselves, even now, out in the invisible world of thought, study, and reflection, wondering if it is a fact that there is a reason for all things. If so, why should a man run without knowing why? We do not intend to express a doubt, by using the word if, but we do pretend to say there is absolutely a reason for all things. We may not be able with tongue or pen to express it so others may have our view, but we are confident that we know some things, even as the blind man said, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

I was born a Latter Day Saint. My parents long before I was born were members of the church. My mother's father, Richard Hewett, was among the first elders in the days of Joseph the Prophet. This parentage, however favorable, is not sufficient as a reason why I am now in this work, in this church. There should be a better reason than that, or it would crumble to folly. But I have not anticipated in this writing to furnish a comprehensive reason for being a Latter Day Saint. God gave me the right of choice, and no man has the privilege of taking it from me. My life is what I make it; your life is what you make it. The simple fact of having membership in the church is no guarantee of a joyous and happy life or of salvation in the kingdom of God. When we enter the church we are just born—"newborn babes in Christ." How foolish for us to suppose that we should not continue to grow. Just as literally as we are to grow physically from babyhood to manhood, so also we are to grow spiritually, morally, and mentally.

The prospects before us are good, more valuable than gold, yea, than fine gold; more to be desired than rubies and diamonds. The training of our mind and conscience to conform to the divine mind is indeed a sublime task. It requires divine assistance. It can not be accomplished without it. We can not with any degree of reason expect the assistance of the divine mind or Spirit unless we seek for it,—seek for it in real earnestness. Things of this world that are considered worthy of possession are sought after with diligence, energy, and perseverance. Men hazard their lives, their health, and all sometimes to earn wealth—that wealth that perishes. It is not always wealth of money that drives men forward into the hazardous conflicts of life. That store is deceptive, delusive, and fading. It is like the beauties of the rainbow, not permanent. It seems to be a matter of record that the men who possess an abundance of wealth are not happy, not satisfied. There is still an aching void.

The other incentive referred to which drives men to hazardous conflicts, is more dangerous and delusive, if possible, than avarice. We refer to emulation or ambition. "Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye," is the statement of a man who had labored long and hard to reach the summit of fame on the wings of pride and worldly ambition, but who had fallen, as he said, "never to rise again." It will be noticeable to the casual observer of men and human events, the abundance of ambition in the efforts of men to outdo and overcome others in the desire for station in the affairs of life. We think at times we see it in the church. But wherever it be found it is evidence of weakness and the evidence of a wrong conception of the means of advancement.

That class of people called actors and actresses; those who perform behind the footlights, are influenced largely in all their work by what others think. The love of applause is their food and their drink. That same feeling has entered into the ranks of the ministry (referring to all the churches) and in consequence they have not sought the souls of men, but have sought the loaves and fishes. Because if the preachers (God pity them!) did not please the people, the people would stop their salary and they would be out of a job. So they work for the applause, the praise of men, like the actors behind the footlights; for if they did not the people would not come to their show, and that is all it is, just a show, a worldly show at that. "The world is still deceived with ornament." The statement of Paul, "If I still preach to please men, I am no longer a servant of Christ," has always sounded good to me. And yet I am continually confronted with the implication that I should try to preach to please the people. It is, I imagine, a lovely experience for ministers of the gospel to be carried along in the arms of friends; it would be fine if we could always be in a flower garden, breathing the sweet fragrance and feasting our eyes on the roses and lilies. It would be fine if we could enjoy communion of Saints and friends always in our gospel work. But that is not possible. We sometimes see the sparks of this love-for-praise-of-man beam forth when we are among the Saints. It is so natural that we could hardly expect it to be otherwise. Yet we feel sometimes like Paul said, "I am jealous over you with a godly jealousy."

We are anxious to see the Saints concentrate their love in the work of the Lord; in those things that will bring them life, joy, and peace; that will save them in the kingdom of God. There are so many things that hinder our progress; that prevent our development; and it is very hard to get people to believe that these things hinder. My experience is that it is just as hard to get people called Saints to respond to the law of life and be governed by the law of God which applies to them, as it is to get the prejudiced, creed-bound Gentiles to accept the angel's message.

The word of God says, "Tobacco is not good for man," and "avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to the use of strong drink in any form." But we have the right of choice, don't you know. Hence, a great number of the Saints choose to use it rather than to deny themselves. Notwithstanding Jesus said, "If any man shall come after me [be saved in his kingdom, is that what it means?] let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Paul in writing to Titus referred to some in his day who "profess that they know God, but in works they deny him." Jesus said in John 12: 47: "My word will judge you at the last day." And when the Lord said to his chosen prophet, "Avoid the use of tobacco," he surely meant for us to deny ourselves that and quit it. So does the appetite and passion crave and call for many things contrary to law—both the law of the land and the law of God. But we are under the direct command of God to deny ourselves. We have the right of choice. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." "Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey; whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness." Are we obedient unto God when he has said, "Avoid the use of tobacco," and we continue to use it? What is our prospect? Is it death or life? Life is the result of obedience; death the result of disobedience. We use the word life to mean a place with God, Christ, and the redeemed; death to mean banishment from God. We have the right of choice. It is ours to-day. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call on him while he is near."

The friendship of this world is enmity against God. We can not serve God and cater to the world and its ways. In the prayer of Jesus for his disciples he says: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." Therefore his Saints should not conform to the foolish vanities, fashions, and pride of this world. How many times, oh, how often, has the Lord warned his Saints, against pride, vanities, and worldly fashions. Can we not remember the loss, sorrow, and rejection of God's people in the past because they sought after the things of the world?

In the Book of Mormon worldly pride is referred to as a crime, then it must surely be a sin; and "God can not look upon sin with the least degree of allowance." It is not sensible nor safe for us to lean too far over the precipice of sin and worldly pride. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord, thy God," can well be applied to all ventures of evil. It is gloriously true that "God is merciful" and that "Jesus intercedes for us." It is also true, as it is written: "But I say unto you that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." But humanity is naturally venturesome, bold, and daring, unruly and disobedient. I confidently believe that salvation, any kind of salvation, is conditional. "Save yourselves from this untoward generation"; "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling"; "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve"; and "Blessed are they that do his commandments." These texts convince me that we have the right of choice. All our success in this world, as in the next, depends on the choice we make.

Some people think and contend that this idea would rob Christ of his glory and diminish the importance of his mission—the atoning blood. They say it would change the order of things and make man his own Savior instead of recognizing Christ as his Savior. Oh, no, it would not. It should be well understood that man was in a lost condition, "without God and without hope" of salvation; no possible way of escape; not a shadow of a chance to save himself. But in the mission of Jesus Christ the door was opened; the wall or partition between us and redemption was broken down; the means were provided for our transportation into eternal life; the railroad was built; the old ship of Zion was launched on the ocean of life, and man was invited to get on board. It was not by works that we have or had done that this door was opened, the means provided for us and our salvation; but it was by pure, unselfish, and uninvited grace.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." Who is so blind that he can not see that our salvation depends now on the choice we make? God and Christ have performed their part; we have something now to do. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." But poor, weak, frail humanity, having an abnormal appetite, his eyes blinded with the creeds and traditions of men, having followed the customs of generations, is confronted with a glittering, glaring, whitewashed, hypocritical world of fashion and show, so that even professed Christians and Saints have seemingly supposed that they must conform to most, if not all, of this foolish pride, vanity, and worldly nonsense, in order to be saved in the kingdom of God. If they do not suppose that, then why do they do it?

I would especially invite your attention, and invite you to visit our General Conferences and reunions, or other large gatherings of the Saints. Have your mind in tune as revealed in the Bible, Book of Mormon, and Doctrine and Covenants; please also remember the many warnings given by the Spirit, in prophecy and tongues to the church; have your mental and spiritual vision open to the things that God has said about our manner of dress and adornment; then compare our people with the congregations of the world, and tell me if you can discover any difference in dress. As a matter of course you will find many poor among the Saints, but my observation shows but few exceptions, that we are doing all we can to keep up with the world of fashion and pride. Yet we can take comfort in singing, "Jesus, I my cross have taken, all to leave and follow thee." But the song of the siren is musical; it has a fascinating charm.

In the choosing of the three caskets to win fair Portia, it was the gaudy, glistening gold, and glimmering silver that dimmed the eyes of judgment and reason, which ever resulted in a wrong choice. But He that hath chosen not by outward show, and gave us the beautiful sentence, "The world is still deceived with ornament," called for the key to unlock the leaden casket, saying, "Here choose I, and joy be the consequences."

In this mortal race of man he is ever confronted with the three caskets which contain the results and prospects of our choosing. One casket contains a "carrion death" of sin, evil, and vice; another the "blinking idiot" of pride and fashion, the other less attractive one contains the "fair counterpart" of Jesus the Christ, and his saving gospel with all its comfort, glory, and power. Give me the key to unlock this one, and "Here choose I, and joy be the consequences!"

ANOTHER BURNING QUESTION.

Perhaps on no subject are people so sensitive and averse to innovation as that of the disposal of the dead. Behind our present methods of burial stands all the force of age-long custom, sentiment and religious faith. It is for these reasons that cremation has made such slow progress in the past, though its superiority from a sanitary point of view is admitted practically by all.

It is rather significant, therefore, to note the fact that at a recent national convention of cemetery superintendents held in this city, the opinion was expressed that in the near future the law will provide for compulsory cremation, and that this seemed to be the opinion of the majority.

Commenting on this, the New York World in its editorial columns expresses agreement and gives an adequate explanation why cremation is destined to supplant the present method. It says:

"Cremation has long been urged on sanitary grounds. The force of economic reason is now being accumulated on the same side of the issue. Great urban districts, rapid in their expansion, feel as obstacles to growth in desirable directions the appropriation of large tracts of land for cemetery purposes. Smaller outlying places object naturally to having their fields turned into burial places for the cities. Manhattan's encroachments upon near by territory have become of much note since the passage of a law forty years ago forbidding the opening of new graveyards in New York City or County."

The World has no possible use for the socialist theory of economic determinism, and in all probability the cemetery superintendents never heard of it. Both, however, recognize its dominance as a deciding factor over every other consideration.

If the explanation of the World is correct, and the facts given are as stated, then despite religion, sentiment or custom, it's the furnace for us eventually—in this world at any rate, if not in the next.

THE SPIRIT OF CHEERFULNESS.

A gloomy person is not inspiring in any line of work. His presence throws a damper over the zeal of those who would otherwise be earnest laborers. Such is our relation to each other that we impart our experiences to those with whom we associate. If we are of a melancholy disposition we cast a sort of gloom over the circle that we enter. But if we are bright and hopeful we communicate an inspiration to our associates. They extend to us a welcome because our very presence is uplifting.

A gloomy nature is sometimes the result of disease. We are sick in body and the world does not seem to contain much for us. The appetite is bad, sleep goes from us, and we are depressed. What we need is rest from toil, or a good dose of medicine, or a change in work. Sometimes we are gloomy because we are self-centered. We can not think too much about self without becoming impressed with the idea that somebody has mistreated us, or we have been neglected and we are not appreciated. That sort of gloom is enough to make anyone miserable. All the remedy we need is to get out of self and put ourselves into the self of somebody else. Self-forgetfulness is a good medicine. It is our duty to be cheerful, to be hopeful. God does not want us to hang our heads and mourn life away. He wants us to look toward the morning and smile. There is too much good in the world for us to go moping around in search of the bad and the disagreeable. The sky above us, the sunshine, the shower, the bird songs, the hills, the plains, the rivers, the brooks, happy-hearted children—in fact, everything about us, tells us to be glad and rejoice. Let us then fill the soul with religion, go forth to bless some pilgrim in life's journey, and happiness will force itself into spirits. Then our faces will smile instead of frown, our hearts be glad instead of sorrowful, and men and women will welcome us when we approach their circles.—Texas Christian Advocate.

PHOTOGRAPHING THE INVISIBLE.

Since the days when the instantaneous photograph first showed an incredulous world the grotesque motion of the race horse in flight, and established the fact that there could not be such a thing as exactly a dead heat, the camera has accomplished such wonders that we have almost ceased to marvel. The nickel show has made us indifferent to what a very few years ago was one of the wonders of the age, the moving picture. And now the moving picture has been cultivated into one of the marvels of the scientific world, the ballistic kinematograph, by means of which the old-style moving picture seems relegated into the stationary class, much as the canal boat compares with the ocean greyhound.

This achievement of the camera enables man to see what hitherto has been invisible, for Professor Kranz, the inventor of the device, is able to take absolutely clear photographs, singly, in silhouette, in the inconceivable flash of time represented by the term one ten-millionth of a second. The most rapid movement of nature or the swiftest artifice of man can thus be recorded for the purpose of close scientific study. Professor Kranz's mechanism works so speedily that, allowing for the working of shutter and the shifting of film, five thousand separate and distinct pictures of a moving object can be taken in a single second. This compares with an average of fifty per second in the ordinary moving picture outfit.

This miraculously delicate instrument is bound to be of great service in the prosecution of scientific study of natural phenomena. The observer intent on a surgical operation or a military problem now may have an invaluable aid to dissect the mysteries hitherto hidden. The swiftest moving phenomenon known may be put on record, whether it be the soaring of an insect whose wings vibrate invisibly, the whirl of a wheel, the flight of a bullet or the destruction of a target by projectile or of matter by explosive. The fleetest of moving objects will be caught as if at standstill and problems that have been too deep for military men, for surgeons, and experts in other fields, are brought within the possibility of solution.—Omaha Bee.

Editors Herald: Either by omission on your part or ours, an error exists in our article of HERALD for February 9, entitled, "Possible and probable explanations"; to wit: after the words, the Seer, should appear "Translating by the Urim and Thummim," to give clearness and force to our idea.

Very respectfully,

ADKINS, TEXAS, January 20, 1910.

Dear Herald: After living for several months in the city of San Antonio and enjoying the privileges of the church, it is indeed very lonely to live out in the country twenty miles or more from the church.

I became a member of the Reorganized Church seventeen months ago. I am still rejoicing in the good work. It grows grander to me every day I live. Sometimes I wonder how it could ever be that I should be so blessed. I can hardly realize how I was brought out of the shadow of doubt into the glorious light of the gospel. I had been reared from infancy in the Roman Catholic faith and was quite sure that I was in the right church. I had heard very little of the Latter Day Saints and I was of the impression that there was no difference in the doctrine of the Latter Day Saint and the Utah Mormon.

In 1905 a Latter Day Saint was employed to teach the school here at this place. And through him I became acquainted with the doctrine of the church. About this time I had a dream that I did not think amounted to anything at the time, but afterward I believed it pointed to my being helped out of the Catholic Church. I dreamed that by some way or other I had fallen into the Mississippi River and was about to drown, and at last I thought this same Latter Day Saint came along and helped me out of the river. Now, there does not seem to be much, at a careless thought, to this dream, but to think carefully of it, you will see that the Mississippi River is the father of waters, having so many branches and tributaries, so also is the Catholic Church the mother church and the Protestant churches are the branches. Therefore I believe the river in this dream meant the church. Soon after this Elders D. S. Palmer and John Harp came to this community and preached the gospel to these people. Brother Palmer came once again and the next time he came I was baptized, and soon my mother and sister were baptized also. The Baptist is the leading church here and their members are bitterly opposed to the Latter Day Saints, but I hope that it will not always be so.

I wish I could live in a branch, for I feel that I should do something for the advancement of this grand and noble cause. I desire to live faithful before the Master wherever I may be. I do not see how I could live now if it were not for the hope that I have in this work. I know the work is good and the reward is sure if I hold out faithful till the end, ever trying to obey his laws and commandments and overcome my faults and weaknesses, and doing what I can for the upbuilding of his great cause and kingdom on this earth. I ask the prayers of the Saints that I may ever be found doing what the Lord would have me do and saying what he would have me say and going where he would have me go.

With kind wishes to all, your sister in the one true faith,
MARY LARMANN.

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, February 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: Having been intrusted as I was, with the responsibility of determining the genuineness of certain relics I had at the General Conference at Lamoni in 1909, naturally enough there would be more or less interest on the part of many and report due, especially to those who invested means in the project.

My almost entire silence thus far has, no doubt, to some at least, seemed strange. Having mentioned the matter publicly as I did, and refraining from further publicity and counseling silence, has been referred to by some of my friends, thus: "All this attempt at secrecy, as well as your foolish actions, of announcing publicly, etc."

Be that as it may, results will show it has worked well. Naturally enough what is folly to some is wisdom to others, and results a better gauge than mere opinion.

Others had prior rights, they owned the relics, and not consenting to wide publicity, there was no other course open to me, since some must know of it to enter into and sustain the enterprise.

Should results achieved be measured by the amount of relics I may have to deliver at reporting time, it, perhaps, could not be counted a large success; but, far more to be desired than a large consignment of copper, clay, and stone, is the evidence centered in the whole of it by whomsoever owned.

This, happily, has been accomplished, as well as the dignity of our cause carefully guarded, which was really of first moment; evidence next, and then, relics in the amount available.

The data promised in connection with photographs shall be fulfilled. It puzzled many why it was not given out at first; the delay, more. It would have facilitated the handling of photos, yet not practical to do so, neither is it yet.

As to our exploration work, nothing was furnished the press by Mr. Daniel E. Soper, Rev. James Savage, or myself, but the little I stated in the HERALD, and that was almost exceeding my privileges.

Some of our friends gave out a few items, and were called to time by my colleagues, not because they had anything to fear, but they were not ready to have it done.

It has finally been decided to publish plates of the relics, the attendant matter to be limited to cover announcement, very short general statement, and brief data. No theory advanced or explanation attempted, so that no bias shall be engendered. Upon this plan only was publication now permitted. To be privileged to publish the specimens is so great advantage as to make it very desirable to conform to such requirements from those having the right to make them.

The data as agreed upon for book, may be republished elsewhere as soon as the book is out. As conditions may warrant and consent is had because of developments, other things may be given out.

Whatever disappointment this engenders, the result will many times repay. Fuller publication at the start would be of great advantage in the sale of the book, but better and fuller results to be reached, and the whole interest better served and earlier, by the present plan.

Our worthy historian asked for an article for the Journal of History months ago. It was not furnished simply because it was not expedient, neither is it as yet.

It will be, however, when it becomes practicable. The Historian is so informed and he heartily acquiesces.

Bro. E. E. Long wrote in reference to using the photographs in debate. Upon advice that it was yet untimely, he judiciously refrained. His consistency is appreciated.

In the limited use I have made of it in my personal work, the greatest care has been taken to conform to that course suggested for others.

The testing as to genuineness during the year by exploration is complete as for certainty, thirty-one finds being made widely separated and mostly from far distant localities from all former ones, new places where the taint of suspicion could not in sane judgment apply, all of these thirty-one differing from each other and from all former ones, yet having the same general characteristics and markings, identifying them as representing the same culture. The conditions relative to finding such as to disarm all doubt to intelligent minds.

These are not only my conclusions, but of those I have been coöperative with, also some of our principal men, and in addition, one man of repute in science.

This is my report for the present time and conditions. Let the rest come in its time. Should caution have failed me (to which I do not for a moment consent in this case), I should be now admonished by the North Pole muddle to be wise, act sanely and safely. What the fears of Cook or Peary may be, I do not know. In the case I have in hand I have none. Unlike that far-off North Pole zone, the one in the case of Michigan relics is here accessible readily and the test can be oft repeated; we can not depend on not being caught.

The scientists generally, will soon be after us. We may not win them all, but operations on the ground will never bring discomfiture for us, for the test is complete; how fast, and by how many accepted, is another thing.

The book goes in immediately to press. Its appearance will not relieve others or myself from restrictions stated or implied in the above. As early as can be we all will be relieved from much embargo. Steadily onward,

R. ETZENHOUSER.

ENFIELD, ENGLAND, January 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: I have read with delight and interest the account of our president, Brother J. W. Rushton, together with Bro. W. Leggott, on their mission in London District.

They appear to have found a very good ground for labor among our very small population of over seven million people, and were much taken up with the favor they seem to have found among the people regarding the gospel of Christ. From appearances, London was void of this gospel until they went there, which is shown by the interest with which the people seemed to regard them and their work. It gladdens our heart to know that the gospel has the power to attract the minds of men as something sensible, reasonable, and useful in life to such a degree that they declared that they ought to stop and take a hall there that the church might be represented in London. When we come to the memorial card of the London hall, in Brother Leggott's report, we can not help feeling that that notice posted up, "This building for sale," should have underneath it, "On account of the God of this place having gone for a walk, those responsible for the place have decided to sell the place as no longer required."

I guess Brethren Rushton and Leggott were ashamed to tell those people where the church was and the kind of a place it was that represented the church of Jesus Christ amongst seven million people. And it is strange that this is really the case, for by the same report, I read that they have still in mind the day when the church was famous amongst them there, that they boast of some of the brightest men of the church and the best of teaching, which to my mind they must have put on paper and lost it again, for it failed to have any effect, apart from a few, struggling to let their candle illuminate the minds of seven millions of people. Strange, too, that I have seen but a few years ago, between forty and fifty Saints assemble at that same hall in Bow Common Lane, and now it has come to a few who assemble there but once a month to partake of the sacrament. This means that the hall is closed forty Sundays out of the year, so if anyone happens around as a result of the preaching held there, between these times of it being open, they will see the hall closed and the notice posted up, "This place for sale." This branch claims one hundred and twenty members, that this place was good enough to be baptized in and receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit, but now having discovered that it is like a sandwich, between two public houses, that the people are poor and conditions surrounding the place bad, they have grown disgusted with it, and wish to remove to some other place which will be clean from the Devil's works and influence, which seems to have frightened all the people away from the hall in Bow Common Lane.

I listened to a preacher this evening talking of the wise and foolish virgins, and the bridegroom coming and how the foolish virgins ran to buy oil, and I thought if he came to London about now Brother Goullee would have a good trade, for he is in the oil business. What is lacking? It is not our surroundings that keep us from complying with Christ's statement when he said, "Wist ye not that I must be about my father's business"? The general idea of some people is that he meant, "Wist drives things." There seems to be plenty of it going on in other religions, but it is a love that is real that we need in our hearts for the gospel, and without it we ebb and flow like the ocean tide, or as one man has put it, we are like jelly fish with no backbone attached to us, and hence we take offense when offense is not meant, and become jealous when it should be our duty to honor and love each other. I would that the oneness that Christ spoke of might be perfect in us, that we might raise up seed unto Jesus Christ, that we might glorify almighty God by the oneness that we manifest in each other, for, unless we are agreed to combine together for the success of God's work we become a failure.

It has been suggested, I believe, that our mission conference for this country be held in London, which accounts for the mission work done last year in London, as a means of bringing more clearly to view by demonstration the knowledge of the gospel of Christ as possessed by the Latter Day Saints; also to broaden the minds of the Saints, that the work which they say they hold dear, that this light of the truth is not surrounded by a little world of its-own, but that we all may realize what kind of work we are engaged in. The duty it requires of us is great, for when we sing that hymn, "Am I a soldier of the cross?" we must remember that it does not mean that we are only reimbursements to make ourselves when some one special is around.

If it is so that the mission conference is to be held in London, and the work demonstrated by hiring a hall for the occasion and drawing the people to hear the gospel, and possibly converting some to the truth, after it is over, where are those that represent the church going to point the people to that they may worship God and receive the teaching that is necessary for their maintenance as members of the body of Christ? Will it be to the hall in Bow Common Lane? If so, they may get frightened by the awful appearance of the place and surroundings, and would lose ground on what they are believing, for they would be but babes just born into the fold of God, and they might become as those of old that had ears to hear but did not; eyes that see the truth but fall away into blindness again. I doubt if the gentleman of Hyde Park would turn his footsteps down Bow Common Lane.

Has this church body and parts and passions? Will it not extend the same to England? We are a part of the body, and the passion of God was love. In the same HERALD I read, Will a man rob God of pounds, shillings, pence, or the spirit of the work he has given him to do? The only places that we in England can boast of in all the places I know, where the work is represented, are over shops and halls, and in the south of England the church is unknown. In London, one little hall instead of twenty. Why is it? The answer is that you have not paid your tithes enough to spread the work more. The rich man pays his tithes and hardly feels the law, pays his tithes and feels free; at the same time the poor struggle to pay what little they can under the burden, with their own hall expense to pay as well. Hence, Will a man rob God? Tithes are for the spread of the everlasting gospel and the keeping up of the church, the expenses of which are a great deal more than many Saints imagine. It grieves one to think of one man misusing the money and making the work twice as expensive, and the church to suffer generally for the want of funds.

We are quite satisfied with our mission president, for if advice or teaching could have built churches we would have had lots of them. We realize that we are only working as a mission, but, at the same time we do not want to be forgotten, but would like to see our Island ring with this latter day work as in the days gone by. Trusting that God will bless his work both at home and abroad in this new year, I close these remarks, trusting they may be of interest.

Your brother in the one hope,

60 CHURCHBURY ROAD.

J. A. SMITH.

SAINT GEORGE, UTAH, January 28, 1910.

Editors Saints' Herald: I have no great results to report, so far as additions to the church are concerned, yet I am still alive and in the conflict for truth. I am at the capital of the Mormon "Dixie" country, where Brigham Young and his people reared their first temple. This is a hard looking country, but the climate is fine for winter, and if they had a railroad here it would no doubt become quite a winter resort. I am informed that this is a very fine country for fruits of various kinds, but the distance from market is a drawback in every respect.

Modena, on the San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad, is the nearest railroad point and is sixty-five miles distant; but by the time one makes the trip over the difficult road, with the kind of conveyances in use, the distance seems to be one hundred miles or more. The road passes near the place known as Mountain Meadow, which has become historic and widely known by reason of the terrible tragedy enacted there in the early history of Utah.

My first labor in this part of Utah was in the town of Washington, about six miles from here. I held a series of meetings there last week that were well attended and some interest was manifested. The only non-Mormon in the place, a Mr. Homelton, who with his wife attended all my meetings, stated upon parting: "I am glad that I had a chance to hear your side of the story, and I am free to confess that my opinion concerning Joseph Smith has undergone a considerable change." His wife expressed herself about the same. Also among the Mormons did I find friends, and they ministered to my necessities while I was with them.

At this place I could find no building to preach in. There seemed to be a disposition on the part of all the men in authority that I should not be heard, but I did not feel like giving it up, so when the mayor of the city, Mr. Whitehead, told me, "You can preach on the street all you want to," I concluded to try that, and I am glad to report that it has proven quite a success, as far as getting a hearing is concerned. I began my meetings Tuesday afternoon, the evening too cool, and I expect to continue during the remainder of the week and over next Sunday and perhaps longer.

At my first meeting I was attacked by David H. Cannon, a younger brother of the late George Q. Cannon. I noticed the gentleman's uneasiness while I was speaking, and as soon as I finished he began speaking. It was amusing to behold the crowd, with what eagerness they came closer. Bishop McArthur, who with some of his brethren had been listening a little distance away, came closer, now wearing the broadest kind of a smile, and it was evident that he expected this lonely "Josephite" would soon have the foundation knocked from under him, but I am sure they were disappointed in Mr. Cannon's efforts.

I had said nothing in my discourse about the unpleasant things that make the chief differences between us, but had preached Christ as our chief leader and the head of the church, and his gospel the plan of salvation. It was evident that Mr. Cannon hardly knew where to take hold as he could find nothing in what I had presented that he could condemn. He made the admission that what I had said was all true, but claimed that I need not come here to harangue the people about Christ and the gospel, because they all understood that. He then proceeded to tell the people about what he knew, and I can assure you that he was chuck full of knowledge and literally boiling over. He knew that Joseph Smith was a polygamist and condemned the sons of the prophet because they did not know it. He was present when Joseph Smith rolled all the responsibility upon the Twelve Apostles, and he knew that they had all the keys. He was present upon the occasion when Brigham Young spoke with Joseph's voice, and knew that the mantle of the prophet had fallen upon him. He said that he wanted to tell the people these things as he was present and knew all these facts, and he thought that in the face of such testimonies there was no room for "Josephites" to occupy.

When he got through I only called the people's attention to the fact that nearly sixty-six years have passed since the martyrdom of the prophet and patriarch, and here we have before us a man who professes to know so much pertaining to church affairs because of his actual knowledge and personal experience, and I said, "This man must be much older than his appearance indicates or else he was only a mere babe or a little child in the days when he claims to have received such wonderful knowledge." I saw that I had hit the nail on the head. Cannon himself looked down his nose, the bishop's smile had vanished, and it was clearly apparent that there was a general disappointment, and that Cannon had not accomplished what was hoped for.

Mr. Cannon has not been seen at my meetings since, but there have been others who are anxious for a wrangle, but none that desire to meet the issue fairly and squarely. Several of the Mormon people have admitted that Mr. Cannon made a fool of himself.

Being alone among so much opposition it brings on peculiar feelings sometimes, yet I have not been discouraged, as I feel that I have a right to hope that the Lord will stand by me. Perhaps it is well that my face is somewhat tanned, from exposure to the mountain air, or I might have become affected like Bro. H. C. Smith, when he encountered the Utah boys in Lamoni last June, at which time it is said that his face became as white as a sheet(?). One peculiar feature that I meet is that I can not hold a meeting, but what some one will introduce an argument in favor of polygamy, whether I have touched that theme or not. I noticed that the "Jots Man," writing from Salt Lake, a while back, declared that polygamy was a dead issue. If he will come down to southern Utah, he will find it a very lively and kicking corpse.

Before reaching this part of the State I spent some time in Sanpete and Sevier counties. Brother Holloway accompanied me as far as Elsinore and Monroe, but conditions soon required his return to Provo, and since then I was left to plod alone, which is not the most desirable, nor in harmony with the Lord's direction; but we must often be governed by circumstances when it can not be otherwise. Together we preached at Monroe and Elsinore; the attendance being only moderate, the severe cold and the nearness of the holidays no doubt militated against our efforts. While in that part of the country we made our home at Bro. H. Lorensen's, who, with his family, treated us with true saintlike kindness. Brother Lorensen's home has been a sort of headquarters for our elders for about twenty-five years, when I first met him, and when I had the pleasure of administering to him and companion the ordinances that made them members of the Reorganization.

No public house could be had for the preaching of the word in Richfield. When I applied to Bishop Coons for the privilege of speaking in the warehouse, he replied: "We let you into our house when you were here before, and we had a hell of a time, and we think that was enough." He evidently had in mind the time when six years ago Elder Swenson and I met Bishop Young and Elder Stewart in debate; but did not know before that they felt so bad over the matter. However, I preached twice in Bro. Joseph J. Jensen's home, to his neighbors who came to hear, some of whom seemed somewhat interested in the truth. Brother and Sister Jensen were the only ones of the faith that I met in that place, but like as upon former occasion, I felt at home in their abode.

I preached four times at Salina, twice in the Mormon meeting room and twice in the Presbyterian chapel, with good attendance. Bishop Lorentzen commended me on my efforts, saying that I had presented our faith in a way with which he could find no fault, and not like some of our elders who he claimed had pursued an ungentlemanly course.

At Manti I did no preaching, but stopped a few days with Brother and Sister Rasmussen, who in this place for years, have been the only ones of the fold and at whose home the elders always find a welcome. Brother and Sister Rasmussen are well advanced in years, and feel the effect of age. May the Lord comfort and encourage them in their declining days.

Here I am making my home principally with Mr. A. P. Hardy, who with his companion has treated me kindly. Mr. Hardy is one of the early pioneers of the country and has volunteered me much information pertaining to the early history of Utah. He is a Mormon, but says he is not very religious. Of course a man need not be very religious to be a good Utah Mormon, for if he pays his tithing and sustains the authorities he is considered all right. Mr. Hardy informed me that he was for nine years the sheriff of Washington County. That he has filled several missions among the Indians, being appointed by Brigham Young. He was in the "Mormon War," under Lot Smith, in the region of Fort Bridger, stampeding mules and horses belonging to the army and burning up the supply trains. But he stoutly asserts that he had nothing to do with the Mountain Meadow Massacre, all of this without me asking any questions. He also asserts that Brigham Young was not responsible for the terrible deed, and claims to have seen orders from Brigham Young in regard to the emigrants, which were to the effect that they should be permitted to pass through the country unmolested; but the orders did not reach the scene until the deed was done.

I have no doubt written enough for this time, so will close by saying I am yours in the conflict for truth,

H. N. HANSEN.

LEXINGTON, TENNESSEE, January 20, 1910.

Editors Herald: I am now back in my field of labor. Moved my family to Knobnoster, Missouri, the last of November and remained there preaching and administering to the sick until the 12th of this month. Then I came to Timberlake, Tennessee, and preached a few times and baptized one lady, the wife of Bro. Alex. Rush. My labors in Knobnoster were well received by Saints and friends. I met a number of good Saints there, but some are not striving to let their light shine. There were a few outsiders at our meetings who expressed themselves as well pleased with the effort. I tried to make it plain that I was not in Missouri to abuse or make fun of anyone's religion or church, but to preach the gospel as I understood it, and I believe I made some friends. Some seemed to think that I had fixed some of the outsiders so they would never come into our church again. I asked them why they thought so, and their answer was, "The outsiders and some of the Saints are just carried away with your preaching, and now they will stand right where they are." I remarked that I thought it was a little strange that men would stay outside of the church because they liked the preaching. He remarked, "You are too light on them; I believe in stirring them up." Well, we didn't argue the question any further. I could see that he was one who believed in hanging to the line as they call it. I had been told by some outsiders that they scarcely ever attended our meetings because the elders, as a rule, abused them and made fun of their religion, but I can't vouch for all I heard. I preached largely from the Book of Mormon, and some outsiders told me that they believed the doctrine I taught.

We have a good Religio there at Knobnoster. I found that many of the Saints know little of the Book of Mormon teachings.

One thing I find in Zion that is discouraging, and that is the spirit of speculation is bringing lots of Saints to Zion and moving lots of them away from her. My advice to all Saints coming to Zion is to stay clear of all land agents, even if they are Latter Day Saints. We have some good men in the land business, but you don't always know who they are. One of the commandments given by Christ was to watch. Why not live by that word of God? Most of the land in Zion is hardpan or has been water killed, and hence the necessity to have some agent who knows where the good land is, as it won't do to trust your own judgment, of course. Land agents are very nice and accommodating, but they are like anybody else, they are looking out for themselves, and you will not fall out with them if you do the same thing. So do not get in a hurry to buy land in Missouri. Remember the Lord's instruction is not to be in haste, but let everything be prepared before you.

Well, I find things in Tennessee about as I left them, except some of the Saints have moved away. As a rule the Saints here in Lexington are very poor. The land is poor and they are compelled to live very closely, and it is about all they can do to live at all. But I learn that some of our elders do not mind begging them for money "to grease the car wheels," as they call it. I have been preaching here for years, opened up the work years ago, and I have never yet asked one of the Saints for money. I will buy a tie ticket and walk before I will do as some have done. Some lay around and then ask the Saints for money and perhaps they have five times as much as it needs to take them where they are going. We have only had a few of such elders labor in Tennessee and Kentucky, and they did not do much good, except to help out the railroads. They will receive a letter from the missionary in charge requesting them to push out into new fields; then they will pass the hat and hustle off to some other branch, or to where a lot of Saints live, and flatter themselves that they are in a new field. Pretty soon they are rushing to see loved ones and to await the action of General Conference to see where they will be sent. I have seen so much of the above work that I am tempted at times to raise my voice against it from the stand. Let none take exception to this that is not guilty. I do not mean you; it is the other fellow of course.

Trusting this may be received in the same spirit that prompted me in writing it,

Yours in Christ,

C. L. SNOW.

CONIFER, COLORADO, January 19, 1910.

Editors Saints Herald and its Twenty-five Thousand Readers: We desire to greet you in the opening of this New Year of grace, 1910, one thousand nine hundred and ten years since the coming of the Messiah, our Savior Jesus Christ, to ratify and make binding on the nations of the earth the everlasting covenants promised to the prophets, Abraham, (Genesis 22: 16-18); Moſes, (Deuteronomy 18: 17-20); David, (Psalm 89: 19-37; Isaiah 9: 8, 9; 49: 6-12; 55: 3-6; 59: 19-21; Jeremiah 31: 31-34; Daniel 9: 25-27; Micah 5: 2-4; Zechariah 9: 9-12), and to others too tedious to mention.

Israel rejected this messenger of the covenant, because he, after being born in Bethlehem, abode for a time in the town of Nazareth, saying, "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" and because he did not then set Israel, unregenerate as they were then, at the head of the nations, and be crowned a temporal universal ruler. They did not understand that before this could be, Israel, both Hebrew and Gentile, must be converted from their sinful ways, be regenerated, be of one heart and soul, united in desires, purposes, and intentions, in harmony with God's will and purposes. (See Psalm 51: 6-13; Jeremiah 31: 33, 34; Jeremiah 3: 14-16.) Instead of turning to the new covenant their hearts turned, and we are sad to write it, they still turn back to the covenant made at Sinai and "the ark" that contained that law of death, and refuse to heed the pastors sent to them then and now, not being able to see that the new is not like the old covenant. Israel set their stakes thinking the Lord would come to them, but he has not, nor will he. They must be converted to the Lord's "own way" that makes us of one heart and soul, be converted to him. (See Jeremiah 32: 39, 40.) Israel has always, ever since coming out of Egypt, gone backward and not forward, has backslidden. (Jeremiah 2: 27.) May not modern Israel be able to learn a lesson here? Let our past teach us the duty of faithfulness to the divine Law Giver, is our only success. We can not do the work intrusted till we, under chastisement, learn that "Zion can not be built up, unless it is by the principles of the law of the celestial kingdom." (Doctrine and Covenants 102: 2, 3; 127: 7.) Can anyone in the stakes of Zion fulfill the principles of the celestial law and not possess their possessions "according to the law of consecration which I have given"? (See Doctrine and Covenants 102: 8.) Can they and be in harmony with the law? It is time we, as children of our heavenly Father, look his law squarely in the face. We ask the world to do this when preaching the gospel to them. (See section 106: 1, 2. This law surely applies to all living in the present and future stakes of Zion. Are not the stakes of Zion Zion? Are not those living in the stakes of Zion living in Zion? Answer as you will answer at the final tribunal. (See Psalm 50: 4; Isaiah 11: 27.) (We think the "judgment" of this latter text is righteous, legal, inspired, good, just, sense, enlightened by the law and the Spirit. See on this Doctrine and Covenants 126: 10 and 129: 8.) But let us as a people not forget that God will judge his people as well as the world. (Psalm 122: 4, 5; Matthew 19: 27-29; 2 Corinthians 5: 10.)

Brethren, the times of the Gentiles are now closing. They were to be fulfilled in the generation in which the gospel was restored. (See Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4.) A generation did not exceed seventy-five or eighty years in the stated generation referred to by our Savior in his time. (See paragraph 3 of same section.) "This generation of Jews." Compare the "desolations" here spoken of with any history of the Hebrews and Jerusalem. A generation in Abraham's time was about one hundred and eight years. (Genesis 15: 16; Exodus 12: 40, 41.) In regard to Israel's wandering in the wilderness prior to being permitted to enter Canaan, that generation was forty years, specified. (Numbers 14: 33, 34; Deuteronomy 1: 35.) Three score and ten years were a generation in the time of David. A race is sometimes denominated a generation, a family when so specified. (Deuteronomy 1: 35; Psalm 95: 10, 11. See also Matthew 4.) A people living at a given time. (Matthew 3: 7, 8.) We are not of the opinion that the words, "This generation of Jews," or "in that generation," as used in Doctrine and Covenants, are absolutely defined as to years, nor used in the sense of a "race" or a family; but we can not concede that "that generation" exceeds one hundred years. If we begin the "this generation of Jews" of paragraph 3, in A. D. 33, the "generation" did not exceed forty-two years. But if it began at A. D. 1 it did not exceed eighty to ninety years. The desolations there foretold had come on the Jews by that time. The times of the Gentiles evidently began at or soon after the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 65 to 72. And the abomination spoken of by Daniel set up, (see Luke 21: 20-24; Mark 13: 14.) "And for the overspreading of abominations," it has been desolate unto this day. Idolatrous Roman abominations, (oriental conquerors.) Then the contentions of one Peter the Wanderer, and the Mohammedans who with slight intervals continue to sustain their mosque on Mount Moriah, where once stood the temple of Solomon. (Daniel 9: 26.)

"The fullness of my gospel" broke forth among those who sat in darkness in A. D., 1823 to 1830. "And in that generation shall the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled!" Can we realize where we are, brethren, in that history of events? The Savior deals here with events directly related to his ancient covenant people, the children of Abraham. They have been a long time learning the folly of setting their stakes and rejecting the gospel because Jesus came out of Nazareth, but they will learn yet that they will have to begin at a Nazareth where it has been thought no good can come from, even with the great restoration, the foundation of which was laid by "that young man," spoken of in Zechariah 2: 1-4, and Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4. The messenger of Malachi 6: 1. See Doctrine and Covenants 17: 2, 3.

At the opening of the Gentile times, the Hebrews went "into outer darkness," where to them has been "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth." They ceased to be the Lord's people in any adopted sense. They did not cease to "be a nation" or a race. Their house was "left unto them desolate." They were "blind leaders of the blind." They fell "into the ditch," from whence they have not to this day been pulled out.

Will a like fate now overtake the Gentiles at the fullness of their times? As the Hebrews filled "up the measure of their fathers," or cup of iniquities, has it now happened so, or is it happening so with the Gentiles? When Israel's time had fully arrived they became absolutely indifferent to their eternal welfare. (Acts 13: 46, 47.) Will it soon be so with the Gentiles? Do they—a majority of them—now seem indifferent to the gospel of Christ? If any of you doubt, just take a year's mission, go without purse or scrip, as do Christ's ministers, declare the same principles and doctrine he did, and be convinced. The proof of it will be trying it. We do not say there are yet a minority of exceptions. Were the masses convinced in the days of Noah and Lot? (See Matthew 24: 37-39; Luke 17: 26-32, and Luke 21: 35.) Does the world knowingly permit itself to be taken in snares? Somehow all that dwell on the face of the whole earth Jesus says will not know when the day of his coming is near or at hand! What an astounding statement of truth! Are the Saints alive to their own interests as they relate to the redemption of Zion?

We can see the tares are ripening. It looks like mature fruitage to note that the Colorado state board of pardons are allowing prisoners to buy for money their liberation from the state prison, regardless of what their crimes may have been. This is now an open fact, charged and commented on by the public press, who to-day are the conservators of the peace and safety. Saints, we must not think for one moment that it remains for the next generation to begin to redeem Zion. Any indication of willingness on our part to pass the beginning of this work on to the next generation would plainly show that we are not prepared to enter celestial glory, where and when the celestial law governs. The test is, anyone who loves God with all his soul, might, mind, heart, and strength, and his brother as—as—as himself, is ready to enter upon the work as God directs.

As to the work in the Eastern Colorado District, some have been added to the church by baptism. We do not know of many, if any, who have fallen out by the way. The missionaries have been busy, so far as we know, so far as circumstances have conducted. We need not wonder at the trial the seasons may bring about in our day when we consult the questions propounded by the Lord to Job on this subject:

"Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war?" (Job 38: 22, 23. See also what Isaiah says is to be almost associated with the resurrection, 26: 20, 21. See also Doctrine and Covenants 45: 4-6.)

We note a spiritual advancement among our membership here in this Rocky Mission. A closer notice is being taken of the law relative to temporal duties. Since the advent of Bishop R. Bullard into this field quite a number of the Saints are rendering their "inventories" to determine how they stand with the Lord financially, and are coming forward with their tithing where they may be in arrears. God's blessings are attending richly, and their souls are enriched by the Spirit's approval.

God is with Brother Bullard with special power. Am satisfied that the Lord sent him to this mission. Saints at Wray and Denver are up in line along this move to give the work financial impetus. I surely will be pardoned for reference to the financial phase of the work. I think a good example ought to be emulated. Paul sometimes praised the Saints of his day for good examples, but refused to praise their selfishness and failures in duty. The Denver Saints have been divinely approved for their efforts to build a church to the name of the Lord in this city. You will all rejoice when I tell you that astonishing progress is being made on the building considering they are building it during this hard winter. They now expect to occupy the basement for worship by the 15th of February. We are looking for more "workers for the Master" soon, as indications now point. Am writing this from the tops of the mountains, eight thousand feet above sea level. Bro. James Kemp and family still keep "the camp fire blazing" away up here like a Lot to this generation; but we need Lots now, and Noahs as well, as in other days. We are trying to press on in the Master's service against the odds against us, hoping and laboring for the prosperity of Zion temporally and spiritually, and noting the progress being made in the late increase in numbers being added to the fold, the moving of the Holy Spirit on the hearts of many Zionward, the activity of the ministry, the opening of the Sanitarium, the soon hoped for development of the Order of Enoch, and the advancement the ministry and Saints are making.

From November 20 to December 23 I was over in southwest Yund County, where a small number of Saints reside with Bro. Ed Crawford in charge as priest. Snow was from seven to ten inches deep, but congregations numbering from eleven to twenty-five or thirty greeted us nightly, almost, to whom we preached with power of the Spirit. Here live Bro.

J. O. Colpitts, who is postmaster at Fox; Brn. Sherman Johnson, Father Zimmerman, the Willoughbys, and Brother Bellmore, Sister Bacon, and others who are trying to keep the faith. I think others there will yet learn and obey the gospel. They have lately furnished a place to hold their services in, with new seats, new lamps, and a new organ, a place which we hope the ministry near there will occupy.

I spent Christmas with Saints of Wray, sharing the "turkey" with "Aunt Ellen Bullard" and some thirty or more of her children, children-in-law, and grandchildren, and although I had not expected to get in anywhere on a Christmas tree this time, yet I was well remembered.

I pray the Lord to bless his Saints in all the world and save them in glory.

Your unworthy colaborer for Zion's weal,

C. SCOTT.

HOLDENVILLE, OKLAHOMA, January 27, 1909.

Dear Herald: The working of the Spirit upon the minds of men in many instances works out the purposes of the Lord in such a quiet and unassuming manner, that the very individuals most forcibly wrought upon do not recognize the miraculous features of the work; and they are therefore inclined to withhold praise from Him to whom all praise is due. He who will not recognize the service of his spiritual enlightenment by yielding obeisance to God, curtails the one window twixt himself and heaven; blocks the straight way to greater fields; diverts the very stream which enlivens his own soul.

That our Lord may have all the praise and some Saint the benefit of this faithful testimony, I relate the following faithful manifestation: On the 14th day of March, 1909, while engaged in the Lord's work in Kingfisher, Oklahoma, there came to my mind such a forceful and well-defined Spirit presentation concerning one T. S. Martin, of whom I had heard but whom I had never met since he was at our home thirty-five years before, when I was but an infant. It was such an impressive view of the future before him that by positive and prophetic dictation it was recorded in my journal that day, that this T. S. Martin would yet be led into the church through my ministration.

After writing this prediction with a "Thus saith the Spirit," I was myself astonished to read it and survey in my mind all the curious circumstances and the fact that this was written of a man who knew me not, nor I him, and who was then over a hundred miles away, and, for aught I knew (of myself), determined to live and die outside of the kingdom. But I dare not change that writing, for its truth was too impressive. Day followed day, weeks grew to months, and months numbered nearly a year, when on January 25, 1910, by the seeming fortunes of time and chance, I met Bro. T. S. Martin for the first time, and was filled with joy in the happy fulfillment of the Spirit's word, when before the sunset of the same day, I led both him and his worthy daughter of fifteen years under a halo of heavenly peace into the deep waters of the river and the deep grace of God. There we received the assurance that the Holy Spirit was leading and that this erstwhile son of the kingdom, lost for a while and found again, was accepted by the Lord and with joy among the angels.

The Saints who knew Brother Martin will rejoice with us in the fellowship of this prodigal son, who, unlike the scriptural parable, has returned with more than he departed with—a promising daughter. Our work here at Holdenville is encouraging. This is the third week of our protracted effort here, and by the labors of Brother Aylor, who is with us, a united quorum of branch officers, and the cooperation of a faithful membership, we led seven souls through the baptismal door into the kingdom last Sunday, and if there are not others who accept before we go, it will not be our fault, for we have made our best efforts to present them to the Lamb who taketh away the sins of the world. But the waters will be troubled again.

AVA, ILLINOIS, January 27, 1910.

Dear Herald: The writer left home in company with Bro. H. Sparling about two weeks ago and came to this place where we have been preaching ever since to quite an attentive crowd. There are only two Saints living in town, but they are doing what they can to help the gospel along and take care of the preachers. One of them gave us the money to order two Books of Mormon, one for herself and the other for a neighbor, not a member of the church. We have not had any baptisms yet, but there are several who are interested and whom we hope to see embrace the gospel.

We had the pleasure of dining with the marshal to-day. It is a good plan to keep on the good side of Uncle Sam's boys. He comes to our meetings every night, giving both good attention and material assistance. May the Lord help all of his people to work more diligently for character which brings honor in the sight of our Redeemer, who promised Israel the greatest gift, which is salvation, if they obey the law of tithing, with all other commandments.

JOHNNIE, NEVADA, January 26, 1910.

Editors Herald: I am in the mountains of Nevada, a little way from Goldfield. I am going to school every day and am learning very fast. I am in the seventh grade. I was born in 1897, so I am thirteen years old. I read the HERALD every week. I came to Nevada March 8, 1908, and like it very much. It has been very cold here, but is warmer the last few days. Pray for me, dear Saints, as I do for you.

EDWARD JONES.

PORTLAND, MAINE, January 22, 1910.

Editors Herald: I wish to drop these few lines to inquire if I did right in a certain incident which happened to me lately. At one of the revival meetings which were being held in this place in the Methodist church, the services were conducted by one Dr. D. S. Tay. After a short sermon and a number of sad stories, the usual questions were asked: Any wishing our prayers raise their hand. Any wishing prayers for a friend or relative, arise; all Christians arise; and finally, All wanting to go to heaven arise. I was the only one who had kept seated under this fire, so far as I could see. Doctor Tay asked me directly, in a loud voice, if I did not want to go to heaven. I shook my head. Right well I knew I would not be allowed to defend myself there, even if I had desired to do so. Of course I felt embarrassed. Doctor Tay made a short prayer to the effect that God should not give me rest day or night until I was converted. Did I do right?

I have since looked up the quotation bearing on this question and find God's people are to dwell on the earth. See Daniel 7: 27; also Psalm 37: 9-11; Revelation 5: 9, 10; Psalm 67: 3, 4; and many others. If I made a mistake in not rising, will some brother please write a short article and advise me what I ought to do in such a case. If I did right, I wish some one would write, that I may show it to some of my friends who think I did very wrong.

AUBURN, NEBRASKA, January 20, 1910.

Editors Herald: In answer to a call, as I was laboring in Plattsmouth on my way to the Pottawattamie District, Iowa, I came to this place to administer the ordinance of the gospel to Sr. Anna Young, who was very sick. When we reached her home we found her feeling some better, as Bro. Alvin Knisley had made her a call; but we prayed for her and she felt much better and we are in hopes she will recover from her spell of sickness.

While at Plattsmouth I held over and preached for them, and on Thursday evening, the 6th, two gave in their names for baptism. They are the daughter and son-in-law of Bro. Riley Jones, of that place, who are worthy people. There are more to follow at that place soon, if the work is continued. I expect to make a call there to look after the interest of the work from time to time. I was told they intend to organize a Sunday school and do all they can for the work.

While here at Auburn, we are lifting up our voice and there are some near the kingdom. On the 19th, at the evening service, five gave in their names for baptism and there are more to follow soon. We are thankful for the favor of the Lord, for he has truly assisted us in our work. We are still working for the triumph of Zion.

Editors Herald: My attention has been directed to a statement of criticism found in HERALD for January 19, page 67. The said criticism was urged against a comment of a writer in HERALD of November 10. On examination, I find the only letter containing the statement to which objection was offered, was written by the undersigned. In justice to myself, I wish to correct, for we believe the criticism to be "misleading." The brother, quoting from my letter says: "The writer said he could imagine Apostle William H. Kelley arising to a point of order, and asking for the law when he was elected to assist the district president." Now, I am responsible for that statement, but I am not responsible for the report on which it is based. And why the brother attacked my comment instead of the report of organization of the reunion, I am at a loss to determine, when in direct connection, and as a completion of the sentence, I stated in my letter of November 10: "When he was elected to assist the district president as the item appears in Glad Tidings from the report." Had the brother noticed this latter statement, it seems to me the attack on my comment would have been unnecessary. The criticism says: "Brother Kelley was not elected to assist the president, but was included in the motion to be associated with him." The report from which I received the idea that he was "elected to assist," is now before me, and I copy from it as follows: "Bro. S. Stroh was in charge, with W. H. Kelley and Leonard Scott elected as assistants." —Glad Tidings, September, 1909, page 7. If this be true, I am willing to stand by my comment, and if not true, I am not responsible, and the criticism on my statement is wholly unnecessary.

The statement in my letter of November 10, that, "We have some things yet to learn before we are orderly keepers of the law, as were the saints of old (see Acts 21: 24)" I am not yet ready to recant, but it need not be applied exclusively to the Howell reunion.

If an injustice has been done to "that body of people," it is from the fact that the report of the reunion in Glad Tidings is the original, and as the criticism stands it is not fair to me.

With good will to all, and the wish that sentiments which educate the people individually, and collectively, may be the correct ones, I am,

Yours hopefully,

S. W. L. SCOTT.

To the Saints: The article from An Observer in a November HERALD, and the experience of a Sister in the HERALD of January 5, in the matter of asking God for guidance in the matter of marrying; inspire the hope that all Saints contemplating matrimony will carry the matter to their Father above. The question of marriage and divorce, the creation and destruction of a home, is the most important one that affects social conditions to-day. Every good Saint should understand God's laws regarding the marriage relation, the sacredness of the tie between husband and wife, between parent and child, between God and home, before making a choice of their companion for life; then having made their choice, they should be prepared to abide faithfully to the end, never neglecting to watch and pray, lest the corrupting influences of the dance hall, the desire for strong drink, the covetous carnal desires, sins that lead to the divorce court, creep in and destroy their home.

If it is important to consult with God before creating a home, how much more important it is that we should consult with him before destroying a home, for involved with a home there are serious social, financial, and political interests to be considered, and there may be innocent children whose whole life and destiny will be affected. What a terrible thing it is to contemplate the startling number of American homes that yearly are destroyed by the crimes of drunkenness, divorce, and remarriage! What an inheritance of disgrace, what a legacy of shame, what a bitter, distressing memory of home the children of these people must carry through life! Yet, there are ministers, elders, evangelists, men who claim to be servants of God, who support and encourage these crimes against our home by their votes and by the blessings of their official approval.

Dear Saints, let us who have hearkened to the angel's message hark back to God's laws given through Christ's own lips, that no evil be encouraged or done in God's name, remembering that there are no exceptional cases under his laws, asking him to guide us in all our affairs.

ANOTHER OBSERVER.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 29, 1910.

The Chicago Saints are all smiles and they poke each other in the ribs and say, "Didn't he do it well?" All this because Bro. J. W. Wight reached way down and brought up the very best he had in store on the subject advertised in the pamphlet: "The difference between the Utah church and the Reorganized Church." We want to whisper that we never saw a man so rivet the doctrine of monogamy and leave so little excuse for a belief in polygamy, as did Brother Wight on this 27th day of January. He did it in the presence of a full house, including about ten Utah elders, and we don't believe they enjoyed the sermon; for when a man takes every prop from under a roof that you think a great deal of, and lets it go to the ground with a bang, why, you would rather be somewhere else when the trick is being done, and this the expression some of their faces plainly manifested.

After the roof fell our Utah friends had an opportunity to ask questions,—yes, more than this was granted them. They had an opportunity to express their opinion on the floor, and more than this,—the opportunity to crossexamine Brother Wight. He certainly made a good witness.

But that is not all: We want to whisper that Brother Vanderwood was on the platform with Brother Wight, and he is an old veteran in our cause when it comes to talking to those Utah boys. His eyes were all aglow, and every time Brother Wight would refer to a section in our Doctrine and Covenants, Brother Vanderwood would give from memory where the same might be found in the Utah edition. Brother Wight would get the reference, then look at Brother Vanderwood, who would sway his head, and up would come the reference as found in the Utah edition, and he referred to so many quotations during the sermon, that Brother Wight said he was a real live dictionary when it came to the Doctrine and Covenants. The arguments Brother Wight was clinching received an extra blow from the sledge hammer of Brother Vanderwood that capped the climax.

The special services held at the West Side church are over, and while we did not come up to our expectation in reaching the number anticipated, yet we feel perfectly satisfied with results. Some strangers had an opportunity to hear our gospel, and who can judge as to the fruit these efforts will eventually bring forth?

A very nice folder was arranged, well printed, and about two thousand of them were distributed in the neighborhood. The subjects to be treated were advised, as well as some select scripture, admonishing the people to examine a thing before they made up their mind as to what it contained. The wording of these folders was carefully arranged by Bro. Arthur Allen, our local missionary, and every precaution was used to advertise the subjects to be treated, in a novel and interesting way.

Although the weather conditions were bad part of the time, the Saints manifested an interest in the work by being present, and not only in this way, but also by lending a hand to such strangers as were present. We feel that we must make some comment on the grand spirit of unity and brotherly love that pervaded these special services. We feel that all were in harmony with the Master's commandment, "Thou shalt love one another."

In regard to the Utah elders, we wish to say they conducted themselves like gentlemen and appeared to be a fine class of young men. We were glad of their presence and extend an invitation to them to come again. We are sure that none looked upon them with a spirit of hatred, but rather with sympathy and love. The writer was pleased to shake hands with all of them. He learned that they are laboring in the mission field here in Chicago. Some time ago the Utah church had about twenty-five elders here in Chicago and they made a house to house canvass. Let us take notice.

I wish to say that the singing was in charge of Sr. Dottie Logan and Brother Randell, and the efforts of our choir were certainly in harmony with the grand and convincing sermons that were preached during the special services.

Chicago Saints are still alive and working for the Master.

22 ASHLAND AVENUE SOUTH.

OTTAWA, KENTUCKY.

Editors Herald: The little branch here, called Olive Branch, is still surviving and trying to build up the work in this place. With just ten members we find it a hard task to convince the people that we are trying to teach them the same gospel that Jesus taught. But David tells us to cast our bread upon the waters, and it will not return void.

We have had a twelve-session debate between one W. G. Roberts, of the Church of Christ, and Bro. E. E. Long, Bro. J. W. Metcalf, of Louisville, as moderator. We feel that we gained the victory, while some say that Roberts was the smartest man that ever was in this country. Well, he may be, in worldly affairs, but I am sure he is not in the sight of God. I believe we have gained some friends for the work and hope to gain more in the future. I don't think Roberts proved a single point. All he could say was that Joseph Smith had more than one wife, and then got on to the Book of Mormon.

We had Bro. John Harp with us a few days. He only preached two sermons, and then was called home by the sickness of his wife. We are sorry to give him up so soon, as he seems to gain friends for Christ wherever he goes.

Bro. W. H. Forbes, of Mount Vernon, is trying to build up the work here and in other places in Rockcastle County.

We desire the prayers of the Saints that we may ever be faithful to the One that blesses us so much.

HENRY OLIVER.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, February 10, 1910.

Editors Herald: This finds me a long way from my appointed field. Was called out here by the serious illness of my father and mother, whom I had not seen for nine years. I am pleased to say that they are both very much better and seem to be on the road to recovery. I am now on the ground of my early childhood; was among the first male children born in this State. Here I met Bro. I. M. Smith, who has been given Bozeman as his objective point. Taking advantage of my presence, he is now laboring in other parts of the State, leaving me in charge of the work here.

I am happy to state that the prospects of the latter day work in this place were never so bright as now. A new branch is being organized with some twenty-five members. Convinced that the past method of meeting in hired halls or in private houses is not the best way to establish the work, they have decided to secure a permanent church home. Bro. Thomas Reese, R. M. Esgar, and John Pritchard, the soliciting and building committee, have been doing some excellent service. They have bought the old Catholic church building with a parsonage attached. When renovated and fitted up for our use there will be a neat little chapel and residence for the minister in charge. It will be necessary to place special help in charge until the branch gets strong enough to carry on alone. The powers that be have intimated willingness to take care of the work, which gives the little flock heart to do something substantial to plant the cause here. The committee set a commendable example by heading the list with substantial donations, and have been working like Trojans to get donations from their personal and business friends. The Saints at other places in the State have been solicited and have responded, so far, nobly.

Every missionary to this State for the last twenty years has come away with the conviction that it is a hard field in which to labor, as far as getting people interested in the message is concerned. It uses up all a man's enthusiasm, as a rule, and draws heavily on his faith and spirituality. What, then, shall be said of the few members who live here? The very air seems devoid of spirituality. Money-making, pleasure, and general indifference to religion are their constant environment. It takes something to stand up against that year after year. It is only right that good, strong men be sent out here to help develop the work in different localities, when the Saints show a willingness to stand by the mission financially and otherwise. The great northwest has, during the last ten years, been developing very fast, and there has been a big influx of new settlers. The railways have been anxious to sell long distance tickets, and advertised the country farther west, thus sending the immigration through this State. In the boom Montana has not had its proper share until just lately. People back East who are looking for desirable locations and business opportunities, are now finding that Montana is on the map. This State is looking for a big influx of new settlers this coming summer.

Will do what I can for the work while here, and expect to return in time for General Conference.

G. R. WELLS.

Evans-Phillips Debate.

The city of London, Canada, has recently been the scene of a lively discussion between the Latter Day Saints, and Christadelphians; the sides being championed by Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, and Pastor R. W. Phillips, of Guelph. It was held from December 13 to 17. For two nights Bishop Evans affirmed the following propositions: The Bible teaches that there is in man an immortal spirit which continues to live in a conscious state after the death of the body, between death and the resurrection. The King James Bible was to be the standard of evidence.

Bishop Evans began his speech by stating that the object of the discussion should be the desire to elicit truth, rather than obtain victory, and began his affirmative with the statement that man was made a little lower than the angels, quoting Hebrews 2: 7; 7: 9; John 1; Colossians 1: 15-17; Hebrews 2: 14, etc.

We will not attempt to give your readers the scriptural quotations in their succession or wording, as proven by his opponent's statement in his first reply, when he said, "I will not attempt to answer all the scripture Bishop Evans has given us this evening"; neither did he, as the sequel will show; for Bishop Evans not only gave much proof concerning the existence of the Spirit of Christ before he tabernacled in the body, but showed the creation of man mentioned in Genesis 1, had reference to the creation of the spirit, as the second chapter says, "There was not a man to till the ground." The man of Genesis 1 was not a plowman, but had to be fenced about with bones and sinews and clothed with skin and flesh before he could "till the ground." He then went on to show that there is a spirit in man, that man has both spirit and breath, that the spirit of man is the candle of the Lord enlightening the inward parts of the body; that this spirit is conscious apart from, as well as in, the body (Ezekiel 37).

Bishop Evans also showed that Jesus acknowledged in his teaching of the rich man and Lazarus that the spirits of both good and bad were conscious between death and the resurrection; that Christ after his own death went and preached to the spirits in prison, for the reason that all men will be judged according to the gospel (Romans 2: 16). The gospel was preached to the dead, that they might be judged as men who had received the privilege of hearing the gospel in the flesh will be judged; but live according to the law of God in the Spirit, which they could not possibly do if their spirits had no conscious existence between death and the resurrection.

Bishop Evans concluded his first speech by saying that death means a separation, not a state of annihilation, and Paul said, "God is the Father of spirits."

Mr. Phillips began his reply by saying that he and his people claimed to be saints. That the term saints meant those that were taken out from the world by the word of God.

"There is not a plain statement in the word of God that says that man has an immortal spirit." He then went on to state his definition of the word spirit, saying it had four significations: 1, The breath we breathe; 2, a spirit-being, an angel, spirit-body; 3, an influence from a being, as the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost (there was nothing immortal about that), also a spirit of feeling; 4, phantasma—which means a ghost, a nothing.

He then stated that "spirit" does not mean deathless, and that immortality is mentioned but once, and refers to God only, and quoted, "God only hath immortality"; but he did not finish the statement. He then quoted (as though he wished the words applied to himself): "A workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth," and said that the key to understanding scriptures was the statement of Jesus that "Lazarus is dead," and then claimed that if Lazarus was alive between his death and resurrection, we would have some history of what he saw and heard, and asked the question, "Where was his immortal spirit?" and quoted, "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." He then said if there is no resurrection all perish; that the resurrection doctrine shows the true meaning of how all are to live again, and said all are sleeping in the dust, and there is not a captive released yet. He then explained the appearance of Moses and Elias on the Mount of Transfiguration as a panorama, and positively stated Moses was not there, Elias was not there. He referred to Jesus' statement to the thief on the cross by saying, paradise is a garden and there is no paradise in existence to-day; the time is coming when paradise will be here.

His reply to Bishop Evans' statement concerning the rich man and Lazarus, was that this was a parable, the rich man signifying the Jew and the poor man the Gentile.

The second night Bishop Evans showed that Mr. Phillips' statement, "God only hath immortality," was not only misrepresenting Paul, but garbling what he said. The statement being, "Who only hath immortality dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto"; that as no natural man can approach unto the light and glory of God's presence, till purified by the power of the gospel, and the body redeemed by the power of the resurrection, body and spirit thus united shall see God.

Mr. Phillips tried to tell the people that Bishop Evans had four persons in one, the night before, as Bishop Evans had showed that a live man was dead to sin, and that the outward and inward man all pertained to one person; and then he went on to show that a man had no preëminence above the beast, for all have one breath, all are of the dust, and all return to dust again; and then exultantly exclaimed, "There, you see the Bible says we are all beasts." Some one in the audience called, "Here! here!" Bishop Evans inquired, "Where? where?" as he would like to see the beast.

Bishop Evans had shown that as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

Mr. Phillips in his reply rendered this quotation thus, "As in Adam all die, even so shall all in Christ be made alive," as he wanted some ground work upon which to affirm for two nights the second proposition, namely, The Bible teaches that the wicked, depraved, and the heathen have no immortal spirit, and will be annihilated by death, either the first or second.

Mr. Phillips spent nearly the entire time of his first speech on this proposition by preaching about the coming reign of Christ on the earth. His principal statement in affirmation of his proposition was, "There is a certain class in the world that will never have a resurrection." If Mr. Phillips had not introduced new matter in his last speech on the first proposition, Bishop Evans would have had nothing to reply to in his first speech of his negation.

The following are the principal citations used by Mr. Phillips: Psalm 6: 5; Psalm 146: 4; Ecclesiastes 9: 10.

Bishop Evans showed that these scriptures had reference only to the body of man; that if they proved there was no spirit in man prior to his death, which the Bible says returns to God who gave it, they would also prove that there was no resurrection of the body. He went on to prove by the following that all would be resurrected: (John 5: 28, 29; Matthew 25: 32; Revelation 20: 12.)

At the close of most every speech Mr. Phillips would say he could have given more evidence if he only had the time. Bishop Evans would say, "Bring on your evidence; that is what we want to examine." Nevertheless Mr. Phillips sat down upon one occasion before his time expired.

About the only further scriptural evidences presented by Mr. Phillips were the statements from Isaiah: "The dead can not praise thee as I do this day," and Psalm 1: 5: "The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous." His comment on this last was, "They won't be there."

When pressed by Bishop Evans to answer whether he believed in a personal devil, Mr. Phillips replied, "Why, the men are all devils." This caused the ladies to smile, whereupon Mr. P. said, "If the ladies wish to see the devil they may just look in the glass."

Bishop Evans asked him to explain about the devils Jesus cast out entering into the herd of swine causing them to run "violently down a steep place into the sea" (Matthew 8: 32); if there were no good or bad spirits who were a conscious, intelligent entity, or if there was no personal devil? Mr. Phillips said that those said to be possessed of devils were lunatics, and Christ commanded the disease to leave them and go into the swine and it did so.

At the conclusion of the debate the question arose as to how the victory was to be decided. Mr. Phillips' moderator, Mr. Guelphmeyer, stated that he was satisfied his man had sustained his position throughout the entire discussion. Bishop Evans' moderator, Elder R. C. Russell, however, claimed the victory for the bishop. This called for a show of hands from the audience as to whether a vote should be taken by them. On the vote being called as to who was the victor, all excepting some of Mr. Phillips' people (who refused to vote at all), voted in favor of Bishop Evans, with the exception of one man, who voted for Mr. Phillips.

In this discussion the Saints' faith in the restored gospel was increased, and others have become interested and are now investigating the work.

JOHN SHIELDS.

DENVER, COLORADO, February 7, 1910.

Editors Herald: Yesterday, "our Lord's day," dawned upon us with all the brightness of a Colorado morning. The sun in its strength and glory came forth as a bridegroom from his chamber, and kissed the mountain tops in their glistening glory, as their snowy whiteness reflected as from myriads of mirrors the light from its powerful rays. It was just the kind of morning which fills the appreciative mind with admiration and thankfulness to the all-wise Creator for his wonderful arrangements for the blessing of his creatures. Surely the Saints of God should not prove unmindful of the manifold blessings of their Father. This day was of especial interest to the people of God in this city, as part of the new church building was ready for occupancy, and hearts were beating with gladness as they wended their way to their new church home. The capacity of the basement was put to test as the Sunday school assembled, but though the classes were in close proximity to each other, the session, under the faithful supervision of their beloved superintendent, Sr. Louise Fishburn, was one of profit and deep interest.

After the dismissal of the school the Saints assembled to partake of the emblems of the crucified Lamb of God, and surely he was there by his authorized representative, the Holy Spirit. We met in fasting and prayer before the Lord that he would make the occasion one of blessing to his people. A calm settled upon the assembly; the atmosphere took on a celestial peace, for the Master had made his presence felt. What tongue can portray the sensations of this holy calm, as it takes possession of the souls of God's chosen people! Well might David say a day in the courts is better than a thousand, for he had tasted of the sweets of true worship. The emblems were broken, poured and blessed, and the feast was spread. "The song of the heart is a prayer unto me," the Master has said, and surely when the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee," was sung, the Spirit which comes from the Father and the Son, came near and within the hearts of the faithful worshipers, and the prayer in song was answered.

Almost immediately after the emblems had been administered, the Spirit enabled them who could no longer restrain themselves, to give utterance to what was imparted to them, and in tongues and prophecy the Lord made known to us his pleasure and acceptance of the sacrifices of his people. Messages of comfort and instruction were delivered to some whose anxious souls had reached out for needed light from their Father, and their overflowing hearts found relief, as the fountains provided for the outlet of unspeakable joy gushed forth in crystal drops, and coursed down the cheeks of God's happy children.

This occasion seemed to be the beginning of a new era for the people of God in this city, and when the kind Father commands the work and sacrifice of his people, in such a wondrous and generous display of his power and love toward them, we may well look forward to greater faithfulness on the part of his children. If this is the sequel to the efforts already made by the Saints here, in the erection of a suitable building to be dedicated to the true worship of God, and the faithfulness on the part of some to pay part of their indebtedness to the Lord, in "tithes and offerings," what is there in all the promises of God that will not be showered upon his people, when each one makes out and files his inventory with the Bishop, and no longer withholds from the Lord that which is due? Saints, the Lord's hands are ready laden with blessings unmeasured to open unto us, the windows of heaven will open wide to his willing, sacrificing, obedient children, if we will come up to the help of the Lord with our finances as he urges us to do through his authorized servants. We are surely reaching a crisis in our experience as a church, when God will put to the test his people in a manner which will prove their loyalty to him and his wonderful and mighty work. The forces of heaven will unite with the church militant to bring about our heavenly Father's purposes, if we put forth the soul energy we are called upon to exert in the interest of Zion. Our souls should thrill with delight at the mention of the work for Zion, the home of the pure in heart.

Fellow-laborers, and builders together with Christ who gave his life, glory, honor, his place of power with his Father, surrounded with angels of light to bring salvation to man. Let us not be continually crying out for help from our heavenly Father, while the help is right at our very fingers. Let us grasp the opportunities every day brings us. Work for and in harmony with the Master. Consider the honor. You men with means in the church, join hands with the Lord in the work of Zion's redemption. Now is the time to move forward, while it is day and you have the means at hand. Why delay the day of Zion's triumph? Many are extending their business projects so far that their hands are tied, so far as help to the church is concerned, and their obligations to the world are increasing continually, while the work of God is crying out for help. Is not this negligence criminal in the sight of God, while he through the right and lawful channel, is urging all to consecrate to his cause their surplus and what would prove of such help to Zion's cause; while this surplus is placed among the unsafe, ungodly, and dishonest projects for the sake of gain, and they thus leave themselves without a surplus of cash to help the church meet its obligations to the church and its poor? Let us not trespass so far upon the long-suffering and tender mercy of God.

There are some of the true blood here who are doing all they can for the cause of Christ, and are shining lights among their fellows. May their number increase. There is much to encourage, and the promise of a great work to be accomplished in this city is encouraging the Saints to diligence. May we assist the Lord to bring about Zion's redemption.

My work here has been performed under somewhat trying conditions, as my health has not been good. The altitude seriously affected my heart and other organs, which gave me apprehension as to any permanent usefulness among the Saints here; but for the past two weeks I have been much better, and am hopeful of accomplishing a work with the help of my heavenly Father. The Saints are making a heroic effort to meet the demands made upon them in the erection of their new church building. The building is situated in a very healthful and attractive part of the city, on Speer boulevard and Logan avenue. It is of red brick, with white trimmings, with two towers on front. It is about sixty by forty feet, and will seat in the auditorium about two hundred and fifty, with nicely furnished basement for Sunday school and prayer meetings, nicely lighted with Colorado sunshine, and electricity for night service, ventilation after our eastern method, and best of all, the Saints are bringing into it the good Spirit of the Master which will make hallowed the sanctuary of the Lord.

The brethren most prominent in meeting the expense of the new church are Elder C. E. Everett, E. H. Belrose, W. H. Fishburn, E. J. Williams, and others, whose names do not come to mind at writing; but all are known to him whose work is being advanced through their efforts and sacrifice.

Brother Shupe is to be commended as builder for his faithful service and sacrifice. My association with the brethren and Saints here have been of a most pleasant character, especially while laboring in company with Bro. Columbus Scott whose pleasant smile always makes one feel good. May the Master abundantly bless him in his work of love for him.

RICHARD BULLARD.

VALLEY CENTER, MICHIGAN, February 1, 1910.

Editors Herald: The dedication of our little chapel was held Sunday, January 23, as was announced through the columns of your valuable paper. Elder J. A. Grant, of Detroit, assisted by Bro. Richard D. Weaver, priest, delivered the dedicatorial sermon and prayer to an appreciative audience. We expected District President William Grice and Elder O. J. Hawn to be with us, but owing to the blizzard of Saturday it was impossible for anyone from a distance to get here. This was a disappointment, because we expected to have a branch organized, as we will have a membership of thirty-five. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us here. Two years ago Elder George M. Shippy organized a Sunday school, and later Elder R. Etzenhouser organized a Religio society in the home of Thomas Muir, three families attending. The societies soon grew until the attendance was too large to be held in a private house; so last spring we started to erect our little chapel. The Lord blessed our efforts as we had it finished and furnished ready to occupy by the last of November, free of debt.

Elder Grant and Brother Weaver held a series of meetings here a week previous to the dedication to a fair house and good interest. I feel that there is a good work to be accomplished here soon, and if this little band of Saints will continue to do God's will, I know he will help us, and our feeble efforts to further his cause will indeed be blessed. May the Lord prosper and bless his work in all the world.

MARGARET JENNIE MUIR.

The Long-Roberts Debate.

I will contribute a few lines to your valuable columns with reference to the Long and Roberts debate, which was held at Brodhead, Kentucky, from January 3 to 14 inclusive. Roberts' stock in hand was a lot of bombastic braggadocio, just about the same old hash as he went over with Bro. T. C. Kelley. He said that the Lord never organized his church until Pentecost, and the Bible was given to make believers. (John 20: 30, 31.) The apostles were all unbelievers and devils until Pentecost, and there was not a single believer among them, and he said that Long was an infidel and did not believe the Bible, nor he does not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, nor in baptism for the remission of sins, nor in laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost. And he

News From Branches

TORONTO, ONTARIO.

The work in Toronto is advancing. Our Bishop R. C. Evans had to give in, owing to sickness, February 5, although he held his audience for about thirty minutes. He is around again and is making some of his famous taffy for a church taffy pull to-night, and we all thank our heavenly Father for raising him up and sparing him for the wonderful work he is doing in Toronto, as he is still the talk of the town.

The branch is doing fine and all meetings are well attended.

For myself, I am still trying to hold on to the rod of iron, so to speak. I am isolated, as my work calls on me Saturday and Sunday and holidays, and I am not privileged to attend many services. I catch a sacrament about once in two months. So the dear HERALD is a wonderful lot of help to my spiritual man, although I get all news of services through my wife being able to attend; so I am truly thankful for what I do receive.

I am greatly taken up with the Jubilee number of the HERALD and will prize it very much. Ever praying for my brothers and sisters and the gospel. God bless you all.

S. T. RIDLEY.

PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND.

Having been chosen correspondent I asked what my duties were, and was told, "Just let them know Providence is alive." So here we are on paper, and if one could visit our weekly prayer meetings, you would find we were also spiritually alive, as our meetings are of that kind that are a continuation of good things from week to week.

The Massachusetts district conference convened with us on February 5 and 6. We were disappointed in not greeting our missionary in charge. The conference was a spiritual feast from beginning to end. The Sunday morning sacrament and prayer meeting was one that will long be remembered, as the Lord spoke through his servants and handmaidens, to profit, comfort, instruct, and edify. Especially was this so in the word given by Elder Suttill to the priesthood of the district, admonishing to more faithful service, with some beautiful promises as a result.

Three baptisms at the close of prayer service, one an inmate of a Fall River hospital. As they immersed him I pictured the scene of yore when the lame followed the Master.

Some familiar faces were absent caring for their sick, and ere conference adjourned news was received that Bro. Earl Newcomb, of Boston, and Little Bessie Megathlin, of Brockton, had been called "home." We remembered the mourners in our prayers.

Elder Farrell's evening preaching was in his usual forceful manner, the gist being the shortness of time and danger of procrastination.

The Aid Society has fitted up a retiring room in the vestry of the church, and Sister Saunders has donated a new oak communion table for the auditorium. Such gifts are always acceptable.

Sunday school and Religio are flourishing. On the last Sunday in January, the seventy-sixth birthday of Brother Gondolf was recognized with appropriate exercises and the gift of a large bouquet, his baby grandson Allen conveying the gift, although nearly toppling over by its weight. As he passed the gift he lisped, "Say, Thank you," and smiles were passed around.

Our youthful priest, E. M. Brown, spoke for us February 13.

Our young people are doing well and improving their time wisely by attending evening high school with future plans for "Graceland."

GEORGIE M. SPINNETT.

said, "How does it come that their healings are all within their own selves? I have never seen any of them." No, Brother Long told him, that he always came around to the back door like a tramp for a hand out, is the reason he never saw anything transpire. Then he said that there was no witness to prove that an angel came to Joseph Smith. "I only ask for one." And when Brother Long showed him that there was, then he said he meant in the room and at the fence, and he said that after he had seen an angel he turned his back upon God and became one of the most wicked men. Brother Long showed him that Peter cursed and swore he never knew Jesus, and Paul had to withstand him to the face. He said that the war prophecy was not written until 1841. The Saints had plenty of time to fix up the story. But Brother Long made him drop the war prophecy, and there was an old Methodist preacher present throughout the debate and he said that Roberts' statement was untrue, for he said that when the first guns were shot at Fort Sumpter that it came out in the papers and everybody said that there is the fulfillment of Jo Smith's prophecy, and he well remembers it. Well, he said Joseph became unconscious or crazy after seeing the vision, and therefore he could not tell anything that he had seen for he was unconscious, crazy, and Brother Long referred him to Daniel 8: 27, where Daniel had a vision and he fainted and was sick for some days afterwards. He said, "I'll show that O. Cowdery joined the Methodist Church and that Kelley lied about it. If Joseph Smith had an angelic messenger he was from hell." And Long showed him up with, such reasoning would overthrow the divinity of the Bible, that all such reasoning was being carried on by the infidel world. He said Joseph Smith passed over the river in the night time secretly, therefore Jo was carrying on his meanness in the night secretly. And Brother Long showed how the disciples took Paul by night and let him down by the wall in a basket secretly.

He said that the Mormons believed that Jo Smith would be exalted above Jesus Christ. "They have kicked the Bible out of existence, and he is one of the infidels that reads the books, and they believe that they must look to Joseph Smith for salvation." Brother Long showed him up as one misrepresenting our claims, who wants to make the work of God look as ridiculous as he can. He told the people not to call us Latter Day Saints, but call us infidels. Long told him he would show who was infidel before the debate was over, and he surely did it.

He said we believed there must be another gospel, therefore the Book of Mormon. God never intended for the Jews to gather and rebuild Jerusalem. He tried hard to make the people believe that the Doctrine and Covenants, 59: 8, teaches that Zion must be redeemed by blood; but Long showed that it taught us if it was that our enemies would be upon us.

He made light of Brother Long's bald head, and said an empty house needed no cover; and Long told him that you never see marble tops on cheap furniture. (Laughter.)

Every time he would try to tell something on Long to make the people laugh, Long would turn it on him, until he just about gave it up after the first three or four days.

Brother Long made many friends for the work. I was Brother Long's moderator and a man by the name of Hubbard was Roberts', and we chose a Baptist preacher by the name of A. J. Pike for chairman. He was a fair man. He gave Brother Long and myself a room at his house and treated us nicely. So Campbellism is about dead at Brodhead now. I hope to see the work grow in other parts. The Saints there are strengthened over the victory.

I am your brother in gospel bonds,

J. W. METCALF.

Conference Notices.

Owing to sickness, some of which is contagious, it is necessary to put off the conference of the Southwestern Texas District. You are therefore to meet on Saturday morning at 10 a. m. before the fourth Sunday in March, 1910. By order of district presidency, Ed N. McRae, president, D. S. Palmer, vice-president.

Florida District will convene at Santa Rosa church near Berrydale, on February 26, at 10.30 a. m. We shall be glad to have a report from each of the priesthood of district. E. N. McCall, secretary.

The Order of Evangelists.

Dear Brethren: Will all the members of this order be so kind as to send me brief reports of labor done during or within the conference year, sending them about March 15, and not later than March 31? If you have done no labor, please tell us why, also your prospects and desires. I shall feel grateful if every member of the order will comply with this reasonable request.

We hope that the permanent and legal successor to our departed brother and president will be indicated at the coming April conference. If so, it will be better for as many of the patriarchs as practicable to be present; and if not, it will be still more important for them to be present. There are a number of matters of more or less importance, which should be passed upon by the order, some of which, perhaps, will not be acted upon until after a successor to Bro. Alexander H. Smith shall have been chosen. Please give these things careful and prayerful consideration, for their importance demands it.

LAMONI, IOWA, February 17, 1910.

Priesthood Meeting.

The joint meeting of the quorums of the Lamoni Stake will be held on Sunday, February 27, at 2.30 p. m., and the subject for discussion will be "Our calling to the ministry; what does it mean to us in the Lamoni Stake?"

The discussion will be led by Elder J. F. Garver, and since the subject is such an important and seriously practical one, all should attend who possibly can. All members of the priesthood are invited to attend this meeting.

Notice.

The Southwestern Iowa reunion, comprising the Fremont, Pottawattamie, and Northern Nebraska districts, will this year be held at or near Thurman, Iowa. Particulars will be published later.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Request for Prayer.

Sr. Abbie Hatch, of North Penobscot, Maine, requests the prayers of the Saints in her behalf that if it be the Lord's will she may be healed of all her diseases and spared to bring up her children. Her faith in prayer is strong, as she has already experienced God's power and goodness.

Pastoral.

To the Saints of Montana: Last November, Brn. Fred A. and S. S. Smith, minister and associate in charge of this mission, came to this place, and seeing the necessity for an organized branch and feeling the time had come for such a step, proceeded to organize what is now known as the Bozeman Branch.

On January 12, 1910, we held a business meeting and appointed a committee of three, R. M. Esgar, T. Reese, and J. Pritchard, to raise the means and either buy or build a suitable place for worship. January 20, this committee bought a church building, with parsonage attached, and are now trying to raise sufficient money to pay for this property and make such improvements in both church and parsonage as are necessary to make them suitable for occupancy.

We are only few in number, and many of this few are not financially able to help; hence the success of this undertaking depends upon a very few members. Will you help us?

This church building will make Bozeman an ideal place for holding district conferences; elders passing through will find it a suitable place to tell the gospel story, when they stop to see the Saints here; an elder will be located here who can easily be reached in case of sickness or death; and hence, the purchase of this property, instead of being altogether a local affair, will be for the betterment of our church work throughout the entire district. Again I ask, Can we have your help? All money sent to R. M. Esgar, 629 West Main street, Bozeman, Montana, will be fully appreciated, receipted for, and properly used. ISAAC M. SMITH, Branch President.

BOZEMAN, MONTANA, January 25, 1910.

Resolution of Condolence.

At the conference of the New South Wales District, which convened at Hamilton, New South Wales, on December 25 and 26, 1909, we were appointed to draft resolutions of condolence to be sent Sister Smith and Sister Burton, and copies of the following have been sent them:

"Whereas, The Lord has taken to himself our beloved Patriarchs Alexander H. Smith and Joseph F. Burton, and,

"Whereas, We, the Saints of the New South Wales District, cherish the memory of both and are still profiting by their kindly labors of love in our midst, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we join in extending our deepest sympathies to Sister Smith and Sister Burton, together with their families, in this great sorrow and bereavement."

Signed,

J. W. DAVIS,
W. J. HAWORTH,

Died.

DURAND.—Elder Edgar H. Durand, born May 31, 1841, at Leona, Michigan; died November 16, 1909, at his home in Detroit, Michigan. He served as a Union soldier during the rebellion, after which his propensities led him into the ministry, where he served awhile in the work of the Second Adventist Church. He soon discovered a lack of spiritual energy there, and severed connection therewith; though still in religious work along different lines, until 1891, when the gospel was carried to him by Elder W. J. Smith, who in 1892 baptized him. He was subsequently ordained an elder and labored in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, and elsewhere, where his labors will be gratefully remembered by many whose souls were cheered by his ministrations. Elder Durand had been feeble for a long time, but being anxious to be at work, left home to labor in the Eastern Michigan District, where he was stricken with paralysis. He died at his post. His wife, who is a member of the Methodist Church, feels her loss keenly and desires through the HERALD and Ensign to extend her thanks to all the Saints who assisted in caring for Brother Durand during his illness. He was laid to rest in the Woodmere Cemetery at Detroit, to await the final roll call of the faithful. Sermon was preached by Elder W. J. Smith, the Methodist pastor assisting by offering a very beautiful prayer. Brother Durand was a staunch soldier in the army of the Lord, and has gone to rest, where war clouds throb no longer in the paradise of God.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF

Michigan, I learned that I was billed to deliver two lectures. While there I met with an accident whereby I nearly lost my life. It occurred thus: I was riding a bicycle when an intoxicated teamster forced me to go between his wagon and the street car; the passage was so narrow that I ran into the car. I was knocked several feet, arose to my feet and walked a few steps when I staggered and fell to the ground. A physician happened to be passing by in his carriage, witnessed the accident and rushed to my assistance. When he felt my pulse, he said, "His pulse is gone, I fear he is a dead man." I was conscious, and upon hearing this statement I tried to move my fingers and tried to draw my breath, but it seemed as though I was powerless to act. Elder George Shaw, who passing by, was attracted by the crowd that surrounded me. He came as close as he could and recognized me. He made his way to my side and grasped my hand. He, as I was later informed, presented me in silent prayer to our heavenly Father, when instantly I revived, but began to suffer intense pain. It seemed as though my body was broken all down one side, as also my head. In a short time one side of my head and one side of my body was black and blue, and I was cut and bruised elsewhere. When the pain became intense the doctor administered a hypodermic injection into my arm. This was too much for me. I not having had even a cup of tea or coffee for many years, or any other stimulants, my stomach was very susceptible to a narcotic. The doctor then poured brandy into me. The ambulance having

NUMBER 9

Editorial

WRITERS ON SOCIALISM, TAKE NOTICE.

Since the publication of John W. Rushton's article on the socialistic church a number of the brethren who are advocates of socialism have communicated with us asking if we will give space to an article setting forth the ideals and proposed methods of socialism from a prosocialistic standpoint. We can not give space to all of the articles that we are likely to receive on that subject, but we will make this proposition: Let those who have made a study of socialism, who are in sympathy with it, and prepared to state its true teachings, send in their articles, and from the manuscripts received between now and June 1 we will select and publish the best article. The object is to secure for our readers in the most clear and comprehensive form reliable information on this subject. Articles should be written in an independent manner and not in reply to any articles previously appearing in the HERALD. All articles must be typewritten. We suggest that those who write present the standards of socialism; by this we mean the works of those leaders in socialistic thought that are generally accepted by socialists as being authoritative, so that students may know where to turn to get precise and reliable statements of socialist doctrine.

MAGAZINE NUMBER OF THE SAINTS' HERALD.

"AMBOY TO INDEPENDENCE."

The HERALD editors are planning to issue illustrated Magazine Numbers of the HERALD, at intervals, as matters can be arranged.

The first of these Magazine Numbers will be issued April 6. It will be illustrated and printed on good book paper, with special cover design. The complete table of contents will be announced later.

As the issue falls on April 6, the fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of President Joseph Smith, a part of the number will be devoted to that occasion. It will include some excellent pictures of President Smith never before published.

Bishop R. C. Evans, who has toured the United States, Canada, England, Scotland, and Wales with President Smith, will write of his associate as he has known him at home and abroad. This article will include a splendid picture of the Brethren Smith and Evans, taken at Bothwell Castle, Scotland. Canadian and British Saints will find this especially interesting.

As the General Conference meets at Independence on the day of publication, a special section will be devoted to Independence. The historian of the Independence Stake and others will contribute to this section. The cover design will include a three-color design of the Independence church. Independence people will be interested in this number.

A group of our well-known pastors is the subject of another article, in which will be presented pictures of and facts concerning some of our best-known elders engaged in pastoral work. This will be a representative group, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Articles on archæology, work among the Indians, and social reform will complete an unusually attractive number.

Extra copies may be secured for ten cents, or sixty cents per dozen. Many who did not heed our advice regarding the Jubilee number ordered late and were disappointed, although two thousand and five hundred extra copies were printed. Regular subscribers receive the Magazine Numbers free.

If you desire extra copies of this number order now—at once! Simply specify the "Magazine Number." Orders received after April 1 will not be filled. This number as a memorial of the fiftieth anniversary, "Amboy to Independence," will be worth the subscription price for the year.

WILLIAMS-POOL DEBATE.

Some time ago I received an urgent request from Rev. S. O. Pool, editor of Biblical Education, Washington, and a representative minister of the "Church of Christ" (non-progressive) to attend a series of meetings at Riverside, California, the ostensible purpose of the meetings to discover the present status and territorial bounds of the "kingdom of heaven."

Bro. J. C. Powell, of the same place, backed up this invitation with an assurance of "food and shelter." I took Bro. C. E. Crumley into my confidence, offering to share the good things coming. We needed a vacation anyway. He at once fell in with the plan.

We were not disappointed. Mr. Pool is an interesting study from a psychological standpoint. He is a fluent speaker, a sophist, a dramatist, and withal an adept in pandering to the prejudices of the people.

Brother Crumley was called upon to offer the opening prayer on alternate evenings and made an excellent short talk the last evening.

We have been attending other churches considerable of late, but have decided to refrain—until the next invitation.

We told the missionary in charge of our coming and he acquiesced;—said he would like to come himself.

Under the circumstances we feel ourselves beyond censure. I found Brother Crumley a congenial companion. The last night of the meeting a large crowd of Saints came over from San Bernardino. The little outing did us good, for we return to our work more than ever confirmed in the invincible character of the truth which we have espoused.

Your brother in Christ,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

P. S. The missionary in charge could not resist the temptation. He came over the next to the last evening of the meeting.

T. W. W.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

By letter from Bishop E. L. Kelley, we learn of the death on Sunday morning, February 6, of Sr. Aggie Armstrong, wife of Bro. William Armstrong, who has been so long the worthy secretary of the British Isles Mission, and who has been serving also as agent for the HERALD in Manchester, England. Sister Armstrong died in Manchester.

The Bothwell Times, Bothwell, Ontario, Thursday, February 17, has a half column devoted to the farewell party given to Bro. and Sr. Elijah Gilbert and daughter, who have recently moved to Lamoni. Brother Gilbert will have charge of the electric light and power plant of the Herald Publishing House.

We learn by letter from Philadelphia, dated February 23, that Bro. Walter W. Smith, pastor of the church at that place, is seriously ill, having been operated on for appendicitis at the hospital, Sunday morning, February 20, at two o'clock. He has been very low, but at the time of writing was in a fair way to recover. The prayers of the Saints are solicited.

Elder T. W. Chatburn sends us a clipping from the Salt Lake Tribune, February 20, in which it is set forth that the branch of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in Salt Lake City is contemplating building or purchasing a church suitable for the use of the branch.

A few weeks ago the Sunday schools were requested to purchase rent coupons good for room rent in either of the dormitories at Graceland College, the proceeds to be used in meeting the balance of the cost of erecting Patroness Hall, the dormitory for women. The school at Magnolia, Iowa, on February 22, gave a supper from which they realized $26.60 which they have sent to the college trustees for this worthy object. By this means they have not only helped the college, but they have undoubtedly promoted sociability in their own branch, and no one has been impoverished. Many more schools could follow this example with profit to themselves without injury to anyone. Who will be next?

The Davidson Record, of Tillman County, Oklahoma, February 11, contains the report of a public address delivered by Elder A. M. Chase in the beginning of a series of meetings to be held at Davidson. The address is in the nature of a historical sketch of the Latter Day Saints Church.

DID PRESIDENT JOSEPH SMITH SLANDER THE WOMEN OF UTAH?

BRIGHAMITE ELDERS ANSWERED.

We are in receipt of a letter from Dan Williams, dated at Ottumwa, Iowa, January 23, 1910, as follows:

Some of the elders of the Utah Church have been in this locality lately, and have been visiting the people and talking to them. One of them showed a statement made by B. H. Roberts' book on the succession, which you will find inclosed. It is from pages 135 and 136, in said book. I would like to know what truth there is in the statement. Answer through the HERALD.

The statements inclosed by this writer as copied from Roberts' book on succession are as follows:

"We challenge the proof that we have aided in the work of misrepresentation." Well, here is the proof: On February 22, 1882, in the course of a speech against the church in Utah, Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church said: "There were many men in Utah who were single because they said they had no assurance they could find for wives women who were not contaminated. They might go to the farmhouses to choose wives, but could not feel certain that some of the bishops had not been there and robbed the daughters of their virtue."—The Chicago Daily Inter-Ocean, February 23, 1882.

"The Chicago Times' version of this part of the same speech, under the caption, "A lusty war cry" (issue of February 23, 1882), is as follows:

"There are hundreds and thousands of Mormons in Utah who will not marry wives because they do not know where to get wives that have not been contaminated. They do not know what houses have escaped the invasion of lecherous bishops who have robbed hundreds of women of their purity. The men can not afford to take the risk that marriage means."

Many vile and vicious things have been said of the Saints in Utah, but it was reserved for Joseph Smith, the President of the Reorganized Church, to say at once the most untruthful, the lowest, the most contemptible, cowardly, and vicious thing, that ever was said of a much-maligned and misrepresented people. And what makes it so utterly inexcusable is the fact that the speaker knew better; for he had been in Utah, and had been among the people sufficiently to know that no such conditions as he describes in that speech existed. It was malicious, willful misrepresentation. He bore false witness against his neighbors. At the time of the speech I noted down the misrepresentation, not from the Chicago papers, but from other papers, for the false statement was widely copied, and I think made a dispatch to the press of the country. Recently I sent to the Chicago papers and had the above quotations verified.

The principal truth in the foregoing quotations from Brigham H. Roberts' book on succession is the fact that the President of the Reorganized Church was invited, in 1882, to be present at a mass meeting called and held in Farwell Hall, in Chicago, on the evening of February 22. This meeting the President attended. At the time the invitation was extended to him, no intimation was given him that he would be the principal speaker at the meeting. At that time Elder T. W. Smith was in charge of the work in Chicago. At his suggestion and in his company President Smith waited upon Hon. John Wentworth, commonly known as "Long John" Wentworth, because of his great height, at his hotel, and there learned it was intended by those having charge of the meeting, that President Smith should be the leading speaker, and that several noted men of the city would be present. Upon reaching the hall, still in company with Elder T. W. Smith, they found upon the platform the Hon. Judge Caton, who had been one of the judges of the State at Ottawa, and who was a member of the Illinois legislature at the time of the Mormon troubles in Hancock, and at the time of the exodus of the Saints from the State; Hon. John Wentworth, member of Congress in 1842, publisher of the Chicago Democrat, and a leading politician in the Democratic party at that time; John H. Barrows, afterward president of the Parliament of the World's Religions in 1893; Bishop Fallows; Hyrum W. Thomas, of the People's Church in McVicker's Theater; James R. B. VanCleave, then city clerk of Chicago, now one of the leading bankers of Springfield, Illinois; and a number of others who are not now remembered.

Hon. Judge Caton was chairman of the meeting. A gentleman by the name of E. F. Craigin was secretary. President Smith was introduced to the congregation by the Hon. John Wentworth, and delivered the discourse in which it is said the obnoxious statements quoted from B. H. Roberts' book were made. There may have been reporters from the different papers in the city present at that meeting. If so, President Smith was not interviewed by them nor was his attention called to the fact that they were present. The statement made by Mr. Roberts, after having quoted these obnoxious statements from the Inter-Ocean and Times is, that the speech was made against the Utah Church. This is not true, unless the array of historic facts, taken from the history of the church, the accredited books of the church before the death of Joseph and Hyrum Smith, and the official organs of the church published during the same period, and the legitimate arguments deducted therefrom, may be characterized as a speech against the Utah Mormon Church. That particular part of the speech from which are taken the statements objected to by Mr. Roberts and subsequently by other elders of the Utah Church, as stated by Dan Williams and others from whom we have heard, is based upon the relation of the following incident as stated by President Smith.

In a visit made to Utah some six years previous to the date of this meeting in Farwell Hall, President Smith met with a man, thirty-nine years of age, who attended President Smith's meeting at the morning service, and walked with him to the place where he was staying in the city. In the course of conversation President Smith asked this man if he were married or single. He stated that he was single.

President Smith then jokingly remarked, "What! You a single man, in this Territory of much married men?"

To this the young man very soberly replied, "It is no laughing matter with me, Brother Smith, and I am not alone in that condition in this Territory."

President Smith then said, "How is that, there must be plenty of marriageable women in the country, for in taking a walk this morning before church time, I saw at a farmhouse, down here at the south edge of the city, some six or seven fine looking young women, and there must be similar households all over the Territory. Surely a young man seeking for a wife could find one in some of these households."

The reply to this was, "Yes, that is true, that there are plenty apparently, but how do I know, how does any other young man know but when he goes to those houses looking for a companion, that he will not find these young women already married into polygamous families or bespoken for some bishop?"

He further said, "There are hundreds like me in the Territory, who for this reason are not married. They are afraid to make the venture."

From first to last in that speech, President Smith said not one word, neither used any expression that if correctly reported could be construed into an attack upon the virtue and integrity of the women of Utah, or to be derogatory to their character for purity and proper womanly qualities. He simply stated what was said to him by a man who had been raised in the Territory, and this man used no language that was derogatory to the character of the young women of whom he spoke. He represented his condition, as being an unmarried man, and gave the reason for it, that notwithstanding there were numbers of women in the territory, neither he nor any other young man who desired a wife could feel an assurance, that should he seek for companionship in one of the houses where these young women were to be found, the one whom he might choose to select as a wife would not be already engaged or betrothed to some elder or bishop. President Smith did use the terms, elder and bishop, but did not apply any obnoxious epithet or use the words, contaminated, or robbed of their virtue or purity, or lecherous, as applied to elder or bishop, as stated in these quotations from Mr. Roberts' book.

These statements as quoted from the Inter-Ocean and Times of February 23, 1882, by Mr. Roberts, are absolutely untrue, and grossly misrepresent President Smith. He was addressing a large audience in a great city, and in the presence of a number of noted men, some of whom are named above, and he could not afford to indulge in vituperative assertion or to use language unbecoming the position which he occupies, and which would lay him open to the charge of gross misrepresentation. President Smith used the statement of this man, whom he met and conversed with, as representing the extent to which the influence of the principle of plurality of wives, or polygamy (as this particular marital relationship has been characterized in the treatment of the Territory, and of the State of Utah since the adoption of the constitution, under which that State was admitted to the Union) had spread throughout the Territory; and if he used the word contaminate, it was only to express the idea that the doctrine had permeated everywhere into the families of the people.

It must be remembered that at the time this meeting in Farwell Hall was held, there was a strong anti-Mormon movement going on all over the country, under the auspices of certain religious persons allied together for that purpose. Meetings were being held in the large cities and throughout the country, and Congress was bombarded by numerous petitions for legislative enactment against polygamous practices in Utah.

The Presbyterian and other denominational churches were allied in this movement. The Reorganized Church was not included in the movement, but the position of Pres. Joseph Smith and the Reorganized Church over which he presided was well known to the leading men of the movement in Chicago, under whose management the call for a meeting in Farwell Hall was made. It was because of their knowledge of the attitude of the Reorganized Church and the personal knowledge some of them had of Pres. Joseph Smith, that the invitation was extended to him to be one of the speakers at that meeting. Every public utterance made by the speakers in the forum or in the pulpit, out of which sensation could be created and which could be construed into antagonism to the doctrine and practice of polygamy and the church in Utah, was seized upon with avidity by the various newspaper reporters and sent broadcast throughout the country. The action of the reporters for the Inter-Ocean and Times, as quoted from the issues of these papers for February 23, 1882, was no exception to the rule then obtaining and is in line with other statements of a similar character made by various papers to which Mr. Roberts refers, as having quoted from these papers the obnoxious statements referred to. The Inter-Ocean was allied, to an extent, to the influence of the Presbyterian Church, and the Times was what it has always been, a sheet largely devoted to sensationalism.

No other portions of the speech are quoted by Mr. Roberts, and it would appear that none were quoted by these papers. The statement made by Mr. Wentworth in introducing President Smith was not noticed, nor were the speeches of Judge Caton, Rev. Barrows, Bishop Fallows, and Rev. H. W. Thomas. The speech of Bishop Fallows was strongly characterized by an antagonism of the condition of things in Utah. It may be safely said of it that it was violent to an extreme. The effort made by President Smith upon that occasion was one affirming the position which he and his people of the Reorganized Church held in regard to the marriage relation. He stated it fairly, advocated it openly, and defended it stoutly and honestly; neither misstated nor misquoted the events of the history of the church transpiring before or after his father's death, nor did he misrepresent the position of the church in Utah, leaving the matter open to them to make their own defense against the attack being made upon them.

How does it happen that these reports from the Inter-Ocean and the Times do not agree in specific statement? Each of them purports to state what President Smith said, but if they intended to give verbatim statements, why do they not agree? The truth is apparent, that either these reporters respectively colored the salient point in the argument made by President Smith respecting the widespread influence of the doctrine of plural marriage in the Territory of Utah, and its practice as illustrated by what this young man told him, and did this to cater to the general taste of the public for that which was sensational, or they deliberately misstated what he said, and thus misled the public by pretending to quote his words. The one from the Inter-Ocean says that President Smith said many did not marry for the reasons stated, and the Times says, hundreds or thousands. The one states that President Smith said, "They could not feel certain that some bishop had not been there, and robbed the daughters of their virtue"; the other one says, "They can not know what houses have escaped the invasion of lecherous bishops who have robbed hundreds of women of their purity."

President Smith has secured copies of the newspaper reports in the Inter-Ocean, Times, and Tribune, in their issues of February 23, 1882, and these copies show clearly that there was no effort to quote President Smith verbatim. They do not agree in their opening statements and differ in many material points as to what President Smith said with reference to action of Congress, and otherwise. They simply seized upon those points out of which they could make a sensational report.

The fact that these two reports differ materially as to what President Smith said on the occasion of that speech makes it strongly apparent that he did not say what either report states that he did, but that each reporter put his own construction upon the words used by President Smith, which would not have contained the obnoxious features complained of if they had been correctly reported. It is evident to the fair-minded man that President Smith could not have said what these two reporters state that he did. Which of the two is the more credible? Mr. Roberts by quoting them both detracts from the reliability of both, and President Smith now affirms, as he has from the time his attention was first called to these damaging reports circulated by the Inter-Ocean and Times and all the other newspapers that quoted from them, that he did not use the language imputed to him, that he had no such thought in his mind, and made no expression that correctly reported would have conveyed any such impression.

The date given for the request made to Joseph Smith by the Honorable Wentworth, as given by these papers in their reports of the speech at Farwell Hall in 1882, by one, was 1844, and by the other, 1854. Neither was right. This should have been 1842, as it does not appear that the Honorable Wentworth was in Congress in 1844;—another irregularity which adds weight to President Smith's contention that he was not correctly reported.

When the attention of President Smith was first called to such report, he made an effort to get the matter corrected by the paper which published it, and at the time he knew of but one. His effort to secure correction was unavailing, for the newspaper flatly refused to publish it. He had previously sought to correct misstatements in the same paper and had met with the same repulse. The prejudice against every variety of believers in Mormonism sturdily intervened and prevented such correction, it evidently being the purpose to avoid presenting any truth favorable to what there might be of good in Mormonism.

An effort was made by President Smith in one of his visits to Utah to secure the publication in the Deseret News of his statement in refutation of the accusation made against him, of having vilified the women of Utah in his speech at Chicago, February 23, 1882.

This paper at that time was in editorial charge of John Nicholson, and these misrepresentations of President Smith had been revived in the News, and he thought he was entitled to a fair representation from his side of the matter. His article was refused, and he was politely told, in effect, that having an organ of his own to use he should not appeal to the News. A correction was published in the SAINTS' HERALD, June 1, 1882, and reaffirmed on August 15, 1885.

President Smith is now well along in his seventy-eighth year. As a speaker and writer and church man he has been before the public for half a century. His reputation as a careful, consistent speaker, and for frank and chivalrous treatment of those whom he has opposed, is proverbial. He now affirms, as he constantly has done before, that at no time, at no place, either in Utah, in any of the States contiguous to it, or out of it, in the United States, or abroad, has he assailed the character of the women of Utah for virtue or religious integrity. His chivalrous regard for woman has been noted at home and abroad. His character for virtuous and honorable treatment of those among whom his ministry has been conducted has never been impeached until the revival of these inconsistent and justly condemnable reports published in these Chicago papers as restated by Brigham H. Roberts in his attempt to meet and overthrow the claim made for succession in church existence and polity by the Reorganized Church. It is strikingly singular that so flagrant a disregard of the amenities and proprieties of forensic disputation, as these alleged reports charged President Smith as having been guilty of, should have been seized upon by Mr. Roberts to disparage the honor and uprightness of a doctrinal opponent who has been so long in the field against what the Lord by revelation calls an abomination. He avails himself of the one alleged misuse of opportunity and lapse from a well-established habit as a speaker, for the purpose of destroying the force of the statement of facts and argument which such opponent urges against the doctrine and practice of his church. The position of President Smith in regard to the doctrine and practice of plural marriage, or polygamy, in Utah, as fastened upon the Mormon church, lays the burden of its introduction upon the leading men of that church. If it was and is a crime the men were the criminals. If it was and is a sin, the men are the sinners. If it was and is an abomination before God, the men were in guilt for introducing it. At no time and in no place has President Smith consented to the idea that the introduction of polygamy, its advocacy and practice were just and defensible. He constantly has affirmed with his associates that no matter with whom the doctrine and practice of spiritual wifery, plurality of wives, or polygamy, the marrying and living with two or more women as wives at the same time, originated, they were, and are contrary to both secular and divine law; and from time to time as opportunity occurred, he has presented those evidences which he believed to be conclusive proof in support of his affirmation. President Smith admits that if he used the expression which these purported reports of his speech at Farwell Hall accuse him of, it was wrong and reprehensible. He affirms that he did not use them. If Mr. Roberts had been moved by the charity toward his neighbor that he accuses President Smith as having lacked, when he used the expressions complained of, if he did use them, he certainly would have taken the more consistent and charitable view of the case, and have considered the long and steady course of consistency and fair-mindedness with which President Smith is proverbially credited in his treatment of the differences in doctrine and practice between the Mormon Church and the Reorganized Church, and would have dismissed from his mind the idea of maliciousness of intent with which he charges President Smith in his comment.

The elders who have taken Mr. Roberts' book for their pattern in discussion and who have circulated the evil report to which Mr. Roberts has sought to give countenance, would do well to bear in mind that if President Smith did use the language imputed to him, their circulation of it is not an argument in favor of their advocacy and defense of plural marriage or polygamy, and does not have weight with any fair-minded man in the argument between the elders of the Reorganized Church and themselves. It would have been the utterance of but one man, the one divergence from courtesy in this respect with which he has ever been charged, and which is so contrary to his well-known character as a speaker and disputant as not to be believed where he is known. President Smith has spoken in Utah from Beaver on the south to Malad on the north, in Montana, Idaho, Nevada, Colorado, Washington, Oregon, in Canada from Vancouver to Niagara Falls, in many of the United States, the Middle West and Middle East, in England, Scotland, and Wales, and in not a single instance has he ever violated the principle of uniform courtesy with which he has treated womankind in his affirmation of the views held by himself and his church associates in regard to the marriage question. Why then should he be made an offender of so dark a nature upon such doubtful testimony?

President Smith again affirms that he did not use the words with which he was charged in these newspaper reports received by Brigham H. Roberts in his book on succession, and for this affirmation he will answer before the courts of last appeal.

Elders' Note-Book

PREACHERS' ODD MISTAKES.

The most frequent cause of inappropriate petitions is no doubt the persistence of habit. Certain phrases are used again and again, until they come to be repeated without any thought of their immediate application. We may similarly explain the stories of the workhouse chaplain who prayed that those present might not trust in uncertain riches, and the prison chaplain who besought the Lord that he conduct the worshipers in safety to their respective places of abode. At the Congregational union meeting at Blackpool last year, the minister conducting the devotions at one service so far forgot his surroundings as to refer to the place of meeting—the theater of the Winter garden—as “this hallowed spot.”

The sense of humor must surely have been lacking in the old man of eighty, supported by crutches, who regularly included among his petitions at the weekly prayer meeting the request that he might be kept from running with the giddy multitude to do evil. Familiarity with conventional phraseology was the undoing of the minister, who, after the sermon on the Pharisee and the publican, asked that there might be poured out upon his hearers a double portion of the publican's spirit. Not very complimentary was the use of a well-known scripture passage made by a minister at a wedding:

“May these persons live together in such harmony in this life that they may finally attain unto that state of felicity where they neither marry nor are given in marriage.” As a concluding example of the thoughtless use of familiar language, one may quote this remarkable amalgam: “Oh, Lord, we praise thee that we are thine; we feel that we are thine; we know that we are thine; Lord, make us thine.”

As in a sermon so in a prayer, the attempt to correct a hasty utterance sometimes leads to surprising results. A cautious Scotch elder, it is said, had taken supper at his pastor's house, and in returning thanks after the meal entered upon a detailed exposition of various causes of gratitude. He concluded by invoking the divine blessing upon the pastor's wife as his godly helpmeet, who had always upheld his hands in every good work—“at least,” he added, in a saving clause, “as far as we know.” It is related of a compatriot that in a moment of forgetfulness he once thanked God for “the salvation of all men,” but immediately redeemed himself from heterodoxy by the qualification “which, O Lord, as thou knowest, is true in one sense, but not in another.”

The absurdity of attempted magniloquence in prayer has had two surpassing illustrations. It would be hard to say whether “O Thou who art the ne plus ultra and the sine qua non of all that is good and great,” or “O Thou that paintest the petals of the polyanthus," is the more terrible exordium.

There are some men who seem to think that an indirect manner of expression is especially suited to sacred things, as the Scotchman quoted by Doctor Boyd as saying, "For as Thou knowest, men do not gather grapes of thorns nor figs of the national emblem"; and the Englishman who thus pledged himself, "And, O Lord, if thou wilt move the heart of any young man to enter thy service as a missionary, we will show our approval in a way which thou wilt appreciate."

Father Taylor, the Boston sailor preacher, was one of the most direct of men, and on the one recorded occasion when he essayed a roundabout style, nature triumphed over artifice. It was the Sunday before the state elections, and he was praying fervently that a man might be chosen for governor who would rule in the fear of God, who would never be afraid of the face of clay, who would defeat the ringleaders of corruption, who would defy his own party if it yielded to wire-pullers, who—suddenly Father Taylor paused and then exclaimed, "O Lord, what's the use of boxing the compass in this way? Give us George N. Briggs for governor. Amen!"

The temptation to use public prayer as a vehicle for the conveying of information has sometimes been too strong to resist. In his lively reminiscences, published some years ago in the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, the late Dr. Benjamin Gregory recalled how a certain Methodist minister of an earlier generation was accustomed "to convey all necessary directions to his younger colleagues through the medium of the throne of grace." Here is an example: "O Lord, bless thy dear young servant. Thou knowest his appointment for to-morrow is at — and he will have to stop at Brother —'s, who keeps a little shop opposite the church. O grant that thy dear young servant may not forget to let the people have the magazines and to bring home the moneys."

The famous Doctor McCosh of Princeton was accustomed to meet the students in the college chapel every morning, when he would make any necessary announcements as well as conduct devotions. One morning in the prayer with which the service concluded he prayed for the President of the United States, the Cabinet, the members of both houses of Congress, the governor of New Jersey, the mayor and other officials of Princeton, and he then came to the professors and instructors in the college. At this point there flashed into his mind a notice which had been communicated to him orally and which he had omitted to include in the announcements made just before. To the surprise of the assembled students, President McCosh continued: "And, O Lord, bless Professor Karge, whose French class will be held this morning at nine o'clock instead of half past nine as usual."—The Christian World.

WHICH ROAD WILL YOU TAKE?

In our travels of this life we certainly have much to contend with. We meet with many trials, temptations, and persecutions, which at times make life seem not worth living. But then we breathe fresh consolation when we read in that blessed book, the Bible, He that is persecuted for righteousness' sake shall be blessed. The main question of life is, Which railroad are you traveling on? There are only two roads: one the Great Salvation which leads from Earth to Heaven. On that route you meet pleasure and happiness, the scenery is unsurpassed; you go by way of Mount Calvary, the River of Life, Paradise Garden, the High Rock; you also go through the Valley of the Shadow of Death. Your trip is by daylight to the Grand Central Depot of the Universe in the City of Gold. On this Great Salvation Railroad there is no change of cars. They have express trains at all hours. All cars are first-class. You arrive at the depot of which the corners are Faith, Repentance, Baptism, and the Laying on of Hands. (See Hebrews 6.) Then line up to the golden rule, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." The fare for this trip is your sins. "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them," etc. (See Matthew 7.) Not the hearers of the law are just before God, but the doers of the law shall be justified (Romans 2: 13). (Read also James 1: 22-25): "He that heareth my words and believeth on him that sent me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life." Again, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."—Mark 16: 15, 16. The president of this railroad is the Prince of Light and Life.

The second route is Damnation Railroad, the quick route to hell. The scenery is terrible. You go through Dismal Swamp, Murderer's Gap, Hangman's Gorge, reaching the Valley of Death at midnight, plunging its passengers into woe. You get special trains from Ingersoll's Park, Dime Novel Avenue, Theaters, Smokers' Furnace, and Barroom Square. This is the lightning train from Suicide Avenue. You get an extra excursion train on Sunday. You land at the depot on the corner of Unbelief and Disobedience Streets. The fare for this trip is your soul. This train stops at Worldly depots where proud, formal church members get aboard and take the sleeping car for hell. "He that believeth not shall be damned." The president of this road is the Prince of Darkness.

Which route will you take?

PROFESSOR HUXLEY ON MIRACLES.

I am unaware of anything that has the right to the title of an "impossibility" except a contradiction in terms. There are impossibilities logical, but none natural. "A round square," "present past," "two parallel lines that intersect," are impossibilities, because the ideas denoted by the predicates, round, present, intersect, are contradictory of the ideas denoted by the subjects, square, past, parallel. But walking on water, or turning water into wine, or procreation without male intervention, or raising the dead, are plainly not "impossibilities" in this sense. In the affirmation that a man walked upon water the idea of the subject is not contradictory of that in the predicate. Naturalists are familiar with insects which walk on water, and imagination has no more difficulty in putting a man in the place of an insect than it has in giving a man some of the attributes of a bird and making an angel of him; or ascribing to him the ascensive tendencies of a balloon, as the "levitationists" do.

Undoubtedly there are very strong physical and biological arguments for thinking it extremely improbable that a man could be supported on the surface of water as the insect is, or that his organization could be compatible with the possession and use of wings; or that he could rise through the air without aid. . . . But it is sufficiently obvious, not only that we are at the beginning of our knowledge of nature, instead of having arrived at the end of it, but that the limitations of our faculties are such that we can never be in a position to set bounds to the possibilities of nature.

The same considerations apply to the other examples of supposed miraculous events. The change of water into wine undoubtedly implies a contradiction, and is assuredly "impossible," if we are permitted to assume that the "elementary bodies" of the chemists are now and for ever immutable. Not only, however, is a negative proposition of this kind incapable of proof, but modern chemistry is inclined toward the contrary doctrine. And if carbon can be got out of hydrogen or oxygen, the conversion of water into wine comes within the range of scientific possibility—it becomes a mere question of molecular arrangement.

As for virgin procreation, it is not only clearly imaginable, but modern biology recognizes it as an everyday occurrence among some groups of animals. So with restoration to life after death.—Agnostic Annual.

VAIN REPETITION.

"Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree. That the blessings of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."—Galatians 3:13, 14.

We have here a declaration of the most important fact in the world: "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." What law? "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Genesis 2:16, 17. Separation from God is spiritual death. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."—1 Corinthians 15:22. "The law" was, "Thou shalt not." Sin is transgression of God's law. The penalty for transgression is separation from God, that is, spiritual death. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law." Curse means penalty, and it is penalty which gives significance to law. Where there is no penalty there is no law. And what is the curse of the law from which Christ hath redeemed us? The Scriptures answer, "The wages of sin is death" (Romans 6:23). "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezekiel 18:4).

Christ "hath" redeemed us. The past tense is so important. It is not something Christ will do in the future, or is even doing at the present time, but something he has done. This man, by one "sacrifice for sins hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified" (Hebrews 10:14). This work has never been done again. Oh, the preciousness of that thought that Jesus' work for us is a finished work, once and for ever. He has made it possible for us to return to the presence of our Father.

It is vain repetition to offer up the daily sacrifice of the mass. By teaching the doctrine of transubstantiation, the Roman Catholic Church is teaching that the atonement of Christ was inadequate for our salvation and that it is necessary to recrucify him daily. The Apostle Peter said in 1 Peter 3:18 that one sacrifice was enough to bring us to God. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit."

The use of prayer-books, missals, rosaries, and rituals, has a tendency to make worship formal, mechanical, and spiritless. There is a difference between "praying" and "saying your prayers." In the fourth chapter of Saint Matthew's gospel, seventh verse, he says, "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking."

THE AMERICAN JEW.

"According to Mr. H. Tonder, a Jewish missionary, it was a Jew who first landed on the American soil, by the name of Louis de Toret, who was with Columbus on his trip of discovery. Louis de Santougal, a Jew, and another Jew, by the name of Gabriel Sabceget, persuaded Queen Isabella to furnish Columbus the necessary means to send out the expedition. He further says that the report, that the queen had to pawn her jewels for this purpose, was not true, that the money was furnished by the state treasury. Mr. Toret settled in Cuba and died there.

"Mr. Tonder further says, "that at present we have 2,000,000 Jews in the United States scattered in the various cities. In New York there are 1,000,000; Chicago 180,000; Philadelphia 100,000; Boston 80,000; Saint Louis 50,000; Pittsburg 45,000; Baltimore 35,000; Cleveland 35,000; San Francisco 33,000; Saint Paul and Minneapolis 28,000. In the old Jew Ghetto in New York itself there are 400,000 Jewish men and women and children to each square mile; that would be 625 on each acre, or yet better than this, if there were absolutely no houses on this mile, each individual would then have 48 square inches to dwell on. It is the most thickly settled place on earth, next to Meder in the American Jew. There is found on this square mile 28 public schools with 61,103 Jewish children.

"In the year 1907 there were in the New York public schools 185,000 children, in Chicago 40,000; in Philadelphia 20,000. In the year 1899 the immigration of Jews to this country was 37,415; in 1903, 76,203; in 1904, 106,236; in 1905, 125,000; in 1906, 150,000; the greater part remained in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore. In the year 1907 about 200,000, of which about 65 per cent remained in New York.

"That not all Jews are peddlers of old iron, the following will show: In a college in New York 75 per cent are Jews; in a normal college in New York over 75 per cent. Mr. Creelman asserts that there are 3,000 Jewish lawyers and over 1,000 physicians in New York. In the New York supreme court there are five Jews. Of professors, we have in the Johns Hopkins College two, Columbia three, University of New York one, University of Pennsylvania one, University of Chicago six, Harvard one, California two, Missouri one, Minnesota one, Michigan one, etc.

"Let us also look at the Jew as a business man. In Philadelphia for instance three out of five of the greatest department stores are under Jewish control. In Chicago they are all, with the exception of two. In New York we have in the year 1904, 514 firms in dry goods, with a capital of $58,000,000; in clothing 264 with a capital of $34,000,000; 2,018 other business houses with a capital of $207,388,000. The Jew controls absolutely the dress trade in New York; he employs 175,000 men; over half of the ready-made garments in this country are from New York, and has a working capital of $300,000,000.

"Likewise have we in New York 35 large Jewish banks. About 1,000 tenement houses are being built yearly, almost exclusively by Jews. A Mr. Hastings asserts that the Jews own real estate in New York to the amount of $900,000,000 and that the great Jewish business houses there have a yearly trade of over one billion dollars' worth. There are now over 115 Jewish millionaires in this country. In a section in New York from Lexington to Park avenue and from Sixtieth to Ninetieth streets there are over 500 Russian and Polish Jews whose valuation is estimated at from $100,000 to $1,000,000 each."—Evangelisten, December 16, 1908.

The foregoing is a translation from Evangelisten and thinking that the information contained in it might be of interest to the readers of the HERALD, I therefore submit it for such use as the reader might make of it. The upward tendency of the Jews, in the commercial world especially, is astonishing; also in the political arena he is coming to the front, which is all in fulfillment of Bible prophecies, that such should be the case in the latter days, and as Isaiah says, the face of Jacob shall not now wax pale, or as Moses says, "And thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. And the Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only and thou shalt not be beneath." Israel might have occupied this position long ago, had she kept the commandments of God. What about latter day Israel?

"BANDITTI OF THE PRAIRIES" REFUTED. THE HODGES INNOCENT.

The following article from the Burlington Hawk-Eye, Iowa, will be read with interest and profit. It recalls a sad tragedy of an early day. It is evident that two innocent young men, scarcely more than boys, were sacrificed to satisfy frenzied prejudice against the church and to shield the real criminals. In the near future Heman C. Smith will prepare an article for the HERALD explaining the case in detail.—EDITORS.

Perhaps prejudice had very much to do with the ill feeling against the Mormons, when they lived at Nauvoo. It was easy to lay every crime at the door of people, who had been given a bad name, and about whom the neighbors were ready to believe almost anything. There have been cases in this community in recent years, when every crime that was committed in a certain section of the city or the county, as well as crimes that had never been committed were laid at the door of some individual who had been given a bad name. Perhaps the Mormons of Nauvoo were in the same unfortunate predicament. The Hodges became famous in the early history of Burlington. Their execution was the only legal hanging that has ever taken place here, and for a long time people referred to events occurring before or after the hanging of the Hodges. It occurred in what now is part of the factory district and attracted a vast crowd. The crime for which the Hodges were hung was murder and robbery, committed in Lee County, and the story is familiar to all the older residents, and has been frequently retold in the local papers for the benefit of such of the younger folk, as might be interested in the history of the city. And now the claim is made, that the two lads were innocent and that the crime for which they paid the extreme penalty was committed by a band of robbers, who operated in the upper Mississippi Valley. A correspondent from Logan, under date of February 12, had the following:

The story, Banditti of the Prairies, once a popular story, at the request of many followers of the teachings of Joseph Smith, has been given consideration in the past thirty days by Heman C. Smith, a high official of the Latter Day Saint church organization at Lamoni.

As a result of Mr. Smith's brief examination he has succeeded in removing the stigma that the author of the book sought to place upon the members of the church, and in addition has, it is claimed, established the innocence of the men arrested, indicted and executed for murder over a half century ago, and by a deposition taken in the past few days fixes the responsibility of the murder upon others who escaped punishment at that time.

Heman C. Smith, in tracing the history of Edward Bonney, the author of the Banditti, alleges that he was indicted in Lee County, Iowa, for four different offenses, one of which was murder, and in the deposition it is intimated that he was a leader of one of the bands of desperadoes.

It is alleged that on the night of May 10, 1845, a double murder was committed in Lee County, Iowa, by three men who entered a house in the night time and fatally wounded Miller and Leisy. The murderers made their escape and were alleged to have been traced to the road in the direction of Nauvoo, the Mormon headquarters. Stephen and William Hodges, aged eighteen and twenty years respectively, were arrested, indicted, tried and convicted, and then executed for the alleged crime, and the two boys went to their death protesting their innocence.

The Hodge boys were not members of the church, but other members of the family were followers of Joseph Smith, and it is brought out by intimation that the church was responsible for the crime to a certain extent by the author, Bonney.

Since the Banditti story has been given wide publicity, Mrs. Mary Hines, of Independence, Iowa, it is alleged, published in the Cedar Rapids Gazette of January 7, 1910, a communication, in which she stated that her deceased husband had confessed to her that he was implicated in the murder of Miller and Leisy, and on the 26th day of January, 1910, the officials of the Latter Day Saints church at Lamoni secured a deposition from Mrs. Hines in which she states that she is [was] a member of the Episcopal Church, seventy-four years old, that she was married to John P. Hines in 1855; that after her marriage she gradually learned that her husband had been a very wicked man, that he said it was Bonney who helped Birch and Fox to escape after being arrested for the murder of Colonel Davenport; that Granville Young should never have been hung for the alleged murder of Davenport, as he was at Prairie Du Chien when Davenport was murdered; that the Hodges boys were not present at the murder of Miller and Leisy for which they were executed, and in addition, Mrs. Hines fixes the responsibility of the Miller-Leisy murder upon Mr. Hines and George W. Martin as two of the three murderers; Mrs. Hines also adds that her husband often told her of places along the Mississippi River where they hid stolen property; that the thefts committed along the river were committed by organized bands from the gulf to the lakes and that her husband gave her to understand that Bonney, the author of the book telling of the capture of the murderers of Colonel Davenport, was a leader of one of these bands.

Heman C. Smith also adds that Edward Bonney was indicted in Lee County as a counterfeiter and a murderer and that he fled to the adjoining State and remained there for the reason that the governor would not permit his return for trial.

"Often you can measure a man's greatness by the way he estimates other men and their achievements. True greatness gives credit to others for every degree of ability, even though there may be much of mediocrity. Charity of judgment and breadth of appreciation belong to the truly great."

Failure.

As some great bird,
Whose hurt wing answers not her will,
Still beats the air in useless striving,
And dying—with strong talons holding yet
Her hard won prey,
While with wide hungry beaks, her far off young
Wait, vainly calling;

Or a spent swimmer
Breasting angry waves to save a life,
With dying eyes fixed on the rescuing boat,
And knowing it is all too late,
Makes still his strokes, grown feeblor
With each laboring breath—yields not
The life he gives his own to save;

This is not failure;
Nor bird, nor swimmer gives up purpose.
Long, long centuries

Agone, One walked the earth, His life
A seeming failure;

Dying, He gave the world a gift
That will outlast eternities.

A Traveler in Twilight Land.

In the barren, gray wilds of Labrador, among the fisher-folk and Eskimos, one might have found last summer an attractive girl from Cambridge, Massachusetts, who has the distinction of having traveled further north along this rugged coast than any other American woman has ever penetrated, —Miss Ellen Paine Huling. She did not go up there to meet the Peary expedition, for no one knew at that time where Peary was, except that he had gone somewhere beyond the Arctic circle. Her incentive was partly that love of adventurous travel which impels a man to exploration, and partly deep interest in the splendid missionary work being done there by Doctor Grenfell and the Moravian missionaries. But while there she improved well her opportunity to study the people and their surroundings, and has already begun putting some of them into charming magazine stories, besides describing them and their manner of life in some very interesting lectures before alumni associations, women's clubs and Young Men's Christian Associations.

Miss Huling has always chosen out-of-the-way countries in which to spend her vacations. Therefore, when one discovers how many a previous interesting trip she has taken, Labrador seems not too far or difficult. Last summer was the fourth of a series passed in that twilight land, on shore among the people, or passing up or down the coast on one of the mission ships, the Strathcona and the Harmony. A year ago last summer she remained for several weeks in the most northerly of the Moravian stations, Killinek, in Ungava Bay, directly across the Hudson Straits from the Greenland shores, where there is snow all the year around, and where the wind blows an almost unceasing, and icy gale. Like the natives, she subsisted on the seal, whale, deer, and polar bear meat, dried fish, coarse vegetables and rhubarb which, she assures us, really tastes good in that region. The rhubarb is frequently eaten raw with great relish. Stewed, it is the favorite dessert. She took an active share in whatever work her hands could find to do, and a great variety there was of it, from playing the church organ at Killinek, through cooking and mending, to escorting down the coast eight little Moravian children who were on their way home to Germany.

At home in Cambridge, Miss Huling is known as teacher of English and History in the English High School, of which her father was formerly head master for sixteen years. She was born in Fitchburg, Massachusetts, then lived in New Bedford for a time, the family removing to Cambridge in 1893. She received an A. B. from Radcliffe College in 1903, and an A. M. in 1907. All her summers since childhood have been passed in travel. In the earlier years it was a custom for her whole family to spend the warm vacation days with their grandfather and others of her mother's people on a quaint seignury farm on the Richelieu River in Quebec, Canada, where they were surrounded by French folk, and where she and her brother and sisters played with little French children. No wonder Miss Huling can so vividly picture the life of those primitive people in the stories she writes now for Everybody's and other well-known magazines. Afterwards, during her freshman year in college, came a delightful expedition with her father into Alaska, up to the famous White Pass Trail, just after the Klondike times. Then there were three consecutive summers among the Laurentian Mountains, where the old Norman custom and dialect linger still; then the Saint Lawrence Gulf region, and Newfoundland; and then, Labrador. Truly, the "call of the wild" is potent.—Human Life.

Requests for Prayer.

Sr. C. I. Edson, of Lovell, Wyoming, earnestly requests the faith and prayers of the Saints that God may give wisdom to her and her family, which will enable them to meet successfully the very trying conditions by which they are surrounded, that the name of God may be glorified and his truth upheld. Will the "Sisters Prayer Union" please remember this family.

Sr. M. Johnson desires the earnest prayers of all in behalf of her son that he may overcome the desire for strong drink. He once belonged to the church and was blessed when he was a child.

Letter Department

FAIRLAND, OKLAHOMA, February 4, 1910.

Dear Herald: We are still alive and actively engaged in the Master's work. I arrived at this place three weeks ago and began meetings in our church with small crowds at first; but before a week we had the house well filled with attentive listeners. We continued two weeks when our voice gave way and we were compelled to rest a few days. We closed with the expectation of going elsewhere as soon as we could again do work; but some of the people are so anxious to hear more of the restoration that we thought best to begin here again next Sunday evening and continue a few nights longer. The people seem to be thirsting after righteousness, but whether they will accept it is altogether another question. I find many warm-hearted Saints in this district, also in Eastern Oklahoma District. They have also been mindful of the preacher's needs, and have supplied his wants with that amount of free silver with which to pay his fare to different places, as also his other needs. I have enjoyed excellent liberty in presenting the gospel at this place.

While I have only baptized one the past year, yet so long as I can see that my preaching is having some effect upon the people, I feel that my labor is not in vain, but that the seed sown will be gathered up many days hence. If I can plant I am willing for some other brother to water, so that God giveth the increase. My greatest desire is to see the work of the Lord advance and the honest at heart enter into the fold. There are many calls for preaching, more than we can fill with so few men in the field. Truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few. The more we are in the work the more we can see the need of more laborers in the field, so they can go two and two as the law directs. I see better results when the elders go as the law directs.

The Saints where I have been laboring are moving along reasonably well, but we can see room for advancement all along the line. Plenty of room to heed the admonition of the Master to come up higher. I see that many of the Saints in this southern country, and some of the priesthood, too, are addicted to the use of that filthy weed, called tobacco.

My prayer is that we all may come up higher and lay aside that which the Lord has said is not good for man, and strive to keep all his commandments.

W. R. SMITH.

MONONGAHELA, PENNSYLVANIA.

Editors Herald: I have been a member of the church for fifteen years; am still far from perfection. I have had many unpleasant experiences and also many pleasant ones. I believe the last three years of my life have been the most interesting and best that I have had. The Saints at Monongahela were organized into a branch December 15, 1909. Seven years ago I came to this city and found no Saints here. Bro. Jacob Reese was the first elder that came to see us. Following are the names of missionaries who have visited this city: L. D. Ullom, J. D. Porter, F. J. Ebeling, R. Baldwin, J. A. Decker, R. M. Elvin, R. Perry, J. C. McConnoughy, J. Raisbeck, W. Shotton, S. Winship, G. T. Griffiths, C. Ed. Miller, L. Curry, E. Curry, R. Etzenhouser, J. Ebeling Wiper, J. Craig Anderson. At this writing the branch consists of twenty-two members. The Lord took Brother Wiper, our priest. We have no permanent meeting place.

Three years ago when my husband was ill I wrote to Brother Parsons. I received an answer in which was a clause which gave me much consolation at the time, and is still strongly impressed on my mind. It was this: "If the good Father sees fit to take away your husband he knows where you are, and will provide." The test came and I can say there never has been a time when we were in want in any way.

Our baby was baptized December 12, 1909, and I am very grateful that all our children came into the church of their own accord and at the proper age. Their names are Leone, Joanna, and Esther. They were baptized at Fayette City.

If I have done anything to offend anyone, I ask forgiveness, as I am always willing to be forgiven. There is a plain clause in the Lord's prayer, Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those that trespass against us." We are asking God to forgive us like we are forgiving others.

EUNICE BEAM.

LONDON, ENGLAND, January, 1910.

Editors Herald: The HERALD seems to be steadily increasing in value as an educator in everything pertaining to true Latter Day Saintism. Every issue seems to be an improvement and we look for the paper as eagerly as for our wage. We are certainly disappointed when the postman fails to deliver it upon the expected occasion. We think the editors should be more generally encouraged in the great work being done through the HERALD, and the very best encouragement we can give, is for every family of Saints to have at least one subscription paid up each year, even if it entails some considerable sacrifice in order to procure the one dollar and fifty cents. Every Saint ought to read every issue of the HERALD; we do not see how, otherwise, one can keep himself posted on the "doings of the world of men and things," nor how ancient scripture is being fulfilled; for not a number of the paper but is freighted with intelligence condensed and refined in a degree far superior to anything the world or the sectarian church has to offer.

Saints everywhere, let us boost the HERALD, and so gladden the heart of the editor. It does not require very much of a sacrifice to save up one dollar and fifty cents, and it will be one of the most profitable investments you have ever made. When done with it, pass it on to your neighbor in the world. Who knows how many you may influence for God and the right by so doing! We would not only be doing a far greater work than we are doing, but we would also be doing wonders for the Herald Office by making it possible for the Herald Publishing House to liquidate the debt incurred by the recent outlay in reestablishing the entire plant. Personally we would not know how to do without you, even if the cost were double what it is.

Will some one kindly give us the benefit of his scriptural research and study on the following: Some of us have been taught that at the coming of Christ to establish the millennium, the wicked will be cast out of his kingdom (the church); and that the priesthood will go out from Zion during the millennium to convert the nations as they do now under General Conference appointments. That the nations of the wicked will exist during the period stated is regarded as positive, because they will say among themselves, "Let us not go up to battle against Zion, for the inhabitants of Zion are terrible, wherefore we can not stand."—Doctrine and Covenants 45:13. On the other hand, the Inspired Translation says that the harvest is the end of the world or the destruction of the wicked; and that the field of the parable is the world; that prior to the coming of Jesus he will send his angels to gather out of his kingdom all things which offend and shall cast them out among the wicked, for the world shall be burned with fire. According to the parable of the Master, recorded in Matthew 13, if the field is the world and the harvest time is the end of the world or the destruction of the wicked, does this mean that before the millennium or "at His coming," the wheat (Saints) will be garnered, and the tares (the wicked) will be bound in bundles to be burned? If so, who will occupy this earth during the millennium outside of the Saints and the resurrected dead? "I will say to the reapers, Gather ye together first the wheat into my barn." Does this mean that this gathering "first the wheat into my barn" will be the work of the angels during the millennium and after that, "the tares are bound in bundles to be burned"? Of course, if the latter is the correct outline of that which is to take place, the first position assumed must be incorrect. We think there is a pressing need of some definite, clear-cut teaching along this line of thought, for some hold one view and some another, and others are uncertain as to which is the true position.

Another question of importance is one concerning tobacco. Should Saints occupied in the grocery business handle and sell tobacco in any form? There are parents who are now grieving about their children being addicted to the use of tobacco. They believe the Word of Wisdom and know it is injurious to health, and that Saints should not use it; yet, because they are in the grocery business, they argue that if they do not handle and sell tobacco they might as well shut up the shop, for their business would go down. What is the wisdom of our leaders upon this question?

Again, in speaking from the stand by the ministry, of the evils of the tobacco habit, why not point out the wholesale evil or the general evil, its effect, or the extent of its reach upon the world, upon society in general? How many acres of good food-stuff raising land are misappropriated to the cultivation of tobacco? How large an army of men and women are occupied in caring for the yearly crop? How large a wing to that army are occupied in the various cigar factories and plug tobacco factories, who might be following some vocation fruitful of good results to humanity, instead of devoting their energies to a vocation of life work which must inevitably end in smoke or something as useless and much more offensive?

It seems to us that calling attention to these general conditions of evil and waste would be much more effective among us in establishing the truth and reliability of God's word than the pointing out the individual waste incurred by smoking or chewing.

We are hopeful in the great cause we love, of its ultimate triumph over every wrong.

P. H. PHILIPPIN.

SAINT THOMAS, ONTARIO.

I have just left Brownsville, where I held a series of nine meetings, and although opposition showed itself to a marked extent at first, yet before we were through we had the best of attention, with not less than twenty at any meeting, and as high as seventy-two once, and the last meeting held we had over fifty. We would have continued them but that we had to hire a hall, and through the efforts of our Methodist friends there, we had to pay as high as two dollars a night for the same; but we were determined that they should have the chance to hear the gospel in that place, and am pleased to say that our efforts were rewarded, and while none have yet embraced the work, yet we realize that more than one is near the kingdom. There were those that had never heard the teaching before, and were interested enough to attend each night, and they expressed themselves as very sorry that we could not stay longer, but I hope to return at no distant date. Much of the success of the meetings is due to the efforts of Bro. J. Skelton, the only Latter Day Saint in the place (I must not forget his excellent wife). He invited me to his home, and cared for me with that way that shows the true Spirit of the Master, and besides this, paid for the rent of the hall for three nights out of his own pocket, and I feel confident that had we a few more like Brother Skelton and his wife a work could be started there that would soon show that the dreaded opposition we were told existed at that place would soon disappear. It was quite amusing to see the foolish efforts to defeat us, and when all other things failed they tried to smoke us out by stopping up the chimney, but this was brought to naught, so then they seemed to give up and we had the best of attention afterwards.

In the meantime I had received a pressing invitation to come to this point from the branch here, and have started in with very flattering prospects of success and pray that the good Spirit may continue with us.

Yours in bonds,

J. C. FARNFIELD.

WHEELING, WEST VIRGINIA.

Our conference has just closed which was held on the 5th and 6th, and was well represented. Brn. Griffiths, C. Ed. Miller, Bishop Becker, of the traveling officials were present, besides quite a few of the officers of the district.

The Sunday school convention was a success and throughout the conference the Spirit of the Master prevailed, and all went away feeling more determined to improve in the financial law as well as in the spiritual.

Brother Becker gave us a good sermon suitable to his line of work, which was fitting for the occasion.

I see the Saints are awakening in many respects, which is very encouraging. One beautiful hymn was sung in tongues, four verses, to the tune, "Let us shake off the coals from our garments." Also one for Brother Griffiths. As a whole the conference was a success. WHEELING CITY BRANCH.

MIAMI, OKLAHOMA, February 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: After reading the letters in last week's HERALD I am encouraged, and refreshed in spirit. Yet, I am often sad when I think of the lack of interest and industry among some of the Saints.

Many times, with pardonable pride, we refer to "our church" as the one true church, and so, indeed, it is. But, dear Saints, we should know, this being one of our specially strong points in doctrine, that faith without works is of no avail whatever.

My heart is filled with an intense desire to see every Latter Day Saint who is not wide awake and working for the cause of the Master, on his knees praying for more of the gospel light. How can we think to receive blessings when we leave our share of work undone?

Do we imagine our lives can be spent as idly and aimlessly as those of people who belong to churches that have no more resemblance to the holy institution which God placed here on earth than darkness to daylight? That is, of course, if we are expecting a good reward.

But are we really working for a reward? If so, then some of us must be rather indifferent as to what ours shall be, for we know we are to be rewarded according to our works.

Would we inherit the earth? Then be meek.

Would we be called the children of God? Then we must be—not tattlers, but peacemakers.

Now, best and grandest of all, would we see God? There are none that may accomplish this, except by the way of the pure heart.

So let us all begin to-day to do our part surely, faithfully, patiently; then, and not until then can we be sure of the reward that is promised to the faithful.

Your sister in Christ,

VIDA CATO.

RUNNELLS, IOWA, February 10, 1910.

Dear Herald Readers: The conventions and conference of the Des Moines District, which assembled here from the 4th to the 6th inst., was one of the best that it has been my privilege of attending. The effects of it has been of immediate and will be of lasting benefit to the church work in this district.

Six were baptized on the day following the conference, partially as the immediate benefit of the excellent meetings of Sunday, especially the afternoon prayer and testimony meeting, at which time the gifts of prophecy and faith, wisdom, and knowledge were made manifest in much power. Four of those baptized were heads of families, and at the social meeting yesterday afternoon all of them testified of how the Lord had wrought with them, and what joy had come to their souls since yielding to the will of God. It was truly a time of great joy to all present.

The Lord at the conference session emphasized the instruction given to his people that those who bear the vessels of the Lord should be clean, and purge themselves from all filthiness of the flesh, mentioning the habits of using narcotics, intoxicants, and opiates, and of the spirit, mentioning bitterness, hatred, strife, envy, and jealousy, and warning the young to keep themselves pure from these conditions, and instructing them to pay heed to the counsel and advice of their fathers in the faith, giving as a reason that God would soon call them to occupy in the places made vacant because of those who would fail, or fall. The payment of what was due the Lord according to the law was also emphasized. The above instruction came like a refreshing rain, and cheered the drooping spirits, and awakened with new life all the Saints.

It was plainly apparent during the conference that a more determined effort and devoted interest were to be shown in the converting of the sinner from the error of his ways; and the excellent spirit which governed throughout all the deliberations and ministrations during the conventions and conference and since, was such as to draw those without to the Christ, and a good interest is shown in the series of services now being held daily.

The young are feeling much encouraged by the experiences of the past few days, and some have renewed their covenants with the Lord, and with a better comprehension of the duties of children of God, and of the spirit in which those duties should be discharged have they entered more zealously into the worship of their God. They have observed that the Spirit of God can so lead the servants and handmaidens of the Lord, that while they may differ they may do so without strife, envy, or hatred, but with love and brotherly kindness towards those with whom they may differ, and in the spirit of peace can labor unitedly for the honoring of the law of God, and the character of him who gave the law. This has deepened the respect they have for God's law and those to whom God has given authority to execute his law, and to regulate the affairs of the church in every department of it.

What joy thrills my soul to see this intelligent, spiritual advancement of the people of God, and especially the young upon whose shoulders will rest the responsibility of carrying this work on to ultimate victory, and to see how much more willingly they are yielding to the Spirit's instructions, and thus better qualifying themselves for that which the Lord says is near to come, even the endowment of the servants of God to go forth to give the final warning to the nations of earth ere the end shall come, or the destruction of the wicked.

May God hasten the day of Zion's redemption.

Hopefully,

J. F. MINTUN.

LAMAR, INDIANA, February 9, 1910.

Dear Herald: We were glad to see a letter from Brother Dowker, and to know that he and Brother Halb are getting along so well. We were glad to have them with us for a while and we enjoyed their sermons very much. Brother Halb has not been in the work long, but we feel sure he will do a good work in the Master's cause. I wanted to give him a word of encouragement when I bade him good-bye, but as I had a poor chance and lacked courage, I did not. I hope this will encourage him. I think the few that were present at our meetings were favorably impressed by the preaching and one young man has been reading quite a bit of our literature and says he likes what he has read.

Elders Dowker and Halb administered to my husband's mother, whose health was very much impaired. It seemed she was on the verge of a general breakdown and had been suffering a great deal. The elders and others will be glad to learn that she has recovered and is feeling better than she has for a long time. An affliction which had been bothering her for years has been removed, for which we all feel thankful.

Only a few months ago, I passed through the severest trial of my life, the loss of a happy little child. Those who have had a similar experience know something of a mother's grief at the loss of her babe; but God was very good to me and assured me that it was his will, and showed me in a vision that she was alive and all right, and that I should soon see her. I could not see her features, but I was permitted to handle her little body and hear her breathe. I tried to make a light so I could see her. I could not, but knew that when daylight came I could see her. The day was just beginning to dawn, so the day must not be very far distant. I am trying to live so I will be ready at any time.

Another thing, many of us do not realize how great our influence is on others. Try never to do anything which will cause another to stumble. It may be a little thing, but if it acts like a stumbling-block to others, it should not be so.

We would be glad to have some of the elders come our way again this spring. Would like to see Brethren Dowker and Halb again.

Yours for the triumph of truth,

ANNA M. CUMMINGS.

BILOXI, MISSISSIPPI.

Dear Herald: I enjoy the letters from our brothers and sisters. Their experiences are ever a benefit to me, and each week the pages of the HERALD are read with delight. By reading I find the experiences of the Saints are much alike. None are going through life on flowery beds of ease, but all have hopes and faith in that day of rest which we often sing of in the "sweet bye and bye."

This morning my mind is led to relate a dream to the readers of the paper:

I went to the grocery in our little town and on my way back I came to a very large building, and seemingly it was a show or theater and very nearly all the people in the town were there. Several of the Saints were there and among them were my children. The building had several big doors, and on one side was the door to go in at. Just across the street was a very large log lying alongside of the street and there were several small children playing around that log, and there also was a serpent the old Devil had sent to bite everyone in the house.

I had stopped to sing a song for the children and it seemed the serpent had to bite me first. I told the Devil I was not afraid of him; he would never bite me. It seemed he went out of sight. Then I started to sing a hymn I used to sing when I belonged to the Methodist Church, "Jesus, my all to heaven is gone." When I had sung one verse I saw him creeping up the side of the log near me and the children. I told them to look out, and grabbed a long-handled spade which was stuck in the ground near by. I struck him with all my strength and wounded him so badly he could not go. I then told the crowd to leave while he was not able to cross the log. When I struck him he opened his mouth very wide, and I saw his big forked tongue and four big teeth that were full of enough poison to poison the whole houseful of people. I looked at him for a little time, then went on my way home. At the time of this dream I was not able to walk, only as I walked on crutches.

Dear readers, Saints in particular, take warning. Don't let that serpent poison any of you in a theater. If you have any means to spare, put it to a better use. There are plenty like myself in need, and there is plenty needed in the church work. We are starting on a new year. Let us shun the Evil One. I have been a Latter Day Saint for nearly thirty years. I am proud of the name. I know I am not pure, but I am proud that the Master has made me able to defeat the sectarian world in their arguments against the truth. I have been able in a dream to conquer the Devil to a degree. Pray for me, Saints, that I may hold out faithful, and be conqueror of all evil. I am a Latter Day Saint and when I cross the Jordan of death, I will bear the name there.

Your brother in the one faith,

Editors Herald: "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment."—Hebrews 6:1, 2.

This is an old text and a grand one. The more we study it the higher we climb the ladder, if we apply it to our lives. The part I wish to call your attention to is, "Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." We do not want to let this escape our attention. We often hear the six principles taught, but not enough said about that, Let us go on unto perfection. Heed this, for it is necessary for us to keep all of the commandments if we enter the kingdom of heaven. The one who works receives the reward.

There is something more for us to do than just have faith, repent of our sins, go to the waters and have the preacher baptize us and have hands laid on us for the reception of the Holy Ghost.

What kind of light are you showing? We are told to go on unto perfection and to come up higher. Are we trying to go higher? The Savior said, "The spirit truly is ready, but the flesh is weak." Yet we are praying for the redemption of Zion, and do not our part.

We hold this gospel out to the world and declare it to be the restored gospel, and the power of God unto salvation. We believe this to be true. If so, let us show our faith by our works. We must work if we go on unto perfection and reign with Christ here on this earth with the righteous. Let us heed the commandments already given and God will be more willing to bless his children in this life and brighter will be our own crown in the life to come.

C. T. SHEPPARD.

MOUNT VERNON, WASHINGTON.

Dear Herald: You are one of my weekly gospel messengers, and I could not very well do without you, for I do love to read your pages, especially the letters, which give me renewed courage to go on trying to do the Master's will. We are of the isolated ones, and do not get to hear any preachers, except through the church periodicals. I attended the church reunion at Seattle in August. While there I enjoyed many good sermons and prayer meetings, which were spiritual food for the hungry soul. If one could only meet at such places to part no more, how joyful it would be, for the sorrowful parting is hard to endure; but that will never be until our Savior comes on earth to reign, and it is not for me to say how soon or how long ere he will appear to his chosen ones. I only hope I may be counted worthy to be one of that number.

Brethren Stead and Thorburn were here about a year ago, and preached several good instructive sermons at Riverside, about two miles from Mount Vernon, and I attended all but one. It was quite cold, too, and I had a sick spell afterwards; but what mattered that as long as my spiritual longing was partly satisfied. They were through here again just before the Seattle reunion, but did not preach. I have been looking for them again, but have been sadly disappointed. Pray that the good Lord may see fit to open the way for a branch to be established here, if it is his divine will.

While at the Seattle reunion, I had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Fred. M. Smith. May the Lord bless him abundantly, so that he may fill his venerable father's place, both as a speaker, father, and counselor; also bless his noble wife, who is an able companion, to help him fulfill all the responsibilities resting upon him. May God put words in his mouth to speak like his father before him, in my earnest prayer. I ask the prayers of the Saints for myself and family, that we may be able to stand till Christ comes to gather up his jewels.

I have a year's file of the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, and Zion's Ensign that I will be glad to send to anyone who will write for them.

Editors Herald: Has any Primitive Baptist or Millennial Dawnist ever left their theory and church and become a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ? If any of the Saints know of such a convert, please let me know as soon as you see this inquiry. I will thank you very much.

I am glad to say that my interest in this marvelous wonder is stronger than usual, and I delight in the grand work. Such articles as were offered by Luff, Kelley, and Williams of late, will almost instill life into the dead, if the dead will hear.

I once knew a brother who dearly loved candy, and it would act severely on a certain organ of his body, so he would quite frequently take a dose of turpentine to counteract the effect of the candy. I see the likeness of the above action among some of the people who are brethren in Christ. I believe all the members of Christ's body really wish to order their lives by the instructions of Christ, but some of us would be glad if the teachings would change to our established ways and traditions, rather than for us to change to his ways, or yield to any new progressive principle of the day. Remember, brothers, every gift of God and every degree of light has had a very difficult time in being established among men. We are instructed to study all good books; to prove all things and hold fast to that which is good. The present distress and oppression, the strikes and lockouts, the mine disasters, the standing armies, the warships, the paupers, the millionaires, the king on the throne, the peasant in his rags, are the result of a woeful cause. What is it? If we can discover the cause and cooperate with God in removing it, the effects will disappear, and there is no question about God knowing the cause, and there is no question about every soul on this earth knowing the cause, and the remedy, if they will try to learn aright. Of course, you can not see without you examine, neither could you see how you crucified Jesus Christ until you examined. Nevertheless we are guilty of his blood. We did that through ignorance, however, but this is condemnation, that light is come unto you and you prefer old ways and evil, unjust systems through ignorance. Is the glory of God ignorance? Brothers, let us progress, and press onward, and look for the cause of the present miserable condition and meekly assist in changing this for a better one, that God's will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Yours for more real glory on earth,

J. W. WILLIAMS.

THREE OAKS, MICHIGAN, February 3, 1910.

Dear Herald: I am very anxious to see the work started here. I believe it will flourish if handled with wisdom and love. I so often see desires expressed in the church papers for new openings. Do we consider that God's work has always been one of sacrifice? Do we always mean what we say when we sing, "I will go where you want me to go, dear Lord"? Do we realize it takes strength of character, and true love, deep and strong, to go against our own wishes and desires, to sit at the feast and be filled? Do we realize that while we sit at ease and enjoy the blessings of other's labors, perhaps there are others who are longing to be filled, yet have not been invited to the table of good things?

We know we are only in school in this world. Why not, as we are taught, turn and teach others? If we have not the talent to teach, we surely will be willing to divide our means with God's servants who have the talents. We need not fear, God knows whom he has chosen to handle his money. I have heard some say that perhaps they will not handle the money wisely, and at the same time be willing to listen to teaching along other lines, and say, "That was a good sermon." Now how much more important are our spiritual affairs than our temporal! I should far rather trust men with my money than with teaching me the way to eternal life, because the things of this world end with life; but how about the spiritual? If God set the right officers in the church to govern our spiritual affairs, or lead us by teaching us, he certainly has just as much wisdom and love for us in setting the right man in the right place in all the offices of the church. By doubting, and ill thinking, and ill acting, we only hinder instead of help the work we say we love so well.

None of us wish to have taken from us what we have, yet the dear Lord has told us it will be, if we do not improve our talent, or prove faithful stewards. It may not be to-day or to-morrow, but there are trying times to come, times that will take all the strength we can gain in these days of peace. We have a very merciful Father, yet a just and truthful one.

I have put this plan of salvation to a long and practical test and I know whereof I speak. Now do not let us be of a doubting mind, but let us rise up and say, "For me and my house, we will serve the Lord," not only partly but to the fullest extent.

In Three Oaks is a good place for an elder or others that wish to help the work along. I have seen several officers in one branch when they were not needed there. Here one can get light, steady work the year around, and good pay, and there is a nice little Latter Day Saint church to preach in. In the featherbone factory, some men and women make as high as fifteen dollars per week. Of course, one has to work up to that, as it is piece work, but one gets five dollars per week the first two weeks whether he earns it or not. Girls and boys also work after they are fourteen years of age, and if they are strong and well enough, can go to school and work nights and mornings and Saturdays. Saturday afternoon is always off for everyone. Rent is not high here; living is reasonable. One can send to Chicago if he wishes (only seventy-two miles distant), but now there is a large department store going up and they will bring prices down. There are no saloons here and a good moral class of people. So an elder that is willing to make the sacrifice can do a good work here. I know of lots of officers in the church who work all week, even Saturday afternoon, and then preach on Sunday. Then I know of a good farm for rent only four and one half miles out of town, with a nice, new, comfortable house on it. If anyone is interested, write me an dI will give full particulars. I will do all I can to help the work along. There is a good, live branch at Galien, five miles from here. I hope some one will carefully and prayerfully consider the subject and act. Don't wait for the other fellow. There is room for more than one.

There are between four and five hundred employed at the factory and room for more. Anyone wishing to see for themselves and can run in, can inquire for Mrs. Rob Clote. She can direct you to my house where the latchstring is always out. If anyone without a family wishes to locate here they can get good board for three to four dollars per week.

Saints, when you read this, please breathe a prayer for the success of the work here, and those that have this part of the work in hand at General Conference, please remember Three Oaks, Michigan. Perhaps you have more men to send out than means to send with, so some can work both ways here.

With the welfare of the work at heart,
ADDIE DAVID.

NORBORNE, MISSOURI, February 8, 1910.

Editors Herald: The Saints of Norborne are rejoicing because the branch is growing. Four years ago there was only one family at this place (Bro. Fred Knipschild) when the writer and family came here, and we decided to get the gospel before the people. We invited Bro. T. J. Sheldon, who was laboring in the Far West District, to bring the tent. He did so and preached for us several nights and removed much prejudice, and made friends for the work. Different ones came and preached for us, and the result was that one year ago we rented a church and asked to have a branch organized. Bro. F. C. Keck, in charge of the district, and

Bro. Charles P. Faul, secretary and Bishop's agent, came and organized the branch, and it has been growing stronger ever since. There have been several families that have moved here, and some have been baptized.

Bro. Charles Harp was here in December and preached three weeks and baptized one and gave much encouragement to the Saints. He left all feeling well in the great work, and with a stronger determination to come up higher.

Bro. E. L. Henson has been preaching for us the last two weeks, and has a very good interest. He baptized three last Sunday and I think all will be good workers for their Master and a credit to the work. We think he will baptize more before he leaves, and he will continue the meetings over Sunday.

We now have thirty-five members, and there are several who have not yet received their letters from other branches. When all receive letters we will number about forty-five. All of the elders have labored hard and have done good work for the Master, and have caused a great many to believe who do not yet see their way clear to obey.

This is the place that W. G. Roberts met Bro. F. M. Slover in debate during December, 1907. After the first session he saw the audience was against him, and he tried to stop the debate, which he did at the end of the fourth session, and some of the other churches told him in the presence of one of our brethren, that Elder Slover was his superior, and that he had quit the debate because of this. Almost everyone that attended the discussion was on our side when the debate closed.

We have a good live Sunday school and Religio, and have preaching twice on the Sabbath, and prayer meeting at two p. m., also on Wednesday evenings. We have a very nice little church, and this is the reason all are in good spirits and happy in the work.

With bright anticipations for the work at this place,
L. F. FERGUSON.

FARMINGTON, KENTUCKY, February 8, 1910.

Editors Herald: While in the office of Doctors Mason and Keys at Morris yesterday, they loaned me a medical journal published at Chicago, and called my attention to an article entitled, "Hook worm conference," held at Atlanta, Georgia, in which Dr. Neut Atans, of Nashville, Tennessee, one of my personal friends, took part. The object of the conference was to devise some means to check the spread of the hook worm, that is spreading fast in the South and is coming as far north as Nashville. It is claimed that in some parts of Texas over thirty per cent of the people are afflicted with the hook worm. This alarming statement was denied last year by the people of the South, but now it has been proven a fact, and much alarm exists among the medical men of the Southern States.

This is certainly in fulfillment of prophecy made by Joseph Smith concerning maggots that would be sent to afflict the people (Doctrine and Covenants 22:5). Surely the world will be made to see after a while that the Lord revealed himself to Joseph Smith.

The work is gaining some here. It moves slowly, but that is no bad sign. We have had some spasmodic excitement as they have in other places, but to my mind such excitement leaves the church in worse shape than it was before. It is like a man taking a little stimulant on a cold morning to keep himself warm; as soon as the effect of the whisky is gone, he nearly freezes to death for a while. My experience is that those Saints that are studying the word of God are progressing better than those that are seeking signs and gifts to furnish them spiritual food. I wonder at the Saints enjoying so well the gifts of tongues and prophecy, and the other gifts of the Spirit mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12, are not considered by some. If a brother has the gift of wisdom his labors are not very well received by some, or if he has the gift of discernment of spirits his work is not very edifying to some. The elder who has the gift of healing is in demand only when the Saints are very sick and the surroundings are favorable to their visits.

I was called on last Sunday to preach the funeral sermon of Mrs. Underwood, of Murray, Kentucky. She was not a member of the church, did not make any profession of religion of any kind. The Christian church there is the finest in the State, from what I can see and hear, and it was opened to me to preach the funeral in, and there was a large crowd there, among which were the ministers of other churches and the leading men of the town. I spoke an hour and a half with excellent liberty, showing the goodness of God and the power of the atonement to save the human family. Many compliments were made and I was asked to preach again to them. I arranged to preach four or five nights in the court-house in the near future. Some say I can have the same church again if I want it, others that I shall take the M. E. church; so I left it to the people there to make the change, if they chose, from the court-house.

I am feeling well in the work, but need rest, and will likely go home in March to attend the conference in April. May the Lord direct by his Spirit in the next conference, in sending out the missionaries.

C. L. SNOW.

HOYT, KANSAS, February 9, 1910.

Editors Saints' Herald: Congratulations to you on the appearance and make up of the Jubilee HERALD. It is a splendid production of editorial work and the printer's art. More than this, it will cause the Saints everywhere, who read it, to sense the importance and value of the work that has been done by the Reorganization from its beginning until the present, as well as to more fully appreciate the dear old HERALD as the messenger of truth so long engaged in this good work.

And again, the contents of this number gives us a glimpse of the work done by "young Joseph," now grown old in his God-assigned work. Contrasting his clean, pure life record with the pretended leaders of latter day Israel who have arisen since the death of Joseph the Seer, we are made to appreciate his work more than ever. It seems to us that we can more than ever see the guiding hand of God in the course of his conduct, from the very beginning of his association with the Reorganization, both as a presiding officer, and as editor of the HERALD. We can feel justly proud of Brother Joseph and his work, and can truly sing, "We thank thee, oh God, for a prophet." Let all the Saints—especially the young, read the Jubilee HERALD. It is educational.

I began meetings about six miles west of Hoyt, on the evening of the 5th inst., and am having a fair hearing. This is a new place. This opening is due to the efforts of Bro. and Sr. C. L. Gouldsmith, formerly of the Nebraska City Branch.

Very recently the way seemed hedged up in this field, but now we have more places for preaching than our limited force can attend to, for in this Northern Kansas field we are so few.

We hope to be able to attend the conference and conventions of the Northeastern Kansas District, which meets with the Atchison Branch, February 25 to 27.

H. E. MOLER.

WICHITA, KANSAS, February 10, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been a reader of your columns for something like ten years. I enjoy very much the letters and articles of others, and especially since I have become separated from branch privileges,

We are trying to let our light shine and do what we can to inform those around us of the angel's message. We are living where our work has been very little represented.

There are now nine Saints here. We have been holding meetings and study classes at our homes each Sunday. Some of our best members have recently moved away, but with our limited time and talent we hope to continue and try to interest others. We could distribute a good number of tracts if we had them. I am the only one of the priesthood here and I have thought if some brother holding the priesthood was desirous of changing his location, he could not do better than come here for investment, business, or labor, and we could cooperate in getting the gospel before the people. The city has more than six million dollars of improvements and building under way.

Wishing the Lord's work success,

JAS. C. PAGE.

821 WEST DOUGLAS AVENUE.

DES MOINES, IOWA, February 3, 1910.

Dear Saints of the Des Moines District: It seems that many of the Saints of the district have not yet learned my address since I came to the city, or have forgotten it. Some have sent money for tithing to Brother Mintun to be handed to me, stating they did not know where to address me. Others, I have been told, are holding tithing for lack of knowledge of my street number. My residence number is 1535 East Walnut street, and phone No. 6255. It is necessary that you put my number correctly on all communications, as there are several other Christys in Des Moines.

We are very low in funds for the carrying on of the work, and there has been such a demand for labor in new openings, and so few to meet such demands, that it has been impossible for me to get among the Saints as I have desired.

Saints, if you could have been in attendance at the meetings I have held this summer and winter in places where the gospel has never been preached before, and have witnessed the interest and manifest eagerness with which the people came to listen, you would be anxious not only to pay your just tithing fully, but many more would be willing, (with a few faithful Saints who are actually doing so) to make sacrifice, that there might be more missionaries placed in the field to meet the great demand for work.

I hope we may receive sufficient during the spring months, that there may be enough to supply the needs of those dependent upon the district. Saints, let us not be negligent of our duties. We can all be missionaries if we will. Are you helping to carry the gospel to the nations of the earth and helping to warn your neighbors? If not, why not get busy? I have never seen a time when people were more willing to listen to our message, and the urgent requests that come to me for preaching from those who know but little of our work, ought to cause us to wake up, and I know it would if you saw it as the missionary does.

I want to report to you the great improvement in Sister Christy's health, and express our appreciation of the help we have received from so many of the Saints. For the last two months she has been almost free from pain, a condition that has not obtained day or night for eight years, with much suffering for fifteen years. Are we glad? Yes. Do we appreciate those who have and are helping us? Yes, truly. We are assured that she will not be compelled to take regular treatments for more than a couple of months, when it is thought that plenty of open air exercise, with some change of climate, will make for good health.

Please jot down my address, that you may not forget it; then when you have church funds to send, it will reach me without fail.

With love to all the Saints,
1535 EAST WALNUT STREET.

APPLEDORE, MICHIGAN, February 10, 1910.

Dear Readers of the Herald: The winter has been so cold I have not been able to attend church and I often think of the nice times we all used to have together, and how many rejoiced with us in the restored gospel. A great many of the Saints that once attended our branch are scattered, doing good, I hope, wherever they are. Bro. William Taylor and Brother Badders, from Wabash Branch, quite often attend here and assist by their preaching, songs, and prayers; but our church is old and needs repairing; it does not look very inviting to the fashionable world. Bro. Walter Badder, our only officer, gives us some interesting talks. We hope some day our branch may be more fully organized, as there are some brethren growing up who take quite an interest in the work. With kind regards to all,

Your loving sister,

MRS. GEO. GREEN.

HOLDEN, MISSOURI, February 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: We have a fine branch here and that love for one another that makes us feel we are one family. I enjoy this privilege of living among the Saints, and as I read of so many who do not have this privilege, I can not help but breathe a prayer in their behalf. Do not feel discouraged; the Lord is able to bless and will if they put their trust in him. I have been blessed wonderfully when trusting him. Only the Lord knows the discouraged hours I have seen. While I was studying and grieving one day, a voice seemed to say, "Do you trust in your God?" I stopped my work and began to think back over my past life. I fell on my knees and never was so filled with the Spirit as then. From that time my days have grown better. I have dreams encouraging me from time to time. The Lord is in this work. I can not express the peace and happiness I have enjoyed. I hope I may better serve my heavenly Father each day and bring up my children in a way that is pleasing in his sight.

We came to Holden three years ago and are pleased with the country. The branch has grown some in that time. May God bless his people is my prayer.

AMERICA CHRISTENSON.

BALD KNOB, ARKANSAS, February 4, 1910.

Dear Herald: The branch at Bald Knob is still alive. We built us a good, comfortable, little church, and have regular meetings when the weather will permit, and Sunday school and prayer meeting. Elder J. T. Riley closed a series of meetings here January 31. Bro. F. O. White was ordained to the office of teacher, and our baby boy was blessed. Meetings closed with fairly good interest. Brother Riley was with us two or three times last year and in his humble, quiet manner has gained the love and confidence of the Saints.

After a barren home for fourteen years the Lord has blessed us with two dear little ones, for which my heart had longed. Sarah Postena will be two years old March 16, and Frederick Heman is now three months old. Will say to Brn. F. A. and F. M. Smith, that we will send them the boy's photo when we get them made, and we pray that his mission in this world may be for the salvation of souls.

We are glad to see the picture of the HERALD's beautiful, new home.

Ever praying for the advancement of the truth,

Your sister,

BEULAH JOHNSON.

CROSS TIMBERS, MISSOURI, February 6, 1910.

Dear Herald: I see in your columns a request for prayer on behalf of a fourteen-year-old boy who is troubled with tapeworm. Mountain ash berries are good for this. Make a tea and sweeten it and give a teaspoonful night and morning. It is good for any kind of worms. I have cured several after they have gone into spasms. Anyone can take it cold or warm. Gun powder is also good for worms, even after they have had three or four spasms. I have given it to my own and also several other boys. Dose, one half teaspoonful night and morning.

D. D. WILLIAMS.

Keeping the Sabbath.

I desire to draw the attention of the Saints to a few passages of Scripture concerning the keeping of the Lord's day and pen a few thoughts on the same. I am not an educated man, but I feel to remind my brethren and sisters that if the way the majority of people, Saints included, keep the Sabbath is right, then I am certainly wrong in my understanding of the Scriptures.

During the seventeen and a half years that I have been a member of the Reorganized Church I have never met a member of that body (although there may be many whom I have not met who keep the day fully—I hope there are) who keep the Lord's day as the Scriptures direct, according to my understanding of them. I have been surprised many times at the apparent indifference among the Saints in this keeping of the Lord's day; and the surprise is made all the greater from the fact that these Saints seem to be living better lives than I am. Of course, most if not all of the Saints observe the Sabbath, but think it no harm to use the train, tram, or their beasts on that day. I believe if we keep the Sabbath we should keep it wholly as a day of rest and for the worship of God, and give every other man the same privilege, and also the beasts. I think we as the chosen people of God should set a better example than we do at present.

I know there are many things to be considered, such as administering to the sick who do not live within a walking distance, fulfilling preaching appointments, etc. Now God does not expect impossibilities from anyone; so in the case of sickness where it would necessitate traveling by train, I believe it would be right to leave such case in the Lord's care till the Sabbath was past, rather than to break the commandments he has given. So far as preaching is concerned I think it could be arranged without this riding on the Sabbath. At least, I have always managed my affairs so that man, woman, and beast could get their rest on the Sabbath. Some make the excuse that the trains would run just the same whether we used them or not, so where is the harm in using them? That may be a reasonable excuse, as man sees it, but how about God? What does he think about it? If I used them on the Sabbath, I should become a party in depriving these servants of their day's rest, and preventing them from attending the house of prayer. I am always glad of this day's rest, and if I deprive others of it, am I doing unto others as I would that they should do unto me?

GOD INSTITUTED THE SABBATH.

"The Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."—Deuteronomy 5: 15. "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord."—Ecclesiastes 20: 10. "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it."—Genesis 2: 3.

SABBATH PROMISES.

"If thou call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable, and thou shalt honor him, . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord: and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth."—Isaiah 58: 13, 14.

SABBATH DUTIES.

"Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest that thine ox and thine ass shalt rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger shall be refreshed."—Ecclesiastes 23: 12. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. . . . Therefore, the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."—Deuteronomy 5: 12-15.

From the foregoing it seems that God is very particular to impress on our minds the necessity of keeping the Sabbath day, not only that we may rest from our labors, but that we may embrace the opportunity of attending the house of prayer. Who can conscientiously say that man and beast do not need one day of rest out of seven, as well as those who lived in Old Testament times? God is too good, loving, and considerate to bestow such a blessing upon the people of one age, and withhold it from those who happen to live in another age. "Whatsoever God doeth it shall be for ever. Nothing can be added to it nor anything taken from it."—Ecclesiastes 3: 14. So if he gave this rest day to people in former days, he will do the same always for he never changes. (Malachi 3: 6.)

But apart from the above, we have a similar commandment given to us in this age in which we are now living in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants. In Mosiah 7: 21, we read: "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day, the Sabbath of thy Lord, thy God, thou shalt not do any work." In Doctrine and Covenants we read: "That thou mayest more fully keep thyself unspotted from the world thou shalt go to the house of prayer and offer up thy sacraments upon my holy day, for verily this is a day appointed unto thee to rest from thy labors and to pay thy devotions unto the Most High," and to give every other person the same privilege, whether servant or otherwise. "Let thy food be prepared with singleness of heart," and not make it a feast day, as is the case with most people, "that thy fasting may be perfect." Think of it, Saints, you who think it no wrong for some one to stay from the meeting to cook dinner. If I partake of that dinner, I become a party with others in depriving those that stay at home from enjoying the same privilege I enjoy, just as I deprive railway servants from enjoying their day's rest and from attending the house of prayer, by using the commodities offered for our use.

JESUS OBSERVED THE SABBATH.

"Straightway on the Sabbath day he entered into the synagogue."—Mark 1: 21. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work."—John 5: 17. "Therefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath day."—Matthew 12: 12. I don't think that Jesus intended by using the above words to convey the idea that we would be doing right by using train, tram, or beast on the Sabbath day to take us to where we could do some good deed. If he did he would be encouraging us to do something which he has commanded us not to do. Jesus was here referring to the healing of the man with the withered arm and all similar cases we meet with in our immediate presence and that need our immediate attention and assistance, and not with the idea that we could use man or beast to take us there. "And when the Sabbath was come he began to teach in the synagogues."—Mark 6: 20.

GOD'S PEOPLE OBSERVED THE SABBATH.

"They rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandments."—Luke 23: 5, 6. "Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures."—Acts 17: 2. "Upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them."—Acts 20: 7. "And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God."—Acts 13: 44. "On the Sabbath day we went out of the city by a river where prayer was wont to be made."—Acts 16: 13.

"A Sabbath well spent,
Brings a week of content,
And health for the toils of the morrow;
But a Sabbath profaned,
Whatever is gained,
Is a certain forerunner of sorrow."

—Sir Matthew Hale.

Have we anything in the Scriptures that would justify us in using man or beast on the Sabbath day? I don't know of any. The vicar of Christ's Church, Blackburn, makes some outspoken remarks about Sunday pleasures: "What," he says, "does the average unbeliever think of the Christian's Sunday in England, when he sees the follower of Christ taking the train or tram to his church when he is quite able to walk; listening to Sunday music in the park, or to a Sunday concert in the lecture hall; or if he is fairly well off, entertaining his friends to Sunday dinners or card parties, disregarding the summons of the church bell, and ignoring the worship of the Christian God whom he professedly serves? This man's religion, says the skeptic, is rank humbug. And in many cases he is not far wrong." I have always felt it my duty to keep the Sabbath day holy, and have given every other man the same privilege. My food, or any ease I may get, must not interfere with my Sabbath day's duties toward God. Man and beast get their rest on the Sabbath day, so far as I am concerned.

A Letter and a Reply.

"THE REV. R. W. FARRELL,

Reorganized Church of Latter Day Saints.

"My Dear Sir: I am always desiring to do whatever I can to further the interest of the Master's cause, and I long for the day when all men shall name his name in love and faith. But it seems to me that the universal church already has more branches than is necessary, or fruitful; and instead of increasing the branches, I believe in providing a greater unity. Therefore it does not seem wise for me to give you the use of our church building for your services.

"Yours very truly,
"J. D. SALLEE."

"MR. J. D. SALLEE,

Pastor M. E. church.

"Dear Sir and Brother: Under ordinary circumstances I should not deem it wise to extend the correspondence that has passed between us, but knowing that you are laboring under a misimpression, take the liberty of submitting a brief explanation.

"In the first place, you will recall that I expressed no desire to increase the 'branches' of the church universal, as you express it; but rather to provide a unity of the faith. I requested the use of your church in which to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ,—nothing else. I do not feel that your refusal of my request is either Christian or consistent. You have judged a matter before you heard it, and the Wise Man says such judgment is 'a shame and a folly.' On the other hand, if your conclusions are the result of hearing a minister of the Reorganized Church, it is plain that they are ill-drawn, because nothing but the Bible was preached—and surely you are not afraid of the word of God.

"Regarding division—and that is the word you have expressed under a different synonym—I could not hold myself responsible for either belief or disbelief, unity or division: it would depend entirely on whether the people accepted or rejected the scripture I taught. As long as men and women feel disposed to accept or reject as much of God's truth as pleases their fancy, division will continue among us; and this division is a standing rebuke to the claim that the many sects represent the universal church.

"Not many years ago Mr. Wesley (the founder of your institution) caused division in the ranks of the Episcopal Church, and for that act was dragged by the hair of his head through the streets of London. Those days are past, and it is not pleasant to recall them, and much less to have them recalled and enacted, as is often the case in our day, only under a different guise.

"As for unity, my dear brother, that is just what Latter Day Saints stand for; but a unity that is built on the grand truths of Christ and his disciples, as revealed in the New Testament—and there can be no other unity that will please God.

"However, wishing you well and extending to you the use of every Latter Day Saint church in the United States, I am, one who believes in the golden truth of the golden rule.

"RALPH W. FARRELL."

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. P. W. Booker: "Dear brother, since I received your letter last year, I have been tossed about by my enemies, and driven from place to place, so I have had no heart to write. I have had bitter troubles and trials since last year. I have been handcuffed, and have been beaten over the head, and cursed, all for unjustness and a false report told on me. They put me in jail twice for spite, but I thank my God that I was able to stand all that was put upon me. I am still fighting to gain the victory, and I thank God that I am yet alive in this glorious work, praying to my heavenly Father to strengthen me wherein I am weak. I preach every now and then for the Methodist people, and they are glad to have me. I was wronged and mistreated, but the Lord has taken care of me and led me through dangers seen and unseen, and I thank him. I will evermore trust him for his grace. I desire the prayers of all the Saints. I am ever praying for the welfare of Zion."

(The writer is one of our colored brethren in the South.)

Bro. W. R. Rush, Lees Summit, Missouri: "If our faith is founded on the things of God and his kingdom, we will know the ways of truth when we hear them spoken; but if we have our faith founded on the things of the world, we will not know when good cometh. To find out the things of God, we should try to please God and not ourselves, for sometimes in trying to please ourselves, we are found transgressing, and this will cause us to get farther from God and his kingdom. "Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man."—Matthew 7: 34, Inspired Translation. So we see by seeking and striving to do the things of God we will become wise servants, and be useful in his kingdom, and a help unto others, and the means of bringing others into the kingdom of God."

Sr. Blanche Crandall, Langley, Washington: "I am only seventeen years old and was baptized by Brother Thorburn, June 20, 1909, and confirmed by Brn. J. D. Stead and G. W. Thorburn. I feel very weak in the faith of Christ, but I ask each one of the Saints to pray for me that I may become very faithful to Jesus. I have a father, mother, and little sister in the church and I ask you to pray for them also. I have two brothers and one sister that are not in the church yet, but I hope they will belong to it before long."

Bro. W. P. Buckley, 737 Loomis street, Jackson, Michigan: "The Lord meets with us in our little services and graciously remembers us with his Spirit. Some may say that the gifts of the gospel are not as much given as formerly, but the fault is with us, if that is a fact, and not with God, for he gave them to his people to build them up and strengthen them, and we should have them when we meet together, even as they did of old. God has been with us and has given us discernment of certain things, and has spoken to us in the gifts of prophecy, and has shown us things in spiritual dreams, and we look for a great work yet to be done in this place in fulfillment of what he has revealed to us. We would be glad of any assistance we can get from any of the priesthood who come this way. The latchstring is always out at our home."

Bro. Ira W. Hulmes, Snow Hill, Maryland: "I came to this place just one week ago, and have been laboring in the interest of the work. There are no Saints in this town so far as I know, but lots of honest, good-hearted people, who, I believe, will accept the truth when presented to them. In conversation with a member of the Christian Church, he said he would see if he could not get the use of the church for me, as he was one of their leading members. So, we got the use of the church on the condition that we preach the gospel in its fullness. I have been holding the fort for a week, with growing congregations and the best of interest. I have felt blessed in presenting the gospel message to the people, yet we must expect to pass through trials and hardships in this life, but if we look for the flowers we can find many strewn by the wayside."

News From Branches

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, February 20, weather still quite cold, which diminishes our attendance at Sunday school. Elder R. N. Burwell, of Hammond, Indiana, occupied in the morning, giving us some subjects to consider wherein we were not living in the manner the Lord desires. Elder Orman Salisbury, president of the Des Moines District, spoke to our edification in the evening, and none of us felt complimented when comparing the example we are to follow.

Monday evening our box social was held at Bro. James Lang's, not a large attendance, but all seemed to have a very enjoyable time, and the Gleaners received for their labors a profit amounting to $13.62 to apply on the church fund.

Tuesday, February 22, many enjoyed a holiday, and when we consider how much the early patriots suffered for the cause of right, we also ponder on the trials and afflictions endured for the sake of the gospel of Jesus Christ as restored in the latter days, by those who were true soldiers in the cause. How grateful and thankful we should be day by day that we are privileged to live in this day and generation.

Wednesday, February 23, small attendance at prayer meeting, but feel all were repaid for making the effort. Some of the thoughts expressed were that we should examine ourselves, and see if we are not the cause of dark and discouraging days many times, also that we should endeavor to be directed by the Holy Spirit day by day.

Thursday, February 24. Learned over the phone that Sr. William Strange died this morning, and all can surely feel thankful that she is at rest.

"Still with honest purpose toil we on,

And if our steps be upward, straight and true,

Far in the east a golden light shall dawn,

And the bright smile of God come bursting through."

Perhaps a few words in regard to this branch may not be amiss, especially as there have been several important changes and improvements made of late. The branch has recently been reorganized with Elder James Robbins president, John K. Eaton priest, and Mark Billings teacher.

Where we formerly held only one service a week, on Sunday afternoon, we now enjoy prayer and testimony meeting every Sunday at 10.30, followed by a rapidly increasing Sunday school, which is also growing in interest and spiritual development. Bro. Merton Eaton is superintendent.

Sunday, at 6.30 p. m., we have a preaching service, and prayer meeting Wednesday evening.

We also have lately started a Religio, which meets Friday evenings. Sr. Louise McDonald is president and also a teacher, and is doing nicely in her line of work.

But better than all is the fact that new spiritual life seems to be manifest here, both in and out of the church. Our new elder, Brother Robbins, who was called to his office only last fall, travels several miles each service to meet with us, and in his earnest, zealous way is rapidly helping to build up the work here. He has baptized several of late, all of them young people, who, we think, will prove very helpful in church and Sunday school work. Many who have been positive enemies to the work are now sending their children to our Sunday school or coming themselves, and some are being received into the church, while many others are either ready or nearly so. With all, we are not forgetful of our late branch president, Elder J. N. Ames, who has served us so long and faithfully, but who, owing to declining years and health, has yielded to younger and stronger, if less experienced, shoulders. We pray that God may bless him in his last days, and at last give him the reward for which he has so faithfully worked, and which he so justly deserves.

Very truly your brother,
W. A. SMALL.

SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

An uplifting, soul-cheering sacrament service was enjoyed the first Sunday of the month, presided over by Brethren Tanner, Archibald, and Rhoades. One thought spoken of was isolation from church privileges and strength derived from association of the Saints.

The precious truths of the gospel were delivered the past month by Brn. T. J. Elliot, Tanner, Archibald, Rhoades, Masten, and Davis.

Among subjects considered were salvation, Satan and his power in the earth, faith, processes required to qualify God's children for his work, and the work of a presiding teacher of a branch. All contained thoughts for meditation and instruction worthy of application.

Branch priesthood meeting was held the evening of February 21.

The Mite Society is ever to the front in aiding the branch in financial matters, for which they are truly to be commended. May they be blessed for their untiring effort for good.

Sunday school and Religio are progressing splendidly. It is pleasing to see the young active in the Lord's work, taking interest in the work of God instead of the world.

Apostle Curtis is to be here the last of the month. Arrangements are being made to have him preach for us the evenings of February 23, 24, and 25, also the morning of the 27th. Brother Curtis has been doing a fine work in the district and we are pleased to have the privilege of hearing him.

The Oak Hill, Cheltenham, Lansdowne, Belleville, and Alton Saints are very much alive. The Lansdowne Branch has added several more to their membership recently. So the work moves on. Brother Archibald is now the president of the Cheltenham Branch.

Your sister in Christ,

Next conference to be held at New Bedford, Massachusetts, Saturday and Sunday, October 1 and 2, 1910. Delegates to General Conference: U. W. Greene, M. C. Fisher, Ora V. Holmes, Fred W. Roberts, Ruth M. Leeka, H. A. Koehler, M. O. Lewis, A. B. Phillips, Edith Roberts, Richard Bullard, R. W. Farrell, Margaret Wood, Stephen Wentworth, F. M. Sheehy, Ethel Haines. Candidates: Barbara E. Brindley, Barbara M. Brindley, Gordon Mercer, all of Fall River, Massachusetts, by H. W. Howlett. The latter baptism was especially impressive as the candidate was almost a helpless cripple from rheumatism, and it required the aid of John F. Sheehy and H. W. Howlett combined, to perform the rite. The conference was a spiritual success, the gifts being manifested quite profusely. W. A. Sinclair, M. D., secretary.

Letter of Condolence.

Given by the Niagara Falls, New York Branch, to Sister Blackburn and daughters:

"Whereas it has pleased almighty God to permit our dear ones' home to be invaded by death, and by reason of its suddenness, coming with more crushing effect upon those who are called upon to mourn, our hearts are moved with the deepest sympathy for them in this sad hour of their affliction. Therefore, be it resolved, That we as a branch extend to Sister Blackburn and daughters our sympathy in their affliction. And we pray that God in his infinite love may comfort and sustain them through life, and at its close permit them to meet as an unbroken family around his throne, where there shall be nor more tears, neither sorrow nor mourning. And we would also pray that God may make his word sure unto them while here, wherein he has said: Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive; and let thy widows trust in me. And with this blessed promise we commend them to him who has promised, for he is faithful, and his word sure.

"J. C. FARNFIELD,
"F. C. MESLE,

"Committee."

Resolution of Respect.

"Whereas, after long and continued service among us as pastor, our beloved brother, Elder J. N. Ames, has been relieved of the responsibilities of branch presidency; and whereas our relationship as pastor and people has continued through many years of ever varying experiences; and whereas by his timely help, his Christian counsel and saintlike deportment, we have been admirably assisted; and therefore be it resolved, That we hereby tender our brother our heartfelt thanks and due assurance that we will not forget nor be un-mindful of his labors of love.

And, we further pray that he may yet be spared many years to occupy in our midst, as a veteran of the cross and a father indeed. Signed in behalf of the branch this 2d day of February, 1910.

DANIEL MACGREGOR.
LOUISE J. McDONALD.

Editorial

EARLY IDEALS OF THE CHURCH.

I. PATRIOTISM AND GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

(The next editorial in this series will be on the attitude of the church toward honesty and temperance.)

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints was organized on American soil under the jurisdiction of the United States Government. At present it has its corporate existence as an organized body in the United States of America; and here Saints gather from all parts of the world. Under these conditions it was and is quite proper for the people of the United States to challenge Joseph Smith and his followers concerning their attitude toward their native land and its government. We do not object to questions on that subject, but we do object to certain erroneous opinions on the matter that obtained at an early date and are still cherished by some. In some way in an early day certain people gained the impression (or at least so professed) that the church was an enemy to law and government, being itself an aspirant to all temporal and spiritual power.

Not long ago a certain eastern daily paper, issued from the "hub of the universe," the classical seat of culture, fads, and misinformation, restated the old charge in this language:

Mormonism, since its beginning, has been defiant of the law; it puts fealty to its priesthood above the law of the land, holding itself "to be the only legitimate power that has a right to rule on earth."

If this statement were really true the church might well be looked upon with severe disapprobation. Its members could hardly be classed as good citizens. However, it is not true, but exactly the reverse, as we shall show from the standard books of the church. These books teach that God has designated America as a choice land of liberty; that he directed in the founding of the United States Government; and that all citizens should be strictly obedient to the laws of their land.

Going back to the very beginning we quote these words from the Book of Mormon, as they came from the lips of the Prophet Nephi:

And I looked and beheld a man among the Gentiles, who was separated from the seed of my brethren by the many waters; and I beheld the Spirit of God, that it came down and wrought upon the man; and he went forth upon the many waters, even unto the seed of my brethren, who were in the promised land. And it came to pass that I beheld the Spirit of God, that it wrought upon other Gentiles; and they went forth out of captivity, upon the many waters. And it came to pass that I beheld many multitudes of the Gentiles upon the land of promise.—1 Nephi 3: 147-149.

Here it is indicated that God directed Columbus on his voyage of discovery. We do not believe that the discovery of America was simply a stroke of luck. It came about at such a time and in such a way as God directed. We do not agree with Ingersoll who said that the Christian God was ignorant of the existence of the New World until Columbus told him of it. On that matter Frank Basil Tracy in his Tercentary History of Canada (1908) says:

The world was in a low state at the close of the fifteenth century. It despaired of progress, for it did not know how freedom could be got. But behind the thought and determination of Columbus when he set sail to the west in 1492 there seems to us to-day to have been an impulse, a guiding hand, an overseeing power, of which he knew nothing, and of which the world could have no conception for centuries to come. The discovery of America may be said to be one of the most fortunate events for mankind, or one of the most inspiring and wonderful manifestations of Providence in all history.

We are in accord with the thought expressed by Mr. Tracy that behind Columbus there was a guiding hand, but not with the thought that Columbus was ignorant of that fact. It is a matter of history that he believed himself to be an instrument of Providence. That belief led him from court to court in his discouraging effort to raise funds.

And when the expedition was at last fairly launched in its strange course out over unknown waters that thought held him steady amid the mutinous protests of the crew who felt that they were sliding down over the rim of the world never to return:

"Behind him lay the gray Azores,
Behind, the gates of Hercules;
Before him, not the ghost of shores,
Before him, only shoreless seas.
The good mate said: 'Now we must pray,
For lo, the very stars are gone!
Brave adm'r'l, speak; what shall I say?'
Why, say: 'Sail on! Sail on! Sail on!'"

From the foregoing quotations from the Book of Mormon it appears further that God directed the pioneers, the Pilgrim Fathers and others, who came and settled America subsequent to its discovery. Or as Longfellow expressed it in the Courtship of Miles Standish: "God had sifted three kingdoms to find wheat for this planting."

Rev. C. I. B. Brane, D. D., writing in the Preacher's Helper, expresses a similar thought:

May it not be that the failures of the Mohammedans and Chinese and Norsemen and Aztecs were providential, God having reserved this land for his own persecuted people? That God settled the American continent with a class of his own selection seems to be a fixed fact in our calendar.

Reverend Brane thinks that God reserved this land to be settled by a class of his own selection. Listen:

But unto the righteous, it shall be blessed for ever. And behold, it is wisdom that this land should be kept as yet from the knowledge of other nations; for, behold, many nations would overrun the land, that there would be no place for an inheritance.—2 Nephi 1: 15-17.

Concerning the character of the land we have this from the Book of Mormon:

And inasmuch as ye shall keep my commandments, ye shall prosper, and shall be led to a land of promise; yea, even a land which I have prepared for you; yea, a land which is choice above all other lands.—1 Nephi 1: 54.

For it is a choice land, saith God unto me, above all other lands; wherefore, I will have all men that dwell thereon, that they shall worship me, saith God.—2 Nephi 7: 31, 32.

Behold, this is a choice land, and whatsoever nation shall possess it, shall be free from bondage, and from captivity, and from all other nations under heaven, if they will but serve the God of the land, who is Jesus Christ who hath been manifested by the things which we have written.—Ether 1: 35.

Wherefore, they shall never be brought down into captivity: if so, it shall be because of iniquity.—2 Nephi 1: 13.

Thus it will be discovered that we believe that America is a choice land, destined to be a land of liberty. So far as we know, Latter Day Saints are the only people who hold that America is a land of biblical prophecy, known to God in the times of the patriarchs, and described and designated as Joseph's land. (See Genesis 49 and Deuteronomy 33.)

We gather too, from the foregoing, that our liberty is contingent upon righteousness. That America will continue to be a land of freedom, impregnable to outside assaults, subject to overthrow only if she shall lapse into iniquity. This idea is strikingly in harmony with the words of the martyred president, Abraham Lincoln, in an address before the Young Men's Lyceum, Springfield, Illinois.

If it ever reach us, it must spring up among us; it can not come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freed men we must live through all time or die by suicide.—Outlook, July 10, 1910.

Having directed in the discovery and colonization of the New World it is not unreasonable to suppose that God would so direct the organization of governments thereon that the liberty promised might be conserved, at least during the good behavior of the occupants. Accordingly we find this statement in another of the standard books of the church:

Therefore, it is not right that any man should be in bondage one to another. And for this purpose have I established the Constitution of this land, by the hands of wise men whom I raised up unto this very purpose, and redeemed the land by the shedding of blood.—Doctrine and Covenants 98: 10.

Surely the church could not at heart be an enemy to a government founded on a constitution that its God had inspired. The highest patriotism is fostered by the thought that God is back of the Constitution of the land.

The idea that God raised up the wise men who framed the Constitution (the great document that was pronounced by Gladstone to be one of the finest productions ever struck off by the mind of man), is in harmony with the best thought of some of the best writers and speakers. In an address at Burlington, Iowa, February 7, of this year, the Rev. Rollo F. Hurlburt, Ph. D., D. D., said:

Surely no one can read the pages of American History without believing in an all wise, directing and overruling providence.

It was not mere chance that gave to our infant republic the great men who so wisely matured it into vigor. There was Jefferson, the genius of democracy. There was Hamilton, the prince of conservatism. Neither could have planned the Constitution without the other. Both would have been powerless but for Washington.

In an address before a joint session of the senate and house of representatives, of the Iowa legislature, on the occasion of the Lincoln centennial, February 12, 1909, the Hon. Lafayette Young said:

The Anglo-Saxon conscience swept on and on as irresistible as this great river through the great waves round the shores through all seas. The Creator has ever been watchful of this republic, the last and greatest effort of man at self-government. Every American shot aimed from any cannon in a century or more has struck an object higher than the one aimed at. Washington could have had no foreknowledge of what was to follow his seven years' war. Beauregard in the gray of that April morning fired on Sumter. His purpose was to establish a southern confederacy. The result was the destruction of slavery. In modern military equipment the man in the casement who aims gun, does it by mathematics and does not see the object. He is given the elevation and the distance by a range finder. It would seem to me that the country has had a splendid range finder in all the years that have gone.

That the men who met in Philadelphia, in 1787, to draft the Constitution felt that they were under divine direction is evidenced by a remark made by George Washington at the time. In the History of the American People, volume 3, page 71, by Woodrow Wilson, we find this:

General Washington had stood in the midst of a little group of delegates, during the anxious first days at Philadelphia, while they waited for commissioners enough to justify them in effecting an organization, and had cried, "Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair. The event is in the hands of God."

Not all of the wise men that God raised up to establish the Constitution were present at that convention. Some of them were not yet born. At the time when the revelation quoted was given God in his own peculiar way was educating and preparing Abraham Lincoln who later defended the Constitution in the time of its greatest peril. Of Lincoln, Jesse W. Week, his old-time friend, wrote in the Outlook, February 2, 1909:

The world has never yet been able to account for Mr. Lincoln's amazing ability and intellectual perfection. . . . Whence came his marvelous sublimity of thought, the discrimination of his expression, the grandeur of his language? The question has never yet been answered.

Mr. Week's question was answered by Reverend Hurlburt in the address already referred to:

You professional, you business men here at this time, who started from the humblest beginnings in life, and have pushed your way to the front in the face of the greatest obstacles; you, as you draw yourself up, proudly say: "Lincoln was one of our self-made men." This may all be true. And yet, after all, Abraham Lincoln was not self-made. He was God-made. It was God who gave to Abraham Lincoln his splendid qualities of mind and heart. It was God who stood by him and strengthened him when amid the dangers that threatened destruction he took his place at the helm of the ship of state. It was God who cleared his brain and nerved his heart, enabling him even amid the darkest hours of the great conflict to say: "The Lord of Hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge."

Lincoln himself in his parting address to his old friends and neighbors, just prior to his first inauguration, said:

I go to assume a task more difficult than has devolved upon any other man since the days of Washington. He could never have succeeded except for the aid of divine Providence. . . . I feel that I can not succeed without the same divine blessing that sustained him; and on the same almighty Being I place reliance for support.—Encyclopedia Americana, vol. 9.

Finally we desire to quote most emphatic language from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

Let no man break the laws of the land; for he that keepeth the laws of God hath no need to break the laws of the land; wherefore be subject to the powers that be, until He reigns whose right it is to reign, and subdues all enemies under his feet.—Doctrine and Covenants 58: 5.

That was the law given to the church and accepted by the church as early as 1831. Under its provision all men, from the president of the church down, were required to obey the laws of the land. Said laws are to be honored absolutely until the second coming of Christ himself. That was the idea of the church in an early day, and it is still held and honored by the true church.

As we have stated in a former editorial: "These men were not tarred and feathered; they were not driven from State to State; their homes were not burned; they were not killed, in harmony with the law, but contrary to it. Not they, but their persecutors were opposed to law and order and good citizenship.

Members may have gone astray at times, as was inevitable in any church, but the church itself stood for law and good citizenship. The representative men of the church ever obeyed the law of the land and taught others to do so. Stories to the contrary were circulated by D. S. Rumor, of whom Mr. Dooley has truly said, "'Twill whisper ye'er virtues an' megaphone the scandals about ye."

The Chicago and Alton find their train, "The Red Hummer," will leave Chicago with special through equipment at 6.30 p. m., Friday, April 1; due at Independence the next morning at 7.30.

Parties by way of Saint Louis can take the train known as "The Early Bird," which leaves Saint Louis at 9.10 p. m., and is due in Independence at 6.30 a. m. The 6.30 p. m. train from Chicago, April 1, will be in charge of Bishop J. A. Becker. We expect to have our train from Saint Louis in charge of one of our elders. We have arranged for party tickets, ten or more, traveling together at reduced rates; but hope to secure special reduced rates and if successful will publish the fact in due time.

Be sure and send us your name and join the party that we may have joyful association.

Respectfully,

GRACELAND COLLEGE ITEMS.

When it was decided by Graceland College trustees to offer rent coupons in the college dormitories to the Sunday schools, that they might help defray an expense that was incurred for the young women of the church when Patroness Hall was erected, a letter was sent to the Henderson, Iowa, school. Encouraged by T. A. Hougas, the Superintendent of the General Sunday School Association, the members of this small school have paid for nine rent coupons of twenty dollars each. We have schools that are just as well able to help as the Henderson school and we hope to hear from them. The dormitory was built for the health and convenience of the students and they come from our Religio and Sunday school societies. It is but an opportunity for the young people to help themselves.

Many people having children that may come to Graceland some time in the future can well afford to help carry this responsibility. Write F. B. Blair, Lamoni, Iowa, for particulars.

There has just registered at Graceland College, Peter Choso, a young Japanese, lately from San Francisco. He came through the influence of the missionaries on the coast, especially Apostle F. A. Smith, and through assistance of some of the brethren in San Francisco. We earnestly trust that he may be an instrument in God's hands in doing good among the people of his race.

By letter from G. J. Waller, of Honolulu, we learn that he desires to send some of the young natives of Hawaiian Islands to Graceland next year. We will certainly do all we can to assist him in accomplishing this purpose.

In conversation with Elder Joseph F. Burton, late deceased, he expressed his ambition that some of the natives of the Society Islands might be brought to Graceland, educated, and sent back to their homes as bearers of the angel's message. When we see these things we more fully appreciate the mission of Graceland College in the church.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Bro. Daniel Macgregor writes from Stonington, Maine, stating that the work at that place is moving on in a marvelous manner. Since last September there have been one hundred and twenty-one baptisms, forty-five since his last writing. At Deer Isle, about ten miles from Stonington, thirty-eight have been baptized recently. The best part of it is that the Saints are taking hold of the work, observing both spiritual and temporal laws. His letter will be read with interest.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Crosby, living in Trinidad, Colorado, members of the Utah Church, read the article appearing in the Improvement Era concerning the Utah elders' stay in Lamoni, and their preaching here and the reply of Heman C. Smith. Brother Heman's name being the only one mentioned, they immediately clipped the article, and inclosed it in a letter to him in which they requested him to write them concerning it and send them some literature concerning the faith. They say that in that article they learned that there were some other kind of Mormons besides the Brighamites. Brother Heman exchanged two or three letters with them and sent them some literature. He then sent their letters to Elder Frank Russell and asked him to correspond with them. He did so and they came up to Colorado Springs to him to be baptized. Thus the lengthy article of misrepresentation framed up by those sixteen Utah elders had an unexpected result. Brother and Sister Crosby are fine young people; we are glad that our Utah friends wrote up their visit in Lamoni.

We have just examined the March number of Poultry Pointers and we feel impressed to tell HERALD readers that it will be a revelation to them to look over this publication. They can certainly do nothing less than send for a sample copy, and any of them having anything to do with chickens will see at once upon examination that they can not do without this paper. The price is nominal, only twenty-five cents per year, and it is worth several times that to any poultry raiser.

We learn by letter from Bro. William Anderson, that Bro. Walter W. Smith is recovering from his operation. Following the operation peritonitis set in, and his life was despaired of for a time, but the Saints got together and held prayer service, and during the meeting the physician phoned that a marked change for the better had taken place.

The Central Kansas City church is doing some striking and interesting advertising of the revival services to be held by Bishop R. C. Evans March 13 to 27. This mail brings us an illustrated card about nine by nineteen inches in size, printed on both sides, and folded so as to send it as a post card, bearing the legend, "R. C. Evans is coming."

We are getting in some very interesting articles and illustrations for our Magazine Number "Amboy to Independence," to be issued April 6. The Saints should heed our advice to order this number early, and not make the mistake that many did in ordering the Jubilee Number after the supply was exhausted. Single copies of the Magazine Number will be ten cents each. They can be secured in dozen lots for sixty cents per dozen. Address, Herald Publishing House, and specify "Magazine Number."

A CHANGE IN THE EPITOME OF FAITH.

In The Times and Seasons for March 1, 1842, will be found a request made of President Joseph Smith by the Honorable John Wentworth for information touching the faith of the church, with a statement made by the Prophet concerning the rise and history of the church, and closing with the epitome of faith, which is signed, "Joseph Smith."

We quote from this epitome the following two paragraphs:

3. We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the gospel.

4. We believe that these ordinances are first, Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; second, Repentance; third, Baptism by Immersion for the remission of sins; fourth, Laying on of Hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

In the fourth of these, it will be observed, these words occur, "We believe that these ordinances are," etc. In the epitome of faith published by the Utah Mormon Church this paragraph is, "We believe that these first principles and ordinances are," etc., and the epitome as so changed from that given by President Joseph Smith during his lifetime, appears over the name of Joseph Smith on the cards of the elders of the Utah Church. We admit that that church would have the right to formulate its own epitome of faith, but would deny their right to put into the epitome of faith over the name of Joseph Smith what does not appear as stated by him.

FLOCKING TO HOLY LAND.

INFUX OF HEBREWS TO PALESTINE OWING TO NEW REGIME IN TURKEY.

Letters from Jerusalem say that the proclamation of the constitution in Turkey has thrown open the doors of Palestine to the incoming of Hebrews from all parts of the world. In Jerusalem alone four fifths of the population of one hundred thousand now belong to the Hebrew faith, while at Jaffa, Tiberias, Safed, and Haifa, Hebrews are reckoned by tens of thousands.

Almost the whole extensive plain of Esdraelon has been bought up by them. Their prosperous colonies spread from Dan to Beersheba, and even farther south to the outskirts of Egypt. Thousands are escaping from Persia to find shelter and protection in the Holy Land, while every ship from Odessa carries hundreds of them.

The valley of the Jordan, once the property of the Ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid, is being eagerly sought after by Hebrew capitalists and syndicates of Zionists, whose agents, distributed all over the land, are buying up rich properties of Mohammedan effendis, whose incomes since the revolution are considerably lessened.

The holy city is essentially a Jewish town. Banking, as well as trade and commerce, is monopolized by Jews. The Government has found it necessary to organize a company of Jewish gendarmes. Hundreds of thousands of pounds are sent annually from Europe and America to enable the colonists to build homes. Over one hundred Jewish schools already exist in Jerusalem alone, and synagogues are going up everywhere.

The value of land has risen fourfold. The ignorant and poverty-stricken fellaheen are being ousted from their homes and villages, by the sharp European Hebrew settler, whose modern agricultural implements and methods have made the land produce harvests never before dreamed of by the natives. The Anglo-Palestine company, a Zionist banking and commercial enterprise, is pushing the cause of Israel with great determination.

The racial exclusiveness of the Jews and their clannish proclivities are arousing the opposition of the Ottomans, and the Turkish constitutional regime has in this question one of the greatest problems that a new and patriotic government ever faced.—New York Times.

(Song given by the Spirit through H. E. Thomas, at Wheeling conference, February 6, 1910. Old melody for, "Let us shake off the coals," etc. Notes taken by J. A. Becker.)

Hark, ye Saints of the Lord, to this anthem
Which the Spirit unfolds unto thee;
Ye who have partaken of the emblem
Of atonement that ye might be free.
Let your spirit of sacrifice grow stronger
As the day of my coming draws near;
For your toiling will not be much longer
'Till the Savior in glory appear.

I forewarn you of dangers distressing
That will rob all the nations of peace;
Yea, of death in cruel wars, most depressing,
Which, with time's onward march, will increase.
All the signs of this evil generation
Pointeth clearly the time is at hand
When the Lord will bring Zion consolation,
And make bare his strong arm in the land.

Let the young of my people be careful,
From the evils of life to abstain.
Seek the Spirit of Christ and be prayerful,
Lest its presence ye cease to retain.
Older servants are nearing their release,
On the threshold of final victory,
And the young are admonished to increase
Preparation for their ministry.

To the parents I give exhortation
For the children of Christ in your care;
Note the value of their conservation—
For demands of the future prepare;
That from such may grow cedars of renown
In the vineyard of Zion for the Lord;
Thus enlarging the glories of thy crown
In the harvest which brings your reward.

(Song given by the Spirit through H. E. Thomas, at Wheeling conference, February 6, 1910. Old English tune for "Lead, kindly light." The words were addressed to Apostle Gomer T. Griffiths.)

Rejoice my servant Gomer, man of God,
Whom angels aid;
Treading the path of service Jesus trod,
Be not afraid.
Past years of service unseen hands have blest;
New labors for the Lord precede thy rest.

I have been leading thee through all thy life,
Yea, in strange lands.
Thou hast been faithful in distress or strife,
Upheld weak hands.
Therefore the angels of the Lord delight
Thy future labors to bless them with their might.

Original Articles

THE LAW OF MOSES. HAD MEN UNDER IT AN OPPORTUNITY TO BE SAVED?

In the HERALD of February 16, Elder J. W. Peterson published an article in which he charged the Gospel Quarterly with being in error in its teachings concerning the law of Moses. The article opens with the assertion that the Quarterly, for a number of years, has exalted the law of Moses out of the place intended by its author.

It may be well, therefore, for the editor of the Quarterly to state what she considers the place of the law of Moses. She regards it as sustaining to the gospel a relation which may be compared to that which the moon sustains to the sun, shedding upon the children of men in a period which may be compared to night, a light which was a reflection of the gospel. The church, under the gospel dispensation after Christ was represented to the revelator as a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, representing the fact that the law of Moses was at an end and that the church was clothed with gospel power. (Revelation 12: 1.)

The moon reflects the light of the sun, and that lesson in the Quarterly (July 18) to which Elder Peterson especially refers, makes the statement in its outline that the light of Christ shines out in the gospel and in the law of Moses. Let us see concerning this.

Brother Peterson takes the position in his article that "faith, repentance, and baptism were principles of the gospel and not principles of the law of Moses." The editor of the Quarterly is not inclined to quibble over the question of what name shall be applied to those principles, but she insists upon the recognition of the fact that the law left to govern Israel from Moses to Christ included faith, repentance, and baptism, and secured for those people who lived in that period the opportunities that come to those who live in harmony with those principles.

Acting through Moses, the Lord left with Israel at Sinai the Aaronic or lesser priesthood, and the people were to be governed by the law which this priesthood had authority to administer. We read of it that the lesser priesthood contained, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel, which gospel is the gospel of repentance, and of baptism, and the remission of sins.

Call this by what name you will, say they were gospel principles, or say they were principles of the law of Moses as you choose, but admit that God left them binding upon Israel and granted to Israel the benefits to be derived from them. They are to be reckoned with when we debate whether or not men had opportunity to be saved in that period of time when Israel was under the law of Moses.

As the editor sees it, the Lord did not take away from man in that period of time his opportunity to exercise faith in God and in a Messiah to come, to repent of his sins, and to be baptized in water for the remission of his sins. Neither did he withhold from those who were worthy the ministrations of his Spirit, as the pages of Old Testament history attest.

Brother Peterson asserts that the law of Moses was "not spiritual, but carnal." He says it did not "require a holy life," and that "one could do many unholy things and still keep the law of Moses, both in spirit and in fact." But, when he makes this statement, the brother places himself in direct opposition to the words of Him who gave the law and who understands its intent and power better than either of us who essay to write upon it.

Listen here to what the giver of the law says:

Not at any time have I given unto you a law which was temporal, neither any man, nor the children of men; neither Adam your father, whom I created; behold, I gave unto him that he should be an agent unto himself; and I gave unto him a commandment, but no temporal commandment gave I unto him; for my commandments are spiritual; they are not natural, nor temporal, neither carnal nor sensual.—Doctrine and Covenants 28: 9.

Brother Peterson is clearly wrong when he asserts that the law of Moses was not spiritual but carnal. It held a spiritual significance which he seems not to have discerned and, because he did not discern it, he has depreciated a law which emanated from the same divine mind that gave the gospel law in its higher administration.

Having shown from the word of the Lord that the law of Moses was spiritual, we have a question to ask: Did the spiritual law of Moses conflict with the spiritual law of the gospel, or did they agree? Will the brother take the position that the Lord at different times gave two spiritual laws which were in conflict? We who believe the unchangeability of God answer this question in the negative and conclude that the spiritual law of Moses agreed with the spiritual law of the gospel, that the two laws were alike in the principles they expressed. This was the position taken in the Quarterly lesson to which Brother Peterson makes special objection.

It is in place here to introduce the words of the Lord to Moses at the time when the second tables of stone were made. (Exodus 34: 1, 2.) This is the language:

Hew thee two other tables of stone, like unto the first; and I will write upon them also, the words of the law, according as they were written at the first on the tables which thou breakest; but it shall not be according to the first, for I will take away the priesthood out of their midst; therefore my holy order, and the ordinances thereof, shall not go before them; for my presence shall not go up in their midst, lest I destroy them. But I will give them the law as at the first, but it shall be after the law of a carnal commandment;" etc.

It is stated here that the law upon the second tables was like the law upon the first tables. Then it is stated that it was not like the law upon the first tables, and the feature in which it differed from the first is stated, "For I will take away the priesthood out of their midst"; and "it shall be after the law of a carnal commandment."

God could not and did not change the principles of his law, but he expressed those principles in the ordinances and commandments which he left the Aaronic or lesser priesthood to administer. Upon the first tables, the same principles had been expressed in ordinances and commandments which the Melchisedec priesthood administers. This explains how the writing upon the two sets of stone tables was alike and yet different. The difference was not in the principles expressed but in the manner of expressing them.

Brother Peterson says, "One can keep the law of Moses and think as much evil as he pleases, so long as he does not commit the overt act." And yet Jesus said that all the law and the prophets hung on two great commandments, one, the command to love God with all the heart, and the other, to love one's neighbor as himself. (Matthew 22: 40.) The underlying principle of the whole law was love toward God and man. Brother Peterson should revise his article and cut out that long list of evils which he says one might cherish in his heart while he was outwardly keeping the law of Moses.

The brother labors under a great misconception of the law when he says, "The law of Moses was not a law of the heart." He contradicts again the word of the Great Teacher who reproved the Pharisees for tithing the small garden stuff, mint, and anise, and rue, and cummin, while they "neglected the weightier things of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith" (Matthew 23: 23). Judgment, mercy, and faith pertain to the heart, and Jesus said they were the weightier things of the law. Then the law was intended to teach them, though Brother Peterson says it was not a law of the heart.

He says also that the law of Moses "pertained to this life only." In this he was mistaken, as is evident in the conversation of Jesus with the Jewish lawyer who came to him asking, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Jesus answered him, "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" The lawyer answered, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." Jesus said to him, "Thou hast answered right; this do and thou shalt live." (Luke 10: 25-28.)

According to this teaching of the Master, the law of Moses did pertain to more than this life, for the question of the lawyer was concerning eternal life. Notice here, also, the promise of Jesus to the man, that, if he kept the law, the fundamental commands of which he had quoted, he should live. "This do," said Jesus, "and thou shalt live." This could mean nothing less than that eternal life concerning which the lawyer had inquired.

Whence came the belief of the Pharisees that there should be a resurrection of the dead (Acts 23: 8), if they did not understand the law and its ordinances to pertain to any life but this? Whence came the sentiment among the Jews, "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God" (Luke 14: 15), if they entertained no hope of a future life? If they had such a hope, whence did it come to them, and how did they hope to attain it?

We come now to a consideration of Matthew 5: 19-21, Inspired Version, the basis of that teaching in the Quarterly lesson of July 18, to which Brother Peterson objects. It reads thus:

Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets. [The law and the prophets were terms commonly used to refer to the Old Testament scriptures.] I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill.

For verily I say unto you, heaven and earth must pass away, but one jot or tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, until all be fulfilled.

Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so to do, he shall in no wise be saved in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven.

These words were spoken by Jesus concerning the commandments of the law and the prophets, the commandments of that law which was binding upon Israel from the time of Moses to Christ, call it by what name you will.

Brother Peterson says Jesus did not refer to the keeping of the law of Moses when he uttered the words quoted above. He said in his article that he would prove the statement by quoting words which Jesus spoke to the Nephites. He did make the attempt to do so and quoted these words from 3 Nephi 5: 63-68, Authorized Edition.

Think not I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy but to fulfill; for verily I say unto you, One jot nor one tittle hath not passed away from the law, but in me it hath all been fulfilled. And behold I have given you the law and the commandments of my Father, that ye shall believe in me, and that ye shall repent of your sins, and come unto me with a broken heart and a contrite spirit. Behold, ye have the commandments before you, and the law is fulfilled; therefore come unto me and be ye saved; for verily I say unto you, that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Brother Peterson places this language which was spoken to the Nephites after his ascension into heaven and his descent upon their land beside words which he spoke to his disciples while still he was in Galilee. He places the Nephite quotation which was spoken after the law of Moses had been brought to an end beside the Galilean quotation uttered before the law of Moses had ended. In the Galilean quotation Jesus says the law must be fulfilled, and in the Nephite quotation he says the law hath all been fulfilled. Yet Brother Peterson makes these two quotations parallel.

In the Nephite quotation, after having spoken of the law that had just been ended, Jesus mentioned the law that superseded it, charging them, "I say unto you that except ye shall keep my commandments, which I have commanded you at this time, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." This referred to the commandments of the gospel law, and Brother Peterson claims they were those "commandments of the law" of which Jesus spoke to his disciples when in Galilee.

We have called attention already to the fact that Jesus was speaking to his Galilean disciples of the law and the prophets which had not been all fulfilled and which they were required to keep until it had been fulfilled. The quotation of his words at that time furnishes us an opportunity to identify the commandments to which he referred. He spoke of them as "these least commandments."

Why did he do so? What is the significance in the expression? They were not "least commandments" in the sense of being unimportant, for commandments that bring us spiritual life or death, according to the manner in which we treat them, can not be deemed least in the sense of being unimportant.

"These least commandments" were the commandments of that law which the lesser priesthood had authority to administer. They were the commandments of that law which was left to be administered by the priesthood of Aaron from Moses to Christ. They were the commandments of that law which enjoined faith, repentance, baptism, and a life of love toward God and man. These were the commandments of which Jesus said, "Whosoever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great, and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven."

It may be well here that the editor should state still more definitely her understanding of the legitimate place and mission of the law of Moses and its relation to the law which followed it. Paul makes the significant statement in Hebrews 7:19, "For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God"; or, as rendered in the Inspired Version, "For the law . . . made nothing perfect, but was only the bringing in of a better hope, by the which we draw nigh unto God."

The law of Moses could not take a child of the earth, earthy, and with his affections and interests fixed upon the material things about him, and raise him to that perfection that fitted him for the pure presence of God. It was a ladder too short to raise him to that plane. The Aaronic priesthood had power to bring him into communion with angels, but it had not power to minister unto him for the reception of the Holy Spirit.

The power and authority of the lesser, or Aaronic priesthood, is to hold the keys of the ministering of angels, and to administer in outward ordinances—the letter of the gospel—the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins, agreeably to the covenants and commandments.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:10.

The power and authority of the higher, or Melchisedec, priesthood, is to hold the keys of all the spiritual blessings of the church.—Doctrine and Covenants 104:9.

• Again,

This greater priesthood administereth the gospel and holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God. Therefore, in the ordinances thereof the power of godliness is manifest; and without the ordinances thereof, and the authority of the priesthood, the power of godliness is not manifest unto men in the flesh; for without this, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live.—Doctrine and Covenants 83:3.

We may ask here what ordinance essential to salvation is administered in the church under the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood which could not be administered under Aaronic authority? Under the administration of the lesser priesthood men who exercised faith and repentance might be baptized in water for the remission of their sins. What more could the Melchisedec priesthood administer?

It could act in the ordinance of the laying on of hands for the ministrations of the Holy Spirit. This is the significance of the statement that the greater priesthood "holdeth the key of the mysteries of the kingdom, even the key of the knowledge of God." It is through the teachings of the Holy Spirit that men learn to know God and to understand the things that pertain to his kingdom. The Holy Spirit is the only medium through which men can come to know God and to understand the principles of his law. The Holy Spirit, working in the hearts of men, is the only power that can lead them to purify their lives and become better prepared for the presence of God.

No "form of godliness" (outward ordinances and works) can save a human soul, except it be attended by the "power of godliness" (the living Spirit of truth); but this "power of godliness," if permitted to work in a soul, raises it from death to life, accomplishing in it a spiritual resurrection. Without the ministrations of the Holy Spirit, without the power of godliness at work in the soul, no man can see the face of God, even the Father, and live. Doctrine and Covenants 83:3.)

Since the ministrations of the Holy Spirit are essential to our salvation, we may well inquire under what conditions it may be received. When the church is under the administration of the Melchisedec priesthood, the conditions are that men must humble themselves before God, and come forth with broken hearts and contrite spirits, and witness before the church that they have truly repented of their sins, and are willing to take upon them the name of Jesus Christ, having a determination to serve him unto the end, and they must truly manifest by their works that they have received of the Spirit of Christ unto the remission of their sins. Upon these conditions, they may be received by baptism into the church. (Doctrine and Covenants 17: 7.)

It is important to note here that such persons as are described in the above receive of the Spirit of Christ before they have submitted to any ordinance. This is in harmony with the statement that the Spirit giveth light to every man that cometh into the world; and the Spirit enlighteneth every man through the world, that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit; and every one that hearkeneth to the voice of the Spirit, cometh unto God, even the Father.—Doctrine and Covenants 83: 7.

It appears from this that the Spirit, the "power of godliness," begins to work in every human soul that comes into the world. If that soul yields to the promptings of the Spirit, it will be led in the way of truth. If it so be that he is led to the church when it is under Melchisedec administration, he will submit himself to the ordinance of baptism and afterwards to that of the laying on of hands and will receive a greater degree of spiritual light than he had before. As he continues to follow the guidance of the Spirit, he will increase in spiritual understanding until he has been brought to perfection and may gaze upon the face of God and live.

Returning to those people who lived in the interim between Moses and Christ, did that Spirit which gives light to every man that cometh into the world enlighten them? Did it lead them to obey the law God had left with them when he took Moses and the holy priesthood out of their midst and left with them the lesser priesthood? Did it approve those who were faithful under the opportunities afforded? Did it lead them upward into increasing light?

The pages of sacred history both in the Bible and in the Book of Mormon answer that it did. Angels ministered to the faithful of those people and spoke to them of holy things, and the voice of the Spirit spoke in their hearts, and, as they learned to heed it, the voice of truth became more and more distinct and the light of truth became more and more clear in their minds, until they rose to the plane of what we commonly call the gospel law.

Nephi answers our question very plainly. He tells us that, upon reaching the promised land, his people built a temple after the plan of Solomon's temple. He says they observed to keep the judgments, the statutes, and the commandments of the Lord in all things according to the law of Moses, and that the Lord was with them. (2 Nephi 4: 2, 3, small edition.) He says he taught concerning Christ who would come and of the necessity of their following the example of the Son of God. Here we quote Nephi's words:

And also, the voice of the Son came unto me, saying, He that is baptized in my name, to him will the Father give the Holy Ghost, like unto me: wherefore, follow me, and do the things which ye have seen me do. Wherefore, my beloved brethren, I know that if ye will follow the Son with full purpose of heart, acting no hypocrisy and no deception before God, but with real intent, repenting of your sins, witnessing unto the Father that you are willing to take upon you the name of Christ, by baptism: yea, by following your Lord and Savior down into the water, according to his word; behold, then shall ye receive the Holy Ghost; yea, then cometh the baptism of fire and of the Holy Ghost; and then can ye speak with the tongues of angels and shout praises unto the Holy One of Israel.—2 Nephi 13: 2, small edition.

And this was while they were under the law of Moses. Under the law of Moses and the ministrations of the Spirit, the Nephite church was finally clothed again with the authority of the Melchisedec priesthood, and we read of Alma's devoting himself to the high priesthood of the holy order of God and of his appointing elders over the church. (Book of Alma, chapter 3.)

In the time between Moses and Christ, there were the prophets of the Old Testament, among them Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, of whom Peter wrote that "holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1: 21), and concerning whom Jesus said, "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, with all the holy prophets, in the kingdom of God" (Luke 13: 28). One of the notable prophets was Elijah who was translated, an experience which Genesis 14: 26 to 32, Inspired Version, gives us reason to believe results from a high degree of spirituality under the power of the holy priesthood of the Son of God.

Doubtless there were many, under the law of Moses, like the parents of John the Baptist who were "righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless" (Luke 1: 5). Doubtless there were others like Simeon who blessed the infant Jesus, a man "just and devout," who waited in faith and hope for the consolation of Israel, of whom it is written that "the Holy Ghost was upon him." This man had lived in such close communion with God that it had been revealed to him that he should not see death before he had seen the Lord's Christ; and, when the child was brought into the temple, by the inspiration of the Spirit, he recognized the promised Savior and prayed, "Lord, let now thy servant depart in peace."

Were not such as he prepared for the kingdom of God, prepared not by the works of the law alone, but by the ministration of the Holy Spirit, the "power of godliness" which wrought in their souls?

In the lesson to which Brother Peterson objects, the editor used these words, "Salvation could be attained by those who kept the law of Moses." It was not stated and the lesson made clear that it was not in the mind of the editor that salvation could be gained by doing the works of the law alone. The thought is that salvation was accessible to those people who lived in the time of the law of Moses. This article shows that the statement is a reliable one.

If it be claimed that the Nephites were under Melchisedec authority in the time when Nephi taught and that the prophets of old were under the endowment of that priesthood, we ask, How did they attain that spiritual height, the Melchisedec priesthood having been taken away with Moses, if not as we have suggested in this article, by faithfulness to the law of Moses and by the ministrations of the Spirit of God which reaches down to fallen man to lift him up?

In the beginning, God introduced into the world the plan of salvation and sent forth a decree that it should be in the world until the end thereof. (Genesis 5: 45, Inspired Version.) Sacred history permits us to trace the gospel down to Enoch, through Methuselah to Noah, through Melchisedec to Abraham, through Jethro to Moses. This article maintains that the same plan of salvation was left with Israel in the law given to govern from Moses to Christ, that, during that period, men might be saved by faith, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and the communion of the Holy Spirit, the latter to be ministered from heaven as the Lord found them worthy and capable of receiving his light, and, by the way, it is ministered now upon the same conditions.

When the law of Moses came to an end, the same unchangeable plan of salvation was continued in the gospel as Christ taught it and left it to remain in the world, even to the end, if men would continue faithful in observing its conditions. In time, men went into darkness, and though the plan of the gospel remained written in books and upon hidden plates, its priesthood became alienated from it and lost their identity in the darkness of the ages and the administration of the gospel ceased. In the latter days, it was restored again, the same unchangeable plan that was given in the beginning and has continued from Adam to us. It is not claimed that there has been an unbroken administration of the gospel, but it is claimed that there has been in the world one unchanging and unchangeable plan of salvation from the beginning of the world to the present time.

God has never taken from men this opportunity of salvation. He did not take it from them in the period between Moses and Christ. He did not take it away in the Dark Ages. Men have departed from God and from the gospel, but the Lord has never closed the door of opportunity from the time when first he opened it in the days of Adam. There will come a time when the Master of the house will rise and close the door, but this has never yet been done since Adam's day. This is in fulfillment of the the end thereof.

The writer of this article believes she has shown:

1. That the law of Moses was a spiritual law.
2. That it was in harmony with the gospel law.
3. That it pertained to the heart and required holiness of life.
4. That Jesus was speaking of the law administered by the lesser priesthood when he said, "Who-soever shall do and teach these commandments of the law until it be fulfilled, the same shall be called great and shall be saved in the kingdom of heaven."
5. That man could not attain salvation by the works of the law alone.
6. That the Aaronic priesthood had not power to bring him into communion with the Holy Spirit.
7. That the power of ministering to men for the gift of the Spirit, when resident in men, belongs to the Melchisedec priesthood.
8. That, when the Melchisedec priesthood is not with men, God ministers the Spirit without the administration of men, as he clearly has the right to do.
9. That men were saved in the period between Moses and Christ, not by a form of godliness alone, but by the power of godliness working in conjunction with it.

10. That God introduced into the world in the time of Adam an unchangeable plan of salvation which was to be in the world unto the end thereof.

11. That he has never changed this plan or taken from the world the opportunity of obeying it.

12. That there has not been an unbroken administration of the gospel, because men at various times have departed from it.

13. That the people from Moses to Christ had the opportunity of obeying this unchangeable plan.

14. That the plan is: faith, repentance, baptism, and communion with the Holy Spirit, which is that power of godliness which works the spiritual resurrection of man.

The editor of the Quarterly believes it is not possible for men under either Aaronic or Melchisedec administrations of the law to be saved by the works of the law. She understands Paul, who labored so zealously to impress this upon the Jews, to have spoken the same warning to the Corinthian Saints concerning the observance of the gospel law. When the apostle said to those people, that though he should speak with the tongues of men and of angels, though he should give all his goods to feed the poor, and though he should even give his body to be burned, and did these outward works without charity in his heart, his works would be unprofitable (1 Corinthians 13), he uttered a principle that has been true in all time, as true when applied to the church under Melchisedec administration as when under Aaronic.

It is possible for baptism by the Melchisedec priesthood to be a dead work, and Mormon so classes it when administered to those who can not exercise repentance (Book of Moroni 8: 3). This is the case also when administered to those who do not, from any cause, exercise faith and repentance before being baptized. Baptism and the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Spirit become but dead works under such circumstances. It was possible to live spiritually under the law of Moses, and it is possible to live carnally under what we often term the gospel law, though in the truest sense, there has never been any other law.

Brother Peterson suggests that the editor should have counselors in her work. The editor can not resist the suggestion, which she desires to make in very gentle tones, that, had the brother been supplied with a competent counselor at either elbow while preparing his article, it would have appeared in print in a greatly modified form, especially such portions as that which asserts that one could keep the law of Moses and be at heart a murderer, an adulterer, a slaveholder, that he could keep the law of Moses and not repent, not forgive, not show mercy, not be baptized, etc. The editor is glad her conception of the law is higher than this.

The editor suggests further that the Lord has furnished us a plan by which his work may be protected from false teaching. He graciously permits us to have the Spirit of truth to dwell in our hearts and to guide us into all truth. Our safety lies in keeping in close touch with this great and competent Counselor. We all need this protection and help, elders, Sunday school teachers, lay members, and all.

Much more might be written upon the subject of this article, but lack of time and space both dictate that the article should now be closed.

Very kindly submitted,

ANNA SALYARDS.

THE SANITARIUM AND THE PHYSICIAN TO THE CHURCH.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The truth of the statement, "Order is heaven's first law," is self-evident. No sane person, or indeed any person able to think, supposes for a moment that the affairs of heaven are conducted in a disorderly manner. Organization is an instrumentality by which order is obtained, and the observation of organic rules is the price paid for success. Order in heaven of whatever sort it is—and we mortals may have a very imperfect conception of the order prevailing there—must result from perfect organization. From time to time during the history of the church as organized in 1830, directions have been given with reference to the accomplishing of certain designs in which directions no specific details or procedure were clearly given; but in nearly every instance direction was given to organize. The presumption is fair in law and the common sense view of the carrying on of human affairs, that where a direction is given to do a certain thing, the power to do that thing is couched in the direction to do it, and if no specific details of procedure are given, then those who are directed to perform the work are left to the exercise of their wisdom and best judgment as to the way they should set about accomplishing that which was ordered.

The Sanitarium was directed to be established. Certain parties were directed to do it. But few details are given as to the procedure for erecting the building or for carrying on the work for which the institution was intended. What few details were given have been as strictly complied with as was possible. It must not be supposed that the work that the Sanitarium was to do would be either undertaken or carried on in a loose or indiscriminate way. It must be done in an orderly, wise, and discriminating spirit. The end to be accomplished and the way to accomplish it must be correlated, and those who are called to responsible positions in doing the work must be left free to the exercise of their wisdom, where no specific directions are given. It is possible for a man to stand in his own light; that is to say, that a man may so stand with reference to the work which his hands may be doing, that he does not see the work in a clear light. It is possible for others to stand in such a way, that their shadows are thrown on the work which a man may be doing in their presence, as to bring about the same results, compelling him to do his work under the darkened shades thrown by standing between him and the light which should shine upon his work. Everybody can see the force of this illustration.

The men upon whom the burden lies of carrying on the work of the Sanitarium must not be hindered in doing their work by careless or factious criticism, or by any refusal to credit them with the due discretion to understand the object of the institution and the way and manner for the accomplishment of it. It is only just to assume that these men will be led in right directions. We therefore commend to the readers of the HERALD the following article written by Bro. Joseph Luff, indicating the character of the work to be done and the manner in which it is to be accomplished in carrying on Sanitarium work.—SENIOR EDITOR.

There are a few things which all concerned should know regarding the Sanitarium. Much trouble to the management and others (to say nothing of loss) may be avoided thereby. Whether this communication will furnish the information in sufficient plainness to serve the purpose or not remains to be seen; but to that end it is written.

Letters are being received, containing questions, criticisms, suggestions, complaints, commendations, etc., according to the attitude, mood, enlightenment, or ignorance of the writers, concerning the institution and its purpose and management. Some of these are palatable, others distasteful; others make us feel sad and anxious. We have not a word to say here in defense of the institution or the necessity for it. It is here by the order of the church, acting as it believed under the command of God. The position in it occupied by the writer hereof has been accepted with the sole object of pleasing God and blessing men and women, and for his services in the Sanitarium he receives no financial remuneration. This statement is made to correct a contrary impression which has obtained in some places.

My work in the Sanitarium will not interfere with the medical work in which I have been engaged for years past. A certain amount of time will be given to the institution, each day in administering, treating, or directing, as conditions demand. The remainder will be spent in my office attending to the cases which in person or by mail are presented there. All persons, therefore, who wish to receive consideration or treatment from me, personally, should address me at my office, 1038 West Electric street. Outside of the Sanitarium duties, mine is almost exclusively an office practice. My charges are as follows: Three dollars per month to those well able to pay. Nothing is asked for either advice or medicine from the real poor. Between these extremes patients are asked to simply pay what they can without distressing themselves or their families, and whatever the amount is, it will be satisfactory. This rule has been adopted because the circumstances of those applying for treatment are not known to me, and it is desired that none shall be distressed. Thus far the great majority of my patients have been treated gratuitously. This has been, in part, owing to the impression had by at least some of them, that those patients who did not pay me were paid for by the church or Bishop. Let all such persons know that that idea is an erroneous one. Neither the Church Physician nor his family receives a dollar from the church or Bishop for any services whatever. Prior to last General Conference, his family was on ministerial allowance, but not since, and he has never received at any time anything from the treasury of the church for his personal expenses, or official service or outlays as a church physician.

The above will answer questions frequently propounded regarding the matters referred to. Nevertheless, all who suffer are equally welcome to what he can do for them, whether they are able to pay or not, or whether they belong to the church or not. Missionaries and the dependent portion of their families are entitled to free advice and medicine.

All correspondence relating to the Sanitarium should be addressed to Independence Sanitarium, West Blue avenue, Independence, Missouri. Those having occasion to deal in any way with the institution should know in advance:

First. That the board of directors has received by revelation, through the President of the Church, instructions regarding the object and character as well as the management of the institution and thereby said board intends to be governed.

Second. That it is not to be used as a public hospital to which all persons have access and in which all kinds of work common to such places is to be performed. Only such cases as those in charge shall consider within the purview of its mission will be admitted. This restriction has special reference to surgical cases and the use of the operating room.

Third. That it is to be conducted as a spiritual house, in which the first consideration will be to administer in church ordinances for the benefit of the sick; medical attention being added as required, but under conditions of environment, that will conserve church designs in building up the faith of those admitted.

To preserve this environment will be the aim of the management, and they will not hesitate to refuse admission to any applicant, if in their judgment the operations contemplated are not within the realm of actual necessity or moral consistency. A house dedicated to God should not be desecrated by an assignment of any of its parts at any time for questionable practices, no matter how popular or how professional others may declare said practices to be. Nor can we consistently pray in one room or ward for divine benedictions upon our patients if, by our consent in another room, operations are permitted upon which we could not conscientiously ask God's blessing.

Fourth. That it is intended especially for the members of the church and not for those without, and only in cases of extreme necessity or emergency will the latter be admitted. The question of necessity is to be decided by those in charge. This is not intended in any other sense than to preserve the institution within the environment required by revelation calling for the construction of the building, and the later one giving instructions to the board. It must be patent to all that it would be folly to build a house for the purpose of escaping an undesirable environment, and then to invite into it an element that would create that environment. There are many people, however, who are not of us in church enrollment, whose presence when church ordinances are being observed would not embarrass the occasion in the least. The management will try to avoid extremes and move with discretion in this regard.

Fifth. All patients admitted will be entitled, without extra charge, to the treatment of the house physician, under the direction of the Physician in charge, or either of these alone if desired. Should any other physicians be desired, terms, etc., must be made with him by those employing him. After cases have been admitted and their physicians chosen, every facility of the institution will be utilized as may be necessary to make successful his work of healing, regardless of the school of medicine he represents. The religious sentiments of patients will be respected and every aid practicable will be rendered to secure them the advantages and consolations of their fellowship in whatever church it may lie. Those, however, placing themselves under the immediate care of the Physician in charge need look for nothing in religion but the faith of the Reorganization, and for nothing in medicine but unadulterated homeopathy.

Sixth. That cases of insanity, pronounced cases of consumption (tuberculosis), and absolutely hopeless and incurable cases will not be admitted. The physicians of the Sanitarium will cheerfully render any possible aid to such at their homes, if desired, by mail.

Seventh. That blank application forms have been prepared and will be supplied on request, and these must be properly filled out and passed upon in all, except emergency, cases, by the medical management before being admitted.

Eighth. That emergency cases, before admission must be passed upon by the Physician in charge or those appointed by him to act in his absence.

Ninth. That the Sanitarium can not be run without an immense outlay, and that the money to meet that outlay must come either directly from the patients admitted, or from the churches, societies, or friends, at whose instigation they are received. It will not be open as a free institution to those who have homes or are situated where they can receive needed attention. If members of the church who are not able to pay the expenses necessary, desire admission, let them confer with the local bishops or agents, and operate through them, and not with the Sanitarium management, as the latter can not provide nor arrange for funds to help in such matters. The church is already under as heavy burdens as can well be carried and it is to be hoped that no one will exact of her more than is proper. We hope to make the Sanitarium as effective as possible for good. The undersigned hereby promises to do the best he can in that direction without regard to persons or rank. When it is believed by the body that his place in charge can be filled by some other with greater satisfaction or efficiency, under the divine idea, his release will be to him an unspeakable happiness. Hoping for the prayerful support of those who look with favor upon the Sanitarium as an appointment of God, and for at least the tolerance and negative interest, without enmity, of those who "don't exactly know about it."

I remain for God, the church, and humanity,
A humble servant,

JOSEPH LUFF.

[We learn that since Brother Luff wrote the foregoing he has chosen Dr. W. E. Messenger as house physician in the Sanitarium. Brother Messenger assumes charge not later than March 15.—EDITORS.]

ROBERT E. GRANT. HIS "OPEN LETTER," ETC.

It is no pleasant task for us to be brought under the necessity of publishing and republishing the facts which show the moral and spiritual status of Mr. Grant, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, but he himself has necessitated this—our only proper line of defense and explanation.

Mr. Grant was once a minister in the church, but he fell into transgression, was tried and retried before two of the church courts, and was convicted of adultery and unchristianlike conduct. Up to date, he has furnished us no evidence of repentance, but much to the contrary. The personnel of the courts which tried him, if there was no other evidence, is abundantly sufficient to show that he would have received the full benefit of the doubt, had there been any proper grounds for doubt. But Mr. Grant's apparent lack of ability to sense his condition of humiliation and shame, together with his reckless folly and false statements, have necessitated the publication of the facts herewith submitted.

This paper will show why Mr. Grant has not received more consideration and recognition by the church. He is not one of us, because he was found wholly unworthy to remain with us. He has no claim whatever upon the church, until he is willing to repent and do that which is right.

That "open letter, written to J. R. Lambert," was the third communication sent to him. Elder Lambert twice furnished him with his personal reasons for refusing to enter into controversy with him, before the copy of the so-called "open letter" came to hand. Then, in a short time after he received letter number 3, it was printed and sent abroad as an "open letter." When Elder Lambert saw this letter in print, he received his first intimation of an "open letter." Thus it will be seen that a cunning and ungentlemanly effort was made to force Elder Lambert into controversy with this man, contrary to his repeated and expressed desire. The following items of record are furnished by Bro. R. M. Elvin, who was and is secretary of the High Council:

"There was filed against the said R. E. Grant the charge of 'adultery and unchristianlike conduct,' this case was tried at Grand Rapids, Michigan, . . . Elders E. A. Blakeslee, S. W. L. Scott, and E. K. Evans comprising said court."—High Council Journal, p. 68.

"Presidency,

"Joseph Smith, Alexander H. Smith.

"Council,

"1. Frederick G. Pitt, 2. James H. Peters, 3. Calvin A. Beebe, 4. James M. Baker, 5. James C. Crabb, 6. Asa S. Cochran, 7. William Anderson, 8. John Chisnall, 9. Charles Derry, 10. John A. Robinson, 11. Robert M. Elvin, 12. George M. Scott.

"In this case R. E. Grant was charged with adultery and unchristianlike conduct. The charges were heard before an elders' court at Grand Rapids, Michigan, August 8, 1899, and a verdict of guilty rendered. From this, R. E. Grant appealed to the High Council.

"J. A. Grant and F. M. Cooper appeared for the Valley Branch, and R. E. Grant in his own behalf.

"The decision of the council was that the elders' court be affirmed; and that the defendant, R. E. Grant, be adjudged guilty of adultery and unchristianlike conduct."—SAINTS' HERALD, p. 299, for May 2, 1900.

The council was in session four successive days, April 11, 12, 13, and 14, holding two sessions each day, one in the forenoon, one in the evening, and finishing their sitting on the morning of April 16.

R. E. Grant, in his own defense, first reviewed the address of John A. Grant. Then reviewed the evidence had before the council. This plea occupied three hours.

F. M. Cooper closed the argument for the plaintiff in reviewing both the argument of R. E. Grant, and a further explanation upon the evidence on file before the council. He spoke one hour. J. A. Grant spoke one hour and twenty minutes.

After a patient and a continuous presentation of the cause as the same was tried before the court below, an examination of the evidence written and oral as the same was presented; the speeches of those appointed by lot, after the counselors; and the pleas of the counsel for the Valley Branch, and the appellant had been heard, the president gave his decision, which was:

That the decision of the elders' court be affirmed; and that appellant defendant R. E. Grant be adjudged guilty of the charge of adultery and unchristianlike conduct.

This decision was sustained unanimously by the council. Robert E. Grant was expelled from the church by the Grand Rapids (Michigan) Branch, June 19, 1900.

Herewith as secretary of the High Council I certify to the truthfulness of the data found upon the record of said Standing High Council,

Attest:

No man is fitted to do for others who fails to do for himself. No man can rise above his fellows unless he tills his own fields. He can not help others unless he first helps himself. The master man is his own builder, others may in a measure bring him materials to enter the construction of his building, yet he must choose for himself what materials he shall use. The divine gift to man is the desire and purpose of caring for himself.—Selected.

"Life does not consist of the things we possess in this world, but of the things we hope to possess in the world to come."

Of General Interest

MISTAKING SOCIOLOGY FOR RELIGION.

Prof. Shailer Matthews contributes a warning word to the discussion of the friendliness between the church and organized labor or socialism. He seems to discern a tendency to neglect the spiritual factor for which the church must primarily stand. Such neglect, he says, in The Homiletic Review (New York), "will simply leave the church again in the attitude of seeking merely to alleviate misery, subject to the danger of being misunderstood as seeking aggrandizement for itself. The church, he declares, "will never succeed in being merely a new organ of social reform." The mission of the church is first of all to the souls of men, and if it degenerates into an annex to a labor union, an employment agency or a charitable society, people will fail to see why they should join the annex rather than the main body. The church may cooperate with these agencies, as with every good work, but should remember that its main work is spiritual. He says of the church's function, "peculiarly its own":

"It is the evangelization of the spiritual life which lies below all social uplift. In training the minister to lead a church to fulfill such a function, our theological seminaries will make a profound, and in my opinion, suicidal mistake if they seek to substitute sociology for theology, and abandon the field of spiritual life in order to devote themselves primarily to individual and social conduct. Such a transfer of activity is exceedingly easy and promises in many cases results which are highly attractive; but to seek to entertain people into a surreptitious interest in the church as a religious body; to substitute sociological discussion for the exposition of truth that stimulates and enlarges the spiritual life; to substitute interest in society as a whole for interest in individuals, as spiritual lives; will be fatal to the church. For as a general program it is supererogatory in social transformation. I do not believe that leaders of organized labor or socialism, political reform, or movements for international peace, will respect the church or its ministry if it abandons its characteristic function in order to become simply another organization covering the entire field of social transformation. Furthermore, such a policy will sooner or later have its effect on the church itself. For when men come to believe that the church is trying to do only that which extra ecclesiastical institutions are all doing better, they will fail to see the need of joining the church in order thus to dissipate energies that would be more effective if concentrated. There is a much deeper controversy in progress than that between labor and capital, or between capitalization and socialization. It is a struggle between two world orders: the one in which material and the other in which spiritual good is final. This controversy cuts across all others. You will find it in the labor union, among socialistic comrades, in organized charity, in the church itself. Everywhere you find men, consciously or unconsciously, in one or the other of these camps. It is of first importance that the ministry should recognize the nature of this issue, otherwise it will be tempted to align itself with one or the other of the opposing factors in purely economic or social struggles. In so far as they commit this mistake will clergymen be misunderstood as the champions of social and economic classes and the church thus be swept into a controversy in which as representative of the spiritual order it is not concerned. This, I take it, was the very danger that Jesus and Paul sought to avoid."

The new conditions of our social world with its class consciousness and class movements demand that the church shall educate the spiritual life in social morality as well. It is not enough, Doctor Matthews declares, for it to be zealous in opposing such social evils as the saloons and the white slave traffic, in which church members are not personally concerned. It must train the spiritual life to discern and face the moral issues in the industrial world in which church members are themselves immersed. He goes further in this strain:

"It is from this point that ministers must approach that coöperation which every earnest man must desire to see established between the church and organized labor. In fact, it is the only safe point of approach. If the minister approaches organized labor as one who sympathizes with labor as over against capital, he will have mistaken his real interests. In Christ there is neither laboring man nor capitalist, but the new creation. He must be as able to show the supremacy and implication of the spiritual life to the wage earner as to the capitalist, but he must see clearly and appreciate intelligently the fact that the implications of the spiritual life will differ in the two economic classes so far as its expression and conduct is concerned.

"More than this, the church and the ministry need to be educated to appreciate the fact that social sympathies should not only be warm but intelligent. The economic world is under the reign of law as truly as the natural world of forces. To gain men as laboring men and capitalists may profit the church nothing; but to bring them as men to the expression of spiritual life that shall be in accordance with the reign of law, although not an easy task, is certainly far more vital to the welfare of mankind. The minister has no right to let sympathy take the place of wisdom. If he should not substitute sociology for theology, he should most assuredly link the findings of the two disciples in his own thought and message and pastoral methods."—Literary Digest, February 19, 1910.

THE IMPOSSIBLE THINGS THAT ARE TO BE.

We have just seen, and are still to see, gigantic parades of the floating creatures of steam up and down the Hudson—pageants of great ships filling the river from side to side, covering the waters as stars cover the face of the sky at night, and dashing against the rocky shores the last drop of the mighty river as it runs on its way. We have seen a vast armada of floating fortresses of steel lying out there in the river—of steel made buoyant and terrible—which the moving steam flotilla encircled.

And when we saw this, we looked upon the little Clermont, too, out of whose absurd body all these steamships, and tugs, and torpedo craft, and mighty battleships, were born; and when we saw her, we realized that an impossible thing had been made to happen before our eyes.

The thing was surely impossible; for what Fulton did was to place some paddles in the water and connect them with a crank which a jet of steam kept going; and this jet of steam had had its beginning, not so long ago, in a mere tea-kettle.

Impossible? Nothing could be more so. As great and quick a mind as Napoleon Bonaparte's had rejected Fulton's ideas as impracticable when they were offered to France. They were demonstrably so! But the strange thing about it was that in a hundred years the boyish contrivance of the paddle box became the mighty pageant of world power that we have seen on the Hudson.

The impossible things did not come to an end with the steamboat. In fact, the beginnings of these great things that thenceforward came on were more and more ridiculous. The electric telegraph had its birth in a child's kite flown by an old man amid much public merriment; and there was another man who sat making sparks by rubbing a silk ribbon. The impossibility of electric communication was demonstrated over and over again to Samuel F. B. Morse, just as its subsequent development, the submarine cable, was proved impossible to Cyrus W. Field. After that the telephone, and wireless telegraphy—most impossible of all.

We are so accustomed now to the triumph of impossible things that we all believe in the future of the flying machine, even though so great a man as the late Simon Newcomb seems to have proved its impracticability as a commercial enterprise.

But are all these mechanical inventions the only things that are triumphantly possible in spite of their impossibility? Are there no mighty ships of moral achievement, of social miracle, which will some time navigate the broad waters of American humanity?

Well, we have already seen some impossible moral victories achieved in this land and time. They are victories that were built up from ridiculous beginnings, too, just as the steam-and-steel battleship and the Mauritania were raised on the foundation of the tea-kettle, and the electric telegraph built on the basis of the kite and the ribbon of silk. Could anything be more absurd, as the beginning of a moral revolution, than William Lloyd Garrison's single case of old type set up in an attic chamber? Yet this case of type freed a race, and gave the American people a new birth. Or more absurd than Koch's and Pasteur's culture of little germs in a mass of gelatine, which some time will abolish consumption and other scourges?

An idea and a pure soul together; give us these, and the miracle is born. The men and women who are working, amid the universal scorn, to make all men well, and all little children happy; to render all our cities beautiful, and our laborers wise, and free, and great; to deliver men's souls from the bondage of vicious indulgence by destroying for ever the despair that drives them into vice and drunkenness; to make our civic life sound and sweet to the core—such men and women are all at work upon one of those great impossible achievements which it is the delight of Divine Omnipotence to render possible at last.

As we honor the dream of Hudson and the achievement of Fulton, let us send the salutation of our hearts to the workers for the other great impossible things which are yet to be.—Evening Mail, New York.

THE BEAST AND THE JUNGLE.

Judge Lindsey is known to the world at large for his work in the Juvenile Court of Denver; and, to his little court room there, come children's society agents from all parts of the States, visitors from England, officers from Germany, and government officials sent from Sweden, Austria, France, and Japan to study his laws and learn his methods.

But to himself, to Denver, to his friends, and—most of all—to his enemies, his famous Juvenile Court is only an incident, a side issue, a small detail in the man's amazing career. For years he has been engaged in a fight of which the founding of his Juvenile Court was only the merest skirmish.

It is a fight that has carried him into politics to find both political parties against him. It has been carried on without the consistent support of any newspaper, and with now one, now the other, and at times all the party organs in Denver cartooning and attacking him. The thieves, the gamblers, the saloon keepers and the prostitutes have been cheered on against him. There have been times when even the churches have been afraid to aid him. Men of wealth—the heads of street railways, the telephone company, the gas and electric company, the water company, and most of the other Denver corporations and combinations of finance—have made it their particular ambition and personal aim to beat him down and crush him out of public life. He has fought alone—at times absolutely alone. And he is still fighting!

He has been offered bribes that might buy a millionaire. He has been promised a career in politics, a fortune in law. He has been given the hope of worldly preferments that might seduce the highest ambition.

When these have failed to win him, he has been threatened with all the punishments that the most unscrupulous power and bitterest hate could conceive. To destroy his reputation, false affidavits have been sworn out by fallen women accusing him of the lowest forms of vice. Attempts have been made to lure him to houses of ill-repute where men were lying in wait to expose him. The vilest stories about him have been circulated in venomous whispers from man to man and woman to woman. Friends have been frightened or bought or driven from him. His life has been threatened. Special laws have been introduced at the State capitol against him! The Denver Chamber of Commerce has publicly branded him an enemy of the State. At times the very lights in his rooms at the courthouse have been cut off—as the last and smallest annoyance of spite—and he has had to go to the corner drug store at night and buy himself candles to continue his work!

And why? For what has he been fighting? What terrible thing has he sought to attain? Read his story. Here it is, told by himself, without malice, in a sort of good humored indignation, with a smile that is sometimes bitter in spite of a patience that seems beyond words. It is a story that would be appalling if it were not for the fact that through it all he himself moves in the very figure of hope. It is a story that is true not only of Denver but of any other American city in which a Lindsey might appear. It is the story of the fight of one man against the conditions that threaten to make the American democracy a failure in government and a farce in the eyes of the world.

And it is a story of achievement. Without money, without powerful friends, without the dominating qualities of a personal popularity, this one man, in an obscure struggle, has written upon the statute books of Colorado laws that have been copied around the world. He has codified probate laws, purged election laws and instituted a reform in criminal jurisprudence that is as revolutionary in our day as the teachings of Christ were in the "eye-for-an-eye" days of the Jews. The list of reforms he has obtained, charities founded, public improvements instituted and political steals balked, shows nearly a hundred items. He has obtained nothing for himself but the praise and support of some citizens of Denver and the curse and enmity of others. The Reverend Henry Augustus Buchtel, chancellor of the Denver University and ex-governor of the State of Colorado, in the year 1904 coupled his name with Christ's—no less!—and in the year 1907 called him, through the newspapers, "a nincompoop" and a "fice dog"! Those are the two crowns that have been offered him: a halo and a fool's cap. Which shall it be? To which is he entitled in the eyes of the democracy whose battle he is helping to fight?

The evidence follows. The choice shall be your own.

The first installment of "The beast and the jungle" appeared in the October number of Everybody's.

CHARLES R. CURTIS, THE INDIAN SENATOR.

This is a story that begins in a wigwam and ends in the Capital at Washington—the story of a "redskin" who has risen high in the councils of the Government with whom his race have warred—the story of the first Indian Senator—Charles R. Curtis, who was once jokingly called "the only American in the United States Senate."

Curtis was born in a tepee of the Kaw tribe, in Kansas, in 1860. His mother was a Kaw woman and his father a French officer. Left an orphan at the age of three, the future senator spent his early boyhood in the wigwam of his mother's people near Council Grove, Kansas. One of his first recollections is the sight of a galloping, painted war party of Kaw braves dashing forth to battle against their foes, the Cheyennes.

Soon after this fight he was sent to Topeka to school. But he was too used to the free, outdoor life of an Indian youth to relish the confinement of a schoolroom. Moreover—according to white man's standard—he was poor; and he found it necessary to turn his hand to some means of livelihood.

He went to work as a newsboy; then as a peanut vender; then as a bootblack. But none of these jobs promised wealth nor even an especially comfortable living. So he sought for better work. Here his boyish experience in riding bareback the wild Kaw bronchos stood Curtis in good stead. And when his chance came he was ready for it. He obtained a job in a racing stable as a jockey, and rode many a winner. He and the veteran jockey, Fred Taral, struck up a warm friendship in those race track days.

The Kansas City Interstate Fair Association was holding a meet in 1877. One of the horses entered for a certain race was known to be very speedy, but had a bad way of bolting and becoming unmanageable whenever he reached a certain point on the track. Hence he was looked upon as a sure loser. Curtis—a slender, black-haired, dark-skinned wisp of a lad—was assigned to ride this "crazy horse." Unlike the usual story-book hero, he did not "win the race against fearful odds." On the contrary, the horse hurled him against a high board fence with such force as to leave scars which the Senator still bears. This practically ended the young Indian's racing career.

He next became a hack driver. While he was working at this uninspiring trade he became smitten with a longing for better education. He took to studying law in his spare moments. While waiting for "fares" he was for ever delving in some musty law book he had borrowed. It was during this time that he managed to forget the Indian dialect of his mother's people; because his white friends laughed at him for his use of the uncouth speech. To-day he remembers scarce a phrase of the ancestral language.

Two years after he gave up racing Curtis was admitted to the bar. A little while afterward he had made so good a start in politics that he was sent as delegate to a near by convention. At twenty-four he was prosecuting attorney of Shawnee County, and in 1890 was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress.

But in 1892 he made the congressional fight again in a "whirlwind campaign" as vigorous in its way as any waged by his warlike ancestors on the plains. And this time he was elected to Congress.

At the Capitol he quickly made his presence felt. Brilliant, a tireless worker, a staunch Republican, he was not content to be merely one of a host of representatives, but at once won an individual name for himself. Curtis served three terms in Congress; then, in 1907, was sent to the United States Senate. He was the first Indian to sit in this august body, where his career includes more than one strenuous effort for the betterment of the western red men's condition.

From tepee to Capitol; from jockey to Senator; from the ranks of Uncle Sam's hereditary foes to a place among the Government's foremost lawmakers. It is a record that well entitles its owner to high rank among "famous Indians."—New York Evening American.

"All right occupations, all duties, all fidelities, bring along with them a divine presence. We are 'never' alone. The most menial callings, routine, occupations, things not agreeable in themselves, but necessary and things of duty, all of them have or may have with them a Christ."

GRAND ISLAND, NEBRASKA.

Editors Herald: In my letter in your issue of February 16, page 185, first column, second line, there is a mistake. It now reads, "who are not furnished with the Bible." It was written, "Who are not familiar with the Bible."

Your brother in Christ,
EDWARD RANNIE.

GEELONG, VICTORIA, AUSTRALIA, January 6, 1910.

Editors Herald: My letter and request appearing in your issue of October 13, were not fully understood by some. I had promised to send my cousin, W. V. Tunnell (not Tunned), a Book of Mormon, had forgotten it and was reminded of it by letter from him. I then thought as I was giving my whole time to the church in the capacity of a missionary, and as my promise would necessitate my getting the book from and sending it back to America, coupled with the fact that the church has a burning desire to be correctly represented among men of prominence and culture, that either the Herald Office or some other authority would take the matter up and supply. As this man is upon the board of education in the city of Washington, and also a clergyman of some prominence and professor of history at Howard (not Harvard) University, I naturally thought that as an open door was presented the church would walk in, if only to give that much maligned and misunderstood book a chance of speaking for itself, in circles where otherwise the elders or book might never have access. I am truly grateful to the Bro. A. H. A., of Jasper, Minnesota, who offers to fill the bill. If he is still willing to do so I shall be pleased to hear of it through the HERALD. He may mention my name and say it has been sent at my request. Otherwise will the Herald Office please do so, and send me the invoice and I shall pay up. Address W. V. Tunnell, professor of history, Howard University, Washington, D. C.

Since last writing I have changed my address and place of labor, being now in Geelong, Victoria, about five hundred miles from my home in Adelaide, South Australia. There is at present no mission appointee in South Australia, but by advices just at hand in private letter from Brother Butterworth, mission president, I learn that Brother Davis, one of our recent General Conference appointees, is being sent there. I left there on November 11, 1909, and have since traveled about quite a lot, visiting Hastings, Victoria, where my aged and invalid mother resides, also Melbourne, where I preached thrice for the Richmond Branch, visiting scattered Saints, Brother and Sister Tait at Lake Commewana, about six miles out of Geelong, and my brother at Queenscliff, and Brother Squires at Port Longsdale. Both the latter are lighthouse keepers upon lights at the above-mentioned stations.

In Geelong there is no organized branch, though there are, I understand, between twenty and thirty members. The difficulty seemingly is the lack of male members suitable for officers. The Sunday school here is quite interesting, being here the only organized body of the church. It consists of about forty little tots mostly under seven years of age, and many belonging to nonmembers. At present there seems little prospect of rapid numerical advancement in this mission, this condition being no doubt largely due to the troubles we have recently experienced. Yet we are confident that our troubles and present hindrances to progress will finally be overcome, and the work again move forward with greater speed.

Individually and as a body we must learn to succor the tempted and tried by first passing through the crucible ourselves. May we all be empowered to more fully consecrate our lives to the service of the Master and his kingdom, for it is the best and greatest, the noblest and grandest, though the most trying and most difficult work on earth. In the patience and tribulation of the gospel of Christ, and in firm and steadfast hope of final triumph,

Yours in Zion's conflict,

TULLY STREET.

J. H. N. JONES.

WAMSLEY, OHIO, February 16, 1910.

Editors Herald: I have not been with the branch at Crabtree for some time. The weather has been bad and I have been sick. I have not done any work for about ten days, but I am getting better, giving the Lord the praise. I want to go to Crabtree in the near future. There is a noble band of Saints at that place, and some good people out of the church. One man, Levi Crabtree, has always opened his doors to the elders, for which he will get a good reward. His wife is in the church.

The time is at hand when the Lord is calling the honest in heart to come out of Babylon. Let us be up and awake, and not be as the foolish virgins when the bridegroom comes. May we have our lamps trimmed and burning and then we can go into the celestial glory and not have to prepare. I admit I do not do at all times as I should. My desire to do is good, but the flesh is weak. I desire the Saints to remember me in prayer. I am a great believer in prayer.

Your brother in the one faith,

J. T. MITCHELL.

SCRANTON, KANSAS, February 21, 1910.

Editors Herald: For over twenty years I have been reading this valuable paper, and in it have been many letters written by inspiration of our heavenly Father that made our spirits glad because therein was the bread of life that made our faith stronger than it could have been otherwise. But with all we have to watch and pray lest we enter into temptation, for I believe since the days of Jesus' appearing among men, there has not been a century more critical or perilous than the one now running its course. I refer to the many dangers that are detrimental to godliness, that stop the progress of righteousness, as the many conflicting forms of modern theological thought. Many of these tendencies are more disastrous than we may imagine. A man with a brilliant, fascinating pen or style of address may invest the merest shadows with a temporary interest; but when you inquire how much solid aliment there is for a hungry soul, how much true bread there is for the human spirit, alas, you find not one morsel of real wholesome food. Instead of the bread of life for those that hunger and thirst after righteousness, there is a perishing for lack of inspiration. While you may have a right to differ from your neighbor neither you nor your neighbor has any right to differ from your God. This is the only true conviction that above all others can guide us into all truth: to the law (God's law) and the testimony. We read that the wisdom of the wise shall perish and the understanding of the prudent shall be hid. The world asks when we Latter Day Saints answer. Every time light and wisdom come from the presence of the Lord, it does hide and put the understanding of men in the shade, until men filled with inspiration can hardly discern.

What could a socialistic church come from? Answer, from socialism only. It might serve as a substitute to the world, but we have the real, and we pray to God that we may there abide. When in Scotland, there was a dear brother there who loved the work of the Lord as much as anyone I ever saw, but he got into the socialistic circle. After that time I never could see him. I went three times about sixteen miles to visit him. The last time there was a large meeting in a hall, but you had to pay to get in to hear a discussion of the subject, "Did Jesus ever exist?" I had heard so much of that on the streets that I was disgusted with their arguments. There was one who claimed to hold the holy priesthood of God who once said to me that he would rather be called a socialist than be called a Latter Day Saint. What a wound it made in my soul from then until I started home!

At the last General Conference at Independence, the voice of God said that the time was near at hand that we must stand on holy ground: Now, if we can stand God's test, then we shall be clothed with the wedding garments, which is the righteousness of God as revealed to us by inspiration, and we can all sing in the Spirit that it is good to be a Saint in latter days. That we may be able to endure all things for righteousness' sake and be crowned with the prize of everlasting life is my prayer.

JAMES BAILLIE.

BANTRY, NORTH DAKOTA, February 14, 1910.

Dear Herald: While we are few in number, I believe we are all trying to do all we can for the good work. We have erected a new church at Milroy. It is not finished, but we expect to have it ready for dedication this summer. We have church on Sunday and Wednesday, and expect to start Sunday school the first of April.

I believe the branch is in better condition now than it has been for the past year. Bro. W. M. Sparling was here in January and gave us some fine talks and encouragement. His visits are always enjoyed by the outsiders as well as by the Saints. I believe there are more here to come into the church. I have been a member of the church for the past nine years, and it is one of the greatest comforts I have. I love this latter day work, and the church papers are so helpful to us. We take the HERALD, Autumn Leaves, Ensign, and Journal of History, and feel that we could not do without one of them. With all the help we get from these papers it seems like one ought to be good, but still we are so weak that we make many mistakes which we hope we may overcome.

Ever hoping and praying for God's people that we all may come up higher.

Your sister in the gospel,

E. E. WEDDLE.

BOURBON, MISSOURI, February 16, 1910.

Editors Herald: I would not write this, as I see there are already many letters on hand, if I did not feel it a duty. I have a brother, Hyrum F. Young, living near Poplar Bluff, Missouri, and he is very desirous of having an elder call on him. He thinks there could be a good work done there. If the pastor of the Nailor Branch sees this, will he not call on my brother if possible.

Yours for the gospel work,

C. T. WHITESIDE.

GIFFORD, IDAHO.

Editors Herald: I came into this gospel two years ago, and have taken the church papers ever since. I have never seen any letters from here, and thought I would break the ice. There was a branch here a few years ago, but it was disorganized. Brother Layland preached us a good sermon last August, and I had the pleasure of hearing five more from Brother Fordham, and also of attending one sacrament meeting. There are about seventeen members here now, and I hope the time will soon come when we can organize another branch. I do not know what we would do if it wasn't for the church papers, as we get so much light from them.

I have just finished reading, "The marvelous work and a wonder," and I think every member ought to read it, and then pass it on to his neighbor, as there is so much evidence in it and it is gotten up so well.

I trust that this will be a prosperous and spiritual year for us all, and let us all be up and doing, faithfully striving to uplift the church in righteousness and to extend the kingdom among the children of men, that when our life's sun shall set in the western sky and we leave this world of toil and care and tribulation, we may be accounted worthy to enter into the rest prepared for those who love God and keep his commandments.

Your brother in the one faith,

LAKE SILLS.

COLEMAN, MICHIGAN, February 15, 1910.

Dear Brothers and Sisters: As I am a cripple, I ask you all to pray for me that my faith may not shrink. I have the promise of being healed, but as I am weak and have lots of trials, I would ask one and all to pray for me. I would like the Saints, and the elders to write to me. Now I will tell you about my dream: I dreamed that I saw an angel and he told me to write this letter to the HERALD, and he told me to write in it for old Uncle John to write to me, for he is a father to the church. Now will you write to me, Uncle John, and give me advice, as you know how I am crippled, and my affliction is growing worse, and I need all the advice I can get.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

WARREN HALL.

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, February 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: I love this work and only wish I could do more to aid it along, but the Lord says, "Wait upon the Lord with patience," and thy desires shall be granted; so I am patiently waiting as best I know. We do enjoy the HERALD very much and miss it when it does not arrive on time. The Journal of History has been a great pleasure to my husband. Every moment he has he devotes to the reading of the church papers. A sister from Independence gave us a pleasant surprise by sending us the Ensign, which we greatly enjoy. We are young in the work, but hope and pray that some time in God's own way we may be found worthy to be among the redeemed. Trusting all to him, 1011 DENVER AVENUE.

Yours in the faith,
MRS. O. L. ROCKHOLD.

DEER LODGE, MONTANA, February 1, 1910.

Dear Herald: The church papers are all dear to me, for in my feeble effort to try to do the will of my Master I receive a great deal of help from reading them. I make a very small showing in right living, but do not think my effort would be worth while if I did not get aid from the Savior. We all get help in several ways: from the church papers, from prayer meeting, from Sunday school work, and from meeting and conversing with those of like faith.

The gospel work in Montana is moving onward and upward. We have a good Sunday school and prayer meeting here, and the ladies have organized a Ladies' Aid and are trying to raise money to fix up our little church, and they will succeed. But we need some one to preach every Sunday and try to bring the Saints together. We have two elders and four priests and I believe any of them can preach well enough to get the Saints out to meeting and eventually build up the work here.

Bro. I. M. Smith has been here until about the first of the year, when he was called over to Bozeman. He and his good wife have done a great deal to encourage the Saints and we are very sorry to lose them.

Bro. Fred A. Smith, missionary in charge, paid us a very pleasant visit in November, and while in Montana reorganized the branch at Bozeman. Now they have an option on a church building that formerly belonged to the Catholics, and think they will raise money enough to buy it. Our district conference meets in Deer Lodge the 19th and 20th of February, and we would like to see a large attendance from all over the State. We expect to have the best conference ever held in the district.

Bro. Arthur Reese, from Bozeman, was here last Sunday. We all think a great deal of Arthur, but do not like to see him come over this way too often because—well, we are afraid he will get one of our good soprano singers to go into partnership with him.

The C. M. & S. P. R. R. Company located their machine shops here last spring, and Deer Lodge is growing very fast. There are openings here for some lines of business, professional men, tradesmen, and laborers. If any of the Saints want to locate in Deer Lodge, write to me, stating what you want and I will write you and tell you the conditions here; or if you want work I will try to get it for you. I think I could get a place for a good groceryman right away. We want to get more Saints located here.

JEROME WYCKOFF.

MACHIAS, NEW YORK, February 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: Do you know of any Latter Day Saints living near this place? A Wesleyan Methodist preacher, living here but whose mission is in Pennsylvania, said there were a good many Latter Day Saints in this country, but so far I have failed to find any. This man Tiffany said his father went to school with Joseph the Martyr. If there are any, I guess some of your editors will know. He said Joseph was a fine man, but his religion was no good. I thanked him for the good he said of Brother Joseph, but said I could not agree with him on the religion question. "Well," said he, "your religion does not make me think any less of you." Of course, I can not say just how much he thought of me before he found out whose side I was on, but, believe me, he wasn't long finding out. Should Bro. H. O. Smith see this, will he please let us hear from him, or from any other Saint, as to whether there is any branch in Buffalo, and if so, where.

Yours in bonds,

J. N. BALDWIN.

COALVILLE, IOWA, February 14, 1910.

Editors Herald: I notice in HERALD for February 9 a letter from me in which there is a mistake that I would like to have corrected. [The mistake was made in copying.—EDITOR.]

In the HERALD it reads like this: "In looking at the college question all I can see against it is the argument that it is not a good thing for the church and the country, because it gives the young as well as the old a better chance to get learning." This is the way I had it in my letter: "In looking over the college question, I can see to be against it is to be against a good thing for the church and the country, because it gives the young as well as the old a better chance to get learning." The thought I wanted to convey is that it is not good to oppose the college, because it is a good thing for the and the country. I have noticed quite a number of people opposed to the college and that is the reason I gave it the way I did. When we go among the Saints talking on church matters, we find some bring up the college question and oppose it. In fact, some years ago, I was somewhat opposed to the college, but I have gotten over that now.

JOHN JORDISON.

MONTROSE, IOWA, February 20, 1910.

Editors Herald: I am still in the faith of the gospel and rejoice daily in the enjoyment of the blessings that come to those who earnestly strive to keep the commandments. My heart swells with joy and gratitude to God the Father for his matchless power and wondrous love manifested to me from the days of childhood to the present. In all the trials of life his arm of power has been over me, and in all the conditions of life that I have had to pass through, and I still feel to praise his holy name. I still have within me the hope of eternal life which has enabled me to endure thus far. How I love to read the letters penned by those old veterans of the cross, those I have known for forty years. May the Lord bless us all with a firm faith in our heavenly Father. I hope I may be blessed with health and strength, so I can do more this year for the Master's cause.

In regard to tithing I am ready to do all I can. I don't want to be one of the foolish virgins and have no oil in my lamp. I feel sometimes that it is a warfare, yet I realize that the Master has said his grace is sufficient. I still have a determination to serve my heavenly Father. Remember me in your prayers.

"Oh, Lord, assist thy feeble ones
This regulation to perform,
And we thy sacred name will praise
Throughout the remnant of our days."

Your sister in the gospel,
MRS. ELLEN ROSS.

News From Branches

OMAHA, NEBRASKA.

I thought perhaps that some of the readers of the HERALD would be looking for a line or two from here, since our meetings closed. As to the results, I am glad to report that the meetings were not in any way a failure. Perhaps the attendance was not as large as some had thought, but many heard the gospel as never before who, I am confident, would not have heard it in any other way. The preaching was done by J. W. Wight and H. C. Smith and it was all that could be asked for.

The Holy Spirit bore testimony of its truthfulness. The expenses were all willingly met, not however, without a sacrifice upon the part of the Saints and their friends. The entire expense was $261; total collections were $40; paid for building $129; for advertising, $102; total receipts were $270. So you see it costs something to have meetings like this in our cities. It was all gladly paid and there is a little balance on hand. If the Saints in Omaha have not made and are not still making a sacrifice for the salvation of men, I am willing to confess I do not know what it is to do so, when we realize that they are all poor, so far as this world's goods are concerned,—all laboring people.

Well, we are back to normal again. Services yesterday were fairly attended. The Religio was postponed for two weeks, but they took up their work last evening in a commendable way. There are a good many sick among us now. We have a typhoid epidemic in our city. Authorities and doctors have been trying all winter to locate the cause, but so far have failed to agree. We are thankful that few of the Saints have been affected.

Bro. John Avondet, one of the old standard bearers, passed over the river of death to-day. Brn. F. A. Smith and C. E. Butterworth and many others will remember him because of the many times the sick were healed under his administering. The funeral is to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The branch is going to lose the faithful service of Bro. and Sr. F. R. Schafer, as they are going on a farm near Dow City, Iowa. They will be greatly missed here, for they have been among the faithful ones to stand by the work here. They have the good wishes of the Saints.

Died.

NEWCOMBE.—After prolonged illness, from consumption, Earle V. Newcombe passed from this earth life on Sunday, February 6, aged 25. He was born in Delhaven, Nova Scotia, September 7, 1886. He was tenderly cared for by Brother Owen and Sr. Hanora Newcombe, from whose home the funeral was held February 9. Sermon by R. W. Farrell, by whom he was baptized March 3, 1907, he having previously been a member of the Baptist Church. He leaves a father, four brothers, and three sisters, one brother and one sister being in the gospel. Interment at Mount Pleasant Cemetery, Arlington.

DAVIS.—At Independence, Missouri, February 5, 1910, Sr. Mary Ella Davis, daughter of William and Lucretia Jones. She was born at Halleck, Buchanan County, Missouri, August 27, 1868, and was baptized at Pleasant View, Cherokee County, Kansas, May 4, 1884, by Elder John T. Davis, and confirmed by Elders John T. and John Alfred Davis. On February 17, 1887, she was married to Elder John Arthur Davis, at Cherokee, Kansas. Eight sons, the youngest 15 months old, and two daughters were born to them, all of whom, with the husband and father and four brothers, remain to mourn their loss. She was a loving, faithful wife and mother, and a devoted Saint. In the thirty years of missionary service of her husband, she bore her part uncomplainingly, training her children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Funeral from the home, 103 East Adams street, Pittsburg, Kansas, February 8, Bro. W. H. Garrett, of Independence, conducting the services. The entire lower floor was filled with sympathizing friends and relatives of the deceased, and a large number were unable to gain admittance to the house, testifying to the esteem in which she was held by a large circle of acquaintances. She was one of the noble of earth's children. Interment in Mount Olivet Cemetery.

WORWOOD.—Maria Worwood died in her 97th year on January 28, 1910, at Belgrade, Montana. She with her husband and family left her native land, England, March 26, 1855, and arrived in Utah September 25 of the same year. She suffered many hardships common to pioneer life. She was baptized into the church on her thirtieth birthday, November 13, 1843. On coming out of the water she was healed of an incurable disease, having been given up by all doctors. She thus witnessed the glory of God, passed through many trials for her faith, and left a numerous posterity. She has been an invalid for the past eleven years, unable to walk, but died firm in the faith having received many testimonies of God's power and goodness. Funeral was held January 31, Elder A. J. Moore officiating. Burial in Reese Creek cemetery.

Eating Less and Talking More While You Eat.

In the department of "The pilgrim's scrip" in the March American Magazine, the following letter is published:

"I was interested in your article called 'Some dangers from high prices.' It is true that simple food costs a lot of money to-day. I have just returned home from a family gathering where there were gathered together representatives from various states and cities and towns. It seems to me that nothing was so marked in the family as the various reports on the cost of living. Butter and eggs and meat and other things have gone up and up everywhere. The small town is no better off (relatively) than the city. There is no use in telling the city people to rush to the country. As the thing stands now there is no relief in that direction.

"Now I am not going to suggest that anybody do what I do. All that I intend is to give you my own experiences and let it go at that. Here it is:

"A number of years ago (I live in Chicago) my wife and I agreed to eat less and talk more at the table. Talk is less expensive than food. And, curiously enough, we have found that by doing this we can get along, at least for the present. We chew what we eat slowly and seem to get as much nourishment out of a smaller amount of food as we used to out of a larger. You would like me to be more specific? Well, I will. Take the matter of eggs. At breakfast we have them often. The point is that we each have one, whereas ten years ago we each had two. And I give you my word I do not now see any difference between eating one egg and two.

"Of course I know that this, in a measure, is the teaching of Fletcher. I am not a 'Fletcherite,' however. I am merely an ordinary person trying to adjust myself to the rapidly increasing price of food. In so doing I am conscious of only one thing—an overwhelming desire to make the best of things as they are and to continue happy and contented. This does not mean that I do not feel that things are wrong. I do. If I didn't, I should not take the trouble to speak up in a discussion which I hope you will keep up."

When the Cherry Blooms in Japan.

"Everywhere in Japan the gala season of the year is when the cherry blooms," writes Eliza Ruhamah Scidmore in her story of "The cherry blossoms of Japan," in the March Century. "Everything leads up to, waits upon, and dates from 'the time of the cherry blossom' far more than from the time of the chrysanthemums, and in that month the whole empire is wreathed in rose color from Kiusiu to the farthest north.

"Everyone goes to see the cherry blossoms as a matter of course. No one forgoes a sight of the 'charming sakura' of his neighborhood, and the very poorest will trudge to some famous place to see some historic tree when they can not pay the low rates at which all railroads run the many special cherry blossom excursion trains.

"Prince Ito took as much pride in the avenue of cherry trees and the perfect specimens of rare trees blooming among the evergreens of his Oiso villa, down on 'the brocade coast,' as in the realization of his greatest dreams of empire. Admiral Togo has planted cherry trees to commemorate his visits here and there, as has General Nogi, and both have written poems to knighthood's flower."

EARLY IDEALS OF THE CHURCH.

II.—TO BE TEMPERATE IN ALL THINGS AND HONEST WITH ALL PEOPLE.

(The next number in this series of editorials will set forth the attitude of the church on education and its purpose to live at peace with all men.)

Some years ago the writer had occasion to attend a lecture by a Mrs. Weed, who at the time was gaining some little notoriety by lecturing against "Mormonism." In the course of her remarks she said, "At almost any hour of the day or night Joe Smith might have been found drinking, smoking, and carousing with his fellows in the old Mansion House."

This is but one of many false statements that go to make up the average popular "exposé of Mormonism." One attending such a lecture can hardly escape a feeling of humiliation or sorrow when honored and honorable names are thus smeared over by the filthy paw of slander. And yet there is deep consolation in one thought, as we expressed it to the lecturer at the close of her effort, "Mrs. Weed, some of your statements caused us a degree of pain; but not nearly so much as we would have felt had they been true."

The facts are that the church during the life of Joseph Smith was in favor of the strictest temperance. Joseph Smith did not drink, smoke, and carouse, at the old Mansion House or elsewhere. By example and precept he opposed the use of intoxicants and narcotics. The church leaders not only opposed the use of strong drinks, but also tea, coffee, and tobacco. All must admit that such a stand was in advance of their times. We now quote from the church law:

Behold, verily thus saith the Lord unto you, In consequence of evils and designs which do and will exist in the hearts of conspiring men in the last days, I have warned you, and forewarn you, by giving unto you this word of wisdom by revelation, that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold, it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father, only in assembling yourselves together, to offer up your sacraments before him. And, behold, this should be wine; yea, pure wine of the grape of the vine, of your own make. And again, strong drinks are not for the belly, but for the washing of your bodies. And again, tobacco is not for the body, neither for the belly, and is not good for man, but is an herb for bruises, and all sick cattle, to be used with judgment and skill. And again, hot drinks are not for the body or belly.—Doctrine and Covenants 86: 1.

Under the provision of this law, known as the Word of Wisdom, the church stood opposed to the use of liquors and other stimulants and narcotics.

At least a part of this law was restated at a later date, as follows:

Avoid the use of tobacco and be not addicted to strong drink in any form, that your counsel to be temperate may be made effectual by your example.—Doctrine and Covenants 119: 3.

It will be seen by this that the old ideal is still maintained and members of the church are commanded to abstain from tobacco and from strong drink in any form. This includes all forms of strong drink, from the "whisky straight" of the publican to the popular patent medicines, twenty-five per cent rain water and seventy-five per cent bad whisky, so freely consumed by many good Pharisees, including clergymen.

The fact is that the Saints were pioneers in the cause of prohibition. While they were in control of affairs at Kirtland, Ohio, the following resolution was adopted by the church High Council, October 23, 1837:

That we discountenance the use of ardent spirits, in any way, to sell, or to be brought into this place for sale or use.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 110.

After they had removed from Kirtland to Far West, Missouri, a similar action was had. July 26, 1838, the High Council and Bishop's court adopted the following resolution:

That we use our influence to put a stop to the selling of liquors in the city Far West, or in our midst, that our streets, may not be filled with drunkenness.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 166.

Joseph Smith himself, in a letter to the church, gave this advice on the subject of temperance:

Brethren, from henceforth let truth and righteousness prevail and abound in you, and in all things be temperate, abstain from drunkenness, profane language, and from everything which is unrighteous and unholy, and from the very appearance of evil: be honest one with another; for it seemeth some have come short in this thing, and some have been uncharitable towards their brethren who were indebted to them: while they have been dragged about in chains and cast into dungeons: such persons will have their turn and sorrow in the rolling of the great wheel; for it rolleth and none can hinder: remember whatsoever measure you mete it shall be measured to you again.—Times and Seasons, vol. 1, p. 86.

The cause of temperance has made great headway during the past few years. In many places now it is popular to be an advocate of prohibition. But it must be remembered that in the times when the church passed the resolutions quoted and the leading men penned the words that we have reproduced it was not so. Then nearly everyone drank. Even preachers kept a decanter on the sideboard from which to moisten the dry pages of the commentators. Great statesmen interviewed King Alcohol before attempting to manage the affairs of the greatest republic on earth.

Credit should be given where credit is due. Because of inspiration, or goodness of heart, or clearness of intellect, the leaders of the church saw the evils resident in strong drink and its lesser associates, narcotics and stimulants, and waged a very effectual warfare against those evils long before public sentiment was aroused to the gravity of the situation.

HONESTY IN BUSINESS MATTERS.

Honesty between man and man in business matters, as well as in spiritual matters, is an essential characteristic of good citizenship. Were the Saints good citizens?

In the Book of Doctrine and Covenants we find this commandment: "Behold, it is my will that you should pay all your debts."

The Saints accepted that commandment literally. It is true that during their sojourn in Ohio, in the regions about Kirtland, in 1836 and 1837, they became involved in financial difficulties, during the business depression and bank failures of those days. But that was the common experience of men at the time.

After their removal to Missouri they sent an agent, Oliver Granger, back to Ohio, to settle all just claims held by creditors. (See Journal of History, October, 1909.)

During the sojourn of the church in Nauvoo the principle of honesty as enunciated in the Book of Covenants was still observed and enforced. Individuals moving to Nauvoo from branches of the church in the East, and elsewhere, were not received unless they had settled with all creditors before coming. We quote from the minutes of a General Conference held in 1840, appearing in Times and Seasons, volume 1, page 136:

President Hyrum Smith arose and stated that there were several individuals, who on moving to this place, had not settled with their creditors and had no recommend from the branches of the church where they had resided.

On motion, Resolved, That those persons moving to this place, who do not bring a recommend, be disfellowshipped.

Concerning the character of the Saints in Ohio, Robert Lucas, governor of Ohio from 1832 to 1836, wrote to President Van Buren, from Burlington, Iowa, April 22, 1839, as follows:

I think it due to that people to state, that they had for a number of years a community established in Ohio, and that while in that State they were (as far as I ever heard) believed to be an industrious, inoffensive people; and I have no recollection of having ever heard of any of them being charged in that State as violators of the law.

The following also is of interest concerning the character of the Saints as citizens in Missouri and Illinois:

When the testimony on both sides is carefully weighed, it must be admitted that the Mormons in Missouri and Illinois were, as a class, a more moral, honest, temperate, hard-working, self-denying, and thrifty people than the Gentiles by whom they were surrounded.—Bancroft's History of Utah, 1890, p. 164.

Justice will be done the church sometime, and it will be understood that the Saints of that early day entertained excellent ideals concerning the priceless virtues that make for good citizenship and high Christian character. They endeavored to live up to those ideals. Those ideals are still cherished by the church. We trust that the Saints are still striving to live in harmony with them; and that they are a little better understood by the world at large.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Will you please answer the following questions through the HERALD, for the benefit of all that do not understand the matter correctly?

Has the church ever spoken, and said that the laying on of hands was for the birth of the Spirit?

Has the church ever spoken, and said that the baptism of the Holy Ghost was for the remission of sins?

We find that there are different opinions entertained by the ministry, and different theories spun to the people as to these questions.

The church has not spoken nor taken any other action, neither by committee nor as a conference, in regard to the question propounded above. Our understanding is that the elders and other officers of the church are authorized to preach the principles of the gospel as they are given in the Bible, New Testament Scriptures, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations to the church. These all authorize the teaching of baptism for the remission of sins; and in a sense this is prohibitive of teaching any other ordinance as intended for the remission of sins.

The church has not spoken or taken any other action by committee or otherwise affirming that the laying on of hands was for the birth of the Spirit. We believe the consensus of opinion among the eldership is that the laying on of hands is for the reception of the Holy Spirit, so far as the laying on of hands has any relation to the office work of the Spirit.

The church has not spoken nor taken any other action by committee or otherwise that the baptism of the Spirit was for the remission of sins. This question is virtually answered by the answer given above, with reference to the laying on of hands being for the reception of the Holy Spirit.

It would seem to be unnecessary for the eldership to indulge in the preaching of theories upon topics of the kind written of above, and we are reminded of an answer given by Bro. Jason W. Briggs when, while on his mission to England, he was asked certain questions upon which the questioners seemed to attach a great deal of importance. His reply was as follows:

"Is it revealed in the Bible?"

When answered, "No," he said, "Is it revealed in the Book of Mormon?"

When again answered, "No," he said, "Is it revealed in the Book of Covenants?"

And when again answered, "No," he said, "Well, we read in the good book that what is revealed belongs to man. What is not revealed belongs to God. As we have no revelation upon the matter, I can not answer your questions."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Church Secretary requests us to state that delegate credentials to General Conference should be forwarded to him promptly, by mail, and not by delegate, that reports may be made up promptly for the opening day of Conference.

During February we received a lengthy letter from a Canadian brother, setting forth the facts in connection with the sad death of Bro. John C. Taylor, eldest son of Bro. and Sr. George A. Taylor. Sister Taylor is well known to the Canadian Saints as home class superintendent of the Chatham District. Owing to the length of the letter we have been unable to give it space, otherwise it would have appeared earlier:

Sr. Anna Holme, Hamar, Eddy County, North Dakota, requests that some elder of the traveling ministry call on her.

"In all thinking beings there is the desire to live on. The red Indian believes in his happy hunting grounds. The Mohammedan dies eagerly on the battlefield, thinking that he goes at once to a peculiar Turkish heaven of his own. The better and higher religions present ideals and hopes more inspiring and worthy."

In these days when our man-worshipers hear an eloquent sermon, they go into ecstasies, and say, "Wasn't that grand? He held us spellbound; it was wonderful." It was not so when Peter preached that sermon on the day of Pentecost. The cry of the people then was, "What shall we do? What shall we do to be saved?"—Christian World.

THEOSOPHY.—NO. 1.

INTRODUCTION.

About February of 1908 we received a request to prepare an article on the above subject. Prior to that time, in a dilatory way we had been reading as much as opportunity would permit of comparative theology, specially such ancient religion and philosophy as Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Brahminism; the religion of Egypt, Greece, Rome, and Scandinavia, and the works of Confucius and Mohammed. We had already been much impressed with the amount of truth to be found in their religions, until it seemed quite credible, as their sacred books claim in some instances, that they were schoolmasters for something better, or the remains of what had gone before. In taking up the subject of Theosophy our first desire was to ascertain its truth in a friendly way. Secondly, to consider its fallacies, if any, and its relation to our own church and faith.

During the course of the year we have read many works. It had been our intention to head these articles with the list of books examined, but we could hardly recommend to others to follow that course. There is much that can be treated under each of these headings. First, the various religions and philosophies of antiquity, their sacred books and sects. Secondly, the secret, occult; or cabalistic works of antiquity and modern times. Third (a), the Theosophical Society; its organization, purposes, and accomplishments. Third (b), what part of ancient writings accepted, and what part rejected by them. Fourth, the various religious and philosophical and scientific ideas of to-day. Fifth, theology, Adam-god and the "Great Mother" of Utah, as viewed in the light of ancient and occult writings. This might include some things about Nauvoo. Sixth, mysticism, occultism, and secret orders of to-day. This is but the start of an outline it would take a life work to carry out. But fortunately the most important information may be gained in less time; though not one per cent can be given within the limit of these articles.

The above is set forth, though briefly, because the method of approach and previous preparation has much to do with our understanding of truth.

OUTLINE OF THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

The Theosophical Society was founded in 1875 by Madame Blavatski and Col. H. S. Olcott. Madame Blavatski appears to have been to a certain extent the high priestess of the order. She was born in 1831 and in 1848 to 1868 was largely concerned with spiritualism in Paris, Cairo, New Orleans, Tokio, and Calcutta. 1848 to 1858 she liked to refer to as the veiled period of her life, and gives the impression that it was spent in a Himalaya retreat.

She was married at a very early age, but left her husband almost at once. Many severe attacks have been made upon her that she was a practical medium, that she gained prominence in the United States as a spiritualist and was mixed up in Eddy Brothers' and Kate King's frauds. Aspersions are also cast upon her moral character, and it is stated that Isis Unveiled which appeared in 1877 was simply a mosaic of a certain encyclopedia, Zeller's Plato, various works of magic, and the writings of Eliphas Levi, all of which were unacknowledged quotations. She had studied occult and cabalistic literature and translations of the sacred books and writings of India. When she organized the Theosophical Society in 1875 she claimed the control of Thibetan sages or adepts. She was now opposed to spiritualism, claiming to have been disillusioned. Her works have been referred to as being an amalgam of Egyptian, cabalistic, occultist, Indian, and modern spiritualistic ideas and formulations.

So far as the attack on her character is concerned, we have been able to find no reply, except that of Walter Old in his, What is Theosophy? There he makes the defense, that truth is the sufficient answer; that her work does not depend upon her moral character. What is true, remains true regardless of her life. With this we agree. But when he goes farther, and says that the votaries of truth are not bound by the same laws as the rest of humanity, and that we have no right to judge her by ordinary standards, we can not agree. However, Theosophy does not depend upon her moral character. The reply to its being an amalgam of ancient, cabalistic, and occult works is, that it is undoubtedly true, in fact is what it purports to be. It would be difficult to state just how many students of Theosophy there are. One hundred thousand were claimed at the time of her death. There are now about three thousand members in the United States, but a great many more elsewhere.

Furthermore, its influence is not measured by these figures alone, since we are personally aware of many students of her works who are not members of the society. In fact we would feel safe in saying, that so far as this country is concerned, there are more students who are not members, than those who are. The society claims to have no priesthood, its motto is, "There is no religion higher than truth." It does not claim to be a religious organization; its requirements of members are: a worthy moral life and the undertaking of one or more of three things: (1) philanthropy towards mankind; (2) research of ancient sacred books, particularly of India; (3) the practical study of occultism. The meaning of the word theosophy is: Divine wisdom. We are told at the start that no religious obligations are required; you may be a member of any church and still a member of the Theosophical Society. They do require charity towards all religious faiths. Yet as we progress, we find that only so far may we go in this way; then we learn of the inner circle, of the steps towards the Divine, which require practically the renunciation of all sects and a devotion to "the path." But before initiation a very solemn and binding obligation must be taken, which it is said binds the honor and soul and ego of man, not only for this existence, but through all existence hereafter, not to reveal except by permission. They concede that there may be many not of their society, who are yet more practical Theosophists, than some that are in. Spiritualistic and mediumistic powers should not be exercised, except after instruction and knowledge of what these powers are and mean, so they can be used rightly.

The following principles are laid down for eclectic Theosophy: (1) Belief in one absolute, incomprehensible, and supreme deity or infinite essence, which is the root of all nature and of all that is visible and invisible.

(2) Belief in man's eternal, immortal nature, which being a radiation of the universal soul is of an identical essence with it.

(3) Theurgy, or divine work, that by making one's self as pure as an incorporeal being, i. e., by returning to one's pristine purity of nature, man could move the gods to impart to him divine mysteries, and even cause them to become occasionally visible, either subjectively or objectively.

This is a transcendental aspect of spiritualism, much misunderstood, and is neither magic nor necromancy, both of which are very dangerous. Real divine theurgy requires an almost superhuman purity and holiness of life. The chief aim of the eclectic theosophical school is one of three: 1. To reconcile all religions, sects, and nations in a common system of ethics, based on the eternal verities, by showing the similarity of the mysteries of all ancient religions and their essential unity. This includes not only the Pillar of Hermes, the philosophy of Plato and Pythagoras, but also the gospel of Saint John. Theosophists claim one common ancient religion and divine revelation to primeval man, at a time when man spoke the language of the gods and angels. All religions, philosophies, and sciences are but exoteric derivatives, more or less remote, of that one divine, primeval revelation. Hence their desire to return gradually to that early unity. They appreciate that the mass of mankind is not now ready for such return, and claim that it takes more than one life to walk "the path." Only a relatively small part are prepared to enter as Chelas in the way; yet are there seven steps and the way is long. Nor do they permit all who desire to take the obligation. First must be preparation and proof of worthiness. They claim powers finally will be bestowed, which we dare not confer, except upon the most altruistic; otherwise we would make a most dangerous enemy of truth; those of the left hand; the black magic. Hence must be proof, not only of scholastic attainments, but also of moral worthiness before initiation.

Theosophists teach, when man started to drift from right in ancient times, holy things were then conceded for the good of man. Hence we have exoteric religions growing gross and yet more gross. Nevertheless the sacred records have been handed down to those found worthy from the most remote antiquity, and are still preserved. Those who are custodians and teach those who are to continue their work, are the only ones who have the right to say when any of it may be revealed. Very, very few are permitted ever to see these seven great brothers, but only communicate with the lesser teachers. The seat of this "wisdom religion" is in the vicinity of Thibet.

Others are permitted from time to time to learn more or less of the esoteric side of their religion. Occasionally some great one is permitted by the Brothers, after he has learned from them the great mystery of that primeval revelation, to reveal a portion of it to mankind. When that occurs, we have a new religion, a new church, a higher morality for a time. Such a one was Siddartha Gautama Sakya Munai, better known as the Buddha, Confucius, Krishna, and even Jesus of Nazareth.

Besides exoteric Theosophy, there exists also, as we have indicated, an esoteric brotherhood or inner circle. Of this, small parts are permitted to be revealed, from time to time, for the benefit of mankind as a whole. It is claimed that this secret brotherhood has existed for all time, and has continuously handed down and preserved the sacred writings. Many of the passages in the Old Testament are interpreted in the light of the Chaldean Book of Genesis, Book of Numbers, the Chaldean Talmud, the Hebrew Talmud, and other Hebrew writings, and in particular the Cabalah, as sustaining certain of the teachings of the secret brotherhood in India. Moses is claimed as an initiate. Enoch and Abraham were also "friends of God." Jesus is also claimed as an Essene. We should be clear on this, that there are some things which only a few are permitted to know at any one time; that the different religions of antiquity have their secret or esoteric, as well as their exoteric aspects. Many of them have as high as four different aspects, three of which are secret. Yet these may not mean induction into the greatest mystery, in fact, do not mean such knowledge. Paul is claimed also as an initiate, on account of those passages in which he refers to the mystery that has been hid up in God, but now revealed. John, too, is claimed as an initiate, but of the Jewish school, so that he understood better the real purpose of Jesus of Nazareth. Theosophists do not discard Jesus of Nazareth, nor deny his divinity; they merely say, "There are others." And they do not consider him superior to others, whom they name, and probably inferior to a few. They disclaim any antagonism to Christianity, yet many of their works would tend to destroy and entirely undermine the belief of most people. They recognize this, and so do not desire their works should fall into the hands of those who are content and satisfied, but only of those dissatisfied souls who want further light and truth. Much they claim can be demonstrated, and has been, to initiates. But the term initiate here used, does not mean a student or beginner, but rather those great ones, who through many lives have perfected their knowledge of Theosophy (divine wisdom).

Their authority for what follows is not given, but they claim occult means of knowing other than historical. They say Jesus of Nazareth was born of two common people about 100 B. C., that he grew to manhood, went into the desert and there studied under the "Essenees" for several years. Through right living and careful study and preparation, he prepared so pure a physical and a mental body, that the divine was able to take up habitation therein. He gave consent to undergo the severe trials which are necessary in such an incarnation. He himself was not divine power, but the manifestation of the logos appeared in him during the few years of his ministry. Through the exoteric teachers of the Jews the body of Jesus was offered up on the cross, and the logos returned to the "absolute." The ego of Jesus was so purified as to be capable of taking a very high plane, and appeared frequently through the early years after his crucifixion to the disciples, and gave them instruction in the mysteries. These appearances occurred in the course of initiation work and preparation in secret places. Later the gospels were written by his disciples, but are not a history, but only to contain divine teaching in a form that the populace will not understand at once, while disclosing sufficient to lead to higher morality. His life then appears as one of the great ones, but in a mystery is concealed in the gospel. Great fundamental truths are given from the great primeval revelation. Nor are all instances historically true of this man at any time, but only symbolic of "things unseen." We can not therefore by any means consider Theosophy as being Christian, though it claims to include the truth of Christianity together with much more.

Owing to its antiquity its strength is not measured by its professing members here in America, as there are many others taking up parts of its teachings, and many students who have not joined the society, let alone the inner circle. Its teachings appear to be moral and in view of the numerous references to the crucified One, the best beloved of the Father to be found in most of the religions of antiquity, some of their conclusions are natural ones, even though we do not agree with them by any means. The points of greatest interest to us as a people, would be the traditions so long handed down of a primeval Divine revelation, and the communion of the divine with man as manifested in the appearance of the Son of God on earth; that this is not modern belief, but was also held strongly in antiquity. We may also note the tradition that once man spake one language, which was the language of the gods and angels. How well does this fit in with Genesis, seventh chapter, Inspired Translation, and Doctrine and Covenants, in which it is so clearly shown that the gospel was taught in the beginning!

THE MORMON-CHRISTIAN WAR.

In the Christian Leader-Way of recent date, under the above heading, R. B. Neal, of Pikeville, Kentucky, passes out a "brickbat" and a "proposition" that I wish to notice. He says: "Elder E. E. Long, who, after so long a time consented to meet Bro. J. Hunt Beard in debate at Steel, Ohio, writes in the SAINTS' HERALD of November 3."

Truth and facts seem to be unknown qualities, while falsehood and misrepresentation appear to be the predominating quantities in this "Mormon-Christian war." The facts are, I never knew anything about the debate until after the propositions and rules were all signed up and the date set. The source of Mr. Neal's information is faulty, to say the least. He quotes my letter in the HERALD of November 3, 1909, and proceeds to comment by saying:

"Modesty does not seem to be one of Brother Long's traits. I have it from good authority that his colors trailed the earth."

We question his "good authority." It seems to be at par with his assertion, "after so long a time." The sequel shows quite differently, as we will see presently.

Referring to my statement that Beard became lost to his own proposition on two evenings and went back to discuss the merits of the Book of Mormon and Joseph Smith, he says:

"That's the real issue. Shows that Brother Beard wanted no child's play—but a real issue. If Smith was a prophet and the Book of Mormon divine, then it follows as night follows day that all other churches are bastard, all other religions false. If that is not true then Mormonism is as false as Satan."

If Elder Beard wanted a "real issue" he had the best opportunity of a lifetime to have it. I publicly submitted a proposition to him, offering to affirm that Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon of divine origin, but he would not sign it. He gave me another one in lieu of it in which he was to affirm that Joseph Smith was a false prophet and the Book of Mormon a fraud. I signed it and we agreed to discuss it for eight nights, but for some reason the congregation at Steel, Ohio, positively refused to allow us the use of their house, so Elder Beard said. He said he understood the debate was wanted at Belmont and also at Shady-side, Ohio. I went to Wheeling, West Virginia, and after a week I received a letter from him saying, "We may as well write finis." If Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon were the real issue, and if, as Ira C. Moore wrote to the Leader-Way, "Brother Beard was successfully preventing the Mormon from proving his affirmation," why did they not meet it then and there?

The facts are they had all the debate they wanted. They had done considerable boasting before the debate began, how they would clean up on the Mormons in about "three nights," but Campbellism was shown to be such a bungling counterfeit that they didn't care to have an institution of divine appointment erected upon the ruins. The "real issue" involves the right to an existence of Campbell's "bastard" church. If Beard really wanted a "real issue," and if Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon were the real issue, he could have met it, and not written "finis" before it was begun. His proposition affirming that Joseph Smith was a false prophet was merely a bluff. He didn't think I would sign it. If Campbellite "polemics" (?) could just combat "Mormonism" without having to defend their own miserable "restoration" they would debate, oh, yes. But they are loath to make a comparison before the same audience.

Why all this hue and cry about all other churches and religions being "bastard and false if Mormonism is true," when A. Campbell and collaborators constantly affirmed the same thing and in the most bitter terms? Campbellism affirms that "all sects have gone out of the way; all lost to the apostolic order of things, and that the churches are illegitimate daughters of the old mother of harlots." A paragraph in Leaflet Number 3, signed by R. B. Neal, says: "Down with Mormonism, Satanism, and sectarianism." "Sectarianism" comprehends all other churches and we include Campbellism, it being a granddaughter of Rome. The "real issue" then, is between Mormonism, so-called, and Campbellism. We are ready to meet it any time and place. "Anti-Mormon polemics" take notice.

But here is the paragraph in my letter that causes this Mormon eater to daub a little extra "war" paint on his face:

"At the close of the debate Beard passed out a lot of Neal's lying leaflets, but they are harmless in comparison with the other side. We have nothing to fear from him except his serpentine proclivities in spitting out his venom where we have no chance to meet it." He makes the following "proposition" (?): "I here and now make the following proposition to Brother Long or any Mormon editor or elder, and most earnestly request that it be accepted. Begin with Number 1 of my sixteen leaflets, take them as they come, point out any false statement, with the proof, and I'll agree to publish the correction in the Sword of Laban, and if space can be had, in the Standard. More, I'll republish the leaflet or leaflets, corrected by Brother Long, or any other elder with their 'correction,' and scatter them widely over the earth."

I wish to serve notice right here that I will give Mr. Neal a chance to make good; but I most seriously doubt his sincerity.

Some of the "sixteen leaflets" contain the most glaring falsehoods, while others have historical matters so arranged as to give the truth a false coloring and thus becloud the mind of the reader—a genuine infidel trick—and one of the most contemptible and cowardly methods of controversy ever indulged in by the enemies of truth. We are not averse to criticism when it is conducted in the spirit of fairness. All we ask is an opportunity to be heard in our own behalf before the same audience. If we are so terribly deluded as these pseudo custodians of divine prerogatives would have it appear; and if they "love the Mormon but hate the ism" as they pretend to do, why do they not show it by a manifestation of the Christ Spirit so characteristic of the lowly Nazarene? Unfortunately for these "anti-Mormon polemics," they occupy a relative position with those who said, "Say we not well thou art a Samaritan and hast a devil," and of whom it was said:

"Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar and the father of it."—John 8: 44-48.

If "Mormonism," so-called, is a fraud, it can be proven so by honorable and fair methods. But those who, after painstaking investigation, have accepted it as a message from God will not be convinced of its delusiveness by the lying misrepresentations of those who are engaged in this "Mormon-Christian war."

There is another phase of this proposition to be considered, viz, before we can be induced to abandon the ship on which we have taken passage for eternity we must be shown a better and more inviting one. This we kindly ask our critics to do, but to date they have offered us nothing but Campbell's pretended "restoration" which is without either divine or human authority, as they renounced and denounced all shades of "sectarianism" and Catholicism, and denied the possibility of anyone receiving divine authority. "We want no message from the skies," wrote Mr. Campbell, in his efforts to "restore" the primitive church, and his followers have been reiterating it ever since. So then, the "real issue" is,

Did Smith or Campbell accomplish what they sought to do? Which one was right as to the position occupied? Mr. Neal will be the last man in the world to meet the "issue" on its merits.

We "elders" have met, and are still meeting, the ablest men their "army" can muster, and according to Mr. Neal's "demonstration," "Mormonism is growing stronger daily." (Leaflet Number 9.) In more than one instance have we built upon the ruins of defeated Campbellism. We are not apprehensive as to the future so far as their unholy "war" is concerned. If, as we believe, God is behind the work we represent, their puny efforts to stay its progress will continue to be futile.

NOTES ON "MILLENNIAL DAWN" THEORIES.

In volume two of the Time Is at Hand Mr. Russell claims that the body of Jesus which was laid in the tomb was not raised up to a perpetual union with that of Christ which was with the father before the world was. (See John 17:4, 5.) This assumption is based on the statement made by Paul, as being in part a description of the manner of the resurrection. In a footnote on page 108, he quotes: "It is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body." Mr. Russell has made for his purpose a very unfortunate selection, as we shall presently see.

Notice in the above quotation that the pronoun it, which is sown, is also that which is or will be raised; but under what conditions, or what is the difference between a natural and a spiritual body? The latter is evidently indentially the same as the former, yet with a change in some degree. As a building which, through age and partial decay, has become unfit for occupancy may be reconstructed by a skillful workman and made again fit for habitation, so in the process of resurrection the natural body is reconstructed on better conditions in which there is both elimination of that which is unfit and the addition of such elements as are needful to make it fit for the new environments by which it will be surrounded. The body sown was generated (born of a woman) and grew up with an imperfect development and therefore subject, or liable, to separation from the indwelling spirit, and subsequent dissolution; but being raised or reformed by the power of God, is thereby constituted a spiritual body, not being again subject to separation or dissolution. Jesus was born of the virgin, and the body animated by that which was "with the Father before the world was."

Russell would have us believe that in order to induce to a belief in the resurrection, our Savior resorted to a deception, i. e., he had to, or did assume the appearance of the body that was laid in the tomb, using it for a time, then dissolved it, and at subsequent appearances created or materialized a new counterfeit of the crucified body. Now, so far from this being true, every circumstance of his appearing as recorded in the word leads us to the conclusion on the part of the witnesses that Jesus was raised from the dead, clothed with the same body which had been previously crucified and laid in the tomb of Joseph, a body composed of flesh and bones, and at his second coming he will have the same body, but newly invested with a more resplendent glory than it possessed while in the earth life.

Notwithstanding his assertion to the contrary, Mr. Russell has adopted the materializing theories of the spiritualists with all the glaring contradictions and inconsistencies, and a few others added. For, according to his assumption, Jesus did, or had done for him, just what spiritualists claim to have done by spirits at their materializing seances; i. e., constructed material bodies or forms, which would be visible to the natural eye, and having all the appearance of a body of flesh and bones. For the case in point, it matters not whether the intelligence operating at the seance had been at some past time a dweller in flesh, or was one of those unseen beings known as the Devil and his angels; or whether the intelligence operating was an angel of God, or even the Son of God. All that the occasion demands is the endowment of an inherent possession by the operating intelligence, creative, or organic power.

Certainly if the Christ and angels could manufacture material bodies to order, for the sole purpose of convincing men in the flesh of continued existence beyond this life, what is to hinder the Devil and his angels from doing likewise? As we are taught in God's word, that Satan had power to appear as an angel of light, why may not he and his followers have power to appear as one who had been a dweller in flesh.

From whence did Mr. Russell obtain his idea of a spiritual body, as distinct and different from a natural body? The spiritualists use the same terms to describe their product that are used by Mr. Russell, with the added advantage of priority. Was this theory revealed to Mr. Russell by the Holy Spirit? If so, then it seems for once at least, that his satanic Majesty has stolen a march on God in the matter of revelation. Perhaps God didn't know, or had forgotten that Lucifer was going to get the start of him in that way. In view of the fact that the Bible nowhere gives even a hint of such a theory, and the term spiritual body is used to indicate the change wrought upon and in the natural body, in and by the process of reconstruction and resurrection, we are forced to the conclusion that this pet theory of Mr. Russell's must be classed as one of the "doctrines of devils, invented to oppose the truth."

By what right does Mr. Russell, or any other would-be teacher of God's holy word, dare to affirm that a spiritual body can not be both seen and handled by one yet a dweller in the flesh? If the body sown in the grave is a material body when sown, it will still be a material body when raised by the power of Him that raised up Christ from the dead. Does Mr. Russell know enough about the nature and conditions of spiritual existence to be able to affirm authoritatively that a spirit can not be seen by the natural eye, which is but the window through which the real man, or as Paul terms it, the inward man, looks out upon the material world? The material body has only been changed enough to render it a spiritual or perfect body. It must not be forgotten that the resurrection is a part of God's plan of restitution, and as such demands a restoration of a reunited body and spirit to the Edenic life, or primitive condition.

As the work of the Holy Spirit is a work of purification, as one of direction, so the inner man, reclothed with the body once vile with sin, is now purified and made perfect by the creative power of the Holy Spirit, and who shall say that the window of the soul, once darkened by sin, shall not become so clear that there shall be no limit to the vision of the inner man? The resurrection then being a part of the divine plan of restitution, it follows of necessity that the end will be obtained only by the elimination from the natural body of all the disfiguring and defacing marks of sin. In the case of our Savior, his natural body did not see corruption or dissolution. He but reentered his former tenement, which now bore no marks or scars but those incidental to his crucifixion. And those scars were to him, as they must be to us, marks of honor, testifying to the work that he has wrought for mankind, and can in no way detract from his glory. But in the new creation, or the first resurrection, we will be as our father Adam as to our earthly tabernacles: we shall be freed from all traces of our sinful earth life; our bodies will be pure and symmetrical and free from any taint of disease (which is always the result of our own or ancestral sins). Our minds or spirits will then, aided by the Holy Spirit and association with Christ and the angels of God, have full control of our bodies.

Is not he that would deny the above proposition seeking to make himself to appear wise above that which is written in God's word? There is in scripture or science no reason to suppose that they who shall be quickened by the power of God's Spirit, will not be able to look out through the windows (eyes) of the physical body and see even God himself. "If the spirit of him that raised up Jesus . . . dwell in you [now], he . . . shall [at some future time] quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth [now] in you." The term spirit body as opposed to fleshly body, can not be found in the Bible, but is borrowed from the spiritualists, as also the theory of materializing a body from present material elements, just for the occasion; and when its purpose was accomplished dissolving it into its primal elements.

If the foregoing theory be true, why did not God reveal it so plainly through his Son, while yet here on earth, that no one could make a mistake, instead of using terms or language so uncertain that it could only cover or conceal that which it professed to reveal? Man, generally considered, is a twofold being, composed of body and spirit, death being a breaking down or severance of this dual relation of the inner with the outer man. The resurrection being in opposition to or a conquest over death, is simply a reunion of body and spirit.

Mr. Russell in speaking of the "man of sin" (page 277) says, "The true church is symbolized by a 'chaste virgin.'" He also admits that the original church as organized by Christ and his apostles, was established and set in order by divine authority and direction. This being true, it follows that the apostasy having taken place, the earth has been and would continue to be without a church which God would acknowledge as his until he would again empower some one to set up and organize the church as at the first. If the church continued to exist during and after the apostasy, under what organic name or form is it to be found? Which one of the various so-called Christian denominations is it, or if composed of more than one, how many and who and what are they? What are the peculiar features of doctrine which determine the special place in the body (church of Christ), which each must occupy? Where, when, and through whom was the revelation that provided for this new order of things? If, as Paul says of the ministry, "No man taketh this honor unto himself unless he be called of God, as was Aaron," who can be named since the apostasy that was thus called? By reference to God's word we may learn that Aaron was called to the service of God, though a prophet of God told Moses to consecrate Aaron and anoint him to the priesthood. Joshua, many of the judges, Samuel, Saul, and David, also many others whom we might name, were called in like manner. Their work would never have been accepted if they had not been thus called. If this system of calling was needful then, is it not equally needful to-day? We are told in the word that God's ways are always and absolutely unchangeable, "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." If the church of the living God ever existed in a certain visible, organic form, it must so exist to-day, if at all. Do the various so-called Christian churches, taken collectively, (as many or as few as you please,) bear any resemblance either in doctrine or organic form to the original body or church as organized by Christ and his apostles?

Mr. Russell under the caption, "Work of harvest," in paragraph beginning on page 186 and concluding on page 187, seeks to convey the impression that the church of Christ does not now exist in a divinely inspired, organic, and visible form. It would almost seem, that Mr. Russell has been so intensely occupied with his chronological researches along prophetic lines that he has most sadly failed to give due attention to the organic and constructive work of Christ and his apostles, as recorded in the New Testament. If those who were born again under the preaching of the Son of God, and those whom he chose to represent him after his departure, did constitute a visible, organic body, or church of Christ, it is reasonable to conclude that the church or body of Christ still exists on earth in a visible, organic form, unless it can be shown that a complete apostasy and consequent destruction of that church did take place. Admitting that such an apostasy did take place, it is still evident the great head of the church had the power by revelation to again commission men to reinstitute and establish his church on earth at the first. But has he done so? Mr. Russell dares not deny this. In answering this let us have recourse to the word of God. Daniel 2: 44 says:

And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever. (See also Daniel 7: 22-27.)

Now if the kingdoms here referred to were organic, visible, bodies politic, so is also this kingdom which is to break in pieces and subdue these others, an organic, visible, body politic. Where in the realms of revelation, nature, or science will Mr. Russell point out an inorganic kingdom? Scriptural, political, and scientific usage forbid such constructive interpretation. Again, if it should be claimed that it has not ceased from the earth, when and how did it pass from the organic to the inorganic stage, or condition? But as any attempt to answer the foregoing query would be but beginning the question, we will pass on. If the kingdom of God is now in existence on earth, it must be characterized by the same distinguishing marks as at its inception.

We have seen that the God of heaven was to set up a kingdom in the days of the ten kings, which implies that the kingdom set up by Christ and his first apostles had either been destroyed or removed from the earth, as it would be the height of absurdity to suggest or foretell the setting up a structure that was already in existence, unless it could be shown that the original structure was either to be destroyed or removed from the scene of action. We are told in the word that God "set some in the church; first apostles, secondarily prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers"; that these various officers were for the perfecting of the saints, and were to continue for the edifying of the body of Christ (the church) "until" all the individuals comprising the body were come to the unity of the faith, which was not to be realized until that which is perfect is come.

In looking for the church in the wilderness of professed Christianity, we must keep in mind its distinguishing features as before enumerated; nor must we forget the principles or laws governing reception or entrance into the kingdom and a continuance therein. Possibly Mr. Russell may have been ignorant of the fact that the prophecy of Daniel concerning the setting up of the kingdom or church of Christ has been realized in these last days, the day of these ten kings, (This could not have occurred in the days of Christ and his first apostles, as the "ten kings" had not yet come into existence.) And that this newly set up "church" is identical in organic construction with that "set up" in the days of the apostles, as also in doctrine and in results flowing from compliance with its laws, thus proving God to be unchangeable in his dealings with the children of men in all ages.

Again we reason that if the church of Christ does not now exist in a visible, organic form, there are none who are authorized to preach the gospel and induct men into the church, and no sure and abiding hope for anyone in these days of running to and fro. As the vine is a living organism visible to all who pass by, so is the church or body which draws its life from Christ the vine. As there can be no body without certain organic features, so we reason that if there are no divinely accepted believers in Christ and none divinely authorized to proclaim the gospel, we may be justified in the belief that the church or kingdom of Christ is not on earth in these latter days. But as we do find these two characteristic features, as evidence of its visible organic existence, we are warranted in the conclusion that Mr. Russell is mistaken on this, as also on many other points of vital interest.

Praying that others may be blessed in the reading, as I have been in the writing, I am, in all charity,
ROBERT FULLER.

ALL-TRUTH.

"Our creed, all truth." Some time ago the above motto was used in the heading of the HERALD, and indeed we have no objection to this motto or its use; rather do we think it a fitting one to adorn the front page of our paper, if it is intended to convey the idea that we are the recipients of all truth, or that we stand ready to accept the truth when demonstrated. Assuming this attitude places us in line with the Apostle Paul's instruction to the early Saints when he said to prove all things and hold fast that which is good. We believe the saying also that "truth is truth, wherever found, on heathen or on Christian ground." The acceptance of the gospel does not make us the custodians of all truth, but places us in a position to prove all things. The Lord bestows his Holy Spirit upon the baptized believer as an abiding comforter, which is given to assist him to make discrimination between the true and the false; and the injunction is, as quoted above, to hold fast that which will endure; that which will stand the test.

The Savior said, "The Spirit searcheth all things, even the deep things of God, and takes the things of the Father and shows them unto us." So then, if we are seeking after truth, with purity and in honesty of purpose, we will have the witness of the Holy Spirit to lead and guide us into all truth, no matter in what field we may choose to search for the precious gem. The world is filled with truth. All nature as it exists to-day, and as we are privileged to view it, is truth. Error is a contradiction of this existence, as also the facts of history. Such contradictions, however, have no foundation. But some one may ask, "Who is so foolish as to deny the existence of material things?" We answer, "Many." Does not Christian Science, so-called, deny and ask its subjects to deny even their own material existence? What is the logical conclusion of such denial? That they have no eyes to see; no ears to hear; no faculties or powers to sense their surroundings in this beautiful world. Pray tell me what will be the reward of those who make such denial. Will they not be cast into outer darkness, where there is weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched, and all this sorrow because they chose darkness rather than light, because they prefer to believe a lie and be damned?

To deny their own existence is to deny God, and if there is no God then we are not, and there is no existence, says a Book of Mormon writer. It is strange, indeed, that in a world of such realities anyone possessing all his faculties can deny this self-evident truth. It seems to us that being surrounded with such actual living realities should form a basis in the mind of every individual for the comprehension of all truth. There is no difference in truth, whether found in the natural or spiritual realm; all truth also is susceptible of demonstration if we are in a position to make the test. The scientist must first learn the rules by which the test is made, before he can make a demonstration of truth in the natural or material world. Also must the student of spiritual things first learn the rules that govern in the spiritual world before a test can be made. It has been the teaching of a great many in the past, that there is no relation between the natural and the spiritual, the natural and the supernatural, but modern thinkers are coming to the conclusion that there is but very little difference.

Prof. Henry Drummond says it is but a step between the natural and the spiritual. Latter day revelation removes the supposed step. Professor Drummond also says, when asked to lecture to a class of students on science, that it was his avowed purpose to eliminate his religion from science, and likewise when occupying the pulpit on the Sabbath to eliminate science from religion; but in spite of his avowed purpose, he found himself reading his science into religion and his religion into science. We ask, How could it be otherwise? Truth in science and truth in religion must harmonize; science and religion must go hand in hand; and as we have already stated there is no difference in revealed truth from God and truth discovered by the scientist.

Astronomy teaches that there are numerous worlds like the one which we inhabit. The Apostle Paul uses the expression, "worlds without end," and also speaks of the glory of the sun, of the moon, and of the stars. Latter day revelation tells us it is impossible unto man to number the worlds like this, which God hath created, but they are all numbered unto him. There are those, however, that claim too much for the natural or material world, claiming that nature is the author of all things, but the little boy (if no one else) will ask the question, "Who made nature?" The question is important and must be answered, for if nature is only operated by and through delegated laws, who is the author and operator of these laws? Revelation says that God is in all things and through all things, as also he is the life of all things, and all things are by him and of him. Science can not dispute the statement, for as yet by science the origin of life is undiscovered.

Jesus, the greatest teacher the world has ever known, drew all his illustrations from his surroundings in nature, in order to teach us what the other world was like, and on one occasion he said to Nicodemus, "If you can not believe me when I tell you of earthly things, how can you believe me or understand when I tell you of heavenly things?" He thus indicated that the things pertaining to the future world are to be comprehended by the things that are; or in other words, that earthly things are in the likeness of the heavenly; and as there is reality, tangibility, and substance to things earthly, so also is there reality, tangibility, and substance to things heavenly.

The geologist, spending his time and energy examining the rocks and substrata of the earth, searching for fossils that have stood for ages, comprehends and possesses a knowledge of truth in the geological world that we who have not studied the sciences can not know. The archæologist, applying his time and talent making discovery and examination of the relics of the past, possesses more of the truth in his sphere than we do. Likewise the pallontologist, whose study is man and his relation to the past, comprehends more of the truth in his sphere than do we. If we are commanded to search the records that these men of scientific research have made, and study all good books to obtain a knowledge of governments and knowledge of kingdoms and things past and present, that we may be well armed with truth as the good Lord again sends us forth to warn the world, truly our creed does not mean that we are in possession of all truth, but rather that we are in search of all truth.

We believe the purpose in this is that we may be prepared to show the harmony of discovered truth and revealed truth and be able to prove all things from two sources. Truth, then, is the recognition of things as they are, and as they were based upon discovery and revelation, and as they will be, recognizing that they will be as they have been, comprehending the things that will be by those things that have been and do now appear.

It is not God's purpose to bestow all truth at once, but he reveals, as he says, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, and if we continue to receive truth as God reveals, the promise is made that eventually we shall "be glorified in truth and know all things" (Doctrine and Covenants, page 237).

ESTABLISHING DESIRABLE HABITS.

TEMPERANCE.

Among the virtues desirable for the child to possess is that of temperance. It would seem at first flush as if this were not a virtue suited to childhood; but we must remember that the foundation of all mature characteristics is laid during the period of immaturity. Sensations, constantly repeated, make impressions on the plastic brain, and there form pathways, as it were, over which pass the impulses which eventuate in actions and thus are formed the habits of life. A habit of regularity is the foundation of a life of temperance, if that regularity is in temperate experiences. We must not forget that temperance, or its opposite may express itself in speech or conduct as well as in eating and drinking. And to be temperate, one must be moderate, and well regulated in all life's manifestations. Adler says, "Regularity may not in itself be moral, but the life of irregularity always tends toward immorality."

The first lessons in temperance then, are to be found in the calm, self-poised, and well-regulated lives of those who are about the child, and then in the regulation of its own daily experiences.

It may seem impossible to set the little life to going with clock-work precision; but we can at least avoid starting the routine in objectionable ways. The knowledge of a few simple physiological facts will be of a great help here. . . .

Some nurses give the new born infant brandy and water, or quiet it with soothing syrups, both of which methods are direct lessons in intemperance. Soothing syrups are made up of alcohol, opium, and other deleterious substances, and are most dangerous both in their proximate and their ultimate effects.

The use of beer, ale, wine or other alcoholic beverages is equally objectionable. The baby may sleep better because the mother takes beer; but it is the sleep of alcoholic stupor. It is stated by some authorities that in some localities in France and other European countries it is difficult to find a sober baby, as all are more or less intoxicated by the alcohol-poisoned milk of the beer or wine-drinking mother.

Giving children food in order to stop their cries is a method which tends towards intemperance. It teaches the lesson of quieting pain or forgetting discomfort, by putting something into the mouth. The discouraged man who attempts to forget his discouragement by the aid of alcohol is following the same plan.

Overeating is in itself intemperance in the use of food and tends to intemperance in drink. Unfortunately people have obtained the idea that because they feel the discomfort of a big dinner less after they have taken a glass of some alcoholic drink they have therefore been benefited, when on the contrary, digestion has been retarded and they only feel better because sensation has been deadened by partial paralysis of sensory nerves. The use of alcohol in any form as a home remedy is a lesson in intemperance. The same may be said of its use in cooking.

Many a fond and pious mother is working for the destruction of her children more effectually through her cookery than she is praying for their salvation by her agonizing petitions. Tea, coffee, spices, rich and highly seasoned foods create irritations that demand soothing by the inundations of fluids. The "free lunch" of the saloons is a shrewd allurements based upon this fact. She is a most unwise mother whose home table offers a temptation to visit the saloon in order to quench the thirst her cooking has created.

A lack of knowledge as to the kind of food to give the growing boy in order to build up a complete and healthful body may send him out from home with a craving for something, he knows not what. And this craving he may be led to attempt to satisfy by alcohol in some form.

In order that the children may learn temperance in early life, they should have nutritious food, simply prepared, without irritating additions; given at regular intervals, in appropriate quantities, with orderly surroundings, by quiet, calm, and well-poised attendants.

And as the food can not be used by the system until thoroughly digested, and as the first process of digestion is in mastication, it is absolutely essential to teach the child to chew every mouthful of food most carefully. When this is done, nature can do its part after the food has passed from the child's control. This also greatly lessens the tendency to overeat. By this plan will be secured a body symmetrically developed, a nervous system generating orderly impulses, a brain accustomed to governing by reason, not swayed by desire of sense pleasure. . . .

TRUSTWORTHINESS.

In its very earliest infancy, the child may be learning lessons of trustworthiness. He must first learn to trust before learning to be trustworthy. . . .

All of his little experiences are educating him either in trustworthiness or in distrust. He feels a confidence in the strong arms that hold him, until some one—perhaps in mere playfulness—frightens him with a pretense of being about to drop him. He trusts all the implied promises of good care until repeated disappointments prove to him that they are not to be relied upon.

Mothers sometimes deceive their children by a pretense of going to bed with the child and then slipping away after he is asleep. Some time he discovers her absence and becomes suspicious; distrust takes possession of his little heart, and the ruse is no longer successful. Perhaps the mother, finding that baby objects to her absence, deceives him by hiding her wraps and slipping away from him, it may be going so far as to say to him, "Mamma is not going anywhere; she is right here in the next room." Some day he discovers her absence; after that he is on the alert, and she has great difficulty in carrying out this deception. He is becoming distrustful, and through distrust is learning to be untrustworthy.

Parents very frequently make promises to the child which they do not fulfill. It may be the mother purchases freedom to absent herself with the promise that she will bring something home for baby. That part of the contract slips her memory, and she returns empty handed. Baby discovers that the promise made to him has no value in her mind; therefore it will be only natural that he should attach no value to a promise made by himself in later years. Promises made to children should be kept to the very letter, even if it be a whipping that is promised. Children soon learn to rate at their proper valuation the threats made by angry parents. "If you do that again, I will whip you within an inch of your life," may at first frighten the child into obedience; but discovering that obedience is not followed by so severe a punishment, and perhaps not by any punishment at all, he learns to disregard the threat and loses confidence in the parent.

It is a serious matter when the child doubts the truthfulness of the parent, even if the fulfilling of the promise which was made were better broken than kept, and would have been better still if never made.

A little child on a railway train was very restless. The mother said, "If you don't keep still, the conductor will come along and cut off your nose."

Seeing the conductor enter with his gleaming punch, the child shrank behind the bulwark of its mother's shoulder, waiting for what might come. The conductor came along punching the tickets, and paid no attention to the child. After he had gone, the little girl came out from her hiding place, and looking into her mother's face, said: "Mamma, you lied"; and the mother laughed as if it were something amusing; but it was a most terrible and truthful arraignment which should have overwhelmed the mother with shame and confusion.

A little girl of five was once left in my charge while her mother went on an errand. The child cried and would not be pacified.

"Your mother will be back soon," I said comfortingly.

"No, she won't," said the little one stoutly.

"But she said she would," I asserted.

"Oh, I know her," said the little one faithlessly.

It is not a little thing when a child of five so distrusts the mother's word.

Long before the child can manifest untrustworthiness in himself he must have absorbed into his nature the idea from the conduct of others. If we would have our children worthy of trust, we must ourselves be worthy of their trust. They learn all of their first lessons of life through imitation. If those who are training them live up to the highest ideals; are truthful in the smallest matters, treating the most unimportant personages with scrupulous honesty, keeping all promises, even the most trivial, the idea of reliability and trustworthiness will become part of the fabric of the child's character.—Augusta Harwood, M. D., in American Motherhood.

Questions on April Reading.

How are habits formed? What may lay the foundation for habits of temperance? What is temperance in food and drink? What in speech and conduct? (Temperance has been defined to be a moderate use of that which is beneficial, and total abstinence from that which is injurious). Toward what does a life of irregularity tend? What is the danger in giving alcoholic liquors or soothing syrups to infants? What lesson is taught by feeding a child merely to stop its crying? What relation does this bear to the turning to drink by a man in discouragement? What is the effect of alcoholic drinks after overeating? What influence does the food and drink of the home exert in the matter of temperance? How does the use of the teeth affect habits of temperance? What are some of the benefits secured from a brain accustomed to govern by reason?

What is the effect of causing a child to be distrustful? How will the child's trustworthiness be affected by broken promises or deceptions practiced by the parent toward himself? What care should be taken to avoid making unreasonable threats? Why? How may a child absorb trustworthiness? What part does imitation play in forming the character of a child?

SHARON, PENNSYLVANIA, February 16, 1910.

Editors Herald: As it is some time since you have heard from this part of God's vineyard, I will send you a few lines to say the good work is on the advance. We have a branch of one hundred and seven members with about half attendance, Bro. T. U. Thomas being our more than worthy president. Thank God for it. We have about five priests of which my husband is one, five teachers and three deacons. We have a Religio society of three classes with a very good attendance, each one willing to do his part for the Master's cause.

Our Sunday school is growing so much one teacher can not teach all the Bible class. We have decided to organize a Doctrine and Covenants class in the near future. Our Daughters of Zion is also growing. This is our second year to obtain the banner of the Kirtland District Sunday schools.

The Kirtland district conference convened here February 11 to 13. Had the pleasure of attending nearly all the meetings. Can say the Spirit of God was manifested in a great degree, especially in our prayer and social services. It was a spiritual feast never to be forgotten. Among the many who were present with us were Elders G. T. Griffiths, J. A. Becker, J. McConaughy, R. Baldwin, T. U. Thomas, and Brother Tucker, the latter lately of New Zealand.

I enjoy reading the letters in the HERALD very much. We do not take the Autumn Leaves nor the Ensign, but mean to do so soon. It makes my heart rejoice (when I read the letters of the isolated Saints) to think of the privileges God gives me, as one of the weakest of his children, to meet with the Saints almost every Sunday and worship a prayer hearing and a prayer answering God, in spirit and in truth. It is the earnest desire of my heart to so live that I may be as a shining light to my friends and neighbors, that I may rear my children that when they come to the age of accountability, they too, may render obedience to this glorious gospel. Saints, pray for me that I may overcome self and continue faithful to the end.

Ever praying for the welfare of the Saints and the redemption of Zion,
Your sister in Christ,
97 SUPERIOR STREET. EMMA J. JONES.

CLEBURNE, TEXAS, February 9, 1910.

Dear Herald: The Lord is faithful, is the motto that is on a beautiful wall picture that a kind friend gave me Christmas, and I am forcibly reminded that this precious promise has been verified in my case when I look at the label on my HERALD, showing that some good "Samaritan" has renewed my subscription for this year, when owing to adverse fortune and conditions I was unable to renew and had written to the manager to that effect, but God is good, and I take this means of sincerely thanking him, and the kind, thoughtful one or ones who did me such a great favor. May God bless such an one, is my prayer.

We isolated ones have not had many services since our Brethren Maloney and Aylor's capable efforts here, but some of our good local elders have preached a few times, but I did not have the pleasure of attending, even when our dear old "veteran of the cross," Uncle Lamon (L. L. Wight), was here very recently. However, he held a reading and prayer service at my room, which was most acceptable and appreciated. Also I wish to mention that Bro. J. M. Crawford is most faithful, when here, in visiting the few, and reading, talking, and praying with them, and the writer can say those seasons are much enjoyed and knows they are helpful. Am so thankful to know Bro. Romanan Wight is still spared and seems better. Many prayers have been offered in his behalf from "Texas" as well as from all others who need or have asked for special prayers. Oh, how very thankful I am that the Lord heard and answered our prayers in behalf of our venerable Bro. Joseph Smith, and I pray the blessings of our Father may still abide with him. As for me I am in conditions that I can not do anything except to pray in faith for God's blessings to rest upon all his people and that the truth may be triumphant and all God's children be saved. Dark clouds are all around me, but above is the beautiful sunlight of my heavenly Father's love.

Ever trusting and praying for the right to prevail,
Your sister in Christ,
MRS. D. S. RILEY.

CANON CITY, COLORADO, January 14, 1910.

Dear Saints and Readers of the Herald: I was much interested in "Parable of the great King," by Bishop Bullard, which appeared in the HERALD for January 5. I am a firm believer in community homes and coöperations, all working together for their mutual benefit. My most earnest prayers are for the welfare of Zion.

Sisters, I wish you could accompany me in my morning walks to see the mountains arise in all their splendor as the shadows of night disappear. They are one glimmer of gold and silver. Their snow crowned summits become a flame of fire. I would almost think I was nearing the promised land if it were to be found in this world. There is no blue so blue as that of the mountain bluebirds that appear in countless numbers to brighten the winter landscape when the days are dark and cloudy. The anemone is always in blossom at Eastertide, called by some the mountain lily. A tiny blue flower like the forget-me-not is seen creeping out from the snow in the midst of summer. In the valleys I find the violet smiling up when the snowy covering is brushed away. But the state flower is most admired.

"Columbine on the mountain side,
Colorado's joy and pride,
Blooming from thy bed of snow,
To greet the sunlight's rosy glow.

"God's own hand placed thee here,
The wanderer's lonely heart to cheer.
Angelic messenger, thou art given
To guide our thoughts from earth to heaven."

Yours in hope,
MRS. E. N. BEACH.

HORACE, KANSAS, February 26, 1910.

Editors Herald: We are happy to announce that Sr. Emma Middleton, for whom prayer was requested through the HERALD a short time ago, is very much improved, and her early recovery is now expected. But sad as it may seem, another, the third one of Brother Middleton's daughters, is severely stricken with a similar ailment, and is at Pueblo among her husband's people. Will Saints remember her in prayer also, that if it be the Father's will she too may be healed?

Brother Middleton's family is and has been sorely afflicted, as this is the third case in his family. The doctors have no name for the strange malady.

Bro. A. B. Young procured the Baptist church here and we are holding a series of services with fair attendance for the size of the town.

Yours hopefully,
C. SCOTT.

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Dear Herald: Our district conference met at Runnells and was very largely attended. The church at Runnells is the second largest in the district, and the hospitality of the Saints there is such that all desire to attend conference. At the service on Sunday the church was filled. The branch will soon be under the necessity of enlarging its chapel.

The Sunday school and Religio conventions held on Friday before conference were well attended, and reports showed the auxiliary work in good condition. It was decided to hold one convention during the coming year, the convention to meet as usual previous to the session of conference, but the time to be given to normal work.

Elder N. V. Sheldon, a former missionary in the district, and who will labor in the district until General Conference, was at the conference, and all were pleased to meet him, and see him in the full enjoyment of health. On Sunday he preached one of his forceful sermons on the subject of water baptism.

Elder James McKiernan, missionary in charge, was present, and all have come to know Brother McKiernan, though he has done but little labor in the district during the year. He was the speaker on Sunday evening. Elder J. F. Mintun was the speaker on Saturday evening.

At the social and sacrament service on Sunday, Bro. Joseph Knox, of Ackworth, was ordained an elder, and during the week, Bro. J. R. Epperson, of Des Moines, was ordained an elder. Meetings were continued at Runnells during the week and several were baptized. The next conference will meet in Des Moines in June. It is expected that a good delegation from the district will attend the General Conference.

Bro. Joseph Williams, of Runnells, was confined to his bed during the conference, on account of a broken limb from the fall of slate in the mine on New Years Day.

All members of the Richland Branch should note that the branch has been disorganized, and the remaining members can be transferred to other branches. This branch was organized thirty years ago in Poweshiek County and was the work of Bro. Isaac N. White, now of the Twelve, and of those who labored with him in the district at that time. This branch has furnished to the church one high priest, Hiram A. McCoy, one seventy, John S. Roth, some elders who have done missionary work for the church, and several priests, teachers, and deacons.

NEW ALBANY, INDIANA, February 16, 1910.

Editors Herald: "Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountains of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy, which say to their masters, bring and let us drink."—Amos 4: 1.

And now comes Senator Flint from California and says that he is too poor to remain in the Senate. Although Mr. Flint is worth $500,000 he says he would soon be bankrupt. The Washington Post recently gave what they considered low estimates of what some of our United States Senators are worth.

What we wish to notice is the wealth of Senator Smoot of Utah, which is placed at $5,000,000. An apostle of Christ worth over $5,000,000 and thousands in the Mormon church that are poor and destitute! This is certainly of interest concerning the latter day dispensation, when greed and graft is to be seen on all sides. How true the words of the Prophet Amos quoted above if we apply them to the present time. It is getting to be so that unless a man has wealth he is not respected. God have mercy on those that desire riches rather than righteousness. May we all be able to see the danger ahead when a few men will own and control the nation, which is evident by the foregoing.

Think of five thousand children going to school without breakfast in Chicago. It is not the socialistic plan that will settle this either. There is no escape except by obeying God's laws. Ever praying, hoping, and working for the redemption of Zion. "Lovely Zion, the city of our God!"

SANTA ROSA, CALIFORNIA, February 13, 1910.

Editors Herald: We are greatly encouraged and strengthened by the church publications, and often wish we might be able to contribute our share, but think perhaps my work lies along another line. Yet in whatsoever our hands find to do, I feel we will be blessed.

Now that we do not have any place to hold church we feel lonely. I can not reconcile myself to visiting and riding for pleasure on the day set apart that we should study the word of the Lord and try to understand the work.

I now feel my work is done and it is with considerable satisfaction I can say I have done what I could. Business is at a standstill; we do not feel to make a home but in Zion, yet no sale here now.

About three months after my baptism I bought eight dollars' worth of books to find out what the church taught. It is the best investment a new member can make and one will never miss the money so invested.

Yours sincerely,
SISTER SHORT.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Angelina Hendrickson, Badger, Idaho: "Our branch has been organized some eight years, and I have not had the pleasure of seeing a letter from the Teton Branch as yet. There are twenty-five of God's children in this branch, which is at the foot of the great Teton Peaks. They are in a pretty good spiritual condition, but lots of room for improvement. Bro. A. J. Layland has been with us for a week and we had some fine sermons while here. I will ask the prayers of the Saints in my behalf, as I have been ailing for some time."

News From Branches

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

We received a very urgent invitation from Rev. S. O. Pool, editor of Biblical Education, of Washington, and a representative minister of the Church of Christ, (nonprogressive), to attend a series of meetings at Riverside, California. Bro. J. C. Powell, of that place, backed up the invitation with an assurance of free "bed and board."

I communicated with Bro. C. E. Crumley; took him into my confidence, offering to share the good things coming. He cheerfully acquiesced and, inasmuch as we needed a vacation anyway, we packed our grips and were soon at the seat of action.

We were entertained, amused, and incidentally informed (?) as to a number of points of which we were wholly ignorant heretofore. Reverend Pool is a sophist; he "plays to the galleries," constantly currying favors with his audience. The writer was given a seat on the platform, while Brother Crumley occupied a seat just in front of the pulpit.

Mr. Pool quoted very extensively from our church works. We had previously refused to attend the meetings unless he would agree that "the motive or personal character of any member of either church shall not be impugned or referred to." By this we were spared a tirade on Joseph Smith and his ignorant (?) ancestry.

We went to Riverside strangers. We left with over half of the audience our friends.

Lest some may criticize us for leaving our regular work, will say the missionary in charge gave his unqualified consent which he confirmed by his presence part of the time.

Bro. Fred A. Smith left for Monterey Tuesday, February 22. He was to attend the San Jose conference February 25 to 27, and thence home. He organized a mission at San Diego.

The two-day meeting at San Bernardino was a red letter day in the history of the branch. Seven baptisms reported there.

The district conference, Religio and Sunday school conventions at Santa Ana, February 18 to 20, passed off pleasantly. The preaching was by T. W. Williams, Fred A. Smith, Charles E. Crumley, and F. G. Pitt.

The conference decided to purchase an acre of ground, with buildings thereon, adjoining the church property at Garden Grove, for a reunion ground; cost not to exceed seven hundred dollars.

Interest in church work remains unabated in Los Angeles.

Owing to lack of room we are raising money for an addition to the church building. The Sisters' Aid Society held a social recently which netted over forty dollars.

Bro. William Crumley, one of our loyal members, has been very sick. Special services will be held Sunday, petitioning divine help in his behalf.

FIRST KANSAS CITY.

At present we are pushing the advertising and otherwise making preparation for the event of our annual two-week series of mission services to be conducted by Bishop R. C. Evans, of Toronto, Ontario. We made a call for one hundred and twenty-five dollars for the advertising expenses, and to date the response amounts to one hundred and forty-one dollars and fifty cents, and more is promised. This will indicate to some extent the interest the congregation has in these services. We have secured a large amount of literature for free distribution and are preparing announcements, circulars, and other matter to be sent through the mails and distributed from house to house, inviting and urging our friends and relatives to attend. Sr. W. N. Robinson, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, is coming to render valuable assistance as soloist, and aided by a great chorus choir and our pipe organ just recently repaired, with a new electric motor to furnish plenty of wind power, I think our music will be all that could be desired.

The meetings begin March 13 and continue to the 27th. All readers of the HERALD who may have relatives and friends living in this city are earnestly requested to send their names and addresses to the undersigned and we will send them announcement of these meetings and try to urge them to attend.

CENTRAL CHICAGO.

Sunday, March 6. The Sunday school voted to procure banks for all those who desired to deposit their Christmas Offering, and trust that our fund will be very materially increased this year. Believe we all take more interest in saving our pennies, nickels, and dimes if we can have a bank we can call our very own.

Sacrament service quite well enjoyed, but we have often wondered why some of our people who are the most polite and gayest of the gay at parties or sociables, wear the most solemn expressions at our prayer meetings and so many times do not lend their assistance in the prayers and testimonies. How our hearts should be filled with joy and thankfulness at these meetings, and we all should endeavor to make them pleasant and interesting for even nonmembers to attend, so they would realize that we possessed a treasure that they did not.

An excellent sermon on tithes and offerings in the evening by Elder Arthur Allen. Are we all endeavoring to escape the burning? When the tithing list as a rule shows the names of possibly one seventh of the members in a district, there surely must be many Saints who have a different interpretation of the verdict.

Monday evening was our branch business meeting, Elder P. Pement in charge, Bro. Henry Keir clerk. The financial report regarding our church was considered quite satisfactory, and we feel if all do their duty before many years we will have a church home that will be in the possession of the Saints in very deed.

Wednesday evening prayer meeting was attended by the Spirit and was a source of strength to those present.

Thursday evening the Searchlight Club, under direction of Mrs. Clara Mae McCloud, will give an entertainment of music, readings, and sketches.

Friday evening, after the study of the lesson, we will have a short temperance entertainment. As many may have noted by the Chicago papers there is a great conflict going on between the "drys" and the "wets" in this city, and it will be determined April 5 whether the saloons will be a licensed necessity.

"We can only have the highest happiness—such as goes along with being a great man—by having wide thoughts and much feeling for the rest of the world as well as ourselves; and this sort of happiness often brings so much pain with it that we can only tell it from pain by its being what we would choose before everything else, because our souls see it is good."

Montana Saints—Attention!

Dear Brethren: When the census officer visits you you are requested to be very particular to make plain to him that you are a member of the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints and that you have no affiliation with the Latter Day Saints of Utah. In doing this you will aid in giving our church its correct denominational status in this State.

By order of the conference of Montana District.

JEROME P. WYCKOFF, Secretary.

DEER LODGE, February 19, 1910.

Letter of Condolence.

TO MRS. AMAZON BADHAM AND FAMILY.

We are reminded how fleeting time is as we are brought to the stern realization that one of our number, one who has served the district for many years with credit to himself and to those over whom he presided, with a record clean and successful, has finished his work and gone to his reward.

Bro. Amazon Badham departed this life November 16, 1909. He was born near Henderson, Iowa, January 22, 1853. He united with the church May 29, 1868, and ever after was a consistent and faithful member.

He was ordained a priest June 9, 1889, and an elder August 22, 1891. At the time of his death he was both president of the Farm Creek Branch and Fremont District.

As a citizen and member of the church he was trusted and honored in every position he occupied; and those who knew him best honored him most. We can say that he lived his religion consistently and died with strong faith in the restored gospel.

Whereas, In the death of Bro. Amazon Badham, the church, and particularly the Fremont District, has lost one of the strong pillars, be it resolved: First, That we extend to all to whom he was near and dear our sincere and most heartfelt sympathy in an irreparable loss of husband, father, and friend, and pray God to strengthen them in the assurance that the reward is certain for a life's work well done, believing as we do in the promise, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." Second, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family and the church publications, the HERALD and Ensign.

Power versus Patriotism.

In February number of The Twentieth Century Magazine, under the title of "Power versus patriotism," Mr. I. N. Stevens, the well-known journalist and lawyer, shows how the lust for power, as incarnated in Napoleon, and the passion for patriotism, as embodied in La Fayette, represents two great forces of death and life, actively at work in our nation to-day. Next it shows the remedies—practical, well-tried, simple remedies—by which privilege and egotistic power can be brought to their knees and a government of, for and by the people quickly reestablished in the republic.

In a way, this paper forms a fitting and very important sequel to Judge Ben B. Lindsey's great series of articles that have recently been published in Everybody's Magazine.

In "Power versus patriotism" Mr. Stevens shows how the reign of greed and corruption can be peaceably exchanged for the rule of the people. Mr. Stevens is the author of the popular novel, The Liberators, the best romance dealing with public ownership that has yet appeared.

Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famous medical missionary, who has devoted his life to the welfare of white men and Esquimaux in the great peninsula, does not attempt, in Labrador: The Country and the People, of which he has written by far the greater part, to paint the field of his labors as a land of milk and honey. Had it been, Doctor Grenfell would not be there. What he has done, with the aid of his associates, is to supply us with the only accurate account we possess of a country, interesting not only for the grandeur of its scenery but also for the simple strength and manliness of its people.

For many years Doctor Grenfell has worked with these people, living their lives until he knows them thoroughly. His associates, Reginald A. Daly, A. P. Low, William B. Cabot, Charles Wendell Townsend, E. B. Delabarre, Charles W. Johnson, Mary J. Rathbun, Outram Bangs, and Glover M. Allen, are scientists of various kinds, who each contribute to the book the material with which they are personally the most familiar. The result is the incorporation, in a graphic picture of human lives lived under harsh conditions, of valuable and not easily attainable geological, botanical, and zoological information of great value. An historical introduction by W. S. Wallace completes the book, giving to us practically all that is known of Labrador.

An added and unconscious interest in the book is that which springs inevitably from Doctor Grenfell's own personality. The man who, summer and winter, year after year, has passed up and down that Arctic coast, carrying relief and comfort, can not write of that which is so intimately bound up with his life's work, without revealing much of himself. It is a personality as sturdy, as straightforward, as courageous as the men and women among whom he toils. No other than such a one, indeed, would have been accepted by these folk as Doctor Grenfell has been. Life is hard on the Labrador, so hard that there is no dispensing with the plain homely virtues.

It is hard, but there is a tremendous fascination about it. The cod is, perhaps, the real support of Labrador life, and there is no chapter in the book more interesting than Doctor Grenfell's account of this fishery, and of the men who follow it. His deep love for the open, his feeling for the strong man fighting a hard battle for the right to live, are evident in all that he writes, but there are also significant facts as to the working of business systems. The people of Labrador are in the grip of poverty, to remain there helpless until needed reforms grant them once more a fair field for the struggle with the sea, a reluctant soil, and game that is steadily growing scarcer. Any man who knows what the word adventure means will feel the appeal of the life for all its hardship.

Not the least important feature of the work is the concise directions for reaching Labrador. To most of us, the peninsula seems impossibly remote; in the light of Doctor Grenfell's information, it is actually within easy reach. The rewards for the traveler are large—magnificent scenery second in grandeur only to the seacoast of Norway, a people commanding respect and admiration, the primitive life of the wilderness of lake and forest.

Insect Resistance.

All animals have the power to recover from injury occasioned by shock—from being stunned. Insects are in no sense an exception to this, and most of them possess what has been called tenacity of life to a remarkable degree. A butterfly will sail away with a pin through its body, an ant will go floundering around after being cut in two, and all insects will quickly recover from a blow, even if such may dent or break their external coverings. In such cases the inside parts are mostly out of use for a short time, somewhat similar to the case of your arm when you have struck the "funny bone," or to your foot when it is "asleep." But after a few moments' rest, the wasp can again resume its actions.

A wasp is well armored; its exterior covering is hard and almost unyielding. When it is struck a severe blow, the soft, delicate inner parts yield to the impact; the nerves and muscular tissues can not operate in unison, and the insect may be said to have been rendered unconscious as well as incapable, for the "mind" actions depend upon its entire nervous system.

But there is no such thing as an animal's having more than one life. When crushed, dismembered, poisoned, or smothered beyond recovery; when its vital organs are injured so that they can not again resume their regular uses, an insect will die—not in appearance, but really so. And this may result from the wearing out of its active vital organism, which may be called old age, after sometimes only a few days or weeks of life. Its one life has then been terminated beyond any doubt.—From "Nature and Science" in March Saint Nicholas.

NUMBER 12

Editorial

EARLY CHURCH IDEALS.

III. TO SECURE THE BEST EDUCATION; TO LIVE AT PEACE WITH ALL MEN.

(The next and closing editorial in this series will explain the attitude of the church on the question of marriage and the sanctity of the home.)

EDUCATION.

It has been represented that the Saints who were gathered together in New York, Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, under the ministry of Joseph Smith and his immediate associates, were an ignorant class of people, not educated and not caring to become educated. This representation, like others of its class, was based on an entire misconception of the church, its ideals, and the individual character of its representative members.

Less than two years after the organization of the church a revelation was received through Joseph Smith and accepted by the church from which we quote:

Therefore, verily I say unto you, my friends, Call your solemn assembly, as I have commanded you; and as all have not faith, seek ye diligently and teach one another words of wisdom; yea, seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; seek learning even by study, and also by faith. Organize yourselves, prepare every needful thing, and establish a house, even a house of prayer, a house of fasting, a house of faith, a house of learning, a house of glory, a house of order, a house of God; that your incomings may be in the name of the Lord; that your outgoings may be in the name of the Lord; that all your salutations may be in the name of the Lord, with uplifted hands unto the Most High.—Doctrine and Covenants 85: 36.

A brief glance at the history of the church will show that the members began to obey the injunctions contained in this law, to seek knowledge and wisdom out of the best books. In 1834 a school of the elders was established in Kirtland to study matters of general interest and especially those immediately connected with their ministry. A regular course of lectures was undertaken; and the school was well attended by the elders who were studious and earnest in their work.

In 1836 a class of forty elders was formed in Kirtland with Joseph Smith at the head. Their purpose was to study the Hebrew language. They secured the services of Professor Seixas, of Hudson Seminary, for a term of seven weeks, paying him three hundred and twenty dollars.

Poor the church was, undoubtedly, at that day, and engaged in pushing its way over the western frontier, in its movement toward Missouri, yet these men had time and inclination to study Hebrew.

From the personal diary of Joseph Smith we select entries made on three consecutive days:

Monday, 21 [1835]. Spent this day at home, endeavoring to treasure up knowledge for the benefit of my calling. The day passed off very pleasantly. I thank the Lord for his blessings to my soul, his great mercy over my family in sparing our lives. O continue thy care over me and mine, for Christ's sake.

Tuesday, 22. At home. Continued my studies. O may God give me learning, even language; and endue me with qualifications to magnify his name while I live.

Wednesday, 23. In the forenoon, at home, studying the Greek language.—Church History, vol. 1, p. 625.

Concerning the church during its sojourn at Far West, Missouri, and its attitude toward education, we now quote from the History of Caldwell and Livingston Counties (pages 120, 121), published by the Saint Louis Historical Society:

In the fall of 1836 a large and comfortable schoolhouse was built. . . . The Mormons very early gave attention to educational matters. There were many teachers among them and schoolhouses were among their first buildings.

We are glad to learn that schoolhouses were among the first buildings to be erected by the Saints when they moved into a new section of the country. It was justly the pride of American pioneers that everywhere they went the little red schoolhouse sprang up side by side with the first log huts or pine board shacks. We are pleased to hear it acknowledged that there were many teachers among the Saints. These facts do not support the charge that they were an ignorant and degraded people. It is good, too, to find an occasional writer who does justice to a much misunderstood and maligned people.

Not only were the older people enjoined to educate themselves by study and prayer and the perusal of all good books, but upon them was placed the duty of educating their children in religious matters and on questions of morality:

And again, inasmuch as parents have children in Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized, that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance; faith in Christ the Son of the living God; and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of the hands when eight years old, the sin be upon the head of the parents; for this shall be a law unto the inhabitants of Zion, or in any of her stakes which are organized; and their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old, and receive the laying on of the hands; and they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord.—Doctrine and Covenants 68: 4.

In passing we note that the age of responsibility was placed at eight years. It was stated that at that age if properly instructed children could understand religious ideas sufficiently to obey the gospel. It is significant that W. I. Thomas, a writer on psychological questions, says in the American Magazine, April, 1909, "At the age of perhaps eight the child's brain is practically all in; he is short only in experience and practice. He can understand any abstract principle and any piece of literature."

It will be remembered that in those days our free school system as we now have it did not exist. Schoolbooks were not written, printed, and on sale so freely as they are now. And the church, pioneer as it was in educational matters, was instructed to meet the situation as it then existed:

And again, you shall be ordained to assist my servant Oliver Cowdery to do the work of printing, and of selecting, and writing books for schools, in this church, that little children also may receive instruction before me as is pleasing unto me. And again, verily I say unto you, For this cause you shall take your journey with my servants Joseph Smith, jr., and Sidney Rigdon, that you may be planted in the land of your inheritance, to do this work.—Doctrine and Covenants 55: 2.

We have presented enough to convince anyone not blinded by prejudice that the attitude of the church toward education was misunderstood by the world at large. Their ideal was high. In fact we believe that they had the true and only safe theory of education, stated in the law quoted, "Seek learning even by study, and also by faith."

Faith divorced from study and intellectual effort soon becomes credulity and degenerates into superstition. Study divorced from faith heads directly toward atheism, the curse of colleges and universities to-day.

The ultimate aim of education was held by the church to be the discovery of truth. The breadth and liberality of that ideal may be understood by the church's definition of truth: "Truth is knowledge of things as they are, and as they were, and as they are to come."—Doctrine and Covenants 90: 4.

In other words he who understands things as they are, as they were, and as they are to be, is in possession of truth. That is the end and aim of education. Such an education can never be secured by study alone, as it involves things unseen, and learned only by revelation. Neither can it be secured by faith alone, because man is a reasoning being, and is required to reason and study.

In harmony with the above definition of truth we quote the following:

To the student of society present themselves the questions, What is? What has been? What tends to be? What may be? . . . The first two are tributary to the third. . . . We seek truth not merely for the pleasure of knowing, but in order to have a lamp to our feet,—Edward A. Ross, professor of sociology, in preface to Foundation of Sociology.

TO LIVE AT PEACE WITH ALL MEN.

The true follower of Christ is placed in a delicate and trying position. He is quite likely to be subjected to abuse and persecution; yet according to the tenor of his belief he can not retaliate in kind. He must follow the way of peace among those who are bent upon killing him.

Christ said, "They hated me without a cause. . . . If they have persecuted me they will also persecute you. . . . They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service."

He also said, "My kingdom is not of this world. If my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight. . . . When they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another."

Certainly the Saints of the early church knew what it was to be persecuted and hated without just cause. They may have erred in some particulars at times, but as a rule the conduct of the church was singularly free from retaliation. They were not permitted to dwell in peace in Ohio, Missouri, or Illinois.

In 1833 their enemies came upon them and drove them from Jackson County, Missouri. The Saints at that time suffered great hardship, with accompanying loss of life and property. One charge made against them at the time was set forth in a circular issued by the citizens, as follows:

It is more than two years since the first of these fanatics or knaves (for one or the other they undoubtedly are) made their first appearance amongst us, and pretending as they did and now do to hold personal communion and converse face to face with the most high God; to receive communications and revelations direct from heaven; to heal the sick by laying on hands; and, in short, to perform all the wonder-working miracles wrought by the inspired apostles and prophets of old.—Church History, vol. 1, pp. 313, 314.

In 1833 it was blasphemy for one to ask God for spiritual direction or physical healing and to believe that he would answer. To-day leaders of the Emmanuel Movement and many others, highly respected, are "blasphemers."

Fleeing as best they could from their abandoned and dismantled homes the Saints sought refuge in Clay County. There they were hospitably received and proceeded to settle upon their own purchased or rented farms and allotments. But in time their ancient enemies followed them up, determined to oust them from the State; and by various means succeeded in raising up a strong faction against them.

Matters reached such a stage that neutral and cool-headed members of the community felt that something should be done to avert bloodshed. They accordingly appointed a committee to confer with a committee to be appointed by the church. This committee advised the church in the interests of peace to withdraw from the county.

The committee attempted to formulate some of the reasons for the existing prejudice against the Saints. We italicize certain portions of their statement for the purpose of calling attention to particular reasons. It seems that (as is so often the case) the Saints were hated because they were "different." Established communities resent the introduction of new customs of speech and dress, and new ideas in religion and politics. Human nature is at best politely tolerant of ways and customs that are foreign. Americans despise the pigtailed Chinese; and the Chinese are no less contemptuous of American "foreign devils." The city bred man esteems the farmer an object of ridicule; when he strays into rural districts he is chagrined to find himself the recipient of like contempt. The Saints were newcomers in the West. They differed from their neighbors in dress, in speech, in politics, and above all in religion; and those differences were at the root of the trouble. We quote resolutions drawn up by the committee to which we have referred:

They are eastern men, whose manners, habits, customs, and even dialect are essentially different from our own; they are nonslaveholders, and opposed to slavery, which, in this peculiar period when abolition has reared its deformed and haggard visage on our land is well calculated to excite deep and abiding prejudices in any community where slavery is tolerated and practiced. In addition to all this they are charged, as they have heretofore been, with keeping up a constant communication with the Indian tribes on our frontier, with declaring, even from the pulpit, that the Indians are a part of God's chosen people, and are destined by heaven to inherit this land, in common with themselves.

We do not vouch for the correctness of these statements, but whether they are true or false, their effect has been the same in exciting our community. In times of greater tranquility such ridiculous remarks might well be regarded as the offspring of frenzied fanaticism; but at this time our defenseless situation on the frontier, the bloody disasters of our fellow-citizens in Florida and other parts of the South, all tend to make a portion of our citizens regard such sentiments with horror, if not alarm.

These and many other causes have combined to raise a prejudice against them, and a feeling of hostility, that the first spark may, and we deeply fear will, ignite into all the horrors and desolations of a civil war—the worst evil that can befall any country. We therefore feel it our duty to come forward as mediators and use every means in our power to prevent the occurrence of so great an evil.

As the most efficient means to arrest the evil, we urge on the Mormons to use every means to put an immediate stop to the emigration of their people to this country. We earnestly urge them to seek some other abiding place, where the manners, the habits and customs of the people will be more consonant with their own. . . .

The religious tenets of this people are so different from the present churches of the age that they always have and always will excite deep prejudices against them in any populous country where they may locate. We therefore, in a spirit of frank and friendly kindness, do advise them to seek a home where they may obtain large and separate bodies of land and have a community of their own.—Church History, vol. 2, pp. 58 to 60.

The committee added, "We do not contend that we have the least right, under the Constitution and laws of the country, to expel them by force."

Under the circumstances the Saints might have felt that they would be within their rights as citizens to stand their ground and defend their position by force, as they were admittedly occupying within their constitutional rights. But their ideal was to follow after peace; and at that critical time they were true to their ideal.

Under date of July 25, 1836, the First Presidency and others, to be exact, Joseph Smith, Sidney Rigdon, Oliver Cowdery, F. G. Williams, and Hyrum Smith, wrote from Kirtland to the Saints in Clay County, advising them as follows:

We forward you our letter to Mr. Thornton and others, that you may know all we have said. We advise that you be not the first aggressors. Give no occasion, and if the people will let you dispose of your property, settle your affairs, and go in peace, go. You have thus far held an asylum, and now seek another as God may direct. Relative to your going to Wisconsin, we can not say; we should think if you could stop short in peace, you had better. You know our feelings relative to not giving the first offense, and also in protecting your wives and little ones in case a mob should seek their lives. We shall publish the proceedings of the public meeting, with your answer, as well as our letter. We mean that the world shall know all things as they transpire. If we are persecuted and driven, men shall know it!

Be wise; let prudence dictate all your counsels; preserve peace with all men if possible: stand by the Constitution of your country; observe its principles, and above all show yourselves men of God, worthy citizens, and we doubt not [the] community ere long will do you justice and rise in indignation against those who are the instigators of your sufferings and affliction.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 73.

The Saints of Clay County had already adopted the course outlined in the above communication. At a meeting of the elders held in Clay County on the 1st day of July, 1833, this resolution was adopted:

Resolved, for the sake of friendship and to be in a covenant of peace with the citizens of Clay County, and the citizens of Clay County to be in a covenant of peace with us, notwithstanding the necessary loss of property and expense we incur in moving, we comply with the requisitions of their resolutions in leaving the county of Clay, as explained by the preamble accompanying same; and that we still use our exertions to have the church do the same; and that we will also exert ourselves to stop the tide of emigration of our people to this county.—Church History, vol. 2, p. 63.

Similar circumstances might be related at length, but this is representative. No one not blinded by prejudice will deny that this was a noble and Christ-like ideal nobly lived up to under great provocation to do otherwise. We believe that the ideal was quite consistently lived up to during all the early history of the church. Only in the most abject extremity did they attempt to defend themselves by force. When persecuted in one city they fled into another. Their kingdom not being of this world they did not fight. If at any time the ideal was forgotten for a time, it was because of human weakness, such as Peter betrayed when he provided himself with a carnal weapon and used it. If the Saints retaliated in kind at any time, it was the exception and not the rule. You, gentle reader, under similar conditions might have done much worse.

MISSIONARY WORK IN MEXICO.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—The following letter from Apostle F. M. Sheehy will be read with considerable interest, especially that part outlining his experiences in Mexico. Referring to the letter from the Utah Mormon bishop who declined to permit Brother Sheehy the use of his church, owing to "instructions from headquarters," and his attempt to justify such refusal on the ground that our elders had abused their privileges when granted the use of such buildings, we will say that it is merely necessary to remember that when Elder E. C. Briggs first went to Utah, during the presidency of Brigham Young, he was emphatically refused privileges to preach in any Mormon meetinghouse in the Territory. That was before our elders had preached a sermon in Utah. The refusal has been continued with few exceptions until the present time. It is not based on fear of our abuse, but on fear of the truth, as is shown by the fact that Utah elders have repeatedly used our meetinghouse at Lamoni, where they have no following to lose. To accept such favors and then refuse to reciprocate in kind is despicable:

HACIENDA DE AUGUA DULCE, MEXICO, Feb. 25, 1910.

Dear Herald: You have so little news from this southwestern country, I thought it might be of interest to you to hear from us. I did not get into the field until late this year, owing to the need of my presence in Maine. You have already published the reason in your obituary column. Any further reference I refrain from, it being one of the things of our life that do not belong to the public gaze, being a sanctum sanctorum in variety. I arrived in Denver in October, where I found Brothers Scott and Bullard busy. Meetings were being held in the homes of Brothers Burnett and Bartlett. So much engaging the time and attention of people in city life, not many attending. The move in Denver to build a new chapel was in concrete form under the supervision of Bro. E. F. Shupe, whom we thought well to excuse from more direct missionary work for the time being. Much credit is due to the energy of the committee, sustained by the Saints of Denver. They are now occupying the new chapel, having recently moved in. Bro. R. Bullard has been laboring there during the winter. Denver will doubtless continue to be an important point for the church in Colorado.

At Colorado Springs a movement was alive to either enlarge their building or build a new one. Prospects seem bright for them there. They have plenty of local talent, as Brethren Russell, Morgan, Clark, and Harris are among their laborers.

Receiving word of the illness of Brother Pender, I hastened to Phoenix, Arizona. Found Brother Pender changed for the better. Bro. T. W. Williams had been summoned from Los Angeles to administer to him the gospel ordinance for the sick. I spent some weeks in Phoenix keeping up the appointments on the plaza for Brother Pender, except those in Spanish.

I was attacked during the work there by Prof. O. A. Phelps, which resulted in a joint debate on the subject of the divinity of the Bible. We held it in a hall run by the Socialists, where we also hold our Sunday services. Thirty-six speeches were devoted to the subject. The professor was very prolific in the "turkey buzzard" method. I noticed he had a book, sort of an encyclopedia, matter culled from skeptical and infidel authors; but unfortunately for them, while in debate, they leave out important and explanatory contexts. The Inspired Version is an unlooked-for arsenal they are not prepared for, which gives us a flank movement they never recover from. It has been my pleasure to meet several infidels in public debates. I am now in the mood of retreat. While standing in the defense of the Christ one senses his sayings to the disciples returned from missionary tour, "Did you lack anything?" The answer, "No, Lord," is still ours in its fullness, when not forfeited by unfaithfulness on our part.

During my stay at Phoenix I took a trip to Mesa, not far from Phoenix, where there is a colony of Utah Mormons, and a stake organization. I applied to J. T. Lesueur, president of the Maricopa Stake, who cordially received me but had to refer the matter to the bishop for the use of the building to hold meetings in. I found the bishop on his ranch, a few miles out of the village, who could not give me a decided answer without consultation with his counselors. The inclosed letter is his final answer:

"MESA, ARIZONA, November 24, 1909.

"MR. F. M. SHEEHY,

"Phoenix, Arizona.

"Dear Sir: Owing to instructions from headquarters we can not allow you the use of our building to preach in.

"I am sorry that such a ruling has been made, but it resulted from the slanderous attacks that the ministry of your faith have continuously made against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, when we did open our buildings to you, so that your ministry is to blame for the condition.

"Wishing you well however,

"I am sincerely yours,

"J. M. HORNE,

"Bishop of Mesa Ward."

This is the common subterfuge now in vogue, and always peculiar to those who fear light and investigation. The men of that church are generally genial in manner as far as personal contact goes, but the binding, depressing effect of priestly domination asserts itself. "Time tries all," and will also do its work among that people; just how is the query.

At Phoenix there is a large Indian school under the auspices of Uncle Sam, where children from the various tribes of that section are educating, thus fitting the descendant of Laman for blessings pronounced upon him by Lehi: "Wherefore, because of my blessing, the Lord God will not suffer that ye shall perish; wherefore, he will be merciful unto you and unto your seed for ever."—Book of Mormon, page 91, paragraph 13.

The angel's message to the Seer and favor to the descendants of Abraham, including the remnants of Joseph, on this land, are cotemporaneous events. The raising of the flag of revolution in Mexico against the enslavement of the Lamanites by Spain, first by Hidalgo, then continued by Juarez, and still maintained by Diaz, are to be noted. "I am God and change not, therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed," applies as well to the sons of Lehi as to those of Judah, and the evidence of that preservation is just as remarkable. The suppression of the Mexicans by Cortez aided by the clergy of the Catholic Church, kept them in mental and physical servitude for over three centuries, even to-day two thirds of the natives of Mexico are in the peon class. Nevertheless, when time was ripe for the yoke to be lifted, it was the Indian that was ready for the emergency. It is a remarkable fact that the man who led Mexico on to victory, and to whom monuments are erected all over the republic to-day, was none other than a full-blooded Lamanite, Benito Juarez, who had become minister of justice, president of the supreme court, vice-president, and finally president of the republic, successively. While in the latter office, he withstood the invasion of his country by foreign foes, English, Spanish, and French, as also the potent power of the church within. Few men in history have so noble a record as this son of Lehi. People sometimes overlook the fact that Lehi's posterity are not all to be counted in the nomadic Indians of North America. His best representative is found elsewhere, as in Southland, where he is struggling against great odds, and steadily maintaining his upward march towards liberty and enlightenment. I offer the following extract as evidence in point:

"The careful student of Mexican history and of her population, while he will be forced to allow the disastrous consequences of the social and political system prevailing there for the past three centuries, will nevertheless discover to his satisfaction that comparatively few of the ills from which that country suffers and has suffered are to be traced to the native defects of the native races. On the contrary, he is likely to conclude that few peoples could have submitted for three centuries to a despotism so complete, and so ingenuously detrimental to national character, and have emerged so creditably as have the Mexican. The vitality, physically, intellectually, and morally, of a people who after this long enslavement were able to rise up and break the bonds that had held them, and who, through a whole century of stubborn fidelity to liberty, have kept on with their disheartening tasks of the shaking off of successive series of shackles, is itself the bow of promise to the future."—A New Era in Old Mexico, Winton, p. 140.

Referring to the full-blood Indian, he says: "This stock has exhibited, and still exhibits, every element which goes to make up the best there is in humanity. In view of the oppression and degradation which the Spaniard deliberately inflicted upon the Indian in the earlier centuries of their contact with them, it is scarcely short of marvelous that the native stock should have shown so much of a vitality, both in number and in producing its proportionate share of great men in Mexican history."—Ibid., p. 24.

The time is opportune for the gospel to go to him, more so than at any time since the restoration. The public school system of Mexico is doing its work in that direction. A goodly number of the younger people are having their minds fitted thereby to receive the gospel. The Protestant sects have been at work there. The following is an extract from a sermon by Doctor Cox, presiding elder of the City of Mexico district of the Methodist Church, South: "We now have three annual conferences in the Mexican work, employing about eighty native ministers, and about twenty male missionaries, and like number under the auspices of the womans'-board of missions. We have eleven schools, in which there are more than three thousand students. One of the largest mission schools in the world is under the auspices of our church at Chihuahua. We have graduated from one of our schools four daughters of one of the governors of one of the States. We have one hospital fairly equipped, located at Monterey, which is doing splendid work, treating in its dispensary and hospital work about ten thousand patients per annum."

The work of the Protestant churches in getting an interest aroused in the native's mind to read the Bible as against the influence of the dominant church that tries to prevent the laity from doing so is commendable. Among the needs now are missionaries able to preach in Spanish. Bro. W. S. Pender has become proficient enough so that he is preaching in Spanish on the plaza, Sundays, at Phoenix. Brother Manner and wife, now at San Antonio, Texas, are also studying Spanish, and are at work among the Spanish speaking people of that section, preparatory for work in Mexico. Brother Pender has written some tracts in Spanish, which will be necessary there. To send these two men and their wives, who are also getting proficient in the language, to act as aids to their husbands, into Mexico will be a proper move. As young men come into the gospel among the natives some can be sent to Graceland and be prepared by the influence and environment there to become missionaries to their own people. It is now a recognized fact that the young Mexican who becomes a preacher is more effectual among his own people than those of a foreign tongue.

INDIANS ASK FOR MISSIONARIES.

Perhaps La Push is the only village of its size that has no Protestant Church of any denomination. The only church we ever go to is the Shaker Church which is said to be of Indian origin, but no Bible or Sunday school lessons are introduced. Not a single missionary has ever been sent here to make an attempt to Christianize the Quileutes. To pray in a far-away spot is common thing among these Indians. They believe in God and the Son, Jesus the Christ.

A visitor will come in the Shaker Church and look upon it as foolishness, but to the members it is a blessing. They say they do not pray to any false god, but to whom our white brothers call Jesus. They claim that their power to shake is given from above which forms the part of their worship. When a person dies they pray for her or him. Every year since the church here was established there are always several to become aggressive in the religion; there have been many who were given a power to pray regardless of what others say. There have been several each year to join the congregation.

Do we need a church? Will it be a detriment to our willingness to advance in the higher stage of the so-called civilization? We always wished to have a church. No one here, who is not a Shaker, professes to be a Christian, but each one who is able to read and sing will certainly attend Sunday school and church services. Will there be anyone from the civilized world, who will volunteer to preach the gospel to the aboriginals in this locality? They are perfectly harmless; they are no more in the stage of barbarism and believe that a church will not harm them.

When Mr. A. W. Smith, now justice of the peace, of Mora, was in charge of the school in this village, he demanded a church, thereby, quite few of the so-called leading men contributed certain sums of money and expressed their willingness to help along the work. The very same spirit of a Quileute Indian could be realized if any step toward making a church is undertaken.—Quileute Chieftain, (La Push, Washington), January 26, 1910.

THE MAGAZINE NUMBER.

"AMBOY TO INDEPENDENCE."

In the advertising section of the present number there will be found an advertisement of the Magazine Number. In connection with the advertisement are coupons that may be clipped in order to facilitate the ordering of extra copies. This is about the last chance to order extra copies of this special number. All orders should be in before April 1.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The Independence section of our Magazine Number will be of general interest to the church at large and of especial interest to Independence Saints. The first articles in this section outlines the founding of the church in Jackson County, Missouri, and the expulsion. The second article, written by the Independence Stake Historian, Mrs. J. C. Nunn, deals with "the return," and gives a history of the Independence Stake and Branch. The third article is a brief history of Zion's Ensign by its former editor, W. H. Garrett. The fourth article, by Elder Joseph Luff, is on the Sanitarium. Note coupons and advertisement of the Magazine Number in the back of this issue.

"We are tiny little creatures, finite beings, living in the midst of the infinite. We can not understand what is infinite. The simplest cosmic truth is utterly beyond our grasp. But we know that we are a part of the infinite. We know that eternal justice and mercy govern us and direct us. We know that the normal desires planted within us are destined to be gratified. And no normal man believes that the intense longing for immortality is doomed to disappointment."

"The first strokes of the artist are not wasted, even if they are erased. The first tests of the chemist are seldom correct, but they tell him what proportions need not thereafter be considered, and thus narrow down the feasible formula out of which the correct combinations can be more easily reached."

OUR REASONABLE SERVICE.

In writing to the Saints of Rome the Apostle Paul gave utterance to these words: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—Romans 12: 1.

We find herein several thoughts suggested and will try to notice some of them in this brief article. First, let it be observed that the apostle is speaking to those within the church and by the mercies of God that they are already possessors of, he appeals to them trying to impress upon their minds the need of more perfectly consecrating their lives to God, and that their reasonable service is the presenting of themselves to God, or in other words conforming to the law of the gospel in their service.

Since that is true, let us pause for a moment and ask ourselves what is required of us, and then notice that the apostle says to "present ourselves a living sacrifice." The question may be asked, How can I do this? How is it possible for me to become a sacrifice and yet live? And it may be answered in this way, By living for others. Let us here consider that the great sacrifice of the Christ was not so much in his dying for us as in his living for us. He lived a life of true brotherhood. His love went out continually for man, and in every word that he uttered was found the essence of true life. He said, "It is my meat and my drink to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." So he moved along in discharge of duty, looking at the glory he might add to God and the good he might bring to his fellow-men, and by the life of service and sacrifice that he lived, we as Saints in these latter days are permitted to enjoy the blessings of peace through the gospel, therefore (because Christ has lived for us) we ought also to live for mankind.

Sometimes we think the pressure is too great and we are unable to make sacrifice for others when they apparently do not seem to appreciate it, but we should also remember that "Christ died for the ungodly."

But the presenting of ourselves a living sacrifice is what we want to consider, and sometimes we think that we can sacrifice in our way and it will do just as well as if we do it in the Lord's way. You know Cain had this idea when he offered sacrifice, but the Lord did not approve of it,—his sacrifice was not acceptable. His brother Abel's sacrifice was acceptable because he presented it in keeping with the commandment of God, so we herein discover that to be able to render reasonable service to God we must do it in keeping with the law that he has given us, no matter what our station in life or in the church may be.

If God has blessed us with this world's goods we are expected to impart of them according to the law for the good of others. If we are blessed with learning we are required to use it for the good of the work. If we are in the common walks of life and have neither wealth nor learning we can at least present our life an example worthy of all acceptation, that by our deeds of love and virtue we might win souls to Christ. If we are called to the ministry our reasonable service is to find out our duty and labor in the office wherein we are called, and that gracefully; not because it is a duty imposed upon us, but because it is a pleasure to serve our fellow-men and in serving them we serve God. If there is any reward to be given in this work it is for the cheerful worker, the one who works because he desires to bless others, and not because it is a duty which he can not shirk.

The apostle in writing to the Saints of Corinth gave expression to the thought in these words: "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of: for necessity is laid upon; yea, woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel! For if I do this thing willingly, I have a reward; but if against my will, a dispensation of the gospel is committed unto me. What is my reward then? Verily that, when I preach the gospel, I may make the gospel of Christ without charge, that I abuse not my power in the gospel. For though I be free from all men yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more."—1 Corinthians 9: 16.

Herein then is our "reasonable service" made manifest, that we labor and sacrifice because we desire from the heart to assist others in gaining even more than we have attained to. And if I as a minister for Christ should have in view any motive other than the blessing of mankind and the glory of God, I am not rendering a reasonable service. The spirit that should actuate all (whether laity or ministry) is that of true sacrifice, to make sacrifice because we love God and have the welfare of our fellow-creatures at heart.

May God aid us to that end that we may all render to him a reasonable service, the fruits of which is righteousness and true holiness.

Hopefully,

J. E. VANDERWOOD.

THEOSOPHY.—NO. 2.

In the former paper we endeavored to make it clear that Theosophy first tries to correlate and unify all religions, and so takes into consideration all the sacred books. Special stress, however, is given to the Vedas, Puranas, and other works of India. Yet no one of these nor all are the basis of the theosophical teachings, but they claim the existence of secret records containing a primeval revelation. The contents of these secret books can only be learned through repeated initiation. And if this initiation is continued sufficiently long, a thing impossible for one mortal life, superior beings whom we may designate as God or as gods may be seen. This course of study and of preparation requires the separation from the physical desires and the development of the spiritual and altruistic in man, since he gains little by little that dominion over nature which makes it possible to raise the dead to life, to walk upon the waters, to say to the mountains, Be thou removed. Such dominion over spiritual things and forces can not be entrusted to any save those who are absolutely pure. Such powers used for selfish ends would simply mean black magic. Hence these things can not be made known generally, since to do so would be to bring about the destruction of the world, as has already happened once to the people of Atlantis and the Lemureans.

The study is so difficult there would be no danger of the mass of people pursuing it. It is only those of intellectual strength who could possibly follow it at all. So far as that part would be concerned the population would be safe, since the ignorant could not and would not understand. But there are intellectual giants who are not spiritually strong. Therein lies the danger. Hence the necessity for protection from vulgar eyes, and hence it is only after long preparation and proof of moral worth, that even the lesser part of the mysteries may be made known in this age. The time will come, however, when every man will be clairvoyant, when every eye shall see and every ear shall hear; but that time is not yet.

COSMOLOGY.

This subdivision might also be called theology, as it has to do with the divine. Theosophites do not believe in an anthropomorphic God. They believe in a supreme being who is not a being at all, but rather "Beness," who is neither male nor female, nor both, nor neither, but rather clarified as IT, THAT, the Limitless, the Unknowable. IT is in you and me, it is everywhere, Infinite, it is all things, yet no thing, still it is not nothing. It is nihil, still not annihilation; it is the incomprehensible; the Causeless Cause. It is not conscious, but it is Consciousness. In a few brief words no man knows anything at all about it, nor can he possibly comprehend or understand it. Nor can That appreciate or feel for man, before he returns in accordance with infinite law. That entity, which is the divine essence in man, reaches its height and fullest culmination only when it returns to "the Day of Be-with-Us," in which all things become one with the Infinite. This Causeless Cause is before all things, and within it, and from it there emanates or becomes the First Great Cause, the Unmanifested Logos; from the Unmanifested

Logos there evolves the Manifested Logos. Then comes the Demi-Urgos and all the different ranks and orders of holy beings from gods, archangels, angels, down to man. While there is this spiritual development, matter also becomes a factor of motion. The Causeless Cause is the only thing that is; all other things are Maya, or illusion. When the Spirit moves upon the great deep of matter there comes forth living things. There are ages then on ages, all involving the wonderful number seven; circles within circles and circles upon circles, but when all strike four then is the utmost of matter accomplished, and there begins the return to the One. It is the extreme of the descent into matter. Every star has its seven manifestations, its seven rounds to each turn of manifestations, its seven races to each round, and seven subraces to each race. But when all are four, then begins the return to the seventh, which is also the first. But there is this difference, however, because the returning entity carries with it the sum and essence of all its experience in the descent into and ascent out of matter. The day of Brahm is 4,320,000,000 years; 360 days and nights make a year of Brahm; 100 years of Brahm are an age of Brahm; for every day there is a night, for every age of activity an age of passivity or inaction. All things as they once emanated, all the manifested lives return back into space and back into the One Causeless Cause. Then for a like period, as there has been activity, all things abide passively in the One. Therefore is that the only real, since things pass. Some may be for a day, some for a trillion years, still at last to one and all come changes, save only to the Causeless Cause.

All things, which appear to be, are only aspects and manifestations of the one real and Unchangeable. It breathes forth and all things in turn become; it inspires or breathes in and all things return. As to that entity, which enters the individual, it is not yet clearly defined exactly what will be that state in "The Day of Be-with-Us." It is stated that each entity, while as before it was part of God, has now become God itself, and differs so that the end of the seventh differs from the beginning of the first, in the whole round of experiences gained in existence and in the flower of all, that has been gained from contact, association, amalgamation for a time with matter.

ANTHROPOMOLOGY.

This Earth has also its seven manifestations; the Moon is the mother of the Earth and is now approaching its last stages. The Earth is in the middle round and is about to ascend. There have been many races through long ages upon this Earth; the first race appeared when the Earth was too ephemeral for any such existence as now appears. Man of that time was of air, spiritual, and sexual, but the "Ghost" of his present self. Still these beings were of enormous stature compared to man of today. No language was spoken, but things were understood; the race was continued by fission or division. This continues for a very long period, for they were all gradually changed from the middle of the race towards the second race; and as we have suggested, each race divided into subraces, the fourth race of any round partakes of the characteristics of the fourth round, though in a lesser degree; the fifth subrace of any race partakes of the characteristics of the fifth race, though in a lesser degree. Those characteristics, which belong to say the third round, will reach their fullest manifestation in the third subrace of the third race of the third round, but still through the first race there is a gradual permutation towards the second race; the first race is the self-born astral shadows, having no understanding; the second race is the sweat-born or boneless. They are egg shaped and sexless. The race is continued by budding, i. e., a small portion of the parent swells out of the surface and finally parting company grows to the size of the original organism. The second race was a slight understanding and could speak formless sounds; after a long age they developed the third race. The latter part of the second and third races and the early part of the third is intermediate hermaphroditism. We have an instance of this in worms and snails and in some plants. It is closely allied to budding. But men became too powerful in the third race, so that the rulers of Karma caused them to divide, male and female, and they one became two. Man will not be a perfect septuanarian being till the seventh race of the seventh round. This, however, is the beginning in the latter third race of true sexual union; and the later method was the fall or descent from the pure spiritual. This matter of the fall is variously discussed and a variety of opinions advanced. So far as the Theosophists are concerned, their clearest view would be, that the fall is a cloak of the great mystery of the descent of the Spirit into Matter, and the later re-ascent of Spirit to God; that none of the early part of Genesis is historical, but is only a cloak for the great truths of the secret wisdom.

Jehovah, according to the writings of the Theosophists, is the type of man and woman. They translate, "I have a man even Jod heva," not, "I have a man from the Lord." So are other names but types and ideas and not historical. Again Jehovah is made one of the lesser deities concerned in part with others in the creation, one of the workmen on the building, but not even the Architect, let alone the Causeless Cause, or even the Master. Again he is made only the emblem and protector of the Hebrew race in Phallic worship. Jehovah and the other of the Elohim created man, but designed to keep him ignorant. Lucifer is the light from God and gave man the divine wisdom. Lucifer is the type of Theosophy, the serpent of Eden, is its emblem, the serpent of wisdom. Lucifer is a rebel against Jehovah, but not against the Causeless Cause nor the Logos, whose will he is carrying out. Lucifer is the brother of the Logos, and comes from the higher councils, with which Jehovah has nothing to do. He personifies those who cling to the spiritual rather than to the physical realm. Jehovah is the god of the physical. But not only is the serpent of Eden the type of Theosophy, but also the great dragon of Revelation, which is also the serpent of wisdom,—the whole writing being under a veil lest man should understand, and is only to be explained to the initiated. The Devil is only God inverted. But Lucifer is not the Devil, but is rather the Divine Wisdom of the Son of the Morning. Hence we have one of the leading papers of Theosophy called Lucifer. This gives but a faint idea of the extent to which Lucifer is eulogized and the manner in which Jehovah is ridiculed. To do this, many constructions are placed on the biblical texts, which are somewhat far-fetched; and much reference is made to purported Hebrew writings of antiquity. The Bible clearly indicates, that the Jews went astray after heathen gods and picked up many strange and peculiar ideas, but in such writings as these, everything that was ever taught or believed by a Jew is taken as explaining the character and nature of Jehovah. We do not doubt many of the Jews went after such teachings as the above, and caused their children to pass through the fire; but that such is the teaching of Moses or of the prophets we do not believe.

The fourth race reaches the limit of the physical, and the spiritual has then descended to the utmost into matter. Languages now become articulate and there is a nearer approach to conditions of to-day. But some of these earlier race have abused the divine knowledge, hence follows their destruction. Enoch is but a type and name for those who through initiation had become the "friends of God." Moses, Abraham, Solomon, Paul, John, Jesus of Nazareth, and others had become initiates.

Most races of antiquity had a ceremony of initiation; part of the ceremony was public and for all the people. But there followed a period of preparation, and then preparation and entrance into the first initiation. In the first, some knowledge was given from whence man came; such was the character of the instructions and lectures. In the second, initiation what man is. In the third, what man shall become. This in most of them ended the initiation. In fact it was much for man to accomplish and to retain this much, and in many cases even this has sunk into the barren form. In the original initiation of the third degree the candidate took the place of the one put to die; he was in many instances bound on a cross. He was placed in a state of hypnosis and then his body placed in a tomb or sepulcher, where it remained three days and three nights, the initiator remaining with him. If he were worthy, the initiator was able to give him a view of the superior being. Some, not being sufficiently prepared, returned from this initiation with intelligence lost; to others it meant the loss of life; others failed to see its significance. It is only the pure and worthy who could or can receive and abide in the lesson.

At some other time it might be of interest to go more fully into these ceremonies of initiation, and how severe a test they were. In many instances the candidate had to seal his covenant with blood, though later this became a form and sample, and is doubtless now a veil for a secret meaning. But he took within his hand the emblem of death and offered himself or, it might be, the initiator as a sacrifice. Many passages infer that this action was actually carried out and that it meant physical death; but of this we still have much doubt. However, in reality there were seven degrees, and a man who had completed the Path then walked and talked with God. Such were called the "friends of God," but they were very few. Such, however, were Enoch, Abraham, and Moses. (The above is very interesting as a tradition.) At one time it was possible for a man to so purify himself. Some men have talked with the Divine. We do not understand that any of the society claim any such vision now, but only that it is possible in time to take such an initiation. Furthermore, as the race draws near its end, all mankind will have this privilege and will see and know; but to those who do not use the knowledge wisely it will mean destruction, it will mean the left hand instead of the right; it will mean sorcery. To such nothing is safe from its place, though their power is limited by the sons of God; over the pure in heart they can never have any dominion.

If God gives me work to do, I will thank him that he has bestowed upon me a strong arm; if he gives me danger to brave, I will bless him that he has not made me without courage; but I will go down on my knees and beseech him to fit me for my task, if he tells me it is only to stand and wait.—Jean Ingelow.

It is unnatural to sleep in the light. A light carried into the bedroom at midnight will waken the sleeper. So it is unnatural for one to sleep spiritually and intellectually in the light of truth. Flash the light of truth upon the sleeper, and he will open his eyes and begin to look about and try to offer an apology for having slept.—Epworth Era.

A MAN'S PRICE.

"Every man has his price," said a cynical college student to a young professor.

He waited for a reply, and as the instructor said nothing, he asked, "Don't you think so?"

"If I did think so, I should hate to admit it," said the professor. "I could not very well accept that theory for all men without conceding it for myself.

"You remember the old fallacy concerning the Cretan who said, 'All Cretans are liars. If all Cretans are liars, this Cretan is a liar; but if he is a liar, he is not to be believed when he says, 'All Cretans are liars.' But if he speaks falsely, and Cretans are not all liars, perhaps this Cretan is not a liar.'

"If I say, 'Every man has his price,' I may not be entirely right about all other men, but I have made a dangerous admission concerning myself."

"I wasn't exactly yearning for a review in logic," said the student. "I'd just like to know what you think of it as a practical proposition. Isn't the real difference between what we call a good man and what we call a bad man a difference in price?"

"I will answer you seriously, and I will say I do not think that is the whole difference. It may be a part of the difference. You and I, who have never had to face the terrible temptations that have overwhelmed some other men, may well judge them with charity, and pray to God that we may not be led into temptation. For as every stick or beam has its theoretical breaking-point, as you have learned in your study of physics, so I suppose there is not a man of us who has not a point of weakness at which, if tempted above measure, he would yield. In that sense it may be true—probably is true—that every man has his price."

"That was what I meant," said the student.

"I don't think it was," said his teacher. "I am sure I do not mean what I think you meant, nor what is commonly meant when it is said that every man has his price. I thank God that I have known men who held honor above all price, and who, in spite of human weakness, would have died before they would have betrayed a trust."

"It seems to me you contradict yourself," said the younger man.

"I do not think so," said his teacher. "I have conceded the theoretical breaking point of every man's resolution, but I have not conceded that it will break, or that it does break. Very many times—oftener than not—it does not break.

"I have trusted many men, and few have betrayed me. Although more of them might have betrayed me if tempted inordinately, still I do not think most of them held their trust at a price. This is my own confidence in myself, and in most men about me, that I am not holding myself for a price. And I have one other confidence, namely, that no man can set that price but myself."

"Doesn't the man who offers the price set it?"

"He does not. The man who prays to God to be kept from temptation, and who goes steadily about his duty, not valuing his honor in terms of anything marketable, is to all intents and purposes above all price. He ranks among the great and unpurchasable things of life, the love of God, the grace of Christ, the sacrifice of mother-love, the glory of integrity. And if he sells anything it is not honor, but himself.

"Still as of old,

Man by himself is priced;

For thirty pieces Judas sold Himself—not Christ!"

"And so I don't believe that all men have their price. I don't want to believe it of myself or of my neighbors. I still believe that Satan lies, and that it is not true of Job nor of a good many men that 'All that a man hath will he give for his life,' nor yet for the things of life.

"Love and honor and duty are above all price, and I believe a good many men hold them so. I hope always to believe this, and I want to be one of those men."—Youth's Companion.

Dear Sisters: Although never having written for the "Column," still I have often thought I would like to do so, but feeling my inability I have let the opportunities pass, from time to time. I have read the many good articles by the sisters and know that most subjects have been treated by much abler pens than mine, but the older I grow, and the more I watch the tendency of the youth of the church, and especially those whom the isolated young members of the church have to associate with, toward vanity and other evils, namely, prevaricating, or "stretching" the truth, my heart turns cold within me to think of the dreadful consequences of such a habit, the many years of hard struggle to the conscientious to win back the confidence which they have lost. I have often thought that the parents, many times unknown to themselves, were to blame for this habit in their children. Many an imaginative child will, in its innocent play, imagine it has things which it has not, and tells its playmates, and even its parents, of these things, repeating them over and over until it makes itself almost believe they are really true.

I have in mind a little boy of about four years of age who would go out-of-doors in the summer time where his father was planting potatoes. He would stay and play quite awhile, and in coming indoors would have a long story to tell of his "boys" he had out "planting potatoes." He had ten or fifteen acres of potatoes, just as he happened to tell it, and he kept it up all summer telling about his "boys" and his "potatoes."

His mother would reprove him for telling stories that were not true, but his father would say, "Oh, let him alone. He enjoys himself telling those stories. He will soon forget all about it." But he did not forget the habit of telling untruths, and to-day his parents can not believe one thing he tells unless they know themselves that it is true.

So, mothers, and fathers too, watch the little ones, and do not let one falsehood go unreprieved, for in after years the seed thus sown may yield a harvest of sorrow which it will be bitter grief to gather.

We mothers had better be remiss with our work than to neglect the molding and morals of our children while they are the age to mold into grand and good men and women for God and the carrying on of his work, when the ones who are now working for him are through with this life.

Requests for Prayer.

TOLEDO, WASHINGTON, March 8, 1910.

Editors Herald: Will you please ask the Prayer Union, through your columns, to pray for my uncle, Elder P. W. Premo, who is sick with rheumatism in his back and leg, almost to the point of death, it seems, that if it is God's will he may receive relief and cure. He may be over this attack before you have time to act upon this letter, but unless God gives relief, will soon be prostrated with another.

Your sister in Christ,

Dear Saints: I would like to ask those who can to fast and pray on the first Sunday forenoon of April for my hearing to be restored. I have a roaring sensation in my head and my hearing is failing me, especially in my right ear. I will also be administered to on that day.

MACHIAS, NEW YORK, March 7, 1910.

Dear Herald: In the letters in a recent HERALD, I find one on keeping the Sabbath. Now that makes me think away down deep. I was always taught to attend Sunday school and preaching services and prayer and testimony meetings on Sunday. Now the question that arises in my mind is, If I live from five to fifteen miles from the place of worship, how am I to get to it? Walk, did you say? Now as a farmer I work six days of the week, walking from sunrise to sunset. The command is, "Six days shalt thou work, but the seventh thou shalt rest." How shall I rest and go to the services? If I walk five miles to meeting and five back, that is ten miles, and a little work for shank's horses. (Matthew 12: 10-14.) Jesus healed a withered hand for a man on the Sabbath, and read what he said about the sheep in a pit.

I have driven fifteen miles to meeting and have felt blessed in so doing. It was one of three things, walk, drive, or stay at home. Which should I do? I drove, and would do it again if I were placed in like condition; and I do not believe that God would punish me for so doing. I have driven miles for and with ministers on the Lord's day. Will I be punished for a good deed? They could not have met appointments otherwise. I have seen Saints administered to on the Lord's day and healed. Was that against the Master's will? Judge for yourself. How would our brother do if he were placed in like circumstances, would he work his beast or would he stay at home and not attend services?

We are isolated from any branch so far as I know. If Bro. H. O. Smith sees this, I wish he would write us at the above-named place.

Yours in the truth,

J. N. BALDWIN.

CLINTON, IOWA, February 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: I feel it a duty as well as a privilege to write to our valuable paper. I have taken it a number of years and it has always brought such comforting news; such news as can not be obtained elsewhere. When we read some of the lovely articles and letters we can feel the sweet influence of the Spirit of God accompanying the same. I have been impressed many times that I should write some of my experiences. I have not had the same kind of experiences in coming in contact with this glorious gospel that some have had through coming in contact with their relations or loved ones, as none of my relatives have accepted the restored gospel that I know of.

It was eleven years ago that I accepted the gospel, having heard God's untiring servants proclaim it with power, the Holy Ghost, and much assurance, and not in word only. Like the rest of the world, I was ignorant; I thought there was only the Utah Latter Day Saints, or Mormons as they are termed. I was going with a young lady, now my wife; she was not then a member, but is now, and her parents were both Saints. Through her untiring effort, I would accompany her to church, and I would advise our young people to do likewise. We are told that when the sinner repents and enters the fold there is rejoicing in heaven. It was not long before I was convinced that this was God's church, although it was hard for me to give up the old man and his deeds. I had become so steeped in sin that it was hard for me to give up my evil habits, such as drink, tobacco, swearing, etc. I smoked as many as ten cigars a day, but finally quit. Some say it makes them sick to quit. Don't you think it made me sick! I am not saying this to boast, but there is no evil habit that we can not repent of, for that is why Jesus said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." I do not set myself up as perfect but I am trying to be perfect, and that is what every-one should do.

Bro. J. C. Crabb baptized wife, Streley, and myself. Obstacles seemed to come before me in my efforts to serve God, and yet I can see that God's hand was leading me; but Satan was trying to overcome me. Now after eleven years of experience I can bear my testimony that if we will only trust God all things are possible.

I will relate a dream or vision: After I had been elected president of the Clinton Branch, I became somewhat down-hearted and discouraged because of conditions. When I retired I kneeled and asked God to strengthen me for the work, that I might stand steadfast in the faith, and true to God's word, he showed me his great love, and as I lifted my eyes heavenward I saw letters of fire and Jesus standing near them. The letters read, "Little flock," and then all passed away. In the morning I wondered what it all meant, and immediately the Spirit bore witness to that passage of scripture which says, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good will to give you the kingdom." That was very comforting to know that he was pleased with us as a branch of the church, and that this is his church. God has demonstrated his powers many times to me in administering to the sick, not only in my own family, but among many of the Saints. It causes my heart to rejoice.

Our branch is doing fine; some of God's people are moving in here and some are investigating our claims. We purchased a church building four years ago on payment of four hundred dollars down and the rest in fifty dollar installments. The property cost one thousand dollars, but since we purchased the property, real estate has gone up and we would not sell now for twenty-five hundred.

Your brother in gospel bonds,

EIGHTH AVENUE.

E. W. VOELPEL.

CORBIN, MONTANA, February 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: As I am still one of the isolated ones, and as the intolerable loneliness seizes me with a grasp almost unbearable, my first effort for relief is at the throne of grace which I can truly say always brings a sense of relief; but not so complete and full as the association of kindred minds, raised with one purpose to the fountain head of all righteousness. We were greatly refreshed and strengthened by the presence of Bro. Isaac M. Smith, who preached for us once and administered the sacramental emblems, to my wife and self. We rejoice that we have been permitted, even in so small a measure, a part in this great work of the Lord.

ISAIAH M. DUNGAN.

PITTSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA, February 21, 1910.

Dear Herald: In a recent issue of the HERALD there is a letter from Glen Easton, West Virginia, criticising the letter that I wrote to the HERALD some time ago. The writer claims that I made some very derogatory observations of their hills, etc., and says they were "stung." I have read over my article carefully again, and though I wrote it carefully, (as the editor says, I wrote him that I wanted it all to go, as there was nothing objectionable in it). I still think the letter was decidedly complimentary, and not derogatory, as the writer from Glen Easton claims. I wrote in an encouraging way of all the branches in the district and made no exception to Glen Easton. Why should I? I have always been kindly treated there and considered all my personal friends. Let us analyze the objected part and see what are the facts.

I cut a joke about the Arkansas hills out of the Saturday Evening Post, and used the clipping as an introduction to the subject of hills. I showed that clipping to one of the officers of the Glen Easton Branch, and he laughed heartily over the matter. That is just what I thought everyone would do. They joke about those glorious hills themselves. And on a clear morning they are glorious, and at sunset they are a sight to behold. Here is one of their jokes. "Brother Miller, when we buy one acre of ground out here, we get two acres, one on each side of the hill!" How did I know somebody was sensitive about the hills? I do not believe that is the reason for the criticism, however.

"A little nonsense, now and then,
Is relished by the best of men."

After introducing the subject of hills with this clipping, I said: "The Glen Easton brethren have mastered those hills and compelled them to yield a good living for them." Is that complimentary or not? Then I said the Lord blessed them by placing oil in them for the benefit of some of the brethren. Was that complimentary or not? Then I referred to Bro. Jasper Dobbs' marriage and spoke of him as a progressive and advancing young man. Another complimentary statement. I surmise here is where the trouble lies. I presume I should have said something complimentary regarding another individual, but I believe in encouraging the young people and I believe Brother Dobbs didn't get any too much of it. Yes, it is true that the Glen Easton brethren have been "stung," but it was not by an individual in Pennsylvania, but by an individual in Glen Easton. Get after him.

Some additional facts: At the conference at Wheeling, February 5 and 6, I met many of the Glen Easton Saints, old and young, and was never treated more cordially by anyone. One of the leading officers of that branch was especially friendly in his greeting. I was invited to go out to their branch at least a dozen times from their members, and I was urged so strongly to take supper with a young couple from there that I did so; yet the Glen Easton writer represented the branch as being offended at me. I know who was offended and why. I will meet with the branch as soon as I can and I expect, with the exception of one or two individuals, to be treated with the same friendliness that I always have been in the past. The editor knows circumstances why I did not want my letter cut up and I do not believe he would have cut out that part which the writer calls objectionable. It was written in the right spirit, but the trouble seems to be in the spirit in which it was read.

C. ED. MILLER.

TULARE, CALIFORNIA, February 19, 1910.

Dear Brother Elbert: I just got here yesterday from Santa Ana. I am still greatly afflicted, but trying to work for the Master. Will preach to-morrow and also ordain

Bro. A. J. Damron to the office of priest. This is according to the direction of missionary in charge, Fred A. Smith. It is colder here than in Santa Ana; I am so cold this morning that I can scarcely write. I think I will have to quit running about.

J. C. CLAPP.

CISNE, ILLINOIS, February 27, 1910.

Dear Herald: When we came back here from Knobnoster all welcomed us with a hearty handshake and "glad you have come back to help us with the Lord's work." We have had a grand revival meeting here at our branch with both Saint and sinner, and added to our number fourteen precious souls, which will be a power and strength to the work.

One of the brothers was called to the office of deacon and was ordained February 13, by Brn. H. Walker, F. L. Sawley, J. G. Smith, and J. F. Simms. I believe he will be blessed in his calling. Brethren Sawley and J. F. Curtis were the ones that conducted the meetings, the latter only being with us three days. He left to attend the Taylorville conference, but the good work still goes on, and the Saints are strengthened and rejoicing in their progress.

We have Sunday school every Sunday and prayer meeting every Thursday night. We are depending on a debate soon with the Missionary Baptists to explain the difference between truth and error. I know this is the work of the Lord, for I have proved it in days that are gone by and have seen the work manifested by the Lord. I hope the people will come out and hear the difference and obey the gospel. There are several others interested and I believe they will soon come and go along with us.

Yours in the one faith,
MR. AND MRS. J. F. FLEEHARTY.

PORTLAND, MAINE, February 25, 1910.

Editors Herald: I am one of the isolated ones and I find lots of comfort in reading your nice letters. Since the Chapman-Alexander revival movement swept over this place, the Pentecostal or Holiness people have been having special meetings, conducted by one Rev. Andrew Jackson, of Kentucky. The writer had the privilege of attending a few of their meetings, and also putting a few questions in the box to be answered by this wise (?) servant of God.

My first questions were: "Why did Jesus go to teach the spirits in prison if there is no escape for them? See 1 Peter 3: 18-20;" and, "How can the gospel be preached to them that are dead, if the dead are unconscious, as some teach us? See 1 Peter 4: 5, 6."

Just listen to this answer: "Jesus did not go to preach to them. He walked through the back alley of hell shouting, 'I have conquered the world, death and hell!' He proclaims his victory. He did not go to set them free. No, brother, when one is in hell, he is in for ever; no escape." How very wise is this Mr. Jackson! Where did he find out so much? Surely he did not get it from 1 Peter 4: 5, 6; or 3: 18-20.

Well, I thought I would try him a little farther, so I put in the following: "Is the stick of Joseph the Bible? If so, where is the stick of Ephraim? See Ezekiel 37: 15-22. Is it not the sealed book of Isaiah 29? And as the Jews are already returning to Palestine, how is it they are not joined together?" I saw him take the Bible and look up the reference. I expected he would give it up, but no. He read it and said: "Stick doesn't represent the Bible; it represents authority. They will not be joined together until Christ comes. Then neither Jew nor Gentile will hold the stick, but Jesus will take it in his own hand." Nothing about the sealed book.

I have a friend who once belonged to the Baptist Church, but at present belongs to the Holiness Church, and as he still holds to water baptism, I was led to give him the following question, in hopes he might get a glimpse of the Rev. Mr.

Johnson as he really is: "Is it necessary to be baptized in water, in order to be saved and sanctified wholly, and to receive a remission of sins?" Answer: "No, it is not necessary to be baptized in water or vinegar or molasses." I will not try to give all he said as it would probably find its way into the wastebasket. I have one more question and answer and then I am done: "What sealed book is referred to in Isaiah 29, that would be found in the hand of an unlearned man; as God would proceed to do a marvelous work and a wonder just before Lebanon (Palestine) would become a fruitful field?"

I saw him talking with one of their members, and of course, he knew who put the question in, as I had told a number, so I expected something, and sure enough it came. He read: "'The mission of all is become unto you as the words of a book that is sealed.' Yes," says this wise Mr. Johnson, "the old prophets were so corrupt, like men chewing tobacco, the juice running down the corners of their mouths, blear-eyed, when God gave them a vision it was like a sealed book to them. They did not dig it out of the ground like old Joe Smith did. No, it does not come that way." He started to read more, but soon stopped; the book was too plain for him; so he just spent a short time ridiculing the prophets and did not answer the question.

Thus do these deceivers go forth blinding the people. Oh, how thankful we should be that God has opened our eyes! Let us watch that we be not deceived by a black coat and a sanctimonious expression.

Ever trusting in God and trying to do his will, I am,
Your brother in the one faith,
W. S. POWERS.

KAITANGATA, NEW ZEALAND, January 30, 1910.

Editors Herald: We write to let you know we are still in the faith and the hope of the gospel. We thank God we are in a land where we can proclaim the gospel to those we meet from time to time. The last time that I was on the street to preach to the people, I got a good hearing. We had good liberty to speak the words of life. But I am sorry to let you know that I have lost my right eye in the mine and there is something growing over the other one so it is very weak; so you will have to overlook my bad writing. I thank God that it is no worse.

I think the time is near when some one will be sent here. We have a better house for the Saints in New Zealand now. When some of the brethren were here they had a hard time; no harm for them, but it is not so now, for we have Saints in many parts. There are no Saints in Kaitangata except myself and companion; she is a great sufferer with rheumatism. Brother Call is still in the faith and he will make a good preacher. *May God give him strength. The church of Christ, or the Campbellite Church, was so much against us, and all at variance one with another, but he that was the cause of opposition has gone the way of all flesh. We have many friends and I desire to live so that I may not be a stumbling-block in the way. I have not been as faithful as I ought to be. May God bless you all in the work, is the prayer of your brother,
THOMAS DIXON.

CLARKSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA, February 24, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been here a few weeks and I am glad to report that in my opinion the work was never in a better condition spiritually, and in a better working condition than at present. I hope it will continue so. Ten have been baptized in the past year and more are expected. Because of the need of a house to worship in the Saints have determined to build them one, so as to have it ready for the conference which convenes here sometime the latter part of August or first of September.

This is the home of D. L. Shinn, or "grandpa," as he is called by many. At the last sacrament meeting held here, we enjoyed listening to the testimonies that were borne of the many years that he has stood the storm of persecution and trial, being alone, and being faithful in bearing his testimony and presenting this gospel to others. Some of the world's people have obeyed, but the most gratifying part of it is to know that by his faithfulness his family have all obeyed the gospel, except one, and the probabilities are that he will obey ere long. A great many of his grandchildren have obeyed and the outlook is in favor of them being standard bearers for the Master. His time of doing much missionary work is drawing to a close, as he has passed the allotted time, but he can bless God for his goodness and mercies to him, his family being honorable, upright men in their business affairs in life, and all with him in the church.

We organized a Religio on the 16th inst., and my son Robert, who has been with me since the beginning of the year, effected an organization of the Sunday school into the General Association, so the probabilities are that there will be district organization both of the Religio and Sunday school.

In Shinnston the work keeps in good condition because of the zeal of Sisters Griffith, Lesson, and Kidd, who are not afraid to let their lights shine. At the Harmony Branch on Indian Creek, in Ritchie County, they have determined to build a church to worship in. About a year ago a building committee was appointed, consisting of Brn. Thomas Smith, Bruce Wilson, and his brother Clarence. Subscription lists were put in circulation and the necessary amount subscribed. Bro. Bruce Wilson gave the necessary amount of land for the house, and I think a better site could not be found in that part. Some of the material was purchased, but the work was postponed until fall. In November and December, while they got the deed signed and registered, a number of the brethren went to work and got the pillars for the foundation all set and leveled, ready to commence the framework; but the weather turned cold and froze so it was thought wise to wait for warmer weather. As soon as it turns warm it will be up in short order, for the brethren are mechanics of no slim order, and it will be done in a workmanlike manner. So goes Later Day Saintism in West Virginia. All it takes is time, patience, and perseverance, and West Virginia will rank among the leading districts of the church.

I am your brother and colaborer for the building of Zion, SAMUEL BROWN.

DICKINSON, NORTH DAKOTA, Feb. 28, 1910.

Editor Herald: I wish to announce through the HERALD that if any Saints or elders should be passing by, they will be welcome at our place, as we are the only Saints living here and we would be glad to have some of the elders stop and do some preaching. This is a town of six thousand and seven hundred population. They will find me at Boulger & Hughes' furniture store or at my house, number 102 East Seventh street.

ALBERT P. LANGDON AND WIFE.

FANSHAWE, OKLAHOMA, February 18, 1910.

Editors Herald: For the benefit of Brother Heminway, of West Branch, Michigan, as well as others who might want a home in this grand Staté, I write a description of eastern Oklahoma.

Fanshawe is located upon the Rock Island railroad, eleven miles west of Wister, about thirty-five miles from the Arkansas line, upon or near the great Fauch Maline River. About one mile from this stream there is a fine, fertile valley, which will produce near a bale of cotton to the acre. Corn is almost a natural product, yielding from forty to seventy bushels to the acre. Fanshawe is separated from the river land by a small mountain with a five foot vein of coal in it. In the town we have three veins of coal three feet thick. East and west each way there is a valley of good land about a half mile wide, almost all vacant, not settled yet.

A belt of this land at the town, about one and one half mile wide, is segregated coal land, and can not be purchased yet. We believe Congress will soon pass an act to sell this land, which is several hundred miles long, east and west.

We have fine timber for lumber, and at this time mills are in the hills north of us, manufacturing lumber for market; also hauling their output on traction engines to this place, shipping it to market. We also have fine furniture timber south of us, and some of this is being shipped to Fort Smith and there made into furniture. We have oil and gas underground undeveloped. This river bottom land is selling at normal prices.

We have a town site deeded to us and can sell lots and give warranty deeds to them. We now have a movement on foot to have a large body of land added to the town site in order to give people chances to buy homes.

Our climate is mild and healthy; stock does not require much feed all winter, and none at all to get through some of our winters.

The Saints have a branch of forty-seven members and a good Sunday school. Our church building is commodious and a paid-up insurance on it for five years. We wish to say to the Saints who want to come to Oklahoma, we will welcome them here and sell them lots to build them homes at from twenty-five to one hundred dollars; then they can be here to buy this land which will soon be sold. The upland is fine for fruit and there is no one in this business. But they who do go into fruiting will make money, as the Saints here are good citizens, as well as those who are not of the faith.

I do not believe anyone can make a mistake by locating at this place. We are very anxious that the Saints everywhere who are without homes will locate here, or those who have can do well by selling and investing here. There are good openings for different enterprises. Anyone asking questions will get an answer, and we will gladly give any information asked for.

Truly in bonds,

J. H. LEWIS.

MINDEN CITY, MICHIGAN, February 18, 1910.

Dear Herald: Again I must write and express my appreciation of your worthy columns. I usually write once each year to one of the church papers, but last year about this time an infant girl came to our house to increase our happiness and I failed to write, as my time seemed to be taken up looking after home duties and the two little girls which the Lord has blessed us with. Our babe was blessed by Elder William Davis, of Uby, Michigan, and held by his son, Elder J. W. Davis, now of Australia. William was among the first to declare the everlasting gospel to us. Now we rarely see him, but there are other sheep that must be gathered into the fold. Brother and Sister Barr are still living in the branch, but are not able to meet with us often, and we miss their presence. Sister Barr, who has been sorely afflicted, is now able to be around as usual and seems to be happy. Since our last June conference we have had some of our elders come and preach for us. They were G. H. Hilliard, J. J. Bailey, I. Goheen, T. Bossen, Charles Green, and Brother Leaverton, of Canada. We truly appreciate the presence and wise counsel of all.

The HERALD truly is a great comfort to us. I often wonder how Latter Day Saints can live without the church papers. Life would seem very lonely to us if it were not for those encouraging and grand articles we can read and feast upon, and we are truly thankful for the noble ones that are placed in charge of the publishing house. I am much interested in the Home Column, and it is always read first of all. In the issue for February 9 the Home Column contained the best letter I ever read in that department. It was a father's letter to his son and wife. My husband and I both read it and we wished that every Latter Day Saint would read it, and profit by such wise instruction. How many more happy homes there would be in the world, if more fathers would instruct their sons and mothers their daughters. How much less sorrow there would be if they would teach their children (when they reach the proper age) to ask the Lord to help them select their life companions. One of our elders said he thought the Lord would not want to be bothered; we could do the selecting ourselves. To my mind he is mistaken, for that is the most important step in life, and why not have the Lord's approval in that as well as in anything else? I have thought that for many years and never could have taken that sincere and sacred step if I had not been divinely directed. We both had that assurance, and what happiness, peace, and satisfaction it brought.

Our oldest girl is now five and a half years old and we are trying to teach her the gospel. She says she is going to have her papa baptize her when she is eight. I hope and pray that she will be ready; how it will grieve me if she is not. She loves to go to Sunday school and although she is very lively, she loves to have us tell her Bible stories, and remembers them too.

We were deprived of attending Sunday school and other meetings on account of sickness causing the churches to be closed for a few weeks, and last Sunday was the first at our chapel again; it seemed quite a treat.

The Saints of this part; so far, have escaped the many diseases that are all around us, and we are grateful for protection, for the light of the beautiful gospel, and for the many blessings we enjoy from our dear Father's bountiful hand, though we have our trials, as all Saints are to be tried. I desire to be a help to the cause, but I am deprived of doing much on account of afflictions of body and mind. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be strong and overcome and endure to the end.

We expect our district conference to meet here next June, and we humbly pray and ask all to assist us with their prayers that our efforts may not be in vain.

Your sister in the gospel,

LENA VOLTZ HENRY.

FLOMATON, ALABAMA, February 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: I rejoice so much in reading the letters in the HERALD because there are hardly any Saints here; no branch near, and no Sunday school. We have a sermon preached to us every two or three months and sometimes a little oftener. I pray God that we may be permitted to live nearer some branch. I am in bad health and I ask the Saints to pray for me that God may give me better health and that I may live to see a better hour.

ANNA WADKINS.

FLOMATON, ALABAMA, February 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: Many times since I came in this latter day work, I have been made to feel the true Spirit of Jesus Christ, and I am perfectly satisfied. I have a desire to come up higher and be found doing the will of my heavenly Father, that I may receive that bright and peaceful home that all the dear Saints are working for. I am glad that we four Saints here have the privilege of reading the church papers and hearing how the good work is going on in the land. Brother Slover was with us this past week and Brother Booker a few weeks ago. They preached some delightful sermons, and we highly appreciated them, and hope they will call on us again. They will find a welcome at our home. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may be faithful to the end.

CADDIE WADKINS.

FLOMATON, ALABAMA, February 23, 1910.

Dear Herald: Perhaps some one would like to hear how we few Saints are, and I thought I would write to let the dear Saints know how well pleased I am to read their comforting letters in the HERALD each week. It is indeed a great help to the isolated ones to read these letters and know how the great work is going on over the land and country. I have been a member of the church four years and I am seventeen years of age. I have always lived away back in the woods, and have never attended many Sunday schools. You can imagine how weak I am in the faith, though I am trying to do all I can in the upbuilding of the Lord's kingdom here on the earth.

Brethren Booker and Slover came by a few weeks ago and gave us a few cheerful sermons, for which we are very thankful. We would be glad to have any of the elders stop when passing by, even if they can not stay more than two or three days.

What few Saints there were here have all moved away. Two nice families near Pollard, Alabama, moved away not long ago. It makes us feel sad. Pray for me, dear Saints, that I may grow stronger in the faith.

Your sister in Christ,

THENA WADKINS.

CHEROKEE, OKLAHOMA, February 25, 1910.

Editors Herald: We raised scarcely anything last year and had a great deal of sickness. I went to the mail box to mail a letter to you, and when I got back one of my horses was sick, and I had to send for a veterinarian which cost me five dollars, and he had not been gone over an hour when the horse fell on me and broke my leg, and he died in less than an hour after. I am getting along as well as could be expected so far, and hope and pray that our afflictions may work to our good and cause us to live more faithfully. My wife has been ailing for over two years and was bedfast for two weeks, but she is up now but very weak. My mother-in-law has been staying with us doing the housework. I have been very negligent in performing my duty, but I am strong in the faith of the gospel, and ask an interest in the prayers of the Saints that I may be able to overcome and be worthy of God's blessings.

Your brother in the faith,

G. L. SWEET.

SAINT JOSEPH, MISSOURI, February 16, 1910.

Dear Herald: With much pride and pleasure I send a photograph taken by Bro. Elvin Brackenbury of Zion's Hope Mission Sunday school, formerly known as Aspey Mission.

It may be well remembered by some in the far west, even Brother Terry, who about fifteen years ago so faithfully and diligently labored to establish this little mission, then under very difficult and trying circumstances. Since that time the mission has been almost self-sustaining, several having been added to its ranks, until now the sun begins to shine, and prospects are very bright and encouraging.

Through the ardent support of Brn. William Lewis, Tad-dicken, and last but not least, our worthy Brother Pickering, who has been holding meetings for five weeks, the organization of a branch is to be considered on next Monday evening, with Brother I. N. White present. When organized it will make three branches in our city.

Eight have been added to our number within the past three weeks, and several more are earnestly considering the most important step in this life.

The memory of Zion's Hope Mission will ever be cherished by the writer, for from its sacred desk the truth was presented and accepted, putting the teaching of sectarianism to flight. Thanks to Brother Terry, and God's inspiration!

We as an humble mission band, earnestly request support, by your faith and prayers, that though few in number we may ever be found at our post of duty, though pleasant or otherwise, and that we may impart an influence for good among those of an inquiring mind.

"Not to the strong, is the battle,
Not to the swift is the race,
But to the true and the faithful
Victory is promised, through grace."

In bonds,
(SR.) PHOEBE E. WOODSIDE.

Brethren: I think I have undergone some rather singular experiences in the last two years. Two years ago we landed in Lowry City, Missouri, expecting to engage in business, and coming there that our little grandchildren who were living with us might have the benefit of the Saints' church services. Soon afterward the Saints began to leave; still we kept up services until Christmas, 1909. I failed in my business expectations and had to resort again to wage labor to support my family. I struggled as best I could until last fall. I am a coal miner by occupation, and to procure steady and permanent employment I was compelled to leave Lowry City between Christmas and New Years.

In changing places I suffered considerable anxiety of mind concerning our little folks being deprived of Sunday school privileges, but the thought finally occurred to me that we could keep up our Sunday school lessons as a family. This we did and in a couple of Sundays a neighbor boy came in and took part with us; then others came, until we had a class of twenty-six workers, old and young, men and ladies, boys and girls. All these had to be crowded into our house, which was like packing sardines in a box. So I had to get busy and procure the use of the schoolhouse. About that time some got busy circulating the report that I was a Mormon, but from the first I had published the fact that I was a Latter Day Saint. They hurt us some, but I was elected superintendent, and last Sunday night I had the privilege of preaching in the schoolhouse. I am still on the firing line, but am trying not to waste any ammunition.

Yours for the truth,

JOHN H. TIBBLES.

CONNEAUTVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA, February 18, 1910.

Editors Herald: I attended the district conference at Sharon; also the Sunday school and Religio conventions. There was quite a large attendance at all the sessions. Sunday night the house was crowded, Brother Griffiths being the speaker. All sessions seemed to have an upward tendency.

At the request of the minister in charge I have been laboring in Ohio and Pennsylvania. I have labored in the following cities in Ohio: Canton, Akron, New Philadelphia, Youngstown, and Warren, and near West Farmington; and in Pennsylvania, New Castle and near Conneautville. I have simply entered into other men's labors. Bro. G. T. Griffiths seems to have been first in some places. The name of T. W. Williams, together with W. H. Kelley, and some others are remembered by those among whom I have labored. It is good to be first, but, "the last shall be first and the first shall be last." I have found good people everywhere, and some are trying to be good. Altogether we ought to be able to move the old ship of Zion forward. I notice a tendency on the part of some of our young men to press forward and occupy where they should, which is a good indication, and some of our young sisters are proving themselves faithful to their trust. So " 'Tis good to be a Saint in latter days."

I see from the Delimitator of March 10, 1910, that Kansas City has adopted a good plan for taking care of her tramps, prisoners, and those who indulge excessively in the drink habit, which plan is said to be in advance of any other city. And it is said to make honorable men of many and enables them to provide for their families in a respectable way. I think the plan is a capital one and one that I have been trying in my weak way to advocate for some time past. Why stretch a man's neck because he has committed a crime? I care not how great a crime it may be. To hang a man does not benefit the lives of those he has taken, neither their friends nor relatives, and it is of no benefit to the one hanged. If found guilty after a fair and impartial trial, I would favor a law to confine him to labor and let the proceeds of his labor go to support his family, if he has one, and the family or relatives of the one whose life he has taken. In this way the criminal would be benefited, the family of the one whose life he has taken, and the public in general, if the proceeds of his labor were appropriated properly, and he would be given a chance to repent. This it seems to me would be socialism in the highest sense of the term, and not government ownership of railroads, but railroad regulation of railroads, trusts, corporations, combinations, etc. This great wave of socialism that is sweeping over the country is liable to deceive and mislead the unwary. "Be thou steadfast and unmovable in the faith of Him who has called you," is the watchword.

Each passing year seems to bring its evidences confirmatory of the latter day work, and the world will yet be compelled to acknowledge that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God, and the Book of Mormon a true record. But our opponents have said if that book be true why can not some of the names of the rivers, cities, and villages be found in South and Central America, and Mexico spoken of in the book, as though if there could be it would for ever convince the world that the book is true. Not one known name, they say, can be found in the Book of Mormon, forgetting there are cities spoken of in the Bible that can not be found to-day.

By reading and studying those countries of late I find this: Rand McNally & Co., in their pocket atlas of the world for 1907, on page 246, speaking of that section of country on the northern border of South America called Guiana, says: "It is a region extending from Orinoco to Amazon River, and received its name from a tribe of Indians. This country is Dutch Guiana and Cayenne or French Guiana. Dutch Guiana," it says, "lies between Moroni and Corianton Rivers." Not knowing the Book of Mormon way of spelling these rivers, Moroni is spelled Maroni, and Corianton, Carentyn. Moroni River is marked on the map as being three hundred miles long, and Corianton River five hundred miles long. (See Rand McNalley & Co.'s pictorial atlas of the world, for 1898, page 271, and map of South America in same book.)

The sum and substance of the matter is this: Guiana was named by a tribe of Indians, and Dutch Guiana being between Moroni and Corianton Rivers, lies between the two rivers named by the Nephites. It is as plain as the alphabet to any unbiased mind. In the pocket atlas the Corianton River (Corentyn) is mentioned, and the Moroni is not, but in his large pictorial atlas both are named. Mr. M. W. Green, ex-M. P., a very learned man who lectured against us in New York City, pronounced Nephi "Neph-ie," so you see the difference is in the pronunciation people give it. But Mr. Green learned that he was not as learned in Book of Mormon lore as he thought.

I sometimes wonder if it would not be more profitable to take the gospel to the people of Mexico, Central, and South America, than to some of the isles of the sea. We would save the expense and danger of crossing the great sea, anyway.

Your brother in Christ,
D. E. TUCKER.

MCKENZIE, ALABAMA, February 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: There are so many good letters and articles written by the different brothers and sisters that cheer and comfort the weak and struggling, giving them a clearer conception of their own weakness, in order that they more carefully and steadily walk the way that leads to the city of God. I have been a reader of the HERALD for twenty-eight years, and do not see how I could get along without it. There is such an accumulation of our different sources of testimony of the divinity of this work, till it does seem that there is no room for doubt or fear; but with all the power of a living faith and love for humanity and with a burning zeal we ought to seek to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness. May they so labor that there may be a realization of the promise to elders of an abundance of the manifestation of his Spirit; also that there may be an increase of spiritual growth and development throughout the entire church in 1910.

The year 1909 has been the most remarkable year in some respects of any in the history of the church in this district. On October 18, a debate commenced here between Bro. T. C. Kelley and Mr. W. G. Roberts, a report of which has been published, so will not write of it now. The Reorganization lost nothing and the Saints were more firmly grounded in the faith. December 27, Bro. F. M. Slover met C. H. Cayce, of the Primitive Baptist Church, in debate on church propositions for four days. Brother Slover sustained his proposition to the satisfaction of the Saints, and I think made some friends. The Baptist brethren had overestimated Mr. Cayce and underestimated Brother Slover, which made a victory for Brother Slover quite easy. Some of Mr. Cayce's gestures in his effort to emphasize some of his borrowed Roberts and Neal argument were really ridiculous for one in his position. His proposition went down hard against him as was evidenced by the silly conduct of some of his brethren, at close of debate, to bolster him up.

I see from his paper he intends to publish a synopsis of the debate in pamphlet form; so he prefers to take his cause where it will not meet any opposition. May the Lord pity him and help him to see the folly of his ways. The Saints are rejoicing in the firmness of their foundation and the assurance of their hope, and I think are more determined to try to let their light shine. May the influence of His Spirit so lighten our pathway that we may follow in his steps, until we reach the shining shores of eternal bliss and be permitted to dwell with the pure and good.

Yours in bonds,
J. R. HARPER.

TOPLIFF, UTAH.

Dear Herald: I thought I would write you a few lines this evening to let you know there are yet a few courageous Saints in Utah who are trying to live according to the gospel law of Christ. Notwithstanding the fact that we are under very peculiar and trying conditions here, we are not altogether discouraged.

I think the dawn of a brighter day is near at hand when there will be rejoicing among God's Saints in Zion; even these Utah Mormons included, if they will throw aside their idols and put on the armor of righteousness and holiness.

A spiritual feast was had by the Saints of Utah at the semiannual district conference held at Salt Lake City February 18 to 20, my wife and I being among the happy participants. We had with us Missionaries H. N. Hansen, T. W. Chatburn, John Davis, and L. G. Holloway, besides our local elders, G. J. S. Abels and John Hall, who are quite active in the work. Among other things considered was the erection of a suitable place of worship for the Saints in Salt Lake.

Quite a lot of improvement is being done in Salt Lake City now. Brigham Young's monument still stands with his hands outstretched toward the Deseret Bank and his back to the temple, directing you of course to a place to deposit your cash after partaking of that holy sealing.

Some may say, "Well, those Mormons are not worth considering any way"; but, dear Saints, we must remember our Lord is ready and waiting to receive his prodigal children.

For the isolated Saints I can sympathize, for I am one myself; but our missionaries, the church papers, give my wife and myself a lot of spiritual food for thought. We are endeavoring to so live out here that we may be worthy to rejoice with the dear Saints in God's kingdom.

To this end I beg your prayers, and remain,

C. A. LAYTON.

STONINGTON, MAINE, February 24, 1910.

Editors Herald: Pleased to inform you that the work of grace so effectively begun at Stonington still continues with unabated interest. Forty-five more baptisms since last writing you, making one hundred and twenty-one all told since last September. Never experienced such an upheaval before. Nor has the increase been confined entirely to Stonington; Little Deer Isle, an adjoining branch ten miles away, has shared the success. My recent labors were there, where after five weeks' work, thirty-eight accepted of our Lord through the ordinances of the church.

Surely the Lord has been working wondrously. His Spirit has been poured out and I have verily realized as never before a fulfillment of that promise wherein the Lord has declared he would go before the face of his servants preparing hearts.

Saints are taking right hold of the work. At Stonington they have reseat their church with fine opera chairs while a bell adorns the belfry, the gift of Aunt Cynthia Knowlton.

At Little Deer Isle they are just completing a church structure which in point of architectural finish would grace any community.

In tithes and offerings the Saints are coming up, too, some twelve hundred dollars having been forwarded to the Bishopric by our energetic Bishop's agent, Bro. Henry Eaton. Indeed everybody seems to be taking right hold of the work and the Lord is calling such as should serve him in the ministry. All it requires is for the brethren of the local ministry to just stay with it, and we'll sweep the whole country.

This is the Lord's work and behind it are concentrated the might of all eternity. Why shouldn't it go on? Sure thing! And let none of us impede its progress or else it will grind us to powder.

Well, after a glorious season with these noble, humble Deer Islanders, we leave them for a season, to return—well, heaven only knows, but may he who has begun so marvelously among them keep them in the hollow of his hand.

All mail addressed Thedford, Ontario, will be forwarded.

Lost, Strayed, or Stolen.

The above might be said of the writer by his friends who have not heard from him lately, for he is at present in the Big Lost River Valley, in Blaine County, Idaho, and shut out from communication with the outside world, except by telephone or telegraph, by reason of the trains on the Lost River branch of the O. S. L. R. R. being snowbound. Since I last wrote you I have labored in various places in the State of Idaho, including Boise and vicinity, and in the great Snake River Valley; also visited the Teton Basin in the north-eastern part of the State.

In the places I visited I found most all of the Saints trying to keep the faith, and looking to the time when Zion shall be redeemed and the meek shall inherit the earth. Some are cold and indifferent, and a few have caused some trouble, but I hope we shall in the future be able to bring about a better condition of things. The snow is deep in the Upper Snake River country, and in the Teton Basin; also in the Lost River country. I am anxious to get out of this country, for I want to attend the Idaho district conference which convenes at Hagerman, Idaho, on the 26th inst. But if the trains do not get to running soon, I certainly will be lost to the conference.

There are a few Saints living at Arco, where I am at present, and they are still striving for mastery over the evils of the world, and still desire to come up higher and live by every word of God. I am being kindly cared for by Sr. Annie Jones and her sons. She is the widow of our late brother, Harbert Jones, who formerly lived at Malad, Idaho. I wish to say to the dear Saints among whom I have labored in the past, that I am enjoying a fair degree of health, and am still battling for the cause of truth. Praying God's blessing upon you all, I am ever your friend and brother in the gospel of Christ,

A. J. LAYLAND.

News From Branches

DES MOINES, IOWA.

Elder W. Christy, associated with Elder N. V. Sheldon, closed a two-week series of meetings at Runnells, Iowa, where they baptized three on last Sunday. They report a very spiritual meeting. Brother Sheldon started on his way home Monday.

Sister Cushatt and her daughter Blanche, of Baxter, spent Monday in the city, returning home Tuesday morning.

Bro. A. A. Reams has been making an active canvass for the church publications in the district, and we learn has been quite successful.

The effort to hold three regular services besides the Sunday school and Religio on Sunday has proven too much of an effort for several, and while we hope for the best, yet there are several who feel that they can not attend all these services. A very commendable effort has been made so far, and some good meetings held.

Bro. Clarence Skinner's father is in the city, and we learn, thinking some of locating here.

Bro. Roll Scott, formerly of Omaha, Nebraska, has purchased a fine drug store here, and has moved his family to the city. We welcome him and his family.

The young people have organized a debating society. Their meeting was held last night at the residence of Bro. O. Salisbury.

We learn that Bro. J. G. Carpenter has sold his residence, but intends to build again. We are pleased to note that they will remain with us.

A commendable effort is being made to stimulate the members of this city to a greater sacrifice in the interests of the missionary work. The last year was one of many hindrances to an aggressive campaign, but we are not assured but that the work of getting in close touch with the people by ministering to them in their own homes, has been preparatory to a much greater work in some way. However, there can not be a greater work in the missionary line than going from house to house, as the missionary views it; but there should follow the interest growing out of this a more public representation of the interests of the church.

A series of articles is being prepared by the city missionary, and published in the Runnells Telegram on the world's problems, the first of which appeared in the issue of that paper of the 4th instant, subject, Is there a God?

The normal work has been in a latent state for sometime, and the effort to revive it is not very successful.

An effort is being made by the district officers of the Sunday school association to have each school in the district adopt the "standard of excellence." The Des Moines school has already adopted it.

Elder W. Christy came home with a severe cold and will rest for a few days. He anticipates going to Colo for a series of services.

The work of the city missionary is divided between the work in the city and the secretary work necessary to the coming council and quorum meetings soon to convene. He starts to his work in the Council of Seven Presidents the 28th, nothing preventing. Bro. W. E. Peak, who has been located in Minneapolis the last conference year, is expecting to be in the city the 27th, on his way to Independence.

INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI.

The weather now-a-days is delightful, and the roads are in good condition.

They are talking of erecting a fine government building here in the vicinity of the public square. Automobiles are quite in vogue just now even among some of the brethren.

With a physical directress from Kansas City, the L. D. S. Young Ladies' Athletic Club has lately opened its doors to all who are interested in physical culture and are willing to pay the fee. This class which meets weekly in the church annex, is not at all connected with those indulging in "erratic athletic overtraining," which Amelia Barr and some of the professors denounce as dangerous, but is allied to such progressive education as the colleges and manual training schools classify with home gymnastics, domestic science, etc., and they say a new type of the female sex will now be developed. Also the basketball teams of some of the brethren are progressing. But what is now in the air here aside from these things, in the minds of the adult, more serious-minded Saints, is preparation to be made for General Conference, improving church premises, arranging programs for conventions, and other features.

A few of the missionaries from abroad have arrived home already.

There has been much sickness here of late; measles among the children and grippe and rheumatism among the older ones.

We have been called to part with two of our faithful ones quite recently. Bro. J. Wiggins, formerly of Alabama, met with a serious accident and his demise took place in the sanitarium, where, in his last hours, everything was done for his care and comfort. May our heavenly Father remember his loved companion, our dear sister, in her sad affliction. His remains were removed to his former home.

On Saturday, February 26, our beloved Sr. Sarah White fell calmly asleep in Jesus after an illness of a few weeks. The funeral obsequies were held at the church on the following Tuesday, and of her it may be said, "They who knew her best loved her most." Bro. W. H. Garrett, who preached the sermon, paid tribute to her faithfulness and her many virtues, and expressed a desire that these may be sanctified to the loved ones she has left to mourn her departure. She leaves a son and two daughters.

Sunday morning, March 6, Brother Chatburn held forth, and Bro. S. S. Smith preached in the evening.

At the new south side church about one hundred and fifty were present at the opening meeting at which Brethren May and Short presided. A Sunday school was organized with Bro. E. Corthell as superintendent.

ABBIE A. HORTON.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Cleveland Branch has been holding its own, but expects soon to be more successful. We are jubilant over the prospect of paying off our church debt in the near future. We were told by the Spirit recently that we should make a sacrifice and dedicate this building, and that there were blessings in store for us. The method employed for raising the amount necessary was by a painted chart, a large square containing a sketch of this building, which was divided into small squares of different colors forming a design. Each of the small squares or lots were priced from five to fifty dollars, and lettered beneath, "This allotment for sale, cash or time." Most of the amount was pledged in a few minutes after the service in the afternoon.

Cleveland Religio recently adopted the plan of having prayer and testimony after the lesson on the first Sunday in the month, in place of the program. It seems that the Religians are trying to make an early number of the Autumn Leaves a Cleveland number. We have distributed a Religio calendar among the members to keep the work on their minds, and perhaps give them a chance to explain the work to outsiders. We are very glad to have visitors in this city drop in and see us. We are located at Wade Park avenue and Seventy-first street; our sign is on the building.

Died.

BLANEY.—Mrs. Ida Blaney, wife of George Blaney, died Saturday, January 22, at the hospital in Council Bluffs, at the age of 53 years. Funeral services were held at Wheeler's Grove Christian church Monday afternoon. B. H. Whiston, of the Christian Church at Carson, conducted the services. Mrs. Blaney was the daughter of Jason Briggs, a well-known resident of the county in its early days. She was formerly a teacher in the schools of Grove. She became an invalid soon after her marriage and for many years has been in the hospital. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, two sons, and two daughters.—Carson Critic.

COX.—Laura Cox was born April 3, 1838, in Edmondson County, Kentucky, and with her widowed mother moved to Marshall County, Kentucky, in 1852, where she resided until her death on February 20, at the old homestead where she had lived 54 years. Her maiden name was Lindsay. At the age of 16 she united with the Baptist Church. Was married to A. J. Cox, September 14, 1856. To them were born thirteen children, five boys and eight girls, six of whom remain to mourn their loss. She remained with the Baptist Church till 1885, when she and her husband united with the Christian Church, where she remained till November 7, 1903. Having investigated the claims of the Reorganized Church, she was baptized on the above date by Elder W. R. Smith. Sister Cox was a devoted Saint and died as she had lived, firm in the faith. Funeral sermon by Elder J. R. McClain, conducted from the home.

CRAIG.—J. A. Craig was born December 30, 1850, at Paney, Illinois. He was married to Miss Mary J. Short September 22, 1880, to whom were born five children, H. L. Craig, O. E. Craig, Dell Craig, Dessie Pearson, and Eulal Linebarger. He was baptized October 14, 1900, by W. S. McCrac, and died at Webb City, Missouri, February 23, 1910. Funeral conducted by Elder George Jenkins. Interment at Joplin cemetery.

SHUPE.—At Magnolia, Iowa, March 1, 1910, Elizabeth M. Shupe (nee Durfey), aged 77 years and 7 days. She united with the church about 1844, and when the exodus to the West took place, went as far as Farmington, Iowa. The family not finding what they expected with the church, she with others of her father's family remained there for a season, and she was married to Isaac Shupe, October 17, 1849, and moved to Schuyler County, Illinois, and later to Scotland County, Missouri, where Elder John Shippy found them and baptized them into the Reorganization December 18, 1860. When the war broke out, they moved to String Prairie, Iowa, and from there to Harrison County, Iowa, about 1880. Her husband and six children have preceded her to the great beyond, leaving one son, Elder E. F. Shupe, of Denver, and two daughters, Sr. Dora Bailey, of Fort Madison, and Sr. Maggie Merchant, of Magnolia, Iowa, to mourn her loss; also two brothers and one sister remain. While in poor health for a number of years, yet her last illness was of short duration. She died in the faith. Funeral from the Saints' church at Magnolia, in charge of Elders A. M. Fyrando and D. R. Chambers. Thus another Saint and mother has left us; may her rest be glorious.

TURNER.—James Clarence, son of Bro. Leon E. and Sr. Addie Turner, was born December 23, 1884, at Clearwater, Nebraska, and died at Hay Springs, Nebraska, February 22, 1910. He leaves to mourn, father, mother, five brothers, and two sisters, and a host of other relatives. Services were held in the Methodist Episcopal church at Hay Springs, Nebraska; sermon by Elder R. S. Mengel, assisted by Reverend York, of the M. E. Church, and Reverend Holly, of the Congregational Church. The remains were laid to rest in Hay Springs cemetery.

EARLY CHURCH IDEALS.

IV. MARRIAGE AND THE HOME.

The true Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints always has taught, still teaches, and always will teach that monogamy is the true system of marriage. The ideal home is built on the idea of one wife to one man, and one husband devoted entirely to one wife; the marriage covenant to be held sacred until death.

Even our friends of the Utah faction at times inadvertently admit the force of that statement. The Liahona the Elders' Journal, official organ of their missions in the United States, published at Independence, Missouri, in the issue for February 19, 1910, had as its leading number an article entitled, "The ideal home." It was by Reed Smoot, and originally was an address delivered in the Tabernacle, at Salt Lake City, October 4, 1909.

It seems a little strange that after vaunting the beauties and glories of polygamy for so many years, when they want a real good article on the ideal home they turn to a man who has only one wife and who is reputed to desire no more. Why not get the article from the pen of B. H. Roberts or Joseph F. Smith?

Possibly they would spoil the effect. Reed Smoot says that he has never left home a single time, from his wedding day until now, without kissing his wife good-bye. Imagine him saying, "I never leave home without kissing five of them good-bye." His life would be one prolonged smack.

One writer has defined a harem as "a bunch of firesides organized into a trust." Let these other gentlemen write on "How I attempted to corner the great American fireside"; but if an article on the ideal home is desired, by all means turn to Reed Smoot, whose heart seems to be purer than his religion.

There can be no good citizenship separate from a high ideal of family life. No nation can become great unless its homes are kept pure and sacred. In his book, Elements of Sociology, Frank W. Blackmar, Ph. D., says of the family:

The center from which flow all the impulses of social life. Here is the vital institution for the propagation and perpetuation of the race. . . . It is the most complete and perfectly organized group, from which radiate the tender sympathies and the refining impulses of life. It is the source of the larger brotherhood of humanity.

Communities into which we carry the gospel have a right to ask us concerning the attitude of the church toward marriage and the home. It is an important question.

We refer them directly to the standard books of the church. First we go to the Bible, and in its opening chapters we read of the institution of marriage as established by God himself in the Garden of Eden. Adam and Eve were the high contracting parties. The whole wide world was waiting to be peopled, yet God chose to found the race on monogamy; and he evidently intends to continue as he began, for every utterance from that day until now confirms the system there established. He could not now establish any other system without squarely repudiating former utterances, which of course would be an abdication of his high throne as the unchangeable God, an alternative for ever barred from consideration.

Second, we refer the inquirer to the Book of Mormon, noted in the minds of some, notorious in the minds of others, yet by all accepted as representative of the church. In it we read: "There shall not any man among you have save it be one wife; and concubines he shall have none: for I, the Lord God, delighteth in the chastity of women."

Our next reference is to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants in which we find the revelations that came through Joseph Smith and shaped the early ideals of the church. In section 49, paragraph 3 we read:

And again, I say unto you, that whoso forbiddeth to marry, is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man; wherefore it is lawful that he should have one wife, and they twain shall be one flesh, and all this that the earth might answer the end of its creation; and that it might be filled with the measure of man, according to his creation before the world was made.

The statement is emphatic, "Marriage is ordained of God unto man." There is a growing sentiment in the world that marriage is a civil contract,—only that and nothing more. Before a magistrate representing the state a man and woman make a contract to live together. They keep the contract until one or both tire of it and then it is at an end. Or as one writer expresses it, men and women hire a companion until they tire of him or her, and it is merely "hire, tire, fire."

Such is not and was not the idea of the church. Marriage is regarded as a sacred institution ordained of God in which with his approval a man and a woman make a most solemn covenant to continue as husband and wife as long as both shall live.

The form of the marriage covenant as adopted by the church in 1835 (Doctrine and Covenants 111:2) is as follows:

Marriage should be celebrated with prayer and thanksgiving; and at the solemnization, the persons to be married, standing together, the man on the right, and the woman on the left, shall be addressed, by the person officiating, as he shall be directed by the Holy Spirit; and if there be no legal objections, he shall say, calling each by their names: "You both mutually agree to be each other's companion, husband and wife, observing the legal rights belonging to this condition; that is, keeping yourselves wholly for each other, and from all others, during your lives." And when they have answered "Yes," he shall pronounce them "husband and wife" in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by virtue of the laws of the country and authority vested in him.

This is a clear recognition of mutual duties and rights. No pledge is required of one that is not required of the other.

Men of the world feel that they have a right to demand a fidelity of their wives that they are not prepared to give in return. Doctors and legislators advise them that man's nature is such that he can not be expected to remain continent, as the wife does. And so a man will spend six nights of the week with his affinity. Coming home on the seventh he finds that his wife has been conducting an intrigue during his absence. He immediately becomes highly incensed, has a "brain storm," and murders his wife and her paramour. Then twelve good men and true acquit him because of the "unwritten law." What is this "unwritten law"? It is that a man may trail his own honor in the dregs of hell; but if his wife "dishonors" him he may seek bloody vengeance as seems good to him.

But it should not be called the unwritten law. It is to be found in the famous revelation on polygamy as published by the Utah Church, in the paragraph that reads:

And if he have ten virgins given unto him by this law, he can not commit adultery, for they belong to him, and they are given unto him, therefore is he justified. But if one or either of the ten virgins, after she is espoused, shall be with another man; she has committed adultery, and shall be destroyed.

Here we find the idea boldly advocated that man may go to any length in collecting, arranging, and classifying his affinities, but if one or any of these "weaker" vessels goes astray, look out, something will drop, some one be destroyed. It is the old story and it may be read any day in the newspapers. A man will calmly inform his wife that it is none of her business where he spends his leisure hours; but if she so much as winks an eye at a stranger he will begin to look up the latest patterns in six-shooters.

The law of the church just quoted recognizes and demands absolute fidelity from both. The wife promises to keep herself for her husband and from all others. The husband promises to keep himself for his wife and from all others.

The promise is also exacted to observe all the rights belonging to such conditions. There are rights and duties, dissimilar in nature, devolving upon each. When these duties are evaded by one or both or when one or both seek to enjoy all of the privileges without due return, trouble ensues.

It is said that a young couple who were about to be married were talking matters over. Said he, "Dearest, do you think you can live on my fifteen dollars per week?"

"Yes, Jack," she replied, "I think I can, but what will you do?"

This reflects an attitude of mind altogether too common. The husband is the dollar machine and grinds out the cash needed to pay for style and social standing, while at home the servants "do the work, do the work." Perhaps we have few women in the church who are willing to sell their immortal souls to get "into society," but there are many such in the world.

Marriage should be a working combination. If it is right that a man should provide food and a home it is right that a woman should prepare that food and care for that home. The task can not wholly be shifted to the shoulders of servants. The woman who willfully turns her back on home duties to take up the chase after loosed fashion is no true wife to her husband, for a wife is a helpmate.

In conclusion we desire to present one more quotation from the Book of Doctrine and Covenants:

Thou shalt love thy wife with all thy heart, and shall cleave unto her and none else; and he that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, shall deny the faith, and shall not have the Spirit; and if he repent not, he shall be cast out.—42:7.

If a man loves his wife with all his heart it is impossible for him to love some other woman with a part of his heart. If he cleaves unto her and none else he can not cleave to one or a half dozen others.

The whole tenor of the church law, from which we have so liberally quoted, and upon which the church's ideal of marriage is founded, is unalterably opposed to the forms of polygamy upheld in Utah, Turkey, and elsewhere; and the various more or less veiled forms of polygamy and concubinage indulged in by the degenerate world over.

In the series of editorials of which this is the last number we have shown that the church stands for good citizenship. It holds that, pending the second coming of Christ to rule and regulate in person, men and women must be subject to the laws of their respective governments. As regards the particular land in which the church was organized and where the gathering is to be, it holds that it was long ago designated by God as a choice land of liberty and that God directed the men who founded the government and established the Constitution. It holds that men and women should be industrious; that they should abstain from all forms of strong drink and tobacco; that they should pay their debts; that they should live in peace, not returning evil for evil; that they should be studious, seeking the highest education, by study and faith.

It holds to the old, biblical idea of the sacredness of the marriage covenant.

As regards marriage we believe that the ideal home is found where one woman as wife and one man as husband live in mutual trust and absolute fidelity, carefully rearing their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord to take their places as good citizens of the community and good members of the church of God. Such homes are the pillars of the community. We believe that there are many such in the church; and we are optimistic enough to believe that there are many such in the world, among the honorable men and women of the world. It may be charged that the last named are not educating their children to become good members of the church of God; but we are not sure that the charge would stand. We look to see many such become members of the true church.

If any who are not members of the church have followed these articles we trust that their minds have been disabused of the absurd and false notions that some have instilled into the minds of the people concerning the ideals of the church.

ELBERT A. SMITH.

MISSIONARY WORK IN MEXICO.

At present we have only two members living in Mexico; Bro. D. S. Anthony, who has been there thirteen years, living at Durango, is manager of machine shop and foundry, a plant largely of his own founding. Dave is of the inventive, mechanical temperament, and already has some patents out, one for grinding the material used as one of the principal articles of food for the Mexican, namely, tortillas, without which, with frijole (beans), the Mexican diet would be as incomplete as the Hawaiian without his poi. The present method without the machine is a stone slab with a sort of a rolling-pin of stone, which the woman grinds up the corn with, a primitive and tedious process. Now daily can be seen the peon woman coming and going to the Anthony mill with her load of corn on her head, to have ground by the new invention of the gringo (American). Dave also has invented a new gas engine that is revolutionary in its nature and bids fair to lead the field against all comers. The gospel fire, although somewhat latent at present, burns in the heart of this son of R. J. Anthony, one of our former valiant and able missionaries, and I believe he will yet take his place among those who will labor for Zion's weal; not necessarily as a preacher though, as his talents run along other lines, none the less effective.

I enjoyed my few weeks' stay at his home in Durango, with his interesting family of wife and three children.

Our other member is A. S. Votaw, formerly of California, now in charge of a colonization scheme involving over thirty thousand acres of land. It was in his house I celebrated last Washington's Birthday, by preaching my first sermon in the Republic of Mexico; and as far as I am informed, the first by our church in that land. Brother Votaw has but recently moved into Mexico. The land is situated about sixty miles south from Tampico, on a peninsula between the Gulf of Mexico and Lake Tamiahau, post-office is Tampico.

One incident of missionary experience I might relate, to break the monotony of the usual relation that appears in most of our letters, giving the idea that we are on a sort of a pleasure trip. When it came time for me to leave Agua Dulce, the way was somewhat barred because the launch was up for repairs at Tampico, and very uncertain as to when she would be ready. I was anxious to get away as time was limited. Quorum meeting nearing. Brother Votaw arranged for me to go in a canoe with his most trusty moza. These canoes are made out of a log, regular "dugouts," so it is all one piece and no keel, not even a rudder. When the wind allows, they have a kind of a "mutton leg" sail they use, about the size of a bandanna handkerchief.

With the moza I started for a point where he was to leave me, and I was to hail passing boats for Tampico. I started, happy in the thought I would soon be back again where means of transportation could be had. After we were out a couple of hours the breeze stiffened, so we could use the sail very well. About 2 p. m. we attempted to land, where a house was in sight, but could not on account of the petroleum muck on the shore that comes from an oil well that a company had abandoned after a loss of about a million dollars. I soon discovered that I was at a place called Dos Vocas, twenty-five miles out of my way. My moza was as much surprised as I was.

I ordered him to put to sea again and try to reach the other side of the bay somewhere, although the land we wanted was not in sight. He put her out again. By this time the wind had increased and the sea was running rough and high. Our course seemed to lie in the trough of the sea. Being nothing but a log, we were rolling and shipping the sea continually, which kept me bailing out the water. My compananero tar, who could not speak a word of English, and I but little Spanish, were getting perplexed. Being a swimmer, fear did not bother me, and I knew that the log would not sink, even though she should fill or capsize. The wind was so strong he did not dare to fasten his sail, but tried to hold the hal-yard in his hand. Had he attempted to hold it stiff, she would have become shreds. Holding his rope in one hand and trying to steer with an excuse for an oar in the other, soon made it agreeable for us to change our course and head for the shore we had left about two hours before.

We made a landing at a place where we found some grass huts and a few natives. They could not speak a word of English any more than my moza. I scoured the vicinity to see if I could find a chance to relieve the situation, but no sign of habitation appeared other than the one where we landed. When the time for supper came I obtained some tortillas from the woman, and with what was left of the lunch given me by Mrs. Votaw, I "broke bread," sitting upon the shore, rather than "from house to house."

At a suitable hour I retired, making a berth on the shore, and had my moza do the same, with the understanding we would try the sea trip again in the morning and start early if the wind was not blowing too stiffly. Being tired, I soon fell asleep. About 10 o'clock I awoke to find my man and his boat gone. How that fellow could get away without arousing me was a puzzle, as he was not over five feet from me, rolled up in his blanket, and the boat tied not twenty feet away when I went to sleep.

To say that I was just a little jarred is to put it mildly. Among the things that intruded into my imagination was that it was a put-up thing for him to get away and leave me as a prey to the tough looking peons, each one of whom carried strapped to him a machette, a sword about three feet long. They use it to cut through the jungle. They can cut down a tree about as thick as a man's leg with one stroke. They use them to kill animals, as well as kill each other, and of course would be very handy to carve me up with. I was unarmed, so thought by way of precaution I would remove from my sleeping quarters to some point that would be more difficult to find, in case, as per my misgivings, they might want me. I walked some distance along the shore until I found an opening in the jungle, which is so thick and matted with vines and undergrowth that a cat could hardly get through ordinarily. I found a cattle trail, and plunged in, notwithstanding I had seen lizards two feet long and the skins of jaguars that the natives had killed for sale, also a snake skin as long as a man's body, and alligators were also in evidence in that country.

I must have walked about four miles when I came to a stream flowing from a laguna into the salt water. I intended to swim that stream, holding my grip on my head with one hand and use the other to swim, a feat that I could have accomplished, as the distance was not great. I sounded the muck and mud with a stick I had and found that the first step in the mud mixed with the petroleum stuff coming from the laguna, would be waist high. Presently I began to smell the odor rising from the laguna. It occurred to me what had been told me at Augua Dulce, that at times, although twenty-five miles away, the odor can be sensed and that near the lake it was so strong at times as to kill men and burros. This started me on the back track. I afterwards found out that if I had gotten into that stream as I had intended, there would have been a boiled Saint, and well done at that, as the water was heated at least to one hundred and fifty degrees.

I went back on the trail I had come on, thinking probably my moza might have returned, but with disappointment in that. I sneaked down to where I had left my blankets; made a new berth on the shore and as far as I could into the brush, when I retired, it being now past midnight.

There is an insect in the tropics called by the Indians, pinolea, that comes in a round ball like a swarm of bees. The individuals are so small that they can hardly be seen. My recent meandering through the jungles had given me a full quota of these champion biters. "As I lay me down to sleep," with scratching myself under the blanket, and the rain pattering on the outside of the blanket, the rote of the sea about twenty feet from me, I spent the remainder of the noche as well described by the Gaelic poet, "Wide awake, fast asleep, in a doze."

At a convenient time on manana I arose and approached the la casa of my host of the day previous. He had not arisen, so I accosted him with a Bueno dias, senor, to which he replied pleasantly, thus allaying my fears of him and his machette. When he appeared he said he was mucha malo, which means feeling badly. I remember that Indians are said to think highly of a "medicine man." I thought it would be a good role for me to take, if only for friendship, so I had him let me give him an examination. I felt of his pulse, sounded his liver and kidneys, listened with my ear against his breast at the beating of his heart, passed upon his tongue, found only a little discoloration of the white of the eye. I asked him if there was a botica near. He said, "Ayah, long way off." I presume the nearest was Tampico, seventy-five miles away. Had I been an osteopath I might have made a different diagnosis. This examination answered to show my good intentions, and I gained favor where I most needed it. He told me there was a ranchero in a certain direction, so I started to see what I might find.

I walked as near as I could tell by the time spent four miles. It was Sunday morning. I was thinking that at least I would not have to preach that day. There were different kinds of birds making music, among them flocks of green parrots. At one point, lying across my trail, was an alligator over ten feet long, lying on his back dead. Some one had disemboweled him. I believe the Indians around there eat his entrails. I found one little grass hut, where there were three children, one a boy about five as nude as a Christmas tree after the presents are taken off, the other two, girls older, were not so bare of physical comforts, but what they had on would hardly make wadding for a shot gun.

I could not get any information from them, as they did not seem to understand my Spanish, or I their Indian dialect, for I suppose that was what they used. I saw no sign of any parents about, but was glad to say to the part of the family present, Adios. I made my way back to my patient, not in a mood however to sing psalms. I walked that distance under a tropical sun. When one thinks how unsuited my garb of a preacher with collar, necktie, cuffs, and derby hat under such conditions, you can imagine how I must have not responded to environment. After breakfasting upon a tortilla, I then tried to talk with the men.

After an hour or two I heard one say something about Merico campo. It meant to me in my very receptive state of mind for such information, an American camp. I pursued the inquiry far enough to result in an engagement with them for two pesos apiece to guide me to that point. After a twelve miles tramp through that tropical forest, we came to the place of the noted oil company of that region called San Diego de la Marit. There I found Captain Carr, with whom I was in company on the trip from Tampico down. We had camped together one night in a Mexican hut, having had to put in on account of the weather and darkness, so I was among friends, with whom I could talk. Here I stayed three days waiting for a chance to get to Tampico.

This incident is a part of pioneer missionary labor. Those who come to this country later to labor for the souls of men, may have to fare worse, possibly not so bad. I have not up to date heard what became of my moza compananero, who left me stranded on the shore near Dos Vocas. I have, according to my calling to open up the gospel to the nations of the earth, started it in the Republic of Mexico.

This winter I have spent in Arizona, including Naco and Bisbee. The rest of the time in the tropics, where most of the people were barefooted, and coatless, while in the North you have had your hard winter, so that we have not been without our comforts, as well as discomforts, in the Southland.

Sincerely yours,

F. M. SHEEHY.

NOTICE.

TO THOSE ASKING FINANCIAL AID.

Persons who are interested in local church buildings and are endeavoring to raise money therefor, if they desire to make their appeal to the church in general, must first have their appeal indorsed by the Presiding Bishop before it will be published in the HERALD.

Those offering articles for sale to the church members must do so through the regular advertising department of the HERALD and not through the letter department.

Those who are sick or disabled, or in financial trouble, should appeal to their local bishop or Bishop's agent, and not to the Saints at large through the HERALD columns. These restrictions are necessary because of the number of appeals for financial aid coming to the HERALD. If all these appeals were permitted to appear they might tend towards a disregard of the systematic execution of the financial law, and to an ignoring of the law of tithes and offerings. Also the Saints might be imposed upon, as it is impossible for the HERALD editors to investigate these various appeals. Besides, the law must be fulfilled and this is the law, that the church shall attend to supplying the wants of the poor and needy.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Some days ago the name of Elder W. E. LaRue, pastor of the Central Church of Kansas City, was proposed for membership in the ministerial association of that city. Rev. James Small, of the Independence Boulevard Christian Church, proposed the name for membership. The proposition was hotly opposed by Rev. S. N. Neel, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, and others. The question did not turn upon Elder LaRue's personal character, but upon the propriety of admitting a Latter Day Saint to membership, and was referred to the executive committee to report April 4.

In a recent issue mention was made of a young Japanese student, Choso by name, in Graceland College, and credit was largely given to Brn. C. A. Parkin and F. A. Smith for Choso being here. At the time the item was handed to us we knew of Bro. Hale W. Smith's earlier efforts in behalf of this boy; but knowing nothing as to late events in connection therewith we passed the item on to our readers without comment.

But in justice we feel to say that in a sense Choso is the protege of Bro. and Sr. Hale W. Smith. They it was who "found" him, as it were, who stood by him and suffered with him during a great misfortune, and who started this movement to get Choso into Graceland College. There was no intention to ignore their connection with this matter. It is chargeable mainly to a lack of information.

Do the best that you know, that you may know better. If you have a poor watch, still keep your appointments by it, so that when you get a good one the habit of keeping appointments will have been formed.

WORK AMONG THE LAMANITES.

BY ELDER HUBERT CASE.

At the time when the Spirit directed the mind of the latter day seer toward the tribe of Joseph, not only did he send Oliver Cowdery and others to western Missouri, and call upon others a few years later to do some work among the Indians, but in 1843 he sent four men to the South Pacific Ocean, and opened up a wonderful work among that people that has resulted in the conversion of thousands of the descendants of the people who came to America six hundred years before Christ. God had brought to light the record of those people, and that is why he would naturally send the message to them the first of any of the Israelites in the latter day dispensation. These natives of the South Sea Islands to whom the gospel was sent in 1843 are the descendants of the people who went away from America in Hagoth's ships, as spoken of in the Book of Mormon. They went to the Sandwich and other islands, and later drifted with the winds and currents and peopled the numerous groups of islands. Their traditions, also their language, etc., prove them of Lamanite origin.

Those men, Gruard, Pratt, Rodger, and Hanks, were sent on that distant mission in 1843. The last named of the four never lived to reach the islands; but the former two did a wonderful work. When A. H. Smith was among these islanders and gave patriarchal blessings a few years ago, he pointed them out to be the tribe of Joseph, the descendants of Manasseh.

When the writer of these notes was among that people, from 1894 to 1898, we were strongly impressed with the idea that we were laboring among some of the descendants of the Israelitish people. We find that a few of the people whom we commonly designate Lamanites, have accepted the Book of Mormon. But the writer believes that many more of them have accepted than is usually supposed.

The Spirit moved in the sending of the "fishers and hunters" (Jeremiah 16:16), and God knew where the people were to whom they were to be sent. Surely that work was of more importance than would seem from the few Indians who have accepted the message. This was the beginning of the work to Israel of the latter days. There have been many of the natives of the south seas accept the angel's message, and the attention of the whole church has been directed to that mission for some cause, and their prayers have been directed toward that peculiar people. Why? Simply because they are of the people of Joseph's land.

The Pawnee Indians, located at Pawnee, Oklahoma, claim they have several copies of the Book of Mormon which Oliver Cowdery gave them the time he took the gospel to them. But practically none of them have as yet accepted the message. However, I believe the seed was sown and will bear an abundant harvest in the near future. In fact the Spirit is now moving in that direction and many of them are now beginning to believe the Book of Mormon to be a true record.

A prominent Indian here in Kingfisher, Oklahoma, who is now reading the book, says it is a true record of his people. So you see the leaven is beginning to work.

While this long time has intervened, the Lord has moved in a quiet way to bring many of the tribe of Joseph to a knowledge of this great work. I believe nearly every missionary who has labored among the South Sea Islanders has been of the same opinion as the writer of this article,—that those people were of the house of Israel. While in the island of Rarotonga I found a series of articles printed in "Te Torea," by one Mr. Nichols, who was a New Zealand Maore, showing that the natives of the south seas came from America, and that they were descendants of the ancient Americans. His arguments were good. They gave the native traditions, giving the name of the native and the boat which left Rarotonga and never came back, and the tradition in New Zealand, of the same name of the first man, and the same name of the boat which landed in New Zealand. This is only a sample of the way he traced their travels from one group to another. The New Zealanders are the highest type in all the groups of the south seas, and many of them

THEOSOPHY.—NO. 3.

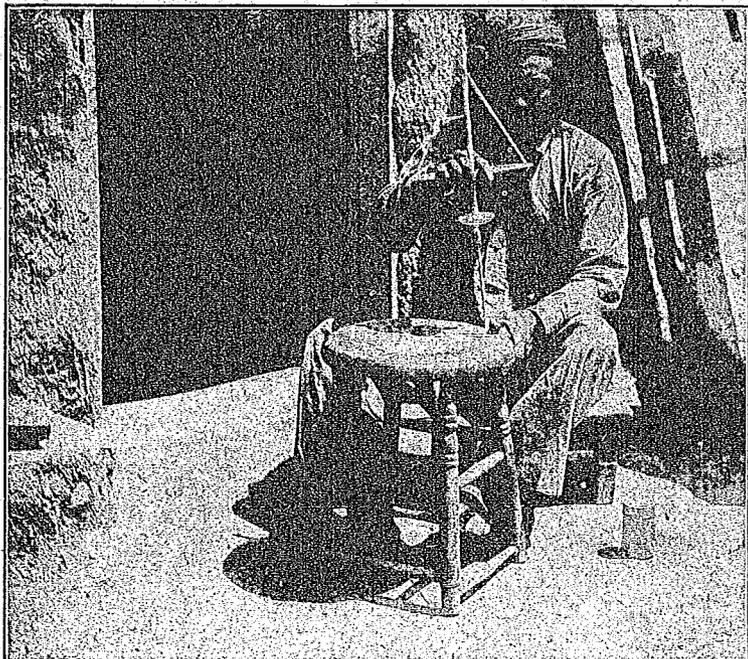

Theosophy considers not only the realm of religion, but of science as well. It makes an attack upon both. Matter it considers as not only solid, liquid, gaseous, etheric on the physical plane, but that beyond the physical plane there is a common ion or atom; that beyond this there also exists like conditions of matter on the astral plane, also on the mental plane. And as explained before all things have the essence of the One in the last analysis, so must all science be considered from the standpoint of the Causeless Cause. Man has seven aspects or exists on seven different planes:

1. Physical body or Sthula Sharira.
2. Prana, life or vitality, or vital principle.
3. The Linga Sharira or astral body.
4. The Kamma Rupa, the seat of animal passion and desire.
5. Manas, which is a dual principle in its function, the mind.
6. Buddhi, the spiritual soul.
7. Atma, the spirit.

The Atma is one with the Absolute, its radiation. Buddhi is the vehicle of that pure, universal Spirit; Atma, the Manas, is dual, there being the higher and the lower mind. These principles make the spiritual triad of man and are eternal. The future state, the karmic destiny of man, depends on whether the Manas gravitates downwards towards the Kamma Rupa, or upwards towards Buddhi. In the latter case the higher consciousness of the spiritual aspirations of the mind assimilating Buddhi, is absorbed by it and forms the Ego which enters Devachan. The Kamma Rupa is the center of the animal man, where lies the line of demarkation between the mortal man and the immortal entity. The Linga Sharira, the Prana, is necessary only to the Kamma Rupa, the astral body and the physical body and the function of the lower Manas, which includes all those limited to the physical plane. The physical body is the vehicle of all the principles during this life.

It is possible for man to see things on the astral plane. To do so, however, would be unfortunate. Later works modify the above classification by leaving out the physical body and surrounding the whole with the auric envelope, on which is written the record of the life or lives. It may be noted that any vision on the astral plane, although above the physical, is much below the mental. Very few ascend to the Buddhic plane, and very few even of the Theoso-have accepted of the Book of Mormon. I find that the Book of Mormon is coming into prominence, and there is an inquiry about it; people are beginning to want to read it. Many of the tribe of Ephraim, as well as the dusky descendants of Manasseh, are coming to a knowledge of what God has done for the Western Continent.

"Some things can be proved outwardly to a man. Some things he must live out before he knows them. Mathematics are susceptible of outward proof. Religion must be lived before it is proved. To ask for one kind of proof when the other kind is required is a mistake that many otherwise intelligent people frequently make."

phists claim yet to have done so. At death, if the life has been a worthy one, the upper Atma, Buddhic, and the higher Manas taking the essence of the best of the life, are permitted to retire to Devachan, there to abide for one to three thousand years. Devachan is not so much a place as it is a condition, where the soul dreams of all the happenings of the best of life, and always feels those who are beloved very near. The soul does not see things, as they are, but lives in a dream of the best if its past existence in all its purity. At the moment of death the soul is able to perceive the whole of the past life in order to gain the perfume from the flowers. But at the end of the period the soul must once more return to earthly habitation, not only once, but again and again.

Individuality continues. The personality, however, is lost. I can assert positively that I am I and have been I, but can not always say that I have been "John Smith." Personality has to do with the lower portion of life; individuality, with the immortal in man. To some it is given at the moment of birth to see the past existence, as well as the coming life, for an instant, then it is again veiled. Existence, then, is like a string of pearls, each pearl a personal life, the silken thread of individual essence running through them one by one, and when complete, we may perceive and receive the whole.

An interpretation is here offered of Matthew, "I am the true vine, ye are the branches, my father is the husbandman." This is explained to mean: Ye means the personal life; I, the Christos, the true vine holding the branches, and is therefore the immortal in man the higher Manas and the Buddhi. "My father is the husbandman," refers to the god in man, the eternal in man himself. The explanation of "every man that bringeth forth good fruit," means this: Devachan is only for those who have lived good lives. According to our life here, so is our condition hereafter. The lower elements await us in Kama Loka. Our next life on earth is the direct result of all our previous existence, logical and exact. If, when death comes, a man's life is found without sufficient good to save, as the Kamma Rupa soon dissolves, and he has placed nothing of himself upon the immortal plane, nothing survives. He is, it is true, to meet the results of his own wrongful acts, his own Karma, yet he has no long intermediary period, but must return shortly to earth again to take up the torment of earthly life. Earthly or physical life is the lowest of existence, and is the pit or hell. This unrighteous man, although he is to meet the consequences of his own wrongdoing, loses eternally all knowledge of that particular life. Hence, "Every branch that bringeth forth not good fruit, he purgeth it." Every pearl not fit is destroyed, and no longer exists for that entity. There is a great tragedy in this in the "Dweller on the threshold." The lower principles are slow to dissolve, as much of that life has been spent in giving them strength. And since the higher Ego must so soon return to earth, the lower strives to establish relations with its father or former higher Ego, which has now taken new elements for life, and strives to seize possession both of the body, and especially of the intelligence.

Karma is the law of retribution, by which every man makes not only his past and present, but also his future. Karma is the sum total of all of our previous existence. It may be considered in three ways: 1. That Karma, which is the sum total of all of our previous existence, with the wrongs for which we must atone before perfection. 2. Karma, that is measured out to us for this life. 3. The new Karma, that we make in this life for future lives. Every time a trial comes upon us, it is Karma, the result of wrongful acts. If, then, we meet it patiently and overcome, it is wiped out for ever. But if we complain and are impatient, then we have not only the old, but new bad Karma to be met. Some times there is found a man so good that he bears all the vicissitudes of misfortune patiently and well. Then the seven Lords of Karma, perceiving that he will soon have fully met Karma measured to him for this life, and seeing that his pile of absolute Karma is growing small, only enough in fact for two or three more lives, they agree that he shall be permitted to pay it all in this life. Hence this righteous one receives many times the suffering of the unrighteous, but in so doing he becomes perfected. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth."

The soul of man entering on the path, through many existences may reach Nirvana. Some having achieved it have refused to enter, preferring rather to redescend to the assistance of mankind. Those who enter Nirvana may in some instances return, but not if they have entered without remains.

Many have supposed that Nirvana means annihilation. It does mean nothing to mortal man, since it is far beyond his comprehension. (It hath not entered the heart of man.) But when we consider, entities may return from there to remain in the middle distance for the assistance of mankind, and when we consider also that beyond Nirvana there is Para-Nirvana, and beyond that Maya-Para-Nirvana, we can see how unsound such a view must be. It is true that some dwellers in the Orient do not believe in the immortality of the soul of man; such are the Southern Buddhists of Ceylon. But this does not appear to be the teaching of Buddha, and certainly it is not the teaching of Buddhism (secret wisdom). Buddhism is more nearly Theosophy than any other exoteric religion, but Theosophy is no more esoteric Buddhism than it is esoteric Christianity. It is, however, esoteric Buddhism or secret wisdom.

The above is but a brief sketch of the subject of Theosophy; nor does it leave much room for comment. We have not attempted in this to divide the true from the untrue, but leave that for our readers. It is too early in the consideration of the subject to start such analysis, as it is first necessary to know what those teachings are. It is not Christian, nor does it take the Bible for a basis, though it does try to interpret some texts of the Bible, so as to agree with its preconceived ideas. Theosophy makes its attack upon Christianity on the grounds of faith. And in the main it is correct in this attack, if by faith we mean that blind belief which simply accepts dogmatic assertions. Yet time and again we come across such a mass of contradictory statements among Theosophists, which is finally determined by one with the statement: This is correct, for I have received it from the Masters. How is it received and from whom? It purports to be received in psychic manner from men in the fastnesses of the Himalaya Mountains. Not by face to face instructions, nor in writing, but because as I sit writing I am moved upon by these men. This must be accepted as dogmatically correct. And continually is the student told: You can not know any more about this now. Later a little more may be given. Not only are the various writers contradictory, but the works of the same writer are again and again in conflict.

The last presumed to be nearer the truth, and we are told what went before was only a blind. We are convinced that there is a remarkable amount of truth contained in its teachings, and it seems quite possible and probable that some of these things have been handed down from antiquity.

With the teaching that, "There is no religion higher than truth," we would heartily agree; also with the necessity for great purity of mind, soul, and body before the divine vision is possible. The great secrets of power require an intelligent faith, that "assurance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Such power can not be entrusted to any but a prepared people. But there is so much of straw, so much of worthless matter, so much that they themselves deny and again contradict, that it makes quite a medley, and such a one as it is of profit for but few to examine critically. These ancient records abundantly confirm the truth of an early revelation and of many facts thereto related, but as man has become more gross the truth is certainly veiled from his eyes and from the eyes of the Theosophists as well.

Our soul has been filled with delight at times in searching these ancient records for the amount of truth therein contained. How abundantly do we find it shown forth in the mountain of history of the past, that His arm is not shortened, but he is the Father of all living and truly feels after his children.

For us, as a people, the principal thing is our present work and prospect in the future. But to such as care for a study, the loving watchcare of our Father is abundantly shown forth in the records of the past.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

I submit the following list of books read in connection with the study of Theosophy.

Theosophy makes such large claims that the study of any philosophy, and especially an oriental one, is not irrelevant. I had of course read the usual Latin classics at high school and university. Also translations of Homer and of Plato's Dialogues; a few works on comparative religions, a few more on mythology of Greece, Rome, Egypt, India, and Scandinavia; works on philosophy, spiritism, and even devil worship; several more on social conditions, legal and economic questions among the ancient oriental nations, and the like, in a somewhat dilettante way. We mention this, because it is material, in what attitude of mind we approach the consideration of such a theme.

The special reading in the past year has been: Blavatsky Theosophy, in Chamber's and Britannica. Nirvana Buddhism Britannica; Americana and New International Encyclopedia, tenth edition. Scientific Religion, Oliphant. What is Theosophy? Old. Some Glimpses of Occultism, Leadbeater. Vedantic Philosophy, volume 1, Vivekananda Abhedananda. Isis Unveiled, volume 2, Blavatsky. Secret Doctrine, volumes 1, 2, 3, Blavatsky. Light of Asia, Arnold. Buddhist Catechism. Man, Visible and Invisible, Leadbeater. Christ the Spirit. Key to Theosophy, Blavatsky. Kabala and Zohar, Encyclopedia Britannica. Esoteric Christianity, Besant. Doctrines and Literature of the Kabalah.

I also read several magazine articles and some books on correlated topics. In fact, some of the above volumes are not strictly theosophical. Occultism, Psychic phenomena, and anything concerning India and its philosophy and religion are very pertinent. You may see from the above, that the reading has not been exhaustive. S. A. BURGESS.

THE CONTRAST.

"But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law."—Galatians 5: 22, 23.

At the risk of saying more regarding the corrupt and beastly practice of polygamy than good taste would suggest we wish here to contrast the feelings of one of the leading advocates of this unholy practice at the time he received the gospel message, with his feelings when he received this so-called celestial system, according to his own testimony.

Look on this picture: Brigham Young in a sermon preached in the Tabernacle, Salt Lake City, February 1, 1857, said:

Let me ask you a question, before I proceed further. How did you feel when the Spirit of the gospel first entered into your hearts, when the light of the gospel first shone on your understanding? Had you any such feelings then within you? Had you any doubts? How did you talk when you first rose to testify that the Book of Mormon was true, that Joseph was a true prophet, that this work was of God, that the Lord Almighty had revealed himself in these our days? Had you any doubts? "No, I could not help bearing testimony to those things, I was so full of light and peace." Did you hate anybody at that time? "No. I was filled with peace and union; I loved God and all the works of his hands. There was no anger, malice or wrath in me."—Deseret News, February 11, 1857.

Now look at this picture: Brigham Young in a discourse preached at Provo, Utah, July 14, 1855, in speaking of the introduction of the doctrine of spiritual wives, said:

I was not desirous of shrinking from any duty nor of failing in the least to do as I was commanded, but it was the first time in my life that I had desired the grave, and I could hardly get over it for a long time. And when I saw a funeral I felt to envy the corpse its situation, and to regret that I was not in the coffin, knowing the toil and labor that my body would have to undergo; and I have had to examine myself, from that day to this, and watch my faith and carefully meditate, lest I should be found desiring the grave more than I ought to do.

You will probably wonder at this, and that such should have been my feelings upon this point, but they were even so.—Deseret News, November 14, 1855.

To those who accept these statements as being true this contrast should present food for thought. One experience was fully in accord with the operation of the Spirit as expressed in text at head of this article. The other produced the opposite effect, and this distressing effect continued with him until the day of the above utterance, in 1857.

Miserable man, indeed, was he!

Suppose we add to this the experience of Young's first lieutenant, Heber C. Kimball. Of his experience when he received the angel message, in 1832, he says:

Under the ordinances of baptism and the laying on of hands, I received the Holy Ghost, as the disciples did in ancient days, which was like a consuming fire. I felt as though I sat at the feet of Jesus, and was clothed in my right mind, although the people called me crazy.

I continued in this way for many months, and it seemed as though my body would consume away; at the same time the scriptures were unfolded to my mind in such a wonderful manner that it appeared to me, at times, as if I had formerly been familiar with them.—Life of Heber C. Kimball, by O. F. Whitney, pp. 38 and 39.

Kimball's daughter tells of how this celestial law, as it is called, affected him. She says:

My mother had noticed a change in his manner and appearance, and when she inquired the cause, he tried to evade her questions. At last he promised he would tell her after a while, if she would only wait. This trouble so worked upon his mind that his anxious and haggard looks betrayed him daily and hourly, and finally his misery became so unbearable that it was impossible to control his feelings. He became sick in body, but his mental wretchedness was too great to allow of his retiring, and he would walk the floor till nearly morning, and sometimes the agony of his mind was so terrible that he would wring his hands and weep like a child, and beseech the Lord to be merciful and reveal to her this principle, for he himself could not break his vow of secrecy.—Ibid., page 337.

This contrast is so great that we think those who accept the testimony of these men will ask why this difference?

Weighing the Baby.

"How many pounds does the baby weigh—
Baby who came but a month ago?
How many pounds from the crowning curl
To the rosy point of the restless toe?"

Grandfather ties the kerchief knot,
Tenderly guides the swinging weight,
And carefully over his glasses peers
To read the record, "Only eight."

Softly the echo goes around:
The father laughs at the tiny girl;
The fair young mother sings the words,
While grandmother smooths the golden curl

And stooping above the precious thing,
Nestles a kiss within a prayer,
Murmuring softly, "Little one,
Grandfather did not weigh you fair."

Nobody weighed the baby's smile,
Or the love that came with the helpless one;
Nobody weighed the threads of care,
From which a woman's life is spun.

No index tells the mighty worth
Of a little baby's quiet breath—
A soft, unceasing metronome,
Patient and faithful until death.

Nobody weighed the baby's soul,
For here on earth no weights there be
That could avail; God only knows
Its value in eternity.

Only eight pounds to hold a soul
That seeks no angel's silver wing,
But shrines it in this human guise,
Within so frail and small a thing!

Oh, mother! laugh your merry note,
 Be gay and glad, but don't forget
 From baby's eyes looks out a soul
 That claims a home in Eden yet.

A Feminine Judge Lindsey.

(Mrs. Frederic C. Schoff, who has revolutionized the methods of dealing with juvenile offenders.)

One day in May, 1899, a woman sat in the library of her comfortable home in Philadelphia, reading the morning newspaper. The item that particularly interested her was the report of the arrest of an eight-year-old girl for setting fire to the house in which she lived. When asked why she had done this, the child replied that she wanted to see the engines run, and, in commenting on the case, the judge, who sent her to a reformatory, referred to her as "a prodigy of crime."

"A prodigy of crime!" repeated the woman, indignantly, "she is nothing of the sort, and I am going to see what can be done about it."

That woman was Mrs. Frederic C. Schoff, the "Woman Judge Lindsey" of Pennsylvania, and the impulse that sent her in such haste to the criminal court-house was destined to result in a complete reorganization of the methods of handling juvenile offenders, not only in Philadelphia, but throughout the State as well.

The conditions which Mrs. Schoff discovered as the result of this visit had been in existence for many years, but she, like the majority of Philadelphia mothers, had never suspected that they existed. How could they imagine that there were more than five hundred children, ranging from six to sixteen years, in the county prison? How could they imagine that from two hundred to three hundred little ones passed through the city station houses every month, all destined, however innocent they might be, to be brought into close association with criminals of the blackest type?

Having discovered these facts, however, Mrs. Schoff could not rest. First she appealed to the New Century Club, an organization of some six hundred prominent women. They were so horrified by the tales she told, that a relief movement was at once inaugurated and, as the result, laws were passed providing for the separate trial of children, the creation of a house of detention for juveniles, and the appointment of probation officers.

Realizing that the effectiveness of the probation work depended upon the way in which the officers performed their duties, Mrs. Schoff consented to take personal charge of them. Since that time, each week, she has met them at her own home and has gone over every case with them in all its details. She also attends the juvenile court daily, and her wide acquaintance with all the youthful offenders has caused her to be recognized as the actual judge of that tribunal; not that she bears the title officially, but that her advice is so invariably taken that magistrates and judges all accord her this honor. Not a case is brought before them that she is not consulted as to the penalty to be imposed.

In addition to her work among the children, Mrs. Schoff has also turned her attention to the parents. Since her investigations proved conclusively that the offenses of the majority of the children were due directly to the deficiencies of the parents, she organized the Parent-Teacher's Association, and the several branches of this society now represent a membership of more than fifty thousand parents, who meet regularly in the public school buildings to learn how to be efficient fathers and mothers.

All this happened because an eight-year-old girl, in 1899, set fire to her home to "see the engines run."—Human Life, February, 1910.

Editors Herald: Notice to Saints in Missouri in and about the Ozark country. There are two families of us Saints expecting to move there this spring. Would like to get in near a branch of Saints, or where there is a good opening for a branch. Any information from that locality will be highly appreciated by us.

Very truly yours,

Editors Herald: In looking over the HERALD of March 2, I notice a mistake in regard to the death of my sister. The notice reads, Mrs. Olive J. George, when it should be, Mrs. Olive J. Johnson. Will you please correct the mistake?

Your sister in the living faith,

MISS MOLLIE C. THOMPSON.

939 WEST LYNN STREET.

MANCHESTER, ENGLAND, March 10, 1910.

Dear Sisters and Brethren: I shall esteem it a favor if you will notify the Saints of the British Isles that I have removed from 12 Rye street C upon M, Manchester, to 57 Upton street, Stockport road, Ardwick. This is in consequence of the death of my wife, which occurred on the 6th ult., through an attack of acute asthma. It was quite unexpected, although she had been in delicate health for some time. She was interred in the Southern Cemetery along with her 5-month-old baby laid there thirteen years ago, Elder Henry Greenwood officiating. On the 20th ult., our mission president, Elder J. W. Rushton, preached the funeral discourse to a large gathering of Saints and friends in our East Manchester Branch room which my dear wife loved to attend when her health permitted. We all greatly miss her.

I sincerely hope the senior editor is well. I often think of his visit to our city. It lingers as a very happy memory. May his last days be peaceful.

Kind regards to all at the office.

Your brother in Christ,

W. R. ARMSTRONG.

BOTHWELL, ONTARIO, March 8, 1910.

Dear Herald: About six months ago death invaded our midst and claimed one of the faithful and true in the person of Sr. Enos Gilbert, mother of E. Gilbert, now on Herald Publishing House staff. We still mourn her loss, as she was one whom to know was to love, and one who was never tired of working for the cause she loved. Then about two months ago we lost a promising young man, son of Bro. George and Sr. Nellie Taylor. His death came as a shock to all as he was only sick a few days. And about one month ago Brother Sussex passed away after only a few days' illness.

Now on the other hand we have been led to rejoice over the wonderful sermons that have been preached at the above funeral and memorial services, and at the prejudice that has been removed by the plain undeniable truths as they were ably set forth by Bishop R. C. Evans and Elder A. Leverton. As a branch we have had difficulties to meet, but at present things are going along smoothly, with a few near the kingdom who, we think, will go through the waters of baptism in the near future. Our forces have been somewhat weakened by Bro. Elijah Gilbert and family moving to Lamoni, and now Bro. John Chapman and family are leaving for Flint, Michigan. However, we are trying to live our religion and keep the gospel before the world.

We will hold our anniversary services on the 20th inst., when we expect a good crowd out to hear Brethren Leverton and Shippy, and perhaps R. C. Russell.

Ever praying for the onward march of the gospel,

JOHN C. DENT.

GRESHAM, OREGON, March 17, 1910.

Herald Editors: It may be of interest to your readers to know that at the Portland district Sunday school convention of February 25, one hour of the time was given over to the representatives of the various Religio locals in the district and they took necessary steps towards perfecting Religio district organization. H. A. Jones, of Vancouver, Washington, was selected for president; R. E. Chapman, of Hood River, vice-president; L. B. Shippy, Gresham, secretary; Sr. L. H. Strickland, Portland, treasurer. The outlook for Religio work appears to be very good.

Respectfully,

SAN BERNARDINO, CALIFORNIA, March 15, 1910.

Editors Herald: Editor S. O. Pool, evidently a firm believer in reciprocity, following our hospitable entertainment at the church in Riverside, suggested that it would be acceptable if he was permitted to abide under our church roof at San Bernardino for a time. We said "Certainly, come along." Accepting our earnest invitation, he agreed to abide with us for fourteen consecutive nights. Nine have passed, one is, and four are yet to come. His presence here has awakened keen interest and curiosity. Neighbors and friends to the number of two hundred or more have gathered to see and hear him each evening. His wierd and uncanny stories, interspersed with bursts of argument and oratory, never fail to engage the attention of his audience.

He agreed on coming that he would talk about the Book of Mormon and its origin for five nights, the infallible completeness of the Old and New Testament for three nights, and divide his attention the remaining six evenings between the respective churches. Mr. Pool is a scholar and withal one of the most formidable critics of our work that I have ever heard. However, we heard some suggestions of Kirtland bank, polygamy, spiritual wifery, Canada revelation, Nauvoo Expositor, renunciation of testimony of Book of Mormon witnesses, etc.

Elder Pool presented the best exposition of Isaiah 29, Psalm 85, and Ezekiel 37 that I have ever heard from others than Latter Day Saints. I believe there will be enough members left to warrant the retention of Brother Crumley here another year. I am domiciled with Brother Crumley. Brother Pitt has been attracted here by this brilliant meteor. Mr. Pool is a great Bible student. We think it unfortunate that a man of his caliber should be so woefully in the dark. We are happy. This makes six times during this present conference year that I have been called from regular duties to listen to what others had to say about Christ and our work. The diversion has been an inspiration to me and I return to pastoral routine with renewed assurance of the impregnable character of the Lord's work. Pool's coming has done our work inestimable good.

Very truly yours,

T. W. WILLIAMS.

GRINNELL, IOWA, March 1, 1910.

Editors Herald: It seems just now that we have gathered out all the wheat in this town. Our zealous Bro. E. K. Lester opened his fine house for preaching this winter, and he did all in his power to get the people to come out to hear the gospel; but only a very few would venture out. So now we have given the town up, for the present at least. There is too much church here for the gospel to take a hold. I think that this is the most self-righteous town I ever saw.

We have three faithful members here yet: Sister Savill and her noble daughter, Sister Mullins, and Bro. E. K. Lester, all good Saints. The rest of our branch have all moved away, and it seems impossible to get any more to join.

I have been tied at home ever since last October on account of the illness of my wife. So we have concluded to change climate, and move to the land of the big red apples, see Bro. T. W. C., and maybe it will improve her health, so that I can get into the field again, for it is my heart's delight to be about my Father's business. The Saints here say that they will be lonesome when we leave them too. Will all my correspondents please take notice that from April 1, 1910, my address will be Weatherby, Missouri, R. F. D. No. 2. After I get moved I want to get into the field just as soon as the way opens for me. I am glad to read of the progress of the work in different places. May our God bless his servants in bringing souls to Christ.

J. S. ROTH.

EARLINGTON, KENTUCKY, March 4, 1910.

Dear Herald: It may be that some of the Saints of the Reorganized Church would like to read my testimony regarding the truthfulness of the gospel. I was a Brighamite Mormon for twelve years, and have lived the law as they taught it. I have been through the Salt Lake Temple four times and have esteemed that as the highest blessing, and was a member in good standing and full fellowship until I left Utah lately.

I have apostatized from the great apostate church with careful study and prayerful heart, and with a determination to find out the truth, gathering all the evidence that I could without prejudice to either church. I had a burning zeal for the Salt Lake church, but was obliged to give up in despair and say that I had been deceived by my leaders, the Utah people.

I was baptized December 31, 1909, by Elder J. F. Curtis, in the baptismal font at Independence, Missouri, and confirmed by Elders I. N. White and J. F. Curtis. I must say that I have seen the scriptures fulfilled where Christ says in John 7:17, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself." Now I can certify of myself that this gospel is not of man, but it comes through the rock of revelation, which is Christ. I know my Utah friends will say that I have broken my covenant; have transgressed the law and sinned against the Holy Ghost; and that I am lost without any chance and will become a son of perdition. I will admit that as soon as I was baptized the Devil did come and great darkness surrounded me and I was burdened so I could scarcely walk under the weight of his power. It must be understood that the Devil never comes with a cannon to shoot one of his own servants or to kill a sparrow. When the greatest darkness surrounds a man it is just before the greatest light is to burst forth, and I must testify that light has come to me and I am not left in doubt, but have passed from darkness into light, and how great is the brightness.

Ever your brother in the gospel,

J. W. DuBois.

COLO, IOWA, March 7, 1910.

Dear Herald: I have been reading the February number of Autumn Leaves and when I read about the Indians it seemed to me as though I for one could second the motion and stand by it as far as I am able in my feeble way. It seems to me it would be a good way to distribute live literature adapted to their present need. This corresponds with two dreams I had, showing it was better to teach the Indians at first, then preach to them.

In my dreams I saw that a large congregation of Lamanites, after being taught for some time, received preaching with gladness. It seems to me as if it belongs to the Latter Day Saints to take the record of the Nephites to the Lamanites, as it was promised the Nephites that it would be preserved to bring them to the faith in the latter days; and if we are not diligent in doing our part we will be to blame. The Lord will bring to pass just what he said he would do.

Your brother in the faith,
JOHN THORNTON.

ELK MILLS, MARYLAND, March 2, 1910.

Dear Herald: Arrangements had been completed for the conducting of a two-week series of special meetings to commence February 20, the writer having been requested to assist. On the evening of the 18th we received a phone message that Brother Walter Smith was laid up with appendicitis, and for us to come on first train. We went the next morning and found him prostrate, but some hopes of speedy recovery. He told us to take off our coats and go to work, which, of course, we did. In company with some of the brethren we placed twenty-five hundred tracts in the hands of as many people.
